Operation Holiday

Susie Baxter serves dinner to Fort Benning soldiers at Crosby's Hen House. About 50 soldiers received free dinners at the restaurant as part of Operation Holiday, a program to provide activities for soldiers who are away from home for the holidays. Other businesses contributing to the free dinner program included Scorpio Lounge, Zodiac Lounge, F&W Control Tower, Subs on Wheels and Dominos Pizza. For more on the 1983 Operation Holiday program, see page 12.

New Year's holiday one of post's safest

Fort Benning posted one of its safest New Year's holiday weekends on record as there were no alcohol related accidents, arrests, injuries or deaths on post and only one soldier was apprehended in the Columbus area for drunk driving according to Post Provost Marshal Col. Curtis D. Earp.

Col. Earp said that higher soldier awareness of the dangers and consequences of drunken driving, the high visibility of military police and the cold weather helped make it a safe holiday.

"I think it was a combination of these things," Col. Earp said. "Post soldiers showed great responsility by conducting themselves so well on the roads."

Military policemen saw to it that many soldiers were safely transported home after holiday parties. They estimate they provided 20 drinking soldiers with rides home during the weekend. The MPs provide this service during the whole year.

Another factor in the low rate of drunk driving incidents was the SAFETYCAB program. Hundreds of Fort Benning soldiers took advantage of the program. Sponsored by the Ledger-Enquirer newspapers and the Bradley Center, the program helped make the weekend safe by giving free rides home to those who had too much to drink.

Fort Benning restructures key positions

By Roy Turgeon
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The quality of life for Fort Benning's soldiers and their family members is receiving major emphasis as a result of a recent study to reorganize the Infantry Center staff. The reorganization will also benefit the relationship of the post to Columbus and Phenix City.

In the past, the Chief of Staff doubled as the Deputy Post Commander (DPC).On Jan. 17, Colonel Neal Christensen, the current director for Weapons, Gunnery, and Maintenance in the Infantry School will become the DPC and supervise matters specifically relating to the well-being and livelihood of families. Community life, installation support, order and discipline, as well as health, welfare and morale of post families, will become the DPC's chief concerns. In addition, he will be the commanding general's representative for off-post community affairs.

To achieve these goals, the following staff organizations previously under the Chief of Staff, will be brought under the DPC's purview: Directorates of Personnel and Community Activities, Engineering and Housing, Communications and Electronics, and Health and Dental Services; Military Police Activity; Chaplain; and the Automated Management Office.

The new Chief of Staff Colonel Carmen Cavezza retains responsibility for mission, men, and resources. He will directly supervise the Directorates of Plans and Training, Security, and Industrial Operations. The Adjutant General Division, previously under the Director of Personnel and Community Activities (DPCA), is now directly under the Chief of Staff to enhance military personnel management.

The other internal directorate change is the placement of the Civilian Personnel Office under the control of the DPCA. The new DPCA is Colonel Richard Hummel, previously the post's assistant commander. Colonel Wayne Dill, currently DPCA, will become Director of Plans and Training.

This new organizational structure places increased emphasis upon the quality of life of the members of the Fort Benning community. It was caused in part by the concerns voiced by the residents of the post and the need to be responsive to families. The structure also causes greater command group efforts toward force modernization and integration, the post's training mission, and long range planning.

The changes will not affect the Infantry School.

April 16 is just around corner

Robert McClain

As many soldiers and post civilians did, I received my 1983 tax forms in the mail this week.

I decided to get a jump on the deadline this year. I didn't have anything to do the other night, so I gathered up all my receipts, pay vouchers and the like for the year, turned on the television and tried to figure out how much the Internal Revenue Service owed me.

The deadline is April 16 this year, not April 15 as is normal. (April 15 is a Sunday) This means all of us have an extra day to get the tax forms in the mail. I don't mind an extra day to do anything, but it never fails if I have more time to perform a task, I still end up rushing to get it done at the last minute. I wasn't going to let that happen with this year's taxes.

Tax forms have always been so easy for me. I'm still young and don't have a deduction or possession to my name so I get to file the 1040 EZ form.

The IRS doesn't lie when they call it the EZ form. The 1040 EZ is kind of like doing a page out of my fourth grade math book. It's that simple. The questions are really easy and they have simple, easy-to-read instructions to go along with them. There are even nice big boxes to put each number in. In fact, they even tell you how to write the numbers. It brought back memories of my teacher Mrs. Walsh. "Robbie, dear, this is how you write a number six." I kind of figured the IRS would tell me how to sign my name when they simplified this year's EZ form. No such luck though.

I thought I might have a few problems this year, my filing system hasn't always been the best. But once I separated everything and figured out what was what, finishing the taxes was easy. Now, all I have to do is wait for my W-2 form to come in the mail. And I can send it all to the the IRS.

Enclosed with the EZ form is the 1040A. It's four pages long and it has 37 pages of instructions. The last page of which is a form to send for more instructions.

After thumbing through it all, I realize being young and single has a few advantages.

When I make the change from the EZ to the 1040 A in a few years, it will probably seem like skipping from basic math to college calculus. It's still years away, so I won't let it worry me.

Still there are many soldiers who will be filing the 1040 A and I can only assume that most of you have a more complicated tax situation that myself. Those soldiers needing help filling out their 1983 taxes have an alternative to civilian tax preparers. Each soldier will be able to receive tax assistance from his or her unit tax officer. For more information, call the legal assistance office at 545-3281/3282.

Over the next few months, the legal assistance office will also be publishing articles in the BAYONET to answer soldier's tax questions. The first of the series is on page 3 in this week's edition.

AUSA—defense budget warranted

In passing the Defense Appropriation Act for fiscal 1984, Congress reflected the conviction of the public that we cannot continue to be complacent in the face of increasing threats to national security. It recognizes a requirement for a continued steadfast national commitment to support national defense needs; and forces and equipment to protect those interests.

This translates into funds to build and maintain defense forces based on what Congress believes is affordable, not what is needed. Still, critics attack such expenditures as wasteful. They speak of the defense budget as a monster, out of control, devouring the national treasury. These critics would use the myth that defense costs have risen more rapidly than other elements of the budget as a method of justifying drastic reductions when, in reality, national defense has not in recent years been the prime mover in budget growth.

In the last 15 years, the total U.S. budget has quadrupled while defense doubled — social and economic programs increased 14-fold and the rate of entitlement growth was twice that of the budget as a whole. Defense is not the culprit, and its share of the total budget, which has hovered between 23 percent and 28 percent since 1981 is certainly appropriate when one evaluates the worldwide interests and responsibilities which must be protected and supported by our military forces.

As a share of the gross natioal product in recent years, defense spending reached a peak of about nine percent in 1964, fell to about five percent in 1978 and has risen slowly to 6.8 percent for 1984. Some growth was necessary to pay for the lean years following Vietnam, and we are now devoting a slightly more realistic share to defense.

This, indeed, is supportive of our national interest and like all government programs, it should be subject to critical evaluation. But the defense budget should not be used as a political whipping boy. For if we do not maintain both our economic strength and our defense strength, there are those who are always willing, by force of arms if necessary, to threaten our allies and the resources now so essential to our free existence. (AUSA)

Unit tax officers to aid soldiers with taxes

William Spradley
Legal Assistance Office

Every unit tax officer will attend a five-day tax seminar.

Another year has passed, signaling to all of us that it is time to file federal and state tax returns.

Many people dread tackling this necessary chore. But each soldier stationed here will be able to receive tax assistance from his or her unit tax officer.

Every unit tax officer will attend a five-day tax seminar conducted by the Internal Revenue Service and the legal assistance office. They will receive extensive training in the preparation of the "short form" 1040 EZ, form 1040A, and from 1040.

The legal assistance office will also publish tax articles over the next couple of months to assist the tax payer in answering tax questions.

This week's article includes two tax tips. The first tip concerns the 1983 1040A tax return. The 1983 1040A "short form" has a deduction for payments into an Individual Retirement Account and credit for child and dependent care expenses. The Internal Revenue Service has kept these deductions on the 1983 1040 form.

The amount of tax an individual will pay depends upon his or her filing status. Generally speaking, the lowest tax rate is when an individual is married and is filing a joint return with his or her spouse.

An individual who files as head of household will receive the second lowest tax status. To qualify as head of household, the individual must have filed a separate return apart from his/her spouse, and lived apart from the spouse all of year 1983. The individual filing must have paid over half the cost of keeping up the principal residence for 1983 and that home was the principal residence of the child or stepchild for more than six months of 1983. Also, the child or stepchild must be claimed as that person's dependent for the year.

The third favorable filing status is single and the least favorable filing status is married filing separate return. An individual may be eligible to qualify for more than one filing status. This individual should compute his or her tax and select the most favorable filing status. If there are any questions, contact your unit tax officer today.

Tax Class: A unit tax officers class will be held Jan. 16-20, in classroom 9 in building 4 from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m.

Officials announce changes for BDUs

Army officials have announced changes for the up keep and appearance of the battle dress uniform (BDU).

Army officials have decided to authorize pressing but not starching of the uniform.

Post laundry officials say the laundry has already begun pressing, upon request, the uniforms it receives.

When home laundering and pressing the uniform, do not exceed the permanent press/steam setting on the iron. Commercial laundries may use steam presses. If a hot head press is used, the temperature should not exceed 300 degrees fahrenheit. The new standard for the Army will be a pressed BDU.

Additionally, actions have been taken to improve the appearance and functionality of the BDU.

First, in all production beginning with 1984 deliveries from manufacturers, the BDU coat sleeves have been widened and lengthened. Trousers have been lengthened, and the crotch area has been modified to provide more room. These changes were designed to improve the comfort and fit of the BDU.

Second, nine modifications have been developed which are going to be evaluated on an expediture basis in early 1984.

The modifications are:

- Smaller collar to improve appearance.
- Slanted breast pockets to provide improved accessibility when load bearing equipment (LBE) is worn.
- Bellows of the breast pockets have been moved to the outside to improve comfort and appearance.
- More room in the underarm area to improve fit and comfort.
- The second button of the coat moved up one inch and the third and fourth buttons spaced appropriately to improve appearance. (USAIC PAO)

Post soldiers tour Andersonville

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Andersonville. The name stirs up thoughts of heartache and suffering endured at that infamous Civil War prisoner of war camp. At the national historical site today, you can see the white tombstones marking the graves of those that remain there.

Last week, approximately 100 Fort Benning soldiers braved the gray, overcast skies, low temperatures and chilling winds to view the site and listen to its history.

Andersonville was built in December 1863 as a stockade for 10,000 prisoners. In July 1864, it housed more than 30,000 prisoners. Due to the unsanitary condition of a stream which was used for drinking, washing and dumping waste; cholera, dysentery and other sicknesses killed as many as 125 prisoners a day.

There wasn't much food, clothing or shelter for the men either. And many didn't get adequate medical care for wounds received in fighting. All this gave the stockade its stigma of infamy.

Soldiers participating in the Operation Holiday trip were not disappointed in the tour.

"It was alright. I like history and I really enjoyed hearing about this place," Sgt. Jimmy Stroud of the 43rd Engineer Battalion said.

PFC Dennis Tyus of A Company, Headquarters Command, liked it too, but said, "I would have enjoyed it more if it wasn't so cold!"

The soldiers were able to go through the visitor's center and museum and view sketches, photos and personal affects of prisoners of war from the Civil War, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

Private 2 Carl Hooper of Delta 5-1 said he was surprised there was so little visual information on the prisoners and Andersonville but, "I suppose it's like it is now, people wanted to see the battles not the prisoners."

Overall he said he thought the tour was interesting and the Operation Holiday as a whole was great.

"This makes the third event I've been on. I went to the Blue Gray football game, toured a tool shop downtown and now this. I've enjoyed it all."

Specialist 4 Sue Ebben of A Company, Headquarters Command, was very enthusiastic about the tour. "I really liked it. I want to come back with about four more rolls of film, take my time and see all the monuments and tombstones and I want to bring my own car because I saw several interesting old places along the way I want to investigate."

Restructure

The new structure reduces the tremendous span of control that the Chief of Staff/Deputy Commanding Officer previously had so that the Chief of Staff can concentrate greater effort on future planning and requirements. Decision making is decentralized as much as possible.

These organizational developments will have little effect on the soldiers and civilians who work within Infantry Center directorates and staff sections, but the increased command emphasis on the post's quality of life should be felt by the individual soldier and his or her family.

The decision to reorganize the post quickly follows the establishment of the revitalized post community life program which took place last September. The prototype community life program (CLP) for the Army was initially established at Fort Benning in 1973. The success of USAIC's program resulted in adoption of CLP Army-wide.

Toll-free number aids soldiers

WASHINGTON — Remember that toll-free telephone number put into effect two years ago for family members to get help on problems having to do with HQDA policy and programs?

Averaging about 300 calls per month since September 1981, the "HQDA Army Life Communication Line" operates 24 hours a day. Its phones are manned by staff members of the Army's Adjutant General's Office. They screen calls to determine the nature of the problem or issue. If they find that the matter can be resolved at the local-command level, they'll refer the caller there.

Both military and civilian personnel are eligible to use the "family action hotline," as it's sometimes labeled.

You can reach the line by dialing 1-800-336-5467. Your calls are fielded by staff members from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Eastern Time, Monday through Friday. If you call after hours, you'll be recorded for later response, usually the next workday. (ARNews)

Dual retirement system

WASHINGTON — A law just signed by President Reagan will place federal employees hired between Dec. 31, 1983 - Jan. 1, 1986, under a dual retirement system while the current system is being reconstructed.

According to Army civilian personnel officials, the employees hired during that period will be covered under both social security and the civil service retirement system. Those covered will have to pay the full social security tax and also will contribute 1.3 percent of their pay to the retirement system. Officials say the difference between the employee's normal contribution (7 percent) and the amount actually paid into the system (1.3 percent) will be made up by the U.S. Treasury at the end of fiscal years 1984 through 1986.

At the end of the transition period, those employees will be transferred to a new, supplemental retirement plan — where they'll get credit for their service during the transition period. (ARNews)

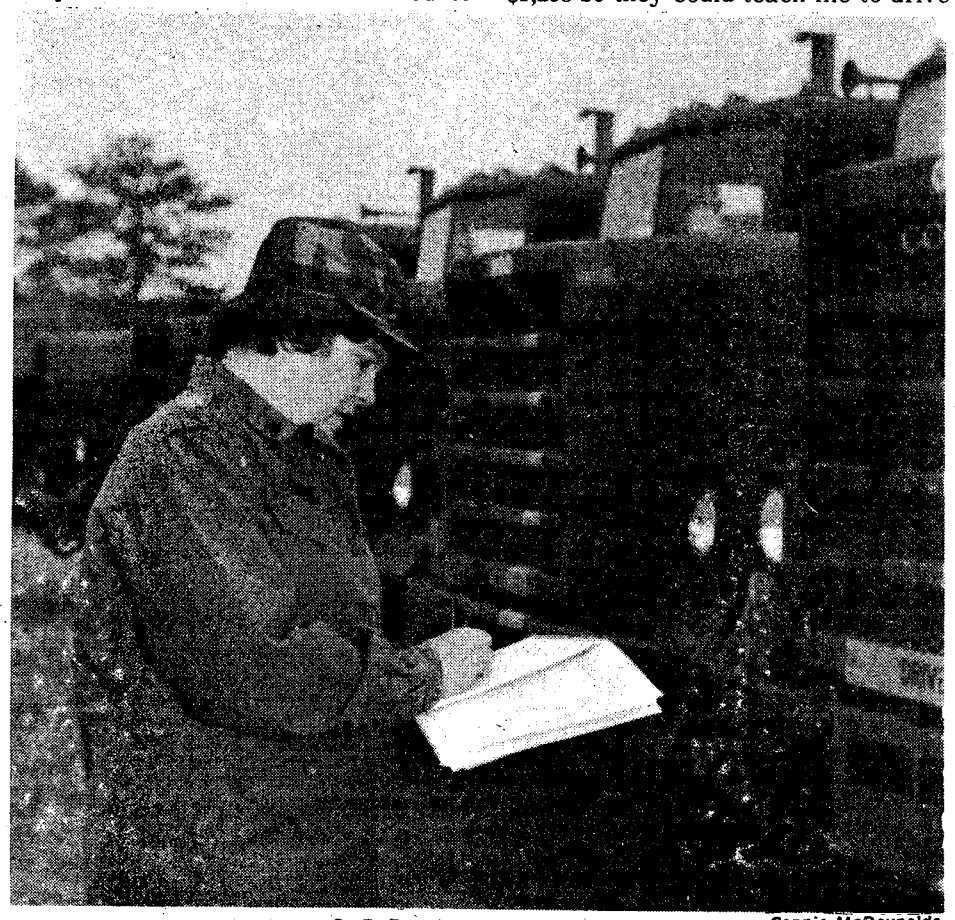
Driver one of Army's few women drivers

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs

"I've always wanted to drive a truck. There was no particular reason, I just like to drive and I wanted to drive a truck." Specialist 5 Patricia I. Driver found a way to realize that desire in the Army.

"Ryder wanted me to pay them $1,258 so they could teach me to drive a truck. The Army was willing to pay me while I learned. I chose the Army," Driver explained.



Sp5 Patricia I. Driver — Connie McReynolds

"I've been in nine years now," the 14-ton tractor driver said, "and I plan on making a career out of it."

Driver isn't the only one in her family that has found out what the military can offer.

Her oldest son is in the Navy; her second son is in the Coast Guard; her third is in Airborne training here at Fort Benning; and her youngest is in high school Navy ROTC.

"They all support me. In fact, I think they're kind of proud of me," Driver said. After all, she is 40 years old and a grandmother, but, "I've never let that stop me," she said. "I don't feel it's something that should stop me."

Driver, of the 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group, is one of seven women drivers in the company, according to Company Commander 1st Lt. Michael Brunett.

"It's not too often you see women driving a tractor, but she does and she already has more than 6,000 safe miles here," Brunett explained.

Driver, here since July, drives a M915 14-ton tractor and loves it. "I've never had any bad experiences with anything I've driven. I had a blow out once and had to change a tire, which is no picnic, but nothing real bad. In fact, I find this tractor is the easiest to drive than anything else I've driven," she said.

Driver has driven 5-ton tractors, a 4070 Trans Star occasionally, a Mercedes 210 and a 2 1/2 ton in Germany.

While in Germany, she was the first women in 53rd Battalion and the first "grandmother" in 4th Transportation Command to receive an award for more than 100,000 miles of safe driving.

Also, while in Germany, she was an instructor for the 501st Transportation Company and on the 53rd Battalion safety patrol.

At the 533rd, Driver usually does post support. "We transport ammunition and anything the post needs like moving office furniture. We also support the 197th with their training needs." she said.

Besides having a tractor assigned to her, she is responsible for daily maintenance. "We have to check the oil, water, belts, tires, everything you would normally do to a vehicle you're driving. If there's any major thing wrong, we turn it into maintenance, but we go to check that it's being fixed," she said.

Driver, who lives on post with her husband, Harry R. Colm, still has a goal to achieve in the Army. "My first husband was an E-7 when he was medically retired from the Army. I intend to outrank him when I get out."

Army vets with GI insurance to receive record dividends

ATLANTA — Veterans of World War I, World War II and the Korean War who have kept their GI insurance policies in force are due to receive record dividends amounting to almost $722 million during 1984; this is an increase of more than $48 million over the dividends paid in 1983. The increase resulted from higher interest rates earned by the VA insurance fund.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said that dividends are payable on the anniversary dates of individual policies, and the amounts received by policyholders will vary, depending on the insurance plan under which the veteran is protected, the amount of coverage the policy provides, the length of time the policy has been in force, and the veteran's age at the time of issue or renewal.

Wheeler reminded veterans not to contact the VA about their dividends. "The dividends will be paid automatically," he said. "In fact, inquiries about them could cause a delay in payments."

> "The dividends will be paid automatically."

Each of the approximately 2,000 Georgia veterans of World War I, still holding their U.S. Government Life ceive an average dividend of about $244.

Georgia's 70,000 World War II veterans who have kept their National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) policies in force will share, nationally, in more than $619 million in dividends with an average payment of $123 going to each term insurance policyholder. Permanent plan policyholders will receive an average dividend payment of $279, and holders of modified life policies will receive an average of $130.

Korean War veterans holding Veterans Special Life Insurance (VSLI) policies prefixed with "RS" will receive average payments of $92; holders of term policies prefixed with "W" will receive average payments of $49; and "W" permanent plan policyholders will receive approximately $180.

The higher interest rates have been more beneficial to those veterans who have converted their insurance plans to permanent type policies, rather than continuing to hold the original

Provost marshal explains new DUI regulation

Marshal's Viewpoint

By Curtis D. Earp
Post Provost Marshal

Recent changes to AR 190-5, Motor Vehicle Traffic Supervision, will be having a dramatic impact on all military installations. These changes pertain to the handling of persons suspected of driving under the influence (DUI). The following is a summary of the changes:

As of Jan. 1, 1984, active duty military, their family members, DA civilian employees and others with installation driving privileges may have their post driving privileges immediately suspended for incidents, regardless of the geographic location, which involve a DUI violation. Other civilians are subject to the same suspension when the violation occurs on the installation or in areas subject to military control.

What this means is if you are charged or convicted with a DUI offense, anywhere (to include other states), your post driving privileges may be suspended. This suspension will be based on a review of the evidence available. A decision will be made within 12 hours after the allegation is made and evidence is collected for review.

In addition to the suspension, active duty military personnel will receive a General Officer Letter of Reprimand. This letter will be given regardless of whether any other administrative/judicial actions are taken by civilian or military sources. The reprimand will be issued for any of the following conditions:

- Upon conviction of DUI.
- Refusal to take a lawfully requested chemical blood/alcohol or breathalyzer test.
- You are found to have a blood alcohol content of 0.10 percent or higher.

What foods we eat affects our health, work, happiness

Nutrition consists of the food we eat and the way our body uses it to live, grow and get the energy needed for work and play.

The materials necessary for growth and repair of tissues and for changing them to energy are called nutrients.

To ensure optimum health, a person must consume a variety of foods each day. Most foods contain several nutrients and calories, but no one food is a complete source of all nutrients, even though some have specific nutrients added.

Certain nutrients are essential and must be consumed daily because the body can not synthesize them. Because these nutrients ae basic to survival they are one of the fundamental concerns of nutrition.

The U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances (U.S. RDA) list the amounts of nutrients considered necessary to maintain the nutritional well-being of almost all healthy people in the United States, plus an excess to allow for individual variations.

When 100 percent of each nutrient is consumed throughout the day, adults can be relatively sure they are consuming a balanced diet.

What do these essential nutrients do for our bodies and what constitutes their source?

Water is essential for life. It builds and repairs body tissues. It helps dissolve and digest food and eliminate waste.

Protein is the basic material in every cell of body tissue, muscle, bone, skin and blood. All proteins, whether from animal or vegetable sources, are made up of simpler materials known as amino acids.

Different proteins contain different combinations of three amino acids.

Some are complete proteins, they contain the essential amino acids the body cells need for growth and repairs.

Some proteins are incomplete and must be supplemented by combining foods that contain them with complete protein foods, such as when we combine macaroni with cheese, or cereal with milk.

Protein supplies body energy, builds repairs body tissue and controls regulates body functions. Good sources of complete or high quality protein are milk, eggs, lean meat, poultry, fish and cheese.

Carbohydrates are our chief source of energy and provide about half the calories we eat each day. Carbohydrates control and regulate body functions.

Fats are a primary source of food energy or calories and provide the essential fatty acids, and supply the fat soluble vitamins.

Vitamins are essential for the proper utilization of food and the healthy functioning of the body. There are several kinds of vitamins.

Vitamin A is needed for normal growth, good eyesight and for fighting infection. Dark green and yellow vegetables and milk are good sources of vitamin A.

Vitamin C is needed for building resistance to infection and for building and repairing body tissues. Vitamin C is found in fruits and some vegetables.

Vitamin D is essential for strong bones and teeth and is available in fortified milk.

The B complex vitamins include riboflavin, thiamine, niacin, B6 and B12. They are needed by the nervous system for maintenance of a good appetite and digestion. They also help to maintain a healthy skin. These vitamins may be found in milk, meat, cereal and grain products.

Minerals help build blood, bones, teeth and aid in the vital body functions such as those of the nerves and muscles.

Only three minerals require some meal planning in order to insure sufficient amounts are obtained.

These are calcium, iodine and iron. Good sources of these three minerals are milk products, vegetables, fish, meat and whole grain and enriched bread.

What we eat affects our ability to keep well, to work, to be happy and to live a long life.

When you practice good nutrition every day by eating a balanced diet and including foods with the six essential nutrients, you will reap the benefits of health, happiness, efficiency and longevity.

The pay raise will affect basic pay, basic allowance for quarters and basic allowance for subsistence for all members except E-1s with less than four months of service.

Monthly basic pay for senior officers — O-9s and O-10 — is affected by the $66,000 ceiling on Executive Level V annual pay. Thus, the monthly basic pay of O-9s and O-10s will be capped at $5499.90. Senior enlisted member pay cap in each service, will increase to $2800.20.

E-1 with less than 4 months — 573.60

Concerned citizens meet

The South Columbus Concerned Citizens will be meeting Sunday from 3 to 4:30 p.m. at the DAV Building on Matthew Street. The guest speaker will be U.S. Representative Richard Ray. He will speak to attendees about pending legislation. There will also be an open discussion period.

Freedom from smoking clinic

Smokers who want to quit and are eligible for care at Martin Army Community Hospital can get group support at an upcoming clinic sponsored by the hospital and the Georgia Lung Association.

Freedom From Smoking will begin Monday from 10 a.m. to noon, at the Infantry Museum. Sessions will continue on Jan. 11, 16, 18, 23 and 25.

Weight control, relaxation, identifying triggers to smoke, are all key elements in the Freedom From Smoking clinic. They also discuss individual plans of action and focus on staying off cigarettes.

King ceremony scheduled

A commemorative ceremony honoring Dr. Martin Luther King will be held next Friday at 2 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium. The guest speaker will be Dr. Dorothy Cotton, an associate professor from Cornell University. The public is invited to attend.

'Expanded Horizons' meeting

The first program for the Expanded Horizons, a volunteer forum for professionals, will be held Tuesday night from 6 to 7 in Infantry Hall's classroom #3.

Retired Colonel Robert S. Poydasheff will address the subject of estate planning for the military, active and retired.

Poydasheff was the staff judge advocate at Benning before he retired and is now the vice president and trust officer of National Bank and Trust of Columbus and an adjunct faculty member of Troy State University. He was graduated from the Citadel, received his Juris Doctor from Tulane University and was certified in international law from the Hague Academy of International Law.

Anyone interested in participating in Expanded Horizons should contact Chuck Gantner or Jenee Todd in room 512, Infantry Hall or call 545-1700/2955.

Acting classes offered

The Springer Opera House of Theatre Arts will offer classes for all age groups beginning the second week of January. Classes will include children's acting, basic and advanced acting for adults, musical theatre, stage managing, and radio and television techniques.

For more information and a schedule of classes, call the Springer School after Jan. 2, at 324-3601.

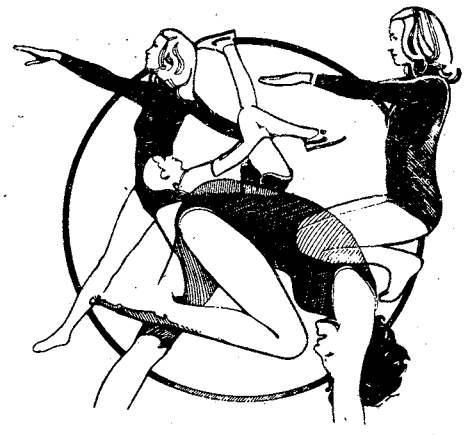
Make reservations by calling 689-3477 or 689-1448.

Antique show, sale

The Winter Antique Show and Sale will be at Columbus Square Mall through Sunday. Antique dealers from throughout the country will be in the mall with a full collection of fine antiques. For more information, call June Bedle at 561-6305.



Patty Taylor dancers

The Patty Taylor Contemporary Dance Company will be appearing at the Fort Benning Community Theatre Jan. 20 at 8 p.m. The company will perform two short features, "A Salute to Dance" and "Columbus, Georgia, U.S.A." Many different dance forms will be used, including jazz, jitterbug, the high step, Charleston, soft-shoe and modern.

The Patty Taylor dancers have performed for six years with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra and have won numerous honors in regional dance competitions. Mrs. Taylor has choreographed a number of musicals for the Springer Opera House, including "The Music Man" and "Oliver."

There is no admission charge for the show. Call 545-5057 for more details.

Thrift Shop announces hours

The Fort Benning Thrift Shop and Furniture Barn are open for sales tomorrow from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. The flea market will also be open as it is the first Saturday of the month. Consignments will be accepted at the Furniture Barn only. The normal weekly operating hours are 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. All sales are open to the public.

Country music extravaganza

The Columbus-Fort Benning Shriner's Club Country Music Extravaganza, featuring Brenda Lee and Ronnie McDowell, will be held tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Columbus Municipal Auditorium. All concert proceeds help the Shriner's transportation fund for the burned and crippled children in this area. For more information, call 563-1903.

OWC luncheon

The Officers Wives Club monthly luncheon will be held Wednesday at 11 a.m. The Auburn Singers will provide entertainment. Reservations are required.

New hours for ID cards

The AG ID card section, building 83, room 128, has changed its hours. A shortage of manpower has dictated a reduction in their operating hours. The new hours are from 8-11 a.m. and 1-3:30 p.m. each day.

During the hours of 8-10 a.m., a service member will get priority over family members or retirees. This only applies to the service member — not he or she and his or her family. For more information, call Mrs. Hall at 545-5814.

Bait shop hours change

The operating hours of the Uchee Creek Recreation Area Bait Shop have recently changed. It is now open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays. The hours are from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The bait shop is closed every Tuesday and Wednesday.

Parking on grass prohibited

Residents of government owned quarters are reminded that parking of privately owned vehicles on lawns or grassed areas next to government quarters is prohibited. Violaters will be cited by area coordinators and community life NCOs.

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain Ron E. Hilburn

Why am I here? What is my purpose in life? What is the meaning of my life? Do those questions sound familiar? Of course they do, and we ask them of ourselves (and others) all the time. Wouldn't it be wonderful to know the answers to those questions and also to questions like this?

"What is most important to God concerning humans?" It seems obvious that if we knew what God held to be most important to Him, then we would know what we should hold most important to ourselves. For God's answers, let us see what God's word, the Bible, says.

Immediately we find the answers to these seemingly unanswerable questions. While lesser concerns remain vague and cloudy, our purpose in life and the reason for our existence is no great mystery. It is the same for all of us, yet each one of us expresses and lives out our purpose in a different way, making us distinct individuals, unique in God's creation.

From the Old Testament and New Testament, we learn that our purpose in life is two-fold.

First and foremost, God desires that we, as individuals, establish and maintain the best possible relationship with Him. Hence, God gave us, as His first priority, the first great commandment, which is, "You shall love the Lord, your God, with all your heart and with all your strength, and with all your soul" (Deuteronomy 6:5). Our purpose in life, the reason we are here, is to have relationship, fellowship and communion with God. Isn't that what love demands as God's first priority for us?

Second, God desires that we, as individuals, establish and maintain the best possible relationship with all other people, especially those close to us. We know this to be God's second priority because of God's second great commandment, which reads, "A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another; even as I have loved you, that you also love one another" (John 13:34). So the second part of our purpose in life is to have a Godly love of people. God wants us to love others as He loves us!

God is saying that He wants us to be like God in the way we love others, including God Himself. Isn't it amazingly simple, God values, above all else, that we have a loving relationship with Him and with other people.

That is our purpose in being here. Only in our loving relationships and loving fellowship with God and other people is the true meaning of the gift of life discovered and fully realized. Your own purpose need not be a mystery. As you search for the specific purpose of your life, please consider the depth of God's love for you in giving His son to die on the cross — all for the sake of your relationship with Him and your relationship with others. Praise God for His word.

Army chaplains support soldiers in peace and war

FORT MONROE, Va. — A vital element of the Army's excellence is the moral and spiritual excellence of its soldiers. The U.S. Army chaplaincy fosters and supports that excellence in peacetime and wartime.

As the Army gets ready for the contingency of the airland battlefield, so does the Army's clergy. The chaplaincy plans to continue its tradition of being with soldiers if they have to fight.

The problems of the battlefield — mobility, lethality, and intensity of battle — will prove difficult for the chaplains, as for all soldiers. Under a concept call "forward thrust," all combat battalions will have chaplains assigned to them. These assignments will improve the chaplains' ability to reach soldiers, and will make it far easier for individual soldiers to know their chaplains more intimately. If the units go to war, the chaplains will go also, and will have been trained to function with their units. They will know and understand soldiers as individuals, and the soldiers will know and trust their chaplains.

There will be no chapels on the battlefield, but soldiers will still worship. If history repeats itself, soldiers will worship more devoutly in combat than they do in peacetime. The altar may be one of the portable, fold-up kits the Army is currently testing; the organ might be a small tape recorder.

On the other hand, ration boxes can serve as the altar and soldiers can sing without accompaniment, as Union soldiers did in the Civil War when unknown soldiers composed "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" around campfires. Chaplains will carry small items of communion-ware in small bags, possibly even on their LBE (load bearing equipment) in place of the ammunition they do not use.

Never has the nation been at a loss for clergy to support soldiers in wartime. Always, the synogogues and churches have answered the call to serve soldiers in combat. Clergy who volunteer for service are trained in basic military skills at the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

The chaplains willl not be able to be everywhere on the widely dispersed battlefield. During their absence soldiers will have to support each other — in matters of faith as well as in military matters.

By adapting to the new requirements soldiers will face on the airland battlefield, the chaplaincy will continue its tradition of serving the moral and spiritual needs of every soldier. (TNS)

Operation Holiday

Program helps post soldiers beat holiday blues

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers remaining at Fort Benning over the holidays were treated to 26 different events thanks to the the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army.

The fourth annual Operation Holiday program enabled more than 2,500 soldiers to participate in activities ranging from a bowling tournament to tours of local businesses.

The 11-day program began Dec. 21 with a kick-off ceremony at the Columbus Government Center. Although the ceremony officially signified the opening of the program, soldiers were already touring the Tom's Food plant.

It was just one of eight local businesses to open their doors for the stranded soldiers. Others included the TRW plant, the Ledger/Enquirer building, WRBL-TV, WVOC, the Dolly Madison plant, Sunshine Bakery and WTVM-TV.

During the Ledger/Enquirer tour, Paul Timm probably best described the reasoning behind Operation Holiday.

"This program gives the local citizens and businesses an opportunity to express our appreciation to the soldiers for their contributions to our nation's defense," the Sunday editorial page editor explained.

Soldiers from all of the major units on the post were also treated to various sporting events as part of the program. These events included the chilly Blue-Gray Football Game on Christmas Day, two Atlanta Hawk victories in the Omni and the Peach Bowl in Atlanta's Fulton County Stadium.

The event in which the largest number of soldiers participated in was without a doubt the second annual bowling tournament conducted at the Main Post Bowling Center. Some 225 soldiers bowled in the three-day tourney for such prizes as new bowling balls, trophies and cases of beer.

Soldiers were also taken on tours of the various historical places around the area. These tours included the Little White House and the Andersonville Confederate Prison.

Private Carl Hooper, D Company, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, said that overall he thought that Operation Holiday was very enjoyable.

"I attended three events. I went to the Blue-Gray game, toured a tool shop downtown and I also went on the Andersonville tour. I enjoyed them all. It made being away from home a little easier to handle."

Soldiers' drug use down; alcohol use on upswing

Servicemembers are drinking more now and using drugs less than they were in 1980.

At least that's what the figures say in the recently released 1982 "Worldwide Survey of Alcohol and Nonmedical Drug Use by Military Personnel." The 1982 survey is the second of the drug and alcohol surveys the Department of Defense (DoD) plans to do every two years.

The survey results were compiled from questionnaire answers given voluntarily by some 22,000 men and women in the four military services. A private research firm conducted the study for DoD.

The answers to the questions concerning "nonmedical drug use" (drug abuse) were uniformly encouraging, according to a Defense Department official. During the 30 days prior to answering the questionnaire, 16.5 percent of those responding said they'd used marijuana in 1982 compared to 26 percent in 1980. In 1980, 27 percent said they'd used drugs ranging from narcotics to pep pills "nonmedically" during the preceding month. By 1982, the figure had gone down to 19 percent. Other results of the recent survey show an even greater drop: drug use in the Navy was down by half, from 33 percent in 1980 to 16 percent in 1982.

Survey results on alcohol abuse showed a different trend. The number of people reporting their performance on the job had been adversely affected at least once during the year by alcohol was up seven percent in 1982 over 1980, 34 percent compared to 27 percent.

"We are quite concerned over that reported increase," said Dr. John Mazzuchi, principal director of the DoD Office of Health Promotion. "But it's not clear whether people recall and report their reactions and experiences with alcohol in the same way they do other drugs. It is deserving of further study."

"There is no question, however, that the military has a serious problem with alcohol," Mazzuchi said.

Dr. Mazzuchi also believes that the military's alcohol problem is one that will respond to positive action, as did the drug problem. "There is no doubt," he said, "that DoD's anti-drug measures deserve a great deal of the credit for the good news about drug abuse." And, while acknowledging the importance of such well-publicized measures as urinalysis, he said that education should not be ignored as a factor in reducing drug abuse.

In testimony before the Senate Committee on Armed Services, Dr. John H. Johns, deputy assistant secretary of defense for health promotion, outlined DoD's drug and alcohol education program. The Armed Forces Radio and Television Service released spots in 1981 on the danger substance abuse poses to the unit, and the help available for abusers. In 1982, the spots focused on the incompatability of alcohol and drug abuse with the military lifestyle and with health in general, while drunk driving has been emphasized in 1983. And every year, said Dr. Johns, "the Department screens, purchases and distributes vast quantities of literature and films which provide up-to-date and accurate information about alcohol and drug abuse."

Although prevention of drug and alcohol abuse is preferred, Dr. Johns testified that "DoD" continues to offer treatment and rehabilitation to alcohol and drug abusers who truly want and need assistance." The military services offer both residential and non-residential care for servicemembers, and are working with Veterans Administration hospitals on an arrangement for follow-up care if personnel must be discharged.

DoD is backing up its education and treatment efforts with measures such as Secretary Weinberger's directive on drugged and drunk driving which provides that a conviction for intoxicated driving will result in loss of base driving privileges for one year and that offenders will be reported to state motor vehicle authorities. The Army is only as good as you are, and our success depends upon yours.

So if your ETS is approaching and you're thinking about the future, you should think about staying with us.

You don't have to leave the Army to earn more responsibility, groom yourself for a leadership role, or continue your education. Reenlisting can get you advanced training in your MOS, a new MOS altogether, or a chance to join a special unit. Reenlistment offers a new variety of challenges and opportunities, the kind experienced, success-oriented people look for.

Your Retention NCO can give you all the details. See him today, and bring along all your future plans.

VA reminds pensioners to return questionnaire

The Veterans Administration is reminding pensioners who have received the agency's annual income questionnaire (AIQ) to be sure to return it immediately to avoid benefit interruption on Jan. 1, 1984.

The AIQ was mailed to VA pensioners on or about Nov. 1. If you did not receive a questionnaire, you should contact the nearest VA regional office either in person or by telephone. VA also has counselors standing by if you need help in completing the questionnaire. Local veterans can call VA at 324-6646. Also, any accredited veterans service organization can help you fill out the questionnaire.

Veterans should not delay return of the AIQ if they do not know the amount of unreimbursed medical expenses paid or expected to pay in 1983. Complete and return the questionnaire now and report these expenses later if you do not have the figures available at this time.

For more information about the annual AIQ, contact the nearest VA regional office or a veterans service organization, and remember, be sure to mail it to VA before Jan. 1, 1984! (VA)

Fort Benning honors instructors of the year

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's instructors of the year were honored during a ceremony recently by Brig. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., assistant commandant of the Infantry School.

Selected as the Officer Instructor of the Year was Capt. Edward T. Tinsley from the Combined Arms and Tactics Department. Tinsley has taught in the Tactics Division since his assignment to the Infantry School in April 1982. He was chosen instructor of the quarter for April to June 1983. A seven-year Army veteran, he numbers among his awards and decorations the Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal and the Parachutist Badge.

SFC Richard E. Reader from the Jump Branch, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, The School Brigade, is the Senior Enlisted Instructor of the Year. He was chosen instructor of the quarter for the period April to June 1983. A master parachutist, Reader has been with Jump Branch since August 1979. His Army career has spanned 17 years and his awards and decorations include the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, Purple Heart with Oak Leaf Cluster, Army Achievement Medal, Master Parachutist Badge and the Drill Sergeant Badge.

The Junior Enlisted Instructor of the Year, SSgt. Jeffrey S. Howard, has been with the Jump Branch, 4th Abn. Tng. Bn., TSB, since August 1981. Selected Instructor of the Quarter for October to December 1982, Howard has been in the Army for more than five years. He has been awarded the Army Achievement Medal, Expert Infantryman Badge, Pathfinder Badge and the Air Assault Badge.

Selection as Instructor of the Year begins with a recommendation from the soldier's immediate supervisor as Instructor of the Month. Once the department chief or commander selects the candidate for monthly honors, he must compete against other instructors so selected by their departments. The Infantry School then evaluates each candidate by grading a scheduled class. The best is chosen Instructor of the Month. The process is repeated for quarterly selections.

Those who win Instructor of the Quarter honors are evaluated again at the end of the year, plus they appear before a board whose members select the instructors of the year.

This year's winners received the Army Commendation Medal, Army Certificates of Appreciation and plaques. Each also received a savings bond from the Association of the United States Army.

Welcome center streamlines processing system

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The "Welcome Center" at Crain Hall got into the SPIRIT act by streamlining their processing system and saving Fort Benning more than $887,000.

"Our goal was to provide a better service to the soldier," said Capt. Robert D. Kasson, chief, Personnel Processing Center, "and the savings to Fort Benning was a welcome by-product." The PPC was able to slice two days off the in-processing time, according to Kasson and this saved Fort Benning more than 12,000 productive days per year — days that the soldier could be on the job — instead of sitting in the center's waiting area. The PPC processes an average of 25 new arrivals daily. The shaving of two days of non-productive time resulted is a savings of more than $730,000 annually.

In addition, the processing of travel vouchers and other administrative forms were consolidated into a group procedure — eliminating the hours spent telling each indiviual soldier essentially the same information.

More time was saved when the layout of the processing area was changed to allow two members of the processing team to work with one soldier — effectively cutting the processing time in half.

When Kasson became the OIC of the center last May, he requested a team from the Directorate of Resource Management to study his operation. The team studied the processing system and made several recommendations. The team's recommendations, along with those of the people in the center, were considered and the new system evolved.

Kasson stated that the streamlining of the center's system is a result of the combined efforts of the team of analysts from DRM, the finance and accounting officer, the adjutant general and the personnel at the processing center.

The simplification in the system allowed the center to return five soldiers to their normal duty locations in either the Adjutant General's section or the finance office. The return of the five soldiers to their normal duty stations saved more than $107,000 in salaries and benefits. The new system also allows two civilian employees to return to their normal functions for an additional savings of $35,489.

New rules for nonavailability statements

Does your home ZIP code fall within a military hospital's health care zone? If so, be aware of some new rules on "nonavailability statements."

As has always been the case, when the military hospital can't provide the medical care that's needed, military families must get a nonavailability statement before using civilian hospitals for non-emergency inpatient care under CHAMPUS. But now —

- You must be admitted to the civilian hospital within 30 days after the nonavailability statement was issued. Otherwise, you have to get another one.
- After you're released from a civilian hospital, your nonavailability statement is good for the same medical condition for 15 more days. If you have to be readmitted to the hospital after 15 days, you need to get another nonavailability statement. There are no exceptions to this rule. So for a chronic condition that requires repeated hospital admissions, you may need a nonavailability statement each time.
- Nonavailability statements are no longer issued for maternity care automatically when the mother lives on the border of the military hospital's health zone.
- Nonavailability statements for maternity care will be good from the time that the mother starts prenatal care until six weeks after delivery. If the newborn stays in the hospital after the mother is released, a separate nonavailability statement is not needed, unless the stay is longer than 15 days. A separate nonavailability statement is not needed if the newborn is in an intensive care unit.

Get your nonavailability statements before using civilian medical facilities.

You still do not need nonavailability statements for:

- Outpatient care (including that which you get in a civilian hospital) except in the three sites where the Services are testing the use of nonavailability statements for outpatient care (Fort Ord and Vandenberg AFB, Calif., and Naval Aerospace Regional Medical Center, Pensacola, Fla.).
- True medical emergencies
- Any type of care when you have other health insurance that pays 75 percent or more of the bills that CHAMPUS would have covered. (Check with a Health Benefits Advisor on this because it can get complicated.)
- Residential treatment centers, skilled nursing facilities or college infirmaries.

Other rules on nonavailability statements still apply. Military hospitals can issue nonavailability statements after you've gotten care only if they could not have provided the care you needed at the time you received care at a civilian hospital. You can use the nonavailability statement only for the type of medical care indicated on the form itself.

For more information, call the health benefits advisor at Martin Army Community Hospital. (AFPS)

Changing eating habits helps shed extra pounds

Jim Emerson
Task force on fitness member

FORT MONROE, Va. — Did someone say you're fat?

"Ha!" you say.

Maybe they've noticed you're bigger than you used to be. Perhaps your clothes are getting a little tight. Do you wear the same sizes you did when you finished school?

As you get older, and less active, the gradual change in your life will produce gradual weight gain. Just half a pound a month makes a big difference over a couple of years.

You don't need a doctor or a dietitian to determine if fat is starting to creep up on you. Any one of the following tests can tell you if you are headed down "fat alley."

Weight tests

The mirror test is a great way to get right to the heart of the matter. Stand nude in front of a full-length mirror. Look yourself over. If you look fat, you probably are. Folds and flaps and "love handles" around the waist are sure signs that you are losing the bulge battle.

The belt test is a little less subjective. Wrap a belt around the bottom of your rib cage, then try to slip it down past your waist without making the belt bigger. If it slips down, you've passed. If it doesn't, it is probably time to consider losing weight.

"Pinch an inch" is another common fat measurement. Grab a fat fold at your waist or have a friend grab one on your back, right over your shoulder blade. If the pinch is more than one inch thick, there is definitely an excess of fat.

Another test is the ruler test. Lie on your back and place a ruler on your stomach with one end resting on your sternum (between your ribs) and the other on your abdomen. If the abdominal end is higher than the sternum end, the diagnosis is clear — belly bulge.

All these techniques will determine if you have excess body fat. However, the most commonly used method is a weight and height table. These tables are useful tools for quickly and easily screening individuals who may be overly fat. But there are some problems in relying solely on height-weight tables.

Our bodies are made up primarily of bone, water, muscle and fat. All four have weight which will register on a scale. People who are heavily muscled will register more weight than average individuals. In some cases the well-muscled individuals will weigh more and actually have less fat.

The recently revised Army Regulation 600-9, The Army Weight Control Program, is designed to help identify those individuals who are overweight but not "overly fat." Unlike the "overly fat" people, these individuals will not be placed on the weight control program.

Overeating

Mostly, excess fat comes from overeating. For almost every single one of us, our excess body fat comes from eating more calories than we burn up.

Our accumulation of fat means that over the past years we have gradually increased the amount of food we eat every day, reduced our daily activity, or both.

Most of us do not realize this is occurring. It is a very gradual change. It creeps up on us, just like the fat.

Some people who have gained weight have not adjusted their eating or activity patterns as they got older. Over a period of several years, small changes can make a big difference.

An average 12-ounce can of regular soft drink provides about 145 calories, all of which are from sugar. The person who has a "two-can-a-day" habit takes in 290 calories a day just from the sugar in the soda. That is the calorie equivalent of one pound every 12 days, or 30 pounds a year.

Other common drinks that include sugar are iced tea and coffee. Drinking sweetened tea and coffee is a habit that can be changed.

Remedies

If going "cold turkey," drinking plain tea or coffee, is unacceptable to you, then reduce the amount of sugar by half. Drink it with one teaspoon of sugar instead of two.

Examine your diet to reduce high fat foods, particularly those foods to which you may add fat or those that are cooked in fat like french fries, doughnuts, chips and fried chicken. Most of us probably would not be willing to give up fried chicken; but by reducing the number of times each year we eat fried chicken, we can reduce extra fat calories. Instead of having fried chicken, substitute barbecued, baked or stewed chicken.

Reducing your intake of foods containing large amounts of fat and sugar is an excellent way to reduce total calorie intake. Cakes, pies, pastries and cookies are usually high in fat and sugar.

Changing your eating habits does not mean eliminating sweets and fats entirely. It does mean putting them in their proper place by saving them for special occasions. This may mean having fresh fruit for dessert or a snack more often.

We often consume excess calories just because they are available. We frequently eat snacks while reading, playing cards or watching television. We're not hungry, but food is there, and the habit is there.

You can reduce your total calorie intake by becoming more conscious of when, how and why you eat. Once you identify these habits you can change them either by substituting another activity for eating, or by eating food that is lower in fat or sugar. (Story courtesy of The Army Surgeon General's Office, HQDA.)

U.S. Olympic coins now available

WASHINGTON — If you're a staunch supporter of the U.S. Olympic effort, the folks at the U.S. Treasury Department have an item giving you a chance to expand that support while investing in a collector's item. It's the recently unveiled "Olympic Gold Coin," minted as part of the program set in motion by Congress' Olympic Coin Act of 1982.

The program, says Director of the Mint Donna Pope, aims at both commemorating and helping finance the U.S. Olympic effort. She made that plain in a recent West Point, N.Y., ceremony with the by-word "Support the Home Team — Buy an Olympic Coin."

"Of the competing nations in the Olympics," Pope said, "the United States is the only country that doesn't spend public funds to train our athletes or to stage our games. Through this coin program, every American has the chance to support the home team and to help turn precious metals into Olympic gold medals."

The complete set with display case sells for $416 plus a $2 shipping fee. Out of that amount, the Olympic Committee gets $70.

Here's where to order the set: U.S. Mint Olympic Program, P.O. Box 6766, San Francisco, Calif. 94101. (ARNews)

Retired worker reflects on changes, achievements

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning has gone through many changes over the years, and a lot of the people involved in those changes are gone. There are a few that are still around though, such as Milford J. Brooks of the Directorate of Resource Management.

"In 1943 Sand Hill wasn't there, nor was there any Sand Hill housing. In fact the size of the post in quarters and housing has sure expanded."

Brooks started work on post in 1943 as a messenger for the Quartermaster Corps. "My vehicle was a bicycle. Thank heavens the post wasn't as big then as it is now!"

The size of the post is one of the most dramatic changes here according to Brooks, who retired Jan. 3 with 36 years and 4 months of civil service at Fort Benning.

"I've seen a lot of changes. For instance, there was only one access road, Fort Benning Road, to get on post. But, there has also been a lot of organizational changes too."

Brooks was here when the CIMS reorganization of the Army took place and changed CONARC to FORSCOM and TRADOC. He also remembers units coming, going and being formed.

The 1st Air Mobile Division was activated here and was sent to Europe to replace the 2nd Division.

"During the Vietnam buildup, Fort Benning was a full-blown training and reception center but it was closed out at the end of the Vietnam War.

"Now, we have two training brigades, a reception center and One Station Unit Training here," he recalled.

He received a Letter of Commendation from the Chief of Staff of TRADOC for his role in preparation of the Case Study Justification File, which was used to brief Congress on the establishment of OSUT at Fort Benning.

"I have mixed emotions about leaving. I have enjoyed working at Fort Benning and have not regretted anytime that I chose to work in civil service. I've made a lot of friends that I don't think I could say if I chose a job other than civil service."

The management analyst recalled many memories, but none were more special than the others.

"I have so many fond memories of this place I don't think I have a special one. Maybe being promoted to GS-12 was a special highlight. I felt it was a great accomplishment in my life and felt it was a blessing from the Lord."

Connie McReynolds

Milford J. Brooks retired from Fort Benning last week with more than 36 years of service.

Openings available in club management program

Openings are available in the Club Management Career Program for E5s and E6s. Qualifying individuals who like working with people now have the opportunity to apply for this challenging career field.

In addition to being responsible for all phases of a club's operation, an individual will develop and manage food, beverages and entertainment programs, along with handling the club's admission.

Those accepted for this program will receive on-the-job training in a club manager position prior to attending the nine-week club management course at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. The course teaches the basics of how to operate a club. Training continues on the job throughout a club manager's career and it is reinforced with an executive level course for those who qualify, along with continuing educational workshops and seminars. Career placement provides the manager with increasingly more demanding club assignments as experience and training is gained.

To qualify, one must have less than 16 years' service. Previous experience in food service, business administration or financial management is also necessary to gain entry into the program. Interested individuals should consult with their local military personnel office and comply with procedures contained in Chapter 7, Section 8, Change 1 of AR 614-200 before filing their application through channels. As a minimum, the following documents must be included with the application:

- Updated DA Forms 2 and 2-1.
- Previous statement (DA Form 2365).
- Resume of past duties performed (military and civilian) which have any bearing on club management, to include employment performed which is relative to the Army Club Management Career Program; i.e., times, places, and duties performed.
- Letter of recommendation from local installation/area club manager as a result of interview with service member.
- Transcript of verification of all college semester hours.
- Verification of height and weight.
- Verification of security clearance.
- Any physical disabilities.
- A minimum acceptable GT score of 110.

Waivers will not be granted. Applications not containing any one of the above-mentioned documents will be considered incomplete. Applications should be forwarded through command channels to Commander, U.S. Army Military Personnel Center, ATTN: DAPC-OPA-C, 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, Va. 22332. (TNS)

Marathon not far enough for post runners

By John Wagner
USAMU Public Affairs

When Hubert McNeer and Gary Swain decided they wanted a challenge that would physically tax them to the limit, they immediately ruled out a marathon. They knew it wouldn't be enough.

McNeer, an engineer for the crash-rescue station at Lawson Army Airfield, and Swain, the captain of the Harmony Church fire station, are long-time runners of six and 10 years, respectively. Neither participated in long races — just ones of five miles or 10s, up until early 1983.

It was last January when the two friends had a change of heart. "We both participated in the Peachtree mini-marathon of 13.1 miles," said Swain. "When we finished we were hardly even tired. We wanted something more.

"I noticed in the Columbus Track Club literature that the longest race they offered was an ultra-marathon of 46.2 miles. There was one scheduled for Nov. 19 and we decided that was what we were going to prepare ourselves for," Swain continued.

Their wives said they were crazy, but they both began intensive training. Each went at his own pace.

"I wasn't 100 percent sure I was going to do it until June or July," said McNeer. "From February until then I was running 30 to 50 miles a week. But once I was sure, I increased to about 70 miles a week."

Swain started piling up the high mileage right away. "I tried to run at least five hours every other day, beginning in February," he said. "So I was doing 60 or 70 miles a week."

Shortly before the scheduled race, Swain and McNeer went to Pine Mountain where it was scheduled to take place. They received a big surprise. The race was not to be run on asphalt. The competitors would be going the entire distance on a rugged cross-country trail instead.

The ultra-marathon had 22 entrants, as opposed to a marathon, which will usually have hundreds or even thousands.

"We began at 7 a.m. and the terrain was rough the whole way with rocks and hills," said McNeer. "There were also logs and 13 streams we had to jump over. You couldn't relax for a minute, because if you weren't alert you might twist your ankle or stub your toe."

The path crossed a main road several times, where their wives gave them fluids and sandwiches to gulp down as they continued running.

They had their difficulties on the grueling course that seemed to them to last an eternity. "I felt good at the half-way point," said McNeer. "But then I experienced what long-distance runners call 'hitting the wall,' when there is a sudden depletion of the body's fluids and subsequent exhaustion. I had to walk some, but continued on."

Swain struggled also, at times feeling sick. "It was the toughest thing I've ever done," he said.

The two firemen were among 19 finishers. McNeer came in at 5:40 p.m. and Swain arrived a couple of hours later.

It was an education for them and both say they'll probably do it again next year. Swain believes he overtrained and says he should have followed McNeer's schedule. Both also claim they should have eaten more starchy foods for one or two weeks before the race to provide their bodies with the massive glucose needed. "There's more to planning for this kind of race than meets the eye," said Swain, who claims to have lost 15 pounds during the run. "For the average person participating in it, his body doesn't fully recover for about three weeks."

Besides next year's ultra-marathon, both want to go on to something bigger still — a 100-mile race. "I sent applications for each of us to register for the Western One Hundred Race that takes place in Arizona," said Swain. "But not everyone who applies can run in it. The sponsors hold a drawing to select 200 people. The reason for this is the event is so demanding that they have doctors every 25 miles to check each person's pulse and temperature, and they can only monitor so many people."

"I hope we can get into it," he said. "I want that 100-miler badly!"

Callaway marathon slated for tomorrow

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. — The seventh annual Callaway Gardens Marathon is slated for tomorrow at 9 a.m. This year the event has been expanded to include a variety of activities such as a banquet and running clinic the night before the race at the Callaway Gardens Inn.

Former Olympian Jeff Galloway will be the guest speaker for the banquet which starts at 7 p.m. Galloway was a long distance runner on the 1972 U.S. Summer Olympics Team. He was the first winner of the Peachtree Road Race and has been instrumental in its growth.

Another feature of this year's marathon weekend is the addition of two shorter races. The RRCA Georgia State Championship 15K and a 15K race walk will be held concurrently with the marathon. Starting time for all three races is 9 a.m. at the Robin Lake Beach Pavilion. The pre-registration fee for any of the races is $10, which includes admission to Callaway Gardens. Those who register the day of the race must pay the $3 Gardens admission charge as well as the $10 entry fee. The beach gate will open tomorrow at 7 a.m.

All those entering the marathon, 15K or race walk will receive a Callaway Gardens t-shirt plus admission to the awards party following the marathon. There will be refreshments and video-tape highlights of all the races. Awards will be presented to the top three finishers in the following divisions for men and women: 19-and-under, 20-40, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-44, 45-49, 50-54, 55-50, 60 and over. Special first-place awards go to the male and female marathon winners.

For more information on the Callaway Gardens marathon weekend, contact Phil Scoggins at Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, (404)

Army tightening belts on drug abusers

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army is again tightening its separation policy for those caught abusing drugs.

Since July 1, 1983, officers, warrant officers and noncommissioned officers (E6 and above) identified as drug abusers have been mandatorily processed for elimination from the Army. But under a policy change which becomes effective Feb. 1, the requirement is being extended to include sergeants and specialist fives, according to Dr. Tom H. Tennent, Fort Benning alcohol and drug control officer.

"This tightening is a sign of how seriously the Army is regarding drug abuse. Basically, it is saying it won't allow a climate to exist where there is disrepect for the organization and its rules . . . clearly drug abuse falls into this category," said Tennent.

The policy also applies to junior soldiers explained Tennent. However, unlike their superiors, the lower ranked soldier does not face the mandatory processing separation clause unless he is a second offender.

"Although officers and noncommissioned officers must be processed for separation, it does not mean they will automatically be put out of the Army," said Tennent. "It means a person in this category has been identified as a user and the commander has to take notice and do something. They still have the choice of recommending separation or retention, but they can't ignore it altogether."

Besides forcing them to take action against drug abusers, the stricter policy has had another effect which surprised some commanders, said Tennent.

"All of a sudden during urinalysis sweeps, they found out it wasn't just the bad soldiers on the side who used drugs, and the good soldiers on the other-side who didn't. Some commanders have been astounded to find someone who they've respected and looked on as a sharp soldier coming up positive. So, as a result of this policy, they are finding drug abuse cuts across a broad spectrum," said Tennent.

"The policy requires aviation personnel, military police and those in the Personnel Reliability Program to be tested at least once a year.

According to Tennent, the impact of the policy on Fort Benning has been immensely effective. There was a huge upswing in the number of cases referred to the ADCO soon after the policy went into effect, but recently the number has begun to decline as more and more soldiers realize how serious the Army is about the policy.

Benning reorganization proceeding on schedule

Plans for reorganizing the Infantry Center staff to promote quality of life and to enhance overall staff efficiency are proceeding on schedule. The reorganization becomes effective on Tuesday.

Colonel Neal Christensen, the new deputy post commander (DPC), is locating his office on the top floor of building four. Colonel Richard Hummel, the new director of Personnel and Community Affairs (DPCA), will remain in building 35.

The DPC will control DPCA, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, Communications and Electronics, Health and Dental Services, the Military Police Activity and the Automated Management Office.

Because the Chief of Staff Colonel Carmen Cavezza will no longer directly control these organization, he can better focus on force modernization and integration, the post's training mission and long range planning.

The reorganization brings together all organizations, to include Community Life, which specifically relate to the well being of families and places them under the control of the DPC.

The chief concerns of the DPC are community life, installation support, order and discipline, as well as health, welfare and morale of post families.

The decision to reorganize the post quickly follows the establishment of the revitalized post community life program.

Next week's BAYONET will take a closer look at the reorganization and provide more information as it develops. (USAIC PAO)

Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream lives on

Robert McClain

I recently visited the city of Montgomery, Ala. At a glance, it seemed like any other well-kept medium-sized Southern city. Life went on as usual as I drove through the city streets. Blacks and whites walked the streets side by side, going about their daily chores. To my eyes, there were no visable reminders of the turbulence that rocked the state of Alabama and the nation more than 20 years ago.

"Birmingham, Alabama, is probably the most thoroughly segregated city in the United States. It's ugly record of brutality is widely known. There have been more unsolved bombings of Negro homes and churches in Birmingham than any other city in the nation."

During my short stay in the city, I stopped to eat at a small out-of-the way restaurant. Most of its few patrons were black and its owner and operator was black. She was a thin woman and she appeared to be in her late 30s. There was a tall, muscular, young man behind the grill, cooking the food. I noticed a high-school science book on a shelf by the grill. I can assume he studied during his breaks.

I was served my food quickly. As I left the immaculately-kept restaurant, she wished me a good day. As she smiled, the woman's face showed lines of more than her 30 years. I smiled back and said thank you as I walked out the door.

Life has changed much in Montgomery and Alabama since those turbulent times I read about in my history books.

The history books remember it as the first city to stop racial segregation on buses in 1956 and as the ending point of a famous march for the Voting Rights Act of 1964.

It is more than just that. Montgomery is the city were a great man began an unrelenting crusade. A nonviolent crusade for rights for blacks; a crusade for social reform; a crusade for equality for all men and women.

Few signs of his time are left in Montgomery. But if you look hard enough, you can see a few. Just ask anyone over the age of 30, they remember just how different life was in the city and in the nation.

"Five score years ago, a great American, in whose symbolic shadow we stand, signed the Emancipation Proclamation. . . . But one hundred years later, we must face the tragic fact that the negro is still not free. One hundred years later, the life of the negro is still sadly crippled by the

CG's message

On January 13, 1984, Fort Benning will observe the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The theme for 1984 is: "Mandate for the beloved community: Forging a covenant for jobs, peace and freedom."

On this day, we should be reminded of Dr. King's lasting influence on our American society. It is an occasion to reflect and rededicate ourselves to the principles for which he lived and died — a dream of dignity for all, regardless of color, creed or national origin.

In recognition of Dr. King's many lasting contributions, a commemorative service will be held in Marshall Auditorium. All military personnel, their families and civilian employees are encouraged to join in this service.

Various voices

What influence did Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. have on our nation?

Richard Robbins, post firefighter — "He accomplished much in the field of civil rights. He was instrumental in the passage of the civil rights amendment. He did more in his few years than most do in a lifetime."

Sp4 Jackie D. Berry, Hq. Co., Hq. Cmd.—"He helped eliminate many barriers preventing black people from advancing in society. He contributed much to our nation."

Wayne Key, post firefighter — "His influence as a civil rights leader is unmatched throughout history. He helped bring about social, political and economic equality for blacks."

SSgt. Wilhemenia P. Coffee, Hq. Co., Hq. Cmd. —"He still stands as a role model for my family and myself. He gave pride to black people."

T.R. Jones, post firefighter — "Dr. King made many significant contributions to our society. His courage and convictions helped give people hope for the future."

Gerry Stovall, EO clerk —"I feel like he had a great influence on my life. With his influence, I feel I was better able to accomplish the goals I set for myself."

manacles of segregation and the chains of discrimination. One hundred years later, the negro lives on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity. One hundred years later, the negro is still languished in the corners of American society and finds himself in exile in his own land. So we come here today to dramatize an appalling condition."

Life has changed — changed for the better — not only in Montgomery, but throughout the nation. One man helped start the process of change in America. One man took a stand and fought for what he believed was right. That man was Martin Luther King Jr.

Today as we at Fort Benning prepare to honor this great man, let us reflect, if only for a day, on the great things he accomplished. In his short life of 39 years, his achievements assumed truly heroic proportions.

King's efforts, even from the beginning were solely dedicated to attaining equal rights for everyone.

"As a race we must work passionately and relentingly for first-class citizenship, but we must never use second-class methods to gain it. If this happens, unborn generations will be the recipients of a long and desolate night of bitterness, and our chief legacy to the future will be an endless reign of meaningless chaos."

King's campaign for civil rights met with great success during the 1960s. He led many demonstrations for his cause around the country. Partly because of his efforts, Congress enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

For his work, he was honored with the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize. He accepted the award but he knew much still needed to be accomplished.

"As we walk, we must make the pledge that we shall march ahead. We cannot turn back. There are those who are asking the devotees of civil rights, when will you be satisfied?" We can never be satisfied as long as the negro is the victim of the unspeakable horrors of police brutality. We can never be satisfied as long as our bodies, heavy with the fatigue of travel, cannot gain lodging in the motels of the highways and the hotels of the cities. We cannot be satisfied as long as the negro's basic mobility is from a smaller ghetto to a larger one. We can never be satisfied as long as negroes in Mississippi cannot vote and a negro in New York believes he has nothing for which to vote. No, no, we are not satisfied, and we will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness,like a mighty stream."

Despite his views on nonviolence, King was often the target for it. His home in Montgomery was bombed. He was stabbed in New York and stoned in Chicago. Finally, a violent action ended his life before he could see the completion of his dream.

Life in this new year is far from perfect. But great strides toward equality have been taken over the last 20 years. In my mind, there is no reason to justify not making greater gains toward it in the next 20 years.

"I don't know what will happen now. We have some difficult days ahead. But it really doesn't matter with me now, because I've been to the mountain top. Like anybody, I would like to live a long life. Longevity has its place. But I'm not concerned about that now. I just want to do God's will, and He has allowed me to go up to the mountain, and I've looked over and I've seen the promised land. I may not get there with you, but I want you to know tonight that we as a people will get to the promised land. So I am happy tonight: I am not worried about anything. I am not fearing any man. Mine eyes have seen the coming of the Lord."

Dr. King the day before his death

This weekend, the nation as a whole should reflect how far we have come and how far we must still go.

Fort Benning residents can honor the passing of Dr. King's birthday at any of four ceremonies on post this weekend.

Today at 2 p.m., in Marshall Auditorium, building four, Dorothy Cotton will speak. Mrs. Cotten is currently the director of student personnel at Cornell University. She has been involved with the civil rights movement for many years and worked closely with Dr. King.

There will also be a ceremony today at 4 p.m. at the Fort Benning Reception Station, building 3020. Reverend Garland Springs will be the guest speaker.

Two gatherings will be held Sunday. Chaplain Alice Harris will speak at 8:15 a.m. and at 9:30 a.m. at the Sand Hill Chapel, building 3420.

At 11 a.m., Pastor Charles C. Blake will speak at the Kelley Hill Chapel, building 9023.

Soldier plays important role in Ranger training

Rick Russell

Sp4 Bruce Harker

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers receive various types of training at Fort Benning. If you listen to the Rangers, none of the training is more difficult than Ranger training. Several soldiers are assigned to the 3rd Ranger Company, The School Brigade, to support training. One such individual is Sp4 Bruce Harkner.

Harkner joined the Army in February 1982. He completed Infantry basic and advanced individual training. Then he graduated from Ranger School Jan. 3, 1983. Following graduation, he was assigned to the 3rd Ranger Company.

"Basically, I act as an aggressor against Ranger students," stated Harkner. "When the troops go to the field, several other soldiers and myself attack the students using tactics that are similar to an actual combat situation."

Ranger training is both physically and mentally demanding. SFC John Hester, operations sergeant, believes Rangers like Harkner help place that additional mental strain on the students.

"Ranger Harkner's mission is an important key in the training of new Rangers," stated Hester. "The aggessors play a big role in all of the phases of Ranger training. He follows instructions well and has a tremendous impact on the students' training.

Harkner enjoys his role as an unknown instructor.

"I like helping Ranger students realize just how important their missions are and what they can expect from their opposition," continued the Black River Falls, Wis., native. "Ranger training is something I will never forget. Most of what is taught during the course is enough to familiarizethe individual with certain tactics. By working in the Ranger Department, I have been able to develop my expertise in the various aspects of Ranger training."

Harkner is beginning his third year of a four-year enlistment. He presently isn't sure about reenlisting but he does have some definite plans for the future.

"I would like to attend as many schools as possible during the next two years," said Harkner. "Specifically the Pathfinder and Jump Master courses."

Until then, Harkner will continue to attack Ranger students.

New money counter adds up to SPIRITed savings

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Finance and Accounting Division got SPIRIT and found a way to save time by purchasing a less expensive money counter.

The machine that was replaced, besides costing nearly twice as much as the new unit, would jam if it was fed bills that were old or wrinkled. The condition of the bills doesn't matter on the new machine, according to FAO Supply Officer Bob Slate; the machine will sort up to 1,000 bills per minute.

The savings to the FAO is not limited to the cost of the machine. The savings also includes the time it takes to count and verify payments. There are more than 50 dining facilities that turn in their receipts to the Fort Benning FAO. These facilities are required to make a turn-in, according to Capt. Linda Rustin, food service officer, Directorate of Industrial Operations, "when they either close out a book or have $500." Most of this money is in small bills that make counting and verifying the collection a time-consuming affair.

"It takes from eight to 10 minutes to count and verify each payment," commented George W. Walker, cashier, FAO, "and by using the machine we cut that time almost in half."

While the SPIRIT savings have not been officially computed, the amount saved at the main branch could amount to more than $12,000 per year. The FAO takes in an average of $3.5 million a month — most of it in small bills.

The machine also relieves the cashier from a lot of mental worry according to Slate. Each day the three cashiers at the main branch use the machine to count their cash drawers. "Before this machine was purchased," said Slate, "each cashier was plagued with doubts that his tally at the end of the day would not match the cash in the drawer. This machine has eliminated a lot of that worry."

Over in the Army Training Center, the machine has another use, it can be programmed to count only a certain amount. The new inductees are paid a standard "flying $90." The machine is a time-saver, according to FAO officials.

The savings, when computed, will go toward Fort Benning's new SPIRIT goal of $5.67 million. Training and Doctrine Command has again authorized a $1 million bonus to the installation that saves the most money during the fiscal year.

The TRADOC SPIRIT program is designed to encourage each employee, military or civilian, to actively search for ways to be more efficient and economical.

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain John Bjarnason
197th Infantry Brigade

The forces of nature have been much in the news lately; snow and ice storms, volcanic eruptions, floods and earthquakes. Unusual weather patterns have made the headlines throughout the world.

There are lessons we might gain from such events; lessons about architecture, city planning, preparation for emergencies — both personal and public. But one of the most basic messages from all this is the reminder that we are tenants and not the owners of this world we inhabit.

As the Psalmist sang, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the flood." (Psalm 24:1,2).

We may pride ourselves on our accomplishments in building cities, channeling rivers, developing new strains of plants and animals and even modestly altering rainfall through such things as cloud seeding; but it only takes a minute shift in the forces and factors of the elements to quickly remind us how puny our little efforts are, compared to the power of nature.

We cannot cap a volcano or calm a tornado. We cannot stem the tide of a rampaging river. We cannot stop the slippage of the earth's crust.

Are we then helpless before the blind forces of nature? Not really, for we have the power of appeal to the Creator and Ruler of this world.

We can have the assurance that he is our Father in Heaven, that He loves us, and can order the elements to our best good. This does not mean we will not suffer some stormy days and sightless nights, some tempests and some turbulence. But if we put our trust in God and keep His commandments, He will give us strength to stand against the challenges of life.

As we try to make His purposes our own, we will understand more of the workings of nature, and of our place in the plan of life. The laws and forces of nature will become more often our allies and less often our enemies.

When the time comes that nature ultimately takes its course, when in the pattern of things we pass from this world into the next, this transition will hold no terror for us. It will be as gentle as the passing of clouds, as natural as a planted seed that springs forth with more abundant life.

Reverend wonders 'what happened to the dream?'

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

"What happened to the dream?" the Rev. Charles Blake laments when asked about the sermon he will preach Sunday at Kelley Hill Chapel. He will be commemorating the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a man who had a great impact on his life and ministry.

"Dr. King was a highly intelligent man who loved people and was willing to give his life to help people," Rev. Blake said. "I never heard him say anything about hate. Yet," he adds, "what happened to his dream? We still don't know how to live; we don't know how to treat each other."

Reverend Blake believes that Dr. King's philosophy was: "What's mine is yours — I'll share it." But he sees people as not really caring: "They haven't come to the dream; they continue to say in their hearts, 'what's mine is mine and what's yours is mine."

Reverend Blake feels that there are enough laws on the books: "What we need is the law of love in our hearts." He says that he "would like to see people learn the lesson of love, but people are not willing to pay the price."

When Blake was about 16 years old, he felt God was calling him to something but he didn't know what it was, and so he resisted. For several years, he suffered severe headaches and even had spinal taps to relieve the pressure. A minister friend told him that God was calling him to preach, but that Blake was running from Him. Once the decision was made to commit himself to he ministry, the headaches ceased.

From that time on, Blake's ministry has been and continues to be full and varied. He was a U.S. Army chaplain for 21 years, serving in World War II and Korea where he was seriously wounded. Other areas of his ministry include serving as dean of Jackson Theological Seminary in Arkansas where he taught Greek, Hebrew philosophy and religious education.

His interest in drug and alcohol abuse led him to assume the post of chaplains at two large Connecti-

Soldiers go in search of silver wings

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

They come from all of the Armed Services, from every walk of life — looking for something different.

There are rich kids from swank neighborhoods and ritzy schools, farmers looking for adventure and ghetto kids wanting to be special. Some wear the insignia of commissioned officers, while still others wear the stripes of the NCO. Some — fresh out of basic training — wear no insignia at all.

They have all come to Fort Benning for the chance to earn a pair of silver wings.

Some are so eager to attend that they arrive early, according to Lt. Col. Willis Larabee, commander, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, The School Brigade. The soldiers, when they arrive early, don't have a "paid vacation" while waiting for a class to start, they start the "zero" week of the three-week course.

"When a soldier arrives," stated Larabee, "he is in-processed . . . and then rostered into his training unit.

"Those that arrive early undergo a 'zero week' of training. During that zero week, they have physical training twice a day and begin mentally getting prepared for the course of instruction."

The 4th Airborne Training Battalion places a lot of emphasis on physical conditioning because they have found that a soldier in good condition has less chance of being injured.

The first day of training is spent taking the Army Physical Readiness Test. Some of the soldiers are eliminated the first day because they aren't able to meet the standards set by the battalion. "Prior to entering the actual training," stated Larabee, "they have to achieve a score of 45 pushups, 45 situps and complete the run in 15 minutes and 59 seconds."

After the completion of the APRT, the soldiers receive a briefing. The "Black hats" give a demonstration of the parachute and some of the techniques that the students will learn during the next three weeks. Once the demonstration is concluded the students start their training on Mann Field.

The students get training in both the start and finish of the parachute drop during the first week — they learn how to exit an aircraft and how to land.

"The ground phase of training is oriented on the individual," explained Larabee, "such as teaching the student to make a proper parachute landing fall (PLF)."

The PLF is a paratrooper's way of minimizing the contact with the ground by spreading the shock of landing over five point on the body. The students spend hour after hour, under the watchful eyes of the "Black Hats," practicing this technique. "We train the student on the ground," continued Larabee, "and walk them through the motions with grass-drill type training.

Bill Reynolds

Eyes of Airborne students turn skyward as the "Silver Wings" land on Mann Field.

The next step is the lateral drift apparatus (LDA) and the two and four-foot platforms."

The soldiers will jump from the platforms until the instructor thinks they are ready for the LDA. The soldiers get a better idea of what it's like to land by grasping the handles of the LDA and sliding along an inclined cable to simulate the motion that they would experience with an actual drop.

The routine of falling in the sawdust is broken only by the frequent trips to the top of the 34-foot tower to practice exiting from an aircraft. Again the emphasis is on individual skill as the instructor "taps out" the students one at a time. The students grin in disbelief when the instructors tell them that jumping from the tower is more frightening than jumping from a real airplane. Each student shuffles to the door of the tower, shouts his name and roster number to the instructor below.

The helmeted soldier stares straight at the horizon, waiting for the tap on the leg that is the signal for him to leap out of the door, bringing his feet and knees together, elbows tucked in to his sides, both hands on the reserve and his chin touching his chest. When the signal comes, with a loud "Go!" shouted in his ear, the worry is not "Will the massive cables and nylon harness hold?" but "Did I do it right? Will I have to do it again?" The soldier slides down the cables into the arms of fellow students and double-times to the waiting instructor. Standing in front of the instructor, the student yells out his roster number and almost casually the instructor critiques the performance. "Roster number three — wun — wun, you had your eyes closed and your feet and knees were not together. It was an unsatisfactory exit — go back and do it again."

As the student wearily climbs the stairs to the tower he wonders, "How many more before I get it right?" According to Larabee, the instructors ensure the students get "it" right before they go on to the second week of training.

VA inaugurates hotline for former POWs

The Veterans Administration will inaugurate a special toll-free telephone information hotline for former prisoners of war on May, Dec. 12, 1983.

The hotline has been established for ex-POWs to inform the VA if they feel they are not being recognized as ex-POWs at VA medical centers or regional offices, or if they feel their treatment is not consistent with the intent of the Prisoners of War Health Care Benefits Act of 1981.

The Act broadened VA's authority to provide health care for ex-POWs and also liberalized rules for determining whether certain medical conditions can be considered service-connected.

The 24-hour toll-free number, 800-821-8139, is available to over 93,000 ex-POWs nationwide, and will be staffed by a select group of POW specialists from the Washinton, D.C., regional office during regular business hours (8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. EST). After-hours and weekend callers may leave a recorded message on the hotline.

The new information hotline will supplement the existing toll-free services provided for all veterans to VA regional offices nationwide, and it will also complement the ex-POW coordinators assigned to all 172 VA medical centers. (VA News)

Weapon registration card no longer required by MPs

The Fort Benning Military Police Activity will no longer require registering of privately owned weapons.

Any persons wishing to obtain information relative to their weapons which they presently have registered, should report to the Military Police Station, room 109, building 215, Wold Avenue, prior to COB Jan. 31. Beginning Feb. 1, all records of registered weapons will be destroyed.

Changes to USAIC Regulation 210-5 are in the process of being correlated and published. Changes in the Provost Marshal portion of the regulation include the following:

Persons will no longer be required to carry weapons registration cards. Weapons can be transported on or onto the installation for initial introduction, during moving, and while traveling to or from hunting, target shooting or other recognized functions involving that particular weapon.

Weapons can only be transported in a vehicle trunk. If the vehicle has no trunk, the weapon(s) will be transported in plain view.

No weapon will be transported with a round in chamber, magazine with ammunition affixed or in a ready to fire configuration.

When weapons are transported it will be only to or from the recognized activity. Weapons will not be stored in a vehicle, such as during work or overnight, pending traveling to the activity.

Weapons kept on post can only be stored in family quarters or unit arms rooms. (Provost Marshal's Office)

Many misconceptions associated with filing taxes

By William Spradley
Legal Assistance Office

Every individual who received income in 1983 in which taxes were withheld should file a federal income tax return. Even if the individual doesn't owe any taxes, he or she should file an income tax return in order to receive a tax refund from the Internal Revenue Service.

Some people have the misconception they can obtain an early refund by filing their leave and earning statement in place of their W-2. The Internal Revenue Service has issued a proclamation that any return filed with a leave and earning statement will be returned with no refund. So file early but do it correctly with your W-2 forms attached.

Taxpayers must understand the difference between taxable and nontaxable income.

Taxable income is income the Internal Revenue Service requires you to report. It includes the following: alimony received; capital gains; distributions from individual retirement arrangements; dividends; estate or trust income; gain from the sale of your home; interest except on certain state or municipal bonds, pensions, and annuities; prizes and rewards; refunds of state and local taxes; tips; wages; salaries; bonuses and commissions.

Nontaxable income is income that isn't required to be reported. This type of income includes the following: child support; dividends on Veterans Life Insurance; gifts; inheritances; bequests; insurance damages for personal injury and medical expenses; most life insurance proceeds paid upon death; public assistance payments; railroad retirement benefits; social security benefits; veteran's disability benefits and workmen's compensation. The bottom line is don't pay more taxes than you are obligated to pay by reporting nontaxable income.

If you have any questions about this article, call or talk to your unit tax officer today.

Actor to appear at college; will narrate local production

Actor George Kennedy will be at Columbus College Jan. 21. He will narrate the Columbus Civic Chorale's production of Arthur Honegger's "King David: A Symphonic Psalm."

The 8 p.m. performance in Columbus College's Fine Arts Hall will also feature soprano Pamela C. White, a voice instructor at Columbus College, and Betty Britto, managing director of the Springer Opera House School of Theatre Arts. She will narrate the part of the Witch of Endor.

A Columbus College student, Jean Bush, will sing the contralto solos, and the tenor solos will be sung by Michael O'Neal, a Mercer College faculty member from Atlanta.

There will be about 90 performers in the production, including 17 local orchestral musicians, the chorus, four soloists and narrator Kennedy.

Kennedy served 15 years in the Army before retiring with a disability at the age of 32. He won two Bronze Stars and four rows of combat ribbons while serving in the Infantry during World War II.

Ironically, his first civilian part as an actor was as a soldier in "Sergeant Bilko." Since then he has been in many television shows and movies.

Revitalized dining facility takes honors

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

SFC Alvah M. Arrington says it is still hard to describe exactly how he felt in September 1982 when he got his first look at the building housing the dining facility he was to manage.

"This dining facility was substandard. I mean below zero. The food was unsatisfactory. The morale of the personnel was low; it was pretty bad. Just a place where soldiers came in the front door, ate whatever was slopped on their plates and went out the back door," Arrington said bluntly of the Company D, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, dining facility.

All in all it was a comedown said the 16-year Army veteran from Roanoke, Va., who came here from the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii where he had managed the commanding general's dining facility.

Among the other problems confronting Arrington were an inadequate sewage system, kitchen equipment that wouldn't work most of the time, and ragged curtains in the dining area.

Over the next 16 months, Arrington undertook a rehabilitation program which has resulted in three awards as the best dining facility in the 2nd ITB. "In fact, after the third time, the brigade retired the award to us permanently," said Capt. David W. E. Black, commander of D-4-2. And most recently the dining facility has been selected the post's best small dining facility for the first quarter of fiscal year 1984.

Colorful floral pattern curtains were obtained from the supply system, as were the paintings of period uniforms which hang on the brown paneled, simulated wood grain walls. New light fixtures were installed, new tile was laid on the floors and the kitchen equipment was upgraded as much as possible.

"I drew on my own likes and dislikes for guidance," said Arrington. "I like nice things, I like to eat in a nice environment and I felt the soldiers shared the same wants and needs and deserved them. I know I wouldn't to go into a place and sit down and eat food that tastes bad. I wouldn't want to go into a place and pick up a fork or knife that has grease on it. These are things I feel I wouldn't want, so why would the soldier feel differently about the same things?"

Quality service for the soldier is foremost in Arrington's mind and he feels the dining facility plays an important part in a soldier's training.

"When they first arrive here, they expect the dining facility to be the pits. But that first meal sets the tone for those which follow. They learn they can look forward to a good meal after being out in the rain and the mud training. It boosts their morale and ours too. Their comments and the suggestions they leave in the box let us know we are doing our job," said Arrington.

cut hospitals for several years. He has also been the pastor of A.M.E. churches in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Georgia. While serving a church in Connecticut, Gov. Abraham Rubicoff appointed him Commissioner of Civil Rights for the State of Connecticut. It was during that time in 1957 that he met Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The Rev. Blake's educational background includes an A.B. degree from Morris Brown College, Atlanta; a bachelor's degree in in divinity from Turner Theological Seminary, Atlanta; and a masters degree from Boston University School of Theology.

He has always seen civil rights and anti-poverty programs as an integral part of his pastoral ministry. While pastoring a church in New York, he worked as supervisor of a sanitation department project for the Brooklyn Model Cities Administration.

In New Jersey, he organized the Southern New Jersey Opportunities Industralization Center which took jobless people off welfare rolls by giving them job training which often led to permanent work.

For the past five and a half years, Rev. Blake and his family have lived in Columbus where he is presently pastor of St. James A.M.E. Church. He is a regular contributor to the religion section of the "Columbus Enquirer" and has published four books. He is married to Dr. Frances Cherot Blake,a pediatrician at Martin Army Hospital. The Blakes have seven children.

When asked to explain more about what happened to Dr. King's dream, Rev. Blake just smiled and said, "You'll have to be at Kelley Hill Chapel at 11 a.m. Sunday morning." He does, however, point to the following poem which expresses his philosophy and may well be a big clue to understanding "what happened to the dream?"

Life's Clock

The clock of life is wound but once,
And no man has the power,
To tell just where the hand will stop,
At late or early hour.
To lose one's wealth is bad indeed,
To lose one's soul is such
A loss, as no man can restore.
The present only is our own,
Live, love, toil with a will.
Place no faith in "tomorrow,"
For the clock may then be still.

Aerobic dance classes

Want to feel and look your best? Join the Officers Wives Club's aerobic dance classes on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at 9:30 and Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 7:15. The monthly fee is $12 for all five classes or any combination you choose. Anyone affiliated with the military may participate. The classes are held at the OWC Activity Building, 1234 Ingersol St. For more information, call Sarah at 689-5139.

GED/English classes offered

Free GED and English classes are held each Monday and Thursday at 6:30 p.m. The classes, sponsored by the International Wives, are taught by qualified teachers. Instructional materials are provided by the Muscogee County Education Department. For more information about the classes, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471.

King ceremony scheduled

A commemorative ceremony honoring Dr. Martin Luther King will be held today at 2 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium. The guest speaker will be Dr. Dorothy Cotton, an associate professor from Cornell University. The public is invited and all attendees are asked to be seated at least 10 minutes before the ceremony.

Patty Taylor dancers

The Patty Taylor Contemporary Dance Company will be appearing at the Fort Benning Community Theatre next Friday at 8 p.m. The company will perform two short features, "A Salute to Dance" and "Columbus, Georgia, U.S.A." Many different dance forms will be used, including jazz, jitterbug, the high step, Charleston, soft-shoe and modern.

The Patty Taylor dancers have performed for six years with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra and have won numerous honors in regional dance competitions. Mrs. Taylor has choreographed a number of musicals for the Springer Opera House, including "The Music Man" and "Oliver."

There is no admission charge for the show. Call 545-5057 for more details.

Parking on grass prohibited

Residents of government owned quarters are reminded that parking of privately owned vehicles on lawns or grassed areas next to government quarters is prohibited. Violaters will be cited by area coordinators and community life NCOs.

Stress workshop

Wives of 1st Infantry Training Brigade members are invited to come out to the Sandhill Recreation Center tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. to learn how to handle stress. The workshop will be presented by Chaplain Emory Cowan and is sponsored by the Drill Sergeant's Wives Club. It will cover — What is stress? Where do we get it? How do we cope with it? Make reservations by calling 689-3477 or 689-1448.

Road closures

Two Fort Benning roads are now closed for replacement of steam lines. Sightseeing Road between Lexington Street and First Infantry Brigade Loop will be closed until Jan. 19. First Infantry Brigade Loop between Sightseeing Road and Dixie Road will be closed until Feb. 6.

New hours for ID cards

The AG ID card section, building 83, room 128, has changed its hours. A shortage of manpower has dictated a reduction in their operating hours. The new hours are from 8-11 a.m. and 1-3:30 p.m. each day.

During the hours of 8-10 a.m., a service member will get priority over family members or retirees. This only applies to the service member — not he or she and his or her family. For more information, call Mrs. Hall at 545-5814.

Bait shop hours change

The operating hours of the Uchee Creek Recreation Area Bait Shop have recently changed. It is now open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays. The hours are from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The bait shop is closed every Tuesday and Wednesday.

Acting classes offered

The Springer Opera House of Theatre Arts will offer classes for all age groups beginning the second week of January. Classes will include children's acting, basic and advanced acting for adults, musical theatre, stage managing, and radio and television techniques.

For more information and a schedule of classes, call the Springer School after Jan. 2, at 324-3601.

Red Cross needs nurses

The Red Cross is in need of registered nurses and licensed practical nurses who are interested in volunteering their services in the Fort Bennning community. Positions are available in several areas. If you are interested, call Jean Campbell at 689-8289.

Girl Scout recruiting

The adults of the Fort Benning Girl Scout Association are sponsoring a special night of activities for all Benning girls who are not Scouts. These girls, ages 6 - 12, can visit the Youth Activity Center Jan. 21 from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. to sample some of the fun enjoyed by Girl Scouts. Some of the planned activities include craft projects, camping skills, songs and games, first aid and a fashion show.

The post schools will pass out registration flyers and these need to be returned by Jan. 18. The event is free, but the girls are asked to bring a sack lunch and a plastic cup for the beverages to be provided. Parents are also welcome. For more information, call 689-8543.

YA Junior Rifle Club

The Fort Benning Youth Activities Junior Rifle Club will conduct the first meeting of the spring basic course for new members Jan. 17 at 4:30 p.m. Classes will be held at the USAMU indoor range located behind the Infantry Museum on Bergen Street. Anyone who is at least 12 years old that is interested in joining, should call Lt. Parmentier or Lt. Col. Lones Wigger at 545-2343. The course costs $20, but this amount also includes membership dues for a year.

Engineer society meets

The monthly meeting of the Society of American Military Engineers will be held Wednesday at 11:30 a.m. in the NCO Club. Following lunch, Maj. Jeffrey A. Wagonhurst, deputy district engineer, U.S. Army Engineer District, Mobile, will discuss Mobile District's construction program in Honduras, as well as projects located in their military construction boundary. The annual business meeting with election of officers and directors for the coming year will also take place. Make your reservations right away by calling 545-2804 or 545-1932.

Dental appointments

Active duty personnel, their family members and retired military personnel and their family members are encouraged to seek routine dental care at this time. Waiting time for appointments after the examination appointment is minimal. Active duty personnel should call their assigned clinic for their appointments while their family members should call dental clinic #1, 544-2051. Retired military and their family members should call Salomon Dental Clinic, 544-3071.

College re-entry seminar

Columbus College is offering "Adults in College: A Re-entry Seminar" Monday at the Turner Center for Continuing Education. Makes 360 degree turn

Motor pool sets example for all

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"When I got here in June 1981, this was the worst motor pool I had seen. On every inspection they had failed; maintenance operation, tools, repair parts, POL, maintenance of vehicles, everything.

"The mechanics were untrained and there was new equipment outside in all stages of disrepair. It was awful, but also good.

"We started from the bottom and turned this place into a top-notch motor pool. It's something to be proud of."

When CWO4 Clayton McClanahan, maintenance supervisor, begins talking about the 533rd Transportation Company motor pool, he can't seem to stop talking about how they were able to achieve a 360 degree turn-around.

"My maintenance NCO, Staff Sergeant Monroe Sapp and I got here around the same time and we had our hands full. First thing we did was train our mechanics.

"Sapp and I were the only ones who knew how to work on the equipment here. It took us eight months to wade through that."

McClanahan explained that he and Sapp would take a mechanic, one-on-one, and train him on a certain phase of the equipment until he had been trained on all the different areas of the equipment.

"Sometimes we would have to go back three or four times, but eventually the mechanics got it. We then appointed one of the super well-trained mechanics as our quality control.

"Whenever one of the mechanics finished a repair, the quality control would go and check it. It worked. Finally, we all had confidence that the mechanics could do what they were supposed to be doing," McClanahan continued.

After the training, McClanahan and Sapp began to look at the facility and ways to improve morale.

"We painted and made a lounge area for the mechanics. Sgt. Sapp is a carpenter and he made shelves for our files, shelves for our repair parts, shelves for all the personnel, kind of like individual mail boxes.

"He also made bulletin boards; we got old lockers from PDO for the mechanics to lock up personal belongings and we got old dining facility tray carts from PDO and used them for the mechanics' tool boxes and heavy spare parts," McClanahan said.

Things did start looking up. By February 1983, the 533rd motor pool received an outstanding on their annual IG inspection and was rated the best maintenance section on post.

"Shortly after the IG, the general (Maj. Gen. Wetzel) made an unannounced inspection of the motor pool. This place was full of equipment, the mechanics were busy doing their jobs and after a tour of the shop and briefing, the general was impressed.

"Then he had all the major commmanders to come over here to see our operation. The general decided all the motor pools on post should be set up like this one."

As a result, the unit had visitors constantly; including tours and briefings to Infantry commanders Army-wide, here for school; company commanders, battalion commanders, entire motor pool crews and recently a company commander and maintenance supervisor from Fort Riley, Kansas.

"It has certainly kept us on our toes. The mechanics began to take professional pride in their work and this motor pool. Their morale improved; we got them out of so many details, promotions started coming through and they kept the motor pool in top form — then and now," McClanahan continued.

Also, during a 36th Engineer Group competition, nine times out of 12, a mechanic from the 533rd has won Mechanic of the Month. Also, the mechanics there have won several Soldier of the Month competitions.

"We've got some good people here, some of the best mechanics I've seen," McClanahan said.

In fact, during no notice rollouts all their equipment have moved and then passed a random inspection afterwards. Equipment taken on statewide cargo hauls have functioned without problems and have continued to pass post command inspections.

"In 44 days, we had no equipment deadlined. In 33 months, no injuries. We got a letter of commendation from the post safety folks and we've had only three fender-benders in more than 400,000 miles of driving," McClanahan finished.

Bouncing back from being the worst, the 533rd is doing what it does best — keepin' the trucks roll-

Marshal's Viewpoint

MPs urge soldiers to mark valuable possessions

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

Despite continuous emphasis and educational efforts, the military police are still finding a large amount of property reported stolen on Fort Benning Military Reservation is either not marked or the markings are not protected.

Engraving your property with unique identification markings and recording serial numbers will not prevent it from being stolen — but taking these steps will tremendously increase the chances that stolen property can be positively identified, recovered and the thief apprehended.

The amount of stolen property recovered from pawn shops in the Columbus-Phenix City area every week is proof in itself of the value of being able to identify and trace individual property. It is also an acknowledged fact that thieves are reluctant to steal property which they know to be marked, because such items are difficult to pawn or "fence," and are much more likely to lead to their own identification and apprehension.

Personnel living in the barracks are reminded that USAIC Regulation 190-13 requires them to have high value property marked (stereos, television sets) and the markings recorded on two copies of Fort Benning Form 20. One copy of this form is to be retained on file in the unit orderly room and updated as new items are acquired or disposed of. The second copy is to be retained by the individual and updated as necessary. Engraving instruments should be available at each unit for marking of property.

Service members and their families living on or off post quarters are also encouraged to insure that their property can be identified. Engraving instruments may be signed out from the Provost Marshal Crime Prevention Section (545-7154/4164), building 215 for this purpose.

Once you have marked your property, itemize and record the property marked and the identification markings used. Maintain this record in a secure location away from the property itself, and periodically update the list.

Taking photographs of the items and maintaining the photographs with the property is an additional measure which may also assist law enforcement authorities in its recovery if stolen.

The military police urge you to protect your property by practicing good crime prevention techniques and being prepared to assist us in the recovery of stolen property by furnishing us with serial numbers, identification markings and a good description of the item.

Crime doesn't pay

Specialist four Jeffrey L. Holmes, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate), was sentenced to a dishorable discharge, confinement at hard labor for five years, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and reduction to the lowest grade for robbery.

Specialist four Giacinto J. Amaranto, Combat Support Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for two months, forfeiture of $300 per month for two months and reduction to the lowest grade for AWOL.

Sick leave privilege shouldn't be abused

By John Hillsman

John Smith, an Army civilian at Fort Belvoir, Va., retired at age 60 with 25 years of service and an average salary of $24,000. As for sick leave, he has managed to stay within the Army's goal, using about 64 hours per year. That means that he has accumulated more than 1,000 hours of sick leave for life, just as if he had put about $3,000 in a retirement annuity.

This "fund" was built up without a cent of his money. If John had not used any sick leave at all he would have increased his monthly annuity by about $50.

Of course, Mr. Smith is the impossible-to-find "average" man.

Most Army civilians know about the privileges of sick leave, but many don't know what a boon it can be.

Civilian federal employees earn four hours of sick leave credit each two-week pay period. Since there are 26 pay periods in each calendar year, this comes out to 13 days of sick leave credit each year.

Unused sick leave is credited for additional length of service at the time of retirement. Each 22 days of sick leave credit is counted as an additional month of service.

Those who conserve most of their sick leave during their working years will be able to add additional time to length of service when they retire. This will be reflected in an increase in retirement annuity.

The following figures give an idea of approximately how much additional time can be added to length of service at retirement. An unused sick leave balance of 3,120 hours adds 18 months; 2,002 hours adds 11 months; 1,560 hours adds nine months and 1,044 hours adds six months.

Sick leave is provided for use when an employee is incapacitated for duty. It is a privilege that should not be abused. Saving sick leave is a favor for the family. The family shares in its benefits.

They also share the disadvantages when sick leave is used needlessly or imprudently. A lengthy illness, when sick leave is depleted, points out the truth of that statement.

Remember, 13 days of sick leave is credited to the account annually with no limitation on the amount which can be saved. It is free of charge, no dues, no deduction, no premiums, and costs nothing to get.

To determine what kind of dollar protection you and your family have in the event you suffer a serious illness or accident, multiply your hourly rate of pay by the number of hours of sick leave you currently have to your credit. The result of this simple exercise could prove to be of comfort or concern to you. In either event, it should point up the financial protection sick leave can provide if used for its intended purpose.

The use of sick leave is a matter which deserves serious reflection. Employees hurt themselves and their families when they abuse the sick leave privilege.

The sick leave privilege shouldn't be abused. When a definite pattern of employee sick leave abuse has been established, supervisors have the authority to issue a letter to the employee requiring a physician's certificate for each absence, regardless of the duration. Failure on the part of the employee to abide by this requirement may be cause for disciplinary action.

Additional information concerning the accrual and use of sick leave and annual leave is contained in USAECFB Regulation 690-630. Unanswered questions on leave administration may be referred to the Management-Employee Relations (MER) Branch, Civilian Personnel Office.

Many 'jodies' received; contest deadline nears

The United States Army Infantry Center's cadence contest is in full swing. A total of 60 entries have been received from around the world as of last Friday.

Due to the overwhelming response of the contest thus far, the deadline has been extended until Feb. 28.

The contest is open to Army personnel world-wide, their family members and Department of the Army civilians.

Cadences have to be original and inoffensive.

A few examples of the originality of the cadences that have been received so far include chants that deal with orthamologists, Grenada, Lebanon and even tankers.

The contest has been divided into three categories: mechanized, light infantry and general.

The deadline for submission is Feb. 28. Cadences should be sent to:

USAIC PAO
ATTN: BAYONET
Building 4, Room 601
Fort Benning, Ga. 31905

Entries need to include the author's name, unit, return address and what category the contestant wishes to compete in.

Trophies will be awarded to the first place winners in each category. In addition, copies of those cadences chosen as the top four in each division will be framed and presented to the winners. (USAIC PAO)

'Demons' back in training; quickly into Army routine

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This story is part of the continuing saga of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and are now in their sixth week of training.)

"Christie suspension!" yelled the instructor.

"Enemy!" shouted the poncho-clad soldiers in the bleachers.

"Rounded turret!" the instructor said, pointing to another part of his chart.

"Enemy!" was the Delta Demons' answer.

The third platoon of D-8-2 was back in training after the long Christmas holidays. Sitting in the cold bleachers while instructors passed out information at a rapid-fire pace — for them — nothing had changed.

For some of the soldiers their whole lives had changed.

"I got married." said Pvt. Douglas J. Grant, ignoring the suppressed smiles of the rest of the members of the second squad. The Grants had originally planned on being married in the spring. They had been going together, according to Grant, "for years and years" and the Christmas leave just seemed "like the right time."

The weather played a large part in the plans of the second squad when they took off for the holidays. The subzero temperatures and snowstorms kept most of them from completing the plans that they had for the holidays. Pvt. Robert Harrington is taking a lot of ribbing because he returned without the promised venison. He answers back to the rest of the squad members, saying, "The temperature was below zero and the deer just weren't out." He ducks his head when his peers remind him that deer do not hibernate.

The weather didn't ruin everyone's plans, Pvt. Robert Ferguson went home to the sun belt of Arizona and spent part of his leave fishing. His squad members accuse him of telling "fish stories" when he tells them he caught 17 trout while taking a break from the Army. The weather was not Pvt. Jonathan Giffin's worry as he claims that his Christmas plan was, "to spend as much time as possible with my girlfriend."

The "Delta Demons" returned from holidays to face another Army Physical Readiness Test. The third platoon surprised themselves by scoring higher, after the holidays, then before they went on leave. A 10-mile road march, with the drill sergeants leading the way, got them back in harness for the weeks ahead.

Last Friday six of them were on KP, "busting suds" while the remainder of the company was on Warner Range learning to operate the M203, the Army's combination rifle and grenade launcher.

It was back to routine for the weekend and Monday, with the platoon performing barrier guard for the battalion. Tuesday morning, the platoon was drenched by rain as they learned how to identify and ambush tanks on Duke Range.

Tips aid in preparing for semiannual PT test

Start getting ready for the next semiannual Army Physical Readiness Test immediately after completing the last one. If you're not used to regular exercise, you'll probably be a little stiff and sore. It's a good idea to rest for a day or two afterwards. Use this time to think about your performance. Analyze your PT test. Think about what you would like to do on your next one and resolve to do it.

The best way to train for any performance task is to do it in your training. Center your training program around pushups, situps and running. Other exercises and activities can be added to your exercise program for variety, but to perform well in these three events, you have to practice them. How much you practice depends on how much you want to improve. Do you want to pass, score well or max the PT test? How did you do on your last one?

Situps and pushups are mainly measures of strength. Research studies have shown that training as little as once a week will enable you to improve your strength. Obviously, with a little more training (2-3 times per week) you would expect more improvement. Practicing more than that probably will not benefit you enough to make it worthwhile. An important part of any training program is rest. Many beginners overlook this aspect.

Unlike the strength events of pushups and situps, running is an aerobic (oxygen requiring) event. And unlike the strength-requiring events, running improvement is unlikely to occur with training once a week. For aerobic training, research has shown that a minimum of three times per week is essential for 20-30 minutes each time. How fast you run when you train depends on a number of factors such as how well you feel (i.e., tiredness, stiffness), weather (hot, cold, humid, etc.) and your own capabilities.

Start training at a pace that is about 2-3 minutes slower than the time of your two-mile run during the PT test. For example, if you ran the two-mile test in 16 minutes 30 seconds, practice running two miles in 18-19 minutes. Gradually increase the time at this pace to 20-30 minutes.

Two things start to happen during regular training. First, your pace will get progressively faster. Second, in order to exercise for 20-30 minutes you will have to run farther. It is not necessary to run at maximum speed each time. Many people recommend you run with someone of similar capability and at a pace which enables you to talk or carry on a conversation without becoming out of breath. Periodically, run a time trial. Run two miles as fast as you can and record your time once a month. Do not be disappointed because you can expect to do better during that test. The fact that you are being tested should provide you with a little "boost of adrenaline." The value of a time trial is the experience at running fast and the positive reinforcement for your training.

Six months of training three times per week for 20-30 minutes each time should enable you to show marked improvement in your performance. All training sessions should include a 5-10 minute warm-up period and cool-down period of stretching, calisthenics and walking.

After a few months you may want to increase the number of times you train per week. Another technique is to include some interval training in your program. Alternating fast running and slow jogging over short distances helps improve speed and should be beneficial for the two-mile run. Interval training should be run one or two times per week. The distance run should be about one-quarter mile initially.

Start your interval workout with your regular warm-up.

As you continue interval training each week, the workouts become easier. Gradually increase your speed for the quarter-mile or increase the distance of the repetitions to one-half mile.

All this training will be wasted if you do not take special precautions in the days immediately preceeding the PT test. Rest up for a few days before the test. Do not do any hard workouts!

Limit yourself to easy workouts. Marathoners routinely rest for a few days before a big race as do boxers before a big fight. Get a couple of good nights of sleep preceding the test. Avoid excess amounts of food and alcoholic beverages and drink plenty of water especially in the summer so that you are well hydrated on the day of the test.

On test day, wear comfortable clothing and shoes that are well broken in. Do not wear a new pair to run the test. If the test is in the morning, eat very little breakfast if any. Avoid eggs, fruits and juices because they tend to give some people diarrhea. Get to the test site early enough to allow some time to warm-up.

When the test starts, you should feel a little "boost of adrenaline." This should help you perform the situps and pushups, and can also help you on the two- mile run. During the two-mile run, you should feel like you are holding back just a little during the first mile of the run. An even pace should give you your fastest time. It is better to have a "kick" left during the last half-mile than to be exhausted at the end of the first half-mile.

Once the test is over, analyze your performance and begin planning for the next one!

The Bouton Heights/Davis Hill Community Life program is headed up by MSgt. Adolfo Salazar. He is the community life NCO assigned to the housing area.

A second termer here, first assigned to the post in 1975, Salazar acts as a direct tie between Bouton Heights/Davis Hill and all of the major agencies on post.

"My most important job is to direct individuals with specfic problems to the proper agencies around the post," stated the 24-year active duty veteran. "With the help of my 22 area coordinators, we try to assist individuals in our housing area so that their problems can be corrected in a timely manner."

Salazar sees his job as a challenge. He finds it a change dealing with soldier's family members instead of soldiers.

"It is a good experience for me. The involvement with people, officer as well as enlisted, family members, will add to my leadership capabilities," continued Salazar.

Compared to previous assignments in the states and in Germany, Salazar believes Benning's present Community Life Program is the best he has seen.

"In the past, community life has been run by Army Community Service. Here, Gen. Lindsay has directed resources and personnel to assist the Community Life Office and help it to develop, such as assigning major units to support each housing area. The 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Gp. is assigned to Bouton Heights/Davis Hill. In doing so, he has separated ACS and CLO," added the Indianhead Terrace resident. "This separation has made both departments function better."

He also has seen more community involvement under the new program.

"People are more aware of the program now, due to the structure of the new program and the manditory incoming briefings," concluded Salazar. "By being more aware, they are more involved. This has made the communities better. Community involvment is the key to a successful program.

Know heart attack warning signs

Knowing how it feels to have a heart attack and what to do if it happens can save your life — or the life of someone close to you.

Here are the symptoms of heart attack:

- Uncomfortable pressure, fullness, squeezing or pain in the center of the chest, lasting two minutes or more.
- Severe pain, dizziness, fainting, sweating, nausea or shortness of breath may also occur.

Here's what to do:

- Stop activity and sit or lie down.
- Act at once if pain lasts for two minutes or more. Call the emergency medical service, or have someone take you to the nearest hospital emergency room.

Astronaut will be first Army soldier in space

HOUSTON — Astronaut Robert L. Stewart, 41, will be the first soldier launched into space.

Stewart's presence on board the space shuttle "Challenger," scheduled for liftoff on Jan. 29, will underline the Army's new commitment to space exploration. "We've got to be active participants rather than sideline spectators," he said.

During the eight-day mission, Stewart will test the "manned maneuvering unit," a one-man, nitrogen gas-propelled backpack that snaps on to the spacesuit's portable life-support system. NASA plans the test as a dress rehearsal for the upcoming "solar max" repair mission in April.

"I'll be the world's smallest spacecraft," Stewart said from his NASA office here. "On the mission's fifth day, Bruce McCandless (a Navy astronaut) and I will test the unit from 150 and 300 feet away from the orbitor."

If Stewart's tests are successful, NASA hopes astronauts on the April mission will be able to leave their craft to repair a satellite disabled during an earlier launch.

Stewart will ride center seat in the shuttle as flight engineer. His planned flight gear will include two pairs of Army astronaut wings and a replica of the Army flag.

"The Army gave me a firm foundation in flying, engineering and equipment evaluation skills," he said. "The space program is the new frontier. It's an outgrowth of my love of flying." Stewart has logged some 5,500 flight hours in 38 types of airplanes and helicopters.

He already hopes to "go up again" after his first shuttle ride. "This isn't a one-shot deal," he said. "For an Army person, this offers a legitimate career field. Right now we're entering an era of practical use of space — both for civilian and military purposes. The Army can't afford to be left out of it."

Stewart is a 1964 ROTC graduate of the University of Southern Mississippi. (ARNews)

Don't be fooled by weather; cold injuries can be prevented

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Even though the days for the past week have been mild, don't think that the danger of getting cold weather injuries has past. According to Col. William Morgan, chief of preventive medicine, injuries can occur if temperatures drop to 50 degrees or below.

"It's not just the temperature. Wind chill can cause injuries too. For instance, if it's 5 degrees and the wind is calm, say 7 knots, the wind chill is minus 25 and flesh can then freeze in one minute."

Morgan said that unit commanders have been good about checking the wind chill and keeping informed of the weather.

"Anyone can call Lawson Army Air Field for up-to-date weather information and the wind chill equivalent temperature at 545-5281. The Air Force weather squadron puts together that information."

Also, Morgan said, people should be aware that cold water can cause injuries too. "Clothes that are wet or damp lose their insulation factor 30 times faster than air. That's why dressing for the weather is important.

"You need to have extra socks and change often to avoid getting trenchfoot and immersion foot. Also, you need to inspect feet and any exposed areas often.

"Wearing several layers of clothing with pockets of air between the layers can be helpful. That way, as the temperature rises, you can peel off outer layers.

Morgan also stressed that alcohol and smoking are increased factors of getting cold weather injuries.

There are ways to treat and prevent those kind of injuries. "If you get an injury to any part of your body, re-warm the area, not by rubbing which can cause more damage, but by wrapping it or putting it next to your body for heat. Also, if someone is injured they should be taken to a medical facility on a litter, not by walking," he said.

"We've been lucky here because the commanders and especially the drill sergeants are very concerned about cold weather injury prevention. We do go out to units and give classes on the subject. In fact, we can give anyone information, if they call us at 545-1144.

"In the past three years, we've had a few injuries such as blisters and mild frostbite, " Morgan said.

So don't let the mild weather fool you. Precautions can prevent cold weather injuries.

Visting commander praises Benning profile PT program

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's physical training program for soldiers with profiles may have potential for adoption Army-wide according to the commanding general of the Health Services Command.

Major General Floyd W. Baker made his comment during a visit to Briant Wells Gym last Friday morning to observe the program first hand.

"I'm here to find out if there is more that I or Health Services Command should be doing to foster it more within our area of responsibility, or if I should give any kind of push for it to be adopted Army-wide," said General Baker.

The general spoke with individual soldiers who participate in the program. While he did not find universal overwhelming enthusiasm, Baker said the majority of the comments were positive.

"One soldier I talked to has had a profile and he felt he couldn't really be part of the infantry since he has a profile. But profile PT has given him an opportunity to save face in a program with a group of other people who have similar problems. That's a big plus. It gives those with profiles a chance to get away from the stigma of goofing off and ghosting."

Baker says he doesn't see why the portion of the program for those with routine profiles can't be adopted by units on their own provided the facilities and equipment are available. "It also means a big investment by the unit in manpower. However, that investment is not so great if it can be done pretty much on a decentralized basis. From the medical standpoint . . . it's a matter of getting our staffs oriented towards positive profiling. Instead of keying in on what the soldier can't do, they should emphasize what he can do."

As for the part of the program that concerns pregnant soldiers, Baker says he doesn't see any risks. "However, from the medical standpoint, there may be some limitations. Someone who is an obstetrician or well versed in obstetrics needs to be there to supervise that portion of the program. It just so happens that is one of our critical specialties in the Army, and not many places will be able to devote the time or the personnel."

Baker said he feels very positive about the benefits of the program.

Post leadership courses soon to combine

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Primary Non-commissioned Officer's Course and the Primary Leadership Course will be combined into the Primary Leadership Development Course starting April 15th.

The change takes place as part of an Army-wide effort to enhance the leadership development of its junior non-coms. The change, according to CSM John W. Propst, commandant, Fort Benning Non-commissioned Officer's Academy, will combine the training of junior NCOs "into a common core."

In the past, students at the academy attended separate courses, with the combat arms soldiers being trained one way and the combat service and combat service support soldiers being trained another.

The new course, designed by the Sergeant's Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas, addresses the Army's need for skilled leaders without regard for military specialty.

"Little over a year ago," said Propst, "the Sergeant's Major Academy got tasked to provide a common core for the development of junior leaders. The academy conducted surveys to find out just what skills the junior leader had to have in order to do the job.

"Their research from the field led them to design a program of instruction for the PLDC that would be used for any MOS at skill level one and two."

When a soldier completes the PLDC, according to Propst, he will have knowledge in basic map reading and be able to instruct and conduct physical training. The course will also teach drill and ceremonies, and radio/telephone operation and procedures. The purpose of the course is to develop the soldiers' skills in leadership and handling squad-sized units.

"When a soldier leaves the course," explained Propst, "he will have been taught the Battalion Training Management System and have completed a trainer workshop. He'll learn how to prepare and conduct performance-oriented training.

"He'll be able to train his soldiers in any environment — a cook can prepare and conduct a period of instruction inside a dining facility — a mechanic will be able to conduct training in a motor pool and an Infantryman can do it out in the field."

The new course will increase the training time of the soldier from 19 training days to 25.

"With the new course," commented Propst, "We will be providing the Army with a more well-rounded soldier in all career fields."

Dressing properly on race day helps avoid delays

By Bob Cline
Post Runner

Today, I will give you a few thoughts on dressing for the marathon and half-marathon. These are small details; however, failure to heed a few simple rules could cause you a lot of unnecessary misery on race day.

January weather in Georgia is difficult, if not impossible, to predict. The Callaway Gardens Marathon is a good case in point. One year it was hot while the next it rained. Still again on another race day, the marathon had to be postponed due to an ice storm. The moral of this story is you should be prepared for all types of weather race day.

Begin with the types of clothing you intend to wear. With the exception of severe cold weather, a pair of running shorts and a singlet or T-shirt should be sufficient for the race. I will sometimes wear an old T-shirt under a singlet if the weather is cold and buy a pair of cheap gloves.

If it becomes warmer during the race you can throw away the gloves and T-shirt without missing a stride. Remember not to wear any undergarments that can't be thrown away. You don't want to have to carry anything during a marathon.

You should rub vaseline on any areas where you tend to chafe. If you are prone to runners' nipple, which is an irritation of the nipple caused by rubbing of the shirt, use band-aids to cover them.

Don't wear anything new or that hasn't been broken in. This is especially true of new shoes. Nothing brings out the worst in shoes as a marathon. If you blister easily, anticipate where a blister might occur and protect the area before you start. There are several good products on the market for this, such as Second Skin or mole skin.

Unless you are one of the few who will be racing the marathon, I would not wear racing flats. Run in the shoes that you train in.

If after your precautions, you still develop a "hot spot" during the race, stop and protect the area before it becomes a major problem. Double tie your laces when you put on your shoes.

If it becomes a hot day, adjust your pace accordingly and wear the minimum required. You will have to wear some type of top with a number pinned to it. Some runners carry an extra pair of socks with them on hot days and change socks at the halfway point.

So, when you arrive at the race site, you should have with you at a minimum — vaseline, band-aids, mole skin (or other similar product), extra shoelaces, safety pins, toilet paper and dry clothing.

Captain Borja, the race director, is currently planning to have some type of facility available to store personal property during the race. There will also be a limited number of lockers available. Bring your own lock. Borja stressed that Fort Benning cannot be responsible for lost or stolen articles.

Aerobics effective exercise for losing weight

By J. Kirt Herzberger
HSC Mercury

FORT MONROE, Va. — We in this country are so concerned about losing weight that we don't think about what kind of weight we are losing. When we diet, the only thing that seems to be important is seeing the readings on the scale lower.

There are even nationally known weight loss organizations where success is reflected only by how much weight one loses. Unfortunately, while losing fat, most people are also losing muscle. Of all the calories burned in the body 90 percent are consumed by the muscles.

Muscles can be thought of as the body's engine. When the total muscle mass of the body is reduced through weight loss, the need for calories is also reduced. This is one reason why people have a tendency to put on weight faster then ever, once they stop dieting. Because the body then requires fewer calories to run on, due to the loss of muscle tissue, there are more excess calories available to turn into fat. Dieting, by itself, only defeats the purpose of keeping fat off for good.

What then is the answer? The answer for ultimately curing obesity is exercise and the most efficient exercises for this purpose are called aerobics. We've all heard this term before, but briefly, aerobic exercise is defined as steady, uninterrupted exercise of sufficient intensity and length that it brings about a training effect on the body.

The key words in talking about aerobics are intensity and duration. The intensity is reflected by an appropriate heart rate, which is somewhat dependent on age, while the duration must be a minimum of 12 to 15 minutes at least three days a week.

When we increase the size of the body's engine, it burns calories at a faster rate throughout the day. This does not mean we need to have big bulky muscles, but rather it means making lean the muscles we already have.

Aerobic exercise is also the only form of exercise which can result in the breakdown of fat so that it can be burned as fuel. "Stop-and-go" activities such as sprinting, racquetball, calisthenics and golf burn only muscle glycogen and not fat. (TNS)

Morale Support Activities Division's Outdoor Recreation Services is sponsoring a trip to the Feb. 4 Atlanta Hawks versus the Philadelphia 76ers professional basketball game in the Omni. The $15 price includes a $10 seat and roundtrip bus transportation. The deadline for making reservations at building 247 is Jan. 20. The trip is open to military, DA civilians and their family members. For more information, contact Pat Cooper at 545-4155.

Army player goes to Georgetown

FORT LEE, Va. — Ronnie Highsmith, a specialist four with the 85th Combat Support Hospital, will leave the Army to play basketball for nationally ranked Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

Highsmith, a two-time all Army player and center for the post team, signed a letter of intent with Georgetown in November. "They have a very disciplined team and the coach stresses education. My first priority is education, and Georgetown has a very good academic program," he said.

"Highsmith is a strong rebounder with a great inside game," said post team coach MSgt. Robert McNealey. "His leaping ability is tremendous, he's probably as good as any of the professionals in that department. I think he'll make it at Georgetown. He's easy to coach; he'll do anything you tell him and always gives 130 percent."

Sports officials here report Highsmith averaged 18.4 points and 11.4 rebounds a game last year with a 69 percent shooting average from the field. He's had offers from other schools, including Clemson, Virginia, Wake Forest and Temple.

Marathon applications available

Runners can pick up applications for the Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon at Columbus and Phenix City sport shops, the Georgia Welcome Center, the VFW, all post gyms and at the Macon Road Pizza Hut. For more information, call SFC John Farrow at 544-6114/6461.

Meets with 36th Engineer Group

Forces Command CSM tours Benning

By Timothy Torok
36th Engineer Group

Command Sergeant Major Oscar L. Barker, the top non-commissioned officer for the United States Army Forces Command (FORSCOM), Fort McPherson, Ga., visited the 36th Engineer Group, on Jan. 12.

"I'm making it a point to visit all the FORSCOM units, especially if they are on Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) posts," said Barker.

The tour began at York Field, in front of Infantry Hall, where Barker and CSM Earl R. Brown, from the 36th Engr. Gp., boarded a helicopter and were flown to A Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion's field mess site.

The field mess site is a tactical dining facility set up under a canopy of camouflage netting. The cooks are there to prepare breakfast and lunch for the engineer soldiers working at the military operations on urban terrain (MOUT) site. "Our field mess crew is currently getting ready for the 16th annual Phillip A. Connelly dining facility awards. We are representing Fort Benning in the field mess category," said SFC Efrain E. Manglona, the NCOIC.

While at the field mess site, the command sergeant major was given a tour and briefing and then sat down to personally taste-test the food.

The next stop on the tour was the MOUT site. After a short walk through a muddy field, the FORSCOM command sergeant major was escorted to the roof of a three-story building and given a briefing by CSM Edmund A. Armstrong from the 43rd Engineer Battalion.

The MOUT site is a replica of a small German village being constructed by B, C and D Companies, 43rd Engineer Battalion. The village will be used to train infantry soldiers in urban warfare.

"The Army should let its engineer soldiers do more construction projects like this. They're doing a very professional job, and they've saved the Army quite a bit of money," commented Barker.

A short helicopter flight then took him to Engineer Landing, on the Chattahoochee River. Here he met with the crew of a bridge boat from the 586th Engineer Company.

When he finished reviewing the river operations, he was shown the power and the maneuverability of the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion. The 533rd is currently in competition for the FORSCOM Transportation Company of the Year Award.

"If you keep up the work that you're doing now," he commented to the company, "I'll be back to give you that first place trophy."

The tour was concluded with an informal meeting at the Main NCO Club.

We are here to serve you

Robert McClain

I've known I wanted to be a journalist from a very young age. The lure of Pulitzer Prizes, Emmys, instant fame and the high salaries paid some journalists sparked my deep interest in the field.

But in my quest for eventual fame and fortune, I seem to have temporarily forgotten what we, as journalists, are here to do — report, inform, write and sometimes have fun doing it.

I've looked seriously at my priorities because I found myself losing touch with the people I'm suppose to be serving.

But I am not alone, too many of my fellow journalists (both military and civilian) seem to often forget why we are here.

Like teachers, police officers and doctors, we are here to serve the public. We are here to write so people can better understand the world around them. We are not here to write about and photograph events for our scrapbooks or for awards.

I personally know reporters who will take special interest in a story, not to better inform the readers, but hoping it will win an award. I also know journalists who will promote their stories to award officials in hope for honors.

We as military journalists are not often accused of altering the truth in the pursuit of honors, but civilian journalists often are.

Civilian journalists too often can lose sight of the truth and what's fair in search of personal gain or glory.

Sometimes reporters can get so caught up in a story, they can lose all sense of morality and sympathy.

The actions of journalists after the 239 servicemen were killed in a terroist attack in Beruit can only serve to amplify my statement. I witnessed reporters invade the privacy of the survivors of the dead servicemen as they mourned the loss of their loved ones. I witnessed reporters abusing the survivors with cameras and microphones, asking thoughtless questions seeking to record their grief, all this in pursuit of a page one story.

Our goal as journalists should be to provide fair, accurate, balanced and responsible reporting to our readers. We should think in terms of public good and fight for that — not for the mere lure of personal gain or glory that brings so many young people like myself into this field.

Uncast vote — a vote lost forever

Make your voice heard — vote!

Washington — Ironic, isn't it, that in this nation of abundant freedoms, we have one freedom that suffers from too little exercise: the right to vote.

Just as the human body's lack of exercise tends to stifle growth and prolong weakness, so too do non-voting members of the body politic lose fitness to respond to society's needs.

Of course, we let the political and social scientists try to explain why we the utmost free aren't being all we can be at the ballot box. And while that's going on, we get the usual pep talks at work and in the media on why it's so important to spread the word on voting.

With the presidental election year on the horizon, we once again will see a campaign for voter registration and balloting. Commanders and their voting assistance officers at Fort Benning will receive guidance on how to support the campaign. Supplies of absentee-balloting forms will be made available, and announcements on general and special elections will show up in future editions of the BAYONET.

But with all that hype from on high, will the voter turnout for 1984 be much different from the years before. The answer depends somewhat on how the individual unit commander perceives his/her role in promoting voting awareness. Lip service — or just going through the motions — won't be enough.

But the answer also depends on self-motivation of the prospective voter. Just as with one's daily personal grooming, good voting habits stem from regular self-discipline and from a sense of responsibity. Commanders can help make the difference in '84 by sharing with their troops this commitment to one of the free world's finest traditions: Voting for the candidate of one's choice, voting for (or against) a public proposal, voting on a question of financial expenditure, or voting in response to a referendum — all the while remembering that a vote uncast becomes a vote lost forever. (AR News)

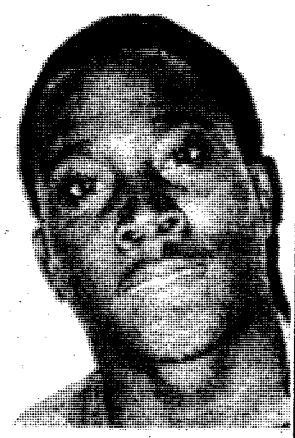
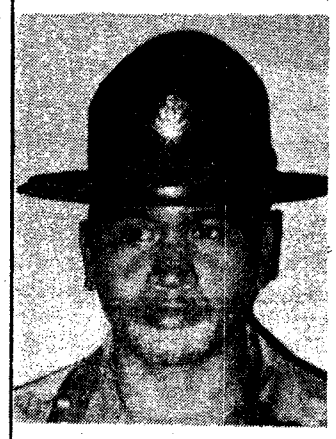
Why do you like to run and will you be participating in the Infantry Marathon?

SSgt. William E. Duvall, C Co., ITG—I like to run because it keeps me healthy and makes me feel good. I'm not going to run in this marathon, I don't think I would make it, but someday I would like to.



Sgt. Ronald Nealy, CSC, 2-69th Armor—I like to run because it keeps me in shape and it's good for stamina. I ran in a marathon in Germany and would like to run in the Infantry Marathon, but I will be leaving post soon and won't be here then.



SFC Andrew Pancho, B-4-2—I run because it keeps me in shape and it's part of my job. During the marathon, I'll be on a cycle break and plan on spending as much time as possible with my family.

PFC Anthony Townsend, HHC, ITG—I run because I have to run. I will be helping set up for the marathon so I won't be able to participate.

Benning nursery tests new Friday hours

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

New Friday opening hours began a two-week trial this morning when Tot Town Nursery opened at 5:30 a. m.

"At the last Commanding General's Advisory Council meeting, a number of people, mainly single parents, asked if we could open early. Many said they didn't have anyone to leave their children with during the Friday morning run. Since we are are not rigid in our ways and like to work with the community, we agreed to open early to see if there is sufficient response to change our hours permanently, explained Anne Lourentzos, chairman of the board for Tot Town Nursery.

"In order for the nursery to meet expenses as a result of the earlier opening hour (normally the nursery opens at 6:30 a. m.), at least five children must be left at the nursery. This is the minimum needed to cover the cost of paying for one of the women to come in to care for the children. However, from the number of people who made the request at the meeting, we are confident the trial will be successful," said Mrs. Lourentzos.

Tot Town Nursery is a non-profit organization which has been sponsored by the Daughters of the United States Army (DUSA) since 1958. The building that houses the nursery was constructed with monies raised by the DUSA. After its completion, the organization deeded it to the Army.

"We are also especially proud of the fact that the nursery operates in the black and the only direct Army support we receive is for utilities and building maintenance. Everything else, from buying equipment to landscaping of the grounds, is taken care of by us," said Ida Barnes, nursery supevisor.

Unlike other similar day care centers, Tot Town Nursery does not have to hold special fund raisers to get operating funds, according to Mrs. Lourentzos.

"Our fees cover all our expenses. So much so that we don't have to pinch pennies when new toys are needed or we want to buy a special educational kit for the children," Mrs. Lourentzos said.

"The nursery employs 42 trained child care specialists on a part-time basis," said Mrs. Barnes. "The number of people working at any given time depends on the number of children at the nursery.

On an average, we care for about 200 children a day. Of that, nearly 50 are here for the full day since their parents work," explained Mrs. Barnes.

The nursery accepts children ranging in age from 3 months to 12 years old.

To keep the children occupied, the nursery has a full range of creative programs ranging from story telling sessions to classes on recognizing letters. Also all you can eat hot meals are offered to the children, according to Mrs. Barnes.

Aside from the trial Friday opening hours, Tot Town Nursery operates from 6:30 a. m. to 6:30 p. m. Monday through Thursday. On Fridays, the nursery closes at 1 a. m. Saturday hours are from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m.. Besides the main nursery, an annex is open at the Main Mall, Tuesday through Friday from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Carpool services are also offered for children attending Patch, White and Dexter schools.

MACH physical therapy clinic helps get soldiers back on feet

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Being in pain can make even the best-humored person vocal. There's just a tendency to let others know how you're feeling. The folks at the physical therapy clinic in Martin Army Community Hospital hear all those negative feelings, but they also hear from the positive side too.

"We get a lot of positive feedback, because people come here in need and we're able to help them feel better," explained Maj. Richard Schreck, physical therapy clinic chief.

"People come to the clinic with a variety of problems. Rewards and positive feedback come from restoration of function and helping people live and cope with physical disabilities. Our goal is to return an individual to a functional activity level," he added.

Physical therapy uses many different physical agents in treating injury, disease or disability, including ice, heat, electricity and a large emphasis on exercise.

The clinic sees an average of 100-120 outpatients per day and 30-40 inpatients which include trainees, permanent party, retirees and family members.

"Our job is to evaluate the patient and decide whether he is a candidate for therapy or if he needs a profile or a referral to another clinic."

A variety of injuries and medical conditions such as those suffered by stroke patients, pediatric patients, amputees and patients with heart attacks are also treated at the clinic.

"We're often the second stop for patients, having been referred to us from the troop medical clinics, outpatient or another clinic or through family practice.

"We then spend a lot of time in patient education. We talk to the patient and instruct the person on how to help him or herself through home exercises and care," Schreck explained.

He continued by saying that therapists are actively involved in the physical fitness aspect of the Army's total fitness program. They are teaching classes to the units on fitness and injury prevention.

"The physical therapists' role in the Army has changed. We are now more responsible for the evaluation of the patient and the planning of a treatment program. The clinic relies heavily on well trained enlisted and civilian therapy assistants to carry out the treatment programs," Schreck said.

The clinic treats the patients in a large open area, with rooms to the side for privacy, if needed.

"This type setup allows the patients to interact with each other and give support to each other. For instance, one patient may see another with a similar injury and can see the improvements the treatment has accomplished. It helps.

"Also, we may ask a patient to help us with another. We use amputees a lot in getting through to other amputees," he said.

The staff conducts classes twice a week on exercising and weight loss, plus gives individual counseling to those entering the program.

The entire staff works very hard to guide their patients to the highest level of recovery possible.

PLUS loans help parents pay college expenses

The Army Emergency Relief (AER) Educational Assistance Program now includes Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS). The PLUS program was enacted by Congress to allow parents to borrow money to assist in paying post secondary undergraduate expenses of their dependent children.

AER approves and sponsors the loans by paying administrative fees and depositing funds with United Student Aid Funds, Inc. (USA Funds), a private, nonprofit organization which administers and is the guarantor for the loans. This program is in addition to the AER loans available to dependent children under the Federal Guaranteed Student Loan Program and to the limited number of scholarships available under AER's program.

The PLUS loans are available to all Army members, active and retired, and spouses of deceased Army members who are U.S. citizens or permanent residents of the United States. The student for whom the parent is borrowing must be enrolled or accepted for enrollment as at least a halftime undergraduate student in a post-secondary institution approved by the U.S. Department of Education and USA Funds. In addition, both the parent and the student must be free from any obligation to repay a defaulted federal educational grant.

There is no "needs test" for PLUS loans. The parent may borrow a maximum of $3,000 per academic year for each dependent student. The amount of PLUS loans cannot exceed the estimated cost of education for the loan period less other financial aid available for each enrolled student.

The PLUS finance charge is now 12 percent per year interest on the unpaid balance of each loan. The repayment period begins the date the loan is disbursed, with the first payment due within 60 days. Repayment may extend as long as 10 years with the minimum monthly payment being $50.

The Fort Benning AER branch, building 229, has application forms and more information about the program. If you have any questions, they urge you to call them at 545-4043.

Cooks work long hours preparing for competition

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade's Chef of the Quarter competition was held recently with more than 75 people in attendance.

There were nine brigade soldiers taking part in the competition; some, who had planned their courses months in advance.

Specialist 5 Ganett White of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, started his final preparations the evening before at 6:30 and stopped an hour before midnight only to start again at 7 the following morning.

White, with a display of lobsters and Cornish hens, won the competition with 255 points out of a possible score of 280.

White remarked, "I didn't even know how to make biscuits when I first became a cook. It took a lot of practice and a lot of long hours."

Second place was captured by Sp4 Russell Wilson, HHC, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, with 245 points. Tying for third place with 235 points each were PFC Jessie Jones also from HHC, 1-58th, and Sp4 Peter Vasquez, 72nd Engineer Company.

Vasquez felt the competition was "wonderful" because it gave him a chance to see what he could do. Vasquez said he volunteered for the competition. "I wanted to see if I could compete."

Colonel James J. Musselman, brigade commander and chief judge for the competition, said, "It was a great opportunity for the cooks. They did a really fantastic job."

"It took a lot of practice."

Referring to the long hours and dedication the cooks put in to prepare for the event, Musselman commented, "It takes a special type of person to compete in something like this."

All participants received a brigade Certificate of Appreciation. White received a Certificate of Appreciation, a trophy, a four-day pass from his unit and a chance to compete in the post competition. White is looking forward to going to Fort Lee, Va., for the world-wide competition, which, he says, he'll do his best to win.

Mid-termers soon face new reelistment testing

According to officials at the USAIC re-enlistment office, come April 1st, tougher general and skill-qualification testing will greet mid-term soldiers who want to re-enlist.

Effective April 1, trainability requirements for mid-term soldiers will be:

- Those soldiers tested on the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery before Jan. 1, 1976, or on or after Oct. 1, 1980, must have two aptitude area scores (other than GT) of 85 or higher and a GT score of 100 or higher.
- Those soldiers tested on the ASVAB on or after Jan. 1, 1976, but before Oct. 1, 1980, must have two aptitude area scores (other than GT) of 90 or higher and a GT score of 107 or higher.
- Soldiers who verify their SQT with a score of 80 or higher as shown on the individual soldier's report are exempt from all aptitude-area score requirements.
- Soldiers who verify their SQT with a score of 60-79 as shown on the individual soldier's report are exempt from all ASVAB scores except the GT score.
- Soldiers who have no SQT score or who fail to verify the SQT, must meet all score requirements.

Soldiers not on overseas assignment and who fail to meet the above requirements may with general court-martial convening authority be extended until April 1, 1985, for the purpose of being retrained and/or retested to meet the new criteria.

Fort Benning soldiers with questions about the new criteria can call their re-enlistment NCO or call the USAIC re-enlistment office at 545-5649/7387.

Fort Benning Rangers help train police special operations squad

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Seven members of the LaGrange Police Department underwent three days of training at the Fort Benning Ranger Department. The seven men make up LaGrange's Special Operation Squad, a unit designed to react to situations which develop in a heavily populated area or where hostages may be involved.

Eddie Fanning, the officer in charge, described the unit by saying, "A lot of people would probably call us a SWAT team, but due to television, most people think a SWAT team is a group of policemen who run around killing people. That is just not true. So to get away from that stereotype, we came up with the name Special Operation Squad. The initials form S.O.S. to reinforce the idea that we are there to assist the LaGrange community."

The training program came about because the LaGrange Police Department requested and paid for it, according to SFC John Hester, Ranger program coordinator.

"This type of training has been done in the past with other police departments," explained Hester. "Programs such as this allow the civilian authorities and military to tie in together. Both organizations benefit from such programs."

The squad has not been in existence for long. This is only the second time the squad has been able to work together as a group, both times have been during training.

"We all attended the SWAT training program in Atlanta last year," stated Steve Cavender, squad member. "The problem that we have is that we all work in different departments and we all work different shifts. Training programs like this one at Benning and the one in Atlanta allow us to work together as a team."

During the three days of training, the squad received classes on map reading, squad movement techniques, rapelling, how to clear the three basic danger zones, and military operations in an urban terrain. They also received physical training every morning, ranging from a four-mile run to the Darby Queen obstacle course.

"One of the things we learned real quickly was just how out of shape we were," commented squad member Ronny Childs. "I know I am going to be sore for a long time."

The physical training and classes were designed to better prepare the policemen for their graded exercise at the Harmony Church MOUT site.

"We set up two different situations for them," remarked Hester. "During these two exercises, SFC Wayne Hart and SSgt. Gordon Pullen, the two primary instructors during their classes, and myself observed their actions and made written reports of the squads strong points as well as their weaknesses."

The first situation required the team to clear a building occupied by armed criminals. The second pitted the unit against terrorists holding two hostages in a fortified position.

"We learned a lot about the importance of communication," stated officer Quinton Buggs. "It is very important to know where each one of your team members is located and what they can assess from their position."

Quarters receive facelift

The quarters in McGraw Manor and Indianhead Terrace housing areas are getting a face lift. The wooden siding, facia and overhangs are being replaced with vinyl-clad steel siding.

According to the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, the downspouts and gutters are being removed from one-story buildings and are being replaced or repaired on two-story buildings.

The Savannah District Corps of Engineers are handling the two contracts on the family quarters at a combined cost of more than $3 million. (USAIC PAO)

Army vice-chief of staff speaks at AUSA meeting

The Vice-Chief of Staff of the United States Army, General Maxwell R. Thurman, will speak at the general membership meeting of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the United States Army, Thursday at the Columbus Iron Works Trade and Convention Center.

The meeting will start with refreshments at 6:30 p.m. followed by dinner at 7:30. The prescribed uniform will be Army greens for military and coat and tie for civilians.

Tickets are $12.50 per person and are available at the Columbus and Phenix City Chambers of Commerce, downtown banks and sergeants major on post.

General Thurman holds a bachelor degree in chemical engineering from North Carolina State University at Raleigh. He began his distinguished military career in June 1953, when he was commissioned through the Reserve Officer Training Corps.

The general is also a graduate of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, the Army War College, the Ordnance Basic Course and the Basic and Advanced Artillery Schools.

General Thurman served as team chief, Program Development Team/Operations Research Analyst, Office of the Assistant Vice-Chief of Staff, United States Army, from June to November 1970, and as special assistant in the same directorate from November 1970 until February 1973.

He served as commander of division artillery, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., from March 1973 to March 1975, and then was assigned to Fort Sill, Okla., as deputy assistant commandant for Combat and Training Development at the Army Field Artillery School.

From May 1975 until April 1977, he served as deputy chief for Resource Management, Army Training and Doctrine Command. On leaving that position, he became the Army's principle analyst after being selected as director of Program Analyses and Evaluation, Office of the Chief of Staff, Army.

The AUSA general membership meeting is Thursday at 6:30 p.m.

General Thurman became the Army's chief recruiter as Commander, United States Army Recruiting Command in November 1979.

He was promoted to lieutenant general in August 1981, and became the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Department of the Army in August 1981. He assumed the position of Vice-Chief of Staff of the Army upon his promotion to general in June 1983.

General Thurman's decorations include the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, Bronze Star Medal with "V" Device with Oak Leaf Cluster, Meritorious Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Air Medals, the Army Commendation Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster and the Distinguished Service Medal. He also holds a Master Parachutist Badge and the Army General Staff Identification Badge.

Planning is key to having healthful diet

By Brenda Richardson
Clinical Dietitian, MACH

Current media abounds with information on food, nutrition, diets and weight control. How can one sort through the motley of ideas to insure the foods eaten provide a healthful diet?

A healthful diet can be defined as a diet that minimizes the risk of all nutrition-related diseases or problems. This means that the diet must provide all the essential nutrients in adequate amounts and must avoid the problems related to excessive consumption. Finally, the diet must be understood and put into practice.

A healthful diet must have long-range objectives. Chronic diseases, such as coronary heart disease, are not of immediate concern to children, adolescents or young adults, but the antecedents begin at an early age. We have only limited capacity to determine who will eventually be at risk, but most Americans will be at risk for a chronic disease at some point.

Consequently, the objective must be to not only meet immediate nutritional needs but to establish food habits that will be protective throughout a lifetime. The target should be the entire family or the community in which the individual lives rather than each individual.

The guidelines suggested for most Americans are intended for people who are already healthy. No guidelines can guarantee health or well-being. Health depends on many things in addition to diet.

It must be emphasized that good eating habits based on moderation and variety can keep you healthy and even improve your health. Current guidelines for Americans include:

- Eat a variety of foods.
- Maintain ideal weight.
- Avoid too much fat, saturated fat, and cholesterol.
- Eat foods with adequate starch and fiber.
- Avoid too much sugar.
- Avoid too much sodium (salt).
- If you drink alcohol, do so in moderation.

If you're eager to return to civilian life, but reluctant to give up your hard-earned rank and benefits, joining the Army Reserve can give you the best of both worlds.

If you join now, you'll enter the Army Reserve at your present rank. An E-4 with 3 years earns over $1,660 a year part-time. Over $2,000 if you're an E-6 with 6 years' service.

You'll serve just one weekend a month and two weeks a year, usually in the summer. And you'll have PX privileges, credit for retirement, and all other Army Reserve benefits.

You worked hard to get where you are, so why not keep your rank and benefits in Reserve?

Fort Benning residents can get cash for cans

Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company will pay cash to individuals, groups and organizations for all-aluminum beverage cans and other clean aluminum items.

Area residents can redeem their aluminum items every Tuesday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at 1202 Fourth Ave. and every Saturday at Fort Benning in the Post Exchange parking lot from 8:20 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The company pays the public 29 cents per pound for one to 199 pounds and 33 cents per pound for 200 or more pounds of all-aluminum beverage cans and foil items. They also pay 31 cents per pound for miscellaneous and 25 cents per pound for cast aluminum items.

Besides all-aluminum beverage cans, foil, pie plates, frozen food and dinner trays, dip, pudding and meat containers, Reynolds purchases other miscellaneous aluminum items such as siding, gutters, storm door and window frames and lawn furniture tubing. These items should be free of any non-aluminum materials, cut to lengths not exceeding three feet, bundled and not mixed with cans.

Aluminum castings include pots and pans, barbecue grills, lawn mower housings and some transmission housings. (Metcalf Associates)

Community News

Parking on grass prohibited

Residents of government owned quarters are reminded that parking of privately owned vehicles on lawns or grassed areas next to government quarters is prohibited. Violaters will be cited by area coordinators and community life NCOs.

'Skysoldiers' will meet

The "Skysoldiers," former members of the 173rd Airborne Brigade (Sep), will meet at 7 p.m. in the Main NCO Club next Friday. Call SFC Spencer for more details, 689-6512 or 544-7432/7173.

Girl Scout recruiting

The adults of the Fort Benning Girl Scout Association are sponsoring a special night of activities for all Benning girls who are not Scouts. These girls, ages 6 - 12, can visit the Youth Activity Center tomorrow from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. to sample some of the fun enjoyed by Girl Scouts. Some of the planned activities include craft projects, camping skills, songs and games, first aid and a fashion show.

The post schools will pass out registration flyers and these need to be returned by Jan. 18. The event is free, but the girls are asked to bring a sack lunch and a plastic cup for the beverages to be provided. Parents are also welcome. For more information, call 689-8543.

Dental appointments

Active duty personnel, their family members and retired military personnel and their family members are encouraged to seek routine dental care at this time. Waiting time for appointments after the examination appointment is minimal. Active duty personnel should call their assigned clinic for their appointments while their family members should call dental clinic #1, 544-2051. Retired military and their family members should call Salomon Dental Clinic, 544-3071.

Knitters Club meeting

The monthly meeting of the Machine Knitters Club will be held tomorrow from 2 to 5 p.m. at 4235 St. Mary's Rd. The members share knitting techniques, yarn information, patterns and problem solving. There are no dues. If interested, call Evelyn Jenkins, 682-0615, or Janice D'Orlando, 687-3311.

Warrant Officer Association

A general membership meeting of the Fort Benning Chapter of the U.S. Army Warrant Officer Association will be conducted at 7:30 a.m. next Thursday in the Main NCO Club. All members are encouraged to attend. For more information, call CWO4 Ford at 545-2830/1389.

CONTACT volunteers needed

A non-profit 24-hour telephone helpline, CONTACT, sponsored by the Columbus Ministerial Alliance, will soon offer a training program for anyone interested in becoming a volunteer worker for CONTACT. The free 50-hour program is designed to help persons develop skills of active listening which will enable them to respond to the needs of those who call CONTACT for help.

Training will begin Feb. 2 at 7 p.m. at the Wynnton Methodist Church, 2412 Wynnton Rd. To pre-register or get more information, call 327-3999.

SHS band sponsors fundraiser

Spencer High School band members will be taking orders for pizza and Mexi-meal kits now through Feb. 15. These kits contain all the ingredients necessary to prepare the pizzas or Mexi-meals, but they are not cooked. They are not frozen either. Six one-ingredient pizzas will sell for $14.95 and extra ingredients will cost from $1.40 to $3 per kit. The deliveries will be made by the students after school on Feb. 23. For more information, call Mrs. Montanez at 689-1887, or SGM Nearhoof at 687-4661.

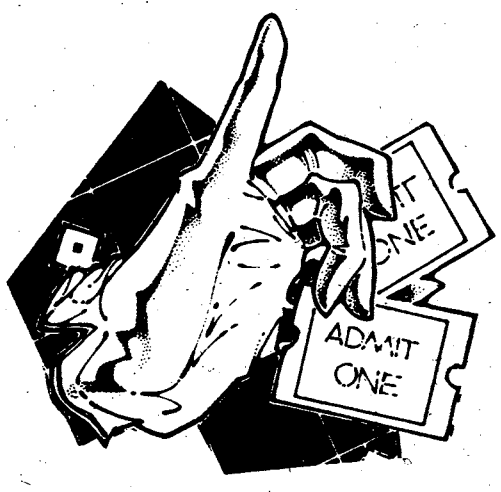
OWC piano, guitar classes

The Officers Wives Club School of Music offers private piano and guitar lessons to all military personnel and their families. For information, call Nancy Kirby at 687-7400.

Acting classes offered

The Springer Opera House of Theatre Arts will offer classes for all age groups beginning the second week of January. Classes will include children's acting, basic and advanced acting for adults, musical theatre, stage managing, and radio and television techniques.

For more information and a schedule of classes, call the Springer School after Jan. 2, at 324-3601.



Music festival begins

The works of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart will be featured in the first of a four-part festival by the Columbus College Department of Music beginning this month.

The tribute to the Austrian composer opens with a lecture-recital at 10:30 a.m. and 8 p.m. on Thursday in the Davidson Student Center auditorium. Dr. Ronald Wirt, assistant professor of music, will present an introductory lecture entitled "Mozart: Innovator or Imitator," and his fellow faculty members, Patricia Cobos and Natalie Kruger, will perform sonatas on violin and flute, respectively. A performance of the popular cantata, "Exsultate, Jubilate," by voice instructor, Pamela White, accompanied by pianist Janie Lee Bullock, rounds out the first program.

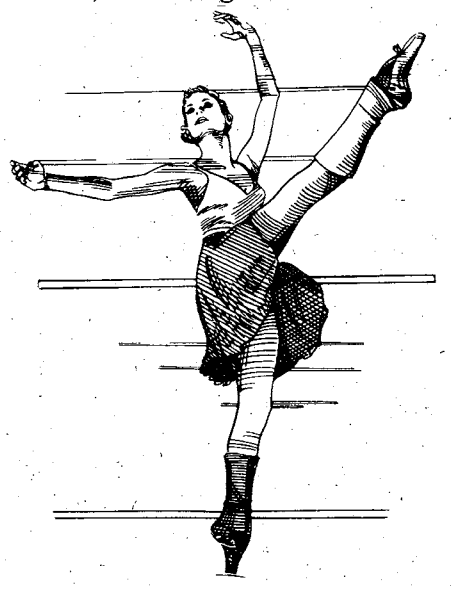
Get in shape — Jazzercise

A certified jazzercise instructor conducts four classes each week for anyone interested in dancing for fun and exercise. The OWC sponsored classes are held Monday and Wednesday evenings and Tuesday and Thursday mornings at the OWC activity building on Ingersol Street. For more information, call Georgia Schneider at 687-8067.



Patty Taylor dancers

The Patty Taylor Contemporary Dance Company will be appearing at the Fort Benning Community Theatre tonight at 8. The company will perform two short features, "A Salute to Dance" and "Columbus, Georgia, U.S.A." Many different dance forms will be used, including jazz, jitterbug, the high step, Charleston, soft-shoe and modern.

The Patty Taylor dancers have performed for six years with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra and have won numerous honors in regional dance competitions. Mrs. Taylor has choreographed a number of musicals for the Springer Opera House, including "The Music Man" and "Oliver."

There is no admission charge for the show. Call 545-5057 for more details.

Pancake Jamboree tomorrow

The Exchange Club of Columbus will again hold its annual Pancake Jamboree tomorrow at the Municipal Auditorium. You can eat all the pancakes you want for just $2.50 per person from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. Children, 4-9 years, can eat for $1.25. You also get two sausage patties and coffee or hot chocolate included in that price.

Proceeds from this jamboree help finance charitable projects conducted by the Columbus Exchange Club throughout the year.

Piano competition

The Baldwin piano competition for junior high school students is taking place tonight in conjunction with the Southern Division of Music Teacher's National Association's auditions and officers' workshop at Columbus College.

The piano competition, which includes participants from nine southeastern states, will be at 8 tonight in the Fine Arts Hall auditorium. It's free. For more information, call 568-2049.

Needlecraft school, exhibit

Callaway Gardens is hosting the 13th Annual Needlecraft School and Exhibit tomorrow through next Friday. An exhibit of award-winning needlework from throughout the Southeast will be open to the public at no charge in the Callaway Gardens Convention Center. For more information, call (404) 663-2281, extension 206.

New hours for ID cards

The AG ID card section, building 83, room 128, has changed its hours. A shortage of manpower has dictated a reduction in their operating hours. The new hours are from 8-11 a.m. and 1-3:30 p.m. each day.

During the hours of 8-10 a.m., a service member will get priority over family members or retirees. This only applies to the service member — not he or she and his or her family. For more information, call Mrs. Hall at 545-5814.

Attention deer hunters

Deer hunters are reminded to return their Fort Benning Deer Permits within 15 days of the close of the deer season. Failure to do so will result in their loss of future hunting privileges. Permits may be returned to the Morale Support Activities located in building 247 or placed in the drop box at the Deer Check Station, building 5883, Harmony Church. All permits not received on time will be considered delinquent, and hunters who have failed to return their permits will be denied hunting privileges as required by USAIC Regulation 210-2, Installation Hunting and Fishing Regulations.

Infantry center reorganization in full swing

By Rick Wilson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The reorganization of the Infantry center staff to promote quality of life and to enhance overall staff efficiency became effective Tuesday.

In recent years, the chief of staff also performed the duties of the deputy post commander (DPC). Now, Col. Neal Christensen, previously within the Infantry School, is the DPC and supervises matters solely relating to the livelihood of families. The DPC now controls several directorates and staff sections previously within the purview of the chief of staff. The DPC also represents the commanding general at off-post community affairs.

The Chief of Staff, Col. Carmen Cavezza, retains those staff elements concerned with "mission, men and resources." The Adjutant General Division, previously under the Director of Personnel and Community Activities (DPCA), is now directly under the chief of staff to enhance military personnel management. The reorganization allows the chief of staff to better focus his efforts on force modernization and integration, the post's training mission and long range planning.

During a press conference Tuesday, Col. Christensen said that a major concern of families on post is housing. "It is often difficult to maintain a pleasant living area with the age of some of the quarters, but we will try to improve this situation."

Colonel Christensen also told media representatives that he was delighted to be assuming duties as the new DPC. He said that this year was the year of excellence in the Army and that it included not only weapons and equipment but also soldiers and their families as well.

The renewed emphasis on the quality of family life at Fort Benning is one of the prime factors that led to the reorganization of the Infantry Center staff, Col. Christensen revealed.

In the past, said Col. Christensen, one person has not been responsible for all the activities that affect family life on Fort Benning. Now however, the DPC will be able to coordinate all the post resources to Colonel Christensen has located his office on the top floor of building four. Colonel Richard Hummel, the new DPCA, maintains his office in building 35. Protocol has moved down the hall from the command complex. Lt. Col. Richard Ambrose, the new secretary general staff (SGS), and Mrs. Doris Issacs, the executive secretary, have moved into the office vacated by Protocol.

According to Lt. Col. John Fuller, one of the major planners of the reorganization, the SGS will be the man responsible for getting the staff actions to either the chief of staff or the DPC as appropriate. The SGS also insures that actions from either of those two men reach the specific staff element responsible for the action.

Throughout the history of the Infantry Center, changes have been made to the structure of the staff organization to meet new challenges and changing missions. Once the soldiers and civilians who are in the few staff elements that had to physically relocate get used to their new areas, the reorganization

TRADOC raises Fort Benning's 1984 SPIRIT goal to $5 million

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The SPIRIT goal for Fort Benning has been raised to more than $5 million for the new fiscal year.

The $5.67 million goal is more than double the goal set by Training and Doctrine Command for the last year.

SPIRIT, the acronym for Systematic Productivity and Improvement Review in TRADOC, is the savings program that allows installations to retain money saved through being more efficient. The program, an offshoot of DoD's economies and efficiencies program, is designed to provide, "more Army for the Dollar."

The program continues with a $1 million first prize to the TRADOC installation that saves the most money during the fiscal year. TRADOC officials are expected to announce the winner of last year's contest later this month.

Fort Benning exceeded last year's goal by more than 1,000 percent, according to Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, Directorate of Resource Management. Mrs. Russell stated that Fort Benning was "Definitely in the running for the million-dollar prize," and that she hopes the enthusiasm for saving money does not "level off during the next year."

"Every time we save a penny," commented Mrs. Russell, "the Army wins.

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain Emory B. Cowan Jr.
Director, Clinical Pastoral Ed.

In John Irving's novel, "The World According to Garp," Garp's little boy is told, while at the beach, to watch out for the undertow. As little children will do, the personification of his anxiety took the form of a big, green, "Under Toad."

Most of us have experienced the Under Toad; that sense of impending doom, that feeling that we might be pulled under and destroyed. The problem lies in what we do about these feelings.

Most of us just worry. Worry is a destructive process. It is a hand wringing, energy consuming event that causes us to fret about everything from the price of oil to whether the last days of God's universe are upon us.

Worry is like a raging fire that can consume our lives. We worry about our health, and yet that very process is destructive to our health. We worry about our children's psycho-social development, and the heaviness of that worry can cause us to over-react with them in a way that is destructive to the relationship.

In fact, some of us spend so much time worrying that we assume it is a power or a prayer that holds back the evil Under Toad. Carried from the ridiculous to the sublime, our worry becomes, in our minds, essential for survival. In reality, worry is the "Under Toad."

A Zen Buddhist story tells of a little bird who spent all of his time on his back with his feet in the air. His curious friends questioned him about his behavior. His response was, "Can't you see what I'm doing? I'm holding up the sky, and if I let go, it will fall and everyone will be killed." Suddenly, a leaf fell from a nearby tree and the frightened bird rolled over and flew away. But the sky did not fall.

When our worry leads us to believe that we alone hold up the sky, there can be no peace and joy in our living. There is no longer room for prayer or faith in an all-knowing, all-powerful God.

What is the answer? Perhaps it is as simple as the Psalmist said so long ago.

The Lord is your keeper;
The Lord is your shade
on your right hand.
The sun shall not smite you by day,
nor the moon by night.
The Lord will keep you from all evil;
He will keep your life. (Ps. 121:5-7)

Let Him handle the "Under Toad."

Chapel briefs

PWOC bible study

Have you made those New Year's resolutions to be more disciplined in your walk with God, but are finding it difficult to remain faithful to your intended goal?

"Precept Upon Precept" is the Bible study designed to help you to be disciplined in your daily walk with God. Sponsored by the Protestant Women of the Chapel, "Precept" is an introductive Bible study that teaches you how to study the Bible for yourself. It is a fun course that is designed to allow you to spend time daily in a structured study.

A discussion group meets once a week to allow you the opportunity to express what you have learned. A video teaching which coincides with the lesson is also available for reviewing.

The book of II Timothy has been chosen for this segment of study. This is the Apostle Paul's last letter before he died. What was Paul compelled to share with his friend Timothy as he knew his days on earth were ending? The lessons are practical and deal with many basic truths of the Christian life.

Come join the study group on Feb. 1, building 2605 on Dixie Road, at 9 a.m., for the beginning of the course. The study will be offered every Wednesday morning for 13 weeks. For further information, call Jan Priddy at 682-2813 or TIC Chapel at 545-2050.

Catholic pre-marriage class

A pre-marriage class for all Catholics anticipating marriage will be held Jan. 29 at 1 p.m. in the Catholic Education Center in Custer Terrace Chapel.

Inter-faith service

An inter-faith service, celebrating the "Week of Church Unity", will be held at the Blessed Holy Retreat Center in Alabama, on Jan. 22 at 3 p.m. (EST). For further information, call 545-3461 or 545-2288.

Credit union explains check deposit delay

About 350 soldiers who have direct deposit to The Infantry Center (TIC) Credit Union experienced some distress when they learned that their paychecks were not deposited on mid-month payday, Jan. 13.

In a meeting with TIC manager, Directorate of Resource Management personnel determined that the delay in posting was the result of late receipt of deposit listings from the Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta. Listings were not received by TIC until Jan. 16.

TIC worked with many affected customers and allowed them to cash checks even though the funds or listings had not been received.

This was a problem with the Federal Reserve Bank, not with the local finance office or TIC.

Steps are being taken to preclude this from happening again. (USAIC PAO)

Airborne ground week takes toll on soldiers search for 'silver wings'

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"They say it's the best place for a young soldier." commented Pvt. Buford N. Taylor from Elyria, Ohio, as he explained why he volunteered to go "Airborne".

Taylor, like many of his classmates, is destined to go to the 82nd Airborne Division after the completion of training. He and the rest of the soldiers in his class are in their second week of the basic Airborne course here. Eight days and a zillion pushups ago, Taylor, an out-of-work welder before he entered the Army, sat in the bleachers at Eubanks Field for a demonstration of the training that they would undergo while here.

Ground week took its toll on the Airborne volunteers. Some of the soldiers were recycled because of minor shortcomings in their performance. Some just figured the price of those silver wings was too high — and quit. Whatever the reason, 44th company is smaller this week than last.

This week, according to MSgt. James H. Clark, chief instructor, Tower Training Branch, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, will be a "building week." The training on Eubanks Field is designed to take the lessons that the soldiers learned in the first week and add more realism.

"We teach the mass-exit technique here." said Clark, "It differs from Ground Training Branch in that there the student performs an individual exit while here we have four jumpers leaving the tower at one second intervals."

The suspended harness (SH), old paratroopers remember the apparatus by its nickname, "suspended agony," is a device where the soldier is taught how to manipulate the parachute while in the air. Learning how to control the parachute during descent is vital to the paratrooper, because it will enable him to avoid other jumpers in the air and hazards on the ground. Also on this apparatus, the soldier will learn how to assume the correct body position before hitting the ground.

"After they complete the SH," commented Clark, "the students will try the swing-landing-trainer (SLT)." On the SLT, the students receive more instruction on the parachute-landing-fall. Instead of the side of a sawdust pit a couple of feet off the ground, this time the soldier must step off a platform as high as a one-story building. "The student is suspended in the harness when he jumps, and will swing from side-to-side or front-to-rear, depending on the type of fall," Clark said. The SLT simulates the swinging of a parachute while the instructor slowly lowers the student to within three feet before letting him make contact with the ground.

Tower week, according to Clark, gives the student "more realistic training in relation to the aircraft." The students spend hours in the mockups of the C-130 and C-141 aircraft from which they will be jumping next week. The instructors go over the procedures to be followed in meticulous detail. The students pay particular attention because the instructors warn them that mistakes in the airplane or the air could be fatal.

"If you have that static line in the wrong hand when you exit this aircraft," cautioned instructor SSgt. James Messenburg, to a group of students, "your Airborne career will be cut mighty short." The students did not laugh because Messenburg explained that a paratrooper who had his static line crossing the throat as he exited the aircraft could separate his head from his shoulders.

Over and over again, the instructors have the students perform each task.

Over and over again, the students try again — because next week, over Fryar Field — it will be for real.

Bill Reynolds

All eyes are on Messenburg as he describes signals the students will see aboard a real aircraft.

Many theories on rising teen drinking rate

There are many theories as to why teen-age drinking is on the rise. Certainly, the particular needs and conflicts of adolescence must be kept in mind. Some authorities also believe young people drink because of parental influence. Parents are role models for adult behavior, and through their attitudes and practices they play an important role in determining how their children will perceive alcohol in their lives.

Drinking has come to represent one of the "rites of passage" into the adult world. The consumption of alcohol at social events such as weddings, graduations and funerals is commonplace in society today. This type of drinking by adolescents is actually a move toward adult patterns of behavior, not a rebellion against them.

Our culture has long condoned social drinking. Even as we ridicule drunken behavior, we sanction the cocktail hour by making it part of our social routine. It is commonplace for a child to be served a "Shirley Temple" in a restaurant so that he may drink along with his parents and other adults.

Parents, too, accept drinking. In today's culture, drug use and abuse among teenagers is fairly common, and parents tend to be thankful that their children are "only drinking." "Thank God, my child's not using drugs." "I'd rather have you drinking alcohol than smoking pot," are common refrains. Because they drink themselves, and tend not to think of liquor as a "drug," they unwittingly approve a much more dangerous behavior.

A recent study of alcoholic parents shows how influential parental behavior can be. Results showed that 81 percent of families in which both parents drink produced children who drank. In 72 percent of the families where the parents did not drink, the children also abstained.

Young people also drink because of peer pressure, since being accepted by the group is of utmost importance to the teenager. Teens drink to relax, to feel less awkward socially, to feel more secure and most often — to get "high." One study indicated that 52 percent of adolescent problem drinkers say they drink simply to get drunk.

Whatever the age at which a child begins to depend psychologically on the effects of alcohol, that is the age he will still be emotionally if and when he overcomes the problem. Much of the heavy drinking among teenagers may be a phase that will eventually be outgrown. But if teens continue to use alcohol to cope with the problems of adolescence, they may be unable to give up this "emotional pain killer" when they get older.

Physically, young people are particularly susceptible to the muscle and bone deterioration that alcohol can cause. This progression seems more rapid in youth, and organic damage, especially to the central nervous system, can often be identified.

The impact of media on teen-age drinking must also be considered in an analysis of their involvement with alcohol. It is not difficult to understand why impressionable teenagers might be enticed by fantasies about drinking and the attractive role models used to promote alcoholic beverages. On television, drinking is represented as a constant, pleasure-enhancing feature of American life.

Reports indicate that teenagers themselves minimize the consequences of their drinking. For example, only eight percent of respondents in one survey thought their driving ability would be "much worse" under the influence of alcohol. Few believed they would be stopped by the police, or th consequences would be significant if they wer Many don't consider an accident as a real possibili of drinking and driving, nor do they think about t possibility of serious injury or death. Teenagers a even more dangerous as drunk drivers because their inexperience as both drivers and drinkers.

Fort Benning is not immune to the problem alcohol abuse by teenagers. There are parents livi on post who have allowed teens to visit and "party in their homes and consume alcoholic beverag These adults are just as potentially murderous as they fed, or allowed to be fed, rat poison to othe sons and daughters. Steps have been taken identify and warn these irresponsible adults. Liqu stores near post, where teens have allegedly be able to illegally purchase liquor, beer and win have recently been the target of local police action.

In 1982, Newsweek described alcohol as socially accepted form of murder." It has been wi us for so long that it will take programs in schools, the courts, in the jails, and — especially — at hor to counter the prevailing attitudes. Our theme ourselves and our youth must be "responsib drinking." Changes in behavior and attitudes c occur if we all work together.

Delta platoon strives to be best; rain keeps them one step away

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

(EDITOR'S NOTE:This story is part of the saga of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and are now in their seventh week of training.)

Last Tuesday's rainy weather and the soggy ground at Dickman Field kept the third platoon in second place in the race to earn the title "honor platoon," according to the men of the second squad.

They claimed that if they had been able to take the Army Physical Readiness Test they would have been able to knock the fourth platoon out of the coveted spot this week. The fourth platoon of "Demons" leads the company by 12 points — a margin that the third platoon is determined to eliminate.

Becoming the honor platoon does not earn the soldiers any extra pay, but Pvts. Steve Cashen and Robert Harrington say that the reward of being "Number One" is enough. "Being first to march on the field at graduation . . . carrying that banner, telling everyone that you are the "honor platoon" is what I want to see." said Harrington.

The goal of being the top platoon came within reach last week when members of the second squad accounted for half of the platoon's expert scores on the hand grenade range. Tuesday's PT test, according to members of the second squad would have helped them reach their goal.

D-8-2 wants very much to be awarded honor platoon of the cycle.

The cancellation of the test may have been a mixed blessing for the soldiers as some of them complained about "the agony of De Feet" after a 12-mile road march last Saturday.

The second squad leader, Cashen, claims his feet aren't the same after the march. Cashen isn't the only squad member that got sore feet out of the march. Pvt. Jonathan Giffin discovered that he had flat feet after completing the march. Giffin's feet, according to Cashen, were sore and covered with blisters after the march.

Giffin, who wants to go Airborne, now faces a possibility of recycle or discharge if his ailment prevents him from becoming an Infantryman.

The possible loss of Giffen cast a dark cloud on the attitude of a squad that has promised to finish as a team. The squad, along with Giffin, hopes that there will be something medical that can be done to help him stay with the "Demons."

Many 'jodies' received; contest deadline nears

The United States Army Infantry Center's cadence contest is in full swing. A total of 60 entries have been received from around the world as of last Friday.

Due to the overwhelming response of the contest thus far, the deadline has been extended until Feb. 28.

The contest is open to Army personnel world-wide, their family members and Department of the Army civilians.

Cadences have to be original and inoffensive.

The contest has been divided into three categories: mechanized, light infantry and general.

Thus far there have 35 entries submitted in the general category, 20 entries in the mechanized division and only five in the straight Infantry category.

The deadline for submission is Feb. 28. Cadences should be sent to:

USAIC PAO
ATTN: BAYONET
Fort Benning, Ga. 31905

Entries need to include the author's name, unit, return address and what category the contestant wishes to compete in.

Trophies will be awarded to the first place winners in each category. In addition, copies of those cadences chosen as the top four in each division will be framed and presented to the winners.

Time to reassess your marathon training methods

By Bill Hughes
MEDDAC Runner

Over the last two months, I've written several articles. The marathon has been put into perspective and by now you should realize that every finisher is a winner.

We've discussed appropriate training and touched on collapse points. The importance of mental conditioning has been stressed — particularly the need to become an associative runner. We've analyzed the mythical wall and discussed ways to overcome it. Other writers have touched on shoe selection and carbohydrate loading. What's left?

Frank Shorter probably said it best when he said you don't run marathons at a five minute per mile pace on a secret recipe. What Frank meant, and what I'm alluding to, is that there is no shortcut. You have to pay your dues — in this case, leave some shoe rubber on the road.

Time to reassess

We're now one week from the race. If anything, your training should be peaking and tapering down. If you haven't run a 20-miler, you'd better do it now. With one week left, probably the best thing you can do is honestly reassess the situation.

Only you know your body's conditioning. There is a tremendous difference between a half marathon and a full marathon. As Dr. Sheehan said, "When you run a poor marathon, you not only hurt but you hurt longer." This is a great truth. It is not something you want to learn by experience.

Therefore, I urge all of you to reassess your initial goal, your current conditioning, and your demonstrated performance. If you're not ready to run a marathon right now, you aren't going to be ready in a week, so run the half marathon.

Remember, participation is the key, and every finisher is a winner.

Runs Infantry Marathon

Soldier celebrates 10 years in Army

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Staff Sergeant David F. Rodriguez will be celebrating his 10-year anniversary in the Army, Jan. 28, in a most unusual fashion; he will run his first marathon.

Rodriguez, assigned to Company A, Infantry Training Group, will be participating in the first Infantry Marathon. It will be the first marathon for him although he has participated in several shorter area races.

"I started running about a year ago. I took a physical training test and started getting chest pains," stated Rodriguez. "Following that experience, I decided to quit smoking and take up one of my biggest pet peeves, running."

Since that time he has worked his way up to an average of 10 miles per day.

Rodriguez added, "I now look at running as a sport or hobby. It is now something I look forward to doing."

He stated, "Since I began running in races, I have read several articles and books that have helped me to improve. Some of the most helpful articles I have read were the marathon tips which have appeared in the BAYONET. They helped me a lot."

> "I now look at running as a sport or hobby."

Rodriguez has the same goal in every race he runs, to finish.

"The only goal I set for myself when I run competitively is to complete the race. The Infantry Marathon, being my first marathon, will be no different," Rodriguez explained.

While running, he does as many other runners do, thinks about something else.

"I like to look at the scenery and think about things I am looking forward to doing.

"I have run different parts of the course already. I would describe it as being about 90 percent flat and very fast," Rodriguez said.

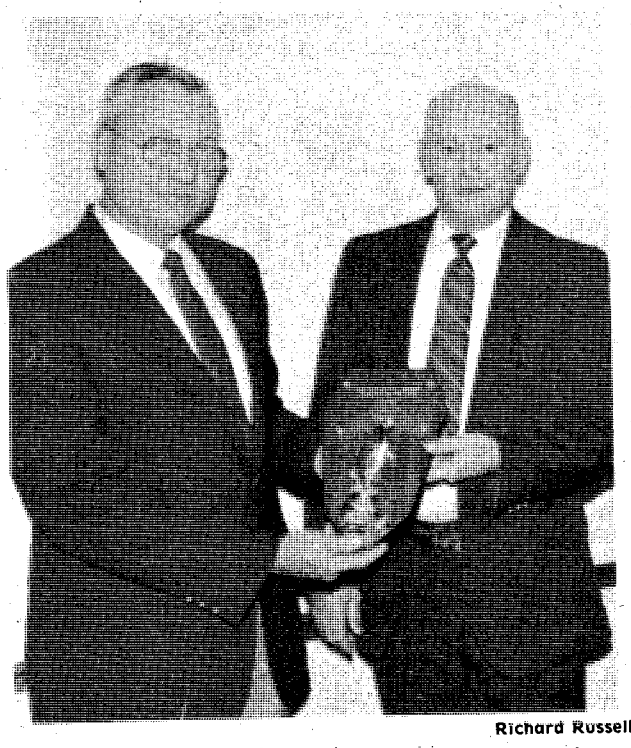
Benning fishermen look back on competitive season



Richard Russell

Retired Col. Dan Rickard, the guest speaker, presents Bob Billman with the BASS Club of Fort Benning's annual award. Billman has won that award eight out of the last 12 years.

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The BASS Club of Fort Benning conducted their annual awards dinner last Friday evening at the Main Post NCO Club. The club, a member of the Georgia BASS Federation, has held a dinner for the last 12 years to announce their top 10 fishermen during the year.

For the eighth time in those 12 years, Bob Billman walked away with the top award. It was close this year though. Billman just did beat out Ben McGuire for that honor.

Tom Brewer, who finished third, took the award for the biggest fish caught last year. Brewer landed a 7-pound, 6-ounce bass in March on Lake Seminole, Fla.

The guest speaker, retired Col. Dan Rickard, reflected on a few of the club's civic contributions during the last year.

Rickard said, "You can take great pride in your club. It has been instrumental in such things as the Youth Activities fishing rodeo, helping the Boy Scouts obtain merit badges in boating safety and fishing, as well as cleaning up several area public lakes, most notably the job you did at Lake Martin, Ala."

The club also takes great strides to insure wildlife conservation. They lower the maximum number of fish allowed by one fisherman during a day to eight the state limit is 10. This was done to reduce the number of fish being put into the live well. This allowed the club to release 74 percent of the fish caught during their 12 tournaments last year, according to club president Henry Ferris.

"The success of this club goes to the membership," explained Ferris. "All year long, it has been a team effort, not any individual."

In competition, the club is full of good individual fishermen. Last year, the club placed second at the Super Bowl, a fishing tournament pitting the top six fishermen from the local BASS clubs against one and other.

At the state tournament conducted at Walter F. George, Pat Bennett placed third to qualify for the regional tourney in Kentucky. He placed ninth there.

If you are a fisherman and would like to join the club, the next meeting is scheduled for Tuesday at building 2068, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Maxwell youths down post squads

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Warriors and the Fort Benning Rockets battled the Maxwell Air Force Base Trojans from Montgomery, Ala., Saturday afternoon at the Youth Activities gym. Benning's two teams are members of the junior division, ages 13-15, of YA's basketball leagues.

The first game matched the Warriors, 1-1, against the undefeated Trojans.

The Warriors held their own against the Trojans during the first half, trailing by only one, 14-13. The Trojans overpowered the home squad in the second half; outscoring the Warriors 43-18 in the final two quarters enroute to a 57-31 victory.

Marquett Todd and Otis Jones paced Maxwell's attack with 18 points apiece. Benning's Robert Cline had 14 in a losing effort.

In the second game, the same Trojan team downed the 0-2 Rockets, 52-39. The game was never in doubt as the visitors mounted two scoring spurts, one of 7-0 and the other of 10-0, to coast into the locker room at halftime with a 31-14 lead.

Jones lead all scorers with 12 for the Trojans. Vincent Williams and Mike Neal each added 10 for the Rockets.

Infantry Marathon draws near

As of Monday afternoon, 147 entries have been received for the first Infantry Marathon. More than 1,800 runners have made verbal agreements, according Capt. Robert Borja, the race coordinator. Applications are available at Columbus and Phenix City sport shops, the Georgia Welcome Center, the VFW, all post gyms and at the Macon Road Pizza Hut. For more information, call SFC John Farrow at 544-6114/6461.

Post boxers invited to compete for gold

Four soldiers assigned to Fort Benning have received invitations to participate in the Georgia Golden Glove Boxing Championships to be conducted this weekend in Atlanta. Jeffery Johnson, Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command; Ricardo Lopez-Aviles, B Company, Headquarters Command; Ray Mercer, CSC, 1-58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade; and George Gibson, A Company, 1-58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, will all be competing in this weekend's tournaments.

Volleyball players and coaches needed

The sports office is now accepting names of individuals who wish to participate in the women's intramural volleyball league which is scheduled to begin March 1. The league is open to women 17 years of age and older who are active duty or retired Army and their family members, and Department of Army or NAF civilians. Coaches are also needed. For additional information, contact Speedy Austin at 545-5777.

See Atlanta Hawks battle Philadelphia 76ers

Morale Support Activities Division's Outdoor Recreation Services is sponsoring a trip to the Feb. 4 professional basketball game between the Atlanta Hawks and the world champions, the Philadelphia 76ers. The $15 price includes a $10 ticket and roundtrip bus transportation. The deadline for making reservations is today. Reservations may be made at building 247. The trip is open to DA civilians, active duty and their family members. For more information, contact Pat Cooper at 545-4155.

Post basketball

Headquarters Command has history of winners

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

One of the more successful intramural leagues on the post last year was Headquarters Command. From that league came the post softball champion, USAIC Military Police Company, and the post runner-up flag football champion, Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command.

With the basketball regular season coming to an end, these same two units will play in the Men's USAIC Basketball Tournament to be held Feb. 19-26.

The rivalry between the two units has continued into basketball season. Headquarters Company and the USAIC MPs are presently tied for the league title with just four games remaining as of Tuesday. Each team supports a 9-2 record.

"We have a lot of respect for the MPs," stated William Courington, Hq. Co.'s coach. "They are good competitors and everytime we play them, no matter what sport, we know we are in for a tough contest."

Tuesday night in Audie Murphy Gym, the two teams met for the third time this season. Hq. Co. won the first two meetings but the MPs got revenge in their final meeting of the regular season with a 50-46 overtime victory.

"The soldiers assigned to each unit are winners. The soldiers have a desire to do well and take a real sense of pride into the game," continued Courington. "We didn't shoot the ball well Tuesday night and they took advantage of that like any good team should."

The MP's losses during the regular season came at the hands of Hq. Co. "Prior to Tuesday night's game, we hadn't been able to beat them," admitted Laura Mooney, the MP's coach. "We beat ourselves in the first two contests. We played good defense and cut down on our turnovers. I think that was the key to our victory. They are a good ballclub. We will have to be ready to play them if we plan on winning the post title."

Courington commented, "Playing in a strong league makes a team stronger. Your team gets used to playing those tough games so that when the best teams around the post meet in the tournament at the end of the season, you will be used to playing tough games."

Headquarters Compay's team has a definite advantage over most teams, according to Courington.

"We have a lot of depth. Teams that play us can't just stop one or two men, they have to stop all five. And if they do, I have five more to send out.

"An example was our victory over B Company, Headquarters Command, last Thursday. I played 10 men. All 10 scored and had at least one rebound. Our depth also allows us to dictate the pace of the game," concluded Courington.

These are just two of the several outstanding basketball teams on the post. The BAYONET will take a look at the various other leagues around the post in the next few weeks.

Richard Russell

James Earl Washington, Hq. Co., goes up strong to the hoop during a recent victory over B Co. 62-47. Hq. Co. is tied for first place with USAIC-MPs in the Headquarters Command's basketball league.

Cookie Fun run draws familiar faces

The fourth annual Girl Scouts' Cookie Fun Run drew some familiar faces to Weracoba Park for the 1.5- and 5-mile events.

David Lee, Fort Benning, won the men's 1.5-mile race finishing with a time of 7:45.5. Ten-year-old Kelly Cook of Atlanta took the women's title for the same distance with a time of 9:33.

Theo Abston, Auburn, Ala., won the men's 5-mile event, almost two minutes ahead of Bruce Skiles, the next nearest competitor. Sue Smith claimed the women's division crown for the third time in four years.

Fort Benning sergeant 'gets involved'

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 26-year-old Infantry sergeant who graduates from drill instructor school today stopped an assault on a Columbus woman Tuesday, in a local shopping center parking lot.

According to SSgt. James R. Barrentine, he and his son Michael, 10, were walking towards the K-Mart store on Macon Road about 3:30 p.m. when he noticed "a suspicious looking man following a woman across the parking lot."

Continuing to watch, Barrentine saw the woman open the door on the driver's side of her car and get in. Then man jumped in and shoved her over.

Going over to the car, Barrentine asked the man if he had a problem. "I didn't know until then that he had a knife and was holding it to her neck."

Jumping out of the car, the man told Barrentine, "Yeah, I got a problem," then slashed at the sergeant with what appeared to be a hunting knife with a four or five-inch blade. Before Barrentine could react, the attacker took off running across Macon Road.

The 24-year-old woman said in an interview with a Columbus LEDGER reporter, "I give all the glory to him. He saved my life. He really did. I kept thinking about all the terrible things that happen to girls. . . .about my child at home. It was terrifying, until I saw that beautiful face of his (Barrentine's) in the window."

As to what made him suspicious of the man in the first place, Barrentine said, "my father is a retired policeman and I grew up learning to watch people and their habits. I have a suspicious mind and there was something about him that just caught my eye. His eyes were moving around like he was looking for a policeman, as if he had just stolen something. You can sense when someone is going to do something wrong."

Explaining why he didn't just continue on his way, Barrentine said, "I'm just not that kind of person. I can't walk away from someone in trouble. That's just the way I am."

Post commander signs 1984 budget contract

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A $194 million dollar contract for the operation and maintenance of Fort Benning during fiscal year 1984 was signed Jan. 17 by Maj. Gen. James J. Lindsay, post commander and Lt. Gen. Carl E. Vuono, deputy commander for Combined Arms, Training and Doctrine Command.

The 1984 TRADOC Installation Contract contains monies for the day-to-day operations of the post, including dollars for items such as supplies, equipment, civilian pay, utilities, training, research, family housing and four congressional appropriations, according to Glenda K. Gower, installation budget officer in the Directorate of Resources and Management.

This year's budget is approximately $10 million larger than last year's, but about $15 million short of what we asked for. It doesn't contain any fat," said Gower. "The largest increase is in funding for new tactical weapons systems such as the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle. The second largest increase is the result of what is called 'reserve component initiatives and inactivation of units.' "

The biggest share of the contract comes in Operation and Maintenance Army funds.

"This is the money for the actual day-to-day operation of the post, explained Gower, "and accounts for $175.4 million of the contract."

Gower gave a general breakdown of the total contract. Civilian pay accounts for $78.2 million, supplies and equipment $48.6 million and contracts and other expenses $67.2 million.

Specific monies in the contract include $2.3 million for new tactics research by the Infantry School and $16.1 million for family housing.

The 1984 contract is the result of a process of planning, justifying, revising and negotiating which began in late March 1983.

"TRADOC doesn't just call us and say 'here's your money,' " said Gower. "We have to compete for funds for the things we need against other installations".

Development of the budget takes at least six weeks, according to Gower. Once that is done it is then submitted to TRADOC.

"We continue to work on minor aspects of the budget until sometime in June while we quasi-wait for word from TRADOC on our requests," said Gower.

The next step in the process happens after TRADOC has had an opportunity to review the proposed budget features and justifications for each. Every aspect of the budget which TRADOC considers questionable or outright invalid has to be answered.

"We enter a period of negotiation. Each justification has points of contact at TRADOC. If they need information or have questions they call us. A lot of time is spent on the phone and in responding to

Beware of 'instant tax refund' offers

Robert McClain

You've finally received your W-2 form and you have completed your 1983 tax form. All that's left now is to mail the return to the Internal Revenue Service and wait for your tax refund.

But according to some recent advertisements in local newspapers, the wait for your refund can be a short one.

These advertisements have recently been luring unsuspecting soldiers to establishments offering "instant tax refunds."

Most of these "tax refunders" only stay in business a short time. They are run out of back rooms of local small businesses or in tiny stores in run-down shopping centers. Often the only clue that a business is actually being operated in these locations is a cardboard sign taped to the door.

SOLDIERS SHOULD BEWARE of these establishments. Though their advertisements may lead one to believe that you will receive your full IRS refund "instantly," this is often not the case.

Most of these businesses will only give you a percentage (ranging from 60 to 70 percent) of your refund. Some services also charge a processing fee in addition to taking a percentage of your refund.

The services will have you sign a power of attorney to receive your "instant refund." By signing this power of attorney, you are authorizing your tax refund check to be mailed directly to the service. They will also have the right to cash your refund check. In addition, some services will make you sign a legal contract in addition to the power of attorney.

This reporter visited a number of these establishments and asked about the "instant refund" one could receive. I informed all the services I was due $395 from the IRS. Here are a few of the "deals" these establishments offered me:

BUSINESS A

$395..... initial IRS refund
-$118.50..... 30 percent of refund for service
-$15..... power of attorney fee
-$25.....processing fee
$237.50..... total "instant cash refund" offered

BUSINESS B

$395..... initial IRS refund
-$118.50..... 30 percent of refund for service
-$35.....processing fee
$242.50..... total "instant cash refund" offered

BUSINESS C

$395..... initial IRS refund
-$139.75..... 35 percent of refund for service
$255.25..... total "instant cash refund" offered

OFFICIALS FROM THE Staff Judge Advocate's Office say they currently know of no law preventing these businesses from operating. They add that little can be done after a soldier has done business with one of these services.

According to IRS regulations, the services only become illegal when they offer BOTH a tax preparation and tax refund service to their customers.

Still a few local tax preparation offices will fill out your tax form for a fee (ranging from $10 to $40) and then will recommend the services of these "instant cash refund" establishments.

SOLDIERS SHOULD AVOID these refund establishments. They can save a large portion of their refund by simply waiting the normal four to six weeks for the refund check to arrive in the mail. Soldiers can also save money by having their unit tax officer assist them with their tax forms instead of paying a fee to a local tax preparation service to complete the tax forms for you.

Most anyone is susceptible to alcoholism

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Alcoholism has been called the democratic disease. It doesn't care what color a person is, how old, how rich or poor, how talented or how intelligent a person is.

"Anyone is susceptible to it. Alcoholism can strike at anytime. For example there have been some people who are 65 years old and for their whole life, maybe because of religous convictions or whatever, who have never had a drink. Then all of a sudden they start drinking and become alcoholic" said Dr. Tom H. Tennent, Fort Benning's drug and alcohol control officer.

According to the doctor experts generally say one out of every 10 Americans who drinks stands a chance of developing a problem with alcohol.

"A conservative figure places the number of alcoholics in America today at 10 million," said Tennent.

It is difficult to define who or what is an alcoholic, says the doctor. "Generally you can say an alcoholic is a person who finds himself in a situation where alcohol causes problems personally, with his job, with his family, financially or legally."

The Journal of Alcohol and Drug Dependency states the average alcoholic has a job, a family, is an upstanding citizen and functions fairly well in some areas of his life. He drinks somewhat during the week but drinks exceptionally heavy on the weekends.

There have been studies done, although they are not totally conclusive, which show some lifestyle patterns may lead to alcoholism, according to Tennent.

"For instance in its studies on alcohol the Army makes a distinction between those older then 26 and those younger. The study shows that peoples drinking patterns are established between the ages of 18 and 22. If a soldier gets past 26 and doesn't have a fairly good pattern established, he is probably going to have problems," said Tennent.

The roots of alcoholism are many, according to Tennent, with some its job related stress. For others its marital problems or difficulty with finances and the list can go on and on.

"We don't really know why some people turn to alcohol and others in similar circumstances don't. Several years ago a professor from Harvard started following a group when they graduated from high school, and he's followed them for about 20 years now. Some turned out to be alcoholics and he still can't figure out why," said Tennent.

On the other hand, there are indicators which show some people may be predispostioned towards alcoholism.

"More than half of all alcoholics had at least one alcoholic parent...Again there is so much about alcohol that we don't know yet," stated Tennent.

Though there are questions as to who will become alcoholic and why, there are no such ambiguities about the path people travels once they become alcoholic and the end result of alcoholism.

"No one has ever set out to be a drunk...Some people who became alcoholic have said, looking back, that the first time they drank ...it was a very special feeling...after that they drank...to get that special feeling again," said Tennent.

However a person who travels the road to alcoholism usually goes through several phases.

"In the early phase a person may drink to relieve tension or to forget about a personal crisis, his tolerance increases, that is he is able to hold drinks better. In the middle phases blackouts may begin and the drinking itself becomes an additional problem. The alcoholic than begins to minimize his drinking, lie about it, to drink secretly and to shift the blame for these problems to others." explained Tennent.

Benning students learn computer skills

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Earlier this week, this reporter joined a sixth grade computer class. I thought we would be about even in our computer skills since they had started only four days before and I had never worked a computer.

When an 11-year-old has to help you get the computer to draw a triangle, you know you have just been one-upped.

"We're using the computers to develop thinking skills and creativity," Patrick Hanks, computer teacher, said. It's working. The eight members of the class are already into programming the computer.

"I like it. It's fun. It's interesting," are some of the comments the youths had to say about learning to work with computers. Two of the eight had experience working on computers before, one has his own computer and one said he would rather be playing video games.

Jerry Christy, school computer co-ordinator, explained this is the first year computers have been used in the Fort Benning schools.

"This is an awareness program, just to expose children to computers and let them know what they are all about. It has shown the children whether or not they like it, or perhaps they don't know as much about computers as they think," he said.

There are some computer terminals in all of the Fort Benning schools, including the kindergarten classes at Patch School.

"We've got people in all the schools that keep the teachers up-to-date on what's going on with the computers and no matter what age, all the children at one time or another, will have spent some time with the computers," Christy said.

Finding time for everyone to get a chance to work the computers involved some special scheduling too. Christy explained that the band and chorus members at Faith School couldn't participate in the classes during regular school hours, so special after-school classes were started for them.

"All of the children have been excited about this class. In fact, most of the time we have to literally make them leave the terminals.

"They've been all psyched up since they heard this class was starting. Several got their own computers for Christmas, so now they want to learn more," Christy said.

The sixth, seventh and eighth graders have computer classes for a couple of weeks as part of a technology course. The course is divided into three areas: computers, typing and audio-visual. "We've found typing is a big plus before the computer classes because the keyboards are the same," Christy said. But, sixth-grader Eric Roane thinks the computer class is the best. "It's sure a lot better than typing. This is fun."

The students aren't the only ones benefitting from the new computer programs. The teachers and parents are getting into the act. "We've had very positive feedback from the parents. We've had parents asking what's next. They don't want their child left behind. The parents are excited about the students learning things differently than they did.

"Some are concerned that social skills are not being developed and that's happening a little. You're always going to have a few students that prefer to be loners and it's up to the educators to draw them out," Christy said.

At a recent open house for parents of students in Patch School, and at an English as a Second Language class, parents were exposed to the computers and were able to investigate their workings.

"Parents regard computers as a curiosity. The children go home talking about hardware and software and parents don't know what they are talking about. This was a way for them to know a little of what the students are learning."

The teachers are learning too. Christy said about a third of the teaching staff have gone through 24 contact hours of training with a local distributor. Also, teachers can join the computer classes with the students during their free hours and the school is developing a training program for them.

"Now we're looking at upgrading the system for next year. Computers have lots of uses like social studies and as a word processor. It makes writing fun. We also want to start an advanced class and let the students get deeper into the programming area," Christy said.

"We try to get the students to be creative. The sixth-graders are already writing programs on recognizing sights and sounds. We put them in charge. We teach them to operate the computer, but they must get the computer todo what they,the students, want it to do," Hanks explained.

"This is a very exciting time for us," Christy said, "because the program is just starting. I don't believe it's a passing fad. It's here for a long time."

Community theater needs production volunteers

U.S. Army

Bruce Ciloski and Cindy Hudson starred in the theater's last production.

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ed Hensley is looking for home decorators, seamstresses, electricians, carpenters, carpet layers, and painters. He also has openings for drill sergeants, family members, finance clerks, helicopter mechanics, doctors, civil service and even chiefs of directorates.

As director of the Music and Theater Section of the Morale Support Activities Division, Hensley and his staff are responsible for staging five major drama or situation comedy productions each season. That takes a lot of people. Finding those people has been a problem.

"We don't just need actors or actresses, we also need people who are willing to help behind the scenes. A carpenter is an invaluable asset around a theater, as is an electrician. People who are interior decorators, seamstresses, or artists are people with skills which lend themselves very readily to the theater," said Hensley. And these are mainly the people we are finding hard to get.

The problem is two-fold Hensley believes. First, he feels the people of Fort Benning have a misconception about the theater's target audience, and second, they are apprehensive about the location of the theater.

"Recently we found most people thought the theater was a troop activity, mainly for the soldiers in training here. That's why 90 percent of the audiences for performances are soldiers. Next, some people have expressed a concern about where we are located. They think it's a training area and are hesitant to venture into such an area after dark for things like rehearsals and performances, said Hensley. The truth is totally opposite, claims Hensley. "The theater is for everyone in the community. It's a community activity for single soldiers and married soldiers and their families. In order for us to be a viable part of the community, it is important we draw on the whole community for the behind the scenes workers, actors and actresses that we need for productions.

Currently Hensley and his assistants, Abby Duncan, artistic director, and Robert Munro, technical director, are overseeing rehearsals for the theater's upcoming production of "Barefoot In The Park" which opens Feb. 17. Past performances have included such Broadway hits as "Something Happened On The Way To The Forum", "Vanities", "Wait Until Dark" and "MASH".

"The cast for the show is five. In order to put the show on adequately, we need at least twice that number behind the scenes. People for set design and construction, costume design, lighting, stage managers, makeup person, seamstress . . . ," said Hensley. It doesn't matter if a person has never had theater experience. In fact a shy, introverted person might just find acting a role in a production gives him an outlet for self-expression. Also, the theater is an excellent place for people to practice their communication skills," said Hensley.

Persons interested in volunteering their time and skills to Fort Benning's theater productions should contact Hensley or one of his assistants at 545-5057 or 545-7636, or visit the theater office on the corner of Wold Avenue and Anderson Street.

Five point test must be passed to claim exemption

By William Spradley
Legal Assistance Section

In order to reduce an individual's adjusted gross income, he or she may claim personal and/or dependency exemptions. Each exemption will reduce the adjusted gross income by $1,000.

As a general rule, if one is filing as single, married filing separate, or as head of household, there are three possible personal exemptions. You may claim an exemption for yourself, and there are two additional exemptions for blindness; 65 or older.

If an individual is married filing joint returns, then the same exemptions apply up to the maximum of six. If one files a separate return, an individual may claim an exemption for your spouse only if the spouse had no gross income and wasn't claimed as a dependent on another taxpayer's return.

You may also take the blindness and age exemptions of your spouse when filing a separate return when the above test is met. An individual's spouse is never considered one's dependent, but for the fact of marriage you may claim your wife's exemptions.

In order to claim a dependency exemption, the following tests must be met: member of household or relationship test, citizenship test, joint return test, gross income test, and the support test. If one of these tests isn't met, then the individual is prohibited from claiming the dependency exemption.

The dependent must live in the taxpayer's home for the entire year in order to meet the household or relationship test, except for temporary absence unless he or she is a relative. If the claimed dependent is a relative, then he or she may be claimed as a dependent even if not a member of the filing taxpayer's household.

The dependent must also be a U.S. citizen, U.S. resident, or U.S. national or a resident of Canada or Mexico for part of the taxable year. The dependent must not file a joint return unless he or she is doing so only to claim a refund.

The fourth test is the gross income test. Generally the dependent must have a gross income of less than $1000. There are two exceptions. Your child may have a gross income of more than $1000 if he is under the age of 19 or a fulltime student.

The fifth and final test is the support test. The filing taxpayer must provide more than half the dependent's total support during the taxable year. The amount contributed must be compared to all sources of income received by the dependent. This would include taxable as well as nontaxable income that the dependent received.

There are no limitations on the number of dependents claimed as long as the five-prong test is met.

If there are any questions contact your unit tax officer today.

correspondence to try to further refine our position," said Gower.

Around October, TRADOC forwards revised dollar guidances to Fort Benning.

"Essentially they say, 'Based on your budget, we are now going to give you this much money. Do it again and tell us where you stand.

"We go back and make up our revised unfinanced requirements and rework the budget. Changes may have occurred since we first made up the budget in the spring," said Gower.

The scenario of justification and negotiation is repeated. "You lose some and win some. While the final result may not include everything we would like to have, it's as equitable as possible," concluded Gower.

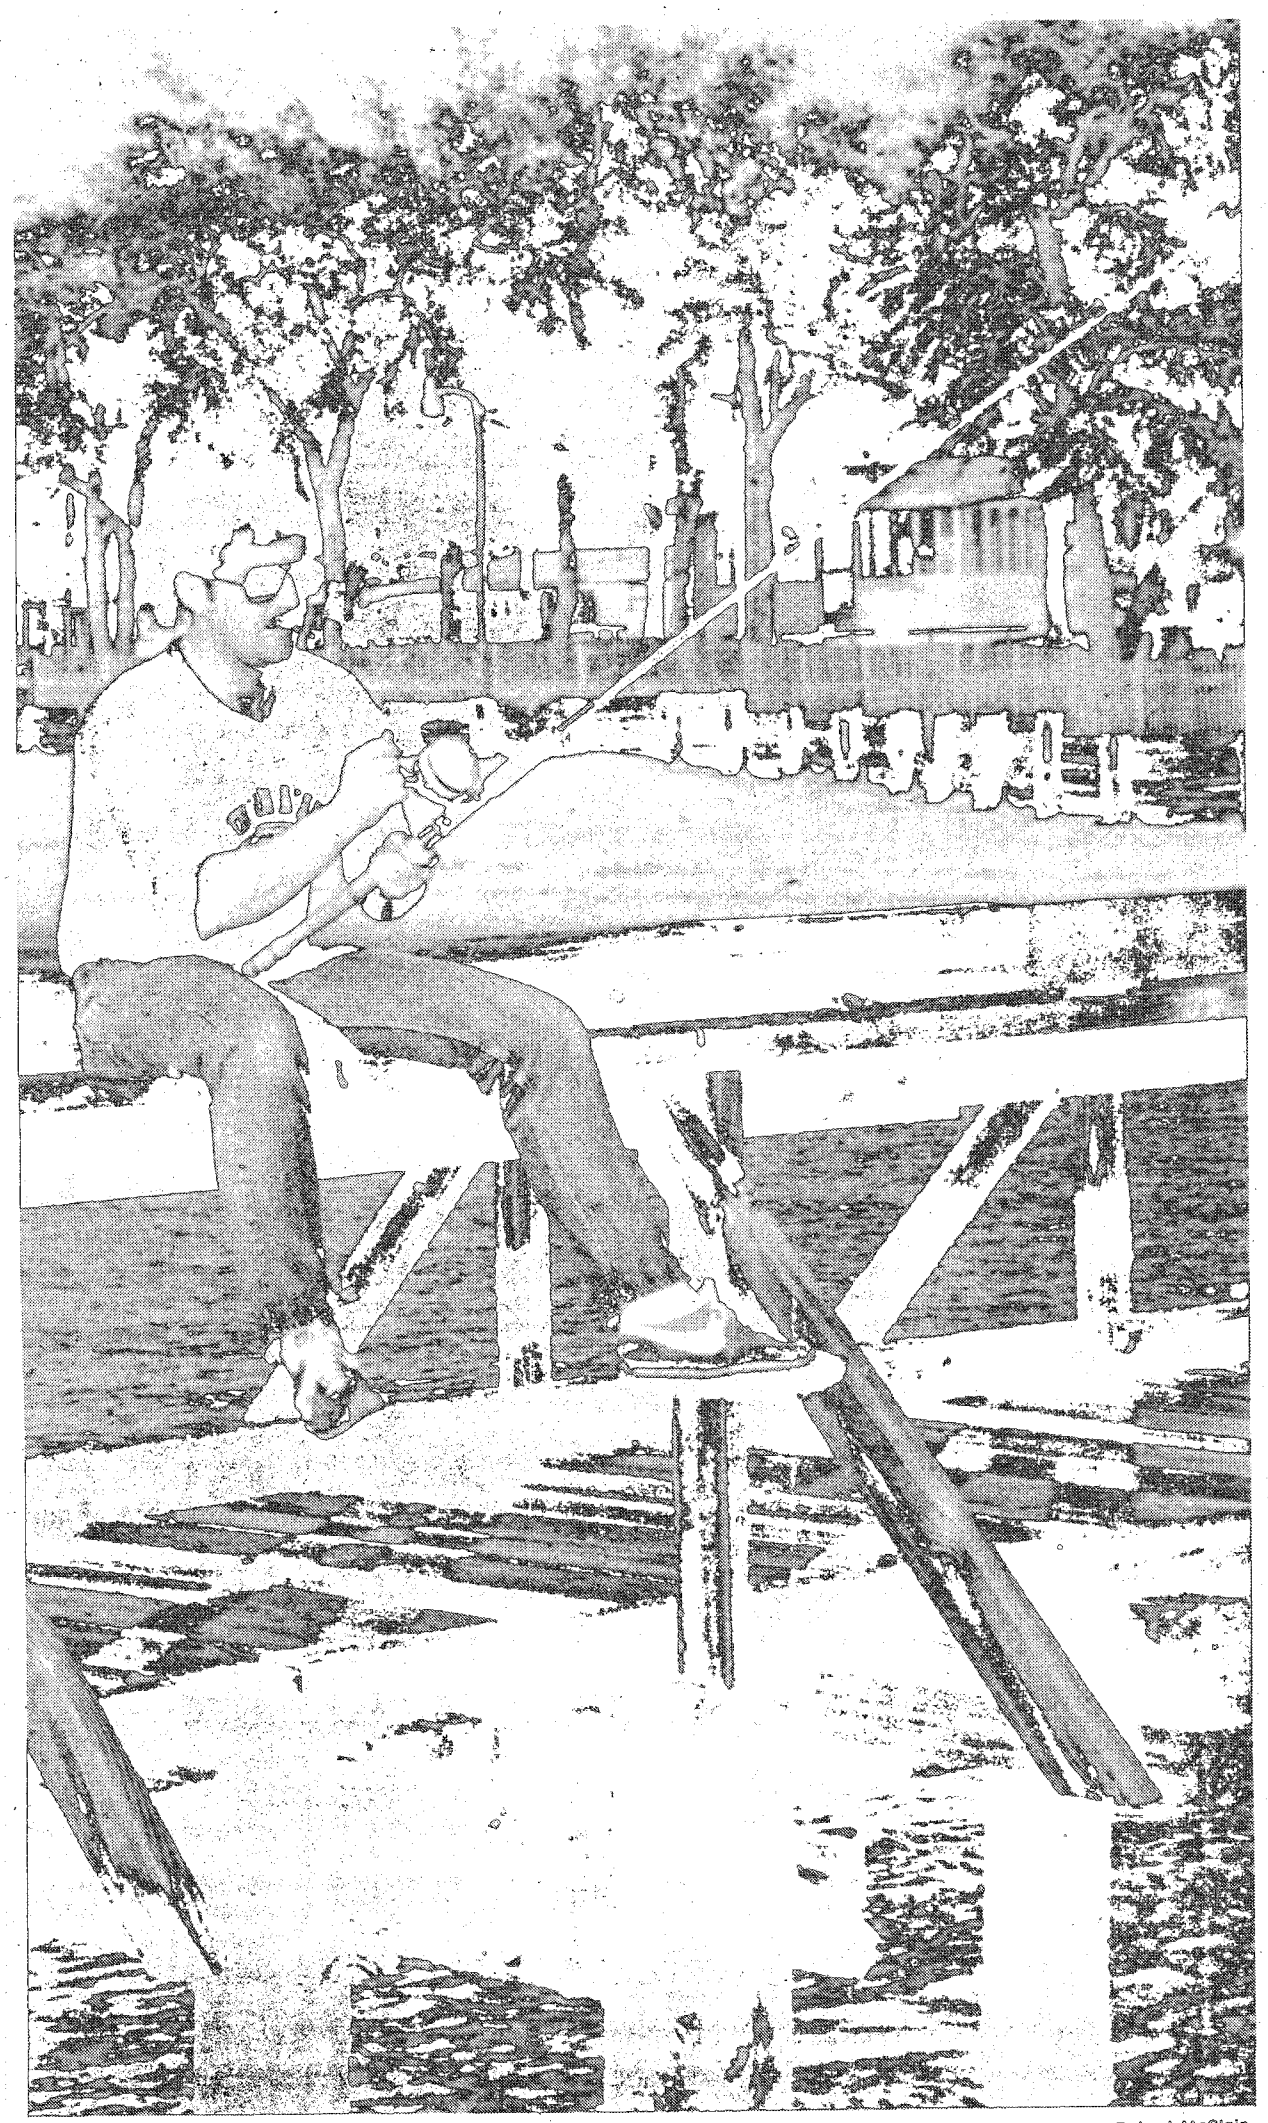
Army resort — a winter vacation bargain



Robert McClain

John Willson, a Fort Benning soldier fishes off the pier at the Destin resort.

Lots to do, even if you don't go near the water

By Robert McClain
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thousands of tourists annually flock to Florida beach resorts during the summer; but, there may be no better time to immerse yourself at the U.S. Army's own Florida beach resort than now when the crowds and traffic are manageable if not downright light.

During these crisp winter months, the Infantry Center's Recreation Center in Destin, Fla. can offer much to the soldier and his family and at much lower rates.

The Destin area has many attractions. You can walk on secluded beaches, shop at a variety of stores, dance at numerous night spots, dine at some of Florida's best seafood restaurants or just enjoy the view of the ocean from your beach-front cabin.

You can, of course, forget about the shopping, eating and relaxing altogether and spend the day on the Follow Me fishing boat.

The 'Follow Me' is one of the best bargains in the area. It is about one third cheaper to charter than any other in the area and it is equipped with all the latest fishing equipment.

In Destin, you will find many ways to use your active duty or retired military status to cut vacation costs. You'll be able to use your ID card at nearby Eglin Air Force Base and Hurlburt Field to help stretch your food, fuel, recreation and accommodation dollars to the maximum.

On the 15.5-acre recreation facility, there are 15 completely equipped cottages of various types and sizes. There are also trailer pads and camper sites on the grounds.

During the off-season, all cabins are offered for half-price. Depending on your rank, the daily rate for a cabin can range from $10 to $14.50. Weekly rates range from $200 to $235 all cabins are offered on a space availability basis.

Reservations must be made in person at the Outdoor Recreation Branch of Morale Support Activities Division at least 30 days prior to your departure. Once a reservation has been made, no portion can be cancelled. Cancellation will only be accepted for the entire reservation period.

The recreation area's camping area has complete sewage, water and electrical hook-up for recreational vehicles and tent sites for camping. The camping area is located adjacent to a bath house with shower, toilet and laundry facilities. Trailer pads and camping sites may also be reserved at the Outdoor recreation branch.

Each of the cottages is centrally cooled and heated. They are equipped with the basic necessities - cooking and dining utensils, bed linens, stove, refrigerator and a color television.

A two-bedroom cottage will sleep six people comfortably and a three-bedroom cottage sleeps 11 to 12 people.

Destin is about a four to five-hour drive from Fort Benning; but, it is well worth the long drive. For more information on how you can enjoy the recreation center during the winter months, call the Outdoor Recreation Branch of Morale Support at 545-4155.

Alcoholism

"Denial is the hardest thing to deal with when working with an alcoholic," said Tennent. "They often reach the point where they absolutely cannot make the connection between drinking and the trouble they may be in."

Alcoholics often refuse to accept responsibility for their actions, said Tennent. "It's always something else and not their drinking habits which causes them to get in trouble. It's always the state they're in, the unit they're in, the commander they have. Any excuse, but alcohol.

"Alcohol becomes a good friend and reliable friend to the alcoholic. Alcohol is consistent and reacts in the same predictable way," said Tennent.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a three part series on alcoholism. Next week the second part will explore the life of an alcoholic through the eyes of two recovered alcoholics. The concluding part will discuss treatment.)

Clinic issues warning; stray cats carry rabies

Cats may be cuddly and cute, but those stray cats around post could be carriers of rabies. Col. William Morgan, chief of preventive medicine, said that 50 percent of the raccoon population in the area are rabid and rabies easily get into the cat population that has not been vaccinated.

"We've had one person that had to go through anti-rabie vaccinations because he was bitten and scratched by a cat and the cat could not be found later," he said.

He stresses that people should not feed the cats and if they are scratched or bitten, they need to call the Fish and Game Service at 545-1308 so they can round up the animal.

Also, garbage can lids should be replaced so that the food is not available for the cats.

Mid-termers soon face new reenlistment testing

According to officials at the USAIC re-enlistment office, come April 1st, tougher general and skill-qualification testing will greet mid-term soldiers who want to re-enlist.

Effective April 1, trainability requirements for mid-term soldiers will be:

- Those soldiers tested on the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery before Jan. 1, 1976, or on or after Oct. 1, 1980, must have two aptitude area scores (other than GT) of 85 or higher and a GT score of 100 or higher.
- Those soldiers tested on the ASVAB on or after Jan. 1, 1976, but before Oct. 1, 1980, must have two aptitude area scores (other than GT) of 90 or higher and a GT score of 107 or higher.
- Soldiers who verify their SQT with a score of 80 or higher as shown on the individual soldier's report are exempt from all aptitude-area score requirements.
- Soldiers who verify their SQT with a score of 60-79 as shown on the individual soldier's report are exempt from all ASVAB scores except the GT score.
- Soldiers who have no SQT score or who fail to verify the SQT, must meet all score requirements.

Soldiers not on overseas assignment and who fail to meet the above requirements may with general court-martial convening authority be extended until April 1, 1985, for the purpose of being retrained and/or retested to meet the new criteria.

Fort Benning soldiers with questions about the new criteria can call their re-enlistment NCO or call the USAIC re-enlistment office at 545-5649/7387.

Chaplain's Views

By Richard L. Pace
2nd Bn., 2nd ITB

"What were those guys staring at," were my thoughts as I looked out my office window and saw a detail of soldiers standing in a group seemingly spell-bound by some attraction which I couldn't see.

Their unflinching intrigue aroused my curiosity to discover what enchantment could hold awe-struck the same guys who fall asleep during my exciting sermons.

Then I saw it. A baby bird had taken that first big step out of his nest only to discover its inability to fly. As the protective mother provided air support the young aviator hopped around on the ground with little success at getting airborne.

Then a near tragedy occurred. The baby bird hopped into the middle of Eighth Division Road and sat there. This broke the statue-like stance of one of the soldiers who sensing the danger moved quickly to shoo the bird to the other side of the road and to safety.

What moved that soldier to help that little bird? I think it was concern, care, possibly a sort of compassion for the welfare of an insignficiant bird.

This brought to my rememberance an incident where a leper came to Jesus and said, "If you are willing, you are able to make me clean." In response to this desperate man, the Bible says Jesus was "moved with compassion." Something deep within Jesus motivated Him to reach out His hand, touch a leper, and make him clean.

Compassion for hurting people is still the motivating force behind the actions of Jesus Christ today. He continues to clean up the lives of those who are marred by hate, resentment, rebelliousness, disobedience and sin.

If you are living a life dominated by sin, then you are in more danger than a little bird sitting in the middle of a busy highway. However, let me assure you that Jesus is moved with compassion not only to shoo you out of the pathway of eternal tragedy, but to give you wings of victory to enable you to soar above the destructive forces of sin. Look to Jesus. He is willing, and He is able.

Chapel briefs

Pre-marital instruction

Pre-marital instruction classes for Protestants will resume Monday at the Infantry Center Chapel. Led by Chaplain Paul Cassibry, they will be from 7:30-9 p.m. every Wednesday.

The classes will cover communication skills, financial planning, the Christian basis of marriage, planning the wedding and relationship building.

Couples are expected to attend four sessions, but a missed session may be made up in the succeeding series, as this is an on-going program. For registration and further information, call 545-2050.

Former Falcons' star to speak

Greg Brezina, retired Atlanta Falcons linebacker, will be the speaker at a "Sweetheart Banquet" on Feb. 17, at 7 p.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Sponsored by the Protestant Women of the Chapel, the banquet is open to the public. Tickets are $5 and may be purchased from PWOC members or at the TIC Chapel Center before Feb. 15. For further information, call 545-2020.

Workshop for lectors

A workshop for Catholic lectors will be held at the Blessed Holy Trinity Retreat Center in Alabama on Jan. 29, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. (EST). For further information, call 545-3461.

PWOC Bible study

"Precept Upon Precept," a Bible study focusing on the book of II Timonthy, will begin on Wednesday, building 2605 on Dixie Road, at 9 a.m. The study will be offered every Wednesday morning for 13 weeks. For further information, call Jan Priddy at 682-2813 or TIC Chapel at 545-2050.

Catholic pre-marriage class

A pre-marriage class for all Catholics anticipating marriage will be held Sunday at 1 p.m. in the Catholic Education Center in Custer Terrace Chapel.

Joint PWOC and CWOC

The Protestant Women of the Chapel and The Catholic Women of the Chapel will meet together on Friday at 9:30 a.m. in the Main Post Catholic Chapel. They will participate in a "walk through" mass led by Chaplain Tom Trepanier. There will be no meeting of the PWOC on Wednesday.

Send announcements where?

The BAYONET Community News section offers all organizations and individuals the chance to place their announcements in the post newspaper.

The announcements should be sent to the BAYONET news office in building 4, room 601. They must be submitted no later than Tuesday at 4:30 p.m. for publication in the paper that Friday.

For more information, call 545--2201/2202.

The rainy weather and low visibility accomplished mething Tuesday that all the miles of running and hysical training could not do — it stopped 44th company cold.

Bill Reynolds

Airborne students in 44th Company saw the water and fog on Eubanks Field that meant rain would keep them from jumping Tuesday.

The halt in training was temporary.

Tuesday, the Airborne volunteers were to make the second and third of their five qualifying jumps that would earn them silver wings.

The company took ground week of the course in stride, losing only a few people. During Tower week, the 44th lost a few more.

Monday, the 44th made its first jump.

Tuesday it rained.

The rain and the low visibility stopped more than the basic course conducted by the 4th Airborne Training Battalion, according to Battalion Executive Officer, Maj. Carlos Velez. The bad weather called a halt to the Pathfinder and Jumpmaster courses also.

The halt in training gave the basic course students time to reflect on the lessons learned during the course. One student, ROTC Cadet Jacque K. Thomas, felt that the intense physical training was not necessary. "Everywhere we went — we had to run," she explained, "everywhere! I don't think all that running was really necessary.

"Our PT had us running long distances every morning. I don't think is was necessary for us to run to the towers after breakfast, run back to the company for lunch and back again for training." Thomas held firm to her objections to running until a comment from another student, Pvt. Clarence F. Brown, convinced her of the need to run. "The strengthening of your legs is one of the most important parts of this training," Brown said, "the first thing you get when you hit the ground is the shock . . . if you don't have enough muscles to absorb the shock — it's going to crush your body."

The rain and the waiting failed to crush the spirits of the students as they struggled to put in words the sensation of their first parachute drop.

"It was peace," said Thomas, "I was happy!"

"I thought yesterday's jump was the easiest thing that I've done in the course!" added ROTC Cadet Sue M. Komisarek. The 20-year-old college student from the University of New Hampshire said, "I felt bad the first time I went out of the 34-foot tower.

"I looked down and didn't want to jump. When you jump, you feel like you are going to fall all the way to the ground. After you start jumping, it's not hard at all."

Brown claimed that he "knows more about myself now."

Jump week held an additional benefit for Food Specialist Carol A. Plottner, an 18-year-old private that will be stationed at Fort Meade, Md., after training. She says that jumping gives you a few moments rest from the constant supervision of the instructors. She claims that the Black Hats "see everything!"

Tuesday's cancellation was a disappointment for all of the students, especially for Pvt. David J. Crosby, who had made his first jump in December. He landed on a large rock and injured his back just before the Christmas holidays. He calls it, "a one-in-a-million-shot," that forced him to wait until Tuesday to jump again. "It was a 'good' jump," said Crosby, "I had no problems in the air. I was being blown toward the trees and prepared myself for a tree landing. I cleared the trees and landed in a clearing . . . in that clearing was a boulder." Crosby claims that his back was "too sore " after the accident to carry equipment. He also stated that he doesn't think that it would ever happen again.

If the 44th company had been able to jump twice Tuesday, they would have only two more "blasts" to make before they would get their wings. The students took one look, from the barracks, at the rain falling outside and the fog that covered Eubanks field and knew — not today — maybe tomorrow.

Sp4 Rebecca Dashiell

Soldier has enjoyed life in new country

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the Castro government pulled Sp4 Rebecca M. Dashiell's father out of law school, it started an exodus for her family that started in Cuba and ended, for her, at the U.S. Army Training Center on Sand Hill.

In 1970, the former law student landed with a 7-year-old Rebecca and the rest of his family in Miami. "My father filed for a visa," said Dashiell, a clerk-typist in the ATC, "we were accepted and were sent to Miami with just the clothes on our backs."

Being in a new country without the means to survive would have been more difficult for Dashiell's family had it not been for her godfather's help when they arrived. "My memories of that time are really vague," commented Dashiell, "but I can remember my godfather meeting us at the airport."

From the time that her family landed in Miami, until she entered the Army, Dashiell grew up as an American. Dashiell claims that she had very little trouble adjusting to a new country. Speaking in her soft voice, with a combination Spanish and southern accent, the 20-year-old soldier claims that picking up the language was no problem, "because I was so young."

When she entered the Army, her parents were upset. According to Dashiell, they did not feel that a military career was "lady-like". The Leons (Dashiell's maiden name) did not like her entering the Army, according to Dashiell, "Latin parents are very strict on that subject. They want you to be wives and mothers — that's the limit. They all tried to talk me out of it." Their attitude has changed, explained Dashiell, in the three and one-half years that she has been in the Army. Part of that attitude change has come about since the birth of her son. The cost of having her child in Martin Army Community Hospital was only $15 — as opposed to the $2,000 it cost for her civilian sister.

Dashiell counts as an Army benefit, the PT program designed for pregnant women. Her only regret was that she entered the program in the more advanced stages of her pregnancy. "If I would have started in the beginning . . . it would have helped me out. I was on a 'high-risk' status, so all I was able to do were the exercises."

Dashiell's plans to leave the Army in July to join her soldier/husband at his assignment in Europe. Sgt. Walter G. Dashiell was able to spend some time with his new son, before leaving for Germany last year.

Telecommunications center saves dollars with SPIRIT

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's telecommunications center got SPIRIT when the U.S. Army Communications Command (USACC) took a look at the way they were printing messages and saved the installation more than $14,000.

The USACC was concerned about the legibility of the more than 8,000 messages it received each month. Customers had been complaining that they were unable to read copies of electronic messages because they were too light. The problem, according to Wayne Scroggins, operations supervisor, telecommunications center, was the six-ply paper that was being used. New paper was no longer being produced and messages were being printed from existing stocks. "If the paper was old," commented Scroggins, "the carbons would be too dry to print the last three copies. If the paper was fresh, the last copy would look as good as the first."

Messages are printed in six copies to comply with the need to provide four copies to the addressee, one for the chief of staff reading file, and one for the unit's files.

The center would reproduce the message whenever the last few copies were illegible. The need to reproduce 24,000 copies a month carried a yearly price tag of $11,520.

The SPIRIT idea was to purchase the newer four-ply paper and reproduce two copies -- only as necessary. According to Scroggins, the four-ply system was the answer. The new paper arrived in boxes of 700 sheets at a cost of $17.70 per box. The center found that it used fewer boxes of the four-ply than it did of the older paper.

The savings in paper cost amounted to more than $750 per month. With the reproduction needs cut in half, the total savings, both in paper and reproduction costs came to $14,796

If you had a permanent-change-of-station (PCS) move during 1983, you might be able to get back some out-of-pocket expenses Uncle Sam didn't cover. Even if you don't itemize deductions.

The PCS expenses are considered an adjustment to income, not as itemized deductions. That means there isn't a minimum amount required in order to file IRS Form 3903, Moving Expenses. But in order to file the 3903, you have to file the Form 1040. You still don't have to itemize, but you do have to use the 1040.

These PCS expenses which can be claimed include:

- additional insurance coverage on household goods enroute
- the cost of shipping the family pet
- charges for renting trailers, roof racks and other moving items
- extra expenses resulting from shipping your car overseas
- added costs for exceeding your weight allowance.

All of the above may qualify as adjustments less any money the government paid you for your move.

There is no limit on the amount you can claim for moving household goods and travel expenses. But there is a limit on how much you can deduct for pre-move travel and temporary lodging.

Pre-move lodging costs and expenses incurred in buying or selling a house cannot exceed $3,000; not more than $1,500 of that can be used for a house-hunting trip and temporary lodging.

The Great Savannah Exposition — Parsons Brinckerhoff

Savannah adds new dimension to its many tourist attractions

The city of Savannah will add a new dimension to the many attractions that have already made it a travel destination for thousands of visitors annually. "The Great Savannah Exposition," a multimedia, historical exposition to be built in the train shed adjoining the Visitors' Center at Battlefield Park, will provide a perfect introduction to a city steeped in history.

Within the spacious brick building, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, Savannah's past will be brought to life using the technology of the present: a mixture of film images, optical illusions, sound projections, computer controlled, three-dimensional animated figures, and hands-on exhibits will create a fascinating journey through time.

When complete, The Great Savannah Exposition will consist of three major components. Visitors will enter a lobby area bedecked with an ornate chandelier and an elaborately decorated glass and wrought iron ticket booth. On one wall an enormous mural of intricate design and color will chronicle the major events in Savannah's history from the landing of James Oglethrope in 1733 to the present. Beyond the lobby, a doorway will lead into a beautiful theater where a dramatic production will provide an overview of Savannah's history.

Using a combination of film images, stereophonic sound reproduction, and theatronic characters, historical events will come alive — e.g., the meeting of Tomochichi and Oglethrope, the founding of the Girl Scouts by Juliet Low, Johnny Mercer at the piano. Savannah's patriots, politicians, inventors — Savannah's people — will all be there, the computer-controlled figures convincingly life-like as they tell their stories in the actual words of their historic counterparts.

Leaving the theater, visitors will enter the Exposition Hall, an open space decorated in antebellum splendor, filmed with objects from the past. Lastly, visitors will find themselves above a re-cretion of Battlefield Park as it appears today. Slowly and before the spectactors' eyes, the contemporary buildings will fade from view to be replaced by the scene of the Springhill redoubt on the fateful day in 1779, when the American forces attempted to capture it from the British. Development plans for Phase II entail conversion of the original Central of Georgia Railroad roundhouse, paint shop, and car barn into a specialty retail and food services complex. Phase II will include a modern convention hotel complex.

Construction drawings for the train shed renovation, together with exhibit designs and an architect's model, will be completed in February. Renovation of the building will begin in March, and installation of the exhibits will get underway in June. The Great Savannah Exposition is scheduled to open by the end of 1984. (Parsons Brinckerhoff Public Relations)

'Demons' near completion of training

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

(EDITOR'S Note:This is the story of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and are now in their eighth week of training.)

Jonathan Giffin is gone. His flat feet won't march on graduation day.

Monday he emptied his wallocker, packed his bags and moved into the holdover barracks — from there he will be going home — a civilian.

The survivors of the third platoon look around their barracks and Giffin's empty bunk reminds them of other absent comrades that started training with them. With each loss, the platoon members vow it will be the last, and they will finish together.

Besides the loss of Giffin, there have been other changes in the platoon, gone is some of the boyish fat, replaced by muscles built during basic. Also,the rag-tag bunch of civilians that gawked at the barber in the reception station have been replaced by a military unit.

The third platoon closed ranks after Giffin's loss and went back to their two-fold mission:to complete the training and beat the fourth platoon in the race for "Honor Platoon."

Last week the fourth platoon enjoyed a 12-point margin over the third. This week the third hopes to eliminate that margin with the results of the mid-cycle exam. The mid-cycle exam consists of nine stations where the soldier will be tested on the subjects taught during the first eight weeks of training.

Successful completion of the test signified the end of the "Demons" basic training. They now begin training on the various occupational specialties that make an Infantryman unique.

By the end of the exam, the soldiers left AO Eagle without knowing who was the winner in the platoon competition. The only information that the "Demons" knew for sure was that 86 percent of the company had passed. Those soldiers that failed will have an opportunity to be retested. If they fail once more -- they will be recycled.

Those that continue the training will draw their Phase II issue. They will receive their Class A uniforms that will say to the world that they are part of something. They are Army.

Film library can help liven up information classes

Cliff Squires

Sp5 Terry Dinkins gets film from the film library for a checkout request.

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Looking for a film or videotape to liven up an early morning command information class? Perhaps the film library at The Audiovisual Support Center has what is needed.

"We have nearly 7,000 films and videotapes on subjects ranging from chemicals to human relations," said Suzy Hood, film librarian. "Our most popular tape is titled "What You Are, Where You Were, When." It is used by units and organizations on post for classes on value judgement."

Serving nearly 400 customers a month, the local film library does not have the problem which some other Army TASC film libraries have-nonusage.

"Our problem is getting people to return films they have on loan. The loan period is for two weeks. It's become such a large problem that we are now freezing accounts of those who have overdue films. This means they can't check out anything such as training aid equipment until the films or tapes are returned," said Mrs. Hood.

Checking out films and tapes is simple, according to Mrs. Hood. Those in the grade of E-5 and above, plus civlian employees can check out a film or tape using a DA Form 4103 (Training and Audiovisual Support Loan). E-4 and below have to be on the unit's hand receipt account.

However Mrs. Hood suggests units and individuals desiring a specific film or films call the film library approximately two days in advance. Then the film can be booked for them. "We work on a first come, first served system and if their request gets here early, we can keep it for them," explained Mrs. Hood.

Walk-in service is also available, but there is a 5 film limit. The library will also make copies of films and tapes on hand if a unit wants to have a permanent copy.

The library also offers a viewing service. "If someone wants to view a film before they check it out, we have a room set aside," said Mrs. Hood.

Films and videotapes can also be ordered from other posts, but it might take two months to get them, according to Mrs. Hood.

The film library is located in building 1367 (next to the drill sergeants school). It is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8 to 12 a. m. and on Tuesday and Thursday from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m. More information may be obtained about services by call Mrs. Hood or Renee Kalawe at 545-7485.

Frequent inspections help cars last longer

By Curtis D. Earp
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the current cost of buying new cars, the average person is keeping his car longer. The older a vehicle gets, the more care is required for its upkeep.

These older vehicles will last for a long time with proper care and frequent inspections.

The problem comes when a vehicle is not properly cared for. The result is equipment failure that may result in citation by police authorities and may be hazardous not only to the driver, but to all traffic around him.

Many states have done away with mandatory yearly vehicle safety inspections, thus requiring the driver to be more conscious of the safety equipment on his vehicle.

A routine check that takes about five minutes could possibly prevent a needless accident. Areas which should be checked are:

Headlights (high and low beam)
Turn signals
Brake lights
Horn
Windshield wipers
License plate lights
Brakes

These checks should become a part of a routine that will need to be increased as your vehicle gets older. A few minutes, a few times a month, will make driving safer for everyone.

Workshop helps soldiers' wives deal with stress

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

What is stress? How do we get it? What can we do about it? These questions were part of a recent workshop for the wives of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade soldiers.

"At some time we all have stress — the problem is learning how to deal with it," said Mildred Mack, president of the sponsoring group, the Drill Sergeants' Wives Club of 1st ITB.

The workshop was led by Chaplain Emory Cowan, director of Clinical Pastoral Education and a counselor at the Family Life Center. He defined stress as "the rate of wear and tear on the body or any disruptive influence on a person — physical or psychological." He emphasized that stress produces "non-specific responses," whereas physical pain produces "specific responses." He listed several of a wide variety of emotions that may be produced by stress, saying that stress "can threaten, prod, scare, worry or thrill us."

Chaplain Cowan went on to say that all stress is not bad. "You need a little bit to keep your body going appropriately and to make life exciting and meaningful. If we didn't have stress, we would just be vegetables, but," he added, "too much stress causes us to become burned-out."

The group discussed the three general stages the body goes through when encountering stress. "The first," Chaplain Cowan said, "is the alarm stage when the body gets geared up to fight or run away." He used the example of a primitive man encountering a tiger.

"The second stage", he continued "is the resistance stage when the body tries to get back to normal and establish equilibrium."

If the stressful situation continues and the adaption of the second stage is lost, then we enter the third stage where "we experience some kind of exhaustion or burnout." Chaplain Cowan said, "We often can't run away from a stressful situation such as problems with spouse, job, boss, in-laws, finances — we are stuck. When stress becomes chronic we are in trouble."

He pointed out the important role stress plays in such physical illnesses as headaches, backaches, ulcers, hypertension, heart attacks and cancer. He urged the women to recognize the psychological warning signals of stress overload that could lead to physical illnesses: insomnia, depression, boredom, lack of interest, feelings of worthlessness or increase in drinking habits.

The group discussed how people in the military are especially prone to accidents and illnesses associated with stress. One workshop participant said, "I never was sick until I married a military man."

Chaplain Cowan added that even retirement can produce such stress that it becomes a "killer." He startled the group with the findings of a recent study that showed the life expectancy of military retirees: "the average number of paychecks a military retiree draws is 23!"

Each participant filled out questionnaires which helped her assess where she was in adjusting in her own particular life changes in the past year. Chaplain Cowan helped the women determine their own basic lifestyle and how this affected their ability to cope and impacted upon their physical health. They explored ways to develop healthier coping mechanisms, and, consequently, a healthier life.

rt Benning soldiers get their first training lifting the Army's new HUMVEE (high-mobil-ty, multi-wheeled vehicle.) An air crew rigged Benning's only test HUMVEE to Black Hawk helicopter Wednesday and hoisted it off Lawson Army Airfield.

Many 'jodies' received; contest deadline nears

The United States Army Infantry Center's cadence contest is in full swing. A total of 87 entries have been received from around the world as of last Friday.

Due to the overwhelming response of the contest thus far, the deadline has been extended until Feb. 28.

Many of the entries thus far have come from the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Contestants have ranged from a lieutenant colonel to a new soldier here for his initial training. A Department of the Army civilian, as well as a youth whose father is a reservist, have also submitted entries.

The contest is open to Army personnel world-wide, their family members and Department of the Army civilians.

Cadences have to be original and inoffensive.

The contest has been divided into three categories: mechanized, light infantry and general.

The deadline for submission is Feb. 28. Cadences should be sent to:

USAIC PAO
ATTN: BAYONET
Building 4, Room 601
Fort Benning, Ga. 31905

Entries need to include the author's name, unit, return address and what category the contestant wishes to compete in.

Trophies will be awarded to the first place winners in each category. In addition, copies of those cadences chosen as the top four in each division will be framed and presented to the winners.(USAIC PAO)

Army team readies for Infantry Marathon

By Bill Walton and Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eleven Army marathon runners, from nine different locations, have been at Fort Benning this week conducting the 1984 All-Army Marathon Trial Camp. The purpose of this camp is to select and mold the runners into a high caliber All-Army team to win the 1984 Infantry Marathon tomorrow.

They are: team coach, Capt. Terry M. Rauch, Fort Dietrich, Md.; PFC Terry Emlet, Fort Richie, Md.; Sp4 Gerald D. Hutchinson and SSgt. Alberto J. Rivas, United States Army Europe; SSgt. Richard N. Mata and 1st Lt. John C. Zizzi, Fort Bragg, N.C.; 2nd Lt. Samuel P. Cox, Fort Sam Houston, Texas; SFC Walter F. Mann Jr., Fort Myers, Va.; Capt. Thomas J. Palguta, Redstone Army Arsenal, Ala.; 1st Lt. Donald S. Starck, Fort Ord, Calif.; and the only woman in the group, 1st Lt. Carey S. Hill, Fort Dix, N.J.

An additional team member is the team physician, Capt. John Henderson, from Fort Benning's MACH.

Participants in the trial camp were selected by Department of the Army, based on previous marathon performances, according to Rauch.

"Many in this group have demonstrated that they can run a marathon in the low 2:30s," he said. "I think we have two strong 5-man teams ready for the Infantry Marathon."

Asked about how the training has been conducted during the trials, Rauch replied, "Marathon running is so individualistic that every runner has different methods of preparing himself. I didn't try to change anyone's training, what I wanted to do was to develop team spirit and morale. What we're planning is for either the Black or Gold Army team to win the Infantry Marathon."

Rauch has posted the best marathon time of any of the trials' participants, completing the 1983 REVCO, Cleveland, Ohio, Marathon in 2:24. After looking over the Infantry Marathon course he said, "The course is relatively flat and I think the winning time will be somewhere in the 2:18 - 2:23 range. So we have our work cut out for us."

The runners have a variety of reasons for participating in marathons and some have definite goals. "I can remember watching the Boston Marathon when I was eight. I told my parents I was going to be there one day and that's my goal, to run in the Boston Marathon," Mann said.

In addition to the Infantry marathon, the All-Army team is scheduled to run in the School of the Americas Marathon, in Panama, in May.

nfantry Marathon set for tomorrow

Connie McReynolds
Public Affairs Office

e Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon will t tomorrow, beginning at 10 a.m. for the mara- on and 10:30 a.m. for the half marathon.

pt. Robert Borja, race director, reported that Monday afternoon a total of 510 applications been received, 200 coming in on Monday. He ssed that most of these are from areas outside ocal area. "Local support has been fantastic we expect people from Columbus and the Fort ,en ning area to wait until Friday night or Saturday morning to register," Borja said.

Tonight buses will be located outside Briant Wells Gym to take runners on a tour of the race route at 30-minute intervals from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Also, a carbo supper of spaghetti will be held at Briant Wells Gym from 5 to 7 p.m. Cost for the supper is $3.

Registration fees for the races are $9.50 per person and $47.50 per team and may be paid up to 20 minutes before the races.

All road segments of the race route will be closed to all parallel vehicular traffic from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. These closings are: Vibbert Avenue; Lumpkin Road from Vibbert to Dixie; Dixie Road from Lumpkin to Sightseeing Road; Ingersoll Road; Gaudette Road; Gillespie Road; Carpenter Road; Michael Road; Sightseeing to Sunshine Road; Sunshine Road; 82nd Airborne Division Road; Indianhead Road and Anderson Road.

Limited vehicular traffic cutting across the race route will be allowed only at the following intersections: Vibbert Avenue and Ed wards Street; Vibbert Avenue and Ingersoll Road; Vibbert Avenue and Sigerfoos Road; Lumpkin Road and Sigerfoos Road and Indianhead Road and Lavoie Street.

Eddy Bridge linking Highway 165, Alabama, to 82nd Airborne Division Road, Fort Benning will be completely blocked to all traffic.

Also, residents of family housing area D in the vicinity of Gordon Field are reminded to park in driveways and parking lots and not on the roads.

Borja added that times from the marathon will be used for Olympic qualifying times and the time to beat will be two hours, 19 minutes and 02 seconds.

He said two pre-teens from Demopolis, Al., Heather and Hunt Dickson, will be trying for the national record in the half marathon. Both Dicksons hold numerous records already.

he Eagles beat the Warriors 10 to 6 in last week's YA basketball action.

Synopsis

agles 10.....Warriors 6

The Eagles and Warriors, of he Termite Division, provided he excitement for Tuesday ight's opening game.

Warriors, forward, Maurice ays, started the action off ith a bucket in the second uarter for two points and a alf time lead over the Eagles 0. Jalacy Hawkins, #25, for e Eagles made good one of vo free throws to lessen the arrior lead. Mays once again t his mark for another score. agle Dwight Toney, #34, ake one good free throw and nk a basket for two and a tie ore as the clock ran down.

In the overtime situation, it was Mays who again hit his mark. Hawkins would not be out done, he tied the game once again.

The game then went into double overtime and it was the Eagles who scored. Toney scored to get the lead and Hawkins put one through to insure the win.

Lakers 8.....Warriors 2

The Lakers jumped into the poll of play against the Warriors Thursday night and sailed to their third victory of the season. Scoring for the Lakers in the second quarter were White put the ball through the hoop in the third period for another two points. Leonard Thomas put the lone two Warrior points on the board late in the fourth quarter for a final score at 8-2.

Lakers 21.....Blazers 10

In the Pee Wee Division, it was the Lakers dashing the Blazers flames. In the first and second quarters, the teams were well matched with Blazer Herman Johnson starting the fire with four points in the first and Clarence Hinton with two in the second. Lakers' Edwardo Smith and Bernard Thompson pumped in the baskets to hold the Blazers to a one-point lead at the half.

In the third quarter, Laker Thomas Clausell packed in four points. Blazers Johnson and Shawn Gentry fired in baskets for two points each and the lead. On a Laker scoring drive in the fourth, Clausell, Smith, Thompson and Rafi Blount extinquished the Blazers hopes with a 21-10 victory.

Nuggets 21.....Blazers 18

The Blazers jumped off to a good lead when Shawn Gentry scored two and Herman Johnget Mike Wardlaw put four points on the board in the first half which gave the Blazers a three-point lead at the half. The Nuggets dominated the third quarter with Wardlaw scoring five and Travis Dumas two. Gentry and Johnson scored four points in the third for the Blazers.

The fourth quarter was a tossup with Wardlaw and Dumas scoring six for the Nuggets and Johnson six for the Blazers and a tie game at the whistle.

In overtime, it was Clarence Hinton scoring one of two freethrows for the Blazers, but in the end it was the Nuggets who glowed when Wardlaw and Dumas again scored two each for the overtime win.

Courtmasters 27.....Hawks 17

The Hawks scored the first quarter when Jonathan McNeil scored four points and Kris Profit two. The second quarter was a different story when the Courtmasters took control. Kevin Owens scored eight points, Darryl Norris two and Donald Langhorne four points and a comfortable five-point lead at the half. Owens came back in the third with four additional points. Marcus Leonard put two on the board in the third for the Hawks. The fourth quarter showed the Courtmasters were still in control, Owens had four, Langhorne one, Brian Marks one and Chad Duhon two. McNeil and Leonard scored five for the Hawks in the fourth but the Coutmasters had pulled it off with a ten-point win.

Rockets 38.....Spurs 36

The Spurs cut the Rockets red glare in the first half of Tuesday night's Junior Division game. Ricky Logo and John Cottingham hit the hoop three times each for 12 points, Stanley Maxwell twice for four and Lee Spitalnick made one of two freethrows for a half time score of 17-6 Spurs. The Rockets blasted off in the third and fourth periods when Vincent Williams scored five, Mike Neal six, Mike Dumas three and Warren Hodge with six to tie the game as the clock ran down.

In overtime play Logo and Cottingham scored six for the Spurs but they could not cool down the Rockets who took the game with eight points in overtime.

Warriors 44.....Spurs 43

The Warriors attacked the Spurs in the first period of play. Darrell Flowersand, Darrell Harris led the charge with four points each. Robert Cline had three and Glen Smith followed the pursuit with two for a first quarter score of 13-6 Warriors. The Spurs dug in and retaliated in the second. Ricky Log shot for five points. George Cofield two, Lee Spitalnick two, Kevin Price, eight, and John Cottingham two for a score at the half of 26-21 Spurs.

In the third quarter, the Warriors put together a ground to air attack with Harris scoring six, Cline two, Otis Brown one, Kevin Turner two and Dexter Barnett two which put the Warriors ahead at the end of the third 34-32. The fourth quarter was the deciding battle with the Warriors scoring 10 and the Spurs coming up with 11. The Warriors won the battle 44-43.

Patterson Award to honor outstanding OCS graduate

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 32nd annual Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award ceremony will be held next Friday at 11 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium.

The award is given to the officer selected as the most outstanding Infantry graduate of the Officer's Candidate School during the previous year. This year's recipient is 2nd Lt. Michael D. Hanley.

The Patterson Award is presented by Mrs. Patterson, wife of the late Secretary of War, for whom the award is named. An engraved .45 caliber service pistol and a $1,000 check are part of the award.

The OCS graduate is selected for the award based on qualities of leadership, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

On the same day at 2 p.m. in Wigle Hall, selected graduates of OCS who have distinguished themselves will be inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame.

This year there are 32 inductees. They are: retired Col. James F. Baker, USAR; Col. Johnnie W. Britton Jr., instructor, Naval Operations Department, Naval War College; retired Col. Leroy W. Conklin, USAR; retired Col. Eugene E. Crowden Jr., USA; Col. James R. Daniel, commander, Professional Education Center; Col. Walter B. Daniel, assistant C/S, G3, Hq. Third U.S. Army; retired Col. Shining shoes is his life's work

Shining boots and shoes is a part of every soldiers' life.

A few enjoy taking the time to put a high gloss shine on their foot gear. But, still others (like myself), prefer to leave the task to a professional.

Professional shoe shiners though, seem to be a dying breed. In our ever modernizing world, few men still call it their trade. Clarence Lee Walton is one man who still does. He has been shining shoes at Fort Benning for nearly 50 years.

Walton is a short and stocky black man. His hands, arms and shoulders are well-muscled from shining shoes for so many years. His wrinked face and his graying hair also show his age.

I find myself sitting in his shoeshine chair in Infantry Hall's barber shop at least a few times a week.

As you sit down, the familar aroma of his ever-present cigar fills your nostrils. Walton says he has tried to work with out it, but he just can't get motivated to shine shoes without his cigar.

Underneath his chair sits the tools of his trade: polish, wax, dye, rags and brushes. He uses them all with the precision a surgeon cuts with a scalpel.

After so many years, the process of shining shoes has become somewhat of an art form for Walton. His polish stained hands give attention to every inch of the shoe during the shining process. He makes sure he gives each pair of shoes the same tender care.

Talking to Walton, you find out he came to Fort Benning in 1938, at the age of 13. "Times were hard after my parents died. I didn't have anywhere to go or any food to eat. I didn't even have a shirt on my back or shoes on my feet," he remembers.

"But I was lucky. A post shoe shiner named James Wright took me in and brought me to Benning. He found me clothes to wear. He also got me a job cleaning tents and taught me to shine boots and shoes," he stated.

Walton was also 'taken in' by some of the soldiers he worked for. "The cooks always made sure I had something to eat. They would feed me after they fed the troops . . . After dinner, officers would always find me a place to sleep for the night. When I got older, they would even let me borrow their cars to go into town.

"Everyone was so nice to me. They took me in like I was kin. Because of their kindness, I decided to make Fort Benning my home," he exclaimed.

Robert McClain

Walton gives each customer a super shine every time they visit the barber shop

"As long as soldiers come to me for a shine, I will give them a shine they can be proud of."

With the exception of a short tour of duty in the Navy, Walton has spent most of his life working on post. "I hadn't been discharged from the Navy for one day, before I was back shining shoes at Benning," he stated.

Over his many years, he has worked in a variety of post shoeshine shops. He began working in Infantry Hall in 1968.

Since then, there has always been a line of soldiers waiting to have their boots shined by Walton. "I stay busy with all the work, but after all these years, I still enjoy it," he added.

I asked him if he would ever give up shining shoes. He replied, "As long as I still have my health and soldiers come to me for a shine, I'll always give them a shine they can be proud of."

How serious is alcoholism in the Army?

Capt. John Nelson, Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command-"I haven't seen any evidence that it's that serious, although there may be isolated cases. In the 12 years I've been in the Army, I know of only two such cases."

Pvt. 2 Lauren Breland, 524th Personnel Services Company-"I think it's very serious. You can find beer bashes going on at parties, or it's grab a beer at the bowling alley, another at the club and so on. I know people who are alcoholics and it's sad."

1st Sgt. J. C. Larkin, Company A, Headquarters Command-"Frankly, I don't think alcoholism is that serious a problem in the Army. I would venture to say that probably drugs are more of a problem then alcohol. I think with alcohol, the Army has a pretty good handle on the situation."

Sgt. Glenda Fangman, USAIC Military Police Company-"Based on the statistics we have for Jan. 1 to 15, I think alcoholism is a serious problem. During that period of time, 48 Fort Benning personnel were involved in DUIs. There were also a number of domestic disturbances on and offpost which involved alcohol."

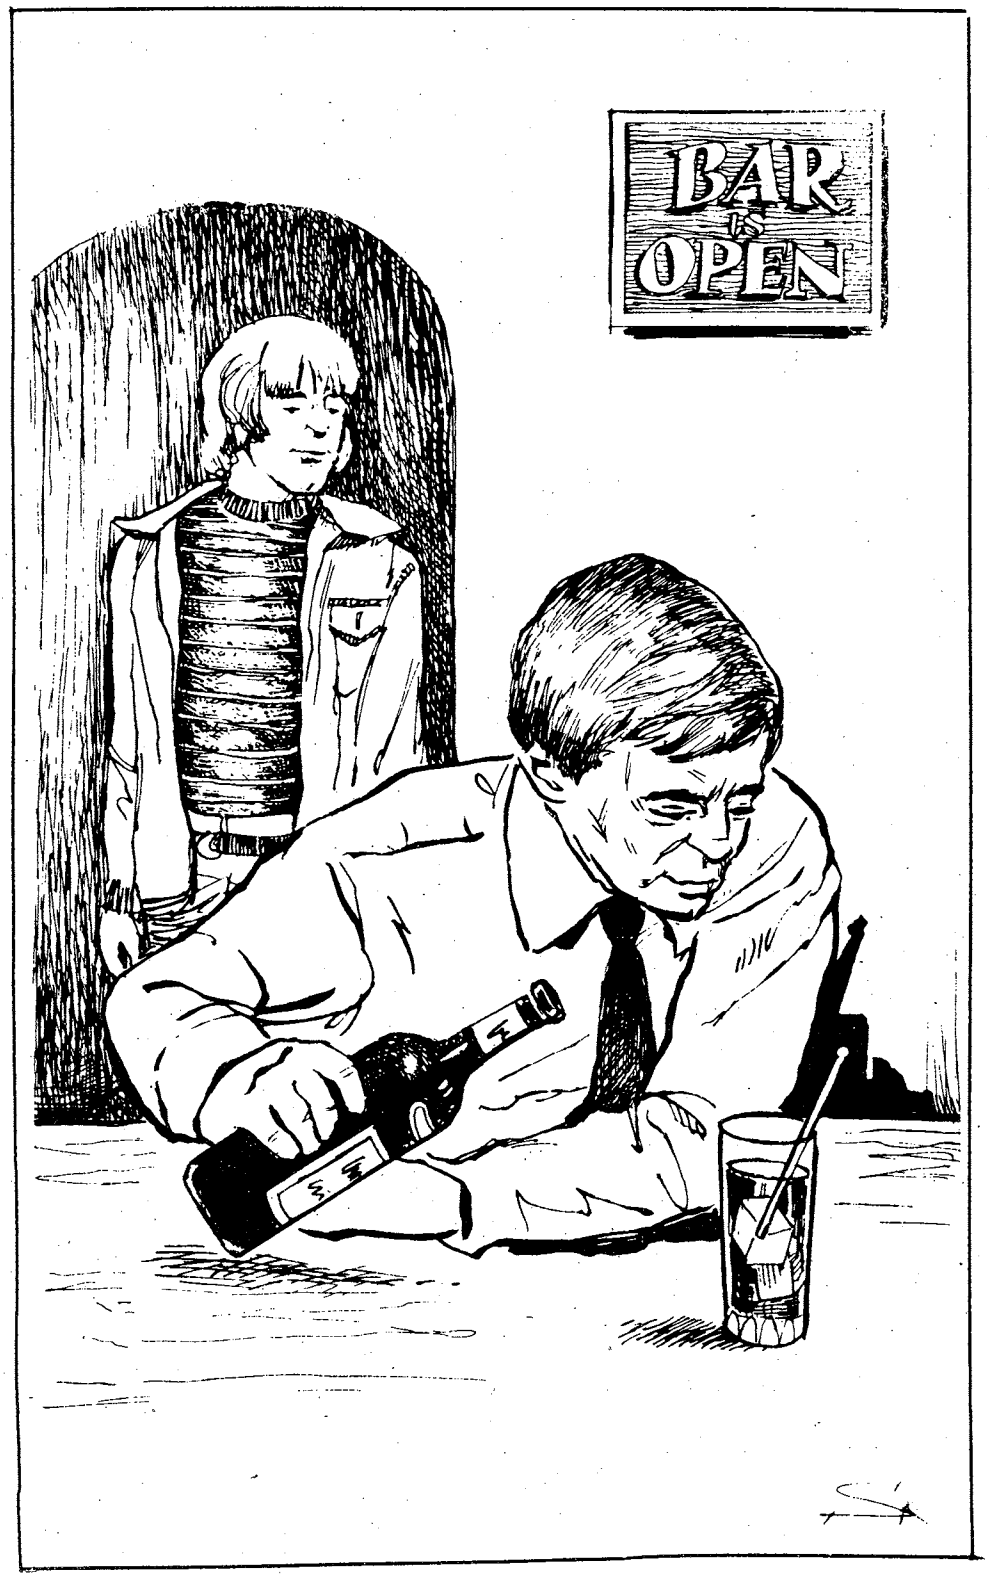
One out of every 10 Americans is alcoholic



One compulsive drinker tells story of his ruined career and family life

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

No one sets out to be an alcoholic, according to Dr. Tom H. Tennent, Fort Benning alcohol and drug control officer, but it is generally estimated one out of every 10 Americans who drink is one.

At one time, Ed was one of the statistics. For him, it began rather innocently during his senior year in high school in 1948.

"A lot of the other guys were drinking at the time and I decided to drink too. I wasn't a compulsive drinker. Sometimes it would be a couple of drinks during the week. Other times, I'd go a couple of weeks without drinking," said Ed.

Ed quit drinking for a period of time after he was drafted in 1950. But when he found himself stationed in Korea in 1951, it was another story.

With the big boys

"I was with the big boys . . . it was combat conditions . . . everybody drank heavily . . . there was nothing else to do . . . so we just kind of turned it on . . . just something to pass the time," explained Ed.

The drinking continued when he returned stateside and reenlisted. Ed's nights were spent in the club downing four or five drinks.

"It never occured to me that I had a problem. My standing in the company was pretty high. I wasn't getting into trouble because of my drinking. Nobody was coming down on me for it. I wasn't getting any DUIs or anything," said Ed.

First brush with trouble

His first brush with trouble came in 1960 while stationed in Germany.

"It was there my drinking became really compulsive," recalls Ed. "I got to where I had to have a drink, and then I started getting in trouble. I began failing to repair, missing formations, violating the curfew regulations . . . I was reduced to staff sergeant, then I was reduced again to corporal, both times as a result of drinking."

Again Ed wasn't concerned about his drinking.

"There were no symptoms of alcoholism, at least I didn't think there were. No severe withdrawal symptoms or anything like that. All I had was a normal hangover, maybe some morning sickness, but one drink and that was taken care of," said Ed.

Continuing to deny he had a problem with alcohol, Ed returned to the U. S. in 1963 to what he considered a choice assignment. Once again he was able to stop his drinking for a period of time until he found out the situation in the unit.

"I waited until I found out how things ran in the unit, then I planned my drinking around them. That's one thing I can say, no matter where I went during my career, I always did a good job. I had high standards," said Ed.

But, there was an ulterior motive behind having such high standards Ed also admits.

"An alcoholic isn't stupid. He wants to get as much advantage on his side as possible for those times when he does fall," Ed explained.

Troubles continue

But eventually trouble caught up with him once again. By this time Ed had quit taking his drinks in a shot glass. He had switched to drinking straight from the bottle.

"I was AWOL and I lost a stripe. We were scheduled to have a parade that morning and I missed the whole thing. In fact, I didn't get in until that evening" said Ed.

Proper dental health care vital to children's growth

National Children's Dental Health Month will be observed throughout the nation during February 1984. As part of the observance, the Fort Benning Dental Activity, in cooperation with the BAYONET, today begins a series of seven articles on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

When baby's first tooth appears, mother writes the date in her baby book. Father takes a picture of it. The grandparents brag about its arrival to their friends. Everyone seems to know that the appearance of the first tooth marks an important step in the baby's development.

Let's take a look at the primary teeth to see how they develop and how they should be cared for during these important early years.

The tooth buds begin to grow between the sixth and eight weeks of pregnancy. As the weeks pass, the buds become tooth-shaped, and their cells form enamel, dentin ad the other parts of the teeth. The enamel starts to calcify (harden) between the third and sixth months of pregnancy.

During this time, it is important for the pregnant woman to eat a diet containing enough calcium, phosphorous and vitamins. If her diet is inadequate, the baby's teeth may not develop properly.

As a rule, the first tooth to come through the gums is one of the central incisors, or front teeth. This tooth often appears when the child is about 6 months old. By age 2½, the remaining primary teeth are usually in place in the mouth.

In between these times, parents may blame a child's fussiness, diarrhea, drooling, night waking and even fever on "teething." Studies have shown, however, that teething is not the cause of many of these problems. It is especially important for parents to realize that a child with a fever is ill and needs to be seen by a physician. Mistakenly blaming the fever on teething can unnecessarily delay medical treatment.

As soon as teeth appear in the mouth, they can start to decay. The day your baby's first tooth appears, you must assume an important new responsibility — cleaning the child's teeth. After the baby eats, clean the teeth with a wet wash-cloth or gauze pad. This will remove plaque, the film of bacteria that forms on everyone's teeth and causes dental disease.

In addition, take care not to give your baby a bottle of milk, formula, sugar water or fruit juice when putting the baby to bed at night or during the day for a nap. This can cause "nursing bottle mouth," a condition in which a young child's teeth are affected by serious decay.

Remember that baby's first tooth isn't just cute, it's important! By taking good care of it — and the 19 other primary teeth that will follow it — you can help your child go through life with a healthy, happy smile. (DENTAC)

Some veterans now eligible for routine dental care

The Veterans Administration is looking for a small number of veterans who now are eligible for dental care the agency once denied because of a legal technicality which has been corrected.

The retroactive benefit involves only veterans who served more than one enlistment. Veterans who, after application to the VA, were denied replacement of missing teeth which were extracted during a prior period of service qualify for the benefit.

Commenting on this technicality, VA Chief Medical Director Donald L. Custis, M.D., explained that eligibility for routine dental care for the veterans involved required that an individual apply for the care within one year after release from ervice. Each military enlistment, legally, marks a separate period of service, however. Thus, in order to establish eligibility for VA replacement of missing teeth, a veteran would have had to make timely applications to the VA following the period of ervice in which the teeth were lost — even though the individual was on active duty during a subsequent enlistment.

This technicality required VA to deny replacement of certain service-connected missing teeth if their loss was not during their last period of service. Custis said this confusing and inequitable situation was corrected with the passage of Public Law 97-72.

Veterans who might be eligible, and who are still in need of replacement of their missing teeth, must make application to VA before April 5, 1984. The necessary forms may be obtained from any VA health-care facility. Dental care to be provided by VA will be restricted to treatment that was previously denied and will not include the veterans' other current dental needs. (VA)

Post to celebrate Black History Month

By Wilhemina Coffee
USAIC EOCO

When you walk into your dining facility and smell chittlins, cornbread and black-eye peas, you better thank Carter G. Woodson before you tear into the "Soul Food" served in various units during Black History Month.

Woodson is not the name of the senior food service officer on Fort Benning, but rather the Dean of Liberal Arts at Howard University that got the country to first recognize the contributions to the American culture of its black citizens.

Carter Godwin Woodson was born Dec. 19, 1875 — not a good time in American history to be either poor or black. Woodson, the son of former slaves, came from a large family, and in Buckingham County Virginia large family meant p-o-o-r.

Regular schooling was out of the question in Woodson's family; his extra income was needed to feed the growing family. He and his brother moved to Huntington, W.Va., where they worked in the Fayette County coal fields. It wasn't until he was 20 that he was able to attend school on a regular basis.

Woodson saw that education was his ticket out of the coal mines and within two years had completed the course of study at Douglas High School. He took his diploma across the state line to Berea College in Kentucky where in 1901, he received his bachelor's degree.

In between his periods in school as a student, Woodson found time to teach language in the Philippines and Washington, D.C.

He returned, years later, to his old alma mater, Douglas High school — not as a student — but as the principal.

Dr. Woodson's search for education soon took him to Asia and Europe. While in Europe, he studied at the Sorbonne. His travels abroad convinced him that the efforts and struggles of the black people in America were either being ignored or misrepresented and he returned to America determined to correct the situation.

He realized the need for special research into the neglected past of the black American, subscribing to the Voltairian theory that, "Those who are ignorant of their history are doomed to relive it."

In 1915, Dr. Woodson organized the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History. The same year, his book, "The Education of the Negro Prior to 1861," appeared in print.

One year later, Dr. Woodson published the Journal of Negro History, which despite a world-wide depression, and two world wars has never missed an issue.

Dr. Woodson's place in history was assured when in 1926, the government established the second week in February as Negro Histroy Week. The date for the initial celebration was selected so the birthdays of two champions of human rights would fall within that period — Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass.

President signs special job training bill

WASHINGTON — A $75 million appropriation measure signed recently by President Reagan allows certain unemployed Vietnam era and Korean conflict veterans to participate in a special job training program.

Officials at the Veterans Administration say the program will fund 50 percent of the starting hourly wages up to $10,000 for a maximum of 15 months training for certain veterans with service-connected disabilities and up to nine months for other veterans. The program also will allow employers to enter into agreements with educational institutions to provide vocational instructions.

Officials say the program is a joint effort with the labor department but will be administered by the VA. Applications may be obtained from any VA regional office or any state employment job service office.

Foreman is part of post's black history

By Bill C. Walton
SAIC Public Affairs Office

"We try to say yes to any reasonable request. Also, we tell our customers how we can help them rather than find excuses why we can't," said Roderick Holmes, chief of Instructional Equipment Support Branch, Directorate of Industrial Operations, when asked how he wants his branch to function.

As the electronics maintenance foreman, Holmes, a WS-12, supervises approximately 40 civilian personnel, which includes mechanics, electronic technicians, public address systems operators, crypto custodians, warehouse worker and drivers; plus, the military communications personnel who work in the branch.

The branch's mission is to provide instructional equipment support for the Infantry Center, Infantry School and local National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve units.

To accomplish this mission, the branch is divided into seven sections: classroom equipment section, classroom equipment pool, sound maintenance section, audio section, special sound section, bleacher section and audio maintenance section.

Holmes is no newcomer to the electronics field. He was serving as the Sergeant Major of the Fort Benning Communications Electronics Department when he retired from the Army, after 27 years, in 1974. His Army career included four overseas tours; Germany, Republic of Vietnam, Korea and Laos.

He started working in the sound branch of the electronics department in July 1974 as an electronics mechanic, was promoted to electronics technician in December 1981, and to his present position last June.

Very active in fraternal organizations, Holmes has held several positions of note in three organizations including: Potentate of Al Faruk Temple No. 145; Worshipful Master of Electric City Lodge No. 322; Commander-in-Chief Columbus Consistory No. 85; Worthy Patron Electric City Chapter No. 482; High Priest St. Andreas Chapter No. 39; and Joshua, W.E. Terry Court No. 6.

He and his wife, Ezera, and two daughters, Desiree, 14, and Regina, 11, live in Oakland Park. They belong to Baptist Friendship Church and are active in the affairs of the church. Ezera is a member of the Usher Board, both daughters are on the junior usher Board and Holmes is training to be a deacon.

Completely happy in his second career, Holmes described his philosophy this way, "My mission is to support and I am in a good position to help people. i believe I have the best job at Fort Benning."

Family practice clinics aid patients, doctors

Clinic serves balanced assortment of patients

The American Academy of Family Physicians and the American Board of Family Practice define family practice as "comprehensive medical care with particular emphasis on the family unit, in which the physicians continuing responsibility for health care is neither limited by the patients age or sex nor by a particular organ system or disease entity."

In everyday language, that says family practice physicians will have the opportunity to diagnose and treat patients of all ages, both sexes and those with many different ailments.

The Department of Family Practice, Martin Army Community Hospital, is comprised of the 197th Family Practice Clinic, the Aviation Medicine Family Practice Clinic, the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Clinic and the Family Practice Residency Training Program.

All personnel assigned to the 197th Infantry Bridage (Seperate) and their family members are eligible for care and should receive their primary health care through the family practice clinic on Kelley Hill.

All personnel on flight status and their family members as well as certain aviation-related unit personnel and their families are eligible for care and should receive all their primary care through the Aviation Medicine Family Practice Clinic at Lawson Army Airfield.

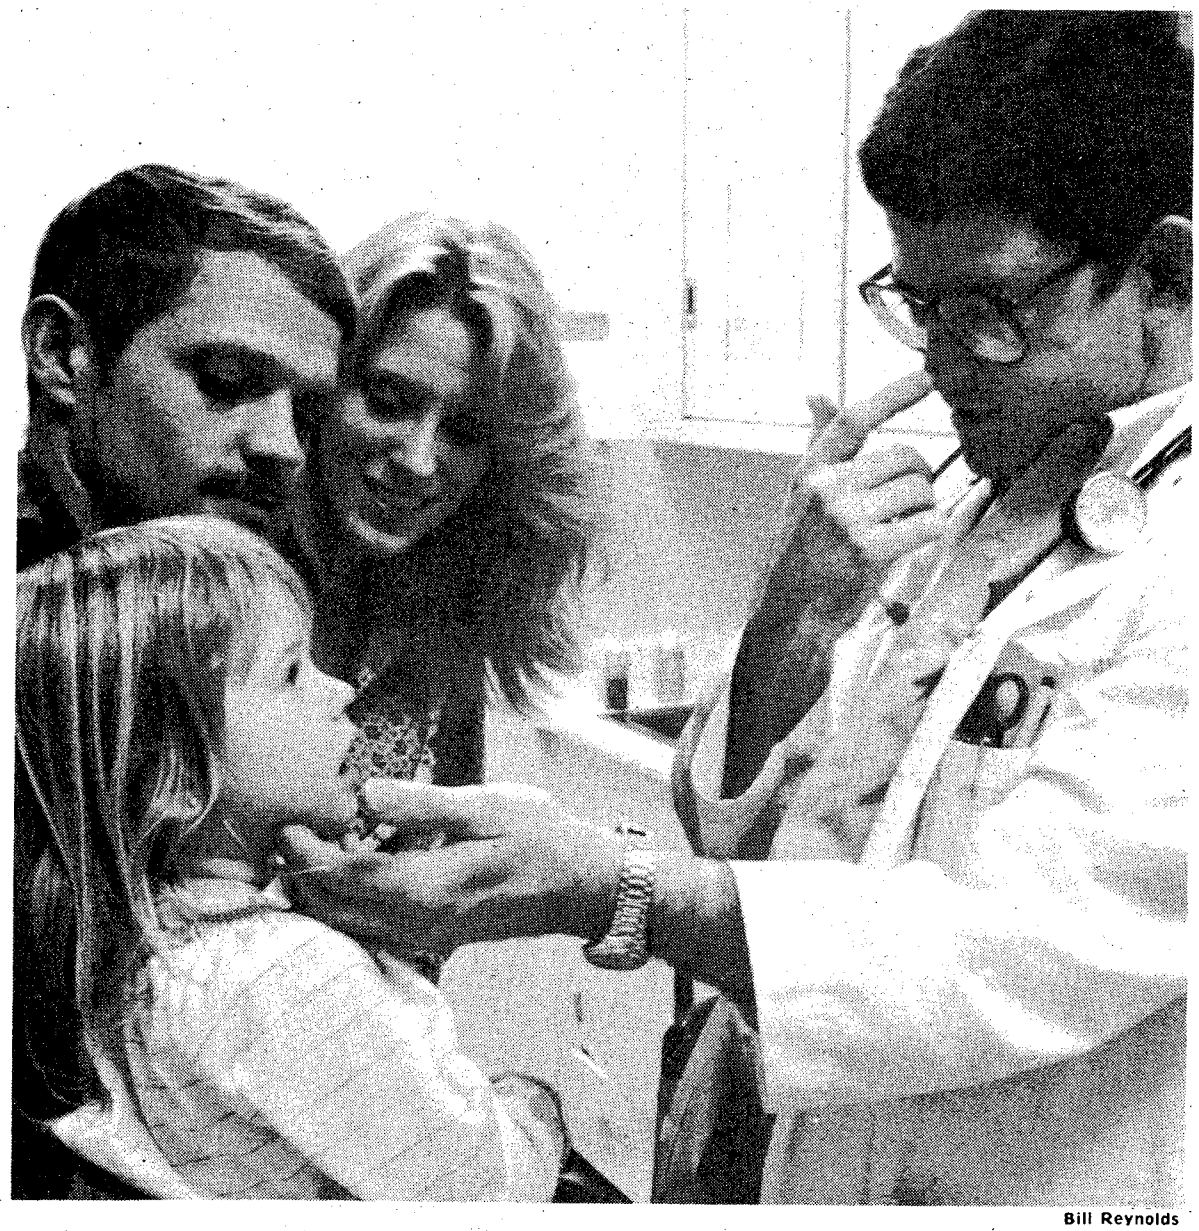
Active duty personnel and their family members who are in a PCS status at Fort Benning and who have one year remaining in their present tour here are eligible for enrollment in the patient panels of the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Clinic.

These panels serve as the cornerstone of the Family Practice Residency Training Program and, as such, are subject to the guidelines of the Residence Review Committee for Family Practice of the Accreditation Committee on Graduate Medical Education (ACGME).

These guidelines require the residents to receive broad exposure in a variety of disease processes and patients of varied age, sex and social economic background. The ACGME guidelines therefore recommend not to have exclusive enrollment of either all active duty personnel and their families or retirees and their families.

The Chief, Department of Family Practice and the Director of Residency Training try to maintain a balance of approximately 50 percent active dity and 50 percent retirees in the residents' panels. This ensures that the young physicians are exposed to the pediatric and obstetrics experience of the young adult population as well as the more chronic disease processes of the retired population.

In order to maintain the 50 to 50 active duty to retired ratio, active duty personnel who are enrolled in family practice and who retire are transferred to the retired waiting list. To keep these personnel on the panels would, over several years, lead to too many retirees on the panels. This might well result in the Family Practice Training Program losing accreditation.



Bill Reynolds

Captain William L. Bradshaw examines Valerie Perdue at MACH.

Obstetrical care

Obstetrical (OB) care, as part of comprehensive family medicine, is available through the Department of Family Practice. At the 197th Family Practice Clinic, however, due to the large number of obstetric patients, the two physicians are unable to personally manage and deliver this large volume. Each physician maintains a small number of obstetric patients which he will follow and deliver. Routine prenatal care is provided by the clinic to all obstetric patients eligible for care at the 197th Family Practice Clinic. At delivery, however, these patients will be delivered by the OB-GYN Service, which includes family practice residents at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Obstetrics is also part of the comprehensive care provided by the Aviation Medicine Family Practice Clinic to eligible obstetric patients. The three physicians must, due to significant flight surgeon duties, however, maintain a limited number of obstetric patients.

Obstetric care is available through the Family Practice Clinic Martin Army Community Hospital for those families who are presently enrolled on panels. At the discretion of the Chief, Department of Family Practice, due to the necessity of ensuring that all residents have adequate OB experience, exceptions to this policy of prior enrollment are occasionally made.

Applications

Applications from retired personnel are at present not being accepted. Plans are under way to create a computerized retired waiting list in an attempt to more efficiently manage the large number of retirees who request enrollment in family practice.

Personnel and family members eligible for care at the 197th and the Aviation Medicine Family Practice need not apply, but should ensure that their medical records are located at the respective clinics.

Incoming personnel who process through the Welcome Center will receive an application for family practice and need only to return the application to the department of Family Practice.

Those active duty personnel who have been on station for some time and wish to apply may complete an application at the Family Practice Clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital.

Questions regarding the functioning of other enrollment in the three family practice clinics should be directed to the respective clinic at the following numbers: Aviation Medicine, 545-2162/2163; 197th Family Practice Clinic, 544-4279/3484; and Martin Army Community Hospital FPC, 544-4236. (MACH)

Marshal's Viewpoint

Common sense tips aid in rape prevention

By Curtis D. Earp
Post Provost Marshal

What is rape? The legal definition of rape is the unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by a man without her consent and chiefly by force or deception.

Rape is one of the ugliest and most feared of all crimes. Its very nature is humiliating to the victim, and is frequently accompanied by physical violence, forced sodomy, and other acts that further traumatize and humiliate the victim.

A reported rape is committed every two minutes in the United States. The victims are from all racial, ethnic and social groupings.

An analysis of rapes occurring on Fort Benning during 1983 involving military personnel or their family members revealed that in almost every case the woman was ALONE, walking in a poorly lighted area, and accepted a date or ride from a stranger.

What can you do to prevent yourself from becoming a rape victim? The most important factor in preventing rape is using common sense. Trust your intuition . . . .

The following are a few hints which, if heeded may prevent you or a loved one from becoming a rape victim:

- Never hitchhike, accept rides from strangers, or even enter a vehicle with a group of males that you only casually know.
- If possible never walk alone, there is safety in numbers.
- Walk in well lighted areas.
- Avoid dark alleys, doorways or isolated areas.
- Do not respond to cat calls, whistles or remarks.
- Keep your hands free and never overload yourself with packages.
- Keep your car doors locked and windows closed when driving.
- Check the back seat of your car before getting in.
- If car problems occur on the road, raise the hood and remain in the car. If a motorists stops, ask him to call the police and a tow truck.

If you become a rape victim, report it immediately to the police. There are several important things to remember which will assist with the investigation. They are:

- Time is of utmost importance, so report the incident as soon as possible.
- Report all details initially so that a search for the assailant can begin.
- Give as accurate a description as possible of the assailant and any vehicles involed.
- Do not wash or change clothing. Valuable evidence can be obtained from an examination. The military police will see that you receive immediate medical care.

When the police apprehend the suspect, you may have to be a witness in a court proceeding. Keep in mind that this is necessary in order to keep the rapist from going free and endangering someone else.

The Military Police are here to serve and protect you — but they need the assistance and active concern of everyone assigned, working, and living on the installation.

Always trust your intuition and use common sense.

Trainer helps keep Benning soldiers physically fit

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The fitness center in building four is a busy place. Specialist four Michael Beasley, who works there as a physical fitness trainer said that some 200 people are helped each day at the center.

"We do individual programs for each person that comes in, so it can get pretty hectic here," Beasley said.

Beasley, one of three enlisted members that work at the fitness center, does a fitness appraisal on each person which includes total strength tests for absolute dynamic strength assessments and cardiovascular assessment; sets up goals and expectations and designs a personal exercise program.

"Everything is done on an individual basis. We set up a three-day a week workout every other day.

"We work one to one with the people that come in. After the second visit, after they are familiar with the equipment here and we've worked out a program for them, they are on their own. We are here to monitor them and be here if they need us."

Beasley said the fitness center started a year ago with a few pieces of equipment, now the center has Nautilus equipment, two Universal gym sets, three sets of Olympic weights, six exercise bicycles and three computerized treadmills.

Although any active duty member, retiree or family member may use the center, Beasley said several of the people that come in are referred by the Physical Therapy Clinic at Martin Army Hospital.

"I just completed an eight-week course at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., at the Physical Fitness Academy. Although our MOS, 03C, physical activities specialist, is not new, we must now take this course to keep our MOS.

"I've been in this MOS for four years and worked for three years in civilian life at a family fitness center. It's part of my life. I chose it to be a way of life for me because I enjoy it and because health is one of our most important assets."

Connie McReynolds

Sp4 Michael Beasley monitors SFC John R. Thompson's workout on one of the computerized treadmills in the fitness center.

Benning learning center offers programs for all

The Individual Learning Center (ILC) offers a unique opportunity to improve learning and skills to the entire Fort Benning population. There are programs for all.

The active duty personnel have access to all current study material from classroom review and reinforcement to SQT Soldiers Manuals and reference material.

Additionally, family members can use the ILC for enrichment programs such as the speed reading course, GED review materials, Guide to Wine, or tennis lessons.

Civilians employees can use the ILC for the Basic Supervisors Course or management theory programs. The ILC offers TV video tapes on these subjects as well as TEC tapes and equipment for use.

The history of the Army has been closely tied to the men who have led and shaped it over the years. The Individual Learning Center has a collection of video tapes tracing the lives of some of the Army's most famous generals, from birth to the highlights of their careers. These tapes are approximately 30 minutes running time ad can be viewed by stopping in during lunch. Equipment is available for individual or small group viewing.

Tapes are available on the following leaders:

The Pershing Story: General John J. Pershing
General George C. Marshall
General Omar Bradley
General Douglas MacArthur
General Dwight D. Eisenhower
General Joseph Stilwell
Lieutenant General George S. Patton

Also available is the Time Life video series of famous commanders. These tapes are of longer duration but very professionally done. The subjects in this series are:

Isoroju Yamamoto - Parts I & II
Erwin Rommel
Douglas MacArthur - Parts I & II
Sir William Slim - Parts I & II
Georgi Zhukov
Sir Arthur "Bomber" Harris
Dwight Eisenhower - Parts I & II

The Individual Learning Center is located in building 4, room 236. The facility is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday - Friday. There are over 4,200 TEC lessons and 8,000 FMs, TMs, ARs and other reference materials available for study. (ILC)

Haley to speak in honor of Black History Month

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Roots author Alex Haley and Dr. John Townsend, the first black student to attend Columbus College, will be featured speakers during a month-long series of programs in celebration of Black History Month in February at Columbus College.

Under the theme "Reaching Above and Beyond," the programs include speeches, films, music, panel discussion, an art exhibit, a gospelfest, and an awards banquet.

Haley's lecture, which is sponsored by the Student Union, will be at noon on Feb. 21, in the Fine Arts Hall auditorium. Haley went from a career in the Coast Guard to international renown with "Roots," a chronicle of his family's transition from Africa to America. The ABC-TV miniseries set viewer records when it was aired in 1977.

Tickets to the lecture are $5 general admission, $2 for students other than Columbus College students, and free to Columbus College students, faculty and staff.

Townsend was the first black student at the college, enrolling at the then-junior college in 1963. He went on to earn a bachelor's degree in political science in 1967, a master's in adult education in 1974, and an education specialist (six-year) degree in adult continuing education in 1976, and a doctorate in educational psychology and educational administration in 1982 — all from the University of Georgia.

Townsend will be guest speaker at a program in which local citizens will be honored with awards bearing his name. The Dr. John Townsend Achievement Awards will be presented at a Black Applause Banquet at 7 p.m. on Feb. 17, in the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center for Continuing Education. The awards are in the areas of public service, sports, medicine, arts and entertainment, government, business, education, military, media and religion.

The Black History Month programs also include two symposiums featuring prominent citizens from the Columbus community and the college. Symposium topics include education on Feb. 8, and health on Feb. 15. The symposiums, which are free and open to the public, will be at 7 p.m. in the Davidson Student Center room 208.

The celebration takes on a musical favor with a Black History Gospelfest from 3-5 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 5, in the Davidson auditorium. Church and community groups will perform.

A Black Heritage Fair featuring art works from the Chattahoochee Valley is scheduled for Feb. 26, in the Davidson Center. Artists from throughout the area have been invited to display their works.

Films scheduled for the month include Ain't Misbehavin on Feb. 20 and Here and Now on Feb. 24, both at noon, 6:30 and 9 p.m. in the Davidson auditorium.

Martin Army celebration honors Army Nurse Corps anniversary

By Clark R. DuCharme
MACH PAO

Yesterday, the nurses at Martin Army Community Hospital put on old uniforms and strutted around the hospital dining facility as part of the celebration of the Army Nurse Corps' birthday.

The celebration commemorated their 83rd year in the Army Medical Department.

There have been men and women that have served with America's armed forces as nurses since 1775. But it was not until 1901 that the Army made it official. According to hospital officials, it was the service of the contract nurses during the Spanish-American War that paved the way for the permanent corps.

Since the establishment of the corps, Army nurses have served with the fighting men in places like Chateau Theirry, Bataan, Corregidor, Anzio, Bastogne, Pusan, or Pleiku. In peacetime, they care for the soldiers and their families and respond with the Army to the world-wide needs of people in times of natural disaster and displacement.

Local reserve hospitals, the 73rd USAR from Columbus and the 1207th USAR from Tuskegee, Ala., joined the 75 ANC officers from MACH in their celebration Thursday. They were joined by civilian guests from local nursing schools, hospitals and retired ANC officers.

The reception, hosted by Col. M. Lou Hopson, chief, Department of Nursing, and Brigadier General nominee Alcide M. LaNoue, commander, MACH, featured a slide presentation on highlights of ANC history. The slide show was provided by the U.S. Center for Military History.

Members of Fort Benning's nurse corps dressed in a variety of historical uniforms from the corps' past.

Martin Army ANC officers also donated various ANC memorbilia for display in the hospital lobby.

The Infantry Museum (formerly the old hospital) joined with the corps in its celebration by displaying medical-related items throughout its corridors. The museum has on display such items as a sterilizer used in 1914, glass syringes, medical packs and amputation saws.

GETTING AROUND CAN BE EXPENSIVE.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Unlike the Army, most civilian jobs don't provide transportation. You already know how much cars and gasoline cost.

But wait'll you see what it costs to ride subways, buses or commuter trains these days.

There's a way to cope. Just spend one weekend a month with your local Army Reserve unit, and you'll earn a lot more than bus fare.

Did you know that an E-5 with four years' experience now makes over $115 for a Reserve weekend?

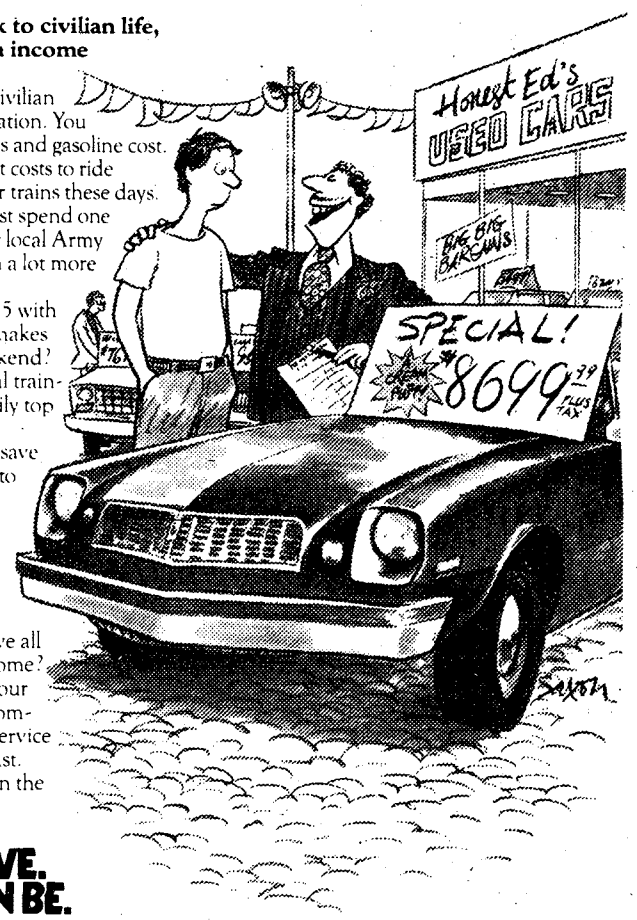
Add in two weeks annual training pay and the total can easily top $1,922 per year.

You can also continue to save by buying tires and other auto accessories through the PX. Reservists get PX privileges.

Plus retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have all that waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your reenlistment NCO or unit commander. Or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. The cost of getting around on the outside increases every day.



ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Certain veterans benefits are tax-exempt in 1984

ATLANTA — Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler is reminding Georgia veterans and their families that some of the benefits which they may be receiving are exempt from taxation.

Included among these tax-exempt benefits are: disability compensation and pension; VA grants to service-connected veterans for specially-adapted home and automobiles; educational assistance (including subsistence payments to trainees enrolled in vocational rehabilitation programs), and special clothing allowances payable to service-connected disabled veterans whose clothing is subjected to excessive wear due to their use of prosthetic or orthopedic devices.

Also exempt from federal income tax are dividends and proceeds from government life insurance policies, but any interest earned on insurance dividends left on deposit with the Veterans Administration is not exempt and, therefore, must be reported on both federal and state tax returns.

Wheeler advises individuals having questions about their tax returns to call the Internal Revenue Service at the following number, 327-7491. Persons elsewhere in Georgia should call the IRS at the toll-free number 1-800-424-1040. (VA)

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain Jeffrey S. Mercer
USA MEDDAC

Thanks — one thing we may all give and does not cost a thing. We give thanks in our prayers, but to whom do we pray? It appears a silly question when the answer of God is so obvious. But in truth there are many prayers which are not prayers to God at all. They serve, instead, to give ourselves a pat on the back.

A good example of this kind of prayer is the story of the Pharisee and the publican found in Luke 18:10-13:

"Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice a week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner."

Here we see a contrast which reflects differences between folks even today. By most standards, it would appear that the Pharisee was righteous. yet, his prayer, under the pretext of giving thanks, was a vehicle by which he could recite his virtue. He may have addressed himself to God, but the prayer was focused on his own actions. The key word of the Pharisee is "I". "I did this and I did that." He thought of himself first and everything else second.

The publican, in contrast, prayed to God, not to himself. The central thought in the publican's mind was his own unworthiness in light of God's love and forgiveness.

The Pharisee and the publican also exemplify different attitudes held about God. Some people view God as the Pharisee did. They regard God as a corporation who gives certain dividends when you buy enough stock. Prayer merely serves to let God know how much he owes us.

Others may view God as the publican did. They recognize God as loving and forgiving us, not because of what we do, but in spite of it. Jesus did not approve of the life the publican led — a life of graft which preyed on the earnings of others. Jesus despised such a life. Yet, he understood forgiveness and repentance. The Pharisees of the world get locked in on themselves The publicans who recognize their own failings and inadequacies are open to God's forgiveness.

We need sincerity in prayer, but it is almost an insult to God the way some prayers are said. If we were to thank a friend who had given us a great deal the way we thank God for His blessings (with a mumbling monotone which is always the same), the friend would probably say, "If that's your thanks, you can forget it!"

We need sincerity in prayer, not a mumbling recital of words which have no real meaning for us. Prayer is communication with God — conversation with the Lord.

Part of the problem with the Pharisee's prayer was that it was for his own glorification, for his class, for his kind of people. This type of prayer was offered in Jesus' day, and can still be heard today. Listen to the prayer of the modern Pharisee: "God, I thank thee that I am not like other people — that I'm better than folks from other countries because I am an American; that I'm midle class and not decadent in wealth, nor deprived and poor. I am thankful that thou hast blest me, providing for my physical needs — showing me how you love me more than those who are undernourished, ignorant, ill-clothed or sick."

How shall we give thanks to God? Will we be self-righteous and complacent, elevating ourselves and despising others? Or will our prayers be those of sincere thanks for His blessings?Will we respond to God's blessings to us by sharing those blessings with others? It is up to us.

Former linebacker to speak at banquet

Greg Brezina, retired Atlanta Falcons linebacker, will be the guest speaker at a "Sweetheart Banquet" on Feb. 17, at 7 p.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Sponsored by the Protestant Women of the Chapel, the banquet is open to the public.

Don't miss this opportunity to hear a dynamic and committed Christian athlete. Brezina played with the Atlanta Falcons for 12 years, enjoying his finest season in 1978 when he won the club's most valuable player award.

Since retiring in 1980, he has devoted his life to a Christian ministry that includes being president of Communicating Christian Concepts, Inc., a non-profit corporationwith an iner-denominational ministry of sharing Biblical principles with individuals, couples, families and organizations.

Brezina says of his experience of faith: "I can honestly say that out of all my experiences in and out of sports, the greatest has been having a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. You can have this greatest of all experiences, too, by remembering: When it's fourth down in your life, don't punt . . . run for Christ!"

For banquet tickets or information, call the TIC Chapel Center at 545-2050.

Post field honors heroics of four chaplains

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

"War is dangerous business. Pray that God will make me adequate." Those words were written by Clark Poling to his father during World War II. Poling and his three colleagues soon proved themselves to be more than "adequate" on Feb. 3, 1943. They became known as "The Four Chaplains" who heroically gave their lives that others aboard the SS Dorchester might live.

These four chaplains represented the Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish faiths. They were among the 904 persons aboard the troop transport, the SS Dorchester, when it was hit by a Nazi torpedo and sank within 20 minutes in the icy waters off the coast of Greenland.

It was reported that they "gave their own lifebelts to enlisted men, and then praying together went down with the ship." One of the 226 survivors said: "The chaplains stood hand in hand, praying to the God they served for the safety of those men who were leaving the stricken ship on all sides of them. This is the picture engraved in our minds and hearts as the SS Dorchester disappeared beneath the waves."

Another survivor told how one of the chaplains gave him his own gloves. After spending eight hours in a crowded lifeboat he was rescued. "Without the chaplain's gloves," he said, "my fingers would have frozen stiff. I would never have made it. As it was, only two of us survived of the 40 who were on the boat. I owed my life to the chaplain who gave me those gloves."

Those four chaplains were from diverse backgrounds. George L. Fox was a Protestant country boy from Vermont. Alexander D. Goode was a Jewish city boy from Washington, D.C. Johnny P. Washington was a Catholic kid from a poor immigrant family in Newark, N.J. and Clark V. Poling was a Protestant minister's son from New York City. Yet, they came together that fateful night and performed extraordinary acts of faith and courage that are a shining light of love and brotherhood of all men.

We at Fort Benning are familiar with the Field of Four Chaplains honoring those men. There is also a chapel in Philadelphia, Pa., which is known as "A Sanctuary for Brotherhood." This chapel is devoted to "the spirit of sacrificial unselfishness with a vital faith and commitment to God and man as exemplified by the Four Chaplains."

Four Men of God

Four men of God put out to sea; (Washington, Poling, Fox and Goode) Their God was one, though their Faiths were three; And the men who worshipped their God were free Where the Cross and the Star together stood. Four men of God went down to sea, (Washington, Poling, Fox and Goode) Bound by a passion for Liberty And a burning Faith that keeps men free In the bond of human brotherhood.

Education program helps chaplains gain new skills

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

Military chaplains, just as other professionals, need the opportunity to continue their education and learn new skills. Fort Benning provides just such an opportunity with its clinical pastoral education (CPE) program for Protestant, Catholic and Jewish chaplains.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Emory Cowan, director of the program, says that CPE "provides an educational experience beyond the walls of the classroom so that chaplains have a chance to integrate what they have learned theologically with their experience of people and people problems in the "real world."

He adds that "a spin-off of this is what the individual moves toward developing counseling skills and more effective pastoral are to the people for whom they are responsible."

The fact that chaplains come from various theological backgrounds enriches, rather than hinders the learning process. Chaplain Cowan says that "people learn from each other, they listen and hear where other people are in their theological journeys. A real collegiality develops." He believes "the ultimate goal is that a person becomes congruent with what he/she professes to believe and how this belief is acted out."

Three other CPE programs for chaplains are located at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Brooke Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston, and at Fort Hood. These centers are fully accredited by the Association for Clinical Pastoral Education (ACPE).

The Army has two types of CPE programs — one is based on the hospital model and the other is centered on the community-parish setting. The model used at Fort Bennings is the community model where chaplains are trained to serve in a variety of positions.

In addition to classroom work during the 11-month training period, the CPE student will have supervised ministry for 12 weeks each in four of the following settings: a chapel parish, a confinement facility, a hospital, a family life center, or with a troop unit.

The core curriculum of the program consists of case presentations in which a student presents a verbatim account of a counselling situation, a worship experience which is videotaped and critiqued, consultation seminars, reading seminars, and participation in an inter-personal relations group. The year-long program totals 1,600 hours of study and Office of the Chief of Chaplains of the Army. Students are selected a year in advance of their training.

To become a certified supervisor, as Chaplain Cowan is, requires six years of postgraduate work. Cowan is an ordained United Methodist minister with a Master of Divinity degree from Emory University. He finished one year of clinical pastoral education at Brady Memorial Hospital in Atlanta and joined the Army in 1967.

In addition to further advanced study and various positions in the Army CPE program, Cowan has served as a battalion chaplain in Vietnam, Thailand, and Germany. He came to Fort Benning last August after serving four years as Chief of the Department of Ministry and Director of the CPE program at Brooke Army Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Army team dominates Infantry run

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The All Army Marathon Team dominated the first Infantry Marathon last Saturday. Six of the top 11 positions were filled with members from the Army's team.

All Army team member Donald Starck overtook his team captain, Terry Rauch, at the 23.5-mile marker and went on to win the 26-mile race. Starck's time of 2:30:26.6 was considered to be an above average time. Starck credited his time to the course.

"I prefer a fast course and I consider this course a fast one, because you tend to have fast times," said Starck.

One of the reasons for the success of the All Army team was the fact that they conducted their annual trial camp here the week before.

"Being familiar with the course benefited our team immensely," stated Rauch.

Other teams that benefited by being familiar with the course were Headquarters Command and The School Brigade's IOAC 1-84 teams.

Headquarters Command's team of Robert Cline, Ronald Whittemore and David Rodriguez finished in 11th place, the best finish of any post team.

IOAC 1-84, who finished 15th, consisted of teammembers Ricardo Cantu, David Harper and Courtney Whitney.

The best post single finisher was Hq. Cmd.'s Cline, who finished 24th. The post's best female finisher was MEDDAC's Anita Eggert, who was 93rd overall.

The marathon, as well as the half-marathon, was not restricted to military personnel. Civilians from all over competed as well.

The best local finisher in the marathon was Mark Bangsball of the First Federal of Columbus team who finished in 154th place with a time of 3:47:14.9.

The best local female finisher was Karen Ammons, a Department of the Army civilian here. She finished 131st with a time of 3:40:39.6.

The half-marathon was won by Anibal Rivera, A Company, 5-52nd Air Defense Artillery, Fort Stewart, Ga., who finished in a time of 1:09:10. Phenix City's Bruce Skiles finished second in 1:12:13.

Auburn's Kim Trupp finished the half-marathon ahead of all of the other women entries in a time of 1:23:19.

Post laundries offer BDU pressing service

Army officials recently announced changes recently regarding the upkeep of the battle dress uniform (BDU).

The officials decided to authorize pressing, but not starching of the uniform. To coincide with this announcement, the post contract laundry (APEX) has begun offering a BDU pressing service effective Feb. 1.

Over-the-counter, soldiers will be charged $1.50 per set for the regular three-day service and $1.80 per set for special one-day service. Soldiers with the payroll deduction service (PRD) will be charged $2 for a weekly 26 piece bundle.

Army Training Center soldiers with PRD will continue to receive fluff dried and folded BDUs in their twice weekly PRD bundles. However, they will also receive one set of pressed BDUs on a hanger with their final bundle before graduation. In order for this to happen, the soldier must print the term "graduation bundle" boldly across the face of the laundry ticket, DA form 2886.

All comments regarding the quality of this new service should be directed to the government quality assurance evaluators (QAE) located at the laundry, building 2500. The telephone is 545-3119/4059.

The Army and Air Force Exchange System (AFEES) is offering a laundry special until April 30. All BDUs will be laundered and pressed for $1.75 per set through exchange laundry and dry cleaning facilities.

When home laundering and pressing the uniform, do not exceed the permanent press/steam setting on the iron. Commercial laundries may use steam presses. If a hot press is used, the temperature should not exceed 300 degrees fahrenheit.

Positions more accessible

WASHINGTON — Thanks to a recent "exception to Army policy," overseas intern positions in Army civilian career programs are being made more accessible to Army family members.

Army personnel officials explain that candidates for the positions are generally selected for GS-5 entry-level jobs in such professional and administrative fields as procurement, personnel management and supply management. Once on board for training and development, they may progress non-competitively to journeyman-specialist positions at the GS-9 or 11 level.

In times past, persons interested in DA intern positions in foreign overseas areas had to have "career or career conditional civil service status." Now, regardless of that status, family members living overseas and those working in overseas "local hire" positions can apply and, if qualified, be considered along with other non-status and status applicants for the position.

Officials view the change as supportive of the Army's current emphasis on family-member employment, explaining that it "broadens the ability of family members to compete for federal positions and will enhance career-advancement opportunities for "family members overseas."

Hotline established

WASHINGTON — Supply items that appear to cost more than they should can now be reported through a central hotline established at the Department of the Army.

The Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics has assigned this function to the Management Information Research Assistance Center. The center is located at DARCOM's catalog data activity in New Cumberland, Pa.

The hotline operates 24 hours a day and may be reached by calling AUTOVON 997-7431 or commercial (717) 782-7431. Callers must give their name, rank, unit phone number, the stock number of the item, past and current price of the item in question. They should also give the month and year of the microfiche from which the current price may be obtained.

During duty hours, you should get an answer on the spot. During non-duty hours, the information will be recorded, and a representative will check the price and answer your question.

You may also question prices by filling out and sending in the card that comes with the Army master data file.

Family travel authorized

WASHINGTON — Children of soldiers stationed overseas may now make one government-paid round trip per year between their stateside school and their parent's duty station.

New congressional guidelines authorized travel for all family members who are under 23 years old, unmarried and attending a secondary (when DoD schools are unavailable) or undergraduate school in the continental U.S., Alaska or Hawaii. The "annual period" begins when the student takes the first half of the round-trip, officials explained.

"Those who are eligible for a funded trip may not fly space available," a transportation official said. Sponsors should first visit their local military personnel office to establish eligibility. The serving Installation Transportatin Office will then be provided with necessary documentation to issue travel instructions and tickets.

The ITO will first try to make arrangements to fly space-required on Military Airlift Command (MAC). If MAC is not available within a five-day "window," the office will arrange for a commercial flight. For those who make their own flight arrange-

Black Hawk helicopter lifts HMMWV during exercise

By Bill C. Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Another first for Fort Benning was put on the books last week when a DPT aviation section Black Hawk helicopter airlifted a High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle (HMMWV) during a training exercise.

The exercise took place at Lawson Army Airfield and was conducted to permit training of both the rigging and aircrews. The 187th Infantry Detachment (Pathfinder, Airborne), 34th Medical Battalion, rigged and hooked up the HMMWV, which is scheduled to replace the ¼-ton through 1¼-ton trucks in the near future.

As this was a first for all concerned, it took a couple of lifts to sort out the length of the liting cables, to make sure the vehicle would ride in a level position.

Following these adjustment lits, the HMMWV was driven to a nearby tactical site where several timed lifts were made.

In this phase of the exercise, the helicopter and the vehicle were called by radio to arrive simultaneously at the pickup site. The four occupants got out of the HMMWV, unloaded the rigging equipment, prepared the vehicle for lifting and then boarded the Black Hawk. Then, another member of the 187th hooked the vehicle straps to the hovering aircraft and the vehicle plus crew were picked up.

The exercise was a complete success and afforded some excellent training to everyone involved, according to 1st Lt. Richard McCaughey, 187th commander.

Delta 'demons' see new beginning

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the story of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and are now in their ninth week of training.)

The third platoon passed the mid-cycle exam last week.

Hanging in their wallockers are the Class "A" uniforms that signify a new beginning. This week they're on Lee Field learning to become "tank killers."

"We had 100 percent of the platoon qualify at AO Eagle," said the third platoon's drill sergeant, SSgt. James Upsher, "We didn't have all first-time 'GOs' but we didn't have any 'double NO GOs' either."

The ranks of the third platoon have swelled as soldiers from other platoons have been assigned there for TOW and Dragon training. Upsher wishes that he had received all of the soldiers in the beginning. This is Upsher's fourth cycle and he claims the first few weeks for a soldier are the most important. "I can look at a soldier and tell if he is going to be okay or not. There is the soldier that you can just look at and see that he'll be a hard-core soldier, and there are those whose minds are not completely made up. When you talk to them — they don't act like they are really thinking. When I see those soldiers, I say, 'I'll have to work with him.'"

"I can look at a soldier and tell if he is going to be okay or not. There is the soldier that you can just look at and see that he'll be a hard core soldier . . ."

Upsher said that after spending 10 years with the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., he is detemined not to send a soldier to his unit unless he "measures up.'" His theory is: "Why send an NCO a bad soldier?"

He explained that the new soldiers will take some extra effort on the part of the drill sergeants, before they will fit in with the platoon.

After the test last week, the platoon's spirits went up and down. They finished only tenths of a point behind the fourth in their race for honor platoon, but dropped a full percentage point after a spot inspection.

Upsher, who's platoon's have won the "honor platoon" streamer twice in the last two cycles, claims that he is not concerned by the loss as much as he is about turning out a quality soldier.

Becoming the "honor platoon" now seems out of reach for them. But the third still hopes to catch up during the PT test next week.

Mary Schultz finally struggles to the finish line.

Last marathon finisher- 'I complete what I start'

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Spectators and participants were leaving Doughboy stadium after Saturday's marathon. Soldiers on detail were picking up the litter left by the crowd. The TV crews were packing up the power lines that snaked their way across the field. The ribbons at the finish lines drooped as they were being rolled up for storage — and the clock was still running.

The clock was running because a marathon isn't finished until the last runner crosses the finish line.

Saturday, more than five hours after the starting cannon had sounded, even after Donald Starck, a member of the U.S. Army Marathon team had received his trophy for finishing first, Mary Schultz was still running.

"I like to finish what I start," said Ms Schultz, "I compete against myself."

Ms Schultz doesn't run to win, because she claims, "I'm not a fast runner." She has been running for exercise for five years, but only started running long distances during the last two years. The Infantry Marathon was her third in the last four months and only the fourth of her life. Her first long run was the New York Marathon in 1982.

According to Ms Schultz, a financial analyst for a communications company in Atlanta, running was a way to keep fit after being desk-bound at work.

"I started running because I like to ski,". Ms Schultz explained, "I had heard that running was good exercise for skiers and it was something I could do all year long."

Besides running, the 30-year-old North Carolinian swims at least one or two miles a week and cycles to keep in shape. She puts in an average of 40 miles of running per week, but increases the pace during the marathon season to more than 60.

Saturday's run took its toll on Ms Schultz, she claims that the last three miles were "rough."

"I ran into dehydration problems on that lonely stretch of road. I was thirsty," she said. "I got to the last hill and knew that I was going to walk up. That big hill was my mark — I knew then I was going to make it."

More than five hours after the race had begun, there were media people racing back to their offices to beat deadlines. For them the race was history that had to be recorded for the evening broadcast or the next day's paper.

More than five hours after the race had begun — the clock was still running — and so was Mary Schultz.

Much preparation went into event

The first Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon have come and gone. Capt. Robert Borja, race director, said he has learned a lot of lessons.

"We're already planning for next year and expect the number of participants to be in the 2,000s. One thing we have to do is to figure out how to make the t-shirt line go faster," Borja said.

More than 200 soldiers from A, B and C Companies, Infantry Training Group (ITG), manned fluid stations, checkpoints and helped direct runners during the races. ITG sponsored the race and Borja said that 98 percent of the people needed to help with the race came from ITG. The planning and coordination for the marathon was done by ITG also.

But support came from almost all the posts' units. The units helped with the day's activities set up at Doughboy Stadium, the finish point of the race.

The Rangers gave a hand-to-hand combat and rappeling demonstrations. Units from the 197th Infantry Brigade set up static displays of the Bradley, armored personnel carriers, Soviet weapons, an 81mm mortar with carrier and a Howitzer.

The Army Training Center provided persons for details in setting up tents, vided tents, light sets, heaters and a water buffalo.

The 34th Medical Battalion provided ambulances and medics while MEDDAC set up a medic tent with physicians at the stadium.

Directing traffic was the responsibility of the Military Police Activity. The Directorate of Industrial Operations were responsible for transportation, the shuttle bus, the sound system and the marking of the route.

Billeting, electrical crews and signs for the route fell to the Directorate of Engineering and Housing. As a special for the runners, their finish was filmed so they could enjoy it later. The video recording, still photos, music and the loan of the helicopter for the Rangers came from the Directorate of Plans and Training.

The Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities handled all the funding and tables for the event. The U.S. Army Communications Command provided telephones at race headquarters and the stadium.

The crowd at the stadium was entertained by a local singer and demonstrations from a karate club and a homing pigeon club.

Participants in the race came from all over the world, more than 900 of them helping to kick off the Infantry Marathon and start its way to being

Auto worker's creation saves shop over $800

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

An auto worker in the maintenance shop of the Directorate of Industrial Operations got SPIRIT and created a device that boosted his shop's savings by more than $800.

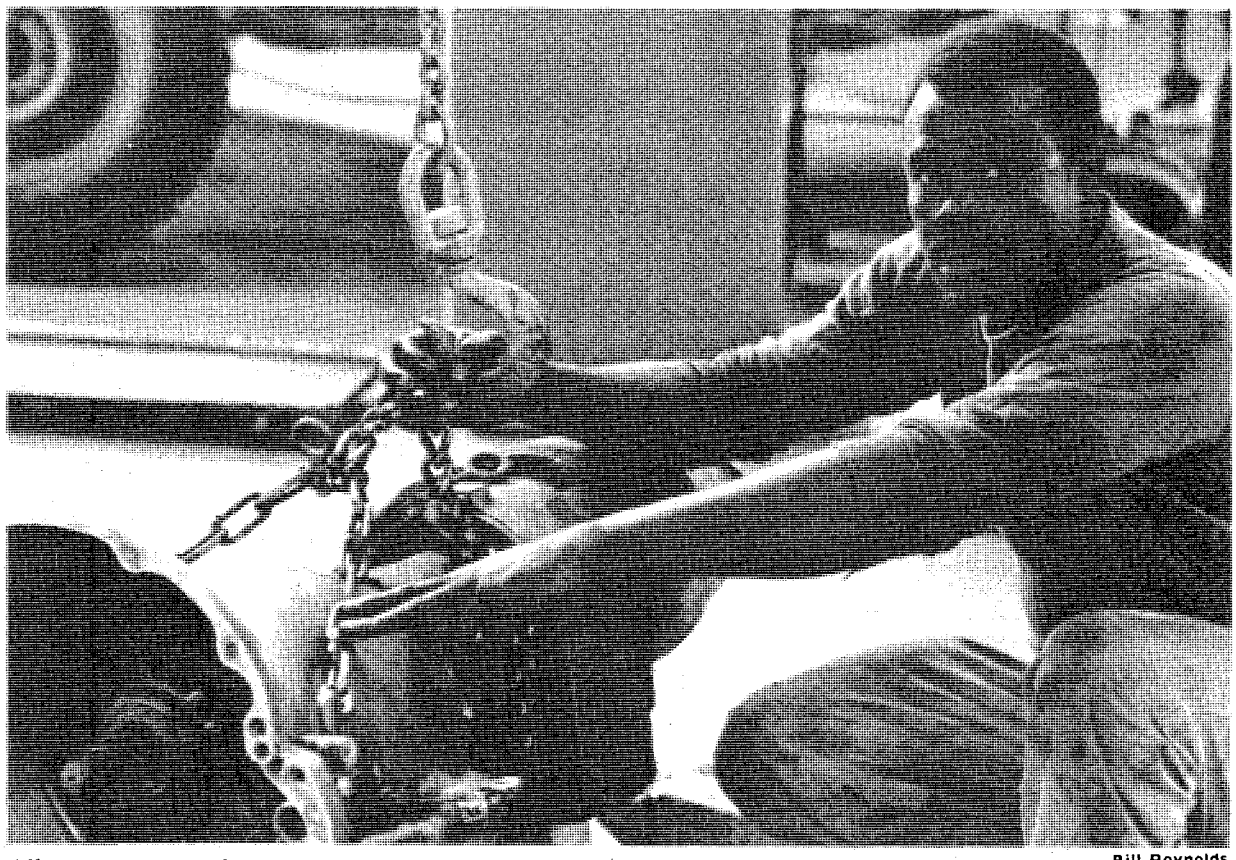
The device, designed by Albert Simmons, is a chain hooked up to existing holes in the transmission that enables one man to do the work of two.

Simmons calls his device a "Y" chain. With it he is able to remove the transmission bell housing and the transfer case at the same time. The old way of repairing the transmission called for the separation of the bell housing from the transfer case. This was a dangerous job because of the chance that the transfer case would rotate and smash the hands of the mechanics. Two men were required to perform this task safely. One would lift the transmission bell while the other would attempt to hold the transfer case.

This job, according to Simmons, often took hours to remove and re-install the transmission.

Simmons' method allows the mechanic to raise the vehicle on jacks, slide a portable hoist into the vehicle and attach his "Y" chain to the transmission and transfer case. When the retaining bolts are removed, the hoist can then lower the entire unit to the ground.

"I wasn't out to save money," said Simmons, "I just wanted to save time and effort." Saving the Army money may not have been Simmons' objective, but his method, besides being safer, frees one mechanic to work on other vehicles whenever a transmission repair is necessary.



Albert Simmons demonstrates how his "Y" chain saves the Army dollar. Bill Reynolds

The system, constructed entirely from items in the shop, cost Fort Benning just two short chains and two lifting eyes, and saved manhours that could be used elsewhere.

"Sometimes," said Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, Directorate of Resource Management, "it's the person that operates the equipment, not the engineers, that can see an easier way to get the job done."

Last year the maintenance shop repaired 75 transmissions, costing the installation $7,858. This year, the cost of transmission repair will drop to $7,031, for a savings of $827.

AAFES saves PX shoppers money

The latest annual Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) price comparison survey showed the overall savings to PX customers were 22.7 percent compared to prices outside military installations.

These price surveys are conducted by the A. C. Nielson Company to assure that AAFES is meeting or exceeding its goal of providing customers with an overall dollar savings of 20 percent on purchases. Had sales taxes been added to the prices of surveyed items, savings would have been even greater.

This latest surveys was made in 17 areas in the U.S. which are close to Army and Air Force installations. While the local area was not included, the survey did include the area around Robins Air Force Base near Macon. (AAFES)

The groundhog did see his shadow yesterday and that means we are in for six more weeks of bad weather.

What's the weather outlook? Only the groundhog knows!

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Groundhogs. The first thought of the word can bring visions of the animal sticking its nose out of its burrow and looking around.

Those furry little creatures that do nothing but sleep all winter can sure cause a lot of speculation about whether or not spring is on its way.

Groundhogs get blamed for any bad weather that may happen after the first of February. It just goes to show you that you should keep your nose out of Mother Nature's business.

Legend has it that on Feb. 2, groundhogs come out of their winter sleep to check the weather. If they see their shadow, it's six more weeks of bad weather, if it's cloudy and shadowless, an early spring is on its way.

And where did this legend come from? According to the only source of information I found on the subject, the encyclopedia, the idea comes from an old European belief that a sunny Candlemas Day, Feb. 2, means six more weeks of winter weather.

Candlemas Day is a Christian festival honoring the purification of the Virgin Mary after the birth of Jesus, and falls 40 days after Christmas. In the Roman Catholic Church, candles are blessed by the pope or priest and given to the poor. The people then carry the candles in procession before Mass.

Don't ask me how we got to groundhogs from candles. Obviously, that is part of the forgotten past. In the mean time, people still wait for the groundhogs' appearance and the groundhogs still stick their nose out of their burrows checking out the weather.

'Cottonbalers' conduct ARTEP

By Paula L. Dempe
197th PAO

The newly mechanized 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry "Cottonbalers" of the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate), had their Army Training and Evaluation Program (ARTEP) Jan. 23-29, to evaluate their abilities as a mechanized unit.

During the early morning hours of the 23rd, the Cottonbalers moved out and began their seven-day ARTEP to observe the unit's conversion from a light infantry unit to a mechanized one.

"The tracks give us more mobility, speed and fire power," explained Capt. William Taylor, the battalion training officer. "The training, done in phases, is to familiarize all levels of leadership with these mechanized capabilities."

"The platoon ARTEP is part of a phased training approach which began with squad training," said Capt. Roger T. Fontana, the battalion personnel officer. It will progress into battalion level, culminating in July at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The Army Training and Evaluation Program does more than just evaluate how well a unit performs. An ARTEP also offers an opportunity to receive hands-on training in a more realistic atmosphere than a classroom.

Evaluators and controllers for the ARTEP were the company commanders. Their primary task was to maneuver their platoon-sized elements through areas set up to test their abilities to react to movement to contact, hasty attack, defense, and night and air mobile raids.

"It's up to the discretion of the company commanders. If they're not satisfied with a platoon's performance, they can request permission to run them through again," stated Lt. Col. Douglas D. Allman, the Cottonbaler's commander.

"The soldiers have to realize how fast we can move, and how fast the battle can move," said Taylor. "A lot of emphasis is placed on them learning to function as a mechanized unit."

"The tracks give us more mobility, speed and fire power. The training is to familiarize all levels of leadership with these mechanized capabilities."

The 'Cottonbalers', have always performed well as a unit. They were oganized in 1798, and has been awarded more battle streamers than any other U.S. Infantry unit. Their nickname, the "Cottonbalers", was acquired during the battle of New Orleans in 1812 when they held their position against the British behind a breastwork of cottonbales.

"We have always performed well and will continue to do so. We'll just have to learn some different tactics," Taylor said. "The troops picked up well on movement-terrain driving. And, as we learned on previos exercises, if you stay off the trails, you can win the battles."

Agreeing with Taylor was Sp4 Hershel Byers, a member of the communications team with Headquarters Company. "I like being mechanized better. We can get further into the woods without being stopped," Byers stated.

"This training is the first opportunity for the Cottonbalers to demonstrate their mechanized capabilities," commented Fontana.

Observing the ARTEP during its peak was the Vice Chief of Staff of the Army, General Maxwel R. Thurman, along with the post commander and the 197th commader.

"Despite being a newly mechanized unit, the Cottonbalers performed well throughout the exercise. They retained their light infantry skills once of the tracks, and executed their new mechanized skills admirably well.

"We plan to continue training and emphasizing the mechanized aspects," Taylor said. "The final test will be at the National Training Center in July."

Alcoholic

The pattern was repeated again and again over the next few years. A tour of duty in Vietnam from 1966-67 did not help his situation. Ed's drinking only got worse.

Minimizes problem

Ed tried to minimize his problem by getting married and taking on a family after returning from Vietnam.

"I knew I had a problem with alcohol and I thought if I took on a little responsibility like a family it would help. We went to Texas and for a while everything was beautiful," said Ed.

While he continued to drink, it was not as much as before said Ed.

"I had a plan. We would go out to dinner with the children every payday. This went on for about three months. Then one payday, my wife said we didn't have to go. And when this system was changed, I started going to the club," explained Ed. "I started drinking more and getting real hostile. I was angry."

His problem was compounded by an epileptic seizure.

"The doctor asked me if I drank and I knew if I said yes, he would tell me to stop. So, I told him no and threw away the dilatin he gave me," said Ed.

Homelife worsens

Meanwhile things at home were continuing to worsen. Ed would go to the club every night and buy a bottle of liquor and take it home to drink.

"By this time communication between my wife and I had become distorted. If she didn't say anything to me, then I'd get in my car and go to a picnic area and just sit there and drink until the bottle was empty," said Ed.

Even though he was drinking more, Ed still did not consider himself an alcoholic.

"I knew I had a problem, but how could I be an alcoholic? Here I was an E7, money in my pocket, children in school, two cars. How could I be an alcoholic?" asked Ed.

Enters denial phase

Ed had entered the denial phase of alcoholism. "I began to build up a lot of hate and resentment towards my wife. The children began to reject me. I was becoming belligerent and started drinking outside the house," said Ed.

Next Ed began blaming everyone and everything else for his problems. At no time did he associate drinking with the things that were happening to him.

"How could it be the problem? Alcohol was my best friend. Always there when I needed to feel good. I didn't need people as friends because I had the best one right there in that bottle," said Ed.

Instead the problems were because the people in S-2 didn't like a black working there, never mind he and a lieutenant were the only people in the section. If it wasn't this, then it was any number of other reasons, but it definitely wasn't his drinking.

Two fifths a day

"By this time I was up to two fifths a day. I had a good job. There was only me and the lieutenant and I could tell him what to do. The colonel never came back there, neither did the sergeant major. I was living the life. My desk drawer had a fifth in it and I could drink anytime of the day. I never got staggering drunk. Just enough to get through the day," said Ed.

Then Ed was caught driving under the influence. He was reduced to E6. However this did not shake him enough to stop drinking. Feeling the post was against him, Ed contacted a friend at Department of the Army who arranged for a tour of duty in Vietnam.

"I thought things would be better if I left my wife and left Texas," explained Ed.

Begins rationalizing

Ed was now into the rationalizing and minimizing phase of alcoholism. But again Vietnam only compounded and prolonged the problem.

"The only thing to do during standdowns was get drunk and shoot up the hooch. Nobody cared. At least I was away from home," said Ed.

Returning to Fort Campbell in 1969, Ed became a drill sergeant. He also set out to attain the highest awards in the brigade.

"I had the best trainee of the cycle, best company of the cycle, best drill sergeant of the cycle, highest marksmanship score, the highest physical training score of the cyle, just everything. I set myself up.

Manipulates environment

"And do you know why? So when I fell down, when I got drunk, automatically those good points compensated for my stumble, and I did that all the way through the Army. An alcoholic is a very creative person. He is a master at manipulating the environment and the people around him so he maintains his standing in the unit." said Ed.

Again Ed's drinking started getting him into trouble. He was losing the ability to manipulate his environment. Before he could get into big trouble, he schemed his way into another Vietnam tour. "The grass just had to be greener there," he said.

Control slips

But it wasn't. Ed's control continued to slip. When another noncommissioned officer was chosen for a choice assignment at Military Advisory Command-Vietnam headquarters in Saigon, Ed turned to the bottle for sympathy. He was kicked out of MACV and sent north to be an advisor to a South Vietnamese Army unit.

"While there I blacked out and shot up the compound so they medevaced me to Da Nang. The doctor asked what was wrong and I blamed it on the Vietnamese food" said Ed.

Again he had refused to admit his drinking was the root of his problems.

"Alcohol was making me feel good. So there was no way in the world I was going to give up my good thing," said Ed.

Medevaced to Fort Gordon, he was reduced while in the hospital after a five-day AWOL. Coming to Fort Benning, Ed was reduced again to E5.

"By this time I was at the point where I wanted to die. I wanted to kill myself," said Ed.

Beginning of the end

For the first time in his career, someone suggested to Ed that he should consider entering an alcohol rehabilitation program. By this time, he was to far down the road to rely on the defense mechanisms which had allowed him to bounce back from adversity in the past. The time was 1972.

Woods, Buljung spark USAMU to victory

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Thomas Woods and Erich Buljung sparkplugged USAMU victories in last week's National Indoor Sectional and Outdoor Pistol matches held here.

In the indoor conventional pistol event, Thomas Woods scored 887 out of 900 points to lead all competitors. The U.S. Army "Blue squad of Woods, Roger Willis, Max Barrington and Buljung also turned in the winning team score of 1.162 out of 1,200 possible points.

The indoor international sectional phase was taken by Buljung in free pistol with 560 out of 600, while Rojelio Arredondo placed first in the standard pistol match with 572 out of 600. USAMU also captured both team events with 1,631 and 1,709 out of 1,800 respectively. Team members were Buljung, Arredondo, Jimmie McCoy and Gary Marsh.

In the conventional outdoor pistol matches, Woods scored his second victory of the weekend with a total of 2,652 out of 2,700 points. The U.S. Army "Gray" squad won all three events as well as the aggregate team championship scoring 3,501 out of 3,600. Members included: Hary Cumble, David Woodcock, James Leffler and Robert Warner.

Other USAMU winners in the Outdoor Pistol Championship are as follows:

Conventional Pistol			International Pistol
Event	Winner	Score	Free pistol	Erich Buljung	1,116
.22 caliber	Max Barrington	885	Rapid fire pistol	John McNally	1,182
Centerfire	Thomas Woods	887	Centerfire pistol	Jimmie McCoy	591

Johnson fights his way into Atlanta's Omni

Jeffrey Johnson (l) takes one to give one in the finals of the 156-pound division of the Georgia Golden Glove Championships held Monday night in the Omni in Atlanta.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1984 Georgia Golden Glove Championships were held Jan. 19-21. Boxers of all ages and experience levels from all over the state gathered at the Atlanta State Farmer's Market Exhibition Hall to compete for a chance to box in the finals which were held Monday night in the Omni.

Fort Benning's boxing team, the only remaining post-level squad, had four boxers invited to compete. Of those four, only Jeffrey Johnson of Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command, qualified for the finals.

Some of the fighters were in awe of the Omni but not Johnson.

"I have fought here once before," stated the six-year boxing veteran. "I won the 139-pound weight class of the Georgia Golden Gloves in 1979."

Johnson earned the right to take on Ricky Lampkin, Augusta Community Boxing Team, by knocking out his preliminary opponent in the first round.

"It was just a complete mismatch," stated Jerry Henry, Benning's boxing coach. "Johnson overpowered his opponent in the preliminaries. In the finals, he will be facing much stiffer competition in Lampkin."

Henry was right. Lampkin, who decisioned his opponent in the preliminaries, has been boxing for eight years and has won two different weight classes in past golden glove events."

"I enjoy boxing in the Omni. I won the 139-pound weight class in 1980 and the 147-pound weight class in 1982," commented Lampkin.

The two combatants had to wait for 11 bouts to take place prior to squaring off against one another. But once they did, the action never stopped until the final bell.

The first round belonged to Johnson as he pressed the issue.

the issue and landed several right hooks to Lampkin's head and midsection. Both fighters stood toe to toe for most of the opening round and the crowd sensed the best fight of the night was now taking place.

Lampkin opened the second round a little more respectful of his Benning foe as he attempted to move more. Johnson then relied on his left jab. Lampkin now controlled the fight since his reach was longer than the shorter Johnson.

Midway through the second round, Johnson started to tire and Lampkin began to force the action. The crowd felt the tide turning and they began to shout words of encouragement to Johnson. But Lampkin kept on coming, cutting down the ring and using his boxing ablities to score almost at will. The second round belonged to Lampkin and this only meant one thing, the third round would decide the champion.

The third round was all Lampkin's as Johnson began to get winded. Lampkin was beating Johnson to the punch and landing two for every one Johnson could connect with. As Johnson got tired, he began to hold on to his opponent, so much so that the referee eventually took two points away from him.

The bell rang and the crowd showed their appreciation to the two with a roaring ovation. The announcer informed the crowd of the judge's decision. Lampkin was the winner.

"We have only had our team together for about a month and the lack of conditioning cost Johnson the fight," commented Henry. "He showed he was a better fighter in the first round. He just ran out of gas. He has a promising future."

Many people turn out for competitive marathon

The inaugural Infantry Marathon and half-maraton had a total of 944 finishers. More than 1,000 people entered the two races and only a few of those let the mileage get to them.

The total of 944 race finishers, 245 in the 26.2-mile race and 699 in the 13.1 miler, was more than the combined number of finishers in the Calloway Gardens, Macon and Georgia Marathons.

Family and friends of the participants, some of which traveled across the country for the event, waited patiently at Doughboy Stadium for their favorites to finish the grueling race.

The results of the two races were as follows:

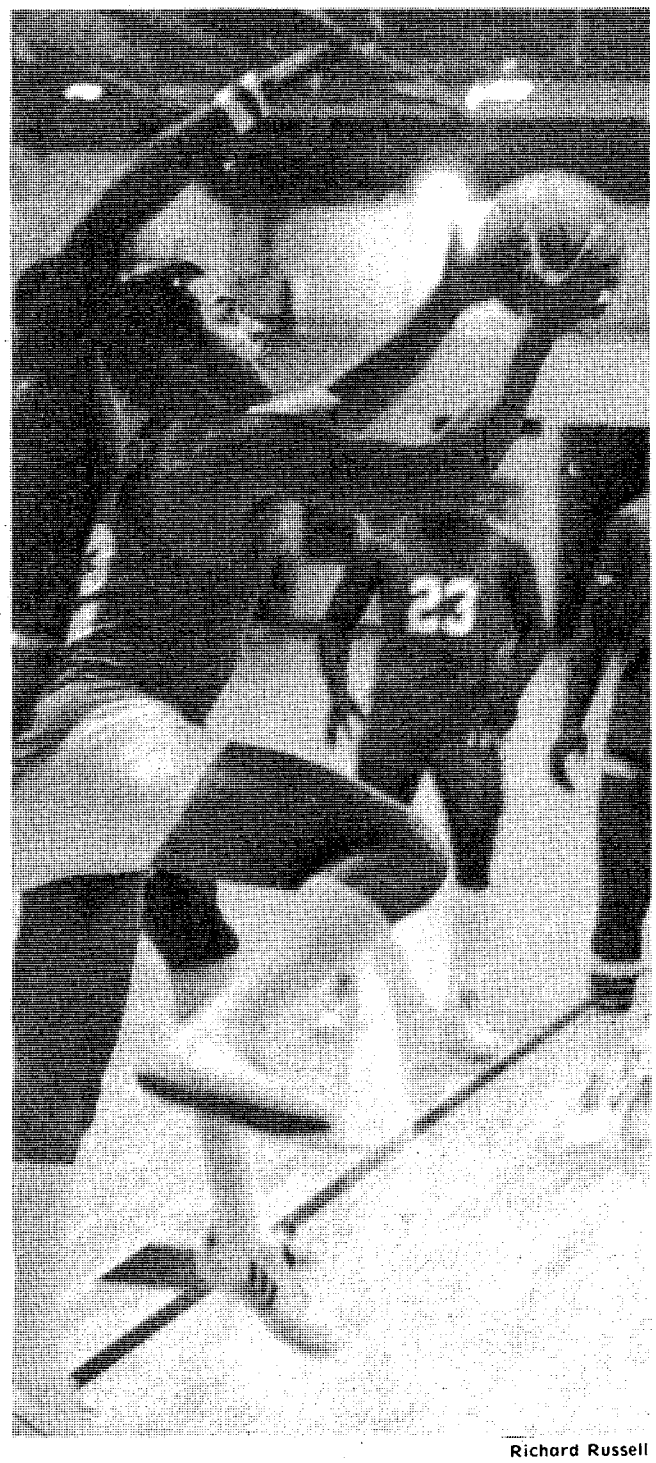
Post basketball



Richard Russell

A member of the 2nd Combat Support Hospital's basketball team goes up strong against the 690th Medical Company.

Defending champs ready for post playoffs

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week we took a look at one of the most successful leagues in various sports, Headquarters Command. The most successfull league when it comes to basketball would have to be the 34th Medical Battalion's league.

For the last two years, the post champion has come from that league and it was the same unit both times, MEDDAC.

"I think that we not only have some of the best talent on post in our league but we also have some of the best coaching," stated Bill McKinney, MEDDAC's coach.

McKinney believes he has another strong squad again this year. So far this season MEDDAC has only lost one game, that was to the 546th Medical Company.

"We have played them twice this season and we split, we lost the first meeting by one point and defeated them in the next," added the two time defending post champion. "They are an excellent team. They play together well. I'm glad we don't have to play them again."

McKinney has surrounded himself with both speed and size this season.

"We like to run but we try to control it. So far we have been able to do just that because we have controlled the boards. My guys rebound real well," added the coach.

MEDDAC hasn't exactly cake walked their way through the regular season though. A good example took place Jan. 17 at Bryant Wells Field House when the 498th Medical Company, with just five men, lead the defending champions for nearly 30 minutes before coming up short 53-44.

"498th shot real well in the first half. I think we wore them down in the second half though and that ended up being the difference," concluded McKinney.

This league will be sending two teams to the post playoffs, according to Mckinney. Right now it looks like those to teams will be the 2nd Combat Support Hospital and the guys who have been there before, MEDDAC.

Next week we will examine The School Brigade's league.

Eagles 10..... Lakers 8

The Eagles tightened up the league standings by downing the Lakers 10-8. The Lakers tied the score at eight with two fourth-quarter buckets by Eddie White and Dwohn Luckey. The Eagles' Dwight Toney scored the game winner with only a few ticks left on the clock.

Warriors 8..... Eagles 5

The Warriors earned their first victory of the season by defeating the Eagles 8-5. Maurice Mays accounted for all eight of the points for the Warriors. All of them came in the first half. Jalacy Hawkins also supplied all of the scoring for the Eagles in a losing effort.

Pee Wee results

Hawks 27..... Blazers 19

Jonathan McNeil paced the Hawks' attack with 15 points enroute to their 27-19 victory over the winless Blazers. Marcus Leonard added eight for the Hawks, while Clarence Hinton provided 10 points for the Blazers.

Lakers 16..... Nuggets 10

A well balanced scoring attack paved the way for the Lakers as they defeated the Nuggets 16-10. Six different Lakers scored, none of which hit double figures. Lakers' Edwardo Smith led all scorers with six points.

Lakers 36..... Hawks 13

The Lakers pulled to within ½ game of the league-leading Courtmasters by downing the Hawks 36-13. Balanced scoring again led the Lakers to victory. Edwardo Smith had 12, Thomas Clausell added eight and Rafi Blount and Steven Lorick each poured in six points for the Lakers. Marcus Leonard paced the Hawks with three field goals.

Junior results

Warriors 58..... Rockets 41

The Warriors avenged an earlier defeat by pounding the Rockets 58-41. The first two quarters were exact opposites of each other as the Warriors dominated the first 16-4. The Rockets exploded in the second outscoring the Warriors 14-3, making the half-time score 19-18 in favor of the Warriors. Robert Cline took over in the second half for the Warriors by scoring 14 of his game high 20 points. Darrell Flowers added 10 of his 16 in the final two quarters to seal the Warrior victory.

Spurs 49..... Rockets 40

Ricky Logo, Kevin Price and Lee Spitalnick, all scored in double figures to lead the Spurs to a 49-40 victory over the Rockets. Logo had 18, Price added 12 and Spitalnick accounted for 10 points for the Spurs. Jummanee Jackson had 15 in a losing effort.

Panama City Beach host triathlon

The Dunes of Panama resort on Panama City Beach, Fla., has been chosen as the host site for the 1984 Gulf Coast Triathlon. The start and finish will be held on the resort site.

The triathlon is a grueling endurance event that reflects America's favorite participant sports — swimming, biking and running. However, the distances are set to test the stamina, endurance and strategy of the individual athlete. This three-part continuous event will begin with a 1.5-mile swim in the Gulf of Mexico, followed by a 58-mile bicycle race, and end with a 13.1-mile run.

Race information and entry forms are available by writing to the Gulf Coast Triathlon Organization Committee, 7205 Thomas Drive, Panama City Beach, Fla. 32407, or by calling: 1-800-874-4440 or 904-234-6694.

Post runners finish high in run

Several Fort Benning runners earned high finishes during the recent 1.5-mile event in the Girl Scout Cookie Fun Run at Weracoba Park. In the 6-8 years age bracket, Barbara Jean Detwiler finished in first place with a time of 11:56.

Second place went to Katie Rounsaville (13:02) and third place was won by Laurie MacDonald (13:12). In addition, Tony Clayton placed third in the 9-11 years age bracket with a time of 11:28. David N. Lee won the 18 to 24 years age bracket by running the race in 7:45.

Three soldiers win in Thailand

Three members of the U.S. Armed Forces Boxing team brought home medals from the recent XXXIV Conseil International du Sport Militaire (CISM) boxing championship held in Bangkok, Thailand.

Private First Class Anthony Haskins, Fort Hood, Texas, (132-pound) and PFC Mason Shabass, Fort Stewart, Ga., (heavyweight) both won gold medals in their divisions. Sp4 Ronnie Hughes, Fort Hood, Texas, received a silver medal in the 178-pound division.

The U.S. team finished second, behind Thailand, in the championship. West Germany took third place.

Boxing smoker scheduled for Feb. 11

The Sports Office has announced that a boxing smoker has been scheduled for Feb. 11, beginning at 7 p.m. at the Harmony Church Field House.

Fort Benning boxing team will host the event. Three other boxing clubs will be represented; the Dothan Athletic Club, Dothan, Ala.; the Columbus Metro Boxing Club, Columbus, Ga.; and the Warner Robbins boxing team.

Admission is free. For more information contact Will Dunham at 545-5777.

Alcoholic

"I was in my late stages of alcoholism and had nothing to hold onto. So I entered the program and they sent me to the hospital for evaluation," said Ed.

After four days of drying out, Ed called his wife.

"I told her to come pick me up and to bring me $10 because I wanted to go out and get a drink," said Ed.

Turning from the phone to go back to the ward, Ed began to hallucinate, hear voices and to shake.

"A nurse took my blood pressure and it was way above normal. When they tried to lay me on the bed, I began to get violent, so they strapped me down," recalls Ed.

The end

According to the doctor present, Ed had entered the final stage of alcohol withdrawal called delireum tremble, or more commonly called DTs.

"I will never forget the date. It was Feb. 9, 1972. Going through DTs was a terrible experience and it marked the turning point in my life," said Ed. "I began to believe at that point alcohol was the problem."

had come to an end. Following completion of a 60-day residential program at the Benning House, Ed was returned to duty.

"I was sent to Germany for two years and it proved to be a hard test of my will to stay sober," recalls Ed. "I went without my family because I wanted to test myself."

While in Germany, Ed was chosen to start an alcohol and drug rehabilitation program for his brigade. During the two years he headed the program, it was recognized as one of the best by VIIth Corps headquarters in Stuttgart and by U. S. Army Europe headquarters in Heidelberg.

Ed returned to Fort Benning in 1974 and served as a drug education specialist until his retirement as a sergeant first class in 1976.

After retiring, Ed obtained a bachelor of science in social psychology from Auburn and Troy State universities. Today, he is a counselor for a local alcohol and drug program.

Lieutenant wins Patterson Award

Outstanding Infantry graduate receives OCS's top honor today

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Second Lieutenant Michael D. Hanley will be awarded the Robert B. Patterson Award today for being the most outstanding Infantry graduate of the Officer's Candidate School.

"It's a very distinctive honor," Hanley said. "It's been a goal of mine since I was in one station unit training in 1982."

Haley served four and a half years as an enlisted member in the Army before going to Officer Candidate School. He entered the service in November 1970 and attended airborne training at Fort Benning before going to his unit at Fort Bragg, N.C. He reentered the Army in 1982 after a six-year break in service.

"I worked as a sales manager, a truck driver and a horse trainer while I was out of the service. But I liked the Army and discovered I could work better there than on the outside," Hanley said.

He also said he's a very active person and, "I like the outside and the Infantry so I came back in."

Haley has completed two years of college at Blinn Junior College, Bryan, Texas, and one year at the University of Minnesota at St. Paul.

His awards include jump wings, Army Achievement Medal, Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Ribbon and five Certificates of Achievement.

While Hanley was under going OSUT at Fort Benning in 1982, the battalion executive officer assisted him in applying for OCS and he was commissioned Aug. 5, 1983.

The Plymouth, Minnesota native is married and has a 1-year-old daughter. He enjoys chess, horse training and war games.

"I really like the Army and I definitely plan to make a career of the Army. I plan on going to Ranger School and then I'll be going to the 101st Airborne Division," Hanley said.

The Patterson Award, named for the late Secretary of War, is traditionally awarded by Mrs. Patterson. The award includes an engraved .45 caliber service pistol and a $1,000 check.

The OCS graduate is selected for the award based on leadership qualities, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

AUSA chapter begins membership drive

The Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) was the largest chapter in the world until 1974. Fort Bragg has held the top position since that time and presently numbers approximately 14,000+ individual memberships. Our local chapter has 9,200+ members.

Certainly, we would like to be the largest chapter worldwide, but most importantly, we desire to increase the chapter's membership so that we may have a bigger voice in overall national AUSA policies and programs and so that we can serve a larger segment of our service members, Department of the Army civilians, and citizens of the Columbus, Phenix City, Fort Benning areas who are dedicated to a strong national defense.

Last year, the local chapter participated in or sponsored 257 separate events ranging from the simple presentation of Certificates of Achievement to conducting the Annual AUSA Picnic in coordination with Armed Forces Day, and Operation Holiday.

Scholarships were presented to ROTC students; awards were provided for the JROTC Rifle and Drill Team Competitions. Honor graduates from courses of instruction presented by the U.S. Army Infantry School received recognition; the Soldier of the Year received a set of dress blues and numerous other presentations were made recognizing the outstanding achievements and contributions made by our soldiers.

Concurrently, corporate membership activities conducted in conjunction with Fort Benning units have been significantly expanded.

Every soldier and civilian at Fort Benning regardless of whether they are a member of AUSA or not has benefitted from the chapter's activities; not only locally, but likewise, those programs supported at AUSA National which affect the pay and quality of life programs for service members and Department of the Army civilians worldwide.

To increase the chapter's participation and involvement both at the local and national level, a membership drive will be conducted through April 30. Awards will be provided to individuals and units achieving the highest percentage of AUSA membership and other selected categories.

The chapter's project officer for conducting the membership campaign is Colonel Richard H. Hummel, 545-1511/4917, AUSA secretary-treasurer. (AUSA)

Rape

Attitudes about crime need to be changed

Robert McClain

Statistics show one out of every four women can expect it sometime in their lives.

It can take place in a barracks room or in an alley behind a bar. Its victims are varied. It can strike a 94-year-old grandmother or a 2-month-old child as easily as it can a college coed.

It occurs somewhere in our country every seven minutes and it is one of the fastest growing crimes in America.

RAPE CAN TOUCH all our lives. The rapist's next victim could be your mother, your daughter, your sister, your best friend, or even you.

Because of newspaper articles and television stories, our society has become increasingly aware of this "violent crime." But many soldiers still tend to believe many of the common myths about the crime: such as "Nice girls don't get raped." Experts say these myths only help to continue the misconception that rape is something other than a major, violent crime.

THE DISPELLING OF these old myths about rape is one key aspects in preventing the crime say many psychologists. They add that the potential for increased sex offenses is much greater as long as these myths are repeated and certain attitudes about the crime exist.

The attitude of many people towards the crime of rape is still mixed with indifference, insensitivity and callousness.

GREAT STRIDES HAVE been taken by the Armed Services in trying to prevent rape, but little has been done to reverse these attitudes that help to increase the acceptance of the crime.

At most military installations, including Fort Benning, military police and other post organizations conduct yearly rape-prevention campaigns and give rape prevention classes on commander's requests.

BUT MOST ARE AIMED solely and directly at women. In most rape prevention classes, the burden of prevention is thrust solely upon them. Women are told to avoid dark alleys and to learn to protect themselves in certain situations.

Very little of the anti-rape material is aimed at men. Many male soldiers aren't concerned about the crime. "It can't happen to me, so why should I worry about it."

IF YOU WALK AROUND post, you can find male soldiers making comments, whistling at, even openly propositioning women soldiers. Some tell tired old rape jokes: "When rape is inevitable, lie back and enjoy it." Many others still hold distorted attitudes about a male's "rights" to a female's body. They believe the long disproven myths that rape is often stimulated or welcomed by the victim.

Studies show that their crude, sexist comments and humor, as well as idle conversations about their sexual prowess, can have a strong effect on junior enlisted personnel.

THE STUDIES SAY, it especially affects their perceptions of how the Army may expect them to treat women and how sex offenses and sex offenders will be treated. Most studies agree that a tolerant or apathetic view of the crime can help make rape more likely to occur and the rapist more likely to go unpunished.

WE MUST DO MORE to educate our male soldiers about the crime. They should be aware of the myths and sterotypes associated with rape and sexual abuse, the penalites for rape, a woman's rights concerning her body, and her right to be treated as a person.

With more women entering all levels of the Armed Services, more and greater efforts are needed to combat this violent and dehumanizing crime.

DIRECT EFFORTS MUST be taken at confronting those male soldiers who, by their actions, or lack of action, support rape or fail to place the proper connotations on the crime.

Many excellent programs aimed at informing the male soldiers about the crime are available to commanders, but few are ever used.

WITH THE EVER INCREASING danger that our women soldiers, family members and loved ones will be raped, it is time these programs came off the dusty unit supply shelves and began to be implemented.

Maybe with the implementation of these programs, our soldiers will better understand the harm this crime does to its victims. Maybe, then the long standing myths will be dispelled and attitudes will finally be changed.

197th dining facility vies for Connelly Award

By Paula Dempe
197th PAO

In an unending drama played out each year at Fort Benning and other installations Armywide, unit dining facilities compete against each other in an attempt to be chosen as one of three finalists in the Connelly Award competition.

Since 1968, an evaluating team from Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), has peeped, rubbed, read and tasted its way through numerous dining facilities that hoped to place in this prestigious competition, and go on to contend in the Department of the Army, worldwide competition.

The competition, named in honor of Phillip A. Connelly, a civilian instrumental in getting the sponsorship of the Food Service Executives Association for the Armed Forces, pits dining facilities against each other in three categories: the small unit dining facility, the large unit dining facility and the field kitchen.

Facilities in the small category are required to feed a maximum of 200 people each meal. Facilities competing in the large category are required to feed more than 200.

Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Support Battalion, dining facility, of the "Forever Forward" Brigade, was chosen to represent the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate), in the large unit dining facility category when the TRADOC evaluators came through on Jan. 25.

"The TRADOC representatives check the entire operation: food preparation, sanitation, administrative, everything," said Sgt. Maj. Richard Warner, from Post Food Services.

"In food preparation, whether or not the pies are prepared in-house or commercially, even influences their decision some," Warner continued. "We like to hold down on commercial pastries. The young cooks need the baking experience."

The representatives arrived at the Support Battalion Dining Facility an hour before breakfast and remained throughout lunch, watching and evaluating all aspects of the facility's food service and daily management.

"It really gets the cooks involved," said SFC Anastacios Grution, the dining facility manager. "Everyone tries to be extra careful. We've put a lot of hard, long, hours preparing. Painting, cleaning, getting the equipment up, and the paper work; all get attention."

"The Connelly Program has done a lot in bringing recognition Armywide in food services," stated Warner. "Prior to 1968, the only recognition a dining facility got was for Installation Best Mess."

Proper brushing helps prevent dental diseases

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Heath Month. It is the second in a series of seven on "Going Through Life with a Smile.")

If you're a parent, you know that brushing and flossing your child's teeth daily can help your child have healthy teeth and a happy smile. But do you know why?

Inside the mouth, the average person has about 80 different bacteria. Only a few of these bacteria are responsible for dental caries (tooth decay) and periodontal (gum) disease, but that's more than enough to make the incidence of dental disease second only to that of the common cold. These harmful bacteria live in dental plaque, a thin, almost invisible film that constantly forms on our teeth. The sugars and starches in our foods provide food for the bacteria. In turn, the bacteria produce acids and other irritating waste products that attack our teeth and gums.

The idea that the bacteria in people's mouths cause dental disease is comparatively new and was first suggested by Dr. W.D. Miller about 1890. Not everyone believed it at first.

The story goes that one dental researcher, wanting to show off his new microscope, told his housekeeper that she, like everyone else, had harmful bacteria on her teeth. She was not convinced. To prove his point, he took a sample of the plaque on her teeth and let her see the living bacteria under the microscope. The sight so horrified her that the next day she went to the dentist and had all her teeth pulled.

She got rid of dental plaque the hard way. Someone should have told her that she could have a healthier mouth — and teeth — simply by brushing and flossing daily.

Brushing

Brushing removes plaque from the sides of the teeth by your cheek and tongue, and chewing surfaces of the teeth. There are a number of effective methods of brushing the teeth. Here's one that is currently recommended:

Put the head of the toothbrush beside the teeth, with the bristle tips at a 45° angle to the gums. Move the brush back and forth in short strokes, using a gentle scrubbing motion. Brush the outside surfaces of the teeth, the inside surfaces, and then the chewing surfaces. Tilt the brush vertically to clean the inside surfaces of the front teeth. Finally, brush the tongue to freshen your breath.

Flossing

But brushing alone can't remove all the plaque from the teeth. The teeth should be flossed daily, to clean out plaque that collects under the gumline and between the teeth. If you don't know how to floss, ask your dental hygienist to show you.

You should start cleaning your children's teeth as soon as they appear in the mouth. At first use a thin washcloth or gauze pad, and later when your child will accept it, use a brush.

When the primary molars (back teeth) erupt, then you should start flossing as well, in order to clean the areas of the teeth where they contact one another (usually aound age 2½).

Because children's teeth are more susceptible to decay than those of adults, they should be brushed after every meal with a fluoride teethpaste and flossed daily. Children who are 6 years old or older shoud also use a fluoride mouthrise daily.

When your child is small, you will have to clean the child's teeth yourself. As he or she gets older, you can teach the child how to brush and floss alone. Children do not have the coordination needed to brush their own teeth till age 8 or 9. They cannot floss by themselves until about age 10-12.

Whatever your child's age, set a good example by caring for your own teeth daily.

Most children start out in life with strong, healthy teeth. With a little effort, you can help make sure your child's teeth stay that way. (DENTAC)

Soldiers test new cold weather sleeping bag

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A platoon of soldiers from the 82d Airborne Division and a platoon of Marines are in Vermont doing what a lot of soldiers wish they could get more of . . . sleeping.

They are at a National Guard camp, Camp Ethan Allen, helping the military evaluate its Formal Sleeping System (FSS). The testing began Jan. 23 and will end March 1.

The FSS provides the soldiers with a lightweight and efficient sleeping system for use in an extended cold wet environment. SFC Joseph B. Jones of the U.S. Army Infantry Board, said the camp is close to Burlington, "in prime ski country."

According to a description given to the Infantry Board, the FSS is designed to provide comfortable and restful sleep in temperatures of 40 degrees Fahrenheit to minus 25 degrees Fahrenheit when an ambient relative humidity tending toward saturation exists.

The new system consists of a lightweight insullated sleeping bag, a folding combination foam pad and waterproof groundsheet and a waterproof compression stuffsack.

Jones explained that the soldiers will be taken out to sleep in the new system for a couple of nights, then sleep in the intermediate cold weather sleeping bag with cover and foam pad now being used. Afterwards the soldiers will be asked to evaluate the new system.

He said specific questions would be asked on durability, transportability and preference. Also, the human factors on engineering like if the system is too tight or long enough will also be asked.

Jones emphasized that after six hours of sleep in the system, the test soldier should feel rested enough to do his duties.

The FSS is a component of the Integrated Individual Fighting System Program (IIFSP). The IIFSP is a continuing effort of a Joint Working Group (JWG) established in January 1982 to investigate new individual clothing and equipment initiatives through innovative testing and evaluation techniques.

THe JWG has representatives from the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, the U.S. Army Infantry School, the U.S. Marine Corps Development and Education Center, the U.S. Army Development and Employment Agency, the U.S. Army Human Engineering Laboratories, the U.S. Army Academy of Health Sciences and Natick Laboratories.

The objective of the JWG is to design an IIFS that reduces the weight of the soldiers load while providing improved environmental protection over a wide spectrum of climatic conditions, evaluate it as quickly and efficiently as possible and recommend particular items for procurement.

Post wins $1 million; snares SPIRIT award

Fort Benning has earned first place honors in the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's "Project SPIRIT" competition for the 1983 fiscal year.

The announcement was made yesterday by Brig. Gen. Robert L. Gordon, TRADOC deputy chief of staff for resource management.

Fort Benning took first place in the competition with a total savings of almost $25 million during the year.

As the winner, Fort Benning will get $1 million added to its budget for post projects previously unfunded.

Fort Ord, Calif., placed second in the 17 installation, 18 activity competition. Fort Jackson, S.C., finished third.

The post has already begun plans for next year's "Project SPIRIT" competition. The post's Directorate of Resource Management has set a goal to double last year's savings.

"We need everyone's help in reaching this year's SPIRIT goal," remarked Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, DRM. "Our current goal is more than double last year's."

Martin Army clinic helps soldiers 'kick the habit'

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"If we can get just one person to give up smoking, that's one less person that may not be in the hospital with a serious health problem," Capt. Richard Fleshin, nurse practitioner at the Medical Specialty Clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital said. For that reason, and more, he and his wife, Capt. Diane Fleshin are very much involved in their Stop Smoking Clinic.

Diane, a nurse practitioner and coordinator of the Cardiac Rehabilitation Program, began the smoking cessation clinic last year. "Of the 65 persons that were in our hospital for heart attacks last year, 63 of them smoked. There was a very obvious pattern among them and I wanted to do something to educate smokers on the hazards they were taking."

She said the Georgia Lung Association needed instructors for clinics, so she volunteered and has now completed four clinics at Fort Benning.

"The clinic consists of six sessions, two sessions a week for three weeks. We've had 35 people complete the program and during a six-week followup, have found that about 50 percent have stopped smoking," Diane said.

Richard was recruited by his wife to help with the clinic. "I needed someone to help and Rick was interested, so . . ."

What the Fleshins' say they try and do is educate the smokers that smoking is an addiction and what they need to do to get rid of that "thing" that triggers the need to smoke.

"Our first session is identifying when and why we smoke, then concentrate on behavior modification, getting rid of those reasons," Diane said.

Other sessions include stress management, how not to gain weight, movies about smokers, a talk with a cancer doctor and group interactions. Richard said most of the people are concerned with gaining weight after stopping smoking, but he said actually one-third gain, one-third stay the same and one-third lose weight.

"We offer people tools they can use in their lives. We don't pressure them. We don't scare them, but we let them know that they are running a very high risk of having heart disease and emphysema," Diane said.

"There is a declining risk of heart disease when someone stops smoking, although it may take years to realize the good effects," Diane said.

"The clinic is self-referral with most participants being retirees, probably because they have been more motivated to stop smoking," Richard said.

"We would like to have more active duty personnel, but the clinics have been during the day and that takes time away from their duty. In February, we are starting a night clinic," Diane said.

The dates for the future clinics are February 27 and 28, March 5 and 7 and 12 and 14, from 6 to 8 p.m. Participants attend all six sessions. Pre-registration should be made by calling 544-1221/4166.

Booker T. Washington helped change history

His views, ideas were revolutionary in his time

By Wilhemina Coffee
EOCO

In 1856 a black infant was traded for $7 and a mule.

Nine years later, with the surrender of the South at Appamattox, the former slave would start on a path that would change history.

Booker Taliaferro Washington entered Hampton Institute at 16. There he formed his beliefs that a man could earn his place in society, not by the color of his skin, but by the sweat of his brow.

In a speech at the convention of the National Education Association, Washington said, "Brains, property, and character for the Negro will settle the question of civil rights. The best course to pursue in regards to the civil rights bill in the South is to let it alone. Let it alone and it will settle itself.

"Good school teachers and plenty of money to pay them will be more potent in settling the race question than any civil rights bill and investigating committees."

He was reviled by some of the more militant blacks because of his publicized stand on civil rights issues and praised by many whites for his "soundness on racial matters."

Andrew Carnegie, the steel magnate, donated 600,000 bonds in U. S. Steel to Tuskegee with the provision that a quarter of that be used for the exclusive use of Washington and his heirs. Carnegie said, "I wish this great and good man be free from pecuniary cares, so that he may devote himself to his mission."

Whatever his political stance, his ideas were revolutionary for the time.

His tactic was to placate the establishment in order to progress. Washington knew the value in public opinion and took great pains to walk a narrow line. Some of his critics called him "Uncle Tom," while others called him devious. His ability to judge and sway public opinion enabled him to accomplish more with words than the politicians of the time were able to do with legislation.

After a lynching in Mississippi, he commented, "It is unreasonable for any community to expect that it can permit Negroes to be lynched or burned in the winter and have reliable Negro labor to raise cotton in the summer."

By the turn of the century, Washington had built Tuskegee Institute, a school dedicated to the education of his people.

Benning observes Black History Month

The Fort Benning community will observe "Black History Month" with a variety of activities.

Besides dining facilities serving ethnic meals, units will be holding seminars and static displays with emphasis on black contributions to the American culture.

Some of the other activities planned are:

Today

There will be a fashion show and an ethnic menu at the NCO Open Mess. This event is scheduled for 11:30 a.m.

The "Ohio Players" will be performing at the main NCO club at 9 p.m. The price of admission is $3.

February 19

The 2nd Infantry Training Brigade will sponsor a "Spiritual Adventure Day" at Theater #2 on Harmony Church. The program will start at 1 p.m.

There will be a performance of a Black History play, "Ye Shall Know the Truth" at 2 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

February 21

The Fort Benning Officer's Open Mess will sponsor a Black American Buffet at the club between 6 and 8:30 p.m.

February 26

There will be a presentation titled "The History of Black Music" produced by Sam West at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. The show will start at 2:30 p.m.

There will also be a "Black Heritage" dance at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 5 p.m.

Electronics expert helps maintain most Fort Benning missile systems

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Missile systems, from hand held Redeyes to Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle TOWs, are used daily during the training conducted at Fort Benning. And, as any other piece of equipment, they require expert maintenance to keep them functioning properly.

Michael Johnson, a WG-12 electronic integrated systems mechanic in Shop 5, Maintenance Division, Directorate of Industrial Operations, is one of those responsible for missile maintenance.

His duties involve analyzing problems, diagnosing trouble, overhauling, modifying and testing a variety of missile systems including TOW, TOW II, TOW simulator, Dragon, Redeye and the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

Johnson graduated from Columbus' Carver High School in 1976. After deciding on a career in electronics, he attended the United Electronics Institute in Tampa, Fla., were he earned an associate in science degree.

After school, he was employed by Bendix Avionics, in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in their navigation receiver division. Wanting to work near home, he applied for a job at Fort Benning and started working on post in November 1982.

"I really enjoy working in electronics," he said. "We have all sorts of manuals and wiring diagrams to guide us, but often problems crop up that aren't covered in the manuals and that is when I get to use all my technical knowledge and skill."

His natural curiosity and initiative in looking for ways to improve his job and the equipment have paid dividends. After repairing a broken connector on the Bradley main gun several times, he and a co-worker came up with the idea to replace the troublesome item with the same type used on the TOW system. They submitted this idea through the suggestion award channels. It was adopted with an estimated annual savings of $3,781.20, and each man was awarded $189.

Since starting to work in Shop 5, he has completed a Department of Army course in the TOW II missile system and is enrolled in an Army Missile Systems Electronic Mechanic correspondence course.

His long range career plans are to stay in the electronics field and eventually get into the Department of the Army Technical Assistant for Missile Equipment program.

Fort Benning will observe Arbor Day with ceremony

Arbor Day is observed in Georgia on the third Friday in February each year. This year, a special ceremony is planned which will include the planting of a Fort Benning ceremonial tree.

The program will also include children from Fort Benning schools with a special reading of Joyce Kilmer's poem, "Trees," by a student from Edward White Elementary School. The ceremony will be held in the open area to the east of the intersection of First Division Road and Lumpkin Road at 9 a.m. next Friday. The Fort Benning community is invited to attend.

Through coordination with the Georgia Forestry Commission, Fort Benning has obtained dogwood and red maple seedlings to be planted by post personnel.

Family housing occupants may pick up two seedlings per housing unit from the Buildings and Grounds Division of Directorate of Engineering and Housing, building 330.

Units and major activities should coordinate their seedling requests through Capt. Kardas, assistant DEH, 545-2292/5986. (DEH)

Following instructions saves time, money

You've received your federal income tax package in the mail. You're eager to get your refund but not so eager to fill out the return. It seems like such a task. The following step-by-step tips should make the job easier:

— Be organized. Keeping records is a year round endeavor. The more organized they are, the easier your job will be at tax time and the less likely you are to miss any benefits. You may find it helpful to file receipts or canceled checks in marked envelopes by category during the year. This will save sorting at tax time.

— Start early. Look over the tax instructions, forms and records in January. If you find you need additional forms or you're missing a receipt, you'll have plenty of time to get copies. It's a lot easier than waiting until you're against a deadline.

— Read the instructions. Most of your questions are answered in the tax package, and the instructions follow the sequence of the tax return. Most forms are designed so that if you read and follow them carefully, line-by-line, the form will lead you through itself.

— Take full advantage of free IRS help. Over 90 free publications are available. Use the order form in your tax package to obtain any of these. Some public libraries have step-by-step tax instructions available on cassette tapes.

— Check back over basics. No matter how careful you think you've been, recheck your whole return before you file it. One of the most common errors is copying the wrong dollar amount from the tax table. Remember, errors cause you inconvenience and may result in an incorrect bill for more tax or a delayed refund. The few minutes it takes to check your return are well worth it.

— Sign the return. A return with no signature is not a properly filed return and cannot be accepted as a legal document. The IRS will have to contact you for your signature, a sure way to slow down your refund. Remember, on a joint return, both husband and wife must sign. Each signature must be orginal. If you file a photocopy of a return, be sure to sign after you make a copy.

— Keep a copy. Place a copy of your return with your supporting records. You might need this information later to income average, apply for a college scholarship or amend your return.

— Attach necessary documents. You should receive a Form W-2, "Wage and Tax Statement," from each employer you worked for during the past year. Attach one copy of each of your return. Don't forget your supporting schedules if you're filing Form 1040. Lettered schedules, like schedules A, B and G, should be attached first in alphabetical order followed by number forms in numerical order.

— Identify your IRS payments. If you have a balance due, always pay by check or money order. On the face of the payment, write the tax form number, the year you are paying and especially important, your social security number. That way, if your payment becomes separated from your return, there will be no problem getting the two together again.

— Use the peel-off label and coded envelope. — The peel-off label is on the cover of the tax package you received in the mail; the coded envelope is inside. Both are designed to speed up processing, and use of the label eliminates the two most common causes of refund delays — illegible name and addresses and incorrect social security numbers. If your address has changed, or your social security number is incorrect, you should write the correction right on the label.

For additional forms or tax information and assistance, call the Internal Revenue Service, toll free 1-800-552-9500. (IRS)

Automobile accident rate down

CHICAGO, Ill. — Preliminary estimates based on data from 47 states indicate that motor-vehicle fatalities for the first 10 months of 1983 were down three percent compared to a similar period in 1982, the National Safety Council says.

Through October, an estimated 37,160 persons died in traffic accidents, compared to the 1982 total of 38,500.

Although it's difficult to provide a completely accurate assessment of why motor-vehicle deaths are down, the council says the cumulative effect of the following had a significant influence:

- Increased public awareness of the dangers associated with drinking and driving.
- Strengthened laws to punish drunk drivers; 23 states now athorize the use of preliminary roadside breath testing; 41 states have laws which specify that a driver with a given blood alcohol concentration is in violation of the law.
- Mandatory child safety seat laws. Within the last year, 22 states have passed child passenger protection laws, bringing the count to 40 states and the District of Columbia who have enacted such laws since 1977.
- Increased safety belt usage. About 14 percent of the American public wear belts whenever they travel in motor vehicles. This figure is up at least two percent from a year ago.
- The national 55 mph speed limit. Since this law was passed 10 years ago, at least 40,000 fewer persons have died on our nation's highways. (NSC)

What do you want from the future? More responsibility? A shot at a higher leadership position? Additional education? Maybe you'd like to learn an entirely different skill.

You can do it by staying in the Army. We have exciting futures for the most skilled and experienced soldiers. Reenlisting opens up a whole new world of challenges. You could reenlist to learn a new MOS, or increase your expertise in the one you have now. You might qualify for a high-tech MOS. Or you could join a combat arms unit.

The point is, you don't have to leave the Army to advance your career. We need the best soldiers in the Army. And if fresh, exciting challenges are what you need, the Army has them.

Talk to your Retention NCO today.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Edith Gillenwater and members of Girl Scout Troop 65 seize the opportunity for increased sales by selling Girl Scout cookies at the Infantry Marathon in Doughboy stadium.

Girl Scout cookie sales

The annual Girl Scout cookie sales are winding down; Sunday closes out the fund raising project. If you haven't bought your cookies yet, please do so this weekend. There will be booths located at key business locations throughout the community.

There are seven kinds of cookies this year: Thin Mints, Caramel Delites, Peanut Butter Patties, Peanut Butter Sandwiches, Shortbread, Chocolate Chip and Almond Fudge. The cost is $1.75 per box and personal checks are not accepted.

Monies raised by these sales help fund local troop activities and sponsor camping trips for girls who need financial assistance. It also provides funds for maintenance of Camp Concharty and Camp Robert Lewis.

Self-defense for women

The Bradley Library will show the film, "Common Sense Self-Defense," tomorrow at 10 a.m. and at 4 p.m. The 27-minute movie by Dr. Mary Conroy teaches the three strategies of self-defense for women: how to eliminate danger from our daily lives, how to recognize and avoid dangerous situations, and how to fight when necessary.

Beginning on Sunday, this film may be borrowed by schools, churches or civic groups.

American Music Month

Fort Benning's Music and Theater section of Morale Support Activities Division is celebrating the "Parade of American Music Month" in February with many free musical events.

Things start off tonight at 7 with a piano recital by Mrs. Joleen Olney's beginner and intermediate students at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center (KHRC).

The rock band "Zephyr" will give a concert Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Foxhole Recreation Center and at 5 p.m. at the KHRC. The six-member band will perform for one hour at each location.

A country music band, the Thomas Gill Band, will perform next Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Foxhole Recreation Center.

Next Sunday's activities include the Afro American Players at 2 p.m. at KHRC, and the Benning Belles at 2:30 p.m. in the Harmony Church Recreation Center.

Mikey's Friends, a top 40 and soul band, will play at 7 p.m. on Feb. 25 in the KHRC. Then on the 26th, the History of Black Music will be presented at 2 p.m., also in the KHRC.

The 34th Medical Battalion will host a talent/fashion show in the Community Theater on Feb. 28 at 7 p.m. and the Columbus Symphony will have a concert in Marshall Auditorium on March 3 at 8 p.m.

Benning play opens Feb. 17

The Fort Benning Community Theatre opens their latest production, "Barefoot in the Park" next Friday at 8 p.m. It will also play on Feb. 18, 24 and 25 at 8 p.m. in the Little Theater building at the corner of Wold Avenue and Anderson Street.

See "Alabama" in June Jam

The third annual June Jam, Alabama's charity fund raiser in their hometown, has been scheduled for June 9 in Fort Payne, Ala. The show will feature the Entertainers of the Year Alabama, as well as Janie Fricke and Lee Greenwood.

Because of the huge crush of last minute ticket buyers at the 1983 Jam, tickets are being placed on sale earlier this year and are now available by mail order through the Alabama Fan Club, Dept. JJ, Box 529, Fort Payne, Ala. 35967. The price will remain $15. and only 40,000 tickets will be available. Last year's Jam drew a crowd of 37,684 fans.

The entire net proceeds, totaling close to $400,000, were distributed to more than 100 non-profit organizations in DeKalb County where all group members still make their home.

The June Jam grew out of Alabama's desire to give something back to the people in their hometown.

Rape—one of nation's fastest growing crimes

Because of shame, guilt, an estimated 90 percent of crimes go unreported

By Robert McClain
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In 1984, an estimated 85,000 women will report to police officials they have been raped. Of those women, the largest percentage will be under the age of 18.

But, according to a counselor from the Columbus Rape Crisis Center, the figure will actually be much higher.

"An estimated 90 percent of rapes don't get reported. Either the woman fears the rapest will come back or she feels she will be embarrassed publically," said counselor Marcia Wolfe.

Crime studies show that rape is one of the fastest growing crimes in the nation. According to statistics, the incidence of rape in the Army has not risen as fast as that of the civilian community. However, the number of rapes at Fort Benning has risen over the past year. In calendar year 1983, there where 20 reported rapes as opposed to 15 in 1982. Only one rape has been reported so far in 1984.

The act

The Uniform Code of Military Justice defines rape as, "The commission of an act of sexual intercourse by a person with a female not his wife, by force and without her consent." It may be committed on a female of any age. Any penetration, however slight, is sufficient to complete the offense.

Ms Wolfe added, "Rape is a crime of violence and not a sex crime. The rapist's purpose is to degrade, dominate and hurt the victim. It's an act of hate."

According to the counselor, there is no such thing as a typical rapist. "A rapist can come from any ethnic background or any economic group. He can't be identified by the way he dresses or even the way he acts. He can be a stranger, a friend, a relative, a neighbor or a casual acquaintance," she said.

A soldier found guilty of rape is subject to punishment under the UCMJ. The crime is punishable by death or other punishment directed by a court-martial. Those convicted of assault with the intent to commit rape can be dishonorably discharged, held in confinement at hard labor not to exceed 20 years and have all pay and allowances forfeited.

The victim

To the victim, the effects of a rape are long lasting. According to Ms Wolfe, it is one of the most psychologically damaging of all violent crimes. "The physical part of the crime is nothing compared to the psychological aspects of the crime. Physical wounds heal quickly, mental scars don't," she said.

"The rape victim may be very disorganized and confused. She may attempt to deny the rape," she added. The counselor went on to say that some women get over the feelings of guilt and hurt quickly, but most do not. "No matter how hard the woman may try to deny that the rape happened, she will continue to be haunted by it. They often fall into a deep depression, a state of helplessness. They feel that life will never be the same," she said.

Many women also go through a stage of self-guilt and blame.

"Somehow, they feel they were responsible. They think, 'If I only had stayed home.' or 'If I only fought back.' They feel if they would have taken more precaution it wouldn't have happened. These women need much support to get through this period," she said.

Ms Wolfe said the single most important thing families and loved ones can do is to believe the victim and not burden her with guilt. With the help of families and counselors, women can come to realize that the experience wasn't her fault. "Hopefully, the victim will realize it was a traumatic tragedy, but that it should not destroy her life and her happiness. She can then resume a normal life," said Ms Wolfe.

There's help

There are many places a rape victim can go for help. If the assault occurred on post, call the military police and go directly to Martin Army Community Hospital.

At MACH, rape victims are treated before all others, except those in life-threating situations. A nurse will escort the victim to the examination room

Some common rape myths

'It can't happen to me; only other types of girls are raped'

FACT: It is normal to deny and say "not me," however, victims come from all social and economic classes and races. There is no "one type" of victim nor is there only "one type" of sex offender. A rapist looks for a vulnerable, passive victim without regard to provocative attire or gesture.

'The rapist is usually a stranger'

FACT: It is estimated that about half of all sex crime offenders are known to the victim. Relationships ranging from casual acquaintances to close friendships.

'Unwilling woman can't be raped'

FACT: The victim may not put up strenuous resistance because she is afraid, not because she consents. Traditionally, women have been cautioned against violent resistance because of risk of death or serious injury. Statistics do show, however, that rape attempts are completed less often when the woman does resist. While the risks should not be ignored, there is no longer unanimous agreement that strenuous resistance results in serious injury.

'She made the whole story up'

FACT: False accusations of rape are not nearly as common as the myth would suggest. The rate of unsubstantiated reports is only five to 10 percent.

Many woman can avoid rape by taking a few precautions

The woman was upset. Her bus, due at 10 p.m., still wasn't there at 10:15.

The bus stop was dark and she was alone. Rather than wait any longer, she decided to walk the several blocks home. She didn't notice the man watching her from across the street; he was just a shadow under the pale beam of a lonely street light.

As the woman began walking along the dark and empty sidewalk, the man crossed to her side of the street. She glanced back and saw him. He walked quickly toward her but she thought nothing of it.

She walked casually, her only thoughts were of a date tomorrow night. Playfully, she picked a piece of peeling dry paint from the side of a building. She giggled as it crumbled in her hand.

Suddenly, her eyes opened wide in shock. Sucking in her breath, she tried to scream. But a large, rough hand covered her mouth, muffling her attempt.

Her frightened brain told her not to fight back or he might hurt her. She did not resist as the man dragged her into an alley and raped her.

Could the rape have been prevented? Or was it, as many people believe, beyond this woman's control?

If the woman had taken a few precautions, she might have prevented the rape, according to Army officials.

First, women should avoid situations that invite rape. They should avoid walking alone at night, especially in high-risk areas. Women out alone should be aware of their surroundings and other people. A woman should walk confidently at a steady pace. She should keep close to the curb and avoid doorways, alleys and bushes were a rapist might hide.

If a woman thinks she's being followed, she should take positive action and not be afraid to scream or run. She should carry a whistle or other noisemaker to attract attention.

Women need to have an idea of what action they would take if attacked. Recent studies challenge the traditional belief in passive resistance. But, officials say, the decision to fight back must be based on the woman's estimation of the situation and her physical ability.

Any woman who is raped should report it at once. Since many rapists repeat their crime, a quick report may save another victim. It also improves the chance of catching the rapist.

Studies show that most women think they can't fall prey to a rapist. But, anyone can, officials agree. (ARNews)

Chaplain's Views

Reflections Reflections

By Chaplain Paul Cassibry
Pastor, Infantry Center Chapel

As a young boy, I belonged to a local Scout troop. One of my most enjoyable experiences was going on camping trips.

Before we ever left on the camping trip, everyone had to be paired with someone else. We called it the buddy system. The reason for the system was to insure safety, sharing of skills, and mutual encouragement of the Scouts with each other.

Everyone needs someone to share their daily lives. The psalmist David captured a very special glimpse of the relationship that can exist between persons and God in Psalm 23. David pointed out that by trusting in God, God provides for us, guides us, and blesses us. His words were:

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.
He makes me lie down in green pastues;
He leads me beside quiet waters.
He restores my soul;
He guides me in the paths of righteousness
For His name's sake.
Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I fear no evil; for Thou are with me;
Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me.
Thou dost prepare a table before me in the presence of my enemies;
Thou hast anointed my head with oil;
My cup overflows.
Surely goodness and loving kindness will follow me all the days of my life,
And I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."
(Psalm 23)

2-69th gets boost in tank fire power

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, has replaced its M60A1 tanks for something that may make it one of the strongest units in the 197th Infantry Brigade. The 2-69th now has the M60A3 tanks.

'It's a definite advantage and certainly a big boost to the combat brigade," 1st Lt. Gerald Prater, battalion motor pool officer, said of the new tanks.

The armor battalion was informed last summer by Forces Command that they would be turning in the M60A1 tanks for the newer models, but actually had only a short time to prepare for the change over.

Preparing for turn-in

"We had three months, November, December and January, to bring the old tanks up to standards of brand new condition and because the 2-69th is the only tank battalion on Fort Benning, the men put in some long hours, Maj. William Schott, executive officer, said.

"Our biggest problem in getting the tanks ready for turnin was getting parts," PFC Kent McCuen, loader on one of the tanks said. "We also put in some long hours."

Schott explained the majority of the work on the A1 tanks was done by the 2-69th and because there is not a large amount of support for them on post, the battalion was reorganized.

"Companies A and C prepared the tanks for turn-in and Company B continued to lend school support," he said. The men of the 2-69th with Delta Company, Support Battalion, worked 20 hours a day from mid-November to January but readied 42 of the A1s for shipment to Fort Polk, La. and Fort Irwin, Calif. Those tanks have already been shipped, but not until the Directorate of Industrial Operations checked the tanks to verify they were in brand new condition.

Willie Means

The first thing to be done to the new tanks is operator maintenance so the crews can become familiar with their vehicles.

Twenty-three A1s were shipped to Anniston Army Depot in Alabama for repairs and to be used as an add on supply.

The new tanks arrived Feb. 3 and on Monday, training began with Charlie Company getting to check out the tanks first. The new equipment training team from Fort Knox, Ky., is on post to help the battalion learn the workings of the new tanks.

Learning the system

SFC James Massey of the NETT said one of the biggest differences of the A1 and A3 tanks is the computer system. "The A1 is mechanical and the A3 is electrical," he said. Also a big difference is in the fire control of the A3.

SFC Ezekiel Henry, another member of the NETT explained, "The A3 has a thermal sighting which is day/night optics and works on heat intensity. Also, the A3 has a laser range that is plus or minus 10 meters in accuracy." The tanks also have cross wind sensors on them that measure heat loss.

"There is nothing better than the A3 for fire control; acquiring, firing and hitting a target," Schott said. "It also has a stabilized trip system to allow it to fire while moving."

Each of the companies in the battalion will have two weeks of training on the tanks. Schott explained that C Company will be first, with A Troop, 15th Cavalry second, A Company, 2-69th third and B Company 2-69th fourth. The training will be com-and offer to call a qualified hospital counselor.

A staff doctor will examine the victim and fill out legal-medical forms for evidence in court.

Military police officials will meet with the victim to get a few facts and arrange to meet with them later.

If the assault occurred off-post, the victim has several choices. She can call the Columbus Police Department. A police officer specially trained in handling rape cases will take the victim by patrol car or rescue squad to the hospital of her choice. The victim may still go to MACH; however, Columbus police, rather than the military police will handle the case.

The Columbus Rape Crisis Hotline is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and may be reached by calling 571-6010. Trained volunteers provide information and support to victims at no cost.

In court

A great number of rapes go unreported either because the victims feared their rapist, or because they believed they would be publicly embarrassed.

Rape shield laws now protect victims from the often embarrassing and degrading cross examinations.

Because of Rule 412 of the Military Rules of Evidence, reputation or opinion testimony about the victim's sexual history is not admissible in court. Only two narrow exceptions are included in the law:

- Evidence of a previous sexual relationship between the victim and the defendant.
- Evidence of the victim having a sexual encounter with another person around or before the time of the rape.

In any event, such evidence can't be presented to a jury until the military judge privately rules on its admissibility.

Hard work pays off as specialist takes post food service honors

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Food Service Specialist of the Year for Fort Benning has been announced.

Specialist Five Queenie M. Dumas, food specialist, 43rd Company, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, beat out three other soldiers to win the title during competition February 2.

Each one of the competitors was required to prepare the same meal. The problem, according to Dumas, was in preparing a meal for only 10 people. Sample recipes in the dining facility call for "55 lbs of pork chops, 45 lbs of Polish Sausage, or 105 pounds of roast beef." The 43rd's dining facility prepares meals to feed more than 3,000 soldiers dailiy.

"Our recipes are made to feed one hundred people," said Dumas, "and we multiply from there."

For the competition, Dumas had to divide instead of multiply. She would use one half of a pound of sugar if the recipe called for five lbs. The problem came, claimed Dumas, when a recipe called for a "dash of this — or a pinch of that. I just used my instincts."

Hard work and "instincts" paid off as Dumas' meal was selected as the best. The competition was not easy, explained Dumas, each one of the competitors had been selected "Food Specialist of the Quarter" during the last fiscal year. Dumas won that distinction in the quarterly cook-off January 26.

Dumas , the ninth of 17 children, is used to preparing meals.

Dumas, the mother of four children, one girl and three boys; claims that during football season it seems that she cooks as much at home as she does at work.

When she entered the Army five years ago, she wanted to get away from cooking and into the medical field. "The Army needed cooks — so I'm a cook." stated Dumas.

She took her initial training at Fort Jackson, S.C. and left basic to become a food service specialist at Fort Lee, Va. Upon completion of her advanced training she was assigned to Germany. After a tour in Germany, she came to Fort Benning and was assigned to Company A, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. She claims her assignment to main post gave her an opportunity to sharpen her skills in the administration of a dining facility.

Volunteer forum to be held Wednesday

The second program for Expanded Horizons, a Volunteer Forum for Professionals, will be held Wednesday night from 6 to 7 in Infantry Hall's classroom #4.

Retired Lt. Col. Charles C. McIntosh will address the subject of United Nations' prisoners of war (POW) conduct and personal POW experiences during the Korean Conflict.

As a former POW, McIntosh experienced the psychological, emotional and physical hardships associated with 28 months of enemy captivity. He has spoken before many groups on this subject and brings a wealth of knowledge and personal insight to this topic.

Before retiring, McIntosh had command, staff and USAIS assignments. His last duty assignment was at Fort Stewart, Ga., as a member of General Williamson's Study Group on Mobilization Missions. Presently, he is working with the New Systems Office, Directorate of Training and Doctrine, USAIS.

If interested in presenting a program for Expanded Horizons, please contact Chuck Gantner at 545-2955.

Secretary still looking for her place in world

Tom Fuller

Sp4 Erin Albright

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Specialist four Erin Albright is a soldier still looking for her place in the world and until she finds it, the Army gives her a secure place from which to search.

"I am still not sure what I want to do as a career. However, I know what I don't want to do. Sitting behind a desk is not something I want to do forever as a job," said the 22-year-old Apopka, Fla. native who serves as secretary to the commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate).

"I want a job that has versatility . . . a job where every day you do something different," said Miss Albright who has been in the Army for more than four years.

The second eldest of four children, she came into the Army right after graduating from high school.

"My parents have always encouraged me to make my own decisions and they weren't all that surprised when I told them I wanted to enter the delayed entry program. All my father said is, 'I hope you know what you're getting into,'" said Miss Albright.

Trained as a personnel records specialist (75D), she was assigned to Fort Benning after advanced individual training.

She worked in the brigade's adjutant section until she was selected for her current position last August.

"I enjoy my job. It has a lot of responsibility. I keep the colonel's calendar, schedule appointments, coordinate training events he wants to observe, route distribution and of course answer the phone among other things," she explained.

She is often in the office before others arrive and most nights does not leave before 6 p. m.

"I have to anticipate things such as where the colonel wants to go, what he might want to do, etc." she said.

pleted by March 12, when the battalion will go to Fort Drum, N.Y., for an exercise.

Training tested

Training on the tanks will be in three locations, Schott said. "Initial training will be here at Kelley Hill, then we'll go to Leyte Field, Ala., for one week. While there, the tank crew gunnery skills will be tested along with a river crossing exercise with the 72nd and 43rd Engineers.

"For the last week, we go to Hastings Range for actual tank firing."

Specialist four Kenneth Donnelly, tank driver, said he thinks the A3s are excellent. "It's exciting and fun to learn about these tanks. I really like the laser range and the gunner's control."

"It will take time to learn everything about this tank. I like it, but I'll know more after our first field problem," McCuen said.

But not all the tank crew members found the A3s new. "I've had experience on the A3s in Germany," Sp5 William Edwards, gunner, said.

Simple instructions help went shipping microwave

If you own a microwave oven, moving, shipping, and storing it can be easy and safe if you follow a few simple instructions.

The Military Traffic Management Command recommends you pack your microwave oven in its original shipping carton when moving or storing it, because the specially designed molded styrofoam or cardboard inserts will prevent shifting or movement in transit.

Nothing should be packed inside the oven. Cooking containers, glass shelves and other items should be removed and packed in a separate cartoon.

If you no longer have the original container, ask the mover to provide a sturdy carton that is well padded to protect knobs, glass doors and dials. Tape the door shut with strong packing tape to provide added strength to the glass.

Although microwave ovens require no special handling, avoid placing heavier items on top of them. Long term storage will not adversely affect the oven if it is packed properly.

If the oven has been damaged in transit, don't use it. Call an authorized dealer or repair shop. It is also good practice to have the oven inspected for leakage by a professional after each move, or every few years. Although you can do this yourself, it can be expensive if you don't already own the proper tools. (AFPS)

MACH program helps alcoholic soldiers

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The best thing which can be done to stem alcoholism is prevention, according to the director of the alcohol and drug treatment program at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"People have to be made aware they are playing with something that for some can have devastating effects," said Dr. Sidney H. Levine, alcohol and drug program psychologist.

"We live in a unique society where the drinking of alcoholic beverages is a cultural social ritual. Practically everything we do involves the drinking of alcohol — social gatherings, weddings, births, hail and farewells — it is almost a requirement that alcoholic beverages be available . . . therefore people have to be taught how to drink smart, not hard. If the public can be taught that, then the probability of something going wrong will be greatly reduced," said Levine.

BUT WHEN THINGS do go wrong, it is up to the treatment staff of the community counselling center and others who makeup the community-wide alcohol and drug programs to try and correct them.

"We can't fix things for a person who is alcoholic; that's a misconception people have about alcoholism treatment. We can only try to show a person how to recognize the causes of his alcoholism and provide him with the tools he needs to get sober and stay sober. Only he can decide for himself whether he wants to return to sobriety and stay there," said Levine.

Fort Benning is well equipped to help people who are having alcohol related problems, according to Levine. Not only does the hospital support the treatment program, so do agencies such as Army Community Services, Social Work Service and the Chaplain's Office.

"We work close together and do a lot of cross-referrals, depending on the client's needs and desires. We serve soldiers, civilian employees and family members. The staffs are highly trained, supportive and keenly interested in helping those with alcohol or drug related problems," said Levine.

PRIORITY IS GIVEN to the soldier, he explained. "We must get him back to full duty as soon as possible, if we can. When initially referred to the program, his functioning is impaired and he is not a fully productive person. Our mission is to try to restore his effectiveness to himself and his unit."

There are several ways a person can enter the treatment program. He can volunteer, be referred by a doctor, or directed to enter the program by his commander.

"Command referral is the most common way a client comes to us," said Levine. "Usually a person is entered in the program after being involved in an alcohol related incident of some sort. He may have been caught driving under the influence, come to work late after a night of drinking or been involved in a brawl downtown." he said.

When a client enters the program, the first thing the staff does is to try and get some idea of what has been going on in the person's life.

"We try to get a handle on what his lifestyle is or has been to this point. We try to find out what is his current level of functioning . . . we need to acquire a lot of data because this tells us what we have to do as far as treatment," said Levine.

ONCE THE NECESSARY background data is acquired, the client is entered into individual counselling designed to help him begin coping with his problem. At the same time he also undergoes group therapy.

"Group therapy is highly effective in the treatment of chemical dependency. It causes users to deal with and confront each other and evaluate the situation. It is also much easier for an individual to handle constructive criticism from a peer group then strictly from an individual counsellor," said Levine.

In this stage, the alcoholic is usually throwing up a tremendous wall of resistance. According to Levine he is coming up with every excuse as to why he needs alcohol. To break through this wall, the client is sent through a three-day education program called the "Cues Week."

"The first day deals with the individual and his emotions — why is he sad, why is he angry, what makes him function as an individual. The second day deals more with the nature of the drug alcohol, the physical problems which go with it, and that it is not quite the harmless drug they think it is. The third day is a special group which we call the "Denial or First Step" group.

"THE CLIENT HEARS a lecture then does a worksheet on which he tries to identify how his particular drinking behavior has affected his life in a number of different areas — personal, financial, marital, job and religious.," said Levine.

CONFRONTED WITH THE FACTS, the client is ready to learn how to pull his world together and he goes back into individual and group counselling. Another ingredient is also added to the treatment.

"Since many are married, we look at alcoholism as a family disease. The drinker has the problem, but it affects everyone. It takes an emotional toll on the family. Since he does not want to accept the responsibility for his drinking, the alcoholic blames it on the ones closest to him, his wife and children," said Levine.

The family is now included in the counselling program to help them and the drinker to learn how to cope with the situation.

"There is no way we can eliminate the stress of life. However, we can teach the individual and the family how to deal with the stress constructively and not destructively," said Levine.

"We have to be expeditious in what we are doing, but at the same time caring. We do have a challenge because we have to bring the client back to duty as soon as possible. Some people make the turnaround faster then others . . . the individual can remain in the program for one year," said Levine.

The bottom line is no one can do it for the alcoholic, he has to have the desire to change his life.

Marshal's Viewpoint

Using precaution helps protect property

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

Security of personal property is a large problem. This includes money, jewelry, radios, stereos, televisions, or anything else that you may own of value.

A lock does not protect your property 100 percent of the time against a thief; however, it might possibly deter him, or it might even send him down the hall to a locker or room which is not secure.

The best policy is to secure all of your personal property. For additional protection, mark all items with your SSN and then record it on FB (PM) Form 20. This will greatly assist the military police in recovering your stolen property. The FB Form 20 should be properly filled out in duplication: one copy for you to keep and one copy for the first sergeant to keep. You can get these forms from your unit orderly room.

Leaving a wallet on your bed, even for a short period of time to take a shower or go to the latrine, may be long enough for a thief to take your money or wallet. To help alleviate this problem, I highly suggest that you use the Fort Benning or Columbus banks, or secure your money in the company safe.

Even after you have taken all precautions to protect your property, a theft can occur. As soon as a theft is noticed, report it immediately to the CQ, your platoon sergeant, first sergeant or commander and have them notify the military police as soon as possible at 545-5222. The chances are greater in recovering your property and apprehending the thief if the MPs are notified immediately.

If you should see someone going through the barracks whom you cannot identify, or do not know their purpose for being there, report them to someone in charge immediately.

If you live in quarters, here are some important tips on security:

- Close and lock all doors and windows in your home or quarters when you go out. If an intruder cannot enter your home through a door, he will try a window. Unlocked windows and doors offer easy access to an experienced thief. The best lock in the world is worthless unless it is locked.

No structure is 100 percent secure. The more difficult you make it for a potential thief, the better the chances are he will go elsewhere.

- Don't advertise your vacation plans. Stop your newspaper delivery with the local newspaper. You can call the Ledger or the Enquirer, and they will hold or stop your newspaper while you are gone. Or you can have a friend or neighbor pick up your newspaper and mail while you are away.

Never leave your house keys under a mat or in the mailbox because an experienced thief will check these two places 90 percent of the time. If you can hide it, the burglar can find it.

- Make your Quarters look (and sound) occupied. Leave drapes and shades in the normal position you have them when you are at home. Place easily removable valuables in a closet so they can't be seen through the windows.

Leave on some inner lights — bathroom and hallway are sufficient. You might consider buying automatic timers that turn lights on after dark then off a few hours later, or at dawn. You can also use these timers to turn on your radio so your home sounds occupied.

- Be a good neighbor. Don't be an island, neighborhood watch is the key. Develop a way of having a neighbor watch your quarters or home while you are gone. The military policeman patrolling your neighborhood may not recognize a stranger in your yard, but a neighbor would.

Use your phone without hesitation. Your military police provide continuous 24 hours service; call 545-5222/5223. Remember, without your reporting any suspicious acts, the criminal may have the opportunity to strike again. This time it could be YOU.

If you observe suspicious persons or occurrences, do not attempt a personal investigation. Keep the phone handy or ask the operator to assist you. Give the following information to the military police if at all possible:

Your name and address
Location where the military police is needed
Brief account of what happened
Descriptions of person(s) involved
License number and a description of automobile involved.

- Mark your valuable items. Record the description and serial numbers of such items as your radios, camers, television sets and small appliances. This will aid law enforcement officials in obtaining recovery.

Mark all your easily stolen valuables with the head of the household's social security number, then display a decal on your window or door that informs the burglar that your property has been coded and recorded. Marked property makes things difficult for a burglar, due to the difficulty of disposing of it. Mark your property where it can be easily seen.

- Procedures for notifying the Military Police. If a thief should steal any valuables from your home or residence, immediately notify the military police. Have a list of the valuables missing upon their arrival, a description of the valuables, and a serial number if at all possible so as to insure prompt recovery of your property.

Many fallacies associated with alcoholism

The alcoholic fools himself in many ways. He is creative at coming up with reasons to deny his problem and to justify his continued drinking. These are some of them:

"I just drink beer and not whiskey."
"I haven't been fired."
"I provide food and shelter for my family."
"I don't drink anymore than anyone else does."
"I'm not a skidrow bum."
"If I just had a different assignment."
"My first sergeant doesn't like me."
"My wife is hard to live with."
"There's nothing else to do."
"I'm not hurting anyone else."
"I've had a lot of bad breaks."
"I'm just celebrating my promotion (birthday, anniversary, etc.)"

The list could go on. No matter how trivial or weak the excuse (and that is all these are) they perpetuate the alcoholic's delusion about his drinking.

'Demon' soldier uses breath control to earn title

Bill Reynolds

Private John H. Horn Jr. installs a tracking unit in an Improved TOW Vehicle.

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the story of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and startedtheir 10th week of training Monday.)

The "third herd" of of D—8—2 distinguished themselves at Lee Field last week when one of their number was named "top gunner."

Private John H. Horn Jr. 25, outscored gunners from three training companies to earn the title. He was selected as the gunner to fire a live TOW missile at Red Cloud Range at the end of the first phase of the TOW/Dragon course.

"I just did what the instructors told me," explained Horn, who scored 805 points out of a possible 1,000. He explained that "breath control" was the major factor in achieving the high score.

"I worked out my own breath control technique," stated Horn. "It was a little different than what they taught me — but it worked! I could keep the tracker sights on the target for the full time."

The instructors at Lee Field teach the students to inhale a normal breath and to exhale after firing the weapon. Horn found that it was easier for him to fire the weapon while he was inhaling — and hold his breath while tracking the target.

"I modified the technique," claimed Horn, "about halfway through the upswing of my breath — I would squeeze my trigger. By the time the missile fired downrange, I would be at the top of my breath and then I would let it down. That way I could keep the weapon stable during the whole period of time."

Horn is one of the soldiers that joined the platoon after the mid-cycle exam. He was chosen from another platoon to train as a "tank-killer."

According to Horn, he decided to enter the Army because, "I wanted to work for a living." He says the training he is receiving is "excellent" and comments that he is "really working for a living."

Horn and the other high scorers from the class are now training on the Improved Tow Vehicle, a mechanized vehicle with a firing system that resembles the movie character "E.T." The launch system rises from the body of the tracked vehicle much like the neck of the movie character. The difference between the two is that instead of the cow-like eyes of "E.T.," two deadly TOW missiles look out over the battlefield.

Horn says the ITV is "a lot to pack in your brain," but he agrees with his instructor, that it's just like a big "Atari game."

Two Benning basketball titles on the line

Over 35 league proves that cagers are never too old

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Is there basketball after the age of 35?

If you would ask some 70 members of the Over 35 basketball league for their response, it would probably be, "Yes, but not if you lose twice."

The league is presently in the midst of its double-elimination tournament in which two loses would knock a team out of the event.

Three teams have already suffered such a fate as of Wednesday night. The teammembers of the 197th Infantry Brigade, Headquarters Command and the 34th Medical Battalion have to grow one year older before they can call themselves, "the best of the old men."

Two other teams fell last night; the scores were not available at press time. One team, The School Brigade, was not one of them. They defeated MEDDAC Wednesday night in the finals of the winner's bracket and they are in tonight's championship game that begins at 7 at Briant Wells Field-house.

After defeating the Hawks in their tournament opener, 43-31, TSB upset the regular season champions, the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, 51-41. They then downed MEDDAC in the finals of the winner's bracket, 41-37.

Last night's opening game pitted the Hawks, 1-1 in the tourney, against 2nd ITB, 1-1.

The Hawks lost their opener to TSB. They then defeated the 34th Med. Bn. ancd the 197th Inf. Bde. in the loser's bracket.

Second ITB received a bye in the opening round due to the fact that they were the regular season champions. Following their loss to TSB, 2nd ITB demolished Headquarters Command.

The winner of the Hawks-2nd ITB game then had to face MEDDAC in the finals of the loser's bracket to decide TSB's opponent in tonight's finals.

No matter which team won the loser's bracket, that team still needs to beat TSB twice tonight to claim the post's over 35 title.

Script remains same, only players change as Intruders roll on

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The script is the same, only the players are different.

That is without a doubt the best discription of this year's women's double-elimination basketball tournament. The Intruders, the undefeated regular season champions, are running away from their opponents with the tournament and with another title.

"Just as in volleyball, softball and practically every sport that we have conducted women's championships in the last two years, the Intruders are dominating the play," commented Speedy Austin, assistant post sports director.

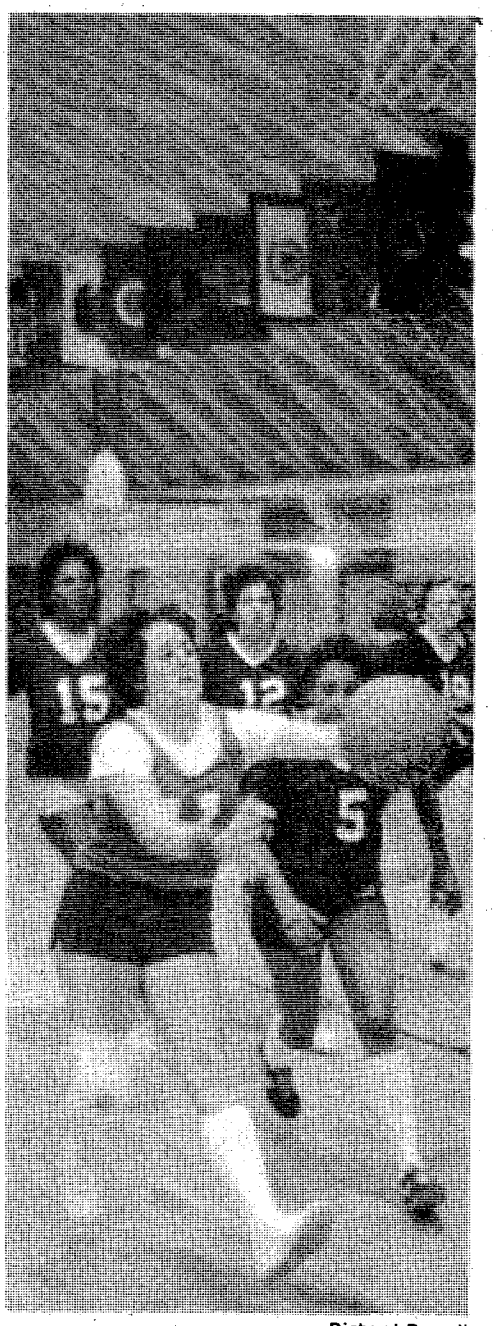
The defending post champions opened the tournament rather slowly Tuesday night. A fired up McGraw Manor squad slowed down the tempo for the first half and threw a scare into the Intruders. They came out running in the second half and turned the game into a blowout, 53-15.

"The women were too tight in the first half," stated Albert McGruder, the Intruders' coach. "We missed several easy shots. McGraw Manor did a good job of slowing down the pace which threw us at first."

The Aggies were the Intruders next victum in the finals of the winners bracket. They now need only to win tonight's championship game, which tips off at 6 in Briant Wells Field-house to regain the post title.

Their opponent was undecided as of press time. It will be either McGraw Manor or the Aggies, depending on the outcome of last night's game.

"I really don't care who we play," stated Karen Bender, an Intruder as well as a selectee to this year's All Army team. "We are confident that we can beat either squad. The real key is that no matter who it is, they have to beat us twice in one day."



Richard Russell

The Aggies have been chasing balls and the Intruders all year.

All of the teams combined have not been able to beat the Intruders once during the entire season, let alone one team beating them twice in one night. That fact alone justifies Bender's, as well as the rest of her teammates, feelings of confidence.

Volleyball players needed

The sports office is now accepting team and individual applications for the upcoming volleyball season. Coaches, as well as players, are needed for the women's league. For more information, contact Speedy Austin at 545-5777.

Post boxers compete tonight

Tonight's boxing smoker at the Harmony Church Field House has had a new team added to its field. Members of the Fort Bragg boxing team have traveled to the post to compete in tonight's matches. Joining Bragg's team will be Fort Benning; the Dothan, Ala. Athletic Club; Warner Robin's boxing club and the Columbus Metro boxing team. The first bout is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Racquetball trials set

Fort Bragg, N.C., will be the site for the 1984 All Army Racquetball trial camp May 2-12. The Fort Benning Sports Office is now accepting applications for that camp. Fort Benning will send three individuals, one in each category, to the camp. The three categories are: open, men 34 ad younger; senior, men 35 and older; and women, any age.

Captain makes winter games

Captain David Gilman, Oakland Army Base, Calif., will be participating in the 1984 Winter Olympic Games which got underway Tuesday in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. Gilman will be representing the United States as a member of the luge team, the one-man sledding event. Gilman finished second in the luge trials.

Termite results

Lakers 3..... Warriors 0

The Lakers strengthened their hold on first place in the Termite Division by downing the Warriors 3-0. Eddie White had the game's only field goal in the first quarter. Dwohn Luckey ended the scoring by adding a free throw in the second quarter.

Lakers 8..... Eagles 4

The Eagles threw a scare into the Lakers by building up a 4-2 lead mid-way through the fourth period. The Lakers then scored six unanswered points enroute to a 8-4 victory. The Lakers were led by Eddie White's four points. Jessie Day and Dwohn Luckey each added two for the Lakers. Dwight Toney and Jalacy Hawkins split the Eagles' scoring.

Pee Wee results

Courtmasters 22..... Lakers 14

A strong first half paved the way for the Courtmasters to defeat the Lakers 22-14. Kevin Owens scored eight of his game high 10 points in the first quarter. Donald Langhorne and Richard Stilwell had four points apiece while Courtmaster teammates' Brian Marks and Daryl Norris each added two. The Lakers' Edwardo Smith had five in a losing effort. Thomas Clausell, Bernard Thompson, Terence Branch and Elizabeth Velez each scored two and Steven Lorick added one.

Nuggets 26..... Hawks 22

The lead changed hands several times before the Nuggets took control in the final period and beat the Hawks 26-22. Geoffrey Sharr led the Nuggets with 10 points. Michael Wardlaw and Travis Dumas each had six while Sammie White and Melinda Cater had a field goal apiece for the Nuggets. The Hawks received all of their scoring from Marcus Leonard, 10 points, Jonathan McNeill, six points, and Kris Profitt, also with six points.

Nuggets 25.... Courtmasters 23

The Nuggets moved into a tie for second place with the Lakers and within one game of the Courtmasters when they defeated the first place club 25-23 in overtime. It was the first setback for the Courtmasters this season. The Nuggets were led by Michael Wardlaw's 14 points, including all five of the team's points in the overtime. Travis Dumas had six and Geoffrey Sharr added five for the Nuggets. The Courtmasters' scoring was more balanced as Daryl Norris accounted for eight; Donald Langhorne, Richard Stilwell and Brian Marks each added four; and Kevin Owens capped off the Courtmasters' scoring with three.

Junior results

Spurs 48..... Warriors 36

The Spurs moved back into first place when they defeated the Warriors 48-36. Two Spurs scored in double figures, John Cottingham with 22 and Ricky Logo had 14 points. Additional scoring came from Kevin Price with eight. Lee Spitalnick and Stanley Maxwell each added two. The Warriors were led by Glen Smith's 10, followed by Darrell Harris and Robert Cline with eight each. Darrell Flowers and Otis Brown concluded the Warriors scoring with six and four respectively.

Warriors 47..... Rockets 38

Rebounding from the 12-point defeat they suffered at the hands of the Spurs, the Warriors moved back into a first place tie when they defeated the Rockets 47-38. Robert Cline led all scorers with 15 followed by teammate Darrell Flowers who had 14. Darrell Harris had 10, while Otis Brown and Glen Smith each added four for the Warriors. The Rockets got 14 from Vincent Williams, eight from Jummanee Jackson, six from Michael Dumas and five from John Sienicki.

Spencer vs Shaw for tops in region

Spencer High School's varsity basketball team, which features four Fort Benning youths, will be playing Shaw High School tonight for the Region 2-AAAA West Championship at Spencer High beginning at 8. The teams have split the two games they have previously played.

Spencer, 10-3 in region play and 16-4 overall, starts two post family members, Alex Freeman and Gary Moon. Freeman and Moon both missed three games during the season and the Greenwaves lost all three. Shaw High, also 10-3 in regional action and 12-9 overall, already owns one regional victory over the Greenwaves, without Freeman and Moon. The Raiders downed Spencer in a hard fought battle at Shaw earlier this year.

The squad's first encounter was in the Christmas tournament at Columbus College in which Spencer prevailed.

The game will be more than just the deciding third game; it will decide which squad will earn the number one seed in the regional tournament which follows regular season play.

Look for complete coverage of tonight's contest in next week's edition of The BAYONET.

Seminole first stop on tourney trail

BAINBRIDGE, Ga. — The first Bulldog Division competition on the 1984 Red Man Tournament Trail will bring up to 360 bass anglers to Lake Seminole on March 4. Entry deadline is Feb. 22.

The Lake Seminole tournament at Wingate's Lunker Lodge is one of six events scheduled for Georgia area fishermen. The five other Bulldog Division events scheduled between March and August will be at Lake Lanier, Lake Eufaula in Alabama, Hartwell Lake, West Point Lake and Lake Oconee.

This year, the Red Man Tournament Trail is expanding from 10 to 15 geographical divisions. Each division has six tournaments, bringing the ational total to 90 tournaments. These events lead to a year-end Red Man All American Bass Championship worth nearly $200,000 in cash and merchandise.

"The Red Man Tournament Trail is designed with the 'working man' in mind," said Mike Whitaker, president of Operation Bass, the organization that manages the tornaments. "Entry fees are low and each one-day tournament is scheduled on a Sunday."

More than 1,450 fishermen caught a total of 2,167 bass in last year's six Bulldog Division tournaments. Ninety-one percent of the bass caught were returned to live to local waters.

Bulldog Division finalists in last year's All American championship were Tony Wilson of Woodstock, winner of a Ranger bass boat; Bob Hardin of Leesburg, a $1,000 winner; and Jim Haddon of Tallahassee, Fla., a $500 winner.

The 24 top anglers from each of the 15 divisions move to one of three regional tournaments in October. Each regional winner receives cash awards, a Ranger bass boat and a Dodge Ram Tough truck.

Twelve finalists from each of the three regional tournaments make up the Red Man All American field. These 36 fishermen will be competing from Oct. 30 to Nov. 3 for the first place award of $100,000 in cash.

To compete in Red Man Tournament Trail events, a fisherman must join Operation Bass. A $50 per tournament entry fee is charged; all entry fees are paid back in tourney prizes.

For membership information, call or write Operation Bass, Rt. 2, Box 74B, Gilbertsville, Ky. 42044. Telephone: (502) 362-4880.

Xs mark spot for Wigger at indoor championships

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit members scored both individual and team victories during the 1984 National Indoor Rifle Sectional Championships fired at Fort Benning last weekend.

Former national indoor champion, Lones Wigger of USAMU, won the conventional rifle event after finishing in a three-way tie with Army Reservist and former USAMU member, Karen Monez of Fort Worth, Texas, and Mary Godlove, also of USAMU.

All three scored a total of 799 out of 800 possible points, with Wigger winning on the most number of Xs (center shots). Monez placed second while Mary Godlove finished third.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Gold" squad scored a total of 1,598 out of 1,600 points to win the event and tie the existing national record. Team members included Wigger, Richard Hawkins, James Meredith and David Erickson.

The NRA three-position indoor rifle event was won by Monez by a narrow three-point margin, scoring 1,185 out of 1,200 points to Godlove's total of 1,182. Hawkins of USAMU, finished in third place with 1,180.

Post soccer club finishes second in tourney

By Willie Means
197th Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Soccer Club's fall season came to a stunning end Sunday as the team was crushed by the Auburn City Internationals, 11-0, at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala.

The Internationals pounded Benning's goalie with 24 shots while only giving Benning the opportunity to get off five shots.

"They just have a good team," said Benning's coach Tom Wilbur whose game plan was to keep the ball low and pound the International's goalie with as many shots as possible. "They have the advantage on us. They play together year after year. We're here for a short time and when we finally get the team rolling, someone gets reassigned or winds up dropping from the team because he has too many commitments to practice."

The fall season began in September and was scheduled to end with a tournament Dec. 11-12. The tournament began, but like the bag luck that had plagued the team throughout the regular season, the final day of the competition was rescheduled because of rain.

"During the tournament, we finally had a team that had played together for a while," said Ike Howard, left halfback. "We were winning. I believe we could have beaten the Internationals had we played when scheduled."

The tournament had to be rescheduled twice.

Willie Means

The Internationals outshot Benning 24-5.

Correction

In last week's edition of the BAYONET, on page 21, we mistakenly reported that Anita Eggert was the best woman finisher in the Infantry Marathon. Virginia Yates, 21st Company, The School Brigade, was actually the top woman finisher. We regret any inconvenience this may have caused.

THE COLUMBUS LEDGER

MOVING?

Would You Like Information On Your Destination?

WE CAN HELP!

Showcase is a full service company and can help you buy, sell or rent a home in Columbus or anywhere in the U.S.A.

We are especially well qualified to assist military families on the move. Our military wives and retirees who have found a second career in Real Estate understand the problems and needs associated with PCS moves.

WHEREVER you are moving, we can provide you with information on your new destination such as housing, schools, churches, etc., through our affiliation with the "Homes For Living" network of over 2,000 offices throughout the U.S.A.

Benning wins SPIRIT award, $1 million

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning added a bonus of $1 million to its budget last week when it won the Training and Doctrine Command's SPIRIT competition.

The announcement of the competition winner and the $1 million first prize was made at Fort Monroe Va., by Brig. Gen. Robert L. Gordon, deputy chief of staff for Resource Management.

Fort Benning won the prize by submitting more than 120 money-saving initiatives during the fiscal year.

"I was worried that we wouldn't win," said Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, Directorate of Resource Management (DRM); "Fort Benning has been doing a lot of good things in the program and the people deserved the recognition."

The cost-cutting ideas that won the competition ranged from a $459,000 savings by increasing boiler efficiency to a $90.61 saving for color-coding suspense files.

Plans to spend the bonus have not been made, according to DRM director Joseph Chapla. He says while it's "plainly evident" that any one activity on the installation could spend the entire bonus on necessary items, the decision as to how the bonus will be spent has yet to be determined. "The bonus will come down labeled as Operational and Maintainence Army funds and subject to the regular restrictions," stated Chapla.

Currently, the DRM is soliciting suggestions from major commanders and directorates as to the most efficient way to use the windfall. The suggestions will be presented to a resource advisory committee and put in priority of need. These suggestions, according to Chapla will then be presented to the post commander for approval. "No matter how the money is used," commented Chapla, "people at Fort Benning will be the beneficiaries."

Monday's a holiday

Monday, we commemorate the 252nd anniversary of the birth of our first president George Washington. Because of the holiday, only essental personnel will be on duty. In addition, a display in building four's media room will honor our first president until Feb. 24.

Soldiers urged to visit hospitalized veterans

The nation saluted its hospitalized veterans during the week of February 14 and the Veterans Administration invited citizens nationwide to visit the nearly 90,000 patients in its medical facilities.

The 14th has passed, but the need for visitors has not. Reports from VA medical centers indicate the most popular VA patient's visitors, other than their own families, are active duty military personnel in uniform.

The VA, which administers veterans medical and benefits programs, has also mounted an effort to encourage Americans of all ages to serve as hospital volunteers year-round.

Over 50 national volunteer groups and veterans organizations have joined in the effort.

With the First Lady as honorary patron and Harry Morgan, star of AfterMASH, as honorary chairman, the program's theme is "Nothing hurts like being forgotten — Nothing helps like being remembered."

"In addition to honoring our veterans and volunteers," said VA Administrator Harry N. Walters, "this is an opportunity for us to share with the public the professional excellence of the VA's health care system which is the nation's largest."

The system includes 172 medical centers, 16 domiciliaries and 99 nursing home care units throughout the country.

Walters noted that "volunteerism is critical to the quality of care provided those who have served their country in time of need."

During Fiscal Year 1983, 79,000 volunteers provided 11.9 million hours of service to hospitalized veterans. The value of their participation, based on the generally accepted average value of $6.50 per hour, would be $77.2 million. Volunteers also generated $10 million dollars in donations.

Volunteers are involved in everything from patient care and recreation to administration and transportation assistance.

Examples of volunteer services range from helping in home rehabilitation of stroke patients to supervised youth groups from preschool through junior high school in one-to-one "adopted grandparent" activity.

If you want to volunteer on a long-term basis, call the VA medical facility nearest you.

There are two VA hospitals near Columbus, one at Tuskegee, Ala., and one in Atlanta. Call Pat Stephens, (205) 727-0550, ext. 611, for Tuskegee and Jim Bishop, (404) 321-6111, ext. 319 for Atlanta. (VANews)

CG's message

Post commemorates Washington's birthday

Monday, 20 February 1984, we commemorate the 252nd anniversary of the birth of George Washington. Although remembered as the father of our country, he was also a distinguished citizen-soldier and military commander who believed in the importance of a strong regular army.

General Washington, in a letter to the President of Congress in 1776, warned that without a permanent standing army we could lose the war. At the same time, he recognized that by putting on a uniform a man did not cease to be a part of the community. "When we assumed the soldier," he said, "we did not lay aside the citizen."

Much of his advice is as valid today as it was over 200 years ago. "There is nothing so likely to produce peace as to be well prepared to meet the enemy," he said.

Here at Fort Benning, we can all take great pride in our meaningful contributions to peace. Today's Army of Excellence fully measures up to General Washington's hopes.

Soldier thanks people for kindness

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Specialist five Leroy Mason's wife died recently of cancer. She was only 25-years-old. The family had no life insurance due to the fact she has suffered the disease for four years. No insurance company would give them a policy. The family also has two small children. After her death, various units on post collected money to pay for her funeral. Mason wrote a letter to the BAYONET because he wanted to thank everyone who donated for their kindness.)

To the military and civilians at Fort Benning:

I would like to take this time out to say thank you for your love and concern shown toward me after my wife's death. I could not have made it without your support or prayers. The word of God tells us to be doers of the word and not hearers only. You have fulfilled the word in your doing and reaching out. I am pleased to know that even though many of you did not know my wife or me, you reached out and helped just the same. My prayers go out for each and everyone one of you. May God richly bless you.

GIRL SCOUTS work together by learning skills, especially how to make things. Adult leaders supervise and help them with projects.

Scouting is good for America

Robert McClain

It has been 74 years since William D. Boyce helped found Boy Scouting in America. Girl Scouting has been with us for nearly as many years.

As we celebrate the anniversary of the Boy Scout program's conception, I am reminded of how much the program and society's attitudes toward it have changed since I was a Scout in the early 1970s.

The Viet Nam conflict was drawing to a close and many adults held a bad feeling about what soldiers stood for. Children reflected these adults attitudes in their feelings about Scouting.

Ten years ago, children couldn't identify with the Scouting program. All of a sudden, it was bad to be a Scout and a soldier. I still remember getting into fights just because I was wearing my Boy Scout uniform. But, despite the fights and razzing from other boys, I stayed in the Scouting program.

Many of my fellow Scouts didn't. And many of my other friends were reluctant to join the program because of peer pressure. During the decade, the Scouting programs in America suffered great declines in membership. In 1972, nearly 5 million boys were involved in the Boy Scout program. At the end of the decade, only 3.2 million boys had Scout memberships.

Society's attitudes have changed recently — changed for the better. Once again it is all right to be a Scout and a soldier.

Attitudes about the program have changed, but over the last 75 years, the scouting program's underlying goals and ideals of leadership and citizenship have not changed.

Boy Scout Law states that a Scout must be trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, brave, clean and reverent. Girl Scout Law has basically the same honor code. These are good traits for any young person to strive

But, today's Scouting programs teach more than just those ideals along with the traditional camping and woodcarving. The Scouting program has changed to reflect youth's changing roles and interests in the modern family and community.

Many new programs have recently been added to Scouting.

Youths who have an idea about what kind of career they would like to get into can obtain experience in that field through the Explorer Scout program.

The Boy Scout's Tiger Cubs program gives younger boys a chance to get introduced to Scouting. A boy must join the program with a family member. The program's purpose is to strengthen the relationship between the boy and his relative.

Handicapped children can also benefit greatly from Scouting. Their are many packs and dens for mentally and physically handicapped youths in the area. The Scouting program gives these children a social group to belong to and recognition they might not receive if mainstreamed into other groups.

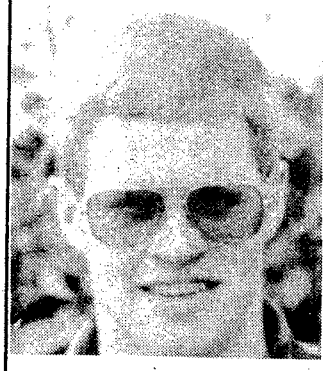
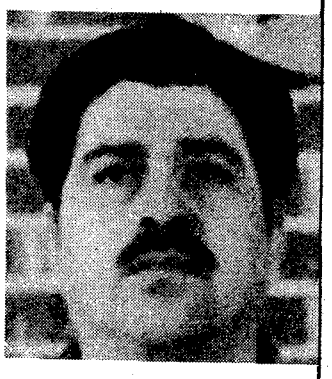
How do you think America's Scouting programs affect our children's development?

SFC Timothy J. Eggers, D Company, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade—"Scouting is very beneficial. It instills responsibility at an early age. The programs are good for America."

SSgt. Sandra L. Corbett, Fort Benning Scout coordinator—"Because of Scouting programs, children become very civic minded. Most become very active in their communities. Scouting programs are especially helpful to handicapped youths."

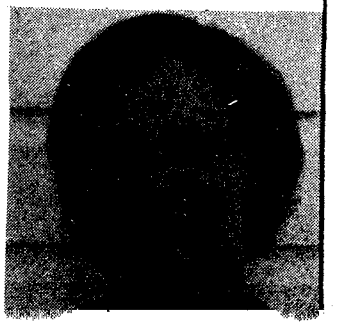


2nd Lt. Dennis T. Brown, A Company, 3-7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade—"The programs help children better interact with people their own age. It also prepares them for the biggest challenge they will face in their lives-dealing with people."



SGM Louis R. Cervantes, Custer Terrace Community Life coordinator—"Scouting helps children think for themselves and handle different situations on a daily basis. The programs also teach the first principals of leadership."

2nd Lt. John M. Carr, A Company, 3-7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade—"I think both Girl and Boy Scouting give children a chance to think independently. It also builds many good traits in a child."



Sue Sheridan, family member, Bouton Heights/Davis Hill-"The programs are especially beneficial for military children. The scouting programs give them a chance to meet new friends. It also helps the children to build con-

Boy Scouts celebrate 74th birthday

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This month the Boy Scouts Of America (BSA) celebrates its 74th anniversary. Since its beginning more than 60 million Americans; presidents, actors, senators, and astronauts among them have been involved in Scouting.

Not only are the Boy Scouts celebrating their birthday, the Cub Scout program is 54 years old this year.

The Scout program began in 1910, but a year earlier an American businessman visiting London, England was exposed to Scouts and decided to start a similar program in the United States.

The story goes that William D. Boyce was lost in the thick fog in London. A boy came up to him and asked if he could help. When Boyce told the boy where he wanted to go, the boy simply took him there. When Boyce arrived at the office he needed to get to, he attempted to tip the boy, but the boy said no. It's recorded that the boy said, "No thank you, sir. I am a Scout. I can't take anything for helping."

Later, the boy explained about the Scouts and took Boyce to the British Scout Office, where he met Robert Baden-Powell, the British general who was founder of the British Scouts. Baden-Powell was a hero of the Boer War and decided to use his influence to help boys become more complete men. He wrote "Scouting for Boys" and thousands of boys joined his Scouts.

Boyce and a group of supporters founded the BSA on Feb. 9, 1910. The official handbook for American Boy Scouts was published in 1910 and emphasized the fun of camping, hiking and nature. It described games, events and badges for them to earn. Today, this book has sold more than 30,000,000 copies.

The purpose of the BSA, chartered by Congress in 1916, is to provide for boys and young adults an effective, educational program designed to build desirable qualities of character, to train in the responsibilities of participating citizenship and to develop in them personal fitness.

Staff Sergeant Jack Hodges, Scoutmaster for Troop 127 and assistant district commissioner sees the BSA as, "helping young boys learn good citizenship and personal habits.

"We also set goals for the boys to attain, the Eagle being the highest award. Only two percent of all boys in Scouting make Eagles."

The Fort Benning District of the Chattahoochee Council has troops on post and downtown. Troops 283, 475, 277, 276, 238, 41 and 135 are downtown. Those on post are 127 from McGraw Manor and Custer Terrace, 27 from Main Post and 51 from Bouton Heights/Davis Hill. The Scout program is a program for boys 11 through 17.

Six Cub Scout Packs are on post too. Pack 227 from Indianhead Terrace, 27 from Main post, 217 from Custer Terrace, 127 from McGraw Manor and 51 from Bouton Heights/Davis Hill. There are also five Packs downtown, 120, 135, 41, 226 and 54. The Cub Scout program is a family and home-centered program for boys who are eight, nine and ten years old.

"We also have the Explorer program on post for young men and women ages 15 through 20 that provides realistic opportunities to explore adult-like roles and vocational opportunities."

There are four Explorer Posts at Fort Benning: Post 27 sponsored by the Rangers, Post 99 sponsored by Martin Army Hospital, Post 28 sponsored by Lawson Army Airfield, Post 988 sponsored by the Military Police Activity.

"We have two special programs on post too. One is our handicapped Boy Scout Troop, number 555, sponsored by the Army Community Service, then we have the Tiger Cub Pack which gives 7-year-old boys something." Hodges said this program is only two years old.

He said there are approximately 1,000 boys involved in Scouting, if you count those in the two new programs. Involvement in all the programs is on an increase. The Cub Scouts increased 93 members from a year ago, which brought their membership in December to 428. There was an 18 member increase in Scouts, which brought them to 236 and a 31 member increase in the Explorers, bringing them to 226. A total membership increase for all Scouts was 140 which brings the total to 923.

They compete for merit badges and white badges. "The badges help the boys learn national, country and world citizenship," Hodges said.

The Scouts have programs scheduled throughout the year, one of the biggest being their fall round up. "Usually, in September we send out flyers and all our troops and packs go out to recruit young boys in the schools."

Two more big events scheduled in March are the Scout-O-Rama and the Boy Scout Camporee. The Scout-O-Rama will be held the 10th at Municipal Auditorium from 12:30 p.m. until dark. It is an annual event which shows the public exactly what the Scouts do. Tickets are $1 and can be obtained from any Scout. The Camporee will be held March 16-18 at Uchee Creek and is called Back to Basics.

"We also set goals for the boys to attain, the Eagle being the highest award. Only two percent of all boys in Scouting make Eagles."

Hodges says that the Scouts have some military volunteers to help with the program, but there is a need for more volunteers. "The first Wednesday of the month the Scouts have a Round Table at 7:30 p.m in building 2615. This is for anyone who is interested in helping with the Scouts."

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain James L. Langford
USA MEDDAC

George Washington once said: "Associate yourself with men of good quality if you esteem your own reputation; for tis better to be alone than in bad company."

The writer of Proverbs said: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold." (Prov. 22:1)

Truer words have never been spoken, for we are, or we become, the kind of people with whom we associate. Your good name or reputation is something which should be guarded with deep concern and care.

The Psalmist David stated it very clearly and profoundly in the Book of Psalms (1:1): "Blessed (happy) is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful, but his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

There are four words which I think characterize and describe the quality of good men: first, there is faith. Faith is at the top of the list, for without faith it would be impossible to believe, accept or please God (Heb. 11:6).

This kind of faith not only believes there is a God somewhere, but believes in a personal, knowable God who is deeply concerned about humanity and all that's going on in our world. Your faith has matured when, "It (faith) is spoken of throughout the whole world" (Romans 1:8), and especially among those who know you best.

A prayer spoken by an old mountain man that might apply to all of us, flatlanders, and hill people alike, goes like this: "Lord, I don't pray for a faith that would move yonder mountain. I can take dynamite and move it, if it needs movin'. I pray, Lord, for enough faith to move me."

Then there is love - love for God, for family, for your country and principles for which it stands. One of the Ten Commandments says to "Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might" (Deut. 6:5). Love is the intense affection you hold for your family and is your devotion to, and adoration of, God. It is loving your country and the American way of life so much that you will fight for it and die to defend it, if necessary. Love for country demands action — positive action. America may have many problems and faults, but let's take a positive course of action. America is still the greatest nation on earth.

Next comes courage. Courage, according to the dictionary, is the state or quality of mind or spirit that enables one to face danger with self-possession, confidence, and resolution. It is being brave enough to stand for the truth, even if you must stand alone, and uphold the principles and Christian way of life upon which our great country was founded. We are exhorted to, "Be strong and of good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them; for the Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee, He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" (Deut. 31:6).

Last of all is loyalty - the state of being loyal first to God, then to your family and country. This is the ability to remain steadfast in your allegiance to the above.

I believe that faith, love, courage and loyalty are four of the ingredients necessary for an individual to build a name or reputation for himself. A reputation that says you stand for something in life and desire to make this world and life better for those who will follow you in generations to come.

Remember the words of George Washington: "Associate yourself with men of good quality if you esteem your own reputation." The influence you have upon others is either good or bad and the people with whom you associate tend to influence you in the same manner. So may your delight be in the law of God and meditate in it day and night.

Pastoral Institute workshop

The Pastoral Institute, 2310 13th St., will sponsor a "Lives in Transition" workshop beginning Feb. 23, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. The group, led by Doug Turley, is open to men and women of all ages, married or single, who are encountering changes and adjustments in meaning and style of life. Please call the institute at 324-2488 for more information.

Genesis 2

Genesis 2 is a program on spiritual growth for Catholics developed by Father Vincent Dwyer O.C.S.O. The program will be provided during Lent for members of the parish.

The first session will begin Feb. 28, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Catholic Education Center. The final session will be Tuesday of Holy Week, April 17. The number of participants is limited. Those who are interested in participating in the program, please contact Phil Reilly at the Catholic Education Center, 544-3305. The program is limited to adults.

Creation vs Evolution

"Creation vs Evolution" is the topic of a special Youth Alive program on Feb. 26, at 7 p.m. in the TIC Chapel Center. Mr. Randy Houck, currently industrial relations director for Schuster Enterprises is the speaker. Houck was an Air Force officer for seven years, following which he served with the Navigators, an inter-denominational ministry to the military.

Chaplain of the Day

Chaplain (Capt) James L. Langford, MEDDAC, was invited to be the Chaplain of the Day at the General Assembly, State Legislature, Atlanta, Georgia, yesterday.

Langford is a native Georgian from Vienna. He has been assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital since Jan. 6, 1982, where he served as Chief, Dept. of Ministry and Pastoral Care.

He is currently on orders for a short tour in Sinop, Turkey, where he will serve as the Protestant Chaplain.

Black History Month

The month of February has been designated by the Department of the Army as Black History Month. This year's theme is: "Black Americans and the Struggle for Excellence in Education." Various activities and events have been scheduled throughout the month by units and directorates at Fort Benning.

Black Americans have been among the greatest contributors to our country. Many black Americans have excelled in the arts, sciences and the military service. Afro-American heritage has been instrumental in the attainment of our economic, social and democratic goals.

Black Americans possess a rich culture. The experiences and accomplishments of black Americans are deeply rooted in the American heritage. Black Americans' involvement throughout history has helped build and maintain our great country. With deep pride and a sense of gratitude, Fort Benning salutes black Americans during the month of February 1984. I urge all at this installation to join with me and other citizens of our great nation in commemorating this occasion.

JAMES J. LINDSAY
Major General, USA

Music month

In cooperation with the National Federation of Music Clubs, Fort Benning will observe the month of February as the "Parade of American Music Month."

The purpose of this activity is to give worthy United States composers recognition, encouragement and support by programming extensive hearings of their works and to pay tribute to them through performances.

So that we might become more aware of the contributions American composers have and continue to make in behalf of our country, we take time during this month to pay a worthy tribute. All military and civilian personnel, including the general public, are cordially invited to participate in the scheduled activities during the month.

Combined Federal Campaign

The Tri-Community Combined Federal Campaign was recently successfully concluded. Since the fund drive's inception 13 years ago, the enthusiastic participation by personnel at Fort Benning and other federal employees in this area allowed us to achieve our goal each year. This year's objective of $425,000 was topped by over $15,500. Total to date is $440,547.09.

The concern and support for others demonstrated by you in this combined effort are in keeping with the true American tradition. The 103 agencies assisted by this fund drive receive direct benefit from your contributions, so vital to the continuation of humanitarian programs.

You can all be proud of your achievement in this campaign. I am deeply grateful for the unselfish generosity of those who gave. Project officers, key persons and campaign volunteers throughout the tri-community area who contributed their time and talents to the success of this fund drive are especially commended.

My personal congratulations and appreciation to all the Fort Benning team for your outstanding support of this most worthy cause.

VA offers business opportunities to veterans

The Veterans Administration wants to increase participation by small businesses owned by Vietnam Era veterans and disabled veterans in VA competitive procurements.

Harry N. Walters, VA administrator, has directed VA procurement offices to actively seek out capable small businesses owned and operated by these veterans to increase their awareness about VA competitive contract opportunities.

"Vietnam Era veterans and disabled veterans, as part of our next generation of entrepreneurs, deserve our special consideration," Walters said.

While federal agencies are prohibited from setting aside contracts for exclusive award to small business other than those identified by Congress in the Small Business Act as socially and economically disadvantaged, agencies can take actions to increase the awareness among veteran-owned businesses with respect to competitive contracting opportunities.

In making the announcement Walters said, "I believe it is appropriate for the VA to take the lead in this initiative, and we hope our successes will prompt other procuring agencies to join us."

The VA chief has ordered all VA facilities having procurement requirements to solicit these firms and assist them in participating in VA business opportunities.

In such areas as building construction, maintenance, supply, equipment repair and other continuing activities throughout VA's nationwide medical system, VA procurement officers are constantly looking for contractors.

Vietnam Era and disabled veterans who own their own business are urged to contact the chief of supply at any of VA's 172 hospitals nationwide for additional information, or write to: Assistant Deputy Administrator for Procurement and Supply, Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C. 20420. Pamphlets listing all VA's procurement offices and detailing the procedure and needs are also available from these offices. (VA)

Medical departments sponsor sickle cell screening program

Contary to popular belief, the sickle cell gene is not confined to blacks. It is also carried by some people of Arabian, Greek, Maltese, Sicilian, Sardinian, Turkish and Southern Asian ancestry. In the United States, most cases of sickle cell anemia occur among black Americans. About one in 10 carries the gene which may cause the disorder in children if two gene carriers marry.

Sickle cell anemia is an inherited blood disease in which the red blood cells take a strange shape—like a sickle or a crescent moon. This limits the supply of oxygen received by the body with the result that the body can't function properly.

Sickle cell trait is not the same as sickle cell anemia. A carrier of a single cell gene is said to have sickle cell "trait." His or her red cells can be made to sickle in a test tube. Under extreme conditions of exercise and high altitude, cells may sickle in the blood stream of a person with the trait, but this is rare and seldom serious. People with sickle cell trait almost always lead completely normal lives. A trait can never become anemia in a person. Sickle cell anemia can occur only when two people, each with sickle cell trait have a child.

The chances are two in four that each child, of a man and woman who have the trait, will have the trait just like its parents; one in four that the child will have the anemia; and one in four that the child will be normal. Since the disease can only be inherited, it can't be spread from one person to another.

Fort Benning's Medical Department Activity, Preventive Medicine Activity and Community Health Nursing section will sponsor a voluntary sickle cell screening program at the main exchange today from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. The program will be conducted by the Sickle Cell Foundation of Georgia Inc.

Testing for sickle cell trait can also be obtained any time at Martin Army Community Hospital. Individuals should follow established procedure for securing medical care; for example, first go through your troop medical clinic or outpatient clinic.

For more information regarding sickle cell anemia, call 545-4041/4603.

SPIRIT initiative often leads to other savings

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Saving money in the SPIRIT program starts a "friendly vicious circle," according to Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, Directorate of Resource Management.

She says that one SPIRIT initiative often leads to savings in other areas. "Some people are 'missing the boat' when it comes to realizing all they can," commented Mrs. Russell, "We tend to look at how our own operation is saving money and sometimes forget the 'side effects' of our efforts.

"The whole purpose of any job dealing with the military is to increase combat effectiveness. Whenever we can speed a piece of equipment back into the hands of the user, or reduce the time soldiers are away from their missions, we are enhancing combat effectiveness and saving the taxpayer's dollars."

Mrs. Russell cites several examples of SPIRIT savings where the person with the idea had no idea of how much he was contributing to the Army's mission. "The end result of all SPIRIT initiatives is the soldier on the ground. When a machine in finance cuts time and increases accuracy, it allows the soldiers to spend less time standing in line and more time on the job.

"The time that a soldier is on the job instead of standing in line is hard to put down in dollars and cents costs, but the increase in morale and efficiency is evident."

Mrs. Russell urges people to consider how their jobs impact on other members of the Army. She talks of how eliminating one step in the TB screening procedure at the Reception Center saved more than four times the stated amount. "The hospital figured the cost in administering the TB test and computed the savings, of more than $6,000, on just the cost of the drug dosage." said Mrs. Russell, "When you consider the cost of the time that each soldier was pulled away from training to be given an additional test, the cost of the transportation, and the cost of having a drill sergeant accompany the soldiers to the hospital, that $6,000 mushroomed into more than $28,000."

New testing procedure helps MACH save $28,000

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Martin Army Community Hospital got SPIRIT by changing the way they tested for tuberculosis and saved the installation more than $28,000.

According to hospital officials, every initial-entry soldier would be screened to determine if that soldier had been exposed to TB.

The test formerly used would often return "false" readings. This would require medical personnel to identify and retest those initial-entry soldiers who were suspected of having been exposed to the disease.

The money saving idea was to eliminate the MONOVAC test and go directly to the Purified Protein Derivative test (PPD).

The PPD was used to check the results of the MONOVAC whenever a soldier was identified "positive." The MONOVAC or Tine test cost the installation 35 cents per dose. With the Reception Station processing an average of 2329 receptees each month, the cost of this test was more than $500.

Seven percent of the soldiers being screened would test "positive" with the MONOVAC test, requiring that they be administered the PPD. When the PPD was administered, at an additional cost of 11 cents per dose, it was found that only 22 percent of those were really positive.

Last year, the hospital took a look at their operation. It was found that by eliminating the MONOVAC test and substituting the PPD, it could save 24 cents per dose and be more efficient.

Martin Army decided to scrap the old and recommended that the PPD be adopted as the standard test. A SPIRIT initiative was prepared showing a savings of more than $6,000 yearly. SPIRIT officials took a relook at the situation and were able to realize even more savings to the Army by estimating the amount of training time lost and the vehicle usage necessary to transport soldiers back and forth for the test. The savings in training time and vehicle use accounted for the rest of the $28,000.

LET 'EM ROLL — Driver and Track Commander prepare to leave warehouse area and drive their M60-A3 Tank to the motorpool.

15th Cavalry replaces aging tanks

Tank Section Sergeant Raymond Houston has been walking around with a smile on his face lately as his unit, A Troop, 15th Cavalry, and a fellow brigade unit, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, began the final stages of an Army-wide modernization program. These units have been turning in their aging M60A1's in favor of the latest in the M60 family: the M60A3 tank.

The M60A3 is the state-of-the-art version of the combat tested M60 series. The tank features solid state electronics and a thermal imaging that allows the tank crew to fight in all weather and battlefield conditions. Blinding smoke and the dark of night will no longer hamper the tanker's ability to engage and destroy the enemy.

The M60A3 also boasts a laser emitter The laser ranging system replaced the often tempermental prism-mirrored optical system of the M-1. The tank crew is now capable of determining exact ranges.

"It's not an M-1 Abrams, but I know if I can see a target, it hasn't got a chance," said master gunner Clarence Woods of the 15th Cavalry.

"The addition of the M60A3 has raised our combat capability to such a degree that I have full confidence in our ability to defeat any threat we encounter on today's battlefield," said Captain James H. Nunn, 15th Cavalry commander. (197th PAO)

Community health nurse Alfreta Gibson provides a Fort Benning family member an informational pamphlet. The community health nursing program provides health education and counseling to post families.

Post service safeguards soldier's health

Clinic provides comprehensive preventive medicine program

By Robert McClain
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." It's an age old saying, but according to Col. William Morgan and the staff of the post's preventive medicine service, no statement could be truer.

"The clinic's number one mission is prevention," the preventive medicine chief stated. "The clinic staff tries to provide a complete and comprehensive preventive medicine program to Fort Benning soldiers, retirees and civilians. Our basic purpose is to safeguard the health of these people," he added.

The clinic deals with many aspects of preventive medicine. The program includes epidemiology and disease control, occupational health, community health nursing, environmental health and radiation prevention.

To accomplish their mission of prevention, service staff members conduct health education classes on request of commanders; as well as set up preventive medicine displays at various places around post.

The service also distributes many informational pamplets on subjects ranging from proper nutrition for children to eye protection.

According to Col. Morgan, one of the most important functions the service performs is monitoring communicable and chronic diseases in post units.

"Especially in the training units, we try to lower the risk of a large number of soldiers getting ill. We do this by trying to isolate a contagious soldier before he or she infects the rest of the unit," he stated.

The service's community health nursing program provides health education and counseling to Fort Benning families.

"The health nursing program provides health education on a variety of subjects ranging from child health to accident prevention. We try to assist families in understanding their health problems and how to cope with them," Col. Morgan said.

In addition, this service conducts environmental sanitation inspections of all post facilities. The clinic also surveys water quality, air pollution levels and radiation levels in post microwave ovens.

Personnel from the service's sexualy transmitted disease section see an average of 700-800 people a month for venereal disease checks.

"I think our STD clinic is one of the best run in the Army," added Col. Morgan.

Morgan adds that venereal disease can be serious and warns it should be treated as soon as possible. According to Sigsbee Mainous, the STD section officer, most venereal diseases are quickly diagnosed and treated on the first visit.

Robert McClain

Occupational health nurse Nancy Shipman tests James McPherson's hearing. The Preventive Medicine Clinic regularly conduct hearing tests for Fort Benning civil service employees.

"Everything is strictly confidential," he said. "If a male gives us names of contacts, his name is not mentioned. We want to get the contacts in for treatment as soon as possible."

He added that minors can come in for treatment without their parent's consent and their parents will not be informed about the visit.

For active duty soldiers, the entry point to the clinic is the local troop medical clinic that serves his or her unit. Soldiers should obtain their medical records and report to the STD clinic, building 66, for treatment.

Male soldiers should report between 6:45 and 10:15 a.m., Monday through Friday. Women soldiers should report between 12:30 and 2:45 p.m., Monday through Thursday.

Care must be used when storing property at work

Do you keep personal property at your office or place of duty for your own personal use and convenience? If so, you should consider the following information.

In order for government claims athorities to pay claims for loss or damage to personal property, it must be determined that the type and quantity of such property were reasonable, useful and proper under the attendant circumstances, (paragraph 11-16, AR 27-20). Expensive paintings, coin banks, radios, cameras, and like items have been held by the U.S. Army Claims Service not to be reasonable, useful or proper in an office or place of duty.

The government does not act as an insurer for personal property used or stored at a person's workplace for their own use and convenience.

Even if the item is necessary and useful in the performance of government duty, the usage must have been ordered or directed by the immediate supervisor prior to the loss or damage. For example, a clerk typist issued an old manual government typewriter to accomplish typing duties decides that more efficiency and productivity can result from a personal electric model. The personal typewriter is brought from home to the office, but later stolen.

Will the claim be paid? It would not, because the use of the personal typewriter was not ordered or directed by the immediate supervisor prior to the theft. If the supervisor had ordered such usage, the employee is still responsible to assure that it is properly secured.

Failure to properly safeguard and secure such property constitute contributory negligence, which also bars payment of any claim for loss or damage.

Soldiers can compete for ROTC scholarships

Active duty soldiers are eligible to compete for two-and three-year ROTC college scholarships. Applications are now being accepted until April 1.

Those selected for award of the scholarship will be discharged from active duty to enroll in an ROTC affiliated university beginning with the fall semester or quarter, 1984. The scholarship covers tuition (in or out of state), laboratory fees, a generous allowance for books and a monthly subsistence allowance of $100 for up to 10 months per year, for each year the scholarship is in effect.

Auburn University welcomes all applicants for these scholarships to investigate the university and its Army ROTC program. For more information on the scholarship program, see your company commander or post education officer.

For more information on Auburn University and its Army ROTC program, call Captain Mike Dallas at (205) 826-4305 (collect) or write to the following address: Army ROTC, US Army Third ROTC Region, Senior Program, ROTC Building, Roosevelt Drive, Auburn University, Alabama 36849.

Woman enjoys procurement field

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Shirley Pierce is a civilian employee on her way up. She wasn't content to sit complacently in a dead-end job, so she set her goals and worked her way up.

She is now a GS-9 contract specialist in Contract Branch, Procurement Division, Directorate of Industrial Operations. Her job deals with the solicitation, administration and final closeout of construction contracts at Fort Benning.

"I am privileged to deal with many people every day, either person to person or telephonically, and I enjoy that," she said. "I try for results that benefit both parties, the contractor and the government."

Mrs. Pierce entered the intern program in Procurement Division in 1980 and completed it in 1982. Prior to that she worked in the Morale Support Activities Division, in the Infantry School, and in the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

During her internship, she completed several schools and courses, where she learned contracting and procurement procedures. These include Basic and Advanced Acquisition and Management of Defense Contracts at Fort Lee, Va.; Contract Administration at Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio; Cost and Price Analysis, and a Contract Negotiation Workshop in Washington, D.C.

"I am proud that I was chosen to be an intern in the procurement field because the work I am doing now permits me to better use my capabilities and potential," she said.

Two of the larger contracts that she has handled since completing her internship were a family housing re-roofing contract and a replacement of steam and condensate lines contract. Both of these were for more than $1 million.

Originally from Montgomery, Ala., she graduated from Alabama State University with a bachelor of science degree in business administration. She calls Columbus home now. The Pierces, husband Marvin and son Artie live on Leary Court. Marvin is the principal of the Phenix City Middle School and Artie is a student at Carver High.

When asked if she had any work related problems, she said, "The only real problem I have is that there is not enough time to do everything. We are very busy all day in our office. But I like that and it sure does make the work days go by fast."

Bill Walton

Shirley Pierce

Her hobbies include sewing, reading and creative cooking. "When I have time, such as for a holiday meal, I like to try new recipes and fancy dishes," she said.

When asked what her career ambitions are, Pierce replied, "I want to go as high as I can in the procurement field. I find it very challenging and interesting work because there is something new every day."

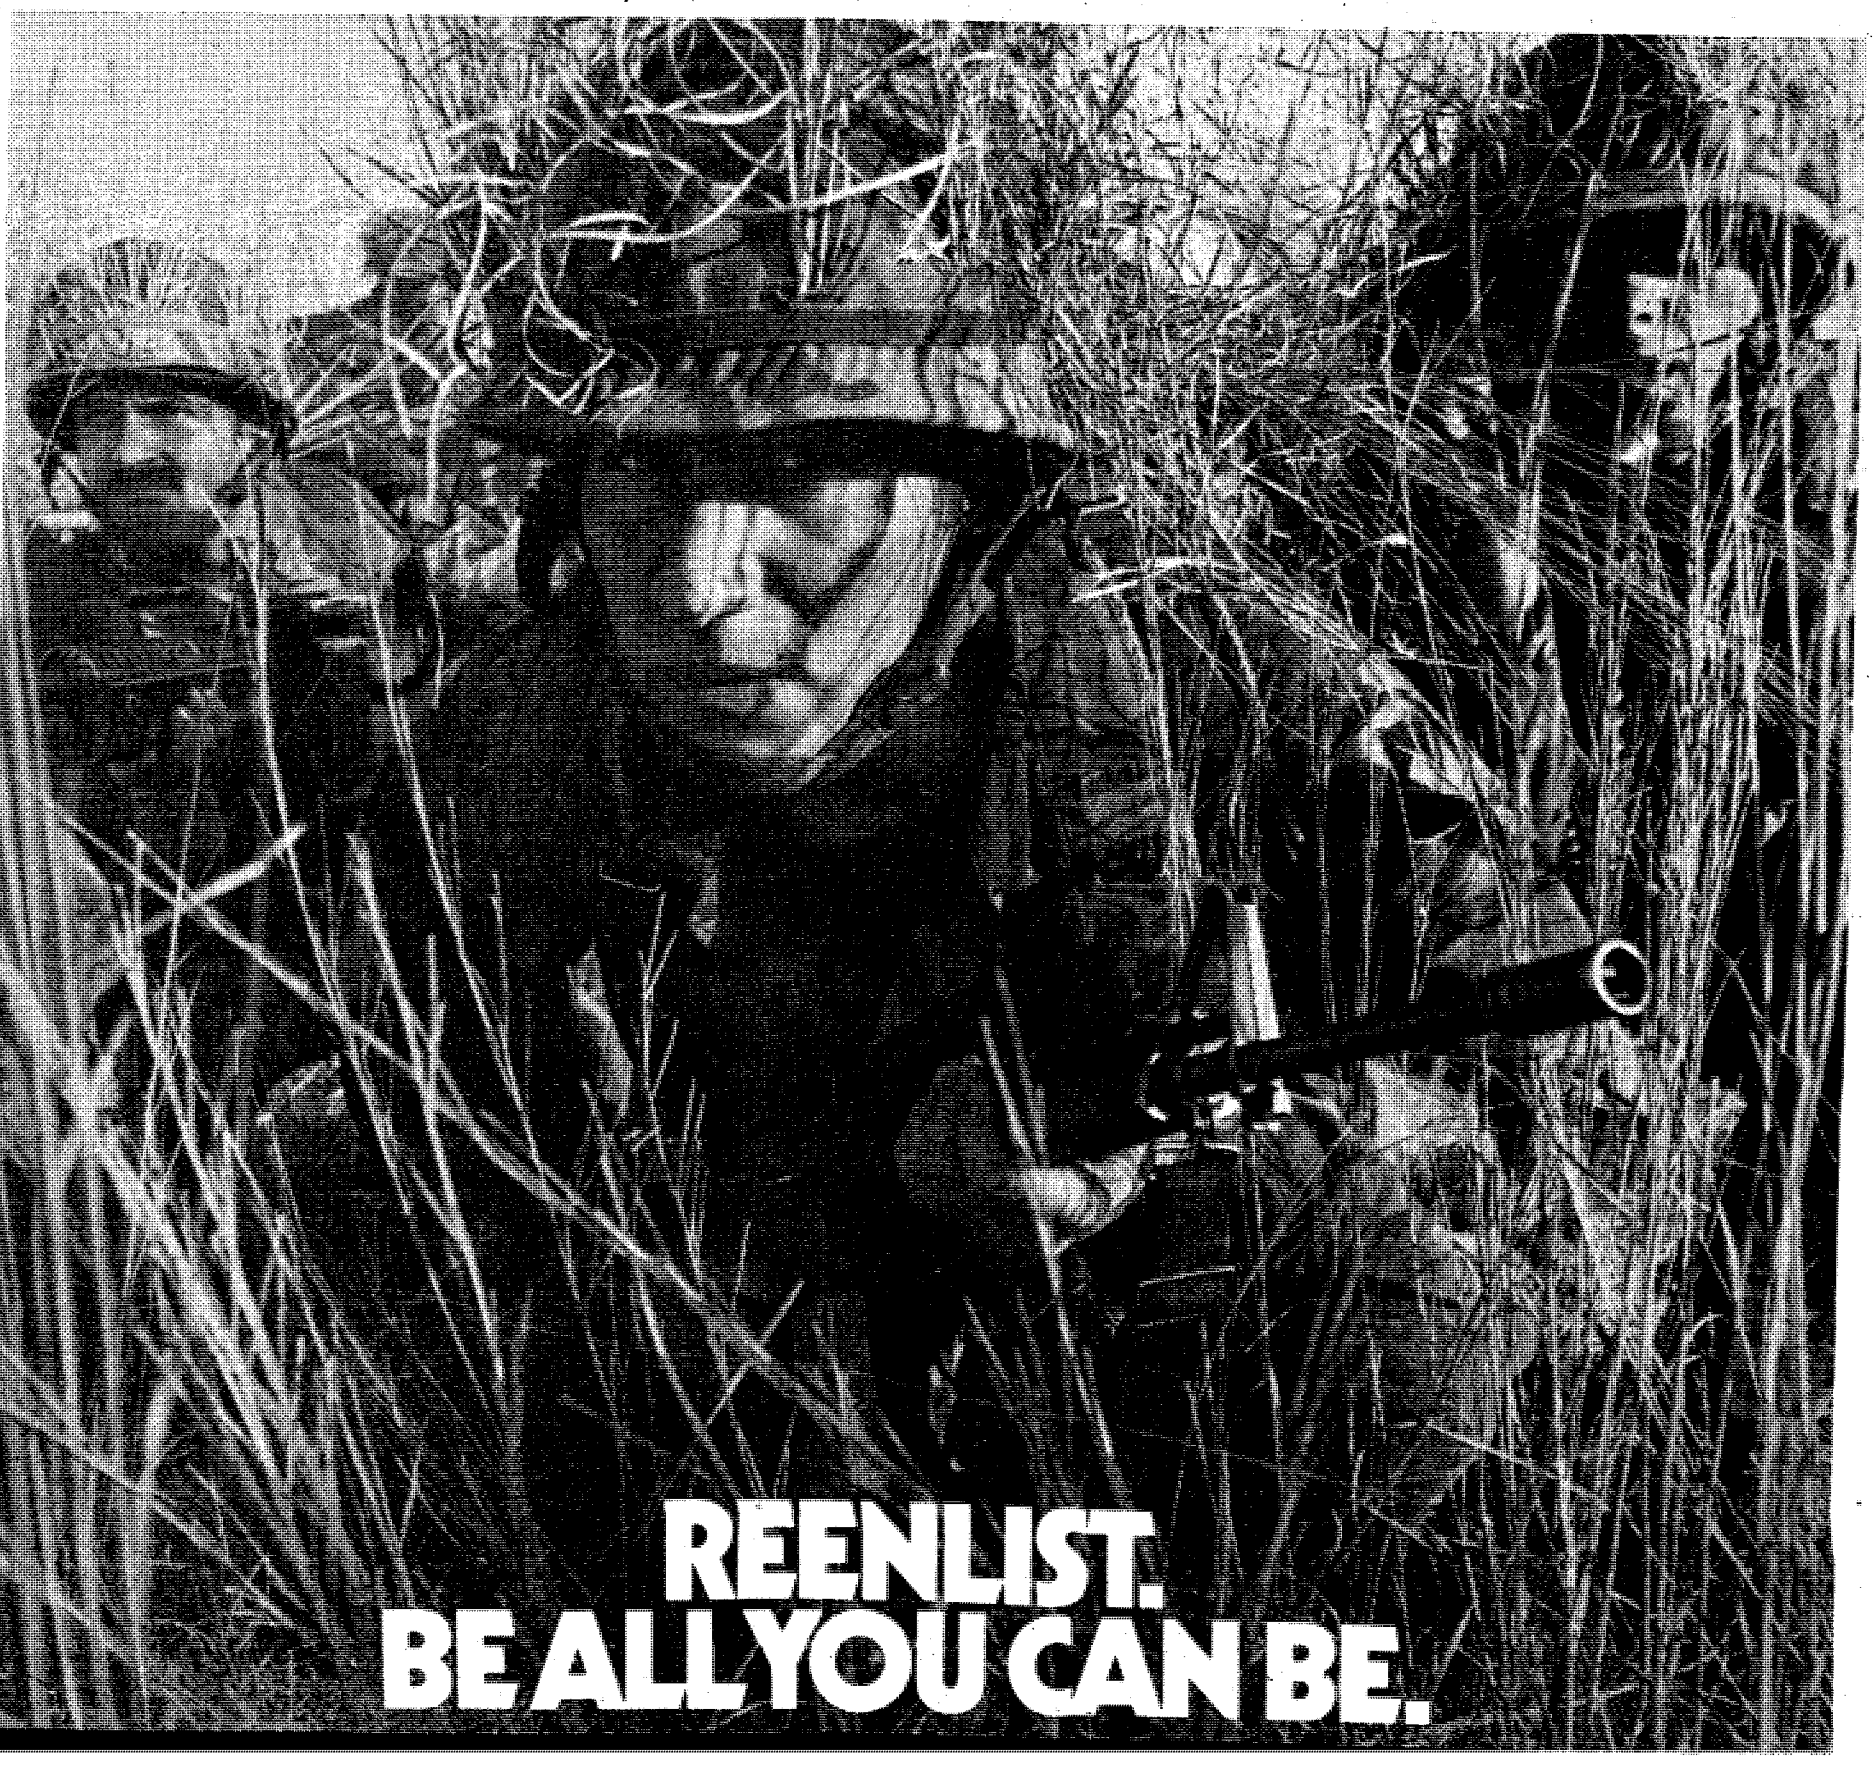
RANK COMES FASTER WHEN THE DUTY'S TOUGH.

If you want to get ahead in any organization, take on the tough job. Do it well and you'll be noticed, appreciated and promoted. It's that way in the Army, too.

The toughest duty offers you the best opportunities for advancement. In the combat arms, for instance, you'll find more openings because not everybody can make the team. The physical and mental requirements are tough because that's what it takes to be a leader.

So if you want to go for rank, go for the tough duty. In today's Army, the tough job is the smart job to have. See your reenlistment NCO today.



Vo-Tech Week helps soldiers improve personal skills

By Vivian Graham
Education Center

Would you like to improve your job skills or develop new ones? Then take advantage of the opportunities available through the Army Continuing Education System at your nearest Education Center. Fort Benning is joiningposts Army-wide in observing Vo-Tech Week during the the week of Feb. 19.

Counselors are prepared to discuss and show soldiers the many programs offered to improve professional and personal skills. Take this opportunity to also let the responsible people know what you need that is not being provided. Vo-Tech education may be the answer to continued professional development and contribute to a real investment for the future.

Many programs already exist that may meet your needs including: auto mechanics, welding, electronics and small engine repair. Classes are conducted on a recurring basis to assist in preparation for certification in the area of your choice.

Plan a visit to your servicing MOS library/learning center. You will find it well stocked with study materials: video tapes, study guides, Army regulations, technical and field manuals, DA pamphlets and circulars. This is an ideal place to increase and review your knowledge in preparation for promotion or skill advancement. These centers also provide a place for unit commanders and trainers to obtain materials and space for group study.

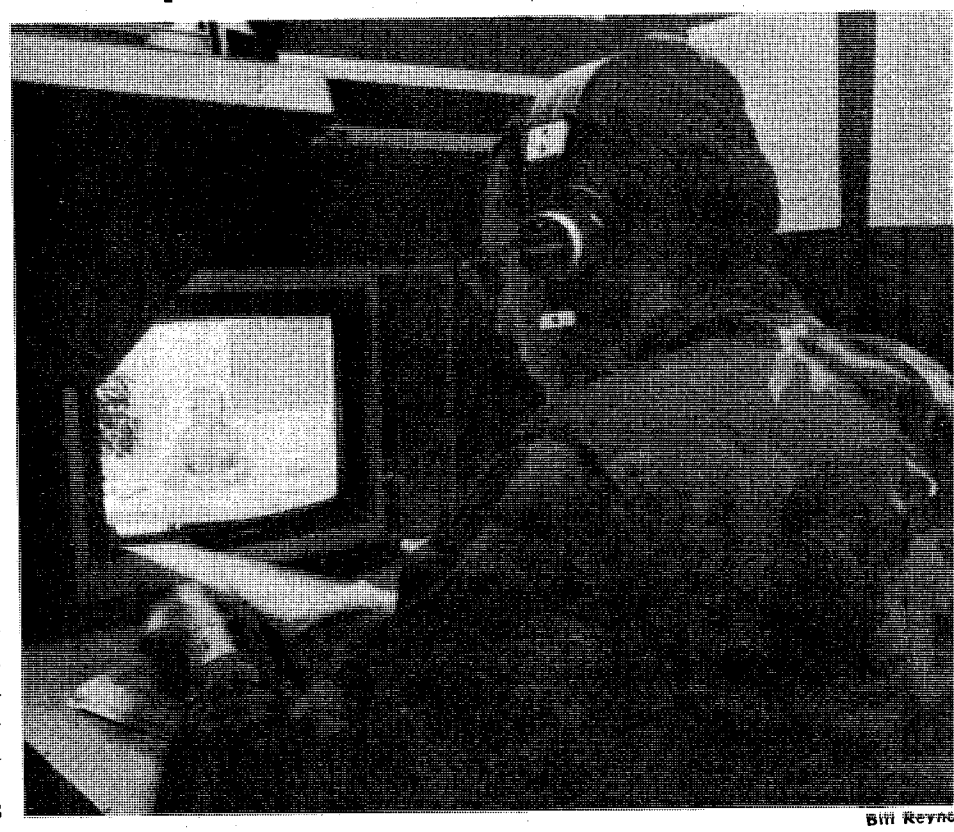
Among the programs spotlighted during this period is the Service Members Opportunity Colleges Associate Degree program. Through SOCAD, soldiers can earn a two-year college degree without some of the usual hassles. They may also receive credit for much of their military training and past experience.

The major advantage of SOCAD is the ability to transfer from post to post without the loss or duplication of credit hours.

The Army Apprenticeship Program may be just what you need. This program is available in some 140 MOSs in 80 trades. These are not training programs but are patterned after programs in civilian industry and only MOSs where there are similar civilian apprenticeships apply. No special training beyond normal military duties is required nor are duty assignments affected. It's just a great opportunity to record and receive recognition for progress in perfecting a skill.

The AAP includes such career fields as: transportation, aircraft engine maintenance, helicopter mechanic, diesel and electrical maintenance, food service, radio and television repair, photography, small weapons repair, production coordination and many others.

Vo-Tech Week, February 19-25, is a good time to check out these programs and opportunities at your Education Center. The Army is getting good soldiers; education makes them better. There is something for everyone and everyone can benefit from these programs. All soldiers are encouraged to take part in these outstanding opportunites that can help them personally and professionally.



Bill Reyno

Video tapes, electronic classes, training manuals and research materials are all available at the learning center.

Trained, professional counselors are available at the following locations:

Main Post, building 35, room 309545—3093
Infantry Hall, room E—33..... 545—40
36th Engr. Gp., building 2811..... 545—47
Kelley Hill, building 9027.....544—26
Harmony Church, building 5153.. 544—63
Sand Hill, building 3215..... 544—11

Call or stop by your servicing Education Center. The sooner you g started the better your career.

Media room available

The building four media display room has openings in its schedule. If your organization is interested in providing a display, contact SGM Sherman at 545-2211/3512. Open dates are: April 6-13, April 13-20, June 1-8, Aug. 24-31, Sept. 14-21 and Dec. 14-21.

Sweetheart dance

Cracker Squares will present their third annual Sweetheart dance tonight at the northeast branch of the YMCA on Warm Springs Road from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m. There will be a $50 dance grand prize offered. The fee per couple is $7 in advance and $8 at the door.

Good Grief Charlie Brown! PEANUTS every day in your

Misuse

This soldier is doing something wrong according to a recent audit by the Department of Defense. The audit uncovered many abuses in the operation of military vehicles. Some specific abuses cited by the DoD auditors were trips to hotels, clubs, restaurants and other nongovernmental locations. They also found cases of use for transportation from homes to duty and trips to hospitals by nonmedical personnel. It is recommended that when official business requires transportation in a government vehicle to one of the above locations, the purpose of the trip be documented to provide a clear audit trail in case of review.

Scouting

As Scouts, children learn to practice citzenship by electing their own leaders and by learning to work together. Scouting also helps instill civic pride in a child. It also gives youth a sense of competitiveness to do things they otherwise wouldn't have done.

In addition, the program helps children improve relationships with other children.

As adults, we should support America's Scouting programs by encouraging our youth to join and by volunteering our time as Scout leaders. Locally, you can also support Scouting by giving to the United Way. Money from the program is used to cover 55 percent of the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouting's budget. The remainder of the budget comes from sustaining membership enrollment, special events, volunteers and the efforts of professional scouters.

You can get more information about the Boy Scouting program by calling it's Columbus office at 327-2634. The Girl Scouting office's phone number is 327-2646.

West Point Founder's Day

The West Point Society of Fort Benning and Columbus, Ga., announces the celebration of the 182nd anniversary of the founding of the U.S. Military Academy. All service academy graduates, to include other services and foreign academies, are invited to join the the 1984 Founder's Day Dinner on March 10.

If you are interested and have not received an invitation, please contact Capt. Bangsboll, BFV Division, WGMD, at 544-7116/6225 or 324-3613. The evening's agenda will include dinner, dancing and a speech by Chaplain James D. Ford.

American Music Month

Fort Benning's Music and Theater section of Morale Support Activities Division is celebrating the "Parade of American Music Month" in February with many free musical events.

A country music group, the Thomas Gill Band, will perform tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Foxhole Recreation Center. A retired staff sergeant organized this band and he uses several of his children in the band. The concert is free and open to the public.

Sunday's activities include the Afro American Players at 2 p.m. at KHRC (see story on page 30.) and the Benning Belles at 2:30 p.m. in the Harmony Church Recreation Center. The Benning Belles' performance will include patriotic and sing-a-long songs.

Mikey's Friends, a top 40 and soul band, will play at 7 p.m. on Feb. 25 in the KHRC. Then on the 26th, the History of Black Music will be presented by Sam West at 2 p.m., also in the KHRC. He will cover the heritage of black music from the work songs blacks brought to America, to the current jazz and soul songs. The show will end with a "Black Heritage Dance" with West spinning records.

The 34th Medical Battalion will host a talent/fashion show in the Community Theater on Feb. 28 at 7 p.m. and the Columbus Symphony will have a concert in Marshall Auditorium on March 3 at 8 p.m.

Well baby clinic moves cities" to old timers.

The training site is a small street located in the Malone complex with two rows of battered buildings and old busses and trucks littered about as if the "war" had caught them unaware.

Scribbled on the walls and the sides of the ancient vehicles are names of soldiers that have passed through the course and wanted to leave their marks. Here those soldiers learned that a war fought within a city is far more violent than any of the training they've had before. Each window conceals a sniper. Each room holds a boobytrap.

The "Bushmasters" of Company D hear the instructor tell them that all of the people in the Army couldn't take and hold New York City from a determined force.

The "Demons" smile when they hear that. They have survived the haircuts, the road marches, the cold and the drill sergeants to get this far in their training. It is unimaginable to them how two rows of rickety buildings and some abandoned jeeps and trucks could present a problem.

The problem starts when they learn that they must enter a building from the top. Entering a building from the top floor, according to an instructor, gives the enemy the illusion that he can escape by leaving from the ground floor. "You don't want to face a cornered enemy," states SFC Johnny Taylor, principal instructor, MOUT training area, "He will fight to the last man."

The soldiers receive classes on how to enter a building, how to clear a room, and how to select defensive positions within the building. They learn how to use the materials that will be readily available within an urban area to get into a building.

They learn that planning becomes almost as important as fighting. On the initial assault, the smallest man goes last when the soldiers use a board to get into a window. Two soldiers will hold a board level between them, while another takes a running leap and is literally propelled up into the air and through the window. Once the largest man in the group is inside and the room is secured, each man takes his turn being lifted through the window. By having the smallest man remain on the ground his buddies can pull him up and into the building.

The instructors walk the soldiers through each technique, teaching them step-by-step how to plan an assault on a building.

The smiles on the "Demons" faces fade and become covered with grime as they repeat the sequence over and over. "The soldiers seem to have a lot of fun when they come to our area," stated Taylor.

Finally, the "Demons" get to go through the course at their own speed.

Small teams of men rush through the smoke screen, tossing grappling hooks into upper story windows. The lead man tugs on the rope to make sure that the hook is secure, while the rest of the team gives him covering fire. The team will continue to try to keep the enemy's head down while the soldier clings to the side of the building.

Part way up the rope, the lead man stops to arm a grenade. He cradles his weapon in his arms as he prepares to "slam-dunk" the grenade through the window. He "cooks" the grenade, letting the safety spoon fly free, to prevent the enemy from picking up the grenade and throwing it back at him. Once he has thrown the grenade and it has exploded, the first man rolls into the window and fires his rifle on full automatic. Each man, in turn, then enters the window and prepares to clear another room or hallway.

One man throws a grenade and in his haste does not allow time for it to go off. He rushes into the room, firing his weapon. Only when his practice grenade explodes between his feet does he realize what he has done.

The building secured, the instructor briefs the team on its performance. The smiles have all but faded as the soldiers realize that MOUT is more than its cracked up to be. The soldier who was too eager to clear his room is kidded by his buddies for being too much of a "John Wayne."

Nine weeks ago they may have all made that same mistake, but now they are "seasoned" veterans. Their only challenges - their PT test next week — and AO Eagle.

Next week the third platoon rejoins the company to take the PT and end-of course test. They are only a few days away from pinning on the crossed rifles of the Infantryman.

Jennifer George (l) and Holly Cardoza practice their parts in 'Annie'.

Fort Benning youths land roles in 'Annie'

By Betty Zimmerman
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The excitement charged the air as the two young students bubbled effervescently about their parts in "Annie."

Columbus College's Department of Speech and Theater is presenting the stage production of this well-known musical and two of the orphans are Fort Benning girls, Holly Cardoza and Jennifer George.

"The first audition was awesome," exclaimed Holly, a 10-year-old fifth grader at White School. "There were 130 to 140 girls trying out for seven parts. At first I was nervous, then I became excited when I learned I was one of the 15 finalists.

"They made this huge reduction in one swoop and then the second audition selected the final seven out of the 15. I was ecstatic; I had been chosen for the role of Kate who is the second littlest orphan," explained the articulate performer with the engaging smile.

Jennifer, 9, won the expressive part of Tessie, the crybaby. With the shine of her long blonde hair matching the shine on her face, Jennifer rattled off her accomplishments that helped her qualify for the role.

She 's had three years of ballet lessons and one of piano. She had previous experience in the Springer Opera House production of "La Boheme" and her mother Jackie directs the Benning Belles. Her two older brothers both sing and have been in school plays.

Jennifer is a fourth grader at Dexter School. She is in the SEARCH group which is a special program enabling bright students to challenge theirselves by accepting additional advanced studies.

Jennifer wants to be a zoologist and plans to use her performing talents as a recreational outlet. But Holly thinks she may have discovered her calling. She said, "I really like it and am considering going for a career in entertainment. I also take violin lessons."

The girls practiced three hours each night, five days a week from Jan. 9 to Feb. 6. Then the rehearsals expanded to seven days a week. That's why one of the requirements of all the child performers was they had to be excellent students.

They both made their television debut Feb. 3rd when the orphans appeared on WRBL's Kid's Corner show.

Holly's mom and step-dad are Irene and James Durant. He is a second lieutenant assigned to MEDDAC. Jennifer's parents are Jackie and James George. Lt. Col. George is 1st Battalion Commander at 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The production of "Annie" began last night and plays again at 8 p.m. tonight, tomorrow, and the 23-25. It also plays at 2 p.m. on the 19th and 26th. All shows are in Columbus College's Fine Arts Hall. For more show information, call 563-3801 or 568-2048.

Benning aviators help special kids become pilots for a day

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 20 children from the Army Community Service's (ACS) Exceptional Family Member Program were able to see Blackhawks and Huey's close-up recently.

The children were invited to Lawson Army Air Field by WO1 Donald Pease. "I was on staff duty one night with SSgt. Marty James and I found out he is with ACS and works with the exceptional family members. I told him we have a lot of helicopters here and maybe we could get a tour set up, so here we are," Pease said.

Static displays of UH—60-A Blackhawks and UH—1H Hueys were set up for the children to climb through, look at and ask questions about.

In addition to that, Pease set up a table with displays of the equipment that members of the crew wear while on the helicopters. He also had crew chief, Sp4 John MacDonald demonstrate the way to wear and inflate the life vest that must be worn while flying over water.

"I'm single, but I like working with children," Pease said. "While I was at Camp Casey, Korea, I got involved with the children from the local orphanage and I really enjoyed it."

"We sponsor Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts for the handicapped," Mary Strickland, coordinator of the program said. "We also have a four week summer camp, Camp Smiley, that we sponsor."

Strickland explained that every post Army wide has a program such as this at its ACS, with the main function being to provide assistance to families with an exceptional family member. The Fort Benning program maintains a file of services available within a 45-mile radius of post for educational or specific medical needs. She explained that they also have a similar file provided to them from posts stateside and overseas of services available there.

In addition, ACS can help families apply to DA for consideration of assignment areas, when a servicemember rotates. This way they can be stationed close to areas that offer specific services that are needed for their child.

For the month of February Arts and Crafts is planned for the 25th at 10 a.m. in building 2088.For March there will be putt-putt golf on the 10th at Macon Road and a nature hike and cookout the 24th at Cooper Creek Park. Both of these are also at 10 a.m.

If anyone is interested in helping with the program, contact Mary Strickland at 545-1169/1233.

Raising children less expensive for military families

WASHINGTON — Bringing up a child born in the early 1980s could cost more than $200,000, according to a government-sponsored study in Washington.

But if the principal wage-earner in the family is career military, experts say the figure can be reduced by more than $55,000.

In his book "The Costs of Children," Washington economist Dr. Lawrence Olson summarized the cost of raising children in military families. The study is based on information supplied by the military lifestyle magazine Ladycom.

By taking advantage of the benefits available to them, military families can live as well as civilian families who have higher incomes. The study shows that costs of raising children can be reduced in these ways:

- By taking their children to government clinics and hospitals, parents can save 60 percent on medical bills. Children can get free regular medical care and are charged only for meals. When such facilities are not available, major costs are covered by the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.
- By shopping at post commissaries, families can count on reducing the cost of food by about 25 percent.
- Shopping in post exchanges for children's clothes can save 10 percent, the study shows.
- Living on post also saves military families a great deal. Utilities and home repairs are included in the military member's "payments," which are actually forfeited quarters and variable housing allowances. These two allowances also help to ease the cost of housing if the member's family lives off post.
- Taking advantage of military scholarships and other educational programs can cut the cost of a college education by as much as $12,000 a year.

The study shows that instead of spending $214,957 to raise a single male child to the age of 22 without college, a military family could spend only $158,995. Savings is $55,962, or about 26 percent. (AFNS)

Provost marshal gives tips to avoid credit rip-offs

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

Credit card crimes are on the increase. During the coming year many of you may experience credit card theft or losses.

If it happens, report it quickly. Here are a few tips that if followed, should reduce the chances of your suffering a credit card loss or theft.

If driving around town or on a trip:

- Never keep credit cards or receipts in your glove box; someone could help themselves to your credit cards and account numbers.
- Never leave credit cards in your briefcase, even if it is at your side or in your card.
- Always check your card when an attendant returns it; it is easy for an attendant to grab the wrong one at the register.
- Never leave your credit card with a company that is servicing your car; always present it when repairs are completed.

Keep your cards secure:

- Always keep your credit cards in your wallet instead of loose in a pocket or purse.
- Always keep your credit cards in sight when you present them to make a purchase.
- Always arrange for another card to be issued with your account number if you want another person to use your card. Make sure it is listed in their name and with their signature.

How to report missing credit cards:

- List all credit card numbers and the reporting phone number on any form for your records. File in a safe place. Update this listing any time you acquire new credit cards.
- If cards are missing or stolen, first report the loss to the military police at 545-5222 and your local law enforcement agency. Next call the issuing company or bank and give the following information:

Your name, address with zip code and phone number.

Indicate how you discovered the cards were missing, where and when.

If you are on a trip, report any missing bank card to a bank in the area that offers the cards. They'll make an immediate report to your bank.

Follow-up your report by writing a letter to each bank and company verifying the loss, confirm your account number and how the card(s) were lost/stolen.

Mind mapping improves memory, learning skills

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A unique method to speed the progress of acquiring, collating and structuring information is being taught on post and the success rate speaks for itself.

Sergeant First Class Kay Wang, organization effectiveness consultant, teaches the method, called mind mapping, as part of the High Performance Learning Program.

"It's really nothing new to the Army, except its exposure is only to a few," Wang said. Since he learned the method about two years ago, he has taught it to people in counseling classes, at the Religious Activities Center and to Primary Leadership Course classes.

Mind mapping uses key words to catch the essence of ideas and relationships where key points can be seen quickly. It involves drawing or writing the central word with ideas branching off it.

Most recently, Wang taught the method to PLC class 8-83 then used 23 volunteers from the 146 class members as a test group to document a case study. He said he used the test group to compare their scores to the rest of the class members, stressing that the test group followed his method of mind mapping throughout the course.

Wang found that the test group scored higher on all tests taken; 3 points higher on the Communications test, 6 points higher on the Leadership test, 4 points higher on the Management test and 4 points higher on academic average.

"I'm excited about the method and I do use it myself. Also, I think the success rate speaks for itself," Wang said. He said that besides being used during job duties, it can be used personally too, for instance, when you're planning a vacation.

Master Sergeant Gary Cupit, course chief of the Advanced Non-Commissioned Officers Course (ANCOC), is also enthusiastic about the method. Cupit, who went through the course in November, uses the method in his daily job duties. "I think it is an excellent way to maintain notes and I feel it is very beneficial. I am now working with Sergeant Wang to try to get a four-hour block of instruction to be taught to ANCOC students."

Wang said he always gets good responses from those who have learned the mind mapping method. "Out of 200 critiques, I would say I may get 15 negative replies, but most of the people are excited about the method."

Wang said he can give classes anytime, if anyone is interested. He can be reached at the Organization

Life as family member leads to active duty tour

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Once she got a taste of the military life, PFC Sabinna Sanchez didn't want to let it go.

Sanchez, a supply specialist with the Directorate of Industrial Operations, got her first sample of the military when she left her home in Cordoba, Spain, several years ago, and married a soldier.

Her husband was stationed here for 10 months before leaving for Germany. She remained in Germany until her husband's return to Puerto Rico. She missed the military life and decided to join the Army last year.

Sanchez worked as a hair stylist before getting married and found the Army's life to be more exciting. "When my husband was in the Army," explained Sanchez, "I found it very interesting. The work I did when I was growing up was the same thing over and over. That's what I like about the Army because you are doing so many different things."

Sanchez, a mother of two, looked for career opportunities after her divorce and decided to return to the military — this time as a soldier.

Having been associated with the military, as a family member, made Sanchez's transition easier, she arrived at Fort Benning after attending supply training at Fort Lee, Va., and immediately got her family settled. "I took nine days leave after training, and went to Puerto Rico to pick up my children." She arrived at Benning three days before she had to report to duty. Those three days were hectic for Sanchez. In that time she bought a car, rented an apartment and found a babysitter.

By the time she reported to work, Sanchez was ready. According to Sanchez, arriving in June helped out, school was out so it gave her children some time to get adjusted to the country and sharpen their English-speaking skills.

She had acquired her skills watching TV while she was stationed in Germany. "I always wanted to learn English," commented Sanchez, "We didn't have the money to pay babysitters so I could go to school — so I watched TV." While watching television helped her, Sanchez admitted that the period of time in Puerto Rico did not allow her to stay current in the language. "When I got to Fort Jackson, S.C. I didn't understand anything." she explained.

Her job in the Supply Division is to process and distribute the hundreds of supply requests that come in daily.

Losing first tooth is important part of growing up

The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Health Month. It is the third of a series of seven on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

"Mommy! Daddy! My wiggly tooth fell out!" If you're a parent, you're sure to hear this speech or one much like it from your child, usually when he or she is around age 6. Children are excited about losing their primary baby teeth, as they know this is an important step in becoming an adult.

As a toddler, your child had 20 small teeth that fit nicely into a child-sized jaw. But about the time he or she enters first grade, the primary teeth will begin to be replaced by 32 larger permanent teeth. This second set of teeth will have to last for the rest of your child's life.

Losing the primary teeth is a natural, painless process, part of growing up. When it's time for a particular tooth to be replaced, its roots slowly dissolve into the surrounding tissues. Without roots to anchor and support it in the jaw, the tooth becomes loose and falls out. In a few weeks, the gap in the child's mouth is filled by a new, permanent tooth.

You should be concerned, however, if your child loses a back primary tooth too early. This sometimes occurs because a tooth has been knocked out by accident or has been removed by a dentist because of an abscess or other problem.

Whatever the cause, once the tooth is missing, the neighboring teeth on either side may tip and drift into the empty space. Because of these changes, there may not be enough room for the permanent tooth when it is finally ready to come in.

That's why dentists sometimes recommend that children use a space maintainer if a primary tooth has been lost too soon. Space maintainers are metal or plastic devices that can be used to hold the space for the permanent tooth.

The honor of being the first permanent teeth in a child's mouth usually belongs to the "6-year" molars, which can appear as early as age 5. These molars, located just behind the primary teeth, are often mistaken for primary teeth by parents. As a result, they often do not receive any special attention and are likely to be attacked by decay.

What can you do to help your child have strong, healthy permanent teeth? Encourage good dental health habits. Daily brushing and flossing, the use of fluorides, a balanced diet, and regular dental visits are important for everyone. For healthy teeth tomorrow, take care of your child's teeth today. (DENTAC)

Black history play will be held Sunday

The Music and Theater Section of the Morale Support Activities Divison will be sponsoring the Afro American Players in a presentation entitled "Ye Shall Know the Truth."

The theatrical performance, which is a dramatic encyclopedia on black experience in America, will take place at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center Sunday afternoon at 2.

The stars of the performance are Glo Dean Baker and her husband Freddie Gardner. They begin with the year 1619 in Jamestown, where the first official slave was recorded, and continue on through every significant era of black history.

There will be three major areas that center around these eras: the struggle of Black America in efforts to achieve excellence in the educational arenas; the fight for freedom and equality in the various civil rights labors; and the battle of the black militia as they defeat foreign enemies but still fight moral battles on their own homefront.

Both Baker and Gardner will be returning to Benning following last year's production, "Sometimes I Find It Hard to Sing and Dance."

"Truth", as it is often called, was written by Baker. It is a culmination of 22 black figures and will feature fast moving vignettes.

For more information, call 544-3079 after noon today or tomorrow. (USAIC PAO)

Warrant officers have important Army role

By John Seider
Public Affairs Office

What is the role of the warrant officer in today's Army? This is a question that needs asking, but more importantly, it needs to be answered. The reason is that in this highly technical Army, with complex weapons systems and increased and more delicate maintenance problems arising, a true master of these systems is needed to keep them combat effective. Enter the warrant officer.

How long has the warrant officer been a part of the Army? According to the TRADOC News Service, warrants have been around since 1775, when Chief Boatswain John Berriman became the first warrant of the American armed forces. Berriman was the chief boatswain on the Andrea Doria.

After World War II, the number of warrant officers serving in the Army increased dramatically. This increase was largely attributed to the fact that American society was reaping the benefits of improved technology.

Prior to this time, promotion to warrant was seen as being a reward for good enlisted service, but with major technological breakthroughs and the further complications of weapons systems, "technology demands a single track technician to stay with a system," according to CWO3 Thomas L. Mack. Mack works for the Army Training and Doctrine Command's training directorate at Fort Monroe, Va.

What does the warrant officer do? Mack describes him as being "a system oriented, single specialty officer. His appointment is based on technical competency to perform in a single track for an entire career."

One might assume these highly skilled technicians would also be highly paid. This, however, is not the case. Then what is it that motivates senior NCOs to enter the ranks of the warrants?

Chief Warrant Four David H. Ford and CWO3 Robert I. Ford of Fort Benning see the motivations for NCOs to become warrants as being "prestige, pride, and professionalism, as a result of experience and technical knowledge." CWO4 David Ford is a special assistant to the Deputy Post Commander, and the president of Fort Benning's chapter of the U.S. Army Warrant Officer Association. CWO3 Robert Ford works at the parachute packing branch, Directorate of Industrial Operations.

How does someone become a warrant? "Many warrants were previously E6s and E7s with experience in their field who, before they were a warrant, had to meet preferred and mandatory prerequisites and demonstrate a desire to become a warrant before they even got reviewed by a board," said CWO4 Ford. CWO3 Ford added, "There are two commissioned officers and at least one warrant officer who acts as a technical advisor to the president of the board, on the selection board.

The selection doesn't stop at a board, the warrants' records go to Military Personnel Center where they will be screened once again on a qualification list. The final decision rests with MILPERCEN on who will or will not be appointed a warrant. The warrant comes straight from the Secretary of the Army.

Cliff Squires

CWO3 Robert I. Ford

We have looked briefly at where the warrant came from, the factors that motivate men to become warrants, and what they do. In the next article, we will look at the warrant's first step, the entry level.

New VA handbook contains benefit information

The 1984 edition of the Veterans Administration's benefits handbook, "Federal Benefits for Veterans and Dependents," is available for $2.25, cut to half the price of last year's edition by the Government Printing Office's (GPO) new pricing formula.

Produced annually by the VA and printed and sold by GPO, the enlarged 73-page booklet provides a summary of benefits available to veterans and dependents.

Benefits from VA include medical care, education, job training, compensation, pension, insurance, loans and burial assistance. There is also information on Agent Orange, radiation, and consultations provided by the vet centers.

Job-finding assistance and other Labor Department benefits for veterans are described as well as benefits provided by the Department of Defense, Small Business Administration, and other government offices.

Also included are sections on eligibility; information in Spanish; the toll-free number for former prisoners of war (800-821-8139); and information for women veterans. While women veterans are entitled to the same benefits as male veterans, a law enacted last fall assures that appropriate care is provided in a timely fashion to any eligible woman veteran for any gender-specific disability.

"Federal Benefits for Veterans and Dependents," (IS-1 Factsheet) is available for $2.25 from the Superintendent of Documents, GPO, Washington, D.C. 20402. Their stock number is 051-000-000162-1. (VA)

Air traffic controllers keep skies safe

By Tom Fuller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"You are slightly left of glide path . . . three miles from landing . . . on glide path . . . you are slightly left and below glide path . . . " said Sp5 Rita M. Fornis, speaking softly into a voice activated microphone.

"You are two miles out . . . right on glide path . . . slightly below glide path . . . on glide path . . . approaching one mile . . . you are clear to land," continued Fornis as she watched the small dot on her radar screen in the dark room on the sixth floor of the Lawson Army Airfield control tower.

The "dot" was a C-141 Starlifter on a blind approach to Lawson. The large jet was making the instrument approach because of poor visibility.

"We are the 'pilots eyes' when he can't make a visual approach to the airfield," said Sp5 Alicia G. Walker, radar air traffic controller in the Ground Control Approach Section of the Air Traffic Control Branch (ATC), U. S. Army Communications Command-Fort Benning.

"We advise them of such things as ground weather conditions, altitude, whether or not they are on the glide path and of other aircraft operating in the vicinity," said Walker.

Meanwhile two floors up in the top of the tower, MSgt. Wes Basey, ATC chief, is choreographing what at first appears to be mass confusion. But, after a few minutes one finds there actually total control over the bevy of activity.

"This is one of our busiest days in a long time," said Basey, who supervises the air traffic controllers.

"Since this morning we have handled nearly 400 arrivals and departures ranging from small civilian planes to helicopters to C-5s and C-141s," explained Basey. "Normally we handle slightly less than 200 on an average day."

Tom Fuller

Sp5 Margeret Fornes, air traffic controller, watches the "blips" on her screen as she "talks down" aircraft at Lawson Field.

While Basey is speaking, Sp5 Leonard Stinson is busy answering the telephone and recording data on strips of paper which he places in plastic strips on a tilted board in front of him.

Tom Fuller

Master Sergeant Wesley Basey, air traffic controller, scans the skies around Lawson Field for any low-flying aircraft.

Stinson is recording flight data, one of three positions which is continuously manned while the tower is in operation.

"I'm responsible for recording arrival times, departure times and air traffic control clearances. It has to be accurate in case there is an emergency," said Stinson as he hurried to answer another ringing telephone.

To his left, PFC Arnold Seidle, ATC trainee, is giving departure instructions to a C-5 while Robert Hamby, shift supervisor, watches and explains what he is doing right and doing wrong.

Sp5 James Estes, who worked at a Washington, D.C. airport during the civilian controllers strike in 1982, said, "New controllers have to work under the direct supervision of an experienced controller at all times. It takes six months for those just out of school to obtain their Federal Aviation Administration rating as an air traffic controller.

"A new controller has to learn things such as local weather patterns, obstacles in the local area which may interfere with aircraft, traffic patterns, how to control ground vehicles and how to keep aircraft separated in the air and on the ground. Once he gets his rating, it is good until he moves to another airfield. Then he has to go through the procedure again. Only this second rating period only takes two months," said Estes.

"Ground control is responsible for all moving aircraft, administrative vehicles and pedestrians who are on the flight line," explained Basey.

It is time for the three o'clock shift to takeover. When the checking of equipment, verification of flight information, and assigning of tower positions is completed, the morning shift will leave. The oncoming shift will repeat the procedures as they are done seven days a week, year around.

Many sources available for college financial aid

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Now is the time for parents and students to begin looking into sources of financial aid for the start of college in the fall, advises Clark Aldridge, Columbus College's director of financial aid.

In order to answer questions and provide information to parents and students, Columbus College joins with the Muscogee County School District and the Georgia Student Finance Authority to sponsor a parents' Financial Aid Workshop.

The workshop will be 7:30-9:30 p.m. on Tuesday, in the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center for Continuing Education.

"The aim is to provide to parents information on financial opportunities for their children. It is very often the parents who have the responsibility of determining how their children's education will be financed and who must decide where the money will come from," says Aldridge.

However, the information provided will be useful to anyone considering enrolling in college, or who is already enrolled, he adds.

The workshop will focus on three areas: the actual process of applying for admission to college; the Financial Aid Form — where to find necessary information and how to complete the form; and the types of financial aid programs, including those available through the state and federal governments and the colleges.

Aldridge points out that financial aid is still available to persons who qualify, despite the much-publicized federal budget cutbacks of several years ago. "There is still money available to students who qualify," he says.

There are four broad categories of financial aid. They are scholarships, grants, loans and student employment.

Scholarships

Scholarships make up only a small percentage of the total financial aid resources, he says, although a number are awarded at Columbus College. Criteria for receiving a scholarship fall into two basic categories: academic ability, which would include Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores, high school grade point average, and leadership ability demonstrated in high school; and ability in a particular field, such as music, drama, art and athletics.

Grants

Grants are similar to scholarships in that they are both non-repayable gifts. Grants, however, are usually based on financial need.

The largest financial aid program at Columbus College and nationally is the Pell Grant, formerly Basic Educational Opportunity Grant, says Aldridge. Columbus College anticipates that more than 900 Pell Grant recipients will receive more than $825,000 during the 1983-84 academic year. "And that's a conservative estimate," he adds.

Another type of grant is the State Incentive Grant, available in amounts of up to $450 per year to Georgia residents attending school full-time.

Loans

The two largest types of loans for financial aid are the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) and the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL), Aldridge continues.

The GSL provides loans of up to $2,500 per year for undergraduate students and up to $5,000 for graduate students. The loan carries no interest and no payment until six months after the student leaves school. Repayment may be spread over as many as 10 years.

The GSL is available without a needs test to families with adjusted gross incomes of less than $30,000 per year. Families with adjusted gross incomes of more than $30,000 may also be eligible if they can show financial need.

The NDSL is based on financial need and is available in amounts of up to $3,000 during the first two years of college, with a maximum undergraduate limit of $6,000. Like the GSL, the NDSL carries no interest and no payment until six months after the student leaves school.

Other loans at Columbus College are available on a short- or long-term basis, Aldridge continues. Examples are the Dora G. and Jac. H. Rothschild Assistance Fund and the Greentree-Sevier Loan Fund.

The Rothschild fund provides short-term loans on a quarterly basis, and theGreentree-Sevierassists on a long-term basis.

There are four broad categories of financial aid. They are scholarships, grants, loans and student employment.

Student employment

Student employment is available through the college work-study program and the Columbus College regular student assistant program. These programs now provide up to 19 hours per week of part-time employment to students.

Aldridge points out that in addition to allowing students to earn money to help with college costs, the student employment programs provide valuable work experience for students.

He also emphasizes that parents and students should begin now to apply for admission to college and for financial aid. The first step is to obtain a financial aid packet and a Columbus College financial application from a high school counselor or from Columbus College.

The Columbus College Financial Aid Office is open from 8 a.m.-5:30 p.m. weekdays. The telephone number is 568-2036. (Columbus College Public Relations Office)

Achievements

Counselors certified

Three Fort Benning Dependent Schools counselors were recently notified by the National Board of Certified Counselors that they have received national certification.

Ann Spencer, Fleda R. Glenn and William G. Abrahamson are now designated as National Counselors (NCC's). They may now use the designation "NCC" as part of their professional credentials.

Counselors become nationally certified by completing graduate degrees in counseling and psychology, demonstrating proficiency on a professional examination, and adherence to professional ethical standards.Counselorsare certified for a five-year period and must continue to receive professional education and professional maintenance.

Miss Spencer is an elementary school counselor at the Patch, Dexter, and Wilson Schools, and Mrs. Glenn and Mr. Abrahamson serve the Don C. Faith Middle School.

Center wins award

The Telecommunications Center, USACC-Fort Benning, recently received a Certificate of Achievement from the Navy AUTODIN Switching Center, Albany, Georgia, in recognition of the outstanding results achieved by telecommunications personnel in applying the Defense Communications Systems Quality Control Program. The average message reject rate for calendar year 1983 was .08 percent, and the average circuit/equipment reliability for calendar year 1983 was 99.64 percent.

Students earn honors

MARION, Ala. — Cadet Andrew J. Abare, son of SSgt. and Mrs. Frederick C. Abare of Fort Benning, is on the Marion Military Institute Dean's List for the first semester of the 1983-84 session.

Marion Military Institute is a four-year preparatory school and two-year junior college.

Fort Benning girl wins youth service award

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Members of a Columbus civic organization presented their annual "Youth Service Award to a Fort Benning family member.

Starr Strickland, 18, received the award from the La Sertoma, the ladies auxillary of the Sertoma Club; for her volunteer services in the community.

Miss Strickland, the daughter of MSgt. Ron Strickland, chief wardmaster, Martin Army Community Hospital, is a student at Spencer High School. Besides being involved in Junior Civitan and Junior Achievement, she works with exceptional children in the Fort Benning area.

According to Cheryl Gill, chairman of the youth service award committee, Starr won the award not for academic achievement, but because of her dedication to the community and her personal involvement with handicapped children and senior citizens.

Mrs. Gill commented that a lot of the people considered for the award were involved in organizations performing various services in the community, but Starr was "head and shoulders above the other applicants."

Starr is the president of her "company" in the local Junior Achievement program and on the board of directors of the organization. Upon completion of high school, she intends to go to college to study business.

Sertoma Clubs get their name from the motto, "Service to Mankind." The local chapter is one of more than 1,000 clubs in the U.S. that are dedicated, on a national level to help speech and hearing defects. Local clubs sponsor various agencies in their own communities.

Stayin' Well

Dropping extra pounds can add years to your life

By Brenda Richardson
Clinical Dietitian, MACH

Emphasis on total fitness should be an objective of each service member of the armed forces. Total fitness is a composite of the mental, spiritual and physical lifestyle factors.

One aspect of physical fitness requiring attention is ideal body weight. Many do not place priority on this factor of their life. Some feel being overweight is not a risk factor, or participate in unhealthy diet regimens to meet the required military standards; only to regain the excess weight and maybe even a few extra pounds following required weigh-ins.

Is it really important to be at ideal weight? Do individuals actually care about their overall health and physical fitness?

Excess fat affects more than just physical appearance. Many body organs and systems are harmed by having excess fat. Lungs must supply oxygen to increased body volume without increasing their own size. Breathing is restricted by abdominal fat. Cardiovascular and gallbladder diseases are greater in overfat patients.

Diabetes is common in overweight people and often actually precipitates the disease. Upon weight loss, diabetes often improves and ideal weight maintenance may control the disease. Pregnancy and surgery are complicated by being overfat which may cause prolonged labor, fetal distress, and greater risk of maternal or infant death.

As if this were not enough, there are also social and economic disadvantages accompanying being overweight. Overweight individuals pay higher insurance premiums, meet discrimination when applying for a job, and studies support they are less sought after for social interaction.

Service members face military separation, flagging of orders for promotion, postponement of schooling and barring of reenlistment.

Contrary to popular belief — "a fat person is not always a jolly person."

Now is the time to actively set personal goals for achieving ideal body weight. Discover the behaviors which added the extra calories, and change those behavior patterns for the rest of your life span. Reach and maintain ideal body weight to reduce health risk factors in your life; and do it because you feel it is important.

Dryke receives Olympia Award

Matthew A. Dryke of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, became the first shooter to receive the prestigious Olympia Award given to outstanding amateur athletes.

Dryke was chosen for the award for his accomplishments in international skeet shooting. During 1983, he won five major events including the World Championship, Pan American Games, U.S. Sports Festival, National Championship and the Interservice Championship.

Tommy Peel

Matthew Dryke

He also holds the present world individual skeet record with a perfect 200 out of 200 and has won the U.S. national skeet title five times, more than any other individual.

The Olympia Award is a museum-piece replica of those awards given to champion athletes 2,500 years ago in the Panathenaic Festivals near Athens. The award is sanctioned by the United States Olympic Committee and is funded by the Southland Corporation. The award heralds the achievements of athletes in all 31 of the Olympic disciplines and strives to recognize their commitment.

Dryke's nomination for the Olympia Award was reviewed by a panel consisting of five-time Olympic gold medalist Eric Heiden and former Olympic gold medal winners Bob Mathias, Rafer Johnson, Sheila Young and Cathy Rigby.

"We screened more than 400 nominations," says Mathias, "and when we received Matt's record, we simply could not ignore his credentials. It is a credit to the Army and to our country that we have people such as Matt representing us both at home and abroad."

The presentation was made by Jim Kelleher, Atlanta zone manager of the Southland Corporation, at a press luncheon on Feb. 7th at the Columbus Hilton. (USAMU)

Rifle club trains future Olympians

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the summer Olympics only a few months away, Fort Benning has a number of soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit with a good chance in competing in those games. But Benning is also involved in training future Olympians.

"Most of the kids in the junior rifle club have hopes of someday competing in the Olympics," stated Olympic gold medalist Lones Wigger, club director. "It is up to them. They have a great opportunity here to receive top notch training and instruction from some of the best shooters in the world."

Wigger divides the juniors into three different categories.

"The first stage is our beginning class. In this class we instruct the new members on how to shoot, certain safety precautions and familiarize them with their weapons," added the probable 1984 Olympian.

The next stage is the intermediate phase in which the students begin to compete against other shooters. A lot of time is spent with the kids at this stage to help them overcome certain problems in the techniques, according to Wigger.

The final phase of the club is the advance level. Here the club member will compete on a regular basis. During practice they will shoot anywhere from 100-150 rounds a week to improve minor deficencies.

Benning's Junior Rifle Club may field its first Olympian this summer. Wigger has high hopes for one of his shooters in particular. Her name: Deena Wigger, a gold medalist in the recent Pan American Games and his daughter.

Richard Russell

See Hawks battle Lakers

The Outdoor Recreation Branch of the Morale Support Activities Division is sponsoring another trip to the Omni in Atlanta March 2 to see the Hawks take on the Lakers. Tickets are available for $10 if you have your own transportation or $22 for a round trip on Greyhound bus. Another trip is scheduled for March 17 against the Celtics. For more information, contact Tim Brown at 545-4155.

YA soccer coaches needed

The Fort Benning Youth Activites soccer season gets underway with the opening ceremonies and first games March 3. Coaches are still needed. If you are interested in volunteering your time to support this worthwhile effort, please contact Ray Pierce at 545-3070/1376.

Rangers take on Airborne

The Ranger Department will take to the basketball court Feb. 26 to battle the Airborne Department. Game time is scheduled for 1 p.m. at Briant Wells Field House. This will be the inaugural game for what is hoped to be an annual event. The two departments used to square off in football.

See the Masters

Fort Benning's Morale Support Activities Division has a limited number of series badges for the 1984 Masters golf tournament to be held in Augusta, Ga., April 12-15. Due to the limited number of these badges, there will be a priority drawing for the badges March 5. Applications to enter the drawing to purchase the tickets must be submitted in writing no later than 5 p.m., March 2, to the Reservation and Ticket Office. Applications must include name, rank, social security number, organization and both office and residence phone numbers. A $70 check or money order payable to IMWR Fund must accompany the application. Money will be refunded should the individual not be selected to purchase the badges. For more information, contact MSAD at 545-4155.

OWC running festival set

The Officers Wives Club of Fort Benning will be sponsoring the first "Festival of Running" April 28. There will be three fun runs; one, three and five miles; as well as a 30-mile, 6-member relay. All races will take place in the vicinity of Infantry Hall. Everyone, including local civilians, are eligible to participate. For more information, contact Bill Hughes at 689-1934.

2nd ITB finishes second

TSB wins over-35 basketball title

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The School Brigade's team in the over-35 basketball league finished second during the regular season to the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade's squad. TSB was determined not to finish second in the post-season tournament and they didn't. They won four straight games enroute to the post championship.

In the championship game, TSB faced the winners of the loser's bracket, 2nd ITB. Their only loss in the tournament came at the hands of TSB in the second round of the tourney. The regular season champions were not about to give TSB the title without a fight.

The game was just like all three of their previous meetings, close, and it went down to the wire.

The teams began the contest by trading baskets. 2nd ITB's Thomas Bignall accounted for his squad's first two hoops. James McCall and James Clark countered with one a piece for TSB.

Royal Watkins then hit a long jumper over the top of ITB's 2-3 zone to give TSB the lead. Clark added to the margin with a fastbreak layup.

The rest of the half saw the teams trade baskets and the lead. When the half-time buzzer sounded and the smoke cleared, TSB owned a two-point lead 21-19.

TSB was determined not to finish second. 2nd ITB wasn't going to give TSB the title.

The second half was played dead even. Neither team would give up.

John Jones scored 10 of his game high 16 points in the second half for 2nd ITB but it was not enough. TSB countered with nine points from H.C. Hicks and eight more from Watkins.

With less than one minute remaining in the game, the score was tied at 45. Nothing had been decided after 39 plus minutes of play.

Clark got the call for TSB. He hit a short jumper as time ran out to give TSB the game, 47-45.

Another post champion had emerged. TSB had earned the title of champions of the Over-35 basketball league.

Over-35 Championship scoring:

The School Brigade (47) — Clark 14, Hicks 13, Watkins 11, McCall 9.

2nd ITB (45) — Jones 16, Bignall 10, Bland 10, Thomas 7, Lewis 2.

Tourney field set for post basketball championship

The 1984 USAIC Men's Basketball Tournament is scheduled to begin Tuesday at three locations around the post: Briant Wells Fieldhouse; Audie Murphy Gymnasium; and Kelley Hill's Gymnasium. The tournament field includes 15 teams, one from every major unit around the post.

Each major unit will have at least one representative, with some units, such as the 197th Infantry Brigade, having as many as four. The number of teams a unit has participating in the tourney depends on the number of teams that competed in the unit's regular season league.

MEDDAC is the defending post champion. They will play C Company, 3-7, 197th Infantry Brigade, in the first round Tuesday night at 5:30 in Audie Murphy Gym.

Twenty-first Company, TSB's league champion, drew the first round bye.

The tournament is double elimination, meaning that two losses will knock a team out of the competition.

The tournament will run through Feb. 29. The finals will be played at BWFH.

The brackets show when and where your unit will be playing.

The BAYONET will have coverage of the tournament's first two rounds in next week's edition, followed by coverage of the finals in two weeks.

Intruders down Aggies 41-20 to win women's title

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The finals of the 1984 USAIC Women's Basketball Tournament pitted the Aggies against the Intruders last Friday night in Audie Murphy Gymnasium.

Richard Russell

The Aggies' Jetuan Arrington (1) and Cindy Knighton control the boards.

During the regular season, the two squads suffered different fates.

The Intruders were undefeated and totally dominated the entire league. The Aggies started out slow but finished the season winning three of their last four.

The two teams had played three games already this year, with the Intruders coming out on top each time.

In the championship game, the Intruders came out of the gates smoking. Myrtle Sampson hit her first two shots from the field to give the Intruders a 4-0 lead.

The Aggies, determined to keep the defending champions from running, slowed down the tempo of the game by walking the ball up court and using a set offense.

They attacked the Intruders tough 2-3 zone defense by working the ball inside and taking advantage of their height. Jetuan Arrington (50) broke the ice for the Aggies three minutes into the game by hitting a short jumper in the paint to make the score 4-2. But for the next 15 minutes, try as they did, the Aggies could not get the ball to fall.

In the mean time, the Intruders scored 15 unanswered points and mounted a 19-2 lead on the strength of Sampson's and Gwen Digg's performances.

Even though the Aggies weren't hitting their shots inside, they were successful in drawing fouls. They went into the one-and-one bonus with two minutes remaining in the half. Taking advantage of some excellent free throw shooting, the Aggies pulled to within 11 points at the half, 21-10.

Foul trouble was also a problem for the challengers. With injuries sidelining their two starting guards, and one player on night duty, the Aggies only had five women dressed for the contest. Two of which had three fouls, Carol Malone (23) and Arrington, at the half.

Fatigue also began to take its toll as Albert McGruder, the coach of the Intruders, kept spelling his players while the same five Aggies continued to run up and down the court.

The two teams traded baskets to start the second and final half. It was time for the Aggies to make their move.

Arrington and Malone then combined for six unanswered points to cut the Intruders lead to 23-18. Then came the Aggies downfall.

With just over nine minutes to go in the game, Malone picked up her fourth foul. Thirty seconds later she got her final one. The Aggies were then forced to play with only four women against five Intruders.

The rest of the game was spent in the Intruders half of the court. Sampson, Diggs and Toni McRae combined for 17 second half points to blow open the contest.

The Intruders went on to defeat the Aggies41 - 20 to win the tournament and finish the year undefeated.

Women's Championship scoring:

Intruders (41) — Sampson 18, Diggs 9, McRae 6, Carter 4, Bender 3, Emery 1.

The Aggies (20) — Williams 6, Arrington 4, Knighton 4, Malone 4, Robertson 2.

Post rugby club opens season with a tie

By Joel Courtemanche
Correspondent

The Fort Benning Flyers, the post rugby club, opened their Spring season with a hard fought tie against the Atlanta's High County RFC Saturday.

Both teams displayed strong defenses in the aggressive, hotly contested battle that saw each side score only two trys a piece in the 8-8 contest.

Fort Benning opened the scoring early in the game when team captain Larry Murphy scored after a concerted effort by the entire team. They drove the ball deep into the High Country end of the field which allowed Murphy to push it across the goal line.

Benning suffered its first major setback when Murphy had to leave the game with an injury to his ribs. Dean Russell replaced him and was soon felled by a blow to the head. But the injury did not phase Russell in the least as he continued to play with his normal reckless abandon.

Angered by the loss of their captain, the Flyers began to dominate play and drove the ball deep into High Country territory. High Country battled back but could not prevent the Flyers from driving the ball into the endzone. Jeff Martin dove over the goal line from two yards out.

High Country countered with a score late in the first half when Max Hale made several fakes and broke several tackles to score from ten yards out.

Neither team could gain an advantage in the second half. High Country then slowly began to advance the ball down the field. Demonstrating picture perfect ball control, they tied the score when they dove into the corner of Benning's goal.

The Flyers next contest will be against Emory University in Atlanta Feb. 25. The post squad is gearing up for the Military National Rugby Tournament, May 12-13, at Fort Stewart, Ga.

Goble hooks first place in Harding fishoff

William Courington
Correspondant

The BASS Club of Fort Benning held its January fishoff at Lake Harding Jan. 15.

Willie Goble took first place and big fish honors at the season opener. His total weight was six pounds and seven ounces. His big fish weighed four pounds seven ounces.

Second and third place was taken by Bob Billman, last year's top club member, and Ted Tatten respectively.

Club meetings are conducted on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. at building 2068.

All active and retired military, their family members ble for membership.

"The benefits gained by fishing in a club such as ours include good sportsmanship, the opportunity to meet other bass fishermen and a chance to share different techniques," added Billman.

Members are not required to be boat owners. A drawing is conducted before each monthly fishoff which pairs boat owners with non boat owners.

Anyone interested in becoming a member should contact Dee Stafford at 545-1788 or 687-1714. Prospective members may also contact Willie Lindsey at 545-2017 or 687-5264.

The next fishoff will be at Lake Walter F. George Feb. 18. The drawing for that tournament will be held Tuesday night at the club's meeting. Interested

Character builder won by Spencer

Character!

That is what most people, including myself, believe high school sports is all about, building character.

If that philosophy is true, then 17 young men, and everyone in the stands, earned enough to last them a lifetime last Friday night at Spencer High School.

It was the 2-AAAA West Sub-Region Championship game for the regular season. The Spencer Greenwave, featuring four Fort Benning family members, hosted the Shaw Raiders. Both teams were 10-3 and tied for first place going into the contest and both teams played their hearts, souls and every last drop of energy out.

The first quarter was a see-saw affair. The score was tied five times before Spencer opened up a four-point lead, 14-10. Shaw battled back and took the lead on a shot at the buzzer 19-18.

The second quarter started out just like the first, as both teams traded slam dunks. Shaw's David Etheridge took control of the boards, and the game, midway through the quarter scoring 20 of his game high 30 points and guiding the Raiders to an eight-point advantage, 41-33.

Spencer, not to be outdone, got a short jumper from Mario Martin and a last second field goal from Ed Hall to pull within four at the half, 41-37.

Martin, Hall and Benning's Alex Freeman combined to pull the Greenwave even at the 4:05 mark 47-47. Shaw's Tommy Walker and Etheridge kept on pressuring the home squad and built Shaw's lead back up to four, 60-56, at the closing horn.

The two teams continued to go at each other like dogs and cats until Freeman gave Spencer what seemed to be a much needed shot in the arm with 4 minutes left, when he intercepted a Shaw pass and took it the length of the court for a thunderous slam dunk. Freeman's basket pulled the Greenwave to within two points at 69-67. Shaw then began to feel the pressure themselves as they threw the ball away three straight times.

With only eight seconds remaining in the game, Spencer's David Scott hit two free throws to give Spencer what seemed to be a victory, 75-73. Shaw's Terry Brown took the ball the length of the court and scored the tying bucket at the final buzzer sending the game into overtime.

The overtime belonged to Spencer's Hall who scored 11 of his team's 12 points. Spencer went on to win 87-81. Head coach Speedy Gilstrap described the game as, "A game between the best two teams around and they showed it."

The victory gave Spencer the number one seed in the sub-region tournament. Their first round opponent was Carver High School, 0 for the season, Tuesday night. Spencer moved into tonight's semi-final game against Columbus High School with a 81-67 victory.

Youngsters show promise in dual meet

The Fort Benning Gymnastic Club, sponsored by the Officers Wives Club, competed against the All-American Gymnastics Academy last Saturday at Pacelli High School in Columbus.

Penny Lenz, daughter of Lt. Col. Robert Lenz, won three individual exercises and the all-around competition in the 14-over age group. This was slightly surprising to her coach Janet Bevins.

"I think her performance was outstanding," commented the second-year coach. "She did surprise me a little. Her best events are the uneven bars and the balance beam, two of the events she won. Her third victory came in the floor exercise competition. I think that surprised me the most."

Lenz is set to compete in a sectional qualifying meet Feb. 25 in Atlanta. If she qualifies, and Bevins thinks she will, she will compete at the sectional meet March 10-11 for the right to go to the state meet.

Individual results from the dual meet with the All-American Gymnastics Academy last Saturday were:

Post boxers split two bouts

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning boxing team gained a split in the two bouts they competed in Saturday night at the Harmony Church Fieldhouse.

Benning's first fighter, Walter Pope, was defeated in the second round of his fight by William Goodman from the Dothan Athletic Club, Dothan, Ala., in the welter weight division, 147 pound limit. Goodman used his superior conditioning, reach and height advantages to wear down Pope.

"Goodman was just too overpowering," commented Pope after the bout. "I was fighting out of my normal weight class and I haven't been in training very long. I was using this fight to get some much needed ring experience before the post championships."

Benning's other participant, Ray Mercer, fought in the light heavy weight division, 178 pound limit. His opponent was Johnnie Rudolph, also from Dothan.

The first round was all Rudolph as the much taller boxer dominated the action. According to Mercer, he was just pacing himself.

"I have only been back in the gym for about a month and a half. So the first round I tried to feel out Rudolph to see what he had but conserve my energy for later in the fight," explained the Benning boxer.

The second belonged to Mercer as he moved inside on Rudolph and landed several rights to the vistor's stomach.

In the final round, with the crowd behind him all the way, Mercer moved his attack to his opponent's jaw. The deciding blow came midway through the third round when a Mercer right hook knocked Rudolph's head gear off.

The rest of the round, as well as the fight, belonged to Mercer as he won the decision of the judges.

IOAC teams dominate marathon

The top post teams in the Infantry Marathon and half-marathon were from Infantry Officer Advanced Course 1-84 and The School Brigade. Wednesday morning, Col. Ed Sills, TSB commander, presented the two teams with their first place trophies.

The marathon team of Ricardo Cantu, David Harper and Courtney Whitney finished the 26.2-mile race with an average time of 3:24:11. The team's average pace per mile was 7:47.

The half-marathon team of Kirt Hardy, Keith McCaffrey and David Puster crossed the 13.1-mile finish line in 1:33:49. That averages out to 7:09 per mile.

197th originates BIFV test

By Paula Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

The dusty red earth and cracked concrete that make up CAT Field underwent a festive transition Feb. 8-9, as the first expert Bradley Infantry squad testing (EBIST) was conducted at the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate).

Striped green and yellow canvas awning gave the illusion of a carnival atmosphere as it fluttered over the picnic tables and charts. Young children ran among the bleachers set up for general public viewing in wide-eyed fascination as 12 squads with their Infantry Fighting Vehicles (IFV) competed during the two-day period.

Third Squad, 2nd Platoon, boasted the first winners in the EBIST. For their achievement, they received a special trophy designed by Capt. William P. Rue, D Company commander and creator of the EBIST. The trophy will have the name of each squad member engraved on it. It will be displayed in the company's trophy case.

The first EBIST belonged solely to D Company 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, the Brigade's "Pioneers." That the Pioneers came up with the EBIST is fitting — they were the first IFV unit in the Army.

"I was in basic training. They told me I was going to a Bradley unit. I said, 'A Bradley, what's that?'" commented Cpl. Laurence B. Brown III, D Company's armorer, as he pointed out the Bradley's capabilities.

The Bradley is one of the newest vehicles in the Army. They carry a nine-man squad. However, for the EBIST, they only carried seven. They provide the crew with the firepower of TOWs (tubular launched, optically sighted, wire guided missiles), Dragons, and high explosive and armor piercing rounds fired by the 25mm main gun; boast the M231 as a fire suppressive weapon; and carry claymore mines, LAWs (light anti-tank weapons), and a supply of C-rations. Going cross country, the Bradley is capable of forty-mile-per-hour speeds.

"There isn't any SQT for the Bradley yet. The EBIST acts as a mini-SQT to prepare the troops and to check their knowledge of the vehicles," explained Brown. "Everything they do here is geared to keep them alive in combat," he continued.

"Leadership, motivation and teamwork are needed for a squad to complete the test," said Rue.

The EBIST is composed of 12 events. The events in the testing were determined by Rue and the soldiers of D Company. Rue said these 12 events could be expanded or changed in the years to come. Now however, they are the temporary framework upon which the EBIST was built.

Points were determined on how well the squads placed in each event. For example, the winning squad in an event received a total of 24 points; second place 22; third place 20; all the way down to the last place squad, who received one point.

The events were geared for squad scoring to encourage teamwork and "esprit-de-corps." Events such as the Pioneer Trail, assembling/disassembling the M231, and the time of the final squad member determined the squad's time and ranking for that event.

The first event in the competition was thermal CVI (combat vehicle identification). Each squad had to identify 60 vehicles using the sight in the thermal mode—seeing everything in silhouette.

"The squads have to decide whether the vehicles are friendly, enemy or allies by the turret, or lack

Annual Prayer Breakfast

The annual Chaplain's Prayer Breakfast will be held March 1 at 6:30 a.m. in the Main NCO Club. Guest speaker will be Chaplain (Capt.) Don Brown, 1st Battalion, 75th Infantry, Hunter Air Field, Ga.

Tickets cost $2.35 and may be purchased at any of the chapels on post.(USAIC PAO).

Don't be confused!

Confusion exists among many personnel concerning the difference between the Retirement Services Office and the AG Retirement Section.

The Retirement Services Office (RSO) is assigned to Personnel Services Division, DPCA, and offers counseling to preretirement eligibles and retired military personnel and their family members relating to their retirement benefits. The RSO is located in the trailer adjacent to building 229. Information and appointments may be made by calling 545-5369/2715.

The AG Retirement Section is part of the Adjutant General Division and processes retirement applications after computing eligibility. They are also responsible for arranging the monthly retirement ceremony. Inquiries may be made of the Retirement section by visiting building 83, room 139, or calling 545-2541/1576.(DPCA)

Scout district honors post

The Fort Benning District of the Chattahoochee Council, Boy Scouts of America, received the "Quality Program Award" for 1983 at the Council Annual Recognition Banquet, held recently at the Columbus Iron Works.

The Fort Benning District was also honored with the award last year, the first year that it was given. Receiving the award for the District were Col. Ben Sims, staff judge advocate and district vice chairman, SSgt. Jack Hodges, assistant district commissioner and Scott Sutton, district Scout executive.

The award measures 10 different factors related to the quality of the Scouting program within the district. These factors include percent advancement, percent of top unit leaders trained, percent of boys camping and percent of units achieving honor unit status.

The district with the highest composite score receives the award, which consists of a plaque that remains in the Council Service Center and individual statuettes presented to the honored district's chairman and commissioner. The Chattahoochee Council has eight different districts competing for this award each year.(USAIC PAO)

Why not wear Class As in office jobs?

Betty Zimmerman

Much has been written lately, officially and unofficially, about the battle dress uniform (BDU) which is the Army's current design in work clothes. Its camouflaged material is supposed to help protect soldiers in combat.

First, Department of the Army (DA) had to warn users not to wash them in very hot water because they would shrink. Now they are worried about their sloppy appearance when not pressed.

Letters to the editors of the Army Times and other military oriented publications are rife with complaints about the camouflaged fatigues and the various attempts to remedy their shortcomings.

The Jan. 23rd Army Times published a lengthy account from a Fort Bragg, N.C., wife who had practically remade her husband's BDUs in her efforts to make them presentable.

She had to alter the collar, make buttonholes (they were missing), straighten uneven pockets and resew frayed seams.

Then DA decided to require soldiers to press the uniforms that tend to look as if their owner has slept in them when they are not pressed.

This created a problem too because most quartermaster laundry pressers had a minimum temperature setting of 350 degrees and the maximum pressing temperature recommended by the manufacturers was 300 degrees. However, this problem has been settled now.

But there was another kink surfacing. "Strac" soldiers like to present their very best military bearing when in uniform — especially when visable to the public. And to them, that means starched and pressed BDUs.

However, starching BDUs is forbidden because starched material cannot breathe and thus makes the uniforms very uncomfortable in hot weather. I've also heard tales of starch affecting the material's infra-red capabilities, but I can't vouch for that.

Solution

There is a very simple solution to the problem as I see it.

Use the BDUs for what they were designed — that is as work uniforms. And that means grubby work such as in motor pools, on the ranges, and in field training situations. Their ruffled appearance wouldn't make any difference in these places as long as they were clean each day.

Then put the garrison soldiers who work in offices, schools and other "white collar" jobs back into Class As as they once were. There isn't any problem appearing neat and soldierly in properly maintained greens and they are much more compatible to their surroundings.

The wearers will still look like soldiers and they can save their BDUs for battle instead of battling over the BDUs.

DA clarifies false positive urinalysis tests results

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There seems to be some light at the end of the tunnel for some soldiers that have been identified as drug abusers, according to a message sent out by the Deparment of the Army.

In the February 2nd message, officials announced that the results from the blue-ribbon panel concluded that some urinalysis test results could not be used for use in administrative or disciplinary actions.

The panel, co-chaired by Maj. Gen. John H. Mitchell, director of Human Resources Development, Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, and the assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy, Maj. Gen. David W. Einsel, found that while the Army's drug testing program accurately identified drug abuse, a percentage of the results are legally and scientifically unsupportable for use in disciplinary or administrative actions.

Officials state that the number of such cases reported initially as positive, and found later to be unsupportable is not known at this time. According to Gen. Einsel, the indications are that most of the test results meet forensic standards.

> The panel concluded that some urinalysis test results could not be used . . .

The Army will review results of 100,000 samples reported positive between April 27, 1982 and Nov. 1, 1983 to determine the exact number of unsupportable tests.

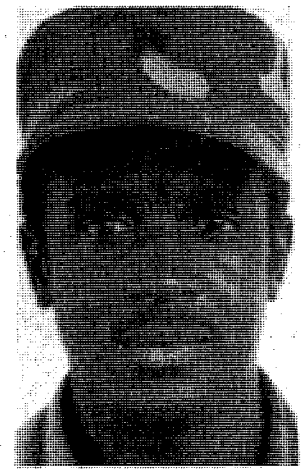
In a message to the field, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton, stated, "Soldiers that have been identified as drug abusers beginning in April 82, whose urinalysis tests do not meet the panel's criteria may seek redress of any adverse administrative or disciplinary action taken based upon the results."

General Elton commented that the soldiers will be notified by DA and may seek assistance from military defense counsels or request relief from the Army board for correction of military records.

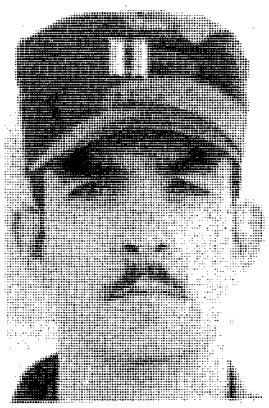
"The decision to make this notification does not represent a lack of confidence in the program or its ability to accurately identify drug abuse," Gen. Elton said.

Various voices

What is your opinion of the new policy requiring pressing of the BDU uniform?



Sgt. Reginald E. Demps, 988th MP Co., MPA — I think it's great. Soldiers should want to look sharp. Spitshined boots and wrinkled BDUs don't get it.



Capt. Mark D. Simpson, 12th Co., TSB — I think the whole thing is worthless. It is a work uniform and it does not need to be pressed. Pressing it is a waste of soldiers' time and money.

Sp4 Luis A. Bermudez, D Co., 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Gp. — I don't like the BDU uniform but the idea of pressing it is good. It makes the soldiers' appearance better.

PFC Steven M. Becker, 608th Ord. Co., 67th Main. Bn., 36th Eng. Gp. — I think the whole BDU thing has been blown out of proportion. I would rather my infra-red detection devices work in combat than look nice on post.

Post names top military policeman

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

He doesn't carry a 44-Magnum or drive a red Ferrari like movie and TV investigators, but Sgt. Terry C. Crump, military police investigator, 988th MP Company, was selected as the Fort Benning "Military Policeman of the Year."

Crump carries an issue weapon and drives an automobile that he affectionately calls "The Shark." "It's a 'marked' unmarked car," joked Crump.

According to Crump, he won the award for being instrumental in the recovery of several thousand dollars worth of stolen property.

During 1983 he was awarded an "impact" Army Commendation Medal for his fast action in an attempted suicide.

"I was the first one at the scene," said Crump, "There was a report of a man with a gun, holding a lady at gunpoint.

"I was the closest — so I went. I got to the scene and talked to some of the people . . . I found out that there was no one in there — but he had shot himself."

The attempted suicide had shot himself in the stomach with the bullet entering at an upward angle, passing through a lung and out of his back. Crump performed the necessary first aid and was credited with saving the man's life.

Fort Benning's "Top Cop" does not see himself as different from the other military police officers on post. He spent his time in "uniform" before becoming an investigator. "I used to be an MP 'on the road,'" commented Crump, "that's where I come from. They (the uniforms) are the ones that initiatially respond to a complaint. We follow up . . . we try to find out 'Who done it?' and where's the item?"

He says that he has had a lot of success by "just talking to a lot of people and processing crime scenes."

Crump entered the Army in 1981 and after basic and advanced training was assigned to the 988th. He performed duties as military policeman and later as a military police investigator.

He is a graduate of the U.S. Army Military Police School, the Military Police Investigation School and has received an associate degree in police science.

Along with the distinction of being named the MP of the Year, Crump was awarded the Army Achievement Medal and received a letter of commendation from Maj. Gen. James Lindsay. Additionally, he was among those local civil law enforcement officers recently honored at the annual Crime Prevention Banquet sponsored by the Columbus Exchange Clubs.

of, and the body style," Brown explained.

Each vehicle was represented twice during this phase of the testing.

While testing for the Thermal CVI was taking place at the company's day room, the vehicles were given induced deficiencies by the motor pool personnel in preparation for the second event, preventive maintenance checks and services (PMCS).

The squads were given an hour to go over the vehicle to find and correct any deficiencies. The team with the fewest remaining deficiencies at the end of the alloted time was determined the winner. However, if a team failed to find and repair a deadline deficiency, that vehicle was disqualified from the event.

The third event was the Pioneer Trail.

"It's a trail of endurance," commented Brown.

In this event, the participants were required to run cross country two-and-a-half miles in field gear, which consisted of complete load bearing equipment, steel pot, protective mask and either the M16, M203, or M60 machine gun.

"I feel like I pulled that Bradley through the course," panted one exhausted soldier after completing the run.

Team spirit was an important factor throughout the event. Those already having completed the course yelled encouragement and offered support to their slower teammates.

In the fourth event, the squads had to load/unload the 25mm weapon systems. This event was scored on the fastest time and the use of proper procedures. Each squad had to load and unload the high explosive and armor piercing rounds. The ammunition to be used was already set out with 150 rounds of each type.

"It's done. He didn't say how to get it out. Just to get it out fast," remarked one soldier surveying the belt links his squad had broken while downloading the 25mm weapon systems.

The downloading of the weapons systems was a simulation of abandoning the vehicle after unloading the live ammo. Therefore, speed was essential.

During event five, the squads were instructed to assume they had a malfunction in the 25mm weapons systems after having already fired off 80 rounds. Each team simulated the same malfunction.

The 25mm misfire procedure was a timed event with 30 seconds being added to a squad's final time for each safety violation made. If a squad was unable to clear the weapon within 15 minutes, they were disqualified from the event.

Immediately following the 25mm misfire procedures was the loading/unloading of the TOW and engagement of targets. This event was also timed with 10 seconds added for safety violations.

The event itself consisted of arming both tubes, engaging one target to the front and unloading both missiles.

Seventh was the disassemble/assemble, install/remove, load/unload, clear and perform misfire procedures on the M231, a firing port weapon, similar in appearance to the M16, used for fire suppression from the Bradley.This event was done with four-man teams.

Target acquisition and the correct issuing of fire commands was the eighth event. This event tested the ability of the Bradley commander (BC) to acquire a target while the vehicle was moving, use correct fire commands and have the gunner engage the target. Correct commands overriding the gunner and preparing for the next target also were used.

Vehicle identification and range determination fell in the ninth event. During this event, each Bradley was surrounded by scaled model combat targets. Each combat vehicle had to be identified by nomenclature. The correct range to each target had to be computed through use of the sight reticle and mil relation formula. The highest amount of correct answers determined the event's winner.

In the 10th event, the competing squads had to track targets manually and with power. The gunner and BC were required to track two horizontal lines using a "worm" board tracking device. The grader, through the use of an integrated sight unit, followed the gunner and BC. Each time they strayed off course five seconds was added to their total combined score.

Probably the favorite portion of the EBIST was event 11: drive a Bradley through an obstacle course.

The driving course was located on the tank trails behind CAT Field. At various, previously designated areas, the vehicles were required to stop, back off the trail and continue. For safety purposes, only two Bradleys were permitted on the course at any given time. The fastest final time won the event.

The 12th and final event in the EBIST was the donning of the protective mask and suit.

"Next year we'll invite others from post, and eventually, other installations," promised Rue.

Honduras mission over; 89 engineers come back

By John Sieder
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eighty-nine soldiers from Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group returned from Honduras last Saturday. They had been performing a real world mission for five months in a real world location — Honduras.

Buildings were put up; airfields were built; trenches dug; and perhaps most importantly, it was a time for all soldiers there to learn. These soldiers, mostly from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, learned about their mission, their equipment, and how to work with each other in a difficult environment.

Sergeant First Class Roger Grant, earth moving platoon sergeant, 43rd Engineer Battalion, was proud of his unit's accomplishments while in Honduras. When asked exactly what was done, he replied, "We built two airfields, eight miles of base camp road and two and one-half kilometers of mortar line." Then he added, "Twelve carpenters put up 32 buildings while in country."

Private Michael Orum, B Co., 43rd Engr. Bn., is a truck driver who also worked on construction in Honduras. He said, "It was something else. I learned more about driving, more than I ever did here." He also felt that the Honduran people "liked the soldiers."

"We changed a swamp into an airstrip," he said with obvious pride when asked about what was accomplished in Honduras.

Private First Class Tyre Magbee of the 533rd Transportation Company echoed a few of Orum's comments. He felt it was "a good experience living out in the field. We stayed in tents." He also said it was a "positive mission" and "I learned a lot of things I didn't know before."

Sergeant Raul Macias from the 586th Engr. Co. acted as a mechanic and as assistant motor sergeant. "I liked the experience. I worked with soldiers from a different unit and we did an outstanding job." He felt, "We were there to protect the people. Sometimes we had alerts to see if we were ready in case something happened."

Lieutenant Greg Andres, earth moving platoon leader, 43rd Engr. Bn., was the only officer sent to Honduras from the 36th. He had many positive comments and said, "Overall the mission went well. We gained a lot of good experience." He added, "The troops exceeded my expectations. They were being thrown into a unit that already had an established chain of command and still performed well."

Darby Award

Graduate receives Ranger s' highest award

John Thompson

2Lt Daniel J. Keefe

By John Sieder
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rangers lead the way! This statement of pride reflects upon the individuals who have earned the right to wear the coveted Ranger Tabs.

One recent Ranger School distinguished honor graduate is 2nd Lieutenant Daniel J. Keefe.

The award chosen to recognize Keefe's achievements is the William O. Darby Award. It is the highest award the Ranger Department gives an individual.

According to Capt. Donald G. Lewis, senior tac, "The William O. Darby Award has been donated by the United States Army Ranger Battalion Association of World War II for over 10 years. In 1982, there were 13 awards presented. In 1983, only four awards were presented. During the first quarter of Fiscal Year 1984, only one student, Keefe, received the award.

Not all Ranger Class distinguished honor graduates are Darby Award Winners. It is given to only the most outstanding graduates.

Keefe was born June 20, 1961, in Rochester, Minn. He attended the United States Military Academy and earned a 3.33 grade point average. He graduated from West Point, May 25,1983, and attended the Infantry Officer Basic Course here. During IOBC, Keefe performed exceptionally well and graduated on the Commandant's List. Keefe graduated from Basic Airborne School in the summer of 1981.

Keefe had to do quite alot to earn this award. Lewis said that, "Keefe distinguished himself by being the student company commander for the entire course. It should also be noted that with this position came increased responsibility. Extra pressure was put upon him, as a result of being the company commander. He got less sleep than the other students, and when anyone in the company messed up he heard about it."

Additionally Lewis said. "He passed all graded areas to include patrolling, Ranger runs and the comprehensive exam. Keefe received the maximum possible score on land navigation and mountaineering, and received extremely high peer evaluations."

When asked what factors he attributed to his great success Keefe answered,"my Ranger buddy, Ranger platoon and the company."

To make it through the course Keefe said a person has to want to do it. He said he "wanted to do it," despite suffering a cold weather injury in the desert phase. He stressed the "team player aspect" is essential to the course.

Of the 171 students who started the course with desire, physical conditioning and motivation, only 106 were standing tall on Feb. 16 to receive the Ranger Tab.

Keefe started the course at a fit 153 pounds and lost 25 pounds during the eight weeks, but said he would do it again. He said there were two reasons why,"there is a great feeling of accomplishment when you've finished and no one can give it to you nor take it away."

Does your state honor expired driving licenses?

Have you checked the expiration date on your driver's license lately? If so, you may have wondered if your home state automatically extends the driver's license expiration date for service members on active duty.

The following states automatically extend driver's licenses for people on active duty. The extension applies only to the service member and for the period of active duty service plus the number of days shown following discharge (except for limits and exceptions as noted).

Arizona - 90 days.

California - 30 days.

Colorado - 90 days; but total extension after expiration does not exceed three years.

Indiana - 30 days; but total extension after expiration does not exceed four years.

Iowa - 180 days; similar extension for dependents, not to exceed five years.

Louisiana - 60 days; applies only to licenses issued prior to Aug. 27, 1979.

Maine - 30 days.

Maryland - 30 days.

Massachusetts - 60 days.

Minnesota - 90 days.

Montana - 30 days.

Nebraska - 60 days; extension applies to spouses also.

North Dakota - 30 days.

Ohio - 180 days.

Oklahoma - 60 days; extension applies only to personnel on active duty outside the continental U.S.

Pennsylvania - 45 days.

South Dakota - 30 days.

Tennessee - 60 dayss.

Texas - 90 days.

Utah - 90 days.

Vermont - 30 days; but total extension after expiration does not exceed four years.

Washington - 90 days.

West Virginia - 180 days.

Seven other states and the District of Columbia also grant an extension, but you have to apply for it through the state's licensing authority.

Arkansas - extension good only for first tour of duty.

Georgia - extension good only for four years.

Idaho - extension good only for one year.

Illinois - extension good for period of service plus 45 days.

New York -application must be made within 60 days of entry into service; good for period of service plus 180 days.

Wyoming - extension good only for three years.

District of Columbia -extension good only for six years.

It is important to note that these extensions apply to the way your home state (state of residence) regards the validity of your driver's license. While all states generally honor valid out-of-state driver's licenses, the state where you are stationed (host state) may, under certain circumstances or after a certain period of time, require you to obtain a license in that state. Check this out with the local driver licensing authority.

If you take up residency in a new state, that state will require you to obtain a local driver's license.

If you are a resident of a state that does not grant an extension, you must maintain an unexpired driver's license at all times in order to drive legally.

The following states do not grant driver's license extensions: Alabama, Alaska, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Hawaii, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina and Wisconsin.

Many states permit active duty military personnel to renew their driver's licenses by mail. Details of renewal requirements such as fees, tests, photos, etc., vary in each state. (AFPS)

197th unit wins best small dining facility award

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

The 197th Infantry Brigade's 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery's dining facility crew of 28 have been standing proud since receiving an unexpected Valentine's Day present Feb. 14. The manager of the facility was notified they had won the Connelly Award's small category competition held in January.

On Jan. 23, the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) evaluating team had come poking and prying through the facility.

The representatives were visiting the post in search of the best dining facilities in three categories: small, large and field.

The 2-10 FA dining facility, due to an average headcount of under 200, was entered in the small category. A headcount of more than 200 would have placed them in the large category.

"We had to compete against about 20 other small category dining facilities throughout TRADOC,"SFC Larry Brown, the dining facility steward, explained. "Even before competing in the Connelly, we had to win at brigade and post levels."

"Everyone handled the evaluators being here pretty well," stated PFC Douglas C. Wright, a cook from A Battery. "No one got nervous, they just did their job."

The TRADOC representatives remained at the dining facility for two meals — breakfast and noon. While there, the evaluators covered the entire operation of the facility.

"Basically, we didn't do anything different than we usually do. We just put more emphasis on the work done," remarked SSgt. Cleveland Parks, assistant dining facility steward.

The worldwide competition will be held in May. The 2-10 dining facility will compete against eight other facilities.

"We're going all the way to number one," promised Parks.

"The worldwide competition will be more hard work, but I'm sure we can do it. We won this last one, didn't we?" Wright asked enthusiastically.

"I have a bunch of well qualified men. We'll win," finished Brown, proudly surveying his domain.

197th Infantry Brigade soldiers attend Fort Bragg CPX

By Paula L. Dempe
197th PAO

Recently, 46 soldiers from the "Forever Forward" Brigade traveled to Fort Bragg, N.C. to participate in XVIII Airborne Corp's command post exercise, "Caber Dragon."

Command post exercises (CPXs) provide training for individuals at staff and command levels without the use of a great deal of equipment and soldiers. They also allow the commanders to fully integrate their staff into the planning and execution phases of an operation under a higher headquarters.

In August 1983, XVIII Airborne Corps was delegated the responsibility for exercising operational control for contingency planning and training guidance over the 197th Infantry Brigade. "Caber Dragon" provided the brigade with its first opportunity to familiarize the staff with one of the Corps' actual contingency plans.

"The purpose of "Caber Dragon" was twofold," remarked Capt. Richard A. Brisson, assistant S3 (operations) for the brigade. "One, it allowed us to exercise with and report to a Corps headquarters as a separate brigade and two, allowed the brigade an opportunity to further develop the CORTRAIN alignment."

The soldiers participating in the CPX were from the brigade's headquarters; 1st Bn., 29th Infantry; 2nd Bn., 10th Field Artillery; and the brigade's Support Battalion.

"The purpose of "Caber Dragon" was twofold."

"We have sought to expand our relationship with XVIII ABN Corps," Brisson stated. "Continued association should help increase the Brigade's readiness posture through additional training exercises and by procurring additional resources for training."

"Caber Dragon" gave the XVIII ABN Corps the opportunity to plan for the use of the 197th in a combined heavy/light force scenario and to exercise their staff's ability to command and control the brigade in a CPX mode."

Warrant's road toughens with 3-phased program

By John Sieder
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As discovered in the first article about warrant officers, the aspiring warrant goes through a long and thorough process before he achieves his goal. The road may have gotten longer and steeper recently.

During 1983, many warrant officer professional developers looked at the existing education system and decided that it needed standardization. What has emerged is a three-phased training program:

The first phase is the entry level. The warrant will serve 0-3 years as a warrant at this level.

Phase two will carry the warrant officer who has from 3-9 years of service. This is called the advanced level.

Phase three deals with those warrants who have 10 or more years of warrant officer service.

Entry level. The first phase will be conducted in a candidate type environment. Here the candidate will be instructed in those lessons learned by all Army leaders. Some of the courses to be taught include military history, leadership, ethics, support organizations and functions.

It should be remembered that the program and its instruction was designed to provide a basic foundation on which to build the warrant. This does not necessarily refer to technical knowledge since the W.O. candidate has already proven to have a degree of this. But rather, it is a foundation on which a professional can continue to grow and develop.

The first phase is six weeks long and at the end of it, there will be some sort of certification. What form this certification takes will depend on what career field the warrant is in. "It could be certification testing, boarding action, completion of apprenticeship training or civilian schooling," writes CWO Carl Burnett, who writes for the "Newsliner."

Perhaps the greatest advantage of this program is that it provides some uniformity to warrant officers as a group. According to CWO4 David Ford, "Before the '80s, there was no standardization for warrants. They were controlled by the various branches."

Advanced Level. As stated, the advanced level spans from 3-9 years of service as a warrant. As most of these changes are relatively new, a great deal has yet to be written on the subject. The TRADOC News Service has put out, "At the advanced level, all warrant officers will attend a warrant officer advanced course, which will consist of three components. There will be a common component prescribed by Headquarters, TRADOC; a component tailored to all specialties managed by the proponent; and an MOS-specific component."

Even at the advanced level, it is considered important to provide the warrants with a block of instruction common to all. At this level, it would be tempting to teach only MOS-related courses. However, by giving specific instruction common to all warrants at this level, it reminds them of their professional status.

Senior Level. The senior level (10 or more years warrant service) training course is next. TRADOC News Service writes, "At this level, the warrant officer senior course is under revision to focus on preparation of a select group of senior warrant officers to serve in policy and planning positions at high staff levels." As this level of training and instruction is under revision, not much information has been available yet.

Reception station receives 10,000th incoming soldier

Fort Benning and the U. S. Army Training Center welcomed the 10,000th soldier to be processed since the Reception Center's official opening last October.

Private Rix Robinson 18, from Greenville Mich., walked through the doors at the Sand Hill facility, Tuesday night and started the three-day processing stint that would convert him from a civilian into a soldier.

Robinson claims that his main reason for joining the Army was the educational benefits. He wanted to go to college and decided that by wearing Army green he could get his schooling.

Governor proclaims Tornado Awareness Week

By John Thompson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Governor Joe Frank Harris signed a proclamation on Jan 25, declaring Feb. 26 through March 3 as Tornado Awareness Week in the state of Georgia. The week is designed to alert citizens to safety procedures if a tornado or severe thunderstorm were to occur.

According to Air Force Lt. Col David E. Smart, commander, Detachment 10, 5th Weather Squadron, "Tornado Awareness Week is to make people aware of the threat and the protective measures they should take to save and protect their lives and resources.

Smart explained the drill practice set for Feb. 29." A tornado watch will be declared, followed by a warning. Once a warning has been declared, civil defense warning sirens will be sounded." Smart goes on to say, "when the sirens go off people should stop what they're doing and think through action they would take if it were an actual emergency."

In case of bad weather the drill will be rescheduled for March 2.

The warning signal will be a continuous five minute sound from the civil defense sirens. The all clear signal will be a series of three two-minute sounds, interrupted by two silent periods of one minute.

"It is important to distinguish between a watch and a warning. During a watch, tornadoes and severe thunderstorms are possible. During a warning, a tornado or severe thunderstorm has been visually seen or spotted on radar."

Smart suggests that soldiers and civilian employees working on Fort Benning address and familiarize themselves with standing operating procedures at work, concerning severe thunderstorms or tornadoes.

Guidance and procedures to be followed before, during and after severe weather are contained in the U.S. Army Infantry Center storm plan and in USAIC pamphlet 500-1.

The pamphlet outlines the Fort Benning storm and shelter plan and the steps one must take to protect themselves and their families from the effects of a storm.

A copy of the pamphlet should be in all government quarters. Additional copies may be obtained by contacting the housing office.

"People should remember that tornadoes and severe thunderstorms occur throughout the year, but be especially aware of severe weather conditions in the spring. The greatest frequency of tornadoes occur in March, April and May, in the Fort Benning —Columbus area."

The State of Georgia recorded 26 tornadoes in 1983. Since 1916, the loss of 586 lives and millions of dollars in damage and destruction have been caused by tornadoes here in the state.

Michael Mercier

Samuel Cuff looks over World War II encyclopedia that tells story of Blakely, Ga.'s Tornado in May 1983, while friend Michael Conway sifts through debris.

Knowing what to do may save your life in a tornado

In case personal action becomes necessary, the following tornado safety tips may be useful:

✓ Remember that a tornado watch means that tornadoes are expected to develop. Keep a battery-operated radio or television set nearby and listen for the latest weather information - even if the sky is blue. Tornados develop very rapidly.

✓ A tornado warning means that a tornado has actually been sighted or indicated on weather radar. Seek inside shelter in a storm cellar or reinforced building and stay away from windows. Curl up so that your head and eyes are protected. Keep a battery-operated radio or TV nearby and listen for further advisories.

✓ If you are in an office building during a tornado warning, go to an interior hallway on the lowest floor or go to the designated shelter area.

✓ In homes, basements offer the greatest safety. Seek shelter under sturdy furniture if possible. In homes without basements, take cover in the central part of the house on the lowest floor in a small room, such as a closet or bathroom, or under heavy furniture. Keep some windows open, but stay away from them.

✓ In shopping centers, go to a designated area - do not stay in your car.

✓ In open country, move away from the tornado's path at right angles. If there is no time to escape, lie flat in the nearest ditch or ravine.

✓ Mobile homes are particularly vulnerable to being overturned in strong winds and they should be evacuated when strong winds are forecast. Damage can be minimized by securing trailers with cables anchored in concrete footing. Mobile home parks should have community storm shelters and a warden to monitor broadcasts throughout the severe storm emergency. If there is no shelter nearby, leave the mobile home park and take cover on low, protected ground.

✓ Tornados are only one of the lethal aspects of a thunderstorm; however, lightning associated with thunderstorms is generally responsible for more deaths each year than tornados.

✓ If you are in an indoor shelter, stay away from electrical appliances while the storm is overhead.

✓ If you are forced to take shelter outdoors, stay away from and lower than high conductive objects such as trees and power poles.

● Take note that flash flooding may also occur. (Post Safety Office)

PFC Toni Stone checks the ear of a stray brought into the Veterinary Clinic. This dog was claimed by its owner on its fifth day at the clinic.

Animal lover thrives in vet job

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Private First Class Toni Swenson Stone had unusual pets when she was growing up, but she said it's because she loves animals.

"I have always loved animals and had an assortment of animals as pets. Besides cats and dogs, my brother and I had a couple of Australian Honey Bears and a four-and-a-half-foot alligator."

Stone's love of animals has taken her into one field she has always wanted to be in — the veterinary field. She's a 91T, animal care specialist.

"I was in a troop support MOS originally, but was caught in a mandatory re-classification. This MOS just recently opened up and I jumped at the opportunity," Stone said.

The Army has taken over all the animal care jobs for the Department of Defense. The change over started in 1979 and was completed Oct. 1, 1983.

Stone's day consists of a variety of different jobs with the animals. "I do immunizations, test for heartworms and intestinal worms, assist in doing physicals, dispense medication and do x-rays. We have about 25 appointments a day, but then there's emergencies, strays brought in or dogs that have bitten someone, so the days can be quite hectic."

The hospital sends Stone the information on people who have been bitten on post and Stone takes care of the forms. Also, when the animal is brought in, she helps test it and quarantines it to see if it's rabid.

"We haven't seen any rabid animals yet, although we have quarantined several to see if they have rabies. Right now we have some wild animals that have been picked up on post; a coyote, a possum and a rooster. There's also been a few deer brought in, unfortunately most of them had been hit by vehicles and had to be put to sleep."

The clinic keeps stray animals and puts them up for adoption, if not claimed. "We keep strays for five working days to see if the owners claim them, then they are put up for adoption, the only payment being for the shots."

Stone says her favorite animals are dogs. "I like big dogs, but I've learned to handle the military working dogs carefully. You can't just treat them any way. You handle them when they want to be handled," the St. Petersburg native said.

She explained that the Veterinary Activities does everything for the military dogs; although for other animals only shots, physicals, tests for heartworms and intestinal worms are done. "If surgery is required, neutering or other care, the owners have to take their animals off post, but we do anything the military dogs need."

Currently, the 25-year-old is planning to go to school and major in veterinary medicine. "I've taken my SAT and am now in the process of taking my CLEP tests." But, when she's not working with animals or studying for school, Stone enjoys ceramics, writing and wood chiseling.

This weekend Stone will be helping the veterinary clinic with a free pet registration for vaccines only from 8 to 11 a.m. at the Veterinary Activities, building 265.

PFC Michael E. Speers

'Old man' finds home

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the story of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade as they undergo the transition from civilians to soldiers. The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and have now completed their 10th week of training.

In a group of people where the average age is 18, a man in his 30s is invariably called the "Old Man."

Among the "Delta Demons," PFC Michael E. Speers, 33, is more than just "Pops." He has been the soldiers' guide to their survival with the drill sergeants. The soldiers come to him with questions about the military life. "Sometimes," commented Speers, "hearing the same questions over and over again gets to me, but I really don't mind."

Speers got his first taste of the military life when he served with the Air Force from 1968 until 1973. Since that time, Speers worked as a plasterer with a construction firm.

According to Speers, he decided to quit his job and join the Army even though he was "making good money on the outside," because he "missed the military." He stated the retirement benefits also helped him to make his decision.

"I wanted some of the excitement and adventure," said Speers, "I did miss it. I really did, and it's surprising to hear me say that.

"Looking toward the future and retirement . . . that had a lot to do with it."

When he re-entered the military, Speers had some difficulty with the doctors. It seems he has a skin condition the doctors said could cause a problem by being in a combat job. "They said my skin condition is not 'conducive' to being in a combat MOS. They also said being in the field for weeks at a time, could possibly cause a 'flair up' and hinder my performance."

Speers, who self-diagnosed his condition as "acne," fought to remain on active duty — and won. He appeared before a physical review board at Fort Gordon, Ga. before returning to Benning for training.

With his return to Benning, Speers spent about three months as a holdover before he joined D—8—2 and started training to wear the crossed rifles of an Infantryman.

D—8—2 will pin on those rifles after going to "AO Eagle" and their final PT test at Benning in two weeks.

Chaplain's Views

Chaplain Herbert B. Strange
67th Maintenance Battalion

It is a biblical truth that man is not put on this earth simply to live for himself. Though we may find a hermit or two here and there, man is for the most part a creature who lives in society. It has been so ever since God told Adam and Eve to "be fruitful and multiply." The teachings of the Law and the Prophets of the Old Testament emphasize the theme of living in society. Six of the Ten Commandments deal with man's relationship with man. The law of hospitality to the stranger, the necessity to care for the widow and the orphan, the proper treatment of the sojourner in the land — all these and more echo the theme.

The teachings of Jesus also focus attention on our living on this planet with others. Oh sure, they may well be "different" from us. We may not even like them very much. But, we must live together; we have no choice. It should be our hope that our life together will be one of harmony and justice and peace — and, ideally, one of love. That hope can only become reality if we are willing to do something about it.

Our proper relationship to our neighbors is dramatically portrayed by Jesus in the Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25-37). In spite of the long-standing mistrust and hatred between the Samaritans and the Jews, when there was an obvious need to be met, this one Samaritan — unlike the pious religious leaders who passed by on the other side of the road — acted to help his brother without regard for who his brother was.

The point is clear, I think. Every person is important. The well-being, the shalom, of every person should be my concern. Particularly in a world like ours, where advances in technology, communication and transportation have drawn us so close together, what happens to any person has its effect on me. The 17th Century English poet John Donne had it right:

> No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; every man is a peece of the Continent, a part of the maine; if a Clod bee washed away by the Sea, Europe is the lesse, as well as if a Promontorie were, as well as if a Mannor of thy friends or of thine own were. Any mans death diminishes me, becaue I am involved in Mankinde. And therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee.

May God give each of us the sensitivity to hear the tolling of the bell, and the courage to go about the task of ministering and healing in our hurting world.

Prayer breakfast

Chaplain (Capt.) Don B. Brown, 1st Battalion, 75th Infantry, Hunter Army Air Force, Fort Stewart, Ga., will be the guest speaker at the annual Prayer Breakfast at 6:30 a.m. on Thursday, Main NCO Club. Chaplain Brown was with the first unit that went into Grenada last October.

The purpose of this annual prayer breakfast is to provide a spiritual focus in a time when our nation and world are facing daily crises. It serves to remind us of our heritage of faith and to equip us for the challenges of the present.

The public is cordially invited. For reservations and more information call 545-2288.

"Growing space"

"Growing Space" is the title of a new course being offered at 9:15 on Sunday mornings in building 2608 (upstairs) off Dixie Road. It is an opportunity for persons to come together and discover ways to grow as an individual or as a family. Come by yourself (married/single) or bring the whole crew. It is a time for discussing, sharing, and learning with each other. How does God get involved in our everyday issues? That's the underlying question! For more information call Chaplain Masteller at 545-1760.

Choir presents program

The LaVoie Manor Chapel Choir will present a special musical program celebrating Black History Month on Sunday, 11 a.m., in the LaVoie Chapel. The public is cordially invited.

Genesis Two

Genesis Two is a program for Catholics' spiritual growth developed by Father Vincent Dwyer O.C.S.O. This program is provided for members of the parish during Lent. The first session will begin Feb. 28, 7-9 p.m., at the Catholic Education Center. The final session will be Tuesday of Holy Week, April 17. The number of participants is limited. Those who are interested in participating in the program, please contact Phil Reilly at the Catholic Education Center, 544-3305. The program is limited to adults.

Reconciliation

Pope John Paul II and the Bishops attending the Synod in Rome designated this year, 1984, as the Year of Reconciliation. To help us understand the meaning of reconciliation and the need for it in our lives, the Sisters from Blessed Trinity Shrine Retreat will conduct a three-session workshop on reconciliation. The session will be held March 5, 12, and 19 at the Catholic Education Center (7-9 p.m.). This is a wonderful opportunity for persons to prepare for Lent. Babysitting will be available. Contact the Catholic Education Center, 544-3305.

Bobby Michaels in concert

Bobby Michaels, internationally known singer and Christian entertainer, will be performing at Fort Benning March 8-11. He will be in concert at the School Brigade Chapel, Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Custer Terrace Family Life Center and Sightseeing Road Chapel. A full schedule will appear in next week's BAYONET.

VA offers scholarships to nursing students

The Veterans Administration is now accepting applications for its Health Professional Scholarship Program which provides support for baccalaureate and master's nursing students on a pay-back-in-service basis.

The VA scholarship provides tuition, educational expenses and a monthly stipend for participants who agree to service a minimum of two years as a full-time registered nurse in one of the VA's 172 medical facilities.

Information about the program is available from the VA Health Professional Scholarship Program, Office of Academic Affairs, DM&S (14N), 810 Vermont Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20420. Requests for an application package may be made to the Scholarship Program Office between February 27 and May 11, 1984. Complete applications must be received by the Scholarship Program Office no later than June 1, 1984.(VA News)

West Point Founder's Day

The West Point Society of Fort Benning and Columbus, Ga., announces the celebration of the 182nd anniversary of the founding of the U.S. Military Academy. All service academy graduates, to include other services and foreign academies, are invited to join the the 1984 Founder's Day Dinner on March 10.

If you are interested and have not received an invitation, please contact Capt. Bangsboll, BFV Division, WGMD, at 544-7116/6225 or 324-3613. The evening's agenda will include dinner, dancing and a speech by Chaplain James D. Ford.

American Music Month

Fort Benning's Music and Theater section of Morale Support Activities Division is celebrating the "Parade of American Music Month" in February with many free musical events.

Mikey's Friends, a top 40 and soul band, will play at 7 p.m. tomorrow in the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. Then on Sunday, the History of Black Music will be presented by Sam West at 2 p.m., also in the KHRC. He will cover the heritage of black music from the work songs blacks brought to America, to the current jazz and soul songs. The show will end with a "Black Heritage Dance" with West spinning records.

The 34th Medical Battalion will host a talent/fashion show in the Community Theater on Tuesday at 7 p.m. and the Columbus Symphony will have a concert in Marshall Auditorium on March 3 at 8 p.m.

Concerned citizens meeting

There will be a meeting of the South Columbus Concerned Citizens Sunday at 3 p.m. at Chapter 7 of the DAV Hall on Matthews Street. A film on self-defense will be shown. Detective Don Copeland of the Columbus Police Department Sex Crimes Unit, will speak on self-defense, specifically against would-be rapists.

Dental appointments

Active duty personnel, their family members and retired military personnel and their family members are encouraged to seek routine dental care at this time. Waiting time for appointments after the examination appointment is minimal. Call for appointments: active duty, call assigned dental clinic; active duty family members, call dental clinic #1, 544-2051; retired military and family members, call Salomon Dental Clinic, 544-3071.

Places to go

Atlanta offers many sites; be sure to see Cyclorama

The most moving and impressive memorial of the battle which sealed the fate of the Confederacy is the Cyclorama of the Battle of Atlanta which occurred on July 22, 1864. It is thrilling as well as awe-striking to see and hear the battle scenes reenacted before your eyes. It is more than a painting; it is a three-dimensional panorama with narration, music and sound effects, so realistic and stirring that you will feel a part of the conflict.

Measuring 50 feet in height, 400 feet in circumference, and weighing over 18,000 pounds, it was painted in 1885-6 by a group of German and Polish artists brought to America for this purpose by William Wehner, owner of the Milwaukee studio were it was set up and completed.

First exhibited in Detroit in 1887, the painting traveled all over the United States before coming to its final resting place in the city whose destruction it commemorates. After several changes in ownership and many locations, the painting was brought to Atlanta in 1891 and exhibited in a building on the north side of Edgewood Avenue, near Piedmont Avenue. It was bought at auction in 1893 by George V. Gress, an Atlanta citizen, who presented it to the city of Atlanta in 1898.

In 1921 the painting was transferred from an old, wooden structure at a location in Grant Park to its present location in the imposing marble building on a hillsite in the central part of the park. In 1936, by means of a WPA grant, the painting was made three-dimensional by the addition of blasted tree stumps, bushes and shrubbery that are shell-torn in effect, broken rails and cross-ties, life-like plaster figures of Confederate and Federal soldiers, and other fragments of war which form the battlefield surrounding the canvas.

In viewing the painting, it is difficult to determine the ending of the real and the beginning of the illusion. The special light and sound effects give the painting a realism which is startling.

The facility was re-opened in 1982 after two years extensive conservation of the painting/diorama and renovation of the building, which now includes a revolving seating platform.

The Cyclorama building also houses the "Texas," a railroad engine which, with another Georgia state railroad engine the "General," featured in the famous chase known as the Andrews raid on April 12, 1862.

A new museum is under design and development, which will be incorporated into future programs at the facility.

Location: Grant Park, in southeast Atlanta, 800 Cherokee Ave. S.E., Atlanta, Georgia 30315

Phone: 404/624-1071

Hours: 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. • Last tour begins 4:40 p.m. Open 7 days a week

The Cyclorama of the Battle of Atlanta is owned by the City of Atlanta and operated by the Department of Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs, Carolyn Boyd Hatcher, commissioner.

Cutting lumber differently cuts the Army's cost in half

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sometimes getting the Fort Benning SPIRIT means looking at one thing and seeing two. That is what Braxton B. Ferguson, carpenter, The Audio Visual Support Center did and he saved Fort Benning more than $2,700.

TASC prepares the charts and training aids that support the Infantry Center's mission to train tomorrow's soldier. Each year, according to a supervisor in the Devices and Models section, Lee R. Thomason, TASC makes more than 7,000 running feet of lip molding to support the charts.

The old molding required a long-drawn out process that started with a piece of lumber measuring 2 inches by 2 inches by 16 feet. Each piece of lumber cost, according to Thomason, $7.68.

TASC would buy the lumber as it was needed, normally in lots of 125 pieces each. Their usual requirement would cost the Army $960 each time a purchase was made.

The piece of wood was cut, shaped, routed and finally fitted together. The cost of this method was more than $4,000 each year.

What Ferguson did was look at the procedure and ask why couldn't they start with a piece of lumber that was four inches wide and cut it in half? By cutting the wood in half, TASC needed to purchase only 62 pieces, at a cost of $6.40 a piece. While the labor cost remained constant the material cost was almost cut in half.

This procedure saved labor and lumber, besides making the lip molding lighter. According to Thomason, the customers seem to be happy with the new molding and TASC saves more than $2,700.

Civilian employee volunteers as 'Big Brother'

Walter Jones

Bill Walton

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"What I like most about my job is the daily challenge of new projects and dealing with different people," said Walter Jones, a planner/estimator in the Estimation and Facilities Inspection Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing (DEH).

Jones is responsible for the cost, time and manpower estimates on buildings, grounds and road repair work orders that are submitted to DEH.

"Our branch also makes estimates on minor new construction on post," he added.

He is experienced in his field having worked in the civil service at Fort Benning for 18 years and has spent his entire career working in the various branches of DEH. He started as a bricklayer in the masonary shop of Preventive Maintenance Branch. He was promoted to his present position in 1977.

Jones graduated from Columbus' Spencer High School and attended Albany State College, Albany, Ga., for three years. He is a graduate of several career-oriented schools including, Engineering Performance Standards for Public Works Maintenance, Philadelphia, Pa., Integrated Facilities System for Planners/Estimators, Fort Lee, Va., and Repair of Pavement and Railroads, Vicksburg, Miss.

He is a member of the Rising Star Masons. His hobbies include gardening and light construction such as brick mail boxes, concrete patios and driveways.

Much of his spare time is spent working as volunteer with the Columbus Family and Childrens Service in their "Big Brother" program. This program is designed to help boys ages 5-18.

"It is a family project as my wife Betty also participates in it," he said. "We try to show these young fellows what a good family life can mean. We have the boys spend weekends with us, attend church and other family functions. I am really proud of the way some of the ones that I have helped have turned out. Some have gone into military service and some are attending college."

Jones is also an avid football fan, particularly where the University of Georgia is concerned. His son Daryll has played cornerback for Georgia for the past two seasons and the Jones family has attended all the Georgia games. He isn't sure which team he will be rooting for next year because Daryll has been drafted by the USFL Jacksonville Bulls and is waiting on the NFL draft before he makes a decision.

axpayers who made charitable contributions ing 1983 and do not itemize deductions will be e to deduct a portion of the contributions on their 3 federal income tax returns, the Internal venue Service said.

he charitable contribution for non-itemizers is a vision in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1. For 1983, non-itemizing taxpayers (other than rried taxpayers filing separately) can deduct 25 cent of the first $100 of charitable contributions m their adjusted gross income up to a maximum luction of $25, the IRS said. If a taxpayer is rried filing separately, the maximum deduction 12.50 (24 percent of the first $50).

1984, the 25 percent limitation applies to the t $300 ($150 if married filing separately) of ritable contributions, with a maximum deduc- of $75 ($37.50 if married filing separately). For 5, the limit rises to 50 percent with no maximum, for 1986, the charitable deduction increases to percent with no maximum deduction. In all as, the deduction is limited, however, to 50 cent of the adjusted gross income of the payer. After 1986, a taxpayer must itemize uctions to claim charitable contributions

Marshal's Viewpoint

Is drug involvement really worth the price?

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

Most people have heard "spiels" on drug use and abuse. Unfortunately, few actually listen to what is said concerning the medical and legal consequences of drug abuse.

When the subject of drugs is discussed, you may hear a response, such as, "I'll never get caught," or "It's not harmful to my health." You may have even said it to yourself. The sad reality is that many of the same people are saying, "I don't believe I got busted." The pusher is only looking for easy money, he doesn't care about the after effects.

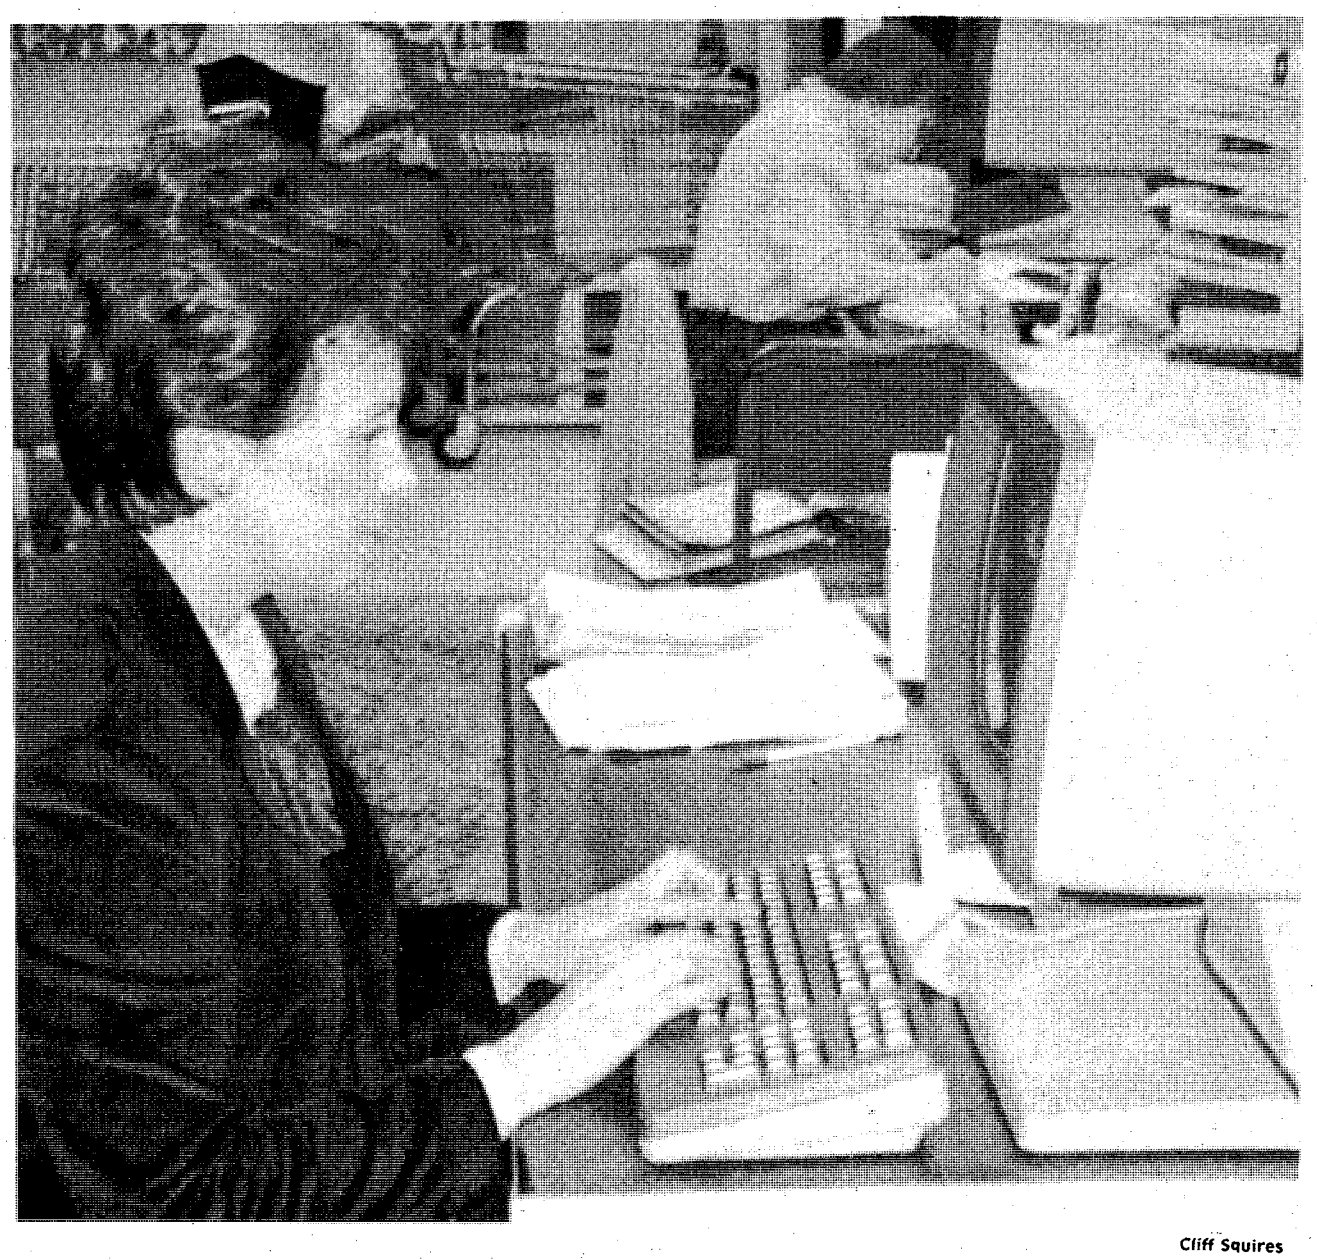
Illegal involvement with drugs or controlled substances like marijuana will eventually "catch up" with the user. The use, possession, or sale of amphetamine, cocaine, PCP, marijuana or any controlled substance is in violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and civilian law.

The outcome of apprehension could be anything from an Article 15 to a court-martial conviction resulting in confinement at hard labor for up to five years and a dishonorable discharge. A court-martial sentence is a federal conviction which will stay with an individual for the rest of his/her life. If apprehended and convicted by civilian authorities, the consequences may be even more severe!

The drug suppression effort here at Fort Benning and the surrounding area is a 24-hour operation, and you can be a part of it. Your contribution in assisting this effort can be made by calling the military police at 545-5222, the Crime Stop Hotline at 545-2222 or the civilian authorities at 911 and report (anonymously if you wish) any illegal drug use of which you may be aware.

JACS

Finance office installs time-saving computer equipment



Cliff Squires

Patricia Craft feeds information into the computer at the Military Pay Section of the Finance and Accounting Office.

By John Thompson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Its name is JACS — JUMPS automated coding system. "This system is being installed this week at building 85 on main post and Harmony Church," according to Capt. Victoria Nathaniel, executive officer of the Finance and Accounting Division, building 89.

"The system is being introduced to simplify procedures in the military pay section of Finance and Accounting." Nathaniel added, "JACS will allow military pay employees to enter pay change data immediately from the source document onto the local computer data base and transceive daily, directly to the JUMPS-Army computer at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind."

Nathaniel continued, "The speed and efficiency of the system will allow faster processing of pay changes and any pay problems to be settled up to three days before the administrative deadline date." This means soldiers with pay problems will have an increased likelihood of having their difficulties settled within the same pay period, rather than having to wait until the following month.

Trainers from the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center will be training the military pay clerks on main post from Feb. 27 until March 9 and at Harmony Church from March 12 until March 23.

Nathaniel says, "This training will cause a limited amount of pay processing," and she warns that, "due to the shorthandedness of the pay staff, soldiers with a pay problem should have their respective Unit Personel Administration Center (PAC) supervisors fill out a pay inquiry DA Form 2142. The pay inquiry should be sent to finance, where the form will be screened. If the screening panel deems a soldier's problem a serious and valid one, the PAC will be informed to the time of the soldier's appointment." This inquiry system will continue after the training is discontinued and the procedural change to USAIC regulation 37-22 will be forthcoming.

STAY WHERE THE PROMOTIONS ARE.

If you're in a shortage MOS and considering a move, think twice. Your best chance for fast promotion could be to stay right where you are.

With the Army's new policy of only promoting E-4s and E-5s in MOSs where vacancies exist, you'll want to study the MOS status roster carefully with your reenlistment NCO.

Right now, some of the best promotion opportunities are in the combat arms. There are more openings there because not everybody can make the team. The physical and mental requirements are tough because that's what it takes to be a leader.

So if you're currently serving with one of the combat arms, you're in the right place at the right time. Your chances for advancement couldn't be better. And if you're in an overstrength MOS and getting itchy, there's no better time to consider switching into the combat arms.

Whatever you decide, we want you to do what's best for you. Because we need you in the Army. See your reenlistment NCO today.

Fluoride miraculously prevents caries in teeth

The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Health Month. It is the fourth in a series of seven on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

Forty years ago, the city council of Newburgh, N.Y., made a decision that has subsequently affected the dental health of millions of Americans in other cities and states. With the official approval of the New York State Department of Health, Newburgh decided to adjust the level of fluoride in its water supply to one part per million.

The nearby city of Kingston agreed to serve as a control city in the study and to continue using its fluoride-deficient water. Ten years later, the children of Newburgh had about 60 percent fewer cavities than the children at Kingston.

Hundreds of scientific papers have now been written about the effects of fluoride on dental health. But the best proof that fluoride works can be found in the mouths of American children.

According to a 1979-80 study done by the National Caries Program of the National Institute of Dental Research, tooth decay among children aged 5 to 17 has decreased by about 32 percent in the last eight years. Much of the credit for this improvement in dental health belongs to fluoride.

Exactly how fluoride works is still under investigation, but recent research indicates that fluoride acts in various ways to help prevent decay. It unites with the surfaces of the teeth, making them harder. It interferes with bacteria growth on teeth. Last, but not least, it somehow helps to reverse the earliest stages of tooth decay, those visible only under the microscope.

The best way for people to get the fluoride they need for good dental health is by drinking water that contains the right amount of fluoride. In some communities, the water supply already contains enough fluoride. In others, the amount of fluoride can be adjusted until the correct level is reached, about one part per million.

Community water fluoridation is inexpensive and highly effective. All people have to do to enjoy its benefits is to drink the water they need; no one is excluded. For as little as 20 cents per person per year, children can have up to 65 percent fewer cavities; 20 percent of the teenagers can be free from teeth decay; and adults can have 45 percent to 50 percent fewer decayed, missing or filled teeth. Each dollar spent on fluoridation can save as much as $50 on dental bills.

In communities in which the water supply is not fluoridated or in which there is no central water supply, dentists and physicians may prescribe fluoride tablets or drops for children to take daily, or fluoride may be added to the school water supply. Chilren may also benefit from weekly fluoride mouthrinse programs at schools or the application of fluoride gels in the dental office.

Everyone should use dental care products containing fluoride at home. Use a fluoride toothpaste when brushing your teeth and rinse daily with a nonprescription fluoride mouthrinse. Toothpastes and mouthrinses with the seal of the American Dental Association's Council on Dental Therapeutics on the carton, tube or bottle have been proved effective in reducing tooth decay.

Using fluoride helps everyone's dental health. Just ask the citizens of Newburgh, N.Y. Forty years ago, they decided to add fluoride to the water supply . . . and they're sti doing it. Today, over 230 million pe ple throughout the world have fo lowed their example.(DENTAC)

DENTAC visits White School

The Fort Benning Dental Activity held a Dental Health Fair at Edward A. White elementary school last week. The children were given a dental screening exam by a dentist and a brush-on flouride application supervised by dental personnel.

The Dental Health Fair was taken into the schools on post because of National Children's Dental Health Month designated for the month of February. The Fort Benning Schools worked in cooperation with DENTAC for the fair.

Activities set up for the children included a film, "Dudley the Dragon," showing the way to brush teeth, a table of true/false questions on dental care, a skull showing the teeth, the dental exam and the flouride application.(USAIC PAO).

CIVILIAN LIFE MADE $1,660 EASIER

If you've made up your mind to go back to civilian life, there's a way to make the financi transition easier.

Join your local Army Reserve part-time. It can really pay off for you. For instance, a forma E-4 with 3 years experience now makes over $1,660 a year. Not bad for a weekend a mon and two weeks annual training.

And don't forget the PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, retirement points and all th other Army Reserve benefits.

Look into it. Contact your in-service recruiter listed below, or your unit reenlistment NCO

Crime doesn't pay

PFC Dale W. Spicer, C Battery, 2d Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of two specifications of absence without leave. He was AWOL Dec. 14-17, 1983, and Jan. 4-7, 1984. He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $397 for one month, and to be confined at hard labor for 45 days.

PFC Robert Rein, Company C, 43d Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was convicted of absence without leave. Rein was AWOL from Sept. 12 until Nov. 8, 1983. He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $397 pay per month for three months, and to be confined at hard labor for 90 days.

Private Kenneth S. Chmielewski, 988th Military Police Company, Military Police Activity, was convicted of larceny, wrongful appropriation and unlawful entry. Chmielewski took a government vehicle for personal use, unlawfully gained entry to Impoundment Lot #4 by climbing over the security fence, and while there, stole two motorcycle batteries. He was sentenced to forfeit $200 pay per month for one month, to be confined at hard labor for 30 days, and to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge.

Pvt. 2 Steven L. Dach, Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of wrongful appropriation of an automobile. Dach stole a check from his roommate, forged it, and cashed it at the Main PX. On another occasion, he failed to return an automobile he was test-driving to the seller for two days. He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $397 pay per month for three months, to be confined at hard labor for three months, and to receive a bad conduct discharge.

Private David J. DeCredico, A Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of possession and distribution of marijuana. On Dec. 1, 1983, he purchased 2.38 grams of marijuana for $20 from a dealer. He was sentenced to forfeit $300 pay per month for three months, to be confined at hard labor for two months, and to receive a bad conduct discharge.

Private First Class Allen J. Hooper, C Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of possession and distribution of 10.34 grams of marijuana. He sold the marijuana for $60 to an undercover agent of the Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team. He was sentenced to be reduced to E1, to forfeit $300 per month for a period of three months, to be confined at hard labor for three months and to receive a bad conduct discharge.

Cub Scouts race to derby victory

Post Cub Scout Pack 27 recently held its Pinewood Derby. Cub Scouts and their parents worked together in preceding weeks to build custom-made race cars using national weight and size specifications. The miniature car races were enjoyed by the Scouts, their families and friends.

First place den winners were Daniel Coyle, Russell Blankenbeckler, Stephen Bailey, Donald Longhorne, Shannon Cocker and Chucko Hinton. Second place den winners were John Hughes, Scott Miller, Xavier Davis, Carlos Velez, Jason Crowder and Michael Hitchcock. Third place den winners were Luke Dalzell, John Dugan, Ernest Robinson, Peter Roundsville, Jeremy Glasser and Albert Wiley.

First place pack winner was Chucko Hinton, a Webelo, who will represent Pack 27 at the Scout District Pinewood Derby. Second place pack winner was Donald Longhorne and third place winner was Carlos Velez, both of Den 5. (USAIC PAO).

VA Q&A

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — My husband was covered under Veterans' Group Life Insurance when he died. An attorney from a company where he owed money said they would attach the proceeds of the insurance to pay the bill. Can they do this?

A — No. Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and Veterans' Group Life Insurance Proceeds are not assignable, nor are payments to beneficiaries subject to claims of creditors of the insured or beneficiary.

Q — Can a veteran draw compensation even though his or her disabilities are service-connected but rated as non-compensable?

A — Yes. When a veteran has two or more non-compensable service connected disabilities that are permanent and clearly interfere with normal employability, a 10-percent rating may be assigned.

FEGLI program amended

Effective Dec. 8, 1983, the Office of Personnel Management amended FEGLI program regulations to provide that waivers of life insurance are automatically cancelled when a separated employee returns to federal service after a break in service of at least 180 days.

Employees who returned to federal service between April 1, 1981 and Dec. 8, 1983, with a break in service of at least 180 days have until close of business March 7, 1984, to elect coverage. Eligible employees may contact Technical Services Branch, 545-2470 for information.

Buy back annual leave

An employee may use sick and/or annual leave during a period of absence due to an on-the-job injury or illness. If his/her claim for compensation is approved by the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs (OWCP), he/she may buy back all or part of the leave used and have it reinstated to his/her account.

When the employee buys back leave, the records must be reconstructed on a pay period basis as of the time the leave was used to reflect the change from paid leave status to leave without pay and to recredit the annual and/or sick leave. In some cases when such adjustments involve prior leave years, unless the employee is counseled, he or she could buy back annual leave which immediately becomes subject to forfeiture.

Applicable employees who need guidance concerning buying back of leave may contact Gayle Pollock, 545-1421.

Army suggestion program

You are one of the most importamnt parts of the Army Suggestion Program. If you think methods or procedures can be simplified, working conditions improved, the likelihood of accidents reduced, morale improved, or jobs can be accomplished in a more efficient manner, don't just think about it and then forget it. Or don't think, why bother, it probably wouldn't get approved anyway. Take a few minutes, write your ideas down. Not only could your suggestion improve the above mentioned areas and save tax dollars, it could also result in a monetary award. A suggestion may be submitted by one or more eligible persons, civilian or military, by completing DA Form 1045 and sending it to the Civilian Personnel Office. For further information call Maxine Wing, 545-4483.

Training unit sponsors Family Day

By James Anticol
1st ITB

Family Day was conducted at Company C, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, last Saturday. The main purpose of Family Day is to educate the soldier's family and friends about what it is to be an Infantry soldier, and the challenges the modern soldier faces from day to day. The event further serves to enhance the image of the U.S. Army, and is a morale and esprit builder.

This social gathering is held at the soldier's midpoint in training, generally in the sixth or seventh week, and helps to keep his motivation high for the remaining six to seven weeks of training.

Family Day kicked off with orientation remarks by Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Cornell Fuller. As soon as this orientation was over, a tour of the company area was conducted by the company commander, Capt. Terrence Moran, and drill sergeants to show family and friends the modern training and living facilities, and further orient them on the environment and training of the Infantry soldier.

Part of Family Day included a display of the many types of weapons with which the soldiers have trained. After these festivities, there was a drill and ceremony competition between platoons with third platoon coming out victorious. They were awarded the Drill and Ceremony Platoon Plaque. Second platoon edged out third platoon for the honor platoon award.

Upon completion of the awards ceremony, everyone was invited to a luncheon in the battalion dining facility where family and friends had an excellent opportunity to socialize and ask further questions of the soldier's training cadre. After the luncheon, the soldiers spent the rest of the day with their family and friends. Overnight passes were then given to deserving soldiers to spend more time with their loved ones.

Family Day ended on Sunday with church services for all desiring to attend.

IRS will do it for you

Taxpayers who can file Form 1040A or Form 1040EZ may choose to have the IRS compute their taxes, regardless of the amount of adjusted gross income, the IRS says. The same tax computation service is offered to taxpayers who file Form 1040 whose adjusted gross income is not more than $50,000, and who do not itemize deductions or use income averaging.

To qualify for IRS computations of the tax, income must be from wages, salaries, tips, dividends, interest, pensions or annuities.

All the taxpayer has to do is complete limited portions of the return, attach all W-2 earnings statements, and sign and mail the return by April 16, 1984. The IRS will compute the tax, complete the return and forward any refund due. If additional tax is due, the IRS will bill the taxpayer and no interest or late payment penalty will be charged if the bill is paid within 30 days or by April 16, whichever date is later.

The tax return instructions explain which sections of the return to complete so the IRS can compute the tax. (AFPS)

Satellites bring TV, radio to soldiers overseas

Culture shock is an overseas assignment where they don't speak English and there isn't any American television or radio. You can't get the evening news, you miss your favorite playoff game and you never find out what happened with Luke and Laura on "General Hospital."

That's culture shock, but relax. Chances are you'll see your favorite TV shows and listen to your favorite rock or country music through Armed Forces Radio and Television Service (AFRTS). Whether you're assigned to Europe, Korea or Panama, there is probably an Army radio and television network, such as American Forces Network, Europe or American Forces Korea Network, helping to keep you informed.

Uncle Sam thinks your morale is important and, since World War II, has broadcast news, entertainment and command information to millions of soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines stationed around the world.

Mini-TV

Even soldiers stationed in the most isolated sites can watch American TV, 42 hours of it a week on a video tape cassette player in the dayroom. There are 140 remote sites around the world where Army soldiers watch a weekly package of video tapes. At least one major sporting event, a weekly news summary and even "60 Minutes" is included.

An artilleryman in Erzurum, Turkey, a border patrol guard in Hof, West Germany, and an observer with the peacekeeping force in Sharm el Shaykh, the Sinai, Egypt, can keep up with the news and their favorite TV shows through the mini-TV system.

Watching a television broadcast from an AFRTS station is almost like watching TV in the States. But there are no commercials, only command information. That's part of the deal Department of Defense has with the television industry. Uncle Sam doesn't make a profit from TV programs, therefore gets a bargain from the owners. For example, one episode of "Magnum P.I." or "Hill Street Blues" costs Uncle Sam about $1,300 for the broadcast rights. A TV station in Los Angeles could pay up to $120,000 for the same episode.

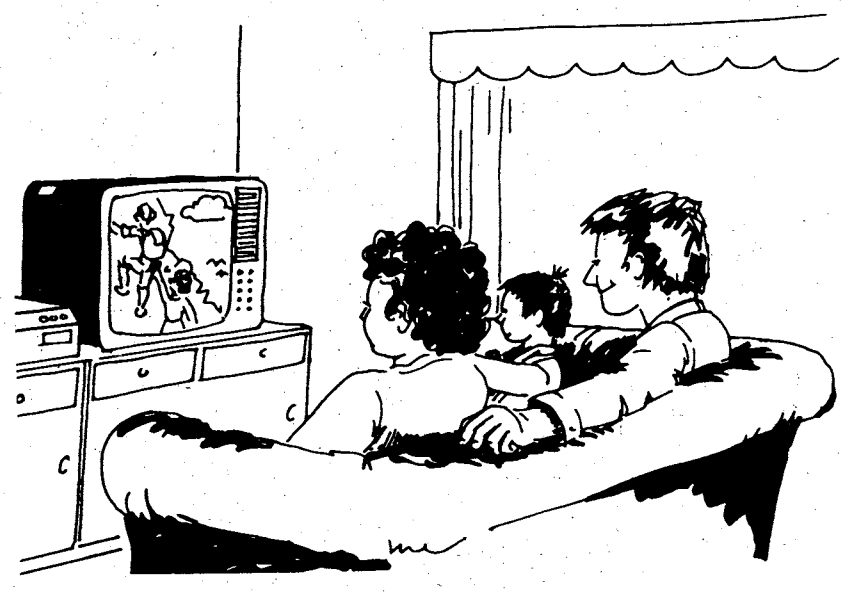
Some restricted shows

If you are stationed in Korea or Panama, the programs sometimes may seem like old reruns, repeats or out-of-date shows. The current year of a popular TV series may be restricted from being aired on an AFRTS station because the distributor or producer hopes to sell the TV series to Korean or Panamanian civilian television networks. Prior broadcast of a TV program by AFRTS may cause the host country government to put more restrictions on the American TV station.

In Italy and Germany, the problem is avoided by using very low power transmitters and highly efficient directional antennas that direct AFRTS broadcasts to specific locations where U.S. military families live. This is why one U.S. military family may have great TV reception, but another military family living a block away may not be able to get the signal at all.

Satellites, live TV

One recent improvement to the Armed Forces Radio and Television service was the introduction of worldwide satellite service. This allows American networks around the world to receive 24-hour-a-day live transmission of news, sports and public affairs programs. Football, baseball games and special events such as the President's State of the Union message can be broadcast "live" or taped for broadcast during prime viewing hours. Panama has been receiving a satellite signal since 1979, but Korea just started receiving a 24-hour-a-day signal in Octoer 1983.



Full-time satellite service is also planned for Italy and Germany, but because of surveys and governmental negotiations, it may be this summer before Germany gets its own satellite service and January 1985 before Italy gets 24-hour service. (Soldiers Scene)

OWC offers scholarships

The Officer's Wives Club is offering $9,000 in scholarships for the 1984-85 school year to its members and their family members.

For eligibility, OWC membership must have been held prior to Jan. 1, 1984, in any military Officer's Wives Club.

There will be two $500 adult member scholarships for graduate or undergraduate studies offered; and two $500 Vo-Tech scholarships and seven $1,000 college/university scholarships for graduating high school seniors.

The most important word for scholarship program eligibility is MERIT. The scholarship committee is looking for well-rounded applicants for all three types of scholarships. Although the grade point average is very important, heavy emphasis is also placed on community involvement, extra-curriculr activities, after school employment, and the number of moves made by a family because of military commitments.

Application packets are available at all OWC functions, at the OWC activity building from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Thursday, or from Mrs. Robert Lenz, 687-1742. Deadline for submitting application packets is April 9, 1984.

Special pet registrations

A special pet vaccination and registration clinic will be held tomorrow at Veterinary Services in building 265, located on 10th Division Road. The clinic will run from 8 until 11 a.m. and only pet registrations with accompaning required immunizations will be done at this time. No other services will be available.

PWOC members visit Stewart Home

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

"We take care of people who fall in-between the cracks," explains Sarah Stewart of her Stewart Community Home in Columbus. The residents are those less fortunate people who, for various reasons, do not qualify for existing governmental programs.

Resident income cannot nearly meet monthly operational costs, so the Home is dependent on donations from churches, organizations, business firms and individuals. The Protestant Women of the Chapel at Fort Benning is one of those groups that reach out to help, not only financially, but with time and friendship.

This past Monday, they went to the Home laden with food and gifts for a Valentine luncheon/party. As they ate, sang and talked together, it was evident that the giving was not a one-way street, for the residents gave more than an equal amount of joy and delight to their PWOC hostesses.

Some of the PWOC women, like Tricia Sowell, who sparked the group's interest in the Home, are regular visitors and know most of the residents by name.

Sarah Stewart, the founder and guiding light of Stewart Home since 1976, is undaunted in her enthusiasm, though it has been a rocky up-hill financial struggle. With 32 persons living in the two houses that comprise the complex, a regular staff is required.

Many of these are volunteers as well as paid workers who go beyond their wage hours and give additional volunteer service hours. Students at Meadows College and persons in the Retired Senior Employment Program also are part of the staff.

Mrs. Stewart was recently chosen by WTVM-TV as one of the nominees for the Jefferson Award given to "special persons" in the Columbus area. She quickly points out, however, that her efforts would not have succeeded if she had not received the support of so many volunteers and the financial help of groups and individuals. She said this past year has seen a growing interest on the part of the business community.

JoAnne Mercer

Shirley Mull chats with home resident.

Over the years the ages of the residents have ranged from as young as 18 to as old as 94. Yet, all feel and respond to the warmth of Mrs. Stewart's love and concern. One of them expressed it so well at the party when he came up and hugged her. "What did I do today, Billy?" she asked. "I don't know," he replied, "you're just lovable!"

If you would like more information about the Stewart Community Home, please contact them at 327-2707 or call the TIC Chapel Center at 545-2050.

Hughes explains OWC festival, designed to please everyone

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the success of the first Infantry Marathon, the Officers Wives Club has decided to sponsor a "Festival of Running" April 28.

"The OWC came to me last year about this time and asked if I would help them organize a fun run if they would sponsor it," stated Bill Hughes, MEDDAC runner. "I agreed, so about the first of this year they opted to have one and they asked me for some ideas.

"The idea for the event comes from an annual Hawaiian event," explained Hughes.

"I was stationed in Hawaii for four years. They conduct an annual 40-mile relay consisting of 10 people per team to raise money for the Honolulu Marathon," stated Hughes. "I proposed to the OWC that a combination of fun runs and relays may be a good idea. The whole philosophy is to offer something for everyone."

Hughes idea was two-fold.

First, offer fun runs of one, three and five miles. He suggested that the age brackets in these races be lowered and limited to only two or three years difference. By doing this, the runs would appeal to more young runners and give more people an opportunity to receive an award.

"The idea for the event comes from an annual Hawaiian event. The whole idea is to offer something for everyone."

The other part of his suggestion was to conduct a 30-mile relay with six people per team running five miles each. He suggested it should be divided into three categories; elite, military and open. Within each category, have three sub-groups consisting of all men teams, all women teams and mixed teams of three men and three women.

"The OWC liked my ideas and that is basically what will take place April 28," explained Hughes. "We hope to make this an all-day event. The type of thing an entire family could compete in. There will be concessions avaiable to make the atmosphere more conducive to an afternoon picnic."

Hughes would also like to see this become an annual event.

"We have designed this program in a manner that we hope people will look forward to each year," concluded Hughes. "Running helps to promote a positive self-image and a positive mental attitude."

Spencer heads for Macon in search of regional title

Richard Russell

Ed Hall (24) slams one during Spencer's 65-62 win over Hardaway in the finals of the city tournament. Spencer is now 11-0 and will play SW-Macon tonight in the first round of the 2-AAAA Region playoffs in Macon.

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Georgia AAAA Baketball Tournament continues this weekend at several different locations around the state. In the 2-AAAA Region playoffs in Macon, Ga., the Spencer Greenwave hope to keep their string of eleven consectutive victories alive when they tip-off tonight against SW-Macon.

Spencer earned the number one 2-AAAA sub-regional seed Saturday night when they defeated Hardaway High in the finals of the city tournament 65-62.

"Coach (Speedy) Gilstrap gets fired up for every game," stated Alex Freeman, Spencer's center. "I know we have the talent to make it to the state finals."

According to Gilstrap, the team that wins the 2-AAAA region has a history of doing well in the state tournament.

"The team that wins our region has made a good showing in the state tournament the last couple of years," stated the coach. "It has been quite a number of years since a Columbus team has advanced above the regionals. We hope to change that this year.

"Spencer has been playing their best basketball of the season lately. They for those wins could not have come at a better time," according to Gilstrap.

"This is the time of year you want to be playing your best basketball. One loss and your season is over so you have to play your best everytime out," commented Gilstrap.

Spencer's opponent tonight will be SW-Macon in the evening's first game. SW-Macon finished second in their sub-region tournament. The second game will pit Hardaway, Columbus' runner-up, against NE-Macon, the top seed.

"NE-Macon will have a big advantage playing on their home floor," added Gilstrap. "The regional tournament rotates each year between Columbus and Macon. We have done well on the road this season and we hope it will continue."

Even though NE-Macon would have to be considered the favorite, Freeman says his teammates are taking each game one at a time.

"Coach Gilstrap has taught us to take each game as it comes and not to look ahead," stated the son of Benning's John Freeman. "Every game we play from here on out will be tough. We have to take each opponent as they come."

The winners of tonight's games will meet in the finals tomorrow night to Region in Atlanta at the state championship.

For Freeman, and three other Fort Benning family members on Spencer's roster, the trip to Atlanta is so close yet so far.

The first two rounds of the post basketball championship have not been good to teams coming from Main Post. Only one team from Main Post, MEDDAC, the two-time defending post champions, remains in the winner's bracket as of Thursday morning.

The units dominating play thus far has been the training brigades, 1st and 2nd ITB. They are two of the squads in the final four of the winner's bracket.

The final member in the winner's bracket is the A Battery, 2-10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade.

The initial field of 15 teams was cut to just 11 after two days of action. Those 11 will be cut to six by the end of tonight's games.

Three games are on tap tonight, two at Briant Wells Fieldhouse and one at Audie Murphy Gym. The finals are scheduled for Wednesday evening beginning at 5:30 at BWFH.

Post family members battle for divisional crowns

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Youth Activities' basketball leagues are in the midst of their double elimination basketball tournaments. Each of the three leagues is conducting its own separate tournament to crown its champion.

A total of eleven teams, more than 100 Benning family members, are vying for the three championships.

The regular season determined how the teams would be seeded during the tournaments. Here are the results after the first two rounds of each of the tournaments:

Termite Division

The Golden Eagles have been the surprise team through Tuesday night's first two rounds. They earned a right to play in the finals with two straight victories.

They first defeated the Golden Warriors 12-4 in the opening game of the tournament, led by Dwight Toney and Jalacy Hawkins, who accounted for all of the Eagles scoring with six points a piece. The Eagles advanced to the second round to meet the first place Lakers.

The Eagles came away victorious in overtime 13-11. Toney provided the winning margin with the extra period's only scoring. He finished the game with five points, one point behind Hawkins who took game high honors with six.

Golden Eagles (12) — Toney 6, Hawkins 6.
Golden Warriors (4) — Thomas 4.

Golden Eagles (13) — Hawkins 6, Toney 5, R. Taylor 2.
Lakers (11) — White 4, Day 3, Saver 2, Dumas 2.

Pee Wee Division

The two games in this division matched teams of equal records during the regular season against one another. The Hawks got 10 points from Johnathan McNeil enroute to a 21-16 win over the Blazers. Both teams ended the regular season with identical 1-7 records. The Blazers were led by Herman Johnson who scored 12 points in a losing effort.

The other game pitted the 5-2 Lakers against the 5-2 Nuggets. Led by Edwardo Smith's 16 points, the Lakers knocked the Nuggets into the loser's bracket with a 25-17 victory.

Hawks (21) — McNeil 10, Leonard 5, Profitt 4, Hitchcock 2.
Blazers (16) — Johnson 12, Nix 4.

Lakers (25) — Smith 16, Causell 4, Branch 2, Lorick 2, Velez 1.
Nuggets (17) — Wardlaw 11, Sharr 3, Dumas 3.

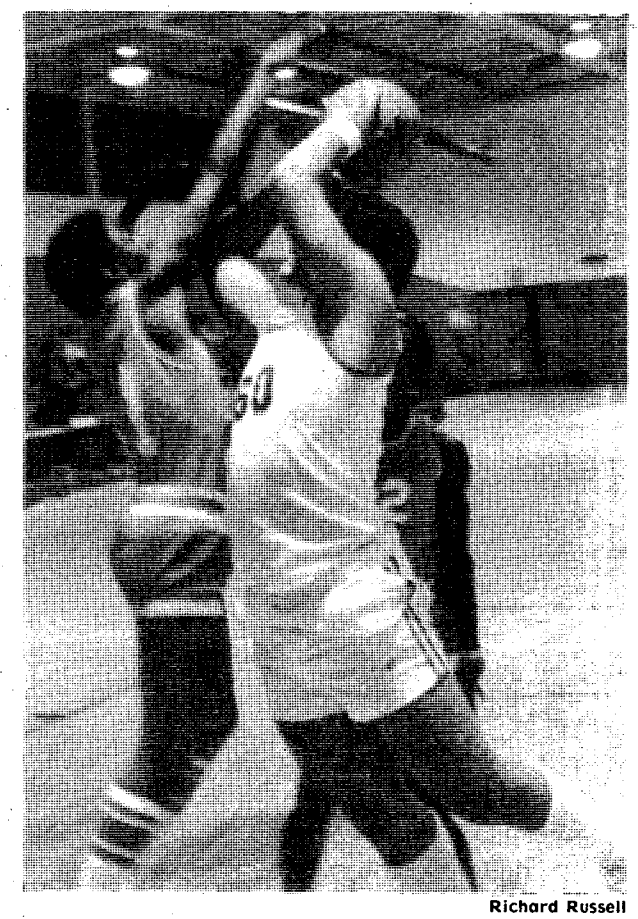
Junior Division

The Spurs came from behind twice to gain a birth in the finals of the Junior Division tournament. They got 21 points from both Logo and Kevin Price to defeat the Rockets 64-60 in overtime in the tourney's opener.

The Warriors were the Spurs' next victim in the second round. Logo paved the way again, this time scoring 22 points in a 32-31 victory.

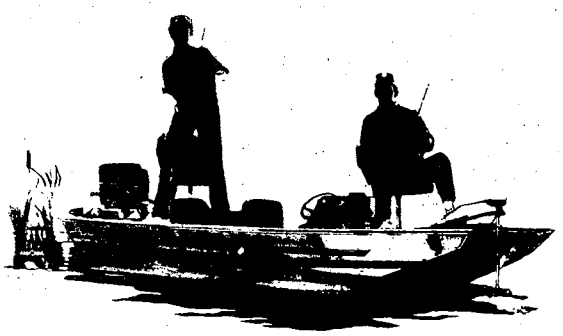
Spurs (64) — Logo 21, Price 21, Spitalnick 12, Cottingham 6, Cofield 4.
Rockets (60) — Williams 23, Hodge 20, Jackson 9, Sienicki 6, Dumas 2.

Spurs (32) — Logo 22, Price 4, Spitalnick 2, Cottingham 2, Cofield 2.
Warriors (31) — Harris 10, Cline 9, Flowers 4, Brown 4, Johnson 2, Smith 2.



Richard Russell

Ricky Logo (60) goes up strong to the hoop in the Spurs' 32-31 victory over the Warriors.



Goble reels in first place at Lake George

By William Courington
Correspondent

The BASS Club of Fort Benning held its February tournament last weekend at Lake Walter F. George.

Willie Goble took first place for the second month in a row. His total weight was 26 pounds and seven ounces for eight fish, the club's limit per tournament.

Second place was taken by Dennis Bennett with 22 pounds and three ounces for eight fish. Ben McQuire took third place with a total of 10 pounds seven ounces.

The big fish honor went to Dee Stafford with a seven pound eight ounce bass.

"I would like to say that with careful calculations and great skill I searched out that lunker," stated Stafford. "But the truth is that it was sheer luck."

Lake Seminole will be the site for the next fishoff. It will be a two-day tourney scheduled for March 17-18. The drawing for this fishoff will be March 13.

The next club meeting is scheduled for Tuesday night at 7:30 in building 2068. All active duty and retired military, their family members and Department of the Army civilians are eligible for membership.

Anyone interested in joining the club should contact Dee Stafford at 545-1788/687-1714 or Willie Lindsey at 545-2017/687-5264.

James Garner's 'Tank' rolls into Fort Benning

Special showings of the movie "Tank," starring James Garner and Shirley Jones, will be held at Fort Benning March 13-14.

The showings have been arranged by Irwin Yablans of Lorimar Productions, Culver City, Calif., as a means of expressing appreciation for cooperation and support provided by Fort Benning during the filming. Yablans produced the movie and it was directed by Marvin Chomsky.

The first showing at the Main Post Theater, starting at 6 p.m., March 13, will be for guests invited by Lorimar/Universal Pictures only.

Showings for military personnel and their family members are scheduled as follows:

March 13 - Main Post Theater, 8:30 p.m., and Kelley Hill Theater, 6 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

March 14 - Main Post and Sand Hill Theaters, 6 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

Admission to the special showings will be free, on a first-come, first-served basis. The maximum patron capacity allowable will not be exceeded due to fire regulations.

Several soldiers and civilian employees at Fort Benning have "bit" parts in the movie and several hundred were cast as extras. Lorimar Productions spent more than a month here filming scenes for the movie before moving to Atlanta to complete it last year.

For the filming of "Tank," parts of Fort Benning became "Fort Clemmons," home of the fictitious 114th Infantry Division. Garner plays the hero, CSM Zack Carey, a career NCO who has collected spare parts from old tanks and built his own World War II Sherman tank.

He uses the tank to rescue his son, played by C. Thomas Howell, after he is arrested and confined to a prison farm on a phoney drug charge by the local sheriff of "Clemmonsville," a rural southern town.

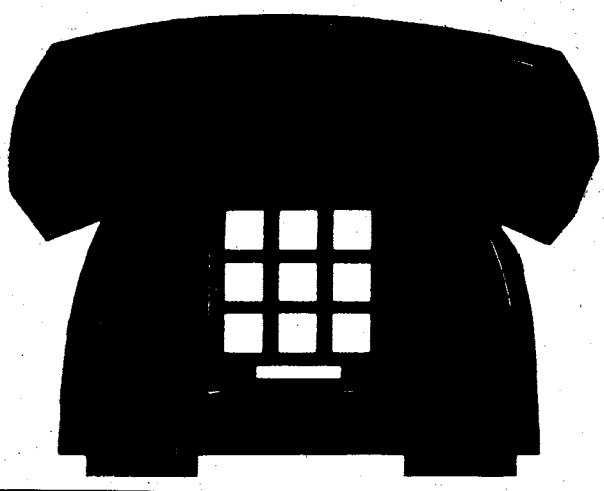
5-BOSS replaces post's hotline telephone program



Fort Benning has a new problem-solving and complaints program that replaces the "Hotline." The new system is called "Dial 5-BOSS."

The new procedure is already in effect and the "Hotline" has been discontinued.

The "Dial 5-BOSS" program is similar to the "Hotline," but is designed to provide more timely response to the caller and more efficient follow-up on the problems, complaints and ideas presented.

The program is as easy to use as its name. Just dial 545 then BOSS (2677) and you reach an answering machine. After the prerecorded message, state your problem, idea, or complaint in as much detail as possible. Give names of people previously contacted, specific dates, work order numbers, etc. Be sure to leave your name and how you can be contacted.

"Dial 5-BOSS" is for anyone in the community, military or civilian, who has a problem with the system or installation, or ideas to submit," said CSM Roy Owens, post command sergeant major and action officer for Dial 5-BOSS. "However, the program is in no way intended to replace the chain-of-command or various post agencies on a routine basis. It is designed to open the door to the higher levels of command in those exceptional cases when an individual feels he has not gotten satisfaction through normal channels."

One final reminder; be sure to give as much specific information as possible, especially your name and how you can be contacted. Without facts and a point of contact, no action can be taken.

Insight

'Be all you can be' proving a winner

By Roy Turgeon
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Kenny Rogers' recent song proclaims, "We can't be all we can be if we're searching for gold." These lyrics have "Army" written all over them. It has always been known that you can never get rich in the military, but only in recent years have we been told over and over again that the Army is a place to "Be all you can be."

This popular slogan was developed for the Army after the Vietnam conflict through a research program of the N.W. Ayre advertising firm headquartered in New York City. According to Dr. Ephraim Goldstein of N.W. Ayre, a lot of planning went into the development of the slogan. "We knew what the Army wanted — long term skills, training, incentives, educational opportunities and short term bonuses. We also knew that with a smaller Army, the slogan must be one that would attract quality people as opposed to quantity.

"There was also a need to attract all segments of society. Two of the other slogans considered were 'Join tomorrow's Army today' and 'Having the time of your life at the right time of your life.' Although attractive slogans, research proved they were not as relatable to young people or as adaptable to different forms of the media as 'Be all you can be.'"

During a recent AUSA meeting in Columbus, Gen. Max Thurman, vice chief of staff for the Army said, "We researched what kids thought. Youngsters want to be winners, to have opportunities, and to have the chance to show what they are able to do. When we tested various slogans on youngsters, this one hit home because it can apply to every person, regardless of his or her economic status, whether or not that person is the number one graduate of the class, or whether that person is an officer, NCO, or junior enlisted soldier. The slogan can be personalized."

Bill Kelly of N.W. Ayre stated, "We also wanted the umbrella feeling of bringing the Army National Guard and Army Reserve alongside the active Army." The success of today's Army must have something to do with the slogan and ads. "We have established that there is a 60-70 percent 'unaided recall factor for the top commercials,'" said Goldstein. In other words, "Army prospects clearly remember a particular commercial and oftentimes indicate that they want to join because they remember the one about 'parachuting out of a plane' or 'working on a computer in the field.'" Goldstein further stated that the previous slogan, "Today's Army wants to join you," was not well accepted because it focused on numbers and not quality.

Lew DiJoseph and the writers working for him are collectively credited for the slogan, "Be all you can be." The slogan originally appeared in the body copy of an ad that was being written. The music and lyrics for the song were written by Jake Holmes.

It's obvious that even Kenny Rogers knows a good slogan when he hears one.

Women's military jobs reflect Soviets' society roles

Of the more than 4 million persons in the Soviet military, only about 10,000 are women. Their place in the military seems to reflect general Soviet society, where women have lots of opportunity to work but little opportunity to advance.

Soviet society employs a lot of women; 91 percent of "able-bodied" women are in the work force. But there too, a woman's chances for promotion or increased responsibility are slight. Except for the medical field (75 percent of doctors and 85 percent of the workers are female), women usually work in lower grade administrative or service occupations.

Likewise in the military, women are restricted from rising in the ranks. They are not drafted, but can volunteer and be selected for duty in needed specialties. They are barred from attending commissioning schools, and direct appointments from the ranks are rare. The few female officers are doctors or scientists who went through officer training while in college.

It's not that Russian women haven't shown the capability for warfighting. During World War II, the Soviets had three female air regiments: fighter, short-range bomber and night light bomber. Women served in combat as snipers, machine gunners, tank crew members and as air defense gunners. The armed forces designated 91 women as "Hero of the Soviet Union." But when the shooting stopped, women went back to the administrative, communication and medical jobs.

A woman's chances for promotion or increased responsibility are slight.

Women, 19 to 25, can volunteer if unmarried, without children, physically fit and have eight years of education. Those who enlist serve for two years. They may reenlist or transfer to the reserves. They remain in the reserves until age 40.

Their service life is not nearly as harsh as the male's. Women have the same pay, benefits and privileges as career personnel from day one. They can live in a dormitory or off-post at their own expense. Civilian clothing may be worn off-duty and passes are not required. And they get 30 days leave plus travel during each 2-year hitch. Women are not subjected to the brutal discipline that the men are, and punishment for violations is usually only a "chewing out" or reduction in rank.

Women in the Soviet forces are not allowed to serve aboard ships or planes or enter combat or combat-related specialties. They may marry, but must leave the service if they become pregnant. (AFPS)

Various voices

"Do you think the Army provides the type of atmosphere where a woman can 'Be all you can be?'"

SP5 Linda Lynch, intelligence analyst, 10th Company, TSB --"I feel that they are giving us the opportunity to be what we can be. Some people just don't want to take advantage of the opportunities. I go to school every day . . . I really enjoy it. I think they have given me that opportunity.

Sgt. Marina Lopez, test evaluator, 91st Division (TNG) test section --"I say it does. In my unit I'm considered a sergeant first, then a soldier, and finally a woman.

Pvt. Genotra Brown, Airborne student, 4th Airborne Training Battalion--"We do basically the same things that the guys do, especially here in Airborne training, because it's so hard. There's no real discrimination, we're expected, if you want to be Airborne, to do the same thing as anyone else — there's no special treatment.

"It's up to you."

2nd Lt. John S. Weaver, IOBC student, 2nd Training Battalion, TSB--"Women have a chance to go as far or farther than they could outside of the military community. They're on good footing in the military"

Week focuses on women's accomplishments

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Women's History Week is being celebrated this year during the week of March 4-10. The idea of the week is to highlight women's accomplishments.

Two women at Fort Benning are examples of the successes women can achieve in their careers.

Delia McDaniel, maintenance scheduler with the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, has worked at Fort Benning for 15 and a half years and loves her work.

"I started out as a clerk-typist and worked up to my present position WD-7, but I received some good training here on post in order for me to advance. I attended several different schools on post and I knew a little about construction before I took this job."

Mrs. McDaniel schedules anything that needs scheduling into the DEH shops including individual job orders and SPOs.

"There was a lot of hard work to get where I am, but I applied myself and I've always had a desire to learn."

Ann Hill, chief of protocol, also had a desire to learn and as a result feels her career is successful.

"I set a goal on becoming the deputy chief of protocol when I came to this office and had on-the-job training, but with the turnover of military personnel, I soon became the teacher instead of learning about the job. It's always changing and it can be a difficult operation."

Mrs. Hill began her career at Fort Benning 17 years ago as a clerk-typist and progressed to stenographer then to secretary. When she went to protocol, the job was at the beginning of the management level.

"I had been going to school as a self-development thing and to help in my job proficiency. I feel that education was a big part of the opportunity I was offered in coming here and moving my career upwards.

"I feel good about my job and I consider it a success. It's a challenge, but rewarding when results can be seen after weeks of planning."

The Fort Benning Federal Women's Program (FWP) and the Columbus Chapter of Federally Employed Women are sponsoring a luncheon next Friday at 11:45 a.m. at the main NCO Club. Sara Spano, Columbus Ledger/Enquirer columnist, will be the guest speaker. Tickets are $3.40 and are available from any FWP representative.

ITG wins award

Infantry Training Group (ITG) has won the post's Safety Award for fiscal year 1984's first quarter.

Fred Young, manager, Safety and Occupational Health Office, presented the award to the Deputy Post Commander, Col. Neal Christensen, who in turn presented it to Col. James Ellis, ITG commander.

Ellis commented on the many missions ITG covers as well as the joint effort of the group's instructors with cadre of the 1st and 2nd Infanty Training Brigades in seeing that safety measures are followed.

The mission of the Infantry Training Group is to train Infantrymen to be technically and tactically proficient.(USAIC PAO)

Women's Week proclamation

American women of every race, class and ethnic background have played and continue to play a critical economic, cultural and social role in every sphere of our nation's history. Women served as early leaders in the forefront of every major progressive social change movement to own right of suffrage and equal opportunity, in the abolitionist movement, the emancipation movement, the industrial labor union movement and the modern civil rights movement.

In recognition of the contributions made by women in science, business, education, medicine, military science, the arts, politics, religion and the home, Now, Therefore, I, Major General James J. Lindsay, commanding general of the United States Army Infantry Center, do hereby proclaim March 4-10, 1984 as Women's History Week at Fort Benning, Ga. I further encourage all personnel and organizations at this installation to recognize the roles women have played in the history of our country and the contributions they make each day to the mission of the Infantry Center and to the community life of Fort Benning.

Pharmacy cuts prescription services; MACH no longer fills outside orders

Prescriptions written by non-MEDDAC civilian doctors to individuals authorized care at a military medical treatment facility will now have to be filled by local civilian pharmacies.

In November 1983, Col. (P) Alcide M. LaNoue, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) commander, advised the media and the military community about the difficulties being experienced within the hospital pharmacy.

The two main problems were an increase in workload (1,800 to 1,900 prescriptions a day), and a decrease in staffing.

At that time, Col. LaNoue named some alternatives that could take place in order to continue providing quality care if the problems were not alleviated. Thus far, these temporary measures (e.g., reservists, personnel serving here on a temporary duty basis, and the opening of the civilian recruiting register in an attempt to hire civilian pharmacists) have been exhausted.

The reservists that were available and temporary duty military pharmacists have all served their time, and the civil service pay scale is still not competitive with the civilian salaries paid locally.

The problem of too much work for too few people still persists and the danger of making a serious error is not acceptable.

Therefore, effective tomorrow, MACH pharmacy will accept only prescriptionswrittenby Department of Defense physicians.

The hours of operation will be reduced so that the pharmacy will only be open on weekdays and closed on weekends and holidays. Col. LaNoue feels this action is now necessary to reduce the error rate and to provide the best quality care possible. (MACH)

Pentagon exhibit

Corridor traces women's history in military

By Tom Condon
American Forces Press Service

Lying almost unnoticed at the foot of an Army cot in a Pentagon exhibit dedicated to military women is a rag doll.

A few feet away from the doll is an old newspaper clipping announcing the U.S. declaration of war on Japan, and a picture of a group of World War II Army nurses climbing on a truck for home after three years in a POW camp in the Pacific.

The doll, dressed in an Army uniform, was made by a second lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps while she was a captive in that camp. It was a birthday present for another POW.

This poignant piece of memorabilia is part of a permanent 10-case display which highlights significant contributions made by women who served this country throughout its history.

Called the "Military Women's Corridor," it is one of 19 corridors throughout the Pentagon dedicated to some aspect of the Armed Forces.

This commemorative corridor opens with an impressive display on the forerunners of American servicewomen and continues by tracing the history of military women from World War I to the present. It ends with an audio-visual presentation stressing the importance of military women today and in the future.

Military women today, for example, are fulfilling vital military requirements. Approximately 200,000 officers and enlisted women comprise about 9 percent of the active force compared, for example, to 1972 when 45,000 women made up 1.5 percent of the active force.

History

Although the official history of women in the Armed Forces began with the formation of the Army Nurse Corps in 1901, women have served with the military since the American Revolution. One was Margaret Corbin, who courageously took her husband's place at his cannon after he was killed at the Battle of Fort Washington.

A few adventurous women like Deborah Sampson masqueraded as male soldiers and many more served the Continental Army as laundresses, cooks and nurses.

During the Civil War, large numbers of women volunteered as nurses with both Union and Confederate forces. Prominent Northern women included Dorothea Dix, known for her work with the mentally ill; and Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross. Susie King Taylor was a famous black nurse.

Two Union nurses, Mary Tepe and Anna Etheridge, were awarded the Kearny Cross for bravery at the Battle of Chancellorsville; Sally Louisa Thompkins was commissioned as a captain by Jefferson Davis.

However, women not only served as nurses, but also as spies. Among the most daring were Belle Boyd, Rose O'Neal Greenhow and Pauline Cushman. The famous black abolitionist, Harriet Tubman, served throughout the war as nurse, spy, scout and guide for the Union forces. In June 1863, she led a raid up the Combahee River in South Carolina, destroying Confederate property valued in the millions, and freed more than 700 slaves.

Other services

Because of the outstanding wartime record of nurses, Congress established the Army Nurse Corps on Feb. 2, 1901; the Navy Nurse Corps was formed on May 13, 1908.

The Navy authorized the enrollment of women, other than nurses in March 1917 to free men for sea duty and to ease the shortage of skilled clerical personnel on shore.

By the end of World War I, there were 11,275 enlisted women in the Naval Reserve Force who were officially designated Yeoman, but were popularly known as "Yeomanettes."

And on Aug. 13, 1918, Opha Mae Johnson enlisted in the Marine Corps to become America's first woman Marine. The Army did not enlist women in World War I, but employed them as civilians under contract; many worked as physical and occupational therapists.

Combat duty

During World War II, the number of nurses rose to 11,000 in the Navy and 57,000 in the Army. They served both in the U.S. and overseas. Nearly 2,000 nurses were decorated for meritorious service and bravery under fire.

During WW II, jobs for women were greatly expanded, which led to the establishment of the Women's Army Corps (WAC), Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service (WAVES) in the Navy, and the Coast Guard Women's Reserve called the "SPARs," a nickname taken from the Coast Guard motto, "Semper Paratus," which means "Always Ready." The Marine Corps Women's Reserve, founded Feb. 13, 1943, adopted no nickname.

With the outbreak of the Korean War, women reservists from all services were recalled to active duty with a peak strength of 48,700 in October 1952. Except for nurses, few served in Korea, but many were stationed in Japan, Okinawa and the Philippines. Four Air Force nurses were killed in Korea; two were awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross.

During the Vietnam Conflict, about 7,500 women served in Southeast Asia, mostly as Army, Navy and Air Force nurses. Many received both American and Vietnamese decorations for courageous andmeritorious service.

Emancipation

But it wasn't until November 8, 1967, that President Lyndon Johnson repealed the two percent ceiling on female strength imposed in 1948, permitting more women to enter the armed services. The law also allowed appointment of women to flag and general officer rank and largely equalized promotion and retirement regulations for both men and women.

The end of the draft and the advent of the all-volunteer force also were incentives for women to join the services. As a result, between 1971 and 1983, the number of women rose from 43,000 to about 200,000.

Furthermore, women were no longer restricted to the traditional female specialties, but were assigned in large numbers to jobs previously considered the exclusive domain of men. And during the 1970s, the acronyms WAC, WAVES, and WAF were eliminated, symbolizing the commitment to integrate women into the mainstream of the Armed Forces.

Caspar W. Weinberger, Secretary of Defense, said of the exhibit: "This is a rich and long-neglected history, which is finally getting the attention it deserves. But even more rewarding, to my mind, is the tremendous expansion of opportunities for women in our modern-day Armed Forces."

DPCA wins SPIRIT award

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities won the Fort Benning quarterly SPIRIT award for saving the post almost $1 million.

The DPCA won the award Feb. 22nd, because of the streamlining of the system at the Personnel Processing Center. The PPC or Welcome Center was able to cut down the processing time, for incoming soldiers, from three days to just one.

The award, a large trophy with an American eagle atop the Infantry Center patch, is awarded to the agency on Fort Benning that saves the most money through initiative during the past quarter.

During the Infantry Hall ceremony, Col. Neal Christensen, deputy post commander, congratulated DPCA on their savings during the first quarter of fiscal year 1984, saying, "I'm especially pleased to be here, not just as a soldier . . . but as a taxpayer.

"When I look at the scope of the savings that Fort Benning and you (DPCA) specifically have achieved during the first quarter — I am really impressed."

He commented on previous savings programs that he had encountered in his military career.

"The key thing that was lacking," explained Col. Christensen, "has always been the incentive — the reward. This particular program, (SPIRIT) which is now sponsored by all of the major commands really lives up to the phrase, 'A penny saved is a penny earned.'"

The trophy, which the deputy post commander said would "set the standard" for all who would walk by, is on permanent display in Infantry Hall.

New law requires infant seats soon

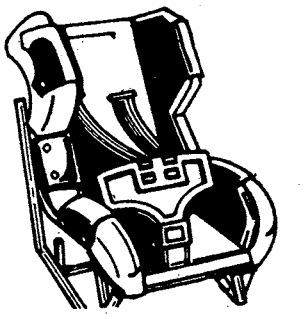
Legal Assistance



Georgia Child Restraint Law becomes effective July 1, 1984. But parents shouldn't wait until July to provide maximum protection to their infants while traveling in a motor vehicle. A parent should insure his child's safety by securing the child in an infant seat. Statistical studies indicate the use of infant seats reduces the infant mortality rate.

Effective July 1, Georgia law requires drivers, not just owners, that regularly and customarily transport a child in a vehicle to use an infant seat for children up to the age of 3 years old. A seat belt will be adequate protection for children who are older than 3 years.

This law will be waived if the driver is a non-resident of Georgia, or if he is carpooling children under 4- years-old to church, public or private school.

This statute will be enforced by the issuance of tickets with a $25 fine. If the individual fined can produce proof of purchase, rental, or loan of an infant seat within 14 days of the issuance of the citation, then it will be voided.

There is an infant car seat loan program at Fort Benning. To be eligible, active duty military and or their family members must attend a 45-minute presentation at building 66, room 310. A class is given at 1 p.m. every other Monday. Any interested party should call Miss Martin at 545-4041 or 5431.

DENTAC names Soldier, NCO of Year

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Specialist Four Lawrence Morino, dental assistant at Troop Medical Clinic #3 at Kelley Hill has won the MEDDAC/DENTAC Soldier of the Year for the Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center Region. Fort Benning, along with nine other southern posts are part of that region.

Before winning that title, Morino was selected as the Fort Benning MEDDAC/DENTAC Soldier of the Year. He has also won Soldier of the Month and Soldier of the Quarter.

"I was psyched up for this board. It was a lot tougher than any of the others, but I feel I helped myself by going to other boards."

Connie McReynolds

SSgt. Everett Green

Morino who has been at Fort Benning for 16 months, decided to become a dental assistant to see if he would like dentistry. "I didn't know anything about it when I came in; now I find I like it so much I plan on going to college and becoming a dentist.

"My advice for anyone going in front of any board is to be calm. Don't let anyone know you're nervous. You worked hard to get there, so don't blow it."

Staff Sgt. Everett Green, MEDDAC/DENTAC's NCO of the Year for Fort Benning said that no board is easy nor are any two the same but, "you can seek advice from anyone who has been at a board and put in a lot of hard work studying."

Green, the personnel services NCO for DENTAC, spends his time with reports, personnel actions and maintaining good relations between the soldiers and headquarters, DENTAC. Still he finds spare time during the day to study.

"Any spare time, no matter how much, I study," Green said. His studying has earned him such honors as Soldier of the Month, NCO of the Month and NCO of the Year. Besides that, he is a full-time student at Columbus College and the Chattahoochee Valley Community College. He is submitting an application for next year's Warrant Officer Program also.

Two units singled out

Two Fort Benning units have been selected to represent the post in the second annual Chief-of-Staff Army Award for Maintenance Excellence Program.

Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, will be entered in the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) competition, and the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, will compete against U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM) entries.

The primary criteria for unit evaluation in the program was demonstrated success at making the established organizational maintenance management system work to achieve and maintain an unusually high state of unit readiness, according to Troy E. Ellis, installation maintenance officer, Directorate of Industrial Operations.

Finalists in the competition will be evaluated by the U.S. Army Ordnance Center and School this month and winners will be announced and awards presented at the American Defense Preparedness Association annual convention to be held in April.

Ellis said Co. D, was selected as the local TRADOC winner in the competition because, "It has a sound maintenance program and has demonstrated an exceptional ability to accomplish its mission." The company is the Army's first Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle unit.

The 533rd Trans. Co. was named local FORSCOM winner for displaying "a superb maintenance program which has enabled them to excel in accomplishing their mission, maintaining a high degree of unit readiness and instilling 'esprit de corps,'" Ellis said. (USAIC PAO)

Reserve unit arrives for AT

By Ronald M. Smith
91st Division (Trng)

The fir tree patch of the 91st Division (Training) has been highly visible at Fort Benning during the past two weeks, as elements of the division located in Northern California, perform their annual training (AT) mission.

Arriving with 237 members of the 91st Training Command and 43 soldiers of Detachment 1 of the Division Test Section, the group commanded by Col. C. Emmett Mahle, is the first of several contingents who will be augmenting Army Training Center personnel.

The 91st Training Command with its headquarters at Camp Parks in Dublin, Calif., has a mobilization mission of opening an Army Training Center at Fort Ord, Calif. To assist in this mission, the training command has augmented the Instructor Training Group, commanded by Col. James Ellis.

While at Fort Benning, the training command personnel are performing the same training for the initial-entry soldier as they will be required to do at Fort Ord. Individual members are being tasked to provide instruction on Infantry subjects, both from the platform and on the ranges. The augmentation takes place at all levels, from range officer and NCO, to instructor. In this manner, the 91st soldier is able to be brought up-to-date on current doctrine and standards presently being used at the Infantry School.

Members of the 91st come from many locations throughout Northern California, with the majority being from the San Francisco Bay area.

An example of the professionalism of these soldiers is that the 91st Division Test Section is the only Reserve unit to have earned the AO Eagle Performance Oriented Infantry Qualification Test Streamer two years in a row.

The 91st Division dates its lineage and honors to the WWI era when it was an Infantry division comprised of soldiers recruited from the Northwestern United States, hence its nickname of "The Wild West Division" and motto "Powder River, Let 'er Buck."

Upon their return to California, the members of the 91st Division Training Command will revert to their roles as citizen/soldiers, better prepared with their skills more finely tuned. In the truest spirit of the sense, the Infantry motto, "Follow Me," will be carried back as the 91st Division returns to California ready to take on all challenges.

Dental Corps celebrates 73rd year of existence

March 3 is the anniversary of the United States Army Dental Corps and this year is their 73rd birthday. The first organized effort to secure dentists for an army was the conscription of those to serve in the Confederate Army in 1864.

It was not until 1908 that they were authorized by law to become a part of the Medical Department and in 1911, a bill was passed by Congress which provided for the commissioning of dentists. A total of 30 men were commissioned as dental surgeons by the passage of the bill.

The numbers of commissioned dentists rose with the coming of World Wars I and II, although between wars the Dental Corps dwindled. Peak strength of the corps came in November 1944 when 15,292 dental officers were on active duty.

Right now there are 1,789 officers, 84 of them women, and 2,327 enlisted members in the Dental Corps. They are serving anyplace where staffing requirements call for one dentist to 500 patients. Most of the dentists have received or are receiving specialized professional training.

The Fort Benning DENTAC, like other members of the Dental Corps, make sure that the patients here receive the finest treatment using the most advanced universally accepted techniques.(USAIC PAO).

Driving in adverse weather

Adverse weather conditions such as rain, snow and fog reduce your ability to see and be seen, the National Safety Council says. These tough road conditions also make it more difficult to start, stop and turn because of roads being slippery . Make sure you keep your windshields completely clear and use only your low beam headlights when you drive in poor weather. The high beams will reflect off the water vapor making it more difficult for you to see and causing glare for other motorists coming toward you.

Highway stall

If your car stalls while you're traveling, try to drive it off the road before it comes to a complete halt, the National Safety Council says. Turn on the hazard flashers and, if the stall occurs at night, the interior light. Remove all passengers from the car and away from the abandoned vehicle, especially if the stall should occur in a traffic lane, on a curve, or over the crest of a hill.

Warn other motorists that your vehicle has stalled by placing one flare or warning device a car's length behind the car and another signal about 300 feet to the rear. Raise the hood and tie something white to the antenna or left door handle to signal for help.

North Georgia cadet wins 'MacArthur Award'

DAHLONEGA, Ga. — North Georgia College student Jeff Dill, son of Col. and Mrs. Wayne Dill of Fort Benning, has been selected as the 1983-84 recipient of the "MacArthur Award" at the college in Dahlonega.

The award, one of the most prestigious offered a cadet at North Georgia, is provided by the family of the late Gen. Douglas MacArthur. It is awarded each year to the cadet who most exemplifies the ideals and qualities of the famed general.

Dill, a cadet first sergeant, is a junior at North Georgia where he is majoring in business administration. He is a recipient of the Georgia Military Scholarship, a full scholarship to North Georgia, and has completed both airborne school and northern warfare training in Alaska.

Dill's father, Col. Wayne Dill, presently serves as Director of Plans and Training at the U.S. Army Infantry Center. He also attended North Georgia College where he was graduated in 1962 with a bachelor of science degree in business administration. (No. Ga. Col.)

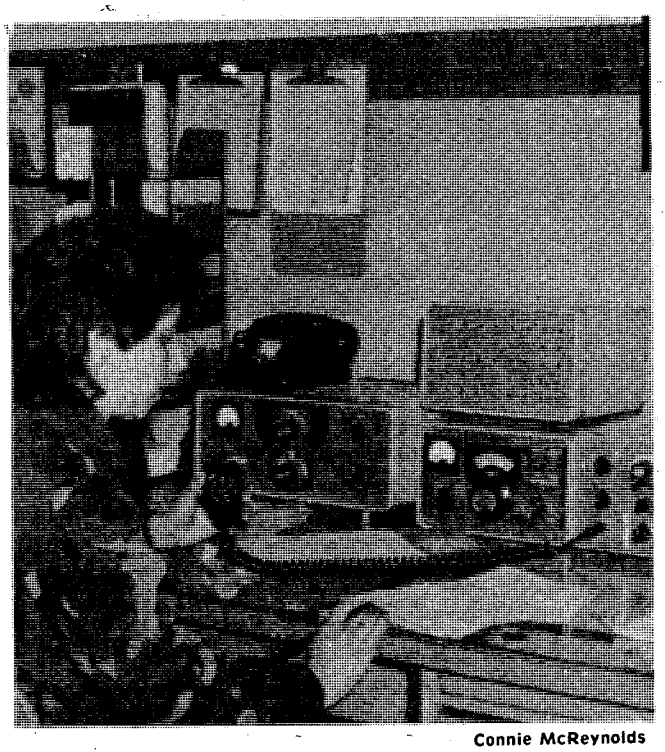
Communication Command remembers history



Connie McReynolds

Sp4 Lee Sbardella sends a message over the High Frequency radio.

Twenty years ago on March 1, the U.S. Army Communications Command (USACC) was established. It sprang from The Strategic Communications Command (STRATCOM).

Many changes affected the command. In 1964 and 65, STRATCOM-Europe, STRATCOM-Pacific and STRATCOM-South were added to it. In 1966, the 1st Signal Brigade was established in Southeast Asia and in 1967, STRATCOM headquarters moved from near Washington, D.C., to Fort Huachuca, Az.

In 1973 the name STRATCOM disappeared when the command was renamed the Army Communications Command. USACC-Fort Benning has a multitude of responsibilities and is comprised of 90 military and civilian personnel.

The Telecommunications Center (TCC) is capable of transmitting and receiving data by page printers, magnetic tape and punch cards, and can flash a message to the other side of the world in just a few minutes.

The command is responsible for the Infantry Center's Automatic Secure Voice Communications (AUTOSEVOCOM) facility located at the Emergency Operations Center in Infantry Hall. The AUTOSEVOCOM is a worldwide secure voice network that provides secure telephone service for all classified secure calls.

The Lawson Army Airfield Air Traffic Control and Ground Control Approach is another big USACC operation. The ATC branch is responsible for every aircraft landing and taking off from Lawson Airfield as well as those aircraft passing through Benning's airspace. The controllers are in constant communications with the Columbus Metropolitian Airport and coordinate their operations with the Federal Aviation Administration.

Personnel assigned to the Navigational Aids Branch (NAVAIDS) keep the airfield communication-electronic equipment in good repair. This includes responsiblity for the radio and radar equipment as well as the various directional beacons that assist pilots in locating the airfield.

The High Frequency Radio Station (HF Station), sometimes referred to as MARS, is a contingency back-up for communications for Fort Benning. The HF Station is a USACC operation which is of special interest to soldiers here. Messages can be sent over high frequency radio to anywhere in the world, free of charge.

Although telephone operations and maintenance has been contracted out to RCA, USACC has overall responsibility to insure provisions of the contract are met.(USAIC PAO)

Demons beat clock, track; conquer run

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the story of the third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade as they undergo the transition from civilians into soldiers. The third platoon entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and are now in their 11th week of training.

Bill Reynolds

Soldiers get ready for the run during their PT test.

Bill Reynolds

And they're off as the run begins.

The morning sky at Fort Benning was lit by an occasional streak of lightning Monday morning as the "Delta Demons" faced their next-to-last obstacle in their drive to wear "Infantry Blue."

Despite the rain that fell on Fort Benning, the Army Physical Readiness Test would be administered to the soldiers in D-8-2.

This test could not be cancelled because of inclement weather. This was "The PT Test," the most important one of the cycle. Doing well today could mean the difference between marching on graduation day or becoming a "holdover."

No matter what the weather — the test would go on.

It was decided by the evaluators to move a portion of the PT test indoors.

Inside Kimbro Gym located on Sand Hill, the soldiers would complete two of the three requirements to pass the exam. There, under the watchful eyes of the Infantry Training Group graders, the soldiers would strain to get that last pushup or "gut out" that last situp before the time limit ran out.

Outside the gym, the drill sergeants paced back and forth — almost like expectant fathers, nervously awaiting the word.

There was nothing more that they could do.

The drills joked with each other as to who had the best platoon. They talked about their platoons the way fathers brag about their sons. SSgt. George Upsher, platoon sergeant, third platoon, walked back and forth, keeping one eye on the door to the gym and one on the sky. If the third platoon really shone today, there was still a chance that they could cut into the lead held by the fourth platoon.

All of the drill sergeants would look occasionally at the sky. Some wondered, out loud, how last night's rain would affect the soldiers two-mile run.

At the end of the pushup and situp events, Upsher was delighted — eight of his soldiers had "maxed" their events. This along with having no "No Gos" would have made any platoon sergeant happy. Upsher's joy at his platoon achieving such good marks was soon clouded by the word that the fourth platoon had also received eight "maxes" — the honor platoon streamer stayed just out of reach.

The faces of the men in the third platoon were grim. Gone were the looks of fearful apprehension that were the uniform just weeks ago when they entered the Army. These men meant business.

Wetherby Field, with its clay and sand base was wet and the drill sergeants were concerned, not so much for the times that would be turned in today, but for the safety of their men. It would be a shame to fall and sprain an ankle in the slippery mush of the track, especially so close to graduation.

The soldiers ran with a "staggered start," one group starting a few seconds behind another.

The two-mile run was more than the last event of the PT test — it was a race between the platoons. The rain and mud did not seem to matter as the "Delta Demons" stretched out to conquer the run. Time after time they circled the field, yelling their numbers to the graders each time. On the last lap, the weary soldiers increased their speed.

The clock was their enemy. The wet track was their enemy — both would be beaten.

Some of the soldiers would turn in the best times of their lives today. "I ran it (the two miles) faster than I ever did!" beamed Pvt. Douglas J. Grant, who started more than a marriage when he went home on Christmas leave. He has received word that he and his brand new wife were to become brand-new parents. "I finished my PT test today," commented Grant, "she'll have hers later."

The drill sergeants mingled with the crowd of soldiers, giving advice, telling them to walk around to cool down after their run.

Gone too was the "wall of difference" between the drill sergeants and their charges. After all these weeks together, it was more like a unit of regulars than a training company.

The test over, the command to "fall in" was given and the soldiers formed into four ranks and marched off the field. The PT test was behind them. All that was left was AO Eagle — and graduation.

The speed of the runners was unbelievable.

Signal soldiers tie units together

Connie McReynolds

Sp4 Faris Crain (l) and Sp4 John LaCombe set up an antenna while Sp4 Carlos Cruz (c) checks to see if it is alright.

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Signal Corps will be celebrating their 121st birthday March 3 and a lot of times the signal soldiers are lost in the Army picture, until you realize that communications is very important to the Army.

At the 197th Infantry Brigade, every battalion has a communications platoon. Most, like the one at the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, are made up of radio operators and radio-teletype personnel.

"We are the ones that help our unit communicate," Sp4 George Woodward Jr. said. He explained that they keep pretty busy too. "If we go out on an exercise, an ARTEP or whatever, we really get to do our job. Other times we do things to keep ourselves trained." One of those things is bringing the radios up on Tuesdays and Wednesdays to see if they are working properly.

"About the only problems we have is that the equipment is old," PFC Eley Harris said. "We can do minor maintenance, but for anything big, it goes to the shop."

The 298th Signal Detachment is the main signal support for the 197th. "We also support the Infantry Center and School," SFC Jeffrey McWilliams, first sergeant, said.

The detachment consists of a headquarters, one cable team who is responsible for running the wires from the command post to wherever; six multi-channel teams, who man the radios; three radio-teletype teams and one patch team, who tie all the multi-channels into one.

"We're in a high demand now to supply the service of communication within the brigade. And our multi-channel is very secure, the enemy would have a hard time trying to figure it out," McWilliams said. "We tie the battalions together."

Sgt. Eric Nash explained exactly what the detachment does. "We support the 197th's units. If they go out to a range we can tie them into their battalion here at Kelly Hill. If they go on ARTEPs or other kinds of exercises, we go out to support them however we can."

Gwen Lewis

Librarian believes TV has its place

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I believe the biggest change in the library, over the years, besides the extensive use of computers, is the difference in the reading habits of children," said Gwen Lewis, library supervisor, Morale Support Activities Division (MSAD), Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

"It used to be that children read the traditional type books, but lately I have noticed an increase in the borrowing of books dealing with current events, space walks and computers," she said. "I give a lot of credit to television for this change. I realize that many people are down on television for children, but I believe it has its place in our system because it makes the children think."

Mrs. Lewis has been with civil service for 21 years, all of it in the library system and has been the Fort Benning library supervisor since 1977. This is her second tour at Fort Benning as she worked here in 1969-1971. She previously worked at Fort McClellan, Ala., Fort Rucker, Ala., and Dobbins Air Force Base, Ga.

"I like working with people and showing them what books have to offer," she said. "I miss the personal touch that those who work in the circulation department have with the public, but I try to keep my hand in it."

There are two MSAD libraries at Fort Benning. The Sayers Memorial Library on main post and a branch located in the Recreation Center at Kelley Hill. Between them they contain more than 150,000 books, in addition to video tapes, magazines, newspapers and records and tapes.

"We try to keep up with the trends and also keep books on our shelves that support the college extension courses that are conducted at Fort Benning," Mrs. Lewis said.

The computer age has come to the library system and this has required some adjustments on her part. "I had to learn to use computers because we use our computer terminal for research queries and for interlibrary book service," she said.

Originally from Atlanta, she graduated from Spellman College with a bachelor of arts degree in mathematics and has since earned her masters degree in library science from Atlanta University.

Her lifestyle underwent a radical change about 18 months ago when she moved to Columbus. Prior to that she lived in Atlanta and commuted to Fort Benning every working day for five years. "I put at least 250 miles a day on my car during that period and I am glad that is a thing of the past." Now she travels to Atlanta on the weekends to visit her mother.

Nutrition month theme highlights sports

By Brenda E. Richardson, R.D., B.S.
Clinical Dietitian, MACH

The month of March is National Nutrition Month. The theme this year is "Everybody Wins With Good Nutrition."

This theme was selected by the American Dietetic Association (ADA) and highlights sports with the upcoming Olympic Games 1984. The ADA selected this theme due to its 1980 statement accepting the "responsibility to promote programs that incorporate the concepts of good nutrition and physical fitness," maintaining that "a nutritionally adequate diet and exercise are major contributing factors to physical fitness and health."

During this month, we will discuss nutrition and physical fitness. Four articles will be presented in the BAYONET, and each article will provide valid nutrition information on what individuals can do to improve their diet with relation to total physical fitness.

During National Nutrition Month and all through the year, let us all practice good nutrition with a regular exercise program. From the armchair athlete to the future Nadia Comaneci's of the world, "Everybody Wins With Good Nutrition."

Soldiers 'go for gold'; Army-wide culinary arts competition draws best

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Food specialists from Fort Benning will be "Going for Gold" as they participate in the annual Army-wide Culinary Arts Competition to be held at Fort Lee Va.

The competition is designed to improve the standards of Army meals by fostering competition among food specialists Army-wide.

Tuesday, members of the Fort Benning Culinary Arts team left Fort Benning for Fort Lee.

The six-member team, according to Capt. Linda Rustin, post food service officer, would be competing against other teams of food specialists in 11 categories of food preparation.

"The team members were selected by their local food advisors." Rustin said.

The team members are:

CWO2 Ernest C. Moore
HSC, USAITC

Sgt. Gloria J. Bethany
18th Repl. Det., 36th Engr. Gp.

Sp5 Garrett G. White
HHC, 2-69th Armor, 197th Inf. Bde.

Sp5 Verena Wilson
Co. C, 3rd Bn., 1st ITB

Sp5 Michael L. McNabb
Co. C, 6th Bn., 1st ITB

Sp4 Eric Aguayo
Co. D, 4th Bn., 2nd ITB

There will be gold, silver and bronze medallions presented to the first, second and third place winners in each event. There will also be a trophy awarded for the best novice entry and installation event.

A talent show will be held at Our Lady of Lourdes School auditorium tonight and tomorrow night at 7:30. The show is being staged to promote fellowship and raise funds for a new air conditioner for the church. It will feature singing, dancing and other acts including the new pastor, Father Dan O'Connell, who will play guitar and sing in the Friday night show. Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for children under 12. For more information, call Owen or Mabel Ditchfield, 687-2860 or 545-3626.

Night classes offered

Registration for Columbus Tech night classes for the spring quarter will start today and run through next Friday. The following courses are available: Communications I/II, Filing, Shorthand I/II, Typing III/IV, Business Law, Technical Math, Electronics and Accounting III (Partnerships and Corporations). For more information, call 322-1425.

Goodwill needs help

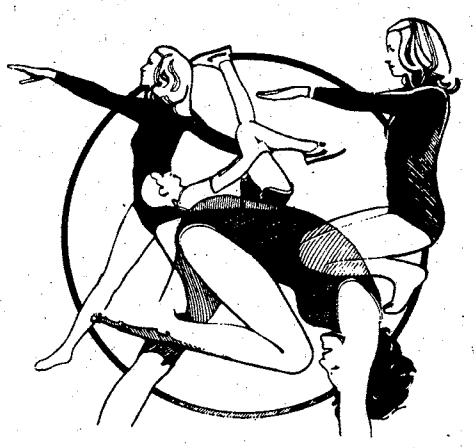
Goodwill Industries needs your repairable furniture and household products. A critical shortage of these items is adversely affecting Goodwill's store sales and has left many handicapped employees with idle hands. Call Goodwill today (324-4366) and arrange for a home pickup.

NCOA meets March 19

The Follow Me Chapter of the Non-Commissioned Officers Association (NCOA) will hold its monthly meeting March 19 at 5:30 p.m., at the Sand Hill NCO Club. For further information, call CSM Hollander at 544-1484 or MSgt. Cook at 544-3021.

Bowling for SGM wives

The Sergeants Major Wives Club will go bowling Wednesday at the Mainpost Bowling Center. All wives are invited to the 11:15 a.m. session of fun. For more information, call Mrs. Owens at 689-0280.



New OWC exercise class

The OWC is offering a new exercise class that includes an all-over body workout to music similar to the Jane Fonda workout with emphasis on toning muscles in arms, chests, waists, hips, thighs and stomachs. The classes are open to all military family members regardless of status or grade and cost only $10 a month. They will be held on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. For registration information, call OWC at 687-3537 or Vicky McCaffrie, instructor, at 689-5242.

Engineers bridge Chattahoochee River for Arm

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 586th Engineer Company of the 36th Engineer Group, spanned the Chattahoochee River, Tuesday, by working both ends against the middle.

The float bridge unit started the operation by driving to both shores of the river and launching their heavy power boats and rafts. According to SSgt. Kenneth C. Akers, 586th platoon sergeant, normally the company would start on the "friendly" side, rafting heavy equipment and tanks to the opposite shore while setting up operations. "The idea," said Akers, "is to get the maximum amount of firepower to the forward edge of the battle area in the shortest amount of time."

River crossing operations have been some of the costliest, in terms of men and material, military operations in history. They are deliberate attempts to get armies into enemy territory. Rivers make natural obstacles that provide the enemy cover and concealment while denying the same advantages to our forces.

Bridges, if they must be built, must be built rapidly and they must hold. Two platoons of the 586th practiced their trade, beginning rafting operations at Bradley Landing. "The other platoon is building the near shore raft components while we're building the far shore," said Akers, "Once these two components are together, we'll make a large bridge that an Armor unit will cross this afternoon."

It took 22 raft components to bridge the Chattahoochee. The raft was loaded aboard a truck that eased its way to the water's edge and launched its load. When the raft component hit the water, there were two splashes: one when the heavy aluminum raft hit the water and another when it opened like a flower to reveal the treadway of the bridge.

Once the raft was in the water, the work would begin. Boat operators, piloting 27-foot twin-engined bridge erection boats, would swarm over the raft, lashing it tightly to the craft. They would then jockey the raft components into position and wait to be connected.

The raft commander would stand in the center of the connected rafts, guiding two erection boats as they pushed and pulled the span into position alongside of the smaller rafts. All eyes would be focused upon the raft commander, each one of his movements would translate into an action by the boat operators. The long span would move up and down the river, responding to the raft commander, the way an orchestra responds to the conductor.

Once the bridge is in place, the work continues. The boats will move into place on the down-stream side of the span, keeping their two 230-hp engines running and pushing against the current to prevent the bridge from breaking up and floating down stream.

While the boats hold the bridge against the four-foot per second current, Akers men check every connection. They are looking for weak points to ensure that everything is secure. Each connection is checked, rechecked and triple-checked because the real test of the bridge will occur when the tanks of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor roll onto the ramp.

The men of the 586th hold their breath and move into position as they hear the "clank, clank" that signals the approach of the armored column. They have fought the elements today — the blinding snow and numbing cold to get this bridge built. Their real test takes place as the first vehicle eases onto the bridge.

Their final grade comes when the last vehicle rolls off the bridge to the other side.

Each connection has to be checked and reche considered secure.

Marshal's Viewpoint

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

The Provost Marshal Office Traffic Section is tasked with the never ending job of enforcing installation traffic regulations, to include speed limits. RADAR has proven to be one of its most reliable and legally acceptable tools for performing this function.

If one were to ask an average group of people their opinions of RADAR, he would probably get a variety of answers, most likely based upon whether or not they had been "caught" by radar for speeding. Below are some interesting facts concerning radar of which everyone should be aware.

What is RADAR?

The word RADAR is actually an acronym for Radio Detection and Ranging, a system used in WW II to detect enemy aircraft. This system has since been improved and is used for monitoring everything from automobiles to satellites.

RADAR is not some "cheap piece of equipment" concocted by police officers who like to write traffic tickets. It is a sophisticated, technologically developed system that has been refined for use in traffic enforcement. Sophisticated and reliable enough to be legally acceptable in any judicial forum!

Who can use it?

Before operating RADAR on this installation, a military policeman must be intensively trained and licensed by the State of Georgia to do so. He must complete a technical training program which begins with 16 hours of classroom instruction and culminates with a minimum of 16 hours of "hands on" training supervised by a certified operator.

The candidate must then demonstrate that he "understands" how the equipment works. Only after he is competent in both theory and practice can the MP be certified to operate RADAR.

Where is RADAR used?

RADAR can be used practically anywhere that traffic moves. The location selected is limited somewhat by technical considerations (i.e. grade of the road). However, practically speaking, RADAR site selections on post are based upon several factors — amount of traffic, nature of the road, accident history of the road, citizen complaints and nature of the area. Heavily traveled roadways, school zones and residential areas are naturally the choice locations on Fort Benning.

Why is RADAR used?

RADAR is used to detect and deter speeding violations. Posted speed limits are based upon statistical studies that indicate a "norm", or reasonable safe speed for a given area. If everyone drove within the "norm", then there would be no need for detection equipment.

Unfortunately, many endanger themselves and others by exhibiting total disregard for these "safe" speeds. RADAR acts as a detection tool for this class of offender.

Then there are those who normally obey the speed limits, but sometimes "forget", "don't pay attention", or "are running late". This latter category of violator is not the "flagrant" lawbreaker and can often be deterred by the mere presence of RADAR.

What happens then?

Active duty military personnel cited for speeding on post are subject to punishment under the Uniformed Code of Military Justice (UCMJ). Family members and civilians may be summoned to appear before the federal magistrate and are subject to fines or other appropriate punishment. Additionally, all active duty military, family members, and DA civilians may be required to attend a remedial driving course, regardless of other actions which may be taken against them. Failure to attend will result in the suspension of installation driving privileges and inability to "clear" the installation until the course is taken.

The surest way to avoid a ticket is to obey the speed limits on Fort Benning. There is no "real" excuse for speeding, although there are a lot of "reasons" given to the MP's — "cruise control stuck," "dashboard lights not working," "speedometer broken," "going downhill," "someone following me too close," or "large tires." Nevertheless, the end result will probably be the same. If you're speeding and you're caught, you're going to get a ticket. If you don't get caught, you're just plain wrong . . . and lucky.

The military police do not "enjoy" writing tickets for speeding. It's only part of their job, and another means of trying to insure that you and your family enjoy a safe and accident free tour at Fort Benning.

Now, you decide — is RADAR a friend or foe?

VA questions and answers

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Is there a time limit during which a veteran can appeal a decision concerning a claim?

A — In most cases, a claimant has one year from the date stamped on the notification of determination within which to file an appeal.

Q — What is the Restored Entitlement Program for Survivors?

A — This program provides for restoration of certain school benefits reduced or terminated by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. Benefits are restored for surviving spouses with a youngest child between the ages of 16 and 18 and for full time students between 18 and 22 who are survivors of veterans who died on active duty before August 13, 1981, or who died from a service-connected disability incurred prior to that date. Payments are made by the VA with eligibility based on Social Security criteria.

Q — I am a World War II veteran who was a Prisoner of War in Japan for eight months. Am I eligible for dental treatment at a VA medical center?

A — Yes. Former POWs who were interned for 180 or more days are entitled to dental treatment at VA medical centers.

Chaplain's Views

By Jim Masteller
Chaplain, Family Life Center

She wasn't at her best as she sat there, tears streaking her carefully applied mascara, blowing her nose and trying to talk. The emotion was understandable as I listened to her story. One of the questions I asked her was, "Why did you wait until now to come for help?" Her response was all too familiar. "I was afraid to come. I thought I could handle it myself."

I just got off the phone this morning with someone else who was feeling guilty for going for help. God will take care of your problems, just pray! they had been told. Maybe the message you get comes from the guys or maybe even yourself: "Be a man! the message goes, what's the matter, aren't you tough? That kind of stuff is for sissies. Besides somebody might laugh at you."

We have a lot of "reasons" and rationalizations for gutting it out and "doing it our way." Would you let me discuss this with you? Many of the problems counselors see could have been dealt with more simply if people had come in earlier.

In this respect many of our personal problems are similar to cancer. Instead of taking the attitude that it can't happen to me and ignoring the warning signs, we need to realize that all of us are vulnerable and take the healthy preventive steps available. We need to treat seriously early warning signs of trouble. One of the ways to do this is to reach for help.

But let me look at this for a moment from a Christian perspective. Isn't God able to handle my problems? Sure, He can and wants to care for you and meet your needs. It is Jesus who says, "Come unto me all you who are burdened down." Peter's comment is that we can, "Cast all our cares on Him because He cares for us." He is talking about God.

However, one of God's neatest gifts to us is the gift of community. The gift of sharing and caring with and for one another. The picture the Bible uses for this is the picture of a body. When one part of our body hurts, the whole body hurts. The needs of one part of our body will mobilize the rest of the body to the rescue. That is why the Bible says we are to bear one another's burdens, weep with those who weep, as well as rejoice with those who rejoice.

Isn't that what counseling is all about? Whether it is sitting in the office of the professional, sitting at the table drinking a cup of coffee with a trusted friend who genuinely cares, or writing a letter to somebody you heard on the radio.

The point is, we are not islands, we need each other and it is a sign of strength and health to reach out when the warning signals are there, whether we are talking about cancer or a relationship.

I want to add one thought to this. Not only is the person wrong who is too busy or too uncaring to respond to those in need. It is just as wrong to be in need and not reach out. God did not make us to function like that. We were created to be in relationship with Him and with each other. To ignore this reality and get it out on our own is to feed our own self-destruction.

What am I saying? I'm saying that we need a Heavenly Father who cares and we need each other to care. It's OK to admit it, because it's true.

"Growing Space"

"Growing Space" is the title of a new course being offered at 9:15 on Sunday mornings in building 2608 (upstairs) off Dixie Road. It is an opportunity for persons to come together and discover ways to grow as individuals or as families. Come by yourself (married/single) or bring the whole crew. It is a time for discussing, sharing, and learning with each other. How does God get involved in our everyday issues? That's the underlying question! For more information call Chaplain Masteller at 545-1760.

Reconciliation

Pope John Paul II and the Bishops attending the Synod in Rome designated this year, 1984, as the Year of Reconciliation. To help us understand the meaning of reconciliation and the need for it in our lives, the Sisters from Blessed Trinity Shrine Retreat will conduct a three-session workshop on reconciliation.

The sessions will be held March 5, 12, and 19 at the Catholic Education Center (7-9 p.m.). This is an opportunity for persons to prepare for Lent.

PWOC meeting

The monthly meeting of the Protestant Women of the Chapel will be held Wednesday at 9:30 a.m. in the TIC Chapel Center. Helen Shine, mother of Lt. Col. Al Shine, will give a personal testimony for the program. Mrs. Shine lost two sons in Vietnam and has a daughter serving as an Army nurse at Fort Meade, Md., besides Lt. Col. Shine who is stationed here.

Bible School teachers needed

This summer Vacation Bible School will be held at four locations on post: Custer Terrace, McBride School (for McGraw Manor residents), Dexter School (for main post), and Wilson School (for Indianhead Terrace).

The schools will take place June 18-22 for ages 4 years old through junior high school students. Volunteer teachers, helpers, and musicians are needed. Contact Bill Putman at 545-5301 or 544-4915.

Bobby Michaels will sing at several post locations next week.

Christian entertainer presents concert series

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

Bobby Michaels, internationally known Christian entertainer, will be presenting a series of concerts here during the week of March 8-11.

The son of an Air Force colonel, Bobby has been singing for audiences since the age of 8. He has toured the world with the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra and has done spots with the Glenn Miller Band and the Harry James Band in Europe and the U.S. During his four years of ministry to the military in Europe, he has sung to more than 200,000 soldiers and their families.

He and his wife Colleen, who is assistant director of the Zurich Ballet, have an evangelical fellowship in Zurich for English speaking people living there.

Michaels says of his Christian ministry through song: "I have known the Lord as my best friend and personal savior for many years now, and I love to sing His praises and tell how good He truly is."

The following is a schedule of Bobby Michaels' performances on post:

March 8 - 7 p.m. - The School Brigade Chapel (the public is invited)
March 9 - 6:30 a.m. - Breakfast - 36th Engineer Group
4 p.m. - Kelley Hill Theatre (for enlisted soldiers, their families and friends)
5 p.m. - Kelley Hill Recreation Center (for all officers, E-7s and above and their families)
March 10 - 11:30 a.m. & 2 p.m. - Community picnic and concert at the Custer Terrace Family Life Center (the public is invited)
March 11 - 8 a.m. - 1st ITB Chapel
9:30 a.m. - Chapel 4, 1st ITB
11 a.m. - Sightseeing Road Chapel (the public is invited)

Youth Alive group helps special kids

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

Members of "Youth Alive" at the Infantry Center Chapel are finding that being a volunteer can be both a service to their community and just plain fun. Many of them are very much involved with the Army Community Service's (ACS) Exceptional Family Member Program.

This program includes Saturday morning recreational programs and special activities for handicapped children as well as a four-week summer day camp, Camp Smiley. They freely give of their time to play with, talk with, and develop on-going friendships with the children/youth who have varying degrees of physical, emotional, or intellectual handicaps.

Emily Burba, a member of Youth Alive and team chairperson for the exceptional program, brought this program to the attention of the group. Her enthusiasm sparked an interest which led to the commitment of their volunteer services on a regular basis. "They especially enjoyed the Christmas party and are now planning a special Easter celebration," she said. Other future events will include a trip to the putt-putt golf course, a visit to the Bradley Museum and a nature hike and cook-out.

Mary Strickland, ACS coordinator for the Exceptional Member Program for military families, says, "In working with the children, we try to utilize as many resources as possible." She stresses helping them do age appropriate activities on a level they can handle. Mrs. Strickland feels "I can't" is heard too much, and she strives to "aim for success — let's make these kids as successful as they can be."

Through the varied activities of the program, it is hoped that the exceptional child or young person will develop social skills that will make him/her less dependent and will lead to more involvement and a family member in activities the entire family can enjoy together.

Mrs. Strickland praises the involvement of Youth Alive and the dedicated adult volunteers, and urges other persons to give of their time and talents. In addition to the recreation activities and special events, the program also sponsors Girl Scout, Boy Scout, and Cub Scout troops for the handicapped.

Volunteers receive training during a two-hour session on the first Friday of each month. There will be special training sessions for those persons working at Camp Smiley this summer.

"Youth Alive has discovered the joy of being a volunteer in this program, why don't you?" Contact Mary Strickland at 545-1169/1233.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Do I have to pay federal income tax on disability benefits I receive from the VA?

A — No. All benefits received from the VA are exempt from Federal income taxes, however, interest earned on benefits which are directly deposited into savings institutions and interest earned on insurance dividends left on deposit with the VA must be declared as income for Federal income tax purposes.

Q — Can the interest rate on a VA guarantee home loan be changed?

A — If the interest rate at the time the loan is made and set forth in the mortgage note is a fixed non-adjusted rate mortgage, it remains the same for the life of the loan.

Chaplain provides family guidance, counseling

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicity

"The stress of the military only serves to highlight the needy areas in a marriage or family relationship," says Chaplain James Masteller, director of Benning's Family Life Center. He sees the purpose of the center as providing from a pastoral perspective, "professional counseling, guidance and opportunities for growth to the marriages and families of the Fort Benning community."

Working in close rapport with the other helping agencies on post, the center strives to care for the entire family unit through two approaches: intervention and prevention.

For those marriages or families already suffering pain, the center provides crisis intervention and ongoing counseling. Chaplain Masteller refers to this intervention as the "downstream approach" in which counselors "try to pull families out of the troubled water into which they have fallen."

For families that are going relatively well, there are enrichment and educational opportunities that help to make a good relationship even better. This is the "upstream approach" that helps to prevent couples from "drifting into troubled waters."

To keep from "drifting", Chaplain Masteller stresses the need to build self-esteem within the home on the part of all family members. He says, "How we talk to one another, how we support one another and how we build up one another within the intimacy of the family unit is extremely important."

As part of the upstream approach, the center offers workshops on stress management, effective parenting, communication skills and how to deal with involuntary separation. These workshops involve many and varied groups on post: PTA organizations, drill sergeants and their wives, community life groups, the Cadre Training Center and the school system. "We will go wherever the need is," says Chaplain Masteller.

The center coordinates its efforts with the other helping agencies on post, and meets regularly with the Social Work Services, ACS, the Army Community Health Nurse, the Chief of Psychiatry and others.

Presently the Family Life Center is located on Dixie Road in an old complex of buildings known as "Splinter Village," but renovation is underway and the center looks forward to a building which will be well equipped to serve its rapidly expanding ministry.

Early last summer, Chaplain Masteller said, "Few people know that we are here and what we do." He now feels the center is more well-known on post and is excited about the future. He expresses the hope that, "As we pull together with each helping agency contributing its strength, we will serve the soldier and his family more efficiently and effectively, and, hopefully, make Fort Benning an increasingly better place to live."

Warrant officers are select group

What is a warrant? That question was addressed in 1981 by Lt. Gen. Julius W. Becton Jr., who was the commander of VII (U.S.) Corps, West Germany.

At a meeting at that time, he said, "I am concerned that the role of the warrant officers in the Army may be misunderstood by many commanders. In my judgment, the warrant officer is an advisor to the commander on technical matters. He or she accepts the responsibility for the technical functions and technical management of the unit. They train and supervise our NCO's and soldiers with their solid experience and an in-depth knowledge of applicable procedures and directives.

"They are willing to teach, give advice and guide. To the warrant officer, it does not matter if the guidance is provided to superiors or subordinates; it matters that they are respected for the advice given or the deeds accomplished.

"The warrant officer is a select member of the smallest group in the Army, and is often the one in the unit to 'stand up and tell it like it is' to offer and implement a workable solution. Frequently, they are the driving force behind major improvements in the quality of life of our soldiers and in our combat readiness.

"The Army has firmly established the requirement for commissioned officers in all command positions, including the command of highly technical weapons. This is not a reflection of a lack of confidence in the ability of the warrant officer to command, rather, it recognizes most of the responsibilities of command involve non-technical matters.

"The Army is a team and the warrant officers form a critical and important part of that team. Commanders who fail to recognize that, do so at their own risk, for they are denying themselves the benefit of their wealth of experience and technical advice." (WO Assn. Newsletter)

Post requires motorcycle safety classes

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With warmer days becoming prevalent, more and more motorcycles will be seen on the road, and Phyllis Taylor, safety specialist, has offered some things bikers need to know.

"Here it is mandatory that active duty members, family members and civilians, who will ride a motorcyle on Fort Benning, take our motorcycle safety course," Taylor said.

The course is four hours long, and includes three hours of classroom instruction and a road test. The class is given at building 238 between 8 a.m. and noon on alternate Fridays and Saturdays, twice a month.

"The course covers physical loss, protective clothing, vehicle abuse and maintenance, and general rules of the road. The instructors are civilians and are certified by the National Safety Council."

Sergeant First Class Kay Wang, who took the instructors course at Fort Rucker, Ala., through the Motorcycle Safety Foundation, offered these tips for motorcyclists: wear reflective clothing — it is authorized in AR 670-1 when riding while in uniform; wear a full-face helmet — look for the DOT on the back of the helmet, this means it has met all safety standards the Department of Tra... scribes: ...gles; if there is a blowout on the bike, coast to a stop; and use IPDE on the road — Identify hazards, Predict what will happen, Decide what to do and Execute.

The course's scheduled classes for the year are: March 17 and 30, April 14 and 27, May 12 and 25, June 9 and 22, July 7 and 20, Aug. 4 and 17 and Sept. 1, 14 and 29.

155mm Howitzers arrive

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Second Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade (Sep), has some new howitzers, in keeping with their move in going mechanized. Effective mid-September, the battalion was completely changed over from the 105 to the 155 howitzers.

"We got the word that we were getting the howitzers in July. We kept seven of our 105s for school support and turned the rest in. We now have 18 new howitzers," Capt. Richard Jeffries, battalion military intelligence officer said.

He explained the change over to the 155s as more in line with the artillery's abilities. "We have more firepower now and most artillery is a larger caliber. Also, this is standard equipment for a mechanized unit and there aren't any 105s in mechanized units."

The capabilities of the 155s are larger, too. Jeffries explained the maximum range of the 105s is 11,500 meters. For the 155s, the maximum range using conventional ammunition, is 18,100 meters. Using a rocket assisted projectile, the range is 24,000 meters.

"One of the biggest differences is in the size and weight of the rounds used in each kind of owitzer," Jeffries said. "The 155s weigh around 27 tons, the old ones weighed about three and one-half tons. The rounds for the 155s weigh 95 pounds compared to 35 pounds for the 105s."

Getting the crews trained on the 155s didn't prove to be too difficult. "We had two 155s we used for school support, so we started training on them. The new troops coming in from AIT have been trained on the 155s already and as we received the new howitzers, we started training more and more," Jeffries said. In July two batteries were also sent to Fort Stewart to train with the 155 units there.

To be sure everyone was qualified, there was a safety qualifications test given to gunners and gunner chiefs and a gunners test given to everybody. "The gunners test is like a mini SQT and tests knowledge in different areas like maintenance, firing and siting," Jefferies continued.

"About our biggest problem is the availability of ammunition. We have enough to train adequately, just not as much as we would like. In all, we think it's a better system and everyone likes it more," Jefferies said.

Flossing, brushing attack plaque

The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Health Month. It is the fifth in a series of seven on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

Through the years, people have tried about everything to cure periodontal or gum disease, the major cause of the tooth loss in adults. The Romans, for example, believed that loose teeth could be made firm again by tying a whole frog to the jaws. Other treatments have included the application of pomegranate juice, camphor oil, or vinegar cooked with leek juice and honey to the diseased tissues.

None of these remedies helped. This is not surprising when you know that periodontal disease is caused by plaque, a thin film of bacteria and their byproducts that form on the teeth. If not removed daily, plaque produces acids and other waste products that irritate the gums. The gums become swollen, bleed easily and pull away from the teeth.

Mineralized plaque, called calculus or tartar, builds up around the teeth, making them harder to clean. If the disease is not treated, the teeth eventually lose their bony support and fall out or have to be removed.

The good news is that most people can avoid periodontal disease by practicing good oral hygiene and seeing a dentist regularly. To remove plaque, you should brush and floss your teeth thoroughly every day. Toothbrushing cleans plaque from the outer, inner and chewing surfaces of the teeth. Flossing cleans the areas under the gumline and between the teeth, where a toothbrush can't reach.

Although most people brush their teeth, only about 38 percent of them floss daily. Some people do not realize how important flossing is in the prevention of periodontal disease; others do not know how to floss.

Here's the method recommended by the American Dental Association: Take about 18 inches of floss (either waxed or unwaxed) and wind most of it around the middle finger of one hand. Wind the rest around the same finger of the other hand. Holding the floss tightly, gently insert it between the teeth. Curve it into a C-shape against the teeth, and slide it into the space between the gum and the tooth until you feel resistance. Scrape the side of the tooth. Repeat this method for all your other teeth.

Don't be too busy to care for your teeth. Take a few minutes every day to brush and floss and a few hours every year to see your dentist. These simple measures can help you avoid periodontal disease. They're a lot easier — and more effective — than tying a frog to your jaws.

Commentary by Rick Russell
Bayonet Sports Editor

I have been covering a lot of basketball teams in a lot of different basketball tournaments and I have seen a number of games go down to the wire. In everyone of those games that went down to the last second, the team that trailed ended up intentionally fouling their opponents in hopes of getting the ball back.

In the first round of the 2-AAAA Regional tournament, Spencer led by three with less than a minute to go. Following a timeout, three members of the Southwest Macon squad practically attacked Spencer's Melvin Moore. A small shoving contest followed. The officals separated the players and awarded Moore two free throws.

The SW players' intent was to foul the worst free throw shooter Spencer had. They did so in a manner that could have provoked a fight and possibly a technical foul on Moore which would have given them a free throw and the ball out.

In the post basketball tournament, several games have been decided in the final minute of play. Some of the intentional fouls committed reminded me of my football playing days. The only difference is that at least in football you wear pads.

Even during the Youth Activites tourney, teams that were trailing going into the last minute opted to send their opponents to the charity stripe. Most of these kids were only following orders from their coach who was jumping up and down screaming, "Foul somebody. I don't care who, just foul somebody."

Maybe we should make basketball a contact sport. Fit the players in shoulder pads and helmets, at least for the last few minutes of every game.

Or maybe intentional fouls should be treated like technical fouls, one free throw and the ball out, with a two shot technical on the bench when a coach is screaming for violence.

Or maybe players, as well as coaches, should stop and think for a minute. Could it be that if you had played better basketball earlier in the game, you would not be in a situation where you had to foul. And since you didn't, maybe the opponent should have his hand shook instead of slapped?

Modeling or shooting

Wigger spends her time doing both

Trying to find a person that performs on a modeling runway and a rifle range is difficult. Deena Wigger, a 17-year-old Spencer High School junior, is one.

According to one Florida talent manager, "She has a strong chance of becoming a model." In view of her recent shooting performances, she has an equally strong chance of becoming an Olympic contender.

Deena's growing expertise in riflery reached a high in 1983 when she won the title of National Standard Rifle Prone Shooting Champion. With that title came two distinctions, a slot on the U.S. Shooting Team and the opportunity to travel world-wide with a fellow team member whom she loves and admires, her father, two-time Olympic gold medalist, Lones W. Wigger.

Last August, the two traveled with the U.S. Shooting Team to the Pan American Games in Caracas, Venezuela, where she did it again. She won the standard rifle prone competition and set a new Pan American Games record with a score of 591 out of 600.

Commenting on his daughter's performance in the Pan American Games, Lones Wigger said, "It took me one and a half hours to shoot a score of 592 in the men's prone match. Deena shot 591 in the women's prone match in just 45 minutes."

"Pretty soon she's going to match my scores. When she does, I'm going to quit and help carry her equipment around," stated the winner of 93 medals in international shooting matches.

She is training hard to make the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in 1984. The tryouts for the team will be conducted in June. Her intensity will most likely be driven by one major factor, according to her father.

"Deena loves to win," explained Wigger. "She also hates to lose."

In the meantime, this Olympic hopeful is developing another talent, modeling.

"We saw an amazing intensity in her eyes," stated Jim Brandon, president of Brandon Productions, a Florida talent management agency. "The girl has talent. Her future on camera looks bright." (NRA)

Youths kick off soccer season tomorrow

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tomorrow morning at 10, more than 250 youngsters will gather on Gordon Field for the opening ceremonies of the 1984 Youth Activities soccer leagues.

According to soccer commissioner Jim England, it is a steadily growing program on the post, "I have been involved in the YA soccer program for about four years now and it has grown each year. Last year we had just as many kids playing soccer as they did playing football during the same time period."

England sees several advantages to the sport.

"The sport is not as injury prone as other sports. I also think that it helps the kids to develop their coordination better with the fast pace of the game," explained the newly appointed commisioner. "It gives the kids a chance to demonstrate both individual and team characteristics."

The sport's popularity here is two-fold, according to England.

"The cost of operating a soccer league is minimal and that makes it a good youth sport," stated England. "I also believe that the overseas contact that a lot of the kids have had with European soccer, being military family members, has increased the sports popularity here at least."

There are 18 teams, two more than last year, in three different leagues divided according to age groups. There will be eight teams in the Termite Division, 6-8 year-olds; six teams in the Pee Wee Division, 9-11 year-olds; and four teams in the Junior Division, 12-15 year-olds.

The divisional champions will be determined from regular season play. There will be no post-season tournaments. There is the possiblity of play-off games should the league standings end in a tie. England also hopes to get a few teams scheduled to play teams from downtown Columbus.

"We hope to have a few squads from each of the various divisions compete against downtown teams," concluded England. "I know we have the talent and coaching available here to compete with those kids and we have fared pretty well in the past."

2-10th cannoneers unload on 7th Battalion to capture USAIC basketball title

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The finals of the USAIC basketball tournament pitted A Battery, 2-10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade against 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Briagde.

Seventh Battalion had previously defeated A Btry. 53-47 in the finals of the winners' bracket in this double-elimination tournament.

A Btry. then defeated B Company, 2-69th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade 60-52 to earn the right to play 7th Bn. in the championship game. A Btry. needed back-to-back wins to take the post title to Kelley Hill and they got them.

The first game was all A Btry. due to Baron Ransome's 24 and Donald Benjamin's 20 points. They blew the game open six minutes into the contest taking an 18-8 lead and they never looked back handing undefeated 7th Bn. a convincing 78-47 defeat.

The "if" game started out to be a close one with both teams trading buckets. 7th Bn.'s Larry Swint hit a short jumper with 5:10 remaining in the first-half to give them a confortable 27-17 lead.

Alvin Hawthorne (35) goes up for two against Donald Benjamin (24) in the tournament finals.

Hawthorne's shot gave them a three-point lead. It would be their last.

A Btry. was not about to give up after coming this far. They outscored 7th Bn. 11-2 in the final minutes to go into the lockerroom one-point down, 31-30.

Alvin Hawthorne, who led 7th Bn. in scoring in the first game with 22 points, gave them a three-point lead at 33-30 by hitting his first shot of the second-half. It would be their last lead.

A Btry. scored six unanswered points to take the lead at 36-33. Swint hit another field goal to pull his team to within one. A Btry. then reeled off six unanswered points again to take a commanding 42-35 lead with 14:04 left.

7th Bn. cut the lead to 44-41 on a bucket by Gilbert Butts. But that would be the closest they would get as A Btry. went on to defeat 7th Bn. 68-55. Ransome led A Btry. again in scoring with 18. His teammates Benjamin, Holly Hollin and Gains Owens had 16, 15 and 12 respectively.

Hawthorne had 16 for 7th Bn. Swint and George Todd each added 15 points in the losing effort.

Two champions crowned, the third decided tonight

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Youth Activities basketball leagues have crowned two divisional champions and a third will be crowned tonight. The Spurs will take on the Warriors in the championship game of the Junior Division in the YA Gym beginning at 5:30.

Both of the tournament champions in the Termite and Pee Wee divisions were also the regular season champions.

Termite Division

The Lakers rebounded from their 13-11 loss to the Eagles in the finals of the winners' bracket by shutting out the Warriors 18-0. Eddie White paced the Laker attack with 10 points. The victory set up a rematch between the Lakers and the Eagles.

The Lakers forced the tournament into an "if" game by defeating the Eagles 11-8. White lead the Lakers with 5 points. Dwight Toney had six for the Eagles in a losing effort.

The championship game was completely dominated by the Lakers as they ran the Eagles out of the gym, 18-6. Matthew Saver lead the Lakers to the divisional title with 10 points while his teammate, White, added six.

Lakers (18) — White 10, Saver 6, Day 2.
Warriors (0).

Lakers (11) — White 5, Saver 2, Day 2, Luckey 2.
Eagles (8) — Toney 6, Taylor 2.

Termite Championship

Lakers (18) — Saver 10, White 6, Luckey 2.
Eagles (6) — Toney 4, Hawkins 2.

Pee Wee Division

The Courtmasters won the regular season title and began their tournament play with a 36-20 victory over the Hawks. Kevin Owens, who has led the Courtmasters all season long, scored 18 and Daryl Norris added 12.

The Nuggets, who lost their first round game to the Lakers, bounced back to down the Blazers 29-19. Michael Wardlaw had 14 and his Nugget teammate Travis Dumas added 11.

The Courtmasters defeated the Lakers in the finals of the winners' bracket behind Owen's 21 point performance 40-18. Edwardo Smith had eight to lead the Lakers.

Wardlaw had a tournament high 25 points in the Nuggets 35-21 win over the Hawks. The Hawks' Kris Profitt had 13.

The Lakers set up a rematch in the finals against the Courtmasters by downing the Nuggets 31-29. Thomas Clausell led the Lakers' assault with 15.

The Courtmasters outscored the Lakers 10-2 in the second quarter enrout to a 30-15 victory for the division title. Owens led the Courtmasters with 16 points. The Lakers were led by Terrance Branch's 5.

Courtmasters (36) — Owens 18, Norris 12, Stilwell 4, Langhorne 2.
Hawks (20) — McNiel 10, Profitt 6, Leonard 4.

Spencer's 22-5 season ends in regional tourney

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Spencer High School basketball team had their season come to an end last Friday night in Macon, Ga., during the first round of the 2-AAAA Regional tournament.

Leading by as many as 11 during the third quarter, the Greenwave fell to Southwest Macon in overtime 64-63.

"The kids had a super, super season going 22-5," stated head coach Speedy Gilstrap. "They played their hearts out up to the final tick."

Spencer was not intimidated by the taller SW team. Using their speed and a tough defense, Spencer built a 5-point halftime lead.

The Greenwave increased their margin to 36-25 with six straight unanswered points to open the third period. Both teams traded baskets for the remainder of the quarter and Spencer went into the final stanza with a 46-37 lead and visions of sectional play.

Southwest was not ready to give up their own hopes for sectional play and came out for the fourth period loaded for bear. They out scored the Greenwave 11-3 to pull to within one at 49-48 with 4:35 remaining.

Spencer Alex Freeman, a Fort Benning family member, then slammed home two in a row to give the Greenwave a little breathing room at 53-48.

Southwest battled back with four straight free throws to pull to within one again at 53-52. Freeman slammed another one home to give Spencer a three-point lead with just over three minutes to go.

A field goal and two more free throws gave SW their first lead 56-55. Spencer's Ed Hall converted a three-point play to give the lead back to the Greenwave.

The two determined and evenly matched squads traded baskets and the lead until with just 22 seconds remaining in regulation Spencer's Mario Martin connected on one out of two free throws to give his team a 63-60 lead.

Southwest drove down the court and attempted a shot with 16 seconds left. Freeman rejected it. SW's Terrance Howard retrieved the loose ball and fired up a 30 footer. The shot rimmed off but a foul was called on Spencer's Joe Johnson, another post family member.

Howard hit the first and missed the second. Freeman cleared the boards and was fouled with just 10 seconds left. He missed the front end of a one and one. Terry Reese grabbed the rebound and took it the length of the court. Reese let loose with a 20 footer that hit nothing but net to tie the score as the final buzzer sounded.

The tip went to SW in the overtime. They stalled the ball until the clock read 39 seconds. A traveling call gave Spencer the ball.

Spencer's Mike Scott missed a layup and the rebound went out of bounds to the Greenwave. Their inbounds pass was stolen and SW was given new life.

Following a timeout, SW went into their stall again. Another traveling call with six seconds left gave the ball back to Spencer. After working the ball into Martin, he was fouled with just two seconds left in the overtime.

He hit the first one and SW called timeout. "A grave coaching error," according to Gilstrap, then accured.

When the two teams went back on the court, Hall and Smith lined up on the lane. Martin's shot bounced off and SW's Steve Grayer got the rebound. He looked up court and prepared to throw the last chance pass. He never got it off because Hall came down across his arms trying to deflect the pass.

Grayer sank both free throws and Spencer's hopes of sectional play.

"It was a bad move on my part," stated Gilstrap. "They should have never been in that situation."

Weather, course conditions help golfers

The first golf tournament of 1984 at the Follow Me Golf Course was conducted last Saturday on the Lakeside course.

The weather and condition of the 18-hole course improved the scores of the four-ball scramble tournament.

A field of 115 golfers, 28 four-person teams, attacked the course with great success. Only one team failed to shot par, 72.

The winning team of Scott Wilson, Doug Thomas, Bill Guinn and Joe Tillman shot 13-under par, 59. They were two shots ahead of the second place team.

The results of the tournament were as follows:

Four-ball Scramble

1st	Scott Wilson Doug Thomas Bill Guinn Joe Tillman	59	4th	Joe Thieman Bill Johnson Benny Cruz Chas Darnell	64
2nd	Fred Wadsworth Jr. Del Williams Lee Henderson Egon Taylor	61	5th	Jim Carpenter Frank Mobley Geo Prestridge Jim Matthews	64
3rd	Joe Lowder Jack Greeney Jim Baty Thomas Brothers	63

All ties were broken by reverse scorecard playoffs starting on the 18th hole.

Largest field ever descends on Seminole

The largest field ever in a Red Man Tournament Trail bass fishing event will descend upon Lake Seminole Sunday. A record 382 fishermen, 22 over the normal limit, are entered in the first Bulldog Division tournament for 1984.

"The Bulldog Division was number one on the 1983 Red Man Trail in participation," said tournament director Charlie Evans. "We expected a large number of entries for Lake Seminole because there are a lot of good quality fishermen in that area."

Fishermen had until Feb. 22 to enter the Lake Seminole event, but the tournament was full on Feb. 9. All entries postmarked with that date were accepted.

The anglers will be vying for $19,100 in total prize money, with the winner earning $4,775. Cash awards go to the top 10 percent of the field; in this tournament, it's the top 38 finishers.

The huge field is headed by Tony Wilson of Woodstock, Ga., who placed fifth in the Red Man All American Championship last year. Also fishing on Lake Seminole will be Jim Haddon of Tallahassee, Fla., who finished sixth in the All American and Bob Hardin of Leesburg, Ga., who placed 13th in the championship.

Among the Lake Seminole competitors will be the top two fishermen for 1983 out of the Bulldog Division: Clark Gable of Douglasville, Ga., and Billy Thompson of Albany, Ga. Of the top 24 Bulldog Division finalists for 1983, 20 are entered in the Lake Seminole event, out of Wingate's Lunker Lodge.

Competition will begin at dawn on Sunday. Each fisherman is paired by computer with a partner to assure the integrity of the tournament. Weigh-in will begin around 3 p.m.

The Bulldog Division is one of 15 geographical divisions that make up the Red Man Tournament Trail. The second Bulldog tournament will be held April 1 on Lake Lanier near Gainesville, Ga. Registration deadline is March 21.

For entry information, call or write Operation Bass, Rt. 2, Box 74B, Gilbertsville, Ky. 42044. Telephone (502) 362-4880. Entry fees for the one-day events are $50 each, and a fisherman must also join Operation Bass. One hundred percent of the entry money is paid back as cash awards along the trail.

In addition to cash awards, fishermen are earning points to qualify for post-season competition. The top 24 anglers from each of the 15 divisions move to one of three regional tournaments in October. Each regional winner receives a Ranger bass boat and a Dodge Ram Tough truck.

The 12 finalists from each of the three regional tournaments will compete in the Red Man All American Championship Oct. 30 to Nov. 3. These 36 fishermen will be competing for the first place prize of $100,000 in cash. (Operation BASS)

SCOTT WINS
SALESMAN OF THE YEAR

Al Callahan, (R) General Mgr., presents Salesman Of The Year Award to Clif Scott.

We congratulate Clif Scott as salesman of the year for 1983. Clif has been with us four years and this is his second consecutive Salesman Of The Year Award.
Clif thanks his many friends, fellow college students, and military friends for making this award possible. Clif invites you to see him at Bill Russell Ford for the best buy on a new Ford or A-1 Used Car.

'More Army for the dollar'

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning became $1 million richer Tuesday when Training and Doctrine Command's CG, General Willam R. Richardson presented the check for that amount to Maj. Gen. Jim Lindsay, post commander, and Lt. Gen. Sam Wetzel, former post commander, in Marshall Auditorium.

The million-dollar check was the bonus the post received for winning the SPIRIT competition by being TRADOC's most efficient and cost-cutting post.

The SPIRIT program is TRADOC's way of providing "More Army for the Dollar."

Each one of the 17 TRADOC installations was challenged to find more economical ways to operate during the last fiscal year. Under the SPIRIT program, all money saved would remain with the installation. These savings were to be "earmarked" to be used for high priority, but unfinanced needs on the installation.

The TRADOC commander congratulated the Fort Benning population for their efforts to cut costs. He reminded the audience that resources meant more than money. Gen. Richardson said, "Resources are people, time and money. You and I who call ourselves leaders, managers and commanders, always have the responsibility for using people in the most effective and most efficient way.

"We have infinite resources in the Department of Defense, Department of the Army, Training and Doctrine Command, and the Infantry Center. In order to do our business there is never enough. It is important for us that we make the effective use of those resources," he continued.

Fort Benning exceeded its $2.65 million goal by more than 800 percent — turning in savings of more than $26 million.

When he accepted the check on behalf of the people of Fort Benning, Gen. Lindsay urged them not to become "complacent," saying, "We can't rest on our laurels. We're off to a good start, but not a great

MPs win safety award

Military Police Activity (MPA) won the Commanding General's Annual Safety Award for Fiscal Year 1983. MPA had an 84 percent decrease in accident/injury experience over their FY 82 record and edged out second place Headquarters Command's decrease of 81 percent.

The award was presented Feb. 22 to Col. Curtis Earp, provost marshal, by Col. Neal Christensen, deputy post commander, in his office.

The MPA had no fatal accidents or permanently disabling injuries in 2.4 million manhours of exposure. Only nine mandays were lost through injuries during the entire fiscal year. Two on-duty vehicle accidents accounted for six of the lost days, and a third accident involving an off-duty motorcycle incident resulted in three lost days.

The money saved by a good safety record is considerable, but these figures tend to become almost theoretical for those of us not intimately concerned with budgets.

A good accident prevention program keeps people and equipment on the job.

Judges pick best Jodie calls

The Jodie contest is over and the winners are announced on page 10. Awards will be given to the top four Jodies in each category. The best in each division is published today and more will follow in future BAYONET editions.

Free 'Tank' showings

Irwin Yablans, producer of "Tank," the movie that was partially filmed at Fort Benning last year, has announced four special free showings on post Tuesday and Wednesday.

Yablans said a special showing for guests invited by Lorimar/Universal Pictures will begin at 6 p.m. Tuesday, at the Main Post Theater (Theater one), followed by a showing at 8:30 p.m. for military personnel and their families.

Also on Tuesday at 6 and 8:30 p.m., there will be showings for military personnel and their families at the Kelley Hill Theater (Theater four).

On Wednesday, there will be showings for military personnel and their families at the Main Post and the Sand Hill (Theater three) theaters at 6 and 8:30 p.m.

"Tank" stars James Garner, Shirley Jones and several bit players from Fort Benning.

Civilian vs military

Cost makes biggest difference in medical care

Betty Zimmerman

I am climbing on my soap box today because I feel some people are overly critical of medical care provided by the military services.

You see, nothing gripes me more than unfounded griping, and I feel most complaints are unjustified.

If you have ever been a complainer, here is some food for thought for you.

Have you ever considered the unfairness in blowing up an isolated incident into an overall denouncement of all military medical care?

Some unappreciative patrons seem to enjoy griping about the incessant waiting, assembly-line atmosphere, inept doctors, incompetent staff, and on and on.

Their moans make me groan. I was a recipient of Army medical care for 21 years, first as a daughter and then as a wife, before a divorce put me in the hands of civilian physicians for the last 15 years.

In my opinion, there is only one difference — the cost!

Take the waiting for instance — it's just as bad in civilian clinics and doctor's offices as it is in military facilities. In fact, it's worse because you know you are paying anywhere from $20 to $50 for the right to wait. Appointments sound nice until you find out 10 other patients have one for the same time you do.

The assembly-line complaint stems from obstetric care patients more than any other service. I feel I am eminently qualified to tear into their arguments.

Four of my sons were born in Army hospitals and one at Columbus' Medical Center. The first four cost something near $5.85 each and the bill for the last one, 12 years ago, was approximately $3,000.

There was very little difference in the care during the pre-natal period or in the hospital. My civilian doctor had joined forces with three other physicians and I saw any one of them during my checkups, just as it was in the Army clinic.

Appointments still meant waiting. The surroundings were nicer — antique furnishings instead of clinical plastics, but the time didn't pass any faster if the doctor was called away to the delivery room or had many other patients ahead of me.

And remember, vitamins, blood tests, x-rays, urine tests, etc., that are free at military hospitals cost money downtown.

Then there's the broad statement: "Oh, but the doctors downtown are so much better, the care is worth paying for."

Doctors are good or bad on an individual basis — not because they are in the military service or not. In fact, nearly everyone of the civilian physicians any of my family has seen have served in one of the military services before; many were retired military.

Incompetent staff members — aides, orderlies, nurses, etc. — show up everywhere. However, they are more apt to work in local rather than military hospitals because of the pay scales.

Employees at Martin Army Community Hospital are paid more than their peers downtown. Therefore, they generally work hard to keep their jobs. The low pay locally causes a rapid turnover in the more menial positions especially, and therefore the workers may not be as dedicated. The standards are the same as long as it is an accredited facility.

What all this boils down to is — when someone makes generalized complaints about bad medical care in military facilities because of some isolated incident, they are doing all military medical care a gross injustice.

A recent accident to one of my family cost $3,014 for three days in the hospital and $2,400 for the surgeon. Sure insurance paid the biggest portion of this — but not all. And too, insurance costs money!

Her physician is a retired Navy commander and one of the best eye surgeons in the city. In our opinion, he is a super doctor.

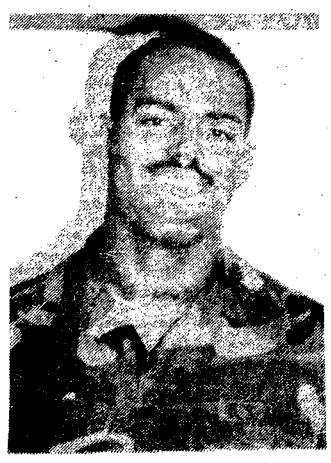
The majority of the staff members were also outstanding, but there were a couple who fell short. However, that doesn't mean we will criticize the entire Medical Center staff or civilian medical care in general because of one or two inadequacies.

All I ask is that you think before you do your bad mouthing. Would you like to be totally condemned for each little mistake you make? Free medical care is an enormous benefit for military families, and as such deserves credit for its accomplishments and discreet forgiveness for its shortcomings.

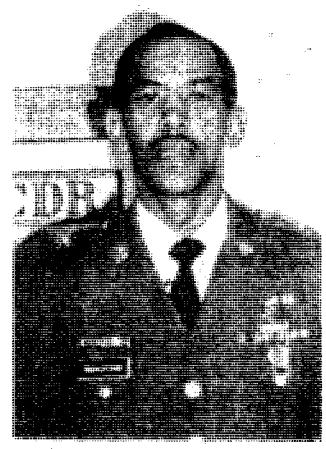
Various voices

How do you compare military medical services to civilian medical services?

Sp4 Bryan Happell, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade — The Army has its own way of doing things, but it operates in a more professional manner, I think. Also, there is always a good attitude in the hospital.



Sp4 Natonga Sherrell, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — The military services are faster and the overall job is done better. Besides, the price is right.



SSgt. James R. Beauford, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade — In the military, that's their job to treat people. In civilian medical services, it seems like the people are only interested in the money.

Letters

Dear Editor:

I would like to publicly thank Dr. Nieves of Martin Army Community Hospital for the very special care I received from him when he treated me for a severe case of bronchitis in January of this year.

As a military dependent, I have received medical care at MACH for many years, but have never encountered a doctor there who showed as much interest in me as an individual and in my medical problems as Dr. Nieves.

I am quite sure tht all of his other patients are treated with the same genuine concern and professional efficiency, and I would like to thank Dr. Nieves on their behalf also.

Sincerely,
Erna Sylvester

start this year. . . we need to get more information exchanged here on post."

How the million-dollar bonus will be spent has not been made at this time. According to Joseph Chapla, Director of Resource Management, commanders and directorate heads have been asked to provide suggestions as to how the money should be spent.

The SPIRIT program and the bonus is a departure from older, less efficient methods of saving the Army dollar. Previously, any funds that were saved by a unit being more efficient were lost. "Before the SPIRIT program," said Dot Russell, SPIRIT coordinator, commenting on why the program was so successful at Benning, "We were working on a 'use it or lose it' basis. This did not really encourage savings. The SPIRIT concept appealed to everyone because the money stayed right here at home."

The Army's Fit to Win program represents a lot more than simply a new way to do PT. It's a comprehensive fitness program combining nutrition, exercise physiology, stress management, control of substance abuse, and proper personal, family and unit health habits.

The goal is to combine personnel, health care, training and logistical policies and activities into a program that will improve combat readiness by producing officers, NCOs, soldiers and units that are more physically, mentally and emotionally fit.

In order to accomplish this goal, the Army has set up certain guidelines to follow. These are: physical fitness is the commander's program; the leader must be the role model; soldiers age 40 and over must have a physical examination before they start an exercise program; training programs must prepare soldiers for the physical and mental rigors of combat; one physical fitness program will not adequately serve all members of the command.

In order to insure the success of the Fit to Win program, the whole Army is supporting it. The Army Medical Department has set up health and fitness advisory teams in Army community hospitals to provide medical support to installation fitness programs. Also, a 'fitness facilitator' serves as the medical expert for fitness activities, including anti-smoking education, stress management, weight control through proper diet and nutrition and physical conditioning.

To increase nutritional awareness, the 'Eater's Almanac' was developed and placed in Army Commissaries to educate consumers on nutrition and provide practical ways to change dietary habits.

The Surgeon General is currently developing a new positive physical profile approach of focusing on what the soldiers can do instead of what they can't do.

A pinch test is used in the weight control program when a soldier's weight exceeds published table weight standards or their appearance suggests excessive body fat. Only trained medical specialists administer the test. Before soldiers are entered in the weight control program, they are medically screened.

Weight loss programs vary with each command. One program on every installation is the offering of low calorie meals to soldiers through the Army dining facilities. There is a revision to AR 40-25 which will have dining facilities offer 1500-1600 calorie per day menus featuring three nutritionally adequate meals with about 500 dietary fat calories each.

Chief of Staff's statement recognizes family's importance

The family has not always been recognized as important to the Army or to the performance of its mission. But that idea is gone.

Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., Army chief of staff, issued a joint announcement with Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. on the Army family in January that conveys their importance.

"The Army Family is the Army's theme for 1984.

"The Army is a family in several ways. The total Army is one family — active, Army National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers, civilian employees, retirees and their family members. Another exists within each unit and in the relationship of units of a command or on an installation. Finally, each of us is a member of a natural family unit. The combination of all these is critical to readiness.

"We are moving forward on several fronts to foster a sense of family. Leadership and management actions, regimental affiliation and the broadening of the COHORT experiment are working to strengthen the bond among soldiers. The family action plan should ensure that the needs and welfare of the family members throughout the Army receive the attention they deserve. But most important will be the atmosphere of leading and caring created by the chain of command.

"We call on every member of the total Army to dedicate this year to doing everything possible to increase the spirit of family in the Army."

Drivers, vehicles maneuver through roadeo

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There were hundreds of horses working out at Leyte Helipad Friday when the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, held its Truck Roadeo.

The horses weren't "hayburners" or "bucking broncs," they were the more than 400 horses trapped under the hood of the company's M915 tractors.

The unit normally supports the 197th Infantry Brigade, hauling equipment across country when it leaves Fort Benning to conduct exercises.

Last year the 533rd logged more than 405,000 miles, almost the distance to the moon and back, doing its job of getting supplies to the soldier.

During "Operation Lifeline," a logistical exercise conducted on the east coast of the U.S., the 533rd logged more than 177,000 accident-free miles.

The seven-event competition was open to all members of the battalion.

Some of the situations looked rather easy until you realized that it wasn't the family car that the soldiers were driving but the three main vehicles of the transportation company.

There were three phases of the competition: jeeps, two-and one-half-ton trucks and the monster eighteen wheelers, the M915s. The competition was stiff; the spaces the drivers had to move through were only four inches wider than the tires of the vehicles.

The first event required the driver to move his vehicle through an "offset alley." Once the driver "threaded the needle" with his vehicle, he had to make a sharp turn and thread the needle again to get out of the obstacle. This event simulated moving through a crowded depot with a load of equipment or ammunition.

This event seems like a piece of cake, every day you can see soldiers driving their vehicles through the mall parking lot, looking for parking spaces — but not with a 20-ton tractor trailer.

Bill Reynolds

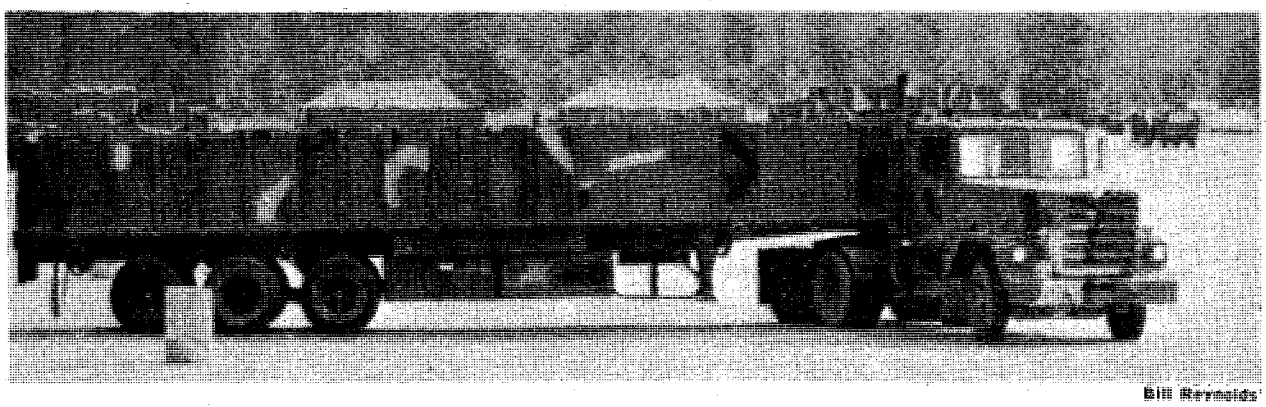
The deuce and a half driver has only four inches of clearance between the bumpers and the barrels.

After that event, the drivers had to back up their vehicles to a loading dock. This time the challenge was to come as close as you could without touching the dock.

Each task became more challenging than the one before: the "serpent" required drivers to move vehicle and trailer through an obstacle course that was four inches longer and wider than the vehicle — backwards. According to Swanson, these situations occur almost daily in the routine of a driver getting to his load and getting the equipment to the troops.

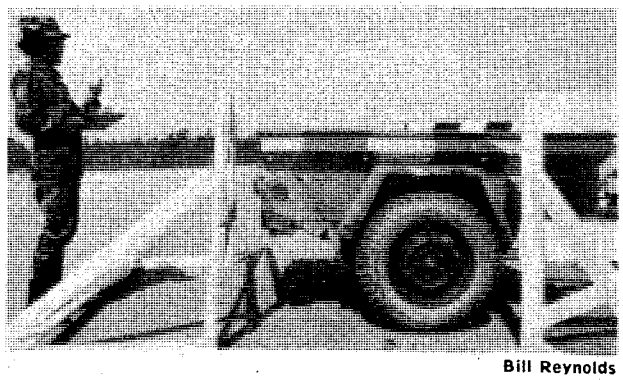
The last event tested the driver's ability to pick a spot and stop his vehicle. A white line was painted on the ground and the driver had to drive up to it and stop. It seemed easy until you realized that the closer the driver got to the line — the less he could see. The winner of this event was the soldier that could literally "stop on a dime."

The overall winners of the rodeo were:
Pvt. Scott Henry, 533rd Trans. Co.....1/4 ton
Sgt. Donald Webber, 533rd Trans. Co.....2 1/2 Ton
Sp 4 Lewis Hunter, 608th Ordnance Co.....M915



Bill Reynolds

Sp4 Lewis Hunter threads the needle by driving his 18-wheeler through the maze of barrels.



Bill Reynolds

Sp5 Carolyn Connelley checks to see how close the drivers come to the obstacles without touching them.

Sgt. Derric Jackson, quality control NCO, 533rd Transportation Company, checks his trailor's clearance as he attempts to get through the offset alley without a scratch.

Fort Benning has a new military operations on urban terrain (MOUT) site. Col. Michael Ward, 36th Engineer Group commander, presented the "keys" to the "town" of Deutschberg to Post Commander Maj. Gen. Jim Lindsay during the formal dedication ceremony last week.

Deutschberg, consisting of 30 buildings (15 freestanding), plus an extensive external sewer system obstacle, was built as a facsimile of a German village.

"It was built by the 43rd Engineer Battalion, as an additional mission, over a period of 2½ years," said Lt. Col. Steve Draper, 43rd commander. "Our mission is to support the U.S. Army Infantry Center and to train for readiness as a combat heavy engineer battalion in the Rapid Deployment Force. Plus, we deployed an 111-man contingent to Honduras during this period."

The three construction companies in the battalion, B, C and D, were given an equal part of the village for construction. Each company spent one month in MOUT construction, followed by one month of Rapid Deployment Force training and one month of USAIC support. Company A provided the necessary heavy equipment for excavation and the sewer system obstacle was built by the 586th Engineer Company.

The village includes offices, stores, a school, apartment buildings, repair shops, a Gasthaus, a bakery and a butcher shop plus individual houses, all of concrete block construction.

"Our soldiers worked in all sorts of weather and at night to finish this job."

Three buildings have flat roofs that allow safe rappelling from helicopters. Three more buildings are built as shells that can conceal a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle or a tank.

Current tactical doctrine dictates that first floor windows or doors are not to be used to enter buildings, so all buildings have been provided with "mouseholes" to simulate the blasting of holes in the walls. All buildings over one-story high have grappling hook bars built into the windows, to save wear and tear.

The buildings are not only functional but they include some of the amenities as well, such as shutters on the windows, signs and flower boxes painted on the walls and a clock on the school steeple. Deutschberg's city crest appears on the city hall and the town well is in place in the center of the village.

"Thanks to the dedication, enthusiasm and professionalism of our soldiers, the construction was finished about seven percent ahead of schedule and well under the projected cost," said Draper. "We saved money by early purchase of materials, by redesigning several buildings, and by reducing our concrete block breakage. The money saved allowed the addition of 800 linear feet of concrete road, two additional buildings and the sewer system obstacle.

"Our soldiers worked in all sorts of weather and at night to finish this job," added Draper.

The first assault on Deutschberg was made during the dedication ceremony by the 187th Pathfinder Detachment (ABN-INF) rappelling from a UH-60 Black Hawk and Company D, 1-29 Infantry, in Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles with artillery simulation and smoke provided by the 43rd. After a brisk battle, the OPFOR aggressors were routed and the Infantry School flag was hoisted over the city hall indicating that Deutschburg had been "liberated".

Bill Walton

Having cleared Deutschberg's city hall of aggressors, soldiers of the 187th Pathfinder Det. (Abn-Inf) race across Silberstrasse to assault another building, as troops of Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, provide support.

After rappelling onto Deutschberg's city hall roof, soldiers of the 187th Pathfinder Det. (Abn-Inf) go over the side to clear the building of aggressors.

Marshal's Viewpoint

By Curtis D. Earp
Post Provost Marshal

Rape is the most frequently committed violent crime against women in the United States, with such an attack occurring approximately every two minutes. These are only the reported cases.

Rape is more than just a statistic. It is a sexual act forced on a woman against her will. It is a violation of her body and mind which can leave both physical and psychological humiliation.

Who are the potential victims? The answer often assumed is the elusive "somebody else - it can't happen to me." Wrong! Rape knows no color, no ethnic grouping and no age limit. There is no one type of victim nor is there "one type" of sex offender. A rapist looks for a vulnerable passive victim without regard to provocative attire or gestures.

It is estimated that about one-half of all sex crime offenders are known to the victim. Relationships range from casual acquaintances to close friendships. In calendar year 1983, there were 20 reported cases of rape on Fort Benning as opposed to 15 in 1982. A large number of the offenders were known to the victim.

The following are a few suggestions, that if heeded, may prevent you or a loved one from becoming a rape victim:

- Never hitchhike or accept rides from strangers or enter a vehicle with a group of males that you only casually know.
- If possible, never walk alone. Statistics prove that nearly all rape victims were alone when attacked.
- Walk in well lighted areas.
- When driving, keep your doors locked and windows closed.
- If car problems occur on the road, raise the hood and remain in the car. If a motorist stops, ask him to call the police and a tow truck.
- Avoid dark alleys, doorways or isolated areas.
- Never jog at night alone.
- Do not respond to cat calls, whistles or remarks.

If you become a rape victim and it occurs on post, call the military police at 545-5222 or go directly to Martin Army Community Hospital. Rape victims are treated before all others, except those in life threatening situations. A nurse will escort you to an examination room and offer to call a qualified hospital counselor.

A staff doctor will examine the victim and fill out the necessary legal medical forms that will be used as evidence in court. Military police officials will meet with the victim to obtain some information or arrange to meet with her later.

If the assault occurred off post, the

The transient lifestyle of the military has posed some problems with earning a college degree for many. One institution which is doing something about that problem is Indiana Institute of Technology (IIT).

Their Extended Studies Program has been developed around the theme, "The World Is Our Campus" and offers a bachelor of science or associate in science in business administration.

All courses are identical in content to those offered on the Indiana Tech Fort Wayne campus. The big difference is that all courses can be completed by directed independent study wherever you are in the world. No residency is required, so a college degree can be earned without ever having to go to the college's campus. For transient adults with limited leave time, this is a real help.

Transfer credits can be accepted from previous college work as well as CLEP, PEP, or DANTES (USAFI) examinations. Additionally, a portfolio of life experience may be submitted for evaluation for credit after enrolling in the first course.

Indiana Tech has been approved for VA benefits and is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools.

For a bulletin or additional information, please write: Indiana Institute of Technology Extended Studies Program Central, Room 306, 107 Campbell Avenue, S.W., Roanoke, Va. 24034 or call toll free 800 378-3788 and ask for Chip Miller.

Soldier's 'mistake' now a success

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Sp4 Lawanna A. Stringfield, administrative specialist, 36th Engineer Group, joined the Army, she thought she had made a big mistake. The 25-year-old awards clerk had just been promoted to a new job two weeks after she signed the contract to become a soldier.

According to Stringfield, she joined the military to "find out what was the difference between military and civilian life." Even though her military career got off to a rocky start, Stringfield decided to stay after basic training. "At this point in my military career," said Stringfield, "I've really enjoyed it. I think it's the best thing that ever happened to me."

After attending Mississippi Valley State College, where she received a bachelor of science degree in business administration, and taking a whirl at the business world, she entered the Army. She had become bored with her job in the word processing section of a ship-building firm. "I was trained on COBOL and FORTRAN in college," commented Stringfield, "and I was really discouraged by the job that I had. But you have to start at the bottom and work your way up."

After getting through basic training, Stringfield got a chance to show the Army what she could do by completing the 71L course in just eight days. She achieved a "first time Go" through the self-paced course and went on to her assignment in Germany.

While she was in Germany, assigned to the 3rd Armored Division, she was able to continue her interest in track and field events by making the 1983 U.S. Army Europe track and field team. She also captured a slot on the 1982 USAREUR softball team. Stringfield was also named a "Distinguished Marne Soldier."

She was assigned to the 36th Engineer Group after leaving Germany where she has alternately served as the executive secretary to the group commander and the awards clerk. She has been commended for taking the six-month backlog in awards and reorganizing the system to ensure timely processing.

Stringfield's attitude has undergone a 180-degree change since her days in basic. She has just reenlisted because she says "There's success here!"

Sp4 Lawanna Stringfield decides the Army is the best place to be after all.

Mechanized squads field train realistically

By Toney Calloway
197th Inf. Bde. Correspondent

"This course reinforced the theory that practice makes perfect!"

The 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mech) (Sep) "Patriots," conducted a mechanized gunnery exercise at Ware Range, last month.

"The exercise's purpose was to provide mechanized infantry squads from the Patriots the opportunity and challenges of engaging a variety of sequentially appearing targets," said Maj. Reginald Morrison, battalion training officer. "Moving and stationary targets along a three-and-a-half kilometer course were engaged with live ammunition in a simulated tactical situation."

A total of 23 squads negotiated the course. Each line company squad was placed in a scenario in which it was an element of the company's lead platoon in a movement-to-contact. The scout squads were given the scenario of conducting a screening mission in the battalion's movement-to-contact.

The exercise was conducted in two phases, dry and wet. The dry run phase was conducted Feb. 16 and 17. This allowed the squads to maneuver over the winding course by platoon to familiarize them with the route, engagement areas and control measures.

The live fire phase was conducted Feb. 18-20. Each squad, under tactical control of their platoon leader, and administrative safety control by the tower and safety noncommissioned officer accompanying the squad, negotiated the course.

Along the course, which was designed for the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, the squads engaged, at seven firing points, a variety of targets from pop-up two-man sagger teams, infantrymen and stationary BMPs, to silhouettes of Soviet vehicles moving at 15 miles-per-hour.

Most firing during the exercise was by track commanders (TC) firing the M-2 .50-caliber machine gun and by M-60 machine gunners firing from the vehicles' cargo hatch. However, on the final point, the remainder of the squad got involved in the action when they dismounted and maneuvered to engage a series of pop-up Infantry targets as the TC blazed away at enemy armored vehicles that appeared before him.

Each squad was evaluated not only on their ability to engage targets but also on assembly area actions, reporting procedures and basic crew drills, such as changing of the .50-caliber machine gun barrel.

SSgt. Clinton Daley led the first squad, second platoon, of the C Company "Cougars," in achieving the battalion's highest overall score on this demanding course.

"In general, most soldiers were surprised at the difficulty of engaging the targets," said Daley. "This course reinforced the theory that "practice makes perfect!"'

One of the features of Ware Range that helps make the mechanized gunnery exercise so realistic and challenging is that the action of the targets is controlled by a computerized console located in the range tower.

The targets could be exposed in any sequence for any amount of time up to 60 seconds and the moving silhouettes could be made to travel at speeds of 40 miles per hour. Most of the BMPs and Sagger targets were equipped with explosive devices to simulate hostile fire.

"The mechanized gunnery exercise showed many soldiers that selecting and engaging enemy soldiers and vehicles might not be as easy as they thought when firing at the qualification range," stated Daley. "But the learning experience and immense training value will unquestionably serve to make the soldiers of the "Patriot" battalion much more prepared to "put steel on target" should a real situation arise."

Peter J. Palmer

The 1-58th mechanized gunnery exercise included basic drills such as changing the .50-caliber machine gun barrel.

Cutting down on sugar lessens bacteria attack; keeps teeth decay-free

The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Health Month. It is the sixth in a series of seven on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

Ask a hundred people what foods are bad for their teeth and probably they'll all say sugar. They're right. The bacteria in our mouths that live in dental plaque use the sugars in our foods to produce acids that attack the tooth enamel. But what exactly is meant by the word "sugar"?

There are many different types of sugars. In the past, dental researchers thought that only one type — sucrose — was harmful to teeth. The white or brown refined sugar found in sugar bowls or used in cooking is sucrose. Sucrose is naturaly present in many other foods too, including bananas, beets, melons, peaches and sweet potatoes.

Today, studies have shown that all types of sugars can promote tooth decay. These sugars include sucrose, fructose (fruit sugar), glucose, lactose (milk sugar) and maltose (grain sugar). Many natural foods contain one or more of these sugars. Apples, pears, grapes, raisins and even milk are such examples.

Processed foods often contain one or more types of sugars. Sugars are added to these foods to help preserve them as well as to enhance their flavor. The list of foods that have added sugars includes some you might not guess, such as catsup, coffee whitener, lunch meat, peanut butter and salad dressing.

Instead of refined sugars some people prefer to use honey, molasses and corn syrup. They believe these sweeteners are better for their health or for their teeth. However, these sweeteners also contain fructose, glucose, sucrose and other sugars that contribute to tooth decay. In fact, because these products tend to stick to the teeth, they may be even more harmful to the teeth than refined sugars.

Should you eliminate all foods containing sugars from your diet? That's not a good idea. Your body needs the nutrients found in milk, vegetables, fruit and other foods, as well as the calories these foods provide.

Here are some alternative suggestions from the American Dental Association:

- Limit your snacks. By doing this, you will minimize the number of acid attacks your teeth receive.
- Avoid snacking on foods that contain sugars. These foods cause the bacteria in your mouth to produce acids.
- If you're hungry for a piece of cake, wait until dessert. Research has shown that foods containing sugars are less harmful to the teeth when eaten as part of a meal.

By following these suggestions, you can have your cake and good dental health too! (DENTAC)

'Jodie' winners named in world-wide contest

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The standard cadences used by soldiers around the world may now be in jeopardy due to the results of the United States Army Infantry Center's world-wide cadence contest.

"Most of the cadences used today are centered around the Airborne and Ranger soldiers," stated Maj. Gen. Jim J. Lindsey, the post commander. "We observed a need for new cadences that would boost morale and promote esprit de corps in mechanized, light Infantry and support units. Therefore we decided to address this problem through the light, creative lilt of 'jodies' which are used during formations and physical training."

A total of 164 entries were received for the contest which ran from Nov. 4, 1983, through Feb. 28, 1984. There were three different categories: mechanized, 45; light Infantry, 12; and general, 107.

The contest winners, the top four in each category, came from as far away as Mannhiem, Germany to Tacoma, Wash. They included a lieutenant colonel to a private, from an Army reservist to a Department of the Army civilian.

First place in the light Infantry category went to Charles Harvey, DA civilian, Directorate of Evaluation and Standardization, U.S. Army Infantry School. Second and third places were awarded to SFC Lonnie Joseph and Pvt. Job T. Krakowski respectively, both assigned to the U.S. Army Correctional Activity, Fort Riley, Kansas. Rounding out the division was Sp5 Susan J. Durban, Madigan Army Medical Center in Fort Lewis, Washington.

The mechanized category was won by Lt. Col. Bruce Blake, 1-58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade. SSgt. Oliver A. Norris, C Company, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, captured both second and fourth places with his two entries. Third place was awarded to SSgt. Edward M. Becker, US Army Correctional Activity, Fort Riley, Kan.

SFC Glenn W. Holsinger, D Company, 5th Battalion, 68th Armor, Mannheim, Germany, took first place in the general category. Sp4 Peter McBride, a member of the Old Guard, Fort McNair, Washington D.C., placed second with U.S. Army Reservist SFC Noel W. Fox, B Battery, 1-230th Field Artillery, Reidsville, Ga., finishing third. Capt. Craig D. Barta, Fort Meade, Md., ended up in fourth place.

First place winners will receive a trophy and their "jodie" will be framed. The next three finishers will have their entries framed as well.

"We are presently in the process of organizing a booklet which will include the majority of the cadences that were submitted to aid soldiers in using the calls," commented Lt. Col. Roy Turgeon, the post command information officer. "The booklet will serve as a guideline for troops. They will then be able to refer to the pamphlet and change or modify any of the cadences to fit their particular unit."

Turgeon added, "Most people can write a jodie if they set their mind to it. We hope soldiers around the world will continue to write cadences for their own units. This contest has developed an idea that we hope will continue throughout the Army."

Mechanized

By Lt. Col. Bruce A. Blake
1-58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde.

Listen up soldiers and you will hear,
The Patriots' pride is loud and clear.

Up in the morning to the crack of a whip,
Get-em ready for a mechanized trip.

Topped off, loaded up, ready to fight,
Can't beat the speed of mechanized might.

We SP the motor pool right on time,
Mechanized road march mighty fine.

Rifle, machine gun, mortar and TOW,
Mech Infantry fights where others won't go.

Fifties on the left, fifties on the right,
Mechanized firepower is out of sight.

Track soldiers fight when others are through,
Mechanized super trooper me and you.

We move like a butterfly, sting like a bee,
We're the heart and soul of the Infantry.

Airborne, Ranger, can't you see,
Mechanized Infantry is the way to be.

With bullets, missiles and lots of flack,
We blow up the OPFOR so they can't come back.

We're the Queen of Battle and happy to be,
Not the flat footed grunt, but mech Infantry.

We move, we shoot, we communicate,
We're the pride of the Infantry, the 58th.

Judging cadences no easy task

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Picking 12 winners out of 164 entries submitted in the U.S. Army Infantry Center's cadence contest was no easy job," remarked Capt. Charles Aycock, cadence contest project officer.

Richard Russell

The judges deliberate over one of the entries.

"The toughest part was determining what rhythm to sing the cadence to since some of the entries did not specify the rhythm," stated Aycock. "What made it even tougher was that most of the entries were really quite good."

Joining Aycock on the board of judges were SFC Willie Brown, 1st Infantry Training Brigade; SSgt. Ulysses Toms, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade; Sp4 Raymond Young, 197th Infantry Brigade; Sp4 Jeffrey Chandler, 197th Infantry Brigade; and Albert Garland, the editor of Infantry Magazine.

The criteria on which the judges reviewed the cadences included rhythm, rhyme, originality, singability and overall appeal.

The first phase of the judging was to pick the ten finalists in each category. Each judge awarded points, ranging from the highest, 10, to the lowest, one, on each criteria for every jody. The 10 cadences in each category with the highest point total were then reviewed again.

The 10 finalists were then reviewed by the board again with each judge voicing his pros or cons. Each of the cadences was verbally recited aloud by one member of the board with the other board members echoing the verses. This allowed the judges to compare ideas and let them get on "the same sheet of music," according to Aycock.

"There was a common problem with most of the entries," stated Garland. "The authors tended to get too long winded and ended up losing their rhyme or rhythm."

The judges then voted on the finalists again. This time they ranked the cadences from one to 10 with one being the best, in order of their own particular preferences. The numbers were then totalled and the lowest number was declared the winner and so on down the line.

Up woke the tanker never clean;
He was a commie killing fighting machine;
He was born on a 60 series tank;
His crew awoke when the engines cranked.

M60 tank rolling down the road;
57 tons is a hell of a load;
Driver stop, gunner heat;
An M60 tank just can't be beat.

T62 rolling down the road;
M60 tank, gonna lock and load;
Sabot up, on the way;
Some commies sure gonna die today.

Coax, 50, 105;
Bring death and destruction to keep us alive;
So you look down range with your hand
on your head;
Scoping over terrain, only enemy dead.

You pray to God, it will end some day;
So you can go home, stateside to stay.

I'll stay IN for a million years.
And when that million years is through,
I'll still be proud of my Infantry Blue!

Warrant slots still open

Some warrant slots are critically short of personnel. The Military Personnel Center (MILPERCEN) has instituted a recruitment program to solve this problem. Currently, the Army is just over two-thirds of the way to reaching its recruiting goals for the year.

Among the fields in which people are short are: infantry with the S indicator (Special Forces); combat engineer (12); field artillery (13); special operations (18); communications-electronics operations (31); mechanical maintenance (63); transportation (64); aviation maintenance (67);

Administration (71); automatic data processing (74); personnel administration (75); supply and service (76); food service (94); law enforcement (95); military intelligence (96); and electronic warfare crypto operations (98).

TRADOC News Service wrote, "The new warrant officer training program will be fully implemented in FY 85, and at least partially implemented in FY 84."

In all, three entry training centers are programmed to produce 1,924 warrant officers for FY 85. Fort Rucker will have 1,034; Aberdeen Proving Ground, 640; and Fct Sill, 250; if training goes according to plans.

Those personnel who desire to apply for warrant officer should get a copy of DA Circular 601-83-2, the FY 84 warrant officer procurement program.

Nutrition Month emphasizes fitness

By Brenda E. Richardson, R.D.
Clinical Dietitian, MACH

Continuing the National Nutrition Month theme of "Everybody Wins With Good Nutrition," we concentrate on physical fitness and diet.

Physical fitness is very important to the American soldier. Physical fitness is an observable and predictable benefit of exercise training. It is a state of body efficiency enabling a person to exercise vigorously for a long period without fatigue. It also enables one to respond to sudden physical and emotional demands with an economy of heartbeats and only a modest rise in blood pressure.

The fit individual has endurance or stamina, and is able to supply more energy to muscles so they can work harder and longer. The physicially fit individual feels better, sleeps better and performs better.

Physical fitness incorporates the individual's dietary intake with exercise. A well-balanced diet will insure that the nutritive needs of everyone are met as established in the recommended dietary allowances.

If you daily consume two or more servings of milk or milk products; two or more servings of meat or protein; four or more servings of cereals and grains; and four or more servings of fruits and vegetables, you will supply your nutritional needs for carbohydrates, fats, proteins, vitamins and minerals. If you need additional calories, select from the group of your choice.

Next week's article will focus on "Eating Before Competition".

Chaplain's Views

By Chaplain Michael G. Ortiz
Deputy USAIC Chaplain

For Catholics throughout the world, the season of Lent is a special liturgical period which occurs between February 4 and March 11, depending on the date of Easter Sunday.

It is a period of 40 days (excluding Sundays) and has two distinct phases: Lent, lasting from Ash Wednesday to the Saturday before Palm Sunday; and Passiontide, the week beginning with Palm Sunday and reaching to the celebration of the Easter Sunday vigil.

Its origin dates back to the fourth century or earlier and its purpose was to make Catholics aware of the need for penance and sacrifice through mandated forms of fasting, abstinence, spiritual and corporal works of mercy, and special devotions.

The scriptural stories of the Israelites' 40-year trek through the desert, the 40-days and nights that Moses spent alone on the heights of Sinai, the 40-day journey of the prophet Elijah to Mount Horeb and the 40-day fast of Christ were undertones in the establishment of this special season.

Added to this was the idea that since the season of Spring was preceded by a time during which most vegetation lay dormant or actually died, so also the spiritual joy brought on by Easter should be preceded by a period of preparation and expectation through prayer and sacrifice.

For this purpose, Catholics were required to participate in an austere but cheerful fast; extra forms of prayer worship and a close study of the life, suffering and death of Christ; the sacramental system; and a preparation for individuals wishing to become Catholics.

Current legislation has transferred responsible choice of penance and sacrifice to the individual. Catholics of all ages are guided into a personal commitment and performance of acts, spiritual and material, which would be beneficial to themselves as well as all peoples. Presently, only fast and abstinence on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday is required for adults, as well as abstinence from meat on the Fridays during Lent.

Chapel briefs

Reconciliation

Pope John Paul II and the Bishops attending the Synod in Rome designated this year, 1984, as the Year of Reconciliation. To help us understand the meaning of reconciliation and the need for it in our lives, the Sisters from Blessed Trinity Shrine Retreat will conduct a three-session workshop on reconciliation. The next two sessions will be held March 12 and 19 at the Catholic Education Center (7-9 p.m.). This is a wonderful opportunity for persons to prepare for Lent. Babysitting will be available. Contact the Catholic Education Center at 544-3305.

Catholic pre-marriage class

A pre-marriage class for all Catholics anticipating marriage will be held Sunday at 1 p.m. in the Catholic Education Center in Custer Terrace Chapel. For further information, call 544-3305.

Michaels' concert

Don't forget the Bobby Michaels' concerts today, tomorrow and Sunday. The Kelley Hill Recreation Center will host performances today at 4 p.m. for junior enlisted soldiers, their families and friends; and 5 p.m. for E-7s and above and their families and friends.

Tomorrow, he will sing at a community picnic at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center between 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m.

There will be three shows on Sunday. The first will be at the 1st ITB Chapel at 8 a.m. Then at 9 a.m., he will sing at Chapel 4, 1st ITB. An 11 a.m. performance will be at the Sightseeing Road Chapel. The public is invited.

Weight loss clinic takes it off

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Martin Army Community Hospital has a novel approach in helping people lose weight. They offer a weight loss clinic to people referred by a physician or a nurse practitioner and teach them how to lose weight.

Capt. Richard Fleshin, nurse practitioner at the medical specialty clinic, is in charge of the clinic and sees between 100 and 120 people a month who come to the weight loss clinic seeking help.

"Those who come to the clinic are taught behavior modification, health, nutrition, diet and exercising," Fleshin said. "We teach them, but they are really on their own as far as how well they are going to do."

Florence Nelson is one of the 250 people that have gone through the clinic, and she thinks the clinic is terrific.

"I was admitted into Martin Army Hospital with high blood pressure and was told I needed to lose weight. I weighed 155 pounds last April when I was referred to the clinic, now I weigh 120 pounds. My blood pressure is normal and I feel fine."

Mrs. Nelson wasn't always so optimistic though. "After my first visits to the clinic, I gained weight and I was so disgusted.

"Capt. Fleshin gave us books on calories and put me on a 1,000 calorie diet. I started putting down the calories of each meal I ate and I started exercising. I would watch an exercise program every morning and do exercises along with the instructor.

"I bought an exercise bike and biked five miles every morning. Besides that I walked for 30 minutes. I still do these too. By October, I was down to 120 pounds and I know I'm going to maintain my weight."

Robert Williamson went to his doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital seeking help because he was "way overweight." The doctor referred him to Fleshin, and Williamson went on to lose 71 pounds.

"When I started in April, I weighed 299 pounds. I now weigh 228 pounds and am feeling fine. Mostly what I did was to change my eating habits. I cut out so many sweets and learned how to eat.

"Capt. Fleshin gave us information on calories and how to count them and I did that. Besides the diet program, I started exercising too. I would then and do now, walk at least two miles a day and eat three good meals a day.

"I think the people at the clinic are doing a terrific job."

North Main Post news

The next town meeting for North Main Post will be Thursday at 7 p.m. at the White Elementary School. You may bring the children.

Tom Mull, chief, Physical Activities Branch, Morale Support Activities Division, has stated plans to bring competitive sports to the community by offering competitions between communities. He indicated that softball, basketball and volleyball are being offered for women already. See your March newsletter for more information.

St. Patrick's Day Parade

Columbus and Phenix City are hosting the 3rd annual St. Patrick's Day Parade on March 17 at 11 a.m.

All Fort Benning personnel, individuals, units or groups, are invited to participate in the parade by entering floats, unusual vehicles or walking groups. Entry forms are available at the BAYONET office, room 601, building four. Additional information may be obtained by calling one of the sponsors at 323-3333 or 322-5447.

Volunteer center reopens

Are you interested in career exploration, professional contacts, career experience and/or self-fulfillment? If so, contact your Volunteer Resource Center and get further details of the opportunities that exist on the post. There is a position waiting for you in one of the organizations.

Volunteering is a way to explore a new field of interest before making an irreversible decision. It also gives you the opportunity of gaining experience and written references needed in seeking paid employment.

At this time, ACS is looking for volunteers to help with the summer program for exceptional family members. No previous experience is necessary. Training will be provided.

Receptionists are also needed by ACS and the Volunteer Coordinating Office. If any of this sounds appealing to you, call 545-5602 or stop by the VRC office at 301 McIver St.

ACS offers exercising

Army Community Service is sponsoring a free exercise program to all military families. The classes will be held in building 2088. Aerobics are offered every weekday from 9:15 to 10 a.m. and slendercize will be offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10:15 to 11 a.m. There is a small unattended play area if needed, but you are responsible for your own children. For more information, call ACS 545-1233/1169.

OWC luncheon

The March OWC luncheon is planned for March 21 at 11 a.m. A local department store will be presenting a walk-through fashion show and games will be held after lunch. Reservations are required.

30th Inf. Div. reunion

Veterans of the 30th Infantry Division Association (Old Hickory) of World War I and II will hold their 38th annual reunion June 14-17 at Caesars Palace, Las Vegas, Nevada. OWC offers bridge lessons

The Officers Wives Club is offering classes in beginning bridge. Eight classes will cost $25. For more information, call Julie Moon, 689-5887.

Girl Scout office moves

The Girl Scout coordinator's office has moved from building 2615 to the Youth Activities Center building 1054. The new telephone number is 545-3070.

Concerned citizens meet

The guest speaker at the South Columbus Concerned Citizens meeting April 11 will be Jakie Titus, College College Mental Health Department professor. Mrs. Titus will speak on ways to provide support to rape victims. This is the third and final program in a series on the problem of rape and how to prevent it. The group will meet at 3 p.m. at the Disabled Veterans' Hall on Mathews Street. All South Columbus citizens and businessmen are invited.

2nd Div. Association

The Fort Benning branch of the Second (Indianhead) Division Association will hold their election of officers on March 25 in the Sand Hill NCO Club. The division is also holding their 65th annual reunion in Hot Springs, Ark., July 18-21. If you are interested in either, please come to the meeting.

GRADUATION — Now comes the soldiering

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the story of third platoon of Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade as they underwent the transition from civilians into soldiers.

For the "Demons" it's all over but the shouting. The fourth platoon has the 'Honor Platoon' streamer, but they all have their crossed rifles.

The "Delta Demons" entered the Army just before Thanksgiving and most of them left Fort Benning yesterday to join the rest of the Army.

Kermit the Frog sang a song titled, "It Aint Easy to be Green," and now the "Delta Demons" know that it is true.

The cost of becoming soldiers was high. More than 180 civilians walked into D-8-2 before Thanksgiving, but only 131 soldiers marched out.

It wasn't war or disease that thinned the ranks of the company, according to one of the drill sergeants, it was desire. "The ones (soldiers) we had Thursday, were those ones who wanted to be here — or should be here," stated SSgt. David Kessler, drill sergeant, D-8-2. "Those that are gone didn't want to be here — or shouldn't be here."

The "Demons" started their 13-week-long "rite of passage" at Johnston Hall on Sand Hill. There they got their first Army dollar and their first Army haircut.

They were pushed, prodded, probed and processed at the reception center. They learned to write "last names first, first names last, followed by your middle initial."

They got lost in the maze of corridors of the reception center as they were marched from room to room. The cadre seemed to know where they were going so the new recruits just followed along.

After being immunized against diseases, the names of which some of the new soldiers could not spell, they received their uniforms and stood in ragged groups waiting to meet their drill sergeants.

They joked and told stories about where they were from, how successful they were with the girls back home and how special was the one they left behind. Associations began that became friendships. Friendships, that in the years to come, will become misty-eyed stories full of thunder and smoke whenever they are told.

The brand-new soldiers got off the buses at Harmony Church and met their collective nightmare — the drill sergeant.

"Delta's Drills" took charge and established once-and-for-all who was who — and who was in charge. The former civilians learned that in the next three months, a transformation would take place. It was explained to them that the Army had been in the business of making soldiers for years and had the system down to a science.

The "Delta Demons" soon learned that it was so.

Standing in the company street, surrounded by World War II barracks, they learned there was a tuition to be paid in order to wear Army green. They were only expected to do their absolute best — and meet the drill sergeant's standards.

They were taught and tested. Then they were retaught and retested. The drill sergeants never seemed to be satisfied.

During the 13 weeks 'pudgy' soldiers became hardened by the training. The barracks stopped "looking like a pigsty" and out of the initial confusion came order.

Boston-bred Pvt. Douglas J. Grant said, "I'm starting to dream discipline in my sleep . . . everything's Army!"

Almost immediately, the "Demons" noticed changes. Pneumonia, flat feet, homesickness and "poor attitudes" took their toll.

Bunks and wall lockers that were filled in the morning were empty at night.

It seemed as if the soldiers could do nothing right for the first few weeks.

Last week at AO Eagle they could do nothing wrong. One hundred percent of the company won the right to wear the blue rope and disc that signified that they were Infantry.

The cost was high.

There's no excuse for spouse abuse

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Many victims of spouse abuse are afraid to let anyone know their plight and don't know how to get help. At Fort Benning, victims of spouse abuse have a place to seek help. The Battered Wives Shelter is managed through the Army Family Advocacy Program (AFAP) at Army Community Services (ACS).

Linda McCoy, shelter coordinator and social worker at ACS, describes the shelter as a safe, quiet place victims can go to sort out their choices and to make some decisions. "When wives are admitted to the shelter, no one tells them what they should or should not do. We listen to them, provide support and make appropriate service referrals to other agencies."

McCoy said 90 percent of the shelter clients do in fact return home to their husbands, but of the other 10 percent, some go to live temporarily with family or friends and some begin independent living upon leaving the shelter. Clients may be re-admitted to the shelter; however, few return.

Few return

Some clients go back into situations that may be better for a temporary time only. And they often feel afraid or embarrassed to come back and acknowledge the problems still exist. Clients who do need to return are never judged or given "I told you so" treatment, McCoy explained.

Mary Behrend, AFAP coordinator, offered another reason for no repeaters. "In this command, everyone is very visible and when a servicemember shows up on the military police blotter for domestic violence, they are watched very closely. In this case, visibility curbs behavior, at least while the family is here."

For various reasons, a large number of cases may go unreported, McCoy explained. There have been cases of wives of senior NCO's and officers who phoned or had friends phone for program information but were too afraid to come forward to seek help. These wives have noted being afraid of ruining their husbands' careers, threats of loss of security, and fear of further abuse as reasons they keep silent.

Kinds of abuse

Also, people commonly associate only severe beatings with spouse abuse. That's not the only situation or condition in which a person may need shelter or crises counseling. Many times emotional/psychological abuse occurs and it is very difficult for people to distinguish such situations as abusive ones.

Art courtesy of Fort Hood Sentinel

Most of the cases reported to ACS are the younger servicemembers and wives. Usually they are wives who are far from home and feel they have no other resources or people to turn to for help.

John Childs, counselor at Social Work Services, said reported cases are increasing at Fort Benning. "There were 178 new cases of spouse abuse that came through our office last year. We've seen 69 since October. But then with the unreported cases and couples that are not serviced at this activity, it is hard to say how prevalent it is here."

Martin Army Community Hospital's Social Work Service offers counseling to couples that are self-referred or referred by MACH, ACS or other agencies. Childs pointed out they offer individual as well as group counseling.

The couples are seen for an initial session, when contracting takes place and treatment plans are developed. Then couples go into group counseling for not more than 12 weeks. "It is mandatory for a servicemember to participate in the treatment program after his case is assessed. Company commanders are responsible for ensuring servicemembers keep appointments.

Counseling

"What we try to do in our counseling sessions is get the abusers and the abused to share their feelings. We teach them nonviolent ways to express their anger, and to take time-out and do other things when they are angry, like running or playing golf," Childs explained.

"Our primary goal is to eliminate violent behavior and if there's a reduction in violent behavior, we feel we have been successful. We keep files on all our cases and we do follow-ups to maintain contact with the family and to see how things are going."

McCoy and Childs note that abusers justify their behavior with reasons such as: limited finances, job related stresses, alcohol and drug use, lack of cooperation and infidelity.

Behrend sees the abuser as blaming the victim or someone else instead of accepting responsibility for things that happen. "To choose to respond violently is an inappropriate expression of anger. The abuser knows this and finds someone or something else to blame."

McCoy sees cases that are brought to her attention from a variety of sources including unit commanders and first sergeants, the hospital emergency room, family practice, the military police and concerned friends. Once instances of abuse are reported, active cases are opened with the spouse abuse case management team.

McCoy schedules to see each reported couple for an assessment and then makes recommendations on appropriate follow-up action to the case management team and the servicemember's commander. The teams provide imput and coordinate the service delivery for the families.

Referrals are made for ongoing counseling whether indiviual or group, family, pastoral, alcohol and drug treatment, legal assistance, or educational programs as appropriate.

Getting information out

"It is very important to us to get information on services to those who need it. One very effective method being used is through home briefings," McCoy said. "The shelter volunteer committee (CARE) and I schedule with interested wives groups to do talks with small groups in their homes on what services are available and what to do if contacted by a victim requesting assistance."

McCoy explained briefings are also scheduled with units through company commanders to get program information throughout the military community.

"In instances where a concerned friend or coworker calls ACS about a spouse abuse victim, I suggest they encourage the victim to call me directly and I'll help that person to sort out her options, share resources and support watever decisions she makes about her situation," McCoy said.

For assistance with abusive situations during duty hours, people may call Linda McCoy at 545-1169/1233. After 5 p.m. or on holidays and weekends, a person may call the MPs at 545-5222 or the staff duty officer at 545-2218.

For more program information or to schedule home or unit briefings, phone Linda McCoy at 545-1169/5801.

Lindbergh Sumrall

Employee works way up

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There are more than 4,000 federal employee positions at Fort Benning and all of them must be reviewed by the Civilian Personnel Office at least once every two years.

Lindbergh Sumrall is one of the specialists charged with the responsibility of reviewing these positions. He is a position classification specialist in the Civilian Personnel Office, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

"In addition to reviewing all positions on post, our branch comes into play when a new position is created," said Sumrall. "I discuss with the manager what the new job will be, to include tasks, controls, equipment to be used and several other factors, and then by applying standards, classify the position as to title, series and grade."

Each section on Fort Benning is assigned to one of the classification specialists. Sumrall works with the following: Communications Command, Infantry School, Adjutant General, Staff Judge Advocate, Inspector General, Equal Employment Opportunity, Infantry Magazine, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Commissary and the 1-29th Infantry.

"There are approximately 800 civilian positions in these 10 sections and that is about the norm for a classification specialist," he said. "We get to know the positions in each section and how they inter-relate to the post as a whole. The great knowledge of post functions that you acquire with this job is one of the most interesting things about it."

Sumrall retired from the Army in 1975, after serving 20 years. His overseas tours included two in the Republic of Vietnam, three tours in Europe and one in Korea. His whole military career was spent in the Infantry. His military awards include the Bronze Star and the Army Commendation Medal.

He started working in civil service at Fort Benning in 1976 as a driver in the Transportation Division. He was accepted into the local intern program in the Civilian Personnel Office in 1979 and completed it in 1981.

Originally from Laurel, Miss., he now claims Columbus as home and owns a home on Hardegree Drive. A graduate of Columbus College with a B.S. in political science and community planning, he has 55 hours of credit towards his masters degree. His two children, Michelle and Michael, are students at the University of Georgia.

Some of the career oriented courses that he has completed include Introduction to Personnel Management, Basic Classification, Planning and Conducting Management Audits and Communications for Managers.

Bowling is a main outside interest right now. His mixed doubles team is in second place and he is working his way back to his normal 163 pin average.

VA questions and answers

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I plan to return to school under the GI Bill this spring but I have an overpayment from several years ago. Will this cause a delay in my receiving benefits for this term?

A — Yes. The VA charges interest and administrative costs on education overpayments that have have been outstanding for long periods unless the debtor has in existence a repayment plan. Interest and administrative fees will be withheld from benefits for the current period.

Organization recognizes two Benning women

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two lieutenants from Fort Benning are part of 23,000 women from across the United States to be named as Outstanding Young Women of America.

First Lieutenant Brenda Richardson, clinical dietician from Martin Army Community Hospital and 1st Lt. Wanda Kay Allen, commander of the 34th Medical Company Detachment, share the honor and will be listed in an award's volume of young women.

Allen, on active duty since May 1982, was nominated by Betty Smith, her supervisor at South Carolina State College. "Betty is a counselor at South Carolina and I majored in rehabilitative counseling. She became a close friend."

Mrs. Allen joined ROTC while at college but said there were several reasons why she decided to join the military.

"My father and husband are both military men, but mostly I decided on trying the Army as a job option because everything looked bleak on the job market.

"I like it here. Of course this is the first time I've commanded, but the battalion commander, executive officer, sergeant major and soldiers have helped a lot."

As the detachment commander, Allen has control over 60 people from the S1, 2, 3, and 4 shops and three detachments to take care of: the 926th, the 261st and the 5th Medical Detachments.

"I'm given the responsibility and the experience to learn. I'm learning what it is like to be a commander, but mostly I can make mistakes and learn from them."

Allen said she's planning on making the Army her career with a definite goal — to get a star before retiring.

Richardson's goal is to move into a more specialized area of nutrition — nutrition support.

"When I get emergecy calls about patients that won't or can't eat, I may have to start IVs either in a peripheral or central vein. It is very complex but I'm very interested in it because people used to die because of that, now they don't have to."

Richardson began her Army career in the Army Band and served four years as an enlisted member before getting out and finishing her schooling.

Connie McReynolds

First Lieutenant Brenda Richardson checks out the diet of patient Sara Meadows to see how well it suits her.

"I've always enjoyed nutrition and completed my degree in it, then decided to try the Army again. I now have five years and eight months in the military."

She was required to spend nine months in internship at Walter Reed before coming to Fort Benning. Maj. Christa Gardner became her advisor and eventually nominated Richardson for the Outstanding Young Women of America honor.

"I feel very honored. Maj. Gardner never gave out praise unless she meant it so this is something. I know she means it."

Although Richardson does not see outpatients, her patients at the hospital keep her busy. "I see all the patients individually and gear diets for what they need. I see such a variety of patients that one thing won't work for all of them."

Among the patients Richardson sees are diabetics, those with kidney ailments, those with altered digestive systems, cancer patients and cardiac rehabilitation patients.

"One of the things I do is teach patients about nutrition and my favorite kind of patient is those that can take the knowledge I give them, incorporate it into their lives and bring about a changing lifestyle."

First Lieutenant Wanda Kaye Allen checks her calendar of appointments at the start of the day.

Girl Scout Week

Editorial by Girl Scouts, Inc.

Some may argue that there are no new worlds to discover. We've walked on the moon, shuttled through space and conquered the mysteries of the deep.

But today's Girl Scout might disagree. That's because she's been busy finding new and exciting worlds every day through her participation in Girl Scouting.

What worlds can a Girl Scout discover? How about aerospace technology and mountain climbing? Or some more down-to-earth pursuits like camping and group sports?

Perhaps the best part about the new world a girl finds in Girl Scouting is the opportunity to share her delight of discovery with others. Girl Scout activities encourage friendship and teamwork and foster global awareness and understanding that link girls across the street or across the ocean.

By taking an active part in serving her community, a Girl Scout learns how local concerns may affect the world at large, and how she may contribute to finding solutions.

The wonderful world of Girl Scouting isn't just for girls. Women and men who serve as adult volunteers discovered their own new worlds in the support and guidance they lend to the Girl Scout movement.

Girl Scout Week, March 11-17, serves to remind us that for 72 years, girls have been having fun, gaining solid learning experiences and enriching their world through Girl Scouting. We applaud their enthusiasm and trust they'll continue to find new worlds as Girl Scouts.

Crime doesn't pay

Staff Sergeant Kavanzo C. Arnold, C Company, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was convicted by a special court-martial composed of officer and enlisted members, of making a false statement, obstruction of justice, and larceny. Arnold solicited money from initial-entry soldiers in his platoon, telling them it was for an end-of-cycle party. He then kept the money. Additionally, he contacted one of these soldiers and threatened him in an effort to get him to change his testimony. Arnold was sentenced to reduction to the grade of private (E-1), to forfeit $382 pay per month for four months, and to be confined at hard labor for four months.

Staff Sergeant William T. Story, Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command, was convicted of possession and distribution of marijuana. Story distributed marijuana once to an undercover agent of the Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team, and once to a confidential informant who was working with the team. Story was sentenced to reduction to the grade of private (E-1), forfeiture of $382 pay per month for three months, confinement at hard labor for three months, and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge.

Private Ivan H. Coleman, C Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of larceny and housebreaking. While his company was in the field, he entered a friend's room using a key the victim kept under the ceiling tiles in the barrack's hallway. He stole a cassette deck. Coleman was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for 30 days, forfeiture of $397 for one month, and to be discharged with a bad conduct discharge.

Business symposium

The Fort Benning Procurement Division is planning a Small Business Symposium March 17, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Supper Club of Benning's Main Officers' Club. Registration begins at 8 a.m.

Invitations are being mailed to approximately 700 small businesses located within a 120-mile radius of Fort Benning. Included with each invitation will be an agenda, registration form and map of the route to the Officers' Club.

A spokesman for the symposium said that in addition to the various speakers, a number of representatives from Fort Benning and other federal government activities in the region will be available to discuss their contracting requirements with small business representatives. The event will also give the business representatives an opportunity to bring their business' capabilities to the government's attention.

Sponsoring the symposium will be post commander Maj. Gen. Jim Lindsay, Georgia Senator Sam Nunn, Georgia Third District Congressman Richard Ray and Alabama Third District Congressman Bill Nichols.

Additional information and registration forms may be obtained by contacting Symposium Coordinator Mrs. Judith Davison, at (404) 545-5171. (USAIC PAO)

Bail

Rex Baggett, chief of accounting, gladly hands over his 'bail' to Muscogee County Deputy Sheriff Mac Drake, after his arrest last Friday on undisclosed charges. Baggett was held in confinement at Columbus Square Mall until the Accounting Branch, with the help of others in building 89, collected more than $100 for his release. The arrest was all in fun and the money went to benefit the March of Dimes.

Don't forget childcare deduction

Taxpayers who pay others to care for their children while they work may qualify for a special tax credit, the Internal Revenue Service says. This child care credit applies not only to babysitters and day care centers that watch your child or disabled dependent while you work, but also to relatives and certain household workers you pay for this service.

This credit is available to married couples who file jointly, including those in which one spouse works and the other is a full-time student or disabled.

The credit also applies to a divorced or separated parent who has custody of a child under 15, even though the parent may not be entitled to a dependency exemption for the child. The parent claiming the credit must, however, have custody for a longer period during the year than the other parent. A spouse who qualifies may take the credit if the other spouse is absent for the last six months of the taxable year.

The credit is from 20 to 30 percent of eligible expenses depending on the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The maximum credit that may be taken is limited to $720 for one qualifying person and to $1,440 for two or more qualifying persons.

To qualify for the child and disabled dependent care tax credit, a taxpayer (1) must have income from work; (2) must have incurred the expense in order to work or look for work; and (3) must have maintained a household that included one or more qualifying individuals. Qualifying individuals are dependent children under 15 years of age, a disabled spouse or a disabled dependent of any age.

Additional information is available in the free IRS Publication 503, Child and Disabled Dependent Care, which may be ordered by filling out the order blank in the tax package or by calling the Forms/Tax Information number listed in the telephone directory. (AFPS)

How far does a million go?

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management is currently asking major unit commanders and directorate heads for suggestions on how to spend the $1 million bonus that Fort Benning received for winning Training and Doctrine Command's 1983 SPIRIT competition.

Most people would have difficulty in visualizing that much money. The BAYONET has come up with a way to put that much money in perspective.

What is $1 million, besides a figure with six zeros behind it.? With $1 million, you could:

- Send your spouse on a shopping spree and not have her return for years
- Mark a trail of $1 bills end-to-end from Fort Benning to Atlanta
- Purchase 45 Mercedes Benz or
- 40 Corvettes or
- 3,000,000 ice cream cones at the snack bar or
- 10,000 copies of Michael Jacksons' latest hit or
- Part of Herschel Walker's contract or
- Buy Fort Benning's population BDU field jackets or
- Send your child to college for 100 years

At today's interest rates you could spend $100 a day — forever and not touch the principle.

Quality tapes hiss less than cheaper ones

You want to tape your new album to play in the car, but you've run out of cassettes.

You drive to the exchange, head for the Sight and Sound Center and whoops . . . they've got umpteen types. There's metal, normal bias, high bias, something called Cr02 and a couple of others. It also comes in different lengths. What should you buy?

If you're going to play the tape in your car and you've got a good stereo with a metal tape selection switch,the metal tapes, usually identified with a "IV," will give you better sound and less hiss. They cost a bit more, about $5 for a 90-minute tape, but you'll get less distortion if you like to crank the sound up.

If your car stereo doesn't have a tape-selection switch, the standard ferric-oxide tapes, marked with "I," will do just fine. If you want better high-frequency performance, go to type "III," ferrichrome tapes.

The same guidelines apply to home or portable equipment. The more you pay for the tape, the less hiss you'll get when playing it back. Be careful, though. If your machine doesn't say it's okay to use metal tape, don't. It might wear your sound heads down.

Recording

Recording is another matter. The different kinds of tapes were developed to get the best out of the equipment you have. Tapes marked with "I" are normal bias tapes. They can be used to record on any equipment. They are best for voice recordings, taping off the radio or anything for which you don't need high quality results.

Type "II," high bias tapes, need a high bias or chrome switch on the recording equipment to get best results. They'll give you less hiss and are suitable for any musical recording, especially those with a lot of high notes. This type is also known as chromium dioxide, Cr02, tape.

Ferrichrome, FeCr, tapes, marked with "III," are a compromise between the first two. You can get good quality recordings on these tapes and less hiss than type "I." This tape is good for playback on car stereos.

Metal tapes, type "IV," need special equipment with a metal tape selection switch to record or erase, but can be played back on any machine with a high bias or chrome switch.

Tape length

The next thing you may want to know is what length tape to buy. Tapes marked "C-60," 30 minutes each side, are best for most half-hour radio programs. Tapes marked "C-90," 45 minutes each side, will record most albums on a single side. Tapes marked "C-120," 60 minutes each side, are okay for most good home stereos but, because the tape is thinner, might jam or break in cheap portable or car units. It also has a tendency to get tangled so many equipment manufacturers don't recommend it. Army and Air Force Exchange Service exchanges currently carry only the more popular "C-60" and "C-90" lengths.

Price

If price is a factor, start with less expensive tapes and listen to the results. If it sounds good to you, stick with it. As your equipment gets better and your wallet gets thicker, move up. You'll like the better sound.

If you're still confused, ask your friendly AAFES Sound Center clerk for some help.

Cordless owners warned to use caution with phones

By Kenneth J. Leake
Fort Dix POST

Owners of "cordless" or portable telephones have been warned to exercise caution when using the product.

Cordless telephones offer the user the convenience of placing or receiving calls in their home or in the immediate vicinity outside their home. Users should always place the phone in the talk position before moving the telephone to their ear. Otherwise, they may be exposed to a loud and possibly painful ring.

This advice comes from the U.S. Consumer Produce Safety Commission (CPSC).

The CPSC has received numerous complaints about the loud sound which is made when the telephone rings or when someone near the base station of these telephones, presses the intercom or page button while the handset is close to the user's ear. Several of these complaints, including some from physicians, claim some loss of hearing has resulted from the loud ring.

Most cordless telephones are designed so the ring or page signal comes through the earphone. Details of the complaints make it clear that the users were not expecting their telephone to ring and placed them against or near their ears without placing the phone in the talk position.

CPSC advises owners of portable telephones to be sure that everyone using the product knows how to use it properly.

Consumers wishing to provide CPSC with complaints or information about cordless telephone should call the agency's toll-free hotline at 800-738-CPSC.

Dress right for winter running

By Dr. William L. Daniels
Medical Service Corps

Cold air stings your nostrils each time you breathe. The frozen ground crackles underfoot with each step.

A motorist, shivering in his car as he passes by, wonders what kind of fool would be out running in this weather.

To many people, the onset of cold weather means that it's time to hang up the running shoes for a few months. However, winter can be one of the most enjoyable seasons for running, if you take the proper precautions. The key to winter running is to make sure that you are properly dressed. Obviously, there will be some days when it may be impossible to run outdoors.

Recent advances in the fabric industry have given runners a wide selection of winter clothing. Today's runner can choose between new synthetic fibers as well as such old standards as cotton, nylon and wool. Each of these fabrics has characteristics which may be more appealing to one runner than another. Each individual must decide which bests fits his needs in the particular climate in which he runs.

The important thing about clothing for winter running is that it keeps you warm, yet not so warm that you overheat and perspire too much. This can be a problem if the perspiration or wet clothing starts to cool because then you can become hypothermic (low body temperature).

A simple rule of thumb is: if you feel warm when you start out, you are probably overdressed. If you are out running and start to feel like you are beginning to cool down quickly, it is a good idea to head indoors even if it means cutting your run a little short.

Clothing for winter running should be comfortable and be worn in a way that it can be removed if you get warm, carried with you while you run, and then put back on if you start to get cold.

Head and neck

To prevent heat loss, it is very important to keep your head and neck covered. It is estimated that up to 40 percent of your body heat can be lost through your head and neck. In cool weather, something like a baseball or painter's cap may be sufficient.

However, in colder weather, something like a wool or nylon ski hat may be necessary. Turtleneck shirts can be very comfortable in the winter and helpful in keeping the neck warm. Long sleeve turtleneck shirts are available in most fabrics and should be considered as part of your winter running wardrobe.

Legs

In order to keep your legs warm, the runner can add running tights such as polypropylene or cotton long underwear. These along with running shorts usually will provide plenty of warmth.

Hands

The part of the body which is probably most susceptible to cold injury while running is the hands. Almost any type of gloves or mittens will prevent frostbite from developing. However, for extremely cold days, ski gloves or some type of extra warm mittens will be needed. During most of the winter, the woolen inserts from the standard military glove are excellent. On extremely cold days, the addition of the leather outside covers gives plenty of protection.

Feet

Finally, the last thing to be concerned about is your feet. Ordinarily no additions to running attire are required for the feet. Socks and shoes worn during the rest of the year are adequate.

It is important not to get your feet wet during the winter. Sometimes this is difficult to avoid. This makes for uncomfortable running and may require shortening the run.

Wind is another common problem in winter running. Therefore, if possible, on especially windy days, start out running into the wind and finish with the wind at your back. That way, the wind is helping you at a time when you are most fatigued and most susceptible to the cold.

For many people, aerobic conditioning often falls off slightly over the winter because runs tend to be a little shorter and tend to be done at a slower pace. Yet, winter is still a great time of the year for running.

AMVETS provides information

If you're a veteran or a member of a veteran's family, you may not be getting complete up-to-date information about the rights and benefits you're entitled to. Where do you go and who do you talk to for information?

One of America's leading veterans organizations, AMVETS, (American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam), has decided to come to you with the information you need. In fact, today and tomorrow, the AMVETS Mobile Outreach Van will be in Columbus at Columbus Square Mall, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Be sure to stop in and see Joel Berrey and Everett Sedgwick, two AMVETS National Service officers accredited by the Veterans Administration, for answers to your questions about compensation, pension, in-and out-patient medical treatment, educational and vocational rehabilitation, home loans, GI insurance, burial and survivors benefits, and other assistance.

AMVETS is a community-minded organization with over 200,000 members in 1,200 local posts nationwide. It fights for legislation to help veterans get jobs and benefits they deserve. Also, it offers its members many opportunities for social contact and community involvement. AMVETS says it's big enough to be heard, yet small enough to give the veterans and their families a voice.

Two students win USAF scholarships

Major Thomas H. Lokey, Air Force liaison officer commander for Georgia, announced that two Brookstone seniors have won Air Force college scholarships.

Christopher C. McCann has received an appointment to the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. McCann, who received a nomination from Congressmen Richard Ray, will enter the Academy along with 1,500 other members of the Class of 1988 on July 6th. He plans to major in astronautical engineering or space systems. He is the son of retired Army Major and Mrs. Walter P. McCann.

Kelsey L. Kennon Jr., won a four-year ROTC scholarship in electrical engineering and has been accepted to Georgia Tech. This scholarship covers all tuition, books and lab fees. Kennon will also receive $100 per month throughout the school year. He is the son of Kelsey L. Kennon Sr., of Realty Services and Dr. Cassandra Kennon, principal of the Brookstone Lower School.

Both McCann and Kennon will enter the Air Force as second lieutenants upon graduation from college.

Armchair sports

Commentary by Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The outcome of a basketball game, probably more so than any other sporting event, can be influenced very easily by the officials.

Take the post basketball tournament for example. It was recently conducted at three different locations around the installation. The officials came from the Tri County Association.

"I think the officiating during the tournament was pretty good, or least the games I saw were well done," commented Will Dunham, post athletic director. "I have received no unfavorable comments about the officiating, so that must mean they did a good job. I will say if the fans have not kept up with the rule changes then they may not have understood a few of the calls."

Dunham added that it is his office's responsibility to investigate any and all complaints about officiating, but he had not received any.

He may not have received any complaints but I did hear a few. For the most part, they all started with the word 'inconsistency.' Several of the coaches of teams in the post tourney criticized the consistency of the calls.

One coach stated, "The same officials call baketball, softball and football. I think that they should limit themselves to one sport until they are capable of calling it correctly instead of being a 'jack of all trades.'"

The officials, just like the teams themselves, were selected to call the tournament based on their performance during the regular season, according to William Norris, commissioner of the officials' association.

"We picked our crew because they were consistent in their calls during the regular season," commented Norris. "We rate each official following every outing. A test is then given and the results, combined with our regular season ratings, determined who was going to call the tournament games. We started the tournament with 12 officials and we cut back as the tourney progressed."

When told of Norris' remarks, one of the coaches previously interviewed commented that he would like to see an outside agency, other than the officals themselves, rate the men in the stripes on a regular basis. He also felt that the officials should be forced to specialize.

What does all this mean? Well, the coaches are calling for more consistency and the commissioner of the officials is saying that his people were the most consistent he had.

Is there a problem? In my opinion, yes there is a problem and there is a solution.

The commissioner or the sports office should consider limiting the "jack of all trades" to one or two different sports. The sports office should develop a committee to to rate the officals' performance on a regular basis and make their findings known to the commissioner. After all, they are paying them.

Now we come to the reason officials don't specialize. If an offical calls four or five different sports, poorly or not, he can supplement his income year round. Those guys aren't out there to improve their officiating so that maybe someday they can call an NCAA championship. They put on the zebra outfit and blow the whistle, and occasionally the game, for one reason and one reason only, MONEY.

Glenn Dubis scored double victories in last week's Indoor Smallbore Rifle Championships conducted on post.

Dubis hits home with bullets, out-distances Wigger twice

Several U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit members scored major victories in a competition fired here last weekend.

Glenn Dubis won both the Indoor Champion of Champions and National Indoor International Rifle Sectional Championships held at Fort Benning. His score of 2,363 out of 2,400 in the champion's event was 13 points ahead of teammate Lones Wigger, who finished at 2,350.

Dubis also scored a narrow two-point win over Wigger and Richard Hawkins in the International Sectional Championship with a total of 1,174 out of 1,200 points.

In the National 10-meter Air Rifle Sectional, Stephen Goff posted 584 out of 600 to win by one point over Army Reservist Wanda Jewell of Huntsville, Ala. USAMU members Hawkins and Dubis finished in a tie for third place at 581.

The USAMU teams coached by William Krilling, won both 10-meter and International Rifle Sectional matches. Team members of the 10-meter squad were Goff, Hawkins, Dubis and William Rigby. Members of the International squad were Dubis, Goff, Hawkins and Wigger.

In conventional pistol action, current national pistol champion Roger Willis, won the Arizona Mid-Winter Championship held in Phoenix.

Willis scored 2,655 out of 2,700 points to edge teammate Thomas Woods at 2,654. Willis also won the center fire and .45 caliber events with scores of 887 and 884 out of 900.

The USAMU "Blue" squad coached by Ronald Martere, swept all three team events and the overall aggregate championship with 3,534 out of 3,600 points.

In high power rifle, John Man defeated more than 120 competitors to win the Florida Rifle Championship held in Starke, Fla.

Mann's total of 788 out of 800 points was two points over William Porter of the All National Guard squad.

Members of USAMU also won four out of six Interservice Pistol Warm-Up Matches fired at Fort Benning prior to this year's Interservice International Championships. Individual winners included the following:

25-Meter Rapid Fire Pistol
John McNally, USAMU.....1,782

Centerfire Pistol
Rojelio Arredono, USAMU.....590

Barbarian's sport simple to watch and understand

By Joel D. Courtemanche
Correspondent

Rugby has often been called "A Barbarian's sport played by gentlemen." Or is it "A gentlemen's sport played by Barbarians"? Either way you view it, rugby is a physical, demanding, but fun sport. Ask anyone who has played the game.

When you are on the field (or pitch as it is known in rugby terminology), running around chasing a pregnant football; rucking and mauling whenever you get close to the ball, it may seem rather chaotic. While you are out there, one of the goals is to reduce the chaos to a minimum, another is to score more points than the other team.

Rugby is really a simple game to watch and score from the sidelines. Both team have 15 players that divide out like the linemen and backs of a football team. The opposing forward lines will attack each other for possession of the ball. Once either team gains possession of the ball, they pass it out to the backs and the backs will try to advance the ball into the other team's goal line.

A score, called a try, is worth four points and is made when a player places the ball down on the ground behind the goal line. The rugby equivalent to an extra point kick is worth two points. The ball must pass through the goal posts for the coversion.

There are two other ways that a team can score. The first is a penalty kick from the point of infraction. The second is a drop kick that can come from anywhere on the pitch. Both are worth three points apiece. One of the benefits is that any player can score, although linemen rarely have the opportunity to score.

There are five basic plays in rugby. There are: scrums, mauls, rucks, lineouts and kickoffs.

A scrum is when both forward lines bind together in a formidable pack and come together headfirst against each other. The ball is then rolled into the cavity between the two packs, and each team shoves against the other trying to gain possession of the ball using only their feet. The ball is then pushed to the rear of the scrum where the scrumhalf gains possession of the ball and passes it out to the backs unless he opts to run with the ball himself.

Rucks and mauls are very similar in that they occur simultaneously when a man with the ball is tackled. If the man drops to the ground, he must release the ball and both teams ruck over the ball. There can be no use of hands as each team tries to regain control of the ball using their feet. Players from the same team bind in with their teammates and attempt to push their opponents off the ball. Of course, the other team is trying to achieve the same results.

A maul occurs when a man is tackled and he stays on his feet while he has possession of the ball. Again, his teammates bind in together with the man with the ball and try to walk the ball forward. The other team will try desperately to stop all forward motion and take the ball from the other team.

Betty Zimmerman

This is an example of a lineout.

The two other plays that you will see are lineouts and kickoffs. A lineout takes place when the ball has gone out of bounds. At the point the ball goes out of bounds, the opposing forward packs line up in parallel files one meter apart five yards in from the ball. The ball is then thrown down the center of the tunnel created by the forwards. Both teams jump for the ball and the team gaining possession of the ball then has the option of mauling or passing the ball out to the backs. Generally, neither team gains control of the ball with any authority, but play continues.

A kickoff duplicates the general formation seen in football, but the team that scored does not kick, it receives the ball. This is intended to give the other team an advantage, by putting the ball deeper in their opponent's zone.

A couple more rules will make rugby viewing easier for the observer. Just remember that the ball is the line of scrimmage, and both the offensive and defensive teams must remain behind the ball. All passing must be to the side or to the rear; forward passing is now allowed. You can kick the ball, but the man who kicked it must be the first one downfield, otherwise teammates ahead of him will be offside.

Rugby requires a skillful combination of running, passing, kicking and tackling. It requires stamina, strength and a strong need for a good dose of clean fun. It is an excellent way to burn off extra pounds or to just vent the frustrations of the day.

If you are interested in playing rugby, the Fort Benning Flyers practice every Tuesday and Thursday evening at 6 p.m. on Clark Field (behind the Officers' Club). If you are just interested in watching, come out to Stilwell Field in front of the post office for our next home game.

There are many turkeys roaming the post's woods.

Post offers much to gobbler hunters

By Mike Hansen
Correspondent

As spring begins to arrive, gardeners take to the soil, fishermen to the water and turkey hunters to the woods. Fort Benning's turkey season opens March 20 on the Alabama side and March 24 on the Georgia side. Fort Benning provides some great turkey hunting for those eligible to hunt on post.

Last year, there were 270 hunters registered and 59 gobblers harvested. The Post Fish and Wildlife predict another good year this spring. Chris Dunn, chief, Natural Resources Branch, states, "Prospects look good due to excellent poult production during the past two summers."

To be able to hunt the wise "old gobbler" on post, the following requirements must be met:

- Possess a valid state license.
- Possess a post permit.
- Obtain a turkey permit.

All can be obtained from Outdoor Recreation Services, building 247.

As a reminder, the hunter must always check the training maps prior to entering a training area. A restrictive area permit must be obtained before entering a "restricted area." Restricted area briefings are available at the Fish and Wildlife Office, PMO, building 215 for those who need the briefing.

As you begin your hunt, don't foget safety and the post rules. Fluorescent orange is not required to be worn by the turkey hunter - so exercise extreme caution and identify your target before shooting. Decoys are not authorized on the Alabama side of the post. Each hunter is athorized to harvest only two gobblers on Fort Benning.

Respect the other hunter and don't crowd him. A good rule of thumb is when you approach another hunter or his car, leave and go to another area. Knowledge of these rules and turkey hunting "know how" should help make you a successful hunter.

Turkey hunting seminars

The West Georgia/East Alabama Chapter of the National Wild Turkey Federation will sponsor turkey hunting seminars March 16-17. A turkey calling contest will also be held in conjunction with the seminars. The admission is $2. For more information, contact Bruce Elliott at 545-2662/4270.

Sport shorts

Marine's sponsor 10,000-meter run

The first Marine Corps Logistics Base Sports Day, May 19, will feature a 10,000-meter road race which is open to the public. The entry fee is $5 before May 9. The fee will increase to $7 after that date. Applications are available at the BAYONET office, building 4, room 601. For more information, contact Rick Russell at 545-2201.

See Hawks battle Celtics in the Omni

The Outdoor Recreation Branch of the Morale Support Activities Division is sponsoring another trip to the Omni in Atlanta, March 17, to see the Hawks take on the Boston Celtics. Tickets are available for $10 if you have your own transportation or $22 for a round trip on Greyhound bus. For more information, contact Tim Brown at 545-4155.

All Army racquetball trials scheduled

Fort Bragg, N.C., will be the site for the 1984 All Army Racquetball trial camp May 2-12. The Fort Benning Sports Office is now accepting applications for that camp. Benning could send as many as three individuals, one in each category, to the camp. The three categories are: open, men 34 and younger; senior, men 35 and older; and women, any age.

5th annual post racquetball tourney set

Morale Support Activities Division is sponsoring the 5th annual Fort Benning Invitational Singles Racquetball Tournament March 28-31. There will be five different categories for the men and two for the women. Entry fees are $10 for the first category entered and $5 for the second. A limit of two categories per individual has been set. The winners of the tournament will have their names forwarded for possible selection to the 1984 All Army Racquetball team. For more information and applications, contact Speedy Austin at 545-5777.

OWC running festival slated for April 28

The Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning will be sponsoring the first "Festival of Running," April 28. There will be three fun runs; one, three and five miles; as well as a 30-mile, 6-member relay. All races will take place in the vicinity of Infantry Hall. Everyone, including local civilians, are eligible to participate. For more information, contact Bill Hughes at 689-1934.

Boxing coaches and seconds needed

The sports office is looking for boxing instructors, coaches and trainers for the Physical Activites Sports program of the Morale Support Activities Division. Interested personnel should call 545-7519.

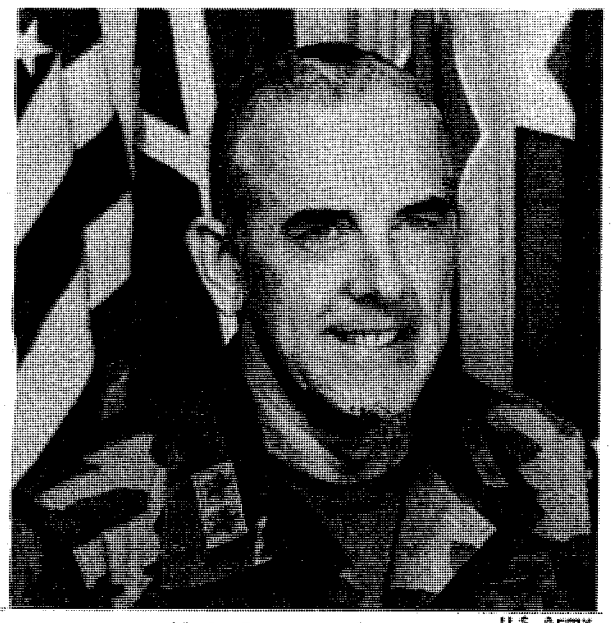
THE BAYONET

Vol. 42, No. 26 | Published in the interest of personnel at Fort Benning, Ga. | March 16, 1984



Maj. Gen. (P) Jim Lindsay U.S. Army

Gen. Lindsay returning to Bragg

Major General Jim Lindsay, Fort Benning's commander since July 13, 1983, has been nominated for promotion to Lt. General. The three stars also mean a new assignment as commander of the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, N.C,

General Lindsay, the Army's second Chief of Infantry since the position was re-established in October 1981, returns to the Airborne unit which has characterized his Army career.

As XVIII Airborne Corps' Commander, Gen. Lindsay will be responsible for maintaining the airborne corps and supporting elements in combat readiness condition for immediate execution of contingency plans on a worldwide basis.

Major elements of the XVIII Airborne Corps are the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg; 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga.; 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), Fort Benning; and the 1st Corps Support Command, Fort Bragg; as well as several other separate brigade-size organizations.

Yesterday, the Columbus Ledger/Enquirer reported that Gen. Lindsay would be replaced by Maj. Gen. John W. Foss, currently commanding general of the 7th Army Training Command and assistant deputy chief of staff for operations, Europe. However, by BAYONET press time, official notifiction had not yet been received.

DEERS: Defense Eligibility Reporting System verifies CHAMPUS claims

Are you as a military family registered with the Defense Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS)? If not, your CHAMPUS claims may be denied.

The DEERS is a new way of verifying who is entitled to direct health care at uniformed service hospitals and clinics, as well as to verify eligibility for CHAMPUS benefits. It is aimed at improving the management and administration of the uniformed services medical care system and eliminating wasteful and fraudulent practices.

The first phase of the CHAMPUS-DEERS link has been implemented. CHAMPUS claims won't be paid if the military sponsor isn't on DEERS. If a claim is not paid solely because of DEERS, the sponsor or family should correct the problem with the military personnel office and resubmit the claim with a xeroxed copy of the front and back of the ID card.

The next and upcoming phase of the CHAMPUS-DEERS link is when CHAMPUS claims will be checked against DEERS to see if the patient is enrolled and eligible. An estimated 90 percent of active duty families, 75 percent of retiree families and 66 percent of surviving families of active duty/retired who have died, are enrolled in DEERS.

It is very important that the remainder of the families be enrolled before the patient check phase of DEERS goes into effect, to minimize the number of claims denied due to DEERS. Presently, it takes approximately six to eight weeks after enrollment forms are submitted for the beneficiary to show up on the data base.

Beneficiaries whose ID card was issued after June 1980 were automatically enrolled in the DEERS System. All other personnel must enroll. Active-duty families not properly enrolled with DEERS, or ones who need updates to their records, should contact the personnel office of their parent service right away. Retirees, their families and survivors should immediately contact the nearest personnel office of any service. (MACH)

Mind-poisoning poses problem

Betty Zimmerman

Next week is Poison Prevention Week. See pages 20 and 21 for articles relating to protecting children by preventing accidental poisonings.

However, I would like to address poisoning of another kind — poisoning of children's minds, both intentional and unintentional.

We, as adults, whether we are parents, teachers, authors, Scout leaders, coaches or any other influencial figurehead, are responsible for the attitudes of the children who view us in our leadership positions.

Prejudice, whether it concerns gender, race or lifestyle, is not inborn; it is learned. And children learn it from adults, or peers that have already been influenced by narrow-minded adults.

They also learn bias from television shows, movies and school textbooks.

Gender

Several women's groups have been instrumental in bringing about some changes in gender stereotyping. The newer school books also show women in "non-traditional" jobs, and they no longer depict dominant roles exclusively for boys or men.

Many thought-provoking TV shows are seeking to stymie the outdated idea that women are supposed to forego any career goals in favor of being totally subservient to their husbands. They now attempt to teach people that there are many acceptable lifestyles for women and the choice should be theirs.

Two such examples are the series, "Two Marriages" and Monday night's movie, "Her Life as a Man."

The first deals with the everyday life and problems of two families. In one, the mother is also an engineer with a fast-paced career. The other mother chose homemaking as her career. The show explores all aspects of these situations including the children's and husband's reactions to their wive's and mother's choices.

The movie dealt with a journalist who was refused a job with a national sports magazine because she was a woman. When she masqueraded as a man, she got the job. Not only did she open her boyfriend's eyes, but she taught her boss a lot about machoism too.

Both were honest depictions of real life and hopefully, they provoked new insights by both male and female viewers.

Race

The younger children are growing up in a desegregated world. They willingly mix with all races at school and play together as well — unless some adult has taught them differently.

I don't think I'll ever see a better example of anti-segregation as the old Spencer Tracy, Katherine Hepburn, Sidney Poitier, movie, "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" If it didn't open some minds, nothing will.

Today's television shows try hard not to isolate race as a factor in storylines. They also seem to be trying to open more roles to minority actors and actresses, but they have a long way to go to make it equal. The makers of commercials have made the most obvious improvements in using models of various races.

Lifestyles

So much has happened in this area in the past 20 years.

A whole new world is opening up to handicapped people. Public facilities are being made accessible to the physically impaired and public schools have opened their doors to mentally impaired children as well as blind or deaf youngsters.

Our children have learned to accept these imperfections because of early exposure. It hasn't been too many years since handicapped people were shut away in their homes or worse yet, institutions.

Then there's been the sexual revolution. Recognizing the various alternatives in sexual preferences, cohabitant status, and parenting prerequisites doesn't mean one condones any particular one. It merely means one's eventual choice can be made through knowledge rather than ignorance.

Trying to keep a child uninformed will only cause confusion. I see no harm in the media's portrayals of "different people" or different lifestyles as long as they are handled realistically. The show "Love Sidney" is nothing like some local people feared when they requested it not to be shown here before they had even seen it.

Some people condemn Phil Donahue's show because they discuss so-called controversial subjects. But when handled properly, these shows can be very educational and their goals are to enlighten people who hold fast to misconceptions learned during their sheltered childhoods.

This is one case where many parents poison their children's minds with ideas of their own. Narrow-minded adults can distort facts and perpetuate myths in their effors to protect the children. When in reality, they are only nurturing their own old-fashioned beliefs at the expense of the younger generation who will eventually make their own rules anyway.

My point is — why not save the "Mr. Yuk" stickers (see page 21) for products harmful when ingested instead of arbitrarily labeling any person who differs in any size, shape or form as poisoness or one to be avoided?

Various voices

"How do you keep from teaching your children your bad habits?"

CWO4 David Ford, Hq. Co., Hq. Cmd.-I try to make sure that I don't do or say anything in front of my children that I wouldn't want them to pick up on.

Sp4 McKesson Stafford, 18th Repl. Co., 36th Engr. Gp.-I try to rationalize with my child when I do something that might be a bad influence on him. I try real hard not to demonstrate any of my bad habits when I am around him.

Maj. John Ross, community life officer-I think that we as parents should strive to set the best possible examples and standards that we can. We all must work at using positive reinforcement all the time to set the right example.

Speedy Austin, DA civilian-I discuss with my children certain bad habits by presenting the pros and cons of the habit. I then let my children make their own decisions. So far they have done very well for themselves.

SFC Darrell DeSpain, A Co., Hq. Cmd.-By trying to keep my bad habits out of the home. If I do something that I don't wish for my children to do, I explain to them why I do and why they shouldn't. I think communication is the key.

Editorial

The American Red Cross at Fort Benning has lost its chairman of volunteers who has served faithfully and devotedly for more than 20 years; 10 of those years she served as hospital chairman.

Genevieve Jane Havey will long be remembered at Fort Benning for her dedication and loving kindness for her fellow man. She was loved by her many Red Cross volunteers, paid staff and military, and especially by her many friends and loving family.

Jane prompted the desire in people to help other people, this activated an unselfish response with no end other than continuing growth and insight for her many loved volunteers at Fort Benning. Be it community or military, she was there with volunteers to help others, and she made a vital contribution to the community. Her main goal was to make sure that volunteers saturated the military community wherever they are needed. This covers the areas at Martin Army Community Hospital, Red Cross Field Office, SAF caseworkers, veterinary clinic, base schools nurses's office, CPR and First Aid, Summer Volunteer Licensed Practical Nurses, Patient Affairs, Blood Bank and Officers Wives' Club Sign-Up Coffee.

Jane always said that Red Cross is in constant need of volunteers but we are not the only ones who benefit. "Helping others will be a unique and rewarding experience to you as a volunteer, is what Jane believed.

She will be missed, but her spirit will continue to flow in these many miles and hallowed walls at Fort Benning.

An unexpected kindnesss
From an unexpected place
A hand outstre tched in friendship
A word of understanding, spoken in
An hour of trial
Are unexpected miracles, that make Life more worthwhile

That was Genevieve Jane Harvey.

To her from all her Red Cross volunteers and paid staff, thanks for a job well done. May she rest in peace.

SPIRIT fights fraud, waste, abuse

By Dot Russell
SPIRIT coordinator

Have you ever drawn a blank on a subject that you love to talk about? Well, then you know what I experienced when a local TV station turned on their lights, stuck a microphone in front of my face and asked, "What is Project SPIRIT?"

I felt like someone with amnesia.

Here is my chance to tell what I really think SPIRIT is, but what do I do? I mutter the standard definition -- Project SPIRIT is the Training and Doctrine Command program for capturing and documenting the results of all savings programs under one organizational umbrella.

What I wish I had said was -- Project SPIRIT is an instrument of war. The war against the "enemy" fraud, waste, and abuse. This enemy drives inflation at break-neck speeds and grinds its heel into our resources. This enemy encourages us to squander the freedom we enjoy and to forget the price -- paid in blood to win and maintain our freedom. Project SPIRIT dictates that we recognize this enemy and arm ourselves against it by performing our mission in the most efficient and economical way.

Project SPIRIT, as a program, has a built-in control against fraud, waste and abuse. That control is the documentation process, the audit trail; the year-end verification process by activities, installations, TRADOC and DA.

Documenting SPIRIT initiatives is added work for a number of people especially our SPIRIT points of contact and the folks accomplishing the budget and year-end report. (In some activities both of those duties fall to one person.) These folks have good reasons to be proud of their work on SPIRIT. If you flip through Fort Benning SPIRIT documents you can see many entries which indicate savings were applied to accomplish other objectives.

Project SPIRIT has a built-in control against fraud, waste and abuse. It is the year-end documentation process by activities, installations, TRADOC and DA.

Just imagine what could happen if everyone got SPIRIT?

The rewards of SPIRIT go further than winning a million dollars. More than $20 million in taxpayer's savings is not "back pocket" money, even for Fort Benning. Through SPIRIT initiatives, we were able to save the taxpayer's dollars by cost avoidance and reprogram hard savings to get more done. We were able to enhance our image through SPIRIT publicity and learn a little more about each other's jobs.

Project SPIRIT challenges us as individuals and organizations to "find a better way."

Fort Benning can -- We're number one!

Crew builds new machine; replaces wornout trucks

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Tower Branch of the 4th Airborne training Battalion received a new wind machine last month because of a "Buzz Group" meeting held in the Maintenance Division of the Directorate of Industrial Operations.

"Buzz Group," is the name Troy Ellis, installation maintenance officer, gives to sessions where members of his division meet to resolve what seems like insurmountable problems.

According to Ellis, the subject of the meeting was the maintenance problems that the battalion was experiencing with three wind machines that were then being used to simulate the high winds on the drop zone.

High winds sometimes cause the canopy to remain inflated and drag the paratrooper, causing injury.

Because of their age, the machines needed constant repair. The old wind machines were mounted on salvaged truck chassis and repair parts were no longer available. "We had some old vehicles," said Ellis, "that had the huge fans on them — that I couldn't maintain."

There seemed to be no solution to the problem: the battalion had to have operable machines; maintenance division could not get repair parts, and the soldiers needed the training in order to reduce the possibility of injury. The meeting was stuck on those points until Julius F. Blum, chief, Technical Assistance Section, asked the question, "Do the machines have to be mobile?" It was agreed that the machine did not have to be mobile, but it did have to have the ability to direct winds in all directions.

"Every paradox can be paradoctered."

That question opened up the meeting, according to Ellis, two agreements were reached almost immediately: the old truck chassis could be scrapped and new chassis were too costly. The solution was simple — build a stationary machine.

"Every paradox can be paradoctered," explained Ellis. He claims that he is routinely able to solve most problems by explaining them to his people and letting them seek the answer. "I don't think that there is a problem that you can't, somehow, come up with a solution. So I got a group together . . . and we started studying the problem for what it was."

Blum, a regular member of Ellis' "Buzz Groups," took the problem home with him. He was using "Contemplative time" according to Ellis. He explains "contemplative time" as the time that an employee uses to simply "think a problem through," and he credits their usage of that time as the reason that his division came up with so many SPIRIT initiatives last year.

Cadre members from the 4th Airborne Training Battalion hook up a parachute and demonstrator during testing of the new Airborne wind machine.

The Results of Blum's thinking turned out to be a revised wind machine, driven by a diesel engine. This engine comes from an M113 Armored Personnel Carrier, and is readily available. The machine can be rotated in a complete circle so that more than one student can be trained at a time and provides "winds" up to 35 mph.

The construction of the machine by the maintenance division, rather than the purchase of new machines saved Fort Benning more than $33,000.

New England reserves arrive for annual visit

By Wendell M. Graham
76th Division PAO

It wasn't play; it was the real McCoy and they had two weeks to do it in. They arrived in total darkness, set up camp and waited. As the orange sun peeked on the horizon, they made their move.

Camouflaged in BDU's, 263 reservists slithered in and positioned themselves amongst the troops of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. From base camp they took their cue.

Armed with drill hats, the men trained the new recruits. They were tough and unforgiving. Mortars, mines, M-16's, 12-mile marches — nothing was too tough for them.

Operations reeled out the training schedules, clerks shuffled the paperwork, supply handled the equipment, and the drivers handled the vehicles — everyone was involved. They had come 1,200 miles for their mission, and it was going as planned.

The 4th Brigade (Infantry-OSUT), 76th Division (Training), made their stand at Fort Benning once again. Commanded by Col. John C. Roth, the brigade brought with them units from Bristol, Narragansett and Providence, R. I., and Norwich, Conn. For this Ready-Reserve Training Brigade, the mission was once again a success.

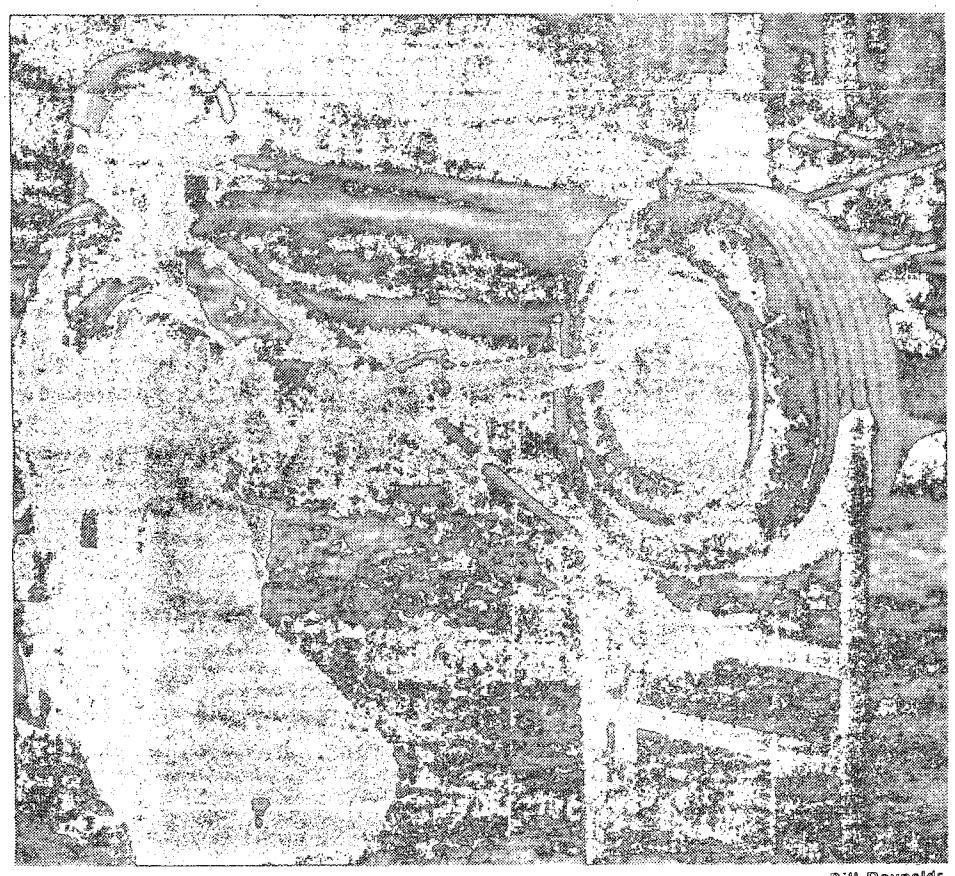
ITB company takes stab at bayonet training



Bill Reynolds

Private Charles Lankford, C-7-1, drives the point home as he engages a dummy at the rifle bayonet fighting course.

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Charlie Company, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, took a step back in time Wednesday, when they ran the rifle bayonet fighting course on Sand Hill.

"They are taught to defend themselves with the bayonet," said SSgt. Gordon Chambers, drill sergeant, C-7-1. "The Infantryman has to be prepared for anything. He never really knows when he may run out of ammunition on the battlefield and come face-to-face with the enemy.

"He may come face-to-face with the enemy in a situation where he has ammo and yet not be able to shoot. He may be involved in a raid where 'silence is golden'"

By the time the soldier gets to the bayonet course, he has had several hours of training on the subject. He has become proficient in assuming the positions that will provide him the most protection while presenting the enemy with the most danger.

According to Chambers, the bayonet becomes almost an extension of the soldier as he practices the "on guard" position. From that basic stance, he soon learns how to defend himself by forcing the opponent's weapon to the side. After he has mastered the technique of "parry right" or left, he learns how to "force the issue" by thrusting the steel home. "He learns to use the entire weapon, not just the sharp end," said Chambers. "He learns how to deliver a butt stroke or a smash to the head or groin."

Finally, after hours of training, practicing each individual technique, the soldiers arrive at the course, only to find they still have more classes to go. "He receives a class on the course," commented Chambers. "This includes a safety briefing on his actions while on the course. Then the soldier has a 'walk through' where he gets to see and receive a demonstration on each one of the 18 stations in the course."

To successfully complete the course, the soldiers have to engage all 18 stations.

They are allowed only four "no gos." If they have more than four failures on the course, it is a signal to the drill sergeants that retraining is needed.

The soldiers then get a chance to do what they have been taught — engage simulated enemy situations with the bayonet.

Army asks some soldiers to change MOSs

Some 15,000 soldiers will soon have the opportunity to consider changing their military occupational specialty, according to Department of the Army Personnel officials.

Selected E4s to E6s will be notified in early March through letters from the Army's Military Personnel Center about voluntary reclassification from their existing specialities to ones with greater potential for career advancement.

MILPERCEN officials say this effort will help the Army meet on-going force-structure realignment in a more practical way.

Letters of explanation will be sent through the unit commander of the affected soldier. The commander is being asked to counsel the soldier on the advantages of taking part in the program. These include:

- an expansion of professional knowledge via formal retraining.
- notably improved career progression and promotion opportunity.

Soldiers selected will be from an identified overstrength MOS and given the opportunity to choose from ones included on a shortage listing.

For example, officials say, if a soldier holds a specialty identified as overstrength in a combat support or combat service support career management field, that soldier would be well advised to consider the prospects of switching specialty into an understrength combat arms field. By doing so, officials explain, the soldier leaves a "promotion-stagnant specialty," where some 900 points may be needed for promotion, and enters a specialty that may require some 450 to 600 points for promotion to grades E5 or E6.

MILPERCEN officials explain handling of the identification and referral procedures in this way:

After the commander's counseling session, the interested soldier will be referred to the servicing military personnel office for processing through the specially designed "skill alignment module." The soldier's current qualifications will be updated. A listing of specialities from which to apply will then be provided to the soldier who selects, on priority basis, up to five specialities.

Officials point out that the voluntary reclassification program offers the soldier a few added features:

- A computation of the average time-in-service for promotion to the next two higher grades in the listed specialty;
- A statement of whether the specialty has a selective re-enlistment bonus.

Short turnaround time

Soldiers identified as being qualified for reclassification in a given specialty will have their requests processed through MILPO channels to the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va. The action process will take no longer than 45 days from the date of the letter notifying the soldier.

If at least 5,000 candidates agree to voluntary reclassification, enlisted personnel officials at MILPERCEN will view the project as a complete success, contributing to an improved readiness posture. "It will help the retainability of our soldiers — inspiring more re-enlistments," said Col. Alan H. Byrne, project officer for the reclassification program at MILPERCEN. "We hope that the commanders and their troops will take a close look at it and recognize the advantages in responding to it."

Based on a review of past MILPERCEN efforts at both voluntary and mandatory reclassification, Byrne noted that this "open-season" opportunity should produce nothing but a positive reaction through all the ranks. (ARNews)

CID's looking for special investigation agents

Are you interested in criminal investigation? Would you like a position that offers career progression, specialized schooling, worldwide travel and challenging assignments?

If so, the United States Army Criminal Investigation Command, better known as CID, may have a place for you as a CID special agent. CID is the Army's sole agency for the investigation of serious crimes committed by or against members of the Army. The command also provides protective services to certain Department of Defense officials.

The CID Command is headquartered in Falls Church, Va. It has subordinate headquarters elements to supervise worldwide field unit investigations. In addition, there are three crime laboratories located in the United States, Europe and Japan.

Initially, a special agent is involved in all types of criminal investigations but can eventually become specialized. If desired, he or she may become a polygraph examiner, laboratory examiner or economic crime investigator.

How to apply

The first step is to see the Chief of Investigative Support at your local CID Office. Here on Fort Benning, he is Special Agent Armstrong located at building 75E, telephone 545-7950/7052. He will explain the application procedures and arrange to meet with you.

Army Regulation 195-3, Acceptance and Accreditation of Criminal Investigative Personnel, lists the prerequisites and contains a sample format for the application.

Who can apply?

Any qualified service member of active duty may apply for the special agent program. The basic requirements are that the applicant be a U.S. citizen, at least an E-4 and 21 years old. In addition, the prospective agent should have two years college or equivalent, a minimum GT score of 110 and a passing score on the physical fitness test, as well as six months law enforcement experience.

Some of these requirements are waiverable. Not meeting a requirement should not keep an interested soldier from applying. Each application is considered individually and weighed on its own merit.

After the application is completed and the applicant has been interviewed by the special agent-in-charge of the local office, the application is forwarded through the local military personnel office to CID headquarters. In the meantime, background investigation security forms are sent directly to the headquarters for processing. The applicant is kept informed by headquarters personnel of the status of the application.

What happens after acceptance? Once accepted, candidates for the special agent program attend a 12-week investigator's course at Fort McClellan, Ala. Upon completion, the prospective agent will be assigned to a new duty station and complete one year probationary training under the guidance of an accredited agent.

Once accredited, upon completion for the probationary period, many opportunities are available for additional specialized schooling.

Another benefit for the enlisted special agent in CID is the chance to apply for appointment to warrant officer. (USACID)

VA questions and answers

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors.

Q - I served in Vietnam and believe I was affected by exposure to Agent Orange. Can the VA help me?

A - Yes. The VA is authorized to provide certain health care services to any Vietnam veteran who may have been exposed to Agent Orange. The VA has a continuing program for examining Vietnam veterans who are concerned about the possible health effects of Agent Orange. The findings of these examinations are entered into the Agent Orange Registry.

Q - My husband, a veteran, died 18 months ago and I purchased a headstone at that time. Can I still apply for reimbursement of the headstone from the VA?

A - Yes, a claim for payment must be received by the VA within two years after the permanent burial or cremation or the date of purchase of headstone or services for adding the veteran's identifying information on an existing headstone, whichever date is later.

A - Can a veteran who has donated his remains to science still be eligible for a headstone or marker?

A - Yes, the VA will furnish, when requested, an appropriate memorial headstone or marker for the purpose of commemorating the veteran.

April brings increased benefits to some vets

President Reagan has signed legislation approving a 3.5 percent rate increase in compensation for service-connected disabled veterans and in dependency and indemnity compensation for widows and children of veterans who died from service-connected causes. The increase will be effective April 1, 1984.

The legislation also increases benefits for a few service-connected blinded veterans who also suffer from service-connected deafness. In addition, it increases the membership of the Board of Veterans' Appeals from 50 to 65 to ease an ever-increasing caseload and expedite appeals.

Disabled veterans and survivors affected by this legislation will receive their increased benefits for April in their May 1 checks.

Also included in the bill is a provision that removes a 73-year-old restriction of the nation's sole Confederates-only Southern soldiers of the Civil War and their direct dependents since it was deeded to the federal government in 1911.

The President's signature clears the way for any U.S. military veteran with an honorable discharge to be buried there.

In a related cemetery matter, the bill contains a five-year extension of the VA program which helps finance state veterans cemeteries. Since its inception in 1980, the State Cemetery Grants Program has awarded matching funds totalling $4.1 million to six states for establishment, expansion or improvement of state veterans cemeteries. (VA)

Chaplain's Views

Reflections Reflections

By Chaplain Alice Harris
197th Support Battalion

Today we are living in a world where everyone seems to be in a hurry. Rushing here and there, only to find that God is not going to make time move any faster. We are constantly trying to rush our lives into tomorrow. We are so busy trying to live for tomorrow that we cannot live for the present.

Someone once asked, "What is life?" One man responded by saying, "All that one can say about life is that it goes on even after death."

Too often we find ourselves so caught up in rushing life onward, that we have very little pleasure in living it. We become so caught up with rushing life towards that never ending eternity that we forget that God never rushes. He takes His time in doing things in an orderly fashion. By slowing down in life, we can take a walk with God; but by not slowing down, we race with endless time towards our death.

The Gospel writer, St. John, tells the story of two sisters named Mary and Martha who had a brother named Lazarus. Lazarus and his sisters lived in the town of Bethany. One day Lazarus became ill and died. Mary and Martha were quite upset over his death and they sent someone to tell Jesus. When Jesus heard of Lazarus' death, he stayed two more days in the town where he had been ministering.

Finally, Jesus decided to go to Bethany, the town in which Lazarus had died. After arriving there, Jesus told his disciples, "Lazarus is dead. And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe; nevertheless let us go unto him." (John 11: 14, 15)

As soon as Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she rushed to meet him while Mary was still in the house. Martha said to Jesus, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Jesus responded by saying, "Thy brother shall rise again."

Martha said, "I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Then Jesus said unto Martha, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

Many times we find ouselves being like Martha. We become anxious, wanting to rush and do things immediately; though God does not want it to happen suddenly. Jesus did not rush immediately to the side of Mary and Martha. He stayed two more days where he had been residing, only because he wanted to show others of the miraculous works of God. This was why he told his disciples, "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe."

God's delays are intentional. We need to slow down and let Him do His miraculous works. The great philosopher Socrates once said, "It is not the length of a man's life that is important, but it's the depth."

It is not how long we live that is important, but what we put into each day. By rushing we overlook some of the small blessings of God. Let's take the advice of a poet who wrote:

Slow me down, Lord

Slow me down, Lord. Ease the pounding of my heart by the quieting of my mind.

Steady my hurried pace with a vision of the eternal reach of time.

Give me, amid the confusion of the day, the calmness of the everlasting hills.

Slow me down, Lord, and inspire me to send my roots deep into the soil of Life's enduring values that I may grow toward the stars of my greater destiny.

JoAnne Mercer

Christian singer entertains troops

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

Bobby Michaels' series of concerts last week included old favorites such as "Battle Hymn of the Republic", as well as his own compositions.

The soldiers heard his catchy, foot-tapping "Walking to Sinai" that tells of God's own brand of PT when He ordered the Israelites to "take another lap around Mt. Sinai, til you learn your lesson, til you stop your whining . . ."

One of Michaels' favorites was a song written by his friend, B.J. Thomas, soon after he became a Christian. It tells of the need to slow down in the midst of the rush and business of everyday life. The words remind him to "be still and let God love me."

Michaels, the son of an Air Force colonel, has lived in Europe for the past five years, and has sung to more than 200,000 soldiers and their families. He urged his Fort Benning audiences not to "take for granted our freedom, especially the freedom of worshipping God openly." He said, "In eastern Europe, soldiers would be stripped of rank and maybe thrown into jail just for listening to me sing Christian songs."

'Cents off' coupons make sense

FORT LEE, Va. — During Fiscal Year 1983, Army commissary customers took advantage of "cents off" coupons to significantly reduce the cost of merchandise purchased.

Coupons are big business for manufacturers in promoting specific products or opening new markets for their products. Coupons are also big business for the Army Commissary System because more than 28 million coupons were presented by customers for a savings of more than $9 million.

The more coupons customers use, the more they save and the more money is earned for the Operations and Maintenance, Army Appropriation for the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency. Manufacturers pay a handling fee to compensate for labor costs of TSA employees to administer the coupon redemption program. More than $1.7 million was added to the OMA fund which is used to pay salaries, travel and training costs.

Customers are reminded to use coupons to buy items which they regularly purchase. Buying an item simply because there is a cents-off coupon for it, will not save the shopper money.

Commissary shoppers who use coupons will add to the savings already gained through the privilege of commissary shopping. (TSA)

EER provides job rating

The Enlisted Evaluation Reporting System (EERS), designed to support the Army's personnel management programs and the career development of individual soldiers, influences the soldier's career objectives, measures the quality of the Noncommissioned Officer (NCO) Corps, and largely determines the senior enlisted leadership of the Army.

The information in evaluation reports, the Army's needs, and the individual soldier's qualifications are used together as a basis for such personnel actions as promotion, selection, assignment, military occupation specialty (MOS) classification, Command Sergeant Major (CSM) designation and qualitative management. Its effectiveness will be measured by the extent to which EERs provide clear, meaningful information to those who need it.

The EER is prepared by a rating chain in the soldier's assigned organization and is designed to provide a brief, clear assessment of the rated soldier's duty performance, professionalism and potential. Evaluation reports provide the individual soldier formal recognition for performance of duty, measurement of professional and personal traits, and a basis for counseling by rating officials on career development.

Selection board members have consistently indicated that the EER is the most impotant document used in the selection process and that increased emphasis is placed on the narrative portions of the EER because of numerical inflation.

AR 623-205 and DA Pamphlet 600-8, procedure 5-8, govern the preparation and submission of EERs. (ARNews)

Civilian Personnel Office

Employees covered by the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance (FEGLI) Program are allowed to designate the beneficiary of insurance proceeds payable after death.

The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) recently broadened employee discretion in designating beneficiaries. Covered employees may now add a common-disaster clause in a designation.

A common-disaster clause is a statement on the designation which provides that a designated beneficiary who does not survive the designator by a specified minimum number of days is not entitled to the insurance money.

A common-disaster clause is generally used to prevent payment of the insurance money to the estate of a designated beneficiary who dies before payment of the insurance can be made. The decision whether to use such a clause in a designation depends on many factors in the estate planning of an individual.

Employees must therefore make a personal decision in this matter and, if unsure as to the effect of such a designation on their personal planning, should consult their personal attorney for professional advice.

If an insured person provided in a valid designation of beneficiary that a designated beneficiary shall be entitled to the proceeds of the insurance only if the beneficiary survives him/her for a period of time (not more than 30 days) as specified by the designator, no right to the insurance shall vest as to such beneficiary during that period.

In the event such beneficiary does not survive the specified period, payment of the proceeds of the insurance will be made as if the beneficiary had predeceased the insured.

Employees wanting to make use of the new opportunity may do so by filing a new designation of beneficiary. Due to the workload imposed by this change, and the number of employees involved, changes cannot be made on a walk-in basis. Appointments must be made in advance by calling the Technical Services Branch, 545-5666 or 545-5578.

St. Patrick's Day Parade

Columbus and Phenix City are hosting the 3rd annual St. Patrick's Day Parade tomorrow at 11 a.m. There will be six bands and 60 units in the two-mile parade that starts in Phenix City at the Broad Street extension. It will cross the 14th Street bridge into Columbus and go down Broad Street to the promenade area. There will be refreshments and vending stalls in the 1200 block. Fort Benning will be sending the 283rd Army Band and a color guard unit to participate in the annual event.

Volunteer center news

Are you interested in career exploration, professional contacts, career experience and/or self-fulfillment? If so, contact your Volunteer Resource Center and get further details of the opportunities that exist on the post. There is a position waiting for you in one of the organizations.

Volunteering is a way to explore a new field of interest before making an irreversible decision. It also gives you the opportunity of gaining experience and written references needed in seeking paid employment.

Volunteering gives you the flexibility to choose what you want to do.

At this time, ACS is looking for 10 volunteers to help start a new program, Escort Service, for the hospital.

Receptionists and helpers for the Exceptional Family Member Program are also needed by ACS.

Sunday School teachers and helpers are sorely needed at this time. And Vacation Bible School teachers and helpers are also needed for the week of June 18-22.

There is no experience required for any of these jobs. If any of these positions sound appealing to you, call 545-5602 or stop by the VRC office at 301 McIver St.

Huntsville Village Singers

Morale Support's Music and Theatre Section is presenting two performances of the University of Alabama in Huntsville Village Singers. The small, elite student ensemble provides a fast moving colorful show of popular and folk music. They have entertained in Europe, the Far East and in Guatemala.

They will be at Theater #2 in Harmony Church tonight at 7 and at Theater #3, tomorrow at 2 p.m. There is no charge for the shows.

OWC scholarships

Don't forget to get your applications for the OWC scholarships in before April 9. There are two adult scholarships for graduate or undergraduate studies, two vocational tech scholarships and seven for high school seniors going to college. The point of contact is Mrs. Robert Lenz, 687-1742.

2nd Div. Association

The Fort Benning branch of the Second (Indianhead) Division Association will hold their election of officers on March 25 at 2 p.m. in the Sand Hill NCO Club. The division is also holding their 65th annual reunion in Hot Springs, Ark., July 18-21. If you are interested in either, please come to the meeting.

ACS offers exercising

Army Community Service is sponsoring a free exercise program to all military families. The classes will be held in building 2088. Aerobics are offered every weekday from 9:15 to 10 a.m. and slendercize will be offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10:15 to 11 a.m. There is a small unattended play area if needed, but you are responsible for your own children. For more information, call ACS 545-1233/1169.

Spring fashion show

A mall-wide Spring Fashion Show will be held at 1 p.m. on March 24 in the Columbus Square Mall. The latest in Spring and Easter fashions will be shown by models from Mable Bailey's Fashion College.

Hamster race coming

It's time again for the Spring Hamster Race at the triangle in Columbus Square Mall. It will be held March 24 at 3 p.m. You may register your hamster at Woolworth's right up until race time. Prizes will be awarded. For more information, call June Bedle at 561-6305.

NCOA meets Monday

The Follow Me Chapter of the Non-Commissioned Officers Association (NCOA) will hold its monthly meeting Monday at 5:30 p.m., at the Sand Hill NCO Club. For further information, call CSM Hollander at 544-1484 or MSgt. Cook at 544-3021.

Goodwill needs help

Goodwill Industries needs your repairable furniture and household products. A critical shortage of these items is adversely affecting Goodwill's store sales and has left many handicapped employees with idle hands. Call Goodwill today (324-4366) and arrange for a home pickup.

Concerned citizens meet

The guest speaker at the South Columbus Concerned Citizens meeting April 11 will be Jakie Titus, College College Mental Health Department professor. Mrs. Titus will speak on ways to provide support to rape victims. This is the third and final program in a series on the problem of rape and how to prevent it. The group will meet at 3 p.m. at the Disabled Veterans' Hall on Mathews Street. All South Columbus citizens and businessmen are invited.

OWC offers belly dancing

The Officers Wives Club is starting belly dance lessons and your first lesson will be free. There will be a class today at noon and then future classes will be held every Monday and Friday at noon in the OWC activity building. The fee is only $10 per month. Household products, medicines can lead to chil

National Poison Prevention Week is being observed March 18-24. Since small children are usually the victims of accidental poisonings, the following article points out possible trouble areas.

Many of the household products that most frequently cause accidental poisonings are products you might never think of as harmful. Almost any household product is a potential poison. Most poisonings result from swallowing a product that is not meant to be eaten or swallowed. However, you can also be poisoned if certain liquids get on your skin or in your eyes, or if you inhale certain fumes or powders. Poisonings can happen to anyone, although most involve your children under five years old.

Careless storage and improper use of household products cause most accidential poisonings. Below is a list of the household products most frequently involved in accidental poisonings, and the circumstances in which they usually occur.

Cologne and perfume are by far the most common causes of poisoning from household products. Young children are attracted by their pleasant fragrance and pretty bottles, which are usually kept on bedroom furniture and in the bathroom where they can be easily reached. Most accidents happen when a child drinks some cologne or perfume. The victim may become drunk or drowsy because of the alcohol they contain. Accidents can also happen if a child accidently splashes cologne in the eyes, irritating them, while trying to imitate the way a parent uses it. To eliminate these possibilities, store cologne, perfume and after shave bottles on high shelves, preferably in cabinets, out of sight and reach of young children.

Bleach often poisons young children when they drink some from a laundry measuring cup or directly for the container, usually stored within easy reach in kitchen or laundry cabinets. If bleach is swallowed, the throat and mouth may become irritated. Adults are frequently poisoned by bleach when they accidentally inhale its fumes, particularly the poisonous fumes that are created when bleach is mixed with ammonia. When this happens, coughing, nausea, or vomiting may occur. To prevent accidental poisoning, never leave bleach within a child's reach if there are children around. Store bleach containers out of children's reach, preferably in a locked cabinet. Read and follow directions carefully before using bleach.

Ammonia can poison if you accidentally inhale its fumes while using it. If ammonia is mixed with bleach, even more toxic fumes are created. If either type of fumes are inhaled, you may feel lightheaded, dizzy, or you may become excessively active. Children often swallow ammonia from a cup, bucket, or from the bottle. It is often mistaken for a beverage when it has been stored in a beverage container. If swallowed, ammonia may irritate the mouth and stomach, and may produce nausea and vomiting. To avoid accidental poisoning from ammonia fumes, always use it in a well-ventilated room. Follow directions for use carefully. Never mix ammonia and bleach. Store ammonia in a locked cabinet. When ammonia is being used, do not leave a young child unattended in the room.

Housepaint is often swallowed by young children when they find an open can of paint. If paint is swallowed, vomiting and drowsiness may occur. Children will also eat paint chips peeled from walls or picked up from the floor. In many older homes, these chips contain lead and can cause lead poisoning, which may result in constipation and tiredness. To avoid a poisoning accident, never leave a child unattended in an area in which paint is being used. Be sure to repair walls and ceilings where paint is peeling.

Gasoline poisonings are usually caused when gas is accidentally swallowed while being syphoned. Such accidents most often involve young adults and adults, and usually occur at the end of a season when gas is being drained from recreational vehicles, lawnmowers, or snowblowers, or if it is being syphoned from one vehicle into another. Young children are often poisoned when they drink gasoline stored in a beverage container, mistaking it for a soft drink. Gasoline poisoning may result in nausea, vomiting and coughing. To prevent such accidents, avoid syphoning gasoline. If you must store gasoline, use only approved gasoline cans and store the cans up high, out of reach of children, preferably in a locked cabinet that is cool, well-ventilated, and not exposed to direct sunlight.

Mothballs are frequently swallowed by young children who mistake them for candy. Accidents are most common during spring and summer, when winter woolens are stored in mothballs. Nausea, vomiting, excessive activity, drowsiness or coma are all signs of mothball poisoning. To prevent accidents, use mothballs only in closets, cabinets or chests that can be locked or blocked to prevent access by children.

Mercury is sometimes swallowed by a young child when a thermometer breaks in his or her mouth. However, there is not enough mercury in a thermometer to cause serious problems, and there are no visible symptoms of poisoning. Since the greater danger is the presence of glass slivers in the mouth, check first for cuts and remove any pieces of glass, then call the Poison Center or your physician.

Alcohol poisoning is most prevalent among teenagers and adults. Poisoning usually occurs if you have drunk too much alcohol or if you are drinking and taking medication at the same time. Young children can become severely ill if they swallow alcohol from glasses left out after parties, or from bottles found in unlocked liquor cabinets. Alcohol overdose victims may become drunk, excessively active, drowsy and may go into a coma. To prevent alcohol poisoning, throw out all leftover liquor immediately after a party. Store all alcoholic beverages in locked cabinets. Drink alcohol in moderation and exercise caution if you are taking medication.

Shampoo is a frequent but rarely serious cause of poisoning in young children. A child who drinks shampoo from a bottle or eats some from a tube may become nauseous or vomit. To avoid accidental poisoning, allow a child to use shampoo only under adult supervision. Store shampoo bottles out of reach of children.

dren's accidental poisoning

Cigarette and cigar poisoning is caused by the nicotine contained in the tobacco. Young children are most often poisoned from chewing cigarettes and cigarette butts and ashes, which they can easily take from tabletops, ashtrays and pocketbooks. Poisoning may cause nausea, vomiting, headache and stomach irratation. To avoid poisoning, keep cigarettes out of sight and reach of children. Clean all ashtrays immediately after use, and throw out the contents so children cannot get into them.

Drug poisoning

Thousands of accidental poisonings are caused every year by commonly used prescription and nonprescription drug products. Many of these accidents involve children under five.

Drug related poisonings happen for many reasons:

Careless Storage and Usage. Drug products, particularly nonprescription are usually kept in unlocked bathroom medicine cabinets and closets, left out on dressers and countertops (particularly when someone in the home is sick), and are carried in easily opened pocketbooks or suitcases. These are all places that young children can easily get into. Most children over two years of age can climb and reach places you think are safe.

Taking the Wrong Dose. Many adults are poisoned because of accidental overdoses. Poor vision, or taking medicine in the dark, can result in your taking the wrong medication or reading the label incorrectly. Taking a double dose to make up for one that was missed can also result in accidental overdose.

Mixing Medications. Many medications, if taken at the same time, can cause harmful reactions; for example, cold medications taken along with a sedative can cause drowsiness. Likewise, poisoning can also result from drinking alcoholic beverages while on medication.

Experimentation. Many teenagers are accidentally poisoned while experimenting with drugs, alcohol, or household products, i.e., solvents.

Don't underestimate the potential danger of drug products, particularly nonprescription products. The following drug products are those that are more frequently associated with accidental poisoning.

Aspirin, alone or in many prescription and nonprescription pain relievers, causes more poisonings in most age groups than any other drug product. Most accidents involve young children who eat aspirin, thinking it is candy, especially fruit-favored children's aspirin. Poisonings also occur when children imitate their parents taking aspirin. Aspirin poisoning may cause deep breathing, nausea, vomiting, excessive activity and sometimes, death.

Diazepam is a prescription sedative and anti-anxiety medication generally sold as Valium(R). Most poisonings involve adults, resulting from mistakes or carelessness in using the drug, or from suicide attempts.

Common symptoms of poisoning are drowsiness ane coma.

Destin(R) is sold both as an ointment and a powder for treatment of diaper rash. Children often mistake the ointment for toothpaste and swallow some, which may result in an upset stomach. If the powder is inhaled, breathing problems may result.

Acetaminophen is an ingredient found in aspirin substitutes such as Tylenol(R) or Datril (R). Most accidental poisonings involve young children, and happen under much the same circumstances as aspirin poisoning. An overdose can result in nausea, vomiting, and, if a sufficient quantity is taken, death.

Vitamins (tablets or liquid) are frequently mistaken by small children for candy, particularly fruit flavored children's vitamins shaped like cartoon characters. There are rarely any symptoms of vitamin poisoning. Vitamins containing iron may cause iron poisoning, possible symptoms are nausea, vomiting, diarrhea and drowsiness.

Isopropyl alcohol (rubbing alcohol) often poisons young children when they drink it directly from the bottle, usually within easy reach in bathroom cabinets. Alcohol poisoning may result in excessive activity at first, followed by drowsiness and possibly, coma.

Children Imitate Adults. If children see you taking medicine, they may imitate you when you are not in the room. Before they are found, they may have already swallowed enough of a drug to kill them.

Calling Medicine "Candy". Parents often refer to medicine as "candy," hoping that this will make their child more willing to take some. A child might, therefore, eat large amounts of a medicine when no parent is around thinking it really is candy.

Dimetapp(R) is a nasal decongestant available in liquid and tablet form. Young children swallow medications containing Dimetapp(R) because it has a pleasant grape flavor. Poisoning may result in excessive activity, drowsiness and possibly a coma.

Percodan(R) is a common prescription pain killer sold in tablet form. Poisonings most frequently involve adults, in circumstances similar to the two drugs above, and may cause dizziness, drowsiness, disorientation and possibly, coma.

Teach your child Mr. Yuk means 'NO!'

Mr. Yuk stickers say "NO!" to little children who can't read warning labels on the many dangerous products, plants and medicines in a home. Tests have shown Mr. Yuk to be more effective than cross and bones stickers in warning younger children.

You can get self-adhesive Mr. Yuk stickers by sending a self-addressed, stamped, business-size envelope to: National Poison Center Network, 125 DeSoto St., Pittsburgh, Pa., 15213. Or they may be purchased by sending an order to Medibadge, Inc., 8519 North 48th St., Omaha, Neb., 68152.

Teach your children that Mr. Yuk means NO. Take them with you as you place Mr. Yuk stickers on dangerous products in your home.

In the event of suspected poisoning, immediately contact your local poison control center. The Fort Benning center is the Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room, 544-1502/1123. The local center is at the Columbus Medical Center and its number is 571-1080. These control centers are manned 24 hours a day and you can call either one for emergency instructions.

Also, keep a bottle of syrup of ipecac on hand for emergency use once you have contacted a poison control center or medical facility. It's a medicine that causes vomiting, but should be used only as recommended by the poison control center or medical facility staff. Syrup of ipecac can be bought without a prescription.

Eight safety tips

Most drug related poisoning accidents can be avoided by following some simple preventive measures.

1. Store all drug products out of reach of children in locked cabinets located high on the wall.
2. Buy drug products with "child-proof" caps whenever possible. Close caps properly after use.
3. Read the label on every drug product carefully before using, and follow directions exactly. Remember, too, that prescriptions should be used only by the intended person and for a specific purpose.
4. Take medications in a well-lighted room to make certain you take the right product in the right amount.
5. Avoid drinking alcoholic beverages while on medication.
6. Don't mix medications unless told to do so by a physician.
7. Don't take medications in front of children.
8. Don't call medicine "candy."

Places to go

Spring flowers blooming at Callaway

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. — Daffodil season has arrived at Callaway Gardens. Thousands of these golden harbingers of spring brighten the Scenic Drive and woodlands. Flowering quince in delicate shades of pink and coral, as well as white, are also coming into full bloom.

A careful inspection along Meadowlark Area trails will reveal some of the smaller "jewels" such as snowdrops, miniature narcissus and Lenten rose. Trilliums, anemones and other native wildflowers are blooming along the Wildflower Trail near the Pioneer Log Cabin.

Final preparations are under way for the grand opening of the new John A. Sibley Horticultural Center on March 22. This innovative, five-acre greenhouse/garden complex has required 10 years to plan and build, and will feature displays of year-round floral beauty. Designed around the concept of man working in harmony with nature, the center offers visitors the unique feeling of being indoors and outdoors simultaneously.

Renovation of the main conservatory greenhouse, the central focus of past floral exhibits, began in January. The greenhouse will reopen with the grand opening of the Sibley Center. The new insulated roof and clear glass walls will provide a light, airy atmosphere in this traditional greenhouse structure.

Azalea season at the gardens is still a few weeks away. These plants weathered the winter well and should reach a colorful stage sometime between late March and mid-April.

STAY WHERE THE PROMOTIONS ARE.

If you're in a shortage MOS and considering a move, think twice. Your best chance for fast promotion could be to stay right where you are.

With the Army's new policy of only promoting E-4s and E-5s in MOSs where vacancies exist, you'll want to study the MOS status roster carefully with your reenlistment NCO.

Right now, some of the best promotion opportunities are in the combat arms. There are more openings there because not everybody can make the team. The physical and mental requirements are tough because that's what it takes to be a leader.

So if you're currently serving with one of the combat arms, you're in the right place at the right time. Your chances for advancement couldn't be better. And if you're in an overstrength MOS and getting itchy, there's no better time to consider switching into the combat arms.

Whatever you decide, we want you to do what's best for you. Because we need you in the Army. See your reenlistment NCO today.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Community Life

McGraw Manor challenge

A community resident donated $100 to the community youth activities fund at the March 5 community meeting. The donator then issued a challenge that all families donate at least $3 each to the same fund. The McGraw Manor community was pleased to accept the donation and hopes there will be more, according to Carolyn Dashiell, co-chairperson.

Exercise classes

The Bouton Heights/Davis Hills community is offering exercise classes at the Roundhouse, 9608 1st Cavalry Division Rd, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 11 a.m. Children are welcome and may use the playground while parents tone up and slim down for warmer weather. Call 544-1195 for more information.

Adults only dance

Adults in the BH/DH housing area will also get a chance to move and groove to the music at their own St. Patrick's Day Dance on March 17. Bring your own refreshments. No children will be admitted. Call 544-1195 for more information and the starting time.

Young people's dance

A St. Patrick's Day Dance will be held for BH/DH young people on March 16 between 7:30 and 10:30 p.m. No one under six will be admitted and attendees must have a valid community ID card.

Clothing drive

Don't forget the clothing drive. Donations are still being accepted. Bring unwanted clothing to the Roundhouse in Bouton Heights/Davis Hills or call 544-1195 for pickup.

Letter

Dear Editor:

On the rainy morning of Feb. 27, our little Pekingnese, Penny, strayed away from home during the power outage. She has been a family pet for 13 years now and is crippled.

I would like to express my gratitude to Jack Craft for taking her in his home and giving her such tender loving care until he could find her owner. He then was thoughtful enough to deliver her to my door.

Jack Craft is one of our volunteers with the Community Life Program. He is surely a great example of community caring here at Fort Benning.

My appreciation also includes Cheryl Hays at the veterinary clinic.

Speller sweats through perspiration

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A fourth grade student took top honors in the Fort Benning School District Spelling Bee Tuesday.

Kellie O'Brien, 10, a student at E. A. White school, won the contest by spelling the word "perspiration."

The post-wide competition was open to Kellie and all other students from the fourth through the eighth grades, with Kellie winning the right to go on to the third district competition March 23. The district winner will then compete in the state-wide contest for a chance to go to Washington D.C. for the nationals.

Tuesday's spelling showdown was a first for both Kellie and the Fort Benning School District. " This was the first year that a fourth-grader has won the spelling bee," said Mary Dent, a fifth-grade teacher at Wilbur School. The trophy and Fort Benning title usually goes to one of the students in the higher grades.

"I was shaking and scared," said Kellie, when she started the competition against the older children. When all but one of the other students had dropped out of the spelling contest, the competition got tough. Then came the word "perspiration," the other competitor started to spell the word — p-r-e and for Kellie the competition was in the bag. She went on to spell the word and in order to win the competition she had to spell one more. The word was "flowery."

"I was happy," exclaimed Kellie, "I knew it! (the word)."

All of the words used in the competition come from Webster's Third International Dictionary.

Knowing how to spell the words, perspiration and flowery, earned her the right to continue in the competition.

Bill Reynolds

Kellie O'Brien proudly displays the trophy she won as the top speller in the Fort Benning School District.

Connie McReynolds

Shari Garrett and Ralph Duke, Fort Benning Commissary baggers, load groceries into the car of one of the many daily commissary shoppers.

Baggers provide service

FORT LEE, Va. — Commissary baggers are necessary for smooth commissary operations according to officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency.

Baggers are not government employees nor are they paid for their services other than the tips they receive from satisfied customers.

How much to tip a commissary bagger depends on how much the customer thinks his services are worth. Perhaps he carried five bags of groceries to the car during a rainstorm. The shopper may feel that the bagger deserves a larger tip than if he had carried two bags to the car on a sunny day.

The bagger should not ask for a tip and customers should report any bagger who asks for a tip to the head bagger who reports to the commissary officer.

Carrying bags for customers is a big part of the commissary bagger's job. However, the bagger must also keep the customer line moving, keep the front-end area clean and assist customers with their purchases. During all of these duties, the bagger must remain calm and courteous to shoppers.

Should a customer prefer to bag his own purchases and carry them out himself, he should let the cashier know this before she begins ringing up the merchandise.

Baggers make shopping in the commissary easier. Although they are not government employees, commissary baggers help the team that "serves the most deserving." (TSA)

NCO Wives Club offers scholarships

The Non-commissioned Officers Wives Club is sponsoring 11 scholarships for the upcoming school year.

For eligibility, one must be a member in good standing of the NCO Wives Club or a family member of same, at the time the selection board meets.

There will be five $1,000 education grants awarded to area graduating high school seniors who intend to go to college, or students currently enrolled in college. The high school seniors will have priority.

Five $500 grants will be awarded to graduating high school seniors who plan to attend a vocational-tech school. One $500 scholarship will be given to an adult member that is enrolled in college or a vo-tech school.

These grants are designed to assist in paying for tuition and books.

Application packets are available at various NCO Wives Club functions or by contacting Estelle Watts at 561-0028.

IRS sets support rules for child's exemption

If you are a divorced or separated parent, the Internal Revenue Service has guidelines to help you decide whether you or your former spouse can claim the $1,000 exemption for your child.

Although there are some exceptions, the parent who has custody of the child for most of the year is usually permitted to claim the exemption. In this case, the parent with custody is treated as the one providing more than half of the child's support.

If you are the non-custodial parent, you may claim the exemption for your child if:

- Your decree of divorce or separate maintenance, or other written agreement, states that you have the right to take the exemption and you provide at least $600 of support for your child, or
- You provide at least $1,200 of support for each child and your former spouse does not provide more, whether or not your decree gives you the exemption.

Know allowable expenses

Whether you are the custodial or non-custodial parent, you should know the types of expenses to include in determining support. Medical and dental care, food, lodging, clothing, education, recreation and transportation are among the items of support.

Many single parents think the value of the lodging they provide for their children is only the rent or mortgage payment. The true value of this lodging (and the value IRS uses) includes a reasonable allowance for the use of the furniture and appliances, heat and other utilities.

You should use the fair rental value of the home in which your child lives, divided by the number of people who live in that home, as the value of the lodging when you determine the amount of support you have provided. Fair rental value is the amount you could reasonably expect to receive from a stranger for the same kind of lodging, the IRS said.

For example, Mary Smith lives with her two children and she pays $300 for monthly mortgage payments. A similar house in her neighborhood rents for $500 a month, unfurnished. She adds $100 a month for the value of the furnishings and $150 a month for utilities. She determines that she is providing $250 of support for lodging per month for each child: $500 plus $100 plus $150 divided by three.

Certain other items are easily missed when you are adding up the amount you've paid for support. The child's contributions to churches or charities, a reasonable amount of your car expenses for transporting the child to school and other activities, and the child's portion of vacation expenses are items of support you might overlook.

Keep accurate records

It is important to keep accurate records of support expenses throughout the year. Maintaining a diary for each child will help you keep track of all the little expenses such as haircuts, school lunches and trips to the movies. These records will be important in determining the amount of support you have provided.

If you have reason to believe that your former spouse intends to claim an exemption for a child for whom you claim an exemption, the IRS suggests that you request in writing an itemized statement of support from the other parent. Details of this and other important information for divorced or separated parents can be found in IRS Publication 504, Tax Information for Divorced or Separated Individuals. You can order this publication by using the handy order blank in your tax package. (AFPS)

How would you like to spend a million?

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management is currently asking major unit commanders and directorate heads for suggestions on how to spend the $1 million bonus that Fort Benning received for winning Training and Doctrine Command's 1983 SPIRIT competition.

Most people would have difficulty in visualizing that much money. The BAYONET has come up with a way to put that much money in perspective.

What is $1 million, besides a figure with six zeros behind it.? With $1 million, you could:

- Buy coffee for the BAYONET office for 2,777 years.
- Support a two-pack a day smoking habit for 2,700 years
- Purchase 80,645 deluxe pizzas
- Own 125 Harley Davidson motorcycles
- Roll 1,428,571 games at the post bowling alley
- Buy enough designer jeans so that you could wear a different pair everyday for 88 years
- Buy 1,760 gallons of expensive perfume
- Buy Fort Benning's population BDU field jackets
- Support a presidential campaign for one month or

- Purchase 5,000 gold cigar lighters.

At today's interest rates you could spend $100 a day — forever and not touch the principal.

Recreation center activities

Easter Egg making class

The Harmony Church Recreation Center, building 4410, is offering a Sugar Easter Egg Making and Decorating Class. The class will be held April 4 and 11 and will consist of two sessions from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. All necessary materials including molds will be provided. The class will be limited to 15 people, so register early and be prepared to pay the $15 charge in advance. For more information, call 544-6754.

Soft sculpture doll class

Registrations are still being accepted for the soft sculpture doll class at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. This class will continue on March 22 and 29, from 6:30-8:30 p.m. The registration fee is $12 and includes one doll kit and instructions. Students must provide stuffing and clothing for their dolls. The fee must be paid at the time of registration. Class sizes are limited so register today. For more information, call 544-3079 from noon-9 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 10 a.m.-7 p.m. on Sunday.

Bob Garber Revue

The Fort Benning Recreation Centers will feature the Bob Garber Revue, Sunday. The show will consist of Bob Garber, comedian, vocalist and entertainer; and two lovely dancers, Carol Lee and Marney Lynn. Showtimes for the recreation centers are: Foxhole, 10:30 a.m.-noon; Harmony Church, 1:30-3 p.m.; and Kelley Hill, 4:30-6 p.m. Admission is free. For more information, call the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, 544-3079.

Spring fashion show

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center will present a spring fashion show at 2 p.m. March 25. The show will include fashions for the entire family from the Fort Benning Main Exchange. Also included in the show will be the latest hairstyles and make-up modeled by Dalys Promotions. Admission is free and open to active duty and retired military personnel, DA civilians and their family members. For more information, call 544-3079 in the afternoons.

Piano and guitar classes

The Music and Theatre Section of MSAD is taking registrations for beginning and intermediate piano and guitar lessons to be given each weekday between 1 and 8 p.m. at the Milton Long Skill Development Center, building 2783. The lessons cost $6 per 30-minute period. Call Mrs. Olney at 545-2321 after 2 p.m. or Mr. Rivers at 544-3079 after noon on Wednesday - Friday to register. All ages are eligible for the lessons.

Plan nutritional meals before competition

By Brenda E. Richardson, R.D.
Clinical Dietitian, MACH

The theme for National Nutrition Month is "Everybody Wins with Good Nutrition." Therefore my third article addresses eating before competition.

Controversy over the pre-event meal exists among various professionals. Medically, the pre-event meals for athletic competitions should satisfy the following requirements:

- Be high in carbohydrates, but low in sugar.
- Be low in protein and fat.
- Contain at least three glasses of liquid.
- Ward off hunger pains during competition.
- Be easily digestible.

I recommend a glass of orange juice, cereal with low-fat or skim milk, lightly buttered toast, potatoes and a minimum of two or more glasses of fluids at least three hours before competition.

Carbohydrates are athletic fuel. They rank as the best source of immediate energy for competition. Examples include bread, pasta, potatoes, fruit and fruit juices.

Carbohydrates should be low in sugar because sugar enters the bloodstream very rapidly in the form of glucose, triggering the release of a high level of insulin to clear the blood of sugar. The result is low blood sugar, a condition called "reactive hypoglycemia".

A large amount of sugar also draws water into the stomach and intestinal tract. This distends the stomach and often causes stomach cramps.

Pre-competition meals should be low in protein and fat. Protein is never a source of immediate energy and the breakdown products of protein are similar to those of exercise and can cause fatigue. Because they can only be eliminated by the kidneys, they increase urination. After eating a fatty meal, you will not be able to perform at your best.

Next week's article will continue dietary rationale with the pre-event meal.

Army realizes families' worth

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army and families have not always been a working partnership. But, by 1960 family members outnumbered uniformed personnel in the active force and the Army began to realize the family's importance to its ability to accomplish its mission.

The Army Chief of Staff's White Paper report focuses on the Army family and the importance the Army places on families. There are approximately 780,000 soldiers, 13 percent officers and 87 percent enlisted. Ninety-four percent enlisted members are between 21 and 25, only 6 percent of the officers are that young. The majority of career soldiers are married.

Family members total 1,082,000; 630,000 are children, 384,000 are spouses and 68,000 are dependent parents. The report also showed that more than 80 percent of the officer corps are married, 78 percent enlisted members are married and 28 percent first-termers are married. This means that 50 percent of the active force is married.

Other facts the report published are that 15 percent officers and career soldiers have three or more children, about 46 percent have one or two children, 39 percent have none. Twenty percent of the first-termers have one or two children, 78 percent have none and five percent have three or more.

Another significant fact is that a large number of soldiers are married to other soldiers. The breakdown is as follows: 10.1 percent company grade, 2.4 percent field grade, 20 percent first-termers and 10.3 percent career enlisted.

According to the report the enlisted force is probably more concerned with day-care centers and officers more concerned with youth activities.

Also, the statistics revealed that more than 21 percent of Army spouses speak English only as a second language, which makes it harder for them to know where to seek out family support services.

An increasing number of spouses of soldiers work outside the home and the report revealed that the financial contribution of working spouses is greater in military families that in civilian families; military spouses contribute 33 percent of the family income compared to 19 percent the civilian spouses contribute.

Because of frequent and unpredicatable military moves, employment is often on a temporary or part-time basis and the report stated this is often the cause of family stress.

One thing the Army realized is that all Army families have needs civilian families don't have. There is no typical Army family, each family has specific and different needs.

The first attempt by the Army to organize family services was the establishment of the Army Community Services. Now, the Army is branching out to expand its organization of support for families.

Agencies within the Department of the Army give advice to policy makers in helping to make decisions on providing different kinds of services such as legal programs, religious and moral development, counseling programs and health support services.

The Army's Quality of Life program addresses the Army's obligation to provide adequate housing, health care, education, pay, facilities maintenance, safe and healthful working conditions and essential community morale, welfare and recreation activities.

Besides those programs, the Army has expanded its alcohol and drug abuse program, the exceptional family member program and the child care program.

These are evidences that the Army takes its families seriously. Maj. Gen. Jim Lindsay, Fort Benning commander, stated in a letter recently that, "The white paper report reaffirms in unequivocable terms the current Army leadership's commitment to our families."

Next week we will examine Fort Benning's support of the family.

Retired sergeant wins 'Special People' Award

The WTVM's (Channel 9) Special People Award was presented to retired Platoon Sergeant Lonnie Jackson Feb. 23 at a luncheon held at the Goetchius House.

Jackson, who was nominated by Paul Smith, was one of nine awardees chosen from more than 300 nominees. He also appeared as a guest on the Good Day Show on Feb. 24 and 26.

Jackson is the founder of the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus (CCSC). CCSC is a neighborhood organization that exists for the benefit of all people living in Southeast Columbus.

He initiated a summer tutorial program in 1983 that was the first mass program of its kind in the state. It consisted of more than 90 volunteer teachers and aides who worked to give the attending children a boost in their education.

He has also headed numerous anti-litter and clean-up drives. (USAIC PAO)

Marshal's Viewpoint

By Curtis D. Earp
Provost Marshal

Fishing violations are on the rise. There have been 33 since Jan. 1, 1984.

In accordance with the provisions of USAIC Regulation 210-2, Fishing Regulations, the following information is furnished concerning fishing regulations on the Fort Benning Military Reservation:

Sportsmen who have permission to hunt or fish on the military reservation are charged with the responsibility of familiarizing themselves with the provisions of these regulations, state and federal laws, and abiding by these regulations and laws.

The following personnel are authorized to fish here:

- U.S. Armed Forces active duty personnel.
- U.S. Armed Forces retired personnel.
- Disabled vets having a service connected disability of not less than 30 percent.
- Civilian employees (appropriated and non-appropriated fund).
- Retired civilian employees (same as above).
- Active National Guardsmen and Reservists residing in the following six county area (Russell and Lee in Alabama; Muscogee, Chattahoochee, Harris and Marion in Georgia), when they are in a paid drill strength status only.
- Primary family members of sponsors and deceased sponsors.
- Guests of commanding general.

All ponds and streams on the Fort Benning Military Reservation are open to fishing throughout the entire year, except when closed for management and/or training purposes. Personnel planning to fish on the reservation are required to check for range clearance.

Methods

Fish will not be taken at any time by any other method than hook or line.

The use of troutlines are prohibited except in the waters of the Chattahoochee River, Upatoi Creek, Uchee Creek, Pine Knot Creek and their tributaries. Troutlines will be marked with the owners name, address and telephone number. All such lines must be attended during each 24-hour period.

The use of fish traps, minnows, snatch hooks or spears, on or around any of the ponds and streams of the reservation, is prohibited.

Limits

Creel limits are as follows for all named ponds and beaver ponds on the Fort Benning Military Reservation:

Species	Daily Limit	Size Limit
Largemouth Bass	10	12 inches
Bream (All species	25	none
Catfish (blue or channel)	8	12 inches

Other species: Compliance with state sport fishing regulations.

Special rules

No boats are allowed on Twilight Pond and no live bait will be used. It is open for fishing ONLY on Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday and legal holidays during daylight hours only.

Russ Pond is designated as a children's fishing area. Only persons 15 years of age and younger are allowed to fish in this area.

Permits

All personnel 16 years of age and over, hunting and fishing on the Fort Benning Military Reservation, must possess an appropriate state license as well as a Fort Benning hunting and/or fishing permit on the waters thereof, except the Chattahoochee River.

Personnel fishing on the Chattahoochee River must possess a state license. Permits will be obtained from the Outdoor Recreation Branch, Morale Support Activities Division, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

Permits for primary family members, 16 years of age and older, must be obtained by the sponsor.

Persons younger than 16 years of age are not required to possess a fishing permit. Persons of age 12 thru 15 must be accompanied by a sponsor/spouse to fish.

Catfish permits are required for those persons 16 years of age and older desiring to fish in Victory or Twilight Pond. These permits are also available at the Permit Issuing Agency, Building 247.

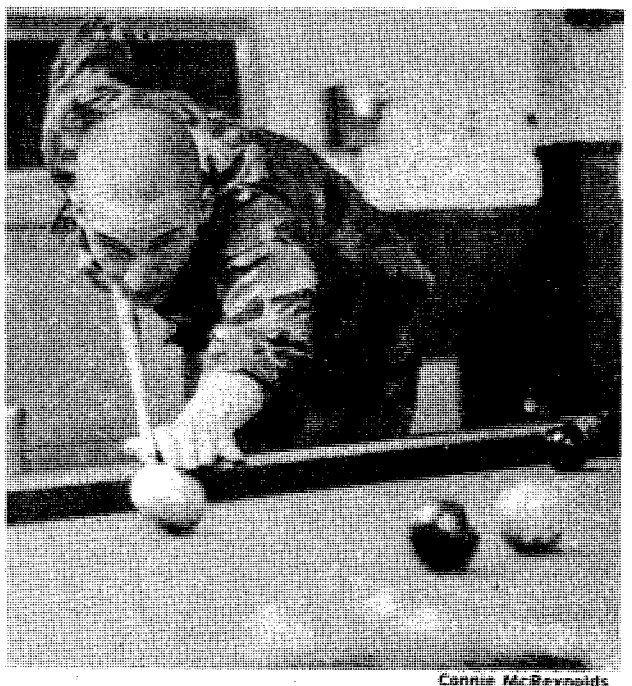
The Harmony Church Recreation Center's rustic building houses activities to suit everybody's taste.



Connie McReynolds

PFC Michael Chope, E Company, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, lines up a pool shot while enjoying an afternoon at the Harmony Church Recreation Center.

Rec center provides 'home away from home'

By Connie McReynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nestled in the woods, the World War II building of the Harmony Church Recreation Center gives a warm welcome to soldiers.

The building is rustic and homey and gives the impression of being a big 'home away from home.' And it is to the soldiers of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade and the Infantry Training Group.

"Our primary goal is geared toward being a place where the trainees can come to and relax," Dick Sebenaler, acting director of the center said.

Sundays are the 'big' days for trainees. "We really pick up Sunday afternoon, when the trainees get a couple hours off. Usually the seven pool tables are always busy," he added.

Besides the pool tables, the center has video games, ping pong, air hockey, shuffle boards, cards, a t.v. room, music rooms and plenty of couches and chairs to lounge in.

But, Sebenaler said the most popular items are the cassettes and tape decks that can be checked out. "We have about 35 out now," he said.

Also, the center offers different activities each week. "Through the week we schedule special activities. We have classes of some kind on Thursday night that are geared to families. This month we have a sewing class, but the subjects taught are different each month. We also schedule pool tournaments for Friday nights, but we're flexible there. If we don't have enough people for the tournament then, we will have it when we do have the people."

Sebenaler stressed there are no charges for the normal activities nor for the Sunday entertainment. "We try to have something on Sundays. We've had live bands, variety shows and singers."

The center will be closed March 19-30 for renovation, but will resume its schedule the 31st. The center is closed on Mondays and Tuesdays and open from noon to 9 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sundays.

PX prices usually beat local stores

The Post Exchange (PX) conducts continual surveys on selected merchandise to insure that authorized patrons are able to purchase at maximum savings.

Results of the most recent survey of Feb. 27 of 17 flower items and six hanging baskets and plants indicated that some price adjustments were necessary. For example, the price of a dozen roses was reduced by 50 cents; an orchid corsage was reduced by $1.50, and a three-bloom rose corsage was reduced by $2.

Additionally, the PX has answered new policies on the sale of plants, shrubs, seasonal plants and flowers.

Concessionaries will be given first option to sell seasonal plants at savings below local supermarkets and nurseries. Plant assortments must be available at all seasonal events such as Valentine's Day, Mother's Day and Christmas. If the concessionaire cannot provide these full services to customers, then the PX will sell these items on a direct sales basis.

Results of the most recent survey of "house brand" items are shown below. (AAFES)

Braces brighten future smile

The Fort Benning Dental Activity brings you this article in observance of National Children's Dental Health Month. It is the seventh and final article in a series on "Going Through Life with a Smile."

With today's emphasis on looking attractive, it's hardly surprising that one out of every five persons wearing braces is an adult. Recent estimates indicate that more than 880,000 adults are currently having malocclusions — problems with the way the teeth fit together — corrected by their dentists.

Malocculsions are corrected by the use of orthodontic treatment. Orthodontics is the specialized area of dentistry that involves the diagnosis, prevention and treatment of dental and facial irregularities.

If not treated, malocclusions can be harmful to dental health as well as personal appearance. In some cases, the position of the teeth should be improved before the dentist restores damaged teeth.

Dentists can use a variety of appliances to straighten people's teeth. Some appliances are removable; others are not. All appliances put gentle pressure on the teeth and jaws, causing them to move or stabilize in a particular position.

Fixed appliances, commonly called braces, are often used to correct malocclusions. They may be attached to the teeth in a number of ways. Metal bands that include brackets may be cemented around the teeth, or metal or plastic brackets may be bonded directly onto the teeth. Each bracket is then connected to the next by means of an archwire. Throughout treatment, pressure is applied to the teeth by adjusting these wires.

During orthodontic treatment, it is necessary to visit the dentist regularly, usually every three to six weeks. The treatment time for each patient must be judged individually, but as a rule, treatment lasts about two years. To some people, that seems a long time. But look at it this way: you and your teeth are going to be around a lot longer than two years. Why not go through life with straight teeth and a happy smile?

Put a lid on the matter

Cooking is one of the leading causes of fire deaths in the home, the National Safety Council says. It's also the major cause of apartment fires.

If a fire starts while you're cooking, the council recommends that you place a lid at least as large as the pan over the flame. The lid will smother the fire. As soon as the lid is in place, turn off the burner and allow the pan to cool before removing it.

Prevent fire in the kitchen by keeping spice racks and potholders away from hanging near the stove so they don't catch on fire. Avoid wearing loose fitted clothing which can easily ignite near an open flame. Have a fire extinguisher in the kitchen and a smoke detector outside the kitchen to help save you if fire should strike.

Scout-O-Rama features crafts, fun

By Bill Reynolds
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The recipe to have a good time at the Annual Scout-O-Rama, held last Saturday at the Municipal Auditorium, includes: more than 600 volunteers, 62 packs and troops from the five districts, large crowds of spectators and 20 pounds of bananas.

The 20 pounds of bananas went into the 50-foot-long banana split that was one of the attractions at the gathering.

Building the banana split took more than 30 minutes to make, as volunteers poured 15 gallons of ice cream, 18 jars of chocolate topping, and several bags of mixed nuts into the 50-foot dish. It took the children less than 3 minutes to eat.

According to Scout officials, thousands of people braved the cloudy skies and low-40s weather to jam the auditorium and parking lot to look at the various displays.

The "Silver Wings" the Command Exhibition Precision Parachute Team opened the festivities by jumping in the National Colors. During the five-hour event, the team jumped three more times.

Besides the scouts from the Fort Benning district, units from the post contributed their time to the activity. There was a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle on display, a "junior" jump tower operated by members of the 4th Airborne Training Battalion, and an inflatable field hospital set up by the 2nd Combat Support Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion.

Outside on the parking lot and in the auditorium itself were various displays of scouting skills. One of the most notable of which was a demonstration on solar power, under cloudy skies, as scouts cooked hot dogs using the energy generated by the sun.

It took 30 minutes to build the ice cream giant that the scouts took only three minutes to devour.

Three post soldiers take gold, lead USAMU squad to victory

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Army reservists and active duty personnel dominated this year's Interservice International Pistol Championships conducted last weekend at Fort Benning.

John McNally, Erich Buljung and David Woodcock, members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, each scored gold medal victories for the Army in the individual competitions.

McNally won the rapid fire pistol event with a total of 593 out of 600 points. Buljung scored a 592 out of 600 to take home the gold in the centerfire competition, while Woodcock placed first in the military pistol event with a course aggregate of 3,533.

The USAMU's "Blue" squad won three out of the five team championships over the U.S. Army Reserve squad. Members of the winning team included McNally, Buljung, Waymond Alvis, Jimmie McCoy, Rojelio Arredondo and Gary Marsh.

This year's Interservice Championships were also the final tryouts for the U.S. CISM pistol squad. Members selected to represent the United States this September at the CISM Shooting Championships in Liestal, Switzerland, will include the following personnel:

Citizens hope to convince school board to add soccer

Commentary by Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Monday evening in the Bradley Library conference room, a group of local citizens will present information to the Muscogee County School Board in hopes of getting soccer added to the athletic curriculum in the city schools.

Richard Russell

Soccer is one of Youth Activities most popular sports.

"We would like to see soccer a varsity level sport," stated David Reiss, a local businessman. "Presently the Georgia High School Athletic Association conducts a state tournament for soccer. 90 public schools present support soccer programs and we would like to see the eight local high schools add it to their athletic departments."

Increase in popularity

The popularity of the sport is growing accross the nation. At Fort Benning for instance, there are presently more kids involved in the Youth Activities soccer program than any other sport. Jim England, commissioner of Benning's soccer leagues, cites two reasons.

"I think the major reason the sport is popular on post is because of the overseas contact a lot of the kids have had, being family members of military personnel," explained England. Another reason is because the sport is not as injury prone as others."

Reiss backs up both theories.

"I got turned on to soccer when I was in the military and stationed in Germany. A friend of mine was a soccer fanatic. When I started going to soccer games in Germany about all I knew of the game was that it was played with a round ball with black and white squares on it," joked Reiss. "I began to go to the games on a regular basis and over there, I was watching the best teams in the world. I got hooked.

"My wife decided that my son was not going to play football until he got to high school because of the high injury rate. So I started him out with soccer."

The cost of supporting a soccer program is considerably less than most sports, according to Reiss.

Sports costs

"To outfit a football player from head to toe ranges anywhere from $150 to $250," continued Reiss. "To uniform a baseball player would cost about $40-$60 and an outfit for a soccer player would cost $20-$30.

"Footballs cost anywhere from $60-$90; baseballs anywhere from $15-$30; and soccer balls cost about $12-$25."

Two private schools in Columbus, Pacelli and Brookstone, already have soccer teams. Three other schools within an hour drive boost programs. Another reason, according to Reiss, is college scholarships.

"There are more soccer scholarships available to high school students than any other sporting event," stated Reiss. "Therefore adopting this low cost sport could benefit a lot of students by helping them to go to college."

I feel the Muscogee County School District should adopt soccer. It not only is a low-cost sport but it is also co-educational. This means each school would only have to add one team instead of two.

The popularity of the sport and the opportunity for students to receive college scholarships are two additional features that cannot be over looked.

YA baseball registration made easy

By Rick Russell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Youth Activities' sports office, in cooperation with the community life office, is making it easier for many soldiers to register their family members for baseball, t-ball and softball this year.

Between April 2-5, four of the six community life center's will conduct registration for children 6-15 years of age.

McGraw Manor will be the first site, April 2 between the hours of 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Children who have participated in other YA sports before, need only to register. If the child is new to the post or has never registered for a YA sport previously, the parents need to bring either the child's birth certificate or ID card.

The second area registration will be conducted April 3 at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center during the same hours. Indianhead Terrace residents can register their family members April 4 at their life center while the final community, Bouton Heights/ Davis Hill, will be afforded the opportunity April 5.

"We will be able to completely register each child at their own community life center."

Soldiers living on Main Post or offpost may register their family members at the YA sports office during the same hours any day between March 26-April 6. Residents unable to attend the registration time in their community life center may also register their family members at the YA sports office.

"We will be able to completely register each child right in their own community," stated Linda Laine, assistant sports director. "We hope that this service will not only be easier for parents but it should be easier on us as well. We are also hoping to get more children involved in our programs."

The length of the season will depend on the numbers of teams in each division.

T-ball is for boys and girls 6-8 year of age. Fast pitch baseball will be played by boys and girls between the ages of 9-15. Girls 9-15 years old may play softball if they prefer.

The YA sports office is also looking for coaches, both men and women, for each of the three sports. Interested personnel should call 545-3070.

More than 250 youths participated in the baseball programs last year.

Grasshopper results

Blue Thunder 2.....Panthers 0

Blue Thunder upped its record to 2-0 with a 2-0 victory over the previously unbeaten Panthers. Keith Blackstone, who has scored every goal for his team, accounted for both goals for the Blue Thunder. Daniel Biegun was credited with an assist on Blackstone's second goal. Halfbacks Rodney Etheridge, Ginny Hitchcock and Bucky Baty played outstanding defensive games for the victors.

Red Demons 1.....Cheetas 0

Sayeed Rahman scored the games only goal late in the second-half to give the Red Demons their second straight victory in the young season. Chad Hendrix and Stephanie King both turned in fine defensive performances by making key interceptions late in the contest for the Demons.

Scorpions 1..... A-Team 0

The Scorpions evened their record at 1-1 by defeating the A-Team 1-0. John Strange scored the game's lone goal. Chris McCormick and Mike Harris were the defensive standouts for the Scorpions.

Tigers 3..... Gold Eagles 0

Termite results

Cosmos 5..... Gold Eagles 3

The first shootout of the YA soccer season was won by the Cosmos as they defeated the Golden Eagles 5-3. The game ended in a 2-2 tie. Michael Rumbaugh and Mitch Lindsey scoring the goals for the Cosmos. In the shootout, Cosmo goalie Lee Mobley made two outstanding saves to preserve the victory. Peter Schultz, Melanie Hallums and Thomas Stroud accounted for the three shootout goals for the Cosmos.

Tigers 13..... Red Dragons 0

The Tigers dominated the play by keeping the Red Dragons bottled up in their own end of the field enroute to a 13-0 thrashing. Mike Hitchcock was the high scorer for the Tigers. David Sorrell, Anthony Smith, Jason Smith, Paul Fezereiser and Kevin Dunn all broke into the scoring column as well for the undefeated Tigers.

Strikers 7.....Eagles 6

The Strikers won an exciting game against the Eagles 7-6. The Strikers lead the entire game but the Eagles would not quit. Jerry Bellamy scored three goals and was credited with one assist while his teammate Derek McCreight added three goals also to pace the Strikers' attack. Donald Langhorne rounded out the Strikers' scoring with one goal and an assist. Sam Lucas, Shane Jordan and Andy Nix each scored two goals for the Eagles.

Junior results

Warriors #2 2..... Bayonets 0

The #2 Warriors got goals from Kevin Blake and Daniel Swan to defeat the Bayonets 2-0. Scott Swan and Laura Reinike each turned in outstanding defensive efforts for the Warriors.
