According to a Training and Doctrine Command news release, DOL officials will present an evaluation of the program's effectiveness to Congress in 1992 when a decision will be made if it should be continued.

When a soldier is within 90 to 180 days of separation, he will be scheduled to attend the program, according to the news release.

A four-day workshop will provide personal appraisals, teach resume writing, acquaint soldiers with the job interview process, describe the resources for finding a job and give job hunting information and assistance, Youngs said.

The workshop will give soldiers a realistic view of civilian life, according to Youngs.

"The average soldier expects from civilian life higher salaries, an easier job search and lower living costs, which are impractical," she said.

Attendees are also introduced to DOL's Civilian Occupational and Labor Market Information System, a national computerized network that tracks jobs around the country.

"It will put them in touch with resources to make their job search easier," Youngs said.

"This program is possible because the Army feels it has a moral responsibility to the people who have served their country," said Col. L.R. Bixler, adjutant general for TRADOC's DCSPAL.

"When soldiers near the end of their service commitments, we have an unwritten obligation to help prepare them for future careers," Bixler said.

Quarters cleaning funds run out

Family Housing Office

Headquarters Department of the Army has directed all CONUS installations to phase out the Quarters Cleaning Initiative by the end of fiscal year '90.

Fort Benning's program will end May 31.

Effective June 1, the residents of post housing will be responsible for quarters cleaning.

Residents may elect to clean their own quarters or pay someone to clean them.

Residents who clear quarters on or before May 31 because of PCS, ETS or retirement will have their quarters cleaned at government expense.

Residents who clear quarters June 1 or after, for whatever reason, will be responsible for cleaning their own quarters.

Residents who elect to use an approved cleaning team will be cleared from quarters upon presenting the Family Housing Office a copy of a signed cleaning contract, a certified check or money order and proof of completion of a damage inspection.

Prior to damage inspections, residents must ensure that all preventive maintenance, self-help, yard work and furniture turn-in have been completed.

The Family Housing Office will maintain a list of approved cleaning teams.

Residents may pick up a copy of the list and contact as many of the cleaning teams as they desire to get the best price.

Contact cleaning teams early to avoid delays in out-processing.

Additionally, a pre-termination inspection must be scheduled at least 45 days before the planned departure date.

At this appointment, an inspector tells the resident what needs to be repaired and cleaned.

Residents will not be cleared until all preventive maintenance and self-help have been accomplished.

Groups interested in becoming "Approved Quarters Cleaning Teams" should contact Terri Cook, Family Housing Office, building 399, 545-3107.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What do you think of the policy that allows lower enlisted soldiers to apply for post housing.

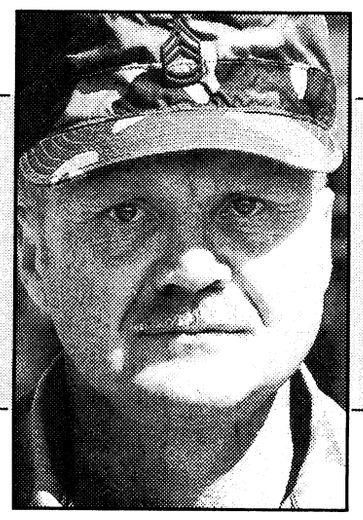
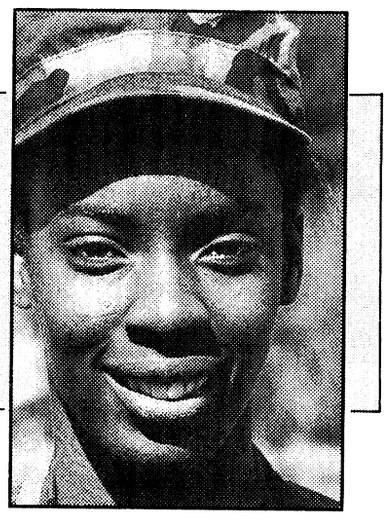
Cpl. Kevin G. Wiggins, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I think it's a big advantage for lower enlisted soldiers because it's hard for them to live on the economy with their pay. This will be a big help."

Pfc. Thomas Walsh, 32nd Tng. Bn. — "I think it's a good deal because E-1s through E-3s are the lowest paid in the Army. This will take a big load off their minds."



Sgt. 1st Class Randy Schwenecker, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I think Fort Benning made a good move with this eligibility rule. Lower enlisted people can really use the help."



Spec. Katrina Hill, 533rd Trans. Co. — "There has always been a great need for this new housing rule because so many lower enlisted personnel come into the military already married. Being away from each other puts a strain on the job and marriage."

Sgt. Jose Cardozo, 2nd MASH — "I think it's a great advantage for the soldier and the Army overall. You know a happy soldier is a more productive soldier."

Pfc. Tanya Sue Bender, SOA — "It's a good idea because being in the Army isn't a good time to be away from your family. This plan will keep families together and relieve some of the stress.

VOLUNTEER WEEK

Celebrating Americas proudest tradition

Every week, hundreds of people contribute their time and talents to causes in which they believe.

The post Volunteer Resource Center conservatively estimates the 1989 value of volunteer service at Fort Benning to be more than $2 million.

Volunteers are involved in addressing every type of problem and need in our community.

From working with children in schools to teaching citizenship classes to foreign-born spouses, volunteers serve the needs of all.

Also, today's volunteer is making a difference in the tough issues of our community, such as rape crisis and child abuse.

They are not afraid of a challenge, as seen in their efforts to establish a toy bank for needy children or coach a variety of children's sports.

April 22 through 28 is designated National Volunteer Week.

During this time, we honor our volunteers and the organizations that support them.

From the Volunteer Resource Center that recruits and places volunteers to the many post organizations and associations that support community service, we say thanks and keep up the good work.

'Thank you' isn't that hard to say; soldiers need to hear it sometimes

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Airborne Annie goes to Honduras. 2nd Lt Rambo goes to Panama. Ranger John PASSES UP the opportunity to go to Austrailia but still manages to land a trip to France.

I get sent to the Mudcats game, and it rains.

The folks in public information fly around with the media to film air medevacs. They go to CALFEXs and watch Air Force A-10s, Army Apaches and field artillery providing the latest in high-tech support for an Infantry team in the attack mode.

I get sent to the Main Post Exchange to cover a ribbon cutting ceremony, and the power goes out.

We had a jillion generals here last week for the Infantry Conference.

I think everyone in public affairs got to meet at least one.

The generals, I'm told, were all very appreciative of the support they got and thanked everyone profusely.

I got to move cones in a thunderstorm.

I guess this is what Pfc. Frederick meant when he told me his story about being a snuffy in a line company.

"We know our job's important," he said, "but sometimes we need to be reminded of that. We need to be told we're important and maybe even thanked for the work we do."

"Heck, when I signed up, I was full of vim and vinegar, wanted to be another Rambo because I thought my country really needed me.

"Now I'm not so sure.

"No one ever tells me that I'm needed except when it's time for some detail.

"I've stood in the formations and heard the speeches, about how we're the best soldiers in the world, the finest the U.S. Army's ever seen.

"If we're so great, how come no one ever stops by while we're cracking our knuckles tightening bolts on the road wheels and thanks us for a job well done.

"Once in a while, as we're digging a foxhole and laying in our fields of fire, a platoon sergeant might stop by and give us a pat on the back and an 'atta-boy.'

"It wouldn't hurt him, and it would sure help us.

"It'll help us get over the ill feelings we're known to develop when we play too many games of CYA.

"You know how it goes. You get color guard detail, and it's no big deal, except this detail is for some four-star. So ya gotta be super strac.

"Your squad leader rehearses you, the platoon sergeant rehearses you and the 1st sergeant inspects you two days out.

"One day out and the company commander and battalion command sergeant major verify you're good to go.

"But then the day of the event, you're there two hours early, at oh-dark-thirty, because someone up the chain of command doesn't trust someone down the chain of command to do his job.

"Yet, we're the best soldiers the Army's ever seen.

"I heard the Chief of Staff of the Army say those very words on a visit here. He said, 'I know soldiers who are humping, pulling their weight as best they can, who've never heard the phrase, thank you.'"

I have to agree with Pfc. Frederick and the Chief of Staff of the Army. It's not really that difficult to say.

Those two little words, "thank you," can go a long way toward making some soldier's day.

Spouse doesn't want to be called 'wife'

Not all "wives are females.

This has been a little joke among myself, my wife and our military friends.

Here's the deal.

My wife and I go to many functions within the 197th Infantry Brigade, during which wives are mentioned many times.

For instance, "For the wives who are not exactly sure what their husbands are talking about . . . or "You wives are an important part of . . ." and so on.

So what's the joke? My wife is the soldier, and I am the spouse who stays at home with the children, supporting my soldier to the best of my ability.

It's a job that, for the mostpart, I enjoy.

I'm not complaining. I'm just asking for a little consideration when mentioning "wives" during speeches and in articles.

Instead, try using "spouses." This way, all us "wives" will be included.

Thank you.

AUSA's annual third region meeting set for Thursday through April 21

By Wade Shell
Association of the U.S. Army

The Chattahoochee Valley, Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army's third region meeting will be Thursday through April 21.

Attending will be representatives from as close as Columbus to as far away as Panama and Puerto Rico.

They will participate in a wide variety of events, including several meetings, luncheons and golf and tennis tournaments.

The highlight of the meeting will be the Robert F. Cocklin award dinner April 20.

The black-tie affair will be punctuated by the awards ceremony, color guards and full observance of tradition.

While officers are meeting, the chapter has planned tours of Columbus and the surrounding area for spouses.

The meeting is hosted by a different chapter each year to allow the region president a chance to observe first hand how each chapter operates and give encouragement for their various activities.

As part of the three-day program, region members will dedicate a memorial to President Dwight D. Eisenhower who lived at Fort Benning as a major.

The dedication, part of a national AUSA effort to memorialize the late president on the centennial of his birth, will take place at 4:30 p.m., April 20, near the intersection of Vibbert Avenue and Austin Loop.

Eisenhower lived at 206 Austin Loop from 1926 to 1927.

Further information can be obtained by contacting the local AUSA office at 545-4432.

Vietnam veterans to benefit from recent VA ruling

Department of Veterans Affairs

Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski, following personal consultation with President Bush, has ruled that Vietnam veterans stricken with a rare form of cancer are entitled to disability payments based on their service in Vietnam.

Derwinski said he determined that "there is at the present time enough information for me to give the benefit of the doubt to Vietnam veterans and direct that VA conclude that the disease non-Hodgkin's lymphoma is service-connected with duty in Vietnam."

Derwinski said his decision reflects the President's personal concern for veterans whose health may have been affected by military service.

The VA Secretary acted following today's release of study results by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control that showed an increased risk of the disease among veterans who served in Vietnam.

The CPC reported that the risk of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma is 50 percent greater among Vietnam veterans than among veterans who served elsewhere, although it did not point to Agent Orange or any other factor as causing the elevated risk.

Agent Orange was sprayed from 1965 to 1970 in Vietnam to destroy enemy crops and ground cover.

Derwinski said his decision was not based solely on scientific conclusions or the lack of them.

Last May, Derwinski announced he would not appeal a federal court ruling that said VA's cause-and-effect standards were too strict for VA to comply with a 1984 law governing dioxin and radiation claims.

Dioxin is a poisonous contaminant that was found in Agent Orange and which some allege causes a variety of health problems.

Using a new "significant statistical association" standard, the Veterans Advisory Committee on Environmental Hazards last fall reviewed 31 studies and their relationship to non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and reported that while no association could be definitely made, it could not rule out the possibility."

VA officials announced they would immediately begin to identify and re-open claims filed by veterans who served in Southeast Asia and who alleged that their development of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma resulted from Agent Orange exposure.

VA years ago established a policy that makes it unnecessary for veterans to prove actual exposure as long as their service record validated in-country Vietnam service.

Derwinski said VA will extend as much latitude as possible to award retroactive benefits to widows and children of veterans who died as a result of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

Derwinski reiterated that since 1981 VA has been providing free, priority health-care services to Vietnam veterans who believed their health was affected by Agent Orange exposure.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Homeowners today are increasingly energy conscious and looking for ways to reduce their utility bills — yet many don't realize the cost of water is a significant energy expense.

In fact, it can be the single largest energy expense in an average Georgia home, typically accounting for about 20 percent of the owner's total energy dollars.

The heat pump water heater offers homeowners a way to cut their water heating costs considerably.

Commercially available since 1978, this state-of-the-art system offers the lowest operating costs of any water heater on the market today.

The heat pump water heater's lower operating costs are due to the energy-efficient way in which it operates.

Basically, the heat pump water heater system operates like an air-conditioning unit.

It draws heat out of the air but, instead of expelling that heat outdoors, the heat pump water heater transfers it to the water.

Instead of using energy to actually generate heat as other water heating systems do, the heat pump water heater uses only the energy needed to pump this existing heat from the air to the water.

This results in considerable energy and operating costs savings.

For example, based on rates in effect Jan. 1, 1988, a typical Georgia family of four with a standard 40-gallon water heater would spend $172 a year to heat water with a heat pump water heater.

A gas water heater would cost $232 a year, and a propane water heater would cost a whopping $408 a year.

Homeowners can choose between two basic types of heat pump water heaters: an integral unit, which attaches to the top of a new or existing electric water heater storage tank; or a remote unit, which also uses a new or existing electric hot water tank but can be placed just about anywhere near the tank.

Aside from this, the two units operate identically and offer the same economic advantages.

In addition to producing low-cost hot water, a heat pump water heater is a great dehumidifier.

It can extract as much as a pint and a half of water per hour from the air, helping eliminate mildew and fungus — and their offensive odors — as well as moisture damage.

When a heat pump water heater is installed in a damp basement or crawl space — the most common locations for any type of residential water heating system — its dehumidifying effect is especially noticeable and beneficial.

It virtually eliminates the need for a dehumidifier, saving the homeowner the actual cost of that equipment, as well as the cost of the energy needed to run it.

Those savings can be substantial since a good dehumidifier can cost more than $250 initially, and up to $25 a month to operate.

As with any type of dehumidification system, a heat pump water heater will save the homeowner time and money spent for repairing structural and cosmetic problems caused by overly-moist air.

Heat pump water heaters have many other benefits. Since they're electric and involve no combustion process, their operation is clean, odorless and safe.

Units are automatic and require little maintenance — just a periodic filter cleaning. The estimated service life is 10 to 15 years.

Heat pump water heaters are extremely reliable. Although they are relatively new to the home market, the technology behind them has been around since the '50s.

They are the product of decades of research, testing and experience; and the ever-increasing number of heat pump water heater owners across the country is further testimony to their dependability.

A heat pump water heater is a good investment. Although its price is more than that of a conventional water heater, its higher energy efficiency and lower operating costs yield long-term savings that more than offset any differences in cost.

The pay back period for a heat pump water heater depends on the type of system it replaces and whether or not dehumidification savings are factored in, but pay back typically occurs within five years and can be as short as three years.

Eventually we all hope to settle down in homes of our own.

This information will provide some guidelines that will help you to choose the most energy-efficient way to manage your home.

For more information concerning this or any other energy-related subject, call the Energy Branch at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

SAFETY

Charcoal starter

Don't forget to treat liquid charcoal starter with respect. It can be extremely dangerous.

Don't put the starter fluid container too close to heat or flames. It can explode, causing serious burns.

Don't use gasoline to start a fire, no matter how hard it is to get going.

Don't pour any flammable liquid directly onto hot coals or burning wood.

The sting

One million Americans are so allergic to hornet, wasp, yellow jacket or honeybee venom that one sting can be fatal.

Allergy experts warn that many potential victims don't even know they're allergic.

Allergic reactions to insect bites include:

- Itchy red welts, often some distance from the sting itself
- Throat constriction or difficulty breathing after being stung
- Sudden nausea, vomiting, stomach pain or fainting after a sting.

If you ever have such reactions to an insect sting, consult a doctor, who can prescribe a kit you can carry with you.

The medications in a kit will help limit reactions from a sting until you can get medical help.

First class graduates from new Sniper Course

By Jose A. Fernandez
School of Americas

The first class of its newly established Sniper Course graduated from School of Americas March 12.

The course is designed to train marksmen to deliver first-round hits on targets at extended ranges.

Four students, three from Costa Rica and one from Chile, successfully completed all graduation requirements.

Completion of the course was the culmination of a year of work by SOA soldiers who developed and implemented the program of instruction.

The course was run by the Weapons Division of the Department of Tactics and Combined Arms with the support of several Fort Benning agencies.

A year ago, Col. William A. DePalo Jr., SOA commandant, directed the development of a sniper program of instruction to meet the needs of Latin American countries.

Instruction is presented in Spanish and emphasizes situations that confront students in their respective countries.

Several sergeants in the Weapons Division, led by Sgt. 1st Class Vicente Covas, worked in the research effort to develop the program.

They received advice from the U.S. Army Sniper School and other units on post.

This major undertaking also involved procuring resources, conducting rehearsals and training the cadre for the new course.

Finally, in January the first iteration of the six-week sniper course began.

For the next month and a half, students and instructors were extremely busy.

Day and night training in the myriad skills that a sniper must muster left little free time.

Training started with a review of basic skills and progressed to sniper tactical skills in support of combat operations.

Training in general subjects included map reading, day and night land navigation, tactical communications, law of land warfare, first aid, hand-to-hand combat and guerrilla operations.

Daily physical fitness sessions prepared the students for the demanding field exercises that would follow.

The class also learned how to formulate a call for fire and how to prepare a fire support plan suitable for a sniper mission.

The advanced marksmanship phase of the course included fundamental skills, such as aiming, trigger control, sight adjustment, compensating for wind and the weather, zeroing and ballistics.

Day and night operations required students to engage targets with 9-millimeter pistols and the M-16 and M-21 rifles.

During the sniper tactics and fieldcraft phase, students learned to employ sniper teams in support of both offensive and defensive operations.

Students constructed their own sniper uniforms and learned how to camouflage themselves and their equipment.

Evaluations included skills such as selection and occupation of firing positions, target observation and selection, concealed movement techniques and preparation of sniper field sketches and range cards.

Field exercises tested the future sniper's cumulative knowledge.

Students were also required to demonstrate proficiency in the preparation of operations orders, coordination with friendly units, route planning and selection and the use of combat intelligence.

Extensive debriefings were conducted at the end of each mission to evaluate the students' skills in these areas.

The final test required students to hit a target at a distance somewhere between 300 and 800 meters, using M-21 rifles with each student using no more than two rounds.

Completion of the first Sniper Course at SOA is a milestone in the history of the school.

It is a course designed and run by non-commissioned officers who take pride in providing the students the best possible training.

The graduates described the training as very demanding, realistic and rewarding.

The course is intended to train a maximum of 20 soldiers at a time, allowing the instructors to effectively offer individual and small-group instruction that will enhance the students' abilities to meet the high graduation standard.

The graduation ceremony, at which DePalo presided, included attendees from several Latin American countries who wanted to share in this historic event.

The guest speaker, Maj. Jesus Pulido from Mexico, reminded the graduates of the significance of their achievements and asked them to share their knowledge with fellow countrymen in pursuit of democratic ideals.

The first SOA Sniper Course was directed by Capt. Heriberto Garcia, and principal instructors included Sgt. 1st Class Vincente Covas, Sgt. 1st Class Jephte Garcia, Sgt. 1st Class Juan Diaz, Staff Sgt. George Mendez and Sgt. Kenny Burgos.

Experts say baby teeth need extra care

By Jerome Cureton, D.D.S.
USA DENTAC

Most parents do not worry much about the condition of their children's "baby" teeth, perhaps thinking the teeth are going to be lost anyway.

However, specialists in pediatric dentistry consider a child's baby teeth the most important ones.

What happens to them determines whether the child will face future dental problems in his teens and throughout adulthood.

This may sound dramatic, but consider these facts:

- Unchecked tooth decay in the primary teeth can pass right along to the permanent teeth.

This means that on entering their teens, children can have a mouthful of new adult teeth that are full of cavities.

- When a primary tooth becomes infected or abscessed at the root, the infection often damages the permanent tooth still forming in the child's jaw.
- When a primary tooth is knocked out or, because of an infection is lost early, the gap in the child's mouth allows the remaining teeth to change position. This may mean a mouthful of crooked or crowded teeth requiring braces.

These important facts demonstrate the critical role the primary teeth play in the development of the child's mouth and jaw.

While children start to lose some of their primary teeth at age 6, some primary teeth remain as pillars in their mouths until the child is 12 or 13 years old.

To protect your child's primary teeth, parents should start on a program of prevention — starting with an early dental checkup.

The American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry recommends that the first checkup should be when the child is 1 year old.

At this time, the child can be started on a program of cleaning, good dietary choices and correct use of fluorides.

The importance of early dental care for children can't be stressed enough.

Those baby teeth that are often ignored are the groundwork for beautiful, healthy teeth that should always be there.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Occupational Therapists work with physically or emotionally ill patients, ranging from children to the elderly.

The name occupational therapy relates to helping patients acquire or regain the ability to perform the activities of daily living.

At Martin Army Community Hospital, the OTs, Maj. Ann Amoroso and 1st Lt. Shajuanda Strickland, must be generalists.

They are equally familiar with developmental delays in pediatric patients, the problems that accompany the aging process and other physical and mental problems for ages in between.

They assist patients who have many needs. The MACH OTs also provide programs for psychiatric patients.

Through observation of the patient's attention span, problem-solving skills and ability to carry out a task, therapeutic activities are planned.

The OT staff plans recreational and educational outings in the community for the psychiatric patients.

Some outings are for physical reconditioning, such as horseback riding, swimming, bowling and activities in the gym.

Educational trips include visits to businesses and manufacturing plants where patients get the opportunity to see what skills are required for employment.

Guest speakers talk to the patients on topics such as education and drug and alcohol abuse and other tops appropriate to meet patients' needs.

Life Skills Groups, taught by the OTs for the psychiatric patient, identify leisure and coping skills, as well as teach stress, time and money management.

Other patients seen in OT have orthopedic injuries, particularly hand injuries.

These patients are helped, through exercises and therapeutic activities, to regain the skills required to perform activities of daily living.

The OTs design and construct orthotics (splints and adaptive equipment) to meet the needs of individual patients.

Patients with neurological problems are referred to OT for rehabilitation, to acquire the motor skills needed to manage activities of daily living, as well as the development of cognitive or perceptual skills.

Patients with arthritis and cardiac diagnoses are also referred to OT.

These patients are taught energy conservation and work simplification techniques and are evaluated for adaptive equipment.

OTs teach part of the Diabetes Management Program in the Life Style Center and are part of the Cardiac Rehabilitation team.

The OT staff helps patients keep active, regain lost movement/motion and achieve independence, with the goal of helping patients to recover, mentally and physically, to the fullest extent possible.

All OTs are not providing rehabilitative services.

There is one, Brenda Johnson, who works with the Exceptional Family Member Program providing screening and evaluation.

OT also manages the Work Therapy program at MACH in which long-term active duty patients are assigned to work in various areas of the hospital.

Patients are placed in jobs suited to their physical limitations and skills.

This provides continued use of the soldier who is unable to return to his regular duties and gives him a sense of accomplishment.

Patients confined to bed are provided craft activities to aid time management.

Patients in all categories, active duty, retirees and family members of both, may be seen in OT by referral from their primary physician, nurse practitioner or other health care provider.

Legal Assistance provides notary services

By Danny Autrey
NCOIC, Legal Assistance

In 1989 the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office provided notary services for more than 14,000 powers of attorney, 15,000 individual notary acts and about 3,400 wills.

The Legal Assistance Office has also had to turn away scores of individuals seeking notary services because notaries have many restrictions on what they can legally notarize.

A notary public is a person authorized by license from the state to administer oaths and certify certain documents as genuine to make them legally acceptable.

The notaries in the Legal Assistance Office are licensed Georgia Notary Publics.

A notary's signature and seal certifies that the document, or signature, has been examined and is legally correct as it appeared when presented to the notary.

The Legal Assistance notaries are authorized to notarize many documents. Some of these are: wills, sworn statements, powers of attorney and any other document that has a notary signature position printed on it, such as renewal of driver's licenses, bills of sale and some automobile title transfers.

Some agencies, such as the Finance Office, Military Personnel Office and the Social Security Administration require "certified" copies of a child's birth certificate, or marriage licenses (to start the BAQ).

Notaries cannot "certify" the copy because the original is in the hands of another government agency.

The notary can only certify the copy as a "true copy" of the document provided for inspection.

To be "certified," the document needs a stamp or seal from the original source.

Marriage licenses/certificates, records of birth, death or divorce have an official seal/certificate on them from the court or office that issued the original document.

Just providing a copy without a seal to the notary is not enough. The notary cannot and will not certify this to be a true copy.

Many clients come to the Legal Assistance Office on the advice of personnel at other offices to have a notary seal placed on documents to make them "certified" copies. The notary cannot do this.

You must return to the court or office that maintains the original document to obtain a "certified" copy.

Addresses for most state marriage, divorce and birth records are available at the Legal Assistance Office.

To have a document notarized, individuals need only appear in person before the notary.

All documents must be signed in front of the notary. There are no exceptions.

Some clients have their spouses sign the document and then bring the spouse's identification card with them.

This cannot be done because the spouse's signature was not affixed to the document in the presence of the notary.

The Legal Assistance Office is here to provide you free notarial services. The office does a brisk business and will help you as much as they legally can.

However, remember there are rules that must be obeyed.

Notary service is provided at the Legal Assistance Office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, on a walk-in basis.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Civilian Attorney

Q. I read in a local newspaper that a furniture store off post was having a going out of business sale.

I had just PCSed from Fort Leavenworth, and my sofa got pretty bashed up in the move. I went in search of a good deal on a new sofa.

When I arrived at the store, there was a banner prominently displayed on the front of the store that said the store was going out of business.

Another large sign said "Save $1,000s!"

My wife and I looked at the sofas on the display floor and found one we wanted.

The price tag on the sofa said "Going out of business price — $600.

The original price was listed as $800.

Although the $200 savings had me convinced, my wife wanted to do some comparison shopping.

We went to two other furniture stores and were surprised to find identical sofas in both stores that were selling for $599. Some going out of business price.

I went back to the store and looked again at the price tag.

Stapled to the back of the tag was the original price tag that said the regular price was $800 with the store's discounted price listed at $600. The figures were same as those on the sale tags.

I was lured into the store because of the deceptive advertising concerning a going out of business sale when the prices are still the same as the regular business prices.

Furthermore, I have since found out that this store has been going out of business for the past six months.

Can a store advertise false prices like that?

A. The Georgia Fair Business Practices Act prohibits the use of false or misleading statements concerning the reasons for price reductions.

It appears as if the store has violated the law by advertising a false reason for their pricing.

Make an appointment to speak with a Legal Assistance attorney as soon as possible. Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

You may also file a complaint with the Better Business Bureau of Western Georgia and Eastern Alabama, Inc., at 8 13th Street in Columbus.

The phone number is 324-0712.

Having a prepared statement when you contact the Better Business Bureau will make the process go smoothly.

Soldiers may also file a complaint with the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board at Fort Benning.

The Board has sufficient evidence to show that that business' practices are seriously effecting the morale and welfare of soldiers.

If a business is placed off limits, soldiers are forbidden by regulation to patronize that establishment and the business will lose the substantial portion of its revenue generated from sales of products and services to soldiers.

The key to a successful AFDCB complaint is to have several soldiers complain.

Since the board is looking for situations affecting the morale and welfare of soldiers, complaints from just a handful of soldiers will most likely not warrant taking action against a business.

Complaint information for the AFDCB can be obtained at the Provost Marshal's Office on post.

You can also tell your friends and acquaintances about this store and the unfair treatment you received.

A bad recommendation can have an adverse effect of the store.

If enough people get the word out, the store may be pressured into changing its business practices.

Meet the Drill Team daredevils

After watching the U.S. Army Drill Team perform, Wilson School students Starr Boja (left), Erica Gordon and Lars Arrington got a chance to meet two members of the team. The team performed its daring and intricate maneuvers for Wilson students and fourth- and fifth-graders from Wilbur School. After the performance, students had an opportunity to talk with team members and find out a little about them.

Post pays tribute to Drill Sgt. of Year

ITC soldier honored at April 6 ceremony

By Melvyn De Rixey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Pomp and circumstance filled the air April 6 at Sand Hill Theater No. 3 as Fort Benning honored its Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Staff Sgt. George D. Harrington, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, won the honor.

Harrington, 24, competed against five other battalion Drill Sergeants of the Quarter to win the honor.

Many dignitaries attended the ceremony including Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire and Florida businessman Richard A. Leandri.

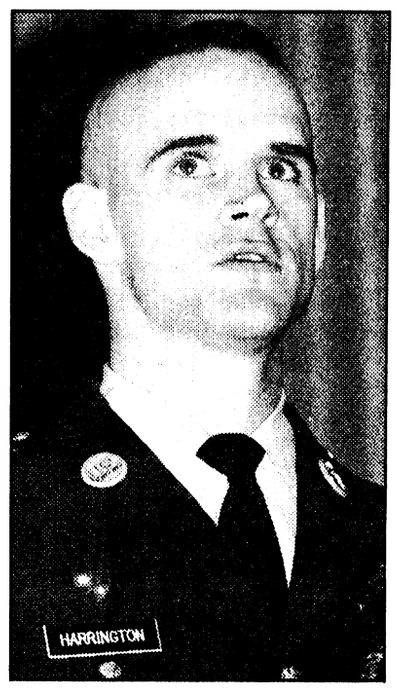
Leandri created the Drill Sergeant of the Year award 11 years ago in honor of his friend and business associate, retired Col. Donald C. Shuffstall.

Harrington is a LaGrange, Ga., native and has been a drill sergeant for more than a year.

He said that after entering the Army in July 1983 and completing his basic training, his motivation to become a drill sergeant came from two drill sergeants who thought it would be a good opportunity for him.

Harrington is a graduate of Airborne, Jumpmaster, Ranger and Military Parachuting schools.

In 1987 he received the Leadership Award after completing the Primary Leadership Development Course, and he was an Honor Graduate of his Drill Sergeant Class in 1988.



Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year George D. Harrington

In 1989, he received the Henry Caro Leadership Award upon completing the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course.

Harrington said his biggest inspiration while serving in the Army, besides winning the Drill Sergeant of the Year Award, has been the support he's received from his wife Traci.

> "My advice to all soldiers coming out of basic training is to always be motivated and exceed the standards."
>
> — Staff Sgt. George Harrington

Most of the credit goes to her," he said, "because she keeps me motivated by helping me strive for a better life in the Army."

A highlight of the ceremony came when Spigelmire, in presenting a bouquet of roses to Mrs. Harrington, noticed that the couple's 3-year-old son George had not joined his parents on stage.

The general remarked that George should be recognized, too, because after all he has had to put up with his dad being away at work for 18 hours a day.

George was escorted onto the stage to share the spotlight.

Although Harrington plans to make a career of the military, his dedication extends far outside the military.

Harrington is currently helping his father, a Troop County, Ala., sheriff, build a race car that will be used in an eastern Alabama race sometime this year to support a "Say No To Drugs" campaign.

"My advice to all soldiers coming out of basic training is to always be motivated and exceed the standards," Harrington said.

"That way, they can advance in their military careers," he added.

As Drill Sergeant of the Year, Harrington received a 9-millimeter Beretta pistol, an engraved case and plaque, a set of dress blues, a warm-up jacket and a wristwatch from the Association of the U.S. Army.

He will compete at Fort Monroe, Va, next week for the prestigious Army Drill Sergeant of the Year title.

Leadership seminars planned

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A series of leadership lectures and discussions for officers' spouses is being offered Thursday, April 23, 26, 30 and May 3, from 7 to 10 p.m. at The School Brigade Chapel, building 2766.

Sponsored by the Leadership Seminars office, the workshops are timed to fit into the schedules of working spouses and others who are unable to attend daytime seminars.

Although the seminar is usually only available to Infantry Officers Advanced Course student's spouses, the seminars are being made available to all officers' spouses at Fort Benning.

The seminar includes large-group lectures and small-group discussions and brainstorming.

Topics covered will be group dynamics, stress, values, communication, death and loss in a unit and family support groups, as well as two panels with noncommissioned officers' spouses on the first one and officers' spouses on the other.

Each session builds on the one before; therefore it is necessary for participants to attend all five sessions.

A certificate of completion will be presented to all attendees.

Interested persons should contact the Leadership Seminars office at 545-1936/3744, call Patsy Chilcote at 687-4059 or Eileen Reid at 689-1170.

Spaces will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis except for company commanders' spouses who have not taken the course.

Day in court

Several Wilson School fifth-graders had their "Day in Court" when Billie Jeter, a representative of the Columbus Exchange Club, presented a program about Gold E. Locks going to trial. In addition to watching the trial, students were provided law-related educational materials and a certificate, which verified that they had had their day in court. The "Day in Court" program is one of many projects sponsored by the club.

School of Americas presents nations of Latin America

Brazil
(Federal Republic of Brazil)

Area: 3,286,488 square miles, slightly smaller than the United States and about half of all South America.

Population: 150,685,145, sixth largest in the world and more than half of all South Americans.

Religion: Roman Catholic

Literacy rate: 76 percent

Life expectancy: 65 years

Languages: Portuguese is the official language. Spanish, English and French are also spoken.

Capital city: Brasilia, built new in the 1960s specifically to serve as the national capital.

Economy: Industries — steel, autos, textiles, ships. Major exports — coffee (world leader), cotton, soybeans, manufactured goods.

Per capita income: $1,880

Currency: The cruzado.

The economic superpower of South America, eighth largest economy in the world, Brazil borders 10 of the 12 other countries on the continent (except Chile and Ecuador).

The Amazon River, larger by volume than the combined flow of the next eight largest rivers in the world, supports a huge rain forest across the north half of the country that is estimated to produce one-fifth of the world's atmospheric oxygen.

Brazil's sophisticated industrial sector built South America's largest dam at Iguazu on the Paraguayan border.

Currently it is building a Perimeter Highway along the northern and western frontiers that should spur development in the national interior.

Sao Paulo with 19 million and Rio de Janeiro with 11 million people rank third and eighth, respectively, among the world's most populous cities.

Brazil is the only country to have won consecutive World Cup titles in soccer (1958 and 1962) and possibly the greatest athlete to have played the sport — Pele — popularized soccer in the United States in the 1960s and 1970s.

Mudcats beat Braves 4-3

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The Columbus Mudcats opened their 1990 season with a 4-3 win over the visiting Greenville Braves April 7, but dropped the next three in a slow start for the Houston Astros AA affiliate.

Opening night, which was moved from April 6 to 7 due to rain, had second baseman Andy Mota scoring the winning run on a hit by right fielder Bernie Jenkins in the bottom of the eighth inning.

Daven "Savings" Bond grabbed the save as he shut down the Atlanta Braves affiliate in the top of the ninth.

Game one of the April 8 doubleheader, scheduled because of the earlier postponement, had the score tied 3-3 until Braves' first baseman Mike Bell sent a blast over the right-field fence in the fifth inning. It was the first home run ball hit out of Golden Park this season.

John Kilner took the save and Mudcats' Wally Trice was handed his first loss as Greenville held on to the lead and won 4-3.

Game two featured more of the same as the Braves took the win on an RBI by Rich Casarotti.

Daven Bond was handed his first loss in the 4-1 defeat.

The Braves finished up the series with a win April 9, with four runs on eight hits to the Mudcats' one run on four hits.

The 'Cats own a 49-46 edge in the overall series with the Braves.

The talent was spotted early for the 'Cats, however.

Right fielder Bernie Jenkins had two diving catches, catcher Tony Eusebio batted .750 through the first three games and threw out two would-be base-stealers, and pitcher Al Osuna threw two-and-a-third innings of hitless, runless ball in relief, including three strikeouts, for the opening win.

Last years' talent sensation, Eric Anthony, started with the Astros on April 9, but a hamstring pulled early in the game has caused him to be placed on the 15-day disabled list.

Mudcats owner Steve Bryant said, "Anthony's got a home. He may be hitting .200 in May, but the Astros will stick with him."

Anthony gained early notoriety with the big club when he charged the mound during a preseason game this spring.

Mudcats' owner pledges support for team's fans

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Columbus Mudcats owner Steve Bryant pledged to support the fans and said, "As long as we're here, the fans are going to get the best."

He said he and his staff have already revised an earlier policy that would give military members, senior citizens and children under 12 years old $1 off the general admission price on non-promotional nights, cutting the gate fee to $2.

"From now on, they will get the discount for every game, promotional or not," he said.

Although he would not confirm plans to move the team after the 1991 season, Bryant did say he had "an option" on a tract of land in the Raleigh, N.C., area.

He also said that he would make "every effort" to bring a single-A franchise to Golden Park should the Mudcats be moved but said he would probably keep the team name here in Columbus.

He said the only differences between single- and double-A ball are "pitching and speed."

Attendance for opening weekend had Columbus trailing the division by an average of 300 persons.

Although the turnout was better than last year's opening weekend, Bryant blamed the slow start on the untimely scheduling of the Link's Fair during the same time period, next to Golden Park.

The Mudcats will finish up the last of eight home games tonight against the Knoxville Blue Jays.

Tonight's promotional item will be Mudcats wristbands, which will be given to each person 14 years old and under with a paid admission.

Tomorrow, the 'Cats will start an eight-game road trip, playing the Memphis Chicks and Knoxville.

They will return April 22 for 11 games at home starting with the Chicago Cubs affiliate Charlotte Knights.

Watching aquarium bass may improve your fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Watching bass in an aquarium may improve your fishing success.

That's the opinion of Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler Ken Cook, who, as a former biologist, has studied his share of fish in tanks, as well as in lakes and rivers.

"Watching how bass act and react to different conditions can definitely help you understand why you may or may not get a bite," Cook says. "You can also learn how to fish your lures under certain conditions."

For example, says the Evinrude pro, inactive fish seem to go through a very deliberate "stretch and yawn" exercise before they begin feeding. Other smaller fish recognize this and swim for safety when they see it.

"I've seen this numerous times in aquariums," Cook adds, "most recently with a 14-pound largemouth. Smaller baitfish in the same aquarium never paid any attention to the big bass until it yawned. Then they headed for cover.

"Once, we clipped the fin of a small baitfish and dropped it into an aquarium where it swam erratically. There was a larger bass present that had been totally inactive up to that point, but when the injured bait swam by, the bass nabbed it immediately.

"The fish didn't bother to go through its stretching and yawning," Cook continues. "What we saw was a strike out of pure reflex because the fish somehow recognized an opportune meal."

How will this help you become a better fisherman on the lake?

I believe we're fishing for inactive bass the majority of the time we're fishing," Cook points out, "so what we have to try for are these reflex-type strikes. An erratic lure retrieve with a lot of stop-and-go, rise-and-fall action often triggers these strikes more often than a steady speed retrieve does."

At times, noise may provide the stimulus to provoke a strike, too. Cook has watched how bass react in a clear water creek after he has purposefully spooked them.

"When I frighten them, the fish scoot to overhanging rocks or deep into the shade of bushes and trees," he says. "I can often trigger a strike by casting a small jig or plastic grub beyond the hiding place, easing the lure up in front of the fish, and shaking my rod tip slightly so the lure scratches along the bottom.

"The lure doesn't move, but instead, stays in the same place. I believe the noise of the lead-head scraping around the rocks brings the bass back out. They'll just ease out and suck the lure in."

The lesson here for fishermen?

"Switch to a smaller lure," says the Evinrude angler, "and work it very slowly and deliberately around the cover. Try to add noise to the lure so it appeals to more than just the fish's sense of sight.

Bass fishermen reel in 52

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning BASS Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club's monthly tournament was March 10 and 11.

Twenty-seven fishermen participated in the two-day tournament at Lake Seminole, catching 52 fish that weighed a total of 122 pounds, 11 ounces.

First-place honors went to Skip Ray with 23 pounds, 6 ounces for the two days.

Willie Goble took second place with 20 pounds, 12 ounces.

George Mendez took third place with 20 pounds, 9 ounces.

Ray took the Big Fish pot both days with a 5-pound, 5-ounce fish the first day and a 6-pound, 5-ounce fish the second day.

The fishing conditions at Lake Seminole were less than perfect.

The water level had been down about three to four feet prior to the tournament.

Then the water level rose the day before the tournament began, and a front moved in the first day of the tournament.

With the combination of the water fluctuation and the front, less fish were caught at the annual Seminole tournament than any Seminole tournament in recent years.

On the first day of the tournament, only 11 of the 27 fishermen were able to bring fish in for weigh-in.

The second day was no better, only 10 of the 27 participants weighed-in fish. Only five people weighed-in a two-day total of about 10 pounds.

Fort Benning Bass Club has one points tournament per month.

The next tournament is at Florence Marina on the Chattahoochee River this month.

Reflections Reflections

By Father Joe Piskura
Main Post Catholic Chapel

In 1950, a book was published in France that offered a unique way of contemplating and meditating on the crucifixion of Christ.

The author was a physician named Pierre Barbet.

In "A Doctor at Calvary," Barbet examines the suffering of Jesus with the scientific accuracy of an experienced doctor and the compassionate devotion of a dedicated Christian.

The book is an outstanding example of how science can contribute to theology.

It is a work that can give new insight into the words: "Jesus suffered and died for our sins."

On Good Friday, Christians commemorate the passion and death of Christ.

It is the most solemn day of the Christian calendar and the hours between noon and 3 p.m. are especially meaningful.

It was during these three hours that Christ hung on the cross.

There is a special devotion observed by many that centers on these three hours called "Tre Ore."

Barbet's book gives a tremendous appreciation of what happened on the first Good Friday.

The belief that Christ literally died of a broken heart is a point he brings out.

Barbet provides an in-depth analysis of the terrible physical trauma involved in crucifixion.

The excruciating sufferings endured by the victim sometimes resulted in his heart actually rupturing.

This may have been the case with the death of Jesus Christ, according to the doctor.

He draws this conclusion from his examination of the physical effects of Christ's suffering in the light of the scripture verse of John 19:34, which describes the way in which the body of Jesus was found on the cross.

Barbet's book is not simply a cold analytical study. It is the work of a person who seems deeply affected by Christ's suffering and committed to the goal of making that suffering better understood and appreciated.

One cannot read his book without an increased awareness of how much Christ endured out of his love for all people.

If anyone would like added devotional material for Holy Weeks, this publication is recommended by the Chaplain's Office.

Additional devotional materials are available at Main Post Catholic Chapel, The Infantry Center Chapel, and the Chaplain's office at the Welcome Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

This is Holy Week

By Chap. Donald W. McSwain
Post Chaplain's Office

This is a special time of year for the Jewish and Christian communities in which the past is called to remembrance.

The Jewish Passover began Monday and was celebrated with the Seder Meal at the Infantry Training Center Regimental Chapel.

The preparation, service and eating of this meal is a significant recounting of the marvelous deliverance of God, both past and present.

Chap. Baron, the post Jewish chaplain, invited the Christian community to join in the service.

The Passover meal has a special meaning for Christians.

Jesus and his disciples were Jewish and observed this meal on their last evening together.

At the conclusion of that Passover meal, Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper as observed in Christian churches today.

Thursday, Catholics and Protestants gathered in chapels across post to participate in Maundy Thursday Holy Communion Services in commemoration of the last Passover meal and the first Lord's Supper that Jesus celebrated with his disciples.

Today is Good Friday! While uniquely a Christian observance, it is also a time to reflect on our common religious heritage.

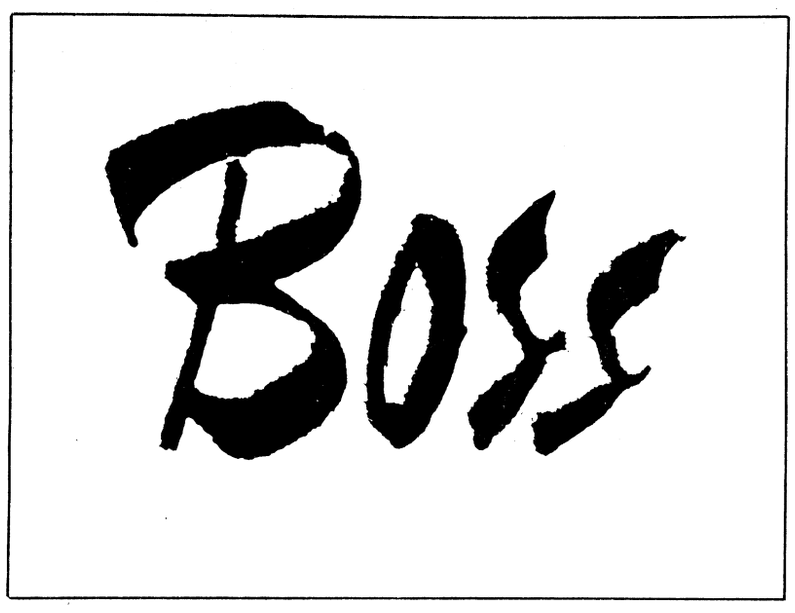
2nd BOSS Bash Tuesday



USAIC Public Affairs Office

The year's second BOSS (Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers) Bash will be Tuesday at 7 p.m. at the Hidden Door Enlisted Club.

WCGQ 107-FM Radio will provide music and a live remote broadcast. Station disc jockeys Al Haynes and Billy Iceman will be on hand.

Prizes will be given away along with free food, souvenirs, tickets and more.

All single soldiers are admitted free.

For more information, call the Hidden Door Enlisted Club at 689-0887.

The event is sponsored by WCGQ, The BOSS Group and the Directorate of Community Activities.

According to BOSS officials, Army leaders have expressed concern about the perception of a lack of activities for single soldiers. Fort Benning is a test site for the BOSS Program.

Many programs created to serve Army families over the past few years have received wide publicity, and officials say that because of this publicity, many single soldiers feel left out.

BOSS officials say that Army leaders have made a commitment to provide innovative recreational programs for single soldiers.

Springer to offer theatre classes

Creative dramatics, stage training for actors of all ages

Springer Opera House

Classes, designed to bring out the expressive talents in almost anyone, will be offered by Mary MacMillan, the Springer's Director of Instruction and Children's Theatre.

The classes are a smorgasbord of theatre training, which involves performers of all ages in the excitement of the dramatic process.

"Children are a theatre's creative engine," MacMillan explained. "The theatre needs actors who really know how to play and share ideas.

"For children, play is more natural, and our task is to channel the joy of play into creative interpretation," she said.

"For adults, our task is to re-introduce them to that playful state of childhood where ideas are fun and exciting,"said MacMillan.

"That's what my classes are all about — turning joyful play into effective theatre."

The Springer will offer six theatre classes, all taught by MacMillan, during the spring session:

Ages 2 to 5 — Drama Jam — A creative dramatics class for preschoolers who learn the ABCs of theatre through expressive movement, tumbling, character play, music, costume, dance and puppetry, Fridays beginning April 20 through June 8, 9:30 to 10:30 a.m., fee: $45.

Ages 5 to 8 — Creative Dramatics — an exploration of fascinating stage ideas employing animal imagery, character voices, drama games and character play, Thursdays through June 7 from 4:15 to 5:15 p.m., fee: $45.

Ages 8 to 10 — Character Voices and Accents — Children learn to sound like different people from other places and portray a variety of characters for the final class presentation, Thursdays through June 7, 5:30 to 6:30 p.m., fee: $45.

Ages 10 to 12 — Play Performance — A performance class that focuses on the skills needed to become an effective stage actor — speech, movement, singing, dance, characterization and script interpretation, Wednesdays beginning April 25 through May 30, 4:30 to 5:30 p.m., fee: $45.

Teens — Love and War — A theatre class with a splash of adventure. Learn the stage combat techniques that Hollywood stunt men use and portray some of Shakespeare's greatest lovers and swashbucklers, Tuesdays, April 24 through May 29, 5 to 6:30 p.m., fee: $45.

Adults and Teens — Yoga and Massage — Millions of performers the world over routinely use these techniques to gain greater physical control, muscle tone and flexibility, relieve/release tension, improve concentration/memory and achieve a positive mental outlook, Mondays beginning April 23 through June 11, 6 to 7 p.m., fee: $50.

Future Springer offerings in the School of Theatre Arts include a Drama Day Camp this summer and a puppet theatre section in the fall.

For more information about these classes or the Springer School of Theatre Arts, call (404) 324-3601/1100.

LIGHT TOUCH
By Phil

It's good to keep in touch with your relatives. A call or letter doesn't cost much, and it sure beats having them over.
Our friend lives in a neighborhood so bad, nobody ever asks what time it is, they just take your watch.
Life is tough after the kids leave home and you have no one to blame for things but each other.
You can't stretch the truth without making your story look pretty thin.

Art workshop April 28

A Painted Floor Cloth Workshop will be taught by Lois Coogle, an Atlanta art teacher, April 28, at the Damascus Church at Westville beginning at 10 a.m. and at 1 p.m. The cost is $25 (all supplies included.)

Painted floor cloths were used in the early nineteenth century for a rug substitute for those who could not afford an imported rug.

They were, also, used to protect a fine carpet or used in the summer for a floor cooler.

Because of their uniqueness in decorating, the floor cloth has become a very popular craft.

They are easily kept clean by mopping. With a present day protective coating, they are quite durable.

To make reservations, write: Westville, P.O. Box 1850, Lumpkin, Ga. 31815, or call (912) 838-6310.

Wildflower festival April 28, 29

In conjunction with Stewart County's Wildflower Festival, Westville will feature native flower arrangements throughout the Village April 28 and 29.

Village hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Westville will also have its regular activities of basket, broom and pottery making, blacksmithing, quilting, spinning and weaving, woodworking, leather crafting, candle dipping and cooking.

Admission is $5 for adults, $4 for senior citizens, $3 for students, grades one through 12.

For more information, write: Westville, P.O. Box 1850, Lumpkin, Ga. 31815, or call (912) 838-6310.

Craft show April 28, 29

A crafts show, sponsored by the Stewart County Chamber of Commerce, will be April 28 from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and April 29 from 1 to 6 p.m. on the Courthouse Square in Lumpkin, Ga.

There is no charge.

Lumpkin is located on U.S. 27, 35 miles south of Columbus, Ga.

The Crafts Show will offer craft items for sale by crafters who will display their works from individual booths.

A variety of food items will be on sale.

Entertainment will be provided throughout the two days by a variety of local performers.

Crafters wishing more information or to participate in the show, may call Vicky Simmons at (912) 838-6031/4862 or write to P.O. Box 1263, Lumpkin, Ga. 31815.

Spring festival April 28

A spring festival will be at the base of Brasstown Bald, Georgia's highest peak on the campus of Young Harris College April 28 from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The day begins at 9:30 a.m. with a 5-kilometer race. There will be a variety of special music throughout the day, a Medieval and Renaissance court and country dancers, games, contests and food.

Young Harris College, located in Young Harris, Ga., is on U.S. Highway 76.

For information, call 1-800-24 3754 or (404) 379-3111.

Army's top leaders discuss latest Infantry technology

By Bob O'Brien
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Infantry Hall was a busy, interesting and exciting place April 10 through 13.

As hallways were filled with the latest, high-tech, state-of-the-art equipment and training devices, Classroom 6 served as the forum in which our Army's top leadership came together to discuss the latest in doctrine and training during the 1990 Infantry Conference.

The conference kicked off April 10 with a keynote address by Gen. John W. Foss, Training and Doctrine Command commander.

Foss talked about the challenges and strategic roles of the Army today and in the future.

Foss explained that the scaling down of the Army and the changing political situations in the world will result in four near-term certainties.

- More heavy-light operations and training.
- Increased emphasis on contingency operations and training.
- More conventional-special operations integration.
- More counter narcotics operations and taskings.

He emphasized the importance of training to maintain a ready Army, fully capable of meeting tomorrow's challenges.

He distinctly focused on platoon-level proficiency, calling it "the most critical," because "platoon level is the level of execution."

"Platoons must train on the basics, to include standard fire commands, battle drills and SOPs," The general said.

He said marksmanship training is crucial and that we must train to tougher standards, especially in the Infantry.

Equipment, specifically that of individual soldiers, is one of Foss' top priorities.

He said he feels there is a problem with the soldiers' individual equipment and that it must be fixed, explaining that getting new and improved equipment to soldiers "shows we care."

The TRADOC commander closed by painting a picture of the modern battlefield, which will be non-linear and characterized by engagements at long range.

This means battles can be fought with fewer soldiers, which fits in nicely with the future personnel cuts.

"The keys to future success are leadership, hard work and dedication; and the infantry has the talent to meet the challenges of the future," Foss said.

Foss' address laid the foundation for the Infantry conference. His views on training, doctrine and leadership were reinforced throughout the conference by many distinguished leaders.

Among them was Gen. Carl E. Vuono, chief of staff of the Army.

Vuono, like Foss, described the Army of the future as

Post commander highlights new training device

By Jon Thompson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In his keynote address at the 1990 Infantry Conference, Gen. John W. Foss, commander of Training and Doctrine Command, spoke about the transition to a device-based training strategy.

One such device, highlighted by Post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire is the Electronic Information Delivery System or EIDS.

EIDS combines a computer and color monitor with a laser video disc player, which allows a soldier to train on a subject without the risk of damage or injury due to inexperience.

Not limited to equipment training, the EIDS also has lessons on areas such as land navigation and leadership.

The laser disc player shows the student a realistic picture of the equipment.

As the student progresses through the lesson, the computer asks him various questions to which the student responds by touching the screen with a light pen.

The computer then keeps a record of the student's answers and tells him if he passed or needs more training.

EIDS will also complement resident courses such as the TOW trainer course, conducted at Fort Benning, by allowing soldiers to receive instruction before attending the course.

EIDS is especially applicable in Reserve component units as it provides them with realistic training while lessening the expensive requirement to send soldiers to a school.

Completed modules for the EIDS include Bradley Fighting Vehicle gunnery and maintenance, problem-solving processes, leadership and map reading.

Other programs under development by Training Technology Branch, Directorate of Training and Doctrine, include the TOW trainer course, combat vehicle identification and M-16 marksmanship.

EIDS costs an estimated $4,300 per student system.

The device has already been tested by the 24th Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga., and III Corps Artillery at Fort Sill, Okla.

Currently, the National Guard is purchasing more than 5,300 systems for use in units around the country.

EIDS will be one component of the Distributive Training Technology, which includes other computer classes and the Army correspondence programs.

Volunteer Resource Center

Fort Benning has nominated six representatives for the Governor's Volunteer Awards to be presented during the governor's annual Community Awards at the Georgia World Congress Center April 27.

They are Leslie Bunting, Peggy Paape, Sherri Bunyea, Kathy Moloney, Becky Watts and Wanda Campbell.

Fort Benning will pay tribute to its volunteers Wednesday, 6 to 8 p.m. in the Supper Club at the Officers' Club.

Bunting, Volunteer of the Quarter, is the chairwoman of the board of directors for the Fort Benning Early Childhood Development Center.

Paape is the coordinator for the First Steps Program.

First Steps is an outreach program designed to help new mothers.

Bunyea, chairwoman of the Thrift Shop, teaches adapted aquatics through the Red Cross and is a Cub Scout den mother.

Additionally, she has worked with the Girl Scouts and the Barracuda Swim Team.

Moloney is recognized for her work with the Benning Belle's, the Thrift Shop and the Volunteer Resource Center.

She has also worked on projects with the Officers' Wives' Club.

Watts is a Red Cross volunteer.

She is currently the chairwoman of hospital volunteers and has served as Youth Summer Program chairwoman.

She was selected as Volunteer of the Quarter in 1989.

Campbell is the former Service Unit director for the Girl Scouts here. She has also worked with Boy Scouts and Army Community Service.

The Governor's Awards symbolize the partnership between Georgia and its citizens, recognizing the people, cities, and counties who have participated in the community development process.

The awards are a symbol of thanks to all those people who share the belief that we are working today for a brighter tomorrow.

See pages A-4, A-5 and A-6 for more on Fort Benning's volunteer force.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: Why do you volunteer?

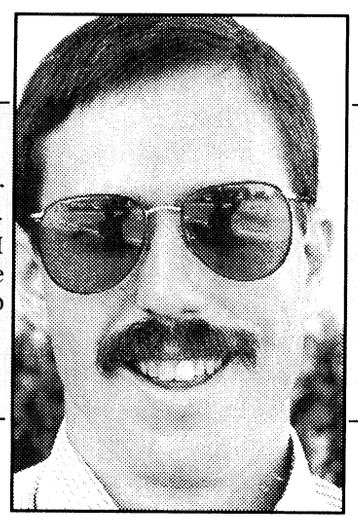
Emma Bennett — "I volunteer for the Red Cross because I want to help out in the community. People are always taking something out of the community, I'd like to put something back."

Lou Ella Canady — "I am a Red Cross volunteer because I enjoy helping people. There's no better feeling than knowing someone needs you and being able to help them."

Walter Jackson — "I received assistance through the Red Cross when I was a soldier, and that's why I volunteer now. I've always been grateful for their help, and I want to give something back."



Michael Brown — "I volunteer for the Religious Education Center because I like people, and I like being around them. I like using the skills I have to help other people."

Patricia A. Stice — "I do volunteer work at McBride School because I want to give something back to the community. Plus, I like the idea of being involved with my son's education."

Frances Bergschneber — "I volunteer at the Religious Education Center because it gives me a chance to get out of the house. My children are exposed to new things because I volunteer, so it's good for all of us."

Noise ordinance raises a clatter

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Much ado about the Columbus noise ordinance is being made.

If the noise ordinance is enforced in Columbus as it is on post, people will soon forget it exists.

It has been my experience that nuisance laws amount to little more than being nuisances themselves.

For instance, who is it that calls the cops or military police to report barking dogs, loud stereos or lawn mowers at 7 a.m. on a Sunday.

Chronic complainers, that's who, and they'll call, ordinance or no ordinance.

Naturally by the time the authorities respond, the source of the complaint has disappeared so the chronic complainer does little but get a reputation for being a busybody and a cry baby who should be ignored.

It's kind of like "The Boy Who Cried Wolf," syndrome.

But in the real world, chronic complainers aside, Darwin's law of natural selection will come into play.

It works like this, the neighbor's dog wakes you at 2 a.m. barking at some cat who takes delight in teasing poor old Willis.

Well, Willis, not being the brightest dog on four legs, continues to bark through the rest of the night even after the cat's gotten bored with the whole thing and left.

Willis' owners who are either sleeping or not home, are unaware of Willis' barking.

Of course they're the only ones, as the rest of the neighborhood is wondering "Who the heck does that damn dog belong to."

Well, the next door neighbors know. And this is where the real world comes into being.

If the neighbors are on speaking terms — hardly likely since this is certainly not the first time Willis has kept the neighborhood awake — the neighbor will greet Willis' master with a "Hey, Mac, ol' Willis sure was busy last night."

To which Mac will respond, "Oh really? I didn't notice, must have slept through it. Sorry about that, I'll make sure we lock the dog up at night so he won't bother you again. Son must've forgotten."

If Mac's alias is Ward Cleaver, that's probably how he'd react.

But if his alias is Bubba, well, first off the neighbor probably wouldn't have dared bring up the subject of Willis' barking unless, and now for Darwin's theory, the neighbor's name is Rambo, and he's one of those guys who works out by bending tire irons. . .in bars. . .over other people's heads.

If you're like me though, Mac will probably out-mean you two to one, so you'll have to take the sneaky approach.

You'll get Mac's phone number and the next time Willis barks, you'll dial (hoping Mac doesn't have "call announcing" yet) and as soon as Mac answers, you'll know he's awake enough to hear his damn dog, so you hang up without speaking.

If Mac doesn't do anything, you keep calling — all night if necessary.

This may not stop the barking, but at least you get the satisfaction of knowing if you're not sleeping, then Mac isn't either.

Boom boxes on wheels is another source of irritation.

If you're merely wheeling about town and one of those deaf cretins pulls up beside you at a red light, you can tolerate his racket for a couple of minutes, as you watch the sides of his car keep time with the bass and wonder what it's doing to his ear drums.

But if I were a businessman and had car loads of teenagers and young second lieutenants chasing each other in and out of my parking lot, scaring away the customers with their din, then I'd be upset.

Again, if I were the Terminator, I might take matters into my own hands and start yanking the wires out of some of the machines as they passed by.

But if I were Les Nesman, I'd let them pass or call the cops.

By the way, besides having the reverberations from your boom boxes slowly turn you bones to chalk dust — sound waves are extremely destructive — you can also get fined 600 bucks for creating a nuisance.

So next time, as you get cranked up and head for the Beallwood Connector or one of the shopping malls for some loud cruising, think about the money involved, if not your health. (I wonder what these boom boxes are doing to the pool of potential soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines).

CG says thanks for a job well done

Fort Benning hosted the 1990 Worldwide Infantry Conference April 9 through 13 and, thanks to your hard work, it was a tremendous success.

We welcomed more than 94 general officers, 188 colonels and 110 civilian contractors to the installation. Many of them said it was the best conference they had ever attended.

During and after the conference, numerous senior officers commented to me how great Fort Benning, the Home of the Infantry, looked.

I took a great deal of pride in their comments, but it is you who deserve the credit, because you are the folks who made it happen.

All of you who support Fort Benning, whether you were the soldiers on early morning police call, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing road sweeper crew I saw many mornings before sunup, or the noncommissioned officers who have always kept our post standing tall, you are truly deserving of the praise.

We also received numerous laudatory comments on the condition of the billets, the great support from Protocol and the superb escort offficers who came from units across the installation.

Credit must go as well to all of you who contributed to the technical or tactical scenarios, to the briefers, to the audio visual support staff and the myriad volunteer efforts that went into making a success of this Infantry Conference.

It was yet another magnificent demonstration of the teamwork at Fort Benning, the Home of the Infantry. Again, thanks for your magnificent support.

Ground-pounder hits Snively with best shot

His attempt at humor aside, it would be inappropriate to allow Clyde Snively's article titled, "Ground-pounders lack finesse when naming new weapons," to go without a response in kind.

First, let me say that we ground-pounders do not need "original or creative" names to inspire our use or confidence in any of our weapon systems.

Second, the names of those "dead guys" speak volumes to commitment, service and sacrifice and better serve as inspiration to the role of the individual and as the consummate guide to being all you can be.

Besides, "Hellcats and Eagles" don't win wars, the pilots who fly them do.

The article did raise an interesting subject, though, that of giving names to things to convey an additional depth of meaning to a thing.

Since Clyde Snively admits to not being a "troop," it gives spurious credibility to his logic.

Therefore, on behalf of all the dullards and purists, I've decided to rename his article, "Trivial Musings of Delusion."

Educated soldiers should not be treated special

Is the Army wasting its educated soldiers?

That was the question raised in an editorial by John Robinson in a recent issue of The Bayonet.

I do agree with Robinson that the Army should place soldiers in jobs where they can best use their education.

But let's face it, if a person enlists for a military occupational specialty that has nothing to do with his education, he still owes the Army the time for which he enlisted.

For example, two soldiers enlist — one is a 24-year-old with a master's degree in business, the other is a 17-year-old, straight out of high school.

Both sign up for the Infantry and both, after a while, decide they don't like it.

Is it fair to the 17-year-old who joined the Army to get money for college to have to remain Infantry because he hasn't had time yet to earn his degree when the 24-year-old, following Robinson's suggestion, would be allowed to get out of the Infantry, the job for which he enlisted, to work in a business-related field?

> TheArmy would much rather have someone who is willing to learn and do his job.

I say it shouldn't matter if a soldier has a degree.

He still has an obligation to fulfill his contract, no matter what MOS he chose when he enlisted.

If a soldier gets his degree while in the Army then he, more so than others, should fulfill his obligation.

I joined the Infantry and went through One Station Unit Training with a guy who had a degree in psychology.

Why he joined the Infantry I don't know, but it was his choice.

During training he did the same push-ups I did and dug the same fighting position.

This is a fine example of a college graduate in a foxhole with an 18-year-old high school graduate from Anytown, U.S.A.

I haven't been in the Army long, but I have learned one thing about the way it works.

The Army would much rather have someone who is willing to learn and do his job, than someone who has an education and feels the Army needs him more than he needs it.

A good example is a soldier with whom I work. He has acquired a good education and some of it, thanks to the Army.

This soldier feels the Army needs him more than he needs it, and this attitude has cost him certain opportunities.

Another soldier in my platoon already had three years of college when he joined.

He likes the Infantry and has an attitude of wanting to achieve high goals in the Infantry.

Would it be fair to this soldier if the Army put him in an administrative job where he wouldn't be happy.

Okay, the Army could put its educated soldiers to better use.

But its members are all volunteers who gave an oath to help protect our country.

Whether you're a private or a general, you must be willing to accept the circumstances or get out, because that's what it's all about — self-sacrifice.

Infantry's future role discussed at conference

By Jon Thompson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This year's theme for the four-day 1990 Worldwide Infantry Conference, which began April 10, was "Infantry's Role in the Heavy/Light Battle."

The conference brought together leaders from around the world to discuss the future role of the Infantry.

Yearly, the conference provides an open forum for the Army's senior leadership to discuss lessons learned by units as they conduct integrated heavy and light Infantry operations.

This year's theme was especially relevant in view of the use of light and mechanized Infantry during Operation Just Cause.

The conference, began with the keynote address by Gen. John W. Foss, commander of Training and Doctrine Command and former Fort Benning commander.

Foss talked about the changes to which the Infantry will have to adapt in the future.

After the keynote address, post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire gave the "State of the Infantry" address.

Spigelmire updated the attendees on the latest Infantry doctrine, training and equipment.

He was followed by the different directors who gave more detailed briefings.

The afternoon of April 11, Gen. Crosbie E. Saint, commander in chief of U.S. Army, Europe, led a discussion about the light Infantry role in European battle.

This was the first of two forums, which involved the commandants or their representatives from various combat arms service schools.

The audience was presented with a realistic scenario, involving the deployment of light Infantry in Europe.

As the attendees discussed the situation, school representatives told how they would support the forces.

April 12 began with a presentation by Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command, on U.S. Forces in Central America.

This was followed by another panel discussion on Operation Just Cause.

During the discussion, led by Lt. Gen Carl W. Stiner, commander of XVIIIth Airborne Corps, commanders who participated in Panama told of their operations and lessons learned.

Later, the conference attendees focused on the use of mechanized Infantry in a Central American scenario presented to the audience by Spigelmire.

Once again, the service school representatives described how they would support this scenario.

April 12 was highlighted by dinner at the Fort Benning Officers' Club in honor of Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Army chief of staff.

In his talk, Vuono reminded them of the never-changing need to have a "trained and ready Army."

He said the nation expects this at all times, even with force cutbacks.

April 13 began with an address by another former post commander and current commander of U.S. Forces Command, Gen. Edsin H. Burba Jr.

Burba gave the warfighting focus of FORSCOM in regard to the integration of mechanized Infantry with light forces.

"Every operation must integrate heavy and light forces," he said.

The conference concluded late morning April 13 with a final panel discussion, led by Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart III, commander of the U.S. Army Combined Arms Center, Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

He focused on the Army's Battle Command Training Program, which provides training for division-level staffs.

While the senior leaders attended the briefings, soldiers of Fort Benning toured the hallways of Building 4, which contained displays from more than 40 civilian contractors, as well as 12 military programs.

The displays allowed the soldiers to see and use some of the latest training devices, as well as the newest weapons.

Maj. Phillip A. Drumheiser, in charge of the Infantry Conference Operations Group, organized the conference.

In all, 97 general officers from both the active Army and the Reserve components, to include seven four-star generals, attended the conference.

As the conference concluded, the Army's senior leadership determined that the role of the Infantry will stay the same despite the changes it must face.

The conference echoed the words of Foss in his opening address, "The Infantry has the talents to meet those challenges."

Community goes extra mile for excellence

By Sarah McLaney
Army Communities of Excellence

Excellent Army communities don't happen by accident.

It takes commanders and people who care about the community and are willing to go the "extra mile" to make it happen.

That is what is happening at the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center.

A lot of time, energy and effort are being invested in the protection of our land.

Col. Charles R. Viale, USAITC commander, has designated the soil erosion problem in the Sand Hill area as one of his top priorities.

Viale recognized the extreme deterioration of the land in the Sand Hill area and came up with a plan to fight it.

When completed, it will provide more than just a pleasant visual setting for the community — it will also build a sense of permanence among the residents and lend character and personality to the site.

Maj. Charles A. Love, S-4, initiated and put into action a plan for identifying and correcting the potential risks involved as a result of soil erosion.

2nd Lt. Michelle Pation, Headquarters Support Company, 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy), 36th Engineer Group, provided 20-ton dump trucks to move top soil to the Sand Hill area for filling in the damaged areas.

Two noncommissioned officers — Staff Sgt. David Raphael and Sgt. Kenny D. Smith researched and identified more than 100 areas in Sand Hill needing attention.

Troops spread dirt, planted grass seeds, spread fertilizer and placed hay to over the soil to keep it from being washed away by heavy rains.

Each battalion is responsible for its immediate area.

2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, is developing a terrace-effect look at the intersection of 187th Infantry Regiment Street and 2nd Infantry Division Road.

One of the main goals is to repair the damage that has been done along the 11th Airborne Division Road. Work will continue in this area.

Support for this high-priority effort is being provided by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

William Bunt, chief of Range, Roads and Grounds Branch, Facilities Maintenance and Operations Division, is the "knight in shining armor" for those who are working so diligently to minimize the risks involved with the problems associated with erosion.

Efforts on this project will help ensure a beautiful environment, which generates community pride and individual satisfaction.

All personnel involved with this project are exemplifying what it takes to make this installation a community of excellence.

Spotlight shines on post volunteers

Karen Crowley

The coordinator of the Volunteer Resource Center, responsible for helping agencies meet the needs of the community by recruiting volunteers, training managers, and acting as advocate for volunteers and volunteer programs, was once a volunteer herself.

Knowing what volunteers want or need requires some experience.

Karen Crowley, Volunteer Center coordinator, has worked for many of the volunteer agencies she helps to support today.

In the past she worked as a youth chairwoman for Red Cross, helped Army Community Service create a loan closet and worked with her children's schools doing whatever was needed. She also worked on many projects with the Officers' Wives' Club holding many positions. She and her husband, Jim, taught a Valuing Values seminar for parents.

Crowley is still a volunteer for several agencies. She is a volunteer teacher for the seventh grade Sunday School class and the Wednesday night class for converting Catholics, and she volunteers with First Steps, a support program for new mothers.

Crowley said, "I believe that volunteering is good for you. It makes you part of a community." But Crowley doesn't stop with the Fort Benning community.

She is also the secretary for the Tri-County Directors of Volunteer Services and is the Georgia Association of Volunteer Administration Second Vice President.

A paid employee since 1980, her primary employment has been in insurance marketing, administration and claims.

Her background in marketing helps her target the information about community needs to the right people.

While at Fort Benning, Crowley has completed the requirements for a master's degree in psychology of education.

Pat Mednik

Pat Mednik is a new volunteer for Fort Benning Girl Scouts who has proved to be a most valuable asset.

She is the area coordinator for Custer Terrace housing area, responsible for recruiting leaders and girls into the program.

She was also the assistant Service Unit Cookie manager for the annual Girl Scout cookie sale in February.

Despite being a novice to the program, Mednik accepted the task of chairwoman of the committee for this year's annual Flag Ceremony in front of Infantry Hall.

Sherrie Cooper

Sherrie Cooper has donated many hours organizing and running the Blood Drive Program at the American Red Cross.

She leads a committee that previously had no leadership or organization and set up a smooth running program for a successful blood drive.

She also served as the vice president of MEDDAC/DENTAC Auxiliary from 1988-1989 and as president of that organization from 1989-1990.

As an involved mother, Cooper has spent countless hours during the last two years with Youth Activities as a team mother for football and cheerleading teams.

Mary Miller

Mary Miller is a charter member of the First Steps Program.

She has readily lent her experience and support to helping develop and tailor the design of the First Steps outreach program to meet the ever-increasing needs of risk families at Fort Benning.

As a volunteer, Miller has taken whatever time was needed to meet the needs of her clients — often using her own resources, above and beyond those available through the program's networking.

Paula Smith

Paula Smith is recognized for her leadership and direction of the National Infantry Museum volunteers.

She has volunteered more than 300 hours of devoted service to the museum and its patrons.

Through her efforts, a new training guide is being developed.

Many guided tours of the museum and grounds have been conducted by Smith.

She has also volunteered to assist in the Regimental Quartermaster Sales Store, a new enterprise of the museum.

To prepare for her position, she spent many hours studying information related to the history of Fort Benning and the Infantry.

Ann Marie Warman

In the media center, one measure of success is the number of books being checked out by teachers and students.

That success creates piles of cards to be filed and books to be shelved.

Ann Marie Warman is one of many volunteers who has worked in the media center, and with 151 hours has become proficient at helping children find books, accurately returning books to the shelves and performing many other tasks involved in operating a media center.

Always helpful and friendly, Ann Marie is a major influence in creating a warm, caring environment that makes students anxious to use the media center.

Veretta Mann

Veretta Mann has spent many hours this year as a Loyd School volunteer.

She has been instrumental in a math and reading workshop for parents. She has helped with Teacher Appreciation Week and the Valentine Grams for students. She is also involved with the Memory Book for the school's 30th birthday.

As a Parent-Teacher Association president, she has chaired Santa's Secret Shop and a membership drive/pizza party for students.

Connie Acton

Connie Acton is a valuable asset to the media program at Wilson School.

Some of her duties include shelving media materials, helping individual students or small groups with academic skills and helping students and teachers locate materials in the media center.

Her many hours of volunteer work in the media center have contributed to the success of the media program at Wilson School.

Eileen Reid

During the first six months of the past year, Eileen Reid served as the volunteer leader of Leadership Seminars.

Reid has written a new segment of training on "Customs and Courtesies" and presented it to the Infantry Officer Advanced Course Wives' Leadership Seminar.

She has given the facilitator/trainers further training and is a master chart maker volunteering many hours to keep the charts new and updated.

Reid has served this year as the secretary of Santa's Castle and also helped with fund-raising for the Booster Club at Spencer High School.

Edwina Redfoot

Edwina Redfoot has taught Sunday School and Vacation Bible School for 25 years at the Religious Education Center at Fort Benning.

Redfoot has the ability to make classes interesting for the third-graders she teaches, a fact attested to by the good attendance records of her class and the size of the class throughout the years.

Being the wife of a retired officer and living more than 20 miles from Fort Benning is testimony to her dedication. She is always present, on time and prepared for class.

Sunny Buljung

Sunny Buljung has contributed many hours of service to the Catholic Religious Education Program.

Since 1981, Sunny has served as a teacher and as registrar for the Sunday School program.

Her sense of duty and responsibility coupled with her gift of understanding and warmth have contributed to the Catholic program at Fort Benning.

Helen Walnes

Helen Walnes has been a volunteer budget counselor for Army Community Service for nine years.

She has devised information for soldiers and training materials for new and experienced volunteers in the program to expand their knowledge to benefit the soldier.

She has served as the chairwoman for the program several times and has provided outstanding leadership for the other volunteer budget counselors and wise counsel to the paid counselors.

Helen carries an active client case load of 20 soldiers most of the time.

Elinor Warren

Elinor Warren has been a mainstay at Army Community Service for many years. Every Monday she busies herself collating, stapling and boxing hundreds of Welcome Packets for units and individuals who are processing into our community.

Warren has contributed to the relocation assistance program enabling many soldiers and their families to adjust to the community easily.

Without her assistance units would not be able to maintain their sponsorship programs, and families could not receive timely information.

Lee Friebaum

Lee Friebaum is a volunteer at Army Community Service. He is a friendly person who is always willing to do whatever he can to help.

Always sporting a smile, he greets everyone, picks up the mail from all the buildings and delivers it.

There is never a job too small or large for Friebaum. He even checks trash cans and takes them out when needed. You don't find many people willing to do that.

Chong Kropik

Within the Directorate of Training and Doctrine, Chong Kropik has made many laudable contributions.

She has single-handedly made all the welcome and farewell gifts for the ladies.

Kropik has worked at the Thrift Shop for nearly eight months and worked in the Volunteer Resource Center office. She also volunteers at Santa's Castle.

Pat Corning

Pat Corning is the mother of two girls, Michelle and Annie, and in spite of the demands of a full-time job as a secretary, she often helps with the Fort Benning Girl Scouts.

Corning has worked with the Girl Scouts for the past six years. She began as a daisy leader for her daughter's troop. She is lauded for her creative ideas for International Thinking Day programs each year.

Currently, she is serving the Girl Scouts as treasurer.

Inge Wills

Inge Wills has been the Day Camp director for the Chattahoochee Council for more than 14 years.

The Chattahoochee Council serves Cub Scout and Boy Scout Packs in 15 counties.

In 1989, Wills started and organized the Cub Scouts Day Camp here. There were more than 90 children attending with more than 20 adult volunteers.

For more than 18 years, Wills has worked with the Cub Scout Route Table Workshop, which provides program ideas for leaders in the program.

For 15 years, she has been the Cub Scout training chairwoman.

She is a member of the Fort Benning District Council and the Cub Scout Master for Pack 54.

Concerned citizens donate time to Girl Scout program

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

Girl Scout programs offer an informal education program that helps children to develop values, learn to relate to others, reach their self potential and become contributing members of society.

The Girl Scout programs offer girls a chance to explore their environment in a small troop atmosphere to ensure that each girl has the opportunity to be heard and participate in the governing process of the troop.

Troops are formed around special interests, according to housing areas or to meet the needs of parents and children.

Additionally, the program offers a variety of challenges and the opportunity to experience friendships, rewards, and growth.

The program focuses on girl/adult planning to foster a sense of responsibility and self-reliance for the girls.

Much of the program's success is owed to the adult volunteers who act as troop leaders and service team members.

Many more volunteers are needed to work as troop leaders and assistant leaders. Many positions are opening in the service team, as well.

Service team members work with other adults as consultants, organizers or on special program committees.

Training is provided for those who are new to the program or want a refresher course.

For more information or to volunteer, call the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts at 327-2646.

Scouting offers opportunity to show genuine concern

Boy Scouts of America

One of the most popular volunteer activities at Fort Benning is scouting, making up 15 percent of the volunteer force here.

What better place to show a genuine concern for children than in the scouting programs.

The Cub and Boy Scout programs combine troop activity and parental involvement to encourage boys to complete the achievements for each level.

Focusing on skills development, the program offers challenges and learning opportunities to prepare the boys to be resourceful adults and good citizens.

Like the Girl Scout program, Cub and Boy Scouts depend on volunteers to run the program.

There are many positions available and Boy Scouts offer training for those who are interested.

For more information about registering your child or to volunteer, call the district office at 327-2634.

smaller, trained and ready.

"Decisions we make today will mold the Army of the future," he said.

His plan for shaping that Army of the future is embodied in what he calls the six fundamental imperatives.

- Effective and flexible war fighting doctrine.
- Right mix of force.
- Modernize force.
- Training.
- Competent and confident leadership.
- Maintain our quality force.

The Army's chief of staff said training is "the top priority."

"I cannot overstate the importance of training," he said. He stressed the importance of Field Manual 25-100 and the combat training centers. Vuono said he believes "Quality training is a result of quality leaders."

With regard to leadership, the chief of staff said he places great importance on self development.

"We must take command of our future if we are to maintain an effective fighting force," he said.

"We won't accept an Army ill equipped or ill trained. "The key is continuity."

Just about anyone can be a volunteer

By Wanda Campbell
Volunteer Resource Center

Who is a volunteer? Everyone is a volunteer.

Before you say you're are not a volunteer, consider this. Not all volunteer service is given to agencies or special causes.

If you have helped someone lost in the parking lot find their car, stopped to help fix a flat tire or watched a neighbor's child while they picked up another child at school, then you were a volunteer?

No one considers all the service he gives to the community. After all, these things are just being neighborly.

According to the July 10, 1989 issue of Newsweek magazine, about 80 million adults gave about 19.5 billion hours in 1987, at a value of about $150 billion.

These people come from every neighborhood and all walks of life.

Today working women are more likely to volunteer than housewives. Men are also volunteering in large numbers.

At Fort Benning, the highest percentage of volunteers are retired military (19.6 percent) with active duty representing 11.3 percent.

Spouses of active duty soldiers, noncommissioned and commissioned officers, break down evenly with 29.9 percent each.

Young people are also involved in community activities representing 9.3 percent of the volunteer force.

Where is everyone working?

Scouting has the highest percentage of volunteers (15 percent) with wives clubs and school systems following with 14 percent each.

Although retirees represent the highest number of volunteers, the Retiree Council has only nine percent of the volunteers.

Youth Services, Religious Education Services, Army Community Service and Santa's Castle have about seven percent each.

It takes very little to make a large contribution.

The largest group of volunteers will give between one and five hours each month.

Those working between six and 10 hours each month represent 23 percent of the volunteer force.

Twenty-two percent will work 11 to 20 hours each month, while 13 percent will work 21 to 40 hours a month.

The smallest group of volunteers will work more than 40 hours a month.

Why do people volunteer?

According to a survey conducted by the Gallup organization in 1988, people volunteer to do something useful and because they like the work they do for volunteer agencies.

"I think volunteering makes you feel good," said Karen Crowley, coordinator for the Volunteer Resource Center.

Everyday is Christmas at Santa's Castle

Santa's Castle

Santa's Castle is a private, nonprofit organization created in 1986 to provide toys for military children at Christmas.

Toys are donated year round at the Main Post Exchange box or at Santa's Castle in Soldiers' Plaza (building 2639).

Volunteers repair donated toys from mid-January through Christmas Eve.

According to Janet Gibson, director of Santa's Castle, five toys were provided for each of the 697 children who used the service last year.

There are a variety of volunteer jobs available, and volunteers are always needed.

Volunteers sort, wash, clean and repair the toys. There are even some jobs that can be taken home.

Coffee and church groups are welcome.

Funding for Santa's Castle is provided through group or private donations and fund raisers held throughout the year.

Donations of cleaning and sewing supplies, yarn and felt are always needed and accepted.

Mayors enhance quality of life here

By Dixie Hawkinson
Community Mayor

To enhance the living environment and to improve the quality of life of soldiers and their families living on a military post, the Department of the Army authorized the Director of Community Activities to establish a Community Life Program.

Regional housing areas were identified as communities, and a mayor is elected each year to represent each of these communities.

A Community Life mayor, a military family member, is elected by the community residents for a term of one year and serves as the local voice for the Community Life Program. All community mayors are volunteers.

Each mayor assists in developing, managing and providing access to programs and services that will respond to the neighborhood needs. Mayors are the spokespersons for their communities at both sub-council and council advisory meetings.

Mayors offer information and programs to improve the communication between helping agencies and the families living in the community.

The role of mayor includes projects, issues and concerns affecting the overall community such as street cleaning, street light repairs and playground repairs.

The mayor ensures ideas, issues and concerns voiced in town meetings are brought to the attention of the proper resource.

Mayors provide information to the command staff for decisions that will directly impact on their community.

Just last week, new mayors were elected by residents. They will be announced soon.

Red Cross: neighbor helping neighbor

American Red Cross

The American Red Cross is a symbol of neighbor helping neighbor in times of trouble or emergency and of service to those who need a helping hand.

The organization was founded in 1881 and chartered by congress in 1905. It is a voluntary, civilian agency, governed by volunteers.

American Red Cross

Services provided to soldiers and their families include financial assistance in certain emergency situations, emergency notification in cases of family illnesses and many training courses.

Some of these courses are first aid, swimming, safety and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Standard First Aid classes will be Tuesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

A Blood Pressure Class will be offered May 2 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

A CPR Instructor Course will be offered May 1 and 3 from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Many adults and young people serve as Red Cross volunteers.

These volunteers are trained by the Red Cross and work in many areas of the hospital, veterinary clinic and at the Main Post Library.

There are several openings for volunteers on the Volunteer Board.

The Summer Youth Program is currently taking applications for teens interested in working this summer.

Applications are available at the Red Cross office on Vibbert Avenue and must be turned in by April 27.

Applicants must be 13 years old and in seventh grade to apply.

For more information or to sign up for classes, call 545-5194.

Social clubs provide community services

Community service is foundation for the five social clubs here.

Many of Fort Benning's volunteers belong to one of these organizations.

Daughters of the U.S. Army sponsor Tot Town Child Development Center; a drop-in child care service.

The organization, whose members are all daughters of career officers and warrant officers, was formed to help these officers' children to keep in touch.

The International Wives' Club helps foreign-born wives make the transition from their own culture to the unique American culture.

The club sponsors English as a Second Language and Citizenship classes.

MEDDAC/DENTAC Auxiliary sponsors projects for Martin Army Community Hospital.

Recently the auxiliary helped set up two terminal care rooms.

The NCO Wives' Club is open to enlisted wives and sponsors several activities for its members.

They are currently reorganizing and will have membership drives soon. For information, call 545-1833.

The Officers' Wives Club sponsors the Thrift Shop and a scholarship program for children of active duty members.

They sponsor the Fine Arts Assembly Series, which provides performances by local musicians for post schools. For information, call 687-3537.

Preschool offers creative activities

Patch Preschool

Patch Preschool, officially known as the Fort Benning Early Childhood Development Center, is the place for young children to do all the things children like to do.

Opened in the late 1960s, the school is a nonprofit developmental preschool for 3- and 4-year-olds.

It is open Monday through Friday mornings and Tuesday through Thursday afternoons.

The school is so popular, there is a waiting list for most classes.

The teachers usually remain at the school until they move away from the area, and children stay until they are eligible for kindergarten. Parents say they like the fact that all of the teachers have a degree in Early Childhood Education.

The school sponsors field trips to farms, libraries, fire stations and museums.

It also has programs with special guests such as the postman, Army Band and hospital pediatrician.

The curriculum has five developmental areas — intellectual, language, social, emotional and motor skills.

The parent information booklet explains that the program for 3-year-olds focuses on good social and emotional growth.

Experiences offered that allow the children to take that first step away from home comfortably.

The program for 4-year-olds focuses on the development of good self image and finding acceptable outlets for emotions.

They participate in stimulating experiences that encourage them to think and analyze problems and arrive at solutions.

The 4-year-olds are exposed to very basic math, reading readiness and language development.

The school is governed by a board of directors made up of parent volunteers who usually stay in office for the school year.

The board is the decision-making body of the school.

The director, Gay Hitchcock, is responsible for the day to day running of the school.

There are nine programs with 180 children enrolled, according to Hitchcock.

Each classroom includes a teacher and teacher's aide for about 20 children.

The school is located in building 7 on the corner of Baltzell Street and Lumpkin Road.

For more information about the school, call 687-2404.

Registration day for the 1990-1991 school year is June 4 at 7:30 a.m.

Patch Preschool is open to qualified children of all active or retired military and civilian personnel working at Fort Benning.

Children must reach the class age on or before Sept. 1 of the school year. Theymust be toilet trained and have a birth certificate and current shot records.

Families must be registered at Central Registration.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital has a group of volunteers who augment the staff by acting as receptionists and appointment clerks and doing whatever is needed to assist patients.

In addition to MACH's invaluable American Red Cross Volunteers, there is a special group of retirees and their family members who have joined the Adopt-a-Clinic Program.

The Adopt-a-Clinic Program was started in September 1988 by the Retiree Council.

There are about 20 volunteers who work in the Internal Medicine Clinic, Cardiology, Gastroenterology and the Outpatient Clinic.

Some of these volunteers are also members of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program.

There are four married couples who work as teams and one woman, Senette Turner, who comes from Plains, Ga., to work in the Internal Medicine Clinic.

Retired Lt. Col. Clare Carson, the Adopt-a-Clinic coordinator, said that Mary Mills, who works in the Outpatient Clinic, has volunteered more hours than any other Adopt-a-Clinic volunteer and is willing to come in whenever needed.

MACH has about 100 American Red Cross volunteers who have been working for many years; Mary Morgan has given 26 years to the Outpatient Clinic and Inez Williams has volunteered there for 17 years.

The MEDDAC Volunteer of the Quarter, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Calvin Morse, gives three days a week to the Recovery Room and is willing to come in whenever he can be of assistance.

He talks to family members of patients in the operating room and, if he has time, will go to any other areas where he's needed.

Samuel McGarvey works in the Outpatient Clinic and, according to receptionist Cindy Sepulveda, acts as a courier between the main hospital and the clinic, when needed.

The staff of the Outpatient Clinic is having a cookout for their volunteers Saturday to recognize them during this special week.

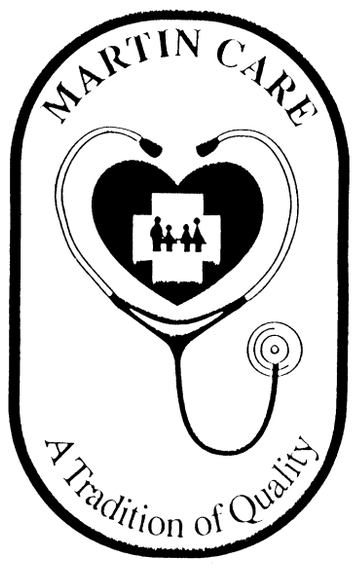
David DeLeon, American Red Cross, MACH, said there are so many great volunteers that it's hard to imagine trying to get along without them.

He cited Jan Weatherlow, who spends two days a week taking books, magazines and writing supplies to patients who cannot get around and escorting those who can get around with assistance.

DeLeon said patients ask for Weatherlow if she misses them or takes a day off.

With the hiring freeze and budget constraints and with everyone feeling that there is never enough time to accomplish what needs to be done, the volunteers' gift of time and caring for others is invaluable to the patients and staff of MACH.

If you would like to volunteer, please call the American Red Cross at 545-5194 or Lt. Col. Clare Carson, Adopt-a-Clinic coordinator at 689-8966.



ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I'm about to purchase a used car.

The salesman tells me that I'm getting a good price, but I'm not too sure.

How can I tell if the price is too high?

A. It is not always easy to know what is a fair price for a used car.

Most used car dealers have their prices raised higher then the true value of the car.

This is especially true near military installations where dealers often pressure young soldiers, who are inexperienced and have new paychecks, into buying used cars that are greatly over-priced and not in good mechanical condition.

When you go to purchase a used car don't let the dealer pressure you into a quick sale.

Be careful. Remember, everyone likes to believe he can "handle" a car dealer, but the dealers know all the tricks of the trade and use them all year.

After you find a car you think you might want, check it out for mechanical soundness.

Extensively test drive it, take a mechanic friend with you or arrange to have a reputable mechanic check it out.

If the dealer is unwilling or reluctant to allow you to have the car checked out, walk away from the deal.

All honest dealers will let a mechanic check the car.

The Legal Assistance Office has handouts on what mechanical areas to look for when buying a used car.

After you are satisfied as to the car's condition, you need to talk about the price.

Remember, the price the dealer is asking for the car means nothing.

This is only the price he wants you to pay, not necessarily the value of the car.

Don't begin bargaining by talking about trade-ins, financing or any other financial arrangements.

Instead, concentrate only on the price of the car. Most dealers are every good at confusing, or hiding, the true cost of the car if you talk about the payment arrangements.

There are several ways to find out the true value of the car. First, check out the local ads on used cars, including the private owner sales.

This will give you an idea on what the community is asking for cars of like age and style.

Also check out the "NADA Official Used Car Guide," the "Red Book," or "Blue Book."

These guides are published monthly and provide retail and wholesale prices for cars based upon the type of car, style, options and mileage.

These books are hard to find, but most libraries, banks and insurance and claims offices have them and will let you look at them.

If you can't find any of these books then "Consumer Reports" has a new service called the "Consumer Reports Used Car Price Service."

This service is a phone service that will quote "up-to-the-minute prices on all vehicles built since 1982.

The number is 900-258-2886, and you will be chared $1.50 a minute.

It is estimated that the total cost will be no more than $7.50 per call.

You must have a touch tone phone and be prepared to answer questions about the model, year, mileage, major options and approximate condition of the car.

The service will then give you an average value for the car based upon the above conditions, reliability of the car and region where the car is being sold.

The service will also tell you their "trouble index" or maintenance rating of the car.

To fully compete with the used car dealers, you must have good information.

The dealer will undoubtedly tell you that the price information you discovered means nothing, but he is wrong.

All banks, insurance companies and automobile dealers use these books everyday.

The dealers just don't want you to see them, as information is power when it comes to negotiating a good deal.

Once you have settled on a price then talk about any trade-ins or payment arrangements.

Remember, check the car out fully, know that most cars don't have a warranty, there is no "Lemon Law" for used cars in Alabama or Georgia, don't buy any insurance (credit, life or car) from the dealer, get everything and every promise in writing, and know what the true value of the car is before you settle on a deal.

If you have any questions call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Want to cut down on air-conditioning use and energy costs this summer and at the same time improve the appearance of your home?

It can be done simply by following a Georgia tradition of installing a ceiling fan.

Placed in bedrooms, dens or any family gathering room, such fans are becoming increasingly popular with many energy- andcost-conscious Georgians.

How much energy you save using a ceiling fan depends on where you set your thermostat, whether your home is properly insulated and the kind of fan you select.

Fans in some homes, have been reported to save as much as six and one-half times the energy they use by noticeably reducing the energy needed for cooling.

Raising the thermostat setting by five degrees reduces the energy it takes to cool your home by as much as 35 percent.

At the same time, a 56-inch efficiency fan uses the same amount of electricity as a 75-watt light bulb, far less than an air conditioner.

You should realize as you consider the purchase of a fan, that it will not reduce the temperature in your home.

It will, however, make your family feel more comfortable, because a slight breeze on the skin speeds evaporation of moisture from the body, making you feel cooler.

Fans can also help reduce heating bills in the winter by circulating warm air that tends to gather at the ceiling.

Wooden fans are the best for indoors, and metal fans do well outdoors.

Purchase a fan that will be large enough to fit the room it's intended for, and insist that it operate quietly.

Select a fan simple in design and attractive. A ceiling fan is an eye-catching addition to a home's interior and a long-term investment that will be in your home for years.

Finally, when buying a fan, install it properly. Normally, this is easily done by removing a light fixture and attaching the fan to a ceiling joist or rafter.

You may restore lighting to the area where the fan is installed by purchasing one with an optional light fixture.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Branch at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Consumers have the right to expect quality

Army Community Service

Consumers have the right to expect quality products and services at fair prices.

If something goes wrong, there are ways to resolve the problems.

Here are some suggestions for handling complaints:

Start a file about the complaint.

Include copies of sales receipts, repair orders, warranties, canceled checks and contracts, which will back up complaints and help the company resolve the problem.

Go back to where you made the purchase: Contact the person who sold you the item or performed the service.

Allow each person time to resolve the problem before contacting someone else for help.

Keep a record of contacts made, and keep notes on the name and number of each person you asked for help. Tell what was done about the problem.

Save copies of any letters sent to the company, as well as letters sent to you.

Don't give up: If still unsatisfied with the response at the local level, don't give up.

Call or write a letter to the person responsible for consumer complaints at the company's headquarters. Many companies have toll-free telephone numbers.

Better Business Bureau: Currently, there are about 180 Better Business Bureaus in the United States.

These bureaus are nonprofit organizations, sponsored by private and local businesses.

They offer a variety of services, including general information on products or services, reliability reports, background information on local businesses and organizations and records of a company's complaint handling performance.

Many of the BBBs accept written complaints and will contact a firm on your behalf.

BBBs do not judge or rate individual products or brands, handle complaints concerning the prices of goods or services or give legal advice.

The local bureau is located at 8 - 13th St., Columbus, Ga.

The Consumer Affairs Financial Assistance Program of ACS is another point of contact regarding consumer complaints and resolution. (Information is also available through Legal Assistance Office.)

ACS has resource information available on consumers' rights, protection laws and complaint resolution, which allows soldiers and family members to make educated decisions.

ACS will assist clients in drafting consumer complaint letters and contacting agencies or businesses in reference to consumer issues.

For more consumer information and assistance, please contact ACS at 545-5516/7517.

Annual percentage rate is key to comparing credit cost

Army Community Service

Why does it take so long to pay off your credit card balances?

Credit costs vary. However, you can compare credit prices from different sources.

Under the Truth in Lending Act, creditors must tell you — in writing, before you sign any agreement — the finance charge and annual percentage rate.

The finance charge is the dollar amount you pay to use credit, including interest costs and other costs, such as service charges, some credit-related insurance premiums or appraisal fees.

For example, borrowing $100 for a year might cost you $10 in interest.

If there was also a service charge of $1, the finance charge would be $11.

The annual percentage rate is the percentage cost (or relative cost) of credit on a yearly basis.

This is your key to comparing costs, regardless of the amount of credit or how long you have to repay it.

Suppose you have a $1,000 balance on your credit card. The minimum amount due is $35.

Naturally, if you send in the $35 payment, you would think that your new balance would be $965.

However, consider the interest charges. Most credit cards charge an annual interest rate of 18 percent. That's 1.5 percent monthly (18 percent/12 months).

Interest is charged each month on the unpaid balance — not on the amount you send in.

If you owe $1,000 at 1.5 percent for the month, the interest is $15. Subtract $15 from the $35 payment, and you've only paid off $20 on the $1,000 debt.

Check the rate on your monthly statements and know what you're paying in interest.

For more information, contact the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program at Army Community Service, 545-5516/7517.

Have you been getting magical paychecks?

Army Community Service

Many people have magical paychecks.

Payday rolls around, and "poof" the check is gone.

If you have been getting these magical checks lately, you may need to take a good look at your financial picture.

Here are some suggestions that may help to keep your income from disappearing:

- Seek advice (from financial counselors, consumer and financial magazines)
- Exercise discipline (limit the use of credit cards; don't be a compulsive shopper)
- Needs versus wants (know the difference)
- Budget (set up a spending plan; know your limits)
- Keep receipts
- Shop around
- Savings (pay yourself first — 10 percent of net income)

For advice and how to set up a budget, contact Army Community Service, building 2640, 545-5516/7517.

VA participates in Consumer Week, April 22-28

Department of Veterans Affairs

Benefits and medical facilities of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs will participate in the ninth annual observance of National Consumers Week, April 22 to 28.

VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski said "This is an excellent opportunity, as well as a challenge, to rededicate ourselves to our mission of ensuring that America's veterans receive the best possible service."

In proclaiming National Consumers Week, President Bush urged businesses, educators, community organizations, the media, government and consumer leaders to conduct activities to highlight the importance of education in helping citizens to become responsible consumers. The national theme of this year's observance is "New Consumer Horizons."

In response to the President's words Secretary Derwinski added, "By serving their country, veterans have earned the wide range of benefits provided by VA. As consumers, they deserve prompt and courteous delivery of those benefits. I am urging all VA facilities to conduct special activities in support of this week-long event."

One man's promise to his dying uncle gave him the courage and motivation to carry on a family tradition.

Pfc. Michael "Shayne" Griffaw, a medic with the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., completed Ranger School here April 10, as did his uncle and three brothers years before.

Now, his mother said, the circle is complete.

The tradition began when the brothers' uncle, Maj. Denny R. Vaughan, received his tab in 1955.

He served two tours in Vietnam, earning many awards including the nation's second highest award, The Distinguished Service Cross.

After a brief illness, Vaughan died last summer.

According to Adrienne "Joy" Griffaw, Shayne's mother, even as Vaughan lay dying, he knew of Shayne's goal and that he was awaiting a slot in Ranger School.

Because Shayne was the youngest and last to attempt to earn the Ranger Tab, he said he felt a lot of pressure at times.

But he said it was his promise to his uncle that kept him going through the hard times.

According to Joy, it was her sons' love, respect and admiration for her brother that prompted them to follow in his footsteps.

Joy said her brother spoke highly of the Rangers and the Army.

Shayne said it was Vaughan's stories about the Rangers that prompted him to make earning the Ranger Tab his life-time goal.

Even though he was the youngest, Shayne said he was "probably the first one in the family to say, "Hey, I want to be like Uncle Denny and be a Ranger."

"I was about 10 when I decided I wanted to follow in his footsteps," he said.

"A lot of times while I was in Ranger School, I would look up and ask Denny for help," he said.

According to Joy, her brother always encouraged her sons.

Joy said that although Vaughan never literally influenced the brothers to become Rangers, he always encouraged them to do their best.

"Denny was equally proud of them," Joy said. "He followed their Army careers assiduously and availed himself to them as their mentor and confidant."

Shayne's older brothers had the same goal of becoming Rangers.

Twin brothers Guy "Gary" and Terrance "Terry" joined the Army first, earning their Ranger Tabs in August 1980 and October 1980, respectively.

Gary, a sergeant first class, is in Special Forces at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Terry served two enlistments before getting out of the Army.

The third brother Donald, a sergeant, earned his tab in October 1987.

He is a senior medic with 1st Bn, 75th Rgrs., at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga.

According to Joy, the Griffaw family is Army oriented.

Because of her sons' careers, she said their home in Vermilion, Ohio, has been referred to as the "secondary recruitment center for the area.

"In the past, we have been able to help several recruiters with enlistments.

"Because of our sons, it has been our pleasure to speak with many young men about the Army, its programs and benefits.

"If I sound as though I'm waving a flag — I am.

"My husband and I feel we have just cause to be proud of our sons," she said.

Shayne's family, except Gary who was attending a military school, and Terry, who was working, attended his graduation.

Due to a misunderstanding in directions, the family wasn't present during the "tabbing ceremony."

However, a friend of Gary's, Sgt. 1st Class Dan Ishmiel, who was attending the graduation, pinned the tab on Shayne.

Later, the family had a private ceremony of their own, with Shayne's aunt and Denny's widow Shirley pinning on the tab.

"This is for your Uncle Denny. This is what he would have wanted," she said as she pinned the tab on.

According to Shayne, he doesn't want the family tradition to end with him.

He plans on giving his "drive-on tab," to his five-year-old nephew, Tadd, who looks up to Shayne.

A "drive-on tab" is a tab that Rangers keep in their pockets during the school.

Whenever things got rough, Shayne said, he would pull the tab out to remind him of his goal and to "drive-on."

"My next goal is to get my nephew tabbed. I'm going to give my 'drive-on tab' to Tadd's mother to hold for him until he gets older."

Maybe the Griffaw circle isn't complete just yet.

Army wife visits Soviet Georgia in citizen exchange

Columbus College

Glasnost will take on a new meaning for the spouse of a lieutenant here when she arrives in the Soviet Union for a two-week visit as part of Georgia's Friendship Force.

Maggie O'Tera Briley, wife of 2nd Lt. Justin Abram Briley, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, along with Rebecca JoAnn Cartee joined 258 other Georgians Tuesday when they left the United States for a visit to Atlanta's sister city of Tbilisi in the Soviet Republic of Georgia.

Friendship Force, a citizen exchange program between the two Georgia's provides an opportunity for people of both countries to experience the culture and lifestyles of each other.

Jo and Maggie were selected for the program from more than 1,600 applicants. Although they didn't know each other until they were chosen, planning for the trip forged a fast friendship between the two.

Both expressed the same feelings of anticipation, excitement and adventure that one would expect from such a trip.

However, for these two citizen diplomats, expectations of living with the host family and sharing in their everyday activities is what they said would make the trip worthwhile.

Prior to leaving on the trip, Maggie, who is a former pre-nursing student, said, "I just hope they won't act any differently just because we are there. I would like for them to be themselves, and to go about their daily life in their usual way."

"I'm anxious to see how they really live," said Jo, a 1987 graduate of the Columbus College's criminal justice program and a counselor at the Georgia Elks Aidmore Children's Center, a residential school for the treatment and rehabilitation of emotionally and behaviorly disturbed adolescents.

"I've been told some things about their culture, their foods and their habits so we know a little of what to expect.

"I've also been doing a lot of reading so I'm not going there completely unknowing of their culture," she continued. "But, experiencing it firsthand is very different from hearing and reading about it.

"I especially want to see what Georgian teen-agers are like," she said. "I'd like to understand what their problems are, how they deal with them and particularly how they cope with alcoholism, which I understand is a big problem there."

Maggie and Jo cite "understanding" as primary goals for the trip. "I want them to see that we are basically alike — that we share the same common concerns of survival and to understand that we are striving for the same thing — peace — for ourselves and for our children," said Maggie.

While there are strict rules about behavior and about what can be taken in and out of the country, both women are taking many "personal" items as gifts for their Soviet hosts — cigarettes, coffee, sugar, soap, chewing gum, candy, peanut butter, tissues and even toilet paper. While some of these items may be available in Soviet Georgia, people must wait in long lines to purchase them.

The women also plan to leave other tokens of friendship. Since many Soviet Georgians have never seen photographs of themselves, both took "rolls and rolls" of film and an instamatic camera to take "lots of pictures" to leave with them.

They may photograph the people, but they have been warned not to take pictures of airplanes, railroads, government buildings, Soviet troops or anything else of a sensitive nature without first getting permission.

While Soviet Georgia is part of the Soviet Union, the people do not like being called "Russians," and do not speak the Russian language — a fact the women say they wish they had known earlier.

After studying the Russian language for several months, they learned that Soviet Georgians speak their own language so both women immediately set to work learning enough Georgian to communicate with their hosts.

Both are confident they will have little trouble in communicating because many of the host families speak English, but even the prospect of being misunderstood adds to the excitement of the trip.

Maggie summed up her feelings about the trip.

"This excitement will be with me forever — I'm just as excited now as when I first learned I was going, and I think this excitement will stay with me the rest of my life. The prospect of building friendships that will span the ocean and time is very exciting."

B.A.S.S. Club takes state championship

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning B.A.S.S. Club

The Fort Benning B.A.S.S. Club walked away with the team championship in the Georgia B.A.S.S. Chapter annual state championships April 2 and 3 at Lakepoint Marina on Lake Walter F. George.

The Benning team had four out of six members to place in the top 25 in total pounds weighed in.

Each B.A.S.S. Federation Club sends its top six points winners from the preceding angling year to the competition to try for the state championship and a trip to the Southern Division Championship Tournament.

There were 83 teams, consisting of 489 fishermen, participating in this event.

Benning's team weighed in over 50 pounds more than the second-place team. The team weighed in 162.35 pounds for the two-day tournament.

Bob Billman took first place and state championship honors. Billman weighed in the most fish on day one of the tournament. He had a total of 44.30 pounds for the two days.

Otis Carter took second place with a two-day total of 38.20 pounds. He weighed in the most fish for day two of the tournament.

Two other Fort Benning team members, Ben McGuire and Willie Goble, finished in the top 25. McGuire finished ninth with 28.45 pounds and will be the state team alternate, and Goble finished 21st with 23.20 pounds.

Team members will now compete in the Southern Division Tournament in May.

Benning anglers battle high winds, low temps in qualifying tourney

Military Bass Anglers Association

Twenty anglers battled high winds and early morning mid-30-degree temperatures to compete for state and national points in the Fort Benning/Georgia Chapter of the Military Bass Anglers Association's qualifying tournament at West Point April 8.

First place went to George Mendez with 10 pounds, 8 ounces. John Campbell placed second with a catch of 8 pounds, 8 ounces. Third place was awarded to Sam Long with 7 pounds, 15 ounces. Fourth and fifth places went to Don Cohangan and Ken Lee with 7 pounds, 8 ounces and 7 pounds, 6 ounces.

"We're very pleased with the weigh-in results," said Campbell. "We don't fish a lot of our tournaments on West Point Lake, and that coupled with the cold front that moved in on us and the 16" minimum size limit, made us really happy with the results."

The next scheduled tournament will be April 29 on Lake Eufaula at Lake Point.

The next scheduled meeting will be at Western Sizzlin on Victory Drive at 7 p.m. April 26.

"With a recent adjustment to our tournament scheduled, even new members have an equal chance at state and national standings," says Campbell.

"We only take the top three tournament results, with four remaining tournaments on the schedule, everyone is still in open competition," he said.

For more information on MBAA, call Don Kimbrough at 545-1915 or John Campbell at 568-4829.

MBAA was formed in 1975 and is currently the largest military bass fishing association in the world.

Members fish a series of district and state qualifying tournaments earning cash, prizes and national points.

MBAA is also more than tournament bass fishing. MBAA is a group of members at the local level who are willing to teach beginners to fish, to raise funds for local charities, to conduct conservation and ecology programs and to practice conservation of the bass species.

1,700 worship at ITC's Easter services

U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

About 1,700 people participated in the Infantry Training Center's Easter services at the Duck Pond at Sand Hill.

ITC soldiers, civilian employees of the Training Center, their families and members of the Columbus community attended either the Protestant or Catholic services.

Vocalizations from water fowl and other wildlife, along with the tranquil beauty of the Sand Hill park, enhanced the observance.

Bobby Michaels and the Infantry Training Center's Soldiers Choir entertained the congregation with moving musical performances of during the Protestant service.

A highlight of the Protestant service was an Easter message from Chap. (Brig. Gen.) Matthew Zimmerman, Deputy Chief of Chaplains.

Zimmerman is scheduled to become the next Chief of Chaplains.

The theme of his sermon was the victory all Christians share with Christ.

Father Carey Lahrs presided over the Catholic mass that followed.

Reflections Reflections

By Roger C. Welsh
USAIS Chaplain

Scratched on the walls of a cellar in Cologne, Germany, where Jews hid from the Nazis are the words:

I believe in the sun,
even when it is not shining.
I believe in love, even when I don't feel it.
I believe in God, even when He is silent.

The Holocaust was a unique tragedy in human history because it sought by government decree to completely annihilate an entire group of people from the face of the earth.

It was the disastrous 20th Century expression of industrial management, scientific achievement and technological sophistication.

It was not a case of archaic barbarism or medieval torture but the systematic, bureaucratic extermination of 11 million people, including six million Jews, by Adolph Hitler and the Nazis.

Hitler accused the Jews of being responsible for Germany's problems.

He also discriminated against Gypsies, Slavs, political dissidents, handicapped, mentally ill, homosexuals and anyone else he deemed as "part of the problem."

Some of his grand twisted vision was for a racially purified Germany.

Lewis Weinstein, a lieutenant colonel and chief of the Liaison Section of General Eisenhower's staff in April 1945, wrote in his journal after viewing the corpses of the victims at the camp of Ohrdruf:

"I saw Eisenhower go to the opposite end of the road and vomit.

"From a distance, I saw Patton bend over, holding his head with one hand and his abdomen with the other. And I soon became ill."

It is difficult to understand the climate of morality that would allow this type of human brutality and violence to occur.

The reason we remember these vivid painful memories is to ensure that the torture, humiliation and killing of innocent human beings will never . . . never be repeated again.

The potential abuse of governmented power was discussed by both East and West Germany during their planning process for unification on July 1, 1990.

The mood of these countries and of the world in general is to embrace the precious values of democracy, equality, individual freedom and peace.

The Nazis used words like duty, discipline, sacrifice, unity and order to control the people.

The experience of the Holocaust has taught them and us to be wary of charismatic leaders who try to justify an evil means for the accomplishment of a "noble" goal.

This is why George Bush has stated:

"Our challenge today is to insist that time will not become the Nazis' friend, that time will not fade our sense of specificity, the uniqueness of the Holocaust, that time will not lead us to make the Holocaust into an abstraction.

"Our challenge today is to remember the Holocaust, for if we remember we will, as our soldiers did, look its evil in the face . . . For memory is our duty to the past, and memory is our duty to the future."

In Honduras
43rd Engineers combat poverty

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, aren't in combat, but they're fighting a war just the same.

These troops are presently in Honduras, South America, for Joint Task Force Bravo.

While the threat of attack against the soldiers exists, the war they're waging is for the poverty stricken Hondurans.

The unit is in Juticulpa, Honduras, a city 18-miles from the Nicaraguan border.

Base camped on the outskirts of the city, the 70-man unit is more than 150 miles away from Soto Cano Air Base, from where the majority of its logistical support comes.

Prior to leaving for the base camp, the unit spent a week at the air base, unloading equipment, repacking it for the convoy to the site, and adjusting to the climate.

Included in that week was a series of briefings, ranging from safety and security, preventive medicine, rules of engagement and an overview of Joint Task Force Bravo by Commander Col. James D. Hallums.

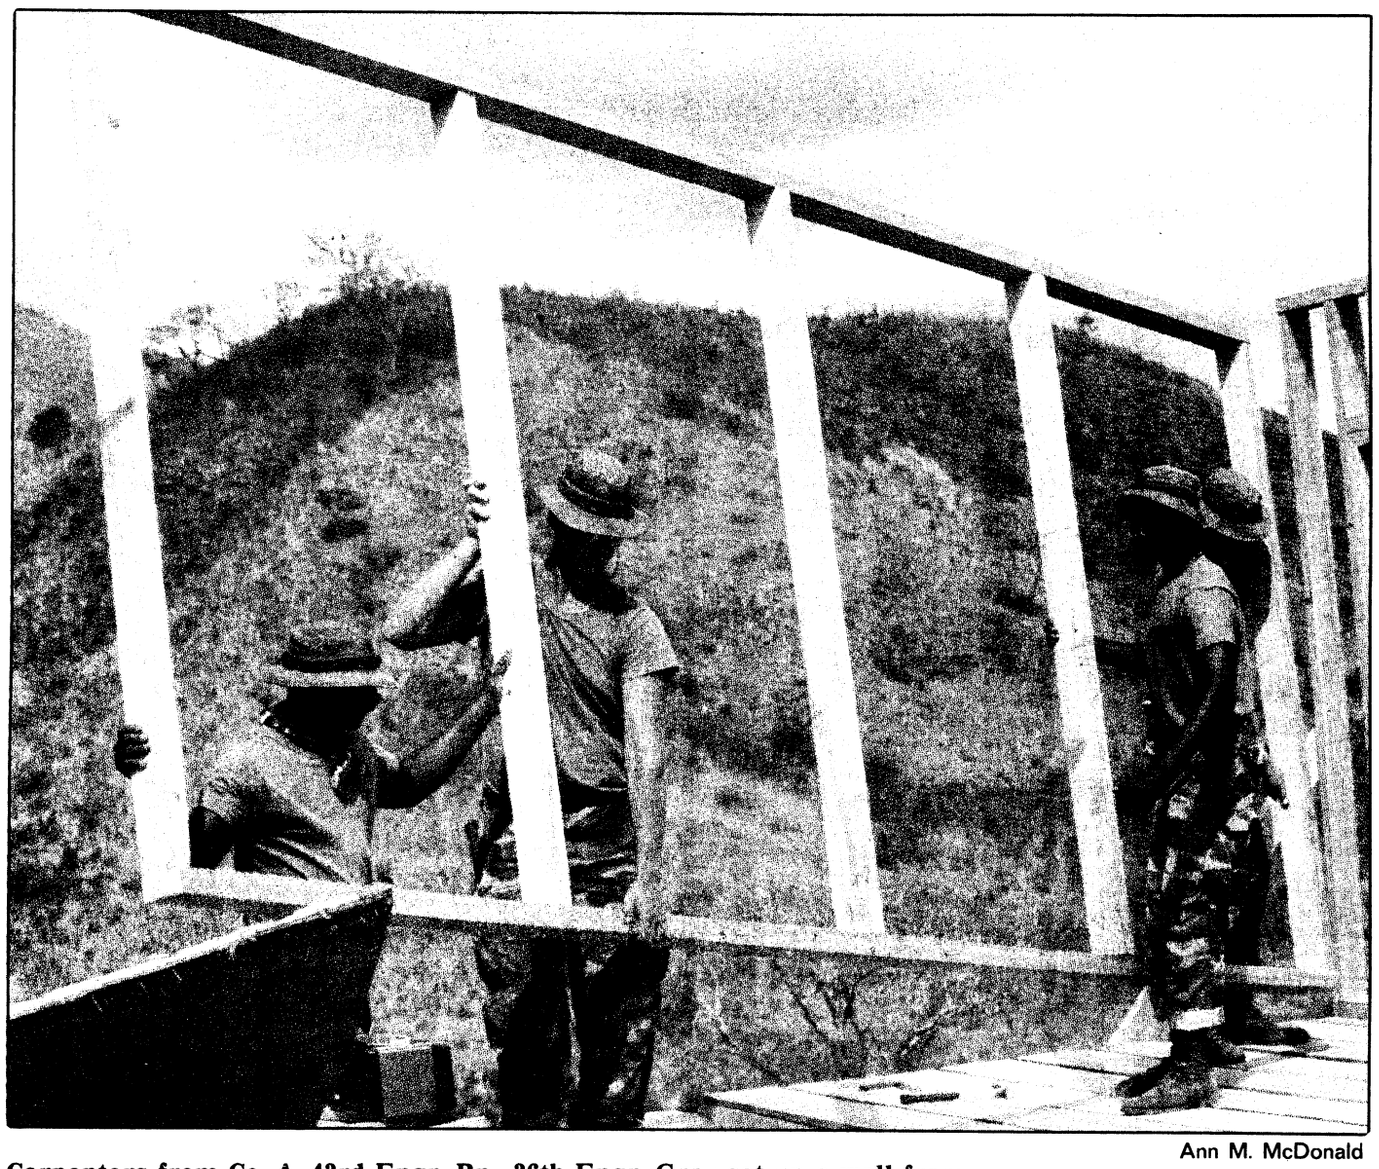
Although the unit was attentive during all the briefings, the rules of engagement really made them stand up and take notice.

The day the last crew arrived from Fort Benning, a bus load of Air Force personnel was fired upon, and eight men were wounded.

Since they would be convoying through the same area, many questions were raised.

The unit's commander, Capt. David Smisek, and 1st. Sgt. Gregory Helphinstine answered questions, making sure the soldiers understood what to do in case of attack.

Hallums described the three-fold mission of Joint Task Force Bravo and how the engineers fit into the picture.



Ann M. McDonald
Carpenters from Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp., set up a wall frame.

"You're part of a nation-building mission," he told the troops.

"Notice," he continued, "that these are people-oriented projects such as schools and classrooms."

He explained to the soldiers why they would be working with the Honduran military and civilians.

29th Inf. hosts Army leaders

By Robert Feliu
29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment hosted several awards ceremonies during the 1990 Infantry Conference, to include the Maintenance Excellence Awards and the All-Army Wrestling Team.

The 1st and 2nd battalions of the 29th accepted Maintenance Excellence awards from Commander of Training and Doctrine Command Gen. John Foss April 11.

1st Battalion won the award for Maintenance Excellence for All-Army Training Units in the "heavy" category while 2nd Battalion won the award in the "intermediate" category.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono visited 1st Battalion to present the Maintenance Excellence Award April 12.

This particular award was noteworthy to 1st Battalion because this is the second year in a row the unit won.

To qualify, units must submit a unit maintenance profile and undergo a stringent inspection.

After winning the post title, 1st Battalion went on to win the TRADOC and Department of the Army level competitions.

Capt. Ricky Finch, 1st Battalion maintenance officer, described this award as the "Gold Medal of Excellence" and that the men were "tickled to death" that the Army Chief of Staff would present the award to them.

"There aren't too many soldiers who get the Chief of Staff of the Army to visit them," Finch said.

Finch was supported in his maintenance efforts by Sgt. 1st Class George Cruz, noncommissioned officer in charge, and Sam Harvel, maintenance foreman.

Vuono said, "The standards for this award are high. But high standards are a true reflection that this unit, the Pioneer Battalion, has a high rate of combat readiness."

Next Vuono was introduced to the 1990 All-Army Wrestlers.

Led and trained by Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Thomas, the 21-man unit had just returned from the 1990 All-Inter-Service Championships at Quantico, Va., where the Army team defeated the Air Force, Marine Crops and Navy teams.

This victory by the Army team broke a 12-year domination of the championship by the Marine Corps.

The Army team won six gold, nine silver and eight bronze medals for 23 out of 60 medals possible.

Fort Benning soldiers who won are:

Spec. Darryl Waldrop, two gold medals.

Pfc. Pete Gomez, one gold and one silver.

Spec. Rodney Smith, one gold and one bronze.

Lt. Jerry Jackson, one silver and one bronze.

The team members who placed high at this championship will revisit Quantico to compete in the World Military Championships later this year.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What is the most unique part of your mission in Honduras?

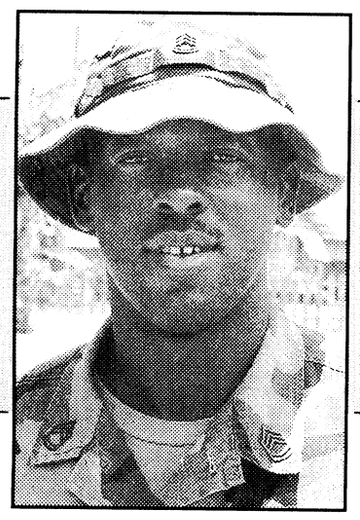
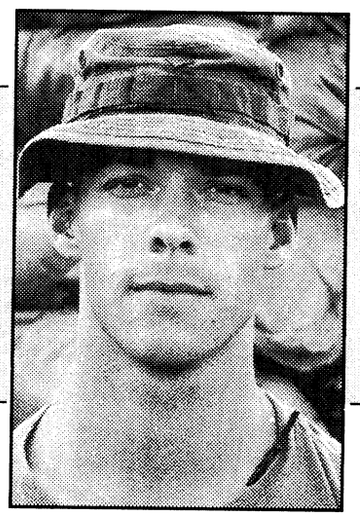
Spec. James Burke, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "I think the surroundings are the most unique part of the mission. I've never been this far south before. The people, the land, it's all so different."

Spec. Glen Poland, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "There are many things that are unique about this mission. We're in a foreign country in a combat environment with a high threat level. It has made me understand why I have been put through so much training."

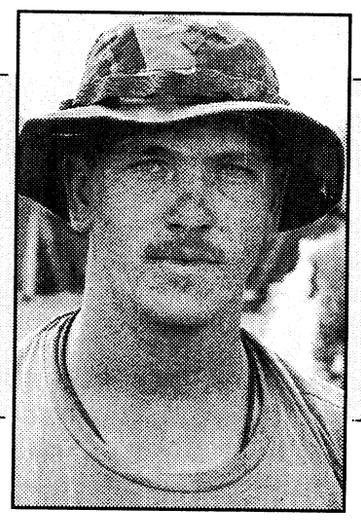


Sgt. 1st Class Marcus Clay, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "The mission is unique because each of these soldiers is doing exactly what he's been trained to do."



Spec. Mark Baldwin, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "The most unique part of this mission is the entire company is working together to complete the mission. At Fort Benning, we're usually divided up doing different missions. Here we're a team."

Pfc. Lorimae Pappel, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "There are a lot of things that are unique about this mission — this country and the people for one thing. The people are so poor. They need so much. I wish we could do more for them."



Spec. Mark Dettwiller, Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "The mission is unique because we're using live rounds. We've done deployments like this before, but we've never been anywhere security has been so tight."

Total Quality Management; 'Do it right the first time'

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Total Quality Management," —that's spelled "Do it right the first time."

What a great concept. It makes so much sense.

I recall many times I've been too busy to write a story properly, check on the spelling of names, look up various facts or conduct a thorough interview, so I've just kind of made a general stab at the article and turned it in.

The next thing I know, I'm being told to do it again.

And guess what, I find time to do it again. Yet if I'd done it right the first time, like I did the second time, I would have saved myself a lot of time.

All this never occurred to me until I sat in on Col. Edward Hubbard's talk in Marshall Auditorium last week.

I used to merely grumble to my co-workers about how over-worked I am.

But Hubbard, a safety officer at Eglin Air Force Base and former prisoner of war, who had a lot of time to contemplate life, helped open my eyes to things that are really important — such as pride in one's work.

It was like the second coming. I was ready to hit the old key board and turn in articles with no misspellings or commas out of place.

I wanted to go out and interview people and write them up like they'd never been written up before.

I was still in this state of euphoria when I picked up my car from the garage that afternoon.

In fact, I was feeling so good that I only "tsk, tsked" them lightly when I found they'd only replaced a hose and hadn't changed the oil.

Instead I just bought a quart of oil for my trip to Florida.

Wasn't I surprised when I got home and the engine coolant formed a puddle at my feet because they hadn't put the hose on tight enough.

Not only had they failed to tighten it properly, but they also left the breather hose lying lose across the engine.

"Not what I'd call TQM," I thought to myself as I tightened the hose clamp and replaced the coolant with water.

That night we joined some friends for dinner at a new restaurant in town.

Our waitress, while nice enough, couldn't seem to get the orders straight and half the items on the menu seemed to have come from another restaurant as the waitress came back to explain her restaurant didn't prepare food a certain way even if the menu said they did.

One of my fellow Hubbard watchers, who obviously took what the colonel said to heart and who learned to stand up for TQM as a customer, sent her order back because her meat wasn't cooked enough.

Her alternative, would have been to keep it, eat it, and grumble about it the rest of the evening. Something I probably would have done.

One thing I noticed about this restaurant was the number of managers going about apologizing for mixed up orders and slow service.

If they'd put their efforts into training their people to do it right the first time and spent their energy supervising the preparation of the food, they would save themselves time and money and have happier customers who'd want to return and tell their friends about it.

Those deep thoughts got me to thinking about business and industry in general.

Here we are worrying about keeping up with the Germans and the Japanese.

We crank out all these nice, shiny, new products, then go around apologizing when they fall apart.

Additionally, we send out trinkets and baubles to assuage disgruntled customers until we can fix the darn thing or replace it entirely.

It seems to me that's a strange way to do business.

But I guess it's not much different than the military buying helicopters that fly only 49 percent of the time or bolts that crack under stress causing tanks to fall apart.

Or even picking one's own car up at the garage and not checking under the hood before driving off.

We the providers need to do our thing to make it happen the first time, but we as customers also have an obligation to make providers deliver the proper goods in the proper condition.

That's when we put the "T" into TQM.

Travel alternate routes

USAIC Public Affairs Office

There is a possibility of a small demonstration outside the main gate on South Lumpkin Road Saturday.

It is recommended those going on and off post use alternate routes that day.

It is the policy of this installation that no partisan political demonstrations be held within the bounds of Fort Benning.

The sole purpose of this installation is to provide for the military training of soldiers.

Military activities on this installation must be conducted totally free of entanglement with partisan political issues.

This policy is consistent with the American Constitutional tradition that the military must remain politically neutral and under the control of a democratically elected civilian government.

The proper forum for such activities is provided, and available, in the civilian community.

Accordingly, no demonstrations, marches or organized political activities of any type can or will be permitted on this installation.

If partisan political demonstrators enter this installation, they will be in violation of Section 1382, Title 18, U.S. Code, and subject to a fine and imprisonment.

Demonstrators protest SOA training

School of Americas Public Affairs Office

A host of groups propose to demonstrate outside Fort Benning's main gate on South Lumpkin Road Saturday to protest the training of Salvadoran military personnel by the School of the Americas.

The groups' avowed aim is to shut down the school, which their literature implied is at fault for the death squad killings of Jesuits last November — though no SOA graduate has been implicated in those activities.

SOA is a Training and Doctrine Command school that teaches U.S. Army and Joint doctrine to Latin American and U.S. students.

As such, the school is an instrument of U.S. foreign policy and a key participant in the Security Assistance Program to the region.

Besides military subjects, SOA training programs expose students and guest faculty members to U.S. customs, mores and folkways and to democratic institutions.

Through these measures the school promotes democracy in both word and action, directly supporting U.S. policy of fomenting democracy in Latin America with particular emphasis on human rights.

Through the 1980s, El Salvador has faced an externally supported communist insurgency dedicated to the overthrow of the constitutionally elected government.

U.S. policy has consistently supported that government.

SOA is a tangible, accessible target for groups opposed to U.S. policy in Central America, groups who see the Marxist infrastructure they support crumbling in El Salvador as it has crumbled all over the world.

While SOA supports the First Amendment right of any individual or group to protest policy, any endeavor to shut down the school is grasping at straws — an attempt to focus publicity on rapidly deteriorating Marxist causes.

Airborne celebrates 50th anniversary

Fifty years ago, on June 25, 1940, the formation of the original Parachute Test Platoon marked the birth of the U. S. Airborne Forces.

Members of the unit made their first jump on Aug. 16 of that year, and since then, our paratroopers have led the way in all of our Nation's wars.

During World War II, Airborne forces spearheaded assaults into Sicily, at Normandy, on D-Day into Holland, and in the Philippines.

They also jumped behind enemy lines during the Korean War, conducted combat operations in Vietnam, jumped and fought with distinction in Grenada, and captured the Torrijos and Rio Hato airfields in Panama.

Their success in these and other actions has repeatedly demonstrated the value and effectiveness of Airborne forces.

In the 50 years since its inception, the U. S. Army Airborne School has graduated hundreds of thousands of highly-trained and skilled troopers who have taken the spirit of the Airborne with them to their units and who have become the backbone of the Army's officer and noncommissioned officer corps.

Since Fort Benning, the Home of the Infantry, is the birth place of the U. S. Army Airborne, I therefore proclaim 1990, the Golden Anniversary of the Airborne, to be "The Year of the Airborne."

WHEREAS, The foundation of individual freedom and liberty is the body of the law that governs us.

Gen. Thurman speaks at School of Americas

School of Americas Public Affairs Office

Commander in Chief of the U.S. Southern Command Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman was a guest speaker of the School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Course here April 11.

Thurman briefed the 44 students, 30 of whom are officers from Latin America, on his role and the responsibility of Southern Command.

According to Thurman, Southern Command's mission is to support the security of North America; support counterinsurgency operations of friendly governments; reverse Soviet, Cuban and Nicaraguan influence in Latin America; defend the Panama Canal, U.S. property and personnel who live there; and the newest mission, effective Sept. 18, 1989, is counternarcotics.

"One hundred percent of all the cocaine that comes into the United States is produced in Latin America," Thurman said. "It must be stamped out."

Thurman said when he took command of SOUTHCOM Sept. 30, 1989, the estimated production of cocaine in Latin America was 450 tons. In the following six months that estimate rose to 1,200 tons.

"In a six-month period of time that estimate tripled, showing that we really hadn't known the size of the crop," Thurman said.

On Oct. 15, Thurman, and the other Armed Forces' commanders in chief in the southern region, gave Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney their strategy for combating narcotics.

"There are five attack vectors, first is to attack the economic structures of the 'narco-traficantes,' second is to attack their command and control facilities, third is to attack the production-distribution infrastructure of the narco-traficantes, fourth is to attack the armed organizations associate with the 'narcs,' and fifth to attack the technical support system for all of this infrastructure," Thurman said.

Thurman spoke to the class for close to an hour and then answered questions from the students, which ranged from insurgencies in Latin America to Operation Just Cause.

"We are very pleased with the emerging international support for the new government in Panama," said Thurman, who added that 42 countries have recognized the new government.

Honduras

"It's the one-third rule that allows the local people to actively participate in projects, which when completed, will belong to them." he said.

When not attending briefings, the engineers were busy with various tasks assigned to them at the air base.

The carpenters rebuilt porches, and the heavy equipment was used for several local excavations.

This is where the soldiers got their first taste of Honduran culture.

Pfc. Lorimae Pappel, a member of the Earthmover platoon, while operating a bucket loader at a site near the air base, drew many curious onlookers.

Pappel said of the children who came to watch, "They are so poor," she said. "Many of them didn't even have shoes on, but they still seem so happy."

She said the children took great delight in the littlest things. "Packets from MREs are a great attention getter," she said.

Once everything was set at Soto Cano, it was off to Juticulpa.

According to Smisek, the unit's first mission is to get the base camp fully operational.

Smisek said once that is finished, the soldiers will start the projects they've been assigned to do.

He added that the unit is in a unique position, as it is the first of its size to deploy so far from Soto Cano.

"This has given us some unique logistical problems," said 2nd Lt. Scott Strine. "We have to rely on the economy for laundry facilities, and parts are difficult to get because they are so far away."

However, Strine said the troops are making the best of it.

"Facing the extreme poverty and the language barrier as unit has brought them to a new level of cohesiveness."

The unit will remain in Juticulpa until the end of May.

Census forms: it's not too late

"It's not too late to return your questionnaire," according to James F. Holmes, regional director of the Atlanta Regional Census Center.

Although Census Day has passed, the Census Bureau is still accepting completed census questionnaires.

Households that have not returned their Census forms will eventually be placed on follow-up lists to be called on by Census takers.

More than 100 million Census questionnaires were delivered across the country.

In Chattahoochee County, more than 3,125 1990 Census questionnaires were delivered, according to Jill Wynens, district office manager of the Macon District Office of the U.S. Census Bureau.

Although there have been scattered reports of the non-delivery of Census questionnaires in some areas, most residents should have received their questionnaires by now.

Anyone who has not received a questionnaire should call the toll-free telephone number, 1-800-999-1990.

By promptly completing and returning your Census forms, you will be eliminating the need for Census workers to call on your household and thus saving yourself tax dollars.

Participating in the 1990 Census is mandatory.

A person's responses to the Census are kept strictly confidential.

By law, no agency of the federal, state or local government can have access to Census information.

Local AUSA chapter hosts annual Third Region meeting

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Association of the U.S. Army members from all over the southeast gathered for the Third Region Annual Meeting April 19 to 21 in Columbus.

Attendees included presidents of the Third Region chapters, as well as state representatives.

Although meetings were the business at hand, the members were afforded the chance to tour Fort Benning.

First stop was lunch at the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, Infantry Training Center Dining Facility.

After lunch the battalion commander gave them a brief tour of a starship located on Sand Hill.

An Airborne-in-Action demonstration, a buddy seat ride and a trip to the Infantry Museum were next on the agenda for the AUSA members.

A ceremony dedicating the post residence of the late General of the Army and U.S. President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, concluded their visit to Benning.

On the evening of April 20, the Third Region and Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter merged for the general membership meeting at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

Retired Maj. Gen. Robert Sullivan hosted the dinner and Third Region President Hal C. Van Meter gave the President's Report and presented awards.

Several Fort Benning soldiers were recognized for their achievements.

The last award given was the Maj. Gen. Robert F. Cocklin Award.

This award is given to a chapter and an individual for outstanding achievement during the previous year.

The Redstone Arsenal Chapter received the group award and U.S. Senator Howell T. Heflin received the individual award.

Heflin receives Cocklin award

Association of the U.S. Army

Alabama Senator Howell Heflin is this year's recipient of the Association of the United States Army's Robert F. Cocklin Award.

Heflin received the award April 20, during a banquet at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center, for AUSA's Third Region Annual Meeting.

The meeting began in Columbus on April 19 and continued through the 21.

Heflin was the keynote speaker for the occasion.

The Cocklin Award is presented to a chapter and individual for their support to the U.S. Army and AUSA.

Cocklin is a retired major general and was one of AUSA's original board members when it began in 1950.

He was executive director at the time of his retirement from AUSA.

Post unveils marker by Eisenhower home

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A historic marker erected at the post residence of the late general of the Army and U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower was unveiled April 20.

The marker is located at the intersection of Vibbert Avenue and Austin Loop, across the street from Riverside, home of the commanding general.

The intersection is near the 206 Austin Loop address where the Eisenhower family resided from 1926 until 1927, when Eisenhower was a major assigned here.

The marker was erected by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army and the Historic Chattahoochee Commission. Its dedication was part of the AUSA Third Region Annual Meeting conducted in Columbus April 19 to 21.

The dedication of the marker coincides with the national association's celebration of 1990 as the centennial birthday of Eisenhower.

During World War II, Eisenhower commanded the Allied invasion of North Africa and the Italian Campaign, as well as all Allied expeditionary forces when Normandy was invaded June 6, 1944.

After the war, he served as Army Chief of Staff and Supreme Commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, In 1953 he was inaugurated the 34th President of the United States, serving two terms.

While at Fort Benning, Eisenhower was executive officer of the 24th Infantry Regiment and commanded the 2nd Battalion.

He also coached the post Doughboy football team to an all-Army championship during that time.

President reflects on chapter's achievements

Since our last newsletter some time ago, the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter has enjoyed a very active period of growth and improvement.

The number and quality of activities involving individual and corporate membership was increased dramatically as the chapter continued to strive towards ever higher standards of excellence.

The generous support of our corporate members who have donated door prizes and participated in other activities assisted in improving the overall effectiveness of the chapter programs.

Of course, the outstanding efforts put forth from the commanders and leaders of Fort Benning continues to be invaluable to the chapter.

In the light of recent budget restraints, the association must maintain a firm position of leadership.

Only through properly guided strength can AUSA continue to provide the fine efforts and programs designed for the soldiers we represent.

The chapter continues to be a solid source of motivation and inspiration for the entire association.

As membership continues to grow, the chapter will stay in the forefront of direction. Members and supporters should be proud of their accomplishments.

Chapter President

Chapter Activities

In the last few months, the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army:

- purchased about 500 American flags for family members to wave as they welcomed-back soldiers of 75th Ranger Regiment and 988th Military Police Company from Operation Just Cause.
- presented The 1989-90 Green Book to a graduating Advanced Non Commissioned Officers Course in conjunction with The Year of the NCO. The ANCOC school instructors expressed their gratitude by presenting the chapter with a streamer.
- was awarded the "10 for 10,000" streamer for increasing its corporate membership by ten members from June to Dec. 89.
- participated in the Jaycee Appreciation Night. Corporate members "got mugged" when they were given beer mugs as an icebreaker.
- hosted March's Community Council Meeting for civilian and military community leaders. Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, commanding general, attended the luncheon at the Follow-Me Dining Facility.
- presented Spigelmire with this year's first coupon book for new and renewing members.

Corporate members offer incentive to join, renew membership in AUSA

USAIC Public Affairs Office

New and renewing members of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army received more than $170 worth of coupons redeemable at various local businesses.

According to Sgt. Wade Shell, volunteer administrator, the chapter's corporate members paid for the project.

Wade said the books were made in an effort to increase membership.

Coupons offered by some of the corporate members include discounts for hotels, food and military surplus store.

Robert Anderson, executive committee member and Chuck McClure, chapter president, presented Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, commanding general, with the first coupon book for renewing his membership with AUSA.

Over 10,000 books were printed.

AUSA works to influence Capitol Hill on defense matters

Emphasis, WCGQ-WRCG

In the wake of the sudden collapse of the communist empire in Eastern Europe, providing advice on how to spend the so-called "peace-dividend" has become the fastest growing cottage industry in Washington.

Never mind that we have been dipping into that peace dividend for a number of years. The defense budget has already decreased, in real terms, every year for the last five.

The 1991 budget, now being worked, will show the sixth consecutive year decline in defense spending.

Meanwhile, the military services, most notably the Army, are trying to plot a sensible course toward a smaller defense establishment.

The idea is to reduce at a rate that will treat people fairly, conserve resources and preserve our defenses in the best way possible.

Unfortunately, in the maze of rhetoric and self-interest, we are likely to be forced to go about it in the wrong way.

A primary consideration in shaping our Armed Forces for the new decade is Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union are in throes of enormous economic and political instability — a situation that will take a long time to resolve.

Our European allies see this clearly and warn against making reductions hastily.

The leadership of our Army has set forth a carefully calculated plan for reduction that extends over a number of years.

In fact, the Army is the only service to lay out a complete reduction plan. But those who want it more quickly or to make draconian cuts in their own way are a threat to the fair treatment of the people of the Army.

Somehow, our elected and appointed officials must find a way to make reductions in defense in careful and measured ways.

If we do not, we are likely to end up with an Army that is far less capable than it needs to be and could be at the same cost. And, we will surely exact a price from the very people who sacrifice every day to serve this nation.

Much public debate over U.S. defense spending is based on the idea that the end of the cold war will result in a new era of world peace.

But a look at recent headlines is enough to disprove this wishful theory. In the few months since the fall of the Iron Curtain, we have witnessed an almost unbroken cycle of political violence and ethnic hatred.

The turmoil in the Soviet Union alone is cause for concern. Former arms control adviser Paul Nitze recently pointed out that there are nearly 30,000 nuclear warheads stored in the U.S.S.R and that "we cannot be sure into whose hands they may fall."

But that's a minor worry compared to the proliferation of ballistic missiles elsewhere.

C.I.A. Director William Webster has told Congress that at least 15 developing nations will be producing their own missiles by the end of the decade, and presumably selling them to other Third World countries. Many of those missiles will be nuclear armed.

Just last month, British customs foiled an attempt to smuggle 40 nuclear triggers to Iraq. Iraqi Dictator Saddam Hussein denied that his country has any atomic bombs. But he boasted that Iraq does possess binary nerve gas, and he threatened to use it against Israel.

Then there is Col. Gadhafi's Libya, the site of an alleged chemical weapons plant that may or may not have burned down recently.

Czechoslovakian President Vaclav disclosed last month that his communist predecessors had exported to Libya 1,000 tons of "Semtex," the same explosives that blew up a jet liner over Scotland in 1988.

Mr. Havel said "if you consider that 200 grams is enough to blow up an aircraft, this means world terrorism has enough Semtex to last 150 years."

So we have ample evidence that the 1990s will not be a peaceful decade.

Our defense policy may have to adjust to a different sort of foreign threat than in the past. But short-changing the military budget through the starry-eyed notion of a "peace dividend," would be dangerously irresponsible.

Operation Holiday relieves soldiers' Christmas blues

By Ann M. McDonald

Many soldiers went home to visit family and friends for last year's Christmas holidays. Some soldiers, however, didn't have that opportunity.

That's where "Operation Holiday" came into play.

The program, designed for single soldiers and geographic bachelors who remained at Fort Benning for the holidays, included tours of local businesses and trips to local attractions and sporting events.

The program is organized by the Chattahochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army and is funded by local area businesses and private individuals.

According to Spec. Cheryl Stall, AUSA spokeswoman, all of the contributors were more than generous and each should feel proud that they had a hand in making the event a success.

George D. Harrington, Drill Sergeant of the Year.

AUSA honors Drill Sgt.

By Melvyn De Rixey

The Association of the U.S. Army recognized Staff Sgt. George D. Harrington for being named Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year, April 6.

The 24-year-old soldier competed against five other battalion Drill Sergeants of the Quarter to win the honor.

Harrington, assigned to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Training Center, has been a drill sergeant for more than a year.

After entering the Army in July 1983 and completing his basic training, his motivation to become a drill sergeant came from two drill sergeants who thought it would be a good opportunity for him.

He is a graduate of Airborne, Jumpmaster, Ranger and Military Free Fall Parachuting schools.

Competition for the title was stiff and included physical fitness, basic rifle marksmanship, drill and ceremonies, Infantry qualification tasks and an appearance before a board of command sergeants major.

AUSA awarded Harrington a 9 millimeter Beretta handgun, an engraved case, an Army Dress Blue Uniform, warm-up jacket, plaque and a three-year membership.

Harrington will go to the National Convention in Washington D.C. in October and will be an honoree at all chapter activities.

Miss Georgia dines, sings with soldiers

By Ann M. McDonald

Most soldiers will never get a chance to have breakfast with a Miss America competitor.

Yet, several did just that at the Chattahoochee-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army Breakfast at the Harmony Church Field House Feb. 15. Miss Georgia, Jamie Price, dined with the soldiers and sang for them.

Price, however, was not the only source of entertainment, or the only item on the agenda of events at the breakfast.

Door prizes from AUSA corporate sponsors were given out, outstanding soldiers and civilians were recognized and the events of Panama were capsulized by 756th Ranger Regimental Commander, Col. Buck Kernan.

Kernan, summed it up by saying that some soldiers did some phenomenal things in Panama.

He pointed out that the training the Rangers do every day was validated during Operation Just Cause.

Jamie Price

"I'm proud of the Rangers," he said. "I'm equally as proud of the Army because everyone was part of the mission."

To the leaders in the audience, Kernan explained the importance of training at squad and platoon levels.

"It's essential because you never know when you're going to be called out. A unit always has to be ready."

Two soldiers who fought in Panama were recognized for their actions there. Pfc. William Kelley, Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. and Spec. Dennis Harbison, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. each received a plaque commending them.

Other soldiers recognized are:

Sgt. Henry D. McEachern, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, NCO of the 1st Quarter, TSB.

Spec. Lisa D. Patrick, HQ, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., Soldier of the 1st Quarter, TSB.

Cpl. John E. Wold, HHC, 197th Inf. Bde., Soldier of the Quarter.

Staff Sgt. Michael Butolthh, Co. A, 4th Bn., 36th Inf., ITC, NCO of the 2nd Quarter.

Spec. Michael Barber, HHC, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. ITC, Soldier of the 2nd Quarter.

Staff Sgt. James K. Secoy, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., NCO of the 2nd Quarter.

Engineers build relations in Central America

By Michelle Patin
43rd Engineer Battalion

"Where in the world is Belize anyway?"

The soldiers of the Heavy Equipment Platoon of Headquarters Support Company, 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) are experiencing the little Central America country up close and personal.

Five soldiers from HSC, 43rd Engr. Bn., deployed to Belize Feb. 14 as a part of Task Force Screaming Beast to provide combat heavy engineer support to the 20th Engineer Battalion, a corp combat engineer battalion from Fort Campbell, Ky.

The overall mission of Task Force Screaming Beast is to rebuild the Mullins River Bridge, vicinity Dangriga, Belize, and to undertake limited civic-action projects that provide assistance to the government of Belize.

Specifically, these soldiers of 43rd are presently tasked with providing all the concrete support necessary for the deployment and the construction missions to be successful.

The Belize deployment is unlike any other deployment the 43rd has undertaken in that only elements of HSC, 43rd Engr. Bn., deploy as attachments to other units.

A much greater degree of responsibility rests on the soldiers of 43rd and primarily on Staff Sgt. Franklin Bryant, the detachment noncommissioned officer in charge.

His soldiers are not only geographically separated from their parent unit, but they are also the only "concrete subject matter experts" on the deployment.

All correspondence from Belize City, the capital of Belize, and Headquarters, 20th Engineer Battalion, states that the 43rd attachments performed the mission expediently and professionally.

The work of Bryant, Sgt. Stephen A. Stone, Spec. Ross Norman, Pvt. 2 Kent K. Kuhlka, and Pvt. 2 Sean N. Duncan is just one example of the Warrior Support missions HSC, 43rd Engr. Bn., performs here and even as far away as Belize.

Marksmanship Unit shoots down competition in World Cup

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Sgt. Bret Erickson and Capt. John McNally recently shot down the competition in World Cup shooting events, securing two country slots for the United States in the 1992 Olympics.

Erickson was the first to earn an Olympic slot in the Trap event of the Benito Juarez World Cup in Mexico City.

He won the event with a score of 192 out of 200 points, edging past Franz Peters of Belgium and Urmas Saaliste of the Soviet Union.

Erickson led the pack of 45 competitors from 19 countries to win this event.

McNally secured the second country slot in the rapid fire pistol event of the U.S. World Cup in Los Angeles.

He placed second in the event behind Kuechler of Switzerland. Pfc. Ed Suarez of USAMU placed third.

Members of the U.S. team in rifle events also took their share of honors at the World Cups.

In Mexico City, Sgt. Brad Carnes placed first in the three-position rifle and English Match.

Spec. Tom Tamas placed second, and Sgt. Troy Baker placed fourth in the air rifle event.

Carnes, Tamas, Baker and 1st. Lt. Rhonda Barush shot Olympic Qualifying scores in every event they fired.

In Los Angeles, the rifle team members again placed among the top shooters in the world.

Tamas placed second in the three-position rifle event.

Barush placed second in the Women's Standard Rifle Prone event, third in the women's three position and fourth in the women's air rifle.

Capt. Steven Goff placed third in the men's free rifle prone and air rifle events.

Spec. Martin Edmondson from USAMU's running target section also participated in World Cup events in Guatemala City, Guatemala, Guatemala, Mexico City and Los Angeles.

Edmondson placed fourth overall in Mexico City, however he did fire a minimum qualification score making him eligible to compete in the 1992 Olympics.

He still must earn a country slot by winning any of the six World Cups shot by the U.S. team each year or during the 1991 Pan Am Games.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Deborah Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Two years ago, I purchased a car from a friend. Since my friend was unable to keep making payments on the vehicle, I agreed to make all of the remaining payments if he would give me the title when all of the payments were made.

He always obtained the car tags and the insurance for me.

Several months ago I made the last payment, but have been unable to locate my friend to get the certificate of title.

In addition, I have been unable to get car tags or insurance.

Since it is unlikely that I will ever find my friend, what are my options since I don't have the certificate of title?

A. A certificate of title is a document used to record liens, as well as to evidence ownership or the right to possession.

The title, or current registration papers, are usually necessary when applying for car tags and insurance.

If you do not present sufficient proof of ownership, or the right to possession, your requests probably will be denied.

If you are denied, you may have to consider getting a bond from a bonding, surety or insurance company.

What you are doing is ensuring that you have the right to possess the vehicle.

The bond is presented to the state or county and serves to protect anyone who might be damaged by the state's issuance of the certificate of title to you.

To prevent this type of problem, it would be better if you had notified the finance company before you purchased the car to request that you be allowed to legally assume the payments.

If allowed, you would have become responsible to the finance company for making all of the payments, and the title and registration would have been put in your name.

After the balance was paid, the title would have been sent to you.

An alternative would have been for you to obtain a loan for the amount owed on the vehicle.

You may think it is easier to take over the payments, without any legal transfer of title, registration or loan documents and rely on your friend to send you the title when the car is paid for, but most times it is not.

Before agreeing to such an arrangement, consider the problems of trying to register the vehicle, get insurance or obtain the car title from a person who may be transferred or leaves the service.

In the end, you may discover that you have purchased a vehicle that you will not be able to drive or ever legally own.

If you have questions regarding this matter, please contact a legal assistance attorney at 545-3281/3282.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

As Volunteer Recognition Week comes to a close, Martin Army Community Hospital is highlighting a group of women who offer assistance to new parents and their infants.

These are the volunteers in the First Steps Program.

This program originated in Atlanta, Ga., and was brought to Fort Benning by MACH Social Work Service.

A steering committee established the criteria, and a volunteer, Peggy Paape, took it from there.

The First Steps volunteers, being military wives and mothers themselves, have something in common with the parents they assist.

Prior to working with parents, these volunteers receive 18 hours of training and then monthly in-service training.

They started taking cases in May 1989, helping first-time parents, teen-aged parents, single parents and parents with handicapped newborns.

They act as surrogate big sisters, giving an extended family to the military wife who is having a baby without the support system she would have if she were not away from home and family.

These volunteers start working with mothers-to-be in the last weeks of pregnancy to help them prepare for the baby.

They are supported in these endeavors by the MACH Department of Nursing, American Red Cross, Post Volunteer Resources, Army Community Service Outreach, Army Family Advocacy Program, Child Development Services and the Community Health Nurse.

The volunteers provide the prospective parents with informational handouts on community resources, baby development calendars, guides for new parents and a monthly newsletter on baby milestones.

More than helping parents prepare for the arrival of a new baby, however, these volunteers offer the gift of friendship.

On their first visit, they exchange phone numbers with the mother-to-be and tell their clients to feel free to call anytime, day or night, if they have concerns or just need reassurance.

They offer support when the spouse is absent due to military obligations.

Having a "big sister" who is familiar with the stresses with which a military wife and mother must cope, has made adjusting to motherhood easier for those who are learning new parenting skills every day.

These volunteers have experienced similar circumstances and learned to cope.

When describing her volunteers, Paape said she has a group that is small in numbers, 13, but high in commitment.

They are professionals who are on call for their clients 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

They provide a network of mothers taking care of mothers, someone to turn to when the baby has colic, and they feel they can't cope.

These volunteers are committed to doing something for their community and often form lasting friendships with their clients.

For more information or if you are interested in joining these volunteers, call MACH Social Work Service at 545-1661 or 545-3212.

Wounded Ranger comes home

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The feelings of one soldier aboard an aircraft that flew out of Lawson Army Airfield on a cold, rainy December night, were just as dismal as the weather.

He said he knew something bad was going to happen.

The next morning Sgt. William F. Dunham, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, discovered the reason behind that emotion.

He said he felt as if he'd been stepped on by King Kong.

King Kong's foot in his case was the impact of six bullets, hitting his body all at once.

Dunham was shot during his unit's assault on Rio Hato during "Operation Just Cause."

After 13 trips to surgery, more than three months in two hospitals and convalescent leave at home in Little Rock, Ark., Dunham's back at Benning.

He said the bad feeling he left with was replaced with joy as his Blackhawk helicopter touched down at Lawson.

Just yards away, he could see a company of Rangers at rigid attention. However, the formality lasted only a moment as Dunham gingerly exited the aircraft.

When he was securely on the ground, the Rangers huddled around their comrade, anxious to give him a pat on the back or extend a hand.

When the crowd dissipated, the full extent of his injuries was wholly evident.

Dunham had lost a leg.

However, his spirit is steadfast, which he demonstrated by raising his crutches in a victory salute before boarding the vehicle waiting to take him to the company.

Dunham sat in the "War Room," at Co. B surrounded by his buddies.

The soldiers chided him about his hair and threatened to brandish barber shears to shave off the hair that had long outgrown the customary high and tight — the signature of a Ranger.

Dunham recounted the events surrounding the loss of his limb.

"I remember it was hell trying to jump out of that bird," he said.

"We landed and were in position. I checked on Brown and was settling back in position when we were suddenly hit with a shower of bullets.

"Brown was pretty bad wasn't he," Dunham asked Sgt. Andrew Rhoades, the platoon medic who was sitting beside him in the "War Room."

"Yes," Rhoades answered solemnly.

"What about Sergeant Barnard," pressed Dunham. "I tried to help him, but I couldn't get up."

"I know," Rhoades almost whispered.

(Staff Sgt. Larry Barnard and Pfc. Roy Brown Jr. died in the attack)

"Who put the chest tubes in me?" Dunham asked.

"I did," Rhoades said.

"My face was bleeding, too, wasn't it?" Dunham asked.

"Yes, we took care of as much as we could before they came to get you. They came pretty fast," Rhoades replied.

Dunham explained his questioning was necessary because he had to fill in the mental gaps.

Conscious for most of the time, Dunham described what happened after he was medevaced.

"There were a bunch of us in triage, and the doctors were dividing us up." he said. "I overheard them saying they didn't think I'd make it, and they set me aside."

Although he had tubes down his throat and was unable to speak, that remark prompted him to make as much noise as possible.

"I had to let them know I was going to survive," he said.

"They heard me and moved me to another section."

Ann M. McDonald

Sgt. William Dunham, Co. B, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., receives a warm greeting from Pfc. Brian Winningham.

That day he went through the first in a long series of operations.

Although every attempt was made to save Dunham's leg, it had to be amputated Dec. 27.

He had taken one round in his right knee and two just below, damaging it beyond repair.

The young Ranger also took two rounds in the chest and another in the shoulder.

Doctors told him one of the rounds to the chest ricocheted in and out the same hole and the other went straight through, narrowly missing vital organs.

Along with the rounds, Dunham's body was peppered with shrapnel.

He laughed as he recalled that the doctors said he'd have a great time in airports.

That joke reminded him there were some good times during his hospitalization.

There was a slew of visitors, including the President, the Army Chief of Staff and the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders.

Another visitor who wasn't quite so prominent but just as memorable was a girl who flew from California to Texas, just to thank the soldiers for fighting.

Dunham said his stay at home was much the same.

He said there was a reception for him, and everyone was very supportive.

However, he said none of that equaled the formation of men waiting for him Lawson.

"The president is prestigious, but I don't know him. These guys are my family. I had to use every ounce of restraint to keep from crying when I saw them," he said.

That formation is one Dunham will never again be a part of. Nor, will he ever be a part of any other formation.

"I was given the option of staying in," he said. "Although I love the military, I can't do it. I can't sit behind a desk."

The Ranger said everyone understood.

"They know I wouldn't be happy," he said, nodding at his buddies.

He explained he'll finish up everything that needs to be done, and then he'll be discharged.

"I'm going to go to school and start my life as a civilian," Dunham said.

"I've realized there are some things I can't do, but there are a lot of things I can.

He'll receive a prosthesis next week, which will give him more mobility.

The 21-year old veteran said humor has kept him sane — that and the will to survive.

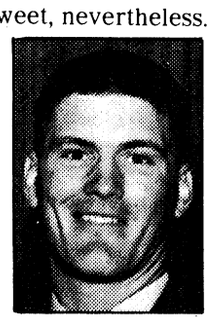
"I'm not bitter," he said. "Yes, I lost my leg, but we won. So did the Panamanians, and that's what it's all about."

ITC drill sergeant is NCO of Quarter

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

For Staff Sgt. Michael Butolph, being named Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter is not his first recognition and probably won't be his last.

Victory is sweet, nevertheless.



Michael Butolph

Since he joined the Army in 1982 as an Infantryman, Butolph has excelled at every phase of his career.

As a specialist at Camp Kittyhawk, Korea, he served with the United Nations Command Security Group-Joint Security Area.

During his tour as what Butolph described a "security guard for the UN command," he helped South Korean flood victims in an action that would eventually win him the Humanitarian Service Medal.

Butolph distinguished himself while assigned to 3rd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

There, he served in positions ranging from team leader to platoon sergeant, the latter of which he held for eight months while only a staff sergeant.

In Hawaii, he was the distinguished honor graduate of his Primary Leadership Development Course, and he made the Commandant's List for the Basic NCO Course.

Butolph got his first big board experience after winning the battalion NCO of the Quarter at Schofield.

From there he won NCO of the Year honors for his battalion and brigade before taking the runner-up position in the NCO of the Year competition for the 25th Inf. Div.

Currently, Butolph tests his physical and mental skills serving as a drill sergeant with Company A, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Center, which leaves very little time for studying.

Nevertheless, Butolph said he reads everything he can get his hands on and with good reason.

"The competition was stiff all the way up," he said. "There are a lot of sharp NCOs out there."

Now Butolph will have to wait until the end of the year before butting heads with other NCOs for the right to be named post NCO of the Year.

Until then, "There's no such thing as being over prepared," he said.

Army Community Service celebrates silver anniversary

Army Community Service

Army Community Service celebrates its 25th year of service to Army families this year.

"ACS has a proud history of supporting Army families," said Lt. Col. Eugene J. Vivalda, Chief of the ACS Division at the Community and Family Support Center in Washington, D.C.

"During the year, we plan to highlight the programs, services and contributions of our staff and volunteers.

"The Silver Anniversary slogan, 'ACS — A Commander's Solution,' capsulizes ACS's mission."

Activities focusing on the role and contributions of ACS will culminate in celebration events July 25, the date of the birth of the family support program, Vivalda said.

This celebration will be followed by August conferences of ACS officers and volunteer supervisors.

The conference, sponsored by Forces Command in Atlanta, will focus on the theme, "Eyes on the Future: ACS Continues to Evolve."

"At this working conference," Vivalda explained, "we plan to develop a clearly defined, realistic management goal; a multilevel marketing plan; and a game plan for linking all ACS programs to unit mission accomplishment and the Army Chief of Staff's six imperatives for the Army's future.

"We will also be giving ACS officers the latest research, demographic data, program guidance, resource outlook and guidance, and how-to information in all program areas," Vivalda said.

ACS was established in 1965 to assist commanders in reducing conflicts between a soldier's family responsibilities and duty requirements.

The initial support was in the areas of Information and Referral and Relocation Assistance.

Over the years, the program has evolved into the commanders' primary vehicle to assess, coordinate and implement an installation and Armywide family support system.

Today, services are available at 166 ACS centers Armywide.

ACS programs focus on the continuous relocations that are a part of the military lifestyle.

According to Vivalda, "ACS programs recognize the phenomenon of the mobile military lifestyle.

"They are all geared toward assisting families through the stress this lifestyle causes.

Soldiers and their families relocate, on an average, every two years," Vivalda said.

Command support for soldiers and family programs clearly shows that the Army accepts its responsibility to take care of both soldier and family member needs.

"ACS programs center around intervention services during the relocation process to minimize disruptions involved with moves and to help soldiers and families adjust more quickly.

"This just makes good sense. The better the Army takes care of soldiers and families, the better they take care of the Army mission.

"We help commanders by providing these programs and services, which in turn help produce healthier and more satisfied soldiers and families who spend more time on the job and have a more positive outlook on the Army and life in general," Vivalda said.

He explained that there is a strong core of support programs offered by ACS centers Army-wide, but the extent of programs reflect commander priorities and community needs.

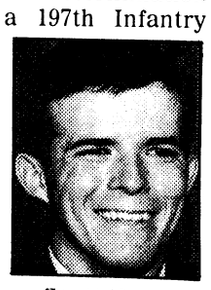
Vivalda stressed that ACS strengthens the bonds between the Army and soldiers and families by its efforts to make them true partners.

ACS programs not only facilitate the commander's mission, but they improve the quality of life and well-being among the members of the military community, he said.

197th soldier is Benning's best

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Hard work and determination paid off for a 197th Infantry Brigade soldier when he was named Fort Benning Soldier of the Quarter.



Scott Bone

Spec. Scott Bone, a Stinger crew member assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Inf. Bde., competed against the top soldiers from each of the brigade's battalions and separate companies before advancing to the post competition.

"I knew my work was cut out for me, not only at the brigade level but also at post," said the 19-year-old native of El Paso, Texas.

"I devoted my free time to studying for every Soldier of the Quarter board I was chosen to appear before."

Since entering the Army in November 1988, Bone has pushed himself to do his best in his Military Occupational Specialty.

Bone credits his company chain of command with helping prepare him at every selection board before which he has appeared.

"Both my platoon sergeant and first sergeant have given me top-notch support," he said.

"They taught me that if you push yourself to the max, you will succeed in whatever goal you set for yourself."

Loyd School celebrates 30th birthday

Fort Benning Schools

Frank R. Loyd School celebrated its 30th birthday April 20, and what a celebration it was.

Evelyn Loyd, Frank R. Loyd Jr.'s mother, and Bonnie Loyd Crane, Loyd's sister, were the honored guests.

Retired Col. Samuel Smithers, a member of Loyd's class of 1950 at West Point was another special guest who came to join in the celebration.

Visitors from Loyd School's past — principals, teachers and students — came to share their memories with the students who now attend Loyd.

Visitors from the present were there, too. Many Loyd parents came to spend the celebration day with their children.

Col. Herbert Segal, the school board president, joined in the morning's activities.

Brig. Gen. William M. Steele spent a portion of the afternoon with Mrs. Loyd and Crane and several of the Loyd School students.

Preparation for the celebration began a year ago by Loyd staff members.

They began to contact Army and civilian publications to send information about the celebration to former Loyd staff members and students and to those persons who had known Lt. Frank R. Loyd Jr.

As the school year progressed, Loyd School students learned about Loyd, the West Point graduate who was a platoon leader in Korea in Company B, 35th Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division.

They learned of his service in Korea and the posthumous awarding of the Distinguished Service Cross.

They also learned that Loyd had himself been a military child who during the 1930s had lived at Fort Benning and attended the Fort Benning Schools.

As the Loyd students prepared for the celebration, they wrote essays and drew pictures about Loyd and about their own lives as students at Loyd School.

The celebration day began as Mrs. Loyd and Crane greeted children at the school's front door.

Entry into the building was a little slower than usual that morning because the children were stopping to speak to and often hug the visitors.

A morning program included a slide presentation; awards to Loyd students for essays and drawings related to the celebration; and a special award to first-grade teacher, Jane O'Hern.

O'Hern, who has taught at Loyd School for 30 years, was there on the school's opening day.

Later in the morning, students planted a pecan tree in honor of Loyd.

The pecan tree was chosen because it is the state tree of Texas, Loyd's home state.

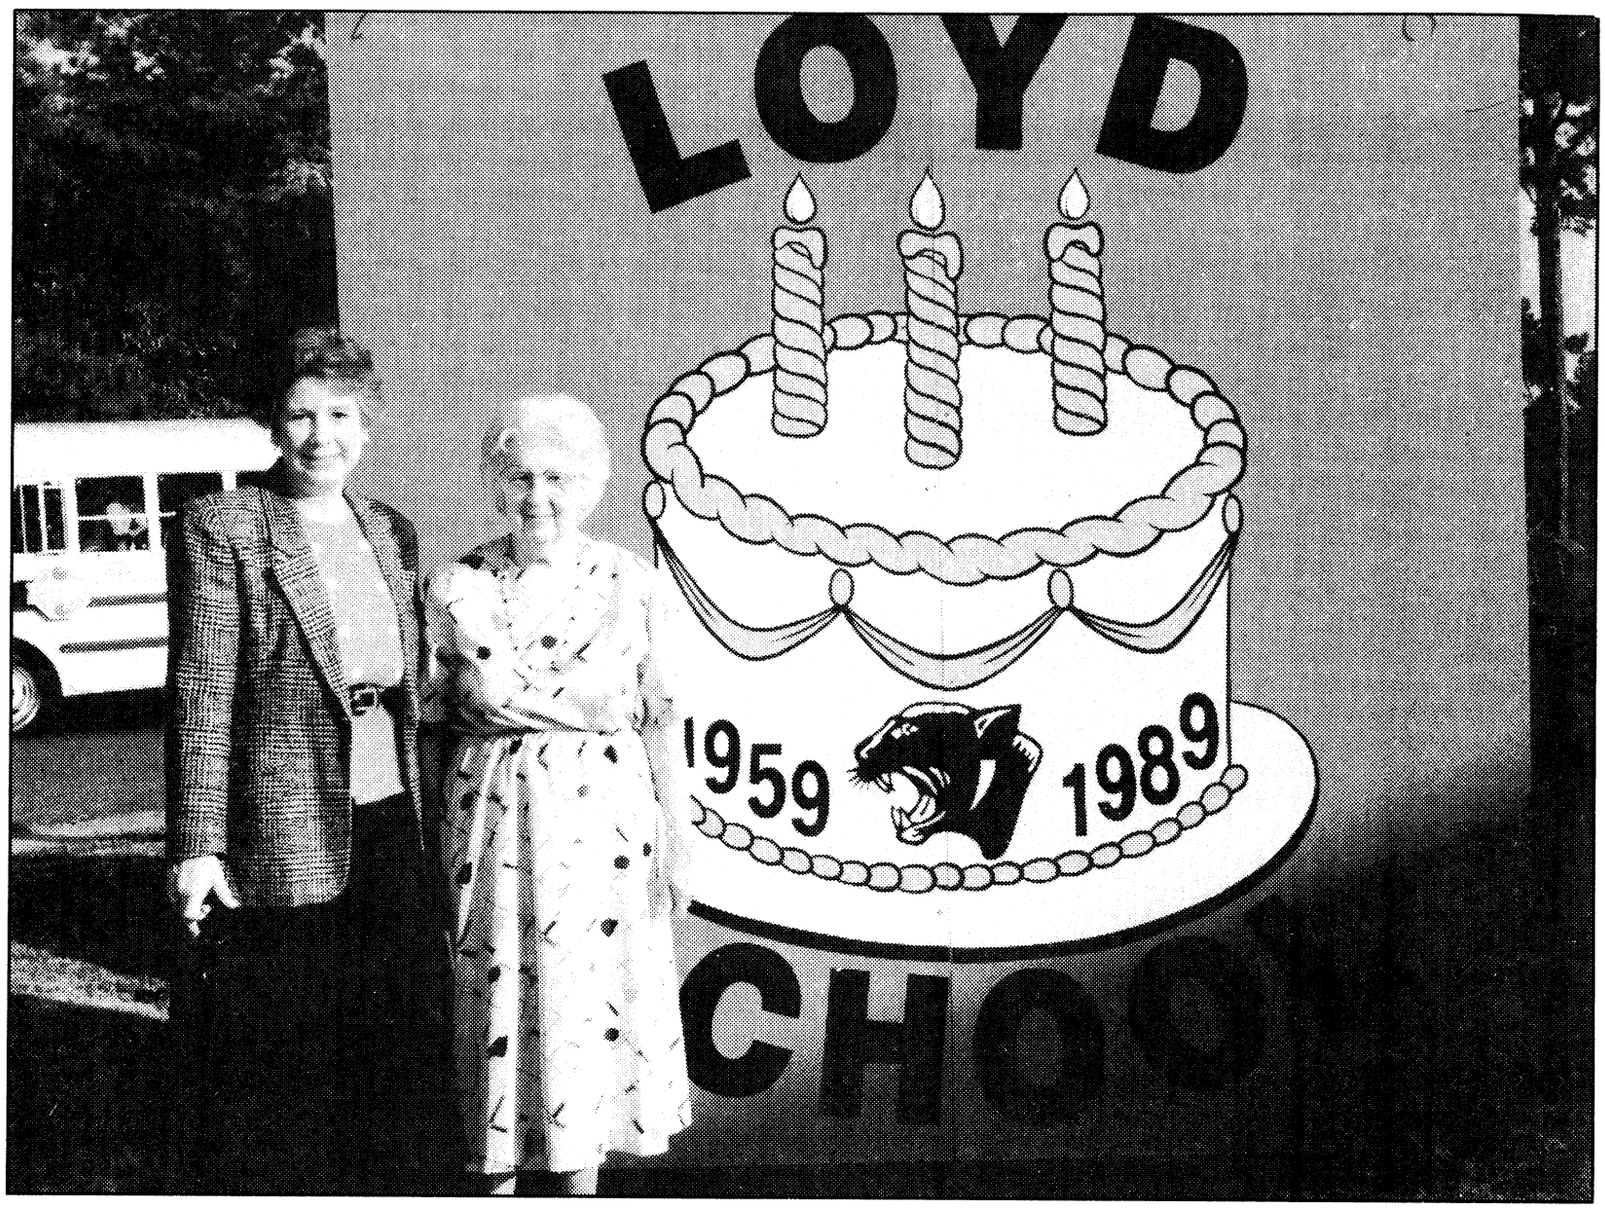
Winners of the essay and drawing contest met in a special reception with Mrs. Loyd and Crane.

Mrs. Loyd told the children of her memories of Fort Benning during the two periods in which she had lived here — once in the 1920s and again in the 1930s.

She told of living on Rainbow Avenue and on Austin Loop.

Students were thrilled to learn that the ground on which Loyd School now stands is part of an area in which Mrs. Loyd, her family and other Fort Benning residents used hunt wild turkeys.

Lunch time brought the actual birthday celebration. Each student received a birthday hat and a slice of the Loyd School birthday cake.



Bonnie Loyd Crane and Evelyn Loyd came to Fort Benning to help Loyd School celebrate its 30th birthday. Cy Dietrich

The afternoon was devoted to a variety of sessions related to Loyd School and to things that Loyd School students may someday choose to do as adults.

Students met with Mrs. Loyd and Crane. They talked about Loyd as a boy and of memories of his life as a military child.

Dechon Grant, a policeman who was a Loyd School student in O'Hern's class in 1973 came to share memories with students and to talk about his career as a policeman.

Capt. John Cox, a parent of a Loyd School student, talked to students about careers using art, and several staff members from Martin Army Community Hospital talked to students about careers in the medical field.

Loyd School staff members, parents and visitors continued the celebration into the evening with a banquet.

At the banquet, Mrs. Loyd was given an album containing pictures of the events that had occurred during the celebration.

"This is one of the most remarkable and wonderful celebrations that anybody could possibly have," said Mrs. Loyd. "It is a day that I shall never forget."

It was a celebration that will remembered by all who were a part of it.

In fact, the celebration will be relived again and again because Loyd students and teachers videotaped many of the day's interviews and activities.

These tapes will be shared with Loyd students of the future in birthday celebrations yet to come.

Chapels offer many activities for children

April is the month to honor children of military families.

There are displays, parades and special events to renew our awareness of the unique qualities of children.

As with other special times during the year when a group or subject is honored, the recognition may soon be forgotten and life resumes to the way it was before the balloons and parades.

The Unit Ministry Team at Fort Benning hopes parents take this opportunity to help their children find the gift of faith that will last far beyond April.

Vacation Bible School is June 18 to 22 and is a wonderful opportunity for children to learn more about Christian faith.

It will be at Dexter and Faith schools from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. daily.

Many other religious education and special children's worship opportunities are available to Fort Benning children.

● Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes are offered each Sunday from 10 to 11 a.m. at Dexter School.

● Sacramental instruction may be scheduled through Phil Reilly at 545-5508.

● Special children's liturgy Masses are scheduled throughout the year and sponsored by CCD classes on a rotating basis.

● The Masses include offertories in which the children bring canned goods to the alter as gifts. The food is donated to Army Community Service.

● A Children's Church service is at the Infantry Center Chapel at 11 a.m. each Sunday.

● Main Post Sunday School is at the Religious Education Center, building 229, Crain Hall, from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m.

● Sunday School is also offered at Lavoie Manor Chapel at 10 a.m., Sightseeing Road Chapel at 9:30 a.m., and Kelley Hill at 10 a.m.

● Custer Terrace Chapel has Sunday School at 10 a.m. with Junior Church at 11:20 a.m.

● Children of the Jewish faith may attend Religious Education Class at the Sand Hill Education Center Annex, building 3008, Sunday at 10 a.m.

For more information on any of the Religious Education programs, call the REC at 545-2771/2366.

Religious education gives children something they can keep forever — their faith.

Parents should make choices for children

By Loran C. Bulla
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Chaplain

Does being a spiritually responsible parent involve making some religious choices for our children?

Consider these statements: "I won't force my children to go to church. My children will have the right to either accept or reject religion. When I was a child, my parents used to drag me to Sunday School. I hated it."

Do these comments sound familiar? As a chaplain, I hear them often.

When I take the opportunity to discuss with parents their child's spiritual welfare, I usually probe the parent's approach to spiritual training.

Often I find that parents are very concerned about not "pushing" religion onto their children.

They think religion in the home can have the effect of driving the child away from God.

How do we teach our children about God without "pushing" too much religion on them?

Perhaps the answer to this problem lies in a compromise.

The first step is to acquire the conviction that belief in God has a vital place in the home.

In the Old Testament book of Proverbs (22:6) the writer states, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

The scripture commands parents to take a determing role in teaching children about living the right "way" (living in the fear of God, see Verse 4). In God's sight, parents have spiritual responsibilities.

Taking a determining role in teaching our children is nothing new.

It is parents who determine their children need an education.

Can you imagine letting the child decide whether or not he actually needs to go to school?

We can and should decide that our children need spiritual values and take steps necessary to teach them in our families.

Having decided to bring God into the home, begin to practice spiritual learning with your children.

Avoid making them do something you won't do — you'll send an inconsistent message about the true importance of God.

Spiritual values are just as important to you as they are to your children.

Finally, if you are new at this business, start small.

Perhaps you should try a simple daily Bible reading around the dinner table.

Start with a brief prayer and read a few verses of scripture. This is a great way to bring the family together and can be a significant first step to bringing God into the home in a way that won't seem so "pushy."

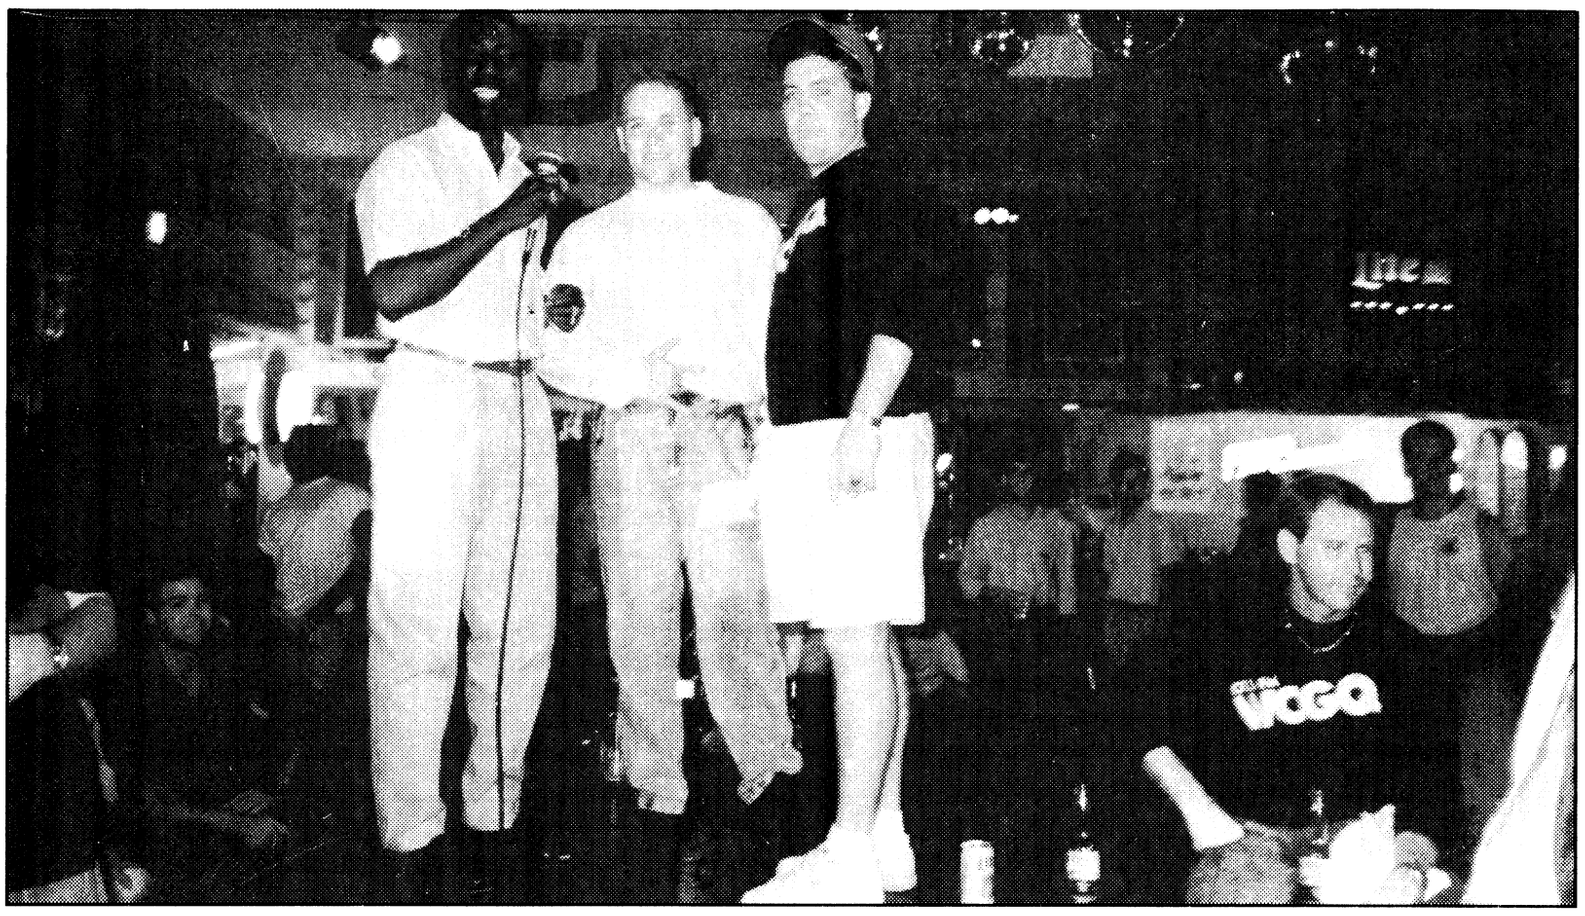
Single soldiers enjoy night out



U.S. Army photo

Disc jockey Al Haynes (left) and David Spitzmiller (right) of WCGQ-FM present Disney World passes to Thomas Griffin of HHC, 1st Bn., 507th PIR.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

It was singles night April 17 at the second BOSS (Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers) Bash at the Hidden Door Enlisted Club.

The event, sponsored by WCGQ-107 FM Radio, the BOSS Group and the Directorate of Community Activities, featured music and prizes for soldiers.

SATO Travel Services, Eastern Metro Airlines and Disney World gave away two round-trip airline tickets and Disney World passes.

The winners were Thomas Griffin of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Army leaders have expressed concern about the perception that there is a lack of activities for the single soldier.

Fort Benning was selected as a test site for the program, which aims to provide better opportunities for single soldiers.

Many programs have been created to serve Army families, and Army officials said many single soldiers felt left out.

Because of this perception, the Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activities are conducting innovative recreational programs specifically for single soldiers.

Saturday, Sunday — The Brown's Crossing Craftsmen Fair will be Saturday and Sunday.

Brown's Crossing Craftsmen Fair is located between Milledgeville and Macon, one mile off Georgia Highway 22.

Spring at Brown's Crossing features new foliage on the old trees, and a green carpet of grass and clover under foot will give a new backdrop for 130 exhibitors from 13 states to unfold their latest works of art.

There will be many craftsmen and artists demonstrating their work.

There will be demonstrations of crafts that were once necessary homemaking skills but now are almost a lost art — scrimshaw, weaving, spinning, basket making, bobbin lace making, broom making, chair caning, blacksmithing and quilting.

There will be painters, portrait artists and other work in silkscreen, calligraphy and photography.

Judy Hartsfield from Sylacauga, Ala., and her artist son, Chris Hartsfield from Decatur, Ga., will exhibit their work.

Mark and Tim Watts of Murfreesboro, Tenn., will have their popular unfinished furniture.

James Carmichael's outdoor swings and gliders are just in time for the spring weather.

AS A CHILD, HE PLAYED FOLLOW-THE-LEADER.
TODAY, HE IS THE LEADER.

Knowing how to follow is essential to growing up. But so is learning how to take charge. At Marion Military Institute, students learn responsibility, leadership and self-respect—attributes that give them the strength to take charge while still respecting others enough to know when to follow.

Marion is a private, independent four-year preparatory school and a two-year junior college based upon small classes and individual attention within a disciplined environment. Through special training and a structured lifestyle, students develop the self-confidence to take charge when needed and to listen to others as well.

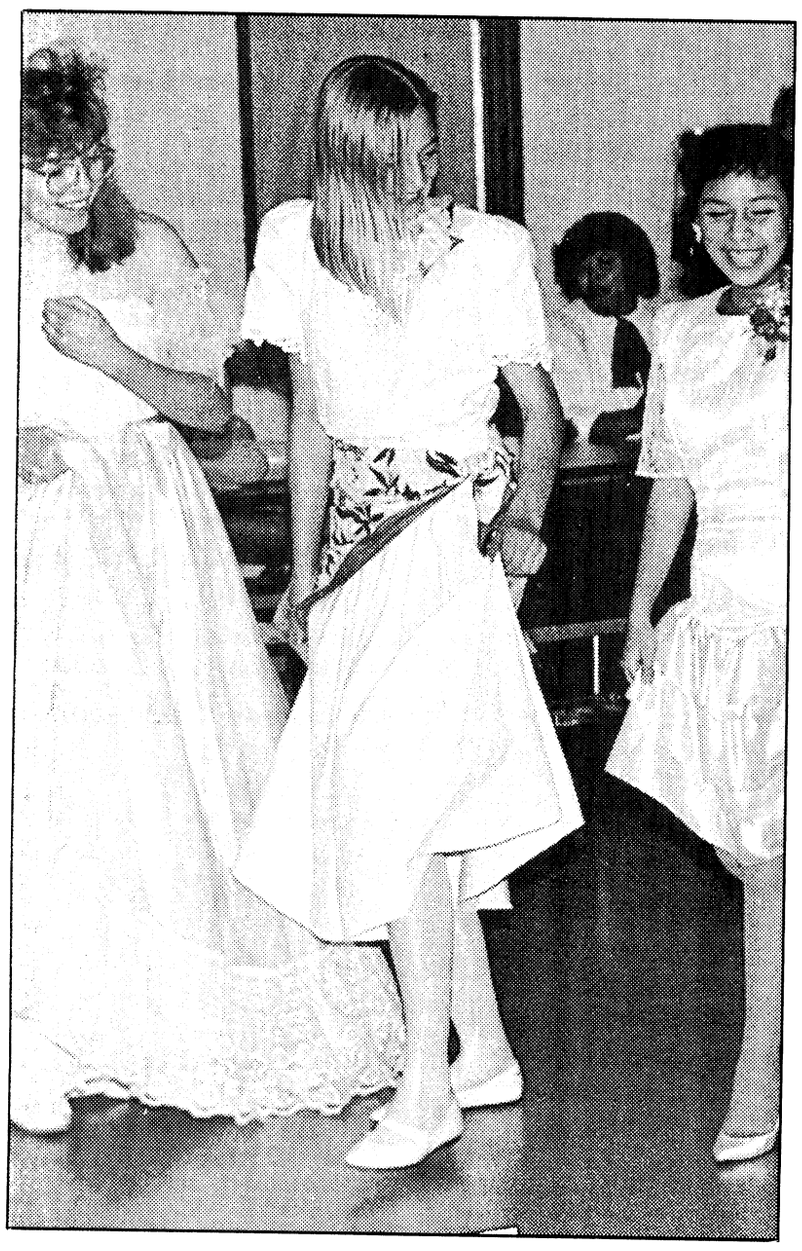
Students organize fiesta



David Bunt

Theresa Deer (left), Valeska Conze and Josie Chavaz dance at the Quinceneara.

Fort Benning Schools

Students in Guadalupe Chavez's Spanish class at Faith Middle School organized and participated in their own Quinceanera.

This is an ancient, Hispanic traditional ceremony that occurs on a girl's 15th birthday.

After careful study of the tradition, eighth-grade students decided to conduct a party, a fiesta, following traditional guidelines.

Traditional Hispanic dishes were prepared, and students practiced diligently during and after school to learn the dances.

When all was ready, students donned their fiesta clothing and invited parents and friends to watch the dance and to join in the fiesta.

The students selected Ayana Hudson, one of their class members, to be the honoree, the Quinceanera, at the fiesta.

Her honor court included class members: Stephanie Alejos, Lee Bunyea, Josie Chavez, Omar Calcador, Valeska Conze, Isabel Covas, Theresa Deer, Amie Delmore, Jason Enos, Eileen Fernandez, Jessica Fountain, Tabitha Gilbert, Joe Gutierre, Chris Herlong, Kevin Ivory, Kevin Maschek, Amy Mattison, Kerry Meade, Matthew Nahas, Tony Santiago, Dorsey Stancil, Thomas Tedrick, Juan Terrado, Kevin Vogel, D.J. Watford, Adrian Wallace, Daniel Waters, Shawanda Watkins and Danielle Woods.

Spanish is an elective subject at Faith Middle School.

Students in the sixth, the seventh and the eighth grades have the opportunity to participate in the course.

All six-graders participate in an introductory five-week course.

Seventh-graders have the opportunity to participate in a nine-week course, and eighth-graders have the opportunity to participate in a course that lasts all year.

Turn your Active Army experience into extra income.
GO ARMY RESERVE

You've worked hard to achieve your Active Army rank and pay grade. Now make your time in the Army work hard for you.

If you're considering getting out, consider the Army Reserve and the benefits it provides. Benefits such as low-cost life insurance, and PX and commissary privileges.

You could probably also use the steady extra income you'll receive every month from the Army Reserve. You'll get paid for weekend drills, which you attend at a unit that's close to where you plan on living–plus full Army pay for your two-week Annual Training period. Better yet, you'll retain your Active Army rank, pay grade and time in grade.

For more information, talk to your Chain-of-Command or the Reserve Component Transition NCO.

Ribbon cutting slated for ISTD's headquarters

A ribbon-cutting ceremony to celebrate the grand opening of the International Student Training Detachment's newly renovated headquarters will be at Olsen Hall, Building 399, Section E, May 11 at 11:30 a.m.

Civilian ambassadors from Columbus and Phenix City who support the international students have been invited.

Kindergarten Roundup slated for Tuesday

The Fort Benning Schools will sponsor Kindergarten Roundup Tuesday for the 1990-91 school year at Dexter, Loyd, McBride, Patch, Wilbur and Wilson schools.

Parents should phone individual schools for specific roundup times.

Children who will be 5 years of age on or before Sept. 1, 1990, are eligible to enter kindergarten this fall.

Parents are asked to bring their child to the assigned school to complete registration forms and to receive an information packet.

Parents are urged to bring the child's birth certificate to the roundup.

Roundup is a time for parents and children to become acquainted with the school principal and teachers and to see the school building.

While children still must be registered in the fall, roundup is a time for parents to learn about necessary forms for registration and to ask questions about the coming school year.

Best Ranger

Pair that almost wasn't wins

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The winners of the ninth annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition didn't pair up until 10 minutes before the event began.

Staff Sgt. Mark Sheehan from 4th Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, explained the circumstances behind his being paired with Staff Sgt. Bobby Beiswanger also from 4th Bn.

"My partner caught pneumonia, and Beiswanger's partner was injured; so they threw us together at the last minute," he said.

They were among the 48 teams that started the competition April 27, and by the next morning and four events later, all that remained were the 14 teams that eventually finished the competition.

Most of the teams dropped out in the marksmanship event and road march. Many more usually drop out in land navigation.

However, for the winners, land navigation turned out to be their best event.

They took second-place in that event. The Ranger Stakes was the only event in which they placed first and that's when they really started to get together.

They explained that on the first day they weren't exactly in sync with each other.

"We finished 22nd in the canoe event," Sheehan said, "and then there were some other minor things that were bothering us so we had a nice talk before the night stakes."

The meeting of the minds helped them realize exactly why they were there.

"We each have a strong desire to win," Sheehan said.

Savings Bond Campaign kicks off here

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

This year's U.S. Savings Bond Campaign officially began Tuesday after a kick-off breakfast April 25 at the Follow Me dining facility attended by commanders and representatives from nearly every major command or directorate.

The campaign will continue through May.

David L. Heinrich, Atlanta district director, U.S. Savings Bond Division, complemented Fort Benning personnel for their efforts in past campaigns.

Fort Benning placed second overall on the U.S. Treasury Department Honor Roll with more than 9,322 new or increased savings bond holders.

The post has placed on the honor roll since 1984.

According to David Flo, Director of Resource Management, this year's goal is to increase the number of new enrollees and the number of current holders who raise their allotments.

According to Heinrich, bonds are a great way for young soldiers to start a savings plan.

Some other benefits of saving bonds:

- Competitive market-based interest rates — Interest earnings are based on market performance when a bond is held five years or longer.
- Affordable — Savings bonds come in denominations to fit almost every budget. They cost one-half of face value. Purchase prices start at $50.
- Easy to buy — Savers can choose from a wide variety of payroll allotments. There is no fee to buy or redeem savings bonds.
- Tax advantage — The interest earned on savings bonds is exempt from state and local income taxes, and Federal tax reporting may be deferred until bonds are cashed or reach maturity.
- Tax-free funds for education — Interest earned on savings bonds purchased on or after Jan. 1, 1990, when used to pay tuition and fees of institutions of higher learning, may be tax free.

This applies not only to children, but to adults returning to school, as well.

- Safety — Lost, stolen or destroyed bonds are replaced free of charge.
- Good for America — Savings bonds strengthen the national economy by increasing saving and reducing the cost of financing debts.

Each major unit or directorate on post has a project officer for the campaign.

'Devils in Baggy Pants' return to Fort Benning

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Characters from the book "Those Devils in Baggy Pants," written by Ross Carter, stepped out of the pages and back to the place where it all began during a reunion here April 26 to 28.

The book is an account of the 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment's battles in Africa and Europe during World War II, and the characters in the book were trained at Fort Benning.

Although the names have been changed, the characters are based on people with whom Carter served during the war.

The reunion was conducted in conjunction with the anniversary celebration, according to Charles Butler.

Although the unit has had several reunions with the 82nd Airborne Division, this is one of the few they had separately, said retired Col. Frank Dietrich, who made three combat jumps during the war.

He and Carter were best friends. He is also a character in the book.

Although Carter is gone, his memory lives on in the minds of those attending the reunion.

"Comradeship made in war time is closer than blood kin in some respects both collectively and individually," Dietrich said.

"We all really enjoy getting together and talking about the good times and members of our unit," he said.

Although not a part of the 504th, Dietrich's son Capt. Max Dietrich, currently assigned here, spent some time with the men during the many activities.

Dietrich has followed in his father's footsteps and was recently awarded a combat star on his parachutist badge for his participation in Operation Just Cause.

Paratroopers get gold wings

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Silver turned to gold for members of the original Airborne Test Platoon when they were awarded 18-karat parachutist badges by Commanding General Michael F. Spigelmire.

They were given the badges during one of the many events conducted April 26 to celebrate the Golden Anniversary of the Airborne.

Fifty years ago, on Aug. 15, 1940, the test platoon made its first jump from an Army aircraft.

The first officer to jump, retired Brig. Gen. William T. Ryder was on hand for the ceremony and was the first to receive his gold wings from Spigelmire.

Ryder and the rest of the platoon attended a graduation, an airborne-in-action ceremony and a wreath-laying ceremony at Airborne Walk.

Also during the Airborne Walk Ceremony, a time capsule containing Airborne Memorabilia was dedicated.

Benning CG to get third star

USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's been officially announced that Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire has been nominated for his third star and will be assigned to the U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, commander of the 7th Infantry Division (Light), Fort Ord, Calif. has been selected as the new Chief of Infantry.

Spigelmire has been at Fort Benning since late 1988.

Cavessa, 52, like Spigelmire is a former commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade. He is also a former post chief of staff.

Dates of promotion and reassignment have not been released.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: As a World War II veteran, what's the biggest change you've seen in Airborne?

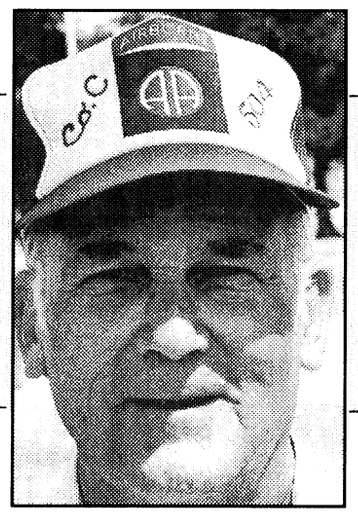
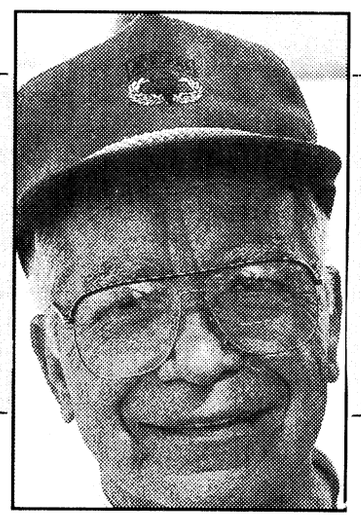
Joe Jilton, Co. C, 504th PIR — "I think everything's changed, but I guess the best change is the parachute. In my day, the opening shock was enough to give you a nosebleed."



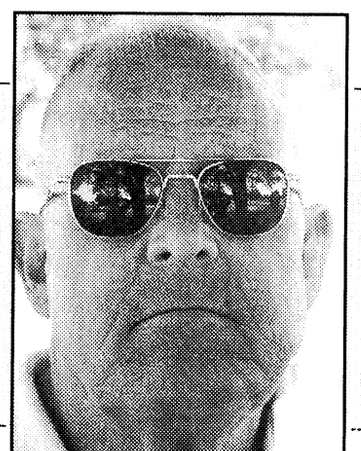
Ross Pippin, Co. C, 504th PIR — "There aren't any real visible changes. The equipment looks the same, but everything, of course, has been improved. I have noticed there was more discipline then, than now."

Charles Butler, Co. C, 504th PIR — "I think the biggest change is allowing females to attend Airborne School."

Robert Lowery, Co. C, 504th PIR — "I think the biggest change is the type of aircraft used. The planes we used to jump out of held 12 people, and now they hold more than 50."



Ernest Kong, Co. C, 504th PIR — "I think the biggest change is that the airborne is now fully integrated. Now all races and women are jumping together."



Frank Deitrich, Co. C, 504th PIR — "The biggest change is the T-10 parachute, which is an improved means of getting from the plane to the ground. Although the T-10 came out in the 50s, it has been modified since then."

Ruggers make their own rules

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Notice more than the usual number of large people walking around with crooked noses, bite marks, and pieces of their ears missing?

How about smallish, bow-legged guys who look like they may have just stepped off the docks of Liverpool and who are spoiling for a fight?

Chances are, you've just met some Ruggers.

Ruggers are people who don't have both oars in the water, thus enabling them to voluntarily sign up to play Rugby.

The scars and crippled arms and legs come from what, in the genteel world of those who participate in such sports as baseball and football, are known as post game parties.

"Blow outs," while coming closer to describing one of these after the game imbroglios or brou-ha-has, are like nothing anyone outside the Rugby world has experienced before.

Hells Angel motorcycle gangs and their drunken brawls would come off as a tea party next to a Rugby toot.

The songs alone would make a sailor blush. I'm not referring to their inability to carry a tune but to the words.

Try adapting a Rugby bat song to a unit run cadence, and you'd be run off post.

But these Rugby Saturnalias are all in good fun and are the reason so many otherwise sane people put up with a little joint bending, head-knocking, bone-breaking exercise on a periodic basis.

Rugby competition on post is nothing new. In fact we just hosted an Armed Forces championship not too long ago.

But you can't have real rugby unless you have teams from Down Under and Great Britain.

Scotland may have given the world golf in an effort to avenge some imagined wrong, but it was Her Majesty's English who gave us Rugby. The "old boys club," in fact.

Americans took the "rough" out of rugby, applied modern technology — pads and forward passes to the game and called it football, which the rest of the world thinks is soccer until they actually see a game of American football.

Then they know — they ain't the same.

But anyway, if you're morbid, want to see some ears ripped off, knees whacked out of joint, all at a nonstop pace, then French and Blue fields are the places to be this weekend.

Just don't feed your kids to the ruggers and stay away from the parties if you want to see Monday.

To help you better understand the sport in order that you might appreciate it more, I thought I'd give you a primer on the rules. That was until I realized I didn't quite understand them.

I do know scoring is done by booting the ball through what we call goal posts.

Normally one gets three points for such an act.

However, if it follows touching the ball down across the goal (3 points) then it's like a conversion and only counts two points.

You should also acquaint yourself with such terms as mauls and scrummages and remember there are loose and tight scrums.

There are 15 players on a side. They go by such names as forwards, 8; scrum half, 1; stand off half, 1; three-quarters backs, 4; and full back, 1.

The game usually consists of two 40-minute halves with a lot of action.

As a Frenchman once noted: "If the English call this playing — what do they call fighting?"

Or, to quote a common bumper sticker, "Rugby players have leather balls."

May dedicated to Asian-Pacific Americans

In recognition of Asian-Pacific Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, May is proclaimed "Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month" at Fort Benning.

The theme for this year's observance is "Asian-Pacific Americans: Commitment, Contribution and New Direction" and marks the 12th anniversary of this observance.

The United States as a nation is comprised almost entirely of immigrants and their descendants.

There are now more than four million Americans who trace their ancestry to Asia or the Pacific Islands.

Their history is one of proud accomplishment with many contributions to the arts, literature, science, agriculture, industry, commerce and the U.S. Armed Forces.

Asian-Pacific Americans have contributed significantly in the struggle for America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity.

Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month fosters an increased national awareness of the history and contributions of these people.

It also inspires a renewed sense of pride among Asian-Pacific Americans.

I encourage everyone to enjoy activities here during "Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month."

LETTERS

I recently underwent major surgery in Atlanta, Ga.

Since this was my fifth surgery in seven years, my civilian sick leave was depleted, and I had borrowed nearly the maximum amount allowed.

I was facing 10 to 12 weeks without a paycheck.

Thanks to the generosity of fellow employees at Martin Army Community Hospital and other civilians at Fort Benning, some of whom I've never met, 393 hours were donated on my behalf.

Their unselfishness and concern allowed me to face this difficult time without worry about my income.

I hope you will print my letter so that these civilian employees will know just how truly grateful I am.

Please also know that I had numerous offers of leave from some of the military members, but regulations precluded receiving their donations.

Reductions should not be at soldiers' expense

Reserve Officers Association

"Peace dividend" reductions in the military should not be at the expense of servicemembers, according to the Reserve Officers Association.

Recently, the ROA executive committee called for the Congress to minimize the adverse impact of involuntary separations.

Measures proposed include separation pay for enlisted personnel and an increase in the amount given to officers; tax breaks for this pay, either by spreading the tax liability over several years or making the payments tax exempt; and giving these personnel priority in filling vacancies at other federal agencies.

Chaired by Col. Samuel P. Mitchell, ROA president, the executive committee approved a position taken in an editorial in the April issue of "The Officer" magazine.

"If a 'peace dividend' is made possible by a thaw in the Cold War, it definitely should not be at the expense of those who have made the world safer through service to their country," said the editorial.

"There is growing pressure to cut defense spending, and ROA is concerned that the soldiers may now suffer the most as military forces are reduced."

Noting that changes in the national security threat make defense cuts inevitable, the editorial takes issue with "those Americans who would now rush to throw the all-volunteer military forces on history's trash heap and slash defense spending by tens of billions of dollars in this fiscal year.

Force reductions can and should be made prudently, and fairness demands that those who volunteered to serve in uniform are not discarded like out-grown articles of clothing."

However, professionals who chose to serve will suddenly be told they no longer have a job."

The ROA position also looks toward other elements of the federal government, which will be filling vacancies caused by normal attrition or new tasks, including the Department of Justice, Drug Enforcement Administration, Customs Service, Federal Aviation Administration and environmental agencies.

"ROA encourages the Administration and the Congress to consider giving severed military personnel priority in other federal hiring and reduce some of the hurdles military people would normally encounter in seeking federal employment," the editorial suggests.

"By utilizing terminated skilled military personnel substantial savings could be enjoyed," the editorial read.

The federal government could realize significant savings in administrative costs while moving severed military personnel into much-needed jobs."

Severing men and women from the military forces will undermine service morale and question our nation's volunteer force credibility.

ROA believes that the Administration and Congress must take effective action now. Patriotism deserves nothing more; fairness demands nothing less!"

Ranger

Winning is nothing new to Sheehan who was Fort Benning's NCO of the Year in 1988.

He quickly added everyone in the competition has an equal chance at winning.

"It's just a matter of how hard you're willing to push," Sheehan said.

They pushed so hard that Beiswanger dropped from exhaustion at the finish line of the last event.

Once it was determined he was all right, the excitement caught up with the winners.

The Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Carl E. Vuono awarded them meritorious service medals and handed them the Berettas.

The Rangers will go back to their respective instructor positions.

Sheehan hinted that he might apply for Officer Candidate School to test himself further.

"Three days of competition is not going to change me," Beiswanger said.

It's not going to change them because they are soldiers not athletes.

Vuono said at the awards ceremony, "Although it's athletically oriented it really represents events that will make a difference between victory and defeat or life and death on the battlefield."

The soldiers traveled far to compete in this race of Rangers.

The group that traveled the farthest was from Berlin, W. Germany. In the past three years five teams from Berlin have entered the competition and made it to the end.

Post schools plan special activities for Law Day USA

Fort Benning Schools

The students, teachers and administrators of the Fort Benning Schools along with the Staff Judge Advocate's Office have developed a variety of activities in recognition of Law Day 1990.

The theme for this year is "Generation of Justice." This was interpreted in several ways by the various schools.

Artwork, audio-visual presentations and student essays were evident in all of the grades at Benning.

Col. Michael J. Nardotti, Staff Judge Advocate, visited each school to judge the overall school competition.

Winner of the traveling plaque was the Edward A. White School.

The display at White featured a "Vine of Laws," which extended up and down the main hallways. Each leaf of the vine was representative of a significant event in legal and social history.

In addition, each section of the school presented an audio-visual presentation narrated by students from that particular section.

The presentations were mini-history lessons about people involved in key legal issues.

All the essay contest winners were from Lisa Galloway's sixth-grade class at Faith School.

These winners were given savings bonds, certificates and bookmarks at a special luncheon Tuesday.

Winners were: Karen Adams, first place; Solange Guillaume, second place; and Tonya Noel, third place.

A poster contest was staged for students in kindergarten through fifth grade. The winners received certificates and bookmarks.

Winners in grade 3-5 are:

1st place, Bryn Maddox, 5th grade White School.

2nd place, Lindsey Burton, 4th grade, White School.

3rd place, Fairal Warren, 4th grade, White School.

Winners in K-2 are

1st place, Jerome Newton, 2nd grade, Wilson School.

2nd place, Anna Hobby, 2nd grade, Dexter School.

3rd place, Kantrele King, Kindergarten, Wilbur School.

ROTC students from 9 universities gather for Bold Leader 10

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

About 200 Reserve Officer Training Course cadets from nine universities gathered here April 27 to 29 for exercise Bold Leader 10.

Sponsored by the Auburn University Army ROTC, the exercise is set up like a mini-camp to prepare cadets for the annual Third Region ROTC Advance Camp at Fort Riley, Kan.

According to Capt. Jim Ives, operation officer at Auburn, the mini-camp is for cadets in their military science year — or third-year — in school.

Each summer, about 2,800 cadets from universities in the third region attend the six-week course.

After arriving at Harmony Church, the cadets inprocessed. Later, they were divided up into two companies and proceeded to learn about barracks life.

"Although the cadets train all year, most of the universities can't create a barracks or tactical environment, so it's necessary for us to come here.

After a battalion run the next morning, the cadets completed a four-hour land navigation course.

Other missions included a night in a tactical patrol base, completing a roadmarch, and finishing the squad tactical reaction assessment course.

According to Ives, the cadet were evaluated by cadre members on their abilities to plan and execute orders.

Fifty officers and senior noncommissioned officers from th universities made up the cadre.

May is High Blood Pressure Awareness Month

Community Health Nursing

The term "Silent Killer" is used synonymously with high blood pressure since this condition may go unnoticed in many individuals.

It is a major cause of increased risk for stroke, heart attack and kidney disease.

One out of four American adults is affected by high blood pressure, and it can be controlled but not cured. Many deaths can be prevented if high blood pressure is detected early and managed properly.

The Community Health Nurses, in coordination with the Occupational Health Nurses, the American Red Cross and the American Heart Association, will be offering blood pressure screenings and education at various locations here.

Saturday and May 12, from noon to 4 p.m., blood pressure screenings and educational information will be offered at the Post Exchange and commissary.

They will be offered again at the commissary May 22 from 10 a.m. through noon.

During the week of May 14, an educational video will be shown all day in the Martin Army Community Hospital Pharmacy lobby and a "salt-down" will be conducted in the dining facility.

May 21 and 23, blood pressure screenings will be offered in Building 4.

Screeners will be in Classroom 53 on May 21, and in Classroom 51 on May 23, from 11 a.m. through 1 p.m., and again from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Screeners will be at Burnheim Dental Clinic each Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday during the first four weeks of May from 9 to 11 a.m. to test soldiers.

197th hosts Army Birthday Ball

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

The 197th Infantry Brigade will sponsor the Fort Benning observance of the 215th birthday of the U.S. Army and 213th birthday of the American flag with the annual Army Birthday Ball June 16 at 6 p.m. in the Main NCO Club.

"In our continuing celebration of the Year of the NCO, this is a totally NCO-organized event," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie G. Bowles, brigade command sergeant major.

"I encourage all noncommissioned officers, corporal through command sergeant major, to attend with their spouses."

Units of the 197th are scheduled to display and post an array of flags for the event, including the 50 state flags along the front of the NCO Club and regimental flags inside the ballroom.

The 283rd Army Band is slated to perform during the posting and retiring of the colors.

According to Bowles, soldiers must wear dress blues or greens with white shirt and bow tie, and spouses should wear formal attire.

Tickets are available through all organizational command sergeants major at a cost of $12.60 for a chicken dinner or $16.80 for prime rib.

A complimentary wine glass will be given to everyone attending the event.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. While car shopping recently, my wife and I found a new car that seems perfect for our needs.

We have saved by allotment and have enough to pay cash if we wish.

The salesperson showed us on a computer that it is actually cheaper to finance the car than to pay cash.

Is this for real?

A. To date, more than 5,000 automobile dealerships in the U.S. have purchased computer program packages that can help make almost all the calculations involved in purchasing a new car.

The colorful and interesting displays are used by the sales force for one reason: to help sell cars.

Most of us realize this is a gadget, a legitimate marketing tool that does not have anything to do with the cost of the car to the dealer, the cost of options, or the real value of the "deal" you are getting.

It is common knowledge that the salesperson manipulates the figures in a transaction so that he makes a reasonable profit and you feel good about "beating" the dealer.

But deep down, you know that few car dealers lose money on new car sales.

Saying that financing "cheaper and paying cash" is just another gimmick.

It is common sense to reason that no loan is cheaper than paying cash.

But in the atmosphere of the sales situation, where we want to believe, it can be made plausible.

When we offer to pay cash, the dealership loses commissions on financing.

To prevent this, the finance person goes through a computer exercise, which fails to mention a couple of essential items, and presto! financing suddenly seems cheaper.

It works this way: You plan to pay $11,434 for a 1990 Buzzmobile.

When you offer to pay cash, you are asked "how much are you earning on your savings?" You reply "8.5 percent."

He plugs this in the computer and informs you that you can make $6,029 by leaving the savings in the bank.

He then computes the cost of your loan (let's say at 12.75 percent): this shows that the total cost making 60 monthly payments is $4,153. "See?", he says, "you save $1,876 by financing."

But there's more. In five years you trade the car and get $5,000.

Add the money still in the bank ($11,434), the trade-in value ($5,000) and the gain of $1,876 from financing, and you have saved a total of $18,310, while the cash buyer has no cash in the bank and a car worth $5,000.

But the real figures, according to a leading accounting firm, are different.

The computer sales pitch has omitted income taxes on interest and the total loan repayment cost.

Taxes on interest over the five-year period will lower the actual interest earnings significantly.

The total repayment costs of the loan is not $4,153, but about $15,600, 60 monthly payments of about $260. Thus, by paying cash for the car and continuing an allotment of $260 payment into a seven-percent savings account, the buyer winds up with about $17,800 in the bank after five years, after taxes and a car worth $5,000.

Paying cash beats financing in this example by $7,400.

Pay attention to your own common sense when you enter any sales situation.

Deception, whether actually illegal or not, costs you money.

TV star visits post

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Nobody rigged the showers and nobody called him "ferret face." In fact, during his visit here April 25 Maj. Frank Burns, of the hit comedy series MASH, got nothing but respect.

Members of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital extended only the warmest of receptions for Larry Linville.

Linville, who opens a stage production next week in Saskatchewan, Canada, stopped first at the Fort Benning MASH unit en route from his home in Florida.

He was given a brief presentation of the unit's makeup and mission and a guided tour of the latest MASH facilities, including the new top-of-the-line Deployable Medical Systems.

Aside from his long-standing involvement with the television series, based on the actual experiences of MASH units during the Korean War, Linville had a personal interest in military medicine, as well.

His grandfather, Milo Kennedy, was an Army surgeon stationed at Lyons, France, during World War I.

After a brief meeting at company headquarters, Linville was escorted to the motor pool where he was given a guided tour by 2nd MASH Commander Lt. Col. Barry O. Williams and Company Commander Capt. Sharon A. Barnes of the unit's latest facilities and emergency techniques.

Barnes said the new equipment was part of the "force modernization" currently aimed at upgrading present Army medical facilities.

Linville was visibly impressed with the tour and said he was amazed with "the organization's proficiency" and its "extraordinary people and equipment."

With his relaxed attitude and a smile for everyone, the screen star was an immediate hit with the soldiers.

He posed for numerous pictures and signed autographs, many on surgical masks, empty bandage packets, or whatever else was handy.

The soldiers begged him for stories of the series, which ran more than 10 years and still runs in syndication worldwide.

"The plot stories often came from true stories written by actual war participants. We found the true stories much more interesting than anything the writers could come up with," he said.

"At first we thought the series would be a disaster because it had come from a movie."

He said television series that had been adapted from hit movies in the early 1970s invariably suffered poor viewership and were usually short-lived.

"The secret was we used stage actors, and it was wonderfully written."

A stage actor himself, Linville trained at the Royal Academy in London. He said he appreciated good writing most of all.

When considering a script, the acting veteran said he preferred something "light, maybe a little sad, but definitely well-written."

Linville, who played an inept, bumbling surgeon for 125 of the show's 200 episodes, said a reunion of the cast members has been discussed but he could not confirm whether it would actually take place.

In appreciation of the visit, with a dash of 2nd MASH humor, Williams presented a Meal, Ready-to-Eat to the actor, who said he had never seen one.

Then, in true Army tradition, Williams gave Linville a government pen — and had him sign for the MRE.

Soldier's 'green thumb' yields vegetable garden for company

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Kelley Hill has its own Johnny Appleseed — a soldier from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry.

Sgt. John Harper is putting his natural talents and farm skills to good use by planting numerous types of fruits and vegetables around the company.

"What I'm doing is taking an area around the company where grass doesn't grow well — or at all — and planting garden vegetables for soldiers and family members to enjoy this fall," Harper said.

"God gave us this land to take care of, and the way I see it, if there is no grass growing under your feet, plant something," said 1st Sgt. Peter Liunoras.

"This type of program is educational and rewarding for the entire company. Some soldiers in the company are from large cities and haven't seen a garden in their life, let alone have any idea how to go about planting and taking care of one.

"Having a company garden gives the soldiers an opportunity to learn from something they otherwise may not be able to experience."

Company Commander Capt. Scott Dolloff commended both Liunoras and Harper for taking the initiative and off-duty time to institute their unique "Green Thumb" program.

Karate students kick, punch in self-defense

Christopher Lewis kicks Alex Serrano. Keith Johnson

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

A karate tournament for 22 children was at the Fort Benning Youth Activities Center April 23.

The children, ages 5 through 13, receive karate training every Monday and Wednesday evening from 6:30 to 8:30 at the center.

The instructor, Sgt. David Bauzo, is a third-degree black belt who has been teaching for 21 years.

The tournament consisted of two separate competitions.

The first, called Kata, has each child demonstrating a series of kicks and punches against an imaginary opponent while yelling out the word "Kiai" to scare the opponent.

The parents applauded each childs' yell whether loud and strong or less threatening.

"They are all winners," Bauzo said. "It takes a lot of courage to stand up and perform in front of a crowd."

Five judges, brown belts from the class, graded the children on focus, power, technique and balance in the Kata portion of the tournament.

The children were separated by belt degree and age groups.

A white belt means two months of training, yellow is six months and green and blue are 10 to 12 months.

The second competition, called Kumite, pits each child against an opponent of the same height, weight and age.

Points are scored for proper use of basic fighting techniques in attack or defense. The children wear pads to guard against injury.

Trophies were awarded for first, second and third place, so each child went home with a trophy.

According to Bauzo, a supply sergeant with the School of the Americas, karate training develops self-confidence and builds self-esteem in the children.

"The parents enroll their kids in the class because they know karate builds concentration and discipline," Bauzo said, "which means better grades in school."

Interested parents should call Billie Smith, director of the Youth Activities Center, at 545-3070.

All-Army wrestlers win again

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The All-Army Wrestling Team, led by an unbeatable Derrick Waldroup, claimed the second-place trophy in Division II of the National Championships at the Las Vegas Convention Center April 18 through 21.

The Army team, fresh from upsetting the Marine Corps team for the Armed Forces Championship in March, made this finish their highest ever at the National Championships.

Of the 11 Army wrestlers at the championships, six placed in the top seven of their weight divisions; this in a computer field of more than 215 wrestlers.

Waldroup, a silver medalist at the 1987 Pan Am Games, overwhelmed all of his opponents.

Out of eight matches, he pinned six of his opponents in a total time of seven minutes and 48 seconds, winning the award for the most falls in the least amount of time.

In the championship match, Waldroup pinned Mark Black of Columbus, Ohio, in 16 seconds.

By winning the national title, Waldroup automatically made the U.S. team, which will wrestle top international teams in the Concord (California) International Wrestling Championship at the end of May.

He will also wrestle with the U.S. team at the 1990 Pan Am Championships this summer and compete in the World Team Trials in July.

Also placing in the National Championships were Benning's Rodney Smith, fourth place; and Pete Gomez, seventh place.

Head Coach Tony Thomas, a former national champion, said, "I'm proud of all our teams' performances, especially our young wrestlers who, for the first time, got a taste of national level competition."

Former All-Army standout Randy Coutere took first place in the 198-pound division.

Coutere left the Army in 1988 to wrestle at Oklahoma State University on a full scholarship, where he holds a 4.0 grade point average and is a member of the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Thomas said he hoped Coutere would serve as an example to commanders of the purpose of the Army Sports Program.

Drivers fire up Talladega

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Talladega Superspeedway in Talladega, Ala., is gearing up for a weekend of racing, beginning Saturday at noon with round one of the International Race of Champions followed by the Automobile Racing Club of America Bumper To Bumper 500K.

Sunday the superstars of racing will fire up their engines for the start of the 21st annual Winston 500 NASCAR/FIA stock car race at 1 p.m.

The speedway, located on Speedway Boulevard, which runs next to I-20 between Birmingham, Ala. and Atlanta, Ga. off exits 168 and 173, is the fastest in the world, having had several of the fastest 500-mile races in history.

The 1985 Winston 500 has the distinction of being the fastest with a average speed of 186.288 miles per hour by Bill Elliot.
Elliot also hold the record for the fastest qualifying speed set at 212.809 miles per hour for the 1987 Winston 500.

Davey Allison will be back again this year to try for the first back-to-back win of the Winston 500 in 14 years.
el,3 It was first accomplished by Buddy Baker in 1975 and 1976.

Allison already has one win under his belt this year — the Valleydale 500 in Bristol, Tenn.

"Now that we've won on the world's fastest short track, we are ready to win on the world's fastest speedway," said Allison.

"We are focused for the rest of the season now," he said.

At age 26, Allison became the youngest driver ever to win the Winston 500.

He led 94 of the 188 laps last year, setting a record for most-laps-led for the race. The average speed was 155.869 miles per hour.

For Allison, racing at Talladega is "coming home."

"There's a definite home court advantage for us here," he said.

Allison, in the Texaco Havoline Ford, from Hueytown, Ala., is only one of five Alabama drivers who has sent entries in for the race.

Joining him will be four other members of the famed "Alabama Gang."

On hand will be Mickey Gibbs, Glencoe, Ala., in the 01 Special Days Inn Ford; Stanley Smith, Chelsea, Ala., in the 22 Interstate Battery Pontiac; Jimmy Means, Huntsville, Ala., in the 52 Alka-Seltzer Pontiac; and Hut Stricklin, Calera, Ala., driving the TriStar Motorsports Pontiac.

Five drivers from Georgia have sent in entries, but North Carolina leads with nine entries, including such great names as Richard Petty, Dale Earnhardt, Morgan Shepherd, Harry Gant and Buddy Baker.

Tickets for both the Winston 500 and the International Race of Champions, which will be part of a doubleheader with the Bumper To Bumper 500K, are on sale at the speedway ticket office.

SPIRITUAL

Local judge delivers Holocaust message

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A single candle burned for 11 million people who will never see the flame.

A promise made 45 years ago brought retired Col. Aaron Cohn to Building 4 last week to participate in the post's fifth annual Holocaust Observance.

Cohn, a Juvenile Court Judge in Columbus, delivered a moving, poignant speech, which included first-hand accounts of the liberation of a small satellite death camp of World War II.

Aaron Cohn

More than a retelling of the horrendous stories of torture and cruelty, Cohn's words included a positive plan for future generations to use the knowledge of the Holocaust.

Cohn recounted to the noontime audience how he was among American soldiers who were able to shut down the horrible death camps of Nazi Germany.

He promised one of the survivors he would always tell the story of what he found, so that this atrocity would never be repeated.

"The soldiers of the U.S. Army have always been liberators and always will be," he said

Cohn added several stories from his years in the Army since being commissioned in the Cavalry in 1937.

Remarks and a documentary film of war-time footage were combined to honor the 11 million non-combat victims of the Nazi Holocaust.

The tribute involved the commitment to the dignity of life and the preservation of the human spirit.

Of the civilian deaths at the hands of the dreaded SS, the secret police, and armed security forces of the Nazi party, more than 11 million were non-combat fatalities, of whom six million were Jews.

Cohn recounted how he was among American soldiers who were able to shut down the death camps of Nazi Germany.

The Jews were targeted for total annihilation. Five million others fell victim to Nazi hatred for a variety of prejudices.

With final remarks, the accounts and reflections were symbolically completed.

The flame on the single candle was extinguished, but in the hearts and minds of millions of people for generations past and to come, the light from a single candle still burns.

God gave Jonah another chance

By Roland G. Clemente
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry

"Now the word of the Lord came to Jonah, the second time. . ."

Have you ever been amazed at how frail and susceptible to failure we are?

Recently, families were graced with the opportunity to review their children's report cards.

To some families, this was an emotional experience. In the front of their eyes, stood the hopes they had for their children to do better than themselves.

To some, it was a disappointment. How many parents threw their hands up in the air that day and gave up?

Have you ever wondered how God felt toward Jonah? A minister of the Lord High God, a prophet in his time, a man of national reknown, and yet, he stubbornly refused to obey God.

He refused to preach this one small sermon, to extend God's grace to Israel's enemy. Did God give up on him?

How about Elijah? In a fit of depression and self pity, he hid in a cave and refused to believe that God could protect him. Did God want to give up? I would have.

If I were God, I would have rolled down the rocks and shut up the cave — let him rot in the dark.

If we were God, we would have called JAWS to take care of Jonah, not a custom-built taxi.

If we were God, we would have changed. . .what — our children's study habits, Their friends, our reticent family member? What of our bosses and the President? How about me and and you?

Thank God, I am not God. For God came to Jonah "the second time" (Jonah 3:1).

To Elijah, God sent the Angel of the Lord "a second time" (1 King 19:7). I need "second times," too. Don't you?

The same grace that he gives us, we need to show one another.

Quarters cleaning contracts to expire

Family Housing Office

The Quarters Cleaning Initiative is being phased out as cleaning contracts expire or as funds are depleted.

Fort Benning will run out of cleaning funds May 31, according to Family Housing officials.

Therefore, effective June 1, residents of military family housing will be responsible for cleaning their own quarters or paying someone to clean them.

Residents who clear quarters on or before May 31 because of permanent change of station, expiration of term of service or retirement, will have their quarters cleaned by the government.

Those who clear quarters June 1 or later, for whatever reason, will be responsible for cleaning their own quarters.

Residents who elect to hire an approved cleaning team will be cleared from quarters upon presenting the Family Housing Office a copy of a signed cleaning contract and a certified check or money order and after completing a damage inspection.

Prior to the damage inspection, residents must ensure that all preventive maintenance, self-help, yard work and furniture turn-in have been completed.

Failure to accomplish all requirements could delay out-processing.

Residents should schedule a pre-termination inspection at least 45 days before their planned departure.

This is required so inspectors can inform residents what needs to be repaired and cleaned.

It also gives the shops lead time to order any needed parts or materials that may be required.

Residents will not be cleared until all preventive maintenance and self-help work have been accomplished.

Those interested in becoming "Approved Quarters Cleaning Teams" should contact Terri Cook, Family Housing Office, building 399, 545-3107.

Parents go to polls Tuesday; choose school representatives

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning parents will head for the polls Tuesday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. to elect school board representatives for the Wilson, McBride, Patch and Wilbur schools, as well as "at large" seats for president and chaplain representative.

Representatives are elected for two-year terms.

Faith, Loyd, Dexter and White schools' representatives have one more year remaining in their two-year terms of office.

Parents or guardians are eligible to vote for school representatives in each school where they have a child in attendance.

Votes for the "at large" seats may be cast by each sponsor only once.

Absentee ballots for eligible voters who are unable to vote on election day can be obtained if the parent has a legitimate and prior commitment preventing voting from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on election day.

Applications for absentee ballots can be obtained by visiting the school's office until close of business Monday.

Voting will take place at each school. Sealed boxes will be placed in centralized locations.

When the ballots are counted, no fewer than three eligible voters will be present.

There are six candidates running in the upcoming election. All of these candidates will run on uncontested ballots.

The candidates are as follows:

President — Col. Reginald Moore

Chaplain Representative — Chap. (Capt.) Richard Garrison

Wilson School — Connie Acton

Patch School — Usa Iverson

McBride School — Sgt. Richard S. Hott

Wilbur School — Tech. Sgt. Randy W. Childers

Fort Benning lauds volunteer workers

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

A ceremony recognizing Fort Benning volunteers was at the Officers' Supper Club April 25.

Hosted by post Commander Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Michael F. Spigelmire, the reception was to honor three volunteer nominee groups.

Recognized as Volunteer of the Quarter was Leslie Bunting.

Receiving the Governor's Volunteer Awards were Bunting, Sherry Bunyea, Wanda Campbell, Kathy Moloney, Peggy Paape and Rebecca Watts.

Receiving Certificates of Achievement as Fort Benning's National Volunteer Week Outstanding Volunteers were Connie Acton, Sunny Buljung, Bunting, Sherri Cooper, Irmgard Cordell, Lee Friebaum, Chong Kropik, Angelika Lopez, Veretta Mann, Pat Mednik, Mary Miller, Victoria Nightingale, Edwina Redfoot, Eileen Reid, Paula Smith, Helen Walnes, Anne Marie Warman, Elinor Warren, Inga Wills and Gary Hensley.

Installation Volunteer Coordinator Karen Crowley presented flowers to Diane Spigelmire; Pam Steele, wife of Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School and Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. William M. Steele; and Lola Garrett, wife of post Command Sergeant Major Edward E. Garrett, "for their untiring support and dedication to the volunteers and volunteer programs of Fort Benning."

Maj. Gen. Spigelmire said, "The volunteers are one of our most potent and valuable force multipliers.

"Take away the thousands of volunteers who support Fort Benning, or any community for that matter, and we'd probably come to a dead stop," he said.

He said at minimum wage, it would take more than $69 million to pay the thousands of Benning volunteers for their hundreds of thousands of hours work.

This, he said, should be compared to the $175 million budget allotted to Fort Benning as a whole.

"More than money, I think neighbors helping neighbors builds a cohesiveness in a community, helps people bond, which would not otherwise happen," said Spigelmire.

He quoted actor Danny Thomas, "All of us are born for a reason, but all of us don't discover why.

"Success in life has nothing to do with what you gain in life or accomplish for yourself. It's what you do for others."

John Robinson

Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Michael F. Spigelmire congratulate Leslie Bunting on being selected Fort Benning's Volunteer of the Quarter.

Be kind to commissary baggers

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There was a time I used to be a commissary shopper.

Emma was making more money than I, so it was decided I could shop for groceries.

One of the problems I had with the deal was never being sure what to tip the baggers.

So one day I ran off some quick calculations based on what I was tipping and soon decided that even baggers were making more money than I, a specialist with less than four years in service.

I dutifully reported that in the post newspaper. It wasn't long before I was deluged with phone calls and letters from baggers whose income had suddenly dipped.

Seems that in my calculations I neglected to take into consideration those who don't tip at all.

I didn't believe people would be brazen enough and so tight-fisted to skip tipping a bagger until the other day when I was strolling through the commissary parking lot and saw an incident that really got my blood to boiling.

I'm not sure what the age limit for baggers is, but I'm sure this young black lad was at the minimum age.

I do know the amount of groceries he loaded into this particular lady's (I use the term "lady" loosely) car far out-weighed him.

When he was finished, she hopped into her car and was getting ready to drive off when the bagger, in a most courteous and barely audible voice said, "Ma'am our only pay is from tips."

Well, from the lady's reaction, you'd have thought the kid had declared war on her and her family.

She exploded and called him racist names that can't be printed in this newspaper.

The boy stood there, mouth agape, not even believing he'd just heard what he did.

I couldn't believe it either.

Unfortunately, both of us were so dumbstruck that neither of us was able to get a license number.

But the incident really disturbed me, and I could tell the young bagger was shaken by it, too.

I asked him if that had happened before.

Nearly in tears, he said people had skimped on their tips before, but he'd never been called the names he'd been called that day.

I know people run short of cash. I know people have bad days. But what this lady did was absolutely inexcusable.

I hope that if this is her permanent demeanor, that if she really is the type of person her words would lead one to believe, that in the future, she'll take her business elsewhere.

If she was having a bad day and is feeling bad about what she did, I'd hope she would look up the bagger and apologize.

Unfortunately, I don't think this will happen. I think she'll continue to shop at Fort Benning, will continue to harbor her feelings and will definitely not apologize to anyone.

I can tell you this, If there's a next time, I'll be ready. I won't be caught flat-footed.

I'll certainly get the car tag and call anyone who needs calling to make sure that person never shops at Fort Benning again.

We can do without that person's business.

CG's message on energy conservation

Last summer the United States experienced one of the longest, hottest summers in history.

Some parts of the nation suffered brown-outs because of the unprecedented electrical demand caused by air conditioner loads.

Although Fort Benning also suffered from the heat, the post was able to operate within the energy budget, and, for the most part, residents and occupants remained comfortable.

I ask your support again this year in repeating last year's success.

Air conditioning can make or break Fort Benning's performance in meeting energy goals.

Energy managers negotiate contractual agreements with energy suppliers, and engineers design energy-saving projects when funds are available.

However, the bulk of our success in meeting goals and living within our energy budget depends upon how well individuals use energy, especially during the air-conditioning season.

In summer months, the amount of electricity we consume doubles because of the large amounts of energy used by air conditioners.

Providing air conditioning to family housing and most of the office space on Fort Benning makes a tremendous impact on our energy use.

Because of this, we all must exercise good judgment to ensure our most efficient use of air conditioning.

The less energy we use now during the mild days of spring, the more we'll have for the later hot days of summer.

I know that everyone living and working at Fort Benning will play a positive role in our effort to conserve energy.

Our efforts at conservation today will help to ensure energy for tomorrow.

Don't reduce forces at expense of soldiers

Defense Report

In our headlong rush to cash in on the so-called peace dividend, there seems to be little or no thought given to what is really going on in today's world.

Isn't anyone concerned about what the precipitous reduction in our defenses would do to the effectiveness of the remaining force or to the welfare of the people in the armed services?

Now that the budget and its implications for the defense program have been revealed, it appears that — for the Army in particular — the outcome is even worse than we might have imagined.

The Army leadership is talking about reducing the active Army to 580,000 — its size when the Korean War broke out.

There are others in Washington who would reduce the Army even more.

Moreover, there is pressure to ignore the Army game plan, which reduces the force at a sensible rate, retains its effectiveness, and still ensures fair treatment for the people in uniform.

Unfortunately, there are many who would simply slash immediately — not understanding or not caring about the consequences to the nation or to the people who wear its uniform.

To attempt to justify draconian cuts in our national security posture on the basis that the cold war is ended, really makes you wonder.

Certainly, true peace and stability are far from being the estate in Europe today.

The hope is there; but the reality is yet to come.

The domination of the Warsaw Pact has receded, but left in its wake are intense nationalism and some ancient feuds involving ethnic rivalries and territorial conflicts.

Also, the Russian army will continue to be the largest in the world — under any scenario, even arms control.

For our part, the U.S. Army has a good plan that would manage the reductions of our forces while preserving its quality and maintaining a high degree of readiness.

In addition, the Army plan ensures fair treatment for our high-quality soldiers and their families by holding personnel turbulence to a minimum, by foregoing many costly transfers of equipment and by minimizing disruptions to training.

In short, the Army plan would firmly back the moral commitment our government made when we asked these bright young soldiers to don their nation's uniform.

Congress should promptly and fully support the Army's reorganization plan.

MACH prepares to open a new ward

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital plans to open an additional ward for psychiatric patients who are CHAMPUS eligible.

This is being funded through the "CHAMPUS Initiative Program," under which suggestions for saving CHAMPUS funds were solicited.

Chief of Psychiatry Maj. Andrea C. Bradford submitted a proposal for an alternative use of CHAMPUS funds that was both cost effective and efficient.

This proposal allows MACH to do more for the money now being spent for CHAMPUS care for these beneficiaries.

By providing this additional service, MACH will save CHAMPUS money and, at the same time, will save money for its beneficiaries.

The planned ward will have 14 beds for retirees and family members.

At this time, MACH admits only active duty patients for inpatient psychiatric care.

U.S. Army Health Services Command provided $942,000 for fiscal year '90, the majority of which will be applied to staff salaries.

The entire staff, with the exception of Bradford and Maj. Bill Koehler, chief, Psychiatric Nursing Section, will be civilians.

The projected date for accepting patients is June '90. However, that depends on the success in hiring staff for the following positions:

- One Clinical Psychologist
- One Head Nurse
- Three Charge Nurses
- Three Staff Nurses
- One Professional Counselor
- Two Occupational Therapy Technicians
- Five Practical Nurses
- Eight Nursing Assistants
- One Ward Clerk

In addition to these positions, there are requirements for two civilian psychiatrists.

This new service will provide inpatient psychiatric care, psychological testing, group therapy, individual therapy, recreational activities, and patient education for patients who formerly were unable to receive this type of care through MACH.

Increasing services available to beneficiaries is another example of the Martin Care tradition of quality.

Qualified persons interested in employment opportunities, may call Grace Watson at 545-1610/3013.

Fort Benning observes Law Day USA

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

In observance of Law Day USA, there was a luncheon and awards ceremony at the Officers' Club May 1.

First recognized by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1958, Law Day continues to stand as a commemoration to the rule of law in our society.

Organized by the Staff Judge Advocate's Office and the Columbus Lawyers Club; and underwritten by the Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, the luncheon was attended by a number of distinguished guests in the legal field.

Among these were Larry Taylor, president of the Columbus Lawyers Club; Jack Hood, assistant U.S. Attorney; E. Mullins Whisnant, Chief Judge for the Chattahoochee Judicial Circuit; Wayne Johnson, Circuit Judge for Russell County, Ala.; Aaron Cohn, Columbus Juvenile Court Judge; John Allen, State Court Judge; and a number of present and former officers of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

Also present were Brig. Gen. William Steele, assistant commandant of the Infantry School; James Jernigan, Columbus Mayor; Sanford Bishop, state representative for District 94; and a number of Columbus city officials.

Col. Michael J. Nardotti Jr. of the SJA welcomed the gathering with reflections on the theme of the 33rd observance of Law Day, "Generations of Justice."

"The theme focuses on the evolution of law throughout our nation's history to promote justice, accommodate change and extend justice to all generations.

"Through observances such as Law Day, we reaffirm our commitment to our legal heritage of more than 200 years," said Nardotti.

James Yancey, president of the Columbus-based Synovus Financial Corporation, was the guest speaker.

Yancey, a graduate of Columbus College, Louisiana State University and Rutgers University, continues to be active in numerous community affairs and has chaired a number of humanitarian-type boards.

A former president of Columbus Bank and Trust Company, Yancey spoke on the "importance of good people."

"We must try to bring value to the individuals that we work with and who continue to work hard every day.

"Often, we are too caught up in ourselves to worry about others, but we must never lose our focus on the individual," said Yancey.

The luncheon concluded with the presentation of Law Day awards.

An essay contest by the SJA office was conducted for sixth-, seventh- and eighth-grade students in the Fort Benning Dependent Schools with monetary awards sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club.

The winners and their awards are: first place, Karen Adams, sixth grade, $175 savings bond; second place, Solange Guillaume, sixth grade, $100 savings bond; and third place, Tonya Noel, sixth grade, $75 savings bond.

The "We The People" award for the school in the Fort Benning system most actively involved in Law Day related activities goes to the Edward A. White School.

Spurgeon Glenn, the school's principal, accepted the award on behalf of his school.

The Liberty Bell award was presented to Jimmie Stubbs.

Stubbs was the state and superior court clerk for Muscogee County and has more than 30 years of public service.

Nardotti said he was pleased with the turnout to the luncheon and the "outstanding" participation by the community.

STUDENT LOAN REPAYMENT FOR PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT.

If you're leaving the Active Army service and plan to continue your education, the Army Reserve has some good news for you. Besides earning a steady extra income, the Army Reserve can help you pay off any qualifying student loan (Guaranteed Student Loan, National Direct Student Loan, or Federally Insured Student Loan) which you may incur after you enter the Army Reserve.

For each year of duty, 15% of your loan, or $500, whichever is greater, may be repaid, up to a total of $10,000. For some specialties, the total increases to $20,000. That can go a long way toward easing the financal burden of going to college.

The Student Loan Repayment Program is another reason why it pays to join the Army Reserve. For details, call your Reserve Component Transition NCO.

498th provides air-ambulance support in Honduras

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A red cross on a white background is the international symbol of medical support.

The 498th Aeromedical Evacuation Company is displaying that symbol proudly in Honduras where they are presently on rotation.

Temporarily assigned to Soto Cano Air Base in Honduras, Central America, the unit's mission is to provide medical support to U.S. military personnel and Hondurans.

According to Capt. Jose Betancourt his crew shares the mission of providing air ambulance assistance to Honduras, Guatemala, Belize and El Salvador.

With the exception of Guatemala, crews, consisting of two pilots, a medic and a crew chief have flown missions in each of the countries.

Although air-ambulance is 498th's primary duty, they also fly other missions.

Betancourt said they participate in medical readiness exercises and take medical personnel to remote villages.

"In some of the villages we've flown into, the only source of medical care is a first-aid kit," he said.

He said he has seen more than 500 Hondurans show up for treatment in some of these villages.

Betancourt's crew chief, Sgt. Bruce E.B. Peters, said, "Often so many people show up that some have to be turned away.

"That's the hardest part," he said. "It's hard because you know they've traveled far to receive help, and then, they can't always get it."

Recently the crew had some excitement. They medevaced some of the airmen who were gunned down while on a morale support tour.

"That is the most interesting mission we've had since we've been here," Peters said. "We not only had to control the usual crowds that come when we land, we had also had to battle the media."

Peters said that the media made it very difficult for them to get the injured men out of there.

"We finally had to slam the doors on some microphones," he said.

To keep proficient when they have down time, the crew attends medical classes and pilot classes and does a lot of physical training.

"It's hard sometimes because we're away from our families," Betancourt said, "but, morale is good. This is some of the best flying anywhere in the world.

Soldiers go to range with spoons, spatulas

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Armed with spatulas, spoons, pots and pans, they attack the M-59 Range at the crack of dawn, rustling up vittles that would send even the finickiest taste buds into a tailspin.

The range, located inside a tent, on the top of a barren hill, is fired up every day by four members of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

This is the field kitchen at the base camp of Co. A; 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp.

The unit is in Juticulpa, Honduras, Central America, working on construction projects for the host nation.

To support the mission, one cook from the 586th Engr. Co., one from HHC and two from Co. A were sent to cook two hot meals a day for more than 70 soldiers.

The troops are given a meals-ready-to-eat to supplement the hot rations.

They cooks deployed with Co. A and will remain until the unit returns June 1.

To satisfy the palates of the Engineers, they turn out meals that include cherry pies, Swiss steak and yeast rolls.

According to the Head Cook Sgt. 1st Class James Merrifield, they try to vary the meals to give the soldiers something to look forward to before and after a hard day of work.

"We try to make the soldiers happy, and if we find out it's someone's birthday, we'll even bake them a cake," he said.

The supplies for these culinary delights come from the Soto Cano Air Base, more than 150 miles from the camp.

Two weeks of rations are loaded into a refrigerated trailer and brought to the camp.

Most of the meats are dehydrated, and the vegetables are canned. To make them pleasing to both the eye and taste buds, Merrifield said they add spices and make gravies to accent the flavor.

To have breakfast ready before the workday begins, the cooks start at 4 a.m. Their day ends when they finish up the dishes from the evening meal, around 8 p.m.

One of the cooks, Spec. Lisa Paige, said it's tough getting up that early, but it's nice to know they're getting a hot meal before they go off to work.

"It makes me feel pretty good when I hear them say that something looks good or they liked how the cake tasted," she said.

"I'm really glad the cooks are here," said Spec. Greg Allstead, from Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. "This sure beats MREs all the time."

The other cooks who are waging the battle against MREs are Sgt. Richard Segle and Spec. C. Hayden.

Mortar Platoon scores high on Skill Qualification Tests

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Mortar Platoon soldiers of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, exceeded their platoon sergeant's goal when they scored an average of more than 90 percent on their annual Skill Qualification Test.

"I feel it is the job of the platoon sergeant and the squad leaders to motivate and train the soldiers to study and push themselves to achieve the best possible results in whatever they work on," said Sgt. 1st Class Rock E. Sims, platoon sergeant of the Mortar Platoon.

According to 1st Lt. Kimmerick Vick, platoon leader, the platoon's 28 enlisted soldiers were challenged to score 90 percent or higher on their SQT and began training to achieve that goal in December 1989.

"The men trained anywhere from 45 minutes to an hour every day since December," Sims said.

"It is very important for the soldiers to know how to perform well in their MOS, not just be book smart," he added.

To make studying more efficient for the soldiers, Sims extracted information from the Soldier's Manual, producing a 206-page book for them to study.

"Sergeant Sims did an excellent job. He's very knowledgeable and is a great influence on the soldiers," said Vick.

According to Vick, besides studying during duty hours, the men received assignments to be completed in the evening for the following day.

"It goes to show that if you set a goal, you can achieve it with time and effort. All of our intensive training time was allotted to us by the battalion commander and the company commander," he added.

"We were only able to do this well because of the help we received from our NCOs and because of the 110-percent effort everyone put into getting ready for the test," said Spec. Timothy Ashcraft, one of the top scorers for the platoon.

Spec. Patrick J. Kennedy, who scored 94, said he was impressed by the quality of the training he received during Sims' tenure as platoon sergeant.

"I've been in HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, since December 1987," he said. "I've learned more under Sergeant Sims' leadership during the last seven months than from any other NCO. The platoon standards have definitely increased with him as our platoon sergeant."

Sims summed up his training philosophy in a single sentence: "Training is everything, and everything is training.

"That's what make the difference between last year's average score of 68 percent and this year's average of 90.2," he said.

Pistol clinic brings out post shooters

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Several Fort Benning soldiers with an interest in pistol shooting recently got the chance to show their stuff to members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's pistol team.

USAMU sponsored a two-day pistol clinic to see what kind of marksmen are hiding in the ranks of soldiers assigned to Fort Benning.

In return, these soldiers learned some valuable lessons about combat pistol shooting that they can take back to their units.

According to Master Sgt. Ronald Hale of USAMU's service pistol team, the clinic was designed to review marksmanship fundamentals; firing positions; and some hands-on knowledge of the .22-caliber, 9-millimeter and .45-caliber pistols.

"These shooters can definitely take what they learned here back to their units," Hale said.

"They can use these skills in their unit qualification or to promote participation in Army competitive marksmanship programs."

Civilian employee submits false claim

Government Employee Relations Report

A former civilian employee of the Army has been sentenced by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia to six months in prison for submitting a false claim to get $211,000 in benefits under the Federal Employees Compensation Act.

Alfred E. Cullum was given a five-year term, with all but six months of the sentence suspended. He was also fined $25,000.

As part of a plea agreement, the former employee pleaded guilty to a one-count criminal indictment charging him with making false claims for FECA benefits since 1976.

Cullum agreed to make restitution of $150,000, waive his FECA claim, and withdraw his entitlement to federal retirement benefits.

Cullum was a sheet metal worker for the Army when he sustained a low back injury in 1976 but was also self employed in the sheet metal business while getting worker's compensation payments since then.

72nd Engineers prepare for chemical environment

By Joseph G. Fridley
197th Infantry Brigade

Mission-oriented protective posture became a daily reality recently for the soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company.

"Our unit's goal is to build proficiency in basic nuclear, biological and chemical tasks and improve survivability in a chemical environment," said 2nd Lt. Todd Kennedy, 72nd's NBC officer.

He explained that the Kelley Hill unit devoted the entire week of April 23 to 27 to nuclear, biological and chemical skills.

The training began with the soldiers performing their weekly command maintainence at the motor pool in MOPP-level 4.

"For two hours, they got a feel for working in a simulated chemical environment," Kennedy said. "This also helped condition them for MOPP ensemble wear later in the week."

On the second day, the unit was divided into two groups to rotate through various NBC stations for a two-day period.

One group of soldiers went through a 10-station round-robin at Wallace Training area, where they performed such basic skills as MOPP gear exchange; drinking, using the latrine, checking another soldier sleeping in MOPP 4, and transmitting an initial NBC report.

"These are the skills needed to stay alive in a contaminated environment," said Spec. Daniel Lewis, of the Assault and Barrier Platoon.

Meanwhile, the second group was busy decontaminating vehicles with the M-13 decon apparatus, employing the NATO NBC marking kit, and using M-8 and M-9 paper to detect the presence of chemical agents on their skin or in the area.

"At the end of the day, each soldier had to drink as much water as possible to prepare his body for the next day's ordeal — six hours in MOPP 4," Kennedy said.

The day began at 6 a.m. with the sounding of the M-8A1 chemical alarm, signaling the start of six hours of operations in MOPP 4.

Again, stations were set up to keep the soldiers motivated throughout the training.

One station in particular, involving crossing a river in assault rafts, got high marks from the soldiers.

"It was a lot of fun and showed us how to work as a team," said Spec. Anthony Heppner, of the Assault and Barrier Platoon.

At another station, the soldiers had to emplace a 30-meter, triple-standard concertina obstacle and proceed through an obstacle course, as well as use mine detector paper to locate both M-15 and M-21 mines.

The soldiers' next stop was the Infantry Center's gas chamber, where they were evaluated on their ability to conduct MOPP exchange and chemical survey, mark a contaminated area, and decontaminate themselves inside the chamber.

"This mask confidence exercise ensures that the masks properly fit the soldiers and helps build confidence in personal masks," said Sgt. William Hughes, unit NBC NCO.

"Soldiers also gain confidence in their ability to decontaminate their hands and faces and perform other tasks inside a contaminated area."

At the end of the six hours of MOPP 4, one soldier was picked at random to operate the M-256 chemical detection and identification kit as part of the unmasking procedures

"If he failed to use the kit correctly, he knew we would make him start over, which meant more time in MOPP 4," Kennedy said. "Naturally, everyone wanted the soldier to get it right the first time."

At the end of the week, Pfc. Stephen Gambon of 2nd Platoon voiced what must have topped all the soldiers' lists as their favorite task — "unmasking."

School of Americas celebrates Paraguay's independence

School of Americas

The School of Americas celebrates with the Republic of Paraguay Monday, the day the country gained independence from Spain in 1811.

In 1537, the conquering Spaniards encountered little resistance from the local Guarani Indians and established themselves in Paraguay.

The Spaniards mixed with the Guarani giving the population a mestizo element, bilingual in Spanish and Guarani.

Paraguay became independent in 1811 as Jose Gaspar Rodriguez emerged as leader of the new republic. He remained its leader until 1840.

Much of Paraguay's subsequent history has been marked by wars.

The new ruler in 1862, Francisco Solano Lopez, intervened in a Brazilian attempt to control Uruguay, beginning the War of the Triple Alliance against Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay, which left the country occupied by Brazil until 1876 and with the majority of its able-bodied males killed.

The population in 1865 of 450,000 was reduced to 220,000 by 1870.

The next conflict was with Bolivia over sovereignty of the Chaco.

Paraguay won most of the disputed territory during the Chaco War (1932-35) but again faced a long period of recovery.

In 1954 Gen. Alfredo Stroessner seized power.

Stroessner remained leader of the country until a Feb. 3, 1989, coup led by his long-time associate, Gen. Andres Rodriguez.

Rodriguez was overwhelmingly elected president after the national elections May 1.

Exercise introduces officers to mechanized Infantry

Infantry Officer Basic Course

It was Preventive Maintenance Checks and Services time April 23 for IOBC Class 3-90 as Bravo Company, 2nd Battalion 11th Infantry Regiment, returned from seven days of mechanized training.

The field training exercise introduced future Infantry platoon leaders to the fast moving tactics of mechanized warfare.

Training began April 17 with a mounted land navigation course.

Students had to rely on their leadership and driver skills, as well as their proficiency at land navigation to find their assigned points.

The rest of the exercise was devoted to mechanized tactics such as anti-armor ambushes, wood line clearing, movement to contact, and securing a bridge site.

The bridge operation involved securing and crossing a site on Pine Knot Creek.

Dismounted carrier elements assaulted and secured the site as the armed vehicle bridge launcher from the 197th Infantry Brigade laid a bridge for the mounted elements.

One day of the exercise was devoted to the Bradley Fighting Vehicles.

After receiving instruction on vehicle operation and drills, students conducted a movement-to-contact exercise.

The culmination of "Mech Week" came April 22 and 23 as track shoes were changed and recovery began.

After the last maintenance check was finished, the future Infantry platoon leaders of IOBC 3-90 left their tracks feeling either proud to be mechanized or thankful to be light.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I recently purchased a stereo on credit from a local dealer, but the day after I got it home, I decided I probably couldn't afford the payments.

I had had other people tell me before that you always have three days to cancel a contract.

I tried to do this, but the dealer said that I had no right to cancel my agreement.

Do I or don't I have a right to cancel a contract within three days?

A. Whether or not you have a right to cancel a contract depends on two things, where the contract was negotiated and signed, and the terms of the contract itself.

Under Federal law, most contracts that are the result of door-to-door sales, or sales that take place away from the seller's regular place of business, can be canceled within 72-hours of execution or signature.

How does this work?

First, the rule applies to any contract or purchase made at your home or away from the seller's place of business, except the following types of contracts:

- Contracts or sales made totally by telephone or mail.
- Purchases or contracts involving less than $25,000.
- Contracts for real estate, insurance or stocks, bonds and other securities.
- Emergency home and appliance repairs.

"Away from the seller's regular place of business" not only means your home, but also such occasions as sales parties given at private homes.

If the contract or sale is one covered under the law, the salesperson is required to give you a copy of the contract at the time of sale and two copies of a cancellation form.

To cancel within the 72-hours, you sign and date the cancellation form and either mail it or hand deliver it to the seller within the 72-hours.

If you mail, use certified or registered mail and request a return receipt — this means that the seller will have to sign for the letter.

Keep a copy of the cancellation, as well as of your certified or registered mail receipt.

If you deliver it by hand, be sure to get a receipt from the seller.

The bottom line is to have written evidence that you delivered the cancellation to the seller.

Note that the salesman is required to give you copies of a cancellation form.

If he doesn't and you feel that the contract is covered under the three-day rule, go ahead and write a letter of cancellation and send it by certified mail.

Even if your contract is not one covered by the three-day rule, you may nonetheless be able to cancel if the terms of the contract allow for cancellation.

Some contracts do contain provisions allowing a party to cancel, and where they do, they usually tell you exactly what you have to do and how much time you have.

Even if the contract doesn't specify certified mail, you should send it in that manner.

Again, the important thing is to be able to prove that you delivered the notice of cancellation within the specified time.

If you aren't sure of your rights of cancellation on a contract, or, if you've attempted to cancel and the seller is not cooperating with you, contact the Legal Assistance Office as soon as possible at 545-3281.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

May 13 through 20 has been declared Spring Energy Awareness Week.

The theme for this year is "Conservation — Today's Efforts, Tomorrow's Energy."

Each spring, the Army sets aside one week for focus on progress in energy conservation over the past year and to make a renewed commitment for the upcoming year.

Special attention is also placed on educating the Army community on the need to conserve energy and ways in which to do it.

At Fort Benning, special activities emphasizing the purpose of the energy program have become tradition. This year's campaign is no exception.

In the dependent schools, students will receive study units filled with energy information.

The purpose of this energy education is to instill good conservation habits that will promote energy-conscious behavior at home, in their schools, or any other place where they feel conservation measures are needed.

Unit Energy Conservation Officers will be observing many facilities around post and rewarding those practicing good energy conservation habits with promotional items.

Energy exhibits will be set up throughout Fort Benning in observance of Energy Awareness Week, and AAFES will participate with special sales event during the week.

Before cranking mower, think safety

National Safety Council

The grass is green, the weather is mild, and it's time to pull out the lawn mower again.

Before you crank up the engine, consider these safety tips from the National Safety Council:

Your mower should be in good working order and meet all safety requirements.

If you have any doubts, have the mower checked by a professional before using it.

Make sure you know how to use the mower correctly and read the instruction manual.

Dress properly for the job by wearing sturdy shoes and long pants. Avoid loose clothes and jewelry.

Stay away from the blades while the mower is on and avoid running over rocks and large sticks that can be thrown by the machine.

Finally, keep pets and bystanders away from the work area at all times, and ensure that gasoline is stored away from the house in approved containers.

McBride 2nd-graders adopt Doc, a manatee

Fort Benning Schools

There was an adoption at McBride School recently, and the proud parents are 150 second-graders at McBride School.

If they had sent out an announcement it would have read:

"It's a Boy"
Height – 10 feet
Weight – 200 pounds
Date of birth – about 16 years ago

This was no ordinary adoption, but the adoptive parents could not be prouder. They have adopted Doc, a manatee.

Manatees are large sea mammals that are closely related to elephants.

They are an endangered species, which live in the waters off the coasts of Florida, Georgia and the Carolina's in the United States and along the coast of South America.

Through the Save the Manatee Club of Maitland, Fla., the McBride second-graders have learned not only about manatees, but also about how citizens can promote legislation to save them.

Through the Save the Manatee Club, the second-graders will follow Doc's travels along the Atlantic seacoast.

There is a newsletter that lists sightings, and students are anxiously awaiting news of their large adopted charge.

After researching manatees, McBride second-graders have learned the reasons that manatees have become endangered.

The students plan to write legislators to express their concerns about a clean environment and stricter boating regulations.

These regulations may affect Doc and other mantees who travel with him.

International wives sponsor fashion show

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

More than 730 seventh- and eighth-grade students from Eddy Junior High School in Columbus turned out May 3 to watch a fashion show sponsored in part by the Fort Benning International Wives' Club.

The half-hour show, cosponsored by the Bridges Pre-College Program of Columbus College, was part of the school's International Week, which focused on hands-on learning of customs and cultures throughout the world.

Eight countries were represented in the show, which featured both Eddy Junior High students and members of the IWC as models of native dress.

Countries featured in modern and traditional garb were: Germany, Egypt, Lebanon, Morocco, Mexico, South Korea, Uganda and Africa.

The costumes displayed ranged from the long, flowing robes of South Korea to the brightly-colored dresses and sombreros of Mexico.

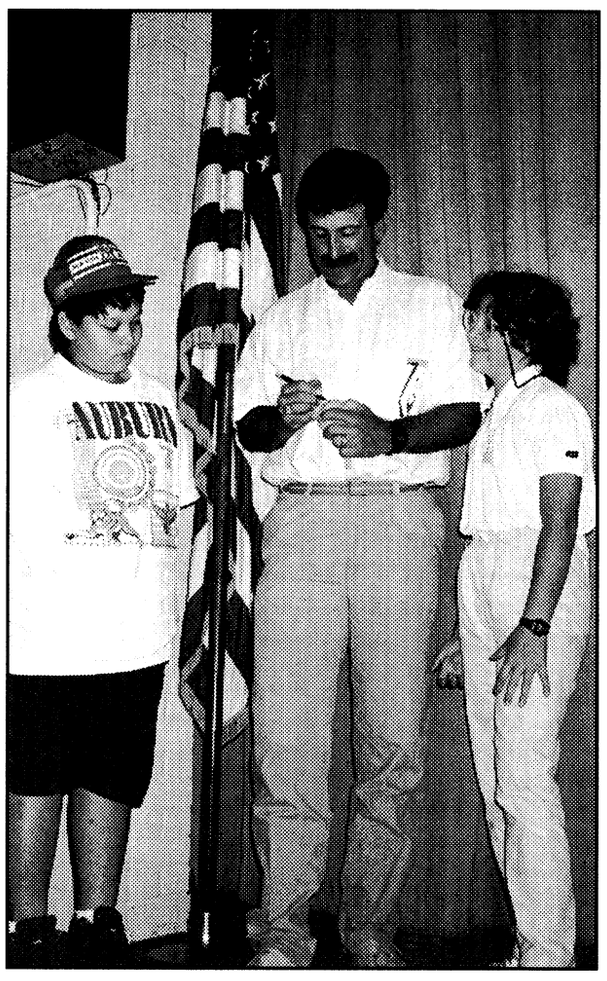
Rebecca Swindal, speaking on behalf of the Bridges Program, said, "This show is part of our program's cultural growth phase."

The IWC is composed of women originally from other countries, but who now reside in the Fort Benning community.

More than 20 countries are represented in the membership of the IWC.

Olga Kelly, club president, said, "We like to do this for the area schools as a community service."

Kelly, who modeled a blue-sequined gown from Egypt, said she was pleased with the student turnout and said the student models did "a wonderful job."



Signing autographs

Rick Sweet, manager of the Columbus "Mudcats," came to Wilbur School bringing students a message about staying in school, working to make good grades and avoiding drugs.

The visit was arranged by Wilbur School's Parent Teacher Association.

Sweet, the parent of an elementary student, is a professional athlete. In two student assembly programs, he talked about baseball, signed autographs, and spoke with students about his plans for the future.

Ruggers from the U.S. Armed Forces All-Star Team and the British Army Royal Engineers battle for the ball.

Bragg 'ruggers' stomp Marines

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The words printed on the back of one man's shirt pretty much said it all, "Rugby — Elegant Violence."

The "elegance" and intensity never let up during the 1990 Steinlager/USA Rugby National Military Championship, May 4 through 6 at Fort Benning's French and Blue fields.

Begun as a 32-team round-robin, the field of "ruggers" was eventually narrowed down to the championship match May 6, between the Fort Bragg Army Football Club and the Camp Lejeune Marine Rugby Football Club.

Both teams were undefeated, 4-0 in the round-robin format up to the final match up.

The Bragg team went into the half with a hard-fought 7-3 lead, but the Marines battled back early in the second half with a three-point penalty kick to close the gap to within one.

Bragg answered with a penalty kick of its own to put them up 10-6, a score that would not be challenged again.

According to co-director Ray Davis, even though Bragg had played outstanding rugby throughout the tournament, Camp Lejeune was still the "team to beat."

"They were two-time defending champions. They had won this thing for the past two years in a row," said Davis.

Bragg, rising to number-one ranking in the military rugby team field, was undaunted by the past exploits of the Lejeune team and played a "very hard, tightly-contested game," said Davis.

The local favorite, Fort Benning RFC, better known as the "Cruise-matics," opened strong with a 9-3 win over Seymour-Johnson Air Force.

A 16-0 loss to the Camp Pendelton Marines and a resounding 17-0 blow out of Fort Hood Army, left the home boys facing the semifinals of the consolation bracket.

Down but not out, Benning rallied from its Fort Hood shutout to take down USUHS (Army medical doctors), only to face a tough Davis Monthan Air Force team for the consolation trophy.

The trophy, known as "the Plate," proved to be too much of a prize for the Benning ruggers to resist.

A see-saw battle throughout, the match seemed lost when, with 30 seconds left in regulation time, the Benning club came back to score and held onto a slim 13-12 lead to clinch the title.

Two British teams visited the tournament as exhibition opponents.

The opening match of the tourney pitted the British Army Royal Engineer Regiment RFC against the U.S. Armed Forces Combined Service Select Side (All-Star Team) May 4.

The U.S. team jumped into an early lead, never lost it, and went on to crush the British 15-11.

The Royal Engineers went on to defeat fellow countrymen British Royal Parachuters RFC 22-10 in another exhibition match-up May 6.

Davis said, "The competition was great. Every game was tight and contested."

He said Fort Benning has already been selected to host the event again next year.

Sgt. 1st Class Tony Szeluga, an instructor at the Noncommissioned Officers' Academy, and his partner, Eddie Gilbert, took top team honors.

Szeluga, who applied for the All-Army team, was among 51 of the Army's best who competed in the All-Army Bowling trials in Fort Huachuca, Ariz., April 16 through 19. Only 12 of the original bowlers advanced to the Armed Forces Bowling Championship at Camp Pendleton

Others who rolled their way to the 1990 All-Army Bowling Team and represented the Army at the Armed Forces Championship were: Kevin Hamilton, Europe, 4,975 pinfalls; Bill Anthony, Hawaii, 4,898 pinfalls; Mike Earnest, Fort Devens, Mass., 4,855 pinfalls; Joe Beck, Fort Huachuca, Ariz., 4,759 pinfalls; and Eddie Gilbert, Korea, 4,752 pinfalls.

Szeluga with 4,920 pinfalls rounded out the Army's men's team.

Representing the women's team were: Sally McCafferty, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., 4,471 pinfalls; Debra Eccleston, Europe, 4,469 pinfalls; Frances Sims, Washington D.C., 4,364 pinfalls; Deby Smith, Washington D.C., 4,324 pinfalls.

Szeluga has made the All-Army team six times — in '84, '85, 87, '88 and '90. He will now go on and represent the military in the the U.S. team finals in Chicago Aug. 21 through 25.

SPIRITUAL

Chaplain: Christians, Jews have responsibility to Eastern neighbors

By Chap. Douglas R. Stephenson
USAITC Chaplain

In response to Jesus' question concerning who was "neighbor" to the man in need from the Gospel story of the Good Samaritan, a man attempted to absolve himself of all responsibilities by asking Jesus the question, "Who then is my neighbor?"

The recent turn of events in the world today should cause the Western religious community to answer a similar question concerning their responsibility to our religious brothers and sisters in the East.

Glasnost and perestroika have provided new and challenging opportunities for Western Christians and Jews to minister in communist countries.

Cathedrals that once served as museums for the communist state have been reopened as churches.

Soviet authorities are allowing religious literature and Bibles in the Russian language to be openly and freely distributed to the Russian people.

Russian Jews are now being allowed to immigrate to Israel and the United States.

Public religious meetings and crusades are being conducted.

Recently I returned from leave in West and East Germany.

While in Berlin, I saw the wall for myself. I had seen portions of the wall being torn down on television, but now I have verified this fact for myself (and I am lucky enough to have obtained a genuine piece of the wall).

No East German guards with automatic rifles are manning the towers, and more than 3,000 German Shepherd attack dogs are looking for new homes.

American soldiers are no longer patrolling the border. It was exciting to see East Germans freely passing through Checkpoint Charlie.

This is definitely an exciting time to see what God is doing in Eastern Europe.

At a military retreat in Bertchesgaden, I heard a missionary share his experiences of a 10-day preaching/teaching tour of the USSR.

He told of passing out Russian language Bibles in Red Square, Moscow, and he poignantly described elderly Russians clutching the Bible to their breasts and with tears in their eyes saying over and over, "Thank you! Thank you!"

Russian Orthodox church leaders have publicly stated that more than 20 million copies of the Bible are needed for Russian believers.

Since Russian Bibles are not available to the average citizen, he emphasized the need for Western Christians to get Bibles and religious literature into the hands of these people immediately.

These people are hungry to know more about a God who loves and cares for them — a God who can set them free spiritually.

At the same time, as they revel in these new-fashioned freedoms, they are also wary of a system that has been known for its ruthless persecution of religious leaders.

They are afraid these recent freedoms could disappear just as quickly as they have occurred over the past year.

Reflecting this concern of Russian believers, my missionary friend challenged us to act now while the doors of religious freedom are still open.

Yes, we do have a tremendous responsibility to our "neighbors" in the East.

Commissary collects money to boost community services

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Procter and Gamble gave Army Community Service's program for family members with special needs a check for $1,697.90.

The donation was made possible through a program conducted at the Fort Benning Commissary.

According to Commissary Officer Larry J. Bentley, Proctor and Gamble designated a product to be sold for a specified amount of time.

During that period, a percentage of the price of each item sold is set aside for the organization slotted to receive funds.

The ACS program, also known as the Exceptional Family Member Program, will greatly benefit from the Proctor and Gamble donation, according to Program Coordinator Marcia O'Connor.

O'Connor said the money will be used for recreation equipment and supplies.

"The equipment will enhance recreational activities and social development of handicapped children in the program," she said.

Currently, there are more than 40 children with various disabling conditions such as seizure disorders, muscular dystrophy, retention deficiencies and cerebral palsy.

Due to budget cuts, EFMP wouldn't have been able to purchase the items without the donation, O'Connor said.

For more information about EFMP, call O'Connor at 545-4043.

ACOE sets high standards, rewards achievers

By Sarah McLaney
Army Communities of Excellence

The fundamental approach taken by the Army Communities of Excellence program can best be described by the "S-E-R Principle": Set high standards, Evaluate against those standards, and Reward those who achieve.

This will be happening the week of June 5 through 7 at Fort Benning.

The Training and Doctrine Command ACOE Team will arrive June 5, evaluate designated facilities and customer services and reward those who are the "best."

It is not too early to begin to clean up, check the quality of services offered, and make improvements prior to the arrival of the team.

Even though resources are limited, there are simple, yet dramatic, visible changes that can be made at low cost to improve facilities.

In the customer services area, poor service can create a poor impression with customers.

A friendly and helpful attitude must be a rule for all who serve the customer.

There are many ways to improve services without additional funds.

Some of them are:

- Changing office hours to be more convenient for customers.
- Providing designated parking spaces for visitors.
- Posting directions at building entrances to assist customers in prompt location of service areas.
- Training employees to be more considerate of customers.
- Being courteous.
- Reducing waiting lines.
- Providing prompt service at peak periods.

However, these changes cannot be successful without a commitment from the employees who actually provide service and their supervisors and managers.

Employees on the front line who face the "moments of truth" must be prepared to respond courteously and rapidly to customers' needs.

A recent memorandum from the commanding general reads: "Striving for excellence in everything we do is a top priority at Fort Benning.

"Our objective is to make life better for our people — the individual soldier, family members, the civilian employee, the retiree, reserve soldiers, and visitors."

This will take a commitment from the top and from the employees, supervisors and managers at Fort Benning.

Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Carl E. Vuono has raised the ante for the Army's winner of the Commander in Chief's Installation Excellence award to $1.5 million and has developed a similar Army award program.

There are six categories, so every installation and activity has a chance to compete regardless of size or location.

Each of the six winners will get $1 million, and the five runners-up will get $250,000.

Even though resources are dropping, the quality of services must remain high.

Fort Benning can win the Commander-in-Chief's Installation of Excellence Award if we all pull together and strive for quality in everything we do.

But, we must start now. The team will be here June 5.

The overall purpose of ACOE is to provide for our customers — the soldiers, their families, and the civilians who work here — excellent places to work and live, and excellent base services.

This can be done only with the help of the dedicated managers and employees on this installation.

SPIRIT competitors' suggestions save Benning millions of dollars

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning recently honored second-quarter, 1990 Project SPIRIT competitors who together documented 94 actions resulting in $16 million in savings to the post.

Col. Barry W. Mahek, chief of staff, was the guest speaker at the Project SPIRIT — Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in TRADOC — award ceremony in Building 4 May 11.

According to Mahek, this quarter's actions and savings were a big jump over last quarter's 50 actions with a savings of $1.6 million.

The School of the Americas won the SPIRIT award for the command/major unit competition with the implementation of three management improvements, which will save the post $109,000 annually.

This is the first time SOA has won.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing family won the Directorate Staff competition with the implementation of three suggestions, three capital investment projects, and 39 management improvements.

Productivity savings for the first quarter were documented in excess of $2 million.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Office won the Personal and Special Staff competition with the implementation of five management improvements with a savings of $10,000.

The post also recognized individuals who contributed significantly toward attaining the SPIRIT objective of maximizing Army resources.

Shirley K. Pierce, contract administration division, directorate of contracting, saved the government $2,706,000 in the negotiation of a contract for the dining facility management services.

While reviewing the contractor's cost proposal, she identified unsupported costs, which were removed or reduced during negotiation.

Don Tucker, engineer and services branch, engineering division saved the government $180,000 by innovative action in the development of a plan with the Georgia Power Company to borrow transformers to be used at a construction site, at no cost to the government, when temporary power is needed.

Other individual award recipients are:

James D. Webb	DEH	$14,000
Alice Howard	DEH	$20,500
George D. Marks	DEH	$20,500
Carl A. Divinyi	DEH	$27,000
Daniel C. Moore Jr.	DEH	$37,000
James D. Harris	DEH	$58,000
James A. Dunn	DEH	$68,000
Charles R. Cole	DEH	$115,135
Robert Battle	DOC	$34,000

Snively: I don't want to be manly

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dean Rose here on campus is into such manly stuff as sweating like a horse and drinking beer.

Well, I've never seen him drink beer, but he looks like a beer drinker.

He also looks like a person who, if provoked, could snap my body like a toothpick.

I'm sure he can since one of his endeavors is bending steel rods with his bare hands and stacking huge metal disks on iron poles, then lifting them over his head.

In fact, he's very good at it.

What he's trying to do now is make others good at it.

Good enough to form a team to beat those Infantrymen over at the 29th in the team power lifting tournament scheduled for June 23.

He contacted Ms. Editor for some help in publicizing his dream of knocking the Infantry off their bench presses and as an aside, mentioned that I might like to try out for the team.

His belly laugh made us all believe he wasn't serious.

He did ask Ms. Editor to send me down to write a column about it.

"We'll break him on the rack" were his words.

In other words, he thinks I need to have my eyes burn from sweat, my bones ache from stress, and my muscles reach total limpidity to write about this sport of his.

I told Ms. Editor, "No way.

I'll defend his right to lift all he wants, as long as it doesn't interfere with my right not to.

"I've got just enough strength to lift a beer can to my lips, to put a gob of mashed potatoes swimming in butter and gravy on a fork and get it into my mouth, but that's about all the weight lifting I want to do," I told her.

"It'd be a great human interest story for you to do that, Snively," she said.

"All due respect, Ma'm, but do you realize that to be a power lifter, you have to actually train.

"Can you see me in some sweaty, smelly, field house three or four times a week lying on a bench with 200 pounds across my chest and trying to lift?"

"Yes, I can," she said.

"I'll bust a gasket. I'll drop the bar on my chest." I protested yet again.

"Snively, you can wear one of those very fashionable belts, and I know for a fact they have spotters whose job it is to make sure you don't get your neck pinned under the bar," she said.

"Right," I said.

"It'd be my luck that one of those good looking female body builders would walk by about the time I was lifting, and my spotters would get distracted just as my elbows buckled and the weights came crashing down on my chest."

"Snive," she said in sweet, dulcet tones, "I don't think I'm getting through to you. It'd make a great story, you'll do it.

"I want you to report to Mr. Rose tomorrow."

"I can't," I said. "I'm allergic to coconut oil."

"What's that got to do with power lifting?" she asked, stunned.

"You have to rub that on your body before lifting," I said. "You know, to make your pecks stand out and all," I said, eyeing her mischievously.

"Snive," she said menacingly.

"Okay, okay. I'll do it, but I'll need at least a week to prepare."

"What's to prepare?" she asked, getting just a tad vexed with me.

"Well, first I need to stock up on my amino acids, my high carb pills, and all those other vitamins they advertise in the muscle magazines.

"And also," I whispered, "I need to start working out a little, I can't go down in such poor shape, they probably wouldn't allow me into the gym.

"And if you really must know, I have to pig out on greasy foods one last time."

I hear those people have special diets, like they eat lean meat, lots of rabbit food, along with their vitamin supplements.

Need those supplements to replace one's juices and nutrients the ol' body's gonna use up when put under the stress of pumping big-time iron."

"Okay," my editor reluctantly agreed. "You've got one week."

That night I stopped at K-Mart on the way home, bought a plastic weight set that you fill with sand or water, took it home and began by curling 5 pounds, bench pressing 30 and jerking 20.

After six days I hadn't progressed any. What was I to do?

Mr. Rose would think I was a wimp. I mean I am, but I didn't want Mr. Rose to know.

Maybe we could send the L.T. down disguised as me. He looks like he's hoisted a few weights in his day.

But then he might refuse to go. I was getting desperate.

But as they say, desperation is the mother of inspiration. So I paid a trip to a friend over at 34th Med.

"What happened to you!" Ms. Editor screamed as I walked in the next morning with black and blue fingers peeking out from an ace bandage wrapped around an arm supported in a sling.

"Well you see, I was coming along so well with my training program that I decided I wanted to see just how much I could press.

"Unfortunately I put too much weight on, and as I was beginning my lift, I slipped and tore some ligaments in my forearm.

"I guess you need to tell Mr. Rose he'll have to get along without me this year. Maybe next year," I said, trying to appear remorseful.

My only problem now is remembering to avoid using my "bad wing." Those smudges of black and blue wax might give me away.

Day set aside to honor military

In 1950, we began the tradition of setting aside a day to honor the millions of Americans who served in our nation's military forces.

As we celebrate this occasion, it's appropriate to pause and remember the great heritage of our military services — a part of our history of which we can be justly proud; a story of dedication, sacrifice and patriotism. It's the story of America itself.

This year's theme is "Proud to Serve."

Pride in serving our country is one reason — one very important reason — why our Armed Forces have consistently been successful in the defense of this nation.

No matter the circumstances, no matter the odds, it's the action of the motivated, determined people that most often decides the course of battle.

Today, it's you, the men and women in uniform, who carry on that American tradition of strength and pride.

You willingly serve because, while you can look back with pride, you also have confidence in the present and hope for the future.

Reader flips coin on commissary bagger story

Dear Snively:

I found your story about the commissary bagger and his hostile customer both interesting and sad.

The world we live in is filled with young and old alike who seem to have forgotten the fine art of good manners.

You know, people who run over your feet with their shopping carts or nearly knock you off your feet and never bother to say "excuse me," or "I'm sorry."

The young man in your story was insulted racially by a very cruel and uncaring individual.

She would not appreciate being attacked this way I am sure.

We all should treat others as we would like to be treated.

I feel sorry for the both of them, in very different ways of course.

But this problem is a two-sided one.

About two weeks ago, I was in the commissary getting a refund and overhead a young woman complain to the head cashier about a young male bagger that had insulted and degraded an elderly patron in the parking lot about the amount of the tip she gave him.

The young woman stated that this fellow should stop and realize that many of our "seniors" are on very fixed incomes and that they will usually tip what they comfortably can afford.

I'm sure that the average "young" person in our society does not give much though to this issue, but someday the tables will be turned in his favor and then it will be him who is faced with working within a retirement budget.

Anyone who has had the experience of working in a profession that relies greatly on tipping can tell of bad experiences they've had.

It is aggravating to give good and courteous service that ends up being rewarded below minimum standards.

Fort Benning has some very capable and pleasant employees working at the commissary and post exchange.

These same people always greet you with a smile and treat you like a valued customer.

In 17 years of dealing with on-post employees, Fort Benning has the most courteous employees I've ever encountered.

My point is simple, let's all try to slow down, take our time, and think before we speak or react.

If you blow your stack, you'll only end up feeling like a complete fool.

If you have any human decency and dignity, you'll feel terrible for what you have said or done to another human being.

We are all guilty of this at one time or another, but if you can go back and correct your mistake, you'll feel better about yourself.

I can think of no greater gift than forgiveness, which most people are willing to give us all.

Celebrate Armed Forces Day, Saturday

Benning, AUSA team up to host day's activities

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last year's Armed Forces Day Open House and Association of the United States Army Picnic drew more than 10,000 soldiers, family members and civilians for a day of fun and games.

This year's activities will prove to be just as popular as Fort Benning celebrates Armed Forces Day Saturday.

With "Proud to Serve" as this year's theme, the celebration will kick off at 10 a.m. with a parade on York Field, across from Infantry Hall, building 4, followed by an Airborne demonstration and the crowning of the AUSA queen.

The eight queen candidates from Fort Benning will represent their AUSA subchapters

Across the street on Stewart-Watson Field, soldiers will participate in some friendly competition during the interunit games.

Also on the agenda are equipment displays and recreational and entertainment activities. The Miss Georgia Superstars, former Miss Georgia Pageant contestants, will make an appearance for singing and dancing. Later, the women will mingle with the crowd.

Food and beverages will be available for a nominal fee from noon to 5 p.m.

The public is invited to attend.

Bush salutes the military

Armed Forces Day provides a welcome occasion for all Americans to convey our heartfelt thanks to our brave men and women in uniform.

Those of you who serve in the nation's military have accepted a great responsibility — one that entails personal risk and sacrifice.

The theme of this 41st observance of Armed Forces Day, "Proud to Serve," is a fitting description of the profound sense of duty and professionalism that you display every day of the year.

Indeed, you can be proud to serve in the United States Army, Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force, and Coast Guard because these organizations constitute the finest military in the world.

More important, you can be proud to serve because the ideals you've vowed to defend are the only sure foundation for true and lasting world peace. In a rapidly changing and frequently dangerous global arena, you have steadfastly upheld the rights of individuals and the security of free and democratic nations.

As more and more people around the world begin to enjoy the blessings of liberty, I commend you for the role you've played in making it possible.

Our recent military action in Panama, Operation Just Cause, provides a poignant example of how members of the Armed Forces have ably defended both the lives of their fellow citizens and the universal cause of freedom.

It was a tremendous demonstration of the courage and skill that have always been hallmarks of America's military personnel.

As Commander in Chief, I salute each of you. Barbara joins me in sending warm best wishes and thanks for all you do throughout the year. God bless you.

Army looks to smooth rough transitions

By John Burick
Army News Service

In light of future troop reductions, easing the impact on a soldier's transition from military to civilian life is a major concern for the Army staff, said Secretary of the Army Michael P.W. Stone.

"We want to prepare a program . . . to cushion the transition" of the proposed 165,000 soldiers who could be separated from active duty in the next three to four years, said Stone during his testimony to the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense Thursday.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, chairman of the defense panel, agreed.

Future troop cuts are going to cause tremendous hardships upon military families, particularly in the Army, he said.

"I can imagine a situation where a servicemember's wife is pregnant and suddenly he receives notice . . . of his termination of service," Inouye said, questioning Army officials on who would pay for the baby's delivery.

"We ought to take care of our fellow Americans" who are adversely affected by national policy, Inouye said.

"The least we can do is take care of our men and women in uniform."

Inouye pointed out that Army officials face great challenges in developing an equitable transition program.

Insurance and severance pay will be controversial issues in any proposal made by the Army staff.

"The insurance program you (Army) have in place now to cover transitions is too expensive," Inouye said.

He recently looked at the military's schedule of payments and concluded the premiums are too high.

Severance pay for enlisted personnel was another topic discussed.

Currently, severance payments are not made to enlisted personnel, though career officers with less than 20 years of service receive a maximum severance payment of $30,000.

Enlisted personnel should receive equal treatment, Inouye said.

Enlisted severance pay is being addressed by the Department of Defense.

A legislative proposal has been drafted that could authorize a maximum $15,000 severance payment to career enlisted personnel who served less than 20 years.

"I can assure you that this plan is being developed, so we can deal equitably and fairly with those people (soldiers) who have entrusted their professional lives to us," Stone said.

Ga. Fire Academy visits post schools to stress fire safety

Fire Life Safety Office

Thursday is Safety Awareness Day at Fort Benning and as a part of a continuing and persisting effort to make this community the most fire safe community in Department of Defense, the Georgia Fire Academy has been invited to present a two-day program for Fort Benning's children.

The program is designed to teach the children important lifesaving skills in the event a fire should occur in your home.

Imagine you are 6 or 7 years old, it's the middle of the night, and your bedroom is filling up with smoke. Your home is on fire! What do you do?

Could you and your family have prevented it?

The Fire Safety Awareness Program centers around a specially designed 28-foot mobile classroom.

The classes teach children about fire prevention and emergency escape techniques.

Firefighters guide the children through the two-story unit's kitchen, living room, bedroom and bathroom.

Each room is equipped to demonstrate typical dangers and how to overcome them using effective precaution measures.

The Fire Safety House was donated to the academy by the Metro Atlanta Firefighters Burn Foundation.

Monies for the unit were raised through the foundation's "Aluminum Cans for Burned Children" recycling program plus a corporate gift from SEMCO, producers of the Atlanta Home Show.

Fort Benning residents have been lucky in regard to injuries and deaths, in residential units.

However, it's not smart to depend on luck alone.

We must do the right thing by educating our children now about fire safety.

The display and workshop will be across from the Main Post Fire Station, Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and at the Main Post Exchange May 25 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Help us make your lives fire safe.

Emergency Room relocates while MACH renovates

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Emergency Room at Martin Army Community Hospital moved into the newly renovated Outpatient Clinic area May 16.

This marked the beginning of the second phase of the Emergency Room Renovation project.

The first phase was the relocation of the Outpatient Clinic into building 392, behind the Infantry Museum March 12.

With the success of the Outpatient Clinic relocation, the task of moving the Emergency Room began.

This move will allow the space formerly occupied by the Emergency Room to be renovated.

The movement of the Emergency Room was carefully planned to continue patient care with no disruption of service.

The present Emergency Room entrance will be used for ambulances only. All other Emergency Room traffic, vehicular or pedestrian, must use the main entrance of the hospital.

The projected date for completion of the Emergency Room renovation is Sept. 5.

With the completion of the renovation, the 32-year-old Emergency Room will be transformed into a state-of-the-art facility, allowing MACH to continue providing quality care with greater efficiency and patient privacy.

72nd Engineers excel in common tasks

By Joseph G. Fridley
197th Infantry Brigade

For the soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company (Mechanized) (Separate), recent Common Task Testing at the Wallace Training Area was a chance to demonstrate the success of the unit's year-long "building block" program.

"Using this method, I set standards for my squad on each of the tasks and increased those standards once they were met," said Sgt. Brian K. Tornberg, of the 72nd Assault and Barrier Platoon.

According to Staff Sgt. Reginald Perry, unit training NCO, the company's goal was to test soldiers on 16 selected common tasks and to note any improvement in performance over that of last year.

The soldiers rated three stations their least favorite — identification of friendly and threat aircraft and vehicles, camouflage, and estimating range (a new skill requiring the soldier to estimate the distance).

"Just coming out of advanced individual training, I wasn't trained on estimating range, but the grader, Sgt. Enoka Tuatoo, helped by teaching me the task prior to testing me for record," said Pvt. 2 Michael Gieffers, of 1st Platoon.

Soldiers who failed to max their CTT should not consider themselves failures, according to Perry.

"Now that I've learned which tasks I am weak in, I can study harder for next year's test," Gieffers said.

Commissary helps support AUSA functions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Commissary's mission is to provide the military grocery shopper with food at low prices.

Additionally, the commissary supports the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army and many other post activities with monetary contributions.

According to Larry Bently, commissary officer, the post commissary contributes money to various activities, including AUSA, the Boy Scouts, Morale, Welfare and Recreation, Santa's Castle, Crime Prevention and many more.

Because the commissary is an appropriated funds activity, the money for the contributions come from a special fund, said Bently.

The fund is set up by various vendors who volunteer to support a certain activity.

During special promotions, vendors donate a certain amount of money for each case of their company's product that's sold.

According to Sgt. Wade Shell, AUSA volunteer administrator, the commissary has contributed well over $10,000 this year to AUSA.

"The money goes straight to the soldiers," Shell said.

"It is used to support various AUSA activities from the Armed Forces Day AUSA picnic to the Fourth of July picnic and the Soldier and NCO of Month competitions.

"The donations have increased soldiers' awareness and appreciation for the commissary and AUSA.

"The rapidly growing friendship is beneficial to both the chapter and commissary," Shell said.

Buckle Up America campaign begins Tuesday

TRADOC News Service

The goal of the 1990 weeklong national "Buckle Up America" campaign beginning Tuesday is to increase seat belt use by Americans to 70 percent.

Sponsored by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the theme of the drive is 'Belts and Bags — A Winning Combination.

The NHTSA reports that surveys by the 33 states that have seat belt use laws show that the average use rate is 50 percent.

NHTSA officials want safety belt wear to become a habit for Americans.

NHTSA reports that in other countries seat belt use rates are as high as 85 percent.

If that much of the American population had used belts in 1988, 12,000 more people would have survived traffic accidents.

Experts in the Training and Doctrine Command Safety Office are enthusiastically behind the campaign.

In 1989 there were 18 TRADOC soldiers killed in privately-owned vehicles. Of these, two had been wearing safety belts, 13 had not.

In three other cases it could not be determined if the victims had worn belts.

"All vehicle drivers and passengers must wear safety belts while on Army installations. But our fatality figures seem to indicate many of our people are still not wearing seat belts when they go off post," said Hugh Lindsay, an installation and tactical safety manager at TRADOC.

The NHTSA seat belt campaign begins just before Memorial Day, and soldiers, like many other Americans, will be taking long vacation trips.

"A lot of people will be overextending themselves, trying to drive straight through to their destinations," Lindsay said.

"Combine that with driving without safety belts, and it's a potentially fatal situation."

Lindsay pointed out that seat belts should be used even for those people driving cars equipped with air bags.

"Air bags are great for preventing injuries in straight-ahead collisions," he said.

"But if the car is hit from the side or rolls over, an air bag will not hold a person in place. Most serious injuries and fatalities are the result of people being thrown around inside their car."

TRADOC traffic fatality statistics do not show seasonal fluctuations as national records do, but soldiers and their families are on the road during holiday seasons when the number of national traffic fatalities increases.

Sensible driving and the use of seat belts will help ensure they survive their journeys, according to Lindsay.

INFANTRY Magazine explores effects of losing sleep

INFANTRY Magazine

The May-June 1990 issue of INFANTRY features "Sleep Loss and Its Effects" and "Demolition Training."

Maj. Alan L. Moloff, a Medical Corps officer assigned to the Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, describes the effects of sleep loss on both physical and mental performance during continuous and sustained operations.

He also cites studies that detail the types of tasks that are most affected and urges that sleep discipline be enforced in the Army much the way water discipline is now enforced.

Lt. Theodore H. Rhodes, a former Special Forces demolitions specialist now assigned to the 25th Infantry Division, offers a standard demolition training program for Infantry units.

The program, which covers all the basic skills an Infantry company needs to accomplish its combat mission, will enable a company to focus on its most critical demolition tasks, instead of wasting training materials and time on the less important tasks.

That issue also includes numerous other articles of interest to Infantrymen.

Among them are "Class III Operations," by Capt. Frederick J. Gellert, who led Bradley and support platoons in the 3rd Infantry Division; "Roadmarching and Performance," by Lt. Col. John S. O'Connor and others assigned to the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School and the Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center; "LADP: Leadership Assessment and Development Program," by Maj. Harry Christiansen, a leadership instructor in the Infantry School; and "Kangaroo 89: U.S. Light Infantry in the Outback," by Lt. Col. Cole C. Kingseed, commander of the 4th Battalion, 87th Infantry, 25th Infantry Division.

Uniform prices to go up

Army News Service

Soldiers will be paying more to replace most uniforms and accessories starting Oct. 1, if the defense department approves the latest price list.

Military clothing bag prices are set by the defense department based upon numerous variables in contractors' charges to the government.

Logistics officials point out that while the cost of most clothing bag items will be higher, the surcharge soldiers pay on those items is decreasing from 26 percent to 24.8 percent.

Soldiers also will receive a higher clothing allowance to help offset the cost.

The new surcharge and clothing allowance also takes effect Oct. 1.

Army logistics officials say they expect DoD to announce the approved price list sometime in August.

New Army pay system to begin operating in Jan.

Army News Service

A new pay system for the Army will begin operating in January 1991, using Air Force software.

In a historic joint venture, the Army and Air Force have been working on such an arrangement since late 1988, say officials at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center in Indianapolis, Ind.

Under the new system, soldiers are expected to receive more accurate and timely pay service.

For the Army, the change to the Joint Uniform Military Pay System — Joint Service Software means a new data-entry subsystem, an enhanced telecommunications network and a new mainframe application system.

Officials say that in preparation for the changeover, several preparatory functions will begin in May.

The individual pay accounts of soldiers maintained by USAFAC will be updated to conform to the style used by the Air Force Master Pay Record.

For almost 90 percent of the Army, these modifications will be automatic without any input from the soldier, officials add.

However, for about 10 percent of the Army, soldiers will need to modify their mid-month and end-of-month pay options.

Specific details on these changes will be provided to soldiers by their servicing finance offices.

Officials say that this October, teams from USAFAC will visit finance offices located at Fort Lewis, Wash.; Fort Jackson, S.C.; Camp Casey, Korea; and Schwetzingen, Germany, for the new system's final stage of testing.

Implementation for the active Army currently is slated from January to May 1991, officials add.

The current Army system, JUMPS-Army, will be phased out as the new system goes into effect.

When JUMPS-Army began in the early 1970s, officials considered it a state-of-the-art system.

However, technological advances in computer hardware and software, changes in military pay rules, and the need to gain operational efficiencies dictated the move to a new system.

Family non-support has non-Inspector General remedies

Army News Service

An inspector general here laments that "non-support of family members has become a monumental case load problem for inspectors general throughout the Army.

"This shouldn't be. Family support is a soldier's responsibility."

Thus does Sgt. Maj. Leland D. George call attention to one family issue that can, and should, be resolved at the lower leadership levels of Army units.

Inspectors general, he said, are getting involved prematurely in non-support cases.

"Too often the chain of command isn't aware of the problem or doesn't know how to handle it."

Besides that obligation on the part of the command chain, unit leaders occupy a special status in their capacity to identify and deal with cases of non-support.

"Noncommissioned officers work directly with junior enlisted soldiers and other NCOs. Therefore, they're usually the first leaders to know what goes on in soldiers' personal lives.

"They can do much to resolve non-support problems before these problems land squarely in the commander's lap — as full-blown crises," George continued.

He went on to list some points of guidance that NCOs must know before they can help resolve the issue of non-support:

● The matter isn't just a civilian legal problem that faces some soldiers; it also violates Army policy, and can lead to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

● A soldier who fails to meet family support obligations (including alimony and payments for child support) is headed for big trouble — both with the Army and the civilian courts and enforcement authorities. The longer a soldier fails to make amends, the more trouble he faces.

● Commanders are governed by regulation as to how they must ensure soldier compliance with court orders and agreements. AR 608-99 (Family Support, Child Custody and Paternity) tells the commander the necessary procedures and provides administrative tools to carry out the policy. For example, the commander can force a soldier to make a family-support allotment. The commander also can invoke garnishment against the offending soldier's pay.

● Not just the junior enlisted ranks experience non-support difficulty. Marital separation and divorce cut across all ranks. Whenever marital split ups occur, there may be a dispute over, or willful violation of, family support. By recognizing the potential early and taking appropriate preventive or corrective action, NCOs can help soldiers avoid criminal action and the resultant, irreparable damage to their Army record and career.

● Take time to make soldiers aware of the rules and repercussions. Soldiers must know that the Army will not protect their non-compliance — but in fact may punish them, if they continue violating the rules. This means timely counseling and coaching soldiers to what's right and legal. And, of course, it includes follow-up to assure compliance.

● Guide resistant soldiers as needed through the NCO chain of command to the commander for more intensive corrective action or punishment.

● When you're faced with seeking "relief of the last resort," request help and advice from the local inspector general or staff judge advocate. George noted that "soldiers who fail to support their families aren't necessarily bad people or bad soldiers. But they definitely have a serious personal problem — often a confusing one, demanding speedy resolution. A good NCO will help them resolve it early."

What if you're an NCO facing your first encounter with a non-supporting soldier? If so, George offers this added guidance:

● Never go easy on the soldier just because he performs well on the job, or because you like the soldier personally.

● Never take sides, believing only the soldier's side of the story. (Blame isn't the issue. Your only concern should be that the soldier meet the stated obligation.)

● Never try to cover up the soldier's problem — even for a short time.

● Never assume that soldiers will make good on their promise to work out their non-support problems. (Trust, but verify.)

Early release may affect education benefits

Army News Service

Soldiers requesting an early separation should seek guidance on how their education benefits may be affected.

It is important that soldiers understand how an early release from active duty may affect the benefits they receive from the Montgomery GI Bill and the Army College Fund, say Army personnel officials.

"Some soldiers are unaware that they could lose all benefits, and find out only after their separation has been approved," says Patricia Allison, education specialist with the Army Continuing Education System of the U.S. Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va.

"Many of the voluntary early separations are classified for the convenience of the government," adds Allison, "and as such, the law allows a soldier to serve 20 months of a less-than-three-year tour or 30 months of a longer-than-three-year tour for benefits.

"However, this provision of the law does not apply to the initial-term soldiers who are barred from reenlistment and who request early separation."

The first-term soldier must serve at least 24 months of a less-than-three-year tour or at least 36 months of a three-year or longer tour to be eligible for education benefits.

Soldiers not meeting minimum time-in-service requirements will lose their veterans' education benefits.

Soldiers meeting the time-in-service requirements are eligible to receive MGIB benefits and also will earn a prorated portion of the ACF benefits, based on the number of months they actually served in the qualifying military occupational specialty.

Allison says soldiers are required to receive counseling and to acknowledge the status of their benefits by signing DA Form 669, the soldier's education record form.

Voluntary separation requests will not be approved unless the completed form is included in the separation packet.

Soldiers should contact their local Army education center or personnel service centers for more information, according to a PERSCOM message to the field.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson and Carolyn Bradley
Martin Army Community Hospital

As the summer months approach, military and medical treatment facilities go through a brief period of personnel shortages.

These shortages are due to newly graduated and other PCSing speciality physicians leaving while others are arriving and beginning practice here.

This year, the services at Martin Army Community Hospital affected by these staff transitions will be Obstetrics/Gynecology, Orthopedics, Internal Medicine, Allergy, Dermatology, Oncology and, to a lesser extent, Family Practice.

This can translate into longer waiting times for appointments.

This may also necessitate a greater number of patients being referred to civilian providers under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

A nonavailability statement from MACH is not required for outpatient care. However, a statement is necessary for inpatient care, which requires the patient to stay in a hospital for 24-hours or longer.

It is important to understand that if a nonavailability statement is not obtained before hospitalization, CHAMPUS may not share the costs.

The only times when nonavailability statements are not required before receiving inpatient care are:

- In a true emergency, when a delay in medical treatment could result in death or a serious threat to health.
- When the patient has other non-CHAMPUS primary pay, major medical insurance.
- When the patient resides outside the zip code catchment area. Even though a patient has a nonavailability statement, there is no guarantee that CHAMPUS will pay for all the charges that are billed by the civilian hospital or doctor.

CHAMPUS cost shares only the kinds of care allowed by CHAMPUS rules.

Maternity care is one of the rare cases where even outpatient care requires a nonavailability statement.

Beneficiaries are encouraged to purchase CHAMPUS supplemental or other health insurance to help offset those costs above the CHAMPUS allowable rate.

CHAMPUS supplemental insurance policies are specifically designed to supplement the CHAMPUS benefits.

A hospital stay of even short duration can result in large bills for an uninsured patient.

For further guidance on CHAMPUS rules and regulations or a list of supplemental insurance companies, call the MACH Health Benefits Advisors at 544-3461.

Obstetrics/Gynecology will concentrate during their shortage period on following obstetric patients and will postpone nonurgent gynecological problems until it returns to full staffing.

Patients with gynecological problems, who the physician has determined to need more timely inpatient care, will be offered a referral to civilian sources.

New staff physicians should be in place by August, at which time normal service will be resumed.

Orthopedic Service is losing two of the five physicians presently assigned. Replacements will arrive in mid-August.

With the level of training at Fort Benning during the summer months, orthopedic physicians and physician assistants will be providing care primarily to active duty soldiers.

When possible, they will see patients with simple fractures and family members and retirees in emergency situations.

Patients coming to the Emergency Room for evaluation, will be referred to Orthopedics if possible or to civilian physicians.

The Internal Medicine Clinic will also feel the pinch, with four of the seven doctors from that clinic departing.

This will leave three physicians to cover Internal Medicine patients until mid-August.

This may mean longer waiting times for appointments and increased referrals to civilian care.

Patients who are followed in this clinic may continue to request their medications as usual, but should expect delays in obtaining appointments.

Dermatology and Allergy, which ordinarily have only one physician each, will offer limited services until late July.

The Dermatology staff will continue to treat patients seeking care for warts and those with conditions related to shaving.

The Allergy Clinic staff will continue to administer routine immunizations and allergy patients requiring shots will receive the injections in the Emergency Room.

With the graduation of Family Practice Residents, this service will also experience shortages.

The Family Practice staff will cover inpatient services affected by other provider shortages, causing a reduction in the number of available Family Practice Clinic appointments and longer waiting times for those appointments.

Family Practice patients needing routine PAP smears and physical examinations will be asked to wait until early August when new staff members will arrive.

Family Practice will conduct school physicals in August. If, for some reason, a physical exam is needed prior to August, call your Family Practice doctor and explain the reason for requesting an exception.

Among the many initiatives being undertaken to ease the physician shortage are the continuing efforts to acquire new Partnership Providers under the Military-Civilian Health Services Partnership Program.

This program permits the military hospital to enter into written agreements with civilian health care providers to treat CHAMPUS-eligible beneficiaries.

Internal Partnership Agreements allow civilian providers to treat the eligible beneficiaries at MACH, using military equipment and ancillary staff.

External Partnership Agreements allow military providers to treat the same categories of patients in a civilian facility.

Some of the agreements also allow for the treatment of non-CHAMPUS-eligible patients, such as, active duty personnel and Medicare-eligible patients.

One of the key provisions of the Internal Partnership Program is that the patient is not required to pay the CHAMPUS deductible and copayment.

There are currently 14 Partnership providers providing part-time services in seven specialty areas.

These providers are rendering medical care in Psychiatry, Neurology, Gastroenterology, Ophthalmology, Electromyography, Anesthesia and Cardiology.

The Partnership Program has proved to be a real success at MACH, and because of this success, consideration is now being given to adding Partnership providers in Family Practice and in other specialties that are understaffed.

The staff of MACH is is making every effort to minimize any inconvenience of by actively pursuing new Partnership Agreements and through other innovative programs.

It is expected that once the summer rotation has ended, MACH will emerge better staffed and more capable of caring for the medical needs of its beneficiaries.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Mark A. Gomez
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My spouse and I are in the process of buying a house.

The real estate company has offered us a special warranty on the house.

It sounds like a good deal. Should we purchase the warranty?

A. Home warranties offered by private insurance companies through local real estate agents are becoming very popular.

These warranties are nothing more than insurance policies on the "essential systems" of your house.

These include heating, air-conditioning, plumbing, water heater, fans, electrical wiring, and major appliances.

Typically, these policies do not cover structural or roof problems or termite damage.

It is common for developers and contractors to offer warranties on new homes.

The length of these warranties vary, but can be as long as 10 years.

These warranties are often required by state law.

If you decide to purchase an additional special warranty for your new home, it will cost you.

The cost of the additional policy can be included in the sale price.

However including the price of the warranty in the purchase price may be an unwise financial decision.

The purchaser will pay interest on the warranty price over the life of the house mortgage.

A $500 policy may ultimately cost many thousands of dollars over a 30-year period.

If you are buying a previously-owned house, purchasing a warranty may be prudent.

If you're buying an older house with an old furnace, air conditioner and appliances, you may be protecting yourself from major repair and replacement expenses.

However, a popular consumer magazine has researched the amount insurance companies actually paid to warranty holders for repairs.

Their research revealed that the insurance companies make a huge profit on the warranties.

Generally, insurance companies only pay out one-third of the amount that you pay for yearly premiums.

For example, if your warranty costs $300 per year, the average amount that the insurance company actually pays out for repairs is $100.

You would have saved $200 if you had put your original $300 in the bank and withdrew the funds for repairs as needed.

An alternative to the home warranty is hiring an independent appraiser, or other reliable professional, to conduct a systems check on the house before you buy it.

The appraiser should inspect all of the major systems and appliances and check for structural defects or damage.

A thorough inspector will go through the house from foundation to roof, provide you with a written report, and make suggestions as to how you can increase the value of your home through improvements.

If you discover that the house you intend to buy has a worn out furnace, you can negotiate with the seller for a lower purchase price.

Hiring an independent appraiser before you purchase your house may be the most cost effective way to protect yourself from major home repairs.

Vanguards honor eminent members

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Five men who served with the 18th Infantry Regiment (Vanguards) received that unit's highest honor May 4 when they were inducted as distinguished members of the regiment.

The inductees included two active duty officers, Lt. Col. Archibald V. Arnold III, commander of 1st Bn., 18th Inf., and Lt. Col. Richard L. Strouder, commander of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., and retirees Walter R. Jones, a colonel who served with the unit in Vietnam; Budd Sikes, a former Co. C, 2nd Bn. first sergeant in Vietnam; and Homer A. Lewis, an enlisted Scout who fought in 2nd Bn. and was also a prisoner of war in World War II.

When the Army chief of staff instituted the regimental system in 1985, he created the positions of honorary colonel, honorary sergeant major and distinguished members of the regiment to perpetuate its history, customs and traditions.

The 18th Inf. Regt. presently has 88 distinguished members, whose duties supplement those of the honorary colonel and whose tenures are indefinite.

Col. Theodore W. Reid, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, inducted the men during the 2nd Bn.'s Organization Day review at Kelley Hill's Artillery Field.

Honorary Colonel of the Regiment, retired Col. Edward W. McGregor, praised the soldiers who participated in the pass-in-review, urging them to uphold the tradition of their fallen comrades who earned the Vanguards 51 battle streamers in campaigns from the Civil War to Vietnam.

"Returning to Kelley Hill has brought back great memories for my wife and me," said Sikes, who earned a commission through Officer Candidate School after Vietnam and rose to the rank of major.

"Being part of the greatest Army in the world is something very dear to us.

"Judging by the education level of these soldiers and the sophistication of their equipment, I'd say the 18th Infantry is even better today than it was when I served in the Army," he said. "But one thing that will never change is putting the mission first in everything you do."

One man who served as an enlisted soldier with Company E during World War II, traveled here from Rochester, N.Y.

He said, "This is one of the proudest days of my life, not only being selected as an honorary member of the regiment, but also being able to speak with the fine young soldiers of the 2nd Battalion."

Engineers host outing for family members

586th Engineer Company

Family members of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) watched a rafting demonstration April 14.

The purpose of the demonstration was to show the soldiers' families what their spouses/fathers do for a living, although anyone who stopped by to watch was welcome.

In addition, the families received information on the company's platoon-size deployments to Fort Bragg, N.C., and West Point, N.Y.

1st Platoon, 586th Engr. Co., conducted the actual demonstration.

In seven minutes, they built a five-float raft, capable of carrying an M-1 Abrams tank.

Upon completion of the raft, families received boat and raft rides.

While the rafting demonstration was going on, several soldiers began preparing the picnic, which consisted of hot dogs, hamburgers and barbecue chicken and ribs.

As the families returned from the boat rides, they moved to the picnic area for lunch.

After lunch, the Easter Bunny visited the picnic area and supervised three Easter Egg hunts by age category.

Each category had a chance to find a grand prize egg with a $5 bill in it.

After the Easter Egg hunt, the Easter Bunny visited the children and gave away candy eggs.

Near the end of the picnic, families played various games, such as volleyball, softball, horseshoes and tug-of-war.

The teams were made up mostly of family members and soldiers from different platoons who played against each other.

Although each platoon claimed victory, all were winners.

The day culminated with the families leaving with a good feeling for the company.

The soldiers also enjoyed being with each other under non-working conditions. More importantly, everyone felt they belonged to the team.

Post pays tribute to community mayors

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

A banquet to honor incoming and outgoing post mayors and vice-mayors was in the Blue Room of the Main Noncommissioned Officers' Club May 10.

The mayors, only recently elected, were formally installed at the luncheon by Chief of Staff Col. Barry W. Mahek, Director of Community Activities Alan Stewart, and Community Life Program Manager Huey Bridgeman.

"To the outgoing mayors, I say thank you for the many contributions you have made to your individual communities and to Fort Benning," Mahek said.

"Because of your efforts, Fort Benning has a new Community Life Center for Main Post and numerous new outreach programs, to include aerobic and other health-oriented classes," he said.

Mahek said, "The mayors' efforts have a direct impact on our quality of life and have become more responsive to the needs of our residents.

"The newly elected mayors are the foundation for a cohesive sense of community," Mahek said.

"It is through your unselfish efforts and personal sacrifice that we will fulfill our desire for being an Army community of excellence with a strong emphasis on family wellness," he said.

Bridgeman said the most visible evidence of the difference the mayors have made is the crosswalk from Davis Hill to the Main Post Exchange, which runs over Interstate 185 and is near completion.

"Let me suggest that it be named 'Mayors Crosswalk' in honor of the service the mayors so faithfully provide," he said.

The following incoming and outgoing mayors and vice-mayors, received letters of congratulations signed by Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire and gavels, a symbol of the office:

Poetry time

Kindergartner Jimmy McPhaul pretends to be Lorenzo Meachum's grandson as Meachum recites a poem during Poetry Alive's visit to Wilbur School. Meachum and J.C. Mullins of the poetry troupe spent the day at the school presenting two programs for students. The program was sponsored by the Wilbur School Parent-Teacher Association. In each session, students were enthralled as the men moved from poem to poem, acting out the poems and explaining them to the children as they went.

During the afternoon, students met with the men in follow-up sessions to talk with them about poems, to learn poems and to work together with fellow students to create their own poetry.

Earnhardt wins 21st annual Winston 500

Beats closest competitor by 2 car lengths

Talladega Superspeedway

Although the margin of victory was only two car lengths, Dale Earnhardt was in command throughout the race to win the 21st annual Winston 500 May 7 at Talladega Superspeedway before a crowd of 140,000.

For Earnhardt, the victory was his first in the Winston 500, and his third Winston Cup triumph at the World's Fastest Speedway.

He held off a strong challenge by Greg Sacks at the finish to pocket $98,975 for his afternoon drive.

Five cars, driven by Sacks, Earnhardt, Mark Martin, Ernie Irvan and Kenny Schrader, battled throughout the second half of the race, before Schrader dropped a valve, and Martin and Irvan fell back several seconds on a restart.

After the restart, on lap 172, Earnhardt and Sacks ran 1-2 for the final 16 laps, with Sacks staying in contention, but never really threatening to take the lead.

In a preview of the finish, Earnhardt also held Sacks at bay at the halfway point, on lap 94, to win the $10,000 Right Guard Halfway Challenge Award. His overall dominance of the event was so great that he led 113 of the 188 laps.

"It was a smooth day for us. The car never missed a beat. The boys did a good job in the pits and everything just went great for us," said Earnhardt.

"I'm glad that it was just me and Greg there at the end. When there were four of us out there, I was wondering what I'd have to do in that situation. With just me and him, all I had to do was play defense."

Earnhardt's victory moved him ahead of Darrell Waltrip as motor sports' all-time money winner, with $10,213,178.

After winning $24,725 for finishing 10th, Waltrip's career total is now $10,201,565.

The victory upped Earnhardt's lead in the Winston Cup point standings to 90 points over Morgan Shepherd, and also made him one of two drivers, along with Derrike Cope, still eligible for the Winston Million bonus in 1990.

Should either of them win both the Coca Cola 600 at Charlotte and the Heinz Southern 500 at Darlington, they's claim $1 million from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company.

Mark Martin was third in the Winston 500, followed by Irvan, Michael Waltrip, Terry Labonte, Kyle Petty, Shepherd, Hut Stricklin and Darrell Waltrip.

Pole-winner Bill Elliott was involved in a three-car accident on lap 77 and finished 22.

Davey Allison, last year's winner, finished 25th. Allison had a strong start and led the race at one point but fell back 26 laps when he had trouble with his car and had to take to the garage.

Kenny Schrader won the Goody's Headache award when he dropped a valve due to a faulty distributor, ending his strong run late in the race.

The race took 3 hours 8 minutes and 2 seconds with a average speed of 159.571 miles per hour. Thirty laps were run under the caution flag and the lead changed 25 time among 12 drivers.

For Earnhardt, his Winston 500 triumph completed a weekend sweep for him. He won round one of the International Race of Champions at Talladega May 6.

The next appearance of the Winston Cup Series at Talladega Superspeedway will be on July 29 for the Diehard 500.

In other race action May 6, Jimmy Horton out-dueled defending race winner Tracy Leslie and veteran Charlie Glotzbach to win the Bumper-To-Bumper 500K ARCA Permatex Super Car Series event at the Superspeedway before a crowd of 55,000.

The next appearance at Talladega for the series will be July 28 for the ARCA 500K.

Mudcats welcome 'The Chicken'

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The Famous Chicken will be in town for tonight only and calling Golden Park his nest.

The Columbus Mudcats will face Southern League rival Birmingham Barons tonight at Golden Park.

More than the hot bats and fielding prowess of the 'Cats, tonight's fans will see The Chicken at no extra charge.

Once based solely in San Diego, where he entertained Padres fans with his crazy antics and umpire harassment, The Chicken now travels the country rousing baseball fans where ever he goes.

Tonight, Golden Park will be scene for his chicanery, and the sky's the limit.

Fans can enjoy the entertainment at regular club prices.

General admission tickets are $3 each, and box seats sell for $4 each.

Military personnel, senior citizens and children under the age of 12 can take $1 off the price of any general admission ticket.

According to Club Owner Steve Bryant, this price change went into effect early this season.

Birmingham will be in town today and Saturday for a 7:35 p.m. start and Sunday for a 2:05 p.m. game.

The promotions continue tomorrow with Team Picture Night.

The Orlando Sun Rays, Class AA affiliate of the Minnesota Twins, will be in town Monday through Thursday to round out next week's homestand.

The Barons, who have hovered to within two games of first place all season, promise to be stiff competition for the Mudcats who have not dropped more than a game in the standings for more than two weeks.

The Alabama-based affiliate of the Chicago White Sox has featured slugging star Frank Thomas, who was the talk of the White Sox training camp earlier this year.

Thomas, a former player with Auburn University and a local Columbus-area high school favorite, still makes his off-season home in Columbus.

He is expected to move back up to "the bigs" before the end of the regular season.

Mudcats General Manager Joe Kremer urges fans to get their tickets early as "The Chicken promotion" promises to be a sellout event.

29th gets sports award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Commanding General's Sports Trophy was awarded to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Commanding the unit is Capt. Mike Hale who acted as both an athlete and a coach.

During the 1989 season, he coached the championship basketball team, played for the post football champions, was a two-time runner-up in the U.S. Infantry Center Golf Tournament and played for the Fort Benning Rugby Club, which won the U.S. Military Region Championship.

Post Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek presented the award to the unit.

"I've just presented a very significant award to some very worthy recipients," he said.

Mahek reflected on his command of 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., and the unit's encounters with the award-winning battalion.

"I've experienced the athletic prowess of this unit first hand, and unfortunately, I was often on the losing end," he said.

Mahek quipped that they do so well in athletics, it's a wonder the unit gets any work done.

"However, I do know this unit gets its work done and has been recognized by the Department of the Army for its outstanding maintenance," he said.

"This award reflects on the total dedication of the soldiers on and off duty."

Sappers zap Panthers, 30-9

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

The 197th Infantry Brigade was destined to win the post volleyball championship — both teams competing for the crown represented units of the 197th.

The 72nd Engineer Company Sappers defeated the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Panthers, 30-9, in tournament action May 11 at Briant Wells Gym.

By the end of the second half of the best-of-three tournament, the Sappers had wracked up two 15-point wins over the Panthers.

Although both teams entered the championship with 9-0 records, the Panthers couldn't keep pace with the Sappers.

The Sappers, displaying both a strong defense and offense with quick blocks and spikes, led the Panthers 15-4 by the end of the first half and continued the onslaught through to the end of the second half with 15-5.

"I'm proud of the team," said Sappers coach Enoaka Tuato. "Everyone supported each other to make the team what it is."

Panthers coach Briant Bartley said, "Despite our lack of time to prepare for the game, I think we came a long way with great teamwork."

Reflections Reflections

Responsible soldiers share vision for peace

By Chaplain Mark W. Kayser
1st Battalion, 507th PIR

"They will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation will not take up sword against nation, nor will they train for war anymore" (Isaiah 2:4)

These words of Isaiah have inspired people of faith since they were first uttered by the prophet himself.

They were born not of a peaceful world but one filled with the torment of war.

They are words of hope, a hope that sprang from a longing for peace.

No one is more aware of the destructive force of battle than today's soldier.

At Fort Benning soldiers train with live ammunition, under conditions carefully managed to simulate the modern battlefield. They train for war.

Responsible soldiers share Isaiah's vision for peace.

Although soldiers train for war, like Isaiah, they dream of a world that will not bear its scars.

As Armed Forces Day approaches, we are reminded of the sacrifices made by the men and women who have served and are serving in the armed forces of the United States.

For more than 200 years the sons and daughters of our country have answered their nation's call to service.

They left the comfort and peace of home to face the demands of the field of battle.

Most brought with them an abhorrence of war and its effects, for theirs was a vision of peace.

We all would like to live in a world such as Isaiah envisioned, but history has not yet produced such a world.

Nations continue to strive with one another with all the force they can muster. What is the answer to this unrelenting dilemma?

Our nation's posture is to work for peace through diplomacy, a diplomacy underscored by a strong national armed force.

Our dream is that we will use our power for good. Our policy is to maintain our armed forces to ensure peace.

We are all aware of the delicate line between the right and wrong exercise of power.

As we survey the history of our nation we are reminded of occasions when that line was blurred.

But overwhelmingly our record has been one of fighting for the right and the good.

Therefore we may celebrate Armed Forces Day in the spirit of Isaiah.

We may join him in his vision of a world without war.

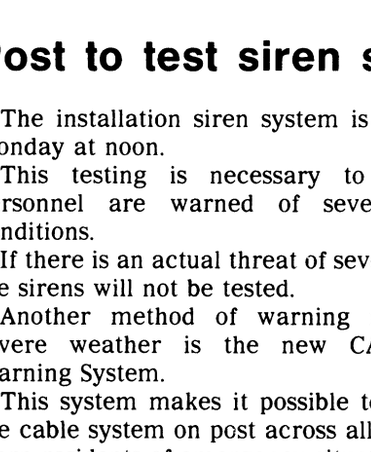
POST BRIEFS

Memorial Day ceremony slated at post cemetery



A Memorial Day ceremony is scheduled at Fort Benning's Main Post Cemetery Monday at 9 a.m.

Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. William M. Steele will deliver the Memorial Day message and will be assisted by Chap. (Col.) Roy N. Mathis in placing a wreath on the grave of the unknown soldier.

DEH to pick up radon detectors

Beginning June 4, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing will begin picking up radon detectors in Custer Terrace, Perkins Place and Norton Court.

If you have any questions regarding the radon survey, call the DEH Environmental Management Branch at 545-4766/4957.

Post to test siren system

The installation siren system is tested each Monday at noon.

This testing is necessary to ensure all personnel are warned of severe weather conditions.

If there is an actual threat of severe weather, the sirens will not be tested.

Another method of warning residents of severe weather is the new CADCO Alert Warning System.

This system makes it possible to break into the cable system on post across all channels to warn residents of emergency situations.

This system will be tested for the first time June 4 at noon.

Thereafter, it will be tested on the first Monday of each month.

Army Soldier Show performances scheduled

The 1990 Army Soldier Show will be at Fort Benning June 5 and 6. Performances will be at Theater #3, Sand Hill, at 7 p.m.

The June 5 performance is limited to U.S. Army Infantry Training Center One Station Unit Training soldiers and cadre only.

The performance June 6 is open to all Fort Benning personnel, retirees and special guests of the commanding general.

Special seating has been provided for 500 OSUT soldiers at the June 6 show.

From reports received from other installations, this year's show continues to be an outstanding production.

Fort Benning is honored to have one of its own performing in this year's production.

Spec. Gregory Baron, a member of the 283rd Army Band is a featured singer.

Come out and enjoy a free show, performed by soldiers for soldiers.

Split decision

Cub Scouts from dens all over Fort Benning pile on the syrup, ice cream, fruits and nuts to make a 40-foot banana split. The event was part of the last organized meeting of the season.

Commissary gets face lift

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning commissary is getting a face lift, and the new commissary officer is responsible for its new look.

Commissary Officer Larry J. Bentley and his staff have worked diligently since his arrival here in November to renovate and improve the commissary for the Fort Benning community.

"I have to credit Jim Hobbins, the commissary officer before me, for setting everything on track," Bentley said.

"He began making changes and got the ball rolling," he said.

However, Bentley said he saw the need for more changes.

One of the first things Bentley wanted to do was to repair and clean the 15-year-old building.

Then new freezer, dairy, meat and produce cases were installed.

After the ceiling was replaced and the floor repaired, Bentley added new products, such as fresh sandwiches and salads and 300 additional frozen food items.

"All I need is for one person to request us to carry a certain item, and I'll try to add it," Bentley said. "I figure, if the person took the time to put in the suggestion, then I'll take the time to look for it."

Bentley said he is constantly comparing and researching items to ensure that the customer pays low prices.

His desk is blanketed with advertisements from local grocery stores. He uses them to compare other stores' prices to commissary prices.

He said if he finds an item that's sold for less, he investigates.

If he discovers that the vendor is selling the product to the commissary at a higher price, he said he demands the vendor lower the price to meet that of other stores, he said.

Bentley was born in Columbus and raised in Clinton, S.C., Bentley began his career in the grocery store business when he was in the Navy.

He took a part-time job at a grocery store as a bag boy. Later, he was promoted to sweeping floors and stocking shelves.

A few days after leaving the Navy, he was offered a job as assistant manager of the store.

His career continued to accelerate when he was promoted to manager of three grocery stores in Florida.

When the company went bankrupt, however, he decided it was time to look for another job.

He put in his application at the Troop Support Agency in Fort Lee, Va., and was hired.

He was sent to West Germany where he served as deputy commissary officer in Bremerhaven and commissary officer in Mannheim and Heidelberg.

He was then offered the job of commissary officer at Fort Benning, and the changes began.

He said that it is because of his staff that things work smoothly.

"I have a staff that is very willing to make things happen."

"I don't claim to have all the smarts. It's a team effort to get the mission accomplished."

And the mission, he said, is to serve the military customer.

"New and exciting things are on the horizon," he said.

He is planning on offering Chinese take-out food, more sidewalk sales, a street sale, and a new check-out system.

The check-out system will entail having a large computer screen telling customers, which register is open.

Lines will be rerouted so carts don't block aisles. Check-out service, he said, will be faster.

Bentley said he and his staff can better serve the community if he knows what the community wants.

Therefore, he invites units to get more active in the commissary council meetings and customers to fill out the suggestion forms.

"We can do our jobs better if we are informed," he said.

Armed Forces Day

Thousands gather for activities

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

This year's Armed Forces Day celebration kicked off when nine members of the Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team from 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, jumped into York Field, painting the morning sky with streams of yellow smoke.

Thousands of fun seekers spent a day in the sun at the Armed Forces Day Open House and Association of the U.S. Army Picnic May 19, celebrating Armed Forces Day.

According to Sgt. Wade Shell, AUSA volunteer administrator about 12,000 soldiers, family members and civilians turned out for the event.

Following a parade, in which local units participated, the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA elected and crowned their chapter queen.

Sgt. Valerie Smith from the AMMED subchapter was crowned queen by the outgoing queen, Spec. Barbara Holloway, from the Victory subchapter, and the Miss Georgia Superstars.

According to Shell, the competition is the chapter's most successful fund-raising activity. The candidates have been campaigning since March for votes, he said.

This year, they raised more than $24,000, which represents more than 96,000 votes at 25 cents each.

The money raised will stay here for the soldiers, Shell said.

On Stewart-Watson Field were vehicle and equipment displays so the curious could get a closer look.

Children got a chance to try some Army training with a special child's version of the Slide-For-Life.

Other game booths were set up throughout the area, such as the Drill Sergeant Dunking Booth and the Fishin' Hole.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Working Dogs' dramatic demonstrations brought oohs and aahs and applause from the crowds that gathered throughout the day.

Entertainment was also provided by the Miss Georgia Superstars and by four local radio stations, South 106, Magic 98, Sunny 100 and Foxie 105, that aired live broadcasts from the area.

Soldiers demonstrated their athletic prowess in six inter-unit events sponsored by Physical Activities. The events were the log shuttle, litter carry, tug-of-war, push-ups and 100- and 200-meter dashes.

Quality must begin today

By Jan Chervenak
Total Quality Management

This week marks the completion of another milestone in the Total Quality management process.

More than 5,000 employees at Fort Benning have completed the four-hour Quality Awareness Experience.

Since the process of quality has no end, our focus is not on reaching a milestone, but on the quality of the journey and where we are going.

To chart a true course, we must know where we are, as well as where we want to go. So, it is appropriate at this juncture to assess these two states.

Where we are

When Post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire committed to the TQM process, he set a clear course for us to follow.

He summed it up in three terms: determination, education and implementation.

Determination means accepting our acknowledged excellence and leadership as an installation, focusing on our work as a process, and each of us, individually, making a personal commitment to quality in all aspects of our work.

To use an analogy from the physical sciences, determination was our prime mover, and education provided us our direction.

Couth control officer on duty

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Periodically, when I least expect it, Staff Sgt. Strac will climb out of his track, knock the dust off his BDUs, buff up his boots and come up to the Bayonet office to set me straight.

He's the couth control officer for uniforms.

If the reg says no starch for the BDUs, and it does, he goes around enforcing that mandate, jumping dead into the back pocket of anyone in violation.

Hats and bags set him off this time around.

Seems as though he'd been forced to leave his beloved Harmony Church area for some ceremony on Main Post, punishment enough for an Infantryman whose idea of recreation is a 20-mile forced march with 60-pound ruck under Heat Category Three conditions.

But what he saw made him want to return to his world of real soldiers and never come back.

"I saw a lieutenant wearing a 50-mission hat," he exclaimed.

"I couldn't believe my eyes.

"I actually thought the kid was a B-36 bomber pilot returned from World War II.

"I mean he had cardboard in his garrison hat (not what he called it), and it was formed to a peak that jutted out at the rear.

"Kind of matched his chin, which jutted in the opposite direction.

"It was incredible. It was all I could do to keep from ripping it off his head and burning it," he said gruffly.

"Did you ask him to remove it?" I asked.

"Nah, there were all those colonels around. I figured if it didn't bother them, I'd let it ride."

"You know those colonels won't take any action," I said.

"They think uniform corrections are sergeants' business."

"Even when it involves an officer? No way," he said.

"So anyway, what brings you up here this time?" I asked, prepared to sit and listen for the rest of the afternoon.

"A trip I made to twinky-land," he said.

"California?" I asked. "No, Airborne School," he said.

"I happened to pass by while new troops were in-processing. You won't believe what these kids bring with them now days.

"When I was a private and PCSed or went TDY, everything I owned would fit into a duffel bag.

"And the Army knew it. In fact one of the smartest things the Army did was put shoulder straps on those suckers.

"But duffel bags aren't good enough for today's soldiers," he said, frowning.

"You shoulda seen the Gucci suitcases, and all those other fancy brands.

"But what really got me were they had those little carts and were pulling their bags around behind them. I thought I was at the Atlanta airport.

"Sure didn't look like no soldiers to me."

"Well, I guess we need to use our brains, and if someone comes up with an easier way to do things, why not do it?" I said.

"Ain't the Army way," he said, spitting some of his Red Man into his Coke can. "Just don't look right. Damn sissies is what they is."

I could see he was getting riled up and was considering going for cover when a student officer came in looking for one of the reporters.

After he left, Strac leaned over and said, "and that's another thing. Officers carrying purses now. Who'd believe it."

"That wasn't a purse, that was a demo bag. They use them for carrying their supplies and stuff," I said.

"Jist what I said, purse. So what if it's O.D. in color, the thing is carried over the shoulder and contains trash. It's a purse."

"So you want these guys in BDUs to walk around with executive brief cases like they used to?" I asked. "Seems to me a demo bag is the perfect answer."

"Well I can see it's time I left Disneyland and returned to the real Army. Ain't gettin' no support around here," he said.

I wished him a safe journey and said a silent prayer for any private who might cross his path and watched him saunter off.

Power lifter weighs Snively's facts

Dear Snively:

I would like to clarify some points for you in your efforts to not be manly.

1. Power lifters do not sweat like horses. We much prefer to think we sweat like bears. Big ones. I have a T-shirt that shows what the bear should look like.

2. Power lifters do not lift large weights over their heads. We do, however, lift an occasional ton or two off our backs, chests and the floor.

3. You seemed to take some umbrage at the mere possibility of being broken on the squat rack.

I assure you that you would have nothing to fear.

The rack has cross bars for safety. These bars ensure that nothing bad could happen to the weights.

4. There are numerous nose plugs to block the odors of a smelly gym.

Also, the Building 4 gym is top notch and does not stink. (After all, this is the home of the Infantry and numerous captains have told me that Infantry stuff does not stink.)

Besides, what would be worse, the wonderful smell of weight lifters or the stench of a bunch of pencil-necked, toothpick-shouldered Infantry Officers Advanced Course captains who just returned from their daily lunchtime run to Atlanta and back.

Hey, Power lifting (note that the "P" in power lifting is capitalized) sweat is quality stuff.

Besides, the girls love it, and you do get to wear neat belts and knee wraps.

5. Ms. Editor is right, we do use spotters and lift safely.

And if an accident should happen, well, the mark of a real man is a "U-shaped" indention on his chest from the bench.

I'm sure you would have one in no time.

6. You mentioned the use of coconut oil in your article.

You are mistaking us with the body builders of the world.

Body builders are the guys who stand around in less than underwear, carrying tiny barbells, looking at themselves in mirrors all the time (their car mirrors are aimed to look at themselves — not the road), rub various objectionable oils on their bodies, and save not only their legs but their whole bodies (minus the head).

Power lifters are the guys in the corner (in a cloud of chalk dust) who are making all the noise, having fun, being sociable, and doing some real weight lifting.

We won't even discuss Nautilus users here except to say that the Lord made Nautilus solely to keep geeks off the real weights. If you don't believe this then ask the CG's aide. He knows.

7. Don't worry about special diets. I work on the "see food — eat food" diet.

If you don't think this is a tough diet, try eating food you can't see.

This should ease all your fears about Power lifting.

Since you are "injured" (aka — riding a profile), I have an option for you.

There is serious discussion about Fort Benning hosting a USPF-sanctioned competition in December.

There is plenty of time for you to get in shape. You would be surprised at how well you would do.

You lift a ton here, a ton there, and after awhile it starts to add up.

To help you, I am enclosing a list of qualifying weights by weight class to give you a goal to shoot for and a subscription blank to "Power lifting USA." What more do you need?

Besides, it beats the pants out of dawn runs and shinsplints.

Dean Rose
Power Lifter

P.S. I am close to having enough folks to put together a team to challenge the 29th. We may not win — the 29th bunch are great guys and unfortunately good lifters — but we will have fun.

DEAR EDITOR

This is in response to The Bayonet being delivered free to all homes at Fort Benning.

I am the area coordinator for Area 90 in Custer Terrace, and the papers are causing problems in my area.

The paper is delivered early every Friday morning and, in most cases, they lie in the yards for days on end.

Some families refuse to pick them up because they didn't ask for The Bayonet.

The papers just lay there, sometimes for up to two weeks or more.

I have even seen people come home and walk over the paper, leaving it there.

This doesn't make for a clean yard.

Some people get angry when I ask them to clean up their yards.

If you have a solution, please print it so all can see and take heed.

Staff Sgt. Malcolm Jackson
Area Coordinator
Area 90

Dear Staff Sgt. Jackson:

I want to acknowledge that you have a tough job as an area coordinator.

Getting people in housing areas to cooperate can sometimes be a challenge.

However, as everyone in the Army should know, living in post housing is a privilege, not a right.

If residents refuse to abide by certain rules, to include watering and mowing their lawns and conducting police call, then they are subject to lose the privilege of on-post housing.

Being in the Army carries with it certain responsibilities, one of which is staying abreast of what's happening in the command and in the Army.

The two primary ways of keeping up are through the chain of command and the commander's command information tool, the post newspaper.

The post newspaper is an attempt to get information, which might not get passed on from command information classes, to soldiers and their family members.

We try to present this information in an attractive, easy-to-read package and get it distributed the most efficient way possible.

As of March 1, our printer, The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, began home delivery to all quarters occupants, regardless of whether or not they subscribe to the local paper.

This was something we had wanted for years.

Although this free delivery doesn't guarantee that everyone who gets the paper will read it, we have succeeded in making important information paper easily available to a large part of Fort Benning's population.

We really hope the community will see this as a service, not an inconvenience.

I ask that if residents don't pick up the paper to read it, then please pick it up and recycle it, or, at the very least, dispose of it properly.

Soldiers who live in quarters will continue to have copies of The Bayonet delivered to their doors, and I ask anyone who has never read the paper to give it a chance.

Included in every issue is helpful information that impacts on the lives of almost everyone in and around Fort Benning.

We'd like to hear from anyone who has a suggestion on how we might improve.

While I sympathize with your problem, Staff Sgt. Jackson, I will not apologize for trying to get information to post residents or for making that information easily accessible.

AUSA annual picnic attracts thousands of people

Entertainment has something for everyone

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army cooked and served a ton of food for the thousands of hungry visitors to the annual picnic and Armed Forces Day celebration here May 19.

According to Sgt. Wade Shell, AUSA volunteer administrator about 12,000 soldiers, family members and civilians turned out for the event.

At the picnic, Sgt. Valerie Smith from the AMMED subchapter was crowned chapter queen by Spec. Barbara Holloway, last year's queen from the Victory subchapter, and the Miss Georgia Superstars.

Smith received, in addition to the prizes awarded to all the contestants, a dress blue uniform, an evening gown, an AUSA watch, a tiara, and an expense paid trip to the October AUSA National Meeting in Washington, D.C.

Each contestant received a $100 savings bond, an AUSA plaque, an AUSA warm-up jacket, a 1-year AUSA membership, and a bouquet of roses.

The runner-up was Cpl. Michelle Bagley from the Pioneer subchapter.

She received, in addition to her other prizes, an AUSA watch, an expense paid trip to the October AUSA National Meeting in Washington, D.C. and a runner-up sash.

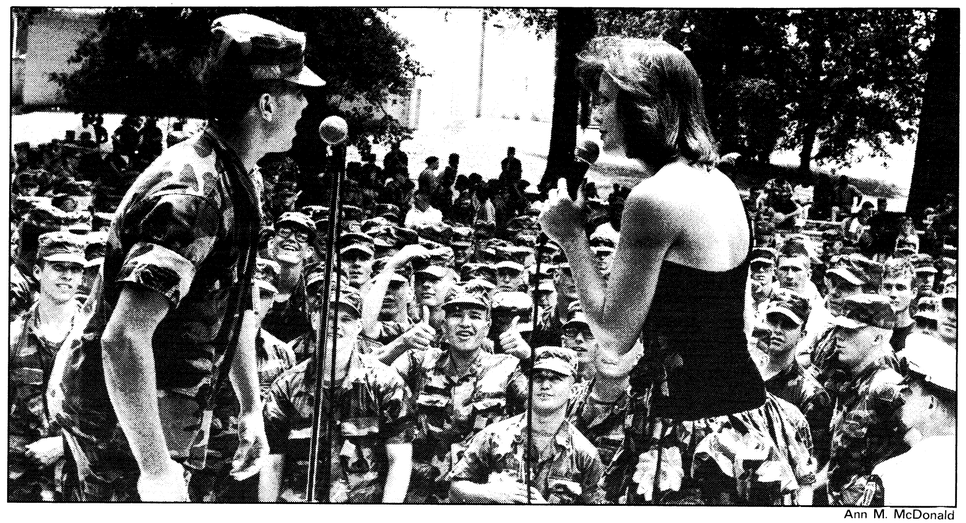
According to Shell, the competition is the chapter's most successful fund raising activity. The candidates have been working since March campaigning for votes, he said.

This year, they raised more than $24,000, which represents more than 96,000 votes at 25 cents each.

The candidates also held bake sales, car washes, and pie throwing events to earn money for the chapter, said Shell.

The money raised will stay here for the soldiers, Shell said.

Another highlight of the picnic was the assortment of entertainment provided, said Jim Gallager, executive vice president for the chapter.



Ann M. McDonald

Georgia Superstar Karen Reeder sings to a soldier from the Infantry Training Center much to the delight of his peers in the audience.

The rock band Flashbacks, with lead vocalist Rebecca Wright, was a hit with most of the crowd, who were familiar with some of the top tunes played.

The Miss Georgia Superstars, representatives of the 1989 Miss Georgia competition, pleased the audience with a personalized rendition of God Bless the USA.

According to Gallager, the audience liked the Superstars so much that the chapter plans on asking the Superstars to return to perform at other AUSA functions.

Shana Bryan, Miss Columbus, continued the entertainment with by singing songs by Whitney Houston. Her finale included the Star Spangled Banner.

Four local radio stations, South 106, Magic 98, Sunny 100 and Foxy 105, continued the music entertainment with live remote broadcasts from the area.

On Stewart-Watson Field, units set up vehicles, displays and equipment for the crowd to get a closer look.

Children got a chance to try some Army training with a special child's version of the Slide-For-Life.

Other game booths were set up throughout the area, such as the Drill Sergeant Dunking Booth and the Fishin' Hole.

Nine members of the Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team from 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, made a special appearance by jumping into York Field trailing a stream of yellow smoke behind them.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center military police working dogs and their handlers put on several demonstrations for the crowd. The police showed how their dogs displayed basic obedience and how they reacted during different attack situations.

Soldiers got together for some friendly competition during the inter-unit games sponsored by Physical Activities.

They participated in six events, which included: the log shuttle, litter carry, tug-of-war, push-ups and 100- and 200-meter dash.

The soldiers collected points throughout the games to determine who the over-all winner would be.

First place went to 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, second place went to 75th Ranger Regiment and third place went to 197th Infantry Brigade.

TQM

Education has been executed top-down, with no categories omitted.

Now we must add sufficient force to accelerate Fort Benning toward its quality objective.

We must implement those Absolutes of Quality on which we have been educated to fulfill our determination to "Do It Right The First Time, Every Time."

Where We are Going

Implementation is the proper focus for the near and intermediate futures.

Many organizations are well on their way.

Supervisors and operations personnel have been planning and anticipating this time since the initial education sessions in October and November 1989.

Now is the time to apply the necessary force to accelerate us toward our quality goals.

The power to generate this force is in the people, who, in effect, are Fort Benning.

Look at the work processes you are involved in, consider the end effect of your daily work.

Is the quality there? You may recall, the test to answer this question is:

- Quality is conformance to requirements.

Do you know the true requirements? Will the process allow you to meet them, routinely?

- The system for quality is prevention.

Are error causes built into your work process? Have you told anyone whose in a position to remove them?

- The standard for quality is Error Free. Ask yourself, "Do I have an error free attitude toward my work?"
- The measurement of quality is the price of nonconformance, the cost of doing things wrong.

Do you know the cost of waste and rework in your job?

Have you used these costs to discuss unsatisfactory work processes with your supervisor?

Have you and your supervisor designed a plan to build quality in and drive the costs of nonconformance down?

Through the determination and education processes, some have expressed doubt about the ability of our system to correct itself.

But we are the system. And the results that are emerging are real.

A Quality Improvement Team in partnership with the Training and Doctrine Command has been established to correct how we handle excess material.

The stakes in this TQM project alone are estimated in excess of $53 million annually.

Quality improvements in work processes have resulted in housing vacancy-rate reductions, hotel service improvements, identification of fire hydrant line nonconformances (Destin), and incinerated waste reductions.

These successes mark the beginning of what can become a quality revolution.

But it's not going to happen if we don't participate to the last person.

Some have said they are uncomfortable discussing quality issues with their supervisors, or they have a quality issue and don't know to whom it should be reported.

This situation was provided for by Spigelmire when he created the TQM office.

Quality issues, to include error causes, nonconformances, and just plain good ideas, can be forwarded to: TQM Office, ATTN: ATZB-TQ.

Our responsibility is to use the chain-of-command and make it work, but if that's not possible, send quality issues to the TQM Office.

Clearly, where we are going is not an easy journey. But it promises to be a very satisfying one.

We have all been given an opportunity to perform a great service, some have been waiting a career for this chance.

Dare to claim it. The time is now.

Student Training Detachment headquarters reopens

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Things are looking better for the International Student Training Detachment since it reopened its headquarters May 11.

The renovated headquarters in- and out-processes students and resolves any academic, administrative, logistical and personal problems they may have.

Located in Olson Hall, the headquarters' mission is to advise the U. S. Army Infantry School command and staff on all areas of the Security Assistance Training Program and Foreign Military Training.

It processes more than 650 students annually. The students represent more than 100 nations.

In addition to assisting the students with their military schooling ISTD acquaints them with civilian social and home life and local business activities.

The students are taken on a tour of the nation's capital and visit Disneyland.

The new headquarters will make the students stay at Benning more comfortable.

BELIZE

School of Americas

Belize is the northernmost nation of Central America, bordered by Mexico on the north, Guatemala to the south and west, and the Caribbean Sea on the east.

Known as the British Honduras until 1973, the former British colony achieved self-government in 1964 and independence in 1981, ending more than 300 years of British colonial presence.

The Belizean Constitution of 1981 created an independent democratic state within the British Commonwealth of Nations.

The coast of Belize is swampy and lined with lagoons; numerous reefs and cays, or low islands, lie off the coast.

Low-lying savanna covers most of the interior, much of which was originally covered by hardwood forests.

Several short and turbulent rivers flow through the country.

In the south lie the Maya Mountains.

Annual rainfall averages 81.5 inches, and the daily temperatures range between 60 and 90.

The population consists of three groups. The dominant group are the Creoles, people of mixed African and European descent.

The Caribs, descendants of Caribbean Island Indians, form the second group.

The third group is the Maya Indians.

Some 10,000 refugees from Guatemala and El Salvador settled in Belize during the 1980s.

Belizeans have a taste for the U.S. lifestyle in sports, popular music and consumer goods.

Direct U.S. satellite television is broadcast in most of the country.

Belize has no television station of its own and only one radio station.

Area: 8,867 square miles, about the size of Massachusetts.

Population: 168,000, roughly the same as Columbus; the population density is 17 persons per square mile.

Major religions: Roman Catholicism, Methodism, Anglicanism.

Literacy rate: 90 percent.

Life expectancy: 60 years.

Official language: English.

Capital city: Belmopan, a small inland town protected from the fury of tropical storms. It became the capital in 1970. Belmopan replaced the coastal Belize City, the nation's largest urban center as the capital.

Per capita income: $1,200.

Currency: One-to-one with the dollar.

Economy: Major exports — citrus fruits and sugar, more than half of exports of domestic goods go to the United States.

MARTIN CARE

By Catherine Reed, RNC
Martin Army Community Hospital

In keeping with the Martin Army Community Hospital's "We Care" philosophy, a new service is being offered to beneficiaries of military medical care.

The service is Managed Care and promises to either provide the medical care required by our military beneficiaries or arrange for other practitioners or facilities to assist in providing that care.

Managed Care is a recently-developed method of medical management within the military community.

The specific goals of managed care include improving access to care for all military beneficiaries, maximizing use of Martin Army Community Hospital and its health care providers, and assisting both the beneficiaries and hospital in cost-savings.

The nurse case manager is the most visible person within the managed care system.

This individual coordinates both inpatient and outpatient consults to other medical treatment facilities that provide beneficiaries with continued care beyond Martin Army's capability.

The nurse case manager works as a liaison between MACH and other medical treatment facilities, making use of her medical knowledge when coordinating needs and transfer of patients between the facilities.

The nurse case manager follows patients who are transported to other local medical facilities for treatment.

Daily calls are made to the local facilities to obtain a current status report on each patient, which is provided to the MACH commander.

Once patients are stable and able to communicate their desires, the nurse case manager speaks directly with them and their families.

Should the patients and their families desire that the patient continue his medical care within the military medical system and the attending physician agrees that the patient is stable, the nurse case manager works to coordinate the arrangements for the return of the patient to the military health care system.

An additional duty of the nurse case manager is to discuss health benefit options with the patient.

CHAMPUS beneficiaries, Medicare beneficiaries, as well as active duty beneficiaries, could thus be made aware of their benefit options, some of which result in a financial obligation on the part of the beneficiary.

The nurse case manager should be contacted as early as possible, preferably before hospitalization at another facility is scheduled.

If this is done, beneficiaries and their families can be fully briefed in the services available and the financial obligations incurred.

However, inquiries are always welcome, whatever the beneficiary's condition or hospital status.

CHAMPUS eligible retired beneficiaries who require cardiac catheterization, for example, will incur a 25-percent share of the cost of the procedure if done outside of the military system.

Cardiac catheterizations can be done within the local community but are also available for CHAMPUS-eligible beneficiaries at Eisenhower Army Medical Center in Augusta, Ga.

Unless the procedure is considered a medical emergency by the physician and must be done locally, the CHAMPUS-eligible beneficiary can opt to have the procedure and subsequent cardiac surgery, if necessary, completed at DDEAMC.

The nurse case manager coordinates the arrangements for the procedure to be completed at DDEAMC, to include the transportation, if needed.

Managed care at MACH is dedicated to assisting military beneficiaries in obtaining the best possible health care available at a significant cost avoidance and savings.

Beneficiaries requiring assistance with their health care needs may call Maj. Catherine D. Reed, nurse case manager, at 544-1594 or 544-1597.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Fort Benning's annual Spring Energy Awareness Campaign was last week, and many post workers and residents were rewarded for "thinking energy" with incentives ranging from sun visors to a trip to Florida.

Sun visors were given to Fort Benning workers who participated in car pools.

A crossword puzzle contest, printed in the May 4 edition of The Bayonet, drew many responses.

Each entrant received an official Captain Conservo T-shirt.

Clay Jaindl, of Management, Budget, Administration Division, DEH, was the grand prize winner of lodging for a weekend at the Destin Recreation Center.

A major area of emphasis for the campaign was in the Fort Benning Schools.

Students studied energy and later participated in poster and essay contests, with an awards ceremony May 18 at Faith School.

The essay and poster winners were as follows:

Kindergarten — 1st Place, Viola Torre (McBride School); 2nd Place, Maquite Wilson, (McBride School).

First Grade — 1st Place, Sara Bunting (Dexter School); 2nd Place, Brent Lamphier (Wilson School).

Second Grade — 1st Place, Brandon Bevis (Wilbur School); 2nd Place, Jimmy Chavez (Dexter School).

Third Grade — 1st Place, Lance Samples (Loyd School); 2nd Place, Brandy Lawson (Wilbur School).

Fourth Grade — 1st Place, Lindsay Burton (White School); 2nd Place, Corey Wilborn (White School.

Fifth Grade — 1st Place, Amanda Humphreys (White school; 2nd Place, Sabrina Carden (White School).

Sixth Grade — 1st Place, Edward Essenburg (Faith School); 2nd Place, Anne Meredith (Faith School).

Seventh Grade — 1st Place, Dawne Hardison (Faith School); 2nd Place, Thomas Giles (Faith School).

Eighth Grade — 1st Place, Dianne Zemzars (Faith School); and 2nd Place, William Reynolds (Faith School).

Col. Barry Mahek, Chief of Staff, presented bicycles to the first place-winners, and the second place winners received commissary gift vouchers.

All winners received a Certificate of Achievement from the commanding general.

Awareness campaigns are in the spring and fall each year to remind the community of the important role energy plays in our lifestyles, economy, environment and national defense.

For more information, call the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Safe boating highlighted in June

Muscogee Power Squadron and Coast Guard Auxiliary

Muscogee Power Squadron and Flotilla 8-1, U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, are joining forces for National Safe Boating Week, June 3 through 9.

Hielda Boisvert, commander of the Muscogee Power Squadron, and Fred Norris, commander of Flotilla 8-1, said they and their organizations regard National Safe Boating Week as a special opportunity to make sure your boat and its equipment are safe and sound.

Also, it is an opportunity to review personal boating habits and practices to ensure safe boating.

"Make sure your boat is safe; make sure you are a safe boater," said representatives of both organizations.

"Remember, safe boating is no accident." Boat owners are urged to check the condition of their boats — hull, engine, steering, electrical system, and so on, — to make sure the boat is seaworthy and safe. Needed repairs and replacements should be made promptly.

An inspection of all safety equipment is strongly recommended to be sure that all required items are aboard and all are capable of providing the safety and protection for which they are designed.

To ascertain if his boat and as equipment meet federal requirements, the owner should request his local Coast Guard Auxiliary flotilla to grant a Courtesy Motorboat Examination.

During Safe Boating Week, members of Flotilla 8-1 will step up the schedule of Courtesy Motorboat Examinations.

Auxiliary Commander Fred Norris urges all boating enthusiasts to avail themselves of this valuable, free safety service.

Continuing their common objective of increasing safety for recreational boaters, U.S. Power Squadrons and the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliaries offer nationwide courses to the public in the basics of safety and small boat handling

Men, women and youths 12 years or older may take one of these courses. Boat ownership is not required.

For information about courses offered, call 1-800-BOATING.

When you're down, you're not out if you can attack when your opponent isn't ready to defend his position.

That strategy paid off for Hermel D. Fortin, a squad leader in Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, who came from behind to beat Joey A. Gibbons, a sergeant with Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 34th Medical Battalion, for the Fort Benning chess championship in an All-Army preliminary, sanctioned by the U.S. Chess Federation May 19 at Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

"I lost three pawns and got into a bind early in the game," said Fortin, the tournament's top-rated player, who faced off against Gibbons after defeating two other players in the three-round tournament.

"I realized the only way I could win was to press an attack and hope Gibbons would follow with a counterattack that wouldn't work."

"I thought my position was pretty good, but when he pressured my king, I missed a move that cost me the game," said Gibbons, Fort Benning's chess champ in 1983, 1985 and 1986.

Gibbons conceded the match after Fortin made his 71st move.

"I should have won again this year, but my pieces were out of position when he turned the tables on me, and he followed through to victory."

Both men drew parallels between a successful strategy on the chessboard and victory on the battlefield.

"Although chess differs from the battlefield because you always start out with a force equal to your opponent's, you have to attack as soon as you get a noticeable superiority over your opponent's forces," said Fortin, who is also the post's table tennis champion.

"If you can bind your opponent up defensively and open up your lines of attack, you'll win unless your attack was premature, and he outnumbers you," he continued.

"A lot of inexperienced players try to wipe out their opponents' men by attacking with just one piece, but one soldier can't win a war," said Gibbons.

"Chess teaches you the value of teamwork — positioning several of your men to accomplish a mission."

Both Fortin and Gibbons said brushing up on basics and playing on their home computers improved their performances.

Hermel D. Fortin
Fort Benning chess champion

"I have a chess library and keep going back to reread the basics because I continually mess up on the basic principles," Fortin said.

"I also work on advanced strategy with the computer because I can punch up a program at two o'clock in the morning if I feel like it and don't have to get up for work the next morning."

Gibbons said, "I'm a speed player and can beat my computer in eight or nine quick games."

"But when I'm getting ready for a tournament, I play the computer at higher levels of difficulty because that allows it to play at its full capacity.

"It's easier to develop your strategy against a computer because no matter what move you make the computer will analyze all the options open to your opponent," Gibbons said.

As winner of the post championship, Fortin received a trophy and a $50 savings bond and is eligible to advance to major command competition in the All-Army Chess Championships.

Gibbons and the other players who placed in the post tournament got to select prizes from the Kelley Hill Recreation Center prize rack.

Gibbons finished the tournament in a three-way tie with two other double winners, Celso E. Lopez, from School of Americas, and Matthew S. Allen, of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery.

Dominic M. Larkin, H.N. Stogner and Bruce D. Winters tied for third by winning one round each, while John D. Tohkubbi finished fourth.

Although he didn't win a round, Tohkubbi said he enjoyed matching wits against more experienced players.

According to Riley Lane, volunteer chess tournament director, the public is invited to participate in the three-round tournaments that start at noon the third Saturday of every month at the center.

"Members of the federation pay only $2 to enter, and nonmembers pay the entry fee plus an additional $1.50 per game to get rated by the federation," Lane said.

"The Rec Center provides free food and beverages and lets you pick a prize if you win," Lane said.

For more information, call the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 544-3079.

Food, fashion, folk dances highlight International Day

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Men and women from around the world gathered at the Tillinghurst Adult Education Center, in Columbus, for International Day May 18.

Displays of clothing, money and other items of interest were shown in the school library before the main attraction of the day.

The feature, a talent show composed of song and dance routines, was put on by the students of the English as a Second Language Program, many of whom are family members of School of Americas students.

Folk dances from Mexico, Colombia, Japan, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Bolivia were featured along with songs from Korea and Viet Nam.

The stage was alive with color as each performer wore his or her country's native dress.

Particular crowd favorites included a Mexican folk dance performed by Maria Elena Torres, who wore a flowing, red skirt and Suechat Poomnikom of Thailand, who sang a cappella in his native tongue.

The show was capped by a rendition of the "Song of the Americas," sung by all the performers and encored with a crowd-pleasing "It's A Small World."

Performers and audience members alike joined together after the program to sample a buffet-style luncheon made up of foods from South America and the Far East.

Barbara Merlo, an aid at the school, said the program is "an annual affair."

6th-graders learn to say no to drugs

Fort Benning Schools

Sixth-grade students at Faith Middle School will be less likely to be a part of the drug abuse statistics.

They have learned to say "No" to drugs and graduated from the 17-week Drug Abuse Resistance Education Course provided by Fort Benning Schools and the Military Police Activity.

The graduation was May 24 at Faith School.

Rick Sweet, manager of the Columbus Mud Cats, was the guest speaker.

There is a nationwide concern about the use of drugs and alcohol by high school students and about the increasingly younger age at which children begin to use these substances.

According to the Institute for Social Research, the United States has the highest level of teen-age drug use of any industrial nation in the world.

Soldiers take best shot in arms championship

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Nearly 800 Army active, Reserve and National Guard soldiers met at Fort Benning to compete in and support the 1990 U.S. Army Small Arms Championships.

The shooters competed in combat pistol and rifle, M-60 machine gun, National Match pistol and rifle, and sniper events.

The shooters were selected to compete in the All-Army Championships through command-sponsored competitive marksmanship programs.

Army Reserve and National Guard teams dominated much of the competition again this year, sweeping the M-60 Machine Gun team matches and placing in the top slots of numerous individual and team matches in the remaining events.

Shooters from the Pennsylvania National Guard led the Combat Rifle matches and placed within the top three of each event in which they competed.

Several Fort Benning shooters also placed among the top shooters in the Army during the matches.

Most noteably are Sgt. 1st Class Vincente A. Covas and Sgt. 1st Class Jephte Garcia, School of Americas, who won the Sniper Team Championships.

Spec. Tracy Roby, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, won the first novice portion of the M-16 rifle, 100-yard sustained fire match, and was a member of the battalion team that placed second in the Combat Infantry Rifle Team Match.

Bass anglers reel in 64

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning BASS Club

The Fort Benning BASS Club's monthly tournament was May 6 at Lake West Point.

Twenty-six fish were caught, with a total weight of 64 pounds, 15 ounces.

The first place honors went to Skip Ray with a total of 10 pounds, 10 ounces.

Mike Irvin took second place with 7 pounds, 6 ounces.

Matt Hopson placed third with 6 pounds, 5 ounces.

Skip Ray took the Big Fish Pot with a 3-pound, 13-ounce fish.

The infamous Georgia springtime weather dealt the club a bad hand again.

A coldfront moved in May 5 and was very much in effect for the tournament May 6.

The temperature had dropped nearly 20 degrees, and the wind was blowing from the north at 10 to 12 miles an hour.

Any one who had pre-fished early in the week had to forget any strategies they may have formed for fishing this tournament.

Most of the fish were caught on Carolina-rigged lines with lizards or crawdads, on points or along ditches and roadbeds.

The length limit on West Point Lake is 16 inches. There were quite a few 15-inch fish caught; but the small number of fish and lack of weight to those fish is further evidence that Lady Luck just was not with the club.

Congratulations to those fishermen who managed to bring in fish for the weigh-in.

Fort Benning BASS Club holds one points tournament per month every month.

The June tournament is at Lake Harding. This will be a night fishing tournament.

Cultures blend at May Crowning

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Latin, Italian, Spanish and Thai are spoken here.

So are French, Polish, Filipino and Korean. English is also spoken here.

Last Sunday, rich flavors of the multi-cultural military community had a chance to blend together.

Mary, the mother of Jesus, was honored with a traditional May Crowning at Main Post Catholic Chapel.

May Crowning is a long-standing celebration in which Mary is honored by crowning a statue of her with flowers.

"Parades and a festive atmosphere in honor of the Blessed Mother were very big in the east where I grew up," said Father Michael Travaglione, School of the Americas chaplain.

Spanish guitar music filled the chapel for a festive, comfortable atmosphere.

Participants in the ceremony were chosen by random drawings.

Monica Fay Richardson crowned the statue. Melissa Iverson, Helen Hardy, Zulma Medina and Tanya James were the ladies of the court.

Following the ceremony was an ice-cream social sponsored by the Catholic Youth Organization. The events included a cookie baking contest.

Criteria to be a judge in the contest were strict — you had to be an unaccompanied soldier with taste buds.

Doug Kelly, Ben Berner and Eric Morales happily tasted dozens of homemade cookies to find the six best recipes.

Father George Gudz, senior Catholic chaplain, said that fellowship programs such as this are vital to the health of the community.

Another fellowship event, a Mother/Daughter breakfast, will be in June. The fathers, sons and single soldiers will do the preparation work and serve the women.

There is even a "rent a daughter" program as an effort to include as many as wish to participate.

Social fellowship is the same in Italian or Thai, Latin or Polish — as long as there is a smile to go along with it.

Lots of cookies help, too.

Reflections

Memorial Day is a time for remembering

By Chap. Jim M. Phelps
MACH Staff Chaplain

Memorial Day is a time for remembering those who have laid down their lives for our country.

We must remember these soldiers with gratitude because this is a proper tribute to the past and a time to consider the loyalty and courage demanded in our duty to the future.

The oath we take requires loyalty to the nation and involves an obligation to support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Military service demands the willingness to sacrifice, even if it means giving up one's life in defense of the nation.

The beliefs and lives of those we remember Memorial Day recall great loyalty and courage.

Just as their beliefs in religious, philosophical and human values prepared them spiritually, our lives must be connected to the same high quality of life and called forth by the same basic values.

Men and women who serve today and in the future will be better able to honor the memory of those who have served before them if they remember the words of one of the Army's greatest leaders, Gen. George C. Marshall, who said:

"I look upon the spiritual life of the soldiers as even more important than his physical equipment . . . the soldier's heart, the soldier's spirit, the soldier's soul are everything.

"Unless the soldier's soul sustains him, he cannot be relied upon and will fail himself and his commander and his country in the end."

In this country, we enjoy freedom and opportunity that is possible because of the selfless service of many men and women.

Our quality of life comes from our own decisions and from the memory of those persons whose lives are important to us. This mental and emotional outlook is what we call a spiritual awareness.

Memories are an important part of our spiritual life for today and tomorrow.

In our time of remembering this Memorial Day, may this be our prayer:

We remember with gratitude all those who have laid down their lives in the service of their country.

May no forgetfulness of ours make them to have perished as though they had never been.

To the end that these dead shall not have died in vain, may we receive with fit humility the fruits of their sacrifice and carry on to further fulfill their hope for this, their land and ours.

Amen.

POST BRIEFS

ACOE team to arrive, begin inspecting Monday

The Training and Doctrine Command Army Communities of Excellence team will arrive here Monday and will remain until Thursday.

The team will look at the overall appearance of the post and judge the quality of services and facilities.

They will compare Fort Benning's appearance and services against all other Training and Doctrine Command installations of the same size.

Lawn mower thieves hit Custer Terrace

Fort Benning residents are currently experiencing a serious problem with having their unsecured lawn mowers stolen, usually from their own back yards.

In the past two weeks, seven lawn mowers have been taken from the Custer Terrace housing area.

Many people, after mowing their lawns, will leave their lawn mowers overnight in the back yard where they think they will be safe.

However, this makes the mowers an easy target for thieves.

The Military Police alone cannot prevent these larcenies. They need the assistance of all who live and work here.

After all, these incidents cost the residents money, and the Staff Judge Advocate's Office will not pay a claim against the government for items that were left unsecured.

Heeding the following tips may help keep you from getting ripped off:

- Always secure your lawn mower in the utility shed or to an immovable object with a sturdy chain and lock.
- Record the brand name and serial and model numbers of your mower or any other high value items.
- Report any suspicious activities or persons to the MPs immediately.

If you leave valuables unsecured, you provide thieves the opportunity to make you a victim.

For more information, call 545-7115/7154.

Post leadership courses test executives' mettle

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Forty-eight mid-level Department of Defense employees from all over the world came to Fort Benning last week for a tour and to participate in leadership training.

This was part of the Executive Leadership Development Program — a program designed primarily for women, according to its director, Richard Schnurr.

Schnurr said it's a year-long program completed in phases that teach different aspects of the Department of Defense and leadership.

He explained that the first two phases consist of a lot of reading and testing.

"During the third phase, the executives spend a week with each the Navy, Marines, Air Force and Army," Schnurr said. "The group also concentrates on leadership skills."

The training with each service allows the DoD civilians to see where they fit into the overall defense picture.

The training also lets them experience what members of the military do.

Although the students are afforded hands-on training with each service, Schnurr said most of their training is with the Army.

During the past week, they jumped from a 34-foot, mock training tower; observed a Ranger capabilities and training techniques demonstration; went through a gas chamber; observed a Bradley demonstration; and fired several weapons.

The group also toured many on-post facilities.

They ended their week at the Leadership Reaction Course.

At LRC, the employees spent two hours negotiating the course obstacles.

Some were successful and some weren't, but they all say they gained insight into leadership training.

"This has been a wonderful week," Department of the Navy employee Valerie Pietro said.

"Fort Benning has left a big impression on me. I'll never forget the time I spent here."

Special Forces team to call Benning home

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is one of eight posts that will have Special Forces recruiting teams permanently assigned.

The Fort Bragg Special Forces recruiting team has decentralized by establishing smaller teams that will be permanently located on posts that have historically produced the best candidates for Special Forces.

By June, the recruiting teams will be operational here; at Fort Lewis, Wash.; Fort Bragg; Heidelberg, Germany; Yongsan, Korea; and Fort Campbell, Ky.

Special Forces soldiers currently number about 4,700 on active duty. The goal, however, is to increase that figure to 7,000, according to Master Sgt. Paul Anthony, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Special Forces recruiting team.

"There is a greater need for Special Forces soldiers than in the past," Anthony said. "Special Forces is increasing its force while the rest of the Army is cutting back."

"The small (recruiting) teams, spread Army-wide, are designed to increase soldiers' awareness, dispel myths and educate soldiers about Special Forces," Anthony said.

For more information about joining Special Forces, call Sgt. 1st Class William Shiflett at 682-0182 or visit building 2624.

Operation Just Cause

Rangers awarded for brave deeds

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Five soldiers from Company A, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, received medals for bravery May 24 for their actions during "Operation Just Cause."

The awards were pinned on by Regimental Commander Col. William F. Kernan and Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Joseph Hunt.

Bronze Stars with "V" devices were pinned on 1st Lt. Loren Ramos, Staff Sgt. Wayne D. Newberry, Sgt. Jack Oler; and Army Commendation Medals with "V" devices were awarded to Staff Sgt. Michael Sonnenschein and Sgt. Christopher D. Smith, respectively.

Ramos, Newberry and Oler, with complete disregard for their own safety, reportedly neutralized an enemy machine gun position.

This action paved the way for the company's assault on Rio Hato Airfield.

Sonnenschein and Smith assembled and prepared an assault on suspected enemy barracks.

However, as a result of their actions, an assault was not necessary. The enemy surrendered.

Kernan maintained that although only five soldiers from that company were given medals, each and everyone who participated in the operation deserved an award.

"Each of you played a key part in the success of the operation," he said.

"The overall operation and the job you did in Rio Hato are being used as examples by the Chief of Staff of the Army," Kernan said.

Hunt echoed Kernan's sentiments and expressed his pride in the battalion.

He closed with a training reminder to the unit, stressing the importance of always being prepared for battle.

Metal Trades Council renegotiates contract

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, which represents more than 1,400 nonsupervisory wage grade employees, concluded renegotiation of its present contract March 27.

According to Mary Loudermilk of the Civilian Personnel Office, although the negotiations are complete, the old agreement will remain in effect until the new one is finalized at Training and Doctrine Command

Loudermilk said there are no changes to the basic agreement, however, Management proposed changes to two articles.

Negotiators spent four hours at the bargaining table compared to the 38 hours required when the groups sat down in 1986.

For all practical purposes once the bargaining is complete, the issue is settled. Exceptions are that the major command of a respective tenant unit is afforded an opportunity for input into a post audit review.

That unit, according to Loudermilk, has the responsibility to identify those exceptions and report them to the host commander.

Changes to articles are:

- Smoking cessation, which reiterates the command policy for the installation on smoking and provides special coverage for Medical Department Activities and Dental Activities facilities.

The policy, by agreement now excludes smoking inside MEDDAC and DENTAC facilities, except visiting adults and employees may smoke in areas designated outside the facilities.

- Performance evaluations, which outline basic requirements of the appraisal process and identify appropriate grievance procedures to follow regarding dissatisfactions with an appraisal.

"The management was successful in meeting the objectives established by the installation's negotiating team," Loudermilk said.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: Of the training you've had at Fort Benning, which will benefit you most?

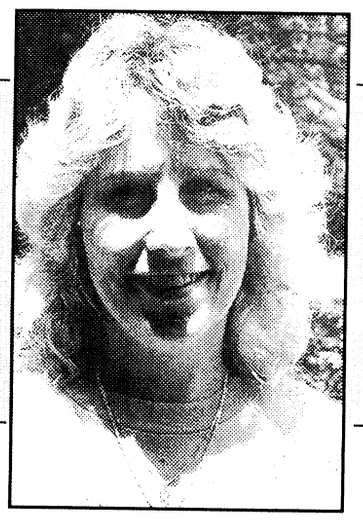
Valerie Pietro, Naval Operations, Manpower Personnel and Training, Washington, D.C. — "The 250-foot tower was the most beneficial for me. I've always had a fear of heights. I had to learn to control my fear."

Jocelyn Alston, Naval Air Development Center, Warminister, Penn. — "I think jumping from the 34-foot mock tower was the most beneficial for me. It's risk-taking training. You have to develop trust in someone else.

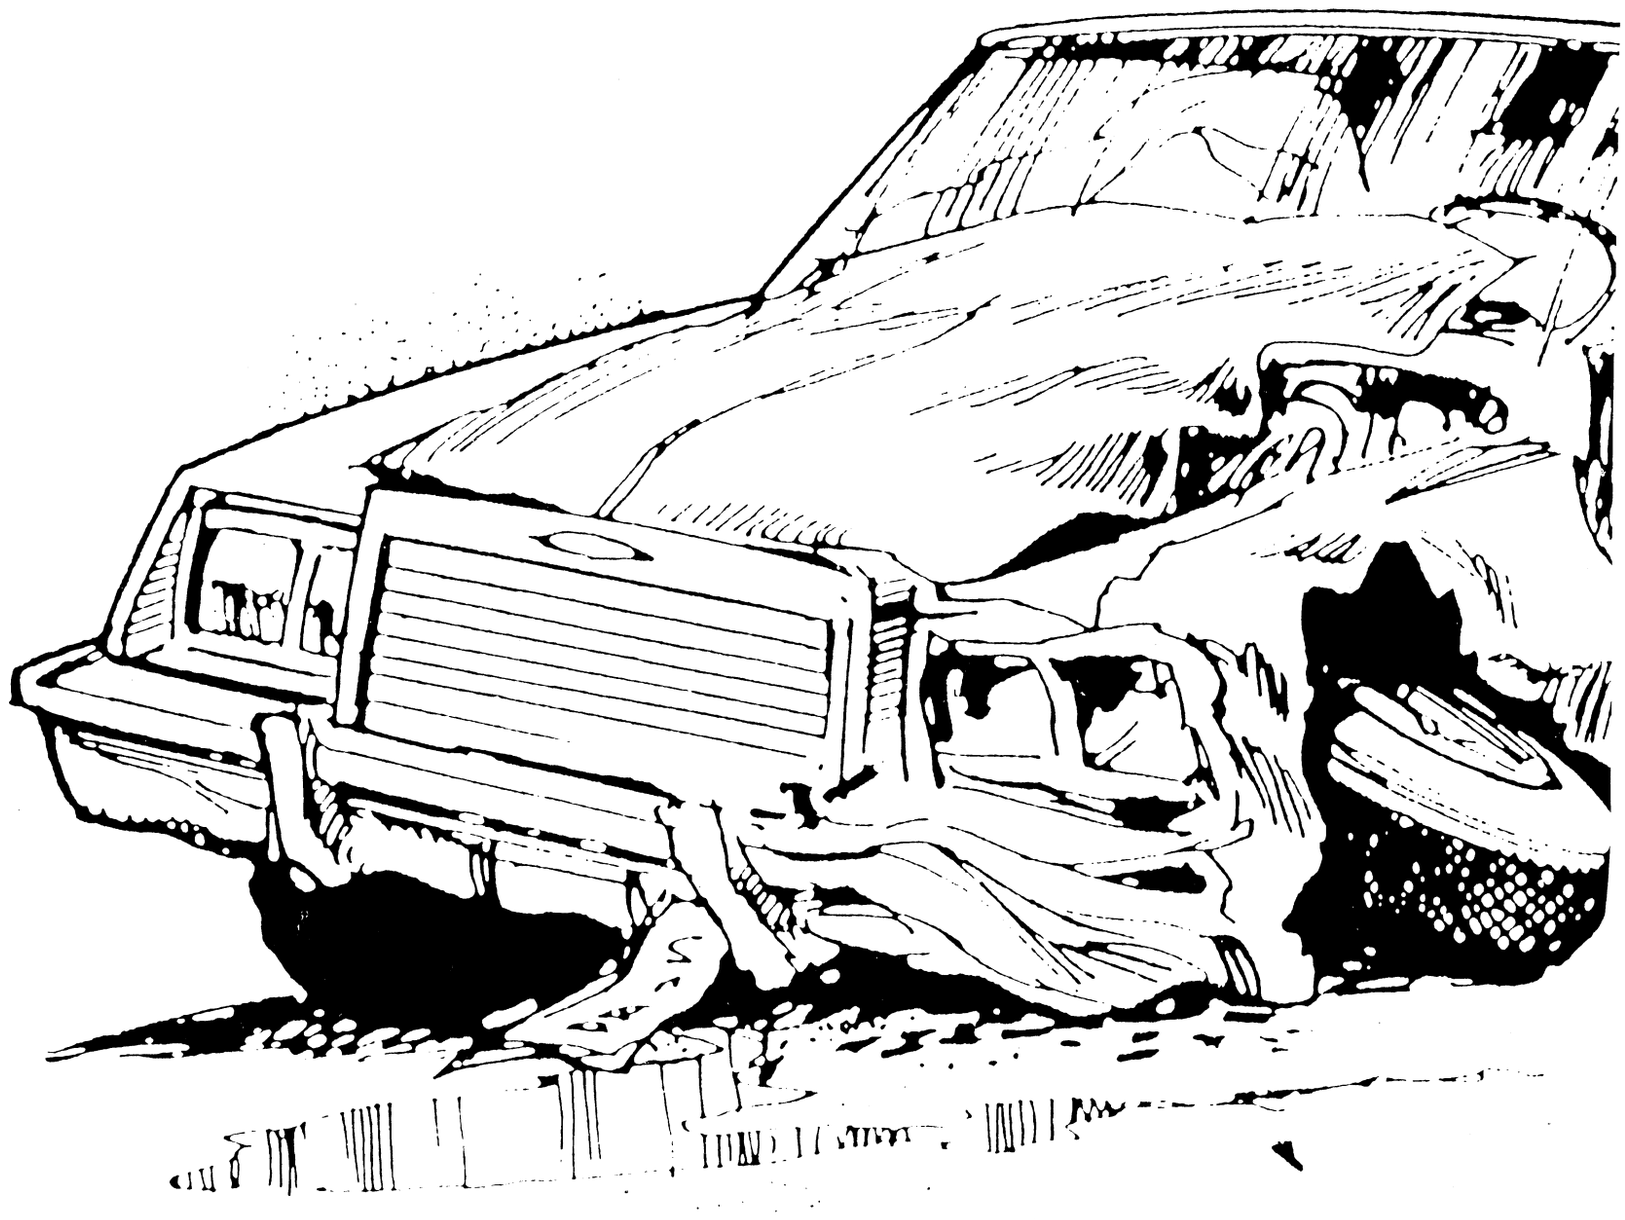
Lynn Henderson, Defense Logistics Agency, Alexandria, Va. — "I'm a facilitator, and watching the people I've helped train has helped me see how I've done my job."

Ann Ryan, U.S. Forces, Korea — "The Leadership Reaction Course was the most beneficial for me. I work right by the border and deal with a lot of soldiers."

Eileen G. Gruber, Naval Explosive Ordnance Disposal Technology Center, IndianHead, Maryland — "The hands-on training with the weapons was most beneficial. In my job, I deal with explosives, so it was right in line with what I do."



Gail Hiles, Headquarters Military Airlift Command, Scott Air Force Base — "The Leadership Reaction Course was most beneficial for me. It strengthens the elements of team building, cooperation and trust in your fellow man.



Travelers stand in line to become statistics

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Memorial Day 1990 is history. So are 26 Georgians who lost their lives in car wrecks.

That's eight more than the state patrol predicted. You could say the standard was set, met and exceeded.

We live in such a competitive environment that if you put a number in front of an American, he'll want to go out and better it.

We have a mania for setting records.

I can see it now.

The year is 1991. A disc jockey in Atlanta watches as the traffic toll climbs. There are only 12 hours left in the weekend.

So far 16 citizens have been killed while driving. So the disc jockey gets on the horn and pleads with drivers to go out and contribute to the cause.

"Come on Georgians, state patrol said 22 of you would die this weekend. We're six short.

If you haven't been involved in an accident yet, think about helping the cause.

"Don't panic. The best of times is still to come — the return home.

"Stay tuned for the latest on how we stand. We may need to mobilize more of you to go out and clog the highways and bi-ways and die."

Of course no respectable radio personality would do that. It would be irresponsible.

But on the other hand, after your squad leader inspected your vehicle, and you left the friendly confines of Fort Benning, how many "drive safely" messages did you hear over the weekend?

I sure didn't hear any on the radio station I listened to.

What happened to the announcements calling for drivers to "light up for safety" over the three-day weekend. In other words, drive with your headlights on to remind people they were in dangerous territory — a public road.

That used to be pretty common.

Or, what happened to the M.A.D.D. campaigns to sport red ribbons on antennas and door handles as reminders to be alert for drunk drivers and not to mix alcohol with gasoline?

Was that just a passing fad? Are we bored with safety, with stamping out drunk drivers?

I mean, do Americans think they need to go out and kill themselves and others in the absence of war?

Do we think the population is getting out of hand?

Already, autos are a more effective means of population control than war.

During nine years in Vietnam, we lost 47,350 Americans. During two years in Korea, it was 33,629.

In 1988, 49,000 Americans were killed in car crashes.

That's more than 5,000 fewer than our high of 54,000 in 1970.

Right now we are on a five-year trend of increasing highway deaths from a low of 44,452 in 1983.

Yet no one seems to take safe driving seriously.

There really doesn't seem to be any urgency to instill in people safe driving habits.

Georgia ranks 11th in population, but eighth in the number of traffic fatalities.

It's no wonder. Have you ever taken the driving test they give in Columbus?

That's the point, more than likely, unless you're going for your first license, chances are, despite previous driving record, age, and so on, you just take the written exam, itself a laugh.

And even if you took the driving portion, you'd wonder if you really did.

It's once around the block and don't worry about parallel parking.

Backup? You mean the car has a reverse?

At Fort Benning, we're supposedly serious about safety belts. After all, they do save lives.

But have you ever been stopped for not wearing one?

Probably not unless it was for some other violation.

Ever look at the drivers in Columbus and note the number of drivers wearing seat belts or the number of infants strapped into car seats?

Maybe drivers are afraid of not looking macho if they're strapped into their cars with belts.

Perhaps they think it's un-American for a law to exist that has their safety in mind.

I'm not sure what it is, but we, as Americans have a lot of work to do if we want to get people to start driving smarter and safer.

Make way for fresh terms

Army News Service

Army people are being encouraged to drop the term "first-line supervisor" and to replace it with more descriptive and humane terminology.

Brig. Gen. Theodore G. Stroup Jr., director of military personnel management in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, explained that the Army is taking the initiative to eliminate the phrase "first-line supervisor" from all communications, both oral and written, when referring to a soldier's immediate leader or supervisor.

Raymond J. Sumser, the Army's director of civilian personnel, said that this initiative will also apply to how we refer to Army civilian leaders.

"The phrase is targeted for elimination from all regulations, official and unofficial publications, briefing slides, fact sheets, information papers, officer and noncommissioned officer evaluation reports, news releases, certificates, forms and message traffic.

"Proper terminology such as 'platoon leader,' 'team chief,' 'squad leader,' and 'section chief' will be used in all communications when identifying military supervisor positions within the chain of command," Stroup said.

Sumser added that "similar terminology, such as 'section chief,' 'branch chief,' 'division chief,' and 'director' will be used when addressing civilian or military supervisors occupying such leadership positions."

"As professional soldiers, we all recognize the value and importance of the chain of command. We must continue to instill the respect, pride, tradition and heritage that make our Army great by referring to men and women who comprise our leadership by their proper position with the chain of command," Stroup said.

75th Ranger Regiment soldiers win Best Medic

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Two soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, won Fort Benning's first Best Medic competition May 9 and 10.

Sgt. Andrew Rhoades and Spec. Brandon Goldstein scored the highest points against five other teams during the 36-hour event hosted by 34th Medical Battalion.

According to Capt. S. Jane Allgood, commander, 690th Medical Company (Ambulance), the battalion tailored the competition along the lines of the Best Ranger competition to give medics who have already earned the Expert Field Medical Badge or Combat Medical Badge something more to strive for.

Twelve medics in two-man teams began the competition with a physical fitness test followed by a two-hour written examination.

Medic Stakes, conducted on day and night land navigation courses, tested the competitors' performances of soldier and medical skills.

Soldiers were evaluated on such tasks as applying a tourniquet, treating an open abdominal wound, treating for shock, decontaminating skin, putting on and wearing MOPP gear and performing two-man cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

The competition ended after a 12-mile road march.

According to Allgood, the competition was more physically demanding than the annual EFMB competition.

"The competition stretched out over a 36-hour period. The soldiers had to keep going. Some only got 30 minutes of sleep," she said.

Allgood said she feels the competition went well.

She said besides having expert evaluators, she also had two project officers, 1st Lt. Mary Shuler and 2nd Lt. Ann Marie Bisch, who helped "make the whole thing happen."

Allgood said she hopes the competition will become an annual event.

Legal specialties may be confusing

By Danny J. Autrey
NCOIC, Legal Assistance

A soldier needs help concerning an Article 15, so he goes to the Legal Assistance Office.

He's shocked when the reception desk clerk informs him she can't help him.

"What do you mean you can't help me!" cried the soldier. "I need assistance; what am I supposed to do?"

The clerk patiently explains that Legal Assistance helps with many problems, but not Article 15s, which are criminal law.

She explained that these problems are handled by the Trial Defense Service.

Although this is a fictional situation, it happens all the time.

Many people don't realize Legal Assistance differs from Trial Defense Service.

The Legal Assistance Office, located in building 5, at the corner of Sigerfoos Street and Vibbert Avenue, is part of The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Other sections maintained within the SJA are the Criminal Law, Claims and Administrative Law divisions, Court Reporters, and Magistrate Court.

The Trial Defense Service is independent from SJA and is located in building 65 at the corner of Wold Avenue and Edwards Street, (across the street from the Military Police station and confinement facility).

The Legal Assistance Division and Trial Defense Service are different organizations with different missions.

Legal Assistance helps active duty and retired military members and their families in the area of personal legal matters.

Some examples of these are: preparing and probating wills, powers of attorney, notarizations, voluntary marriage separation agreements, divorce advice, adoptions, custody, support of family members, legitimation of children, consumer and debt problems, reports of survey (military and DoD civilians held liable) and appeals, local bars to reenlistment, Military Occupational Specialty reclassifications, landlord/tenant disputes, and automobile problems.

The Trial Defense Service takes cases of only active duty soldiers in the areas of court-martial, Article 32b, UCMJ, investigations, Formal Article 15s (summarized Article 15s are not authorized counsel), representation at officer or enlisted administrative elimination boards, reduction in grade boards, flight evaluation boards, USAIS Academic Boards, Medical Boards, AR 15-6 investigations, Letters of Reprimand, DA Bars to Reenlistment, and Article 138, UCMJ, complaints.

The office you seek assistance from is determined by your problem. If it is a personal type problem, then you probably need Legal Assistance.

If it is a matter of wrong-doing, misconduct, adverse actions or someone is accusing you of criminal misconduct, then you need the assistance of the Trial Defense Service.

197th rifle team wins despite obstacles

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Having only seven days of actual range time did not hamper the 197th Infantry Brigade small arms team's desire to win.

"Determination was the key factor that gave the team a winning edge in the U.S. Army Small Arms Championship," said the coach of the 197th's team, Staff Sgt. Daniel Hoffman of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry,

"Our team was only able to shoot at the range seven days between the XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg composition to the Army-wide championship here," Hoffman said. "We also used the multipurpose arcade combat system, which was a great benefit to us."

The MACS is an arcade-type piece of equipment that simulates an actual shooting range.

It gave the team "range time" when there actually wasn't any, Hoffman added.

"I knew the team had the potential of doing well, but with the amount of practice we had compared to the other teams, the odds of winning were not on our side," Cpl. Carl Sandy noted.

"Most of the teams were made up of National Guard and Reserve units that practice year-round.

"One team was made up of four family members, consisting of a father, two sons and a daughter, who have their own personal AR-15s and a shooting range on their farm. This gives them unlimited access," Hoffman said.

"It is highly unusual for the 197th to compete with — and beat — division-level teams," he said.

According to Hoffman, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., was the only active, Army team that placed in the top three in any of the events.

The 197th team earned second place in the Infantry Trophy match, third in the team aggregate unfired match, and ninth in the team precision match, which was fired in the rain, he said.

Individual awards also went to Spec. Wayne Kubica, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., who placed fifth in the 400-yard aggregate long-range competition; Pfc. Tracy Roby of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf.

He placed first in the M-16 100-yard competition, third in the 200-yard M-16 competition, third in the M-16 short-range competition (overall) and may receive the Distinguished Shooter's Badge, upon verification of his score, awarded by the National Rifleman's Association.

Roby also placed 10th overall in the entire competition.

Pfc. Chad Bensfield of HHC, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., placed 16th out of 130 competitors in the beginners open with the 9-millimeter pistol.

Bensfield also took eighth place in the Expert Individual Combat competition, with a score of 291 out of a possible 300.

Upon verification of Bensfield's score, he may also receive the Distinguished Shooter's Badge from the NRA.

"Knowing that we are the best active Army team in the United States is an award in itself," said Roby.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The temporary move of the Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room has caused several changes.

Patients must use the Main Entrance since the former ER entrance will be blocked during the renovation.

A telephone has been installed outside the Main Entrance so patients can call for assistance in an emergency.

Automatic doors have been installed to simplify access to the building.

The area now serving as the ER is smaller than the former ER, with eight urgent-care beds compared to 14 in the old location.

When the original ER became crowded, the staff had the option of using treatment rooms in the former Outpatient Clinic area, but there is no available space during the renovation.

This has increased waiting time in the ER, so the ER staff has initiated "Fast Track" treatment.

The staff will see and treat patients with less urgent problems, who do not require a bed, at a desk to reduce the number of patients waiting.

This frees the staff to treat more seriously ill patients as soon as a bed is available and decreases crowding in the waiting room.

This renovation is also difficult for patients and the staff.

The problems of privacy and crowding are worse than they were in the "old" ER.

The new ER, which should be open in mid-September, will be worth the temporary inconvenience.

A review of the patients seen in the ER on a recent weekend revealed that 61.1 percent were seeking care for non-urgent problems.

Patients can help reduce inconvenience by seeking care for non-emergencies during clinic hours.

Patients can usually be given same-day or next-day appointments in the Outpatient Clinic by calling 545-3835/5564; the Pediatric Clinic, by calling 544-1086/544-1087; or the Family Practice members, by calling the Acute Care number, 544-3081.

Troop Medical Clinic No. 5 is open for active duty patients from 7 a.m. to noon Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, and the PRIMUS Clinic is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

The Well Baby Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital will extend care to babies up to 1 year old starting June 8.

Call 544-1076/1077 for appointments.

Patience and cooperation during the ER upgrade can help the staff provide emergency care to those who truly need it with the least possible delay.

HHC, 197th soldiers become prisoners of war

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

"Prisoner of war? Not me," is the thought in most every soldier's mind.

But it turned out to be a simulated reality for 62 Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, soldiers who were captured during the unit's field exercise at Fort Benning.

Troy A. Pearson

Prisoner of war Spec. Robert Shea resists his captors' attempts to break his silence.

"With half mounted and half dismounted opposing force Military Policemen, we were able to capture a total of 62 prisoners," said Staff Sgt. David Lesser, the platoon sergeant of the MP Platoon.

"A few of them resisted, but none of them escaped. We moved quickly and caught them by surprise," he said.

"We performed a deliberate attack on HHC's command post and took them as prisoners. Later we transported them to Hill 507 where the training site was located," said Sgt. Jerald Cox, another MP.

"Our next mission was to assist as OPFOR guards, interrogate prisoners, and provide security for the POW camp," he said.

Not only did the graders learn about the soldiers' breaking points and the soldiers about their own weaknesses, but the MPs also learned some things.

"I learned a lot out here. This was the first training I've done with POWs since Advanced Individual Training. I have never done any practical exercises like this before," said Pvt. 2 David Gerken.

"This was a three-day light field exercise," said 1st Lt. Thomas Thornton, Air Defense Artillery Platoon platoon leader.

"The plan was to train the soldiers on individual skills, land navigation, setting up a defense, deliberate attack, and escape and evasion techniques.

"We have done this to enhance the abilities of the soldiers and train them in their overall soldiering skills, while making them more proficient in non-MOS-related skills that every soldier, male or female, should know in combat," said Thornton.

"As a whole, the exercise went well," he said. "We had a few people get upset, because they didn't understand the objectives of the training."

"This camp was designed to break down the morale of each soldier and the group as a whole," said Capt. Paul Rudesheid, an acting OPFOR interrogator from Brigade S-2.

"We used mind tactics, such as telling them that their friends had already broken down, to get them to tell us whatever we wanted to know. The idea is to make them as uncomfortable as possible," said Rudesheid.

"For example, it took only an hour for a female soldier to give up and sign a war crime statement. She was told her friends were having a good time and so would she if she signed," Rudesheid added.

However, not every prisoner could be broken.

2nd Lt. Berry Ezel refused to cooperate with his captors even after being bound and gagged, blindfolded, tied to a wooden post, crammed into a two-foot concertina box, and undergoing several other mind-bending interrogations.

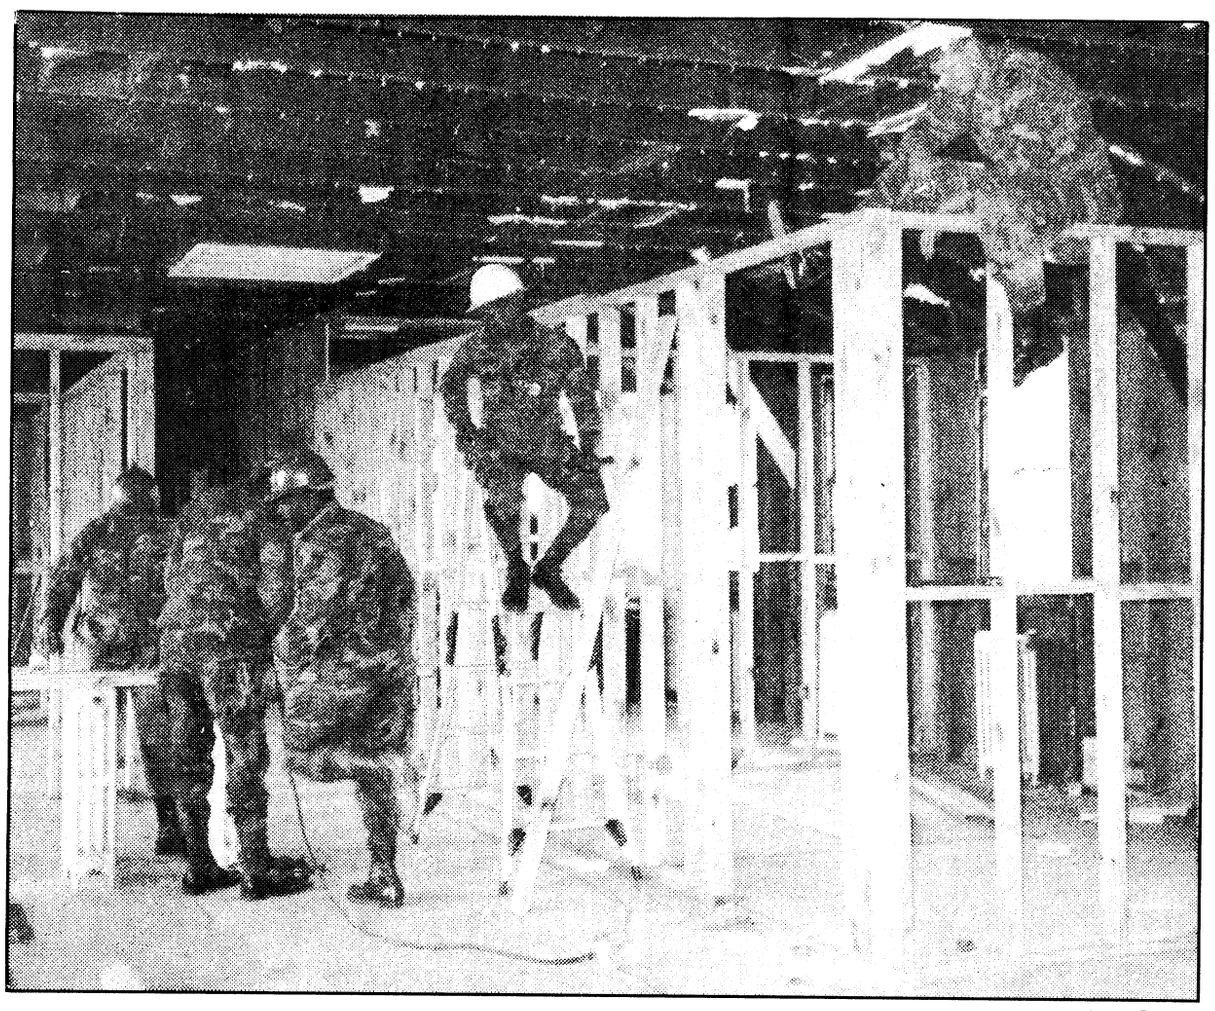
Ezel merely repeated his name, rank and social security number.

This inner strength was regretably not found in the females. According to Sgt. Rachel Sadanya, one of the OPFOR.

"The women were easily intimidated; they felt cold and miserable too fast.

"In the backs of their minds, they knew we were their friends, but if they were scared here we know they need to do a lot more training," Sadanya said.

43rd Engineers transform gutted building into offices



Lisa Strine

Soldiers from Co. B, 43rd Engr. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp., rebuild the interior of the DOL building.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Although they're trained for combat, they're Engineers first, and Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, demonstrated what they are capable of doing if given the chance.

Last year, they gutted a building and transformed it into offices for the Directorate of Logistics, Supply and Services Division.

The building was dedicated May 14.

According to 2nd Lt. Lisa Strine, then a platoon leader with Co. B., this was no easy task for the soldiers.

She explained that it wasn't the actual project that was difficult, it was the other missions the unit had to fulfill at the same time.

"They worked on this project between a trip to the National Training Center, Ranger support and field training exercises," Strine said.

"They even incorporated the building into regular training by defending the building on one occasion and wearing NBC gear on another."

Cpl. Donald Crosby, Co. B, said the initial reaction of the soldiers was, "Oh my God."

"We got down to business, gutted it out and started from scratch," he said.

"We really enjoyed the project because it was such a challenge."

Crosby explained that the building wasn't squared. This means the soldiers couldn't use a set formula for the windows.

Each had to be measured individually.

Before they were finished the soldiers installed Sheetrock, a drop ceiling and light and latrine fixtures.

Strine said due to the variety of things that had to be done, each of the soldiers was able to use what they had learned in their advanced individual training.

Some examples are reconstructing the plumbing and rewiring the structure.

As the project came to a close, the unit received additional assistance from Love Phillips of Directorate of Logistics who added more rooms and gave them the use of additional tools.

The unit completed the inside of the building in February and finished the siding in March.

Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek said, "The unit did a terrific job, and the building is a good example of what the Engineers can do for Fort Benning."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I recently opened up a checking account in a local bank. The bank is offering me a "debit card" as part of its services.

I was given some information about it, but it really seems confusing.

What is a "debit card" and what are the rules about how they work?

A. "Debit cards" are relatively new to the banking industry and appear to be very popular.

A debit card is different from a credit card in that debit card transactions are electronic fund transfers.

Debit cards are normally used in automatic teller machines.

They can be very useful if you do not like to carry cash, need cash in a hurry, or need cash after the banks have closed.

One of the main differences between a debit card and a credit card is that a credit card usually gives 30 to 60 days before the bill arrives.

During this "float period" you are not charged interest, and you may still be earning interest on money in your account.

With a debit card, the money can be electronically transferred from your account within minutes.

Another difference is that the protections for a lost or stolen debit card are not as good as those for lost or stolen credit cards.

If your debit card is illegally used, you are responsible for only $50 if you notify the financial institution within two business days after learning of the loss or theft of your card.

If you report the loss after those two days, but before 60 days, then you will be liable for $500.

If you do not report the loss until after 60 days, your liability is unlimited.

Another growing use of debit cards is to purchase merchandise at stores.

When presented, debit cards are processed just like a credit card, but the money is paid automatically out of your savings or checking account.

This is a convenient way to avoid the problems associated with cashing checks.

However, you must always be aware of the amount of money in your account, and that the purchase will not be billed to your account in 30 or 60 days as it would in a credit card transaction; you are paying for it almost immediately by electronic transfer.

Debit cards are a new and useful tool. However, you must be careful how you use it and how you protect it.

Guard it just as you would any other credit card. Never tell anyone what your Personal Identification Number is, or carry your PIN number with your debit card.

Check all of your bank statements the day you receive them; don't wait. Finally, remember that any time you use the debit card, the money is electronically removed, sometimes within minutes, from your account.

If you have any questions about debit cards, or your rights when using electronic fund transfers, please call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3291.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. My ex-husband and I were married for 33 years before we were divorced in 1989.

He recently passed away.

Am I eligible for VA benefits as his survivor?

A. No. "Surviving spouse" means the lawful spouse of a veteran at the time of his or her death.

He or she must have lived with the veteran continuously until the date of death except when there was a separation caused by the veteran without fault of the spouse.

EXCITEMENT '90

Army Soldier Show

Excitement '90 opens with "You Belong to the City," performed by members of the cast of the seventh annual Soldier Show. Photos by Phil Prater

Kelsie Westfall plays "If You Want to Play in Texas."

Musical features something for everyone

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The seventh annual Army Soldier Show will present Excitement '90, a musical extravaganza, at 7 p.m. performances Tuesday and Wednesday at the Sand Hill Theatre.

Tuesday's performance is limited to One Station Unit Training soldiers. Wednesday's performance is free and open to the public.

This year's Army Soldier Show has something for everyone, whether young or old, a fan of country, rock and roll, patriotic or rap music, you're sure to hear a favorite song.

Highlights include a special tribute to Irving Berlin, a trip down memory lane to the 50s and 60s, and the sights and sounds of the latest movie sound tracks.

Months of planning and preparation went into producing this 90-minute traveling showcase of Army talent. Excitement '90 brings together a dynamic mix of multi-talented active-duty soldiers in a dazzling and entertaining production.

The active duty cast and crew of this year's show was selected from more than 1,500 applicants worldwide.

Each soldier is "loaned" to the production for about six months to participate in the development, rehearsal and performance of this year's musical extravaganza.

Coming from a variety of duty assignments and differing levels of performance experience, the soldiers who make up the Army Soldier Show have worked an average of 18 hours a day for six weeks to produce a dazzling entertainment spectacle for their fellow soldiers.

Until Aug. 19, the cast and crew will visit Army installations across the continential United States.

They travel in a 44-passenger bus while the entire stage, costumes and other equipment are transported in an 18-wheeler, semi-tractor trailer truck.

As one of the nation's last true repertory companies, the cast and crew is responsible for loading and unloading about 38,000 pounds of equipment at each stop.

In addition to the cast, a few specialized lighting and audio system technicians are assigned to the show, and like the cast, the crew is comprised of active duty soldiers. Coming from diverse backgrounds, they used a portion of the rehearsal time to attend brief training sessions.

Crew members set up more than four miles of cables, about 250 costumes, more than 100 state-of-the-art lights and thousands of pounds of stage, trussing, scaffolding and audio gear before each performance and tear it down afterward.

Excitement '90 uses the same professional theatrical lighting, including moving parskans lights, used with touring rock and roll acts.

Each parskans light can move almost 180 degrees and has the capability for numerous color changes.

Lighting changes for the entire production are programmed through a computer and controlled by one technician.

Each show is performed live so the music, lead and back-up vocals, as well as special effects must be mixed instantaneously.

The capability to produce the show's highly professional sound centers around 20 state-of-the-art wireless microphones channeled through a complex sound mixing system backstage.

With specialized digital effects processors and synthesizers, the sounds of Excitement '90 are very close to what you hear everyday on the radio.

On the road, the cast is responsible for maintaining their own costumes and take along a sewing machine to make repairs.

Excitement '90, the seventh annual Army Soldier Show, continues a long-standing tradition of entertainment for soldiers by soldiers, which began during World War I by Army Sgt. Irving Berlin.

Benning soldier part of cast

Spec. Gregory Baron, a lead vocalist with the 283rd Army Band at Fort Benning, is one of the performers in the Army Soldier Show. Baron was selected from among more than 1,500 applicants.

Rangers cook up a real winner; Best Military Dining Facility

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, demonstrated its weapon prowess during "Operation Just Cause.

More recently, the Rangers demonstrated their capabilities in the kitchen when the unit was just awarded its sixth Best Military Dining Facility of the Quarter Award.

That's quite a feat considering the facility has only been in existance since 1984, and during that time, it was moved three times.

The facility is headed up by Staff Sgt. James Ramey, who has been with the facility since it started.

He arrived there a private, and began working his way up through the ranks.

Something, he says he wouldn't have been able to do in a regular unit.

Another thing he said he wouldn't have been able to do in a regular unit is participate in a combat mission.

With the Rangers, Ramey said, the cooks get the best of both worlds.

Many of his cooks sport the scroll on their left shoulders, marking them as soldiers who served in "Operation Just Cause."

Ramey said they didn't cook while they were down there. He explained that in a combat situation they fall under Headquarters Company and pull security or process prisoners of war.

The cooks, of course, aren't taught those skills in their Advanced Individual Training.

Just as any other soldier in the battalion, they have to go through Airborne School and the Ranger Indoctrination Program.

"As far as I know, this is one of the only units in the Army where a cook has the opportunity to go to Jumpmaster and Ranger schools," Ramey said.

First and foremost, however, is to make sure the troops are fed.

He said proof that they do it well is that soldiers from other units will come to eat in the Ranger Dining Facility.

According to Ramey, winning an award is a long process.

Included in that process are inspections on paperwork, sanitation, quality of food, proper preparation and serviceability of equipment.

This is the facility's second award since Pfc. William Evans has been with the unit.

A unit with which he said he is proud to serve.

Evans was a cook in the Reserves for three years and said he liked what he was doing but wanted more of a challenge.

He said he saw the Rangers as a chance to do both.

Ramey said they wouldn't have the opportunity to do both if it weren't for the civilians on staff.

"They really help out with the cooking," he said.

The award lends some creedence to their ability to work together.

Col. Barry Mahek, post chief of staff, said the award is just another example of "Rangers leading the way."

ACS helps take edge off moving worries

By Ann M. McDonald

Moving can be a nerve wracking experience, and it's an experience that soldiers go through time and time again.

Army Community Service has created a way to ward off some of those problems with its newly-opened Relocation Assistance Center.

Post Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek officially opened the center at a ceremony May 24.

During the ceremony, Mahek said that a resource such as the center is yet another attempt by Fort Benning to improve the quality of life for families.

"The Relocation Assistance Center will be able to provide a very valuable and essential service to make moving less painful," he said.

He said the center can provide valuable information about a new location."

Mahek used his upcoming move as an example of what the center can do for soldiers.

Through the information gained at the center, Mahek said he learned about the facilities, size of quarters, temporary lodging accommodations and what to expect from the civilian community.

He said he also found out what type of weather to expect.

If he had school-age children, he could have learned all about the schools in that area.

Mahek mentioned he'd been informed on the housing market and the current interest rate in the area.

In a nutshell, the center acts as one big stress reliever for soldiers who are moving.

Mahek said this should boost the productivity of soldiers as they don't need to spend their last days worrying about their new assignment.

It will help them hit the ground running when they get there, he said.

"I think this is a marvelous program. It puts the human touch all in one place," he said. "This is yet another outstanding service for our most important resource, the soldier and his family."

For more information about the center and how it can help you, call ACS at 545-5516/7517.

Aviators commended on excellent safety record

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

With the exception of mission-essential personnel, Fort Benning Aviators gathered to celebrate Aviation Safety Day May 24.

Kicking off the day's events was an awards ceremony, honoring 31 members of the post aviation staff.

Col. Barry Mahek, post chief of staff, presented the awards to the soldiers.

During his remarks, Mahek commended the staff on their outstanding safety record.

He said Lawson Army Airfield has not had an aviation-related fatality in more than 10 years.

Additionally, he said, they have flown 45,000 hours without a Class A mishap.

"This superior safety record was not accomplished by being lucky," Mahek said. "It took team work, and it took hard work.

"It demonstrated aggressive leadership and attention to detail, and commitment," he said.

According to Mahek, Aviation's efforts were key in helping Fort Benning earn the designation of being one of the two top posts in the Training and Doctrine Command for accident prevention in fiscal year 1989.

"The safety chain is only as strong as its weakest link," he said. "As you well know, in Aviation, small mistakes can carry catastrophic consequences."

Mahek said Aviation has the best equipment and the most highly trained soldiers in the Army.

They've been entrusted with the lives of the soldiers and civilians they carry, he said.

He urged the audience of Aviators not to take their jobs lightly.

Trap, skeet shooters capture top victories

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Trap and skeet shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are breaking a lot of clay pigeons these days as they reap the spoils of victory in matches from Interservice to World level.

Sgt. Bret Erickson was a member of the three-man U.S. Men's Trap team that won the gold medal recently at the Grand Prix of Nations match in Monticatini, Italy.

He also placed second in the individual men's trap event at the World Cup in Bologna, Italy.

Spec. Cindy Raahauge won an individual silver medal in the Ladies Skeet event at the Grand Prix of Nations.

She also shot a qualifying score that makes her eligible for selection to the 1992 Olympic Team.

Erickson, the reigning U.S. Champion in men's trap, has earned a medal in each of the World Cup events in which he shot this year.

At the Benito Juarez World Cup in Mexico City, Erickson won the gold and earned a country slot for the U.S. Olympic Team in 1992.

At the World Cup in Los Angeles, he won the bronze and the silver medals in Italy rounding out his knack for winning in World Cup events.

Spec. William J. Roberts recently won the Interservice Trap individual title during matches at Fort Benning.

Roberts won the event four points ahead of Spec. James Graves, formerly of USAMU, who returned on leave from duty in Korea to participate in the match.

USAMU's Pvt. 2 Jay Waldron placed third in the men's trap event.

These Army shooters also combined forces to win the team event, nine points ahead of the U.S. Marine Corps team. The U.S. Air Force team placed third.

This was Robert's first win of a major trap match since joining USAMU's shotgun team in 1989.

34th Med. Bn. defeats SOA to grab soccer league title

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

The 1990 Fort Benning Soccer League season ended May 17 as 34th Medical Battalion defeated the School of Americas team in an overtime shoot out.

34th Med. won the league title for the first time while SOA finished second for the second straight year after five consecutive seasons as league champions.

"It was the kind of game you dream of for a final," said Bill Hambay, director of Physical Activities.

The lead changed teams five times during the game with each team scoring quick goals during short periods of time.

34th Med. opened the scoring with two goals before SOA scored with one minute remaining to gain 3-2 lead at the half.

SOA opened the second half with a direct kick goal and another goal to reclaim the lead 4-3.

The next 15 minutes, each team's defense stiffened as play became rough with the League Champion title on the line before 34th Med. finally punched through a goal with less than two minutes to play, sending the game into overtime.

By the end of the overtime period, the score remained 4-4 as the players and coaches began to line the midfield in preparation for the shoot out.

Five players from each team took turns shooting a penalty kick at the opposing goalie.

Each kick drew cheers or groans from the teams depending on whether or not it was successful.

As the final kicker for SOA hit the ball off the top crossbar, the 34th Med. team members rushed onto the field and smothered the goalie in celebration of the victory 4-4 (3-2).

Following the game, Hambay congratulated the players and presented trophies to the teams.

"Both teams are true champions," Hambay said. "It's just too bad we can't have two league champions."

Marksmen advance to world team

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Five soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have been selected for the World Championship Team that will participate in the World Championship in Moscow in August.

Spec. Martin David Edmondson will participate in Running Target events.

Master Sgt. Erich Buljung made the team in air pistol, free pistol and standard pistol.

Buljung earned the silver medal in the air pistol event in the 1988 Olympics.

Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie McCoy will shoot in the free pistol and standard pistol events.

Spec. Stan Hays will compete in rapid-fire pistol, and Pfc. Eduardo Suarez will compete in rapid-fire and center-fire pistol events.

The selection of team members for the trap, skeet and rifle events has not been completed.

USAMU's Spec. Tom Tamas and Sgt. Brad Carnes are leading in the men's three-position rifle event following the first selection match in California, May 10 through 13.

The final matches of the selection process for rifle will be in June.

Sgt. Bret Erickson and Capt. Denise Morrison are the leading contenders in men's and ladies trap.

However, Morrison must still fire a qualifying score at the U.S. Championships in June to make the cut for the World Championship team.

Master Sgt. Alger Mullins and Spec. Cindy Raahauge are in first place for selection to the World Championship team in skeet.

The selection process for trap and skeet will be completed in June.

Botanical dinosaurs arrive at Callaway Gardens

Callaway Gardens

Botanical dinosaurs are on display at Callaway Gardens now through November in the form of living topiary. Topiary is the ancient art of trimming and training trees, shrubs or vines into exotic shapes.

These free-standing, stuffed, topiary dinosaurs were created from skeletal frames of metal, 4,500 pounds to be exact.

The frames are filled with plastic bags full of Styrofoam packing peanuts and well-soaked sphagnum moss, packed to a depth of six inches and tied onto the frames.

Between 20,000 to 25,000 individual English ivy plants form the dinosaurs' skins, generally five plants per square foot of area to be covered.

The meat-eating tyrannosaurus, or "tyrant lizard," was perhaps the most terrifying creature to ever walk the earth.

Although the botanical dinosaur is 15 1/2 feet tall and 35 feet long, they actually reached 18 to 20 feet in height and 40 feet in length.

It took 500 hours to stuff the tyrannosaurus with a mix of variegated ivies.

Apatosaurus, commonly and incorrectly called brontosaurus, was a gigantic plant eater weighing 29 to 35 tons.

Callaway's botanical apatosaurus is made up of more than 10,000 Needlepoint and Misty ivy plants which required 550 hours to plant.

Stegosaurus or the "roof lizard" is noted for its bony armor plates and spiked tail.

A peaceful vegetarian, the life-size topiary creature is 21 feet long and 9 feet tall.

Planted with Shafer Three, a curly, dark green and white variegated English ivy, Stegosaurus required less than 400 hours to plant.

The dinosaurs wander through the tree ferns, palms and cycads that may have shared the earth with them millions of years ago.

Although flowering plants appeared near the end of the Mesozoic Eera, Callaway's Sibley Horticultural Center will feature a colorful array of seasonal flowers and tropical foliage for the flower lover during this special dinosaur visit.

Callaway Gardens, a man-made landscape in a natural setting, is located in Pine Mountain, Ga., approximately 28 miles from Columbus on Georgia Highway 27 North.

POST BRIEFS

CB&T extends drive-in hours for test period

CB&T's Main Post Branch implemented new drive-in hours, which began Monday and will continue for a 60-day test period.

The new hours are as follows:

9:30 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Friday, CB&T Main Post Branch, corner of Ingersoll and Gaudette streets.

The drive-in windows will remain open until 7 p.m. to evaluate the possible need for drive-in banking beyond the duty day.

Comments and recommendations are welcome.

Benning residents can help prevent overflows

Since April, Fort Benning has experienced two sewage overflows in and near family housing areas, resulting from sewer lines being blocked by tree limbs, tricycles, and other objects not normally found in sewer lines and manholes.

Assistance from housing residents is solicited to help assure that manhole covers are not removed or tampered with.

Such actions not only pose a serious health and safety hazard, but also result in increased costs in man hours and resources while the blockages are being cleared.

These blockages must also be reported to the State of Georgia, and result in notices of violation of Fort Benning's wastewater discharge permit.

The assistance of housing residents in helping prevent sewage blockages and overflows will be appreciated.

Harmony Church soldiers' clinic changes to Winder

Medical care for soldiers assigned at Harmony Church area will be transferred to Winder Health Clinic at Sand Hill effective Monday. Clinic operations will remain unchanged.

Lunchtime classes are scheduled for June 26 and 28 and July 3 and 5, from noon to 1 p.m. with Capt. Susan Davis instructing.

To register or for information, call 544-4166/1221.

Silver Wings

fly away with gold

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Four members of the Fort Benning Command Exhibition Parachute Demonstration Team, the Silver Wings, flew away with the gold at the 13th annual Military Nationals hosted by the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., May 25 through 27.

Staff Sgt. Mark Sheehan, Staff Sgt. Joseph Askew, Spec. Carey Mills and Pvt. 2 Joseph Trinko won the Four-Way Relative Work category and then teamed up with a group from Fort Bragg to win the eight-way.

According to Sheehan, the team competed with all branches of the service, as well as foreign military teams.

He said there were 14 teams entered in the four-way competition.

Sheehan explained how a four-way works.

"The group exits from a Blackhawk at 9,500-feet and has 35-seconds to build formations designated by the meet director."

Trinko further explained these are aerial sequences that are done as many times as possible within 35-seconds.

"For each formation completed, the team is given a point," Trinko said.

Although winning itself is impressive, the fact that the team has only been together for one month makes the win all the better.

Sheehan had just finished competing in and winning the Best Ranger Competition when Sgt. 1st Class James Walker, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the Silver Wings, approached him with the idea of forming a team.

Among them, the men have 17 years of sky-diving experience. That combined experience is what helped them to win.

Their experience is not only in the sky, according to Sheehan.

He said to excel in the air, you have to have it just right on the ground.

This is done in two ways, he said. One is called Dirt Diving, and the other is creeper drills, in which the sky divers wheel around on a board. The boards are much like the ones mechanics use.

"Both drills give you a feel for what is going to happen in the air," he said, "but, the creepers allow you to see exactly where your hands and feet will be."

Walker, the manager of the four-way team, said they have spent many hours on the ground, as well in the air.

"Many of the hours spent in the air were paid for out of their own pockets," he said. "They really worked hard for their win."

That win earned the team a berth in U.S. National Sky Diving Championships in Muscogee, Okla.

However, they may not be able to compete due to lack of funds.

"They absorbed most of the cost incurred at Fort Bragg with their own funds," Walker said.

"Unfortunately, they have about depleted their own funds, and if they don't get some assistance, they won't be able to compete."

TQM begins to take root

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Total Quality Management Program has changed the attitude of several workers in the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

According to Charlotte B. Conner, chief, Resource Management Division, DPTM, the TQM attitude of "doing it right the first time" has uplifted spirits and saved money.

She said this was most evident when her crew, which is in charge of the Command Operating Budget for both Training and Doctrine Command and Forces Command units here, completed the annual budgeting project with no overtime.

Conner compared this with last year's overtime, estimated at $5,000.

She said the division did the job with three less people and still completed it with no overtime.

"I really believe it was the TQM training that did it," she said. "Part of the concept is working together, and we achieved that through TQM."

Although working no overtime is the most visible change in the office, Conner said they are implementing improvements all the time.

"Everyone is excited about TQM, and each person in my office is looking for ways to make the division better," she said.

An example of this is an agreement the entire office staff signed where each person agreed to work as a team, establish a system to communicate effectively, set up a timetable for each step of the improvement process, ensure consistency, fix problems, commit to improving the work process and satisfying the customer first, evaluate results and reward for improvements.

Conner said she tries to give certificates or cash awards to people who are doing exceptionally well.

"However, that type of recognition is not always appropriate," she said. "So, we encourage people to write notes just to let the employees know they are appreciated."

"You can't always do something big, but the little things mean just as much," Conner said.

Housing begins issuing quarters to lower enlisteds

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is making its lower enlisted soldiers feel a lot more at home lately.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing implemented the new Department of the Army policy authorizing lower enlisted soldiers housing when it issued quarters to a private first class June 1.

Pfc. Bartley Willis of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, was ceremoniously presented the keys to 214C Christian Lane by post Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek.

According to Col. Robert W. Hatch, DEH director, most of Fort Benning's two-bedroom quarters will be reallocated to junior enlisted soldiers through attrition.

A separate waiting list was begun May 1 for these quarters.

Hatch said this policy will give soldiers of all ranks the opportunity to live in housing. Previously, only soldiers with the ranks of specialist or corporal and above were authorized family quarters.

Military takes common-sense approach to procurement

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It wasn't that long ago that trainees were being given IOUs for certain uniform items, such as dress trousers or coats.

There was even a period a couple of years ago when brass belt buckles were not to be had, yet some generals refused to allow soldiers to wear the black belt buckle with dress greens.

The joke going around was the soldier would be given a note to show why he wasn't wearing a belt, and while he was saluting and trying to show his note, both at the same time, his pants would fall down around his knees.

If a soldier loses his pants now, it'll show the latest development in clothing procurement — Hanes, Jockey or Fruit of the Loom underwear.

There was a time that the Armed Forces were forced to get all uniform apparel from small businesses — support your local cottage industry.

One reason, only the small manufacturer would put up with 40 pages of specifications telling the manufacturer how to make skivvies.

Now it takes only six pages to tell the people at Jockey how to make a pair of briefs.

This is good because now, outfits like Van Heusen (which makes our dress shirt), Hartmarx and London Fog can enter the military uniform market.

It's good for another reason because Congress learned how the small uniform manufacturers were ripping us off.

For a time, we had no one to make our uniforms, thus the IOUs.

The Navy had 35 pages of specifications for its flight jacket.

Now that the larger manufacturers, those that have been making quality clothes for years, are involved, the Navy can now tell a manufacturer, "make it look like a flight jacket. Make it out of leather. Make it brown. Make it look like a nice flight jacket."

That's exactly what the manufacturer did, and the Navy wasn't disappointed.

This also cuts down on the delivery time, which makes the person waiting for his issued uniforms much happier.

This can also be a boon for some — Navy dungarees for under $10, or a bust for others, $20 more for dress greens.

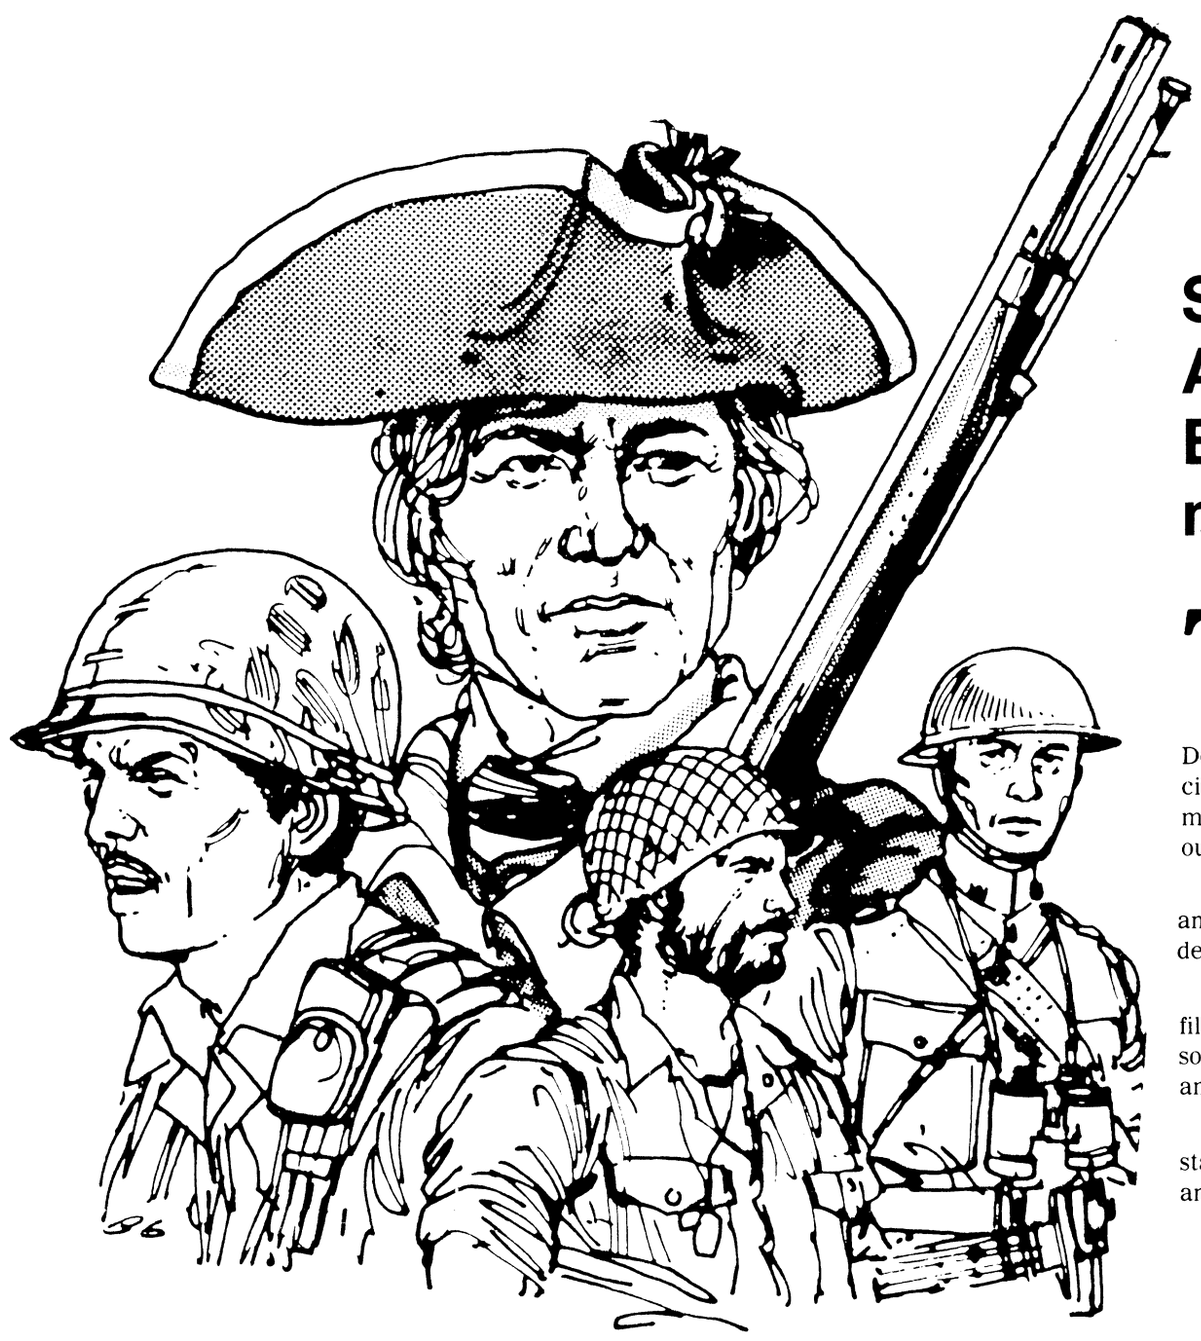
I personally am glad to see that we are beginning to awaken to the fact that we don't need to speck-i-fy industry to death.

Maybe this age of enlightenment (glasnost and perestroika in the U.S. Army?) will lead to other advancements, such as reducing the number of pages needed to tell a baker how to make a fruitcake — no fewer than 68 raisins, 42 currants, and so on, per 12-ounce tin of fruit cake.

I mean, I'm not advocating a completely laissez-faire attitude on all items.

I wouldn't ride into combat in a fighting vehicle where the only specs were "build a box out of metal that travels on tracks and has something on top that launches bullets," but when it comes to telling people in the business what material to use for their buttons on dress greens, I think that's taking it a step too far.

I'm sure using the common-sense approach will put many people out of work, but then isn't that the current mood in the country anyway?



Spigelmire's Army Birthday message

The U.S. Army celebrates its 215th anniversary Thursday.

As soldiers, Department of the Army civilians, retirees, and family members, we can be proud of our heritage.

It's a past filled with honor and glory, with hardship and deprivation.

But most of all, it's a past filled with stories of individual soldiers who fought for freedom and defense of the Constitution.

We carry on that legacy as we stay armed and ready to assume any role our nation asks of us.

ROA stresses significance of Total Force Study

Reserve Officers Association

Warning that if the Department of Defense does not listen to Congress, critical decisions may be made without the department's approval.

The Reserve Officers Association has asked for speedy completion of the congressionally-mandated Total Force Study.

A rare double-page editorial in the June issue of "The Officer," observes that members of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Reserve community agree on the significance of the study.

"But it does appear that the service chiefs and many other responsible persons in DoD are not getting the same message," the editorial reads.

"It seems certain that Congress is going to expect the Reserve Forces to play a greater role in the nation's future defense and that it expects DoD to provide guidance through a comprehensive Total Force analysis."

"It can also be concluded," the editorial read, "that unless the Department of Defense recognizes the direction in which Congress is moving, critical decisions will be made without DoD input."

The editorial recounts that in congressional testimony as early as March 2, 1989, ROA's Executive Director retired Maj. Gen. Evan L. Hultman observed that "budget deficits and the changing perception of the threat to national security would fuel pressures to increase the role of Reservists."

It noted that 15 months ago Hultman "warned that the Department of Defense could not proceed without clear purpose and direction and recommended that the department be directed to perform an in-depth analysis of the threat to and the missions and force structure of the Active and Reserve components — he called for a "force mix study.'"

The editorial provides a chronology of congressional hearings in the past year at which ROA called for completion of the study.

This included one on May 10, when Armed Services Committee Chairman Senator Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) commented, "I hope the Department of Defense is taking that study seriously."

Nunn, according to the editorial, sent instructions to "Pentagon decision makers."

"He emphasized that the answers to questions the study was intended to provide will be needed by Congress in the weeks ahead in making decisions critical to national security."

Complimentary copies of the editorial can be obtained from ROA at 1 Constitution Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002, telephone 202-479-2200.

2nd MASH: field hospital is like early Christmas

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion, is the proud owner of a new state-of-the art field hospital.

The Deployment Medical System will replace the unit's current field hospital, the Medical Unit Self Transportable.

A New Equipment Training Team from Fort Sam Houston, Texas, visited after the unit received the DEPMEDS to show how to set it up, according to Company Commander Capt. Sharon Barnes.

She said the training team was necessary.

The DEPMEDS, which is made out of specially tempered canvas for medical use and closed with Velcro has to be set up to exact specifications.

She said it was like Christmas for the unit when the soldiers set up the tent for the first time.

"It is so technologically advanced compared to the MUST," she said. "Besides that, it is much more energy efficient."

By being energy efficient she means that the unit operates on Diesel Fuel whereas the MUST operated on JP-4.

The fuel is used to operate the generators that power the machines that control the climate and powers all the medical equipment.

Some of the equipment includes an X-ray machine, surgical lights, heart monitors, anesthesia equipment and much more.

Barnes said, in combat, this is the first type of medical facility one would find in the division rear.

This particular unit can hold up to 60 patients.

The facility is used as a place to stabilize troops and move them out. The turnover rate would be 72 hours.

During peacetime, typical missions would include disaster relief for flood victims and, in some cases, as a replacement while a regular hospital is undergoing repairs.

"Although it's not a real hospital, it is equipped like one, and it is so much better than the MUST," Barnes said. "It really is like Christmas."

3/32 king gives up crown new leader takes charge

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"The Queen's Own," 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center has a new king.

Of course he's not really a king. He's the new commander of the battalion. Lt. Col. James H. Davis took over the position from Lt. Col. Robert E. Pilnacek in a ceremony on Wetherby Field, May 30.

Pilnacek was selected for promotion to colonel last year and is leaving Fort Benning to attend the Army War College.

While at Benning, Pilnacek also served as the Public Affairs Officer for the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

During his farewell speech, Pilnacek praised the soldiers in ranks on the parade field and recalled the speech he gave when he took command of the unit.

"I made several promises that day and I believe I have fulfilled every one of them," he said.

"Being in command is not always a bed of roses, but the soldiers were eager and will to learn," he said. "This has been the time of my life."

Davis then took to the podium and shouted, "hooah," exclaiming that he didn't think it could get any better than that very moment.

"I know taking command is an awesome responsibility," he said, "but, it's one that I'm eager to accept."

Prior to assuming command, Davis served as the chief, Staff and Faculty Development Division, USAIC.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. What is a Presidential Memorial Certificate?

A. A Presidential Memorial Certificate expresses the country's grateful recognition of an individual's service in the armed forces and bears the signature of the president.

These certificates are available to next of kin of deceased eligible veterans or persons who were on active military duty at time of death. Next of kin need not apply for a certificate.

Q. My first husband died of service-connected causes, and I received VA Dependency and Indemnity Compensation until I remarried.

My second husband recently died. Can I regain my eligibility for DIC payments?

A. Yes. DIC benefits may be restored if the subsequent marriage ends through death, divorce or annulment.

Q. Is there special mortgage insurance for veterans?

A. You may purchase Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance if, as a disabled veteran, you receive a VA grant for specially adapted housing.

Protection is automatic unless eligible veterans decline in writing or fail to respond to requests for information to determine premiums.

Who gets promoted?

U.S. Personnel Command

An analysis of senior enlisted promotions for 1989 indicates that education was a clear factor in promotion.

Soldiers selected from promotion to the top three noncommissioned officer grades had an average of one year more college than those not selected.

The more education a soldier had, the more likely that soldier was to be promoted.

Those selected for sergeant major or command sergeant major had an average of two years of college.

Those not selected had an average of one year of college.

Of those selected, 14 percent held undergraduate degrees, while only four percent of those not selected had no education beyond high school.

Of the 4,103 soldiers selected for master sergeant, 61 percent had at least one year of college.

Of those not selected, 58 percent had no education beyond high school.

For sergeant first class, only eight percent of those with no college were selected, while 75 percent of those with no college failed selection.

It is apparent from these statistics that civilian education is a major factor in promotions.

Tips that may help denture wearers chew in comfort

By Ralph W. Ogilvie
Dental Activity

Some 20 million Americans wear some type of denture.

There are three basic types — conventional or complete, immediate and partial.

Conventional dentures are artificial replacements for either nonfunctional teeth, poor teeth or no teeth at all.

Your first impression when new conventional dentures are placed in your mouth will be that they are too loose, or you'll feel your mouth is too full.

An excess of saliva may annoy you, and swallowing may seem more difficult.

By constantly wearing the dentures, these difficulties will gradually disappear.

Every new denture, no matter how well fitting, will cause some pain and discomfort. It may take a little time also to overcome slight speech or eating problems.

Learning to wear a denture takes time. A lower denture usually takes about four times as long to master as the complete upper.

At first you will experience some pain and discomfort. When sore spots develop on the gums, visit your dentist immediately.

For the first few days, eat foods that are cut up into small pieces and easily chewed.

As you progress to other foods, learn to chew evenly on both sides.

Clean your denture morning and night with a safe denture cleaner. An overnight denture bath is a good practice.

Do not use scouring powders, which may dissolve or roughen the denture material, making food more apt to stick.

Always clean your denture over a basin partially filled with water, which will act as a cushion if the denture is dropped.

Do not place the dentures in extremely hot water. This can permanantly warp them.

Complete dentures should be removed while sleeping to allow gums to rest.

Since your gums change over time, it is important to visit your dentist yearly for a complete check-up. Dentures cannot be worn indefinitely without adjustment.

After your natural teeth are extracted, you must expect considerable resorption that is, shrinkage of the gums and supporting bone. This is a life-long process.

Where change has been extreme, completely new dentures may be needed to restore and preserve the normal facial appearance.

When the diagnosis has been made for complete dentures, it is often decided to construct an "immediate" denture.

An immediate denture is a prosthesis made before the front teeth are removed.

The patient begins wearing the denture immediately following the removal of the teeth.

The dentist will often design the denture to exactly duplicate the position of the original teeth.

There is less pain from extractions because the denture acts as a splint or "band aid" over the extraction wounds, and thus aids the healing.

Immediate dentures present some disadvantages, too.

The boney structure of the mouth changes rapidly when teeth are removed, making a rebase or reline necessary. Additional time and expense should be expected.

Care for these dentures are the same as that for conventional dentures.

The third type of denture is the partial denture. If you have enough healthy teeth remaining, a partial denture is the best treatment choice.

This prosthesis will help preserve remaining teeth, enhance your appearance, and improve chewing.

Likewise, the partial denture helps to stabilize and support the remaining teeth.

This denture consists of a cast metal framework designed specifically to fit your mouth using the remaining natural teeth to stabilize and retain the denture.

Because a partial denture is made to fit closely against the teeth, it must be kept immaculately clean.

Brushing after every meal is essential. There is a misconception that a partial denture causes tooth decay.

This is not true; lack of cleanliness of the denture will cause the decay problem.

Do not soak the denture in any solutions that will corrode the metal, such as bleach.

After eating, clean both your natural teeth and the denture itself.

Whether your oral condition requires a conventional, immediate or partial denture, it will be a tremendous improvement over an existing poor oral condition of few or no teeth at all.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

A $1 per gallon gasoline tax was proposed before Congress last month by a World Resources Institute official.

Jessica Tuchman Mathews, vice president of World Resources, was among a group testifying last week at a hearing chaired by Representative Stephen Solarz, Democrat, New York, to examine the relationships among national security, energy needs and the environment.

Mathews said she feels that for a gasoline tax to be effective, the amount needs to be substantial enough to have an impact.

All agreed that the future of the United States and its economic security, would be influenced by the decisions made concerning energy and environmental policy.

Global warming is a predominant environmental problem confronting the world.

Cleaning up the environment, however, will not be cost free.

Discussion moved toward how energy user fees and taxes might spur conservation and efficiency and increase the nation's ability to compete with Japan and Europe.

Mathews, who was soliciting the gasoline tax package before the panel, said the real cost of gasoline is lower today than it has been in years, and noted that in 1987, Americans paid on the average of above 82 cents a gallon for regular gasoline.

By contrast, the Italians paid $3.71 a gallon; the French, $2.95; the Japanese, $2.89; the British, $2.24; and the West Germans, $2.09, in 1987.

"Americans do not realize that cheap gasoline is crippling Detroit in its competition with European and Japanese producers."

Mathews believes that a comparable tax would make the United States more competitive with the most successful economies.

Linda Stuntz, Department of Energy's deputy secretary for policy, planning and analysis, said the department was examining a range of oil supply and demand options, including various forms of energy taxes.

Also noted was if a 25-cent-per-gallon tax were levied, the fuel would still cost less than it did in 1973, when adjusted for inflation.

Mathews gasoline tax package includes:

- A 10-year gasoline tax, starting at 10 cents a gallon and increasing to $1 per gallon to be set aside for budget deficit reduction.
- An exemption for families with incomes under $10,000.
- An import fee on imported crude figured at $18 per barrel and the price equivalent on refinded products;
- Average fuel economy standards rising to at least 40 miles per gallon for cars and 35 miles per gallon for light trucks by 2000.

Alan Randall, professor of agriculture economics at Ohio State University, testified that higher taxes, on oil and natural gas used in this country to stimulate conservation and alternative energy sources, may be justified.

He said it would be prudent to provide incentives for conservation and alternative energy before the market does.

Considering the benefits the tax package may bring, it is almost certain that conservative driving habits will take the front seat once again.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Section, 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Outpatient Pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital will be closed Sundays beginning July 1 due to a shortage of pharmacists.

By closing Sunday rather than reducing the staff during peak times, Pharmacy personnel can do more for a larger number of beneficiaries.

Medications needed for emergencies will be stocked in the Emergency Room, as always.

The majority of prescriptions filled Sundays are refills and prescriptions that were written on an earlier date.

Prescriptions may be refilled up to seven days before the date on which they are due for refill or 21 or more days after the last refill shown on the container.

If you plan ahead, you may leave prescriptions and pick them up anytime within five days, after which they will be returned to stock.

There is an "Early Bird" drop box located in the lobby next to the pharmacy intake window, just inside the clinic entrance.

This is only for refills when the original prescription was filled at MACH and there are refills remaining.

Patients may fill out the forms provided and leave them in the box anytime the pharmacy is closed.

Prescriptions may be picked up after 11 a.m. the next working day by bringing in the empty containers from the previous prescription, the claim check and military identification card.

The Refill Pharmacy in the Main Post Exchange is also convenient for those who are using the PX or Commissary.

They may leave prescriptions, do their shopping, and then pick up the medications.

This PX Pharmacy is open from 9:45 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and from 8:45 a.m. to noon Saturdays.

Both of these options are for refills only. New prescriptions must be filled through the Main Outpatient Pharmacy between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Friday, and from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday.

72nd Engineers bridge training gap

By Joseph G. Fridley
197th Infantry Brigade

Soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company recently bridged a gap in their mission training plan when they traveled to Fort Bragg, N.C., May 1 through 5 for BRIDGEX '90.

According to Staff Sgt. Reginald Perry, unit training NCO, this was the "Sappers" first deployment in three years to the annual exercise conducted by the XVIII Airborne Corps, parent unit of the 197th Infantry Brigade and the 72nd Engineers.

"BRIDGEX provided a change from our other recent field exercises and allowed us to construct military tactical bridges — something we aren't able to do at Fort Benning because of its lack of a bridge," Perry said.

"The week was devoted to building and using the Bailey bridge, M-4T6 bridge, medium-girder bridge, light-tactical raft, one- and two-rope foot bridges, and RB-15 assault boats under various conditions, including night assault river crossings and expedient rafting," he added.

According to 1st Sgt. Carl Pippen, the unit's first sergeant, the exercise was designed to train the soldiers in both tactical bridge construction and assault river crossing.

Training was divided among three line platoons of combat engineers, with soldiers from the 72nd's Headquarters and Assault and Barrier platoons filling in with their engineer counterparts.

Few soldiers in either of the latter two platoons had ever built tactical bridges.

"BRIDGEX was good cross-training because it gave me valuable knowledge and experience," said Spec. Gary Barton, who normally operates one of the unit's D-7F dozers.

"I'd like to do this again, but I wish we could leave them up after we build them," said Pvt. Julius Johnson, an armored vehicle launched bridge operator.

Moreover, the soldiers benefited during BRIDGEX from their previous week of intensive nuclear, biological and chemical training.

"The training conditioned the soldiers to react quickly when they encountered chemical agents during their night assault river crossing," said Sgt. William Hughes, NBC NCO. "They quickly got into MOPP 4 and displayed a 'ready-to-continue-the-mission' mentality."

Even those who failed to mask before the agent reached their nostrils displayed a positive attitude.

"Despite the gas, I had a great time throughout the exercise," said Pfc. Anthony Vaughters of 3rd Platoon.

The soldiers picked the medium-girder bridge as their favorite type to construct because of its light weight and quick assembly time (about 30 minutes, versus up the Bailey bridge, which took up to four hours.

One soldier likened the MGB to an erector set because its pieces snap together.

"Of the five bridges we built, I enjoyed the MGB the most because it went up fast and was the lightest," said Spec. Paul Izral of 2nd Plt.

Capt. Ronald N. Light, unit commander, presented engraved paddles to the platoon with the fastest construction time for each of the five bridges built.

1st Plt. won for best MGB and light tactical raft; 2nd Plt. for night assault river crossing; and 3rd Plt. for Bailey and M-4T6 bridges. Overall best platoon was 1st Plt.

"I'm proud of my platoon's achievement," said Staff Sgt. Felipe Rodriquez, platoon sergeant of 1st Plt. "All the soldiers were highly motivated, and the squad leaders showed excellent leadership and knowledge."

The 264th Medium Girder Bridge Company, 30th Engineer Battalion, 20th Engineer Brigade, from Fort Bragg, was the largest unit involved in BRIDGEX.

In addition to the 72nd, Fort Benning's 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) provided training in the use and construction of ribbon bridges.

IOBC studies close combat

Infantry Officers Basic Course

Company C of the Infantry Officers Basic Course, Class 6-90, negotiated the Close Combat Instruction course May 11.

After a hard week in the field qualifying for Land Navigation, the lieutenants of Co. C were finding out what it really means to be an Infantryman.

Co. C participated in an eight-mile road march in the rain with full gear May 10.

Many already had sore, blistered feet, so the road march was just another of many challenges.

At the Close Combat site, the lieutenants took two practice runs through the course, after which they were given an "inspirational" briefing by two Rangers from the 3rd Battalion located here.

The next day, after being divided into their respective squads, squad leaders were given a mission and ample time to implement the troop leading procedures.

Sand tables were built, ammo issued and loaded, A and B Team leaders designated, and a plan was made. The squads were ready.

After forming up in an assembly area, the squads moved through a passage point and moved on line.

Following an artillery prep, each squad leader moved his squad using fire and maneuver through a wire obstacle, and across a field.

Team leaders directed their teams through the use of hand and arm signals.

When the squad leader signaled for lift and shift fire using a white a star cluster, grenades were thrown and the trench line was cleared.

The squad then moved across the trench and continued up the hill, again using fire and movement.

The squad then swept across the objective and prepared for a counterattack.

The CCI course teaches squad and team leaders to "think on their feet" while real bullets are flying.

It challenges squad members to work as a team and to be physically and mentally tough.

It makes them think under stress and during a considerable amount of confusion.

The training received at Close Combat 1, was quite motivating, according to 2nd Lt. Dino Cappuzzo, a member of IOBC, Class 6-90.

"It gave them a chance to see how their respective squads would function tactically," he said. "It also presented an opportunity to develop close combat skills, and to understand the things done wrong that can cost the lives of men."

Co. C returned to garrison sore and tired, but always ready for more.

Vanguards see the light

By Michael P. Duvall
197th Infantry Brigade

The Vanguards of Company C, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, have "seen the light."

The men of "Chargin' Charlie," a mechanized unit in the 197th Infantry Brigade, left their 13-ton track vehicles behind when they deployed to the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Chaffee, Ark., for two weeks of training in such light Infantry tasks as airmobile insertion, day and night foot patrols, reconnaissance and breaching.

"Rotational training at the JRTC was a sharp contrast to our deployment earlier this year to the National Training Center, where we conducted operations with our improved TOW vehicles and armored personnel carriers," said Staff Sgt. Michael Sams, platoon sergeant of 1st Platoon.

Instead of driving through blowing sand over the waddies in California's Mojave Desert, the soldiers had to contend with carrying their gear in rucksacks and marching through the dense forests and swamp lands of Arkansas.

"This mission taught me the wear and tear your body takes when you're not fighting in a mechanized scenario," said Pfc. Kenneth Dickey.

Heavy rain and flood conditions presented an additional challenge to the foot-bound soldiers.

"Although we often have road marches with our rucksacks, we've never had to carry them that far, especially under such adverse weather conditions," said Pvt. John Lynch.

During the exercise, the Vanguards received such missions as locating an 11-man Special Forces team, conducting operations behind enemy's lines, and manning a clandestine supply point.

Throughout the rotation, Co. C soldiers were a part of an opposing force fighting against a friendly "Blue Force" battalion-size element of soldiers from 6th Infantry Division, Forts Wainwright and Richardson, Alaska.

"During one mission, our reconnaissance team located two of the Blue Force positions, and our assault team moved in and captured their entire defensive element without firing a single round," Lynch said.

The Vanguards' final battle ended when, reinforced by an engineer company from the 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash., they wiped out 83 percent of the Blue Force.

Their performance not only earned Chargin' Charlie a JRTC Excellence Award from the commander of Fort Chaffee's OPFOR battalion, but also proved they always live up to their motto, "Vanguards Lead the Way."

'Cat Fight' determines mightiest tanker platoon

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

The tankers of the 197th Infantry Brigade's 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, recently competed against each other in a battalion "Cat Fight," to see who would be named the "Best Platoon."

Sixteen tank platoons were in the preliminary competition, but only six went to the finals.

"This is the first time the battalion has held this type of competition. The eliminations started back in April," said battalion Executive Officer Maj. Doug Robinson.

"The competition was conducted to see who would be the best," said battalion Command Sergeant Major Tim Gabel.

"Using the MILES gear, the tank platoons were evaluated on the receipt of the operations order, movement to the attack area, and the overall attack.

Company C had the upper hand with its 1st and 3rd platoons in the final elimination battle.

Both platoons displayed outstanding marksmanship and driving abilities, as the tankers maneuvered around the battle field eluding and engaging the opponents tanks.

Company C's, 3rd Platoon came out victorious after fighting for about two hours.

"I attribute our success to the platoon ARTEP and the practice at the National Training Center. We had a good plan. We got together daily and discussed our goals and strategies for the battle," said 3rd Plt. platoon leader, 2nd Lt. Blake J. Austensen.

"Despite it being our first time in the field with the new crew members, we were able to make it this far," Austensen added.

"The majority of the new crew members have about four years active duty in their MOS. This enabled us to perform more efficiently," said 3rd Plt., platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Aaron Williams.

According to Spec. Tony Farmer, 3rd Plt.'s top gunner with eight total kills for the day, "No individual can do it by himself, it takes the whole crew to accomplish the mission."

LRC goes over with a splash

By Dino Cappuzzo
Infantry Officers Basic Course

Members of Company C, Infantry Officers Basic Course, Class 6-90, splashed their way through the challenging Leadership Reaction course at Dixie Village May 17.

Upon arriving at the LRC site, the officer in charge, Capt Welden Burton, briefed the lieutenants on how they would be required to use a seven-step, problem-solving process to develop a plan to negotiate the obstacles.

The lieutenants of Co. C were then divided into squads and assigned their first obstacle.

The squads were further divided into two teams: an execution team and a harassment team.

The execution team negotiated the obstacle, while the harassment team made loud noises and splashed water to create a high stress environment.

At each obstacle the execution team was given time to recon the obstacle and develop a plan.

Once this was accomplished, they were given 12 minutes to execute the plan.

To make the obstacles all the more interesting, the majority of them were placed over water.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. We are having a problem with our bank.

Recently, we received a check from my mother-in-law in California as a loan to help pay some old bills and to buy some needed household items.

We agreed to pay her back monthly, and figured that we could save a lot of interest payments by doing it this way.

We deposited the check in a local bank where we have an account, and I wrote checks to pay the bills.

The check from my mother-in-law was more than enough to cover all the checks I wrote.

Last week I was notified that several of my checks had "bounced."

The bank told me they had held my mother-in-law's check until they were sure that it was good and that I would have to pay any bad check charges that resulted.

They are charging me almost $100 in bad check fees.

Can they do this?

A. When depositing a check in their checking account, most people want the money right away for paying bills, making a purchase or getting cash.

Banks take a certain risk that the check the customer has deposited may not be honored by the bank on which it is written.

Because of this, banks typically set periods of delay before allowing use of the checks deposited, so they will have time ensure the checks will be honored.

The method by which the check is paid is called the clearing process, and it involves sending the check from the local bank to the distant bank for payment.

If you write a check, which is presented for payment during this period, the bank may refuse to pay it, even if the check (such as the one from your mother-in-law) is perfectly good.

If a number of checks are written and presented during this period, a chain reaction of so-called "bad check charges" can result.

Congress passed a law in 1987 called the Expedited Funds Availability Act, which sets maximum time periods for delays in using these deposited funds.

The Act requires that the bank tell you in writing, usually at the time the account is opened, how long they will hold deposits.

The bank is free to release deposits sooner than the law requires, but not later.

Most banks furnish this information when the account is opened, but it's hard to read and understand, and many consumers don't ask questions about what it means.

Unless you ask questions, the bank can presume that you understand the rules and act accordingly.

A simplified summary of the rules shows that the federal requirements fall into three general categories of deposit:

- Cash or cash equivalent instruments, such as government checks, certified checks, direct deposit checks, and the like, must be make available the next business day after the date of deposit.
- Checks written on local institutions must be made available the third business day after the day of deposit.
- Checks written on nonlocal banks must be made available the seventh business day after the date of deposit.

A business day is any day except Saturday, Sunday and federal holidays.

This can be tricky, and can cost you money if you calculate incorrectly.

For example, the deposit of your mother-in-law's check on Friday, June 1 at the bank would allow the bank to hold it until Tuesday, June 12.

The safest approach is to ask the bank when the deposit can be released.

They will be happy to tell you, and you can avoid any problems with bad check charges.

The rules given above are of necessity, general in nature, and do not cover all situations.

Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 for an appointment to address the specifics of your case.

Good music in the ear of listener

By Karles Jackson
Military Police Activity

Do you like good music?

That's fine, as long as you don't like it too loud.

If you like cruising Fort Benning and Columbus with your music blaring, think again.

At Fort Benning, Command Memorandum Number 10 prohibits playing a car radio so loud that it can be heard by a person with normal hearing who is 15 feet away.

Military personnel violating this memorandum could be prosecuted under the Uniformed Code of Military Justice or have administrative actions taken against them.

Sponsors are encouraged to ensure their family members do not violate this command memorandum because their family members' actions may reflect on them.

In Columbus, City Ordinance 90-28 states that it is unlawful for any person to make or continue or cause to be made any loud, unnecessary, or unusual noise that disturbs the peace or quite of any neighborhood or that causes discomfort or annoyance to any reasonable person of normal sensitivity residing in the area and in any event, the intensity of the sound will be so controlled that it will not be unreasonably loud, annoying, disturbing or a nuisance to any person or persons.

Individuals cited by the Columbus police for violation of the noise ordinance could incur a fine of $30 for the first offense, $100 for the second or subsequent offense.

The MPs and Columbus police have been enforcing this command memorandum and city ordinance and will continue to do so.

Use common sense and be considerate of others before blasting the sound system, in you automobile, home or with a portable radio.

After all, you could pay for the noise.

Faith's Odyssey of Mind team wins again

Team captures 3rd in World Finals

Fort Benning Schools

Faith School's Odyssey of the Mind team has again returned as a winner from the World Finals Competition.

The team placed third last week in the world competition at Iowa State University in Ames, Iowa.

This year, more than 638 teams participated, representing not only the various states but also the Soviet Union, Poland, Japan, China, Mexico and Canada.

"This third-place win was quite an accomplishment," said team coach, Joan Hutchins. "Our team competed against more than 50 teams who were, themselves, the champions of their states or nations."

The Odyssey of the Mind competition was started 12 years ago by a New Jersey college professor.

It's a program that provides students a mental challenge through problem-solving activities.

The two categories are long-term problem solving, in which students have several months to find a solution to a problem and short-term problem solving, in which students must find a solution to a problem during the competition.

This is the fourth year that Faith Middle School students have competed under the direction of teacher-coach Libbie Kurinec and volunteer-coach Joan Hutchins.

It is also the fourth year that the Faith team has represented the state of Georgia in the World Finals.

In 1987, a Faith team won first place in the World Finals, and last year a team placed ninth.

Team members this year are Ben Engel, Ahmad Hernandez, Greg Maschek, Jenni Maschek, Elisabeth Moore, Ty Poe and Danielle Woods.

Their long-term problem was called "The Seven Wonders of the World."

In this problem, the students had to present the seven wonders of the ancient world and then suggest replacements for six of them.

The replacements that the Faith students chose were: the Statue of Liberty, the Panama Canal, the Mona Lisa, the wheel, and the portable toilet.

Students had to write, produce, and make a presentation that would explain their choices for replacements.

"I am very proud of this team," said Kurinec. "The students worked extremely well together as a team, and they didn't stop after the district or state competitions.

"They continued to work together to make improvements in the presentation that they would take to the World Finals."

Students and coaches returned from the World Finals with a trophy, momentos from the trip, and suggestions and plans for future competitions.

Fort Benning Schools

Odyssey of the Mind team members Elisabeth Moore (left), Jenni Maschek, Ahmad Hernandez, Ty Poe, Greg Maschek and Ben Engel rehearse their presentation, "The Seven Wonders of the World."

"We are very proud of the Faith team and their third-place win," said Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, Superintendent of Fort Benning Schools.

"The students are to be commended for their accomplishment and for their efforts.

"The Odyssey of the Mind competition has been an enriching experience for the Faith students who have participated in it during these last four years, and we all appreciate the efforts of Libbie Kurinec, a Faith School teacher, and Joan Hutchins, a school volunteer, who have devoted countless hours to making these Odyssey of the Mind opportunities available to Benning students."

Male Doberman brings home strays

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The old expression, "Look what the cat dragged in," got turned around when Bumper came home with two kittens.

Bumper is a 7-year-old, male Doberman Pinscher, belonging to a 2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion soldier, Sgt. Robert Martin and his wife Angela.

They say Bumper apparently found the kittens in the woods behind their post quarters.

Mrs. Martin said Bumper usually stays in the house, but they are preparing to move so she left him outside for a while.

"The next time I thought to check on him I found him in his doghouse with kittens that looked to be about 4 weeks old," she said.

She said that he was nuzzling them and cleaning them and acting just like a mother.

"What's really odd about the thing is that normally he hates cats," Mrs. Martin said. "Besides that, he's never brought home anything before.

The Martins said they would like to keep the kittens, but they are moving to Germany and can't take them.

However, they said they are going to keep them until the kittens are old enough to be given away.

Mrs. Martin said anyone interested in a free kitten may call her at 689-8590.

The Fort Benning Rebels went undefeated in regular season play. U.S. Army Photo

Soccer enthusiasts grab regional championship

By Al Nahas
Fort Benning Rebels

Some young Fort Benning soccer enthusiasts took matters into their own hands this season and ended up champions.

They formed their own soccer team and joined the Columbus Youth Soccer Association as the Fort Benning Rebels.

They found coaching from Mike Lydiate, a former Pacelli High School soccer player and now a Columbus College student.

Their assistant coach was Robby Alford also a soccer player for Columbus College.

Fifteen games later the Rebels were undefeated and named champions of the Georgia Youth Soccer Association Southwest Region.

The Rebels are: Forwards — Izaac Benz, Robbie Greene and Robby Pearce; Halfbacks — Victor Wong, Sam Miller, Ginny Hitchock, Jenny Maschek and Kerry Meade; Sweeper — Sara Nardotti; Fullbacks — Lee Bunyea, Greg Maschek, Ben Engle and Katy Miller; and Goalie — Matthew Nahas.

All of the Rebels' competition were all-boy teams, a fact that never escaped verbal notice by the other side prior to their games. Comments changed by the end of each game as the Rebels showed their soccer skills on the field.

The Rebels traveled as far as Albany and Thomaston to find opponents.

The Officers' Wives' Club sponsored the Rebels in the American Soccer Association Tournament in Atlanta over the Memorial Day weekend.

The Rebels once again proved their skills winning a second-place division title and a third-place overall.

Their only loss of the year came at the hands (feet) of an all-star team from south Atlanta.

Follow these tips for summer topwater bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Early morning calm, an isolated bush along a shallow shoreline, a floating topwater plug, the heart-stopping strike of an exploding bass.

If you're a bass angler, it's probably easy to envision just such an image.

Now that warm weather has arrived, early-morning and late-afternoon bass fishing with topwater lures becomes a standard technique on many largemouth and smallmouth lakes.

"Topwater fishing is a world of its own," says Stanley Mitchell, a Georgia-based tournament pro.

"It's fun and exciting, and it's effective, too."

"I've caught bass weighing over 10-pounds with topwater lures."

Topwater lures become effective after water temperatures reach about 60 degrees, adds Mitchell.

Between 60 and 70 degrees, anglers may find topwater lures productive all day, but once temperatures climb above 70 degrees, top-water action is generally limited.

"These are the hours when bass are most active," explains the Evinrude pro.

"The exception occurs on slightly windy, overcast days when the fish tend to remain a little more active."

Because topwater lures come in a wide variety of styles and actions, retrieval speeds can be critical to success.

Mitchell advises anglers to experiment with different retrieves until bass start hitting.

"Let the fish tell you how they want the lure," he says. "Normally, active fish strike when you move the lure fast, but as the bass become less and less active, the more you have to slow your retrieve."

A stop-and-go retrieve is often effective when bass follow a lure but don't take it, notes Mitchell.

Many strikes actually come when the lure is stopped.

"A stop-and-go retrieve often works well with a topwater lure we call a 'slush bait,'" he explains. "These are floating lures that have propellers.

They make a lot of noise and commotion when you move them, but you have to stop them periodically to really make them work.

"Move the lure fast for several feet, then stop it for two or three seconds, then move it again.

Be ready for a strike anytime, but especially when the lure is stopped."

The pro also advises to concentrate on fishing shallow water and casting close to cover, such as bushes and grasslines.

Occasionally in deep, clear water, bass can be tempted to strike a topwater lure, but such activity is usually sporadic.

"The size of the lure you use is also important," adds Mitchell.

"If you're fishing water that definitely has big fish, then use a larger lure, but if you're on a lake that generally produces small bass, then use a small lure.

"Topwater lures will catch big bass. I've caught several fish weighing more than 10 pounds with topwater lures, and it's a thrill."

SPIRITUAL

Post chaplain leaves, heads for TRADOC

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis finished four years as post chaplain last week and begins his job as Training and Doctrine Command Chaplain at Fort Monroe, Va.

Chap. Mathis

The post chaplain position is part of the commanding general's personal staff, and is the advisor and supervisor for the post's religious program.

"The main duty, in my opinion, of a post chaplain is to provide resources and training necessary for the chaplains to do their ministry," explained Mathis.

He said his job also entails managing and supervising the religious program and providing training for the chaplains.

Mathis said the chaplains should go to the troops to provide unit ministry.

"If soldiers are in the field, in the training areas, or jumping from aircraft, that is where the chaplains should be."

From behind his desk, a pulpit or the doorway of a C-141, Mathis kept to a full schedule of pastoral and administrative demands.

"Each chaplain who earned Airborne wings at Fort Benning made at least one jump with Chap. Mathis," explained Chap. (Lt. Col.) Donald Taylor, USAIC Chaplains Chief of Resources.

"He was there to support and reinforce their efforts."

Among the notable changes at Fort Benning during Mathis' time as post chaplain was the establishment of the Clinical Pastoral Education Center at Custer Terrace Chapel.

The CPE program is a Department of Army Training program and the only community program in the system.

CPE satellite areas of study include hospital, family life, drug and alcohol abuse, confinement facility and counseling.

This program adds six extra chaplains to Fort Benning.

In the past four years, the Chaplain section has won project Spirit twice and the 1989 TRADOC Army Community of Excellence Award.

A new chapel for the thousands of troops who pass through Sand Hill training each year was built in 1988.

The Sand Hill chapel had a stained-glass window of the "Praying Infantryman" installed last year.

"I don't like to measure success by buildings and numbers but by actual ministry," he said.

Mathis said he feels that the physical and monetary issues merely enhance the atmosphere for ministry.

He said he would like to be remembered for instituting a good, solid Religious Education Program and a broad spectrum of worship and pastoral counseling training.

Mathis said that many challenges face today's chaplaincy.

In the next few years, as the number of chaplains, dollars and resources decrease, chaplains will have to depend more on laypersons to assist with ministry, and Nonappropriated Funds (chapel tithes and offerings) for financial support.

Mathis said his job at TRADOC will enable him to work with more than a dozen TRADOC installations and schools, training centers, and ROTC regions for a total of 31 installations and 305 chaplains.

"I am accepting this as a challenge and look forward to sharing the good things that have worked at Fort Benning with other posts."

Reflections Reflections Reflections

Have you hugged your child today?

By Chaplain Richard Roggia
Chief, Chaplain's Family Life Center

My 5-year-old recently ran up to me proudly showing his new T-shirt which read, "I'm a hugger, not a slugger."

During the celebration of the Month of the Military Child, he received the shirt from the Army Family Advocacy Program.

The message is clear and understandable even to a little child. Children are meant to be hugged, not slugged.

What is the value of a hug? Researchers report the average American 12-year-old spends only 14-½ minutes a day communicating with his parents, and about 12-½ of those minutes are spent receiving reprimands, discipline and criticism.

These are concerning statistics because the most important lessons of life are best taught by loving parents in a happy home.

One of the simplest and most easily understood expressions of affection is a hug — a generous, spontaneous, heartwarming hug.

A hug, according to Webster's Dictionary, is a transitive verb defined as to embrace, to hold fast, to keep close to.

But the dictionary definition is inadequate because it doesn't mention the healing feeling of arms around the neck and shoulders.

The dictionary says nothing of the security given when one is held closely. It omits the caring communicated with this brief touch.

A hug can spell the difference between success and failure. It can raise the hunched shoulders and straighten the furrowed brow.

It has power to dry glistening tears and mend broken hearts.

A hug can say "Thank you for what you do," or "You have my support, I love you." All of this is communicated with a momentary touch.

It is true that a hug cannot be everything. But there are times of discouragement, sadness or failure when only a hug will do.

There are also times of happiness and success when a hug makes them more memorable.

Perhaps today, even now, someone close to us is in need of an emotional boost that comes only from a hug.

There's magic at Cypress Gardens

Cypress Gardens

Cypress Gardens will premiere a spectacular new Magic Show June 16 featuring some of the most astonishing illusions ever presented in a theme-park setting.

"More Than Magic" was created and produced by internationally-acclaimed master magician Mark Wilson, one of the most admired magicians in the world for more than 30 years.

This mysterious, musical show will be at the newly renovated Cypress Theatre in the Southern Crossroads section of the landmark Central Florida attraction.

A dazzling, full-color laser system, state-of-the-art, fiber-optic lighting, original music, and most of all, surprises, and then, more surprises are in store for audiences.

Be prepared to be bedazzled, to doubt your senses, to wonder if the laws of gravity and physics have been repealed.

See "More Than Magic" at Cypress Gardens, and then see how long you can wait to see it again, just to be sure you saw what you thought you saw.

Cypress Gardens is located 30 minutes southwest of Walt Disney World, off U.S. 27 near Winter Haven, midway between Tampa and Orlando.

Quick thinking spares a student's life

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"You know we're quick to criticize when something's wrong, we'd like to reward someone just just as quick," said Fort Benning's commanding general during a recent awards ceremony.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire gave five service members Army Achievement Medals almost on the spot, for saving the life of a Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, Airborne School student June 12.

During a jump, the student's parachute failed to deploy and was caught on a static line attached to the C-130 Hercules aircraft.

The soldier was literally hanging by a line outside the aircraft as it soared through the air.

Upon discovering the parachute did not deploy, the loadmasters, Airman 1st Class Brandon Broughman and Sgt. Christopher M. Wilmes; the pilot, Capt. Willie Greenlea and Co. C jumpmasters, Staff Sgt. Brian P. Dombeck, Sgt. Howard E. Collins and Sgt. 1st Class Juan Luis Fernandez took immediate action.

The loadmasters radioed to the pilot, who in turn notified the control tower.

The loadmasters quickly started procedures to pull the student back inside the aircraft.

At the same time, the pilot was reconfiguring the aircraft to break up the airflow around the jumper.

According to Broughman, it took all five of the men 90 seconds to pull the jumper back in.

It took 90-seconds to pull the jumper in.

"It seemed a lot longer than 90 seconds," said Wilmes. "We didn't even expect him to be conscious when we got him back in the plane.

"However that wasn't the case with this jumper. He was conscious and seemed to be in fine shape."

"Normally towed jumpers are unconscious when they are pulled back in," said Maj. Charles Busick, executive officer, 1st Bn., 507th.

He added that sometimes they aren't even alive.

Busick said this is the first time in many years that this has happened at the Airborne School, and measures are being taken to lessen the chance of it ever happening again.

Spigelmire said the heroic efforts of the men bring great credit on the 507th and the whole Airborne community.

Bradley users gather for conference

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Sustaining Excellence in the Bradley Force of the Future," was the theme of the ninth annual Bradley Fighting Vehicle Conference here June 4 through 8.

This year's conference was co-hosted by the Training and Doctrine Command Systems manager of the Bradley and the U.S. Army Infantry School, according to Capt. Allen Tiffany, protocol officer for the event.

Tiffany said the intent of the conference was to provide a forum for sharing information, so excellence could be sustained for the future.

"Actually the theme of the conference is what we do all year long," he said, "but, we tried to expand on it this week."

More than 240 active duty and retired soldiers and contractors from all over the United States and Europe came together to share or gain information on the Bradley.

Tiffany said every major unit that has fielded the Bradley or is in the process of fielding a Bradley was invited.

Included at the conference were updates on threats, doctrine, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, combat developments, ordnance. Major commands gave presentations on Bradley operations conducted within.

Work groups were set up so conference organizers could get feedback from the attendees on the spot.

"We wanted the users point of view," Tiffany said. "That's why so many noncommissioned officers were invited to the conference because they know what's going on with the Bradley."

Contractor displays lined the hallways of the west wing of Infantry Hall. "The most popular display was a high-speed video game of a Bradley from the Educational Computer Corporation," Tiffany said.

Although the video game gained the most attention each of the other displays had more than a fair share of onlookers.

Tiffany said that he was quite certain each attendee returned to his unit with some new information on the Bradley.

he extended his thanks to the Fort Benning community for making it easier to give the people in attendence the information. Tiffany singled out the NCO and Officers' Club, post food service, Training and Support Center, Federal Print Plant and the Association of the U.S. Army.

Suggestions pay off for post employees

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

They say curiosity killed the cat, but that's not the case for a Directorate of Logistics employee whose curiosity netted a check for $2,850.

David M. Orr, was curious as to what would happen if he washed the helmet liners and pads that were discarded in his shop.

These liners and pads were thrown away and replaced with new ones on a regular basis.

Orr found that the washed liners and pads came out as good as new.

He put in a suggestion to wash them instead of buying new ones, and his idea was adopted.

Post Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek gave awards to Orr, fellow DOL employee Donald Youngren and retired Chief Warrant Officer Joe Wikoff for their suggestions in ceremonies June 4.

Combined, their suggestions will save the government $88,000 annually.

Wikoff was awarded a check for $1,500 for a suggestion that will save the government $26,202.08 annually.

Youngren received a check for $1,395.77 for his suggestion that saved the government 23,192.91.

Wikoff's suggestion was to permanently issue red smoke grenades to ranges and training sites.

Wikoff was assigned to the Ammunition Supply Point, 608th Ordnance, 36th Engineer Group, when he submitted the suggestion.

He said that the issue and re-issue put wear and tear on the grenades, and if grenades were permanently issued to each range, it would save a lot of trouble.

"I'm glad they adopted my suggestion," he said, "because there were a lot of grenades rendered useless because of that."

To net his award, Youngren proposed a replacement for an old manual system of identifying repair parts.

At the ceremony, Mahek said something that seems insignificant may not be, and recommended putting in suggestions.

"That's what this program is for," he said, "and we want your ideas."

Those ideas will be easier to process once the new automated system, presently being installed here, is in place.

This system, Idea Express, will support submitting, processing, tracking and reporting under the Army Ideas of Excellence Program.

Marion Jackson, with Installation Management Division, Office of the Chief of Staff, Army Headquarters, Department of the Army, was here installing the new program.

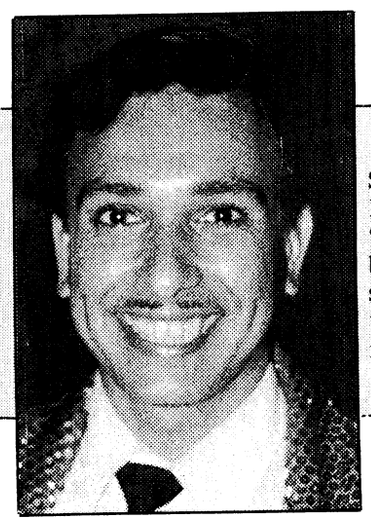
According to Jackson the "Good Ideas" system is being developed to provide installations with the ability to process their own ideas.

She said significant idea processing improvements will occur at the installation. The most significant is the amount of time it will take to process an idea.

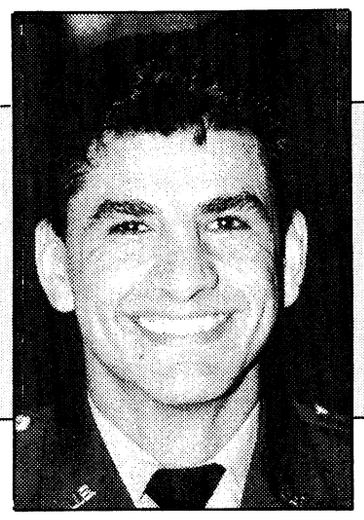
"This doesn't mean an adopted suggestion will be recognized overnight," Jackson said. "But, it will be done a lot faster."

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:
What's the best part of performing in the Army Soldier Show?

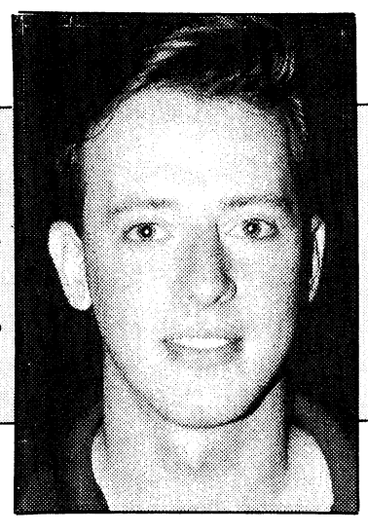


Staff Sgt. Roger Garcia, Bad Kreuznach, W. Germany — "Pleasing the audience is the best part of performing in the show. It gives me great satisfaction when I see people with tears in their eyes."



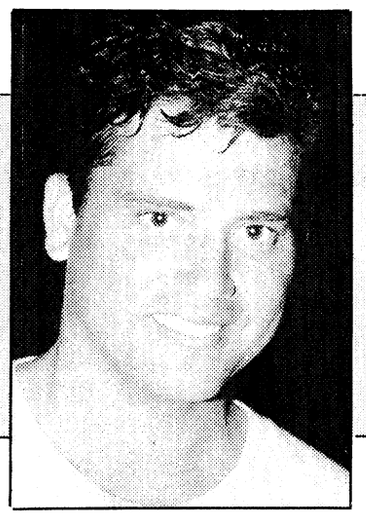
1st Lt. Santos De La Rosa, Fort Ord, Calif. — "The best part of performing in the show is the professional company. It gives a person the opportunity to serve his country and perform at the same time.

Spec. Mone' Arnold, Fort Bragg, N.C. — "There are so many great things about performing in the show. It's very satisfying to perform for all the soldiers, plus I'm getting a chance to do what I majored in, in college which is music."



Sgt. Ralph Letourneau, Camp Humphreys, S. Korea — "The best part of performing with the show is the experience a performer gains. I've never sung on stage before. I'm getting to do what I like to do best."

Pfc. Toni Branaugh, Darmstadt, W. Germany — "The best part of performing is the reaction of the soldiers. It's really hard work, and you wonder if it's worth it sometimes. When you hear the audience, you know it's worth it."



Spec. Gregory Baron, Fort Benning, Ga. — "The best part of performing with the show is the traveling. You have the chance to see different posts and meet new people."

Snively in Delta Force?

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Emma, (Mrs. Spec. Snively), saw an article in The Bayonet about the Delta Force recruiters looking for applicants here.

"Clyde," she said, "this would be great for you. Here's an opportunity to do something exciting and to travel."

"I have all the excitement I can handle, dodging Rugby players, weight lifters and Ms. Editor," I told her.

"That's just the point," she said. "Now you can get out of that rat race, and apply your talents to a more worthwhile pursuit."

"But those guys go where they use real bullets. I might get hurt."

"I'm sure you'll be well-trained for any emergencies, and while I know there are some rare circumstances where terrorists breach security, security is really quite good."

I had no idea how Emma knew anything about terrorists or security. I mean we're talking top secret stuff here. We're talking about soldiers who are born with Velcro for lips, soldiers who think saying, "good morning" is a breach of security because you just told someone what the current weather conditions are.

But Emma continued to drive on. "I really like their uniforms," she said. "You'd look adorable in one of those little suits."

I wasn't sure if she was talking desert cammies, jungle fatigues or what, but I was sure wondering where she'd been to see a Delta Force trooper and how the heck did she know that was what she was looking at.

Like, they don't wear little tags saying, "I belong to Delta Force." Maybe she was beginning to read "International Defense Review," or something.

"I've really grown accustomed to my BDUs," I said.

"Oh, Clyde," she said, "you're impossible. If you don't want this for yourself, think of your family."

"Uhn?" I said, wondering how the heck my family was going to benefit from my being either on standby or gone constantly.

"Think of the pay. Think of all the traveling we'll get to do, too," she said.

I had to agree the extra money for being on jump status would be helpful, but as far as I knew, those Delta Force guys were usually stationed in just one or two locations, so there wouldn't be much traveling for the family . . . but then maybe she knew something I didn't. Had she been talking to a recruiter?

"Well," I said, trying to appease her, while still getting out of talking to a recruiter, "they've got some tough physical requirements. I might not be able to pass the test."

"Oh pshaw, you'll do just fine. After all, you passed your Army physical. They certainly can't expect more from you than the Army."

"You'd be surprised," I said. "They're very demanding."

"But it's nothing you can't handle," she exclaimed, full of confidence in me.

"I'm not sure," I muttered, not wanting to let her down and make her think I was less manly than I was.

"Clyde, Clyde," she continued, "if women can pass the physical, surely you can."

"Whoa, hold on, wait a minute! Did you say women?"

"Why yes, I did. I know if they can pass that test, then you certainly can."

"Wimmen!" I screamed.

"There ain't no wimmen in Infantry or Rangers or Special Forces, and there certainly ain't none in Delta Force."

"Why Clyde, you're wrong, I've seen them selling tickets, lugging baggage and serving food."

"Gull darn Emma," I said, completely spent. "You're talking about Delta Airlines. They ain't recruiting. Who's recruiting are those guys who work for some secret outfit.

"About the only people who know what they do are a few generals."

"You mean the Delta in The Bayonet wasn't an airlines then?" she asked, disappointed.

"Sorry," I said.

"Does that mean no discounts on tickets to go visit friends then?" she asked.

"Sorry," I repeated.

"Oh Clyde, how can you be so hard-hearted," she said, spinning on her heel and walking off in a snit.

Today's fathers deserve respect

By Wade Shell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Looking at the calender got me to thinking, Sunday is Fathers' Day.

Did you know there are about .5 babies born in this country every minute?

That's a whole baby every two minutes.

Assuming that three out of four of those are born to families who already have children, we must conclude that 22.5 new fathers are created every hour.

That's a lot of cigars being passed around by inexperienced young men who now are entitled to be called "Father."

What an awesome word this has become in the English vocabulary. "Father." All knowing, all seeing, all paying — "Father."

I wanted to know more about the subject, so I went to several authorities. The hospital was my first stop. They couldn't tell me much more than where babies come from. I already knew that.

A couple of psychiatrists spread the professional jargon so thick, I got even more confused.

In desperation I turned to the all-knowing source of Clyde "the omnipotent" Snively — after all, he's a dad.

He explained to me that these things run in cycles, and that fatherhood is on an upswing right now.

Well, now that I had that cleared up, I asked him how these recently-opted-for progenitors learn the basics of their newly-chosen profession.

For instance, how does one of these new dads know when to buy the newborn his first ball and bat, or when to start looking for a prom dress.

Clyde's unequivocal response was, "They just know, that's all."

As Clyde and I sipped potentially-deadly, sugar-and-cream-treated coffee, I reviewed the qualifications I felt were inherent with the title of "Father."

Clyde pointed out that there are many sources for the innovative new father.

There are many books a new father can turn to, such as the series from Mr. Spock, that is if he is raising a space cadet, or special seminars for parenting and the like, Clyde said.

"Those are dandy ideas, Clyde," I said, "but they really don't get to the heart of the issue of 'fatherhood.'

"You see, being a father is much more than just parenting," I said.

Today's father is expected to be provider, protector, supervisor, housekeeper, baby-sitter, cook, taxi service, and a host of other things that used to be associated with being a mother.

It takes a real man to be a '90s father.

Face facts, the hours aren't that great. There isn't much incentive in pay, and those diapers . . . well, we'll just leave those out of this. I could go on, but you get the idea.

All new fathers must look beyond the facts, and push beyond the boundaries of human understanding.

Sacrificing more than just creature comforts, the new dad must press into the unfamiliar territory of giving without receiving.

He will have to quit the Saturday bowling league to spend more time with this recently-formed "family."

But, with a smile on his face and an apron on his waist, the newest father in America boldly must take the title of "Superdad," and carry on as though he knows exactly what it is he's supposed to do.

Which, I suppose, leads me to my point. New fathers are really special people.

They deserve respect. Being a father, a new one especially, takes not only hard work, but research, ability and not a little dedication to the job.

All fathers must be the best parent they can be.

It may just be the toughest job you'll ever love.

Happy Fathers' Day.

Post worker lauded by TRADOC

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's civilian personnel officer has been recognized for outstanding service by the Training and Doctrine Command.

Gunter

Theresa. A. Gunter was given the Sustained Leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration Award.

Gunter was recognized for continuing to perform her supervisory and managerial skills in an exemplary manner.

TRADOC officials say she has demonstrated this by having received at least three other TRADOC CPO awards.

Gunter's awards include Leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration and for leading the Outstanding TRADOC Civilian Personnel Office.

Gunter, who has been CPO since May 1984 said she was surprised that she received the award.

"I didn't expect to get it again," she said, "but, of course, I'm delighted that I did."

Gunter said she doesn't feel as if the award belongs to her.

"There is no way I could win this award without my staff," she said, "They are terrific. This is their award, not mine."

Dr. John Derhammer, a member of the post CPO staff was presented with the Technical Excellence in Civilian Personnel Administration award.

"He created a very comprehensive training program at minimal cost," she said. "As a matter of fact, it resulted in a multimillion dollar savings to our office," Gunter said.

She said he is a great innovator, thinker and planner.

TRADOC officials say all the awards reflect high standards and excellence in leading and caring, customer service and affirmative action.

The individuals and organizations made significant program achievements and technical contributions that aided mission accomplishment and resulted in cost reductions and increased productivity.

The awards were presented at a conference at Fort Monroe, Va., June 5 to 7.

TQM prompts improvements at DENTAC

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Dental Activity is using Total Quality Management to increase savings and service.

Seven members of DENTAC have developed significant ideas since the implementation of TQM, according to Maj. George Smith.

Gail Cook took the initiative to develop the TQM training program. She obtained the supplies necessary to develop an effective program throughout DENTAC.

Co-worker Paula Dansereau came up with the idea on how to structure the organization and designed the TQM logo.

Through their organization efforts, other DENTAC staff members were able to use their skills in other ways.

Duty Driver Spec. David Negich came up with an idea on bulk shipping lab boxes, which will save DENTAC $1,600, Smith said.

Two sergeants, Tammi Broom and Tarry McDonald put their heads together and came up with consolidation system for supply, which will eventually save thousands of dollars.

Another suggestion came from Dental Hygienist Josie Swecker.

"Swecker is saving DENTAC $692 each year," he said. "She's doing this by cutting out unneeded amounts of cups sent to post schools for the fluoride program."

Capt. Dennis Simpson, a dentist, did a study on TQM.

Smith said this will save DENTAC $3,000 annually.

It all adds up. At DENTAC, suggestions, prompted by TQM, have resulted in significant improvements overall.

ACOE evaluators size up Benning

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Communities of Excellence Team toured Fort Benning June 4 through 6 to compare post facilities and services with other installations of like size in the Training and Doctrine Command.

First on the agenda for the evaluators was an overview of Fort Benning's ACOE initiatives and a discussion about customer service success stories.

After the initial briefing, the team began its tour of facilities within all the major units.

They visited the U.S. Army Infantry School, Directorate of Community Activities, the Medical Department and Dental activities, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Directorate of Civilian Personnel, Staff Judge Advocate, U.S. Arny Infantry Training Center, 36th Engineer Group, School of Americas, U.S. Army Information Systems Command, Noncommissioned Officers' Academy, The Infantry Board, Adjutant General, Commissary and the Army-Air Force Exchange Service.

The ACOE crew had something good to say about each place they visited.

If the team members were particularly impressed by an area, they awarded the traditional ACOE hat immediately.

The evaluators handed out more hats at the outbriefing.

Although the ACOE team could not say exactly how Fort Benning fared against other installations, there were many good remarks made about the facilities here.

The outcome of the evaluation is forthcoming.

To get there, go north from Fort Benning on I-185 to Exit 5; turn right on Manchester Expressway and proceed quickly to the left lane; turn left at the light into the first entrance to Peachtree Mall and get in the left lane; take a left at the light and proceed down the access road to the parking lot near "Katie." Do not go into the Krystal Parking lot. Park in any parking space outside the fenced-in area.

The group will meet in the single story office area directly behind "Katie." Cameras may or may not be authorized; this will be addressed after arrival.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Sgt. 1st Class Glenn Geesaman, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was recognized by Capt. Gary L. Cooper, M.D., medical director of the Blood Bank, for his contributions to the Blood Bank at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Geesaman, an instructor in the Maintenance Management Division, started giving blood while in Airborne training in 1970.

He said the worst part of donating blood is the finger stick, after that it's easy.

He can speak as an expert. He was given a certificate by the MACH Laboratory recognizing him for donating four gallons of blood.

One gallon of blood requires eight donations, so Geesaman has shared the "gift of life" 32 times.

He's started on his fifth gallon, having given for the 33rd time since the certificate was printed.

When asked why he's given so much, Geesaman said that he met and befriended two brothers when he first came in the Army.

The three went through Basic and Advanced Infantry Training together, after which the brothers went to Viet Nam.

One of the brothers did not come back, and Geesaman said he initially donated blood in memory of the friend's contribution to his country.

He has continued to donate blood because he likes to help others, and this is one way he can do so.

He says he encourages others to give blood, as well.

While he was stationed in Hawaii, Tripler Army Medical Center needed blood in an emergency situation.

Geesaman and each member of his platoon who was eligible to donate, about 30 soldiers, went in convoy to the hospital to give blood.

Geesaman has the distinction of being the largest single blood donor seen by any of the staff of the Blood Bank.

He's on levy for Germany in October, leaving a job he said he really likes.

After that assignment, he may retire, but is making no firm decisions yet.

Geesaman and his wife Gail have three daughters; Lisa, 13, Sara, 6, and Jessica, 4.

The staff at the MACH Blood Bank said they will miss Geesaman's familiar face and his unfailing willingness to give "the gift of life."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I'm interested in knowing if there is any way of telling whether or not a company selling a product by telephone is on the up-and-up.

Recently, I have received a number of such telephone calls, and some of the deals sound good.

However, I want to make sure I don't get ripped off.

Any suggestions?

A: Your question indicates that in the back of your mind, you are somewhat doubtful about these telephone sales in general, and most people are.

While in most cases, these calls are made by legitimate businesses, there are a few that are out to rip off the unsuspecting victim.

There are some steps you can take to protect yourself against these swindlers.

The first thing to keep in mind is to never allow yourself to be pressured into making an immediate decision to purchase what is being sold.

Sales personnel usually tell you that unless you buy then and there, you will have no other chance.

Usually, this is not true. What is a good deal today will still be around next week.

Besides, most legitimate companies will respect your desire to think about, and to obtain more information about, an offer before deciding.

If the sales person won't allow you that opportunity, the best advice is to pass up what they are selling.

If you do find the offer interesting, request that the sales person send you written material about the product or service and the company offering it, including a copy of the contract that would be used in the sale.

This will not be a problem for most legitimate businesses.

Swindlers, on the other hand, will balk at providing such information.

Ask questions. Individuals who are in the business of ripping people off love to find prospects who don't know what they are doing.

Ask about guarantees and warranties, and insist that you be provided a copy of all the warranties that will be given in connection with the product or service.

Ask for the complete name and address of the company.

Ask the sales person what state or federal agencies regulate the company and if the company has made any kind of registration with a state or federal agency.

If the sales person gives you a name of an agency, ask him for the address and telephone number of the agency, and indicate that you wish to contact the agency prior to agreeing to the purchase.

Often sales persons will ask you questions about your personal finances.

In particular, watch out for requests for your credit card numbers and bank account information.

Don't give this information unless you have absolutely decided to make the purchase and wish to charge it by telephone.

Many sales promotions involve the offer of "free" gifts or prizes. While many honest businesses use this sales approach, watch out for the ones that require you to pay shipping or handling costs to get the gift.

More often than not, the gift is not worth the shipping and handling costs required.

Again, the bottom line is not to allow yourself to be pressured into an immediate decision, particularly where the offer is simply too good to be true.

If you are subjected to a high-pressure sales pitch by telephone, and the sales person evades answering questions, simply hang up.

Finally, the suggestions above are also useful with door-to-door sales and most any other type of sales situation.

Let your buying decisions be informed and prudent.

If you are able to obtain material or proposed contracts on a possible purchase you are making, the staff attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office will be more than happy to review the material with you.

Chef of quarter creatively turns food into art

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Sgt. Tommy Benbow, 25, plans an ambitious career that includes earning a college degree in business law and honing his skills as a food service specialist with an eye toward eventually becoming a world-renowned chef.

Although many soldiers dream of achieving notoriety in their chosen fields, Benbow's plan came a step closer to becoming reality recently when the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, noncommissioned officer was chosen Fort Benning's Chef of the Quarter.

"Winning Chef of the Quarter at post level is something I've been working toward for quite some time," Benbow said.

"In comparison to an Infantryman, it's the same as being selected Fort Benning Soldier of the Quarter for me."

Benbow shares credit for winning the title with his wife, Stacie, who gives him motivation, encouragement and support in all of his endeavors, he says.

Preparing food is more than a job for Benbow.

"Working with food is a type of art that allows me to be creative," he said. "I like to prepare food for the soldiers. When I see them enjoying the items I've prepared, I know I'm doing something right — whether I win an award or not."

Benbow proudly displays the seven oak leaf clusters on his Army Achievement Medal ribbon — all received during his six years as a food service specialist.

"I believe you should give your best effort in everything you do," he said. "It doesn't matter whether you're a cook or a tanker. If you give it your all, you'll be a winner."

Sgt. 1st Class Alvin Glenn, battalion dining facility manager, gives Benbow high marks as both a soldier and a food service specialist.

"Sergeant Benbow is fully capable of performing any task I give him, and he makes sure to do it right the first time," Glenn said.

"My top goal in the Army is to become a warrant officer in food service, and I'm sure I'll make it someday," Benbow said. "Until then I will conscientiously give 110 percent of myself for my fellow soldiers."

Faith School students represent Georgia at National History Day competition

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Five students from Faith Middle School traveled to the University of Maryland Monday to represent Georgia in the National History Day competition.

Eight-graders Danny Segal, Ty Poe, Christy Herras, Pat Lawrence and seventh-grader Sean Jordan are submitting their group media project on the history of parachutes.

Segal will also be competing individually.

The group project, entitled "Parachutes: An Odyssey in the Air," centers around the evolution of the parachute and its technical and social impact on mankind.

According to Pam Tate, a Faith School teacher and co-sponsor for the program, this is the third year the students have competed in the competition but the first time they were able to use local resources.

The resources Tate spoke of are that of The School Brigade, namely 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, and 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry, to which the Parachute Packing Branch is assigned.

Tate said this is a prime example of total community involvement.

"TSB Commander Col. Jimmy Jones made everything available to the students," Tate said.

"He set up interviews with the Silver Wings and allowed them to tour the parachute packing branch."

He even arranged for the students to talk with some of the Army's first parachutists, she said.

Mary Barnette, a Faith School teacher and co-sponsor said 1st Bn., 507th, Commander Lt. Col. Mark Lewis was equally helpful.

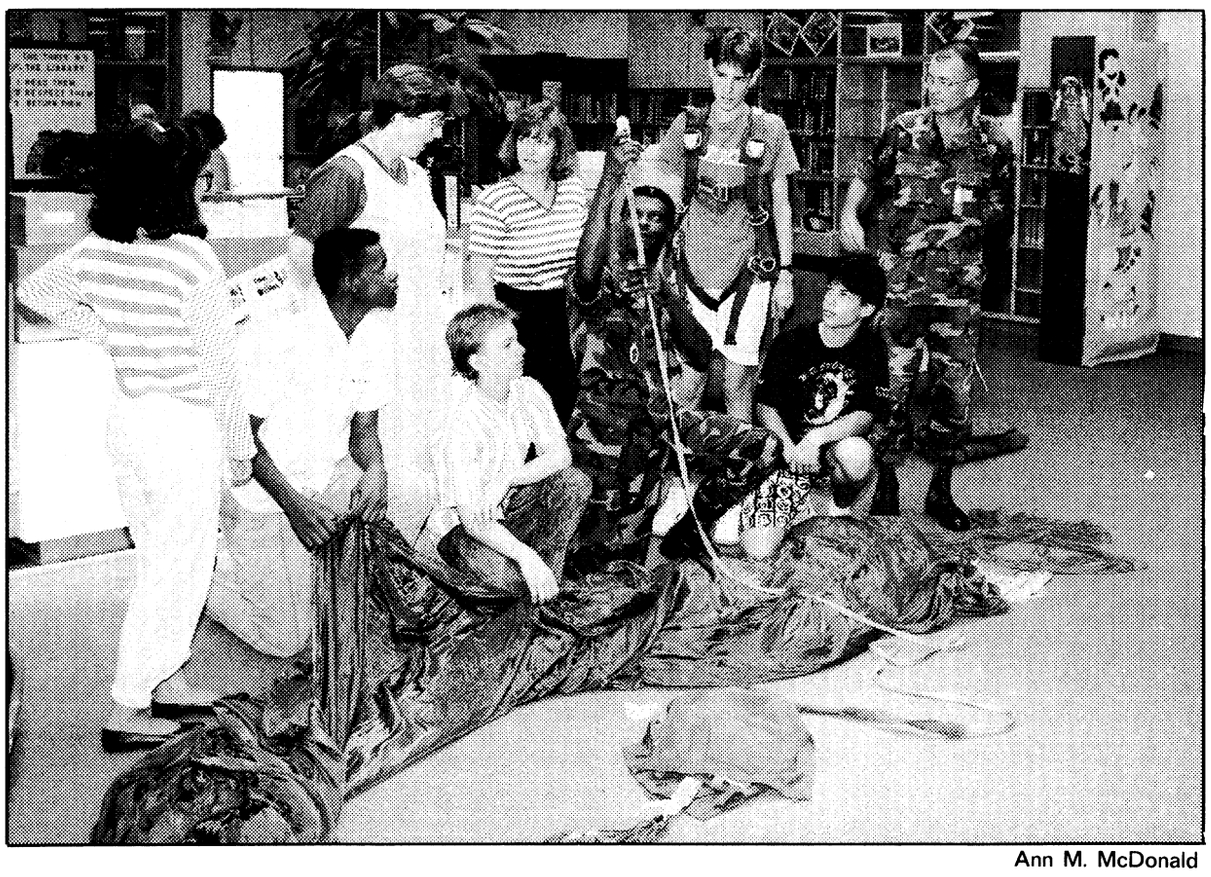
"He allowed the students to video tape reenactments involving equipment within his unit and personally came to speak at the school," she said.

The bottom line, however, is the students.

The number one requirement is that they do the entire project themselves.

Tate said they put more than 500 hours in after school to make the video just right.

"They have traced the parachutes back to the Emperors of China," she said. "In their footage they show its evolution and many different uses today."



Ann M. McDonald

Col. Jimmy Jones, commander of TSB, demonstrates to Faith School competitors the deployment of a parachute.

Barnette and Tate said they have really learned a lot about parachutes.

"We have to ask them questions about different things," they said.

Tate said the hard work is complete but, they've also gained something else.

"All of us were a little bit frightened of parachuting at first," Herras said, "Now we're all ready to jump."

The seventh annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning body building contest was June 9 in Marshall Auditorium at Building 4.

Ten men and three women competed.

John L. Salvetti, commander of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, captured several awards in the lightweight division, being chosen "Best Poser" and "Most Muscular."

Salvetti also walked away with the trophy as the lightweight class winner and was named "Mr. Fort Benning" for 1990 when he edged out the heavyweight class winner, Esau C. Bright III.

Salvetti gives much of the credit for winning to his wife Siggi, for coaching and mental encouragement.

Earnest Morgan and Walter Bunyea were also of great support in preparation for the contest, Salvetti added.

"Body building has come a long way. It is no longer a sport for only the men. It is also growing in popularity for all ages."

"If people are well disciplined in their workout, diet and motivation, they have all of the qualifications to become serious body builders," Salvetti said.

Leon Johnson placed second in the lightweight class, with third place going to Willie J. Grider.

Bright placed top in his weight class in the heavyweight division. Karl Harrison placed second, and Richard Matoszczak placed third.

In the women's lightweight division, first place went to Yolanda B. Geoggins.

Geoggins was named "Best Poser," and "Overall" winner of the female division, and was named "Ms. Fort Benning" 1990.

"I very much enjoy the Fort Benning competition. It is a drug-free contest that gives the amateur a chance of winning," Geoggins said.

Mary D'Ostroph placed second in the women's lightweight division.

In the women's heavyweight division, weighing in at 116 pounds, Karen Alexander placed first.

"I encourage all women to exercise and lift weights. It keeps you in the best possible shape and greatly improves your health for child birth," said Alexander, who is expecting a baby in January.

"This is the best show we've had to date, and I'm looking forward to next year's show with even greater expectation," said "Speedy" Austin, contest director.

Elliott, Talladega still hold record

Talladega Superspeedway

Despite claims in victory lane by network announcers, Arie Luyendyk's impressive victory in the recent Indianapolis 500 was not the fastest 500-mile automobile race in history.

That distinction still belongs to the 1985 Winston 500 at Talladega Superspeedway, won by Bill Elliott.

Elliott covered the 500 miles at an average speed of 186.288 miles per hour, compared to Luyendyk's 185.984 mph.

Mechanical problems made Elliott's run even more impressive.

A broken oil line 40 laps into the race put the Coors/Melling Thunderbird almost two laps down to the leaders, but Elliott made up the distance without benefit of a caution flag, racing lap after lap at speeds nearly four miles per hour faster than his closest competitors.

Elliott's reaction to nearly losing his record was much the same as it was when he won it.

"I never thought much about anything like that when I was running. I just knew I had to make up almost two laps, and the car was running great. I mean, it would fly," recalled Elliott.

Elliott went on to win the Winston Million at the Heniz Southern 500 at Darlington later in 1985, the only time it has been done.

Looking ahead to the DieHard 500 at Talladega on July 29, Elliott reflected on another happy moment.

"Winning the pole at Talladega for the Winston 500 meant a lot to our team, especially since we'd always done well there.

"Then, for a couple of years, we were like so many other teams, looking for the right combination," noted Elliott.

"But, like I've always said, you don't keep thinking about what you've done in the past, whether it was good or not.

"But still," said the redhead from Dawsonville, "with the competition as tight as it is today, its possible my record could be broken.

"You get a couple of guys running good, pushing each other, and a race with no cautions, and who knows?"

Elliott enters the DieHard 500 as one of the former champions, having won the race in 1987, and is one of the 19 winners the event has produced in its 21 years.

Reserved seat tickets for the DieHard 500, as well as for the Talladega ARCA 500K July 28, are on sale now at the speedway ticket office.

Chaplains graduate from pastoral program

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A shepherd two thousand years ago, had about the same kind of day he would have today.

For the most part sheep are content to graze in one special place in the field all day long.

Yet one by one, they will leave their spot to seek out the shepherd for a pat on the head and a gentle nudge of reassurance and acceptance.

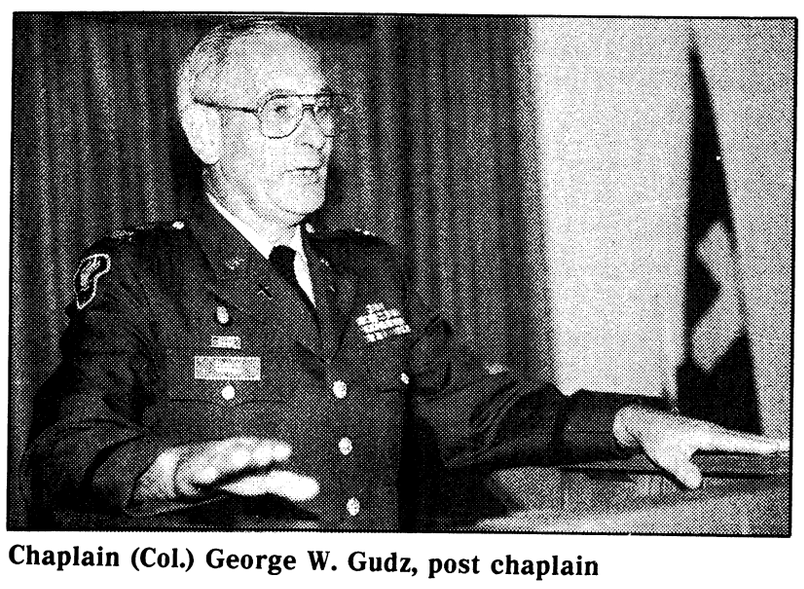
Fort Benning Post Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz used the story of the caring role of a modern day shepherd as the foundation of a speech to the graduates of the Clinical Pastoral Education program.

"You have learned to be good shepherds — to lead, not drive the flock."

Gudz told the chaplains that even though they have spent months learning to recognize how people feel about themselves and each other, the first thing they need to do when approached by someone in need is to be like the good shepherd.

They first need to give others assurance and acceptance before they can hope to help those in need.

The CPE Center, at Custer Terrace Chapel, is the only community program of its type in the Army.



Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz, post chaplain

Only five active duty Army chaplains, mid-point in their careers, are selected each year.

This program is considered one of the best methods for enhancing the pastoral aspects of ministry.

Graduating chaplains are:

Chap. (Maj.) Paul E. Clark, assigned to the Family Life Center, Frankfurt, West Germany.

Chap. (Capt.) Edwin E. Bowen; assigned to the Alcohol/Drug and Hospital Center at Tripler Hospital, Hawaii.

Chap. (Capt.) Richard Garrison, replacing Chap. (Lt. Col.) Donald McSwain as the Infantry Center Chaplain, Fort Benning.

Chap. (Capt.) Arthur C. Pace, assigned to Fort Leavenworth Confinement Facility, Kan.

Chap. (Maj.) David E. Penland, assigned to National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

New chaplains reporting in July are:

Chap. (Capt.) Roger L. Armstead.

Chap. (Capt.) John H. Bjarnason Jr. Chap. (Capt.) Wayne E. Harris.

Chap. (Capt.) John R. Houser.

Chap. (Capt.) Ronald Lawson.

Reflections Reflections Reflections

In 1926, the era carried a memorable confession of a college senior concerning his desires for fatherly companionship. The desires of young men seem as timely today as they did then.

1. I wish I could remember one Fourth of July, or one circus day, or one canyon trip, in which my father had joined us boys, instead of giving us the money and equipment to go, while he and mother stayed home, and made us feel guilty by working while we played.

2. I wish I could remember one evening when he had joined us in singing, or reading, or tussling, instead of always sitting so quietly with his newspaper by the reading lamp.

3. I wish I could remember one month, or week, or day even, when he had made purposeful work out of drudgery by planning the farm work with us, instead of merely announcing each morning what that day's work would be.

I wish I could remember one Sunday when he had bundled us all into the buggy and taken all to church together, instead of staying home while we went in the morning, and leaving us home while he and mother went in the afternoon.

5. I wish that I could remember just one talk in which we had discussed together the problems and facts that trouble every growing boy, on which his clear and vigorous viewpoint might have shed such light and comfort, instead of leaving me to pick up the facts haphazardly as I might, and to solve the problems as best I could.

And yet, my conscience would cry shame were I to blame him, for no man could ever be more devoted to his family, more anxious for their welfare, more proud of their success.

His example has been a beacon to us. He just didn't know — and there is the pity of it to me — he just didn't know that we needed him. He didn't know that we would rather have his companionship than the land he could leave us — that some day, maybe, we might make money for ourselves, but that never can we make for ourselves the memories that might have enriched and mellowed and molded our lives.

I can't see a fathers' and sons' outing without a lump in my throat.

Soldiers Show visits Fort Benning

Photos by Ann M. McDonald

Staff Sgt. Angel Deluna and Pfc. Stephen Rhodes make adjustments on the sound equipment for the U.S. Army Soldier Show.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It wasn't Broadway, but for 90-minutes performers in the U.S. Army Soldier Show "Excitement '90," made the audience feel as if they might be there.

The soldiers performed a musical extravaganza at the Sand Hill Theatre June 5 and 6.

Spec. Gregory Baron, a Fort Benning soldier, touring with the show, sang a solo in the opening number and made many more appearances throughout the show.

It was a program that had something for everyone. Baron, performed modern pop, country and a 1950s number.

The Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtles and Batman pranced around on the stage much to the delight of the children in the audience.

Popular rap numbers caught the attention of One-Station-Unit-Training Soldiers, and the patriotic grand finale brought everyone to their feet.

All of this included changes in lighting and costumes, as well as stage set-up, which was done by soldiers.

These soldiers were selected from a field of 1,500 soldiers. The selected soldiers perform with the group for six months. The performance at Fort Benning marked the halfway point for the tour.

Baron said they spent the first six-weeks putting the show together.

"The show was built around the talent we had," he said. "If something didn't work, we dropped it. If it worked, we kept it."

Baron pointed out that the talent in the band had a lot to do with how smoothly setting up the show went.

"We have a tremendous set of musicians," he said. "Actually, the whole cast is great, but having a good band is a bonus."

Besides learning individual numbers, each member of the crew was taught to set up the 38,000 pounds of equipment used for every show. Baron said a normal day on the road consists of driving to an installation, setting up the equipment, doing a sound check, a run through, then the actual performance.

"It's a lot of work," he said, "but, I wouldn't trade it for anything."

Baron said cheers from the audience and meeting new people make it all worthwhile.

Performing before his home audience was a definite boost.

"I feel like there is a lot of support for me here," he said. "It was good to be back even if it was just for a couple of days."

Members of the U.S. Army Soldier Show perform during the grand finale.

Springer School to host summer drama camp

Springer School of Theatre Arts

There's a day camp in Columbus this summer but don't look for canoes, horses, basketweaving or sing-along marshmallow roasts.

It's a drama camp, and the only gear needed is a creative mind and an active imagination.

The Springer School of Theatre Arts will offer the two-week session, in which campers develop a variety of theatre skills, actually developing an original showcase production from scratch and performing it for an invited audience on the final day.

The camp is directed by Springer Director of Instruction Mary MacMillan who is also the theatre's Director of Children's Theatre.

Playmaking I is for youngsters 2 to 8 years old.

It is an active hands-on theatre experience in acting, song and dance, character play, creative dramatics, costuming and set construction and props.

This colorful theatre workshop promotes a positive, encouraging approach to the performing arts that stresses cooperation, teamwork and the artistic value of individual ideas.

Playmaking I is perfect for either novices or experienced young performers.

The camp runs Mondays through Fridays, July 30 to Aug. 10 from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. The fee for the session is $65.

Playmaking II is an unusual camp that mixes age groups for a total experience in acting, directing, script-writing, costuming, set design, play promotion, promotion management, and live-performance techniques.

Adults, teens and children have an opportunity to work together on creating an original showcase production that will be performed on the final day.

Each student will participate in developing and performing the presentation.

Since a wide age-range will participate in this Day Camp, it's an ideal opportunity for children, parents and grandparents to have a memorable creative experience together and discover the thrill of live theatre production.

There will be a great number of performance assignments and opportunities, so Playmaking II is appropriate for all levels of theatre training, background and ability.

Playmaking II is for ages 8 to adult and runs Mondays through Fridays, July 30 through Aug. 10 from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

The fee for this camp is $75.

The Springer offers Family Tuition Fees for the Summer Drama Camp with special rates for families registering two or more students.

Call the Springer for details.

For more information on the Springer School of Theatre Arts Drama Camp, call the Springer School at (404) 324-3601.

Cavezza takes command

Benning welcomes new chief of Infantry

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It seemed as if the two generals had stepped back in time. Only the field and soldiers were different.

This is the second time Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire has handed over command to Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza on a Fort Benning field.

The first time, both men were wearing "eagles" on their collars, and Cavezza assumed command of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Now, Cavezza is the newest member of the fraternity of men called Infantry chiefs. Six others were present at the ceremony.

Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. John W. Foss, a member of that elite group, passed the colors of the U.S. Army Infantry Center to Cavezza during a ceremony on York Field June 19.

Foss was the first to take his turn at the podium to address the many soldiers, guests and spectators on hand for the event.

He applauded the job Spigelmire has done during his tenure as commander of the Infantry Center and praised his wife, Diane, calling her the "epitome of an Army wife."

Foss also gave her a Department of the Army Outstanding Civilian Service Medal for meritorious service.

Foss then turned his attention toward Cavezza, the newest soldier in his command, and warned him about the work that awaited him.

"You've picked up the title of the conscience of the Army," he said. "As we look into taking care of soldiers with the right types of programs over the next few years, you have my full trust and confidence in your ability to command Fort Benning."

Next, it was Spigelmire's turn at the podium. He also expressed his confidence in Cavezza and praised the soldiers and the community. "We have a great relationship with the (people of this) community," he said. Together we work to make it a better place."

The newest chief of Infantry then took his place at the podium noting how great it felt to come back to his "Infantry roots."

"There's a sign at the gate that says, 'Excellence Begins Here,'" he said. "I submit that excellence is also sustained here and that Fort Benning and excellence are synonymous."

He added that excellence is necessary during these challenging and complex times.

Cavezza said he looks forward to the challenges that lie ahead and he knows that Fort Benning will play a vital role in building a smaller but better Army with Infantry as its centerpiece.

"I dedicate myself to the readiness of the Army and its soldiers, to their welfare, and that of their families," he said. "It's a great day to be in the Army at Fort Benning."

Hospital urges visitors not to block ER entrance

During the renovation of the Emergency Room at Martin Army Community Hospital, the main entrance is being used as the Emergency Room entrance for all vehicles except ambulances.

When the circle is completely blocked, it prevents those who are unable to walk more than a short distance from being dropped at the door.

The inability to pull up to the entrance can cost precious minutes for someone who needs immediate medical attention.

Currently, the Military Police are patrolling the area. Drivers who block the area will be given tickets.

22 earn EFMB

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

After two weeks of arduous training, all that stood between 22 Medical Corps soldiers and the coveted Expert Field Medical Badge was a 12-mile road march, which had to be completed in three hours while wearing full combat gear.

To give the soldiers some incentive, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire joined them on the road march.

Before the start of the march, Spigelmire questioned the soldiers about their ages. "How many of you are over 40?" he asked.

With no response, he continued to drop the age until a soldier raised his hand.

"I'm 51 years old," he announced. "I'm going to finish this road march, and so are all of you."

That was all the incentive the soldiers needed. Three hours and 12 miles later, all 22 stood in formation on Sergeants Major Field proudly awaiting the man who toughed out the last leg of their quest to see if they really had what it takes to wear the EFMB.

Spigelmire pinned on their badges in a short ceremony June 15.

Later, he spoke of the importance of medics in today's Army and on the battlefield.

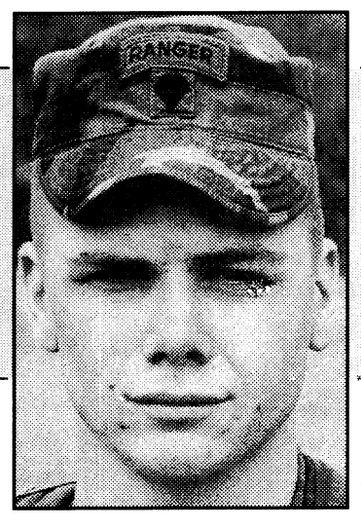
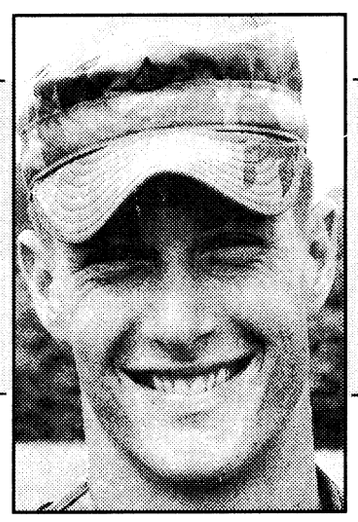
OPINION

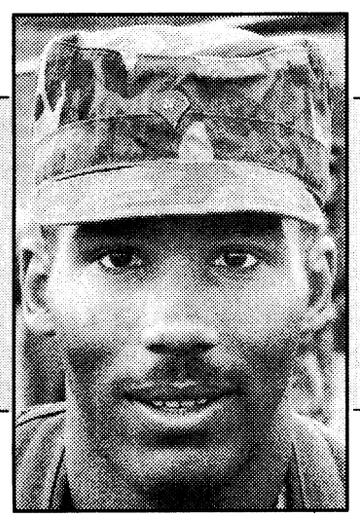
VARIOUS VOICES:
What was the most difficult part of earning your Expert Field Medical Badge?



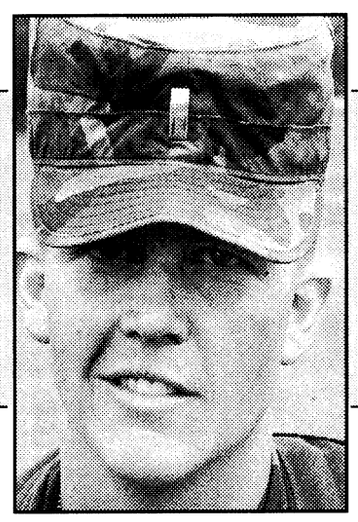
Spec. Joey Fink, HHC, 75th Rgr. Regt. — "The most difficult part was the Emergency Medical Treatment lane. A lot of people lost their chance for an EFMB there. You had to react like you would in combat and really perform."



Pfc. Brandon Goldstein, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. — "The Evacuation Lane was the most difficult part for me. It was my last task. I had heard a lot of people were failing, so it made me a little nervous."

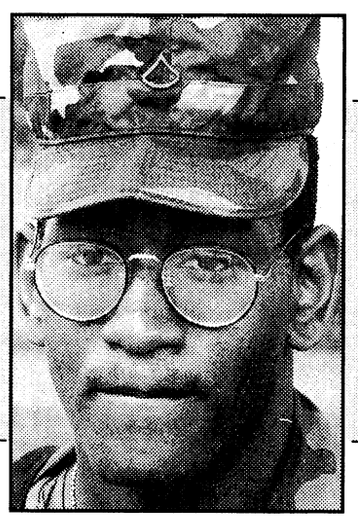


Spec. Theodore Young, 498th Aeromedical Evac. Co., 34th Med. Bn. — "I think the most difficult part about earning the EFMB was the 12-mile road march. You have to be in really good physical shape to complete it in the allotted time."



2nd Lt. Gary F. Alderson, 1st Bn., 18th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. — "The Emergency Medical Treatment lane was difficult. It's a battlefield scenario, and you treat patients in accordance to the seriousness of their injury. If you don't do it right, you're out of there."

Pfc. Terrence Shaughnessy, 1st. Bn., 18th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. — "The most difficult part of earning the EFMB was the written test. You had to know all the book material and take the test before you could continue with anything else. A lot of people failed."



Pfc. Wayne Burnam, 690th Med. Co., 34th Med. Bn. — "I found the Emergency Medical Treatment lane difficult. There are so many things you have to remember. It's really important to pay attention to detail when you are doing that task."

Anti-flag burning amendment may not be right thing to do

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week we celebrated the 213th anniversary of our nation's flag. The week after next, we commemorate the 214th anniversary of our country.

In the meantime, we read about scum who think it's the cool thing to do to burn our flag.

I haven't really figured out why they have this need. Were they potty trained before their time, did their older brothers or sisters take all their toys and never give them back, or are they being ignored by society and figured burning America's symbol was a way of attracting attention?

Well, they certainly are getting attention. Much more than they deserve. But what's their point?

Did the United States do something to offend them? If so, what?

Do they think this is a way to get arrested and go to court so they can challenge the constitutionality of anti-flag burning laws?

I personally think it's unfortunate that we have to have laws to protect our flag from the likes of these miscreants.

I also find it hard to take that we green-suiters are sworn to protect their rights to make this public statement.

Until such a time that flag burning becomes a federal offense, until such a time the flag is protected by a constitutional amendment, we must do just that.

But guess what? I'm also opposed to such an amendment. As despicable as I find flag burning to be, as asinine as I find the actions of these people to be, I'm still opposed to such an amendment.

First, such an amendment, instead of adding to our freedoms, as all the other amendments have done (except for prohibition, which as we know was repealed), would limit our freedoms.

I think that would set a bad precedent, would start us off in the wrong direction.

Sure, an anti-flag burning amendment is the emotional and politically savvy thing to do at this time. But that doesn't mean it's the right thing.

What message are we conveying to the rest of the world with such a restrictive amendment?

One of Hitler's first laws was to outlaw flag burning.

I realize we're a long way from Nazi Germany, but all journeys must begin with a single step.

Further, I don't think we need to memorialize these creeps by passing an amendment in their memory. That's giving them too much credit.

I think there are other things we can do. First, we can ignore them. If no newspaper, radio or television station reported on their activities, there wouldn't be any sense in doing what they're doing, so they'd quit.

And finally, if we need any laws passed, let's pass a law legalizing our right to burn the flag burners. Just kidding of course.

School's out; summer's in

By Wade Shell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thursday, we entered into summer 1990.

Officially, summer began this week.

Temperatures have already begun to climb steadily toward levels not fit for human existence, and my BDUs began to wilt.

Summer brings the annual revival of certain Alice Cooper songs and the return of Bermuda shorts (called "jams" by the "younger generation").

Summer is also the time for lemonade, skateboarding, camping, bikinis, hiking, biking and, of course, vacations.

The best part of summer for the children is "SCHOOL'S OUT. They walk around sing-songing, "School's out. School's out. No more homework."

Rug rats, cookie crunchers and curtain climbers have all received paroles for the next three months.

Released to the custody of their reluctant parents, these small veterans of elementary school have already invaded homes full time.

The peace and stability of the families of "our hope for the future" are pushed to the breaking point. (Let's hope the "breaking point" doesn't refer to their little necks.)

As a youngster, I recall that during the summer, my Dad always seemed to work late at the office.

For mothers who don't have careers, gone are the tranquil days of keeping house without three or four children rushing in, dripping water from the Slip-n-Slide, or yelling "oops" when a half gallon of Kool-Aid drops out of their tiny hands and paints the kitchen linoleum raspberry.

The hot, lazy days of summer are shattered by the incessant cries of, "There's nothin' to do," "I'm bored," or, "My brother's looking at me!"

There's Mom cringing in the corner, looking longingly at the calendar, waiting for school registration to begin.

Most of us love our children dearly. We can't wait for them to get home from school to tell us "what they've learned."

Without school, however, we have to become creative. We have to keep them occupied for 82 more days.

This is somewhat akin to a company commander formulating a training plan for his troops. Face it, if the soldiers are bored or discontent, there's going to be trouble.

Here are a few suggestions to help parents relieve the post summer stress syndrome (the official name for the summer "blahs").

Take them to the pool. There are several on post. It's free and there are always lifeguards. It will give the grown-ups a chance to get a tan and cool off, too. All you need is an identification card.

I met a mother at the pool who said she and the neighbors take turns taking the children to the pool.

If you can work out a deal such as this with your neighbors and friends, you can get a couple of hours to yourself, and the little ones get to go to the pool quite often.

Check with Youth Activity Center. It offers a wide variety of programs all summer to include swimming, baseball, softball, T-ball, soccer, football, basketball, cheerleading, rifle teams, tae kwon do, ballet, tap and jazz, arts and crafts classes, teen and preteen dances and scouting.

Sound good? The telephone number is 545-3070. The center is on McIver Street.

Taking into consideration that the children will be home quite often anyway. Keep them busy.

The worst possible thing to do is let them become "boob tube vegetables," or "Nintendo know-it-alls."

Give them chores. Give them books. Give them fun-to-do projects. Creative children are most often raised by creative parents.

It's not going to be easy. But who said being a parent is easy?

LETTERS

Reader: Everyone should take a stand against drunk driving

This is in response to Clyde Snively's article "Travelers stand in line to become statistics."

His comments about Mothers Against Drunk Driving — "Was that a passing fad" and "Are we bored with safety, with stamping out drunk drivers" — is the reason for this letter.

Thousands of innocent children and adults are murdered by drunk drivers every year.

MADD does an excellent job of trying to make the public aware of the problem and trying to get stricter laws passed for dealing with these murderers.

But, everyone needs to get involved and take a stand against drunk drivers.

If people see someone leaving the Officers' Club, NCO Club, bowling alley, and so on and they are intoxicated and going to drive, offer them a ride.

If that doesn't work, call the Military Police. Don't turn and look the other way. That phone call could save someone's life.

Kim Sabo

MADD chapter still involved in Project Red Ribbon

I felt I must respond to Clyde Snively's article entitled, "Travelers stand in line to become statistics," which appeared in The Bayonet.

As the President of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, Muscogee County, I wish to answer your question of "What happened to the MADD campaign to sport red ribbons on antennas, etc."

I am very proud to inform you that MADD in Columbus had a very productive red ribbon campaign last year.

A press conference last December at Columbus Square Mall kicked off the campaign and had tremendous support from the citizens of Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and surrounding areas.

MADD especially had support from the U.S. Army. The U.S. Army Band played at the press conference and a "Bradley" was on the scene adorned with a large red ribbon.

More than 200,000 ribbons were given out throughout Columbus; more than two million statewide; and more than 40 million nationwide.

It pleases me to still see vehicles with red ribbons tied to them. I find it hard to believe that Mr. Snively have not seen any.

If he had contacted us before he wrote the article, I don't see how he could have questioned our involvement in Project Red Ribbon.

We feel we are making a difference in the attitude of the public concerning impaired driving, and we will continue to conduct awareness programs, provide education, and assist victims of drunk-driving crashes.

Lt. Col.: 2nd MASH is "real" hospital

It is my intent to clarify a statement quoted erroneously in the June 8 issue of The Bayonet entitled "2nd MASH: field hospital is like early Christmas."

The last paragraph could lead to the assumption the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital and other field hospitals are not capable of providing definitive health care.

The 2nd MASH is in fact a real hospital. It is a deployable medical system capable of providing resuscitative surgery and inpatient care.

This is no change from previous capabilities. The current force modernization process allows our mission to be accomplished through the use of state-of-the-art equipment and associated technique.

As part of the Army Medical Department team, we are committed to "conserve the fighting strength."

Engineers return from Honduras

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, has just completed the first part of a six-month commitment in Honduras, Central America.

Troops from Company A redeployed to Fort Benning June 1 and Company B departed for its two-month rotation the same day.

When the commitment is fulfilled A, B, and C companies will have spent two months on engineer projects in the country.

According Co. A Commander Capt. David Smisek, his soldiers built five Central American tropical huts, two latrines, shower facilities, a basketball court, playground, two kitchens, one school and 200 desks.

They repaired wooden decking on two bridges and improved five miles of gravel road.

Of all the projects, the repair of the bridges had the most immediate impact on the people, Smisek said.

"The bridges were in pretty bad shape, and thousands of people depended on them to get their crops into town," he said.

"There was a danger of vehicles actually falling through."

He said the bridge definitely will have the most impact on the people.

However, the most personal satisfaction was gained when the unit completed the playground, Smisek said.

"When we saw the joy on the faces of the children playing on the playground we built, it made everyone feel wonderful," he said.

He explained that it was particularly satisfying because they weren't sure the Honduran concept of a playground was the same as an American's.

Although the Engineers spent a majority of their time working on projects for the Honduran people, they did spent some time relaxing.

Smisek said they played softball games and challenged the Honduran soldiers to a couple of soccer games.

A club was built at the base camp, and movies were shown regularly. He added that various board games were also popular.

While half of Smisek's company was in Honduras, the other half remained at Benning.

The troops that remained here spent the time remodeling the barracks and repairing items damaged in the past rash of bad weather.

Smisek said his troops did an exceptional job both in Honduras and Fort Benning.

"It's good to be a whole company again," Smisek said. It's hard to get to know all of your soldiers when half of them are thousands of miles away."

MACH experiencing telephone problems

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Telephone repairs at Martin Army Community Hospital and the Dental Activity have been drastically curtailed due to budgetary constraints and Health Services Command's prohibition on spending medical funds for base operations.

Many telephones are now either out of order or function intermittently.

The caller hears the usual ring and is under the impression that no one is answering. Unfortunately, the activities being called are not getting the ring.

Hospital officials realize this is frustrating to patients and regret the inconvenience.

Here is a list of numbers known to be out of order and alternative numbers that can be used to reach the areas listed.

Bust unveiling

Retired Col. Ludlow King and Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire unveil a bust of Gen. J. Lawton "Lightning Joe" Collins in a brief ceremony at the National Infantry Museum June 14. King served under Collins in World War II in the Normandy invasion, and he designed and sculpted the bust to memorialize Collins. After accepting the bust on behalf of the Infantry Museum, Spigelmire made remarks about Collins' exceptional career. Before taking command of VII Corps in 1944, Collins commanded the 25th Inf. Div. during the Guadalcanal campaign against the Japanese. He was Chief of Staff of the Army from 1949 to 1953, and he retired in 1956.

Call TSA Hotline to report fraud, waste and abuse

Troop Support Agency

The TSA Fraud, Waste and Abuse Hotline is open to anyone who has dealings with Army commissaries: customers, employees and vendors.

"We tried to follow up on one allegation about abuses in the identification card tests at a certain commissary check-out, and the lady who called in the complaint left her name and phone number," said Lt. Col. David Brower, chief of the assistance and investigation branch of the Inspector General's Office of U.S. Army Troop Support Agency at Fort Lee. ". But she didn't leave her area code, so we can't get back to her. And she didn't mention the post either.

"So with more than a dozen commissaries trying out ID card checking at the cash register, we're stymied."

Brower explained how necessary it is for callers to the TSA IG Fraud, Waste and Abuse Hotline to "give enough information so that an IG can focus on the problem."

The toll-free number (outside Virginia) is 800-368-3403.

In Virginia, the number is (804) 734-2943. From government phones, call autovon 687-2943.

A recording will take your message. When you leave your name and number, someone from the IG Office will call you back, often within the hour, to acknowledge your call.

Brower said every call is logged and an inquiry is started.

"We handle command climate cases, such as supervisor/employee harassment complaints. We look into civilian leave problems.

Sometimes the IG gets a complaint that should be fixed somewhere else, say, the finance, or the civilian personnel office.

Where appropriate, we try to refer the case to the agency or activity best suited to handle the matter, such as: Criminal Investigation Division, Equal Employment Opportunity Office and, in some instances, back to the command from which the call came."

Alberta Eddy, the TSA investigator/inspector resource administrator, who logs the hotline calls and initiates the inquiry documentation, said for the January-March period, "We got about 11 calls a month. A recording answers the phone, 23-hours a day."

The IG office has 44 cases in various stages of resolution, with an inspection team now on the road bringing in about 37 more cases from face-to-face interviews.

The 70-odd open cases are initiated from mail-ins, walk-ins, letters and referrals from other agency IGs, Eddy said.

A blue poster with yellow and orange letters calling attention to the hotline, and holding mail-in post cards, appears in TSA commissaries around the world.

"Use of the hotline means people out there see things that might be irregular and are concerned enough to report them," Brower stated.

He cited a recent case reporting pork loins that were discarded. "It looked like all those pork loins were being tossed out for no reason.

"But after we got all the facts, it turned out that the refrigeration had broken down over the weekend and they were potentially unsafe to eat."

Brower noted that the hotline is "designed to provide a means for commissary employees and patrons to report fraud, waste and abuse. We welcome all calls, even if it turns out there wasn't any fraud, waste or abuse."

From October 1989 to May 1990, Eddy said, there were 143 alleged wrong-doings, and 186 requests for assistance.

Brower added, "The IG attempts to take an unbiased view of a problem. We are an extra set of eyes and ears for the general and we try to keep him apprised of the command climate, employee morale and esprit and customer concerns.

"The preferred method for resolving problems, however, is through the supervisory chain. If persons in the chain of command have been given an honest chance to resolve issues brought to their attention and have failed to do so, the individual should then report the matter to the IG," he concluded.

DEH is leader in quality

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff reporter

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing has welcomed Total Quality Management with open arms.

Already a leader in the Project SPIRIT Program, the directorate has just directed some of those same energies toward TQM, according to John L. Baggett, Deputy Director of DEH.

Baggett said these newly directed energies have already resulted in the directorate winning the SPIRIT award for the first and second quarter of fiscal year 1990.

"Project SPIRIT savings have mounted to more than 3.6 million dollars so far this year," he said. "Continued emphasis and application of TQM are key ingredients in this success."

Baggett said one of the ways they have yielded some savings is through cutting in half the time family quarters are unoccupied due to maintenance and repair.

"This saves us over $70,000 a year," he said.

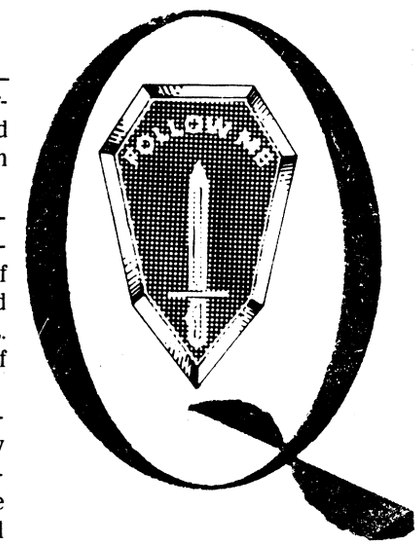
One other change implemented by DEH hasn't saved any money, but the results make a world of difference. "We simply made sure we had a larger supply of guest towels we provide for hotel guests," he said.

"This is just part of doing it right the first time, and it makes a big difference."

Reviewing service contracts helped DEH identify some services that could be reduced without having any effect on the customers.

Baggett said that a prime example is emptying refuse dumpsters.

"Why empty the dumpsters three times a week when it only needs to be done twice," he said, "This alone will save $15,000 a year."



Saving and service is the name of the game, and DEH expects to provide better service now that the balance of its workforce has completed the Quality Awareness Experience Training.

Missilemen demonstrate air defense firepower

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Nine soldiers stalk in a travelling overwatch formation from the tree line, constantly alert to the threat of air attack.

The soldiers take cover when rounds from the opposing force are heard and begin to take fire. Within seconds, he gunfire comes to a halt as an enemy aircraft is spotted, and the soldiers radio for backup.

A high mobility, multi-purpose wheeled vehicle plows up and screeches to a halt as two air defenders dismount and deploy the Stinger missile and lock on an opposing enemy aircraft. The simulated fire is recorded as a hit, and the soldiers recover with a round of applause from the grandstands.

The above demonstration was open to the public for all to enjoy at Fergusson Range. It was an operation designed to show guests and spectators the capabilities of the infantry squads, tactical vehicles and weaponry.

The Stinger Platoon has 16 two-man teams assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade. According to 1st Lt. Barry Ezell, platoon leader, the Stinger missilemen are the only air defense artillery soldiers at Fort Benning.

"The Stinger Platoon is divided into four sections. Its mission is to provide the entire air defense umbrella for the brigade's four maneuver units," Ezell said.

"Each team consists of a team chief and a gunner, who operate interchangeably. The team chief's job is to communicate with the supervisor, identify enemy aircraft and signal the gunner to fire on target.

"The gunner also searches and scans for unfriendly forces and makes the final decision on whether or not to fire the missile," Ezell said.

The term "Redeye" refers to the infrared sensor in the missile's nose that enables it to locate the source of heat from aircraft passing overhead, lock onto that heat source and engage the target.

"The soldiers in my platoon are 16-Sierras, trained to operate both the Redeye and Stinger portable anti-aircraft missiles," Platoon Sergeant Staff Sgt. Calvin Cockran said. "That's because the Army is gradually replacing its stock of Redeyes with the more versatile Stingers."

"We fired four live Redeye missiles today and had three proximity kills and one near-miss," Ezell said. "The Redeyes that we used date back to 1967, giving us a much greater challenge to hit the Ballistic Aerial Target, greatly reducing the percentage rate of the kills."

Until the Army retires the Redeye, the 16S soldiers will continue to train on that system as well as the Stinger.

"This was the first time I had ever fired the Redeye," said Pfc. Kenneth Brown. "It was very exhilarating feeling the missile thrust from the launch tube mounted on your shoulder. When you have such a great amount of firepower on your shoulder and the capability of taking down an enemy aircraft at your fingertips, it gives you quite a rush."

"Top Gunner" Pfc. Andrew E. Edmondson added, "Being the first to fire, I didn't know what to expect. When I saw that I had a direct hit, it made it worth every ounce of practice I had ever put into it."

Ezell gives much of the credit for the success of the live-fire to Cockran and Staff Sgt. Michael Delaney for their hours of on- and off-duty time building and molding and training of men of the Stinger Platoon.

"The Stinger Platoon holds an 88 percent average on the Skill Qualification Test, and NCOs hold a 90 percent, 19-point above-Army average. That shows the tremendous amount of pride these young men have when they say "First to Fire," Ezell said.

Soviet analyst discusses combat tactics at SOA

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

A Soviet analyst from the Center for Army Tactics at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., was a guest instructor at the School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College recently.

Maj. Susan A. Snyder discussed Soviet combat tactics with the 44 students.

Snyder began with elements of tactics including Command and Control procedures, Military Doctrine, organization and execution of an offensive and fire support of an offensive. Snyder then used a "scaled model of a Motorized Rifle Regiment in the attack" to demonstrate how the elements work together.

"The model is like a snapshot of what an active Soviet motorized rifle division looks like as it moves during an offensive operation," said Maj. Orlando Rivera, instructor, Combined Armed Division, Department of Joint and Combined Operations at the School.

"The students can envision the logical location of Soviet combat forces and the concept of echelonment and the time/space relationships, which gives them insight into Soviet war-fighting doctrine," Rivera said.

Snyder, who teaches the same class to CGSC students at Fort Leavenworth, said the instruction is important because it gives the students an idea of Soviet combat techniques, which allows them to make comparisons with U.S. doctrine.

The School's CGSC students, 14 from the U.S. and 30 representing 14 Latin American countries, receive the same instruction, based on U.S. doctrine, as students at the Fort Leavenworth course. Currently, the students are studying Combat Operations.

"Combat Operations is the premiere course subject for CGSC," Rivera said.

"It prepares future leaders to command or support field units from battalion to corps levels during wartime.

According to Rivera, guest speakers add credibility to the course instruction because they are subject matter experts in their respective fields.

Col. William F. Daughterty, director of the Center for Army Tactics Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, opened the two-month Combat Operation phase of the course May 2.

Other guest speakers have included Brig. Gen. John Stewart Jr., assistant deputy chief of staff for Intelligence and Lt. Col. William McGaha, Department of Sustainment and Resourcing Operations at Fort Leavenworth.

Shooters wrap up competition

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit recently wrapped up a month of intense competition from interservice to regional and world-level matches.

Maj. James Meredith won the gold recently as a member of the first-place U.S. Rifle Team in the English Match team competition of the Sixth Masters of Strasbourg, France.

Meredith and U.S. team members Bill Dodd and 1st Lt. David Johnson won the event with a score of 1,780, just four points ahead of the second-place French team. The Czechoslovakian team placed third.

The U.S. team placed second behind the Czech team in the 3x40 event (three positions, 40 shots each). The French team placed third.

The U.S. shooters faced 80 competitors from 11 nations in this competition.

Spec. Martin David Edmondson earned a gold and silver at the Waldorf International Running Game Target in West Germany.

Edmondson won the 50-meter event and placed second in the 10-meter air rifle event in this match, which the Running Target National team fired prior to going on to the three World Cups in Suhl, East Germany, Munich, West Germany and Zurich, Switzerland.

Edmondson was also a firing member of the first-place U.S. team in the 50-meter and 10-meter events.

The U.S. teams for Running Target, International Pistol and International Rifle did not fare as well in the World Cups.

These matches drew the top competitors in the world and set the stage for some fierce competition.

In the rapid-fire pistol events, Pfc. Eduardo Suarez made the finals in Munich with a score of 585.

Suarez finished eighth with a score of 773 after the final.

However, in the same event in Suhl, Suarez landed in 20th place with a score of 583.

Shooters in the International Rifle disciplines faced similar competition.

Sgt. Brad Carnes made the final in the three-position event in Munich with a score of 1,159 and finished in eighth place.

Spec. Tom Tamas shot the same score but finished in ninth place after tie-breaking procedures.

A new world record was fired in this event by Rajmond Debevec of Yugoslavia who fired 1,179.

USAMU's Staff Sgt. John Chubb recently earned the title of Tri-State Champion following a service rifle championship match at Quantico, Va.

Chubb shot 1,777 with 93 center shots to beat out more than 180 civilian and military competitors at the match.

The U.S. Army team also finished as the best of 36 teams that fired in the match.

Team members Chubb, Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Gilbreath, Sgt. Eric Uptagrafft, Sgt. Vince Greiner and Staff Sgt. Richard Ramos (coach) shot a 1,963.

Sgt. Troy Lawton and Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk cleaned up at the Northeast Running Game Target Championship in Binghampton, N.Y.

Lawton and Delk placed first and second respectively in each of the three individual events and combined forces to win all three team events.

USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class James Reiber placed third in the 10-meter air rifle event and Pfc. Bruce Bright placed third in the 50-meter mixed event in which slow and fast moving targets are presented at random.

At the Pre-National RGT Championship in Quantico, Va., Delk placed second in the 50-meter mixed and 50-meter 30 plus 30 events (30 slow-moving targets followed by 30 fast-moving targets). Bright placed third in the 30 plus 30 event and Reiber placed third in the mixed event.

Sgt. 1st Class Alger Mullins is the 1990 Interservice Skeet Champion.

Mullins also led the U.S. Army team to a first-place finish in the Interservice match with Pfc. Shawn Dulohery and Pfc. Shane Schwickerath.

197th offers reenlistment incentives

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade who are eligible for reenlistment may receive up to two semesters or quarters of duty-exempt time to further their civilian education in addition to the other incentives for reenlisting.

The 197th Infantry Brigade College Incentive Program enables soldiers to study full-time during either on- or off-duty hours for high school diplomas, vocational training certificates or college degrees, according to Sgt. 1st Class Jack C. Nelson, chief of 197th Infantry Brigade Reenlistment.

"The CIP is available to soldiers who reenlist for either current station stabilization or combat arms unit of choice — the 197th Infantry Brigade — options," Nelson said.

"Under the current station stabilization option, the only stipulation is that you enroll in college within six months of reenlistment," Nelson said.

"That's because you can only be guaranteed that amount of time before possibly receiving orders to relocate."

On the other hand, soldiers who elect to stay in the 197th as combat arms unit of choice must reenlist for five or more years to become eligible for up to two semesters/quarters of duty-exempt time to pursue civilian education goals, according to Nelson.

"Again, you must enroll in time to begin the first semester of college within six months after reenlisting," he said.

"The second semester or quarter will be coordinated with the unit commander, but must begin no later than the 18th month of stabilization."

The combat arms unit of choice option is especially beneficial because the Army doesn't have to pay to move soldiers to other posts and because it helps increase readiness and unit cohesion, Nelson said.

Eligibility criteria for the CIP include approval from the company commander and acceptance at an accredited institution within commuting distance of Fort Benning, according to Nelson.

"The brigade has been working on the CIP since January 1990, and during May about 13 soldiers reenlisted for the program," he said.

Detailed information about the program is included in the brigade commander's Policy Letter No. 19, which includes a memorandum of understanding between the commander and the soldier.

Medics prove they are experts in their field

"They not only treat the wounded soldiers in battle such as the Army's most recent operation in Panama," Spigelmire said. "But, they also provide support for all of our training and treat our family members as well."

He applauded the efforts of the 22 soldiers standing before him and exited the podium.

Included in the 22 standing before him were two medics who took part in the Panama Invasion and soldiers from all over the Southeastern Region.

According to Master Sgt. Phillip T. Howard, Noncommissioned Officer In Charge of S-2 and S-3, 34th Medical Battalion, the size of the formation was considerably larger.

"One hundred-twenty-eight started testing on June 4," he said. "They came from as far away as Fort Jackson, S.C. to attempt to earn the badge."

Howard said the large attrition rate is normal.

"A large amount is lost on the written test," he said. "If we don't lose on the test, we lose them on the Emergency Medical Treatment lane."

Other tasks involved in earning the badge are a Army Physical Fitness Test, land navigation, weapons qualification, nuclear-biological-chemical operations, communications, survival tasks, evacuation of the sick and wounded, litter obstacle course, and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Winner of 34th Medical Battalion's Best Medic competition Pfc. Brandon Goldstein, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment was one of the soldiers who earned his EFMB.

Goldstein said the competition served him well.

"Many of the events in the competition were the same as the EFMB but more abbreviated," he said. "By the time EFMB testing rolled around,I was really prepared."

Serving in combat also prepared the medic for the testing and made him the source of information for other medical personnel testing for the badge.

"Because I have actual experience on some of the tasks,other soldier's came and asked for my advice," Goldstein said. "I tried to help them as much as possible on things they were having problems with."

With testing complete and the badges awarded, it's back to work for Goldstein and the 21 others who earned who can now be called experts.

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Argonne National Laboratory is the production site for scientists developing a safer breed of nuclear reactors.

The new reactors could reduce the radioactive lifetime of high-level nuclear waste from tens of thousands of years to 200 years.

The Department of Energy has the responsibility for determining a permanent site to house high-level waste for the nation's nuclear fuel, and reducing the radioactive life of nuclear waste could help in the process.

Presently, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission must certify that any waste placed in a repository will be safe for 10,000 years.

In a standard reactor, uranium fissions or splits to produce power, while a small amount of it is transformed into plutonium and an even smaller amount into actinide (series of chemically similar, mostly synthetic, radioactive) elements.

Plutonium and actinides, heavy, highly-toxic, carcinogenic elements, hold their unsavory characteristics for as long as 100,000 years.

DOE scientists believe a new type of nuclear power plant, known as the Integral Fast Reactor, can safely generate the nation's electricity without the undesirable waste products associated with existing plants.

A DOE-funded demonstration plant in Idaho is expected to start up in less than a year and run for five years in an effort to prove IFR is superior to the traditional light water reactors, which presently generate about 15 percent of the nation's electricity.

Compared to light water reactors, DOE scientists expect the IFR to efficiently burn nuclear fuel, capture more heat, waste less uranium, and produce less toxic waste, while reprocessing most of its fission products.

Research engineers at Argonne also feel that safety is another attractive feature of the Integral Fast Reactor.

In the event of a cooling failure, as was the case at both Three Mile Island and Chernobyl, the IFR would stop reacting and turn itself off.

Perhaps the most compelling feature about the new reactor design is its ability to separate out both the plutonium and the actinides from spent nuclear fuel and recycle them back into the reactor.

The actinides and the plutonium will split just like uranium to produce power and, in so doing, will be destroyed.

The remainder is still high-level waste containing some fission products, but less bulky waste that will decay and lose its harmful effects within 200 years.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Mark A. Gomez
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I recently received a letter from the finance company that holds the lien on my car saying that since I don't have insurance, the finance company will provide me with a policy.

The finance company is mistaken.

I currently have liability insurance on the car, and it is not due to expire for two months.

However, the policy they sent me costs only half of what I am currently paying and I am thinking about canceling my present insurance and getting this new, low-cost insurance. What is your advice?

A. Don't terminate your present policy!

Read and compare both policies very carefully before you make any decisions.

The low-cost insurance your finance company or bank is purchasing is a type of insurance known as single-interest insurance.

Single-interest insurance protects only the finance company, not you. It is not liability insurance, which you must have under Georgia law.

To understand single-interest insurance, you must understand the basics of auto insurance.

There are three common types of coverage available: (1) liability insurance, (2) collision insurance and (3) comprehensive insurance.

Liability insurance protects you — the insured — from lawsuits for personal injury or property damage that you cause to another person or their property.

It does not cover your injuries or property loss.

Collision insurance covers damage to your vehicle from a collision with another vehicle or object while a comprehensive insurance policy ordinarily protects you from other damage not due to collision.

A combination of liability, collision and comprehensive insurance makes up what is called "full coverage."

Full coverage insurance offers the best protection but is also the most expensive type of insurance.

Many car owners try to save money and buy the least amount of insurance required by law.

Since Georgia law only requires car owners to have liability insurance, many car owners only buy that type of insurance.

However, if you finance the purchase of your car under a credit plan, you are usually required to maintain collision insurance on the car until your loan is paid in full.

Financial institutions require you to maintain collision insurance on your car because your car is the collateral for the loan.

If your car is damaged in a collision, the bank's collateral decreases in value.

When you signed the financing contract to purchase your car, you agreed to maintain collision insurance to protect the finance company's interest in the car.

You also agreed that if you didn't maintain collision insurance, then the finance company could purchase single-interest insurance to protect itself and charge it to your account.

If the finance company adds the charge for this insurance to your account, it will increase the amount you have financed with the company.

Finance companies rarely increase the amount of your monthly payment, but rather, extend the length of your loan. In addition, you are charged interest for this insurance.

Furthermore, if the car is totaled, the insurance company will only pay the fair market value of the car.

Today, most cars are financed for three to five years. During the first several years of the agreement, the loan amount is usually greater than the fair market value (blue book value).

This means that if the car is totaled, the insurance proceeds will not cover the amount owed to the finance company.

The finance company may then sue you for the difference (deficiency), and since your car is totaled, you will be without transportation.

Financial companies have a legal right to charge your account for this type of insurance if you only maintain liability insurance.

If you receive a notice from your financial institution informing you that it intends to charge your account for insurance, you should forward proof of adequate insurance to them immediately by certified mail.

If you are unsure of the type of insurance you currently have on your motor vehicles, call Legal Assistance at 545-3281/3281 to make an appointment to see an attorney.

Be sure to bring your insurance policy with you.

Jr. ROTC cadets taste Army life

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

While some teen-agers are spending their summer vacation recuperating from the school year, one group continued their education and went to camp.

This camp, however, didn't consist of marshmallow roasts and sing-alongs. Instead, it consisted of Army chow and cadence calls.

Two hundred high school students from the Third Region Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps visited Fort Benning for the 1990 Cadet Leadership Summer Camp June 11 to 15.

The cadets came from Georgia, Florida and Alabama high schools.

The purpose of the camp, said Col. Bobby L. Moore, director of Army Instruction in Atlanta, is to give the cadets an idea of what military life is about.

Moore said the camp teaches the cadets self-discipline, responsibility and how to help themselves.

"But, we are not recruiters for the Army," Moore said. "The mission of Junior ROTC is to help cadets become better Americans, prepare for college and learn about the military's contributions to this country."

The cadets visited Ranger and Airborne-in-Action demonstrations, fired weapons and received hands-on training on the confidence and obstacle courses, water survival and land navigation.

The obstacle and confidence courses proved to be a challenge for many of the cadets who had to overcome certain fears.

"I was really scared at first," Shakira Robinson from Atlanta said about the obstacle course. "Afterward, I felt good because I had finished the course."

Eve Hudson, also from Atlanta, agreed with Robinson. She said she felt she had to compete against male cadets.

"Now I know that I can do anything men can do, if I put my mind to it," she said.

Besides receiving Army training, each cadet was given the opportunity to be a leader, as well, said 1st. Sgt. Daniel Lederman, an enlisted instructor from Miami.

The cadets were separated into four companies. These companies made up two battalions.

According to Lederman, each cadet served in a leadership position at least once during the camp. Positions ranged from squad leader to company commander to brigade commander. The positions were rotated daily.

Lederman said the camp not only teaches the cadets how to lead, but how to follow, as well. He recalled one incident that proved being a leader isn't for everyone.

He said that one young cadet who after experiencing the responsibilities of serving as a brigade commander sat down at the end of the day and said, "Whew, I'm sure glad I'll be a private again tomorrow."

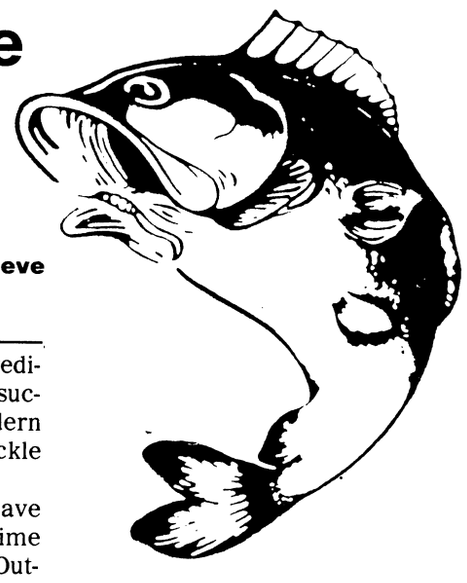
Confidence adds to success



By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Outboard Marine Corp.

The most important ingredient in tournament fishing success is not a fast boat, a modern rod and reel, or an extra tackle box. It's confidence.

"You absolutely have to have it," says Larry Nixon, a longtime member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff and considered by many to be America's most successful tournament angler.

His tournament winnings are approaching the $1 million mark, far above his nearest competitor.

"Confidence is one of those hard-to-define abstracts," he says. "You can't really define what it is because it's a combination of a lot of different things.

"But mainly, I believe it is having faith in your own abilities and decisions. This comes largely from experience, and it grows with success."

One of the most important aspects of confidence, says Nixon, is being able to make a decision to fish a certain area or technique, and committing yourself to that decision.

Many anglers continually doubt their own decisions, and this in turn influences how they fish.

"This is probably the toughest part of confidence," explains the Evinrude pro, "because there are literally hundreds of decisions you can make about where and how to fish on any given day.

"You have to decide what you want to do, then do it. You can change later, of course, but you have to change for a reason.

"Naturally, experience is one of the most important teachers in gaining self-confidence. The more fishing experiences you have, the more decisions you have to make, and each time you make the right decision, your confidence grows a little stronger.

"Eventually, even the bad decisions don't influence your confidence anymore."

Not surprisingly, winning national tournaments helps an angler gain confidence quickly.

The most important win in a pro's career, however, is not always the one that brings the most money or prestige, but rather, the very first win.

"This depends, of course, on the angler and the decisions he had to make in winning the tournament," explains Nixon.

"If a fisherman wins by making his own decisions, then his first win can really help his confidence.

"If the angler is strongly influenced by other anglers, however, if he doesn't really follow his own instincts and simply gets lucky, then the first win won't be as important to him."

Nixon feels guiding on Toledo Bend helped his confidence because it gave him on-the-water experience.

Waltrip feels he's due to win another Talladega DieHard 500

Talladega Superspeedway

In both the 1988 and 1989 DieHard 500's at Talladega Superspeedway, Darrell Waltrip's Tide Chevrolet was arguably the strongest car in the field, but he didn't win either event.

On July 29th, he will undoubtedly have one of the strongest cars once again, and this time he feels the outcome will be different.

"The past two July races at Talladega have been among the most disappointing of my career," noted Waltrip, the three-time Winston Cup champion from Franklin, Tenn.

"I know I had the strongest car in '88, and was probably the strongest again last year, but we didn't win either time.

"My luck at Talladega in those two races was incredibly bad. I didn't know what it's going to take, but things have got to get better."

Waltrip did, indeed, have the field covered in 1988.

He started on the pole and led 123 of 162 laps before his engine expired only 25 laps from the end, leaving him with a 33rd place finish and a broken heart.

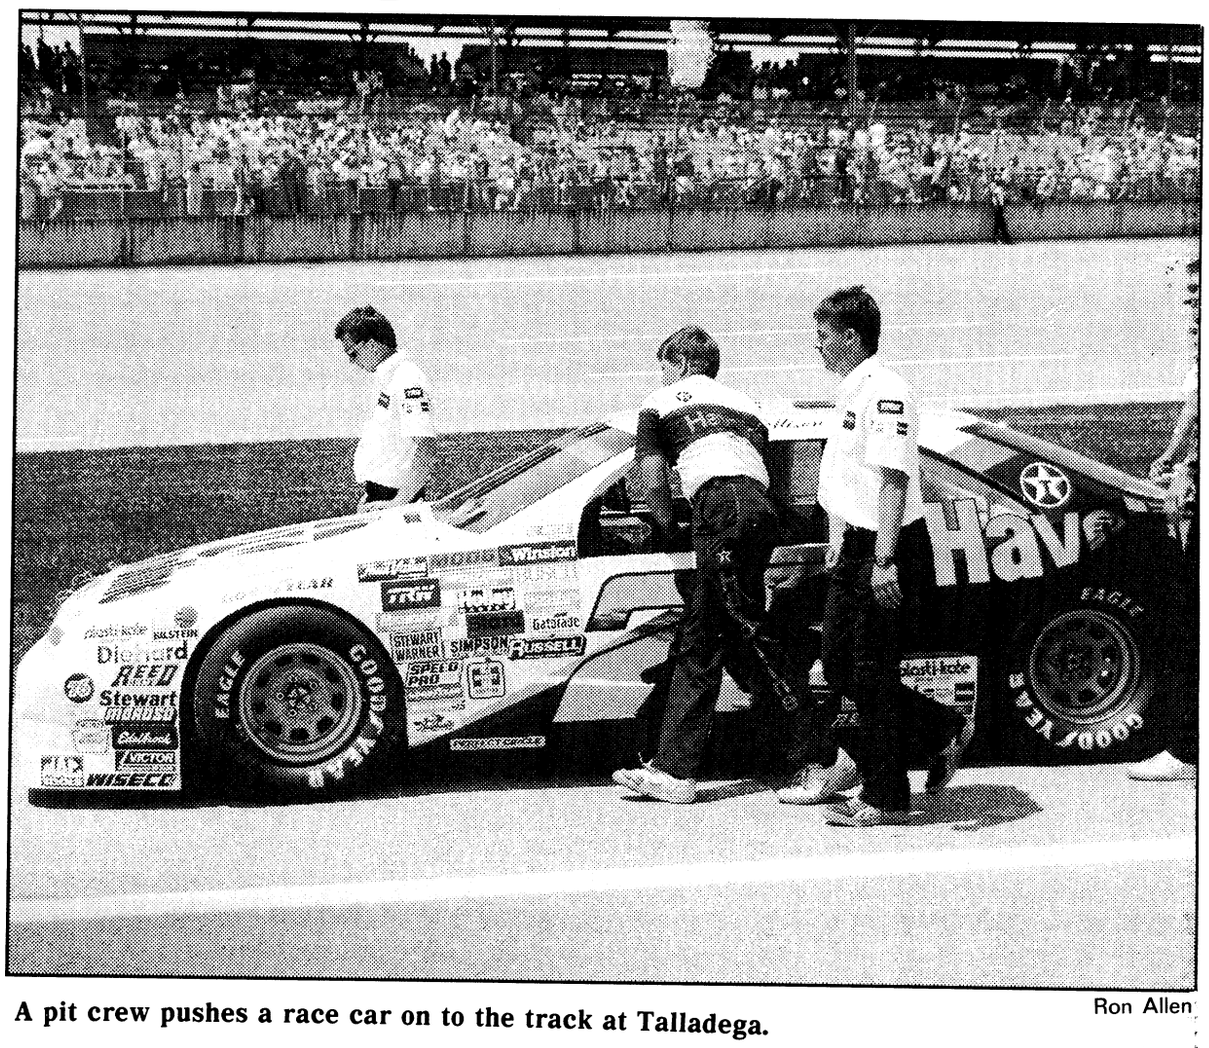
"That was absolutely the best race car I've ever had. We had them covered, no doubt about it.

"I could run anywhere on the track I wanted and pass anybody anywhere," recalled Waltrip. "When that thing lost power, I guess that was the sickest feeling I'd ever had."

Last year, Waltrip qualified second to Mark Martin, but had grabbed the lead when a caution flag came out on lap 12.

As Waltrip exited his pit area following his stop, he was rammed in the rear end by another car.

While not too serious, the accident did require repairs that put him at the back of the field, and Waltrip spent the next 80 laps working his way back to the front of the pack, taking the lead again on lap 102.



Ron Allen

A pit crew pushes a race car on to the track at Talladega.

"But we had used up too much car getting back up front, and when it came down to us and Labonte there at the end, we just didn't have enough for him," declared Waltrip.

Had Waltrip won either of the past two DieHard 500's, he would have become Talladega's all-time Winston Cup win leader by himself, a distinction he now shares with Bobby Allison and Buddy Baker.

He was also the first driver to win the DieHard 500 twice.

"Talladega used to be real good to me, but lately I've been feeling like a jilted lover," noted Waltrip, who has not won at the world's fastest speedway since 1982.

"Maybe I need to start treating her a little nicer. Maybe I could bring some flowers and candy and put it on the start-finish line, and then talk real nice."

Waltrip laughed, then got serious.

"Flowers and candy won't work in this situation. It's going to take horsepower and handling, the same as it always has. Despite what some people might think, I'm not really crazy enough to talk to a race track.

"Of course, if I thought it would work. . ."

Run proceeds send group to Jr. Olympics

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Runners racing in the LaBlazers five-ilometer and one-ile run and walk were able to beat the clock but not the heat.

The temperature soared into the high nineties as race time approached for the runners on the course at Cooper Creek Park in Columbus, Ga.

Although it was a small field of runners the times were still good according to race director Sandy Denham.

Two local runners, Denise Schwab and Pablo Sanchez ran blistering times to win the 5K race with a 16:07 and 19:54 respectively.

Josh Frix won the one-mile with a 5:09 and Demetrical Hixon won the female race with a 6:14.

Hixon is a member of the LaBlazers.

Denham said the proceeds from the race will go toward sending the group to the Junior Olympics.

Members of the group plan to participate in track and field events.

Vietnam vet to speak at ITC Saturday

Dave Roever is illustrated here pulling the pin from a grenade that exploded in his hand.

Burned by grenade, former sailor tells story

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Fear of death, unbelievable pain and complete chaos fill the memories of Dave Roever.

It is of these memories and a story of inspiration that he will share during his lecture Saturday at 9 and 10:30 a.m. at the Infantry Training Center's Theatre No. 3. The public is invited.

This unusual, inspirational story is free.

Not a lot in life is free, or easy. Roever and his family know that.

While serving with the River Patrol Division of the U.S. Navy in South Vietnam, he was horribly burned by a phosphorus grenade.

The explosion sank his boat and he was pinned, still burning, beneath it.

Those who knew him in the early days of his Navy service called him a "religious nut," according to a story in a small comic book designed for youths.

His purpose in speaking to thousands of people a year is to tell people how his faith and God healed him and allowed him to have a purpose.

Roever was hospitalized for 14 months and underwent 15 major operations. He says his ordeal has served to heighten his love for America.

Roever has preached and lectured in 36 nations, and he has had frequent appearances on campuses, in concerts, youth conventions, and churches of many denominations throughout the United States and Canada.

Roever's cause has taken root in literature and sayings, even a catalog of items. Books addressing problems affecting youths from AIDS to drugs, Satanism and drunk driving are some of the causes Roever has used his experiences to combat in a unique, informative way.

Added to the inspirational literature is a line of T-shirts for teens with sayings like: "Cruisin' N Boozin' is losin'" and "I'm worth waiting for!"

Roever's unusual story is told in his autobiography entitled, "Welcome Home, Davey."

Life is filled with stories of tragedies and triumphs, but the story of Roever may touch in a special way the lives of the military and their families.

For more information on this lecture, contact the ITC Chapel at 544-3269.

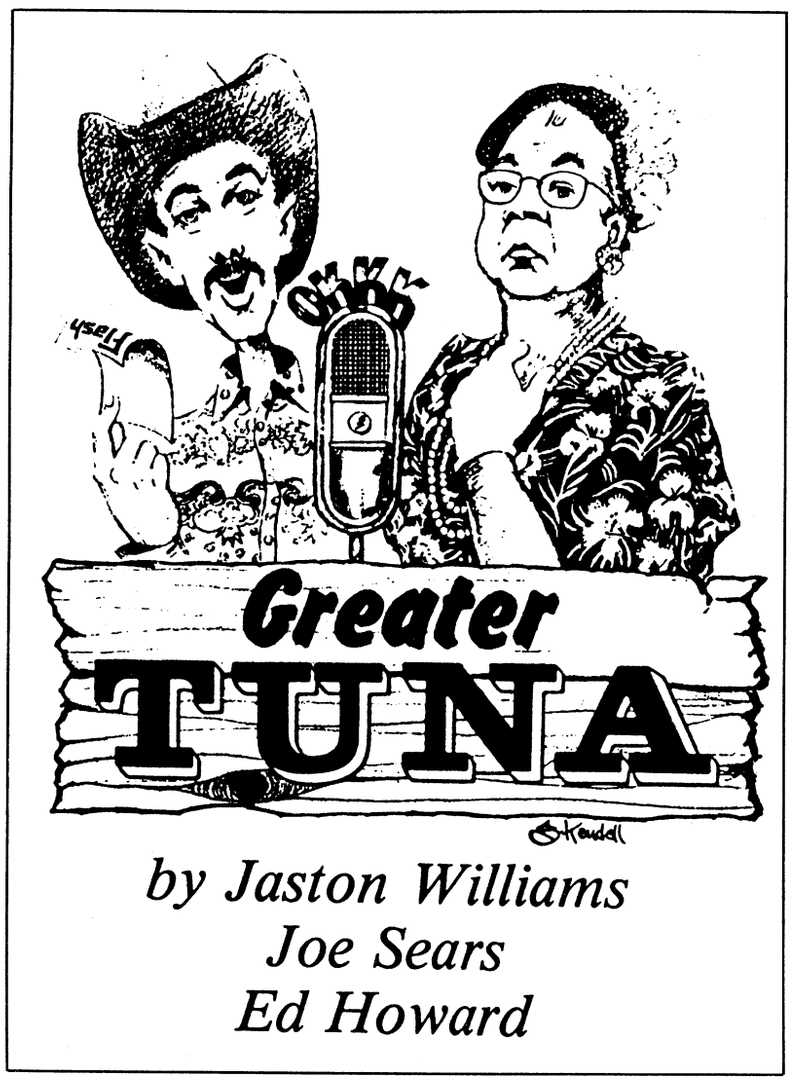
Residents of "Greater Tuna" Invade Springer Studio



by Jaston Williams
Joe Sears
Ed Howard

Springer Opera House

The strange, yet familiar, inhabitants of Tuna, Texas, set up residence at the Springer Studio Theatre Thursday and will be there until June 30 in a two-man tour de force that features the citizens of the Lone Star State's third-smallest city.

Greater Tuna is a zany comedy in which two pliable actors portray the half-crazed and fully-crazed inhabitants of a town in which R.R. Snavely sports a UFO shaped like a giant chalupa, Aunt Pearl Burras goes on a dog-poisoning spree and the Smut Snatchers of the New Order hold a meeting to censor "Romeo and Juliet."

Actors Tom Wentland and George Hiller play all of the 20-odd characters in Greater Tuna, including men, women, children and farm animals.

The characters are switched so lightning fast that back-stage quick-change dressers have to be rehearsed right along with the actors in order to assure that the play does not miss a beat.

Veteran Springer actor Jared Davis directs Greater Tuna, which completes the Springer's 1989-90 Studio Theatre series.

Greater Tuna was written and originally performed by Jaston Williams and Joe Sears, two inventive actors from Oklahoma and Texas who, in 1981, found themselves hungry and out of work in Austin, Texas.

They began playing the show at the down-on-its-heels Paramount Theatre (now majestically restored) and subsequently received invitations to present it in Houston and Dallas.

The cult of Greater Tuna enthusiasts in Texas grew to the point where they were offered a limited run at the Off-Broadway Circle in the Square Theatre and broke box office records there for three years before the actors finally closed the show and launched a successful three-year tour of U.S. regional resident theatres.

Norman Lear then produced a Home Box Office Greater Tuna special, in which Williams and Sears portrayed all of their original characters plus some new, previously unseen material written specifically for television.

This past December, the two actors premiered a sequel called "A Tuna Christmas Carol" in which all of the Tuna residents present a production of Dickens' A Chrismas Carol at the on-again, off-again Tuna Little Theatre where the year before director Joe Bob Lipsey staged My Fair Lady using sets and costumes from South Pacific to save money.

Greater Tuna runs Friday, Saturday Sunday, and June 28, 29, 30 at 8 p.m. in the Springer Studio Theatre.

Patrons are invited to bring box dinners when the house opens for table seating at 7 p.m.

Wine, beer and soft drinks are served from the Springer concessions.

Tickets are $7 and available at the door of the Studio Theatre.

There is a $1 discount for Springer Mainstage subscribers.

For more information on Greater Tuna, call the Springer Production Office at (404) 324-1100.

- Locate your category of housing.
- Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.
- Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date.

The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Dentist links tobacco products with oral, other types of cancer

By Dr. Cheryl Y. Harmon
Dental Activity

During the past decade, aggressive campaigns have been launched against cigarettes and smokeless tobacco.

Studies have shown a strong correlation between cigarette consumption and the incidence of both lung and oral cancer.

Lung cancer has also been shown in non-smokers who live or work with smokers.

As a consequence to these studies, television and radio advertisements have been curtailed, and the Surgeon General continues to place warning labels on cigarettes and related products.

As a result, the number of cigarette smokers has decreased; this is the good news.

The bad news is that some ex-smokers have sought an alternative, which is smokeless tobacco better known as snuff or chewing tobacco.

Unfortunately, advertisers have coined chewing tobacco as the "safe and smokeless" alternative to cigarettes.

This could not be farther from the truth.

Like cigarettes, chewing tobacco can lead to heart disease because nicotine causes narrowing of the oxygen-carrying arteries.

This makes it difficult for the heart to pump blood to the brain.

Cholesterol and other substances then form, causing blockage and hardening of the arteries.

This can lead to heart attacks and strokes.

Currently, 10,000 deaths are attributed to oral cancer caused by smokeless tobacco in the U.S. while nearly 400,000 (more than 1,000 each day) die from smoking-related diseases.

Because chewing tobacco contains salt and sugar, persons with hypertension and diabetes can further aggravate their medical conditions.

Additionally, constant contact with sugar causes many problems with rampant tooth decay.

The common usage of smokeless tobacco is to place it between the gums and cheek or gums and lips.

This causes an increase in the salivary flow, which in turn forces the chewer to spit or inadvertently swallow the tobacco juice.

Not only does swallowing lead to abdominal upset, but long-term use can also cause gastric and duodenal ulcers, in addition to throat, kidney and urinary, bladder cancer.

Chewing tobacco is more likely to cause oral cancer than cigarettes.

Cancer usually develops in the site where the chewing tobacco is placed (lips, cheeks, gums).

Signs that may indicate the start of cancer is a roughening of the gums, cheeks or lips and a change in color of the affected areas.

> Chewing tobacco can lead to heart disease because nicotine causes narrowing of the oxygen-carrying arteries.

The color change may either be a leathery white raised lesion, a red rough lesion or a speckled red and white lesion.

If you are a habitual cigarette, pipe or cigar smoker, look for these changes in color and surface texture in other areas of the mouth such as the tongue, the roof of the mouth, cheeks, floor of the mouth, lips, and the throat (as evidenced by hoarseness).

A chronic cough may signal lung damage.

Finally, tobacco products can cause bad-breath, unsightly tooth staining, decreased healing time, decreased acuity to taste and smell, tooth abrasion, and periodontal disease, resulting in the loss of gum and bone tissue surrounding the tooth.

If you suspect any of these changes, consult your dentist or physician immediately.

Remember, tobacco usage of any kind only causes harm. For more information or an examination, contact your dental clinic.

In addition, smoking cessation classes are available at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Use these tips when boating

By Richard Fox
Crime Prevention

Most people enjoy a day of boating at the lake. But inherent with boating fun are some rules to remember:

- People who use small boats should be able to swim and should wear Coast Guard approved Personal Flotation Devices. Test flotation devices in shallow water before venturing into deep waters.
- In case of an upset, stay with the floating boat until help arrives.
- Know the boat's capacity; do not overload. Do not use a larger motor than prescribed by the manufacturer. Be sure the boat will float when filled with water. The weight of the passengers and equipment and the number of seats determines the safe load.
- Don't operate during the hours of darkness without proper lights.
- Recognize the limitations of your boat to withstand adverse weather conditions.
- Be conscious of the effects of your boat's waves on others. Remember you are responsible for any injury or damage caused.
- Learn to handle your boat with properly-fitted oars in case of power failure. Carry spare fuel in an approved container.
- It is dangerous to stand up in a moving boat. Change seats only at slow speeds or when stopped.
- Balance your load — distribute weight evenly — from side to side and from bow to stern.
- Don't mix boating and drinking.
- Run slowly in congested areas, and keep away from swimming areas.

You have a moral and legal responsibility to yourself and to others to always follow a safe code of conduct. Don't be a show off or a nautical "Hot Rodder." Have a safe and happy summer.

Safety tips for driving at night

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Driving after dark requires a change of pace and techniques from daylight driving.

The visibility drops down to the range of the headlights, and the result is like being underwater and trying to see with a flashlight. The driver can only see where the beams of light points.

Night driving is more risky than daylight driving.

Approximately 60 percent of the traffic deaths occur at night, and there are a lot fewer cars at night.

While driving, a constant series of decisions must be made. The driver decides to steer this way and then that way. He decides to drop back from a car, or speed up for a hill. He sees livestock or a pedestrian up ahead, and decides to slow down and give them plenty of room.

But at night, the driver doesn't see things as soon, and decisions are rushed, unless the car is slowed down.

Probably 90 percent of driving decisions are based on what is seen. The less seen, the harder it is to make the right decisions.

There's just one thing to do when driving during darkness - pull the car's speed down.

Another problem in driving after dark is the battering which oncoming headlights can give the eyes.

Eyes become tired from the steady hammering of glare, then darkness, then glare again. Not only does glare tire the eyes, but it can blind for a few seconds.

Some oncoming driver may be so busy he forgets he has got a dimmer switch. So the other driver gets the full treatment.

For the next few seconds the other driver's eyes are trying to adjust from a lot of light to a lot of darkness.

While this is going on, the car is cranking straight ahead with a half-blind driver at the wheel.

And what about the oncoming driver who just won't dim? Don't give him the bright treatment. He may blindly run into another car. While this would put out his lights, it will put out someone else's, too.

POST BRIEFS

Post plans celebration for Independence Day

Fort Benning will celebrate Independence Day with a number of activities on York Field Wednesday.

The celebration starts at 3 p.m. with food, drink and games for a nominal fee. There will also be rides, demonstrations by the Silver Wings parachute team and the Rangers, a 50-gun salute, national flag pageantry, entertainment by the Infantry Center Band, and a fireworks display at dark. Special entertainment is also scheduled for the occasion.

During the celebration, the Center's Band will join the 197th Infantry Brigade's artillery salute battery for a performance of the 1812 Overture.

The public is invited to attend and join in the celebration.

Road to be closed from 6-7:30 a.m. Mon. to Fri.

Effective Monday, 82nd Airborne Division from the Dixie Road intersection (near Eddy Bridge) to Bradshaw Road will be closed from 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday to allow soldiers to conduct formation runs.

Gates nearest these intersections will be locked during this time period.

For information, contact Lt. Mullen at 545-2942 or William H. Bunt, chief, Range, Roads and Grounds Branch, at 545-3725.

MPs to crack down on parking violators

Drivers who park illegally in reserved or designated parking spaces at Building 4, the Infantry Center Headquarters, may find a surprise waiting for them when they return to their cars. The Military Police are cracking down on the violators and issuing citations.

"Building 4 is one of the busiest places on Fort Benning," said Karles Jackson of the Military Police Crime Prevention Section. "The number of people visiting, working and attending school there causes a problem with parking spaces."

Jackson said some drivers have the tendency to just ignore the reserved parking signs.

The Military Police and the building coordinator are monitoring the reserved and designated spaces more frequently. Drivers found in violation may be issued citations.

Here are some tips on finding a parking space at Building 4:

- Try to arrive before the morning rush.
- Car pool.
- Keep stays to a minimum, especially when visiting or dropping off or picking up distribution.
- Visit on official business only.

Benning wins environmental quality award

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet Staff Writer

Fort Benning is the winner of the Secretary of the Army Environmental Quality Award, Department of the Army officials announced recently.

The award annually recognizes the Army installation that has conducted the most outstanding environmental protection and enhancement program during the past two years.

First runner-up for the award was Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and second was Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Winning the award makes Fort Benning eligible to compete for the Department of Defense award.

According to Alice Howard, from the Environment Management Branch, the post was evaluated on efforts to reduce noise, air and water pollution and radiation; waste management; resource recovery; pest management and actions to meet the national environmental policy.

Fort Benning's achievements include leadership and responsible stewardship through a number of committees and boards that influence the installation's total environmental management.

Specific highlights include establishing a recycling program that goes beyond the typical "paper and aluminum can" program, according to Howard.

"Anything that could be turned into scrap metal was recycled," she said. "All the money generated from recycling goes back into Fort Benning."

In 1989, Fort Benning's recycling program generated more than $600,000 and $1,000,000 in 1988.

"Most posts haven't been able to generate as much money from their recycling program," Howard said.

Howard said that half the money from the program went into the Morale Welfare Recreation fund, which helped renovate the bleachers at Doughboy Stadium and supply Nautilus equipment to all the gyms on post.

The remaining dollars went to other areas, including an asbestos removal program and building handicap ramps at various facilities on post.

The asbestos abatement program has been recommended for use at other Training and Doctrine Command installations.

The award recognizes the post's ongoing compliance with the State of Georgia and the Environmental Protection Agency's hazardous waste requirements in which no notices of violation were issued during the past two years.

Some other environmental protection and enhancement programs conducted were testing for underground oil leaks; preserving the characteristics of a historic building; opening a landfill at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga.; a radon program; and a hazardous waste and oil spill program.

Hospital welcomes new commander

Bids farewell to Segal

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Martin Army Community Hospital welcomed a new commander in a change of command ceremony June 21.

Col. Vernon C. Spaulding Jr. took over command of the 347-bed facility from Col. Herbert E. Segal in a 9 a.m. ceremony in front of the hospital.

Segal and his family are retiring to Mechanicsburg, Penn., where he will be the Central Medical Director of the Keystone Peer Review Organization.

Spaulding comes to Fort Benning following graduation from the Army War College.

He was born in Los Angeles, Calif., and in 1965 graduated with a bachelor's degree from the University of California, Berkeley.

He entered the Army in 1968 through the Senior Medical Student Program, graduating with a medical degree from Howard University in 1969.

He completed a rotating internship and internal medicine residency at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in 1973, and a gastroenterology fellowship at Letterman Army Hospital in 1977.

Spaulding is also a graduate of the Command and General Staff College.

His awards include the Legion of Merit with First Oak Leaf Cluster; Meritorious Service Medical; the Army Commendation Medal, and the Order of Military Medical Merit.

He wears the Expert Field Medical Badge, The Parachute Badge and the Air Assault Badge.

Spaulding is a member of the American College of Physicians; American Society of Gastrointestinal Endoscopy, and the American College of Physician Executives.

He and his wife, Paula have two children — Raymond, 21, who is on active duty in the U.S. Navy stationed on the submarine, The USS Ohio, and Rebecca, 19, who will be a sophomore at Howard University this fall.

The guest speaker for the ceremony was Brig. Gen. James E. Hastings, commanding general of Dwight David Eisenhower Army Medical Center, Fort Gordon, Ga. Also attending were Rear Admiral Robert W. Higgins, deputy surgeon general of the Navy; Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza; retired Maj. Gen. Daniel Raymond; retired Lt. Gen. Benjamin Register; and retired Lt. Gen. Sam Wetzel.

Segal entered the military in 1963 and served at Walter Reed Army Medical Center as an epidemiologist with the U.S. Medical Research Unit in Bangkok, Thailand; as chief, professional services at the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, Fort Stewart, Ga.; commander, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, Fort Jackson, S.C.

He has 27 years of Army service, with almost three of those as commander of MACH.

His awards include: the Legion of Merit, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Humanitarian Service Medal, Vietnam Service Medal, Army Service Ribbon, National Defense Service Medal, Overseas Service Ribbon No. 1, and Order of the Crown of Thailand.

During the ceremony, Segal was awarded the Legion of Merit with First Oak Leaf Cluster.

Family practice residents, interns graduate

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Eight Family Practice residents and 10 interns at Martin Army Community Hospital graduated in a ceremony June 21 at the Main Post Chapel.

Residents received diplomas for completing a three-year program, and interns received diplomas for completing the first year of the program.

Program Director Maj. Ted Epperly opened the ceremony with a welcome. Then, he turned over the podium for the invocation and remarks from Col. Herbert E. Segal, former MACH commander.

Segal, who had just relinquished command of the hospital prior to the ceremony, commented that he, too, was a graduate, alluding to his retirement from the Army.

Rear Admiral Robert W. Higgins, deputy surgeon general of the Navy and guest speaker for the ceremony, then addressed the residents on their future holds in the military.

Graduating residents are Captains Lise A. Cote, William B. Davis, Kathryn S. Howells, Kevin D. Lokkesmoe, Mark A. Lovell, Cynthia M. Norris, Stephan Petteruti and Richard P. Vincent.

Graduating interns are Captains Mark Berman, Genine Consagra, Mark W. Cotton, Perry E. Jones, Randle T. Middleton, Rajesh V. Patel, Joseph P. Schuette, David A. Stein, Monte C. Uyemura and David M. Zlotnicki.

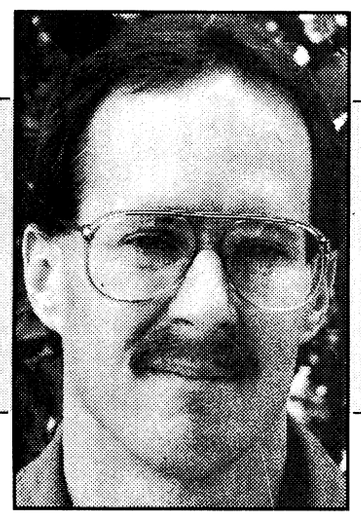
Davis was recognized as chief resident and outstanding resident. Lokkesmoe was given a teaching award, and Lovell was recognized as chief resident.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:
Why did you become an Army physician?

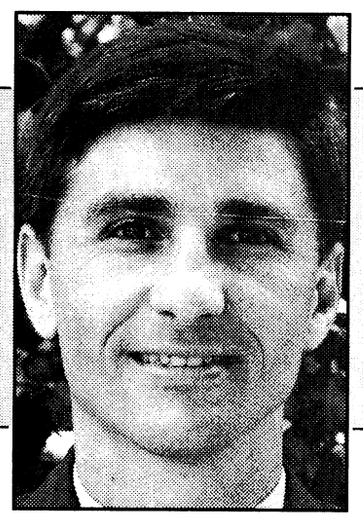
Capt. Nadia West, Medical Department Activity — "I became an Army physician because I like the military. Most of my family is or has been in the military, and I like the lifestyle. I was interested in medicine, and this was a good way to do both."

Capt. Cathy Nishimura, MEDDAC — "I was looking for a different type of medical school. More than likely, I'll end up making the Army a career."



Capt. Timothy Wood, Aviation Medicine, MEDDAC — "I became an Army physician because of my experience during prior service. I felt I would get the best experience and training through the military, and I enjoy the diversity military medicine offers."

Capt. Barry Marsh, MEDDAC — "I became an Army physician because I like the Army, and I enjoy helping people."



Capt. Pete Torok, MEDDAC — "I became an Army physician because I enjoy serving in the military, and I like to travel."

Capt. Lise Cote, MEDDAC — "I originally came into the Army to serve my country. I was given the chance to become a physician after I was commissioned. I was interested in medicine and this gave me a chance to do both."

Snively goes to the golf course

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Golf," according to my boss of bosses, "is not a verb, it's a noun."

In other words, for those of you like me who need these things explained, "one doesn't golf; one plays golf."

In making this distinction, for what reason, I have no idea, the boss of bosses also pointed out that "golf," spelled backward, is "flog," which is a verb, as in "after a bad day on the golf course, he went off to flog himself," or "failing to hit the ball, he flogged himself."

Those are my sentiments exactly.

But my boss of bosses will hear none of that. It's "rantings of a crazy man," he patiently explains.

This always leads him to talk about the virtues of the game. He'll talk for hours about how each hole, each stroke is different from the last hole or stroke no matter how often you've played a particular course or stroke.

"Golf," he'll say is as much mind over matter as it is a physical challenge (I guess cart riders are included).

He talks pitch; he talks angle of descent; he talks back spin, dip, fade, ball compression, swing weight, distance under varying temperatures and density of the air.

He talks me silly.

"Golf," he'll say is the true measure of a man or woman. You can always see the true person on the golf course when his or her inhibitions are overcome by the moment of pure joy and exultation, or misery and damnation.

He talks of the beauty of the course, the intricacies of the hole, its relationship to sand traps, water hazards, and roughs.

As I listen to him, I can only think he doesn't play the same courses I do or with the same people and under the same conditions.

I try to play when the course isn't so crowded. That means there's either a thunderstorm directly overhead pouring buckets of water down on me and lightning bolts so close I can smell the ozone burning in the air or it's so hot the squirrels have left the fairways and not even soldiers would be training in the field — they'd be in air-conditioned classrooms learning about heat exhaustion.

Not only do I play under such demanding conditions, but because of my inability to keep a golf ball on the fairway, I play in terrain Rangers don't even train in.

A machete is my 14th club; poison ivy and snakes are my companions; chiggers, ticks and mosquitoes, my bosom buddies.

I'm not sure if I've swatted at more balls than gnats, but I can tell you I've done a lot of swatting.

This type of play, by the way, is not without its advantages. For as many balls as I lose, I find three times the number. Few people are willing to risk snake bite and skin rash to hunt for a $1.50 ball, new or used.

While I, for the most part, suffer my fate silently, my companions who are of the same ilk — they can't hit a straight ball either — definitely show their true character on the course.

Dennis, the mild-manner clerk, becomes a Frankenstein as he wraps his club around trees, beats on the metal sheds, and generally does damage to everything within reach.

Roger, a taciturn mechanic demonstrates a vocabulary I never dreamed he had. Sunday is not an appropriate day for any of us to play on.

The other day was a typical day for our persevering threesome. The sun was a searing orb high in the June sky, beating down on our brows, reaching into our skulls and frying our brains.

As usual, we were flogging ourselves in typical fashion, all the while telling each other how we were building character as we extolled the virtues of the gentlemanly sport of golf.

We were definitely feeling smug and superior to think that once again we were answering the challenge of the ancient Scots by partaking of this sport.

Also, we noted how much more skillful a golfer had to be than say those who played such sports as "thuggery" (rugby or football), "stand around and wait" (baseball) or even "tall and skinny" (basketball).

We'd probably all suffered a heat stroke by then, but just didn't realize it.

At any rate, we were lying to ourselves to keep us going when I looked up.

There, sitting in a shady glen, by a pool of water, fishing pole in his hand, sat a man. Not budging an inch, not twitching, not sweating, just sitting, cool as a cucumber on a 104-degree day.

That was the day I traded in my golf clubs for a fishing pole.

Commanding General says have a safe, fun, accident-free holiday

Our nation declared its independence on the Fourth of July, 1778.

For more than 200 years since, Americans have celebrated Independence Day to pay tribute to the ideals expressed in the Declaration of Independence.

It was the members of our Armed Forces who fought for freedom and fought for individual liberties during six long years of the Revolutionary War.

It was the men and women of the Armed Forces who continued to fight, not only for this country's freedom, but also to defend freedom throughout the world.

We can be proud of our Army's role in the history of our nation.

This year, Independence Day falls on a Wednesday.

Many families will plan extended weekends and travel great distances to be with relatives in a traditional renewal of family ties.

Others many prefer to spend the holiday fishing, boating, swimming or enjoying other outdoor activities, such as those planned here at Fort Benning.

We must all be alert to the fact that there are many hazards associated with our summertime holiday activities.

The hazards which cause the most deaths during this period are automobile accidents and drownings.

Ignoring good safety practices costs lives.

Fasten seat belts when you are in a vehicle, take frequent rest breaks, and always drive sober.

Swim only in areas with lifeguards on duty. Also, wear personal flotation devices while on a boat.

Be safe; have fun; and enjoy an accident-free holiday.

Army Community Service celebrates 25th anniversary

This year, Army Community Service celebrates its silver anniversary

The U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center salutes Fort Benning for enhancing the quality of life for soldiers and family members.

The Fort Benning Army Community Service office seeks to touch the life of every soldier and family member.

Junior enlisted personnel in-processing into Fort Benning receive a potted plant representing a heartfelt welcome and the expected growth they will achieve as they train to become more self-reliant and proficient.

Soldiers and family members are welcomed to Fort Benning with the following words, "The soldier is not an interruption of our business; the soldier is our business."

Army Community Service programs have grown significantly during the past two years.

The Relocation Assistance Center is a primary stop when soldiers in- or out-process. Services include information and referral, exceptional family member, consumer affairs and financial assistance, family member employment assistance, and volunteer services.

Developing competent, confident leaders takes on a personal touch as the commander and soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment support the exceptional family member program and the Columbus/Fort Benning Special Olympics. Many family members with special needs are helped by this endeavor.

Fort Benning exemplifies the belief among Army leaders that caring for families is more than programs from Washington, but a climate of concern that welcomes soldiers and their families and watches out for them.

Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter

June 1990

Chapter names new officers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Ben F. Williams succeeded Charles A. McClure as president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army during the summer general membership meeting June 21.

Also installed into office were retired Col. Robert Poydasheff, first vice president; retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register, second vice president; and Lt. Col. McDonald Plummer, secretary-treasurer.

The newly board of directors are Richard Fowler, Larry Bentley, A.J. McClung, Gus Evans, retired Col. Jack Harron, retired Maj. Gen. William B. Steele, Ronald Thigpen and Jane Gullatt.

Emeritus board of director members are Lovick P. Corn, John R. Kinnett, Jr., William H. Zimmerman, Bill Heard, Bob Hahn and A.J. McClung.

Williams said he's enjoyed working with AUSA these past few years as an officer and board member and appreciates the opportunity to lead the chapter as president.

"My main goal is to be more aggressive in introducing AUSA to the troops at Fort Benning," he said. "I'm also looking for ways for AUSA, as an organization, might show more tangible support for the soldiers."

He said AUSA is soliciting ideas on ways to make the chapter the best it can be.

As the guest speaker, at the meeting, Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, expressed some of those same feelings as well as some additional comments.

"For a long time we've said we want the biggest chapter," he said. "However, if we focus on being the best, the rest will take care of itself."

Cavezza said he supports the chapter "one hundred percent."

Other people recognized for their support of the chapter were President Award winners: Larry Bentley, Fort Benning commissary officer; Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Cupit, 29th Infantry Regiment; Edward Hilton, director of post food service; Charles Morgan, of B and B Beverages; and Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Thompson, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Subchapter awardees were: Sgt. Kevin Shepard, Co. E, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., NCO of the Quarter; Sgt. John Wolf, HHC, Brigade, 197th Infantry Brigade, NCO of the Quarter; Pfc. John Noland, Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Soldier of the Quarter, Spec. Paul Stevens, HHC, Bde., 197th Inf. Bde., Soldier of the Quarter.

Chapter Queen Valerie Smith, and AUSA Representatives Sgt. Wade Shell and Spec. Cheryl Stall were also recognized.

Ann M. McDonald

Newly installed AUSA officers are: Lt. Col. McDonald Plummer (left), secretary-treasurer; retired Col. Robert Poydasheff, first vice president; Ben F. Williams, president and retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register, second vice president.

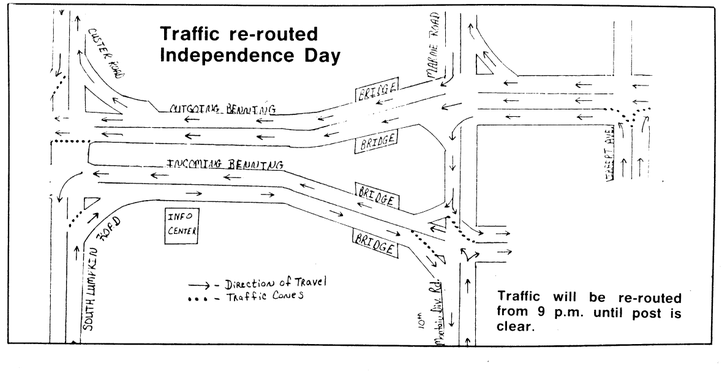
The band will join the 197th Infantry Brigade's artillery salute battery for a performance of the 1812 Overture.

A fireworks display will begin at dark.



President's Report

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter has enjoyed another year of growth and expansion from 1989 to 1990.

While increasing the number of programs involving corporate and individual members, the chapter significantly improved existing programs to incorporate a wider variety of membership.

Through the achievements of both the civilian and military communities, the chapter positively affected almost every soldier we represent.

The generous support of our corporate members who donated door prizes and participated in other activities, assisted in improving the overall effectiveness of all the chapter programs.

Combined with the invaluable efforts and emphasis of the commanders and leaders from Fort Benning, the chapter was able to continue to strive toward ever higher standards of excellence.

Increasing soldier and civilian awareness of AUSA is still our priority and continued to be the emphasis of all our accomplishments throughout the year.

In December, the chapter handed hundreds of Army Greenbooks to graduates of the NCO Academy and was also awarded the 10 for 10,000 Corporate Membership streamer from AUSA National for increased membership.

These and many other programs point directly to the chapter's aims and objectives.

Other highlights of the year included the AUSA national meeting in Washington, D.C. in October where the chapter was recognized for its achievements and hosted a well received hospitality suite.

Another program included Operation Holiday, where the civilian and military communities were able to come together in support of soldiers during the holiday season.

The chapter also hosted the third region meeting in Columbus for 1990, including our winter general membership meeting with guest speaker Senator Howell T. Heflin (D-Ala.).

The chapter sponsored the erection of a memorial to the late President Eisenhower in conjunction with the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Other major activities sponsored by the chapter and enjoyed by members and friends included the Armed Forces Day Picnic, the annual Fish Fry, Oktoberfest, corporate member golf tournaments, the Infantry Conference Mixer, and the Fourth of July celebration.

The chapter continues to recognize outstanding soldiers and civilians by allocating over 25 percent of its annual budget to awards and plaques.

We especially noted the Noncommissioned Officer of the Year, Soldier of the Year, Instructors of the Year and the Drill Sergeant of the Year.

The chapter donated to the Best Ranger Competition, the AUSA Landpower Education Fund, the Retiree Open House, the Officers Wives Club, Safety Cab, the Fort Benning Running Team's entry in the National AUSA Run of the Bridges and junior and senior ROTC awards and scholarships.

The chapter also helped to sponsor a Drill Sergeant Stress Seminar for the soldiers serving at the Infantry Training Center.

In this era of declining budgets and troop cutbacks, the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the AUSA has continued to hold a strong position of leadership and show solid support for the causes we represent.

With a new command emphasis on soldier awareness of AUSA, the chapter will continue to grow and be a force within the entire association.

Members and supporters should be proud of their accomplishments over the past year.

Support AUSA. It supports you!

Charles A. McClure
Chapter President, 1989-1990

Chapter Feedback

QUESTION: Why is the Association of the U.S. Army important?

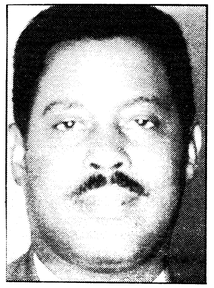
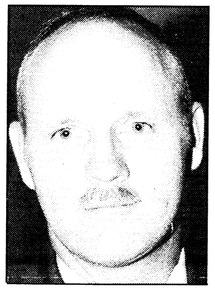
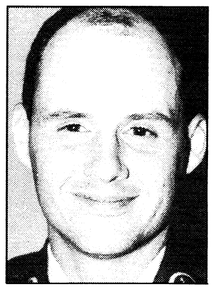
Larry Bentley, Commissary Officer — "AUSA is important because it supports the soldier. Its mission is the same as the commissary's."



Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie L. Roberts, TSB — "AUSA is a vital part of Fort Benning. It's a needed voice for soldiers. The chapter does a lot for this post."



Sgt. 1st Class Richard Bailey, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "It's important because AUSA is the voice of the Army for Congress."



Pfc. John Noland, Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "It's important because AUSA serves as a liaison between civilians and the military. It provides a needed political punch in Congress."

Art Chriss, AUSA Board of Directors — "It is one activity that allows a civilian a chance to participate in events with soldiers. It is a tremendous connection with the community."

Lenora Smith, AUSA representative — "AUSA informs the public about the real situation in the Army when soldiers can't do it themselves. AUSA takes political stands the Army can't take."

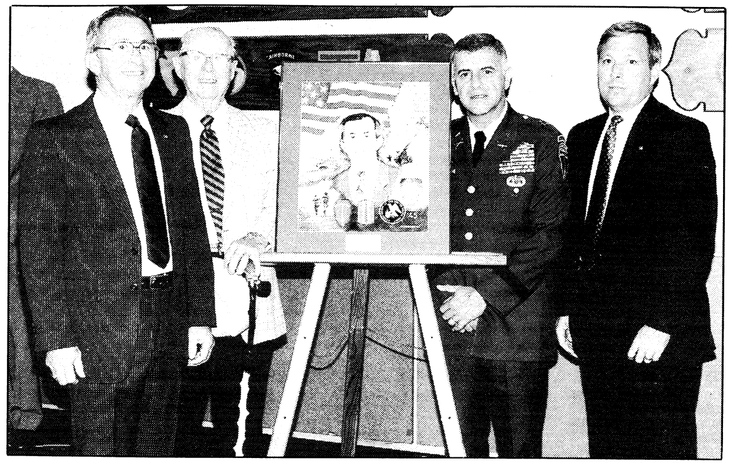
Former chapter president recipient of annual Clifford O. Livingston Award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer



Ann M. McDonald

Livingston Award winner retired Command Sgt. Maj. James Gallagher (left), Clifford O. Livingston, Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general and Chapter President Ben F. Williams pose by the portrait awarded to Gallagher.

A Fort Benning government service worker was awarded the seventh annual Clifford O. Livingston award at the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Association of the U.S. Army general membership meeting June 21.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. James Gallagher, executive officer of the Combined Arms and Tactics Department, is this year's recipient.

Lenora Smith, winner of last year's award, announced Gallagher as the winner.

After announcing Gallagher as the winner, she called him to the podium so the audience could see the latest winner of the prestigious award.

Smith then read off his accomplishments.

She described the former chapter president as a dedicated soldier who served his country for many years.

His assignments include Sergeant Major of the 197th Infantry Brigade, The School Brigade and the U.S. Army Infantry School.

After a short stint in real estate, Gallagher assumed his present position.

"Jim has lived the Army," she said. "He understands the concerns of soldiers. He cares what happens to them."

Smith said the chapter was fortunate that he chose to channel his efforts through it.

She noted some of Gallagher's projects — Oktoberfest, AUSA Queen Contest, Operation Holiday.

Although Gallagher has been a part of many more projects, Smith opted not to list them.

Instead, she spoke of the quiet things he does that make a difference — careful attention to details, a telephone call to the right person or a reminder to a new and inexperienced chapter officer.

"This chapter and the soldiers which it serves are in his debt," she said. "I think that favorite Army song says it better than any of us can, 'When he was needed he was there.'"

Gallagher said he was completely surprised he was given the award.

"It really floored me when I found out how long they kept it a secret," he said.

The prestigious award is named in honor of Livingston for his long-time affiliation with the chapter. His family established the award to recognize exceptional accomplishments by chapter members, as civilians, who may or may not have been chapter officers.

They must have fulfilled the motto of the chapter to an extraordinary degree. The motto is "service to the soldier."

Past winners have served the soldier in a unique and different way and come from diverse backgrounds.

Past winners of the Livingston Award are: Jimmy Matthews, beer distributor; Paul Timm, newspaper columnist; Jon Hill, insurance company officer; Billy Key, banker; Art Chriss, military retail store owner and Lenora Smith, whom, as her children say, is a widow turned activist.

In one of his last official acts as chapter president, Charles A. McClure gives Soldier of the Quarter Pfc. John Noland, Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., a plaque.

Costs, benefits increase under dental contract

Army News Service

Soldiers will pay more but get more benefits as a result of a new contract the Defense Department renewed recently with Delta Dental Plan of California for the Uniformed Services Active Duty Dependents Dental Plan.

The contract becomes effective Aug. 1. Sponsors will pay $4.57 through payroll deduction for one dependent (spouse or child); family rates will amount to $9.14 for two or more dependents.

The new rates represent an increase of 64 cents for one dependent and twice that for family enrollment — $1.28.

"Soldiers enrolled in the program will see the increased deductions in their July leave-and-earnings statements," said Maj. Paul W. Dunlap, a dental studies management officer with the Office of the Chief of the Army Dental Corps, Office of the Surgeon General.

"Under the new contract, expanded diagnostic and preventive services, which are 100-percent covered, include two routine examinations a year, two sets of bite-wing x-rays a year, and a full mouth, or panoramic x-ray, once in three years," he said.

A new benefit, sealants on permanent molars, applies to patients under 14 years of age, while space maintainers on patients under age 14 is an improved benefit.

"The new contract also provides 80-percent payments on two new benefits for tooth restoration and repair," Dunlap said.

"The plan now will cover prefabricated resin crowns for primary, or baby, front teeth only," he said, "as well as partial payments for some other crowns under what's called alternative treatment allowance.

"That means that the cost for what you'd ordinarily pay for a filling, or amalgam, will be credited toward the cost of the more expensive crown.

"Dunlap said that soldiers enrolled in the program may expect to receive a new brochure in the mail that explains the plan in detail, including services provided under the renewed contract.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I found some great running shoes on sale downtown. Since I didn't have enough cash, I gave the store owner a personal check to pay for the shoes, even though I knew that I didn't have enough money in my account at the time to cover the check.

I hoped I could get some money into my account to cover the check before it was cashed.

Well, I don't know how they did it, but the check got to the bank before I could get more money into my account, and the check bounced as high as a rubber ball.

The store owner called me this morning and said that he was going to swear out a warrant for my arrest.

What can I do about this? I've never had a bad check before.

A. The Official Code of Georgia Annotated, Section 16-9-20, states that the offense of criminal issuance of a bad check has been committed when a person gives to another a check for the payment of money from a bank or other financial institution in exchange for some product or service, knowing that the check will not be honored by the financial institution.

The law provides that the alleged offender had knowledge that the check would not be honored if he either:

- (1) had no checking or other account at the financial institution at the time that he wrote and presented the check, or
- (2) refused to pay the holder of the check the dollar amount written on the check, plus a service charge of either $15 or 5 percent of the amount of the check, whichever amount is smaller, within 10 days of receiving a written notice that the check bounced.

The law also provides a sample notice form to use to notify someone of a bounced check.

The penalties for issuing a bad check can be stiff.

Depending on the dollar amount of the check and the number of times that you have been convicted for issuing bad checks, the punishment could be as severe as a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for up to three years.

This is not an offense to take lightly.

In your situation, you should pay the face amount of the check to the store owner as soon as you are able. Get a receipt for the money that you paid and also get the check back, if you can.

The payment of the purchase price of the shoes should defuse any attempt to charge you with issuing a bad check.

I am assuming that the store owner has not sent you a written notice that the check bounced, as is required under the statute.

If he had done so, then to avoid prosecution, you must pay the store owner $15 or 5 percent of the dollar amount of the check, whichever is greater. Be aware that the store owner need only send the notice to the address printed on the check or to the address that you gave him at the time that you bought the shoes.

If you have moved recently and there is some question as to whether or not a notice has been sent, you should ask the store owner.

If, after paying the face amount of the check and the service charge, if applicable, the store owner continues to give you a hard time or you are served with court papers, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney about your situation in more detail.

Board recommends more than 1,000 warrants for promotion

Army News Service

More than 1,000 warrant officers were recommended for promotions by the fiscal 1990 CW3 and CW4 promotion and Regular Army integration board.

The board, which met May 18 through June 9, recommended 780 chief warrant officers two and 308 chief warrant officer three for advancement.

The board recommended 70 percent of the first-time-considered chief warrant officers two for promotion. Among chief warrant officers three considered for the first time, the board recommended 73 percent.

Officials in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel say these percentages exceeded fiscal 1989 CW3 and 4 selection rates.

Five percent of the selectees were below-the-zone candidates. The board also selected some two-time, non-select Other Than Regular Army CW2s for retention in critically short skills — aviation and military intelligence, for example.

Officials explain that regulations normally require warrant officers who are two-time non-selectees to separate within 90 days of notification.

OTRA officers selected for promotion to CW3 by this board will be tendered Regular Army appointments.

The board's recommendations are being sent to the Secretary of the Army for approval, and should subsequently be released in August, DCSPER officials add.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

All common applications of refrigeration — industrial, commercial, residential, and automotive — will probably be affected by recent limitations placed on the production of chlorofluorocarbons.

CFCs, also known as Freons, are the most frequently used refrigerants worldwide, with free-world production equaling two billion pounds in 1986.

The United States produces approximately 35 percent of this total.

Occasionally a product proves to be almost too good. Such is the case with CFCs which, until recently, were considered to be the perfect refrigerant.

CFCs are non-toxic, non-flammable, cost effective, and remain chemically stable indefinitely. They possess properties that make them highly efficient when used for mechanical-vapor compression cooling.

This combination of physical properties makes CFCs virtually an ideal refrigerant. Unfortunately, their chemical stability contributes to the destruction of the ozone layer which protects the earth from the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays.

The stability of CFC compounds means that should they accidently leak or be discharged from a refrigeration system, they do not break down in the lower atmosphere.

Instead, they rise into the stratosphere, are decomposed by high-energy ultraviolet radiation, and release chlorine atoms. These atoms rapidly combine with ozone, destroying the protective layer between the earth and sun.

Changes are already taking place in refrigeration and comfort cooling markets.

Freon production limitations, established in 1990, have caused the price of refrigerants to rise. The price of R-12 alone has tripled since last year, resulting in a financial burden for many companies.

Many industrial firms in Georgia have begun to experiment with cooling alternatives.

A new candy manufacturing plant in central Georgia made the decision to install lithium bromide absorption refrigeration in a process cooling application.

This decision was not based primarily on economics (although a two-stage absorption machine should yield relatively cost-effective cooling) but rather on the desire to completely eliminate CFC refrigerants from the facility.

A meat-packing company in south Georgia recently elected to remove all Freon-based cooling from its plant and replace it with ammonia as part of a plant improvement program.

Expansions at the facility have resulted in a mixture of compressors being utilized.

The refrigeration replacement will consolidate and centralize the equipment and eliminate any concerns related to CFC usage.

While conversion to ammonia and absorption refrigeration may solve some cooling problems in the near future, research to identify acceptable Freon-like replacements continue.

One promising R-11 replacement is R-123, a hydrochlorofluorocarbon. Replacement of one hydrogen atom for a chloride or fluorine atom in a CFC molecule creates HCFC, a substance with acceptable refrigeration properties.

HCFCs may only be a stop-gap measure until the next generation of environmentally acceptable refrigerants are developed. However, it's encouraging to know that progress is being made.

Muppets teach children traffic safety

Kermit, Miss Piggy point out how to play it safe on the street

Miss Piggy teaches penguins to "play it safe" in Jim Henson's Muppet Traffic Safety Show.

Chrysler-Plymouth Public Relations

The Plymouth Division of Chrysler Motors and Jim Henson's Muppets have teamed up to teach children the important rules of traffic safety with Plymouth Presents Jim Henson's Muppet Traffic Safety Show. The nationally touring exhibit will appear July 5 to 8 at Peachtree Mall in Columbus.

The show, which runs continuously throughout mall hours is a fun-filled ride through a Hollywood movie "back lot" where animatronic Muppet characters are filming "Play It Safe."

The Muppets teach traffic safety lessons while riding through the show.

The lessons include the importance of using seat belts or child safety seats and how to cross the street with the traffic light.

Delightful building facades, just like those used on a movie set, are featured in the exhibit.

There are four passenger cars, each seating six children. As the children ride through the show, they see Miss Piggy teaching three penguins to look "left-right-left" before crossing the street and Fozzie Bear teaching a chicken how to cross the street with the traffic light.

The frog scouts tell children to buckle up for safety before riding in a car. At the end of the ride, the children even get to see themselves on camera.

Plymouth Presents Jim Henson's Muppet Traffic Safety Show began its tour of more than 150 of the nation's shopping centers in May 1988.

The show is supported by the National Fraternal Order of Police, the National Parent Teacher Association, the U.S. Department of Transportation's National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the National Safety Town Center.

Peachtree Mall hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Sunday, 1 to 6 p.m.

ACS volunteers are priceless resource

Army Community Service

The Army Community Service volunteer corps has been providing support to the soldiers and families for over 25 years.

"Volunteerism is a tradition within the military community," said Carla Cary, chief of ACS.

"Our volunteers play a particularly important role within the armed forces community because of the unique difficulties military families experience."

For example, she explained, the absence of a military spouse or parent because of military duties or the feeling of isolation due to overseas assignments or assignments far from home can cause such difficulties.

"Many of ACS's family support programs and services would be impossible to provide at the current level of quality and quantity of services without the dedicated support of volunteers," Cary added.

According to her, the volunteers have given millions of hours over the years to enhance the morale and welfare of soldiers and family members around the world, wherever Army families are stationed.

While the spirit of volunteerism is alive today, Cary said it is competing with a host of interests of the potential volunteer — the desire for paid employment and the pursuit of educational or recreational interests and family responsibilities.

She said all of these competing needs must be addressed to ensure that the Army's volunteer spirt remains vibrant and as significant a force in military communities as it has been.

The "1987 Research Report 1456, The Origins of Volunteer Support for Army Family Programs," stated, "Whether the Army Community Service will continue to manifest the Army's tradition of 'taking care of its own' — first seen on the American frontier —depends, in large part, upon whether the Army can continue to recruit, train, and inspire volunteers."

WHERE PEOPLE AND SOLUTIONS COME TOGETHER

This, according to Cary, highlights the importance of the volunteer to the ACS family support programs.

"Volunteering also meets some important needs for new Army spouses," Cary said. "It provides them an opportunity to learn about Army life, to become a part of the Army community and to have others to share and do things with."

Additionally, their volunteer experience can later be used to help qualify them for paid employment or increases in volunteer responsibility.

Office of Personal Management guidelines direct that all volunteer experience be evaluated the same way paid experience is evaluated when qualifying an individual for federal employment.

In addition to being an "extra pair of hands" for work, a volunteer brings much to the agency including:

- An extra degree of credibility that comes from client perceptions of sincerity when non-paid staff provide services.
- Freedom to critique or evaluate programs without the real or perceived constraints on paid staff.
- Direct access to the community as a two-way channel of communication.
- Diversity of knowledge and skills which can keep "new blood" flowing through the program.

ACS is celebrating its 25th anniversary of support to commanders, soldiers and families.

The organization was established in 1965 to assist commanders in reducing conflict between a soldier's family responsibilities and duty requirements.

Over the years, the program has evolved and developed into the social service network through the Army to implement soldier and family support systems.

Today, services are available at 166 ACS centers.

"ACS has been and hopefully will continue to be a major support program for the Army," Cary said.

"Volunteers are, indeed, a priceless resource for Army Community Service programs."

Three Airborne graduates carry on family tradition

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Second generation graduates from Airborne School is a weekly occurrence. However, the story of three, second-generation jumpers graduating at the same time from Company A., 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, is a little different.

Three parachutists, who graduated June 22, have a medal of honor winner or general officer for a father.

All three fathers were present at the ceremony to pin the wings on their graduates.

Medal of Honor winner, retired Col. Roger H. C. Donlon, pinned the wings on his Naval cadet son, Damian, while Brigadier Generals, Emory Mace and Raymond Roe, pinned the wings on their West Point Cadet daughters, Mary and Karen, respectively.

Mace is the Chief of Staff, 4th U.S. Army, Fort Sheridan, Ill., and Roe is the Assistant Division Commander of the 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash.

Donlon, who left Benning in 1976, said the last time he was here, he, his wife and four boys took a ride on the controlled descent tower.

"At that time, I never dreamed the next time I came back here I'd be standing on the same field pinning on airborne wings," he said.

Donlon served at Benning as Mortar Division chief at the Infantry Test Board.

He was the first soldier awarded the Medal of Honor for heroic action in Vietnam.

Yolanda Groggins, family member, won the ladies division of the third annual powerlifting competition at Briant Wells Field House June 23. Twenty-four men and women competed.

'Running Man' tests soldiers' Infantry skills

USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's 5 a.m.; two squads of soldiers are standing by ready to challenge the "Running Man."

The Running Man is an tactical exercise designed to improve the basic Infantry skills of soldiers from Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The exercise, designed after the movie of the same name, allows soldiers to use and improve their Infantry skills in a game-type atmosphere.

Two squads, each at opposite ends of a designated grid square are briefed on their mission. One squad, code named, "Running Man," is given three grid coordinates, a map, and compass. The other squad, code named, "Stalker," is given a map and compass but no coordinates.

The "Running Man" squad is tasked with locating two of three suspected enemy positions within a one-kilometer grid square.

Once the squad locates an enemy position, they gather information about the location and then go on to find the next position. When two out of three positions are found, they race back across friendly lines to divulge the information.

Meanwhile, the Stalkers enter the "grid square" from the opposite side. Their job is to hunt down the running men.

Both stalkers and running men are camouflaged and equipped with Multi-Integrated Laser Engagement System and night vision devices to make the exercise more realistic.

The enemy positions are the land navigation points issued at the beginning of the game. Movement techniques, navigation and ambushes are individual and collective tasks the soldiers must use to successfully complete the mission.

Evaluators follow and observe the squads during the exercise. A winner is determined through a point system based on MILES kills and successfully finding each land navigation point.

Later, during an after-action review, they discuss weaknesses and strengths in hopes that the soldiers will learn from it.

The exercise was the brainchild of 1st Lt. Franklin Roach and Capt. Timothy Stone. The basic concept came from the movie, "The Running Man."

"Since we are a support unit, we don't get the opportunity to train on a regular basis," Roach said. "The game concept adds a competitive edge not found in normal training."

"This training is critical to maintaining proficiency in dismounted tasks," he said.

According to Stone, the exercise uses minimum resources with maximum gains.

He explained that not only are local training areas and equipment used but that it's training soldiers actually look forward to.

"This makes the mission much easier to accomplish," Stone said.

Roach said now that all the kinks are worked out, he hopes that the rest of the companies in 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., will participate in the Running Man exercise and eventually be used throughout the Army.

"In the meantime, however, we'll accept outside challenges," Stone said.

Cannoneers to fire 50-gun salute

By Kevin Stibich
197th Infantry Brigade

Of all the soldiers saluting the nation's 214th birthday at Fort Benning's Fourth of July celebration, the cannoneers of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, will be among the most visible and undoubtedly the most audible.

Cannon crews from the unit's Battery B are scheduled to fire a 50-gun salute to the 50 states and accompany the 283rd Army Band in a rousing rendition of "The 1812 Overture."

The Fourth of July salute is one of some 16 salutes the unit performs throughout the year on posts and as far away as Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

Although the most visible, salutes are just one event in which the artillerymen participate with six M-101A2, 105-millimeter towed howitzers.

Fort Benning's only field artillery unit, 4th Bn. has a two-fold mission.

Its primary mission is to provide direct support to the 197th Infantry Brigade with its 155-millimeter, self-propelled howitzers. Its secondary mission involves fire support to the Infantry School using the smaller 105-millimeter howitzers in a variety of training events, or "school shoots."

The 105-millimeter guns shoot for Infantry Officer Basic Course and Advanced NCO Course classes at the Fergusson Observation Point at least once a month.

All Infantry Officer Advanced Course combined arms live-fire exercises kick off with the firing of a "prep" by the 105-millimeter and the 155-millimeter guns of 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. Pathfinder School also uses a 105-mm for sling-load operations.

"School duty" rotates among the battalion's three firing batteries, enabling all of the cannoneers to cross-train on a piece of artillery history.

Once in common use throughout the Army, the M-101A2 has been around since World War II and was formerly the only direct support weapon for an Infantry division.

It has subsequently been replaced by the lighter, more mobile 105-millimeter howitzers.

Only the 6th Infantry Division (Light) at Fort Richardson, Alaska, continues to use the M-101A2 because of its ability to emplace in snow and mountainous terrain.

197th infantrymen meet EIB standards

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Forty-three infantrymen from 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, and 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry have received the Expert Infantry Badge after five days of testing to prove themselves the best "Vanguards" on Kelley Hill.

Given once a year, EIB testing measures soldiers' physical fitness and performance of infantry skills.

In awarding the badge to 24 soldiers, Lt. Col. Richard L. Stouder, commander of 2nd Bn., noted that Army Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall created the EIB in 1944 to represent the U.S. Infantry's tough, hard-hitting role in combat and to recognize individual proficiency in the art of Infantry.

EIB candidates must be active members of the Army, Army Reserve, or Army National Guard, volunteer for testing, be recommended by the unit commander, and qualify expert with either the M16A1 or M16A2 rifle.

Enlisted candidates must possess a primary military occupational specialty in career management field 11, 18B, 18C, 18E, 18F or 18Z. Warrant officer candidates must hold specialty 180A, and commissioned officer candidates must hold Infantry or Special Operations branch specialties.

Candidates may only retest two points and retest any point once. If the candidate fails to retest or fails three points, he is no longer qualified to receive the EIB, according to regulations.

According to test officials, the EIB test is anything but a piece of cake. "The test gets more difficult at points that contain more than one task, such as the last point, the 12-mile road-march," one scorer said.

"Not only does the candidate have to complete the road-march, but he also must clear, disassemble, assemble and perform a functions check on his M16 rifle in three hours or less."

Rare is the time when a candidate receives the EIB on the first try.

"It's a great feeling to get it," said Pvt. Thomas Smart of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. "I tried two other times before receiving it on the third time.

"It wasn't easy," he added. "The graders went by the book and were professional about it."

"We received a lot of support from our superiors," said Spec. Brandon Wigg of Co. C, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. "We trained at the site for two days, and the rest of the time we practiced at the company."

"The individual has to have the heart for it," said Spec. Sherry Rushing, of Co. C, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. "If he doesn't, it won't mean anything to him."

The female winner of the recent Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning competition tucked another win under her weight-lifting belt recently.

Yolanda Groggins, a 114 pound family member, won the women's competition at the third annual Fort Benning Powerlifting Competition June 23 at Eriant Wells Field House.

Billie Williams won the men's lightweight best lifter award, and Ben Wansley won the men's heavyweight best lifter award.

Twenty-two men and two women competed. The women's score was determined by formula.

The competition, sponsored by the Directorate of Community Activities, featured squat, bench-press and deadlift events.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Executioners won the post team competition for the third year. The Powerdogs came in second with four of its five members winning a first place position.

Members of the Executioners are: Steven Rainey, Willie Grider, Jose Sanchez, Travis Hicks, John Jenkins, Carlos Valarezo, Matt Loyd, John Dawson and Michael Goodwin.

Members of the Powerdogs are: Jess Gilmer, Dean Rose, Mark Rathburn, Ben Wansley and Joseph Williams.

Franklin Roach was the meet director and head judge with Nate Williams and Clement Green assisting as judges.

According to Dean Rose, competitor, the event was first rate.

"The meet ran smoothly and efficiently," Rose said. "The judging was consistent and fair."

Purple, Gold tourney has two-time winner

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Last year's winner of the Purple and Gold Golf Tournament captured the title again at the Follow Me Golf Course June 24.

Jeff Darrah of Columbus beat 109 golfers during the 11th Omega Psi Phi Fraternity-sponsored tournament.

This is the second year the fraternity has held the golf tournament at Fort Benning, according to Ray Whittaker, tournament co-chairman.

"The Follow Me Golf Course has better facilities than most other golf courses and can accommodate more," Whittaker said.

The large, 18-hole course was needed because, according to Whittaker, this year's tournament had twice as many participants as last year.

"I think the tournament was very successful this year," he said.

Golfers competed in nine flights with five golfers placing in each flight.

Purple and gold trophies and other prizes were given to the top five. Prizes included golf clubs, irons, shoes, balls and umbrellas.

Proceeds from the tournament will benefit the group's scholarship and charity fund, Whittaker said.

Local children attend summer Bible programs

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

More than 600 children attended Vacation Bible School here last week at Dexter and Faith Schools.

The week was filled with Bible study, music, crafts and recreation time.

An annual post-wide event, Vacation Bible School is part of the Religious Education Program.

Activities were varied, fast-paced and designed for quality time. Music time was filled with joyous and upbeat material, as well as the ever-popular, "Jesus Loves Me."

The theme of Jesus as a loving source of hope and guidance to the children even carried over into the recreation time. Craft time kept young minds and hands busy making mementos of their days at VBS.

New this year was a week-long extension of the Catholic Religious Education program.

Nearly 100 students met this week at Dexter School for a three-hour-a-day session.

"The atmosphere we can build in this setting is tremendous," said Father Joe Piskura, Main Post Catholic Chapel priest.

He said he felt that the time spent with the children in this special way helps their understanding of their faith.

The program is also filled with scripture study, craft and music time, as well as recreation and refreshments.

A special room called "God's House" was used to help explain all of the functions of objects used during the Mass.

Although the summer Bible courses have ended, there are still weekly Sunday School classes held at the Religious Education Center, Custer Terrace and Lavoie Manor, as well as denomination emphasis for the Lutheran and Latter Day Saints. Jewish classes are held as well at the Infantry Training Center.

For more information on these religious education opportunities, call your unit chaplain or the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain Office at 545-289.

Family Life Center offers adults class in art of parenting

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Wanted: parents who want to learn how to be better at parenting.

The title of the brochure recommending an Active Parenting course is sure to strike a cord or two with just about anyone who has children.

A free, noon-time class dealing with this subject begins July 24 at the Family Life Center.

When people find themselves wondering, "Why is parenting so hard," it may be time to search for a better understanding. Parents appreciate a peace of mind knowing they are acting and reacting affectionately to their children.

The most important reason for examining your role as a parent is for the sake of the precious gift of our children, experts say.

Parenting is extremely difficult and often thoroughly frustrating, say the experts. Sometimes it seem that nothing "works."

Active Parenting facilitators believe that most parents have sufficient love and commitment to parent well, but they lack sufficient information and skills.

Basically, they were never taught how to parent.

Striving to make parenting as rewarding as it is challenging, parents are urged not to give up.

Active Parenting was created to help parents teach children to give and take responsibility, act cooperatively, and face challenges with courage and confidence.

Active Parenting offers success where traditional authoritarian methods and more recent permissive methods have failed.

The course boasts: "97 percent of parents completing an Active Parenting Course recommend it to other parents!"

Some of the questions parents may find themselves searching for answers include:

- What is the difference between punishment and discipline?
- Why do I feel like such a failure as a parent?
- Why don't I get any respect?
- How does a good parent get better?

Thousands of parents have completed this course — parents who are sincerely searching for innovative ways to raise content and responsible children.

Active Parenting is from noon to 1:30 p.m. July 24 through September 11. To register, call the Family Life Center, Building 2606, Soldiers Plaza, 545-1760/5301.

Celebrate Indendence Day with a bang

Westville re-enacts Independence Day

Westville Historic Handicrafts, Inc.

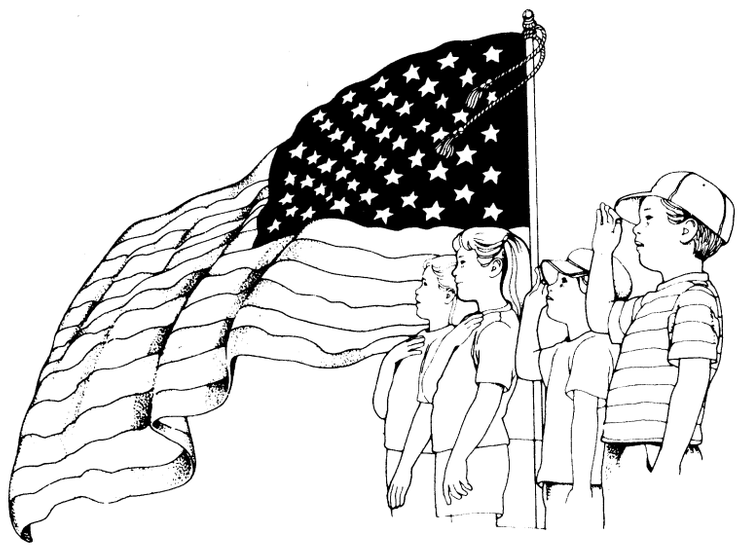
Westville will recognize Independence Day Wednesday with a comprehensive re-enactment of a typical West Georgia antebellum celebration.

The parade through the village will begin at 11 a.m. and will be followed by the program and a barbecue prepared and served by volunteers from Greenfield Academy, Weston, Ga.

Commonly used games will follow in the afternoon that will allow visitors, young and old, to compete in good-natured fun.

There will be sack and three-legged races, a greased pole climb and watermelon eating contest.

Troops will be staging mock battles, rifle demonstrations and drilling during the day. Re-enactors will be volunteers from Florida.



Westville's purpose in holding the presentation is to make learning more enjoyable.

This is an appropriate way for any family to better understand the true meaning of Independence Day.

All visitors should dress casually.

Westville's 27 furnished buildings will be open for viewing with costumed craftsmen demonstrating traditional work activities such as blacksmithing, basketry, spinning, weaving, pottery, quilting, woodworking, and fireplace cooking.

Westville is located one-half mile from the town square in Lumpkin, Ga.

Westville is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday, and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday, Eastern time.

For more information, call (912) 838-6310.

Phenix City spends holiday in the park

Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce

The second annual Old-fashioned 4th of July in the Park will be at Idle Hour Park on Airport Road in Phenix City.

The park opens at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday with activities ranging from arts and crafts and games to live entertainment.

An assortment of amusement rides for kids are available at the park beginning today through July 7.

The grand finale will be at 9:30 p.m. with an elaborate firework display.

For more information, contact the Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce at 298-3639.

Celebrate twice at Florence Park

Ga. Department of Natural Resources

Florence Marina State Park will celebrate Independence Day, not once, but twice — once on Saturday and again Wednesday.

Special events will begin at 10:30 a.m. on both dates and continue throughout the day.

From 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. compete in horseshoes, volleyball, hopscotch, softball throw, or a water balloon toss. Ribbons will be awarded to winners.

Starting at 1:30 p.m., black powder firing and tomahawk throwing demonstrations will be at the Kirbo Interpretive Center, lasting until 4:30 p.m.

A special nighttime black powder firing demonstration will be offered both nights from 8 to 8:30 p.m.

Florence Marina State Park is located on Ga. Highway 39, 16 miles west of Lumpkin.

For more information, contact the Kirbo Interpretive Center at (912) 838-4706.

- Locate your category of housing.
- Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.
- Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date.

The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Renovation, staff shortage delay ER care

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

Emergency Room patients at Martin Army Community Hospital are having to wait longer before getting treatment, according to a hospital official.

Col. H. Dale Brown Jr., deputy commander for Administration at the hospital, said the reasons for the delay are cramped and crowded conditions at a temporary facility, a reduction in the number of physicians available and a large number of non-emergency cases.

Brown said relief is expected when renovation of the hospital's emergency room is completed in mid-September and when staffing levels return to normal.

"Our capability to treat patients has not been affected by the temporary set up," he said. "We are still equipped to handle really sick people."

But, the temporary facility is cramped and crowded, and there has been a reduction in the number of military physicians due to summer turnover, Brown said.

The large number of non-emergency cases — sometimes up to 45 per day — just compounds the problem, Brown said.

Each day, the ER staff handles a number of patients who have minor ailments and other problems that can easily be treated at the PRIMUS Clinic or the hospital's Outpatient Clinic, Brown said.

"Patient's who need non-emergency care can help ease the situation by going to the PRIMUS Clinic or to the Outpatient Clinic," he said.

The Outpatient Clinic offers same day appointments Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. The PRIMUS Clinic operates from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m. on weekends and holidays.

The PRIMUS Clinic is on Boxwood Place in Columbus, and the Outpatient Clinic is in building 392 near the Infantry Museum on post.

Patients should call 545-5564/3835/1161 or 689-0184 to make an appointment at the Outpatient Clinic. The PRIMUS Clinic can be reached at 561-7066.

Dep. asst. commandant retires after 29 years

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

After 29 years of service, the deputy assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School is hanging up his hat.

Col. Lyman G. White said goodbye June 29 during a retirement ceremony in front of Infantry Hall.

Although his tour with White at Benning was a short one, Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza had much to say.

"The Whites have been friends of ours for many years," he said. "We served together as platoon leaders and company commanders."

Cavezza said that White has served his country with distinction in many important jobs.

At Benning alone, he led the effort to develop and redefine the "Infantry Vision" and integrated strategy.

Also, he assisted in developing the Dugway phase of Ranger School, Cavezza said.

He advised and coordinated directors, commanders and Training and Doctrine Systems managers efforts, and he improved teamwork among the directors and commanders in the school, Cavezza said.

The work White has done here is a very small part of what he has done since he entered the Army in 1961, Cavezza continued. He served two tours in Vietnam.

"He's fought a good fight," Cavezza said. "He's fought in the rice paddies of Vietnam. He has braved the bitter cold of Korea, and he has faced the avalanches of paperwork at the Infantry School.

> "I would like to see the camaraderie that once was so prevalent make a comeback with our troops today."
>
> — Col. Lyman G. White

White admitted that those fights came and went by quickly.

He broke down the tours he served into two categories:

He called one tour, "the good deal assignments" and the other, "the formative assignments."

The times he served with Cavezza were in his good deal assignments category.

His formative assignments included what he considered the capstone tour of his career, chief of staff, 2nd Infantry Division, Korea.

He reminisced about why each assignment was categorized in the prescribed manner.

The reminiscing led to wishes he extended to soldiers still wearing the green.

"I wish the Army would go back to being less rigid and allow soldiers to take chances," he said.

"I also would like to see the camaraderie that once was so prevalent make a comeback with our troops today," he said.

Staff Judge Advocate receives recognition

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Staff Judge Advocate was recently recognized by the Chief of Staff of the Army for its legal assistance expertise.

The SJA was given the Chief of Staff Award for Excellence in Legal Assistance.

Capt. Howard McGillin Jr., chief, Legal Assistance Division, accepted the award on behalf of SJA during a brief ceremony June 27.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza presented the award.

Cavezza told the audience that he had heard how good the JAG was before he arrived at Fort Benning, and the award confirms it.

Statistics compiled by McGillin reveal just how hard the division worked to earn the award.

According to McGillin, in 1989 the division saw 7,236 clients — 1,353 of whom were retired. The division's legal technician saw an additional 1,201 clients.

The staff also performed 14,540 notarizations, 11,163 Powers of Attorney and 3,348 wills.

McGillin said his staff consists of five attorneys although they had six for most of last year. Of the five attorneys, two are military. "Many of our clients do not realize we're attorneys," he said.

However, McGillin assures they are attorneys, and they practice in one of the highest courts in the 50 states.

In addition to the attorneys, the division has one legal technician, one civilian legal clerk and three military legal clerks. He noted that all are notary publics.

McGillin said during tax season, the office coordinates the activities of the unit tax advisors.

He estimated that the services his office provides save soldier more than $70,000 per year.

Independence means more than fireworks, parades

By Wade Shell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fourth of July holiday brought out quite a celebration.

Merrymakers paraded, shot fireworks, cooked out and did a myriad of other things — all in the excitement and intensity of our country's birthday.

But, is this what the Fourth of July is all about?

Independence Day is more than cherry bombs, barbecue, and parades.

It's a time to reflect on the reasons for the celebrations and picnics.

It's a time to remember how our country — the greatest in the world — began.

We must remember that our fledging nation began because of oppression and a government that was not responsive to the needs of the people.

With little training and almost no support, our founding fathers fought against one of the most powerful Armies of their time.

They faced a determined enemy with a fervor it had never before encountered.

In this day of eroding rights and wandering national pride, the solution to our country's ills might be as simple as reflecting on history.

Soldiers and civilians must remember that our forefathers sacrificed their lives for the freedom we enjoy.

Some of us have forgotten the ideals sought by the men and women of the past.

Today, in classrooms around the nation, the Pledge of Allegiance is no longer heard, prayer is prohibited and anti-American organizations are allowed to exist and teach.

What kind of country will our children inherit?

That's up to us — the men and women of this generation.

Maybe if we take the time to remember why George Washington led his men through Valley Forge, we can pass on that knowledge to our children.

In doing so, maybe this nation can continue to be the leader of the free world.

Americans will never accept flag burning

Department of Veterans Affairs

Georgia's Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler says he is disappointed and saddened over the action taken by the U.S. House of Representatives in defeating legislation calling for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution to ban burning of the American Flag.

Addressing the 1990 Annual State Convention of the Veterans of World War I in Hapeville, Ga., Saturday, Wheeler said, "We need to stop coddling and going out of our way to please and protect our enemies, and I consider those who would burn our flag as enemies of the United States."

Wheeler said that recent court decisions and the action taken by the House, "constitute a slap in the face of millions of American men and women who have worn the uniform of America's Armed Forces and taken an oath to protect and defend our country.

"Until recently," said Wheeler, "the federal government and 48 of our 50 states had laws that prohibited flag-burning. Now, we have Supreme Court judges telling these legislators and governors and the President that they are all wrong; and the U.S. House of Representatives has sided with the court.

"How does one explain to a grieving family that it's all right to burn the flag that draped the casket of their loved one?" Wheeler asked.

"Burning the flag has nothing to do with freedom of speech. Burning the flag is misconduct. It is wrong, and flag-burners should be punished."

Wheeler is hopeful that a constitutional amendment protecting 'Old Glory' will become a reality. "The American people should be the ones to decide," said Wheeler. "I believe the majority of Americans want such protection for our flag."

For change of scenery, try Destin

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you're like me, harboring thoughts of winning anything, especially involving the Army, is like fantasizing about a direct promotion from specialist to command sergeant major. It just doesn't happen.

As a result, I don't enter my name in drawings, mail in my Ed McMahan sweepstakes entry form, or even play bingo.

But, one day as I sat at my desk, brain dead from the heat, sweat balls rolling down my legs and my computer staring blankly at me, I began to think of places I could go that offered a break from the routine.

That's when Sgt. Airborne Annie suggested I try entering my name in the drawing for a cabin at Destin.

I went through the entire spiel about Destin just being for senior NCOs and officers. Besides, my name would never be drawn.

But she insisted; and, guess what, I just came back from Destin, a little red on the nose, my back peeling some, but basically ready to go out and interview the heck out of Fort Benning's finest. My batteries have been recharged.

The Army's recreation center at Destin is not cheap by any stretch of the imagination, and it's definitely reasonable when compared to what you'd pay if you tried to stay in one of the hotels. Plus, you can save money by eating your meals right there in the cabin.

This isn't to say the Snively family didn't check out some of the local bistros and eating establishments. First, there's the Donut Hole practically right on the corner as you turn onto Benning Boulevard.

I recommend you walk to it since you'll need the walk back to help your food digest.

Then there's Fuddpuckers. A restaurant with do-it-yourself decor — you're encouraged to write your own graffiti on the walls and furniture, while sea gull footprints lead you to the rest rooms.

The slogan, at least on the T-shirts they sell, is "You ain't been puckered until you've been Fuddpuckered."

Another quaint place is the Hog's Breath Inn where they proclaim "Hog's breath is better than no breath at all."

This is also the command post for our Rangers, so be prepared to see Bert and Ernie hair cuts and hear a bunch of Army talk.

The real reason we went to Destin, though, wasn't to check out the eateries but to hit the surf.

But, as those of you who've been there know, while the recreation center's beach is nice, clean, white sand, it ain't got no surf.

But all's not lost.

For surfing, you cross the highway to the Eglin Air Force Base NCO Club beach (or for you officers, you can go to the Officer Club Beach, just up the road). Or, you can use the public beach.

At any rate, there are waves there, and the blue-green sea reaching out to meet the skyline is a welcome sight after 11 months of looking at pine trees and red clay.

Fishermen can try their hands at deep-sea fishing on one of the fishing boats, and would-be sailors can check out some of the sail boats.

In fact, maybe you'd better be a sailor before taking out a sailboat. Emma and I went out at 8 a.m., planning to return by noon.

Well, we finally made it back by 4 p.m. I claimed we were becalmed, but Emma had to keep pointing to all the other sailing craft thatskimmed back and forth. "They don't seem to be having any trouble finding a breeze," she said. "Are you sure you know how to sail?"

That's the day I got sunburned.

By the way swimmers, jellyfish occasionally come by for a visit. Take along meat tenderizer, not for the fish, but for where you're stung. It'll take out the sting. The tenderizer neutralizes the enzymes or something like that.

Returning home late Sunday, we drove past Infantry Hall. Emma asked if I missed it. "I didn't think about it for a week," I told her.

CSM retires

Career spanned 30 years of service

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

"If I could do it all over again, I'd change nothing. I'd just start earlier," said Command Sgt. Maj. William Mayo during the retirement ceremony held in his honor June 29.

Mayo, who has been the command sergeant major of the Infantry Training Center for a year, retired after 30 years of service.

His career, which spanned 30 years, included assignments as command sergeant major of Fort Monroe, Va., and command sergeant major of 1st Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, in Korea.

He served as command sergeant major of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion before becoming the top enlisted soldier of the ITC.

Mayo received the Legion of Merit for his life's work. He'll add this to his many other awards, which include the Silver Star, the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart, and the Republic of Vietnam Cross of Gallantry.

In his farewell address, Mayo said that the Army gave him the opportunity to excel.

He said he is a perfect example of the Army's motto, "be all you can be," and he challenged the soldiers of the ITC to capitalize on that opportunity as well.

Command Sgt. Maj. Robert Collins will take over the duties of ITC command sergeant major after completing his current assignment with the 2nd Battalion, 30th Infantry, in late July.

Meanwhile, Command Sgt. Maj. Sidney Raspberry is filling in.

Hospital records TQM successes

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital efforts have proven successful in the challenge associated with Total Quality Management according to the Medical Department Activity's TQM director.

Victories already have been recognized at the Dental Activity, sister unit of the hospital.

Together, the two units provide a major portion of the medical service on Fort Benning.

Although hospital personnel are constantly serving the needs of patients, they have also found time to save time and provide better service.

Patricia A. Cornett, MEDDAC TQM Director, gave four examples of staff member successes.

According to Cornett, Capt. Charles Oliver designed a survey that was distributed to married, active duty personnel and retirees in the Fort Benning area.

"More than 3,200 surveys were returned." she said. "Captain Oliver analyzed the data and used it as a basis for improvement in the areas concerned."

Cornett said Susan Gause, a member of the Quality Improvement Team, has been studying the internal suspense system.

"Gause's team designed a suspense system that incorporates a flow chart as the actual suspense document," Cornett said. "This allows the entire suspense system to flow easier."

Chairperson for the QIT, Maj. Ted Epperly, has been studying the beeper system at MACH.

"Major Epperly studied the process of producing a timely and accurate beeper roster," Cornett said. "As a result, several systems have been designed and implemented."

The last noted contribution was by Master Sgt. Norman Crawford. Crawford, who is the noncommissioned officer in charge of the Patient Administration Division, has been implementing TQM concepts for quite some time said Cornett.

"Crawford collected data and was able to identify a trend in unfiled record documents," she said. The information gained resulted in an 85 percent improvement in the timely filing of documents, she said.

Although none of the new programs save money, they do save time. Extra time means more time for other aspects of patient care.

Army approves commission for physician assistants

Army News Service

Army physician assistants would become commissioned officers under a proposal approved June 15 by the secretary of the Army and Army chief of staff.

PAs are currently warrant officers.

Chief Warrant Officer Jimmie E. Keller, physician assistant consultant to the Army surgeon general, said this move — contingent upon congressional approval — would affect all Army PA positions.

There are more than 500 physician assistants in the active Army and almost another 500 in the National Guard and Army Reserve.

Health Services Command officials say Congress will be asked for legislative changes to allow the PAs to join the Army Medical Specialist Corps, and for constructive service credit to be applied when converting to commissioned ranks.

That plan calls for active duty PAs who have been in the Army as PAs for less than four years to become second lieutenants.

Those who have been Army PAs more than four years but less than seven years will be first lieutenants, those who have been Army PAs between seven and 12 years will be captains, and those with 13 years or more as Army PAs will be majors.

An equivalent plan for the reserve components is now being prepared.

"Everyone who desires the transition will have to apply to become a commissioned officer," Keller said. "The details of the application procedure are being coordinated now.

"Individual PAs will tell us they want to apply, we'll send them an accession packet. Then, they will fill out the paperwork and return it to us.

Selections will be made by a "fully-qualified" board held at the Office of the Surgeon General, he said.

Keller said PAs will be notified by world-wide message and by individual letters of the correct application procedures.

He said he hopes this will occur within 60 days, although it may take longer.

To qualify for a commission, PAs will need at least a bachelor's degree, certification by the National Commission on Certification of Physician Assistants and graduation from a training program approved by the American Medical Association Committee on Allied Health Education and Accreditation.

Keller estimates about 48 percent of current physician assistants meet these requirements.

Others will have a transition period to meet them and make the transition — five years for active duty soldiers and 10 years for those in reserve components.

Hospital's chief nurse retires

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Chief of the Department of Nursing at Martin Army Community Hospital retired July 5.

Col. Susie M. Sherrod, a native of Thomasville, Ga, began her military career at MACH in 1968. This is her third tour at Benning.

She has served in all four areas of professional nursing: practical-clinical, administrative, research, and education.

While assigned as a nurse methods analyst at the Academy of Health Sciences, she researched and developed a nursing care hours standards study that served as the framework for the present nursing workload management system used throughout the Army.

During her career, Sherrod made several contributions at MACH.

She developed a program called Scope of Practice where individuals are permitted to perform only those functions in which they have education and training.

She provided the inspiration for the development of the Competency-Based Practice Program, which ensures that nurses have the knowledge, expertise and technical competency required prior to assigning them to a position.

This program has been implemented by both civilian and military facilities at the local, national and international level, including three military medical center.

Within one year of her reassignment to Fort Benning, MACH underwent review by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organization.

The Department of Nursing was cited as noteworthy for excellence in the Continuous Quality Improvement Program to define, implement and monitor the practice of nursing.

Another project initiated by Sherrod is the "RN Task Force," a group of military and civilian registered nurses who explore problems and find solutions, implement ways to improve patient care and patient satisfaction and raise money for worthy causes.

3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regiment passes colors to new commander

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The colors of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment have put on weight since they were passed on 16 months ago.

Lt. Col. Joseph F. Hunt was on the receiving end of that pass.

Under those colors, he led the the battalion of Rangers into combat — resulting in another battle streamer for the unit.

Hunt passed the colors and the responsibility that goes with it to Lt. Col. James T. Jackson in a ceremony on Peden Field June 29.

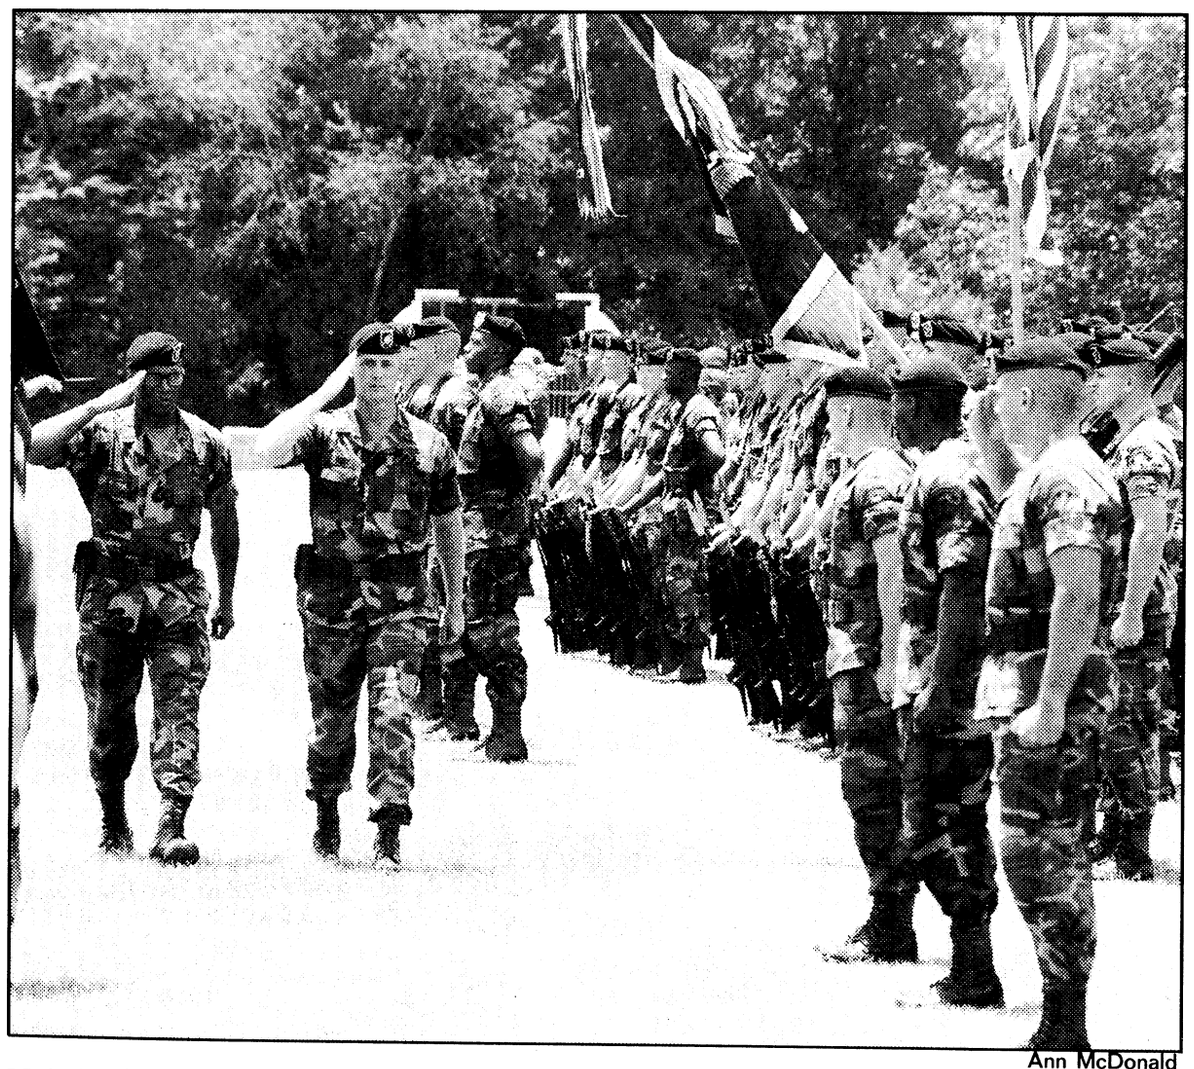
75th Ranger Regiment Commander Col. William F. Kernan presided over the exchange and then took to the podium to remark on Hunt's command.

"Throughout the last 16 months of his command, the battalion has continued to maintain its reputation of excellence, amassing an enviable record," he said.

Examples Kernan gave were five major deployments, over 240 live-fire exercises from squad through company level, all companies awarded the expert and combat streamers, a 89.5 percent battalion average on skill qualification tests and combat in Panama.

"This was accomplished while continually maintaining a no-notice, go-to-war posture," he said. "Most units would be satisfied, but this great battalion is never content to rest on its laurels. Its personnel constantly challenge themselves in their drive toward perfection."

That perfection has earned the respect of the special operations community, he said.



Ann McDonald

Maj. Dorian T. Anderson (left), commander of troops, and Lt. Col. Joseph F. Hunt salute soldiers.

He extended his appreciation and then turned toward Jackson and welcomed him back to the battalion.

Jackson, he noted, was a member of the battalion when it was formed in 1984.

"He is eminently qualified for this position," he said. "He is a superb trainer and dedicated professional who understands Rangers and what they require."

Kernan expressed his confidence in Jackson and turned the podium to the outgoing commander.

Hunt recapped on the major events in his command and extended his thanks to all the Rangers who served under him.

"These men are worthy of everything we can bestow on them," Hunt told the audience. "They are the true warriors of today's Army."

As Hunt exited the podium, he reminded the soldiers on the field: "Keep fit, shoot straight, keep your plans simple, be disciplined to accept change and execute with a uncomprising aggressiveness."

It was then the new commander's turn. Jackson kept it simple.

"All policies remain in effect," he said.

Decals must be removed when car registration ends

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Official decals and tabs must be removed from privately-owned vehicles when registration is terminated, according to Military Police officials.

Active-duty servicemembers and civilian employees must remove the decals and clear the Vehicle Registration Section when they:

- sell or dispose of the vehicle,
- separate from the service,
- terminate civilian employment,
- discontinue operation of the vehicle on post,
- are barred from post,
- have driving privileges revoked,
- transfer to another duty station (no family members remaining in the Fort Benning area).

The Vehicle Registration Office is located in Building 2621, Soldiers' Plaza. The office operates Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Officer Refresher Course reunion planned

USAIC Public Affairs Office

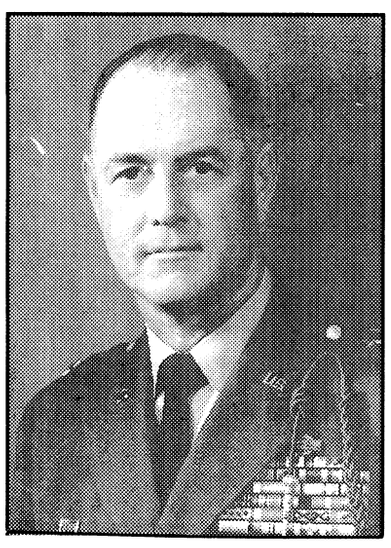
A reunion for graduates from the first class of the Officer Refresher Course is being planned, according to one alummnus.

Retired Maj. Gen. Albert H. Smith Jr., a member of the first class of the refresher course for rifle company replacements, said the course provided a framework for Officer Candidate School training.

Smith said Fort Benning's history over the past five decades is highlighted by awesome training challenges followed by outstanding training achievements.

One of the most important results ever achieved was the tremendous production of combat ready lieutenants during the World War II, he said.

They filled the ranks of the eight million man and 90 division Army.



Albert H. Smith Jr.

The Thomason Act, which was passed in August 1935, provided for the training of 1,000 reserve second lieutenants for periods of one year at regular Army installations.

At the end of each training period, 50 members of each class were selected for appointment as commissioned officers in the regular Army.

From July 8 to Aug. 7, 1940, Thomason Act lieutenants received an Officer Refresher Course for the first time before joining their assigned regiments.

According to Smith, the success of that one month headstart experiment led to a series of a three month refresher courses for many more Army Reserve and National Guard officers.

"All these endeavors contributed greatly to our World War II victories," Smith said.

Today's Infantry officer basic training can trace its roots to that initial refresher training of July to August 1940.

"The goal remains the same; provide our new lieutenants with every opportunity to perfect their Infantry skills through hands-on training before assuming troop command," he said.

"Their increased professional confidence combined with a better understanding of effective training methods must certainly enhance unit combat readiness and that is the desired end result now, as it was 50 years ago."

All local alumni who are interested can contact Smith at 602-297-9237.

Energy-efficient windows lower air-conditioning costs

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Your air conditioner works hard to cool you off in the summer, but ordinary windows keep letting in the heat. This is where low-E glass comes into play. This glass reduces the heat flow and saves the view.

Windows, long considered the weakest link in home energy conservation, have begun to redeem themselves.

A new type of coated window glass that keeps the heat where you want it, when you want it, is available from many manufactures.

Windows using this glass cost between 8 and 25 percent more than conventional windows, but by lowering utility bills they will save you money for the life of the product.

The key to these comfort-giving windows is a microscopically thin layer of metal oxides that is applied to the glass.

The coatings and the glass they are applied to are referred to as "low-E," or "low emissivity."

The metal oxide coatings allow most visible light to pass through, but they bounce heat back.

Thanks to the low-E, the heat you need in winter stays indoors and the heat you loathe in summer stays outdoors.

Low-E glass also blocks ultraviolet light, which can fade fabrics, carpets and floor materials.

There are two basic types of low-E coatings, The hard-coat type is baked into the glass. The soft-coat type is deposited on the surface of the glass and sealed in an enclosed air space.

One type of glass, called Heat Mirror, uses a soft coating on a thin polyester film suspended between two layers of glass.

Another technique uses argon gas sealed inside a coated, double-pane window for extra insulation.

Hard-coat glass is more durable and scratch resistant, but the soft coatings insulate better.

Heat Mirror and argon-gas-filled glass insulate best, with values of up to R-4 or higher.

That's technical talk for resistance to heat flow.

Because of its durability, hard-coat low-E glass is especially well and transmits a fair amount of solar energy.

In our hot climate, it's best to look for coating that blocks the most solar gain, especially for east and west-facing glass.

Under these conditions, use a Heat Mirror-type coating, or a coating on the outdoor pane of a double-pane window.

If you have any questions about this or any energy-related subject, call the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Howard O. McGillin Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: My wife and I retired in the Columbus area. We are both in our sixties. Last week, I heard that the Supreme Court has changed the law on the rights of the terminally ill. The television reporter mentioned something about a "living will." My wife and I both have wills that Legal Assistance prepared for us some years ago. Is this what the reporter was talking about?

A: A "living will" is a relative newcomer in the legal arena. They have really only been recognized since 1976. They are very different from the regular will.

When most of us think of a will, we think of a document used to distribute property after death. That document is know as a testamentary will.

A living will is a document used to state a person's desires regarding to the use of life saving procedures in the case of terminal illness or severe injury.

It allows each person to tell their family and doctors what kind of care they want to receive, when they cannot express their desires themselves.

A living will, like a testamentary will, is not just for senior citizens. Any person over age 18 can make out a living will.

Both Georgia and Alabama have statutes that recognize the living will. Both states prescribe a specific format for the will.

Unfortunately; the formats are very different. There is considerable question whether an Alabama living will is valid in Georgia.

We recommend that soldiers, retirees and their dependents, who live in Alabama and use Martin Army Community Hospital, or other medical facilities in the Columbus area, have both Alabama and Georgia living wills.

The Legal Assistance Office at Fort Benning can prepare a living will for Alabama, Georgia and many other states.

Although the forms are different, many of the living will statutes have a similar language and effect.

Georgia's living will statute is typical of many states. The Georgia form says, "If at any time I should have a terminal condition as defined in (the Georgia Code), I direct that the application of life-sustaining procedures to my body be withheld or withdrawn and that I be permitted to die."

The code specifies that two doctors must agree that the patient's condition is terminal.

They also must agree that the only result of applying life-sustaining procedures will be to prolong the life of the patient, without any hope for a cure or recovery.

Similar to a testamentary will, you can revoke a living will at any time.

The law also provides that a living will is ineffective if the patient is a woman who is pregnant.

If you have any questions about the living will or want to have one prepared, call the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-3281.

Chivalry lives for modern-day knights

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

Chivalry didn't die with the knights of the Middle Ages.

Just ask anyone who witnessed the courtesy swordsmen displayed during a recent medieval war demonstration outside Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The occasion was a double elimination tournament featuring 16 "authorized fighters" from a six-state regional area comprising one of 12 "kingdoms" for medieval weapons enthusiasts in the United States.

The Society for Creative Anachronisms, a non-profit, educational organization headquartered in California, sets corporate policy for all such competitions.

Decked out in medieval costume, each contestant bowed to his king, his lady, the spectators and his opponent before the fight began.

Although the swordplay was intense, marshals closely monitored the exchange, and each fighter was careful to abide by the rules of the tournament.

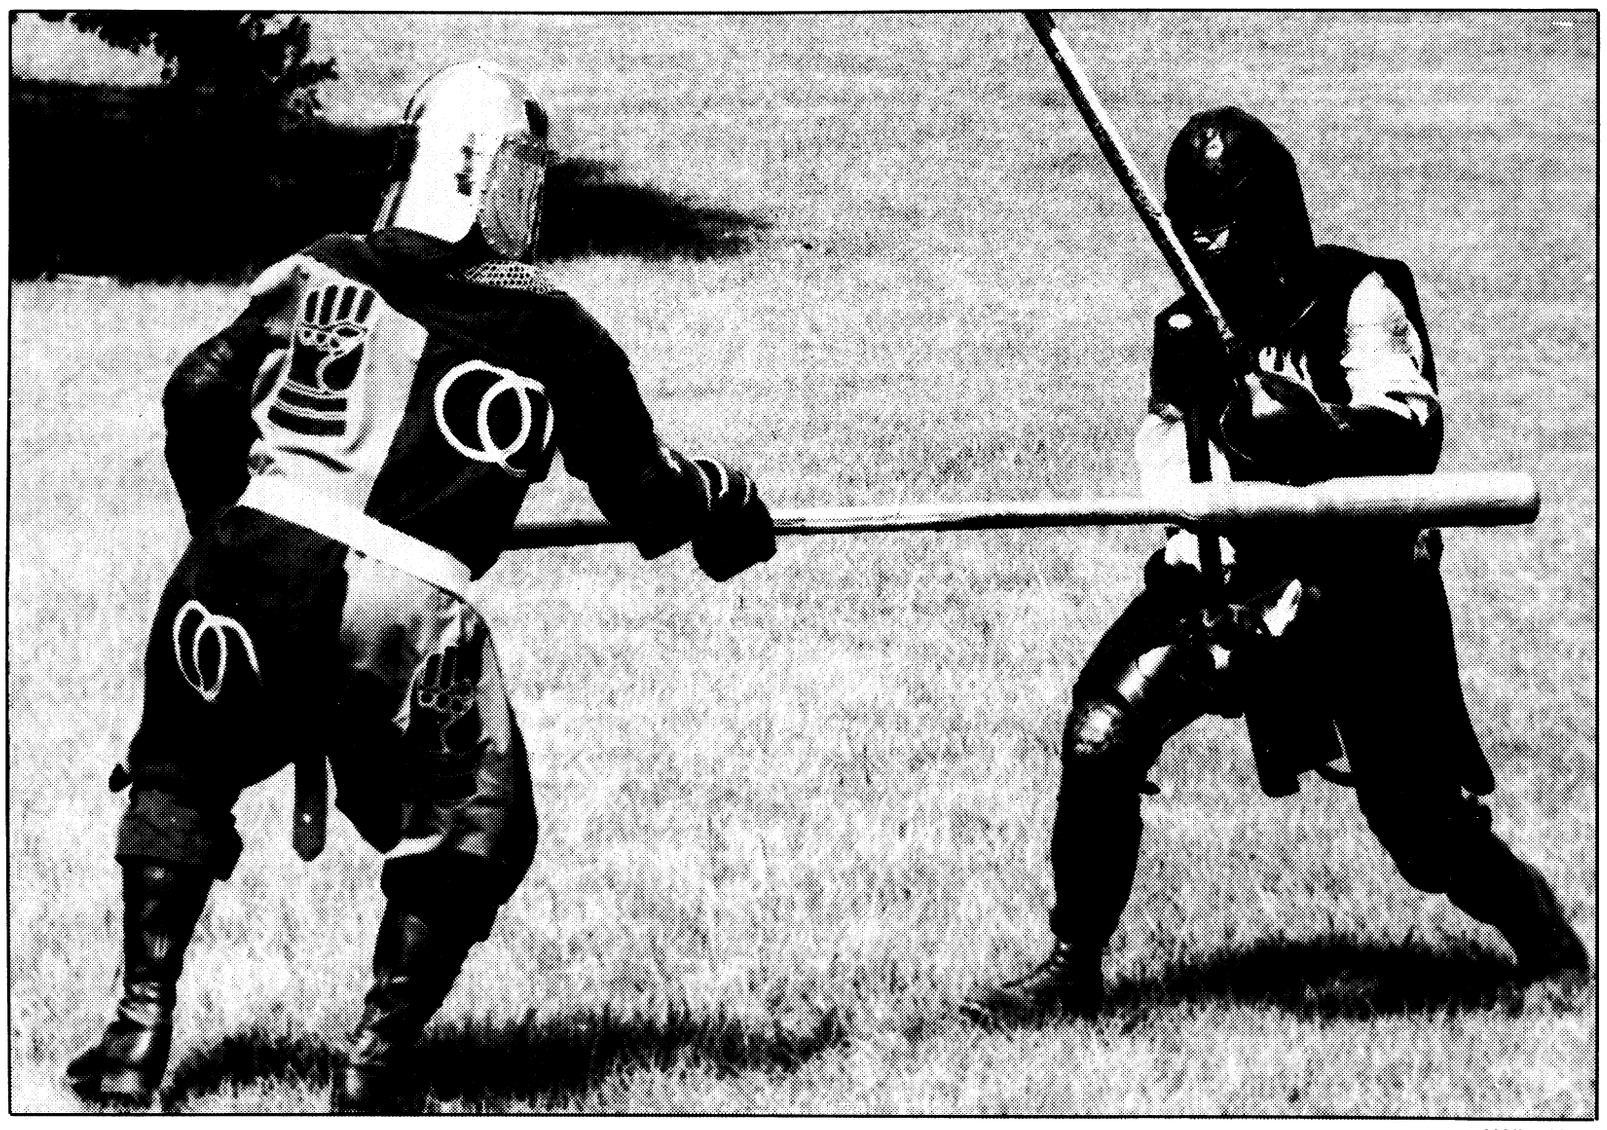
"Fighters are required to cover all joints, elbows, knees, neck and hands with metal," said Capt. Alexander Steel, from the Inantry School and one of a handful of fighters from the "Shire of Rivermarch," a local group that meets in the St. Thomas Episcopal Church of Columbus.

"We also must wear a breast plate, helmet and 'social protection' (groin covering). The blows we deliver are full force, and none of the fights is choreographed."

According to Steel, tournament rules require each fighter to use only weapons made of rattan, a wood that breaks without splintering and is most often encountered in wickerwork.

Each contestant's sword tip must "give" approximately one inch on contact, and polearms and poleaxes are masked with tape to cover sharp edges and lessen the chances of injury.

"A thrust to the body should be of sufficient force to knock the fighter back," Steel continued. "On the other hand, you're allowed only to touch to your opponent's face because you could easily break his neck. A touch to another fighter's open face is considered a kill."



Willie Hay

Spec. Michael Labny, an air traffic controller from Lawson Army Airfield, squares off against a knight.

Another Fort Benning fighter, Sgt. 1st Class Gilbert Cameron, an administrative noncommissioned officer with the 197th Infantry Brigade, explained how someone interested in medieval battle techniques can obtain authorization to enter tournament play.

"We never let someone off the street into a tournament until we've taught them arming techniques and fighting skills," Cameron said.

"You first need to design your own sword and shield and practice until you've developed a defense to prevent another fighter from hitting you at will," he said. "It doesn't have to be a particularly good defense, but it has to be strong enough to make you competitive.

"You also need to know at least one of the different offenses so you can hit somebody back."

According to Cameron, trainee fighters can become authorized after polishing their techniques for a few weeks and demonstrating that they can fight without injuring themselves to the satisfaction of at least two other fighters, a knight and a knight marshal — the person who referees tournaments.

"Authorized fighters receive a card from the kingdom-level office and may fight in any tournament for two years," he said.

Steel pointed out that there's much more than an interest in weaponry and tournament play to the ideal of chivalry.

"Everyone adopts a persona, or character role, of someone who could have lived between A.D. 600 and 1600 in Western Europe," Steel explained. "You choose a name and a period and model your costumes and attitudes after that fictitious person.

"I chose a Norman — Alain Fitz William L'Ailelion — because the Normans had conquests all over Europe, including England, southern Italy, Sicily, and parts of Greece and the Middle East," he continued.

"After you've trained yourself to fight, a knight may choose you to become a squire and fight by his side in battle," Steel said.

"But few achieve knighthood because that distinction is reserved for those who are deemed peer by other knights in the kingdom, not only for their fighting skills but also in courtesy, honor and chivalry. The rest of us merely strive to reach their ideal."

Such ideals often appeal not only to men, but also to their families.

"I find it engrossing because I enjoy researching the history of the times and developing my whole persona," said Steel's wife, Frances. "You can let it take over your whole life or you can compartmentalize it and say, I'm only going to practice this hobby when I have a free weekend."

The Shire of Rivermarch welcomes newcomers to its regular meetings on the second and fourth Mondays each month at 7:30 p.m. in the St. Thomas Episcopal Church, 2100 Hilton Avenue.

Interested persons can also drop in to watch fighters practice every Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. at the same location.

For more information, call Alexander or Frances Steel at 568-3303.

Summer program educates children

By Jeremy Sturgeon
Bayonet staff writer

Sayers Memorial Library kicked off its Summer Children's Program with a tour of the Confederate Naval Museum in Columbus June 28.

The children learned about Civil War Naval history by viewing artifacts, models and paintings that were on display.

Outside the museum, the remains of the ironclad ram Jackson and the gunboat Chattahoochee, two Confederate ships, lay.

Columbus has a not-so-well known history in Civil War shipbuilding, according to museum officials.

The Confederate Naval Museum has much to offer because it is the second largest of its kind, museum officials said.

Sayers Memorial Library's summer program is each Wednesday from 2 to 3:30 p.m. for children in grades first to sixth.

Other activities planned for the summer are:

Jeremy Sturgeon

Two Fort Benning family members look at a cannon at the Confederate Naval Museum.

Wednesday and July 18, Library Computer Training — Children will learn how to use the library computers to locate books. Instructors: John Cook, library director, and Ann Pierce, reference librarian.

July 25, Guided tour of the Infantry Museum. Children will tour the museum and see military art, weapons and a recreated sutler's store.

For more information about the Summer Children's Program, call Ann Pierce at Sayers Memorial Library at 545-4911.

Distinguished award recipients tour post

By C. E. Daniel Jr.
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

A Congressional Medal of Honor recipient and a Victoria Cross recipient toured Fort Benning June 26 through June 28.

Retired Col. Lewis Millet and Retired Warrant Officer Keith Payne, of the Royal Australian Infantry Corps watched a parachute jump and toured the National Infantry Museum.

Millet and Payne also visited Post Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Garrett and noncommissioned officers from the 998th Military Police Company and the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Millet was awarded the Medal of Honor for leading a bayonet charge against a numerically superior force in Korea in 1951.

He was also decorated for many other acts of bravery in both World War II and Korea.

He is the National Commander of the Legion of Valor, an organization whose membership consists of recipients of the Medal of Honor and the Distinguished Service Cross.

Payne was awarded the Victoria Cross for his heroic efforts against the North Vietnamese Army in 1969.

Payne and many other Australian soldiers volunteered to fight alongside the U.S. in Vietnam, a little-known fact to many Americans.

He was the commander of an indigenous troop company when he earned the award.

Payne also received the Distinguished Service Cross for acts of bravery.

Millet and Payne first met at a Legion of Valor convention. After that, Millet set up an orientation tour of U.S. military bases for Payne through the Department of the Army.

After Fort Benning, they will tour Fort Campbell and then attend a Legion of Valor convention in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Their trip will end at the 50th anniversary celebration of the Airborne in Washington, D.C.

AUSA golfers scramble

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Duffers from the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Association of the U.S. Army took to the greens at the Follow-Me Golf Course for the chapter's biannual golf tournament.

The four-ball scramble tournament was a complete success said golf professional George Cliff.

The four-ball scramble method is used to expedite playing time according to Cliff.

Time is saved because each member of the foursome tees off. The ball used for play is the best shot made out of the four. This eliminates the time used hitting each individual's shot.

Newly-installed Chapter President Ben F. Williams presided over the tournament in his first official act in office.

Rock of Marne defeats Deeds; wins post title

By Agatha Hudson James and Jeremy Sturgeon
Bayonet staff

Two teams from the Infantry Training Center met in what turned out to be a rematch of a regular season game and battled it out for the title of U.S. Army Infantry Center First Season Softball Champions June 22.

1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, Rock of the Marne defeated the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Deeds, 6-2.

The teams had met during the regular season, and the Deeds had won in extra innings, 9-8. But, it was all Rock of the Marne in the championship game.

The game was a defensive struggle, according to Skip Johnson, player and coach for Rock of the Marne.

Johnson said it was his team's solid pitching and outstanding defense that held 4th Bn., 36th Inf., to two runs.

Rock of the Marne led 1-0 until the fifth, although the Deeds threatened to score in the second when a batter made a short, choppy hit to second.

The Marne's John Wilkinson made the catch and threw the ball to Johnson at home to end the inning.

Don Dietz hit a two-run double in the top of the fifth, giving the Marne a 3-0 lead. Then, in the bottom half of the fifth, the Deeds got on the scoreboard with one run.

Henry Wilkins hit a two-run homer in the sixth, and the Marne led 5-1.

"That was the icing on the cake," Johnson said. "We knew we had them at that point."

The Deeds added one more run in the seventh, and Rock of the Marne added one more bringing the final score to 6-2.

Johnson said the 4th Bn., 36th Inf., was the only team that had scored nine runs – more than all the other teams together – on his team throughout the regular season.

"We knew we had one of the best teams on post, and we felt confident that we would be in the championship game. We wanted the Deeds to be in the championship game, too. That way, we would have an opportunity to show everybody that we could beat them.

"Our pitcher, John Killingsworth, has been the bedrock of our success throughout the season, and he helped tremendously in this game," Johnson said.

With the bases loaded and one out in the ninth, Killingsworth struck out the last two batters to retire the side.

In the semifinals, the Deeds defeated the Military Police Activity and three other teams.

Rock of the Marne defeated 598th Maintenance Battalion.

MPA and 598th played a consolation game, and 598th won, 6-3.

Chief of Staff Col. Barry Mahek presented trophies to Rock of the Marne and the Deeds team members.

Fishermen offer tips

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

The next time you purchase a bass boat, consider doing the rigging yourself, or at least being present when the dealer does it.

That's the advice from Linda England and Fredda Lee, members of the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff and considered one of the best women fishermen in America.

"You can learn where everything is located and connected," explained England. "This can be an advantage if problems, especially electrical problems, occur when you're on the water.

"You can usually go straight to the trouble spot and correct."

One tip both England and Lee offer is to attach the boat's battery boxes with screws so they remain stationary in rough water.

"If you're in really rough water," said Lee, "a bouncing ride can shift a battery, which in turn could break a wire or cause a bad connection that would result in a loss of engine power.

Post Family Life Center offers help to soldiers

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

New house, new school, new friends.

A never-ending list of changes shadow the military family throughout the years.

Changes of the peaceful variety envelop the world and the effect on the "peace offensive" is clear.

But for those who have devoted their careers to the military, staff cuts not only affect their professionalism, but their lives as well.

Most Fort Benning inhabitants know someone who is affected by early retirement and elimination programs. It may be a co-worker, boss, or neighbor.

Most handle these interruptions in their careers like they did the many changes in their lives. But the struggle is just beginning.

These are the casualties of peace.

A support group for affected individuals and their families is ready for these casualties.

Those who have had their careers interrupted, are selected for early retirement or are selected for conditional/voluntary indefinite eliminations are invited to join.

"Completely confidential, the group is designed to help people meet the complex issues of transition in a caring, sensitive way," explained Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, chief of the Family Life Center.

The group meets at the Chaplains Family Life Center, building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 545-1760/5301.

LIGHT TOUCH
By Phil

Sure there must be intelligent life on Mars. You don't see them wasting 40 billion dollars to find out if there's life on earth.

A nodding acquaintance is one with whom you have nodding in common.

Don't marry for money. You can borrow it cheaper.

Business is like rowing upstream. When you stop trying to advance, you automatically drop back.
