Combat 'readiness' tested during FTX

Adverse weather and terrain conditions combined with a "new look" opposing force to test the combat readiness of the 197th Inf Bde during a Field Training Exercise (FTX) conducted last week.

Weather played its usual adversary role by impeding movement of the soldiers from the "Forever Forward" Brigade with everything from choking dust to ankle-deep mud.

"This was the first brigade level FTX we've conducted this year," said Maj Garrett T. Cowsert, Brigade Assistant S-3. "Since it was our first, we decided to add a little something to make the training more interesting and meaningful. That something was the Operation Order for the opposing forces."

The operations order that Maj Cowsert referred to was written and issued in the same format used by the units in the Warsaw Pact nations.

Familiarization training in Warsaw Pact Nations combat operations and tactics is an important part of the 197th training program. Drills on the Pact's small unit tactics, unit battle maneuvers and vehicle recognition are but a few of the subjects covered during each phase of the 197th Inf Bde's combat training.

One soldier spoke about the Operations Order, saying, "Integrating realism of this type into our training makes for a better understanding of the Warsaw Pact combat units and how they operate. It's just an added bonus for us."

Several missions were assigned and accomplished by the 197th soldiers during the FTX. Some of these included: small unit reconnaissance operations, raids, ambush operations, and company-size defensive measures. The 'Cottonbalers' from the 3/7th Inf conducted a nighttime airmobile assault with elements of the 121st Avn Co as they were airlifted into positions behind 'enemy' lines to secure a bridge and cut off the 'enemy' retreat.

"Training as a brigade-sized element is essential in order for us to be molded together as a total combined arms team," a 'Patriot' from the 1/58th Inf concluded. "All of this training is not going to waste either, because believe me, if the time ever comes when we're going to have to fight, we'll be ready. And this type of training will be part of the reason why."

"Yes, Virginia, there is an Easter Bunny." Prices, the weather and politicians all change. One thing that remains constant is that on Easter, the Easter Bunnies always show up to deliver eggs. Since Ft. Benning is a big post, they arrived early to be ready to "do their thing" and were observed delivering their goodies near Building 4.

Easter Egg Hunt scheduled

The Easter Bunny is expected to hide dozens of eggs in the field next to the Dependent Youth Activity (DYA) Center Easter Eve.

Approximately 250 boys and girls, ages 3 to 15, will swarm the field from 1 to 3 p.m. searching the nooks of trees, under bushes, and poking into every conceivable hiding place during the egg hunt Sunday.

Prizes for those finding the most eggs at the Recreation Services DYA sponsored egg hunt include toys, Easter baskets and candy bunnies and eggs.

At the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, the kids can watch a rabbit being pulled out of a hat or pull an egg out of a bush themselves. The Center is hosting a magic show and egg hunt at 2 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 544-1721.

Mess halls in Europe open to dependents

Many Army dependents in Europe are now authorized to eat in Army dining halls under a test program approved by Department of the Army (DA) March 8.

Dependents of enlisted soldiers and the lower two warrant and company grade officer ranks may eat in the field ration dining facilities if major subordinate commands give approval.

A DA official said the number of meals dependents would be allowed to eat in Army facilities would also be subject to command approval.

Current rates for dependents eating in mess halls if they eat three meals per day are $3.80 for adults and $1.90 for children. This price includes meal costs and surcharges.

A DA official stated that this program will continue for a nine-month trial period.

The Army commander in Europe requested the unprecedented approval as part of a recent series of moves to help financially-strapped soldiers there. The recent sharp decline of the dollar's value against European currency has caused many financial troubles for military families, especially in the lower enlisted ranks, according to DA officials. (ARNEWS)

BAYONET: How has your being on drill sergeant duty affected your family life?

MURPHY: My family and I are together — really together. I have three children, all straight-A students. My son is in a gifted student program and has artwork on display at Bradley Museum. I substitute teach when I have time, which really isn't often but I have an occasional day off. There are some problems here just like in Special Forces and other places where the hours and the work strain affect everything else. When I go from here to home, it's like being beamed up to the Enterprise. It takes a lot of understanding but my family and I have made the adjustment.

BAYONET: Militarily speaking, what are your future plans?

MURPHY: I predict that if I am transferred to an OSUT Company as I hope to, that at the end of the 12-week cycle I'll have 35 potential Airborne Ranger qualified men from my platoon. Let me have a platoon of men for 12 weeks and I'll give you Waffen SS equals. I'm going to keep extending as a drill sergeant for as long as they'll let me unless something drastically changes with drill sergeant duty at Benning. What else can I say: I love it!

- Include with the entry, full name, rank, Service/Social Security Number, branch of Service, and permanent home address including zip code.

Q — I am a veteran of the Vietnam Era. When will my eligibility for educational assistance expire?

A — Generally, the period of eligibility for GI Bill benefits is ten years from date of last separation from active duty, or until Dec. 31, 1989, whichever is earlier.

Q — If a veteran dies in a VA facility, can his survivor request a contract burial service?

A — Except for unclaimed remains, contract burials have been non-existent since July 1, 1963.

Q — What effect does the 40 mile restriction on CHAMPUS have on eligible CHAMPVA participants living within 40 miles of a VA hospital?

A — None.

Q — Is a veteran who is totally blind due to a service-connected disability entitled to the automobile grant?

A — Yes, a veteran whose blindness resulted from a service-connected disability is eligible for an automobile grant, provided the individual who will operate the vehicle is licensed by the state in which he or she lives.

AUSA sponsors day at race

A select group of Benning soldiers departed early Sunday morning to watch the Atlanta 500 NASCAR Grand National Stock Car Race at the Atlanta International Raceway.

Sponsored by the Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning chapter of the Association of the United States Army, over 40 Benning soldiers watched from grandstand seats as Bobby Allison took the race by one lap. Allison's victory made him the first driver in 1978 to win two NASCAR Grand National events. His previous win was the Daytona 500.

Tickets were distributed by AUSA to various post units who provided them to AUSA military personnel interested in attending the race. Transportation to and from the race was provided by Recreation Services.

Summing up the day's events, Pvt. Joe Wagner of HHC, 1st AIT Bde, said, "The entire day was just great! The weather was beautiful, we had excellent seats and the whole thing was free!"

CHAMPVA aids vets' dependents, survivors

At the end of 1977 more than 210,000 dependents and survivors of veterans had qualified for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Veterans Administration (CHAMPVA), according to VA chief Max Cleland.

The CHAMPVA program is similar to the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) which is offered by the Defense Department to eligible active duty servicemen, retirees and their families.

Cleland explained that CHAMPVA pays a share of the usual and customary charges for certain health-care services provided by private physicians, community hospitals or other approved health-care facilities.

Spouses and children of veterans who are totally and permanently disabled from service-connected causes are eligible for the CHAMPVA program. Also eligible are surviving spouses and children of veterans who died as a result of a service-connected disability or who were totally and permanently disabled from service-connected causes at the time of death.

Cleland pointed out, however, that dependents and survivors who are eligible for either the Defense Department's CHAMPUS program, or for Medicare's hospital insurance, are not eligible for CHAMPVA.

The CHAMPVA program pays 75 percent of the reasonable hospital and professional charges for authorized inpatient care.

Dependents and survivors of veterans may apply for CHAMPVA benefits at any VA hospital or outpatient clinic. Any further information may be obtained at the nearest VA regional office or from representatives of national veterans organizations.

VA provides toll-free telephone service to its regional offices in all fifty states. The toll-free number for Georgia is 1-800-282-0232; in Alabama, call 1-800-392-8054.

'Make a date, avoid the wait'

With increasing emphasis being placed on outpatient care for veterans with medical problems, VA Administrator Max Cleland urged former service members to "Make A Date, Avoid A Wait" at their Veterans Administration hospital.

"We've found that we can provide the necessary medical care for most veterans by increasing our outpatient services," Cleland said.

"But this increase in the load factor makes it more imperative than ever for veterans to make an appointment for treatment as far in advance as possible," he said.

The VA chief said the agency expects veterans to make almost 17.5 million outpatient visits to VA hospitals and clinics during FY78.

"This is an increase of 556,000 outpatient visits over the current fiscal year," he said.

"Without the cooperation of everyone in scheduling visits to our clinics we are almost bound to encounter situations where delays will occur, which is the last thing we want to happen," he said.

To meet the expected demand for VA medical services, Cleland has asked Congress for a FY 79 budget increase of $355 million — to a total of almost $5.3 billion — for 1,183 new medical staff personnel.

To accommodate the heightened need for extended medical care on the part of the increasing population of older veterans, Cleland also plans to boost VA nursing home capacity by 700 beds during the coming fiscal year.

Veterans with service-connected disabilities will continue to receive priority treatment at VA facilities, he said.

Veterans whose medical problems are not service-connected may in some instances receive outpatient care necessary to prevent hospitalization.

AUSA Defense Report

In a recent hearing on the FY 79 Defense Budget, Representative George Mahon (D-Tex.), Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, chided Defense Department witnesses for making annual claims that the United States is not catching up to the Soviet Union in military preparedness. How could this be, Mahon asked, in view of increasing U.S. defense budgets over the past several years?

Secretary of Defense Harold Brown responded, "Yes, the United States is spending more but the Soviet Union is expanding its defense expenditures at an even greater rate."

Any fault to be found in this situation cannot be laid solely at the feet of the President, the Congress, the Defense Department or the Joint Chiefs of Staff. After all, the decision to allot 37 percent of the total Federal Budget for cash payments to individuals for welfare, unemployment compensation, medical care, etc., and just 23 percent to national defense is based on a collective judgment of what is needed and what is attainable. At this point in time the Soviet threat is hypothetical while the challenges of unemployment, sickness and old age are with us every day.

Aside from an alarming continuation of the downward trend in military manpower, the U.S. Defense Budget for Fiscal Year 1979 is not a bad one. There is something in it for everybody. The Army is low man on the defense-spending totem pole as usual but it will still be able to start buying a badly-needed new tank and some vital air defense weapons. The Air Force will not get its B-1 bomber but it will get a variety of new tactical aircraft. The Navy gets a few new ships but does less-well than the other services, apparently making no progress toward a return to a 600-ship fleet that could match the capabilities of the new Soviet global navy. There are some other critical problems, too, like the lack of any real progress toward improving strategic airlift and sealift capabilities.

There is an exceeding fine line to be drawn between what is needed to keep the nation socially vibrant and what must be done to protect it from exterior threats. Those who favor one priority over another must be prepared to compromise. In the end both sponsors may have to pull their belts in a notch or two.

USAEREC Form revised

The new USAEREC Form 10A is new again. A slightly revised Form 10A is now in print and will be sent in place of the October 1977 form in about three weeks, according to personnel officials.

The March 1978 version of the form eliminates bold boxes around percentile scores and adds the following line at the bottom of the remarks section: "Testing is mandatory during next test period if you failed to meet the minimum verification standard of 60 percent GO, regardless of your SQT percentile ranking."

Officials say that 270,000 of the October Form 10As have been sent to E-4s and E-5s containing only EER weighted averages. (ARNEWS)

Bad weather delays mail

Bad weather and weather-induced absenteeism among Postal Service employees have caused delays and backlogs in processing mail to and from Europe, Pentagon officials announced last week.

Officials are concerned that delays may create problems for soldiers who pay creditors in the U.S. by mail. DOD is informally asking creditors to check postmarks on payments while the Army is organizing a campaign through Community Service Centers to answer letters of indebtness or late payment charges incurred through no fault of soldiers.

Mail delays, primarily in New York, began with severe storms that hit the northeast in early January. Some mail has been delayed as much as 20 days — space available mail (SAM) and parcels have experienced even longer periods. The snowstorms caused delays and cancellations of flights, road transportation snags and high absenteeism rates among postal employees.

The Postal Service says that extra workers have been added at mail processing points at John F. Kennedy International Airport, N.Y.; Dulles International Airport, D.C. and O'Hare International Airport, Chicago. Officials cautioned that future weather problems could create additional delays.

DA officials have been answering hundreds of calls from parents of soldiers, officials say, since much mail is apparently not reaching soldiers or their families back home.

DA officials are advising soldiers in Europe to consult their commanders about creditor problems. Meanwhile, Army finance officials at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., say the storms have not affected allotment payments to financial institutions.

not needed, they should be assigned as close as possible to their nearest installation.

Hawaii is now included as part of CONUS for purposes of allowing soldiers in Hawaii to receive direct reassignment overseas.

The program will be announced to field commands within the next 30 to 60 days, according to a DA official. It will include changes to several regulations.

The official said that certain MOSs would not be affected by the policy if they are "space imbalanced." Certain MOSs have 70 percent of their authorized positions in Europe, for example, and require more rotation than other MOSs.

The change of status which now considers Hawaii as part of CONUS for assignment reasons will not affect its eligibility for overseas allowances, the official added.

While DA has officially announced the program goals of stabilizing tours, an official cautioned that individual situations, MOS shortages, local conditions and overseas requirements will require many exceptions to the policy.

Officials were unable to estimate dollar savings resulting from fewer and less distant PCS moves.

Weight tables discriminate?

The Army's official weight tables don't discriminate against women because they allow more "slack" for men, according to an official in the Surgeon General's office.

The official was responding to a question which pointed out that the minimum and maximum weight allowances give more flexibility to men when compared to women soldiers of the same height. Minimum weight allowed for a female soldier who stands 5'3", for example, is 100 pounds. A man of the same height must weigh at least 104 pounds. But, while there is only four pounds difference in minimum weights for the sexes, there is a 21 pound difference in maximum weight. At 5'3", a woman may not weigh more than 134 pounds while a man may not weigh more than 155 pounds.

These differences are present when comparing all weight tables for men and women soldiers of similar heights.

The DA official said that weight tables are computed using a popular "body mass index" formula. The result, according to the official, allows about 25 percent maximum body fat for both men and women.

The weight tables and other details on how they're determined are spelled out in AR 600-9. (ARNEWS)

Carter calls for major reforms

President Carter sent his proposed reorganization package for the Civil Service Commission (CSC) to Congress March 3, calling for the first major reforms in almost a century.

Carter said the reform package would make government more efficient, weed out poor performers and reward good managers and supervisors. Among other things, he cited the veterans' perference in Civil Service employment as an obstacle to women, minorities and other non-veterans and called for its reform.

Addressing a need to change the present system, the President's written proposal said, "...the system has serious defects. It has become a bureaucratic maze which neglects merit, tolerates poor performance, permits abuse of legitimate employee rights, and mires every personnel action in red tape, delay and confusion."

The reform package calls for abolishing CSC with an office for personnel management and a merit protection board. These separate offices, according to Carter, would eliminate conflicts by dividing responsibilities for management and abuse prevention.

A senior executive service would be established under the proposal. The service would oversee appointments and salaries for some 9,200 top executives in grades GS-16 and up.

Managers and supervisors, grades GS-13, 14 and 15 would be eligible for performance pay increase of up to 12 percent of their pay, under an incentive proposal in the package. An estimated 72,000 civil service employees would be eligible for this program.

While saying that his proposal for easing procedures in discharging subpar employees would not jeopardize due process or fairness, Carter said poor performers should be fired without delay. The proposed change would also be accompanied by a speedier appeal process.

Veterans' perference in CS job competition would be limited under Carter's proposal by:

- Limiting the five-point preference to 10 years after discharge.
- Requiring agencies, for the most part, to consider at least seven, instead of three, candidates for a job.
- Eliminating veterans' preference for former field and general grade officers and limiting the preference to three years after discharge for retired company grade and warrant officers and retired enlisted personnel.
- Restricting veterans' preference when determining seniority for purposes of reductions in force.

Carter cited an extension of programs to help Vietnam era veterans gain civil service employment as steps which would offset the veterans' preference limitations. In addition, he proposed that veterans with disability ratings of 50 percent or higher be eligible for non-competitive avpointments in the civil service.

The president based his reform proposals on a report by a task force which studied the system for even months. The proposals are subject to Congressional approval. (ARNEWS)

Infantry School celebrates 71st year

By Betty Zimmerman

The need for a U.S. Army Infantry School was realized as early as the American Revolution, but it wasn't officially established until 1907.

Baron von Steuben, a Prussian-born general who volunteered to help the colonies fight England, was appalled at the lack of leadership, discipline and training in the new American fighting forces. He did his best to provide the troops with on-the-spot training between battles, which helped immensely. The lack of available time and instructors seriously limited its effectiveness, though.

Infantry School conception 1826

In 1826, MajGen. Edmund P. Gaines persuaded the War Department to authorize the establishment of an infantry post at St. Louis for the purpose of organizing an "Infantry School of Instruction." Thus, in 1826, Jefferson Barracks became the Infantry's first school, but it closed in November 1828 because the troops were too busy fighting the Indians, Mexicans, the Spanish, and each other in the Civil War to attend a school.

This problem remained for the next 80 years; the Army lacked officers trained for leadership of large bodies of troops or to serve on large unit staffs. The line soldier was also untrained. The beginning of the 20th century found the Army weak in command organization, in coordination and planning at all levels and extremely deficient in training.

School of Musketry 1907

The event that led to the creation of Ft. Benning and the beginning of the present Infantry School occurred in February 1907. Due to his concern over the decline of the Army's good marksmanship, LtGen. Arthur MacArthur persuaded the Army to establish the School of Musketry at the Presidio of Monterey, Calif. The inception and anniversary date is recorded as April 1, 1907.

In January 1913, the School of Musketry was moved to Ft. Sill, Okla. where it operated in a very limited capacity due to the troops' involvement in the Mexican border skirmishes. The outbreak of World War I renewed the interest in obtaining proper training for the infantryman but Ft. Sill wasn't large enough to provide training areas for both artillery and infantry.

Infantry School of Arms 1917

The name of the school was changed from the School of Musketry to the Infantry School of Arms in 1917. General of the Armies John J. Pershing withdrew his troops from the Mex-

Parade, bands highlight Spring Fiesta

A Spring Fiesta featuring authentic Hispanic shows and dance bands, a parade of beauty queens and judo matches will be held at Doughboy Stadium April 8.

The first half of the physical activities portion of the Fiesta will consist of timed and untimed running events.

Starting times are:

7 a.m.	20-mile maxi-marathon
8 a.m.	10-mile midi-marathon
9 a.m.	5-mile mini-marathon
9:30 a.m.	2-mile Fun Run

The second half of the physical activities portion will consist of the 2, 5, 10 and 20 mile runs just for participation from 11:15 a.m. to 5 p.m.

All participants in the walking and running events will receive a certificate of participation signed by MajGen. William Livsey, post commander.

In addition to certificates of participation, competitors in the timed running events who finish first, second or third in their categories will receive Olympic style medals at the 4 p.m. awards ceremony with Maj Gen. Livsey presiding.

Runners for time are divided into military and civilian divisions and the following age/sex categories:

Men: Under 21, 21-24, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-44, 45-49, 50 and over.

Women: Under 29, 29 and over.

There is no entry fee for walkers or runners. Entrants for the timed events are encouraged to assemble at Doughboy Stadium at least 20 minutes prior to the event. There is no pre-registration; runners will line up for mass start upon first call.

Courses for all events are clearly marked with color-coded arrows. Runners are asked to follow the marked course to the finish line of their individual race. As they cross the finish line, they should remain in order of finish in the chute until they receive an order of finish card.

The entertainment portion of the Fiesta will be at Doughboy Stadium from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.

Highlighting the day's planned festivities will be a post parade starting from Blue Field at 3:30 p.m. and continuing down Zuckerman and Lumpkin Roads and Sigerfoos Avenue, arriving at the stadium at 4 p.m. The colorful procession will feature Explorer Post No. 76 Colonial Band, the 283rd Army Band, local Boy and Girl Scout Troops, horsemen from the Ft. Benning Hunt Club carrying flags, two old fire engines donated by Ft. Mitchell Fire Department and many gaily decorated floats.

Performances will include the world famous Los Hermanos Blanco Brothers Mariachis (wandering musicians dressed as charros or Mexican cowboys) Band; Carolina Alive, a group of 50 singers and dancers with a backup group from the University of South Carolina; Los Conquistadores, an eight-piece brass and rhythm group formed by members of the 283d Army Band especially for this festivity to provide Mexican, Latin American and Spanish sounds; and the Columbian Folklore dance group of 20 men and women doing native dances.

Participating in a parade of beauty queens beginning at 7 p.m. will be Miss North Georgia, Mary Jane Benson; Miss Latin Atlanta, Maria Victoria Torres; and Miss Ft. Benning, Carla Calhoun.

Dependent Youth Activities include athletic competitions for awards to be presented by the Recreation Services Officer, Maj. William B. McHenry. DYA will also sponsor games for youth including the popular Mexican pinata game, sack race, bean bag hunt, and exhibition judo matches which will take place in the stadium throughout the afternoon.

Refreshments, including authentic Hispanic foods, beer, soft drinks and coffee, will be available from 9:30 a.m. to 11 p.m.

The Spring Fiesta is open to military and civilians alike. There will be no admission or entry fee.

News in brief

Benning soldier to attend Navy school

A Ft. Benning soldier has been selected as the first Army enlisted man to attend the Navy's Aircrew Survival Equipment Course (ASEC) at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Lakehurst, N.J.

Staff Sergeant Edward Bruck, an aviation flight engineer in the 478th Trans Co (HH), 34th Med Bn, will begin the ten-week, self-paced course of instruction in April. The course curriculum, consisting of subject material from the Basic and Advanced ASEC, will be oriented specifically to those tasks which Bruck can expect to perform as the unit's Aircrew Life Support Equipment NCO.

"Bruck's selection marks an increased Army emphasis in aircrew survival," according to Capt. Loren Hall, post Aviation Safety Officer. "It's a move in the interest of safety that's been needed for along time."

New phone program begins

To implement a program of telephone abuse control, long distance call procedures will be changed beginning Monday.

Offices now equipped with telephone numbers beginning with 544-4 (the only numbers with long distance access) will no longer be able to dial long distance directly. Subscribers should call the post operator by dialing 0 and request assistance. The operator will verify the calling party's number, dial the long distance number, and bill the call to the calling party's number.

Except in emergency situations, only long distance calls originating from 544-4 numbers will be completed.

Bayonet interview

'Nothing can hold me back'

By Debra Hilgeman

Editor's Note: Sp4 Susan Klimek is presently assigned to the 988th Military Police Co. She has previously served for one year at Ft. Leavenworth as a line duty MP and in Korea for one year as a line duty MP and desk sergeant. Susan was married last month to her former patrol supervisor at Ft. Leavenworth, Sp4 Mitchell Klimek, who is now assigned here with the 139th Military Police Co.

BAYONET: Why did you enlist in the Army as a military policewoman?

KLIMEK: I'm from a small town where everyone knew everyone else and the local police were well-liked and respected. That's probably the reason I decided to go into police work. One day a friend told me that he used to be an Army MP and that the Army had an excellent school for police work. I didn't enlist for this job to prove anything to anyone; I came in because this is what I want to do.

BAYONET: As a woman, do you encounter any resentment from male MP's?

KLIMEK: I think a female MP has to prove herself a little bit more before the male MP's will trust her. A few of the men I've ridden with had only ridden with other male MP's but after a while they trusted me as much as they would a male partner. Once you're involved in an incident and prove that you know what you're doing, then you won't have any more problems. You can't just say, 'I'm an MP and you can trust me.' They have to know you can be trusted.

BAYONET: Do you feel that you are as qualified as a man for military police work?

KLIMEK: As far as knowing my job, yes, I feel that I am equal. As far as physically performing my job, I know I have my limitations. I know that if I have to subdue a larger person, I'll have a more difficult time than a man would. I knew what was expected of me when I came into this job. If I didn't feel I could handle it I would have gotten out a long time ago.

BAYONET: Since women do not usually possess the physical strength of men, do you find this is a hindrance in your job?

KLIMEK: I know that if I have to physically restrain a big man, there is no way I can do it alone. In a case like that, I call for a backup. Male MP's follow the same procedure; if it looks like there is going to be trouble, they'll call in another unit. To compensate for not having a man's physical strength, I talk a lot more than some of the male MP's. I realize that if you talk someone down, you won't have to take them in physically. When most people deal with a female MP, they tend to lower their defenses and are more apt to listen to reason. I just try to quiet them down so it won't become necessary to physically restrain them but if it does become necessary to use force, there's nothing I can do about it — it's something that has to be done.

BAYONET: Do you think that since you lack the strength of most men, you would be more apt to draw your weapon in a crisis situation?

KLIMEK: No! I've been in incidents where I was justified in drawing my weapon and I know it takes a lot for me to do it. There's no way I could just draw a weapon on someone. The only time I had to pull a weapon was when my partner and I had to bring in a rapist who was holding a knife on his victim. Fortunately, just seeing the gun scared the rapist into surrendering without a struggle. Some people apparently think MP's like pulling their weapon, but I've never met an MP with that type of attitude. Our job is to help people, not to hurt anyone. Some people just don't realize that.

BAYONET: What goes through your mind when you're in a crisis situation?

KLIMEK: Some MPs say they don't get scared in a tight situation but I find that hard to believe. I'm scared because I know I have the capability of killing someone and I don't want to have to do it. What gives me the right to kill someone else? But if it's necessary, then you have to do it — that's your job. You're out there to protect a lot of other people. You're scared, you hope you can talk the person out of it, you hope you won't have to use force and you hope nothing goes wrong. It's a lot of common sense and doing what you think is right.

BAYONET: Do you think that your training as an MP has adequately prepared you for your job?

KLIMEK: In military police work, every situation is different. There is no way a school can teach you everything you need to know. All people act differently; there is no set pattern. The best way is to actually be there and learn. The school teaches you all the basics such as the techniques and paperwork that the Army uses but there is no way to experience or prepare for some aspects of the job until you're in an actual situation.

BAYONET: When you answer a call, what reaction do you get from the parties involved when they see you are a woman?

KLIMEK: After the initial surprise wears off, most people just sit back and see how I handle the situation; if I can do the job. If I do allright, I'm accepted. I know when I go into a situation that being a female may work against me. Some people resent seeing a woman in a role that has traditionally been dominantly male. If you make even a small mistake, it's noticed. I have to remain as calm and polite as possible and, more often than not, people listen to what I say. As a woman you have to be more careful of what you say and how you act so that the people will trust you. You have to act like you know what you're doing in order for people to trust you. I also feel that people tend to become more calm when they know a female is in the area. They're not as likely to react physically. Many people will sit down and talk because they feel that my being a woman will make me more sympathetic.

BAYONET: Have you ever been in a situation where you had to subdue someone stronger than yourself?

KLIMEK: While I was on a patrol at Camp

Storm drains pose engineer problems

By Julie Casey

Spring cleaning has become a yearly event just as spring itself and Directorate of Facilities Engineering (DFAE) has been doing their part.

A contract was let to have the storm drain systems on Ft. Benning cleaned and repaired, according to Mr. George Manly, construction inspector for Contract Operations.

The contractors completed the project with the help of a special remote camera and video tape. The camera traveled down the pipe and filmed the inside of the pipe enabling them to find any places that needed repairs.

Besides making minor repairs and cleaning out the collection points in the storm draining systems, the contractors will be supplying a detailed report of their findings. A map of where the pipes are and locations of needed repairs will be supplied for a follow-up contract.

This follow-up contract will be let to repair extensive damages.

Mr. Sammy Harris, a civil engineer, commented, "In some areas the pipe was totally crushed or impassable by the other contractor's equipment. In one area 50 feet of tree roots have taken over the pipe."

According to Jack Armstrong, chief of Roads and Paving, one of the main problems with the drains systems is trying to keep them clean.

He said, "I don't know how some of the things we found in the drain got there but they block it and cause water back up and a variety of other problems. We found things like entire swing sets, basketballs, skate boards and bicycle wheels. Anything that is left on the street ends up in the storm drains eventually."

He also commented that the biggest problem is in the housing areas and encouraged families to be careful with their belongings.

Glad You Asked . . .

How do you feel about the military and civilian relations?

MSgt. Charles O'Malley, USACC Agency

My supervisor is civilian and I feel that I have very good rapport. His expertise and experience has been a tremendous help to me and other servicemembers in my division.

Lillie Bell Griggs, Phenix City resident

I feel that the civilians and soldiers get along very well. There are always going to be some people who don't get along with each other — that's the world.

James Ross, Columbus resident

I think that the relationship between civilians and soldiers is good. I get along just as well with the military as I do with civilians.

2ndLt. Mark J. Gantman, 23rd Co, 5th Bn, TSB

Where the military and civilian personnel interact, a mutual understanding develops; when they are isolated from each other only myths can be formed about each other.

Ronna Zinn Elliott, Columbus resident

The Army goes out of its way to formulate good public relations with nearby communities. I feel that many civilians are prejudiced against military personnel; say, for example, concerning credit.

COMMENTARY

Two different worlds?

By Sue Davis

Two different worlds? Some people believe the military and civilian communities are oceans apart, but in reality, we are more alike than we think.

When asked what they thought of the relationship between soldiers and civilians, several individuals came to the same conclusion: how we relate depends upon each individual. However, as a whole, the military does have a certain image to project.

Said one soldier, "I'm in the service to help maintain my country's freedom. We are a bureaucratic system, yes, but our purpose is to serve. I am willing to sacrifice six years of my time to serve my country. Don't get me wrong, I'm not a recruiter, but I feel the military, despite its constant demands on the individual, is the best deal going! The community relations are good here. I have been to other posts where I've received no cooperation. The military is a good example of a cross-section of society. We have all kinds. Some people neglect to consider the fact that at one time every servicemember was a civilian. Am I talking too much?"

On the other side of the coin, a civilian commented: "I don't get along with everyone. I've been considered to be an incurable grouch by many people, but whether or not a person is a decent human being is all I care about. However, I have worked with servicemembers and I find that they often have a sense of organization that I rarely see in some civilians I work with."

The more we associate with each other, the more we understand each other — that's life.

Qualification problems 'fire' up battalion soldier

Recently our battalion participated in annual qualification of the M16A1.

When I asked why we had to qualify again after qualifying in November, I was informed that due to the rain, some of the score cards were messed up and all were immediately placed in File 13. Also, I was told that qualification was done according to calendar year now and not fiscal year.

So, taking this in stride, I decide to attend the afternoon session Friday.

According to the DF sent to our office, briefings began at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. Too bad Range Control hadn't read the DF; things would have run a lot smoother.

A NCO who works in my office and I arrived at the range shortly after 1 p.m. and were stopped at the gate. Meanwhile, I noticed people were moving out to the firing line. The NCO with me asked the Safety Officer if he could brief us and let us join the remaining personnel. He informed us that he couldn't do it.

According to my NCOIC, the briefing began about 10 minutes to one. In addition, firing was going to take a long time because there weren't enough rifles to go around.

Since we weren't allowed to qualify, we returned to our office and presented the problem to our Sergeant Major. He in turn called battalion headquarters to inquire about the time difference. Apparently, battalion wasn't aware of the difference and didn't have too much to say.

The overall problem seems to be a lack of communication and organization. I have qualified many times and I know that qualifying is done according to fiscal year. Also, the personnel in charge of drawing weapons can draw enough M16s to meet the number of those qualifying. As for the time difference, perhaps the personnel involved should get together and synchronize their watches.

If these problems can be solved, the next time I am called on to qualify I'll be able to do so in the minimal amount of time.

'Possessory interest' tax for military prohibited

Non-command sponsored junior enlisted families in Europe will begin collecting about $50 extra each month, beginning this month, as a result of a DOD move to ease financial hardships for these lower income families.

DOD is allowing the services to pay junior enlisted soldiers, who have brought their families to Europe at their own expense, housing and cost of living (HA and COLA) allowances at higher rates to pay for extra costs of supporting a family there.

Former policy only allowed non-command sponsored junior enlisted soldiers (E-4 with less than two years service and E-1 through E-3) to receive single HA and COLA rates without provision for dependents. An E-4 with less than two years service living in Frankfurt, for example, formerly received a HA of $2.95 daily and COLA of $1.65 daily, for a monthly total of about $138. The new policy will allow the same E-4 to draw HA of $4.35 daily and COLA of $2.05 daily, for a total of $192 monthly. The $54 monthly increase will be included in today's paychecks.

The value of the dollar, which has declined to less than half its value in Germany 10 years ago, and the long family separation period for many married junior EM were cited by an official as reasons for the DOD policy change.

Some 20,000 junior enlisted soldiers are serving non-command sponsored tours in Europe, according to officials. It is not known how many of these soldiers reside with dependents there.

The DOD policy, which affects soldiers already stationed in Europe and those assigned there in the future, included the following conditions:

- Service members must have been in grades E-1 through E-3 or E-4 with less than two years service before reporting to their command in Europe, minus authorized travel time.
- Soldiers must have non-command sponsored dependents in the vicinity of the overseas duty station.
- Allowances are payable only to service members assigned to unrestricted areas that otherwise would have qualified them for a command sponsored tour at PCS.

Soldiers in grades E-4 and above with more than two years service and officers are eligible for the increased rates only if they are serving a command sponsored tour. A DA official explained that these soldiers have an option to serve a 36-month tour and collect the higher allowance rates..

Since junior enlisted soldiers who qualify for the new policy may qualify for a command sponsored tour later (because of an increase in rank or time in service), they will be given the option of accepting a sponsored tour or still collecting the higher allowance rates without extending or reenlisting during their tour there, the official added.

Junior enlisted soldiers serving a first tour in the Army usually spend about 30 months in Europe, the official continued. After receiving their initial Army training and serving an average 24-month tour in Europe, they are within a few months of separation and do not qualify for another assignment. This usually results in many first term junior enlisted soldiers serving a 30-month tour in Europe, often separated from their families because they do not qualify for command sponsorship or travel entitlements for dependents.

The official pointed out that soldiers who qualify for command sponsorship have the option of serving only a two-year unaccompanied tour in Europe and then returning to their families in the U.S. In Korea, he said soldiers serve only a 12-month non-command sponsored tour.

DOD's Fiscal Year 1979 budget includes a request to provide full allowances and travel entitlements for these junior enlisted members. If approved, they would be required to serve a 36-month European tour as are senior members. (ARNEWS)

Going through the dental drill

By Marie M. Russo

"You must remember that our mission is to get the troops ready for combat," stated a chief of one of the post's eight dental clinics, "not to perform a community service."

Don't construe this statement to mean that the dental personnel here are not concerned about your feelings, says Dr. (Col.) Jesse T. Mitchell, commander of Benning's Dental Activities. "I feel that the more you explain the procedure to a patient, the easier your job will be because the patient will have more confidence in you. The doctor that made the statement about our mission is mistaken."

Well, one staff sergeant from the AIT Bde disagrees with Mitchell and feels that quite a few dental assistants and even some dentists also have the assembly-line attitude that the one clinic chief has.

Soldiers a bit unhappy

"You go into the clinic and they stick all this fancy equipment in your mouth, then the doctor comes in, takes a look and tells his assistant what to record and what to do.

"All the while he's using terminology like 'extraction' and a bunch of numbers that makes you want to jump out of the chair and yell 'Hold it!' before you let them touch your teeth."

Another young soldier said he was so nervous after going to one of the dental clinics here that he didn't go back for treatment until his company commander made him. "I went in the clinic one day to have some cavities filled and wound up being prisoner in the chair for four hours and twenty minutes and no one ever explained why. Going back for the rest of my treatment wasn't worth the agony but then my CO turned on the pressure and I had to."

"But you can't judge the whole system by a few complaints," Mitchell pointed out. "It's perfectly normal for patients to be apprehensive when they have to see a dentist.

Complaints one out of many

"For every complaint we receive, there are about twenty five compliments," the colonel continued. "Just last quarter eleven dental personnel each received a Dedication to Others Award sponsored by the Medical Department Activities."

When some of the dentists at the various clinics on post were queried about their chairside manners, the majority of them said that they always tried to explain the treatment to their patients.

"A good doctor-patient rapport is very important," said Dr. (Capt.) Michael V. Ragone, a dentist at the Salomon Dental Clinic. "When you have a patient scheduled for every half hour, sometimes it's rough having to spend ten or fifteen minutes explaining why a certain tooth has to be removed, but this time is well spent.

Patients' feelings important

"A patient will feel more at ease and become more cooperative if he understands what you're doing and why you're doing it. Also, if the patient feels at ease there will probably be less appointment cancellations and failures.

Dr. Ragone, whose patients largely come from the dependent and retired military population, said he can understand how a troop dental clinic could possibly wind up operating on an assembly-line system but doesn't think that's the case at most of the post clinics.

"Most soldiers don't come in for treatment until they have a toothache," he explained. "Patients tend to believe that if they aren't in pain then there aren't any problems, but this isn't always the case.

"Another factor to take into consideration," the captain continued, "is that most soldiers aren't available to come in at anytime of any day. They have training and duty obligations to mention a few."

No dentist overstrength here

Mitchell also pointed out that out of the 65 dental officer requirements Benning has, only 46 dental officers are authorized here, which makes for a little heavier patient load. "But having to see a few extra patients a day does not and should not affect the doctor's chairside manner or the quality of care provided here.

"I'm aware that many patients feel that their treatment is being done by dental assistants rather than dentists, but this is a misconception," Mitchell continued.

Each dental team consists of a doctor, a dental assistant and a dental assistant expanded functional (DAEF). A DAEF is an assistant that has completed a two year training program above and beyond that of a regular dental assistant.

Assistants' work reversible

The dental assistant prepares the doctor's instruments and makes the necessary entries into the patients' chart. The DAEF prepares the patient for the doctor, assists in treatment and does some minor reversible procedures.

"But the key word is 'reversible'" Mitchell emphasized. "Any procedures done by a DAEF are closely supervised by the doctor and could easily be reversed if necessary."

Maj. Joseph W. Allen, executive officer for post Dental Activities, pointed out that the working relationship between a dentist and a DAEF is very similar to that of a medical doctor and a physician's assistant in one of the Troop Medical Clinics.

Mitchell also explained that it would be a waste of time and money for a doctor to not work on more than one patient. "If we only worked one chair at a time, the doctor would wind up standing around doing nothing while the DAEF continued to work on the tooth. But by working two chairs, he can be treating another patient while his DAEF is finishing up the procedure on the first patient.

"Even in private practice," the colonel continued, "the prominent dentist in town usually uses three or more chairs."

So the question of whether or not the dental

The delightful Mrs. G: she's a legend

By Betty Zimmerman

What local dry cleaning establishment manager has a "worldwide" reputation? In fact, to many, she's a legend!

Her name is Mrs. Anne Glasbrenner, but she is known to her patrons as the delightful "Mrs. G." She has run Ideal Cleaner's TSB-area branch since 1966, except for a five-year break betwee 1971 and '76 when her husband was ill.

OCS and airborne graduates now serving around the globe remember Mrs. G. with the same fondness often felt for one's mother. Newcomers reporting to one of TSB's schools often ask, "How do I get to Mrs. G's? I've been told she'll really take care of my uniforms."

2nd Lt. Debbie Edwards, a 50th Co. tactical officer, volunteered, "I don't know how I could have survived without her prompt, personalized care. Not just always getting my uniforms when I needed them — but getting cheered up every time I visited her place. She is such a good-natured, helpful woman; she'll even come in on Sunday, her only day off, to give one of us a badly-needed uniform."

It isn't that Mrs. G. has nothing else to do — she is the mother of six, grandmother of five, wife of a retired Army warrant officer, chairman of the South Columbus area Cancer Society, Key School volunteer worker for her six-year-old, and an active member of Baker High's Booster Club.

Mrs. G. says, "I just love people. I even help the candidates find apartments, car repair shops or anything else they need. Whenever I think about quitting, the students always plead with me to wait until their class is over." She concluded, "It looks as if I'll always be here and I love it."

A woman soldier with ties to the Airborne Department and hopes of becoming an intelligence officer has scored the maximum 500 points on the Army Advanced Physical Fitness Test for women.

To apply for officer candidate training here, Sp4 Susan T. Cruce, 22, was required to take the test, which she did recently before her normal duty day, as an administration specialist in the Directorate of Training Development, USAIS.

To score the maximum, Sp4 Cruce performed 42 pushups in 60 seconds, 44 situps in 60 seconds, ran the "run, dodge and jump" course in 21 seconds, the 80-meter shuttle run in 19 seconds, and the one-mile run in 7:29. She exceeded the standards for maximum scoring by two seconds on the 80-meter shuttle run and by five seconds on the one-mile run.

The daughter of Franklin and Roselyn Leibsly of Fairfax, Va., Sp4 Cruce is married to SSgt. Donald Q. Cruce, an Airborne Department instructor. Sp4 Cruce herself served as an instructor in the department's Ground Training Branch from January to August, 1977.

A graduate of Friendly Senior High School, Friendly, Md., the specialist has attended Frostburg State College, Frostburg, Md., and the University of Maryland, College Park, and now attends Troy State University here in her off-duty time. She and her husband live in Columbus.

Gen. Starry makes first official visit to Benning

TRADOC's Commanding General, Donn A. Starry, made his first official visit to Ft. Benning last week since assuming command in July 1977. The purpose of his visit was to gain insight and give his opinion of the Infantry Center's interpretation of tactics and doctrine.

Gen. Starry, an armor officer, is particularly interested in mechanized infantry tactics and the active defense concept as designed for the European battlefield. During his visit he received various combat and training developments briefings along with updates on the infantry fighting vehicle, the improved TOW vehicle, and the Black Hawk helicopter by their respective TRADOC systems managers.

The TRADOC Commander also spent a number of hours in the field with the AIT Bde.

Gen. Starry observed AIT and Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) training at night as he is concerned with the status of infantry training under limited visibility conditions.

Included in his tour was an extensive briefing and demonstration by the Infantry Board on equipment and procedures currently under test here.

DA nixes private weapons for duty

Military and civilian personnel are forbidden to carry or use privately-owned firearms while carrying out their duties, Department of the Army (DA) reminded in a message sent to the field last week.

While the message said information "indicates some DA personnel are using privately-owned firearms" on duty, Army law enforcement officials say no such incidents are actually a matter of record.

One official said the message was sent to call attention to AR 190-14, which restricts the use of privately-owned firearms and called it a routine action. He said the message was a response to a request from an installation asking permission for a civilian game warden to use his private firearm in carrying out his official duties; this is an example of use which is prohibited by the regulation.

The only exception to the regulation allowing military or civilian DA personnel to use private firearms applies to members of marksmanship units who use special target weapons. (ARNEWS)

Hungarian joins Army to say thanks

By Lisa D'Luhy

Patriotism.

How many soldiers entering today's Army join purely for patriotic reasons — love of country? Unfortunately, not many. But for Pvt. George Marias, it was the only reason.

Marias wanted to say thank you to his new country of six years for letting him live, work and soon become a citizen in the United States after leaving his communist homeland of Hungary.

"The best way that I could show my appreciation would be to join the Army and serve my country," stated the new private.

"Hungary is a very beautiful country but the morale in everyone is so low . . . there's no freedom, no rights," Marias commented. "The Hungarian government chooses the house you will live in, the car you drive and dictates your lifestyle. You get paid just enough to pay the bills and buy food," the Budapest native added.

It takes several years to get housing in Hungary and when you want to purchase a car, you have no choice as to the style and make. But you can rest assured that it will be a Polish, East German or Russian car. Capitalist products are not allowed.

Hungarians are hard workers by nature but they get no reward for working to provide more and higher quality products, according to Marias. They receive the same pay if they turn out one or twenty cars, for example, which can contribute to the low morale.

After several futile attempts to obtain passports from the Hungarian government, George and his wife, Sophia, were finally given a traveling passport for Europe in 1972. Unfortunately, their son did not receive one and was left in the care of relatives.

"Hungary is a very beautiful country but the morale in everyone is so low . . . there's no freedom, no rights."

When the two left Hungary, they knew they would never return.

After visiting several countries, the Marias' stopped at the U.S. Embassy in Rome and asked to be granted asylum in America. After spending five months in U.S. refugee camps for investigation and obtaining the necessary paperwork to go to the states, the Marias' received their passports and airline tickets to New York. They left the next day.

The Catholic Committee was at the airport to greet them when they arrived and by their third day, they both had jobs working as a porter and maid.

By January 1973, they had saved enough money to buy a car — of their choice — and decided to travel through America to California. They stopped when they reached Sarasota, Fla. though, and stayed for four years. Marias obtained his chauffer's license and landed a job with a trucking firm.

Working extremely hard, the Marias' wanted desperately to have their son with them in their new home, but Hungarian authorities would not grant them permission to send for him. However, they did tell them to come back to Hungary and get him. But George knew if he returned to Hungary, he would be placed in jail and would never be able to leave the country.

Finally in 1975, the Marias' became a family once again thanks to a lawyer friend in Washington, D.C. and black market channels in Hungary.

Becoming restless once again, George packed his bags and headed north to Chicago. There he met and began working with a fellow Hungarian, Miklosh Bende, who owned a meat store. George worked very hard and was paid well but he didn't like the weather and the Blood Center needs 'vein' people to give 'gift of life'

Bood. The gift of life.

A Blood Donor Center at the Martin Army Hospital (MAH) laboratory opened recently and is urging anyone interested in helping to save a life to give blood. Operating hours are Monday through Friday 8 to 11 a.m. Appointments may be made by calling 544-2221/2780.

The major units on post have been asked by the Blood Coorinator Officer, 1st Lt. James C. Stevens, to send 25 donors weekly.

The schedule is:

Tuesday
TSB 1 to 2 p.m.
Wednesday
34th Med. Bn — 1 to 2 p.m.
Thursday
36th Eng. Gp — 1 to 2 p.m.
Friday
197th Inf. Bde — 1 to 2 p.m.

The hospital is in dire need of extra units of blood for newborn babies and emergencies.

In the past, donations were only taken on Saturdays. This procedure amounted to approximately 200 donors every other week. Because blood is only good for 21 days, this technique caused the necessity for an improvisation.

The new system of 25 donors daily would provide the hospital with fresh blood and eliminate the need for purchasing and also lessen the possibility of outdated blood.

This in effect, enables the hospital staff to offer better patient care.

2nd Lt. Ricky Upton, 50th Co, TSB, looks forward to the refreshment he will receive after donating blood, as Sp4 Perigil Ilacas, 34th Med Bn adjusts the blood container.

10-8 on the warpost

Last Week we discussed permissible communications. This week's column will cover prohibited communications on the Citizens Band frequencies.

The pertinent rule is paragraph 95.83 of Subpart D. Part 95, Federal Communications Commission Rules and Regulations. Since most of this paragraph is self-explanatory, we shall ook at only three sections of it:

"Paragraph 95.83 Prohibited Communications.

a. "A Citizens Band Radio station shall not be used:

(1) "For any purpose, or in connection with any activity which is contrary to federal, state or local law."

Many people are not aware that by giving "Smokey" reports, they may be in violation of this rule. If the intent of the "Smokey" report is to circumvent the legal speed limit, that is certainly an activity "which is contrary to federal, state or local law."

95.83 a. (5) "To intentionally intefere with the communications of another station."

How many times have you heard this situation: a CBer gets the break and just begins to talk when some ill-mannered, inconsiderate fruitcake keys up right on top of him. The fruitcake then either starts whistling into his mike or plays his favorite radio station. I can think of no nice way to talk to people like that; in most cases, they get very vulger.

The way to handle this person is to report him to the FCC. Their telepyone number in Atlanta is 404-881-3084. The Address is: FCC, 1365 Peachtree St. NE, Atlanta, Ga. 30309.

95.83 (b) "A class D station may ntt be used to communicate with, or attempt to communicate with any unit of the same or another station over a distance of more than 150 miles."

Current sunspot conditions make accidental skip bad enought without deliberate skip. A CBer's license carriers certain rights and obligations. One of the rights is that the CBer may talk on any channel at any time. However, one of the obligations is that he may not interfere with other users. Skip-talkers violate the rights of others users and should be punished under the law.

Look, listen, react -- defensive driving

By Julie Casey

Mild mannered Brent calmly walked across the street towards his car. As he neared it he began to change and by the time he had reached his car he had grown a full beard. He clawed at the door trying to unlock it. Brent had become Dent, the wild mannered driver that everyone has to watch out for.

Ft. Benning's Safety Officer, Mr. Benny Padgett says, "The greatest threat to the soldiers are not firearms, disease, or crowning, but traffic accidents. The key to safe driving is defensive driving. Most of the accidents happening here on post could have been prevent by adherring to the basic principles of defensive driving."

When you crawl behind the wheel, ask yourself if you are in some way as wild as Dent. Do you stay in the left lane when driving down a four-lane highway or drive under the speed limit? Are you traveling with the flow of traffic even though the average traffic speed is over 55 mph? By doing any of these things you may cause other drivers to become impatient, frustrated and a little anxious. This mental change coupled with out-of-the-ordinary driving creates very dangerous conditions. As Dent, you become an accident looking for a place to happen.

The Safety Office in accordance with National Defensive Driving Week, April 2 through 8, is emphasizing the great need for defensive driving and hopes to further driving education on post.

Some safety pointers and ways to conserve both your life and energy are:

- Anticipate what is likely to happen.
- Plan for plenty of time to reach your destination.
- Stay alert for turning drivers who are likely to swing out slightly while making a turn.
- The best way to predict what a pedestrian is going to do is to assume they are unpredictable. Especially be on the lookout for unsteady cyclists.

Energy conservation in the United States has almost become a way of life for military personnel, and true to form, the theme for this year's defensive driving week is "The save way is the safe way."

- Keeping your car in proper condition will save money, resulting in better mileage.
- Underinflated tires will cause a 20 percent loss in gas mileage. Additional weight increases gas consumption, too.
- Jackrabbit starts and excessive passing also increases the rate of gas consumption.

DA urges commanders to renew their programs in driving safety to active duty personnel, dependents and civilian workers.

"I feel education is the best way to deter accidents from happening here," said Mr. Padgett.

Servicewomen's voice increasing status

Ever hear of DACOWITS? No, it's not an early morning or toll-free telephone system. It's an acronym for the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, an organization that advises DOD and the services on policies and practices affecting recruiting and retention of women.

Formed in 1951, DACOWITS is composed of 20 to 50 prominent civilian women appointed to three-year terms by the Secretary of Defense. For 26 years the group has been in the forefront of equalizing opportunities and benefits for military women. Its role will probably increase as the services gear up their drive for more women recruits.

A May 1977 study concluded that women are cost-effective and essential to the success of the all-volunteer force. And, the Army's MAXWAC study found that up to 35 percent of a unit's strength could be filled with women without detracting from performance.

As a result of these and other studies, the services plan to nearly double the number of active duty enlisted women within five years. It is anticipated that DACOWITS will play an important part in increasing recruiting efforts.

The importance of DACOWITS comes not only from the group's advisory capacity but also from the committee members' existing contacts in the civilian community. To ensure the best use of its considerable resources, the committee is being placed directly under the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics.

The committee has long since proven itself as an effective advocate for military women. In 1955 the group urged the admission of women to college ROTC programs. And in the same decade it recommended that married active duty women be paid quarters allowance.

Lifting the lieutenant colonel grade restriction on women was recommended by DACOWITS in 1960. Three years later the group advised that women should not be involuntarily discharged for pregnancy. In 1966, the Committee recommended that DOD study increased use of women in the military.

All of these recommendations were enacted by DOD, and from 1971 to 1976 the number of women in the military tripled.

Future strength increases pose numerous challenges for the services, but DACOWITS has demonstrated its usefulness as a means to help the military meet its goald.(FORSCOM)

Annual training began last week for the 70th Div (TNG) of Michigan.

The first of four brigade-sized (450-man unit) increments arrived March 19 to start the restructuring of their division from its present mission of Basic Training and Combat Support Training to infantry OSUT. Host for the reserve unit is the AIT Bde, which provides advice, assistance and support to the reserve instructors conducting the training.

A "Train the trainer" program is being conducted by the 70th Div. Drill sergeants and Committee Group instructors are undergoing requalification training in order to teach the Infantry OSUT Course of Instruction.

The vigorous hands-on training conducted by the reservists will result in SQT testing for each brigade at the end of its two-week annual training.

AER assists people in time of need

By Madonna Simple

"Most soldiers have a preconception that the Army Emergency Relief (AER) is never around when you need them or that they won't help you if they are there," stated 2nd Lt. Craig W. Kindred, AER officer.

"We want to help an individual who is in need of assistance. We are trying to show individuals who feel this way that we are there to help and want to assure them that we are doing all we can to help them," Kindred added.

AER was established in 1942. This private, non-profit organization collects funds to relieve active and retired military, their dependents and spouses and orphans of deceased military personnel when an emergency arises or when no other source of funds is available.

If AER can't help the individual, then they refer them to another organization that can help. Organizations that work closely with AER include Red Cross, ACS (lending closet, food locker) and budget counselors, Also the AER will refer the individual downtown for food stamps or other immediate aid.

Last year AER provided $147,035 in financial assistance to 1,380 military personnel and dependents.

AER will provide assistance for the following emergencies.

Medical, dental bills

AER will provide assistance to pay bills for those personnel who receive care from organizations outside of Benning. A few organizations won't accept CHAMPUS and require that the individual pay the bill. In those cases, AER will loan the individual the money and will be reimbursed at a later date.

Nonreceipt of pay, allowances

For those individuals who didn't receive their pay, AER will loan money in order to allow the individual to pay the bills, provide food for the family and make ends meet intil the individual receives his payment.

Loss of funds

Loss of funds by theft or burglary is also covered under AER. Before an individual received aid, the theft or burglary must be supported by a Military Police Report.

Funeral expenses

Funeral expenses for retired servicemembers is limited. The servicemember or dependent will pay the expenses and AER will loan money to help supplement the expenses.

Vehicle repair

A vehicle is a necessity to get to and from work. If an individual hasn't enough money to repair the vehicle, AER will loan money to help repair the car. However, this does not include car payments, insurance, etc.

Widow assistance

AER will provide assistace to widows at the time of death of the servicemember. This loan will assist the widow until social security, pension checks etc. are received.

Retired servicemembers

If the servicemember has a spouse in the hospital and hasn't sufficient funds to cover the bill, AER will loan money to help make ends meet until CHAMPUS reimburses the individual.

Undergraduate financial assistance

Undergraduate financial assistance is available for dependent children of active, retired or deceased military personnel. Merit,

Bde soldier receves AER aid

When the doctors wanted $406 for hospital fees and would not accept CHAMPUS, Sp4 Grant Walker, company clerk, Co D, 1st Bn, 1st AIT Bde worried about where he could get the money.

A talk with his first sergeant and company commander led him to Army Emergency Reliev. The personnel at AER had a talk with Walker and decided that he needed assistance. They granted him a loan, which he is repaying monthly.

"They helped me out a lot. I was worried about where I could get the money and I felt a whole lot better when AER said they could help. They sure took a lot off of my mind," Walker stated.

Walker, whose wife is pregnant, has to go to off post medical facilities after Martin Army Hospital discontinued their OBGYN service to dependents.

"AER really cares about people. If a friend ever has a problem like mine, I'll refer them to AER," Walker ended.

In 1951, 27 years ago, Eddie Clodfelter, now president of Becker Uniforms came to Columbus and set up a sales room in what was then the Ralston Hotel. At the beginning the sales was confined to Army Tailor-Made Uniforms. In the next three years the business grew to the extent that it was necessary to move to a larger Store on 12th Street where business continued to grow. And again in 1959 more space was needed at which time the business was moved to a two story building on Broadway. At this time moved the Tailor shop that had been operating in North Carolina to the second floor of the new building and occupied the first floor. It was at this time that we expanded to Police, Fire-

The Infantry School

After 71 years, continuing to provide precise ican border and the school was able to begin classes once again. The war in Europe became the number one topic of study.

Therefore, on May 21, 1918, the Adjutant General's office appointed Col. Henry E. Eames to head a board of officers tasked with the purpose of selecting a site for the Infantry School of Arms. Many sites were considered, but most were disqualified based on severe winters, unsuitable terrain, remoteness and excessive transportation costs. The board decided upon Fayetteville, N.C. but later settled on Columbus, Ga. because Fayetteville was taken as an artillery site.

The Adjutant General directed that the Infantry School of Arms with all personnel, property and equipment move to Columbus, Ga. by Oct. 1, 1918. On October 6, the first troops arrived and Camp Benning was officially born the next day. A ceremony to christen the Army post as Camp Benning was held Oct. 19, 1918.

Col. Henry E. Eames was appointed the first Commandant of the Infantry School of Arms on Oct. 5, 1918. His first decision was to change the location of Camp Benning from an area near Macon Road to its present site where the terrain was more suitable. Three separate schools, operating at widely scattered locations, formed the nucleus of Benning's School of Arms: the Small Arms Firing School at Camp Perry, Ohio; the Machine Gun School at Camp Hancock, Ga.; and the Infantry School of Arms at Ft. Sill, Okla.

The school began operating with 125 officers and 1,200 enlisted men. Its mission was to give selected personnel a higher degree of practical and theoretical instruction in the use of small arms, with the intention of making them better instructors.

The Infantry School

The early days of the school were shaky at best. It nearly died in infancy because of the demobilization that occurred at the war's end. It was only after several years of faltering progress that The Infantry School (TIS) received Congressional authorization on Feb. 20, 1920.

The scope of instruction took a wider range, evolving from a curriculum limited to subjects of marksmanship to the whole field of modern weapons and tactics.

In General Order Number 1, Jan. 9, 1922, the War Department announced Camp Benning a permanent military installation. The impossible had come to pass and the infantry had a home!

Era of growth

The 1930's were eventful years in the growth of Ft. Benning and the school. George C. Marshall was concluding his influential tenure at the school and monies from Public were financing new facilities. Bldg. 35, for years the post headquarters as well as the academic center for The Infantry School, was completed in 1935.

Another innovation was the streamlining of the school's courses so the largest number of officers could be taught efficiently and completely in the shortest possible time. This took place in 1934 when the Advanced Course and the Company Officer Course were combined to create the Regular Course. Subjects covered tactics and techniques of other arms with emphasis on practical application.

As the 1930's came to a close, the world situation became more ominous. TIS continued reorganizing and consolidating to keep abreast of the times. Blocks of instruction on logistics, mobilization, terrain application, combat intelligence, field orders study of maps, and combined deployment of all branches were added to the curriculum.

World War II effects
1940

With the eruption of World War II in Europe, the Infantry School and Ft. Benning rapidly began preparations for combat. Twenty-six classes were being conducted at TIS by late spring of 1941.

Two programs, the Officer Candidate School (OCS) and the Parachute School, were initiated during 1941 and 1942. These innovations were to have a definite impact on the outcome of the war as well as a tremendous influence on the U.S. Army for years to come.

The Army began to reduce its personnel with the end of the war, and so did Ft. Benning and TIS. In 1947, the OCS program was transferred to Ft. Riley, Kan. and the Parachute School was placed under the supervision of TIS.

Cold War era

The onslaught of the Korean conflict brought more changes to Ft. Benning. TIS converted from a 40 to 44-hour academic work week. All courses were reviewed to eliminate unnecessary subjects, while at the same time most courses were intensified but reduced in length. The instructional program emphasized weapons, small unit tactics, physical fitness, night operations, defensive combat, and combined arms teamwork. One of the greatest difficulties of the accelerated training program was it did not follow the planned mobilization program, resulting in a shortage of training personnel and equipment.

The total number of classes at TIS increased from 104 in 1950 to 247 in 1951. The largest increase was in the Associate Infantry Company Officers classes; DA directed that all newly commissioned officers coming on active duty were to attend the branch associate course and effective training to soldiers

The Infantry School's first home at Camp Benning consisted of temporary buildings and tents located three miles from Columbus on Macon Road. The school's first commandant soon effected a move to Benning's present location.

OCS returned to Benning in January 1951 and two new courses, the Field Grade Officers Refresher Course and the Company Grade Officers Refresher Course, were added. The purpose of these one-month courses was to acquaint recalled World War II officiers with the latest Infantry tactics and techniques.

With the outbreak of hostilities in Korea in June 1950, the need arose of specialized combat soldiers. The Commandant of TIS was directed to establish a Ranger Department for the purpose of conducting a Ranger Course in 1951. The overall objective of Ranger training was to raise the standard of training in all combat units.

Not only did TIS train enlisted soldiers and officers in the latest advancements and discoveries in infantry doctrine, tactics and weapons in the 50s, it was also responsible for making and incorporating those advancements and discoveries into operational doctrine.

Effective Jan. 1, 1957, Third Army Headquarters directed the redesignation of TIS to United States Army Infantry School (USAIS).

Vietnam Conflict 1960

The 1960's was a decade of war, and USAIS once again found itself responsible for formulating new concepts and tactics to fight a guerilla conflict in Vietnam as well as the training of new combat leaders for a rapidly expanding Army.

In June 1964, the school acquired a new home in Infantry Hall, Bldg. 4. The $10 million air-conditioned building was an ultra-modern, six-story structure designed to house post headquarters, the staff and faculty of the USAIS and the academic classrooms.

As the troop buildup continued in Vietnam, once again OCS was expanded with their peak in 1967 when over 8,000 candidates were commissioned as second lieutenants.

A combination post headquarters and Infantry School building was completed at the intersection of Wold Avenue and First Division Road in 1935. It is now known as Bldg. 35 and houses various offices including those of Civilian Personnel, Supply and Storage, Directorate of Facilities Engineering, and the Education Center.

A new concept was conceived at the USAIS when it was discovered that the Vietnam conflict was rapidly diminishing the Army's supply of junior (NCOs)). In order to meet this demand, the Noncommissioned Officer Candidate Course (NCOC) was created. Two battalions, formerly committed to the OCS program, were entrusted with this new responsibility on Sept. 1967. The course consisted of 12 weeks of intensive training and instruction. Graduates were promoted to sergeant or staff sergenat, depending upon their class standing.

Era of new ideas 1970

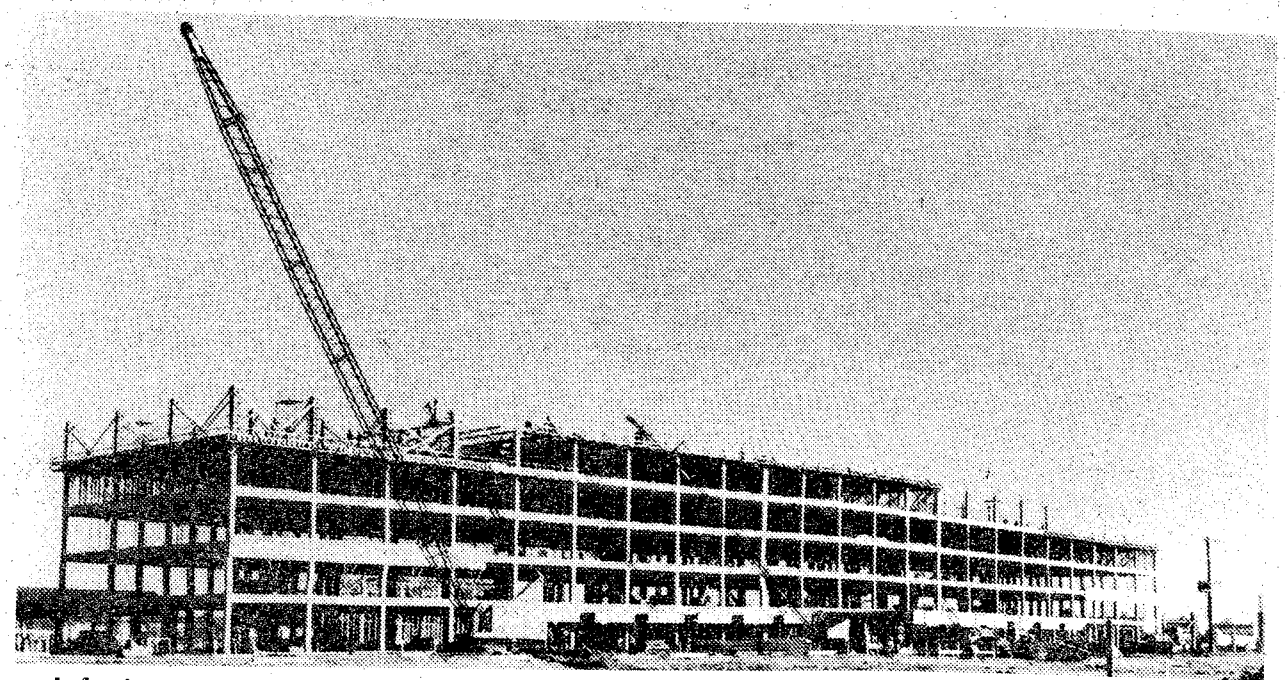
Upon the completion of combat activities by the U.S. in Vietnam, the USAIS and Ft. Benning once again found themselves rapidly phasing down their activities as well as shifting the major emphasis in training and doctrine to more conventional warfare. The OCS program began its reduction in the summer of 1970.

Also in 1970 was the advent of the Volunteer Army concept. The NCOC program was replaced by the Noncommissioned Officer Education System (NCOES) in 1972. Their mission was to establish a professional development program for career NCOs. The OCS program was revised; it became a Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate Course and trained individuals for commissioning in all branches of the Army. Graduates were then sent to appropriate schools for basic branch training.

During the early 1970s, troubles in the Middle East caused intensive study devoted to the concepts of mechanized infantry and antiarmor. Particular emphasis was directed towards the development and employment doctrine of the Mechanized Infantry Combat Vehicle and the TOW and Dragon (anti-tank missile systems).

Lessons learned from many indicators prove beyond question that the key to victory in the modern battlefield is the well-trained, rapidly reacting combined arms team, with infantry, armor, artillery, air support, and every other combat element acting in precise concert. The infantry is the critical element of that team, for only infantry possesses the flexibility and responsiveness to fight under any condition, over any type of terrain.

The emphasis at USAIS today is to provide the Army with personnel, especially leaders, who can function with precision and effectiveness. Tactical and technical proficiency, physical fitness, mental toughness and spiritual awareness are the mandatory qualities of the infantry leader. It is towards the development of these qualities in all infantrymen that the USAIS of today is dedicated.



Infantry Hall was under construction for two years before its completion in june 1964. This academic and administrative center of Ft. Benning is known as the "Home of the Infantry."

Professor Safety says . . .

The use of cotton-tipped swabs to clean out ears can result in ear injury and loss of hearing, according to a study conducted by three pediatricians and two ontolaryngologists. Based on their observations of ear injuries, the physicians concluded that the cotton-tipped swab is the most common cause of serious penetrating wounds to the ear drum. Moreover, cotton-tipped swabs were involved in a widespread loss of hearing in infants and children due to impacted ear wax. The swabs used to clean out ear wax actually rammed the wax further into the auditory canal until impaction occurred. Instead of using swabs to clean your ears and your children's ears, use a wash cloth and a generous amount of soap and water. (Courtesy of Family Safety Magazine)

Colonial Band member appointed to Air Force Academy

By Betty Zimmerman

From the Columbus-Ft. Benning Explorer Post '76 Colonial Band to the Air Force Academy's Drum and Bugle Corps — that's the immediate plan of Spencer High's Delores K. Smith.

She received her competitive appointment to the Air Force Academy through Third District Congressman Jack Brinkley and will report to Colorado by June 26.

Smith is the daughter of Mrs. Dorothy K. Smith. Besides playing trumpet in the Colonial Band, she is also Spencer High's Drum Major, president of the Aviation Explorer Post 142 and a member of a winning Ft. Benning Youth Activities Junior Rifle Club team.

She has set high goals for herself. She wants to be an astronaut and will major in Aerospace Engineering while at the Academy.

COL David L. Buckner, Deputy Assistant Commandant of the USAIS, who has been placed on the promotion list for Brigadier General, said, "Well, I have had a lot of practice at being a Colonel. The whole thing is very exciting and I look forward to many more active and rewarding years in the Army."

Champus includes ambulance service

Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) coverage has been extended for private (nongovernmental) ambulance transportation to Uniformed Services hospitals and for treatment of military service-connected illnesses and injuries, according to Defense Department officials..

The CHAMPUS Regulation unveiled last year excludes cost sharing for these categories of expenses. Program officials, however, have exercised the Regulation's transitional authority to extend coverage for both.

Coverage for private ambulance service to Uniformed Services hospitals has been extended as an interim measure pending finalization of a plan that will provide better interface between CHAMPUS and the Uniformed Services direct care system. Details of the plan will be announced when available.

Private ambulance service to Uniformed Services hospitals must meet criteria of the Program's Regulation. For example, it must be medically necessary and related to a covered condition.

Voluntary ambulances for which the operating organization requests a contribution but does not issue a legally binding bill are not covered by CHAMPUS. Neither is service provided by such vehicles as medicabs and ambicabs.

Coverage for military Service-connected injuries and illnesses has been extended while Congress considers several bills that would do away with the exclusion, which is based in law.

The extension provides fair treatment for all affected beneficiaries while congressional action is pending, according to CHAMPUS officials. They add that the exclusion will go into effect on January 1, 1979, if Congress has not acted by that time.

area, so he sold many of his personal belongings and loaded up the car once again. The Marias's were heading west this time, and they made it to California.

But, California wasn't to George's liking either, so they sold everything they owned and moved to Hawaii, which is where he and his family are currently residing.

"The best way that I could show my appreciation would be to join the Army and serve my country."

It was in Hawaii that George decided it was time to do something for the country that did so much for him. He went to the recruiting office and signed up for the National Guard and 11B-Infantry.

Pvt. Marias liked the Army enough to become active duty, citing the job is good and the pay enough to support his family. "It is important to like what you're doing and I am happy to be able to choose what I want to do. Hopefully, I will be able to attend Airborne and Ranger training and more importantly, become a Green Beret," stated Marias.

After attending Basic Training at Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo. Marias came to Ft. Benning and was assigned to E Co. 4th Bn, AIT Bde.

There's a vast difference between the Hungarian and U.S. Armies, according to Pvt. Marias. Hungarian Basic Training was very poor: They trained with outdated weapons, didn't receive enough food and were paid $3 a month. Every healthy 18-year-old male is required to serve in the Army for two years unless they're attending college; then they only have to serve one year. They also have no choice of job as the Hungarian Army decides what job their soldiers do according to their test scores.

Marias was to be a telecommunications technician before attending Reserve Officers School but he found out that after spending two years in the Army as an officer, he would never be granted a passport. After only two months, George went to a doctor and received a medical discharge through the black market.

"It is important to like what you're doing and I am happy to be able to choose what I want to do."

Don't let that medical discharge fool you. Marias is in excellent physical condition, scoring over 480 on a recent PT test.

According to his command officer, Marias is an exceptionally sound, well motiviated and self-disciplined troop. "He came in for totally patriotic reasons, which is rare in this day and age," concluded 1st Lt. Alvah Skaggs.

Post soccer team is out to get you

Benning's unofficial soccer team is interested in recruiting members, according to Coach Steve Pinter, Deputy Recreation Services Officer.

"Soccer players don't have to be 300-pound musclemen," noted Pinter, "the game requires endurance more than anything else."

The team is now in the formative stage and consists of about 20 regular players, most of whom had either college soccer experience or are from a country where they were brought up with the game. Pinter explained, however, "Experience is not necessary. We're very interested in soldiers who would like to learn the game or have only limited exposure."

The team is already participating in scrimmage games with local teams and are practicing two nights a week. Either a game or practice is held every Saturday or Sunday.

Pinter explained that Benning has a tremendous potential for soccer because of the mild Georgia climate and the size of the post.

"We hope to have enough interest to have several Benning teams and form a league," said Pinter. "From there, we would like to establish an all-star team to represent Benning on the Army or interservice level."

"Our goal is to introduce the Benning community to soccer and promote the world's most popular game," concluded Pinter.

The post soccer team will host Columbus College Saturday at 2 p.m. on Stillwell Field.

Doughboy spring football practice begins Monday at 6 p.m. in Doughboy Stadium. For further information call the Athletic Branch at 545-2281 or 545-2282.

Athletic officials needed

Softball and baseball officials are urgently needed by the Ft. Benning Officials Association to umpire for the Youth Activities leagues and the military, company-level games.

The pay is good and the hours are short. If qualified and interested, call Lt. Col. Smith, 545-4301, SSgt. Robert L. Vaughn, 545-2567, or Allen Fluellen, 687-4739, for details.

Baseball sign-up slated

DYA registration for youth baseball and girls' softball will be conducted April 10-May 11 at Bldg 1054.

Sign-up will be open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. for all military dependents. The age requirement for youth baseball is 6-18 years and for girls' softball the age requirement is 9-16 years.

The registration fee is $5 per person or $10 per family. A birth certificate or I.D. card is mandatory.

Coach registration for both baseball and softball will also be held at Bldg 1054 on the above time and dates.

Softball clinic planned

A softball clinic for players, coaches and officials will be conducted Thursday and Friday from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. at Briant Wells Field House.

The clinic will be conducted by the USAIC Sports Office and is open to all military personnel.

For further information call the Sports Office, 545-2281.

Choirboys whip Rangers

In a recent basketball exhibition game held at the New Zealand Astrodome before 25,000 silently cheering fans, the Benning Chaplain's Assistants team took on an elite Ranger team. First quarter action was slow and the Chaplain's Assistants held a meager 72-0 lead. When the first buzzer sounded they thought the game was over and immediately departed to the bus station for the long ride back to Benning. The Rangers were not to be stopped, however and bravely fought on without them. They finally made it on the board in the final seconds of the third quarter but were unable to clinch a victory.

personnel on post are concerned about your feelings as well as your teeth is still open.

Sp4 Larry Kosbab, Staff and Faculty, AIT Bde, said in all his visits to his dental clinic, he has found that the dental assistants and dcotors treated him well. "They're always concerned about how I feel; they always explain what's going to happen."

A soldier from the Support Bn, 197th Infantry Bde, Sgt. Ron Fowler, added that he feels your attitude when you first see the dental team has a lot to do with their chairside manner. "If you go in there with a chip on your shoulder because you had to wait an extra five minutes, there's no regulation that says they have to show concern for your feelings their job is to take care of your teeth."

The Dental Activities commander also pointed out that if patients were unhappy with the care they are receiving here, his personnel would not be recognized by so many Dedication to Others Awards. "After all, it is the patient's comments that are the basic recommendation for the awards."

Patient not just a statistic

He continued to say that to him and his dental officers here a patient is the most important person in the dental service. "The patient is not dependent on us, we are dependent on him. He is not an interruption of our work, rather the purpose of our work.

"The patient is a person not a statistic," Mitchell concluded. "He has feelings, emotions, biases and wants. It is our business to satisfy him."

Marksmen win again

SFC Martin D. Edmondson, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, came within one point of the existing world record recently as he won the 1978 Interservice Moving Target Championship held at Hibbs Range.

Edmondson posted a first day score of 578 points out of 600, one shy of Russia's world record of 579 by Victor Gazov at the 1976 Montreal Olympics. The Texas native then followed with scores of 560 and 554 for a total of 1,692 points for the individual championship. Teammates MSgt. Charles Davis and Ssgt. James Reiber picked up second and third places respectively for a U.S. Army sweep of the top three. Davis finished with 1,683 points followed by Reiber with 1,665.

In team competition, the U.S. Army squad of Edmondson, Davis, Reiber, and Sgt. Robert George dominated the championships. They won the Olympic team runs by scoring 4,439 points over the U.S. Army Reserve who finished with 4,363 points.

Over twenty competitors were on hand for the matches, including personnel from the Marine Corps, Air Force, Army and Marine Corps Reserves. Ft. Benning will also host the U.S. Moving Target Championships and tryouts for the 1978 World Shooting Championships April 26 through 30. At least thirty competors are expected to be here to try for the four man team that will represent the U.S. in Seoul, Korea this September.

Hardships of junior enlisted eased

The military services have won a court suit which prevents a California county from taxing active duty residents of government quarters. The ruling was issued by the U.S. District Court in San Francisco earlier this month.

The trial court decision prohibits Humbolt County from taxing active duty military personnel on a "possessory interest" in government quarters. While the ruling applies only to Humbolt County, other California counties may either accept the court's ruling or decide to attempt a possessory tax of their own. California officials did not comment on the decision by the court.

The Justice Department claimed that the tax interfered with government operations, that military housing is exempt from state tax, and that military personnel are protected from such taxation by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (SSCRA).

The court did not rule on these specific points presented by the Justice Department suit. The court said that the tax was not legal on other grounds, declaring the tax invalid because California's own laws do not allow it.

Citing a 1977 case, which triggered other attempts to tax military personnel, the court said that military quarters are not subject to The "possessory interest" tax only applies, according to the court, when there is an independent, private interest in the property.

The court said that "the military personnel's occupancy of assigned quarters is clearly distinguishable from the Forest Service employees' occupancy of dwelling units." It added that, under federal law, quarters are furnished to military personnel solely for the benefit of the U.S. and not the individual service member. Clarifying this, the court said that physical presence at a duty station, 24-hour duty obligation, and movements dictated by orders make quarters an integral part of the military service.

If military personnel were considered to have a taxable possessory interest in quarters, the court continued, the tax would still be unconstitutional. Property owned by the U. S. cannot be taxed by state or local governments without the consent of the U. S., the court declared, citing a previous case. (ARNEWS)

Court of Appeals upholds conviction

The court-martial conviction of a private who refused an order to undergo physical training was upheld by the U.S. Court of Military Appeals this month.

The conviction, upheld earlier by the Army Court of Military Review, had been appealed on grounds that evidence disproving a claimed injury was unreliable and that obeying the order would have forced the private to incriminate himself.

The court ruled tha a physician assistant's examination provided evidence that the injury was faked "beyond a reasonable doubt." The court also ruled that the officer who ordered the private to undergo training did not compel him to incriminate himself.

The physician assistant's examination and testimony had indicated there was no injury and the private had been convicted of neglect, disrespect to a superior officer, disobeying a command and feigning an injury.

The UCMJ requires an officer to advise a soldier of his rights under Article 31, if the officer suspects wrongdoing.

But the court held that the officer was not aware of the injury claim before he issued his command to the private and, therefore, was not obligated to inform him of his rights.

The court ruled that ordering the private to participate in the company's physical training was a routine command and was not issued to gather evidence against the private.

The commander had testified that the private shifted from limping on one leg to the other, not just on the leg which he claimed had an injured ankle. (ARNEWS)

The ol' green thumb's a itchin', eh?

"We all have a little bit of farmer in us and it just takes a few warm days like we've been having to get the old green thumb to itching," says Mr. Phillips, Chief of Grounds and Maintenance Branch, Director Facilities Engineers (DFAE). "However, it is still too early to plant most seeds or to fertilize lawns because the ground is not warm enough for germination or growing."

The Grounds and Maintenance Branch is responsible for drafting and implementing a long range landscaping plan for Ft. Benning. The plan includes the planting of trees and shrubs, fertilization, soil treatment, lime treatment, removal of trees, and pruning.

Most of the work is done on a contract basis and the amount accomplished each year depends on the availability of funds. The planting season for trees and shrubs is November and December. During this period contractors plant areas specified by DFAE.

Contractors will be fertilizing lawns and common areas in all housing areas during April and May. The fertilize mixture is 13-13-13 and according to Mr. Phillips should be adequate for the entire growing season. The soil on post requires lime every four to five years and will not be needed this season.

"Some lawns may require additional lime or fertilize than furnished by the contractor," admitted Mr. Phillips. "Residents can obtain limited bags of each by submitting a work order to the Grounds and Maintenance Branch, Bldg. 330 or by calling 545-2260/5420."

Gardens are authorized but all seeds, plants and fertilize must be purchased by the individual. USAIC Regulation 210-5 states:

- No area of the lawn will be destroyed for vegetable gardens. Former garden plots in the lawn area will not be replanted.

- Occupants may plant vegetables in flower beds. Flower beds along side buildings, which enhance the esthetic appearance are authorized not to exceed 24 inches in width.

- Occupants may cultivate common use areas (open areas) which are at least 150 feet from the building. Garden plots in these areas will not exceed 150 square feet.

- An occupant utilizing the common use area will obtain approval from the Chief, Housing Division, through submission of a letter or Disposition Form along with sketch/map indicating location and size of area.

- Occupants desiring to cultivate large garden plots must obtain an area from their major commands.

- Major commands can obtain areas upon request to DFAE, Building and Grounds Division. A sketch/map indicating location and size of area will accompany the request." (Hsg 5-2822)

Residents may plant trees or shrubs in their yards but must first submit a request to DFAE for approval. This requirement is to insure your plants correspond with those in the landscape plan.

Monthly weather

April will be mild and pleasant

April marks the beginning of the summer season. Tropical air from the Gulf of Mexico will increase and the wind will come mainly from the southwest. Early morning low cloudiness and fog will be less frequent during the month.

There will be four or five cold fronts passing through the area. These cold fronts will generally be preceded by squall lines which can generate some of the most violent weather of the year. Severe thunderstorms and tornadoes will remain a threat.

Temperatures will be mild and pleasant. The average high in April has been 78 degrees, average low 52. The record high for the month was 93 degrees, record low 29.

The average monthly rainfall for April has 4.4 inches. The monthly record rainfall was 12.3 inches; the 24-hour record was 5.5. Previous Aprils have averaged seven days with rain and five days with thunderstorms.

Currently the EOD field is understrength in the lower ranks and looking for some good volunteers. A service member cannot enlist or re-enlist for this MOS. Selection is strictly on a volunteer basis.

Anyone at Benning interested in EOD as a career must first be interviewed by the senior EOD NOCs and the EOD officer. They are particularly interested in whether or not a man can work easily with his hands, is interested in self-improvement and can he easily absorb new information?

The 89th trains EO Reconnaisance Agents in ordnance recognition and identification. Classes on homemade devices are restricted to law enforcement command personnel.

Classes on ordnance recognition, bomb threats, and general safety are given to all military and civilian agencies including the fire departments.

Personnel are sometimes attracted in applying for an EOD career because of the demolition duty pay. Officers receive $110 per month; enlisted $55 per month.

Last year, the 89th interviewed 98 candidates and accepted only 15. Standards are very high, only 28 percent of those selected make it through the school. The EOD officer is the one who has the final say on who is or is not accepted.

Training of prospective EOD personnel is conducted at Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala. for two weeks and at the U.S. Naval School, U.S. Naval Ordnance-Station, Indian Head, Maryland for 19 weeks.

One factor to keep in mind is that there is a definite danger involved with rendering explosive ordnance safe. No matter how well trained an EOD specialist is and what equipment is provided, there remains an inherent danger when handling armed explosive items.

Redcloud in Korea, a drunk had my partner pinned against a wall. The attacker was too large for me to handle physically, so I had to use a choke hold until he lost consciousness and released my partner. You don't like to use force but sometimes it's necessary. When I first started police work, I thought I could go out and not worry about getting hit because I'm a woman but I found out differently. I've been hit a few times but not as much as the guys have. If I see my partner getting hit, nothing can hold me back. I won't go in and start something but if something unavoidable is there I won't back away from it.

BAYONET: In your opinion, does your chain-of-command treat women MP's differently from male MP's?

KLIMEK: I've never been stationed where I was treated any differently than the men. At Benning, I'm not held back from any call; whether it's a lawnfire or someone being shot. I don't want to be treated in any special way or receive any special favors. If I were to receive special treatment, the men would feel resentful. I think the chain-of-command realizes this because I've never had any problem with that type of situation.

BAYONET: How has military police work affected your personal life?

KLIMEK: My husband and I work different shifts so we don't see too much of each other. We each worry while the other is at work but when we do see each other, it's better because we know the other is okay. Also, we both understand each others' job which makes it easier to adjust. The main thing is that we're doing what we like.

Most Army clubs, package stores out of the red

By John Hart

A majority of the Army's officer, NCO, and enlisted clubs and package beverage stores showed a profit in 1977, according to officials of the Army Adjutant General staff.

Stephen O. Rossetti Jr., of the Army Club Management Directorate, said nearly 800 clubs had their "best fiscal year" with only 22.4 percent not showing a profit.

Total revenue for the clubs and package beverage stores reached over $260 million and showed a net profit of about $10.4 million, according to Rossetti.

The $10.4 million net income is "channeled into capital improvements — the construction and renovation of club facilities and the replacement of worn out furnishings and equipment, resulting in better clubs," he stressed.

Many clubs today are in a better position to make much needed capital improvements than in the past, according to Rossetti.

He said three years ago many of these same clubs were "drifting towards bankruptcy and improvements of facilities seemed out of the question."

BrigGen. James C. Pennington, Adjutant General, says these financial results are not accidental:

"This is . . . an effort that has included good placement of managers, realistic training of these managers, on-site technical training and management assistance visits to the clubs, greatly improved command support and lots of hard work by the club managers," he said.

These improvements are the reason why club managers and their commanders have been urged over the past few years to make a profit, according to Pennington.

"Many commanders say that clubs are not intended to make a profit," he said.

"I agree to a point," Pennington continued. "We are not in the business to make money over and above our needs, but we are responsible for providing a decent place for the soldiers to go during their leisure time. The clubs must simply generate their own money to make capital improvements," Pennington said. (ARNEWS)

Close encounters of the worst kind

By Joyce Walker

It streaked out of the sky, a large, bug-like object sprouting numerous antennae and landed with a crash in the quiet woods in Tuskegee, Alabama. Local authorities called the Explosives Ordinance Disposal (EOD) team at Ft. Benning, reporting they had found a bomb.

The big bug turned out to be an experimental weather satellite that had been launched by the University of California, according to MSgt. Maynard W. Geisler, Senior EOD supervisor in the 89th Ord Det here.

The 89th is a tenant unit whose headquarters is the 547th Ord Det, EOD Control Center, Ft. Gillem, Forrest Park, Ga. It is attached here with the 67th Maint Bn for administrative, logistic and billeting support.

The 10-man detachment has the responsibility for teaching and providing assistance to all local and federal law enforcement commands within the approximately 40 Georgia and five Alabama counties.

"We also provide VIP support to include the President, Vice President and foreign dignitaries," added First Lieutenant Linda Hinrichsen, detachment commander.

"Most people don't realize what EOD is until they get a bomb scare, find a package in the desk drawer or discover an unexploded piece of military ordnance lying around," commented Geisler.

What is it? Technically, "EOD is the application of learned skills to neutralize or eliminate a specific hazard through the use of special tools, techniques, and explosives. The hazards, for the most part, are associated with domestic or foreign conventional, nuclear, chemical, biological, and improvised explosive ordnance," according to the EOD training circular.

SP5 William S. Briggs (l) checks Sp4 David Nigma for alpha contamination before processing him through the contamination control station.

Explosive ordnance incidents occur at all hours and everyone in the 89th is equipped with a radio or pager and is required to stay in touch at all times with the unit Senior EOD Supervisor.

A two-man response team is on 24 hour stand by duty. "We are required by the Department of the Army to respond and be on the road within 30 minutes, once we receive a call for help," explains Hinrichsen.

Last year, the 89th responded to 253 on-post and 83 off-post incidents. Routine off-post incidents usually involve the disposal of commercial dynamite left abandoned by area farmers. Geisler remembers recently having to remove eight cases of 24-year-old dynamite from a building in Dadeville, Ala., stick by stick. There were 94 sticks per case. Artillery simulators are also frequently found off post.

All confiscated dynamite and ammunition is transported to a clear field or city or county landfill to be destroyed. "Of course, we notify the city or county before we blow-up or burn anything in their area," said Hinrichsen.

On post, the 89th handles all incidents happening on the ranges and throughout the complex. Routine incidents involve the destruction of duds on the ranges. A not so routine case involved the detonation of a 500 pound U.S. bomb on one of the ranges.

"We don't respond to bomb threats," said Hinrichsen. "If the searchers find an actual device, then we come and take care of it."

Vol. 37, No. 29
April 7, 1978

A Ledger-Enquirer newspaper published for the personnel at Ft. Benning

AMIC relocates

The Acute Minor Illness Clinic (AMIC) at Martin Army Hospital has been relocated back to the first floor next to the visitors' elevators.

The AMIC has been renovated and the new area offers more patient triage areas, smoother patient flow, and a more pleasant atmosphere.

The AMIC is the entry point to the health care system for most dependents and retired personnel. It is open on a walk-in basis Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. except for weekends and holidays.

Bond drive begins

The 1978 U.S. Savings Bond Campaign will be conducted Monday through April 21. The Columbus-Ft. Benning area has been designated as a "Take Stock in America Center." In support of the 1978 Savings Bond Canvass, letters have been sent to each major command and directorate with instructions to appoint canvassers at the company and divisional level, respectively.

All personnel are encourated to take personal interest in the progress of the bond program throughout the year and especially during the campaign.

Questionnaire sent

Martin Army Hospital (MAH) has mailed more than 1,800 questionnaires to a random selection of retirees in the local community, in an effort to establish a medical profile of the retired population and their families.

At a meeting of the Consumer Health and Education Committee held last Friday, Col. Anton Hitzelberger, hospital commander, stressed the importance of the questionnaires being completed and returned.

Hitzelberger stated that the results of the survey would strongly influence plans for the kinds of services provided by MAH to retirees in the surrounding area, "therefore, it's very important that we have as many completed forms as possible to work with."

All persons receiving the questionnaires are urged to return them as soon as possible.

The questionnaire is designed to indicate present sources of medical care — civilian hospitals and doctors of MAH — and the most prevalent chronic illnesses of retirees and their dependents.

Environmental impact hearing set

By Marshall Jones

A public hearing will be conducted at 6:30 p.m. April 17 at Columbus College's Fine Arts Hall on the environmental impact if the 2nd Inf Div now in Korea, is stationed at Benning.

MajGen. William R. Wray and representatives of a private corporation contracted by the government to draw up an environmental impact statement on the restationing will be available for questions.

One copy of the statement is available for public inspection at the Environmental Management Division Office, Rm 126, Bldg 35. Additional copies are being mailed to Gary Robinson, division chief, libraries, government offices and other public organizations in the civilian community. These will also be made available to interested citizens.

The statement and the hearing address the impact of the possible troop move on the physical, biological, social and economic environment of the area.

Those desiring to be heard are encouraged to use the registration cards available at the hearing and in advance at the Environmental Management Office, Directorate of Facilities Engineering. Those who register in advance will be reserved seats and their statements will be considered before those of registrants who wait until the hearing or do not fill out a card.

Written statements submitted to the panel will receive careful consideration, and interested citizens are encouraged to use the public hearing's time to summarize their written positions, according to Robinson.

Police call is everyone's detail

To the casual observer, Ft. Benning presents the ultimate in cleanliness and order. It's neatly groomed, and rarely is there trash and garbage strewn along the roadways. But it isn't always that way. It takes a great deal of time and effort to give the post that "just-manicured" appearance.

If you were to arrive on post before 7:30 a.m., you might think you'd made a wrong turn. Litter in the streets abounds and the appearance of planned orderliness is missing.

Commanders are speaking to their troops about this problem. Soldiers and their families will be urged to take a personal part in cleaning up the post.

According to Post CSM Vincent Roegiers, "Everyone who uses the post is going to have to take an active part in post police. There are hundreds of blue and white 55-gallon drums placed around the post which should be used for depositing trash."

"It appears that many persons living, working and visiting on Ft. Benning aren't aware that littering and dumping of trash is prohibited by post regulation," said Maj. Bobby Martin, Military Police operations officer. "Military violators are subject to being cited by Military Police and referred to their commander for appropriate action. Civilian violaters could be referred to the U.S. Magistrate in Columbus for disposition under Georgia Code 26-2612."

"Post police is a seven-days-a-week job," Roegiers emphasized. "But if people just wouldn't throw trash on the ground, we wouldn't need a police detail."

Curtains rise for 'The Subject Was Roses'

By Julie Casey

The Springer Opera House opened yesterday with "The Subject Was Roses" by Frank Gilroy, which will run through April 16. The play concerns a family just after World War II and their son who has come home from the war.

"They are at home together but they have all changed," said Wes Carr, a writer/editor working for the Directorate of Industrial Operations, who plays the father. "One thing refreshing about the play is that Frank Gilroy doesn't blame the Army for the change in his son, played by Wendall Barnes. Usually the Army gets it coming and going."

Carr has performed in 39 plays and is an active member of the Springer Theater Play group and the "What You Will Players," a professional group here in Columbus.

"In my personal experience I have never met a character quite like the father. It has been a difficult role to feel, but a very enjoyable challenge. I feel the play is very good," commented Carr.

The mother will be played by Ellen Conger. A man with 58 years of experience in theater, Harry Ellerbe, will direct the production.

Tickets may be purchased at the box office for $5 or $4 at the ITT Office.

The curtain rises at 8:30 p.m. tonight, tomorrow and April 11 through 15. There will also be a Sunday matinee at 2:30.

Camellia is an apartment motel. We don't rent rooms, we rent furnished apartments with all the features of a regular motel plus added conveniences that cannot be provided with just a single room - and all at the same, or most times lower rates than the single-room motel. For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 100 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

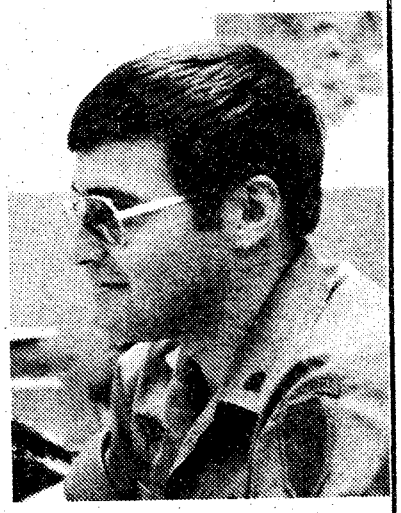
Glad You Asked . . .

What kinds of articles would you like to see in the Bayonet?

Pvt. Ledean C. Cowell, Staff and Faculty, 1st AIT Bde

I would like to see more articles on women mechanics. We are trained for what is considered to be a 'man's job' and oftentimes the company would rather stick us in offices to work as clerks. More women work in MOSs other than their own than I've ever known.

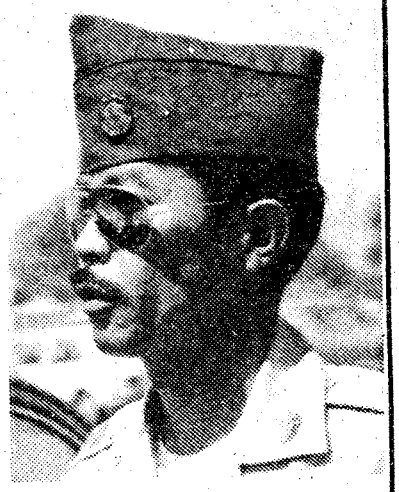


Sp4 Dave Butts, Co B, Hqs Cmd (Parachute Branch)

I would like to see special stories and interviews with enlisted members concerned with what each unit does — also, promotion lists, special classes and educational advancement information.

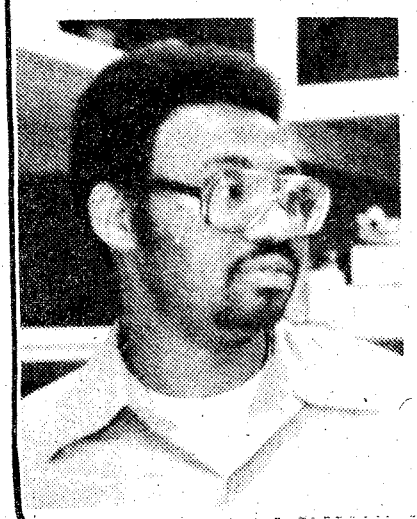
SSgt. Dan C. Lee, Co A, Hqs Cmd

I would like to see the Bayonet concern itself more with military subjects that would directly aid the service member; such as subjects dealing with retirement benefits, health care, things he could do to improve himself in the military and new updated items of equipment. Other areas would be the comparison of post SQT results.



SFC Jerry S. Hasimoto, Med Co, MEDDAC

I would like to see more human interest stories in the Bayonet. I enjoy reading about what's happening in units besides the 197th and AIT Bde's. Also, more coverage as to what activities are being held for dependent children — especially during the summer months.



Calvin L. Perry, civilian (Photolab)

I would like to see more of what options are available to the soldier when he ETS's or PCS's, such as schools, jobs, etc. I would enjoy reading personality features. For example, someone who has devoted 20 years of his or her life should be interviewed to reflect on past accomplishments, outstanding memories, and future plans.

Letters to the editor—

Lack of consideration disgusts servicemember

Horrified! That was my reaction to a recent Bayonet story about Private Joseph Romaine. The man has a wife and three children, has served in the British military for 11 years, achieving the rank of sergeant and what happens to this man when he joins the American Army? He is made E-1.

I find it difficult to fathom that the recruiter or whomever processed Pvt. Romaine into the U.S. Army did not make an attempt to get him some consideration for his prior military experience.

Rank is more easily achieved in the U.S. Army than in the British military. On the average, it takes a minimum of nine years to achieve the rank of sergeant in the British Army, while it is possible to achieve the same rank in three in the U.S. Army.

I consider the case of Pvt. Romaine to be a faux pas on the part of the Army and hope that in some way this letter will help to rectify his situation. Rest assured that the Army will benefit greatly from Pvt. Romaine's prior experience, that is extensive—and from his sense of duty and unflappable demeanor, which is admirable.

From what I gathered from the story, he has accepted his situation well. But how long can a man with a wife and three children survive on the pay of an E-1 ($397.40 to be exact)? And at the age of 34 what will such a thing do to the morale of a potentially good soldier?

Greasy food tempts soldier to eat at Follow Me facility

I am an E-4 and have been here for two months. Recently, I went to eat at the Follow Me Dining Facility.

It was my understanding that the operation of that mess hall was the same as all dining facilities on post — available to all servicemembers. I was disillusioned because the cashier refused to allow me to enter. Other junior-enlisted friends of mine have eaten there and agree that the food is delicious — and oil-free.

Why are junior-enlisted personnel excluded from eating at the Follow Me? Is this a post regulation or is it discrimination?

If we are not permitted to eat there, why not have the mess halls use the Follow Me's recipes? The Army buys the highest quality of food but they smother everything in grease. Not only does the meal taste like Vitalis but it also makes me nauseated afterwards.

Slip, sliding away
— in grease
36th Engr Gp

Editor's note:

The present policy states that E-6's and above are permitted to eat at the Follow Me Dining Facility. However, their primary concern is to feed the students first (TSB). Other special groups such as VIP's, colleges, ROTC and AUSA members are permitted to eat there provided a request has been submitted to DIO (Directorate of Industrial Operations) for approval. If everyone were allowed to eat there, an overload of personnel and seating capacity would result. There would be no way to control the amount of food purchased and prepared . . .

April is Cancer Control Month

Cancer is a year-round enemy, but during April, National Cancer Control Month, there is special emphasis on making everyone more aware of cancer causes, symptoms and control. It may save your life.

Some types of cancer can be prevented. Although cancer is a deadly disease when it has become widespread in the body, in its early stages, it can be cured.

There are a series of tests that detect cancer, such as the Pap test for women, breast examination, and procto test for men and women — especially those older than 40.

There are also Seven Warning Signals which tell you to check with a doctor. Only your doctor can tell if a warning sign is cancer. They are:

1. Change in bowel or bladder habits
2. A sore that does not heal.
3. Unusual bleeding or discharge
4. Thickening or lump in breast or elsewhere
5. Indigestion or difficulty in swallowing
6. Obvious change in wart or mole
7. Nagging cough or hoarseness (AFPS)

Scout-a-Rama: Annual event makes Scouting come to life

By Debra Hilgeman

It wasn't the Indianapolis 500 but the Pine Wood Derby at the annual Scout-a-Rama generated as much excitement among the participating Boy Scouts as any big-time racing event.

The Pine Wood Derby was one of the many attractions featured at Saturday's Scout-a-Rama at the Columbus Municipal Auditorium which drew over 7,000 Boy Scouts and 3,500 adult leaders from 12 Georgia and two Alabama counties.

"The purpose of the Scout-a-Rama is primarily to open up the Scout Book and show the public what we're doing," according to Emmett McKay, Scout executive for the Benning District. "We make Scouting come to life. With an event like the Scout-a-Rama the public has a chance to see a well-rounded picture of the entire Scouting program," explained McKay.

Benning's Boy Scouts were represented by 22 units, packs, troops and posts involved in a variety of activities. Over 12,000 people attended the displays, exhibition and contests that were held continuously both inside the auditorium and on the field outside.

Benning servicemembers were also instrumental in making this year's Scout-a-Rama a success. The 121st Avn Co. 34th Med Bn supplied a helicopter that was open for display and gave youngsters a chance to sit in 'the drivers' seat'. The Airborne Dept. operated a jump tower erected by the 43rd Engr. Bn and over 2,000 youngsters took advantage of the popular ride.

Co C, 4th Bn, 1st AIT Bde ran the Pine Wood Derby for junior racing enthusiasts and their equally enthusiastic parents. "The parents and children involved in the race took it very seriously," said 2nd Lt. Rick Montanari, Co C executive officer. "When we were conducting the district finals, the excitement and determination was more what you would expect in a national race," he added.

Summing up this year's Scout-a-Rama, McKay said, "It was really excellent — a good program, beautiful weather and everyone had a ball."

Cats can carry infectious diseases

Cats! Those furry, cuddly creatures that millions of people own and make over. But did you know that those purring felines can carry an infectious disease?

Toxoplasmosis, which occurs in birds, wild and domestic mammals, is one of the most common parasites of humans with an estimated 30 percent of the population being affected. Severe infections with this organism may result in damage to the brain, eyes, lungs, intestines or other organs of the body. Mild infections may cause only headache, fever, diarrhea or painful, swollen lymph nodes.

Animals and man become infected by eating the cyst stage of this parasite in poorly cooked or raw infected meat; or by food items that are contaminated with the feces of an infected member of the cat family. If this parasite infects a pregnant woman, it can penetrate the uterus and also infect the unborn fetus . A national survey conducted in the early 1970s showed that one of every 1,000 babies born in the United States is infected with this organism and half of those babies show signs of severe brain or eye damage.

To cut down on the chances of humans and animals becoming infected with Toxoplasmosis, here are a few simple procedures that should be followed.

- All meat should be thoroughly cooked before eating and hands should be washed with soap and water after handling raw meat to remove any parasite which might contaminate the skin.
- Cats should be kept indoors to prevent them from feeding on infected birds and mammals.
- New cats should not be added to the household of a pregnant woman since the prior diet and parasite history of the cat will not always be known.
- Control flies and roaches which can serve as carriers of infected cat feces.
- Cats should be checked by a veterinarian every six months and receive treatment if Toxoplasma eggs are found.
- Childrens' sandboxes should be covered when not in use to prevent contamination.
- Gloves should be worn while working in sand or soil potentially contaminated with cat feces, and hands should be thoroughly washed after such work.

Professor Safety says...

Did you know that one gallon of gasoline can have a force equal to that of 13 sticks of dynamite? If you're in the habit of carrying a can of gasoline in the trunk of your car, you have the making of a major explosion. Even in a minor accident, the chances of a fire or explosion are greatly increased by the presence of a container filled with gasoline. (Journal of American Insurance).

Recreation Centers offer something for everyone

By Betty Zimmerman

"If the recreation centers on Benning offer something for everyone; if our programs are so broad in scope that any individual can find an activity to his liking, then I consider our purpose is being fulfilled," stated Mrs. Corrine Cook, Recreation Center director.

"We strive to create programs and activities that suit the participating patrons at each of our three centers," she continued. These centers, located at Kelley Hill, Harmony Church and North Harmony Church, have facilities and equipment to meet the recreation needs of the military community. Their activities include lounges, music rooms (with a wide variety of instruments available for in-house use), ping pong, billiards, shuffle board, air hockey, small games, cards, books, recorders equipped with earphones for listening to tapes or records, and television rooms.

There are 18 professionals — eight civil service, three military, and seven non-appropriated fund employees — staffing the centers which are open seven days a week. Their titles range from center director through program director, recreation assistant to recreation aide. Week-day hours are from 1 to 10 p.m. and Sunday and holiday hours are from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Army Recreation Center programs and facilities are intended for use by active duty and retired military personnel, their dependents and other members of the military community. Minor dependents must be accompanied by their sponsor unless they are attending a specific program scheduled for their benefit. Specific requests for use of any of the centers by special interest groups or units are encouraged, however, such use must be prearranged and must not conflict with normal facility activities.

General programs are conducted on a regular basis at each of the Recreation Centers. They include:

Tournaments
Lectures Dances
Pageants Festivals
Instrumental Groups Parties
Family Nights
Scheduled Games

The center staffs are also available to provide professional and technical advice to assist in planning and conducting various special programs. They include:

Unit Social Activities
Organizational Observances
Commander's Calls
Orientations
Awards and Graduation Ceremonies Conferences
Group Discussions
Special Interest Group Programs

Another service offered by the Recreation Centers is the Information, Tours and Travel Office, which is now located in the Kelley Hill Center. This staff is reponsible for providing additional information on available recreation resources and leisure opportunities. They make reservations for the Destin Recreation Area in Florida and they have information packets on various tourist attractions, campsites, travel tours and recreational events. Other services include: disbursement of free or discount-rated tickets to events, special-rate tours available to military, and consultations to assist in planning the mobile leisure needs of the military community.

Mrs. Cook invites you to become an active patron, so that she and her staff can provide a worthwhile and comprehensive program for your benefit at your recreation center.

Availing herself of the Recreation Centers' newest service is Sp4 Hilda Cardona, a clerk at Hqs, 2nd Bn, 1st AIT. Each center now has a paperback exchange library — you just bring in your finished book and take out another one. The selection is wide and the editions are current, making it a popular attraction among the centers' many offerings.

Reserve elements arrive for training

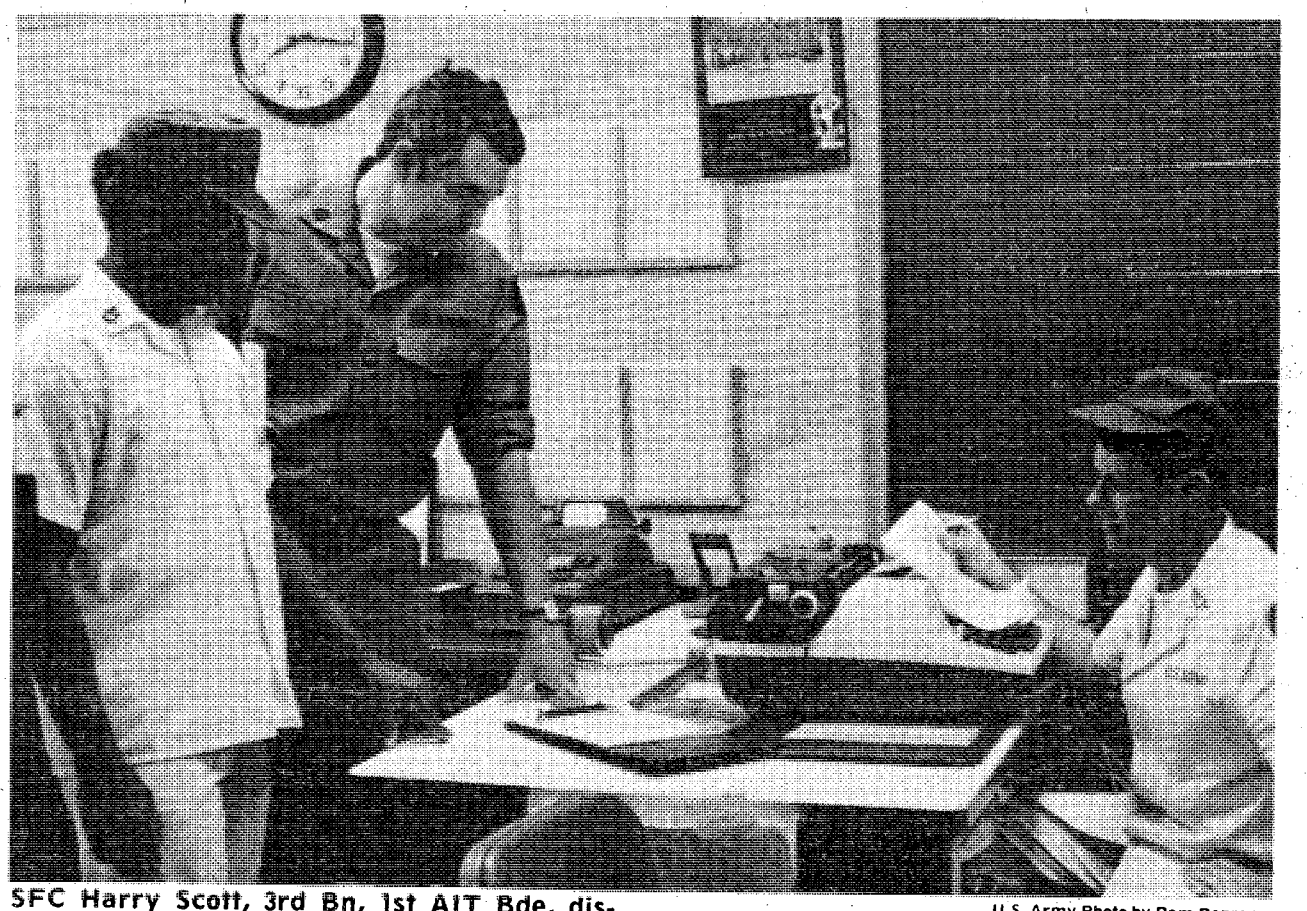
Over 170 reservists from the 1st and 2nd Bns, 414th Reg, 1st Bde, 104th Div (TNG) from Oregon arrived at Ft. Benning April 1 to begin their annual training.

Host unit for the reserve component is the 1st AIT Bde. The reservists are satellited in the 2nd and 3rd AIT Bn areas.

The 1st Bde is undergoing requalification training to prepare to become an Infantry (OSUT) training brigade for the 104th Division. In addition to the unit officer and drill sergeants, each of the reserve battalions has administrative and support personnel.

The second increment of the 1st Bde will begin their annual training April 22. The 1st AIT Bde will also be the host unit for this increment.

Another increment of the 70th Div(TNG) of Michigan arrived April 1 for their annual training. The 70th Div is located in the former 3rd Bn area in Harmony Church.



SFC Harry Scott, 3rd Bn, 1st AIT Bde, discusses the day's menu with SFC John Dunn and SFC Darrell M. Nielsen, 1st Bn, 414th Reg, 1st Bde, 104th Div(TNG). Dunn and Nielsen are spending their annual training working in the Consolidated Dining Facility at Kinsman Barracks.

Co D builds bridge across Chattahoochee

Recently Co D 43rd Engr Bn, 36th Engr Gp put aside their carpenter, plumbing and electrician tools and became "River Rats" for a day.

The entire company participated in the erection of an M4T6 float bridge across the Chattahoochee River. The bridge exercise was conducted during the Army Readiness Training Evaluation Program (ARTEP) of the 586th Engr Co., 36th Engr Gp.

The M4T6 is designed to allow a division size element to cross. When an entire division or more is waiting for a single company to finish a bridge, the pace, pressure and responsibilities are enormous. The work area around a bridge site is a controlled frenzy and certainly not for the weak of heart, body or mind.

Co D was given 10 hours to complete the assembly of the bridge. They began their task 6 a.m. Each section of the bridge was put in by hand. The bridge sections were then floated down stream and attached to overhead cables which held the bridge on line. The engineers worked non-stop until the bridge spanning the 530-foot-wide river was completed well within the allotted time.

The 586th provided the equipment and technical expertise.

"Building this bridge was a joint effort by all," said Sgt. Walt Sellers, reconnaissance NCO for the 586th. "Each man gave 200 percent of himself."

The construction engineers smiled wearily at their triumph — the completion of the bridge.

"Now all we've got to do is take it apart," commented one of the engineers.

Mobile Signs

Current routing of traffic at this location is such that these signs could distract drivers and cause accidents and injuries. This prohibition is effective immediately and will be in effect until the road project is completed.

Heartworm clinic slated

The Ft. Benning Veterinary Activity will conduct a special heartworm diagnostic clinic this month.

Heartworms are found in dogs throughout the world, particularly in areas where mosquito and dog populations are high. Heartworm disease is caused by a blood parasite that lives in the heart and large blood vessels of a dog.

The mosquito is required to transmit the immature heartworm from one dog to another. The mosquito takes a blood meal from an infected dog and transmits the parasites to another dog where they develop into adults. In six months, the females are releasing parasites into the bloodstream, thus completing the life cycle.

Daily preventive medication is available and should begin with the onset of the mosquito season and continue for two months after the mosquito season. Puppies can go on the preventive program very early. Dogs of all ages should be placed on the program. Adult dogs should have at least one negative blood test prior to receiving preventive medication.

Animals currently on heartworm preventive medication and those born after October 1st, 1977 do not need to have blood samples drawn for testing. To schedule an appointment at the post Veterinary Activity, call 545-4444 from 8 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday.

Crimestop! You can help

The crimes listed below should not have occurred. In each incident preventive measures had NOT been taken to insure safe keeping.

This type of crime is the easiest for you, the individual, to prevent and the most difficult for the Military Police to solve. There are usually no witnesses and no investigative leads that can be pursued to catch the thieves.

These incidents were reported to the Military Police during the month of March 1978:

March 12 — Bicycle $119 — Unsecure at post quarters.

March 15 — 2 purses $25 — Unsecure in women latrine at Dining Facility.

Preventative Tips

- Don't leave your purse or wallet unattended unless it is secured in a locked container.
- Never carry an excessive amount of cash.
- Always secure your bicycle to a fixed object even if you are at home.

CRIME PREVENTION REQUIRES SOMEONE TO DO SOMETHING POSITIVE TO STOP THE CRIMINAL. This can be done by increasing the offender's risk to gain his prize and by not affording him ready-made opportunities. CRIME PREVENTION IS EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS.

There is good news for those CBers who believe that their complaints are never listened to. The good news is called "The Communications Act Amendments of 1978," which Congress has passed and sent to the President for his signature.

Until these amendments were passed, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) had no effective means of prosecuting unlicensed operators. These new amendments clearly give the FCC jurisdiction over unlicensed operators and the authority to prosecute and impose heavy fines.

The new authority also applies to any violation of FCC rules. The new maximum fines are: $2,000 for a single offense and $5,000 for multiple offenses. Failure to pay these new fines or to respond to any FCC notice could cause the offender to face a possible prison sentence.

The inevitable has happened and it will produce some interesting results. The FCC has banned the sale of linear amplifiers which are capable of being used in the 25-34 MHz range.

This means that anyone who sells such a linear amplifier is also subject to the new fines.

Unfortunately, the ban also affects amateurs in that they will no longer be able to purchase linears. However the FCC says that amateurs may build their own linears for use in the 10-meter amateur band. If they build one that can be used onthe 11-meter CB. frequencies, they are in violation of the FCC rules.

AUSA Defense report

The General Accounting Office, Congress' watchdog over the executive departments, has just issued a report claiming the All-Volunteer concept, in operation, in the U.S. Armed Forces since 1971, has cost the American taxpayers $18 billion in additional expense.

The report attributes the full cost of military pay raises, increases in advertising budgets, expenditures for enlistment incentives, the cost of better barracks and family housing and even some cost avoidance under the food stamp program directly to the operation of the All-Volunteer force. The Defense Department correctly attempted to rebut some of the expenses charged to the new manpower concept but perhaps did not make its rebuttal strong enough.

One of the biggest costs attributed to the All-Volunteer force by the GAO is that which began with a major pay raise for junior enlisted personnel and officers in 1971 and has pushed annual personnel costs upward ever since. The point at issue here is whether that raise was passed by Congress solely to implement the volunteer force or reflected a real need to bring military pay into line with comparable civilian compensation, regardless of whether the pay would be going to volunteers or to draftees. Members of Congress who were concerned with fair treatment for the armed forces voted for the raise as a matter of equity. Others may have voted for it solely because it might help make the volunteer force work but, in any case, the raise was long overdue.

The GAO report implies that if the United States had not shifted to a volunteer force thousands of troops would still be living in ramshackle "temporary" World War II barracks with sagging floors and faulty plumbing. This reasoning gave neither the Defense Department or the Congress credit for seeing the need to modernize troop housing and to provide better family housing for eligible career personnel. New barracks would have been built for draftees and new family housing would have been constructed for the career NCO's and officers who would have been around no matter what the source of the more junior personnel might have been.

And as far as recruiting costs and enlistment bonuses are concerned the GAO apparently chose to forget that even with an operative draft the Army still sought a substantial number of volunteer enlistments, particulary for jobs that required long periods of training and could not be filed by short-term draftees.

The GAO admits the report does nothing to settle the question of whether a volunteer force is better than a conscripted one. It does even less than that. Congress, the military establishment and the American Public must be a little bewildered by it.

Legal briefs

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act is most significant with respect to the legal rights and liabilities of the serviceman. The pupose of the Act is to insure that the soldier is not placed at a disadvantage in certain matters because of his status and location due to military orders.

Accordingly, a soldier pays state income tax on his military income only to the state of his legal residence and not to the state in which he is stationed, unless that state is also his legal residence. The same is true with respect to personal property taxes.

Other legal relief provided by the Act includes the right to have debts incurred prior to entering the service paid off in smaller amounts and over a longer period of time. However, it should be noted that this relief is available only if in the judgement of the court the soldier's ability to pay has been materially affected by virtue of his military status. Further, this relief is available only to debts incurred prior to entering active duty.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act does not cancel the serviceman's obligations. His obligation to honor his debts still exists. Only the time in which he must pay can be extended. In short, the idea behind the Act is to suspend, in certain cases, court proceedings during the servicemen's tour of duty in the military service, so that upon his return to civilian life he may have an opportunity to be heard and take measures to protect his interests.

Similarly, if a serviceman's ability to sue or defend is materially affected by his military service, he also is entitled to relief under the Act. In addition to the above, the Act includes numerous other benefits to the serviceman, but remember, don't try to implement this Act yourself. First, see your Legal Assistance Officer.

Soldier's miracle inspires s

By Marshall Jones

On wooded Benning land that slopes steeply down to the lowlands of the Chattahoochee River near the mouth of Upatoi Creek, an Army private had a vision of a beautiful shrine in which to honor his God.

Not much is known for sure about Pvt. Stadnik (even his first name has been lost) except that he was a skillful and dedicated craftsman, as his original handiwork shows. It is said he suffered from an "incurable" illness and, being a devout member of the Greek Orthodox Church, prayed fervently for his recovery.

Act of gratitude

Apparently he was cured and began a two-year act of gratitude by building a miniature cathedral in the wilderness. The little church overlooked what was then open fields stretching to the river bank. It is now covered with sixty-foot pine trees that obscure the original view. Some of the surrounding growth is recognizable in pictures dating from the twenties, before the chapel's decline.

Accounts say the chapel had three intricately worked cupolas in the Greek Orthodox style, a finely crafted altar, and a bell-ringing mechanism. One of these dome structures found its way into the back yard of a Columbus man who used it as a birdbath, but no trace of it could be found. The top portion of one cupola and two bottom portions, along with several scraps of sheet metal and lumber were recovered recently.

Chapel restored in 1943

The chapel was a familiar sight to local horseback riders on the Lowland Trail. Perhaps inspired by one of them, the decision was made to restore the badly deteriorated structure in 1943.

It was the height of World War II and many prisoners of war were encamped here. Skilled craftsmen from among the Italian POWs aided "materially" in the reconstruction, according to the BAYONET of Dec. 23, 1943. The work made the chapel whole again, and it was rededicated to St. Hubert, patron saint of horsemen. It was also dedicated to "the many members of the military riding classes at Benning who have given their lives in the service of their country."

Pictures taken before and after the restoration by unknown photographers

An unidentified man poses on years after its 1943 restoration.

Two unidentified gentlemen examine the intricately fashioned cupolas atop the chapel

hrine of gratitude to God show that the work done in 1943 did not match the artistry of the original building.

The portico of the chapel was replaced by a simple, pitched-roof wooden structure. The original had a long flight of shallow stairs, star-shaped carving encircling the roof line, and a delicately carved railing around the roof.

Remains discovered

While never really "lost", the chapel seemed to be forgotten by everyone. However, a recent inquiry prompted CWO4 Bill C. Walton, Public Information Officer, 34th Med Bn., to look for it in the woods off 10th Div. Rd. He was successful and called the post Public Affairs Office, who contacted Museum Curator Dick Grube.

Since the chapel had been picked over by souvenir hunters many times, it was decided to act quickly to gather the shrine's remains.

"Crazy Man's Church", as it was known to children who played in the area over the years, is no more, yet the preservation of its memory is assured thanks to the efforts of a few interested individuals.

Anyone with information concerning the chapel should contact the museum.

Check out the beneficiary on your insurance

PFC Smith was a happy-go-lucky guy with a autiful wife and a pair of adorable kids. He uld have lived to a ripe old age, but . . . he 't. A car accident took his life and, with it, amily's security. His funeral costs cleaned heir savings account and he'd never gotten life insurance.

gt. Brown knew his terminal illness would him someday, but he preferred to live for moment. He had an allotment going out ery month to pay his life insurance so he w he wouldn't have to worry about his mily when he died. He couldn't have been re wrong! His first wife, who was still listed his beneficiary, received his insurance ney. His second wife and his son had to go welfare.

Almost everyone in the Army has heard about Servicemen's Group Life Insurance (SGLI). For a monthly deduction of 85¢ per $5,000 worth of insurance (or $3.40 for top coverage of $20,000) any service member can insure that his family, or a personal friend, is financially secure when he dies. The price isn't too high to pay for a loved one's security, and many of us do pay it.

For those of us that do, the PFC Smith situation is unlikely. But, as SSgt. Brown's situation points out, there's more to life insurance than just paying the premiums on time.

SGLI is a unique type of life insurance. With it, you are in the position to designate anyone you want (they need not be a relative) as your beneficiary. In order to do this, you just note the person's name and address on the life insurance form and you're all set. That's what SSgt. Brown did originally.

Unfortunately, he didn't update his insurance when he got remarried. If you remarry or your beneficiary dies before you do or some other event occurs that might make you want to change your beneficiary, don't wait! The longer you do wait, the greater the chance is that your life insurance may wind up in the wrong hands.

SSgt. Brown might have saved his family a lot of trouble if he'd filled out his insurance form differently in the first place. All he needed to do was write in "By Law" instead of a name as his beneficiary and his wife and son would have been secure.

By placing the words "By Law" on an insurance form, the service member wills his life insurance to the closest living relative. This is one case where current wives and husbands have top priority. If a wife or husband doesn't exist, the insurance would go to the service member's parents. (TRADOC)

Ever wonder what happened to the armed rvice buddy who stuck it out in the trenches th you?

The Veterans Administration (VA) can help u locate the vet by forwarding a letter you ite to that veteran.

To locate an ex-servicemember, send a cket to your regional VA office containing letter to the veteran in an unsealed mped envelope with the vet's name and no urn address on it.

Attach a cover letter to the VA giving the 's full name, date of birth, service serial mber and/or social security number, last own address, last known military address, nk, and service dates. Most important are ll name and birthday, because with this inrmation many vets can be located. The more formation you can give the VA, the better e chances of locating the person.

Budget cut causes FBI to halt deserter search

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) will stop looking for military deserters beginning October 1 if proposed budget cuts are made, an FBI spokesman said.

The Bureau is scheduled for a 29 percent cut in its Fiscal Year (FY) 1979 budget for fugitive search programs, which includes searching for deserters. The fugitive search program is already operating with "rock bottom" manpower, FBI Director William Webster told a congressional committee.

The FBI received 10,470 deserter cases from the Army in FY 77 and closed 11,199 cases during the same period. A number of the cases closed had been received prior to the beginning of FY 77. A Department of the Army (DA) official explained that most of the cases closed were as a result of the FBI apprehending the deserters. The remaining cases which were closed resulted from civil or military police apprehension of deserters or when deserters voluntarily surrendered.

The DA official added that an end to FBI searches would have greater impact than might be expected. He said the FBI often plays an "invisible role" in apprehending deserters or pressuring them to surrender. The FBI also helps return deserters by acting as a go-between for the military services to notify law enforcement authorities nationwide on deserter cases. The Bureau also apprehends individuals charged with harboring deserters.

There were 3,952 military desertion cases remaining open to FBI investigation, as of March 1. Of this number, 1,912 are Army deserters.

Desertion rates have dropped significantly since the end of the Vietnam war. Many cases were closed early last year when about 1,000 deserters were pardoned by President Carter.

A Government Accounting Office (GAO) report last year criticized the military services for spending money on deserter apprehension. The report weighed the cost of apprehending deserters against the high discharge rate the military services experienced after deserters returned to military control.

The GAO recommended that the services discharge deserters without apprehending them as a money-saving step. Under current law, a servicemember who deserts during peacetime may be prosecuted only as long as the statute of limitations allows. However, there is no such statute of limitations during time of war.

"The great majority of desertions take place during peacetime conditions and not combat," one DA official said. "These soldiers are salvageable and we'd like to see many of them returned to duty."

But returning them to duty has not been easy, the official stressed. Since 1972, the Army has not placed returned deserters in pre-trial confinement. This, according to the DA official, has led to some deserters going AWOL before trials can be held. In the absence of a pre-trial confinement policy for deserters, the official said, the Army now discharges them as quickly as possible. (ARNEWS).

Heat injuries in season

Are you one of those people who just can't wait for summer to come so that you can go out and bask in the sun? Without question the sun can be very beneficial but over-exposure to sun and excessive heat can cause heat injuries.

Here are some common heat injuries and tips to help you prevent them:

Heat Exhaustion — This condition is caused by excessive loss of water and salt from the body. The symptoms of heat exhaustion are headache, excessive sweating, weakness, dizziness, and muscle cramps, in addition, the skin is pale, cold, moist and clammy. The condition may come on gradually or it may happen very suddenly. Victims of heat exhaustion, should be placed in cool, shady spots and administered a salt solution. A salt solution can be made by dissolving ¼ teaspoon of salt in a quart of water. The victim should then be taken to the nearest medical facility.

Heatstroke — Prolonged exposure to high temperatures may cause heatstroke — sometimes referred to as "sunstroke." Heatstroke is a medical emergency and calls for prompt emergency treatment. Heatstroke is more apt to strike a person not acclimatized to heat. Also, persons who have a heatstroke are more prone to future attacks. The first sign of heatstroke may be stoppage of sweating which causes the skin to feel hot and dry.

Collapse and unconsciousness may come suddenly or may be preceded by headache, dizziness, fast pulse, nausea, vomiting, and mental confusion. Unlike other heat disorders, heatstroke is often fatal. Suspected victims require immediate cooling, best done by wetting skin with water and immediate removal to a medical facility as a medical emergency.

Sunburn — Overexposure of uncovered skin surfaces to sunlight causes sunburn. This condition is characterized by painful reddened skin. More severe exposure can result in blistering of the skin. Severe skin burns may result from relatively short periods of outdoor exposure on cloudy as well as on clear days. Sunburn can be prevented by the use of clothing, sun screen lotions containing paraamino benzoic acid and gradual exposure to the sun. Early morning or late afternoon are the best times to sunbathe. Start with a five minute exposure and increase gradually by adding five minutes each day. People with freckles or auburn hair should be particularly careful since they are especially susceptible to sunburns.

Remember, the amount of water you drink is the single most important factor in avoiding heat injury. Water loss from perspiration can be as high as one quart an hour. When exposed to the heat, make it a practice to drink water more often than necessary to quench your thirst. (TNS)

Army prisoner population drops

Army confinement facilities currently have an all-time low prisoner population, according to a Department of the Army official.

Sixteen CONUS confinement facilities held a total of 251 prisoners in January of this year.

Recent prisoner populations, according to the official, are at "unprecedented low levels." He attributes the decline in prisoners to expeditious discharge programs and the better-motivated soldiers of an all-volunteer force.

The confinement facilities cited do not include those at overseas locations which, the official says, are experiencing low but not record low prisoner populations. They also exclude figures for the retraining brigade at Ft. Riley, Kan., and disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.

While the later facilities also have unusually low populations, the official said the effects of fewer new prisoners may not be felt there for a few more years. Prisoners at the discplinary barracks are generally serving longer terms.

Prisoners in the 16 CONUS confinement facilities are held while awaiting trial or transfer or to serve sentences of 15 days or less.

Also not included in the CONUS confinement statistics are six women prisoners.

Women prisoners are relatively new in the Army. In recent years most women were not sentenced to confinement but were discharged.

The Army's largest confinement facility, at Ft. Dix. N.J., is designed to hold up to 416 prisoners. In January, its population was only 11. This has prompted other uses for some of the facilities, including conversion to offices and classrooms. (ARNEWS)

Safety required for boating fun

Like driving a car or flying a plane, handling a boat is a skill gained by study and practice. Basic boat handling skills require, as a first step, a knowledge of how and why boats behave as they do. This can be gained by trial and error — but errors on the water can be dangerous to the boater and those in the vicinity.

One of the grave mistakes made by novice boaters is overloading. In smaller outboard boats, the owner should examine the capacity plate affixed to the stern. This plate specifies the number of passengers or weight the boat is built to accommodate. Exceeding the stated capacity will affect the performance and invite danger. It is also very important to properly load the boat so that the weight is evenly distributed from bow to stern and from side to side.

Over-powering a boat is just as dangerous as overloading. A plate on the boat's transom indicates maximum outboard horsepower intended for a particular craft. A safe speed can be determined only by surface conditions.

Once the boat is properly loaded and safety-checked, the boating novice must consider two boat handling essentials — docking and anchoring.

The best advice is to approach docking with caution, slowness and patience. Experience will help the boater deal with such docking factors as other boats, wind, seas, and current. By taking one's time, docking can be as simple as leaving the dock.

Anchoring is a skill every boater must acquire. A couple of basic rules go hand in hand with anchoring. Always point the bow of the boat into the wind or current when preparing to anchor. Reduce speed, then put the engine in reverse as the mate lowers (never throws the anchor).

There are a host of subjects related to boat handling and the best way to improve boating skills is to attend a US Coast Guard Auxiliary Course in safe boating.(TNS)

Sagging $ causes budget losses

By John Hart

Defense officials are "looking for ways" to make up budget losses overseas because of the sagging dollar, a Pentagon spokesman said.

Congress has been asked to provide an additional $187 million to make up for Operations and Maintenance (OM) budget losses overseas in Fiscal Year (FY) 1978, he said.

A Pentagon Comptroller official warned Congress that U.S. operating forces overseas "face serious problems in executing the FY 1978 (budget) program," as a result of higher costs.

Any reduction of these expenditures is "detrimental to mission accomplishment" the offical told the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense in soliciting its early action on the $187 million supplemental request.

"The department is experiencing significant difficulty" with currency revaluation in Germany and Japan, another defense budget official told the subcommittee.

The $187 million supplemental request is based on currency conversion rates in 1977 when the Japanese yen was valued at 245 and the German mark at 2.24 to the dollar, according to the spokesman.

Rates actually in effect at the end of February were 238 yen and two deutschemarks to one dollar.

Defense sources speculated that even at the February rates, the $187 million request would still fall short of needed money for OM. Because of the continued erosion of the dollar they estimate an additional $118 million would be needed to close the fiscal gap. (ARNEWS)

Junior enlisted travel faces 'stiff challenge' in Congress

By John Hart

The Pentagon's request for Congress to provide Junior Enlisted Travel (JET) for the dependents of low ranking service members overseas appears to be in trouble on Capitol Hill.

Congressional sources said last week that the JET package now being considered by the Senate and House Appropriations Committees is facing "a stiff challenge" in defense budget deliberations.

Members of both committees have expressed concern over the JET package.

The House Armed Services Committee last month went beyond the Pentagon's request and made a recommendation that JET should be provided both overseas and in the States.

Congressional staffers said the mood on Capitol Hill is to put more money into weapons. The Pentagon requested $103 million to provide JET overseas.

Some members of congress fear that an increased number of dependents overseas might create problems in evacuation, according to staffers.

Representative Les Aspin (Dem.-Wis.) is a chief supporter for providing JET both overseas and in the States.

A spokesman for Aspin said, "Very frankly, there isn't enough mail coming to individual members of congress saying that junior enlisted personnel are getting rooked by not having the entitlements."

"Congressman Aspin is continuing to push for JET entitlements both in the States and overseas," the spokesman said.

He added, "The way it is on Capitol Hill, the squeaky wheel gets the oil, and since the junior enlisted personnel aren't squeaking loud enough they may not get any oil."

Aspin believes "that it's a simple matter of equity that junior enlisted personnel receive the entitlements," according to spokesman.

Unofficially there are an estimated 800,000 service personnel in the junior enlisted grades (E-4s with less than two years service and E-1s through E-3s). A little less than half of them are married.

About 275,000 married junior enlisted personnel with spouses amounts to more than half-million votes in an election year, the Aspin spokesman said.

Other capitol staffers agree that senators and representatives are not receiving any mail from junior enlisted personnel about this issue.

Final congressional recommendations on the JET proposal and other defense budget items for Fiscal Year 1979 are not expected until this summer.

The JET package would extend travel and transportation entitlements to E-4s with less than two years service and E-1s through E-3s. Currently, these soldiers are only allowed to ship 225 pounds of personal goods. The JET package will allow them to ship household goods and would also fund dependent travel, temporary lodging and cost of living allowances for married soldiers in these ranks. (ARNEWS)

Smoke detectors can save lives

Every year lives are lost because fires are detected too late. In private households most tragedies involving the loss of lives by fire occur when everyone is asleep.

In recent years, smoke detectors have come on the market. These detectors work by sensing the rising smoke from a fire and sounding an alarm. When properly installed and placed in the right location in a home, they can detect smoke far from the origin of the fire.

Because smoke rises, the best place to install a detector is on the ceiling or high on an inside wall. However, if the ceiling is below an uninsulated attic or in a mobile home, the detector should be placed on the wall 6-12 inches below the ceiling.

In a multi-level air conditioned home, a detector is needed on each level. On the first floor the detector should be placed on the ceiling at the base of the stairwell. On other floors, detectors should be installed close enough to the bedroom so that the alarm can be heard if the doors are closed. In installing a detector in the basement, locate it on the ceiling at the bottom of the stairway for the best protection.

A detector should never be installed within three feet of an air supply register that might blow the smoke away from the detector. Also, one should not be located between the air return to the furnace and the sleeping area as the smoke will be recirculated and diluted resulting in a delayed alarm.

Once a detector has been installed, it should be tested every 30 days by using the test button or by blowing smoke into the unit.

Not only are smoke detectors a valuable aid in saving lives, many insurance companies are now giving discounts on homeowner's policies when smoke detectors are installed.

Remember, a smoke detector in working condition will usually give family members at least three minutes to evacuate the house. These three minutes could mean the difference between life and death! (TNS)

Doughboys test talent

By Debra Hilgeman

Doughboy football went into spring training Monday with some "good looking new athletes" according to Head Coach Jack Barham.

"By Monday, we should have about 100 prospective ballplayers," said Coach Barham. "We have some new athletes who look really good but it's a little early to point out any new talent," he added.

The big problem this year will be rebuilding an offensive line that was hurt by the departures of several of last year's starters. The only proven receiver returning this season is Arthur Hawkins although some of the new men "look promising" according to Coach Barham.

Returning quarterback Joe Duenas has that position locked up this season but the team is looking for a backup.

Last season's placekicker, David Ward, has also left Benning so that position is wide open. According to Coach Barham, however, "We probably won't know who the kicker will be until just before the first game."

The coaching staff will also suffer a blow when Offensive Coordinator John Ross departs for reassignment this summer. He will be replaced by Adam Klys.

Now for the good news. Defensive linemen Mike Dawkins, Rudolph Gordon, John Billops, Pat Carpenter and Joe Brown, veterans from last season, will be returning to play again this season. "Most of 1977's defensive secondaries will be returning this season although some of the men may be shifted to the offensive line if we find new talent for the defensive backing," noted Coach Barham.

War Eagles pluck Flyers, 6-3

By Jim Carter

Benning's rugby team, the Flyers, fell to the Auburn War Eagles on Saturday, 6-3.

Strong winds made kicking difficult but the Flyers' fullback, Jim Mohney, put one through the uprights in the opening minutes to set the score at 3-0. The game then became a spectator's delight as the ball constantly changed hands.

The 40-minute half ended 3-0.

The second half revealed more action as the hard-charging forwards of both teams continually put pressure on the opposition's backs. Mistakes plagued both teams until fate dealt a lucky blow to the Auburn team. Unable to drive through the Benning defenses, an Auburn back attempted a drop kick from 40 yards out. The ball struck the uprights and bounced back into the hands of another Auburn player who crossed the try line for a score. The conversion was good and the game ended 6-3.

The Flyers' B Team, having to draw players from the A Team due to personnel transfers, tied the Auburn B Team, 0-0.

Benning's Flyers, now holding a 3-3 season record, travel to Ft. Campbell tomorrow for the highlight of the season.

Anyone interested in playing rugby should attend the Tuesday or Thursday practice sessions held at 5:30 p.m. on Stillwell Field in front of the Post Office. No experience is necessary, only a desire to play.

Bike races highlight Athletic Day

Five, 15 and 25-mile bicycle races will highlight IOAC 2-78's Athletic Day tomorrow.

A soccer game pitting the IOAC team against the post team will kick off the day at 11 a.m. on Stillwell Field.

The Great Gatsby Bicycle Races begin at noon with a race briefing. The 25-mile race (10-speeds only) and the 15-mile race (five-speeds and under) are open to both men and women. The five-mile race is for ladies only. The $1 registration fee may be paid at the race briefing. The race will begin and end at the Kelley Hill picnic area. Prizes will be awarded.

Softball, volleyball and horseshoes competition will begin at Kelley Hill at 3 p.m. followed by a picnic.

IOAC 2-78 is also sponsoring a fishing tournament at Lake Eufaula on April 22 and 22. The entry fee is $1 per day. Categories include: largest type of fish, overall poundage, etc.

For further information call 545-4454 or 544-4350.

May Day Celebration

Recreation Services Information, Tours and Travel (ITT) Office is sponsoring a trip to Westville's May Day Celebration May 6.

Westville is a village of 1950 authentically restored, depicting the handcrafts and culture of Georgia's early period.

The May Day celebration will feature the winding of the May Pole. Candle and pottery making, basket weaving and other early American crafts will also be presented and there is a unique gift shop where handmade crafts and period reproductions may be purchased.

The tour cost is $7 for adults, $6 for children ages two thru 11.

For more info and/or reservations contact the ITT Office, located at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Bldg. 9079, at 544-4768.

Art Show

The Columbus Artists' Guild is holding its second annual Peachtree Mall Art Show tomorrow and Sunday.

The show has been expanded to include a full range of the arts and there will be demonstrations by artists in every category. The public will be able to view the demonstrations and ask the artists questions concerning painting, sculpture, crafts, photography, and pottery, among other arts.

The show is co-sponsored by Peachtree Mall Merchants Association.

Columbus Sesquicentennial

The first Caravan and Promenade Kangaroo Kourt of the sesquicentennial will be held tomorrow beginning at 7:30 p.m., at Cross Country Plaza.

The caravans are composed of people in costume who meet at designated shopping centers the next three Saturdays for a 30-to 45- minute stroll and a session of the Kangaroo Kourt.

By proclamation of the mayor of Columbus, men who remain clean-shaven during the sesquicentennial celebration and refuse to join a chapter of Brothers of the Brush are subject to "arrest" by the Keystone Kops and "trial" in a Kangaroo Kourt.

Watch out, troopie-poos. Since you're required by Army regulation to shave, you may find yourselves standing trial in a Kangaroo Kourt. Never fear, though. Your punishment shouldn't be too harsh!

Ladies, you too may find yourselves defendents for wearing make-up without being a member of the Sesquicentennial Belles.

For those of you who want to join the fun and dress up, costumes are on sale at Sesquicentennial Headquarters, 2012 Auburn Ave. (upper level of Cross Country Plaza) at prices ranging from $1.50 for a bonnet to $50 for a complete dressy costume.

Don't forget — dress up days will be held every Friday through April 28.

For more info concerning Sesquicentennial activities, call the headquarters at 568-1978.

"The Subject Was Roses"

Springer Theater opened its production of "The Subject Was Roses" last night.

The play, a compassionate drama filled with the humor and hurt of ordinary family relationships, will run through April 15.

A strong cast of three characters tell the play's touching tale of the long-standing, unsolved dissension between a middle-aged couple that comes to a climax on the return of their only son from World War II.

The curtain rises at 8:30 p.m. tonight, tomorrow and April 11 thru 15. A matinee will also be performed Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets are available through the ITT Office for a discount to all active duty and retired military and DA civilians. $4 as compared to the regular price of $5.

Opelika Arts Festival

Approximately 200 artists will be exhibiting their handiwork at the Opelika Arts Festival April 15.

The festival sponsored by the Opelika Arts Association will also feature a bake sale, a Bama Belles African Violet Society Violet Show and entertainment from 11 to 4 p.m.

The Lions Club will provide concessions. Admission is $1 with parking provided free.

FDR Commemorative Ceremony

A commemorative ceremony will be held at Franklin D. Roosevelt's Little White House, Warm Springs, on Wednesday.

Cuthbert Tour of Homes

Georgia is abound with antibellum homes and Cuthbert is not to be excluded. A tour of homes will be held tomorrow and Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m. to prove it.

But that's not all Cuthbert will have in store for visitors this weekend. An Arts and Crafts fair will take place at the Courthouse Square tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m.

Antique cars, Indian artifacts and an archaelogical relics collection from the area will also be on display while an old fashioned tea garden featuring homemade goods will tease your hunger pains.

Country Festival

The Seale Jaycees and Jaycettes are sponsoring a Country Carnival April 15 and 16 on the grounds of the Old Russell County Courthouse in Seale, Ala.

Entertainment, refreshments, activities, prize booths, and flea market and arts and crafts booths will be featured.

Entertainment will include the Kings Trio Gospel Singers, Chavala High School Band, a Sound on Site Disco and Light Show on Saturday night, Ft. Benning's Airborne 5,000 a harmonica soloist, Cross Trail Promenadors, a blue grass band, a belly dancer, and a Battle of the Networks.

Other activities will include clown dunkings, grease pole climbing, a cow chip throwing contest, and a slave for the day sale.

Arts and Crafts and flea market booths are renting for $10 for a 12 x 12 foot area. For booth reservation call Tommy Richardson at 855-3556/4645/4646/4793.

Uncle Sam Wilson?

By Elbert P. Green

Almost everyone is familiar with the poster and notice displayed, particularly during times of crisis, saying "Uncle Sam Wants You." Have you ever stopped to wonder where the expression "Uncle Sam" came from?

During the War of 1812, Elbert Anderson contracted for the purchase of beef for the Armed Forces. The shipments were stamped "EAUS" to designate Elbert Anderson and the U.S. Government. Now, it so happened that Anderson was associated in business with one Samuel Wilson, a meat packer of Troy, New York, a very popular man known locally as "Uncle Sam." Soldiers from Troy, seeing the letters "EAUS" and knowing what EA represented, associated the US with Uncle Sam.

So what started as a Trojan joke gradually became popular throughout the states with the result that Uncle Sam has today become the personification of the American Government.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF
The Name Originating with Samuel Wilson
1766-1854
During the War of 1812 and Since Adopted by the United States

Awards

Recommendations continue to arrive late

The Awards Section, AG Division, contually receives award recommendations (DA Form 638) late. Recommendations submitted requiring TRADOC or Headquarters, Department of the Army approval must be submitted soon enough to arrive at Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center (USAIC), 120 days prior to the desired date of presentation.

Award recommendations should reach USAIC headquarters not later than the first Friday of each month so they may be considered by the awards board scheduled for that month. Recommendations arriving after that date will be considered the following month. If the soldier is no longer here, the awards will be forwarded to him at his new installation or civilian address.

"Late submissions do not allow the awards board adequate time to consider each individual award and give the impression that commanders may have submitted the recommendations only as an afterthought, resulting in a disservice to a deserving soldier," according to Capt. Kathryn Carlson, Chief of Personnel Action Branch, AG Office, USAIC.

Fire

Would you panic?

Suddenly, in the middle of the night, you hear a spine-tingling shout — FIRE! Would you panic? Most people would because fire can be a frightening experience. By knowing the following basic fire survival rules you may be able to save the lives of yourself and your loved ones should fire break out in your home.

- Heated gases and smoke rise, therefore, keep close to the floor and protect your mouth and nostrils with a wet cloth to filter the smoke and gases.
- If your door is open, close it immediately. The door will form a barricade between you and the fire and keep both flame and deadly fumes and smoke away from you.
- Shout to others in the house to remain in their rooms with the doors shut.
- Touch the door with your hand — if it's hot don't open it. Stuff pillows or blankets into the cracks. Go over to a window and open it. Sit beside the open window and scream for help. With the door closed and while breathing cool, fresh air, you are reasonably safe until help comes.
- If the door is not hot, move quickly (hopefully you have a planned escape route) and carefully. Remember, stay low and protect your mouth and nose with a wet cloth if possible. Once outside — stay outside.
- If you are able to use the stairway or stairs for escape, close the doors behind you. This will bottle up the blaze in the room of origin and give you more time to evacuate. Also, this will cut down the draft which would otherwise fan the fire and spread it throughout the house.
- If possible, invest in a smoke detector and locate it in your sleeping area or in the hallway. This investment will give you precious minutes to escape.

Some of the things that you should NEVER do are:

- Waste time trying to dress.
- Waste time trying to save material goods.
- Waste time trying to use the telephone (use a neighbor's phone when you get out).
- Attempt to extinguish a fire of any size yourself. Leave it to the professionals.

By knowing these basic safety rules your chances for survival are good. Above all, REMAIN CALM — DON'T PANIC! (TNS)

Helicopter improvements foreseen

Future Army helicopters should have better, more reliable engines, thanks to an Army research agency. The agency, The Applied Technology Laboratory, Ft. Eustis, Va., (AVRADCOM) demonstrated that improved turbine efficiency could result in reduced fuel consumption. A radial turbine rotor capable of meeting a helicopter's engine life requirements had not been built, however.

An Arizona company will design, build and test a cooled, high temperature, radial turbine rotor for the Army Research and Technology Laboratories (AVRADCOM). The company, which is under a 28-month $417,734 contract, will produce a rotor using the laminated approach (compressing the metal into a thin plate.)

The rotor, part of a small engine, is expected to demonstrate what is needed to economically produce this critical component, which will meet the Army's future requirements for a reliable, low cost, high performance, small gas turbine engine.

The manufacturing process consists of photoeching thin sheets of laminates of Astroloy, an alloy of supergrade metal, followed by stacking and bonding the sheets. These sheets are then shaped to the desired external contours, explained an Applied Technology Lab official. (ARNEWS)

2nd Div hearing slated

A public hearing will be conducted at 6:30 p.m. April 17 at Columbus College's Fine Arts Hall on the environmental impact if the 2nd Inf Div now in Korea, is stationed at Benning.

Maj. Gen. William R. Wray and representatives of a private corporation contracted by the government to draw up an environmental impact statement on the restationing will be available for questions.

One copy of the statement is available for public inspection at the Environmental Management Division Office, Rm 126, Bldg 35. Additional copies are being mailed to Gary Robinson, division chief, libraries, government offices and other public organizations in the civilian community. These will also be made available to interested citizens.

The statement and the hearing address the impact of the possible troop move on the physical, biological, social and economic environment of the area.

Those desiring to be heard are encouraged to use the registration cards available at the hearing and in advance at the Environmental Management Office, Directorate of Facilities Engineering. Those who register in advance will be reserved seats and their statements will be considered before those of registrants who wait until the hearing or do not fill out a card.

Written statements submitted to the panel will receive careful consideration, and interested citizens are encouraged to use the public hearing's time to summarize their written positions, according to Robinson.

THE BAYONET

Vol. 37, No. 30
April 14, 1978

A Ledger-Enquirer newspaper published for the personnel at Ft. Benning

Bypass construction changes Mall traffic routes

Due to additional construction on the Lindsey Creek Bypass, there will be a traffic flow change at the Ft. Benning Mall-Martin Army Hospital (MAH) area. The change will be effective at 10 a.m. Monday.

The southbound lanes of the Lindsey Creek Bypass will be detoured to the Mall intersection. Traffic to Kelley Hill from the southbound lanes will turn left there. MAH-Main Post-Harmony Church taffic will turn right. Mall traffic will go straight. MAH traffic will proceed south along Santa Fe Road, turn right onto Kawamura Street and right again onto the new family housing access road to MAH.

Traffic from MAH going to the Mall or Columbus must travel the new family housing access road, turning left onto Kawamura and left again on Santa Fe. Main Post traffic from MAH should go down Marne Road past the Hunt Club and either turn left on Stonewall or go straight on to Lumpkin Road.

Columbus Traffic from Main Post should use the service road to the rear of the Mall. Turn left at the Marne Road intersection and proceed to the existing northbound ramp of the Bypass.

During peak traffic hours, the Provost Marshal will establish a Traffic Control Point at the intersection of Santa Fe Road and Kawamura Street.

This phase of the construction will permit the contractor to complete the new Marne Road bridge and the exit ramp from the southbound Bypass lanes. The Marne Road-Santa Fe Road intersection will also be reworked.

Motorists are encouraged to drive carefully and be patient and courteous. This temporary inconvenience is the price of improvement.

Benning sweats it out -- relief is in sight

By Bev Lockhart

"I'd rather be a little bit uncomfortable in April than die in August," Post Commander MajGen. William J. Livsey told the Columbus Ledger Wednesday when questioned about his decision to delay turning on the air conditioning on post until Monday.

Although some Benning personnel are upset about his decision — they claim they can't be efficient when they're not comfortable — his reasoning is sound. The post's utility bill for this fiscal year will run $1.2 million more than projected.

Unless TRADOC allocates additional funds, Benning will run out of utility money by mid-July and funds for fiscal year '79 won't be appropriated until October.

Temperatures in some offices and quarters soared to the 80s in the past week and although air conditioning is anxiously awaited, once it is turned on it will provide only minimal relief. Thermostats in offices are to be set at 80 degrees; living quarters, 78 degrees; and medical facilities, 75 degrees, according to a spokesman for Directorate of Facilities Engineering (DFAE).

Family housing occupants should make the necessary changes to their systems for summer operation by Monday. Filters should be checked, cleaned and even replaced if necessary. New filters are available on a direct exchange basis at the Family Housing issue point, Warehouse 466.

Air conditioning systems in other quarters, offices and medical facilities will be serviced by DFAE personnel. Requests for repairs may be submitted by calling 545-5181.

SQT results to be used with new promotion worksheet

E-4s and E-5s in Military Occupational Specialties (MOS) 11B and 11C will be the first to have Skill Qualification Test (SQT) results used in conjunction with the new promotion worksheet. This new procedure will begin in May, Department of the Army (DA) officials announced.

Details of how the SQT results will be used for promotions to E-5 and E-6 have not yet been announced, but SQT scores from the Form 10A could help determine promotions for some soldiers as early as August.

Local personnel officials currently do not have authority to compute promotion points using SQT results. But DA officials advise that scores will be used for the first time in the semi-centralized promotion system when Forms 10A for OSs 11B and 11C are distributed this month. Soldiers with these MOSs should receive them in May.

A DA official said that field commands are not yet authorized to use SQT results for either soldiers appearing before promotion boards or for soldiers currently on promotion lists.

The official said that a "recomputation" of points for soldiers already on promotion lists would probably be announced soon. In addition, commands can expect a go-ahead to use SQT scores with promotion worksheets for soldiers facing promotion boards in May.

Promotion points calculated in May will not be effective until August. The three-month delay gives commands time to report scores to DA and allows DA time to determine cutoff scores, based on vacancies and qualifications.

DA plans to allow commanders to waive minimum passing raw scores for promotion consideration. How low a raw score may be set will be determined by a soldier's percentile ranking, which has not yet been established, according to officials.

Officials say it will be necessary to waive the minimum raw score of 80 for Career Management Field (CMF) 11 when it is used the first time, but point out that the waiver is temporary and that scores above 80 and high percentile scores will be rewarded with proportionately more promotion points.

Commanders have been given authority to use SQT results "as an aid in evaulating a soldier's potential for promotion to E-4", according to officials. They say that SQT results may not be the only basis for granting or denying a promotion to E-4, but point out that they should be helpful in a commander's evaluation.

Soldiers in CMFs 11, 15 and 19 who have completed their testing make up about 19 percent of all soldiers in skill levels two, three and four (E-5, E-6 and E-7, respectively). Another eight per cent of all soldiers in these skill levels are currently being tested in CMFs 33, 55, 74 and 76. (ARNEWS)

SOQ honored

By Betty Zimmerman

The newest post-level Soldier of the Quarter (SOQ) was honored in a ceremony April 12. Presentations were made by the Commanding General, MajGen. William J. Livsey, and the local Association of the United States Army (AUSA) president, Mr. Lemuel Downing.

Sp4 Robert J. Vitagliano, Co B Hq Comd, received his rewards for being selected the outstanding young soldier at Ft. Benning during 1978's first quarter. Qualifications necessary to earn this title are superior military bearing, poise, and knowledge of the Army, current events, first aid, Code of Conduct and drill and ceremonies.

For his success, which included earlier wins through preliminary competitions at company and battalion level, Vitagliano was awarded a USAIC Certificate of Achievement, a three-day pass, dinner for two at the Le Chateau, a watch and one-year membership from AUSA, a $25 savings bond from the National Bank of Ft. Benning, a $25 check from The Ledger-Enquirer, exemption from the duty roster for 90 days, an enscribed bayonet letter opener from the Sergeant Majors Association, a savings bank from 1st National Bank of Columbus, luncheon with the USAIC CSM, a certificate of merit from the USAIC CSM and attendance as guest of honor at special Ft. Benning functions during his reign.

Vitagliano is the second SOQ selected from the Parachute Packing Platoon in the past year. His NCOIC, SFC Larry Akin said, 'Vito' is a highly motivated individual and an outstanding soldier in all aspects. He is courteous well-disciplined as well."

The 20-year-old New Jersey native planned to be a military policeman; in fact, he is now studying criminal justice through Troy State University. But when he entered the Army in June 1976, the field was closed so he decided to become a rigger.

The Benning shop packs an average of 8,000 parachutes per month with a crew of 35 personnel. They also must be airborne qualified as they are required to jump (with one of the chutes they packed) at least once a month.

In recalling the days at Airborne School, the bespectacled "Vito" reflected, "I was afraid of flying — and then I had to jump out of the first plane I was ever in, a C-141 jet transport!"

News in Brief

Medicare sets enrollment deadline for retirees

Many individuals entitled prior to February 1977 to Medicare and care from uniformed services medical facilities will be able to obtain immediate coverage under Medicare's Supplementary Medical Insurance (SMI) by enrolling between now and June 30, 1978, according to Medicare Bureau officials.

This special enrollment period was established to provide relief for military retirees, their dependents, and others for whom care at service facilities have been reduced or eliminated as a result of the physician shortage.

In many instances, word of the cutback came too late for these people to sign up for SMI during last year's general enrollment period. Without the provision for special enrollment, SMI coverage could begin no earlier than July 1, 1978.

For those taking advantage of the special enrollment period, SMI coverage will normally begin during the month in which an enrollment request is filed. By paying all retroactive premiums, however, eligible individuals can elect to have coverage date back to July 1, 1977.

Regardless of which option is selected, the premium amount will not be increased above the amount it would have been if enrollment had occurred during the 1977 general enrollment period. The amount usually increases 10 percent for each year an individual is eligible but does not enroll.

Additional information and enrollment forms can be obtained from any local Social Security Administration office. It will be necessary to present a Uniformed Services Identification and Privilege Card to establish eligibility for this special enrollment. (ARNEWS)

Soldier couple tours revised

Soldier married couples may begin longer mandatory and voluntary overseas tours under a new policy which took effect April 1.

The policy revises the minimum tour for the second arriving spouse from the current 12 months to the minimum for an unaccompanied tour. In Germany, for example, under the old policy the second spouse to arrive there for a joint residence assignment only had to serve 12 months and could leave the assignment when the first arriving spouse completed his or her tour.

Under the new policy, the second arriving spouse is required to serve a minimum of 24 months before being allowed to P-C-S with the first arriving spouse. If the couple arrives together, they both must serve the full accompanied tour length. The minimum tour for each spouse assigned to Korea is still 12 months, regardless of when the first spouse arrived.

If the first spouse in an overseas command wants to extend his or her tour to coincide with the second arriving spouse, or for other reasons, this will also be easier under the new policy. The policy extends from the current 54 months to 60 months the maximum overseas tour for a soldier who is married to another soldier. (ARNEWS)

Army awards ROTC scholarships

The names of 599 outstanding high school students who have been selected to receive four-year Army ROTC scholarships were announced on April 1. Scholarships were awarded to 252 young men and 27 young women. In addition, conditional scholarships were given to 261 young men and 59 young women pending the results of their medical examinations.

These scholarships are in addition to the awards offered by the Army in October, 1977. Selection of recipients was based on academic excellence, results of college entrance tests, participation in extracurricular and athletic activities, and evaluation of motivation and leadership potential. Each scholarship pays for tuition, textbooks, educational fees, and provides a subsistence allowance of $100 per month for up to 10 months each school year.

High school students who will be entering college for the first time in the fall of 1979 and desire to compete for a four-year scholarship should write to Army ROTC, P. O. Box 7000, Larchmont, N. Y. 10538, between May 1-Nov. 15, 1978. (ARNEWS).

Annual Salisbury Fair to begin

"Up, up and away" is the theme of the Historic Columbus Foundation's 9th annual Salisbury Fair to be held April 29-30. In addition to furthering historic preservation in the area, this event will also initiate Columbus' Sesquicentennial celebration.

This downtown country fair takes place in Salisbury Park on the lower Broadway median between 4th and 9th streets.

Third District Congressman Jack T. Brinkley will officially open the Fair Saturday, April 29, at 11:00 a.m. Music for the festivities will be provided by one of the Chattahoochee Valley's best known musical organizations, the Colonial Band of Explorer Post 76 under the direction of Major Bill Drollinger.

An all-new carnival block will highlight the entertainment midway this year. There will be dozens of features including a Magic Show, Paint-a-Face, Train Ride and Junk Car Beat.

The Arts and Crafts block will have artisans and craftsmen demonstrating their skills and selling their wares — copper tooling, decoupage, hand-painted china, children's wooden swings all indicate the wide variety that will be found.

Continuous live entertainment will add to the festivities. And what's a Fair without food? Concessionaires will have cotton candy, hot dogs, soft drinks and more for sale.

So come to the fun-filled Salisbury Fair for a delightful family time.

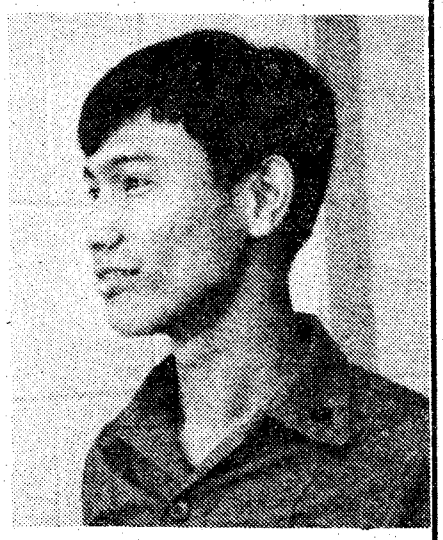
Glad You Asked . . .

How do you feel about not being able to wear fatigues in fast-food places downtown?

Pvt. Richard Encinas, 121st Avn Co.
It seems a little silly to waste the taxpayers' money on courtesy patrols, (which catch people who wear fatigues off-post), when this money could be used to improve the post facilities.

Sp4 Mickey Gayheart, 586th Engr Co
I feel that it's alright to wear fatigues to quick-service food shops because it's the uniform of the day. Other personnel do not have to change before they go off-post to get a roast beef sandwich, etc.

Pvt. David McConky, USAMU
It seems that if fatigues are good enough to wear around the people you live and work with, they should be good enough to wear to someplace like Joe's Eat.



Sp4 Aldemar M. Sesmundo, 10th Co, 1st Bn TSB
I feel that the work uniform should stay within a military post. There seem to be many soldiers who wear fatigues downtown. I think everyone who wants to go to Columbus should wear the Class A uniform.

PFC William D. Halpin, 139th MP Co
I see no reason why we shouldn't be able to wear the work uniform off-post to certain places. Fatigues are a uniform of the Army and as long as it's worn properly, I feel that it should be allowed.

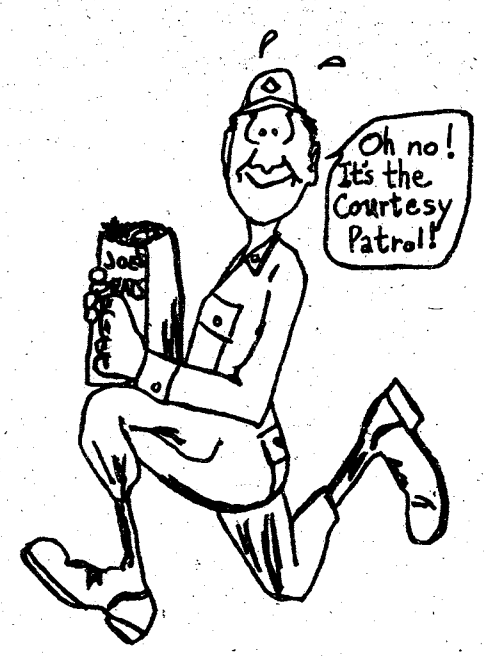
COMMENTARY

Dress right--dress?



While purchasing my lunch at a fast food restaurant on Victory Drive recently, I was stopped by an E-8 who took down my name and unit because I was wearing fatigues.

I realize that he was doing his job as directed by the post Sergeant Major and I was in violation of USAIC supplement 1 to AR 670-5, however I am still compelled to air my grievances on such a regulation.

I receive separate rations and do not especially care for mess hall food or the environment (which is AIT soldiers). The snack bars leave much to be desired so I prefer to eat off post when I do not 'brown bag'.

Unfortunately, my daily work uniform is fatigues and if I venture further than the confines of the post, I am a violator of Army and post regulations.

It seems that I am, in an offhanded manner, being discriminated against because I wear fatigues rather than Class A's.

Now I might add that I do see the purpose and the need of such a regulation in order to project a positive image to the civilian world and to bring a certain pride in the uniform I wear and what it represents. However, there should be a happy medium that one could meet to satisfy the regulation requirement and the fatigue wearer.

In Ft. Stewart, Ga., for example, soldiers are allowed to go off post in fatigues until 7 p.m. After that, they must be in proper attire in accordance with the regulation. That system may or may not work here, but maybe our USAIC regulation should be revised.

As USAIC supplement 1 to AR 670-5 now reads, a soldier is authorized to get gasoline or go into a grocery store for a convenience stop. If that soldier who stops to buy a quart of milk is wearing a sloppy uniform, a negative image has already been given to those people who were in the store at the same time.

So what harm is done in allowing soldiers to stop at a fast food restaurant to pick up his lunch or dinner? He will spend the same amount of time picking up lunch as he would by buying that quart of milk and that, to me, seems like a double standard.

I propose that the regulation be revised to allow soldiers to purchase lunch off post, or whatever type stop that would only take a few minutes or else take away the option to allow soldiers to stop at a store for covenience. It just doesn't seem right to allow one and not the other.

DA employee 'growls' about lunch line closure

A few days ago, when the Infantry School had a training holiday, the cafeteria in Bldg 4 closed. Surely there were enough personnel here that day to have made it worthwhile to have kept at least the short order line open, so that those not so fortunate as to have a day off would have some place to get a drink and a sandwich. Many people were unaware or forgot that the cafeteria would close that day and failed to make other plans for lunch. Since the only other dining place of any size on Main Post — the Benning cafeteria — has burned down, this presented a problem for some.

I hope the next time this situation arises, that those who make these kinds of decisions will at least consider the alternative of keeping enough cafeteria employees on duty to provide minimum service.

Commissary to install new cash register system

New "telltale" computerized cash registers are modernizing Army commissary checkout lanes.

Twenty-nine commissaries are now using the new National Cash Register System (NCRS). According to a Department of the Army (DA) commissary official, all Army commissaries should have them in full operation by this time next year. "We have the new registers in the warehouse," stated post commissary officer Jose Fantauzzi, "and, in conjunction with current construction projects, we expect them to be in operation sometime this July."

The NCRS is especially helpful to customers wishing to recheck receipts for prices and items. Types of produce, for example, are listed right on the cash register tape beside the price. The system also itemizes by name, dairy, meat, health and cosmetic aids, along with other purchases for easy checking. If you buy several of the same item, you'll get a total price as well as a unit price of the item. An "S" also appears beside items which carry a surcharge.

In addition, the date (year, month and day) printed on the receipt, the commissary address is also printed. Your receipt also indicates whether you paid for purchase by cash or check and the time (to the minute) your receipt was totalled.

Col. Graham is the Ft. Benning District Exploring Committee chairman. There are six Exploring Posts in the District containing 43 percent of the total Explorer Scout membership of the Council. Graham is also the sponsor of Explorer Post 76, the famed Colonial Band, which nominated him for the award.

Prior service enlistees faced with difficult task

By Bill Lopez

"It's a lot more difficult for a prior service soldier to get back in the Army than a lot of people think," says a Department of the Army (DA) personnel official.

You might visualize your last few days in the Army as a time when everybody will seem particularly friendly and ready to roll out the carpet if you'd only decide to reenlist. But for the purpose of this article, let's suppose you choose to get out and see how "the outside" feels. Now, let's jump ahead a few months and look at the situation.

Suppose that after you've tested civilian life for a while, you decide that the Army would make a good career after all. "Ah, they'll be happy to see me in the old green suit again," you guess. "I was in the top 10 percent of a competitive MOS. They'll roll out the red carpet when I go back to see the recruiter."

So you walk in to see your recruiter and tell him the good news that you're ready to raise your hand again. But instead of signing you up, he tells you to have a seat in the corner, suggests you say a few prayers and asks if any of your friends are without prior service. "What's going on?," you wonder.

The facts are, getting back in after taking your discharge isn't all that easy. Prior service quotas are always less than 10 percent of enlistments during any year (in fiscal Year (FY) 77, they were only 7.3 percent) and they're subject to more restrictions if recruiting efforts are more successful than planned, according to DA officials.

In addition to restrictive quotas, there is a requirement that all prior service recruits have at least a high school education.

If prior service soldiers want to enlist, and if they meet all other requirements, the enlistments are subject to vacancies in their prior MOS and original year group. If, for example, a mechanic enlisted in 1973, was discharged in 1976 as an E-5, and wants to enlist, the enlistment approval is subject to an E-5 vacancy in the MOS for all mechanics who also entered in 1973.

Prior service soldiers may be eligible to enlist in their secondary or another MOS, but this might mean a drop of at least one grade, depending on grade and time in service at separation.

But full grade retention is rare, even if a soldier is allowed to reenter his or her previous MOS. A former E-6 who had six to 10 years service for example, will be allowed to enlist as an E-5 at best. If a vacancy in a prior MOS and in a particular year group doesn't exist, and if he or she enlist between three and 30 months after separation, the highest grade retained by the former E-6 is E-4. (Enlistment within three months of separation is prohibited for E-6 and above.) The top grade obtainable for a former E-6 enlisting between 30 and 36 months after separation is E-4, regardless of MOS and year group; after 36 months, E-3 is the highest grade awarded.

An E-4 who is separated between three and six years' service might keep the E-4 grade, if he or she returns to the service within 24 months. An enlistment between 24 and 30 months after separation will retain E-3 at best. After 30 months as a civilian, the highest grade retained is E-2.

Along with frequent loss of rank, the date of rank for prior service enlistees is not effective until the day they return to active duty. Loss of rank may cause a prior service soldier to lose dependent travel allowances to a new duty or training station.

Training in a new MOS is common and basic training is mandatory if a prior service soldier has been separated more than 36 months.

Well, you think, maybe you could join the reserves, keep your rank and return to active duty later. You can't. You may be able to return to active duty, but your rank is subject to the same restrictions that apply to any other prior service soldier.

So, if you're having second thoughts, and would rather face a red carpet that a lot of red tape, check with your reenlistment NCO or Army Regulation 601-210. Check up on enlistment restrictions and qualifications for prior service soldiers. The sooner you do it, the better. (ARNEWS)

OWC Craft Classes

The OWC is looking for teachers for their summer arts and crafts classes. Anyone interested in teaching a class is advised to contact Emily Cato at 689-6292 or Vivian Bonta, 689-3801. Classes are usually scheduled to begin during the last week of June. If you are interested please share your craft with all of us here on post.

Getting it right

On the front page of last week's BAYONET it was wrongly stated that the Acute Minor Illness Clinic (AMIC) hours of operation is 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. The hours are 8 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.

A mistake also appeared on the sports page of last week's BAYONET regarding the date of IOAC 2-78's Athletic Day. It was printed that Athletic Day would be held April 8 when it is actually being held tomorrow. The corrected article appears on page 20.

Army may start Bootstrap again

By Bill Lopez

Bootstrap was a nickname given to the Undergraduate Degree Completion Program, which ended in 1975 for enlisted members. The program allowed soldiers to draw full pay while attending college for up to 18 months. It also required them to earn associate or bachelors degrees within this time in specific fields needed by the Army.

The Bootstrap program was not designed to help enlisted members earn a degree just because they wanted the education. The soldiers could enter the program only to complete degree requirements for Army jobs. Those were the ground rules laid out by Congress. And Congress had its reasons for establishing the rules.

Army statistics show that 10,000 enlisted members already have degrees. Exactly which degree specialties are in those statistics is not fully known, but DA is screening files to find out.

The Army has tried to fill degree-required positions in numerous ways, such as the "stripes-for-skills" program, which allows experienced civilians to earn, for example, an E-5 appointment upon entering the Army.

Currently, there are some 400 enlisted jobs which the Army feels require an associate or bachelor degree for effective performances. But finding the right person, in the right MOS with the degree, isn't easy.

That's a problem the Army is attempting to iron out. Once it is solved, and if there are still jobs open which require degrees by enlisted members, Congress may allow the Bootstrap program to continue.

Benning soldier helps set new Army record

By Bill C. Walton

Infantry Center best in the world. There may be those who would dispute this statement, so perhaps a bit of background information is in order. This statement was made in the current Kansas City Hometown News Release Center Newsletter. It concerns a new quarterly record for submission of hometown news releases established by Fort Benning.

The period covered is October-December 1977, when a fantastic submission record of 7,059 forms was achieved. This is 4,181 more than the second place unit, the 3rd Armored Div. in Germany.

The individual most responsible for setting this enviable record is SSg John H. Tatum, Hq — Hq Det, 34th Med Bn. He is the Hometown News Release section in the USAIC Public Affairs Office (PAO). When he was assigned this position in October 1976, the quarterly submission rate for Fort Benning was approximately 1800 forms, which even now would have been good for third place in the ratings.

SSgt. John H. Tatum, NCOIC of the Hometown News Release Section, USAIC Public Affairs Office, checks one of the thousands of hometown news releases that cross his desk monthly.

He checks each hometown news release that leaves Benning to insure that all the necessary information is included. An indicator of his thoroughness is the less than 3% "kill" rate for incorrect forms by the Hometown News Release Center This in itself is an admirable accomplishment.

He has brought the hometown news release program to its present state by a concentrated effort to educate and motivate the unit PAO personnel on the importance of the program to the individual soldiers.

However the key to the whole program, he believes, is that unit commanders should make their troops fully aware of the benefits of submitting a hometown news releaseform.

SSG Tatum said "Most people want to see their name in a newspaper and the hometown news release program is an excellent way of putting your name before the public.

"We can't insure that your release will be published, since that depends on civilian newspaper editors, but the publication rate is quite high."

The question comes to mind "What accomplishments are suitable for a hometown news release and what can I do to increase the publication chances of a form that I submit?" If you have accomplished any of the following you are encouraged to contact your unit PAO who will assist you in submitting a hometown news release:

- Been promoted
- Received an award
- Completed a service school
- Completed AIT
- Reenlisted
- Retired
- Assigned to your installation
- Participated in a training exercise
- Completed High School or obtained college degree

Timeliness and correctness are the main ingredients to a properly submitted hometown news release. Since SSg. Tatum checks every form leaving Benning, he is familiar with all the mistakes that can be made. Mistakes cause delays which destroy the timeliness of the release and decrease its chances of publication.

Although the DA Form 1526 is self explanatory, the "Parents' address" section is the source of most mistakes in filling out the form. Several of the sections can be corrected by either Unit PAO personnel or Ssgt. Tatum, but the information in this section can only come from the individual submitting the form.

34th Med to conduct expert medical badge test

Bill C. By Walton

The 34th Med Bn will conduct the Expert Field Medical Badge Test May 15-19. The purpose of this test is to provide recognition to members of the Army Medical Department field organizations for the attainment of a high level of technical skill and proficiency in the performance of field medical functions.

The test, although primarily concerning medical subjects, is comprehensive and requires the candidate to demonstrate proficiency in several areas of general military knowledge. Among these are communications, map reading and use of the compass, military intelligence and chemical, biological and nuclear warfare. Testing in these areas will include a written test, performance tests, a physical fitness test, a 12 mile forced road march and a litter obstacle course.

The EFMB is being conducted for all eligible medical personnel here. Candidates from the 197th Inf. Bde, 36th Engr, Gp and MEDDAC are expected to compete for the coveted medical badge in addition to the 34th Med Bn. Also, medical personnel from Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker, Ala. have expressed an interest in taking the test.

One change from previous EFMB qualifications is that the schedule includes half a day devoted to retesting. Soldiers who fail to receive a satisfactory rating on the written tests, performance tasks and events will be afforded the opportunity to be retested.

The EFMB Test has a reputation as being technically challenging and physically demanding. This is backed up by the fact that only 25 percent of the candidates who took the test the last time were successful.

This year the requirements have been standardized and in some areas made more stringent. Those candidates who earn their EFMB will have demonstrated that they possess the espirt, competence and dedication which have, historically been the hallmarks of the Army Medical Department.

Eligibility requirements for the EFMB are listed in AR 672-10. Medical personnel, in units other than those mentioned, who are interested in becoming candidates, should contact the EFMB chairman at the S-3 Secton, 34th Med Bn at 545-1082.

Passover Greeting

On the occasion of Passover — the Jewish festival of freedom — I extend my warmest greetings and best wishes to all personnel of the Jewish faith assigned to Fort Benning.

Passover, the symbol of liberation from bondage, has been a source of inspiration to various peoples throughout history as they have sought to cast off the yoke of tyranny.

This Biblical tradition continues to express the yearnings of a major sector of mankind.

As Jewish families the world over celebrate Passover this year, we at Fort Benning join with them in rededicating ourselves to the ideas of freedom.

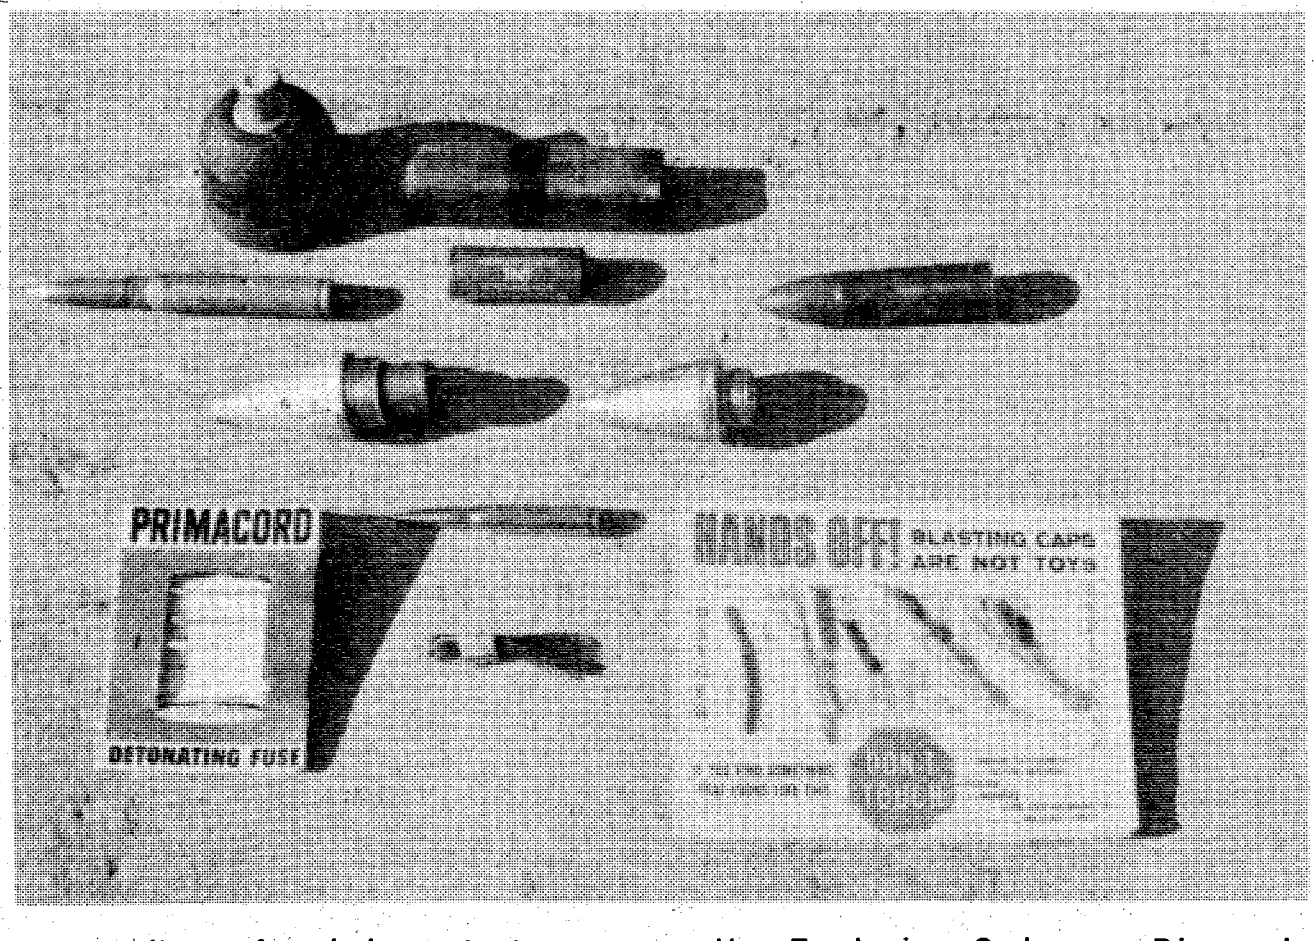
Don't be a 'dud' report explosives

The 89th Ordnance Detachment (Explosive Ordnance Disposal) at Ft. Benning wants people in its 45-county operating area in Alabama and Georgia to know who to call if they find a suspected explosive device.

To report dynamite or any other such object, call the 89th at (404) 544-4668 immediately. Alternate numbers are the Military Police at 545-5222 or Range Control at 545-5186. These numbers are answered 24 hours a day. Local law enforcement personnel can be of assistance in contacting the disposal team.

To aid in the cooperative effort between civilian law enforcement authorities and their team, the 89th offers classes to peace officers in explosive recognition and reconnaissance.

Time permitting, the detachment personnel can travel to where the local authorities work to give this instruction. To arrange for such a class, call the detachment at the above number.



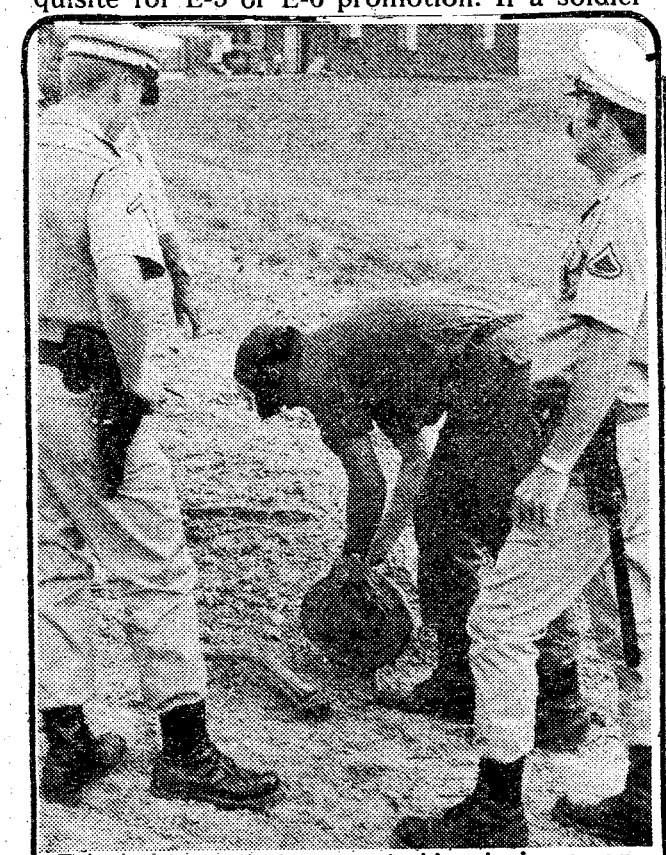
These items of explosive technology are extremely dangerous if handled. Persons finding any such items should call the Explosive Ordnance Disposal team at the 89th Ord Det.

Commanders may award OJE

Commanders have been granted considerable flexibility in certifying on-the-job experience (OJE) in lieu of formal schooling according to a Military Personnel Center official. NCOES completion (either OJE or formal schooling) is mandatory before a soldier can be awarded the next higher skill level — a prerequisite for E-5 or E-6 promotion. If a soldier has not attended formal schooling, he or she may qualify for promotion consideration with OJE. To qualify, an E-4 must have at least four months and an E-5 at least five months OJE, the official explained.

The local commander will certify the soldier's OJE, the official said. The commander may award OJE credit when the soldier is satisfactorily performing Primary Military Occupational Speciality (PMOS) at his current or higher grade. A TOE/TDA authorized position is not essential to the OJE process. OJE may be awarded under the provisions of Army Regulation 351-1 when the soldier is excess to the unit's authorizations so long as he or she is still performing the major duties of the PMOS.

OJE may also be awarded for experience gained before assignment to a soldier's present duty, the official noted. If, for example, a soldier is being utilized outside the PMOS, a review of the soldier's personnel records may reveal creditable OJE, obtained during previous assignments. (ARNEWS)



Having identified a reported landmine as an inert training aid, Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) team member, Sp4 David E. Nigma, removes the mine from the site. MPs requested EOD assistance last Friday when a construction crew working on an access road to the housing area between Martin Army Hospital and the main mall uncovered the device.

Joe won't teach cycle safety lessons this year

By Bill Lopez

Joe taught a lesson about motorcycle safety last year. A lot of people will never forget it. But Joe isn't around this year to teach that lesson to other teenagers who will begin another season of cycle riding. Joe's lesson cost him his life.

He was 19 years old, a recent high school graduate and an apprentice carpenter. He had left home to "go it alone" only a few weeks before he died. His life was filled with the kind of challenge and excitement he seemed to crave.

The water pump on Joe's car hadn't been working well and the summer heat left him no choice but to park it. Pressed for transportation, he managed to get a ride on the back seat of a friend's cycle. His friend, 10 years his senior, had been riding bikes for at least that many years.

But his riding experience and skill didn't make much difference. A truck, making a left turn, entered their path. The bike was a large one, but the truck driver didn't see it in time to stop his turn.

Joe's friend tried to stop. He tried to swerve away from the truck. Neither attempt was fast enough and neither action was safe. The driver hit the side of the truck, landing on the asphalt. The site of the crash was only four blocks from his parent's home.

About an hour passed before the hospital was able to locate Joe's family. A phone call simply let them know that he was seriously injured and was drifting in and out of a coma.

Once at the hospital, his family learned the extent of Joe's injuries. Doctors were not optimistic. A long vigil began. Joe hadn't been conscious since the first couple of hours after the accident. Doctors said he had a serious head injury and multiple fractures. And there was much internal bleeding. If he lived, they feared there was a chance that brain and spinal damage would leave him a "vegetable." He died about 12 hours after the accident.

The driver of the cycle was much more fortunate. He had broken bones, but no permanent damage and was able to leave his bed and walk after a few months.

Joe's life could have been saved if he had been wearing a helmet, giving him the same protection his friend had. The accident might have been avoided if there had been only one rider instead of a rider and a passenger. There are a lot of maybes.

The tragedy of Joe's death has left a void in the lives of his family. Try to imagine that Joe was your brother, son, friend or relative. Imagine the pain and grief you'd feel if he were.

You may not expect a cycle death of someone close to you this season. I didn't expect it last year. I'm Joe's brother. (ARNEWS)

Viva Fiesta! Spring festi

By Bev Lockhart

Those who weren't relaxing under one of the big top tents were sunning on army blankets strewn on the Stadium lawn. A few kicked back in the stands and just watched the action below them.

And there was action at Recreation Service's 1978 Spring Fiesta which took place at Doughboy Stadium Saturday. Activities began with races at 7 a.m. which ran throughout the afternoon.

I was basking in the sun while talking to some friends when I heard the pounding Nikis, Tretorns and off-brand tennies pounding the Georgia clay. Leading the relay was a young soldier in fatigues.

"Come on, complete it," a coach wearing a blue football jersey shouted at a young girl as she slowed. There were five kids ahead of her and she was losing her initiative to place.

Then off to my right I heard a middle-aged woman yell, "Come on, get second! At least get second!" She was hanging on to a toddler with one hand while holding the handle of a baby carriage with the other. "Get second, get second. You can do it," she shouted louder as her son moved father and farther away from her. Parental support was obviously in attendence.

A group of about four airmen from the 5th Weather Squadron, Detachment 10, U.S. Air Force, tossed a frisbee, each trying to outdo the other in complicated and fascinating stunts. Once in awhile one of them could be heard yelling "Fantastic!" when an exceptional toss was exhibited.

I was approaching a friend of mine to congratulate her on winning first place in the 10 mile race, women's division, when the action stage caught my attention. Bobby soxed members of "Carolina Alive" were bopping to the tunes of the 50s. Although I missed out on that era, it fascinates me and I could feel myself spinning back through the tunnel of time.

The parade entering the stadium brought me back, though. As the Explorer Post 76 Colonial Band played the final notes of the National Anthem, balloons were freed and drifted higher and higher into the clear blue sky.

After thanking the crowd for their participation, Maj-Gen. William J. Livsey said, "Today marks one of those good time days." He finished his usual brief speech with, "Have a good time." And they did.

There was plenty of fun for the children who took part in fiesta activities. Dependent Youth Activities (DYA) gave awards for athletic competitions and, along with the popular Mexican pinata game, there were sack races, pecan hunts, and exhibition judo matches.

Fiesta activities continued to 11:30 p.m. Not only was there continous entertainment including the world famous Los Hermanos Blanco Brothers Mariachis Band, a group of wandering musicians dressed as charros or Mexican cowboys, there was also "Carolina Alive," a group of 50 singers and dancers with a backup band from the University of South Carolina; Los Conquistadores, an eight-piece brass and rhythm group formed by members of the 283rd Army Band especially for the fiesta, and the Columbian Folklore dance group of 20 men and women performing native dances.

Helping with the awards ceremony was Miss Ft. Benning, Carla Calhoun; Miss val attracts thousands orth Georgia, Mary Jane enson; and Miss Latin lanta, Maria Victoria rres.

Even the food kept in step th the fiesta. The tamales, ili con carne, enchiladas d helados I feasted on all y were es delicioso. And ere was plenty of beer and ft drinks to wash it all own.

Later in the evening in- ructors from Arthur urray Dance Studio in olumbus demonstrated rious latin dances and gave struction in the Merengue Spanish hustle. Before the ening ended most of the udience had the routine wn pat.

"We had more participa- on than ever before," according to Project Officer CWO2 Steven F. Pinter. He estimates there were "between 10 and 20,000 in attendance. It's hard to pin it down since people were coming and going all day."

According to Chief Pinter, next year they're going to try an "Almost Anything Goes" competition between units. As for this year's Spring Fiesta, in his words it was a "complete success."

4,000 participate in Spring Fiesta jaunts

By Julie Casey

Ft. Benning's runners came out in all their splendor to kick off the Spring Fiesta at Doughboy Stadium Saturday. The 5, 10 and 20 mile jaunts enticed 500 runners to compete. Including the two-mile fun run, unit participation brought the total up to 4,000.

None of the courses were easy and most of them finished on an up-hill grade. Judging the response from the runners, it was a fun day and times were pretty good.

Allan Taylor, director of the Columbus Track Club, said, "I did a lot better than I thought I would. I was surprised. I didn't expect to get so close to 60 minutes in today's race (10 mile). I haven't been training that hard." Taylor finished first in his age group with a 60:31 time.

Dave Fields was by far the star of the 20 mile event finishing first with a time of 1:56:54, holding the lead by 18 minutes. A soldier from the post Sports Office commented that Saturday's race was one of Fields' better times.

At various points along the course runners were greeted with a cup of welcomed water. Some of them dumped it over their heads, others gulped it as they ran down the road. All were glad to cross the finish line.

For marathon statistics, see page 29.

Flyers split wins with Ft. Campbell

By Jim Carter

The Flyers' A-Side team fell to Ft. Campbell 21-7 but the Flyers' B-Side team pulled through with a 12-4 victory over Campbell's B-Side team.

Ft. Campbell, out to revenge a 22-6 loss to Benning last season, maintained a healthy lead throughout most of the game. Benning drew first blood on the boot of Jim Mohney for a penalty kick that split the uprights, setting the score at 3-0. Yet only minutes had passed as the quick Campbell backs drove through for a try. The conversion made the score 6-3 in Campbell's favor.

A mishandled ball by the Flyers resulted in another try by the quicksilver flyhalf of Campbell and a successful conversion stretched Campbell's lead to 12-3.

Roused by the quick score, the Benning backs, led by Paul Keller, put on a devastating display of destructive running which left three Campbell players down and gave four more points to Benning.

A penalty kick awarded to Campbell at the half resulted in a half time score of 15-7.

The second half remained scoreless for Benning but Campbell backs were able to put one more try on the scoreboard as the game ended 21-7.

The B-Side game revealed more hard tackling from both teams and once again Benning scored first on a penalty kick. Keeping the pressure on, the Benning scrummies forced the Campbell team to make mistakes resulting in another penalty kick which sent the score to 6-0.

Right at the half, the Benning flyback, Kerry Johnson, found a hole and cut a path a snake couldn't follow through the Campbell defenders for another score. The conversion was good and the score stood at 12-0.

Benning remained scoreless in the second half while the Campbell team was able to score one try worth four points near the close of the game. Aggressive play and superior hooking in the scrum by Chris Mullane were the key to the Benning victory.

The Flyers travel to Atlanta this weekend to play High Country Rugby/Football Club.

Benning marksman takes first

Earnest Neel of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored 286 out of a possible 300 targets last weekend to win the Interservice Trap Championship held at Benning's Trap and Skeet Ranges.

Neel completed rounds of 96-96-94 to win by two targets over second place finisher Robert Green, an Army Reservist from Ogden, Utah. Third place was taken by Harry Skalsky, also an Army Reservist from Richmond, Va.

In team competition, the U.S. Army Reserve squad of Green, Skalsky, Wally Zobell, Jackson, Mont., and Jim Clawson, Missoula, Mont., combined scores for a total of 745 birds to defeat the U.S. Army team of Neel, Randy Voss, Bill Shestock, and Lee Bannerman who finished with a total of 734.

More action is slated for this weekend as the Interservice Skeet and Pistol Championships will feature top teams from the different services vying for the top spot of Interservice Champion.

Soldier shoots way to pistol championship

Phillip Krosofsky, Army Marksmanship Unit, captured first place in a match during the 1978 Forces Command Eastern Regional Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun Championships recently held at Ft. George G. Meade, Md.

Krosofsky shot his way to a pistol title in the .22 caliber individual timed fire match.

The 1978 Championships were divided into five categories: composite rifle, composite pistol, combat rifle, combat pistol and light machinegun.

424 shooters competed in the championships. They came from active Army installations as well as major U.S. Army Reserve Commands, state National Guards, Senior Reserve Officer Training Corps units and cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point to determine the best shooters on the east coast.

The competitors shot for awards and trophies and for the chance to participate in the All-Army matches to be held at Benning May 22-26.

While at Benning the visitors will attend several classified briefings by Army officials and view both military and civilian displays.

On the afternoon of the closing day of the symposium, participants will view a field training exercise by elements of the 197th Inf Bde.

Infantry Center noted for service to Scouts

An active member of the Boy Scouts since 1928 and a former post commander, LtGen. (Ret.) John M. Wright, Jr. visited Columbus and Benning last week on behalf of the Chattahoochee Council's $850,000 fund-raising Development Program.

Wright presented a plaque from the council to MajGen. William J. Livsey, post commander, in a presentation at the Infantry Museum's Woodruff Auditorium in recognition of the Infantry Center's support of the fund.

As a major general, Wright commanded the post from July 1967 to May 1969. Upon his assignment as comptroller of the Army in 1970, he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant general.

Now on the national scouting staff, Wright has been a scoutmaster, explorer advisor, district commissioner, district chairman and leader at National and World Jamborees in his fifty-year career with the scouts.

A veteran of three wars, Wright earned the Distinguished Service Medal, the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Bronze Star Medal, the Air Medal with twelve Oak Leaf Clusters, the Army Commendaton Medal and the Purple Heart with Oak Leaf Cluster, along with numerous campaign and service medals.

He commanded the 155mm Roving Gun Battery that fired the last round in defense of Corregidor during World War II. He was a prison of war for three and a half years after the fall of the Philippines.

Good vacation requires planning

Two key points are essential to a good vacation — proper planning and proper rest. Years ago, people took short vacations for rest and a change of scenery. All too often today, individuals return from a vacation more fatigued than when they left.

Proper planning for long trips involves scheduling frequent rest stops and avoiding the impulse to travel too far in one day. Professional truck drivers are limited by law to 10 hours of travel following eight hours of rest in one day. It is foolhardy to attempt to complete three days driving in 24 hours. Endurance races at high speeds are best left to the racing drivers. For them it is their livelihood.

Another important part of your planning should be to get your vehicle in tip-top mechanical condition. Nothing will spoil a vacation faster than car problems. As vehicle breakdowns may occur at any time in spite of our best efforts, the smart traveler will always carry a flashlight and warning flares or a warning triangle.

If engine trouble is experienced or a tire fails, pull as far off the road as possible and post warning flares or use other means to warn traffic of a disabled vehicle ahead. Even though your vehicle may be completely off the road and on the shoulder, have all passengers exit the vehicle and move further away from the road.

You've waited all year for this vacation so don't ruin it by arriving at your destination too exhausted to enjoy it. Prior planning and sensible driving will make that vacation worth waiting a whole year for. (TRADOC)

Lower fare, new route set for METRA service

In an effort to improve bus service between points on post and downtown, METRA will initiate a new North Columbus-Benning route April 22 in cooperation with the Transportation Division, headed by Maj. Eugene J. Larson.

The new route will run between the Windsor Park shopping center in North Columbus and the main post area. Stops will include the Columbus Metropolitan Airport, Peachtree Mall shopping center, Cross Country Plaza shopping center, Columbus Square Mall shopping center, the East Wynnton area, St. Mary's Hills, the Main Post Mall shopping center, Martin Army Hospital, Bldg 35 and Bldg 4. The fare will be 50 cents between the post and points in Columbus or 25 cents if the trip doesn't cross the Benning boundary.

That is the same fare system as the route already in operation. METRA began service between the main transfer point downtown and the post March 3 and recently combined the Downtown-Benning route with the Cusseta Rd.-Peachtree Mall route. The latest changes included a fare reduction from 65 to 50 cents, more frequent service Monday through Saturday; the discontinuation of the midnight bus from Columbus; the reduction of Sunday operating hours and the relcation of the shuttle bus/METRA mini-mall interchange to new shelter by the old comissary building.

The fare in Columbus is 25 cents, Phenix City buses are 30 cents and buses between on- and off-post are 50 cents. The main transfer points are downtown at 11th St. and Broadway and at Columbus Square. For schedule and route information on any of METRA's fifteen routes, call 323-4100. Schedules and maps for the Benning routes are being printed, according to METRA officials.

Longer CONUS tours, lower moving costs set

Longer CONUS tours and a savings in PCS moving costs are expected under a program announced by Department of the Army (DA) in February. The program is a combination of new and old policies.

The goal of the program, in addition to saving money, is to increase the average CONUS tour by three months, DA officials say. The current average tour length in CONUS is about two years for enlisted members and three years for officers.

Key policies in the program include:

Allowing soldiers to stay at CONUS assignments beyond normal tour lengths whenever practical.

Encouraging voluntary extensions in current assignments in CONUS and overseas.

Saving PCS costs to the Army whenever possible.

Limiting first term soldiers, on a three-year enlistment, to one tur, unless they are required to serve a short tour overseas. First termers will be limited to two tours if they enlist for four or more years.

Providing homebase (return to current duty station in CONUS) and advance assignment return orders (prior to departing overseas) to E-5s and above and from 0-1 through 0-5s departing for unaccompanied hardship tours.

Assigning general officers to minimum tours of two years.

Whenever possible, allowing soldiers to serve a three-year tour at CONUS installations (or two years' minimum for officers selected to ttend a senior service college).

Not reassigning officer (0-1 through 0-5) and enlisted members (E-1 through E-8) to another installation solely because of promotion.

Assigning excess soldiers to secondary specialties at the same installation rather than requiring a PCS. If their secondary skills are not needed, they should be assigned as close as possible to their nearest installation.

Hawaii is now considered part of CONUS for purposes of allowing soldiers in Hawaii to receive direct reassignment overseas. This will not affect soldiers' eligibility for overseas allowances, the official added.

Field commands are being notified of the program, according to a DA official. It will include changes to several regulations.

The official said that certain MOSs would not be affected by the policy if they are "space inbalanced." Certain MOSs have 70 percent of their authorized positions in Europe, for example, and require more rotation than other MOSs.

While DA has officially announced the programs goals of stabilizing tours, an official cautioned that individual situations, MOS shortages, local conditions and overseas requirements will require many exceptions to the policy. (DA Scene)

New M915 trucks to be evaluated

The first pre-production M915-series truck, built under the largest single contract in history for commercial trucks, rolled off the assembly line in late March.

The US Army Tank-automotive Material Readiness Command (TARCOM), awarded AM General Corporation the contract last July to produce 5,507 trucks.

Production and distribution of the trucks to troop units now depends on a favorable evaluation by the Army as to the ability of the trucks to meet contract specifications. Troop units should start receiving the M915-series commercial trucks by January 1979, according to current plans.

The M915-series fleet will be produced in six vehicle types, which include: M915 line haul tractor truck; M916 light equipment transporter; M917 20-ton dump truck; M918 1,500 gallon bituminous distributor for road building; M919 concrete mobile mixer; and M920 medium equipment transporter.

The enter fleet of trucks is expected to be in the Army invetory by the fall of 1981. (ARNEWS)

Defensive riding essential to motorcycle safety

Defensive driving is essential when operating any vehicle but it is especially important when operating a motorcycle. Two-wheeled safety requires better-than-average riding skills as well as the ability to react quickly to mistakes of other highway users.

Most mororcycle accidents occur because riders get "trapped" in situations from which they can't escape. Here are some defensive riding tips to keep you from getting caught in a "trap":

KEEP YOUR DISTANCE. Allow yourself maneuvering room to steer and brake safely. Never ride into a space you can't see your way out of.

THINK AHEAD. Reduce speed before reaching a "trouble spot", traffic signal or any obstacle.

WATCH FOR PEDESTRIANS. This is especially important when turning right. Come to a full "foot-down" stop.

DOUBLE CHECK AT BLIND ENTRIES. Other drivers tend to over-estimate your stopping ability and underestimate your speed.

FIND YOUR LANE AND STAY IN IT. Stay to the left of your lane except when turning right.

PASS WITH CAUTION. Signal, pass with moderate speed, wait until you can see passed vehicle in your rear-view mirror or check over your shoulder before you cut back. .

DON'T TRAVEL TOO CLOSE TO PARKED CARS. A door opening suddenly or a car pulling out unexpectedly can mean trouble.

USE EXTRA CAUTION IN RIGHT-HAND LANE. This lane gets more wear and is likely to have slick road film and sometimes debris.

SLOW DOWN WHEN IT RAINS. Wet pavement is bad enough on four wheels — deadly on two.

STAY ON THE UP-AND-UP. The slipperier the road surface the more nearly vertical the machine should be.

WEAR ADEQUATE CLOTHING. Protect yourself (skin) from as much injury as possible.

AVOID HIGH SPEED "THRILL" RIDING. Motorcyclists have "mystery accidents" also. There is an immense thrill in being alone on an open straight stretch of highway and riding your bike at top speed, giving it all its got; and the next thing you know someone finds you seriously injured or likely dead, in the middle of a vacant field. The reason is not known but experts or professionals suspect you were a victim of "wheel wobble" possibly caused by worn pails or tolerance in the front suspension and steering literally causing the front wheel to wobble. At high speeds it can become so severe that control is impossible; and for reasons unknown, you are in the middle of nowhere, injured or dead, alone.

The key to safe cycling is to expect the unexpected. Once you are on that cycle you're on your own and must depend on your cycle-sense to avoid trouble. Remember, KEEP YOUR COOL — it's your safety that's at stake.

Professor Safety says . . .

A growing number of urban Americans are placing bars on windows and multiple locks on doors to keep out burglars. Some have found too late that the deivces can trap them in a deadly prison of flames. Firefighters across the nation tell horror stories about families, including many children, who have died in smoke-filled rooms, cut off from escape by metal window gates and key-operated dead-bolt safety locks.

In many cases, victims get to the windows but are imprisoned by their own bars. Others have been found slumped against doors locked from the inside by their own keys, but in a panic they forgot where the keys were kept or couldn't get to them. (Courtesy of Journal of American Insurance)

Poet's corner

on taking a p.t. test

By Sp4 Susan Cruce, 10th Co., TSB

it was out there watching
i could feel his eyes boring into the windows just daring us to come

he waited wound, round and round like a huge snake waiting for his prey to come to him

the sun burned our parched lips and the heat lapped up our strength like water the dust, oh my, the dust just choked up our lungs, so every breath was a torture the enemy was ready for us the moment of truth

no escape anywhere
the tester said go and off we went around the track on our last event

Army engineers to meet

The Society of American Military Engineers will hold its April meeting in the Benning Room of the Ft. Benning Officers' Club on Monday (not Wednesday as previously announced). Because the Fountain Room will be closed Monday, lunch will be held in the Coffee Shop at 11:15 a.m. to avoid the crowd. After luncheon, Maj Gen. William R. Wray, Assistant Chief of Engineers, will speak on the Military Construction, Army Program and its Execution to include Department of the Army Planning and Presentation to Congress.

How to take the sting out of summer bites

During the summer months most of us spend a lot of time in the outdoors enjoying nature. Unfortunately, the hot summer weather gives birth to some pesky little animals who can cause a lot of discomfort if you happen to be one of their victims. Here are some tips that may help you this summer:

CHIGGERS. These are ½ inch long harvest parasitic mites which are found in woods, meadows, and other grassy areas. To avoid chiggers when entering "wild" areas, it is recommended that, in addition to wearing adequate clothing, an insect repellent be applied to clothes or skin. In the event you do get chiggers, calamine lotion will ease the itching. Also, an application of clear fingernail polish will also provide relief.

INSECT BITES AND STINGS. Bites or stings from insects such as bees, ants or mosquitos cause redness, swelling and itching. Apply ice packs to the bite or sting. If possible, remove the stinger.

Do not scratch the areas. To relieve the itching, apply calamine lotion. If fainting or difficulty in breathing occurs, seek medical attention. Also, see a doctor if the bites or stings become infected.

TICKS. The tiny tick is most prevalent in Eastern Virginia and can carry a fatal disease — Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever. These carrier ticks have a reddish-brown body with a white spot located on their backs. When entering wooded or tall grassy areas, keep clothing buttoned, tuck trouser legs inside boots, wear long sleeves and apply a good insect repellent to clothing. It's a good idea to inspect your body twice a day when in a tick infested area. Pay close attention to armpits, neck and groin areas. If you discover ticks on your body you can attempt to dislodge them with heavy oil, fingernail polish remover, gasoline or alcohol. Allow to stand for ½ hour and remove with tweezers. Once tick has been removed, wash the infected area and apply an antiseptic. If one or two days after being bitten there is a loss of appetite or a feeling of illness, see a doctor. If three to ten days after being bitten the following symptoms occur, see a doctor: chills; fever; headache; pain behind the eyes; eye sensitivity to light; joint and muscle pain; or a rash on the wrists and ankles, or trunk, limbs and face.

JELLYFISH Jellyfish have stinging cells on their tentacles. The venom produces a burning pain, skin rash, muscular cramps, nausea and vomiting. If stung, wipe the area with rubbing alcohol. See a doctor if breathing becomes difficult, if drowsiness or fainting occurs, or if redness, swelling or drainage of pus or other discharge develops.

These simple first aid tips could save you a lot of misery this summer (TNS).

Be prepared for fire in your home

If a fire should occur in your home are you and your family prepared to move automatically — quickly — and effectively to an area of safety? If not, you better give serious thought to the development of a family escape plan. Here are some important points to remember when making up your plan of action:

Impress on your family the importance of having a plan. Convey to them that it is not play-acting and may mean their survival in the event of fire.

Have a prearranged meeting place.

Instruct your children on how to open the window. Also teach them to stay inside thir rooms with the door closed, when they hear the shout that there is a fire.

Get in the habit of closing bedroom doors before retiring — this door can become a barricade between you and the fire.

Check escape routes that might be available to some rooms such as porches, garages or sheds.

Show the children how to feel around the bottom of the door for hot air or any sign or smell of smoke. Further, teach them how to stuff pillows or blankets into the cracks.

Use the Buddy System to alert your family of the fire. By Mary shouting to John and John shouting to Peter and you yourself shouting to all of them you will know who has and has not heard the alarm.

Conduct a family drill periodically.

Hopefully, you will never have to use these plans, but should they be necessary some night you will be less apt to panic since you and your family have prepared for just such an emergency. (TNS)

AUSA Defense report

On June 27, 1977 President Carter announced the formation of the President's Commission on Military Compensation. At that time the President defined the Commission's goals and gave it until March 15 to achieve them. Its charter was complex but some of the major areas it was asked to make recommendations on were: the form of military compensation best suited to the needs of the nation in peace and war; the purpose of the military retirement system and the effectiveness of the present system, and; whether the unique character of military service should be reflected in the overall compensation system.

The commissioners and their staff worked hard during the relatively brief time they had to address this very complex subject. They went out into the field to talk to service personnel and held an extensive series of public meetings. Their report is now in the hands of the President. It contains many recommendations, some of which show constructive forward thinking. Others maintain the status quo, while still others seem to miss the mark.

By recommending that the present system of base pay plus allowances be retained, the Commission recognized the essential nature of military service and the need for those who serve to have a sense of affinity with the organization. The Commission's commitment to equity came through in their recommendations for travel and moving expenses for all grades of military people and in their support for a variable housing allowance for those who are assigned to serve in high cost areas. Their recommendations on the future form of the retirement system are another matter.

The Commission apparently viewed the present military retirement system as an old-age pension program that begins paying-off too early. Few people will argue that what we have now is perfect. It needs many changes but the commissioners seemed to lose sight of the fact that military retirement is first and foremost, a personnel management tool. It must encourage people to choose an arduous career and then provide devices to shape the size and character of the military force by varying the length of time the individual members serve. One of its prime features should be simplicity. Few people in Congress and not many military people thoroughly understand the philosophy behind the present system recommended by the commission.

Congratulations are due the members of the Commission for substantial progress in some of the tangled thickets of military compensation, but their retirement proposal is a disappointment. Its good points will be lost in complexity. The weaker points will fuel resistence to needed change.

AUSA: military service a profession apart

Despite the pressure from bureaucrats and congressmen to treat military service just like any other job it still retains a special aura that sets it apart as a profession or, in a more abstract sense, as a calling.

Pride in one's unit, the satisfaction of serving one's country, the companionship of similarly dedicated people sharing hardship and danger, all set military service apart.

One of the traditions of U.S. military service that has grown up over the years is that the services "take care of their own." A soldier helps another soldier. Their families help each other in time of grief or need — and the Army looks after all of them.

When a soldier steps up to the pay table at the end of each month or gets a deposit slip from his bank he knows that his total pay represents two things, compensation for service performed (his base pay) and the money provided to house and feed him (his allowances). Combined they are a symbol of the commitment the Army has made to pay him a fair stipend for his work and to take care of his personal needs.

But now the pressure is mounting to change all this. There are some in Congress and in the federal bureaucracy who, alarmed by what they see as unreasonable personnel costs and concerned that military people don't appreciate what they have, want to combine the pay and allowances into a single salary. Since the allowances are now tax-free and the combined salary would be entirely taxable the sponsors of the salary idea promise that the service personnel will be protected from any loss of take-home pay. With that bigger lump sum showing on pay tables, they say, service men and women will better appreciate their generous compensation. For some reason they conveniently overlook the fact that it will cost the government more to prevent the loss of take-home pay than it could possibly gain by increasing the tax base. But their biggest oversight is failing to recognize the loss of military "togetherness."

We have to look no further backward in history than our unfortunate experience in Vietnam to see the effects of a personnel policy that divorces the service member from his home and family. Throughout that war the army of the late Republic of Vietnam paid little or no attention to the personal well-being of its soldiers or their families. Desertion to help with family emergencies, to harvest crops and simply to assure the family's well-being was routine. In the final dark days there was so little feeling of devotion to anything but the family that military structure collapsed.

Military service should not be just another salaried job. It is special and so must be the system used to compensate it. (AUSA Defense Report).

3/7th returns from Alaska training

Soldiers from the 3/7th 197th Inf Bde and supporting units offload a DC-10 this week after an eventful cold weather training exercise in Ft. Wainwright, Alaska.

By Ron Fowler

More than 50 families of soldiers from Ft. Benning huddled in the wind-swept stormy night weather at Lawson Field early Wednesday morning waiting to welcome their soldiers home. The first contingent of 'Cottonbalers' from 3/7th Inf, 197th Inf Bde and elements of supporting units arrived back home after four weeks of rigorous cold weather maneuvers at the Northern Warfare Training Center (NWTC), Ft. Wainwright, Alaska.

The first lift totaling 330 troops touched down at Lawson Field in a DC-10 at 12:40 a.m. Wednesday to the sweet sounds of families cheering.

"One thing I can honestly say about this trip and the training we took part in is that it's been one very new experience to me," said Sp4 Patrick Jones, a grenadier in Co C, 3/7th Inf. "Being from Phoenix, Arizona, I had never seen snow in any quantity before and training in all that 'white stuff' in Alaska was nothing like I've ever done before."

The second sortie of soldiers from the 3/7th and other 197th units arrived Wednesday night at 7:30 and all their weapons and equipment arrived at Lawson Field early Thursday morning.

The 'Cottonbalers' participated in a large number of training exercises while at the NWTC, ranging from winter survival in the frozen northlands to platoon and company size combat assault techniques. The 'ground-pounders' from the 'Cottonbalers' battalion even got the opportunity to test their skills on the ski slopes as they were offered blocks of instruction on military skiing in conjunction with a practical exercise.

"At first most of the men had a tough time adjusting to skis as a form of transportation through the snow," one senior noncom reported. "But after they got the hang of things they were able to move around pretty good, much to the delight of themselves and their rear ends. Believe me, some of these guys took some hard falls on the slopes. A few of them are probably still sore."

"The training that we went through in Alaska was tough and demanding," concluded Jones, "but we're going to have to be able to adapt to all types of environmental conditions if we're going to be successful on the battlefield of the future. Training of the type we just concluded at the NWTC is a step in the right direction toward helping us achieve our goal of total combat readiness."

AUSA national symposium to begin

Army Vice Chief of Staff, Gen. Walter T. Kerwin, is slated to be the keynote speaker for a symposium being held Sunday through Tuesday. Approximately 500 military and industrial leaders are expected to attend.

The symposium, sponsored by the Association of the United States Army (AUSA), will be on "Future Army Operational Requirements" for 1985 through 1990.

More than 125 military leaders, including Gen. Donn A. Starry, TRADOC commander; Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen, FORSCOM commander; and commanders and staffs from other Army installations, will attend.

They will share the meeting with approximately 375 business leaders, including a number of corporate presidents, executive vice-presidents and other key officials in industrial firms.

Heading the group from the AUSA's national office will be George M. Houston, president, and MajGen. (USAR) Robert F. Cocklin, executive vice-president.

This will be the 34th symposium sponsored by AUSA since 1957 and the fifth to be held here.

According to an AUSA spokesman, "The symposium provides a golden opportunity for the free exchange of ideas and information between Army and industry and makes a considerable contribution to the advancement of progress in national defense."

Symposium participants will attend classified briefings by Army officials from numerous installations. Military and civilian displays of military equipment will be set up in Infantry Hall, in the building's west parking lot and on Gardner Field.

On the final afternoon, attendees will view a combined arms live fire exercise, conducted by elements of the 197th Inf Bde.

DoD sets test of utility meters in family housing

In an effort to meet presidential energy conservation goals, congress has directed the Department of Defense (DoD) to evaluate utility consumption in military housing. The lawmakers have appropriated $161.2 million for a conservation program calling for installation of utility meters in some military family quarters.

DoD is examing several ways of lowering overall energy usage. The metering program is to test the feasibility of broader use of meters to conserve energy.

Three Army installations will begin or are already installing utility meters in almost 2,500 family quarters as part of the tri-service test. The actual monitoring of energy consumption will begin this fall.

Family housing units at Ft. Eustis, Va; Ft. Gordon, Ga; and Yuma Proving Ground, Ariz, were chosen by DoD officials for the program.

The Facilities Engineering Directorate of the US Army Corps of Engineers has charge of the Army's metering program.

Meter installation is in progress at Yuma Proving Ground, with Ft. Eustis and Ft. Gordon beginning installation in May. At Yuma, meters should all be installed by the end of June, and Eustis and Gordon will be ready by the end of summer. The test will run from October 1, 1978 to September 30, 1979, according to Army engineer officials.

The monitoring test will be based on energy consumption norms being established by the Construction Engineering Research Lab (CERL) at Champaign, Illinois. Among other factors, CERL scientists consider unit size, local climatic conditions, building materials, and number and age of occupants in developing an energy consumption standard for each housing unit.

Once the test begins, utility meters will be read monthly. Results will be compared with the pre-established consumption norm. Housing occupants who consume energy in excess of the norm will receive a mock utility bill.

There will be no charge for utility usage. The mock bill is to notify occupants of the amount by which they exceed normal energy consumption.

Families receiving a mock bill will be asked to compare their usage with the established energy consumption norm, and return the bill to housing officials.

Oil and electricity will be monitored at Ft. Eustis, while Yuma Proving Ground will measure electricity use only, since no other energy source is provided to quarters.

Ft. Gordon will be metering both gas and electricity. But because of difficulties in installing gas meters on some housing units, a sample meter will be placed on only one of each type of unit. Accordingly, 276 of the Gordon units will not be monitored for gas consumption.

According to Corps of Engineers officials, no entry into family quarters will be required for installation or reading of meters, since meters will be placed outside.

Congress approved the metering project last July as part of the Military Construction Authorization bill. Congress has called for a full report on the test by January 1, 1980. (ARNEWS)

News in Brief

Financial difficulties force post boarding kennels to close

The Installation Club Management Division has announced that its boarding kennels will close on April 28.

In Fiscal Year (FY) 1977, the kennels experienced a financial loss. Losses in FY 78 are greater, although actions had been taken to preclude them. Army regulations require the kennels to be a self-sustaining operation, and since this cannot be met, the facility will close.

In anticipation of the closing, a survey was made of the local community to determine the number of animal boarding facilities available. There are at least 11 facilities with a minimum boarding capacity of 665. A price survey revealed that some civilian facilities had the same rates as the Benning kennels, while others were as much as 50 cents higher.

According to LtCol. T. K. Naumann, the Installation Club Manager, "It is unfortunate that we must close, but it is a matter of economics. The Benning club system, like other club systems around the world, is faced with an operational crisis, and we must take those actions necessary to protect the system as a whole."

Red Cross is counting on you.

SQT make-up test slated

SQT make-up testing for soldiers with a PMOS of 55B or 55D will be administered on June 5, 6, and 7. Soldiers in those MOSs who have not taken their SQT and who have not received the appropriate Soldier's Manual or SQT Notice Pamphelet should contact their S3 or training section to obtain the study material. Eligible personnel will receive specific test times during the last week of May. For further information, call the Standards Appraisal Branch at 545-1954.

AER loan hours changed

The Army Emergency Relief Section will be accepting loan applications (DA 1103) during the hours of 8 a.m. to 12 noon from Apr. 18 to May 1. The only DA1103 loan applications accepted after 12 noon will be those of service members on emergency leave status. Please make sure all DA 1103 loan applications forms are dated August 1977.

Infantry School reorganizes, two departments eliminated

In a reorganization of the U.S. Army Infantry School, two departments are being eliminated as separate entities, and their spaces and functions are being redistributed to other departments.

The Maintenance Division of the Combat Support and Maintenance Department is being absorbed by the Weapons Department which will undergo a name change to Weapons, Gunnery and Maintenance Department (WGMD). The remaining functions will be absorbed by the Tactics Department which is being renamed Command, Staff and Operations Department (CSOD).

The Airborne Department will take over the mission of the Physical Conditioning and Drill Committee of the Command and Staff Department (CSD), while the remaining spaces and functions of CSD will be transferred to CSOD.

Col. Franklin J. Casey, present chief of Weapons Department, will become head of WGMD, and Col. Bobby J. Harris will remain as chief of the Tactics Department under its new name.

School Secretary Col. Joseph A. Villa said, "We anticipate that the changes will enable us to use more efficiently the resources we have." He added, "the remaining School staffing is unchanged."

The changes are expected to be completed by May 1.

We don't rent rooms, we rent furnished apartments with all the features of a regular motel plus added conveniences that cannot be provided with just a single room - and all at the same, or most times lower rates than the single-room motel. For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 100 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

36th Engr Gp takes two top honors

By Patricia Redmond

Each year the Post Best Dining Facility of the Year award is given to the most outstanding small and large unit. This year marks the first time any one group on post has won in both categories at the same time.

This year, the 36th Engr Gp swept the field with the 524th PSC taking the small unit honors and the 67th Maint Bn winning for the large unit.

The difference between a small and large unit rests in the number of service members fed at each meal.

The food specialists of the 524th and the 67th take pride and special care in preparing meals that feed on the average about 500 hungry soldiers a day at each facility.

SFC Robert Newsome, NCOIC, 524th dining facility and SFC Auther Boddie Jr., NCOIC, 67th dining facility as well as the food specialists who work for them may often work some 12 hours or more a day. They offer complete dedication to the job when it comes to the welfare of the troops.

"I expect no more of anyone else than I'd ask of myself," stated Newsome.

Meals are prepared according to recipe cards which are a type of nutritional guide the facilities follow. While preparing these meals high standards in sanitation and food preparation must be maintained.

The Best Dining Facility of the Year is not won from a one time evaluation. The facilities are subject to unannounced quarterly inspections by Post. From these inspections the Post Best Mess of the Quarter is awarded to the facility that proves to be tops in food preparation and highest in sanitation.

The number of quarterly awards won, food preparation, sanitation and administration are considered when the selection is made for the annual award.

Both Newsome and Boddie agree that the ingredients for winning were hard work and superior standards. They readily attribute much of the success to the food specialists who work for them.

"Winning this award was a challenge that required dedication to the job and the initiative of each individual in the dining facility to set high standards for themselves and meet them," said Newsome.

"A facility is only as good as the individuals who work there want it to be," explained Boddie. "I'm happy about winning this award, but I'm even happier for the cooks because they work hard and feel that they've accomplished something."

Boy Scouts to have Spring Camporee

The Ft. Benning District of Boy Scouts of America (BSA) is holding a Spring Camporee May 5 through 7 at Pine Tree BSA Camp on post. The action packed weekend will have something for the Scouts and Scoutmasters alike.

The Camporee will consist of patrol competition, so troops should arrive prepared to operate in patrol formation. There will be eight stations (events) for scouts and four for scoutmasters including knot tying, first aid, compass course, fire building, pioneering, plants, and camp safety.

Some competition will require two members of the patrol to compete for the score while others will require three, four or five members. In a few of the events each member of the patrol will compete as individuals; their scores will then be added together and averaged for the patrol score.

Each patrol's campsite will be inspected and points will be awarded and added to the patrol's overall score. All events will be timed and points will be subtracted when the patrol exceeds the allotted time.

Patches, awards and participation ribbons will be awarded. First and second place awards will be presented in Gateway Judging, which will be done by committee. Patrols will be judged on originality, boy contribution and amount of commercial — the less the better — used.

Registration may be made by patrol within the troop before 8 p.m. on May 5. There is a $1 fee per scout.

Salisbury Fair to hold art show

As part of Columbus, Georgia's Sesquicentennial celebration and in conjunction with their 9th annual Salisbury Fair, the Historic Columbus Foundation is sponsoring an art show April 29-30.

The Salisbury Fair Art Show will be held in the Knights of Columbus Hall on Broadway in the Historic District, and is open to adults only.

Professional and non-professional artists will be judged in separate divisions. Oil painting, water color, acrylics, photography and sculpture will be judged for first place cash awards donated by the Historic Columbus Foundation and the Foundation's art patrons. Second, third and honorable mention winners will receive ribbon merit awards. All art work will be for sale.

According to Mrs. Geri Davis, Art Show Chairman, "this is one of the few opportunities for non-professional artists to exhibit, be judged within their own realm, and be able to offer their work for sale." "In addition," Mrs. Davis added, "this art show gives the general public an excellent opportunity to view some of the finest professional work."

For further information contact Mrs. Davis at P.O. Box 7252, Columbus, Ga. 31907 or call the Historic Columbus Foundation at 404/322-0756.

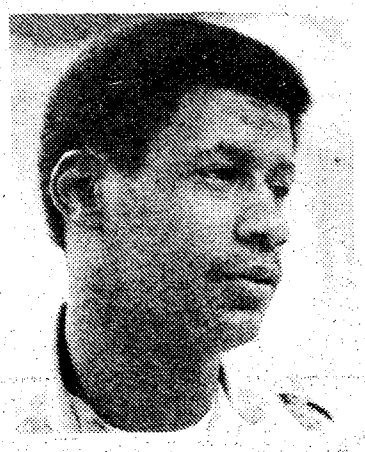
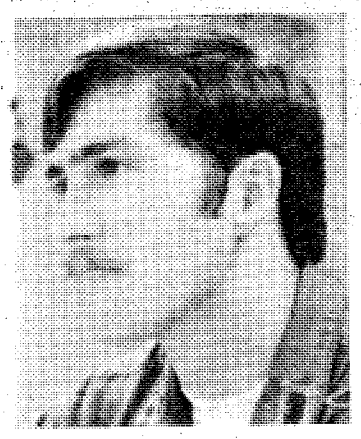
Glad You Asked...

Do you feel that Army manuals are difficult to read and understand?



Sgt. Lee Boseman, Hqs Co Hqs Cmd

No. Personally, I feel that Army manuals are very informative. However, the technical data could be expressed in more detail for those individuals without any technical background. References to Army manuals could be more direct in the actual change or addition to an Army regulation. The major problem in understanding an Army manual is that the soldier is trying to read what is not there.



CWO2 Thomas Zuber, 498th Med Co

Some are difficult to understand because the phraseology is wordy or obscure. They seem to be written in haste and have many errors. Many times the writers of Army manuals are in staff positions and have been away from their jobs for long periods of time — sometimes years. Closer coordination or having people in the field who know exactly what's happening would remedy this problem.

Sgt. Duane Indergand, Hqs Co Hqs Cmd, Ft. Dix, N.J. (TDY)

They're easy to read and not difficult to understand, but they seem to contradict each other in that other manuals (which make any necessary corrections) have not been changed. For example, I work for Finance. An AR is changed and if there is another AR pertaining to the aforementioned, it is not updated.

2ndLt. Melanie Goodson, 608 Ord Co

Yes. Manuals are often too technical and written in such a manner that the individual soldier cannot comprehend them. As a result, many soldiers develop a habit of not reading the manuals, finding it much easier to ask someone about a particular subject rather than trying to decipher a manual.

Sp5 Donald C. Taylor, USACC Agency, ATC Br

No. Army manuals are basically written for "every man," with the exception of those pertaining to a specific field. Those are understood by the personnel in those particular MOS' since the training received gives the background necessary for those manuals.

COMMENTARY

Army manuals wordy?

By Sue Davis

Are Army manuals difficult to read? Not really, according to some people. The material is written in such a way that anyone and his mother can understand the information. Often it is so simplified that it becomes ridiculously complicated.

Wordiness tends to be a problem and it seems that the idea, technical information, explanations, etc., may be expressed in a billion words or less. Opening a manual with the title "How to put up a tent" and finding that the explanation exceeds over a thousand pages tends to dismay the reader. The trick is to psych them out.

These manuals are of utmost importance to the soldier if he wants to do a good job. The information contained within the manuals are used "on the job" and the knowledge may be used as a reference in case one should forget certain aspects of military life.

A problem arises when the material must be updated. Those personnel whose responsibility it is to write Army manuals, regulations, etc., are often in staff positions and have been away from their military jobs for long periods of time. This results in misinformation, and repeated errors on certain technological subjects, for example, and produces a domino-like effect the entire way down the chain, and it's the soldier at the end of the line who really needs to know what's going on. Let's make this possible for him by making the Army manuals clear, concise and short.

Don't air dirty linen

With comment directed toward wearing fatigues in Columbus, my vote is no.

I believe wearing fatigues to purchase gas or food on the way home from work is already sticking our neck out. Of the soldiers I have seen at Ft. Benning, only 20 percent of the force wears the uniform properly, and with any pride.

Fatigues worn by soldiers, at the end of the work day, is a negative image. The uniform is dirty, wrinkled, and along with the boots, not up to standards. There are enough critics of our organization cranking our negative images, so why do we need to add to them?

Allowing fatigues to be worn indiscriminately in Columbus would also require a serious increase in courtesy patrols.

The image Ft. Benning portrays is vital to our successful existence in Columbus. No matter how hard we try to do our good share in Columbus, troops in fatigues, relaxing as troops do, will undermine citizen/military relations.

It takes very little time to shower and change into proper attire for dining, drinking or shopping. Those who advocate a change in policy are not using good sense.

The cupboard is bare!

I cannot understand why the people who run the commissary cannot keep the shelves stocked better than they do. For those of us who shop after 5 p.m., shopping in the commissary has turned into a frustrating experience, what with empty shelves and few goods on many other shelves. And I include Thursday evening shopping on my list, because that is the day the commissary is supposed to be open later than any of the other days. The commissary people seem to be telling us: "If you can't shop between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., sorry about that!"

Also, I cannot understand why the commissary continually runs out of certain products and then requires us to wait for weeks before those products appear again. Either someone does not know how to keep a running inventory or they don't care to do the job they are being paid to do.

Post motorcycle improvement course available

The most important point for the brand new or novice bike rider is to get quality instruction on how to operate the vehicle safely. Ft. Benning's Safety Office runs a motorcycle improvement program each Friday beginning at 8 a.m. According to instructor Sgt. Edward Arnold, the program consists of both classroom and road work.

"We begin in the classroom," said Arnold, "with two and a half hours of instruction on bike upkeep, operator safety, proper clothing and laws and regulations. Then we move outside to run two obstacle courses. When students complete the course, they're awarded the Motorcycle Improvement Program Card."

Arnold added that the card is required to register a motorcycle on post. Such investment in time for the course is wise. Other safety tips are:

Ride your cycle as though you were invisible to other highway users. Chances are the motorist really does not see you. Keep your headlight on at all times, and have your bike, riding clothes, and helmet painted or marked with light colored fluorescent or reflective materials, maintain the proper lane position and use your directional signals.

Maintain a safe following distance. Traffic accidents caused by cyclists are usually a result of following too closely. The greater the distance between you and the car ahead — the more time you have to react to hazards or obstructions in the road ahead. Use your brakes wisely. Remember, almost 70 percent of the stopping power is in the front brake. This is due to the fact that front brake shoes are larger and the front wheel does not have to overcome inertia caused by the chain, drive sprocket or transmission. Therefore, the rear brake should be applied first to prevent spills. Use a "soft" brake on slippery road surfaces. Decelerate and use your brakes before entering a sharp curve — not while in it.

Carry passengers only after you become a thoroughly experienced rider.

Be sure the bike is legally equipped and maintained in safe operating condition.

Do not tempt fate by riding on icy or slick roads. Low traction surfaces make it difficult to lean into turns and acceleration and braking can be hazardous. Wait 30 minutes after the start of a rain storm so that the oil film is washed off the roadway.

Ride in the left track, that is, to the left of the grease strip in your lane of traffic unless you intend to turn right. The left track position assures better visibility, more evasive escape room and encourages the motorist to pass properly. A cycle is not permitted to share lane position with any other vehicle, including another cycle.

Be in top mental and physicial condition before operating a motorcycle. Coordination and concentration are essential.

Observe all traffic laws. The motorcyclist must not only look for and evade the other guy, he must think for him as well. Always anticipate the unexpected so you are alert to control any situation that may arise.

Remember, when it's two wheels versus four, your skill and know-how are your best — and maybe your only — protection.

Navy Seals take to the air

By Bev Lockhart

Nineteen sailors are attending Airborne school after 25 weeks of rigorous training at the U.S. Navy's Basic Underwater Demolition and Seal Training (BUD/S), Coronado Naval Amphibious Base (NAB), San Diego, Calif.

The Airborne course is the last leg of their training, which qualifies then to be part of the elite Navy Seal (sea, air and land) Team.

The first phase of BUD/S consisted of eight weeks of conditioning. Along with calisthenics, runs, obstacle courses, and various evolutions (exercise) to promote teamwork, they were also qualified in Senior Life saving.

Hell week was also a part of the first phase. Hell week is just what it sounds like. The men are required to stay awake for seven days, 24 hours a day, while taking part in round-the-clock training. Hell week separates the men from the boys; it pushes the individual to the limit and gives the Navy an opportunity to find out who can handle it and who can't. Consequently, it's the most demanding week of the entire training.

The second phase consisted of seven weeks of diving. The trainees learned three different types of SCUBA (self-contained underwater breathing apparatus): open (normal air), semi-closed (mixed gas) and closed circuit (pure oxygen). During the diving phase they also learned compass courses, sneak attacks, and search and rescue methods.

The sailors learned land warfare and demolition during their third phase of BUD/S. This includes small unit tactics, demolition, small arms, hydrographic reconnaisance (maps showing depths of water and obstacles), cartography (chart making), rapelling, and helicopter cast and recovering. During the third phase, the Seals also spent three weeks at San Clemente Island, Calif., where they put what they had learned to practice. A one-mile night swim, and two-, three, four-, and five and a half-mile day swims in the 58 degree Pacific were some of the hardest exercises they had to endure.

"They put you in the water at 5:30 in the morning — the sun hasn't even come up yet—and you have to swim the coastline. When you go around the point and catch sight of the beach, you know you're almost there," relates AN David B. Riehle. "What a relief."

BUD/S is obviously a tough course. Out of 110 men who started the course, only 19 completed it. Six of those will go to Seal Team One and six to UDT-11, Coronado NAB; five will go to UDT-21 and two to Seal Team Two, Little Creek NAB, Va.

After completing airborne training, the Seals will be capable of fighting anybody anywhere at any time under any condition. And that's their mission.

Scouts tested for biking ability

Bicycles galore!

A combination bike rodeo, registration and safety check was sponsored Monday by the Military Police for Cub Scout Pack 27.

The two-wheeled event, which is conducted annually, was held in the parking lot at Bldg 229. 1st Lt. Kavin Stull, from the Provost Marshal's Office, directed the activities.

A total of 51 Scouts registered their bikes and underwent some unique testing. The purpose of the tests was to instruct the Scouts how to maintain bicycle safety.

The first phase was registration and bike check. Members of PMO thoroughly checked the bikes to insure that the brakes, tires and reflectors were operating properly before the testing began.

Each cyclist was tested in five different areas.

- Straight line control involved pedaling down a 35-foot straight line and staying within the lines, which are only six inches apart.
- Braking ability was also tested to see if the youngsters were able to apply their brakes and stop within a certain distance.
- Another section of the course tested the Scouts at their knowledge of hand and arm signals.
- A test in circling and changing direction involved riding in a figure-eight loop without having the front tire go over any lines.
- The final test was an obstacle course which consisted of a lane lined with fluorescent cones. Each Scout was required to ride his bicycle as slowly as possible (30 seconds maximum) without losing his balance.

Pack 27 will be conducting a spring registration sometime in May for all interested children who have reached the age of seven.

Fleas pose health hazard to people

Fleas are normally considered a problem peculiar to animals, not people. Over half of American households have pets, however, and many have a close association with their animals. They not only share the same house, but are also starting to share the fleas. Animals which spend part of their time outdoors invariably bring fleas into the house. Since the fleas prefer the animal, the owner seldom knows that they are around until the animal is absent for a few days.

Fleas are small wingless, blood-sucking insects that jump rather than fly. Only adult fleas are found on the animal. They usually stay on the animal just long enough to eat, breed and lay eggs. The eggs quickly fall off and usually collect in the animal's bedding. They hatch in less than a week into a small larva. Normally the fleas go from an egg to an adult in about three weeks.

Dogs and cats with fleas usually bite and scratch the posterior part of their bodies, primarily at the base of the tail and on the inside of the flanks. The constant scratching can lead to loss of hair, claw marks, and enlarged raw areas commonly known as "hot spots."

Animals can usually tolerate a few fleas but an increasing number of cases are seen in which the animal becomes allergic to flea bites and then one bite is all that is needed to send him into a rage of scratching.

If an animal is placed on his back, the fleas can be seen on the inside of the flanks. For every flea you see, there are many others in the house waiting their turn.

Eliminating fleas from the animal is easier than eradicating them from the house. Most commercial sprays, dips and powders contain a combination of insecticide ingredients. One kills the fleas very rapidly but has little residual effect (pryethrin). Other ingredients kill slower but last longer (chlorinated hydrocarbons, carbonates, and organophosphates). Most veterinarians prefer dipping dogs at two-week intervals supplemented by applications of flea powder once or twice weekly. Cats are very sensitive to some insecticides and only preparations approved for their use should be used.

Flea collars and medallions help but often they are not sufficient alone. A brand that works on one animal may not work on another. There are some indications that fleas are becoming resistant to these products. There are precautions that should be taken, especially with their use in cats and certain breeds of dogs. The directions should be read and followed.

When the house is infested with fleas, most veterinarians recommend the use of a professional exterminator. If this is too expensive there are flea fogger bombs. The directions are on the can and should be read and followed. Be sure to treat where the animal sleeps and spends most of his time. A good vacuuming will help if fleas are thought to be in the rugs. Since the eggs and cocoons are resistant to insecticides, several treatments of the house may be necessary at two- to four-week intervals. Be sure to keep insecticide containers away from pets and children.

Once a house is free of fleas the pets should be continually checked when they return from outdoors, routinely treated, and flea collars renewed according to the manufacturers instructions. Otherwise, the owner may have an opportunity to go through the entire procedure again.

Benning student spells out victory

By Sue Davis

The air was stuffy but neither of them were going to give up. They both knew that one slip of the tongue and the opponent would clinch the victory.

"Alright, now spell 'gnarled'," said J. Edward Wilson, the proctor, news director at radio station WDAK. The uneasy youngster was not so sure of that one, but she had to get it right. She must! "G-n-a-r-l-e-d", she spelled slowly.

"That's absolutely correct," the protor smiled. "Congratulations!"

Denise Milner, a fifth grader at Dexter School, took first place in the inter-school Spelling Bee held there last week.

There were five other contestants and five alternates; each representing his school.

Denise, the daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Robert Milner, commented on her experience. "I was very nervous, but spelling is one of my best subjects."

When Denise entered the room where the contest was to be held, she exclaimed, 'Oh my goodness, Mark is here!'

Mark Larson, a fifth grader representing Edward A. White School, out-spelled Denise last year. He placed second overall from Ft. Benning in the 1977 tourney. "This year I was tense and nervous", he explained. "I was more confident last year."

What was the word Mark couldn't spell? "Perforate," he said good-naturedly.

The winner, is a bright and bubbly individual — overflowing with effervescene. She's active as a cheerleader and enjoys playing tennis.

She was jokingly asked if she could spell out her plans for the future. Denise said she intends to participate in next year's spelling bee and hopes to compete nationally.

"I'm hoping to make it to Washington, D.C., but there are a lot of other kids that are hoping that too," she sighed.

Today, Denise is competing for the District Championship at Warner Robbins, Ga. If she wins there, she will go on to try for the State Championship.

Drinking driver like computer with short circuit

In the ten years of the Vietnam War 45,000 U.S. soldiers were killed by the enemy. In this same 10 years, 274,000 U.S. citizens died in crashes involving alcohol!

For years the rule has been: "If you drink, don't drive; if you drive, don't drink." It's a good rule but obviously, people do drink and then drive. Perhaps you do, too?

Okay, you do drink on occasion. Sometimes you drink and then drive. You had to get home so you got behind the wheel and made a decision —to take a chance.

What is the answer to drinking and driving? The answer lies in a general understanding of the human, physical effects of alcohol, and a specific understanding of one's own personal limitations, capacity, tolerance level, or whatever it may be called in your home.

Your brain is a computer. It receives live information constantly through your senses, and makes decisions that help you control your vehicle to avert all the hazards that confront every driver in any kind of driving situation. Alcohol short circuits that computer.

The result is it slows reflexes, impairs coordination, reduces visual acuity, and dulls normal caution. Concentration becomes difficult. You cannot think as clearly, as quickly, or as rationally as you usually do, and you cannot act as fast. A delay of a mere half-second in braking allows a car, at 55 mph, to travel an additional 41 feet!

Alcohol is a drug. It is not a stimulant. Actually, it is a depressant that affects your central nervous system. You do not digest alcohol. It is absorbed directly into your blood steam where it is carried to all parts of the body.

When is it safe to drive after drinking? — Time — and only time — is the answer. It has been recommended you wait at least one hour per ounce of drink before driving. That is the minimum time, experts says, in which the body can rid itself of alcohol.

The occasions for drinking are endless. So are the chances for accidents on the highway. If you decide to drink and then drive, you can help solve the Number 1 highway problem if you:

- Understand alcohol and what it does.
- Understand what alcohol does to you.
- Know your limitations and stay within them.

It's up to you! (TNS)

Brown Bag seminars produce large turnout

In an effort to provide a service to post civilian employees, men and women, the Federal Women's Program Committee have arranged for a Civilian Personnel Office (CPO) specialist to explain the organization, mission and function of civilian personnel to elements of the work force.

These special programs, called Brown Bag seminars, began in February. Since then, a total of 210 employees have spent their lunch hours at their worksite, learning more about CPO.

Mrs. Floria Jackson is the facilitator from Management Employee Relations Branch, CPO. She explains the purpose and duties of the five CPO branches — Position and Pay Management, Management Employee Relations, Technical Service Office, Recruiting and Placement, and Training and Development. She also answers generalized questions following her informative presentation.

A Brown Bag seminar may be scheduled at your worksite by contacting Ms. Norma Christian, Federal Women's Program Coordinator, at 545-1872.

Oregon mayor takes reserve training here

To his fellow soldiers, 1stLt. Albert Densmore is a recently appointed company commander in the 104th Reserve Division. But to the citizens of Medford, Ore., Densmore is the mayor who was elected in 1976 to a two-year term.

Densmore has just returned to Medford after spending two weeks here with the 1st AIT Bde for his annual training. He had been in the Army Reserve since 1969. "I really enjoyed summer camp," commented Densmore, "I worked long hours but the training was excellent. The rapport was really good between the cadre and the reservists. My troops felt that this was one of the finest camps that we've been to."

Medford, population 37,000, has a city manager form of government. As the mayor, Densmore presides over the council, makes suggestions and has veto power. He plans to run for another term and will also stay with the reserves.

"Being a 'weekend warrior' can be very fulfilling," concluded Densmore, "and I feel that I can be both an officer in the reserves and mayor of Medford without any conflicts."

Exchange system acts to offset declining dollar

Acutely aware of the Impact of the declining buying power of the U.S. dollar upon members of the military and their families stationed in the Federal Republic of Germany, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), is implementing the "AAFES Budget Special" program to aid those financially pressed Americans.

According to the AAFES commander, Major General Bobby W. Presley, the "AAFES Budget Special" program is "being developed for worldwide implementation, with immediate application in Europe, in order to provide significant value at affordable prices for hard-pressed junior enlisted personnel and their families."

The newest exchange effort to ease the pressure of the decline of the dollar value upon U.S service personnel and their dependents will include both regular stock merchandise and special purchases. Major categories of goods to be offered through the new program will include men's and boyswear, women's and girlswear and clothing for infants. New lower priced items will be featured as well as an increase in range and depth of existing lower priced lines.

AAFES is procuring the new, lower priced merchandise for air shipment to major shopping centers in Germany. These include facilities at Stuttgart, Vogelweh, Fuerth, Heidelberg, Frankfurt, Rhein Main, Ramstein, Berlin, Wuerzburg, Hainerberg, Baumholder, Mannhein, Augsburg, Bamberg, Giessen and Spangdahlem. This will be followed by similar special procurement of merchandise for exchanges in the Pacific, Alaska and CONUS.

Within approximately 30 days, evidence of the specially procured AAFES budget merchandise will be on sale in Europe. After 60 days, the bulk of the new items will be in the stores. Although Europe is receiving special attention on early activation, the "AAFES Budget Special" program is also being implemented at other exchange stores worldwide.

The new lower priced merchandise will be prominently featured and identified. Exchange customers are advised to watch their local base and post publications and U.S. Forces radio and TV for details on the new "AAFES Budget Special" program. (AAFES)

Nearest Convenient Shopping to Fort Benning

With the traffic swarls, high cost of gas and the time factor in our fast pace world in mind, our Bayonet reporter has interviewed the Oakland Park Merchants. The questions were centered around these prevelant problems and if they had any effect on the shopping habits of the local residents. We were met by the cordial group of shop owners who were quite receptive in discussing these factors with us.

Some points of interest are as follows - We found that three merchants were retired military, pursuing there second careers. Mr. Williams owner of Kolertex, a silk screening and art shop invites everyone to brouse around. It's a unique and interesting store. Bill King of Pizza on Call, a retired Army officer, refers to his restaurant with pride. "The Best Pizza and Italian Food In Town," he says.

We also learned that Travis Garner of Garner's T.V. has the distinction of being one of the most outstanding T.V. dealers in the state of Georgia. His story was published in various news articles associated with the appliance industry. A success story beginning when as a young man. He had been hired by the previous owner to sweep the floors and run errands. When questioning Mr. Garner, he modestly attributed success with his ability to give good service and selling of such good products as R.C.A. and Zenith.

Ben Cobb of Ben's Appl. is the largest whirlpool dealer in Columbus, and also a successful GE dealer. He referred to good serivce, an old reliable store, and good pricing that has built his reputation.

Eddie Clodfelter of Beckers Uniforms. His store has become synonamous with military uniforms and professional tailoring in Columbus for 25 years.

"The Patch Shop" owned by Art Chris is also military oriented offering Alterations of all kinds.

Frank Corley, owner of Snowhite Cleaners has given dedicated cleaning services for many years at the same location on Oakland Park.

The largest store in the Shopping Center is the Piggly Wiggly. The owner Weaver Jordan is presently expanding another department to meet the ever increasing need for catering services and your banking needs.

A-BO-K Florist owned by James L. Phillips enterprise in the floral business is second to none. Offers delivery service to Frot Benning-Phenix City and Columbus.

Oh yes - the John Elliot Blood Bank - if short on cash - sell a pint.

Crieria Insur and Company offers stateside and overseas Auto Insurance and specializes in covering military personnel.

Plain Value offering a variety of good s from clothing to pots and pans.

Davis Drugs offering your complete prescription needs and a variety of medical related items.

There is other stores we've failed to mention. But wouldn't you say there is a variety and convenience to shoppers. These merchants are pursuing the American Dream and all of them we interviewed have a close association with their customers.

The army brat: A product of a military society

By Bev Lockhart

The army brat — a product of the society from which they've been born and bred. A product of a military society. Do they like it? Most say, "Yes, but . . ."

There are advantages and disadvantages to every way of life. The army brat's way of life is not exempt. Growing up with a father — or mother — who is constantly being transferred to another location brings about a bevy of complications.

When two people meet one another one of the first questions that pops up is, "Where are you from?" The most likely answer to come from an army brat's lips is "Nowhere," although most will offer where they were born or the last place they lived. Kurt Andree, a junior at Spencer High School offers this answer when asked the inevitable question: "I was born in Japan, my parents are from Baltimore, and we have a house in Florida, but I'm currently living in Columbus."

The army brat makes friends just as easiliy as others, maybe even easier. Brats seem to find it easier to make friends with other dependents. The fact that both of them have a parent (or parents) in the service makes it easier for them to relate to one another.

There is always that subconscious fear that before too long they will be PCSing and the friendship that took so long to develop will dissolve — or, at best, become a pen pal relationship.

The military ID card and the benefits that accompany it are also factors in friendships. Civilian children can't accompany dependents when they go shopping at the PX, nor are they allowed to use post facilities such as the gymnasiums, swimming pools and the Dependent Youth Activities (DYA) Center. This limits the brat's associations and friendships to members of the military community somewhat.

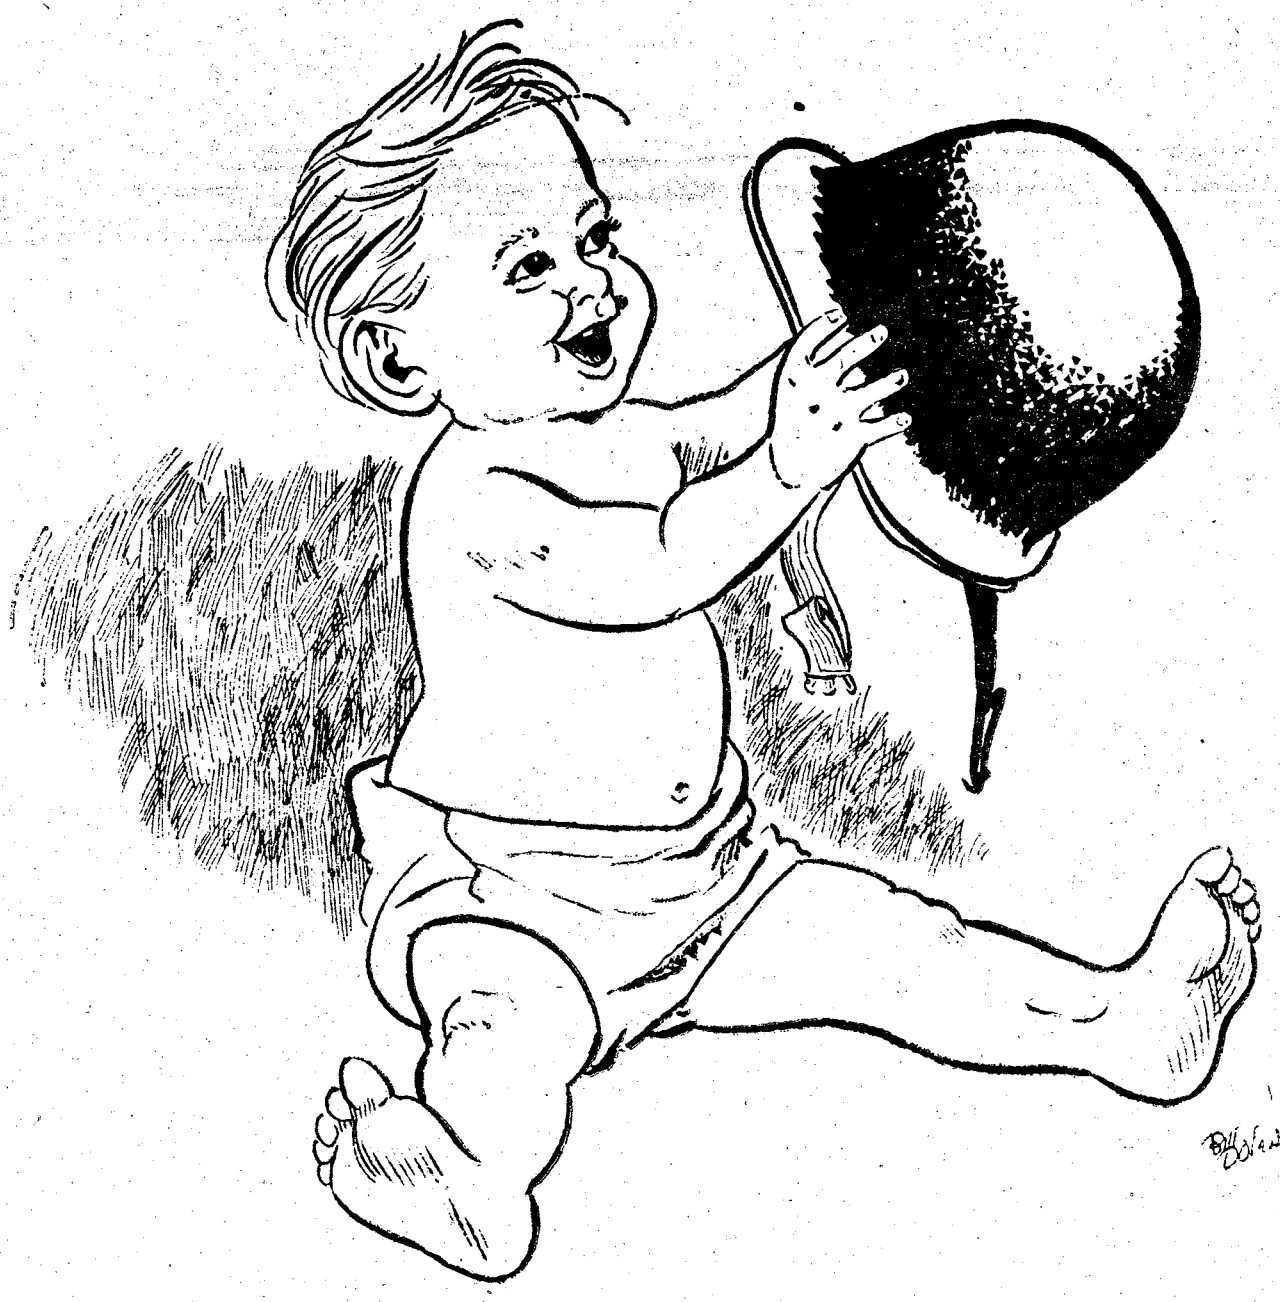
Even when the child's majority of friends are also dependents, there is always that subconscious fear that before too long one of their parents will be PCSing and the friendship that took so long to develop will dissolve — or, at best, become a pen pal relationship. As Nancy Hendricks, a senior at Spencer who's father is a retired master sergeant pointed out, "At first you write to about five or six friends you hung around with the most. Gradually it ends up to where there's only one close friend out of that whole bunch with whom you keep in touch." She went on to say, "Once in awhile you'll run into a friend whose dad is stationed at the same post you're at and you get a chance to renew your friendship. Sometimes you'll run into someone who just came from a post you were at and you talk about mutual friends — get the update on what's going on in their lives."

Friendship isn't the only thing brats have to worry about. Constantly changing schools can adversely affect their grades, among other things.

According to Theresa Murray, a senior at Baker High School, "When I first get to a new school I really mess up. It takes me awhile to get used to the new system, new teachers, new regulations, and new friends. But after awhile I get settled into it and my grades are right back up to where I want them to be."

Most of the high school aged dependents who have been to Germany mentioned the higher quality of education there compared to the states — and especially the South. They come back to the CONUS with plenty of credits in academics, but few elective credits, according to Baker Guidance Director Ms. Corale Rowell.

Moving around makes it harder to establish themselves in competitive sports, too, according to Andree. Elaborating, he said, "If a guy is really good in football, he really has to work hard to adjust to the different coaches. He might establish his reputation as the best quarterback in his school's conference, but when he goes to another school he's got to prove himself all over again. It can really be tough on a guy emotionally, not to mention physically."



Although dependents find job opportunities scarce, they don't have to worry about the family breadwinner being laid off.

The opportunity to travel does have its advantages, though. Most brats who have been overseas picked up a second language, especially those who have been to Germany. Many of them lived on the economy (due to the shortage of government quarters and attended school on the economy). Learning the language is not only almost always required; it can definitely be an advantage, too.

When it comes time to return to the states, as Murray put it, "We were excited to go to Germany, but we were excited to be coming home, too, when Dad's tour was over."

The disadvantage travel offers is slight. Young people with little or no work experience have a hard enough time finding jobs without the lifestyle of following their parents around the world working against them. Although dependents find job opportunities scarce, they don't have to worry about the family breadwinner being laid off.

The Civilian Personnel Office, Bldg 35, offers summer employment to dependents and other youths, according to Mrs. Ann Grimes, Recruiting and Placement. Jobs include positions as janitors, lifeguards, water safety instructors, clerk typists, and gardeners. The wage rate for all youths employed in the program is $2.65 an hour and all young people between the ages of 16 and 21 residing in the community area of Benning with a parent or guardian are eligible for participation in the program.

Where do most dependents congregate? Some like to go to the bowling alley, but because of the harassment they (mostly girls) receive from GIs, they don't make a habit of it. One of the most popular places on post, along with the craft shop, gyms and movie theaters, is the Youth Activities Center (YAC).

DYA became an appropriated fund activity of Army Recreation Services in March, 1968. Although designed to meet the physical and mental needs of army youth, DYA also supports the service by providing a well supervised program for dependents. Parties, dances, sports activities, and game nights, along with a place to just "hang out" and meet friends are just a handful of opportunities YACs provide.

"Whenever I get in trouble and my parents ground me, it's usually from going to the YAC," relates one 8th grade girl. "They know that hurts me the most."

Discipline is synonymous with the military, so most people expect military fathers to be more strict with their children than civilian fathers. Not always so, according to most brats. "My girlfriend's dad is a store manager and she's on restriction more in a year than I've been in my whole life," said an 8th grader at Faith who's father is a colonel.

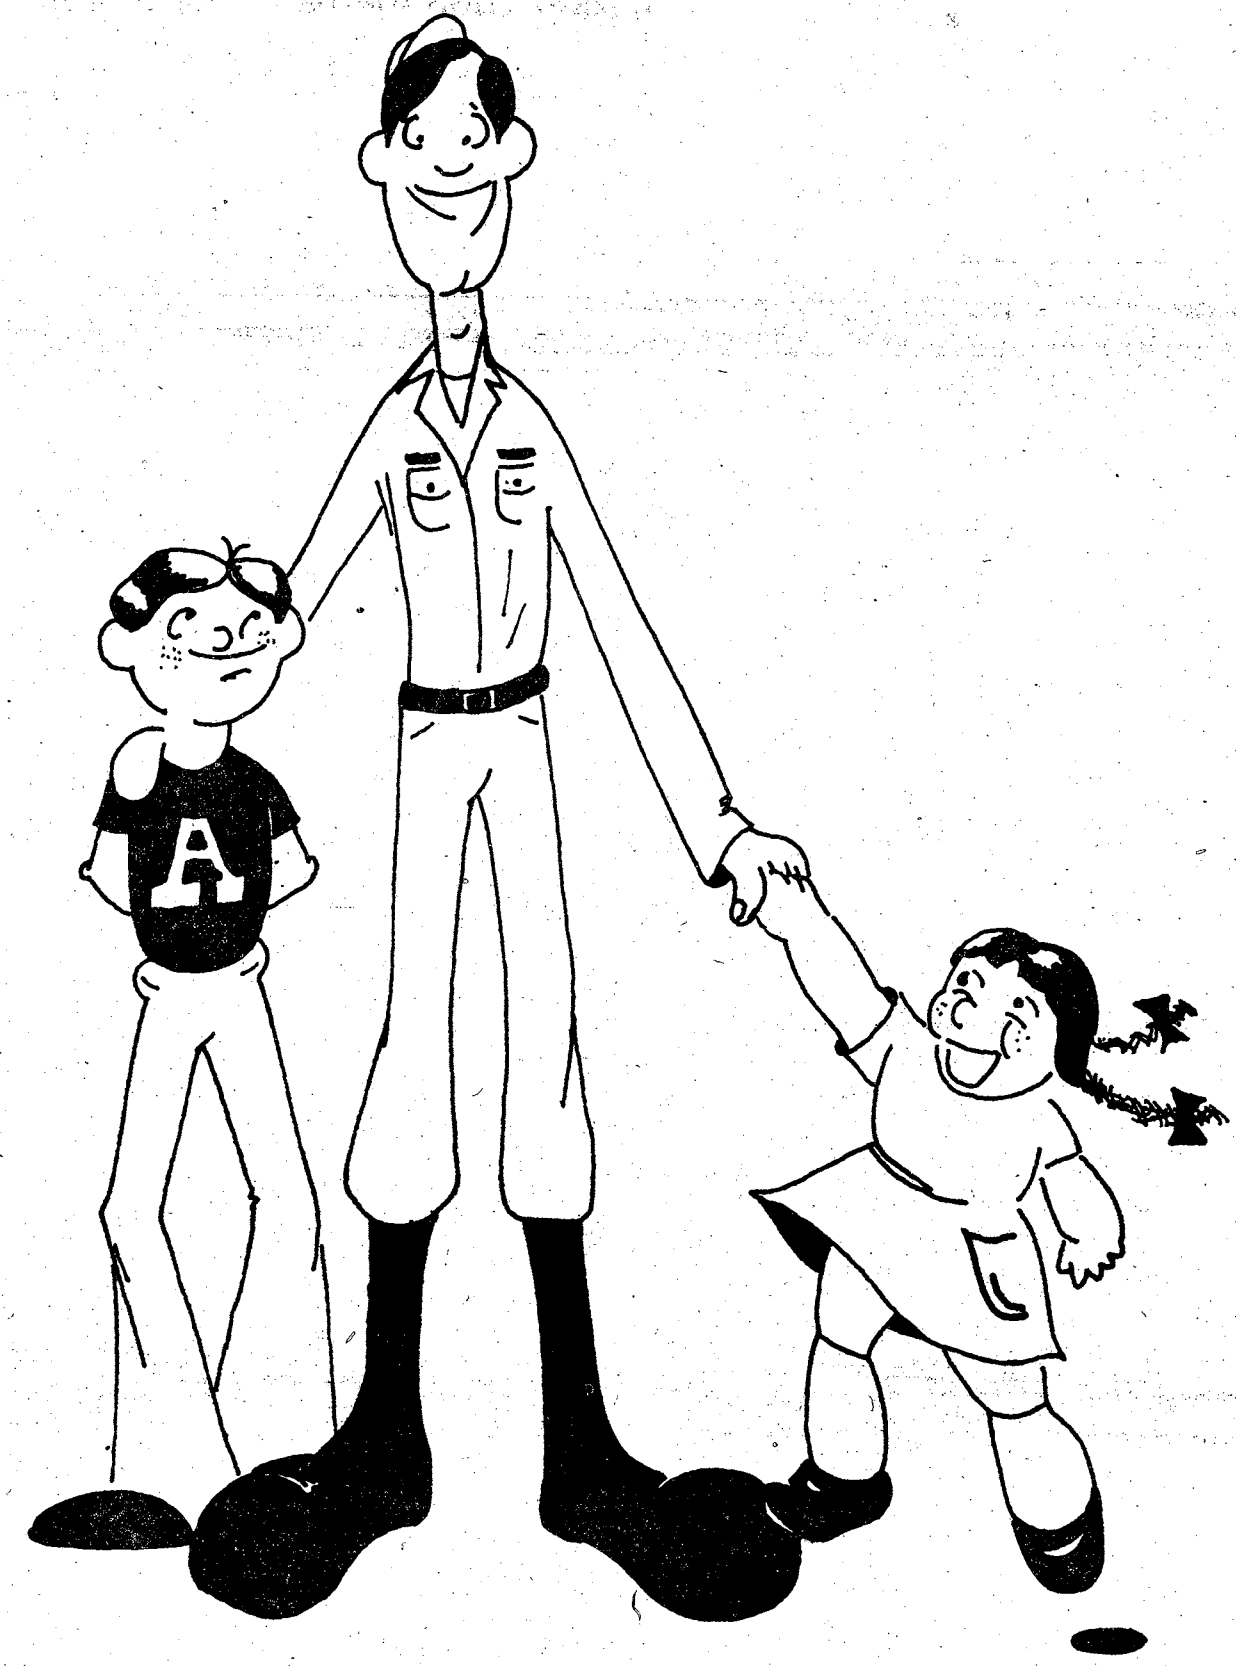
Sometimes when Dad's away on TDY or an unaccompanied tour, the family doesn't run so smoothly at first, especially when Dad is the primary disciplinarian, thinks a 6th grade Faith student.

The juvenile delinquency problem at Benning is slightly lower than the national average with most offenses consisting of property damage and theft. Shoplifting has dropped off this year, according to Sp5 Robert E. Cline, Juvenile Division, Provost Marshal's Office. (PMO). Last year there ware 61 cases of shoplifting involving juvenile dependents on Benning; this year there have only been three.

"We try to make ourselves very visible in locations where dependents congregate — the bowling alley, the YAC — places like that. I feel we have a good rapport with the kids," says Cline.

Not all army brats feel that way, though. Some feel the MPs main function is to harass them. One boy was approached by MPs at a recent dance. The MPs told him they wanted to search his van. Although they didn't find anything illegal, they told the boy to leave the dance.

If the MPs had found something, the case would have been referred to a juvenile court in Muscogee or Chattahoochee counties in Georgia, or Russell County in Alabama, depending on where the child resided. The court would have the option to adjust the case back to Fort Benning or assume jurisdiction and process it in court. If the case were adjusted back to the PMO, it would be forwarded to the Adolescent Advisory Council, a post community-based organization made up of all helping agencies on post. The 14 members, made up of both military and civilian personnel, include: the Provost Marshall, USAIC Chaplain, Staff Judge Advocate, Dependent Schools Officer, Chief of Army Community Services, Chief of Social Work Services, Muscogee County Juvenile Court, Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties Department of Family and Child Services, the post command sergeant major, Chief Community Health Nurse, Chief of Alcohol and Drug Control Office, and Chief of the PMO Juvenile Division.



The council meets once a month to discuss cases. Most cases are placed on a form of probation termed Voluntary Police Supervision for 30 to 90 days. Not only are there general conditions of probation, but special conditions are also set after a consultation with the juvenile's parents. If the child was involved in a shoplifting incident, for instance, the council might set a curfew and request the offender to write a two to four page paper on shoplifting and why he or she shouldn't do it.

A common misconception is that a parent's career is affected when his or her child gets in trouble. This isn't always true, according to Cline, unless the child becomes a real problem. Improper supervision on the parent's part could result in the child being barred from post, the families' quarters being terminated, and in extreme cases, the child being removed from the home.

Mrs. Fleda Glenn and Mr. Bill Abrahamson, counselors at Faith, feel military dependents are better adjusted than civilian children. "If there is a problem with a child," Abrahamson believes, "it's because the child is an adolescent and, like most adolescents, is having developmental problems — not necessarily because one of his parents is in the military."

Both counselors agreed army brats adjust more easily and learn how to cope with situations quicker because they grow up in a military structure. Glenn sums it up saying, "They're unique."

The organization and control of a military society establish order and give control to the lives of its youth at a time of life when disorder and lack of direction are the rule rather than the exception.

They're also used to being new students since they move around more often than most civilian kids, although as Glenn points out, "Americans are on the move more now than ever before so the problems a child may develop because of the insecurities of moving to a new place aren't restricted to the military dependent."

The mobility of army families generally gives its offspring more experiences than the average child and most brats have less problems coping than civilian children.

In his book, Childhood and Society, E. Erikson emphasizes that, "Adolescence is typically regarded as a time of great turmoil and problems of identity." Adolescence is not an easy stage of life in any society.

The organization and control of a military society establish order and give control to the lives of its youth at a time of life when disorder and lack of direction are the rule rather than the exception. The mobility of army families generally gives its offspring more experiences than the average child and most brats have less problems coping than civilian children.

Dr. Frank Pederson, a psychologist with the Child Research Branch of the National Institute of Mental Health, studied groups of military dependents and found in cases where deep emotional disturbances occured, the parent's attitude towards army life and the frequent moves accompanying it were the major cause. In cases where mothers thought moving was a good experience for her children and the parents were content with army life he found dependents to be well adjusted.

Perhaps the noted anthropologist Margaret Mead said it best in her book, Technologies Change and Child Development:

"A generation (reared to expect change could regard change not as a feared catastrophe, but as a privileged human environment in which they would continue growing all their lives, instead of settling into the narrow vistas of a world which achieves stability by unfitting its children to live in any but one way."

Military brats are reared to expect change. Would most army brats consider joining the service themselves? Tom Baker, a senior at Baker High School says he's thinking about college ROTC program, but fellow student Ronald Dancy says it would be a last resort. I guess it all depends on the individual.

Wilson School student reports fire hazard

While he and a friend were playing on a creek bank on post in February, a student at Wilson School noticed the water had a strange black color. They explored upstream and discovered oil was being dumped into the creek from a drain.

So with the lessons of the school's Fire Prevention Week in mind, Jeffrey Toth told his mother about the oil and she called the post Fire Department.

When the department investigated, they found the situation was very serious. Someone had indeed been dumping oil, creating a fire hazard. Fire authorities are still trying to determine the source of the oil, which has reappeared once after the department cleaned it up the first time.

For his action in reporting the hazard, Jeffrey received a letter of commendation from Col. Robert J. Corley, Director of Facilities Engineering, who is also the installations Fire Marshal.

Fire Chief Samuel Morgan gave Jeffrey a tour of the station, a ride on a fire truck and made him an honorary Ft. Benning Fireman. Morgan and Corley commended the boy for his concern for the safety of life and property and his awareness of fire prevention.

Jeffrey is the son of SFC and Mrs. George Toth. Toth is assigned to HHC, 197th Inf. Bde.

Air conditioning standards set

Now that the air conditioning season has officially begun, occupants of family housing should make the necessary changes to their systems for summer oparation.

Filters should be checked and cleaned or replaced, if necessary. New filters are available on a direct exchange basis at the family housing issue point, Warehouse 466, on Edwards street. Requests for repairs should be submitted by phone, 545-5181.

The following temperature standards will be placed in effect whenever the interior space temperature exceeds the standard. These temperatures are considered minimums and any temperature above the standard is permissible if it is consistent with health and mission accomplishment:

75 degrees F: Operating, delivery and recovery rooms; special treatment and diagnostic wards; clinics, physical examination and similar facilities.

78 degrees F: Family housing, troop housing and similar living quarters.

80 degrees F: Any administrative space; other hospital wards, corridors, waiting rooms, laboratories or similar support facilities; all other facilities not specified above.

Air conditioning authorized for special work or equipment requirements will be operated at the maximum temperature specified by the manufacturer or code or at the maximum standard above, whichever is lower. Space temperatures will be read by thermometers and are not necessarily the same as thermostat settings.

For VA Eligibility

Upgraded discharges to be reviewed

The Department of Defense (DoD) has completed initial actions to begin review of certain discharges as required by Public Law (PL) 95-126, enacted October 8, 1977. In that law, the congress required review of certain administrative discharges which had been upgraded to higher categories. The review is to determine eligibility for Veterans Administration (VA) benefits.

Under the law, a new review is required to be made of the approximately 20,000 discharges upgraded under President Ford's directive of January, 1977 and the special discharge review program announced in April 1977, both of which contained provisions requiring discharge review boards to grant an upgrade under certain circumstances. Individuals concerned have been advised this re-review will be undertaken.

Although discharge upgrades (from undesirable to general) under either of these special programs remain valid, eligibility for veterans benefits may be affected. Under provisions of PL 95-126, eligibility for veterans benefits for individuals not otherwise eligible who received upgraded discharges will terminate this month, unless the upgrade is reaffirmed by a discharge review board using the uniform standards and procedures published on March 31, 1978. The discharges of those individuals who are currently receiving VA benefits as a result of upgrades from the special programs will be given priority consideration.

Those whose discharges are not confirmed by the boards will be given a second opportunity for further consideration of their cases. The military services have until October 8, 1978 to complete this re-review project.

As required by law, the uniform standards and procedures have been carefully analyzed to ensure that they do not include any criteria that would automatically grant or deny an upgrade. In each case, consideration must be given to all relevant factors. The object of the review is to determine the propriety and equity of the discharge.

A discharge is considered proper unless there was prejudicial error at the time of the discharge. A discharge may also be found to be improper if the military service of the applicant made a policy change which has been expressly made retroactive to the type of discharge under consideration.

In addition to the requirement for re-review, PL 95-126 also provides that for a period for not less than one year (extended by DoD until January 1980), any individual who was discharged administratively from the services under conditions other than honorable may request a review of that discharge under the newly published standards. This provision for review is without regard to the normal 15-year period in which such applications must be made. Applications for such reviews may be made on Department of Defense Form 293. This form is available at military installations, VA offices, or veterans service organizations.

In the event an individual believes he or she may be affected and has not received a letter concerning the re-review of his or her specific case, contact should be made with the discharge review board at this address: CO, USARCPAC, 9700 Page Blvd., St. Louis, MO 63132. (ARNEWS)

Benning woman breaks tradition by winning interservice title

Kimberly Dyer of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, became the first woman to win an Interservice Pistol Championship last weekend as she defeated a field of some of the top military competitors in matches held here April 11-16.

Although narrowly winning by a one point margin, Dyer put together individual scores in the Standard Pistol Match of 574, 581 and 582 points for a total of 1,737 to defeat Army Reservist Jerry Wilder of Remington, Ind. who finished with 1,736 points. Third place went to Michael Bonafede, USMC who scored 1,732.

Dyer is also the present Women's National Pistol Champion and current national record holder set in 1977.

In other pistol competition, Emil Heugatter, also of the Marksmanship Unit, came from behind to win the Center Fire Pistol competition. Heugatter finished with 1,769 points to defeat teammate Charles McCowan by one point at 1,768. James Lenardson, Army National Guard, rounded out the top three places with 1,766 points.

On the shotgun ranges, it took a three way shoot-off to determine the Interservice Skeet Champion with Matt Dryke of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, winning the title in his first interservice championship. Dryke's teammate Joseph Clemmons, the present world record holder, and Carl Poston, an Army Reservist, all ended with identical scores of 293 birds each after the final round on Sunday. In a dramatic 25 bird shoot-off, Clemmons dropped out early as he broke 24 birds, while Dryke and Poston had rounds of 25. In the second shoot-off Poston broke 24, as the native of Washington state cleanly broke his second round of 25. The final standings were Dryke first, Poston second and Clemmons third.

In team competition, U.S. Army Gold and Blue teams finished first and second with scores of 763 and 734, while the U.S. Air Force finished third at 722.

Funding affects Army shooters

The Army has welcomed news that the U.S. Olympic Committee has increased funding for the development and training of civilian Olympic shooting competitors, even though the move will mean stiffer competition for the U.S. Army Shooting Team.

The Army Team officially known as the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit stationed at Benning, has earned hundreds of military, national and international honors since its establishment 22 years ago. Among the awards are seven Olympic gold medals won in the 1964, 1968, 1972 and 1976 Olympic Games.

The U.S. Olympic Committee has increased funding for the different shooting disciplines from $6,000 to $48,000 this year. The National Rifle Association (NRA) has revealed plans to increase training of civilian shooters with the additional funds.

A spokesman for the Army Marksmanship Unit said "We welcome the interest by the USOC and the NRA because we are relatively weak in some of the shooting disciplines compared to several of the eastern European countries. The United States has needed a program like this for some time to create more competition and hopefully to produce a stronger U.S. team for future Olympic and other major international competitions and that's great. It will, of course, force our shooters to train that much harder, but that's what competition is all about."

The AMU will have plenty of opportunities to brush up on competition before the 1980 summer Olympics in Moscow. Between April and September of this year, they are scheduled to compete in at least three international and several national championship matches. In addition to it's heavy competitive schedule, the AMU also conducts hundreds of marksmanship clinics and assistance each year for active Army, ROTC, law enforcement and other civilian organizations.

Soldier runs to meet his goals

By Mike Daigle

Running to meet his goals is what Sp4 Thomas Coniglio's, 72nd Engr Co, 197th Inf Bde, life is all about.

The All-Army team member for the past two years has been running since he was 12-years-old and one day hopes to compete in the Olympic games.

"Our high school didn't have a freshman football team so I decided to go out for the cross country team. At the time, I wasn't even sure what cross country consisted of," Coniglio said. "When I beat all the seniors on the team I knew I had a natural God-given talent for running and I should use that talent," he explained.

From the first race Coniglio ran in and won he has progressed to be one of the Army's top runners. In the recent Ft. Bragg All-American Marathon Coniglio came in third in a 26-mile run with a time of two hours and 44 minutes. In another recent marathon, the first such race held in Columbus, Coniglio placed with a time of two hours and 40 minutes, running against 400 other runners.

Long distance runners usually don't hit their peak until they reach about 28 years-of-age. Coniglio is 24-years-old and runs 18 miles a day. "I run in all types of weather, every day, 365 days a year," he noted. Coniglio doesn't drink or smoke because he feels if a person is serious about a sport he should be willing to make small sacrifices.

Coniglio left recently for San Francisco to qualify for this year's All-Army Track Team and this summer he will be competing in Finland against military teams from other countries. He hopes to be in good enough shape to make the U. S. Olympic Team and compete in the 1980 Olympic games in Moscow.

What makes Coniglio run? The thrill of winning is only part of the story. "God has given me a talent and I'm using it as best I can," he concluded.

Tom Coniglio pulls ahead of an opponent during a recent race at Troy State University at Dublin, Ga. Coniglio placed fifth in this race, beating competitors from all over the state.

Astros take win on Benning field

Benning baseball fans were treated to a professional game Sunday on Gowdy Field as the Columbus Astros took a narrow 2-1 win over the Montgomery Rebels.

The Astros have 72 home games scheduled for the 1978 season and are scheduled to play at Gowdy Field again on May 14.

AUSA Defense report

It is a Washington truism that two government statisticians can take the same set of numbers and produce totally divergent analyses depending on what they think their bosses want to prove. This is no more apparent than in various parts of the proposed FY Department of Defense Budget.

We find, for example, an administration claim that the Army's strength at the end of FY'79 will be just 2,000 less than the 1978 level. In truth that number is more than 13,000 below the strength authorized by Congress for the end of FY'78 and reflects both the Army's difficulty in recruiting and an unannounced directive from the administration to shrink the size of the force on board when FY'78 comes to a close.

A similar numbers game is played in relation to the strength of the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve. Both these forces are considerably understrength and their numbers are continuing to slide in spite of the concerted efforts of their commanders to improve recruiting and retention. But the proposed FY'79 budget blithely assigns both groups an increase in strength, with accompanying verbiage indicating confidence that the down trend will reverse itself and that the addition of a slightly larger recruiting force will accomplish a turn-around.

Some things have happened behind the scenes, however, that cast doubt on the administration's true intentions. A $5 million test of a new incentive program to encourage reenlistment in the reserves did not get under way until several months after Congress appropriated the money and now the Department of Defense has told the Army it cannot spend more than half that amount in the current fiscal year. The shortfall in National Guard strength resulted in a "saving" in the personnel account of about $61 million that, by law, could have been reprogrammed into recruiting incentives but will simply be turned back into the general fund.

Then, as if this were not enough, the Defense Department cut the National Guard's allocation of recruiter man-days by 33,000. The reason? The department concluded that the Guard's lower strength did not justify the full amount of recruiting effort.

This sort of tortured reasoning is one of the most important reasons why the Total Army—the Active force backed up by hopefully well-prepared Guardsmen and Reserves—is in trouble. Simply assigning the reserves an increased manpower goal without concurrently supplying the tools to build an improved recruiting and retention program is self-defeating. The administration may find solace in these concocted figures but the managers of the Total Army will find little but frustration.

Red Cross is counting on you.

Going hiking? Plan trip first

With the increased interest in physical fitness, backpacking is becoming more popular each year. It's a fun thing to do but it does require some pre-planning and a general knowledge of what you might expect on the trail.

Before starting out on a backpacking trip plan your travel route. Get official maps of the area if available. In your planning, allow plenty of time to reach your campsite — extra time means extra safety.

Clothing and equipment are also important in your planning. Wear sturdy shoes or boots and wear clothing which would be suitable should you encounter bad weather. Always carry matches in a waterproof container, maps, a compass and a knife. Take food and shelter to meet your needs but don't overload your packs. Most important, tell someone where you are going and when you expect to return.

Once you are on the trail, keep your group together — don't let anyone lag behind. Traveling in darkness can be dangerous so always make camp before dark.

If you get lost, try to stay calm. Try to remember mountains, trails, streams and other points of reference. Decide whether to stay put or to push on. Stay put if you are injured or nearing exhaustion — if the terrain is rugged — if nightfall or bad weather is imminent — if shelter is available — or if you know someone will be looking for you soon. If you decide to stay put, find or make the best shelter possible and build a signal fire. If you are still on the trail don't go far from it without leaving a marker to show searchers which way you went.

If your decision is to push on, make sure you are still strong enough. Go slowly and plan your route. If you stay lost, follow a drainage downstream since in most areas this will bring you to a trail or road which you can follow until you reach help.

Building a safe camp fire is a very important part of your backpacking trip. Select a site on level ground sheltered from high wind and away from heavy brush, log, tree trunks, overhanging branches, and other fuel. Keep your fire small and never leave it unattended. When you break camp, stay with your fire until it is out — DEAD OUT.

Backpacking can be a great sport if you remember to—

- Plan your route.
- Carry essential equipment.
- Tell someone where you're going.
- Be observant on the trail.
- Keep your fire safe.
- If you get lost — stay calm. (TNS)

VA: New premium plan saves money

More than 30,000 veterans recently discovered a better way to pay their GI life insurance premiums. Thanks to a direct mail notice from the Veterans Administration, (VA) they've changed to other than a monthly mode of payment — at a savings to themselves and VA.

Quarterly, semi-annual or annual payments offer advantages over the monthly plan, according to VA's promotional flyer which has reached some 500,000 policyholders. Another one half million will get the note before the one year campaign ends in August, 1978.

The notice highlights an advanced payment discount, reduced risk of lapse and smaller postage charges for those who elect a less frequent payment schedule.

On the anniversary date of their individual policies, veterans get the flyer as an enclosure to a twelve month supply of payment coupons and envelopes.

If positive response to the program continues, the preparation, handling and mailing costs of the monthly billing packets will be reduced.

Symposium draws nation's leaders

Approximately 500 military and industrial leaders from across the nation gathered at Ft. Benning early this week to attend a symposium on "Future Army Operational Requirements for 1985 through 1990."

Army Chief of Staff Walter T. Kerwin was keynote speaker for the event, which was sponsored by the Association of the United States Army (AUSA).

Attendees had the opportunity to hear high Army officials speak on a number of classified subjects concerning military concepts, doctrine, tactics and requirements in the 1980s.

They also were given the chance to view numerous military and civilian displays of military equipment, set up in Infantry Hall, in the building's west parking lot and on Gardner Field.

The event concluded Tuesday afternoon with a combined arms live fire exercise conducted by elements of the 197th Inf Bde.

MajGen. William J. Livsey, post commander, stated he was extremely pleased overall with the symposium, commenting that "its success reflected the careful planning and hard work that went into it."

He added, "I expect both the Army and industry will benefit greatly from the interchange of ideas and dialogue that went on during the three days."

This was the 34th symposium sponsored by AUSA since 1957 and the fifth to be held here.

Salisbury Fair opens tomorrow

One of the opening events of Columbus, Georgia's Sesquicentennial celebration, the Historic Columbus Foundation's Candlelight Tour of Homes today will elegantly set the stage for the fun-filled Salisbury Fair and Historic Homes Tour which follows tomorrow and Sunday. The Candlelight Tour tonight will feature six historic landmarks and traditional homes. A reception during tour hours will be held at the Foundation's Rankin House at 1440 2nd Ave.

The Salisbury Fair, which is a downtown country fair, takes place in Salisbury Park on the lower Broadway median between 4th and 9th streets. This historic area of Columbus makes a perfect setting for relaxed family fun. The area is an eye-catcher with its charming houses and brick-paved streets. Flowering dogwood trees enhance it all.

Highlights of the Fair include an all-new Carnival section, Magic Show, Train Ride and Junk Car Beat. There will be special exhibits and a Corps of Engineers paddlewheel boat, the U.S. Snagboat Montgomery, will be at the City Docks on the Chattahoochee River for visitors to enjoy. Artisans and craftsmen will be demonstrating their skills and selling their wares — copper tooling, decoupage, hand-painted china, wooden children's swings are only a sampling of the wide variety to be present.

Nine private homes and 11 other structures will be opened to the public on the Historic Homes Tour. Visitors will find this an easy walking tour with something of interest for all ages.

An adult art show will be held in conjunction with the Fair with the Historic Columbus Foundation and Foundation art patrons offering cash awards; professional artists and non-professional artists will be judged in separate divisions. All art work will be for sale.

Legal Assistance offers a variety of services

By Betty Zimmerman

Many military personnel have misconceptions or lack of knowledge concerning services available at the Legal Assistance Section of the Staff Judge Advocate (SJA) office.

An example is in today's "Glad you asked" column. PFC Thomas J. Banachoicz is of the opinion legal assistance can help him with an Article 15 or court-martial. The Chief of Legal Assistance, Capt. Kathryn Forrester, stated, "Our office does not render advice on criminal, military justice or administrative matters. There are other branches of SJA that handle these areas." She went on to explain their mission in detail.

First — Who is entitled to legal assistance? Active duty military personnel of all services, their dependents, and retired military personnel of all services and their dependents, other than in connection with private business activities, are entitled to assistance.

Second — Where do you go for legal assistance? The Legal Assistance Section is located in Bldg 5, Rm 12, on main post, at the corner of Sigerfoos Road and Vibbert Avenue. Appointments are necessary for all services except powers of attorney or notarizations. Call 545-3281, 3282.

Third — What legal services are available? Advice and assistance (but no appearances or representation in court) on matters concerning personal problems of a civil nature such as marriage, divorce, adoption, civil damage actions, insurance, indebtedness, contracts, paternity actions, non-support, repossessions, leases, changing names, simple wills without trusts, notarized papers, powers of attorney, tax matters and applications for certificates of citizenship and naturalization are all available.

Fourth — What specific services are not available? These: representation in court, advice on military justice or administrative matters, such as interpretation of regulations, problems with finance or personnel, household goods claims, malpractice suits or other claims against the government.

Fifth — How large is the legal assistance office staff? Three attorneys, three military enlisted legal clerks and one civilian legal clerk make up the staff.

March was an unusually active month for two reasons, one was due to ad valorem certificates for automobile taxes and the other was preparation of wills for personnel going to Alaska for training.

Sixth — Does legal assistance refer you to a civilian lawyer if necessary?

No specific lawyer is recommended but the Columbus Lawyers' Club has established a free advice and referral program through legal assistance and appointments are available on Wednesdays at Bldg 5.

One additional thing Capt. Forrester would like to project is that prevention of a legal problem is always preferable to a dispute. Do not hesitate to seek advice before you sign a contract, lease, sales agreement or whatever.

Soldiers completing normal Ranger tours of 18 to 24 months will receive overseas area assignment preferences, with guaranteed homebase assignments back to their previous Ranger battalions. Volunteers who are now serving overseas must have completed at least five sixths of their tour before they are eligible for training and reassignment.

Special Forces volunteers should read Chapter 12, and Ranger volunteers should read Chapter 18, of AR 614-200 for assignment qualifications. Assignment requests should be forwarded through local personnel offices.

11B vision waiver extended

The Department of the Army has indefinitely extended waivers available to recruits enlisting in Military Occupational Speciality 11B who have correctable distant vision problems, officials said last week.

A decision to allow the waiver policy to continue, without quotas, was reached after a 14-month test that ended last year. The test determined, according to officials, that soldiers with sight problems, correctable to at least 20/20 in one eye and 20/100 in the second eye, show no significant difference in performance than soldiers without vision waivers.

During the test period, 22 percent of all 118 enlistments received the waiver. (ARNEWS)

SGM of the Week is there for you

By Julie Casey

Possibly somewhere in your memories you may be able to recall seeing NCO, a little gray at the temples, walk into the barracks. He may have asked a few questions, conversed with a few soldiers or inspected the barracks to make sure everything was squared away. This gentleman could have been the Sergeant Major of the Week.

Each week one of the sergeants major assigned to the Infantry Center takes this duty in conjunction with his regular duties.

In a recent rap session between representatives of major commands and the Training and Doctrine Command, (TRADOC), Inspector General here on post, it was discovered that very few people knew about this program.

According to Post CSM Vincent Roegiers, the Sergeant Major of the Week is an extention of the Commanding General. This sergeant major is the man to turn to if you haven't been able to get a problem resolved or some support is required.

"It was the desire of the CG to insure that problem areas concerning Ft. Benning in general be searched out and resolved," commented Roegiers. "Since this program has been in existence, (it was started in early 1975), I have noticed a remarkable change. It has worked well."

He also wanted to make it perfectly clear that the Sergeant Major of the Week, in no way is used to usurp or undermine the commander's prerogative, but to assist in taking care of the troops.

At the end of each week a detailed report is written about the findings of the sergeant major.

"This report is read by the Commanding General in detail," Roegiers emphasized. "Any deficiences found by the sergeant major are sent back through the NCO chain of communication, by myself, through their units or directorates. It is then required for them to report back to me the corrective action taken, if in fact appropriate."

Post CSM discusses the duties of the Sergeant Major of the Week.

As an example he said, they will rap with people at night. The sergeant major wants to know what soldiers dislike and like about Ft. Benning. Those types of things are also written into the report for the Commanding General to see.

"We are primarily seeking the total concern of our soldiers on this post. This article is being published to let the soldiers of the post know that their leaders are concerned about their welfare, their duties and short falls that may exist to improve and enhance their moral. To sum it up, I would say that it is a positive check to make sure your stay here on Ft. Benning is as pleasant as possible," he commented.

Many soldiers and even the Field Officer of the Day (FOD) are surprised to find that the sergeants major of the installation are concerned enough to start this program. The plan came about because sergeants major of this post requested it, according to Roegiers.

The Sergeant Major of the Week will help any soldier or dependent no matter what the problem.

"In essence, the sergeant major gives the full attention of the chain of communication," Roegiers reminded.

According to Roegiers, the Sergeant Major of the Week has free rein of the post. After coordinating with the FOD, the sergeant major is there to act as a positive check for the soldiers. He makes a regular check of the PX and the commissary facilities. He monitors the post bus systems to insure that the buses are running on schedule.

"We also make a weekly check of the enlisted club systems. We check for cleanliness and the attitudes of the people in the club, how they treat patrons. I feel that when a soldier walks into one of the clubs here on post, he should be treated just as if he walked into a club down town," Roegiers expressed.

The sergeant major also spends one night a week with the Columbus Police Department.

"We go to the various places the soldiers frequent to insure that the soldiers' conduct is what it should be to enhance proper community relations," he said.

He also makes a tour of the residential areas of the post.

"A lot of times we will talk to the residents to see how things are going and if they are satisfied," Roegiers explained.

When asked what would happen if a soldier went to the sergeant major of the week with a problem, he replied, "We would find out his unit and if he has gone through his chain of command. If he hasn't we are going to send him right back through. If he has, we will direct him to the Staff Judge Advocate, the Inspector General, we may direct dependents to Army Emergency Relief (AER), the Red Cross of whatever. It is assured that action will be taken," explained Roegiers.

Deficiencies are not the only things that go into the reports, but also how soldiers feel about their units.

"When I had duty, I inspected this one barracks and was totally impressed. The CQ area was squared away and the barracks were excellent. There were only a few minor problems and those I merely passed on to the company first sergeant."

"Pretty soon the soldiers knew who I was and they came together like the gathering of the clan. They were all talking about how great they thought their unit was as opposed to other units. It was obvious that they had good morale and motivation," he added.

"We look at almost everything on post concerning people. I don't want to draw on the idea that we are ignoring officers, because we're not. Most of the things we take care of on post benefits everyone whatever their rank. Because we are enlisted and do not have command prerogatives. we weigh heavily on the enlisted side," he commented.

You may contact the sergeant major of the week by going through the FOD or by looking in the Benning Bulletin where you can also find his unit.

Mechanics important to 197th's mission

By Ron Fowler

They sometimes refer to themselves as 'forgotten soldiers'. Hardly anyone knows who they are, much less what their jobs or duties actually entail. They're talked about as being 'greasy, grimy, grease monkeys', but without their skills an army could not function. They are the mechanics and repairmen and hardly anywhere else do they hold as much importance as they do in the 'Forever Forward' 197th Inf Bde.

"Here in the 197th we consider proper maintenance of our vehicles and equipment to be the backbone of our prowess as a combat-ready infantry brigade," said Sgt. Phillip D. Files, NCOIC of the 197th Inf Bde Maintenance Office. "The condition of your equipment plays a huge role in determining how you will perform on the future battlefield."

Currently there are 906 vehicles assigned to the 197th as follows: 674 wheeled vehicles, 221 tracked vehicles, and 11 helicopters. But remember, those figures don't include all the artillery pieces, crew-served weapons, individual weapons, communications equipment, and other technical gear that are included in the 'Forever Forward' brigade's inventory.

"Vehicle and equipment maintenance is a 24-hour a day, 365-day a year job," said Sgt. Mark Carter, a wheeled vehicle mechanic in Co A, 197th Spt Bn. "People don't seem to realize that we mechanics can be the deciding factor in determining a unit's combat readiness. If a unit's vehicles are prepared and ready to roll at a moment's notice, that unit is obviously more combat ready than one whose vehicles have major mechanical deficiencies."

The 197th maintains very stringent maintenance standards and each soldier from the commander to the vehicle or equipment operator is expected to adhere to the 'Forever Forward' criteria for operational combat readiness.

As a Strategic Army Forces (STRAF) unit, the 197th's mission is to be prepared to fight and win the first battle at any time, anywhere in the world, and maintenance plays a major role in that mission.

According to Sgt. Files, "The deployment standards here in the brigade state that we will be able to have all of our people, vehicles and equipment in the air and on the way to the alert area not later than 96 hours after the initial alert notification. We feel that, due in part to our increased emphasis on the brigade maintenance effort, we can meet that standard with no sweat."

So next time you hop into that vehicle and crank it up or turn on that piece of equipment, stop a moment and think about the soldier who keeps it in Grade-A condition. He'll be glad you did and you'll be a better soldier for thinking about it.

"All we want is our fair share of recognition from the folks who think that no matter what, their equipment will always work," concluded Sp4 Lawrence Hilt, a radio repairman who works in the 197th's Communications/Electronics shop. "We want people to realize that without us they would not survive on the battlefield. It's that simple."

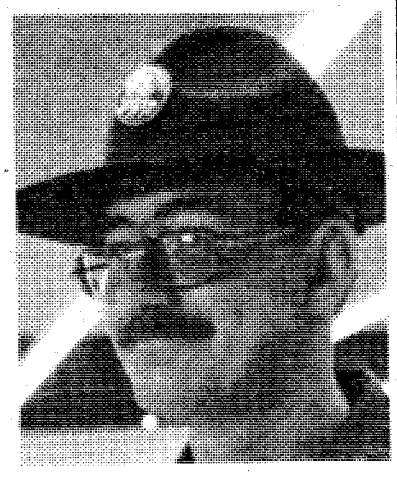
Some of the services are notary public, counseling for those who choose to leave the service, counseling for Article 15's, court martial counseling and assistance for power of attorney. They also have tax exemption forms.



SSgt. Ronnie R. Edwards, Co B, 3rd Bn, 1st AIT Bde

I really have no knowledge of services offered by Legal Assistance. I would assume they provide what their name implies: assistance or advice as to the proper channels to take to get a legal problem solved.

SSgt. Alan B. Mitchell, 18th Repl Det

Legal Assistance has helped me out in one particular case. When I was overseas, I was informed that my wife wanted a divorce. Because of the fact that there were no civilian lawyers to advise me on the matter, legal assistance took care of all the procedings.

SFC James C. Baker, Co. A, Hqs Cmd

Legal Assistance helps in most legal matters such as power of attorney, free wills, exemption from ad valorem taxes — even advice about divorces. I think Legal Assistance is great.

2nd Lt. Hal Chaikin, 51st Co, TSB

As I understand it, Legal Assistance provides servicemembers with such services as preparation of wills, powers of attorney, help in interpreting contracts and sundry others. They also dispense legal advice on occasion, when asked.

America: Land of Law

By Robert S. Poydasheff

The United States is not the greatest country in today's world because it is the richest or the most productive. It is the greatest because its people enjoy the freedom to live and flourish without fear. The United States stands unparalleled in that respect.

We are free precisely because we are governed by laws rather than by men. Ours is the greatest country in the world because it has been guided by the convictions that individual rights and human personality are the things of paramount importance.

We Americans have privileges that no dictator can turn on and off at his whim. By our Constitution, Bill of Rights and statutes, we may work where we choose, worship as we wish, vote in secret for those we select to govern, and have a fair trial if accused of a crime. We are protected from all domestic injustices by law administered in impartial courts.

As we approach Law Day on May 1, we especially, as members of a service dedicated to preserve our country, should think about our heritage and traditions. We, and all Americans have a ready access to justice. This is but one aspect of our "rule of law". We should continuously reflect upon our heritage. The world is rife with examples of what occurs when men rule and not law. The results of rule by men are sickeningly apparent in many lands over the globe where humans may be treated as beasts at the fancy of men, where their lives are ruthlessly regimented, and where they have not the slightest voice in their own government.

On this day, and every day, let us take the occasion to re-examine those familiar words, "individual liberty under law." Let us give thought to the tremendous blessings that flow to us because we live by the "rule of law" and our access to justice. Let us reflect on what it means to live by a system where the dignity of the individual citizen is assured. Finally, after our reflection and re-examination, let us vow to continue to cherish and respect this system; and to support those who bear the responsibility of government.

Today, our nation still faces dangers. Not only must we be determined to stand by and defend our great system of law and government, we must train and maintain ourselves in the highest state of readiness so that if we are called upon to act, we can . . . successfully.

Letters to the editor—

Equal rank--equal authority?

Why does the Army consider a hard striper the peer and the specialist the subordinate? These are both of equal grade, which in some cases the specialist has an earlier date of rank than that of the hard striper. Consider this: A meeting is called for all NCO's E-5 and above, so the Sp5's naturally attend. The chairman of the meeting then says, "This meeting is for NCO's only, you specialists must leave." In this case, a specialist would never attend an NCO meeting until he is promoted to E-8 (17-20 years)! I was personally told that I was never to tell/instruct a hard striper, I was only to ask, "virtually" because of the differentiation of the two insignias . . . Each insignia serves the same purpose. It is just as easy for the Army to distinguish between two soldiers qualifications by his/her MOS. After all, why do we use the speciality/designator codes? Is the Army discriminating against soldiers of the specialist rank?

A Specialist Five
Ft. Benning

Editor's note

Non-commissioned officers are in leadership positions while specialists are usually not. The term "leadership," is used in reference to a squad leader, platoon leader or platoon sergeant. A hard-striper had always been considered to be in a more authoritarian position than a specialist, who is usually in a technical position . . .

Lung Association sponsors Clean Air Week

The American Lung Association is sponsoring Clean Air Week to make citizens more aware of air pollution and means to control it.

On Monday, the West Central Branch of the Georgia Lung Association says, "Park it!" They mean leave your car at home and take a bus, walk, jog, run or ride a bike wherever you have to go.

The association says that cars in the U.S. put 200,000 tons of pollutants into the air we breathe every day. They say children's lungs are particularly susceptible to damage because of narrower airways and a higher breathing rate.

Wednesday, will be "Sun Day", concentrating on the use of solar energy rather than burning pollutant-producing fuels. The Lung Association and the mayor's energy office will sponsor displays featuring solar energy at Columbus Square during the day on Wednesday and at Peachtree Mall on Thursday.

On Saturday, drivers can get a free emission check on their vehicles at White's Chevron Station, 1810 Wynnton Rd., from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Paper recycled

The Environmental Management Office of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and the company hired to implement the post's office paper recycling program have announced the first sale of paper for recycling to take place May 1.

The terms of the sale include a one-year contract with a single buyer to take Benning's output at 116 percent of the market price.

An official of Shade Information Systems, Inc., who set up the post program, said that the 16 percent premium was not unusual, since market prices are set in Chicago and can vary as much as 100 percent locally.

An Environmental Management official said the amount of paper collected so far was running at or near the initial goal of 25 tons per month. The paper is being stored in a warehouse on post and will be weighed when sold.

In another development, an additional 500 to 600 workers have been added to the recycling effort on post by adding more buildings and areas to the program. Training sessions for workers in those areas were held this week, and officials say the number of people participating is now approximately 3,300.

Monthly weather

Hot season begins

May marks the beginning of Ft. Benning's hot season. There will be fewer frontal passages and temperatures will be on the rise.

As warm air begins to flow into the area from the Gulf of Mexico, additional moisture in the air will cause the higher temperatures to seem even hotter and will set the stage for frequent afternoon and evening shower activity.

The average high temperature in May has been 84 degrees, the average low, 60. The record high for the month was 99 degrees, the record low, 37.

The average monthly rainfall for May has been 3.3 inches. The monthly record rainfall was 6.9 inches; the 24-hour record was 3.1. Previous Mays have averaged eight days with rain and six days with thundertorms.

New high school to open next year

By Marshall Jones

The new Spencer High School designed to accommodate Benning dependents is being built on wooded land between Victory Drive and Arrowhead Road. The Muscogee County School District, which is building the school, owns 6.2 acres of the 69.675-acre site outright, and will own the rest after 30 years.

In addition to the Army's deeding of the land to the school district, the federal government provides $1.6 million in view of the school's projected role in educating Benning dependents. The total cost of construction is estimated at $4-plus million.

About 550 of the expected 1,250 in the student body will come from Benning. The Chattahoochee County students who now go to Baker will also attend, as well as some Muscogee County students. The school will open for the 1978-79 school year.

As many trees as possible have been left around the new school, which will have facilities on two levels. The building is designed to accomodate the handicapped with ramps and elevators.

Benning students will continue to be provided transportation, including those who require special facilities or instruction.

The new Spencer will contain approximately 144,420 square feet. It will be a comprehensive school, incorporating both college preparatory and vocational curricula. Special facilities for instruction in science, special education, home economics, art, physical education (including an 800-seat gymnasium), ROTC, industrial arts and music are included in the plans.

Also, there will be space for vocational education in such areas as business, construction, transportation, drafting and design, metal work, health occupations and cosmetology.

Supporting facilities include a kitchen, commons, clinic, auditorium and media centers.

The school is named for Dr. William H. Spencer, a noted black Columbus educator. Dr. Spencer, who began teaching here in 1875, died in 1925. In 1930 the school was founded as the Spencer Vocational High School.

New environment laws pose problem for Army

The Army's environmental protection policies are getting new emphasis as a result of the passage of two federal laws last year. Sterner standards of the new laws have resulted in identifying 57 federal air and water pollution control violations. The Army is presently defending in lawsuits brought to court by three states.

While the Army has always been expected to comply with past environmental standards, the tough new laws require it to meet all federal, state and local standards. These standards may require the Army to apply for exemption from some provisions of the laws or face additional court challenges.

Since the laws are relatively new, it is probable that the Army will face mounting state control and an increasing number of lawsuits, according to an official in the Corps of Engineers Environmental Office.

One of the Army's biggest concerns is its reponsibility for munitions production. All three of the pending suits involve major Army munitions plants.

Colorado has filed suit against the Rocky Mountain Arsenal and Pueblo Army Depot, two munitions plants in that state, because of the air and water pollution caused mainly by chemical waste. These suits were filed before passage of the recent federal laws.

Another state, Alabama, has filed a similar suit against the Anniston Army Depot for the same reasons.

The Department of the Army is concerned about the possible consequences of the recent laws, but not about the Army's ability to comply with them. "Sure we've got violations. A lot of other organizations have violations," one official remarked. "But we've got a good program. The commanders are aware of their responsibilities and we're doing all we can to help the commands and installations." The Army is requesting $106 million for pollution control programs alone in its FY 79 budget. FY 80 funding is expected to include even more money for priority environment programs, the official added.

According to the official, the Army plans to "put more teeth" into its environmental abatement programs by expanding its archaeological and endangered species preservation efforts as well as pollution controls and environment enhancement projects.

In some cases, the Army could receive a Presidential exemption to the laws, according to the official; as yet, the service hasn't considered requesting a special exemption. In contrast to restrictions on industrial waste and construction, the Army has been able to exempt its tactical combat vehicles from most controls. (ARNEWS)

Military Outreach Center opens in Columbus

By Betty Zimmerman

A new project involving military families living in four South Columbus trailer parks has been implemented by the Community Health Nursing Service, U. S. Army Medical Department Activities.

The temporary name of this neighborhood revival program is the "Military Outreach Center." Its aim is to develop a program whereby these young wives of soldiers can learn to help themselves and each other.

The trailer parks involved are Airview, Stoke, Clay Drive and Magnolia. Their managers have combined forces to provide a trailer for use by the project which is under the direction of Capt. Kathleen King, community health nurse.

Her responsibilities include coordination of the entire project and health education on matters of hygiene, general health, maternity and child care, heart disease and hypertension.

Also involved is 1stLt. Ron Long, social worker, with assistance in the areas of family and or martial problems, behavioral problems and individual counseling.

Representing the Chaplain's Section is Chaplain (Maj.) Tom Carroll and Mrs. Janet Crick. They are working on plans for a women's discussion group, a bible-study support group and possibly a one-day religious retreat. They are available for counseling or assistance at the center every Tuesday morning from 9 to 12. One of their aims is to refer interested people to a local religious resource or advise them of the Benning resources.

Army Community Service (ACS) is assisting with money for utilities and volunteers to man the facility. Eventually, ACS's food locker and lending closet will become involved too.

Recreation Services, represented on the advisory council by Mrs. Corrinne Cook, will play an active part in the project if funding becomes available. Survey questionaires have shown an interest in developing arts and crafts programs and team sports involvement.

This project just began April 11 and is still very flexible. Determinations are being made as to what specifically the people want and need. The center is open every weekday morning and all day on Tuesdays. For further information, call Capt. King at 545-4041.

Training Extension Course raises SQT scores

Can the Training Extension Course (TEC) improve your unit's training and readiness?

Yes, says a recent Army study. TEC use rates are "directly related to increase individual readiness as measured by the SQT (Skill Qualification Tests)," according to the U.S. Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences.

TEC is the self-paced training packages designed to increase individual readiness. The packages were introduced to combat arms units in 1974. Now they're being used successfully in combat support and combat service support units in both the active and reserve armies.

Why does soldier training with TEC mean higher SQT scores than training without?

The most important reason, according to the study, is it's effectiveness. With TEC, performance test scores jumped 7.5 percent over scores of conventionally trained troops. These TEC-trained soldiers maintain that scoring advantage "at least eight weeks after initial training."

Another reason, the time-saving factor, directly benefits both trainer and trainee.

"With TEC you don't have to tie up an instructor's time practicing two hours for a class," says SSgt Clifford Prater of the 82nd Airborne at Fort Bragg, N.C. "You can just pick your subject then pull out a matching TEC lesson."

As for soldiers, they can work the TEC lessons around other duties. The materials are available whenever they are.

Today, the Army's major emphasis is to be prepared to win the first battle of the next war. Statisticians and users agree that TEC is both effective and time-saving, both musts if today's Army is to win that battle.

DoD to help soldiers stretch their $

The Defense Department has taken positive steps to alleviate the financial plight of military personnel overseas. Various locations in U.S. Army Europe (USAREUR) are also doing their utmost to ease this situation by suggesting ways in which soldiers can stretch their money.

In the Stuttgart area the local offices of the Army Community Services (ACS) have offered the talent of trained financial counseling volunteers to those who need help in managing their finances.

The first thing the counselor does is to examine the Leave and Earnings Statement (LES) to determine how much the soldier is getting. The income is then compared with the individual's indebtedness and a budget is worked out. Once the budget is completed, the counselor contacts the creditors to explain that the individual is seeking help in paying his/her debts and that smaller payments than normally required will be forthcoming unless the company disagrees. As one of the counselors stated, "Most creditors are very positive toward this because they know they will start getting their money."

The Frankfurt community held an Economy Wives Community Fair to acquaint wives with services available in the community in order that they might stretch their dollars. Representatives from the Civilian Personnel Office were there to explain the steps necessary to apply for Civil Service employment. Personnel from the Commissary and Post Exchange were also on hand to present a comparison of prices with the economy, special savings items, and even recipes for economical dishes. Medical and Educational representatives were there to explain entitlements.

The Third Infantry Division newspaper, FRONTLINE, provided the military in Wurzburg a list of ten ways in which they could cut down on their spending. Among their suggestions were to use the commissary and Post Exchange since their prices are generally lower; comparison-shop; form carpools; write letters home rather than call; make use of the Quartermaster laundry; and purchase Troop Issue Items at the commissary.

Hopefully, the dollar will soon be worth more overseas, but until that time perhaps these suggestions will help. (TNS)

GI Bill decision doesn't cover veterans already enrolled

The recent Supreme Court decision upholding Congress' right to bar the use of GI Bill benefits funds for certain education courses will not apply to veterans already enrolled in such classes, Veterans Administration (VA) chief Max Cleland said today.

The high court last month reversed a South Dakota federal judge who had barred VA's enforcement of legislation limiting the courses veterans could take to those which had been in existence for at least two years and those in which veterans were no more than 85 per cent of the enrollment.

The South Dakota court's ruling that the legislation was unconstitutional prevailed in that state until the Supreme Court reversed it March 20, 1978.

Cleland said the decision will not affect those students enrolled during the time that enforcement of the 85-15 and two-year rules was barred.

Both rules were intended to allow the operation of the free market to weed out courses that could not attract students other than those receiving GI Bill benefits.

The Supreme Court case involved the National College of Business which has its headquarters in South Dakota with branches in a number of states.

School officials had complained that the so-called 85-15 requirement and the two-year rule imposed by Congress were restrictions that arbitrarily denied veterans their education benefits and equal opportunity.

The Supreme Court ruled, however, that the course restrictions "are valid exercises of Congress' power" and that Congress was not irrational in concluding that the restriction would be useful in preventing "charlatans from grabbing the veteran's education money."

reversing Judge Andrew W. Bogue "upholds the right of the Congress to establish, and the Veterans Administration to enforce reasonable restrictions on the use of taxpayers' funds for veterans' education benefits."

Cleland said the course restrictions grew out of abuses that first occurred under the World War II GI Bill. The first version of the 85 per cent limitation was in the Korean Conflict GI Bill of 1952.

"Congress was concerned," the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee said, "about schools which developed courses specifically designed for those veterans with available federal moneys to purchase such courses.

"The requirement of a minimum enrollment of students not wholly or partially subsidized by the Veterans Administration was a way of protecting veterans by allowing the free market mechanism to operate.

"A minimum number of nonveterans were required to find the course worthwhile and valuable or the payment of federal funds to veterans who enrolled would not be authorized," the committee said.

The rule is especially appropriate now, the Senate committee report pointed out, "given the fact that under today's GI Bill. . .veterans do not comprise a major proportion of those attending institutions of higher learning."

Cleland said that while VA will continue to pay benefits to those veterans who were already enrolled in these courses, and who remain continuously enrolled, "we intend to maintain our constant vigilance in this area to protect both the veteran seeking an education and those Americans whose hard earned dollars pay for it."

VA won't pay for GI Bill students who dropped courses

V. R. White, Veterans Administration Regional Office Director in Atlanta has a friendly reminder for GI Bill students who might overload themselves with summer courses.

"The VA doesn't pay GI Bill students for dropping courses," White pointed out. "In fact, a veteran who drops a course mid-term can find himself owing the VA money or at least having his monthly educational payment cut proportionately," the VA official said.

That's why the VA encourages GI Bill students contemplating dropping "problem" courses to use GI Bill tutorial assistance benefits to avoid both educational and financial setbacks. It's a free service to the veteran which isn't charged against the veteran's basic educational entitlement.

The government did not pay for tutorial assistance for World War II and Korean conflict veterans, but under present law VA will pay as much as $69 a month for such help up to a maximum of $828.

In addition to veterans and active duty servicemen, tutorial benefits are available to widows, widowers, spouses and children studying under the VA's Dependents' Educational Assistance Program.

Veterans and servicemen attending school at the post-secondary level on at least a half-time basis are eligible if they have a deficiency in a subject required in an approved program of education, VA said.

Applications, certified by the veteran's school, should be made on VA Form 22-1990t within a year of the tutoring and should be submitted to the VA Regional Office which maintains the veteran's claim folder. Campus veterans offices or local VA offices have the forms and details.

Army presents construction request to Congress

By John Hart

The Army justified its $874.3 million construction budget request for Fiscal Year (FY) 1979 before a Senate panel last week.

Paul W. Johnson, of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations and Logistics, said that approximately 45 percent of that amount would pay for mission-oriented construction projects.

"This is particularly true in Europe where we and our NATO allies face a Warsaw Pact capable of launching a major attack with little warning and without reinforcement," Johnson said.

He told the Senate Subcommittee on Military Construction and Stockpiles that more than one-third of the budget would be used for projects in Europe. Some of the money will be used in the support of NATO and the building of storage facilities.

A second major thrust of the construction, program will support "people oriented" projects, Johnson said. "One of our pressing needs is the modernization of health care facilities," he added.

He said that about $154 million will pay for health facility construction, including a hospital improvement project at Landstuhl, Germany. The construction plans also call for upgrading Army dental clinics at eight other locations in Germany.

Johnson said the Army plans to modernize barracks for enlisted soldiers but he did not specify the locations of the construction. He said new family units would be built at several stateside locations.

Johnson indicated that slightly more than $100 million would be used for air and water pollution projects throughout the Army. The Environmental Protection Agency has cited violations of air and water pollution standards at 57 installations.

In his testimony, Johnson revealed that the Army will allocate $50.1 million of the total construction budget to fund energy conservation projects in Fy 1979. The money will be invested in weatherstripping, insulation, storm doors and windows, and in the energy control systems at 34 installations. He said each energy conservation project has been justified on an economic basis, and in aggregate should produce an annual savings of about $10.7 million.

Johnson estimated that these projects will save an equivalent of more than one-half million barrels of oil a year. He added that during the three-year period following the oil embargo, the Army reduced its energy consumption by 28 percent. (ARNEWS)

Troops swap jobs with bosses

Have you ever said "If I could be the commander for a day I would . . .". Well, Pvt. Kenneth O'Connell, CSC, 1/58th Inf, 197th Bde had a chance for that position last week during a role reversal exercise held within the company.

"This has been a terrific learning experience for me. I wouldn't have believed the responsibility and the number of duties involved in a job like this," said O'Connell.

In an excellent example of democracy in action, the soldiers who filled the positions of commander, executive officer and first sergeant were voted into their positions by a general election held within the company. The role reversal was complete from the company commander all the way down through the chain of command. The NCOs and officers actually did the work of the soldiers and the soldiers filled their positions.

"The soldiers who took part in this exercise did an outstanding job, they took their work seriously and handled unexpected problems very well," said 1st Sgt. Walter R. Mayberry who spent the day doing details such as sweeping and mowing lawns.

During the day, the company had a vehicle inspection performed by the battalion executive officer. Everything went extremely well during the inspection and one of the officers in the company said it probably wouldn't have gone any better if the company commander had been in charge.

"This exercise is the type of training that helps soldiers like myself really understand what the Army is all about. I'm certain I will be more tolerant of training that I don't know the reason for after this" concluded O'Connell.

Pvt. Kenneth O'Connell, acting commander CSC, 1/58th, 197th Inf Bde, counsels SFC Ray D. Mitchell, also of CSC during a role reversal exercise that members of the company participated in last week.

NCOA

The president of the 150,000-member Noncommissioned Officers Association, James O. Duncan, again lashed out at the term "Double-Dipping" as used by President Carter's blue-ribbon military pay commission.

Duncan was reacting to a pay commission recommendation that would allow veterans to work for the government in civilian jobs and credit their military time toward a civil service pension but prohibit them from collecting military pensions and a government paycheck at the same time.

"It's bad enough that the military community is continually targeted for every budget cut that comes along," slammed Duncan, "But now they are interfering with a retiree's right to work for the government . . . the very government he took an oath to defend . . . while receiving a retirement check (pension) for work he has already done."

NCOA has fought against both the terminology "Double-Dipping" and its implications since the matter first surfaced a few years ago. The NCOA maintains that a civil service job is just that, a job which has to be filled by a qualified person. The person who fills that job receives a paycheck commensurate with his skills and the hours worked. Who receives that check should be of no concern to the American taxpayer.

"The retiree," Duncan continued, "has faithfully completed one career, as required by existing laws and the laws under which he undertook to forsake a private life for a military career for 20 or more years. In return for fighting wars, being separated from families and loved ones, working days, nights, and holidays without special compensation, and being subject to moves that inevitably drained all his savings, he is given a retirement check.

"It is becoming evident that the people who are reacting most violently to this aspect of a military career are the ones who wouldn't do it themselves. What is more," Duncan added, "the retiree is leaving the service at the critical time when his family is beginning college, when he must purchase a home to begin a new civilian life at a time when most adult Americans are already well settled and have the majority of their home expenses behind them. This American ex-serviceman, or woman, deserves the right to any form of employment for which they qualify, without the continued interference of a bureaucracy which would relegate them to the role of a second class citizen with the stroke of a legislative pen. If Congress wants to save money let them look in their own backyards and let the military do its job, with the proper morale and incentives needed to do it."

The worldwide membership of the NCOA is composed of active duty, retired, veteran, National Guard and Reserve, noncommissioned and petty officers, grades E-4 through E-9.

'Access to Justice' theme of Law Day this year

"Access to Justice" is the theme of Law Day U.S.A May 1. The following fictional case study is a practical example of how an individual citizen today can exercise, on his own, his right of access to justice.

Sgt. Joe Smith a Benning soldier, sells his 1972 Chevrolet to Paul Jones of Columbus for $1,250. Mr. Jones pays him one thousand cash and gives him a promissory note for $250 on the balance. The note represents his personal obligation to pay Smith the $250 plus interest in a stated period of time, in this case three months. For unknown reasons Jones does not pay Smith when the note comes due. What are Smith's alternatives for getting his money?

If all efforts at an informal settlement through talks with Jones fail, he has to consider suing Jones in a court of law. But he has a problem. If he retains an attorney to represent him in court, the fees could be a sizable portion of the $250. Until it was changed in 1977, a 60-year-old local court rule would have prevented Smith from filing suit in Municipal Court without an attorney since the amount involved was over $100. (Army Legal Assistance attorneys are not permitted to appear in court on behalf of their clients).

Let us assume Smith decided to sue Jones without an attorney. He would go downtown to the Clerk of the Municipal Court in the Government Center with two copies of the promissory note and a statement in duplicate as to the facts of the case, as he knows them. In this case there would be a filing fee of $6.65. (It varies, depending on the type of action and the amount of money at stake). He would sign a complaint and attach the note and his statement to it. A county marshal would serve a summons on Jones and he would have 30 days after that to file an answer. If Jones failed to appear in court by filing an answer with the clerk's office, he would lose the suit. After a 15 day grace period from the deadline for filing an answer, a default judgment would be entered by the Clerk of Municipal Court and mailed to Smith.

Smith could take that judgment to the marshal for him to levy (seize) enough of Jones' property to pay the debt. Smith could go with the marshal and select the property to be seized. For example, if Jones had a color television it could be seized and sold at the monthly public auction, assuming no other creditor had a superior right to the television due to a previous loan. Smith would get the proceeds from the auction sale up to $250 plus interest minus $6.60 court costs. He could also continue attaching Jones' property until he got all the money due to him. Any money left over would be returned to Jones.

If Jones had filed an answer, the issues would have been "joined" and the case would have been set for docket call. Each party would receive a certified mail notice to appear in court at a set time and date for the docket call at which time the case would be given a trial date. That date would be within about two months of the filing of the complaint. Smith would have to get that day off from work and appear in court to prove his case. If he needed witnesses hecouldobtain a subpoena (order to appear) through the clerk's office.

The same methods would be used to collect on the judgment, if Smith won at trial, as are used in the case of default judgments.

There are certain legal limitations in this area. The Municipal Court is limited by law to cases involving $5 thousand or less. An attorney is still required in two types of cases because of the legal complexities involved. They are suits arising from personal injury and attachment levies on property filed before a judgment is obtained against the debtor. The person being sued (the defendant) must live in Muscogee County.

One should not get the idea that going into court without an attorney is an easy do-it-yourself project. It is not like doing the periodic maintenance on your own automobile. It is more like doing your own first aid on a minor illness or injury with this important difference: if you make a mistake, and get in over your head, you only lose your money, not your life.

Law Day Proclamation

Whereas, May 1 has been designated by joint resolution of Congress and Presidential proclamation LAW DAY U.S.A. It is a special day of celebration by the American people in appreciation of their liberties.

Whereas, citizens today enjoy more rights, greater access to our courts, and more ways and means of equitably resolving disputes than ever before. The nation's 16,460 state trial and appellate courts and 105 federal courts today are handling more cases than at any other time in their history.

Whereas, military members have enjoyed ever greater access to justice since the passage of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. With recent amendments of the Code and developments in the courts, the American soldier has legal rights unsurpassed anywhere in the world.

Whereas, on the occasion of the 21st annual nationwide observance of LAW DAY U.S.A., it is fitting that we, as citizen soldiers, pause to reflect on our heritage of equal access to our courts and equal protection of the laws.

NOW, THEREFORE, I do hereby proclaim May 1 as LAW DAY U.S.A. at Benning, and urge all citizens to observe this date.

Don't give up the ship-prepare for emergencies

Has there ever been a boater who didn't dream of relaxing at the wheel of a smooth-riding vessel . . . water skiing, fishing, exploring waterways, sailing smooth seas, and just having fun? Unfortunately, this happy scene is sometimes blemished by a boating emergency.

The possibility of an emergency always exists and the prudent skipper never ignores them and is prepared for them at all times.

Running aground is a minor emergency since neither the passengers or the boat are in immediate danger. It's just a matter of freeing the boat, waiting for the tide to rise, or seeking help from a passing vessel. There are, however, emergencies of a serious nature such as man overboard, capsizing, fire, electrical storms, and taking on excess water.

The man-overboard situation is especially dangerous if the victim is knocked unconscious, or if the mishap occurs at night, when an unconscious victim could drown or be lost in a short time. Immediate rescue is imperative. The engine should be thrown out of gear and a marker thrown over. To aid in the search a passenger should be stationed on the bow as a lookout and the boat should be steered in tight circles at the slowest speeds while making certain that the boat does not drift away. Radio your position and make sure life jackets or a life ring with line is prepared. Turn off the engine from time-to-time to listen for distress cries. Never give up hope and never leave the scene.

Fire is a terrifying thing aboard a boat. Fueling precaution, thorough checks of fuel tanks and lines for leaks, and ridding the bilge area of fumes through proper ventilation are marks of a careful skipper and the best deterrent to preventing fire on board. Fire extinguishers should be conveniently located and checked frequently to make sure they are operative.

Capsizing is a major cause of boating fatalities and usually occurs because of overloading and heavy weather. The age-old rule of wearing life jackets and staying with the boat still applies. Chances for rescue are much better when passengers remain with the overturned boat.

Lightning is a dangerous culprit on open waters. At the first hint of an approaching electrical storm the good skipper heads for shore. If the storm is unavoidable, passengers should stay low in the boat and avoid contact with metal that might carry a lightning charge through the vessel. The radio antenna, unless well grounded, should be dropped as the storm approaches and, as a further precaution, all electrical equipment should be shut off.

Every boater should know the procedures and techniques for dealing with emergencies before heading to the open water. (TNS)

Forgotten Years
By 2ndLt. Mike St. Germain,
3rd Ranger Co

Bright crimson red and sun-baked brown,
Lay crippled on the paid-for ground.
How high the price, no one will know,
For only thru sad eyes could show
The eternity of pain that day,
A price paid for in every way.

The cries of children linger still,
Buried deep within that hill,
By all but those who shed their tears,
Way back when Glory had no fears.
The cries of anguish one still hears,
Way back among forgotten years.

Professor Safety says . . .

Never let children approach a strange dog unless the owner is present. When approaching any dog, watch for these danger signals: ears back, head down, tail between legs, eyes shifting continually. That dog doesn't want to be approached. If he runs up to a child, the child should not look at the animal (looking a strange dog in the eye can make him angry for he may regard it as a threat or challenge) nor should the child make any quick moves or loud noises. Instead the child should look for a safe place then walk, not run, to safety. If the dog growls or looks like he is going to bite, stand perfectly still; he'll probably lose interest and go away. If he attacks, the arms should be folded, grabbing each elbow with the opposite hand. Thrust them quickly in front of your face as the dog leaps; the impact may knock him down. If the dog knocks you down, roll onto your stomach and protect your head and neck with your arms. Don't move. Your stillness will show submission and the dog may cease his attack. Chapel still a mystery

By Marshall Jones

Mrs. Louise Stadnik worries about "blabbing." She's afraid she's spoiled the mystery of the little chapel in the woods on Ft. Benning her husband built almost 60 years ago.

Paul, her husband, died in September 1954. He was always handy around the house, good at fixing things. In the early 1920s he built a small, intricately detailed shrine in the woods near the Chattahoochee River on post and much about the little chapel remained secret until this month.

Photos of the chapel taken in the 1920s show a remarkable attention to detail and a fine hand in planning and execution. There was an altar and even a set of bells that rang. All was built on a scale for one worshiper. The three cupolas on top have been attributed to the Greek Orthodox style, but in Mrs. Stadnik's words her husband was a Catholic.

Whatever his religion, Paul Stadnik was born in 1920 in Omaha, Neb., the son of immigrants from Poland. Mrs. Stadnik thinks Paul may have learned his skills in building from his father, but she's not sure. "He never did talk much about the chapel," she says.

Paul built the chapel when he was a private in the Army here. The Stadniks were married in 1926 and Paul was stationed here until his retirement from the service as a first sergeant after World War II.

But it was not until 1933, Mrs. Stadnik recalls, that she ever heard of Paul's chapel. "One day, all of a sudden, he says 'I want to tell you something.' "

"Well what is it Paul?"

"I'm going to take you and show it to you."

He did, and Louise Stadnik got her first glimpse of the mystery chapel. She also saw how proud he was of his secret. The last time she saw it was in 1956, not too long after Paul died. "He was a good man, and good to his family. He just worked too hard."

No one knows for sure exactly why and how Paul constructed the shrine, which was named the St. Hubert Shrine after its restoration during World War II by Italian prisoners of war. From a 1943 newspaper account, the chapel seemed to be a mystery even to those who restored and dedicated it. Paul must have done a lot of grinning as the post commander was dedicating the shrine, built by a mysterious Private Stadnik whose first name wasn't even known.

The legend is that Paul built the little church in gratitude for his getting over an unspecified "incurable" illness.

In a conversation with Paul's mother, Louise Stadnik understood that Paul may have been affected by epileptic seizures. His brother had died of that. Paul's prayers for recovery were answered, if we believe the legend. But Mrs. Stadnik reminds us, "He never talked much about it. He would change the subject, say 'I told you I didn't want to talk about that."

Paul and Louise Stadnik had four children, a daughter and three sons. Louise lives in Columbus, not too far from where she and Paul lived when he passed away.

The National Infantry Museum here has plans to display the remains of the chapel, which had badly deteriorated over the years. Museum Curator Dick Grube hopes to show how the structure looked in its entirety.

By the time the ruins had been rediscovered for the last time, all that was left were portions of the cupolas that had sat on top of the chapel. Bill C. Walton, public information officer for the 34th Medical Battalion, "found" the remains and they are now in storage pending restoration.

Mrs. Stadnik

Mrs. Stadnik became aware of the new interest when her grandson saw the story on the local news. She was interviewed on television and the story was in the light.

Now many, many more people will know about Paul Stadnik's creation. Mrs. Stadnik isn't quite sure she's done the right thing by helping to publicize it: "I feel if he were here, he'd say, 'You blabbed'." Museum visitors, and those who saw the little chapel in the woods and wondered about its origin, should be glad that she did.

Mrs. Stadnik poses in front of her husband's church in the late 1940s. Even though restored in 1943, the structure was once more on the decline.

The wide blue yonder. That's all there is to see on a clear day at 4,000 feet above sea level — until you look down. When you realize how far down those little buildings really are you begin to realize that this little Cessna you're flying is the only thing holding you up in that wide blue yonder. But you're not scared, because the Ft. Benning Flying Club taught you how to fly — and you're confident.

Teaching beginners and providing aircraft for those who already possess a rating are the main objectives of the Ft. Benning Flying Club.

Membership is open to all active duty and retired military personnel, Department of the Army and Non-appropriated Funds (NAF) employees, members of the Armed Forces Reserves, and their dependents.

Cost Lower Than Civilian Agencies

All club members, whether they take instruction or not, are required to pay a $35 initiation fee and subsequent $10 monthly dues. If a new arrival has paid initiation fees to a flying club at another installation, the initiation fee is waived upon proof of previous payment. Also, when one member of a family has paid the initiation fee all other members of that person's family become eligible for club benefits.

The Flying Club is a NAF activity and depends on dues and fees for its financial support. There are approximately 140 members, with personnel coming and going daily.

Swedish instructors find U. S. land of opportunity

By Bev Lockhart

America is still the land of opportunity, at least for two Swedish instructors at the Ft. Benning Flying Club.

Carl Einarlax and Mikael Waller came here after graduating from the North American Institute of Aviation in Hammonton, N.J.

Both men possess certificates in private, commercial, instrument, multi-engine, and instructor rating after five months of ten-hour school days. But both Carl, a native of Stockholm, and Mikael, who calls Upsala home, think it's worth it. They agree there is more opportunity for them to work in their field here than in Sweden, although they miss the European culture; they feel it's more colorful.

When he isn't teaching out at Lawson Army Airfield, Mike, 26, plays a lot of tennis. "One of the things I like most," says Mike, "is that I don't have to pay everytime I use a court."

Moustached Carl finds himself playing pool, drinking beer and once in a while he gets into a good game of chess because, "There isn't much else to do in this town," he complains.

Both are noncommital about their plans to return to Sweden, though. Although they think there is more pollution here and they find American women less liberated than European women (European women are more concerned about their careers and rights than American women), they agree their job opportunities are more plentiful and living expenses lower here.

They find Europe to be influenced more by the U.S. than visa versa, although as 23-year-old Carl put it, "Europe dictates fashion to the U.S. They're far ahead of the Americans as far as style goes."

But Mike points out, "American and British music is more popular over there, though."

They feel Sweden is a more controlled society, leaning towards socialism, and "It's hard to live there right now," according to fair complected Mike.

Sweden has very high un-

Garner's TV has become a well known name in the Columbus area. At 36 years old, Travis has spent 21 years building the name and reputation of Garner's TV. He started with only a service shop where he was doing the repair work for 21 retail stores in the Columbus area.

Two years ago he decided to go into retail sales for TV's and stereo equipment, where in his first full year in sales he became the largest RCA dealer and the third largest Zenith dealer in the Columbus area. He attributes his success to giving the finest service available to his customers, and selecting the two leading brands of TV's to sale. Travis says the reason he selected these two brands was because of his high percentage of military trade and in moving, the customer will not worry about finding a shop to handle the service. He believes that the sale is only a small part of satisfying the customer, the service after the sale is what makes

Flying Club, instead of a civilian agency, a prospective pilot working on his private pilot rating can save himself roughly $500.

Private, commercial, instrument, instructor and twin ratings are available to club members, along with transition training from rotary to commercial fixed-wing aircraft. Fifty-five of the Ft. Benning Flying Club's members are currently enrolled in a course paid for by the VA. Once an individual obtains his private pilot rating, VA will pay 90 percent of the fees, as long as the student is working on an air-transport rating.

Private Pilot Rating First Step

A private pilot rating is the first rating available. The club offers a ground school which includes 40 hours of instruction and all materials needed for $85. The instruction prepares the individual for the written test required before receiving a rating. The club recommends that flight lessons be taken in conjunction with ground school. Thus, the instruction received at ground school becomes applied theory and is easier for the student pilot to understand.

Before the student pilot is eligible to take the applied test for his private rating, 20 hours of dual flight time and 20 hours of solo flight time must be completed. The instructor accompanies the student during dual flight instruction. When the instructor feels that the student is familiar enough with the aircraft to go up on his own, the student can begin to complete his solo flight hours. The first few times the student goes on a flight, the instructor tells him what to do from the tower. This is termed a "supervised solo."

Applied lessons cost $8 per hour for the instructor and $13 an hour for the aircraft; a total of $21 an hour during dual flight training and $13 an hour during solo flight training.

Flight Physical Neccessary

Before a student pilot is allowed to solo (usually around the eighth to twelfth hour), a Class Three physical must be obtained. The physical is good for two years with a Student Pilot License. If the pilot plans to take instruction for more advanced ratings after he receives a private pilot rating under VA, he must be examined for a Class Two physical. The physical expires every year on the pilot's birthday.

The average cost for a flight physical is $25. The club recommends civilian doctors in Columbus who are qualified to give the flight physical.

Aircraft Available to Members

The club maintains 13 aircraft for its members' use. The hourly charge varies from $13 an hour for a Cessna 150 to $60 an hour for their six-seater PA-30 Twin Comanche. Three of the aircraft are on loan from the government; the rest are under contract or lease-purchase agreements to the club. Their aircraft includes four Cessna 150s, one Cessna 172, two Cherokee PA-28 Warriors, one Bird Dog (ex-Army aircraft), one Mark 21 Mooney, one Cessna Cardinal-RG, and one PA-30 Twin Comanche.

The Flying Club has limited hanger space available for the small minority of members who own private aircraft. Currently, there is no space open, but a waiting list does exist.

The Ft. Benning Flying Club, which has been in operation since the early 1950s, is headquartered in Bldg. 2416 at Lawson Army Airfield. More information may be obtained by calling 687-0254.

Finance Outprocessing

Want an idea that will help speed up outprocessing? The finance center suggests that you take action to change pay options and allotments upon receipt of Permanent Change of Station, (PCS), orders instead of waiting until outprocessing. This will insure that changes will be effective on the date desired and finalized prior to departure.

Tire Retreading Program

Department of the Army has established a goal to obtain 75 percent of tire replacements through issue of retreads. Procedures established to provide for achieving the goal are outlined in USAIC Regulation 750-7. This will be strictly enforced by this command. Commanders, supervisors, and other personnel concerned with the operation of wheeled vehicles should review the regulation in order to preclude delays in obtaining replacement tires. For further information contact the Maint Div at 545-2088/4250.

Evaluation Report Appeals

Evaluation report appeals which do not receive favorable consideration will no longer be filed on the performance fiche of the Official Military Personnel File (OMPF) but will be filed on the restricted fiche. This change in procedures is effective with all appeal actions finalized on May 1 or later. The restricted fiche is a protected file containing those documents that must be permanently retained to facilitate personnel administration and/or protect the interests of the individual. The restricted fiche is not provided to promotion/selection boards or career managers.

The new filing procedure will not be retroactive, however, individual requests to have previously denied appeal correspondence transferred from the performance fiche to the restricted fiche will be considered on an individual case-by-case basis. This transfer will not constitute grounds for standby promotion board consideration. Officer requests for transfer of these documents should be directed to Commander MILPERCEN, ATTN: DAPC-PSR-EA, 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, Va. 22332. Enlisted requests should be directed to commander, USAEREC, ATTN: PCRE-OP-A, Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249.

Safeguarding Equipment

Target and storage buildings located on ranges and training areas are not considered secure. Ammunition, explosives, telephones, radios, tools and equipment should not be stored in these buildings, unless properly guarded. This in accordance of USAIC Regulation 210-A.

Parking On Grass Prohibited

Families and soldiers living in quarters are reminded of the USAIC Regulation 190-5, Vehicle Traffic Regulation, prohibits stopping, or parking vehicles upon lawns or in grassed areas (unless specifically authorized by competent authority). Boats and camping trailers may be parked on occupant's lawn when authorized parking areas are not available. Extreme caution should be exercised in moving boats or camping trailers across lawn areas as occupants will be held responsible for any damages incurred. Military policemen will ticket violators.

Training Aids Dangerous

The following simulators used by units training at Ft. Benning have been abandoned in areas throughout the post; booby traps; artillery ground bursts; hand grenades; explosives (M-80 firecracker). These innocent looking training aids can cause severe burns, loss of sight, loss of fingers or hands, even loss of life. They should be respected as, and treated as any DUDs. Do not attempt to dis-assemble, touch or move the DUDs. Every effort is made to account for and remove simulators that have not detonated during training exercises. Some, however, are missed and they lie in waiting for the curious, the uninformed, and the foolhardy. Please report the location of DUDs and simulators to the Range Div by calling 545-5186.

Red Cross is counting on you.

Bowling team takes 2nd in championship

By Marshall Jones

Benning's team took second place to Ft. Eustis in the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Bowling Tournament Team Championship held here Wednesday and Thursday. The TRADOC singles and doubles competition were on Monday and Tuesday.

Ft. Eustis' 10,458 total pinfall in the nine games of team play was good for first. Team captain was Calvin Banks, and the other bowlers were Robert Anthony, Rachel Taylor, Gerald Gacha, John Bergman, Daniel Ireland, Cynthia Stauffer and Albert Ragsdale.

Benning team captain Warren Jillson, who was also an alternate bowler, led his team to second with a 10,422 combined total. Other team members are Ken Jacobsen, Keith Clark, Charlie Knox, Jim Tourgee, Aida Rivera, Judy Johnson, Gary Doescher and Gary Youngblood.

Tropies were awarded Thursday at a banquet by Recreation Services Officer Maj. William B. McHenry.

The high men's game of the four days was rolled by R. Faucett of Ft. Sill with a 280. Patrick Eggers of Knox was second with 277. Belvoir's Pat Bell had the highest single game among the women, a 244. Cynthia Stauffer of Ft. Eustis was second at 235.

Eustis' Bergman had the high men's series, a 693. Richard Kirby of Carlisle Barracks followed with 682. Bell and Stauffer finished one-two in the women's division with 641 and 634 respectively.

In total pinfall for all events, Carlisle's Kirby led the men with 4,228, followed by Louis Bryan of Ft. Monroe with 4,218. Pat Bell outdistanced the women with 3,949, and Sandy Gordon of Ft. Jckson had 3,898 for second place.

In Monday's singles tournament, it was Bergman and Eggers in the men's division with 1,306 and 1,228 respectively. Sandy Gordon was the women's winner with 1,163 and Judith Wooangk of Ft. Knox was second at 1,114.

The men's doubles on Tuesday was won by John Frankenburger and William Jenkins of Ft. Lee who totaled 2,453. Bryan and Bernard Rhees of Ft. Monroe took second with 2,388. The team of Pat Bell and Peggie Brokenbrough from Ft. Belvoir won the women's doubles with 2,166. Helen Parlock and Sandy Gordon of Jackson were second at 2,130.

Soldiers 'bigshots' at match

Three Benning non-commissioned officers and the post Combat Rifle Team captured a total of seven first places in the 1978 Army Forces Command (FORSCOM) Eastern Regional Rifle, Pistol and Light Machine Gun Championships held at Ft. Meade, Md.

The Benning team shot its way to titles in the Combat Infantry Team Match and in the Combat Rifle Team Aggregate Championship.

Sgt. Christopher A. Enz took three first place finishes, in the Individual Precision Combat Rifle Match M16A1 (Slow Fire Prone 400 Yards), the Long Range Aggregate and the Individual Precision Combat Rifle Grand Aggregate.

SFC Jerrold E. Buckner and SSgt. Philip Krosofsky each had a first place. Buckner won the Precision Combat Rifle Match M16A1 (Rapid Fire Sitting 200 Yards) and Krosofsky captured the title in the .22 Caliber Pistol Individual Timed Fire Match.

The 1978 Championships were divided into five categories. These were composite rifle, composite pistol, combat rifle, combat pistol and light machinegun.

627 shooters competed in the championships. They came from active Army installations as well as major U. S. Army Reserve Commands, state National Guards, Senior Reserve Officer Training Corps and the U. S. Military Academy at West Point to determine who are the best shooters on the east coast.

The competitors shot for awards and trophies and for the chance to participate in the All Army matches to be held here later in the year.

This is the second consecutive year that Ft. Meade has hosted this event.

MSgt. Roger H. Willis of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, served as a referee at the FORSCOM Central Region Rifle, Pistol and Machinegun Championship Matches held at Ft. Riley. One of his duties was to check score cards when the competitor felt the card has been scored incorrectly. This process cost the competitor a dollar, which was returned to him if the card was indeed scored incorrectly.

Tennis Facility plans tourney

The Officer's Club Tennis Facility will conduct its annual Spring Fun/Mixer Tournament tomorrow and Sunday.

The purpose of the tournament is to introduce new members to other members, promote the Tennis Facility, and above all, to have fun.

All events will be round robin and include men's singles, ladies' singles and mixed doubles. Entry fee will be $1 per participant which will allow entry into all events. Prizes will be awarded for winners and runners-up in each event.

Play is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. tomorrow with the singles and at 1 p.m. Sunday for the mixed doubles.

Members wishing to participate should register at the Pro Shop or call 687-4516.

This is only one of the many events the Tennis Facility has programmed for the year. Other events include a men's and ladies' tennis ladder, a men's open round robin play on Wednesday evenings, a member guest tournament and a fall club tournament.

In an effort to increase membership, the Tennis Facility is being upgraded. A contract will soon be let obtaining a sports professional to operate the facilities under a concession agreement. Other changes include a new lighting system and new maintenance equipment.

If you are a member of the Officer's Club but not the Tennis Facility, this may be the opportune time to join and share in the fun. Even if you have never played, this may be the summer to begin as numerous clinics and group lessons are now ongoing.

To join, contact the pro, Jerry Pressley, at the Pro Shop.

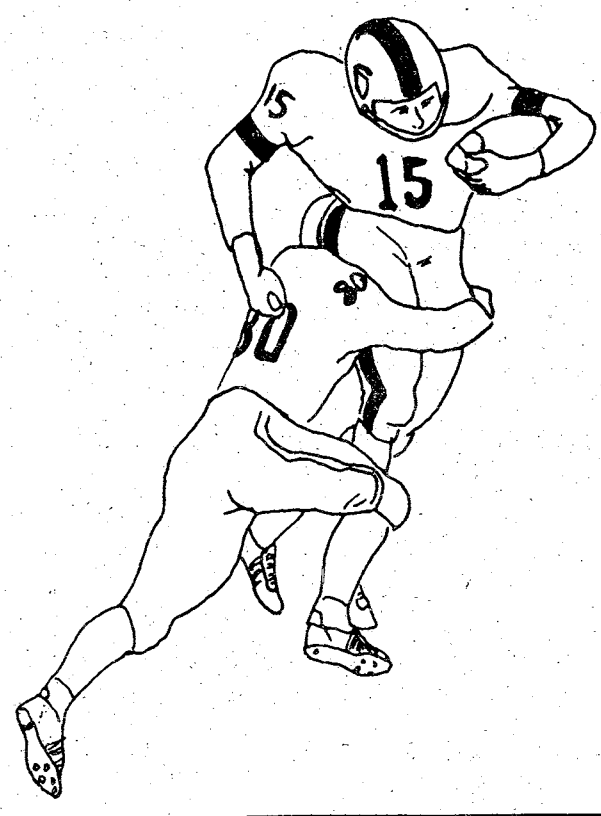
Spring football game set

Doughboy spring football practice will conclude tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. under the new lights of Doughboy Stadium, with the annual 'Blue vs. White' spring game.



Head Coach Jack Barham, who will observe the game from the press box, is concerned with the execution of the new veer offense (triple option) but he is generall pleased with the overall calibre of the players and predicts the final session will be hard hitting.

The 'Blue' team, sparked by veterans Joe Duenas, Erogies Grigley, George Brown, Tony Nimmons and Charles Watson, will be coached by Offensive Coordinator John Ross.

The 'White' team, headed by Defensive Coordinator Dave Bankston, features a host of returnees in Mike Dawkins, Ronnie Carter, George Lattimore, Rudolph Gordon and Dennis Crosby. First year tailback Jerald Mooring and fullback Andrea Wilson will lead a host of promising new backs, while heralded Columbus native Kenneth Burkes is the man to watch in the defensive secondary.

Fans are encouraged to come out to the stadium, enjoy the refreshments and support the 1978 edition of Doughboy football.

Army ups COLA, SHA in Europe

As a result of a recent survey by the Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee, adjustments to the 1978 station housing allowances (SHA) and the cost of living allowance (COLA) will be made in US Army Europe and Seventh Army (USAREUR).

The committee analyzed housing-cost data from service members and considered current changes in the dollar's value against the value of foreign currencies in setting its annual rates for SHA and COLA.

SHA is an authorized supplement paid to military members residing on the economy to help alleviate housing costs above the member's basic allowance for quarters (BAQ). Service members authorized separate rations are normally paid COLA when the economy cost of living in Germany exceeds that in the US. The amount of SHA and COLA paid to a service member depends on his/her status and grade, duty location, authority to reside off post, and whether the family is command-sponsored.

SHA rates are based on a comparison of the average actual cost of local economy housing with the average BAQ received. This comparison determines the percentage of SHA to be paid. Based on this, it is important that service members stationed in Germany accurately and completely list their expenditures on the annual Housing Cost Data Sheet (DD Form 376). The form also requests information on tour length, type of quarters, their cost in local currency, plus costs for utilities, garbage disposal, maintenance, repairs and initial occupancy. One-time expenses such as those for light fixtures, transformers, wardrobe closets, cupboards and curtains are also considered. These are important points to remember should your next tour take you to Germany.

As officials said, while rent and food costs lately seem to be rising daily, SHA and COLA are also being monitored and increased to offset these changes. (TNS).

Religious Ed Center sponsors conference

By Frank Strickland

"What is a Godly life? Do I live such a life? How do I live a Godly life in the world today?"

Those are the central themes of a conference that will be held here May 5 and 6. Leading the conference will be Connie Rowland, Tommy Murrah and John Drew. They are from Reach Out Inc., a Bible study conference located in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Reach Out is many-faceted, non-denominational Bible study conference center headed by Jack and Kay Arthur. The center was founded on the principle that Christians need to be effective.

May 5, the conference will begin at 7:30 p.m. at the TIC Chapel Annex. The night's activities will include Bible study, fellowship and singing. On the 6th, the conference will resume at 10 a.m. at the Pioneer Lodge (formerly the Rod and Gun Club) and end at 5:30 p.m. Lunch will be provided.

"The conference will be geared to be great towards young adults (junior enlisted, junior officer and older high school students) or to any adventurous soul that gets into an intellectual Bible study," commented a spokesman from the Religious Education Center.

For further information contact Sp4 Strickland at 545-2366 or 544-4594.

Catholic Activities Center plans three events

The Catholic Activites Center is planning three events for post personnel.

Tonight they will hold a workshop on Discipline for Pre-schoolers from 7:30 to 11 p.m. at the McGraw Manor Community Life building on Custer Road. Mrs. Virginia Pope will be speaking at the workshop, which is organized especially so both parents can attend. Free babysitting will be provided.

The Charismatic Prayer Group is hosting a potluck dinner at 6:30 Tuesday evening at the Sightseeing Road Chapel. Guest lecturer will be Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert Crick. All families and singles interested in Charismatic prayer and fellowship are welcome. Bring along a covered dish and, if you have one, a guitar or other musical instrument.

The next Theology Nite-Out will be held May 7 at the Top Five NCO Club. Mr. Daniel Maguire, noted theologian of Marquette University, will be speaking on the subject of the Old-New Morality. Youth hours are from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Adult hours follow from 7:30 to 11 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $1 at all post chapels, but they will also be available at the door. The program is free for youths.

Basic Fishing and Skateboard Safety

Columbus College Community Services is offering two special interest courses for children tomorrow.

Basic Fishing for Children will be taught by Coach Frank Clements in Woodruff Gym from 9 to 12 a.m. The course will help young fishermen to improve old skills and beginners to learn new ones.

Children must be second graders or above to participate and should bring their own rods and reels with hooks removed. Equipment will be furnished for those who do not have it. Registration is $6.50.

It looks so easy to skateboard, but there are methods of skating and safety equipment that can prevent injuries from the fast-growing sport. Skateboard Safety, a two-hour course co-sponsored with Odyssy Skateboard Park, will be held at the park beginning at 10 a.m. The Odyssy Skateboard staff will be instructing.

Children are asked to bring their own skateboards and safety equipment but there is equipment available for rent at a nominal fee. Registration is $5.

May Day at Westville

Other activities include children's games and the traditional May Pole Dance, in which children dressed in 1850 costume perform.

Westville opens at 10 a.m. Those wishing to tour the houses and shops should arrive early so they may enjoy the activities. Visitors are encouraged to bring a lunch and spread it picnic style.

Crimestop

Bicycles are fun to ride, for adults as well as for children. At the end of the day, when you return from riding and park the bike, most people think nothing of it leaving the bicycle in the yard unsecured. These actions create an environment for CRIME. You have opened the door of opportunity for the thief.

The security of your bicycle is not the responsibility of the Military Police. It is your responibility and when neglected may lead to the loss of your bicycle. The majority of stolen bicycles on post are not properly secured.

The safest and most effective way to secure your bicycle would be indoors (whether in your home or in a storage shed). Where this isn't feasible, the bicycle should be secured to a fixed object using a good lock with a 5/16 inch case hardened steel alloy chain.

These incidents were reported to the Military Police during the past three weeks.

8 April — 2 Bicycles — Unsecure in Carport in Bouton Heights.

8 April — 10 Speed Bike — Unsecure at Post Quarters Davis Hill.

21 April — 10 Speed Bike — Unsecured at Lavoie Housing area.

23 April — Childs Bicycle — Unsecured at Lavoie Housing area.

24 April — Childs Bicycle — Unsecured at post quarters on main post.

Preventative Tips

- Always lock your bicycle, regardless of the duration of absence.
- If possible, secure your bicycle indoors where it can't be seen by strangers.
- Don't loan your bicycle to a stranger. You may never see it again.
- Register your bicycle with the Provost Marshal Office. Contact the Crime Prevention Office at the PMO, building 215 or the vehicle registration office at bldg 83.

May E-6 cutoff scores down

Promotion cutoff scores for hikes to E-6 dropped in May, reflecting use of the first results of the new semi-centralized promotion worksheet, according to a Department of the Army (DA) enlisted promotion official.

Although 1150 E-5s will sew on E-6 stripes in May (more than double the number promoted in April), individual scores were generally lower than those in previous months, using the former promotion worksheet.

The official said that a clear comparison between scores obtained by both worksheets is difficult because of variances in monthly allocations by MOS, an increase in the overall number of promotions in May and a decrease in the total number of soldiers competing for E-6.

A sample comparison of one MOS shows that E-5s who required 746 points for promotion in April could be promoted in May with only 716 points, the official said.

The maximum cutoff score of 886 has not declined. During April, 29 E-5s equaled or exceeded 886 points. In May, 32 E-5s earned hikes with an 886 or better score, according to DA figures.

About 1,000 fewer E-5s were on Army-wide promotion lists in May than in April, dropping from 14,349 to 13,436. In April, almost three per cent of all E-5s in primary zone contention for E-6 had scores beteen 796 and 805. In May, the number of E-5s within this point range dropped to slightly more than one per cent.

The new worksheet also allowed some E-5s to qualify for promotion with minimum scores of 550, compared to 600 using the former worksheet. Those soldiers already on promotion lists and who lost points using the new system were allowed to remain on lists, even with scores below 550.

The May cutoff scores, scheduled for release later this month, reflect E-6 recomputations from February. E-5 recomputations with the new promotion worksheet were delayed until March and those scores will determine E-5 promotions beginning in June. (ARNEWS)

DEAD BATTERY?

Watch Your Step When You Jump!

Jump starting seems an ideal way to save the day when you are stranded in a vehicle with a dead battery. Now that jumper cables are available to most drivers, more and more cases of loss of sight, facial disfigurement and even death are occurring when auto batteries suddenly explode while attempting a jump start.

To help prevent this from happening, never connect the cables to the four battery terminals. Instead follow these steps:

- Attach the red cable to the positive dead battery terminal and then to the positive live or booster battery terminal.
- Attach the black cable from the negative live battery terminal to the engine block of the vehicle with the dead battery. . .well away from the battery.
- Stay away from the area of the batteries when you attempt to start the disabled vehicle.

To remove the cables, reverse this process.

Disconnect the black cable from the engine block and from the negative live terminal. Then disconnect the red cable from the positive booster and finally from the positive dead battery terminal.

AUSA picnic to highlight food, fun

This year's annual picnic sponsored by the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the United States Army will be held at Victory Pond on September 23.

The 586th Engr. Co., 36th Engr. Gp. again will construct a 211-foot light tactical raft (bridge) across Victory Pond to make both sides accessible to rides, entertainment and games. The light-weight structure, assembled completely by hand, is capable of supporting up to 38,000 pounds.

Another feature this year will provide two, 27-foot boats to transport picnic-goers on a tour around the lake.

A big attraction will be a Battle of the Bands contest on a special dance floor adjacent to Victory Pond. First place winners will pocket $150 in cash, second place winner, $50 and third place finisher will take home $25.

Each band will be judged on technical excellence, selection of material, showmanship and audience appeal.

A highlight this year will be the Picnic Beauty Queen Contest, with young ladies from post units vying for first place ($50.00 Bond) and runner-up ($25.00 Bond).

There will be drawings for prizes throughout the afternoon.

Food, music, exhibitions, kiddie rides, displays and a carnival-type midway are some of the other attractions to be found at this year's event. Festivities will start at noon and continue throughout the afternoon until 6 p.m.

This picnic menu will offer a wide variety of food, ranging from barbecue chicken to hotdogs and hamburgers. There will also be baked beans, cole slaw, and potato salad. Beer, soft drinks, Kool-Aid and coffee will be thirst quenchers.

Displays will include a tank, armored personnel carriers, jeeps, Gamma Goats, parachute maintenance, markmanship, medical equipment, Infantry Board weapons,

Back to school dangerous trip?

School bells are ringing, and amid groans, grumbles and a few cheers 40 million children give or take a few, are settling down to the serious business of getting an education. Will your child be among them? While there is no need to worry about your child at school, she is at least as safe there as at home; there are two periods during each day when your child is exposed to serious danger.

Each year as many as 35,000 elementary school children are injured while traveling between home and school. It is your responsibility as a parent to assure that each trip is made as safely as possible.

Whether your child walks to school, rides a bicycle, takes a bus or is driven,here are certain precautions that will help prevent an accident. If you drive your child to school:

- Don't load or unload children across the street from the school.
- Don't stop on the crosswalks as this is unfair both to the children and safety patrols directing them.
- Don't double park or stop too close to crosswalks.
- Pool rides with neighbors to reduce the number of cars in the school area.
- Have a designated location for meeting your child.
- Use more than ordinary caution when approaching a school zone.

If your child rides a bike, make sure that he understands that he must follow the same rules as motorists — observing traffic lights and signs, yielding right of way, and giving proper hand signals indicating turns, slow and stop. A bicyclist should never cut in or out of traffic, ride against traffic, ride two abreast, or perform bike stunts on a public thoroughfare.

For children riding the bus, crossing the street or highway to and from the bus stop is probably the greatest single hazard he faces. Your child should always cross at designated crosswalks after he has looked both ways to be sure no traffic is coming. He should arrive at the bus stop in plenty of time, but not so early that he has time to loiter. Get him up early enough to avoid last minute scramble for the bus stop. He should board the bus without delay, in a single line, and without pushing. He should remain seated while bus is in motion and avoid

2/10th battles heat, snakes at Rucker

By Judi Taylor

The suffocating heat of Fort Rucker, Alabama, did not deter the red legs of Btry C, 2/10th FA, 197th Inf Bde from completing five days of rigorous multi-echelon training last week. The exercise was devised to improve the battery's combat readiness.

Once they reached Rucker, they set up an administrative base camp near Matteson Range and training began in earnest. During the early part of the exercise the Nuclear, Biological, Chemical (NBC) team suspected the surrounding area of being contaminated by an unknown agent. A survey team took readings with radiacmeters to determine if there were any Gamma, Alpha or Beta radiation in the area. Upon identifying the agents, the survey team erected warning signs to inform the troops of what type agent was contaminating the area.

On Matteson Range, the gunners, set up 105mm Howitzers in their firing positions. Firing high burst restoration rounds, the battery was able to pinpoint indirect fire by the calculations of three Observation Posts (OPs). The three posts were set up at different distances and directions from the Howitzers, and by reporting azimuths, (distance in degrees), a known location was determined.

The data, massed by the OPs, aid the fire control personnel in providing upgraded information for all non-standard conditions (wind, rotation of the Earth, etc.) that would hinder the exactness of the bullets flight from the gun tube.

The information passed from the OPs to the fire control personnel was sent via radio communication. Since a field artillery unit is spread over a large area, they rely heavily on communication to complete their mission. To further hinder his troops, Capt. James Tindall, Btry C Commander, used electronic warfare in the form of forty-watt radio frequency jammer. The soldiers then had to establish a means to inform both sections to use an alternate frequency to continue giving firing orders.

Aside from communication and tactical problems, Btry C had a totally different, potentially dangerous problem to deal with. Deadly enemies crawled into the base camp and had to be quickly and efficiently killed by the rear detachment. The enemy gave warnings when they were in the area by means of an eerie-sounding rattle. The extreme heat had brought out poisonous rattlesnakes in large numbers and the troops had to be constantly on guard against the threat of snakebite.

The change of topographical and geographical location gave the battery a good chance to fully explore the units capabilities of performing indirect fire missions in unknown locales.

Tindall summed it all up when he said "My men are doing a fantastic job out here, especially considering the heat and the snakes, the battery could complete any firing mission anyone could give us."

Whenever NBC teams detect chemicals in the area, members must erect GAS warning signs.

Infantry School expands role with new course

A revision in the Army's Command Refresher Course for Combat Arms officers has resulted in an enlarged role in the course for the U.S. Army Infantry School. The course is for officers designated to assume command of battalions or brigades.

The new course title will be the Combat Arms Pre-Command Course. The Infantry School's portion will be called the Infantry Pre-Command Course and will last ten days.

Formerly, the command designees spent only five days here at the Infantry branch portion of the course. They came here after a one-week maintenance refresher class at Fort Knox, Ky. The new curriculum will eliminate the Knox phase and maintenance will be taught here.

After their stay here, the officers will travel to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for ten days of training in tactics, administration, legal matters and Organizational Effectiveness Training (OET).

The changes in the course reflect adoption of new management concepts and are at the direction of the chief of staff of the Army, according to Debby McLaughlin, an educational specialist with the Directorate of Training Development. "The course is one of the most important and highly visible ones taught here," said McLaughlin.

Labor Day Message

I extend my best wishes to each of you for a pleasurable and safe Labor Day holiday. I emphasize a "safe holiday" since safety can never be overstressed. Tragedy strikes many times during each holiday period in the form of highway accidents. Most of the deaths and injuries sustained in these accidents could have been easily prevented.

I hope each of you will exercise both common sense and basic safety measures in all holiday pursuits and activities. It is only through concerted safety effort that we can all enjoy an accident-free Labor Day holiday. Let's make this our goal for Labor Day and all holidays.

We don't rent rooms, we rent furnished apartments with all the features of a regular motel plus added conveniences that cannot be provided with just a single room - and all at the same, or most times lower rates than the single-room motel. For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 100 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

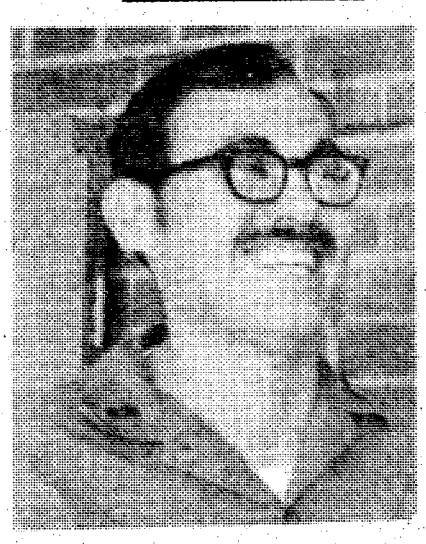
Don't be careless with the future.

Glad you asked

Should servicemembers be allowed to join unions?



1st Lt. Nelson S. Noble, 988th MP Co.

I believe that servicemembers shouldn't be permitted to join unions. The soldiers' job is not like any other civil servant job. The soldier may be called upon at any time to risk his life in the defense of the country.

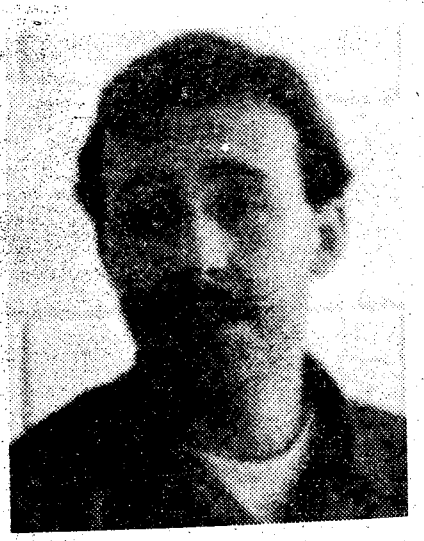
Any union outside the military structure would disrupt the commander's control over his troops. This would inadvertantly have a diverse effect on the future of our national defense.

SFC Willie Shipman Jr., Hq. Co. Hq. Cmd, SJA Office

If necessary, we have a primary mission to engage and defeat any armed enemy of the U.S. We also have secondary missions aside from national emergencies. In order to accomplish these missions, the armed forces must be well-trained and disciplined. We must rely on decisions made by authorities and authorities must rely on the soldiers' obedience to carry out those decisions. In times of war or national emergencies, there isn't time for collective bargaining to determine if orders will be obeyed or not. Therefore, I don't believe servicemembers should be allowed to join unions.

SSgt. James W. Durant, Jr. 546th Med. Bn.

I don't think the Army should ever be unionized because in the event of war, there probably wouldn't be anyone willing to fight for the defense of our country. Discipline would be a main factor because officers and NCO's wouldn't be able to give a direct order without worrying about his troops going on strike and putting up picket lines and signs.



Pvt. George J. Ellis, TIC Chapel

No, in the event of war who could boycott or walk off the battle line. How would the defense of our country stand up under the threat of strike during a cold war.

Letters to the Editor

Commentary

Is the Army today lacking discipline?

By Bill Hudson

"Men must be habituated to obey or they cannot be controlled in battle, and the neglect of the least important order impairs the proper influence of the officer," so said General Robert E. Lee.

The end of the draft has brought together soldiers who have volunteered to perform duties in the Army. There is not a soldier currently in the Army who has not volunteered to be in. This "desire" to serve should be accompanied by the discipline mandated by our Army.

Unfortunately, in many cases, I have noticed a lack of discipline that is distressing. This lack of discipline ranges from failing to salute, neglecting to secure a building or cabinet to intentionally writing a bad check.

Members of the military have a distinct responsibility and this responsibility is to be disciplined in peacetime so that we can be most effective in case of war. Being disciplined in personal and professional life during peacetime must be practiced just as a football player lifts weights in the off-season so that he can be ready for his own athletic combat during the other part of the year.

We should take pride in ourselves and as General George S. Patton Jr., said, "Discipline is based on pride in the profession of arms, on meticulous attention to details, and on mutual respect and confidences. Discipline must be a habit so ingrained that it is stronger than the excitement of battle or the fear of death."

So, whether it be peacetime or wartime, we must be disciplined so we can take pride in ourselves — proving we are the best and we are prepared.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Looking out for number one in the Army seems to be characteristic for the average soldier. Ask a soldier on the street why he came into the Army. He or she may answer—for the education or travel, or maybe "I didn't want to get married." The motives are many and perfectly reasonable except that most reasons are self-oriented. Finding a soldier who came in the Army because he wanted to serve his country or because he wanted to be a soldier is more difficult.

It is as if the average soldier will give any reason, but "I joined the Army because I like the military." Does peer pressure cause him or her to react that way?

It seems to me that the Army would be a better place if we were more team oriented—looking out for your fellow soldier. I suggest the next time you see one of these soldiers with that special quality, give him credit for a job well done. Try not to encourage a friend who has spent the whole day getting out of work.

Looking out for number one may be good policy to follow, but does that attitude keep you from performing your responsibilities.

Baffled Soldier

Heat can't stop 3/7th from completing mission

By Pat Jones

The cool morning air and clear skies were ideal weather for the soldiers of Co C, 3/7th Inf (Cottonbalers), 197th Inf Bde at Combined Arms Field last week. With support from the 121st Avn Co, they boarded helicopters to be air-mobiled to Concord Landing Strip for a company field training exercise (FTX).

Upon landing, the company immediately dispersed moving to a rally point to regroup into their respective platoons. Once reorganized they received their operations order and started a company level movement to contact. As the field problem progressed the heat became sweltering, forcing the company to reduce its speed. "It was really hot, there could have been some serious problems if we hadn't slowed down," said Capt. James Mohney, commander of Co C.

Once reaching the objective the platoons prepared defensive positions. At times the digging was extremely difficult due to the rocky terrain. "The men had to remove huge rocks from some of the positions," explained Mohney. "This was my first time in the field with the unit. It was a learning experience for all of us."

loud or boisterous conversation enroute. Obey directions from the driver promptly and without argument.

If your child walks to school, map out the safest route for him if school officials have not already done so. Make sure he understands it. The safest route is one that avoids busy thoroughfares as much as possible and allows your child to cross streets at corners protected by crossing guards. Teach your child to obey all traffic signs and signals, cross the street in marked crosswalks or at intersections. Never jaywalk, by crossing diagonally, or in the middle of the block, or against the light, or from behind parked cars.

He should wait on the curb for cars to pass, then look both ways and for turning cars before starting to cross. Walk quickly and directly across the street; never move at a snail's pace or loiter in the street.

Parents who heed these tips will enhance the safety of their children, preventing them from becoming involved in accidents as they make the hazardous journey.

1/58th maneuvers through exercise

By Stephen Guthrie

The 1/58th Inf Bn, 197th Inf Bde (Sep) moved out early one morning to participate in an advanced maneuver involving many units of the 197th Bde. The three-day field problem matched the units in an offensive/defensive posture requiring intensive tactical knowledge.

The first phase of the problem matched the unit against a combined armor/infantry attack, with the 69th Armor supplying the heavy tank support. The men had to be familiar with defensive tactics and have the ability to set up a screen, which is an advanced tactic designed to make contact with an enemy force without actually committing the unit to a heavy battle. This is a particularly complicated maneuver and involves a high degree of skill.

The second phase of training was devoted to attack principles using different types of movement to contact, or advancing to an enemy position. There is much more to an attack than simply yelling "charge" however. The most common attack patterns are two systems called overwatch. Captain Roland Skowronek, commander of Co B, 1/58th, explained the two overwatches and their use.

"First, we have bounding overwatch, when the vehicles travel in a series of bounds, or successive moves. This is quite effective as it allows those vehicles on the move a supporting element at all times. The second type is called travelling overwatch, when all the vehicles are moving at relatively the same speed in a column (vertical) or rank (horizontal) formation. This is very effective when speed is required."

After three grueling days of training, both day and night, the men were more than ready to abandon the field for a warm room and comfortable bunk. Lt. Col. Chittendon, commander, was "completely satisfied with the performance of the men in this problem. Training of this nature will not only sharpen the men for combat environment and conditions but it will also give us, the command, a clear indication of our units' strengths and weaknesses."

Constant surveillance must be maintained and the threat of dismounted infantry keeps Spec. 4 Jake W. Schmidt, 1/58th, 197th Inf Bde on his toes.

Admin, supply FTX offers important training

By Mike Daigle

With the activity involved in a normal field training exercise (FTX) the importance of administration and logistics may be overshadowed by tactical and security operations.

That was the theme behind last week's administration and logistics FTX undertaken by the 197th Inf Bde S-1 (Admin) and S-4 (Supply) sections.

One of the primary functions of the S-1 in combat would be monitoring personnel strength of the separate units. In as realistic an exercise as possible, the units were instructed to inform the S-1 of losses as would probably occur in actual combat. This information would then be relayed to the Adjutant General (AG) office, who would then handle the details of their replacements.

Maj. Theresa H. Netherton, Brigade S-1 officer, had this to say about the administrative log-x, "a major misconception made by many of the soldiers of this unit is the actual function of the S-1 in a combat situation. This exercise demonstrates how difficult it is to keep an accurate account of the personnel status of your unit."

S-4 logistics has a somewhat similar requirement; however instead of men it has the responsibility of replacing material, along with food for the soldiers. "A serious problem," says lst Lt. Louis W. Jeffrey, S-4 officer, "is replacing critical material (i.e. food, munitions, etc) in a timely fashion. In order for the S-4 to be effective we must be completely aware of the combat situation at all times — even more than most commanders."

In order for the combined arms concept to work, each soldier has to be highly trained in his specialty. Training like this is what helps make the modern American soldier the best in the world.

Put safety first this Labor Day

If you are an E-5 or below, less than 30 years old, driving on a two lane road on post or within 50 miles of post on a clear day or night and you have been drinking, are not wearing a seat belt and are exceeding the speed limit. . .you are a perfect candidate to be involved in a fatal automobile or motorcycle accident before you ever reach your destination.

This profile of a typical privately owned vehicle accident fatality has been compiled from analysis of statistics maintained by the Fort Benning Safety Office. Vehicle accidents continue to be the major cause of fatal accidental injuries among military personnel stationed or training at Fort Benning. This FY 12 Fort Benning soldiers have already died in ten privately owned vehicle (POV) accidents. Although the circumstances surrounding each accident are different, analysis reveals several factors common to some or all of the accidents.

Eleven of the 12 victims (92%) were less than 30 years old. This high proportion of young victims is largely due to the population structure of Fort Benning although, as insurance companies have long understood, young male drivers do comprise a high hazard group. In conjunction with the age factor, eight of the 12 victims were E-5's or below.

We have all heard many times that alcohol and driving do not mix. Despite the constant warnings given, at least five of the ten drivers involved in fatal accidents chose to ignore these warnings by drinking immediately prior to driving.

Eight of the ten accidents occurred on four lane divided highways.

Only two of the accidents occurred farther than 50 miles from post. Most drivers are less cautious on familiar roads than they are when taking a long trip over unfamiliar roads; therefore drivers are much more likely to be involved in an accident close to home than on an extended trip.

Nine of the ten drivers were exceeding the posted speed limit! Speed limits are established to protect you! They represent the maximum safe speed for a stretch of road under ideal conditions. If you choose to ignore them you better worry about more than getting a ticket. You may end up losing control of your vehicle and running off the road as did six of the ten drivers.

If you recognize any of your driving habits in the discussion above - BEWARE: It will only take one mistake to make you the 13th privately owned vehicle fatality this year. Don't gamble with death. DRIVE DEFENSIVELY — DON'T LET YOUR HOLIDAY END IN A CRASH.

OPEN FRIDAY TILL 8 P.M.

Classes offered on post

During off-duty hours, Fort Benning soldiers can lay aside their uniforms and pick up books and pencils to become students at Columbus College. Evening classes are offered at Fort Benning and on the campus in North Columbus.

Early fall quarter registration for Kelley Hill will be Sept. 6 from 9 a.m. until noon. Soldiers at Harmony Church may register Sept. 6 from 1 p.m. until 4. All other soldiers on post can register in Bldg. 35, Room 329, Sept. 7-15. Late registration Sept. 18-19 will coincide with late registration at the college; soldiers can complete late registration in Bldg. 35.

Evening classes begin Sept. 14, with daytime classes starting Sept. 18.

Courses offered through the Columbus College Fort Benning Center are $75 per five-quarter course, or $15 for one quarter hour. Eligible military personnel may utilize Veteran Education Benefits or receive Army Tuition Assistance. VA 22-1990a and DA 2171 forms are available at all education centers on post.

Information on registration and class schedules on post is available from Paul Hackett, director, Bldg. 35, 568-8668.

Savings bonds issued

The sale of U.S. Savings Bonds, heavily patronized by federal civilian and military employees, was temporarily halted last week when the U.S. reached its debt ceiling. But Congress on August 4 increased the debt limit and the treasury department is again issuing the bonds.

All bonds purchased during August will collect interest as of August 1, according to the Treasury Department.

Allotments for bonds were collected during the freeze, according to a spokesman for the Army finance and accounting office, in anticipation of an increase of the debt ceiling and on the advice of the treasury.

Ranger graduation ceremony scheduled today

By Marshall Jones

The graduation ceremony for ROTC Ranger Class 2 is scheduled for today at 11 a.m. on Todd Field/the Ranger Department. Brigadier General Will Hill Tankersley, U.S. Army Reserve, will be the guest speaker.

Cadet Chris A.Hawkins of the U.S. Military Academy will receive the William O. Darby Award as the Distinguished Honor Graduate of the class.

The Merril's Marauders Award will go to Cadet Jeffrey S. MacIntire of Tennessee Technical University for achieving the highest combines land navigation score and peer rating.

The top all-around ROTC graduate is Cadet Gary E. McCullough of the University of Dayton, who receives the Camp Commander's Leadership Award and the Association of the U.S. Army Medal for ROTC Advanced Camp Achievement.

There are three honor graduates in Class 2: Cadets Paul R. Capstick, Wid S. Crawford and John F. Rouisse, all of West Point.

The platoon leadership awards go to the top man in each platoon. The winners are: 1st platoon, Cadet Michael W. Fuller, Oklahoma State University; 2nd Platoon, Cadet William M. Wilkinson, University of Georgia; 3rd Platoon, Cadet Samuel T. Brooks, University of Georgia; 4th Platoon, Cadet James E. Pollard, University of Texas.

Cadet Fuller also won the Military Proficiency Award. The Physical Proficiency Award went to Cadet William C. Staub of Brigham Young University.

Woman soldier leads class

By Marshall Jones

A soldier, stationed here since basic training, who plans to make the Army her career, has made the highest score ever in the Primary Leadership Course (PLC) of the Non-Commissioned Officer School of Instruction, TSB.

For being first in her class, Spec. 4 Joan R. Saltee was named distinguished honor graduate at graduation ceremonies August 25 in Marshall Auditorium. She scored 699 out of a possible 700 points in the course.

Saltee has been with the School Brigade as an athletics and recreation specialist since November 1975, when she completed basic training at Fort McClellan, Ala. She and her husband, Staff Sgt. Scott T. Saltee, reenlisted recently for the maximum six years. Staff Sgt. Saltee is training to be a drill sergeant.

Spec. 4 Saltee enjoyed the leadership course, and thinks she learned a lot because she payed attention to the instruction. Most of the course is spent in the classroom where the duties of a first-line supervisor are taught. The students learn to make decisions, counsel underlings and make recommendations for awards and punishments.

The class also spent some time outside during the recent wet weather, negotiating the leadership reaction course, land navigation training, physical training and drill and ceremony practice.

Spec. 4 Saltee is a graduate of Corinth High School, Corinth, N.Y. Her parents, James R. Graham and Mrs. Deolores R. Curtis, live in Corinth. Her husband's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Donald Saltee of Canby, Minn. The young couple have a seven-month-old daughter.

Benning couple act in production

Three members of the Fort Benning community will be among the cast of approximately 50 persons when the Springer Theatre Company presents "Kismet" at the Springer Opera House Sept. 14-30.

First Lieutenant James C. Carter, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, and his wife, Darlene, will perform in the chorus, as merchants and nobles, reciting some one liners and dancing.

The couple made their area acting debut in May when they performed in the Columbus 150-year celebration pageant.

Also performing in the production as one of four slave girls in the main dance group, will be Linda Wright, wife of Captain William B. Wright, who is here taking the Infantry Officers Advance Course. Mrs. Wright was involved in many Fort Campbell productions before coming to Benning.

The '78-'79 Springer season opener, "Kismet," with its large chorus and dance ensemble under the direction of Michael Whaley, has one of the largest casts ever assembled for a Springer production. The setting is ancient Baghdad and that will mean scenes of oriental splendor with bazaars, caliphs, beggars, and harem girls.

Romantic ballads such as "Strangers in Paradise", "Baubles, Bangles and Beads," "This is my Beloved" and many more will be performed under the musical direction of Florence Hines and orchestra direction of Harry Kruger.

Tot Town open house slated

In observance of the 10th anniversary of Tot Town Nursery and the 50th anniversary of the Daughters of the United States Army, (DUSA), a tea and open house will be held at the Main Post nursery, September 10, from 2 - 4 p.m. All interested parents are cordially invited to attend.

DUSA was founded at Ft. Benning on January 20, 1928, when 87 members met at the quarters of Mrs. Charles D. Roberts. It soon became a national organization and in 1932 the headquarters was moved to Washington, D. C.

Since its birth, the Fort Benning chapter has helped support various activities, Army Distaff Hall, Youth Activities Center and the Learning Abilities Center, to name a few. It has also provided college scholarships and sponsored Junior Army Daughters.

In 1957 DUSA took up the sponsorship of Tot Town Nursery. With funds raised from their annual 49er parties, DUSA erected the Main Post Nursery 10 years ago and the Mall Annex five years ago.

TRADOC softball tourney winds up

By Betty Zimmerman

The men's softball team from Fort Lee, Va. revenged an earlier loss to Fort Jackson, S.C. by defeating them twice in the finals to capture the TRADOC Eastern Division Championship last Friday. The women's title went to an undefeated Fort Jackson team who eliminated Fort Gordon, Ga. 8-4.

The Jackson women jumped off to a 3-0 lead the first inning due to a homerun with one on by Vivian Lawson and a triple by Sue Prues that scored Pat Bianco. Becky Salotar tripled in the second inning and Jackson went ahead 5-0. Two more runs were added in the bottom of the fourth when Donna Golden hit the first of her two homeruns. She connected for another one in the sixth inning.

Gordon finally came up with two runs in the fifth when Monica Sicard doubled in two. They added two more in the sixth when Deb Logan drove in one and later scored herself.

In the men's first game, Lee broke a 3-3 tie in the sixth inning as Vince Pillari cleared the fence with one on giving Lee a 5-3 edge. They held Jackson scoreless from the third on.

Lee made it clear from the start that they intended to win the "if" game. They scored two in the first, one in the second, two in the fourth and three in the seventh. Their defense held Jackson to one run until the sixth inning when they exploded for four. Jackson added one more in the seventh but that only gave them six to Lee's eight.

Over the fence homers were hit by Jackson's Ray Buxton and Lee's Ron Jordan during the final game of the tournament.

Doughboys fall in first game, 16-7

Story and Photos by Deb Hilgeman

They say lightening never strikes twice in the same place but try convincing the Fort Benning Doughboys of that. For the second year in a row, the Doughboys lost their season opener under their own lights.

The 16-7 loss to the University of North Alabama Saturday night at Doughboy Stadium is only the second defeat the Doughboys have suffered in two seasons and 13 games. Last year, the Doughboys fell to Livingston University 22-7 in the first game of the season but went on to win the remaining eight games of the 1977 season.

The scoreless first quarter of Saturday's game was basically a defensive battle as neither offense could mount a sustained drive.

Early in the second quarter, the North Alabama offense drove deep into Doughboy territory but at the 23-yard line the Doughboy defense held, forcing North Alabama to settle for a 33-yard field goal instead of a touchdown.

With 9:48 remaining in the first half, the Doughboys made it on the board with seven points of their own. A recovered fumble gave the home team the ball deep in North Alabama territory. From the 30-yard line, quarterback Joe Duenas threw a 7-yard pass to tight end Dave Williams. In the next play, fullback Joe Cerv ran the ball 13 yards, followed by a 6-yard loss when Duenas got sacked on the 16-yard line.

Following an incomplete pass, Duenas was able to hit Williams with a pass on the 4-yard line, setting up a fourth and goal situation.

The Doughboys threw caution to the wind and chose to go for a touchdown. With Duenas rolling to his right, he threw a touchdown pass to tailback Erogies Grigley. Wallace Bowles added the extra point, setting the score at 7-3.

In the second half, North Alabama came alive and was able to move the ball while the Doughboys were held in check.

Half way through the third quarter, North Alabama's quarterback, John Grubb, capped an 80-yard scoring drive with a 4-yard run. The point after was missed but North Alabama led the game 9-7.

With 7:27 left in the final quarter, North Alabama was able to capitalize on a blocked punt. Despite two 15-yard penalties, the North Alabama offense was able to move the ball 37 yards into the Doughboy end zone. The point after was good, making the score 16-7 and thus cutting short the hopes of a Doughboy comeback.

With less than five minutes remaining in the game, the Doughboys were able to mount one more offensive drive, to the North Alabama 26-yard line, but were forced to give up the ball on downs.

Despite the disappointing loss before 5,000 fans, a number of Doughboy players gave an excellent performance. Linebacker Jeff Clark, safety Kenney Burkes, tight end Dave Williams and fullback Joe Cerv showed a lot of professionalism on the field.

Doughboy Head Coach Jack Barham admitted disappointment over the number of penalties incurred but attributed it to the opponents ability to "kill our offense." Coach Barham added that the Doughboys were working hard this week and predicted a tough battle against Troy State.

All in all, the outlook is positive for tomorrow's 7:30 p.m. game against a tough Troy State team in Doughboy Stadium.

Senate committee sets dietary goals

By Marcia L. Beasley
Registered Dietitian

"IDEAL DIET?"

Yes, after more than two years, the United States Senate's Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs has worked to established an ideal diet. This diet they call: "United States Dietary Goals." These "goals" are changes in the American diet needed to improve the probability of protection against diseases which cause the greatest number of deaths in the U.S. The Committee members and those testifying at the hearings included the country's leading medical and nutrition authorities. Extensive surveys and studies, review of professional literature and reports were considered by the committee. Their revised dietary goals represent the current collective expertise for — THE GENERAL UNITED STATES POPULATION.

Although a recent presentation at Fort Benning provided the audience with an individual's personal observations concerning an "Ideal Diet," that diet should not be confused with the recent guidelines provided by the Senate's Committee.

REVISED U.S. DIETARY GOALS

The purpose of the report prepared by the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs was to point out that the eating patterns of this century represent as critical a public health concern as any now before us.

The seven dietary goals set in the current report include:

- AVOID OVERWEIGHT, consume only as much energy (calories) as is expended; if overweight, decrease caloric intake and increase energy expenditure.
- INCREASE THE CONSUMPTION OF COMPLEX CARBOHYDRATES and "naturally occurring" sugars from about 28 percent of total caloric intake to about 48 percent.
- REDUCE THE CONSUMPTION OF REFINED AND OTHER PROCESSED SUGARS by about 45 percent to account for about ten percent of the total caloric intake.
- REDUCE SATURATED FAT CONSUMPTION to account for about 10 percent of the total energy intake and balance that with polyunsaturated and monounsaturated fats, which should account for about 10 percent of energy intake each.
- REDUCE CHOLESTEROL COMSUMPTION to about 300 grams a day.
- LIMIT INTAKE OF SODIUM by reducing the intake of salt to about five grams a day.

To achieve these goals, it was recommended that Congress require foods to be labeled with their fat, sugar, cholesterol, salt and additive content and that Congress provide money for a public education program in nutrition.

It is significant to note that this revised report recognized the controversy over whether dietary changes alone, such as those suggested in these goals, can reduce the leading causes of death in the U.S.

It also pointed out that individuals, in exercising freedom of dietary choice, should recognize that these dietary recommendations do not guarantee improved protection from killer diseases. They do, however, increase the probability of improved protection.

Furthermore, individuals are cautioned to very carefully evaluate source and accuracy of nutritional information, guarding against taking nutritional information out of context, applying specific scientific studies to general population groups or making correlations which have not been demonstrated for the particular group of individuals in question.

Alexander visits post

Clifford L. Alexander Jr.

Secretary of the Army Clfford L. Alexander Jr., and his Civilian Aide-at-Large, Vincent H. Cohen of Washington, D.C., will make a one-day visit to Fort Benning today. They will arrive at Lawson Army Airfield at 9:30 a.m.

It will make the second time that Alexander has visited this post since he took office.

While here, Alexander and Cohen will receive a briefing on One Station Unit Training and observe Infantry Training Brigade,Primary Non-Commissioned Officer Course, and Infantry Officers' Advanced Course training.

Cohen will depart at about 8:45 p.m. He will travel with elements of the 608th Ord Co, 36th Engr Gp, en route to Germany for the Redeployment of Forces to Germany (REFORGER) exercise. REFORGER is a training exercise designed to test the Army's capability to redeploy combat units to Europe in support of NATO forces.

CFC fund drive begins September 17

By Betty Zimmerman

46 voluntary health, welfare and youth agencies in the Tri-community area receive aid from CFC drive.

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) will open September 17 with a $300,000 goal set to benefit the International Service Agency, United Way and the National Health Agency.

The funds collected will provide financial assistance to 46 voluntary health, welfare and youth agencies, some of which are in the Tri-Community area.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERVICE AGENCIES help people around the world who cannot help themselves. Included in this group are CARE, Project HOPE, International Rescue Committee, Save the Children Federation. The American Kor-Asian Foundation and Planned Parenthood-World Population.

UNITED WAY AGENCIES serve people within the local community such as Fort Benning's Community Activities Association, Muscogee and Russell County Red Cross, Columbus and Phenix City Salvation Army, the United Cerebral Palsy Center, the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouts, and the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts. The Urban League, Goodwill Industries, Tenth Street Community Center, and five Boys Clubs are also partially supported by CFC.

In 1977, the local United Way agencies served nearly 97,000 individuals through their programs. Other agencies aided by them include the Girls Clubs, Shepherd Home, Travelers Aid, Family Counseling Center, Legal Aid Society — Columbus, Mental Health Association - Russell County, Crippled Children and Adults - Russell County, the YMCA and the Listening Eyes School for the Deaf.

THE NATIONAL HEALTH AGENCIES provide research programs and assistance to the less fortunate, locally and nationally. Your donations will help support the National Association for Mental Health, March of Dimes, the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, the National Association for Retarded Citizens, the National Kidney Foundation, the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, the American Cancer Society, the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, the American Diabetes Association, the American Heart Association, the Arthritis Foundation and the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Donators are reminded that payroll deductions are available and you may designate all or a portion of your contribution to the agency of your choice.

AMIC changes hours

Martin Army Hospital has just completed a study of the Acute Minor Illness Clinic to determine if its hours facilitate maximum patient care. The study revealed that the last two hours of the day were the least productive and required exorbitant amounts of resources in reference to patient treatment. The new AMIC hours are 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. This will allow MAH to better serve patients by insuring maximum staffing during the peak demand hours. In addition, one AMOSIST will be placed in the Emergency Room to handle those patients reporting to the ER 5:30 p.m. to midnight with acute minor illness symptoms.

Red Cross Training class set

The American Red Cross will conduct their Fall Volunteer Training class on September 18 at the TIC Chapel Annex starting at 8:45 a.m. Interviews will be held at the Red Cross Field Office, Main Post, on September 13 and 15 from 9 a.m. until noon. Volunteers are urgently needed and this is an opportunity to become involved and be of service to your community. Volunteers can serve in many areas — hospital, field office, and schools. For further information, call 545-5194 or 544-3213.

Insurance cut implemented

Civilian employees, receiving their October 5 checks for the pay period ending September 23, will notice a slight increase in pay.

This increase is due to the decreased rates for both regular and optional insurance coverage. Rates of withholding from employees' pay for regular life insurance will decrease from 35.5 cents to 25.5 cents bi-weekly per $1,000 of insurance. Rates for optional insurance are reduced under age-adjusted rates.

According to the Civilian Service Commission, costs of the program have declined for a number of reasons, citing sharply reduced mortality rates and high investment yields as two examples.

REFORGER units deploy

Approximately 160 men of the 608th Ord Co, 36th Engr Gp departed Fort Benning Wednesday for Germany where they are taking part in a Redeployment of Forces to Germany (REFORGER) exercise. REFORGER is a training exercise to test the Army's capability to redeploy combat forces to Europe in Support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Approximately 130 members of the 546th Med Co, 34th Med Bn, left August 30 for the Reforger Exercise. A portion of the company will return to Benning on September 29 and the remainder are due back on October 5.

The 608th Ord Co will be commanded by Capt. Emory E. Atwell. Commanding the 546th Med Co will be Capt. Barry Williams.

Personnel of the 608th Ord Co will also return in two groups, one on September 29 and the others on October 10-11.

283rd Army Band has many faces

By Betty Zimmerman

Ft. Benning's 283rd Army Band fulfilled 459 commitments in the six-month period of January-June 1978. That averages out to two gigs a day including weekends and holidays.

The band has several groups although many of the same members are in more than one group. Thirty-three people make up the marching band and the concert band. The stage band has 18 players and there is also a smaller unit called the combo ensemble. Buglers must support military funerals all over the southeast and drummers support the various pass-in-review rehearsals. Piano and guitar players are also sent out occasionally to provide cocktail music for special events.

The marching band maintains a repertoire of 25 marches and change their selections every six months. They support many post functions such as change of commands, graduations, retirement reviews, football games, class openings and pass-in-reviews for visiting dignitaries.

The concert band has performed for many special events. They played in Atlanta for Prince Charles' welcoming ceremony and the President of Zambia's visit. They also traveled to Brunswick Naval Air Station in Maine to play for a Navy change of command.

The stage band performs at dances, Christmas dinners, AUSA picnics, United Fund dinners and on the Salute to Armed Forces Rozzelle Show on local television.

The combo plays for VIP receptions and also responds to many recruiting tour requests.

Despite all the performances, the band members still practice daily on an individual basis. They also have theory classes one hour a week and rehearsals six hours per week.

Their unit is run much like a separate company although they are in Headquarters Command's Co. A. The band has a first sergeant, duty sergeant, operations NCO, clerk, supply sergeant, training NCO, drum major and band master. They run two miles daily and five every Friday for physical training.

Various uniforms are needed for the many events they attend. Therefore, they must constantly have ready dress blues, class As and fatigues as well as shiny shoes and helmet liners. Their work involves many week-end and holiday hours along with the normal duty days. Even their leaves are limited to two mass leaves a year — once in July and again in December.

Bethel Series set

The Religious Education Center will host 90-minute classes on the Bethel Series at building 2605 beginning September 17 at 5:30 p.m.

This 19-year-old series is an International Bible study program administered by the Adult Christian Education Foundation (ACEF).

Orientation clinics are attended by pastor, chaplains and Christian education directors. They then return to their churches and posts to teach the overview study of the Bible, which becomes the foundation for continuing adult study.

Benning's Chaplain (Maj.) David A. Giles has just returned from Madison, Wis., where he attended a two-week orientation clinic of the Bethel Series. He will teach the classes here.

Since 1959, more than 4,000 congregations, representing 17 denominations, have involved more than half a million lay teachers and students in the Bethel series. In the military, about 160 chaplains are using the bethel series as a phase of their adult study classes in the U.S., Japan, Korea, Germany and Iran.

The public is invited and further information may be obtained by calling Mrs. John Waldrop, 545-2366 or 544-4594.

Soldiers train for NBC hazards

By Pat Jones

You find your friend lying unconscious, he has pin-pointed pupils, and is perspiring heavily. You are in a chemically contaminated area and he is not wearing a protective mask. What would you do?

This is but one example of the task encountered by the soldiers of the 72nd Eng Co, 197th Inf Bde (Sep) during NBC (Nuclear, Biological, Chemical) hazard training conducted on Kelley Hill last week.

The test situation described above shows symptoms of a nerve agent. In the situation given you must first give the casualty a nerve agent antidote; then start artificial respiration immediately. In a toxic environment a soldier must be given artificial respiration by either the mask-to-mouth or the back-pressure arm-lift method.

"The training was aimed towards bringing the individual NBC standards to an acceptable level. Everyone took an interest and tried hard to complete each phase of the test," said 2nd Lt. Rick Wilson. With nine different stations the training ranged from checking equipment readiness to emergency treatment of casualties and immediate action in the event of attack of an NBC nature.

"I think the men performed very well. We had about 60% of our company training and 95% of those personnel received go's on all nine station," concluded Wilson.

Hispanic Week Proclamation

The week of September 10-16 has been selected by the Department of the Army as National Hispanic Heritage Week.

The Hispanic Americans have been one of the great contributors to our Country. Among their contributions are their participation in the defense and growth of our great Nation: as soldiers, they have distinguished themselves on the battlefields; as citizens, they have been instrumental in the attainment of our economic, social, and democratic goals.

The Hispanic Americans possess a rich culture. This culture, a product of their Spanish origin and historical experience, is an integral part of the American heritage.

So that we might become more aware of the contributions that the Hispanic Americans have made to our Country and their culture, I do hereby proclaim the week of September 10-16 as Hispanic Heritage Week at Fort Benning, and urge all citizens to observe and participate in the week's events.

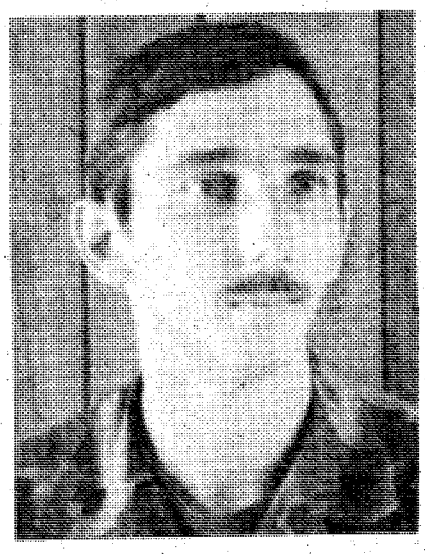
Glad you asked

What do you consider to be important factors necessary in establishing good working conditions?

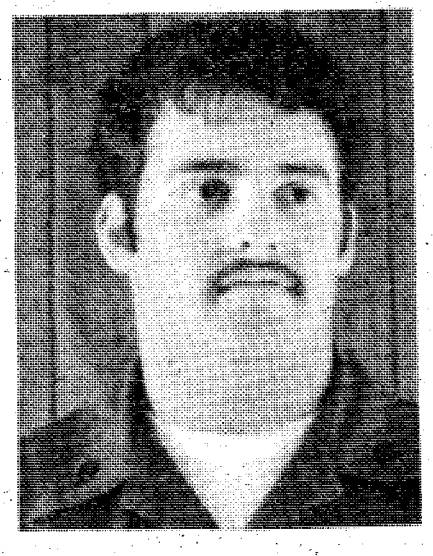


Sgt. Robert F. Milliken, Co. B., (Abn. Ranger) 1/29th.

Doing a job that you enjoy, respecting co-workers' experience and views (although you might not always agree), completing a job and knowing that you have done something worthwhile, are vital conditions in establishing a comfortable working atmosphere.

Spec. 6 Gertrude Harris, HHC, 197th Inf. Bde. (Sep.)

Tact, courtesy and understanding play a key role in working with others. Each individual should carry his fair share of the workload. Lending a hand as a team to get the job done, respecting others' ideas and suggestions and treating all in a fair and impartial manner are also important in establishing good conditions.



Spec. 4 Steve Easton, Co D. 43rd Engr. Bn.

At company level, we need officers with more experience in working with NCO's and lower-enlisted servicemembers. I think that if these officers had this experience, the entire company would be more proficient and complete more projects quickly and efficiently.

Capt. William B. Neal III, Co. A., 197th (Spt.) Bn.

Atmosphere. Attitudes differ among people who work in old buildings and those who work in newer, more comfortable buildings that have curtains, freshly painted rooms, and are otherwise neat and orderly. Additionally, breaks without a feeling of guilt should be permitted.

Letters to the Editor

Road hazards defined

Our highway construction people have really done it to us this time. First, they create an extremely hazardous situation at the point where they have joined the Bypass with 1st Division Road. In particular, they have placed one exit from the southbound lane of the bypass right next to one entrance to the Bypass' northbound lane. And then they have hidden the northbound entrance so well that a driver cannot see it until he has completed his turn from 1st Division Road.

On top of that, our planners have closed that portion of Sante Fe Road between 1st Division Road the main mall area, although there seems to be no logical reason for this action. (For that matter, I have never understood why our planners took down the bridge over Upatoi Creek on Engineer Road behind the hospital before a new bridge could be erected.

Finally, for those residents of the main Post who use the 1st Division-Bypass route to get to the main mall, don't plan on coming back the same way—there is no way to get from Marne Road onto the southbound lanes of the Bypass. In short, we have only three-fourths of an entrance-exit diamond, and there are no signs that the fourth is going to be constructed.

I sincerely hope that our planners will again look at their plans and at what they have wrought—and will seek solutions that will aid those hundreds of us who must travel these routes every day.

Respectively,
Albert N. Garland

The following is a response by the Director of Facilities Engineering (DFAE).

The inconvenience caused the Fort Benning Community during the construction of the Lindsay Creek Bypass project will fortunately be minimized since the contractor is completing the work approximately one year ahead of schedule.

Specific comments concerning your remarks are:

DFAE was already aware that even with the present signs and highway markings, the entrance to the north bound bypass lane from First Division Road is more difficult to negotiate than it should be. A solution to the problem is currently being worked out and drivers should soon see an improvement in the Bypass entrance.

Sante Fe Road between the Mall and First Division Road was temporarily closed for performance of work included in the Bypass project; however, this section of Sante Fe Road was reopened to traffic on September 1. An alternate route from the Mall to First Division Road is available via the Family Housing Access Road which parallels the Bypass and First Division Road. This alternate route from the Mall to Main Post was available during the temporary closure of Sante Fe Road.

The Upatoi Creek bridge on Sante Fe Road behind the hospital was damaged due to flooding, necessitating its closure. This closure was, therefore, unrelated to the Bypass construction. This bridge was never intended to be replaced since the Bypass eliminated the need for that portion of Sante Fe Road behind the hospital crossing Upatoi Creek.

The project just being completed represents the last increment of the Bypass construction of Fort Benning. There would have been no point in providing a south bound Bypass entrance at Marne Road for such a short distance (less than one mile) to First Division Road when two other routes were available, namely: Sante Fe Road and the Family Housing Access Road.

The improvement of traffic flow at Custer Road and the Bypass and at the Mall and Marne Road area is already apparent. It was to Fort Benning's advantage that Congress saw fit to fund the last increment of Bypass construction earlier than originally programmed.

A 'Fair Play' attitude needed

This is kind of a gripe with the U. S. Army. Allow me to tell you my side of the story.

Last year, I played on my company's basketball team and played four games of basketball with them. At the fifth game, the referees said I couldn't play because I was female. (This is the

One evening I went anyway. We had only four players and would forfeit unless I played, but they still said no. What I would like to know is that since we are considered to be female "soldiers," why can't we participate in contact sports with male soldiers?

"Uncle Sam needs us."

Patricia & Sheltra

Sergeant Robert Sheltra is an infantryman. He reenlisted because he enjoys his work and his life in the Army. His wife, Patty, agrees. "I like Army life. The benefits are good. The medical help. And the travel. I've gone to more places, met more people than ever before. I have a lot of friends here in the Army. My husband enjoys his job. He likes the people he works with. I've always liked the Army. I would encourage anyone to reenlist."

Maybe your husband should have a chat with his career counselor. He may find out just how much Uncle Sam needs him.

Keep a good family in the Army.

Ft. Benning to begin clinical pastoral training

By Joyce Walker

Fort Benning is one of two posts in the U. S. Army that has begun a Clinical Pastoral Education Training program. Fort Hood is the other post where a clinical pastoral training program has been organized. The program began here last month.

Before this, the Army had always conducted its clinical pastoral education programs in hospitals such as Brooke, Letterman, Walter Reed and Fitzsimmons Army Medical Centers — and at selected civilian institutions, according to Chaplain (Maj.) Max Burgin, clinical pastoral education supervisor.

The Custer Terrace Chapel is the setting for Benning's training. Four chaplains spend half of their day in classes on interpersonal relations, civilian and military, and theology. The other half of the day is spent in doing ministry.

"Two of the men will be visiting in the homes of military families at night, not to get the people to come to church," assured Burgin, "but to see what we, as ministers can do for them. One will work in the hospital and another will work with a unit," he continued. They will all rotate their roles to get experience in each area.

The chaplain plays an integral party in Army life, especially in helping people meet and overcome crises, including those caused by illness and injury.

The clinical pastoral education program is designed to help the chaplain come to understand human behavior better — both the beliefs and concepts of each person he meets, plus the relationship of that person's feelings, as well as his own, toward the rapidly changing rules in society today."

"We use sessions in interpersonal relations to look into ourselves — to see how we reacted to the patient problem — and then to determine from discussions with others in the class if our reaction stemmed from a genuine objectively concern for the patient. Or did it come more from our own personal convictions — from what we thought we heard the patient say," explained Burgin.

Chaplains (Lt. Col.) Jack Wood, (Maj.) George Hattle, (Maj.) Floyd Lacey and Capt.) Glenn Fasanella who are assigned to the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School in Fort Wadsworth, N.Y. will be here one year undergoing the basic clinical pastoral education course.

Some of the programs objectives include development of skills in pre-marital and divorce counseling, refinement of interviewing and pastoral diagnostic skills; refinement of skills in individual therapy, personal growth and rehabilitation; refinement of skills in crisis intervention; refinement of skills in group therapy; and the development of consultation and educational skills to be used in local parishes in the areas of supportive care, family life education and mental health referral.

His awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Bronze Star, Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters, the Meritorous Service Medal and the Army Commendation Medal.

In his departing speech, Shugart commented, "Working with the cadre and seeing them develop AIT soldiers into infantrymen is the most satisfying job I've had."

Crusader's scrimmage scheduled for Sunday

The 1978 Crusader football team (Pee Wee) of Lavoie Manor has begun practice for their opening day scrimmage o Sunday. The Crusaders (8-2 in 77) have an unusual amount of new talent.

Taking the controls from retiring Larry Smith will be Dave Holly, who was the Crusaders defensive coach last year.

Two strong prospects for the Crusaders are Sean Smith, linebacker, and Baxter Barber quarterback, both are returning to Coach Holly for a second season. Other outstanding prospects are the "Wild Wydrs's" Terry and brother Tony, both well known around the league. "Getting a pair of brothers with their caliber is rare. They work unusually well together and I plan to use this ability as much as possible," Coach Holly noted.

Rounding off the roster for this season are Robert Nolan, Ray Parrish, Gerald Waters, Robbie Barnett, Tracy Odom, Napoleon Robinson, George London, Steve Campbell, James Steen, Harold McLain, Byran Harris, Milt Ferguson, George Styles, Tracy Rucker, Dana Blake, Pat Croley, Frank Glover and Troy Donaldson.

Trojans bake Doughboys 21-12

By Seth Hamilton

It's two in a row for the Doughboys. Unfortunately, they're not victories as the Trojans of Troy State topped the Doughboys 21-12 Saturday night at Doughboy Stadium to give the Benning team their second defeat in as many games this season.

It was a game full of "what ifs." What if the Doughboys hadn't fumbled the ball away twice in their own territory to set up two Trojan touchdowns? What if two Joe Duenas touchdown passes hadn't been dropped? What if the Doughboys best play of the game (kicker Walter Bridges faked a punt on the Trojans 48-yard line and threw a touchdown bomb to tight end Dave Williams) hadn't been called back due to a Doughboys penalty? Unfortunately the "what ifs" don't put points on the board.

The game was plagued by mistakes as each team fumbled the ball away three times and penalty flags were being dropped all evening long.

The Trojans scored first late in the first quarter as running back Boyd Grant raced in from the Doughboy 10-yard line on an end around. The Trojans, who had recovered a Doughboy fumble to set up the score, missed the extra point and the score stood 6-0.

After Trojan quarterback Eddie Rohrbaugh hit receiver Marion Brown with a 36-yard touchdown pass with one minute gone in the second quarter, it looked as though Doughboy fans could leave early to avoid the after game traffic jams.

But before the first half could end, Doughboy quarterback Joe Duenas marched the Doughboys 70 yards downfield to a 4th and 3 situation on the Trojans 6-yard line. The Doughboys decided to go for it and it payed off as Duenas hit Dave Williams over the middle for a touchdown. The extra point kick was wide, but the Doughboys were back within striking range at 14-6.

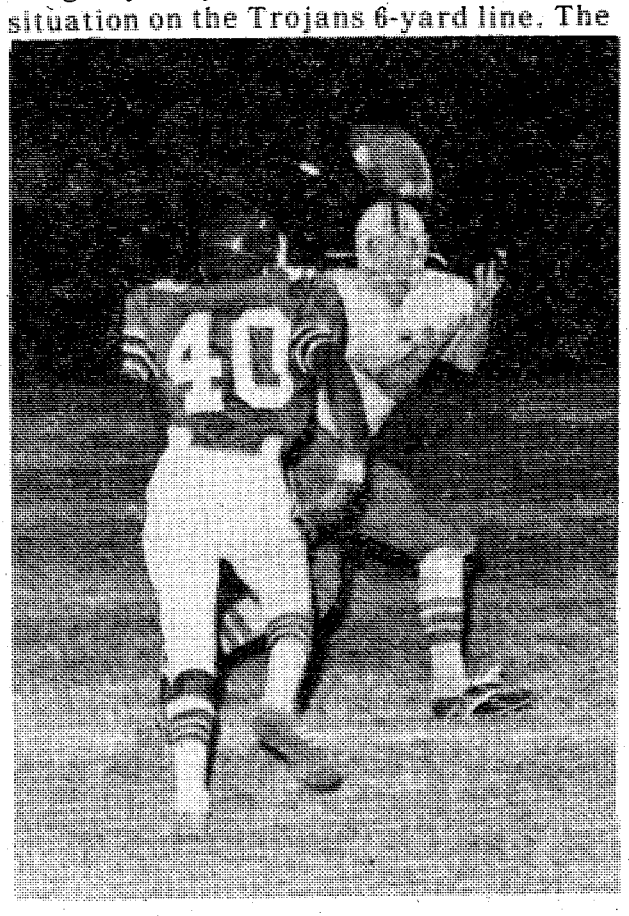
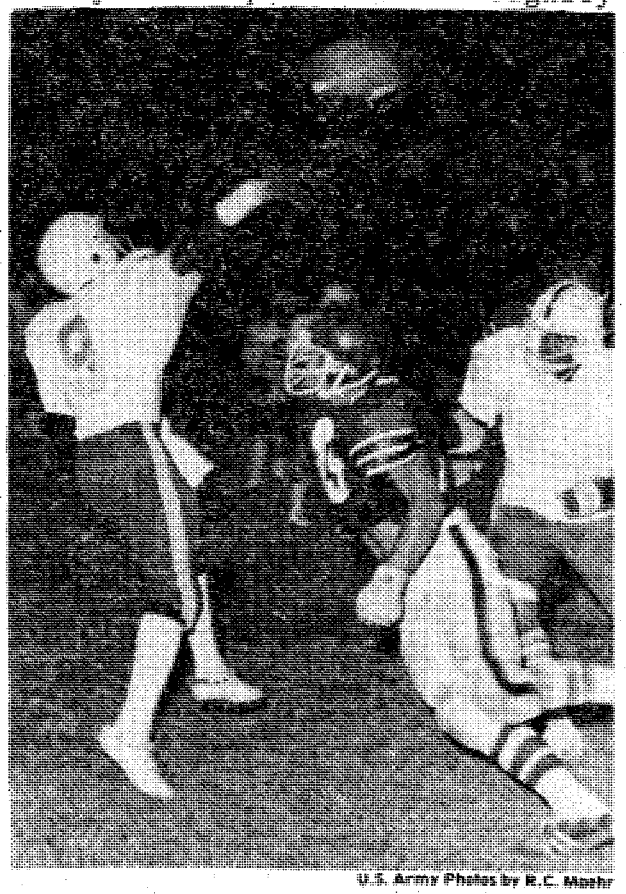
There is no place to hide for Doughboy quarterback Joe Duenas as he prepares to meet the Trojan defense — the hard way.

Troy State capitalized on a Doughboy turnover in the third quarter as Grant rushed 38 yards for the score. The point after was good and with the score 21-6, the Doughboys had to start something quick.





U.S. Army Photos by R.C. Mosher

Doughboy tackle George Brown (71) moves in to aid reserve quarterback Gerald Morring as he hefts a pass . . . . into the waiting hands of (81) Dave Williams

With six minutes left to play, it looked as though the Doughboys had come to life when Duenas pitched the ball out to reserve quarterback Gerald Morring who threw it long to, that's right, Dave Williams. The play covered 68 yards and made it first and 10 for the Doughboys on the Trojans 10-yard line. After missing three times, Duenas sprinted 10 yards around the end to make it 21-12.

At that point the Doughboys closed down shop and couldn't put together another score, but at the same time held the Trojans from scoring again.

Head Coach Jack Barham had mixed feelings about the game. "Last year people thought our schedule was too easy, now this year we're playing some quality college teams and it's going to be tougher." Coach Barham added that, "With the increase in competition, we will improve every game."

Maybe the Doughboys have learned something that will help them against Fort Valley State tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium. But whatever the outcome tomorrow, the Doughboys are building through experience and will be a better team because of the high level of competition they'll run into this season.

graduates of the Fort Leavenworth C&GSC.

The USAR program is also highly flexible. If an officer is given a permanent change of station prior to completing the course in Columbus, he may resume his studies without interruption at his duty station.

The same course of study is offered at all major military installations in the United States, and currently there are six such schools in Europe.

Should an officer be selected to attend the Ft. Leavenworth C&GSC after enrolling in the USAR program, he will be better prepared for the in-residence course than his contemporaries. The instruction is also compatible with the C&GSC's correspondence program should the student be transferred to an area in which a USAR school is not available.

Deadline for registration is October 3. For additional information contact Lt. Col. (USAR) G.F. Schladensky at 545-4796, Maj. (USAR) W.M. Pickard at 571-2357 or Maj. S. Demora at 545-2069.

Post troops join REFORGER '78

By Marti Henderson

Approximately 160 soldiers of the 608th Ord Co, 67th Maint Bn, 36th Engr Gp (Cbt) left last week to participate in the tenth annual deployment of forces to Germany (REFORGER 78) that began early this month.

Accompanying the 608th is Vincent Cohen, Civilian-Aid-at-Large to Secretary of the Army Clifford Alexander. Cohen left for Germany with the last contingent of the 608th late last Friday.

As in the past, the purpose of the REFORGER 78 exercise is to sharpen techniques for receiving, equipping, assembling, and deploying Army units earmarked to fulfill United States commitments to NATO and those made in bilateral agreements between the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States.

According to Lt. Col. Perry C. Butler, commander, 67th Maint Bn, "The specific mission of the 608th is to provide ammunition supply support on an area basis. This is one of several logistics support units whose capabilities are crucial to successful defense of Western Europe."

The 608th Ord Co. is just one of many units scattered throughout the states participating in REFORGER 78. The primary Army elements

Bragg soldiers jump, train here

Approximately 500 soldiers of the 1st Bn (Airborne) 504th Inf, 82nd Airborne Div, Fort Bragg, N.C., will make a mass parachute jump, September 18, on Fort Benning's Fryar Field at 8 a.m.

Two hundred men of the battalion are already at Benning making preparations for three weeks of training in a new markmanship test.

The battalion will take part in marksmanship tests, participate in individual and collective training and conduct a Field Training Exercise during the three-weeks the unit remains at Benning.

Following the mass jump on the 18th, the battalion will stage a road march from the drop zone to its bivouac area at Victory Pond.

On September 19 at 5 p.m., the battalion will conduct retreat ceremonies on York Field. Fort Benning's 283rd Army Band will participate in the ceremony.

Beginning September 24, the battalion will take part in U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) tests involving marksmanship training with both the M16 rifle and the .45 caliber pistol.

The purpose of the comprehensive tests is to determine if a newly developed program of instruction by the USAMU will significantly improve the marksmanship skill of the individual soldier.

Approximately 200 members of the USAMU will be involved with the tests, with assistance provided by various departments of The Infantry School and the Army Research Institute. The tests will end September 30.

Shopping on post?
Follow dress code

If you are planning to go shopping at the commissary or Post Exchange activities here you might want to study up on the dress code regulations. The dress code at these stores has been taken lightly in the past, but a move is on to keep the "barefoot and T-shirt" look where it belongs. . .outdoors.

According to assistant Commissary Officer Joyce Lott, "We've always tried to enforce the dress code, but it's a hard thing to keep on top of." She added that in the future, "there are going to be a lot of people helping us out, including the Courtesy Patrol, Field Officer of the Day and Sergeant Major of the Week as well as the ID checkers at the door."

Just for the record, here are six basic "don'ts" of the dress code:

- NO T-shirts or other style of knitted shirts designed, sold or issued as undershirts.
- NO tank tops or muscle shirts (women can wear sleeveless blouses or sun dresses).
- NO barefeet or shower-shoes
- NO modified uniform items (cut-off fatigues or field jackets)
- NO mixed military uniforms
- And please ladies, NO curlers (covered or not).

Last year millions upon millions counted on us.

We're counting on you.

For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 100 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

Cross-training troops improves communication

By Marti Henderson

Every effort is currently being extended to keep the communication section of 36th Engr Gp at peak performance. This effort is achieved by cross-training personnel in a variety of commo-related jobs.

2nd Lt. John Bayless, Group commo officer, said "There are only slight differences in equipment, but the commo capabilities of 43rd Engr Bn Compared to that of the 67th Maint Bn are quite different."

The commo officer stated that "An engineer unit must be fully mobile, but a maintenance unit is more stabilized."

"Since commo is a necessary ingredient during training exercises or engineer projects, the men working in our commo are cross-trained. This means each man learns another related commo skill."

"This type of training increases the soldiers individual worth to the Army whether he is a radio operator or field wireman."

"The cross-training of our commo personnel gives us an added advantage," added Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy Ball, NCOIC of the Group commo section. "By cross-training these people we not only increast their knowledge and proficiency but it also allows for replacements in the event an accident occurs." he added.

"There are a lot of people who don't realize what a big job we have," Bayless remarked. In a construction battalion such as the 43rd, Engrs there may be over 10 simultaneous projects scattered aboout on post and off, and the group may find itself supporting the 43d Engrs commo when necessary," he said. "It is a necessity that we support the 43d Engrs or 67th Maint. whenever the need for additional rapid communication is needed," Bayless concluded.

Testing scheduled

By Tommy Pool

The U.S. Amrmy Marksmanship Unit will soon conduct one of its most important test ever involving marksmanship training with both the M16 rifle and the .45 caliber pistol.

Beginning September 24, the 1st Bn, 504th Inf, 82d Abn Div, will be on hand at Fort Benning for a one week period of comprehensive marksmanship evaluation. The primary purpose of the test is to determine if a newly developed program of instruction by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will significantly improve the marksmanship skill of the basic soldier. All test results will be based on the present annual qualification course used by the Army.

Over 100 members of USAMU will be involved with the test including assistance provided by various departments of the Infantry School as well as the Army Research Institute.

The evaluation is presently shceduled to run from September 24-30.

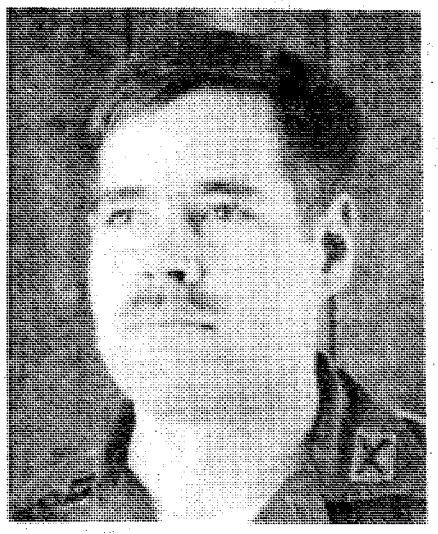
Glad you asked

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) solicits monetary support for 46 humanitarian agencies through one combined effort. Which agency do you feel would most benefit from your contribution and why?

2nd Lt. Michael F.J. Rolla, IOBC, 6-78
I feel that the National Health Agencies would benefit most from my contributions. To give a child the opportunity to enjoy life free of any mental or physical ailment is important to me, for we tend to forget someone else's misfortune when it does not involve us.



Capt. Robert B. Way, Jr., HHC, 1st. Inf Tng Bde
While I feel that any agency would benefit from a contribution to the Combined Federal Campaign, one of the finest points about the CFC is that it provides funds to lesser-advertised charities which might not otherwise receive contributions. I feel it's important to every agency represented, and would rather my contribution be distributed evenly among the 46 agencies supported.

Sgt. Douglas E. Judd, HHC, 4th Stu Bn (Abn)
I feel that the agency which would most benefit from my contribution would be the American Cancer Society. Since the advertisements say that I have one chance in four of having cancer during my lifetime, I feel that this affects me personally. Recently, I lost my father to a rare form of lung cancer and would like to see more research done to prevent the spread of such a disease.

Spec. 4 Gregory S. Altmann, Co B, 43rd Engr Bn
I believe the Mental Health Association would benefit the most from my contributions. Many mental health patients are given only the bare essentials and in some cases they receive less than the bare essentials. I have visited the Hudson River State Hospital for the mentally ill and it seems like a majority of the patients are forgotten by their families and friends. The point I'm trying to make is that we know how to help these people; all we need is money.

Letters to the Editor

No recognition for civilians?

Two weeks ago, a number of civilian employees on this post received length-of-service awards. One of those awards, I understand, was given to recognize 35 years of service.

I am certain that other civilian employees at Fort Benning during this year have also received the same kind, or similar, awards, all given in recognition of service performed.

Unfortunately, no one at Fort Benning — including you and your staff — seems interested in publicizing civilian awards. I do not believe that I have ever seen an article in your paper that recognized civilian awards. I don't believe I have ever seen a picture of a civilian being presented an award.

I believe it is time that you, your staff, and those people at the local civilian personnel office who are responsible for civilian awards get together and publicize the various awards that are given to the civilian workers during any particular year. This seems the least this post can do to recognize long, or faithful, or dedicated service.

Respectfully,
Albert N. Garland

Where are your children?

Found: a child — blond hair, approximately two years of age — wandering around in McGraw Manor at about 1 p.m. on August 24, 1978. The child was cliamed two hours later. Parents may claim their children at PMI, Juvenile Division, Fort Benning Provost Marshal's Office.

It's a pitiful situation, isn't it? However, it's an all to familiar situation to the Military Police.

I am the father of a three-year-old boy, so I know how fast they can disappear. The key is to not let them run loose. I can drive through Fort Benning and observe 30 or 40 unattended children running loose and playing in the streets. Where are their parents — home watching the soap operas, or visiting with their neighbors and discussing the problems of raising children on an Army base?

Every time a lost child is found by the Military Police of the MP Juvenile Divion, the child should be held until the parents call to report him or her missing, then both parents should be brought to the MP station and cited for child neglect.

I cannot accept the excuses parents give for allowing their children to become lost; all it takes is a little love and a lot of care. Every time a child is reported lost, it is, in all probability, the fault of one or both parents.

My final comment is: parents, do you know where you child is right now?

Sincerely,
Charles O.W. McVey

Matching fatigues outdated?

What can be done about the different shades of OD green permanent press fatigues at the Clothing Sales Store? It is almost impossible to find a fatigue shirt, and trousers of the same shade.

This problem faces every soldier who desires to improve his military appearance.

Why can't the "Home of the Infantry" purchase the items from the same manufacturer? I believe in integration, but not with the fatigue uniform.

SSgt. Hardin
AG Dist. Ctr.

Due to the critical shortage of OG-507 dura-press uniforms, DA was forced to accept defective uniforms; i.e., off-colored, puckering of the seams, pocket flaps not even, etc. This clothing is procured for the Army by the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia, Pa. through procurement contracts with many different small business manufacturers.

These contracts contain shade tolerances and reasonable variations by the different contractors are usually acceptable. It is doubtful that any manufacturing firm could make or would even bid on large quantities of fatigue clothing if specifications required exact matching of shirts and trousers.

Latest information on the get well date for the dura-press utility uniform is Jan. 1, 1979.

Heavy equipment 'up in the air'

By Marti Henderson

When the convoy from Co B, 43rd Engr Bn, 36th Engr Gp (CBT) started out early September 5, something was missing. Where was all the heavy machinery needed for the construction project at Eglin AFB?

Obviously, the bulldozers, road graders, and bucket loaders would hold up the 120 mile-long convoy from Fort Benning to Eglin Air Froce Base in Fla. However, the problem of transportation ceased to exist when the Air Froce provided two C-5 Galaxies (transporter jets) to move the heavy equipment from Lawson Air Field to Englin AFB.

According to Maj. Charles Mills, Operations Officer, S-3, 43rd Engr Bn, Co B has taken on the job of upgrading an airfield including over 50 miles of road, repairing erosion that has occurred on a little-used runway and replacing a damaged culvert bridge. This will allow the safe landing of C-130 aircraft during the upcoming joint exercise in October called "Gallant Eagle."

This project serves a double purpose by providing a situation in which a field training exercise (FTX) can be conducted under real instead of simulated circumstance. Not only is a worthwhile project getting done, but the soldiers of Co B are getting a chance to use their acquired skills and gain first hand on-the-job experience.

PX prices lowered in Japan, Germany

Prices for certain items will be frozen and others will be lowered an average of seven percent in exchange outlets in Germany and Japan, according to Army and Air Force exchange service (AAFES) sources.

AAFES is preparing to announce that, effective July 27, it will extend price freezes through October on off the shelf deli items (excluding beer, soft drinks and prepared foods) in cafeterias and snack bars, personal services such as barber and beauty shop care and labor rates for garage repairs, officials said.

Sources say that prices can be lowered and stabilized because of reduced transportation costs for certain U.S. merchandise to these overseas markets. (ARNEWS)

Drill sergeant re-ups last time

By Joyce Walker

A drill sergeant from Co D, 3rd Bn, 1st Inf Tng Bde, was reenlisted by Maj. Gen. William J. Livsey, post commander, for his final tour in the Army during a ceremony held in Infantry Hall last month.

Sgt. 1st Class Rolland M. Lynch requested to be reenlisted by the commanding general because this is to be his last six years of duty before retirement. The 37-year-old Brighton, Mich. native plans to retire in August 1984 with a little more than 21 years of service.

Lynch first enlisted in the Army in June 1960 but got out in 1962. He served with the Michigan National Guard from 1962 until March 1965 when he came back on active duty.

During his military career, the drill sergeant has served two tours in Vietnam, where he was awarded the Soldiers' Medal for heroism in 1970 during a non-combat situation.

"I took a weapon away from a man who had cracked-up and started wildly firing an M-16," recalled Lynch.

Other awards received during his 15 years of service include the Bronze Star Medal, Army Commendation Medal, (two awards), Air Medal, Vietnam Service Medal, the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal and the Good Conduct Medal, (four awards).

Lynch resides with his wife, Jackie and two sons Rolland, 10 and Michael, 8, at 192 Derrickson on post.

Woman commander thrives on challenge

By Betty Zimmerman

If all the members of the 598th Maint. Co. are as energetic, determined and purposeful as their company commander, then the 67th Maint. Bn has one heck of a forward direct support company.

1st Lt. Michele Simmons of Philadelphia, Pa. loves challenges and being a woman commander of a maintenance company is definitely a challenge. Especially when she was placed in the job with only nine months experience as a platoon leader in the company.

While her company pulls four days of field duty, 1st Lt. Michele Simmons oversees automotive repairman, Sgt. Jerry Cranmore (c), and shop foreman, SSgt. Michael Penick (r), stopping a leak on one of their trucks.

Simmons came into the Army in July 1976 with a direct commission as a 1st lieutenant and attended the Ordinance Basic Course at Aberdeen before coming to Benning. Ordinance was not her chosen field, but she didn't waste time feeling badly about it. The sociology major dug into her studies with the same enthusiasm that earned her a bachelors and masters degree while moving around as an Air Force wife, holding down a full-time job and acquiring two daughters.

There are many facets inherent to the mission of a forward direct support maintenance company. First of all, they must always be ready to deploy in 96 hours. Automative repair, from jeeps to five tons, is 90 percent of their job, but they must also repair signal, quartermaster, engineer and artillery equipment. This includes fixing canvas, machinery, and metal body work. The company of 218 men and 26 women also provide technical inspections and maintenance supplies for 33 units of the 36th Eng Gp and 34th Med Bn.

As company commander, Simmons doesn't have to do all these things, just see that they are done. She credits her officers and NCOs with having the job knowledge required and with supporting her in all management and discipline matters.

Her next step is the advanced course in March 1979 and then she would like to specialize in the supply aspect of maintenance.

FTX: 2/10 all 'fired up'

By Judi Taylor

For two days last week the 2/10 FA, 197th Infantry Brigade (Sep) moved out to the field for an exercise in artillery tactics and doctrine.

The main objective was to achieve ARTEP (Army Training and Evaluation Program) standards of fire. These standards call for 75 percent of all rounds fired from the Battalion's 105mm Howitzers to hit within a prescribed area surrounding the target. 1st. Lt. James C. Carter, S-3, commented on the Battalions success in this endevour. "The men did exceptionally well, achieving ARTEP standards on 90 percent of the missions fired."

Massing of fire was another tactic the 2/10 FA focused on during the two-day FTX. During a combat situation, if only one gun battery fires on a target it is possible for the enemy to locate their position and counter-attack. To prevent this, the Battalion uses mass firing. In mass fire, all three gun batterys, each with six Howitzers, positioned in different locations fire at the same target at the same time.

For this to be successfully completed, timing and communications play an integral part. 1st. Sgt. Johnny W. Rogers, C Btry, said "For mass fire to work, the men must work together very closely. A mistake of even one minute could ruin the entire operation."

With eight men on a gun, six guns to a battery and three gun batteries in the Battalion it is easy to see why communication is so essential to the 2/10 FA. The men throughout the battalion know the importance of working together and through this they provide the Combined Arms Team with the best support possible.

AMU helps American team win CISM

By Tommy Pool

Sparkplugged by members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, the United States team won the 19th CISM Shooting Championships held September 1-9, in matches held on the island of Gotland, Sweden. Twenty-five nations competed in the championships, the largest attendance ever, and included a surprise entry from the People's Republic of China.

In one of the closest finishes in the history of the CISM Matches, the U.S. slipped by Finland in the week long shooting by four points with a final score of 9,003 to 8,999 points.

Both rifle and pistol competition was counted in the total score, with members of the U.S. team picking up individual gold, silver and bronze medals.

In rifle competition, Webster Wright, USN, took high overall with 1,098 points as well as a gold medal in the precision 300 meter rifle event with a score of 570 out of 600. Phillip Cannella, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and former CISM Champion, gained a tie in the Military Rapid Fire Event but lost on a tie breaking decision and finished in second place to Hans Bram of Switzerland both scoring 536 points out of 600.

The U.S. team won both precision and rapid fire rifle team events however, with scores of 2,228 to 2,224 over Finland in precision and 2,107 to 2,096 points over Switzerland in rapid fire. Team members of the U.S. squad included Wright of the Navy, Phillip Cannella, Robert Aylward, Dick Floyd and Phil Whitworth, all from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

In pistol competition, a strong Finnish Team won both the center fire and military rapid fire events with the U.S. team picking up the silver medal while Switzerland was third. Emil Heugatter placed third in individual center fire competition with 587 out of 600 points after an exciting four way shoot-off to gain the bronze medal. Members of the U.S. Pistol Team were this year's National Pistol Champion, Charles McCowan, Emil Heugatter, Bonnie Harmon, Thomas Woods and Erich Buljung. Stanley Parmentier, Commander US Army Marksmanship Unit, acted as U.S. Team Captain and was also Chief of the U.S. Delegation.

Final team standings of the matches are as follows:

CISM Team Trophy
	USA	9,003
2nd	Finland	8,999
3rd	Switzerland	8,979
4th	Norway	8,911
5th	Sweden	8,866

Professor Safety says

Give the other driver a break. We've all been in driving situations where we've noticed drivers making foolish mistakes. Many are from absent-mindedness, inattention, confused or because the driver was lost. Remember, each of us at times in our driving careers has also made driving mistakes. Be kind to this driver. Don't compound the mistake by getting angry or impatient and taking a rash action. Be calm and patient and provide a friendly wave. Remember, it could easily be you on the other end of that wave.

CFC Message

The 1979 Tri-Community Combined Federal Campaign will be conducted at Fort Benning during the period September 18 to November 30. This campaign solicits monetary support for 46 humanitarian agencies through one combined effort. Not only is service provided to the civilian community but the soldier and his dependents benefit as well! The campaign affords each of us the opportunity to support, in some measure, essential local, State, National and International Health, Youth and Recreational agencies which depend solely on voluntary contributions for their existence.

The monetary objective for this year's campaign is $300,000. This objective can be easily realized by enthusiastic participation of all personnel at Fort Benning and employees of other Federal offices in the Tri-Community area. Traditionally, generosity and concern for others have always been traits characteristic of those in the service of the United States. I am confident that each of you will do your part to ensure the continuation of this magnificent tradition!!

I encourage ALL military and civilian personnel to express their support of these voluntary agencies by contributing liberally to the 1979 Combined Federal Campaign.!!

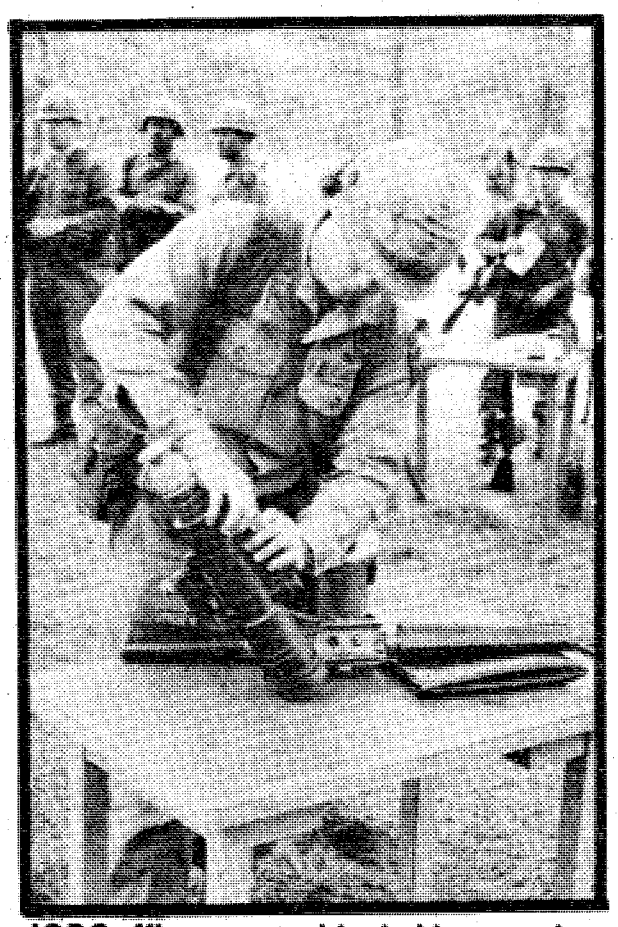
Infantry Officer Basic Course chan

By Ben Walburn

A new and dynamic Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) has been tested, approved, and now institutionalized at the U. S. Army Infantry School, according to Colonel Douglas M. Craver, Director of Training, and Lieutenant Colonel Edwin Scholes, commander of Basic Officers' Training Battalion.

"The course is dual-tracked, designed to train newly commissioned lieutenants either as Infantry or Mechanized Infantry platoon leaders," he said.



IOBC officers are subjected to a number of exercises in Expert Infantryman Testing.

Under the new program, IOBC, originally a nine-week, single-tracked course, has now been lengthened to 14 weeks. The Course of Instruction (COI) outlines more than 750 hours of instruction.

"This COI does not tell the complete story since it does not include the many hours spent on rehearsals for classes, retraining and retesting, counseling, and reinforcement training using Training Extension Course (TEC) material, simulated war games and other training media," Craver said.

The IOBC officer is immediately placed into a unit environment on arrival at Fort Benning and each class is formed into a company in which the students rotate as the chain of command.

Each company normally has three Mechanized Infantry and two Infantry platoons, and each platoon undergoes the entire 14 weeks of training as a unit. Much of the training is the same for both tracks (Infantry and Mechanized Infantry), but whenever possible, the students are trained in their particular specialities.

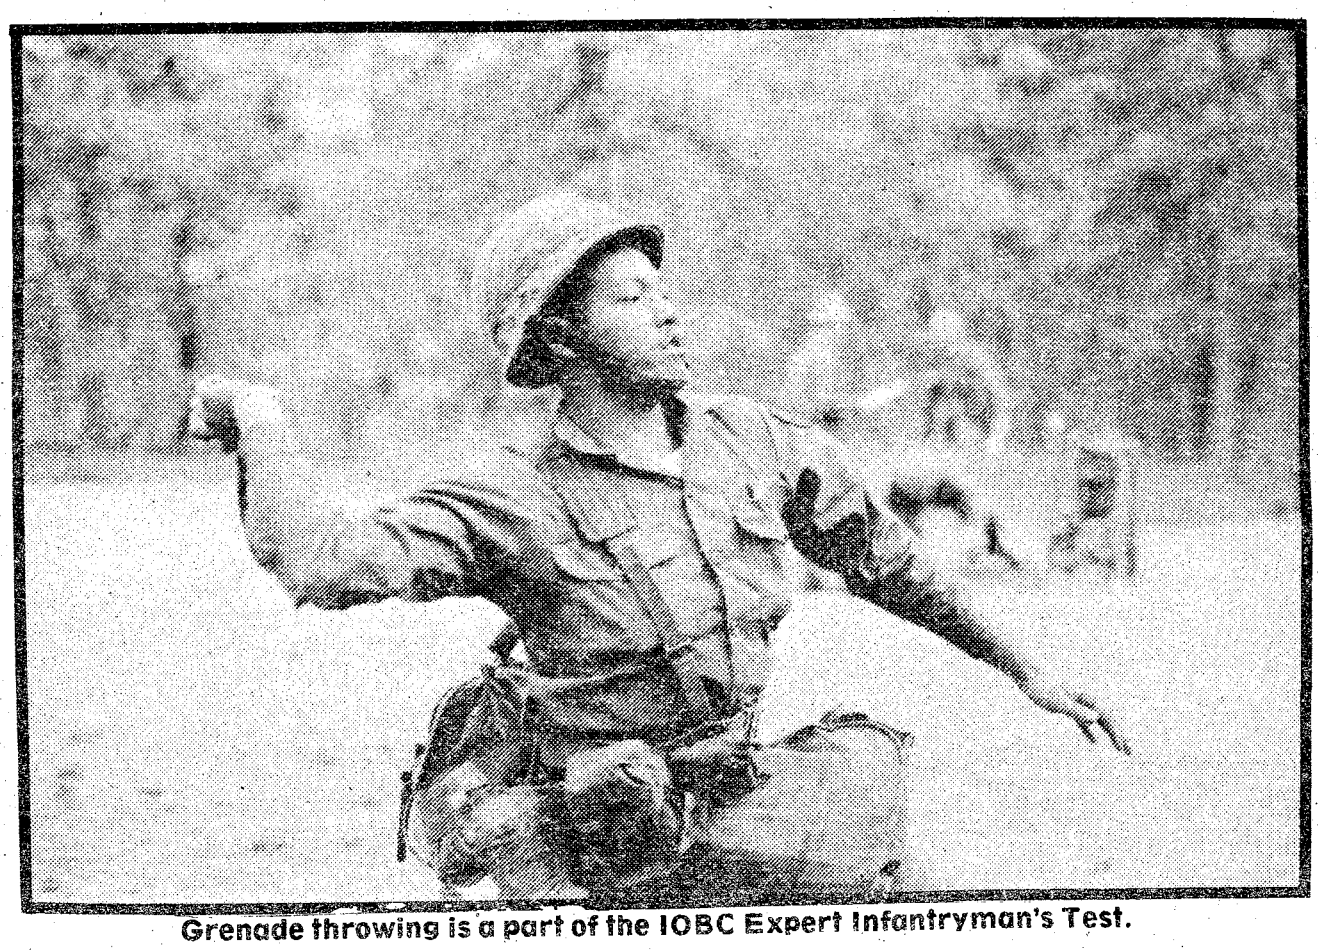
Scholes said that under the new concept the instructions given the officer students concentrates on squad and platoon tactics, platoon combat skills, leadership at platoon level, infantry weapons, and combat support functions. Approximately 75 percent of the instruction is conducted in a field environment and 90 percent involves practical exercises or hands-on training. Only 10 percent of the instruction is devoted to lectures. There are more than 14 night training periods, during which the students take part in field training exercises (FTX), weapons firing, land navigation (mounted for mechanized), and tactical training.

Scholes explained that there are five field training exercises during the course. All FTX's are Army Training and Evaluation Programs (ARTEP)-related to include a "Training ARTEP" as the final FTX. He added that the ARTEP is also stressed during the Training Management instruction given the IOBC lieutenant.

"Emphasis during the FTX's is placed on squad and platoon tactics and weapons employment, anti-armor ambushes, field maintenance, and combined arms operations," he said, noting that platoon level FTX's include the use of tanks, TOWs, dragons, artillery fire support teams, helicopters and tactical air support.

During the platoon level FTX's the Mechanized Infantry student squads must drive and maintain their own armored personnel carriers and the Infantry track students spend a week with the Ranger Department learning the fundamentals of patrolling.

Under the new program, IOBC is designed to be a "Train-to-Train" course and to produce a Infantry and Mechanized Infantry platoon leader who is qualified on all combat skills in a platoon. He is qualified to train and supervise his platoon in the Soldier's Manual/Skill Qualification tasks, and qualified to train and lead his men according to ARTEP events, standards and conditions. "A conscious choice has been made to train platoon leaders in the combat skills and combat related skills rather than to train all-around administrators" Scholes said, stressing the point that a new Infantry lieutenant will arrive at his initial assignment with a thorough knowledge of these combat skills, but unfamiliar with a Report of Survey, for example.



Grenade throwing is a part of the IOBC Expert Infantryman's Test.

IOBC officers are subjected to ges, becomes more challenging

The basis of the course is a list of approximately 200 selected tasks taken primarily from the Infantry Soldier's Manual. These tasks are published in the form of a "Platoon Combat Skills" handbook that is issued to each student at the beginning of the course.

Scholes stated that all instruction is "criterion-referenced" and officer students are graded on a GO/NO GO basis during performance testing since IOBC no longer uses the customary written examinations.

"Should a student fail a critical task, he is retrained and retested up to a total of three times on an individual task," Scholes said, adding that if he fails one of the tasks a third time, he is subject to board action.

Those critical tasks include qualifying four basic platoon weapons — the M16 rifle, M60 machine gun, M203 grenade launcher, and hand grenades. He said the majority of students qualify on these weapons.

The course of instruction includes familiarization firing and training on all other platoon weapons, to include the Dragon, LAW, 90 MM recoiless rifle, mines and 50 caliber machine guns for the Mechanized Infantry students.

A student's leadership abilities and traits are observed on a daily basis and more specifically his ability to function as a member of the chain of command in a field and garrison environment; his ability to teach and lead physical training, and his ability to present instruction on which he and his peers are tested.

"All officer students are afforded the opportunity to earn the Expert Infantryman's Badge (EIB) during the course," Scholes said, adding that the standards of the Fort Benning EIB tests are extremely high but many students, assisted by their trainers, spend a considerable amount of their off-duty time preparing for the examination and are thus able to earn the coveted badge.

The major departure from previous IOBC programs is the use of IOBC "Trainers."

"Each IOBC platoon is assigned a captain and two noncommissioned officers (either a sergeant or staff sergeant) as its permanent cadre," Scholes said. "These trainers are from the Basic Officer's Training Battalion and they remain with the platoon throughout the course."

In addition to teaching in excess of 60 percent of the course, the trainers perform many other critical functions.

"They set an example, answer questions, assist in departmental instruction, reinforce training objectives, evaluate students on a daily basis, counsel and critique students, rehearse student classes and retrain and retest students," Scholes stated.

The trainers give most of the tactics and weapons instruction as well as portions of other training.

Scholes and Craver say the advantage of this instructional method is that such diverse subjects as communications, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare (NBC), demolitions, and tactics can be brought together for the students in ways that are not possible under a purely committee form of instruction.

According to Craver, The Infantry School has plans to continue the refinement of this dynamic course to include the addition of a platoon level mechanized live fire course that will place the lieutenants even closer to an actual combat environment.

Craver said recommendations and comments from the field are welcomed at The Infantry School on how to better prepare the Infantry lieutenant for his initial assignment.

"The IOBC officer student now has a demanding, challenging course in which he must visibly demonstrate, on a daily basis, his mastery of the combat skills required of all soldiers as leaders in an infantry platoon," Craver said.

Post commissary is named best in southeastern region

By Betty Zimmerman

Fort Benning's commissary has been named the best facility in the southeastern region. It is now in the running for the best commissary in the Army.

Four other regional winners and Benning will be judged by Fort Lee's Troop Support Agency and one will receive the annual Best Commissary Award in October. The other regional winners were Wiesbaden, Germany for Europe; Fort Carson, Colo. for the midwestern region; Carlisle Barracks for the northeast; and Fort Richardson, Alaska for the western field office.

Benning was chosen for having the best overall operation. Every aspect of running a commissary was evaluated with points given for various activities under the categories of customer service, customer comments, commissary office administration, automated systems, cash control procedures, store operation, meat department operation, produce department operation, store equipment and operating supplies, characteristics of employees, and warehousing.

The awards program was established to promote effective and economical commissary store operations which, in return, will provide the most efficient customer service and customer satisfaction to commissary patrons.

Senator praises DoD

A U.S. Senator recently gave DoD high marks for countering the personnel growth trend of other federal agencies.

DoD is the only agency, among five cited, to curb personnel growth, according to remarks made by Senator Harry F. Byrd (Indep.-Va.).

Byrd told his senate colleagues that DoD employed 1,039,000 civilians in 1960 compared to 981,000 in 1978. In contrast, Byrd said, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has increased from 68,849 to 158,537 employees during the same period. The White House staff has increased from 338 to 376, the Supreme Court from 163 to 323 and the U.S. legislative branch from 14,954 to 39,558, Byrd said.

The senator cited the statistics and called for budget restraints to curb federal employment growth. (ARNEWS)

Consumer Info Center boosts sagging dollar

With mounting inflation, soldiers are looking for ways to get more for their money — in their purchases, in conserving costly energy, and in determining which products will be the best buy.

There is a government office which can help. The Consumer Information Center provides general product information to the public on request. It is also responsible for encouraging federal agencies to develop and release information of interest to consumers.

One of the products of the Center, the Consumer Information Catalog, identifies more than 200 selected consumer publications, giving a brief description of each. Among the subjects covered are automobiles, consumer protection, child care, health, gardening, housing, energy conservation and employment.

The catalog is updated four times a year, allowing for the addition of new publications. Many of the publications listed in the catalog are free; others are on sale at cost through the Consumer Information Center.

Specific publications available include:
(A) automotive rust — ITS CAUSES AND PREVENTION
(B) battery hazards
(C) common sense in buying a used car
(D) common sense in buying a new car
(E) how to deal with motor vehicle emergencies
(F) motorhomes and pick-up campers
(G) passenger car brakes
(H) tire chains
(I) travel and camper trailers
(J) gas mileage guide
(K) self-service gas up and go
(L) tips for motorists
(M) auto safety and your child
(N) feeding the sick child
(O) a parent's guide to childhood immunization
(P) what if your child is gifted?
(Q) give a hoot, don't pollute.

Many of the topics for publications were suggested by consumers. For the soldier concerned about the cost of products, using the Consumer Information Center Catalog may help stretch that monthly paycheck.

The Consumer Information Catalog is free and copies can be obtained by writing the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Col. 81009. (ARNEWS(

Post team breaks military record

Editors note: Have you ever wondered what it would be like to run a mile every hour for 24 hours? No, it is assured that Capt. Dale BFletcher was wondering why he was out there about 4 a.m. Ten soldiers from Fort Benning traveled to Atlanta recently and participated in a 24 hour relay with area teams. They placed first and broke the military record held by the West Point A Marathon Team.

The relay was a continous, grueling 262 miles and 1,660 yards and worse than a marathon, according to marathoner Tom Coniglio. The following is an account of that long day.

By Dale Fletcher

The team ran alternate miles on a 440 yard track. A running order was established and after each runner completes his mile he passes a baton to the next runner. The objective is to run as many miles as possible in 24 hours.

The race was run at Lovett High School in Atlanta at 9 a.m. We arrived an hour early to set up two tents near the track. These tents would later protect us from the rain and hot afternoon sun. We figured that we might have a shot at the record of 260 miles 880 yards set in 1976 by the West Point A Marathon Team. The average mile time would have to be 5:29. Tom Coniglio set the tempo as he ran a 4:54 first mile and handed me the baton with a one yard lead. After completing ten miles, we had a 5:15 per mile average, well ahead of record pace. We began having hopes of not only breaking the military record, but also finishing first of the 11 teams entered in the race. Forty miles and four hours into the race, the lead was see-sawing back and forth with a team from the University of Georgia and Atlanta area runners. The lead switched back and forth, depending on which team had the strongest runner on the track. This stiff competition kept us at about 5:20 per mile pace, comfortably ahead of the record. We knew we would have to run well early on in the race while we were fresh and the temperature was cooler because later on we would tire and times would be slower.

Between each mile we had about 55 minutes rest. For the first four hours or so, this seemed to give us plenty of time to do what was necessary. We could jog a little to warm down, drink some liquids — Gatorade, E.R.G. or water, eat small bits of food, lay down to rest our legs, stretch to stay loose, and encourage our teammates as they ran past. The temperature reached 94 degrees in the late afternoon and with the heat the times slowed down and the rest between miles seemed to decrease sharply. After each mile, we would catch our breath, stop sweating, take a little liquid, and get ready to run again.

After completing 90 miles, we had a 300 yard lead and were ahead of record pace. Legs were becoming slightly sore but our spirits were still high. As the sun went down, the temperature dropped and the stadium lights were turned on. The coolness made running a lot easier and the times were a little quicker for a few miles. Before the air became too cool, most of us used a hose to take a shower and clean off all the salt that had built up on our bodies. This was certainly a refresher and helped us to feel better mentally as well as physically.

Our manager, Steve Wells, did a great job throughout the race. He gave us our quarter mile splits each lap, recorded our mile times, and insured that each of us was ready when it

Doughboys suffer third straight loss

By Betty Zimmerman

—This year's tough schedule is taking its toll on our Doughboy football team. Saturday night's loss to the Fort Valley State Wildcats, 12-6, made it three in a row.

You've got to hand it to quarterback, Joe Duenas, flanker Arthur Hawkins, and tight end Dave Williams, they gave it their all. But it's hard to gain yards when the whole opposing team is coming at you practically undeterred.

The Doughboy defense held Fort Valley to minus 18 yards rushing and allowed nine of 15 completed passes for 93 yards. Duenas connected for 18 of 34 passes and 166 yards.

Fort Valley scored first with 7:17 left in the first quarter on a 22-yard field goal by Cornelius Singleton. Then with just 29 seconds to go int the first half, the Wildcat's quarterback, Donnie Blackshear, hit Carror Wright with a 42-yard touchdown pass. The extra point kick missed and the half closed with the score 9-0.

Late in the fourth quarter, Singleton connected for another field goal, this one for 33 yards, making it 12-0.

Benning's lone score came in the fourth quarter following three completed passes. Mike Rodgers caught the first Duenas bullet and took the ball to the 19-yard line. The next aerial went to Hawkins who got to the six and then Dave Williams pulled it in for a touchdown with 1:47 left to play.

Tomorrow's encounter will be with oFort Lauderdale College at 7:30 p.m. in Doughboy Stadium.

There usually were as many Wildcats in the Benning backfield as there were Doughboys which naturally hindered quarterback Joe Duenas (10) all evening.

Post grad earns title

A graduate of Class 24-77 in Benning's Airborne School has progressed from basic airborne in May 1977 to become the Women's World Champion in sport parachuting at the World Parachuting Championships in Zagreb, Yugoslavia on Sept. 6.

Cheryl Stearns took first place in the overall women's style and accuracy competition with jumpers representing East Germany placing second and the Soviet Union placing third.

She placed first in the individual style event and in addition to winning, she bettered a world record she set in June of this year at the U.S. National competition in Richmond, Ind.

In the individual accuracy event, Stearns took second place, following Jackie Smith of Great Britain, a former member of the British Army's parachute team.

Stearns, currently the world record holder for Women's Day accuracy-landings, is also the reigning U.S. National Womens' Champion in the sport.

She earned her first world title last year in competition with women parachutists from the USSR. In the competition, she made 19 consectuve dead-center landings on a four-inch disk.

A long time athlete and former Arizona State University tennis champion, Stearns is the first woman ever assigned as a competitor on the Golden Knights, the Army's parachute team. She joined the Army in February 1977.

Golf tourney slated

Registration wraps up today for the 36-Hole Handicap Golf Tournament that will be held September 16-17 at the "Follow Me" Golf Course here. The tourney will be used to select a three man team to represent Fort Benning at the Sixth Annual Boy Scout Pro-Am Tournament to be held at Callaway Gardens on September 21.

was our turn to run. If one of us missed our turn in the designated order, we could not run again and the team would have to finish with nine runners.

The hours between midnight and 6 a.m. were uneventful. Those were the most difficult miles to run. We were without sleep and tired, our muscles ached, stomachs were tight, and we were just looking forward to the last mile and 9 a.m. At one time earlier in the evening, we were as much as 20 minutes or about four miles ahead of the record, but at six in the morning, we only had about 11 minutes to play with. We were now averaging 5:40 per mile. To add to the misery there was a twenty minute thundershower at 6:30. All of us except the man running scurried inside the tents. Although this dampened our spirits, it didn't last long and soon we all had only one more mile to run. We now had a two mile lead on the next team and were 10 minutes ahead of the record. It was clear that we would break the record and were 10 minutes ahead of the record. Everyone gave all they had on their last mile. All ten of us had run 26 miles and we were at the beginning of the order again. Tom Coniglio broke the record halfway through his 27th mile. I ran my 27*th* mile and handed the baton to Matt Klimou who had less than five minutes to run. He was able to run 1,660 yards before time ran out.

It was a sweet victory and a unique record to have set. Staying up all night at a party or studying for an exam is one thing, but running a mile every 55 minutes for 24 hours is another. It was a different experience and something all of us will never forget.

The team was comprised of the following individuals: Spec. 4 Tom Coniglio, 197th Infantry Brigade, Spec. 4 Tony Moore, 34th Medical Battalion, Capt. Dale Fletcher, Capt. George Gilkes, Capt. Dale Barnett and Capt. Rich Rowe, Infantry Officers' Advance Course (IOAC) 3-78, Capt. Matt Klimow and Capt. John Johnson, IOAC 4-78, Capt. Chuck Triplett and Maj. Terry Bell, Training School Brigade, and Capt. Steve Wells of IOAC 4-78 was the team manager.

CMF serves spiritual needs

To perform effectively in the Armed Forces, one must be physically, mentally and spiritually aware. A great deal of attention is given to the proper development of the physical and mental attributes need to complete a job in war and peace, but spiritual growth may sometimes be neglected.

The Christian Military Fellowship (CMF) was organized to serve the spiritual needs of the soldier—to be more specific, the enlisted service member.

This independent, growing Christian fellowship was organized by and for enlisted men and women of all the Armed Forces of the U.S.

CMF activities include training and fellowship in local Bible studies, seminars, conferences, literature and personal staff contact. CMF assists the Chaplains.

The fellowship was first recognized as the Enlisted Men's Christian Union in 1958 and was directed by LCDR Floyd Robertson, USN (Ret.)

The welcome mat is out for all interested enlisted servicemembers. For more information, please contact Spec. 5 Terry Allen, 544-3305/3179.

After a social hour and lunch, Ronald Sibold, Area Engineer for Savannah District, will speak about "Area Engineer Responsibilities and Activities." The meeting is the third in a series designed to inform members of all engineer activities at Fort Benning.

It is with a lot of pride that I write this article. On September 3 and 4, I had an opportunity to watch some very fine CBers from Fort Benning in action. While a lot of people were gone for the long weekend having fun, this group of CBers were talking on their radios trying to raise money for Jerry Lewis and his kids.

This is just another fine example of what CBers can do. I have been in CB for about eight years and have never found a group of people more willing to help others as I have since I have been here. Most CBers help other CBers but here it is very different. When help is needed the Channel 1 CBers are there whether they are CBers or not. Keep up the fine work. God Bless each and everyone of you fine people.

Some soldiers failing to meet Special Forces requirements

A growing number of soldiers reporting to the Special Forces Qualification Course, Ft. Bragg, N.C., are being rejected because they do not qualify for training, according to MILPERCEN officials.

Most would-be students do not meet the requirement to have at least 18 months remaining on active duty after course completion, officials say. Others do not have a high school education or a security clearance: some have not completed swimming qualification tests or do not meet physical requirements.

The problem is costing the Army unnecessary expenses for PCS moves and many nonproductive man-days. Commanders and personnel management officers have been cautioned to strengthen procedures to ensure that soldiers enroute to Special Forces schools meet all requirements of AR 614-200. (ARNEWS)

1st Annual Southern Open 10,000 Meter Run

Runners came across the finish looking rather haggard for a 10,000 meter race. This could be explained because the course was tough with lots of hills.

Benning Soldier of the Year selected

By Seth Hamilton

Sgt. Douglas Smith, Co A, 1/29th Inf. TSB, is walking around with a big smile these days.

Soldier of the Year Sgt. Douglas Smith, Co A, 1/29th TSB, checks out a personnel carrier.

You would too if you had just been selected as Fort Benning's Soldier of the Year (SOY).

Smith, who commands an armored personnel carrier on Kelley Hill, is proud to be Soldier of the Year. But pride isn't the only thing he'll take away from this experience. In a ceremony at Bldg. 4 Wednesday, Maj. Gen. William J. Livsey, post commander, presented him with the Army Commendation Medal, 1st Oak Leaf Cluster.

He also received a variety of gifts that included a one week vacation in Hawaii at the Hale Koa Armed Forces Motel with $175 spending money; a three-year membership in the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA): $100 from both the Ledger-Enquirer and the Columbus Chamber of Commerce; $50 from Columbus Bank and Trust; a $50 bond from the National Bank of Fort Benning; and a $25 bond from the National Bank of Columbus.

He will also receive a dress blue uniform from the AUSA; use of a new Chrysler for one month plus 100 gallons of gas from Dixie Chrysler Plymouth; Infantryman Statuette from the Sergeants Major Association; dinner for two at the Le Chateau Restaurant; exemption from detail roster for six months; a U.S. Army Infantry Center (USAIC) Certificate of Merit; luncheon with the USAIC Command Sergeant Major, and he will attend selected activities this year. Smith will be the honoree at this year's AUSA picnic and will attend the AUSA National Meeting (expenses paid).

Smith didn't become the Soldier of the Year overnight. The award is the culmination of months of preparation and study, not to mention years of exceptional performance in the Army. He first had to win the Soldier of the Quarter (SOQ) honors at battalion, brigade and post levels to qualify for SOY.

Smith, along with the other three SOQs for the past year, went before a tough SOY board. Smith said that, "The SOY board is in a league by itself compared to other boards. It is hard because you've got to compete against three of Benning's really top notch soldiers."

"It really comes down to a question of luck because everyone is so well prepared that the difference between winning and losing could come down to a single question."

Smith joined the Army in August 1974 and went to Basic Combat Training and Advanced Individual Training at Fort Polk, La. in one of the original One-Station-Unit-Training (OSUT) classes. He spent two-and-half years in Germany where he earned his French Commando Badge. When he came to Benning from Germany in July 1977, he brought with him an Expert infantryman's Badge, an ARCOM and a German bride.

When asked what being the Soldier of the Year meant to him, Smith replied, "I feel that the Soldier of the Year program is a good thing that is going to make a better soldier out of anyone who participates. Winning the SOY award will follow you throughout your Army career."

As to Smith's advice to anyone trying for the award, he said, "Just soldier, soldier, soldier!"

AUSA annual picnic slated Saturday

This year's annual picnic sponsored by the Columbus-Phenix City — Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army will be held at Victory Pond on September 23.

The 586th Engr Co (Float Bridge), 36th Engr Gp again will construct a 211-foot light tactical raft (bridge) across Victory Pond to make both sides accessible to rides, entertainment and games. The light-weight structure, assembled completely by hand, is capable of supporting up to 38,000 pounds.

Another feature this year is two, 27-foot boats to transport picnic-goers on a tour around the lake.

Another attraction will be a Battle of the Bands contest on a special dance floor adjacent to Victory Pond. First place winners will pocket $150 in cash, second place winner, $50 and third place finisher will take home $25.

Each band will be judged on technical excellence, selection of material, showmanship and audience appeal.

A highlight this year will be the Picnic Beauty Queen Contest, with young ladies from post units vying for first place ($50.00 Bond) and runner-up ($25.00 Bond).

There will be drawings for prizes throughout the afternoon.

Food, music, exhibitions, kiddy rides, displays and a carnival-type midway are some of the other attractions to be found at this year's event. Festivities will start at noon and continue throughout the afternoon until 6 p.m.

This year's picnic menu will offer a wide variety of food, ranging from barbecue chicken to hotdogs and hamburgers. There will also be baked beans, coleslaw, and potato salad. Beer, soft drinks, Kool-Aid and coffee will be thirst quenchers.

Displays will include a tank, armored personnel carriers, jeeps, Gamma Goats, parachute maintenance, marksmanship, medical equipment, Infantry Board weapons, communications equipment, Infantry Museum and others.

Rides for youngsters will include four ponies, a fire engine, Gamma Goats, jeeps and boats. Youngsters will also receive helium-filled balloons.

Starting at noon will be an exhibition of Rangers in action, followed by sky diving and a patrol dog demonstration. Throughout the afternoon, the midway will feature such games as shooting galleries, ring toss, dart boards, ball toss, fishing pond with large and small

Women in Army topic at retreat

By Stephen Guthrie

When people think of human relations seminars invariably they think of half-sleeping soldiers packed into a small, hot classroom with an instructor speaking half-memorized lines. For some soldiers, the thought of going to a class of this type is comparable to a form of torture.

This was not the case for the 197th Inf Bde (Sep) seminar on women in the Army held at the Holy Trinity Retreat Center in Alabama last week. It was an overnight outing and the participants were a mix of race, creed, sex and, definitely, opinion.

The principal instructors were Capts. Danny Blanton and Pete Rounsaville from the main post Organizational Effectiveness (OE) Office. They have been in the Fort Benning area for over 16 months and have given numerous hours of instruction to soldiers of this post. Along with a mutually developed program of instruction, the two men have taken the OE class in California and are sincerely interested in helping others gain knowledge.

"We are trying to portray not only the human relations angle," explained Blanton, "but the motivation behind hostility and frustration encountered on the job. Usually, when someone is rude or unkind, there is another reason than simple, senseless anger. We want people to look behind the anger and try to find a reason for it. We also want them to recognize it in themselves."

Utilizing group discussions, individual instruction and person to person "rap" sessions, the seminar progressed at an amazingly quick rate. Despite complaints from very few about the repetitiveness of certain subjects, all of the people were satisfied with the progress of the encounter groups.

"The people were very responsive," said Sgt. 1st Class Ulysses Gulley, 197th Inf Bde Equal Opportunity (EO) NCO," and quite concerned with the topic of the meeting. All the women present were surprisingly vocal on their role in the Army."

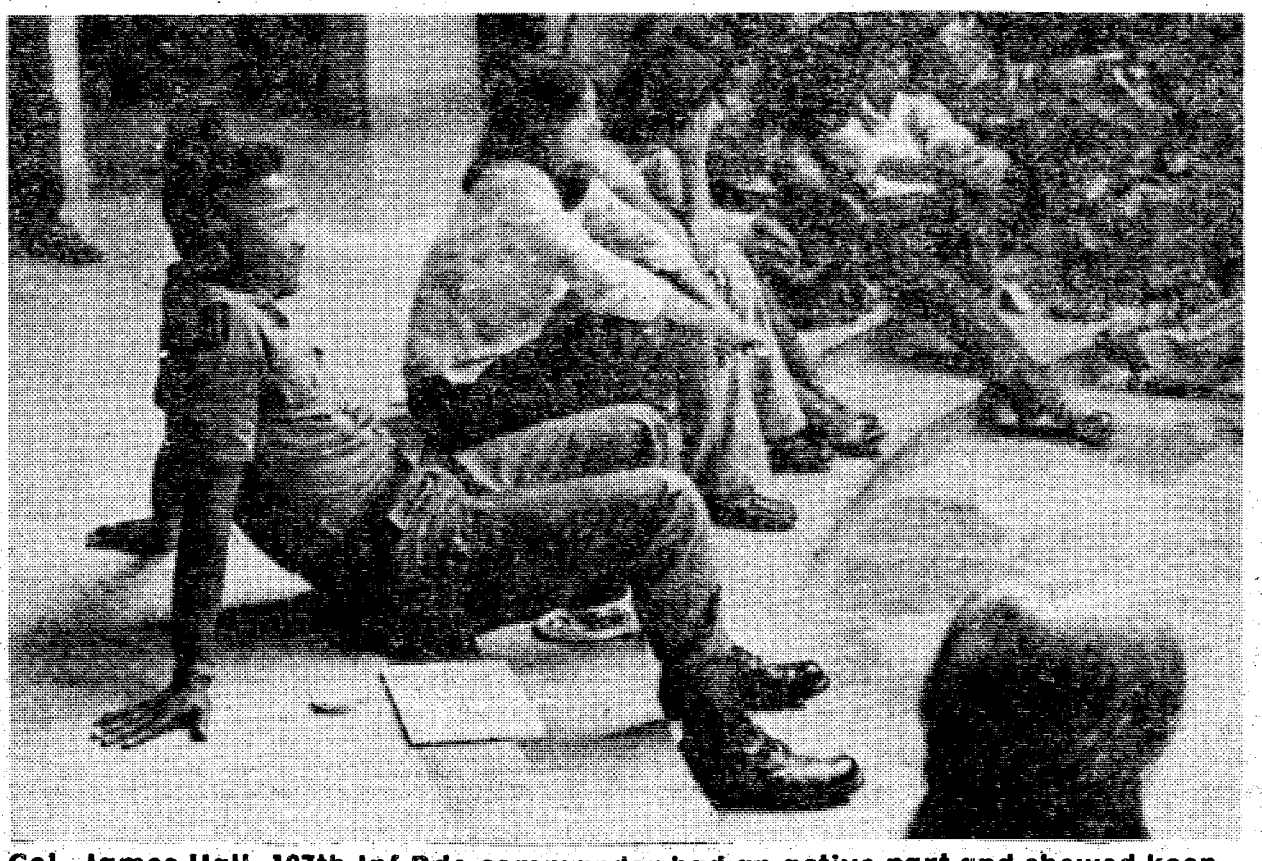
The last portion of the seminar was devoted to whether or not women should be allowed in the combat arms field. Although some opportunities exist for women that were not available ten years ago, the debate rages on as to whether or not women should be allowed to fight along with men in combat.

Some of the reasons given against women were over-protectiveness on the part of men, hygiene, mental stability, squeamishness and women not being able to adapt to combat because of upbringing. Master Sgt. Jimmie Jakes, post EO NCO, showed how the same reasons were applied to minorities in WW I-II.

Col. James Hall, 197th Inf Bde commander, also spoke at the seminar. He explained certain command viewpoints and why some complaints women raised cannot be resolved immediately due to current command directives from a higher level than his. Hall also promised to look into women working out of their MOS's and agreed to look into certain Brigade policies the women were dissatisfied with.

Spec. 4 Paula Chomis relates one of her experiences during the group "rap" session.

U.S. Army Photos by Stephen Guthrie



Col. James Hall, 197th Inf Bde commander had an active part and showed keen interest in the soldiers' opinions during the seminar.

Capt. Pete Rounsaville relays the groups reaction to one of the "rap" sessions.

MAH renews contract with Safety Commission

Martin Army Hospital has once again renewed its agreement to continue in a nationwide effort to collect information on injuries associated with consumer products, according to hospital officials.

In the joint agreement with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), the Fort Benning hospital will report product-related injuries treated in its emergency room each day via teletype terminal at the hospital to a computer terminal in Washington, D.C. CPSC anticipates that 130 hospitals across the country will be participating in the system by the end of 1979.

The computerized network known as the National Electronic Injury Surveillance System (NEISS) is designed to yeild statistically valid, nationally representative accidental injury data that can be used to identify product safety problems. It is the primary source of injury data for the Commission. Begun as a pilot study by the former National Commission on Product Safety, the system has continued since 1970 and has been refined and expanded since its beginning.

Basic information about each product-related injury treated in the emergency room will be transmitted and, for selected cases, CPSC personnel will conduct in-depth investigations, if permission is granted by the injured. All information collected is in accordance with complete patient and physician confidentiality.

Each year, approximately 21 million people are injured and 25,000 killed in accidents in this country, the majority of which are product related, according to CPSC. An independent Federal regulatory agency responsible for reducing injuries and deaths, the Commission can issue and enforce safety standards and bans and order public notice and recall of products that present substantial hazards.

MPs celebrate 37th birthday

The Fort Benning Military Police conducted a field day celebration Tuesday in observance of the Military Police Corps' 37th birthday.

The Military Police Corps, organized September 26, 1941, is a young Corps of the United States Army, but military police activities date back as early as January 1776 when a provost marshal was appointed to the Army of the Colonies by His Excellency Gen. George Washington. However, even before this, Charles I of England in 1629 issued a proclamation that appears to be the basis for a military police organization. The preclamation reads:

"The Provost must have a horse allowed him and some soldiers to attend him and all the rest commend to obey and assist, or else the service will suffer; for he is but one man and must correct many and therefore he cannot be beloved. And he must be riding from one garrison to another to see the soldiers do not outrage nor scathe the country."

The mission of the police force has not changed greatly. Yet there is a point to be reinforced and expanded. As stated by Charles I, ". . .and all the rest commanded to obey and ASSIST, or else the service will suffer; for he is but one man. . ."

The military police at Fort Benning cannot insure that a select few of our soldiers and their dependents do not "outrage or scathe" the installation without the assistance of each and every law abiding citizen residing on Post. By securing your homes and valuables, recording serial numbers of expensive items or making them with your Social Security Number, reporting crimes or suspicious activity, and avoiding areas where you are likely to come in contact with criminal elements, you are assisting the Provist.

In striving to reduce crime at Fort Benning, military police enforce laws and regulations; expedit traffic flow; prevent and investigate crimes; enforce hunting, fishing and preservation of wildlife regulations; along with operating the post detention facility; supervising the coordination of physical security operations and providing assistance to civil police.

With such a large and sensitive mission as the reduction of crime in the areas just mentioned, the modern-day provist requires the complete assistance of each and every citizen. On this, the eve of our Thirty Eight years, the Fort Benning Military Police sincerely solicit your assistance.

43rd builds bridge for AUSA picnic

Monday morning came bright and early for two platoons of the 586th Engr. Co. (Float Bridge) as they began to construct a 210 foot long Light Tactical Raft (bridge) on Victory pond. This bridge will provide for foot traffic across the pond during the AUSA picnic tomorrow.

The bridge is made with prefabricated components. One is a ponton—al aluminum shell which looks like a large row boat. Pontons are laid down in pairs nose ton nose the length of the bridge and give the bridge its buoyancy. The panels on each side of the bridge are deck panels and the ones down the middle are filler panels. All these sections are held together with giant clips, and the bridge or Light Tactical Raft is complete.

Members of the 43rd Engr Bn clip the new section of pontons and deck panels to those already completed.

CFC campaign underway

The 1979 Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) officially began September 18, with a kickoff ceremony held at 1:15 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium. Maj. Gen. William J. Livsey, post commander, was the keynote speaker.

Assistant Commander Col. Rebert E. Nelson Jr., this year's campaign chairman, introduced representatives of the three major agencies that benefit from CFC dollars. They aere: Mrs. Henry Swift, chairman of the United Way campaign in Columbus and Phenix City; Mrs. Pauline C. Archer, International Service Agency and Mr. William Myers Sr., National Health Agency. Each representative thanked Benning personnel for their contributions in past campaigns.

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Val Goeres gave the invocation and benediction. The 283rd Army Band and the Fort Benning Community Gospel Choir, with Mrs. Mary Gauthier as soloist, provided music.

This is the eighth year that the CFC has been held here, but the post has been joining forces with the community for 28 years to contribute to worthwhile causes.

Based on current strength, this year's goal of $300,000 can easily be exceeded if each person assigned uses the payroll deduction method of contributing during the coming year.

During last year's campaign, mor than $364,000 was raised.

Have fun with FLAC

Tired of sitting around the barracks with nothing to do? Then come on out and join the fun with FLAC (Fun Loving Adult Christians) every Tuesday night at 7:30. The meetings take place at the Rectory located at the main post chapel, and the people do everything from play football to discussing world events.

The club was founded by both soldiers and civilians because of the gap caused by everyone centering on different age groups. The members got together and decided to have an organization for young adults and has quite a large following.

The members plan to hold an open house this coming Tuesday and everyone is invited. The open house will feature a Football game, an outdoor mass and a cookout. Future events include renting the Custer Terrace Officers' club for a costume ball on Halloween. For more information call 545-1452/3461. Come on out, after all, the more the merrier.

Glad you asked

How do you keep informed on political issues in your home state? Do you exercise your voting rights?

Capt. Craig Rhodes, C Btry, 1/29th. Inf TSB

Newspapers from home, political literature from my grandparents and uncle, and magazines such as Time and Newsweek provide me with updated information concerning political issues. I vote absentee ballot in county, state and national elections.

Chief Warrant Officer Walton R. Melson, 478th Trans Co.

I receive political news through a subscription to my home state newspaper. I vote in all secondary and primary elections by absentee ballot.

Sgt. James W. Beaver, Hq Co Hq Cmd

I keep informed through my home town paper which I have mailed to me no matter where I am in the world. I plan on going back to my home town when I get out of the service, so I feel that it's very important to keep abreast of the situation there.

By living in a free country the most important right we have is the right to select the people who will represent us in our government, there I make it a point to vote either in person or by absentee ballot.

1st Sgt. Will A. Woodard, Co D, 43rd Engr Bn

I keep up with Kentucky's political issues by reading newspapers which I receive from my home town and by talking with family and friends back home. I vote absentee ballot in national elections.

The following is the first in a three-part series by David S. Niekerk entitled "Soldiering: Never the Road to Economic Abundance".

COMMENTARY

Poor pay plagues soldiers

Among the many problems confronting soldiers in today's Army, pay, benefits and housing must surely ride at the top of the list. The heartache encountered over these three topics is as common to the modern soldier as it was with his 19th. century counterpart.

For example, from 1812 until 1857, the pay of a 2nd Lt. remained at $25.00 a month. When it is considered that in 1853 it cost $20.00 to take a carriage from the port of San Francisco to most hotels in the city, obviously soldiers must have felt the pinch of little economic compensation for service to their country.

Several of the young, future general officers who left the Army due to the economic appeal of the civilian world during the early 1800's was Ulysses S. Grant, Henry W. Halleck, and William T. Sherman. In fact, Sherman wrote to his West Point classmate, Capt. George H. Thomas, describing the problems he faced while stationed in California. He wrote:

"Whatever effect California may have, there is no doubt it will cause promotion as many will be forced by necessity out of the service, and many will be induced to leave to better their fortunes."

At the turn of the century, the picture was not much brighter. In 1906, officers and enlisted soldiers were payed according to salary tables established in 1870. At this time the basic pay of a 2nd Lt. per annum was $1400.00.

Gen. F. S. Dodge, the Paymaster General of the Army, complained to Congress in his official reports about the trivial pay received by soldiers. Trying to avoid falling into debt was just as great a problem for soldiers in 1906 as it is today. Gen. Dodge stated:

"From this showing, it is apparent that great frugality must be exercised to avoid financial embarrassment and even with the utmost economy, probably there are few officers having a family and depending wholly on their pay who are not forced at some time or another to run into debt to a greater or less amount."

Gen. Dodge believed that during peace time, promotions would be much slower and thus some form of increased monetary reward must be offered in order to keep the most capable officers and sergeants in the Army.

"It hardly seems necessary to point out that civil life offers a much more successful field for securing financial independence than does the military. It is doubtful whether it would be possible to keep half the full complement of officers in service in times of peace at the present rate of compensation if it were not for the provisions made by the retirement law for officers' old-age and when retired for disability."

Letters to the Editor

Doughboy life isn't easy

Fans can really be two-faced at times. Last year, after our Doughboys had creamed one team, a fan hollered: "Why don't you guys pick on somebody your own size who can play football"? This year, I heard the same guy remark that if they don't start winning, he's not going to anymore games. Many Fort Benning fans fail to realize that we're lucky to have our Doughboys. Very few posts have football teams. For one thing, our Doughboys are soldiers; the college kids we play don't have the worries of a soldier — and many of our Doughboys have families. Staff Sgt. Harold Mitchell, a Drill Sergeant and right tackle, is one of many. He often gets up at 4 or 5 a.m., Works well into the night and often misses practice because of CQ, or the Range, plus has a wife and three kids. Mitchell sacrifices alot to play football, including his family life. His home town is less than 50 miles from here, yet he hardly had time to visit. Life is not easy being a Doughboy; just ask the family.

It irks me to no end to hear a big, 230 lb. loud mouth, bad mouthing our Doughboys — and he didn't even go out for the team! Even the Enquirer let me down this week; I had to look on the last page of the sports section on "Monday" to read about our game. One thing for sure, we may

AUSA to receive objectives award

The Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U. S. Army (AUSA) has been selected to receive the national Council of Trustee Award for the chapter most active in pursuit of AUSA objectives.

Bethell Edrington, Jr., president of the local chapter, will accept the prestigious award at the 24th National AUSA Meeting to be held at the Sheraton Park Hotel in Washington, D. C., October 16-18.

The Council of Trustees Award is based on all projects, meetings and other activities sponsored by AUSA chapters.

The chapter president during the award period was Lemuel T. Downing, Jr., of Phenix City, Ala.

The local chapter was also named runner-up in the Council of Trustees Award for Best Chapter Overall and Best Newsletter competition.

The annual meeting in Washington provides a forum for the exchange of ideas and information among the military and civilian personnel who support and advocate the importance of the Army as an essential element of national security. Presentations by senior Army representatives will be of professional benefit and interest.

Secretary of the Army Clifford L. Alexander, Jr., will make the keynote address on October 16. The following day, the Army's Chief of Staff, Gen. Bernard W. Rogers will speak at the AUSA annual luncheon.

Also on October 16, the issue of health care for active and retired military personnel and their dependents will be examined by a panel of experts with the former Air Force Surgeon General, Lt. Gen. (Ret.) George E. Schafer, serving as moderator.

On October 18, another panel discussion will regard the wisdom of gearing plans for the defense of Western Europe for a short war.

Additional events will include receptions and luncheons for sergeants major, corporate membars and ROTC cadets.

A wide variety of more than 100 exhibits, showing the latest in technology, new weapons and equipment and advanced concepts will occupy more than 90,000 square feet of display space within the hotel on its grounds.

Each year, the local chapter sends a delegation of between 40-50 to the Annual Meeting, and plans are now underway for this year's event. Persons interested in attending the meeting should contact the local chapter project officer, Lt. Col. Robert Bechdolt at 545-3512/1516.

2/10 practices airmobile operation

By Judi Taylor

"Don't Drop It!" Those thoughts were probably running through the heads of the men of Btry, A, 2/10 FA, 197th Inf Bde (Sep) as they watched their 105mm Howitzers being airlifted over their heads by the 478 Avn Co.

A 105mm Howitzer wings it's way to the new sight with the aid of the 478th Avn. Co.

For three hot and dusty days the troops went out in the field for a training exercise focusing on airmobile oparations. During the exercise the men attempted movements they had never performed before.

One such movement was a night airmobile relocation. With assistance from the Pathfinders at the pickup and landing zones, the 2/10th moved their Howitzers, jeeps, ammo and other equipment quickly and efficiently. During the entire movement the only lights available were those of the helicopters and the illumination of the night sky.

The only difficulty the men ran into was the tremendous amount of dust stirred up when the choppers moved into the training area. "At times," commented Spec. 4 Gary Harris, "there was so much dirt and sand flying we couldn't see to hook the guns up to the choppers, visibility was practically zero."

Ammunition was also brought in by skycranes and the men were kept busy disentangling the lines and canvas holding the ammo boxes secure. 1st Lt. Dale Green, Executive Officer, was extremely pleased with the operation saying,

"The entire exercise went real smoothly, it was a new experience for everyone and the men handled it like experts."

Two soldiers save boy's life

By Lisa D'Luhy

When a soldier in the 1st Inf Tng Bde finally receives an off-post pass, he usually heads for the local establishment and reminisces about the "good ole days" back home.

Pvts. Ivan Colley and Gerald Nelson, Co B, 6th Bn, had the same idea September 9 when they stopped to ask for directions near Baker Village in South Columbus.

Out of the corner of Colley's eye, he saw a young boy walking in between two parked cars. Unknown to the child, a 1972 Volkswagon was heading down the road. The boy stepped right into the path of the oncoming car and was struck and hurled several feet into the air.

U. S. Army Photo by Lisa D'Luhy

Pvts. Gerald Nelson (1) and Ivan Colley receive the Army Commendation Medal and a salute from Col. Carl W. Stiner, 1st Inf Tng Bde commander.

Colley and Nelson immediately rushed to the scene and administered first aid until medical assistance arrived. They also controlled a crowd of bystanders who had gathered to watch the activity.

Nelson and Colley graduated from Infantry training on September 14. On that day, before three graduating companies, Col. Carl W. Stiner, brigade commander, presented Nelson and Colley with Army Commendation Medals and saluted them for their professionalism and concern for human life.

Colley is awaiting his orders and Nelson is in Airborne training. Upon graduation, he will be stationed with the 82nd Airborne Div, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Chapels collect offering

On Sunday, the Protestant Chapels at Fort Benning will have a designated offering for the benefit of the Chapel of All Faiths Fund at West Central Georgia Regional Hospital in Columbus.

This project was presented to the Fort Benning Consolidated Chaplains' Fund Council by Chaplain (Maj.) Val Goeres and Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Charles Hill of The Infantry Center Protestant Chapel. The Council voted to support the chapel drive through the special offering.

According to Henry Hartzog, Hospital Chapel committee chairaman, the chapel fund drive has collected approximately $94,000 in donations and pledges to date. "But we will lose a conditional pledge of $25,000 if we don't raise $120,000 by December 31," Hartzog said.

State funds cannot be used for a religious building so contributions are being sought from individuals, churches, businesses, and other groups throughout the 28 West Georgia counties served by the hospital.

WCGRH is a psychiatric hospital serving adults and children with psychiatric problems, alcohol and drug abusers, and the developmentally disabled.

Chapels at Fort Benning participating in the Sunday offering are: The Infantry Center Chapel, Kelley Hill Chapel, Sightseeing Road Chmapel, McGraw Manor Chapel, Custer Terrace Chapel, Lavoi Manor Chapel, and the Infantry Training Brigade Chapels.

Rundown

Roads are for vehicles — not runners! And Fort Benning roadways are no different according to the poast safety office.

Early morning and evening runners are often difficult for drivers to see and during daylight hours the traffic is heavy, making swerving around a road runner a hazardous move.

There really is no need for anyone to be jogging down the side of a road. There are plenty of safe areas on post for any type runner and that is where the running should be done.

True, it may become boring to run 10 miles around a two-mile track, but it is even more boring to recuperate in a hospital bed or rest permanently in a cemetery.

500 Bragg troops 'drop in' for training

By Julie Casey

Five hundred and fifty six soldiers plus 11 plane loads of equipment, of the 1st Bn (Airborne) 504th, 82nd Airborne Div, dropped from the sky in a Mass Tactical Jump Monday.

The jump was the first part in three weeks of training planned by the battalion from Fort Bragg.

All the men jumped with full combat gear and their equipment followed. They marched the 18 miles to their bivouac site at Victory Pond.

1st Lt. Robert Frusha commented that the jump went well and clearing Fryer Drop Zone went great. He was really impressed with the support from Fort Benning.

Soldiers of the 504th also participated in a platoon live fire exercise with 81 mm mortor support. This mission helped to familiarize soldiers with all of the weaponary used by 504th.

This week they will be working with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit as a test battalion for new methods of training and to meet their qualification requirements with the M16 rifle and the 45 caliber pistol.

In the two weeks to follow training exercises will highlight a three day Field Training Exercise and a Hollywood jump or a fun jump. A Hollywood jump is one with just a parachute, no combat gear from a helicopter.

Maj. Gen. Roscoe Robinson, commander of 82nd Airborne Div. will also be here at Benning to review the part of their Airborne Refresher Training September 26, 28 and 29. This training is to qualify soldiers who have been off to jump status for an extended period.

Speaking to the soldiers it was found that they are well motivated and proud of the fact that they are Airborne.

Pfc Roroy Ried and Sgt. Larry D. McGarity commented that they like the Airborne, but didn't love it. They felt that everyone should experience the Army — it's an adventure and a challenge.

As of January 1, DA will institute many changes in the uniform regulations. One of the changes, is to make the Airborne Red Beret unauthorized.

"Don't take our berets!" was the cry of the 82nd Airborne. Several soldiers said that if the Red Beret goes, they will go.

"My father was Airborne and ever since I was a little kid I've wanted to be Airborne — I wanted to wear the red beret! I feel that the beret is as much a part of our uniform as our camouflage fatigues." replied Spec. 4 Chris Carney.

The soldiers will be flying back to Fort Bragg October 6 and will drop back into Fort Bragg in another Mass Tactical Jump.

Recruiting experts meet here for workshop

By Betty Zimmerman

The U.S. Army Recruiting Command (USAREC), headquartered at Fort Sheridan, Ill., held a management study group at Fort Benning September 6-18.

A composite group of 30 recruiting personnel were brought together to develop recommendations for a directive that will establish a standard method of assigning objectives at each echelon of command throughout USAREC. Their commander, Maj. Gen. William L. Mundie, tasked them with developing a quality management system that can be easily implemented, maintained and taught.

The study group consisted of various experts from the 57 districts within the five regions. They included recruiters, station commanders, advertising personnel, marketing experts, management people and more, with representatives from all levels.

The first few days were spent organizing the workshop. Effective methods were devised to incorporate and hash out everyone's ideas. They then proceeded to develop effective plans for the following systems: production management, personnel management, awards, market analysis, information distribution, training and motivation, high school and college recruiting, advertising and special projects and management information.

The final system analyzed was the bottoms-up approach suggested by Mundie. It suggests that ideas be submitted from the recruiting stations through the area offices, directors and region offices to the USAREC headquarters.

The region commanders will review the study at their Atlanta, Ga. conference in November. Then the USAREC headquarters staff will work out implementation plans for what may be a completely new recruiting system.

Androgyny appears in the Arm

By Betty Zimmerman

Androgyny, an ancient Greek work formed from the combination of andro (male) and gyn (female), is defined as a condition under which the characteristics of the sexes, and the human impulses expressed by men and women, are not rigidly assigned.

Concept

The modern day concept seeks to liberate the individual from the confines of sterotyping and to realize there is man in woman and woman in man. It suggests a spirit of reconciliation between the sexes; it further suggests a full range of experience open to individuals who may, as women, be aggresive, as men, tender. Androgyny can be called an ideal—a movement away from sexual polarization and the prison of gender toward a world in which individual roles and the modes of persona behavior can be freely chosen. In other words, it proposes a spectrum upon which human beings choose their places without regard to propriety or custom.

Threat

To some, this philosophy presents a threat because to them, any change of our established institutions and habits threatens their security, regardless of whether those institutions are good or bad. Androgyny appears to threaten men and women in their sexual and social roles. There is a fear, not only of homosexualty, but also the appearance of homosexuality. It is this appearance that causes consternation in the Army.

Sex Roles

The Army is offering individuals the chance to escape from traditional roles by opening new career fields to women soldiers, but has done little to educate personnel on the harmful effects of retaining Victorian definitions of sex roles. The Equal Employment Opportunity office (EEOO) does cover the subject in their seminars but those women accepting non-traditional jobs are still being subjected to irrational discrimination and accusations relating to their sexual identities.

Reactions

What's normally the first reaction to a woman soldier who prefers to be a mechanic, truck driver, athlete, pilot, airborne instructor or has the desire to be a combat soldier? It should be, "Well, she's a well-rounded androgynous person, more power to her." But in all probability it will be, "She's trying to be a man, she's probably gay." It works the same for the men who prefer jobs as nurses, arti clerks, cooks, etc., the macho male looks dc on them as sissies or worse. And some wor consider them "less than a man."

Stereotyping

Why? Because there are and probably alw will be traditionalists and conservatives whom a clear separation between prop behavior for one sex and the other will se fundamental. Enlightened people call t division stereotyping; liberationists cal invisible shackles. However, there is alternative to this outdated line of thinking is the recognition of androgyny.

According to Del Martin and Phyllis Lyo their book, "Lesbian Woman", there w actual cases in the sixties when the Arm Forces discharged women for homosexua when their only crime was to have bee "Tomboy" and the fact that they look "Butch." These women were interrogat harrassed, humiliated and ultimat railroaded into discharges, along with actual lesbians, for homosexuality when th didn't even know the meaning of the word. Army isn't quite as adamant today, but ma male soldiers retain this line of thinking and result of their accusations often creat lesbian soldier. Why? Because a young wom often not sure of her own identity, can psychologically convinced to perpetrate "crime" for which she has already been fou guilty by the attitudes of her peers.

Identity

The premise everyone should rememb according to Betty Yorburg in her bo "Sexual Identity", is that male and female biological categories; masculinity and femin are social definitions! Conceptions of id masculine and feminine behavior and emoti are taught to individuals early in life throu roles people learn. They have varied different societies, and in the same society different times. There is hardly a sin emotion, ability or activity that has not bc defined as masculine, feminine or both, in society or another, at one time or another.

Adjustment

An Army man wrote Dr. Joyce Broth complaining about his daughter's insistence joining the Army instead of fulfilling his dre of her as an old-fashioned girl in crinoline. Brothers answered in her newspaper colun ".....Your daughter may be healthier a better adjusted than she would if she fit yc image of the 'old-fashioned crinoline gir According to recent studies by a Stanfo University psychologist, super-masculine m and super-feminine women often le unfulfilled lives. Persons who have t characteristics of both male and female can assertive and as independent as the most vir of men and can also be tender, loving, a compassionate as the most feminine of wom People who are either very masculine or ve feminine miss out on a vital way of behaving the real world because they will avoid doi things that are stereotyped as mo appropriate for the other sex."

MAST expands service with Portland unit

Another Military Assistance to Traffic and Safety (MAST) traffic helicopter ambulance service has been established Stateside, the Department of Defense announced recently.

The new MAST unit is located at Portland, Ore. It will provide services in the northern Oregon and southern Washington area, with support from the 304th Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Squadron of the Air Force Reserve.

Some 25 other MAST-committed helicopter units from all the Armed Forces dot the continental United States and Hawaii.

The first units were established as far back as 1970 at Fts. Sam Houston, Tex.; Lewis, Wash.; Luke Air Force Base, Ariz. and Mountain Home Air Force Base, Idaho.

Since then, this joint DoD and Department of Transportation effort has been expanded and even covered by statutory Congressional legislation in the form of Public Law 93-155.

MAST does what its name suggests, basically applying the famed "dust off" helicopter medical evacuation techniques perfected in Vietnam to American highways.

Some 14,500 American accident victims owe their ride to the hospital via MAST helicopters.

MAST units have flown some 30,000 hours and have delivered medical teams and supplies in various other emergency situations as well. (AFPS)

Professor Safety says

In 1960 when there were 75 million vehicles registered in the United States, one of every 130 was a motorcycle. One of every 40 highway deaths was a motorcyclist. In 1970, with more than 100 million vehicles in use the ratio was one motorcycle for every 40 automobiles. One in every 19 deaths was a motorcyclist. Today with a traffic mix of one motorcycle in every 28 vehicles, every 12th traffic fatality is a motorcyclist. Courtesy Earle P. Brown CSP

Legal Briefs

When you buy a house, you will either borrow the purchase price less your down payment, or assume someone else's loan and pay him for the equity he has in the home. While an assumption purchase usually means that your initial down payment will be larger, it has the advantages of paying back a loan with a lower rate of interest, having someone else (a previous owner) do the work involved in obtaining a mortgage, and having the earlier owners pay back a substantial part of the interest.

Home buying otherwise means finding a mortgage with an interest rate and monthly payments that you can afford. Just as it pays to shop around for the home you want, it's also a good idea to shop for a mortgage loan in order to find the most favorable financing.

Basically, there are three types of mortgage loans:

1. VA loans in which the mortgage is partially guaranteed by the Veterans Administration (VA). To get this kind of loan, you have to be a qualified veteran of Military Service. There is no maximum mortgage amount; the sale price of the home and your income determine the limits.

2. FHA loans that are insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA). Anyone can apply for an FHA mortgage and can borrow up to $45,000 with three to 10 per cent down payment. Eligibility is based on family size, income, and the cost of the house you wish to purchase.

3. Conventional mortgages that involve no government backing. Generally, conventional loans are more plentiful than government back loans. Anyone can apply to borrow up to $55,000 in this kind of mortgage loan from a Federal insured lending institution.

Interest rates on VA and FHA loans are regulated by the government — currently the maximum is 8.5 per cent for single-family homes — while rates on conventional loans are determined by conditions in the money market and can vary from place to place and time to time. The main advantage of VA and FHA loans is that they sometimes permit smaller down payments and longer periods to repay, up to 30 or 35 years. However, they are not as plentiful as conventional loans and usually take longer to get.

All three types of loans are arranged through private lenders, such as commercial banks, mortgage companies, mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations. However, the amount of the mortgage will be limited mainly by the value of the home you seek to buy (as established by an appraisal).

To get a mortgage loan, go to a lending institution, ask to see a loan officer and fill out a loan application. Your income, credit and references will be checked and the home's value appraised before you are told if your application has been approved.

For more information on home financing, the Housing and Urban Development Department (HUD) has published several booklets including Wise Home Buying (180 D) and Home Buying Veteran (172 D), which are available free from Consumer Information, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Mortgage insurance premium paid by Department of Army

The Army is authorized by the National Housing Act to pay mortgage insurance premiums to FHA for eligible active duty home buyers. Retirees, those separated or relieved from active duty, and soldiers called to active duty for training, are not eligible.

Mortgage insurance premium is the charge payable to the FHA by Department of the Army for insuring the loan to the lender.

The primary advantages of the program are lower down payments for housing with an appraised value for $25 thousand or higher, and payment of mortgage insurance premiums by the Army while you're on active duty.

Certificates of eligibility are issued to active duty military who meet the following requirements:

- Are currently on active duty
- Have completed over two years active service to include service at the US Military Academy
- Require housing either at a retirement location or where the soldier desires his family to live

For application procedures and additional information on the program, refer to AR 608-8, "Mortgage Insurance for Service Members." (TNS)

Doughboys: tough schedule still taking toll

By Seth Hamilton

The Doughboys continue to have a tough time of it this season. They lost their fourth straight to the Fort Lauderdale College Seagulls 13-2 Saturday night at Doughboy Stadium.

It was another game in which the Doughboys hurt their own cause with fumbles (five) and interceptions (five).

The Doughboys' offense failed to mount any type of serious attack against the Seagulls. It was their defense that kept them in the game. They held the Seagulls to an incredible 14 yards rushing and only 132 totalyards.

The Seagulls scored all their points in the second quarter as they connected on touchdown passes of 76 and 20 yards within a five and a half minute period. But after that brief lapse, the Doughboy defense slammed the door shut on the Seagulls. Unfortunately the Doughboy offense couldn't put any points on the board.

It wasn't until the fourth quarter that the Doughboys scored and it was the defense that finally did it. After recovering a fumble on the Seagulls' six-yard line and failing to score on fourth down on the one-foot line, the Doughboys defense got tough and tackled the Seagulls' running back in the end-zone for a two-point safety.

In any event, the Doughboys will have to take a time out and re-evaluate this season. With their fourth loss in as many games still fresh in their minds and a powerful Delta State team coming to Doughboy Stadium at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow night, the Doughboys will have to pull out a big game. IF the Doughboy defense remains true to form and IF quarterback Joe Duenas can breathe some life into his offense, the Doughboys will have a fighting chance.

Flyers drop opener

By James Carter

A determined Birmingham Rugby Team took to Stilwell Field Saturday against an inexperienced Benning team, the Flyers, with decisive results. The final score was Birmingham 27 and Benning 15 with nine of the points coming in the last half of the game for Benning.

With three games already under their belts, the Birmingham team capitalized on the numerous penalties committed by the young Benning club. The quick back line of Birmingham seemed to be acting in every play whereas the Benning club seemed to be reacting to their opposition.

In this game where every players action determines the winning or losing of the ball the reaction to action combination can be devastating. The Birmingham captain summed it up best when he stated that Benning has a good club but they need to work together a little more.

The Benning B team played a much sounder game but were unable to achieve any offensive drive and lost 10-0.

Both teams will get further experience this weekend as a change to the posted schedule in which the Benning team will travel to Barnesville, Ga. tomorrow to play the Old White RFC in conjunction with the Barnesville "Buggy" Days in which the gay 90s will be relived. Barnesville is just an hour drive North of Columbus so put on your straw skimmer and bring the family and a picnic lunch and cheer the ol' team on.

DYA needs players

Bass tournament held

By James Gilmore

Total fish weighed in by all contestants was 23 pounds 13 ounces even though many small bass were released.

The president of the Fort Benning Bass Club participated in the tournament and also invited everyone to come to their next meeting on Sept. 26 at the Follow Me Country Club. He informed them that they didn't have to have a boat to be a member of the club.

Fishing seminar lures anglers

By Betty Zimmerman

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center hosted a bass fishing seminar last week that included fishing equipment displays, films on popular bass lakes around the United States, and instructional talks by several renown bass fisherman.

Patrick Croley (l) and James Simpson give the bass fishing boat displayed at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center's seminar a thorough going over. Boats and their equipment are important to the serious bass fisherman.

Program Director Jim Freeman put together the agenda with assistance from the Fort Benning Bass Club. The two-night event was held at the Kalley Hill swimming pool.

Tuesday night was directed at the novice fisherman. David Lockhart, who owns a bait and tackle shop and is also a national bass tournament champion, advised the group concerning basic techniques. Tommy Davis, from a local department store, discussed tackle selection. He and Lockhart displayed many various types of artificial bait and lures.

Wednesday's agenda was directed toward the more advanced fisherman. Larry Davis from Eufaula, Ala. talked about lures and lure presentation. David Lockhart discussed seasonal fishing at Lake Eufaula and Shy Powell from Fort Gaines, Ga. lectured on deep water structure fishing. Tommy Mike discussed fall fishing at West Point where he is a professional guide. Larry Columbo's topic was electronic fishing aids. His firm's display modules showing the use of depth finders was a favorite of the audience.

Benning soldier plows way through exercise

Last Monday B Co, 43d Engr Bn, 36th Engr Gp, returned from Eglin AFB,Fl. where they were conducting a field training exercise (FTX). This D 7 E Dozer with a Rone Plow Kit was one of the machines used to clear an airfield and 51 miles of roads.

Pvt. 2 Mark Silbernagel was specially attached to Co B from HQ Co, 3rd Engr, Fort Stewart, Ga., along with the D 7 E to operate the machine. This bulldozer is special in that it has a unique cutting blade designed to "catch" trees and drag them under the dozer. It also has a heavy, steel protective shield built around the top of the cab. Attached in the rear is the Rone Plow Kit which is filled with water to put a "full pressure push" on the cut debris. This solves a big part of the cleaning up involved after the area is cleared.

When asked what he thought of his unusual job, Silbernagel just grinned and said "I love it!

lose a few, win a few and sometimes get rained out, but we, as Fort Benning soldiers, should stand behind our Doughboys 100 percent.

We should be proud of Coach Barham and his staff because they have worked long and hard and done an outstanding job. The players, but it takes pride and dignity to take it on the ole chin. Our Doughboys have that pride and dignity. I bought a season ticket this year and if I'm here next year, I'll buy another one!

Benning soldier, brother reunited

By Sue Davis

In 1942, while World War II was raging full-force in Europe, many Polish families were confined in detention camps or separated from one another. Regretfully, some families were never reunited.

But it's a happy ending for the Klys family.

On August 23, after 36 years of separation, Maj. Adam Klys, chief, Collective Tns Design Branch, DTD and his only brother, Tadeusz, hugged each other at Kennedy Airport.

The men were separated as children. In Poland, Adam and his mother, Katerine Klys, had lived with one set of relatiuves while his younger brother and father lived with other relatives across town.

The Germans captured Tadeusz and his father and confined them to a detention camp.

With the help of American officials, Mrs. Klys, an American citizen, and Adam, were able to get to a displaced persons camp in West Germany. They later emigrated to the United States under sponsorship of a sister who lived in New Hampshire.

More than five years of fear and uncertainty elapsed before Mrs. Klys and Adam learned from relatives that their family was still alive.

Twenty years of unsuccessful attempts were made to reunite the Klys family after Adam and his mother returned to the U.S., but to no avail.

But in December 1977, a drastic turn-a-round occurred. President Carter visited Poland and publicly stated that he wished separated Polish-American families could be reunited. There was still hope.

Adam received the support of U.S. Rep. Jack Brankley of Columbus, who assisted with contacts to bring his brother to America.

Tadeusz Klys was not alone when he finally set foot on American soil. His family had grown considerably since he and his brother were separated. His wife, Teresa; and their children, boguslaw, 18; Beata, 16; and their 10 years old son, Adam accompanied him. All are ecstatic about being in the U. S. and look forward to learning the English language.

Maj. Adam Klys (r), assists brother, Tadeuz in a reading lesson.

Tadeusz was recently employed by the Muscogee Iron Works in Columbus.

The mens' father, who is a retired factory worker, corresponds with the family here, but has chosen to remain in Poland.

Maj. Klys was asked if his brother and family were surprised by any particular American ways of life. "Every time you get something to drink here, it comes with ice. At first, they didn't know how to take this because it's just not common to them. But it didn't take long before they got used to it!" he chuckled.

CHAMPUS to use 1977 figures to determine rates

Beginning this month, CHAMPUS will start using 1977 figures to determine customary and prevailing charge levels, the Defense Department has announced.

Implementation dates for the new rates may vary slightly among CHAMPUS contractors because of differences in dates the basic information can be made available.

In most cases, updating the information base will allow CHAMPUS to pay more for a particular service or supply, according to a Defense spokesman.

Customary and prevailing charge levels are two of the three factors used to determine the amount CHAMPUS will allow for a particular service or supply—an amount known as the CHAMPUS-determined reasonable charge or, more simply, the reasonable charge. The third factor is the actual billed charge.

Customary and prevailing charge levels are based on actual bills recorded during the calendar year previous to the date on which new levels are placed in effect. (ARNEWS)

Albany Nut Run

Tom Coniglio and Bruce Skiles tied for first in the Albany 10,000 meter Nut Run Saturday with the time of 34:10. The race had a bit of twist at the finish though. Nearing the end of the race the lead man made a wrong turn. The policeman leading the race caught up with them and directed them back on course. At that time a young man from the Jefferson College had first followed by Coniglio and Skiles. When the error was discovered they had to turn back putting Coniglio and Skiles in the lead. It is assumed that Coniglio and Skiles would have caught that young, but we'll never really know.

Dave Fields, Wayne Angel and Matt Klimow, soldiers from Fort Benning, placed 7th, 8th and 9th with the times of 34:30, 34:58 and 35:02 respectively.

BAYONET holiday deadlines

Due to the training holiday on Oct. 6 and Columbus Day Oct. 9, personnel interested in submitting articles for publication in the Oct. 13 issue of the BAYONET must have the copy to Pat Brown or Ben Walburn no later than noon on October 4.

Setting it straight

Last week the BAYONET mistakenly identified the 43rd Engr Bn as the group that constructed the Light Tactical Raft across Victory Pond for the AUSA Picnic. The actual builders of the bridge were members of the 586th Engr Co (Float Bridge).

Noted sculptor presents statue

Statue of Sergeant York created by noted sculptor Felix de Weldon.

Noted sculptor Felix de Weldon will present a statue of Sgt. Alvin C. York, legendary World War I hero, to the U.S. Army on Oct. 6 at 11 a.m. The ceremony will be held at Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum, where the statue will be on permanent display.

The ceremony, which York's widow and other members of his immediate family have been invited to attend, will also commemorate the 60th anniversary of the founding of Fort Benning.

Maj. Gen. William J. Livsey, post commander, will accept the statue on behalf of the Army from de Weldon. The renowned sculptor has created a number of monuments with military themes. He is perhaps best known for the Iwo Jima memorial, the largest bronze statue in existence.

The four-foot plaster statue of York being presented here was used as a model for a larger one created by de Weldon and unveiled in York's home state, Tennessee, in 1968.

Following the presentation, Livsey will slice a birthday cake using a World War I bayonet, and the 283rd Army Band will lead the audience in singing "Happy Birthday" to Fort Benning. Refreshments will then be served and the museum will be open for visitors.

In case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be held in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. See related story on page 4.

Pack 27 Scouts compete in Junior Olympics

By Sue Davis

At five o'clock, the field was deserted — the bleachers— empty. All was silent.

But two hours later, the environment had altogether changed. Scouts, their parents and an assortment of friends flooded the field and the stands to either participate in, or witness Pack 27's annual Junior Olympics at Gowdy Field Sept. 18.

The opening ceremony, which began at 7 p.m., included a short speech by Col. Joseph A. Villa, assistant cubmaster, and a flag salute. Cubmaster, Chaplain (Maj.) Floyd Lacey was emcee for the evening.

Boys, ages 8-10 participated in the five different events: the standing long jump, softball throw, pushups, sit-ups and a 50-yard dash. Each participant competed with one another within his age group.

There was a hubbub of activity as the scores were tallied. Enough energy was generated to illuminate every neon sign in Columbus!

The people "behind the scenes" the planners, assistants, denmothers and parents were honored for their dedication to "patience." "We have Scouts because we have parents who care," Lacey emphasized.

The following are overall competition results.

In the eight-year-old category, first place winner was Joey Rivest; second place, Curt Sawyer; third place, Shea Brisco.

Representing the nine-year-olds were Chris Spigelmire, first place; second place, Frankie Plummer; third place, Scott Arial.

The ten-year-old first place winner was Eddie Sprague; second place, Tyree Thomas; third place, Sean Brisco.

The three top winners in each category will participate in the competition at Camp McKenzie Oct. 7 on Old Whitesville Road. Registration will begin at 9 a.m. with the games beginning at 10 a.m. The public is cordially invited.

"Just one more!", urges Maj. Christopher Mullane, as Scott Arial strains during the push-up competition.

Sgt. York didn't want to fight

By Pat Brown

"I don't want to fight."

These five words, scrawled across his World War I draft notice, was the first response of the man whose statue, created by famous sculptor Felix de Weldon, will be placed on permanent display in the National Infantry Museum at Fort Benning on Oct. 6.

Alvin Cullem York may not have wanted to fight, but almost 60 years ago on Oct. 8, 1918, the lanky red-haired mountaineer nearly single-handedly wiped out an enemy machine gun nest, captured 132 German soldiers — including a battalion commander and three other officers — and was credited for destroying German battalion.

"What you did was the greatest thing accomplished by any private soldier of all the armies of Europe." — Marshal Ferdinand Foch

This feat earned him America's highest military decoration, the Medal of Honor, and caused him to be described by the commander of the American Expeditionary Forces, Gen. John J. Pershing, as "the greatest civilian soldier of the war."

This thought was echoed by Marshal Ferdinand Foch, commander-in-chief of the Allied Armies, who, while pinning the Croix de Guerre with palm on York, said "What you did was the greatest thing accomplished by any private soldier of all the armies of Europe."

The man who elicited such accolades was born Dec. 13, 1887 in Pall Mall, Tenn., and was a lineal descendant of David Crockett. Like other mountain men who seemed to be born with rifles in their hands, York was a crack sharpshooter who could bring down a wild turkey with a single shot.

In his youth, the Tennessean led what was considered a wild life, but had later converted to the Church of Christ in the Christian Union, a small fundamentalist sect. Thus, it was not fear of combat that caused York to try to keep from going to war, but fear of breaking his faith and offending his God.

The draft board refused his request to list him as a conscientious objector and an appeal that York sent to President Woodrow Wilson was lost in the wartime shuffle. York had no choice except to enter the Army or be declared a draft dodger.

So the 29-year old man became a soldier, and on Nov. 14, 1917, began his Army training at Fort Gordon, Ga., still convinced he was doing the wrong thing.

His company commander, Capt. E. C. B. Danforth, respected the backwoodsman's obvious intelligence and abilities, but was concerned about York's religious and moral feelings about war. He asked the battalion commander, Maj. George E. Buxton, who was well-versed in the Bible, to talk to the troubled young man.

After several hours of discussion, Braxton put York on two-weeks furlough and told him to use his "time to do some thinking and praying. . .If you cannot return with a free conscience. . .I will see that you are let out."

For two weeks, York fought what must have been his hardest battle — the one within himself — but when he returned to camp, he was ready to fight for his country.

The battle that made York an overnight legend began near Chatel-Chehery, France. German machine guns had mowed down his platoon, leaving York, who had been promoted to corporal, as the only surviving noncom, and seven other men.

York led his small group forward, overcoming the first machine gun nest and taking its crew as prisoners. He left his men to guard them, and moved out in advance to see what lay ahead.

Suddenly, a line of machine guns opened up, pinning York down. Knowing that they had to expose themselves to aim at him, he fired into their position and waited. Each time an enemy soldier exposed himself, York dropped him with one well-aimed bullet.

After 25 Germans had been thus dispatched, the Germans asked to surrender.

York and his group now had 90 prisoners, but to return to the rear, they had to go through enemy lines. York decided to take those in his way prisoner also, and so boldly and brazenly did he proceed with his demands, that he succeeded in his plans, returning finally with 132 prisoners, 35 machine guns out of action, and a place for himself in history.

York was promoted sergeant, and after mustering out, returned to his home in Fentress County, Tenn. where he farmed and started a school for the mountain children.

In 1941, a new generation learned of and were thrilled by his exploits when a movie named "Sergeant York" was made with Gary Cooper in the title role.

York died in a Veterans' Hospital in Nashville, Tenn. on Sept. 3, 1964. He was 76. President Lyndon B. Johnson led a sorrowing and still grateful nation in tribute, saying York "epitomized the gallantry of American fighting men and their sacrifices in behalf of freedom."

Safety urged during holiday travel

Do you know that the Army wants and needs you? Each and every one of you, military or civilian, is necessary for the accomplishment of Fort Benning's mission. On Tuesday, after Columbus Day, if one of you fails to return because of a fatal accident, you will be sorely missed.

Mr. Bennie Padgett, the USAIC Safety Manager, offers the following advice and information to assist you in staying alive and accident-free through the long Columbus Day weekend.

Last year's long Columbus Day weekend was marred by many traffic deaths. Fortunately, no Fort Benning personnel were included in the death toll. To achieve a similar record this year, Mr. Padgett urges everyone to recognize that safety is everybody's job — in the home, at play, at work, and especially on the highway.

Beginning Oct. 9, a larger than usual number of vehicles will take to the nation's streets and highways. The intelligent driver will keep this in mind and remember that the increased traffic magnifies the possibility of becoming involved in an accident. Such a driver will be especially alert during the holiday, and will observe all the rules of good driving while being aware that the 'other guy' may not do the same. The smart driver is always ready to yield the right of way and never depends on another driver to yield or obey a stop sign or any other traffic regulation. The defensive driver assumes that the other guy, given two choices in any traffic situation, will usually make the worst possible decision for everyone involved except himself.

Above all, the intelligent driver uses safety belts no matter how far or fast he or she is going. Using seat belts may help prevent another fatal privately owned vehicle accident among Fort Benning personnel. "Believe it or not of the 12 Fort Benning soldiers killed in privately owned vehicle accidents this year, not a single one was wearing a seat belt." stated Mr. Padgett. Don't let yourself become number 13. DRIVE DEFENSIVELY.

Have a happy Columbus Day weekend by making sure it's a safe holiday for yourself, your family, your friends and anyone else with whom you come in contact. Accept safety as a way of life and live longer.

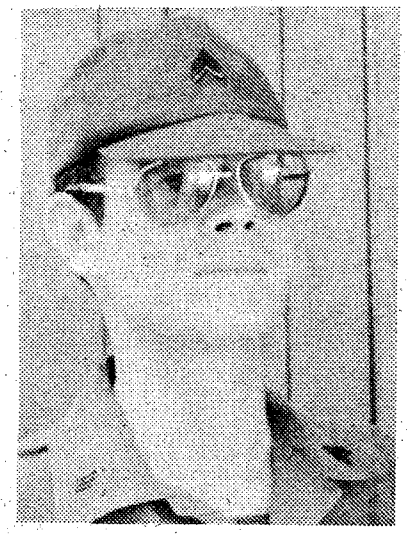
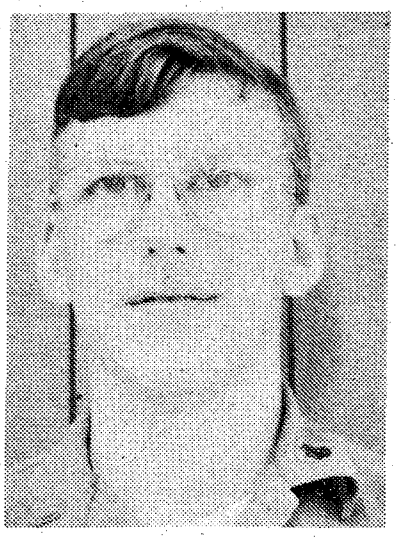
How does your PT program improve your daily on-the-job performance?



Sgt. Frederick H. Heller, Army Research Institute

Our PT program has a tendency to build confidence so that one takes pride in any task that is assigned.

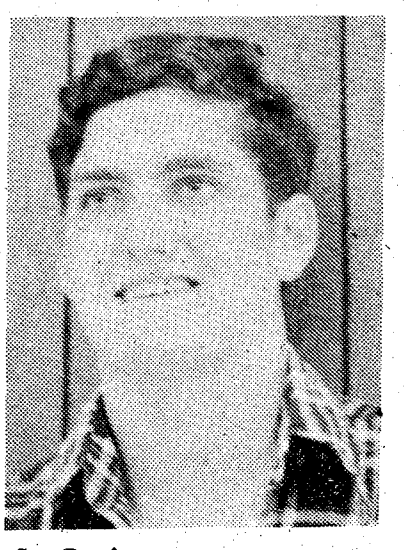


2nd Lt. James Press, 444th Trans Co

It keeps me physically and mentally alert. Daily exercise allows one to build up stamina and patience. When I'm in good physical shape, the situations that occur during the work-day are easier to cope with and solve.

Spec. 5 Teal Denson Jr., Co B, Hqs Cmd (Parachute Packing Branch)

My present PT program doesn't show any noticable improvement of my job performance — simply because having to pack 300-400 parachutes a day is enough physical exercise for anyone.



PFC Mike Jones, Hqs Co., Hqs Cmd

My section has PT early in the mornings before the duty day begins. On these days, I usually get to work feeling wide awake and refreshed, ready for a full day's work.

The following is the second in a three-part series by David S. Niekerk entitled "Soldiering: Never the Road to Economic Abundance."

COMMENTARY

Maximum pay for EM's was five dollars in 1906

In my last article, I briefly traced the plight of junior Army officers attempting to survive on their small pay during the years from 1812 to 1906. I also showed how Gen. F.S. Dodge, Paymaster General of the Army during the first part of the 20th century, complained to Congress about the inadequate pay of military officers. In this article, I will show how Gen. Dodge also spoke out for the pay rights of the enlisted soldier.

Gen. Dodge believed that there was a great need to increase the pay and benefits for enlisted soldiers. This was needed to insure that the Army could maintain within its ranks noncommissioned officers who were resourceful and capable of handling any problem through individual initiative. The pay of sergeants was so insignificant that few soldiers were motiviated to take on the responsibilities of an NCO. At the turn of the century, the pay of a Private and a Corporal was only $2 a month. A Sergeant was paid only $5 a month. Gen. Dodge stated in one of his official reports:

"The Army would be very materially benefitted if the pay of the noncommissioned officers was raised to a sum which would make it an objective for a soldier to qualify himself for obtaining and retaining such positons."

It was felt by many officers that with the increase in pay, the rank of noncommissioned officers would be sought; and once reached, would not be forfeited as readily as it had been in the past.

To give a soldier an economic goal along with a sense of pride upon reaching the noncommissioned officers ranks wold prevent careless, indifferent attitudes towards the rank of NCO.

In a report to the then Secretary of War, William Howard Taft, Gen. Dodge summed up his belief in the need to increase the pay of enlisted soldiers. The noncommissioned officer then as now was considered a key to the needs of a modern Army.

"In a modern Army in the field, the noncommissioned officers should be men of intelligence, resourceful in emergencies and capable of individual initiative. This class of men cannot be recruited for such positions on the present rate of pay."

Judging the volunteer Army a favorite pastime for many

By Stephen Guthrie

A popular misconception handed around today is the premise that today's Army cannot handle the requirements of a full-scale conventional war, that the new "All Volunteer Army" is not only ineffective, but at its best-incompetant. However, the view from the outside is more often than not a decision based on inference rather than fact.

Actually, many opinions are formed by organizations of people with a minimum of evidence other than personal opinion and bias. When one hears the statement "Plumbers are richer than doctors," or, "All politicians are crooks" and accept this as truth or even semi truth without supportive data, why, this would be stretching gullibility to its furthest extent. Yet people from all walks of life, from professional men to common laborers take these comments made about the military as factual evidence.

This is not to say the people who denounce the military are lacking in the figures and statistics. Many of them have stacks of papers denoting excess expense, manpower waste, corruption, lack of leadership and sheer ignorance on the part of the military. These figures are no more prestigious than many of the gentlemen presenting them, many highly respected in their chosen fields. Somehow though, the men who support the military with equally impressive reputations, just as respectable, and opinions just as valid, don't seem to be given the same amount of credibility.

Admittedly, the modern armed forces are suffering from problems that seem insurmountable. And dealing with a bureaucracy as large as the Civil Defense conducts emergency exercise

The Columbus Department of Civil Defense, with the support of the Seaboard Coast Line Railway, conducted a city-wide emergency exercise Sept. 27. The test called for community response to television and radio announcements of a tornado warning and to the concurrent sounding of the sirens.

The exercise was that a simulated tornado hit a Seaboard Coast Line train passing through Columbus. Several cars were derailed including one carrying an unidentified chemical. The leaking gases from this tanker created a serious medical evacuation and population control problem.

Personnel of the Seaboard Coast Line Railway Company had arranged for an actual tanker to be spotted at an undisclosed location. Personnel from Fort Benning, acting under the guidance of Capt. Larry Heystek, Director of plans and training CDPT provided the gray smoke and related simulated effects against which the Columbus police, fire and rescue workers directed their coordinated emergency effort.

Some 30 Baker High School seniors played the part of victims. They were evacuated by ambulances to area hospitals. Two Department of the Army civilians were more seriously hurt and required helicopter evacuation. This was accomplished by a MAST helicopter from the 498th Med. Co. (Air Amb), 34th Med. Bn.

All public and independent schools and day care centers were expected to implement their respective tornado warning drills. Government departments and agencies and local business were also encouraged to take part.

Pathfinder's torch doused again

By Betty Zimmerman

The Pathfinder's torch is being extinguished for the third, but possibly not the last time.

A lack of funding has dictated the demise of the only Pathfinder Course in the U. S. Army. The final class of this era graduated Sept. 22, but the Airborne Department has hopes it will reopen in 1980.

U.S. Army Photos

The Pathfinder enters an area by whatever means available. He then secures the area and prepares it for the following troops.

Mission

Pathfinders "light the way." They provide navigational assistance and control of Army aircraft. More specifically, their major duties include conducting reconnaissance of landing or drop zones for Army aircraft and preparing those zones to include establishing and operating visual and electronic navigation aids. They also furnish ground-to-air communications to provide information, guidance and air traffic control within the area of operations and provide advisory service to aviators concerning mortar and artillery fires. Then they assist in the assembly of air-delivered troops, supplies and equipment and lastly, operate drop zones for Air Force aircraft when their combat conrol teams are not available.

Since 1955, approximately 10,000 soldiers have been trained in the three-week course.

Origin

It became evident during the first airborne drops in World War II that landing zones had to be marked. On July 9, 1943, the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment and the 1st British Airborne Division combined for an invasion of Sicily.

High winds and bad weather caused the aircraft to unknowingly stray off course and jumpers landed 40 miles away from the assigned drop zone.

Therefore, when two battalions of the 82nd Airborne jumped into Salerno, Italy on July 23, 1943, the drop zones were marked with large fire arrows and 80 percent of the paratroopers hit the drop zone. These experiences led to the original concept of Pathfinders whose motto is "Semper Primus" — "Always First."

The first Pathfinder School was founded in North Witham, England in the spring of 1944. The students were volunteers from the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions. They were preparing for the 1944 invasion of Normandy. This school closed at the end of WW II, but in 1946, it was reopened at Fort Benning.

Classes continued at Benning until 1951 when the U. S. Air Force combat control teams assumed the mission of providing navigational assistance to Air Force aircraft. Then the Korean War entered the picture and with it the use of more Army aircraft. Therefore, Department of the Army directed the United States Army Infantry School to reopen the Pathfinder Course in 1955.

Training

Since 1955, approximately 10,000 soldiers have been trained in the three-week course. Twelve classes a year with 36 students per class have been taught by a staff of 24 instructors. Sergeant Reita Lewis Los has the distinct honor of being the only woman to ever complete the course. She is an instructor with Benning's Airborne Department.

As the years progressed and equipment became more sophisticated so did the training. The course provided the student with hands-on instruction in a field environment. All unnecessary or unrelated instruction was eliminated to insure a fast moving, hard-hitting course. In 1975, the airborne qualified requirement was lifted and helicopter rappelling emphasized.

Active Pathfinders will continue in their jobs; the instructors will be reassigned within the Airborne Department and hopefully the school's torch will be relit soon.

Attic sale slated

The 24th Annual Attic Sale, sponsored by the Junior League of Columbus, will be held September 30, from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Municipal Auditorium, which is located at 4th Ave. and Victory Dr. There will be no waiting in line as everyone may enter at 8 a.m. in all doors. It will be on a CASH ONLY basis — checks will not be accepted. Mrs. Ben B. Phillips is this year's Attic Sale Chairman.

The many items which will be offered for sale will range from furniture to books, jewelry to antiques, appliances to records, fine china to shoes, toys to linens, winter and summer clothes, automobiles and a varied selection of plants. Featured again this year will be a special depatment, William's Salon at the Attic Sale. William, a noted hairstylist, and eight professional hairdressers from his own Cross Country Salon will be giving discount haircuts — clean hair only.

The Attic Sale is the chief money-raising project sponsored by the Junior League each year. All proceeds from the sale are placed in a Community Trust Fund and are returned to the community in various services and opportunities.

Among the major projects that were researched, funded or served by the Junior League volunteers have been: Columbus Museum, Heritage Tours, Columbus Boys Club, Columbus Girls Club, Listening Eyes School, Springer Opera House Museum, Rankin House, Highland House, Pediatric Intensive Care Unit at the Medical Center, the Cultural Arts Program in the public schools, and the restoration of a house that is now serving as a Welcome Center to the Promenade area. Research is currently in progress in the area of Child Advocacy.

Engineers engage in constructive destruction

By Marti Henderson

Members of Co. A, 43rd Engr Bn, 36th Engr Gp, are busy demolishing the former Civilian Personnel building on Vibbert Avenue.

Work began early Monday morning and is expected to be finished by Oct. 6. First, they had to "cap off" all gas, water and sewage lines to prevent interrupted service to surrounding buildings.

Then the crawler crane, equipped with a "headache ball," began its pounding. The building was reduced to a pile of rubble in five hours — the three-ton wrecking ball, operated by Sgt. Donald Bridges, had done its job.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Robert L. Clark, NCOIC of the equipment platoon, the rest of the two weeks will be spent in cleaning up the debris, hauling it off to the Sand Hill Sanitary Fill and landscaping the area. He said, "Normally our platoon supports other company elements, but this time we have sole responsibility for the entire job."

Co A and the rest of the 43rd Engr Bn have been involved in many projects both on and off post. For example, they helped remodel troop quarters on post which resulted in a savings of more than $300,000 to the government.

3/7th takes part in gunner qualification training

By Mike Daigle

Training soldiers in the proper use of sophisticated equipment is a challenging job but it is possible and the 3/7 Inf., 197th Inf. Bde., is doing an outstanding job of it.

The men of the TOW platoon's 3/7 Inf. participated in gunner qualification training for the TOW (a wire guided anti armor missle) last week in order to maintain the highest level of proficiency necessary to a combat ready brigade.

The TOW missile system has a 97 percent kill rate under ideal conditions and with a qualified gunner. Conditions on the battlefield are hard to determine so the Army chose the approach of having well-trained gunners. According to Spec. 4 Samuel Brown, "The TOW training we have here at Fort Benning is good and we're learning a lot about the TOW guidance system."

While some of the soldiers were training on the TOW, other soldiers were studying pictures of threat vehicles.

A combat misfire is also something the soldiers have to know about even though they wouldn't perform that operation during normal weapons training.

If a round misfires when the soldier tries to fire usually he is instructed to wait 30 minutes and then remove the round. However, in combat that would obviously be impossible so they are supposed to remove it immediately.

Blast simulators are used for TOW training to add realism. Sepc. 4 Jose Santiago, Co A 3/7 Inf said, "The training here in the States isn't realistic as it is in Germany but that's only because we're not as close to the border here."

Training for an Infantry man is like a housewife's job — it's never done. There is always something more to learn or if you have, to perfect something you already know. Soldiers in the 3/7th realize this and they are committed to doing the job as well as they possibly can.

Retreat brings families together

By Marti Henderson

A Family Communication Retreat for the married couples and their families of 36th Engr. Gp. was held at the Blessed Trinity Shrine Retreat Center at Holy Trinity, Ala., last Friday and Saturday.

Twenty-two people representing seven families attended this overnight retreat.

"The objective of the Family Communication retreat was to focus on building family unit through the process of improved communication skills and affirmation," said Chaplain (Capt.) David E. Myers, who supervised the retreat.

Rescourse Leader Donna Vanderzwaag used films, Bible stories, and created indoor and outdoor activities for the Children's Program. Chaplain and Mrs. Myers were the leaders of the Parents' Program using films, exercise and group discussions.

According to Myers "All parents felt the retreat was personally rewarding. They also expressed a greater sense of awareness of self and partner due to their involvement in the retreat."

He also noted that, "All participated rather freely in the exercises and discussions, using the break to compare notes with their partners and other couples."

Since the retreat was such an apparent success, more such activities are being planned with concentrated efforts being placed on involving more couples in future retreats.

Shipping household goods doesn't have to be a drag

By Betty Zimmerman

The dreaded day has come — orders have arrived announcing a permanent change of station (PCS) and that means shipping the household goods again. What a drag.

Personal property moving and storage needn't be such a hassle — all you have to do is start early and follow the advice of the transportation personnel. There are certain procedures to follow and other recommendations made that will smooth out the entire operation.

Things to do

- Call transportation for an appointment as soon as orders are received. Incoming personnel should notify transportation as soon as they get here so they may be contacted when their goods arrive.
- Bring your spouse to the counseling appointment, listen carefully and make notes. Please don't bring any children; they will distract your attention.
- Verify everything listed on your inventory sheet.
- Completely separate items not scheduled to be packed and shipped by the movers.
- Keep all papers related to the move in a handy place.
- Direct any questions during packing to the person in charge only.
- Make sure your refrigerator is defrosted and cleaned early enough for it to be completely dried out before the movers come. Otherwise, it will mildew.
- Call the transportation office right then, if any problems develop during the packing and loading.
- Be sure to fill out the customer satisfaction report and return it to the transportation office when your move is completed.

Things not to do!

- Don't wait to the last minute to make arrangements with the transportation office.
- Don't expect to choose the carrier. Transportation must split up the workload among many carriers.
- Don't expect the movers to disassemble swing sets and television antennas or disconnect appliances or remove air conditioners. They are not required to do these things.
- Don't expect to have your furniture packed in wooden crates.
- Don't ship valuables, carry them yourself in hand baggage.
- Dont leave the packers unattended while they are in your home.

Remember, the secret to a smooth household goods shipment is report to the transportation office early, listen to their instructions and follow them precisely.

By Tommy Pool

The week-long Marksmanship Evaluation Test involving the 1st Bn, 504th Inf, 82nd Airborne Div., and the United States Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) draws to a close today, with final live fire exercises on Simpson and McAndrews Ranges.

The seven day tests included comprehensive instruction on fundamentals of marksmanship as well as qualification firing with both the .45 caliber pistol and the M-16 rifle.

The program of instruction presented by the USAMU was designed to significantly improve the individuals skill in marksmanship using the Army's present small arms qualification system. New techniques taught during the preliminary rifle and pistol instruction were developed by the "Champions" at the USAMU.

military sometimes is more frustrating than anything imaginable.

These problems have existed within military organizations since the beginning of organized combat. From the Roman legions to the smallest guerilla fighters, the problems of pay, medical attention, supply and comprehensive care for all the men's needs has been a thorn in the military's side. The soldier's life has always been one of hardships and discomfort with little or no recognition for the sacrifices made in protecting his country. Even more so now. Does he really need to be disgraced any further by his countrymen?

No! The best judge of our Army's readiness is not the administrator sitting behind a desk compiling sheets of facts and figures, nor the professor theorizing on the implications of "martial behavior." The best judges are those who serve in the Army today, not 40 years ago — the common soldier. Whether he is in combat arms or a cook, an officer or a private, he knows. And when the time comes to test him, when the statistics become meaningless and tte "experts" must rely on the uneducated, incompetent soldier to defend him and his country, then, and only then, can a judgement be made.

Rock Revue rolls on

By Judi Taylor

Fort Benning can be a pretty dismal place if you are staying here during the holiday season, but if you keep your eyes peeled you can catch a performance of the Holiday Rock Revue scheduled to start in late November.

Auditions are over, the cast has been selected and now the hardest part starts, innumerable hours of repetitive routines and rehearsals.

The men and women working in this production will sing and dance to a variety of five musical selections, from Fifties to todays Rock 'n' Roll. The cast will be made up mostly of soldiers, male and female, from all over Fort Benning, working under the direction of Post Musical Director and choreographer Mr. Charles Sheikovitz.

The shows' sets and costumes will be the responsibility of the cast, therefore each member will be doubling as seamstress, carpenter or lighting technician to name a few. If you would like to get involved in the technical aspect of the production please call 545-1679. Another pair of hands will always be welcomed.

Dramatizers rehearse play

The Fort Benning Dramatizers are now in rehearsal for Bob Randall's comedy, 6 Rms Riv Vu. The title, taken from newspaper advertisement jargon, refers to a six room, rent-controlled apartment with an elusive view of the river, which is vacant, awaiting a new tenant who'll pay $325 a month.

Cast in the role of Anne Miller is Linda Caffey, whom audiences may remember as Abigail Williams in The Crucible and Anne Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days. Linda has also acted both at Columbus College and the Springer Theatre Company.

Paul Friedman will be portrayed by Tim Wipperman, a recent addition to the Dramatizers.

Henry Robles will appear as the building superintendent, Eddie. His stage credits in the San Francisco Bay area include The Man Who Came to Dinner, One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest, and Dark of the Moon.

Rita Mary Jones will play "The Pregnant Woman." She has appeared in Fort Benning productions of The Crucible, Harvey, and Anne of the Thousand Days.

Brenda Barton will play "The Woman in 4A." Brenda was recently seen as Jane Seymour in Anne of the Thousand Days, and as Nurse Kelly in Harvey.

"The Expectant Father" will be portrayed by Dempsey Darrow, who has previously been seen as the Duke of Norfolk in Anne of the Thousand Days, and in Everybody Loves Opal at the Springer Theater Company.

Janet Friedman will be played by Pat Wainwright, who has appeared in Dramatizer productions of The Crucible, The Imperial Nightingale, and A Thurber Carnical, as well as in numerous Springer Theater Company productions.

Richard Miller will be played by Vic Prophet whose credits are extensive. His most recent role with the Dramatizers was as Dr. Chumley in Harvey.

The production will be staged at Bldg 72, the Playhouse (on the corner of Anderson Street and Wold Avenue) on Oct. 6, 8, 13 & 14 at 8 p.m.

Admission for all performances will be free, and reservations may be made beginning Sept. 15, by dialing 545-7696.

Officer Candidate School: preparing t

"ATTENTION incoming personnel — this is a military establishment. Sign in wearing a military uniform!"

This is your first indication that the next 14 weeks are definitely not going to be fun and games. This is it — the "real" Army, the home of the Infantry, Fort Benning, Ga. — OCS (properly termed Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate School).

"OCS is a dynamic and demanding program," says Col. Todd P. Graham, Benning's School Brigade commander, in his opening remarks to each officer candidate class.

"THE STANDARDS are high," he continues, "but through determination and intense personal motivation each individual can meet these standards."

"Candidates who complete the course are judged to be capable of assuming the responsibilities of a commissioned officer."

The course itself has two aspects: academic instruction and leadership training. Academic training is concerned with classroom work and practical work in the field. You will receive leadership training through the company you are assigned to in OCS. All candidates take turns in filling leadership positions in the student chain of command, and they are responsible for the conduct of their respective units. Tactical officers and candidate peers observe and rate the capabilities of student leaders.

"It is here," says Graham, "that you prove your ability to lead and apply technical knowledge to tactical work."

DEMONSTRATED LEADERSHIP and academic abilities are weighed equally in determining your final grade. If you are weak in one or both of these areas you may be turned back to a later class or relieved from the program.

During the course you take scheduled written examinations and a number of unannounced spot quizzes. Some subjects of instruction tested are: squad drill performance, land navigation, communications, combat support, tactics and weapons systems.

YOU ARE REQUIRED to maintain a 70 percent academic average throughout the program. A mandatory study hall, for all candidates, is conducted Sunday through Thursday nights for two hours.

As a candidate you will be under constant observation. This observation is intended to produce pressure and mental strain to test your fortitude, ability and dependability.

"The application of pressure is one of the key techniques in the leadership development of an officer," said Graham. Situations are developed where you are required to conduct instruction or stand before a group of soldiers to express ideas or give directions.

THESE ACTIVITIES are designed to test the spirit of the candidate and are constructive for the purpose of developing leadership, explained Graham. "Candidates are not required to participate in activities that are impossible to accomplish or degrading to human dignity."

"As a candidate you may see it as harassment," says 2nd Lt. Howard P. Mikelsen, a recent OCS graduate and present tactical officer. "But as the course progresses you realize that there are certain things in the real Army that could be called harassment. The cadre are just attuning the candidate to these things.

"PRESSURE," as Graham talks about it, falls into two general categories: physical and psychological. Physical training keeps you alert and enhances physical fitness. As an Army officer you must be capable of doing everything that you expect your subordinates to do — an officer leads by example.

Psychological pressures you have to bear will normally be in the form of requiring completion of a variety of tasks within a period of time, according to Graham.

"These tasks," explained Mikelsen, "develop the candidate's ability to organize his time and resources to accomplish the tasks in the most efficient way."

"This pressure or harassment or negative reinforcement or whatever you want to call it, is only useful to a degree," says 2nd Lt. Dale Massey, another recent OCS graduate. "It does make you constantly aware of what you're doing.

"THEY ASK YOU to do a common task uncommonly well," he continued, "because if you can see to it that the latrines are scrubbed, the floors are buffed and everything is immaculate, a detail that is very mundane and boring, you should certainly be able to perform when you get to an interesting and more demanding assignment."

"When a candidate gets to OCS," explained Mikelsen, "we already know he's bright enough and has the background to be an officer. Now we want to see if he can stand the heat in the kitchen."

Counseling, both formal and informal, is considered to be the backbone of leadership development. You are formally counseled after completing a tour on the student chain of command.

Sessions are also conducted throughout the course by your tactical officer to make you aware of your leadership performance. During these counseling sessions the "Tacs" expect you to ask questions to insure you understand your weaknesses so a definite course of action can be taken to remedy your shortcomings, according to Mikelsen.

Tacs also make on-the-spot corrections for improper procedures, commands and courses of action you may take.

YOU SHOULD BE in very good physical condition before reporting to OCS, according to recent graduates. Physical training begins the day you start the course. "Be prepared to move at double time everywhere you go," says 2nd Lt. Mathew Downing, also a recent graduate of OCS. "Don't be surprised when the company is turned out for five-mile runs at dawn." There are also scheduled physical training sessions every night, bayonet classes, hand-to-hand combat, obstacle and confidence courses and combat proficiency tests that will keep you physically fit.

The Honor Code is designed to develop your personal and professional standards of integrity, self-discipline and character that is expected of all officers, according to Graham. The maintenance of the Honor Code is each candidate's individual responsibility.

Being part of the OCS program automatically subjects you to the Honor Code and its standards. In obeying the Code you:

"—Will not lie, cheat, steal, nor tolerate anyone who does.

"—Give your signature or initials as your bond.

"—Adhere to the spirit of the Code at all times. Thus, a candidate will not attempt to influence, or take advantage of another candidate in any action which will constitute a violation of the Honor Code."

IT IS STRONGLY recommended that you arrive at OCS with a minimum of $150 to offset any initial costs, says Lt. Col. Donald W. Sawtelle, the battalion commander for the OCS companies. Expenses may include laundry, replacement of unserviceable uniforms, bookstore purchases, social activities and class annual.

In order to ease the expenses which will be incurred at OCS by enlisted members, if you are below the grade of E-5, you will be appointed to that grade upon enrollment in OCS.

You should make every effort to have your personal and financial affairs in order prior to reporting to OCS. "This is extremely important," stated Sawtelle, "because successful completion of the course will require the candidate's undivided attention."

You must make the decision whether your family accompanies you. Until the Senior phase of the course, your life will be highly regimented and you will have little time to spend with your family. There is, however, a one-hour visitation period scheduled one night a week, and your family may accompany you to chapel services on Sundays.

"YOUR FAMILY can be of some help when you feel low," commented Massey, "but it's a strain having them so close and not being able to see them."

Sawtelle recommends that you bring your family with you, but cautions that you'll need to arrive at Benning with plenty of time to get them settled.

On post quarters are authorized for dependents for individuals attending OCS, but bear in mind that availability of quarters depends on the number of departures and arrivals at the time you apply. Adequate off-post housing is available at a reasonable cost."

Should you bring your car with you? Most of the graduates feel that it is definitely helpful to have transportation when you have only an hour's free time to go to the bookstore, pick up laundry, and run to the PX to get some personal supplies. There is a parking lot not far from the OCS company areas.

When you report in, you are also required to have the basic issue of clothing. You should also have at least eight sets of fatigues and three pairs of broken-in boots. All issued permanent press uniforms are acceptable, and it is required that all fatigue name and U.S. Army tapes be embroidered. Also, female candidates are required to cut their hair to the authorized length.

omorrow's military leaders today

NOW THAT YOU know what to expect when you get to OCS, you probably want to know how you go about getting there. Well, it's a long process, but if you really want that gold bar a little paperwork shouldn't discourage you.

The eligibility requirements, as prescribed in AR 351-5, chapter 2 are:

—You must be at least 19 years and six months of age and not older than 32 years and six months.

—You must have completed two years of a four-year college degree program or have a DA Two-Year College Equivalency Evaluation certificate.

—Male applicants need a GT score of at least 110 and a score of 115 or higher on the Officer Candidate Test.

—Female candidates need a minimum GT score of 115 and must take the WAC OCS

Behind every good man ...

By Barbara Vosburgh

So your husband is going to Officer Candidate School?

The Army provided him with a list of his needs; but no one, up to now, provided you with your list. This is for wives only. Husbands of candidates will have to make their own list.

First and foremost is a car "just in case" kit consisting of plugs, points, headlight, condenser, battery, jack, spare tire, oil, reserve fuel tank, and a can of multi-purpose libricant spray. Oh yes, do not forget the spare key. Inevitably, as soon as the car realizes your husband is not around, it will begin to disintegrate before your tear swollen eyes. No amount of threatening, kicking, cajoling, or pleading will help you with the metal monster. It demands new parts. It will get new parts. Do not fight it. The car knows that you need it now more than ever before. If you cannot do the work yourself, there are two routes to take. One is a quick mechanics course. The other is a mechanically inclined friend or husband of a friend. The latter is best as it saves clothes and fingers.

Willpower is high on the list of necessities. Without this your husband may be marching off a lot of tours, and the restrictions will mount. There will be times that you can see your husband, but cannot talk to him. There will be times when you can talk to him, but cannot touch him. There will be other times you may want to put things like a candy bar in his laundry bag, or sneak into the barracks to wax his floor. Resist all of these temptations unless you can divert the TAC officer's attention. Each TAC has been thoroughly trained in OCS wife offensive and defensive tactics. The TAC does not care if your husband did not know he was going to get that candy bar. All the officer sees is the crime, not the extenuating circumstances.

You must save "just in case" time. This time is used just in case you need to pick up unexpected laundry at the barracks, go to the PX for a soap dish, run into Clothing Sales for glove liners, or look for daubber brushes in the Book Store. Your "just in case" time should range between one to two hours a day. If you know the entire stock of every store on post, you will save yourself a lot of running around and can use the time saved to run to the same stores for your husband's roommate.

Get an unlisted phone number. This is to avoid strange phone calls plus avoid friends calling after 1700 hours. You must be prepared to wait by your phone between 1700 and 2100 hours every night. Your husband may call for a minute or two once in awhile if he has the time. This is not "just in case" time since you can be doing many other things like ironing his fatigues, writing him a letter, or explaining to the children that Daddy is not in prison.

Among other things you must be prepared to change fuses, change your plans, and save all your change in case his check is late.

It is always helpful to know at least one other person who recently went through OCS. This person will answer questions and understand why you show up at his or her house ranting, raving, and screaming. You will have a sympatheitc ear.

You must be prepared to stand on your own two feet and get your job done quickly and correctly. This may include convincing workmen, repairmen, mechanics, etc. that you are a very capable woman who knows the workman's job inside out and backwards. Practice in front of the mirror saying something like, "Sir, I know the washing machine needs a new gasket, and I also know how long it takes to put one in. I would have done it myself, but I just did my nails." If you are not sure what you need, substitute a word like "whatchamacallit." Assure the person the reason you cannot remember the name of the part you need is you are too busy rehearsing your acceptance speech for "The Most Capable Woman of the Year" award.

You must now be mother, father, troubleshooter, wife, "go-for," banker, and the only contact your husband has with the outside world. Memorize the news. That way, if you ever run out of things to say during your weekly 54½ minute visit, you can fill him in on the Middle East situation, the unrest in Nicaragua, and what Snoopy did to the Red Baron this week.

Make friends with other OCS wives quickly. They are in the same situation you are in. Attend all the functions and all OCS training sessions you are allowed to attend. Share your problems with the other wives. They will have the same ones and can provide laughter as well as solutions. As the weeks go by, it will not get easier, but survival goes a little smoother.

If your wardrobe is like mine was, you will have a lot of jeans and very few dresses, skirts, and dress slacks. Find the Thrift Shop, know its sale days, and memorize the hours it is open. The loss of separate rations in your husband's check may tighten your budget. The Thrift Shop will loosen it again.

Be prepared to change clothes quickly. You will be told that how you look reflects on your husband. Have some "quick trips to the orderly room" clothes on hand. You should be able to change into these in 28 seconds if you have to.

At the end of 14 weeks, do not get angry when you find out you do not get an OCS certificate. You know, I know, all the wives who have been through it know what you have been through, coped with, sacrificed, learned, and don't forget what you managed to get past the TAC. We all have our "battle scars" and "war stories."

Get together with the other veteran wives before graduation and congratulate each other for making it through OCS. Then go to graduation, be as proud of your husband as you have ever been, and tell him your 14 weeks went just fine — no problems — and smile. You made it! You are now an official member of the OCS Graduate Wives' Club; a very exclusive, sympathetic organization.

Kerwin's daughter-in-law sworn in Army Reserves

The former Vice Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Walter T. Kerwin, Jr. (ret.), swore in his daughter-in-law Sept. 22 in a commissioning ceremony in the post commander's office.

Carole Ann Kerwin was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Army Reserves and will be assigned to 3297th U.S. Army Hospital unit headquartered in Columbus. She is a graduate of the University of Hawaii School of Nursing.

She is also the wife of Maj. Bruce Kerwin who is assigned to the Infantry School's Artillery Branch, and the mother of two girls.

Gen. Kerwin remarked, "That makes a family member in each facet of the Army — one on active duty, one in the Reserves, and one on standby."

Colonial Band member receives scholarship

By Seth Hamilton

The Colonial Band, made up of Scouts from Fort Benning's Explorer Post 76, has been supporting community activities and pleasing music lovers throughout the country for the last three years. Now they are doing something good for themselves.

This year the band has started a scholarship fund where one member of the band receives a $500 tuition grant to study music at a local college for one year. The first Scout to be awarded the grant is 18-year-old Roy Martin, son of Army Sgt. (Ret.) and Mrs. Robert Martin of Columbus.

Roy, who plays saxophone, baritone horn and percussion, is currently assistant drum major for the band. Upon learning of his selection for the award, he said, "It's always good when someone recognizes that you're doing a good job. I am looking forward to going to school and learning as much as I can." Roy attended his first class at Columbus College on September 18.

Where do the Scouts get the money for the grant? They raise the cash themselves, mainly through recycling newspapers, plastic jugs and other items. According to band director Maj. Bill Drollinger, "The Explorers have a national scholarship program, but it's a real long shot to get one. We wanted to make the chances of getting a scholarship more of a reality, so we have set up our own grant program. We hope to build it into a larger program that will be worth four years of college instead of one year. It's just a matter of financing."

The Colonial Band, also known as "Georgia's Famous Scouts", is made up of Explorer Scouts ranging in ages from 14-21. The Scouts volunteer their time to be part of the 90 piece band that has become one of the top bands in the Southeast. Among the bands' many credits is an award for being honors band at this years Mardis Gras in New Orleans, as well as being named the Outstanding Community Band in Georgia for the past three years.

Uniform change announced

Effective October 1, women who enlist will not find the Army green service hat in their clothing bags.

The hat will, however, be retained for optional use. The service hat will remain an organizational issue item for Military Police, bands, honor guards and ceremonial units.

According to a uniform board official, the Young Soldiers' Advisory Panel agreed with the proposed drop and also recommended that the women's black beret be redesigned for a better fit. The Advisory Panel also recommended that a second beret be added to the women's clothing bag.

Another item approved for addition into the issue system is the men's black service glove currently issued to Navy enlisted men. The service glove is scheduled for issue about a year from now. The new black service glove will give soldiers a smarter appearance than the black leather shells and inserts issued now, particularly with the Army Green uniform. The shells and inserts, however, will continue to be issued for wear with fatigues.

Also, the "woolly pully" sweater (similar to the one worn by Marines) was turned down and will not be authorized for wear with the Army uniform. "The sweater was considered an unnecessary addition to the soldier's wardrobe," said the official. (ARNEWS)

And the circle goes unbroken ...

By Deb Hilgeman

The 20-3 defeat at the hands of a young Delta State team Saturday night at Doughboy Stadium brings the Doughboys to a critical point in the 1978 season. With five losses behind them now, the Doughboys reach the half way mark with tomorrow's game.

Delta got off to an early start Saturday with a touchdown that began with a fumble recovery at the Doughboy 29-yard line. They parlayed it into a score three plays later on their 4th-and-goal with a one-yard rush.

Another one-yard Delta scoring rush occured moments later; set up this time by a 47-yard punt return to the 12-yard line. A stubborn Doughboy defense held Delta from scoring again until the final period.

The only Doughboy points came on a 33-yard field goal by Wallace Boles with 13:50 remaining in the first half.

The Doughboys meet Presbyterian College tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Doughboy Stadium for the sixth game in a 13-game season. A victory tomorrow night could give the Doughboys the impetus to salvage what is left of the 1978 season.

Rugby team suffers double loss

Traveling to Barnesville, Ga., the Fort Benning Rugby Team took on the well-established Old White Rugby/Football Club from Atlanta in a grueling game held Saturday.

The match treated a large crowd to 80 minutes of continuous tackling and team play and was the highlight of the activities celebrating the Barnesville Buggy Days.

Once again, mistakes plagued the Benning ruggers, giving the Old White team the upper hand. However, it was a costly victory for the Old Whites as many of their A-side players were injured. "That's the hardest we've been hit all season," said the Old White captain after the game.

The Fort Benning B-side also fell to a more experienced opponent 15-3.

The Flyers host the number one rated rugby team in Georgia, the Atlanta Renegades, tomorrow at 2 p.m. on Stilwell Field. See you there!

Free Boxing smoker scheduled

DYA Football

Falcons vs Rattlers

Team effort, with a powerful offense and strong defense, was the name of the game as the Falcons defeated the Rattlers 32-0 in the Midget Division battle of Main Post teams.

Falcon quarterback Randy Smith passed to Richard Eggie for three touchdowns and Jerry Trew ran for another score.

Kevin Sparks intercepted a pass and returned it 55 yards for the Falcon's final score.

Pirates vs Crusaders

The Tri-City Pirates marched to a 10-0 victory over the fighting Lavoie Crusaders Saturday at the Blue Field Complex.

Outstanding defense for both teams kept the game scoreless through the first half. Then a bad Crusaders snap gave the Pirates a two point safety. In the closing seconds of the game the Pirates scored on a touchdown pass from quarterback James Darr to Darryl Shipman.

The Pirates offense was led by James Darr, Robert Lyons and Gary Noble. Outstanding defensive players in the game were Mark Strickland, Keith Lyons and Robert Hymes.

The Crusaders had a new offensive backfield including Steve Campbell at quarterback and Baxter Barber and Sean Smith running backs. Defensively for the Crusaders, George London had an excellent game with seven backfield sacks.

Green Machine vs Redskins

The Termite Division Green Machine rolled to a 2-0 league record by defeating the Redskins 31-18, Saturday.

Unable to move the ball after the kickoff, the Machine quickly gave up the ball and allowed the Redskins to score on their first series of downs.

In the second quarter the Machine, captained by Allen Brunkman and John Lanting, rolled down to the Skin's five and Tim Bryson took the ball over to tie the score. Later in the quarter, the Machine ended a Redskin drive when Gavin Cato recovered a Skin fumble. This key play seemed to lift the whole team and on the first play from scrimmage "Tornado" Tim Bryson galloped 50 yards.

The second half proved to be exciting football. The Redskins scored on their first series of downs to again tie the game 12-12. Then the Machine's Tim McIntosh quarterbacked a Big Green drive which ended when McIntosh pushed the ball to pay dirt from the two. Tim Bryson made the extra point good and ended the quarter 18-12.

The fourth quarter was a scoring battle. Sure-handed John Lanting caught a McIntosh pass on the Redskin five and ran it in. The try for extra points was successful and the gap was widened to 26-12. The Redskins grabbed the kickoff and immediately ran it to pay dirt to close the gap to 26-18. Late in the quarter, the Machine gave the ball to Tim Bryson, who racked up his third touchdown for the morning and the last score of the game to end the game 32-18.

Legal Briefs

When it comes time to buy a new home, you will probably have to go to a "settlement" or "closing" — a legal procedure that marks the instant at which ownership passes to you.

Often "closings" are remembered for the number of technical documents that have to be signed and the fees that have to be paid. But "closings" do not have to be agonizing if you know what to expect.

The documents that are most often executed at closings are as follows:

•Warranty Deed — This passes title to you.

•Promissory Note — By this you agree to repay your purchase money loan.

•Mortgage or Security Deed — By this you pass to your lender a security interest in your house.

•Attorney's Certificate of Title — This states your attorney's opinion that your seller's title is marketable.

•Title Insurance Policy — By this your insurer promises to pay you for any loss you may sustain by virtue of your title's unmarketability.

•Closing Statement — This shows what funds were disbursed, who disbursed the funds and who received them, deed tax return, loan assumption agreement, escrow assignment letter, and seller's affidavit of good title.

You will have to execute many of these documents, but all may not be used.

Some of the more common fees are:

•Appraisal Fee — This charge is to pay for the appraisal of your property. This appraisal is usually necessary for a mortgage, as the loan is figured by the appraised value of the property, regardless of how much you think it is worth.

•Credit Report — Often you have to pay a fee to an independent commercial credit reporting agency to provide the mortgage lender with your credit history.

•Mortgage Origination Service Fee — This compensates the bank or lending institution for its expenses in making the loan (such as processing the mortgage application) and is usually a small percentage of the face value of the mortgage.

•Property Survey — The lender may require a survey of your new property's boundaries by a licensed civil engineer or surveyer to assure property placement and avoid possible enroachments on the land.

•Title Examination Fee — To establish the right of the seller to sell the property to you, a title company or lawyer often will be commissioned to search through records of previous ownership and sale. The cost of this "search" will be passed on to you.

•Title Insurance Premium —

Rabies not man's best friend

By Marshall Jones

The best way to avoid being bitten by a rabid animal is to avoid all wildlife and stray animals, especially if they are acting unusually, according to Maj. Lyle E. Zitek, acting deputy for Veterinary Activities on post.

According to the major, who fills in for Lt. Col. William M. Sims Jr., an animal that acts "unusually" is one that is strangely aggressive or passive, or is in an unusual place. For example, a raccoon in a residential area would be unusual.

"There have been no positive reports of rabies on post in recent years, but the best policy is prudence around animals," said the major. "The body of all suspected rabies-carrying animals, whether they die or are killed, should be preserved in a cool place until delivery to the veterinarian, with special care taken to preserve the head intact," he said.

Household pets are eligible for rabies vaccination at three months of age, and the veterinary activity recommends annual inoculations. To make an appointment for vaccination, call 545-4444 between 8 and 11 a.m.

Army probes reasons for black discharges

The Army is launching a one-year study next month to find out why a disproportionate number of black soldiers are in its prisons, face Article 15 and court-martial punishment and have higher adverse discharge rates than white soldiers.

A still unnamed civilian consulting firm will begin the study next month.

The study is being undertaken, according to a letter from Army Chief of Staff General Bernard W. Rodgers to major commanders, because of a "disturbing trend" in the Army's crime and punishment statistics.

The trend cited by Rogers was first revealed in a 1972 DoD study on military justice. Black service members received fewer honorable discharges for their numbers than whites, according to the DoD task force study.

Army equal opportunity annual reports for CY 1975/1976 and FY 77 show that the DoD findings are still valid and, in most cases, indicate a worsening trend for blacks and other minorities.

Last year's report, for example, reveals that black soldiers received dishonorable discharges during FY 77 at a very high rate for their population in the Army. Black soldiers also received a disproportionate share of Bad Conduct Discharges. The study also says that blacks are charged with crimes at a higher per capita rate. Army prisoner populations of blacks have increased from 35 percent in 1974 to more than 50 percent to date.

According to the Equal Opportunity Report for FY 77, blacks received 54 percent of all dishonorable discharges during FY 76 and 56.7 percent during FY 77, or about twice their representation among all soldiers.

While evidence of a similar pattern among other minority groups in the Army is not available, according to an Army Equal Opportunity official, "Indications are that other minorities occupy a disproportionate share of adverse discipline statistics."

Described by a DA official as the most comprehensive study of its kind, in either military or civilian society, the study is being billed as a detailed investigation that will provide Army leaders with ammunition to make changes in the system, if necessary.

But the official cautions, "Overt indicators of institutional discrimination . . . (are) not an indictment of commanders or even the system . . . (because) reasons and causes of interrelationships are absolutely unknown now."

The official stressed, repeating a remark by Rogers in his letter to commanders, that no assumptions are being made to imply that blacks are currently discriminated against.

Racial discrimination may have nothing to do with the disproportionate data, the official continued, and the Army will not make any changes if soldiers are being fairly charged and disciplined.

"I want to emphasize," Rogers told commanders in his letter, "that our affirmative action efforts are not intended to reduce the imbalances at the expense of requisite standards of discipline and conduct. Where imbalances exist and our findings indicate that soldiers are being treated by the same impartial standards, regardless of race or ethnic origin, affirmative actions must be aimed at preventing misconduct by dealing directly with the causes."

Expanding on Rogers' statement, the official said that NCO and officer training, rather than military justice standards, may require improvements. But, he added, next summer's study results should tell the Army which direction it needs to take.

Among possible causes the study will examine are racism, leadership, composition of minorities in justice proceedings, background of offenders, attitudes, communications, paroles, suspended sentences and more detailed statistics on non-black minorities.

"The Army has taken the initiative in an attempt to isolate and identify specific problem areas where it could take corrective actions," the official said of the study. "This should clear up a lot of speculation," he added. (ARNEWS)

2% baggers fee delayed

The proposed commissary bagger and carryout system which would require patrons to pay a two percent service fee for bagging services, and was scheduled to go into effect on July 30, has been delayed by DOD for 60 days. The delay will allow time for congressional action and resolution of the recently introduced amendment to the defense authorization bill.

The amendment, sponsored by senators Roth (R.-Del.) and Stone (D.-Fla.) would exempt baggers from the federal minimum wage under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The postponement means that during the 60-day period ending September 30, baggers will continue the present system of working for tips. Patrons will not be charged the two percent fee, and commissaries will not establish separate bag-your-own checkout lanes. (ARNEWS)

PIP - new 'Product Improved' M113A1

The "product improved" M113A1 Armored Personnel Carrier has successfully passed all tests and is slotted for production beginning in July 1979 according to officials at the U. S. Army Tank-Automotive Materiel Readiness Command (TARCOM). Warren, Mich.

Addition of the product improvement program (PIP) modifications to all current armored carriers in the diesel-powered M113A1 family of vehicles will be accomplished over the next ten years.

"The M113A1S have been such steadily excellent performers that this PIP is the first major change in the basic carriers since conversion to diesel power from gas during production in 1965. The 5,300 gas-powered M113S produced before 1965 and remaining in the Army inventory will be converted to diesel by 1984," said Joseph Loisel, TARCOM's deputy product manager for the M113 family of vehicles.

"Greater user safety, comfort and freedom from fatigue: increased speed and cross-country mobility; and a lower incidence of engine failure are all benefits that will result from the incorporation of the PIP," added Major David

The PIP includes restructuring the engine cooling system to reduce engine failures. Currently most M113A1 engine failure results from over-heating. Also, additional shock absorbers and redesigned torsion bars will enhance crew comfort and increase mobility over even the roughest terrain.

The modifications include a pair of outside-mounted fuel cells; these are designed to reduce the dangers of fuel being ignited inside the carrier in the event of an enemy hit. The outside cells will also give 20 percent more payload space inside the carrier.

Another PIP, a turbocharged version of the same 6V53 Detroit diesel that is used on most current M113A1S, will result in a 38 percent increase in top speed.

Red River Army Depot, in Texas, and Mainz Army Depot, Mainz, Germany, will convert some 18 thousand M113A1S in the Army inventory.

Kroesen replaces Kerwin

Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen, the first Army Officer Candidate School (OCS) graduate to be promoted to four-star rank, has been selected to be the Vice Chief of Staff of the Army. Kroesen, commanding General of U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM), succeeded retired Gen. Walter T. Kerwin, Jr.

The New Jersey native is a 1944 graduate of Infantry OCS here. He has a masters degree in International Affairs from George Washington University.

Lt. Gen. Robert M. Shoemaker, deputy commanding general of FORSCOM, will become Commanding General of FORSCOM and upon Senate confirmation, be promoted to four-star rank.

Prior to becoming deputy commander of FORSCOM, Shoemaker was commander of III Corps and Ft. Hood, Tex. The general also was assigned here. He served three tours in Vietnam, including two with the 1st Cav. Div.; two years in Iran; one tour with the 2nd Inf. Div. in Korea; two assignments with Headquarters, Department of the Army, Washington, DC; and an assignment at Ft. Bragg, N.C.

Shoemaker's decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, two Silver Stars, the Legion of Merit, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Bronze Star Medal, and 49 awards of the Air Medal.

The Almont, MI, native is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, and the U.S. Army War College.

The general is married to the former Mary Alice Rickard. (FORSCOM)

Protein diets dangerous

By Marcia L. Beasley
Registered Dietitian

The Low-Caloric Protein Diets are based in part on a belief that protein causes the body to use or "burn" excess fat. THIS THEORY HAS YET TO BE PROVED, BUT THERE IS MOUNTING EVIDENCE THAT THESE DIETS ARE POTENTIALLY DANGEROUS. The "modified fasting" these diets require puts considerable strain on the body.

Background

This newest of fad diets is based on the use of liquid protein products but includes powdered protein, protein capsules and protein tablets. Promoters have flooded the market with advertisements of their products as the new way to reduce. The products being sold vary in their directions for use; some contain no directions. Some consumers take the protein material as the sole source of nourishment; a practice referred to as "modified fasting". If used in this manner, the dieter gets about 300-500 calories a day, an amount that nutritionists consider insufficient to maintain good health.

Millions of people have tried these diets, most without medical supervision. Increasing evidence casts serious doubts on the wisdom of using any of these plans without close medical support.

Two recent Food and Drug Administration reports have shown that by the end of 1977 more than 40 deaths associated with very low-caloric portein diets had been received by the FDA. In addition to the deaths, reports were received of more than 100 people who said they became ill due to use of the protein products that were promoted for weight control.

Advice for Dieters

A panel of medical experts reviewed the use of the protein products in very-low caloric diets; as a result, the Food and Drug Administration suggests —

- DO NOT GO ON THE DIET WITHOUT CLOSE MEDICAL SUPERVISION by a doctor skilled in the use of this kind of diet.
- DO NOT GO ON THE DIET if you are taking prescribed drugs, if you are elderly, have kidney, liver or heart disease or high blood pressure or if you are pregnant or a nursing mother.
- BE ESPECIALLY CAREFUL when coming off the diet and resuming consumption of solid food. Too sudden resumption of a normal diet can result in rapid changes in the body's metabolic state.

Proposed Warning Label

Because of the evidence that very low-caloric protein diets are no more effective than other diets and may actually be hazardous when used improperly, the Food and Drug Administration proposed to require a warning label for all protein supplements intended for use in weight reduction. They have asked manufacturers to put these warnings on the labels of their products immediately, even while the FDA is initiating the necessary legal steps to make these or similar warnings mandatory. At the same time, the FDA is considering possible ways to remove some or all of these products from the market if the label warnings do not prove adequate to protect the public health.

Proper Dieting

In general, the Food and Drug Administration experts believe that anyone who wants to lose less than 20-25 pounds should avoid any diets that involve a "modified fasting" regimen. Such diets put a considerable strain on the body.

Most people can diet successfully by simply limiting their caloric intake. This can be done while maintaining good nutrition, which means balancing the diet with a variety of foods that include fruits, vegetables, milk or cheese, good sources of iron, and enriched or whole grain cereals.

Protein is important in good nutrition, but the average adult does not need large quantities of pure protein to be healthy. THE RECOMMENDED DAILY ALLOWANCE FOR PROTEIN AS SET BY THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES ARE —

- children 1-10 years — 25-40 grams
- boys 10-18 years — 45-60 grams
- girls 1-18 years — 50-55 grams
- adult men 18 and over — 60-65 grams
- adult women 18 and over — 55 grams

THE BAYONET

Fort Benning's Sixtieth Anniversary

Columbus Day safety

Columbus Day presents an unusual mix of holiday and workday in the Fort Benning area. While post personnel enjoy an extended holiday weekend, many people will conduct business as usual. Those who enjoy this holiday should be particularly cautious since the carefree relaxation will not apply to everyone.

Particular action and thought should be given to driving hazards during the holiday. Long distance driving should be avoided, and all driving should be done safely and defensively to remain accident free.

Enjoy your holiday weekend and keep safety in mind at all times so that you can enjoy many more holidays in the future.

Memorial Mass set for Pope

A memorial Mass for Pope John Paul I will be conducted tomorrow at noon at the Main Post Catholic Chapel. The public is invited to attend.

Plaques stolen from gate

Two Bronze plaques valued at $500 each were removed from the brick posts located on both sides of the entrance to the post on Benning Boulevard over the past weekend.

A spokesman for the Directorate of Facilities Engineering's Buildings and Grounds Division said the plaques were in place last Friday. "We have a sign checker who checks out signs on post daily and he discovered them missing Monday morning," the spokesman said, adding that the 18 x 18 inch plaques have the words "Military Reservation" inscribed on them.

The Criminal Investigation Division is investigating the theft.

About our cover

Fort Benning, the "Home of the Infantry," celebrates its 60th anniversary tomorrow. This week's Bayonet front page captures the spirit of the Infantry soldier, the backbone of the Combined Arms Team. The page was designed by Carl Bunn of The Ledger-Enquirer Art Department.

Six chiefs visited post

During the past 60 years six of the nations presidents have paid official visits to Fort Benning to see first hand the training techniques used to produce the finest combat soldiers in teh world.

President Warren G. Harding was the first commander-in-chief to visit Fort Benning. The post was only four years old, in October 1921, and the infantrymen in pieplate helmets and wrap leggings marched in review for the President and his First Lady.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Warren G. Harding

Franklin D. Roosevelt visits to the post were frequent, since his Little White House was only 40 miles away at Warm Springs. His first visit was in 1928 while stumping south for presidential candidate, Al Smith. His last visit was in 1943 at a time during World War II when the post was producing thousands of trained infantrymen for combat.

President Harry Truman came in 1950 with several of his cabinet members to witness a firepower demonstration of the 105mm howitzer and th review troops of the 3rd Infantry Division.

Fort Benning was a very familiar place for Dwight Eisenhower, in the 1920s he served as a young officer with the 24th Infantry, and was coach of the famed Doughboy football team. As president he returned to the post in May 1960 to observe the massive Project MAN (Modern Army Needs) a display of the Infantry's potent arsenal.

President Lyndon Johnson visited the post Veterans Day 1967. In a moving speech, he remarked Benning was community of courage, a family of patriots.

President Gerald Ford was a guest at Benning June 14, 1975. This was the year the Army celebrated its 200th birthday.

The nine-foot, life-like Doughboy statue, with the above inscription on its base, stands in front of Building 35, former home of the U.S. Army Infantry School, as a memorial to the infantryman.

It was first unveiled on April 1, 1958, furing a ceremony marking the 51st anniversary of the School.

Cast in bronze, the monument depicts an infantryman of World War II in full combat dress holding an M-1 rifle in parade rest position. It is a replica of the American

DoD halts abortions

As a result of an interim policy decision, DOD and Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) funds will not be used to fund most abortions as of Sunday, Oct. 1, Pentagon officials said recently.

DOD announced a ban on use of these funds for abortions, to conform with legislation passed by the House and pending Senate action as part of the FY 79 budget.

Generally, exceptions permitting use of DOD or CHAMPUS funds for abortions include cases where the mother,'s life in endangered, where mothers are victims of rape or incest, when physicians certify that "long-lasting physical health damage" would result without an abortion or when medical procedures make it necessary to terminate an ectopic, or abnormal, pregnancy, DOD officials said.

Officials added that service members and dependents are not restricted from obtaining abortions outside DOD channels.

The abortion policy was in anticipation of possible congressional approval of abortion guidelines for DOD. However, officials said that the policy is not final and, depending on the outcome of the issue, a final policy will be issued later.

Camellia is an apartment motel. We don't rent rooms, we rent furnished apartments with all the features of a regular motel plus added conveniences that cannot be provided with just a single room - and all at the same, or most times lower rates than the single-room motel. For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 100 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

Soldiers who try to claim travel payments with copies of receipts are in for a surprise, according to a finance official here.

Travel vouchers must be supported with original copies of receipts only. Vouchers received with reproduction of receipts will be returned to the claimant without action, the spokesman said.

If the original receipts have been lost or otherwise destroyed, the claimant must provide an original certified statement reflecting sufficient data to permit the finance office to validate the lost receipt.

Statue

Doughboy statue which stands in Berlin, Germany.

The original statue was done after the close of World War II by a German sculptor, Ernst Kunst. Staff Sergeant Thomas E. Love, a veteran combat member of the 26th Infantry Division, served as his model.

The project to erect the memorial at Fort Benning was started in 1954 as one of the last official acts of the departing former commandant of the Infantry School, Major General Guy S. Meloy, Jr.

A "Follow Me Fund" was established to finance the monument. The statue was paid for by contributions from forner U.S. infantryman throughout the world.

In January, 1957, Major General Herbert B. Powell, former post commander, commissioned a German firm, the Herman Noack Foundry of Friedenau, to reproduce the original Doughboy statue and deliver it to Savannah, Ga.

Chaplains sponsor retreat

The 36th Eng. v ppchaplains sponsored three "Rolling Retreats" during September, the last of which was conducted Sept. 26.

A Rolling Retreat is aimed at the single soldier to provide a spiritual encounter in a natural setting. A total of 62 service members took part in the retreats.

The retreat began at the Sightseeing Road Chapel across from the 36th Engr Gp Headquarters. The first stop was at the Little White House Museum at Warm Springs for a guided tour of the museum. Afterwards, everyone headed for Calloway Gardens.

Chaplain (Capt.) David E. Myers, 43rd Engr Bn chaplain, was in charge of the field trips.

Duty first

Soldiers promoted to E-7, 8 or 9 have a two-year service obligation before voluntary retirement, DA personnel officials said recently.

Reenlistment or extension is not a precondition for accepting a top three stripe, they added, but these soldiers will not be allowed to retire until they have served at least two years in grade.

Glad you asked

Do you feel that the Army has properly trained you for the job you now have?

Spec. 5 Duane C. Perkins, HHC, 1/58th Inf

Yes, because in my particular job (armor), we are constantly being trained every day by NCOs and officers who have done the same thing for years.

Sgt. Larrell Roaden, A-6-1, AIT Bde

The Army has been training me for five years to fight against the ultimate thing — communism. I'm willing and able.

Spec. 4 Raymond R. Coleman, 15th Finance Co.

Yes, because my AIT training was a well-planned program. The 6-week course basically taught the necessary things we had to know in order to perform our job efficiently.

Sgt. 1st Class Alford Haskin, 14th Co, 1st Bn, TSB

Modern Army--meager pay

By David Nickerk

The last time, I covered General Dodge's concern for the pay of enlisted soldiers, The Paymaster General of the Army encouraged troop commanders to write about the pay problems they faced. Among these commanders was Brig. Gen. Fredrick Funston. This medal-of-honor recipient was the commander of the Department of California in 1906. With all of the problems he faced in trying to insure that his troops had enough money to survive on, General Funston was at a wonder to understand how the Army was able to keep as many good soldiers as it had.

The two biggest problems as General Funston saw them relating to pay were that few soldiers were reenlisting due to the meager pay and many soldiers were forced into going AWOL within the first few months of their enlistment. In General Funston's report to the Secretary of War in 1906, he ended it on a sour note concerning the pay issue. He could see no reason why soldiers should receive so little economic compensation for their many hours of hard work.

As can be seen by the many examples I have presented in these articles, the life of a soldier often does not lead to economic abundance. The soldiers of todays Army feel many of the economic burdens that American soldiers have carried throughout American History.

It is this spirit that sets the American soldier off from other occupations. Willing to make sacrifices in order to perform a mission that must be done for the welfare of the nation. A final quote from General Funston sets the tone for military service at the turn of the century and in todays' modern Army.

"No one believes that any officer should, in even the smallest degree, attempt to compete in style of living and in display with persons of wealth, but they should be able to live decently, maintain their families in comfort, and educate their children without being continually harassed by the question of keeping out of debt."

Mightier than the sword?

Irrespective of the disclaimer on a military newspaper, they are set up and designed to be vehicles of command information; they come under Army regulations. From the word "Go," the military newspaper is an agent for reflectiing the image of their command, rather than shedding light on intrigues and wrongdoings after the fashion of the popular civilian press.

There are two sets of "watchwords" for military newspapers. One is "Maximum disclosure, minimum delay." The other is "Don't embarrass the command." These often conflicting dictums place military journalism on the horns of dilemma.

Even though the pen — the printed word — can spell out the seamy reality of some "sensitive" situations, ninety-nine times in a hundred the military newspaper will resort to self censorship out of fear of embarrassing the command or out of loyalty.

On one hand, military journalism may feel an obligation to tell the truth and let chips fall where they may. On the other, it may feel it ought not bite the hand that feeds. The might of the pen is in its power to approximate reality via the printed word, and by those words to enlighten or embarrass, madden or persuade, and to change people's viewpoints.

This might lies, by and large, untapped. The very nature of that might make it extremely difficult for one who would harness it to bear up under the weight which truth exacts from its devotees; and impossible to gauge the potential "fallout" a newspaper article will have.

More often than not, the "fallout" from military newspaper stories is harmless: read once and forgotten. So powerful seems the written word that for some 1500 years the established church didn't care to have those in its fold able themselves to read the word of their gospel. Ante-bellum slave owners exacted a high price from those caught teaching slaves to write and to read.

The written word, though, in the military press is gingerly used Perhaps too gingerly. For while powerful writing may inspire people to immediate action, a diet of news which never, or seldom grapples with the real problems

Alvin York statue is Benning's birthday gift

By Pat Brown

Sixty years ago today, the first troops arrived at Camp Benning, and the budding "Home of the Infantry" was officially born the following day, Oct. 7, 1918.

Highlight of the post's observance of its birthday will be the presentation of the statue of Alvin C. York, one of America's most famed Infantrymen, to the U.S. Army. The ceremony will begin at 11 a.m. today and will be held at the National Infantry Museum where the statue will be placed on permanent display.

The general public is invited to attend.

Maj. Gen. William J. Livsey, post commander, will accept the monument on behlf of the Army. Felix de Weldon, its creator, will make the presentation. De Weldon is a noted scuptor who has created a number of military monuments.

Born in Vienna, Austria, de Weldon came to the United States in 1937. In 1943, he enlisted in the Navy and was assigned to paint war pictures for naval aviation. A wirephoto of the raising of the flag on Iwo Jima served as an inspiration that climaxed in the creation of the Iwo Jima Memorial, the largest bronze statue in creation.

Sergeant York, who inspired the creation, became an overnight legend the day after the birth of Benning. On Oct. 8, 1918, during the battle of Argonne in France, the Tennessee mountaineer almost singlehandedly captured 132 prisoners, including a battalion commander and three other officers, put 35 machine guns out of action, and was thus credited with destroying an entire German battalion.

Statue of Sergeant York created by noted sculptor Felix de Weldon.

For this feat, he was awarded his country's highest decoration, the Medal of Honor. The parade field in front of Benning's Infantry Hall is named in his honor. He died in 1964.

Several members of his family are expected at today's ceremony, including his widow, four sons, two daughters, a sister, and a number of grandchildren. Mrs. de Weldon, the sculptor's wife, will also attend.

Elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade will participate in the ceremony and the 283rd Army Band will provide music. Following the presentation, Maj. Gen. Livsey will slice a birthday cake, using a World War I bayonet, and spectators will sing "Happy Birthday."

Refreshments will then be served on the Museum grounds, after which the Museum will be open for visitors.

In case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be held in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

Discharge information available at VA offices

Veterans desiring to upgrade less than honorable military discharges can now find brief descriptions of cases similar to their own at some Veterans Administration offices.

As a service to veterans VA now has copies of decisions in the Defense Department's discharge review index file available for public inspection in 20 cities around the country.

The index, which up to now has been available only at the Pentagon, provides brief synopsis of appeals already filed with military officials.

By matching cases in the index with their own military situations, the veterans or their representatives may then request copies of case documents (with individual identities deleted) from the Department of Defense.

The material may be useful in preparing a veteran's own request for a review of his or her discharge.

Cities where VA regional offices have the Defense Department index in their veterans' services divisions are: Atlanta, Ga.; Baltimore, Md.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N.Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Cleveland, Ohio; Denver, Colo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Louisville, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; Newark, N.J.; New York, N.Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Portland, Ore.; Providence, R.I.; San Francisco, Calif., St. Paul, Minn.; and St. Petersburg, Fla.

197th medics sharpen their skills

By Stephen Guthrie

As in any other field, it would be unwise to wait until actual combat for a soldier to perfect his or her job skills. That's why the medics of the 197th Inf Bde (Sep) are attending SQT classes this week until Nov. 10, when they will be tested for proficiency in all training aspects.

With a training schedule involving a two-hour period of instruction every Friday, from 1:15 - 3 p.m., the 170 medics from Kelley Hill attend all classes duty requirements allow. The instruction varies from taking blood pressure to treating cold injuries, along with one hour of instruction and one hour of practical application.

"Many of our medics don't have a chance to apply their skills daily," explains Sgt. 1st Class Herman M. Holmes, NCOIC of TMC #3, "because they are assigned to other units and don't have the opportunity to work in a hospital or a clinic. We are hoping this preparation for SQT will not only enable them to pass, but also sharpen their skills."

At the end of the eight week period the medics will be given a final test to determine areas of weakness. Holmes will then be able to concentrate on those areas and devote time to those personnel needing help.

The art of administering shots is one function soldiers want medics to be especially proficient at, as shown on the face of Sgt. Willie Mixon, being injected by Spec. 4 Anett Stampers Co B, 197th Spt Bn.

PCS restrictions affect Sergeants Major Academy

Recent DOD-imposed PCS restrictions will affect the assignment of E-8s selected to attend the Sergeants Major Academy. DA and MILPERCEN officials announced last week.

Basically, the new policy requires soldiers to serve at least two years in a CONUS assignment or complete a full overseas assignment before they are eligible to PCS to the Academy for classes.

As a result, MILPERCEN officials anticipate a higher ineligibility rate for Academy attendance by primary selectees and has increased from 200 to 400 the number of alternate selectees. This increase began with last month's selection for classes 14 and 15, slated to begin August 1979 and February 1980, respectively.

In addition, accordiig to a MILPERCEN official, the July 1977 selections for classes 12 and 13, slated for this month and February 1979, are not affected by the change.

Current and future non-resident Academy programs are likewise not affected by the new policy, officials say.

DA personnel officials and MILPERCEN have written a detailed and complex scheme to accomodate Academy selectees who may be forced to postpone attendance. Soldiers affected by the new policy can learn more about the impact of the changes on their personal situation by asking local MILPOS for assistance. These soldiers should refer to MILPERCEN Message P 0913152 Aug 78. (ARNEWS) faced by a command causes an insidious cynicism among any who may look to a military newspaper for straight answers to tough questions.

People know when they read something if they're being given the straight story or being given a "line." Because military newspapers are chartered to paint a bright image for their readers, rather than to report a post's usually unreported news, a paper's credibility can be compromised so greatly. The other half of the coin is that while a paper is supposed to reflect a favorable image of their command, if a paper's own image lacks credibility because it doesn't give its readers a large enough dose of the truth, that image reflects back onto the command for which the paper speaks.

The truth, though, is a rough ride — a bit like riding a tiger. When a paper opts for the truth, like the very moment of the tiger ride, still, a million questions come pouring into the head: Is this the right thing to do? Whose truth is it? What's going to happen when the tiger gets on top?

At every turn, hard answers and rough choices arise for those who take up the sword or the pen. They both are mighty.

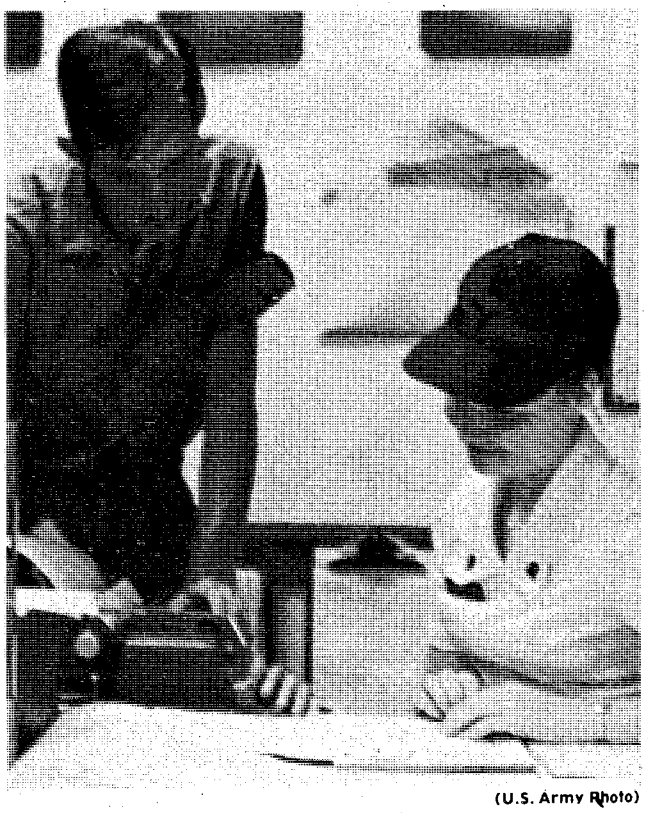
ITB's Goodsons reup for 4

By Lisa D'Luhy

If someone calls for Specialist Goodson at the 3rd Bn Dining Facility in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade (ITB), he better be prepared to hear two voices answer back.

Specialists Fours James and Teresa Goodson have been assigned to the 3rd Bn since they came to Fort Benning in March 1976. Last week, they raised their hands and reenlisted for four more years. One of those will be spent here, the other three in Italy.



(U.S. Army Photo)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT — Sp4 James Goodson discusses the day's food supply schedule with his wife, Teresa. Both Goodsons, assigned to the 3rd Bn, 1st ITB, re-enlisted for four years last week.

Natives of Carrolton, Ala., the Goodson's have been married for 4½ years, the past three spend in the Army.

After attending basic training at Ft. Jackson, the couple was supposed to report to radio communication training. But their orders were lost and they had to choose another Military Occupational Specialty (MOS)that would guarantee them the same post. Because they enlisted for Fort Benning, the only MOS open to them was 94B—cook.

At the 3rd Bn, Teresa was taken off shift work as a cook to help in the dining facility office with all the paper work required to run the facility. She likes the set hours as opposed to shift work because it enables her to spend more time with her year-old daughter, Melissa.

The Goodson's both enjoy fishing and James likes to hunt, with Teresa around for company. In his spare time, James coaches a team in the Senior Division of DYA football.

Sp6 DSs to be 'acting jacks' only

Specialists 6 assigned to drill sergeant duties now receive only temporary appointments to staff sergeant instead of lateral appointment to hard stripes, according to MILPERCEN officials.

Officials say these specialists were given lateral appointments while performing drill sergeant duties. The new policy allows for acting non-commissioned officer status only during their drill tours (ARNEWS).

Benning story: 60 years leading

Fort Benning celebrates its 60th birthday tomorrow.

Named for a distinguished confederate officer, Major General Henry Lewis Benning of Columbus, the original camp was hastily erected on Macon Road, then about three miles from downtown, near the site of present-day Columbus Square.

The camp was officially dedicated October, 1918, a dedication that took place only two weeks after the Adjutant General of the Army had directed The Infantry School of Arms at Fort Sill, Okla., with all personnel, property and equipment, be moved to Columbus.

Local Citizens Helped

The entire project would have been impossible but for the enthusiastic support and help of local citizens, businessmen and contractors, a tradition that continues today in relations between the local civilian communities and Fort Benning.

Riverside, present quarters of Fort Benning's commanding general, marks the site of the second home of then Camp Benning. In early 1919, the camp was moved south of the city to the 115,000 acre Bussey Plantation. Riverside, the original plantation house, became the commanding general's quarters and this fine old ante-bellum home has been honored by being added to the National Register of Historical Sites.

Camp Benning was still considered by Washington a temporary post. Following the end of World War I, and usual post-war demobilization, the camp was ordered to be "salvaged." The wording of this directive, as the story goes, brought about a unique action. Major Paul Jones, then constructing quartermaster, found the dictionary to define the word "salvage" as a verb meaning to rescue or save from wreckage or ruin.

Jones Was Early Hero

Jones became one of the early heroes of the Benning story, for he followed his orders well. Instead of closing the camp, he had every building on the post painted and repaired.

On Feb. 8, 1922, Camp Benning became a permanent installation, Fort Benning.

At this point the build up of Fort Benning began in earnest. The far-flung training areas brought about development of a railroad system with 16 locomotives to carry troops and students of The Infantry School to the field. Some 60 miles of track were laid, all on post. One of the engines which once ran on this locally famous railroad is presently on display at the National Infantry Museum at Fort Benning.

Building Was Early Project

The Infantry School building was one of the first projects in a construction drive of the 1930's. The post chapel, the officers' club, officers' quarters and NCO quarters followed soon after.

Lawson Army Airfield was named in 1931.

In 1935 the distinctive cuartels were built. Designed to house an entire regiment, they were considered quite modern at the time.

A dispensary tent was the forerunner of today's Martin Army Hospital. The tent served the early medical needs of Benning soldiers. A permanent hospital was completed in late 1923. But as Fort Benning continued to grow, the need for a more modern medical facility became evident. In the spring of 1958, Martin Army Hospital was opened.

War preparations and training needs led to a rapid expansion of the Infantry School. In 1941, a noteworthy example of this build-up was establishment of the Officer Candidate program.

More than 60,000 second lieutenants of infantry, so called "ninety day wonders," were graduated and sent from Benning to form, fill and lead infantry units in all parts of the world.

Airborne Comes To Benning

Airborne warfare techniques came to the Army with formation of the first parachute battalion in 1940. In 1942, the Parachute School was organized as part of The Infantry School. Soon, some 4,000 men were graduating each month to fill the Army's new airborne divisions. The 250-foot Airborne towers, used as an amusement ride at the 1939 New York World's Fair were purchased by the government and put into operation by the Parachute School. Today they stand out as a distinctive feature of the post's skyline.

Rugged Ranger training began here in 1950. Soldiers trained at Fort Benning, in the mountains of Dahlonega in North Georgia and going on at Fort Benning as the post begins its 61st year.

Infantry replacements for units throughout the world are trained here. Activation in 1974 of The Infantry Training Center marked an important step in this training process. Now Benning is the home of the newly organized U.S. Army Infantry Training Brigade. This organization, following tests of One Station Unit Training — or OSUT — will probably provide the entire cycle of training — basic training through advanced individual training — for all young men who enter the Army to be professional infantrymen.

The 197th Infantry Brigade is one of the post's combat-ready units consisting of some 4,000 personnel. The brigade, activated at Benning originally as a training unit to support The Infantry School, was reorgan zed in 1973 as a part of Strategic Army Forces.

The 36th Engineer Group, a 2,500 man unit, has the mission of constntly maintaining a movement-ready status for immediate world-wide deployment at the same time, the 36th provides engineer combat service support to other post units.

The 34th Medical Battalion provides medical support to the post and at the same time maintains its ability to deploy anywhere on a combat support mission. It is in this unit the flying ambulances of the 498th Medical Company are found. Combat ready, this unit still plays a major role in Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic — the new well known civilian military program known as MAST.

Fort Benning is a community, and the fort has many of the same features as surrounding communities: businesses, schools, recreational facilities and homes.

On-post family housing is offered to most of the assigned soldiers. Currently there are more than 1,000 sets of officer quarters and another 3,000 sets for noncommissioned officers.

Schooling is provided for dependent children at Fort Benning, with education from kindergarten through the eighth grade on post. High school age dependents are transported to Spencer High School, a facility of the Muscogee County Ssytem.

A modern shopping mall was recently added to Benning facilities providing for nearly every need of the military family with a commissary, post exchange, restaurant, service station and other services.

Fort Benning tday, at 60 years of age, has a land area of 182,000 acres. But more important are the people — more than 20,000 soldiers backed up by a civilian work force of some 7,000 persons.

The emphasis at Fort Benning in 1918 was not much different from today's mission. . .to provide soldiers, Infantrymen — especially Infantry leaders — who can respond to our nation's defense needs now and in the future.

CFC donations climb toward $20,000 mark

Two weeks after the kick-off of the 1979 Combined Federal Campaign (CFC), a total of $17,690 in pledges and cash donations had been received in the CFC project office.

"It is my hope that if the present rate of contributions continues, we will have met or exceeded this year's goal of $300,000 sometime in early November," said Lt. Col. (Ret.) John L. McCaskill Jr., post CFC project officer.

The CFC, representing United Way, Inc., National Health Agencies and International Services Agencies, is a yearly, one-time solicitation for contributions from Federal employees, both military and civilians, in the Columbus-Fort Benning-Phenix City area. A total of 46 individual agencies will benefit from contributions received during this year's campaign.

Persons wishing to contribute may do so either by payroll deductions or by cash or check contributions. However, most people contacted appear to prefer the payroll deduction plan as being the simplest way to contribute.

By Donna Hale

Benning Lady

It was a hand-clapping, foot-stomping Monday afternoon, Sept. 25, at Muscogee Manor Nursing Home when the NCOWC sponsored another birthday party for the residents. The Baker Village Senior Citizens Square Dance Club furnished the entertainment with several square dances and it was very evident that the residents thorougly enjoyed it. There were 12 celebrating birthdays this month and each received a gift.

Cake and punch was served by Mrs. Luise Paulshock, Mrs. Lois Cameron, Mrs. Ann Cogar, Mrs. Shigeko Brown and Mrs. Sue Patrick.

The NCOWC would like to thank the Baker Village Senior Ctizens Square dancers and caller Mr. Loyd Hill for taking the time to entertain at Muscogee Manor and also for furnishing cakes for the party.

Monthly Forecast

October represents a typical fall month transitioning from summer into winter. Temperatures continue to cool and frontal passages become more frequent. October is usually our driest month and precipitation is associated generally with frontal passages in contrast to the afternoon showers of summer. Since Fort Benning lies in the Chattahoochee River basin, a large warm water source, early morning fog and low cloudiness frequently form. This fog and low cloudiness will usually burn off by mid morning, yielding generally fair skies. The possibility of hurricane could development in the Gulf of Mexico continues and the remnants of a hurricane could affect our area if one were to move inland through the Florida panhandle.

Following is a summary of October weather for the Fort Benning area based on at least 25 years of historical data.

TEMPERATURE:
Average high — 79°F
Average low — 53°F
Record high — 98°F
Record low — 26°F
PRECIPITATION:
Monthly average — 1.6 inches
24 hour record rainfall 4.4 inches
Monthly record rainfall 7.3 inches
Average number of days with measurable precip — 5.
Average number of days with thunderstorms — 1.

Buying a home: about those fees

On the day that you decide to buy a residence — whether it be a house, townhouse, apartment or even a mobile home — you will be asked to sign a sales contract. A sales contract is a contract between you and the seller, obligating you to purchase and the seller to sell the house. The purpose of a sales contract is to "bind" both of you for the period of time necessary for money to be borrowed, titles to be checked, documents to be prepared, and the other details to be taken care of. A sales contract is binding, so make sure you understand each provision contained in the contract.

Before you sign these documents, know what they mean. According to the National Association of Homebuilders, the seller is not under legal obligation to do anything not covered in these documents.

The sales agreement you sign described the property, states the purchase price, explains the method of payment and usually names the date and place where the "closing" or actual transfer of the property will occur. Also known as a deposit receipt, this contract binds you legally to buying the home — exactly as it is described in the document. Therefore, before you sign anything or hand over a deposit, go over the contract carefully and make sure you understand and agree with its provisions.

Besides understanding the sales contract and other documents you will be asked to sign, it's also a good idea to know what kind of expenses will be involved in the sale of a home. In addition to "closing" costs — which cover such items as application fees, credit reports, property surveys, title search and examination, title insurance, and miscellaneous fees for drawing up the mortgage documents — there are also a number of payments ("home ownership expenses") that you will probably have to make:

Utility Charges — Depending upon the community, you may be assessed a connection or tie-in fee or advance payment by the local utility companies.

Real Estate Taxes — Most home mortgages require that each month's payment include some money to be set aside in an escrow account for real estate taxes. When your taxes come due, the mortgage lender then pays them out of this account.

Hazard Insurance — You will probably be asked to pay for insurance to protect against damages to the property caused by fire, windstorm or other hazards. This insurance is designed to protect the lender's investment in your unit and, therefore, differs from a homeowner's insurance policy that you would get for yourself. Often the money used to pay for hazard insurance comes from the same escrow account explained above.

To give you more information about settlement costs, the Housing and Urban Development Dept. (HUD) has published a fact sheet (163 D) which you can get free from Consumer Information, Pueblo, CO 81009.

Benning's Bayonet has served troops for 36 years

By Sue Davis

Fort Benning will celebrate its 60th anniversary tomorrow, and 36 of those years have been recorded by the Bayonet, the post newspaper, published by the Ledger-Enquirer newspapers.

The Bayonet was founded in September 1942 and has been rolling off the presses each week without interruption. The newspaper was started by Maynard R. Ashworth, then a soldier statoned here. Ashworth who was post adjutant at the time, is now president-emeritus of the two daily newspapers.

Ashworth, a retired army lieutenant colonel refers to the Bayonet as "his baby."

"There's a reason for the Bayonet," he said. "During World WarI and part of World War II, the troops weren't being informed as they should have been. The post commander at the time told me Benning needed a better method of informing the troops — something more than our monthly newsletter. So he says, 'Ashworth see what you can do about that.' You just don't disobey a general, so we came up with the idea of a weekly newspaper that would be published downtown."

"We encountered the usual organizational problems, one of which was 'what shall we call it'?, so we held a contest. We decided on the Bayonet, a very appropriate name, and it stuck."

According to Ashworth, the post newspaper may have been the mouthpiece for the general, but the primary purpose was to disseminate information to the troops. "It's the soldiers' newspaper," he commented. He added that the civilian and military communities were separate societies during the early 1900s. Neither knew very much about the other. The Bayonet brought these communities closer together.

"I think over the years, the Bayonet has improved a lot because we've made so many changes. More space has been added to allow a broader scope of news to be printed."

Has the Bayonet ever missed an issue?

"There have been strikes at the newspaper from time to time, but they always got the Bayonet out. They never missed an issue and I'm quite proud of that fact."

Doughboys fall 24-12

The Doughboys are still looking for their first win of the season. They lost to the Presbvterian College Hosemen 24-12 Saturday night at Doughboy Stadium despite a 12 point fourth quarter surge.

When the Hosemen fumbled away the opening kickoff on their own 17 yard line, it looked as though the breaks were in the Doughboy s' favor. But the breaks were to go against the Doughboys. They failed to move the ball and missed the field goal attempt due to a bad snap.

The Doughboy offense couldn't mount any type of serious scoring drive during the first half. The defense meanwhile had their hands full as the Hosemen scored two touchdowns and a field goal in the second quarter.

But late in the game, the Doughboys came to life. Quarterback Joe Duenas hit Rodriguez Williams with a 24-yard touchdown pass to make it 24-6 after the extra point attempt failed. The Doughboys moved to within 24-12 after Joe Duenas ran it in from the one yard line. But for the Doughboys it was a case of too little too late as time ran out and they suffered their sixth loss in as many games.

Doughboy coach Jack Barham was very happy with the support the fans have been giving the Doughboys, in spite of their losing record. He was reluctant to make any predictions as to this Sunday afternoon's game against the Auburn University junior varsity Tigers (2 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium), but added that, "We've got seven games left, and we're going to win some of them."

Lones Wigger establishes world rifle record

By Tommy Pool

Lones Wigger, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, put together one of his finest performances to establish a new world record in the 300-meter rifle event at the World Games being held in Seoul, Korea.

Wigger a two-time Olympic gold medal winner, totaled 1,160 points out of 1,200. He broke his own record set last year in Mexico City, by one point. Wigger's individual scores were 398 prone, 375 standing and 387 kneeling. Wigger now holds more current world records than any other individual.

It has been an outstanding showing by the United States thus far in the 42nd World Games of Shooting. Earlier, Wanda Jewell, USAMU, scored the first gold medal for the United States in Women's Air Rifle competition with 385 points out of 400. She was followed by Sue Sandusky, an Army Reservist from Columbus, who fired a near perfect 596 out of 600 to take the gold in the Ladies Standard Rifle Prone event. They were joined by Karen Monez, also of USAMU, who captured a silver medal in Air Rifle competition.

The trio of Jewell, Sandusky and Monez won both the Women's Air Rifle and Standard Rifle Prone Team Championships, a silver medal was taken by the U.S. Running Target Team of Charles Davis, Jim Reiber (both of USAMI), John Anderson, Phoenix, and Michael Theimer, an Army Reservist from Iowa Park, Texas.

In pistol competiton, two-time national champion Kimberly Dyer, USAMU, won her first world championship scoring an outstanding 590 points out of 600 to outclass all other competitiors in the Women's Center Fire Pistol Championship.

In smallbore rifle competition, Lanny Bassham, Olympic gold medal winner at Montreal in 1976 fired 1,165 points to win the gold medal in the Smallbore Position World Championship. He was joined by Lones Wigger (1150), Ed Etzel (1147), Morgantown, West Va., and Kurt Fitz-Randolph (1140), El Paso, Texas, as they combined scores to total 4,602 points as the United States took the gold in the team championship.

More than 1,000 competitors from 66 countires, one of the largest fields ever, are on hand for the matches which end today.

Post parachute club takes dive

The Fort Benning Sport Parachute Club (FBSPC) ended a demonstration at the annual Association of the United States Army's Fall Picnic on a note of near complete disaster.

Of the ten sport parachutists participating only four landed at their intended point of impact. Tori Murphree and Joe Stroup performed intentional water landings into Victory Pond, while Ron Clayton and Dee Falks, executing pinpoint accuracy, landed within the Ranger hand-to-hand combat pit.

The remaining six sky divers, Dave Grieger, Tom Car, Doug Days, Ron Murphree, and Claude Johnson, landed without injury within close proximity of the pit while Frank Norbury took an unintentional bath by landing in Victory Pond.

The FBSPC is a current operational military sport parachute club functioning under AR 95-19. The Club conducts sport parachuting activities as USAIC aircraft are made available, which at present are scheduled each Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. on Fryar Drop Zone. Current and new club members are encouraged to check the clubhouse information board for changes to this schedule.

Flyers shot down

By James Carter

The top rated rugby team in Georgia travelled to Benning this past Saturday to play a developing young Benning team in a hard fought but one-sided matchup. Once again the more experienced back play by the Atlanta Renegades easily developed the overload and took the ball in for a number of scores. Benning's six points came through the highly accurate kicking of Jim Mahoney as he kicked two - three point penalty kicks through the uprights from 40 and 45 yards.

the Benning B-side, playing a much more conservative game, set the pace against the more experienced Renegades. The Renegades capitalized on an early mistake by Benning resulting in 6 points. But that's all they got as the B-side scrummies — affectionately called "the pack" — crushed any further attempts by the Renegades. However, no effective scoring drive could be put together and the game ended with the Flyers only 20 yards from the goal line of the Renegades.

The Fort Campbell team travels to Benning tomorrow, at 2 p.m. on Stilwell Field for the tie-breaker between these two interservice rivals.

Last fall Benning hosted Campbell and won, but Campbell hosted Benning in the spring and won. The action should be hot and heavy so deck out the gang in the team colors — Infantry blue and royal blue and show Fort Campbell how Fort Benning supports its ruggers!

Benning racquetball players place in tourney

The 1st annual Columbus Racquetball Open finished last Sunday at the Courthouse one raquetball complex in Columbus. The tournament, which raised almost $1,000 for the Muscular Dystrophy Foundation, attracted many of the south's best raquetball players.

Players from Fort Benning placed high in several events. In the Women's Singles, Audrey Lenig and Joe Nance, both stationed at Benning, placed first and second to top the Women's Division. In the Men's Doubles, C Division, Ron Stokes and George Doyle of Fort Benning best two Columbus residents in a tough tiebreaker match to win the division. In the B Division, Benning's George Praye teamed with Columbus' Jeff Yates to beat Rich Boggs and Ray Irwin of Marietta for first place.

In other action, top seeded Jim Cullen from Atlanta finished third behind Atlanta's Wayne Vincent and John Parks in the Men's Singles A Division. Cullen had been upset by third-seeded Vincent in a semi-final match. The team of Cullen and and Parks teamed up to beat Vincent and Marsh Chamberland in a tie-breaker match for the Men's Doubles A Division championship.

Judging by the high level of competition, the fan turnout and the money raised for muscular dystrophy, Columbus's 1st Annual Raquetball Open was a success.

Follow Me: the story of a patch

By Arnold Tilden

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is a reprint of an article which appeared in INFANTRY, November-December 1965, pages 23-25. The author was a professor of history at Arizona State University.

Perhaps no other single thing is as characteristic of the purpose and spirit of the United States Army Infantry School as the shoulder patch worn proudly by its officers and men. While officially a part of the uniform, the emblem is also the "trademark" of the School, used as its symbol on buildings, publications and letterheads.

Much more important, the motto on the emblem is a terse and yet almost complete definition of the mission of The Infantry School:

. . .to prepare selected officers and enlisted personnel to perform Infantry duties required in peace and war, with emphasis on the art of command and leadership; to develop tactics, techniques, and procedures to implement approved doctrines for Infantry units of Brigade level and below; and to participate in the development, review, and testing of doctrines and material for Infantry Units.

Although the motto and the emblem which contained it may have been in use at the School since shortly after its formation, the recognition of the emblem officially as the "distinctive badge for The Infantry School" was delayed until 1935. On April 16 of that year, the School requested the Adjutant General to authorize "the officers and enlisted men assigned to duty with Headquarters Staff, The Academic Department, Infantry School Detachment, and the Infantry Board" to wear a distinctive insignia.

On April 30, the Secretary of War authorized a distinctive badge for the Infantry School, as follows:

On a Norman shield azure a bayonet pileways* (sic) proper steel blade, walnut handle in chief on the arc of a circle the motto "Follow Me" argent.

(*One may speculate that this misspelling was the reason that the bayonet was depicted with the point down. Palewise, the probable word intended here, means vertically, down the middle. However, if the word "pileways" is taken literally, it means that the pointed end should be down, "pile" meaning a device with its broad end up and point down.)

A simpler translation

To translate the language of heraldry, this description would read, "On a Norman shield of Infantry blue there shall be a bayonet vertically in the center. The bayonet shall be depicted naturally, that is, with a steel blade and walnut handle. At the top of the shield on an arch of a circle shall be inscribed the motto, "Follow Me," in silver letters."

The Quartermaster General was instructed to see that the badge was ordered and made available to the School. When informed of their availability, the Commandant, Brigadier General Geroge H. Estes, issued orders on February 28, 1936 that the badge be worn by the "members of the staff and Academic Department of The Infantry School, and the Infantry School Detachment."

Emblem part of uniform

The emblem, then, was authorized by the War Department in 1935 and became a part of the official uniform of the personnel of the School in 1936. That much we know. But how and when did the emblem itself originate and by what procedures did it evolve into the specific form authorized by the War Department in 1935?

It would seem that the motto and the "Coat of Arms for the School" evolved sometime after the creation of The Infantry School as a part of the permanent system of military education that was authorized by War Department General Order No. 112, September 25, 1919.

The name of the specific individual, or individuals, who contributed to the original idea will probably never be known, but it was Captain Elbridge Colby, a newly commissioned Regular Army officer attending the 1920-21 Basic Course, who was assigned the responsibility of describing and explaining the emblem.

The editors of The Doughboy, the yearbook of the 1920-21 student body, desired to use the emblem as the theme for their book, using it as the principal decoration on the cover and as a decorative device throughout. On the basis of available printed records of the School, this is the first time that the emblem was used. At this time it was still not an authorized School emblem and its appearance was limited to a student yearbook.

Captain Colby's description follows:

175 Benning soldiers to aid Bragg exercise

By Betty Zimmerman

Approximately 175 Fort Benning personnel will be supporting Fort Bragg's fall exercise, Gallant Eagle. The XVIII Airborne Corps and 1st Corps Support Command will hold war games near Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., from mid-October until mid-November.

The 197th Infantry Brigade will furnish some vehicles and personnel. Soldiers from three 34th Medical Battalion units will participate as well as maintenance and engineer troops from the 36th Engineer Group. Also, selected individuals from various other outfits will be tasked to support the massive exercise.

There is another important role Benning will be playing; at least nine convoys will be stopping here on their way to Florida. The Directorate of Industrial Operations is responsible for furnishing overnight housing, feeding the troops, as well as refueling the vehicles and tankers.

The device of the Infantry School is thoroughly symbolic of the ideals and the role of the institution it represents. A shield azure bears a bayonet argent surmounted by the motto, "FOLLOW ME." The shield itself is of a type borne by the foot soldiers of old. The color is the distinctive Infantry blue. The bayonet is the paramount Infantry weapon.

By the bayonet, or the threat of the bayonet, is ground captured, the line advanced, the battle won.

The cavalryman with his saber and his vaunted "shock action," the artilleryman with his big guns, the aviator with his far-seeing eyes and deadly bombs, are well-nigh indispensable, but after all they exist only to aid the Infantryman, who with his cold steel meets the enemy face to face and must conquer him hand to hand. In all conflicts the primary tactical principle of the offensive, which alone is decisive, is to go forward with the fixed determination of driving home the bayonets of the Infantry. The staff is in command, but the man behind the bayonet is at the head of the Army. He is the first to pierce the enemy line, and his final position marks the limits of ground actually taken. Infantry determines the victory, Infantry pays the greatest price in casualties; and Infantry has the place of honor. Infantry leads, the others follow. All the supporting arms exist only for the assistance of the Infantry, exist so that the man power of the Nation may push on and close with the bayonet. If the bayonet could speak, what could it say but "FOLLOW ME".

Our motto is appropriate, for it breathes the very spirit of the bayonet and of those who wield it — the Infantry. "FOLLOW ME" is the prescribed command by which the corporal leads his squad, the basic Infantry unit. It is distinctly American, found in no other army, and is typical of the manner in which American troops are led, not driven, into action.

What more significant emblem could have been devised for the Infantry School? As the Infantry School lead the Infantry. Amid the woods and hills and plains of Camp Benning the School is developing and training officers to be leaders of men. The School is preparing for our Army a better Infantry. The School says with confidence to our sixty-five regiments of Infantry, as the Infantry says to the Army as a whole: "FOLLOW ME".

In his conclusion to a brief history of The Infantry School, the editor of the The Doughboy for 1920-21 also expressed his admiration: "The Coat of Arms of the School is the shield bearing across its face the silver blade of the bayonet surmounted by the motto 'Follow Me.' No more inspiring thought was ever written into heraldic form. Let the Infantry School achieve accordingly."

The emblem was adopted in the 1921-22 academic year as the unofficial insignia of the School. Publications of the School printed by The Infantry School Press sometimes carried the emblem on the title page; more often, however, they did not. Thus a series of "Military History Pamphlets" published by the Department of Research in 1921 did not carry the emblem while what might be identified as the original issue of the Mailing List, published in that same year, did carry the emblem.

Design changes

The emblem used on The Doughboy for 1920-21, and later by The Infantry School Press for a part of its publications, had the point of the bayonet toward the bottom of the shield, the sharpened edge of the blade toward the right, as viewed from the front, and the handle of the bayonet covered a portion of the second "O" in FOLLOW. This design continued in use in subsequent annual editions of The Doughboy and on the publications printed by The Infantry School Press, including the Mailing List, until March 19, 1923. On that date a pamphlet included in the 1922-23 annual Mailing List entitled "Passage of the Lines" used a different design, one in which the point of the bayonet was turned toward the top of the shield with the cutting edge to the right as viewed from the front. This particular design was used on only a few pamphlets and the printing plant then returned to the use of the original design for the remainder of the 1922-23 academic year.
