Army begins Reserve bonus program

To reduce personnel shortages and aid mobilization readiness, an Individual Ready Reserve (IRR) reenlistment bonus program was recently announced by the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Reserve Affairs). The program, to begin immediately in the Army and shortly by the other services, offers up to $900 to service members who are completing or have already completed their military obligation.

Individuals must have less than 11 years total service, have an eligible combat or combat support skill, and agree to serve for three additional years in the IRR.

Additional information may be obtained from an inservice recruiter, reserve activity, or the military service reserve personnel center. (AFPS)

The renovation work on the Statue of Liberty is nearly 20 percent completed.

Statue of Liberty restoration is progressing on schedule

Work to bring back the Statue of Liberty's former grandeur after nearly a century of steady deterioration is well underway. The great lady is expected to be fully restored in time for her 100th birthday in two years.

Until that time, the statue and its pedestal will remain closed so that major renovations, which began in January and are about 20 percent completed, can be made on the statue's corroding iron framework and copper skin. She is encased in scaffolding and is not carrying her torch.

However, the American Museum of Immigration at the statue's base remains open. Other attractions, such as guided tours of Liberty Island, immigration films and lectures are continuing. Circle Line ferries make hourly trips to the island from downtown Manhattan at Battery Park, and from Liberty State Park, N.J. Visitors will be able to watch craftsmen making a new 21-foot high torch in a workshop being built in front of the statue.

The original torch, which became over the decades almost as important a sightseeing attraction as the statue itself, has been controversial. Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, the French sculptor who created the statue, never did like the way the torch was lighted. In fact, he didn't want it lighted at all. He wanted light only to come from around Liberty's head like a halo, giving it a religious quality. Instead of the flame being lighted, he just wanted the copper gilded so that it would shine brightly in daylight.

At dedication ceremonies on Oct. 28, 1886, presided over by President Grover Cleveland, observers at the tip of Manhattan complained they could barely see the lighted flame. Bartholdi reportedly said the torch had no more light than a "glowworm." In 1892, the lighting was improved and a red, white and yellow skylight was installed on top of the flame. By this time, the statue, originally conceived as a monument to Franco-American friendship, had become a welcoming symbol for masses of European immigrants.

A year later, when Bartholdi made his first visit to the statue since the dedication seven years earlier, he was still disappointed, saying that even the glowworm was better. Other modifications have been made over the past seven decades, including flashing lights replacing the flicker of natural flame.

The new torch will be made in accordance with Bartholdi's original design. There will be no skylight or internal lighting. The flame will be gilded in gold leaf and will be lighted from an external source but it will be 10 times brighter than before. The old torch will be placed on permanent display in the museum.

tle light. Generally, you should use what you're comfortable with, because your eyes will tell you." A lower level of general room lighting can be achieved by using fewer bulbs or fluorescent tubes and by replacing cool white tubes with cool white deluxe tubes that provide less light, but a more comfortable and pleasing atmosphere.

- The characters on the VDT screen should be in a comfortable contrast to the screen background.
- Minimize reflected glare on VDT screens by locating the screens so that windows and other sources of bright light are not behind the operator. Also, do not sit facing an unshaded window or other bright light source. Make use of drapes and shades to reduce glare. Small hoods can be attached to extend above the screen to shield it from overhead light if necessary.
- Use localized lighting, like flexible lamps for other deskwork as required. They are shielded and must be placed to avoid glare on the work surface or the VDT screen. Care should be taken to avoid becoming a glare problem for co-workers.
- Avoid white or colored clothing if it causes a reflection on the screen.

The most common causes of visual complaints by VDT users are often eye or vision problems that might not normally affect a person's ability to function. Moderate and more severe vision problems may be aggravated by VDT use. Consequently, all VDT operators should have periodic eye examinations.

These examinations should be thorough. The doctor should be informed that the patient is a VDT operator, about any specific symptoms they have been experiencing and specific distance and angle of the VDT screen. Fortunately, proper optometric care can help solve most of the vision problems that trouble VDT operators.

Vision problems

Farsighted people can see more clearly at a distance than up close, but usually have to exert effort to see clearly at both distances. The mildly farsighted generally can do normal seeing tasks such as driving or reading without prescription lenses, but may well need them for VDT use due to blurred vision or visual discomfort.

"Many people assume that their reading glasses are good for VDT use, but they may need another prescription for the VDT," Col. Whitmore continued. "A lot of people who wear bifocals may experience eye strain from VDTs, but that can be corrected by changing the prescription for that (VDT) range or, in some cases, by simply moving the reference material so that it's the same distance from your eyes as the VDT screen is."

Presbyopia is a condition that occurs with the natural aging process, reduces a person's ability to focus clearly up close.Usually becoming noticeable after age 35 or 40, presbyopia can increase the need for prescription lenses for middle aged and older VDT users. Single vision reading glasses specially prescribed for VDT use may suffice, but bifocals need to be specifically designed with VDT use in mind.

Astigmatism is another common vision problem that blurs vision at all distances because the front surface of the eye (cornea) is not perfectly round, but shaped like a football. Mild astigmatism may pose no difficulty for normal seeing tasks but, for the VDT user, it may contribute to on-the-job visual discomfort. Prescription lenses worn specifically when using the VDT can help.

There are many other eye conditions that can contribute to blurring of the VDT screen, increased susceptibility to glare, or otherwise make VDT use difficult. These can include poor eye coordination, nearsightedness, and eye focusing problems. Your optometrist can diagnose these conditions and advise you on treatment for VDT use as well as normal seeing tasks.

Soldiers gain experience with anti-tank weapons

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Destroying enemy tanks is the goal of anti-tank weapons training at Fort Benning. And if these weapon systems can't stop them, nothing can.

"The Soviet battlefield operation plan calls for a battalion attacking in front, with three or four battalions following behind them, and these might be followed by a division," said SFC Irwin Jackson, an ITV intructor with the TOW/ITV/DRAGON Committee. "All of these would be moving forward at the same time, so it would be like waves of tanks and men that keep on coming.

"That is why we have three anti-tank weapons, the ITV, TOW and DRAGON, because these would all be firing at different waves."

The ITV with TOWII would be emplaced on an elevated area guarding our rear," explained MSgt. Alfred Alvarez, chief instructor with the ITV/TOW/DRAGON Committee. These have a range of 3,700 meters, so they would be the first to fire on enemy tanks.

If the ITV did not knock out the enemy tank, the TOW, which has a maximum effective range of 3,000 meters, would be fired at the tank, and if the tank managed to get through this, gunners with DRAGONS would knock it out at 1,000 meters.

All three of these anti-tank weapons fire tubular-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided missiles. The missiles can penetrate 22 inches of hardened steel. "They will destroy any known armor on the modern battlefield," said Alvarez.

Students must learn the TOW inside and out and then some to complete the 40 hour block of instruction and earn the TOW gunner MOS of 11H.

> "Students must learn the TOW inside and out and then some to complete the 40 hour block of instruction and earn the TOW gunner MOS of 11H."

From this group, students for the ITV course are selected, based on mechanical skills, test scores and quotas. ITV crewmembers must complete an 80 hour block of instruction to earn the e9 identifier on their 11H MOS.

DRAGON gunners have to complete a 40 hour block of intruction to add the c2 identifier to their 11B MOS.

Once the students get down the basics of assembling, disassembling and loading the weapons, a major part of their training time is spent learning how to track a target.

"With the TOW, 16 seconds elapse from the time the trigger is squeezed until the missile actually impacts with the target," said Alvarez. "Since the missile is wire-guided, the gunner is in control of it during this time and can continue to track the moving target until impact."

"Weapons are equipped with night sight equipment, making them able to engage a target under any type of conditions, regardless of daylight hours or limited visibility," said Jackson.

Department of Army recently tasked the committee to double the number of students in each TOW class, from 64 to 128 students per week, because of shortages of TOW gunners. They also spent approximately $80,000 on modifications to Lee Range where much of this training is done.

"It's a great weapon," said SFC Arthur Cummings, TOW instructor. "The Israelis used it against Syria in the Seven Day War and it destroyed the Syrian tanks, just wiped them out."

Preparation must begin now to be ready for marathon

By Fred Dyer
Marathon runner

This article is aimed at helping the person who has never run a marathon to prepare for the Infantry Marathon on Jan. 26, 1985. Unless you are running at least 25 miles a week, you don't have time to prepare for the Infantry Marathon. The marathon is only four months from today. Before the marathon, you need at least one 20-mile training run. You need to put in two or three weeks of running 50 miles per week. The only way to get from 25 miles to 50 miles per week without injury is gradually, and progressing from less than 25 to 50 by Jan. 26 cannot be done gradually enough.

Since the week just before the marathon should be only about a 25-mile week, there is actually only about two weeks to build from 25 to 50 miles per week. Dividing 25 miles by ten (weeks) gives 2.5 miles to add to your mileage each week. If you are now running 35 miles per week, you should gradually build to 55 to 60 miles per week by three weeks before race day.

During each week of buildup, you should include one run that is about one third of your average weekly mileage. At the beginning, an eight-mile run on Saturday or Sunday would be about right. Walking during these long runs is no sin even as it isn't a sin in the marathon itself, but eventually try to run the distance of the long run with just a few stops for water. This long run should increase to 16 miles at the end of the ten weeks. Plan for one of these long runs to be 20 miles on or about the second week in January. Skip running entirely the day after each long weekend run to recover.

Remember, if you are starting at these low levels of weekly mileage, you are not going to be able to run fast on Jan. 26. You are going to run at your "long-run" training pace and you probably will walk some as well. If you are lucky, you are going to run a four-hour marathon and, believe me, a four-hour first marathon is quite an accomplishment.

I ran my first marathon seven years ago. I had been running nearly 40 miles per week for a year and I started training hard about four months before that race, boosting my mileage to more than 60 per week for the three weeks before the race. Despite the fairly high mileage base and four months of training, the last six miles of the Drake Relays Marathon was torture. I kept saying to myself, "You didn't spend all that money to fly to Des Moines to walk," and I did manage to run the whole 26.2 miles (in 3 hours, 25 minutes). Afterwards, my legs were sore and walking downstairs was agony for days. Now, more than 20 marathons later, I don't have much problem with the distance, but the reasons are that my mileage rarely drops below 50 miles per week and I gradually build to nearly 70 miles per week with three or four 20-mile runs during the two months before the race.

One thing current 25-mile-a-week runners should consider doing is running and walking from the outset of the Infantry Marathon. When I ran the 54-mile London-to-Brighton race in 1980, I learned about this strategy (too late) from another American who was already walking at the 10-mile point. I walked along with him for a few hundred yards and learned that he planned to alternate running and walking for the whole race. I ran on ahead "knowing" that I would finish an hour ahead of him. However, he passed me while I was walking at 40 miles and beat me by 30 minutes to the finish. What I might recommend for the Infantry Marathon is to run four miles at training pace then walk a half mile briskly. If your training pace is 8:30 per mile, you would be running 34 minutes then walking about 8 minutes. Five of these would get you 3.7 miles from the finish in 3 hours and 30 minutes. If you skip that last half-mile walk and run the last 4.2 miles, you would have 38 minutes to get a four-hour finish and those last 4.2 miles could be at a 9-minute pace. Sound easy? It won't be, unless you have lots of natural running talent!

If you have never run in a footrace, you should plan to run one or two before the Infantry Marathon. I highly recommend the Fort Benning Faith School 5-miler. A 9.3-mile race will also be held at Callaway Gardens in conjunction with a 26.2-mile marathon. These shorter races will make you familiar with prerace and race procedures.

In summary:

- You need to gradually increase your mileage and include one long run each week.
- You must realize that your first marathon will be run slowly and that combining running and walking from the outset is a good strategy that will be faster and more comfortable than running for 17 or 20 miles and walking for most of the rest (or dropping out).
- You should learn what it is like to run in an organized foot race before the marathon.

In a later article, you will learn about shoes and other clothes for training and for the race, specific training tips for the two weeks before the race, and carbohydrate loading.

Physical exams urged before starting training

By Robert Borja
Infantry Training Group

Before tying your shoe laces and running outdoors to make your first mile investment on your first marathon, you should undertake a complete physical examination - especially if you are over 40 years old.

Providing you are in good physical health, the next consideration is whether you can run six miles within 50 minutes. This amounts to approximately eight minutes and 20 seconds per mile. If you passed the two-mile run portion of your last Army Physical Readiness Test, then this requirement may be no problem.

Unless you are an outstanding athlete, you should not expect to run a less than three and one-half hour race in the first marathon. You must first put in the foundation mileage to complete a marathon.

However, moderation is wise. An average daily run of one hour at an eight-minute per mile pace is sufficient, with a longer run of 10-12 miles one day on weekends. A total of no less than 50 miles per week should be adhered to.

There is absolutely no need to run the full marathon distance anytime before the race. A day of rest each week should be taken for the body to replenish and rebuild. Only five percent of the total distance run daily should be at the selected race speed.

Because the first Infantry Center Marathon is on a fast asphalt surface, you should run at least 50 percent of the time on such a surface.

(Editor's note: More articles will appear in future editions of the BAYONET to aid first-time marathon runners.)

Ranger units activated at Benning

Many distinguished guests present at new units' activation ceremony

By Robert Ashworth
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In a colorful ceremony conducted Wednesday on York Field, Headquarters, 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment and the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry, were officially activated.

Colonel (P) Wayne A. Downing and Lt. Col. William C. Ohl II formally assumed command of the regiment and battalion, respectively.

Among those attending were the reviewing officer, the Honorable John O. Marsh Jr., Secretary of the Army; post commander Maj. Gen. John W. Foss; Lt. Gen. James J. Lindsay, XVIII Airborne Corps commanding general and a former post commander; Maj. Gen. Leroy N. Suddath, commander of the 1st Special Operations Command, Ft. Bragg, N.C., and two retired former post commanders, Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. and Maj. Gen. Thomas M.Tarpley.

In his remarks, Marsh said, "The nature of conflict in the world today requires the expansion of United States special operations forces. The 75th Ranger Regiment is one of the cornerstones of that force."

He went on to say, "This great country stands for something. There is nobleness in its purpose. There is grandeur in its past, and there is hope for a better world in its future. It is worthy of the dedication and devotion you give to it, and for this we thank you."

The secretary was followed to the podium by Downing and Ohl. Each gave thanks to the many individuals and agencies, both military and civilian, who worked toward the activations.

"Rangers, you've never looked better and I've never been so proud to serve in your ranks," Downing said in addressing the troops assembled on York Field.

Ohl expressed his confidence in those same men, saying "the history of the Ranger is safe with the men on this field today."

Activation events included presentation of the Valorous Unit Award to the 1st and 2nd Battalions and regimental headquarters honoring their achievements during combat operations in Grenada last October, a demonstration by military free fall parachutists and a pass in review by representatives of all the new regiment's units.

Ed Ellis

Sec. Marsh presents the streamer representing the Valorous Unit Award to the 1st Ranger Battalion.

Howitzers from Battery C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized)(Separate), fired a 19-gun salute. Static displays of Ranger weapons and equipment were also available for viewing by the public.

The two new units have increased the post's troop strength by approximately 730; 130 at the regimental headquarters and 600 at 3rd Battalion. Personnel requirements were met by reallocating existing Army resources.

New commanders officially assume duties

Downing takes charge of regiment

The commander of the newly activated 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment, Col. (P)Wayne A. Downing, was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry in 1962 from the United States Military Academy.

Downing

From 1963 to 1966, he served as a platoon leader and battalion staff officer in the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 503rd Infantry, 173rd Airborne Brigade, in Okinawa and Vietnam. During 1967 and 1968 he was an instructor and company commander here at the Infantry School. In 1968, Downing returned to Vietnam and served as a company commander and battalion and brigade operations officer with the 25th Infantry Division before departing in 1969.

Darkness brings danger to early morning joggers

Robert McClain

Columbus Ledger-Enquirer columnists Richard Hyatt and Jack Swift have expressed their views in numerous columns on joggers who choose to run on our community's roads and highways. Though sometimes expressed in a humorous manner, these columns pointed out the danger joggers put themselves in by not taking proper precautions while running — especially during the hours of darkness.

With the coming of fall, with its shorter periods of daylight, it has become an increasing problem at Fort Benning.

"People call me and are frantic because they came close to hitting a jogger," said Post Safety Officer Fred Young. He said he has received many of these type phone calls from concerned residents.

Young expressed a growing concern for the safety of joggers on post who run during the early morning and during the hours of darkness.

"Many joggers just don't take the proper safety precautions while running," he commented. "An ordinary motorist driving at the posted speed limit has a great deal of difficulty seeing a jogger in the early morning hours — especially if the jogger is running without reflective clothing." Young called these runners "suicide joggers."

"Most people run for their health. But why do they choose to endanger their lives at the same time," Young wondered.

Guidelines for joggers are spelled out in U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulations 385-2 and 190-2. Regulation 385-2 mostly concerns unit formations. It explains that when troops are required to run during the hours of darkness or during periods of limited visibility, the front and rear of the column will be equipped with a light. Road guards at night, equipped with reflectorized equipment and flashlights, will be positioned 50 meters to the front and rear to warn approaching motorists.

The regulation also states that individual runners must yield the right way to all vehicular traffic.

Regulation 190-2 deals more specifically with the individual runner. The regulation encourages runners to wear reflective or light colored clothing and to carry identification during the hours of darkness. It also encourages joggers to make maximum use of areas designated for physical training and/or lightly traveled roads and streets.

Yet one paragraph is very specific. Paragraph J of the regulation reads as follows, "Individual/informal groups (of runners) will use sidewalks/road shoulders when available; runners must run facing traffic. Runners using the left side of the road will not run on the pavement so as to force vehicular traffic to cross into the oncoming lane of traffic. Runners must yield the paved throughfare to oncoming traffic."

I've seen many runners violate this policy at Fort Benning. So have many others. In a letter to the Bayonet, Sgt. Gregory York expressed his concern about the subject.

"For one year now," he wrote, "I have not seen any runner wearing reflective gear of any kind during the hours of darkness. They run out on the pavement sometimes only inches from automobiles. They wear dark clothes and make little attempt to move onto the grass or sidewalk. Do we have to wait until a jogger gets killed before we do something?"

It has been a great while since a jogger has been killed by a motorist at Fort Benning. Young expressed his worry that this run of good luck may just run out soon. "Someone may end up losing their life," he said.

"Many joggers just continue to endanger their lives. Don't get me wrong, I'm all for running.

Soldiers need to be physically fit. I just wish they would run on the tracks," he said.

Talking to the joggers, many argue it is their right to use the streets. They say jogging on tracks is boring and monotonous. Some state they don't like the track's running surface.

Major William Hughes is anavid runner. He runs from 10 to 15 miles a day. He thinks runners do have a place on our roadways as long as they use proper safety precautions.

"If you are a distance runner, you don't want to run in circles

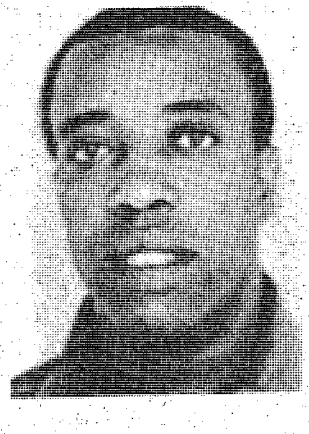
Various voices

What can be done to make running and jogging during the hours of darkness safer?

Sp4 Cheri Y. Chandler, HHD 67th Maint. Bn.-"I think people should wear reflective clothing while running or jogging during the hours of darkness. I see them running in dark clothes all the time and that is dangerous. You don't see them until they are right upon you. Maybe these runners should be ticketed for not wearing reflective clothing."

SSgt. James M. Fink II, E-6-1- "I think it's best to wear something that is reflective. There are companies that make jogging shoes and suits that are reflective. Another good item to use is a flashlight with a cone on it. I know in the morning when we run PT it's like that. We wear black PT uniforms but the flashlights and vests set us off."

John H. Gill, retiree-"I would recommend that everyone who runs after dark have on reflective arm and leg bands so they can be seen. If you are going to run, run during the daytime. There should be a law with stiff penalties for people who run at night and not wear reflective gear."



1st Sgt Walter C. Stephens, 988th MP Co.-"I think people should be made to wear reflectorized clothing and run on the right side of the road, that is run facing the traffic. Wear reflectorized vests and not just light clothing. Since it is mandatory for PT formations it should be mandatory for individual runners too."

Jogger danger

for miles and miles," he said. "It just doesn't cut it. But if joggers are to use Fort Benning roads they should take precautions to avoid being hit. Too many joggers think they own the road. It is their responsiblity to yield the right of way to traffic and to run on the sidewalks and road shoulders whenever possible."

Young offers the following safety tips for joggers.

- Try to stay off main roads and use sidewalks or tracks when possible.
- Always obey traffic signals and wait on the curb when waiting for lights to change.
- Wear reflective or light colored clothing.
- Always run against the flow of traffic.
- When running in a group, run single file.

Most joggers at Fort Benning utilize the many tracks and sidewalks. But many others still choose to endanger their lives running on well-traveled roads without taking proper safety precautions. Swift once urged the Columbus city council to adopt a new ordinance. It would require police to give citations to joggers who continue to put their lives in danger by running on the street. There was even talk last year of passing a Georgia law requiring joggers to wear reflective clothing during evening and early-morning runs.

"An ordinary motorist driving at the posted speed limit has a great deal of difficulty seeing a jogger in the early morning hours."

Maybe Fort Benning should look at variations of these proposals. If we seriously consider these suggestions and take action on them, we can possibly prevent one of our soldiers from tragically losing his life while jogging on Fort Benning roads.

Discharging weapons prohibited

All family quarters occupants are reminded that under the provisions of USAIC Regulation 210-5 (Garrison Regulations), air rifles, air pistols, bows and arrows, or other weapons are prohibited from being discharged or fired in the family housing/unit areas. This regulation may be enforced in different ways depending on the circumstances. For instance, if a car window is damaged by a military dependent, the victim may file a complaint with the Military Police who will investigate the incident and if the perpetrator can be identified, charges will be filed against the individual and/or his sponsor. In less serious cases, it is recommended that individuals utilize the Community Life Office to resolve the problem. Another alternative, and perhaps the best means of correcting the problem, is to bring the incident to the attention of the child's parents. (MPA)

Commentary

Fire chief urges tribute to 'unsung heroes'

During our observance of Fire Prevention Week, I want to pay tribute to an important group of unsung heroes, the firefighters of Fort Benning.

As men and women of the military and civilian population here at Fort Benning, we understand and share many of the same challenges and risks that are faced by our firefighters. In many respects, we share similar purposes for each of us is trained to accomplish a mission.

In the present setting of Fort Benning, however, the firefighter's job is different from other jobs. Most of you, clerks, cooks, motor pool personnel, military police, officer, enlisted and civilians have a high degree of assurance that you will return home from work in the evening the same way you left in the morning — on your feet, a little tired perhaps but on your feet. Firefighters are never sure. When a firefighter kisses his wife and children as he leaves for work they make a conscious wish that he will return to them. His wife hopes that she will not have to make those fast desperate arrangements for a babysitter so that she can visit him in the hospital and each time there is a knock at the door, she hopes that the fire chief and chaplain or another official are not there to say kind things about how good a firefighter he WAS and how brave and dedicated.

These descriptions fit the firefighters assigned to the Fort Benning Fire Department and we do not want them used in eulogy. Let us, instead, pay just tribute. Last night while you and your family slept a firefighter stood his lonely vigil. Stilled alarm bells, dim lights and a silent telephone were his only companions as he waited for the alarm to sound. If the alarm had sounded, other firefighters a few feet away would have immediately gone into action prepared to risk their lives in defense of you and your property.

Yes, you can count on them. We count on them to the extent that we unhesitatingly ask them to risk their lives. We count on them to the extent that we ask them to extinguish a small trash fire at two o'clock in the morning and we count on them to the extent that we entrust our lives and our children's lives in their safekeeping.

This week let them know that they can count on us to recognize the importance of year round fire prevention and that we will take all measures possible to prevent death, damage and destruction by fire here at Fort Benning during the coming year.

CG's message

As you plan your activities for the Columbus Day weekend, remember to integrate safety measures into all your recreation and travel plans. Vehicular safety will again be particularly important because of the increase in highway traffic that accompanies all three-day weekends.

Since the use of seatbelts became mandatory at Fort Benning, it is almost certain that at least one member of this command has been spared the consequences of severe, perhaps even fatal, injuries. An accident involving a privately owned vehicle occurred on Sept. 6, in which a belted driver walked away from an overturned and extensively damaged vehicle. A belted driver, in a mechanically sound vehicle, has an excellent chance of avoiding injury in any vehicular accident. Buckle-up this weekend.

Hunting season has begun and many sportsmen will be in the woods this weekend. Strict adherence to the hunting safety rules which are taught in the Georgia Hunter Safety Program will help to assure all hunters a safe and enjoyable hunting season. Two hunters were killed on post in one weekend in 1982. Both these fatalities involved infractions of hunting safety rules. A hunter's safety does not depend entirely on his own efforts — he must also depend on all other hunters to handle their weapons in a safe and sane manner. If every hunter exercises good judgment, we will have an accident-free season.

Have a safe and relaxing holiday.

Rangers have long history of courage, daring

The early Rangers

The saga of the American Ranger is a long and colorful one and is a saga of courage, daring, and outstanding leadership. It is a story of men whose skills in the art of fighting have seldom been excelled.

The first Rangers were organized in the new world by Maj. Robert Rogers, a native of New Hampshire, who recruited nine companies of American colonists to fight for the British during the French and Indian War. Ranger techniques and methods were an inherent characteristic of the frontiersman in the colonies, but Rogers was the first to capitalize on them and incorporate them into a permanently organized fighting force.

Rogers established 19 Standing Orders which are still followed today by the Rangers.

Revolutionary War

The type of fighting used by these first Rangers was further developed during the Revolutionary War by Col. Daniel Morgan, who organized a unit known as Morgan's Riflemen. Their service ran from 1775 through 1781, and some of their most famous battles were fought at Freeman's farm during September 1777, and the Cow Pen during January 1781 against General Cornwallis' British Troops. According to remarks by General Burgoyne, a famous British general, "Morgan's men were the most famous Corps of the Continental Army. All of them crack shots."

The Civil War

John Singleton Mosby was a famous Confederate Ranger during the Civil War. He joined the Confederate cavalry in 1861 and served on "Jeb" Stuart's staff in 1861. He began his independent Ranger activities in 1863. His raids on Union bases and camps were so effective that part of north-central Virginia soon became known as "Mosby's Confederacy." He was greatly influenced by Marion and used many of his tactics.

He believed that by resorting to aggressive action he could compel his enemies to guard a hundred points. He would then attack one of their weakest points to insure a superiority and ultimate victory. It was nothing for him to strike far behind enemy lines and snatch a general officer out from among his own troops.

His scouts were so thoroughly trained, and knew the land so well that he would mount them on thoroughbred horses and conduct night raids. Night fighting was not a part of modern warfare in those days.

World War II years

With the American entry into the Second World War, Rangers again came forth to add to the pages of history. Rangers were specialized infantry units of the United States Army. From these units we take part of our history and distinctive insignia. They might be better classified as a 'cousin' since most of our heritage comes from the famed Merrill's Marauders, which will be discussed later. For the most part these men were like today's Rangers; under 25 and in perfect physical condition. Rangers were given tougher training than other infantrymen, and were best at hand-to-hand night fighting. The Rangers were organized as the 1st Ranger Battalion on June 19, 1942 at Garrick-Fergus, North Ireland, under the leadership of Col. William O. Darby and consisted of 2,000 men, all of whom were volunteers.

Many came from the American Commando School. About nine out of 10 lost their lives opening up enemy defenses before invasions. Darby's Ranger battalions, the 1st, 3rd, and 4th, spearheaded the initial assaults in North Africa, the 7th Army landing at Gela and Licata during the Sicilian invasion and played a role in the subsequent campaign which led to the capture of the town of Messina. They also participated in the Anzio invasion.

The 2nd and 5th Ranger Battalions participated in the D-Day landings at Omaha Beach, Normandy. It was during the bitter fight along the beach that the Rangers gained their official motto. As the situation became critical on Omaha Beach, the Division Commander of the 29th Infantry Division stated the entire force must clear the beach and advance inland or die. He then turned to Lt. Col. Max Schneider, commander of the 5th Ranger Battalion and said, "Rangers, Lead the Way."

The 6th Ranger Battalion distinguished themselves in the Pacific Theater. One of their most notable achievements was the rescue of POW's at Cabanatuan.

Merrill's Marauders

The 75th Infantry Regiment was first organized on Oct. 3, 1943 as the 5307th Composite Unit (Provisional) in the China-Burma-India Theater until July 1, 1945, when it was inactivated in China.

The 75th Infantry Regiment (then the 5307th Composite Unit) was the first United States ground combat force to meet the enemy on the continent of Asia during World War II. It was during the campaigns in the China-Burma-India Theater that it became known as "Merrill's Marauders," after its commander, Maj. Gen. Frank D. Merrill.

The 5307th Composite Unit (Provisional) was organized to participate in the Burma Operations as a result of a decision made at the Quebec Conference in August 1943. On Sept. 1, 1943, when the size of the unit's battalions had been fixed at 1,000, the War Department began recruiting personnel from jungle trained and jungle tested troops, primarily infantrymen. General George C. Marshall requested 300 volunteers in a high state of physical readiness and stamina from the Southwest Pacific, 700 from the South Pacific, and 1,000 each from the Caribbean Defense Command and the Army Ground Forces in the United States. These volunteers were assembled in San Francisco where they were formed into two battalions under the command of Col. Charles N. Hunter.

In September 1943, the two battalions sailed from San Francisco on the Lurline. As much of their equipment as could be loaded went aboard with them; the remainder was sent directly to Bombay. Hunter was ordered to prepare his men while enroute for the performance of their long-range penetration mission, and to report to General Stillwell upon arrival in the theater. The Lurline proceeded to Noumea, New Caledonia, where 650 officers and men from the South Pacific Theater came aboard.

The volunteers from the Southwest Pacific Theater came aboard at Brisbane, Australia. After a short stop at Perth, the ship sailed across the Indian Ocean and up the Arabian Sea to Bombay, where the three battalions disembarked on Oct. 31, 1943.

Organization and training of the 5307th began immediately. The troops were instructed in long range deep penetration techniques, and jungle warfare. This intensive training continued until the end of January 1944. By then the unit was fully trained and organized into three battalions consisting of two combat teams each. The Headquarters was divided into a Command Post Group and a Rear Supply Base. Merrill was placed in command on Jan. 8, 1944, and the unit was assigned to General Stillwell's field command in Northern Burma.

The Marauders were ready to go and their operations throughout the spring and summer of 1944 were closely coordinated with those of the Chinese 22nd and 38th Divisions. They were employed in the drive to recover North Burma and clear the way for the construction of the Ledo Road, which was to link the Indian Railhead at Ledo with the old Burma trail to China. The Marauders were foot soldiers who marched and fought through the jungles and over mountains from the Hulawag Valley in northwestern Burma to Myitkyina on the Irrawaddy River.

In five major and thirty minor engagements between February and August of 1944, the Marauders met and defeated the veteran soldiers of the Japanese 16th Division. Operating in the rear of the main forces of the Japanese, they prepared the way for the southward advance of the Chinese by disorganizing supply lines and communications. The climax of the Marauders' combat operations was the capture of the Myitkyina airfield, the only all weather air-strip in northern Burma. The 5307th received the Presidential Unit Citation for this action.

The 5307th was redesignated the 475th Infantry Regiment on Aug. 10, 1944 and was reorganized. At that time, the regiment became part of the 5332nd Brigade (Provisional) which had been activated on July 26, 1944 in India. This brigade, also known as the 'Mars Task Force' was designated as a long-range penetrating force for operations in Burma. In addition to the 475th, the brigade consisted of the 124th Cavalry Regiment, dismounted and functioning as infantry, the 612th Field Artillery Battalions (Pack), and the 1st Chinese Regiment, Separate.

In the third week of November, the brigade moved south along the Ledo Road from the vicinity of Myitkyina. The 475th Infantry Regiment was committed in the Tongwa-Mo Hlaing sector in December, and broke up Japanese opposition in that area.

Upon completion of the action at Tongwa, the brigade turned eastward in January 1945 and thrust deep into enemy territory to strike the Nahmkam-Lashio Burma road axis at Nakpakka. Combat activity reached its peak during February 2-4, with fighting in the vicinity of Nakpakka, Boi-Kang, Hpa-Hpen and Mong Nols.

On Feb. 8, 1945 contact was severed by the retreat of the last elements of the Japanese to the south and at the end of the month the 'Mars Task Force' moved south to the Lashio area, where it remained in garrison for about a month before going to China by air.

The task force was relieved from assignment to the India-

Burma theater and assigned to Headquarters, Chinese Combat Command (Provisional), United States Forces, China Theater, to assist and advise in the training and equipping of 36 United States-sponsored Chinese divisions.

As an example of its employment, in March 1945 the 1st Battalion, 475th Infantry Regiment was attached to Headquarters, Reserve Command, Chinese Combat Command, which was responsible for training and equipping four Chinese Armies. In turn, Headquarters, Reserve Command, placed an organic company with each of four Chinese Armies.

Therefore, Company A, 475th Infantry, came to serve in a liaison role with three divisions (of which the honorable 1st Division was one) of the Eighth Chinese Army.

The 75th Infantry

The 475th Infantry Regiment was finally inactivated on July 1, 1945 in China, and remained on the inactive list of Regular Army units until 1954. It was redesignated the 75th Infantry Regiment on June 21, 1954. It was allotted to the United States Army in Okinawa until March 21, 1956, when it was again inactivated.

Vietnam War

The 75th Infantry was reorganized once more on Jan. 1, 1969 as a parent regiment under the Combat Arms Regimental System. Fifteen separate Ranger Companies were formed from this reorganization. Thirteen served proudly in Vietnam until inactivation on Aug. 15, 1972.

Present

The outbreak of the 1973 Middle East War prompted the Department of the Army to be concerned about the need for a light mobile force that could be moved quickly to any trouble spot in the world. In January 1974, the Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, General Abrams, sent a message to the field directing formation of a Ranger Battalion. This elite infantry unit was to be composed of highly trained and motivated Airborne, Ranger qualified personnel.

On Jan. 25, 1974, Headquarters, United States Army Forces Command published general order 127 directing activation of the 1st Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry with an effective date of Jan. 31, 1974.

In February the worldwide selection was begun and personnel assembled at Fort Benning, Georgia to undergo the cadre training from March through June 1974. On July 1, 1974 the 1st Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry parachuted into Fort Stewart, Ga., where the battalion was stationed until September 1978 when it moved to its present station of Hunter Army Airfield in Savannah, Georgia. (Army Magazine)

MP dog units perform many different duties

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Military Police dog units have changed a lot since they were first used in World War I. Today the dogs are used in patrolling, narcotics detection, explosives detection and contraband.

Each of these units is more complex than the previous one, so a dog works its way through the training until it reaches the most difficult work on a patrolling-explosives detection team. "That is the most technical of the field," SSgt. Jerry Ragan, kennel master at the Military Police Working Dog Section, said.

Dogs from all four of these areas are used at Fort Benning, a total of 18 with handlers. Although contraband dog teams are becoming obsolete in the Army, Fort Benning has two dogs specializing in that area. "Before a dog can go into another area, he must be proficient in patrolling," Ragan said. The three types of dog teams the Army uses are patrolling, for use in law enforcement and security; patrolling-narcotic detection, for use in law enforcement and detection of marijuana, hashish, cocaine and heroine; and patrolling-explosive detection, for use in law enforement and detection of explosives.

"We no longer have the sentry dog in the Army, which is what most people think of when they think of an MP dog, or the basic detector. The patrol dogs and patrol-narcotic detector dogs have taken their places. At Fort Benning we are capable of dealing in all the four areas and we render support to civilian authorities when we get approved authority through proper agencies to do so," Ragan said.

During World War I dogs were used as sentries, messengers, ammunition carriers, scouts and sled and casualty dogs. At the beginning of World War II, there were no dogs in the U.S. Forces, but with the outbreak of hostilities a program called "Dogs for Defense" was started. Dogs were procured, through this program, at a rate of 1,000 a month. They served wherever U.S. Forces fought.

The dog handlers and dogs spend most of their time with each other. The dogs are groomed, fed and cared for by their handler. They are a team and stay together as long as the servicemember stays in the military or until the dog dies. If the servicemember PCSs, the dog leaves with the servicemember.

The dogs and handlers are teamed up at the eight-week Dog Handlers School at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. To be eligible for this school a serviemember must have two years experience as an MP. The dogs and handlers are certified separately in each of the schools, except the patrol-explosive detection school, Ragan explained.

"The dogs and handlers must be certified together there because of the risk/danger involved. They must pass with a 95 percentile." This course can last from nine weeks to whenever the team certifies and it is not unusual for a handler to go through two or three dogs until a workable team is found.

The dogs must perform certain skills and the working dog section has weekly training to ensure the dogs and handlers keep those skills in top condition. "Every time the dog is taken out of the kennel, he is going through training," Ragan said. Some of the different areas the dogs must be proficient in are basic obedience on a leash, advanced obedience off a leash, run an obstacle course, attack and re-attack, assist in searching suspects and attacking if necessary (if they are provoked or there is danger/threat directed toward the handler).

"These dogs can escort suspects, deal with outgoing and incoming gunfire, clear an open area for suspects through sight, scent or sound, and ride on the road as part of a patrol team. Their use frees up servicemembers for use elsewhere.

"I would say our section is the most experienced kennel in the U.S. Army. All the handlers have at least two schools and an average of four years in the program," Ragan said.

The military will take either by donation or by buying, paying up to $400, dogs for the program with basic characteristics of the German Shepherd or Rottweilers. They must be between 1 and 4-years-old, meet height and weight requirements, be medically approved by a veterinarian and pass a temperament test.

If anyone is interested in donating or selling dogs to the military, SSgt. Jerry Ragan can be contacted at USAIC Military Police Working Dog Kennels, building 2863, or call 545-2805/1059.

4 PIECE WOOD GROUP

Sailing was much different in Columbus' day

It is a minute or two before high noon. Two men and a boy gaze intently at a crude wooden bowl mounted on a waist-high stand between them. In the bowl an iron needle and a hand-drawn compass rose, both balanced on a copper pin.

One man, a seaman, suspends a weighted cord over the compass. The second, the ship's pilot, watches closely as the shadow cast by the cord responds to the sun's movement across the October sky, slowly drawing parallel to the iron needle.

At the precise instant that the shadow and the iron needle are aligned, the pilot drops his hand. In response to this signal, the boy quickly inverts a half-hour glass, the first of 48 that will be used during the next 24 hours to measure the passing of a day.

Thus did Christopher Columbus and his sea-going contemporaries measure the passage of time before the invention of the chronometer.

Today, time checks accurate to a few millionths of a second can be obtained at the push of a button. Complex navigation aids small enough to fit into a pocket are within the reach of most sailors, as are electronic machines to forecast the weather, describe the depth and shape of the ocean floor, warn of icebergs and other navigational hazards — even summon help if needed. Sailors of Columbus' time were equipped with little more than their wits and courage.

It was one thing for a 15th century ship captain to navigate the waters of western Europe and the Mediterranean, often within sight of land. The problem became more difficult when he dared to risk the high seas — even in those days ships travelled back and forth between the Azores and the Canary Islands and Europe — and Columbus is known to have made at least one trip to Iceland.

Every captain of Columbus' day kept a secret log containing information and local knowledge about navigational aids and hazards he encountered in his travels or learned elsewhere. In Portugal, these logs were called "rutters," and this is thought to be where the present-day term "rudder" orginated.

Next to the rutter, the primary navigation aid used in his day was the ship's compass, often just a wooden bowl containing a copper pin on which a hand-drawn compass rose and iron needle were balanced. Occasionally, the pilot checked the compass, then raised his arms in the direction the needle pointed. Everyone watching then had an approximate idea of where north lay, and courses could be corrected accordingly.

At night, the 15th century seaman looked for the north star and used it to maintain course.

Time was kept by the half-hour glass. The youngest member of the crew on watch had the responsibility to turn the glass every half hour, as close as possible to the exact instant when the last grain of sand ran through it, and to call out each time he did so. All of the ship's business — changes of watch, meals, courses laid, distances travelled — were kept in accordance with the turning of the glass.

In those days, it was not unusual for the entire crew and many of the officers to be illiterate, so graphic means had to be devised to keep track of courses followed and distances travelled.

One method used was the traverse board, a wooden compass rose with eight holes drilled along each of its 32 points. Each time the half-hour glass was turned, the helmsman put a peg into whichever point of the compass the ship travelled during the previous half hour. On the traverse board below the compass rose, a series of holes was drilled that the helmsman used to describe distance travelled.

For example, if he thought the ship had travelled two miles in the previous half hour, he put a peg in the second hole in a row, and added pegs every half hour of his watch. At the end of the watch, the pilot checked the traverse board, noted the eight logged courses on the compass rose, and totalled the miles of distance travelled. This procedure was repeated for every watch during the day.

Columbus' voyage of discovery in 1492 to San Salvador Island in the Bahamas was the longest recorded open sea passage made to that date. Because he felt that the crew would lose heart as the voyage progressed and they sailed ever farther from land, he decided to keep two logs, one of which recorded shorter distances travelled than was actually the case. Whether or not this ruse was successful is not known, but modern navigators who have studied both logs are in agreement that his "false" log was actually more accurate! (AFPS)

Uniform changes announced

Hot weather BDU

The projected fielding of the new hot weather battle dress uniform has been changed from the Oct. 1, 1985 date previously provided. The new estimated availability dates are as follows:

- Issued to new recruits in the clothing bag and in CONUS clothing sales stores by the end of December 1985.

- For sale in the military clothing sales stores in overseas areas by mid January 1986.

Additional quality assurance measures not previously practiced in the military garment industry which greatly enhance the quality of the uniform have resulted in the new availability dates. These measures include enhanced government inspection normally reserved for service uniforms, shrinkage tests on the completed production test garments and withholding progress payments until full government approval is obtained. (ARNEWS)

Jungle fatigues

The Department of the Army announced on Sept. 20 a revision to the policy regarding optional purchase and wear of the OG 107 uniform (Vietnam Era Jungle Fatigue). Included in the message were the following:

- The BDU cap is the only authorized headgear (except for authorized berets or sun hats, if applicable.)
- The OG 107 is authorized for wear until Sept. 30, 1986.
- The OG 107 will not be worn outside CONUS unless it is an organizational item.
- Drill sergeants and IET soldiers are not authorized to wear the OG 107.
- The OG 107 may be pressed, but will not be starched.

Commissary conducts survey

Fort Lee, Va. — The next time you shop in the Fort Benning commissary you may be asked to complete a questionnaire about the operation of its produce, grocery and meat departments and front end.

Officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, Fort Lee, Va., which manages and operates Army commissaries ask all customers to take time to complete the survey and return it to the commissary. "We would very much appreciate the cooperation of all our patrons," added Fort Benning commissary manager, Jose Fantauzzi.

For example, shoppers may be asked to comment about prices, cleanliness, variety, attractiveness of diaplays, quality of products and helpfulness of clerks in the produce department.

Comments will be noted by commissary management personnel to determine areas which customers are pleased with and improvements which need to be made to satisfy shoppers.

Commissary management wants to provide maximum service to shoppers. (TSA)

How good are your powers of observation?

Provost marshal

How well developed are your powers of observation and perception? Many of us are under the impression that there is little around us that escapes our attention.

Unfortunately, investigators pursuing criminal cases too often find that witnesses to or victims of an offense can be of little assistance, due to their inability to adequately remember or describe the criminal act, the perpetrators, or other circumstances surrounding the incident.

Military police investigators and CID special agents are specially trained in questioning techniques designed to elicit all necessary descriptive data pertaining to criminal offenses and offenders. However, these techniques are to no avail if the witness/victim did not adequately observe or does not remember the information desired by the investigator. The most seemingly insignificant details can often determine whether the case is successfully solved, and offenders apprehended.

The prevalence of crime in today's society increases the chances that you will at some time be a witness to or victim of a crime. More often than not, the conditions under which crimes occur are less than ideal for optimum observation of all details. Crimes, particularly those of violence, often involve a flurry of fast moving events, with strangers, under circumstances of danger, poor lighting and a myriad of other distractions.

So, what can you do to maximize your ability to help the police after the crime has occurred? The following are a few helpful hints:

- Observe and mentally note as many details as possible while the crime is in progress.
- Select one or two significant features to "zero in on" while observing a person or a vehicle related to a crime. Scars, limps or birthmarks may be such features for a person. Dents, special equipment and license plates are always of significance for vehicles.
- One method of estimating height is the "eye-to-eye" method. If an individual's eyes and yours are the same height, you can guess he is about the same height as you. Inches can be added or subtracted from this baseline.
- Note any accents in the individual's speech.
- Note the type of clothing worn. Is it neat, sloppy, well or poorly tailored, soiled, clean, or in any other way unique?
- Note whether the individual is carrying anything. If he has a weapon, try to remember as many explicit details as possible about it. Is it a revolver, automatic, rifle, handgun, shotgun, etc? If the weapon is a knife — what type, how long is the blade.
- If a vehicle is involved, note its make, model, approximate year, description and number of occupants, color, condition, and license number. Safety defects, such as a broken tail-light, could prove particularly important.
- Write down what you observed as soon as possible after the incident. If this is impossible, keep repeating it to yourself until you can tell the police or write it down.

Notify the police immediately. Prompt notification of all crimes and good descriptions are key ingredients in our being able to serve you by identifying and then apprehending the perpetrators and recovering any stolen property which may be involved.

(Provost Marshal)

Patrolling

Initial entry training soldiers conduct reconnaisance patrol

By Bill C. Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"You men have two missions to accomplish while you are in the patrolling tactical area," said patrolling primary instructor SFC Frederick Golden as he addressed the soldiers of Company B, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade recently. "First of all, you will conduct a reconnaissance patrol of a given objective and later on tonight, based on the intelligence you gathered, you will conduct a raid on the same objective."

"This is a "no talk-through, high speed, high performance range and we expect you men to do your best," he added.

Patrolling, which takes place in the tactical area off Moye Road, is back on the training schedule after an absence of almost two years. The initial entry training soldiers usually tackle this problem during their 10th week of training.

After the initial briefing the soldiers were divided into 10-man squads, with a patrolling instructor as the squad leader, and each squad reported to a different assembly area.

Patrolling instructor SSgt. William Reynolds explained to the squad that they would recon Objective Charlie, a mortar position and bunker, and they would be known as "Charlie One" for the remainder of the problem. There are four objectives in the patrolling area and each objective undergoes a reconnnaissance by three squads, each from a different direction.

After dividing the squad into fire teams A & B and setting up the chain of command, Reynolds gave them a warning order and said he would debrief them after they finished the recon of the objective. To insure that everyone was "on the same wave length" he went over the SALUTE report that they would prepare during the reconnaissance. The acronym stands for Size, Activity, Location, Time and Equipment.

Prior to launching the mission Reynolds spoke about safety. "When we go through Steam Mill Swamp, the mud will be knee deep and the water will be up to your armpits, but don't get concerned, just keep on truckin' and try to keep your weapons dry," he said. "Also, if you see "Jake the Snake" don't crowd him and he won't bother you."

"Charley One" moved through the woods with the fire teams in Vs. Noise was kept to a minimum and hand and arm signals were used for communication. To check the squad's reactions Reynolds interjected simulated ambushes and incoming artillery rounds into the problem and their response was outstanding.

When Steam Mill Swamp, the first danger area, came into view the point man gave the danger sign by waving his hand across his throat and the troops hit the ground. The fire teams crossed the swamp using the bounding overwatch method, A team providing protection while B team crossed and vice versa. Bounding is really an exaggeration as the mud and water was every bit as deep as Reynolds had promised and made the going slow.

The next danger area was a wide dirt road. Security was put out on both flanks and a two-man team crossed the road and cleared the area for the rest of the squad to proceed. The noise discipline improved all the time and the crackling of dry leaves as the troops moved through the woods was the only sound to be heard.

Nearing the objective, SSgt. Reynolds designated a location as the Objective Rallying Point (ORP) so the squad would know where to reassemble after the reconnaissance.

After he had taken the team leaders forward for the leadersrecon, they moved their men to their team release points and gave them directions. The two-man recon teams covered the whole northern side of the objective, which was occupied by OPFOR soldiers firing a mortar and manning a bunker. They used the cloverleaf system, moving close enough to observe and trying to stay hidden from the enemy.

After an hour the teams reported to Reynolds at the objective, and he debriefed them on their mission, including comparing their SALUTE reports. Most of the soldiers had the basic information required but he brought out a few refinements that would make the information more valuable.

"You guys did great considering your experience," he said. "But you need to put a little bit more thought into what you write so it will be more clear to the folks up the line. Remember, every little bit of information is important and the more we can gather, the better for our side."

A platoon was formed from the squads that had made the Charlie Objective reconnaissance and plans for the raid were finalized. This platoon deviated from the normal patrolling sequence in that the raid was made at dusk, rather than late at night, to afford a photo opportunity.

The whole platoon, with four men firing M60 machine guns for additional security and three men covering the ORP, assaulted the objective. After the M60s laid down protective fire, the remaining troops came out of the woods, in an assault line and swept through the objective. The mortar position and bunker were destroyed and three POWs were captured, giving the soldiers a chance to practice POW procedures. The whole operation took less than five minutes and the platoon returned to the ORP for the end-of mission debriefing.

"Everything went real fine, except the assault line looked a little ragged and you have to be careful of that, because if you get out of line you might get shot by a buddy," said Reynolds. "The handling of the POWs was excellent and that is very important because a lot of intelligence can be gotten from them. Most of all, I was impressed by your enthusiasm and speed which shows you are well on the way to being good infantrymen."

Workshop helps men deal with emotions

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel publicist

"But I love her — I want her back!" "I'm not a wife beater; I just lost my temper." These desperate, lonely pleas are commonly heard by counselors and social workers seeking to help the increasing number of men who come to them for help in stopping their violence against those they love the most — their wife and children.

Sponsored by the Army Community Services and the Family Life Center, a workshop on "Spouse Abuse" was conducted at Fort Benning last Friday under the leadership of two Atlanta psychologists, Gus Kaufman (Ph.D.) and Dick Bathrick (M.A.). Kaufman and Bathrick are the founders of "Men Stopping Violence", a non-profit organization which is based on a group counseling program enabling men to share together and to "explore the roots of their violent behavior and learn constructive alternatives for handling frustrations, anger, fear, and other feelings." They stress that "any man can change if he is willing to work, and to take re-

Reflections

Happiness comes in giving

Chaplain David K. Bon

There is a short story entitled "The Giving Tree." The two main characters are a boy and a tree. The boy is looking for a place to play. The tree offers its branches. As the boy gets older he wants some money. The tree offers its fruit. The boy becomes a young man and wants to venture out on his own. The tree offers its trunk to be made into a boat for the young man to use. The boy becomes an old man helped about with a cane. He returns to his childhood home. The tree offers itself to him. His response is that all he needs is a place to sit and rest. The tree, only a stump now, rises to the occasion. After each giving it is said, "and the tree was very happy."

Happiness comes in giving! But a spirit of our age is not giving but a seeking after. Our society is so affluent that we think we need many things we do not actually need. In seeking to acquire these things (generally material items), we take away our opportunity to give.

We do give a little. We support the Combined Federal Campaign and other helping agencies. When people are in a crisis situation we give. We put our contributions in the offering plate at church. However, we most often have obligated our resources to the limit so that giving is a burden rather than a joy.

I would like to share some comments and scriptures for your thinking. The prayer of Saint Francis of Assisi; "It is in giving that we receive. Each man should give what he has decided in his heart to give, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver." II Corinthians 9:7 NIV

"Give and it will be given unto you. A good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over, will be poured into your lap. For with the measure you are, it will be measured to you." Luke 6:38

"I have showed you all things, how that so laboring you ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" Acts 20:35

I would like to believe we can live according to God's word. We can change a spirit of the age by being willing to follow God's spirit. Give of yourself and learn what it is to be a part, not of "a spirit" of the age, but, of "The Spirit" of all ages and to be very happy.

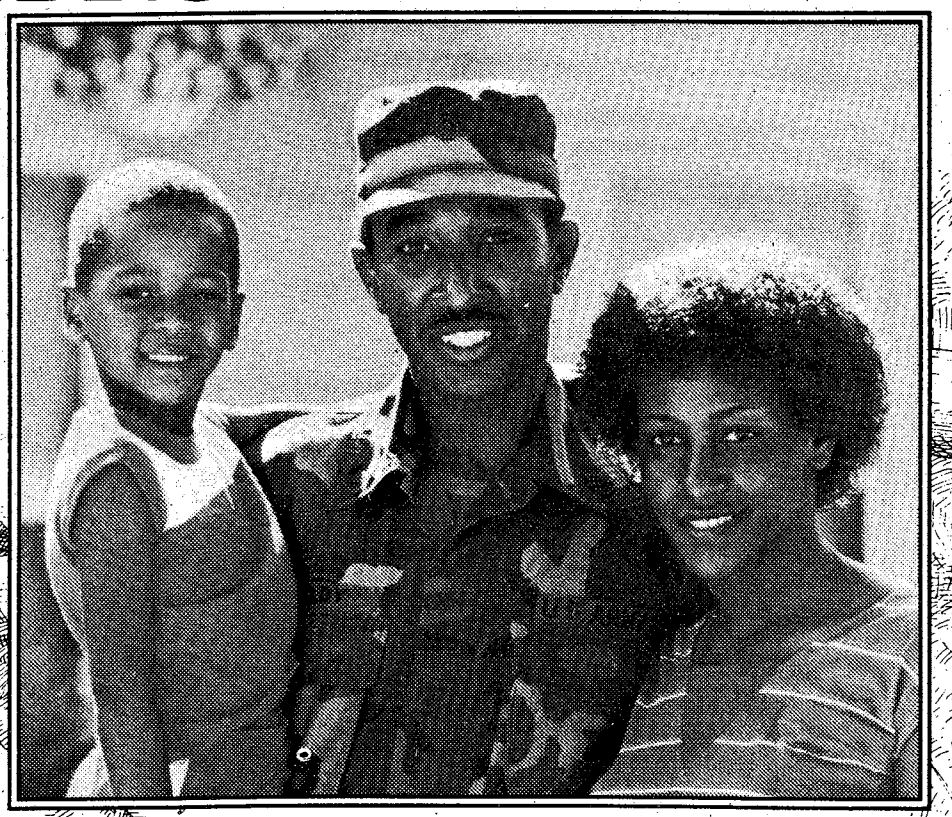
THE ARMY'S JOB HASN'T CHANGED IN OVER 200 YEARS.

BUT OUR WAY OF LIFE IS CHANGING FOR THE BETTER.



The job is still to defend American liberty, but the Army's attitude toward the soldier's family has changed dramatically.

The Army Family Action Plan is a demonstration of today's commitment to the human and material needs of Army family members.

The plan is designed as a total program to deal with a wide range of Army Family problems on a systematic, long-term basis. It includes measures to improve housing, child-care, medical and dental care, and many other services and facilities for Army families.

The Chief of Staff, General John A. Wickham, and Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell, are totally committed to this plan and have pledged their full support.

The construction of over 2,500 Army family housing units has already begun. Many new child-care facilities have been approved for construction; 250 have already been improved. A Health Facility Modernization Program has also begun. And presently, employment resource centers are being established to help expand employment and priority placement opportunities for Army family members.

Your problems can't be solved immediately, but they will be solved. The Army has always had the responsibility of defending the nation. Today it has another important responsibility—to continue to improve the lifestyle of the Army family.

ARMY FAMILY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Blockbusters come to theaters

Dallas — AAFES theater-goers can look forward to a special slate of family classic and blockbuster movies this coming Thanksgiving.

The Disney classic "Jungle Book" and the blockbuster hit "Indiana Jones and The Temple of Doom" will appear for "Turkey Day" viewing at Fort Benning theaters. Multiple showings are being scheduled throughout the holiday period.

"We usually can only get enough prints to start a movie at 45 installations," said Roger Wood, chief of the AAFES motion picture branch. "It can then ordinarily take up to two months for films to reach other theaters, but we have enough prints so that these two films will be available for most everyone to see over the holiday weekend."

Viewers should check local advertising for show times, Wood said. (ARNEWS)

The snowy Egret was hunted to near extinction at the turn of the century for millinery plumage. This is one example of 40 original double-elephant folio prints, part of the John James Audubon Exhibition, which will be on display at Callaway Gardens' John A. Sibley Horticultural Center Oct. 13-21.

U.S. National Guard has long military history

Fort Monroe, Va. — Older than the United States, the National Guard has the longest continuous history of any military organization in the country.

As an outgrowth of the early militia concept which provided for the common defense, its origin can be traced back to the first years of the seventeenth century. In order to protect their lives and homes, the settlers banded together to form "train bands," or militia organizations, equipped and trained according to the needs of the times. As the country grew and new communities and states came into being, additional units formed for local and national protection.

The 101st Engineer Battalion and the 182nd Infantry Regiment share the distinction of having the longest unbroken lineage. Both are part of the Massachusetts Army National Guard. They were originally organized on Oct. 7, 1636, when the General Court of Boston ordered that all eligible men be ranked into militia regiments.

The name "National Guard" was first applied to a state militia on Aug. 16, 1824, when New York's Seventh Regiment adopted the name as a compliment to the Marquis de Lafayette, who served with the Continental Army during the American Revolution. Lafayette had commanded the Garde Nationale in Paris in 1789.

By 1896 most states had adopted the title, although this did not change the essential character of the Guard as a state organization. Nevertheless, the Guard played an important part in providing trained troops in the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War and the Spanish-American War.

A sweeping change came to the Guard in 1903. The Secretary of War instituted a program in which the National Guard became the "Organized Militia" of the United States.

A Congressional Act of June 15, 1933, created a new component of the Army, known as the National Guard of the United States. As a part of the Army, it could be ordered into active federal service by the president without being called through the governors of the states. (TNS)

sponsibility for his own actions."

Kaufman pointed out that "the fundamental problem is that many men don't know how to deal with their emotions. When they start to feel sadness or jealousy or a threat to their ego, they funnel it all into anger. It's the only emotion they feel is legitimate to express. Eventually, they blow up and become violent to prevent a circuit overload."

Both workshop leaders emphasized that "men get a lot of powerful messages in our society — to be a man is to be in control of the situation. Men turn to violence and abuse in order to maintain control." Bathrick added: "In athletics men learn to punish and intimidate; if they are hurt, they are not to show emotion. This is not good when we come to intimate relationships with women."

Kaufman said, "In more than one half of marriages men will at some time be physically abusive, and this is happening in every socio-economic and ethnic group." Yet, it was pointed out that many men do not see their actions as abusive or a social problem; they tended to see the family as a personal, private matter. Up until 100-150 years ago society treated a man's wife and children as his property over which he exercised control. English law even stated that a man could beat his wife and children with a stick the thickness of his thumb.

"Battered women" is a term that came into use only about fifteen years ago. When women began to band together and seek shelter, the fact of spouse abuse began to surface as a frightening and widespread social problem. Statistics now show that domestic violence accounts for more calls to the local police than any other crime. Officials from "Men Stopping Violence" say the Domestic Crisis Unit of the Atlanta Police Department reports 3,750 spouse abuse calls a month.

With the increase of battered women's shelters, the question began to be asked "What about the batterer?" In response to this, Men Stopping Violence Groups are beginning to emerge.

Kaufman and Bathrick are quick to add that though many men are helped by this form of group therapy, the fact remains that only a small percentage of men will seek help, so they see their primary organizational goal as that of raising community awareness and bringing about system change.

For information concerning this problem or for counseling services that are available at Fort Benning call the Family Life Center (545-1760) or ACS (545-1169).

U.S. shooters blast way to fourth CISM title

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Sparkplugged by members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, the United States won its fourth consecutive Council International du Sport Militarie (CISM) Shoot Championship during this year's matches held in Liestal, Switzerland from Sept. 22-30.

The U.S. team scored a total of 9,132 points to defeat runner-up Finland at 9,100 while host country Switzerland finished in third place at 9,098.

The United States trailed the early leaders by as much as eighteen points through the first two days of competition, but then closed the gap by winning both the final military rapid fire rifle and pistol team matches. The winning U.S. total was aided in part by a new CISM record established in the 300 Meter Rifle team event as the U.S. squad scored 2,193 to eclipse the old mark by eleven points.

In individual competition, Glenn Dubis also set a new CISM record by scoring 581 out of 600 points in the 300 Meter Standard Rifle event. His gold medal winning score was two points above the old record of 579.

Other medal winners included Rojelio Arredondo in Centerfire Pistol competition with a total of 588 out of 600 for the individual silver medal. His score was three points off the pace of A. Loftesnes of Norway with a winning total of 591.

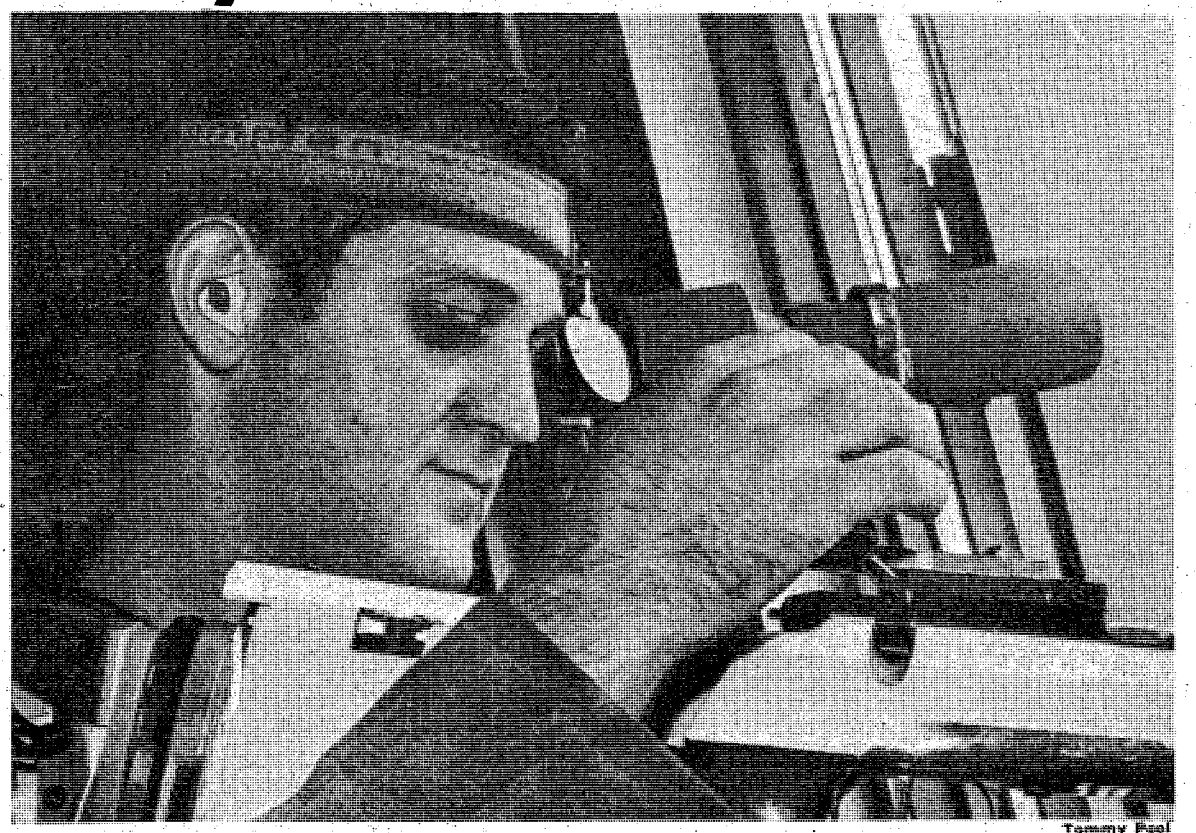
Gary Cumbie, also of USAMU, narrowly missed winning the bronze medal in Centerfire Pistol after tying with S. Makinen of Finland of 587. Makinen won the ensuing shoot-off with Cumbie having to settle for fourth.

In Women's Pistol competition, the United States scored a total of 1,742 to finish in second place behind China's winning total of 1,744. The Republic of South Korea placed third with 1,718.

The U.S. Women's team included 1984 Olympic team members Ruby Fox and Kim Dyer, both of the USAR. They were joined by Gail Liberty of the USAF.

The individual women's event was won by Wen Fang of China at 588, while team-mate Wang Shu placed second at 587. Kim Dyer of the United States finished in third place for the bronze medal at 583.

The winning United States CISM team included the following USAMU personnel: (Rifle) Lones Wigger, Richard Hawkins, Stephen Goff, James Meredith, David Erickson and Glenn Dubis; (Pistol) John McNally, Erich Buljung, Rojelio Arredondo, Gary Cumbie and David Woodcock.



Tommy Pool

First Lieutenant Glenn Dubis of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit set a new record in the 300 meter rifle competition during this year's CISM shooting events held in Liestal, Switzerland.

Gordon Rogers, commander of USAMU, served as team captain and the U.S. Chief of Mission. Team coaches from USAMU included William Krilling (rifle) and Frederick Keifer (pistol). Roger Schneider also of USAMU, was the U.S. team gunsmith.

More than 200 of the finest military competitors in the world represented a total of 21 countries at this years CISM events. CISM matches ae held annually, with the 1985 championships scheduled to be held in Caracas, Venezuela.

Training mind and body important in marathon running

By Bill Hughes
Special to the Bayonet

In another article, I wrote about the importance of participation in the Infantry marathon — the message being that every finisher is a winner.

I also wrote about training and the collapse point, and showed you how to bracket the marathon distance between your actual longest run and your theoretically calculated collapse point.

In this article, I'd like to focus on the psychology of distance running. To run a marathon, you must not only train your body, you must also train your mind. You must develop your mind into what I choose to call the mind of a marathoner.

Marathoners of today don't endure the classic "loneliness of the long distance runner" by any means, but they do experience the classic struggle between the mind and the body as they attempt to go the distance.

Many games are played within the carousels of the mind, but all are variants of the techniques. One technique is disassociation. The other is association. Both techniques have the same objective — to keep you going. Unfortunately, one technique is dangerous and, if you use it in a race of this length, you will run hand-in-hand with disaster. For this reason, it is imperative that you understand both techniques.

The dangerous technique is the one of disassociation and, unfortunately, essentially all beginning runners disassociate. The typical disassociative runner does not like running. For this group, running is something to be endured as a necessary evil, and the less of it the better. Runners in this group look for excuses not to run and, when you see them running, it is usually apparent that they're not having a good day. When these runners are forced to run because of an upcoming physical fitness test, mandatory physical fitness training, peer pressure, etc., they will do everything possible to disassociate their minds from their bodies. They try to forget that they are running.

The disassociative runner sings songs, counts cracks in the sidewalks, thinks about work, or daydreams. This runner prefers to run in a group because misery loves company. This runner will do anything to forget about running while running, and, for this runner, the AM/FM headset is the greatest thing since popcorn.

On the other hand, the typical associative runner enjoys running. Associative runners are runners who are positively addicted to running and look upon running as one of the day's highlights. These runners look for excuses to run and become agitated if their runs are delayed or precluded by mundane occupational matters. Most important, when these runners are running, they only think about running and how their body feels in relation to the run. These runners concentrate on their breathing, rhythm, stride, and the terrain. They always run within themselves, and know precisely if they should hold back or if they can safely let it hang out for awhile. They're conscious of those crucial items that separate what is often a narrow line between success and failure. The associative runner doesn't have time to daydream. Thinking about the run, the course and the body are full-time chores requiring constant mental discipline. Many questions must be answered. Am I still sweating? When did I urinate last? When was my last drink? How far to the next drink? What should I drink? How much farther to go? Am I relaxed? How is my stride, my rhythm, my breathing?

The associative runner will anticipate trouble and initiate corrective action. Even if the going gets tough, the associative runner is not lost. Intermediate goals will be established and the associative runner will concentrate on reaching each in the most efficient manner.

The key concept is that the associative runner will always be able to develop a plan and press on. The disassociative runner cannot. The disassociative runner is like a car driven by a driver who has carelessly ig-

Road races

National Infantry Museum Road Race, Fort Benning, Oct. 13: No race in West Georgia draws a larger field than this one. The race proceeds benefit the museum. Last year, over $17,000 was raised. The entry fee is $5. This year's run will start (9 a.m.) and finish at Doughboy Stadium. For more information, call Jean Dyer at 563-4818 or Bernie Pfeiffer at 545-3285.

Stroh's Run for Liberty I, various locations, Oct. 13: Co-sponsored by Brooks and Stroh's, this 8-k road race is open to all. There will be 123 races run on the same day across the country with profits earmarked to help the restoration of the Statue of Liberty. Closest to us are runs in Montgomery and Atlanta. Limited edition tee-shirts are included in the $8 entry fee. This could be a once-in-a-lifetime run. Call George Nelson in Montgomery (205-279-8491) or Steve Haas in Atlanta (658-2193) for more information.

Halloween Moonlight Road Race, Douglasville, Ga., Oct. 26: This promises to be a fast 5-k course through downtown Douglasville. The race starts at 8:30 p.m. A mile fun run is on for 8 p.m. As usual, these folks give away a lot of hardware (170 trophies will be on the table) and the tee-shirts are out of sight. This year's shirt will glow in the dark! Entry fee is $9 and must be paid before Oct. 8. Call Bill Allen, 404-949-1846, for more information.

Uptown Runaround, Columbus, Oct. 27: This race used to be called Textile 5-miler, then the Textile 8000. It's still a 5-miler (1-mile fun run at 9:30 a.m.) and it's still run uptown in conjunction with National Textile Week. The race starts at 10 a.m. at the parking garage on 1st Avenue and 11th Street. The entry fee is $6 early, $7 on the day of the race. Towels go to all entrants. Cash awards to male and female winners. For more information, write John Bohannon, 5462 Roaring Branch Road, Columbus 31904.

WMAZ-Bud Light Marathon and Running Festival, Macon, Ga., Nov. 17: This was one of the most talked-about running events in the country in '83. Take one long stretch of highway (U.S. 41) between Tift College in Forsyth and Central City Park in Macon, four different starting lines (for the marathon, half-marathon, 10-k and 5-k), one finish line, hundreds of entrants and thousands of spectators along the route and you have a happening. Everybody starts at 7:59 a.m. in whichever race they choose. The entry fee is $9 for longer runs, $7 for shorter runs. Long-sleeved shirts go to marathon and half-marathoners, short-sleeved shirts to 10-k and 5-k runners. There will be no race-day registration. For more information, call 912-474-5063 or 912-784-1700.

nored the oil pressure gauge, the temperature gauge, and the empty gas tank. Collapse is inevitable and, when it occurs, it will be complete and irreversible.

My recommendation to you is become an associative runner. Discipline yourself to listen to your body. Concentrate on your run, the course, and your body's needs. To maximize the probability of your success, it is imperative that you train your head, become an associative runner, and develop the mind of a marathoner.

Fort Benning named top handicapped employer for fifth straight year

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For the fifth straight year, Fort Benning was named the Handicapped Employer of the Year by the City of Columbus.

Columbus Mayor J.W. "Bill" Feighner presented the award to Maj. Gen. John Foss, Fort Benning commander, at an awards luncheon held Wednesday at the Columbus Ironworks.

During fiscal year 1984, Fort Benning hired 601 employees, with 39 of these having a reportable handicap. Seven percent of Fort Benning's total workforce are handicapped employees.

Fort Benning was nominated for the award by a representative of the Georgia State Vocational Rehabilitation Office.

Robin and Bobby Ingram, a deaf couple employed in the Directorate of Industrial Operations, Maintenance Division, were named the Handicapped Employees of the Year at the same awards luncheon.

Through their translator, the couple said they "were surprised and happy and very proud" to receive the award from the City of Columbus.

Robin has been employed as a data transcriber since January 1984, and Bobby has been employed as an automotive worker since July 1981.

Welder honored as Handicapped Employee of Year

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Winning the Handicapped Employee of the Year award was the icing on the cake for Robert "Brent" Lloyd, a welder in Shop 2, Maintenance Division, Directorate of Industrial Operations.

The 22-year-old graduated from Jordan High School in 1980 and attended Columbus Tech for a year taking welding, specializing in blueprint reading.

Lloyd said he has always wanted to be a welder and has been welding since he was eight years old. "My grandfather was a welder and he got me interested in it," explained Lloyd. "They offered welding at Jordan so I took it for four years there."

Because he specialized in blueprint reading at Columbus Tech, he had no problem getting a job with a local firm. Lloyd said he worked locally for nine months and was laid off, then learned of a temporary job opportunity at Fort Benning and was hired. When a permanent position opened up, he applied and was hired fulltime.

Because Lloyd is totally deaf in his right ear, but has limited hearing in his left ear he wears a hearing aid. He said he lost his hearing when he was eight years old.

Lloyd's supervisor, Kenneth Larson, said of Lloyd, "He's a good worker, very conscientious. One thing we find with him is that he is loyal to the job. He's always here, rarely misses work."

Because of Lloyd's hearing limitation, Larson said initially he was a little concerned from a safety standpoint. "With all this heavy equipment, and the overhead lifting with cranes, you need all your senses for safety reasons. But he has never had a problem or safety accident since he's been here. Once he had been on the job a little while, we felt more comfortable about that."

In Shop 2, Lloyd works on all kinds of combat vehicles and the shop can fabricate or repair just about anything metal, such as metal sheds and combat boats.

Lloyd won a Spirit award in 1983 for suggesting the shop fabricate footstools for the Bradley. Footstools are really metal handles that are grasped or used for a foothold to climb up on top of the Bradley. Lloyd discovered the Army was paying $332 for each footstool and fabricated one in the shop for a total cost of $13.76 each.

"I used materials that were already in stock and it only took about 10 minutes to make one," said Lloyd. He received a $1,000 cash prize and said he used it to open his first savings account.

In his leisure time, Lloyd enjoys motorcross and motorcycle racing, and spending time with his wife of six months, Christie.

Chief has burning desire to prevent fires

Robert McClain

Fire Prevention Week officially ends tomorrow, but for Fire Chief Joe Alford and the Fort Benning Fire Department, educating people on fire safety is a 365 day a year job.

"Fire safety gets a lot of attention during Fire Prevention Week. Our message reaches a large number of people during this week. But, our efforts aren't limited to just this week. We have a continous education program at Fort Benning. Fire Prevention Week ends tomorrow, but our fire prevention efforts won't stop. It's a year round job," said the silver haired chief.

Alford looks the part of a fire chief. A big man, he stands about six feet tall. His shiny badge stands out on his pressed uniform. A pair of plain black glasses highlight a face that shows his many years of fire fighting experience.

He said the majority of the fire department's emphasis in fire safety education is directed towards post children.

"You know the old saying, 'You can't teach an old dog new tricks.' Sometimes it's difficult to reach large numbers of adults. But we can get our message across to large groups of children. We count on the children to bring the message home to their parents," Alford commented.

During Fire Prevention Week, the fire department has been touring post schools. They have been presenting a skit adapted from "Sesame Street" to stress fire safety. "I think the skit grabs the children's attention. They seem to enjoy the presentation," Alford said. "It does a lot more than if we just bring out the fire truck and spray water in the parking lot."

Alford said the fire prevention section also uses the direct approach to educate post families. "We get to talk to every family who moves into post housing during the self-help briefing. We have a 30 minute section of the briefing where we can speak directly to the family members. We try to stress fire safety tips and post fire regulations."

The department's efforts in fire prevention seem to be effective. In 1979, Alford estimated the fire loss at Fort Benning was nearly $300,000. In 1984 the total fire loss at Fort Benning was a mere $16,000. TRADOC-wide, annual fire losses were down also. In 1982, fire loss at TRADOC installations was more than $6 million. In 1984, losses totaled just $582,000.

U.S. Army

Firefighter Henry Terry speaks with pre-schoolers on fire safety during last year's Fire Prevention Week.

Alford said the largest percent of the fire losses occurred in family quarters and were caused by carelessness. "Over the past few years the greatest number of fires have been caused by unattended cooking and children playing with fire," the chief said.

Alford said he would like to see the fire loss even lower in 1985. "Our main interest though," he said, "is saving lives. Saving property comes second. But we can't beat people over the head to get them to be safety conscious. We can only educate people to the danger of fires and hope they listen and apply the suggestions we offer."

Latchkey kids

Leaving children prepared helps ease their anxiety

An estimated five to 12 million children between the ages of five and 13 are regularly left alone at home for some part of the day.

For those who are left alone, there is always some anxiety, but knowing they are prepared to cope with situations that may arise will lessen the worry.

As a parent:

- Be sure your children know how to use the telephone (both pushbutton and dial models) to make emergency calls and to dial the operator.
- Post emergency numbers near all the phones in your home.
- Make sure your children lock the door after they arrive home and then check in with you or a trusted neighbor.
- Teach them to work the door and window locks in your home.
- Tell your children what to do in case of fire.
- Tell your children that they are never to go anywhere with another adult, even one who says he or she was sent by you. Adopt a family "code word" to be used if a third party is ever to pick up your children.
- Teach your children if they ever feel they're being followed, not to run home but to a store, public place, back to school, or to the nearest "Safe House."
- Teach your children never to get near or into a stranger's car, or to take a walk with a stranger who says he needs the children to "show" him something.
- Impress on your children that

Defense budget deadlock raises cost of preparedness

Is there anyone still around who can remember the last time Congress approved a defense appropriations bill before the beginning of the fiscal year?

Ten years ago, Congress passed a law that was supposed to improve the way it legislates funds to operate the federal government. They delayed the start of the fiscal year from 1 July to 1 October to allow more time for the budget process and to set a precise timetable. Since its inception the schedule has been all but ignored, and it again appears certain that this session of Congress will resort to the time-honored funding loophole called a "continuing resolution."

This year the debate over the defense budget has been more intense than usual. In the spring, bowing to congressional insistence, the President lopped some $14 billion off his original January proposal. By early August, the House and Senate had passed separate authorization bills, but these remain gridlocked in a joint conference committee, thus delaying any move toward processing the necessary appropriations bill. As long as the House leadership elects to delay markup of the bill there can be no final action on the defense budget.

All this congressional foot-dragging is costing us dearly. And, with the 98th Congress planning to recess in time to campaign for the November elections, the armed forces will once again be forced into an expensive, disruptive stopgap funding mode, starting with the new fiscal year on 1 October. Leaders in both houses of Congress have indicated opposition to a lame-duck session, meaning that the department can only spend at last year's levels unless specific exceptions are included in the continuing resolution. This leaves unfunded those programs which were scheduled to start in the new year and has disruptive, destabilizing and grossly expensive effects on ongoing programs.

This is not the first collapse of the congressional budget process and it undoubtedly will not be the last. By not passing a defense budget on time, Congress not only digs deeper into the taxpayer's pocket, it seriously impairs the much needed modernization of America's military forces, and poses formidable and unnecessary obstacles to their readiness posture. (AUSA)

Gas! 197th units test readiness for NBC environment

By Paula Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

Tense and nervous, two young soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, squat hunched over a worn-out copy of the step-by-step operation of the M8 chemical alarm system.

The soldiers, dressed in MOPP 2 (overgarments and boots of the mission oriented protection posture), carefully progressed down the list, while the watching evaluator checked their performance.

Units in the 197th Infantry Brigade must qualify annually with DTE (Defense Team Evaluation). Each unit is responsible for providing enough soldiers to produce an NBC (Nuclear, Biological, Chemical) team, and to insure that team members have received training sufficient to their particular jobs.

"Basically, we're trying to evaluate the unit's readiness for an NBC environment," Capt. Fred Jones, brigade chemical officer, explained. "Being here allows them to train in a somewhat sterile environment without disturbances. Here also, they receive immediate feedback on their performance so they can make corrections in any weak areas."

"The most important part of the training is that they know how to put the equipment into operation in such a manner, that if an actual NBC environment came up, the equipment would work properly," said SFC Jessie Jones, brigade NBC NCOIC. "If the equipment is to work right, it's essential that the operators know how to do their jobs."

Only three of the 197th's units are exempt from the testing. They are, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry; 298th Signal Detachment; and 179th Military Intelligence Detachment.

"1-29 is a TRADOC (Training and Doctrine Command) unit attached to the brigade. The 298th and 179th are detachments, which we don't test," Jones explained.

Much of the DTE training deals with the correct monitoring of and reacting to chemical and radiological hazards. However, the soldier has to receive constant training with the equipment to maintain enough familiarity to prevent malfunctions and fear from interfering with its operation.

"NBC should be trained until it's instinctive. This way soldiers can go and do their jobs, instead of wondering if they will survive," Jones said. "Some units only train the two weeks prior to testing. These soldiers won't know how to react in a real situa-

VA suggests tips to help avoid delays in education payments

The Veterans Administration has some suggestions to help students avoid delays in their VA education payments.

Every month VA mails checks worth millions of dollars to veteran-students and eligible dependents, and the agency wants to be sure the checks are on time.

To help avoid possible delays, the VA suggests students do the following:

• If the initial payment for the school term has been delayed, the student should check with the school to find out the date the enrollment certificate was sent to the VA. Generally, payments are released the first of each month for the preceding month. At least four weeks should be allowed from the date the school sent the certificate to the VA before an education check can be expected.

• If an advance payment check is expected, the student must sign a written request through the school and it should be submitted to VA at least a month before the beginning of the semester.

• Students who have gotten education benefits in the past should be certain no overpayment is outstanding. If an overpayment exists, current benefits are withheld until the overpayment is recovered by the VA.

Further information on GI Bill education payments is available from the nearest VA regional office. Toll-free numbers are listed in the U.S. Government pages of the telephone directory. (VA)

2-10th demonstrates artillery fire support for students

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The early morning mist was just rising off Ferguson Range Sept. 28 as Bravo Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), prepared to demonstrate artillery fire support for students in the Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course (ANOC) of the Infantry School.

"The ANOC demonstration starts at 1 p.m., but we left the motor pool and headed for the range at 6 a.m. to begin setting up," said 1st Lt. Albert Van Lengen, executive officer of B Battery and safety officer for the range. "Infantrymen are used to having mortars fire support for them; this demonstration is to let them see what the artillery can do for them."

More than 100 students were seated in the bleachers for the demonstration. The battery had on display a M101A1 105mm howitzer and a M109A3 155mm howitzer. After a quick briefing, the artillerymen put on a show that had the students shouting and cheering with delight.

"The two 'pieces' here are so the students can see what the howitzers look like and see them in action. What they don't know is that the remainder of the battery is laid at another firing point and will assist in massing fires at required times," explained Van Lengen.

The demonstration had four phases. The first phase showed the type of ammunition the artillery had to support the Infantrymen. The second phase showed how to adjust fire.

In the third phase, the students were shown how effective the rounds are and the difference between the 33 pound round of the M101A1 and the 95 pound round of the M109A3.The final phase called for the students to call in and adjust fire onto targets themselves.

"The demonstration went really well," said Van Lengen. "2-10's mission is twofold: one, we must be combat ready as a selfpropelled unit; and two, we provide school support for the Infantry Center. Demonstrations like today are good ways to let different branches know what we can do for each other."

tion since they've only memorized the information temporarily. They forget some of the little steps, though all are essential. To react correctly, the soldier must have sustainment type training."

The scenario designed for testing evolves around the control party's ability to receive and dispatch information from a "higher headquarters" and the members of the team.

Testing begins when the control party is informed by the higher headquarters that a unit has been exposed to contamination. The control party then tasks the survey team with finding an uncontaminated area to set up operations in. Once the rest of the team arrives at the site, they have to arrange themselves in tactical, camouflaged positions around the perimeter.

"The M8s are set up between 150 to 400 meters out from the perimeter," said Sgt. Kevin Franklin. This way, if the alarms encounter any contamination, they give the alarm with plenty of time to react and put on gear."

After securing the perimeter, the control party sends out teams to determine if contamination is present, what kind of contamination it is, how much contamination is there, and then post it so others would be aware of it when passing through the area.

If the contamination happened to be a nuclear blast, a survey team is also dispatched to measure the radioactivity at the site of the blast.

"Sometimes a situation may come up where we have to move troops through the contaminated area. You don't want to be in an area that has 1,000 rads for hours and hours. However, if you know the amount of contamination, you can determine how fast you need to go, to move your troops safely through the area," said Franklin.

Once the type of contamination has become known, a decontamination team is set up. Soldiers exposed to the contamination go through a line set up to decontaminate the soldier, his mask, weapon, LBE, and MOPP suit. At the end of the line, the soldier is reissued his gear, and once again prepared to fight.

SPIRITed thinking helps SJA office save Fort Benning nearly $100,000

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It was a case of making do with less resources, combined with an eye towards saving, that resulted in almost $100,000 in savings by the SJA office on post.

"Like just about everybody else at Fort Benning, we have been given fewer people to do the job," said CWO2 Michael J. Welsh, a legal administrator at the SJA. "Since I came here in June 1983, we have gone from 18 recognized enlisted slots to 7 enlisted slots."

While staffing slots were cut, the SJA found its administrative law workload doubled in the past year, as did the number of legal assistance clients it processed. So it became imperative they do things as efficiently as possible to accomplish their mission.

"Colonel Nix is a conscientious commander who is always looking for ways to save tax dollars," said Welsh.

More efficient utilization of word processing systems contributed over $80,000 in savings. In May 1984, SJA was given total control over their word processors, which had previously been administered by AG.

The Legal Assistance Branch had a slow processing time for wills, because they were being customized for each client to meet the laws in their home states. Wills were given a low priority in the Word Processing Office, based on the quality and other mission requirements. Consequently, wills were not getting done during regular duty hours, and they were having to be done on overtime scheduled on weekends.

So, the word processors were programmed with the individual will paragraphs so they could be selectively retrieved and consolidated to make up the majority of wills required. Also, a quick index system was devised to allow attorneys and secretaries ready access to the paragraphs. These innovations reduced both attorney and secretary time so overtime has been virtually eliminated.

By purchasing a noteviewer that enabled the court reporter to transcribe notes without stopping to turn the pages of her notebook, saved $649 per year.

SJA saved more than $8,000 by simply seeking an alternative to their computer access subscription to a legal research data base. They changed their access from West Publishing Company to the Federal Library of Congress system, resulting in an annual savings of $8,220.

Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator, said, "This is a good example of what SPIRIT urges everyone to do, which is look at what we are doing and seek out alternatives. It is often easier to just continue with an established pattern, but the pattern could be costing valuable resources."

It's easy for his office to find savings, said Welsh. The hard part is finding somebody with the time to spend writing up the SPIRIT project summaries so SJA can have their savings added to the post figures. "I have to give Charlene Carpenter, one of our court reporters, credit for the time she has spent working on these summaries, figuring up the savings and typing them up," he added.

Locking retractors help seat belts hold you in accident

Editor's note: This is the first article by the provost marshal's office in a three-part series on seat belts.

Provost marshal

Effective Sept. 1, all persons operating or riding in a vehicle on Fort Benning were required to wear their seat belts. This was not a new regulation, but an extension of an old one. Army regulation 385-55, dated Dec. 15, 1980, requires the use of seatbelts by Army personnel driving or riding in POVs on Army installations.

This article should help clarify some misconceptions about seat belts.

All cars manufactured after Jan. 1, 1964, are fitted with special seat belts in both outer front seat positions. These are one piece lap and shoulder belts which have emergency locking retractors.

The retractor is the device which winds up the slack in a loose or unused seat belt. This system allows the belted occupant the freedom to bend forward and sit comfortably in the car. The shoulder part will pull out as the person moves forward and returns. Only in an emergency, such as a panic stop or a collision, will the retractor automatically lock and hold the person in his seat, hence the name emergency locking retractor.

Presently there are only two types of emergency locking retractors: belt-sensitive and car-sensitive.

A belt-sensitive retractor locks when it senses any quick movement of the shoulder belt. There is a simple test to determine if your car is equipped with a belt-sensitive retractor and if they are working properly. Grasp the shoulder belt firmly and give it a quick tug. The belt should lock before it moves a couple of inches.

If the belt fails to lock, then it may mean that you have a car-sensitive retractor. The operation of this type of retractor can be checked with a simple road test.

- Properly fasten seat belt.
- Start engine and drive forward until your speed reaches between 5 and 10 mph.
- Check your rearview mirror to see if it is safe to brake and if so brake sharply. The belt should lock and hold you firmly in your seat.

Budget should be part of your financial program

Fort Monroe, Va. — You bought that cassette deck for your new car, you've sported your new clothes at the finest restaurant and you picked up the tab at last night's beer bust. You still have enough money to pay the electricity bill. But, what about your car payment and your rent?

The key to affording the necessities and the luxuries of life is budgeting. A budget is a spending plan which allows you to live on the money you receive each month. Your budget will be subject to change and it will take determination and will power to make it work.

Plan ahead

When it comes to a sound financial program, often the best advice is to plan ahead. Anticipate bills or any other outlays of cash and plan for them.

The first step in making up your budget is to find out your actual income. List every source of income such as salaries, wages and pensions. Make sure to include social security and investment payments.

The second step is to figure what you spend on necessities and fixed expenses — rent, food, telephone and utility bills, major items of clothing, insurance premiums, loan and credit card payments and taxes. Since some of these items aren't due each month, you should set aside a certain amount to be sure that funds are available when the payments are due.

Your third step is to start an emergency fund. It doesn't need to be a large amount — simply enough to fall back on for unexpected expenses.

Step four of planning your budget is to note your day-to-day items — transportation, clothing, household expenses and entertainment. This is where your will power is truly tested. At times, it is hard to function when your heart says "yes" to the new movie but your budget says "no." Stick to your budget. If the movie is good, it should still be playing when you can afford it. If not, sooner or later it will show up on television.

Your last step is to know what's left. Add your day-to-day and fixed items, then subtract that amount from your total income. You can use the remaining dollars for additional savings, investments or a special goal.

To make sure your budget is working, have each family member keep a daily total of all money he or she spends for one month. Don't be discouraged if your budget doesn't work right the first time. It will probably take a few changes to make it easy for you to live with. If you need assistance with your budget, Army Community Services provides free financial planning.

The time that you invest in planning your budget will pay off. If you are serious about your money, you should be able to flow through each month rather smoothly. You won't have to spend the last days of each month waiting for payday because you have already run out of money.

Soldier enjoys life as Bradley crewmember

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

When the Iranians took over the American embassy in late 1979, it fired off a round of patriotism that lasted long after the hostages were released late in 1980. One of the effects of that patriotism was the unexpected influx of people into the military. Specialist Four Jose E. Rivera was one of these individuals.

"I joined after the crisis in Iran. I wanted to provide assistance to the government if we got into a conflict," explained the native of Mount Vernon, N.Y.

Rivera, a three-year veteran, is a family man who enjoys oil painting, reading, boxing and spending time with his wife Keja, and his daughters Yasmin and Michelle.

Currently, he is assigned to the 197th Infantry Brigade's 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry as an 11M (Bradley crewmember).

"I originally joined as a radio repairman in February of '81. However, when the Bradleys came in, I became an 11M, which I really enjoy more," he said, continuing that, "the Bradley has really turned out to be a learning experience for me. Just being a member of the team is fantastic."

Friends and family have been very supportive towards Rivera since his decision to join the Army. Aware that he wished to make the service a career, they have backed him 100 percent from the very beginning.

"My family is very proud that their son is serving in the military. I'm proud too," he continued. "Though a lot of it is being a Bradley Infantryman. If I have to face combat, I know my vehicle gives me a very high rate of survival."

Rivera attended basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. and then went on to AIT (advanced individual training) at Fort Sill, Okla. While at AIT, Rivera had to do some serious thinking about his future. Finally he decided he did want a career in the military. With that decision made, Rivera had to make major changes in his attitude. Then after graduating from AIT, he was stationed in Germany.

"The military has given me a lot of self satisfaction; a good inward and outward look of myself," he explained thoughfully.

At 1-29, a large portion of Rivera's job is training with and maintaining the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle. Since his arrival at the unit in May 1984, Rivera has come to several opinions on his training there.

"I would like to have more tactical driving, like wedge formations and moving through the woods as a platoon. It makes the training more realistic," Rivera remarked.

A special sign posted in the window of these homes tells children this is a place to go when they are confronted with a serious problem. Local law enforcement can help in setting up a sound and effective program.

Organization helps open doors for military women

Until 1967, women could not hold a rank higher than lieutenant colonel in the Army, Air Force and Marines, and commander in the Navy. In 1973, a law was passed to give civilian spouses, male or female, of military servicemembers the same benefits. And in 1976 all the service academies opened their doors to women.

These are some of the changes in the armed forces supported over the past two decades by an organization called the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS).

Established in 1951 by the Secretary of Defense, the committee is made up of civilian men and women chosen for their outstanding performance in business, the professions, public service and for their records of civic leadership.

During its 33 years, the committee has advised the Secretary of Defense on policies involving the effective utilization of women in the armed forces. It promotes public acceptance of military service as a career for women. And it acts as an important link between the military and civilian communities in relating the roles and accomplishments of military women.

Today, women are an integral part of the armed forces. The Air Force has the highest female representation of any service — 11.2 percent of the active force. There are 55,000 enlisted personnel and about 10,800 officers. Enlistment, commissioning and performance standards are the same as for men.

But there are some differences. By law, they cannot serve on combat aircraft. And they are barred, by policy, from duties involving an extraordinarily high risk of capture or injury during wartime. However, all officer career fields and all but five of the enlisted specialties are open to them.

Women make up about 9.4 percent of the Army. There are about 9,500 female officers and 66,000 enlistees. Of the 351 specialties, 302 are open to women. However, they are barred by policy from positions which might be routinely engaged in combat.

In the Navy, women comprise about 9 percent of about 70,000 officers, and about 8 percent of an enlisted force of about a half-million. Enlisted women serve in 82 of the 99 ratings. Officers are barred from submarine and special warfare positions. And due to statutory limitations, women may not be assigned to duty in aircraft or on vessels likely to be used in combat.

In addition to legal prohibitions, the Marine Corps' ratio of 60 percent operational forces to 40 percent support troops excludes women in certain fields. They may not, for example, be classified in the following combat occupations: infantry, artillery, tank and assault amphibian vehicle, or pilot/naval flight officer. There are about 640 female officers and 8,500 enlisted women comprising 4.7 percent of the total force.

The Coast Guard, which is part of the Department of Transportation during peace time, is unique in that there are no job restrictions for women. Many serve on combat ships. A woman, for example, is the weapons officer for the Coast Guard Cutter Bear.

"It's not clear what would happen in time of war when we would come under the Navy," a Coast Guard spokesman said. "The commandant has said that it's not militarily effective to pull off trained crews from ships in a wartime situation."

Coast Guard women comprise 8 percent of a total force of 6,493 officers and 32,253 enlisted personnel. (AFPS)

Fort Benning cemetery rich in history

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thinking about a cemetery is probably not anyone's favorite subject, but most cemeteries have some interesting facts within their history. Fort Benning's post cemetery is no exception.

The cemetery has 44 German, six Italian and four Chinese prisoners of war buried within its walls. It also has four Unknowns and one Medal of Honor recipient buried there.

"The first person buried here was a Private Hart in 1922," James Grantham, cemetery superintendent, said. Since that first grave, the cemetery has interred 4,867 people.

"We usually have around 150 funerals here a year," Grantham said. According to him, Fort Benning's cemetery is the most active state Army post cemetery, from the 28 nationwide, as far as burials go.

"We have about 480 new spaces within our present walls for graves. During Project Transition of 1974, the East wall was moved to allow for 950 new spaces. We still have 2,108 undeveloped spaces available for our use," Grantham said.

The cemetery is open seven days a week from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., except on Memorial Day when it is open until 7 p.m. "We only have two official ceremonies here in a year. Once in November for the German Memorial Day observances and on Memorial Day in May," Grantham explained.

The Memorial Day ceremony is held near the flag pole where Sp4 Donald R. Johnston, Medal of Honor recipient, is buried. Johnston, from Columbus, was killed in Vietnam in 1969. The Reception Station at Sand Hill bears his name in remembrance of him.

Members from all the services are buried at the cemetery. Grantham explained that any active duty military person can be buried at Fort Benning, if the next of kin requests it. "Active duty members, their family members, and retirees and their family members are eligible for burial here," he said. If the person is to be buried at Fort Benning, the cemetery opens and closes the grave, installs the headstone and performs the required yearly maintenance on the grave.

The post also has mortuary services that are available. In the death of an active duty member or their family member, and for a retiree who has died in a government hospital, once the next of kin decides where they want the person to be buried, the mortuary prepares and ships the remains. Also, Fort Benning is responsible for any servicemember who dies within an 80-county Fort Benning area. There are 10 counties in Alabama, 14 in Florida and 56 in Georgia that fall into this category.

If the remains of an active duty member go to a funeral home for burial in a civilian cemetery, the government will pay $1,400 at the receiving end for burial expenses. If burial is in a post or national cemetery, the government only allows $950.

Reflections

'There is nothing new under sun'

Chaplain Alice M. Howard

In Ecclesiastes (1:9) it says, "There is no new thing under the sun." I have heard many people say this, but I did not realize what it meant until a few years ago when I read it in the book of Ecclesiastes.

When you stop and think about what the writer is saying, this statement is true. If we can accept the scientific view that "matter can be neither created nor destroyed," then the writer makes good sense.

In my opinion, man has never created anything. Only God creates. Man merely discovers and invents. Everything that we are doing has probably already been done by someone in the past, although it was not recorded in black and white. History tends to repeat itself at times, but only with different individuals participating within a situation.

After the initial conquest of the Land of Canaan under Joshua came the time of the judges. In this period the several tribes of Israel concentrated on establishing their positions in the land, and one tribe could expect little help from the others. Each tribe had to contend with its own enemies and try to forge a life for its people.

Only occasionally did a strong leader emerge who commanded the aid of many of the people beyond his own tribe. Every man and tribe tended to do what was right in their own eyes without regard to the demands of the nation as a whole.

From time to time the people of Israel turned from the worship of the God of Moses to serve the baals (the primitive gods of the land). Lacking a firm commitment to the Lord God, no matter what they had vowed, they fell prey to plunderers and were unable to withstand their enemies.

When they were in despair, God would raise up for them a leader, a judge, who would represent His concern for His people and lead them to victory over their enemies. When a judge died, the people would turn again to false gods. This cycle repeated itself over and over again.

Many of the people protested, when, having forsaken the ways of the God of Israel, they encountered hard times and situations. "God is not with us anymore; I can't understand it," many probably complained.

But the answer to their complaining was not difficult to realize or understand. We can note that whenever the people of Israel found themselves in difficult situations, their trouble could invariably be traced to their faithlessness towards the God of Moses.

History does on occasion have the tendency to repeat itself, for as it says in Ecclesiastes: "There is no new thing under the sun."

Workshop helps Benning families better understand sexual abuse

"The primary issues in sexual abuse of children are abuse of power and betrayal of trust," said workshop leader John Alderson at a recent Fort Benning workshop on "Sexual Abuse of Children." He added that "two other issues include inability to set limits and inability to protect. The abuser is trying to get other than sexual needs met."

The workshop was sponsored by ACS and the Family Life Center with participants representing a wide cross section of helping agencies in the civilian and military communities. Fort Benning agencies included the Department of Family and Children Services, the Fort Benning school system, the Child Protection Management Team and others.

Chaplain Jim Masteller, director of the Family Life Center, praised "this establishing of relationships and internal networking that takes place between agencies." He also said it is extremely important for "the state to be involved with military cases along with the military agencies."

The workshop focused on the family unit and how sexual abuse affects the family system. Participants explored the question of "How do you approach issues so that a family can receive treatment?" Alderson pointed out that "80 percent of sexual abuse cases that are reported are incest cases and most of those people are just like you and me. They are not 'sickos'."

He added that in working with these families, two very important questions must be raised. "What are the factors that led up to sexual abuse and why are they continuing? Why did this secret come out now?"

Alderson said statistics revealed that "in this country one out of three females and one out of ten males had been sexually abused as a child." He emphasized how this abuse contributed to the dynamics of sexual abuse in the families which they would go on to establish as adults. For example, a woman who had been sexually abused as a child "usually has a tremendous problem relating to peers and maintaining her own marriage because of lack of trust."

Though the dilemma of children and non-abusive female parents caught in the family web was considered, the primary focus of the workshop was on the abusive adult male family member. Alderson said a large percentage of those male parents were "needy people" who "need to think better of themselves —

DA officials streamline E-4 advancement procedures

Beginning Oct. 1, unit commanders will follow new administrative procedures when promoting their soldiers to E-4.

In a recent message to the field, Army personnel officials explained that the policy modifications only simplify the administrative procedures for advancement.

Officials emphasize that the new policy "in no way constitutes automatic advancement to grade E-4. Commanders must continue to make conscious decisions on which soldiers are fully qualified for advancement to E-4."

The new promotion authorization, developed to ease the workload on military personnel offices and units, has the following key elements:

- All E-3s with three months in grade are eligible for advancement to E-4 at 24 months time-in-service without any percentage restrictions (at this time). Soldiers must continue to be recommended by the commander and otherwise meet eligibility criteria.
- The Defense Department restriction that no more than 20 percent of the assigned E-4s may have fewer than 24 months' time-in-service remains in effect.
- Promotion orders will no longer be required for E-4 advancement. Instead, unit commanders will advance their soldiers to E-4 using a DA Form 4187 until an automated promotion instrument is fielded. The "SIDPERS Enlisted Promotion Report" still can be used to identify soldiers eligible for advancement.
- In early 1985, MILPERCEN officials will field a modified version of the SIDPERS. It will enable commanders to select soldiers for advancement at the 24-month-service point by checking a block "yes" or "no." For these advancements, neither orders nor a DA Form 4187 will be required.

Until instructions for preparing the DA Form 4187 are available, commanders have the authority to modify the E-3 format outlined in procedure No. 14-5 of DAI Pamphlet 600-8-1. (ANS)

Income gap closes between vets, civilians

For the most part, male war veterans have higher personal income and higher educational attainment than their nonveteran counterparts, but the differences have diminished over the years, according to a report compiled by the Veterans Administration.

The veterans studied were those with defined wartime service from World Wars I and II, Korea and Vietnam.

The median personal income of male war veterans in 1982 was $18,760, nearly 50 percent higher than the $12,710 median income for male nonveterans. Since 1972, this difference has remained fairly constant between 40 and 50 percent.

The report indicates that part of the difference in income can be attributed to age difference because veterans are "overrepresented" in the relatively high-income-earning middle and older ages.

Vietnam era veterans, aged 25 to 39, have a median personal income 16 percent higher than that of their nonveteran counterparts: $19,640 for veterans compared with $16,870 for nonveterans.

For the age group 25-29, however, the median income of veterans is about 15 percent lower than that for nonveterans. The report says this might be due, in part, to advantages nonveterans have over veterans in getting an early start in the civilian labor force, or in getting an education without interruption.

In 1973, the proportion of veterans completing at least high school was 24 percent greater than nonveterans, the proportion finishing college was 11 percent greater, while the proportion not reaching high school was 47 percent lower. The median years of education for veterans was 12.5 compared to 12.2 for nonveterans.

By 1983, the education profile of both groups was very similar. The median years of education for both was the same, 12.7. Significantly, a slightly higher proportion of nonveterans were college graduates than veterans, which reverses the picture of a decade earlier. This is attributed to the increased educational achievement of the Vietnam era age group, 25 to 39, where the proportion of veterans declined.

Dining facilities gear up for year's largest meal

Fort Lee, Va. — Army food service soldiers at 1,111 dining facilities around the globe are gearing up to serve their largest meal of the year — the customary Thanksgiving dinner.

According to officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, more than 165,042 pounds, or 83 tons, of roast turkey is expected to be served on Nov. 22. The amount of turkey prepared is based on the average dining facility head count of 206,303 soldiers.

Along with the roast turkey, 20,630 pounds of shrimp for shrimp cocktail; 45,263 pounds of cranberries for cranberry sauce; and 35,071 pumpkin and an equal number of mincemeat pies will be baked for the annual banquet. In addition, fruit cake (20,630 pounds); mixed and shelled nuts (12,378 pounds); and assorted candy (16,504 pounds) will also be served.

To round out the holiday feast, diners may select giblet gravy, savory bread dressing, mashed potatoes, glazed sweet potatoes, buttered brussels sprouts, buttered carrots, spring salad, celery seed dressing, cottage cheese salad, butterflake rolls, butter, assorted fresh fruit, milk, tea, coffee and soft drinks.

At some installations the holiday menu may include rock cornish hen, roast duck, baked ham, steamship round of beef, grilled steak, tomato juice cocktail or cranberry and orange juice cocktail and apple and sweet potato pies, based on availability and diner's perference.

Last year, 251,962 soldiers, their families and guests ate the Army's most popular meal in its dining facilities. Although turkey with all the trimmings is served at Christmas, many people spend the holiday with family and friends and do not eat in the dining facility. In 1983, 117,542 persons ate the Army's Christmas meal.

Holiday meals are planned about two years in advance and the menu is distributed to food service personnel five to six months prior to the holiday so they can order the menu items. (TSA)

He added that so many of these abusive parents are "relieved the secret is out and really want to change and do a better job with the children."

He also emphatically stated the abusive parent must come to the realization that "what matters is what you do, not what you feel." He may have certain sexual feelings, but "he is 100 percent responsible for his actions."

Alderson is in private practice in Atlanta and has worked extensively with families in the area of sexual abuse and emotional neglect of children. He has had experience in dealing with these problems in various military communities and has just completed a four-month contract with the Air Force.

Upcoming operation will examine Army's retiree recall procedures

Fort Monroe, Va. — The Department of the Army, through the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), will conduct the first exercise of its retiree recall and reassignment program at Fort Jackson, S.C., Oct. 15-23.

This exercise will be the first time the Army evaluates the procedures for a retiree recall at the installation level.

The exercise, named "Grey Thunder," will examine procedures to notify, assign, use and support recalled retirees. Its results will help formulate Army policy for recalling retirees, should they ever be needed during a national emergency.

The test will involve 100 retiree volunteers from the area surrounding Fort Jackson. Two groups of 50 volunteer retirees will report to Fort Jackson for three days.

When they arrive at the post, the retirees will receive a "Grey Thunder" orientation, administrative inprocessing, medical evaluation and unit assignment orientation.

The Army developed its first retiree recall program to offset a potential shortfall in pre-trained individual manpower that could occur during mobilization for a national emergency. It implemented this program in 1981 with the first pre-assignment, or "hip pocket," orders issued in November of that year.

This routine exercise is unrelated to current world events. It is designed to test and evaluate the Army's capability to respond to a possible emergency. (TNS)

Exchange program aids Army, Air Force

Washington — An interservice exchange of Army and Air Force officers under a recent memorandum of understanding on joint force development began Sept. 4, with the transfer of 14 Pentagon staff officers from the services' operations and plans directorates.

Officials say the headquarters-level exchange reinforces the commitment made between the services this past June.

The exchange officers, seven from each service, will serve one-year terms in their "sister service's" staff offices.

Air Force officers serving on the Army staff will work in the directorates of Force Development; Strategy, Plans, and Policy; Operations; Readiness and Mobilization; and Training.

Army officers serving on the Air Force staff will work in the directorates on Plans, Operations, Electronic Combat and Space.

The exchange will benefit the two services, according to the memorandum, because "ensuring the attainment of our joint objectives will require a free exchange of ideas and concepts between the respective service staffs."

The memorandum of understanding will remain in effect for four years, with a possible extension.

After a review at the close of the program's first year, the services will explore the benefits of expanding the program to include other directorates.

The historic agreement establishes the first long-term agreement to exchange officers between the service staffs since the Army Air Corps became the U.S. Air Force on Sept. 18, 1947.

ON TARGET — Fire and smoke remain behind as a Dragon missile streaks down range.

Live fire

Top gunners blast away at Red Cloud Range

By Willie Means
197th Public Affairs Office

TOW/Dragon gunners of 3rd Battalion (Mechanized), 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), terminated their quarterly training with a live fire Sept. 27 at Red Cloud Range.

"This is really great for the soldiers," stated SSgt. Daniel Hall Jr., anti-tank platoon sergeant. "Live fires give soldiers a first hand look at what their weapon systems are capable of doing."

Soldiers from the battalion each invited two family members, who came out to see what their husbands' jobs require of them. They received a briefing and were talked through static displays of both weapon systems.

"Both weapon systems are designed to kill tanks and destroy other hard targets," explained 1st Lt. Anthony P. Harris. "One of the primary purposes of this live fire is to let soldiers see they are capable of first round hits."

Firing a total of seven dragons and three TOWs, the TOW gunners snatched the spotlight for the day. The first team to fire, and firing from the 901 Improved TOW Vehicle (ITV), Pvt. 1 Bus Kirk, from Combat Support Company, got a direct hit at 2,700 meters.

"The noise isn't something to brag about, but the firepower is amazing," commented Kirk.

While TOW gunners were having a field day getting direct hits, Dragon gunners were having problems keeping the crosshairs on the targets.

"You need to fire the Dragon to understand what the gunners are experiencing," said 1st Lt. Jeffrey S. Boggan, assistant range officer for the live fire. "Those gunners have 64 pounds on their shoulders before that missile leaves the tube. However, after the launch, they only have four pounds on their shoulders; that's a surprise in itself."

The day wasn't a total loss for the Dragon gunners, however, PFC Marty Ross, Bravo Company, got a cheer from fellow soldiers and the two spectators when he got a direct hit.

"The Dragon and Ross make a lethal team," commented Harrison. "At NTC he received a high kill rate with the Dragon."

The exercise was terminated with a round of applause from the soldiers and spectators.

"This was really exciting," stated Barbara Elmore, family member. "My husband has participated in three live fires and I've been to all three. It makes me appreciate what he does. Outside people don't know what the military is about. I just wish my boys could have seen it."

For the brand new Infantry trainee, becoming "Army" may be confusing and difficult. But with the help of the instructors of the General Subjects Committee and the five days of classes there, trainees learn what the Army is all about.

At the end of basic training, the soldiers are tested on 22 tasks at AO Eagle. Seventeen of those critical tasks are the subjects of instruction taught by the General Subjects Committee, Infantry Training Group.

"We teach the basics every soldier must know," said SFC (P) Glenn Harris, chief instructor. "Everyone in the Army must know these subjects, and once the trainees leave here, the drills will continue to quiz them in these areas, so they will be thoroughly familiar with them."

The committee is divided into five subcommittees: Land Navigation; Nuclear, Biological and Chemical; First Aid; Tactical Communications and Threat. The committee has a total of 46 instructors who provide this critical classroom and hands-on intruction.

Depending on their training schedules, trainees rotate through the five subcommittees, which are taught in no special order.

In the First Aid course, trainees are taught basic lifesaving techniques. "If you are out in a combat situation and your buddy is wounded, you want to do everything you can to save him, and that is what we teach them," said SFC Richard Osborn, principal instructor of the First Aid Subcommittee.

The trainees are taught the two vital processes of life: respiration and blood circulation and how to give emergency treatment to an injured soldier in a combat situation.

"We want them to be able to stop bleeding, restore respiration and treat for shock; to keep the wounded man alive until he can be medevaced to the rear," explained SSgt. Mark Williams, instructor with the First Aid Subcommittee.

The instruction includes training in applying tourniquets and treating the bleeding victim for shock; splinting broken limbs; first aid for open chest wounds, and manual carries, Williams said.

Trainees undergo two days of NBC training, during which they learn how to put on their protective masks and how to respond to nuclear, biological and chemical attacks.

What we try to instill in these young soldiers' minds is that nuclear, biological and chemical war is here and they have to know how to survive an attack and continue to perform their mission," said Sgt. Roger Denny, NBC intructor.

The soldiers are taught how to fit, store and maintain an M17 series protective mask and gain confidence in their individual protective masks by using them during gas attacks and a gas chamber exercise.

"What we try to instill in these young soldiers' minds is that nuclear, biological and chemical war is here and they have to know how to survive."

Air ambulance crews always ready for emergency

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The pilots sit reading, drinking coffee and talking. Their helicopter has been checked and is ready to fly at a moments notice. Occasionally, one pilot may check out the different area maps or the weather coming over from the weather squadron. Then it happens—the siren sounds signalling an emergency and everyone scrambles to their waiting helicopter.

The crews of the 498th Medical Co. (Air Ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion, spend a lot of their time waiting, but the unit was busy enough to have flown more than 2,928 hours on missions for the last year.

"We have 13 aircraft here but only two are on duty daily to fly medevacs, inter-hospital transfers and MAST missions," Capt. John Becker of flight operations explained. These two aircrafts, called First-up and Second-up, are on the flight line ready to go anytime.

"The First-up aircraft has a response time of five minutes until take-off from the time the mission is received. The Second-up aircraft assumes the responsibility of the First-up until the First-up returns. It is 24-hour duty and the crew sleeps here at night," Becker said.

He said the number of post missions varies depending on the time of year. "We flew eight post support missions in January, but flew 52 in July. A lot of our missions are inter-hospital transfers from Martin Army Community Hospital and MAST missions." MAST stands for medical assistance to safety and traffic. Becker said the bulk of these missions are transporting neo-natal distress patients to Columbus Medical Center.

The company stays busy with other requirements too. They put up static displays and offer aeromedical support for air shows when requested, support Reserves during summer training, support the Ranger camps at Dahlonega, Ga., and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., and participate in mass casualty exercises.

From February to July of this year the company performed medevac support to a joint task force exercise in Honduras. There were three aircraft and four crews involved.

"We do day by day our wartime mission, the evacuation of patients," Becker said. "When a pilot and crew are not on-call or flying, they are either performing additional duties or training. Some of this training is aviation, night-vision goggle flying, rescue by hoist and mountai training."

The 498th came to Fort Be ning in 1971 from Vietnam. Th headquarters, flight operatio service platoon and first and se ond flight platoons are locate here. The third flight platoon i located at Fort Stewart, Ga., a the fourth is located at Fo Jackson, S.C.

VA burial benefits help assist veterans' families in time of need

The Veteran s Administration reminds former servicemen and women that awareness of VA burial benefits can often spare the family of a deceased veteran anxiety and financial hardship following the veteran's death.

Interment in a national cemetery is available to veterans discharged under conditions other than dishonorable. Also eligible under certain guidelines, are a veteran's spouse and minor children.

VA will furnish a headstone or marker to memorialize a veteran or mark the grave of a veteran buried in a national, state, or private cemetery. VA will also provide markers to eligible dependents interred in a national or state veterans' cemetery.

A memorial marker or headstone for veterans whose remains have not been recovered or identified is also provided by the VA. This includes those who were buried at sea, those whose bodies were donated to science, and those who were cremated and the ashes scattered. A memorial section in national cemeteries honors these veterans.

VA also provides, if death is not service-connected, up to $300 toward the burial expenses of eligible veterans and $150 as a plot or interment allowance if the veteran is not buried in a national cemetery or other federal government cemetery.

Burial allowance eligibility is established if the veteran was entitled at the time of death to VA compensation or pension payments or died in a VA medical facility. This eligibility may also be established in cases of certain indigent veterans whose remains are unclaimed.

> "Interment in a national cemetery is available to veterans discharged under conditions other than dishonorable."

The plot allowance is available if the veteran is entitled to the burial allowance, served during a war period, or was discharged or retired from service because of a disability which was incurred or aggravated in the line of duty. If the veteran's death is service connected, VA will pay an amount not to exceed $1,100 in lieu of the burial and plot allowance.

VA will also provide:

- An American flag for use in covering a casket;
- A reimbursement for part of the cost of a headstone or marker bought after the veteran's death and placed on the grave of a veteran. The current amount is $68, the average cost of government headstones purchased by VA; and,
- A memorial certificate, bearing the signature of the President, expressing the nation's recognition of the deceased veteran's service.

Instructor experience proves invaluable to Infantry officer

By Tim Mishkofski
17TRADOC OCPA

Seeking quality instructors for the Infantry School was the purpose of a drive begun by Brig. Gen. K.C. Leuer, then assistant commandant of the Infantry School, when he contacted some of the top students in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, asking them to consider taking an instructor assignment at the school.

One man who accepted the challenge was Capt. John D. Johnson, who came to the school as a defensive tactics for mechanized infantry instructor in 1982 and has no regrets about the experience.

Johnson had already spent several years as a troop commander in Germany before taking the instructor position, and said that this command experience proved invaluable to him as an instructor.

Johnson said he is enthusiastic about the drive to get qualified officers into the schoolhouse.

"We have seen nothing but benefits from it at this end. Out of 15 people in the defense branch of the school when I came here in 1982, nobody had commanded a TOE (table of organization and equipment) unit. Now the ratio is 14 out of 15, which immediately indicates a change," he explained.

Johnson noted that years ago teaching in an Army school was a coveted job. Today, some officers in these instructor slots do not think they are on the same "fast track" as their peers who command TOE units, that there is an "image" problem with such school assignmens. He is quick to point out, however, that he feels the situation is changing and that programs to get qualified commanders to teach in schoolhouses are making large contributions.

"In the peacetime Army every unit needs its claim to fame. Guard units have roundout responsibility. Many Reserve and active units have rapid deployment force missions. Now the concept of the light division is bringing excitement to units like the 7th Infantry Division at Fort Ord," he said.

Johnson said that being a platform instructor at the Infantry School has given him a wide variety of experiences and insights.

"One of the things I have noticed during my time on this job is the change in attitude of the instructors. For a while the instructors had to stand up, never having commanded, and tell former commanders how 'the book' said to do something.

"Nowadays, I feel our role here as been redefined. Now the ust of training seems more towards being able to think about a situation and apply doctrine to the exact place needed," he said.

Recent changes in the officer training process include plans to standardize all branch advanced courses at 20 weeks length, with additional training needs determined by what kind of assignment officers get after they graduate.

Johnson explained that officers entering their basic courses now have been trained under a system of military qualification standards. By the time they get to their advanced courses they are ready to enter the third stage. When they finish their advanced courses, these officers are supposed to be ready to begin the first phase of the Combined Arms and Services Staff School. Johnson stressed that that's a big order, and it makes the advanced course more of a milestone than many of the officers realize.

"Standing up in front of people who are essentially your peers gives you a chance to exert some influence on the future of the Army. If the students see that you clearly know what you are talking about and you are enthusiastic, they respond. I don't mean being theatrical, but rather being confident. Anybody can stand on the platform and spout the doctrine and regulations. Achieving credability is another thing.

"There is no better way to learn Army doctrine and tactics," said Johnson. "When you have to get up on that platform and teach it, you had better know your stuff."

"Ever since I've been here, the entire chain of command has supported the need for command time in the schoolhouse. By putting prior commanders into platform intructor jobs, the school shows the students that it is serious about improving the Army," he said.

A further link between the schoolhouse and the field is the Infantry School's practice of sending instructors to the National Training Center to monitor training there. These trips usually last one or two weeks. Johnson said he is excited about what is happening at the complex at Fort Irwin, Calif.

"The things that are happening there are the same things we lecture about on the platform. The school sending us out there gives us some believability when we're talking about defense.

"Years ago, I understand, the Army put the best officers it had into the role of teachers. Marshall, Bradley and Stilwell all taught. I hope we can be as good as they were," he said.

Basic subjects

Twice during the two days of training the soldiers go through a surprise CS gas attack and learn the importance of being able to put on and check their protective masks within nine seconds.

They are taught how to recognize and react to a chemical or biological attack and decontamination procedures.

"We teach them to stand and fight, not run away from a gas attack," said SFC David Wedlock, senior NBC intructor. The students also learn the proper position to assume in the event of a nuclear attack.

During the one day of instruction in land navigation, students are taught the basics of map reading and land navigation.

"The basic Army doctrine is to shoot, move and communicate," said SFC Robert Guyse, Land Navigation instructor, "and in order to move they have to know how to read a map or they're lost."

Students are taught basic map reading including marginal data, colors, terrain features and how to determine grid coordinates. They learn the five basic map colors and the five types of terrain, and how to use a compass so they can determine a magnetic asmuth.

Grid coordinates are especially important in order to pinpoint locations. "The six digit grid coordinate will put you within 100 meters of a target," explained Guyse. Once the students finish this class, they will know how to use a map and compass to navigate from one point to another on land.

Each soldier must know how to communicate with supporting units during any combat maneuver, so tactical communications training is especially important.

Soldiers learn how to place into operation and operate the TA1 and TA312 field phones and the AN/PRC-77 radio.

Instead of their ABCs, students learn "Alpha, Bravo, Charlies," and correct language to use when sending and receiving radio messages.

During the two-hour Threat class, students are taught how to distinguish between friendly and enemy vehicles, aircraft and equipment. They are given the background of the Soviet soldier, including his training, weapons, equipment and the Soviet combined arms concept.

"What the class is set up to do is make the individual soldier aware of the Soviet Union as a threat, using comparisons of the two types of societies, as well as skits portraying Soviet soldiers," said SFC Edward Hiatt, principal Threat instructor.

"It answers the question 'what am I doing here, is there a threat out there?' that many soldiers have," said Hiatt. "Ninety-nine percent of the adult men in the United States don't even realize what the threat is."

Students are graded throughout these five areas of training on a "go/no-go" basis. "This tells the drills which soldiers need special help in the different areas of instruction," explained Hiatt. "The drills are constantly reinforcing the knowledge we have taught them in the classroom, so when the students have their mid-cycle test and final test at the end of the cycle at AO Eagle, they will be able to perform all 22 tasks required of them.

Once the soldiers graduate from basic training, the Army knows the troops have mastered the basic soldiering skills, thanks to the professional training they receive from the instructors at ITG.

Air traffic controllers keep Fort Benning skies safe

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The approaching aircraft makes radio contact with the tower to ask for landing clearance. The air traffic controller speaks into a voice activated microphone and puts the aircraft into a sequence pattern for landing on one of the three runways.

But even before the tower picks up a visual sighting of the aircraft, downstairs in the Ground Control Approach Section the aircraft has been picked up as a blip on a radar screen and watched as it flies closer to Lawson Army Airfield.

"We pick up radio contact with the pilots and advise them of such things as ground weather conditions, altitude, if they are on the glide path and of other aircraft in the area," Pvt. 2 Mark Lupas explained.

"We usually land around 6,000 aircraft a month," MSgt. Wes Basey, ATC chief, said. "We land and have landed virtually all kinds of aircraft, except a B-52 Bomber. We get a lot of transient aircraft here too, so it's not just military aircraft."

In the tower, three air traffic controllers work at three positions. The first is the lead control. "We call this the 'hot seat,'" Sp5 John Haskell explained. "This person has to determine who lands where and to keep track of which aircraft has been given clearance to which runway...it can get hectic and dangerous." Tapes are kept of what the ATC says to the pilot in case of an accident or death, to determine if the ATC gives the right information.

The next set of instruments include the flight data strips. Whoever sits here must record arrival times, departure times, air traffic control clearances and must verify with the pilot his flight plan. Besides that, they must listen to what the lead control person tells the pilot plus listen to what ground control says, the next set of instruments.

Ground control clears movement of all vehicles on the airfield. "If an alert vehicle or a fuel truck needs to go from point A to point B, they have to be cleared first from here," Haskell said.

Besides verbal contacts with the aircraft, the tower has two light guns mounted on either side of its observation windows in case of a power outage. This allows the ATCs to signal by light an incoming aircraft.

"One of the first things we do in the morning is have our time verified by Atlanta. All airports, pilots, etc., run on Greenwich Mean Time. We are only allowed five to 10 seconds leeway," Haskell said.

An ATC must go through a six-month course then a nine-month training program at their first unit assignment before they are rated. Once they rotate, they must be rated again and go through a shortened training program. "Usually within that nine-month training program the ones who can't take it surface, so the others can handle the pressure pretty good," Haskell said. The ATCs are also on flight status and are prohibited from taking medication unless needed, at which time they are relieved.

Some of the things a new controller must learn are local weather patterns, obstacles in the local area which may interfere with aircraft, traffic patterns, how to control ground vehicles and how to keep aircraft separated in the air and on the ground.

Sitting above the instrument panel is a red 'Crash' phone that is used when an accident occurs. "In the four years I've been here there haven't been any serious accidents. In fact, the ATCs here have won numerous aviation safety awards because of that," Haskell said.

The two sections work in shifts, 7 a.m. until 3 p.m. and from 3 until 11 p.m. "We don't really have the need to stay operational on a 24-hour basis. Most of our night flights are aircraft that flies into Lawson thinking it is Columbus," Haskell said.

Disarming

MSgt. Randy Harris and SSgt. Glen Gage (l to r) disarm a MK 82, 500-pound general purpose bomb, which failed to disengage on an A-10 aircraft during a recent Air Force exercise. The aircraft made an emergency landing at Lawson Army Air Field.

Brown bagging helps curb meal costs

Fort Lee, Va. — These days where a two-person income household is commonplace, brown bagging can be a convenient and economical way to curb rising meal costs.

Nutritious ingredients for your "brown bagger" can be found on the shelves of your Army commissary. After buying your food, commissary officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency remind you of these few common sense precautions that will assure a safe, tasty lunch.

First, cook food thoroughly. If it's meant to be hot, keep it hot. If it's meant to be cool, keep it cool. Bacteria thrive between 45 degrees F and 140 degrees F.

Second, keep utensils and countertops used in preparing lunches clean. Wash them with soap and hot water. The same goes for your hands. If you have cuts or sores, use rubber gloves. Also remember to use tongs or a fork to place meat, poultry or cheese in the sandwich — not your hands as fingers spread bacteria.

Some meat products lend themselves to brown bagging. Canned meat and poultry products, opened and eaten immediately, are a good bet (provided the can is sealed and not bulged or dented). Dry meats or fully cooked products, like bologna and franks, also keep well. Virtually any meat or poultry product can be used if it's cooked and handled properly.

Soups, stews and chili are tasty, especially in cold weather. If these products are boiling hot when poured into a sterile vacuum bottle, you shouldn't have any problems with them. Salmonella, for example, are killed by exposure to 155 degrees F — well below the boiling temperature of 212 degrees F.

Ideally you should put your lunch in the refrigerator — provided you have one. If you don't, use a freezer gel device or clean out a plastic margarine tub, fill it with water and freeze it. Put it in the lunchbag to keep the food cold until you're ready to eat it.

One thing to remember — letting your lunch sit in a warm place (like on top of a radiator) allows bacteria to grow at will. The longer it sits, the greater the potential for problems.

"First, cook food thoroughly. If it's meant to be hot, keep it hot. If it's meant to be cool, keep it cool."

Using a lunch box instead of a paper bag is a good idea. Lunch boxes, especially insulated ones, hold the cold much better than paper bags. Plus a box is easy to keep clean and sanitary. If you do use the familiar "brown bags," buy them specially for lunches and use them once.

All foodstuff on sale in your commissary is certified safe for consumption by the Army's Veterinary Service. The U.S. Department of Agriculture says to pay close attention to cleanliness in order to have a safe brown bag lunch. (TSA)

The exhibit will also include a rare "blueline" print, which is an unpainted print from the copper plate, as well as the smaller-sized octavo edition prints and Audubon memorabilia.

A wide variety of free educational and entertaining programs are planned at Callaway Gardens in conjunction with the Audubon exhibit, including a one-man character portrayal of Audubon by Bruce Lund, live music, and demonstrations of painting, etching, and museum-quality taxidermy.

The hours of the exhibition are 8 a.m. - 6:30 p.m. daily.

ROTC principal source of Army officers

Army ROTC is the principal source of college-educated officers for the U.S. Army. Each year, approximately 75 percent of the new second lieutenants commissioned are graduates of the colleges and universities offering Army ROTC.

Of the more than 72,000 men and women enrolled in Army ROTC at colleges and universities last fall, 12,000 were receiving financial aid via Army ROTC scholarships. Army ROTC scholarships pay full tuition, lab fees and other academic costs. Cadets who have scholarships also received a monthly tax-free subsistence pay of $100 for up to 10 months every year the scholarship is in effect. An Army ROTC scholarship is worth approximately $5,000 per year at Carson-Newman College in Jefferson City, Tenn.

Highly-qualified high school graduates get almost 1,000 of the Army scholarships each year in the form of four-year scholarships. Almost all of the remaining scholarships go to students already in college as two or three-year scholarships. College students need not be enrolled in Army ROTC to apply since a number of scholarships are earmarked for students who have not been taking part in Army ROTC.

Scholarship applicants must be U.S. citizens, of good moral character and less than 25 years old on June 30 of the year in which they will be commissioned. Veterans may qualify for an extension to the age requirement. Applicants must meet certain medical qualifications, including height and weight.

Two and three-year scholarship winners have averaged 1,100 on the Scholastic Aptitute Test (SAT) and have grade point averages that range from 2.9 to 3.3 on a 4.0 scale. Thus, to be competitive for a three-year scholarship, a freshman at Carson-Newman must earn a fall semester GPA of 2.9 to 3.3. The scholarship application is submitted in the spring semester, so the freshman's fall semester GPA is important.

High school students who are seniors this fall and interested in applying for an Army ROTC four-year scholarship have a Dec. 1 deadline to get their application in to Army ROTC headquarters at Fort Monroe, Va. Students in area junior or community colleges who are interested in a two-year scholarship should contact Capt. Don Bork, Military Science Dept., Carson-Newman, by writing to: PMS Army ROTC, I Army Street, Jefferson City, Tenn. 37760. High school seniors who want a four-year scholarship application should also write to Capt. Bork. (CNC)

Use your best outdoor manners when hunting on someone else's property

Fort Monroe, Va. — Whether or not you have a place to hunt next year could depend upon how well you mind your outdoor manners this season.

Chances are, you'll hunt on someone else's property. If you behave like a good guest should, the landowner will welcome you back next year. But if you act like a slob, don't be surprised if a big "posted" sign greets you when you return.

The most basic and fundamental act of good outdoor manners is asking permission to hunt, yet it's amazing how many hunters don't observe this simple courtesy. Entering the land of another without permission is trespassing and could subject you to arrest.

With the amount of rural crime there is today, farmers need to know who is on their land, and why. A strange car parked beside the road might belong to a couple of hunters, but it could also be a get-away vehicle for someone lifting a tractor battery or siphoning gas.

The landowner who has to track you down on his property to see what you're up to isn't going to be in the best frame of mind and will probably chase you off. But if you had asked first, he most likely would have let you hunt on his place.

Once you do have permission to hunt on a particular piece of property, be extra careful that you don't abuse the privilege the landowner has granted you. If you drive onto his land, stay on the roads or trails and don't go cutting across plowed or soft ground just to see if your new mud tires really work.

And don't litter. Pick up the wrappers from your lunch, and don't leave spent shells lying around. In short, act like you are in your host's living room, not his back 40. Leave gates the way you found them. In particular, don't carelessly leave a gate unlatched. The fellow who has spent a couple of hours rounding up his cattle isn't going to be exactly overjoyed the next time he sees the person who let the critters escape.

And speaking of gates, don't park your vehicle in front of one and then head off for a day's hunting. The reason there's a gate in that fence is so someone can get through, and that someone is generally the landowner with a load of feed for his stock or something equally pressing. If he has to sit there and wait for you to get back to your car before he can go on with his work, he's not going to spend the time thinking kind thoughts about hunters or about you.

It should go without saying that you'll be careful with firearms and won't endanger lives or property by careless gun handling or shooting. Remember that even a .22 bullet will travel over a mile and will ricochet off rocks or off the surface of water. Think about where the bullet might eventually end up before you pull the trigger.

Finally, don't put your mind in neutral. Just because you're on a holiday and out for a little recreation is no reason not to consider the consequences of your actions, not to think ahead a little. And the one thing you should think about constantly is how much good hunting land has been lost because someone didn't think about what he was doing, or how his actions affect others, or how they reflect upon the sport of hunting.

If you still believe in me, save me.

For nearly a hundred years, the Statue of Liberty has been America's most powerful symbol of freedom and hope. Today the corrosive action of almost a century of weather and pollution has eaten away at the iron framework, etched holes in the copper exterior.

Less than a mile away, on Ellis Island where the ancestors of nearly half of all Americans first stepped onto American soil, the Great Hall of the Immigration Center is a hollow ruin. Rooms are vandalized, walls crumbling in decay.

Inspiring plans have been developed to restore the Statue and to create at Ellis Island a living monument to the ethnic diversity of this country of immigrants. But unless restoration is begun now, these two national treasures could be closed at the very time we celebrate their hundredth anniversaries. The 230 million dollars needed to carry out the work is needed now.

All of the money must come from private donations; the federal government is not raising the funds. The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission appointed by President Reagan is asking every American to contribute. The torch of liberty is everyone's to cherish. Could we hold up our heads as Americans if we allowed the time to come when she can no longer hold up hers?

You can keep the torch of liberty burning bright. Send your tax-deductible contribution to The Lady, Box 1986, N.Y.C. 10018. Or call, toll free, 1-800-USA-LADY.

El Salvadoran soldiers arrive at Fort Benning for training

The first of three groups of 50 students from the El Salvadoran Army arrived at Fort Benning Sunday for a four-week, two phase, Basic Combat Training Cadre Instruction course. The training concept calls for the groups to arrive two weeks apart. Each group is composed of cadets and non-commissioned officers.

The El Salvadorans will be taught in Spanish by instructors on temporary duty from the United States Army School of the Americas during Phase 1. The focus will be on how to prepare and conduct training.

During Phase II, the Central Americans will closely observe operations at the United States Army Infantry Training Center to include at the reception station, at training battalions and companies, and with instructional committees of the Infantry Training Group. Special forces interpreters on temporary duty from Panama will accompany the students for this phase.

The Allied Student Training Detachment will provide the students administrative and logistical support while they are at Fort Benning.

Approximately 500 El Salvadoran troops were trained here in 1982 and 500 more in 1983.

Sick call abuse

The number of patients served at many Troop Medical Clinics around post seems to rise on PT days. Soldiers abusing their right to go to sick call may account for these increased numbers.

Museum celebrates 25th anniversary

Established to reflect Infantry's history

Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum celebrates its 25th anniversary today.

In 1959, Maj. Gen. Paul Freeman formally established the museum to collect, preserve and exhibit artifacts which reflect the history of the Infantry and its services to the nation.

The meager collection of the fledging museum claimed less than 200 artifacts when it first opened its doors to the public.

Today, the museum, whose collection includes 35,000 artifacts, 2,600 firearms, and a quarter of a million photos, books, papers and documents, is housed in the historic former station hospital building which was built in 1923.

More than 30,000 square feet of exhibit space is open to the public. The four story building with an imposing red tile roof has been the permanent home of the museum since 1977. The conversion of the old building into a functional museum was directed by Ed Neal following a nationwide appeal for funds, spearheaded by the late James W. Woodruff, Jr.

The National Infantry Museum, with its logo "Two Centuries of Proud History," has in recent years grown to be more than a collection of things painted Army green. The collection boasts a growing collection of military related paintings, sculpture, and objects of art by Tiffany, Jo Davidson, Felix De Weldon, Wheeler Williams, and William Gilbert Gaul.

Special guided tours for schools and other groups can be arranged by calling 545-2958.

The museum is open Tuesday - Friday from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 12:30 until 4:30 p.m.

More than 2,500 runners participated in this year's Infantry Museum Run Saturday. The run helped raise more than $12,000 for the museum. For more information about the race, see page 18.

Abusing sick call privileges only hurts truly ill

Robert McClain

A soldier wakes up ill Friday morning. She goes to sick call hoping to be treated right away. But when she arrives, she finds 20 soldiers ahead of her in line. Many are wearing PT clothes and she overhears a few of these soldiers bragging about some minor ailment they invented to "get out of running PT." The talk upsets her. She feels these people are taking advantage of their right to go to sick call.

"I've seen people abusing the right to go to sick call many times," commented one solider wishing not to be indentified. "They report to sick call with a hangover or with some minor ailment just to get out of running PT. All they are doing is preventing other really sick soldiers from being treated. I wish there was a way to prevent them from doing this."

Statistically, the number of people reporting to sick call does increase significantly on PT mornings at some troop medical clinics on post and at the aid stations in the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Looking at a random week from the month of September, TMC #1 served 60 patients on Monday (a PT day). The number of patients served dropped to 44 on Tuesday. The number rose to 57 on Wednesday (PT day). It dropped to 37 on Thursday. And it rose again on Friday (PT day) to 58. The medical clinic serves most of the soldiers on main post.

CWO2 Ronald Ellyson is the physician assistant at the aid station for HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade. He says the number of patients his aid station serves nearly doubles on PT days. "We expect a larger number of soldiers on PT days. It's just a fact of life," he said.

But Ellyson emphasizes the numbers of patients served may increase, but the quality of service and the time each patient gets is not affected. "We make sure each patient gets proper care and treatment. Sick call just ends a little later."

The NCOIC of TMC #1 feels some soldiers do abuse their sick call privileges, but agrees the only problem the increased number of patients causes is increased waiting time. "It is our job to furnish quality care to everyone who comes to sick call," commented Sgt. Edward Gibson. "We have to make sure each soldier gets the best treatment we can provide. Even if a soldier is not sick, we have to go through all the steps to ensure he isn't ill."

"Sure some soldiers do abuse the system," added Lt. Col. E.F. Cudnohufsky, "but not everyone is out to abuse it." Cudnohufsky is the officer in charge of all troop medical clinics.

Cudnohufsky believes soldiers shouldn't hestitate to go to sick call if they are feeling ill. "We don't have the right to turn away any soldier," he said. "We must treat everyone who comes through the door. I believe the medical clinics on post give the highest quality care.

"I admit there are more patients on PT days. Despite the increased number of patients, we still give each soldier the time needed on their problem. What it does mean, though, that soldiers who aren't identified at the door as extremely ill and in need of immediate treatment are forced to wait longer to be treated."

Sampling clinic records and speaking to clinic officials, the average waiting time on a non-PT day can range from 15 to 20 minutes while on PT days, the waiting time at some clinics or aid stations can average from 40 minutes to nearly 2 hours.

The subject of abusing sick call privilges is a complicated one to comment on. While the number of soldiers going to sick call does increase on PT days, various clinic officials comment it would be wrong to say most of the extra people are abusing the system. The majority of soldiers do have legitimate reasons to be there. But still the increased number of patients does increase the waiting time at the clinics. Officials can say though there are a few soldiers who do indeed abuse the system.

Many of the habitual abusers are identified by clinic workers and dealt with on a one-to-one basis. But others who may abuse their privilege only occasionally aren't so easily recognized. Officials agree there is little that can be done about these abusers.

Everyone has the right to go to sick call and if soldiers are really ill they should not hestitate to go. But there are indeed people who occasionally abuse these rights, many times just to get out of PT. Maybe if these soldiers thought twice before choosing to go to sick call, the clinics could give the same fine quality service without the long wait.

Survey will help us serve you

The Fort Benning Public Affairs Office invites you to participate in a readership survey to determine how the Bayonet can be improved to make it a better newspaper. The Bayonet exists solely to inform and entertain its Fort Benning audience, and the newspaper staff is sincerely motivated to provide you with a professional product that fulfills those needs.

The survey will be conducted over a three week period beginning November 2. The issue published that day will contain a copy of the survey which you are encouraged to clip out, complete and mail or deliver to the address/location indicated.

In addition to publication in The Bayonet, surveys will be distributed to post agencies, troop units and randomly selected family quarters. Shoppers at the Main Exchange, commissary and Mini-Mall may also be asked to fill out surveys by members of the Bayonet staff in an effort to ensure a fair representation of the post population; military, civilians and dependents. (Please fill out one survey only so your responses are not repeated when the results are compiled.)

Your views are needed to make our community's paper the best it can be. Thanks in advance for your interest and cooperation. Results of the survey will be published in a future edition of the Bayonet. (USAIC PAO)

Educating children of military families is squarely a federal responsibility

Since 1950, the Federal Impact Aid Program has provided financial assistance to school districts which educate the children of federal civilian employees, military personnel and others who live on government-owned enclaves which do not contribute to the community tax base. This aid has been immensely important to local school districts. However, recent changes to the program resulting in inadequate funding have strained relations between Army communities and adjoining school district across the country.

Between 1980 and 1983, these actions reduced the program's annual authorizations by about 35 percent — from $707 million to $455 million. Faced with serious losses in planned revenue, many school districts have been forced to drastically increase local taxes, or else propose economies which could degrade the quality of education for all children.

Although the downward trend was slightly reversed in the 1984 budget which authorized $565 million each year through 1989, affected school districts are experiencing unreimbursed costs of over $2,000 per student. In the Omnibus Defense Authorization Act, 45 Senators have sponsored an amendment which increases the program to $700 million each year. Even with this increase the program would remain below its 1980 funding level, particularly when the effects of inflation are considered. While the amendment does not restore revenues already lost by thousands of school districts, it does help insure that federally impacted districts in the future will be more fairly compensated for the cost of educating children of our military families.

"In the long run everyone suffers — the military, the civilian communities and all their children."

The federal government has an obligation to reimburse school districts for these costs. Without adequate funding there are a host of school districts throughout the country that do not have sufficient revenue to cover the additional costs of educating federally-connected children. In the long run everyone suffers — the military, the civilian communities and all their children. Approval of the Senate amendment's higher level will be an essential investment in our nation's future. (AUSA)

We can learn much from Yorktown victory

By Bill Highlander
Special to the Bayonet

Two hundred and three years ago in the village of Yorktown on the York River in Virginia on Oct. 19, Cornwallis' surrender to George Washington broke the spine of Britain's effort to maintain control over the American colonies. Sporadic fighting continued for nearly two years before a treaty was signed, but Yorktown was the decisive battle that has represented for Americans ever since the spirit of victory through perserverence, dedication and ingenuity.

By commemorating this victory, the United States Army reaffirms its commitment to the principles for which the soldiers and citizenry fought so gallantly and which the Army is still bound to protect and preserve. History recounts the sacrifices of soldiers, often ill-equipped, ill-trained and ill-paid, who withstood bitter winters, long marches and countless hardships before winning. The stories of leadership and heroics of individual soldiers continue to inspire through examples of Americans putting fortitude above comfort and honor above ambition.

The commemoration of the victory at Yorktown should not be thought of as an event important only to Virginians or the Original States, for Yorktown is a symbol of the entire United States and to the world wherever ideals of freedom are maintained or sought.

We should not overlook the parallels in problems facing that original Army and the Army of today. It would be folly to focus only on the victory and rely on the heroics of individuals in future conflicts. Indeed, Washington alluded to divine providence as a critical factor at Yorktown. Surely Clinton's failure to reinforce a successful deception allowing the massing of troops, and the fortunate availability of a French fleet created a situation for American victory. Planning, intelligence, and seizing opportunity through personal leadership are as important today as they were more than 200 years ago.

Allied support was paramount then and remains so today. Even though the United States is a superpower, much of our commitment to freedom would be ineffectual without host-country support and reciprocal defense treaties. Just as French monetary and military support was crucial to victory at Yorktown, the United States and its allies must forge strong bonds against potential adversaries within the military itself. The necessity for cooperation in combined and joint operations remains key to winning on the modern battlefield.

The problems of raising and training an effective Army then are not unlike today's hurdles. Washington spent countless hours appealing to the Congress for more soldiers, more equipment, more supplies and more money to support the Army. Not everyone flocked to the call of the bugle and those who did expected a war of short duration and adequate recompense for service. The ideals of the cause did not prevent threats of mutiny and desertion because of wartime conditions and low or no pay. Generous bonuses did not encourage the needed number of volunteers, and the need for a draft to fill the ranks for the duration of the con-

Army pamphlet packs much information on suggestion program

By Larry W. Bryant
Army News Service

"Whoever designed this handy little leaflet about the Army Suggestion Program ought to get an award himself."

That was my response when I recently came across the November 1982 edition of Army Pamphlet 672-4. It bears the title "Suggest: Army Needs Your Ideas Now." The 8-by-12 inch sheet folds into several pages of no-nonsense explanations plus simple instructions on how to help make the Suggestion Award Program thrive.

It's a program fact sheet and solicitation sheet all rolled into one. The solicitation is nothing more than some blank space on which the reader, right then and there, can write out the bare bones of the suggestion that's on the tip-of-the-tongue.

If you have yet to get a copy of the leaflet, place an order with your local publications-distribution clerk, or visit the civilian personnel office — where you'll probably find an ample supply.

A few months ago all soldiers were sent an abbreviated version of the leaflet as part of the mail-out of their Leave-and-Earnings Statements from the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center.

Once you see how the leaflet makes it easy for you to join the community of suggestion-minded folk, you'll soon become a partner in the program.

A footnote. If you think some areas might elude the attention of your suggestions, consider this bit of irony: at the Pentagon, there's a group of independently submitted suggestions on the same topic now in the evaluation process — they all recommend that the Army's suggestion-submission form (DA Form 1045) be revised.

Retired soldier's ballad sings in praise of voting

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Many people in the world of music make a living writing songs, but probably none of their works have the same message as a song written by Lonnie Jackson.

Jackson, a retired platoon sergeant with 23 years of service, wrote a song entitled "Get It Together and Vote", a ballad encouraging area residents to register and vote.

Jackson first got the idea in December. "I wanted to find a way to reach the people and music was one way to do that."

He then put his idea into action in January by writing the lyrics and music to his "musical message". With the help of Columbus school teacher Lisa Dore and her brother, Dwight Debro, the song was recorded.

"I believe that by combining forces we can do just about anything", said Jackson, "or so our Constitution states."

The attention given to Jackson's song has been incredible. The song has been aired on the "Today" show, and even such notable bands as One Way and the SOS Band are praising Jackson's words by singing his song on their tours throughout the country.

Copies of the song have been sent to over 80 local churches. Various nightclubs also support Jackson's cause by having their entertainers play the song during their performances.

"Get It Together And Vote" has also been adopted as the official theme song of the United Columbus Voter Registration Drive, an organization consisting of several local civic groups. Ms. Dore recently sang the song at a registration rally in Columbus.

"The song is effective because it reaches into the church's sanctuaries and in public places," the 52 year-old Jackson stated. "It brings together the rich, poor, young and old — regardless of color or race".

Jackson is presently involved in a group called the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus (CCSC), a community group involved in a highly successful tutoring program.

20 former grads inducted into OCS Hall of Fame

Inductees honored for past achievements

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Twenty distinguished past graduates of OCS were inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame at a ceremony conducted Oct. 12 at Wigle Hall, the Officer Candidate School's Hall of Fame.

Major General John W. Foss, Fort Benning commander, presented the awards, which formally inducted the 20 honorees into the Hall of Fame.

In remarks to the distinguished guests, Foss said, in part, that "Over 140,000 OCS graduates have made an incalculable contribution to both the Army and this nation. It is therefore proper that we provide a means to recognize the achievements of those officers here in Wigle Hall."

Foss further stated that "Acknowledgement of the accomplishments of these officers is critical to producing a role model for other OCS candidates to follow. Their accomplishments have directly influenced the total Army and we gratefully acknowledge their professionalism. We owe them our gratitude for a job well done."

The idea for an OCS Hall of Fame occurred in the summer of 1957 when proposals were put forth to create a memorial to distinguished Officer Candidate School graduates, as no sort of official memorial existed at the time. Final authority for a "hall of fame" memorial was established on Jan. 16, 1958 with General Order number 5 from Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center. This memorial was dedicated to OCS graduate 2nd Lt. Thomas W. Wigle, who was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor for gallant personal actions at Monte Casino, Italy in 1944.

For an officer to be inducted into the Hall of Fame certain criteria must be met. First, the inductee must be a graduate of the Officer Candidate School. Then, the officer must have either attained the rank of colonel or above while on active duty; be a recipient of the Medal of Honor; be an elected or appointed official of prominence in federal or state government; or have been recognized and recommended by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.

Of the 20 officers honored, 18 were inducted as a result of attaining the rank of colonel or above (with one major general) one was inducted as a Medal of Honor winner; and one was inducted as a distinguished civilian.

DIO's supply division changes pickup system for SPIRITed savings

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Directorate of Industrial Operations' Supply Division added $10,244 to post SPIRIT savings by more efficiently organizing its mail and message pickup system.

"We had work at supply that needed to be done by one of our messengers, but he was so busy making mail and message runs that he couldn't do all of his other work," said Betty Howell, a systems analyst at DIO supply division.

Two messengers were assigned to make mail and message pickups at various locations on main post and outlying areas. A total of 6 round trips with 27 stops were made daily.

"We just took a long hard look at ourselves and found that we could do the message runs more efficiently," said Ms. Howell.

Trips were consolidated and rearranged to allow one messenger to make all trips and stops. A total of 5 round trips with 23 stops is the new system that was set up. Consolidating the trips allows for one messenger to make all the message runs, freeing up the other messenger to perform his other duties.

Not only did it save money, but both messengers are now happier doing their jobs, explained Ms. Howell.

"We looked at the work and redistributed it between the two men," she continued. "A lot of times a concept looks great on paper, but doesn't work out in reality. But this change has really worked out beautifully."

Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator, said, "This is a perfect example of how analyzing our mission and our resouces can result in finding a more efficient alternative."

Tank gunnery qualification highlights training

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

Tank gunnery qualification is the highlight of the year for many of the soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade.

However, the unit's proficiency is greatly challenged when the average soldier has an eight to nine month station rotation.

"Tank gunnery is set up in tables that become progressively more difficult the higher they go," said SFC Raiford R. Hardy, a platoon sergeant/leader from Bravo company, first platoon. "With so many people rotating in and out, we have to go through the tables for the training it provides the newer arrivals."

Qualifying at tank gunnery is an annual event in which the tank crews are evaluated on their ability to hit single and multiple targets using precision computers and lasers, and the degraded back-up systems, within a set time frame. A minimum of three of the targets are required to be fired upon under simulated NBC conditions by the crew.

The 2-69th's gunnery started the first week of September and is scheduled to end Oct. 18.

Cross training plays a major role in preparation for the gunnery. All crewmembers in the battalion must be cross trained to perform any job within the tank; regardless of that job's duty position.

"It takes four soldiers to fill a tank: the driver; the loader; the gunner; and the tank commander. We're so short of crew members that we have to cross train just to keep the crews filled," explained Hardy.

The table system of tank gunnery enables a commander to recognize his unit's strong and weak points, and attempt to correct them prior to the actual qualification. The tables (table eight is the actual qualification) are designed so the first table consists of the extreme bases and by the time the unit has progressed to table seven, the crews should be familiar enough with each other and what is expected of them to be able to pass the qualification.

Rapid turn-over in personnel makes it extremely challenging and difficult to adequately train every individual for the annual gunnery. However, the soldiers of Bravo company consider themselves better prepared than other units to face this obstacle.

"Our good NCO and officer leadership is the envy of the other companies. This makes for a better relationship between all the soldiers in the company. It also lets us stand out from the rest of the companies in the battalion," Hardy remarked.

Showing their proficiency at tank gunnery is one way of showing the proficiency of their leadership. It also plays a highly important role in the battalion, and in their being combat ready.

"The next war will be fought by tanks, with Infantry support," explained Hardy. "Since tanks will be our main line of defense, we have to hone up the crews so they'll be able to accept the challenge. Our unit lives and dies by how well we can shoot the tanks."

"One of the reasons we performed so well," said Bravo company commander, Capt. Gregory I. Story, "is that we train our people to use the tanks when they're not fully operational. The tanks have a degraded system which is basically a back-up when something doesn't work.

"Tank gunnery is probably the most fun for a tanker. Our battalion has always shot for the high standards of the Army, and everybody waits all year to do it," explained Story.

Mortar platoon gets evaluation after exercise

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from 3rd Battalion (Mechanized), 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade's 4.2 mortar platoon shifted anxiously. It had been a demanding course; including, both day and night exercises.

The battalion's S-3 staff was also present. Everyone was waiting for 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery to start the after actions review on 3-7th's 4.2 mortar platoon external evaluation.

During the early part of October, the 197th Infantry Brigade's (Mechanized) (Separate), "Rock Support" Battalion conducted an external evaluation of the brigade's 4.2 mortar platoon.

"The purpose of this," said 1st Lt. James V. Towey, 2-10th's fire direction officer and chief controller of the evaluation, "is the brigade felt we could give a more indepth evaluation and it would create a better working relationship between the artillery and the Infantry's mortar platoons."

"The scenario layed out for the platoon took approximately 30 hours to complete. The platoon had to make five moves and occupy positions in a simulated combat environment. Then the platoon members had to prove their ability to provide indirect fire support to the task force," explained Towey.

During the course of the exercise, the platoon had to occupy an unprepared position; do a hasty displacement, react to incoming fire; make a move by echelon (two mortars moved forward while the other two remained in place providing fire support) and shoot an emergency fire mission, called a "hip shoot."

Battle of Yorktown ensured nation's freedom

"In October 1781 our Army was neither fully manned nor equipped. But strong, positive leaders and determined, courageous soldiers won final victory at Yorktown ensuring freedom for the nation."
The Honorable John O. Marsh Jr.,
Secretary of the Army

WASHINGTON — Yorktown, a small tobacco port on the York river in Virginia, was the scene for what has become known as the "final act" of the American Revolution.

The stage was set in May of 1781 when British General Cornwallis moved his Army into Virginia from the Carolinas where they had left a path of destruction.

Although under the constant watch of a Force of Continentals (America's Regular Army), Cornwallis' Army of seasoned veterans posed too great a force in numbers to meet head on. Aside from minor skirmishes with the Americans, his force vented their hostilities in Virginia without major interruption.

Upon receiving orders from his superiors to establish a base on the coast of Virginia, Cornwallis and his Army proceeded through the Tidewater region in search of a suitable site.

He decided on Yorktown because of the deep-water York River and easy access to the Chesapeake Bay. He secured this site along with Gloucester Point on the opposite bank.

While Cornwallis' Army was fortifying itself at Yorktown and Gloucester, General George Washington was in New York discussing strategies with the Commander of the French Allied Land Forces, Lt. Gen. Comie De Rochambeau.

The two generals were discussing a possible attack against the British occupation in New York when word was received that the French Admiral De Grasse and his fleet would be in the Chesapeake Bay in late August.

For the first time in many months, a victory against the British looked possible. Washington and his subordinate, Rochambeau, quickly planned to move their combined America-French Army to Yorktown.

With movements designed to make the British think they were preparing to attack New York, the American and French troops began making their way down the continent toward Virginia. A sufficient American force was left in New York to deceive the British.

When the leading columns of the American-French Army reached Head of Elk (Elkton, Md.), there were not enough vessels to ferry all the troops. Some of the troops were forced to continue on foot to Baltimore and Annapolis, where they obtained transport. Boatload by boatload, they worked their way down the Chesapeake Bay and up the James River to join forces with the troops in Virginia at Williamsburg.

Admiral De Grasse and the French Fleet arrived in the Chesapeake Bay on schedule, but left for the ocean to confront the British Fleet sent from New York when Washington's plans

Colonel Alexander Hamilton's light infantry swarms over the British fortification. The works shown are of two kinds — pickets, which are upright poles set like a stockade and fraises set hortizontally in the sloping outer wall. Both are sharpened at the ends to create difficulty for attackers. Some of the Americans hack away at pickets while others clamber over the breastworks in hand-to-hand assault.

Soldiers should reflect on victory

October 19th is a very significant day in the history of the Army and the nation. On October 19th, 1781 at Yorktown, General Washington's small army secured a victory that in essence was a bridge between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

The Army needs to be reminded of that victory. General Wickham and I ask that every year on October 19th the Army reflect on the courage and suffering of the Continental Army. Their victory at Yorktown ensured the birth of a great nation we proudly serve today.

Freedom is not won or held easily. We should never forget that it was the soldiers of the Continental Army who forged the Spirit of Victory that is our heritage.

Soldiers made many sacrifices at ensure victory at Yorktown

By Bill Highlander
Special to the Bayonet

Washington — Victory at Yorktown — It was in that small village on the York River in Virginia on Oct. 19, 1781, that Cornwallis' surrender to Gen. George Washington broke the spine of Britain's effort to maintain control over the American colonies.

Sporadic fighting continued for nearly two years before a treaty was signed, but Yorktown was the decisive battle which has represented for Americans ever since, the spirit of victory through perseverance, dedication and ingenuity.

During the nation's bicentennial, the Army's theme, "The Army at Yorktown: Spirit of Victory," reaffirmed our commitment to the principles for which the soldiers and citizens fought so gallantly and which the Army is still bound to protect and preserve.

History recounts the sacrifices of those soldiers, often ill-equipped, ill-trained and ill-paid, who withstood bitter winters, long marches and countless hardships before winning. The stories of leadership and heroics of individual soldiers continue to inspire through examples of Americans putting fortitude above comfort and honor above ambition.

The anniversary of the surrender at Yorktown should not be thought of as an event important only to Virginians or the original states. Yorktown is a symbol to the entire United States and to the world wherever ideals of freedom are maintained or sought. Victory at Yorktown — the battle and the surrender ceremony — is an important phase of our history — examples of sacrifice and dedication that remind soldiers of their sense of responsibility and obligation that they bear even now.

At the same time, we should not overlook the parallels in problems facing that original Army and the Army of today. It would be folly to focus only on the victory and rely on the heroics of individuals in future conflicts. Gen. Washington alluded to "divine providence" as a critical factor at Yorktown. Surely Clinton's failure to reinforce, a flict became obvious. A system for integrating the militia into the Regular Army was sorely needed. Baron Von Steuben earned his historic laurels by bringing discipline to the Army and insisting on standardization in training.

Yorktown lesson

The modern Army faces similar struggles in manning a force capable of meeting defense commitments, modernizing and equipping the units to a competitive edge, and training to rigorous, challenging stamndards. Dedication, patriotism and pride are still prized by soldiers, and examples of professionalism can be readily found in units wherever soldiers live and work. But even those ideals can be frustrated when soldiers feel that their service is unappreciated by military and civilian leaders and that this is evidenced by low pay, inadequate quality of life, and fewer opportunities for realistic, demanding training.

The ideals of freedom, fought for and won through sacrifice and dedication in our first war must be protected. Vigilance through readiness is imperative. A strong Army, ably led, well-trained, well equipped and imbued with the spirit of Yorktown, is needed more today than ever before. We cannot count on "divine providence" in future conflicts. We will not have the time to mobilize the Army and the nation as was done in World War II. We should not send inadequately prepared soldiers into battle as was done in Korea. We must be fully supported by the government and the American people during commitment of troops to the battlefield.

We will learn much by reflecting on the victory at Yorktown and drawing on the examples that inspire leaders and soldiers to overcome adversity and by examining the problems that could recur to threaten the strength of the Army now.

Squad exercise tests 197th unit's battle proficiency

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The track was sitting quietly under cover. Not a sound was made that would give the position away.

Suddenly, the battle squad mounted in the M113 received orders to prepare an anti-armor ambush to secure the flanks of an attacking unit.

Although the exercise was combat simulated, Charlie Company's Team Cougars, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), considered it the real thing when they went into action during their Squad Profiency Battle Drills.

For two-and-a-half days during the second week of October, Charlie's Team Cougars worked in a simulated combat environment in sectors B1-B6 in the Kelley Hill area. MILES equipment was used to determine who was killed and who survived. Hand grenade and artillery simulators, .50-caliber and M60 machinegun fire, smoke and CS gas were all used to help authenticate the exercise.

"In the squad battle drills, there were five major areas the squads were found to be weak in, so we concentrated on those areas," explained Sgt. Duane D. Richardson, training NCO.

"One of the drills is attack a bunker, where the squad dismounts and, using individual movement techniques, clears a bunker with assault and fire support elements, then extracts the enemy from the bunker.

"The other areas," informed Richardson, "are anti-armor ambush (where a crew dismounts, selects an ambush site, sets mines and establishes a kill zone with VIPERs, LAWs and DRAGONs); breach an obstacle, (clear any choke points, mine fields or find passes around obstacles); establish a defense (set up sectors of fire); and operate in NBC contaminated areas (going through MOPP levels 1-4, decontaminating equipment and personnel)."

The squads moved as separate elements using terrain driving procedures and map reading abilities. Judged on their use of time, best route and use of concealment, the squads were evaluated for their strengths and weaknesses.

"What's unique about this exercise," noted Richardson, "is the squad leader is on his own; making his own decisions after receiving the basic information that he and his squad must act on."

"The major goal of this exercise is to win at NTC (National Training Center) next year," emphasized Richardson.

1-29th helps give Bradley instruction during course

By Willie Means
197th Public Affairs Office

The "Forever Forward" Brigade's 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, put the finishing touches on the recently concluded Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle (BIFV) commander's course training at Fort Benning.

During the final phase of the six-week course taught by the Combined Arms and Tactics Department and 1-29 Infantry, the "Pioneers" provided driver and vehicle support so students attending the course would obtain actual hands-on training on the M2 BIFV.

"The majority of the course is technicial instruction taught by the Weapons, Gunnery and Maintenance Department (WGMD)," explained SFC Royal K. Watkins, senior instructor and team chief in the basic small unit tactics branch. "Classroom instruction provides an abundance of information but you need to physically get your hands on the vehicle and work with it to fully understand it. 1-29 has been very helpful in that department."

During the course of the training, students ranging from grades E5 to 03 were taught the duties of assistant squad leader, squad leader, platoon leader and company commander in a Bradley unit. Instructors for the course made it a point to limit tasks to training that were specifically related to the M2.

"The training has really been great; but we intend to make it better," stated Watkins.

"What we have is a different way to accomplish assigned tasks. The Bradley is a new weapons system. We're here to teach how to get the most from the vehicle. Formerly, the M113 got the Infantry squad to locations around the battlefield. The Bradley has a similiar purpose but it's also a fighting vehicle. Before, the vehicle had the squad. Now, the squad has the vehicle. In essence, the squad now has another weapon to fight with."

According to Watkins, the training is relatively new. In the future, he is hoping to dedicate more time to field instruction and work in an opposing force scenario.

"Anytime students go to the field to establish how they would function offensively and defensively, it's always positive," commented Watkins. "This type of training needs to take place."

Post observes Energy Awareness Week

Fort Benning will observe Army Energy Awareness Week, Oct. 21-29. Numerous actitives are planned on post in the interest of emphasizing the need for energy conservation.

Innovative efforts will be conducted to heighten awareness. There will be a "lights-out" campaign in troop barracks at 10:30 p.m. during this week and one night all lights except emergency lighting will go out at 10 p.m. to remind personnel of what a real energy crisis could cause.

The display room in building 4 will contain a solar exhibit along with a kilowatt-demand meter showing continuous energy usage on post.

During the week, each dining facility, along with installation clubs, are asked to prepare an energy-free menu for the three meals of the day.

According to program officials, the real key to the success of the post program lies in the efforts of each soldier. As in years past, this program is expected to raise the awareness of energy users to the real threat our wastefulness can impose. (USAIC PAO) successful deception allowing the massing of troops, and the fortunate availability of a French fleet created a situation for American victory. Planning, intelligence and seizing opportunity through personal leadership are as important today as they were 200 years ago.

Allied support was paramount then and remains so today. Even though the United States is a superpower, much of our commitment to freedom would be ineffectual without host-country support and reciprocal defense treaties. Just as French monetary and military support was crucial to victory at Yorktown, the United States and its allies must forge strong bonds against potential adversaries. Within the military itself, the necessity for cooperation in combined and joint operations remains key to winning on the modern battlefield.

The problems of raising and training an effective Army then are not unlike today's hurdles. Gen. Washington spent countless hours appealing to the Congress for more soldiers, more equipment, more supplies and more money to support the Army.

- Not everyone flocked to the call of the bugle, and those who did expected a war of short duration and adequate recompense for service.
- The ideals of the cause did not prevent threats of mutiny and desertion because of wartime conditions and low or no pay.
- Generous bonuses did not encourage the needed number of volunteers, and the need for a draft to fill the ranks for the duration of the conflict became obvious.
- A system for integrating the militia into the Regular Army was sorely needed.

Baron Von Steuben earned his historic laurels by bringing discipline to the Army and insisting on standardization in training.

The modern Army faces similar struggles in manning a force capable of meeting defense commitments, modernizing and equipping the units to a competitive edge, and training to rigorous, challenging standards. Dedication, patriotism and pride are still prized by soldiers. Examples of professionalism can be readily found in units wherever soldiers live and work. Nation's freedom were discovered. After five days of maneuvering at sea and a naval battle with the British, De Grasse returned to the bay to find the French Fleet from Newport had arrived. The British followed De Grasse back to the bay but upon sighting the combined French Fleet blocking its entrance, decided to return to New York. Cornwallis was virtually cut off from any support from the sea.

At Williamsburg, the combined Armies were preparing for their march to Yorktown, where Cornwallis was withdrawing his troops from their outer line of redoubts (protective earth barriers).

On arrival at Yorktown, the American and French troops quickly took up positions (some recently evacuated by the British) and immediately began work on the first parallel or line of siege positions. Under heavy British fire, the men completed the first series of trenches. The American bombardment began, and four days later British deserters brought word that many of their troops were ill and crowded together in close and uncomfortable quarters.

The completion of the second parallel was blocked by two key British redoubts. It was decided they would be taken by direct assault.

The reality of surrender

Cornwallis had moved his Army to the coast of Virginia and set up camp at Yorktown. Washington and Rochambeau, having received word of the French Fleet's planned arrival in the Chesapeake Bay, had moved their combined Army to Virginia and began the siege of Yorktown.

After four days of heavy bombardment, a direct assault was planned against two key British redoubts blocking the American advancement.

On the night of Oct. 14, a select group of Continental soldiers, under the command of Alexander Hamilton, made a surprise attack on the first of the two redoubts. With bayonets fixed on unloaded (and thus quiet, safe to bearer) muskets and savage hand-to-hand combat, they secured redoubt no. 10. A simultaneous attack was made on redoubt no. 9 by a French column, and, although heavily defended, it too was secured. Both redoubts became part of the second parallel by morning.

British morale declined rapidly after this attack. In desperation, Cornwallis ordered his Army to cross the York River to Gloucester under the cover of darkness and try to escape overland to the north. But a sudden storm prevented the small boats from ferrying his men.

On the afternoon of Oct. 19, 1781, the British troops marched out of their fortifications. With shouldered arms and colors cased, they marched solenmly to the sound of drums beating a British march.

They proceeded down a dirt road between the American and French armies to the appointed field of surrender and laid down their arms. (ARNEWS)

Suggestion programs help save Army dollars

Washington — Here's an accumulation of some little-known facts useful in explaining and understanding the suggestion award program.

The Army's suggestion program evolved from the one begun by the War Department in 1943. In 1954, Congress passed legislation setting up a government-wide incentive awards program, including the suggestion program. By act of Congress in 1965, servicemembers on active duty became eligible for cash awards for their suggestions, inventions and scientific work adopted under the program. Legislation signed into law in December 1980 extended this military coverage to guardsmen and reservists.

Each fiscal year, all federal agencies have to submit a suggestion-program report to the U.S. Office of Personnel Management. From this statistical and narrative information goes consolidated OPM report to the Congress — required by a 1954 law.

In the category of federal agencies with more than 100,000 employees, the Army currently ranks second in __ submissions, adoptions and benefits under the program.

Four suggestion-related programs that can result in benefits both to the Army and to the participants include:

- Model installation program. Its charter originates from the Secretary of Defense and the Comptroller of the Army. This effort involves selected military installations in autonomous resource-management for a trial period of three years. The program began this past January. Suggestions adopted under that program can also be submitted for recognition under the Army program.
- Project SMART (Supply and Maintenance Assessment and Review Team). A means by which Army logistics officials seek to eliminate unnecessary and complicating directives and procedures — leading to improved unit-level logistics support Army-wide. Again, SMART-generated suggestions can be submitted for separate processing under the Army Suggestion Program.
- DoD Productivity Excellence Awards Program. If the individual or group suggestion results in a first-year tangible savings of $100,000 or more, they're eligible for special recognition from the Defense Secretary. In this category, the 1983 recipients included two suggestion winners from the Army, along with six recipients of a group special act award.
- Presidential Management Improvement Awards. The eighth, and latest, awards given out in 1979. Out of the nine awardees that year, two were Army nominees — both recognized for their cost-saving ideas. The program has not been activated by the current administration.

Litmus test

A "Litmus Test" for suggestions shows an idea isn't a suggestion when it:

- Calls attention to a problem without offering a constructive solution;
- Appears to be merely a complaint;
- Proposes changes in employee services or benefits, housekeeping practices, or personal comfort;
- Or, merely recommends enforcement of existing rules, regulations or other directives (however, suggestions for more effective procedures for enforcement are eligible for consideration).

What are the most often-heard reasons for not participating in the program? Answer: lack of basic knowledge about the program, and about the procedures for submission, processing and evaluation. Some soldiers, for example, assume that since the local civilian personnel office serves as the focal point for the program, military people are excluded from participation or are prohibited from seeking guidance from that office. To dispel that misconception, supervisors and other leaders must explain the program periodically — and must let their subordinates know they can rely on the chain of command for advice and assistance in developing workable ideas.

Suggestions can make office life easier

Washington — There's a way to make money and possibly make life at the office easier. It's through your suggestions.

The government wants your ideas on how to improve productivity and services. And it's willing to pay you up to $25,000 for them.

The amount of the award depends on its value to the government. For example, when the suggestion's benefits can be measured in dollars, like reduction in production time, staff hours or supplies, the award's cash-value is based on the percentage of savings to the government in the first year of the suggestion's use. When benefits can't be measured in dollars, the cash-value is based on the impact the suggestion has on the activity and the extent to which it is applied.

Anyone can submit a suggestion. All you have to do is start thinking creatively. Then, get a suggestion form and put your idea down in writing. List where and how your suggestion could be used and what benefits or savings could result from it. Send all suggestions to the local incentive awards administrator. Don't hesitate — someone else may have the same idea and the form received first is the one considered for an award.

Once submitted, your suggestion gets a control number and receives the appropriate evaluation. You'll be notified upon completition of the evaluation, and told the decision on adoption or rejection.

Editor's note: This is the second part of a three-part series by the provost marshal on seat belts.

"It can't happen to me!" This is an often heard comment. While it may be true for many, a look at Military Police records reveals a different picture. Records indicate that since the first day of the year until Sept. 30, a total of 940 traffic accidents have been reported on Fort Benning. The majority of these were just "fender-benders". However, an alarming number of these resulted in injury, injuries that could have been prevented or lessened if they had taken the time to buckle their seat belts.

The second collision is the one where people received their injuries.

The following shows what happens within the first second of a 30 mph collision and the consequences of the "second collision".

- 0.000 seconds: Car hits barrier, tree, wall, or another vehicle.
- 0.050 seconds: The car starts to crush. The front bumper and chrome frosting of the grillwork collapses. The hood crumples, smashes into the windshield. The grillwork disintegrates. The car's heavy structural members slow down the car acting as a brake and the front end absorbs the force of the collision, but the unrestrained driver continues to move forward. A force 10 times gravity propels the body, increasing the driver's weight to 16,000 pounds, legs, ramrod straight, snap at the knee joints.
- 0.075 seconds: The unrestrained body is now off the seat, torso upright, broken knees pressing against the dashboard. The plastic and steel frame of the steering wheel begins to bend under the drivers grasp. The drivers head is now near the sun visor, his chest above the steering column.
- 0.100 seconds: The car stops and the second collision begins.
- 0.120 seconds: The driver's hands bend the steering column into an almost verticle position. The force of gravity impales him on the steering wheel shaft. The driver's feet are ripped from his tightly laced shoes. The brake pedal shears off at the floorboard. The driver's head smashes into the windshield.
- 0.150 seconds: The driver rebounds and returns to the seat or continues forward exiting the vehicle.

One second after the impact started, all movement has ceased.

The MPs arrive at the scene. The driver has already been transported to Martin Army Community Hospital. The arduous task of clean-up, directing traffic and obtaining the necessary information begins.

Later the MPs go to the hospital to check on the drivers condition. Medical report reads: D.O.A.

Vets to receive questionnaire

Nearly two million Veterans Administration pensioners will receive the agency's annual income questionnaire around Nov. 1 to determine their future eligibility for the VA needs based program.

The questionnaire, required by law, must be completed and returned to VA by Jan. 1, 1985. Pensioners who do not return the questionnaire may have their monthly checks stopped.

The questionnaire will go to all persons receiving VA pension payments or Parents' Dependency and Indemnity Compensation benefits.

Pensioners will receive a worksheet to assist in completing the form, and which may also be used as a record of information they report. Help in completing the annual income questionnaire is available from any VA regional office. (VA)

Program helps chaplains better use knowledge

Theology, experience used to help deal with 'real world' problems

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel publicist

"I hold their feet to the fire and push them to look at who they are and how they are in ministry to people," says Chaplain Emory Cowan of his students in the Clinical Pastoral Education program at Fort Benning. As director of this study program, Chaplain Cowan feels that CPE "provides an educational experience beyond the walls of the classroom so that chaplains have a chance to integrate what they have learned theologically with their experience of people and people's problems in the 'real world'."

At the present time the 11-month-old program includes three chaplains who represent different theological backgrounds. They are in agreement that this enriches, rather than hinders, the learning process. The students share together and face the frustrations and pain of ministry. Chaplain Will Ghere says, "The important thing is that we are persons and we have the same goal — to minister to people's need and help make them whole."

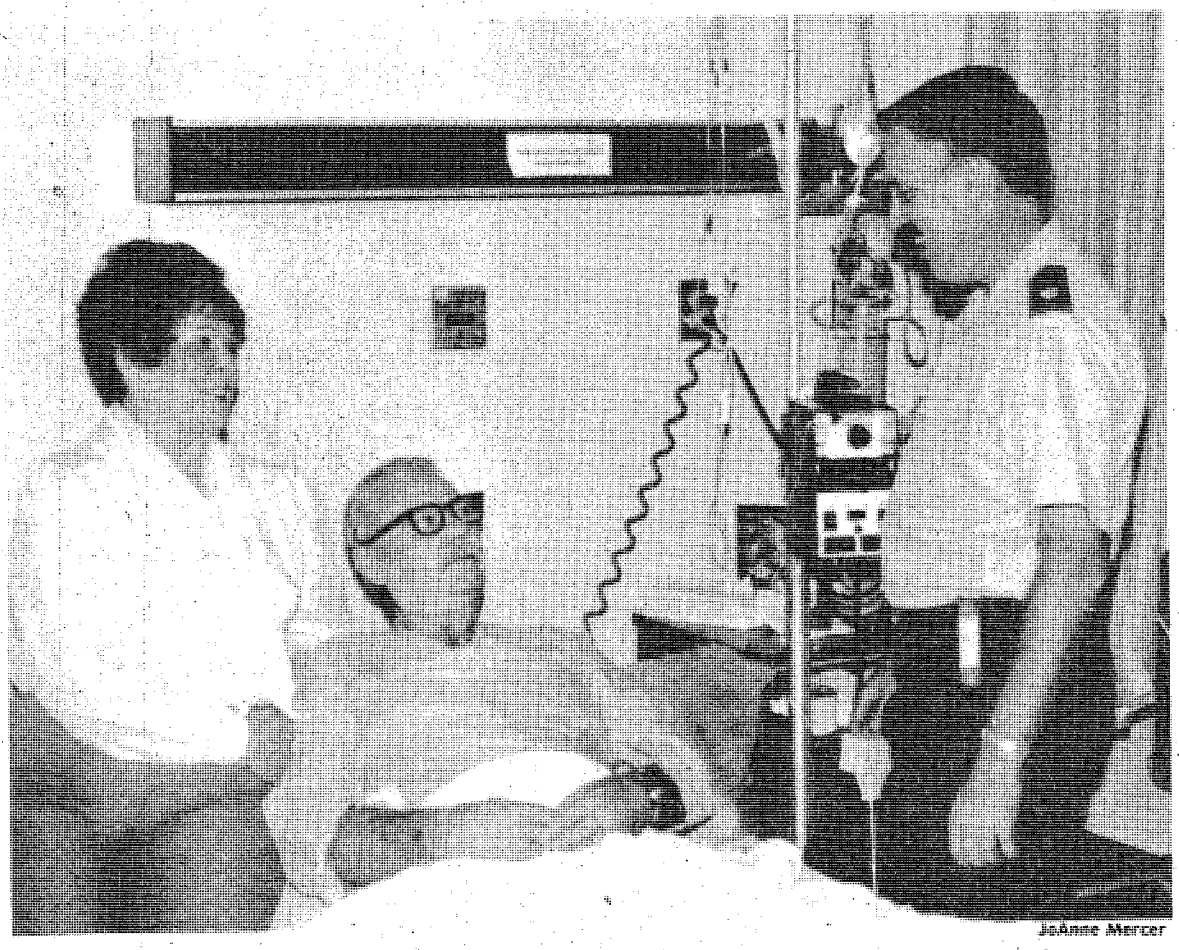
The study involves four major units: pastoral care, pastoral counseling, and family systems as well as supervision and management. The curriculum consists of case presentations in which a student presents a verbatim account of a counselling situation, a worship experience which is videotaped and critiqued, consultation seminars, reading seminars and participation in an inter-personal relations groups. The program totals 1,600 hours of study and supervision in ministry.

In addition to classroom work, the CPE student has supervised ministry at the stockade, Martin Army Community Hospital and Custer Terrace Chapel.

Bob Reese, a CPE student and Episcopal chaplain, says the program provides an intensive look at the chaplain as a person and as a minister. "We see how we functation as a minister and how others see us — both our weaknesses and our strengths. By knowing ourselves better and how we function, we are better able to meet people where they are," he says.

Another student, Chaplain Joseph D'Silva, has a graduate degree in rehabilitation counseling and experience in hospital work in India, but felt his own feelings were closing up and stifling him. "I needed to open up myself and understand my feelings," he says. He adds that through the CPE program "I am opening up more and more and feeling the warmth of relationships, though it is a little painful."

Chaplain Ghere agrees that the experience is both painful and growth producing in its emotional intensity. He emphasizes, however, that "I am a more open person now — more self-confident in my ministry."



JoAnne Mercer

Chaplain Will Ghere visits with Mr. and Mrs. James Thomas of Columbus, recently, at Martin Army Community Hospital. As part of the Clinical Pastoral Education program, students ministered at the hospital, stockade and Custer Terrace Chapel.

The three chaplains agree that many clergy persons can go through college and seminary and learn the function aspects of ministry — how to preach, manage a church, teach the Bible — but never come to know themselves in a deep and personal way. They say it is easy for the minister to "get caught up in role expectations and never come to know himself/herself in a deep and personal way."

Chaplain Cowan believes that "the ultimate goal is that a person becomes congruent with what he/she professes to believe and how this belief is acted out." He quotes well-known writer and counselor, Dr. Ruel Howe, when he says of his students: "They are plunged into the cold water of life — dripping but ready to learn how to swim."

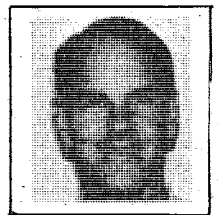
Reflections

Are you doing everything in God's name?



Chaplain John G. Cottingham

Recently I was reading some old cartoons which I had saved thinking they might be useful. One particular clipping taken from the lighter side page of "Soldier" magazine has been the primer for this reflection. Here is an excerpt from that little diddy entitled "What's In A Name?" as presented by SSgt. Sandi Pellicano:

"Does a name influence a person's likes, dislikes, talents or destiny? If you look at the names of some cadets who attended the 1982 4th ROTC Region advanced camp at Fort Lewis Wash., you might begin to wonder."

"Now, obviously, Josh Dolphin wasn't a fish, Christina Palomino wasn't a horse and Marc Peacock wasn't a bird. But what about Carey Bunker, Eddie Parades, Douglas Garrison and Eric and Scott Sargent? Is it only coincidence they've found themselves with the Army, where bunkers, parades, garrisons and sergeants abound?"

We may smile upon reading such names in relation to occupations, but it does raise many interesting questions about names.

Now this concern for names has been at the heart of the Hebrew-Christian tradition throughout its history. The Bible is "loaded" with the sacredness of names and their importance. The call of Moses is an outstanding example. Through the burning bush experience, Moses sought to have God identify himself. God tried to identify himself by claiming that he was the object of worship for Moses ancestors. Even this was not enough for Moses. "When I say to my people in Egypt that the God of your fathers has sent me, this won't be enough for them. They will ask, 'What's his name?'"

Then there was the man Saul of Tarsus. He was an approving onlooker at the stoning of Stephen. He was carrying a list of suspected christians in Damascus when he experienced a radical change in his life. He became Paul and he helped change the course of the Christian faith and civilization itself.

In our scripture reference, Paul's letter to the Colossians, I believe that Paul realized that the individuals in the early Colossian community were beginning on a pilgrimage. Theologicaly, a pilgrimage is a movement of God toward man and man toward God. And this movement is lived out daily through relations with our fellow persons.

I am sure there must be some of you reading this reflection who are on a pilgrimage. There may be some who would like to be on one. Why don't we just for a few moments think about what it could mean to find out what is in our name. Above all, our name gives us tremendous responsibility, even if we did not choose it for ourselves. But that is the important point that we can make. That we do choose certain names for ourselves.

The name we choose in our religious faith does not come alive until we choose it with our own determination to live up to its meaning. And what does that mean to you? Well, it means that in your religious pilgrimage you are always risking the chance that someone will be calling your name into ministry.

And as you are stepping out in your spiritual journey, remember the words of Paul and ask yourself if you are indeed doing everything in the name of your Lord and God.

New hospital designs will help VA meet rising nursing home demands

Faced with a growing need for nursing home care beds, the Veterans Administration is developing computerized designs based on prototype units that can be adapted for construction anywhere in the country or any suitable site.

The effort is expected to cut about 29 months off the average 53 months it now takes from initiation of a nursing home project to the start of construction.

VA administrator Harry N. Walters called the effort "the kind of management initiative needed to insure continued high quality care of the nation's veterans as they grow older."

The number of veterans 65 and older will increase from the present mark of 4 million to nearly 9 million before the year 2000, significantly increasing the need for new VA nursing home care beds.

The VA currently operates 103 nursing home care units, along with 172 medical centers and 16 domiciliaries around the country.

A prototype design has been developed, incorporating the recommendations of a special task force set up in 1981 to study ways to reduce costs.

The combination of a prototype design and the computer aided design system will simplify planning, budgeting, and design development, and it is estimated that it will result in savings of as much as $2 million per 120-bed nursing home care unit.

"The VA currently operates 103 nursing home care units, along with 172 medical centers and 16 domiciliaries around the country."

Once on a computer, the prototype layout can be adapted for site-specific conditions. In most cases, this will be done by VA staff architects and engineers.

The firm of Everett I. Brown, Architects and Engineers, Indianapolis, Ind., has been selected to work on the program which is expected to be in use for the VA's fiscal year 1986 nursing home care unit projects.

Brown will develop working drawings and specifications for a base unit of 60-beds, a one story 120-bed unit and a two story 120-bed unit. They will also provide a computer-aided design system. The system, Intergraph VAX 11/751, has specially selected features to expedite development of architectural and engineering drawings under this program. (VA)

Annual race draws 2,500 runners, raises $12,000

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than $12,000 was raised for the Infantry Museum Saturday as approximately 2,500 runners participated in this year's Infantry Museum Run.

The weather was perfect as Major General John W. Foss, post commander, fired the pistol at 9 A.M. to start the race. Twenty-six minutes and seven seconds later 31 year-old Kurt Fechter, from Fort Rucker, Ala., crossed the finish line ahead of the field to capture the first place finish. At the 31:44 mark Gay Schendel crossed the women's finish line to capture the top prize for females.

Several units and teams captured trophies for their excellent finishes in the formation and five and seven-person team competitions.

Thanks partly to some cooperative weather the race got underway without any flaws. "The weather was perfect," said Bernie Pfeiffer, race official. "But to get that many people started, and to get them all through the finish line and to keep them in the same order as they finished afterwards,that was quite a feat."

Several marks and records were broken Saturday as a result of the race. 1OBC students from the 2nd Bn., TSB won the distinction of being the Best Fort Benning team for the fourth straight year. Also, four age group records were set. Karen Ammons, Mary Mace, Mike Quispe and Alex Bruce all eclipsed the previous record times for their respective age divisions.

Pfieiffer added that thanks to careful planning by the race committee there were no major heat injuries during the race.

He added that he'd like to see more Volksfest activities included for next year's event, as well as more spectators on hand to watch the race.

Many activities held as part of Benning's Volksfest celebration

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The combination of pleasant, sunny weather and the high spirits of those in attendance made for a good time for all at this year's Volksfest held last Saturday at Doughboy Stadium.

The highlight of all activities were the performances by Gus the Burgermeister and his German Band. His band's renditions of German classics kept the atmosphere upbeat as the audiences danced and sang along with the songs.

Marchers hit the sidewalks as the Volksmarch got underway at 10 A.M. 169 people walked the 10-kilometer route, enjoying the scenery and soaking in the October sun.

Other activities included performances by the Infantry Center Band, jazzercise routines, aerobics demonstrations, a breakdance contest and bellydance performances.

Meanwhile the refreshment stands sported the finest in German food and drink. American favorites such as cotton candy and soda pop were hot sellers.

Basketball tosses, bingo matches and arts and crafts displays kept both young and old busy on a festive October Saturday.

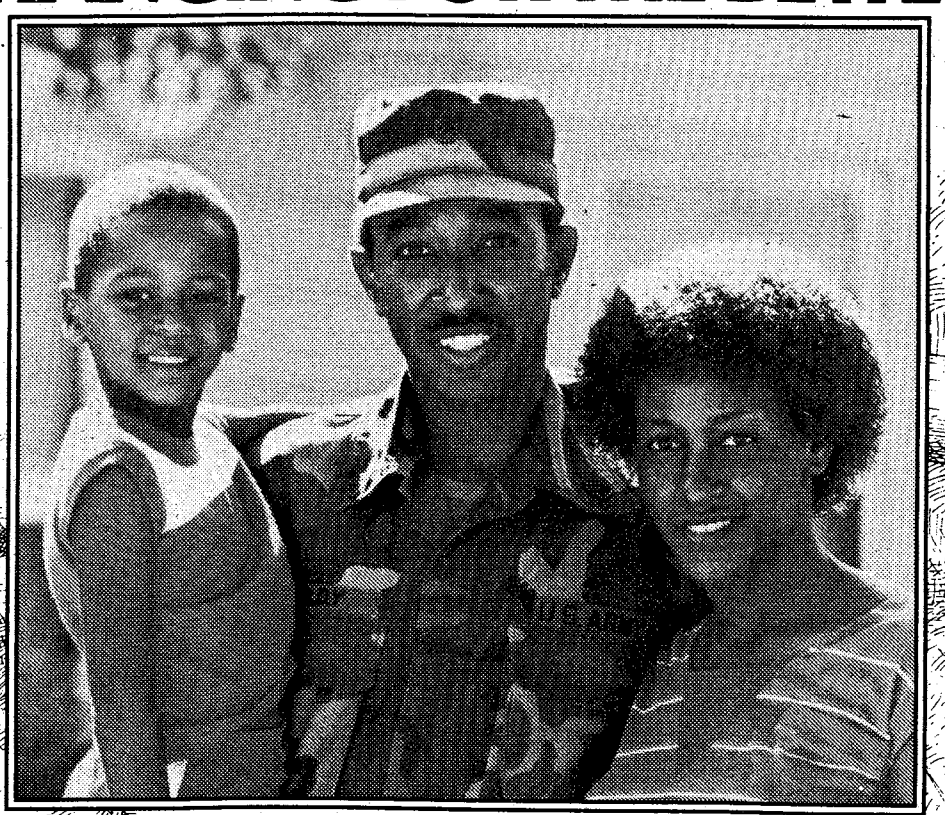
THE ARMY'S JOB HASN'T CHANGED IN OVER 200 YEARS.

BUT OUR WAY OF LIFE IS CHANGING FOR THE BETTER.



The job is still to defend American liberty, but the Army's attitude toward the soldier's family has changed dramatically.

The Army Family Action Plan is a demonstration of today's commitment to the human and material needs of Army family members.

The plan is designed as a total program to deal with a wide range of Army Family problems on a systematic, long-term basis. It includes measures to improve housing, child-care, medical and dental care, and many other services and facilities for Army families.

The Chief of Staff, General John A. Wickham, and Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell, are totally committed to this plan and have pledged their full support.

The construction of over 2,500 Army family housing units has already begun. Many new child-care facilities have been approved for construction; 250 have already been improved. A Health Facility Modernization Program has also begun. And presently, employment resource centers are being established to help expand employment and priority placement opportunities for Army family members.

Your problems can't be solved immediately, but they will be solved. The Army has always had the responsibility of defending the nation. Today it has another important responsibility—to continue to improve the lifestyle of the Army family.

ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

VA study shows women veterans don't take advantage of benefits

The Veterans Administration has compiled a report indicating that female veterans, generally, have not used VA benefits to the same extent as male veterans.

Administrator of Veterans Affairs Harry N. Walters said the report "confirms the need for our special efforts to assure that women who served in our Armed Forces have full access to medical care and are fully aware of their eligibility for benefits."

The report includes data on female veterans in four major areas: population, health care, compensation and pension, and education benefits.

The population data are based on the 1980 U.S. Census, which marked the first time that detailed information on female veterans had ever been gathered. The VA estimated there were 1,152,500 women veterans living in the United States and Puerto Rico as of September 30, 1983, representing 4.1 percent of the 28.2 million living veterans.

According to the report, there were 1,409 female patients in VA medical centers on June 15, 1983, or 2.1 percent of the total patient population. During fiscal year 1983, 18,051 female hospital patients were discharged, accounting for 1.8 percent of the total.

In September 1983, 28,286 women veterans were receiving compensation payments for service-connected disabilities which was 1.2 percent of the veterans receiving this benefit. VA pension payments were sent to 10,363 women.

Since the current GI Bill was signed in 1966, 174,057 women — about 2.4 percent of the total — were among the more than 7 million veterans who received some form of VA-assisted training. The ratio has nearly tripled based on recent data where women accounted for nearly 6.8 percent of the veterans actually in training as of April 1983. This trend reflects the greater number of women serving in the Armed Forces in recent years.

Since being named to head the VA in December 1982, Walters has taken a variety of steps to improve service to female veterans, including the appointment of an 18-member Advisory Committee on Women Veterans.

VA medical centers have been instructed to develop a formal plan for the care of female veterans and to identify any barriers to their care. Though the majority of health problems for which female veterans are being treated are not gender-related, provision of gynecologic care to both inpatients and outpatients has been upgraded.

Privacy limitations at VA medical facilities are being corrected too in line with the VA policy of providing equitable care to all veterans, male and female.

The gathering of new data on women veterans is another of the special efforts being made.

"We now have the comprehensive demographic data necessary for more effective planning toward meeting the future needs and concerns of women who have earned their right to veterans benefits," Walters said. (VA)

Court martial manual revision promotes justice

Washington — The recent revision of the "Manual for Courts-Martial" is being viewed by defense judge advocate officials as "promoting justice and discipline in the armed services by improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the military justice system."

Legal officials explained that the revised manual offers not just a brand-new format separating legal requirements from non-binding guidance to commanders, it also has "a more logical organizational structure to simplify access and to consolidate provisions dealing with common subject matter."

"The new format," he said, "will make the manual easier to use for commanders and their legal staffs."

Commanders, for example, will find that the changes minimize unnecessary administrative tasks, enhance and protect the judicial independence of courts-martial and resolve a number of issues or problems in courts-martial.

Lawyers and paralegals will find that the revision's several years of research, drafting and agency review have produced a final product that both updates court-martial procedures and carries out the requirements of the Military Justice Act of 1983.

(The act's provisions, as summarized by the official, streamlined procedures for convening courts-martial, reduce administrative burdens in the review of courts-martial and modify appellate practice. They also afford direct review by the U.S. Supreme Court, on writ of certiorari, of decisions rendered by the U.S. Court of Military Appeals.)

As binding authority on proceedings for courts-martial and non-judicial punishment, the new manual prescribes procedures and modes of proof as well as the maximum punishments for offenses under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The new version — which like its 1969 predecessor also defines and explains the various offenses covered by the code — aligns practice in courts-martial more closely to the procedures followed in the federal civilian courts. The official said that the version, however, "retains enough flexibility for the courts-martial to try cases efficiently and fairly in the wide range of circumstances, sometimes difficult or dangerous, in which the armed services must operate."

Some highlights from the manual's new edition, which went into effect in August 1984, include:

- Authority to impose pretrial confinement for foreseeable serious misconduct (preventive detention). This provision is new.
- The accused's right to have pretrial confinement reviewed by a neutral and detached officer and the right to counsel for such review. This rule has been in effect for several years, as required by service regulations, but now has been standardized for inclusion in the manual.
- Simplified procedures for convening courts-martial and for detailing counsel and a military judge to the courts-martial.
- Broader pretrial discovery — for both the prosecution and the defense.
- The right of an accused to a speedy trial in all cases (accused must be brought to trial within 120 days of imposition of restraint or preferral of charges notice; certain pretrial delays are excludable from that standard). This provision clarifies the government's obligation to provide speedy trials even in cases where the accused incurs no pretrial restraint.
- Increased authority for the military judge over the proceedings to ensure that the court-martial is tried in a prompt, fair, and dignified manner.
- Increased opportunity for the presentation of evidence in presentencing proceedings, including specific authority to introduce evidence concerning the effect of offenses on the victim.
- Simplified post-trial review, including amplification of accused's right to submit clemency matters, reduction of legal burdens on commanders, and reduction in paperwork.
- Provisions implementing accused's new statutory right to waive appellate review in non-capital cases and new statutory access to the U.S. Supreme Court directly from the Court of Military Appeals.
- Modifications of maximum punishments for some offenses, including increased authorized punishments for offenses committed with firearms.

U.S. dollar bill is rich in history and symbolism at 190 years old

Say happy birthday to a $1 bill on Monday — it will be 190 years old.

One would think, then, that most Americans would know the dollar pretty well.

But they don't, especially when it comes to figuring out all those symbols, sayings, letters and numbers printed on it.

Particularly mysterious is the eyeball in the triangle suspended above an unfinished pyramid on the back of the dollar.

Recently, a new dollar bill was passed among 100 shoppers, bank tellers and students in Flint, Mich. About 40 percent said they had never noticed the eye or the pyramid, or the sayings on the back.

The eye stumped everybody. A couple of adults suggested it may be "a reminder to keep an eye on your money." One 13-year-old said. "It's George Washington's eye and it's there to remind you to watch your budget." And a 12-year-old theorized, "It symbolizes parents watching how you spend it."

The U.S. Treasury Department's Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington provided the correct answers, along with pamphlets and an article by former Texas congressman Maury Maverick. Additional information came from a book called "Momney" by Harry Edward Neal.

The circle containing the pyramid, the eye and triangle is the back side of the Great Seal of the United States. Its front is depicted on the right-hand side of the dollar's back. It contains an eagle holding an olive branch in one talon and arrows in the other.

The Great Seal, the only national seal in the world with two sides, has been on the $1 note since 1935. It is rich in Egyptian symbolism because America's forefathers were "conscious of the great heritage of civilization and its birthplace — Egypt," writes Maverick.

The eye is the Eye of Providence. Like the pyramid, it is of Middle Eastern origin, Maverick says. It symbolizes a preference for the spiritual over the material. It also represents education and freedom of knowledge.

The expression "Annuit Coeptis" found above the triangle means "God has favored our undertakings." The words have 13 letters to represent the 13 original colonies.

The pyramid symbolizes solid strength and duration. The fact it is unfinished signifies the country will continue to build and improve with a continuous evaluation of truth, according to Maverick. Its 13 layers of stone represent the original 13 states and states' rights. The individual stones symbolize local self-government.

On the pyramid's base is "MDCCLXXVI" — Roman numerals for the year 1776.

Underneath the pyramid is the expression "Novus Ordo Seclorum," Latin for "A New Order of the Ages" to indicate "The New American Era," says Betty Russell of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The front of the Great Seal in the right circle on the back of the dollar also is rich in symbolism and historical significance.

The olive branch with 13 leaves and seeds in the American bald eagle's right talon symbolizes peace. The 13 arrows of American Indian origin in the eagle's left talon represent war. Note the eagle's head "is turned toward the olive branch, indicating a preference for peace," writes Neal.

The top of the shield between the eagle's head and tail represents Congress, justice and a free democracy. The shield's 13 stripes represent a union of states.

Retention NCOs work to keep high quality soldiers in Army

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

It was midmorning, Oct. 4, and many of the 197th Infantry Brigade's reenlistment NCOs had just concluded a conference with SSgt Robert L. Henderson, brigade reenlistment NCOIC.

There was a certain uniformity among the people gathered. They all had spit-shined boots, steam-pressed uniforms, close, neat hair cuts.

They are the brigade's retention NCOs.

"Our job is to retain and maintain quality soldiers in today's modern high technology army," stated Henderson. If a soldier does not meet the Army's quality standard, then the retention NCO must counsel that soldier and provide him with information that would help him achieve the Army's standard. First term soldiers have to be counseled 60 to 120 days after arrival at the unit or 12 months prior to their ETS date," continued Henderson. "Each retention NCO might have more than 500 soldiers to keep taps on for the duration in the unit. You must have the desire to help others."

With the Army's goal of improving its soldiers to make a smarter Army by using the new quality point system, the retention NCO meets that demand by becoming an education counselor as well.

"We will help guide soldiers through the regulations and show them what is available to give them the opportunity to earn those much needed quality points if he wishes to stay in the Army," pointed out SSgt. Larry J. Wesley, RNCO, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

The Army's goal is to maintain soldiers with 66 quality points. The points are earned through promotions, waivers, civilian education, reenlistment options, extentions, ASVAB scores, GT scores and SQT scores after two years of enlistment.

"The point system is used as a management tool. We are knowledgeable in all administration procedures," noted SSgt. Charles Matthews, RNCO of Headquarters and Headquarters Company. "If we can't help a soldier through the regulations, we are in touch with people who can."

"We work with soldiers in an atmosphere where they can talk. Their conversation is strictly confidential," commented Henderson. "A soldier may talk to us about anything, any type of problem. We'll listen and help him solve that problem if it can be solved. In this job, you give 110 percent."

The classics

The students at Faith School got a chance to experience the classical side of music recently when the Officers' Wives Club sponsored a fine arts assembly at their school. Patricio Cobos, violinist; Rex Whiddon, pianist; and Marsha Riley, cellist, treated the audience to a variety of music from such composers as Beethoven and Mozart. The trio from Columbus College performed in the Fort Benning schools Oct. 2 and 3. The OWC has scheduled the musicians for another fine arts assembly later in the year.

Sugar often listed by other names on many food label ingredient lists

Fort Monroe, Va. — Sugar, a natural everyday substance, is listed as an ingredient or an additive on a multitude of food labels.

But "sugar" may be unintentionally disguised because its many forms are often unfamiliar to the consumer. Here is a glossary describing some of the common caloric sweeteners, which are sugars or their derivatives, used in food processing. Remember that they ALL contain about four calories per gram.

Exact amounts of the sugars in a particular product are rarely listed on the label. But you can get an idea of the relative proportion of sugar to other ingredients by noting where in the sequence of ingredients it appears — the closer to the top, the greater the proportion.

Sucrose accounts for more than 60 percent of all caloric sweeteners used in the United States. Sucrose is usually white, refined table sugar that comes from sugar cane or sugar beets. Sucrose is also the sugar in brown sugar (the brown color comes from a little added molasses), turbinado sugar (partially refined sugar), confectioners' sugar and raw sugar.

Fructose is often referred to as "fruit sugar" because it is abundant in most fruits. It tastes sweeter than either glucose or sucrose. Frucstose in controlled amounts may have advantages for certain diabetics because some research has shown that it doesn't bring about wide swings in blood sugar.

Invert sugar is the liquid sugar that is formed when sucrose is hydrolyzed (split with water). It contains equal amounts of glucose and fructose and is sweeter than sucrose.

High fructose corn syrup, or HFCS, is a liquid sweetener that is formed when cornstarch is specially treated to produce fructose, glucose and small amounts of other sugars.

Lactose, or milk sugar, is naturally present in dairy products. It is composed of glucose and galactose. Bacteria used to produce yogurt, buttermilk, ripened cheese and sour cream reduce their levels of lactose. Since lactose may also be an ingredient in other products, individuals with lactose intolerance should check product labels.

Maltose, or malt sugar, is primarily used in making beer and is sometimes found in cereals, corn syrup and baby foods.

Sorbitol, mannitol and zylitol are sugar alcohols used in many "sugar free" products such as "dietetic" candies and cookies and sugar-free gum and mints. Consumed in large quantities, these products can cause diarrhea and gas. They also contain calories.

Honey, which is a combination of sugars, is formed from nectar gathered by bees. It contains fructose, glucose, maltose and sucrose. Proportions vary according to the nectar. (TRADOC)

Exceptional Family Member Program enrollment must now be done at medical treatment facility

Washington — Soldiers who want to enroll in the Army's Exceptional Family Member Program must now do so through their servicing medical treatment facility, according to personnel officials.

EFMP enrollment has been automated and MILPERCEN is no longer accepting applications submitted directly from the field.

To enroll, soldiers must complete one or more of the four new questionnaires and return them to their local medical facility.

New questionnaires used include DA Form 5291-R-1 (EFMP child development questionnaire), DA Form 5291-R-2 (EFMP child functional medical questionnaire), DA Form 5291-R-3 (EFMP adult functional questionnaire).

The local medical facility sends the completed questionnaires through a specually trained coding team that must process all requests for enrollment before forwarding them to MILPERCEN.

Soldiers already enrolled who have not completed the new questionnaires should do it soon so the major medical centers can prepare the new coded forms.

For general information about the EFMP, call Master Sgt. Patterson at AUTOVON 221-7766/67/68. (ARNEWS)

Glenn Dubis won a national championship, tied a national record and paced the Army to new record team victories during this year's U.S. 300-Meter National Rifle Championships.

Marksmen shoot their way into record books

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affiars Office

A total of eight new national shooting records were set or tied during this year's U.S. National 300 Meter Rifle Championships held at Fort Benning from October 12-16.

Sparkplugged by the outstanding individual performance of USAMU's Glenn Dubis, the Army established new records in all three national team championships.

Fresh off a victory in last months CISM Shooting Championship held in Liestal, Switzerland, Dubis continued his winning pace by capturing the individual 300 meter Free Rifle Championship. Dubis also added two second place silver medals in the 300 Meter Standard Rifle and English Match events.

Dubis scored a three day total of 3,472 out of 3,600 points in the Free Rifle event to outdistance the perennial champion, Lones Wigger, who finished in second position at 3,451.

Members of the record setting Army squad included Dubis, Wigger and Richard Hawkins with a team total of 3,459. The other record Army team members included Dubis, Wigger and David Erickson in the 300 Meter Standard Rifle event with a total of 1,713 points. The winning 300 Meter English Match squad was composed of Dubis, Philip Scheur and Bradley Carnes with a new record score of 1,718 out of 1,800 possible points.

Other record scores were turned in by Robert Aylward with a perfect score of 600 out of 600 points in the 300 Meter English Match event, breaking the old mark of 599 set in 1981.

Three more individuals became co-record holders in the 40 shot prone phase with perfect scores of 400 out of 400 points and included Aylward, Dubis and Army Reservist Ray Carter from Alexandria, Va.

Aylward, an Army ROTC instructor from Easton, Pa., also tied the existing national record in the 300 Meter Kneeling phase with a score of 393 out of 400 points.

The National 300 Meter English Match Championship was won by Gary Andrade of the U.S. Marine Corps with a three day total of 1,783. Dubis also finished with 1,783 but placed second after losing the tie breaking procedure.

The final 300 Meter Standard Rifle event was won by Webster Wright of Annapolis, Md., with a total score of 1,143 out of 1,200 points. Dubis again finished second with a total of 1,140n while Wigger placed third at 1,138.

Flyers get wings clipped in weekend action

By Joel D. Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Team played host to the Columbus Cruise-a-matics as part of Saturday's Volks-Fest activities. Both the A side and B side games were hard-fought, physical matches. Columbus won the A side game by a score of 26-17 and took the B side game by a 9-0 margin.

During the A side game, Fort Benning took an early lead when Bill Gleisberg scored from about five yards out. Columbus rapidly countered when Dave Frye scored to tie the score. Fort Benning scored twice more on exceptional plays that included a Rick Ferguson try off of a John Holden pass, and a John Holden 25-yard drop kick. Scott Mizener added an extra point kick and Fort Benning had a 13-4 lead. Columbus fought back to gain a 14-13 halftime lead off a Pete Pease run down the sideline, and a twisting and turning run by Dave Frye. John Dawes made the extra point to give Columbus the lead.

The Flyers scored early in the second half to regain the lead. Scott Mizener took the ball, avoided several tackles and ran through a number of Columbus players in a 25-yard run through the middle of the field. The kick failed. Fort Benning tried to capitalize on the 3 point lead but could not prevent Columbus from scoring 2 more tries midway through the second half. Both kicks were good and Columbus was able to hang on for the 26-17 final score.

In the B side game, both teams continued to play tough, hard rugby. Columbus scored on a penalty kick for a 3-0 lead shortly into the second half. They then scored a try and kick to end the scoring.

Next Saturday, the Flyers travel to Atlanta to face one of the city's stronger teams - the High Country RFC. The game will start at 1 p.m.

U.S. shooters head for China

Washington D.C. — The United States shooting team has received an exclusive invitation from the People's Rupublic of China to participate in a training match in international rifle and pistol competition later this month. The invitation was issued by the Chinese to National Rifle Association executives during the Olympics.

U.S. shooting team coaches have selected a dozen seasoned and new shooters to attend the matches which are Oct. 26-Nov. 16. Among those who will attend are Olympic women's air rifle gold medalist Pat Spurgin, noted air rifle champions Glen Dubis and Mary Godlove of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Ernest Vande Zande, David Johnson, Billy Dodd, Elizabeth McKay, Kim Hogrefe, Cathy Graham-Lane, East Longmeadow, Darius Young, Lori Kamler and Fort Benning's Deena Wigger.

U.S shooting team coaches regard this trip as an opportuntiy for the nation's promising rifle and pistol shooters to gain experience in living and competing overseas. A strong, young team will attend this event in preparation for two world-level shooting events later this year, the World Air Gun Championships in Mexico City and the Championships of the Americas, an event involving wastern hemisphere nations.

Fort Monroe, Va. — Hunter orange clothing has been available for some 20 years now, and it's even become traditional gear for many small-game as well as big-game hunters.

Yet some hunters are still skeptical and resist wearing this important safety material. If you're in this minority category, these facts from the National Sports Shooting Foundation may change your mind.

• It's a fact that daylight fluorescent orange, more than any other color, is the most easily seen and recognized bright, unnatural color against a natural background. It is a proven fact that hunter orange is the only satisfactory color for hunters to wear under all weather and light conditions.

• It's a fact that almost 10 percent of all hunters have color vision deficiencies. Red clothing, for example, is no longer recommended because red cloth may not be seen by hunters who cannot distinguish color properly and because it becomes difficult to see in poor light.

• It's a fact that accidents in which the victim was mistaken for game once ranked very high on the list of the most common types of accidents that occurred in most states. Yet states with mandatory hunter orange laws have now experienced a dramatic decrease in mistaken-for-game accidents. Many states have experienced a reduction of 50 percent, others by even more. There is no question that these sharp reductions in mistaken-for-game accidents are a result of hunter orange clothing.

• It's a fact that there has been no decline in hunter success in those states with mandatory hunter orange regulations; most have experienced increased success rates due to modern game management.

• It's a fact that hunter orange clothing is a tremendous aid in helping hunters maintain visual contact with one another, particularly when moving through dense cover or woods. Experienced hunters are keenly aware that, unless they know the location of their partners at all times, they cannot determine their safe zone of fire. Any hunter who has seen nothing more than a patch of orange out of the corner of his eye knows full well the value of fluorescent orange in helping everyone keep track of each other while in the field.

• It's a fact that there are now 34 states and Canadian provinces that have instituted mandatory hunter orange regulations.

So next time you are out hunting use common sense and help protect yourself and others from what could be a fatal accident. (Fort Campbell Courier)

Benning seat belt regulation proves it is a real life saver

Robert McClain

Three weeks ago Debbie Cavins was driving her 1982 Chevrolet Citation down the Manchester Expressway in Columbus. It was a Saturday evening. She was headed to the drug store. Suddenly, she saw a cream-colored car dart in front of her. "I had no place to turn," she said. "If I turned to miss her I would have run into the cars along side me. I remember thinking 'this is what it is like being in an accident.'"

Cavins rammed into the side of the car. Her car had extensive damage, but was still drivable. The other car was totalled. But both drivers only experienced minor injuries. They were both wearing their seat belts.

"I was going about 35 mph when I hit her. I'm sure wearing my seat belt prevented me from being seriously injured," she commented.

Post Safety Officer Fred Young said he is hearing similiar stories every day. "Since the post adopted the mandatory seat belt regulation people have been buckling their seat belts and it has showed," he said. "I've looked at accident reports since the regulation took effect and I have been seeing fewer people getting seriously injured in car crashes. I feel the regulation is the reason behind the fewer injuries. People are so much safer wearing seat belts. It's a proven fact."

Sergeant Philip Bratton of the Military Police traffic accident investigation section agreed with Young. "We are finding most people are complying with the regulation. Most of the people we pull over for traffic violations are wearing their seat belts. Fewer people are being seriously injured in accidents on post because of increased seat belt wear," he added.

> "Since the post adopted the mandatory seat belt regulation people have been buckling their seat belts and it has showed... I have been seeing fewer people getting seriously injured in car crashes.

The new regulation took effect Sept. 3 and has required all soldiers, family members and Department of the Army civilians either driving or riding in vehicles on Fort Benning to wear their seat belts.

More than 50,000 people die each year in motor vehicle accidents. And auto accidents are the leading cause of death among people under age 45. The use of seat belts could reduce the number killed dramatically.

Fort Benning has done something to directly attack the problem and it is working.

Still, a few people continue to ignore the regulation. They moan and groan about being forced to comply with the regulation. These people are just putting their lives in danger. It's a fact that many lives have been saved and injuries prevented because people were wearing their seat belts. People should stop moaning and buckle their seat belts. You never know when you may be in an accident. Wearing your seat belt may just save your life.

Various voices

Have you had any accidents in which wearing seat belts have prevented you from suffering injuries?

PFC Dean Davis, 2nd Bn., 416th Regiment, 104th Infantry Division- "No. I've been in one accident where I didn't buckle up, but I didn't get injured at all. I normally don't wear my seat belts because the ones in my particular car are unsafe. I think if I wore them in an accident they would hurt me as much as the actual collision."

SFC Harold Williford, Drill Sgt., D-9-2-"No. All my accidents occurred when I wasn't wearing seat belts. But I wear them whenever I remember to. I think wearing seat belts is definitely a good idea."

SP4 Martha Mace, HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade-"No. I have yet to be in an accident. But I wear my seat belts everywhere - on and off-post. I don't think wearing seat belts hurts you at all. If anything they help you."

W.P. Warren, retiree - "No. I haven't gotten in an accident in 15 years. All of my accidents before then were when I wasn't wearing seat belts. I know a couple who were wearing their seat belts and were involved in a head-on collision. I think they would've both been killed if they hadn't buckled up. As it was, they were only hospitalized for a short time."

Marsh, Wickham recall Grenada

On this, the first anniversary of the American rescue operation on the island of Grenada, the Chief of Staff and I would like for you to recall the contributions to freedom and peace, and the sacrifices of our soldiers there.

Only last October, soldiers, marines, airmen and sailors joined in a combined effort to rescue American citizens whose lives and safety were threatened.

This anniversary gives us cause to reflect on both the immediate and long term impact of that operation. Our swift response has demonstrated that our efforts to improve readiness during the past four years have been effective. We proved once again that well trained soldiers, superb leadership and quality equipment are a winning combination and that American troops will serve courageously when called upon to do so.

On this first anniversary of the rescue operation in Grenada, General Wickham and I ask that all of you pause for a moment to reflect on the sacrifices made there, and to recall the reasons we went to that country.

The response of the American students who came home safely from Grenada, and the renewed pride our fellow citizens have found in themselves and their country since last October, are a vivid reminder to us of "why we serve."

President's message

Terrorism poses an insidious challenge to the principles of freedom cherished by peace-loving peoples everywhere. Despicable acts such as the recent attack on Prime Minister Thatcher in England, the bombings of our Marine Amphibious Unit Headquarters, and of our embassy facilities in Beirut, Lebanon, represent an attempt to strike at the very heart of western democratic values. In the month of September, 37 attacks were carried out by 13 different terrorist groups affecting the people of 20 nations.

As a world power, the United States bears global responsiblities from which we must not shrink in the face of cowardly attempts at intimidation. Instead, we must strive to carry forward the heroic legacy of those brave people who in the search for peace and justice have lost their lives to international terrorism. Because terrorism poses such a pervasive and insidious threat to all free peoples and claims so many innocent victims in its indiscriminate brutality, we of the western democracies have embarked on a course of improved cooperation to counter this scourge against humanity. To this end, it is appropriate that we reflect on the tragic loss of life that senseless terror leaves in its wake throughout the world. We do this not out of fear or trepidation, but to show our resolve that the free people of this world will not be deterred from out purpose by threats of terrorism.

The Congress, by Senate Joint Resolution 336, has designated Oct. 23, 1984, as "a time of remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughtout the world and has authorized and requested the president to issue a proclamation in observance of this event.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Oct. 23, 1984, as a time of remembrance for all victims of terrorism throughout the world, and I urge all Americans to take time to reflect on the sacrifices that have been made in the pursuit of peace and freedom.

In witness, whereof, I have hereunto set my hands this 19th day of October, in the year of 1984, and of the independence of the United States of America the 209th.

President Ronald Reagan

Many myths surround seat belt use

Provost marshal

It doesn't matter how often the experts tell people that seat belts save lives, everyone has their own opinion. Here are some myths people have about not wearing seat belts and the actual facts.

Myth - I don't need safety belts because I'm a really good driver. I have excellent reactions.

Fact - No matter how good a driver you are, you can't control the other driver's car. When another car comes at you, whatever the reason: mechanical failure, poor judgment or bad driving habits on the part of the other driver, there usually will not be sufficient time to protect yourself.

Myth - I don't want to be trapped in by a safety belt. It's better to be thrown free in an accident.

Fact - Being thrown free is 25 times more dangerous . . . 25 times more lethal. If you're wearing your belt you're far more likely to be conscious after an accident . . . to free yourself and help your passengers. Safety belts can keep you from:

- plunging through the windshield
- being thrown out the door and hurtled through the air
- scraping along the ground
- being crushed by your own car

In almost any collision, you're better off being held inside the car by safety belts.

Myth - If I wear a safety belt, I might be trapped in a burning or submerged car!

Fact - Less than one-half of one percent of all injury-producing collisions involve fire or submersion. But if fire or submersion do occur, wearing a safety belt can save your life. If you're involved in a crash without your safety belt, you might be stunned or knocked unconscious by striking the interior of the car. Then your chances of getting out of a burning or submerged car would be far less. You're better off wearing a safety belt at all times in a car. With safety belts, you're more likely to be unhurt, alert, and capable of escaping quickly.

Myth - I don't need it, in case of an accident, I can brace myself with my hands.

Fact - At just 30 mph you'd be thrown toward the dash with the same force as if you'd jumped head first off a three-story building. The force of impact at just 10 mph is equivalent to the force of catching a 200-pound bag of cement from a first story window.

Myth - People would be offended if I asked them to put on a seat belt in my car.

Fact - Polls show that the overwhelming majority of passengers would willingly put their own belts on if only you, the driver, would ask them.

Myth - I just don't believe it will ever happen to me.

Fact - Every one of us can expect to be in a crash once every ten years. For one out of 20 of us, it'll be a serious crash. For one out of every 60 children born today, it will be fatal.

Myth - Well, I only need to wear them when I have to go on long trips, or at high speeds.

Fact - Eighty percent of deaths and serious injuries occur in cars traveling under 40 miles per hour, and 75 percent of deaths or injuries occur less than 25 miles from your home.

Myth - I can touch my head to the dashboard when I'm wearing my seat belt, so there's no way it can help me in a car accident.

Fact - Safety belts were designed to allow you to move freely in your car. They were also designed with a latching device that locks the safety belt in place if your car should come to a sudden halt. This latching device keeps you from hitting the inside of the car or being ejected.

Myth - Seat belt use is not mandatory on Fort Benning.

Fact - Seat belts ARE mandatory for anyone riding in or operating a vehicle on Fort Benning.

While researchers may differ by a few percentage points either way, average figures coming out of safety belt studies look like this:

- Safety belts cut the number of serious injuries received by 50 percent.
- Safety belts cut fatalities by 60 to 70 percent.

To put these figures in other words, not wearing a safety belt doubles your chances of being hurt seriously in a crash. Wearing just a lap belt gives you twice as much chance of living through a crash as you'd have if you wore no belt at all. And using a lap/shoulder belt combination makes your chances of survival three to four times better than they are if you drive beltless.

School of Americas heading for Fort Benning

DA announces post has been selected as school's temporary home

The Department of the Army announced Wednesday that Fort Benning has been selected as the transitional training site for the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

Under provisions of an agreement implementing the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, and in the absence of the U.S.-Panamanian agreement to the continued functioning of USARSA within Panama, the school was required to close its doors and move from its Fort Gulick, Panama, site on Sept. 30.

The current plan is for approximately 130 faculty and staff members to begin arriving at Fort Benning in November, with classes to begin in January 1985. Seventeen courses will provide instruction in a variety of military skills ranging from a Command and General Staff Course for majors to a leadership course for noncommissioned officers.

Fort Benning has the facilities and other resources necessary to support the training mission for calendar year 1985. The school will remain operational here while the Army conducts an additional study to determine the most suitable location for a permanently reconstituted School of the Americas.

This study will be based on the long-term training needs of our Latin American allies and will consider anticipated student load, facility requirements, funding, environmental impact and other factors.

Since 1947, USARSA has trained more than 44,000 Latin American military students in a broad range of military skills.

The school originated on the Pacific side of Panama at Fort Amador in 1946 and was known as the Latin-American Training Center—Ground Division. At that time, the principal mission was to train U.S. personnel stationed in the former Canal Zone. The first Latin-American students were trained in 1947.

In 1949, the school moved to Fort Gulick (recently re-named Base Cristo Negro by the Panama Defense Forces) and occupied a former station hospital. Redesignated the U.S. Army Caribbean School, the institution continued to instruct in English until 1956 when Spanish became the official academic language. The current name was adopted in 1963 to more accurately reflect the school's hemispheric orientation.

The two most important aspects of USARSA's mission are to conduct military training and foster greater cooperation among Latin American armed forces.

USARSA basically follows the former model of the service schools of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, but with two important differences. First, the Office of Deputy Commandant is held by a Latin American officer on a two-year rotational basis. Since this office was instituted in 1977, USARSA has had Deputy Commandants from Columbia, Peru, Honduras, Ecuador, Brazil and Panama.

The second important distinction of the USARSA school model is the Office of Latin American advisors. These advisors are the senior Latin American officers from each country assigned to the school as instructors. They serve as an Ad Hoc Committee to advise the commandant and deputy commandant in such matters as curriculum development and needs of the region.

Most of the students attending USARSA come from countries participating in the International Military Education and Training program, a type of military scholarship allocated by the U.S. Congress to countries selected by Congress. The purpose of IMET is to train foreign country military leaders and to encourage U.S. military-foreign military relationships.

In its 38-year history in Panama, USARSA graduated 45,331 officers, cadets and NCOs from 22 Latin American countries. Overall, the school has experienced more than a 300 percent increase in students and workload in the past four years with about the same budget and personnel authorization.

USARSA offers essentially the same type and quality of courses as TRADOC schools in CONUS. However, USARSA does not simply translate a program of instruction into Spanish and teach it—they also modify it as needed for its Latin American student body.

A good example of this is found in the Command and General Staff Course. In this course, USARSA replaces the Fort Leavenworth nuclear tactics block of instruction with an expanded block on low intensity conflict.

USARSA trains to standards and diplomas must be earned. Not everyone graduates. The key is that USARSA trains leaders and managers using performance oriented training. USARSA compliments client country training by doing what the client country cannot do or by doing it better.

IMET training offers a country two major advantages: USARSA is responsive to the specific needs of the region, and the student studies in his native language.

The USARSA commandant is Col. Michael J. Sierra. He assumed that position in June of this year after completing the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

Sierra is a 1964 graduate of the Infantry Officers' Candidate School at Fort Benning. He served two tours in Vietnam, as an infantry platoon leader with the 101st Airborne Division and as a company commander with the 1st Cavalry Division.

Among his other assignments, he served as a battalion commander with the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii and as a political/military planner with the Office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

In addition to his military achievements, he holds a Masters Degree in Internatonal Relations from the University of Arizona. Sierra and his wife, Kaye, have two children-Michael, 17 and Deanne, 15. (USAIC PAO)

Computerized range helps soldiers zero in on shooting

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The soldier peers out of his foxhole, rain dripping from his steel pot. He watches the berms in front of him for any movement. Suddenly a silhouette appears 300 meters from him.

The soldier squeezes off a round and for the next three minutes and 14 seconds is busy trying to 'shoot' the 50 targets popping up from 15 meters to 300 meters in front of him.

"A soldier has about four seconds to hit a target and a new one pops up one second after that," SFC Bernard McCord explained. McCord, NCOIC of the infantry remote target systems (IRETS) range, said the soldier would have to hit 23 out of 50 targets to qualify on the range, if qualification was necessary. "Right now, this range is used only for 11B soldiers to familiarize themselves on shooting at a moving target," he said.

There are some stationary targets, but most are moving targets. "This range is computerized. Sometimes the targets don't work right when we have a heavy rain because of the cables, but the rain today isn't bad. If there is a lot of lightening though, the tower will close down," McCord said.

> "The soldier is used to someone telling him to lock and load, to fire, to cease fire. We don't do that here. He's on his own. How much time it takes and how much ammunition he uses is up to him."

In the tower a computer records for each of the firing points, the target hit, at what range and whether or not the target is stationary or a moving target. As soon as someone fires, the tower personnel know that firer's score. "After the soldier is cleared to move off the firing range, we bring around the computer printout so the soldier knows how many hits he received and whether he did better shooting at stationary or moving targets," McCord said. He said the average number of hits for the past year was 14.

The targets are half silhouettes that resemble a Soviet soldier in uniform. Each soldier is issued four 20-round magazines at the time they step into the foxhole. After the initial command from the tower to fire, no other commands are given. "The soldier is used to someone telling him to lock and load, to fire, to cease fire. We don't do that here. He's on his own. How much time it takes and how much ammuntion he uses is up to him," McCord said.

Delta Company, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, visited the IRETS range recently. Even though there was rain, a little soggy weather did not stop training. The training began at 9 a.m. with an introduction and briefing. A live-fire demonstration was given by one of the range cadre before the soldiers were broken down into three groups for classes.

The first class is drive fire mover, where soldiers practice firing at a moving target. The next class is aid to improved marksmanship, where a soldier practices siting on a moving target. The last class before firing is principles of moving target engagement. This is a re-enforcement class on lead guides and firing positions.

Airborne instructors reunite at Benning

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Seventh Annual Reunion of the Old Airborne Department and instructors from the 4th Airborne Training Battalion, The School Brigade, was held at Fort Benning Oct.13.

In kick-off ceremonies, the original Airborne Test Platoon presented SFC James R. Ayers of Jumpmaster Branch with a trophy for being the outstanding Blackhat Instructor of the Year.

Other activities included a rapelling demonstration from the 34-foot and 250-foot jump towers by the Pathfinder Branch, and a parachuting demonstration by the "Silverwings," supported by the Aviation Branch, Directorate of Plans and Training.

After the ceremony, past and present instructors from the Airborne Training Department,along with the Test Platoon,got together at a barbecue and talked about old times, while the children were entertained at the kiddie jump tower.

One member of the Test Platoon was William "Red" King, America's first Airborne enlisted man, according to Charles "Swifty" Wilson, another of the 20 men still living out of the original 50 who volunteered to join the first parachute platoon from the 29th Infantry.

When they became members of Company A, 29th Infantry, "we thought it was something new. Some of us had to take reductions in rank to become a part of the test platoon," he said.

However, according to Wilson, they made more money, because a private's pay was $21 a month, but with flight pay (today's parachutists receive "jump" pay) a private made $72 a month.

Wilson explained how King became the first enlisted paratrooper. "We drew numbers out of a hat to see who would jump first," he said. "Red" drew number two, but when it came time to jump, the man who drew number one refused, so that made "Red" America's first enlisted Airborne Soldier."

> "The purpose of our training was to prove that parachuting from an airplane was a safe means of moving Infantry troops from the air to the ground to get behind enemy lines and disrupt the enemy."

"There were 2 officers and 47 enlisted who qualified with the Airborne's first Test Platoon. We had quite a few people here from Congress, and the purpose of our training was to prove that parachuting from an airplane was a safe means of moving Infantry from the air to the ground, to get behind enemy lines and disrupt the enemy," Wilson said.

Another veteran jumper, who said that he seen action as a paratrooper during World War II in the Pacific, was Telford "Snake Eye" Snipes. Snipes was not a member of the Test Platoon. He said, "I qualified in Panama as a Maverick. That means we had no equipment or towers for training. We had nothing. We qualified May 16, 1942, with the original 501st Battalion. We went to combat as the 2nd Battalion,503rd Regimental Combat Team. We had five missions, the last being on the Island of Corregidor where we suffered 18 percent casualties."

Fort Benning earns National Safety Council award

Fort Benning has been awarded the National Safety Council's award for Best Performance by a Military Installation for 1983. Fred Young, Fort Benning safety manager, accepted the award Oct. 14 in Chicago, Ill.

The award is given in recognition of Fort Benning's driver training history, number of Defensive Driving Course graduates and a notable increase over 1982. Young said at Fort Benning in 1983, there were more than 3,000 people in DDC and more than 500 in the motorcycle course.

The National Safety Council presented the award during the 72nd Annual Safety Congress and Exposition. (USAIC PAO).

DIO branch gets by with less, saves post $$$

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

All it took was one man looking at the funding requirements and asking the question, can we get by with less.

For the Food Services Branch, Services & Support Division, Directorate of Industrial Operations, the answer was a resounding yes, to the tune of $122,232.

For the man, Charlie Willingham, a quality assurance specialist with the Services & Support Division, it was all in a day's work.

"I question every requirement that comes in and look at it to see if we can get by with less," explained Willingham, "because the bottom line is tax dollars."

What he was looking at specifically was KP contracts. "It was costing us too much," said Willingham, "more than was budgeted, based on total square footage to be cleaned, consecutive hours open and estimated meals to be served."

The division was running out of funds towards the end of the fiscal year because the budgeted amount was insufficient to cover the actual cost of KP service.

Willingham surveyed dining facilities at the Army Training Center, all of which were open for 14.5 hours on Sundays. He found that they could provide adequate service if they reduced their hours of operation to 12.5 on Sundays, which would save $93,549 each year.

He also found that the dining facility at Headquarters, ATC, could be closed on weekends and holidays for a savings of $28,582 per year.

"Since it was a nonessential day and the head count was so low, I found that those people who normally ate at the dining facility could be served at other dining facilities in ATC with no problem," said Willingham.

Since the KP services are contracted, the contracts had to be renegotiated to allow for the decreased hours and the closing of the facility.

Crime doesn't pay

Specialist four Calvin C. Jackson, A Troop, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted Oct. 15 of assault with a knife, and assault and battery. Jackson grabbed a woman by the throat and then brandished a knife against other soldiers who sought to aid her. He was sentenced to be reduced to the lowest grade, to forfeit $397 for three months and to be confined at hard labor for two months.

Private David T. Connolly, Company D, 5th Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted Oct. 10 for being AWOL for 20 days. He was sentenced to forfeit $382 and to be confined at hard labor for two months.

Private Mark D. Casey, Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted Oct. 22 of two counts of AWOL and stealing a television from another soldier in the barracks. Casey was sentenced to forfeit $397 for three months, to be confined at hard labor for three months and to be released from the Army with a bad conduct discharge.

Staff sergeant John L. McIntosh, Headquarters, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, The School Brigade, was convicted Oct. 19 of three specifications of receiving graft, in violation of Article 134, UCMJ. McIntosh, while acting as the operations NCO for the 4th Airborne Training Battalion, solicited and accepted money from airborne students in exchange for promising them additional leave and travel time while enroute to the student's next duty station. The students actually received nothing more than what they were entitled to under Army regulations. McIntosh was sentenced to be reduced to the lowest grade, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and to be separated from the service with a bad conduct discharge. (JAG)

Couple chosen as city's top handicapped employees

Deaf couple works in post DIO

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The first thing you feel when meeting Robin and Bobby Ingram is these are two happy people. Their faces light up as they talk about their lives.

You may not understand what they are saying, but their happiness comes through as they speak with their hands, gesturing and seemingly reaching out to communicate.

For these two, their deafness is secondary. They're just two friendly, hard-working young people who also happen to be deaf.

The couple, both employees of the Directorate of Industrial Operations, Maintenance Division, met while students at the Talladega School for the Deaf and dated five years before marrying in December 1983.

Receiving the Columbus Handicapped Employees of the Year Award at a luncheon recently surprised and delighted the young couple, who already feel blessed.

"I thought I had just been invited to a luncheon," Robin said, "so I was really shocked and surprised when they said that Bobby and I were receiving the award."

Faye King, supervisor in the Planning, Production and Control Branch where Robin works as a GS-3 data transcriber, said Robin is really deserving of the award.

"She is conscientious and has applied herself on her job here. She is really an excellent worker."

Bobby earns similar praise from the employees at the Sedan Shop, where he has been a automotive worker since July 1981.

Clayton Bell, Sedan Shop supervisor, said, "Bobby is the best worker I've ever seen. He has a super attitude, catches on fast, and is very loyal. He possesses all the qualities of a good worker."

George Johnson, shop leadman, agreed. "You just can't beat him," he said. "He can do as much work as anybody here and he is a good mechanic, a hard worker."

Working in auto mechanics fulfills a dream that began when Bobby was eight years old, and started tinkering on a motorcycle engine.

"My brother, Ronnie, didn't think I could be a mechanic because he thought it might be dangerous for me, but he decided to teach me anyway," Bobby said.

Robin Ingram

He read repair manuals and later studied mechanics for two years at the Talladega School, then went to work at Fort Benning.

He said he loves his work and plans to do it for the rest of his life. Communications on the job has not been a problem, he explained, because he can read lips and is teaching some of his coworkers to sign.

Robin attended the Talladega School for 14 years, then studied art for three quarters at Chattahoochee Valley Community College. Her mother went to class with her and interpreted the lectures. Then Robin heard that Fort Benning was hiring, applied and went to work three weeks later, in December 1981.

She said she has no immediate plans to continue her art education, but enjoys sketching with chalk and painting with oils in her spare time. She likes to sketch original cartoons and has sold several of her works.

"I love my job here," said Robin, "and plan to continue working unless I have children. Then I'd stay home with them."

In their spare time, the couple enjoy deer hunting together. "I come from a hunting family and my mother likes to hunt too," Robin said.

Bobby said that safety is no problem when they hunt, because they hunt on private property that is only hunted on by his family, so they know who is going to be there.

The couple attend Shalom Cathedral in Phenix City.

Editor's note: Leo Valero, a mobile industrial mechanical inspector in the Maintenance Division, assisted with this interview by translating for the couple.

CHAMPUS mental health eligibility rules are tightened

Eligibility rules on mental health care under CHAMPUS have been simplified and tightened, according to officials with the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

The new rules will apply to CHAMPUS claims on mental health care submitted after Nov. 13.

The new rules spell out the program's long-standing policy to cover only "significant, professionally recognized mental disorders — those that not only cause distress but also impair a patient's ability to function normally in such environments as school or work."

CHAMPUS officials, however,note that the program remains committed to providing mental health care benefits tailored to the special needs of military families who must move frequently, often unaccompanied, and to remote areas.

The rules also update professional standards and monitoring requirements to ensure patients receive quality care. Any long-term stay in a treatment center must be justified as medically necessary.

The new regulation:

- Outlines mental health care services covered by CHAMPUS to include all types of professionally recognized psychotherapy for both inpatients and outpatients. Treatment may include individual, group or family therapy services.
- Extends the limit for group therapy sessions to 90 minutes (a 30-minute increase). Psychotherapy, on an inpatient basis, may be extended to more than five sessions per week in some cases. The program will continue to cover only the bills for two therapy sessions in a seven-day period, on an outpatient basis, unless more are justified as medically or psychologically necessary.
- Allows therapeutic absences from inpatient facilities for more than 72 hours if the doctor or psychologist receives permission in advance from CHAMPUS as part of the patient's treatment plan. This means that CHAMPUS coverage can continue even though the patient is allowed to be at home with his or her family for a short time, officials said.
- Requires that all psychiatric hospitals, public and private, be accredited by the Joint Commission on the Accredidation of Hospitals, or be approved by MEDICARE.
- Provides for more extensive review by CHAMPUS and other professionals to determine whether the care is necessary and appropriate.

Families should check with their health benefits advisor before seeking mental health care because certain reviews and paperwork must still be completed at various points during treatment for CHAMPUS to share the bills. (ARNEWS)

New GI Bill awaits president's signature

Atlanta — A new education assistance program for the military's All-Volunteer Force has cleared both the U.S. House and Senate and is now on the President's desk.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said, "The new program, which is geared toward recruitment and retention, will provide higher learning opportunities to qualified and skilled personnel, enabling the military to maintain desired levels of strength with well-trained, high quality people."

Under the provisions of the new measure, known as Title VII of the Defense Authorization Act, the program would apply to personnel entering service after June 30, 1985, and before July 1, 1988. Members on active duty as of July 1, 1985, who continue on active duty for three years and who are entitled to education benefits under the Vietnam G.I. Bill, would get full benefits without pay deductions plus one-half of the benefits to which they are entitled under the Vietnam-era program.

For eligible personnel with three years of service, there would be a reduction of $100 per month for the first year of basic pay, after which participants would then be entitled to $300 per month for up to 36 months.

For personnel initially enlisting for two years, the rate of contribution would be the same, but their entitlement would be $250 monthly with a 36 months limit.

With a six year enlistment, reenlistment or extension, National Guard and Reserve personnel would receive a basic entitlement of $140 a month for 36 months.

"The measure had a long, hard struggle before gaining Congressional approval," said Wheeler, "and its proponents believe that the programs will most certainly provide for our armed forces and, ultimately, our national security. (GDVS)

SMA Glen Morrell speaks to SFC Lawrance Mayorga and SGM Robert Spencer (l to r) about the Light Leaders Course and its importance.

Sergeant Major of the Army shares views

By Victoria L. Darcy
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Starry eyed from watching too many war movies and listening to his brothers' and father's war stories, Glen E. Morrell joined the Army in November 1954, hoping to be assigned to the 11th Airborne Division, a unit where one of his brothers had served.

He met his first disappointment, one of few in his almost 30-year career, when DA sent him to the 82nd Airborne Division instead. When his three-year tour ended, Morrell did as many soldiers do — he got out, but soon returned.

"I was out 83 or 84 days," the West Virginia native said, "and hadn't even unpacked my duffel bag!" Publicity about the Special Forces had struck an adventurous chord, and Morrell concluded in 1962 that he wanted to be a Green Beret. Many years and several tours later, Morrell reached a goal he'd never really set — he became the sergeant major of the Army.

"I only wanted to be a first sergeant," he explained. "Back then they were E-7 Master Sergeants, and then the Army came out with the "super-grades," E-8 and E-9, so I became an E-8 First Sergeant and later a E-9 sergeant major. When the command sergeants major program started, I wanted to be a battalion command sergeant major — I thought anything else was just "icing on the cake."

He aimed for the 18th Airbor-

SMA Morrell tours 197th units

The 197th Infantry Brigade recently played host to Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell.

Morrell took a few hours out of his recent Fort Benning trip to visit with the brigade's sergeants major and one of the Brigade line units.

Escorted by Brigade Command Sergeant Major William C. Webb and other senior noncommissioned officers, including Post Command Sergeant Major Roy Owens, the entourage began the visit by dining at the 197th's award winning Support Battalion Dining Facility.

Following lunch, the assemblage returned to brigade headquarters where a helicopter waited to fly them to South Galloway Range for a briefing on the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor's NCO Development Program (NCODP) and to view the unit's current tank gunnery.

Throughout the sergeant major's visit, soldiers from Bravo Company, 2-69, continued with table 7 of their annual 8 table gunnery, all the while discreetly trying for a glimpse of Morrell.

"I think it's a fantastic honor to just see the sergeant major of the Army," said Sgt. Kenneth Thrower, gunner for B-24.

"This presented the troops a great opportunity to see them," said Sgt. William Jackson, gunner/tank commander for B-66. "It gives the younger troops a chance to see how far they can go as an NCO. Sure, some of them will go on to OCS and become commissioned officers, but the NCOs are the backbone of the Army."

After a briefing on the M60A3, Morrell attended a debriefing session with one of the tank crews that had just completed evaluation.

Following the debriefing, Morrell offered advice to the young soldiers before leaving.

Army helps locate missing children

Fort Monroe, Va. — The Army has two ways to help military families locate their missing children, both available at Fort Benning. The first is by entering childrens' names in the "Missing Persons File" at the National Crime Information Center, which is run by the FBI.

Army families living on post at installations in the United States can ask the local military police for assistance. When a parent, legal guardian or next-of-kin furnishes facts and circumstances concerning the missing child, along with a description of the child and a written request for assistance, the military police will enter the child's name into the NCIC's Missing Persons File. The child's name and description are then available to any law enforcement agency in the United States.

Families living off post should give the same information to civilian law enforcement authorities and ask them to enter the child's name into the Missing Persons File. If police or other local authorities do not carry out the request, military police will enter the child's name in the Missing Persons File.

A second program is the "Consent-to-Print" program, which provides a positive means of identifying missing children by recording their fingerprints.

According to Sp4 Kelly Walker of the Military Police Activity's Crime Prevention Unit, post parents who consent to the procedure can have their children fingerprinted by the military police. Fingerprinting can be accomplished at the Provost Marshal's Office, building 215, during normal duty hours, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., during specially scheduled programs conducted periodically at post schools, or any time the crime prevention unit exhibits its mobile display van locally, Walker said. The service was offered Wednesday to residents of the South Main Post community and the mobile van will be stationed, together with members of the Columbus Police Department's crime prevention unit, at the Columbus Square Mall, and will set up Nov. 3 in conjunction with the upcoming Retiree Open House.

Fingerprint cards are given to the parents, with the suggestion that they keep the cards and a current photograph with description in a safe place. The fingerprints never need to be retaken since they do not change. However, the photograph and description should be changed every year at Christmas or on the child's birthday or other convenient date. Copies of the fingerprints are not retained by the police, school, or any other official agency.

The program was tested for the Army at Fort Jackson, S.C., and is in the process of being adopted Armywide. An individual who wishes more information on the "Consent-to-Print" program at Fort Benning should contact the military police at 545-7154/7115.

How safe are your children?

By Gary B. Baker
Fort Lee Traveller

How safe are your children when they go out to play? My mother must have thought I was pretty safe when I was a kid growing up because she allowed me an enormous amount of freedom, which contributed to my growth and independence. I roamed the woods around our home in Maryland almost at will. From elementary school, I would often walk downtown alone to meet her at the supermarket.

Times were somewhat different then though. We never locked our front door at night or when we went away, and neither did any of the local churches. Cars in the parking lots of stores always had the windows rolled down and the doors unlocked. Shop keepers were open and friendly, even to strangers.

There was an air of hospitality everywere. Today my home town, like most cities in the United States, is gripped by what is known as a "siege mentality." The police force has tripled since I left home 10 years ago. The tiny jail that somewhat resembled the one on the Andy Griffith show has been replaced by a maximum-security jail. People lock everything down, even picnic tables and lawn chairs.

My home town is no exception. The American society as a whole is beginning to recognize how dangerous it really is out there on the streets. But one danger, until just recently, has been relatively ignored. The danger of having our children abducted, molested, and even murdered.

As a child, my daughter was taught by me to be very independent. To stand on her own. To go out into the world and face it with a smile. But as she grows I am often tempted to close the door on her independence. I have curbed it. She plays in a fenced-in yard. An adult is always within shouting range of her. She goes nowhere alone. She doesn't even cross the street to her friend's house without permission.

DIVERS WANTED
If you're a certified advanced diver with enough ocean dives logged, you may qualify to join a group to dive a sunken WWI German cruiser off the Carolinas next spring. Purpose of the dive: relics. And if you can meet the qualifications for that one, then you may also be interested in diving the U-352, a German U-BOAT sunk in the same area.
Say you're not a diver? No problem. Call Jerry or Jim at Planet Ocean and they'll give you details of how our Scuba Training Programs could have you ready for these dives by May. It won't be easy. But then again, nothing ventured nothing gained. And gain is guaranteed.

DON'T LET THE GOBLINS GET YOU!

October 31 is a night for ghosts, goblins, gremlins and other assorted trick or treaters to be traveling throughout our neighborhoods.

On Fort Benning hundreds of young children will be trick or treating. For their labor, they hope to receive a prize of assorted candies.

Adults and older children enjoy themselves by handing out candy and reflecting on the joyous times when they were younger and participated in this festive occasion.

Attempting to guess the names of the children behind the masks adds to the excitement of the evening.

In order to maintain Halloween as an enjoyable and happy occasion for all, certain restrictions have been established on Fort Benning. The hours of Halloween trick or treating will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Only pre-teenage children (12 and younger) are expected to participate and they must be accompanied by an adult.

Here are some helpful do's and don'ts for trick or treaters to make Halloween safer and more enjoyable.

- Do wear a costume that makes it easy to walk, see and be seen.
- Do carry a flashlight so you can see and be seen easily.
- Do use reflective tape (if available) on your costume so people driving cars can see you.
- Do plan your route ahead of time and ensure that your parents know your route.
- Do cross streets at corners and walk facing traffic.
- Do know your phone number and address in case you get lost.
- Don't eat any treats until you get home and they have been inspected by your parents.
- Don't trick or treat alone.
- Don't cross a street without removing your face mask.
- Don't accept any fruit or unwrapped candy.
- Don't accept a ride from anyone without your parent's permission or knowledge.

An additional word of caution for those who will be driving in the housing area: SLOW DOWN! "Kids don't always think, cars can't think, but you can think!"

If you have any treats that you suspect to have been tampered with call the Military Police at 545-5222. The Military Police wish a safe and happy Halloween for everyone. (Provost Marshal)

Airborne-Ranger reflects on Korean War

Soldiers hold reunion at Fort Benning

By Ron Buffkin
Special to the Bayonet

Ranger training in autumn of 1950 held one promise, a chance for first blood in Korea. Gordon M. Voss, then a 22-year-old acting-corporal, remembers his first sergeant's invitation, "Volunteers needed, parachute qualified, Infantrymen preferred."

"Five of us were working at tower week of Jump School and signed up as soon as we heard what they were looking for," said Voss. Voss, 57, is owner of the Jordan City Barber Shop in Columbus, and was one of dozens of Korean War veterans from the Airborne-Ranger companies reunited at their convention here recently.

A total of 18 Ranger companies were activated during the Korean War and 17 were Airborne-Ranger units trained here at Fort Benning.

"We filled up the companies as we arrived and I must have been one of the first since I was already here at Benning and I ended up in the first squad, first platoon, of the First Ranger Company," said Voss.

Long before Harmony Church became associated with the coveted black and gold arc of a Ranger tab, Voss and his Ranger buddies called it home. Today's Ranger student, however, would agree with Voss when he says that the time spent in the barracks was "minimal."

"In August, we trucked out to Harmony Church, pulled the boards off the windows and put bunks in the platoon bays," said Voss. That afternoon, according to Voss, the 1st Ranger Company began to shuffle and sweat on the first of its many conditioning marches

"We started with about 200 men, but lost a lot because some couldn't hack it physically," said Voss. "We finished training with 117 men," he added.

Even without a Ranger Department, black berets or Ranger license plates, Voss and his fellow Rangers stood out. "Everybody thought we were crazy, and possibly they were right with our running around in the dark, waking everybody up," Voss said.

Voss described his training as a mix of cross-familiarization in all the Infantry weapons at that time, infiltration techniques, hand-to-hand combat and a Ranger's traditional delight, PT.

"Once our CO took us out near Kings Pond and ordered a right face off the dirt trail we were using right into the pond," Voss said, "in what's probably the first example of the Combat Water Survival Test for Ranger training."

"The hardest thing was the time element. We had little rest and went at it both day and night," Voss said. Despite a daily routine of hand-to-hand combat and sweeps through muddy infiltration courses, Voss said morale rode on a peak here at Benning.

"We knew we were well-trained and had higher morale than anybody," Voss said. In September and October, Voss' Ranger unit polished their skills in a variety of missions that are today linked to Ranger operations.

"Capture of prisoners, infiltrations, night attacks, patrols, we trained for it all," said Voss. According to Voss, everyone was familiar with the legendary Ranger battalions of World War II fame, but only a handful of men in the 1st Ranger Company had seen combat in the war and none had been in the Ranger battalions.

"We knew we were going to Korea, but rumors were going around about how we were going to be used," said Voss. Unlike today's Ranger battalion soldier who has his unit's mission statement etched in memory, Voss said they were kept in the dark.

"We were really too busy to worry about how we were to be used," said Voss. "I felt like we could handle anything they threw at us and all of us were ready," he added.

Graduation for the 1st Ranger Company was in November of 1950. According to Voss, then a machine-gunner in 1st platoon, they were lean, mean and Ranger tough. No Ranger tabs were pinned on their sleeves and no guest speaker delivered words of praise.

"They put us on a troop train heading for California," said Voss. Those 117 men of the 1st Ranger Co. could understand what "SUA SPONTE" means to today's Ranger. Latin for "of their own accord", today's Ranger motto reflects the attitude of men like Voss who have served in Ranger units.

Voss attended the activation of the 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment and the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry. Voss described today's Rangers as, "fantastic" and added, "if we would have had these battalions 34 years ago, it would've been great."

How safe

I fear for her

To be quite honest, when my daughter goes out to play, I fear for her very life. Call me paranoid if you wish, but I have good reason to be. Why? For one thing, statistics compiled over the past decade show that one in every four of the little girls in my daughter's kindergarten class will be raped, sexually molested or both before the age of 21. One in seven of the boys will suffer the same fate.

That is a staggering statistic when you think about how many children in this country will grow up having been sexually molested. But if you think that is staggering, consider this statistic: a national study has shown that the average child molester victimizes on the average some 68 children before being arrested. Not charged. Not convicted. Arrested.

Sixty-eight young lives permanently ruined. It is hard enough for a 25-year-old woman with a husband and two loving children to overcome the trauma of being raped. How does a 5-year-old get over the psychological problems that such an incident will inflict upon her?

But all of this is not the worst part of this almost unbelievable statistic. The worst part is that since the child molester has no previous criminal record, and no evidence of previous child molestation, the court most often gives a light sentence, or none at all, with a small fine. Within hours of being arrested, the child molester is free again to prey on other children.

Paranoid? I'm not paranoid. I am just scared to death. It isn't bad enough that some 60,000 children are abducted each year — abducted from their homes, schools, playgrounds and city streets. But on top of it, the police departments in most cities refuse to enter a missing child case actively until 24, 48 or even 72 hours after the child is reported missing. Their reasoning is that the odds are a missing child report is nothing more than a runaway, and they are right. More than 80 percent of all missing children reported each year are runaways. But last year the local, county, state and federal police departments in this country were wrong 60,000 times.

Protecting children

Where the life of a child is concerned, being wrong once is being wrong too many times.

How can we reduce the chances of our children falling prey to a handful of demented people who need extensive medical and psychiatric care? I wanted to know so I wrote the Adam Walsh Child Resource Center.

You may be familiar with the name Adam Walsh. A movie about his abduction and murder has aired several times on national television and his father, John Walsh, is a leading advocate of legislation that aids in tracking down and identifying missing children.

> "To be quite honest, when my daughter goes out to play, I fear for her very life. Call me paranoid if you wish, but I have good reason to be."

The center's response was simple: Educate your children. Don't be afraid to teach them that they have parts of their body that are sacred to them and no one should touch them. Don't be afraid to teach your kids that there are bad people who would take great pleasure in hurting them. Don't be afraid to scare your kids a little. Like I recently told my congressman, I would rather scare my kid to death than have someone torture her to death.

If you are interested in obtaining more information concerning what you can do to help make this country a safer place for our children to grow up in, please write:

Faith in God increased through prayer

By Chaplain Joseph D'Silva

Prayer is one of the activities followers of all religions practice. All religions encourage prayers to God. All of us pray, some of us regularly and systematically, some at certain times in their lives. Every believer wants to further his intimacy with God and this is achieved through the means of prayer.

Though all of us pray, at least some among us restrict prayers to the area of petitions alone; petitions are an integral part of prayer, but prayer includes much more than petitions. What then, is prayer? A simple, modern definition of prayer is "conversation or dialogue with God;" man and God entering into a friendly conversation. Man speaks to God and listens to God speaking to him.

Man raises his total personhood to God in acknowledgement of his subordination and dependence on Him, praising God for His almighty power, goodness and love, with a grateful heart for the blessings he has received, at the same time seeking forgiveness from and reconciliation with God, with the request for continued support from Him. We express our joys and sorrows, our gratitude and frustrations, hopes and anxieties to God, whom we consider our creator, father, friend and guide. In prayer we speak to God as a child speaking to his Father, and we listen to our Father speaking to us. Through frequent conversation with God, we strengthen our relationship with Him. The ultimate prayer is the quest for God;"One thing have I asked of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days to come." (Ps 27:4)

Reflections

Some of the appropriate qualities of prayer are: attention, prayer offered with an inner sincerity to God who reads even our innermost thoughts; devotion, which prompts us to have a total dedication to God; confidence, the quality which reminds us of the words of the Lord Jesus, 'Ask and it shall be given to you'; and perseverance, with steadfastness.

We find great models of prayer both in the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures. Psalms of the Sacred Scripture are excellent prayers containing all the essential elements of prayer: praising God for what He is, thanking Him for the marvels He has done for us, seeking His forgiveness and asking His help in various spiritual and temporal needs. The most important prayer for Christians is the Lord's Prayer. Christians see in the person of Jesus' life and teachings the need for a deep prayer life and model of prayer. "Rising early in the morning, he went off to a lonely place . . . there he was absorbed in prayer." (Mk 1:35). Prayer was part of His preaching. When he sent out his disciples to every town and village ahead of Him, He said: "The harvest is rich, but workers are few . . . ask the harvest-master to send workers to his harvest." (Lk 10:2)

Prayer is power. It may sound blasphemous to say that we have "power" over God in prayer, but the fact is that our prayers to God set in motion great tides of grace over mankind. Christians might say that it is prayer which releases the power of the death and resurrection of Christ. God, the creator of all, especially of the human race, respects and honors the free will of man in such a way that He would not force him to act or seek anything. God does not do violence to man's free will. But God has lovingly planned great things for each person. It takes the power of prayer to set in motion all the things God has planned for us.

We Americans who declare our trust in God may increase the quality of our trust and faith in Him when we take time out to pray.

Chaplain researches Halloween history

Through the years many customs have grown up around the celebration of Halloween, but their origin and meaning still remain a mystery to most people. Chaplain Ray Harper recently became interested in the historical background of Halloween, especially from a religious perspective. The following is an except from his research paper:

Like many people, I was aware of some connection with All Saint's Day, but that was the extent of my knowledge about Halloween from a religious standpoint. I was quite surprised to find that our Halloween tradition is not derived solely from All Saints' Day customs. It was formerly associated with ancient religious beliefs surrounding the Celtic Druids' New Year. A druid was a priest who managed religious affairs and performed the office of judge among ancient Celtic nations in Gaul, Britain, and Germany.

The Celtic tribes who practiced the Druidic religion also inhabited Wales, Ireland, Scotland, and Brittany. These people celebrated their New Year on Nov. 1 which coincided with a joint festival honoring their "Sungod" and "Samhain", the Lord of the Dead. This day was selected because it signified the preparations for winter by bringing the livestock into the barns.

This was a time when the dead flocked back to mingle with the living. The belief was held that 'the sinful souls of those who had died during the year had relegated to the bodies of animals.' It was thought that the expiation for sins and the freeing of souls to claim heavenly rewards happened through gifts and sacrifices made by the living. The sacrifices were of two types: animal and human! Horses were most frequently used because they were sacred to the "Sungod", while the human sacrifices

ITB soldiers learn Infantry squad tactics at Malone 22

By Ron Buffkin
Special to the Bayonet

"We're pretty close to combat," said SFC Harold Davis, NCOIC of Malone 22. Popcorn sounds of M-16s barked from a draw below us as a fire team from C Company, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade plunged for cover. Davis paused as an M-60 machine-gun barked at the young soldiers. "Confidence and teamwork is what we're about," Davis declared.

Davis and his 14 NCOs at Malone 22 gave initial entry soldiers a taste of realism in an 8-hour exercise in Squad Tactical Training. Malone 22 of the Malone Range Complex is period four of six periods of STT and placed two fire teams in a deliberate attack scenario.

"Four M-60 machine-guns fire supporting fire over the heads of the teams," Davis said. "By keeping the rounds at five meters, the troops get a realistic sound of rounds going above them, but the safety margin is there also," he added.

Master sergeant Michael St. John, chief instructor for STT said, "Of all the six periods of STT, Malone 22 is one of the more dangerous ranges, so the range demands the best in instructors."

Davis agreed that he has some of the best instructors on Fort Benning. "My NCOs develop a sixth sense about soldiers," he said. Davis explained that a dry-fire run on the 800-meter course gives his NCOs the chance to spot problems before they happen.

"When a company arrives, we give them training in the squad deliberate attack and how to employ weapons, explaining how the noise factor of the M-60 will affect control of the fire team," he said.

Each fire team maneuvers through scrub brush down a lane under the dual-control of a Malone 22 instructor and a drill sergeant from the company using the range. The new soldiers' cadre select which soldiers will work as team leaders for the exercise.

Sergeant first class John Alston, instructor on Malone 22, sees his job as one of the best on Fort Benning. "We actually get to see results," he said. "They leave here able to accomplish a squad combat mission with live rounds."

Alston also described Malone 22 as a realistic experience for the initial entry soldiers. All soldiers on the course get the benefit of a trained Infantryman to coach them through to their objective.

Safety NCO for Malone 22, SFC William J. Kyle, stressed the importance of safety on the range. "This is a safe range," Kyle said. "A mutual trust exists among the instructors here, and we try to make this close to the real thing for the soldiers."

Captain Cedric Ray, committee chief for STT, declared, "we've got the best NCOs in the Army making the best Infantrymen in the world." He said that the six periods of STT train more than 35,000 soldiers a year.

Once a fire team attacks its objective, a critique is given by the NCOs. "Critiques help the soldier and are where my NCOs must be true instructors and tacticians," Davis said. "This is where NCOs have to know tactics." Davis said Malone 22 gives IET soldiers a better understanding of combat and the difficulty in communication and control. Several soldiers from C-6-1 called Malone 22 one of the hardest things they've done so far in the Army.

Captain Keith Dearden, commander of C-6-1, said period four is one of the better phases of STT. "This prepares our soldiers to be members of a rifle squad," Dearden said. Company C sent 137 soldiers through Malone 22.

"I always tell these soldiers," Davis said, "that you can never tell where you might find yourself tomorrow, and this could be their last squad live-fire prior to combat."

Alston summed up the attitude Malone 22 instructors have about their range's effect on soldiers. "When they walk off this range, all they need is a squad leader and they'll be good to go."

ADVICE — A Malone 22 instructor gives advice on movement techniques to a C-6-1 soldier.

Nation pays tribute to women veterans

For the first time, the nation will pay special tribute to its more than 1.2 million women military veterans.

President Reagan has signed a Congressional resolution proclaiming Nov. 11 - 17, 1984, "National Women Veterans Recognition Week." The resolution calls for an observance to "create greater public awareness and recognition of the contributions of women veterans, to express the Nation's appreciation for their women veterans, to express the Nation's appreciation for their service, and to inspire more responsive care and services for women veterans."

Administrator of Veterans Affairs Harry N. Walters has urged all VA facilities to initiate appropriate projects to emphasize VA's role in serving women veterans.

"Women have played a vital part in the defense of our country... from the legendary Molly Pitcher of our American Revolution, through all other conflicts and in peacetime," Walters said. "They were on the beaches at Anzio nursing the wounded, they were prisoners of war in the Phillipines, and they have piloted our military aircraft."

Women veterans make up 4.1 percent of the 28.2-million total veteran population.

Since President Reagan named Walters to head the VA in December 1982, a number of steps to improve service to women veterans have been taken, including the appointment of an 18-member Advisory Committee on Women Veterans.

VA medical centers are developing a formal plan for the care of women veterans and to identify any barriers to their care. Though the majority of health problems for which women veterans are being treated are not gender-related, provision of gynecologic care to both in-patients and out-patients has been upgraded.

Privacy limitations at VA medical facilities are being corrected to put them in line with the VA policy of providing equal care to all veterans, male and female. (VA) were criminals (usually put in wicker and thatch cages shaped like animals or giants). The cages containing the criminals were then burned. Later the Romans forbade this type of sacrifice, but in the Middle Ages black cats (considered friends of witches or even transformed witches) were still burned in this manner.

Various traditions developed, but none were of Christian origin until about the middle of the 8th century A.D. Pope Gregory III transplanted All Hallows Day from the first Sunday following Pentecost to Nov. 1 in order to Christianize the Celtic new year. During the next century Pope Gregory IV made it a universal church holiday. In the Middle Ages, however, "All Hallows E'en" — the eve of All Saints' Day — became known as the time for the presence of witches and sorcerers.

Costumes are a modern custom associated with pagan New Year rites. The ghosts that were thought to throng about the houses of the living were greeted with a banquet laden table. At the end of the feast, masked and costumed villagers representing the souls of the dead paraded to the outskirts of town leading the ghosts away.

"Trick or treat" stems from a long standing American tradition called 'Mischief Night' or Halloween. Its basis is found in the belief that ghosts and fairies roamed the roads on this night curdling milk and riding people's horses to exhaustion.

Christianity seems to have had some influence on this event. A custom called "Souling," or "Soulcaking," descended from Reformation times. It consisted of "going about on All Saints" or "All Souls" begging for cakes in remembrance of the dead. Also, the "Souler" offered to "fast for the departed souls in return for money or an offering." Originally, soul cakes were intended as a bread dole to the community poor. More recently, UNICEF has been associated with Halloween as a money raising effort for the poor children of the world.

ne Corps – the only battalion he wanted to serve in as a command sergeant major, but his goal never materialized. While serving on ROTC duty, Morrell received a call from DA and was offered the 1-75th Ranger Battalion command sergeant major position at Fort Stewart, Ga.

"I thought it was a joke," he said. "I'd tried to get that job before but my unit wouldn't release me. They thought I was Ranger qualified, but I wasn't!"

Faced with a major career decision and offered a position that he really wanted, Morrell disregarded the fact that he was 41 years old and began Ranger training at Fort Benning. He finished the course as the distinguished graduate — probably the oldest Ranger student ever, but no one seems to know for sure.

"I went through the full course just like everyone else — just another 'dirty old' Ranger," he joked. "I think I could do it again today - soldiers can do anything they want if they put their minds to it."

Morrell was sworn in as the Sergeant Major of the Army on July 1, 1983, with 29 years of experience behind him. He is the enlisted soldier's representative at DA level and has consistently urged Congress to approve more pay raises for the military.

SMA Morrell visited Fort Benning recently and spent most of his three days here talking with soldiers and NCOs about their problems and needs. The outspoken Sergeant Major of the Army shared some of his convictions during an interview with the Bayonet.

BAYONET: How can we improve combat readiness?

MORRELL: We have to make training the best it could possibly be and stabilize the force — we need to quit letting training distractors interfere. I feel the excuse, "well, post says we have to do this," is just a crutch. If a unit gets a good training program and plans properly, it shouldn't let anything detract from that — those other things are secondary to training. I don't believe in wasting a soldier's time. If a unit has something to do, then do the "dadgum" thing and don't let anything interfere!

As long as we continue to get the money we need to train a good force, readiness will be where it should be, too. We need to keep getting those pay raises soldiers deserve to keep pace with inflation. "Whittling away" at the moral obligations soldiers have to their families certainly impacts on readiness.

BAYONET: How does it look for extending the GI Bill past 1989?

MORRELL: Not good at all. We have approximately 80,000 soldiers that would have to get out in 1985 if they wanted to get a four-year degree and take advantage of the GI Bill. I hope that we can do something about extending it, but that prospect doesn't look good right now.

BAYONET: What are your views on civilian education for enlisted soldiers?

MORRELL: We shouldn't sacrifice civilian education over military education. I recommend soldiers further their civilian education, but military education comes first.

BAYONET: How will military education affect a soldier's career, and what if a soldier can't get the school he or she wants?

MORRELL: If a soldier hasn't had the basic courses like PLDC, they're going to have to keep knocking on their supervisor's door to let the command know that they need these type courses. They can get the courses they need. We want leaders that are competent in their MOS and they have to be to remain competitive. If an E-6, for example, has "skated" by these schools, why should he get promoted to E-7? Soldiers need to take their own initiative after duty hours, too, but some just don't want to "burn the midnight oil." They want everything during duty hours, but we can't always do that. Soldiers should want to be good leaders and attain the highest rank they possibly can and these schools will help them attain their goals.

BAYONET: What do you think of the all-volunteer concept and how do you feel the increase in female soldiers has impacted on the Army?

MORRELL: We've led the United States in events of this great nation and I think an all-volunteer force is the best thing I've seen so far. The Army is better today that any in the past and women have helped considerably, too. In 1973 when the All-Volunteer concept started, we'd have been "dead in the water" without them. I'd like to see the Army continue grooming female soldiers to get them in higher leadership positions, too, and certainly to set the example for our younger females. We're hindered by women's tendency to retire when their 20 years are up, so we don't have many female sergeants major. It's not because we don't want them — they're just not there.

BAYONET: Why are the reclassification policies being made?

MORRELL: We don't have the MOSs in balance because we didn't have the control measures that should have been there coming out of the Vietnam era. When it surfaced that there were career fields with as much as 167 percent over-strengths, we had to do something about it to get the structure straight without penalizing a soldier's promotion. We're trying to get soldiers to overage MOSs to move to shortage MOSs and send them to school so they'll be proficient in their new MOS. We're not trying to force anyone out, but if an individual doesn't want to reclassify, he can't reenlist in an overage MOS. We could balance the force today, but the soldier would pay the price.

BAYONET: What are the main issues facing soldiers today?

MORRELL: Training - soldiers want good training and need better areas to train in. Quality of life is a big issue, too. Soldiers deserve good billets, support facilities for themselves and their families, and adequate quarters. We did get the bill passed on space-available dental care for dependents, which was a big plus. Soldiers are certainly concerned about pay and promotions should come in a timely manner. We're working on that, but Congress controls the "purse strings." I've asked Congress many times, "what price tag can you put on freedom?" Retirement benefits have alot of soldiers "stirred up" right now and I'm very concerned about that.

Song's lyrics encourage all to vote in election

Editor's note: Last week the Bayonet featured a story about retired NCO Lonnie Jackson, a concerned local citizen who wrote a popular song encouraging us all to vote. The following is the song's lyrics.

"Get It Together And Vote"

Open the door in eighty-four,
We need your vote and many more
Don't you hide and don't you slide
Come on people and show your pride
Let's get it together and vote.

Black, yellow, brown and white
Get it together and do it right
Don't let the weather stop your plight
Do your duty with all your might
Let's get it together and vote.

Let's get it together, brothers
Let's get it together, sisters

(Repeat Chorus)
Let's get it together everyone
Let's get it together and vote.

Get the feelin' be for real
Do your best to pass the test
Cast your vote and help promote Brotherhood as each one should
Let's get it together and vote.

(Repeat Chorus - Second verse)

Get it together in all kinds of weather
Let's get together and vote.

Unit cadre step aside during FTX, let students fill leadership roles

By Willie Means
197th Public Affairs Office

When the 197th Infantry Brigade dedicates one of its units to support the Infantry School, the unit gets involved.

Recently during an 18-hour Infantry Officer Advance Course (IOAC) field training exercise (FTX), the entire leadership of B Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry stepped out to let students from IOAC-5-84 fill the cadre positions for the FTX.

"Now, this is what it's all about. I've been an instructor since February 1983 and this is the first time I recall the officers actually getting to work on the equipment," said spokesman Capt. Timothy W. Brown. "The 197th Infantry Brigade has provided tremendous support; nothing but total cooperation. This definitely proves we're a combined arms team."

The training was designed to give the advanced course students the opportunity to train and lead soldiers in a mechanized movement-to-contact task.

"I feel the students learned more here in one day working with the equipment and soldiers than in the entire time I've been here," stated Brown, referring to the classroom instruction as opposed to hands-on training. "The students wanted to do this."

During the FTX, students had a daily scenario that gave each officer a chance to take charge of a tactical situation.

"We tried to give the students a chance to show they understood the training," explained Brown. "If something is tactically unsound, or unsafe, we worked with the students to smooth things out before releasing them. So far, all we've had was positive feedback."

The students started training at 8 a.m., receiving a safety order and an operations order. They remained in their initial group until all information was verified, then were broken down into small teams. From 9 a.m. through 11 a.m., the officers discussed troop leading procedures and the advantages and disadvantages of weapons systems; principles of movement; characteristics of the movement-to-contact; and identity of terrain features. During mid-afternoon the students were required to reconnoiter the training area.

During this phase of the training, students had to react to situations like direct fire and respond to sudden attacks.

After the recon, the students completed their planning by preparing operations orders for company level operations. Once this was completed, all the officers were established into the company team's chain of command.

"The students didn't really know what their job would be until they actually wrote up their operations orders and reassembled," said Brown.

Regulation defines soldier's rights, responsibilities in election campaign

As the Presidential election on Nov. 6 approaches, soldiers and civilian employees of the Army will probably see an increase in political activities in the communities near installations.

All Americans over 18 have the right to vote and the responsibility to do so. But some people may find themselves confused about their rights and responsibilities with regard to this election.

There are numerous restrictions on a soldier's activities to support candidates. These are explained in detail by AR 600-20, Chapter 5, some of which include:

- Soldiers may not solicit, receive or make political contributions from or to an officer or employee of the Federal Government (including the Reagan Re-Election Committee).
- Soldiers may attend political meetings as private individuals, but they must avoid any activity which might imply official endorsement of any political organization.
- Officers and NCOs can't tell their subordinates who to vote for, but may engage in free discussion with them about candidates and issues.
- Military personnel may not run as a partisan political party's candidate for office.

The Hatch Act, passed by Congress in 1939-1940, defines the limits of federal civilian employees' participation in political elections.

These employees may:

- Register and vote as they choose.
- Assist in non-partisan voter registration drives.
- Express opinions about candidates and issues.
- Participate in campaigns where none of the candidates represents a political party (except that employees may not make political contributions to an officer or a Federal Government employee, including the Reagan Re-Election Committee).
- Contribute to political organizations and attend political fund raisers, rallies and meetings.
- Wear political badges, buttons and stickers.
- Join political clubs or parties.
- Sign nominating petitions.
- Campaign for or against referendum questions, constitutional amendments, or municipal ordinances.

Civilian employees are not allowed to:

- Be candidates for public office in partisan elections.
- Campaign for or against particular candidates or states of political candidates.
- Make campaign speeches or take part in other campaign activities to help elect particular political candidates.
- Distribute campaign materials for particular candidates or parties.
- Collect contributions or sell tickets to political fund raisers.
- Organize or manage political rallies or meetings.
- Hold office in political clubs or parties.
- Circulate nominating petitions.
- Work to register voters for one party only.

Soldiers and civilians who aren't registered are urged to do so immediately. Supervisors can't use their authority to influence the way subordinates vote. They may and should, however, encourage them to cast a ballot. Remember, every vote counts, but only if it's cast can it be counted. (ANS)

AUSA meeting

Robert Czaszai explains the features of the new updated version of the M1E1 Abrams main battle tank to Fort Benning's soldier of the year, Sp4 Kenneth McKenzie, during the 30th annual meeting of the Association of the U.S. Army held in Washington D.C. recently. The three-day meeting brought together soldiers and generals, industry leaders and civilian officials for seminars, workshops and addresses by the Secretary of the Army and Chief of Staff.

AAFES warns parents about crib activity bar

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) is helping Fisher Price Toys alert parents about a safety problem with an activity bar for cribs. Fisher-Price, in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), issued the safety alert about its #155 play gym. In late March, the company received a report that a one-year-old child died when a hooded sweater became entangled in a #155 play gym set. In May 1980, a previous death was reported due to a child's clothing getting caught on a #155 play gym. In 1981, Fisher-Price began labeling the crib toy to warn parents to remove the toy from the crib when the child is able to push up on its hand and knees or reached 5 months of age.

AAFES quality assurance technicians say the #199 play gym, which Fisher-Price began marketing in March, is similar in design to the #155 play gym. The #199 play gym carries the same warning.

Fisher-Price and the CPSC issued the alert to warn parents about the unlabeled #155 play gyms that may still be in use. AAFES officials wish to remind parents about the warning on the labeled toys.

Consumers who have questions may call Fisher-Price on a toll-free line at 1-800-828-7319. (ARNEWS)

VEAP offers education savings

The (Veteran's Educational Assistance Program) VEAP is an educational savings program open to all enlisted soldiers. The program pays a two for one return on the money you save for college. That's an offer banks and savings institutions would have a hard time matching.

You can contribute as little as $25 or as much as $100 per month to a VEAP account. At the end of 12 consecutive months of contribution, the government contributes $2 to every $1 you have saved.

Your contributions are limited to $2,400 during a two-year enlistment or $2,700 during a three-or-more-year enlistment. Your contribution is taken from your paycheck after taxes, the government contribution is completely tax-free.

The Army College Fund, formerly ULTRA-VEAP, combines VEAP with extra Army benefits. New enlistees can qualify for special Army College Fund bonuses as high as $8,000 for a two year enlistment, $12,000 for three years, and for enlistments after Oct. 1, 1984, $18,300 for four years.

To qualify, an enlistee must:

- Be non-prior service
- Be a high school diploma graduate
- Score 50 or above on the Armed Forces Qualification Test
- Enlist for a selected occupational specialty
- Enroll in VEAP

Money is contributed to your personal Army College Fund in three ways: from the money you put into your VEAP account each month, from the money put in by the government's two for one match, and from the special Army College Funds bonus.

You can increase your VEAP account at any time up to the day you separate from service, by either increasing your payroll deduction or making a lump sum deposit up to the $2,400 limit for two years or $2,700 for three years.

After separation your money is transferred to the Veterans' Administration, which mails the monthly checks. The amount of your monthly check in based onthe total amount in your account divided by the number of months you participate in the program.

You can drop out of the program any time you wish, but you must participate for at least 24 consecutive months to receive any part of the government contribution or be eligible for the Army College Fund bonus.

Your savings can be used for any VA-approved academic or vocational education program. And your payments are not affected by any other finance assistance, even an ROTC scholarship.

You can even go to school part-time after separation. Your monthly benefits will simply be paid in smaller amounts for a longer period of time. You must, however, use your benefits within 10 years after you leave the Army.

Your post education office can help you sign up.

Sports

Taking proper precautions can help prevent sports injuries

By Charles Scoville
Physical therapist

Many injuries occur during sports activities.

You cannot prevent all these injuries. In fact, some injuries can occur even under the most ideal conditions. However, there is a lot that can be done to decrease the chance of injury and to minimize the extent of the injury.

Proper conditioning is a primary factor in the prevention of injuries. Frequently people participate in sports to "get in shape" rather than getting in shape to participate in sports.

When you are not adequately conditioned to participate in an activity, there is a tendency to get tired quickly. Once you are fatigued, you have more chance of injury.

When exercising to improve your physical condition you should "listen" to your body. The old adage "no pain, no gain" is incorrect. You should train, not strain.

By gradually increasing the amount of exercise you do, you can improve your level of physical conditioning safely. In sports training there are three variables which can be changed: how frequently you exercise; how long you exercise (duration); and how hard you exercise (intensity).

You should not increase more than one of these variables in any given week. By proper conditioning you should be able to participate longer with a decreased chance of injury in your favorite sports.

A second major area which is effective in reducing or preventing injuries involves equipment. Each activity has specific equipment needs. It may be as simple as good running shoes for jogging or adequate eye protection for racketball, or it may be as elaborate as the equipment worn for football games.

Whatever equipment is necessary, it may be ineffective in preventing injuries unless it fits properly and is well maintained. Take the time periodically to inspect your equipment to insure it fits properly and is in good repair. This may help you to prevent a painful injury.

Before you begin an activity, check the safety of the area. In running activities such as soccer, football, baseball, etc., check for holes, broken glass, or other obvious hazards and correct them. If you are going to play basketball, racketball or other activities on a wood floor, check to see that there are no wet spots which would make the floor slippery.

If you plan to swim, know the area in which you will be swimming. If you plan to dive, find out what is below the surface of the water first. Each activity has its own unique precautions. Use your common sense and a few minutes to be sure the environment you will be participating in is safe.

Proper warm-up and cool-down also plays a role in the prevention of injuries. Improper warm-up and stretching can be more harmful than not warming up. Spend about 10 minutes on slow, gradual warm-up activities, using the muscles you will use in the activity to follow.

What if you do everything possible and you still get injured? What should you do? First, the degree of injury must be determined. If you are unable to determine how extensive the injury is, seek medical assistance.

If the injury is mild, follow the most common treatment, using the acronym of RICE: Rest, Ice, Compression, and Elevation. REST the injuried part. Apply ICE to the injury. This can be accomplished by freezing water in a styrofoam cup, then using this ice cube to massage the injured part for five to ten minutes. COMPRESSION involves placing an ace wrap bandage around the injury to help prevent swelling. ELEVATION involves placing the injured area above the level of the heart. (You may need to lie down to do this.)

POV registration to return to Benning

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will begin phasing in a post vehicle registration system beginning in January 1985, to be completed by July 1985, when all vehicles operating on post will be required to be registered with the vehicle registration section.

Colonel Norman Kinder, Military Police Activity commander, said, "We've been without a system for two years, and have determined that we need one, so we're going back to a vehicle registration system."

Post Commander Maj. Gen. John Foss directed that the registration program be implemented to increase security on post.

"We're going to try to do it in the most painless way possible for the customers," said Kinder, "and plan to phase it in during a six month period, which is the guideline given to us by General Foss."

Vehicle registration will be done alphabetically according to the first initial of the owner's last name, with designated letters registering during different months from January through June, according to Capt. Rex Kirkpatrick, project officer.

"By July 1 we will have completed the initial registration process," said Kirkpatrick, "and once this is done, registrations will be renewed each year during the month of the owner's birthday."

To register a vehicle, the registrant must show proof of ownership of the vehicle, a valid driver's license and proof of insurance. Motorcycle owners will also be required to show a Defensive Driving Course card.

Becky Winters

Soon all Fort Benning personnel will be required to display similar stickers on their POV's front bumper.

Registrations will be computerized and the computer will print out a list showing who needs to renew their registration each month. This information will be sent to the owner's unit or agency reminding owners to renew their registration. The system will enable the vehicle registration section to purge the system of old registrations after they lapse.

Setting up the system will require the purchase of a computer and acquiring additional personnel, said Kirkpatrick, but as yet they do not know how many personnel will be needed to maintain the system.

"We are at the beginning of the implementation program, so these things will have to be determined as they arise," continued Kirkpatrick.

All persons who reside, perform duty, are employed or frequently use the facilities of Fort Benning are required to register their vehicles. This includes civilian employees, both temporary and permanent party military personnel, retirees, contracting and delivery personnel, and any other personnel who frequently enter the installation.

Registered drivers will be required to affix decals to the front and rear bumpers of their vehicles, similar to the decals used in prior years.

Insight

Your uniform makes big impression on civilians

Robert McClain

Each time soldiers wear their uniform they are representing the U.S. Army and our country.

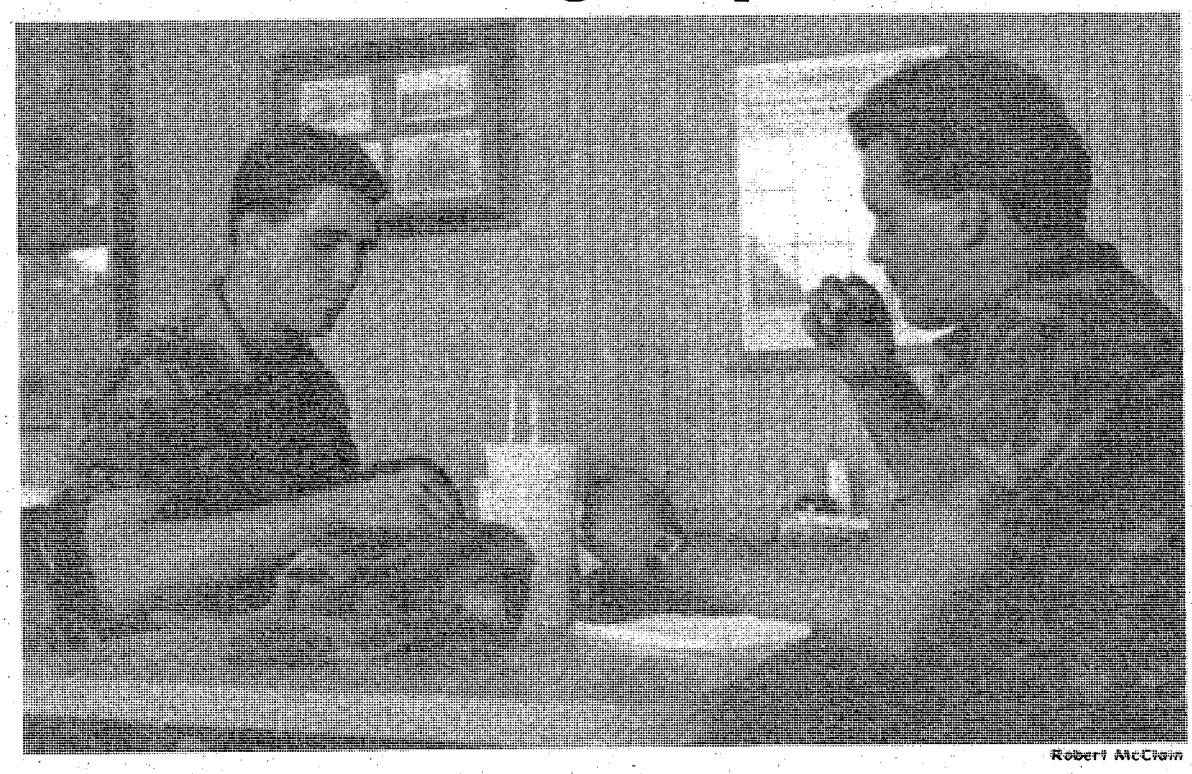
When a civilian sees you, he not only sees you, he sees the entire Army. His impression of the Army and soldiers is based on his impression of you. The way your uniform looks greatly influences his impression.

His impression of the Army and its soldiers is very important. If he sees a soldier in a sloppy-looking uniform he might not have confidence in the Army to defend our country. And you can bet he will express his views to his congressman just before he is about to vote on your next pay increase.

When in the uniform, soldiers should always present a neat and orderly appearance. It's a matter of pride.

The Army provides soldiers with two types of uniforms, with many variations of both. The work and dress uniforms each have different purposes. I don't think many soldiers would don their Class As to run through a confidence course or to work on a piece of machinery. The uniform wasn't designed for it.

The fatigue and battle dress uniforms were designed for such work. Soldiers were meant to get dirty, grimy and sweaty in these uniforms. But in turn, they weren't designed as a dress uniform. That's why Fort Benning and many other Army posts have policies regarding the wear of these uniforms off post in civilian establishments.



Robert McClain

Privates Michael Center (l) and Tom Heaberlin are not violating the uniform policy by eating at this local fast-food establishment. The policy allows soldiers to dine at carry-out restaurants similar to the Burger Bar on main post, while wearing a utility uniform.

The current Fort Benning policy prohibits the wear of the fatigue, battle dress, cook and medic white uniforms and flight suits off post except to and from duty. The uniforms will not be worn off post on federal holidays.

The policy does allow soldiers to dine in these uniforms at fast food-carry out restaurants, similar to the Burger Bar on main post. But it prohibits the wear of these uniforms in bars, lounges, pool halls, sporting events, entertainment events and sit-down restaurants.

Army Greens (any authorized version), Army Tans, Army Blues, Army Green Classics, Army Green Pantsuits and Army White uniforms all may be worn off post at any time.

Recently, I have noticed many soldiers violating this policy. I've seen many soldiers in BDUs at local malls, shopping centers, restaurants and other establishments. Many of the soldiers looked like they just came back from a four-day field exercise, and hadn't changed their uniform in those four days.

I stopped a great many of these soldiers to refresh their memory about the uniform regulation. Many claimed ignorance to the regulation. Some said they were just stopping in for a minute and would be right out. A few told me to mind my own business.

You would think most of the violators would be lower ranking soldiers. It wasn't always the case. I have seen senior NCOs and a few officers in violation of the regulation.

I'm not the only one who has noticed these infractions either. The Post Sergeant Major CSM Roy Owens has seen fit to send a memorandum re-releasing copies of the uniform regulation to all unit sergeants major to help ensure soldiers comply with the policy.

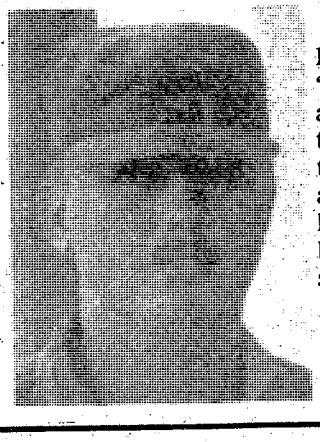
"One soldier who violates the regulation is too many," said Norm Williamson, chief of the Quality of Life Division of the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities. "Soldiers who wear their grubby work uniforms off post can give the Army a bad image. It only takes one soldier to put a bad taste in people's mouths."

I agree with Williamson; it only takes one soldier to give the public a bad impression of the Army. NCOs and officers should take corrective action when they see soldiers violating the policy. And everyone, regardless of rank, should be familiar with the policy and not violate it.

Various voices

Do you see military personnel violating the post uniform regulation?

Ruby Lockerman, family member-"Sometimes, but it doesn't bother me. I think even if a soldier's wearing his uniform off-post where he shouldn't be it's ok, as long as they're neat and properly dressed. My husband's a retiree and he gets mad when he sees someone with their uniform on off-post or if they're not neatly dressed."



Sp4 James Stanifer, 586th Eng. Co., 36th Eng. Gp.,- "Yes, I've seen it violated a little at lunchtime, but those I've seen try to keep their appearance high. I admit I've violated it a little in the past myself, but I've had good reasons."

SSgt. Terrence Kuszewski, Operations NCO, DPT, Training Div.-"Yes, by all means. I've seen it during the evening and on weekends. I think more command emphasis should be placed on off-post uniform regs. Fort Benning soldiers are aware of this policy but still elect to fulfill their personal needs."

HQ TRADOC

Fort Monroe, Va. — It was Ralph Waldo Emerson who wrote, "Hitch your wagon to a star," and this sentiment expresses the essence of the promise America holds for the rest of the world. Reach out. Reach for the highest, brightest, most noble goal possible, for America makes all things possible.

With her arm uplifted 305 feet high, her far-gazing eyes, broad forehead and gentle smile beckoning, the Statue of Liberty touches all that is noble and great in the American promise of liberty, democracy, and freedom.

The Statue of Liberty is officially "Liberty Enlightening the World." It was donated to the United States by France as a monument to Franco-American friendship. However, that beautiful act of friendship between nations was lifted beyond a nation-to-nation bond to a universal meaning for all people. Emma Lazarus in 1883 penned her simple poem:

"Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
Send these the homeless, tempest-tossed to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

The Statue of Liberty has stood in New York Harbor for nearly a century welcoming immigrants who, with their families, now represent more than 40 percent of the U.S. population.

President Grover Cleveland unveiled the completed statue October 28, 1886, on Bedloe's Island in New York Harbor. It was only in 1956 that the island was renamed Liberty Island. Today, the Statue of Liberty is in serious deterioration. Her copper skin touches the iron framework in many places, causing corrosion. Her torch must be removed and replaced and the rusting iron work has to be replaced with alloy metal that will be more permanent.

President Reagan announced the creation of a commission to complete restoration of the Statue of Liberty as well as Ellis Island so that these national treasures will remain for future generations to visit and be inspired by. All restoration funds are by private donation, just as the original Statue of Liberty was paid for a hundred years ago. So today, in that same person-to-person tradition, the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission has raised more than $74 million of their $230 million goal to have a restored Statue of Liberty ready for her 100th birthday, now only two years away.

New York Public Library

Construction of the Statue of Liberty in Bartholdi's warehouse workshop in Paris during 1882 and 1883 was done with the guidance of wood and plaster mock-ups, which in turn were built from smaller scale models.

National Park Service

Chains unshackled at her feet, the Statue of Liberty holds aloft the torch that has lit the way for millions of immigrants to new lives.

Ghosts, goblins gather at Halloween carnival

By Willie Means
197th Public Affairs Office

It was a quarter-to-midnight when the grisly apparitions began lurking around in the recent hit video, "Thriller."

However, the witching hour arrived much earlier last Saturday afternoon as Dracula, Wolfman, fairies, demons and other ghoulish creatures descended upon the Family Life Center at Custer Terrace, Upatoi, and Battle Park (CUB) Village Halloween Carnival. Even with several "Ghostbusters" present to ward off the "evil spirits", the center was filled with creatures of the macabre.

In an effort to bring 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) soldiers assigned to Fort Benning and their family members closer together, the brigade assisted the Custer Terrace Family Life Center personnel with the community Halloween carnival.

"It's a lot of fun and a great opportunity for the people in the community to get together," commented CSM William C. Webb, the brigade command sergeant major. "The Army's theme for this year is 'The Year of the Family'. Community projects like this enhance the neighborhood and allow people to get to know each other. It took a lot of hard work and coordination to put this together but the people did it. It shows that the community is together."

Family members of the CUB villages began working on the project in early October. With support from the brigade, teens in the communities, and a $150 donation from the Family Life Center, they made their plans into a reality.

"My goal is to have something for everyone in the tri-communities," stated Vivianna V. Hernandez, mayor of Custer Terrace. "I decided this was a good time to have something for the children and I've gotten 100 percent participation from everyone. Hopefully, in January I can have something for the men in the community."

Through the afternoon, children and adults alike participated in games; walked through a "graveyard" of headstones and other artifacts made by Stewart E. Warner; visited a haunted house erected by the brigade; and munched on pizza donated by Domino's and Lord Munchies, fries donated by McDonald's and Burger King, and mini-meals donated by Arby's. Children also had chances to win gift certificates from Po Folks and trick or treat bags provided by Captain D's Seafood and Hamburgers.

"This is the first time this community had something like this," said Mary Jackson, a Community Life Center worker. "We had more than 300 people turn out. This was really good for the community."

Post firefighter is a real life saver

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Firemen are traditionally seen as people who save lives. Sidney Martin, station captain at Fire Station #2, Lawson Army Air Field, is a fireman who takes his lifesaving role seriously. In fact, he has done just that during his life as a fireman.

The most recent person to have benefitted from Martin's lifesaving techniques is Claude Murphy. In December 1983 Murphy was helping to clean out a fuel tank and was standing on the outside of the tank looking down into it when he fell more than 12 feet into the tank.

Martin was at the canvas shop on main post and talking to the engineers at Roads and Grounds when he was asked by the man he was talking with to call an ambulance because a man was hurt there. "I did and then finished my business, but decided to stop by the Roads and Grounds area to see if I could help."

When he arrived, the man had been pulled out of the tank, so Martin said he checked his vitals. "There was no pulse, so I started cardio-pulmonary resuscitation.

"I was with him when he was transported to the hospital. I didn't know him but found out later he was a former employee of the post fire department," Martin said. Murphy was working with a contractor on post at the time of the accident.

Another instance when the 42-year-old saved a life occurred about five years ago. "I was on my way home and going out the front gate. I stopped by a garbage can because I was looking for aluminum cans. I pulled out a brown grocery sack and shook it and this thing fell out." Martin said he thought it was a possum or another kind of animal because even though it moved, it didn't make any noise. "I picked it up and realized it was a baby boy. I blew in his face and he let out a cry, so I wrapped him in a hunting vest and took him to the hospital," Martin explained. Martin Army Community Hospital told Martin the baby was about 30 minutes old when he brought it to the hospital. The baby was later transferred to Columbus.

Martin says he believes it is his business to know how to save people. Besides taking the basic CPR course, he also took the CPR instructor's course through the American Heart Association. He has also taken specialized training in his field and wears the Georgia Smoke Divers patch. Martin describes the patch as being as distinctive as wearing the Army's Ranger Tab. "We are an elite group. There's only about 200 of us in the state," he said.

The patch signifies the fireman has been through the course which teaches using breathing apparatus in smoke, going in where there's smoke to rescue people and then finding their way out of smoke. Before starting the course the firemen must pass a physical fitness test similar to the Army's Physical Readiness Test.

Martin helps teach the course twice a year at the Georgia State Fire Academy in Marietta. During the last course, Martin helped put through the oldest Smoke Diver in the state, a 43-year-old fireman. Up until that time Martin held that honor.

"Our primary mission in being firemen is to save people. Saving structures is secondary, so when I get a chance to accomplish what I'm trained to do I feel good. A lot of firemen never get the chance to save someone's life and it is a wonderful experience. There's a lot of satisfaction in it."

> "Our primary mission in being firemen is to save people. Saving structures is secondary, so when I get a chance to accomplish what I'm trained to do I feel good."

Martin has been at Fort Benning since September 1964 and lives in Columbus with his wife, Peggy, a teacher at Faith Middle School, and their five children.

And if you can meet the qualifications for that one, then you may also be interested in diving the U-352, a German U-BOAT sunk in the same area.

Say you're not a diver? No problem. Call Jerry or Jim at Planet Ocean and they'll give you details of how our Scuba Training Programs could have you ready for these dives by May. It won't be easy. But then again, nothing ventured nothing gained. And gain is guaranteed.

10th Infantry Division has rich battle history

By Ron Buffkin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Editor's note: The Department of the Army announced in September that the Army had selected Fort Benning as the temporary home for one brigade of the 10th Infantry Division. The following is from the division's history.

Colonel William O. Darby and PFC John D. Magrath died within two weeks of each other on the same mountain range in northern Italy. Both soldiers are heroes of the 10th Infantry Division.

Darby, better known for his founding of the World War II Ranger Battalions, was the assistant division commander for the 10th when an enemy artillery round exploded in the midst of his command group. Darby died on the morning of April 26, 1945.

Twelve days before the untimely death of Darby, another 10th division soldier would act under fire with such courage and daring that he would become the 10th's first Medal of Honor winner.

Private first class John D. Magrath joined the Army in his hometown of East Norwalk, Conn. Just as other initial volunteers for the elite 10th Light Division, or Mountain Division as it was known then, Magrath had to have three letters of recommendation and an endorsement from the National Ski Patrol System.

The 10th was one of three "light" divisions authorized by the War Department in June of 1943. The other two were the 89th Light Division (Truck) and the 71st Light Division (Pack).

The 10th Mountain Division was to be particularly elite. Its men were to be volunteers, ski enthusiasts, and mountain climbers. Magrath was assigned to the 85th Infantry Regiment of the 10th.

Following an intensive training period in the United States, Magrath shipped out with the 10th to Italy. Combat marked the 10th as a fast-moving, tough outfit.

A division historian would later write about the 10th, "Slashing from peak to peak, it fought a type of mountain war without parallel in the annals of the U.S. Army."

In mid-April of 1945, Magrath's unit, Company G of the 85th Infantry Regiment, was advancing across a small basin near Castel d'Aiano, Italy. German small-arms, mortar and heavy artillery suddenly pinned down Magrath's unit in open ground.

Magrath then began a sequence of individual herosim that would find no match that day. Armed only with his rifle, Magrath charged an enemy machine-gun and killed its crew.

Magrath then picked up the enemy weapon, carried it across open ground and neutralized two more hostile machinegun positions. He then circled behind four enemy soldiers firing on his company and killed them. Magrath then spotted another enemy weapon to his right, and returned fire until he had killed the crew.

Magrath's actions had enabled his company to advance. Magrath was hit several times, but again volunteered, this time to cross open ground to get a casualty report. Magrath was killed as he moved among his platoon's positions checking on the wounded.

For his actions that day, Magrath was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor.

Annual observance at cemetery will honor our nation's veterans

"A grateful nation remembers" is the theme of the 1984 Veterans Day Ceremonies at Arlington National Cemetery and other sites nationally.

The 31st annual Veterans Day Observance at Arlington on Sunday, Nov. 11, will begin at 10:30 a.m. in the amphitheater with a musical prelude provided by the United States Air Force Band.

At 11 a.m., the presidential wreath-laying ceremony will be held at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier with other activities to follow in the amphitheater.

Administrator of Veterans Affairs Harry N. Walters, who serves as the Veterans Day National Committee Chairman, said, "While Arlington captures much of the national attention on Veterans Day, the rest of the nation's observances are as meaningful.

"And while the Veterans Administration is the means by which all Americans are able to express the spirit of Veterans Day all year long, it is on this special day that we all can gather to voice our gratitude," Walters said.

To support nationwide activities, Walters has asked all state governors to name Veterans Day chairpersons for activities in their respective states. The person appointed will be responsible for coordinating various activities throughout the state and will represent the governor in dealing with service organizations, military officials, community groups and the many citizens who recognize Veterans Day as a very special occasion.

The National Committee has designated St. Louis, Atlanta, Nashville, Birmingham, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Oakland, and Auburn, Wash., as sites for regional Veterans Day observances.

Some 6,000 packages of promotional materials, including posters, booklets with information on proper display of the flag, and a Veterans Day history, have been mailed to the states for distribution. (VA)

Included in this year's retiree agenda is a tour of one of the Army Infantry Training Center's new "Starship" battalion-sized barracks and lunch with the troops in the facility's dining room.

Soldiers enjoy being members of Army's first COHORT battalion

By Ron Buffkin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Editor's note: This is the first part of a continuing series on the Army's first COHORT battalion. Other features will be run periodically in future editions.

Private Richard Mann sponged the last thick drops of brown gravy with a slice of soft white bread. This was only his third supper since becoming a "Manchu", but he was already discovering the hearty appetite of the Infantryman. Mann, 20, enlisted along with 377 young men across the nation to become a part of the Army's first and only COHORT battalion.

"I like it, especially the chow," said Mann. Although Mann and his buddies are new to the Army, they are beginning to feel at home as Manchus. Manchu is the nickname of the 3rd Battalion,9th Infantry, which Mann's COHORT battalion will join as part of the 7th Infantry Division (light) upon completion of their 14 weeks training here.

"We've proven the COHORT concept with companies and now we will be able to build unit bonding even more," said Lt. Col.Christopher C. Straub, commander of the 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. Two companies in Straub's battalion are training all the first term Infantrymen required for the 3-9th Infantry.

At full strength, the 3-9th Infantry will have 338 slots for their first termers and will be organized as part of the Light Division's TO&E. The cadre of the battalion is scheduled to attend the new Light Leader's Course here soon.

> "We've proven the COHORT concept with companies, and now we will be able to build unit bonding even more."

"This is one of the most unique programs I've seen," said Straub. "These guys are ready to eat jeeps for breakfast," he added. All of Straub's COHORT battalion trainees wear the hourglass patch of the 7th Infantry Division and will be taught the lineage and honors of the 3-9th Infantry. A sense of espirit has already started among the Manchus and is evident by their aggressive spirit.

A platoon awaiting their turn at the chin-up bars before chow quickly snaps to attention and sounds off with, "Keep up the fire, SIR!" which is the Manchu salute. The coming weeks will test the COHORT battalion's ability to keep up the fire as they undergo OSUT.

DOD has help for absentee voters who receive ballots late

The Department of Defense has learned that some states are experiencing delays in forwarding absentee ballots for the general election. Wherever these delays have occurred, action is underway by the DoD Federal Voting Assistance Office, working in conjunction with the U.S. Department of Justice, to ensure that absentee ballots are mailed to voters as soon as possible.

Some voters planning to vote by absentee ballot in the Nov. 6 general election may not receive their ballots in time to vote and return the completed ballot to their voting precincts by the required date. All voters are urged to cast their ballots and return them regardless of the date the absentee ballot is received.

If absentee voters have reason to believe that they received their ballots too late to meet the deadline, they should, in addition to voting and returning the ballot promptly, notify their unit voting officer or the Federal Voting Assistance Program, Room 18457, Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301. The following information should be provided: name, SSN, voting address, voting location (precinct, county, city, state) and, if available, the following three dates; (1) when the ballot was requested, (2) when the ballot was received, and (3) when the completed ballot was mailed to the voting jurisdiction. Reports of this nature will enable DoD voting officials to conduct follow-up investigations and other actions if warranted.

In view of the delays some states and local jurisdictions have experienced in mailing absentee ballots, APO and FPO authorities have been requested to hand cancel ballots being returned by voters to their precincts. This should reduce some of the problems associated with meeting state deadlines.

CONUS voters are advised to request hand cancellation of their completed ballot if they have reason to believe it may not meet the required deadline.

So, if your absentee ballot arrives late, regardless of where you are stationed, vote it anyway and return it promptly to your voting jurisdiction. Every effort will be made to see that your vote is counted. In addition, notify your unit voting officer or the Federal Voting Assistance Office and provide the required information. (ARNEWS)

With the elimination of APRT testing, Airborne students are doing fewer pushups and the 4th Airborne Training Battalion is saving big SPIRIT dollars.

Eliminating PT verification saves Airborne Department 1.25 million dollars each year

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Instructors in the Airborne Department were trying to increase training time for Airborne students by eliminating the 3-hour verification of the Army Physical Readiness Test given to each new Airborne student. So it was a pleasant surprise when they found out that saving that 3 hours in each class resulted in a monetary savings of approximately $1.25 million per year.

"Students were supposed to have passed the APRT at their units before coming to Benning for Airborne School," said Maj. Carlos Valez, battalion executive officer at 4th Airborne Training Battalion, "so the instructors began to question why they were spending valuable training time on verifying their APRT scores."

The purpose of the APRT is to weed out those individuals who are not in good enough physical condition to successfully complete Airborne training.

"The students need a certain degree of upper arm strength to successfully complete the school, and we found that for many students, the pushups were a problem," said Valez.

In addition, the Airborne Department required higher scores on the APRT than the standard scores required of all soldiers by Army regulations.

Seven percent of the students were failing the test and being returned to their units without completing Airborne School, which cost the Army time and money.

So the 4th Airborne Training Battalion decided to send a few test classes through without eliminating any students for failing the APRT, to see if attrition numbers would increase.

What they found was that the attrition numbers did not increase, which indicated that the APRT verification process was not necessary.

After looking at all the costs involved in administering the test, transporting the students to and from Benning, paying salaries of students and instructors and travel time, total savings for the post came to $1,254,919.

Of more significance to the Army, the department is able to produce more Airborne qualified soldiers, adding to the combat readiness of our armed forces.

D-4-2 has recipe for dining facility honors

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Take a lot of long hours, add some hard work, mix it in with a good team and top the whole thing off with a keen sense of attention to detail and what do you have? Sergeant first class Alvah Arrington's recipe for an award winning Army dining facility.

Arrington, dining facility manager for D Company, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, must have the right recipe for dining facility success. His dining facility won the award for the best small dining facility (serving 200 personnel or less) for three quarters in 1983 and was then chosen as the top dining facility on Fort Benning. Arrington has again combined the right ingredients, as his facility won the best small dining facility award on Fort Benning for 1984.

"We're preparing now for the TRADOC best small dining facility competition," said Arrington.

If his mess wins the TRADOC award it will be in competition for the Connelley Award.

"The Connelley Award can be likened to a civilian dining establishment winning a coveted five-star rating. It means you're the best in the Army," said Arrington.

When the inspection by TRADOC begins, the inspectors will be looking for excellence in administration, sanitation, food preparation and the quality of the end product. Specifically, TRADOC will be checking to insure that all cooks are following prescribed Army recipe cards, prescribed Army cooking procedures, that all equipment and utensils used and in the facility are clean and that the food is prepared as close to serving time as possible. The inspectors then sit down and actually eat a meal, the same meal the troops are eating that day. They then document everything and rate the dining facility.

Arrington emphasized that without a good team his dining facility wouldn't be winning all the awards they have won. He has two first cooks: SSgt. George Elston, and Sp4 Frank Scrivens. He also has two cooks: Sp4 Revenue Brown and Pvt.2 Anthony Goodwin. Arrington also has three civilian cooks as part of his team: Carl Farrar, Gloria Thirkild, and Lillian Fields. Arrington has had this same team for the past eight months and not having a high turn-over rate helps. However, Arrington stressed that "this facility follows Army regulations and procedures closely so that new people can adapt quickly to our routine."

The pace at this award winning dining facility at times becomes very hectic. If part of the basic training company it serves is in the field and another part is in garrison, the facility has to prepare food to be taken to the field and, simultaneously, prepare and serve food at the dining facility. The food going to the field has to be of the same high quality as that being served in the mess. Since the pace is sometimes hectic for both the cooks and the trainees, Arrington tries to serve something special on Sundays.

"If the budget permits we sometimes have steamship round roast beef, shrimp, or even lobster," said Arrington.

Washington memorial honors soldiers who died in Vietnam

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

The Vietnam Veterans Memorial sits on two acres in Constitution Gardens in Washington, D.C., dedicated to honor the "courage, sacrifice, and devotion to duty and country" of the approximately 2.7 million Americans who served in the war zone. Some 300,000 were wounded and approximately 75,000 permanently disabled.

Since the memorial was dedicated on Nov. 13, 1982, it has been visited by more than three million people, many of them friends and relatives of the more than 58,000 honored dead whose names line the black granite walls.

A jury of eight internationally recognized artists and designers selected the memorial's design through a national competition.

Ms. Maya Ying Lin, who submitted the winning design, wanted to create "... a park within a park, a quiet protected place unto itself." For that reason, she chose polished black granite for the two walls of the memorial. Its mirror-like surface reflects the images of the surrounding trees, lawns, and monuments.

Each wall is 246 feet, 8 inches long. The East wall points to the Washington Monument and West wall points to the Lincoln Memorial. The walls are supported by 140 concrete pilings driven 35 feet into bedrock. The memorial is more than 10 feet tall at its highest point. The names were carved using a computer-generated photo stencil sandblasting process developed specifically for the memorial. The black granite used for the walls, safety curbs and walkways is from Bangalore, India, the only place in the world it could be obtained in the sizes required.

There are 58,007 names on the memorial. About 1,300 are classified as missing in action. Eight women are listed: seven Army nurses and one Air Force nurse. There are no civilians.

The names are listed in chronological order according to date of the casualty. The first men to die were military advisors, killed on July 8, 1959. The list of names starts and ends in the center of the two walls. Beginning with July 1959, the names read to the right to panel number 70 on the east wall. The names then continue on panel number 70 on the west wall, reading to the right, and reaching the center of the monument and the names of the last casualties in May of 1975.

Symbols mark each name. A cross indicates a person is still missing in action (the cross is not used as a religious symbol). A diamond next to a name indicates that person was killed in action. Crosses can be converted to a diamond if and when those listed as missing are confirmed dead. A circle will be inscribed around the cross for any individual reported missing who may return alive.

At the entrance to the memorial stands a life-size bronze statue depicting three American fighting men. Jan Scruggs, founder and president of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund, says the statue, sculpted by Frederick Hart, is "very humanistic and reflective of the young fighting men who served in Vietnam."

Also at the entrance to the memorial is a 50 foot bronze flag staff containing the five service emblems.

Since the memorial has become one of the most popular tourist sites in the nation's capital, new lighting has been installed. Scruggs says that installation of the lighting will provide not only for improved safety and security, but will also "make the memorial come alive at night as well as better accommodate the large number of visitors who come to the site."

VA lowers home loan interest rate to 13%

The Veterans Administration reduced it's maximum home loan interest rate from 13½ percent to 13 percent, effective Oct. 22. The last change in the interest rate occurred on Aug. 13, when it was reduced from 14 to 13½ percent.

VA Administrator Harry N. Walters said the reduction reflects continued improvement in the mortgage market and investor confidence in the economy.

"With inflation clearly down and a growth rate that's holding well, this further reduction is clearly warranted," Walters said. Walters also noted that since reaching a high of 17½ percent in September 1981, the overall VA loan rate trend has been down. The latest drop in rates will lower monthly payments on an average VA loan of $64,000 by about $25, or $230 per month less than payments based on the 17½ percent rate in 1981.

The VA action also reduced by one-half percentage point the maximum rates for graduated payment mortgages (GPM's) to 13¼ percent and home improvement loans to 14½ percent. In addition, the rates for manufactured home loans were also reduced. The new maximum rates are 15½ percent for unit only loans and 15 percent for a loan to purchase either a unit with the lot or for loans to purchase a lot after which a unit already owned by the veteran is to be placed.

The rate change does not affect existing loans, whose interest rate remains the same for the life of the agreement. VA home loans may be used to purchase, construct, alter, improve, repair, or refinance a home. This includes the purchase of condominums and manufactured homes, with or without a lot. (VA)

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Is a veteran with only peacetime service eligible to participate in the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983?

A — No. This act is designed to assist unemployed veterans who served on active duty during the Korean Conflict or the Vietnam Era.

Q — My brother was a disabled veteran. I was appointed his guardian by the Veterans Administration. His compensation checks came to me. He died last month and I would like to use the check that came at the end of the month to pay some of his medical bills. May I do this?

A — No. A veteran's entitlement to disability pension or compensation terminates at the end of the month prior to his death. Checks received after the death should be returned. There are generally no death benefits payable for brothers or sisters, but the person who paid the funeral expenses may be eligible for a burial allowance.

Q — I am attending school full time under the VA's dependents education assistance program. Do I qualify for the VA work-study program?

A — No. The program is designed to assist unemployed veterans who served on active duty during the Vietnam Era.

Q — Can a veteran use his loan guaranty benefits to purchase a home outside the United States?

A — Loan guaranty benefits are available only in the United States and its territories and possessions.

Q — How does a veteran initiate a claim for VA compensation or pension benefits?

A — The veteran may contact the nearest VA office, a service officer of one of the veterans service organizations, or a state or county veterans' office to obtain the forms necessary to initiate the claim. Any of these sources can provide information about the benefit programs and assist in completing the forms.

Q — Is it necessary for me to inform the VA of my new address if my monthly benefit check is directly deposited in the bank?

A — Failure to keep the VA notified of your current address could result in your missing important correspondence and literature. Such material is sent to the veterans's address of record. Suspension of your payments could occur if you fail to report for a physical examination or supply requested evidence, even though you did not receive the notice because it was sent to a former address.

Q — I am eligible for treatment in a VA hospital. Can I obtain treatment from a public or private source at VA expense?

A — In a limited number of cases, certain categories of eligible veterans — generally, those who were disabled in service — can obtain non-VA medical care at VA expense. Such cases occur when VA is incapable of providing the required medical care economicaly at VA or other government facilities. When possible, prior approval should be obtained from a VA medical facility. (VA)

Some NATO countries let women fill non-traditional jobs

By Tom Condon
American Forces Information Service

If the NATO countries were attacked tomorrow, very few women would be found in the thick of combat. That's not too surprising: in only three of the 16 NATO countries is combat-type service for women permitted, and three NATO countries don't have women in their military services. Two countries don't even have military services.

In the remaining eight countries — including the United States — women are barred from combat and combat support units.

Even in The Netherlands, which began lifting it's bars to women in combat units 13 years ago, movement is slow in this direction. In 1971, all military functions were, in principle, opened to women. However, it wasn't until 1979 that some legal hurdles were cleared, making the military status of men and women equal. And in 1982, women began training for combat roles.

Some practical constraints, however, have held back full implementation of even this decision. There are not, for example, adequate facilities in The Netherlands armed forces to insure sufficient privacy for either sex. Devising physical performance standards for various occupations is another problem yet unsolved.

The Dutch Army has found, for example, that women generally have a problem with certain kinds of physical labor. Still undetermined is whether women have the fighting strength and endurance for frontline combat service. According to a spokesman for The Netherlands, "operational capability will not be sacrificed to sex integration."

In The Netherlands there is only one ship — the Zuiderkruis — with a mixed crew. Just eight women are enrolled in the Royal Netherlands Naval College and there is only one woman training to be a fighter pilot at the Royal Military Academy. There are no women in the artillery, infantry or tank corps. The majority of the approximately 1,470 women in the Dutch armed forces, which number more than 100,000, still work in combat service support occupations.

Norway lifted its combat ban against women earlier this year. Like The Netherlands, its not rushing into anything and expects that integration of women into combat units will take place gradually.

Belgium is the only other NATO country with women in combat positions. But they constitute fewer than one percent of the approximately 3,500 military women; all of the combat women are commissioned or non-commissioned officers.

The combat issue is high on the list of topics to be discussed at the 1985 conference of the Committee on Women in the NATO Forces. This conference, composed of 40 delegates and observers from NATO countres, will be held next year at NATO Headquarters, Brussels, Belgium. Air Force Brig. Gen. Wilma Vaught, who chairs the committee, said "We're going to see an increasing number of women in non-traditional areas such as engineering, science and space-related jobs — more than we have ever seen before."

Gen. Vaught, commander of the U.S. Military Entrance Processing Command and one of the top-ranked women in the U.S. Air Force, said "there are still times when women don't get selected for jobs they could hold simply because there's never been a woman assigned to that job before. But those barriers are coming down."

Marine Corps Lt. Col. Ruth Woidyla, who served as the U.S. delegate to the committee meeting earlier this year in Williamsburg, Va., explained that the primary purpose of the committee is to advise governments of NATO-member nations on the most effective utilization of women in the armed forces. Lt. Col. Woidyla is Special Assistant for Women to the Director of Manpower, Plans and Policy at Marine Corps Headquarters.

Of all the NATO nations, the U.S. has the highest percentage of military women. During the 1970s, many career fields opened to women and their numbers grew rapidly.

However, Italy, Portugal and Spain still do not permit women to serve in the armed forces in any capacity. Iceland and Luxemburg have no armed forces.

Civilian employees face health benefit decisions

This year's "open season" for U.S. civil servants to make their decisions on health benefit plans will be from Nov. 5 to Dec. 7.

The annual decision period gives employees and annuitants already enrolled a chance to change plans, options, or type of enrollment. It also allows eligible employees not already enrolled to do so. During the rest of the year, current enrollees get that chance only under certain specified conditions.

Starting a week earlier than usual, the sign-up period continues for five calendar weeks. The extended period gives employees more time to consider the options available under each plan, personnel officials explained, and removes the open season from the holiday period when many employees take annual leave.

Enrollment, and any changes, will take effect on the first day of the first pay period on or after January.

Costs and benefits

According to figures from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, the average increase in the enrollee share of health insurance premiums is projected to be 4.2 percent in 1985 — the lowest increase since 1979. Many plans show a decrease from their 1984 rates.

Civilian

Officials say they expect that benefits will remain generally unchanged. They say, however, that some carriers will offer new, cost-saving, low-option plans. More plans than ever will offer alternatives to traditional coverages, such as Hospice Care.

Some employees will have a chance to reduce their out-of-pocket expenses under such new features as the "Preferred Providers" demonstration project — a fixed-cost agreement between the plan and the participating hospital and health care provider who will charge fixed fees for services.

CPO's can help

Employees will find a complete set of open-season brochures available for review at their local Civilian Personnel Office. That office may also have, for loan, additional copies of booklets describing the costs and specific features of the various plans.

During the open season, the CPO, local unions, and representatives of individual plans are expected to provide information and counseling to employees.

Officials point out that choosing a plan rests, in the end, with the individual. They emphasize that, although a CPO or a plan representative may counsel employees and answer questions about a plan's coverage, OPM regulations prohibit any encouragement or discouragement of any employee from selecting a particular plan.

Who's eligible

All full- and part-time permanent-status Army employees are eligible to enroll in the program

Following rules, regulations makes hunting safer

By David Moore
Provost Marshal's Office

Hunting season on Fort Benning is here. Dove season and the archery deer season have been open for a few weeks and in another few weeks all hunting seasons will be open on either the Georgia or Alabama sides of the reservation. The dates and bag limits of each season are outlined in USAIC Circular 210-4 dated Aug. 1.

Hunting on Fort Benning will prove to be a rewarding experience for all hunters if safety rules and hunting regulations are followed. Remember hunting regulations and safety rules are designed to protect the hunter and assist in managing our wildlife resources.

Safety procedures that must be followed while hunting on Fort Benning are:

- Check the range clearance maps before going into a hunting area. Maps are located at the Provost Marshal's Office, building 215; Range Control, building 2611; and the Fish and Wildlife Office, building 5883. Malone 21 Range has maps only on weekends and holidays.
- During firearm deer seasons, all hunters are required to wear an outer garment showing 500 square inches of flourescent orange material to include an orange headgear.
- Loaded weapons of any kind will not be transported in vehicles.
- The possession or use of alcoholic beverages while hunting is prohibited.

Anyone planning to hunt on Fort Benning is reminded that they must have in their possession the appropriate state hunting license, installation hunting permit and special permits for deer or turkey.

The Fish and Game Department currently has nine civilians and three military personnel whose primary duty is to enforce hunting and fishing regulations. Additionally, federally deputized Georgia and Alabama Game Wardens often assist Fort Benning authorities with enforcement of hunting and fishing regulations. All of the aforementioned personnel have the authority to detain, apprehend, issue citations and inspect vehicles in connection with the enforcement of hunting and fishing regulations. Everyone is encouraged to help in the wildlife enforcement program by reporting any violations observed to the Military Police at 545-5222 or to Mr. Wright at 545-1308.

Field exercise puts soldiers to the test

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For five days recently, Bravo Company, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was in the field doing what an Infantryman does: lots of marching, lots of sweating, lots of digging and lots of tactical training.

Battalion commander Lt. Col. Jack Pryor, said, "this exercise in field training was designed to put all those individual skills the soldier has learned together and to show him how all the pieces fit. We must teach soldiers how to crawl and walk some, too. When he reaches his unit he'll be ready to run," said Pryor.

Getting these Advanced Individual Training soldiers "ready to run" started off last Saturday morning with a 15-mile road and cross-country march. After B-8-2 had patrolled almost all night Friday, they were rousted from their sleeping positions and told to "clean up, chow down and pack up" for their road march. The road march would be the first time B-8-2 had marched with full rucksacks and attempted a distance of 15 miles. Their previous march had been with weapons and load bearing equipment (LBE), and it had been only 12 miles. For this 15-miler all the men and cadre would be wearing steel pots, 50-pound rucks, their weapons, LBE and protective masks.

Some of the men were apprehensive as to their ability to go the full distance. However once the march began the men bent their backs, leaned into the hot, dusty hills and started clicking the miles off. Right beside the men marched their battalion commander, Pryor, their company commander, Capt. Timothy Rogers, their senior drill instructor, SFC Walter Dowman, and each platoon's respective drill sergeant.

During the march the men's feet began hurting, the use of foot powder was liberal, and there was a hearty consumption of water, but at the end of the road march each soldier felt much more confident in his ability to march with full gear, over an extended period of time and distance.

After their long march the men moved into a company assembly area and each platoon occupied their positions, some bedding down and some pulling security, in what turned out to be a short night.

The next day's training began after chapel services by Chaplain (Capt.) Sullivan. It consisted of collective tasks which pulled together individual skills. The company was split into four different groups: the 11B Infantry soldiers would be either in offensive operations or defensive operations, the 11C mortarmen in mortar training and the 11Hs in TOW training.

The offensive operations, which were taught in a round-robin scenario, consisted of assembly area procedures with an emphasis on equipment maintenance, camouflage of self and equipment and personal hygiene; movement to contact; actions on enemy contact; recon a point objective; establish a hasty ambush position; and assault a position using fire and maneuver.

The defensive operations began by showing the soldiers pre-constructed Dragon positions, rifleman/grenadier positions and M-60 machinegun positions. After the troops were shown these positions and how they were constructed, each platoon in the defensive group was taken to their positions and, while designated men pulled security, the other soldiers began to dig fighting positions, armpit deep and two M-16s long by one M-16 wide.

The 11Cs were taken to a secluded 81 mm mortar position and they were instructed in and practiced crew drills, misfire procedures and laying procedures.

At a specially constructed position the 11Hs, TOW crewmen, went through crew drill, tracking procedures, and assembly and disassembly of the TOW.

In each of the 11Bs offensive and defensive operations there were a myriad number of individual and collective skills which were utilized by the soldiers. In offensive operations these included camouflage/conceal self

Punch tin craft

A group of Chaplains' wives recently began making their Christmas decorations early by learning the old art of 'punch tin' at the Home House in LaGrange.

This fascinating antique and crafts store is owned by Martha Evans who has been in the business for almost 15 years. She attributes her interest in crafts to having had "fantastic Girl Scout leaders who believed that all children can do crafts." She attended Girl Scout camp every summer from the time she was seven years old until the summer before she was married. Shortly after her marriage she opened her first craft shop in an old building on the other side of LaGrange.

She has now expanded to her present location (on Highway 27 off I-185) and also sells wholesale to some 400 stores across the country. In addition, she does design work for other companies and travels to various market centers and crafts festivals.

Martha teaches crafts to her Boy Scout troop and children involved in day camp at her church. She emphasizes the importance of children learning to be creative through crafts.

For more information call The Home House in LaGrange at 882-1184.

Reflections

At some time in their lives, nearly all men and women find themselves confronted with a "catch-22" situation; one in which they are caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. Trick questions like "Are you still beating your wife?" exemplify the situation — no matter how you answer, you stand convicted of some pretty nasty behavior.

Flannery O'Connor once wrote a short story that epitomizes the catch-22 dilemma. She called her story "Parkers' Back," and it tells of the unhappy marriage of a Georgian named Obadiah Parker. Obadiah's most distinctive characteristic was his tatoos. Nearly every inch of his body, except for his back, was covered with multi-colored designs. Most women found Obadiah repulsive, but he finally met a girl who seemed willingt to accept him, tatoos and all.

They married, and Obadiah discovered, to his chagrin, that the girl, (Sarah Ruth), was a deeply religious, Bible-thumping fundamentalist whose knowledge of the Scriptures was as thorough as Obadiah' s acquaintance with four-letter words. It soon became clear that Sara Ruth would not tolerate an unrepentant sinner under her roof. Obadiah had to choose between his wife and his life and he couldn't afford to lose either. So he decided on the one course of action he felt could save both; he had his back tatooed with a Byzantine image of Christ. This, he speculated, would convince Sarah of his piety and leave him free to continue his mildly pagan way of living.

The strategy backfired. Sarah Ruth took one look at Parkers' newly decorated back, screamed "Idolatry!", and chased him out of the house with a broom. The story ends with Parker leaning against a tree outside, crying like a baby.

Most people caught in a "catch-22" situation end up like Parker: it's a no-win proposition. Today's gospel about the pharisee and the tax-collector offers an example. Like Parker, the tax collector in the Palestine of Jesus' day was caught in a "catch-22". On the one hand, he was widely regarded as a traitor,since he collected money for the despised Roman occupation forces in Palestine; on the other hand, his livelihood depended on his job. The tax collector was a

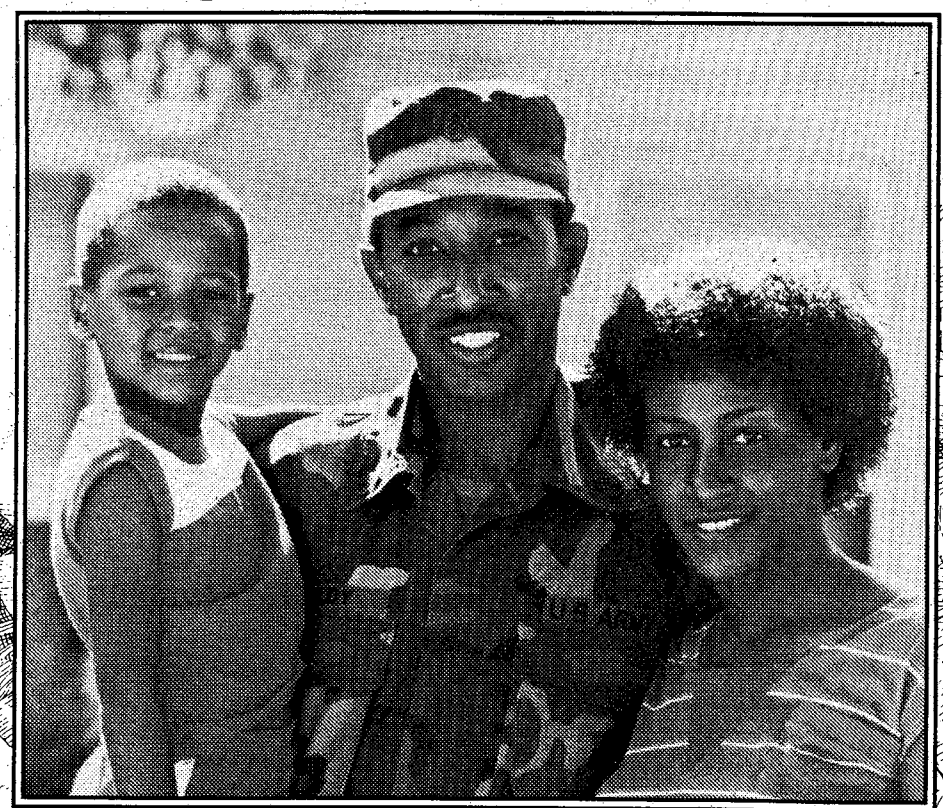
THE ARMY'S JOB HASN'T CHANGED IN OVER 200 YEARS.

BUT OUR WAY OF LIFE IS CHANGING FOR THE BETTER.



The job is still to defend American liberty, but the Army's attitude toward the soldier's family has changed dramatically.

The Army Family Action Plan is a demonstration of today's commitment to the human and material needs of Army family members.

The plan is designed as a total program to deal with a wide range of Army Family problems on a systematic, long-term basis. It includes measures to improve housing, child-care, medical and dental care, and many other services and facilities for Army families.

The Chief of Staff, General John A. Wickham, and Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell, are totally committed to this plan and have pledged their full support.

The construction of over 2,500 Army family housing units has already begun. Many new child-care facilities have been approved for construction; 250 have already been improved. A Health Facility Modernization Program has also begun. And presently, employment resource centers are being established to help expand employment and priority placement opportunities for Army family members.

Your problems can't be solved immediately, but they will be solved. The Army has always had the responsibility of defending the nation. Today it has another important responsibility—to continue to improve the lifestyle of the Army family.

ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Fort Benning transportation unit inactivated

By Dennis Dugan
444th Transportation Company

The 444th Transportation Company was inactivated recently at Fort Benning.

The unit was activated in May 1943 as the 444th Quartermaster Troop Transport Company at San Luis Obispo, Calif. It was then sent for duty to the European theater during World War II, participating in campaigns in Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes, and Central Europe. The "Triple Four" received a Presidential Unit Citation for its outstanding and vital support during the Ardennes campaign.

After the Transportation Corps was established in July 1942, the unit was converted and redesignated as the 444th Transportation Corps Truck Company. In January 1947, the company was inactivated in Germany.

After the Korean War, the unit was again redesignated in Dec. 1954 as the 444th Transportation Company and was activated in 1955, supporting the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Alerted in July 1965, the 444th prepared to move out to Vietnam, arriving in Qui Nhon in October 1965. The company participated in many campaigns including Defense, Counter Offensive Phases II - VII, Tet Counter Offensive, Summer-Fall 1969, Winter-Spring 1970, Sanctuary Counter Offensive, and Consolidation I. For its service in Vietnam, the unit received three Meritorious Unit Citations (Vietnam 1967-68, Vietnam 1968-69, Vietnam 1969-70) and the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry with Gold Star (Vietnam 1966-71). After service in Vietnam, the unit was again inactivated 28 November 1971 in Vietnam.

The unit was again activated in December 1972, being attached to the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 931st Combat Engineer Group at Fort Benning. The unit used personnel and equipment of the inactivated Company C, 56th Supply and Service Battalion. This unit served both Fort Benning and the Columbus community. Handling more than 7500 commitments and travelling more than 26,000 miles, the unit maintained a remarkable safety record. While at Fort Benning, variety was the word to describe the "Triple 4." The 444th's missions included transporting troops, ammunition, and equipment for the Transportation Motor Pool, Infantry Officer's Basic and Advanced Courses, Officer Candidate School, Advanced and Basic Noncommissioned Officer's Courses, and the Ranger School's mountain training at Camp Frank D. Merrill at Dahlonega, Georgia.

The unit was also called upon to provide support to the surrounding Columbus community area on several occasions. In spite of over-commitment of trucks and frequent shortage of personnel, it managed its resouces so as to be able to accomplish its mission, train its personnel and service its equipment to the highest standards.

When the unit received its inactivation orders in August of 1983, it was still tasked to accomplish its heavy commitments until the last possible date. The unit's stand-down orders were changed many times due to the difficulty in finding a suitable substitute for the "Triple Four." During its inactivation the 444th had to prepare its heavily used twenty year old trucks for transfer to the next gaining unit. Maintaining its "Can do" attitude, the 444th finished reconditioning its vehicles to the most stringent standards 30 days before the scheduled inactivation date.

With the constant need for troop and equipment transportation, it might be assumed that the 444th's inactivation is but a temporary one. Somewhere down the road, the "Triple Four" may roll again.

Gary Brugley

man caught between the demands of religious law and the ordinary demands of human survival. Religiously, his job made him a sinner, a law-breaker; humanly, his survival depended on his work. The tax collector was faced with a no-win situation.

As Luke tells the story, however, it was this law-breaking tax collector — not the law-abiding pharisee — whose prayer pleased God. Why? When we hear this familar story we usually think of it as an exhortation to humility: God resists the arrogant self-righteousness of the pharisee and rewards the humble self-effacement of the tax collector. On the surface, this impression is accurate. But the story goes deeper than the rather superficial contrast between arrogrance and humility. When he leaves the temple, after all, the tax collector is still a tax collector; he is still a professinal sinner in the eyes of his religious peers; he is still a man caught in "catch-22". The good news of this story is that God's power can break through the vicious cycle of a "catch-22;" even to sinners caught in impossible no-win situations, God offers salvation.

For Christians today this story has special significance. In both church and society there are numerous men and women caught in the cross-fire of impossible situations. One thinks, for example, of divorced and remarried Catholics for whom, traditionally, there has been "no room" at the eucharistic table. Often these men and women have had to face religious ostracizing, have been publicly identified as persons "living in sin". One thinks, too, of people who belong to "sexual minorities" in our culture — gay men and lesbian women who are shunned by society and church as sinners who must remain (preferably silent and hidden) on the margins of church life.

To all such people in church and society, today's gospel offers hope. The God revealed in Jesus' story of the Pharisee and the tax collector is one who reaches out to embrace the man or woman caught in a "catch-22". The God of Jesus is the god of impossible situations, the God of those caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. For this is the God who rescued Jesus from the ultimate "catch-22" of the cross, the one whose power to love is stronger than the power of sin.

Infantry School instructors put in long hours to give students best instruction possible

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

White

Instructors at the U.S. Army Infantry School put in a lot of long hours to give their students the most professional combined arms instruction available. More than 80 percent of the instructors have commanded units, are Advanced Course graduates and can teach from experience.

However, Gen. William R. Richardson, TRADOC commander, recognized the instructors' subject matter expertise when he directed the schools to move toward having the instructor also be the principal writer of doctrine.

Fort Benning has begun its transition into this combined teaching and writing approach. Major David White, Bradley Fighting Vehicle subject matter expert and instructor said, "There are benefits to being both. An instructor has to do detailed research of subjects in preparation to teach. These same research skills are required to develop and write doctrine.

"The instructor stays in touch with the field and validates doctrine by interacting with his students, briefing visitors to the school, observing unit training exercises, attending conferences and seminars and involving themselves in the concept development process."

White volunteered to come to the Infantry School from Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth and is one of the first doctrine writers to transition into the instructor role.

"I think it is a great assignment. Fort Benning is the focal point of what happens in the Infantry. Everything that is new and exciting seems to be focused here; the Bradley, new light division doctrine, new Ranger units and more.

"This is an especially crucial period for Infantry and Combined Arms doctrine. The reorganization of units under the Army of Excellence plan and the new weapons and tactics that have come about through our force modernization program require that some agency gather, sort, interpret and write the new lessons into doctrine. The Infantry School, therefore, has a tremendous responsibility in this regard. When someone has a question, they ask us."

White has been a mechanized company commander and has had staff experience in the S-3 and S-4 areas before coming to the Infantry School. "Doctrine writers need to stay in contact with the field and as an instructor that contact is maintained through interaction with the students. The blend of doctrine writer and instructor is most natural.

"I like the feeling of immediate influence that comes from instructing as well as the long term influence that comes from writing doctrine. You really are in a position to affect the system," he said.

Pete Murphy

The memorial will become part of the national park system.

National Park Service System to get Vietnam Veterans Memorial

On April 27, 1979, a group of Vietnam veterans formed the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund (VVMF) so Vietnam veterans would have "a tangible symbol of recognition by American society," says Jan Scruggs, president and founder of the VVMF.

On Veterans Day, November 11, Secretary of the Interior William Clark is scheduled to accept the Vietnam Veterans Memorial — built through VVMF efforts — as a new addition to the federal government's National Park Service System.

The VVMF was set up as a nonprofit, charitable organization. No government money was used to build the memorial. Scruggs says the people of America were all saying "thank you to the veterans" when they donated almost $9 million towards its construction.

The U.S government will not be responsible for maintaining the memorial and the grounds. However, the VVMF will maintain a fund for catastrophic damages to the memorial, to maintain the statue, and to update the names and symbols on the memorial. (AFPS)

Military installations combat drunk driving

By Tom Condon
American Forces Information Service

Drunk drivers lucky enough not to kill or injure themselves or others aren't home free when they return to their bases. Sobriety checkpoints have been set up at many installations in the U.S. and overseas as part of a permanent Department of Defense crackdown on drunk driving.

"Many bases have been setting up cone mazes at the gates in the late evening and early morning hours," said Navy Capt. Roger McFillen, who heads a DoD task force aimed at reducing intoxicated driving within the Department of Defense. "If drivers knock over one of the cones, they will be asked to take a breathalyzer test," said Capt. McFillen who conducted 12 alcohol abuse workshops on military installations in the U.S., Europe and the Pacific.

The workshops were attended by base commanders, club managers, drug and alcohol abuse counselors, law enforcement agents and others in preparation for setting up programs for their bases. The Department of Defense's public information campaign on drunk driving is particularly aimed at 17 to 25 year olds, the age group with the most accidents. "They're the inexperienced drivers and drinkers, many of whom are away from home for the first time and making a good paycheck," he explained.

One approach to the problem is the buddy system. "Friends don't let friends drive drunk," he said. During the holiday season, when party-goers are apt to drink more than usual, responsible hosts should encourage guests to eat rather than drink, he said. Guests should not just be shown where the alcohol is and then told to help themselves, he advised. It's not only the drinker who could get in serious trouble with the law, but the server as well, whether it's a private residence, public bar or military club. About 25 states have laws making servers liable for subsequent damage done by drinkers they served.

Drunk drivers cause half of all auto deaths in the U.S. Within the last decade, more than 250,000 people have been killed. That's more han five times the number of U.S. combat deaths in Vietnam. Last year, more than 22,500 died and more than 600,000 were injured in alcohol-related accidents.

Because the problem is worse among 18 to 20 year olds, a federal law was passed in July to encourage states to enact laws making 21 the minimum drinking age. States not meeting this requirement by Oct. 1, 1986, will have their federal highway funds cut by 5 percent the first year and 10 percent the following year. Soon after the legislation was enacted, the Defense Department implemented a new policy requiring all armed forces installations to conform to minimum drinking ages set by the state where they are located.

Presently, 23 states have the 21 minimum age law and 19 others are considering it. Because of the minimum age differences in state laws, "border problems" exist. Young people from states with the higher age cross the border to drink and then have to drive home. Recognizing this problem, DoD has granted local base commanders authority to make exceptions to its new policy by permitting those under 21 to drink on base when there's a danger they may drive to a nearby state and be in greater risk.

The sobering facts about drunk driving

That little piece of paper called a driver's license is a ticket to a tremendous expansion of a person's freedom. Many people achieve this goal, but some of them don't consider the advantages they have gained with their license, or what some 'harmless' activities might have on it.

The Alcohol and Drug Control Education Office will be exploring with you the effects alcohol and other drugs have on your driving during the forthcoming weeks with articles in the Bayonet. These articles will give you the facts to allow you to make a more responsible decision regarding your life and drinking alcohol or using other drugs and driving your automobile.

Sobering facts

During the 12 years U.S. Forces were actively engaged in Vietnam, there were 57,637 soldiers killed in action and 510,184 wounded. During those same 12 years 312,000 Americans were killed on our highways due to alcohol related traffic accidents and more than eight million Americans were injured, maimed and crippled.

An average of 27,500 Americans are killed every year due to alcohol related traffic accidents; this equals out to 75 each day, 3 each hour or 1 every 20 minutes.

There are two million alcohol related motor vehicle accidents each year in the United States. This equals to 5,495 each day, 228 each hour, 4 each minute or two every 30 seconds.

It can happen to you but it can be prevented. For information on how to prevent alcohol related traffic accidents, call 545-4993, 545-5880 or 545-2574.

within 31 days after the effective date of their appointment. Employees serving under appointments limited to one year or less and intermittent employees (those with no prescheduled tour of duty) are ineligible to enroll. Enrollees may change from one plan to another and eligible employees who previously declined enrollment may register during the open season.

The Federal Employees Health Benefits Program consists of three plan categories of health insurance:

• Government-wide service benefit and indemnity plans (Blue Cross and Blue Shield and the insurance-industry plan administered by Aetna Life Insurance Company): all employees eligible to participate in the program may enroll in either plan.

• Employee organization plans: sponsored by unions and other employee organizations, some plans are open for enrollment to all Federal employees. Most, however, have specific membership requirements, such as being a member of the plan's organization or becoming an associate by making one-time or continuing dues payments.

• Comprehensive medical plans: generally open to all employees residing in the geographical area serviced by the plan. To qualify for its benefits, the employee and covered family members must be physically present in that area to receive care from physicians and facilities recognized under the plan (except in emergencies or on referral). Any enrollee requiring medical treatment outside the area is entitled to reimbursement for emergency care only.

FEHB registration and change procedures appear on the easy-to-use SF 2809 blank form. Copies are available at the local Civilian Personnel Office.

The SF 2809 is a simple form calling for such basic information as your name, choice of plan, kind of coverage desired, marital status, and names of family members who are eligible for coverage.

The completed form is turned in to the servicing Civilian Personnel Office — where its reviewed for completeness and eligibility — and then forwarded to the finance office for processing. (ANS)

Georgia vets receive income questionnaire

Some 60,000 Georgians on the Veterans Administration's pension rolls will soon be receiving annual Income Questionnaire (IQ) cards that usually arrive around Nov. 1.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said that, for the second consecutive year, IQ cards are being sent to all widows and children in receipt of death pension, to all parents receiving dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC), and to all pensioners who previously were exempt due to their having attained the age of 72 and who met certain income criteria. Wheeler added that, as was done last year, the VA will again be mailing the IQ cards separate from the Nov. 1 checks.

The IQ cards must be completed and returned to the VA before Jan. 1, 1985. "Failure to return a completed questionnaire to the VA by that Jan. 1 deadline could result in a pension payment being suspended," Wheeler warned. He added that this regulation does not apply to those veterans and widows receiving compensation for service-connected disabilities and deaths.

Subject to certain income limitations, VA pensions are paid to wartime veterans totally and permanently disabled from causes not connected with this military service and to surviving spouses of wartime veterans. The amount of pension is based upon a recipient's income.

VA benefits are not counted as income, but other revenue sources such as Social Security, retirement, real estate rentals, dividends and interest, and wages are considered by the VA in determining one's pension benefits for the coming year.

All Georgians on the VA's pension rolls are urged to contact their nearest Georgia Department of Veterans Service office for assistance in completing their IQ cards. (GDVS)

Drugged drivers pose equal threat on nation's highways

America's current campaign to make the nation's roadways safer by cracking down on drunk drivers, while unquestionably successful, is too narrowly focused. The problem of drugged driving, which poses just as much a threat to public safety, is virtually being ignored, Reader's Digest reports in its October issue.

"Today people are driving under the influence of drugs that are at least as intoxicating as alcohol," says Charles V. Welti, deputy chief medical examiner of Dade County, Fla. "As medical examiners, we see the dire results of drugged driving in dead bodies — including countless innocent people killed by drugged drivers."

Marijuana, which is just as driver-impairing as alcohol, is believed responsible for most of the drug-related traffic mishaps. No one knows, however, how many traffic accidents the millions of pot-high drivers are causing for the simple reason individuals arrested for a Driving Under the Influence (DUI) charge are not routinely tested for marijuana in any state. And in most states,the DUI driver can select the chemical test he takes: breath, blood or urine.

"Since no drugs show up on an alcohol breath test, drugged drivers who've had little or no alcohol invariably opt for it," writes The Digest's Peggy Mann, who has been alerting the public to the dangers of marijuana for years.

Marijuana, says Mann, is not the only culprit. Amphetamines, cocaine, barbiturates and hallucinogens are equally lethal when combined with an automobile.

Legal drugs prescribed by physicians are also a potential source of trouble. Doctors sometimes forget to mention a drug's effects on driving and may neglect to ask about other drugs a person is taking that can increase the driver-impairing effects of the new drug. Over-the-counter medications can cause driver impairment, too. Drugs such as antihistamines, cough suppressants, muscle relaxants and decongestants can cause drowsiness, dizziness, slowed reflexes and general disorientation.

Despite a growing body of knowledge about the hazards of drugs and driving, government agencies and citizen activist groups remain silent on the subject. This, writes Mann, could give a falsely reassuring message to drug users — too many of whom already believe it's safe to drive "high."

In keeping with its policy of helping to remedy the threat to public safety from drug abuse, The Digest recommends the following "decisive steps" to help combat the hazards of drugged driving:

- Better Education: citizen activist groups campaigning against drunk driving should expand their horizons to include the drugged driver. Their efforts already have helped reduce the number of intoxicated drivers killed in automobile crashes. In addition, driver-ed courses, drug education in schools, drunk-driving programs for convicted DUIs, and drug abuse treatment programs must devote time to the driver-impairing effects of drugs.

- New Laws: in the handful of states which have passed and enforced laws designed to combat the problem of drugged driving, DUI arrests have increased and traffic fatalities have decreased.

- Additional Research: government agencies such as the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism should join forces in launching a major epidemiological survey on alcohol, drugs and traffic fatalities. The results would provide valuable information on the magnitude of the problem.

(Reader's Digest)

Excessive drinking is major concern of alcohol industry

Excessive drinking is the concern of the alcohol industry itself. Major trade associations are urging moderation. The United States Brewers Association, Inc., which represents the majority of brewers, discourages bars frequented by young people from "glamorizing" alcohol by associating it with maturity, masculinity or equality for women. The association also frowns on two-for-one price reductions, special pitcher rates and low cost "happy hours." It encourages talent shows and other events to divert attention away from steady drinking. Beer accounts for about half of all the alcohol consumed in the U.S. Last year, more than 5.6 billion gallons were consumed or about 33 gallons for every person 18 years and older.

"Last year, about 33 gallons of beer were consumed for every person 18 years and older."

The Distilled Spirits Council of the U.S., whose members represent 80 percent of the distilled spirits manufacturers such as whiskey, brandy, and rum, has a Code of Good Practice stating no broadcast advertisements should claim sexual or physical prowess from drinking these products. All advertisements should be dignified, modest, and in good taste, the code states.

The Wine Institute supports a 21 year minimum drinking age in all states. An institute spokesman said wine advertisements don't picture macho-type behavior or have sex appeal. "We bring food into the picture, showing that wine should be taken with meals instead of giving the impression of getting high," he said.

In the past several years, the growth rate of wine consumption by Americans has dropped by about half. The per capita consumption of distilled spirits has fallen off about two and one-half percent since 1982, and beer drinking climbed about one-third of one percent last year over the volume consumed in 1982. (AFPS)

Theater expects heavenly opening

By Sara Miller
Ledger/Enquirer staff writer

An inexperienced messenger from heaven prematurely snatches up the soul of a young boxer. There's a wild search for a new body for the boxer's soul. Then there's a millionaire, a beautiful woman, a murder . . . and so the plot thickens in the stage version of "Heaven Can Wait," opening Thursday at the Fort Benning Community Theatre.

Although the film by the same name was taken from the stage script, those who've seen the movie "Heaven Can Wait" may notice some differences in the play, says Abby Rainey, artistic director for the theater and di ector of "Heaven Can Wait."

One difference is the time period. Unlike the movie, the play is set in the 1930s, and the characters wear stylish costumes of the period. Ms. Rainey has selected the costumes, some of which are original outfits from the '30s.

The cast of "Heaven Can Wait" comes from a variety of backgrounds. Military personnel, military family members and "plain old" civilians have all come together under Ms. Rainey's direction, and become "real close as a group," she says.

Most of the play's action takes place in the mansion of the millionaire, Farnsworth, and the Benning theater's set, designed by Robert Munro, theater technician, will reflect the splendor and opulence of his home. Munro "has done an incredible job so far," says Ms. Rainey. "I feel sure it'll be one of the best sets I've seen since I've been here."

"Heaven Can Wait" opens Thursday with additional performances Friday and Saturday and Nov. 8, 9, and 10. Curtain time is 8 p.m. except for Friday when curtain time is 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $2 and available by calling 545-7636, or at the door. The theater is at the corner of Anderson Street and Wold Avenue on Fort Benning's Main Post.

U.S military exercises reassure support to Honduras

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

It's nighttime. Warm blooded beings, including man, must beware. Somewhere out there a drinker of blood is airborne, searching for a victim. Ending its flight by landing on the target or settling down nearby and hobbling to it, the night creature slices the skin with razor-sharp teeth. The bite is painless, seldom disturbing the sleeping or still victim. As blood oozes from the wound, the vampire bat drinks its fill.

The location is not Transylvania and the 1 to 2 ounce creature never transforms into Count Dracula. The vampire bat of Honduras and other Central American countries is real. Its thirst is not greedy and neither humans or livestock lose significant amounts of blood to the vampire bat's bite. But rabies is a possibility, so cautious persons protect themselves with a secured tent or mosquito netting when sleeping.

In those parts of the country where they are found, the bats hang out in caves, hollow trees, and abandoned buildings. Their roosting areas can often be identified by a strong ammonia odor, which comes from droppings of digested blood.

Another Honduran creature whose workday begins at night lives in forested regions of the country. It is the night monkey, whose owl-like eyes pierce the darkness in search of food — fruits, insects and small animals.

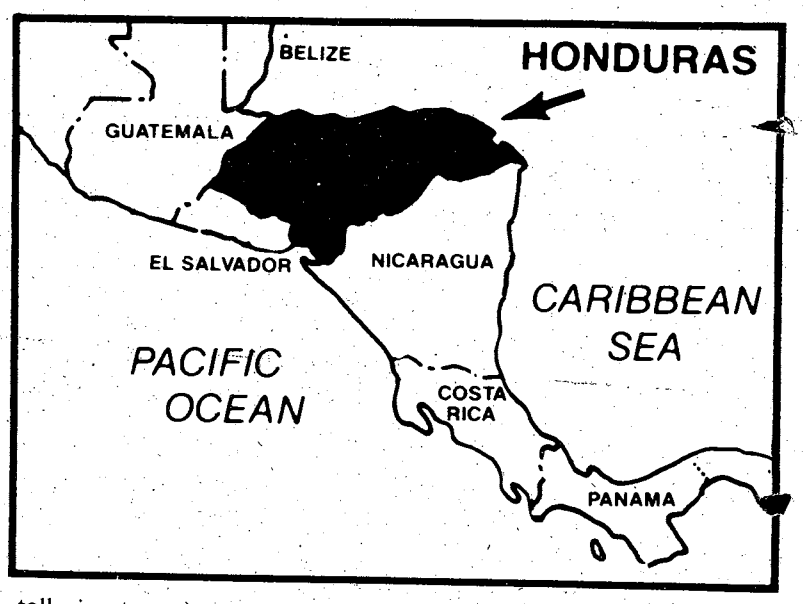
One of the few primates that is completely nocturnal, the owl monkey, as it is also known, chirps, squeaks and barks its way through the hours of darkness. Then it settles its small (1 to 2 pound) furry body into a hollow tree or a tangle of vines. Basically shy and gentle, the night monkey can nevertheless create a lot of noise while most other forest creatures are trying to get a good night's sleep.

The country that is home to these animals — Honduras — has a population of more than 3.5 million. The Hondurans are descendents of the Mayan Indians who developed a complex civilization centered near Copan, Honduras, more than 2,000 years ago. Most Hondurans make their living by farming.

Honduras is bordered by Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua. The Hondurans ended 18 years of military rule when they elected Dr. Roberto Suazo Cordova to the presidency on November 29, 1981. Suazo took office January 27, 1982.

A continuing concern of the Honduran government is fear of invasion by Nicaragua.

At the request of the Honduran government, the United States and Honduras conducted three joint exercises, beginning with Big Pine I in February 1983. (Honduras is known for the unusually short time it takes to grow tall pine trees.)



Big Pine II was a large-scale operation and involved 5,000 U.S troops, including an amphibious assault by 1,800 U.S. Marines. The third exercise, Granadero I, began in April, 1984, and was completed in June. Granadero I involved 2,700 U.S. troops and included small unit operations, airmobile operations, artillery and close air support and operational planning.

The Big Pine and Granadero exercises reflect U.S. resolve to reassure Central American nations of its continuing support and individual equipment, move as a member of a fire team, demonstrate individual movement techniques, collect/report SALUTE information, and select temporary battlefield positions. The defensive operation's tasks included construct individual fighting positions to include M-60 and Dragon positions, camouflage/conceal defensive positions, clear fields of fire, use challenge and password, establish an observation post, and designate fighting positions for squad members. In addition to the round-robin classes and the actual "doing" of the tasks, offensive and defensive night operations were carried out each night. These day and night exercises were carried out for the next three days. All the long, tedious hours previously spent on ranges and in classrooms learning individual skills were now being brought together for the soldier as he actively used these individual skills to accomplish collective tasks.

"This FTX is the culmination of an Infantry soldier's basic and AIT training," said Rogers." Everything he has learned is put to use here, during this five day period.

"The men are notharassed but the discipline factor comes into play. The men are disciplined to go the extra distance, disciplined to give that extra effort," he continued. "That's a major part of this FTX and the men, because of their self-discipline, become more confident in themselves."

The men were dirty, tired, sweaty and gritty, but, said Pvt. Michael Maloney from Long Island, N.Y., "this is what I came into the Army for; to get into the woods, see the 'enemy', and learn how to fight them. It's just great. We're doing now what you read about in books and see in movies. It's better in the woods, hands-on experience, than in the classroom.

On Wednesday morning, their last day in the field, and after little sleep and much training, the men again cleaned up, chowed down and packed up, "to go out the same way they had come into this FTX: marching, with full equipment. After five days of tough, intensive training, B-8-2 was going home, with just two weeks left in OSUT.

As the men marched out of their company assembly area and wound, snake-like, down the dusty road, they were walking. Soon they would be at their units, armed with the best Infantry knowledge and training, ready to run.

NRA announces indoor shooting champions

Four USAMU marksmen earn titles

Four members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit were recently announced as 1984 National Indoor Rifle and Pistol Champions by the National Rifle Association in Washington, D.C.

The championships were conducted earlier this year at more than 130 locations across the nation. A total of 4,616 individuals competed in the matches and the scores were then forwarded to the National Rifle Association for final tabulation of individual and team winners.

Lones Wigger captured the 4-Position Smallbore Rifle title with a near perfect score of 799 out of 800 possible points. Wigger holds the existing national record with 800 out of 800. Third place honors went to USAMU's David Erickson, only one point back at 798.

The International Smallbore event went to Glenn Dubis who edged teammates Richard Hawkins and Wigger by two points. Dubis scored a total of 1,176 out of 1,200 while Hawkins and Wigger finished in a tie at 1,174.

Jimmie McCoy won the International Free Pistol title after finishing in a three-way tie with Army Reservist Eugene Ross and teammate Erich Buljung. All three competitors scored 558 out of 600 with McCoy being declared the winner through the tie-breaking procedure.

The conventional indoor pistol event was won by Thomas Woods with a total of 887 out of 900 points. Woods defeated National Guardsman Norman Girardin, who finished one point back at 886.

USAMU also won a total of seven national indoor team titles, including four in rifle and three in pistol events.

Retirees attend open house at Fort Benning

More than 1,000 people turn out

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than a thousand retirees, their families and friends, turned out for the Annual Retiree Open House here at Fort Benning last Friday and Saturday.

The two day event, designed to keep military retirees informed on current changes to their benefits, was opened to retirees from all branches of the service, according to Barbara A. Youngs, retirement services officer. This is the first year retirees from the other branches of service have been invited to attend, she said.

Friday's agenda included: registration; a welcome ceremony; lunch with the troops at an Army Training Center "Starship" and The School Brigade dining facilities; tours of the ATC; live-fire demonstrations; and a "Rangers in Action" demonstration. The evening's activities included an All-U-Can-Eat Buffet at the Officers' Club. Information booths and displays were set up where ID cards were made and DEERS information and confirmations were made. A special medical team answered questions about health care which included CHAMPUS and Medicare. Weight and blood pressures were checked and tests for glaucoma and diabetes were given. The festivities ended with a barbeque picnic.

"Retirees look forward to this event every year. And it shows that the Army still cares," Youngs said.

Week to highlight Army's continuing education system

The Army Continuing Education System Division will celebrate American Education Week November 11-17, 1984. All service members and their family members are cordially invited and encouraged to visit their servicing education center to take advantage of the opportunities, programs and services available.

The Army Continuing Education System Division offers a variety of programs to service members to improve professional and personal skills, to include BSEP (Basic Skills Education Program), high school completion programs, vocational technical skill programs, college programs from associate to doctoral programs, apprenticeship programs in many MOS areas, foreign language programs and MOS skill development programs. Counselors are prepared to advise, discuss and inform service members of benefits offered under the Veterans' Education Assistance Program (VEAP), G.I. Bill, Tuition Assistance Program, College Level Examination Program (CLEP), interest inventories for career counseling, MOS testing and other counseling services.

The basic philosophy of General Educational Development in the Army is that any individual can improve himself through study. This process does not stop with completion of formal schooling at an early age, but is a life-long process. Continuing education is essential if military personnel are to achieve maximum career potential and develop desired creative, intellectual and leadership abilities.

Education centers and sub-centers are located in the following areas: Main Post, building 35, Room 309; Kelley Hill, building 9027; 36th Engineer Group, building 2823; Harmony Church, building 5153; Infantry Hall, Room E33; and Sand Hill, building 3215.

Call or stop by your servicing education center and start your career improvement.

Veteran's Day is more than gratitude for job well done

President Wilson, in proclaiming the first Armistice Day, said:

"To us in America, the reflections of Armistice Day will be filled with solemn pride in the heroism of those who died in the country's service, and with gratitude for the victory, both because of the thing from which it has freed us, and because of the opportunity it has given America to show her sympathy with peace and justice in the council of the nations."

"The War to end all wars," November 11 might still be called Armistice Day. But shortly after the holiday was proclaimed, World War II broke out in Europe.

An answer to the dilemma of how to pay tribute to those who had served in this latest great war came in a proposal made by Representative Edwin K. Rees of Kansas: change Armistice Day to Veterans Day and make this an occasion to honor all those who have served in our wars.

President Eisenhower, in 1954, signed the bill proclaiming November 11 as Veterans Day and he called for Americans everywhere to rededicate themselves to the cause of peace.

We are not here today to mourn our dead, with long faces and dull words — we are here to honor them, to sing their triumphs and to praise. We are here to say a deep and grateful "thank you" to all those who have gone their way; to thank them for what they gave us, for their spirit of democracy, for their contribution to the wealth of our heritage and, above all, FOR THEIR PATRIOTISM.

What has happened to the patriotism of which we once spoke with pride? Has it suddenly become a dirty word?

Let us walk back in history for a few moments, to that day in 1776 when the Declaration of Independence was signed. The 56 men who signed that document were not afraid or ashamed to let their countrymen — indeed the whole world — know what they were doing — and doing it in defiance of the British government. They all wrote their names boldly and proudly, for all to see.

The men at Valley Forge had much to complain about, but "they stayed the course." No one would or could have blamed any of the 180-man garrison of the Alamo if they had left at the approach of the 4,000 enemy — but none bore the name of coward. They stayed, they died, and they are remembered.

Tribute to these veterans of wartime service, and to their fallen comrades, has a deeper significance than a mere expression of gratitude for a job well done — important and fitting as such expressions are. For we realize that we cannot discharge our solemn obligation to our veterans with only words of homage.

The future they believed in, and for which they sacrificed, is here today. We now enjoy the liberties they fought and died to preserve. In return, we must fight as valiantly as they did to insure these same blessings for our posterity.

So, in a sense, Veterans Day affords the entire nation an opportunity not only to assess its accomplishments of the past but also to examine its duties and responsibilities of today and of the future.

In thinking about World War I, one fact seems most salient. At its start, and for the first two years or so of fighting, most Americans thought it was none of their business.

We had no alliances, none of our national interests were involved. Broad oceans and friendly neighbors insured our safety and our ability to remain aloof. All this proved to be a cruel delusion; it was our business, we could not remain aloof.

Many thoughtful men realized that with World War I our nation and its place in the world had changed, and that the change was irreversible. The advent of great Twentieth Century technological and international developments, indeed, made for closer and more immediate contact among nations of the world.

We are the most powerful nation on earth, the recognized leader of the free world. We know that our strength and actions exert a profound influence on world events — and, conversely, that we can be truly free and secure only to the extent that men everywhere enjoy peace and freedom.

That knowledge imposes an enormous responsibility on our nation, and with the responsibility some exacting tasks. Many of these tasks properly belong to our entire nation; others, as in times past, can be accomplished only through the skill and dedication of our soldiers.

The tasks to be performed by our armed forces in the shrunken world of today have never been so numerous or difficult. Our forces — to deter aggression — must be prepared to meet aggression. But if deterrence fails, we must be prepared to defend out country.

The signers of the Declaration of Independence, the men from Valley Forge, and the men of the Alamo, all have one thing in common, moral courage. Theirs was no blind obedience to orders issued by someone else from safe haven. Theirs was the solid and deliberate choice of doing what had to be done — no ifs, buts, or maybes — they had a job to do, and they did it. It was just that simple. And all of us here today can say with heartfelt meaning, "Thank God for what they did." These are serious times — times when our Veterans all over the world need the moral support and backing of every American who is privileged to enjoy the freedoms of our beloved country.

The Revolutionary War set us free and gave us the independence to develop as a nation. Throughout our history, we have repeatedly gone to war to preserve the freedom bought with the blood of the men from Valley Forge. Our men have bled and died — at Chateau Thierry, at Belleau Wood; and twenty-four years later in the scorching heat of North Africa, in the bitter cold of the Italian mountains, and in the humid rot of the Pacific jungles they again fought, and bled, and died. Then, once more in Korea, when aggression threatened to undo all we had won, they unhesitatingly took up arms and faced the privations and sacrifices of the battlefield.

The existence of such overwhelming force is the best guarantor against our having to use it.

We should be proud of our veterans

On this Veterans Day, in this year of 1984, when our nation is at peace, we honor the gallant men and women of our military forces, past and present, who have purchased that peace with their unselfish service and sacrifices.

Americans are proud of their Veterans. We have entrusted to them the preservation of our nation's heritage and freedom, and our Veterans have never betrayed that trust.

Our Veterans have borne the burdens of freedom, and they have helped maintain our nation's preeminence as a world leader. They have provided the strength and commitment necessary to deter war on our nation and our allies.

On behalf of the Department of Defense, I express sincere appreciation to all our Veterans who have given this great nation and their fellow countrymen a valuable legacy, a legacy of peace with freedom.

Caspar Weinberger
Secretary of Defense

Veteran's Day

History records the repugnancy with which our nation has traditionally looked upon the use of force; but the Cuban missile crisis in the fall of 1962 and the Grenada operation in 1983 proved that we will not shrink from it when our security or the peace of the world is threatened. For this reason, we maintain the capability to respond to aggressive intentions with restrained, controlled force, adequate to the situation.

This requirement that our forces be capable of quick response places additional demands on our nation and upon our men in uniform. We need skilled, trained soldiers to operate complex, sophisticated equipment and weapons systems and at the same time,we must have men able to fight in low intensity, old fashioned wars — with rifles and bayonets. Here, let us digress a moment and say a word about a subject very dear to my heart — the American soldier of today.

Never before in history has a soldier been confronted with a more profound challenge. The skills he must possess are more varied, numerous, and difficult to attain than was dreamed possible in the past, and he must learn to exercise these skills in rigorous environments ranging from the arctic to the tropics.

Sometimes, he will find himself performing a dangerous task that some of his fellow citizens at home are only vaguely aware of and, in some instances, not convinced of its necessity. All this our soldier does today with the same good humor that has always characterized the American soldier, secure in the knowledge that his cause is just and what he defends is worth defending at any cost.

There is still another aspect of a soldier's duties today, one that previous generations of American soldiers did not have to cope with. These are the duties he has had to assume to support our national policy of furnishing military assistance to friendly nations. Again, these duties encompass a wide range of activities; Americans in uniform may be offering professional advice to the highest echelons of a foreign government, or they may be instructing on the use of modern equipment, or they may be accompanying local forces in jungles and swamps searching for elusive guerrillas.

> "We are not here today to mourn our dead, with long faces and dull words — we are here to honor them."

To let aggression go unchecked would dishonor the very men whom we honor today. Could we say to them that their sacrifices were in vain, that they gave up their lives so that we could throw away our freedom by inaction and submission to an ideology so repugnant to our way of life?

In closing, it seems appropriate to turn again to World War I, whose ending is celebrated by this day. Many of you no doubt remember the poem, "In Flanders Fields," and the lines: "To you from failing hands we throw/The torch be yours to hold it high." (VA)

Editor's note

Robert McClain's column will not appear in this week's Bayonet. His column will return next week.

Do you suffer from a case of 'red pencil mentality'?

By David Soulsby
Chief, TRADOC OCPA, Print Media Team

Hidden within the very walls and halls, deep in the inner-sanctum crevices and crannies of this and other headquarters may lurk the fearful plague virus responsible for periodic outbreaks of that dread disease, "RED-PENCIL MENTALITY."

This disease strikes without warning and will no doubt affect many of the people you work with at some time or another.

A person suffering from this malady is fairly easy to spot. As he sits down to read any written material, he reaches imediately for a RED PENCIL. Actually, there is no significance to the color red — the pencil could be yellow, chartreuse, or even magenta for that matter, as long as it offers bright, snappy contrast. Failure to dig up anything but a plain old number-two graphite commonly leads to nervous breakdown in the afflicted person.

Next, the Red-Penciller begins the hunt for mistakes. "I know their there and ill find 'em or — Eureka! Got one!"

Suddenly tired, sore eyes focus with the greatest of ease. Even in the normally lackadaisical worker, concentration becomes sharp and intense; coffee-break time may come and pass unheeded. Heartbeat rate accelerates markedly, persperation increases, and adrenalin levels shoot off the chart.

• See RED PENCIL, page 4

Preparedness key to deterrence

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace." — President George Washington, January 1790.

The history of our young nation has borne out the truth of those words, even though our national policy has always opposed the maintenance in peacetime of an Army at full war footing. We have found our freedoms under attack only when we were lacking in either adequate military capability or a national consensus of will to use the capability, or both. World War II is an excellent example of how we heightened the threat by being unprepared. Winston Churchill called it "the unnecessary war." In his view it was the easiest war in history to avoid and it took almost malign incompetence on the part of the democracies for it to happen.

A recent poll of our citizens showed that seventy-one percent believe that promoting the security of the United States should be the most important pillar of our national policy. What is needed to support that pillar? Simply stated:

- We need the capability, in conjunction with our allies, to deter warfare at all levels and the will to defend our interests should deterrence fail.
- We need to maintain United States technological superiority over our most logical adversary, the Soviet Union.
- Above all, we need to provide the military and economic strength from which lasting peace negotiations can be pursued.

It is imperative that our adversaries as well as our friends and allies recognize that Americans are proud of their freedoms — and that they would fight to protect them. (AUSA)

Air traffic controller selected as command's soldier of year

By Connie Dickey
JSAIC Public Affairs Office

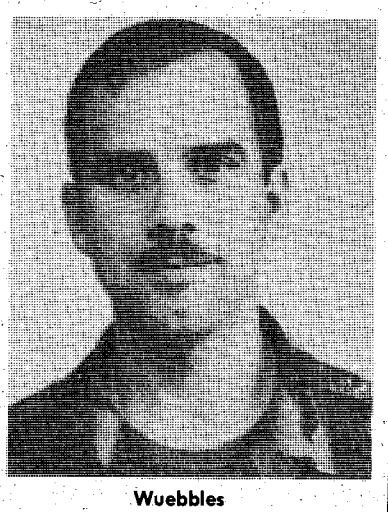
Specialist four Steven W. Wuebbles, an air traffic controller assigned to the U.S. Army Information Systems Command-Fort Benning, was recently selected as the USAISC-TRADOC Soldier of the Year. He competed with 16 other soldiers for the honor.

Wuebbles won post USAISC Soldier of the Year in August and went to a preliminary board at Fort Gordon the end of August. He explained there were four preliminary boards held throughout TRADOC before the winners of those boards met in Williamsburg, Va., Sept. 10 for the final board. The installations represented at the preliminary board at Fort Gordon were Forts Benning, Gordon, Bliss, McClellan and Jackson.

For his efforts in winning Soldier of the Year, Wuebbles received a plaque from the NCO Association, a trophy from JSAISC-TRADOC and an Army Achievement Medal.

"The final board was totally different from any other board I've been to," Wuebbles said. "There were 29 different areas covered, like; the quality management program, SQT, promotions, reductions, administrative discharges, common tasks and drill and ceremony. There were 80 questions and I was in there for about an hour and 15 minutes. It was very unnerving."

The 31-year-old Carlyle, Ill., native has been in the Army since March 1983 this time around. "I got out of the service in February 1981 after serving eight years and seven months. But I think now I will make the Army a career," Wuebbles said. He held primary MOSs in 71P, flight operations and 91R, food inspector, before switching to 93J, ground control operator, during his prior service days. "When I re-enlisted I decided to keep my last MOS because I like it. The best thing about this MOS is that regardless of your rank, you have the same responsibility when you are performing your job," he said.



Wuebbles

Wuebbles has worked at Lawson Army Airfield for 16 months and said he got a lot of support when he decided to try for the board. "The first thing that happened was I was taken off shift work and put on straight days so I could study at night. Most of the studying was on my own. I had had some experience being in front of a board before, so that helped," he said.

During Wuebbles' prior service time he had been selected Soldier of the Quarter twice. He also was the distinguished honor graduate of the 91R course and graduated in the top 10 percent of the Primary Leadership Development Course.

"I wanted to go to this board so I could make my records look better. The promotion points in my MOS are really high and I have to compete with a lot of sharp young soldiers, so I need to get all the points I can," Wuebbles said.

Wuebbles went to Maryland in late September to compete in the 7th Signal Command Soldier of the Year board, in which he finished third. The 7th Signal controls all the Information Systems Commands in the 48 states, Hawaii and Panama.

"I'm just trying to be the best soldier I can be. You get out what you put into it. The best thing to do in going in front of a board is study and study hard," he said.

Wuebbles lives on post with his wife, Karen, and their 7-month-old daughter, Stephanie.

Insurance required for all vehicles

Personnel operating motor vehicles on the Fort Benning reservation are required to have them insured (USAIC Reg 190-5). Active duty military personnel and government employees are reminded that failure to have a vehicle insured will result in denial of any claim arising from fire, flood, theft, or vandalism while the vehicle is located on the reservation incident-to-service. Normally, a vehicle properly parked on the reservation is presumed to be parked there incident to the claimant's service. However, a claim for loss of or damage to a vehicle which, for example, is located in a remote area of the installation, may be barred from payment if this or other relevant facts would support a finding of negligence on the part of the claimant. Similarly, the failure to have the vehicle insured may remove the incident-to-service presumption and bar recovery for damages mentioned above. (SJA)

As the disease runs it's course, a Red-Penciller may begin to chuckle feindishly, or even break out into semi-hysterical laughter. Some vitims have reportedly tried to hide these symptoms; such persons are identifiable by the muffled, choking sounds emanating from their offices. They repeatedly assure any inquirer that they are perfectly alright.

After a Red-Pencil attack subsides, it can be difficult to distinguish an infected person from any average, healthy office worker. Close examination, however, will reveal a triumphant gleam in the eyes, and the Red-Penciller himself will allways provide the most significant clue to proper diagnosis of his condition, by saying ingeniously, "Send this material back for correction, heh-heh-heh."

The only thing the Red-Penciller usually misses is the content and meaning of the material they have just returned.

Do you suffer from a chronic case of RED-PENCIL MENTALITY? NOTE: If the above article has somehow wound up decorated with bright-colored circles around every one of the seven purposely inserted typos, you have just had another Red-Penxil seizure. Turn in your pencil sharpener, before it's too late!

Rebuilding missile rounds helps weapons pool save thousands

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Weapons Pool Branch started rebuilding missile simulation rounds instead of buying new ones, resulting in a SPIRIT savings of $181,962 per year.

"The reason we started rebuilding the rounds was simply because we were not able to get enough of them from our supplier," said James Starling, chief, Weapons Pool Branch. "The training manual on the rounds explained how to rebuild them, so it was just a matter of getting enough empty casings to use."

They get the casings free from the Ammunition Storage Issue office on post and from Fort Rucker, Ala. It costs about $14 to rebuild one, compared to a price tag of $1,280 for a new one.

The Weapons Pool Branch is the main location at Benning that provides this type item for training and they were concerned about the shortage of rounds because it would mean a degradation of training for some troops.

"It is a simple procedure for our workers to use a small drill and a little bit of wire to rebuild these TOW missile simulation rounds," said Starling, "and this way we are able to keep the training units supplied."

The personnel in the TOW/DRAGON Section and CW2 Arthur Miller, an armament repair technician, were the people who came up with the idea of rebuilding the rounds, Starling said.

Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator said, "We find that this is the way people discover savings time and again, just by looking to see how they can use available resources to fill a need."

CSM Hollander bids farewell to Army

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Veterans Day, also known as Armistice Day, commemorates the signing of the World War I Armistice at 11:11 A.M. on November 11, 1918. Armistice Day was officially renamed Veterans Day in 1954, to pay tribute to the men and women who served in the Armed Forces during all wars and conflicts.

Such an individual is Command Sergeant Major Jimmie R. Hollander, CSM of the United States Army Infantry Training Center, who bids the U.S. Army farewell after 30 years of service on February 1, 1985.

Hollander entered the United States Army from the state of Nebraska January 23, 1955. He received basic training at Fort Ord, Calif., and Advanced Individual Training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. He has served in the 7th Army, 8th Army, 32d Missile Command, 3d Infantry Division, 4th Infantry Division, 5th Infantry Division, 8th Infantry Division, 1st Calvary Division and 130th Engineer Brigade, as a combat engineer, squad leader, platoon sergeant, platoon leader and first sergeant. Hollander has served as a command sergeant major in infantry, armor and engineer units in Korea and the United States.

Hollander is a graduate of several noncommissioned officer schools and the Sergeants Major Academy.

His decorations include the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, Air Medal, Army Commendation Medal fifth award, Purple Heart, and the Good Conduct Medal with nine loops.

Hollander, who goes on terminal leave November 21, said, "Veterans Day is a time to give thanks to all veterans who preceded us."

He and his wife Ruth will reside in Columbus.

MIX IT WELL — A 43rd Engineer cook prepares lunch in the field.

Cooks head to the field for Connelly competition

By Tim Torok
43rd Engineer Bn. PAO

Hours before sunrise, food service personnel in dining facilities all over post are already preparing breakfast for their troops. It's business as usual. But business as usual took a different twist for six food service personnel participating in the 17th Annual Phillip A. Connelly Food Service Competition Nov. 1.

Representing Fort Benning in the competition, five cooks and their NCO in charge from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, left the familiar surroundings of their dining facility and took to the field to compete against 16 other Training and Doctrine Command units in the field mess category.

To be selected to represent Fort Benning in the field mess category, the 43rd Engineer Battalion's dining facility was first selected as the best facility in the 36th Engineer Group, according to 2nd Lt. Willie J. Favors, the officer in charge of the field mess site. "The next step was a post-wide competition to determine the post's representative," he said.

Located roughly 100 yards into the woods from Sightseeing Road, between Dixie Road and Sunshine Road, the field mess site is hidden under a dome of camouflage netting. "The field mess site was set up to feed approximately 80 soldiers in a simulated tactical environment," Favors said.

"Two representatives from TRADOC headquarters are evaluating the site, in two parts," said Favors. "One will evaluate the meal and the other the sanitation aspect."

"We're covering food preparation and sanitation," said SGM Astor Terry, an evaluator and the food service Sergeant Major for TRADOC, from Fort Monroe, Va.

Being evaluated by the two is the training and supervision of the food service personnel, storage of the food items, sanitation, command support, appearance and attitude of the personnel, maintenance and proper usage of the equipment and the preparation and quality of the meals, according to Terry.

"Safety is also part of the evaluation because we have people using gas to operate their equipment," said Terry.

The second phase of the competition includes evaluating the proper field sanitation, the proper handling of the food by the food service personnel, cleanliness of the pots, pans and cooking utensils, the procedures for

1-58th takes different route during tactical road march

By Debbie Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

It was an unusual sight. Standing on a bridge looking at traffic on Route 27, there was an 18-wheeler passing a long line of Armored Personnel Carriers (APCs) on the four-lane highway.

The rumbling convoy of tracks and trucks stretched as far as the eye could see. Civilian traffic flowed by them with ease.

The entire 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), with cross attachments; artillery, engineers, tanks and ground surveillance radar was moving in a tactical road march.

Using civilian routes, the convoy moved from Kelley Hill to the extreme eastern end of Fort Benning's Reservation.

"The result of the mission," explained Lt. Col. David L. Peebles, commander of 1-58th, "was to be prepared to execute a contingency mission. The battalion must be able to carry out a long distance road march on civilian highways. The soldiers are used to tank trails. Traveling on civilian roads, which requires different techniques of travel, is a new experience for the soldiers. The battalion must be capable of moving out in a timely manner, in good order with little disruption to the civilian environment.

"The route chosen was intentional because it offered a combination of different types of roads. From the two lane country road to the four lane high speed limited access," continued Peebles. "Routes had to be determined, clearances had to be received for use of the routes, types of vehicles, for specified days and times."

The road march was orchestrated with the convoy departing at the starting point at a

197th commanders exchange ideas at conference

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

Company commanders and staff members of the 197th Infantry Brigade get together twice a year with Brigade Commander Col. James A. Musselman for a chance to exchange ideas and information among themselves.

"The brigade commander's priorities and philosophies are put out during the seminar," explained Capt. Charles Wilson III, brigade S-1. Adding that, "survey information and issues that the company commanders might have are talked about in briefings by the different staff sections."

Prior to each seminar, a questionnaire is distributed to those attending for completion. The survey deals primarily with issues that the commanders would like to see addressed.

The most recent seminar was held Oct. 18 and 19.

"All the seminars are held at the Officer's Club," said Wilson. "This allows the commanders to get away from their work environment for a couple of days and talk about things that are important to them."

Attending the seminar were 35 company commanders, three incoming company commanders and various staff members. Also present was the guest speaker, General William J. Livsey, Commanding General of the 8th Army in Korea.

"Livsey talked about leadership," remarked Capt. Peter J. Palmer, commander of C Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry. "Specifically, that leadership at all levels has one major concern: care for the well-being and welfare of the soldiers."

This is the fourth seminar that the brigade has conducted. Former brigade commander Col. Carmen J. Cavezza held the original seminar. Subsequent seminars have been chaired by Musselman.

"The commander's seminar is an interaction between the unit commanders, brigade commander, and brigade staff," explained Palmer. "It familiarizes everyone with the commander's policy and permits the unit commanders to get to know and interact with the commander and staff."

"The issues brought up at the seminar are handed over to staff," said Capt. John W. Oliver, commander, A Troop, 15th Cavalry. "About six weeks after the seminar, the brigade commander will gather us all back together. This gives us a chance to go over how much progress has been made."

specified time and passing through various traffic centers and check points at specific times.

"This had to happen in a congested civilian environment," stated Peebles, "with the least amount of disruption to the flow of traffic."

In the movement of the convoy, speed and intervals were predetermined between individual vehicles and the separate marching units of the convoy.

"Meeting the requirements of the use of the roadways, plus dealing with the traffic and keeping maneuver damage to a minimum demanded a lot of concentrated effort from the soldiers to make the road march possible," added Peebles. "The Patriots executed the movement very well.

"We discovered a lot in the process, from maintenance on the highways to maintaining the designated distances between vehicles on hills," said Peebles.

A total of 211 vehicles and various pieces of equipment made up the convoy. At one point, the Patriot's road march stretched out more than a mile. With the coordination of the convoy commander, Peebles and his commanders, and the efforts of his soldiers, the road march was executed successfully.

"Traveling on civilian roads... is a new experience for the soldiers. The battalion must be capable of moving out in a timely manner."

E-4-2 drills enjoy COHORT concept

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"This company is a good unit. I've seen both sides; training where you go your separate way when you finish basic, and the COHORT concept, where you stay together. This is, I think, a better way to train," SFC Robert Dawson, senior drill of Echo Company, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, said.

Echo and Bravo companies within 4th Battalion are using the COHORT training system to train all the first term Infantrymen for the 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry, Fort Ord, Calif., as part of the 7th Infantry Division (Light). Echo Company has already trained a unit through COHORT for the 2nd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, Fort Ord.

Twenty soldiers from the 2-32nd came back to Fort Benning recently for the Light Leader's Course taught by the Ranger Department. "They stopped by and said they really like the training here, so I think it is working," Dawson said.

The soldiers are in their sixth week of training now and at the end of their seventh week, Nov. 16, will begin their split training phase of the cycle. "This is the time the soldiers split up and go to special training, like DRAGON training, TOW training, 11 Charlie and 11 Bravo training," Dawson explained.

"The drill sergeants like this kind of training. They know the soldiers will know what to expect from the rest of the unit, after they get to wherever they are going. The main thing this kind of training does is emphasize teamwork and these soldiers are learning fast to help each other," he said.

Dawson said right now Echo has a strength of 162 assigned soldiers, losing only four because of medical reasons. "These Manchus are full of spirit. They are becoming more together and are developing a sense of belonging and pride," Dawson said. Manchu is the nickname of the 3-9th.

cleaning the pots, pans and cooking utensils; the temperatures of the wash and rinse in the sanitation containers, how and where the grease traps are set up, how the serving lines are set up and where the garbage collection areas are, according to SGM John M. Brown from the TRADOC Surgeon's Office, Fort Monroe, Va.

"We work as a team at these evaluations," said Terry. "What I might not see, he might and what he might not see, I might."

"The most important thing out here for us is that we get the food out to the soldiers on time," said SSgt. Harold Toombs, the mess site's first cook. "You know how GIs are when they're hungry."

"Timing has been the key element, especially at breakfast. Everything had to be done under strict light discipline, so we held several practices to get used to it," Favors said.

Sleep, or rather the lack of, was the hardest thing to get used to when going from a garrison dining facility to a field mess site, according to Sp4 James Burke, a cook. "We had to be out at the site by three o'clock in the morning to prepare the first meal."

"In garrison, we have machines to do a lot of the work for us. But out here everything has to be done by hand, like mixing and opening large cans," said Sp4 Anthony Gillespie, a baker.

"I also had to adjust my cooking times up just a bit because they cook faster out here. I had to get used to the different baking racks on the oven," said Gillespie.

The results of the competition will be made available in February, after all the TRADOC installations have been evaluated, according to Terry.

"If we win this competition," said Favors, "we will represent TRADOC against the winners of the other Major Command units at the Department of the Army level."

The breakfast menu consisted of bacon, cream beef, grits, hash brown potatoes, french toast, assorted omelets and cherry nut coffee cake.

The lunch meal included Southern fried chicken, grilled steak, mashed potatoes, rice, corn, blackeyed peas and pineapple upside-down cake.

"Every unit that we have evaluated so far has served pineapple upside-down cake," said Brown.

197th intelligence center prepares for REFORGER

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

REFORGER is the return of forces to Germany. Its primary mission is to show our European allies our willingness and ability to deploy to their aid in times of need.

A secondary, and equally important purpose behind REFORGER is the training of American troops so they can deploy and react as an effective force in the European theater should a genuine crisis arise.

One of the sections that the 197th Infantry Brigade will deploy toREFORGER in 1985 is the newly created ASIC (all source intelligence center) of the 179th Military Intelligence Detachment.

"I expect we will do very well on REFORGER," said WO1 Gary L. Fulton, order of battle technician with ASIC, "primarily because of the knowledge and drive our personnel have."

As the name implies, ASIC deals with battlefield information from all sources.

"Basically, ASIC receives battlefield information which encompasses human, photo and electronic intelligence," explained Fulton adding, "we take the raw data, have our experts analyze it, and then put it together in a working scenario."

The 197th ASIC department is still very young. Originated by Fulton early last year, the office is still working on accumulating all the equipment and experience they need to be effective.

In order to train the department's young soldiers in terms of experience, REDTRAIN, a FORSCOM program which sets money aside for intelligence training, has twice this year provided the funds for soldiers to go to the 3rd Infantry Division in Frankfurt, Germany, to train with a division size element.

"Training with the 3rd Infantry Division was probably the most enjoyable experience in my military career. I saw my people grow so much professinally in just the 30 days we were there," Fulton said.

Referring to the real world, every day intelligence gathering mission of the 3rd Infantry Division, Fulton said,"our relationship with the 3rd Infantry Division has been very gratifying. They provided my people with the division level ASIC training they need. We don't have as wide an array of collective assets as the 3rd Infantry Division does. I wanted good training in the European theater. Training with the division enabled my people to get out of the CONUS mindset."

By thoroughly analyzing and comparing all gathered data, ASIC produces a picture of the developing situation. Armed with this timely information, the commander is better prepared to handle those situations where a single mishap could exact a high price in human lives, and where a major mishap could lose the entire war.

"Bold Eagle worried me. None of my soldiers had ever worked in an ASIC situation prior to that. I was worried that they would be inundated with information, which they were," Fulton said. "However, to my delight, they showed how good they were. They showed the brigade how valuable they could be."

Though confident of his section's ability to perform its mission, Fulton feels that REFORGER will be greatly beneficial as a learning experience.

Interpretation of 'salvage' helped preserve post buildings

Following World War I, Camp Benning was ordered to shut down, like many other installations.

On Jan. 9, 1919, construction was halted by Congressional action and the Constructing Quartermaster, Maj. J. Paul Jones, was ordered to "salvage and abandon" Camp Benning.

The halting of the project gave birth to much anecdotal folklore concerning the actions of Jones, who upon receiving the order to salvage, it is said,found the dictionary definition to read" preserve" and used that definition to keep Camp Benning intact.

It was reported he went so far as to finish some buildings, paint them and get them ready for use.

Jones ingeniously interpreted his instructions to salvage as meaning to carry on to complete all partially finished buildings and then to preserve them from deterioration by painting them.

The photos on these pages show a changing Fort Benning that has nonetheless retained much of its early character.(USAIC PAO)

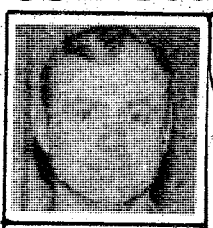
Confession best cure for guilt



Chaplain Michael R. Durham

There are few emotions that are as distressing and devastating to the human condition as guilt. It grows on the conscious mind during waking hours and invades the subconscious mind through dreams during sleep.

Hospitals are full of persons who are emotionally disturbed and have a variety of adverse physical conditions because of the failure to handle guilt.

Closer to home, however, are the persons you live and work with, and maybe yourself, who are suffering from the effects of guilt.

Through the centuries, many prescriptions have been tried for handling guilt. Adam and Eve tried to pass the buck and place the blame for wrong doing elsewhere. In the Middle Ages groups of people known as flagellants often marched through the streets, scourging or cutting themselves with knives, hoping to find some peace within.

Others try doing some noble acts of charity, going out of their way to do something good for someone else. Some even resort to giving large sums of money to charity or other worthy causes in the hope of ridding themselves of guilt. Yet guilt remains. How do you handle this thing called guilt?

David seems to have found the basic cure. II Samuel 11-12 informs us that David committed adultery and murder. He then tried to cover it up on both accounts. However, guilt set in and Psalms 51 tells how he handled it:

"Have mercy upon me, O God . . . blot out my transgressions. Wash me thoroughly from my iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. For I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me . . . "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

It appears that the key to handling guilt is confession: confession that recognizes your personal involvement in wrong doing or sin and confession that recognizes that sin is ultimately against God. When this kind of confession takes place the Scripture says in I John 1:9: "God is faithful and just to forgive our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." With confession comes forgiveness and with forgiveness comes freedom from guilt.

Conference on Biblical preaching

Chaplain Michael Durham has sponsored four canoe trips for the soldiers and family members of the 36th Engineer Group during this past summer. Their last trip (October 25-26) was on the Flint River outside Thomaston, Ga.

The first day was filled with the excitement of the rapids and the beauty of rolling hills sparkling with the canopy of the colorful foliage. By evening they had reached the campsite where they built a fire, prepared dinner, conversed around the campfire and rested from the day's activities.

After breakfast the next day everyone gathered around the campfire for morning devotions and prayer before spending another day on the river.

Columbus gospel chorus

The Columbus Community Gospel Chorus will be in concert Sunday, Nov. 11, at 5 p.m., in LaVoie Manor Chapel. Guest choirs will be Prayer and Faith Temple Church of God in Christ Mass Choir and the LaVoie Chapel Adult and Youth Choir. The public is invited.

Colonel reflects on 28 years of military service

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I was programmed for the Army," said retired Col. Robert Simpson, looking back on the reason why he spent the last 28 years serving his country.

"My father was in the Army during World War I and he used to tell me stories about it. Also, I was at an impressionable age during World War II, and if you were a child growing up during that time, you grew up thinking the military was a good thing."

Simpson entered the Army from ROTC after graduating from Wake Forest College (now Wake Forest University) with a degree in English and was commissioned as an Infantry second lieutenant.

His career pattern has been Infantry command, operations and service school instructor assignments. He had four hardship tours during his career, in Korea, the Dominican Republic, Vietnam and Saudi Arabia, and only one long overseas tour, in Hawaii.

His assignment in the Dominican Republic was somewhat similar to the current involvement in Lebanon. For 15 months he was with the 82nd Airborne Division as part of a peacekeeping force in the Dominican Republic during a revolution there.

"It was a difficult time for us," said Simpson. "We were supposed to be neutral, but it was hard not to take sides because the rebels were shooting at us while the loyalists were not."

Simpson said he is especially proud of the total of five years he spent in the 82nd Airborne Division, during which time he commanded the 1st Battalion, 508th Airborne Infantry, from January 1972 to July 1973.

In August 1967 he went to Vietnam with the 4th Infantry Division and fought against a different kind of foe.

"When we fought against the North Vietnamese, they were reasonably professional, well organized and more predictable," he explained. "Then when we fought the VC it was totally different. They would do things a reasonable soldier would not."

In 1976, Simpson went to Saudi Arabia as the chief of training evaluation, Office of the Project Manager, Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program.

"We called them the National Guard but a more literal translation of the Arabic is "guardians of the nation," and this is the role they played. They were more like an internal security force, controlled by the Saudi royal family," he said.

Calling it a fascinating tour, Simpson said, "It is the strangest place I've ever been. I'd be driving down the road and if I looked to the left I'd see a modern airport with jets taking off. Then I'd look to the right and see a shepherd with his crook in hand, herding his sheep, looking like he stepped right out of the 13th century. And the whole country is full of contrasts like that."

He worked for Prince Abdulla Ibn Abdul Aziz, who officiated at Simpson's promotion ceremony when he made colonel. The prince is now Crown Prince, next in line to the King of Saudi Arabia.

Simpson said the Saudi people are very warm and hospitable and that once he got to know some of them, he found they had a good sense of humor. Because of their Moslem religion, he said they have a totally different outlook on life than we Americans do.

"They have an expression they use a lot, which is "if God wills it," and they literally live their lives this way. They don't plan anything because God decides what they will do. People just live from moment to moment."

Upon returning from Saudi Arabia, Simpson served some three years in the Pentagon as Chief of the Assistance Division, Office of the Inspector General of the Army. Although it was a great assignment, he was happy to get back to Fort Benning and the Infantry.

No matter what negative publicity the Army has had over the years, Simpson said he always thought U.S. Infantry soldiers are better than their publicity.

Army philosophies have varied over the years, but, said Simpson, "I've seen a lot of things change and then come right back to what they were before."

While at For Benning, Simpson spent a year as Director of Evaluation in the Infantry School, a year setting up the Army Training Center Headquarters, and for his last two years here was Director of Commercial Activities. Commercial Activities is the organization in charge of doing the studies that may lead to contracting out many services.

Despite the negative publicity contracting out has received, Simpson said it's a worthwhile program. "Done properly, it has to save money and spaces over the long run," he said.

Simpson retired on a Wednesday and was at his desk at First National Bank's Fort Benning office on Monday morning, where he is manager for Worldwide Military Banking.

He and his wife, Bernice, a Columbus native, built a house in Midland, Ga., several years ago and plan to make this area their permanent home. The couple have two children; daughter, Stacey is 13 and their son, Sloan is 11.

Carlos Colon

Then Major Simpson, (r), and the former commander of 3-8th Infantry, Lt. Col. D.M. Malone, stand by their war torn flag at a support base north of Dak To during the Vietnam War. Simpson was S3 of 3-8th.

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — How may the family of a deceased veteran obtain a flag to drape the casket during a funeral. Can the flag be requested after the funeral and who must request it?

A — The VA has a pamphlet concerning memorial flags and request forms are available at any VA office. Only one flag may be issued for each veteran and it is usually issued to the next of kin, with the surviving spouse having preference to entitlement. Children may also apply. Applications made after the burial must be signed personally by the next of kin and must include a statement explaining why the flag was not applied for at the time of death or burial.

Q — I have made arrangements for my funeral and burial ahead of time and have already paid the funeral home. Can I get my VA benefits in advance?

A — No. Burial benefits can only be paid after a veteran's death to the person who bears the expense of the burial. (VA)

Army's new light divisions prepared to fight and win

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

How does a man fight a bear? A bear, tall and broad, bristling with sharp teeth and long claws, ready to strike anytime, anywhere.

The man, to successfully fight this bear, would have to be cunning and swift; he would have to attack with violent action and be in superb physical condition, ready to strike again. This man would have to be ready to fight this bear in the Middle East, Central America, Africa, or even in the forests of Europe.

To find a man to fight this bear look to the Army's new light divisions, divisions prepared to fight and defeat the bear.

Attack and attack and attack again is the creed of the Army's new light divisions. The decision to field these attackers "was made to address the most probable contingency mission of low intensity warfare where speed of deployment can often prevent escalation . . . It gives us a highly deployable contingency force and at the same time a force that can rapidly reinforce our heavy forward deployed forces." This quote was taken from a letter written by Maj. Gen. John Foss, Chief of Infantry, concerning the Army's new light divisions. The divisions going light are the 7th at Fort Ord, the 10th to be split between Forts Drum and Benning, the 25th in Hawaii, and the 29th (Army National Guard) in Virginia and Maryland. The 7th's conversion to light will be completed by FY 85 and the other designated divisions are currently being converted or formed.

These new light units will find themselves deployed, primarily, in close terrain. Close terrain consists of jungles, dense forests, urban webs, arctic areas, swamps and marshes. In this type of terrain light units have the advantage. Because they are on foot they can use the density of the jungle or forest as a weapon against the enemy, ambushing and attacking from cover and concealment, when they want to and where they want to, only to fade back into the terrain; their terrain. Against heavy mechanized units deployed in close terrain, light infantry has a distinct advantage, as the enemy's tanks and fighting vehicles won't have freedom of movement nor will their soldiers be acclimated to fighting in close terrain as our light divisions are.Fighting with the Army's mechanized units as a combined arms team, light infantry holds the close terrain as the heavy mech holds the broad plains and open areas. Also, these new units, when working by themselves, afford the U.S. a fast-striking, flexible conventional force for deployment in low to mid-intensity conflicts. This capability prevents the escalation of minor crises and low-intensity conflicts into superpower confrontations.

To acquire the needed level of strategic flexibility the characteristics of readiness, deployability, flexibility and global orientation form the concepts of these new light divisions. These units deploy in fewer than 500 aircraft sorties versus approximately 1,000 aircraft sorties for an infantry division such as the 82nd Airborne. The new light units are also well-suited for economy of force and contingency operations. In addition, they have an austere support base because of their planned use in short-term operations.

The actual make-up of these units is, indeed, austere. The divisional strength is centered on three brigades of three battalions each for an infantry fighting strength of 5,340 men. The division has a combat aviation brigade of 1,460 personnel. Divisional artillery consists of three battalions of 105 mm howitzers and one battery of 155 mm howitzers with a personnel strength of 1,096. The remainder of the division includes a headquarters, a division support command, an ADA battalion, a signal battalion, an M.P. company and a band company, which, when combined, total 2,576 personnel. The total for the division of 10,472 soldiers compares to 19,800 soldiers in a mechanized infantry division. The ratio of support personnel to number of troops supported in a present infantry division is two combat soldiers supported by one support soldier.

The new light division supports three soldiers with one support troop. These light divisions have sufficient numbers of high-mobility wheeled vehicles and Blackhawk helicopters to move, concurrently and tactically, the assault elements of two of the division's infantry battalions. Comparing the rapid deployability of a light infantry division to a present infantry division shows that the light division needs fewer than one-third the number of C-141 equivalent sorties and in one-third the time, because the light division can achieve a closure time of four days compared to 12.4 days for a current infantry division.

The rifle company prototype comprises 130 men, with three rifle platoons of 34 men each. This light company has a heavy array of lethal weapons, num-

Portuguese officer looks toward future

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rui Moura is a young man who is "looking towards the future." The 23-year-old native of Portugal has been at Fort Benning since April attending the Infantry Officer Basic Course and Ranger School, and is presently attending Airborne School.

Moura studied for five years at the Portuguese Military Academy, graduating first in his class, and was commissioned as a second lieutenant in Infantry.

The academy sends one officer each year to attend the basic course and the advanced course, he explained, and every young lieutenant wants to come to the U.S. so competition is stiff.

His selection was partly due to his excellent command of the English language, a skill that he spent years developing. He studied English from the third through the ninth grade in grammar school, then took English at the American Language Institute at night throughout his five years in the academy.

"I always wanted to be an officer," Moura said. "My mother used to call me a little dictator because of the way I bossed my sisters around." Portugal was ruled by a dictatorship until 1974, when it became a democracy after a revolution. The academy was the best place to get an education because the country's school system was in an upheaval after the revolution, he explained.

Moura was named the distinguished allied officer at his IOBC class graduation in August. He said he found the class relatively easy, thanks to his prior training at the Portuguese Military Academy.

"The last year at the academy was pretty tough," he explained.

TASC

Post Commander Maj. Gen. John Foss pins the Ranger Tab on 2nd Lt. Rui Moura at Ranger graduation Oct. 18.

"We learned how to lead a light infantry platoon, a mechanized platoon, a mortar platoon and an anti-tank platoon. For the last three or four months, we were given our own platoon and were graded on how well we trained and led the platoon."

Second Lieutenant Mike Brazile, a member of Moura's IOBC class, said Moura was really a special soldier. "The guy has a phenomenal sense of direction. When we'd get lost while on a patrol, we'd ask Moura to help, and he'd be able to tell us where we were and how to get to the right location."

Moura said he learned some new things about mechanized infantry during the course, and feels the training was valuable.

"It is a kind of link between us because we are allies and we (the Portuguese Army) use American Army doctrine to train our soldiers," he said. Attending the class will enable Moura to update the Portuguese Army on changes in doctrine.

Lieutenant Colonel John Ellis, commander of the 2nd Training Battalion, The School Brigade, invited Moura to stay at Benning and attend the Ranger and Airborne Schools. Moura graduated from Ranger School Oct. 18.

He was named distinguished honor graduate and was awarded the Merrill's Marauder Award and the William O. Darby Award.

The Merrill's Marauder Award is given to the Ranger who receives the highest peer report for leadership. The William O. Darby Award is the most prestigious award a Ranger graduate can receive and is presented only to a student who is considered the best of the best.

Portugal is a country the size of Indiana and has a population of 10 million. It has a climate similar to California and has beautiful beaches, which makes it a popular vacation spot for many Europeans. One of Portugal's main industries is tourism, and during the season more than 10 million tourists visit the country.

Moura said he enjoyed getting to know the people at Fort Benning. "I found the people here really like to invite people into their homes and they enjoy exchanging experiences and learning about other countries."

Beware of the parking lot thief

Provost marshal

By David Moore
Post Provost Marshal's Office

If you park your automobile on Fort Benning, beware of the parking lot thief. He is looking for anything valuable, easy to remove and easy to "fence".

Items on or in your POV which may qualify include batteries, hubcaps, tapes, tape decks, packages and tires. The list is endless. And last, but not least, the thief may wish to steal your car.

Parking your car in highly trafficked lots or well-lighted areas at night will decrease your chances of becoming a victim. However, these measures will not guarantee the safety of your vehicle. The thieves are becoming increasingly bold. POVs parked in some of the larger parking lots on post have been "hit" during broad daylight, to include one case in which the power steering pump was removed.

Although they are not fool proof, the following is a list of do's and don'ts which can decrease your chances of being the next victim of parking lot thieves:

- Don't leave keys in the ignition when car is unattended.
- Don't leave car doors unlocked or windows open.
- Don't leave packages, clothing or other tempting articles visible inside your car.
- Do keep a record of your vehicle license number and vehicle identification number.
- Do notify Military Police immediately when your vehicle or items there-in have been stolen.
- Do report to the Military Police any suspicions or information you have concerning car thieves.
- Do mark for identification all wheel covers, batteries, and other easily removable accessories, and record them.
- Do secure high valued items in your trunk or other secure location while the car is parked at one location for any extended time period.

The Military Police are aware that parking lot thieves are active and are taking every possible action to apprehend them. However, the vast number of parking lots on the installation and limited MP resources make it impossible for MPs to patrol each one. Therefore, it will take a total community effort to discourage the parking lot thief from "doing his thing." We urge you to be part of this effort by practicing good crime prevention habits, such as those enumerated above.

Don't swap your life for a bottle of booze

By D.F. Strohm
Fort Campbell Courier

We have a long weekend coming up during which a lot of swapping is liable to take place.

Those who will take off Friday evening to drive several hundred miles to see parents, relatives, or friends and return late Monday will be swapping chances of living against great odds.

Those who insist on having a few drinks of beer, whiskey, wine, etc., before or during the trip are swapping their lives or the lives of others for a bottle of booze.

Fair trade? You be the judge.

Then there is the dead giveaway. Give away about 60 percent of your chances of surviving an automobile accident by not fastening your seat belt.

Uncomfortable? How about that hospital bed?

How about that bald tire on the right front and the weak brake on the left front? Would you like to swap your chances with them against the hazards of the road including other drivers with similar problems?

The obvious answer to all of that is a loud and clear no. Yet such swaps are made, have been made by our people and will be made again unless everyone who drives a car takes the time to plan his trip to allow time for rest or relaxation enroute, ensures his car is in trip condition, and disciplines himself not to drink any alcoholic beverages for at least six hours before departure.

The highways are traveled by many sober, considerate, and careful drivers like yourself, but there are quite a few jokers also.

Want to swap? Of course not. Have a good holiday!

Alcohol use will severely effect your judgment, reaction time

Alcohol is a highly potent, mood altering, addictive drug which is a depressant on the central nervous system.

Alcohol is oxidized chiefly in the liver. It takes the average individual about an hour to oxidize a normal size drink of any type.

Rapid thought and good judgment play a large part in helping drivers avoid dangerous situations, or to get out of such situations when they do occur. The reaction time of most drivers is three-fourths of a second. From the time you see an obstacle, or a child darting in front of your car, to the time your foot hits the brake, three-fourths of a second will fly by.

Alcohol interferes by depressing or slowing down the brain center which controls muscular reaction time and coordination. Judgment is also faulty when the higher brain center is depressed. You might stagger to your car and insist you are not too drunk to drive. If you drive, not only will your reflexes be shot, but your judgment will be poor. You'll end up taking chances which would scare you green if you weren't tanked up. (ADCO Education Office)

Policy set for CHAMPUS alcoholism claims

CHAMPUS claims submitted after Nov. 13 for the treatment of alcoholism will be processed under a new policy more like private health benefit plans.

Changes resulted from the recommendations of a CHAMPUS-sponsored conference on alcoholism treatment, according to officials with the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

The new rules outline services covered by CHAMPUS and define consistent, effective standards for all alcoholism treatment centers that are used by CHAMPUS — whether the centers are hospital-based or "free-standing."

All therapy must occur in an alcohol treatment center and must be prescribed by a medical doctor or other qualified mental health practitioner.

The rules limit treatment to three "benefit periods" in a patient's lifetime. A benefit period begins with the first date of CHAMPUS-covered treatment and ends 365 days later.

Patients may receive any or all of the following services during a benefit period:

- Detoxification ("drying out") in a authorized alcohol treatment center (not beyond seven days) unless a medical review board agrees that more is medically necessary. If the patient is so seriously ill that he must be detoxified in a hospital, those services don't count as alcoholism treatment. Benefits are paid the same as for any medically necessary treatment.
- Rehabilitation on a residential or part-time (day or night program) basis, not beyond 21 days.
- Outpatient care in an alcoholism treatment center, not beyond 60 visits.
- Family therapy, not beyond 15 visits.

Unused benefits cannot be carried over to the next period.

The program will continue cost-share prescriptions for antabuse (a drug that makes the patient violently ill if they drink alcohol.) However, CHAMPUS will not cover the hospital bills if the patient is admitted only to receive antabuse.

The program does not cover the following:

- Halfway houses.
- Academic vocational and other counseling that is not medically or psychologically necessary.
- Aversion therapy in which a therapist uses electric shock or drugs combined with alcohol to make patients want to avoid drinking.

Before care is received in an alcohol treatment center, families should check with their doctors, their claims processor, a health benefits advisor or CHAMPUS to be sure the facility is authorized. (ARNEWS) bering 85 M-16 rifles, 19 M203 grenade launchers, 18 squad automatic weapons, and six DRAGONs.

Light divisions

The characteristics of the leaders and soldiers of these units, summed up in two words, is "flat bellies," says Lt. Col. Russell W. Andrews, Chief of Doctrine Division of the Light Infantry Task Force, USAIS. Andrews further stated that "these men will have to literally carry the war on their backs" because of their light configuration. These new "light soldiers" must possess four distinct traits in order for them to be effective as light infantry: they must be crack shots; superb land navigators; know how to fight in close terrain, and be savvy in fieldcraft. Additionally, light soldiers are conditioned for war because they may find themselves, at a moment's notice, deployed to a conflict.

The new light infantry divisions offer an affordable program and increased planning flexibility. They also greatly increase the Army's deterrent-value strength on a global basis, just in case our Army has to go into the woods. To fight a Bear.

Infantry marathon just around corner

The second annual U.S. Army Infantry 26.2-mile marathon and half-marathon will be held at Fort Benning, Ga., Jan. 26, 1985. Entries are expected from both civilian and military personnel throughout the country, running as individuals and/or as a five-member team.

The paved race course is described as being flat and fast with very few turns, double-looped for the marathon and single-looped for the half-marathon. It is certified and sanctioned by The Athletic Congress (TAC) and is an official qualifier for the next Boston Marathon.

Entry fees are $10 per person and must be postmarked by Dec. 27, 1984. Late registration per person is $15.

Each runner will receive a high quality tee-shirt and each finisher will receive a race certificate signed by the commanding general of Fort Benning.

Trophies will be awarded to the following:

- The first three overall individual finishers, by sex.
- The first three military runners, by sex.
- The first three overall military, civilian, collegiate and Infantry Center teams with each team member receiving an individual award.
- The best female team with each team member receiving an individual award.
- Olympic-style medals to the first five finishers (or the top five percent, whichever is more) in each age category by sex: 9 and under, 10-14, 15-19, 20-24, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-44, 45-49, 50 and over.

An "all you can eat" carbo supper will be held Jan. 25, 1985, on post.

Marathon spokesman Capt. Robert Borja says the 1985 marathon is expected to be "more than double" of last year's figure of 967.

For more information and training program, contact Capt. Borja at commercial (404) 544-7149, 544-6461, 544-6114 or AUTOVON 784-7149, 784-6461 or 784-6114.

INFANTRY RUN — Preparation is key for a successful marathon run.

Tips should help first-time marathoners

By David Quimby
Special to the Bayonet

With the Infantry Marathon just around the corner, here are some helpful hints on getting ready for the big run.

1. Start your training now. Any further delay will only make injuries more probable.
2. Use good shoes. Good isn't necessarily expensive but usually $50-$80 will get you a good pair. Know what you're looking for when you buy.
3. Break new shoes in if you intend to wear them for the race. 60-100 miles will do it.
4. Believe in long, slow distance. Speed is not important.
5. You've got to put the miles "in the bank." There is no substitute.
6. Nautilus, swimming and bicycling are excellent supplements. Remember, not substitutes.
7. By early to mid- December, your mileage should be high enough to begin supplementing your diet with plenty of fruit (bananas, apples, and oranges are good ones.)
8. Run six days a week; rest on the seventh. This applies every week from now until the race.
9. It's not important how far your daily mileage is. Watch your weekly mileage.
10. Increase your weekly mileage by approximately 10% per week.
11. Your farthest training run need not be any further than 20-23 miles. You do not need to run the full distance prior to the race. Your farthest training should last in excess of three hours. This of course will depend on your pace. The governing rule should be 20-23 miles. A nine minute pace will finish you at about 3:56. This is not slow!
12. Always take in plenty of liquid both during training and during the race.

Device gives training added safety

Ranger-made marking device used during water training

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Ranger Department needed a marking system to mark the entry of students into the waters of Victory Pond who were undergoing the slide for life and log-walk rope-drop training. The device had to be lightweight and comfortable so as not to impede the movements of the students. Which civilian firm did the Rangers turn to? None. They just gave the mission to Ranger Sergeant Kestner Eden and said "Do it." Eden did.

For two weeks Eden worked on different ideas and designs. He solicited suggestions from other Ranger instructors and worked days, nights and week ends. He got his main ideas from the B-17 flotation device, a standard water life vest. However, Eden's device was to be used for marking and not flotation.

Eden's final design is made of one 10-inch by 10-inch piece of canvas, four A-7 nylon straps, two friction adapters, 20 feet of 550 nylon cord, velcro and an orange fishermen's floating buoy.

The A-7 straps are sewn to the canvas to hold the device to the wearer's body. The buoy has four ¼-inch pieces of velcro attached with waterproof glue to each of its four corners. Sewn on the 10-inch by 10-inch canvas are two 4½-inch long by 1½-inch wide pieces of velcro. The 550 cord is "S" wrapped behind the buoy and held by two rubber retaining bands, also sewn to the canvas. The velcro on the buoy mates with the velcro strips on the canvas which hold the buoy to the canvas. The 550 cord is tied to the buoy and attached to the device's bottom A-7 nylon strap.

When the student enters the water the force generated upon entry causes the buoy to separate from the canvas. As the student plunges deeper into the water the buoy floats and the 550 cord plays out above the student. The student's location is known at all times as the orange buoy floats at the student's point of entry. This gives the lifeguards at the training site a marker to locate the student should he need assistance.

"We didn't want a life preserver, a flotation device. The reason for the log-walk rope-drop is to instill confidence in the soldier should he encounter a water obstacle. If a soldier finds himself on patrol in pitch dark and suddenly steps off a cliff and into water he won't have a life vest. He has to be able to negotiate the water obstacle by himself," said Eden. Eden added "that is the reason for a marking device: to add that extra element of safety to the training while not taking away from the training itself."

Eden tested his first device over 30 times. Each time, it worked perfectly. He tested it initially in a swimming pool, jumping from the side of the pool and from the one and three meter diving boards. Eden entered the water backwards, forwards, sideways and head first. Each time the buoy successfully separated from the canvas and floated above Eden's position. Eden then tested the device at Victory Pond from the slide for life and log-walk rope-drop. In each test the device worked.

When students are going through their training at Victory Pond the Ranger Department has qualified SCUBA men on site. They also have Ranger lifeguards who are graduates of the Red Cross Life Saving and Water Safety Instructor's Course. These men are in rubber boats to assist students having problems in the water.

Club system reorienting sales strategy

Greater emphasis to be placed on food, entertainment

Robert McClain

With the impending passage of a bill raising the Georgia drinking age to 21 and thus cutting into alcohol sales, Fort Benning and other Army club system officials are currently reorienting their club sales strategies to stress more of a wholesome family environment, emphasising a growing range of services that includes better food, entertainment, family activities and more low alcohol drinks.

Driving the process of change in the club systems even faster are tough Army policies on drunk driving and the Army's continuing effort to "deglamorize alcohol."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has reported to Congress that drunk driving is the number one killer in the armed forces and "will not be tolerated." The Pentagon estimated 40 percent of the roughly 500 driving deaths a year in the military are alcohol-related.

Weinberger offered no excuses. He said, "This national tragedy has continued because we have tolerated it. It is time to address this program head on. . . "

One of the major backers for reorganizing the club system is Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. In a recent message to major commands, Wickham proposed a "new direction" for the club system.

"All commanders," he said, "must recognize and promote the club system's potential as a social focus for community and family activities."

With its emphasis on drinking and eating, the system currently falls short of fulfilling that role, he said. And with the Army's population reflecting the trends of the larger society where alcohol consumption is declining, "The days that clubs could thrive on alcohol sales are numbered."

Fort Benning installation club manager Maj. Jerry Jackson said Fort Benning is looking at many proposals to combat the loss of sales from alcohol.

"Yes, raising the drinking age to 21 is going to have an effect on sales. But we have a concept of what we will do to offset the loss in alcohol sales," Jackson said.

He said the Officer's and NCO Clubs should not be affected by the new law, but sales at the Hidden Door and the Sand Hill enlisted clubs might be hurt.

Jackson said the majority of the clubs' profits come from selling beer and wine. A recent "Army Times" story suggested that enlisted clubs that rely heavily on alcohol sales to younger service members may have to cut back operations. Jackson thinks the two clubs at Fort Benning should be alright.

"We should be able to compensate for a loss in profits from alcohol sales at these clubs. We have a really good food program at these clubs. We plan on upgrading this program and offering more and varied entertainment to suit the tastes of the young soldiers and promoting these programs more. We are going to gear our efforts towards improving these already good programs," Jackson said.

Wickham and his director of Morale, Welfare and Recreation Activities are also exploring alternatives to the current system's structure. "More creative programs are needed that will attract our families and bring them together in a wholesome community environment," Wickham said.

Some proposals being considered include a membership physical fitness center with meeting rooms, restaurant and banquet facilities; and building motel-type guest houses to serve as focal points for social activty (these also would contain restaurant, banquet and meeting facilities).

The chief of staff's evolving new direction for the club system takes its cue from an earlier Army-wide effort to upgrade quality through training and assistance in food preparation, service and promotion.

Jackson also discussed the possibility of creating clubs for just 17-21 year olds. "Enforcing the drinking age currently might be difficult," he said. "We can check ID cards at the time of the sale, but that doesn't stop a soldier of legal drinking age buying the drinks and slipping one to his under-age friend. By establishing clubs for 17-21 year olds, we would have some control."

Georgia and 26 other states are expected to raise the minimum drinking age in 1985 and 1986 to retain federal highway funding. Under a law passed by Congress in June, states without the 21-year minimum would lose about five percent of their annual road allocation in 1987 and about 10 percent in 1988.

Abuse of alcohol, illegal drugs will not be tolerated

Let's begin this article by getting the social and morale issues out of the picture. The policy of the United States Army says the use of illegal drugs or the abuse of alcohol is incompatible with military service.

Marijuana is an illegal drug. Use of the drug, and getting caught, via any manner, can be disasterous.

Army Regulation 635-200 dictates that elimination proceedings will be initiated for E1s-E4s after the second verified positive urinalysis. For E5s-E9s and all officers, proceedings will be initiated after receipt of the first verified positive urinalysis.

A Chapter 14 discharge can haunt you the rest of your life. Smoke it and sooner or later you will get caught.

Marijuana contains hundreds of different chemicals which produce many different effects on the mind and body. Among the chemicals causing the "high", THC(tetrahydrocannabinol) is the main ingredient.

Physically, marijuana interferes with several important brain activities, including coordination, short-term memory, the ability to follow or track moving objects and the ability to learn and make wise decisions.

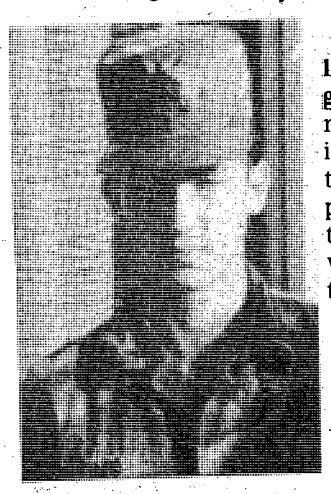
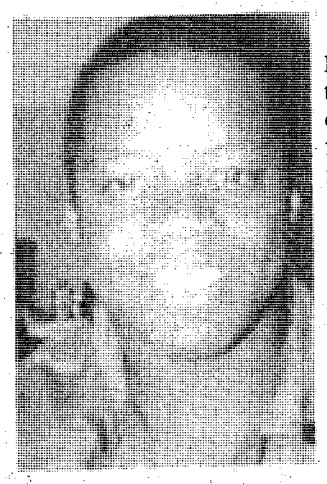
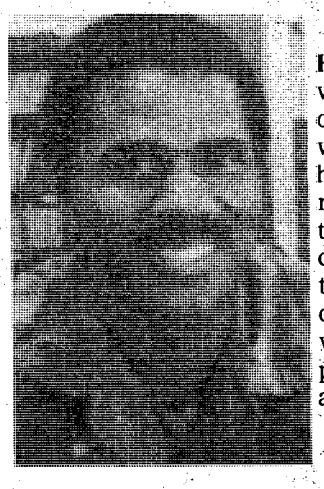
What changes would you make to improve the club system?



PVT.2 Sean Hurd, A Co., 1-58th, 197th Infantry Brigade-"I think their preparation of food needs to be improved. I would also like to see music videos and popular movies shown on the large TV screen, and a wider variety of some of the current video games."



Sp5 Warren Hollis, A Co., 1st Bn., TSB-"I would like to see a better variety of entertainment, such as professional performers and fashion and talent shows. I would also like to see MTV shown there. Then I think the clubs will be an entertaining place for everybody, even those under 19 who in the near future will not be served drinks."



SGT. Joseph James, HHC, 4th Bn., 2nd ITB-"I would have something other than the all-night weekend disco that they have now. I would also make sure to conduct things such as bingo and dancing contests, or something more competitive other than getting drunk. I would also put emphasis on peace and harmony among all races."

Today's soldiers are meeting the challenge

Army's quality soldiers meet the test with confidence, competence

By James A. Tillman III

It's 5:30 a.m. and the shrill sound on the alarm clock angrily persists as the young soldier stirs awake. Getting out of his bed, the 24-year-old Army Specialist prepares for his workday. He is not unlike his civilian counterpart as he goes about the daily routine of getting ready for his "duty" day, except that before he leaves his home he will put on the uniform of a soldier.

Today's average soldier, male or female, is 24 years old and is one of 90 percent of those who entered the service after completing high school. Of first-term enlistees, 40 percent will re-enlist to remain in the Army for at least another three years when their time is up and most of them will complete some college prior to departing the Army.

Additionally, more than 63 percent will come from the upper half of the nation's mental categories, according to this year's entrance examination results.

The soldier of today's Army is the produce of a plan initiated in 1980 to mold the Army of the 1980s into a disciplined, well-trained fighting force. The heart of this plan was to make the Army more people-oriented by fostering an environment to help create wholesome family and community ties. This approach was necessary to ensure the manning of the total volunteer force with quality soldiers.

Some critics of the Army challenge the effectiveness of today's military, stating that modern, sophisticated equipment is beyond the technical capability of the present-day soldier. However, the facts are that, of all service men and women of World War II, only 38 percent had graduated from high school.

They were also not considered among the "best and the brightest" that America had to offer, but they were Americans and proud of what they were accomplishing. Those soldiers of the 1940s came from a relatively unsophisticated and immobile society to be immediately confronted with new equipment, new routines and a new "military" society. They mastered their challenges.

Those who follow them in 1984 come from a very mobile, sophisticated and highly technical society, and are faced with challenges similar to those that confronted their earlier counterparts, and they too are succeeding.

Whether because of their higher average level of education or for other reasons, today's soldiers are learning to use the Army's state-of-the-art equipment with the same confidence and competence as their comrades of 40 years ago.

One advantage today's enlistee has over those of earlier times are the new methods of maintaining modern equipment. Most of the tools of his trade are designed for the simple "plug out and plug in" method of repair. All he has to do is pull out the defective part and put in a workable one.

The defective part is sent to a depot for repair where the work is accomplished by specialists, thus freeing the soldier to rapidly repair his equipment and be on his way.

High tech certainly has changed warfare, but the prophecies about the quality of today's soldier adversely affecting the outcome of future battles seem prematurely pessimistic.

It is clear, however, that the future of today's Army depends heavily on the retention of quality soldiers and their families. Thus the recruiting and re-enlistment objectives are to recruit top quality soldiers and retain families.

For this reason, the Army has had to become more attractive as a career field and develop stronger bonds between itself and military family members. Gen. Edward C. Meyer, the former Army chief of staff who served from 1979-1983 and developed the Army's new improvement plan, realized that most of today's soldiers are not coming into the service for a "free ride."

> "The soldier of today's Army is the product of a plan initiated in 1980 to mold the Army of the 1980s into a disciplined, well-trained fighting force."

Instead, the majority are seeking the more traditional part of military service; discipline and hard work toward worthwhile objectives. Meyer also understood that recruits wanted to feel the pride and satisfaction which accompany membership in any proud organization, not just the Army.

Capt. James Tillman III is a media specialist at U.S. Army Forces Command Headquarters at Fort McPherson.

'Cottonbalers' take to the streets during road march

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

Dust rose furiously as the tracks rumbled around the curve and crossed the bridge over Route 27. Soldiers with green bandannas covering their faces rode posted behind their guns, ever alert for a surprise attack.

It was a hot, sunny afternoon Oct. 22. The "Cottonbalers", 3rd Battalion (Mechanized), 7th Infantry, had begun their road march.

Their route was to take them some 30 miles into the interior of Fort Benning. They were not scheduled to return to garrison until five days later, engaging in many demanding exercises before their return.

During this time, the Cottonbalers wheel vehicle convoy was to travel a different route of 137 miles using the Interstate highways 185 and 85 South, traveling day and night.

For both, it was an exercise in a tactical road march. The battalion was internally evaluated in specific tactical exercises, operating as a task force with support from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, and a platoon from the 72nd Engineers.

"The basic mission," informed Capt. Lawrence W. Cannon, S-3 Air for 3-7, "is movement-to-contact. We will key in on specific missions; working on weaknesses the commander found at the National Training Center (NTC).

"The exercises we will be working on," continued Cannon, "are road marches, assembly procedures, communications, command and control, mounted attack on a fortified enemy, passage of lines, forward and rearward movement through friendly units, and a non-illuminated, non-supported night attack. The battalion commander, S-3 and the executive officer will be doing the internal evaluation of these operations."

"We are a mechanized battalion," explained Lt. Col. Richard T. Rhoades, commander. "We are organized to fight on the move. Every man has a vehicle to ride in. The entire battalion rides on wheels or tracks. If we ever go to war, it is very important that we be very meticulous in our movement from the motor pool to the point were we meet the enemy. We must know exactly what we have to do. From the road march, to moving forward into the rear assembly area, the main battle, relieving the augmented force, attacking the enemy, defense, delay and other important tactical operations, must be meticulously practiced.

"We will conduct a pre-combat check to insure mortars and tactical weapons are prepared," continued Rhoades. "An end of operation post-combat check will be conducted to identify any short falls in equipment or performance and to account for all the battalion's property and clean and service all equipment. We will know everything we must do in the execution of a movement-to-contact."

and then go," said Eden, who is a qualified lifeguard himself.

This means you try to reach the struggling person. If you can't reach them then you throw them a life preserver. If this fails you row to them and then go in and get them. With Eden's Device the Ranger lifeguards can simply row to the marker and, using the 550 cord and buoy, pull the soldier having problems right to the water's surface and into the boat. This saves precious time which, in turn, can safe a life.

"That's the bottom line at Victory Pond and the reason for my marking device: safety," said Eden.

After Eden finished testing the device it was demonstrated to Colonel Tex Turner, head of the Ranger Department. Colonel Turner approved of the device wholeheartedly and Eden had the Benning Parachute Maintenance Shop produce 50 of them. The devices have worked so well for the students at Victory Pond that 200 additional devices have been ordered from the Fort Benning Canvas Repair Shop. All the materials are ordered through the Army's supply system except for the buoy, which can be found at any bait shop. Thus, Eden's Device was designed and is being produced mainly through Army assets, which saves money for the Army.

Visiting local recruiter first step to Army career

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Young men and women interested in enlisting in the Army in some military occupation specialties (MOS) should go to the Army Recruiting Station at Peachtree Mini-mall and talk to Sergeant first class Henry L. Daniels.

Daniels, the station commander since January of this year, has been on recruiting duty since 1979 and wants to talk to interested high school graduates and seniors.

"We test high school grads and seniors, both males and females," said Daniels, "and the test helps determine what type of job the person can actually qualify for."

Army officials recently added ten MOSs and increased enlistment bonuses as much as $1,500 in shortage MOSs.

"If an applicant can pass the test and the Army has a vacancy, they can get X number of dollars through the enlistment bonus program," said Daniels. It depends on their test scores and what kind of specialties the Army needs at the time of enlistment.

"Normally, applicants know what job field they want, but this may be adjusted depending on test scores," explained Daniels. "We tell them what they can get into, prequalify them for several jobs and leave them open minded."

The final job an applicant enlists for is based on his qualifications and the needs of the Army at that particular time.

The final decision on what MOS they enlist for is not made until after applicants go to Atlanta and take the physical. If they pass it, a counselor in Atlanta will sit down with them and look at the Army's specific enlistment needs at that time.

Test scores are very important in the MOS selection process and Daniels and his recruiters have several screening tests they administer to applicants to give them an idea of their skills and abilities before they take the Armed Forces Vocational Aptitude Battery, the score of which is used to determine what MOS an applicant is qualified to sign up for.

In order to enter the Army, an applicant must meet certain basic qualifications. According to DA Pamphlet 611-7, applicants must be able to speak, read and write English; must have passed certain high school courses; must pass a physical exam; pass certain tests that show they can learn a particular MOS skill; have their police record, if any, checked; and pass an investigation into their past and present.

Applicants may enlist under the early enlistment program, which allows them to report for duty as much as one year after they sign up.

Each school in the Columbus area has an assigned recruiter who works with the school guidance counselors. The recruiters in Columbus are SFCs Thomas Cox and Alan Broughton, and Staff Sgts. James Livingston, Mark Dixon, Wayne Jenkins and Lonnie Parker.

Army increases education benefits to new recruits

The Army College Fund will be bigger and better starting this month — the maximum benefit is being increased to $26,400 — according to Lt. Col. William F. Brierly, commander of the Atlanta Army Recruiting Battalion.

"The Army is increasing the benefits to be earned through the Army College Fund because we recognize that college costs will also increase between the time the soldier enlists and the time he or she begins or returns to college," Brierly commented.

"Another major change in the college fund is that soldiers entering the Army with two years of college credit will also earn an increased benefit. This change is in line with the Army's drive to recruit more soldiers with college backgrounds. A soldier who falls into this category can earn up to $20,100 for educational expenses after just two years in the Army," Brierly continued.

To take part in any of the Army College Fund programs, a young person must be a high school diploma graduate or senior, be entering the Army the first time, score in the top half on the Armed Forces aptitude examination and enlist for skill training considered critical to Army needs. The soldier must also contribute to the Veterans Educational Assistance Program.

To earn the maximum benefit, a soldier must enlist for four years and make a personal contribution of $2,700 to the Assistance Program (about $60 monthly through payroll deduction). The government will then match the $2,700 on a two-for-one basis ($5,400), and the Army will add a contribution of $18,300 — all for a $26,400 total.

The soldier with two or more years of college credit must meet the same College Fund criteria, but makes a personal contribution of only $2,400. That amount is matched two-for-one, then an Army incentive of $12,900 is added to bring the total to $20,100.

"The regular Army College Fund for enlistments of two and three years remains unchanged," Brierly noted. "Soldiers who have high school diplomas, but who lack the two years of college may still qualify for a $15,200 package for a two-year enlistment. The soldier is still required to contribute $2,400 to the Assistance Program, which is again matched two-for-one, but the Army will add only an $8,000 kicker," he added.

"The soldier who enlisted for three years must make a personal contribution of $2,700 to qualify for the maximum benefit of $20,100. The remainder of the funds are contributed, similarly, on a matching and incentive basis," Brierly stated.

Army College Fund benefits may be used for any educational program which is approved by the Veterans Administration. Funds are paid directly to the soldier. Should the soldier decide not to continue his education, the personal contribution of the soldier will be returned in a lump sum.

During the past three years, about a third of the young people entering the Army for the first time have met the qualifications to take part in the Army College Fund.

"I would urge anyone interested in taking part in the Army College Fund to contact a local Army recruiter as soon as possible," Brierly pointed out. "The recruiter will explain all aspects of the program, such as the job training skill options which are available to fill part of the requirement. The recruiter will also be able to outline all other options and benefits associated with enlistment in the U.S. Army, such as cash bonuses, travel and training," he said.

"I would also like to stress the importance of prior planning," added Brierly. A prospective soldier can enlist up to a year in advance of reporting for duty. This allows the individual a greater choice of training and maximum flexibility as to when the individual reports for training. An individual can complete necessary processing while still in high school or college, but report for basic training after graduation.

> "Soldiers entering the Army with two years of college credit will also earn increased benefits."

"In summary, our new programs are designed to insure that the Army continues to recruit quality young men and women who are needed to operate and maintain the highly technological equipment that the Army has in its inventory. If you're interested, stop by or call any Army recruiting station — they're listed in the Yellow Pages under Recruiting, Brierly concluded. (USAREC)

Fort Benning to celebrate Army Family Week

Fort Monroe, Va. — While America's families celebrate National Family Week Nov. 18 through 24, the TRADOC Army Family will, in addition, observe Army Family Week. Its theme is the "TRADOC Army Family Plan."

General William Richardson, TRADOC commanding general, said that "the principle intention of observance is to communicate to all Army families the spirit and goals stated in the 1983 Chief of Staff White Paper."

In a white paper to the Army, Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. John A. Wickham jr., stated that "a partnership exists between the Army and Army families. The Army's unique missions, concept of service and lifestyle of its members all affect the nature of this partnership. Toward the goal of building a strong partnership, the Army remains committed to assuring adequate support to families in order to promote wellness, to develop a sense of community, and to strengthen the mutually reinforcing bonds between the Army and its families."

"The TRADOC Army Family Plan addresses the goals stated in the white paper," said Maj. Eugene Vivalda, chief of the Community Life Branch in Morale, Welfare and Recreation at HQ TRADOC. The TAFP, according to Vivalda, encompasses all programs, projects and services geared toward the Army family.

Vivalda said one good example of a TAFP program is the Army Community Services agency — an agency that emphasizes self-help service, and stability. Because ACS is a support organization that offers so many different services to the soldiers and their families, he explained, it is flexible and meets the needs of many people.

He further commented that the soldier is most important to ACS. "ACS's job is to go out and find the soldier and tell what is available," said Vivalda.

The Family Advocacy Program; Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program; Information, Referral and Follow-up Services; Relocation Program and the Loan Closet are a few of the may services offered by ACS.

However, ACS is only one of many agencies that support the commander's mission through support and assistance to soldiers and their families, according to Vivalda. (TNS)

What does it mean to be part of Army family?

Fort Monroe, Va. — What does it mean to be part of the Army family?

It means being part of every aspect of the Army — part of its family of people, its family of units and its family of components.

You know the people in the Army family. They are the Active Component and Reserve Component service members, the Department of the Army civilians, the retirees and all their family members which form the backbone of our Army.

You know the units of the Army family, too. They are the support units, the armor battalions, the infantry companies and all the others which are linked together laterally and up and down the chain of command. The unique relationship of soldiers to their units is represented by their family.

You also know the components of the Army family. That family is comprised of the Active Army, the National Guard, the Army Reserve and the Department of the Army civilians.

Now even though the labels for these families are new, you've been a member of them ever since you or your spouse joined the Army. In fact, you'll find those who have been around the Army awhile have always felt they were part of a family. They've felt that special sense of comradeship and community. They've been surrounded by buddies and commanders, neighbors and loved ones who pull together. (OCPA Forces Command)

Original 10th Division formed for special warfare

Army needed soldiers with skiing, mountaineering training for new unit

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Editor's note: The Department of the Army announced in September that the Army had selected Fort Benning as the temporary home for one brigade of the 10th Infantry Division. The following is from the division's history.

"Ten thousand men frozen to death" screamed the headlines in the early months of World War II. Of the 35,000 men killed, 10,000 were frozen to death. Why? Because these men, Italians fighting in Italy's Balkan invasion, were driven into the mountains in Albania by the Greeks. The Italians were not trained or equipped for mountain or winter warfare.

This tragic action prompted America's highest military leaders into a decision to field the 10th Mountain Division for mountain and winter combat. The 10th became a unit with distinctly different men undergoing distinctly different training.

The United States Ski Association, which was made up of avid skiiers and outdoorsmen, was made an official recruiting agency by the Army to recruit qualified personnel for the 10th.

The Association (and the Army) was looking for men with ability in skiing or mountaineering.

They were also looking for any outdoorsmen, cowboys, woodsmen or anyone capable of spending a night in the winter woods without dying of fright or exposure.

Each prospective draftee filled out a questionnaire concerning his abilities and submitted three letters of recommendation from responsible individuals. There was an overwhelming response. Men came from colleges, foresters applied, as did park rangers, professional hunters and trappers, loggers and lumbermen. It was found that men with money and high social positions who liked to ski and mountaineer joined the 10th as privates rather than accept direct commissions as officers in some other branch or field. Once the Ski Association recruited the needed complement of men, a training site at Camp Hale, Colorado was chosen. It would be the perfect place to teach the new recruits the fundamentals of skiing and mountain warfare.

Camp Hale was located just north of Tennessee Pass at an elevation of 9,200 feet in the Rocky Mountains. It was on the main line of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad and on U.S. 24, a main highway. Most of the area was in the Arapahoe National Forest.

A typical training day began in the dark at 4:30 a.m. and usually started with a 15-mile road march in the snow with 80-pound packs. After that the men would learn how to wax skis or how the bindings were supposed to fit. Then they were put on the snow and taught how to ski or how to improve their skiing. As many of the troopers were former ski instructors and enthusiasts of the sport, these recruits found themselves teaching others how to ski rather than going to the classes themselves. Once the men learned the basics of skiing they would then learn how to use their basic ski knowledge while skiing with their heavy packs and weapons. Many of the best skiiers had problems skiing with the heavy loads.

The new draftees received rock training after mastering the fundamentals of skiing. The novices began by balancing on wet logs and then stepping onto huge boulders. Then, bound by ropes, the men were instructed on how to climb granite mountains almost perpendicular and several hundred feet high. To toughen the men the leaders sometimes had them climb without gloves, even in cold temperatures. This resulted in cold, aching lacerations of the hands. Rappeling techniques were also taught, as was the Tryolean Traverse. This consisted of crossing high above a river gorge from one side to the other suspended from a rope. As a result of this training many of America's mountaineering and skiing techniques were pioneered at Camp Hale. Despite the toughness of the training, the division retained an astounding array of mountain troopers. Those who stayed included former professors and scholars and even a former assistant to Albert Einstein. The average I.Q., including privates, was high enough to qualify many of the men for officer training. Because of the rigorous training, the 10th acquired a reputation for toughness. Great feats of stamina were commnplace: two 10th Division soldiers used a weekend pass to walk from Camp Hale to Glenwood Springs, a distance of 75 miles. The men completed the hike in 21 hours, without sleep and eating only one candy bar each for nourishment.

Not typical as compared to other Army units as far as training, every day seemed filled with adventure: testing snow vehicles and rescue toboggans, snowshoeing, skiing, learning about ava-

First COHORT battalion progressing well in training

By Joe Donovan
Special to the Bayonet

Editor's Note: This is the third part of a continuing series on the Army's first COHORT Battalion.

Private Henry Eun marched his platoon to a halt in front of their barracks. The group of young soldiers waited for Eun to put out the uniform for the next formation, then headed into the barracks for well earned showers. They had just finished their second diagnostic PT test of basic training. Eun and his platoon are members of the Army's first COHORT battalion, which is showing itself to be an effective tool for building a cohesive fighting unit, full of motivation and pride.

Eun is a member of E Company, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. Along with B Company, these men will form the core of 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry, which will be reactivated this year as part of the 7th Infantry Division, now being reorganized into the new "light infantry" configuration. The members of B and E companies will fill their MOS positions in the three rifle and one headquarters companies of the 3rd Battalion "Manchus". Manchu is the nickname the 9th Infantry Regiment received during action against the Chinese in the early 1900's.

Motivation and pride have proven to be key factors in the success of these young soldiers thus far during basic training. The first thing the new soldiers saw when they arrived at their barracks was the hourglass symbol of the 7th Division. Signs with the unit symbol and battalion crest were all around the barracks area. The new soldiers added to these signs by creating platoon mottos and Army regalia on painted rocks, all on their own time. These symbols represent the pride with which the Manchus view their unit.

The Manchus show their pride every day. "The Army has given me a lot of self-dsicipline," said Eun. "It offers me more than I could do as a civilian. It keeps me mentally sharp."

The pride and discipline of these young men has paid off in training. B company tallied a 30.45 average of 40 possible points on basic rifle marksmanship. The average score on the recent PT test was 253.25 out of 300 points, almost 50 points higher than on the initial test. The Manchus are rightfully proud of their progress.

The cadre working with the COHORT battalion are proud of the Manchu's progress as well, First sergeant Michael J. Quensnell of E Company says the COHORT concept is "working out well, the troops are responding well," Quensnell sees a "big benefit in all going together to Fort Ord. There is a lot more camaraderie."

The 3rd Battalion Manchus have completed a good deal of their basic training requirements at this point. There have been several road marches to prepare the men for the light infantry's mission. The soldiers have all been fully trained on the M-16 rifle, the M-60 machinegun, the M-203 grenade launcher and the grenade. The collective scores on these weapons have been higher than many previous cycles.

Physical training is demanding with an average 5-mile run lasting 35 minutes. The men are now approaching their specialty training in preparation for filling an MOS and going through their mid-cycle testing.

Precautions should be taken during cold weather

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

The seasonal evolution from beach and summer wear to winter clothes is in full swing. Service people around the world, whether at work or play, can keep a little warmer and safer this winter by taking some simple precautions.

When venturing out into cold weather, it's important to wear layers of loose clothing, says Maj. John W. Pennycook, a research physiologist with the Cold Research Division, Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine, Natick, Mass. "When a person wears several layers of clothing, air is trapped between them and provides additional insulation," he says. But when people exercise (skiing, hiking, etc.), they begin to perspire and their clothing becomes wet and loses its ability to insulate.

The moisture needs to be released. Unbutton a button, unzip a zipper or remove your coat or sweater until you don't feel "sweaty" anymore.

Another way to get into serious trouble is to go outdoors in cold weather with not enough clothing. Pennycook says people who go out with only a shirt and sweater for long periods don't have enough on to protect them from losing large amounts of body heat. Since most body heat is lost through the head, a hat or some other type of head covering is always recommended in cold temperatures.

The most vulnerable part of your body in cold weather is your feet. Boots and shoes are very constricting. When you add a couple of pairs of socks and some ski bindings the circulation to your feet is reduced drastically.

"Exercise them," is Pennycook's advice. "Massage your feet every once in a while. Change your socks as often as possible. Failure to do so could cause some real problems." (Pennycook suggests putting wet socks next to your body to let them dry.)

Frostbite is another danger of winter weather. Frostbite is literally the freezing of tissue. The feet, hands and face are the most likely targets.

"I recommend the buddy system," says Pennycook. "It's hard for a person to notice frostbite, especially on the face. But a buddy will notice little bluish-gray particles on a person's skin. The individual with frostbite may notice some tingling early on, but that will soon disappear. If the area isn't warmed up, the situation could become serious."

Massaging the feet, wearing insulated mittens and paying attention to ears, face, nose and hands will prevent frostbite.

Nutrition is also important if you're going to be active out in the cold. Pennycook recommands a normal, well-balanced diet with a couple of important additions.

"In cold weather," says Pennycook, "a person's normal thirst mechanism is depressed. The air they breathe is much less humid than the air in their lungs. People lose a lot of water and don't notice it." So, it's important to drink lots of water.

In cold weather, the body uses a lot of energy just to prevent heat loss. That energy needs to be replaced. Pennycook says to supplement your normal diet with hot soups, hot drinks and

Preventive Medicine Clinic holds briefings on cold weather injuries

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In November and December, 1942, the German Army suffered 100,000 injuries from this killer—15,000 amputations resulted from those injuries. This same killer comprised 10 percent of U.S. wounded casualties from World War II and the Korean War. There were 9,000 injuries in Korea and 90,000 injuries during WWII. Because of those numbers, seven and a half million man days were lost.

During the Falklands War an injury from this killer's family was the number one medical problem. That injury is trenchfoot. The killer is cold weather injury.

A series of cold weather briefings were held last week by the Preventive Medicine Service, with Dr. Murray Hamlett, director of cold weather research, Natick, Mass., conducting the briefings.

Dr. Hamlett is a world expert on cold weather injuries according to Col. John C. Richards, Martin Army Community Hospital commander, and is consulted by the State Department on his studies.

Dr. Hamlett was a military veterinarian at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, before going to the Natick lab in 1969. He spent four years on active duty at the lab and then stayed on as a civilian.

"We know there is little effort in the civilian community on the major cold injuries that affect the military side of the house. We concentrate on new treatment, we study the impact on a person's function and performance and then work out a preventive approach to these injuries," Dr. Hamlett explained.

He said the major injuries the military is concerned with are trenchfoot, frostbite, hypothermia and cold water submersion.

The study and results are shared not only with all the military services but also with the civilian community, Dr. Hamlett said. These documents are reviewed by NATO, published in medical techs, journals, made into video-tapes and educational movies and reproduced as DA Pamphlets.

"During these briefings, we try to teach prevention. For instance, to avoid trenchfoot, you need to keep clean and dry. That means taking extra socks with you when you go to the field and frequently changing them. You have to spend more time keeping drier," Dr. Hamlett explained. "It's an individual task for the soldier. We can teach using clothing rationally, like layering clothing for ventilation and warmth, and knowing when to take layers off, but the young soldiers have to take care of themselves, which is something they might not be accustomed to doing."

Dr. Hamlett explained that no workers are worked as hard as the Army works a soldier. "The work comes in spurts, you have to get used to the work cycle and not overwork. You have to try to keep a steady, constant pace."

Dr. Hamlett explained that cold weather injuries can occur at any temperature. "There have been fatalities in young, healthy adults at plus 50 degrees with a mist and high wind. The cooling rate is what is important. Of course, with freezing temperatures frostbite occurs. So, you have to be constantly aware of it."

The Preventive Medicine Service on post has literature on cold weather injuries and gives cold weather injury briefings on a request basis all over post. In fact, Dr. Hamlett said, this time of year is when preventive medicine has a major impact on line units, like the 197th Infantry Brigade and their preparations in going to Germany for REFORGER early in the calendar year.

"These soldiers are going to find Germany cold and wet. There will be broken woods, snow and rain and they will slog around in the mud. It is a cold, wet environment which is a bigger threat for cold weather injuries because it permeates the clothing and cuts down the insulation you might have.

"There will be moisture everywhere which will be difficult to escape and more effort will be required to keep dry, expecially your feet," Hamlett said.

One way to prevent cold weather injuries, Dr. Hamlett suggests, is by employing the buddy system. "Look at each other's faces, ask each other if you can feel your toes, know when the risks are highest and keep track of your friends.

"Maintaining hydration is extremely important because you can lose more fluids than you can replace and not know it. If so, you risk injuries to the lower extremities," he said.

Dehydration can be spotted by checking your urine. The color of the urine will change from light yellow to dark yellow to orange and finally brown, indicating the degree of the loss of fluids. Light yellow is the color of the urine when enough fluids are being taken in, brown is the color when no fluids are being taken in and dehydration is in full effect. At this stage people have died.

Dr. Hamlett and his labratory at Natick will explore cold weather injuries during episode 9 of the Public TV show, "Voyage of the Mimi." More information can be obtained on cold weather injuries from the Preventive Medicine Service, 545-1144/3518.

Hypothermia is another consideration in cold weather. Hypothermia is the gradual decline of core body temperature from its norm of around 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit. Below 94 degrees Fahrenheit, hypothermia sets in. The first signs are shivering and some mental confusion. Below 90 degrees, body temperature drops drastically, creating a major medical emergency. Untreated, hypothermia can result in death.

But Pennycook cautions: If you find someone who is hypothermic, don't give up. Get them immediate medical care. No one should be considered dead until they are warm and dead."

In explaining how hypothermia victims can sometimes be revived, Pennycook says the demands of the human body are much less when the body is hypothermic. The heart beats slower, the brain needs less oxygen and respiration is lower. Today, emergency rooms do all they can to rewarm bodies to see if normal breathing and a heartbeat can be restored.

"With proper precautions, the cold is nothing to be afraid of," stresses Pennycook. "Just learn to work with it. Drink lots of fluids, keep your clothes clean, dry, and loose, and remember that it is going to take you longer to do things in the cold."

But drinking alcoholic beverages is a "no-no" and should be restricted to after the day's activities. Alcohol dilates the superficial blood vessels, causing precious heat loss.

Will it float? Exercise keeps soldiers' heads above water

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"In the event that the "track" fills with water, your life jackets will pull you out. Do not attempt to stay in the vehicle. Try to get to the safety boat and cling to its sides until help arrives."

As the young soldiers from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade listened to SFC Russell Bolton give them their final safety briefing, they eyed the M113 armored personnel carrier uneasily. The question in all their minds was clear; will that thing float?

"The basic idea in swimming is to give the soldiers confidence in the vehicle, so they can see that yes, this 12-ton vehicle does float," said Capt. Lewis Boone, chief of the Mechanized Committee, Infantry Training Group.

The soldiers come to the committee for mechanized training by the instructors of A Company, ITG, during their sixth or seventh week of IET.

The first day the soldiers go to the motor pool and learn how to do basic maintenance on the "track" and how to operate it. They are taught very basic knowledge; how to start the engine, how to turn right and left, and how to drive the "track."

"Once these soldiers complete basic training, they will get more experience with the vehicle in their units, where they will be required to swim the "tracks" at designated times," said Boone.

There are 86 instructors at A Company, ITG, and they train 150 to 200 soldiers per day, aided by a small group of instructors assigned to the Waterborne Section, who do nothing but swim the vehicles.

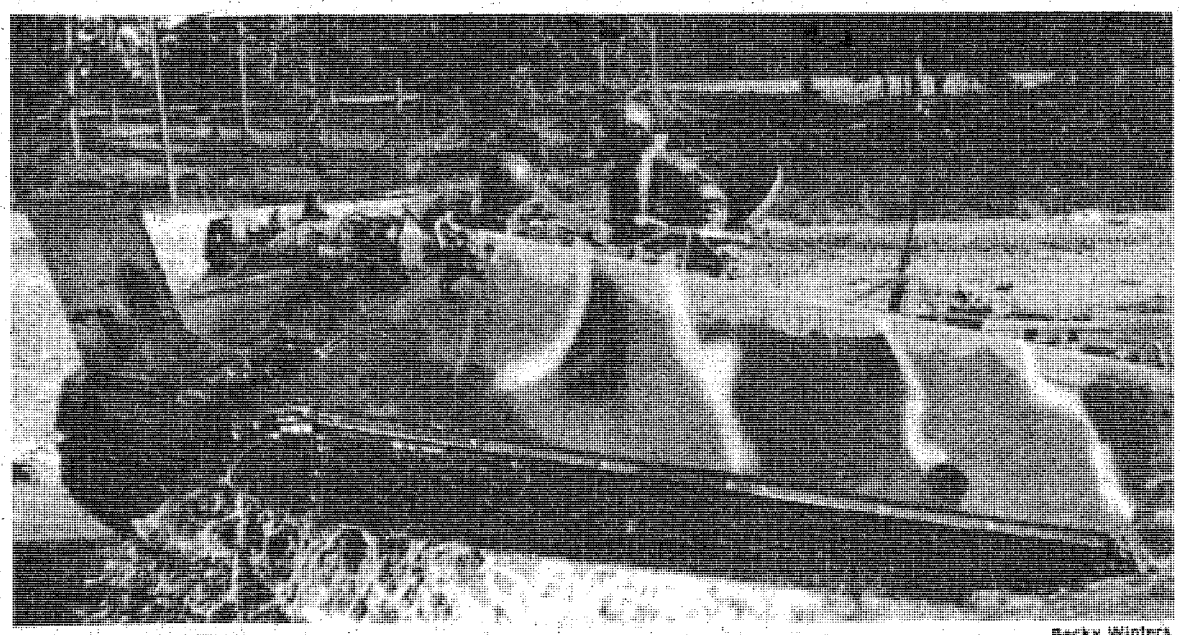
These instructors drive the "tracks" and supervise the soldiers during the swim since the soldiers have not had enough hands on experience with the vehicle to swim it safely.

"Our instructors know Victory Pond well and they know how to maneuver over and around the sand bars. These are constantly shifting and if approached improperly, they could turn the 'track' over," said Boone.

On the morning of day two, the soldiers are taken to Victory Pond, divided into two groups, and then instructed on how to make the waterborne checks on the vehicle.

They learn how to check the ramp seals to maker sure that the rubber is not cracked, damaged or missing, and how to check the drain plugs underneath the "track" to see that everything will seal properly. Bilge pumps are also checked to make sure they are in good working condition.

Next the soldiers are broken down into 10 to 13-man squads, given their final safety briefing and life preservers, loaded into the vehicle, and taken for a swim.



Becky Winters

Instructors take a squad of soldiers for a test swim in the M113 at Victory Pond.

To make the swim as safe as possible, instructors "pre-dip" the "track" before any soldiers are allowed to swim in it. The track is attached to a recovery vehicle (VTR) by cable and then driven into the pond to check for leaks. The VTR is used to pull the track out of the water after the safety check, and also as an additional safety element in case the track has a problem during the "pre-dip."

At all times when the track is swimming, a safety boat is circling with two safety personnel aboard keeping watch over it, available should a problem arise.

With their confidence level considerably higher, the soldiers spend the the last half-day of their mechanized training learning to mount and dismount the "track" and practicing as a member of a squad.

"They learn how to mount and dismount the 'track' in such a way that they are not exposed to enemy fire," Boone said, "and how to be part of a team, with two team leaders and a squad leader."

The instructors have instilled the soldiers with confidence in the capabilities of the M113 armored personnel carrier, and in themselves as part of a mechanized squad.

Fort Benning dining facility asks patrons to help choose best fries

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Support Battalion Dining Facility recently held a taste test between the confirmed Army standard french fries, and a new, mysterious challenger known only by its assigned lot number.

Although the challenger wasn't quite up to Mrs. Ida's homegrown, flavored french fries, soldiers participating in the survey found that they weren't any better than the standard fries.

The survey was conducted by the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency. The surveys are held quarterly and evaluate three to five subsistence items prepared in Army dining facilities. Each survey utilizes CONUS, and two overseas dining facilities.

"The Department of the Army determines what foods are going to be evaluated, and what posts will do the evaluating," explained SFC Anastacio Guitron, dining facility manager. "The Post Food Service on main post picks which dining facility will represent the post. This time, they picked us."

For this quarter, french fries, ground beef items, and frankfurters were evaluated.

"Each post only surveys one food item per survey. Fort Benning got the one for french fries," said Guitron.

Participating in the survey was as easy as picking up a card and filling it out. The consumer questionaire that the soldiers filled out determined whether or not they would one day be eating the new item.

"Whether we buy the products or not is determined from the troop survey," explained Capt. Gary L. Evins, dining facility officer, adding, "the items in the survey are new brand names that the Army is considering buying. However, running a dining facility is like a business. We don't buy anything that the troops don't like. We'd lose money."

A majority of the troops enjoyed the survey. It gave them a rare chance to give their opinion on the quality of the food being served. An added boon was knowing that their voice would be heard.

Whether or not the new fries will one day be on the menus has yet to be seen. In the meantime, the old standard will continue to be served on the fast food line of the dining facility lunch.

Washington — A non-commissioned officer's official photograph in the personnel file carries so much weight that its quality and substance can spell success or failure come selection time for promotion or schooling.

That fact received emphasis recently from officials at the Army's Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

EREC officials point out that the enlisted promotion and selection board considers the photograph a critical document in determining the soldier's potential for promotion and schooling.

The boards are now receiving the photo in hardcopy — a practice reflecting its importance in the overall review of soldiers' records.

What do the boards look for when they scan the photo? For starters, they check the following features:

- Hair neatly cut and clearly within the Army standards;
- Properly fitted uniform;
- Properly arranged awards, badges, brass, and name plates;
- Shined shoes; and
- Correctly and completely prepared "menu board."

Officials remind soldiers that in "today's Army competition for promotion is so great that nothing can be allowed to lessen one's chances of winning promotion" — especially in view of such common errors as these found on the official photographs:

- Incorrect data on menu board, or no menu board;
- Poorly fitted uniforms;
- Poor quality of photograph developing process;
- Haircuts and mustaches not within Army standards;
- Photographs not properly sized in accordance with AR 640-30;
- Missing brass or brass on wrong side; and
- Not all authorized permanent ribbons, badges and tabs being worn.

In addition to being mindful of that error list, soldiers must remember that AR 640-30 requires a photograph to be taken:

- Within 90 days of promotion to grade E-6;
- When appointed to the position of command sergeant major; and
- When the photograph on file no longer properly represents the subject.

Officials note, the last criterion can count as much as the initial photograph. They explain that whenever a soldier's status changes, a new photo must be sent. For example: loss of weight, a promotion or demotion, additional awards/service stripes, or personal preference for a re-take.

When sending a photograph for file, the soldier must be sure to send two copies of it through the military personnel office to: Commander, USAEREC, Attn: PCRE-BA, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301. (ARNEWS)

Reports indicate official photo is crucial for officer promotions

Washington — The latest after-action reports from officer selection boards indicate officers should pay closer attention to photographs and record briefs contained in their official military personnel file.

At the end of each officer selection board, the panel submits a report to the Chief of Staff listing trends and discriminators which separate selectees from non-selectees. Boards also recommend improvements to the selection system.

Recent after-action reports from the 1984 board emphasize these points:

- Officers must update their officer record brief before a board meets. An inaccurate ORB reduces an officer's chances for selection. Panels say the field-audited ORB is an improvement to the selection system.
- There are still too many officers with non-regulation haircuts and mustaches, short trousers and sleeves, unpressed uniforms and improper insignia. As one board member stated, "the best suit hanging in the closet should be the military uniform."
- Long and self-aggrandizing letters that report what is already in the promotion file are self-defeating. The use of short factual letters is recommended to bring the board up-to-date on a significant item that is not in the file. An example would be completion of a degree or a recent award.
- Don't wait for selection to a Command and Staff College to start a non-resident program early. Completion of CSC is a discriminator in the selection process for lieutenant colonels. Of those selected to lieutenant colonel by the 1984 board, over 99 percent had completed CSC-leveling schooling. Only four out of 1,927 were not CSC graduates, and two of these four were in the last phase of the correspondence course. Promotion boards consider CSC essential to the professional development of field-grade officers.
- Meet all the requirements for the Army Physical Readiness Test and the height/weight requirements. Personnel over age 40 should take the APRT as soon as possible following the medical screen. Don't wait for an extended period of time — any delay is suspicious to the board. Boards do not look favorably on officers who are overweight or who are APRT failures.
- Raters and senior raters must "tell it like it is." There are too many inconsistencies between the narrative and block checks on the OER. For example, rating oficials may have described an officer's performance as "in the top five percent," yet placed the officer in the lower 50 percent of the senior rater's profile. The signal to the board is obviously one of confusion and uncertainty. (ARNEWS)

Election day

Sixth graders from Wanda Hagler's first hour class wait to cast their ballots on election day at Faith Middle School. The school's Student Council, composed of eighth graders, sponsored the election. The council members watched the presidential debates to study the platforms of both parties, then made video tapes explaining the platforms. The students watched the videos before voting.

Employees' ideas help save Army money

Washington — Federal employees, through their individual ideas, inventions and performance, saved American taxpayers $1.3 billion in Fiscal Year 1983, according to the office of personnel management's most recent report on its Federal Incentive Awards Program.

These savings, highlighted in OPM's latest issue of "achievements 1983," topped the billion-dollar mark for the third straight year.

During FY 1983, federal employees received monetary awards totaling a record $168 million — an amount representing less than three-tenths of one percent of the federal civilian payroll. According to OPM officials, for every dollar paid in awards, the government realized benefits of some eight dollars.

"This superlative record of achievement produced by federal personnel at all levels clearly demonstrates a firm commitment to efficient and productive government in the service of the public," said Donald J. Devine, OPM Director, on releasing the report.

"In addition to measurable benefits, the public has benefitted in may other ways from employee contributions," Devine added. "Through consequent advancements in science and medicine, for instance , the health, welfare, and security of all citizens have been enhanced."

The government incentive awards act signed into law in 1954, provides public recognition through monetary and honorific awards to employees whose efforts, over and above job requirements, improve government operations and services, and reduce wasteful and inefficient practices.

Since 1954, more than five million federal employees have been cited for saving taxpayers more than $9.8 billion. Total savings in FY 1980 were $552 million, followed by record-breaking years of $1.9 billion in FY 1981, $1.1 billion in FY 1982 and $1.3 billion in FY 1983.

GETTING AROUND CAN BE EXPENSIVE.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Unlike the Army, most civilian jobs don't provide transportation. You already know how much cars and gasoline cost.

But wait'll you see what it costs to ride subways, buses or commuter trains these days.

There's a way to cope. Just spend one weekend a month with your local Army Reserve unit, and you'll earn a lot more than bus fare.

Did you know that an E-5 with four years' experience now makes over $115 for a Reserve weekend?

Add in two weeks annual training pay and the total can easily top $1,922 per year.

You can also continue to save by buying tires and other auto accessories through the PX. Reservists get PX privileges.

Plus retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have all that waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your reenlistment NCO or unit commander. Or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. The cost of getting around on the outside increases every day.

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Commissary on the lookout for holiday season shoplifters

Nothing could be more depressing than to spend the yuletide season in the grasp of the long arm of the law.

But officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency report that the winter holiday season is a peak shoplifting period in commissaries around the world.

For those caught shoplifting the action taken is swift and uncompromising. A criminal record, fine, possible jail sentence, the loss of a job and suspension of commissary shopping privileges are the potential results of a reckless impulse.

Alert commissary management catches most shoplifters. Closed circuit television and convex viewing mirrors are just some of the ways commissaries are keeping thefts down. Additionally, commissary security specialists and military police investigators will enable some Army commissaries to better prepare themselves in combating pilferage, particularly this holiday season, a TSA spokesman said.

Customers detained will be turned over to law enforcement officials for prosecution. They will then be tried by either a federal migistrate or under the provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Basically, the Army Commissary System works like this. Items appearing on store shelves are purchased from a fund which is, in effect, a loan from the U.S. Treasury. If a shoplifter takes something from the commissary, the shortage must be replaced from the five-percent surcharge money paid on honest purchases.

Avoid becoming a commissary shoplifting statistic during the upcoming holidays. Why spoil an otherwise happy occasion? (TSA)

Family quarters fires account for nearly half of fire loss in TRADOC

By Karen L. Eure
TRADOC Command Information Branch

When 294,342 is compared to zero, is bigger better? Not when 294,342 is the dollar value of TRADOC's real property loss for fires during 1984. Over half, $147,535 accounts for the property loss in family quarters fires.

Despite the fire prevention briefing that all new families receive when they sign for quarters, the majority of the fires could have been prevented if family members had followed the precautions in the briefing.

The leading causes of fires in TRADOC are arson, careless smoking, electrical overloads or short circuits, children playing with fire and careless cooking. Since 1982, four people have died due to arson and careless smoking. The deaths of two children, a brother and sister ages two and three, could have been prevented if the cover had not been purposely removed from a smoke detector.

In 1976, TRADOC made it mandatory for smoke detectors to be installed in family quarters. The detectors aid in preventing injuries by alerting occupants of danger. Now, other commands realize the advantage of having smoke detectors. Although they are not Army-wide, they will be within the near future.

Since smoke detectors cannot extinguish fires, TRADOC is considering installing sprinklers in quarters. The Federal Emergency Management Agency found that the damage in apartments without sprinklers is four times higher than apartments with sprinklers.

> "The leading causes of fires in TRADOC are arson, careless smoking, electrical overloads or short circuits, children playing with fire and careless cooking."

Installation of sprinklers will save lives and money. Alternate methods of fighting fires are also being considered. Still, the best method of fighting fires is for quarters occupants to prevent them. The following is a list of five precautions everyone should be aware of:

- Install a smoke detector and make sure it works all the time. Maintaining your detector could mean the difference between life and death.
- Preplan your family fire escape and be sure to include an alternate escape route.
- When smoking, be certain that cigarettes and ashes are completely out when unattended.
- Keep matches and flammable substances away from young curious hands.
- Be sure to keep the emergency number to the fire department next to your phone.

Finally, these precautions may help you and your family if you follow one rule — DON'T PANIC. When the heat's on, be cool. Let's all work to lower the statistics because in this case, zero is a number that we can live with.

10th Division

lanche dangers and rescues. One famous Artic explorer taught the men how to use crampons (steel spikes under boots) to climb ice walls and cliffs.

Because of the special training of the unit, the esprit de corps, and the quality of the division's leaders and soldiers, the 10th's personnel were sent on many critical but bizarre missions.

In 1943 a detachment under 1st Lt. Ed Link flew to the Atlas Mountains in North Africa and trained British climbers to cross river gorges by rope. Another detachment from the 10th taught Polish paratroopers how to ski in Italy. A special squad was sent to Hollywood to make ski movies. Others developed and tested various over-the-snow vehicles, including the "weasel" that ran on tracks like a tank. In June of 1943 the 10th's 87th Regiment was sent to Ft. Ord, Calif. and turned over to the Marines. There they were trained in the use of machetes and jungle fighting and also in amphibious landings. The unit was then sent, as part of a task force, to invade the Japanese held island of Kiska, part of the Aleutian Islands in the North Pacific. However, it was found after the invasion that the Japanese had abandoned the island and the 87th was sent back to Camp Hale for more training.

The 10th, whose motto was "We conquer mountains and men," would soon ace their most rigorous test in conquering both of the above: it was 1945 and the division was about to be sent to Italy's Appennine Mountains to combat the German Wehrmacht.

Military police answer questions about traffic flow

Provost marshal

Some of the most frequently asked questions of the Military Police concern the system of morning and evening traffic flow, or "traffic cut" as the MPs refer to it.

Traffic circulation is adjusted in the mornings to accommodate the large influx of people coming onto the installation. Changes to normal travel routes are in effect from 7 until 8 a.m. The biggest change provides for one lane of Benning Boulevard going out the main entrance to be used for incoming traffic.

For those attempting to exit the installation by the main gate, there are some major changes during this time:

There is no exit through 10th Division Road. This is utilized for incoming traffic only.

There is no left turn from Vibbert Avenue onto Lumpkin Road. To get to Lumpkin Road from main post, traffic must use Wold Avenue.

There is no left turn onto Marne Road from the outgoing portion of Benning Boulevard.

Traffic patterns in the afternoon from 4:15 p.m. are adjusted to accommodate the heavy flow of exodus traffic. All lanes of outgoing Benning Boulevard and the inside lane of incoming Benning Boulevard from main post to the MP outpost are reserved for exiting traffic.

Incoming traffic must turn onto 10th Division Road to get to main post. If you wish to exit by way of South Lumpkin Road, stay in the inside lane of outgoing Benning Boulevard; and Marne Road traffic turn right and stay in the inside lane of incoming Benning Boulevard.

You will be automatically directed to South Lumpkin Road from these lanes.

During this period there is no right turn from Vibbert Avenue onto Lumpkin Road. The best way for people to travel from the Custer Road area to main post is to use the Lindsey Creek By-Pass (I-185). There is no left turn from Custer Road onto incoming Benning Boulevard from 6:15 to 7:15 a.m.

Please take note of these changes to normal traffic flow. With a little care and a better understanding of the traffic flow, we can make Fort Benning a safer place to drive.

(Provost Marshal)

Army increases college fund 'kickers'

Washington — Army college fund "kickers" have been increased $6,300 for the four-or-more-year enlistee and $4,900 for two-year enlistees with an associates degree or 60 semester hours from an accredited institution.

The Oct. 1 increase raises these post-service education benefits to maximums of $26,400 ($18,300 kicker + $8,100 VEAP) for four-year enlistees and $20,100 ($12,900 kicker + $7,200 VEAP) for the degree-holding two-year enlistees.

The bonuses have been increased for recruiting purposes, said Army personnel officials, in addition to meeting inflation and rising college costs.

"Kickers" for the three-year enlistee and a two-year enlistee without the degree remain at $12,000 and $8,000, respectively.

Soldiers may use these benefits for education programs up to 10 years after they separate, according to officials.

Servicemembers must have accounts with the Veteran's Educational Assistance program (VEAP) and meet other eligibility requirements to receive the "kicker".

All soldiers must have a high school diploma, score 50 or above on the Armed Forces Qualification Test and enlist for a selected occupational specialty. To earn the entire bonus, two-year enlistees must contribute to their accounts for 24 consecutive months; three-or-more year enlistees for 36 months.

VEAP account holders may save $2,400 for a two-year enlistment and up to $2,700 for a longer term of service. Members may contribute to their accounts in $25-$100 monthly installments or in lump-sum payments. When the soldier separates, the government will match the balance $2 for every dollar saved, thereby tripling the amount. However, to receive any government bonus, a soldier must serve at least 24 months and participate in VEAP for at least 12 months. (USAREC)

Burglary — Don't think it can't happen to you

You've just returned home from an enjoyable evening out. As you walk toward your room, you notice the door is slightly ajar. You peer inside and see the contents of your locker strewn on the floor.

A further inspection of your room reveals drawers turned upside down, coin banks smashed, and jewelry, guns, stereo, and TV gone.

The MPs arrive with a barrage of questions. Was the door locked? Did you leave a light on and the radio playing? Is there an inventory showing the serial numbers of the missing items? Are any of the items marked with an Army Operation Identification number?

You never thought of those things? Burglary is something you read about in the newspaper, but it could never happen to you? Think again.

The facts

The FBI estimates a burglary occurs every 10 seconds, every day of the year. And if you live off-post, you're just as likely a target. There were over three million burglaries in 1983, with two-thirds of them occurring in residential areas.

We know they constitute about one-third of all property crime and that they occur most frequently in the southern states and less frequently in the northeast. January was the highest month for burglaries last year, followed by August.

Nationwide trends showed a nine percent decrease in burglaries in 1983 (the Army showed a 10 percent decline). Thirty percent of the burglaries last year involved no forced entry. The crook just waltzed in through an unlocked door or window.

Victims suffered losses estimated at $2.7 billion. The average loss for a residential burglary was $893. Army families lost almost $10 million.

We know that burglars seldom steal things for their own personal use. They steal items that are easy to carry away and easy to sell.

This gives us a weapon to use in fighting burglars. Operation Identification, or Op Id, has been set up to discourage burglars before they break in. Here's how it works.

What you can do

You go to the MP Station or check with your first sergeant to pick up an electric engraving pencil. Then you mark all your valuable property — things like your stereo, guns, appliances, lawn mowers, etc. — with your Army Op Id number. This number is your social security number. You put USA in front of the number and the first letter of your last name at the end. If your name is Jones, it would look like this: USA 000-00-0000J.

After you finish marking your property, you get an Army Operation Identification decal from the MP station and display it where it can be easily seen. This announces to everyone that your property is marked for identification and can be traced by law enforcement agencies.

That's all there is to it. It's a lot of protection for a little effort. Burglars don't like items that are marked. It's too hard to turn them into cash — "fences" don't want to take the stuff. And it's bad news if a burglar is caught with marked property, because the markings easily establish ownership.

Your installation provost marshal or security officer has everything you need to get started. They can even tell you about methods of marking value items like cameras, able coins and other collecta There's even a way to ma diamonds.

See your law enforcement fol before a burglary, instead after one. And don't forget mark all those Christmas pre ents. January is a burglar's bi gest month. (Soldiers' Scene)

Army uniforms undergo changes to meet its mission requirements

Fort Monroe, Va. — From khaki brown to olive drab to woodland camouflage, the Army has changed its uniforms to meet mission requirements, take advantage of the latest technology and keep them practical and economical.

According to Payton Hutsell, office of TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for personnel, administration and logistics, Army uniforms have undergone many changes. As more statements of need are approved by the Army Chief of Staff, the supply of clothing items changes frequently.

Lt. Col. Walter Wolkowich, office of TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for personnel, administration and logistics, stressed that these are just a few of the changes that will occur in the next few years as the Army continually studies ways to provide its soldiers the best uniforms as economically as possible.

With the cold weather slipping upon us, servicemembers may purchase winter uniform items. The green windbreaker, wear out date Sept. 30, 1983, has been replaced by a black windbreaker. The green raincoat and green overcoat, wear out Sept. 30, 1985, are being replaced by a black-all-weather coat.

The O.D. field jacket has a wear out date of Sept. 30, 1986. The wear out date for the green sweater was Sept. 30, 1983; however, black cardigan sweaters may still be worn. (ARNEWS)

National Safety Council gives tips for holiday decoration use

Chicago — Whether you enjoy Christmas or Chanukah, the proper use of decorations is an important element to make the holiday season safe and enjoyable, the National Safety Council says.

Each year, Americans suffer needless deaths and injuries as well as the destruction of property because of accidents involving holiday observances.

The council advises you to consider the following tips:

- If you buy a natural tree, make sure it's fresh. Test it by striking the bottom of the tree against the ground to be sure very few attached needles fall off. Falling needles indicate that the tree is dry, and that is a fire hazard.
- To keep the tree fresh, cut the trunk about two inches from the bottom and place the tree in a water-filled container. Set the tree away from any fireplace, radiator or other heat source that could dry it out.
- If you decide on an artificial tree, be sure it is flame-resistant.
- Check all light strings for loose sockets or broken wires. If damaged, do not try to repair them. Buy new strings bearing the UL marker.
- For outdoor lighting, use exterior lights only. Check them carefully for defects.
- Turn off the tree and outside lights before you leave the house or go to bed.
- If you plan to give a toy to a child, make sure the toy is durable, free of sharp edges and is appropriate for the age of the child. Avoid purchasing shooting toys for young children or small objects that infants might swallow or choke on.
- Keep little ones away from holiday plants which might be poisonous if swallowed, such as berries of holly or mistletoe.
- If you are planning on serving cocktails, have food and non-alcoholic drinks available. Close the bar early, mix drinks moderately and don't allow guests to drive home if they have had too much to drink. Encourage the usage of the "Designated Driver" concept which relies on an individual remaining sober to ensure the safe transportation home of the rest of the group. (NSC)

Use precaution during holiday driving

Chicago — Between 400 and 500 persons may lose their lives in traffic accidents during the upcoming Thanksgiving holiday weekend, says the National Safety Council. The council estimates that an additional 17,000 to 22,000 may suffer disabling injuries on our nation's roads.

To help keep motorists safe during the holiday weekend, which officially begins at 6 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 21 and extends to midnight, Sunday, Nov. 25, the Council urges motorists to consider the following:

- If you drink . . . don't drive. Half of all motor-vehicle fatalities involve a drinking driver. Use the "designated driver" concept beginning with this holiday period and incorporate its use year-round at any social function where alcoholic beverages are served.
- Wear a safety belt and fasten children in child safety seats. The Council estimates show that 12,000 to 15,000 people could be saved annually if occupant restraints are utilized.
- Winterize your car by checking the brakes, fluid levels, tires, exhaust system, wipers and headlights before embarking on long trip to visit friends or rel tives.
- Use the "two-second" rule allow adequate following di tance between you and the vel cle ahead. After the vehicle front passes a particular point the road, count "a thousand ar one, a thousand and two, etc." you reach the landmark b fore a "thousand and two," i crease your following distance (NS

Thanksgiving dinner

The word Thanksgiving brings visions of turkey, dressing and all kinds of goodies. It reminds one of family togetherness, sharing, eating and laughing.

This special time can also bring many feelings of pain, anger, loneliness and depression. There are a number of wives here at Fort Benning whose husbands are in Korea, Germany or elsewhere. These couples will have to spend Thanksgiving apart. It is a very individual and yet universal sorrow many share.

Many wives and children will feel left out and forgotten. The feeling of isolation can not be removed, but it can be eased.

A special Thanksgiving dinner has been arranged on post for these wives and their children. Following the dinner, Michael and Lily Bollinger will present a personal time of sharing how each one felt during their past Thanksgiving separation.

The dinner will be served at 11:30 a.m. in the "Follow Me" dining facility. Costs for family members of active duty military personnel are $2.10 (age 12 and over) and $1.05 (children under 12 years old). For reservations and more information call the TIC Chapel Center at 545-2050. Please make your reservations by noon on Monday.

Pre-marriage class

A pre-marriage class for all Catholics anticipating marriage will be held on Sunday at 1 p.m. in the Catholic Education Center at Custer Terrace Chapel. For further information, call 545-3461 or 544-3305.

Saturday mass

Effective Saturday, the 5 p.m. mass at Kelley Hill will once again be celebrated at Main Post Catholic Chapel.

Thanksgiving services

Thanksgiving services will be held at The Infantry Center Chapel and Custer Terrace Chapel at 10 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day. For more information call TIC Chapel at 545-2050.

A special Thanksgiving service also will be held at the School Brigade Chapel at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 21.

Biblical preaching

Chaplains from 39 installations across the country gathered in The Infantry Center Chapel last Sunday evening for the beginning of a three day conference on Biblical preaching. Sponsored by the U.S. Army Chaplain Board and Fort Benning, the conference provided a professional training opportunity for the participants who represented twenty-one different denominations.

The speakers included: Dr. John W. Carlton, professor of Preaching at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary; Dr. John I. Durham, professor of Hebrew and Old Testament at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary; and Dr. D. Moody Smith, professor of New Testament Interpretation at Duke Divinity School.

Find something to laugh about

Chaplain Will Ghere

A very discouraged young soldier recently came to visit me to ask for counsel and guidance. He poured out his life to me and expressed utter failure in all that he tried to do.

I tried to encourage him by saying that his faith could help him turn failure into success and happiness. He interrupted me, saying, "Oh! Chaplain, I know you are good and happy, but you are paid to do good and be happy." Then, as an afterthought he said, "I guess the rest of us soldiers have to be good and happy for nothing."

Proverbs 17:22 says, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine: but a broken spirit drieth the bones." A young child tried to recall the first part of this verse had quoted, "A happy heart does good like a baby aspirin." Not a bad translation, is it? A happy heart takes a conscious effort to keep it happy. All too often we go through life full of sorrow and pity and anger; not realizing that we could be going the same path with a more happy and joyful attitude.

A dictionary describes laughter as: "a bodily posture showing a mental state, emotion, or mood." Thus, laughter could be considered more of an attitude than an audible, physical expression. What does your attitude portray about you?

The subject of laughter arouses many responses. Some will say, "I don't think it is right just to laugh everything away." This response may be born out of a fear that many people have of being frivolous or too lighthearted. Others remark, "I think people who laugh a lot are just plain silly."

This impression may be a correct one for some people, but it does not justify the counsel of those who would instruct us to go about our daily tasks continually with a sober countenance. Someone else might say, "But their laugh is so hollow sounding that it really irritates me!" A statement like that may be altogether true about some laughter, but what about the pure, healthy laughter that can be available to all of us?

Once upon a time there was an elderly couple who had spent their married days in argument, dissension and strained silence. One evening during one of the silent periods, they were sitting on the front porch when they saw a team of oxen pulling a wagon. The wife remarked, "See how that team of oxen gets along so well pulling that load together? Why can't we do that?" Her husband answered, "I guess we could, too, if we only had one tongue between us."

IT ISN'T LUCK THAT GETS YOU PROMOTED IN COMBAT ARMS.

To be a forward observer on a TACFIRE team, you need the cool of a superbowl quarterback. There's no room for luck. That's the way it is in the combat arms these days.

To even make the team requires intelligence, physical agility and something your football coach referred to as desire. So not everybody makes the team.

Which means, for the people who do, there are plenty of openings and ample opportunity for rapid advancement. If you already serve in the combat arms, you know this.

If you haven't had a combat arms assignment yet and think you have what it takes, you couldn't pick a better time to go for it. See your reenlistment NCO today.

School Brigade cuts guard force, saves post $1.7 million

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The School Brigade cut down on its guard force and saved Fort Benning over $1.7 million in SPIRIT dollars.

First lieutenant Debra Graham, S-2 of TSB, said, "In April 1983 when I came here, we had 58 guards, which was just too many. We couldn't support them properly and it was crowded in the guardhouse."

The guard force's mission had changed and personnel requirements had not kept in line with the changes in security needs. Many buildings had installed intrusion detection systems, which eliminated the need for a man on guard all the time.

"We took each guard post separately and looked to see if we really needed it," said SFC Ernest Potts, NCOIC of the guardhouse,"and if the job could be done without the slot."

The reduction in force was done over a period of eight months, through attrition and changes in work assignments.

Security needs could be adequately met if the buildings with alarms just locked up tight and turned on the alarms, Graham explained.

High risk security areas have alarms that are hooked up to a master board at the MP station, which automatically alerts MPs of any security breach. So reducing the number of guards did not reduce security of the guarded area.

"We were just changing our duties as the circumstances changed," said Potts.

They had no thought of any savings by the reduction in guard forces, said Graham, but after reading about the SPIRIT program in the Bayonet, they decided to submit it as a SPIRIT savings idea.

Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator,said "This is an excellent example of how looking at mission requirements, and keeping up with the changes in these, w result in significant savings fo the post."

"We took ea guard post separat and looked to see if w really needed it, and the job could be don without the slot."

Laughter

This story brings home a point. Yet, the opposite is also true. As we sit at home around our table for supper, it is very interesting to see how quickly laughter can catch on and spread through the whole family. There may be some tense moments at the table with Dad and Mom and five kids, but then all of a sudden someone starts laughing. Sooner or later (mostly sooner) all of us end up laughing with one another.

You can laugh again if you want to. I recall that as a small boy my friends and I would play a game called, "Let's get tickled." We would begin to laugh even though there was nothing to laugh about, and we would begin slowly with first one chuckling and then the other, gradually working up until we were all filled with laughter. It was so enjoyable that we did it quite often!

As you approach the coming week, search out opportunities and people who can assist you in learning to laugh and be joyful once again. (I mean a real laugh!)

The story is told about a young minister who was sent to fill the pulpit of a vacationing pastor. As he drove up to the church he saw that one of the window panes had been broken out and a piece of cardboard was placed there to keep out the weather. He said to himself, "I guess I'm like the cardboard, just placed here temporarily to keep out the weather."

In the course of the sermon, he referred to himself as that piece of cardbord. One of the parishoners, thinking to compliment the young man, said on the way out, "You are not like that piece of cardboard, young man, you are a real pane!"

Don't just have a fake sense of laughter; find something to honestly laugh at, and enjoy it fully. Philippians 4:4 says, "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, rejoice." Try it, you'll like it!

Artillery corps celebrates their 209th anniversary

Fort Monroe, Va. — November 17 marks the 209th birthday of the artillery corps.

The history of American artillery spans the gap between the muzzle-loading field piece firing cannon balls and the guided missile with atomic warheads.

Artillery in the U.S. Army was a single combat arm until early in the twentieth century. Field guns, siege cannon, mortars, and fixed coastal defenses were all classified as artillery.

The Revolutionary War period saw the use of American artillery that was patterned closely after the British organization, and it contained a great deal of British equipment. After the Americans took over Fort Ticonderoga in 1775, Col. Henry Knox ordered 55 captured guns hauled overland from the fort to Boston. This move had a decisive effect on operations around Boston and perhaps on the outcome of the war. By 1777, the colonies had four artillery regiments in service, each with 8 to 12 companies.

Regiments were initially named after their colonels, but in 1779 they were given numbers, 1st through 4th. By June of 1784, the Army's artillery strength was reduced to one battery and it was stationed at West Point. From this single unit came all of our subsequent artillery.

By 1786, the artillery had been enlarged to a battalion of four companies. In 1792, the Army was reorganized as the Legion of the United States, which consisted of 5,000 men formed into four sublegions, each a complete army in miniature, having two battalions of infantry, one battalion of rifles, one troop of dragoons, and one company of artillery.

In 1794 Congress established a Corps of Artillerists and Engineers. One of the corp's missions was the development of an orderly scheme of seacoast fortifications. A provision was made for appointment of cadets in the corps for instruction as officers — the forerunner of the United States Military Academy. The Artillery and Engineers became separate corps in 1802.

An Army reduction in 1802 allowed only one regiment of artillery, but by 1812 that number had increased to four.

The 5th artillery regiment was added in the Civil War, while the 6th and 7th regiments were added in 1898.

In a Congressional reorganization of the Army in 1901, a new Corps of Artillery was created in which coast artillery and field artillery were partially separated. At that time there were 30 batteries of field artillery ad 120 companies of coast artillery, identified by numbers.

The air defense artillery was formed on Oct. 10, 1917 as part of the Artillery Corps. In the mid-1960s, this corps was split into the field artillery and defense artillery.

Today's field artillery has two principal missions in combat. First, it supports the other arms by fire, neutralizing or destroying targets. Second, it gives depth to combat and isolates the battlefield by counterfire, by fire on hostile reserves, by restricting movement in the rear areas, and by disrupting hostile command facilities and other installations. These missions are accomplished by mortars, conventional cannon, free rockets, and guided missiles. (TNS)

Preparatory school prepares soldiers for West Point

Fort Monmouth, N.J. — Each year, 170 of the Regular Army's best young soldiers are given the chance of a lifetime.

These soldiers are selected to attend the United States Military Academy Preparatory School (USMAPS), and given a chance to continue on to the United States Military Academy (USMA) at West Point.

USMAPS prepares Regular Army soldiers for the demanding academic load carried by the cadets at West Point.

Training its own enlisted people to be West Point Cadets and future Army officers gives the Army a pool of experienced soldiers as leaders.

Any young soldier who possesses the required motivation, drive and ability, has the opportunity to compete for attendance at USMAPS and a possible appointment to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Every August, men and women of the Regular Army and Reserve Components enter USMAPS for the 10-month academic, athletic and military training program.

English and math are stressed as well as physical conditioning. Experience has shown that the most outstanding soldiers are both physically fit and competitively inclined, according to school officials.

Cadet candidates are required to take part in either intramurals or varsity sports as part of their USMAPS training.

Teams participate with local colleges, community colleges and prep schools in most major intercollegiate sports.

Cadet candidate clubs are also available for those interested in singing, skiing, fishing and more.

Applications for USMAPS are now being accepted for the Class of 1985-86 which will begin in August 1985.

The application deadline for this year's class is April 1, 1985. Interested individuals should apply as soon as possible because admission is highly competitive.

To be eligible for USMAPS, a soldier must be of high moral character, must demonstrate leadership potential, be motivated toward a Regular Army officer's career and be in excellent physical condition.

Applicants should be highly recommended by their commanders. All recommendations from the chain of command are closely reviewed to determine the applicant's maturity, motivation, and desire.

> "USMAPS prepares Regular Army soldiers for the demanding academic load carried by the cadets at West Point."

Soldiers who have strong leadership potential but weaker academic backgrounds should not be discouraged from applying because many factors are considered.

Acceptance at USMAPS is not a sure ticket to West Point, but it certainly helps soldiers improve their qualifications in the tough competition for cadetship.

The basic requirements are simple. An applicant must be:

- A citizen of the United States or able to become one before entering the Military Academy.

• See USMAPS, page 37

Disabled veterans to see increase in benefits Jan. 1

A 3.2 percent increase in Veterans Administration compensation checks to service disabled veterans and dependents beginning in January is one of numerous improvements in veterans benefits announced recently by VA Administrator Harry N. Walters.

The increase in disability compensation and other benefits is the result of the Veterans' Benefits Improvements Act of 1984 signed into law by President Reagan.

The rate boost means an increase from $1,255 to $1,295 per month for a veteran with a disability rated at 100 percent. Veterans with a 50 percent disability will receive $376 a month, up from $364, and those with 10 percent ratings will get $66 a month, up from $64.

The legislation also increases to $349 the annual allowance made to certain veterans whose artificial limbs or wheelchairs cause wear on their clothing.

In addition, the bill provides the same percentage increase in dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) rates for surviving spouses and children of veterans who died in service or of service-connected causes.

Walters pointed out that a significant feature of the bill is the establishment of a trial program to run from Feb. 1, 1985 through Jan. 31, 1989. During this four-year period, the VA will test whether vocational rehabilitation training and other techniques can be useful in expanding the employment prospects of certain disabled veterans considered to be unemployable.

Other provisions of the bill include:

- A 10 percent increase in Vietnam Era GI Bill benefits, survivors' educational assistance benefits, and vocational rehabilitation subsistence allowances, effective Oct. 1, 1984;
- A two-year extension of the Veterans Readjustment Appointment Program which provides federal employment advantages to certain Vietnam Era and disabled veterans;
- An extension of the participation deadlines and funding authority under the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act;
- An increase in the maximum specially-adapted housing assistance grant from $32,500 to $35,500; and
- An increase in the maximum amount of the automobile assistance grant from $4,400 to $5,000.

Full details of all changes in the compensation rates and information on eligibility requirements are available by contacting the nearest VA regional office.

Lieutenants learn to properly use, care for tracked vehicles

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

They're limited to 100 square miles of woods, hills, creeks and sand within the Fort Benning boundaries. However, for the 220 second Lieutenants participating in the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC), that's 100 square miles of possible disaster for the tracked vehicles supplied by A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.

Prior to the exercise, the officers received only seven days of hands-on training. This exercise posed the first real opportunity to work with, and learn, the limitations of their tracks; a process which can be very damaging to the vehicles.

"They have to keep at least 20 of the 22 tracks we supplied them operational at all times to complete the training," explained 1st Lt. David Rurup, executive officer for Company A, 1-29th. "However," he continued, "they're inexperienced. They don't realize what kind of damage the terrain can cause. Anything on the exterior can be damaged. Headlights, MILES equipment, and antennas are especially vulnerable."

The training required of the officers was a seven-day mechanized field exercise. Broken down into crews of ten, the officers were supplied with tracks to use and maintain.

Maintenance problems that basic PMCS (Preventive Maintenance Checks and Services) couldn't handle were referred back to Company A's maintenance team, supplied along with the tracks.

"Alpha Company's mission is to provide vehicles and personnel support to the Infantry School.

"They have to keep at least 20 of the 22 tracks we supplied them operational at all times to complete the training."

The most challenging aspect of the school support is the IOBC 7-day FTX," remarked Rurup.

A vast majority of the support provided to the IOBC comes from maintenance. For the most part, the officers are too inexperienced and unfamiliar with track vehicles to perform any but the most basic repairs. Mainly, they depend on the expertise of the company mechanics and line platoon personnel whenever something goes wrong.

"We receive about 15 to 20 calls a day that we have to respond to. They'll call us in the middle of the night and tell us that the vehicle won't start. We might have to travel 16 miles or so through the dark to find them," explained Rurup.

Alpha Company soldiers go to the field about every three weeks with IOBC students. An FTX is very hard on tracks. So, much of their garrison time is spent repairing and maintaining the vehicles for the next exercise.

"The maintenance team does an outstanding job. However, it can be kind of thankless. A lot of the students feel that since we're providing support for them, we're here to keep the equipment running and operational. We have to keep it up," said Rurup. "They can't do their mission if we don't do ours."

Army wages war on dirty laundry

The Army can launder your clothes without cleaning out your wallet when you participate in the Laundry Payroll Deduction Program.

For just $8 a month the Army will launder and press as many as 100 pieces of military and civilian clothing. Best of all, the payroll deduction program is open to all soldiers, whether living on or off post.

To enroll, just go to your company and ask to fill out a laundry payroll deduction slip (DA Form 3799). There are four copies of the form; one goes to the Finance and Accounting Office, one is sent to the laundry, one stays in the company and you get one. The $8 charge will be automatically deducted from your pay beginning the first of next month.

As soon as the laundry gets a copy, you get free laundry service for the rest of the month. Laundry turn in and pick up is normally scheduled once a week. Check with your company to find out when and where.

You can submit one bundle of clothes per week, each containing up to 25 garments. Clothes must be machine washable, such as shirts, trousers, underwear, blue jeans, and BDUs. Dry cleaning is not included in the program. Linens ae not allowed. Neither is submitting other people's clothing in your bundle. The laundry bag is cleaned free.

The service is also fast. Laundry is normally returned within three working days. You can request hanger service for appropriate items. Better yet, laundry personnel will replace missing buttons and repair broken zippers damaged by laundering at no extra charge. (ARNEWS)

Using banks has many advantages for soldiers

By Karen L. Eure
Command Information, TRADOC

While many people feel that "the best things in life are free," and others feel that, "money makes the world go round," almost everyone will agree that money doesn't grow on trees.

But, what about in banks?

Banking basics

Banks offer three basic services: checking accounts, savings accounts and credit loans. Find out which bank offers the services you need. If you work late hours, for example, you may want a bank that stays open late or has a 24-hour teller machine. Another consideration is the number and locations of branch offices.

Some banks offer high interest rates on savings. Some require surcharges if money in the accounts drops below a certain amount. Others may charge the account holder a small fee when the number of withdrawals exceeds the bank's monthly allowances.

"Unbanked" individuals sometimes prefer federally insured banks, so they won't lose the money in their accounts if they happen to belong to uninsured institutions that go bankrupt. Other services the banks may offer include credit cards, individual retirement accounts or accounts to set aside money to further your education or that of your children.

Savings and loans

Savings and loans institutions strike a middle ground between banks and credit unions. Some are mutual organizations in which the customers and the savings and loans board "own" the institution, while others are stock held organizations. With stockholders, the branches are able to do more — expand into new territories and offer more services.

The primary purpose of savings and loans is to lend money for home mortgages. Deregulation has allowed savings and loans to change from institutions that strictly cater to commercial and business loans to institutions that compete for consumer loans.

Savings and loans institutions do offer checking and saving services. Like banks, the customers write checks instead of drafts. For servicemembers interested in borrowing money to buy a house, car, boat or any other recreational vehicle, savings and loans institutions offer benefits without high interest rates.

Credit unions

An alternative to the bank is the credit union. Credit unions are non-profit organizations that provide loans, encourage savings and give financial advice. They differ from banks in that members "own" the credit union. Instead of checks, they issue share drafts that work like checks. The money credit unions lend is members' interest and savings.

Shop around for the best place for your money. The wrong choice could mean having to change banks later. This could result in a delay in receiving your paycheck.

If check doesn't come

Losing your paycheck can be a disconcerting experience. Each post's finance and accounting office has policies to handle this problem.

At Fort Monroe, Va., for example, the finance and accounting office is a "non-integrated office;" it does not issue paychecks. So the procedure to get paid when the check is lost is relatively simple:

If the service member has a "check to unit" or "check to home address" option, he must wait three mailing days to make sure the check is in fact lost, and not merely held up in the mail. Then the service member signs a "stop payment" form, DA Form 30-37. This form is a promise that if the finance and accounting office gives him money to replace his check, he will not attempt to cash the check if he finds it later. Once that agreement is signed, the finance and accounting office gives the service member a casual pay voucher.

'Sure pay'

A "check to bank" option may become mandatory for soldiers. "Sure Pay," now voluntary, ensures that a soldier's pay is deposited automatically in his account.

"Sure Pay" is an electronic transmittal system which produces a tape of the service members' names and paycheck amounts. The Army does not actually send soldiers' checks to the banks; it sends the tapes. When the tape arrives, soldiers' pay goes automatically into their accounts. Most banks have agreements with the government to cover checks that servicemembers may write against their accounts if the tape arrives late. If servicemembers encounter problems or delays in their money being credited to their accounts, they usually arise from changes on their allotments or pay vouchers.

This usually happens because servicemembers change banks and miss the deadline for getting their account information to their finance and accounting officer.

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Does the VA provide a monetary allowance toward the purchase of a commercially sold headstone or marker for a veteran's grave?

A — For eligible veterans, buried on or after Oct. 18, 1978, the VA is authorized to pay an amount not to exceed the average actual cost of a Government headstone or marker. The current rate is $70.

Q — What type of income should I report on my annual income questionnaire to determine eligibility for pension benefits?

A — All income from all sources must be reported. The VA will determine what sources and amounts will be counted and the amount of income to be excluded.

Q — I receive a pension from the VA. When will I receive my annual income questionnaire?

A — Questionnaires are sent out every year on Nov. 1. Your income should be reported as soon after that as possible to prevent any delay in future payments. However, any time there is an income change, it should be reported immediately so that adjustments may be made accordingly. (VA)

Careful reading of LES will tell you right where your money is

You probably know, off the top of your head, how much money you take home each payday. It's the same amount that appears in block 13 of your Leave and Earnings Statement (LES). But do you know where the rest of your money is?

It's explained in blocks 7 and 8 of your LES.

Block 7, Allotment Collections, shows amounts you have asked Finance to take out of your pay. It can include money to help take care of your dependents, savings bonds, mortgage and life insurance payments, deposits to your checking or savings accounts, and Army Emergency Relief contributions.

Allotment Collections cannot include such things as car payments, furniture payments, or investments in stock or real estate. Beware of merchants who try to get you to make installment payments by allotment.

Block 8, Other Collections, includes mandatory deductions such as federal and state income taxes, Social Security, and U.S. Soldiers and Airmen's Home. It also includes voluntary deductions such as premiums for Servicemen's Group Life Insurance.

If there are adjustments to your pay such as advanced or casual pay collections, previous overpayments or statement-of-charges collections, these will also appear in block 8.

Your LES contains a lot of important information. If there's a term you don't understand, check the back of the LES. It may be explained there. If not, check with your commander or first sergeant for an explanation.

You play an important part in knowing were your money is. When you start an allotment, get promoted, or change your number of dependents, your pay information changes. It's important that you submit the necesssary documents and be sure they are filled out properly.

Pay changes take time. The rule of thumb is the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center (USAFAC) must have your pay change request by the middle of the month to reflect your end of month paycheck.

It's also a good idea to keep a record of all documents you receive or turn in concerning your pay. This includes paper work for allotments, pay options, promotion orders, pay inquiry forms and travel vouchers. You may need them if a question arises concerning your pay.

A word of warning: Be as careful to report an overpayment as you would an underpayment. The Army's Criminal Investigation Command investigates overpayments. And the government will collect debts owed whether you're in or out of service, even if court action is necessary. Besides, it saves you and the government time and money.

The next time you look at your LES, check blocks 7 and 8 as well as block 13. A careful reading of your LES will tell you exactly where your money is.

It's time to stock up on provisions for the upcoming holiday season

Fort Lee, Va. — It's time again to stock up on enough provisions to survive the holiday season.

When visiting neighbors and relatives show up on the doorstep, remember, the Fort Benning commissary is ready to provide you with the best quality food at the lowest prices to assist you in entertaining them.

Commissary shelves and freezers will be filled with an abundance of sweets, appetizers, main course tie-ins and desserts for Thanksgiving and Christmas. A wide range of holiday items will be on sale like candy canes for decorating trees or to use as stocking stuffers; boxed candy dressed in bright, holiday sleeves and containers; and a giant selection of Christmas cookie baking ingredients, including a number of colored sugar sprinkles and spices.

From Thanksgiving Day until the first of the year is a peak festive period. Commissaries will offer a complete line of dips, cheeses, crackers, snacks, condiments and soft drinks.

Turkeys, geese, ducks and rock cornish game hens will also be in good supply, along with your favorite stuffing ingredients. Commissary officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency say they expect the cost of turkey to increase over the last year.

For those who'd like something different, how about some standing ribs of beef or ham? If you'd like a special holiday butt of meat, leave your order so the commissary can prepare it to your satisfaction. Special orders should be placed at least 48 to 72 hours in advance to assure product availability.

Promotional sales will take place throughout the commissary. Customers should look for point-of-sale material identifying goods with emphasis placed on cost comparison and total savings.

Don't be caught with the cupboards bare. Visit your commissary. Both your guests and your pocketbook will be glad you did.

197th soldiers prepare for REFORGER 85'

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

In Germany, low temperatures and falling snow have replaced the warmth of summer. So soldiers going to winter REFORGER '85, must be prepared.

"REFORGER will involve a lot of long distance road marches and long hours of driving without rest," said SSgt. William Drumwright, a squad leader with 2nd platoon, A Company, 3-7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.

The exercise started out with the battalion simulating port arrival. The assembly area was the 3-7th motor pool. Port arrival. was followed by a series of road marches (convoys) which covered a distance to what the unit could expect while on REFORGER.

The road marches lasted several days and involved long treks along I-85, tank trails,and an area just south of Eufaula, Ala.

"The biggest benefit from this exercise was the long hours spent driving," explained Drumwright. Adding, "at REFORGER, we'll always be on the move. Most of the time, we won't even be told our objective. In the brigade, we're given set objectives. Once they've been reached, the drivers are given time to rest. While in Germany, they won't get that luxury."

By the third day of training, the battalion had advanced to movement-to-contact exercises.

Playing the OPFOR (opposing force) was A Company. Company A was broken down into platoons, and then assumed both offensive and defensive tactical positions against the remainder of the battalion.

"The exercise enabled us to discover our weaknesses, especially in defense," said SFC Willie G. Watt, platoon sergeant. Continuing, "this gives us time to work out any problems battalion wide before actually deploying on REFORGER."

"The exercise has helped," finished Drumwright. "The majority of my people have never been on a REFORGER before. Add the cold weather and snow, and they now have an idea of what to expect."

VA compiled statistical portrait shows many facts about our nation's veterans

The Veterans Administration has compiled a statistical portrait of the veteran population as reflected in the 1980 U.S. Census.

The VA report includes major groupings according to veteran-civilian status, marital status, educational attainment, employment and income. Each grouping details the number of veterans by age, sex and period of service, and if black or Hispanic (Spanish origin).

As one in a series of statistical profiles issued since the 1980 Census figures were available, the report utilizes data available for the first time on the socioeconomic characteristics of female veterans.

Population

- There were 28.5 million veterans of both sexes in 1980. They accounted for one person in six (16.9 percent) in the civilian population 16 years or older.
- For each year of age from 45 through 63, male veterans outnumbered their nonveteran counterparts with the ratio peaking at almost three to one among males 58 years old.
- There were 1.1 million women veterans representing about 3.9 percent of the overall veteran population. Only about 1.2 percent of the civilian female population were veterans.
- Black veterans numbered nealy 2.2 million, or 7.7 percent of all veterans. One black civilian in eight was a veteran.
- Veterans of Spanish origin totaled 888,100 or 3.1 percent of all veterans. Among civilians of Spanish origin, 9.3 percent were veterans.

Wartime service

- Over four veterans in five (24 million) served during wartime. Of these, just under 12 million served in World War II, 4.3 million in the Korean conflict only, and 7.4 million in the Vietnam era only. Approximately 491,000 of the veterans served in World War I.

Marital status

- About four of five veterans (78.7 percent) were married, 8.9 percent were never married, 7.3 percent were divorced, 3.0 percent were widowed, and 2.2 percent were separated.
- Male veterans were more likely than females to be married (79.5 percent vs. 58.6 percent), and whites and other races were more likely to be married than blacks (80.2 percent vs. 60.0 percent).

Education

- Some 10.6 million veterans (37.2 percent) had at least some college, with 29.4 percent of black veterans and 33.1 percent of those of Spanish origin in this category.
- Slightly less than one in five veterans (18.6 percent) had attended college for four or more years, and nearly one-half of these went on to post-graduate study.
- Another 10.4 million veterans (36.4 percent) graduated only from high school and 26.4 percent had less than 12 years education.

Employment/ income

- Four male veterans in five (80.9 percent) were in the labor force, with the corresponding share among women veterans 53.6 percent.
- About 22.8 percent of the veterans earned $25,000 or more in 1979. One-half earned $10,000 to $25,000 and 27 percent earned less than $10,000.
- The median income of those reporting financial activity was $16,700, with a large difference ($17,000 vs. $7,200) between male and female veterans, paralleling society as a whole.
- The median income for black veterans was $11,100 and that for veterans of Spanish origin was $13,600.

Single copies of the report entitled "Veterans in the United States: A Statistical Portrait from the 1980 Census" are available from the Statistical Policy and Research Service, Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C. 20420. (VA)

McNally sets record at pistol competition

John McNally of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit set a new national record at an international pistol competition held last weekend at San Diego, Calif., from Nov. 3-4.

McNally scored a total of 598 out of 600 possible points in the 25-meter rapid fire pistol event to break the old mark of 597.

The rapid fire pistol match is fired in all major level international shooting competition including the Olympic Games and World Shooting Championships. McNally was a member of this year's U.S. Olympic Shooting Team and competed in the rapid fire event at the Los Angeles Olympic Games.

In other competition, Jimmy McCoy won the standard pistol event scoring 581, while teammate Rojelio Arredondo dominated the centerfire pistol competition with a total of 593.

The U.S. Army "Blue" team won all five team events over the U.S. Army Reserve. Team members included McNally, McCoy, Arredondo, Waymond Alvis, Gary Marsh, Wesley Vaughn and Gary Cumbie.

USAMU's Max Barrington won this year's Riverbend Conventional Pistol Championship held over the same weekend at Norcross, Ga.

Barrington posted a grand aggregate of 2,648 out of 2,700 to finish five points ahead of the 1983 National Pistol Champion, Roger Willis.

In team competition, the U.S. Army squad won four of the five team events over the USMC. Team members included Barrington, Willis, Laguana, Joe Steed, Robert Warner and James Leffler. Alfredo Rodriguez served as team coach. (USAMU)

Deena Wigger named Spencer's homecoming queen

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Deena Wigger was named Spencer High School's Miss Greenwave for 1984 during halftime activities at last Friday's homecoming contest between Spencer and Columbus.

She is the daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Lones Wigger of Fort Benning.

Deena is in the People's Republic of China with the U.S. National Shooting Team participating in a rifle competition, as part of a cultural exchange with the Chinese. Mrs. Mary Kay Wigger, Deena's mother, attended the ceremony on her behalf.

Deena is president of the school's Math Club, a member of the National Honor Society and participated on the state champion Spencer rifle team. Among some of her many accomplishments in rifle competition include winning a gold medal in the 1983 Pan-American Games and capturing this year's National Smallbore 3-Position Championship. She also finished 4th overall in this year's Olympic trials and has been the Georgia State Rifle Champion for the past three years.

In her spare time Deena enjoys shooting, swimming and dancing. After high school she plans to go to college and major in business.

First runner-up honors went to Ann Parish, daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. James Parish. Ann is president of the National Honor Society, captain of the varsity cheerleading squad, and a member of the tennis team. She is also editor of the Spehisco the school newspaper.

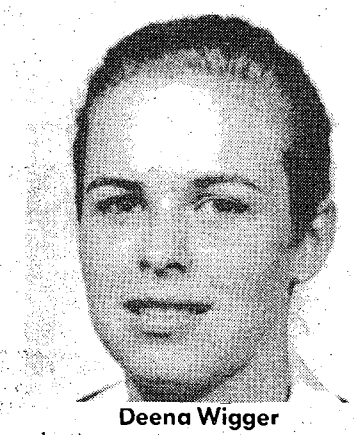
Robin Worth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robin Worth, was named second runner-up. Robin has been a member of the marching and jazz bands for the past three years, and also played on the tennis team.

Kim Johnson, grand-daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.H. Johnson, was crowned Miss Senior. Kim has been a cheerleader for the past four years and is president of the advanced chorus. She is also a member of the Georgia All-State Chorus and is secretary of the National Honor Society.

In her spare time Kim enjoys singing and playing the piano. Her plans include attending college to pursue a music major.

Named Miss Junior on Friday was Ivy Rose Aguon. Her parents are SFC and Mrs. Jose Aguon of Fort Benning. Ivy Rose is class president and is a member of the Math Club and the National Honor Society. She also serves as the asst. co-editor of the Spehisco.

Andrea Alverez, daughter of MSgt. and Mrs. Alfred Alverez, was named Miss Sophomore 1984. Andrea is the secretary of BRADCO, a junior achievement company. She also participates in softball and debate, and likes swimming, dancing, bowling and skating.



Deena Wigger

Being named Miss Freshman to represent the class of 1988 was Candi Gaither, daughter of SGM (ret.) and Mrs. James Gaither. Candi is involved in the Jr. ROTC program.

Turnovers dim Spencer's homecoming spirit

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Turnovers and penalties put an end to any hopes Spencer High had of having a victorious homecoming Friday night, as the Greenwave dropped a hard-fought 16-10 decision to the Blue Devils from Columbus High.

Spirits were high early as the Greenwave received the opening kickoff and proceeded to march 74 yards in 10 plays to score their lone touchdown of the evening. Junior tailback Joe McKay capped off the scoring march by blasting his way into the end zone from one yard out. Jeff Graef was perfect on the extra point and Spencer had themselves a 7-0 lead.

Neither team could muster any more points until Columbus' Frank Thomas connected on a 23-yard field goal on the second play of the second quarter to cut the Greenwave margin to 7-3.

A fumbled punt by Spencer gave Columbus the ball deep in enemy territory. Faced with a 4th-and-inches situation from the Greenwave 7, Columbus went for the first down and got it. However, two plays later Spencer linebacker Ty[illegible] Mims pounced on a Blue Devil fumble on the 3-yard line with 52 seconds left in the half to protect the Greenwave's four point cushion.

Whatever Columbus coach Bob Nellums did to inspire and motivate his squad in the locker room during halftime was definitely effective. His Blue Devils came out for the second half and thanks to the running of Tobin King marched in for the go-ahead touchdown on the opening drive. King scampered into the end zone from the Columbus 5 to end the drive with 7:20 still unplayed in the third stanza. For the game, King had 156 yards rushing on 28 carries.

But Spencer fought back and nearly forged ahead in the game after the ensuing kickoff. Sophomore fullback David Harrison carried the ball on the first play from scrimmage and sprinted 46 yards before being dragged down on the Columbus 24. However, an interception of a Keith Gardner pass left Spencer with another blown opportunity to reclaim the lead.

But a stubborn Greenwave defense forced Columbus to punt from deep in their own territory. Spencer retook possession with good field position and marched all the way to the Columbus 1-yard line as the third quarter came to a close.

But a 5-yard penalty for offsides pushed the Greenwave back to the Columbus 7, and after being stopped on third down they had to settle for a Graef 22-yard field goal to deadlock the contest at 10-10 with 11:18 remaining.

A pass that was tipped not once, not twice but three times once again had Columbus within scoring range at the Spencer 33. A Columbus receiver finally caught the pass that went off the hands of two Greenwave defenders. The Blue Devils then took advantage of the fortunate break as Steve Hartley connected with kicker Brown in the end zone. The extra point attempt was blocked leaving Spencer a touchdown and conversion away from pulling off a homecoming upset with less than five minutes left in the game.

> "Whatever Columbus coach Bob Nellums did to inspire and motivate his squad in the locker room during halftime was definitely effective."

Spencer took over on their 20 and proceeded to go to work. They drove to midfield with less than two minutes left and on 4th-and-7 Gardner completed a pass to tight end Anthony Davis for the first down. But as Davis fought his way to the Columbus 35 he fumbled. Columbus recovered the miscue and went on to run the clock out for the victory.

Spencer, now 0-5 in the region, battles Baker in the last game of the season tomorrow night at Memorial Stadium.

Washington's first proclaimation said it best

By Paul Timm
Ledger/Enquirer military analyst

Thanksgiving is a special time for all members of the Armed Forces, but this is especially true for the Army family.

There is, perhaps, no other "family" in all the world as close as the family of soldiers and the family of soldiers' families.

Thanksgiving is a time when soldiers' families — "soldier" proudly encompasses all ranks, officer and enlisted — join one with the other to thank God for the graces received during years past and pray for continued blessings in the years to come.

All other holidays are quite private by comparison. Oh, there are the dutiful visits at Christmas and the New Year, the pomp and ceremony of the Fourth of July, the solemnity of Veterans Day, the fun and games on unit birthdays . . . but Thanksgiving is something special.

It is most appropriate that Fort Benning is celebrating National Family Week — a time that may possibly have derived its roots in the early days of the United States Army — this Thanksgiving week.

It is also appropriate that the first proclamation of Thanksgiving by a president was a proclamation not only by our first president, but by our first commander-in-chief of this nation's military forces before he was elected to that dual, but vital, role.

American soldiers from Grenada to the Sinai, from Honduras to Korea, from Puerto Rico to Alaska, the world over and around will, with hardly an exception, feast on turkey and cranberry sauce Thursday as they have done, as the Army has gone out of its way to ensure in decades past — in war and peace, in garrison and in the field. Yet the day is so much more than turkey and cranberry sauce. Reams have been written about Thanksgiving — reams of prose, reams of poetry, yet none, even today, seem as eloquent as Washington's first proclamation.

It is as valid today as it was 195 years ago. That proclamation is more than mere words strung on paper; it is more than the political rhetoric to which we have become accustomed; it is worth reading, remembering and digesting.

Sometime today, be it before or after thanksgiving, before or after the traditional feast, before,after or in between the football game, take five minutes to relive our history, to reread that proclamation, to rededicate yourself and your family (please read it to them) to the glorious institutions of the United States which we, as soldiers, are duty bound to protect against all enemies and to extoll among all nations.

Such a rededication on Thanksgiving will be in the true spirit of the United States Army in which each of us so proudly serve or has served.

In the words of Washington:

Whereas, it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits and humbly to implore His protection and favor, and:

Whereas, both Houses of Congress have by their joint committee, requested me "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness;"

Now therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be; that we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our service and humble thanks for His kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation; for his signal and manifold mercies and the favorable interpositions of His providence in the course and conclusion of the late war; for the great degree of tranquility, union and plenty which we have since enjoyed; for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and, in general, for all the great and various favors which He has been pleased to confer upon us.

Various voices

What will you and your family do to make Thanksgiving a special day?

Sp4 Jacqueline D. Berry, Hq. Co. 1st Bn, TSB- "Thanksgiving will be special for me and my family because this will be the first time in the last two years that we are going to spend Thanksgiving at our home, and not out visiting relatives."

Delphia W. Morris, civilian employee - "Thanksgiving is not just "one" day a year to celebrate, but everyday in a Thanks-g-i-v-i-n-g way. Be thankful for our jobs we hold and that we live in America, a country that is free."

Capt. Jerry M. Pennington, MEDDAC- "I'm having family come and visit me as opposed to me having a chance to visit them. We have a unique situation here where we each have a call schedule and we wound-up getting called for Thanksgiving. I'll be working here in the hospital during the holiday and my mom is going to be traveling and visiting the family. She is going to stop by on that holiday and see me."

Army pledges to support families

Army Family Week, Nov. 18-24, is a particularly meaningful event because it gives us an opportunity to pause and reflect on the contributions made by soldiers, civilians, retirees and their family members to our total Army family.

This week also allows us to rededicate our efforts to improving even more the sense of community with one another, our units, and our Army components.

During the past year, we have made excellent progress in reinforcing the strong partnership between the Army and its families, and in assuring adequate support to promote family well-being. But our work is not complete.

Our most important mission is to maintain the readiness of the Army, which depends on soldiers' morale and their families' strength. Therefore, the more we can make our soldiers and their families feel better about the Army, and the support provided by the Army, the better off will be the soldier, the Army, and the nation.

That is the challenge for each of us — to forge an even stronger bond of partnership between the Army and its families.

The Army pledges its continued commitment to support soldiers and their families, and relies on each of you to continue your support of this proud and ready Army.

Secretary of Defense's message

On Thanksgiving Day, 1984, Americans everywhere will give thanks, continuing a tradition set over three centuries ago by our pilgrim forebears.

We have good cause to be grateful. We life in a land blessed with opportunity and freedom. We enjoy these blessings because Americans have always been ready and willing to defend them. You, the men and women of our armed forces, are the bulwark of that resolve and strength, and you set an example for us all to follow.

Whether you serve at home or abroad, you contribute daily to the security and liberty of our nation, and to the aspirations of freedom-loving people around the world.

To those of you on duty this Thanksgiving season — separated from family and loved ones — we owe a very special word of thanks. I want you to know that your sacrifice is recognized and appreciated by thoughtful Americans everywhere.

To each of you, thank you for your devoted service. I join your fellow citizens in wishing you a happy Thanksgiving.

About the cover

This year we have much to be thankful for Thanksgiving Day is a uniquely American holiday designated by Presidential Proclamation as a time for all Americans to give thanks to Almighty God for the bountiful gifts of our heritage, our freedom and our way of life.

This year we have much for which to be thankful. We are a nation blessed with abundant resources, the chief of which are our citizens. You, the soldiers and families of the United States Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning, can take pride in your contributions, for you play a key role in preserving the freedom and security all Americans enjoy. Our nation is grateful to you.

Let us join together in the prayer that God will continue to bless us and grant us the strength, will, and determination that will insure peace and freedom throughout the coming year. To each of you I wish a Happy Thanksgiving.

And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions, to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our separate and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us), and to bless them with good governments, peace and concord; to promote the knowledge and practice of true religions and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us; and, generally, to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as He alone knows to be best.

'Cottonbalers' spouses, children get taste of Army life at family day

By Pat Quinley
Ledger/Enquirer staff writer

"Daddy, Daddy, I shot a M-16," said 9-year-old Christy Vessels breathlessly as the rat-a-tat-tat of firing artillery echoed over the range.

No, America isn't sending children to war. But you could have fooled the 150 children who took part in Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Family Day Saturday.

About 300 soldiers, spouses and children had a fun-filled day riding Army vehicles, testing artillery and tasting the MREs (Meals Ready to Eat), vaccum sealed packets of food that replaced C-rations. Those who didn't get their fill of MREs were treated to an "all you can eat" barbequed ribs dinner at the unit's mess hall.

The daughter of 1st Sgt. and Mrs. Jerry Vessels, Christy admitted she was a bit scared when it was her turn to fire an M-16 rifle. All activity on the range was carefully supervised and included safety lessons and instructions.

"I was going to fire one of the big ones (M-60 machine guns), but I chickened out," said Christy. "I've never shot anything before. But I just pretended I was Magnum P.I., and it was all right."

Christy said a day at Dad's work was "more fun than Six Flags."

For Jason Merritt, the 6-year-old son of Capt. and Mrs. Bill Merritt, the day was like a G.I.

Army cooks, bakers will be busy preparing for Thanksgiving meal

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Traditionally, Thanksgiving dinner is the largest meal of the year served at the 1,111 Army dining facilities around the globe.

Last year, 251,962 soldiers, family members and guests ate the Army's most popular meal in its dining facilities.

According to figures published by the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency at Fort Lee, Va., approximately 83 tons of roast turkey is expected to be served on Nov. 22.

Additionally, 20,630 pounds of shrimp will be prepared for shrimp cocktail along with 45,263 pounds of cranberries for cranberry sauce.

The bakers will be be busy,too. It is estimated that 35,071 pumpkin and an equal number of mincemeat pies will be baked for this annual feast. Also to be served will be 20,630 pounds of fruit cake, 12,378 pounds of mixed and shelled nuts and 16,504 pounds of candy.

Also included on holiday feast menus will be giblet gravy, bread dressing, mashed potatoes, brussel sprouts, carrots, salad and dressing, rolls and butter, assorted fresh fruits and a choice of beverages.

At some facilities the holiday menu may include rock cornish hen, roast duck, baked ham, steamship round of beef, grilled steak and a number of dessert and beverage alternatives.

According to Capt. Linda Rustin, chief of food service for Fort Benning's dining facilities, the post will be serving many of the items previously mentioned. Rustin also said the dining facilities will be creatively decorated to bring out the true spirit of the holiday.

She added that while some dining halls will have turkey and shrimp on the Turkey Day menu, others may not. Instead, cornish hens and steamship rounds of beef will be offered as the meal's main dish.

Holiday meals are planned about two years in advance with the menu distributed to food service personnel five to six months prior to Thanksgiving so they can offer menu items.

The estimated cost of this meal to the Army is $1,023,300.

Rustin added, "This year the dining facilities are going all out. Obviously this has always been one of the better meals of the year, especially pricewise. Everybody should go away fat and happy."

By order of the Secretary of Defense, family members will not have to pay the surcharge to eat their Thanksgiving dinner in an armed forces dining facility.

In a message sent to all services, Caspar W. Weinberger said, "I agree that the sharing of holiday meals is an important and effective way of showing our support to the members and their families."

Family members over the age of 12 will pay $2.10 for the dinner meal, while children under 12 will be charged $1.05.

Soldiers who do not possess an authorized dining facility meal card will also pay $2.10. Officers will be required to pay the surcharge.

Normally, family members aged 12 and up are required to pay a $3.15 surcharge fee in addition to the $2.10 basic cost for the dinner meal. Children under the age of 12 would add a $1.55 surcharge fee to the $1.05 dinner price. The surcharge is imposed, said Celia F. Adolphi, food management specialist in the Troop Support Division, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics, to offset operating expenses of dining facilities. Most of the surcharge collected remains at the installation.

197th Family Practice Center provides high quality care to soldiers, families

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers sat quietly. Either reading magazines or watching television, all were patiently waiting to see a doctor at the 197th Infantry Brigade's Family Practice Center.

The concept of the Family Practice Center (FPC) is to provide high quality, comprehensive continuous care to brigade soldiers and their family members.

The FPC was activated in August 1979. Before that it had been a Troop Medical Center (TMC). As a medical center, it provided health care for active duty personnel only. The patient population for the FPC is approximately 4,180 active duty personnel and 3,400 family members.

"The FPCs' two family practitioners handle 90 percent of the cases, referring only 10 percent or the cases to Martin Army Community Hospital," stated Maj. Dale A. Carroll, chief, Department of Family Practice. "We provide comprehensive primary care covering the whole spectrum of health care from newborns to vasectomies."

"The advantage FPC provides to the soldiers," continued Carroll, "is, it takes less time away from the soldiers' duty station. The soldiers can also concentrate more on their tasks because they have the peace of mind of knowing their family's health is taken care of."

Family physicians assigned to the FPC are intimately concerned with the 197th Infantry Brigade's mission, equipment, training requirements and unique occupational hazards.

"Right now, FPC has two family practitioners, one brigade surgeon, five brigade PAs (Warrant Officers), five medics, and four record technologists on OJT

Updated Family Action Plan includes new initiatives

By Carmen M. Finsiad
AR News

An updated edition of the Army Family Action Plan goes into printing this January. The new version will include initiatives based on issues raised by Major Army Command representatives in a planning conference scheduled for November.

The Army leadership uses the family action plan as a guide to resolving a wide range of family problems — including dental and medical care, housing, education, employment and child care. The issues often originate from local and regional seminars in which families have participated.

"Our goal is to keep the Family Action Plan dynamic," said Lt. Col. Milton T. Tankersley from the Army's Community and Family Policy Division. He said the Army plans to continue looking into family issues indefinitely. "I don't see an end to it," he said. "I see it (the action plan) staying here, just being refined each year."

Army families already have gained from the initiatives published in January. Among those are improved chances for continuous federal employment, better child care and education, and increased legal rights.

One issue — job security — has been a long-time problem for military spouses. Frequent moves and unwritten codes for behavior kept many women in volunteer work and limited their opportunities for career development.

Programs developed to lessen the job hunting burden include the Civilian Personnel offices crediting volunteer experience on job applications is available from Civilian Personnel offices. In addition, the Army has opened its overseas intern positions to family members who don't have civil service status. It also is giving priority job placement to family members moving within the United States as well as those returning from positions overseas.

Finding and keeping good jobs isn't the military spouses' only problem. Accomplishing routine, service-related family business also has been difficult because commanders required a power of attorney in the soldier's absence. Because the law requires no power of attorney, spouses picking up family mail no loger will need one.

Sponsorship and orientation programs for soldiers and their families also are being improved. The Army has re-written its regu-

Army leadership makes progress in solving family-related issues

The Army's leadership is making progress in resolving those issues outlined in the current Army Family Action Plan, according to officials in the Army's Community and Family Policy Division.

Published last January, the action plan outlines 65 issues regarding the relationship between the Army and its families.

The following list updates some of the major issues that have taken place:

- Spouses now can sign for quarters without a power of attorney. Field commanders have been informed and the controlling regulation is being updated.
- Army policy now requires that family members be invited to participate in design panels when they involve construction of family quarters.
- The Civilian Personnel Office will give credit for volunteer experience when it is included on the Standard Form 171.
- Intern positions outside the continental United States now are open to non-civil service status family members. The regulations are being updated.
- The Army is testing a priority placement program for placing family members in equivalent jobs after returning from a competitive position overseas. So far, the Army has placed more than 816 people. The test runs through this December.
- All lesson plans from the Primary Leadership Development Course through the Command and General Staff College will include instruction on the importance of providing for the Army family.
- Two instructional video tapes slated for completion this October will be available to orient new recruits and their families to the Army lifestyle.
- The Army now can use mailing lists for bulk mailing of official information to families.
- Since November 1983, the Student Travel Program has provided one-way or round-trip transportation to students visiting their parents overseas. Congress has provided additional money for this year, a funding deemed necessary because of the program's popularity.
- The Army is following a guideline for upgrading its child care facilities.
- A standardized job description has been completed for the staff of child care facilities. A training packet for the staff has been sent to the field.
- An Exceptional Family Member Program has been developed to consider a family's special needs when the soldier is eligible for reassignment.
- The Army has re-written its regulation on sponsorship to provide better training for sponsors and thus an easier transition for the reassigned soldier. Civilians also now will be provided with sponsors in some instances.
- Families no longer need a power of attorney to pick up mail from the soldier's duty station. No determination has been made on whether a power of attorney is needed to sign for household goods.
- The fiscal years 1986 through 1990 include money for family child care coordinators for "in home" child care service. Standard operating procedures for babysitting co-ops are being written. They are scheduled for completion by the first quarter of FY 85.
- A capstone regulation is being written so soldiers and their family can receive information and training on consumer and financial affairs.
- A family action plan general officer steering committee has been established and will meet for the second time this September.
- A handbook on family fitness is at the printers. (ARNews)

Quality health care key part of Army Family Plan

The Army Family Plan "envisions family members as true partners in an Army which is seen as a way of life, not a job. The Army's unique missions, concept of service and lifestyle of its members all effect the nature of this partnership.

"Towards the goal of building a strong partnership, the Army remains committed to assuring support to families to promote wellness, develop a sense of community and strengthen the mutually reinforcing bonds between the Army and its families."

Family practice is a primary care specialty which provides comprehensive care to service and family members at each echelon of the medical system. It can augment the capability of the surgical specialties through triage, stabilization and surgical assistants as well as pre- an postoperative care.

Family practitioners can be found at several levels of combat medical support including battalion aid stations, clearing stations, combat support hospitals and MASH units.

All present graduates of Army family practice training programs are graduates of the Comat Casualty Care Course (C4). At the C4 course, physicians receive training in Advanced Trauma Life Support, management of chemical casualties, medical evacuation procedures, and mass casualty triage exercises.

At Fort Benning, family practice residents are trained in other aspects of military medicine to include tropical diseases, preventive medicine, and environmental illnesses. The military oriented training, combined with the broad based training of the three year family practice residency makes family physicians ideal candidates for positions in combat medical support which require expertise at triage and stabilization of casualties.

The family physician's surgical training allows him to effectively assist the surgical specialties during operative procedures or assist in the pre- and postoperative care of surgical patients, thus freeing the surgeons to dedicate themselves to the critical area of the operating room.

Army family practice began with the implementation of the first Army family practice residency at Fort Benning in 1972. There are five Army family practice residencies located at Forts Belvoir, Bragg, and Ord; Madigan Army Medical Center and Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center.

At the present time, there are eight family practice residents in each of the three years of training as described above. The Family Practice Residency is the only residency training program located at Martin Army Community Hospital. First year residents spend one half-day per week in the Family Practice Clinic caring for their 25 assigned families.

Second year residents spend three half-days per week caring for their 75 assigned families, while third year residents spend four half-days per week providing care for their 125 assigned families. During the period of time that the residents are not caring for their own panels in the Family Practice Clinic, they are rotating on other specialty rotations assisting in patient care.

The Residency Training Program at Martin Army Community Hospital is required to meet the same levels of excellence for accreditation that are mandated for civilian family practice training programs. The Martin Army Community Hospital residency underwent an accreditation visit in March 1984, and was again fully accredited for training family practice residents. The teaching staff of the Department of Family Practice, in addition to providing care for the families on their own panels, provide clinical teaching and lectures to the residents. In addition to the training in the classical medical and surgical skills, the family practice staff provides training in the behavioral sciences for the residents.

This training includes interviewing skills, family assessment, family counseling and family dynamics. Visiting consultants are often provided for specialized areas of training such as sexual dysfunction and sexual counseling. The residents also receive training from the family practice staff in the areas of sports medicine and health promotion (wellness).

The primary training area for the family practice residents is the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Clinic. Patients enrolled on the panels of residents receive their care through the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Clinic. The patient panels are monitored closely to insure that the residents have adequate exposure to numerous disease processes and a diversity of ages and sexes.

In addition, the panels are monitored to insure the residents provide care to an adequate number of obstetric patients.

The Aviation Medicine Family Practice Clinic located at Lawson Army Air Field provides comprehensive, continuous care to aviation personnel and their dependents. Family practice flight surgeons are assigned to this clinic. Personnel eligible for care at the Aviation Medicine Family Practice Clinic need not enroll. They are automatically eligible for care due to their MOS or unit of assignment.

The 197th Family Practice Clinic located on Kelly Hill provides comprehensive, continuous care to the active duty personnel and the dependents of the 197th Infantry Brigade. This clinic is staffed by two board certified family physicians and five physician assistants. All personnel assigned to the 197th Infantry Brigade and their dependents should seek care through the 197th Family Practice Clinic. In addition, the records of 197th personnel and their dependents should be maintained at the 197th Family Practice Clinic records room.

Army family physicians are qualified to provide care for most health problems affecting the soldier, male or female, and their dependents of any age. They are trained to consider the patient and the problem in the context of the patient's environment...the family, the unit, the community.

Family physicians encourage "wellness," as well as treat illness. The family physician's emphasis on outpatient rather than inpatient care, and on prevention of disease, as well as treatment, has widespread implications in an Army which is placing increased emphasis on individual and family wellness and readiness.

Should it become necessary, Army family physicians are capable of providing quality medical support in the combat environment. This capability is based upon their training in the traditional medical and surgical fields, as well as in the military medicine areas of tropical and environmental diseases, preventive medicine, Advanced Trauma and Advanced Cardiac Life Support. (MEDDAC)

ACS provides many services for families

The theme of Army Community Service (ACS) is "Self-Help, Service and Stability." Service from ACS is based on the assumption that individuals will attempt to answer their questions or solve their problems by seeking information directly, and then ACS should be contacted if necessary.

The objectives of Fort Benning ACS are to establish a centrally located responsive service to provide information and assistance to military personnel in meeting personal and family problems beyond the scope of their own resources.

The main office of the Army Community Service is located on main post in building 229, on the corner of Ingersoll Street and Dixie Road. The main office is open from 8 a.m to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Generally, ACS will identify the problem, determine the appropriate action required and insure the indicated service is provided to resolve the problem.

ACS has a staff comprised of military, civil service and volunteer personnel. These staff elements provide the following services: Welcome Center, Household Lending Closet located at the Welcome Center, Army Emergency Relief, Consumer Advocacy Program, Special Children's Program, Food Stamp Information and Emergency Food Locker. (ACS)

Fort Benning school system makes learning fun for kids by using innovative techniques

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Schools do not have to be strict institutions where learning is done with no room for a less formal way of teaching. Here at Fort Benning the school system is employing activities that are innovative and a fun way to learn.

Recently, the Officers' Wives Club sponsored a Fine Arts Assembly for the schools. Several such assemblies will be given throughout the school year to introduce the classic music art form to the children.

At Edward A. White School, Mrs. Sophie Aubert, wife of Lt. Col. Patrick Aubert, French foreign liaison officer at Fort Benning, donates her time every Wednesday morning teaching French.

Mrs. Peggy Mahon's fifth graders get 20 minutes of conversational French a week as part of their efforts to learn more about fellow-student Thibaut Aubert's native land.

Also, at White School, just starting this December is a fitness club for over and underweight children. The club first started last year to fuse together proper nutrition and exercises to help children better understand what they are doing to their bodies.

On the lines of physical fitness, Faith Middle School sponsors a Faith Christmas Race yearly the first part of December and encourages young students to participate. This year, they are sponsoring a runner's clinic Nov. 27 to offer encouragement lation on sponsorship and has written a "how to" pamphlet for sponsors. The regulation expands the target population for sponsorship to include soldiers in all grades and civilians moving overseas. "Out Sponsors" also will be provided for soldiers leaving an installation.

The orientation program introduces new families to the Army lifestyle and its community. A program also has been tailored to families being stationed overseas.

Child care represents yet another area improved through the Family Action Plan. During the past year, the Army has upgraded its child care facilities to meet minimum fire, safety and health standards.

A budget request for fiscal years 1986 through 1990 includes money to construct facilities and hire family child care coordinators. The coordinators will also monitor the establishment of "in home" child care services. Job descriptions and training packets for care givers have been standardized, further improving the quality of care offered.

Many other on-going initiatives continue to receive the Army's attention.

DA pamphlet assists USAR/NG

Washington — With its newly published DA pamphlet 360-525 (Family Assistance Handbook for Mobilization), the Army addresses a key element in mobilization: the family members of reserve-component personnel.

The pamphlet explains mobilization stages and procedures. It contains information about family-member rights, privileges and responsibilities upon mobilization. Topics include estate planning, wills and other family records; the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act; compensation/entitlements; identification cards; and family assistance.

Printed on the basis of one copy for each Army National Guard member and Reservist, the pamphlet was sent to units initially in a limited number of copies. Additional quantities may be ordered by units from the Baltimore AG Publications Center.

Joe fantasy come true. Caught between riding an armoured personnel carrier and a tank, Jason paused long enough to say, "I like climbing this stuff. Now, I'm gonna go get on this tank."

It took three toddlers, one dressed in a camouflage outfit, to lift one machine gun (unloaded, of course) in the weapons room, where soldiers showed how the weapons are cleaned and stored.

"Daddy, can I have one of these from Santa Claus?" asked one little boy, perched atop his father's shoulders.

"Daddy's going to ask for one, too," said his father with a smile.

The 3rd Battalion is the most decorated of any Army unit and has served in more campaigns than any other infantry unit in the Army, according to a history of the unit. Begun in 1811, the group received the nickname "the Cottonbalers" in the War of 1812 because they successfully held their position against British forces from behind a breastwork of cottonbales.

"The Cottonbalers are a real proud group," said Lt. Bill Branley, executive officer of headquarters company for the unit.

"The men are always having to go to the field," he said. "A lot of the wives don't really know what they do all day . . ."

The unit spent five weeks out West this summer on a training mission and will be leaving in January for a six-week training program in Germany, said Capt. Robert Brown, commander of headquarters company. "We're gone from our families a lot as it is," said Brown. "We need to get together with our families and let them see what we do."

About half of the 600-person unit is single, said Branley. "They (the single soldiers) really want the kids to have a good time," he said. "It's those that have families that we want to take care of. When you first start out in the Army, you don't make much money, and things like this help make up for it."

Washington — Ever had a problem and didn't know were to go within the Army system to find help? You should know about the Army Family Life communication line.

The 3-year-old communication line operates as a 24-hour, toll-free telephone information and referral service for all members of the total Army and their families.

Communication-line counselors provide assistance in such areas as family issues, personnel matters, logistics and medical concerns.

The line, which services the Continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, provides direct communication between families and Pentagon-level Army officials.

The service is not set up to function as a crisis "hotline," according to counselor Roberta B. Parker.

"A lot of people seem to have a misconception about what the line is," said Parker. "We don't have all the answers . . . we can't do all the research, find all the answers . . . that's not what the line was designed to do."

Though the counselors will try to help all callers regardless of their request, Parker encourages callers first to seek information through their local command. The counselors will not try to explain or interfere with local command policies or directives.

In the United States, family members can reach the communication line by calling 1-800-336-5467 except in Virginia were the number is 1-800-572-5439. In Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, the number to call is 1-800-336-5480.

Staff members will answer calls from 8:30 a.m. till 4:30 p.m., Eastern time, Monday through Friday. Calls after hours, on the weekends and on holidays will be automatically recorded and answered the next working day.

Army families stationed overseas can receive a written response to questions by writing: Family Community Line, ATTN: DAAG-PSC, Hoffman I., Alex. Va., 22331.

"The communication line is here to help," Parker said, "and the call is free." (ARNEWS)

Jnintentional abuse hurts children, too

Brig. Gen. Johnie Forte Jr.

During a long military career, see all kinds of behavior, luding some that is tragically f destructive.

We get angry and frustrated ıen we see a few people waste eir lives and potential happi- ss through things like ex- ssive drinking, drug abuse and ckless driving.

But one thing that causes the ost anger is seeing people mis- eat or neglect small children, hether through deliberate ɔuse or simple thoughtless- ss.

Deliberate child abuse, of ɔurse, is both a criminal and ental health problem. It is eing given a great deal of atten- ɔn by both civilian and military ıthorities in the United States ıd overseas.

What I want to talk about here something much more com- ıon and more subtle. I want to ılk about the way good people — arents who love their children early — unintentionally jeopar- ize their youngsters' safety or ealth by ignoring inconvenient recautions or even through sim- le thoughtlessness.

There are many examples, but one that comes to mind is frequent failure to protect children in automobiles. I often see children riding "loose" even when seatbelts are available. Sometimes I see parents holding tiny infants on their laps in the front seat. It is obvious they love them.

Nevertheless, they unintentionally expose these children to great risks of death or serious injury from even a minor accident or sudden braking. Others leave their small children locked in cars, while some leave their children unsupervised in quarters.

It is against the law in many states to allow children to ride in automobiles without being properly restrained; in Germany, it is unlawful for children under 12-years-old to ride in the front seat. Such actions are so dangerous that all parents should forbid them, law or no law.

All very young children should be placed in properly secured child seats in the back seat. Young shildren are not mature enough to make safety choices themselves. Parents must take charge here, as in other areas. Parents should also not leave children unattended in cars or quarters. It is absolutely dangerous.

I urge you to avoid a tragedy by thinking about child safety constantly and adopting every possible safeguard. Everyone is a VIP — and that goes for our children, too.

> "Deliberate child abuse, of course, is both a criminal and mental health problem. It is being given a great deal of attention by both civilian and military authorities in the United States and overseas."

RANK COMES FASTER WHEN THE DUTY'S TOUGH.

If you want to get ahead in any organization, take on the tough job. Do it well and you'll be noticed, appreciated and promoted. It's that way in the Army, too.

The toughest duty offers you the best opportunities for advancement. In the combat arms, for instance, you'll find more openings because not everybody can make the team. The physical and mental requirements are tough because that's what it takes to be a leader.

So if you want to go for rank, go for the tough duty. In today's Army, the tough job is the smart job to have. See your reenlistment NCO today.

Impressions

Benning children share thoughts of Army life in writing, drawings

In pictures and words, children of the Fort Benning school system have described on these pages their thoughts and impressions as members of the Army family. It is fitting as we jointly celebrate Army Family Week and Thanksgiving that we consider the contributions our children make in our lives and in their role as our nation's most valuable resource. Their views of the world often reflect a heart warming innocence, but also reveal a fresh perspective adults so often overlook as we hurry through life.

The Bayonet sincerely thanks Fort Benning's children for sharing these original expressions with our community.

Dawn's views

The good things about an Army family are:

They usually get to see the way other people live, because the Army family gets to travel a lot. The Army family stays at one place for about two or three years, then they move. Living in a military post gives you a lot of recreational activities, without having to travel a long way to do these things.

We have our own shopping centers and food stores, which makes it easy for parents. We also have our own schools, where most students have something in common with one and another. I guess the biggest thing about being in a military family is having unity with others.

On the other hand, there are disadvantages to being in a military family. The most terrible of them all is, if a war broke out, my dad would have to go and I would probably see even less of him.

Dawn Scherbert
Loyd School

Kerrie's views

I think that the Army life is all right. The only part that really bothers me is the moving. I mean, it's pretty bad that in the last year I've been to five or six different schools and two different states! It's okay to see the world around you. Not many American families can say they've been to France, Germany and Spain, can they? Some have but not many.

Army families learn one thing — how to adjust. They have no choice. If you took a regular family where the dad worked as a carpet layer and moved them to Germany or Belgium all in one day, they would die. They've probably lived in the same place for all of their life. And if you came back in 10 or 20 years, they'd still be there in the same house.

I think that I like moving and going to different places and meeting different people a lot better than staying in the same place for years.

Elizabeth's views

The Army family to me is a fun life because you get to see so many different places. It seems you get more rights. It's very nice because once you have an identification card you can go almost anywhere yourself. Boy, do I like that! There are so many sports and activities to do with the Youth Activities. It's hard to choose what to do. It's real nice to have the Hunt Club and the Vet Clinic so close. I am really glad I am an Army brat. It's so FUN!

Chucko's views

The Army family moves every three years
They change their neighborhoods with sadness and cheers
They never look back at friends and dears,
For they know they will see them again in just three more years.

A Child in the Army

I am a child in the Army
I move around a lot
I see many states and places
I see old friends and new faces
For I am a child in the Army
I am child in the Army
I've gone to five schools in seven years
Since I do move a lot,
My eyes stay full of tears
For I am a child in the Army
I am a child in the Army
I am a person of my own
I live my life wild and free,
Like a deer who's on its own
For I am a child in the Army

Spiritual

Group explores God's involvement in every-day issues

By Joanne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

The "Agape" Sunday School class, part of the Protestant religious education program at Fort Benning, provides a unique opportunity for persons of all ages to come together for a time of learning and growing in the Christian faith. Composed of single and married adults plus children of various ages, the class is a time for discussing and sharing with each other in a family atmosphere.

Led by Chaplain Jim Masteller, director of the Family Life Center, the group explores God's involvement in the every-day issues of life. They are presently studying "Effective Communication Within Marriages and Families."

During a recent class, Chaplain Masteller emphasized that the old childhood saying, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me" simply is not true. He said: "Words can be powerful weapons that are verydevastating in people's lives. We need to learn to communicate with one another in such a way as to build one another up, especially those closest to us — those people in our own home."

Chaplain Masteller stressed that in order for communication to be real, persons must open themselves up, and this "opening up" means making oneself vulnerable. He added: "As soon as we say, 'I love you', we become vulnerable." This vulnerability makes it easier for the other person to hurt us.

A Biblical Example of shattered relationships and broken communication is dramatically recorded in the third chapter of Genesis. Because of sin Adam and Eve no longer experience the joy of a pure and unbroken relationship with each other and with God. Communication is frustrated by guilt, deception, and blame.

The group participated in an exercise demonstrating how complicated communication can be, even when it is on the level of simply giving clear, effective directions. Two teenagers, Brad McDonald and Quentin Williams, volunteered to sit back to back with a knife, fork, and spoon in front of each. One arranged the silverware in a pattern and then attempted to direct the other to construct the same pattern. They were limited to "yes" and "no" answers with no opportunity for feedback or explanation. The rest of the group acted as "observers," and after the exercise they discussed their frustration with such limited and ineffective communication. They agreed that "to be effective, communication cannot be restrictive."

Chaplain Masteller led the class in exploring five basic levels of communication, especially as experienced in the context of the home:

● "The Clinche" — "How are you doing?" "How's the weather?"

● "The 5 O'clock News" — "How did it go at school?" - "How was work?" Chaplain Masteller explained that this debriefing of the day's activities was a "safe" but necessary level of communication that allowed persons to catch up with one another and know what was going on in the other's life.

JoAnne Mercer

● "Thinking" — On this level a person is offering an opinion which may be challenged, so there is some risk at this level of communication.

● "Feeling" — This is the level at which we become vulnerable. We express the feelings within us, and this could be devasting if the other person discounts us with: "You shouldn't feel that way!"

● "Intimacy" — This is the level at which we have the ability to be completely open and honest with each other. Chaplain Masteller said: "This is an intense level at which communication does not often take place. We need to be comfortable with the skills required to do it, even though we may not be comfortable in the midst of this level."

Ths class discussed various aspects of these five levels and how they related to individual circumstances in their daily lives. Chaplain Masteller stressed the importance of parents providing honest communication within the home. He said: "We need to model for our kids to deal honestly with our feelings."

He urged families to sit down together during the week and read Ephesians 4:25-32 and then discuss together in light of that passage: "Where are we?"

Reflections

Chaplain James Masteller

A while ago, Sally (my wife) and I were sitting on the steps of the Spaghetti Factory, a restaurant in San Francisco, waiting for it to open. She asked me one of those questions that you have to think about before answering.

She asked me, "What is most important to you, Jim?" How would you answer that question?

Don't keep reading, just take a minute now to think of your answer. How did I answer? I hemmed and hawed and said "Gee, I don't know, what's most important to you?" Her response was immediate and has been rumbling around inside of me ever since. She simply, said "relationships."

I think Sally was right on target. However, as I have thought about the value of relationships, another question has surfaced. What kind of relationship are we talking about? Let me mention two kinds of relationships.

The first kind we will simply call primary relationships. These are the kind that are characterized by intimacy, sensitivity and caring. People who know each other by name, take each other seriously and take time to understand.

Secondary relationships are different. They are characterized by being impersonal, functional and not too concerned about feelings. You know — as long as the laundry is being done and a paycheck is coming home what more do we need.

Don't get me wrong — there is a place for both primary and secondary relationships. We need both! My concern is that even though primary relationships are essential for our personal growth and health, they are becoming an endangered species. The pervasive loneliness in our society and the increase of teen-age suicides are statements of what I am suggesting.

But there is hope! We have a model for primary relationships. And when we are willing to work towards them, they happen to the satisfaction of all concerned. The model I have in mind is, of course, that of God himself, who knows us personally, is aware of our needs and is available to spend time with us.

The question is, "Are you available to primary relationships?" Are you available to a relationship with God who has already made Himself available to you?

Improving quality of family life is post assessment project's goal

By JoAnne Mercer
Chapel Publicist

"Improving the Quality of Family Life" is the goal of a post-wide Family Needs Assessment Project launched last week following a briefing at the command and general staff meeting.

Funded by Project SPIRIT money, the project will be directed by Orthner and Associates, an Atlanta consulting firm that has had extensive experience in working with military families. They recently completed "Families in Blue," a study for the Air Force, which resulted in committing $80 million dollars towards the creation of worldwide family support centers.

According to Dr. Dennis K. Orthner, director of the program and a faculty member of the University of Georgia, the program will have three major thrusts: questionnaires sent to approximately 3,000 households, personal interviews, and interviews with both support agencies and the chain of command at Fort Benning. Working closely with Dr. Orthner's team will be the Project Advisory Committee composed of representatives from helping agencies and commands.

The questionnaires will seek responses from active-duty military personnel, spouses, and teenage chilldren living both on and off post. Orthner stressed that these questionnaires will be strictly confidential and anonymous. Since one questionnaire represents 10 percent of Fort Benning families, it is crucial that each be filled out and promptly returned. They will measure the individual's thoughts and feelings about the impact of the Army on his quality of family life. They will try to determine the primary sources of stress and what can be done to ease this stress.

Orthner emphasized that when a soldier first enlists he is often single. That often changes quickly so that when reenlistment time comes, one of the primary questions asked is: "Does the Army provide an environment suitable for rearing my children?" He added, "family satisfaction is very crucial to whether or not the soldier stays in the Army."

> "Family satisfaction is very crucial to whether or not the soldier stays in the Army."

In addition to the questionnaires, the assessment team will conduct personal interviews with a random sampling of military personnel and their families. This part of the project has already begun, and the concerns and issues which emerge will be incorporated into the survey.

The third part of the project will focus on the helping agencies, information from the chain of command and the adjustments that must be met in order to meet the needs of families. Orthner said, "frequently the families who are under the most stress are the ones least aware of the services available."

Impetus for this program came from Chaplain James Masteller, Director of the Family Life Center, whose concern for drill instructors and the stress they and their faimilies experience led to conversations with Orthner about what could be done to improve the quality of life of the military family as a whole.

In the 1970's the Army was the first of the Armed Services to recognize the crucial part the family plays in the overall mission of the military. Its recent reenlistment poster which shows the family together is further proof of their commitment to bettering the quality of family life.

This project is already underway and your cooperation is vital to its success. If you receive a questionnaire in the mail or if you are asked to participate in a personal interview, please give your full cooperation. Improving the quality of your life and that of your family within the Army community is the overall objective.

"We need another doctor but we don't have the physical space in the building. In order to provide more efficient high quality medical care, studies are underway to expand facilities."

Active duty personnel and family members with emergencies are seen in the morning, soldiers with chronic problems and routine appointments are seen in the afternoon.

"If a patient uses the 197th FPC as an entrance to the health care system, they can save themselves the time and inconvenience of being bounced around at the hospital because the FPC procedure makes direct arrangements for the patients," said SFC Robert C. Knight.

Don't let contaminated food ruin your holiday meal

Fort Monroe, Va. — Thanksgiving Day, most Americans will probably eat turkey. Afterward, some may suffer stomach upset that may be due to more than just overeating. It may be caused by eating contaminated food.

Foodborne illnesses, which are transmitted to humans by food, can be caused by any food; however, poultry, beef and pork are more frequently involved.

In 1981, 568 foodborne outbreaks involving 14,432 cases were reported to the national Center for Disease Control (CDC) from 48 states, Guam, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. Of those otbreaks, 251 occurred in restaurants, cafeterias and delicatessens, and 131 occurred in the home.

CDC officials believe these figures only represent a small fraction of the actual number of cases; most are not reported to health officials. Food contaminates, including disease-causing microorganisms, are everywhere. However, they only thrive in a warm, moist and nutritious environment. Without certain precautions, Thanksgiving dinner could be the perfect setting for a real catastrophe, according to Capt. Brian Thoreson, Chief, Environmental Health Section, Walter Reed Army Medical Center's Preventive Medicine Activity.

Foodborne illnesses are caused by the direct ingestion of harmful microorganisms themselves or by the poisonous toxins produced by some types of microorganisms. Most of the symptoms are similar, although onset may vary from one to 48 hours.

Symptoms usually include headache, vomiting, diarrhea, abdominal cramps and fever. Mild cases resemble the flu and last two to three days. They are rarely lethal; however, the young, elderly and those already sick are more seriously affected.

Salmonellosis is a typical foodborne disease that may accompany a Thanksgiving dinner. It is caused by members of the salmonella family of bacteria, which include numerous organisms such as one that causes typhoid fever. Salmonella grows with or without the presence of oxygen. It can survive freezing and, like all disease-causing human pathogens, grows best at 98.6 degrees. Temperatures exceeding 140 degrees usually kill it. Live poultry — turkeys — commonly carry these harmful organisms without adverse effects. However, improper procedures during preparation, cooking or serving could allow the growth of this pathogen.

There were 1,089 salmonella cases involving poultry, pork and beef reported to the CDC in 1981. In 455 of those cases, turkey was eaten.

Like all foodborne illnesses, Salmonella can be prevented. Contaminated food cannot usually be detected by an "off" odor or flavor, yet according to Thoreson, "Common sense and a brief understanding of food microbiology will prevent most foodborne disease outbreaks."

According to the CDC, the five most common factors contributing to foodborne illness outbreaks in 1981 were, in order of frequency of occurrence:

- Inadequate holding temperature (refrigerator above 45 degrees or warming pan below 140 degrees)
- Poor personal hygiene
- Contaminated equipment
- Inadequate cooking (too short a time or too low a temperature)
- Food obtained from an unsafe source

Select a good turkey for your holiday meal; know how to identify spoiled or inferior birds. They have soft, flabby flesh and dull, sunken eyes. If there is purplish or greenish overall cast and a greenish discoloration around the neck and vent it may mean improper handling. Other signs are abnormal odors, stickiness under the wings and around the

Infantry Board section puts DRAGONs to the test

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Infantry Board has the responsibility of testing new equipment the Army may want to use in the Infantry. Here on Fort Benning that testing is done through many sections, like the Simulated Tank Antiarmor Gunnery System (STAGS). For the last several weeks, this section has been known as STAGS-D. Testing has been going on involving the DRAGON, hence the D is tacked onto the acronym.

Sergeant first class Jackie Wedding, one of two test NCOs for the section, explained their function is mainly to test the maintainability of a system so the Army can decide which one to use for its units.

The STAGS evaluation lasts for 12 weeks. The evaluation of the DRAGON system started the first week in August and should be completed the first week of December. Every week while testing, 30 OSUT students go through the evaluation to see how well the weapon can be used and if the weapon can pass the tests the section devises for it.

"We randomly select One Station Unit Training soldiers who will be undergoing DRAGON training here. They do not have to qualify on the system though. We are interested only in testing the equipment, not the soldier," Wedding explained.

The evaluation lasts one week. On Monday, the soldiers are given all their hands-on training. They are then divided into groups for three programs of instruction. The first POI deals only with the STAGS-D and allows the soldier to shoot 50 rounds.

The second POI allows the soldier to shoot 40 rounds on the STAGS-D and 10 on the Launching Environment Simulator (LES). Lastly, the soldier shoots 40 rounds on the Launch Effects Trainer and 10 on the LES.

"We compare the data and results we've collected to decide which system is the best," Wedding explained. At the end of all three POIs, the soldiers go to a live-fire demonstration of the DRAGON.

The evaluation testing equipment of the DRAGON is set up in different modes. The first mode has the terrain table drive and consists of three tracks with masked and unmasked tanks at 500 meters, 671 meters and 1,000 meters.

They are painted to reflect red light, simulating the night tracking device of the DRAGON.

The tanks go across the terrain board one at a time or all together, depending on how the instructor programs their movements. The soldiers are told when to engage a tank and when not to. Sound systems simulate the sound of the missles hitting the targets and the return fire of the tanks.

Wedding explained the DRAGON itself has an air tubing hooked up to it to simulate recoil effect and a cable which simulates the weight-loss effect of the missles launched. Also, the DRAGON has an infrared source and computes the changes of the tanks. A video camera attached to the right side of the DRAGON allows the firers to see the missile being launched.

"A DRAGON weighs about 32 pounds loaded with a tracker attached. The DRAGONs these soldiers use weigh about the same," Wedding said.

"We don't evaluate anything here. We test systems, compile the results and forward those results on up to our command. The Infantry School will use the reports to decide which system to train on here," Wedding said.

Changing TA-50 replacement method saves Benning $7,000

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Changing the method for replacement of TA-50 equipment lost during training resulted in a 1984 SPIRIT savings of over $7,000.

Prior to May 1983, soldiers who lost TA-50 items during the course of their training purchased replacement items from the Central Issue Facility using statements of charges or cash sales.

Purchases directly from the CIF did not result in a monetary credit to the CIF which could be used to purchase replacement items. These had to be purchased using additional funds from the unit's command operating budget even though the soldier paid for the lost item.

Beginning in May 1983, command emphasis at all levels was applied to reduce the losses on TA-50 equipment and subsequent cash sales at the CIF.

Under current policy, soldiers were required to purchase replacement items, at the same cost, from the clothing sales store or post exchange. This results in almost 100 percent of the lost equipment being replaced instead of a cash sale at the CIF which cannot be used to purchase more equipment.

"This is an excellent example of how commanders can save money by looking at the way things are being done in their units," said Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator. "It is really amazing the savings that are out there, if people will just take a look at their operation, as the commanders here did."

The $7,000 savings for 1984 will mean that additional amounts of money can be spent on other needed equipment not presently funded in the CIF budget.

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I renounced my compensation and it was terminated 10 years ago. Can I make a new application for this same disability?

A — Yes. A renouncement does not preclude a person from filing a new application. However, no payment may be made for any period prior to the date the application is received by the VA.

Q — What is the time limit for filing an application for compensation based on a service connected disability?

A — There is no time limit.

Q — What is the time limit for filing for the one-time dental treatment provided by the VA for certain service connected dental conditions?

A — Within ninety days of separation from the service.

Q — I received an overpayment letter from the VA. I cannot pay the entire amount back at once. What can I do?

A — You may make a partial payment and propose how you intend to pay the balance.

Q — If a veteran's widow is buried in a private cemetery, will the VA provide a headstone or grave marker for the burial site?

A — No. The VA will only provide this benefit for veterans' dependents who are buried in national, military post or base cemeteries and in state veterans' cemeteries.

Resource center looking for volunteers

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Wanted: people with a few free hours each week who want to contribute to the community. Hours are flexible, benefits high in self-satisfaction. Free child care. No experience necessary.

If the above sounds like the job you've been looking for, the folks at the Volunteer Resource Center want to talk to you.

"There is so much to be done at Fort Benning," said Pat Sneed, post volunteer coordinator. "We can find a job for anyone, and if they have no experience we will train them."

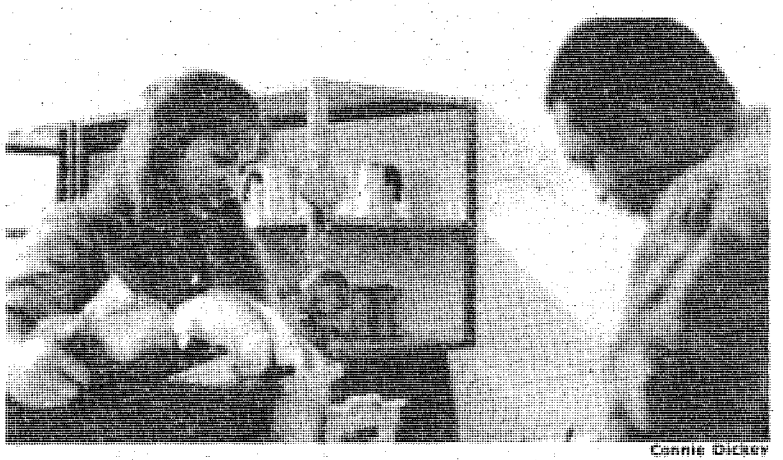
Thre are 19 different agencies on post that have an on-going need for volunteer staffers, so there are jobs suited for all kinds of interests.

For people who like to work with children, there are Scouting leader positions, Youth Activity coaching slots, and workers needed with the Exceptional Children's program.

If you want to get out of the house and talk to adults for a few hours, there are positions for tour guides, receptionists, sales people, veterinary helpers, and budget counselors.

The key to keeping volunteers is job satisfaction, explained Mrs. Sneed, and that's where her office comes in.

"We try to match the needs of the individual with the needs of the agencies. We try to find each person a job that fits their skills and interests, because otherwise they won't be happy with the work."



Connie Dickey

ACS volunteer Melody Sexton checks out items from the Lending Closet to Sp4 Clifford Coleman.

If a person is not satisfied with a particular job, then Mrs. Sneed will place them somewhere else. "A person is not locked into a particular job, because we want them to enjoy working for the community," said Mrs. Sneed.

"We encourage people who know where they want to work to go directly to the agency and apply," said Mrs. Sneed. "People who want to work but don't know where they are best suited can come to my office and we will evaluate their skills and interests and send them on interviews."

Sam Duggins, chief of Army Community Service, said, "going to the Volunteer Resource Center or coming to us is the best way for a person to help their community rather than striking out on their own."

ACS has jobs available as budget counselors, and receptionists, as well as needing people to work with the Lending Closet, CARE Committee, distribute welcome packets or work in Consumer Advocacy.

ACS offers a structured program in which volunteers earn uniforms after putting in 50 hours service, and awards yearly pins to its workers.

Up to 8 hours per week free day care is provided at Tot Town Nursery for volunteers who need it. Mileage used driving to and from the volunteer job is tax deductible, but the biggest benefit of working is self satisfaction, said Duggins.

"The people we have are very devoted and dedicated to their jobs, and the personal satisfaction they find from helping others is the reason," Duggins concluded.

Interested volunteers should call Pat Sneed at 545-5602/5176, or apply directly to the agency they want to work for.

joints, or darkened wing tips. Frozen turkeys should be checked for signs of thawing (fluid or frozen liquid will be present in the container) or refreezing (large ice crystals will be apparent).

Store a fresh bird at 32-36 degrees and cook it within three days. A frozen whole turkey can be kept one year. Be sure to check the refrigerator and freezer temperatures to ensure adequate cooling. During the holidays, when both appliances are full of food, place items so there's proper air circulation between them. Food removed from the original package should be put in clean, nonabsorbent, covered containers.

Frequently food poisoning is associated with turkey that has been allowed to remain at room temperature several hours or that has been gradually cooled or heated. So, don't allow meat to sit out more than two hours and, when thawing turkey, follow Thoreson's advice. He says the best method of thawing a frozen turkey is to place it in the refrigerator two or three days (as indicated on the label) ahead. Thoreson suggests in "emergency" cases, defrosting in a microwave immediately prior to cooking or using cool (70 degrees or less) running water to thaw the bird. The environmental health officer cautions against leaving the turkey in a water bath at room temperature.

Turkey left out to thaw overnight at room temperature is not recommended either. Leaving a turkey out allows bacteria to spread on the outer flesh which defrosts more quickly than the inside cavity. A bacterium can multiply into billions of bacteria in 10 to 12 hours.

Thanksgiving, when you prepare your turkey for cooking, guard against cross-contamination (spreading the bacteria to other uninfected food) by using different utensils and equipment for raw and cooked meat. Be sure to wash the cutting board and knives with hot, soapy water and don't use the same platters before and after cooking. Don't forget to follow good personal hygiene rules and wash your hands frequently.

Thoreson advises stuffing the cavity just before cooking. Cook the turkey to an internal temperature of 165 degrees and serve it hot, soon after it's cooked.

Careful adherence to the above measures of controlling and eliminating foodborne infections and intoxications will help ensure a safe and enjoyable Thanksgiving meal in the home, Thoreson indicated.

Be sure to quick-chill meat to be eaten later; don't allow food to stand at room temperature.

Careful handling of leftovers is required. Chill them quickly to 45 degrees or below and rapidly reheat thoroughly to 165 degrees or above. Remember to store dressing and gravy separately from the turkey.

Rangers capture flag football championship

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With over 200 supporters looking on, the 3rd Ranger Co., Benning Ranger Div., Ranger Department, captured this year's post flag football championship by beating an explosive squad from A Battery, 2/10 Field Artillery 14-8 in the second and deciding game between the two teams last Thursday.

The Rangers, who went into the championship game undefeated in tournament play, were downed in the evening's first matchup 20-6 by A Btry., which had been beaten once. Since the tournament was double-elimination the two units had to play another game to decide the post champion.

The Rangers may have been inspired by the presence of 180 fellow soldiers from a Ranger Class who marched into Doughboy Stadium during the first game after completing demolitions training earlier in the evening. The spirit and enthusiasm shown by the troops in attendance helped make the game an exciting gridiron showdown.

A Btry. received the opening kickoff of the deciding game and proceeded to march under quarterback Jerryl Bennett's direction to the Ranger 2-yard line, only to run into a solid Ranger goal line defense that wouldn't permit a touchdown.

The Giggolos turned the ball over on downs to the Rangers and thanks to some key third down catches coach John Hester's Rangers also got into scoring position at the A Btry 9. Then quarterback Rodney Campbell zipped a 9-yard scoring pass to Joe Conyers to put the Rangers up 6-0. The conversion for two points failed.

A Btry regained possession and went into a no-huddle offense. They too soon found paydirt as Keith Davis turned an average gain into a 57-yard TD strike. On the play Davis was double-covered by two Rangers who went for the interception instead of breaking up the pass attempt. They both missed and Davis had clear sailing to the end zone after catching Bennett's aerial. Bennett, who was last year's starting signal-caller for the Doughboys football team, then connected with Rodney Stills for the two-point conversion to put the Giggolos in the driver's seat at 8-6 as the first half ended.

Conyers handled the second half kickoff and rambled all the way to A Btry.'s 35 as the Rangers were once again knocking on the door. But a fourth down pass was intercepted by Robert Berry, who managed to get to the outside and race all the way back to the Ranger 13.

An apparent 10-yard TD toss from Bennett to Rick Smith was called back on a Giggolo penalty, so A Btry had to punt the ball back over to the Rangers with just minutes left in the contest.

With everyone sitting on the edges of their seats, the Rangers managed to drive to the Giggolo 5-yard line with 1:30 left. From there, Conyers took the handoff from Campbell and sprinted the final five yards up the middle for the winning points. Campbell capped the evening off by hitting Thomas Garcia for the two-point conversion.

A Btry had one last opportunity to pull out a victory in the final seconds, but could only get as far as the Ranger 20-yard line as time ran out.

"We had a lot of spirit, and we all pulled together.", said Colonel Tex Turner, head of the Ranger Department. "And I think our coach, John Hester, is one of the best coaches on Fort Benning."

Hester previously served under Major John Ross as defensive coordinator of the Fort Benning Doughboys.

For A Btry., this marked the third time in the past year they have appeared in a post sports championship. They won last year's post basketball championship and finished post runner-up in this past summer's post softball tournament.

YA gridders go big time

Two teams from the YA Football League got a chance Saturday to play in the vast confines of the Phenix City Municipal Stadium as they banged heads with two squads from the Phenix City Boy's Club League. The Benning Colts found the going tough as they lost to the P.C. Chiefs (in dark jerseys at left), 6-0. The Benning Steelers line up during pregame introductions (right) before their contest with the P.C. Steelers. The Benning Steelers blanked the boys from Phenix City, 20-0.

Soldier is leaps and bounds ahead of competition

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Matthew Dryke, Erich Buljung, Glenn Dubis, Dan Carlisle, Randy Stewart, John McNally and Gloria Parmentier...all are Fort Benning soldiers who represented our country this past summer at the XXIII Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

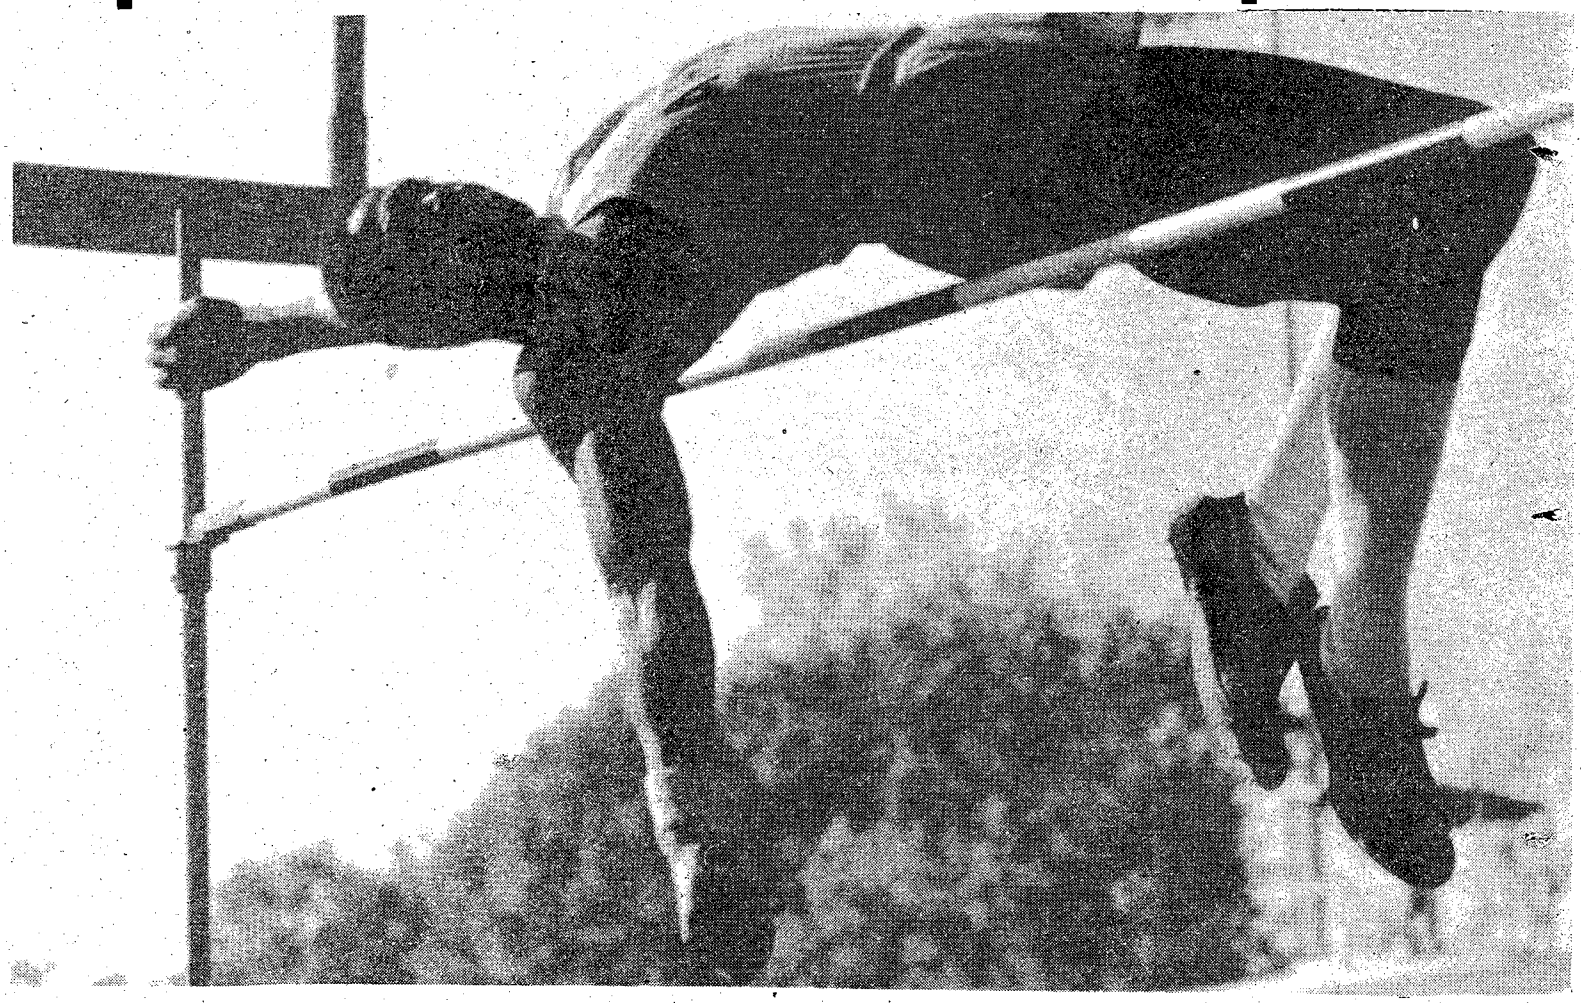
When it comes time to select the U.S. Olympic Team for the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, Korea, you can bet more athletes from Fort Benning will have the chance to represent our country and at the same time "go for the gold."

Specialist four George Milton of the 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, is working to become one of those distinguished competitors.

Milton excels at high jumping. He has been selected on the All-Army Track and Field team the past two years and was a two-time All-American at Southern Arkansas University. As a freshman he was the school's first indoor All-American.

While in high school Milton didn't star in track but in football. He received all-district honors as a tight end on his high school squad in his hometown of Jacksonville, Tex.

After high school George went on to Southern Arkansas where he received All-American honors. During one meet in Harding, Ark., Milton cleared 6'10" to break the stadium, meet and school record. He would later go on to break his own school record with a jump of 7'1 3/4".



Mark Cummings

Specialist four George Milton attempts to clear the bar during competition in the high jump event at the recent post track and field tournament at Doughboy Stadium. Milton finished first in the event with a jump of 6'5".

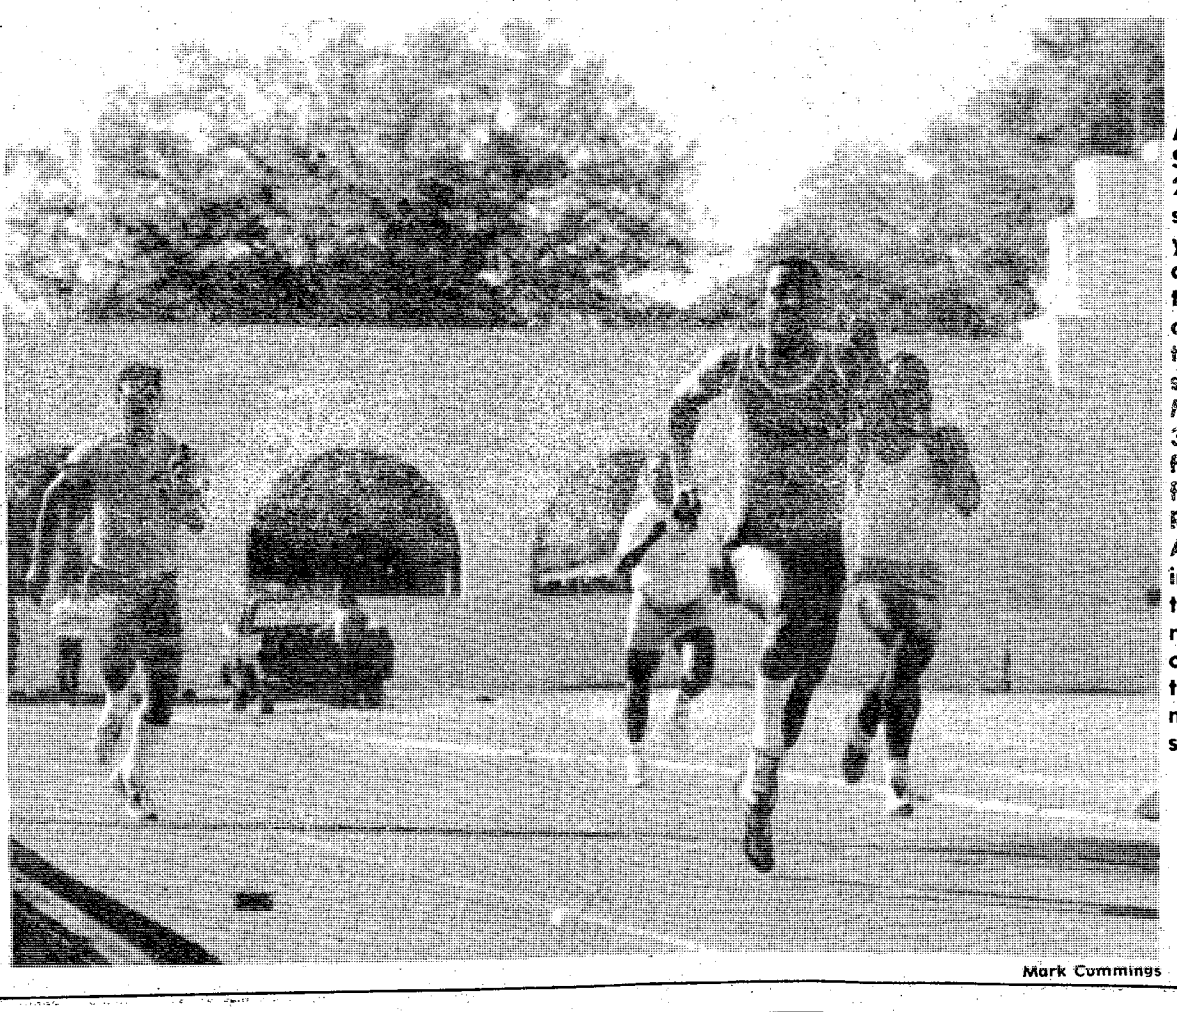
Recently Milton was a member of the U.S. Military Olympic Team that competed with 20 other countries. He placed 6th in the competition.

For any high jumper to qualify for last summer's Olympic trials he or she must have had to clear 7'4 1/4" in any official meet prior to the trials. Although Milton constantly gunned for that standard mark during competition he fell short.

"I messed around with 7'2" and 7'3" a lot," said Milton, "but I never cleared the standard needed to qualify for the trials." Milton's personal best is 7'2 3/4".

Milton's future goals is to make World Class level and then to make the 1988 Olympic team. He believes if he finds a good high-jumping coach those goals can someday become reality.

"If someone's willing to sponsor and coach me I'll produce," said Milton.



Mark Cummings

And they're off!
SSgt. Edford Luckey of HHD, 2nd ITB, leads a field of four as soldiers compete in the 100-yard dash during the opening day of the post track and field tournament held last Wednesday and Thursday. Luckey won the event with a time of 10.38 seconds. Specialist four George Milton of the 598th Maint. Co., 36th Eng. Gp., captured three first place finishes by winning the long, high and triple jump. Robert Booker of Co. D, 2/69 Armor placed in three events, including a first place finish in the 440-yard dash. Approximately 40 personnel, including one female, participated in the tournament. Another post-wide meet is scheduled for next spring.

U.S. Army

Instructors of the U.S. Army mountain-climbing school pause after a day of climbing the Italian Alps during World War II.

Division has distinguished combat history

U.S. Army

During the United States Army mountain-climbing instruction in Italy in 1944, two instructors wind up their ropes.

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Editor's note: The Department of the Army announced this month that the Army had selected Fort Benning as the temporary home for one brigade of the 10th Infantry Division. The following is from the division's history.

In December 1944, advance elements of the 10th Mountain Division departed the U.S. for combat duty in Italy. After being oriented and undergoing combat training refresher courses, the "Ski Troopers" entered combat on Jan. 28, 1945.

The division encountered and overcame every type of natural obstacle, to include the rugged Apenines and Alps ranges, the Po and Adige Rivers, the canal region of the Po Valley and Lake Garda. The training the division had undergone in the mountains of Colorado paid off. The division also encountered and overcame the old walled city of Verona and pre-war frontier defenses of the Italian-Austrian border along

Benning gets final OK on stationing of new light infantry division

Fort Benning can get ready to roll out the welcome mat. At a news conference Nov. 21, Col. Michael Plummer, chief of staff of the new light division, announced that it's official now. Fort Benning will be the temporary home of one brigade of the 10th Infantry Division, beginning in October 1985 when the brigade's first 100 men come aboard.

These soldiers will be followed by 1,837 soldiers in fiscal year 1986. Of these personnel, 137 will be officers, 21 warrant officers and 1,779 enlisted.

Fort Drum, N.Y., will eventually be home of the entire 10th Division. "Among other reasons, the Army probably felt that it needed a light division trained to fight in cold, snowy weather. Fort Drum is the ideal location for such training," Plummer said.

Plummer, who will become commander of the brigade at Benning, said the post was chosen as the location for the division's 2nd Brigade because it is the "Home of the Infantry." The brigade can be brought to a high state of readiness quickly here, using the Infantry Center's outstanding trainers, equipment and training area assets, he said.

He added it is likely that the brigade will be at Benning until 1990.

Plummer said he is looking forward to returning to Benning when he returns as the 2nd Brigade commander. He will continue as the division's chief of staff for approximately one year.

The stationing of the brigade at Fort Benning will add about $30 million to the annual military payroll. The civilian payroll will increase by about $4 million. Fort Benning will also employ an additional 190 civilians.

Plummer is a 1960 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy and received a master's degree in 1967 from the University of Indiana. He attended the Armor Officer Advanced Course, the Armed Forces Staff College and the U.S. Army War College.

He was Chief of Staff for the 82nd Airborne Division before moving to the 10th Division.

His awards include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with two Oak Leaf Clusters and the Meritorious Service Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters.

Plummer and his wife, Miriam, have four children; Liz, Robert, Katherine and Michael.

Love him or hate him 'T-Buff' gets you into stores

Robert McClain

Many television viewers hate the sight of him. Some scream obscenities at the screen and express their dislike for this television pitchman every time his name is mentioned. But they buy the products he pitches on TV like gangbusters.

Tommy Buffington is the man people love to hate. Better known as "Texas T-Buff" or simply "T-Buff," he has been a fixture on local television for more than a year. His pudgy stomach, white polyester suit, white boots and cowboy hat, and his trademark "thank-you" are probably as well-known in some cities as the Colonel's fried chicken or the fast-food restaurant with the golden arches.

Locally "T-Buff" does commercials for a furniture outlet on Victory Drive, but he does pitches for many other stores across the United States.

Buffington has become so well-known across the nation, his life story has been documented on a record cut on the Osmond label, "The Ballad of Texas T-Buff."

On the record, Buffington traces his life from his beginnings in the merchandising field to his current guise as "T-Buff." The chorus of the single is made up of repeated "thank you's" to his listeners.

Buffington was born in Texaracana, Texas, on July 12, 1927. If his record is factual, he started in merchandising at the age of 12. He sold candy at a Texas department store.

"Merchandising just got into my blood," Buffington said. "I enjoy working with merchants; it's my life.

He obtained a marketing degree from North Texas State University and has worked as a consultant for businesses ever since.

"When I started, I did a little bit of everything. I was responsible for forming advertising campaigns. I wrote television and radio commericials. But in the beginning they just didn't seem to be effective," he commented. His eyes are bloodshot from a night of traveling.

The ineffective ad campaigns meant the beginning of "T-Buff." "I needed a grabber, an attention getter," he said, playing with the gold medallions around his neck.

"In advertising, you do something for attention and retention. That's how 'T-Buff' came about. The people who were doing the commercials weren't getting my message across, so I decided to do them myself.

"I simply cut my name a little bit and called myself 'T-Buff.' I had a white cowboy hat, so I decided to dress in all-white. The get-up made it easy for people to recognize me. I needed all the help I could get," Buffington said.

Buffington also explained his characteristic "thank-you." "I thought of it this way," he said. "If people can put up with me for 30 seconds or a minute, they deserve a 'thank-you.'"

After 20 years with the character, Buffington shows no signs of stopping. "I travel constantly. At times I'm often on the road for 72 hours straight traveling from city to city making commercials and appearances," he said, running his fingers through his thinning grey-white hair.

Buffington admitted life on the road does take its toll. "I often wonder about it. I can't say I live a normal life by any means," he said, clutching the couch pillows where he's sitting like a security blanket.

"It gets tiring after a while. I spend every night in a motel. I eat my meals in restaurants on the road. I miss having home cooking. Sometimes I miss having just one home. . . .I just don't know," he said. His voice slowed and changed to a more somber pitch than his usual fast-talking, high-pitched delivery.

He said he was married once, but has been divorced for many years. He described his marital status as "single, happy and available."

"I would like to settle down someday," he said, "but the woman would have to pay a heavy price to put up with me."

Talking to Buffington, you find a very different person from the character he portrays on television. One quite shy and a bit reclusive.

"I'm totally different from the extroverted character I play. When I'm out in public, I usually wear a baseball cap and sunglasses so people don't recognize me. If they do recognize me, most of the time I will just deny it," Buffington commented.

Though he may be a different person in private, he can assume the role of "T-Buff" in an instant. Our interview has been interupted many times by children asking to meet "T-Buff." When he spoke to them, Tommy Buffington disappeared momentarily and "T-Buff" materialized.

Tommy Buffington

He says he'll keep working till he's 97. "T-Buff has been good to me," Buffington said. "I've been very fortunate and I'm very content. 'Thank you!'"

What are your thoughts on fall clean-up?

SFC Michael Botkins, Pathfinder Branch, 4th Airborne Training Bn.-"I don't think it should be necessary if people maintain and clean up their areas. I think this cleanup is a case of making up for other people's errors."

SFC Henry Ganter, B-4-2-"I think it's a good idea. A lot of people don't have the time to get out and concentrate on cleaning, and with this period set aside they have that chance."

SSG Joseph Harris, PLDC-"I think it's a good thing because it keeps the post clean. But if you're taking away a soldier's study time by having him clean up then it's a hassle. It all depends on how you use the cleanup."

Are Reserves, National Guard saddled with too many missions?

For more than a dozen years,the Army has been placing increased reliance on its reserve components — the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve — to beef up and back up the active force. Today, the reserves comprise almost 47 percent of the Total Army's military strength and furnish nine of the 25 combat divisions, nearly 70 percent of the nondivisional combat forces, and more than two thirds of the combat service support units.

By placing so much reliance on our reserve forces and by expecting them to play such a large role in fulfilling our international obligations, the Army is now at a point that it cannot go to war without the immediate involvement of the Guard and Reserve.

Despite this, some members of Congress are forcefully suggesting that the best way to cut the defense budget would be to trim still further the size of the active Army and transfer the missions left uncovered to the already hard-pressed Army Guard and Reserve.

Admittedly it costs less to pay, feed and house a reservist, but the savings go no further. Reservists still must receive the same training, equipment and logistical support. Moreover, the reserves face the same manpower constraints as the active force.

The increasing emphasis on transfer of missions from active-duty forces to the reserve components requires that Army National Guard and Army Reserve units be fully manned and equipped and that they steadily improve their standards of training, readiness and preparedness. These are exceedingly difficult tasks to perform in just 38 training days each year.

Solving the current budgetary dilemma by transferring additional early deployment missions to the Army's reserve components will yield dangerously illusory benefits at the risk of imperiling our deployed forces and the nation's strategic interests. (AUSA)

Bayonet honored as one of Army's best

The United States Army Training and Doctrine Command and Department of the Army recently announced the winners of the 1984 Keith L. Ware Awards for excellence in Army print journalism. At TRADOC level, The Bayonet placed second among 5 Army newspapers in its category. In Army wide competition, The Bayonet finished third among approximately 15 papers.

In individual competition, Bill Walton of the post Public Information Office placed second within TRADOC in the picture story category with his photo feature on Operation Skypilot, an FTX conducted by the post's chaplains that appeared in the April 20, 1984 issue of The Bayonet.

The Keith L. Ware Awards are presented annually to Army publications and journalists who stand out in their field. The awards are named in honor of Maj. Gen. Keith L. Ware, a former Chief of Army Information and Medal of Honor winner killed in action while commanding the 1st Infantry Division in Vietnam in 1968. (USAIC PAO)

Local community support needed to welcome new unit to Benning

The U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) is in the process of moving to Fort Benning from Panama. USARSA is a U.S. Army TRADOC school under the operational control of the U.S. Army Security Assistance Agency for Latin America, a field operating agency of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans at the Pentagon. Its mission is to train Latin American military personnel, both officers and enlisted, in U.S. military doctrine, tactics and techniques. The school teaches a wide variety of courses including a Command and General Staff Course, combat arms advanced course, commando course, patrolling courses, and a basic infantry course, as well as several speciality courses. All of the courses are taught in the Spanish language. In addition, the school is tasked with the mission of stimulating good relations between the military establishment of the various Latin American countries and the United States for the purpose of improving the cooperation and understanding among the American nations.

From many places

USARSA's staff and faculty is made up of U.S. military personnel and guest instructors from various Central and South American countries. The Latin American instructors range in rank from colonel to sergeant. Most are married and will have their families with them. The average length of stay at Fort Benning will be 24 months.

USARSA's student population is made up of military personnel from colonels to privates. The average length of stay will vary. There is a 10 month officers command and staff course, a 6 month combat arms advanced course, a 6 month officer candidate course, as well as several shorter 1 to 3 month courses. Most of the students in the 10 month course will bring their families. The others will be by themselves.

The first group of 15 instructors arrives in December and will be coming from seven Latin American countries; Brazil, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Paraguay, Ecuador, Honduras and Peru. In January, 14 more are expected to join USARSA. They will be coming from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico and Uruguay. Also, 7 others will join the school in June and will include Panamanians and Venezuelans. The first students will be arriving in late January to attend the 10 month command and staff course.

Since these individuals are official guests of the U.S. Government and are here to either learn or assist us in accomplishing our mission, we want to make their transition into our community as enjoyable and trouble free as possible. For many it will be their first experience with the United States. Enhancing goodwill among the Latin American Nations can only be fully accomplished with the support of the post and local communities. Most of our guest instructors and students do not speak English and come from cultures different from our own. They will probably experience considerable culture shock.

Feel at home

In order to welcome our Latin American neighbors, into the community and make them, both faculty and students, feel at home, the U.S. Army School of the Americas is establishing a sponsorship program. We are looking for members of the civilian and military communities who would be willing to spend a little time with one of our incoming guests. Your sole function would be to treat them as a new friend; show them around Columbus, invite them into your home and share your everyday life with them. By doing this, you will not only be fulfulling a civic responsibility as an American, but you will also enrich your own life by learning many new and interesting things about our neighbors to the South. For more information about the Sponsorship Program or to sign up as a sponsor, please call 545-1725/1798 during duty hours.

Engineers bridge Chattahoochee during recent training exercise

By Timothy Torok
43rd Engineer Battalion

A new bridge was recently constructed to connect the Alabama side of the Chattahoochee River with the Georgia side. But the bridge was not opened for public use. Nor was it intended to remain intact for more than a few hours.

Constructed by the 586th Engineer Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, the 24 connected sections of the ribbon assault bridge were built as a part of the company's Army Training and Evaluation Program and the battalion's field training exercise, conducted Nov. 5-9.

The engineer soldiers took to the field and set up a tactical operations center run by members of Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 43rd in a simulated combat environment. From the TOC came orders for bridge, road, route and tunnel reconnaissance. The TOC received situation reports from each company participating in the field exercise, according to 1st Lt. Philip Grinnell, the battalion S-2 officer.

"Enemy aggressors" from Company D, dressed in mock Warsaw Pact uniforms, harassed the battalion throughout the field exercise with simulated nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

Along with performing the usual duties in the field, such as perimeter security, digging and manning fighting positions and observing strict noise and light discipline, the line companies, A, B and C, also continued with their engineer construction projects throughout the post, according to Grinnell.

Company A dredged a small section of the Upatoi Creek by the Fort Benning Water Treatment Facility located off Marne Road. Company cleared piles of cut trees and other debris from Malone 19, located near the intersection of Buena Vista and 10th Armored Division Roads. They also continued much of the grading, shaping and compacting of a road at the 608th Ordnance Company motor pool, said Grinnell. C Company continued work on the clearing and grubbing of a parking lot for the Ranger Department, located in Harmony Church. A modified log crib was also constructed and will be used as a sign in front of the 36th Engineer Group headquarters.

To complete the field training exercise, each company sent a convoy of their vehicles and equipment from the field location to the bridge site on the Chattachoochee River.

Each vehicle tactically crossed the river that night, using blackout conditions, before returning to the field locations.

"I thought the bridge was going to sway when we crossed it, but it was as steady as a rock," said SSgt. James Mason, from HHC, 43rd Engineer Battalion. "It was strange being right on top of the water like that. It looked like you could step right off and be in the river."

Post kicks off fall clean-up campaign

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In an effort to improve the appearance of the post for the Christmas holidays, a fall cleanup campaign kicked off Monday and continues through Dec. 7.

December 3 through 7 is especially important to residents in post housing areas since a yard maintenance program is to be conducted. Grass should be cut, lawns edged, bushes trimmed, leaves raked and trash picked-up.

Although there will be street sweeping vehicles in housing areas on certain dates, Maj. John Ross, community life officer, asks that leaves and trash not be swept out into the streets, since there will be trash bags available at community life centers.

Large debris will be picked up.

The following is a schedule for street sweeping vehicles and vacuum trucks:

Indianhead Manor, Dec. 3, 8 a.m.-noon

Norton Court, Dec. 3, 1-4:30 p.m.

Davis Hill/Bouton Heights, Dec. 4, 8 a.m.-noon

McGraw Manor, Dec. 4, 1-4:30 p.m.

Custer Terrace, Dec. 5, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m.

Perkins Place, Dec. 6, 8 a.m.-noon

Iron Triangle, Dec. 6, 1-4:430 p.m.

McDaniel Manor, Dec. 7, 8-10 a.m.

Austin Loop/Rainbow Avenue, Dec. 7, 10 a.m.-2 p.m.

Lumpkin Road, Dec. 7, 2-4:30 p.m.

Ross said the cleanup should not be taken as a task that must be performed, but as self discipline in wanting to see our post as the best in the Army.

All sponsors who live in post housing should be released preferably on Thursday, Dec. 6 between 1-5 p.m. to report to their quarters and engage in outside clean-up.

Soldiers in first COHORT battalion complete first phase of their training

By Joe Donahue
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Editor's note: This is the fourth installment in our series on the Army's first COHORT Battalion.

Members of the Army's first COHORT Battalion completed the first phase of their Army training in top form. Company E, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, finished their basic training with a 92.3 average on mid-cycle testing. The test is designed to evaluate the soldiers on the basic skills they will need to move to Advanced Individual Training (AIT) and then to permanent assignments.

Company E, with sister B Company, is part of a test battalion using the COHORT concept of training. The battalion will complete its basic and advanced training as a team. The soldiers will then move on to fill the enlisted ranks of the 3-9th Infantry, 7th Infantry Division, at Fort Ord. The 3-9th is being reactivated this year as part of the light infantry concept being implimented at Fort Ord.

> "The soldiers will then move on to fill the enlisted ranks of the 3-9th Infantry, 7th Infantry Division, at Fort Ord."

Staff Sergeant William C. Soto, a drill sergeant with E Company, said that the company did a fine job on their mid-cycle testing. "It's outstanding," he said, "for the men to reach a test average in the 90s. All members of the company passed their test."

Presently the soldiers of B and C Companies are in the AIT phase of their training. Here they are learning squad assault tactics and the individual skills they will need to become MOS proficient. This includes mortar training and TOW and DRAGON gunnery. All TOW gunners in Company E qualified, with seven out of 17 ranking expert.

Army training center accelerates classes to prepare for holidays

By Joe Donahue
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers at Fort Benning whose Basic Training cycles fall during the Christmas holidays will have an easier time coming back for training next year.

Trainees at the Infantry Training Brigades have been attending Infantry Training Group classes on Saturdays in order to eliminate one week from their thirteen-week cycle.

The idea is to complete testing of basic soldier skills before the holiday period so trainees returning from leave are not immediately faced with a PT or marksmanship test.

The holiday Exodus is a time period during the Christmas season which TRADOC has designated as leave time for soldiers in basic training. Troops have the option of taking leave from Dec. 19 until Jan. 2. Since it would be difficult to conduct effective testing following a two week break, the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center has accelerated training so as much testing as possible can be completed in a particular cycle before the break. The troops will have a chance to return to Fort Benning and catch their breath before graduation or further training.

2-69th Armor conducts tactical road march

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade's convoy stretched like a long green snake down Ivy Road for about three quarters of a mile Nov. 9. Approximately 100 combat and support vehicles had divided into seven different marching units and had prepared to commence their task force movement.

Ahead of the 2-69th lay 70 miles of a demanding and disciplined tactical road march, winding within the vast confines of the Fort Benning military reservation.

The standards set for the road march were stiff. One hundred percent compliance in march discipline, maintaining speed and intervals, and 100 percent vehicle completion of the road march were expected.

The unit was evaluated at company and battalion level at multiple locations during the exercise.

"By executing the road march properly," said Maj. Arch V. Arnold III, battalion S-3, "the battalion can practice moving on civilian roads in a professional and safe manner.

"The purpose of going such a long distance was to put stress on the vehicles and to make sure that they are up to maintenance standards. If a vehicle was going to break down, it broke down. The battalion also practiced recovery procedures on how to handle break downs on civilian routes and what procedures work best."

Time was of the essence during the Panther's road march. From start to finish, the convoy had to start on time and move through certain designated points within an authorized time allotment.

"It is vital," Arnold added, "because in using a civilian route on a task force movement, there is the possibility of other units using this same route. They also will have a specified time reserved to use this route, and we must be clear of those points, so as not to stop or interfere with the flow of the next unit's convoy."

Once a designated point was reached, the battalion had to practice occupation procedures at the tactical assembly area.

"The convoy could not stop along the highway to enter the assembly area. They must have been able to enter the area immediately without lining up," remarked Arnold. "They must have been able to enter the tactical assembly area from the highway without stopping, knowing exactly what they must do, and where they must go, to insure a continuous flow of the convoy without congestion. It took a great deal of effort and discipline from the soldiers to accomplish all of these tasks."

Brigade tests skills during computer-assisted exercise

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The room buzzed with intensity as it filled with officers and support personnel. Officers congregated around a map completely covering a large table. The officers pointed and pushed pieces of paper around the map with calculated concentration. They were participating in the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) CAMMS (Computer Assisted Map Simulation) exercise.

The CAMMS exercise was part of a larger exercise called "Forward Guardian", which ran from Nov. 1 - 3. Unit commanders had already participated in a CPX (Command Post Exercise), and a CCX (Command and Communication Exercise), which had culminated with the CAMMS exercise.

"The CAMMS exercise is part of a build up phase prior to deployment to REFORGER," explained Maj. George M. Reimer, assistant S-2. "With minimum resources, CAMMS offers training on all procedures and systems used during deployment. It is a dry run for key personnel, familiarizing them with what's going to happen. Being able to accomplish ready results, CAMMS makes sure the systems functions as it should."

"Basically," Reimer added, "it is an educational process to familiarize our people with the terrain, and to practice tactical movements and coordination with the other units for a combined arms team. It also helps to improve our SOP (standard operating procedures) and techniques."

"CAMMS helps the officers of the brigade meet the training objectives in a relatively short time," Reimer noted. "By conducting an after actions review, vital strengths and weaknesses were discussed. Its a great learning experience. Its a very simplified way of looking at the broad picture of the system, while rapidly identifying the strengths and weaknesses of the system."

As the battle developed and the enemy prepared for a breakthrough, the 197th received orders to counterattack. The whole room teemed with excitement. The battle proceeded with the "Forever Forward" brigade triumphant.

Debbie Mundy

Protect your child's safety; don't leave him unattended

Provost marshal

A call comes in to the military police desk sergeant from the mother of a child who was hit by a motor vehicle. When the MPs arrive at the scene, they find that the child entered the roadway from his yard on his tricycle and was hit by a motorcycle. The child is transported to Martin Army Community Hospital and treated for head and leg injuries.

A set of quarters is reported on fire. The military police and fire department respond to the call and find an eight-year-old child left unattended in the quarters. The child is transported to the hospital where he is treated for smoke inhalation.

A military police patrol car is flagged down in the Main Mall parking lot; the patrolmen are told that in row "G" there is a small-unattended child locked in a vehicle and the car is running. The military police arrive to find a five-year-old child passed out. At the hospital, the child is treated for carbon monoxide inhalation.

The MP desk sergeant is notified that a dog has just attacked a small child. The military police arrive to find an unattended toddler had wandered in a yard where a dog was chained. The child got too close and was bitten. The child is taken to the hospital and admitted for observation.

Sounds like an episode from Hill Street Blues? Unfortunately, these incidents are not excerpts from some Hollywood script, they have actually occurred at Fort Benning. Equally unfortunate is that they all could have easily been prevented.

It's amazing that the Army finds itself required to publish regulations dictating to parents the type of care and supervision they must exercise over their children, but this is exactly the case! USAIC Regulation 210-5, Garrison Regulations, specifically provides that no child under 12 years of age will be left unattended in government quarters or elsewhere on the reservation.

In spite of the regulations, the military police routinely receive calls about unattended children of all ages and in all kinds of predicaments. If you are not going to be home, have someone meet your child at the bus stop and sit with them until your return. Don't give a child under the age of 12 a key to the quarters or allow him to remain by himself. Stay with young children playing in the vicinity of roadways.

With regard to leaving children in vehicles, the regulation provides that no child under the age of eight will be left unattended. If you think you will save yourself time by leaving a child in a vehicle, you're wrong! You'll probably find yourself down at the MP station explaining why you left your child unattended — or at the hospital hoping that your child recovers from any injuries received.

Remember, your children's safety is in your hands. Don't leave them unattended.

(Provost Marshal's Office)

Development program helps build better NCOs

By Paula L. Dempe
197th Public Affairs Office

"The NCO corps today is in the best shape I have seen in years. This situation affords us a unique opportunity to make a significant move forward in improving the total professionalism of our Army, by ensuring that we take full advantage of the tremendous capabilities present in today's NCO corps . . . What I am talking about is the active involvement of NCOs in all facets of unit operations and training," said former Benning commander, Lt. Gen. James J. Lindsay in an Oct. 28, 1983, letter dealing with NCOPDP (NCO professional development program).

NCOPDP is a Department of the Army (DA) directed program to train NCOs. However, while the program is directed by DA and endorsed by Fort Benning, the actual individual program is composed of the unit sergeants major and first sergeants.

Each unit is expected, though not required, to maintain a minimum of four hours of training per month. What the unit chooses to cover, and the actual length of time spent training, remains up to the individual unit.

Bravo Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, has developed an extensive NCOPD program. Company B holds eight-hours of training monthly. Semi-annually, they conduct a full 40 hour week of training and classes.

"These classes further the knowledge NCOs need for career development," explained 1st Sgt. Edward F. Brown, adding, "Primarily, the classes cover what the NCO needs on his way up."

Recently, B Company held a 40-hour block of training. Subjects ranged from the problems of dependent travel, to CHAMPUS, to classes with the German, French and British liason officers. Also included was an in-ranks inspection in greens and a full field layout and wall locker inspection.

> "Leadership is trained into the personnel constantly. Our shadow chain-of-command enables soldiers to be trained and groomed for when they get promoted."

"The NCOPD program provides an equitable and reliable means of maintaining individual skills and developing and maintaining noncommissioned officers' professional skills . . ." Fort Benning CSM Roy Owens wrote in the Oct. 28, 1983, policy guide to the NCOPD program.

The NCOPD program encompasses a shadow chain-of-command which takes effect when the NCOs have to be out of the area.

The shadow chain-of-command is composed of PFCs and Sp4s. All NCOs, from squad leaders up to the first sergeants, have a member of the lower enlisted ranks ready and capable of filling their positions.

"Leadership is trained into the personnel constantly. Our shadow chain-of-command enables soldiers to be trained and groomed for when they get promoted. This way," continued Brown, "they won't be completely unaware of what an NCO does when they become one themselves."

"Another aspect of the shadow chain-of-command," remarked Capt. Peter J. Palmer, B Company commander, "is that by putting PFCs and Sp4s in leadership positions, they realize just what it is that squad leaders and platoon sergeants do. They get to see things from an NCO's point of view."

Non-commissioed officers are expected to be familiar with a wide range of topics in order to be considered proficient at their jobs, and able to help the lower enlisted members under them. This includes knowing the answers to all of their soldiers problems, regardless of whether those problems are legal, financial or medical.

Periodically, after a certain turn-over point in personnel has been reached, training starts anew.

"NCOs need to have time to get away to develop themselves," said Palmer. "With the rapid turnovers, and newly promoted NCOs, they need a lot of training."

Men of the 10th Mountain Division are using spun glass to camouflage their 105mm howitzer in Italy during World War II.

Lake Garda. In February 1945, after three days of bitter fighting, the division captured Mount Belvedere and other nearby mountain peaks. On April 15 the 10th spearheaded the 5th Army's Northern Apennine offensive. On April 26, 1945, the 10th cut the main route to the Brenner Pass, ending German resistance in Italy on May 2, 1945. The division had been opposed by, at various times, the 232nd Infantry Division, the 114th Jaeger Division, the 8th Mountain Division, the 29th Panzer Division, the 334th Infantry Division, the 90th Panzer Division, the 65th Infantry Division and the 305th Infantry Division. All these units were elite, crack outfits of the German Army. The 10th Mountain Division destroyed five Axis divisions as effective combat units.

After the end of hostilities, the division served on occupation duty until it returned to the U.S. in August 1945, and was deactivated on Nov. 30, 1945 at Camp Carson, Colo.

The division was reactivated in June 1948 at Fort Riley, Kansas. When the Korean conflict broke out, the 10th furnished cadre for hurriedly activated training establishments, the retraining of reserve personnel and the orientation of recently recalled officers. It also served as an induction and processing station for much of the 5th Army. The 10th was inactivated as a Training Division on May 22, 1954, and was reorganized at Fort Riley, Kansas in June 1954 as a regular Army combat division with personnel and equipment of the 37th Infantry Division. In October 1954 the 10th was named as one of the first two combat divisions to take part in the Army's new unit overseas rotation system, Operation Gyroscope. The division was returned to the U.S. and inactivated at Fort Benning on June 14, 1958.

The unit begins a new page in its history as it reactivates in 1985 at Fort Drum, N.Y. and Fort Benning, as one of the Army's new light divisions.

VA reduces home loan interest rate

The Veterans Administration reduced its maximum home loan interest rate — from 13 percent to 12½ percent - effective Nov. 21. The last change in the interest rate occurred on Oct. 22, when it was reduced from 13½ to 13 percent.

VA administrator Harry N. Walters said the reduction — the third in the last four months — follows improvement in the mortgage market and continuing investor confidence in the economy.

"In an economy that is growing at a stable, maintainable rate and with inflation remaining low, this latest reduction is more welcome news for veterans," Walters said.

The latest drop in rates will lower monthly payments on an average VA loan of $64,000 by about $25. This is about $75 per month less than the payment required on the same amount at 14 percent which was the rate in August 1984, or $255 per month less than payments based on the 17½ percent rate in 1981.

The VA action also reduced by one-half percentage point the maximum rates for graduated payment mortgages (GPM's) to 12¾ percent and home improvement loans to 14 percent.

In addition the rates for manufactured home loans were also reduced. The new maximum rates are 15 percent for unit only loans and 14½ percent for a loan to purchase either a unit with the lot or for loans to purchase a lot on which a unit already owned by the veteran is to be placed.

The rate change does not affect existing loans, whose interest rate remains the same for the life of the agreement. (VA)

Army crime rate slows over past several months

Washington — Army law enforcement statistics show the rate of crime at Army installations has declined over the past several months.

Murder, for example, dropped by some 28 percent for the first half of CY 84 and robbery declined more than 29 percent. Significant decreases were noted in rape, aggravated assaults, larceny, burglary/housebreaking, auto theft, arson and property crime.

Officials point to three major factors for the decline: increased quality of personnel entering service, a stepped-up crime-prevention program and a get-tough attitude by commanders in dealing with offenders. (ARNEWS)

Office gives soldiers legal guidance

By M.N. Smith Jr.
Legal Assistance Attorney

Soldiers and their families, perhaps more than their civilian counterparts, need competent and timely legal advice to guide their personal affairs. This need is met by the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office for over 30,000 servicemembers, retirees and their family members annually.

The Army Legal Assistance Program is a command directed program designed to assist military personnel with their personal legal problems. A new regulation, AR 27-3, was published in March 1984 outlining administration of the program. The regulation answered many questions concerning the program, in particular, who is an eligible client. Active duty personnel, their family members, and retirees and their family members are eligible for legal assistance. Reservists and their family members are eligible for legal assistance only in emergencies or if they are on active duty for more than thirty days. Otherwise eligible clients may be denied assistance if they abuse the privilege.

The Legal Assistance Office provides notary services, preparation of documents such as powers of attorney and bills of sale, and counseling, advice, and assistance from legal assistance attorneys. Notary services and preparation of simple documents are handled on a walk-in basis, while an appointment is usually required to see an attorney. The legal assistance attorneys can provide most all services rendered by civilian attorneys.

However, AR 27-3 prohibits legal assistance attorneys from representing persons in civilian criminal matters, some military administrative matters;and from giving advice or assistance on private income-producing business activities. As a general rule, legal assistance attorneys are unable to represent persons in civilian courts on civil matters. Changes in AR 27-3 allow legal assistance officers to establish programs for court representation of service members in civilian courts. This program will extend to single active duty members in grade E-3 and below, and to married members in grade E-4 and below.

Other active duty members may be represented if obtaining a civilian attorney would create a substantial financial hardship. Steps are being taken now to implement such a program at Fort Benning. Already, the legal Assistance office is aiding service members in simple court action, such as name changes, step-parent adoptions, and uncontested divorces.

The Legal Assistance Office is located on Main Post in Building 5 at the intersection of Vibbert and Sigerfoos Streets. Duty hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Appointments are required for attorney assistance, except in emergencies.

Fort Benning wins safety award

Chicago, Ill. — Fort Benning was recently presented an award by the National Safety Council for the "Best Performance by a Military Installation" in the area of driver improvement programs. Fred W. Young, Jr., post safety officer accepted the award on behalf of his agency at an awards presented in Chicago.

The award was in connection with Fort Benning's safety efforts to improve its driver training program. It offers the National Safety Council's Defensive Driving Course which is an eight-hour classroom course that teaches a driver how to avoid traffic accidents by becoming a safer driver. The DDC course is supplemented by a four-hour course which serves as a refresher program. (NSC)

197th Infantry Brigade activates new company

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

There was a cool breeze blowing as the companies of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade came to attention on Presidential Field. Company banners fluttered in the breeze with the exception of Delta's. They awaited the unfurling of their banner by Lt. Col. Lon E. Maggart, battalion commander, to signify the activation of Delta Company, and the transition of the 2-69th from the H series, to the J series.

"With the transition to the J series, under the organized division 86 concept, Mechanized, Armor Division, Delta Company would give the 2-69th four line companies and a larger Headquarters and Headquarters Company (HHC)," explained Major James H. Owens, battalion executive officer. "The Combat Support Company (CSC) was dissolved in the process. Under the H series, we had five tank platoons. Now, under the new J series, we have four tank platoons, thus improving the command and control of the battalion. With this modification, there is an improvement in tank operations, maintenance, and training."

"At this time we did the conversion of assigned personnel and on-hand equipment. In planning for the transition we had to identify equipment to be moved, property records to be developed, and identify people to be moved," added Owens.

With the re-alignment of the companies, the 2-69th had to expand their HHC to absorb the scouts, mortars, and AVLB (armored vehicle launcher bridge) section, which had been a part of CSC.

"We also had to re-shuffle billets and property. Under the J series, we now have four tank companies instead of three. The advantage is that now we will be able to work with three tank companies. The fourth would continue to support the Infantry School. Previously, we only had two companies to work with," noted Owens.

"The first sergeants of the unit were very cooperative," said Owens, "in reducing the movement of personnel and property from a significant problem to just some extra work."

It's not too late to join Girl Scouts

It's not too late for girls, in kindergarten through the 12th grade, to join the Girl Scouts. Volunteer Girl Scout adults at Fort Benning are placing girls in existing troops or organizing new troops to meet Fort Benning's needs.

Troops meet once a week, after school or during early evening hours at the five Girl Scout Huts: Main Post, McGraw, Indian Head, Custer Terrace and Camp Hide Away. Membership fee is $3 which will be effective until September 1985. Weekly troop dues are between 25¢ and $1. Uniforms are encouraged, but not required.

Through a wide-range of weekly troop activities, girls learn new things and make friends under the supervision of adult Girl Scout volunteers. Training in the Girl Scout program is available for interested adults.

If a girl or adult would like to become involved in Girl Scouts call 689-8543 or 689-3326.

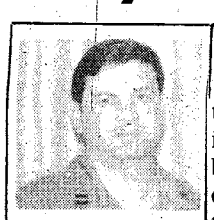
Spiritual

Why did Jesus' own people reject him?



Chaplain Raymond Harper

Jesus has been anointed (baptized) by the Lord and is empowered by the spirit of the Lord to preach good news to the poor.

He has completed his trials for "ordination" and is well respected in Galilee and the surrounding country.

Then he came to Nazareth, his home, and he read from Isaiah 61 and proclaimed its fulfillment in himself that very day.

To those who heard Jesus, to those who read Luke 40 — 50 years later, and to those who read it today, there is no doubt about the identity of the poor.

The heart of the matter for Matt., Mark, Luke, and me is the burning question "why did Jesus' own people reject him?"

Were they offended because he went to Galilee first? This was nothing new; Elijah went to foreigners with God's blessing while Israel suffered. Naaman was healed of leprosy even though he was an outcast of the worst kind, a Syrian.

I believe Bonhoffer pegged it correctly when he declared that the question the Lord Jesus Christ put before the people of his time; before the readers of the Gospel according to Luke; and before the world today is "Who do YOU say that I AM!"

Biblical tradition declares that Jesus was rejected and ineffective among his own people because they lacked the eyes and ears of faith.

Nothing good ever came out of Nazareth. Nazareth was an unimportant agricultural community. And certainly a carpenter's son would not be chosen by God to be the new Moses to lead them out of bondage in a new Exodus experience.

Perhaps the message Jesus preached was too bold and threatening. The poor certainly had no claim on the Messiah — they did not deserve God's grace because in one form or another they were unclean. And Jesus affirms these as the recipients of the kingdom of God!

To release captives, to restore sight to the blind, to set free all who are pressed down by others was the Messiah's work.

To put right those who have been wronged; to make acceptable to God those who are unacceptable to us is quite threatening — especially when it has an economical impact. The acceptable year could be a reference to the Jubilee year in which those who had sold their land in order to survive received it back after 50 years.

34th Medical Battalion combines work and play during FTX, family day

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Huey helicopter hovered high above the wounded soldier lying on the ground below. The medic strapped the nylon harness from the lowered jungle penetrator around the soldier and gave the thumbs up signal.

The air evacuation helicopter hoisted the soldier up and into the hovering chopper. As the Huey accelerated, banked right and disappeared, the women and children cheered and applauded.

Women and children? Air evacuation of a wounded soldier? It was all part of the 34th Medical Battalion's FTX and Family Day.

The 34th Medical Battalion, the largest medical battalion in the Army, deployed its 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital (MASH), Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 498th Air Ambulance Company, 926th Medical Detachment, 5th Medical Detachment, 675th and 676th Medical Detachment, and its 690th Ground Ambulance Company into the field for a five-day field training exercise (FTX).

The battalion was working on those weaknesses it had identified during a previous FTX held in September. The Battalion S-3, Maj. Tommy Mayes, said "the battalion has three critical tasks to work on: exercising command and control, communications with subordinate units and medical treatment skills.

For this exercise the 34th was augmented with several doctors and nurses from Martin Army Community Hospital, enabling the 34th's personnel to work and train together with physicians and nurses.

"In the event of mobilization, the 34th would have doctors and nurses assigned. Bringing in the doctors and nurses made the FTX more realistic for us and was good training for them (the doctors and nurses)," said Mayes.

The scenario for the FTX was for the personnel to train on collective skills, such as emergency medical treatment, aeromedical evacuation, vehicle maintenance, NBC operations and a host of other tasks.

From Nov. 15 to Nov. 17, all units conducted extensive training in those tasks culminating in a simulated mass casualty exercise. On Nov. 18 the battalion conducted a family day in recognition of the Army's Year of the Family.

The families came out to see what their husbands or wives did while in the field, attended worship services, were served a meal prepared in the field and given an evacuation demonstration.

"During this FTX we had a lot of NBC play and a lot of CS gas thrown at us. We also had a night move which was pretty rough. We had to tear down the 2nd MASH facilities, move and then put it all back up. We did it, and that's what we're trained to do," said Sp5 Lawrence Bryant of the 2nd MASH.

After the soldiers worked on their individual and company level skills and tasks, the battalion mass casualty exercise began. Simulated casualties

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

HOW TO SHOP FOR THE BEST HEALTH CARE PLAN.

1. COMPARE COVERAGE AND PRICE.

When comparing health care plans, it's important to look at both coverage and price. You won't find better coverage for the price in a plan available to all federal employees than Blue Cross and Blue Shield Standard Option.

Standard Option Rates for 1985

	Federal Employees (bi-weekly)	Postal Employees (bi-weekly)	Retired Employees (monthly)
Individual	$ 7.55	$1.89	$16.35
Family	$18.67	$5.33	$40.45

2. KNOW WHAT'S COVERED IN THE HOSPITAL.

With the high cost of hospital care these days, you need a plan that gives you extensive protection from costly hospital bills.

Check Standard Option's hospital benefits. If you go into the hospital, you pay only for your personal convenience items and a $100 deductible. Standard Option pays 100% of the rest of your bill for all the care you need for up to six months.*

Other low-priced plans available to all federal employees may pay 100% of the cost only for room and board, and then require you to pay deductibles or co-payments for many other, more costly hospital services on your bill. With Standard Option, you pay only one low deductible when you are admitted. That's all.

*After 180 days, Standard Option pays 75% of your hospital bill except for personal convenience items, for as long as you need to stay. Admissions in non-member hospitals or for mental illness are covered differently.

3. CHECK FOR DENTAL COVERAGE.

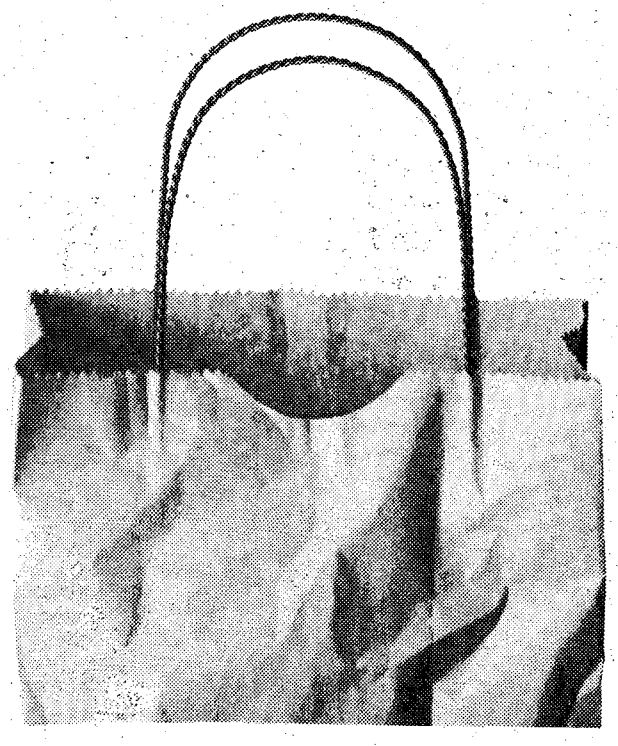
Everyone needs routine dental care. Be sure your plan helps pay for it.

Standard Option helps pay the cost of your routine and preventive dental care, including exams, X-rays, cleanings and fillings, and more—with no deductible.

4. LOOK FOR A WIDE RANGE OF BENEFITS.

Hospital and dental coverage is important, but you also need protection for other common health care expenses.

Standard Option helps pay for a wide range of doctors' services, hospital outpatient care and other health care needs under Major Medical benefits. Once you have met the $250 annual deductible, Standard Option pays 100% for outpatient treatment of accidental injury in the emergency room or doctor's office within 72 hours and hospital charges for outpatient surgery. And, Standard Option pays 75% of the usual,customary and reasonable (UCR) charges for most other health care expenses. And, unlike most HMOs, Standard Option allows you to select the physician or hospital of your choice.



5. CONSIDER YOUR FINANCIAL RISK.

You may need extra protection against the high cost of long-term illness or major injury. Standard Option is one of the lowest priced plans but protects you by limiting the amount you pay toward covered Major Medical expenses. You and your family receive this protection once any hospital deductibles and the 25% Major Medical co-insurance you pay total $2,500. After that, Standard Option pays 100% of all covered expenses for all family members for the rest of the year.

6. CALL ABOUT STANDARD OPTION.

Standard Option is one of the best health insurance values available to all federal employees this Open Season. Call our Open Season hotline for more information. 1-800-554-6800. It's open 24 hours a day, seven days a week from October 29 to December 21. Our representatives are there to help you make the right choice.

will be experiencing during their training. Secondly, this demonstration illustrates for the public some of the capabilities of the U.S. Army Rangers.

The demonstration starts off, literaly, with a bang as demolitions explode and a Ranger instructor hurtles down a steel cable strung at an angle from a 75-foot-tall tower down to the surface of the Victory Pond water. The Ranger is on a pulley with a handle and he lets go about 10-feet above the water and splashes in. After this attention getter, the soldiers tell the history of the Rangers, which stretches from early American frontier days to the recent action on Grenada.

Then the action begins again as a rough and tumble, fast hitting and hurtling hand-to-hand combat match is presented. This includes techniques on offense and defense by a Ranger against aggressors armed with, respectively, a knife and an M-16 with bayonet

Demolitions are then shown to the spectators as the Rangers show how to blow a tree with C-4 plastic explosive. Rangers also demonstrate in succession, by rappelling, which includes the Australian rappell and a helicopter rappel, small boat operations. This is followed by a STABO demostration, in which a Huey helicopter hovers over the treeline and lowers two 120-foot nylon ropes which are secured to the copter's deck. Two Rangers on the ground, in nylon strapped seat rigs, attach themselves to the ropes, the Huey pulls up and away and the two Rangers fly by the audience at treetop level, firing their individual weapons loaded with blanks.

During the Nov. 14 demonstration, the audience included a new Ranger Class, visiting members of the Canadian Land Forces, high school ROTC groups, visiting Salvadoran soldiers and Air Force officers in the Judge Advocate General's Officer Basic Course. One Air Force lieutenant was heard exclaiming "Impossible" and "I can't believe it" as she shook her head.

Sergeant first class Willie Toney, the principal instructor of the Ranger's Morgan Team, said "Rangers-in-Action is nothing special for the Morgan Team. It's simply another commitment, another mission for our team to accomplish." Toney said that "the Ranger's involved with Rangers-in-Action are all Ranger instructors or members of the Ranger Aggressor Platoon, which aggresses students in the Ranger course. This demonstration is not done by a special committee, just Ranger school cadre."

The grand finale of Wednesday's demonstration was a Ranger going down the seven-foot high suspension traverse andhitting the cold waters of Victory Pond. Seconds after he hit underwater demolitions blew up a great, white sheet of water. Again, the word "impossible" was heard from the excited audience. Impossible? Not for the Ranger's Morgan Team. They do the "impossible" 23 times a year. It's just in a day's work.

DEH earns Meritorious SPIRIT Award

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing was presented the first Meritorious SPIRIT Award, while the U.S. Army Infantry School was awarded the first SPIRIT Achievement Award, in separate ceremonies at Fort Benning Nov. 15.

The new awards are in addition to the SPIRIT award that is presented each quarter to the first place winner in the post SPIRIT competition.

"There were so many agencies and directorates doing such great work saving SPIRIT dollars on post that we decided to start naming second and third place winners," said Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator.

DEH implemented five suggestions, eight management improvement actions and one addition to the capital investment program. Annual savings resulting for DEH totaled $905,290 for the third quarter, FY 84.

USAIS implemented one suggestion and two management improvement actions, with an annual savings for the quarter of nearly $4.5 million.

The awards were presented for the 3rd quarter of FY 84. The lapse of time before presenting the awards was due to the time necessary to design and fabricate the awards.

In presenting the awards, post Chief of Staff Col. Carmen Cavezza said, "competent people are our greatest asset, and that's the key to Fort Benning's success."

The new awards will be presented quarterly to agencies and directorates that come in second and third place post wide in SPIRIT savings.

"We have so many people on post working hard to save money," said Mrs. Russell, "and this is one way to give their efforts special recognition."

Getting OMPF copy easy as sending letter

Fort Monroe, Va. — Does a soldier have to go to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., to find out what's in his official personnel file?

No, say officials at the Army's Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center (EREC), where more than 680,000 records are kept. Since the Army converted the paper Official Master Personnel File (OMPF) to microfiche, soldiers may review their records at their home station.

Soldiers may obtain a free copy of their OMPF by submitting a letter to Commander, USAEREC, ATTN: PCRE-RF-I, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301. Requests should include complete SSN, name, return address and soldier's signature. It takes about 20 days to process requests.

"Soldiers should request this free copy once a year to ensure that what we have on file about them is accurate," advised Col. Donald Hall, commander at ETEC.

He also recommends that NCOs in zones of consideration by DA selection boards obtain a microfiche copy of their records at least four months before the board convenes.

"Soldiers can still come to our office at Fort Benjamin Harrison to review their OMPF, but appointments are required," added Hall. Call AUTOVON 699-3361 or commercial (317) 542-3361.

Certain disabled veterans may get 3.2 percent cost-of-living increase

Atlanta — Georgia veterans who suffer from service-connected disabilities are in for a 3.2 percent cost-of-living hike in their compensation if a house-passed omnibus veterans' benefits package wins presidential approval.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said that the measure, known as the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, would also provide a 3.2 percent increase in dependancy and indemnity compensation (DIC) rates for surviving spouses and children of veterans who die of service-connected causes. The increases would be effective Dec. 1, 1984.

Other provisions include a ten percent cost-of-living increase in G.I. Bill benefits for Vietnam veterans; a two-year extension of the Veterans Readjustment Appointment Program, which is designed to enable Vietnam-era veterans and disabled veterans to obtain federal employment; an extension of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training program, and a four-year pilot program to provide education and training for younger veterans on VA pension rolls to enable these veterans to return to productive employment.

Wheeler said that severely-disabled service-connected veterans stand to benefit from recommended increases in the specially-adapted housing grant from the current $32,500 to $25,500, and in the automobile adaptive equipment grant from $4,400 to $5,000. The effective date for these increases is Jan. 1, 1985. (GDVS)

The newly renovated clothing sales store provides a nice place for post personnel to fill their clothing needs.

Renovated clothing sales store officially re-opened at ceremony

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's newly renovated military clothing sales store re-opened during a ribbon-cutting ceremony Nov. 19.

The $383,000 facelift put on by the Geiger Company of Columbus, paints a nicer picture of Fort Benning, according to Eleanor E. Windham, clothing sales store branch manager.

"People like to shop in nice facilities and with this renovation our building looks much better, we have more space for the clothing and the shoppers," Windham said.

The facility has a new roof, new flooring, new wall covering, a suspended ceiling with new light fixtures and a 50-car parking lot, all of which were designed by lead engineer Bill Gordy, with the assistance of electrical engineer Folke Ahlquist and mechanical engineer John Lanzarone.

A new heating and air conditioning system was also installed.

The purpose of the renovation, said Gordy, is because the Army Air Force Exchange System assumed control of the Army clothing sales store, thus combining both stores into one, making it possible for the soldier to compare prices and quality of both military and AAFES merchandise.

AAFES tightens quality controls to improve Class A uniforms

"Military uniforms recently have not been so uniform, but that's going to change," said Maj. Gen. Richard D. Murray, commander, Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

"There has been a problem with the quality of AAFES - procured Class A uniforms," admits Bill Schultz, chief, military clothing branch, AAFES. "However, resolving the problem is more complicated than one might think." AAFES officials say the manufacture of military uniforms is likely the most difficult task in the garmet industry.

"In August we met with representatives from various uniform manufacturing firms and presented a laundry list of quality improvements we want from them," says Schultz. "I think we will see some obvious improvements in the very near future."

AAFES intends to improve the quality of uniforms by tightening quality controls both at the manufacturing plant and at the place of purchase. Stricter guidelines and penalties will be imposed so manufacturers are aware of the exchange's uniform policy before competitive bidding takes place. Also, Exchange officials directed better in-house training and discipline regarding military clothing.

"We also want to reduce our inventory of low-demand uniforms and keep them at our military warehouse in a climatically-controlled, dust-free environment," said Schults. This will cut back on costs and prevent age and soil damage, he said.

AAFES officials have also suggested uniform manufacturers seriously consider upgrading the quality of all military clothing by using the latest state-of-the-art automatic equipment and manufacturing methods. Murray summed up the situation by saying, "quality can't be 'inspected' into our uniforms. It must be manufactured into each of them — and we plan to see that it is!"

were taken to many different locations. The grid coordinate locations were then radioed to either the 498th Air Ambulance Company or to the 690th Ground Ambulance Company for evacuation. The medevac helicopters and ground ambulances were then on their own. The crews did a fast map recon and then headed out to locate the "wounded."

"We must be proficient at map reading and have a faster reaction time than most other units," said Mayes.

Good land navigation and map reading skills are vitally necessary so medical personnel can find the wounded and treat them.

Insuring that privates can read a map and land navigate are just as important as medical leaders possessing the necessary navigational skills.

Sunday was the culmination of the FTX. The families of Lt Col. Nick Johnson's 34th Medical Battalion joined their spouses in the field for a look at their equipment, their jobs and to taste their chow.

Patrick and Eddie Taylor, sons of SSgt. Ed Taylor, were excited about joining their father in the field.

"We're going to see my Dad and eat Army chow cooked by the mess hall. I'm going to try and find some empty blank bullets to put in my room," said young Patrick Taylor.

Mrs. Betty Skeistaitis, wife of Lt Col. Walt Skeistaitis, the 2nd MASH's battalion commander, said 'this is the first time I've been to the field to see what my husband does. I'm really interested in getting a look at a MASH."

Children beamed as they saw their fathers or mothers in steel pots, web gear and with M-16 rifles. After initial greetings the soldiers and their families either stayed at the 2nd MASH or were taken to the 690th or 498th field sites. Once there, the dining facility personnel served steaks with all the trimmings to both civilian and military alike.

Program helps bartenders better deal with drunk patrons

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Club System has instituted a program developed by the Department of the Army for training employees in identifying club patrons who have had too much to drink and how to handle such situations.

The Alcohol Server Intervention Program (ASIP) focuses on employee techniques for preventing intoxication; "cutting off" a club patron who has had too much to drink; and what the employee can do to handle a potentially unpleasant situation. The program tries to instill in Benning club systems bartenders, waiters and waitresses the idea that they may well be the last line of defense in preventing a drinking and driving tragedy.

The program's first class was taught in October of this year, by Barney Cavanaugh, who is with the Fort Benning Drug and Alcohol Abuse Center. After this initial two-hour period, the classes were turned over to the Installation Club Manager, Major Jerry Jackson. The classes are taught once every month for all new club employees. A refresher class is given annually for all club personnel.

The two-hour class is a mixture of talking, the employees reading, writing or role playing and discussion of past or potential situations.

In the class, emphasis is put on the fact that servers have the right and responsibility to refuse service to any person who is below the legal drinking age, obviously intoxicated or in danger of becoming a drunk driver.

Some of the key points in the class include the advantages of getting rid of intoxicated customers versus the disadvantages, effects of alcohol on the body, blood alcohol concentration (BAC), liability of the sellers of alcohol, symptoms of intoxication, how alcohol affects the body, recognizing symptoms of intoxication, tips on slowing down patrons consumption of alcohol and cut off techniques.

Club employees are taught to recognize some specific symptoms of intoxication. Excessive fumbling, profanity, slurred speech, staggering, and hostility are all signs of intoxication. Once bartenders or waitresses identify a patron who is, or is on the way to being intoxicated, they can use some tips taught in the class to prevent the patron from becoming further intoxicated. They should delay service when a new drink is ordered, chat with a patron when he or she first arrives before taking their order to determine if they have been drinking, and not serve a new drink without taking away the glass from the old drink. They should also discourage the ordering of "rounds."

The situation sometimes arises, however, when a club employee is forced to cut off or refuse to serve a patron any more drinks. When using cut off techniques they should be of a non-judgmental nature. The employee should not use words like "had too much" or "drunk" and should refrain from scolding or blaming the patron. Simply telling the patron something like "I don't want to see you get in trouble with the MPs so I'm afraid you can't have anything further to drink" will usually suffice. Once the patron has been cut off the employee should be firm and not back down. Finding a sober friend for the intoxicated person is also encouraged so the friend can take charge of the drunk person. The employee should then arrange alternate transportation for the intoxicated patron. If, in the end, it looks like things might get out of hand, the server is told to call the MPs. The bottom line is that it is better to lose the good will of one drunken patron (for his or her own good) than the safety of others.

Jackson also stressed that "the club employees are told it is club policy that management will back them up. If one of our employees makes the decision to cut off a patron because of intoxication then that's it. The patron is cut off."

Jackson also added that "in Fort Bening clubs we seldom have problems with drunks. Usually, we never have to get the MPs involved."

Colombian exchange officer one of a kind Ranger

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Ranger is sometimes called one of a kind. Here at Fort Benning, 1st Lt. Sergio S. Mantilla, an instructor at the Ranger Department, is one of a kind of a different sort. He is a foriegn exchange officer with the Rangers at Camp Darby.

Mantilla, a 26-year-old from Ducarananga, Colombia, began his tenure with the Rangers 17 months ago and has enjoyed every bit of it. "I volunteered to become a Ranger and was in Class 1-84. I was surprised to have been selected to become a cadre here, but I have thoroughly enjoyed it," Mantilla said.

Mantilla began Ranger school in October 1983, graduating in December 1983. He said the training was exactly what he thought it would be and hopes to carry that experience back to Colombia.

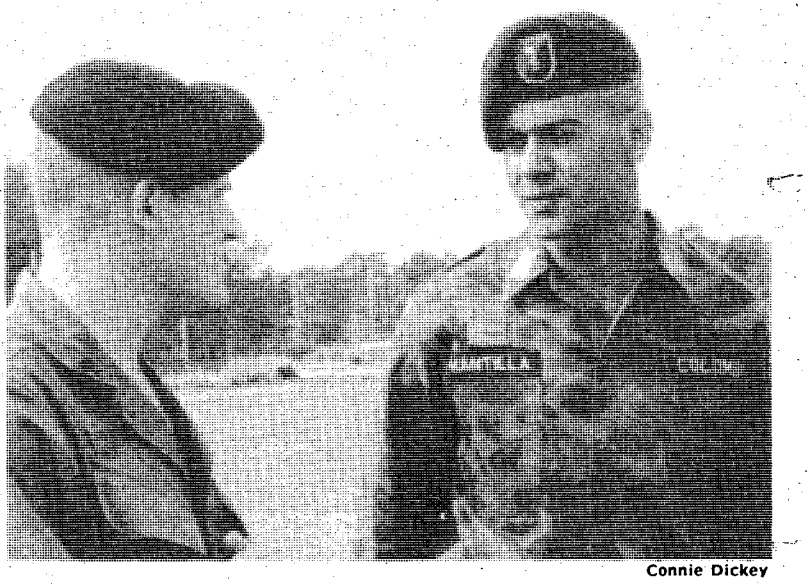
When he returns to his home in December of this year, he will again be one of a kind. He explained there are just seven qualified Rangers in Colombia, counting him. Only three are on active duty.

Mantilla, a seven-year veteran of Army service, graduated from the Colombian Military Academy in 1977, where he then went to Airborne School at the Special Forces Group School in Panama. He obtained his Master Wings here, then went on to Ranger School.

The Ranger Department started the officer exchange program in April 1981 and Mantilla is the third exchange officer the Rangers have had. The cadre at the department feel this exchange is very beneficial. Captain Fred Gramling, camp commander at Camp Darby, said "I've worked with Lieutenant Mantilla for about six months and I think the exchange program is a tremendous idea. We get a chance to see what a person from a foreign country knows. There's a lot of guerrilla warfare in Colombia, so that's what the lieutenant demonstrates to the students. We've all benefitted from having him here."

Mantilla was selected the Instructor of the Month for July and that honor is well deserved according to Gramling. "He was in competition with all the instructors on post and he does a great job. I always hear the students praising his ability."

His stay here has been enjoyable, except he said he did miss Colombia, especially his family. "Everything in Colombia is family-oriented. Everything social, everything period, is centered around the family."



Connie Dickey

The Internal Revenue Service may still owe you money

You may be one of 2,408 people whom the IRS owes money this year. Each year thousands of refund checks are returned by the Postal Service as undeliverable mainly because taxpayers have moved without leaving a forwarding address.

If you have expected a refund from your 1983 tax refund or an earlier year and haven't received it yet, call the IRS Tax Information number listed in the telephone book. If you call, be prepared to give your name and address as it appeared on the tax form, the year for which the taxes were paid and your social security number. The IRS assistor can then check your account. You may write to Internal Revenue Service Center, Refund Inquiry Unit, Atlanta, Georgia 31101 and establish your identity and right to receive the check by furnishing the following information:

- The name and address exactly as shown on the tax return;
- The present name and address if different from that shown on the return;
- The tax year for which refund is believed due;
- The social security number;
- The amount of refund claimed, and any other pertinent information needed to verify the claim; and
- The signature (not printed); if it is a joint return, both should sign.

Taxpayers who want to avoid confusion in future years should leave forwarding addresses when they move. They should also check their returns to make sure they are correct and readable, and attach the peel-off label attached to the tax package. (IRS)

Command sergeant major reflects on long Army career

By Joe Donahue
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Command Sergeant Major Harry L. Brooks of Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintainance Battalion, will retire after more than twenty-seven years of service in the Army. Brooks enlisted in the Army in November, 1956, in Memphis, TN. Throughout his career, Brooks has seen many challenging and exciting assignments.

CSM Brooks has served in many stateside and overseas units. His CONUS assignments include two tours at Fort Benning and one at Fort Lewis. Overseas, Brooks served three tours in Germany and Berlin, one in Hawaii, and one tour in Vietnam with the 9th Aviation Battalion. Probably his most memorable assignment, Brooks said, was at Fort Lewis. While stationed there in 1961, Brooks' unit deployed to West Berlin during the crisis over the building of the Berlin Wall. They remained there for six months.

CSM Brooks' military awards include the Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Army Acheivement Medal, Meritorious Unit Commendation, Good Conduct Medal, seventh award, Army of Occupation Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Vietnam Service Medal, and the Vietnam Cross of Gallantry with Palm.

CSM Brooks has had many good expeiences with the Army during his career. He feels his service was "really rewarding, especially Berlin and here at Fort Benning." Brooks said that his job as a Command Sergeant Major was the most challenging he has held, but that it taught him a great deal. Vietnam and the Berlin crisis were exciting for him as he witnessed history first hand.

"His job as a Command Sergeant Major was the most challenging he has held."

Following his retirement, CSM Brooks plans to enter the civilian world, specializing in automotive maintainance and supply with a large corporation. He and his wife Bernice have three children. One son followed Brooks' lead and is a soldier in the Army.

The Cycle Products bicycle seat, model 555, was sold as a replacement seat for most BMX, lightweight, racing and other bicycles, according to the manufacturer's label accompanying the product.

If the seat is subjected to repeated impact, the seat post could break through the seat. AAFES has removed the Cycle Products seat, model 555, from its shelves and urges owners to bring back the seats, which sold for $3 at exhanges. A full refund will be given for the returned seats.

Greyhound reduces holiday fares

Washington — Greyhound Bus Lines have announced a furlough fare program and a cargo shipping rate reduction in time for soldiers in the United States to save dollars during the holidays.

Greyhound reduced their 15- and 30-day Ameripasses by 50 percent for active duty soldiers and retirees. Family members between the ages of five and 11 get a 75 percent discount, and children under five travel free.

This rate reduction, which began Nov. 15, cuts the 15-day Ameripass price from $249 to $124, and slashes the 30-day Ameripass from $349 to $174. Ameripasses are special travel packages that offer unlimited travel within the continental United States.

According to Tim Downey of the Military Traffic Management Command, Greyhound has also reduced their package express rate as much as 85 percent for active duty soldiers to receive and ship packages that weigh up to 100 pounds.

The special package express rate program works like this: friends and relatives can ship a package weighing no more than 100 pounds to a soldier anywhere in the Greyhound system in the United States for $10 or less. The same rate applies to a soldier sending a package to another soldier. Greyhound requires that the soldier provide a valid active duty miliary identification card to send or receive the package to qualify for the special rate.

Post family member named top model

By Joe Donahue
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Fort Benning woman was recently named "Model of the Year" in a local modeling contest. Sherry T. Macklin won first place, Professional Division, in a contest sponsored by Mable Bailey Fashion College and School of Modeling of Columbus.

Mrs. Macklin is the wife of Capt. Phillip D. Macklin, now attending the Infantry Officer Advanced Course here at Fort Benning.

The contest took place Nov. 10. Competitors were rated on poise, projection, outfit, turns and professionalism.

Mrs. Macklin said the competition was stiff. She had previously won a contest in Savannah, Ga., sponsored by the Millie Lewis Modeling Agency there.

Mrs. Macklin is a journalist by trade with a bachelor's degree in Mass Communications. She worked for a time as a television news reporter in El Paso, Texas. Most recently, Macklin was employed as assistant editor of the Fort Stewart post newspaper.

Mrs. Macklin has modeled in Savannah and in Charleston and Hilton Head, S. C. "I hope to model wherever I go, as well as other things," she said. She tries to adapt and "make the most of our assignments."

Officer enjoys challenge of coaching football

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Know of a struggling football program anywhere? If you do, the man you need may be Major John Ross, Fort Benning Community Life Officer.

Ross has been involved in athletics all his life, and has yet to be associated with a mediocre or losing team. "I guess I've always been associated with winners," said Ross, "but as a player I always considered myself as just a consistent, average performer.

"When I started coaching I developed a philosophy, which was to find a program that had a losing history, and coach that squad up to a competitve level of play. Then I would leave to find another struggling program to work with. I enjoy challenges like that," added Ross.

Ross' love for sports began at an early age. He grew up in a small town outside Iowa City, Iowa that placed heavy emphasis on sports. In junior high he participated in football, basketball and track. Ross then attended English Valley Community High School in Iowa, where he was a 4-sport man during all four years.

Although he was just an average competitor in all four sports he did quarterback the football team to two consecutive state championships. As it was, the school's baseball and track teams also managed to capture at least one state title while Ross participated.

Since he was only moderately recruited after graduation, Ross elected to attend the Wentworth Military Academy in Lexington, Mo. It was there while Ross played sports he also took a liking to the military.

As a freshman quarterback Ross spent many games handing off to some of the team's talented running backs, instead of displaying his own passing abilities as the signal caller. He also played baseball and basketball.

As a junior, Ross transferred to the University of Iowa, where a previously injured shoulder never properly healed. He was soon told that any more sports participation could force him to have major surgery. Ross then became involved in the school's ROTC program, gave up sports and worked toward earning his commission, which he received in 1966.

It wasn't until 1971 that Ross' wife, Sonia, suggested he take up coaching. Ross hated to be away from sports and after a broken thumb didn't heal he decided to try coaching.

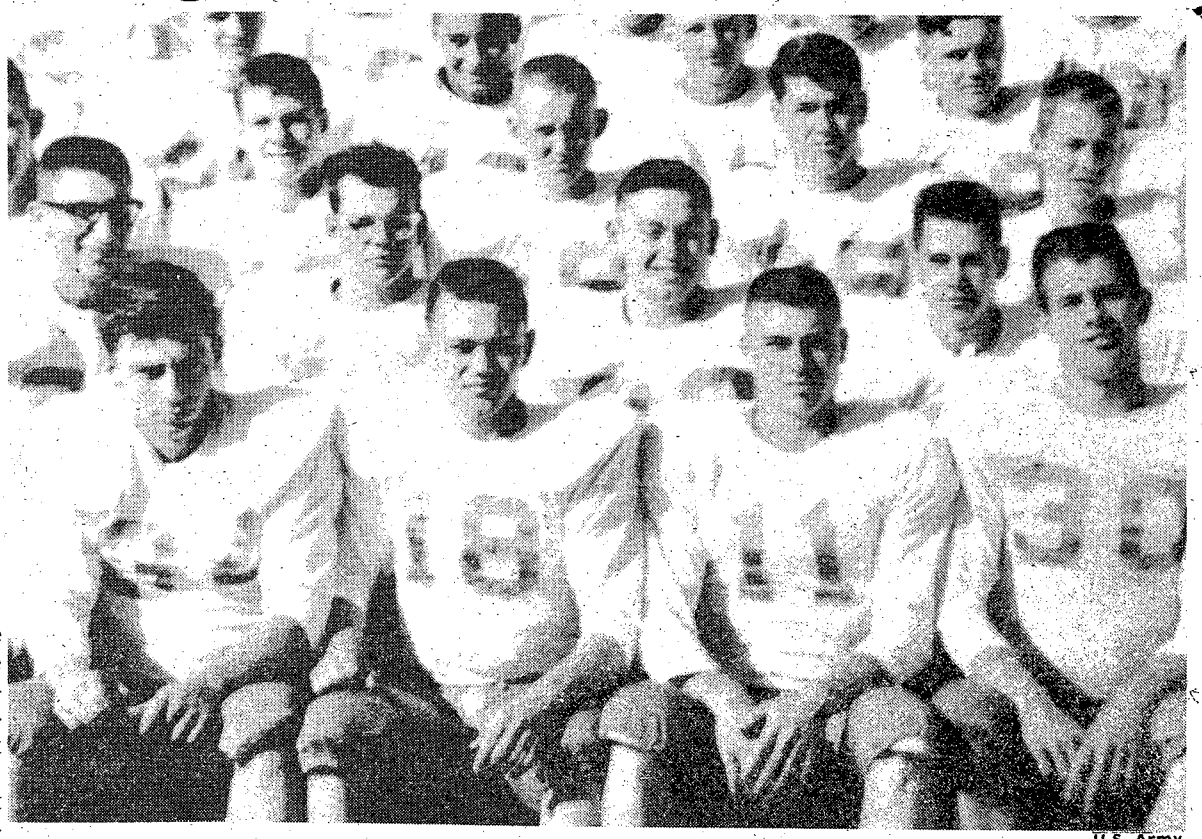
Thus when Ross arrived for duty in Hawaii in 1972 he started serving as assistant coach for one of the installation's football squads. A year later when he was named head coach of 1st Bn., 9th Infantry, 25th Infantry Div. and led the squad to three consecutive US Army-Hawaii Championships. He left Hawaii in 1975 with a coaching mark of 29 wins, 2 defeats and one tie.

Ross then came to Fort Benning, where for three years he served as the Fort Benning Doughboy's offensive coordinator. In 1977 he departed for the Army Materials and Mechanics Research Center in Watertown, Mass. He was one of only 13 other military personnel who worked at the center, compared to some 650 civilian employees.

While at AMMRC Ross had the privilege of becoming a part-time assistant coach with Boston College. He also served as the offensive coordinator for Belmont High School in Boston.

In 1981, Ross returned to Fort Benning where he again performed as Doughboy offensive coordinator. One year later he was named head coach.

The Doughboy football team has since been temporarily disbanded and it's something Ross truly misses. "Since it originated in 1975, Doughboy football has been the most patronized single-family activity on post. I certainly hope it will return. Last year, eight home games attracted 55,000 fans to see the Doughboys in action.



U.S. Army

Ross also coached the Phenix City Southern Vikings, a semi-pro football team that this past year went 8-2 and advanced to the Georgia Football League Championship.

As a head coach Ross has a career record of 51-11-1.

"Other than my family I have two real loves; the Army and football, said Ross, "and I love both equally.

Proper nutrition needed for optimal athletic performance

By Reynaldo R. Martinez
MACH Clinical Dietitian

Who can forget the scene from the movie "Rocky" in which Sylvester Stallone swallows several raw eggs before beginning his rigorous training routine.

Athletes are constantly searching for the perfect ingredient which will allow them to reach their peak competitive fitness. Many coaches and athletes believe that nutritional supplements are absolutely necessary in order to achieve optimal athletic performance.

Even the average person training for personal fitness seeks dietary aids which will hasten the achievement of his health goals.

Common dietary supplements consumed in unnecessarily large quantities include: proteins, vitamins, carbohydrates, caffeine, lecithin, wheat germ oil, fats and sweetened "sport drinks."

Qualified nutritionists agree that daily consumption of a balanced diet is the only diefary requirement necessary to achieve peak physical performance. Athletes in training will automatically increase the amount of food they consume in order to compensate for their vigorous exercise. If the additional amount of food is chosen from the basic four food groups, then the athlete will ingest nutrients in amounts greater than what is specified in the recommended daily allowances and will meet any increased nutrient needs imposed by exercise.

Almost every athlete has a precompetition or training dietary ritual which supposedly improves his performance. Rocky swallows raw eggs, the body builder may consume large quantities of lean red meats or protein powders, and the wrestler may drink a mixture of hot tea, lemon and honey.

Whether or not all of these foods actually help the individual athlete physiologically remains to be proven. The positive effect, however, may be in the psychological "energy" the supplement may supply. If someone believes a certain food will improve physical performance, then it probably will. The athlete will subconsciously train harder and will subsequently be in better physical condition.

Keep the conditioned wrestler's tea mixture from him before a match or training session and he will probably not perform as well. The wrestler may have been in great shape physiologically, but because his magical "energy" drink was not available his mind allowed him to "run out of gas" sooner.

Only a few dietary supplements have demonstrated positive physiological effects on athletic performance. Two examples are caffeine and a technique called carbohydrate loading. Glycogen (the carbohydrate storage form in the body) is involved in both situations.

The consumption of 330 mg of caffeine (approximately 2.5 cups of coffee) one hour prior to exercising has been shown to improve endurance in moderately strenuous exercise. In one study with caffeine, test subjects were able to exercise an average of 90.2 minutes compared to 75.5 minutes without caffeine before exercise. The effect may be caused by caffeine's ability to increase the levels of fats in the blood which in turn results in fat being used for energy and glycogen being saved for prolonged exercise.

People who are not accustomed to consuming this much caffeine may encounter difficulties, such as nausea and tremors, which are usually associated with high caffeine use. Conversely, people who regularly consume large amounts of caffeine may not notice a difference in athletic performance because of a high tolerance for caffeine.

Carbohydrate loading is achieved by increasing the body's ability to store glycogen. Through dietary depletion and repletion of the body with carbohydrates, the athlete is able to "super saturate" the muscles with glycogen. The "extra" glycogen is used for energy towards the end of endurance contests when normal levels of muscle glycogen would have been depleted. Carbohydrate loading has caused serious problems in people with diabetes, heart disease and kidney disease. For this reason, a carbohydrate loading regimen should be approved by a competent professional. Once approval is obtained, carbohydrate loading should only be practiced a few times per year.

Three nutrients classically abused by athletes are protein, vitamins and minerals. There are no proven advantages from eating extravagant amounts of protein. In fact, too much protein may actually put an excessive workload on the liver and kidneys.

Large amounts of vitamins can also be dangerous and expensive. Toxic levels of the fat soluble vitamins (A, D, E and K) can accumulate in the body from long term abuse.

In general, physical performance cannot be improved by consuming a specific nutritional aid. Good judgment in choosing foods from the basic four food groups is all that is required. The athlete's increased consumption of food will more than compensate for any increased requirements from strenuous physical activity.

Faith school students prep for road race

The students at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School got a leg up on the rest of the elementary schools Wednesday.

Tuning up for tomorrow's annual Faith Road Races on post, the children attended a running clinic put on by former Hardaway and Kendrick cross-country coach Bruce Skiles. As part of the clinic, the children ran a mile around the school.

Tomorrow's first race - a one-miler for those 14-and-under - starts at 8:45 a.m. A 2-mile run is set for 9:15 a.m. and a 5-miler at 9:45 a.m. The awards ceremony will be at 11:30 a.m. at the school gym.

People can still register today for the race. Registration is being held at the school. The cost is $3 for 14-and-under and $4 for the older runners. On race day, the admission fee goes up a dollar.

The top five male and female finishers in each race will receive a trophy; the top three in each age group earn medallions.

For further information on the event, call 545-2309 or 545-5524. (Ledger/Enquirer)

Runner gives marathon training tips

By Fred Dyer
Marathon runner

In my Sept. 28 article on preparing for the Infantry Marathon, the gradual increase of your training mileage to the 50-mile-per-week level before the marathon was discussed, plus the importance of a long run each week, with that run followed by a day of rest.

In addition, a strategy was discussed that I learned too late in the 1980 54-mile London-to-Brighton foot race. This strategy involves combining running and walking from the outset of the marathon as a means to run a relatively comfortable four-hour first marathon.

Now I want to discuss the importance of running another footrace or two before the marathon, shoes for training and racing, prevention of chafing on long runs and carbohydrate loading.

Shoes come in two types for the road racer, training flats and racing flats. Training flats have much more padding and are heavier than racing flats. Unless you are as skinny as I am, you should run your marathon in the same training flats that you use for your training runs. Don't buy a new pair of shoes just before the marathon. Run at least 100 miles in them and make sure that they don't give blisters or other problems on your long runs. If they do, get some different ones despite their ridiculous high cost. Keep your toenails cut short and buy shoes that don't cramp your toes. Lost toenails are a common occurrence in first-time marathoners.

Long runs also take their toll on men's and women's nipples. I usually put band-aids over them if I am running with a shirt, despite the pain associated with taking the band-aids off (I have a little bit of hair on my chest).

If you find that you have parts of your body that chafe during your long runs, apply vaseline to the area before you start. Don't forget to vaseline these areas on marathon day as well.

Your last week of training should involve a lot of rest. I would recommend no running at all on the Thursday and Friday before the Saturday Infantry Marathon. I would make the long run on the weekend before, only about ten or twelve miles. At that point in time, additional hard training will have no payoff. You need rest instead.

Carbohydrate-loading is controversial. Traditionally, it involves denying your body carbohydrates for about three days to get your body ready for maximum carbohydrate absorbtion, then piling in the carbohydrates for the last three days before the race. Many runners, including myself, skip the carbohydrate-depletion phase. It makes you feel miserable, and there is some real question about whether it helps your muscles store glycogen (also known as muscle-starch).

On the other hand, carbohydrate-loading for the last three days is one of the greatest pleasures of marathoning. On the night before a marathon, my plate of spaghetti overflows and I also get the odd carbohydrates from a can of beer of two. Lots of non-alcoholic liquid is important to aid in the storage of glycogen in the muscles. Save most of the six-pack (12-pack?) for after the race when your body really needs the potassium when the dehydrating effect of the alcohol won't hurt.

An inferno of smoke and flame surrounds U.S. Navy ships docked at Pearl Harbor during the Japanese attack.

Day of Infamy

Columbus resident remembers Pearl Harbor

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

December 7, 1941, started out as just another day for Martin Winters, a 21-year-old civilian working for a Navy contractor at Pearl Harbor.

Winters had lived in Hawaii since March 1939, when his father was named director of agriculture for the state.

"I was waiting for the work train to come out of the mountain to carry me into the tunnel where we were building a fuel storage tank, when I saw smoke coming from the direction of Wheeler Field," said Winters. "I joked with a Japanese electrician who worked with me that it must be some of his "brothers" up at Wheeler starting a fire."

Winters said he thought the planes he saw in the distance must be some kind of surprise exercise the Navy was conducting, until a plane passed within 200 yards of where he was sitting and dropped a bomb into the mud at the shoreline.

The pair jumped into the bushes nearby and watched the attack.

The Japanese boy identified the plane as one from Japan, but Winters said he kept arguing that it couldn't be the Japanese because they hadn't declared war.

He learned later that at the time the bombing was going on, the Japanese ambassador was with the President in Washington, handing him a letter which stated that the Japanese were going to take action.

"When the Oklahoma started taking water on its deck, I knew it was for real," Winters explained.

The attack lasted a little over an hour, and Winters watched as Japanese planes flew over the harbor dropping torpedoes.

"They sank all six battleships at Ford Island," he continued. "The Oklahoma went first; it just listed over and sank. The Arizona took a direct hit in its ammunition storage area and blew completely up. It was such a big explosion the shock waves made my ears pop, and it looked just like slow motion."

The Navy was firing its 5-inch guns, trying to shoot down the planes, continued Winters, but there was not time to set the timers properly, and some of the shells were landing on Hickam Field.

Only two American pilots got

Goodbye

Good planning, keeping in touch help ease the strain of separation

By Robert McClain
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Saying good-bye to family members for a year or more because of an unaccompanied tour or mobilization is one of the most difficult aspects of military life. Still, it is one that most soldiers and their families will probably have to contend with at least once in their military careers.

The chief of the Fort Benning Army Community Service, Sam Duggins, understands the problems that families face when they are separated.

"There are so many potential problems these families face because of the separation," he said. "When a husband leaves on an unaccompanied tour, both he and his family are put through a great deal of stress. We want them to know they can find help at ACS."

Separation can be an especially traumatic time for a spouse left alone in the states. "Sometimes a spouse who is away from her husband feels isolated, out of contact with the Army," he said. "They think just because their husband is away, they are suddenly cut-off from the services the Army provides. Our main purpose at ACS is to assist families with their problems. If we can't help them directly, we can direct them to the right organization to help them with their problem."

Mary Behrend is the coordinator of the Army Family Advocacy Program on post and she is familiar with the pressures and stress spouses are faced with when separated from their husbands. She is one of the many people at Fort Benning with which family members can discuss their problems.

"It's difficult for soldiers' families during separation," she said. "Basically, many spouses are becoming single parents. They suddenly have to become both mother and father to the children. It's difficult to learn someone else's role, plus do your own.

"Many spouses will have responsibilities they have never had before. Suddenly they are faced with paying the bills, filing the tax return, fixing the car, things they may have never done before. It can be a very scary experience."

She said many spouses are just

What are your feelings on how the Army handles family separations?

SFC Gary R. Leeds, Operations NCO, USAIC MP Co., MP Activity-"When I was overseas I always worried about how my family was doing back at Fort Campbell. The way the policy is now you could never adjust to being away from the ones you love. The friends I developed at Fort Campbell were a bigger help to me and my family than the Army was."

SFC Raiford A. Hardy, B Co., 2/69 Armor-"As far as keeping contact with your family goes, I think the present system is pretty bad. While I was in Korea you had to be put on a waiting list just to phone home. But anytime you leave your family it's rough. I just don't think the policy is right."

SFC Daniel W. Conner, HHD, 67th Maint. Bn.-"I think that when a soldier is notified that he/she is going overseas, his/her spouse should then be notified by the Army also. The Army should also assist the family by showing them who they can turn to to solve their problems. That makes a wife feel better, knowing that the Army cares."

Caring for soldiers, families is Army's number one task

"Far from being a handicap to command, compassion is the measure of it. For unless one values the lives of his soldiers and is tormented by their ordeals, he is unfit to command."

General Omar Bradley.

Over time, when our nation's history is written, its greatness will not be measured by economic wealth, international prestige, or moments of glory in battle, but by how we have cared for our people.

It is the continuous, creative, selfless care given to our soldiers, families and units under the demanding requirements of military life which will give sustaining power to these same soldiers, families and units when our soldiers must go to war.

We must care to train and we must train to care.

Over 20 years ago, General Harold K. Johnson worked with great faith to develop the concepts of "the Army takes care of its own" and "let's put the personal into personnel." He helped start the Army Community Service. Over the years, the Army has built on that commitment to caring for soldiers and families.

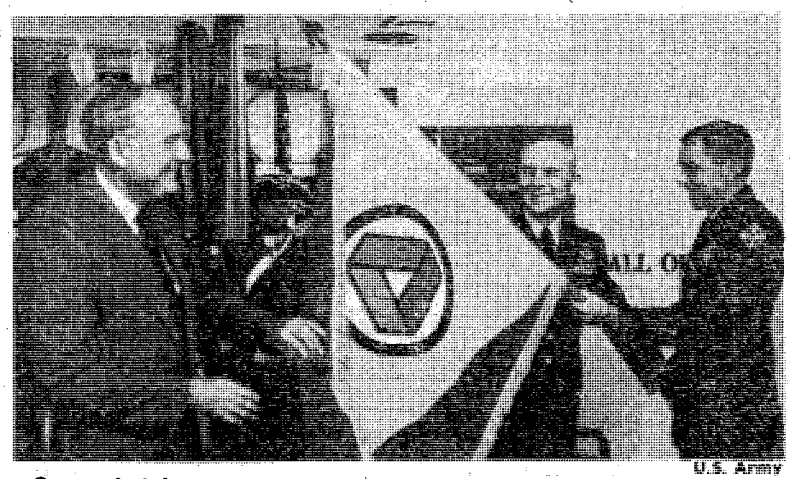
All of us have a moral obligation to enhance unit and family cohesion and to foster human values within our military community. The stronger the family, the better the soldier tends to fulfill his role in military life. As Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. has said, "the stronger the family is at sustaining values and strengthening bonds, the better the children are, and in a sense, the better the nation." There is a dimension of the American dream, the notion of strength, that is tied to the military family, and we have a great opportunity to influence and perpetuate that dream.

There is another dimension that is both significant and a point of self-interest to the Army. Our most important mission is to maintain the readiness of the Army in order to protect this great nation. That is our first task. But readiness is inextricably tied to soldiers' morale and discipline, and to sustaining their families' strength. Therefore, to the extent we can make those soldiers and families feel better about the Army and the support provided by the Army, then the better off will be the soldier, the Army and the Nation.

Caring for soldiers means much much more than cursory interest in their affairs. Caring means sincere involvement in helping to find solutions to their problems and in improving their welfare and that of their families. Caring means dedicated teaching and training so that soldiers are successful in battle or in tough training, and so that they survive the perils of war. Caring means setting examples of moral and professional excellence so that soldiers can be inspired to reach. And caring means nurturing a command climate where soldiers are challenged, and where they can feel good about themselves and the Army because they can learn, grow, and "Be All They Can Be."

There are fundamental, practical reasons for bonding soldiers, families and the Army together, and there are many areas where we can make progress. We are fortunate to have many caring agencies such as the chaplains, the Army Community Service, the Red Cross and other organizations who work on building a stronger Army by boosting "soldier and family power."

This year, 1984, has been designated the "Year of the Army Family." This is not a passing theme. The Army remains committed to formulating legislative initiatives that will provide substance to the program. We are building organizational momentum, but it will take everyone in the chain of command to assure success.



U.S. Army

General John A. Wickham, Jr. (c) presents the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center flag to its first commander, Maj. Gen. Robert M. Joyce (r) as Secretary of the Army, John O. Marsh, Jr. looks on. The center was established to plan and develop policies and to operate systems and programs which meet the needs of Army families.

Recently, I received a letter from a young soldier who tells a moving story about the two-way commitment between the Army, its soldiers, and their families. In a parachute accident, he suffered a serious brain injury and medical experts were doubtful about his survival. But he did live, and he wrote the following letter:

"Life's difficulties are always cropping up, but in the Army people make up for the things that go wrong. There is always someone who will help in the Army. When the doctors thought I would never make it, my unit never gave up.

"They were with me and supported me. They stayed behind me and my family the whole way. Words cannot express my thanks and the thanks of my wife for the care that my company commander, my first sergeant, and my Army buddies showed during this most difficult time in our lives.

Holiday campaign aims to reduce vehicle accidents

Eighty soldiers didn't make it home for the holidays last year because they were killed in traffic accidents. They were drunk drivers.

Two Fort Benning soldiers have died in alcohol related accidents so far in FY 85, according to the Fort Benning Safety Office. Four soldiers died in fiscal year 84.

The holiday season is just around the corner. People are planning their holiday get-togethers and law enforcement agencies are already predicting the death and injury tolls.

The Department of the Army's holiday drunk driving campaign, Dec. 15 through Jan. 7, is aimed at reducing vehicle accidents involving alcohol.

The campaign has two themes, says Maj. Bob Baldwin, of the Military Police Operations Agency at the Office of Army Law Enforcement. One is to enlist the help of soldiers to report drunk drivers to law enforcement agencies and the other is to make soldiers aware that military police will apprehend drunk drivers.

Currently, 34 states have citizen drunk driver reporting programs. The Army hasn't mandated such a program, but many installations have developed their own. Here at Fort Benning, the Military Police Activity will be stepping up their enforcement procedures.

Major Jerry Latta, operations officer for MPA, said the MPs will be setting up traffic mazes at the front gate and at the I-185 exit at Marne Road. "We will be putting up a series of cones that drivers must maneuver through. It is easy to do if you are sober, but can be a little harder if you've had a few drinks."

"We've selected the Maryland State Police citizen drunk driver reporting program as a representative program of the 34 states and are distributing copies of it and a Department of Transportation pamphlet called 'A Guide for Detecting Drunk Drivers at Night,' to all Army law enforcement agencies," Baldwin noted.

How can an average person detect a drunk driver, especially at night? Police agencies, said Baldwin, have determined 20 indicators that drivers are probably intoxicated. These are: turning with a wide radius, straddling center of the lane markers, appearing to be drunk, almost striking an object or vehicle, weaving, driving on other than a designated roadway, swerving, driving at a speed more than 10 MPH below the posted limit, stopping without cause in a traffic lane,

Program helps drug, alcohol abusers get back on right track

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Alcohol and drug abuse prevention is everybody's business," said Barney Kavanaugh of the Fort Benning Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention Control Program (ADAPCP).

The organization is a manpower conservation program made up of five functional areas: prevention, education, identification, rehabilitation and treatment. Of these, the emphasis is on education.

"Many times we get alcohol abusers in here who, after going through our program, are amazed at some of the facts concerning alcohol," said Tom Tennent, head of ADAPCP.

"Believe it or not, some of them think that by just drinking beer they're not really drinking or abusing alcohol. You can be just as alcoholic drinking beer as you can whiskey.

"Others tell us that they can't be abusing drugs because their doctor prescribed the drug," he continued. "Just because a doctor prescribes it doesn't mean you aren't abusing it by taking too much too often."

The objectives of the program are to prevent alcohol and other drug abuse, to identify alcohol and drug abusers as early as possible and to restore the abusers to effective duty.

Tennent stressed that referral to the ADAPCP does not ruin someone's career. "What does ruin careers are DUI's, AWOL's and poor job performance as a result of alcohol or drug abuse," he said.

He said ADAPCP can be likened to preventive medicine. If someone has a drug and/or alcohol problem and the SM is referred to the ADAPCP, he can get the problem under control before it has an adverse effect on his career.

"Early intervention is the key," Tennent and Kavanaugh agreed.

"People, especially spouses, seem to think that they are doing their husband or wife a favor by covering up their problem. They're not doing them a favor, they're hurting them and prolonging the agony," said Tennent.

The longer the person abuses drugs and/or alcohol, the worse their dependence and, thus, their problem becomes, Kavanaugh said.

Tennent also cited the fact that children of alcoholics sometimes fight an uphill battle.

"A male whose father was an alcoholic has four times the chance of becoming an alcoholic himself. It makes it tough," Tennent said.

The number one thing for an alcoholic or drug abuser to do is to stop drinking or using drugs, Kavanaugh and Tennent agree. After that, everything else assumes its proper perspective and the former abuser is better able to cope with problems which may have seemed insurmountable previously.

An alcoholic or drug abuser can always find a reason for using alcohol or drugs.

"The reasons are endless, said Tennent. "We don't care about the reason. Any reason the abuser has for abusing is immaterial. They have to stop drinking or using drugs. That's the bottom line: stop the abuse. Then they can better deal with their problems because they have brought their main problem under control: the abuse of alcohol or other drugs," he continued.

There are two types of treatment available at the Fort Benning ADAPCP: non-resident and resident.

The non-resident program is located at building 2211 on main post. The treatment is on an outpatient basis and techniques used include group therapy and individual counseling.

During sessions, topics covered are reality therapy, rational behavior therapy, couples communication classes, family counseling and antabuse therapy.

Resident treatment is given at Eisenhower Medical Center in Augusta, Georgia. Usually, a period of six to eight weeks is required for the treatment. Spouses are strongly encuraged to participate in about two weeks of the treatment.

The treatment is sort of a triad encompassing the abuser, the counselor and the abuser's commander. The commander works closely with the counselor and relies on the counselor for input as to how the service member in the program is doing. Based on this the commander can extend the SM's treatment or take the SM out of the program if the commander feels he has successfully controlled his problem.

The program is open to both active duty military and eligible civilians. Help can be obtained by calling 545-4415, 545-2742 or 545-4821. Civilians should call 545-1138 or 545-5880. Any service member may have one "free" visit. This means he does not have to identify himself or his unit while initially seeking information.

Military police ask for your help in keeping drunk drivers off road

National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week is Dec. 9-15, and the Crime Prevention Section of the Military Police Activity strongly solicits the support of the Fort Benning military community to help us reach our goal or removing the drunk driver from the roads.

Each year,persons who drive under the influence of alcohol or drugs (DUI) kill or injure thousands of people.

We are all affected by the drunk driver in one way or another. Drunk driving is the nation's number one highway safety problem; it is also the most often committed violent crime. The devastating results are: 26,000 Americans killed each year; 1,500,000 injured; and, related economic costs approaching 25 billion dollars (this includes lost production, health and medical costs and criminal justice and social welfare system costs).

Only one in 2,000 drunk drivers are arrested. This means that if all drunk drivers who are arrested are kept entirely off the road for the following year the impact on next year's alcohol related crashes will be a decrease of only one percent.

Law enforcement agencies, both military and civilian, are already stepping up their efforts to get the drunk driver off the road and to educate the public on the consequences of drunk driving.

The rest is up to you!

Stopping drunk driving is everybody's business. Help us to help you. DON'T DRINK AND DRIVE! (Provost Marshal)

DOD cracks down hard on drunk drivers

The Department of Defense is cracking down on drunk drivers. Those convicted of a first offense could be thrown out of the service, fined, and jailed. Too tough? These penalties pale in comparison to what can happen in some foreign countries.

According to Discovery, the Allstate Motor Club magazine, drunk drivers on the island of San Salvador are executed by firing squads. In Bulgaria, the law is a little more lenient, but not much. There, you're not executed for a first conviction of driving under the influence. It takes two. There are no repeat offenders in that country.

In South Africa, a drunk driver is given a 10-year prison sentence, a $10,000 fine, or both; in Finland, Great Britain, and Sweden, drunk drivers are automatically jailed for about one year.

Other countries try to embarrass drinkers into reforming. In Australia, drivers' names are printed in local newspapers under the heading: "He's Drunk and in Jail." In Turkey, drunk drivers are taken 20 miles out of town by police and forced to walk back under escort.

And in Malaya, wives have a definite interest in seeing that their husbands stay sober behind the wheel. If he's jailed, she goes too. (AFPS) following too closely, drifting and tires on the center line or lane marker.

Other indicators are: braking erratically, driving into opposing or crossing traffic, signaling inconsistent with driving actions, slow response to traffic signals, stopping inappropriately (other than in lane), turning abruptly or illegally, accelerating or decelerating rapidly and having the headlights off at night.

If a driver or pedestrian sees a possible drunk driver, said Baldwin, he should take down the license number and location and call the civilian or military police. People are urged not to take the law into their own hands.

In addition to the 80 soldiers who died last year, another 290 were injured and countless more spent their holidays, or at least part of them, in jail.

When a soldier is apprehended for drunk driving, the handcuffs aren't only put on their hands, but on their careers,too.

197th Infantry Brigade units gather holiday food for needy

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

Cans of fruits and vegetables, boxes of macaroni and rice and other assorted foods were piled high, filling a room in the chapel during the 197th Infantry Brigade's annual Thanksgiving food drive.

This year the brigade food drive was organized under a different plan. The responsibility of distribution of food and the decision of who receives the food was taken up by the leadership of the units within the brigade.

"Units were the key," said Chaplain (Maj.) David K. Bon, brigade chaplain. The idea was raised to the units where each company would collect a certain food item.

The units would then turn in all their collection of food to the chapel, where it would be packed into food baskets as uniformly as possible based on what was received. Our goal was to provide 200 food baskets to the families in need within the brigade.

"The units, after identifying the number of families to receive the food baskets, would submit the number to the Kelley Hill Chapel to be made up. The units would then pick up the food baskets and distribute them to their families," continued Bon.

"The problem of gathering enough boxes to pack the food in was solved by Highnote Moving and Storage, Inc.," added Bon. "They donated a large number of flat boxes, which the NCOIC of the Chapel and his wife spent an evening taping together.

"The support of the commander of the brigade and the chain of command and the cooperation of the units, from the companies down to the individual soldiers, made it happen," Bon said.

"By using this type of structured approach for the brigade food drive, we were able to help the people within the brigade and provide them with a variety of foods in their food baskets," he explained.

"The response from the units was very positive," noted Bon. "It was their response to helping their people of the 197th Infantry Brigade this Thanksgiving holiday that made it work."

SFC Danny L. Clemons, ward master of B Support, demonstrates how a field sink operates in the Brigade Clearing Station for the Canadian staff visitors.

Canadian group impressed with brigade clearing station

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

When turning on to Ivy Road at the entrance to Kelly Hill, one was confronted by an unusual sight recently.

Covering the entire area of a softball field was a huge camouflage dome. It looked like a small mountain range sitting on the field.

Bravo Support Company, 197th Support Battalion, had been tasked by the 197th Infantry Brigade to set up a brigade clearing station to demonstrate to the visiting Canadian Staff College what the 197th Infantry Brigade had in terms of medical support in a combat environment.

Bravo Support responded well when setting up the brigade clearing station. They placed a camouflage dome over the nine tents that made up the clearing station.

"In the field we cover a maximum of three to five tents under a camouflage dome when not in the tree line, explained Capt. Paul T. Laushey, B Support's commander. "Because we were setting up on a clear field, we decided to cover all nine tents. We wanted to show the Canadians and the brigade what we were capable of doing."

The brigade clearing station consisted of: an emergency treatment area staffed by an admissions and disposition section, the first point of contact between patient and physician in field environments; an operating room where "emergency" surgery could be performed and used as a sterile instrument resupply point; and a lab section where basic lab work, emergency dental procedures and routine psychological counseling is provided.

Other sections were field sanitation, medical supply and wards capable of providing basic pa-their planes up that morning, because the Japanese bombed all our planes on the ground. The Japanese only lost about 30 planes in the attack.

After the attack, the people at Pearl Harbor were constantly in fear of another attack or even an invasion by the Japanese, so there was a blackout every night and curfews.

The casualties were terrible; over 1,500 Americans lost their lives.

"They were getting survivors out of the Oklahoma the next afternoon," he said. "The ship had turned over and they used blow torches to cut the hull to get to the men still inside."

Winters enlisted for flight school in 1942 and flew a B-17 on bomber missions all over Europe until he was shot down over Italy in October 1944. He was aided by members of the Italian Resistance, who eventually were able to smuggle him back to American lines. He was listed as MIA for 62 days.

The Oklahoma native spent a total of eight years in the Army Air Corps and settled in Columbus in 1953.

Demonstration gives students better feel of air support

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The students of Infantry Officers Advanced Course Class 1-85 watched a flash of light hit the ridge some 2,000 meters to the east, followed by a booming sound and gray-white clouds rising from the ground.

Artillery rounds had successfully wiped out the make-believe enemy's advancement. To make sure no reinforcements could make their way to the company's position, close air support was called in.

A jeep pulled up in front of the bleachers and an airman climbed out, radio in hand. Within minutes the students heard, then saw, two jets streaking toward the enemy objective.

Two F4E Phantoms circled the target and each dropped three 500-pound bombs. The students watched the small, black cylinders drop from the aircraft and hit the hill, exploding on the target. To ensure their success, both jets strafed the ridges with 20mm cannon fire.

The scenario the students witnessed goes on regularly for students at the U.S. Army Infantry School. The Air Force is an important support element for the school and the demonstration on combined-arms.

"We give an air presentation to classes like IOAC, IOBC and ANCOC so the students can get a feel of what air support is. It helps them better understand what they've learned in class," Lt. Col. Ron Offley, Air Force liaison officer, said.

After a briefing in the bleachers on Ferguson Range, the students were introduced to a fire support team and each person's position within that team was discussed.

From then on the students were able to observe a playing out of what they had been taught; calling in targets for artillery fire, suppressive fire, correcting coordinates and the results of the artillery fire.

The aircraft, part of Detachment 4, 507th Tactical Air Control Wing, provided support for the day's demonstration. The 507th TAIRCW provides tactical Air Force support to Army units from as far west as Fort Riley, Kan., and as far south as Florida.

Detachment 4 is attached to the 197th Infantry Brigade and besides providing support for the brigade's missions, it also supports the Infantry School.

Also providing support for the demonstration were Headquarters and A Batteries of the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Combatting fraud, waste is major priority for Department of Defense

"I consider this type of activity on the same level as sabotage." So remarked U.S. District Court Judge Marvin Shoob in sentencing two employees of Metal Service Center of Georgia, Inc., to 10 years in prison and directing they be placed on probation for five years following their release.

The two had been convicted of selling inferior metal to the Department of Defense. Some of the metal found its way into armor plating for the battleship USS New Jersey and the U.S. Space Shuttle Program. Judge Shoob also stated that one of the defendants "endangered the lives of a lot of people, motivated by greed and a lack of concern for his country."

Combatting fraud, waste and abuse is a continuing priority for the Department of Defense. And in the last three years, according to the Defense Department, significant progress has been made, saving taxpayers billions of dollars.

In October 1981, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger established the Defense Criminal Investigative Service (DCIS) to focus on "white collar" crime. The DCIS is a specialized unit under the DOD Inspector General with about 250 agents in 10 main field offices and 18 subordinate locations.

DCIS has an impressive record: 186 indictments, 143 convictions, and $18 million in fines, recoveries and recoupments. Included in these figures are judgments against these defense contractors:

- Sperry Corporation — Convicted of mischarging labor hours on two Air Force contracts involving the Peacekeeper missile. A total of $30,000 in fines, $650,000 in double damages, and $167,000 in interest penalties were assessed.

- Davey Compressor Company — Convicted of fabricating documents to inflate the cost of materials. Davey's vice president was sentenced to two years in jail and the company was fined $250,000, plus $2.7 million in civil penalties. (AFPS)

NUMB ARMS, LEGS
Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebras in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others.

Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

(1) Paresthesias (see above) (2) Headaches (3) Painful joints (4) Numbness in the arms or hands (5) Loss of sleep (6) St 'fness in the neck (7) Pain between the shoulders (8) Stiffness or pain in lower back (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse that condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals. . . call for in depth consultation in Layman's terms.

MPs increase hunting checks because of incidents

Hunting season has arrived. Unfortunately, the start of this year's hunting season has been marred somewhat by the summer's rash of criminal incidents, vandalism and larceny, which occurred in the range and training areas.

As a result, hunters on Fort Benning this year will probably find themselves being checked more often by the military police and game wardens.

Hunters may also expect to encounter frequent roadblocks and license checks. Some may view this as an unnecessary "hassle," but the increased enforcement will also be a benefit to them.

Summer larcenies and destruction of property were concentrated primarily against range buildings and property, but unattended vehicles belonging to hunters and parked in remote locations could well become attractive targets for the same culprits. Increased activity by game wardens and military police should provide a good deal more security for the hunters' vehicles.

Hunters are further reminded that they must check the range clearance maps to determine which areas are open for hunting. Many units are still engaged in field training exercises at this time of the year, and if you're hunting in an unauthorized area, you could be faced with more serious problems than being "caught" by the game wardens — like facing an M-60 tank platoon running over six-inch thick trees at 20 miles per hour.

Posted range maps can be found at the Provost Marshal Office (building 215, Main Post), Range Control Office (building 2621, Main Post) or the Fish and Wildlife Office (building 5883, Harmony Church).

Hunters should also be aware that the installation hunting and fishing regulation, USAIC Regulation 210-2, has been revised. Abide by provisions regarding bag and creel limits, licensing, and other requirements.

Sportsmen afield this time of the year should also pay special attention to the threat of unexpected encounters with one of the many varieties of venomous snakes that inhabit the woods of Fort Benning. Hunters should be familiar with first-aid procedures and have well-stocked first-aid kits with them while hunting.

Even a well placed arrow will probably require the hunter to track a deer for some distance. Crawling around on one's hands and knees, in the dark with a flashlight, could put an individual in a most compromising position if he accidentally came upon a snake. Consideration, therefore, should be given to stopping the day's hunt just prior to sunset to allow for some daylight to assist in tracking.

Safety must at all times be the foremost consideration for a hunter. Wear the required orange colored jackets and abide by the ten commandments of shooting safety:

Provost marshal

- Unload guns when not in use.
- Be sure barrels are clear of obstructions and that you have ammunition only of the proper size for the gun you carry.
- Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger; know the identifying features of the game you hunt.
- Never climb a tree or fence or jump a ditch with a loaded gun. Never pull a gun toward you by the muzzle.
- Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard surface or water; during target practice, be sure your backstop is adequate.
- Store guns and ammunition separately, beyond the reach of children.
- Avoid alcoholic beverages before or during hunting outings. (Provost Marshal)

"That's what the Army is all about, taking care of each other. I appreciate what the Army is doing for families. And, you know what? I'm proud to be a soldier."

When you receive this kind of message from a soldier, you know you have a better Army, an Army whose leaders care about people. The quality is there. An extraordinary responsibility rests on the shoulders of our leaders — and those who work with soldiers and their families — to capitalize on "this great reservoir of quality."

In accepting the "special trust and confidence" reposed in us, the leaders of today's Army, we must dedicate ourselves to caring for our soldiers, our civilians and our families. The history of our individual careers will reflect the legacy of our gifts to enrich the human dimension. We must be generous.

(Editor's note: This is the first in a series of commentaries written by Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.)

Why risk your career for a few extra dollars?

"Everybody does it."

"The government owes me."

"The Government can afford it."

How many times have we heard these excuses for padding TDY accounts? For falsifying time cards? Or for similar minor offenses? Yet these are common examples of fraud.

Fraud is defined as deceit, trickery, or breach of confidence used to gain some unfair or dishonest advantage. It covers a wide area and costs the government hundreds of dollars every year.

The current Fraud Prevention Campaign, developed by the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command (USACIDC) is currently placing special emphasis on pay and allowance fraud. Pay and allowances constitute a large portion of the Army budget. This area affects and is affected by every soldier in the U.S. Army, as well as civilians.

Most people are basically honest, but given the proper environment they will do things that might fall within the gray areas of the law.

It is so easy to eat at one of the fast-food chains while on TDY and then put down on the travel voucher the price of one of the best restaurants in town. Or perhaps stay with friends or relatives while listing costs of an expensive hotel. Or even to get government money for a seminar or conference that really doesn't help in the person's work but enhances personal goals.

Another common example is the person who has a part-time business that requires being absent from work for several hours at a time on supposed "government business." Everyone in the office is aware of it. Yet the time cards reflect a full 80 hours of work at the end of the pay period.

Other examples of the more common types of pay and allowance fraud are improper out-processing, false jump pay, false dependent travel vouchers, false travel pay, false dependent-mileage claims, false report on non-receipt of regular pay and failure to report downward pay grade changes.

The amounts of money involved may seem trivial. But they can add up to big tax dollars — which means increased taxes or cuts in essential spending, or both.

Equally important, keeping monies to which one is not entitled is a crime. Arrest and conviction can result.

Why risk your career for a few extra dollars? Recognize and avoid fraud in your personal dealings.

tient comfort and nursing capabilities. The wards were made up of twenty beds with a capability of 80 beds, expandable to 120 beds.

"The mission of Bravo Company," stated Laushey, is to provide the 197th Infantry Brigade with division level medical support. B Support accomplishes this mission by utilizing the headquarters platoon for administrative, supply and the command and control elements of the company; the ambulance platoon, which provides the ground evacuation for the clearing station as well as supporting the battalion aid stations; and the clearing platoon, which is responsible for the clearing station with a physician attached."

"The clearing station," continued Laushey, "is the 3rd level of medical support available to the line units of the 197th Infantry Brigade in the field. It is operated and staffed 24 hours a day, seven days a week during field exercises and can hold a patient for up to 72 hours or longer if necessary."

"The Canadians were awed by the brigade clearing set up. They had never seen tents with white liners or tent floors. Their medical set-up for the field extends from vehicles," said Laushey.

"A lot of questions were asked about the physicians assistants (PAs)," said 1st Lt. Shelia A. Warmack, clearing platoon leader." They did not understand the concept of operations as far as medical personnel and PAs were concerned. They asked us if we used nurses and how we supported the battalion aid stations. It was a very enlighting visit for the Canadians and for us."

"The visit went well, and the Canadians had a lot of questions to ask our people," said SFC Danny L. Clemons, ward master of the clearing station."Bravo Support soldiers enjoyed giving the briefings and enthusiastically and professionally answered their questions."

"This is one of the few times Bravo Support got the opportunity to show the Brigade what it has and is capable of doing, added Clemons. On a day to day basis, we don't get a chance to train on the type of equipment we have. Normally it is stored away in the warehouse."

Soldiers compete for Infantryman Badge

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers joked about the event before them as they went about last minute adjustments to their gear. However, despite the jovial atmosphere, a quiet tension flowed just beneath the surface.

It was a cool Tuesday morning recently, when the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, prepared themselves and their equipment for a grueling 12-mile foot march in full combat gear. They had a strict time limit of three hours in which to accomplish the march. All were volunteers, seeking to achieve their Expert Infantryman Badge.

"Immediately after they finished the road march," said MSgt. Fred G. Stinson, supervisor of the road march, "the soldiers had to perform a weapons proficiency test. They disassembled and re-assembled their M16A1 rifle or M203 grenade launcher, within a two minute period for each task of taking apart and putting the weapons back together. Then, their weapons had to pass a function check to pass the first phase of the Expert Infantryman Badge Test."

"In order for the soldiers to qualify for the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB) they have to meet certain prerequisites," noted Stinson. "They had to shoot expert with the M16A1 rifle and pass their PT test with 60 points in each event."

The second phase challenged the soldiers in land navigation. "The soldiers will have to identify grid coordinates in map reading," explained Stinson, "and travel on an azimuth to another point both during the day and night."

The third and final phase was the most demanding part of the EIB. "It was a thorough, hands on skills testing in a round robin set up of 12 stations, 21 tasks to be completed with no more than two "no go's" in order to qualify for the EIB," he said.

Some of the tasks they had to complete were: engage enemy targets with hand grenades; call for/adjust indirect fire; operate radio set AN/PRC-77 or AN/PRC-25; and load, reduce a stoppage, unload, and clear a .50 caliber machine gun.

Gathering around Stinson and SSgt. Jackie L. Stanely, the soldiers listened intently as the rules were stated for the road march.

The half-way point was to be at Weems Pond at Wagner Range. Soldiers were instructed to keep off the "hard ball" for safety reasons, and not to take any shortcuts, or they would be disqualified.

"Keep your steel pot on at all times during the march," Stinson added, "and carry your weapon at sling arms or port arms."

When asked to comment about the coming march, Sp4 James E. Mozie of Charlie Company said, "I am eager to achieve." It was a fitting comment, for Mozie was the first to cross over the finish line two hours and forty-three minutes later.

Of the 36 soldiers who participated in the 12-mile foot march, 21 completed it within the three hour time limit.

Debbie Mundy

Immediately after the completion of the 12-mile road march, Sp4 Brian L. Watson and Sp4 Robbie D. Potter of 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, perform a weapons proficiency test.

Since its beginning in 1918, seven presidents have visited Fort Benning. They were: Warren G. Harding, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, Lyndon B. Johnson, Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter.

The post wasn't quite three years old when President Harding's "Presidential Special" train arrived on Oct. 27, 1921. Accompanied by the Post Commander, Maj. Gen. Walter H. Gordon, he observed an Infantry attack problem at Maxsey's Ridge, watched a company commander's class fire machine guns and looked at new construction.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt visited the post several times as his vacation "Little White House" was located at Warm Springs, Ga., about 40 miles away. His first visit to the post was in 1928 when he was "stumping" the South for presidential candidate Al Smith.

The last time he came to Fort Benning was in April 1943. His presidential train was met at the Fort Benning Depot by a 29th Infantry Honor Guard, the Post Commander Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen and the then governor of Georgia, Ellis Arnall.

He observed Airborne training, including 250-foot tower drops and 12-man "sticks" jumping from airplanes over Lawson Army Airfield. He also watched officer candidates in a battle indoctrination course.

During a demonstration by anti-tank teams, he was shown the Bazooka anti-tank weapon. It was still considered a secret weapon and no details were available except it was "said to be able to pierce the best of the enemy's tanks."

Roosevelt was accompanied on his tour of the post by his Scotch Terrier "Fala," his constant companion.

President Harry S. Truman spent eight hours at Fort Benning when he came here in April 1950. He reviewed a 3rd Infantry Division parade and observed an Infantry battalion attack exercise during the morning.

At a luncheon in the Officers Club, attended by then Georgia Governor Herman Talmadge and other dignitaries, Truman was presented a Follow Me plaque by post commander Maj. Gen. Withers A. Burress.

It was reported that when Truman thanked Burress for the plaque he said, "I think I'll probably put it on the back of my train and see if I can't get a few Republicans to "Follow Me".

During an afternoon fire power demonstration at Hook Range, Truman, an artillery captain during World War I, gave firing instructions to a battery of 105 howitzers as a part of the demonstration.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower visited Fort Benning at least four times. However, three of them were brief unofficial visits to see his son and daughter-in-law while they were stationed here.

His official visit was in May 1960 when he came here to observe Project MAN (Modern Army Needs). MAN was held at Fort Benning to give the nation's top newsmen and industrialists a first hand look at the Army and to reinforce the idea that man is the ultimate weapon, despite the threat of thermonuclear wars.

He had lunch in the field with OCS candidates and watched a firepower and amphibious assault demonstration.

Of all the presidents who visited here, Eisenhower was probably the most knowledgeable about Fort Benning. He was stationed here twice while on active duty, as a commander of tank troops from Dec. 1918 to March 1919 and as a battalion commander and regimental executive officer in the 24th Infantry from August 1926 to January 1927. During this period he also served as a coach of the Doughboy football team.

President Lyndon B. Johnson made a trip covering several military posts during Veterans Day weekend in 1967. He began the trip with a visit to Benning on Nov. 10.

During an awards ceremony in Doughboy Stadium, he personally presented Silver Star medals to 14 soldiers.

When President Johnson made his remarks, Doughboy Stadium was overflowing with people, according to spectators who witnessed the event.

"I think it is fitting that I begin my journey here at Fort Benning," he said, "For you are the beginning of so much that ends in glory for your country and home, and for every man.

"You are a community of courage, you are a family of patriots. That must be our nation's proud claim too — if we are to win the peace that will declare "No life was spent in vain."

The Army was celebrating its 200th birthday when President Gerald R. Ford came here in June 1975. He witnessed a parade and review put on by all post units and addressed a huge crowd gathered on York Field.

"The one thing that best sums up the spirit of this day is the simple but deeply moving statue here at Fort Benning of an American Combat-Infantryman," he said. "The statue, as you well know, bears the Infantry motto. Only two short words, but it speaks volumes for the courage, for the sacrifice, that the American fighting man has always demonstrated. The motto is 'Follow Me.'"

He watched a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at Victory Pond, lunched with the Rangers and concluded his visit by observing the Airborne 5000 demonstration at Eubanks Field.

President Jimmy Carter came to Fort Benning in December 1978 on his way to spend Christmas at home in Plains. He was met on his arrival on Dec. 22 by then post commander Maj. Gen. William Livsey and a crowd of about 2,000 well-wishers. He departed for Washington, D.C., from the post on Dec. 26 and chatted with several soldiers on that occasion.

Redesigning form saves Army dollars

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Vickie Larkin got tired of fooling with the bulky two-page form she had to type up each time she processed a civilian employee's temporary pay change. So she redesigned the form to use only one page and put in the change as a suggestion to DA.

The Finance Center in Indianapolis, Ind., adopted her suggestion, and the revision resulted in an annual SPIRIT savings of $25,300 Army wide. An added bonus for Mrs. Larkin was the $1,200 suggestion award she received for her idea.

"I would have been just as happy if they had simply adopted the new form without paying me for the idea, but the money was great," said Mrs. Larkin, a GS-5 payroll clerk in the Civilian Pay Section, Finance & Accounting Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

The DA4399-R Temporary Change to Employee Pay Record form was originally designed to be a one page, two-sided form, but when the printing plant on post printed it for the Civilian Pay Section, they printed it on two separate pages.

Information such as a person's name and social security number was repeated on both pages, which required extra work for the pay clerk. And it caused more errors in the keypunch phase, because the second page would get overlooked or lost.

"It was an aggravation working with the old two-page form," Mrs. Larkin explained. "The form was poorly organized and over the years they had added more sections to the form, but made no attempt to reorganize it to avoid repetition."

The $25,300 savings per year is based on decreased printing costs and does not include time saved by pay clerks.

Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator, said, "It may just be a drop in the bucket at Fort Benning, but this change saves one whole man year Army-wide, and every little bit helps."

"It just goes to show that there are all kinds of savings out there, and anyone can find them, if they just look at the way they do their jobs," Mrs. Russell concluded.

Mrs. Larkin said she never dreamed her suggestion would be accepted, but felt that it was worth a try. "I figured it was somebody's job to look at these things and I felt like I could at least give them some insight on how we feel about it and how it affects us. People at the Finance Center don't really get to see what goes on down here with us," she explained.

Exceptional kids must be enrolled in new program

The Exceptional Family Member Program provides the soldier with a means of identifying to HQDA/MILPERCEN assignment managers the needs of family members who have physical, emotional, education or intellectual needs, in order to consider availability of treatment or educational facilities at the projected assignment location.

HQDA/MILPERCEN is undertaking a drive to revalidate 2,500 of the present 3,500 soldiers currently enrolled in the program. Individual letters will be forwarded to soldiers explaining the new automated system and identifying the procedures for validation of enrollment under the new system. Fort Benning soldiers must complete new questionnaries at Martin Army Community Hospital. Letters will be forwarded on or about Dec. 7.

MILPOS can assist in accomplishing enrollment/revalidation by identifying soldiers during in/out processing that have special family member needs. It should be stressed that enrolling in the program will provide assignment managers with a way to consider special family needs when a soldier becomes eligible for assignment. Soldiers must visit their local medical treatment facility to enroll.

Soldiers with exceptional family members on assignment instructions, who have not previously completed the new enrollment forms (DA forms 5291-R series), must attach copies of the completed functional needs questionnaire (DA form 5291-R) to DA form 4787-1 and forward to gaining overseas commanders for evaluation.

Medal of Honor recipient reflects on combat lessons

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The new commander of the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, had an anniversary on Feb.15. Seventeen years ago on that day, Lt. Col. Walter Marm was awarded the Medal of Honor for actions in Vietnam.

Marm

In 1965, Marm was a young lieutenant in Ranger School, fresh out of basic training, AIT, and OCS.

"I was in the Florida phase of Ranger School when I was notified that my orders had been changed and I was to go to the 1st Cavalry Division. I knew the unit was headed for Vietnam and I started recalling my instructors tellng us that we had better pay attention because we might be using the things we were being taught. This was just what every instructor in the Army was saying and is still saying. Once I found out about my orders change I really began paying attention. It really hit home," said Marm.

Once Marm reached the 1st Cav. he trained with his men for about one month and then the division was shipped to Vietnam.

During operations conducted in 1965 in the Ia Drang Valley, Marm found himself and his platoon moving through the valley to relieve a surrounded friendly unit. He led his platoon through withering fire until they were finally forced to take cover.

Marm saw four enemy moving into his platoon's position so he moved quickly under enemy machine gun fire and killed all four.

The platoon was receiving intense fire but could not pinpoint the location of the automatic weapon's fire. Marm deliberately exposed himself to draw fire and to locate the machine gun.

Once he located the gun, he took an anti-tank weapon and directed it at the enemy gun position, inflicting casualties but not silencing the gun.

Next he charged thirty meters across open ground and hurled grenades into the enemy position, killing eight of the enemy. Although severely wounded in the jaw, he continued the momentum of the attack with a rifle and killed the remainder of the enemy.

Marm's actions reduced the fire on his platoon, broke the enemy assault and rallied his unit to accomplish its mission. For these actions he was put in for the Medal of Honor.

"I had finished recuperating from my jaw wound and was assigned as an instructor at the Ranger School," he said. "I had already been awarded an interim Silver Star and figured that was it. My commander had told me I had been put in for a very high award, but I had no idea it was the Medal of Honor."The medal was awarded to Marm, Feb.15, 1967, by then Secretary of the Army Stanley Resor.

Reflecting on the lessons he learned in combat, Marm said "training must be taken seriously. You never know when you'll be going to war, just as I didn't."

"The training I received at Ranger School exactly prepared me for combat. In fact, my first mission in Vietnam was to run a recon patrol and I was prepared for that mission because of Ranger training."

Lt. Col. Marm is a graduate of Duquesne University and received a master's degree from the University of Georgia. Prior to coming to Fort Benning he was a liaison officer in the Senate Division of the Office of the Chief of Legislative Liaison, DA.

James Schoonover paints in the CFC thermometer showing that Fort Benning has met its CFC goal.

CFC campaign exceeds goal

The Combined Federal Campaign has received $460,516 in contributions, exceeding its goal of $450,000 for this year's campaign at Fort Benning.

James Schoonover, post CFC project officer, said that 16,042 people have contributed to this year's campaign, representing 51 percent of the workforce.

Following the pattern over the past few years, nearly 94 percent of the amount contributed was by the payroll deduction method.

CFC officials had anticipated the total would reach $480,000 by the end of November.

The CFC has been conducted at Benning for the past 14 years.

CFC officials said that because this year's goal has been surpassed, the Community Activities Association at Benning will receive in excess of $136,500 for its FY 85 funding requirements. The association sponsors various youth, health, service and assistance programs at Fort Benning.

The largest part of this money will go to support Youth Activities on post.

These funds come from the United Way portion of total CFC contributions. The CFC office will move to Room 300, building 35 on December 13, 1984. Unit project officers should turn in final contributions prior to that date, Schoonover said.

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I am enrolled in a vocational program in school and receive education benefits under the GI Bill. I have recently experienced problems in receiving my VA checks on the first of each month. Will my checks continue to be late every month?

A — VA recently changed from quarterly to monthly certification for non-college degree students. Under quarterly certification, students usually received checks on the first of each month. With the installation of the monthly format, veterans and eligible dependents will typically receive their checks sometime between the 15th and 25th of each month, instead of the beginning of each month.

Q — My husband is disabled and receiving disability compensation from the VA. I am applying for a federal job through the Office of Personnel Management. Am I eligible for a Civil Service Preference letter?

A — The spouse of a 10-point veteran whose service-connected disabilities disqualify the veteran for a civil service appointment is entitled to a 10-point preference. This preference is lost if the veteran recovers or dies. (VA)

In a joint effort among the Fort Benning Chaplain's Section, the Director of Personnel and Community Activity and the Post Exchange, more than $10,000 worth of canned goods and toys were collected for the Fort Benning needy. In the process, PX shoppers were given a 10 percent discount on any single item of their choice for purchase for their donation of food or toys.

Through a program developed by the Army and Air Force Exchange System, the Fort Benning PX ran a special deal for its customers: if the customers brought in any food or toys, the customer received a coupon good for a ten-percent discount of any PX item.

"The food donation program and "Toys for Tots,", are ways to help the needy in our community during Christmas and to help our customers save money during Christmas," said AAFES Exchange Manager, Carl Lofstrom.

The PX store manager, Gerald Olson, estimated that the canned goods and toys donated by PX customers "easily total in excess of $10,000."

Once the food and toys were donated, the exchange gave them to the Fort Benning Chaplain's Section for further processing.

"The Chaplain's Section is the only authorized agency we are allowed to donate things to," said Lunstrom.

Once the PX turned over the food and toys to Post Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Michael Ortiz, he contacted Norm Williamson, chief of Quality Life Division, DCPA.

"The bottom line here is giving to the needy during a time of giving, Christmas," said Chaplain Ortiz.

Williamson said, "Army Community Service will take the food and put it into its Food Locker. The toys will be distributed to the needy before Christmas."

Reflections

A prayer for all seasons

By Chaplain Al J. Hartlage

We know it's Advent, but here is a prayer for all seasons.

We should thank God for the love shown by the non-believer; that person who truly loves God without knowing it.

We Christians have a responsibility, because Jesus Christ asks us to love our brothers and because loving our brothers today — without forgetting they are persons — very often means creating and implementing structures at every level, which will enable them to grow in justice and love.

We are obliged to go to the very end in loving our brothers, with our minds and hearts saved by Christ and living in him; "I tell you solemnly, in so far as you did this to one of the least of my brothers, you did it to me."

Lord, you are making my life very complicated!

Your commandment, "You shall love the Lord your God," would have been much easier to obey, if only you hadn't coupled it with another one, similar to it:

"You must love your neighbors."To love them all, all of the time —

That's not easy, Lord.

Even so, I thought I had done it.

I thought I was a good Christian and "charitable to my neighbors."

Everyone thought I was so kind, so available, so devoted.

And now, you tell me that it was not enough.

And you even tell me that perhaps, sometimes, it was wrong!

It's hard, Lord, to love a neighbor that I can see;

But it's even harder to love one that I cannot see; to work for brothers I do not know, and who do not know me; to fight alongside them, for them, against structures, and for structures which themselves are not my brothers but which make or unmake my brothers.

I would have preferred to have had a person of my very own, someone who needed my help.

On my very own road leading from Fort Benning to "wherever." Someone well cared for, perhaps a bit spoiled, and all healed.

But the road from Fort Benning to "wherever" has gotten longer and longer, and now it leads to the end of the earth.

In fact, there are many such roads, all interesting. They cover mankind; they stretch out into time, into what is and what is to be.

Lord, I am on my own small road now. I am moving forward, step by step.

One of my hands is for one brother; the other, for another.

I am too slow and too small to love all my brothers.

I am going to join those who are fighting.

And who, however painfully, are trying to build a world, Lord, in which man, free, will be able finally to love.

I am available, Lord, to you, for them.

I am available, brothers, even though I don't know who you are.

not prepared for the responsibility. "She also has to deal with the everyday crises by herself," Behrend commented. "When little Johnny comes home and tells her he is failing math, she has to deal with it alone. She has no sounding board."

Behrend and Duggins agree that much of the stress can be lessened by some planning. "It helps greatly if the spouse is aware of the things she will be facing. ACS provides a checklist of many of the things the family must do before the separation.

"This checklist can be very useful in easing the stress," Behrend said. "If the woman knows she has all the skills to run the household, the separation will be easier. She needs to have a sense of competency in doing everyday things. If she knows all the services that are available to her, it makes her feel more secure. If the family is having trouble making ends meet, ACS offers budget counseling. She can get help from the food locker or get a loan from Army Emergency Relief. ACS can help her with almost any problem she has."

Loneliness will be a problem for both the soldier and his or her spouse. Behrend said she cannot recommend enough the importance of keeping in touch during the separation. "The phone calls and letters help relieve a great deal of stress."

"The children also need special attention," Behrend said. "One thing that helps is letting the child know he or she has things to look forward to. Knowing that he will get a special letter just for him, a special package or phone call, and marking the dates on the calender helps a lot to ease their stress."

Behrend commented that the children will adjust only as well as the mother adjusts. "If the mother is functioning well, so will the rest of the family," she said. "If she thinks of the separation only as an inconvenience andthat she will get through it, so will the family. If she thinks she can't cope, most likely they won't either."

According to Duggins, ACS is interested in starting a support group program, tentatively called "Waiting Wives." "We want to get these wives together so they can discuss their problems and get help. Besides being a sounding board for their problems, the group will also conduct social activities to help reduce the stress of loneliness," he said.

The program has the capability to start up almost immediately, but ACS has no way of getting in contact with those spouses living off-post with husbands stationed overseas. "We know of 52 families living on-post, but we have no way of reaching those living off-post. These are the women we would like to help. ACS can offer these families a great deal, but if they don't come in for assistance we don't really know they are out there," Duggins said.
Those spouses interested in the program should call ACS at 545-----.

"Being separated from your spouse and family won't be a bed of roses," Behrend said. "But with some prior planning and by keeping in touch, the stress should be lessened. Just keep in mind the separation will eventually be over and you will be together again."

Program helps Spanish-speaking shoppers

The Fort Benning Post Exchange has recently instituted a program to assist Spanish-speaking patrons, especially those connected with the U.S. Army School of Americas, in shopping at the exchange.

As you enter the exchange large signs proclaim, in Spanish, that special clerks who are bilingual are available to assist them.

"These new clerks are bilingual and wear large, gold ribbons which say 'Yo hablo espanol.' When the Spanish speaking patron contacts the clerk, the patron is assisted in using the PX facilities," said Gerald Olson, PX store manager.

The exchange also plans to start mini-tour groups for Fort Benning's new Spanish speaking guests. These tours will be held two or three times per month and will be led by a bilingual PX employee.

"The tour will explain to these new customers how to cash a check, explain our lay-away procedures, give information on catalog sales and explain how our bilingual clerk program works," said Carl Lofstrom, exchange manager.

"We want our new Spanish-speaking customers to feel comfortable. We want them to be made welcome at the PX and for them to be able to shop here without a lot of problems. We're glad to have them in our community and we want to show it," said Lofstrom. (USAIC PAO)

Don't let your fireplace put a cloud over your holiday

Chicago, Ill. — Fireplaces have become increasingly popular in homes throughout the country, yet their popularity has brought about an increase in the number of home fires, says the National Safety Council.

Statistics indicate that there were more than 30,000 fires caused by fireplaces and almost 45,000 fires relating to chimneys and flues in a recent year. The council says many of these could have been prevented if people would have minimized potential hazards.

It offers the following tips for safe fireplace usage:

- Have your chimney cleaned once a year to remove creosote and soot. Creosote, a black, tar-like substance, often accumulates inside a chimney and can ignite from flames and sparks. A professional chimney sweep can be hired to do the job and to show you what to consider for future do-it-yourself cleanings.
- Never use the fireplace as an incinerator for waste products such as Christmas wrappings. Flames from gift wrappings can become surprisingly large and scraps of burning paper might be carried onto the roof. Repeated incineration of wastes might also cause soot to build up on the chimney's walls.
- Make certain your fireplace was built to burn fuel, and is not just for decoration.
- Never use gasoline, charcoal lighter fluid or other flammable liquids to light or rekindle a fire. The flammable vapors can explode. Instead, keep fuels far away from the fireplace.
- Keep the damper open while the fuel is burning. This will prevent the accumulation of poisonous or explosive gases.
- Don't use artificial logs as you use real logs. Carefully read and follow the instructions on the package of artificial logs. Never add an artificial log to a natural wood fire.
- Use a fire screen which completely covers the fireplace opening. This will keep sparks contained to protect chilren and adults, as well as nearby objects, from accidental ignition.
- Keep flammable materials such as carpets, pillows, papers and furniture away from the fireplace area.
- Plan ahead so that the fire will burn out before you leave the house or go to bed. If there are still embers smoldering, make sure the fire screen is in its proper place and the damper is open.
- Store wood in a protected dry area. Remember, the drier the wood, the more evenly the fire will burn. (NSC)

Safety Council tips can help make winter chill less nippy

Chicago, Ill. — If your house is temporarily without heat during the cold winter months, the National Safety Council has a few tips which can help make the chill less nippy.

- Use the layer system when you dress. If you wear two or three layers of clothing, your body heat will be insulated and conserved. The layers can be removed as needed to prevent perspiring and to make you more adaptable to weather conditions.
- Eat well-balanced, nutritious meals to allow your body to produce its own heat efficiently. Foods such as raisins and other dried fruits are instant energy producers.
- Wear a hat outdoors or a woolen cap when you sleep in cold temperatures. The body loses between 50 and 75 percent of its heat through the head.
- Use several blankets rather than one very heavy blanket to gain the most warmth while you are asleep. Electric blankets are great if your electricity is still on but natural gas is off.
- Exercise mildly to increase blood flow, consequently increasing body warmth. Once every hour should do it.
- Drink warm liquids such as coffee, tea or hot chocolate. Remember, alcoholic drinks should be avoided because they may lower your body temperature.
- If your home becomes too cold and your heating system needs servicing, go to another location where there is available heat; a neighbor's house, a relative's house, a church, a library, or other public places.

Your home should be just as prepared for the cold winter months as you are, the National Safety Council says. Severe weather can result in serious emergencies, and it's important that you plan for these before it's too late.

To protect your home and stay comfortable, the council has these tips:

Insulate your home. Reduce air leaks to keep heat in and cold out.It's also a good idea to caulk and weatherstrip doors and windows, and to install storm windows or cover the old ones with plastic.

Obtain some type of emergency home heating equipment so you can keep at least one room warm if your heat does not work. A small, well-vented wood or coal stove can be an efficient, low-cost heat source.

Wrap your pipes in insulation, expecially if you live in a very cold environment. If this is not economically feasible, consider wrapping water pipes in newspapers and covering the papers with plastic to keep out moisture. (NSC)

Army uses stamps to get back deserters

Washington — Nearly 1,400 Army deserters have returned to military control in the last 15 months: not at the hands of law-enforcement agencies, but by use of a 20-cent stamp.

Since August 1983 the Army deserter information point at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., has mailed more than 8,000 "letters from Uncle Sam" to deserters.

The letter informs them that their name has been entered into the FBI's National Crime Information Center and, in accordance with applicable federal law, apprehension assistance has been requested from civilian law enforcement agencies.

The letter-writing campaign proceeded in two phases. Beginning in August 1983, some 3,583 letters went to people in deserter status for one year or more. From that contact, 969 persons were returned to military control, each for the cost of a 20-cent stamp.

Personnel officials view Phase I as "an overwhelming success."

Project director MSgt. Joel E. Pierson said, "Because the first phase was so successful, we started another letter-writing campaign in March 1984. This time, we sent 2,638 letters to soldiers who had been in a deserter status for 90 days or more, and 425 soldiers were brought back under military control."

Records show the program to reclaim deserters is far-reaching. For example, a deserter contacted the recruiting station in American Samoa with a copy of the deserter information point's letter. He asked for and received assistance in returning to military control.

- One person stated he never was in the Army. He furnished documents proving a friend had used his identity to enlist. The impostor was returned to military control and the appropriate agency was advised of the fraud.
- A mother contacted the deserter information point to say that her son had enlisted using his brother's identity. The person who fraudulently enlisted is now in civilian confinement.

Pierson said the effort to return deserters to military control, and eventually to productive service, will continue. In the future, they hope to use computers to send letters automatically.

In the meantime, a number of deserters are returning to military control, usually without the involvement of civilian law-enforcement agencies. This saves money for both the Army and civilian agencies, and is a service to American communities.

"This example of Army ingenuity costs only a square inch of gummed paper — a 20-cent stamp," said Lt. Col. Roger W. Thornberry, who started the letter-writing campaign. (ARNEWS)

Crime doesn't pay

On Nov. 8, Sp4 Jacqueline Thomas, Medical Company, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, was convicted of two specifications of Article 123 of the UCMJ, making a false prescription and offering a false prescription. Thomas attempted to possess 100 Valium from Martin Army Hospital Pharmacy by forging a doctor's signature to a prescription form. Thomas was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, hard labor without confinement for a period of three months, to be reprimanded, and forfeiture of $397 per month for four months.

On Nov. 16, Private Paul J. Herbert, 45th Company, 4th Airborne Training Battalion, The School Brigade, was convicted of two specifications of Article 86 of the UCMJ, AWOL and twenty-one specifications of Article 123a of the UCMJ, unlawful and wrongful making of fraudulent worthless checks. Herbert fraudulently cashed 21 checks at the Main Post Exchange, knowing that he did not have sufficient funds to cover the checks. Herbert was sentenced to a bad-conduct discharge, reduction to the grade of E-1, confinement at hard labor for 110 days, and forfeiture of two-thirds pay for a period of four months.

On Nov. 28, SSgt. Steven J. Hart, Medical Company, Medical Department Activity, was convicted of one specification of Article 92 of the UCMJ, willful disobedience of a lawful order delivered from a senior noncommissioned officer. Staff Sergeant Hart was ordered by his superior to attend a Chief Wardmasters meeting. However, Hart did not attend. Hart was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-5 and to forfeit $764 per month for one month. (JAG)

Have designated driver get behind wheel when you can't

Chicago, Ill. — Here's how Americans can enjoy a holiday party were liquor is served and afterward get home safely without a traffic accident.

The solution, according to the National Safety Council, is the "designated driver," a person in the group who will not drink alcoholic beverages and who, at party's end, will drive everyone in the group to their homes.

"The designated driver" is one of several ideas which the National Safety Council is promoting to help keep Americans safe over the holidays and throughout the year.

Other ideas to reduce the number of drunk drivers on the roads and highways over the holidays include:

• Hosts and hostesses should have a variety of non-alcoholic drinks readily available for the "designated driver" and for others who do not wish to drink.

• Hosts and hostesses should refrain from "pushing" alcoholic drinks; anyone mixing or pouring drinks should be instructed to pour small amounts of liquors and avoid "overloading" guests' drinks.

• The food and beverage area should be set up so that guests are encouraged to nibble snacks or eat food throughout the party. Food in the stomach slows the impact of alcoholic drinks.

• Close the bar and offer non-alcoholic drinks one hour before the party is to end.

• If any guests have had too much to drink, assume the responsibility of getting them home in a cab or with a non-drinker who has attended the party, or provide them with a room for overnight.

The council points out that many holiday party-goers regard drinking and driving as only a social nuisance; they do not see it for the national menace that it is.

Last year drinking and drugged drivers were involved in over 20,000 traffic accident fatalities and in other accidents that resulted in 400,000 serious disabling injuries. The cost of all traffic accidents last year was more than $41 billion, and over $10 billion of that cost can be attributed to drinking and drugged drivers.

Too many Americans mix alcoholic drinks with prescription or over-the-counter drugs. When they attempt to drive a car, they often are unaware of their incapacity to do so safely.

The council is concentrating, not so much on the drunk or drugged driver, but on the vast majority of Americans who do not drink and drive and the efforts being made to protect these motorists from the dangers created by drivers under the influence.

The council noted that many Americans who drink sparingly or not at all during the year,sometimes "let things go" at holiday parties whereliquor is served freely. If they are unaware of the effect of alcohol on their bodies and get behind the wheel of their car, they can become as much of a menace as the chronic drunk driver.

Analyze training to choose proper race for you

By Bill Hughes
Marathon runner

In a prior article I put the marathon in perspective and, hopefully, you now realize that participation is the key.

Now that you're motivated, we need to give purpose to our training by selecting realistic goals. We've already established that our basic goal is to finish. Speed is unimportant; therefore, our problem is deciding whether we will run the half or the full marathon. To assist in our decision, we must critically analyze our current training program and our projected collapse point.

Obviously, the desired temporal relationship is to run, finish, and collapse in that order, and most reasonable runners would have it no other way. There does exist, however, a small group of obligate runners who claim they have never found their collapse point. They are the ultra-marathoners who always wonder how much farther they could have gone.

These addicts habitually enter progressively longer races — 50 mile, 100 mile, 24 hour runs, etc. — searching for their collapse point. In some ways, these runners are super-achievers; unfortunately, they are recognizable only to each other. It's been said that "nothing in their build or demeanor suggests the sustained and gorgious lunacy of which they are capable."

If someone sponsored a race, distance unspecified, and the only requirement was to run until you drop, these fools would be there. Undoubtedly, in such a race, these lunatics would discover their collapse point, and the following year, they'd be back. Don't laugh, I know people like this.

Fortunately, you and I don't have to enter such events to discover our collapse point. We can reasonably predict it three ways.

One way is to take your average monthly mileage for three months and divide by ten. For example, if you ran 240, 270, and then 300 miles respectively in September, October and November, then your average monthly mileage would be 270 miles. Dividing 270 by 10 equals 27 miles which is significant because it is beyond the finish line of a marathon.

Another way is to take your average daily run over a three month period and multiply by three. For example, if your average daily run was 9 miles, then your projected theoretical collapse point would be 9 times 3 or 27 miles — again past the finish line of a marathon.

The last way is to deliberately plan for a progressively longer training run every week. Obviously, if you can run a 15 or a 20 miler, then you know that your collapse point is at least beyond 15 or 20 miles respectively.

Knowing these three methods, you only need to individualize your training program to bracket the marathon distance between your actual longest training run and your theoretically calculated collapse point.

Don't misunderstand me. Unless you have actually run a marathon, you still won't know if you can finish, and even then, your collapse point is subject to other variables — heat, fluid replacement, course terrain, intestinal fortitude, etc. But practically speaking, application of these three methods will delineate the bounds of your concern and, if you have "to reach down", then you will have a rough idea of how far you'll have to gut it.

Remember, when you miscalculate, you will not only hurt, but you will hurt longer.

Post hoop tryouts

Physical Activities Branch, MSAD, will sponsor a post-wide men's basketball tryout tomorrow at 5 p.m. at the Briant Wells Field House. Members of Fort Benning who feel they possess the high degree of athletic ability required for a post-level team are invited to attend. For further information and guidance contact the post sports director at 545-5777.

Rifle areas

Black powder rifles can only be used in the rifle designated areas on Fort Benning. Fort Benning does not have a primitive weapons hunting season like the State of Georgia.

Hitting deer

Any deer hit by a vehicle on Fort Benning will be confiscated by the game wardens and transported to the post Veterinary Activity. The only exception will be that during the hunting season the vehicle driver may tag and keep the deer if he has an appropriate hunting license and deer tag on his person.

'Bama Duck Hunting

The Alabama waterfowl (duck, coot and merganser) season has recently been announced and applies to the Alabama portion of Fort Benning. The season is Dec. 2 — Jan. 20, 1985. Hunting hours are one-half hour before sunrise until sunset. Alabama uses a point system for determining the daily bag limit; therefore, all hunters are urged to become familiar with the point value for species and sex prior to hunting. In addition to a Federal Duck Stamp, an Alabama State Duck Stamp is also required. Waterfowl hunting on the Georgia portion of Fort Benning is outlined in USAIC Circular 210-4, Installation Hunting Seasons and Bag Limits, dated August 1, 1984. If you have any questions call 544-6120.

6TH IN A ROW—Bruce Skiles crosses the finish line with a winning time of 24:46.

For the sixth time in as many years, Columbus' Bruce Skiles won the featured 5-mile race Saturday during the Faith School Christmas Run.

A record field of 1,025 runners participated in the four races.

The day opened with the boys' and girls' one-mile runs for those 14 and under. Then a two-mile contest was held for all runners before the big five-miler took place.

Skiles took the lead after about one and one-half miles in the finale and was never challenged.

FAMOUS LAST WORDS FROM FRIENDS TO FRIENDS. I'm perfectly fine. I can drive with my eyes closed. There's nothing wrong with me. Are you joking—I feel great. What am I—a wimp? I'm in great shape to drive. You're not serious are you? What's a couple of beers? Nobody drives my car but me. I've never felt better. I can drink with the best of them. But I only had a few. So I had a couple. I can drive rings around anybody. I can drive my own car, thank you. I'm not drunk. I drive better hen I'm like this. Who says I can't drink drive? I can hold my booze. I know 'm doing. I always drive like this. fe wit Trust me. What's a few thing to me. I'm ith my eyes ith me. drink

Cavezza named XO to Secretary of Army

Cavezza

Ellis named to succeed Cavezza as chief of staff

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Colonel Carmen J. Cavezza has been selected to be the executive officer to the Secretary of the Army, and will leave Benning in late December.

Colonel James R. Ellis, commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment (previously the Infantry Training Group), has been selected to be the next chief of staff, and will assume the position in June 1985, upon completion of his current assignment.

During the interim period, Colonel Stanley E. Shaneyfelt, deputy assistant commandant of the United States Army Infantry School, will fill the chief of staff slot.

Cavezza assumed his present position as chief of staff in December 1983. He came to Fort Benning in March 1981 as the commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

He entered the Army in 1961 after graduation from The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., where he earned a degree in political science. He attended the Infantry Officer Basic Course, and Airborne and Ranger schools at Fort Benning.

His first assignment was as a platoon leader and then company commander with the 82d Airborne Division. He was reassigned to the 173d Airborne Brigade in Okinawa, and deployed with the brigade to the Republic of Vietnam in 1965, serving as a company commander.

Following this tour, Cavezza attended the Infantry Officer Advanced Course at Fort Benning and was next assigned to the ROTC unit at the University of Miami.

In 1969 Cavezza returned to Vietnam as a battalion operations officer in the 25th Infantry Division. His next assignment was as commander of the U.S. Army Richmond District Re-

SAFETYCAB helps get drinkers home safely

This year when the soldiers of Fort Benning are out filling themselves with holiday cheer, SAFETYCAB will be there to see they get home safely. For the second year, The Bradley Center, The Ledger Enquirer Newspapers and The Medical Center, will sponsor SAFETYCAB—free taxi rides home for drinking drivers—now through Jan. 1, 1985.

SAFETYCAB sponsors are working in conjunction with the Columbus Police Department, Phenix City Police and Fort Benning to distribute SAFETYCAB posters and information cards to local restaurants and bars that serve alcoholic beverages. At Fort Benning, posters have been distributed around post and cards have been left at the bowling center, the Class VI store and all five clubs.

Last year, the program helped bring about an 11 percent decline in the number of DUI (driving under the influence) arrests and a 17 percent decline in the number of DUI accidents in the Muscogee County area. Some 1,357 area residents utilized the SAFETYCAB program last year.

The program will provide free taxi rides home to drinking drivers from parties, restaurants or bars from 6 p.m. until 6 a.m. and will be available in Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning.

Persons desiring to use the service or have a friend transported home can call 323-0110 for a SAFETYCAB to be dispatched to the appropriate address.

Many activities are planned for fifth annual Operation Holiday

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The fifth annual Operation Holiday will kick off at the Government Center Dec. 21 at 10 a.m.

The schedule of activities is designed to help young soldiers who are spending the Christmas holiday away from their families due to military duty.

Operation Holiday is sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army (AUSA), and has been en-

Insight

Alcohol, seclusion not cures for holiday blues

Robert McClain

The Christmas season can be both the happiest and saddest time of the year for soldiers. Most are happy and content and they spend Christmas with their families and loved ones, feasting on holiday meals and opening presents around the tree. But many still are lonely and depressed.

"There is so much pressure during the holidays to be happy," said Chaplain John G. Cottingham. "But for those soldiers separated or alienated from their families and loved ones, it's not that easy to be happy."

Cottingham is the pastoral coordinator for the Infantry Center Chapel.

"When people can't be around loved ones or just aren't happy," commented Lt. Col. William E. Slifer, "they wonder if there isn't something wrong with them. It causes a lot of stress." Slifer is chief of Social Work Services at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Both said that many people try to deal with this stress in inappropriate and destructive ways. Many turn to alcohol and drugs; some simply go into seclusion.

Doctor Tom Tennent, post alcohol and drug officer, recommended soldiers find some alternative to alcohol during the holiday season. He said the alcohol will only make the depression worse.

Slifer added one of the worst thing soldiers can do is to lock themselves up in the barracks. "Doing this can only lead to depression," he said.

Cottingham strongly recommended developing a "positive addiction" for something they enjoy. "Positive addiction," he said, "simply means to engage yourself totally into something positive, like running, a hobby, meditation or reading.

"When you are doing something positive, something that makes you feel good, it builds your self-esteem."

The Association of the U.S. Army's Operation Holiday program will offer many activties for Fort Benning soldiers during the Christmas season. Soldiers can take tours of local businesses, visit historic sites and attend sporting events free of charge. If you haven't made plans for Christmas Day, Operation Holiday is sponsoring a trip to the Blue-Gray Game in Montgomery, Ala. This all-star game features some of college football's best players.

Also, post dining facilities prepare special Christmas meals for soldiers and their families.

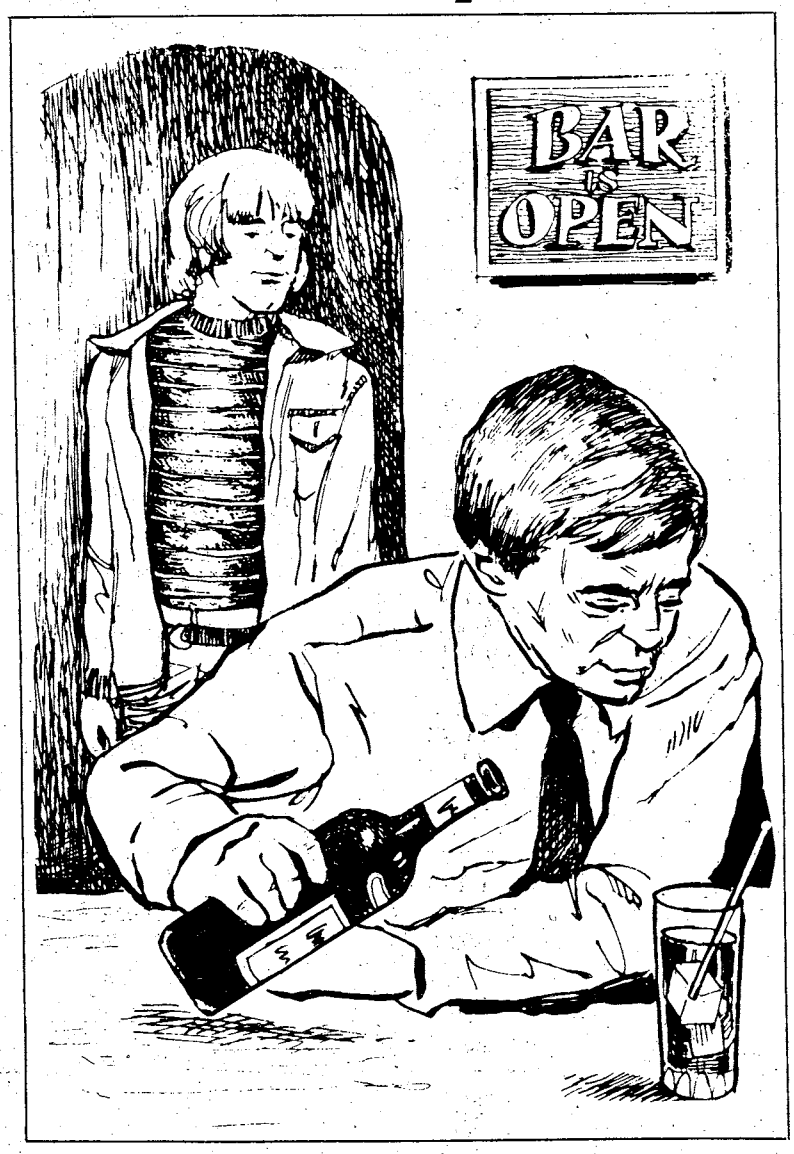
The post chaplain's office is also sponsoring a program where permanent party soldiers and residents of Columbus and Phenix City are inviting soldiers to their homes for holiday meals.

Still, the stress caused by the holiday season can be too much for some soldiers to handle by themselves. Slifer suggested soldiers should discuss their problems with their friends, family or chaplain.

"A simple phone call home can be enough to brighten a soldier's day," he said.

There are many other places soldiers can get help at Fort Benning. The Social Work Service takes calls during duty hours to aid soldiers. Their number is 545-276/3212. After duty hours the office has a representative at the MACH emergency ward.

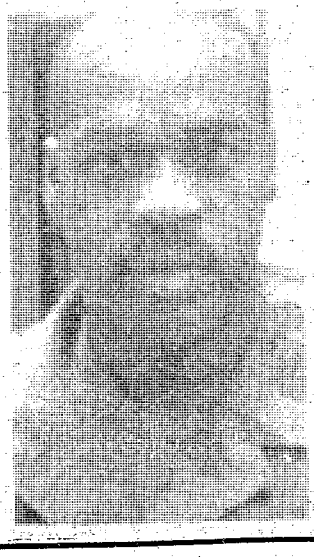
A Columbus service also offers help. CONTACT (327-3999) is a 24-hour-a-day service that can help a troubled, confused or lonely person through a period of crisis.



Various voices

Do you think the Army does enough for soldiers during the holidays?

Maj. David Quimby, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. — "I don't think the Army does, but the Fort Benning and Columbus communities do an excellent job for the soldiers. I think the program we set up here for the troops should set the standard for the Army."



SFC Robert A. Robinson, 21st Co., 2nd Bn., TSB — "I think the activities they've had in the past have been good, but I don't think they provide enough activities in the Columbus area. As an individual, I've invited soldiers over to my house for dinner during the holidays and we have also gotten together and gone to movies."

PVT. Mike Borquez, D Co., 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Gp. — I think they do provide enough activities. When I was in Germany, I went to Paris for the holidays, but the soldiers who stayed behind were well occupied during that time. This year, my wife is coming down for the holidays and we have many activities planned."

"Various voices has too many "yes" people. Let's see more opinions and print an equal number of opposite opinions."

"The Bayonet is very informative, look forward to reading it each week, thanks."

"While it's common knowledge that advertisements pay the cost of printing, too much advertising, especially toward the front of the Bayonet, doesn't permit room for the start of noteworthy news articles." (USAIC PAO)

CG's message

TRADOC has designated November and December as Drunk Driving Prevention months. The entire chain of command must get involved to teach soldiers of their responsibilities in driving and drinking.

The annual loss of life resulting from alcohol-related traffic accidents is well documented. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, over half of the 50,000 traffic fatalities each year are alcohol-related. The same percentages hold for Army fatal accidents.

Drunk driving is a serious crime. It is not an indiscretion.

197th Infantry Brigade prepares for 'Central Guardian' exercise

Upon its arrival from the National Training Center in mid-August, the 197th Infantry Brigade, (Mechanized)(Separate), has steadily been preparing for its largest task since its re-activation in 1962 — to be a major participant in the 1985 European REFORGER exercise, "Central Guardian."

"Central Guardian," scheduled to take place between Jan. 19 through Feb. 1 will require the "Forever Forward" Brigade to deploy some 800 vehicles and equipment and 3,000 soldiers to maneuver with U.S. European based, German, and selected stateside units in the state of Hessen, Federal Republic of Germany.

REFORGER, a military acronym for "Return of Forces to Germany," is an annual event taking place in the fall. Every five years the exercise is conducted during the winter months. REFORGER exercises are conducted as part of the United States agreements with NATO in demonstrating our government's resolve to defend NATO in times of a military crisis.

In preparing for the exercise, the brigade's soldiers have been training in tactical road marches on civilian roads, conducting extensive driver's qualification for the European environment and preparing the many armor and mechanized vehicles for the arduous manuvering that the exercise will require.

In addition to the training, the soldiers have undergone detailed records checks, immunization, customs inspections, learning reporting procedures for Soviet Military Liaison Mission violations, and cold weather and load plans preparations.

Unlike other deploying stateside units, the 197th Infantry Brigade will not draw pre-positioned stockage of vehicles and equipment from overseas storage sites.

Taking its own equipment has challenged the unit to move its vehicles and equipment to Savannah by wheel convoy and rail for the loading onto cargo ships that will off load in the port of Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

The preparation for the deployment will continue until Jan. 11 when the first plane load of soldiers is scheduled to depart Lawson Army Airfield for Europe. (197th PAO)

Unit undergoes customs inspection for REFORGER

By Debbie Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

In preparation for REFORGER '85, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade recently underwent a customs inspection by personnel from the 42nd MP Customs Group.

Inspectors checked all equipment and vehicles for cleanliness, as well as looking for restricted items, and watched as the equipment was packed, banded and sealed in carriers. MP dogs were used to check for prohibited substances.

The unit's goal was to pass the inspection the first time, and they worked hard to prepare for the inspection.

"Loading plans were developed and tested," said 1st Lt. Jaime F. Llinet, executive officer of Company B, 1-58th. "From this, the concept of using the armored personnel carriers as packing containers was developed, allowing us to use fewer conexs."

Due to rainy weather on the day of the inspection, the APCs had to be brought into the motor pool bays, unloaded, laid out, inspected and repacked a few at a time, making the inspection take longer than it normally would have.

"There was a lot of strain on our soldiers, getting ready for this inspection," said Llinet. "They did a lot of packing and unpacking. A lot of time is required to make sure all equipment and vehicles, inside and out, are super clean. If there is doubt, it won't pass."

Once the equipment was inspected, the equipment would be wrapped, banded and sealed in the tracks ready for the railroad, explaind Llinet.

The unit's preparations paid off. It, along with the entire battalion, passed the inspection on the first try.

The 197th Infantry Brigade deploys next month to Europe to participate in the exercise "Central Guardian."

Calculator's monument gets new home at Infantry Museum

By Bill C. Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The monument to Calculator, a post pet in the early 1920s, was moved last week from the rear of Building 35 to the National Infantry Museum (NIM).

Calculator was a multi-colored mongrel of undertermined ancestry who captured the hearts of Fort Benning personnel. He had the run of the post and roamed from rifle ranges to mess halls, from Fort Benning to Columbus and back again.

It has been reported that no one knew where "Calc," as he was affectionately known by everyone from generals to privates, came from — "He just appeared one day." But research in the late 1960s by two lieutenants, Robert Marshall and Michael Qualls indicate that "Calc" was born on First Division Road, part of a litter from a dog owned by Mrs. Mary Thomas.

His halting manner of walking gave him his unusual name. When he ran, he "put down three and carried one." Reports over the years attributed his gait to lameness as a result of being hit by a truck. But in February 1954, Col. B.A. Byrne wrote a letter to the Bayonet correcting this misconception. "His habit of traveling on three legs was purely a physical idiosyncrasy. The leg he chose to carry was entirely a matter of momentary whim and he could be observed on a long trip changing from leg to leg to rest one at a time. I knew this character extremely well and was in fact one of his guardians."

"Calc" reported for duty at military formations, field maneuvers, classes and ball games. He had a special love for parades, according to one report. He dined at any mess hall that pleased his fancy, but once he had his fill he was on his way again. He usually slept in a barracks at night and was always welcome wherever he turned up.

He used different means of transportation to cover the large areas of post. The "Chattahoochee Choo Choo", a narrow gauge train used to transport students, was one of his favorites.

Once a new railroad employee, unaware of "Calc's" popularity, booted him off the train. This almost caused a riot. The soldiers who witnessed this incident threatened the railroad man with the same treatment unless "Calc" was permitted to ride too.

When he was in Columbus and was ready to return home, "Calc" always appeared in front of the Ralston Hotel. Both officers and enlisted men were known to check by the hotel to see if old "Calc" wanted to hitch a ride home.

"Calculator was really an important factor in forming the mosaic of what we call tradition in an installation, something of vital psychological importance in developing morale and esprit de corps," wrote Brig. Gen. William H. Hobson, U.S. Army (retired), in 1947.

You would have thought that "Calc" didn't have an enemy in the world but that wasn't the case. He was a victim of strychnine poisoning by an unknown

Post chief of staff reflects on accomplishments, new job

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Colonel Carmen J. Cavezza leaves Fort Benning this week to begin the move to Washington, D.C., where he will be assuming his new duties as the executive officer to the Secretary of the Army January 2.

"I'm a little bit unhappy about leaving," said Cavezza, "because everything here seems to be moving in the right direction and I'd kind of like to see it through and see the progress being made."

He said there are a lot of important things going on at Benning that he would like to see develop, including the Rangers, The School of the Americas and the light division.

"These are all very important because they are not only good for Benning, but they're also good for the community," he said.

On the post side of the house, Cavezza said he felt Fort Benning was moving in the right direction in its efforts to make Benning a better place for soldiers and their families to live. Upgrading the child care and other facilities on post, and establishing their hours to better accommodate the soldier, Cavezza said, are positive things being done at Benning that will improve the quality of life on post.

He said the job as chief of staff has prepared him for his new job. "A lot of the duties I have there will be somewhat similar to what I am doing here, in terms of our relationship with the commanding general and the way things sort of flow through me to him. Of course it will be Army-wide versus Fort Benning-wide."

Cavezza joked that his major accomplishment as chief of staff was "not getting fired." He said he served more as a catalyst by delegating authority and providing support to the commanders and directors so they could do their jobs.

"I have a basic trust in people," he explained. "When somebody tells me they are going to do something, I don't care if it is a private or a colonel, I assume it's going to be done.

"I think that if you can trust in people, if you can keep them motivated and keep yourself motivated in the process, everything kind of falls into place."

When asked what advice he would give his successor, Cavezza said he would tell him to let the staffs continue to push in the direction they're going. "We have some very good commanders, and Gen. Foss has his guidance out, so all the chief of staff has to do is guide them and provide the resources and do the necessary coordination."

In addition to his undergraduate degree in political science, Cavezza holds two masters degrees, one in government and one in international affairs, and is presently a doctoral candidate in political science from George Washington University.

"Whenever I was in a position to go to school, I did it," he said. "I enjoy the university atmosphere and I like the academic community. It's a healthy environment."

Since his daughter, Peggy, will remain in Columbus, Cavezza said he and his wife will definitely want to come back to this area.

"Fort Benning is kind of home for all Infantrymen," he said. "If we were told to retire, we'd probably retire here, because I don't really have any other places I would want to go. I think we'll probably be back."

cruiting Command in Virginia.

Cavezza attended the USMC Command and Staff College at Quantico, Va., and then was assigned to Plans and Operations as a staff officer. Following the Pentagon assignment, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.

He returned overseas as the commanding officer of the 1st Battalion, 23d Infantry, 2d Infantry Division in the Republic of Korea. When he returned to the states, he attended the National War College, then was assigned again to the Military Personnel Center where he was chief of the Lieutenant Colonels Division.

Cavezza earned a Masters of Arts degree in government from the University of Miami in 1969, a Masters of Science degree in international affairs from George Washinton University in 1976, and is presently a doctoral candidate in political science from George Washington University.

He is married to the former Joyce M. Mathews of Charleston, S.C., and they have one daughter, Peggy.

Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebras in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others.

Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

(1) Paresthesias (see above) (2) Headaches (3) Painful joints (4) Numbness in the arms or hands (5) Loss of sleep (6) Stiffness in the neck (7) Pain between the shoulders (8) Stiffness or pain in lower back (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse that condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in depth consultation in Layman's terms.

Soldiers risk military career when they drink and drive

By Robert Long Jr.
Administrative law attorney

"No thanks, I'm driving." This simple phrase should be on the tip of the tongue of every person who is offered an alcoholic beverage and plans to be driving thereafter. Our society is becoming increasingly aware that drunk driving is an unnecessary evil that must be eliminated from our highways, and drastic measures are being taken by civilian law enforcement officials to do so.

The U.S. Army is following suit and Fort Benning is no exception. The word has been out and the message is becoming louder and clearer — when a servicemember drinks and drives, he is not only risking his privilege to drive on this installation but also his career in the military.

The Army's policy establishes that intoxicated driving is incompatible with military service. And it further provides for strict measures to be pursued by installation commanders in order to remove intoxicated servicemembers from the highway.

Army regulations direct that a general letter of reprimand will be issued to servicemembers who are apprehended for driving or being in physical control of a motor vehicle on a military installation when their blood alcohol content is .10 percent or higher; or off-post when their blood alcohol level is in violation of state law. Georgia state law also uses the .10 percent blood alcohol content as the threshold level for a DUI offense. Furthermore, refusal by a servicemember to submit to a lawfully requested blood alcohol test, either on or off Fort Benning, will result in the initiation of the letter of reprimand when supported by evidence of drunk driving.

The letter of reprimand will be drafted for filing in the servicemember's Official Military Personnel File (OMPF); however, prior to filing, the commanding general will consider any rebut-hand. John Augustin, a tailor at the Officer's Club, found him and took him to the veterinarian but to no avail; "Calc" died on Aug. 29, 1923.

The Infantry School News sponsored a campaign to erect a monument to "stand as a testimonial to the love and affection with which the Infantry School regarded dear old "Calc" — and as a pointing finger to those inhuman morons who threw all dictates of love and affection to the winds and killed one of the best friends man has, the dog — a real pal."

Contributions of 25 cents, requested by the Infantry School News, poured in from American Infantrymen around the world. When the final accounting was completed more than $1,000 had been donated.

Originally the monument was to include a profile of "Calc." Photographs of him, to use as a model, were requested. But as far as can be determined no pictures were received and the only available pictures of the dog are two that appeared in Infantry School News.

The monument project lay dormant for several years but was revived in the late 1920's. The monument was erected, on what is now Stilwell Field, in 1929. The inscription, authored by Col. Paul Giddings, a student in the Infantry Field Officer Course in 1922, reads:

CALCULATOR
BORN?
DIED AUG. 29, 1923
HE MADE BETTER DOGS
OF US ALL

At the dedication ceremony the principal speaker closed his address with this eulogy: "This monument will stand forever, dedicated to the memory of Calculator, a veritable child of destiny, waif of the world, soldier of fortune and post graduate of the Infantry School."

The monument made its first move in the mid-1930s after Building 35 was built. The move to the National Infantry Museum was made after considerable deliberation among Fort Benning officials and the U.S. Army School of the Americas, which is to be headquartered in Building 35. Although many Benning old-timers vocally opposed the move, it was decided that the increased traffic flow at the museum would result in more people seeing the monument and the move would best serve the interests of Fort Benning and the school.

Sp4 Mark W. Eby, Charlie Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, moves to the firing line for his turn to fire the Dragon.

197th unit streamlines, shortens refresher Dragon gunner training

Dragon gunners at the 197th Infantry Brigade were spending 40 hours each quarter in refresher training. But their units could not afford to lose them for such an extended period of time, because it made it difficult for the units to meet tasking requirements.

So the 197th decided that the training needed to be streamlined and shortened, and assigned Company C, 3-7th Infantry, to do the job.

"We received a mission to put together a program which would better train the Dragon gunners," said 1st Lt. Creighton A. Larson, 2nd platoon leader of Company C. "As the system is now, the soldiers forget the training too fast."

Under the old system, gunners spent 16 hours learning how to set up, use and maintain testing equipment.

"The gunners don't need to know that much about the testing equipment," Larson said. "Too much time was being spent teaching the gunners how to run test equipment, when they won't be using it during an actual wartime system."

The test training group eliminated this 16-hour block of study, enabling gunners to spend their training time learning about the weapon they will actually be using.

At the first live fire exercise after instituting the new training, both gunners firing the Dragon scored hits.

"We don't know whether this was a result of luck or a result of the revised training," said Larson. "That will be determined after two or three more live fires."

If the new training proves to be more efficient, quarterly gunner refresher training might be revised and used at all units.

"Regardless, the 3-7th will continue to use the streamlined method as long as it works for us," Larson concluded. (197th PAO)

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I renounced my compensation and it was terminated 10 years ago. Can I make a new application for this same disability?

A — Yes. A renouncement does not preclude a person from filing a new application. However, no payment may be made for any period prior to the date the application is received by the VA.

Q — I received an overpayment letter from the VA. I cannot pay the entire amount back at once. What can I do?

A — You may make a partial payment and propose how you intend to pay the balance. (VA)

Don't let holiday shopping bounce you into trouble

During the rush to get holiday shopping done, shoppers should take care to insure that there are sufficient funds in their checking accounts to cover the checks they write at installation facilities.

All persons who have installation check cashing privileges come under the jurisdiction of Army Regulation 608-16, and should be aware that check cashing is a privilege that can be revoked if it is misused.

When a person writes a check that is returned due to insufficient funds, the facility manager will write a letter to the person, telling him that the check has been returned and asking that he come in and make the check good.

The check writer has seven days from the date of this letter to go in and redeem the check. If he does not take action within this time, the manager notifies the Personnel Actions Section, Adjutant General Division, and they take it from there.

"We prepare a letter to the soldier's commander, telling him that this individual has been reported for a bad check and that we are putting him on the dishonored check roster," said 1st Lt. Tom Potosnak, assistant chief of the Personnel Actions Section.

In the case of a retired person, the letter would go directly to his home. For family members of active duty soldiers, the notification ould be made to the soldier's commander.

Commanders have jurisdiction over their soldiers under the Uniform Code of Military Justice and have the authority to take any action they deem appropriate, from a verbal reprimand to an Article 15, depending on the offense.

"The purpose of the system is to make sure soldiers practice responsible financial management," said Potosnak. "Commanders need to be aware of their soldiers' behavior, and this is why we notify them."

Once a person's name is on the dishonored check roster, his identification card is overstamped and his check cashing privileges at installation facilities are revoked for a specified period of time.

The overstamp reads: "IAW 608-16, Check Cashing privileges suspended," which is printed in red and overstamped on the back and front of the card.

For a first offense, check cashing privileges are suspended for six months. For additional offenses, privileges are suspended for three years.

A letter notifying the appropriate personnel officer is placed in the individual's personnel file, and in the event of reassignment during a suspension period, the check control office at the gaining installation will be sent the suspended individual's file.

At the end of the suspension period, privileges will be reinstated upon request, provided that full restitution, including bank and service charges, has been made.

Suspension of check writing privileges is effective DOD-wide, since overstamped indentification cards will not be honored at any DOD installation.

In the event that the bank or facility manager has made an error, through no fault of the individual, the check writer can obtain written acknowledgement of this error and take it to the Personnel Actions Section, and have their check writing privileges reinstated.

Of course the simplest way to handle this problem is to avoid it. Be sure that you have sufficient funds to cover checks before you write them at installation facilities. And have a financally sound holiday season.

Advancement to E-4 made easier

Washington — Since Oct. 1 soldiers have been advanced to E-4 instead of promoted.

Because of this, promotion orders are no longer required.

According to SFC Gary J. Huey of the U.S. Army Military personnel Center's Enlisted Promotion Branch, soldiers are now advanced without a waiver when they have 24 months in service and three months in grade as a PFC, provided their commander submits a DA form 4187 (request for personnel action).

Other ways of reaching the E-4 grade such as time-in-grade/time-in-service waivers, being in the Stripes for Skills Program or the Stripes for Education Program, remain unchanged. Requirements for soldiers who are beyond the 24-month time-in-service point and soldiers in a transit status also remain unchanged.

Soldiers in transit who meet the requirements for advancement will be advanced to E-4 by the gaining military personnel office. This will happen so long as the losing commander takes no action to deny the advancement and there is no other basis for denial.

Huey said there is no percentage restriction at this time for soldiers who are eligible for E-4 without a waiver. (ARNEWS)

Statistics show drinking drivers are more likely to have accident

Darrell L. Johnson
DOC News Service

It's amazing how some people who can't control even their feet think they'll be able to control their cars once they get behind the wheel.

Statistics show they're dead wrong. According to government studies, a person with .10 percent alcohol in the bloodstream (the legal limit for driving in most states) is six times more likely to have a serious accident than someone who's had no alcohol at all. At the .15 percent level, chances of an accident are 25 times greater.

Police estimate that for every drinking-driver arrest, there are 1,000 others driving under the influence who go uncaught. The odds are in favor of not getting caught, but the stakes aren't. Would you bet your life on it?

The best way to avoid becoming a drinking driver is not to drink at all. That's not quite realistic though, since people do drink and they do drive. The next best way is to be a sensible drinker.

Here are some survival tips for drinking during the holidays:

- Eat before drinking — food slows down alcohol absorption into the bloodstream.
- Know your personal limit — check a blood-alcohol-concentration chart to figure out your limit, then stick to it the next time you're drinking.
- Sip your drinks — the body can "burn off" about one ounce of alcohol per hour. An ounce of alcohol is one ounce of 100-proof liquor, 12 ounes of beer, or four ounces of wine.
- Stop drinking long before the party's over — time is the only thing that will sober you up once you've had too much to drink.

There's only one thing worse than a drunk — a drunken driver. If you find that you've had too much to drink, there are lots of alternatives to driving.

- Take a taxi.
- Ride with a friend (A sober one).
- Stay overnight.

The worst time to find out you can't drive a straight line is when you're on the wrong side of one in the highway.

Plan ahead, get proper rest before holiday trip

By Darrell L. Johnson
TRADOC News Service

The combined voices of Alabama (I mean the vocal group, not the state, even though at that moment who could have told the difference) poured from the speaker on my clock radio. On the second swipe with my uncoordinated hand, I somehow managed to hit the snooze alarm for eight more glorious minutes in the warm cocoon of my rack.

No good, the damage was done. I was not awake enough to realize that today was the first day of my 12 day leave for the holidays, and my brain was racing. Five-hundred miles to cover to get home; I needed to get moving. I reluctantly shrugged off the covers and sat up. Fatigue crept through my shoulders and neck as I stretched trying to get my blood flowing. "I stayed at the club with my buddies too late," I thought. "Feel like I'm only running on four cylinders this morning. Wish I hadn't let them talk me into it."

Luckily, I had had only a couple of beers before I begged off to go pack for my trip. Packing had been more of a chore than I had thought, and I had finally "racked out" about midnight. As I hurriedly showered and dressed, I was checking off items in my head. Couldn't remember anything I had forgotten, but I had a gnawing pang of quilt as I remembered that the fan belt on my car was a little frayed. I had bought a replacement, but the craft shop had been crowded. I was in a hurry, and the new belt was still in the trunk. Well, at least I had checked out everything else.

Signed out now, I made a quick stop at the fast-food dive for a sausage biscuit and big coffee: no time for the chow hall this morning. Now, at last, I was about to get rolling as I swooped down onto the expressway into bumper-to-bumper traffic. I reached over and cancelled the "Jefferson Airplane" in favor of the static and chatter on my CB. The truckers were spotting "Smokeys," and it became obvious that there were a numer of them working the roads. "Better hold it down," I thought. I still had some gift shopping to do, and I didn't want to give the state a present.

I was about three and a half hours out now, and hunger made my belt buckle feel as though it was rubbing my backbone. The needle showed that the gas tank was getting low, so I pulled into a combined station and snack bar. As the attendant accepted my money, he made a comment about the weather. "Looks like we're gonna get some rain. Might even get some sleet or snow." I mumbled something in response and noticed that the sky was getting dark and the temperature was dropping for sure. I grabbed some packaged munchies and a cola; no time to wait for a waitress and cook to serve up a meal.

Feeling a little better as I polished off the last of the goodies, I noticed that small drops of water had begun to hit the windshi Two hours later they had tur to big drops, and the truck were talking about the brid getting slick. I backed off or gas some more.

Then came the sound, someone throwing a stick int electric fan. My heart droppe "the fan belt." What luck! overpass was just a couple hundred yards down the roa coasted to a stop and began miserable job of replacing belt, a task made worse by cold that now had penetrate the marrow. As I stowed the to and started around the driv seat, I heard a roar and jump

Many agencies can help you fight holiday rip-off artist

By Darrell L. Johnson
TRADOC News Service

All year long you've managed to keep a tight rein on the purse strings. But now that the holidays are here, you find yourself spending like you just won a million-dollar lottery.

Gifts, entertaining, holiday travel — they are part of making the season merry. But the merriment changes to madness and mayhem if the money spent doesn't buy reliable merchandise and quality service. It's natural to expect to get your money's worth. If you feel you haven't gotten your money's worth during this holiday season — that you've been ripped off — you can fight back. Here are some ways.

Ordering by mail — About 63.5 billion dollars worth of merchandise was ordered through the mail in 1983. With this volume of business, there are bound to be some snafus, but what are your rights if you're a victim?

The Mail Order Rule, enforced by the Federal Trade Commission, says that you can cancel an order and get a refund if the merchandise doesn't arrive when promised or within 30 days if there is no specified date. The company must notify you if there is a delay in shipping the merchandise and they must send means for you to cancel the order free of charge. If you don't respond, they can take that as an indication that you agree to the delay. If the order is prepaid (other than by credit card) the company must send a refund within seven business days. If the goods were charged on a credit card, they must credit your account within one billing cycle following your notification to cancel.

Certain products and services, such as magazine subscriptions and photo finishing, are not covered by the rule, nor are COD or phone orders.

Can you return an item ordered by direct-mail just because you don't like it, it doesn't fit, or the color isn't what it appeared to be in the catalog? In most cases, yes, but check the policy on the order form before you order. If you do return an item just because you don't like it, it may be your responsibility to pay for return postage. Whenever you return an item, ask the shipper for a receipt so you'll have proof that you did send the goods back.

If china or other breakables arrive damaged, contact the company immediately. Make a copy of your letter of notification as well as any other paperwork that proves you paid for the order. Again, get a receipt from the shipper when you return the merchandise.

If you have a problem with direct-mail service and you can't resolve it with the company, contact the Mail Order Action Line, c/o Direct Marketing Association, 6 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017.

Door-to-door sales — A federal law states that there is a 72-hour "cooling off" period on door-to-door sales of $25 or more. So you should be able to cancel your order (in writing) within three business days and still get your money back. If you can't get the company to comply, contact the Code Administrator, c/o Direct Selling Association, 1730 M St. NW, Suite 610, Washington, DC 20036.

The Code Administrator is not a member of the DSA staff, but rather a third-party arbitrator who is empowered to resolve disputes with member companies only. However, he will write non-member companies in your behalf. More than 150 of the largest direct-sales operations, such as Avon, Amway, and Sarah Coventry, are members. The association says it has resolved 95 percent of the disputes it has handled.

Electronics problems — If you have a problem with an electrical product — TV, home computer, stereo — it's recommended that you deal only with "authorized service dealers." (They're listed in the Yellow Pages.) If you're not satisfied with the dealer's attempt to correct the problem, contact the manufacturer. Your letter should include date and place of purchase, model and serial numbers, name and address of service dealer, copies of service orders, and proof that the product is under warranty (if it is).

If the manufacturer doesn't respond to your satisfaction, write the Director of Consumer Affairs, Electronic Industries Association, 2001 I St. NW, Washington, DC 20006.

Fly rights — Even through in recent years airlines have tried to avoid bumping passengers without their consent, bumping is still a reality that could spoil your holiday. In its booklet "Fly Rights," the Civil Aeronautics Board says you can reduce your chances of being bumped by making sure you arrive at the boarding gate at the designated time.

Airlines try to make bump voluntary by offering you mo to give up your seat on an o booked flight. Before you agr check to see when the next av able flight departs and whet the airline will pay for mea hotel rooms and transportat while you're waiting. If you're voluntarily bumped the airli must pay you to $200 (or up $400 if there isn't another dom tic flight available within t hours of the originally schedul one).

CAB bumping regulations do apply under certain conditio such as flights between two f eign cities. So it's a good idea get a copy of "Fly Rights," wh also includes information on w to do about lost tickets, lost b gage and cancelled flights. Fo copy, send $2.75 to the Consum Information Center, Departme 204M, Peublo, Colo. 81009.

Soldiers can take advantage of travel discounts

Fort Monroe, Va. — Taking the whole amily home for the holidays may seem ke a financial impossibility, but it oesn't have to be. Negotiations between ne Military Traffic Management Com-and and civilian carriers have pro-uced a series of military furlough dis-ount fares designed to make travel ore affordable for servicemembers and eir families.

The fares are offered by virtually all rlines, bus lines, Amtrack, and car ental companies.

Airline discounts range from 25 to 50 ercent off regular coach fares. In some ases, the fares are available for over-eas travel as well. Some restrictions pply and they vary among carriers.

If you've got a little more time, hy not travel by train? Amtrack ffers two types of furlough fares servicemembers traveling on leave. he first, for active-duty soldiers, pro-ides a discount of 25 percent each way n rail tickets. The second, the family plan, allows families to travel at a reduced rate. It applies to heads of families and spouses traveling together, with or without their children, or to one parent traveling with the children. One person in the family must be designated as head of family and pay the full price. The rest of the family pays only half fare. Children under two years, not occupying a separate seat, ride free.

Amtrak's military furlough fares do not apply to sleeping cars, custom class or club cars, but they are honored in all other reserved or unreserved coaches.

If you have enough time for surface travel, particularly if you have several visits to make, another option is Greyhound's Ameripass. Greyhound's 15 and 30 day passes have been reduced by as much as 75 percent for active military, retired military and their families. Ameripasses permit unlimited travel throughout the Greyhound system during the time specified on the pass. Trailways and participating members of the national Trailways bus system has announced identical discounts on their 15 and 30 day travel passes. Family members need not travel with their sponsors to receive the discount.

As an additional note, for a maximum charge of $10, Greyhound will ship packages of up to 100 pounds that are sent by soldiers or to them by relatives or friends. This program represents a savings of up to 85 percent off Greyhound's regular package express rate. Trailways' discount package express program is almost identical to Greyhound's — their maximum charge is $9.95.

If you need a car once you reach your destination, most car rental companies offer discounts for soldiers and their families.

While military furlough discounts provide considerable savings for military families, they are not always the cheapest way to travel. Sometimes special promotions will include rates that are even lower than the military rate. So shop around before making a decision.

There may be limitations on some of the discounts, and all of them are subject to change without notice. For more information, check with the Fort Benning scheduled airline ticket office or a local carrier for details.

upport center or families s activated

Washington — The partnership at exists between the Army and e Army family was reinforced th the activation of the U.S. my Community and Family pport Center in a Nov. 23 ntagon ceremony.

Originally scheduled to acti-te on Nov. 30, it appropriately tivated at the end of Army mily Week.

General John A. Wickham Jr., my Chief of Staff, underscored e need for continued improve-ent in community and family pport to bolster the Army man and readiness goals.

Married soldiers make up 54 rcent of the Army today, Wick-m said. "(If) families feel tter about the Army, the mem-r feels better about staying in e Army."

During the Year of the Army amily, many community and mily-oriented improvements ve been made. The community d family support center, lo-ted in the Hoffman Complex in exandria, Va., was designed to ntinue these improvements d align them with progress ing made in improving commu-ty morale, welfare and recre-ion programs and facilities.

In his address to the ceremony tendees, Secretary of the Army hn O. Marsh Jr. summarized e numerous industrial changes at have happened in the 20th ntury and how they have af-cted the family structure.

The Year of the Family is tended to be a year of bonding, said, with a goal of quality of e, recognizing that we are our others keepers.

tal information submitted by the servicemember. In this instance, the burden of persuasion is on the servicemember to demonstrate to the commanding general the reasons the letter should not be filed in the OMPF. To say the least, this is a difficult burden for the servicemember to meet; most letters are filed in the OMPF.

It should be understood that a letter of reprimand filed in a servicemember's OMPF is filed there permanently and is an eternal blemish on a person's military record. It is not surprising that a letter of reprimand is referred to as a career destruction device. These letters of reprimand are administrative actions; therefore, no conviction or judicial determination of guilt is required.

In addition to a letter of reprimand, a servicemember cited for DUI on or off post will be referred to the alcohol and drug rehabilitation program as required by Army regulations. In this program the servicemember receives counseling and instruction on the use of alcohol. Another action taken against the DUI offender is known as the "flagging" of his file. This "flagging" action precludes any favorable action to be taken on behalf of the servicemember to include PCS and promotion. The "flag" remains in force until all disciplinary action is taken against the individual to include a final disposition of the civilian charges.

In addition to the above measures, other action will be taken against the servicemember depending on the location of the DUI offense. Specifically, if the offense occurs on Fort Benning, the servicemember's privilege to drive on the installation will be immediately suspended for up to six months. If the initiated disciplinary action is finalized and it is concluded that the individual did commit the offense, the servicemember's privilege to drive on Fort Benning will be revoked for a period of one year. Since the offense occurred on a military post, the servicemember would also be subject to nonjudicial punishment under Article 15 or court-martial under Article 111 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

If the citation is received off post, the servicemember will also have his driving privileges on Fort Benning suspended, and if found to be guilty of the offense by the civil system, his privilege to drive on Fort Benning will be revoked for one year. Additionally, the servicemember would be subject to civil action to include a substantial fine, suspension or revocation of his drivers license, or incarceration. This would naturally give the offender a criminal record that would remain with him for life. Furthermore, should a servicemember be convicted by a civil court, he would be in jeopardy of separation from the service under Chapter 14, AR 635-200.

The seriousness of driving under the influence cannot be stressed enough. A drunk driver places not only his life in jeopardy, but others' as well. It is certainly not worth gambling with what could be a rewarding career just to have a drink. Today, the deck is stacked against the drunk driver. Before anyone takes the risk, they need only keep in mind the simple phrase that may save their career: "No thanks, I'm driving."

Jse imagination when wrapping gifts

Every Christmas, Santa drops ıousands of packages of all ıapes and sizes down chimneys. ow is it then, that they are so eautifully wrapped on ıristmas morning?

Kei McMillin, an artist and gift rapping expert at American reetings, say that it takes only a tle imagination to make wrapng presents a source of excitent and anticipation. "When rapping a gift, I look at the ape of the containers or box it mes in," she says. "Sometimes ere are several small boxes — e in a set of bubble bath, power d cologne. Wrapping each box dividually as part of one theme akes the gift more exciting.

"For example, if the box is a linder, like cologne is often ckaged, it might make the gine of a train. Wrap it in a ain paper, using a button for e front. Snowflake stickers can e used for wheels," says Ms. cMillin. "The engine cab is nother box, and it can be wrapped in a matching paper and decorated with a snowman engineer waving from the window."

"The box cars that follow can be wrapped and decorated almost any way your imagination can dream up," she continued.

"Decorating a rectangular box is easier, because it can become almost anything," she said. "Three triangles cut from a white or silver paper doily can be layered to make a delicate Christmas tree. Another idea is to cut plain red and green paper into the shapes of petals and leaves, and curl them around a pencil to make a poinsettia; use bits of ribbon rolled into tiny knots to make the centers."

Ms. McMillin says that she receives many inquiries from women who are interested in learning how to wrap packages more creatively. "I try to wrap each present so that the receiver will take a few seconds to look at the pretty paper," she says.

"Children are usually so excited that they rip right into a present, so I try very hard to keep up with the things they are interested in, and I work those trends into the gift wrapping design," she continued.

"There are always bits and pieces of ribbon and paper left on the ends of rolls," she says. "Narrow green ribbon can be curled and attached to a straw or toothpick to make a Christmas tree to stand on top of a box."

She also suggests cutting remnants into the designs of a streetlamp with a candle inside to accompany the figure of a caroling girl, then glue everything to the front of the package.

"Everyone wants the packages that have the prettiest wrapping," says Ms. McMillin. "When they pause to look at the decorations, the hesitation to tear it open also helps to build excitement for the present inside."

k as a tractor-trailer shot by, aying me with icy water. That was too close, and this is lace to work on a car," I ght.

was then that I saw the red blue lights go on across the ian strip. The car slowed and ssed to my side, and I didn't en have time to notice I was aking so much until I tried to h my license out of my wallet the state patrolman. His face flashlight now filled my ver's side window. It was the st polite chewing-out of my and I took his advice and pped at the next exit for rest, ee and two big pieces of an pie. We also did a little (walking the line, touching nose), while the officer assured himself that I was not intoxicated. "About one in 20 of the drivers out here will be drinking drivers," he told me.

Later, when I turned into dad's driveway. I saw him glance out the window; and then I saw mom scampering from the kitchen to the front door. The whole trip had come so close to being a tragedy. How would they have felt? I had violated a lot of rules, and somehow lived to recall them and learn from my mistakes. Statistics show that not everyone will be so lucky. During those 12 days of my leave, if history repeats itself, about 12 soldiers will die on the highways. That's right: about one a day. We can cut that figure by following some simple rules:

- Plan ahead — get plenty of rest the night before a long trip.
- Avoid spontaneous social gatherings and alcohol on the night before the trip.
- Make sure your car is in top-notch shape before you start out.
- Stop to rest at least once every four hours: Better to get there a little later than not at all. Get out and move around. Do some exercises to get the circulation going.
- Food provides energy; don't neglect it in order to make better time. In fact, keeping some quick-energy snacks in the car is a good idea.
- Winter weather can turn ugly in no time at all, and during the holiday season the roads are congested with traffic. Consider these factors in your planning.
- And, of course, never drink and drive.

Jews begin Chanukah celebration Tuesday

Reflections

By Chaplain Denis Beck-Berman

The candles have been blessed and lit, the holiday hymns sung. Now the party has begun. Stacks of jelly doughnuts and sizzling latkes (potato pancakes) topped with apple sauce or sour cream are served. Children dressed in ancient costumes are spinning tops and playing a game called dreidle where they try to win play gelt (chocolate candy coins).

What's going on? The two candles flickering in the menorah (candelabrum) by the window mean that you are watching the celebration of the second night of Chanukah.

On Tuesday evening, Dec. 18, Jews throughout the world begin the eight-day celebration of Chanukah. Unlike Christmas, which is a major Christian holy day, Chanukah is considered a minor Jewish festival because it is not commanded in the Bible. Though the two holidays are quite different in many ways, the spiritual dimensions of Chanukah can be especially appreciated by Christians at Christmas.

Chanukah commemorates the political courage and military prowess of the Hasmonean priestly family better known as the Maccabees. (Actually, Maccabee means "the hammer" and was Judah's nickname.) The Maccabees led the people of Judea in a victorious war against the Syrian King Antiochus, who forbade Jewish practices under penalty of death, and against the Jews who abandoned the law and traditions of Judaism for the ways of the Greeks. After purifying the desecrated Temple, they celebrated the re-dedication of the Second Temple for eight days, just as Solomon did for the dedication of the First Temple. Chanukah is the Hebrew word for "dedication." The Maccabean victory in 165 B.C.E., just over two thousand years ago, marks what is probably the first struggle for religious freedom in human history. All Americans can identify with the historical significance of the holiday.

Unfortunately, some of the kings of the Maccabean dynasty were cruel and hated. Moreover, less than two centuries later the Romans conquered the Holy Land. This forced the Jewish sages to find new meaning for this "Royal Independence Day." From the start many people had seen the religious significance of Chanukah in the miraculous nature of the Maccabean victory. The Jews were greatly outnumbered and fought against incredible odds, but God's will prevailed over the enemy's armies. Now the Rabbis proclaimed the public reading of the words of the prophet Zachariah (4:6): "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, says the Lord."

To move even further away from the political background of the festival, the sages turned to a popular legend which recounted how the custom of kindling lights for eight days is due to the Maccabees' finding in the temple only enough ritually pure oil to light the menorah (eternally lit candelabrum) for one day, yet the oil miraculously burned for eight days. They ordained a public display of lights, the story goes, to proclaim the miracle. The light of the Chanukah candles was declared holy. The light must shine forth and declare to the world: miracles do happen! Where there is faith, there is hope.

Another spiritual dimension was added to the holiday by the

Dec. 16 is 40th anniversary of Bastogne's 'Battle of the Bulge'

By Mary Haynes
TRADOC News Service

Before dawn on Dec. 16, 1944, 200,000 German troops launched a surprise attack against 83,000 Americans in and around the town of Bastogne, Belgium, in what was to become known as the opening day of World War II's "Battle of the Bulge." Bastogne contained a vital road network in the Ardennes Forest that the Germans had to control in order to break through to Antwerp.

German strategy gave the Sixth Panzer Army in the north, under General Oberst Der Waffen-ss Josee ("Sepp") Dietrich, responsibility for the main effort: capture the bridges over the Meuse River within 48 hours and then strike for Antwerp. The Fifth Panzer Army in the center supported the drive aimed at Saint Vith and the Meuse, while the German Seventh Army provided flank protection in the south.

To help the advance of the Sixth Panzer Army, the Germans formed a special 2,000-man brigade. Disguised in American uniforms and working in small raiding parties, they were to capture bridges and generally cause confusion behind American lines. All the men spoke English. Actually, only 150 members of the brigade were used. Of this small group, a few died in a mine explosion near the Meuse and the others were either apprehended or did little or no damage behind the American front.

medieval Jewish mystics. The number seven, they said, represents the weekday, the mundane, the world as it is. But eight symbolizes the world as it ought to be, the ultimate in goodness, kindness, and happiness. (Similarly, in music, the eighth note finishes the octave and brings harmony and completion to the seven preceding notes.)

The eight lights of Chanukah became symbolic of the light of the Messiah. According to legend, God created a magical light on the first day of creation which illuminated the world before the creation of the sun on the fourth day. That light is thought to be the messianic light of which Isaiah spoke (60:1): "Arise and shine for your light has dawned; the presence of the Lord has shone upon you." By lighting the Chanukah candles, then, we try to rekindle the inner spark of holy light inside us all, which longs to shine forth in the mes-

Using decorations properly keeps the holidays safe.

Proper use of holiday decorations help make season safe, enjoyable

Chicago, Ill — Whether you enjoy Christmas or Chanukah, the proper use of decorations is an important element to make the holiday season safe and enjoyable, the National Safety Council says.

Each year thousands of Americans suffer needless deaths and injuries as well as the destruction of property because of accidents involving holiday decorations.

The council advises you to consider the following tips:

- If you buy a natural tree, make sure it's fresh. Test it by striking the bottom of the tree against the ground to be sure very few needles fall off. Falling needles indicate that the tree is dry, and that's a fire hazard.
- To keep the tree fresh, cut the trunk about two inches from the bottom and place the tree in a water-filled container. Set the tree away from any fireplace, radiator or other heat sources that could dry it out.
- If you decide on an artificial tree, be sure it's flame-resistent.
- Check all light strings for loose sockets or broken wires. If damaged, don't try to repair them. Buy new ones. New strings should be UL-labelled.
- For outdoor lighting, use exterior lights only. Check them carefully for defects.
- Turn off the tree and outside lights before you leave the house or go to bed.
- If you plan to give a toy to a child, make sure the toy is durable, free of sharp edges, and is appropriate for the age of the child. Avoid purchasing shooting toys for young children and small objects that infants might choke on.
- Keep little ones away from some holiday decorations which might be poisonous if swallowed, such as berries of holly, mistletoe and the leaves of poinsetta plants.
- If you're planning on serving cocktails, have food and non-alcoholic drinks available. Close the bar early, mix drinks moderately, and don't allow guests to drive home if they've had too much to drink. (NSC)

U.S. Army

Advancing from tree to tree, Infantrymen offer the enemy only brief targets. But the shielding trees turned deadly when hit by shellfire, showering men with branches and splinters as well as shell fragments.

Bastogne

senhower, rushed a combat command of the 10th Armored Division and the whole 101st Airborne Division to reinforce the beleaguered units of the 28th Infantry Division and elements of the 9th Armored Division fighting east of Bastogne. By midnight that day, some 60,000 men and 11,000 vehicles were on the way. Meanwhile, a desperate delaying action by the 28th Infantry Division and part of the 9th Armored Division enabled the tanks of the 10th Armored Division to reach Bastogne about seven hours ahead of the Germans, just in time to screen the assembly of the airborne troops. Two days later, contingents of the Fifth Panzer Army encircled the town; but because the Germans wanted mainly to cross the Meuse River to the west, and since they were low on fuel, they delayed an all-out attack. On Dec. 22, when the German commanding officers sent emissaries demanding that the Americans surrender, the acting commander of the airborne division, Brig. Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe, replied in American slang: "Nuts." That same day the U.S. Third Army under Gen. George S. Patton began its drive to Bastogne's relief; and clearing weather on Dec. 23 enabled American planes to drop supplies to the surrounded force.

Tanks take over

When, on Christmas day, the 2nd Armored Division wiped out a Panzer Division at Celles, four miles from the Meuse, Hitler was forced to admit that attaining the Meuse and Antwerp was a strategic impossibility. In spite of these failures, German troops continued to hammer Bastogne throughout Dec. 25, and still, the American offenders tenaciously held. On Dec. 26, the tanks of the 4th Armored Division broke the Siege. Nevertheless, heavy fighting continued for another week as the Germans tried desperately to attain their objective. Reinforced by more troops of the Third Army, the Americans improved their hold on Bastogne, so that on Jan. 3, 1945, the Third Army was able to begin an offensive aimed at reducing the "Bulge" that the Germans had created in the American lines. The last of the bulge was eliminated on Jan. 28.

Numbers tell the rest

The Americans incurred 81,000 casualties — 19,000 killed, 47,000 wounded and 15,000 captured. German losses totalled about 100,000. Each side lost 800 tanks. The German counteroffensive delayed a final allied offensive for six weeks; but Hitler, in expending his last reserves, had crippled the defense of Germany on both the Eastern and Western fronts.

After the war, the town of Bastogne erected a monument called "Mardassion" in tribute to the American stand during the Battle of the Bulge.

Inspector of French Infantry observes training at Benning

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Inspector of the French Infantry, Lt. Gen. Francois Magne, visited Fort Benning Dec. 3 through Dec. 6 for a look at U.S. Army Infantry training.

The general visited ranges and viewed various training exercises which brought him up to date on the training going on at Fort Benning.

Magne was particularly interested in the U.S. concept of One Station Unit Training (OSUT).

"It would be impossible for the French Army to have such a concept. Within each of our Infantry battalions we have five companies. Four of these companies are regular Infantry units made up of trained personnel. The fifth company is made up of training cadre and the soldiers are new draftees. In the training company is where these new soldiers learn how to 'soldier.' This is our equivalent of your basic training," said Magne.

According to Magne, their "basic" training lasts for one month and the second month is specialized, individual training such as mortars or anti-tank. After the initial two months of training the French soldiers then go on to their regular units.

One of the highlights of the general's visit was his chance to drive and fire the main gun of the new Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

"The Bradley, she's a good mount, a beautiful cavalry animal," said Magne.

The general commanded France's 3rd Armored Division in Germany from 1981 through 1983. During his time there he observed many American soldiers.

"I can see a marked difference in the physical fitness and professionalism of American soldiers since I last saw them in 1983 in Germany. While they were good soldiers then they are even better now," said Magne. He was also impressed with the motivation and enthusiasm shown by soldiers here.

"The esprit de corps and motivation at the home of the Infantry here in the U.S. has naturally to be high and must be professional. The soldiers here serve as an example for the rest of your Infantry and as an example of U.S. Infantry for the rest of the world," commented Magne.

Civilian workers are encouraged to take part in fitness programs

By Joe Donahue
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Department of the Army concern for the fitness of it's personnel is now being extended to civilian employees. Army Personnel Chief, Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton has encouraged all major commanders to develop voluntary fitness programs for civilian workers.

"To the extent that resources are available," Elton explained, 'health and fitness should include physical exercise, weight control and good nutrition, smoking cessation, control of substance abuse and stress management."

Data collected from a 30-month test program will be used to determine if on-duty PT programs will benefit the Army.

The benefits hoped for are a marked increase in productivity and lowered levels of absenteeism.

Presently the physical exercise portion of the program must be conducted on a non-duty status basis according to Elton. He said "Civilian work force schedules should be adjusted, consistent with mission requirements, to permit maximum participation."

When questioned concerning the emphasis on fitness of civilian employees, John H. Shultz, chief of Management-Employees in the Civilian Personnel Office at Fort Benning, said he felt the program to be worthwhile if testing proves it to be workable.

Shultz also emphasized that many civilian workers already take part in personal fitness programs. Many of these workers run, golf, swim and bowl at post facilities available to them.

Shultz stressed many post facilities are open to civilian employees. Civilians with Government Service ratings of GS—7 and above may join the Officers Club for free access to the tennis courts, golf course and swimming pool at the club.

BUT IT IS GETTING EASIER TO BE A SOLDIER'S FAMILY.

A soldier's job is tough enough without having to worry about the well-being of his or her family. That's why the Army is taking steps to make the soldier's family feel more at ease.

The Army Family Action Plan is a total program to deal with Army family problems on a systematic, long-term basis. It includes improved child care, housing, health care, and many other services and facilities.

The Chief of Staff, General John A. Wickham, and Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell are totally committed to supporting this plan.

Keep an eye on your wallet when shopping

Christmastime usually means large crowds at department stores and shopping malls, and large crowds usually attract pickpockets.

Here are some suggestions to help you reduce the chances of losing your wallet this season:

- A woman should never dangle a pocketbook from shoulder or elbow. Clench it under the arm instead. Also, choose a pocketbook with as many impediments to pickpockets as possible — a flap over the top that clasps on the side, for instance, and zippers and snap pockets inside. Finally, keep your wallet at the bottom of your purse, with everything else piled on top.
- It's a good idea to spread your money, identification and credit cards in various pockets instead of carrying all these items in your wallet. Police also advise that you should never carry anything in your wallet that you don't need that day.
- A man should keep his wallet in his inside jacket pocket. Rear trouser pockets are the most vulnerable because pickpockets prefer to extract men's walle from behind, where you can't sc them.
- If you carry a wallet in trouser pocket, you can fc thieves by sealing the pock with a safety pin or placing thick rubber band around th wallet so it will stick to th pocket.
- Don't carry your house key in your wallet, because a thi then has easy access to yo home. However, if thieves do g your keys, change locks immed ately. (Reader's Digest

New law serves to protect benefits of ex-spouses of federal employees

Washington — Married federal employees might be affected by new legislation that provides survivor annuity benefits for certain ex-spouses of retired or deceased federal employees.

"The Civil Service Retirement Spouse Equity Act of 1984," entitles qualified spouses and ex-spouses to a number of protective provisions. One of these prohibits a retiring employee from waiving a survivor benefit for a current spouse unless that spouse consents to the waiver. The absence of a waiver means that the employee's annuity will be reduced to provide for the survivor benefit.

Another provision permits the court to order an employee or retiree to provide a survivor annuity for a former spouse. In such a case, the employee's annuity will be reduced accordingly.

May the employee evade a court order to provide for survivor annuity by withdrawing the accumulated retirement contributions upon separation from employment? No. The act allows a court to direct the payment of all or a portion of that refund sum to the former spouse. In its role as arbiter of survivor benefits due the former spouse, the court has the power to prohibit the withdrawal of employee — contributed retirement funds. In this case, the former spouse and any current spouse must be notified of any applications for a refund of those funds. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management is expected to issue rules and procedures on the notification provision.

The new act also addresses the medical-insurance needs of former spouses. If the ex-spouse does not remarry before age 55 and qualifies for an annuity, (s)he may enroll in the Federal Employees' Health Benefits Program but must pay both the "employee" portion and the government share of the premium.

In general, the act covers no cases entailing retirement or divorce before enactment. But a special survivor benefit applies to a small group of ex-spouses whose husbands/wives retired or died before the act's effective date (i.e., 180 days after enactment). The funding of that benefit will come from appropriation rather than from a reduction in the annuitant's payments. Applicants for this special benefit must meet the following qualifications:

- Certify that the divorce (or death) occurred after Sept. 15, 1978;
- Have no record of remarriage before age 55;
- Show that the affected marriage covered at least 10 years of creditable service;
- Be at least 50 years of age;
- Have no entitlement to any other pension (except social security);
- Apply for the benefit within 2.5 years from the date of enactment.

Contact the Civilian Personnel Office for answers to specific questions about the new law.

Newer, more dependable trucks.

What could be easier? Your belongings arrive when you do since everything's safely under your control from door-to-door. No waiting or living out of suitcases. No having to rack up needless motel and food bills.

Equally important, because Ryder's newer equipment is the most dependable, best maintained on the road, you'll find them easier on fuel. And find the trip easier on you.

Choose from parcel vans to 22-foot moving vans.

To make things even easier, you can take your pick from 5 sizes and kinds of trucks. With your choice of optional equipment – everything from air conditioning, radio and power steering to built-in loading ramps.

And remember, Ryder has everything you'll need to make your move complete – from cartons to twine to hand trucks to furniture pads. To a tow dolly or tow bar for towing your car behind you. And a free Ryder Mover's Guide.

See your Transportation Officer for exactly how much you're entitled to on your move.

You'll see how much it pays to have relatives in high places.

IWC helps meet needs of foreign wives

Last week the International Wives Club presented an International Christmas Show at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. More than 10 countries were represented, as the members dressed in native costumes, presented traditional songs and dances or shared with the audience customs from their native countries.

The club is an independent self-supporting group of foreign born women who are married to active and retired military personnel of all ranks. At the present time, there are about 100 members, representing 20 countries in the club. The group was formed in 1975, in an effort to meet the special needs of foreign born wives.

The function of the club is mostly social. Annual events include family picnics, Halloween parties, garden parties, Christmas and anniversary dinners, coffees and baby showers.

Community activities include sponsoring free G.E.D. and English classes, assisting with Army Community Service Citizenship classes, providing translators, speakers for schools, Girl Scout groups and civic clubs. Costume shows for different organizations are also a function of the club.

Monthly membership meetings are held on the first Tuesday of the month at 7:30 p.m. in building 2088, Belke Street. For more information, call Olga Kelly, at 687-6471. (IWC)

Accepting bribes can be trouble

A former government procurement anaylst learned the hard way that accepting bribes can lead to real trouble.

The analyst, a GS-12 with 12 years of federal service, pleaded guilty to accepting approximately $1,000 in cash from the president of a Connecticut firm for disclosing confidential pricing information.

A U.S. District Court judge placed him on five years probation and fined him $2,000. The analyst resigned from government service the day after he was indicted.

Bribery is just one of the subjects covered in a new Department of Defense Inspector General publication, "Indicators of Fraud in DoD Procurement." Some 50,000 copies have been distributed since its late-summer publication.

Michael Eberhardt, assistant inspector general for criminal investigations, policy and oversight, says the 56-page publication is an analysis of the primary indicators of various types of fraud that have been seen in the Department of Defense.

"The book," he says, "is intended to sensitize Department of Defense procurement personnel to a variety of criminal, contractual, civil, and administrative abuses." The book also indentifies a list of remedies that can be used to rectify these problems.

Eberhardt says people who are offered a bribe should handle the situation very carefully. "I've personally seen cases where an employee is offered a bribe and responds, 'No, and if you ever offer me a bribe again, I'll turn you in."

That person, says Eberhardt, made two mistakes: "He made a mistake by not reporting the bribe, and he made the mistake of turning the guy off." The correct way of handling an offer of a bribe, says Eberhardt, is to remain noncommittal. "Tell him you want to think about it, and then report the offer to one of the four Defense Department criminal investigation units."

Those criminal investigation units are: the Defense Criminal Investigative Service, the Naval Investigative Service, the Air Force Office of Special Investigations, and the Army Criminal Investigative Command.

USARSA has trained Latin soldiers for 38 years

By William H. Ormsbee
School of Americas

For the past 38 years, USARSA (U.S. Army School of Americas) — undergoing several name changes and shifts in emphasis — has trained Latin American military personnel in military skills and professional development designed to contribute to their countries' internal defense and national development. A unique U.S. Army service school in many respects, it has provided instruction and training, based on U.S. Army doctrine and taught completely in Spanish, to 45,332 senior and junior officers, academy cadets and enlisted personnel from 22 countries south of the Rio Grande through a wide variety of courses ranging from individual and small unit combat techniques to high-level command or general staff service joint operations and resource management.

Also committed to fostering and strengthening relationships between the United States and the countries of the Western Hemisphere and among those countries, the school has proved to be a important meeting ground fo the exchange of ideas while contributing to inter-American friendship and understanding.

Along with the other two military service schools in the Panama Canal area (the Inter-American Air Forces Academy at Albrook AFS and the Navy's Small Craft Instruction and Technical Team at Rodman Naval Station), USARSA provides instruction and training in the form of military scholarships funded by the International Military Education and Training Program, one of the U.S. Security Assistance Programs.

In December 1946, by the Panama Canal Department's General Order No. 116, the Latin American Training Center, Ground Division (Centro de Entrenamiento Latino Americano, Division Terrestre) was formally established with headquarters in one of the barracks of Ft. Amador (which now houses the 5th Rifle Company of the Panama Defense Forces). The center (which was renamed the Latin American Ground School or Escuela Latino Americano Terrestre) centralized the administrative tasks involved in training the increasing number of Latin Americans attending U.S. service schools located in the Canal Zone. The affiliated schools were the Motor Mechanics School at Ft. Randolph (an Atlantic-side post which was inactivated after World War II and transferred to Panama on Oct. 1, 1979), the Food Service School at Ft. Clayton, and the Medical School which was part of the former General hospital, (building 519) at Ft. Clayton. In addition, the Latin American Ground School was organized into departments of communications, weapons and tactics, and engineering.

This arrangement continued until Feb. 1, 1949, at which time all Army service schools in the Canal Zone were consolidated and moved to the former hospital, (building 400) at Ft. Gulick under the name of U.S. Army Caribbean (USARCARIB) School. The institution continued to operates primarily for the training of U.S. troops with some courses being taught in Spanish only at the request of Latin American countries. The graduates of 1949 consisted of 743 U.S. military members and 251 Latin Americans from 10 countries.

A reduction of U.S. troop strength in the Canal Zone beginning in 1949, coupled with an increased demand by Latin American governments, led to the majority of the school's students being Latin American by 1954. In 1956, all instruction in English was eliminated and Spanish became the official academic language of the school.

On July 1, 1963, the school's name was changed to the U.S. Army School of the Americas to better reflect its hemisphere orientation.

USARSA's curriculum during the early 1960s was complementary to the effort undertaken by other U.S. government agencies in the Alliance for Progress.

In 1961, in recognition of the increasing Communist threat in Latin America, those school courses which were most directly related to national internal defense were grouped into one department, and a Counterinsurgency Committee was established to teach counterinsurgency operations to U.S. and Latin American military personnel. That Department of Internal Defense provided instruction in every aspect of counterinsurgency operations as well as military subjects assigned to contribute to national development.

At the same time, the school emphasized stimulation of nation building and economic growth by military civic action by emphasizing training in technical skills applicable to civic action programs. (In various Latin American nations, the armed services had been one of the few institutions adequately trained, equipped, and disciplined to provide skilled technicians for the civilian economy.) Such emphasis was borne out by the fact that 23 of the school's 42 courses in the 1960's, or slightly more than half the curriculum, fell into this category. Such courses provided training as heavy construction operators, well-drilling specialists, radio repairmen, bridge sianic age of love, peace, and joy.

One Hasidic rabbi connected the end with the means. He playfully interpreted the Hebrew word for the Chanukah candelabrum, Chanukiyah, as Chinukhi Yah, meaning, "my education is God." Only by nurturing our children with love and reverence for God can we be blessed with that age of peace on earth, goodwill to humanity.

Our two faiths have different customs and traditions. Yet as we enter the darkest days of the year and think of the coming of spring, we both joyously kindle lights of faith and hope for the dawning of a better world.

builders, basic medical technicians, and water purification specialist. The school's civic action instruction stressed the pragmatic approach, opposed "give-away" programs, and emphasized civic action activities. This included the recipients' participation in the planning, as well as the actual practical work, involved in the projects most of which were conducted in rural Panamanian villages on the Atlantic side.

Many changes

The 1970s saw many changes occurring at USARSA, both in the school's curriculum and organization.

Several long standing courses dating back to the 1950s were discontinued, most due to a decline in student attendance and budgetary constraints. Medical technician courses were dropped in 1975 followed by engineering courses in 1977. Many of the counterinsurgency courses were discontinued while others were incorporated into other courses. Several military police and military intelligence courses or subject matter were eliminated from from the school's curriculum in 1975 and 1977 respectively primarily due to the Harrington Amendment. This interpretation of Section 660 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 basically prohibited law enforcement instruction to those personnel who have an on-going civilian law enforcement function — in essence, permitting such training only to military police personnel having no civilian law enforcement responsibility.

In 1976, USARSA was combined with the Security Assistance Office, then under the 193rd Inf. Bde. (Canal Zone), to form the U.S. Security Assistance Agency Latin American (USSAALA). USSAALA was then placed directly under the control of the Department of the Army's Office of Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations but commanded by the 193rd Infantry Brigade commander.

Lowpoint

Fiscal Year 1980 marked a low-point of a three-year downward trend in enrollment at the school with only 704 students from 10 Latin American countries. Due to political, military or economic considerations only about half of the nations which might have participated in USARSA programs were actually doing so.

At this low-point, several initiatives were undertaken to increase the number of participating nations, including significant reductions in the costs of most courses following an innovative course cost analysis in January 1980.

In 1981 this situation began to turn around as U.S. policy changed, with an increased threat in the region, the easing of some U.S. legislative restrictions that had precluded participation of some countries in the International Military Training and Education Program (and hence in USARSA) since 1977, and an increase in IMET funds allocated by the U.S. Government in recipient countries.

More students

The uptread in enrollement began with a doubling of students in 1981 (1,494) over the previous year, followed by 1,532 students in 1982, and an all-time high 2,625 students (from 12 Latin American countries) in 1983. In 1984, a total of 1,797 students from 13 countries graduated from 32 classes representing 19 different courses.

Also influencing the increase in enrollment was the development by USARSA of three new courses to meet the training demand of the school's clients — the Officer Candidate School corse initially for Honduras, the Noncommissioned Officer Development Course which evolved from the (Special Squad Leader course) for El Salvador and the Military Intelligence course.

This resurgence during this four-year period was most notable with respect to El Salvador's participation, since having been readmitted to the International Military Education and Training Program (and thus to USARSA in April 1980), after having been excluded in 1978-79. Of the 3,967 Salvadorans graduating from the school since 1946, 3,075 (or almost 80 percent of that country's total graduates) graduated since 1980. Other countries having increased participation during the same period were Honduras, Dominican Republic, Colombia, Ecuador, and Peru. In 1981 for the first time since 1968, Costa Rica began sending students from its Rural Guard for certain courses, such as Patrolling Operations, and has since graduated 189 from the school.

Multi-national

It is not only the student body that is multinational in scope, but the staff and faculty as well. The school's deputy commandant has been a Latin American colonel since 1977. This position has been filled respectively by Manuel Jaime Guerrero Paz from Colombia, Wilfredo Mori Orozo from Peru, Jorge Asanza Acaiturri from Ecuador, Omar A. Zelaya-Reyes from Honduras, Sebastian Batistua from Brazil, and sine January 1984, Ricardo Garibaldo F. from Panama. Guerrero Paz and Asanza have since been promoted to general in their countries.

Approximately 40 percent of the school's instructors are Latin Americans, a longstanding practice dating back to the 1950s. In 1984, 41 Latin American officer and enlisted instructors represented 12 countries. The other Spanish-speaking instructors are members of the U.S. Army, plus one U.S. Air Force Officer and one Marine Corps Officer who is temporarily assigned during blocks of instruction involving amphibious warfare and joint operations.

Despite the resurgence in participation by Latin American countries at the school over the past four years, the future of USARSA has been in question for much of the same period.

One of the agreements related to the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977 (which was implemented Oct. 1, 1979) grants authority for training Latin American military personnel by USARSA for five years from the date of treaty implementation unless the governments of the United States and the Republic of Panama agree otherwise.

Date coincides

The date (Oct. 1, 1984) coincides with the treaty-scheduled transfer of Ft. Gulick (except family housing and community services areas and the ammunition storage facility) to the Republic of Panama, including the several facilities housing the school.

The two governments had been negotiating a new agreement which would have permitted continued training of Latin American students under a new institution. However, Panama and the United States have been unable to conclude a mutually satisfactory agreement for a successor institution to continue in Panama. Hence, to assure compliance with treaty provisions requiring the school's closure by Sept. 30 and the turnover of the buildings to the government of Panama on Oct. 1, numerous close-down actions were undertaken — including compression of some courses and cancellation of six other programmed courses; packaging and removal of equipment and furnishings; and a phased withdrawal of students, faculty and staff - so that the buildings could be ready for turnover to Panama on Oct. 1.

> "It is not only the student body that is multinational in scope, but the staff and faculty as well. The school's deputy commandant has been a Latin American colonel since 1977."

Common sense helps prevent cold injuries

It's one of the deadliest dangers of the outdoors.

It kills about 50 percent of its victims.

It's hypothermia — a lowering of the body's inner core temperature.

Its three main ingredients? Cold, wetness and wind. But the weather doesn't have to be extremely cold. Getting wet at 40 degrees in a 20-mile wind can be fatal. And the wetness can come simply from perspiring.

Shivering is the first symptom. It is nature's warning signal and it's also a defense because it produces body heat. But it consumes energy and leads to exhaustion. As body temperature drops, shivering becomes violent and uncontrollable. Speech becomes slurred and amnesia may occur.

If cooling isn't halted, muscle stiffness replaces shivering, motor control is lost, and pulse and respiration slow. Then comes unconsciousness and finally — when body temperature reaches 78 degrees or less — death.

Anyone can be a victim, but prime candidates are skiers, snowshoers, ice fishermen, snowmobilers, mountain climbers, backpackers and winter campers. Conditions need not be wintry. Hypothermia can strike when air temperature is above freezing.

The best prevention is common sense. For instance, don't tackle a climb or strenuous trip unless you're up to it physically. Exhaustion is step number one toward tragedy. If someone in the group appears to be tiring, turn back or seek immediate shelter and rest.

Wear several thin layers, preferably of wool, rather than a single heavy jacket. Even when wet, wool retains body warmth. No other fabric does. Cottons and synthetics, especially when wet, act as wicks, rapidly feeding the body's warmth into the outer air.

Peel down when you're active to avoid excessive perspiration. When you pause for lunch or to rest, put the layers back on as needed.

More than 50 percent of your body's heat production can escape via your head. So wear wool head gear that covers your ears and neck — a hunting cap, for example. "When your feet are cold, put on a hat" makes sense. Carry a windproof parka and rain gear.

Eat heartily before starting, and snack often. To produce energy and heat, the body needs food. Sweets are best for quick results because carbohydrates convert most quickly to energy. For staying power and prolonged heat production, proteins and fats are most efficient.

The greatest danger is getting wet, either through rain, perspiration or immersion. According to one expert, the thermal conductivity of water or ice is 240 times as great as that of still air. In other words, anyone who risks breaking through thin ice might just as well leave a suicide note pinned to the nearest tree. However, providing knowledgeable help is at hand, the victim has a chance of survival.

Ideally, he should be dunked in a 110-degree bath, an unlikely convenience. So what do you do? Peel off his clothing. Cut it. Tear it. Work fast. Seconds count. Get dry clothing on the victim, each member of the group contributing one or more items.

If he can walk, keep the victim moving and ply him with hot coffee, tea or soup, but no alcohol. Alcohol will cause cold surface blood to penetrate deeper into the body, further cooling the core.

With a sleeping bag at hand, survival chances are enhanced. If it's large enough, place the victim in it with a second person, both stripped down. In this case, clothing will hamper the transfer of warmth. Should the bag be too small, prewarm it.

The most important point is, plan your outdoor activity during winter months. While there's no reason to hibernate, too much winter can kill. (TNS)

Use portable heaters with care

Chicago — Millions of portable kerosene heaters are now in use and many more will join the ranks during this heating season, says the National Safety Council.

These heaters offer a convenient and economical source of heat, but they must be used with care in order to prevent fire and illnesses, the council said.

Statistics available to the council show the number of kerosene heaters in use have increased from 1.1 million in 1978 to 10.2 million in 1982. The data also pointed out an increase in heater contact burns, as a result of this additional usage, from 230 in 1978 to 6,760 in 1982. The council believes this high injury rate can be reduced if the following safety suggestions are followed:

- The first thing you should do when you buy a heater is to read the instruction manual from front to back, then keep it handy for quick reference. Follow all instructions to the letter.

- Unvented kerosene heaters expel combustion products into the room. Though the amount is small compared to what your furnace generates, the combustion products still make you ill if you are in a tightly closed area without ample ventilation. Always crack a window one-half inch to one inch. This will allow any buildup of toxic gases to be replaced with fresher air.

- To assure cleaner burning and the lowest level of pollutants, buy the best grade of kerosene, usually identified by 1-K. The less refined grades of kerosene are used for jet planes, old tractors or vented kerosene heating equipment, but not for portable heaters since they contain more sulfur and other impurities. This may mean smoke, smell and emission of sulfur dioxide, a gas that does no one any good.

- Store kerosene out of the house in a clearly marked container, preferably blue with white lettering. Make certain paper, fabrics and other combustibles are at least three feet away from the heater and that children are warned about not touching or playing with the unit. (NSC)

Anxiety, depression common causes of insomnia

One-half of all Americans have trouble sleeping on occasion and one-third of us have chronic sleeping problems. There is no absolute amount of sleep required for everybody. Some people do quite well with 6 hours sleep while others need 10 hours.

Insomnia means you either have trouble falling asleep or staying asleep. If you suffer from insomnia for more than a week, it could be a sign of a medical, psychiatric or emotional problem. Anxiety and depression are two of the most common causes.

We all know caffeine in coffee and tea can keep us awake, but soft drinks with caffeine and stimulants such as diet pills often are overlooked causes of insomnia.

Tranquilizers and alcohol interfere with normal sleep patterns. After a few drinks, you may sleep less, wake up more often and spend less time in the most restful stages of sleep.

Sleeping pills themselves, sometimes cause insomnia rather than relieve it. They also disrupt normal sleep patterns and, if not discontinued carefully, can cause additional sleep disturbances and nightmares.

If you have trouble for more than a week, check with your doctor. The best way to treat insomnia is to identify the cause and correct it — preferably without sleeping pills.

Counseling and the use of relaxation techniques are effective when the problem is stress or anxiety. Here are some suggestions that may help.

- Drink hot milk at bedtime.
- Remain active during the day.
- Avoid naps.
- Leave off or reduce all caffeine intake.
- Avoid smoking around bedtime.
- Do light exercises but avoid vigorous exercise before bedtime.
- Eat regular meals.
- Avoid large meals, especially salty ones, for several hours before bedtime.
- Relax before retiring.
- Keep the room dark and quiet.
- If you can't get to sleep, don't stay in the bed. Get up. Go into another room and do something until you feel drowsy.

For some people, prescription sleeping pills are necessary, particularly during a time of transient stress or a change in environment such as being hospitalized.

Although many nonprescription drugs are promoted for safe and restful sleep, it is not clear how effective and safe some of these are. To date, diphenhydramine, an antihistamine used in many over-the-counter products, is the only drug which might be safe and effective. More work, however, must be done before we can be absolutely sure. Diphenhydramine along with the other suggested measures might be tried for occasional insomnia.

When using diphenhydramine, never take more than the recommended dose. The drug and alcohol, even beer, don't mix. Alcohol interacts with diphenhydramine to depress the brain further, occasionally causing a drop in blood pressure, trouble breathing and coma.

The safety of using diphenhydramine in pregnancy has not been assessed. Avoid it during the first three months of pregnancy. Use it after that only under supervision of your obstetrician. Mothers who are breast feeding their child should not use diphenhydramine.

If you have asthma, epilepsy, glaucoma, thyroid disease, heart disease or high blood pressure of take other medicines, check with your doctor or pharmacist before trying diphenhydramine.

When you take any sleeping pill, you may wake up with a hangover the next morning. Your thinking and coordination can be affected. Avoid driving or operating dangerous machinery. If you have trouble waking up, slurred speech or an unsteady gait, call your doctor. These symptoms may mean you are unusually sensitive to the drug.

Research on tryptophan, an amino acid found in our diets, suggests it may help people who have trouble falling asleep but not people who have trouble staying asleep. Before tryptophan can be recommended, studies must be done to see how much is needed and if there are any dangers associated with taking it.

All sleeping pills, including prescription ones, should only be used occasionally. They are only effective for a short period of time. No sleeping pill is effective when taken continuously for longer than a month. (ARNEWS)

Orienteering competition discussed

By Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Unit A & R personnel and interested orienteerers gathered at a meeting Monday at Harmony Church to learn more about the new orienteering competition.

The meetings are being conducted by MSAD to provide interested participants with a working knowledge of basic orienteering techniques as a preparation for upcoming unit competition.

Orienteering is a sport which requires the use of topographical maps and a compass. The object of orienteering is to follow a cross-country course in order to find a series of check points that must be recorded on a scorecard. The scorecard records the starting and the finish lines. The participant with the fastest time and with all the check points properly recorded is the winner.

Jeanne Truitt, sports specialist for MSAD and who heads the orienteering program, has been conducting classes since Nov. 16. She says these instructional briefings will be held thru Jan. 14, when unit competition may begin. Truitt added that she will gladly teach the class to any unit that would like one, and by the amount of support given to the program thus far the program has gotten off on the right foot.

"A lot of people who have attended the class have really enjoyed themselves," said Truitt. "We've got a lot of support from all ends — from the company level to the Commanding General."

Truitt herself is no newcomer to orienteering. She was the orienteering club president at Florida State University and also taught orienteering to the ROTC units there. She was once considered as one of the nation's Top 10 women in orienteering competition.

Mark Cummings

Soldiers use maps and compasses to locate the next point as part of last Monday's orienteering class.

The orienteering class is approximately a three-hour block of instruction. The class is split into a classroom instruction period and a run through an orienteering course, to give personnel a feel for the sport.

The classroom segment consists of instruction on map reading, compass skills, measuring distance and pacing, basic navigation techniques and other route choice considerations.

For more information on orienteering call Jeanne Truitt at 545-4300/1532.

A whale of a catfish

James Clinkscales of Columbus poses with a 48-pound blue catfish he caught last Saturday morning at Fort Benning's Twilight Pond. Clinkscales struggled for almost 10 minutes to bring the fish to shore. The catch measured 43 1/4 inches and had a girth of 30 1/2 inches. Clinkscales is retired from Civil Service.

Don't overtrain for upcoming Infantry Marathon

By Bob Cline
Marathon runner

The purpose of this article is to discuss simple overuse injuries and not more serious injuries which require medical attention; however, I will touch on how to tell the difference.

Most overuse injuries occur when a runner attempts to increase his mileage too fast or switches from long slow distance running to speed running. I'm often asked how runners can assure themselves that they are training enough, while being careful not to train too much.

There is a very fine line between the two. Over the years I've come to believe two rules about training. The first is it's better to be undertrained than overtrained. The second is if things are going badly, I am undoubtedly overtrained and need less work rather than more. To guide yourself along this fine line you've got to exercise common sense and learn to listen to your body.

Some good indicators of overtraining are a rapid resting heart rate, unexplained weight loss, irregular sleep patterns and cloudy urine. A rapid resting pulse rate is a sure sign that you are overtraining and rest is in order. You should know your resting heart rate; mine is normally about 40 beats per minute. Any variation of 10 beats or more after a workout or inability of the pulse rate to return to normal soon after a hard workout indicates a tired body. A sudden unexplaind weight loss also indicates that a body is overworked. Most runners lose weight during workouts due to loss of fluid; however, this is quickly regained. A sudden drop of three or more pounds from a runner's normal resting weight is a sign to back off and go fishing for the day.

Another reliable indicator of overstress is a runner's urine. Normal urine is almost clear and odorless, whereas a dehydrated runner will often excrete a darker waste. Care should be taken to rehydrate after every training run.

I find the most reliable indicator of overtraining is the inability to sleep soundly. This is a yellow caution flag waving in my face demanding attention.

While training for the Infantry Marathon, you should remember not to go too far too fast. Your body must have time to adapt to the new stress placed upon it. Overstress and overconditioning lead to injury. As you train for the 26.2 mile distance, your heart will become a more efficient pump; the lungs will become more effective at carrying oxygen to the muscles. This all takes time and training. You should honestly evaluate your level of fitness before you begin to train for the marathon. As Fred Dyer suggested, if you are not cur-

Rifle areas

Black powder rifles can only be used in the rifle designated areas on Fort Benning. Fort Benning does not have a primitive weapons hunting season like the State of Georgia.

Hitting deer

Any deer hit by a vehicle on Fort Benning will be confiscated by the game wardens and transported to the post Veterinary Activity. The only exception will be, that during the hunting season the vehicle driver may tag and keep the deer if he has an appropriate hunting license and deer tag on his person.

Orienteering Classes

Try the sport of orienteering, especially designed for nature lovers, runners and spirited competitors. Classes are now being taught by MSAD, Physical Activities Branch. Interested military personnel should contact their respective A & R officer/NCO or call Jeanne Truitt, 545-4300/1532 for more information.

'Bama duck hunting

The Alabama waterfowl (duck, coot and merganser) season has recently been announced and applies to the Alabama portion of Fort Benning. The season is Dec. 2 — Jan. 20, 1985. Hunting hours are one-half hour before sunrise until sunset. Alabama uses a point system for determining the daily bag limit; therefore, all hunters are urged to become familiar with the point value for species and sex prior to hunting. In addition to a Federal Duck Stamp, an Alabama State Duck Stamp is also required. Waterfowl hunting on the Georgia portion of Fort Benning is outlined in USAIC Circular 210-4, Installation Hunting Seasons and Bag Limits, dated Aug. 1, 1984. If you have any questions call 544-6120.

Swim records broken

Fort Benning's Chuck Gantner shattered three state records Sunday as he placed in nine events in the 35-39 year old age group at the Georgia Masters Swimming Meet, held last Sunday in Atlanta.

Gantner, a senior education specialist with DOTD, set records by winning the 50-yard backstroke (28.71 seconds), 100-yard backstroke (1:03.66) and 200-yard backstroke (2:23.34). He also won the 25-, 50- and 100-yard freestyle, 50- and 100-yard butterfly and 100-yard intermediate medley.

He also finished second in the 500-yard freestyle.

Wrestling Action

Exciting NWA Wrestling action returns to the Columbus Municipal Auditorium tonight with an attractive 5-bout card.

In the main event it's good vs. evil as the trio of Thunderbolt Patterson, Ole Anderson and Jerry Oates square off against the Dirty White Boys and manager Jimmy Hart in a 6-man tag team match. Other matches pit the Long Riders versus Ron Ritchie and Jacque Rougeau, Tommy "Wildfire" Rich trying to wrestle the National TV Title away from Bob Roop, National Heavyweight Champ Ronnie Garvin defends his belt against Ox Baker and Mr. Ito and Ron Slinker do battle in a special Martial Arts Match.

Match time is 8:15 p.m. Tickets are $5 for ringside, $4.50 for general admission and $3.00 for children 4-11. Phone reservations can be made by calling 324-0243.

rently running at least 25 miles per week, I would not recommend you attempt to train for the full marathon distance. If you are training for the race, I would suggest that you don't attempt to increase your mileage more than 10 percent per week.

Don't skip a proper warm-up and warm-down. Some novice runners don't give themselves enough time to warm up adequately before running, others don't give themselves enough time to stretch out after running. Warm up before a training run by doing gentle stretching and starting a run slowly (jumping jacks and situps also help.) After a run, do a liberal amount of stretching. I always try to end a long or hard run with a short walk to help eliminate some of the waste products that accumulate in muscles.

The type of terrain you are training on should not be overlooked. I've run in marathons all over the world (Boston, Honolulu, Korea, Huntsville, etc.) and I can tell you that the Fort Benning marathon course is the flatest and fastest I've ever run. Training is specific! Since there are no hills to speak of on the course, don't go out looking to run hill workouts. There are far more knee injuries on downhill runs than on level ones. Although uphill running strengthens the legs, it also places a lot of stress on the legs and can lead to injury.

Don't quit because of a minor injury. Beginning runners often give up on running too quickly. Slight imbalances of the feet can lead to overuse injuries, overuse injuries lead to weakness and weakness leads to an improper running style which can cause further injury. All this must be corrected. Fortunately, sports medicine practitioners are adapt at treating running injuries and you should seek the help of a professional before giving up training. Injuries usually respond to treatment based on correcting improper running style, strengthening weakened muscles, stretching tight muscles and improving the functioning of the feet by using shoe modifications and foot orthoses. I recommend the Physical Therapy Clinic at Martin Army Hospital as one good source of sports medical information.

If you should injure yourself, you need to evaluate the type and duration of the pain. The subjective signs of injury are varying degrees and duration of pain. If the pain is only mild and lasts for two or three days before disappearing, the injury is not serious. If, however, the pain persists beyond four or five days, or it becomes worse with activity, you should seek medical attention. Swelling, increased localized warmth of skin, or discoloration are other physical signs of muscle damage. The best medication for these problems is a healthy dose of common sense. If a muscle is stiff or sore, don't attempt a hard workout. If the problem is not serious, it will go away. Rest, ice and aspirin will help.

As the saying goes, "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." In addition to stretching, I suggest that you begin some type of weight program to strengthen muscles not used for running. Running overdevelops the muscles in the back of the leg and this creates an imbalance with the muscles in the front of the leg, leading to injury. Use an old inner tube or a paint can filled with sand and exercise the shin and quadracep muscles by looping the device over your instep and raising your toes. Increased upper body strength will benefit your running and help stave off fatigue during the race. I recommend a nautilus program because it offers a full range of motion exercises.

Finally, a word about safety. There has been a growing controversy regarding runners on roads impeding traffic. While suggestions that we train for a marathon by running through a housing area are unrealistic, the point is well taken. Choose your training course on lightly traveled roads whenever possible and run off the road surface facing traffic. Now that we are back to Eastern Standard Time, it gets dark around 6:30 p.m. This means training in darkness at times. Avoid this if possible, but, if you must, be sure to wear reflective clothing and carry a flashlight. When running at night, try to stick to sidewalks or other flat surfaces. You run the risk of stepping in a rut or hole running alongside a road surface you can't see. Run defensively.

Remember, in marathoning, to finish is to win.

The true meaning of Christmas: Peace, goodwill

By Becky Winters
and Mark Cummings
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The holiday season is a time to reflect on what Christmas is really about.

For Christians it is a time to celebrate the birth of Christ.

For children it is a time of wonder and miracles as they watch the whole world become covered in lights and decorations, and awake Christmas morning delighted to find that Santa Claus really knew their addresses.

For some it is the pressures of finding the right gift, at the right price, for that special person.

For many shoppers fighting the crowds at the stores, it is a season they wish would pass quickly so life can return to normal.

What is the real meaning of Christmas? The answer would probably vary with each person asked, but when you get right down to it, everyone would agree that they hope for "Peace on earth, goodwill to men."

For the men and women in uniform, it is more than a hope; it is a sacred trust they have entered into, a commitment to defend our freedom.

We are blessed to live in a country that honors individual freedom, and in which every person has individual rights.

But we must not take these rights and freedoms for granted. Every day, dedicated men and women are working to ensure that our country remains free.

From the young Infantry soldier training on the M16, to the general planning battlefield strategies, soldiers know the true meaning of peace. Too many of them have experienced first hand the sacrifices, sweat and sorrow of working to maintain this peace.

It is a time to remember that the privileges we enjoy as we live in a democracy, are the result of many peoples' selfless dedication to duty at home and abroad.

It is a time to give thanks for the Infantryman patrolling the DMZ in Korea; the instructor teaching in Latin America; the nurse caring for patients at Martin Army; all the military men and women who are working to preserve our freedom.

For the soldiers at Fort Benning, it is a time to stand a little bit taller, and be proud of their contribution in keeping us a free nation.

From the staff of the Bayonet, Merry Christmas to all, and a peaceful new year.

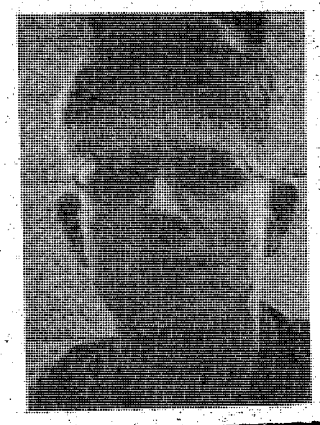
What does Christmas mean to you?



Pvt. 2 James C. Walton III, HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor—"Christmas means sharing and remembering the birth of Christ. I think that Christmas should solely be a celebration of Christ's birth, instead of all this Santa Claus hoopla and the big media hype."

Willie J. Strong Jr., military dependent—"To me Christmas means going to church and having lots of fun. It also means opening presents, singing carols and rejoicing with out-of-town relatives. But the main focus of Christmas is to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ."

PFC James R. Patterson, HHC, 3rd Bn., 7th Infantry, 197th Inf. Bde. — "Christmas is having peace in the world and being with your family and friends. Back home in Manhattan I always go to St. Peter's there and watch the nativity scene on Christmas Eve."

COHORT units graduate

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The United States Army's first Cohesion, Operational Readiness and Training (COHORT) Battalion graduated from OSUT in a ceremony here Wednesday. The new battalion, which is to be reactivated in January, will be assigned to the 7th Infantry Division at Fort Ord, Calif.

Soldiers making up the 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry, 7th Infantry Division were graduates of the Bravo and Echo companies of the 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

The officers and non-commissioned officers graduated from the Light Leaders Course Tuesday. This is a new course that is taught by the Ranger Department to officers and NCOs assigned to light infantry divisions.

In his speech, Maj. Gen. John W. Foss, post commander, said, "When the Army decided to convert the 7th Infantry Division to a light infantry, it required that we raise three new infantry divisions in a period of about six months."

It was decided that these would be the first battalions to be raised from scratch in the training center, with the leaders trained separately and joined together as a battalion COHORT unit, he explained.

"Today the cadre joins with their soldiers in a historic first, in which the Army has trained both the leaders and the soldiers of the battalion and put them together."

Foss said that the unit will take on a great responsibility, because "the entire Army will be looking at them."

President's message

On behalf of all Americans, Nancy and I send our warmest wishes to each of you for a happy holiday season.

And it is a happy holiday because America is at peace and America is secure. For this gift we're all grateful to you, the dedicated men and women of the United States armed forces. It's certainly fitting to thank you because it's your devotion to duty that permits us to celebrate this holiday season according to our own special customs and traditions, and to look with hope toward 1985 and beyond.

At this time of Hanukkah and Christmas, our religious freedom means so much to each and every one of us. However, we know this is a particularly difficult time of year to be away from home, and those of you whose duty requires you to be separated from your friends and loved ones deserve special recognition.

While you may not be able to celebrate the holiday season with those dearest to your heart, you may be sure that they're thinking of you and appreciating your service. Well, I join them in those feelings. You are very special people. You are guardians of the peace and freedom we all cherish. Good bless you.

RONALD REAGAN
President

CG's message

During the Christmas - New Year Holidays, most of us will join family and friends in the tradition celebration of the season. Family members frequently travel great distances to be with relatives or old friends on this joyous occasion. All too frequently this holiday season is marred by an accidental death or serious injury to a family member or friend, and the holiday season is sadly remembered.

Changeable weather conditions and reduced hours of daylight call for extra caution on the part of both drivers and pedestrians. It is a fact that accidents and arrests involving drunken drivers increase during the Christmas - New Year period, and that alcohol is a factor in most highway fatalities. Families and individuals planning to travel by automobile should schedule rest stops and use seat belts. A driver who is rested and buckled in is less likely to cause an accident and less likely to be injured if struck by another vehicle. Persons with long distances to travel should plan to use safer commercial transportation.

I wish all Fort Benning personnel a joyful and accident-free Christmas and New Year.

JOHN W. FOSS
Major General, USA
Commanding

Secretary of Defense

The holiday season is always a special time of the year. It is a time of love, gifts, family and sharing the blessings of freedom.

You, the men and women of our armed forces, know a lot about giving. Every day, you give your energy, your talents and your dedication to protect and preserve our American way of life.

Your task is not an easy one. Many of you are spending this special time away from the warmth of your families, in remote outposts and foreign lands, and sometimes in areas of great danger.

I know well that all of you in our defense establishment, both military and civilian, bear a heavy burden for all of us. And all of you should take great pride in the knowledge that what you do secures the most important gift any people can receive — the gift of freedom.

No matter where you are, may you and your families and friends around the world have a happy and safe holiday and a prosperous, free 1985.

CASPER W. WEINBERGER

School of Americas officially opens at Benning

By Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) officially opened in ceremonies Tuesday at Fort Benning, with nearly 500 guests in attendance.

General Paul F. Gorman, commander-in-chief of the U.S. Southern Command, was guest speaker. He said, "The school's logo--a Columbus-era Spanish galleon at sea with a red Maltese cross on its sail--is a recognized symbol of military professionalism in the numerous Latin American countries I've been through."

"This is but a mere indication of the high esteem with which military personnel in Latin American countries view USARSA," he went on. "USARSA is a strategic resource of all countries united in the Rio Pact since the 1940s."

Other special guests attending the ceremony were Maj. Gen. Fred F. Woerner, commander, U.S. Security Assistance Agency for Latin America and the 193d Infantry Brigade (Panama); Georgia Congressman Richard Ray; Georgia State Representative Mary Jane Galer; Columbus Mayor J.W. Feighner; and Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. John W. Foss.

Also attending the ceremony were 13 general officers and attaches from throughout Latin America.

The ceremony was highlighted by 20 howitzer salutes as 19 represented countries' flags were raised. Then the school's building-mounted lettering was unveiled. These same letters were originally mounted on USARSA's headquarters building in Fort Gulick, Panama.

Under provisions of an agreement implementing the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, the school closed its doors Sept. 30 at Fort Gulick.

USARSA provides training in various military leadership and management skills. Its courses of study include combat arms, military intelligence, resource management, NCO and cadet leadership, patrolling and ranger training, and the 45-week command and general staff course.

In its 38-year history, USARSA has graduated 45,331 military personnel from 22 Latin American countries.

AUSA working to improve soldier's quality of life

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Soldiers and their families are the top priority of the AUSA," said Hal Van Meter, president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Associaion of the U.S. Army. "We are constantly trying to improve their quality of life, because these people are giving so much for their country and deserve to be compensated for their sacrifices."

In its 1985 Resolutions, the national organization stressed the importance of passing its Armed Forces Bill of Rights.

"This is something that national AUSA is lobbying for that will improve the lives of all soldiers," said Van Meter. "It asks for a pay system that adequately compensates soldiers and recognizes the unique nature of military service."

Some provisions of the Bill of Rights are: adequate housing or quarters allowance; an expense reimbursement system which fully compensates personnel for official travel, dependent travel, family separation and shipment of household goods; improved medical and dental care; and improvements in the commissary and exchange systems.

AUSA is fighting to provide a competitive non-contributory retirement system for military personnel, with cost of living increases tied to the Consumer Price Index, and benefits not offset by other employment or Social Security payments.

"A soldier's retirement is something he has earned, and AUSA is working continuously to improve it and keep legislators from making cuts in that area," Van Meter said.

The organization is fighting the current practice of taking away monies from retirees who are DA civilian employees.

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA is the oldest chapter in the country, and has been working to strengthen the Army for nearly 27 years.

While the organization is known on post for such things as awarding certificates of appreciation to honor graduates and sponsoring various functions, its most important role is support of soldiers and DA civilians as a lobbying organization.

Reorganization produces new infantry regiment

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 29th Infantry Regiment was activated Dec. 10, in a move that consolidated the Infantry Training Group, 1/29th Infantry, and Weapons, Gunnery and Maintenance Department into one streamlined organization.

The new regiment is composed of the 1st and 2nd Battalions.

The reorganization came about on the initiative of the commanding general, who directed the Directorate of Resources Management to do manangement studies to see how the missions of the organizations involved could be performed more efficiently.

"We kept getting messages from higher headquarters saying that we are ultimately going to have to do more with less," said Maj. Bill McCrary, executive officer of the new 2nd Battalion, who was part of the reorganization study group.

The group was formed in March 1984, and was composed of representatives from the three organizations and DRM.

"First we looked strictly at the feasibility of consolidation," said McCrary. "We determined that it was feasible, so we developed a "straw-man" structure based on what the mission of the new organization would be, and tried to find a functional relationship between the three organizations."

Colonel Jim Ellis is the commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment. Lt. Col. Bruce G. Shipley is commander of the 1st Battalion, and Lt. Col. Roy Turgeon is the commander of the 2nd Battalion.

Headquarters for the regiment is located in bldg. 4714 in Harmony Church, formerly the headquarters of ITG. The 2nd Battalion will also be housed in Harmony Church, while the 1st Battalion will be in Kelley Hill.

The purpose of the merger was to better utilize manpower and resources to fulfill the training mission.

Prior to the activation, some units were in charge of training, while others provided vehicles and equipment. What the reorganization did was effectively put

SPIRIT winners named

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Donald Morris and 1st Lt. Alan Brown, both of the Directorate of Industrial Operations, were named individual SPIRIT Award winners for the fourth quarter of FY 84, in ceremonies Dec. 10.

Morris was cited for rebuilding empty casings for missile simulation rounds instead of requisitioning these items through supply channels. As a result of his initiative, the Army will realize a cost avoidance savings to the Army of $181,963.

Brown was cited for his initiative in implementing new procedures for the turn-in and processing of ammunition residue, which resulted in a savings of $42,250.

"It is especially exciting for us to present these individual SPIRIT awards," said Dot Russell, post SPIRIT coordinator, "because it shows everyone where the savings comes from, regular workers just like you and me."

DIO was named the winner of the Meritorious SPIRIT Award and the Directorate of Engineering and Housing received the SPIRIT Achievement Award for fourth quarter FY 84, in separate ceremonies.

During the fourth Quarter, DEH implemented two suggestions; the first a pump shaft modification project, and also devised a method to safely provide regulated heating to the 2800 block barracks. Annual savings resulting from these actions was $51,716.

DIO implemented eight suggestions and sixteen management improvement actions, resulting in an annual savings of $406,596.

The Staff Judge Advocate office won the Project SPIRIT Award for the quarter, for actions that resulted in annual savings of over $97,000.

Post Chief of Staff Col. Carmen Cavezza, said, "You are positive proof that a small activity can win and make significant contributions for improvements at Fort Benning and throughout the Army."

IOAC students execute three-phase exercise

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Students from class 5 of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course recently got a chance to see how well they could put into practice what they've learned in the classroom when they conducted a four-day training exercise. The students planned, executed and served in various leadership roles during the exercise.

The exercise was divided into three phases. Before the actual field exercise started, the students were instructed on battle drill taught by the Basic Small Unit Tactics Branch. This one-day class started off with the students being airlifted from building 4 to Cactus Outpost.

The second phase consisted of a two-day field training exercise. "This exercise is beneficial to the students because they generate and plan it. They act in the various leadership roles and get to execute the plan they developed," Capt. David Townsend, instructor, said.

The sequence of the training is kept as realistic as possible. A brigade operating order is given which starts a planning cell (four company commanders acting as a battalion staff) to send out a reconnaissance team.

On the second day of the FTX, the platoons join the planning cell and begin trying to reach their objective, Bush Hill. Along the way, they encounter opposing forces. For the exercise, the IOAC students had support from the 197th Infantry Brigade, who provided Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles and 113s.

The students conducted daylight attacks, switched leadership positions and conducted night attacks. On day four, the students went to Buckner Range for a fire coordination exercise.

"This kind of training gets the student out of the classroom and on the ground. It gets them involved in all the troop leadership positions. If something goes wrong, say in communications, then they have to work around it and figure out something else to do. The students always enjoy this and so do we," Townsend said.

36th engineers receive quarterly safety award

The 36th Engineer Group was awarded the Fort Benning Safety Award for 1984 and also the fourth quarter of FY 84, in a recent ceremony.

Post commander Maj. Gen. John W. Foss, presented the two awards to Capt. Mark Morrison and CWO 3 Michael Russell, the group safety officers.

"The awards were computed based on a comparison between this year and last year, of which unit had the greatest decrease in accident exposure," Russell said.

Statistics are kept on every unit on post in regards to the number of accidents reported. The unit with the overall best decrease in the amount of money, personnel and equipment lost to accident exposure, received the award, according to Russell.

Young actors and actresses stage the nativity scene at the Christmas tree lighting ceremony.

Christmas tree lighting sets post aglow

A large crowd gathered Monday night at the Field of Four Chaplains to officially ring in the holiday season on Fort Benning as the annual Christmas Tree Lighting ceremony was conducted.

Although the ceremony was slated to start at 5:30 p.m. many children arrived early enough to visit with the many animals used in the ceremony's nativity scene. Ponies and small sheep were all pampered by youngsters who courteously fed the animals straw.

The tree lighting ceremony kicked off with the invocation by Lt. Col. (P) Michael G. Ortiz, post chaplain. That was followed by a rendition of "Joy to the World", sung by the audience.

Post commander, Maj. Gen. John W. Foss then took the podium to deliver remarks before setting the designated tree aglow with assorted colors of light. The crowd then watched as actors and actresses took their places as the nativity scene was staged. Chaplain John G. Cottingham narrated the gospel account of the incarnation as choir members sang such carols as "O Little Town of Bethlehem", "Away In A Manger" and "The First Noel."

After the crowd joined in to sing "Silent Night" the ceremony was completed. Afterwards many in attendance stayed to observe the nativity scene or to enjoy the many ornaments of the lit Christmas tree.

EIB testing challenges soldiers' infantryman skills

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade' soldier has thirty seconds to perform the task of loading, reducing a stoppage, unloading and clearing the weapon in accordance with skill qualification testing (SQT) standards.

The Expert Infantrymen's Badge (EIB) test challenges the skill level of the Infantry soldier. Given only once a year, a soldier must meet stringent requirements in order to qualify to take the test.

The prerequisites for the EIB test are: the soldier must be recommended by his current unit commander, qualify as expert with the M16A1 rifle; complete a 12-mile foot march in three hours or less in combat uniform; take weapons proficiency test immediately after completion of foot march; pass all the events of Army Physical Readiness Test with a minimum of 60 points in each event; complete standard land navigation course; and be a volunteer. The soldier must possess a primary MOS in the 11 series, Infantry.

Tasked with the responsibility of conducting the EIB for the 197th Infantry Brigade was 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry. SFC Donnie P. Creech, NCOIC of the EIB test, explained, "the evaluators came from the brigade units of 1-29th, 1-58th, 3rd and 7th, 72nd Engineers, 2-98th, and MEDDAC of 197th Support. We assigned evaluator stations, organized the layout of stations, trained evaluators to the standards required by the EIB and made sure the evaluators had the necessary equipment for testing.

There were 21 tasks to be performed in the following subject areas of first aid; basic individual techniques of land navigation; M16A1 Rifle, hand grenades, mines, communications, M60 machinegun, M72A1 LAW, survival techniques, NBC attack procedures and .50 Caliber machinegun. Most tasks were timed.

"The candidates must have completed all 21 stations with a GO," added Creech. "They were allowed two no-goes which they can be retested on. If a third no-go was received, they were out. They will have to try again next year."

Benning doctor named flight surgeon of the year

Anderson

By Toi Pallingayan
17 Special to the Bayonet

Doctor (Maj.) Thomas M. Anderson, chief of the Aviation Medicine, Family Practice Clinic at Fort Benning, has been named Flight Surgeon of the Year by Health Services Command. Anderson has been the Chief Flight Surgeon here since 1982, and has recently been selected for promotion to lieutenant colonel.

Prior to his career as a Medical Corps officer, Anderson was an artillery officer from 1969-1975. During this time he attended the Airborne and Ranger Schools. In 1971 he completed helicopter flight training, qualified as an aeroscout pilot and flew 305 combat hours during the Vietnam conflict. He was discharged from active duty in 1975 to begin medical school.

After graduating from the Medical University of South Carolina in 1979, Anderson completed his internship and residency in family practice at Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center at Fort Gordon. He says that his decision to become a light surgeon was largely influenced by his experiences as an Army helicopter pilot. Like most aviators, he loves to fly.

"As a flight surgeon," he said,"I'm able to combine my love of flying with my career in medicine."

Anderson attributes his successful career to the loving support of his wife, B.J. They have been married thirteen years and have two children, a daughter, Sunny, and a son, Thomas III.

Prevention habits can help stop holiday crimes

Provost marshal

The holiday season is supposed to be a joyous occasion for all. Unfortunately for some, it could become less than pleasant. This is especially true for those who become the victims of crime during the holidays. Two of the many crimes that increase at this time of year are burglaries and parking lot thefts.

There is no way to make your home or car 100 percent burglar proof, but there are certain things you can do to make it less likely to be targeted by a thief.

- Secure all outside doors with pick-resistant locks.
- Never "hide" keys outside. They might be found by the wrong person and burglars know exactly where to look.
- While away from home for an extended period of time, stop delivery of mail and papers, or have neighbors pick them up for you.
- Consider investing in a burglar alarm. Some insurance companies will reduce premiums on home insurance policies when burglar alarms are installed.
- Mark all valuables and, if possible, keep pictures of them for identification.
- Record serial numbers of valuable items.
- Don't leave windows or doors open or unlocked.
- Don't leave packages in plain sight. If your vehicle has a trunk, use it. If packages are left in plain view in automobiles, you may become the victims of parking lot thieves. Parking lot thieves know that they stand a good chance of finding something of value in cars at this time of year and will be looking for an easy "rip off." Don't give them the opportunity.
- Don't leave keys in the ignition when the car is unattended or you could lose more than just a few packages.
- Watch out for people who may appear suspicious or out of place in the parking lot. Report them to the military police.

The Fort Benning Military Police wish you a happy and safe holiday. To insure this, we urge you to practice good crime prevention habits. Don't purchase presents for the thieves!

(Provost marshal)

AUSA CORPORATE MEMBER

AUSA

"The strongest lobby the Army has is AUSA," he said, "and in order to lobby, the more members you have, the more power you have as a lobbying organization."

As a lobbying organization, AUSA is working to increase manpower and equipment resources for the Army, to insure that the U.S. has the trained men to respond in a time of need.

The organization is concerned about issues that are important to civilians as well as soldiers.

"Civilians are a vital part of the total Army," said Van Meter. "They provide valuable support services, freeing up soldiers to do their main job of training."

Some problems facing civilian employees AUSA is working to solve include: pay restrictions and freezes; attacks on the civil service retirement system, and the constant threat of cuts in personnel as a result of contracting out.

"Our lobbyists are working in Washington to press for a removal of pay ceilings for DA civilians, and pushing for the development of a retirement system for new civilian employees that is fair and equitable to all workers, while protecting the entitlements of current employees," Van Meter said.

Locally, the AUSA sponsors several events during the year, including the AUSA Picnic, Operation Holiday and a new event this year, Octoberfest.

In addition, AUSA presents certificates of achievement to honor graduates of every OSUT, IOBC and IOAC class, as well as plaques to the top ROTC cadet at Columbus College. They give a set of dress blues to the soldier of the year and the nco of the year.

Several times each year, they sponsor "Soldiers Night" at Astros baseball games, as well as providing free tickets for soldiers to attend other chapter events.

"It is all part of our continuing effort to give the soldiers a small part of the recognition they deserve," he concluded. "These individuals are providing a valuable service to our country, and AUSA wants to show that we appreciate them."

Individuals interested in joining AUSA should contact the first sergeants at their units, or call the AUSA coordinator at 545-4432.

Rangers prove they're combat ready

Bill Walton

Covered by his buddy, a Ranger searches "enemy dead" for valuable intelligence material.

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 3rd Battalion 75th Infantry Regiment (Ranger) held their first ever platoon-level ARTEP here at Fort Benning. This ARTEP is one of the many stepping stones these new Rangers have to negotiate in their drive to become combat ready.

The battalion's commander, Lt. Col. William Ohl, said "this ARTEP is designed to place the maximum amount of physical and mental stress on our soldiers. Since we can't shoot live ammunition at these Rangers to put them under the stress of combat, we have to use something else. That something else is physical and mental hardships not found in other more conventional Infantry units." The Rangers had four missions to carry out during their four day test: parachute into a drop zone and conduct a raid; airmobile into a landing zone and conduct an ambush; negotiate the water obstacle course at Victory Pond, which included the log walk-rope drop and the slide for life; and move down individual platoon lanes on a movement involving chance contact and a hasty ambush. All of this was to be done by soldiers who had virtually no sleep and little time to eat.

All of the Rangers participating in the test agreed that the toughest part was the 25-kilometer road march with rucksacks. After marching 25-km the Rangers went right into the water confidence course at Victory Pond. Many of the Rangers said they were severely taxed during the road march but they just "sucked it up, accomplished the mission and drove on."

Each platoon undertook a different ARTEP task each day so there were rifle platoons scattered everywhere doing different missions, plus mortar sections undergoing their tests. Ohl praised the soldiers for their tremendous efforts on the ARTEP and also praised the support personnel for their superb planning and logistical efforts. Ohl said every member of the 3rd Ranger Battalion went through the 25-km road march and "that included cooks, too," he said.

Once the ARTEP was finished the platoon graders, captains who had all had company command time, turned in each platoon's scores. The platoons were rated on such things as planning, movement, execution and confidence. The platoon having the highest score for a rifle platoon was 1st Platoon, Company A. The best mortar section was also from Company A. The winning Rangers were excited over their victory and thoroughly happy with what they had accomplished.

The 3rd Battalion (Ranger) will take their company level ARTEP in the spring. The battalion will then move to Panama for jungle training and, in the summer, undergo their battalion level ARTEP.

Company A's mortar section waits for a fire mission from th observers.

manpower and equipment under one command.

For example, mortar training was being done by ITG, with vehicles and equipment provided by WGMD, supported by elements of the 1/29th. With the reorganization, all these elements are now together in one company in the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"The reorganization gives us one central pool of subject matter experts for each subject, and they own all the necessary support equipment," said McCrary.

Approximately 1,800 people are in the new regiment, almost 1,200 of whom are senior NCOs.

Personnel began moving to their new locations on Dec. 10, and the move should be completed by Dec. 21, when Operation Exodus begins, McCrary said.

"From Dec. 21 to Jan. 4, we will be able to sort out the details and be ready to meet our first commitments in early January.

The reorganization will immediately result in a savings of 32 authorized slots, but few personnel will actually be out of jobs. "In most cases, these were authorizes slots with no people filling them," McCrary explained.

"We are not only going to save on manpower," said Ellis, regimental commander, "but also realize savings through standardization of training."

The verdict

The accused Sgt. Morris was charged with the offense of punching the victim in the chest, and a second offense of striking a victim in the head during a single, uninterrupted scuffle between the two individuals. Morris instigated the assault and admitted the offenses, but argued that he should not be found guilty of both.

What is the verdict?

The U.S. Court of Military Appeals agreed with Morris in its decision. The court stated that Congress did not intend that each blow in a single fight between two people could be charged as separate assaults. However, the court noted that until the trial began, the trial judge could not have reasonably determined both of these assaults arose from the same episode. When it did become known, the offenses should have been combined or one offense dismissed.

The case was U.S. vs. Morris and the appeal was decided Sept. 4, 1984. (SJA)

Charge card use saves expenses

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

After the Army's successful 8-month traveler's check test at 18 finance offices throughout the United States, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger has urged the service secretaries to consider the program for early implementation throughout the military services.

Weinberger also said the services should consider using charge cards for payment of expenses connected with official travel. The charge card is to be used for lodging, transportation, meals, and vehicle rentals; traveler's checks are issued for minor travel expenses, such as taxis, tolls, tips, and light meals.

Once the services start using charge cards and traveler's checks, savings are expected to be approximately $200 million a year because of the reduced administrative costs and interest savings gained from improved cash management.

The programs would also:

- Reduce or eliminate the Government Transportation Request;
- Simplify travel voucher processing;
- Reduce the number of travel advance payments;
- Reduce cash balances held in vaults or disbursing offices.

The use of charge cards and government-issued traveler's checks will also benefit personnel on official travel orders by providing them with protection against the loss of cash.

"We now have 44 finance offices signed up for the program in Korea, Japan, Okinawa, Hawaii and throughout the continental United States," said Capt. John Herko, project officer for the program at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. "We expect, if everybody participates, to have about 170 finance offices issuing more than $500 million in traveler's checks a year.

"Most soldiers get a combination of traveler's checks and cash," said Herko. "During the first six months of the test, we issued more than 43,000 payments with traveler's checks, amounting to more than $21 million. About 75 percent were used for travel-related payments, 10 percent for separation payments, and the rest for such miscellaneous payments as reenlistment bonuses and per diem."

Herko emphasized that finance offices "are not allowed to sell traveler's checks." For example, he said customers cannot buy them from Army cashiers for a vacation.

Spiritual

Giving gifts reaffirms God's gift of love

Chaplain Paul E. Cassibry

In a few days it will be Christmas. It was in Rome in about 325 A.D. that the birth of Christ was first celebrated on the 25th day of December.

Since that time, many customs and traditions associated with the birth of Jesus have sprung from many different lands. The list of symbols and traditions surround us on every side.

A few of them are: giving of gifts in brightly colored paper, Christmas trees, wreaths, special worship services, seasonal flowers, party celebrations, holiday foods, Christmas carols, beautiful cards declaring "Peace on Earth — Good Will Toward All People", a change in the generosity of people toward other people, parades, and even Santa Claus. Families make special efforts to be together with friends and family.

Reflections

Why has this happened? Perhaps it is the spirit of Christ at work in us. As the Magi brought gifts to the Christ child in Bethlehem, friends and families exchange gifts at this very special time of the year. The gifts serve as a symbol of love. Many folks take special care to see that those less fortunate than themselves receive a gift and have a special meal.

The spirit of giving to others out of love and compassion is taking on the spirit of God as He gave His Son as a gift and a Savior to all those who will believe in Him by faith. In giving a gift to someone, the receiver of the gift is affirmed as someone who is valued for who he is. God gave His Son because He sought to affirm his creation. His love on that first Christmas Day can be reaffirmed as we seek to give gifts to friends, families and the people around us.

Shoplifting 'kick' not worth ruining your future

The holiday season is here again, and unfortunately, along with Christmas cheer comes some problems. One of these problems is shoplifting.

To many, shoplifting does not seem like anything to get concerned about and some even consider it as a good way to "get some kicks" without hurting anyone. The shoplifter feels that the store's loss of merchandise does not affect anyone, and the offense is so minor that, if he is caught, little or nothing will be done to him. This type of thinking is totally wrong.

First of all, shoplifting is "stealing," no matter how you look at it; and it can ruin your future. Shoplifting may result in a hefty fine, time to jail and loss of PX or commissary privileges. The long term consequences of a shoplifting conviction may include the inability to obtain or keep certain jobs or security clearances. It may also cause difficulty in obtaining loans, and result in personal embarrassment.

In addition to the price paid by the shoplifter, this crime affects legitimate consumers in the form of higher prices. Stores must cover their losses and take steps to limit future losses. These measures usually include purchasing additional security devices, and hiring security personnel.

When a service member or his family "shoplift" they are literally "stealing from themselves." That's because profits from exchange activities are used to support the Army and Air Force Morale Support Funds. These funds are used to improve the quality of life for military personnel and their families by providing such facilities as swimming pools, bowling lanes, libraries and craft shops.

How can you help? If you see someone shoplifting, report it. If your children bring home something new and you suspect they may have stolen it, question them about it immediately. Set an example by being honest yourself. We all have too much at stake not to take this problem seriously. (Provost Marshal)

Airborne women honored

By Mike Brazile
17 USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eleven years ago, Rita Johnson became the first woman to undergo and successfully complete the Army Airborne School. Thursday, 13 December, the Airborne School and Airborne Class 8 commemorated this event at Friar Drop Zone.

Major Michael Menser, commander of 24th Company in IOBC, was the guest speaker at the event. The choice of Menser was appropriate as he was the lieutenant in charge of the ground training committee that put Johnson through the school over a decade ago.

"The Army in 1973 was going through a state of transition. They were trying different things and one thing they decided was to let women soldiers become riggers and pack parachutes. This wasn't possible, though, because to be a rigger you had to be airborne qualified. 'Women couldn't get through jump school' was the thinking back then. But the Army said do it and we did," said Menser.

Menser said that they looked at their whole period of instruction to determine which parts the women might have problems with. They brought in physical education specialists to see what women could and couldn't do. Once the potential problems were identified the POI was modified.

"One main thing was chin-ups. Women, physiologically, aren't as strong as men and couldn't do the chin-ups. So, in place of the chin-ups, we decided to make the female soldiers more technically proficient," said Menser.

This increased technical proiciency was accomplished by giving the women an added week of ground training, which made the course four weeks long for them instead of three. The women made more parachute landing falls than the men, they used the swing-landing trainer more and they jumped the tower more.

"Very simply, our techniques worked. To make a long story short, women could make parachute jumps for the Army and they did," said Menser.

During Thursday's activities 19 female riggers jumped into Friar Drop Zone carrying the airborne wings for the female graduates of Airborne Class 8. After jumping their wings in, the riggers presented the new airborne females with their wings and welcomed them into the airborne fraternity.

Since 1973 the Army Airborne School has graduated over 2,400 female soldiers from its course. Many of these soldiers have gone on to become riggers, packing parachutes for airborne troops all over the world. As Major Menser put it, "You've come a long way, baby."

IOAC students learn fire coordination techniques

By Connie Dickey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The radio crackled as the message, "large dust clouds seen moving north/northeast toward security zone," was relayed to the company commander. The fire coordination exercise on Buckner Range had started for the Infantry Officer Advanced Course students.

The company commander in turn relayed this message to his platoons while deciding what action to take. The platoons were represented by a TOW section, a tank and two Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles.

Buckner Range represents one-tenth of a scale, or 500 meters representing 5,000 meters. It is a miniature city and has targets that portray one battalion of a Soviet Regiment. When the students site on the targets, they become life-like and the students can follow their progress into the city.

Charlie Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, offered artillery support for the exercise and the Air Force offered air support through a remotely-powered A10 aircraft for air strikes.

The fire coordination exercise ends a four-day training exercise the IOAC students undergo to test battle drills.

Crime doesn't pay

On Dec. 3, Pvt. 1 Timothy Hawkins, Company A, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was convicted of one specification of failure to repair, in violation of Article 86, UCMJ; one specification of disrespect to a superior commissioned officer, in violation of Article 89, UCMJ; and one specification of insubordinate conduct toward a noncommissioned officer, in violation of Article 91, UCMJ. On Nov. 11, Hawkins failed to report to the company orderly room as he was previously instructed to do by his drill instructor. On Nov. 1, Hawkins called his company commander a "---head". On Nov. 8, Hawkins disobeyed a lawful order to fire the M203 grenade launcher. For these offenses, Hawkins was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for one month and to forfeit $380.

On Dec. 5, Pvt. 1 Peter M. Hope, Company D, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, was convicted of two specifications of larceny, in violation of Article 121, UCMJ. On Oct. 12, Hope stole a round of M16A1 rifle ammunition from Malone Range. Four days later Hope stole 30 more rounds from Malone Range and buried them in a nearby woodline. For these offenses Hope was sentenced to hard labor without confinement for one month, to be restricted to the company area for one month, and forfeiture of $250.

On Dec. 6, Sp4 Michael H. Lackey, Company B, ITG, USAITC, was convicted of one specification of assault and one specification of assault with a means likely to produce grievous bodily harm, in violation of Article 128, UCMJ. On the afternoon of May 30, Lackey intentionally swerved his pickup truck across a road leading to the barracks of Company B, ITG, narrowly missing Tommy W. Williams. On the evening of July 18, Lackey used his hands to seize Williams by the throat in Williams' barracks room. For these offenses Lackey was sentenced to be reduced to E3 and to forfeit $448 for three months.

On Dec. 11, Pvt. 2 James P. McCarthy, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by a special court-martial for being absent without leave for 26 days and unlawful entry into another servicemember's barracks room. McCarthy departed AWOL and upon his return he discovered that his stereo system was in another servicemember's room. He went to the room and kicked open the door and recovered the stereo equipment. McCarthy was sentenced to be reduced to E1, to forfeit $397 per month for 2 months, and to be confined for 45 days.

On Dec. 13, Sgt. Andrew J. Wright was convicted by a general court-martial of two specifications of assault on a child under the age of 16 years, and of cruelty to a child. Wright had beaten his 5-year old daughter on different occasions with a leather belt and a wooden board. These beatings far exceeded the reasonable force allowed a parent for disciplinary purposes, and instead, constituted criminal assault upon the child.

On Sept. 18, Wright watched as his wife beat the 5-year old child with a wooden board. Despite his duty as a parent, Wright watched as his wife struck the child up to 20 times with the board. The child suffered massive bruising and broken fingers which required hospitalization for 5 days.

On Sept. 13, Wright's wife was supposed to soak their 4-year old daughter's injured foot in warm water. She burned the child's foot apparently by holding it in extremely hot water. The foot suffered extensive third degree burns including complete exposure of the achilles tendon. Despite these extensive burns, Wright did not take the child for medical treatment. His reason for not seeking medical care was his fear that he and his wife would be accused of child abuse if these and other injuries to the child became known.

On Sept. 20, the child was finally taken to the Columbus Medical Center. By this time the skin was peeling off the child's foot and gangrene had set in. The child required amputation of four toes and extensive skin grafting on the foot. A complete examination of the child revealed that she had recently suffered a broken elbow and a broken shoulder.

Wright was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the U.S. Army, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, to be reduced to the lowest enlisted grade, and to be confined for 20 years.

On Dec. 14, Sp. 4 Nathaniel Williams was convicted by a general courtmartial of attempting to sell government property, selling government property, larceny of government property, and unlawful entry into government warehouses. Williams broke into government warehouses on three occasions and stole property totaling over $2900 in value. He sold some of the property and discarded the remainder. He was sentenced to receive a Bad Conduct Discharge from the U.S. Army, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, to be reduced to the lowest enlisted grade, and to be confined for 20 years. (SJA)

Maj. James K. Bluett prepares to enter the C-130 aircraft for his fifth and final jump of Airborne School.

Chaplain ,42, proves he's got what it takes

By Paul A. Darcy
Special to the Bayonet

The soldiers shuffled into the prop-blast and up the ramp of a C-130 in single file, preparing themselves for their fifth and final jump. Among the eager, youthful faces, one soldier stands out differently from the rest. He is "A-118," who is 42-years-old and an Army chaplain.

Chaplain (Maj.) James K. Bluett of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, decided to go to Airborne School "for the challenge and prestige," the native Irishman said. He added that he prepared himself for months by doing PT with the soldiers going through basic training, many of whom finished Airborne School with him last week. The consensus among those soldiers was that Bluett was a "postive motivator" because "he hung in there and never quit."

Bluett was accompanied on his final jump by the post chaplain, Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Michael g. Ortiz and Chaplain (Capt.) Earl J. Romans, of the 4th Airborne Training Battalion.

As is customary for many Airborne graduates, Bluett requested a member of his family to award him the parachutist badge. His uncle, Patrick Bluett, who was himself awarded the Military Cross from the King of England in 1944 for his service to soldiers under fire at Anzio, gave the chaplain his "blood wings" as he pinned on the badge.

Chaplain Bluett began his career in the Army in 1972. He left active duty in 1975 but remained in the Reserves. He founded St. Peters Catholic Church in Fort Walton Beach, Fla., in the ensuing eight years, but decided to return to active duty.

"I came back in for the challenge," he says, "and now I've finished another challenge by going through Airborne School."

What's next in the priest's quest for a challenge — Ranger School?

"Not yet," he laughs. "I'll just rest on these laurels for awhile and get back to my soldiers at Sand Hill!"

Sports

Rifle areas

Black powder rifles can only be used in the rifle designated areas on Fort Benning. Fort Benning does not have a primitive weapons hunting season like the State of Georgia.

Hitting deer

Any deer hit by a vehicle on Fort Benning will be confiscated by the game wardens and transported to the post Veterinary Activity. The only exception will be, that during the hunting season the vehicle driver may tag and keep the deer if he has an appropriate hunting license and deer tag on his person.

Orienteering Classes

Try the sport of orienteering, especially designed for nature lovers, runners and spirited competitors. Classes are now being taught by MSAD, Physical Activities Branch. Interested military personnel should contact their respective A & R officer/NCO or call Jeanne Truitt, 545-4300/1532 for more information.

'Bama duck hunting

The Alabama waterfowl (duck, coot and merganser) season has recently been announced and applies to the Alabama portion of Fort Benning. The season is Dec. 2 — Jan. 20, 1985. Hunting hours are one-half hour before sunrise until sunset. Alabama uses a point system for determining the daily bag limit; therefore, all hunters are urged to become familiar with the point value for species and sex prior to hunting. In addition to a Federal Duck Stamp, an Alabama State Duck Stamp is also required.

Bass Club Results

The Bass Club of Fort Benning held its December fish-off at Lake Walter F. George in Eufala, Ala. last Saturday.

Bob Billman took first place with a catch of five pounds, eleven ounces. Bill McCrary and Tom Brewer grabbed second and third place, respectively. The largest fish of the day was caught by Jack Eatman. The fish weighed three pounds, seven ounces.

Bass Club meetings are conducted on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month at 7:30 p.m. in the dayroom of bldg. 2760. All active and retired military, their family members and DA civilians are eligible for membership. Anyone interested in becoming a member should contact Bill McCrary at 544-6008 or 687-8514.

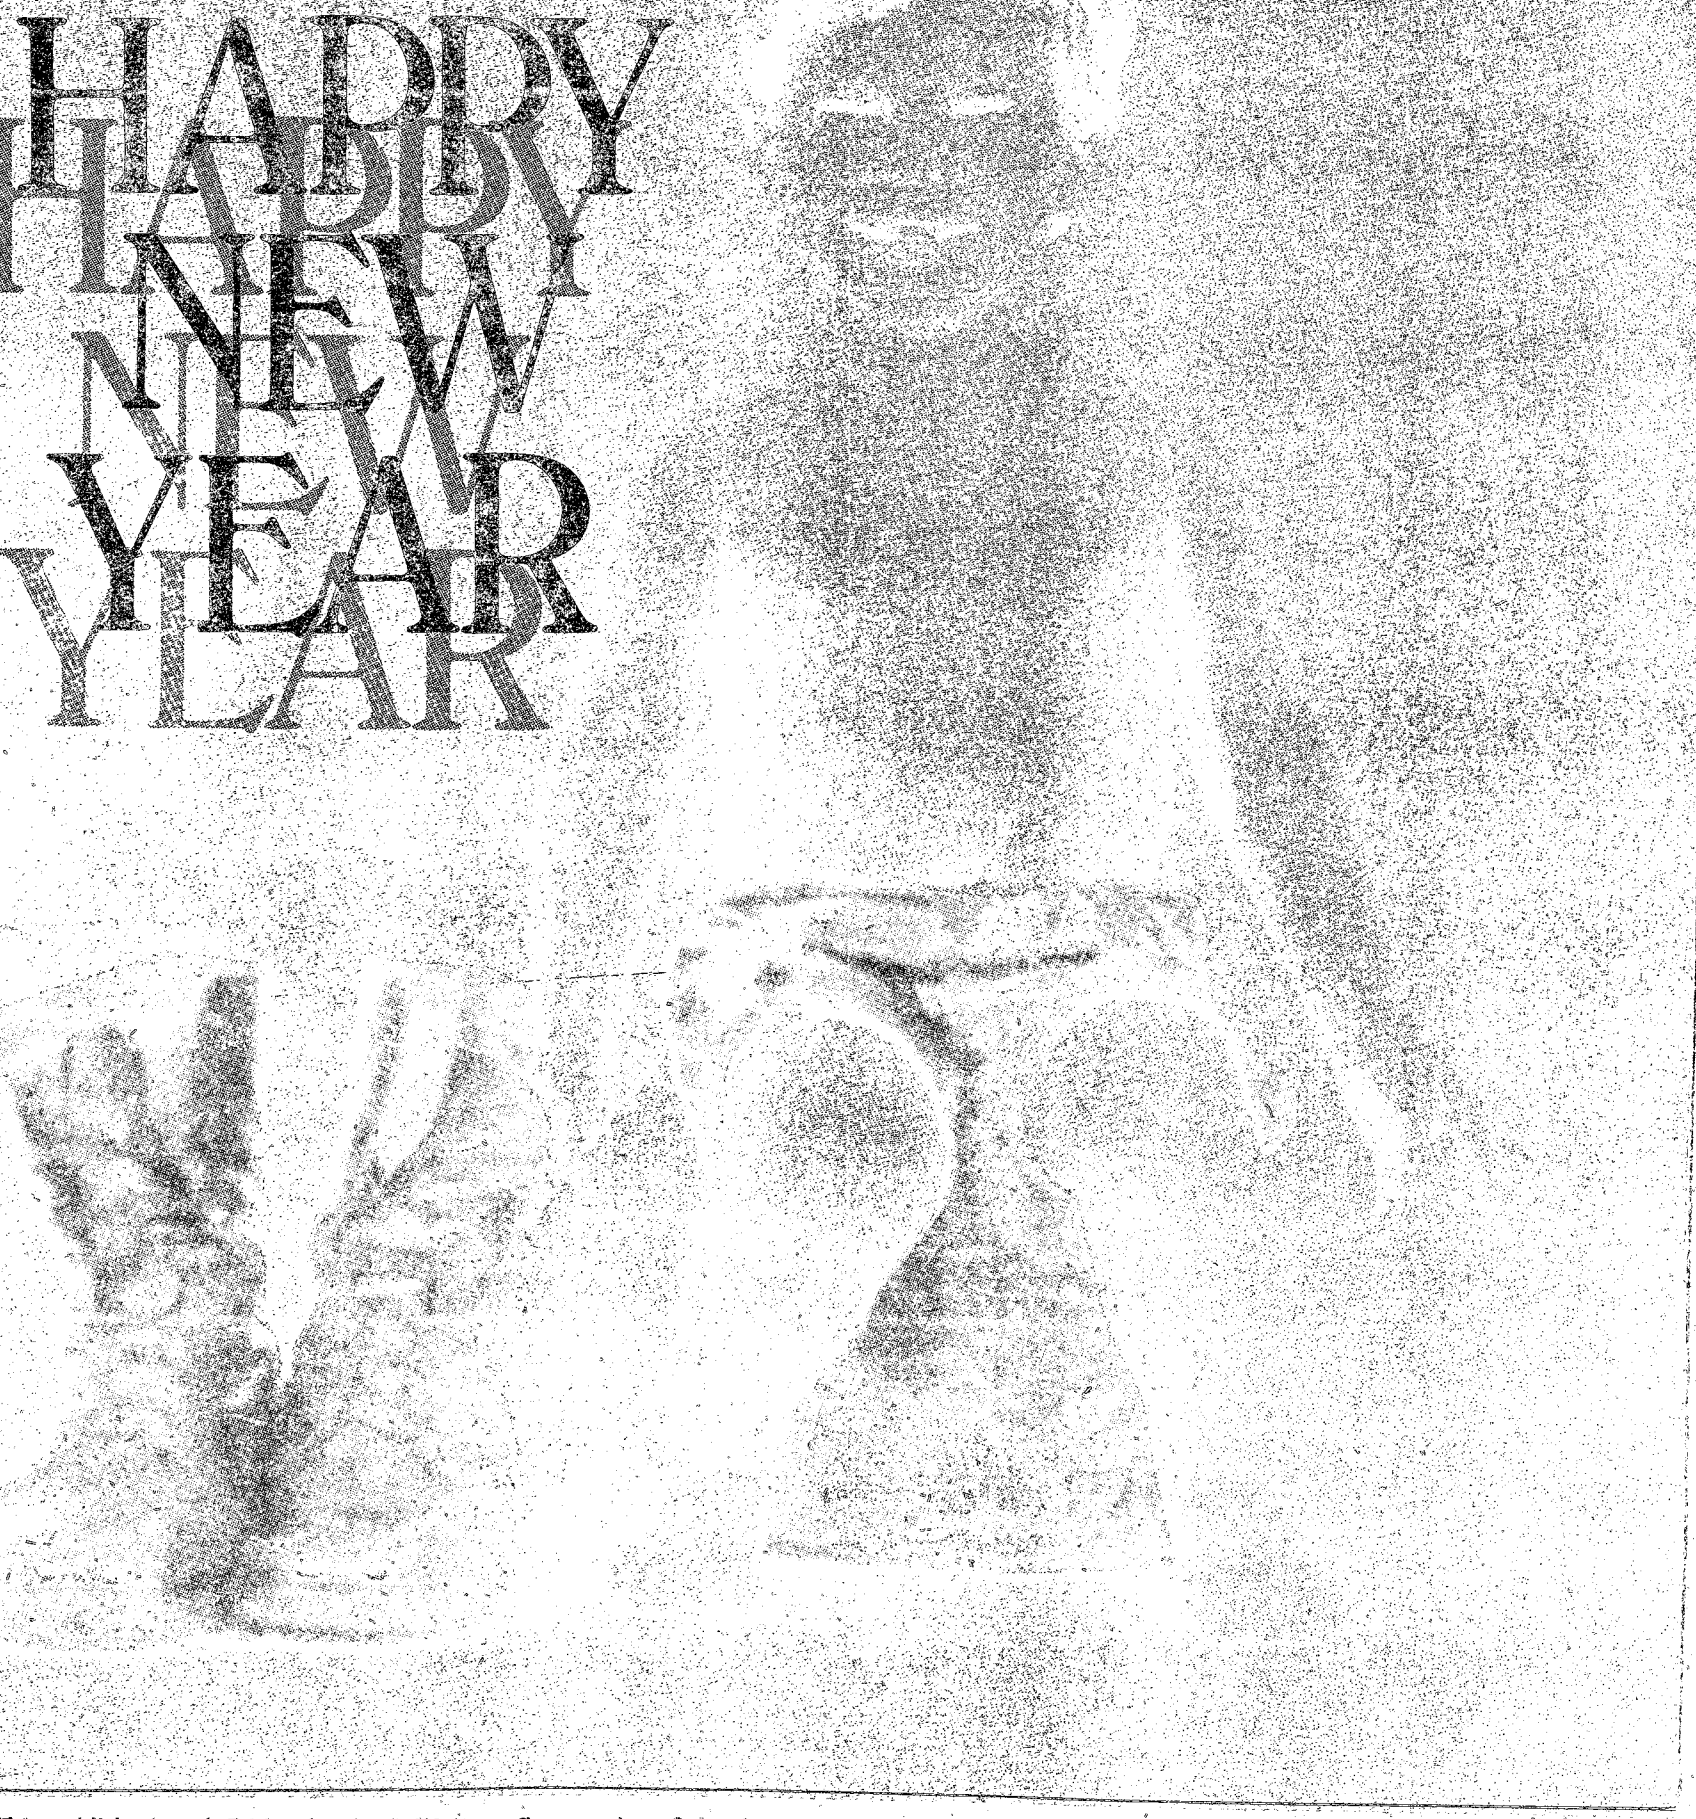
THE BAYONET
Vol. 3 No. 27
DECEMBER 29, 1984

HAPPY NEW YEAR



The BAYONET is published each Friday by the R.W. Page Corporation, Columbus, Ga., a private firm in no way connected with the Department of the Army. Soldiers' training more important now than ever

By Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.
Army Chief of Staff

"Training is not done in a sterile environment of cold calculating management. Training has to be rooted in deep ideals and beliefs — something worth dying for. The warmth of service to those beliefs — love of country, pride and belief in each other — yes, duty, honor, country — that's the warrior ethic."

Retired Gen. Richard E. Cavazos

The Army is in a state of transition, preparing itself for the challenges of the future. Missions are more diverse and demanding. Thus, the training of our soldiers and units becomes more important than ever before. Since readiness is our priority task, quality training is absolutely essential if we are to fulfill our missions and responsibly use the resources entrusted to us.

Today there are many factors that contribute to the challenging environment within which we must train our soldiers and units:

- The threats to our security are dangerous and growing. Hence, the Army must be prepared for a broad spectrum of missions with the greatest risk of hostilities being at the lower end of the spectrum where most of the conflicts today are taking place. As a consequence, we must be deadly serious about our business of being ready for war — so as to assure peace. If we compromise on standards of training, we jeopardize unit cohesion and the lives of our soldiers who may have to fight tomorrow or deploy rapidly without further preparation. At times, we may have the luxury of "training up" for an assigned mission. However, most of the time, we will not. Grenada is the classic example.

- Over 400 new war-fighting systems are being developed and fielded within the Army. Many exhibit unrivaled mobility and lethality. They are also sophisticated, requiring a high level of knowledge and proficiency by crew and commanders if we are to capitalize on their capabilities.

- An evolution in doctrine and tactics now places unprecedented emphasis on initiative, offensive action, flexibility and coordination within the combined arms team. New tactical concepts require excellence in professionalism and military skills by leaders at all levels.

- Volunteer soldiers are first class soldiers who are smart, tough and patriotic. They expect first class leadership and training. Making the most of this superb human resource calls for training that is demanding, realistic and imaginative. Quality soldiers deserve quality training. After all, tough training saves lives in battle. Soldiers instinctively know this and our mission demands it.

- To be effective, Army training must start at the top. Because of this, we have initiated a thorough study of officer professional development, to be completed this year. By mid-1985 we plan to conclude similar studies of the warrant officer and NCO corps. These comprehensive studies will focus on officer, warrant officer and NCO training and professional development in Army schools, and their output will be relevant to training needs in light of future Army missions and requirements.

About the cover...

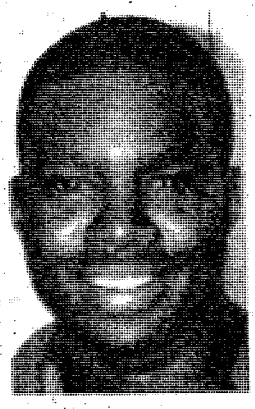
Various voices

How is quality training important to being successful on the battlefield?

PFC Robert E. Epinger, B Co., 43rd Engineering Bn., 36th Engineer Gp.— "Quality training is very important. If you don't understand what you're doing and if you don't do your job to your capability you're going to get killed - easily. That's why we're #1, not #2."



2nd Lt. Karl H. Houston, Airborne trainee—"Being properly trained is extremely important. Having a sense of organization is a must on the battlefield, so everyone knows what their responsibilities are and what to do."

SGT. Logan C. Bryant, 690th Med. Co., 34th Med. Bn.—"Receiving quality training is critical because if everybody on the battlefield has an idea of what they're doing we'd be very successful. Everybody has their own MOS, and I think without that specialized training we'd be lost. But if everybody had the training down pat we'd be all right."

Training

stone Training Manual for the Army, FM 25-1, describes what it takes to provide training that develops strong bonds and confidence between soldiers and leaders. This type of training reflects our commitment to professional excellence and the warrior ethic. The points that follow highlight what good training is and what it achieves:

• As all of us know from personal experience, good training bonds units. Training involves shared experiences and mutual challenges that develop and sustain cohesion. Training generates confidence in the organization and its leaders which in turn strengthens the morale of each soldier. The Israeli Army has discovered this from their studies of why some units perform and survive better than others in battle.

• Good training leads directly to good discipline — both collective and individual. Concurrently, good training develops initiative and resourcefulness: The ability to perform independently under a wide range of conditions.

• Good training for soldiers builds faith and trust in the chain of command if conducted by leaders who are proficient, dedicated and concerned for their soldiers' well-being.

• Good training concentrates on wartime missions and the way units are going to fight, but at the same time assures that the training is safe. Training can be tough and demanding without being reckless or careless about the lives and limbs of our precious human resource.

• Good training is performance-oriented with realistic objectives for each training period. It develops and sustains the skills of soldiers and leaders within the organization.

• Good training sticks to Army doctrine in order to standardize what is taught. If we don't standardize, we waste soldiers' time because they have to unlearn and relearn, time and again, as they move from unit to unit. At the same time, good training is not rote, unimaginative or boring to the soldier. It takes full advantage of the National Training Center and major training opportunities. Innovative training challenges the soldiers physically and mentally to be all he or she can be.

• Good training involves holding our soldiers and their leaders responsible for training to the standards needed to ensure success on future battlefields. Good training means learning from mistakes, and allowing plenty of room for personal and professional growth.

• Good training means recognizing the high value of soldiers' time. Good commanders protect their units from training detractors and last minute changes. They take the time to observe, coach and teach one-on-one, capitalizing on a soldier's spare time during field training exercises and major training events.

• Good training means strong leadership development with NCOs fully responsible for individual training and officers responsible for unit training. Good commanders give a high priority to training their trainers.

CG's message

The total amount contributed to the Combined Federal Campaign has exceeded $500,000. This is the first time in the years we have supported the CFC that the half million mark has been broken. This amount represents 111 percent of our goal, certainly a worthy achievement.

The success of this year's CFC was due to the hard work and dedication of all campaign personnel; project officers, keymen, and commanders at all levels. To these individuals, and especially to those personnel, military and civilian, who contributed so very generously, thank you on behalf of all personnel who will benefit from this CFC. Such generosity is evidence of the concern all of you have for the welfare of persons not so fortunate as yourselves.

Best wishes for a happy and safe holiday season.

197th moves equipment across state for REFORGER

"The operation is moving smoothly. We are right on time as all the units are meeting their required load schedules," said Capt. James Lenihan of the 197th Infantry Brigade's S-4 movement section. It was load time for the brigade as they started moving equipment to Savannah, Ga., for REFORGER 85.

For almost a week, M60 tanks, M109 SP Howitizers and M113s, along with an assortment of heavy and outsized equipment, were loaded on rail cars for movement to the brigade's port of embarkation. Once at the port, the large equipment will be loaded on two cargo ships to move all of the Brigade's property to Germany for REFORGER.

"The purpose of this exercise is to check how the brigade would deploy, if necessary, overseas," Lenihan explained. "We have all kinds of plans, but this is a first opportunity for the unit to see if those plans would function.

"Once in Europe we will move through the port of Amsterdam where the soldiers will have the opportunity to load this equipment on trains and move it down to the maneuver area in Germany," he added.

The rail movement was one of two movement operations for the brigade. During the two previous weeks, the brigade has been sending convoys of its wheeled equipment to Savannah to be loaded on the same ships departing for the Netherlands in early January.

Cans bring a merry Christmas to kids

By Debbie J. Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

"Stop! Don't throw away that can. Support 2/69's Children's Christmas Party. Give a Kid a Can."

Walking through the companies of 2nd Bn, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, 2/69's motor pool or Battalion, a soldier would have inevitably read this poster. But what do cans, kids and a Christmas Party have in common? Master Sgt. Dwight W. Proctor, S-2 of the 2/69 explained.

"The idea of giving a Children's Christmas Party for the kids in the battalion was met with unanimous agreement," said Proctor. "Headquarters Company was tasked with organizing the party. I volunteered for the task.

The organizers decided that while Santa Claus would play a major role at the party, the true spirit of Christmas demanded that Santa have a gift for each child at the party."Our dilemma was how to account for all the children coming to the party before hand, and how do we raise the money needed to buy each child a gift?" explained Proctor. "So instead of asking each soldier to donate money, we decided to start a can collection drive that would get them involved, rather than their wallets," he said."Then the wives of the battalion got together and decided they would donate baked goods for bake sales to help raise the money needed for purchasing presents," continued Proctor.

"At the beginning of October cans were collected twice a week at the seven collection points and turned in for 23 cents a pound. The soldiers were very supportive of the drive, conscientiously disposing of their soda cans at the collection points," he said.

A list of all the children in the battalion was posted at each company. The fathers were asked to con firm the attendance of their child, give their name, age and sex. A total of 223 children would be attending the party.

"We turned in 1,161 pounds in cans earning approximately $250. The bake sales brought in over $650, giving us $900 to work with. Toys were purchased according to age bracket and were wrapped by my wife, Marie," continued Proctor.

"Meanwhile, Mr. Kindell from the Non-Commissioned Officers association found out about the party from CSM Helms and volunteered to be Santa Claus, bringing with him stockings full of candy," Proctor said.

The School Brigade cracks down on DUI abusers

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers assigned to the School Brigade will have added incentive for not drinking and driving.

In a recent policy letter to brigade personnel, Col. Edward G. Sills, TSB commander, said students assigned to TSB who are apprehended for DUI may be dropped from their school.

The policy applies to both enlisted and officer students. The policy letter states that a conviction for DUI, on or off post, will be cause for consideration for elimination from the course that the individual is attending, thus precluding the expenditure of tax dollars on soldiers whose futures in the military are in doubt.

These students must appear before a board that has been established within the school system. The board has the authority to recommend a student's relief from a course, declare him a nongraduate, and in some cases for a commissioned officer, recommend that the commanding general take away the student's commission, according to Sills.

He said the reason for the policy was that some soldiers aren't taking the offense seriously enough.

"We have had a death and a soldier paralyzed as a result of alcohol related accidents," Sills explained. "Our concern is that we are not getting the people's attention like we should."

In the policy letter, emphasis is placed on the individual's career. For example, a soldier was caught and convicted in Columbus of DUI after consuming a six pack of beer. Fines and legal fees cost him $2,323 or $387 per can.

To take this example further, assume the soldier was an E-7 and received a general officer's letter of reprimand and a bar to reenlistment that forces him to ETS from the Army after 15 years of service. Assuming the soldier was married and living off post, the loss of five years pay and allowances (presuming retirement after 20 years of service) equals $118,726 or an additional $19,788 per can.

Assuming the service member would have been 40 years old at the time of retirement and could expect to live another 34 years, total retirement pay forfeited would be an additional $314,752 or $52,459 a can.

The total cost for a single incident of poor judgement is $435,801 or $72,633 per can plus the loss of PX, commissary and medical benefits.

Individuals caught and convicted for DUI by civil authorities face suspension of on post driving privileges for six months (first offense), referral to Alcohol and Drug Assistance Center and an administrative letter of reprimand imposed by the commanding general.

The letter is bordered in black so it stands out in the individual's record, Sills said. That way it will be seen by board members when selections are being made for promotions and advanced military schooling.

"We have not dealt with DUI cases in the past in such a manner, he said, "but I think with the emphasis people in the states and country have on DUI that it should be something that we all look at.

"Our concern is that we aren't getting people's attention like we should and that's what we are really trying to do, get their attention. Because it's a waste of life when there are other avenues people can take in terms of not drinking and driving. It's not just TSB, Fort Benning or the Army; the world appears to think DUI is a serious offense."

If you plan to drink during the holiday season, don't drive.

VA Q and A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I am a World War II veteran and would like to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery. Will I be eligible for burial and what arrangements will my family need to make?

A — Burial space in Arlington National Cemetery is limited. Those eligible include: (1) those who have died on active duty; (2) those retired for disability, or who have at least 20 years active duty or reserve service; (3) honorably discharged veterans who have held certain high government positions; (4) veterans discharged for 30 percent or more disability before October 1, 1949; and (5) veterans who have the nation's highest military decorations (Medal of Honor Distinguished Service Cross, Air Force Cross or Navy Cross, or the Purple Heart). Arrangements for burial are made through the Superintendent, Arlington National Cemetery, Arlington, Va. 22211.

Q — If a veteran's widow is buried in a private cemetery, will the VA provide a headstone or grave marker for the burial site?

A — No. The VA will only provide this benefit for veterans' dependents who are buried in national, military post or base cemeteries and in state veterans' cemeteries.

Q — I have made arrangements for my funeral and burial ahead of time and have already paid the funeral home. Can I get my VA benefits in advance?

A — No. Burial benefits can only be paid after a veteran's death to the person who bears the expense of the burial. (VA)

298th Detachment to be vital link during REFORGER

By Debbie Mundy
197th Public Affairs Office

The 298th Signal Detachment will play a vital role for the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) during REFORGER '85. It will provide the communications link between the 197th Infantry Brigade and the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized), which has operational control over the 197th during the REFORGER exercise.

"Without effective communications support, the 197th Infantry Brigade could not move", explained 1st Lt. Francis J. Velten, 298th Signal Detachment commander. "We are the vital link. If our equipment is not effective, the brigade is not effective."

"We have to be 100 percent sure that our equipment will function effectively at REFORGER," continued Velten. "For preparation, we accomplished a major overhaul on all of our communication equipment and vehicles. An excessive amount of work had to be done."

"Being a detachment puts us in a unique situation", continued Velten. "We are not assigned a motor sergeant, supply sergeant or an organizational radio repairman. Yet with our people and a little help we are able to accomplish the mission of a major overhaul of our equipment. We could not have done it without the help of Delta Support, 197th Support Battalion, who assisted us with mechanical repairs of generators, trailers and vehicles in the 88 series."

Also, we could not have accomplished all that needed to be done without the technical systems people from main post, who assisted us in getting new or rebuilt equipment and vehicles," explained Velten.

"Because of their assistance, we were able to get six new multi-channel radio systems, 12 new antennas, and communication shelters were repaired or swapped for new ones," Velten explained.

"The troops and the NCO's of the detachment did an outstanding job. They rolled up their sleeves and went to work," reflected Velten. "I feel confident in our equipment and the performance of my people for REFORGER 85.

Drinking and driving wastes soldier's money, lives

Persons who drive under the influence of alcohol or controlled substances (DUI) kill or injure thousands of people each year.

Army Regulation 190-5 requires that a general officer letter of reprimand be issued to any service member convicted of driving under the influence on or off the military reservation, or who refuses to take a lawfully requested chemical test for blood alcohol content.

Although the service member is given an opportunity to respond to the letter of reprimand prior to its being placed in the official military personnel file, the burden is placed upon the service member and the service member's chain of command to present compelling reasons why the letter should not be filed in the individual's OMPF.

Provost marshal

DUI is a misdemeanor in the state of Georgia and carries up to twelve months imprisonment and/or $1,000 fine. All persons convicted of these offenses, including residents of another state, are subject to the following minimum penalties:

- First Offenders: Minimum fine of $300 and a suspension of license for one year.
- Second Offenders: Minimum fine of $600, 48 hours in jail or complete 80 hours of community service work and a loss of license for two years.
- Third offense within five years: Mandatory $1,000 fine, mandatory period of imprisonment of four months minimum and community service work.

DUI is also a misdemeanor in the state of Alabama and has the following penalties:

- First Offenders: Minimum fine $370 plus $21.50 for court cost, automatic suspension of license for 90 days, a maximum fine of $1,000 and 1 year hard labor in prison.
- Second Offender: Minimum of $650 not more than $2,500 with possible five year prison sentence, a suspension of license of 1 year, the maximum is ot less than $1,200, no more than $5,000 fine and no more than 3 years in jail.

If the Alabama Implied Consent Law is refused, it is automatic 90 days suspension of driver's license.

In addition, the Department of Public Safety will declare the offender to be a habitual offender, which makes the crime a felony and carries loss of license for five years.

Before driving after drinking — Remember:

1. Alcohol reduces alertness, interferes with judgment and impairs vision. A person who has had several drinks or more cannot drive as he could when sober.
2. Alcohol affects a person differently at different times.
3. It takes about one hour to cancel the effects of one drink. Therefore it takes about four hours to cancel the intoxicating effects of four drinks.
4. The probability of an accident increases with each drink.
5. Physical exercise, black coffee, fresh air, cold showers and other "remedies" do not effectively help someone to sober up. Only time will help.
6. Alcohol is absorbed directly into the bloodstream without first being digested so the liver must have time to clean the blood and remove the alcohol from the body.
7. The amount of blood alcohol in a 1 oz. shot of whiskey, 3 oz. glass of wine and 12 oz. beer is the same.
8. The significance of .10 percent Blood Alcohol Level (BAL) in relation to driving impairment is that the probability of having an accident is seven and one-half times greater than when sober — increasing to 25 times at .15 BAL.
9. Alcohol is medically termed a drug and a depressant. The combined use of alcohol and other depressant drugs, such as antihistimines, may be more dangerous to health and to highway safety than the effects of either the alcohol or drugs alone.

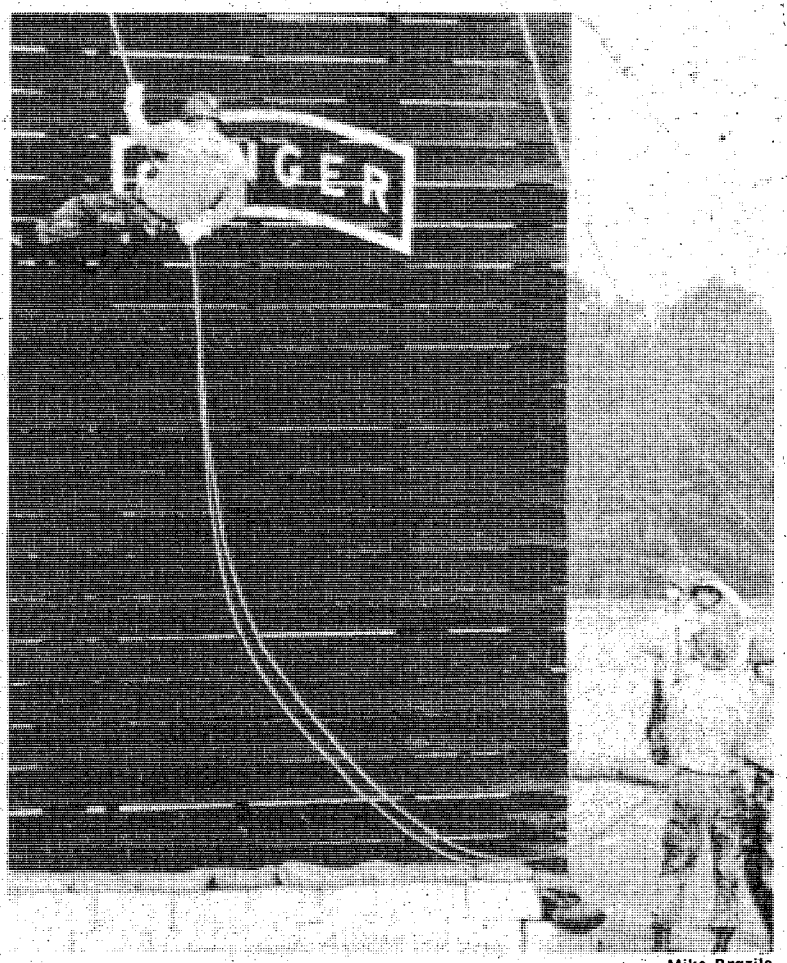
Soldiers get day of 'mountaineering'



Soldiers from D-4-2 try their hand at rappelling. Mike Brazile

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The young private looked over the edge of the 35 foot tall structure and then at the thinness of the ropes attached to the D-ring on his Swiss seat. With much trepidation he backed off of the structure, hoping the ropes would hold his weight.

Of course they did. The young private had received expert instruction and top-notch equipment from the drill sergeants of D-4-2 during Delta's Day of Mountaineering.

Sergeant first class Albert Weathersby, Delta's Senior Drill Instructor, explained that "this day of mountaineering is something new. It was offered in Infantry basic training several years ago but was taken out of the period of instruction because of a lack of qualified instructors. We have qualified instructors now and we had an open day on our training schedule, so our company commander cleared it with a higher command and here we are."

The rappelling instruction was conducted at Todd Field on the Ranger School rappelling towers.

Each soldier was taught how to tie various knots, the correct way of tying a Swiss seat, how to safely hook up for a rappel and how to belay. Then the drill sergeants demonstrated various rappelling techniques. They showed the soldiers a single-man rappel, a litter carry and the Austrailian rappel which consists of a man coming down the face of the tower face-first. After the demonstration came the moment of truth for "Dynamite Delta."

The 35-foot tall rappelling towers at Todd Field don't look formidable from the ground looking up. However, looking from the edge of the tower down they look high, very high. Trusting their instruction and equipment provided, the soldiers gritted their teeth and "went over the edge." For most of these soldiers it was their first time to rappel.

> "It was scary at first. I couldn't see my belay man and I worried about falling. But I loved it and I'm ready to go again. It was great."

"It was scary at first. I couldn't see my belay man and I worried about falling. But I loved it and I'm ready to go again. It was great," said Pvt. David DuDeVoire.

"The bottom line of this training is to teach our soldiers something and, at the same time, have some fun," said Weathersby.

Ellis receives DA award

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Troy E. Ellis, formerly Fort Benning's Installation Maintenance Officer, was presented the Secretary of the Army's Award for Outstanding Achievement in Equal Employment Opportunity for 1984.

Individuals at Army installations and activities world-wide were considered for the award, and Ellis was selected as the best worldwide.

The award was presented in a ceremony in the Pentagon office of Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. in Washington, D.C.

Specifically, Ellis was instrumental in bringing about high levels of minority employment in both blue and white collar jobs in the Maintenance Division. Due to his efforts, there was a marked increase in opportunities for the handicapped.

Post EEO officer Robert Galer said that Ellis provided opportunities for as many as ten applicants who had hearing impairments to work full-time. In addition, Ellis increased communication between deaf employees and their supervisors by conducting sign language training.

Ellis is currently assigned to the Test, Measurement and Diagnostic Equipment Support Group, Redstone Arsenal, Alabama.

Trainees enjoy holidays at home through Exodus

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Theatre number 3 at Sand Hill was a busy place Dec. 19 and 20 as soldiers gathered to take part in "Exodus 1984."

Initial entry training soldiers from the 1st and 2nd Infantry Training Brigades began departing Fort Benning for various destinations across the United States and Puerto Rico to be with their families and friends during the holiday season.

The parking lot was loaded with buses that took 2,898 soldiers to Atlanta International Airport to take connecting flights for destinations across the U.S. and Puerto Rico.

Another 1,958 soldiers were bussed directly to their destinations, according to Capt. Gray M. Gildner, executive officer of the 9th Battalion 2nd ITB.

While the soldiers raced across the parking lot to the different busses, Santa Claus was busier than ever handing out candy that was donated by the Association of the United States Army, and wishing the soldiers a merry Christmas as they passed by.

The two-day operation transported a total of 4,856 soldiers, Gildner said.

Soldiers should return not later than midnight of January 2 except those who traveled to Puerto Rico. They were given extra days to observe "Three Kings Day" Jan. 6 and will return by midnight January 8.

Operation Holiday makes Christmas better for soldiers away from home on the holidays

Columbus Mayor Bill Feighner read a proclamation designating the period of Dec. 21 through Jan. 1 as Operation Holiday.

Soldiers were treated to tours and refreshments at several area businesses, including WEIZ-WDAK, WTVM TV, the Ledger-Enquirer, Dolly Madison, Sunshine Bakery, and Tom's Foods.

Also available were tours to Andersonville and the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga.

The AUSA bowling tournament began on Wednesday, and final action will be today from 1-4 p.m. at the main post bowling center.

Last Saturday five buses full of soldiers formed a convoy and made tracks to the Omni in Atlanta, to watch the Hawks defeat the Washington Bullets in an exciting NBA contest. Afterwards the troops were treated to a concert by The Four Tops.

Those who had made no plans for Christmas Day boarded buses Tuesday and headed for Montgomery, Ala., to witness the 47th annual Blue-Gray football classic. Soldiers had a front-row seat as they and a national TV audience saw the Gray all-stars from the South thrash the Blue squad, 33-6.

Coming attractions to round out Operation Holiday include the Peach Bowl football game and the Atlanta Hawks vs. Chicago Bulls basketball game on Wednesday. Purdue faces the Cavaliers from Virginia in the Peach Bowl on New Year's Eve, while rookie scoring sensation Michael Jordan will lead the Bull's charge in Wednesday's NBA contest against the Hawks.

Anyone interested in attending these events should check with their unit platoon sergeant or first sergeant.

Operation Holiday is sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA), and is designed to help young soldiers, particularly trainees, who must spend the holidays away from their homes and loved ones.

Spiritual

Chaplain's ministry focuses on reaching soldiers

By Chaplain Greg W. Hill

Reflections

Over 209 years ago, in the summer of 1775, the Continental Congress gave official authorization for Army Chaplains. However, from the very first skirmishes of the Revolution at Concord Bridge and Lexington Green, chaplains had been with their men to offer support, give comfort, and hold religious services. George Washington gave the directive establishing the tradition of the military chaplain at the very birth of our nation.

Early years saw the Army Chaplaincy develop from combat preachers to spiritual leaders; from individual hit-and-miss efforts to a coordinated team ministry for soldiers of all faiths.

In 1918, the U.S. Army Chaplain School was opened at Fort Monroe, Va., as was a second school in France. World War I also saw the emphasis of the work of the chaplain change from combatant to preaching, pastoral work, and ministry to the wounded and dying.

In the interim between World Wars I and II, the Office of the Chief of Chaplains was established. Chaplains were relieved of all extraneous duties which included anything from PX officers to counsels for the defense at courts-martial. It was also recognized that a chaplain needed clerical assistance, so a distinctive MOS was developed: the chaplain assistant.

Chaplains have served many different groups of people in many parts of the world — wherever our government has deployed its military personnel and established installations. The Korean War in the 1950s and the Vietnam War in the 1960s and 1970s saw stirring examples set by chaplains who did not hesitate to deploy with their units and minister to the soldier in combat.

The mission of today's chaplain is spelled out in Field Manual 16-5: "The ministry of the chaplain is to provide for the religious and moral needs of military personnel, their families, authorized civilians and retired military personnel and families, with special attention given to the welfare of the soldier. The chaplain also serves as personal counselor and as a leader in religious education, humanitarian services and in such cultural undertakings as may contribute to the strengthening of the moral program of the unit and/or post."

In a peacetime Army, this mission is accomplished through a parish program and special ministries to the single soldier. At a Chapel Center one can participate in worship services, education classes, and receive personal counseling from crisis to premarriage counseling. Chaplains perform baptisms, weddings and funerals, make hospital visits and hold retreats. Workshops and seminars on subjects such as conflict management and ethics are held for officers and NCOs. To reach single soldiers, chaplains make special visits to barracks.

Future trends expected for the Army Chaplaincy will be to continue traditional ministries, but with more minority chaplains on active duty.

As chaplains look to the future they hope to continue to serv military people in the self-givin tradition of the early chaplain and to find new ways to reach ou to those who are the focus of th chaplain's ministry: the indivi ual soldiers.

POV registration to enhance Benning's security

A new vehicle registration program beginning Jan. 7, 1985, at Fort Benning will enhance the security of the installation by making vehicle identification more visible, according to Military Police.

According to statistics, other posts with established vehicle registration systems have experienced a reduction in criminal activity and vandalism.

Fort Benning discontinued vehicular registration in mid-1982 because it was felt that state tags would be sufficient identification. Law enforcement officials now feel the additional post tag identifier will speed up automobile identification, especially in tracing ownership.

The registration deadline is July 1, 1985. It will cover those motor vehicles owned or operated by persons residing or employed at Benning. It is also applicable to those who live off-post and frequently use Fort Benning facilities.

Those applying for vehicle registration must have information verifying their military status (active duty, retired or dependent). Civilian employees must show a civilian personnel identification card, a wage and leave statement (DA Form 4536), or a written statement from their immediate supervisor verifying employment on post.

Those contracting with the post for services should be able to verify that they are contractors and cite their reasons for coming onto the installation.

Also needed is proof of insurance and a valid state operator's license. Operators of motorcycles or motor scooters must have proof of completion of the motorcycle safety course.

Vehicle inspection is not required for registration, nor will there be a charge.

Registration will be accomplished alphabetically based on the first letter of the vehicle owner's last name according to the following schedule: January

Today's chaplains assistant a 'jack of all trades'

In order to fully understand the position held by the chaplain assistant on the chapel team, it is helpful to understand the role of the chaplain assistant in the development of that team throughout the history of the U.S. Army.

The Army Chaplaincy has been providing for the religious needs of the Army community since Pre-Revolutionary War times. Pastors and religious leaders accompanied members of their parishes on the first battlefields of the Revolutionary War. They lived with them, fought by their side and often died with them.

During the Post-Civil War period a relationship was established between an enlisted duty and a chaplain's function. At that time chaplains supervised enlisted soldiers who had been detailed to teach common school subjects. On Dec. 28, 1909, the Army authorized the assignment of one enlisted person per chaplain to help with administrative responsibilities and arrangements for worship services. While this was not the establishment of a separate military specialty (MOS), it did authorize the local command to detail a soldier "of high moral character" to assist the chaplain.

The Korean War gave birth to MOS 718. After almost 100 years of vague existence there was a job for chaplain assistants. In August 1965, assistants were designated as 71M, given a definitive job description and specific skill requirements. A career field as chaplain administrators was established for grade E7 through E9. Today, each 71M is cross-trained in the requirements of the three distinctive faith groups (Catholic, Jewish, Protestant) and is assigned according to the needs of the Army. In 1974 the title was changed to Chapel Activities Specialists and during 1984 the title was changed again to the former chaplain assistant.

"The Army Chaplaincy has been providing for the religious needs of the Army Community since Pre-Revolutionary War times."

The question today of "What is a chaplain assistant" can best be answered by saying he or she is a "jack of all trades — and master of very few." They are what legal clerks are to the judge; medics are to the physician and company clerks are to the commander PLUS! They must be compassionate, yet firm, able to communicate and deal with all people on a multiplicity of complex situations. One who works those hours many other soldiers have off (evenings, weekends, holidays). Under combat situations he is the chaplain's body guard.

The "who" of the question is answered by saying that a chaplain assistant is a well trained, competent and dedicated man or woman. He/She has volunteered to serve God and country unselfishly, by being a top rate soldier and an effective extension of the chaplain. In all that is done to provide religious opportunities and support for all members of the military service, the chaplain assistant is a vital party.

What's the verdict

By Col. Benjamin A. Sims, SJA

A military accused was charged with "at some place in North America, from on or about June 25, 1983 to on or about Aug. 11, 1983, for wrongful use of marijuana." The charge resulted when he came up positive during an urinalysis sweep.

At his court-martial, the accused asserted that the charge was too broad. Also, he said the government had failed to establish jurisdiction because it did not prove that the accused had exhibited any psychological effects of the alleged drug use.

The military prosecutor explained that "North America" was used to include Mexico because military personnel frequently visited it on non-duty days.

Sharpshooters on target during post small arms matches

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning hosted the USAIC Service Rifle, Pistol and Machinegun Matches December 17 through December 21.

The match project officer, Lt. Paul Ryan, said the winning unit teams and individual winners will represent the post in the All-Army Marksmanship Competition in May.

Units represented at this year's matches included USAITC, the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 34th Medical Battalion and The School Brigade.

There was team and individual competition using the .45 caliber pistol M1911, the M-16 rifle and the M60 machinegun.

The competition classifications were open and novice class. The open class included firers who had previously fired the same-type of weapon in post level competition. Anyone not meeting the criteria in the open class was classified as novice. In addition, all teams had to be made up of 50% new shooters.

There were no personal or special weapons used in the matches. All weapons were issue, TO&E Service weapons.

Each team entered in the Combat Infantry Team Match (Rifle), the Patton Pistol Match and the M60 Machinegun Team was required to successfully complete a two-mile run within 25 minutes as a squad with weapon and combat equipment. After this run each team was given four minutes to organize and then shooting began.

The M-16 Rifle was fired from the standing, sitting and prone positions and at various distances from 100 to 400 yards. The .45 shooters used the kneeling, prone and standing positions. Teams firing the M-60 utilized the prone firing position. All firers, both open and novice, said they learned a lot during these matches.

"One of the main purposes of this competition is to raise the standards of professionalism in the use of individual and crew served weapons," said Ryan. "Hopefully, all shooters will take their newly learned or improved skills back to their units and assist in improving their unit's marksmanship," said Ryan.

Verdict

The accused was found guilty and on appeal the Court of Military Review agreed with the government. The accused was sentenced to a bad-conduct discharge, confinement at hard labor for one month, forfeiture of $200 and reduction to E-1. The appeals court said that national borders do not limit the operation of military law. Almost any drug use by a military person is military service connected. The urinalysis test was given at the military installation and the positive results were sufficient to establish a psychological or physiological effect.

The case was United States vs. Frost. The sentence was rendered on March 15, 1984 and the appeal was decided on Sept. 12, 1984. (SJA)
