Airborne celebrates 50 years

1/507th Blackhats, thousands of others convene in Washington

By Cole Bricker
Bayonet staff writer

More than 50 Blackhats and officers from the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, participated in the 50th anniversary celebration of the U.S. Army Airborne in Washington D.C. July 5 through Sunday.

The paratroopers arrived in our nation's capital July 5 to prepare for Saturday's kickoff parade.

The parade was the beginning of several weekend events that included organizational banquets and a memorial service.

Led by grand marshal retired Gen. William C. Westmoreland, the parade was the highlight of the celebration.

According to Capt. Peter Simon of the 507th, marching in the parade was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

The parade began on the corner of Constitution Avenue and 7th Street.

Paratroopers, both active duty and veterans, marched through the streets of D.C., while thousands of spectators cheered.

Color guards and bands from throughout the Armed Forces also were on hand to honor the Airborne.

As parade participants turned onto Pennsylvania Avenue, they faced the capitol building. The paratroopers from Fort Benning marched proudly pass the review stand occupied by Westmoreland.

Friday evening, the Blackhats attended a banquet hosted by the 507th Parachute Inf. Regt. Association (World War II veterans).

1st Bn., 507th PIR Commander Lt. Col. Marcel Lettre was the guest speaker.

He spoke about the quality of today's paratroopers, the professionalism of Airborne instructors and the dedication of the 507th to maintaining high standards.

Also, the Instructor of the Year Sgt. 1st Class Henry McEachern, Company D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, was honored. He received a plaque.

Army announces new test to measure NCOs' job skills

Skills Qualifications Test could become obsolete

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A new test to measure noncommissioned soldiers' knowledge of their military occupational specialties was announced July 5 by Department of Army officials.

The new system of testing would make the Skills Qualifications Test now used to access MOS knowledge obsolete for noncommissioned officers.

The new test, the noncommissioned officer self-developmental test, is an innovative formula that would allow for greater freedom and less rigid stipulations for NCOs than the SQT.

"The Army will establish a series of NCO self-developmental tests so that NCOs can measure and guide growth in their professional competence — the skills and proficiencies our sergeants will need as they continue to develop as leaders," said Army Chief of Staff Carl E. Vuono.

While the new test will not totally replace the standard SQT, it will place the responsibility of preparation totally on the individual, and it will be a major factor in the determination of NCO promotion, assignment, school selection and retention.

The NCO SDT is currently being developed by the Training and Doctrine Command and will be administered in the way as the SDT currently is. NCOs in the grades of sergeant through sergeant first class will take the test every other year.

Vuono places a renewed emphasis on the NCO as the leader and trainer of soldiers, and the inception of the NCO SDT holds the promise that the young soldier of today will be the strong professional NCO of tomorrow.

"Our sergeants today reflect the qualities of competence, responsibility, and commitment that are the essence of professionalism." Vuono said.

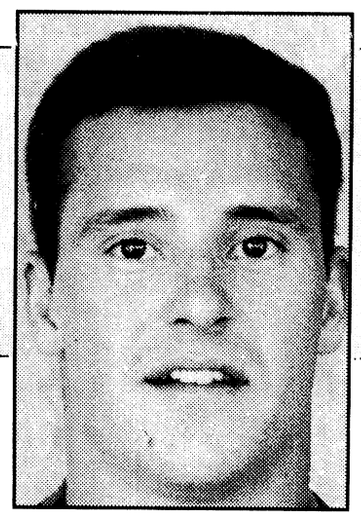
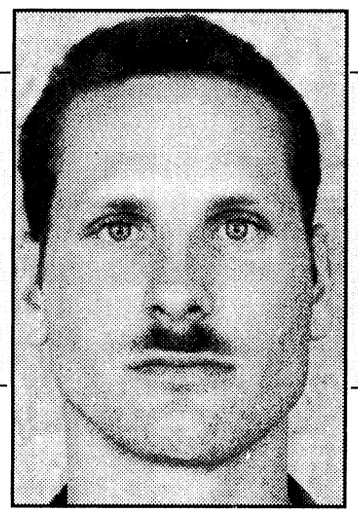
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:
What do you think of the anticipated strength reductions in the Armed Forces?



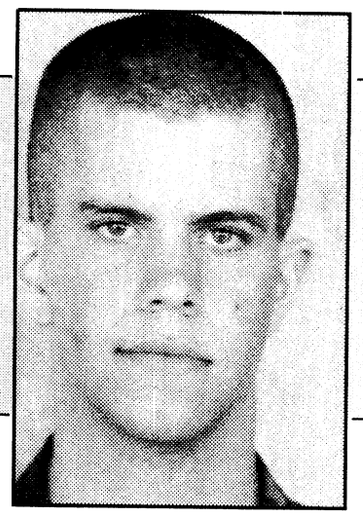
Pfc. Terrence J. Bysinger, Co. C., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "Troop reduction is a big mistake. I have been overseas, and I feel that the overseas situation, at this time, is still unstable. Russia is still not to be trusted. People just don't realize how large the Soviets' military force really is."



Spec. Kurt R. Zugates, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "We'll lose some good NCOs. The reductions really hurt our country's strength. We haven't heard Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev say anything definite about cutting back his country's troops."

Sgt. Bernard J. Harden, Co. B., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "I really hate it, because there are several good soldiers who need the Army. It's their sole means of financial support."

Capt. Mark L. Reynolds, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "Troop reductions will have a positive impact on reducing the nation's deficit. The damage to the military will be negligible as long as we concentrate on retaining our top soldiers."



Pvt. Brian D. Jenkins, Co. A, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. — "I'm in the Nebraska National Guard, and we may definitely feel the effects of this. Smaller units, such as mine, will probably shut down. If an emergency should arise on a national level, it will be difficult for us to protect ourselves."

Despite strength cuts, Army will be here a while

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's probably no secret that the Armed Forces are being cut. The big questions are how many and how fast.

Army folks are telling Congress 35,000 of us green-suiters a year can go without breaking the system. More than that and we're in trouble.

They're also saying the Army shouldn't drop below 550,000. Apparently that's "critical mass." Go below that and we're hurting.

At least there's a plan afoot to help those leaving the Army, through special training, to find jobs and get hired.

There's also an experimental program afoot for NCOs.

Someone, rightfully so, decided NCOs would be good teachers. After all, isn't that what they do? So, they'll be given training and then sent out to teach, and I might add, instill some discipline.

I heard the pay runs about $30,000 — whoa, no stampedes now.

I've been talking to civilians who are asking what those of us remaining are going to do if there isn't a threat.

First, I ask them how they decided there was no threat.

"Been reading newspapers, watching TV?" I ask sarcastically before launching into my thoughts on the matter, such as:

— How many of its 150 divisions have the Soviet's eliminated? How many are still in the Eastern Bloc countries?

— Compare that to our 18, soon to be 16. This isn't a threat? I don't care how bad the morale is over there, that's a lot of soldiers, tanks and artillery pieces against not so many.

— Speaking of tanks, we were cranking out about 60 a month. The Soviets, 250 a month.

We're closing tank plants. What are the Soviets doing? They're producing 250 a month still.

No threat remaining?

Okay, I'm a pessimist or a warmonger. But, a guy I talked to the other day, a Korean War veteran who was member of Task Force Smith — the 21st Infantry plus artillery that was called on to stop the North Koreans from pushing us into the sea — said he has visions of the Army returning to those days — untrained, ill-equipped, under-manned. That's one guy on our side.

Then there are the Third World countries that are running out of resources and are beginning to look around to see what their neighbors have.

Who's going to referee some of those conflicts if our Army is incapable of moving, especially if units like the 197th don't have the fuel, beans and bullets to leave Kelley Hill?

I also see where more and more military assets are being used for the war on drugs. Now we've got advisors in all sorts of exotic places, like the mountains of Peru, helping the local folks and the DEA in their efforts to stem the drug trade.

Then, there's the environment and disaster relief. Army guys and gals are being used to help clean up the environment, to rebuild places devasted by earthquakes, fires and hurricanes.

I personally think the Army will be around for a while.

As for me, I think I'll go out and pet a red, cockaded woodpecker.

National anthem deserves our undivided attention

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

At a recent baseball game, I saw something that made me wonder about many Americans' patriotism.

As a singer belted out the hard to reach high notes of "The Star-Spangled Banner," I noticed that many people were oblivious to what was happening.

People continued to eat their hotdogs and talk. Children ran in and out of the crowd. One man got annoyed because a concessioner wouldn't take his order.

But, the saddest thing I saw was a young boy, who after snapping to attention at the first note of the song and placing his hand over heart, slowly, but with embarrassment, dropped his hand back to his side after looking around and noticing that he was in the minority.

This boy's moment of patriotism didn't last long.

I grew up in the military and was dubbed "an Air Force brat" at birth. Twenty years later, my family jokingly calls me an "Army grunt."

Having lived in five states and four countries and visited a handful more, I've gotten a taste of many cultures.

I never know how to answer the question, "Where are you from." I don't know whether to say the place where I was born, where I just came from or where I lived the longest.

The names of the cities sometimes get jumbled and lost in my memory.

I've never forgotten, however, who I am. An American.

When I was growing up, I didn't always understand why the military sent us where it did or what my father's job was, but I always knew it had something to do with me being an American.

As a child living overseas, there were constant reminders of my nationality.

The national anthem was played before every movie I saw at the base theater.

Every day promptly at 5 p.m. the loud speakers would echo the anthem across the base as the flag came down.

At night, as the Armed Forces Network went off the air, the anthem would be played again.

For as long as I can remember, I've known that song and what it stands for.

Because, I am an American.

Now, I'm on active duty in the military, and I'm stationed in the states for the first time in more than six years. As I observe people at various functions, I'm beginning to think that some Americans have forgotten who they are.

If the young boy who was embarrassed to show patriotism to his country is an example of future generations, we won't have anyone fighting for amendments to protect our flag.

Nobody will care.

I will always stand tall, hand over my heart, when I hear that song — our National Anthem.

Because, I am an American.

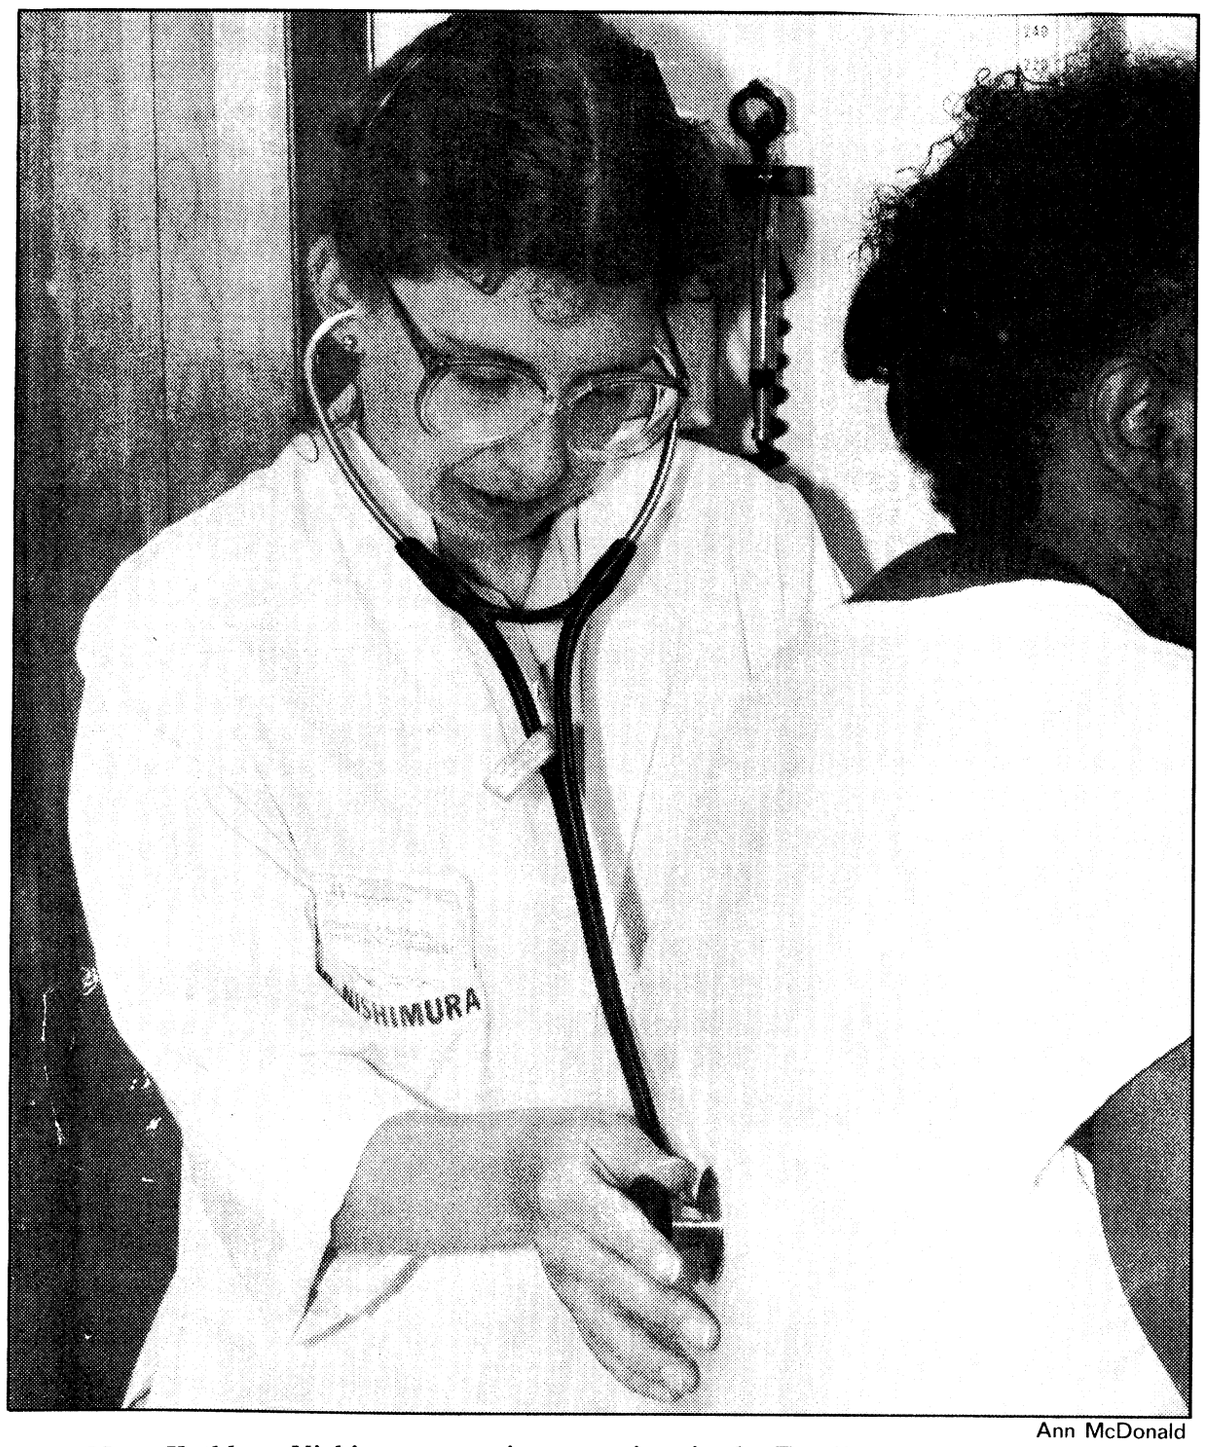
Family Practice physicians 'do it all'



Ann McDonald

Capt. Mary Kathleen Nishimura examines a patient in the Family Practice Clinic.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Whether it's delivering a baby, caring for a dying cancer patient or sewing up a laceration on a little boy, family practice residents are trained to "do it all," said the program's director.

Maj. Ted Epperly heads up the program located in the clinic wing of Martin Army Community Hospital.

The program was established in 1972 as the Army's first family practice residency and is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education according to Epperly.

"It's the only residency program in the hospital," Epperly said, "so the staff is able to devote total dedication to the education of its residents."

There are 27 residents in all — nine in each year of the three-year rotating program.

Although the program was established here in 1972, Epperly said the specialty of family practice was created in 1969.

"This specialty allows each family physician to provide continuing and comprehensive care in a personalized manner to patients of all ages and to their families," he said.

"The physician accepts the responsibility of an individual's total health needs while maintaining an intimate, confidential and personal relationship with the patient."

Epperly said the family practice physician is trained to understand and call upon the expertise of more than 40 medical specialties.

Acquiring this knowledge requires a lot of time and dedication.

A typical first-year resident or intern does clinical rotations in internal medicine, emergency room, pediatric, outpatient care, obstetrics, surgery and neonatal intensive care.

A second-year resident does clinical rotations in internal medicine; geriatrics; pediatrics; family practice; outpatient care; cardiology; dermatology; ears, nose and throat; orthopedics; and obstetrics.

Third-year residents do rotations in internal medicine, gynecology, obstetrics, urology, ophthalmology, neurology, psychiatry, community medicine, podiatry, pediatrics and family medicine.

Epperly said all this is sandwiched between 24-hours of on-call duty; caring for patients in the family practice center; attending conferences and seminars; and other miscellaneous activities.

Capt. Lise Cote just graduated from the program.

She said she chose this field because she didn't want to specialize.

"I wanted to have a well rounded education with my medical training," Cote said. "Family practice allows me to be proficient enough to answer almost any question or at least know where to find the answer."

Family practice is always different, and that is more in tune with what the newly graduated resident had in mind.

However, there was something the doctor didn't expect — what you get back.

"This field is demanding, but the patients will always give you something back," she said. "They will say thanks for listening, or they will bake you cookies at Christmas."

Cote continued to say that is why she went into medicine.

"It helps you deal with what is and isn't important in life," she said. "Also, it helps me with my interpersonal skills. I'm convinced that fmily practice gives you an avenue to whatever you want to do."

Post implements water policy

By Soong-Bum Ahn
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning has implemented a water conservation policy effective during the summer months.

The policy regulates lawn watering and is designed to ease the load on the post water supply system.

The lawn watering policy levels out the use of water and prevents overload on the system.

Lawn watering times are: Family Housing (except for Custer Terrace) — Sundays, 6 until 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. until midnight. Wednesdays and Fridays, 5 p.m until midnight.

Custer Terrace — Saturdays, 6 until 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. until midnight; Tuesdays and Thursdays, 5 p.m. until midnight.

All other offices and buildings on post — Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, 5 to 9 a.m.

Thousands attend July 4th celebration

Families gather for food, fun, fireworks

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Over 7,000 people of Fort Benning and the surrounding communities came together July 4 at York Field to celebrate the sixth annual Association of the U.S. Army Independence Day picnic.

The warm weather and patriotic spirit combined to produce "one of the most successful picnics ever," according to Sgt. Wade Shell, AUSA volunteer administrator.

Officer candidates from Company A, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, provided much support by manning many of the food and game booths at the picnic.

The 1990 AUSA queen Valerie Smith from the Medical Department Activity and court member The School Brigade subchapter queen Lisa Branchcomb also lent a helping hand, offering their services at the dunking booth.

Music lovers were treated to sounds that spanned the spectrum, from the subdued hush of violins to the crazy wail of an electric guitar.

The 283rd Army band and rock band Misty Harbor performed several pieces, entertaining the audience throughout the duration of the picnic.

The crowd was thrilled with two breath-taking demonstrations by the Silver Wings exhibition parachute team of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Soldiers from the Ranger Training Brigade performed a Rangers in Action demonstration consisting of an air assault routine.

The highlight of the evening was the fireworks display sponsored by the the post Directorate of Community Activities.

As the reds, blues and electric greens swirled together in a climatic effect, it provided the perfect ending to a wonderful celebration.

Shell said the picnic has been improving every year.

"We just keep growing, getting better and providing more fun and entertainment for the Fort Benning community," he said.

CHAMPUS changes claims processors

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services has a new claims processor effective July 1.

Wisconsin Physicians Service became the new intermediary on that date. That means all claims, regardless of the date of service, even those for care provided prior to July 1, should be submitted to WPS.

The address is P. O. Box 7891, Madison, Wis. 53707-7891. Their toll-free number is 1-800-866-6337.

Claims should no longer be submitted to Blue Cross and Blue Shield of South Carolina.

Patients who have already filed claims with Blue Cross and Blue Shield should contact WPS if they have questions.

All files have been transferred to WPS.

It is expected that this change in fiscal intermediaries will reduce the delays in claims processing that have created problems for some users of CHAMPUS.

Due to delays, some physicians have stopped accepting CHAMPUS assignment, and patients have to pay in full and get reimbursed later at a percentage of the customary and reasonable charge for the service provided.

Patients are advised to ask physicians if they accept assignment to avoid unexpected expenses.

Patients are also reminded that a statement of non-availability is required, in most cases, for CHAMPUS to cover inpatient care.

Outpatient care, however, does not require a non-availability statement. A valid identification card and enrollment in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System will suffice.

CHAMPUS beneficiaries should call 1-800-538-9552 to verify enrollment in DEERS.

Some people mistakenly believe that the government is supposed to pay all medical expenses for families of military members.

It seems that this idea just will not go away, despite the fact that only active-duty service members are guaranteed free medical care.

There is nothing anywhere in the law making CHAMPUS or any government agency responsible for medical bills of dependents.

Legal responsibility for such charges rests solely with the patient or the patient's parents or legal guardian, in the case of minors.

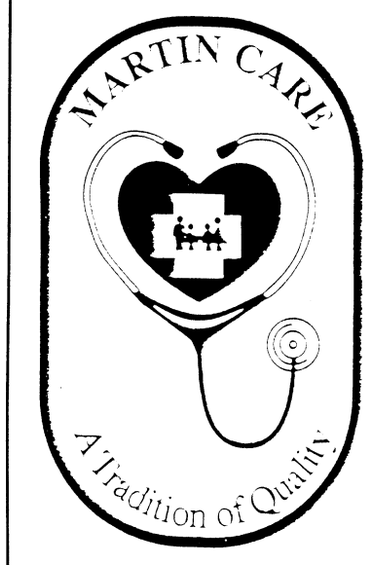
CHAMPUS is a cost-sharing program with responsibility for processing claims as quickly and accurately as possible.

But, if a CHAMPUS claim is not filed or if it is lost, mishandled or denied, the patient is still responsible for the bill. It is the patient, not CHAMPUS, who could be sued.

If CHAMPUS payment is delayed for any reason, it is advisable to go ahead and pay bills, especially small ones, even if you can only make partial payments on a monthly basis.

Most creditors will accept these arrangements and the laws in some states protect people from collections and harassment in such cases.

For more information, contact the CHAMPUS Office at Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3461.



Employees use TQM communication skills

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Simulations Branch, Concepts and Studies, Directorate of Combat Developments, is using the communication skills taught through Total Quality Management in more ways than one.

The U.S. Army Infantry School Directorate is doing this through effective implementation of ideas, which led a DCD employee to create a computer program that aids in communication, according to Maj. Thomas W. Stephens of DCD.

He said TQM has taught them to listen to deas and use them.

The latest idea is from John M. Broom, who created Broomcom, a computer program to make PROFS (professional office system), a form of electronic mail, even more useful.

Broom's program eliminates the extra numbers and letters that are not part of the information on a PROFS message.

"I can also create a file and save it so it can be used in the future," Broom said.

The value of program has been realized by other directorates.

"I have received all kinds of requests for my program," he said.

Stephens said the value of Broom's idea has even cut down on Temporary Duty and has made more efficient use of meeting time.

"Broomcom is a great idea, and I think he deserve's a pat on the back," Stephens said.

"It's nice to be noticed," Broom said. "Plus, it's really rewarding to have people want to use something I've created."

Airborne vets reminisce during memorial service

By Cole Bricker
Bayonet staff writer

Tears streamed down his face as the veteran stood proudly at attention and observed the reactivation of his old unit.

As the colors were uncased, memories of unforgotten comrades seemed to fill his mind.

This was the scene in a ceremony Sunday at R.F.K. Stadium in Washington, D.C., as thousands of veterans gathered to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Army Airborne.

The ceremony was both a celebration and a memorial service to honor the accomplishments of the airborne and those who have died as paratroopers.

During the ceremony, the colors of all the airborne units throughout U.S. Army history — hundred of them — were reactivated.

After the reactivation, children of fallen paratroopers came forward and placed thousands of roses in a circle of 50 stars in honor of those paratroopers who died in service to their country.

As they stood in silence, it seemed as if their hearts cried out in sorrow for the loss of their fallen comrades. But, they seemed to swell with pride to have fought and served with such a valiant fraternity of soldiers.

As the memorial service went on, guest speaker Gen. Carl W. Stiner talked about the importance of the Airborne in the past and of the role the Airborne would play in the future.

Stiner also recognized Pvt. Roberto Ruiz, a recent graduate of Airborne School, as the youngest paratrooper on active duty.

Ruiz said he joined the army and volunteered for the Airborne because he thought Airborne soldiers were the best in the Army.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ruth Anne Gero
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I recently married a soldier. We are moving soon, and I am concerned. I have heard stories about movers and the claims process. What should I know to make a good move and, if need be, a good claim?

A. The success of your move depends largely upon you. The movers have control of your property during the move, but the steps you take before shipping and after delivery affect your claim the most.

Remember that the government is not your personal insurer. The claims office, in most cases, will not pay you replacement cost on lost or damaged items, but will depreciate the item as is required by claims regulations.

In all cases, you must be able to show (1) proof of ownership, (2) proof of shipment of the item, and (3) proof of the quality of the item.

Keep these factors in mind when you are preparing for your move.

After you receive your orders, you will meet with people at the Transportation Office. They will give you preliminary information, including a booklet called "It's Your Move."

Keep the booklet and refer to it when you have a question. The transportation office will also counsel you on their own requirements.

Before the movers come to your home, ask yourself how you could prove that you owned certain items. You should consider creating your own inventory and having it witnessed by a disinterested third party.

Inventories are especially helpful for music tapes and records, compact discs, kitchen items, and books, because these items are often packed together. If the box were lost, could you remember everything that was in it? Could you prove that those items were in that box?

You might want to video tape or photograph certain items in your home, but this will not always settle the issue of value.

Receipts will help to place a value on your items. You may want to have the item appraised and insured before shipment. Many insurers, however, only cover missing or water-damaged items.

Some companies also sell replacement cost insurance which may be a good investment, especially if you own items that increase in value over time.

If you have insurance, you must file your claim with your insurer before the government will resolve your claim.

Separate your "proof of ownership and value" documents from the items themselves within the shipment.

It is best if you hand-carry these documents. If you cannot, duplicate important documents and safeguard them with someone you trust.

Do not ship small, extremely valuable or sentimental items. If you hand-carry these few items, you will save the heartache of having them damaged or lost in the move.

When the movers come, get involved. Observe the movers and make sure they accurately describe the item and its condition at origin.

If you disagree with the mover's assessment, write what you disagree with and why in the space on the inventory marked for exceptions.

Make sure the movers place a numbered sticker on every box or item. This is how you can prove that an item was shipped.

On the day of delivery, stand in the doorway and check off the items as they are delivered. Make sure that you have a system so you don't miss items.

Keep notes on your copy of the inventory. You have the responsibility of noting all missing items or items which are obviously damaged.

If you fail to note them on the Department of Army Form 1840 on the day of delivery, you cannot be compensated for that item.

Do not let the movers coerce you into signing for something you did not receive. If it is missing, note it. If it is damaged, note how it is damaged. When in doubt, write it out.

If, after you have unpacked, you find other missing or damaged items, note them on DA Form 1840R. This is a pink form on the back of DA Form 1840.

Your additional notes put the government and the movers on notice that these items were also missing or damaged.

If you fail to note an item on the DA Form 1840 or 1840R, you will not be compensated for it. Your initial claim must be presented to your nearest claims office within 70 days of delivery.

Your claims office will give you forms and additional information on how to process your claim.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

The Department of Energy has forwarded proposed legislation to Congress that would authorize sale of the government's interest in two commercial oil fields, including one of the nation's 10 largest oil reserves.

The legislation, formally cited as the "Naval Petroleum Reserves Divestiture and Energy Security Enhancement Act," sets into motion one of the efforts called for in President Bush's budget plan to transfer to private enterprise government-run operations that compete with similar activities in the commercial sector.

Terms of the proposed sale of the Naval Petroleum Reserves at Elk Hills in California and at Teapot Dome in Wyoming, call for the buyer to pay at least $1 billion to the government and to supply 50,000 barrels of crude oil per day through 1995 to help fill the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The buyer also would be required to furnish 10 million barrels of crude oil for a new Defense Petroleum Inventory that would provide the Defense Department with emergency crude oil supplies if needed in the future.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve, which is this country's first line of defense for energy security in the event of an oil supply disruption, would be strengthened by providing for an assured source of supply at an accelerated rate and at less cost to the government.

At current oil price projections, the value of the sale — including the initial payment plus the guaranteed oil for the Strategic Reserve and Defense Inventory — would total approximately 3 billion dollars.

The Naval Petroleum Reserves were originally established in 1912-24 to provide emergency liquid fuel supplies for the Navy.

The Elk Hills field in Kern County, Calif., run jointly with Chevron Corporation, is one of the nation's 10 largest oil fields, currently producing nearly 100,000 barrels of oil per day. The government's share of the oil and gas produced at the field is approximately 78 percent.

Teapot Dome, located near Casper, Wyo., is a much smaller field, producing about 3,000 barrels of oil per day. It is completely federally-owned.

Since 1976, oil and gas produced at the reserves have been sold on the commercial market to private bidders.

If Congress agrees to the sale, the 50,000 barrels per day of oil furnished by the buyers for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve would be added to 22,000 barrels per day purchased by the government in 1990 and 25,000 barrels per day of government-bought oil in 1991 through 1995.

At that rate, the Strategic Reserve's planned inventory of 750 million barrels would be reached early in fiscal year 1996.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Dry summer can bring fire hazards

By Soong-Bum Ahn
Bayonet staff writer

Summertime usually means long, hot, muggy days; kids out of school; and family vacations. The dry summer months can also mean increased fire hazards around quarters and training areas.

On a military post, the potential for fire exists throughout the year. However, the threat is the greatest during the dry summer months.

According to Raymond Xuereb of the Fort Benning Fire Prevention and Protection Division, the Fire Department usually responds to three to five calls a day during this period.

Xuereb said fires on ranges and training areas are the most common, resulting from pyrotechnics and training rounds.

However, fires do occur in recreational areas and quarters, mostly due to unsafe open flames and poorly maintained vehicles, he said.

According to Xuereb, the Fire Department has responded to over 1,730 calls since April of 1989 with a property value damage of almost $35,000.

The best way to prevent fires, according to Xuereb, is to foresee potential hazards.

In a training environment, the chances of fire can be reduced by tightly controlling the use of pyrotechnics and having a contingency plan and quipment available to stop a fire.

The summer months can be safe and fun if you are aware of the increased fire hazards and prepare for them.

A. No. Your address is privileged information and may not be released to anyone without your permission.

Q. — Should my father die as a result of his service-connected disability while hospitalized in a VA medical center, will VA pay the costs related to transporting his remains? He wants to be buried in a national cemetery in his hometown?

A. — Yes. When a veteran dies in a VA medical center, transportation costs may be paid to the nearest national cemetery having burial space available.

Q. — I am a veteran and also the widow of a veteran. Am I entitled to receive both a pension and widow's benefits?

A. — You may be entitled to both. Eligibility requirements must be met for both benefits, including home limitations.

Q. — I have a five-year level premium term insurance plan with the Department of Veterans Affairs. I would like to convert to one of the permanent plans. Will I have to take a physical to meet certain health requirements?

SEXUAL ABUSE

Victims carry painful secrets buried deep within. A support group is available to help them overcome the hurt.

Editors Note: This is the first part of a series on victims of sexual abuse. Future articles will include a look at other victims and a study of a support group offered by the Chaplains' Family Life Center.

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

She speaks five languages, writes music and is an accomplished artist and career woman. Outgoing and attractive, she would be almost anyone's idea of a healthy, happy person.

But deep inside, there is a scar from the pain of a 12-year-old girl, sexually abused by her father.

The child within this accomplished young woman forever struggles in pain, shame and torment.

Janet (not her real name) experiences many symptoms of a sexually abused person.

"When I read a list of possible symptoms of sexually abused victims, I felt as if I had had all of them," Janet said as she remembered her first session of the Survivors of Sexual Abuse, a support group facilitated by the post's Chaplains Office and designed to help victims talk about their problems.

"I spent most of my life thinking I was crazy," she said. "One psychologist told me he could offer little hope for a cure, but he could help me learn to deal with my pain."

Finally, Janet joined a group, which offered support from others who suffered from the same type of hurt.

Chaplain Richard Roggia, chief of the Chaplains' Family Life Center, which facilitates the support group, said he tells the members that they can learn to overcome their pain and get rid of it.

"If you want to be cured, you can be." Roggia tells victims during the first session.

"I tell group members that I will be able to help them only if they truly want to recover," he said. "The real change must come from within; no one can make the change for them. This gives sexual abuse victims responsibility for their own well being," he said.

"One key factor that brings about success is hope," he continued. "They soon learn that the group setting is a safe, comfortable environment, and they are free to leave at any time without explanation."

Meeting as a group teaches individuals that they are not alone in their pain or experiences, Roggia said.

"Members of the group learn how to reconnect with their inner child, and they learn to love comfort and nurture that child," Roggia said. "This begins the healing process."

He says it is common for women in their thirties to begin remembering childhood abuse, sometimes in the form of flashbacks or dreams. He says flashbacks are a normal response to traumatic experiences and are not a sign of mental illness.

Abuse studies show that there are many stages of awareness that childhood sexual abuse victims endure.

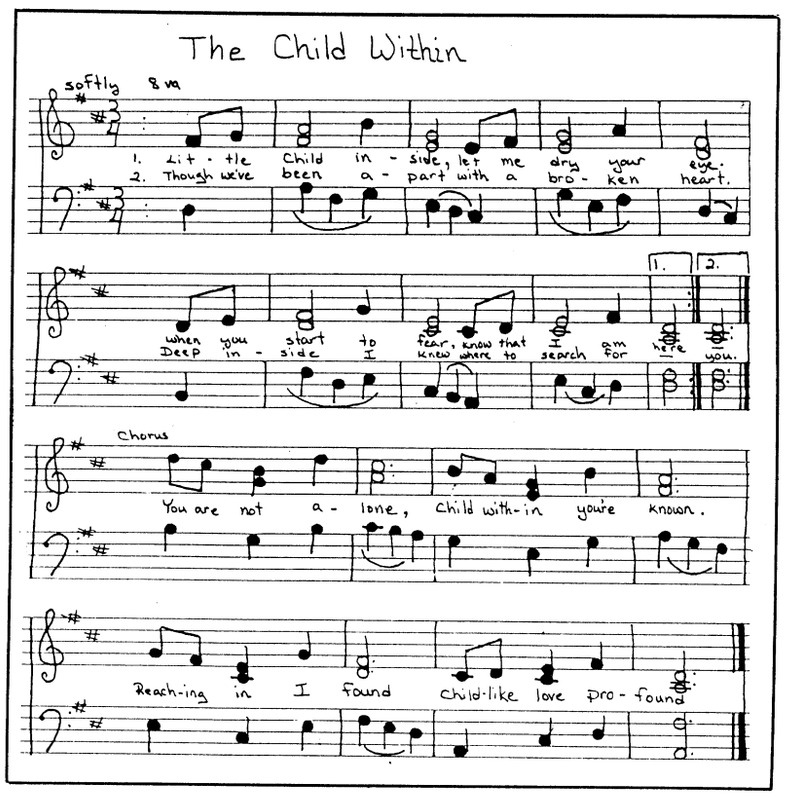
Some have no conscious memory of the abuse and deny their symptoms.

Others may suspect abuse and are aware of the symptoms, but simply don't remember.

Still other don't even realize that what has happened to them was in fact abuse.

Moreover, there are those who know they were abused but make no connection between the symptoms they have.

Finally, there are those who know were abused and are aware that their symptoms are caused by the abuse.



Musical score composed by a sexual abuse victim.

Many victims deny their feelings because family members ignore the problem. They may have low self-esteem and usually have problems in relationships and sexuality. They may have difficulties in expressing their emotions.

Also, some victims feel ugly inside and have a sense of worthlessness and helplessness. They have a tendency to sabotage their own success because they often believe they don't deserve good things.

"Some victims find trusting others virtually impossible," said Chaplain (Maj.) Richard D. Thompson, Family Life Enrichment officer of the U.S. Army Chaplaincy Services Support Agency in Washington, D.C.

"The hardest problem by far is for victims to break the silence barrier and talk about their abuse experience."

Thompson facilitated several support groups at Fort Eustis, Va., addressing this problem. Groups included incest survivors and adults molested as children.

Ann (not her real name), is another woman who has successfully completed the group sessions.

"I feel like I have freed myself from the guilt and pain of events in my childhood," she said. I learned that not all men are terrible and that there are two categories: men and abusers.

"This is the first time in my life I feel good enough about my body to wear shorts," she continued, adding that before she felt her body was too ugly.

"I am finally my own person; I have learned how to say no if I want to or yes because that is really how I feel.

"I want to come back to the next group as a facilitator, and I hope that others can benefit from sharing their experiences like I did," she said.

Previous group graduates serving as facilitators provide an opportunity for trust, Roggia said, adding that trust is a low commodity among victims. "They have a sense of isolation and difficulty dealing with authority figures," he said.

"There is no simple cure for the complications, but there is recovery," he said. "The key to recovery is to take the power away from the abuse by bringing the experience out in the open.

"One of the most important things victims need to learn is that the abuse was not their fault," Roggia said. "They did not relinquish their innocence; it was taken from them."

Peachtree race draws 40,000

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"I think it's the ultimate comraderie — forty-thousand people suffering together," said an 11-year veteran of the Peachtree Road Race.

Ron Gorday was just one of many runners from the Columbus-Fort Benning area who made the trip to Atlanta for the 21st annual race July 4.

That trip is one that Gorday said he'll keep on making until he just isn't able to anymore.

"I run this race because I believe it's the epitome of running. It's for the competitive and uncompetitive," he said. "I don't know of any other sporting event where thousands of people can participate all at once."

Hosted by the Atlanta Track Club, the race is billed the largest 10 kilometer race in the world. It draws runners from all over the world.

Men's open winner Dionicio Ceron of Mexico is a prime example.

He blazed through the course in 28 minutes, 23 seconds. Womens' open winner Cathy O'Brien of Dover, New Hampshire, ran a blistering 32:04.

Martin Army Community Hospital doctor Mark Berman attended a university five miles from O'Brien's home. He was the top finisher from Fort Benning.

Berman ran a 35:31 placing him in the top 200 in a field of 40,000 runners.

Other Benning runners noted in the top 1,000 finishers were Doug Berling and Delton Day.

While Berman, Berling and Day are examples of the competitive side, other Benning runners epitomize why Gorday keeps going back.

First-time Peachtree racer Fort Benning runner Bob Spencer breezed through the course at a steady eight-minute pace and just enjoyed being with all the runners.

"This is the first time I've run in this race; I was really impressed with how well the directors controlled 40,000 runners," he said. "I'll go back next year, just to be a part of it again. I thoroughly enjoyed running with that many people."

While it was the comraderie that struck Spencer, it was the peace that struck Fort Benning runner Tom Brophy.

"I've run in a lot of races, and I always feel a lot of tension from the other runners," he said. "I didn't feel that here. I didn't feel any stress at all. It was very festive."

According to Brophy, the race was festive from start to finish.

The start featured a live broadcast from a local radio station, and the finish sported water hoses for hot runners to cool off. Also, a live band played on the award stage.

"It was quite an event," he said. "I'm going to Panama, but I still might come back to run it next year."

Summer Waves makes splash

Summer Waves

Summer Waves season pass holders will get a bigger bang for their buck in 1990.

In addition to providing a summer's worth of fun at Jekyll's "Splashtacular" park featuring the new "Force 3," Summer Waves season passes will be honored at several other water parks in the Southeast.

"In a cooperative effort to promote the water fun and wholesome atmosphere available at water parks, our season passes will be honored at Myrtle Waves in Myrtle Beach, S.C., and three parks in Florida — Wild Waters in Ocala, Water Mania in Kissimmee and Buccaneer Bay in Weeki Wachi," said Rick Root, Summer Waves general manager. "This is a great way for people to experience good, old fashioned family fun at different water parks while they are away from home or on vacation," Root added.

Two types of Summer Waves season passes are available: the any day season pass for $65 and the weekday season pass for $55 good Monday through Friday and after 5 p.m. on weekends. Discounts on a graduated scale are given for additional passes purchased. "Four season passes will cost the same as last year, and this year the pass includes free use of inner tubes," Root said. Root added that the honoring of season passes at other parks is subject tot the host park's rules and regulations.

Summer Waves will feature a new water attraction, the "Force 3," when the park opens for weekends on May 12 and daily on May 26. From a 32-foot tower, the "Force 3" will have three different slides: an inner tube flume ride, an enclosed body slide with a 360-degree loop and an enclosed straight speed slide. The "Force 3" complements Summer Waves' "Frantic Atlantic" wave pool, "Slow Motion Ocean" endless river, "Hurricane" and "Tornado" serpentine slides, "Big Bounce" speed slides and "Pee Wee Puddle" children's area, with a new Kiddie Twister slide.

All day admissions to Summer Waves are $9.95 for adults, $7.50 for children ages 4 to 8 and free for children 3 and under. Senior Splash admissions (60 and over) and Night Splash admissions (after 4 p.m. weekdays and 5 p.m. weekends) are $5. Summer Waves is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday through Sunday.

For more information about Summer Waves, call the park at (912) 635-2074.

Scars from abusive relationships can heal with forgiveness, justice

By C. David Reese
3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Chaplain

There he was, fingers caught at the top of the rolled up car window, face distorted into a silent scream as he hung inside the hot car, his form lifeless.

He didn't look to be more than one-year-old. A helpless child in an empty car in the middle of a shopping center parking lot.

My heart raced as I spun the car around; I had caught the scene out of the corner of my eye as I drove past.

Thoughts emerged inside my head: should I break the glass, pry the window down, call the police? Why would anybody do such a thing?

As I pulled alongside the car, my fear turned to anger. It was a toy. A disgusting, revolting joke.

The child was nothing more than a foam torso, arms made of rubber, mouth grotesquely formed into scream. A sign was pinned to its shirt that said, "Brat on Board."

I prayed the owner was not a parent.

The sad fact is that it could have been real.

Hundreds of children die or are maimed for life each year because of unidentified anger inside their parents.

How many cases of child abuse go unreported each year because of a child's fear of further harm?

How many children grow up to become abusive parents, having suffered silently for years and unable to cope with their own feelings?

The problem extends to spouses.

Husbands and wives stay in abusive relationships because of fear or because of "love." Victims of abuse remain victims, unless they seek professional help.

The best fact is that help is available.

In the Columbus-Fort Benning area, there are many sources of help for victims of abuse. Most are committed to helping the person begin a process of healing from within.

They help them to understand that they do have options. They work together with the person to help grow a life that may have been cut short by mental or verbal abuse.

Support groups, counselors, church and synagogue resources are available to any victim. Victims do not have to remain victims anymore.

But the best fact of all is still this: it is God himself who remains the "Great Healer."

Whether it is a child, a man or a woman, God can provide forgiveness, justice and love to heal the scars left by an abusive relationship.

I believe God has given us the knowledge to address the pain through counseling. He has provided solid people of faith in various professions to say, "I care for you."

He has provided neighbors, friends and even strangers to heal one wound at a time.

A kind act. An encouraging word. A simple touch. . . all of these are God's way of proving that not every relationship hurts.

The Book of Revelation in the New Testament talks of a time when God will "wipe every tear from their eye. . . there will be no more crying or pain, for the old order of things has passed away. Behold, I am making everything new!" (Rev. 21: 4-5).

Even in this world, full of anger and hate, there is still room for part of that time to be now.

If we were to truly "love our neighbors as ourselves," then perhaps there would be no more victims at all.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

- Locate your category of housing.
- Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.
- Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date.

The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Whew! It's hot

Summer brings high temperatures, heat injuries

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Summer brings soaring temperatures; long, carefree days; balmy, mosquito-ridden nights; family vacations; and fun.

One thing that often fails to hit home during this season is the intensity of the heat and the very real possibility of sustaining a heat-related injury.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation 40-14 Medical Service Prevention of Heat Injury introduced May 29, heat injuries are largely due to the depletion of water and salt in the body, which is lost in perspiration.

Exertion of the body without replacing these vital body fluids is also a key factor, according to the regulation.

Sgt. 1st Class Harry R. Bennett, noncommissioned officer in charge of preventive medicine, Medical Department Activity, Martin Army Community Hospital here, agrees with the regulation and gives a few safety pointers that will help to protect from heat-related injuries.

"Drinking a lot more water is imperative during the summer months," Bennett said.

"Drink water at least two times more often than normal. Also, adding a bit more salt to food is a good way to replenish the salt that is lost in perspiration," he said.

Some of the symptoms of heat injury are: heavy breathing, headache, dizziness, nausea, profuse sweating and fainting, Bennett added.

If someone is discovered in this condition, immediately seek medical attention for them, Bennett said.

Until medical help arrives, move the person to a shaded area, loosen all restrictive clothing, administer a canteen of water to the person slowly, and stay with them for any additional assistance until more qualified help arrives, he said.

Bennett issues these words of advice for all personnel: Get use to the climate as quickly as possible, educate yourself to the symptom and treatment of heat injury, and drink water.

29th Infantry maintenance voted best in Armed Forces

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

A battalion from Fort Benning's 29th Infantry Regiment is the first Army unit to receive the Armed Forces' highest maintenence award.

Representatives from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, accepted the Phoenix Award for 1989, in a ceremony near Hill Air Force Base in Salt Lake City, Utah, July 11.

Capt. Rickey E. Finch, battalion maintenance officer, Warrant Officer Paul Blaylock, battalion maintenance technician, and Sam Harvel, civilian general foreman, attended the ceremony and accepted the award on behalf of the unit from Assistant Secretary of Defense for Production and Acquisition Colin McMillan.

Lt. Col. John A. Spears, battalion commander, found out his unit had won the award when Finch called him from Utah at 1 a.m.

"Colonel Spears didn't believe me at first, but later he was tickled pink," Finch said.

Spears and Finch attributed the unit's success to the ability of the soldiers and civilians to work together.

"It's not just the mechanics who make it work," Finch said. "It's the Infantrymen, the supply clerks, the communication and maintenance specialists. It's a battalion team effort."

The battalion was one of six units selected from the five branches of the Armed Forces to receive the Secretary of Defense Maintenance Award.

From among the six, one unit is then selected for the Phoenix Award for its exceptional maintenance accomplishments.

Units receiving the Secretary of Defense award included two from the Army, two from the Navy, one from the Air Force and one from the Marines.

1st Bn., 29th Inf.'s selection for the award came after a succession of other wins.

After winning a maintenance award at post level, the battalion went on to win at the Training and Doctrine Command level. From there the battalion went on to win, for the second time in a row, at Department of Army level.

"We were surprised to find out we had won two years in a row. We didn't expect to go any higher than Department of Army," Finch said.

The battalion did go higher when it was awarded the Secretary of Defense award at the July 11 ceremony.

Army units are categorized by the amount of motor pool equipment maintained. Each unit is evaluated by teams and review boards.

1st Bn., 29th Inf., is categorized as a heavy Table of Distribution and Allowances unit because it maintains 1,001 or more pieces of equipment.

A unit maintenance profile is submitted for review at each level. The profile summarizes every mission and task the unit does.

The unit profile covers six areas, which include mission, readiness, training, maintenance management, cost savings and innovation.

The unit is evaluated on its success in things like no-notice roll out exercises, command inspections, maintenance training, field training, safety awards programs, tool control and publications.

"Now that we've won the highest award a unit can receive, we intend to maintain the standards," Finch said. "We want to have a repeat of last year and win the Phoenix Award again this year."

Congress gets enlisted separation pay proposal

American Forces Information Service

A bill extending separation pay benefits to active duty enlisted members was recently submitted to Congress by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney.

"Regular enlisted personnel are the only members. . .of the Armed Forces who are not eligible for separation pay," Cheney said, adding his proposed "Enlisted Military Personnel Separation Equity Act" corrects that unfairness.

Current law authorizes the benefit for all officers and for enlisted reservists and National Guardsmen when they are involuntarily separated after service at least five years on continuous active duty.

Current practice limits separation pay to a year's basic pay.

Under the Cheney plan, all eligible members would receive 10 percent of their annual base pay times the number of years of service.

The proposed act would guarantee separation pay after five years' service for qualified military personnel already in the armed forces or who join before enactment of the legislation.

Anyone joining after enactment would need seven years of service to qualify if later involuntarily separated.

"Both officers and enlisted personnel perform crucial duties and provide dedicated service, so both should be eligible for separation pay," the secretary said.

"This benefit will be particularly important to those noncommissioned officers who don't serve long enough to retire, but who nevertheless have dedicated a big part of their working lives to the nation's service," he said.

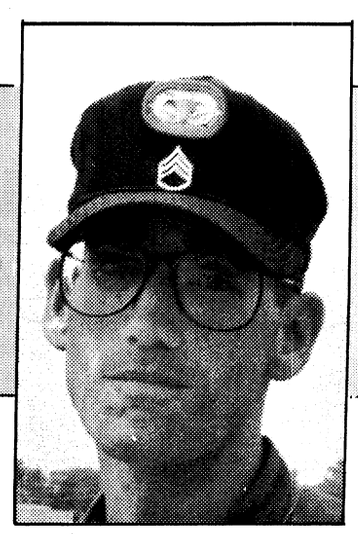
"As we reduce the size of the Armed Forces. . .we must assist those asked to make the transition from military to civilian life. It's the right thing to do for those who have volunteered to defend America for years and would be turned away," Cheney continued.

"If we're going to recruit talented people into the military in the future, we must maintain a track record of treating people fairly, especially when times are tough," he said.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

What steps do you take to protect soldiers in training from sustaining heat injuries?

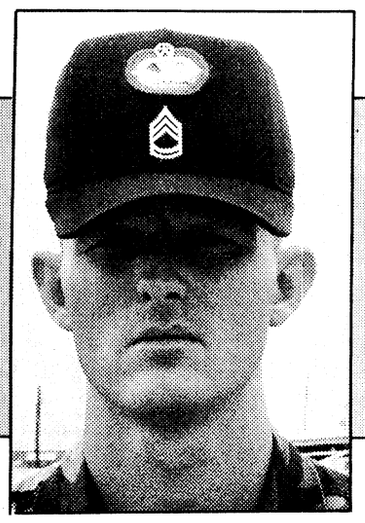


Staff Sgt. Joseph E. Perez, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I monitor how much water they drink and ask them how they're feeling. Also, the students follow a buddy system, in case of emergency."

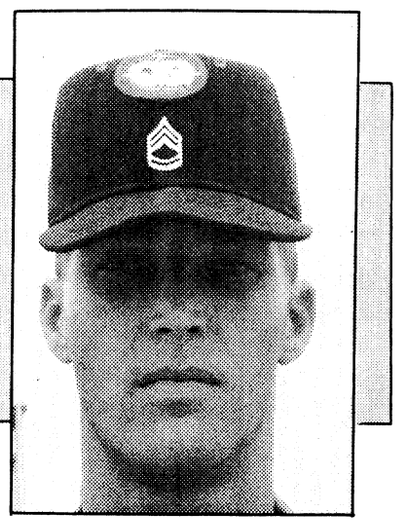
Sgt. Robert W. Wilson, Jr., Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We have the students to drink water, sit in the shade and take a lot of breaks. Also, we don't let the trainees run during heat category three or higher.

Staff Sgt. Edward Howard, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We try to get the students well hydrated the night before training by getting them to drink lots of water before they go to bed. Also, meals are mandatory to help supply each student's body with nutrients lost during strenuous training."

Capt. John Sapinosa, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We have students unblouse their boots. Also, we constantly monitor the flag indicating which heat category we are in."



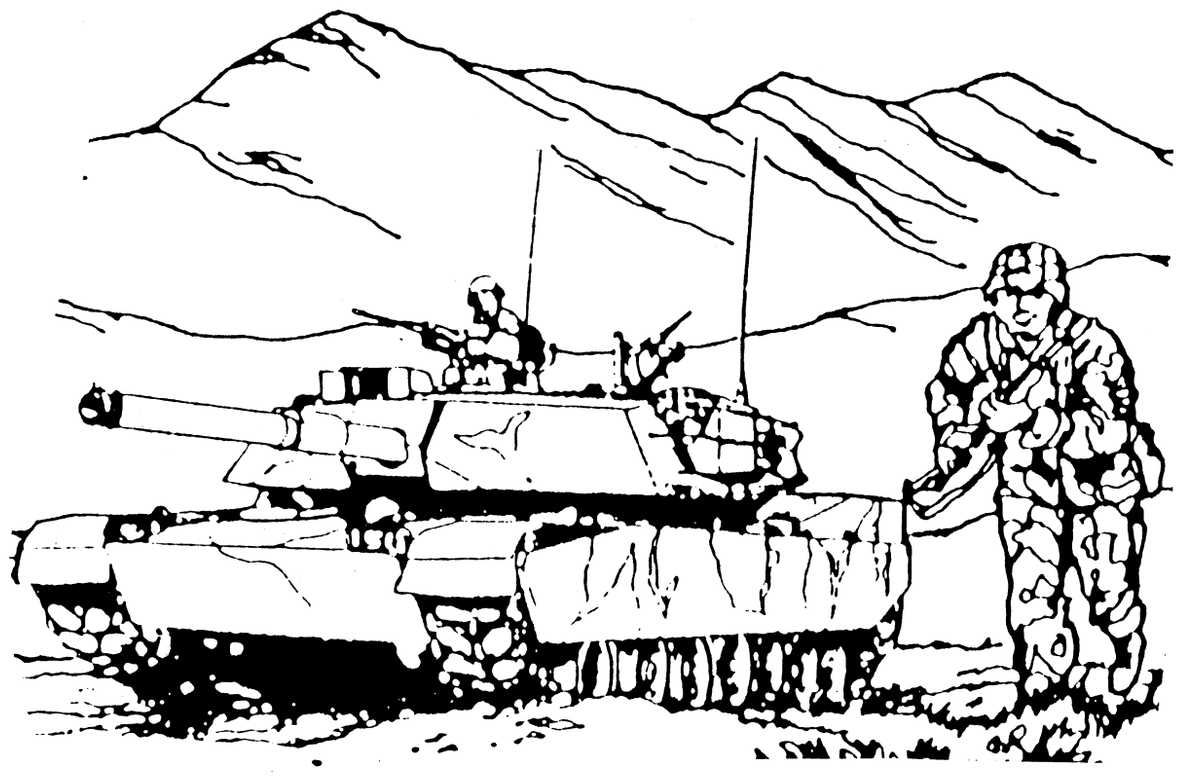
Sgt. 1st Class Ricky L. Good, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We monitor activities by heat category flags. As soon as we hit heat category four, we try to get everyone not actually training into the shade."



Sgt. 1st Class Kim H. Graham, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I encourage trainees to drink at least one canteen of water per hour, as well as one canteen of water before and after physical training."

Today's Army must be strategic force for 1990s

By Carl E. Vuono
Army Chief of Staff



In the years ahead, the United States will face unprecedented challenges in an increasingly complex, volatile, and unpredictable world. This changing environment will place far-reaching demands on the U.S. military establishment, particularly on our conventional forces.

Because of its vital roles in all aspects of our national security strategy, the Army will play an increasingly important role in our nation's response to those challenges.

Today's Army

Today's Army is the best trained, most ready peacetime force in our nation's history. Over the past decade, we have undergone an extensive transformation that has prepared us well for the changes ahead. This transformation is evident in our soldiers, doctrine, force structure, training, materiel, and leaders — a transformation produced by an uncompromising adherence to six fundamental imperatives that guide the Army today and serve as a beacon for the future.

These six imperatives are: quality, doctrine, force structure, training, modernization and leader development.

The high quality of the American soldier — a combination of intelligence, initiative, combat skill, tenacity and physical toughness — has been a traditional source of victory in battle. If we are to attract the best our nation has to offer, we must continue to offer them the personal and professional challenges and quality of life equal to those of the citizens they are sworn to defend.

The second imperative focuses on sustaining our momentum by maintaining a forward-looking warfighting doctrine. AirLand Battle, the Army's contemporary doctrine, provides the basic rationale for designing forces, determining materiel needs, conducting training and developing leaders.

Our third imperative is to maintain the appropriate mix of heavy, light, and special operations forces in our active and reserve components.

The conduct of tough, realistic training is our fourth imperative. It has set a standard for armies everywhere.

We will continue to modernize our warfighting capability. The Abrams tank, the Bradley fighting vehicle, and the Apache helicopter are three examples of weapon systems fielded in the 1980s that have served this end.

In the final analysis, the capabilities of the Army depend not only on the quality of our soldiers, but also on the competence of our leaders. Leader development for soldiers and civilians is our most important and lasting contribution to shaping the Army of the future.

The world is changing in a number of profound ways, and the United States will have to adapt to those changes.

The Soviet Union

The changes taking place in the Soviet Union and throughout Eastern Europe are, in large measure, a testament of the success of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's strategy and to the inescapable attraction of democracy and market-oriented economic systems. There is reason for optimism that the Soviet Union will become a more open and pluralistic society, reduce the size of its excessively large land forces, and more clearly embrace the concept of human rights and democratic political institutions.

Despite the Soviet Union's announced unilateral cuts, the United States and its NATO allies still face a severe force imbalance.

For the foreseeable future, deterrence and defense against potential Soviet and Soviet-supported military action in Europe and Asia will remain the most demanding challenges for the United States and its allies.

The Developing World

The developing world presents new challenges to the United States. Conflicts there can pose clear threats to U.S. security interests, and the precise time and location of these occurrences are largely unpredictable. The underlying causes of these conflicts exist within the developing nations themselves and will not necessarily diminish even if Soviet international behavior continues to moderate.

The obvious challenges in the developing world should not lead us to ignore the opportunities that also are present. Not only does the United States have a wide range of economic and political interests it can pursue with developing countries, it also has a considerable potential for enhancing mutual security.

The Army of the future

The Army of the future will have to be versatile, deployable and lethal. In view of the rapidly changing international environment, the precise time, location and nature of the threat will always be uncertain. In the near future as well, the Army will be smaller as a result of changes in the domestic and international environments.

We must never forget that, in the final analysis, the Army and our nation depend upon the soldiers, civilians and families who dedicate their lives to the service of this country. As we enter the 1990s and position ourselves for the 21st century, the Army is assuming increased prominence in U.S. national security strategy. By adhering to our fundamental imperatives, we will maintain the trained and ready Army our country requires.

Snively — A good enemy, war could help to avoid budget cuts

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

I just returned from a trip to Washington. I visited the Pentagon to see where all the decisions affecting our lives are made.

Very impressive.

But, I didn't see too many decisions being made. Seemed whenever someone asked a question about "Right-sizing the Army," or how much money we'd have for training or living, the standard answer always was, "Can't do anything until Congress decides."

This got to be pretty depressing. In fact, it was so depressing that I forgot to pay attention to where I was going.

As a result, I accidentally wandered into a secret meeting room down in the basement by the boiler room.

There, a bunch of sweating colonels and generals were saying things like, "what this Army needs now is a good enemy," while others wanted to go out and "do community good deeds."

"D— it," the short, square general said, "our nation needs an Army it can count on to defend it or its interests, not one that goes around planting posies or chasing down druggies.

"Gardeners and cops can do that."

A bunch of colonels all nodded their heads in agreement not just because they saw the wisdom of his words, but because he had more stars on his new, black shoulder boards than the posies and druggie general.

"So give us an enemy," the warrior general boomed, pounding his fist on the table.

"What about the Circle Trigon," a lieutenant colonel at the far end of the table muttered, barely audible.

"Whatcha say, boy," shouted the warrior general.

The lieutenant colonel repeated himself. Going on to explain how when he was going through the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course and leading companies and battalions at Kelley Hill, there was always the good old Circle Trigon.

It was forever invading the United States in places like Savannah and Charleston, using a double pincer movement to capture Atlanta, only to be repulsed by the 52nd and 54th Infantry Divisions led by stalwart student generals, colonels and captains.

"Yeah, I remember them," the warrior general mused. "Had those forest green uniforms with fancy epaulets and spoke Esperanza too, if I remember right.

"Great idea boy. We can revive the Circle Trigon, tell the American people they're threatening the southeastern United States, and get some of our budget dollars back.

"That was a unit with personality. Had an order of battle and names of commanding officers. Not some nameless, faceless outfit called 'OPFOR' or Opposing Forces. No, by god, that was a real honest to goodness Army.

"I like it colonel. Go draw up the plans. Have them on my desk tomorrow. We need to get them before Congress before it cuts us off at our knees."

Remember, fellow soldiers, if you find yourself down at the uniform issue point checking out musty, moth-eaten forest green uniforms, you'll now know why. Remember, you heard it here first.

Oh yeah, they may even dust off some C-rations to feed you in the field.

SOA trains future world leaders

By Keith F. Johnson
School of the Americas

It's not Operation Just Cause, but its influence in Latin America is equally important. The seeds planted here by the School of the Americas in time take root on the soil of Central and South America. Those seeds are the instruction and training the School offers armed forces personnel of both the U.S. and Latin America.

The stated mission of the School is to provide education and training for Latin American military students as well as to strengthen bonds of friendship and cooperation among the armed forces of the Americas and to give students the opportunity to become better acquainted with U.S. customs and traditions

The School's Command and General Staff College course, a prerequisite for promotion to Lt. Col. for U.S. officers, trains officers for field grade positions, i.e. the leaders of the armed forces.

"We teach U.S. Army doctrine to United States and Latin American armed forces personnel by showing them how our Army does its job in a democratic society," said Maj. Orlando Rivera, chief of the Leadership Division of the Department of Joint and Combined Operations at the School.

"Ideas and possible solutions are generated here in the classroom so Latin American countries can improve the way they conduct their operations as well as how they will deal with problems like terrorism and drug-trafficking."

According to Rivera, roughly 15% of the instruction is lecture while group discussion and hands-on-training such as preparing detailed briefings or operations orders are the "heart" of the course.

Of the 44 students in the course, 30 are Latin American. In addition, 14 of the 20 instructors are from Latin America. With a student/teacher ratio of 2:1 and the students broken down into three groups, the instructors can lead the students through group discussions. It is these group discussions that set the course apart from its counterpart at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

The CGSC course at SOA, which is taught in Spanish, uses the same manuals and doctrine as the Fort Leavenworth course but is tailored to provide the Latin and U.S. officers here with instruction necessary to combat the problems facing Latin America.

The U.S. officers selected to attend the course at SOA are either special forces or foreign area specialists. After completion of the course, the U.S. officers will serve as attaches at an embassy or guest instructors at a CGSC or War College in a Latin American country.

The group discussions facilitate the tailoring of the course because they present the added dimension of combat experience from some of the Latin officers.

"Most of the Latin American officers that we have in this class either have seen combat or live in countries which have some instability such as terrorism or drug cartels," Rivera said. "They bring their war experience to the class and everyone learns from everyone else."

In addition to the daily instruction, the course relies on guest speakers to enhance the quality of instruction. Guest speakers such as Col. William F. Daugherty, the director of the Center for Army Tactics at Fort Leavenworth, and Hon. Thomas F. Stroock, the U.S. ambassador to Guatemala, are two of the 30 guest speakers this year.

"Guest speakers add credibility to the instruction that is being provided because they are considered subject-matter experts in their respective field," Rivera said.

"In some cases the students hear from the horses' mouth, the actual author of the doctrine. If a student has a question from the field manual, he can ask the author of that manual."

Another aspect of the course that helps the students learn more about the U.S. and its customs is a program called HOLA, which stands for Hosts of Latin Americans. "Hola" is the Spanish word for hello.

"HOLA is a group of volunteers who devote their free time to show Latin American students and guest instructors a little of our culture," said Yolanda D. Hagberg, director of the Information Program at the School.

"Friendships develop as we learn about their culture and they participate and experience the U.S. way of life."

All these different elements of the course add up to completion of the mission. A mission that works toward better relations between the countries of Latin America and the United States and the security of the Americas.

Support group helps Latin families

By Keith F. Johnson
School of the Americas

What do you do when you are a stranger in a foreign land and need help but have nobody to call? Where do you start? What if you don't speak the native language? What if it's a life and death situation?

For many of the Latin American students and guest instructors and their families at the School of the Americas, the answer to these questions is the Columbus Support Group.

The CSG was formed on Feb. 4, 1985 by a group of local civic and business leaders. Its purpose is to assist the School staff and visiting military personnel and their families in the enjoyment of the many cultural, educational, and recreational activities this area of the south has to offer.

The Support Group Board of Directors is a who's who list of Columbus. John B. Amos and his wife, Elena, from the American Family Life Assurance Corporation; Sal Diaz-Verson, president of AFLAC; Thomas Boyd from First Union National Bank; James Yancey from Synovus and Corydon Loomis.

The CSG is a non-profit organization. Operating funds are supplied in the form of contributions by corporations or individuals wishing to assist the Latin Americans assigned to the School.

"People all over offer their help because they know it is a worthy cause," said Nina Garcia, executive director of the CSG. "The Support Group is like a network of people who get together to help one another."

An example of that is Grace M. Rojas, who has volunteered her time to teach computer classes at Columbus College. About 50 students, ages 8-18, have completed courses this summer. Rojas, who has a Masters degree in Computer Education from the University of the Pacific in California, is the wife of Lt. Col. Manuel F. Rojas from Venezuela, a student in the School's Command and General Staff College course.

In addition to the computer classes, an English as a Second Language course is offered. Both courses are co-sponsored by the Columbus College Institute of Foreign Language and Culture and the Support Group.

"Education is a very important thing, so I thought of ways of developing courses so everybody can participate," explained Garcia, who added that another benefit is it gives some of the Latin children a chance to build friendships.

> "The support group is like a network of people who get together to help one another."
>
> — Nina Garcia

The CSG annually sponsors a Children's Christmas party for both Latin and U.S. families at the School and this year held its first International Roller Skating Party April 28 at the Skate Center on Milgen Rd. Six High Schools in the Columbus area participated. Other cultural events planned for the year have included a Boy/Girl Scouts International Camp week, tours of the Columbus Museum (in Spanish), a Family Picnic at the AFLAC farm, and assisting the HOLA sponsorship program.

"The Support Group is a fantastic tool to build friendships with Columbus and the School of the Americas and their Latin American personnel and families," Garcia said.

The Support Group has a house located at 1837 Buena Vista Rd. in Columbus that is used for meetings and social gatherings. Later in the year, the house will relocate to larger facilities.

"We want to have a home away from home for the Latin families at the School," Garcia said.

Anyone interested in meeting people of a different cultural background and want to develop a friendship with our Latin American neighbors should call Garcia at 324-7787.

Counter-Narcotics Operations

School's course prepares soldiers for drug war

By Keith F. Johnson
School of the Americas

The U.S. Armed Forces participation in the drug war is still in its formative years. How our forces will be used and to what extent continues to be debated in Washington. But as politicians continue to debate, the U.S. Army has already put certain plans into effect.

In May 1989, the School of the Americas' Department of Special Operations/Low-Intensity Conflict was created by School Commander Col. William A. DePalo, Jr. for the purpose of developing and upgrading the courses offered by the School to meet the needs of the countries of Latin America.

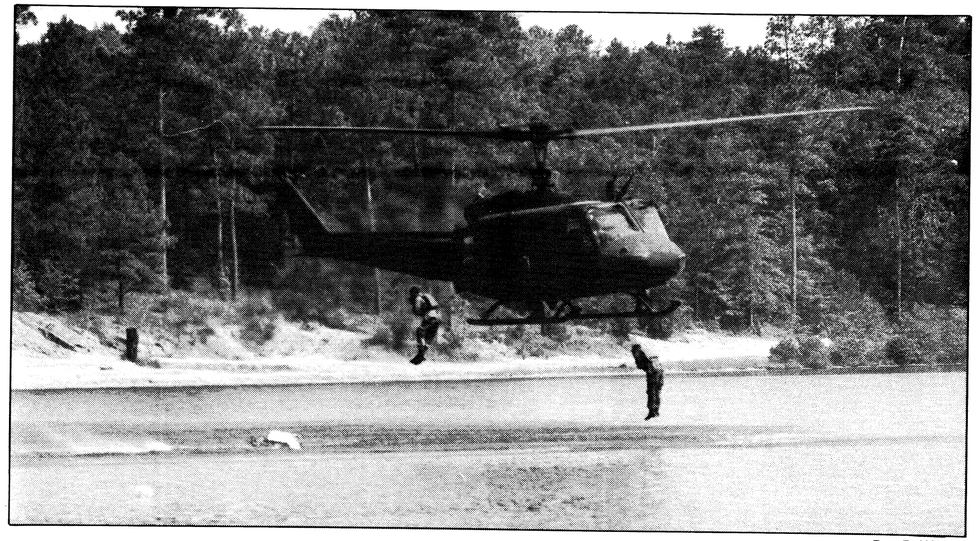
Those needs are not confined to Latin America. By meeting those needs, the School is fighting a war that rages on our own soil.

To meet that need the School has developed a Counter-Narcotics course. Under DePalo's direction, the Special Operations Division of SOLIC prepared the training doctrine with assistance from the Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Army Southern Command in Panama.

SOUTHCOM is commanded by Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman who, as reported in the July 16 issue of Newsweek, is preparing a plan "to cripple the cocaine cartels of South America." Whether or not the plan will be put into effect is a decision for the politicians.

Thurman's plan would not include American forces but rather the forces of Colombia, Bolivia and Peru. Forces, in part, trained by the School of the Americas.

The School, which trained over 1,500 soldiers last year, has been training Latin American troops since 1946 and continues to modify its training to meet the needs of the Latin American armed forces. Developing the 11-week Counter-Narcotics course is a continuation of that process.



Dan R. Wilson

Operators drop into the water during a helocasting infiltration technique exercise.

On Aug. 3, 21 "operators" will graduate from the School's first Counter-Narcotics course. Students are referred to as "operators" in the course because of the specialized nature of the training. The operators are either company grade officers or senior noncommissioned officers who serve in a mission specific unit or are members of their country's police force. Two are from Colombia, three from Bolivia, four from Ecuador and 12 from Mexico.

"The course is basically the same kind of combat training you receive in the Army," said Maj. Thomas G. Foster, chief of the School's Special Operations Division of SOLIC. "We just angle it towards the skills that are going to be required."

The operators receive individual skills training in weapons and marksmanship, land navigation, communications, demolitions, combat lifesaver – which included training in the use of intravenous injections – and an introduction to counter-narcotics operations.

> The DEA is involved with operations down South so they will continue to work with the operators after the course is completed.
>
> — Maj. Thomas Foster

The introduction to counter-narcotics operations is taught by three DEA agents. The instruction includes rules of evidence, prisoner handling, intelligence sources and lab safety.

"The DEA agents give classes on the economic, social and political ramifications of the drug war and how it's effecting the users and sellers of the countries," Foster explained.

Foster said the DEA volunteered its people to the School to help train the operators.

"The DEA and the agents we're getting are involved with operations down South so they will continue to work with the operators after the course is completed," Foster said.

The instructors of the course also received extra preparatory training from a Special Forces Mobile Training Team. Fifteen instructors were trained in urban operations and close quarters combat.

"We have to be qualified to teach the operators the basic skills needed to conduct a counter-narcotics operation so they in turn can train their people with these skills when they return home," Foster said.

In addition to the individual skills training, the operators also receive a week of training in infiltration techniques such as small boat and riverine operations, helicopters, helocasting and scout swim, rappeling, fast rope and obstacle crossing.

After infiltration techniques, the operators go into the collective training phase of the course which includes patrolling, close quarters combat, vehicular ambush/road block, urban operations and staff planning.

"The staff planning is a very important part of the course because the operator has learned the tactics involved," Foster said. "Now he learns the procedures so he knows how to plan and issue orders correctly."

Part of the collective training includes an urban field training exercise in which instructors play townspeople who are having a party in the middle of town complete with bags filled with white powder to simulate cocaine and a drug lord the operators have to capture.

The current training schedule plans for two counter-narcotic courses per year. The next course at the School begins Aug. 1 with forty operators scheduled to attend.

"We would like to expand the course and make it longer," Foster said. "We will continue to stay in close contact with the DEA and Southcom as well as sending our officers down South to conduct counter-narcotic training and return with updated information so we can continue to upgrade and improve the course."

Nations of Latin America

Republic of Costa Rica

Area: 19,575 square miles, slightly smaller than West Virginia
Population: 2,922,000, about that of Iowa or Oregon and greater than 22 of the 50 United States
Religion: Roman Catholic
Literacy Rate: 93%
Life expectancy: 70 years
Languages: Spanish is the official language, English is also spoken
Capital city: San Jose, situated in a high valley between active (but mild) volcanos
Economy: Major industries - fiberglass, aluminum, textiles
Major exports - coffee, bananas, sugar
Per capita income: $1,584

Costa Rica became an independent state in 1838 following the collapse of the United Provinces of Central America. The country experienced an early economic shift as part of the Central American coffee boom in the mid-19th century.

An attempt at electoral fraud in 1948 led to a brief civil war, which was won by the National Liberation forces under Don Pepe Jose Figueres Ferrer. The Costa Rican army was subsequently abolished. The country has experienced competitive multiparty electoral democracy since 1949.

With a strong tradition of democracy and political stability, this nation of small farmers, although now beset by economic difficulty, stands in contrast to the turmoil in the rest of Central America. It enjoys the highest standard of living in the area.

The agreeable climate attracts tourists from everywhere and many Americans and European retirees stay permanently.

President Oscar Arias Sanchez won the 1987 Nobel Pease Prize and has played a leading role in efforts to bring stability to Central America.

Andean heights isolate this Pacific coast nation from the rest of South America. Chile acquired its nitrate-rich northern third from Bolivia and Peru in the War of the Pacific (1879-1883).

Mineral resources play a major role in the Chilean economy, from iron, lead, zinc and iodine to marble, silver and gold. Oil and natural gas in Tierra del Fuego supply 40 percent of domestic needs. The nation possesses a fifth of the world's copper reserves and, to escape overdependence, has expanded forestry, agriculture and fishing for export.

Settled by Spaniards who mixed with Indians, Chile later attracted Germnan, English and Italian imnigrants. Some 35 percent of the voters in 1970 elected the continent's first Marxist president, Salvador Allende. His policies led to economic turmoil, triggering a 1973 military coup. A junta has eliminated many economic controls in favor of an open economy.

Soldier of Quarter credits command for win

Ann M. McDonald

Bayonet staff writer

"I have to attribute my win to my whole chain of command, I couldn't have done it without them," said the Soldier of the Quarter, for the third quarter of fiscal 1990.

Pfc. John Noland, Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, is the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Soldier of the Quarter.

Noland, an 11 Mike or Bradley operator, worked his way to the top spot this quarter by beating out his peers before noncommissioned officer boards or evaluating teams.

According to his platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Darrol L. Birk, it all started in March when he attended the battalion soldier of the month board. He then progressed to the battalion soldier of the quarter, regiment and then post soldier of the quarter.

"I was selected to attend the first board," Noland said. "My competitive spirit motivated me to study and win it, and that has stayed with me."

To further enhance his chances of winning, Noland purchased a set of polyester set of greens and extra study guides. "I also went to Sayers and Donovan Technical libraries and obtained some extra information."

The retention of that information came from the constant pop quizzes he received from his peers and leaders, he said.

"That's why I said my whole chain of command contributed to my success," Noland said. "Sergeant Birk really kept me motivated."

Noland's motivation shines through in every aspect of his soldiering.

Birk said that he scored a 94 on his last Skill Qualification Test, 100 percent on his common tasks test and a perfect 300 on his Army Physical Fitness Test.

"He has an outstanding ability to learn and to do all tasks given," Birk said. "He has also participated in some high visibility missions and performed very well."

Noland said those are the types of missions he likes best.

"I like it when the pressures on and you have to react and be quick," he said.

"I've found a cohesiveness in the Army that I have not seen anywhere else," he said. "It's not like I'm going to a job. It's a way of life."

Noland says that he has a lot of experience to compare with the Army.

"I've fished commercially, done office work and attended college for four years," he said.

The newest soldier of the quarter said he isn't sure if the Army is in his future, but he knows one thing. "I going to try my best to win the title of Soldier of the Year."

MPs to crack down on speeders

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Military Police are cracking down on speeding violators. The MPs have begun monitoring key locations and hot spots during peak traffic times in an effort to deter and detect speeding violators on post.

According to Military Police officials, a Speed Reduction Task Force was initiated July 5. The task force will operate seven days a week, including holidays. Times and locations will vary.

Traffic surveys show that speeding violations occur more frequently during the evening, night and early morning hours and that the most common locations are the primary thoroughfares, according to Military Police officials.

Radar will be one of the primary weapons used by task force personnel. Radar can be used practically anywhere, officials said. Each radar site will be selected based upon the amount of traffic, nature and condition of the road, accident history, citizen complaints and environmental considerations, officials said.

The MPs will target two types of violators: those who travel 10 miles per hour over the speed limit, assuming that the police will tolerate such an offense and those who normally obey the speed limits but sometimes forget, don't pay attention, or are in a hurry because they are running late.

Also, officials said they plan to use "public relations" radar. This type radar operation consists of a policeman "shooting" each passing vehicle with the radar gun and displaying its speed on a lighted sign to the driver of the vehicle.

Task force members will use this device to educate the public about their driving habits, officials said.

Another tool the MPs will use is the "warning" ticket. This ticket has neither a mandatory fine nor court appearance associated with it. Instead, it is used to refer traffic offenses to commanders for corrective action. The warning ticket is also issued for all nonmoving violations, regardless of whether the offender is military or civilian.

Military personnel cited for speeding or other moving violations are subject to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Military personnel, family members and civilians usually appear before a federal magistrate and must pay a fine or other appropriate punishment.

All speeding violators — active duty military, family members and civilians — are required to attend a remedial driving course, regardless of other actions taken against them, officials said. Failure to attend the course could result in the suspension of installation driving privileges.

Task force personnel will concentrate their efforts on speed reduction. However, individuals stopped for violations will also be closely checked for compliance with mandatory seat belt usage and installation vehicle registration provisions, officials said.

Military police officials said the surest way to avoid a speeding ticket is to obey the speed limits. Individuals caught speeding will get a ticket.

Questions regarding the Speed Reduction Task Force may be directed to the MP Operations Office at 545-4412 or 545-2942.

DoD proposes benefits transfer for civilians

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense has asked Congress to allow its nonappropriated fund employees to transfer benefits such as annual and sick leave to appropriated-fund jobs.

Under current law, for example, A DoD nonappropriated fund employee working at an installation exchange store who gets a general schedule job has to start over with leave, retirement and other benefits. To change that, Frank Cipolla, DoD's acting civilian personnel policy chief, recently testified before Congress for legislative authority to allow employees to switch benefits between the two systems.

Said Cipolla, "The timing is critical. Up to 10,000 nonappropriated fund and civil service employees must be moved between the two respective employment systems by the end of this fiscal year in order to comply with a congressional mandate that we restructure the military morale, welfare and recreation program."

According to Cipolla, there are about 200,000 nonappropriated fund employees within the DoD. Some of these employees are part of the morale, welfare and recreation program. In addition to exchanges, they work in libraries, physical fitness programs, child care centers, arts and crafts centers, military clubs, bowling alleys, movie theaters and golf courses. This work force is larger than any other outside of DoD except for the Postal Service and the Department of Veterans Affairs, he noted.

Cipolla said that Congress already recognizes the hardship imposed by lack of portability on employees transferring between the two systems. He cited The Employees Retirement System Act of 1896 and a recent joint request to DoD from the House and Senate Armed Services committees to formulate a portability of benefits proposal.

DoD, the Department of Transportation, the Office of Personnel Management and the Office of Management and Budget put together a proposal, which Congress is now considering. It covers retirement, annual and sick leave, pay, health and life insurance, and reduction-in-force protection.

It would cover all permanent DoD and U.S coast Guard employees moving between the two systems and would be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1987.

Cipolla cited examples of how the proposal will affect jobs. Plans to restructure the military morale, welfare and recreation program will designate libraries and gymnasiums as "mission sustaining," which means they will receive appropriated-fund support. Their employees will become part of the regular civil service.

On the other hand, military clubs and golf courses will become "desirable" rather than "mission sustaining," which means some of their civil service employees will have to switch to nonappropriated fund status.

Computer personnel employ TQM

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When asked about the "trick of the trade" at the Software Management Branch, Directorate of Information Management, an employee's response was, "There is no trick, it's Total Quality Management."

Annette Phelps' answer was in response to a congratulatory letter sent to the Software Branch from the Regional Data Center in Atlanta for having the lowest error rate for data processed.

According to Phelps, an excerpt of the letter sent by the RDC Manager Elaine Austin reads, "Your statistics are most impressive — I was wondering if there is a trick of the trade known only to Fort Benning or is it good solid management. In any case, Fort Benning has it all together."

Phelps explained the importance of having such a low rate.

"We process many types of data through our office that is s sent to the RDC, which is the central point for nine installations," she said. "If we do it wrong, it creates extra work and someone at the RDC has to fix the mistake."

To avoid this, the Software Branch personnel are trying to do it right the first time,which is part of the TQM theme.

Phelps said branch personnel are avoiding this by doing some additional checking, proper validation of documents and monitoring the whole transaction more closely.

In addition to data processed, Software Branch personnel are also applying TQM in other areas.

"If we do make a mistake, we track it so we can find the cause and do something about it," Phelps said. "We're also trying to improve computer response time and the callbacks on work orders."

FOR THE RECORD

The Ask The Judge article in :he June 29 edition of The Bayonet contained incorrect in-:ormation about service charges on checks. The law in Georgia has been changed to permit a service charge when a bad check has been issued of the greater of five percent of the face value of the check or $20, rather than $15 as stated in the article.

Jumpmasters learn airborne operation skills

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine being in charge of a whole planeload of soldiers preparing to jump out the door into the wild blue yonder.

That's part of what they teach at the U.S. Army Jumpmaster School, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, according to Staff Sgt. Michael Boom, an instructor with the course.

They're teaching airborne qualified men and women how to "stay alive" and how to keep other soldiers alive during an airborne operation. That's why it's so important students don't catch "Saturday Night Fever."

Saturday Night Fever is a term used by the grader when he is referring to student who displayed the wrong hand signal while being tested in aircraft operations, Boom said.

"The term is used when when a student does not curl his fingers when he is directing jumpers to hook-up the static-line connected to the parachute," he said.

Boom said the students are docked for making improper hand signals, failing to check their own equipment and failing to make one final check and other duties that are important to a Jumpmaster.

"The jumpmaster's job while in the aircraft is to make sure everything is okay with the soldiers and their parachute before they exit," Boom said. "If the jumpmaster misses something, a soldier could die."

He said that's why they don't cut any slack when they are testing the students.

"Even if a student is giving it his best shot and we can tell that he is, we still can't give him a break," Boom said. "If he's wrong, he's wrong. A jumpmaster has a lot of responsibility. As instructors, we have to make sure they do it right."

Aircraft procedures are only a part of the two-week course.

The first week consists of nomenclature and Jumpmaster Personnel Inspection, said a recent course graduate, 2nd Lt. Cole Bricker.

"JMPI is the bread and butter of the whole course," he said. "Instructors say that is what gets most students."

Bricker explained why he thought many students failed JMPI.

"You have to make sure you inspect the parachute in the right sequence, pay attention to detail and make sure you do it in the allotted amount of time," he said. "Time is what nearly gets everyone, including me."

After nomenclature and JMPI, it's on to operations on setting up a drop zone, aircraft inspection, rigging combat loads and aircraft procedures said Bricker.

"They teach you everything you need to know. The rest is up to you," he said. "The instructors are all very professional. They're the best I've seen."

We have to be professional, Boom said.

"There is a real need for proficient jumpmasters in airborne units," he said. "It's our job to provide them with just that."

34th Medical Battalion gets new commander

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The 34th Medical Battalion has a new leader at the helm.

Lt. Col. Frank Novier took over top spot during the unit's change of command ceremony on York Field July 11.

Brig. Gen. William M. Steele presided over the event as Lt. Col. Allen E. Rhodes relinquished his post as commander to Lt. Col. Frank Novier.

The 34th's troops and a crowd of well-wishers witnessed the leadership changing hands through the symbolic passing of the unit's colors from former commander to new.

Steele praised Rhodes for outstanding leadership and commented on the battalion's worldwide missions and numerous awards. He also commended Rhodes' wife, Kay, as an "outstanding Army wife."

Steele then challenged Novier to continue the excellent reputation upheld by the 34th Medical Battalion.

Rhodes praised the battalion for its consistent hard work and achievements. After thanking his wife for all of her support and effort toward making his job easier, he told Novier that he had "just signed on for the best two years of his life with the best medical battalion in our Army" and wished him much luck and success.

Novier expressed a desire for the continuation of the success of the battalion and challenged them to maintain the high standards demonstrated thus far. Novier said that he was "truly fortunate to have been selected for this command and was looking forward to working with the great soldiers at Fort Benning."

The ceremony concluded with a pass in review of the battalion's troops.

Commanding general discusses tomorrow's Infantry in magazine

Infantry Magazine

In the July-August 1990 issue of Infantry, Major General Carmen J. Cavezza, the new chief of Infantry, discusses what he believes is "the essential direction we must take to shape tomorrow's Infantry," in terms of certain "major priorities." He sees those priorities as being "doctrine, training, and force structure and modernization."

The issue also features "Desert Navigation," by Maj. Richard G. Reynolds; "Deterrent Patrolling," by Lt. Col. Karl W. Eikenberry; and "Blitzkrieg: The Myth of Blitz," by Capt. Thomas T. Smith.

Reynolds, who recently completed a tour as a Middle East analyst in Washington, describes the difficulty of finding good maps of desert areas and offers practical information on orienting the available maps to the terrain. He is now assigned to the 109th Military Intelligence Battalion at Fort Lewis.

Eikenberry, commander of 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, discusses some of the problems nonmechanized Infantry units face in conducting deterrent operations and suggests some solutions.

He bases his article on his experiences as the operations officer of the 3rd Battalion, 325th Infantry (Airborne Battalion Combat Team), while it was serving as part of a multinational force in Europe.

In his article, Smith cites figures from some historical examples to show that the "offensive spirit" of a Rommel or a Patton (or of tank and Bradley commanders today) does not translate into great speed in miles per hour.

Smith has been a Bradley platoon leader and company commander in the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, and is now preparing for instructor duty at the U.S. Military Academy.

Among the other articles in the issue are: "JRTC: The OPFOR's Training," by Capt. Stanley Wilson, who commands an opposing forces company; "Deep Operations," by Lt. Col. Franklin L. Hagenbeck and Maj. Curtis M. Scaparrotti, commander and operations officer respectively of the 1st Battalion, 87th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division; and "Close Combat Training," by Capt. Darryl W. Daugherty and Capt. Drew Watson, a Marine Corps officer.

Both recently completed the U.S. Marine Corps Amphibious Warfare School. Daugherty presently commands Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry, at Fort Benning, while Watson is serving with the British Royal Marines.

Information about Infantry magazine, including subscription rates and writing guidelines, is available by writing to P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-0605; or by calling 835-2350 (autovon) or (404) 545-2350 (commercial).

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. While on active duty, my military pay was reduced by $100 a month for 12 months for use under the Montgomery GI Bill. May I withdraw these funds if I elect not to participate in the program?

A. No. Unlike the earlier Veterans Education Assistance Program, money paid toward entitlement under the Montgomery GI Bill is not refundable.

Q. Are the proceeds from National Service Life Insurance considered as income for a VA Improved Pension?

A. Yes. Under the current pension program, proceeds are considered as income.

Q. I was granted a waiver on a VA home loan default. How is my entitlement affected?

A. The portion of entitlement that was used to obtain the loan cannot be restored until the indebtedness is paid in full.

Q. Will my VA insurance dividends be affected if I get a loan on the policy?

A. No. Earned dividends are not affected by a loan on the policy. However, you may use your dividends to reduce the balance of your loan. For more information on this and other dividend options, call 1-800-422-8079.

Q. Can I use my VA-guaranteed home loan to buy land I plan to build a house on in the future?

A. A VA-guaranteed loan cannot be used to buy undeveloped land unless it is part of a package that includes the building of your home.

Q. How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in VA claims matters last?

A. A power of attorney does not expire. It must be revoked or cancelled. The Department of Veterans Affairs treats designation of a new power of attorney as an automatic cancellation of an earlier one. You may cancel a power of attorney at any time by notifying VA.

Army wrestlers' goal is gold

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The 1992 Olympics.

For most, it is a mere dream, but for four young soldiers here, it is a mission — a challenge that these young men are striving for.

Spec. Mark W. Strimska, 372nd Transportation Co., Ft. Campbell, Ky., Spec. Rodney S. Smith, Co. C, Support Bn., Spec. James A. Demos, 581st Signal Co., Bremerhaven, Germany, and Spec. Derrick Waldroup, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt., have come together to form the Army's number one wrestling team.

The team captured the Armed Services' number one spot in championship matches in Quantico, Va., earlier this year. Team members have a string of victories behind them.

At the Armed Forces competition, the team won the championship for the Army for the first time in 12 years. Eight members of the team placed at the U.S. Nationals and the entire team placed second.

Waldroup has won three national titles in four years; Demos defeated a two-time national champion; and the list of accomplishments goes on.

But, in spite of the recognition, team members said they're not resting on their laurels, nor is any member taking all the credit. They practice on a daily basis and seem driven to achieve their goal. Their coach is Sgt. 1st Class Tony T. Thomas, and he said he tries to instill confidence in them.

"I feel really positive about the team, because we really turned it around," he said. "Last year was the worst — it was my first season as coach, and the team made a pretty embarrassing showing. This year, we proved we're the best team in the service, and I know what we can do," he said.

Thomas has his own ambitions for the team in 1992. "My goal is to have at least four team members who make the Olympic team," he said.

The team's follows a rigorous schedule. From January and July, they said they do nothing but eat, sleep, and dream wrestling. Between practice and various competitions, there is very little time left for personal endeavors, they said. Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, the team starts practice at 8 a.m., beginning with vigorous exercises and sprints. After that, it's off to the mats for an hour and a half of practice wrestling. The team takes a break for a quick lunch, then it's back to the gym for live matches and one-on-one sessions

Spanish Infantry officer attends advance course

By Soong-Bum Ahn
USAIC Public Affairs Office

One of two Spanish officers attending the Infantry Officer Advance Course entered the Spanish Military Academy because he was looking for a career that would take him to new places and experiences.

Captain Agustin Sanchez is that officer and a student in IOAC class 3-90.

Sanchez said he was chosen from among the Infantry officers in the Spanish army because of his English ability.

Sanchez entered the Spanish military academy in 1975.

After four years at the academy, he spent the next year at the Spanish Army Infantry School.

His first assignment was platoon leader in a light Infantry company on the Spanish island of Tenerife off the West African coast. There he commanded the company for six months due to the promotion and subsequent transfer of his commander.

When he returned to the Spanish mainland, he attended the Spanish Special Operations Course and was assigned to the 41st Special Operations Company as a platoon leader.

He was promoted to captain in 1983 and served as an instructor in the Spanish equivalent of officer candidate school.

He then went on to command a headquarters company in a light Infantry battalion.

Before coming to the United States, he served as commander of the 41st Special Operations Company.

Sanchez said that in Spain, the U.S. Army has a reputation of being very mission oriented and well organized. He said that he has found this to be true.

He also noted that he has

begun to appreciate some of the U.S. Army's complex equipment and how much training is required for soldiers to use them. He said that it would be difficult to man such a modern and complex army without dedicated and professional soldiers.

Sanchez said that the U.S. officers in his class impressed him as being very serious and competent. However, he said he believes that Americans in general lack sufficient interest in world events, especially when compared to the U.S.'s big role in it.

According to Sanchez, Americans are too preoccupied with the superpowers and tend to neglect the other parts of the world.

For Sanchez, attending IOAC has been more than a military experience. He said that he has a better understanding of the U.S. Army, the people and the United States. This experience has put a "face on America," he said.

He has met officers from all over the world. Rather than relying on what he has read and seen on television, he has been able to talk with these officers and get their personal views.

He said that this has changed his perspective on the world. He said that he has experienced a personal, cultural experience and will never again view the world as colors on a map.

During his stay here, he has visited Washington D.C., Orlando, New Orleans, and Panama City, Fla. He said that he was impressed with the fact that everyone was very friendly and helpful. He said he enjoyed seeing Americans in their daily lives and was surprised to find that so many people spoke Spanish.

About IOAC, Sanchez said the low intensity conflict and the military operations in urban terrain classes interested him the most. He also appreciated the refresher on mechanized organization and tactics. Emphasis on leadership and commander responsibilities were also appropriate, he said.

Sanchez said he plans to integrate terrain analysis, intelligence preparation of the battlefield and the decision making process into his own unit.

Overall, he said that the course has made him more critical of his own training and more willing to try other methods.

After graduating from IOAC, Sanchez said he will return to Barcelona, where he lives with his wife, Luisa, and continue command of the 41st Special Operations Company.

Sanchez said his future plans are to think about one assignment at a time. His next goal is to complete the Spanish Army's staff college and be promoted to major. He said he hopes one day to return to the United States to attend the Command and General Staff College.

Competitors prepare for 22nd DieHard 500

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In 1985, Bill Elliott blazed around the 2.66-mile oval track at the Talladega Superspeedway at an average speed of 186.288 miles per hour.

Elliot won the Winston 500 and set a new 500-mile race record. Despite all the hoopla at the Indy 500, that record still stands.

The radio and television announcers, in all the excitement, reported that Arie Luyencyk's 185.984 at the 1990 Indy 500 was a new record for a 500-mile race.

But, in fact it was only a new record for the Indy 500 and 304/1000th of a mile per hour short of the all time record.

Talladega has been the site of competitive 500-milers in racing, having 11 of the top 15 in lead changes including the top three.

In 1984, at the Winston 500, there were 75 lead changes with a lead change an average of every 2.51 laps. At the 1984 DieHard 500, there were 68 and 67 at the 1978 DieHard.

Last year's DieHard had 49 lead changes among nine drivers and the margin of victory was only 1/2 car length.

On July 29, the 22nd annual DieHard 500 will be at the speedway and should fall into the same unpredictable mode as its predecessors, which have produced 19 different winners in the first 21 runnings of this event.

Competitors this year will be racing for the largest purse ever posted for this event, more than $680,000. It could be considerably higher if the Unocal 76 Challenge award rolls over from the race at Pocono this weekend.

The Talladega Superspeedway is located on Speedway Boulevard, which runs next to I-20, east of Birmingham and west of Atlanta at exit number 168 and 173 respectively.

Reserved seat tickets for both the DieHard 500 and the ARCA 500K July 28 are now on sale at the speedway ticket office. For more information, call (205) 362-9064.

Editor's note: This story was compiled from Talladega Superspeedway press releases. For a map and more about Talladega see page B-2.

Darrell Waltrip, in the number 17 Tide Chevrolet, blasts around the 2.66-mile oval track at Talladega Superspeedway followed closely by Davey Allison in the number 28 Havoline Ford.

Four wins mark Horton as favorite at ARCA

Talladega Superspeedway

When Jimmy Horton rolled into victory lane at Talladega following the Bumper To Bumper 500K on May 5, it was his third such trip of 1990. Dale Earnhardt's win the next day in the Winston 500 was also his third of the season.

The difference is that Horton was a perfect three-for-three in ARCA events, and has now made it four-for-four with his win at Pocono this past weekend, an almost unheard of feat. He will try for his second Talladega Superspeedway win in the ARCA 500K July 28.

The former New Jersey state champion never anticipated the success that has come his way thus far on the ARCA circuit.

Horton's four straight wins have indeed marked him as the man to beat on ARCA's remaining superspeedway races, the only ones in which he will compete.

"Tracy Leslie is really going to be coming after me, especially after we just barely beat him at Pocono."

Leslie is the defending champion of the ARCA 500K at Talladega Superspeedway.

Following the narrow loss to Horton in the Bumper To Bumper 500K, Charlie Glotzbach also served notice that he would be a force to be reckoned with.

Reserved seating in the Anniston and Birmingham Towers are now on sale at the speedway ticket office. Reserved seats are $25, and may be purchased in advance using VISA and Mastercard. The rest of the speedway's massive grandstand will be general admission ($20) and will be sold on race day only.

For information and seat selection, call (205) 362-9064.

Petroleum supply specialists fill 'em up

197th Infantry Brigade soldiers perform pre-operation safety checks on a heavy expanded mobility tactical truck.

By Troy Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

More than 50 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade gathered for two days of classes to cross train and fill positions as brigade fuel handlers.

According to 1st Lt. Bernadette Tolson, the brigade's Class III officer, the course is designed to certify soldiers of any military occupational specialty to serve as their unit's 77F, petroleum supply specialists.

"The classes teach the individuals administrative skills, accountability, and how to handle package products and natural gases," Tolson said.

"The brigade simply doesn't have enough petroleum specialists," said Sgt. 1st Class Bardrick McGuire, Class III platoon sergeant from Company A, 197th Support Battalion. "By having this semiannual training class, we can educate soldiers in the field of fuel and drive on with our mission as a brigade."

"The classes are designed to teach the very basic principles the first day and advance through more difficult types of operations involving all of the fuel trucks," said Pfc. Angela Duncan of Co. A, 197th Spt. Bn.

According to Tolson, all soldiers selected to serve as fuel handlers are required to be certified through the classes conducted by the Support Battalion.

Included in the classes is instruction in the operation of the heavy expanded mobility tactical truck, the tanker pump unit, and the 5,000-gallon tanker truck.

"Overall, the brigade did rather well, with the soldiers achieving an average score of 92 percent on the testing," McGuire said.

He credited the 197th Spt. Bn. trainers with the high success rate. "Support Battalion personnel have done an excellent job teaching the soldiers proper procedures for handling fuel, along with the safety considerations essential to the fuel handlers' mission."

Marksmen clinch titles

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit clinched seven national titles and set a new national record in one event at the 30th International Shooting Championships recently in Chino, Calif.

Sgt. Troy Lawton and Spec. Martin David Edmondson set a new national record in the running target 10-meter air rifle event. They also each won an individual national championship.

Lawton won the running target 50-meter (30 plus 30) championship and placed second in both the 50-meter mixed run and the 10-meter air rifle event. Edmondson won the championship title in the 10-meter air rifle match, an event in which he set a new interservice record during the interservice match recently at Fort Benning. He also placed third in the 30 plus 30 event.

As a team, however, the six running target shooters from USAMU were unstoppable as they won every two- and three-man team event. Lawton, Edmondson and Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk were the winning team members.

The USAMU "Red" team of Sgt. 1st Class James Reiber, Pvt. 1st Class Brice Bright and Pvt. 1st Class Colin Windows placed second in the 50-meter mixed run and third in the 10-meter air rifle matches.

Capt. Denise Morrison emerged as the national champion in Ladies Trap. Sharee Waldron, wife of USAMU trap shooter Pvt. 2 Jay Waldron, placed second in that event.

Sgt. Bret Erickson and Pvt. Waldron were members of the first-place, two- and three-man trap team. USAMU's Spec. William Roberts, Spec. Richard Graves and Morrison placed third in the three-man team match.

National champions for the international pistol matches are: Master Sgt. Erich Buljung, free pistol; Capt. John McNally, rapid fire pistol and standard pistol; and Pvt. 1st Class Ed Suarez, centerfire pistol.

In international rifle events, 1st Lt. Michael Anti placed second in the men's air rifle championship and Spec. Thomas Tamas placed second in the small-bore, three-position rifle event.

USAMU rifle teams also placed second in the air rifle and free rifle, three-position events and third in the free rifle, prone, three-position matches.

This event was also the final selection match to choose shotgun and rifle team members for the world championship in Moscow in August.

Morrison and Erickson made the team in trap and Sgt. 1st Class Alger Mullins and Spec. Cindy Raahauge made the team in skeet. International rifle competitors Tamas, Sgt. Brad Carnes and Capt. Steve Goff will also be on the team in Moscow.

A total of 12 members of USAMU have been chosen for the world championship team. Edmondson for running target and Buljung, Suarez, Spec. Stan Hayes and Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie McCoy for pistol were chosen for the team in May.

Soldiers survey unfamiliar territory

By William J. Edwards
Co. A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

One of the most crucial and difficult tasks for Infantry lieutenants is negotiating in unfamiliar terrain, according to an Infantry Officer Basic Course platoon trainer.

The students in IOBC Class 7-90 recently got a chance to develop their land navigation skills on Yankee Road in Harmony Church.

Capt. Darrell Jarmon of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, said land navigation is one of the most difficult tasks he has faced in his career as a rifle platoon leader.

Each IOBC student must successfully complete land navigation. For a passing score, each student must locate six of nine points on the course in daylight hours and three of five points in darkness.

To refresh each student's knowledge in the concepts of land navigation and orienteering, a practice course is attempted prior to the record examination.

Several students said the practice course was difficult and covered "a lot more ground."

Bass anglers catch 31

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club's monthly tournament was July 7 and 8 at Lake West Point, beginning at 8 p.m. on the 7th and continuing until 7 a.m. on the 8th.

Twenty-six Bass Club members participated and caught a total of 31 fish for a weight of 94 pounds, five ounces.

First-place honors went to George Mendez with a total of 12 pounds. Otis Carter took second place with 10 pounds, 14 ounces. Christian placed third with a total of nine pounds, four ounces. Willie Goble took the big fish pot with a six pound, four ounce fish.

The majority of the fish were caught on Carolina worm rigs, fished on rip-rap along the bridges or on rocky drop-offs.

The club will hold its August tournament on Lake Eufaula.

Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year. The next community function will be in conjunction with the South Columbus Exchange Club in August. Plans are being made to have a day of fishing and water education for underprivileged children of the Columbus-Fort Benning community. Further information about this will be announced as plans are finalized.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club that promotes conservation, good sportsmanship, community pride, as well as fishing, contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Ben McGuire at 568-0699.

Prospective members are invited to attend one of the club's meetings the second or fourth Tuesday of each month in building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

Talladega race officials answer DieHard questions

Talladega Superspeedway

1. Question: Ford and Chrysler products dominated the early runnings of the DieHard 500, with General Motors not visiting victory lane until 1977 when Donnie Allison won. What kind of car was he driving?

Answer: A Chevrolet.

2. Question: If Winston 500 winner Dale Earnhart could also win the July 29th DieHard 500, he would join three other drivers as Talladega's all-time Winston Cup winners. Who are the three drivers currently tied for the lead with four victories each?

Answer: Bobby Allison, Buddy Baker and Darrell Waltrip.

3. Question: When Bobby Hillin won the 1986 DieHard 500, he became the youngest driver to win a Winston Cup race. How old was he?

Answer: 22-years-old.

4. Question: The DieHard 500, which will be run on July 29th, has earned a reputation for being the most competitive auto race in the world. In 1978, a world record for lead changes was set, with 67 among 9 drivers. Who won that highly competitive race?

Answer: Lennie Pond.

5. Question: The total margin of victory in the last ten DieHard 500's is slightly more than three seconds. What was the official margin of victory last year when Terry Labonte edged Darrell Waltrip?

Answer: 2/10ths of a second.

6. Question: When Donnie Allison won the DieHard 500 in 1977, he became sick during the race and required a relief driver to finish the race for him. Who was his relief?

Answer: Rusty Wallace

9. Question: Of the 19 different winners of the DieHard 500, three of them have been named Richard. Who were they?

Answer: Richard Brickhouse (1969), Richard Brooks (1973), and Richard Petty (1974).

Mudcat pitcher Ryan Bowen warms up before the game.

Post supports Mudcats

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"It was the most successful night we've had at Golden Park this season," said a member of the Mudcats management staff about Fort Benning Family Night July 15.

Mudcats Special Assistant Ken Branch said 5,201 people passed through the gates for the Mudcats game against the Orlando Sunrays.

"Most of the attendance came from the 92 busloads of soldiers from the Infantry Training Center, Airborne School and Officers' Candidate School," he said. "The players loved the crowd."

Branch said although the Mudcats lost, the noise from the crowd motivates the players.

He said he felt as if the soldiers were equally motivated.

"One of the girls who works in the souvenir stand overheard a soldier saying it was the best day he'd had in a long time," Branch said.

He added that soldiers and their families are always welcome at Golden Park. He mentioned that a military discount is always offered at the gate.

Branch noted that soldiers might especially be interested in attending 1st Calvary Division Reunion Night on August 10.

"The Silverwings are going to be there and there will be fireworks," he said.

Redlegs win golf tourney

By Will Deavor
197th Infantry Brigade

4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery grabbed the top team trophy by a single stroke in the fourth annual Patriot Open July 3 at the Follow-Me Golf Course.

After 18 holes of play, Redlegs Bill Engel, Sean Edwards, Ron Rice and Chris Knowlton shot an overall score of 60 strokes to edge 1st Battalion's Bill Caldwell, Arch Arnold, Murray Williams and Will Deavor, who finished with a team total of 61.

The tournament format was four-ball scramble, which allowed each team to play the best of four shots from the tee box to the green.

In the second flight — for players with higher handicaps — Ed Cole, Scott Bayer, Lee Enloe and Joel Thunderburke of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., beat Dan Bourgoine, Tom Kallman, Darnell Shaw and Dan Vannucci of 1st Bn.

The margin of victory was a single stroke, 67 to 68.

Individual players of the host battalion captured some of the individual awards. On the first hole, Bob Bailey let fly a 330-yard drive, which won him the longest drive competition for the hole.

Jeff Jennings hit a similar shot on the seventh hole, hitting a drive to place his team within seven feet of the cup and captured the prize for landing closest to the pin on that par-three hole.

The tournament attracted 22 teams of four players each.

Gold

until the end of the day. The team adheres to this schedule day in, day out. No holidays. No breaks.

"You have to practice like this," said Smith. "You have to do the extras, and do it until it hurts. After practice, you have to go and practice some more. If you put in the overtime, you'll always be one step ahead of your competition.

"I want to make the 1992 Olympics," he continued. "For me, it's the brass ring. Although I work hard, I feel lucky, because I have the support of Coach (Thomas), and the support and love of my spiritual coaches, my mother and my girlfriend.

"There's nothing that I'd rather do than wrestling," added Demos. "I've put off my wedding for a shot at the '92 Olympics."

"The coach really pushes us," said Strimska. "But, we don't mind it too much. In fact, that's what makes us really pull together, and it makes us stronger, as individuals as well as a team.

"When you have the kind of chemistry we have, respect for our coach and outside support, you can't help but to achieve the best results," he said.

While most of the members said they are pleased with the achievements the team has gained thus far, Waldroup said he is not comfortable with his position and strives for more.

"I am not satisfied with myself yet," he said. "I am a soldier and athlete, and I will not quit until I am at the top of my profession," he said.

Randy Kouturi, a former four-year member of the wrestling team here, now a sophmore at Oklahoma State University, still practices with his old teammates.

"I came back for the camaraderie, the good coaching, and the competition," Kouturi said. "The Army was great, and I really learned a lot — about competition and about what it takes to win.

"Fort Benning is really a good place to practice Greco-Roman style wrestling," he continued. "I learned it here, and I'll come back to practice and see my friends for as long as I can," he said.

Coach Thomas' motto: "If you work hard and train hard, you'll get exactly what you deserve, whatever that may be."

Reflections Reflections

Urgent things in life can crowd out priorities

By Roger C. Welsh
U.S. Army Infantry School Chaplain

We live in constant tension between the urgent and the important.

Once when Jesus was visiting Mary and Martha, Martha became upset with Jesus for allowing Mary to relax in casual conversation with him while she frantically worked in the kitchen.

Martha told Jesus, "Lord, don't you care that my sister has left me to do all the work by myself? Tell her to come and help me." (Luke 10:40)

Jesus responding by saying, "Martha, Martha. You are worried and troubled over so many things, but just one is needed. Mary has chosen the right thing, and it will not be taken away from her." (Luke 10:41)

In the original Greek language, the term "troubled" conveys the idea of a ship being tossed about in a great storm without direction, only able to react to the tempest waves.

Martha missed the chance to have a meaningful conversation with the Master because she was too busy being tossed about by the tempest waves of urgency.

Often we are like Martha by letting the urgent things crowd out important priorities in our lives.

We tend to blame this lack of priority on not having enough time in the day, but this problem goes beyond a shortage of time. Even with a 30-hour day, our lives would still leave a trail of unfinished tasks such as unanswered letters, unvisited friendsand unread books.

This dilemma is not caused by a lack of time. Rather, it is a problem of priorities. Often the momentary appeal of the urgent task seems irresistible and devours our energy. We become driven by the winds of urgency onto the psychological reef of frustration.

Most soldiers know what it is to go full speed for long hours, totally involved in important tasks. Normally, the resulting weariness is matched by a sense of achievement.

Anxiety is not the product of hard work; rather it is derived from doubt and misgiving.

Jesus spent long hours deeply involved with people, yet his life was never rushed in a feverish manner. He was a man whose life contained adequate purpose and inward rest.

People constantly demanded Jesus' time; yet he seemed at leisure in his crowded life. Jesus faced the great challenge of dealing with people suffering from pain, disappointment, anger and death.

His key to success was warding off the urgent things to accomplish important tasks.

When Lazarus lay dying, Mary and Martha summoned Jesus with a dispatched message.

"Lord, your dear friend is sick." (John 11:3) However, Jesus stayed two more days before leaving to be with his sick friend.

The urgent task was to heal Lazarus from his illness. God, the Father, had a more important mission for Jesus which was to raise Lazarus from the dead.

Jesus was following the will of the Father who provided him with a sense of direction and freedom from the tyranny of the urgent.

A prominent element of Jesus' life was to rise early in the morning to seek the will of the Father through prayer.

Jesus lived his life completely trusting on the plan of the Father for his life. His focus was to do the will of Him who sent him. Jesus was able to say his ministry on earth was "finished" (John 17:4).

He knew that many people still had troubled lives filled with mental, spiritual and physical anguish, but he had accomplished every task God, the Father, had given him to fulfill. Jesus' success was based upon correct planning by God, the Father.

In "Tyranny of the Urgent" by Charles Hummel, an ex-president for the Dupont Corporation, is quoted as saying, "One minute spent in planning saves three or four minutes in execution."

For the Christian believer, a time of morning meditation and prayer helps to refocus our relationship to God and others. It also helps us to withstand the unnecessary urgencies of the moment to commit ourselves to the important priorities of our life.

When we prayerfully evaluate our lives and objectives, we discover a new and fresh perspective in our work.

Clarence Lee Walton, who shines shoes and boots in the Building 4 barber shop, gets up each morning at 2:30 a.m. to begin his day. He has a plan for each day and is very comfortable with his work schedule.

In the military, a commander must always have a plan of battle before engaging the enemy. The tyranny of the urgent can be a type of enemy.

Emergency demands should be expected during the implementation process of the plan, but the direction should not change.

Jesus was never frustrated about his ministry because he completely understood the purpose and plan of accomplishing the will of the Father.

Jesus did not finish every urgent task in Palestine, but he did finish the will of God. By doing this, Jesus completely changed our world and brought salvation to all mankind.

Local pastors attend Clergy Day here

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Dozens of religious leaders from Columbus and the surrounding area spent "Clergy Day" with Fort Benning chaplains July 16 at the Infantry Center Chapel annex.

The event was sponsored by the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Clergy Day began last summer as an effort to help promote community relations between approximately 200 local area churches and Fort Benning.

Chap. (Col.) George W. Gudz, post chaplain, welcomed the clergymen to Fort Benning.

The civilian pastors then had a chance to get a glimpse of the past with a special tour of the National Infantry Museum.

A luncheon at the Officers' Club was marked by a speech by Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza.

More than 115,000 active-duty service members, military retirees and Department of Defense civilians live in Columbus and the surrounding area. Part of the purpose of Clergy Day is to give ministers an idea of the lifestyle of these soldiers and family members.

Barnesville stagecoach comes to Warm Springs

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

For a preview of Barnesville's Buggy Days, visit the Little White House historic site Monday through July 30 to view an authentic Barnesville buggy.

It is in Barnesville that Franklin Delano Roosevelt's stagecoach was built in the late 1880s or early 1990s by the Barnesville firm of Summers and Murphy when the town was the Buggy capital of the world.

FDR's coach was used in parades at the Warm Springs Foundation and later in Woodbury's Pimiento Festivals.

Currently the coach is in storage until a suitable display area can be erected.

The buggy to be displayed at the site is owned by Roger Brown, owner of Barnesville Hardware. His business was once the showroom for the Smith Buggy Co.

Brown and other Barnesville merchants extend an invitation to the general public to attend the week-long festival commemorating the days of spoke wheels and surrey tops.

There will be entertainment, arts and crafts and parades.

For a preview of the September event, tour the Little White House Monday through July 30.

Operating hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., with the last tour starting at 4:15 p.m.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I've heard that Georgia now has a "lemon law" that protects car buyers. I'm in the market for a car, and I would like to know more about this law. What can you tell me?

A. Georgia now has a lemon law, known as the Georgia Motor Vehicle Warranty Rights Act.

Although it was signed into law in April, it does not go into effect until Jan. 1, 1991. This law will apply to new cars only; it has no effect whatsoever on used vehicles.

Under the lemon law, a car will be considered a "lemon" if it has a "nonconformity" which the manufacturer cannot repair after a reasonable number of attempts to do so.

What is "nonconformity"? It is either a "serious safety defect" or any other kind of defect or condition that substantially affects the use or value of the car.

In other words, the defect is going to be one that has some real impact on the operations or looks of the car. In all likelihood, a minor ding or squeak will not qualify the car as a lemon.

What are a reasonable number of attempts? It depends on the type of defect. If it's a serious safety defect involving the brakes or the steering, the manufacturer gets one attempt to repair it before the new law kicks in. This attempt must take place within the first 12,000 miles or 12 months after purchase (the "lemon law rights period").

If it's some other serious safety defect, the manufacturer gets two repair attempts, the first of which must have occurred during the "lemon law rights period" and the second during the first 24,000 miles or 24 months.

If it's some other substantial defect, the manufacturer gets three repair attempts, the first of which must occur during the "lemon law rights period" and the other two during the first 24,000 miles or 24 months.

An alternate way to determine a reasonable number of attempts to repair is if the vehicle is out of service for a total of 30 days during the first 24,000 miles or 24 months, with 15 of the days out of service during the "lemon law rights period."

What happens if there is a substantial defect and the manufacturer can't repair it after a reasonable number of attempts? The car owner should send the manufacturer a notice by certified mail. After the manufacturer receives the notice, it has one final opportunity to repair the vehicle.

After receiving the notice, the manufacturer has seven days to notify the owner of a repair facility. The repair facility must be located reasonably near the owner. The manufacturer then has 14 days to repair the car. If it fails to do so, the manufacturer must either replace the car or repurchase the lemon from you.

The new law goes on to spell out the formula for the repurchase of the lemon, as well as to set out arbitration procedures for situations where the owner and the manufacturer disagree on whether the vehicle is a lemon.

Should the owner end up in a position where the manufacturer has not been able to repair the car after a reasonable number of attempts, he or she should seek legal advice about options and how the new law works.

Bear in mind, however, that the new law does not yet apply to vehicles being purchased. The law does not go into effect until January, 1991.

The attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office are familiar with the provisions of the new law and are available to advise new car buyers. The telephone number is 545-3281.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Periodically, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Energy Management and Control System is used to curtail, or turn off, air conditioning in most Fort Benning facilities. Due to the extreme heat this summer, DEH has had to curtail four times already.

A common misconception is that curtailment is a means to meet energy goals by cutting back on electrical use.

The real reasons for curtailments, however, are to comply with a contractual agreement Fort Benning has made with the Georgia Power Company, from which the post purchases electricity, and to be a responsible energy user in the community. The objective in curtailment is focused on economy and responsibility, not to save energy.

Although electricity comprises only 27 percent of the energy used on post, it is the most expensive type of energy used, costing in excess of $9.6 million a year.

Fort Benning is the fourth largest single electrical consumer in southwest Georgia and the tenth largest electrical user in the state. Because DEH personnel control the post's demand for electricity, Georgia Power can give the post cheaper energy rates.

When Georgia Power is operating at maximum capacity, users with special agreements are asked to curtail demand in order to prevent the electrical company from having to begin operating additional, more expensive generating facilities.

Fort Benning has such an agreement and complies with these requests by reducing electrical loads, through curtailments.

In return, Georgia Power allows Fort Benning to purchase electricity at reduced rates. The substantial savings realized from these rates allow the post to provide air conditioning earlier and later in the season than would be possible otherwise.

In 1987, there were six curtailment periods with an approximate savings of $400,000. In 1988, in spite of record high temperatures, there were only eight curtailments with a cost savings of $607,015. During 1989, electricity curtailed four times, for a total of eleven hours. The cost savings totaled $865,670.

These curtailment periods ranged from one to four hours and occurred during the afternoon. The projected savings for curtailing during fiscal 1990 is approximately $902,000.

Even though curtailments normally occur during very warm weather, air conditioning systems are cycled on as conditions permit to maintain a degree of comfort for building occupants.

By curtailing electrical usage during peak periods, Fort Benning is able to buy electricity cheaper during the summer months and be a responsible user. It is in the best interest of the installation and its population to take the opportunity to save the money that would normally be spent on utility bills and put it back into accounts that improve the quality life on the post, according to DEH officials.

The curtailments may cause an inconvenience to some personnel and residents, but overall it's a small price to pay for the benefits gained.

If you have any questions on this or any other energy-related subject, contact the Energy Branch at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Chinaware poses possible health hazard

A possible health hazard exists with chinaware purchased in Korea.

Four chinaware patterns made in the Repubic of China (Mainland China) sold in Korea in 1988 contain dangerous leachable lead levels that exceed U.S. Food and Drug Administration limits.

These patterns are: White Butterfly China, Red Powder China, Yellow Powder China, and Green Powder China. The manufacturer's name is unknown.

Customers should immediately stop using these items as food and drink carrying vessels.

If purchased at the Wives Club in Seoul, Korea (Cho Sun Gift Show), customers should contact Jan Ligon, P.O. Box 315, APO San Francisco, Calif., 96206, for refund instructions.

It is not believed that Army and Air Force Exchange Stores sold any of this chinaware.

Privately owned vehicles require re-registration

All privately owned vehicles bearing the Fort Benning decal and expired tabs must be re-registered, according to Vehicle Registration Office personnel.

According to Sgt. Nathaniel Bernard, noncommissioned officer in charge, owners whose vehicles bear expiration tabs one through six (the numbers correspond with the months of the year), should re-register immediately. A new decal — the Department of Defense decal — will be issued upon re-registration.

Re-registration requires the same documentation as initial registration: proof of vehicle ownership, valid state driver's license, and proof of insurance. Also, motorcycle owners must show their Defensive Driving Course card.

"The Fort Benning decal is being phased out," Bernard said. "By December 31, all POVs driven on post should bear the DoD decal."

The Fort Benning decal is valid until the date on the expiration tab. All other registration decals on bumpers, windows or plates should be removed, Bernard said.

The Fort Benning Vehicle Registration Office is on the first floor in Building 2621 in Soldiers' Plaza. Hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For more information call Bernard at 545-1195 or Bessie B. Tucker at 545-1004.

ACS celebrates 25 years

Fort Benning reps, other DA personnel gather for anniversary

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Army Community Service representatives gathered Wednesday to celebrate 25 years of service to soldiers and family members.

Officials from the Department of the Army, Training and Doctrine Command, Directorate of Community Activities and ACS gathered at the Officers' Club for a lunchtime celebration of the silver anniversary.

Carla Cary, Fort Benning's ACS chief, presided over the ceremonies and spoke about her start with ACS and how it has evolved over the years.

She said she started as a volunteer in 1976.

"At that time, it was basically an information and referral service and a lending closet," she said.

"I wanted to work for them because they provided caring and assistance to soldiers and family members."

Cary's reason for starting has also been her reason for staying and is what led her to her present position.

"Our slogan is, 'Where People and Solutions Come Together,'" she said. "Here we provide support and assistance in the areas of financial planning, family advocacy, outreach, relocation assistance, exceptional member program and family member employment.

After Cary's introductions, several others took turns at the podium.

Wilett Bunton, program analyst, Family Member Employment Assistance Program, Headquarters Department of the Army, delivered a message from Army Chief of Staff Carl E. Vuono.

In his message Vuono said, "I extend deep appreciation to you, the ACS staff, and the thousands of volunteers who have made a difference in the lives of soldiers."

"Every time you assist a young spouse, resolve a soldier's dilemma, or help a family adapt to a new post, you make a direct and substantial contribution to the readiness of the force," Vuono said.

Vuono congratulated ACS for its accomplishments and said he looks forward to 25 more years of "taking care of our own."

Army plans to close 50 ROTC units

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The Department of the Army announced July 13 that 50 Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps units at colleges and universities throughout the country will be deactivated.

The action is a result of not only budget reductions but also of the Army's requirement for fewer lieutenants as the forces become smaller, officials say.

When the reductions are complete, the Army will still have 363 units in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and Guam. Sources of commission through ROTC will remain in each state, officials said.

Criteria used to determine reductions focused on the viability of ROTC units, Army officials said. Viability is based on the program's four-year weighted production — cadet enrollment, its current and projected production, the current quality of officers produced, and the academic degrees of the students. Units with the lowest levels of viability will be deactivated, officials said.

Of the 50 units to be deactivated, 34 are cadet battalions and 16 are extension centers.

Cadet battalions are located at colleges and universities that have a written agreement with the secretary of the Army to host Army ROTC.

A cadet battalion has a full complement of officers and noncommissioned officers who administer the program and teach the classes. The extension center has a smaller staff and works under the the direction of a nearby cadet battalion.

Students who are enrolled, or will enroll in the future, at schools from which Army ROTC programs will be withdrawn, may have the opportunity to take part in the program as cross-enrolled cadets, officials said. A cross-enrolled cadet is one who takes his or her academic work at one school and ROTC on a nearby campus with a cadet battalion.

Students, or other parties, who may be affected by these deactivations should call their professors of military science if they have specific questions.

Colleges and universities in Georgia affected are Mount Berry College in Mount Berry and Mercer University in Macon.

Defense secretary describes budget cut

American Forces Information Service

Congress recently asked Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney to describe a Department of Defense force structure cut 25 percent. The picture he painted was close to the one he's been trying to sell the past five months.

At a press conference following his briefing to Congress, the secretary discussed the ideas he'd presented. He noted that Congress had requested his report to help Budget Summit Committee members and said it was not new or revised DoD or administration proposals.

Cheney said his report showed somewhat deeper cuts than the Bush administration has requested through fiscal 1995. On the other hand, he said, current House and Senate defense budget resolutions demand more than double the savings offered in the DoD scenario.

"What I told them is, the budget we would like to have is the one we submitted. It gets us to the level of funding that we wanted. It also does it in a way that we think makes sense," Cheney said.

"Congress needs to know — and this exercise was intended to show them — what they have to do to get down, roughly, to the levels the president has recommended and what they have to do if they want to go beyond that.

"There isn't any way I know of to cut the defense budget other than to cut personnel, cut force structure, close bases, cancel procurement, etc.

"That's what's in the defense budget — 46 or 47 percent of my budget is manpower and manpower-related costs," he said.

"This is an honest effort to show what would happen under these alternative scenarios."

In his briefing, Army and Marine Corps forces take significant cuts — from a current 32 divisions to 22 by 1995.

"What we did was to try to crank into this example what we thought were some of the more relevant judgments that had to be made at the present," he said.

The Army was hit hard in terms of total size reduction, he noted, because the mission that has changed most dramatically has been the one to fight a major land war in Europe.

His scenario shows 17 strategic bomber squadrons by 1995, a level reached by retiring four B-52 squadrons. The Navy would lose two of its 15 air wings and 111 of its 566 ships, but only two of its 14 aircraft carriers. The Air Force would lose 11 of its 36 air wings by 1995 in the example.

Using ex-servicemen's talents is real return on investment

Association of the U.S. Army

The coming drawdown of our Armed Forces must be handled with some care.

Highly trained personnel, especially noncommissioned officers, are going to be released from their current assignments to accommodate the upcoming reduction in force.

These are people with 12 to 15 years experience to whom just a year ago we would have been offered substantial bonuses to reenlist in the Armed Forces.

They are top-notch, well-trained and highly motivated.

The only thing that politicians, pundits and the military leadership have been able to agree on in recent years is the unusually high quality of our current military force. So let us be sure we do not waste this talent.

There are a host of ways that the country could benefit by their future employment.

As the size of the Armed Forces shrinks, it becomes more imperative that the quality stay high.

We cannot afford to cast aside the trained mid-level leadership that we have so painstakingly developed.

One avenue that would surely be worthwhile would be to increase the full-time manning assignments in our reserve components and selectively transfer into those slots the best of those whose active duty assignments are being eliminated.

It is not easy to assess where the national war on drugs is headed. But it is certain that military training and discipline are attributes that those charged with the administration on the program will need in the troopers they will use in pursuit of their goals.

The Immigration Service is another venue that is particularly adaptable for those with military training.

There are other areas of government service as well where we taxpayers should look to the leadership to maximize the talent in which we have invested so much.

What we are dealing with is not a matter of individual choice. It is more a question of how we as a nation have a right to expect a reasonable return on a valuable national asset.

Those who have served so well in uniform are worthy of the gainful use of their skills. Use it — don't lose it.

LETTER

Readers want fair coverage

In the July 6 issue of The Bayonet, there was an article about the U.S. Army Chief of Staff's Award for Excellence being awarded to Fort Benning's Legal Assistance Division for the second consecutive year.

In that article Capt. Howard McGillin, the current Chief of Legal Assistance at Fort Benning, is mentioned quite prominently.

After reading the article, one gets the distinct impression that McGillin was the Chief of Legal Assistance during the two-year period when the office was doing the work necessary to merit such recognition. This is not the case.

From 1987 until mid-June 1990, the chief of Legal Assistance at Fort Benning was Maj. Dennis Brower, who recently relocated to U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll, Marshall Islands. While he was chief, Brower not only improved existing programs, but implemented many new ones designed to provide more services to those seeking legal help.

Brower was an excellent manager and leader, who kept the morale of his subordinates high in a rather demanding work environment.

If there is one person who deserves credit for the excellent performance of the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office during this time, it is Brower. However, the article did not mention his name, not even once.

In closing, it is imperative that a future edition of The Bayonet mention the fine work done by Brower in helping Fort Benning's Legal Assistance Division attain such high honors.

McGillin is a fine officer and attorney, but he became Chief of Legal Assistance only recently and literally had nothing to do with the performance of the office during the periods covered by the awards.

We were particularly incensed after reading this article not only because we have both worked in Legal Assistance for Brower, but because we felt he was not given the recognition he deserved.

Dear readers,

Our article was written to inform the Fort Benning community about the Legal Assistance Division winning an award of excellence, not to pay accolades to any one individual.

Capt. Howard McGillin said the entire office won the award, and our article stated as much.

Our journalists are required to give attribution to the source of their information. Since our reporter interviewed McGillin, he is quoted as our source throughout the article.

Bayonet reporters try to provide accurate news coverage. It is never our intention to slight anyone.

Thank you for bringing this matter to our attention.

Operations sergeant is NCO of Quarter

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"No one really loses when you compete before a board at this level because every noncommissioned officer there won the opportunity to attend," said the U.S. Army Infantry Center NCO of the Quarter for the third fiscal quarter of 1990.

However, Staff Sgt. Ricky D. McGill, an operations sergeant with the Henry Caro NCO Academy says he's glad he came out on top.

The top spot or runner-up is nothing new to McGill who has come out on top on at least six other times and was runner-up for post Drill Sergeant of the Year.

McGill said he enjoys being evaluated by boards consisting of the leadership above him.

"It's useful stress competing against other highly educated NCOs," he said. "It's also a useful training tool. You gain a lot of knowledge that you can pass on to your subordinates."

He said he's found that the information gained from studying for boards has helped him in other ways as well.

"I got a call from Florida the other day asking about the flag, and I was able to answer it without hesitation," McGill said, "I was able to handle a similar call from Mississippi the same way."

The 11-year veteran has discovered that it also helps him assist his subordinates in obtaining basic soldier skills. "If I don't know the answer right away I can guide them in the right direction so they can educate themselves."

"Education is the key to success," McGill said. "Whether you're in the military or a civilian, education is important. It really irritates me when soldiers come up with excuses about not furthering their education."

He currently attends Troy State University and is pursuing a bachelor's degree in criminal justice.

On the military side of the house, McGill has attended Airborne, Air Assault and Drill Sergeant School. Also, he has attended the primary, basic and advanced noncommissioned officers courses.

He likes to train and be with soldiers he said. Although his present position doesn't allow him to be with troops, he enjoys the other challenges it offers.

"I coordinate all the training and support requirements for each course taught here," he said. "I ensure the cadre take their common task tests and skill qualification tests as well as other requirements they need to meet."

McGill said the biggest reward in his position is going to a training site and seeing everything in place and functional so soldiers can be trained properly."

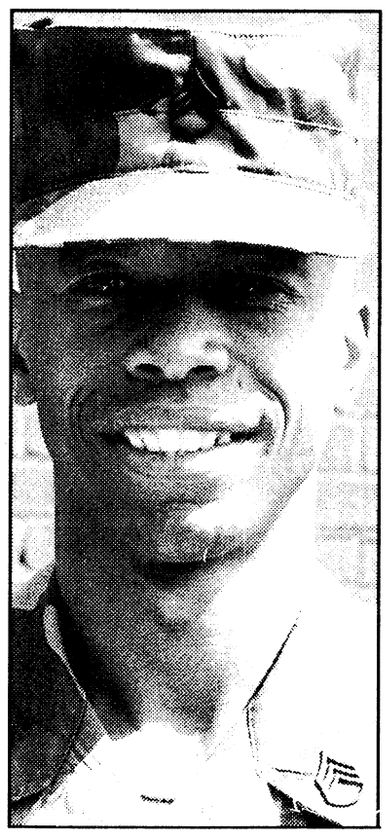
Training is a big part of today's Army. McGill has had a glimpse of both.

As a matter of fact, he's had a glimpse at the old, old Army.

McGill, a former member of the "The Old Guard," 3rd U.S. Army Infantry Battalion, Fort Myer, Va., calls that tour the highlight of his career.

One of his requirements during that tour was to don the traditional Revolutionary War uniform.

"I really enjoy the pomp and circumstance that surrounds a unit like that," he said. "It has a very positive image with the public."



Staff Sgt. Ricky D. McGill

Describing himself as a career man, he said he intends to have one more tour with the "Old Guard." In the near future he'd like to be assigned to the Joint Security Area in Korea.

"Before any of that, I would like to win the NCO of the Year title," he said. "With all the support I have here at the academy, I believe I have a chance."

DoD to consolidate finance operations

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Finance and Accounting operations within the Department of Defense will be consolidated according to a recent announcement by Defense Department officials.

Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Atwood said the new consolidated accounting and finance organization will be under the direction of the department comptroller.

The new combined organization will encompass the:

Army Accounting and Finance Center in Indianapolis, In.; Navy Accounting and Finance Center in Crystal City, Va.; Navy Finance Center in Cleveland, Ohio; Marine Corps Finance Center in Kansas City, Mo.; Air Force Accounting and Finance Center in Denver, Co.; Defense Logistics Agency Finance Center, Columbus, Ohio; Washington Headquarters Services Accounting and Finance Policies, Operations, Pentagon in Arlington, Va.

A team of senior Department of Defense personnel was established July 11 to develop detailed organizational plans for the control and direction of DoD accounting and finance policies, procedures, systems and operations.

The team will provide its plan to accomplish this consolidation to the deputy secretary of defense for approval.

"There is a great need within the department for standardization for financial and accounting information," Atwood said.

"The integrated defense finance and accounting organization will enable us to use our limited resources with greater efficiency," he said.

Atwood emphasized that consolidation of finance and accounting operations will strengthen the overall effectiveness of financial management within the department.

Currently, the finance and accounting activities of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines Corps and defense agencies largely function independently of one another.

A recent DoD study indicates that a single organization, once it is fully implemented, will streamline accounting functions throughout the department, improve accounting operations, and result in significant savings annually.

Defense

His illustrative cuts avoided across-the-board reductions because, he said, they're impractical.

"A force structure cut in the Marines Corps means basically personnel," he said.

"A force structure cut in the Navy means basically ships.

"A force structure cut in the Air Force means basically tactical fighter wings.

"A Marine expeditionary brigade is a much more manpower-intensive kind of unit than is a wing of tactical fighters in the Air Force," said Cheney.

In terms of manpower, active and Reserve forces are cut around 21 percent in Cheney's illustration, reflecting losses of 442,000 active slots and 260,000 in the Guard and Reserve. Some 145,000 civilians would also have to go.

Cheney said the exercise offers thrusts similar to those already proposed by the Bush administration, and that should be no surprise.

Both he and Gen. Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have said a 20 to 25 percent force structure cut is a viable notion.

Further, DoD planners are reviewing force structure for a formal 1992-97 plan to be given to the president in the fall.

The exercise tracks generally with the direction those DoD planners are taking, Cheney said, so some of it may appear in the plan — or may not.

He acknowledged the exercise reflects some of his philosophy and priorities, but noted it also varies from his personal bent.

The illustration, for instance, saves only about $1.3 billion more than the president's plan — less than 1 percent of the defense budget.

Cheney said, however, the exercise claimed deep cuts early versus gradual reductions he and the administration prefer.

He also warned against sacrificing personnel to save quick bucks.

"To the extent the process of reducing personnel gets front-loaded, gets pushed up into 1991 instead of spread out evenly, we will do serious damage to our capacity to manage in an intelligent fashion," he said.

"Then you can get into a situation where you end up with unbalanced forces, with units that are undermanned in some key areas.

"You end up doing things that have a negative impact on morale, upon overall readiness of the force."

New dental benefits to go into effect

By Tim Downey
American Forces Information Service

Beginning Tuesday, the Active Duty Dependents Dental Plan will pay for sealants on permanent molars for patients under age 14. The plan will also cover space maintainers needed for premature loss of baby teeth.

Other new benefits are prefabricated resin crowns for baby front teeth and partial payment for some other crowns.

Air Force Col. Ed Herbold, DoD's special assistant for dental affairs, said dental sealants can help prevent decay. "They are applied to the surfaces of the teeth that have pits and fissures, or rough places that can trap plaque.

"The sealants make the tooth smooth so the decay-causing matter does not stick. Studies have shown that correctly applied sealants are extremely effective," said Herbold.

The voluntary dental plan is open to members of the seven uniformed services. Sponsors may enroll their families through their installation personnel office; they then pay a small monthly premium by payroll deduction.

Covered diagnostic and preventive services are fully paid; the plan shares 80 percent of the cost of a variety of restorative and repair services.

Benefits the plan covers in full include routine oral exams, dental X-rays, teeth cleanings and fluoride treatments.

The plan also shares the costs for fillings, stainless steel or plastic crowns for baby teeth and repairs to dentures.

Active-duty dependents may obtain dental care from one of 108,000 participating dental offices or from any other properly licensed dental provider.

The plan provides civilian dental care for active duty uniformed service families in the United States, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Once enrolled, family members stay in the program for at least two years, unless the family is transferred overseas, moves to a base where the military treatment facility provides dependent dental care or becomes entitled to other dental coverage.

Power of attorney useful, but powerful

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"A power of attorney can be useful, but it's very powerful. It shouldn't be given away like candy," said Capt. Jessica L. Kole of the Army's Legal Assistance Office in the Pentagon.

"Military people are the prime users of power of attorney," she said. "Sometimes, they give a general power of attorney when the more narrow special power of attorney would be more appropriate.

For example, Kole set up the following situation: You get orders for an unaccompanied overseas tour, put your affairs in order, give your spouse a general power of attorney and leave. When you come back at the middle of your tour, you discover your spouse has purchased a sports car for more than $20,000 and charged more than $12,000 on charge cards opened in your name.

"You are responsible for those debts, and this kind of story is not unusual," said Kole. "I've seen many incredible situations involving powers of attorney."

A general power of attorney allows the person to whom you give it to do almost anything you could have done yourself. You should think carefully before giving it and be sure that the person you choose to act on your behalf will have good sense when using it, she said.

"If married service members and their spouses have their financial affairs in order, they really shouldn't need a general power of attorney," said Kole. That is why she advises clients to consider the more limited special power of attorney.

This allows its users to move in and out of quarters, to ship a privately owned vehicle, to provide medical care for their children and to move money out of accounts and for just about any other purpose.

Several special powers of attorney can be written, each for a limited purpose.

Financial institutions sometimes have preferred formats for powers of attorneys, so Kole suggested checking on this before the document is prepared.

Even a limited power of attorney can cause trouble if given to the wrong person, though. Kole said a soldier gave a friend the authority to sell his car. The friend sold the car — and took off with the money.

Doctor contributes to AIDS research

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

A researcher at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology may have contributed significantly to Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome research.

Dr. Shyh-Ching Lo works at the institute, housed at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. He is a virologist, a doctor who studies viruses and the diseases they cause.

His research indicates that mycoplasmas, primitive bacteria with no cell walls, may work together with the human immunodeficiency virus to destroy cells. When "T-cells" in the body are destroyed, the body cannot resist infections, which can cause the death of AIDS patients

Mycoplasmas are bacteria, and they respond to antibiotics. So if further research supports Lo's findings, it could have significant impact on AIDS treatment.

Although Lo's work is still controversial in the scientific community, his theory has recently attracted interest, said Air Force Lt. Col. Michael Peterson DoD's senior policy analyst for preventive medicine and health promotion.

Peterson referred to an article in Science magazine. In that account, Dr. Luc Montagnier, the co-discover of the AIDS virus, published the results of an independent study in which he names a mycoplasma as a possible cofactor — thus backing up Lo's research.

That study "certainly helps," Lo said. "But it is still premature to say a cure for AIDS is just around the corner."

He explained that even if mycoplasmas play an important role in causing the symptoms associated with AIDS, curing the disease will not be easy.

"The good news is that there is a better chance of controlling a disease caused by a mycoplasma than one caused by a virus," Lo said. "No one has ever found a cure for a virus. But although mycoplasmas are more amenable to treatment, it is very difficult to eradicate them. We can suppress them, but it may be that they come right back when treatment is discontinued."

Although mycoplasmas turn out not to be the missing piece in the AIDS puzzle, Lo's research has uncovered another possible culprit for doctors to consider in mysterious illnesses.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Damage to air conditioners in Fort Benning's family housing areas is a constant problem for the post's air conditioning shop. Far too often, service calls are made for problems caused by neglect, misuse, and abuse by residents. With proper care, the need for these repairs could have been prevented.

Residents are responsible for keeping air conditioner filters clean. Air conditioners often fail because they are operated with dirty filters or with no filters at all.

As a result of this abuse, coils must be cleaned or condensers replaced. These are time-consuming, expensive tasks, which keep shop personnel from other air conditioner repairs.

Children should not be allowed to play on or near the outside condensing units. Objects such as sticks or wires inserted into the vents can damage the cooling fins, reducing the air conditioner's efficiency or causing the refrigerant to leak.

Sticks and rocks thrown into the rotating fan can break the fan blades and even cause the motor to fail.

As with any electrical appliance, a potential shock hazard exists if wiring inside the unit is damaged.

Outside condensing units should be kept clean and free of leaves and trash. When mowing lawns, use care to keep grass clippings out of the unit.

Residents should not tamper with thermostats beyond that required for normal operation.

If your air conditioner stops working, begins leaking, or makes unusual noises, don't attempt to repair it yourself. Call 545-2135 to place a service order.

Retain the service order numbers as a record of the call. Calls are answered in the order in which they are placed, and backlogs of work are common in the summer.

Your maintenance mechanic will respond to your call as soon as possible.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4552 or 545-SWAT.

SAFETY TIPS

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Beat excess heat

Excess heat can place abnormal stress on your body.

When your body temperature rises even a few degrees above normal, which is about 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit, you can experience muscle cramps, become weak, disoriented, and dangerously ill unless you can help your body to cool down.

If your body temperature rises above 105 degrees Fahrenheit, your condition can be fatal.

Persons who work in hot environments — foundries, kitchens, laundries — must take special care against heat and avoid the dangerous consequences of heat stress.

Mowers are dangerous

Lawn mower operation is a dangerous task that causes many serious injuries every summer.

Follow these procedures to protect yourself, your family and neighbors:

- Dress properly — no bare feet, sandals, shorts or loose clothing. Sturdy shoes are a must.
- Inspect your yard. Pick up stones, toys, metal fragments and other missiles.
- Refuel motor and check oil. Never refuel while the motor is hot.
- Make sure all guards are in place.
- Adjust for desired cutting height.
- Clear the area of children and pets.
- Disengage clutch (if applicable).
- Stand clear when starting. Keep feet away from mower blade and stay clear of the discharge chute at all times.
- Mow in daylight only and when the lawn is dry.
- Push, don't pull your mower.
- Mow laterally across a slope — not up and down. If on a riding mower, the rule is just the opposite.
- To make repairs or change the cutting height, stop the mower and disconnect the spark plug wire.

Tactics for ticks

The best defense against Lyme disease is not to get it. Follow these guidelines to avoid transmission:

- When you walk in wooded areas, especially from now until September, wear white or light-colored, long sleeved shirts and long pants. Tuck your pants into long socks.
- Use insect repellent on clothes and exposed areas, especially arms and hands.
- After you return from wooded areas, check your clothing and exposed skin and hair for tiny ticks.
- Remove ticks embedded in the skin immediately with tweezers. Grasp the tick as close to the skin as possible and pull gently, but firmly, straight out.
- Treat a tick bite with alcohol or antiseptic. Watch for symptoms of Lyme disease for several weeks.
- Pregnant women should take every precaution to avoid tick-infested areas because they can transmit the disease to the fetus. Transmission may result in miscarriage or birth defects.

SAFETY ALERT

Infantry Branch Safety Office

A soldier suffered two broken legs and internal injuries recently while on police call along I-185 near Marne Road about 9:30 a.m.

After running to the median to pick up a piece of trash, he turned and started across the two north bound lanes. He was partially on the roadway when he saw a pick up truck approaching. The driver tried to stop and the soldier tried to turn back, but at 55 miles per hour, there was no way to avoid the collision.

According to safety officials, commanders should:

- Brief soldiers never to run while on police call near traffic.
- Require each soldier wear a brightly colored reflective vest.
- Plan police call to minimize the number of times a soldier must cross traffic lanes.
- Insist that soldiers look both ways before they cross a road.
- Conduct police call near roadways during times of light traffic.
- Reduce the need for police call by encouraging everyone not to litter.

Use this Safety Alert to brief members of every police call.

UNIT NEWS

Engineers teach, learn about bridge building

586th Engineer Company

A platoon from Fort Benning's 586th Engineer Company recently deployed to Fort Bragg to teach other engineers about the Ribbon Bridge.

2nd Platoon of the 586th Engineer Company, 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion, instructed active engineers. Units from all over the United States attended the training including Fort Benning's 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Second platoon convoyed bridge trucks, bays and boats from Fort Benning to Fort Bragg, over 1,000 miles round trip, without having any disabling maintenance problems.

2nd Lt. John Bowman, platoon leader, said "the convoy was probably the most difficult task of the exercise. But, we made it, and I'm especially proud of all the troops for the hard work they put into maintenance and preparation for deployment."

The 26-day training exercise was conducted by the 20th Engineer Brigade's 264th Engineer Company, 30th Engineer Battalion.

It focused on the instruction and construction of all Army bridging used to negotiate gap crossings.

The two-day training cycle for the units included the rope bridge, medium girder bridge, bailey bridge, M-4T6 bridge, light tactical raft, aluminum foot bridge and the ribbon bridge taught by the "River Rats" from the 586th Engineer Company.

Also, included was a field expedient raft consisting of three 15-man assault boats tied together and covered by airborne pallets which is capable of transporting a high mobility, multi-purpose wheeled vehicle over water.

To add realism, each unit practiced tip drills and assaulted an M-60 machine gun position using the 15-man assault boats.

Soldiers from various bridge units provided the technical knowledge while participating units provided the construction manpower.

The training exercise was not an attempt to make experts of all engineers but to acquaint them with bridging and rafting capabilities Bowman said.

Most of the soldiers involved said they had not seen all of the different types of bridges since basic training, and the training was a good refresher.

"The 586th enjoyed the duty very much and is looking forward to lending their expertise in the future, said one private first class from the 586th. "I enjoyed the whole exercise and I'm looking forward to doing it again. It's good training," he said.

1st Bn., 18th Inf. Vanguards get new commander

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

Pride was the recurring theme from the speaker's platform when Lt. Col. Archibald V. Arnold III passed the colors of 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, to Lt. Col. E. W. Chamberlain III July 18 on Kelley Hill's Artillery Field.

Col. Theodore W. Reid, 197th Infantry Brigade commander and reviewing officer for the ceremony, spoke about his pride in the "Vanguards" after handing Chamberlain the battalion colors.

"The soldiers on this field today represent the more than 800 soldiers assigned to the battalion," Reid said.

"You can't be anything but overwhelmed. . .seeing how good these hard-bellied, flat-nosed infantry soldiers look.

"But, I see more than the individual soldier. I see a battalion prepared for deployment anywhere in the world," he continued. "I see a battalion prepared to fight and win."

Reid went on to describe how the Vanguards had proven their readiness under Arnold's command during the Return of Forces to Germany '88 exercise, corps deployment readiness exercises and two rotations to the National Training Center.

"During the last NTC rotation, the battalion was given three of the most difficult missions that could ever be assigned to a unit," he said.

"The battalion displayed its mettle on the last, and most difficult, of these missions — an attack into Granite Pass.

"When the battle ended, two companies had penetrated the pass, gotten into the enemy's rear and had destroyed all OPFOR (opposing forces) vehicles in sight, while infantry soldiers were individually routing OPFOR vehicles and OPFOR soldiers out of their holes.

"In fact, I'm convinced Bravo Company attacked 272s and BMPs (Soviet vehicles) with their own bare hands," Reid added. "The battalion secured the objective much to the surprise of the OCs (observer, controllers) and definitely to the surprise of the OPFOR.

"I just can't express in words how proud I was of the battalion on that morning.

"That one action is indicative of the battalion as a whole. It is well-trained, motivated, disciplined, well-maintained and definitely ready for any and all missions."

Reid reserved special praise for Arnold and his wife, Cordy, for their caring attitude for the soldiers and their family members.

"You truly care, and you have every reason to be proud of your accomplishments, proud of the battalion and proud of the soldiers on the field today," he said.

"It's a great battalion thanks to your caring, professional leadership and your desire to excel."

In his turn at the podium, Arnold expressed his pride in the battalion he had commanded for two years by saying, "If I could do it over again, I would.

"We've been through hell and high water together. But, never once have the soldiers in this outfit let me or this unit down," he said.

Arnold described the last four brigade commanders he had worked under as "an all-star line-up" who have made a great deal of difference in the way he acts and leads.

He reserved individual praise for his father, Col. Archibald V. Arnold Jr.; his wife, Cordy; his in-laws, Hank and Jane Wiley, Columbus natives; his operations officers; battalion executive officer and command sergeants major.

Arnold went on to name the four noncommissioned officers in charge of his dining facility, maintenance, mortar and rifle platoons as the symbols of "what the Noncommissioned Officer Corps is about."

"When I assumed command two years ago, Colonel (Harvey D.) Watson (former brigade commander) told me I was the luckiest commander in the Army," Arnold said.

"After seeing what these NCOs could do on a daily basis, I've been incredibly lucky to have them under my command."

Chamberlain, who Reid described as having an excellent mechanized infantry background that made him ideally suited to assume command of the Vanguard Battalion, called the soldiers of the battalion "the absolute best" in the Army.

"I'm proud to be Chamberlain of the 18th," he said. "I'm even more proud to be Chamberlain of the 1st of the 18th."

Refresher course began in 1940

By Soong-Bum Ahn
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The summer of 1940. Those were the good old days. Basic pay for a private was $21 a month, a second lieutenant, $125.

Paris had just fallen to the Nazis, the Battle of Britain had started, and American mobilization was beginning to gain steam as Army Airborne training and the Armored Force got started here at Camp Benning.

As a part of this mobilization, reserve officers were ordered to Camp Benning for a refresher course that would prepare some of them for combat duty. The first of these classes began July 8, 1940 as the Refresher Course for Rifle Company Replacements.

Fifty officers were selected for regular Army commissions at the end of each class.

Some alumni from this forerunner of the Infantry Officer Basic Course offer the following memories.

Retired Colonel George J. Heil, Jr., a member of that first class, recalls the problems of crawling with the new M-1 Garand rifle — how to carry it or cradle it. They spent hours trying out different methods he said.

He also remembers a couple of classmates who bought a 1926 Cord "aluminum body" and drove it around the post and Columbus.

According to retired Brig. Gen. Burt L. Mitchell Jr., rifle practice was done on known distance ranges. When the shooter missed the target entirely "Maggie's Red Drawers" would fly. Those in the pits pulling targets were required to wear flat World War I helmets.

He also remembers the holes in their uniforms burned by the sparks from the wood-fired trains they rode to the local training areas.

Retired Col. Charles M. Hangsterfer has memories of living in 50-man bays much like the ones used by the trainees of that time. He also remembers the officers' dining room as being more of a mess hall with dessert being served on top of the mashed potatoes.

He said the narrow gauge railroad cars and the M-1 rifle are the reason for his fond memo.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Mark A. Gomez
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Four years ago while stationed in Germany, I bought a piece of land located in Florida from a fellow soldier. This soldier was an agent for a land development company. I made a $1,500 down payment and financed $17,500 over the next 15 years. I have all the brochures, maps and other literature about the property, but I never received a deed. Last week I received a notice in the mail that the land development company was going bankrupt. What should I do?

A. Your description of the transaction indicates you entered into a land sales or land installment contract. In a land sales contract, the buyer agrees to make payments to the seller for a certain period.

The seller continues to own the property and hold the deed until the last payment is made. When the last payment is made, the seller transfers title to the land to the buyer.

Because the buyer does not have a deed, he does not have a property interest in the land.

However, the buyer can legally protect himself by filing a copy of his land sales contract with the court of the county where the land is located. This puts all others on notice that he has an interest in the property.

Since you were in Germany when you entered the agreement, you probably did not have an opportunity to file the contract in the courthouse. Therefore, legally, no one else other than the land development company knows that you have an interest in the land.

A common situation is for the land development companies to use land under this type of contract as collateral for loans. This is perfectly legal because the seller still owns the land and is only required to provide a clear title to the land at the end of the contract period.

In your case, the land development company still has 11 years before it has to give you a title clear of all mortgages and liens.

However, this type of arrangement may create a severe problem for you if the company enters bankruptcy and other creditors claim the land.

A creditor who has loaned money to the company and has taken an interest in your land will be deemed a "secured creditor" in a bankruptcy proceeding. A secured creditor with a properly recorded interest has priority over all creditors.

The notice you received in the mail is probably a proof of claim form sent by the bankruptcy court. You must provide the necessary information concerning your land sales contract in order to preserve any claim you may have to the land.

If you fail to respond, you will lose any rights and all money previously invested in the land.

Consult a legal assistance attorney as soon as possible for guidance in completing this form. The Legal Assistance telephone number is 545-3281.

MARTIN CARE

By Mark A. Lovell
Martin Army Community Hospital

Triple-digit temperatures are a reality, and combined with high humidity, the heat index is even greater. This puts everybody at risk for heat injuries.

Heat injuries can range from mild heat cramps, to heat exhaustion, to potentially fatal heatstroke.

In the heat wave of 1980, more than 1,200 people died from heat injuries.

Heat injuries can be divided into two types, classical and exertional.

Classical heat injuries occur during heat waves, often in epidemic proportions. The very young and the elderly are at risk, especially if they have an underlying illness, such as heat disease. With a lack of air conditioning or cooling, over time the body gains more heat from the environment than it can lose through sweating.

Exertional heat injuries occur with physical activity in a hot, humid climate.

This may include soldiers, athletes, sportsmen, or outdoor workers such as roofers, who increase their body's metabolic rate through exertion. This increases the amount of heat their bodies are producing.

In a hot, humid environment, sweating will not be effective in cooling the body through evaporation. There are several other factors that make some persons more susceptible to heat injury.

Dehydration is often a factor. This can be from poor water intake, especially with increased sweating, or from alcohol use, caffeine intake, vomiting, diarrhea, or from use of medications such as diuretics used to treat high blood pressure.

Other medications that may interfere with the body's ability to sweat include antihistamines and antidepressants. Additional risk factors, especially for exertional heat injuries, include fatigue, lack of acclimatization, lack of physical conditioning, a prior history of a heat injury and a viral illness such as a cold.

Heat cramps are usually brief, intermittent and often severe cramps, usually in muscles that are fatigued by heavy work. They tend to occur after exercise and are suffered by persons who produce large amounts of sweat and replace it with water without adequate salt replacement.

Symptoms of heat exhaustion are more varied. There is usually profuse sweating, increased body temperatures, light-headedness, dizziness, weakness, nausea or vomiting, and there may be a severe headache.

Patients with heatstroke may not have any warning symptoms prior to a sudden collapse, although 20 percent will have the same symptoms as in heat exhaustion prior to progressing to a heatstroke. A gooseflesh sensation is a warning of rising body temperature.

The hallmark of heatstroke is a change in mental status along with a body temperature greater than 105 degrees. Either a depressed mental status (disorientation, stupor, delirium or coma) or excitation (inappropriate behavior, agitation or combativeness) may be seen. Seizures are also common, especially in the physically fit. Sweating may or may not be present and should not be used as a guide for heatstroke.

Heat cramps can be treated with mild cooling and drinking an electrolyte solution, such as Gatorade. An appropriate diet should have adequate salt. Use of salt tablets is not recommended because it can cause stomach irritation.

Treatment of heat exhaustion involves immediately stopping all activity and moving to a cool, shaded area. Cooling should be initiated by removing constricting clothing and wetting the person down. Fanning can also be done to increase evaporation. Rehydration is very important, such as the giving the victim Gatorade.

Persons with severe symptoms and those who do not respond or who cannot tolerate oral fluids should be immediately transported to a medical facility. Along with wetting and fanning, ice packs to the groin and armpits should be used.

Individuals who have suffered mild heat injuries, heat cramps and heat exhaustion should restrict their activity in the heat two to three days.

Patients who have suffered heatstroke should restrict their activity for several weeks to months. Individuals who have suffered heat injuries should seek medical advice for guidance or activity levels.

The best way to prevent heat injuries is to avoid the heat and stay in a cool environment during the hottest part of the day. Stay in good physical condition, exercise inside or during the coolest time of day.

Benning's secret getaway

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine a place surrounded by sun and water. Add boating, fishing and camping and you've got the perfect place for a vacation or weekend getaway.

Put away the checkbooks and credit cards and cancel the airplane reservations, because this place is nearby, inexpensive, available for nearly everyone, yet undiscovered by many.

The Uchee Creek Recreation Area is located off of 101st Airborne Division Road, about two miles from Eddy Bridge on Sunshine Road in Fort Benning.

According to Bill Hambay, director of Physical Activities, the recreation area offers many of the activities, and then some, which are available at other recreation areas.

Run by post's Outdoor Recreation office, Uchee Creek Recreation Area is available for use by retired and active duty military, family members, nonappopriated fund employees and Department of the Army civilians.

Uchee Creek has something for every recreation goer from boating to fishing to camping and more.

Relaxing

The Country Store has food, beverages, live bait and camping, hunting and fishing supplies for sale. Hunting area maps are also available. A social area has a television, video games and a microwave oven.

Planning a party? The Uchee Creek Lodge seats up to 150 people. The lodge is equipped with a fire place, air conditioning and heating, cooking facilities, an icemaker and buffet table. Also, picnic tables are available.

The lodge can be rented by the day.

Sport equipment can be rented at Uchee Creek and the Equipment Checkout Center. Volleyballs and nets, basketballs, footballs, soccer balls and softball and basketball kits can be rented. The recreation area also has a large picnic area and playground.

Boating

Fishermen and boaters can rent a variety of bass boats, jon boats and canoes by the hour or day. Also, fishing and hunting licenses for Georgia and Fort Benning may be purchased through the Equipment Checkout Center on Gillespie Road on main post.

Beginning Sept. 1, some of the equipment will be moved to Uchee Creek (see list below).

Two party barges have recently been added to the equipment checkout list. A 28-foot pontoon boat equipped with a radio and cassette player, ice chest, grill, sink and portable toilet, can sleep seven to 12 people.

A 24-foot pontoon boat is equipped with a radio and cassette player, ice chest and portable toilet. Both boats can be rented by the hour or by the day.

People lacking a boating license or experience can obtain a license after watching a Georgia safety film and taking a practice run while being monitored by an Uchee Creek staff member.

Although each boat is equipped with a trailer for traveling, boaters can enter the water at the Uchee Creek dock. A marina was recently built and is in the process of being expanded. Slips, areas to park boats, are available for rent.

Boaters can fill their gas tanks at the pump located on the dock.

Other equipment is available through the Equipment Checkout like portable grills, campers, camping equipment and trailers for luggage, motorcycles and horses.

Camping

If camping is your thing, Uchee Creek has 30 camper pads with plans to double the number to 60 in a couple of years. Water, electricity and trash service are available at each pad. There are several self-contained campers for rent which sleep four to six people.

To make 'roughing it" a little easier, a new centrally located comfort station was built at the campground, equipped with toilets, showers, electricity, laundromat and handicap facilities. The comfort station is kept locked and campers are issued a key at check in.

The primitive camping area allows those who prefer sleeping under the stars a place to pitch a tent.

Plans for the future include building a nature trail.

For more information about the Uchee Creek Recreation Area, call 545-7238.

Victims of sexual abuse seek help in support group

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Some call her an over-achiever. She is one of those busy people who is usually asked to accomplish something because she is known for getting things done.

She is a cookie-baker, group leader, volunteer, career woman, housewife, all rolled into one harried figure seen only as she darts from one commitment to another.

Beth (not her real name) is 30 years old. She said she feels her life was going along pretty well, in spite of the fact that she had no memory of her life before her twelfth birthday — a black hole of time with no meaning or value.

Sometimes that black hole annoyed her, but she chased her curiosity away by ignoring it.

Then, the nightmares began. Slowly, the frightening images in her sleep began to creep into her days. Suddenly, her life was changed and she felt herself losing control.

Anxiety attacks began to follow her as sure as her shadow.

Finally, she remembered the event that erased the first 12 years of her life.

Rape.

It was not a back-alley act of violence or a date gone wrong. It was an abusive act by her father.

Beth became pregnant and her father arranged for an abortion.

Self-preservation blotted the memories from her mind. The hurting, wounded child within Beth somehow never grew past those 12 years.

Even though she now has children of her own, Beth is forever tormented by this frightened child inside. She makes herself so involved in activities that she feels fatigued and discontented.

"If you don't take time to think about it, it doesn't hurt as much," she admitted as she reflected on her daily existence.

"I feel very alone and unique," she said.

Feeling alone is a common misconception among abuse victims, according to experts.

One out of three women and one in five men are estimated to have experienced some form of sexual abuse as children experts say.

"Abuse is not limited to rape or incest," explained Chap. (Maj.) Richard Roggia, Chaplains' Family Life Center chief. "Children who have been touched or treated inappropriately can suffer from symptoms of abuse many years later."

"People who think they may have suffered abuse should seriously examine their lives and see if they want to improve their circumstances, he continued.

Benning powerlifters compete in Air Force championships

Directorate of Training and Doctrine

Eight Fort Benning powerlifters traveled to Moody Air Force Base recently to compete in the second annual Moody Air Force Base Powerlifting Championships.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment provided Carlos Valarezo, Steve Rainey, Willie Grider, Jose Sanchez, Travis Hicks and Mat Loyd.

The Infantry School provided Steve Williams from Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Dean Rose from the Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

Franklin Roach, unable to lift while rehabilitating a knee, coached the team while Timothy Neace assisted.

Seven Fort Benning lifters set personal bests in the competition. Jose Sanchez and Willie Grider produced master level totals for their weight classes, and Travis Hicks placed at the Class I lifter level.

The team, however, failed to retain the team title in the face of three other teams, which had several master and elite lifters in their ranks.

Labonte wants to repeat last year's DieHard win

Talladega Superspeedway

Ask Terry Labonte what ranks as his No. 1 thrill in racing, and he'll quickly respond by naming his victory in last year's DieHard 500 at Talladega Superspeedway.

"So many times I had been so close to winning at Talladega, and then to win by beating Darrell (Waltrip) on the last lap has to be my No. 1 thrill in racing," said Labonte in post-race interviews.

Labonte would like very much to repeat that thrill in the 1990 DieHard 500 Sunday. And given his recent record of high finishes at the World's Speedway, his chances are excellent.

"I seem to do pretty well in races at Talladega, and I always look forward to racing there," said the Texas native.

Labonte's situation has changed since his victory here last July. He won that one in Junior Johnson's Budweiser Ford. This time, he'll be driving Richard Jackson's Skoal Classic Oldsmobile.

"Richard really prepares a car well for Talladega. We finished sixth in the Winston 500 earlier this year, and we were running on seven cylinders. I really feel like we could have finished third if that had not happened."

Labonte's sixth in the Winston 500 was his 14th Top Ten finish in 23 starts at Talladega, six of which have been third or better. As a result, he is fifth on Talladega's career winnings list with $443,967.

"A lot of folks were surprised that we won the DieHard 500 last year, but I wasn't," noted Labonte. "The only thing that was surprising to me was that I hadn't won before after being in so many close finishes. It was frustrating to come so close so many times and it really made me feel good to win here."

A win by Labonte would make him only the third driver to win this event more than once, following in the footsteps, or tire tracks, of Waltrip and Dale Earnhardt.

"I think we can win it again. I really feel good about it. We'll be using the car in which we finished fourth in the Pepsi 400. That was our backup car for that race, but we'll have it really ready for Talladega. It's a good car, and with the right set of circumstances, I feel like we can win."

Reserved seat tickets for the DieHard 500, as well as the ARCA 500K the day before, remain on sale at the speedway ticket office. For information and seat selection, call 205/362-9064. VISA and Mastercard are accepted methods of payment for tickets purchased in advance.

Post soldier wins rifle championship

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A soldier from Fort Benning's Army Marksmanship Unit fired his way to the top at the 1990 Smallbore Rifle Championships in Ridgeway, Pa., July 11.

Troy Lawton, who was also the 1989 winner, competed against more than 275 other shooters for the title. Lawton finished the competition in a tie with Mexico's Marco Barriga. Both fired 109 out of a possible 120 points.

Lawton set a record perfect score to win in the 1990 championship after a tie breaking shoot off.

Tied for third place were G. David Tubb, Dennis Martinen and Karen Lasher, all scoring a 105. Tubb took sole possession of third place after the event's second shootoff.

The competition took place at the Ridgeway Rifle Club along with the National Highpower Rifle and Highpower Hunting Rifle Championships. Over 300 shooters participated in these events.

Results from test show bass adequate

Results from seine samples obtained by the Fish and Wildlife Branch during mid-July indicate that King's Pond presently holds adequate numbers of bass and bream.

The "No Bass Fishing" signs have been removed and bass fishermen may begin to remove bass from the pond according to the limits set forth in the installation's hunting and fishing regulation.

The limit for bass is 10 per day, 12 inches or above.

Averett's Pond was drained and restocked with channel catfish, bass and bream during 1988-1989.

A seine sample conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Branch indicates the pond is ready to be fished in. The pond will be open for fishing when possible. Check the hunter access boards for daily fishing opportunities.

SPIRITUAL

A childhood portrait of a sex abuse victim.

"Most are surprised to learn that they can change.

"Most adult victims suffer from a poor self-esteem and self-image. They may feel ugly or in the way of others. They may tend to over-apologize to the point of being annoying to others. Strong feelings of guilt and shame fill their days, and they may feel as if they are a failure at anything they do.

"Victims have a tendency to blame themselves for whatever goes wrong and sometimes destroy their own possibilities for success.

"They may always feel helpless and find themselves being 'walked on' by others. Once they start something, they are unable to finish it.

"Relationships are almost always difficult. They don't like to trust people and tend to be isolated, distant and aloof. Physical affection may be difficult for them to display and they may be very secretive and evasive.

"They may lack sexual desires or have many inhibitions or dysfunctions. They may be highly promiscuous and display intense anger and rage," he said.

Experts say mood swings can be severe for those who have suffered this trauma. Many suffer from chronic depression and have many fears and phobias.

Victims usually suffer from sleep disturbances and can become addicted to food, drugs or alcohol.

They may experience flashbacks and nightmares. Many have abusive or self-destructive behavior.

Physical symptoms are also real for those suffering from this childhood pain. Many victims are accident prone and may have frequent sore throats, difficulty swallowing, migraine headaches, or unexplained vaginal or anal pain.

Even though recognizing this abuse may be painful, it is an important part of healing process, experts say. The recognition alone can give people more of a sense of control, since self-knowledge can empower and ease confusion.

"The victim's inner child is tormented and lonely, surrounded by anger and fear," explained Roggia. "This anger can be removed and released so the child within can grow and overcome the pain and feel safe and happy.

"A victim's entire life is centered around control and how to maintain the secret of the abuse," he continued.

"Abusers tell victims they must not tell anyone their secret, and often place the 'blame' of the incident on the abused.

"Once someone realizes that all of their other problems may be rooted in a traumatic childhood event, they can begin to improve their circumstances.

"As with many other problems, recognition is the first step. Then victims should seek help," Roggia said.

A support group for victims of sexual abuse is available through the Chaplains' Family Life Center. It is a 13-week session from 9 to 11 a.m. each Wednesday.

"The most beneficial part of the support group is that the members feel that no one understands their problem like those who suffer from similar trauma," explained Roggia.

The group begins with a commitment to recover and acknowledging the rules of the group.

Goals are set for the individuals and the group. They learn about repressed feelings and that the more they hold feelings in, the more the emotions may burst out unexpectedly.

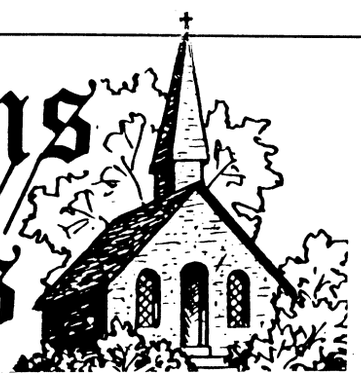
Facing the truth is the most important part of the healing process Roggia said.

Karen Lison, a therapist who specializes in treating incest survivors, gave this message to survivors: "You didn't deserve what was done to you, and it wasn't your fault. Make yourself as happy as you can be now, despite what has happened to you."

"And we shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free," Roggia quotes John 8:32 from the Bible. "Many survivors find comfort and hope from realizing the truth."

There is still time to join the support group. The next session is Wednesday. The numbers are 545-1760, 545-5301 or 545-2017.

Reflections Reflections



Chaplains' Corps celebrates 215th anniversary Sunday

By Lyn H. Brannon
Chaplain, 30th AG Battalion

The Chaplains' Corps marks its 215th anniversary Sunday.

Anniversaries are typically a time of remembering beginnings, reaffirming purpose, celebrating common history and dreaming of future goals.

Chaplains have been part of the Armed Forces since the earliest days of military service out of which our nation formed.

When regiments from the colonies fought the Revolutionary War, chaplains were there. (The term chaplain did not come into common use, however, until the Civil War.)

While the chaplaincy itself was legally established by Congress on July 29, 1775, the first chaplaincy commission in the U.S. Army was awarded by that body on March 3, 1791.

This commission went to John Hurt, an Episcopal priest who had served with the 4th, 5th and 6th Virginia Regiments. The position carried no rank but was essentially the equivalent of a brigade chaplain. It is interesting to note that the stipend was slightly greater than the pay for surgeons.

In the years following, the number of chaplains grew from one in 1791 to 30 in 1849. The increase in numbers during this peacetime reflected a growing church membership throughout the nation and the Army.

While certain aspects of the chaplaincy have changed over time — such as the noncombatant status or the wearing of rank — the primary purpose of the chaplaincy has not appreciably changed.

Chaplains serve to provide for the spiritual needs of soldiers and their families. Chaplains continue to provide their service on battlefields, in motor pools, in classrooms, by hospital beds, in chapels, beside prison cells and in administrative offices.

An implicit part of the chaplain's role is to be a prophet from within the system calling for balance and seeking to temper depersonalization with compassion.

The title, "chaplain," connotes compassion.

The term comes from the legend of a fourth century soldier named Martin of Tours. The legend describes how Martin, moved with compassion, split his own cloak in order to provide covering for a shivering beggar. This act of generosity resulted in a vision which culminated in Martin giving his life in service to the church.

In later years, after Martin became the patron saint of France, his cloak was considered to be a sacred relic and was carried into battle by French kings.

The officer in charge of this sacred relic, the cappa or capella, as the cloak was called in Latin, was given the French title "chaplain" — from which came the English word chaplain.

As we approach the future, let us remember the lessons of the past.

Regardless of whether we serve in a peacetime force or an Army at war, may those who hold the title, "chaplain," never forget that its primary meaning and our primary purpose is the dispensation of compassion.

Abuse victims should seek help

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Anyone suffering from abuse should get help immediately experts say.

Chap. (Maj.) Richard Roggia, Chaplains' Family Life Center chief, said sexual abuse affects generations, so if you deny the abuse now, it may affect your grandchildren and their children.

"The trauma and the memories do not simply go away with them, nor do children grow out of it," he said.

"Sexual abuse is not exclusively intercourse, it is important for victims to realize this," he explained.

"Trauma from abuse could also come from being touched inappropriately or any type of violation of a person's body.

"Dealing with sexual abuse is a necessity, and the way to health is to find the truth and reveal it."

Many children or spouses are afraid to report the abuse because of what could happen to the abuser he said.

"We (counselors and other officials) are not the enemy," he said. "The person who locks up the abuser is not the enemy. The abuser is the one that has to be stopped and dealt with."

Roggia said if someone is hurting you or you find yourself hurting someone you love, you can start to make it better.

Directive cautions employees about accepting certain gifts

By Tim Downey
American Forces Information Service

It's not uncommon for people in the U.S. Defense community to be offered gifts by foreign government representatives. Most offers are probably sincere expressions of good will for a job well done.

But some might serve as temptations for Department of Defense employees to provide "a little something extra" to the givers, which can lead to disaster. That's why DoD's directive on gifts from foreign governments cautions employees to "think before they thank."

"We know that people everywhere like to show appreciation for individuals who give that extra effort whether in important projects or just daily tasks," said Ralph Kennedy, a DoD senior management analyst and author of the directive. "But our people — and that includes active duty military, DoD civilians and contractor personnel, as well as their spouses — should know that accepting gratuities in all but a few cases is contrary to DoD policy."

The directive specifies that DoD employees should not "accept, request, or otherwise encourage the offer of a gift from a foreign government." Even those not solicited should, in most cases, be refused, said Kennedy.

The directive does, however, offer room for interpretation. "We do not view all gifts in the same manner," Kennedy said. "We make distinction between gifts of minimal value and more expensive ones. Many department personnel have been offered gifts of minimal value at one time or another. They include table favors, mementos, remembrances and tokens such as plaques given at official functions."

Officially, one can accept gifts that do not have a value of more than $200. Some employees think the minimal value is much lower because they remember the limit from years ago. Kennedy said that DoD updates the amount every three years to take inflation into account.

"I want to emphasize that it's up to the recipient to prove the value of the gift," he said. If the individual is determined to keep the gift and there is a question as to its cost, then the recipient should get it appraised. Kennedy counseled, "When in doubt, thank the person offering the gift but refuse.

"Rejecting gifts at an official function would be inappropriate — even boorish," Kennedy said. "The best action under such circumstances is to accept the gift and turn it in." Each defense component has someone who logs in and disposes of such gifts.

DoD also has provisions for recipients who want to keep gifts worth more than $200. "The government will pay the cost of appraisal," Kennedy said, "and the individual is given first choice of purchasing it for the value. If the individual declines, the gift is disposed of according to procedures established by the General Services Administration. However, if the recipient buys the gift, he pays for the appraisal."

Kennedy thinks few employees resent the policy.

"Most of our people acknowledge that accepting gifts is not in tune with our mission and ethics. What can seem to be a very thoughtful, kind and generous gesture could have a darker side.

"The crux of the problem, then, is that no one can know the ulterior motives behind offering a gift. Thanking someone for the gesture and politely refusing can save heartburn later on," he said.

That heartburn could turn into something more harmful if the individual knew or suspected the gift exceeded $200 in value yet did not report it. That person could end up paying the appraised value of the gift — plus up to $5,000 in fines. Not reporting the gift as taxable income could provoke added trouble from the Internal Revenue Service.

Kennedy noted that the DoD directive provides overall guidance for all DoD components. But he pointed out that each service or agency usually sets its own, more restrictive rulings on accepting gifts.

A gift accepted and turned over to the agency may not be gone for good. If a recipient doesn't want to purchase the gift, the agency or component may keep it for official use — usually in a public area under lock and key. Otherwise, the agency turns over the gift to the General Services Administration for disposal.

Recipients also can recommend that the gift be donated or transferred to an eligible public agency or nonprofit, tax-exempt institution, said Kennedy.

"The important thing is that people know that the department has rules regarding accepting gifts whether they come in a package with a ribbon or an offer to pick up the tab for travel expenses," he said. "The person offering it could be anyone — from a local to a high-ranking government official or an employee of a nationalized defense industry. When in doubt, check with your commander or a DoD lawyer."

I.D. card evaluation discontinued

Troop Support Agency

The commander of the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency has directed the discontinuance of a test to evaluate the identification check procedure at selected Army commissaries.

Brig. Gen. Charles E. St. Arnaud directed the recently implemented test be discontinued until the data gathered can be analyzed.

The test was designed to evaluate the feasibility of replacing identification checks at the commissary entrance with ID checks at the check-out register.

The test began as a three-month evaluation and originated from a DoD Study of Military Commissaries, which cited the costs of checking customers prior to entering the commissary at $7.8 million per year.

The DoD study recommended the change to ID checks at the register. The intention of the test was to make maximum use of limited personnel while providing the best service possible for customers.

Testing has already been completed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; Fort Carson, Colo.; and Fort Lee, Va. The remainder of the more than 65 commissaries involved discontinued testing June 30 — except for the Presidio of San Francisco; and Fort McPherson, Ga. Those two installations will conclude testing Tuesday due to requests by their installation commanders.

Current DoD policy requires that customers not in uniform present identification prior to entering the commissary. However, in smaller facilities with four or less check-out stands, permission may be granted to allow checking of IDs at the register.

Springer Children's Theatre sets sail for Treasure Island

Springer Opera House

The Springer Children's Theatre hauls up the anchor, battens down the hatches and heads for the high seas when "Treasure Island" opens today in the studio theatre.

This lively adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's classic pirate adventure is a magical "participation play" in which the entire audience creates a storm at sea, a mosquito-infested jungle and a treasure cave filled with eerie ghosts.

Some children from the audience are even brought on stage to become members of Long John Silver's treacherous pirate gang while others join Captain Smollet's brave crew.

Long John Silver, Red the Pirate Queen and the swarthy Crossbun take over Captain Smollet's ship, kidnap his niece, Jamie, and steal the treasure map which leads to old Flint's hidden booty.

The children team up with the fearsome Ben Bulba to rescue Jamie, steal back the treasure and capture Long John.

In the end, the audience must decide whether to hang Long John Silver or let him sail away to forever inhabit children's dreams.

Artistic Director Paul R. Pierce directs the show which is the first production of the 1990-91 Children's Theatre series.

"This is not the typical Walt Disney version of the tale," explained Pierce. "It has all of the colorful costumes (designed by Joanne Middlebrooks) and swashbuckling action you might expect, but we've done a few extra things that the children will get a kick out of.

"The audience actually takes an active part in the show. Some of them come up on the stage and are given duties on board ship and others are involved in Long John Silver's ambush of Captain Smollet on Treasure Island.

"There is also a lot of action we have invented that you will never find in Stevenson's story. The style of our "Treasure Island" is somewhere between Mel Brooks and Monty Python. Sure, it's an adventure, but it's a very comic adventure."

Technical Director Bill Rich has designed an innovative set for the intimate Studio Theatre, which resembles a giant treasure map.

"Treasure Island" runs today at 7:30 p.m., Saturday and Sunday at 2:30 p.m., August 3 at 7:30 p.m. and August 4 and 5 at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets are $4 and $5 and available at the door of the Studio Theatre.

The Springer also offers special group rates for day care centers, nursery schools, church schools and other youth organizations for the production of "Treasure Island."

For more information, call the Springer Production Office at 324-1100.

Zoo Camp at Fla. Busch Gardens teaches children about environment

Busch Gardens

From the high adventure of an African safari to a journey into macroscopic lifeforms in a pond, the mysteries and beauty of nature unfold for young "zoo campers" at Tampa's Busch Gardens.

Focusing on the earth's precious, dwindling natural resources and the interdependence of man and his environment, Zoo Camp is a week of unique learning activities, games and behind-the-scenes views of animals for young conservationists ages 5 to 14.

"Zoo Camp was designed to generate enthusiasm and concern for the natural world and its inhabitants," said Maureen Royale, conservation information coordinator for Busch Gardens.

"The program emphasizes the need for good stewardship of our natural resources."

Zoo Camp participants begin their trek into nature with a day of orientation highlighted by a "Resource Ride," a train tour of the park's 60-acre Serengeti Plain where some 500 head of African animals roam freely.

On the "Resource Ride," participants learn of the natural resources needed by these animals to live healthy lives and, through a variety of games, discover fun facts about our sun, air, soil, water and plant life.

On day two, with their orientation behind them, campers take an in-depth look at plants and their vital role in nature.

Using the park's 300 lushly landscaped acres as the classroom, participants hike through a free-flight aviary filled with exotic birds dependent on plants for food and shelter and visit two koalas whose diet consists solely of aromatic eucalyptus leaves.

A side trip through the park's "Orchid Canyon" focuses on the special needs of plants native to tropical rain forests, and a thrilling safari on the Serengeti Plain offers spectacular views of zebra, giraffe and gazelles lazily grazing and browsing.

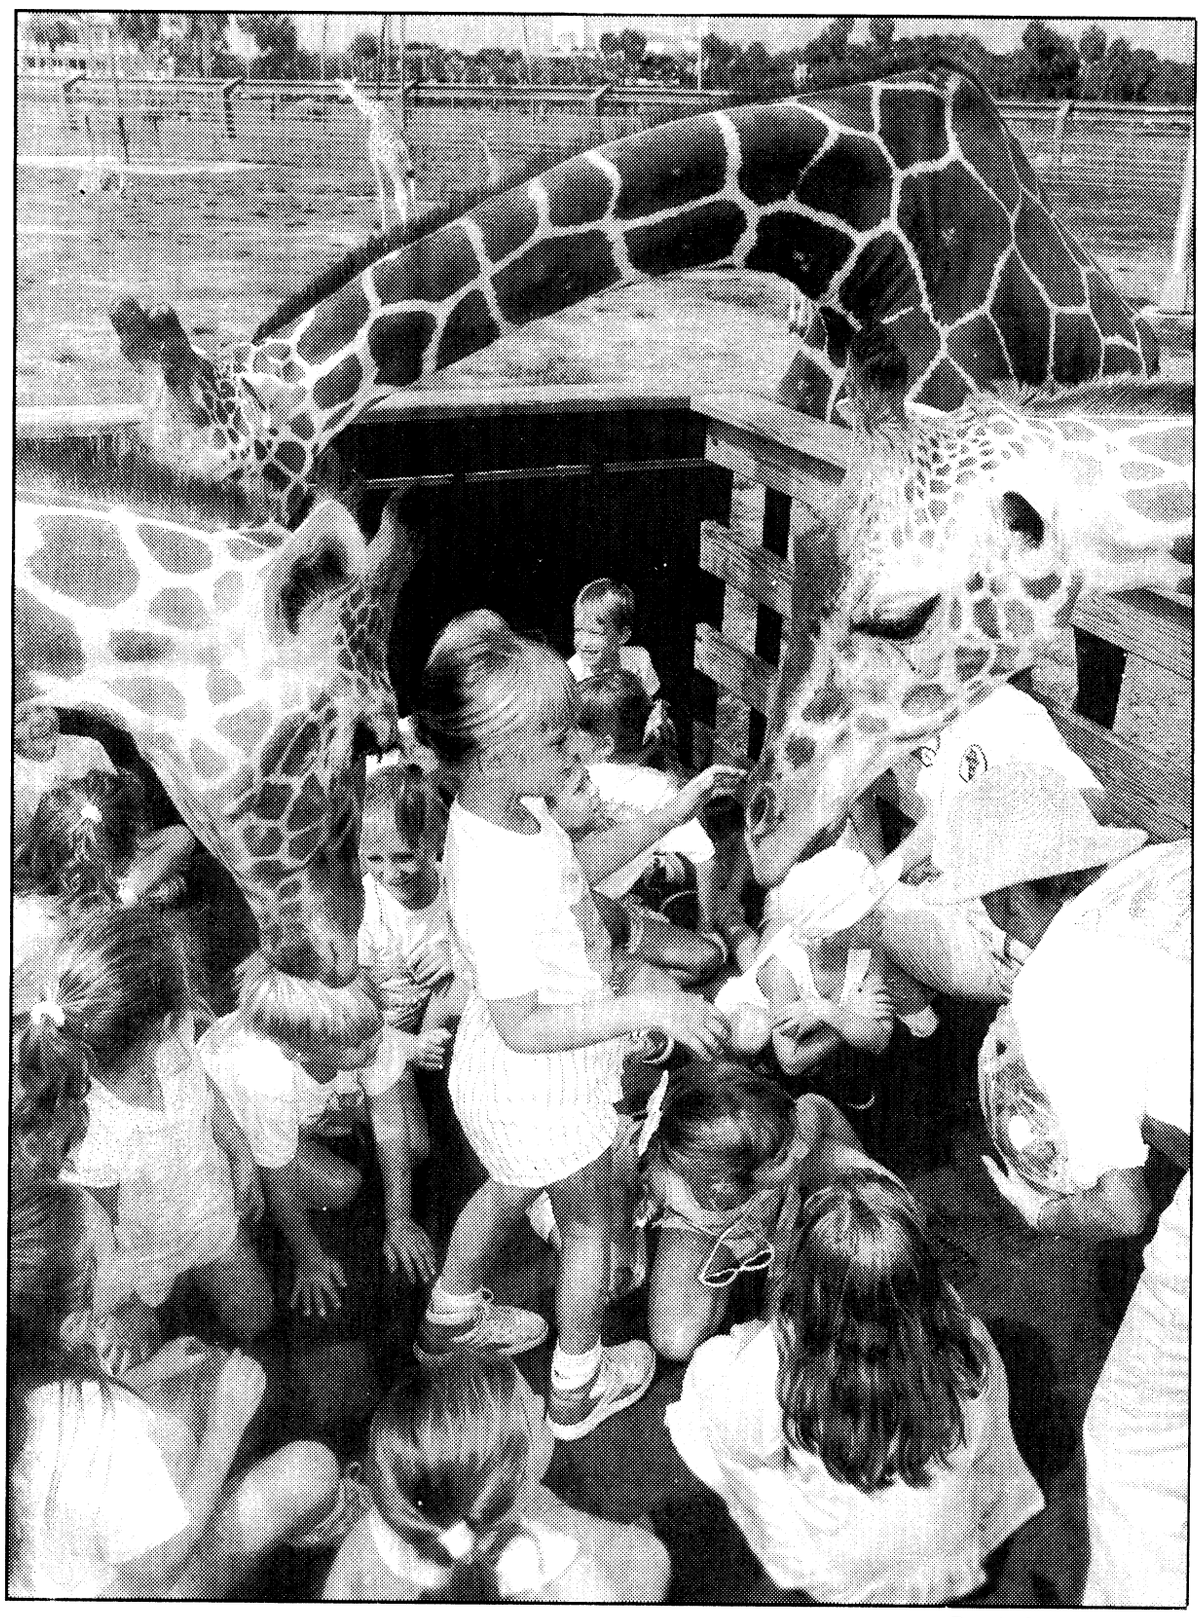
"Up-close and hands-on experiences are the best way for our campers to really get a feel for their environment," said Royale.

"We try to provide opportunities that are educational, fun and memorable."

The next two days of wild discovery are sojourns into the fascinating realms of air and water.

With the help of animal artifacts such as feathers and the hollow wing bones of birds, participants learn how flight is possible.

Campers learn by observing a variety of frogs, snakes, fish and mammals, how animals breathe in different ways.



Busch Gardens, Tampa

Young conservationists enjoy petting a herd of giraffe at Busch Gardens' Zoo Camp.

"Because air is invisible, we use games to illustrate that there is water in the air and even to show how dirty the air has become," said Royale.

"We want our participants to understand how precious and important clean air really is."

By feeding pelicans, fish, otters and even hippos, campers learn how these amazing creatures depend on clean water.

With the help of a dip net, a visit to a pond turns up some tiny plant and animal surprises.

A game about sea turtles explains why they and other ocean dwelling animals are endangered.

Zoo campers culminate their week of environmental adventure by getting down in the dirt. . .literally!

An earthworm hunt shows why these creepy critters are important for our soil, and a visit with an assortment of burrowing animals like gopher, tortoises and indigo snakes allows participants an up-close view of animals that call the soil home.

Participants learn why plants help to keep the soil in place, and experiments show how pollution in water is absorbed by some soils and not others. The bottom line: dirt is great.

Busch Gardens' other educational opportunities include

- "Behind the Scenes" — an adventure for the whole family through the park's zoo kitchen, hospital and Serengeti Plain;
- "Junior Zoo Keeper" — for ages 4 to 5, offers a behind-the-scenes day of zoo keeping;
- "Night Hike" — for ages 9 to 12, begins after sundown and focuses on the care and feeding of animals who live by night; and
- "Photo Safari" — a unique photo opportunity of the exotic wildlife dwelling on the park's Serengeti Plain.

But regardless of the program, Busch Gardens' educational opportunities all emphasize conservation of our planet's natural resources including the treasure of our wildlife.

"In addition to the variety of informational opportunities available for our regular park visitors, our special conservation information programs are developed to provide guests an opportunity to experience seeing species in their natural habitats," Royale said.

"Our guests will leave with a deeper appreciation for the beauty and diversity of the natural world," she said.

Army cuts re-enlistment goal

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — With force reductions on the horizon, personnel officials at the Pentagon reduced the Army's re-enlistment goal for fiscal 1990's third quarter by more than 6,000.

This, they thought, would allow commanders and retention NCOs to focus their efforts on retaining the best soldiers in their units.

Retention NCOs, on the other hand, responded by exceeding the original goal while showing a rise in initial-term soldier quality.

Officials in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel enlisted division say the blistering pace at which soldiers seem to be re-enlisting simply shows that the Army's retention policies and work ethics haven't changed.

"We wanted commanders to have an obtainable mission that would allow them to be more selective in the soldiers they would re-enlist," said Lt. Col. Edwin Speare, chief of enlisted professional development for ODCSPER. "So we reduced the mission, and told them to go after quality."

The re-enlistment goal for the quarter was reduced from 20,219 to 14,367 — from 8,253 to 5,906 for initial-termers, from 5,362 to 4,374 for mid-termers and from 6,604 to 4,087 for career soldiers. However, re-enlistments for the quarter totaled 21,489, exceeding the original goals for mid-term and career soldiers and far surpassing the revised goals in all categories.

"It's a carry-over from that re-enlistment work ethic that has been instilled over time throughout the Army," said Speare. "Anyone who's eligible and desires to re-enlist can, and units still work hard to meet or exceed their internal objectives."

The reduced mission, a reduction in re-enlistment incentives (including bonuses) and the suspension of some re-enlistment options all took effect in June. No changes were made in basic re-enlistment standards and eligibility, Speare said.

The Army's chief retention NCO, Sgt. Maj. Johnny Riley, said the Army will likely re-enlist about 92,000 soldiers during fiscal 1990, 3,000 over its goal. However, he said that quality isn't being sacrificed for quantity.

"The Army's goal for quality points on re-enlistment is 70," Riley said. "This year our average is 70.4."

The worksheet tallies point values based on education, training, time in service and other factors in soldiers' personnel files. Last year's average was 72.3, but it included a five-point bonus awarded to initial-termers.

"Soldiers aren't rushing in to re-enlist as a way to avoid involuntary cuts, and they aren't leaving the Army in a panic. As far as soldiers re-enlisting for an Army career, from here it looks like business as usual."

ACS managers gather to discuss employment aid

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Army Community Service Family Member Employment Assistance Program managers from all over the Army kicked off a two-week training session at the Columbus Hilton July 22 to learn how to make their respective programs more effective.

According to Fort Benning FMEAP manager Pat Sneed, more than seventy managers attended the conference during the two-weeks.

She said the training was divided into two, one-week segments with half the managers coming one week and the others followed the next week.

Sneed was tasked to coordinate the event by Wilett W. Bunton, Program Analyst for U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, Army Community Service. Bunton handles FMEAP field operations.

Bunton, Sneed and other FMEAP experts gave seminars on various aspects of the program. This included counseling, employment outreach, marketing and occupational skills training.

Sneed explained how FMEAP works and when the program started.

"The program started in 1985," Sneed said. "ACS and Civilian Personnel Offices work together to provide relocating Army spouses with a full range of employment services.

Although FMEAP helps in other ways, the primary purpose of the program is to provide relocating Army family members with employment assistance.

Sneed said this is done by providing accurate, timely information and supportive services.

"Our goal is to empower Army spouses with the skills to minimize employment problems associated with a mobile military lifestyle," she said.

Sneed said FMEAP can help spouses maximize opportunities for initial and continued employment in the public and private employment community. Services provided include job information and referral services, job search and occupational skills training, assistance in resume and employment application preparation and career goal setting.

"Opportunities within the United States are unlimited, and private sector employers are very interested in the diverse skills Army spouses bring to the work place," she said.

Sneed added the FMEAP partnership with employers in many states has resulted in reducing

Engineers go to Honduras

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Its sister companies have done it, and now it's Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36 Engineer Groups' turn to demonstrate its construction capabilities to the Honduran people.

Co. C left July 26 for a two-month rotation to Honduras, Central America.

The company is finishing up a six-month commitment the battalion was assigned to complete as part of Joint Task Force Bravo at Soto Cano Air Base in Honduras.

According to 1st Lt. Lisa Strine, rear detachment officer in charge, the company will set up its base camp in Choluteca located on the southeastern border of Nicaragua.

Strine said while the unit is there, it will build a large gymnasium for an existing school.

"Fifty-six soldiers traveled to Honduras to complete the project," she said, "The gymnasium is the only project they will be working on."

Strine explained that the troops will only work on that particular project because of the heat.

"It's supposed to be one of the hottest spots there," she said. "So, we have been alloted extra time to complete the project.

The unbearable heat will not fade the spirits of the soldiers, she said.

"The troops are really looking forward to going down and completing the mission," Strine said. "Once they have finished the gym, they will pack up all of the equipment brought to Honduras from Fort Benning and bring it back."

Strine said she expects the troops to be back by Sept. 26.

Tips on how to act dumb

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

You trend watchers probably already know this, but the latest trend is to act dumb.

States and school districts beat up each other over surveys that point out how Johnny can't read, Sally can't add, and Tommy can't do didley — and that's about all Bo knows, too — didley.

I mean, like who's the cult hero of the summer of '90 — none other than Bart Simpson.

So for those of you who aren't feeling entirely dumb, who want to get with it, I'm offering this primer.

● Stand on Red Cloud Range between 9 p.m. and midnight tomorrow. The anti-christ will appear in a spaceship and take you away.

● Rag your platoon sergeants. They get paid to put up with soldiers who "can't understand this Army stuff."

● Don't listen to your first sergeant. He just talks to be heard, so when he tells you to remove the poster from your door, don't worry. He doesn't mean it, and he'll forget by tomorrow anyway.

● Don't listen to your squad leader's safety briefing before going to the field. Stepping on top of a log instead of over a log is for sissies — rattlesnakes never lie under logs.

● Don't drinking a lot of water on hot days. That's for wimps. Real soldiers can go an entire day in Cat V weather on half a canteen — besides drinking water only makes you more thirsty.

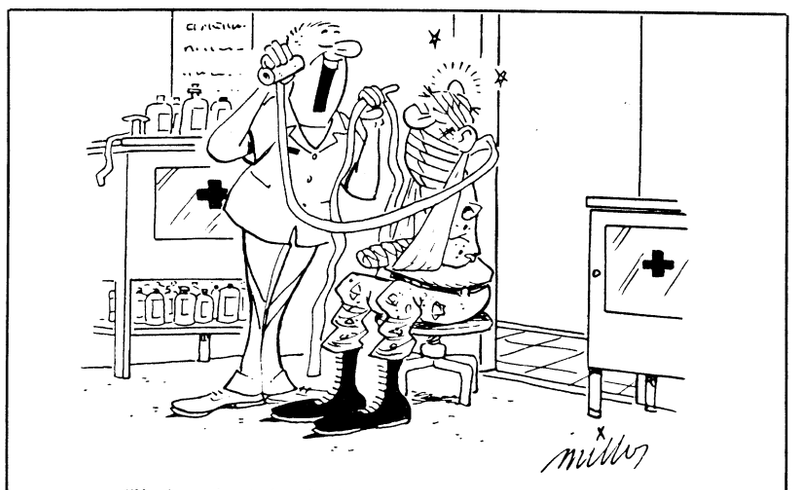
● If you're considering promotions in the future, don't sweat keeping your records up to date. The personnel people do that for you automatically — you know like adding military and civilian schools you complete, awards and decorations, etc.

● Don't worry about signing out and in for leave. This is the modern, "we trust you" Army. That means you don't have to worry about that. After all, didn't you fill out a leave form with the chain of command signatures? So why worry about signing out and in?

● When you go to the beach or pool, don't sweat the sun block stuff you're hearing about on television. They only do that to help people sell the stuff. A burn now and then has never hurt a macho soldier. As for skin cancer, ha, that's for old folks.

● Don't concern yourself with the picky laws they have in Columbus and Fort Benning, like the ones about seat belt wear and open container. They just have those on the books to look good; they're never enforced.

● Drink and drive. Any real soldier should be able to put away a six-pack without any side effects. Well, it might make you a little drowsy and affect your coordination a teeny-bit, but hey, the roads are wide.



"You're going to laugh when I tell you what happened to me this morning!"

● Put off getting a high school equivalency degree or finishing college courses. That's just for people who need technical expertise. Genuine infantry soldiers don't need any of that stuff — it's how well you can shoot and move that's critical in the Infantry.

● Kite your check two, maybe three days. First, the place you cash the check needs to get it through their system, at least one day, then another day in the mail, and finally it takes the bank at least another day to process it. So if you find yourself with more month than money, don't worry, banks have a lot of money to cover you with.

● Forget about military bearing and courtesy. That went out with the brown boot Army. This is the volunteer Army and you don't need to salute officers unless you actually know them.

● Wear unpolished boots. Polished boots are only for rear echelon soldiers. Field soldiers look better in dirty boots and muddy uniforms. They smell better, too.

● Don't worry about maintaining your equipment. The mechanics will perform all the maintenance your equipment needs. You worked hard in the field, you deserve your time off, so go for it.

I realize many of you are already practicing these points and, in fact, know a few more, so don't worry about this list. But, for the rest of you who want to get "into dumb," here's your chance.

Writer questions high court rule

By Wade Shell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recently a few decisions have been made that will have a profound effect on the way we Americans handle our daily affairs. These are decisions that the general public has no control over, and they are being made by a select few.

Last week, the Supreme Court ruled that there are times that the Constitution could be overridden for the general good of the public. The decision will allow the nine court justices the power to decide when and where the Constitution will be enforced.

One decision in particular concerned two cases involving the Federal Communications Commission granting licenses to minority broadcasters. Two minority companies were granted licenses to operate over two white owned companies that had outbid the minority companies.

In the decision handed down by the high court, three justices agreed they were serving the public interest by suspending the Constitution and denying better prepared, equipped and financed companies the licenses to operate and granting them to the other companies based solely on race.

While I am not against any corporation that wishes to promote its own ethnic priorities through the media, I feel this should not be done at the expense of any civil liberties to the majority or minority.

This kind of selected enforcement of rights is what brought about the movements of the fifties and sixties. Should the people of the United States allow the pendulum to swing completely the other way?

Also, you may have heard that Congress is beginning to put together a package for the White House. The struggle is over a set of laws to govern against discrimination in the work place. This could lead to quotas for private businesses. Who gave Congress the right to decide who I can and cannot hire?

In America we are guaranteed the right to succeed or fail. The Constitution does not grant a senator or representative the right to decide who I will have work for me.

Granted, there are abuses in the work place. But, laws already exist to prevent employers from discriminatory practices based on race, sex, etc. So, in the halls of Congress, our nation's leaders are battling over how much control will be given to another commission to govern our lives (incidentally, the taxpayer will pick up the tab).

This type of government interference can only create a large bureaucracy.

I believe our forefathers created a governing body to serve the people and regulate the daily affairs of state, such as foreign policy and protection of citizens. But, they were never elected to office to be above the Constitution or the law, nor were they elected to regulate my personal or business life.

The last time I read the Constitution of the United States, it stated quite simply that everybody is equal and everyone has one vote. We cannot ignore the rights of any group for any reason, nor can we sacrifice the integrity of our greatest document to accommodate the will of a few.

As soldiers we swear to protect the Constitution and what it stands for. Each of us must decide for ourselves what that means before someone else does. I hope all the people of America become involved in the issues facing us today.

Employment assistance — a vital program

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Army Community Service has taken meeting the needs of the soldier one step further with its Family Member Employment Assistance Program.

The title of the program is self-explanatory, but the program does a lot more than provide employment assistance.

It gives the family member some sort of identity and self-worth.

Having been on both sides of the fence, I know how important it is to feel as if you're contributing to the financial well-being of your family.

This program is just what the Army needs. My only regret is that it wasn't around when I was a family member.

Looking back, I recall a lonely housewife with a small child living in a trailer outside of Fort Campbell, Ky. I desperately wanted to work but didn't have the slightest idea about how to obtain employment.

I sought work everywhere. But, oftentimes, it led to a dead end.

During that time, my ex-spouse was a newly promoted sergeant who didn't have a whole lot of time in service. I remember feeling terribly guilty because I wasn't contributing any money to the family.

Child rearing and keeping house is a job in itself. However, for the person who has an underlying need to be out in the work force, it can be a nightmare.

There are no statistics to show that this can lead to alcoholism or overeating, but from personal experience I can see how it could be possible. Soap operas were my addiction.

Here I was a harried housewife in a depressed state who's only topic of conversation was who slept with whom on what show. As a greensuiter, I know I wouldn't want to come home to that.

In a study conducted by the U.S. Army Research Institute, statistics show that spouse employment enhances readiness.

Spouses report that when they are employed, their husbands are happier and better able to perform their jobs. They don't feel the financial stress associated with one member of the household working.

The study also shows that husbands who have wives that work perform better during deployment because they are less worried about family finances and their wives' personal well-being.

It's my experience that the study is absolutely correct. After we left Fort Campbell, I gained employment and felt much better about myself. Also, I felt more productive because I was making a monetary contribution to the family as well as nurturing my child and keeping house.

Working is not for everyone. Some family members are perfectly happy staying at home. Hats off to those who do.

In the same respect, I say hats off to FMEAP for aiding family members who seek employment.

FMEAP also helps those who want to be employed but aren't marketable yet.

FMEAP personnel offer typing classes and computer classes to enhance the skills of family members. Also job seeking strategy workshops and help with resumes are available.

FMEAP literally takes someone seeking employment through the entire process.

Although ACS is celebrating its silver anniversary, FMEAP is a golden addition to its list of services.

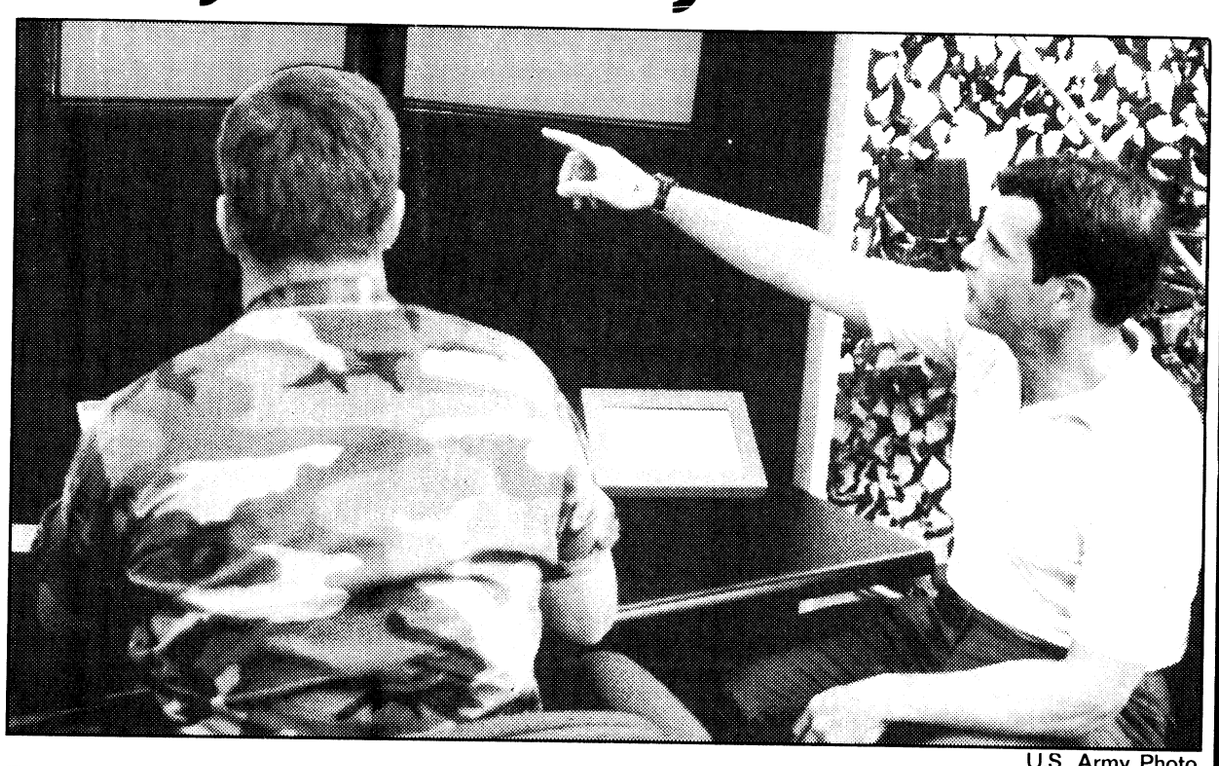
Simulated war exercises save fuel, ammo, lives

By Cole Bricker
USAIC Public Affairs Office



U.S. Army Photo

Thomas P. Eupize, operations manager, shows a soldier how to operate the Simulations Network (SIMNET).

The platoon leader scans the horizon. An explosion to his left rocks the track; and, even without looking, he knows it has to be the first squad's Bradley. The concussion of the blast and heat from the destroyed track could be felt through the armor of their vehicle.

"Enemy tanks at one o'clock 500 meters out," yells the gunner. To the front, the platoon leader sees a company of Soviet tanks advancing toward their position.

As the platoon sergeant's track opens fire on the lead enemy tank while the company commander screams on the radio for a status report.

The platoon leader tells his driver to pull back. At the same time, he tries once again to contact the second squad, which has been out of contact for over an hour.

So the platoon leader makes the final call to the battle master,"This is the platoon leader. Halt the exercise." Crew members then climbed out of their tracks and gather around the control station.

This exercise took place not in the field, but in building 2870, the home of Ft. Benning's mechanized, armor simulator. No fuel or rounds were used, no vehicles were destroyed, and more importantly, no lives were lost.

The platoon leader was able to gather his soldiers around the battle master's station and recreate the exercise to include the mistakes made and find the lost squad.

Simulations Networking, or SIMNET, is a war-fighting facility. It is used as a training device consisting of a battalion size tactical operations center, 13 M-2 Bradley simulators, and 10 M-1 Abrams simulators. Including Ft. Benning's facility, SIMNET has seven facilities throughout the United States and Europe for a total of 236 simulators. In the future, the facility will have the capability to conduct joint site operations using satellite linkups.

According to Pete Bush, a training specialist with the Directorate of Training and Doctrine, Simulations Branch, SIMNET is also in the process of developing a dismounted squad simulator and close air support capability using both fixed and rotor wing aircraft.

The two computer-generated training areas used by SIMNET are Ft. Hunter Ligget and Ft. Knox and are created from topographical maps of these posts.

The M-1 simulator carries a crew of four just like the real tank. The M-2 simulator only carries a crew of three (track commander, gunner, and driver) so the dismounted squad simulator will add a great deal of realism to the training, Bush said. He added the simulators are 60 percent realistic or recreate 60 percent of what is needed to work in and operate a real tank.

SIMNET offers two scenarios for enemy forces. The first is force on force where the training unit divides their forces in half and aggress against each other.

Option two, simulated force, is an enemy force up to brigade size generated and controlled by the SIMNET computer. To enhance this scenario, the computer can also attach semi-automated forces to the friendly forces to counter the enemy strength.

The semi-automated forces can maneuver with the friendly forces and react to enemy contact based on a predetermined set of rules of engagement made by the friendly commander.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Gerena, a tactics instructor from the Combined Arms and Tactics Department,"Simnet is an excellent training device. The exercise can be stoped at any time to correct mistakes, and the leaders can monitor the movement of their units by using the stealth vehicle."

This vehicle is a device that can fly any where on the battle field without being seen by the soldiers in the simulators.

The stealth vehicle station has three large screens so that even large groups can observe the battle field.

SIMNET is available to both active duty and reserve units that would like to use the facility. For more information on scheduling or resources offered by SIMNET, contact Pete Bush or Maj. Arthur Porter at Combined Arms and Simulator Branch, at 545-7251/7210.

Speaker expresses pride, confidence in graduating reservists, guardsmen

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

"I am very proud of each one of you young leaders of today's Army. You have all reached a significant milestone in your careers. I ask that you take the knowledge you have gained at the Home of the Infantry and share it with the soldiers under your command."

With these words, Maj. Gen. David H. Lueck expressed pride and confidence in 52 reserve component and national guard officers graduating from the Infantry Officer Advanced Course in a ceremony held in the Marshall Auditorium July 23.

Lueck, commander of the 47th Infantry (Viking) Division, Minnesota National Guard, was slated as the distinguished guest speaker of the event. He, along with Col. Rodney W.K. Morris, reserve component adviser, Lt. Col. Richard A. Wright, National Guard adviser and Lt. Col. Ben F. Taylor comprised the official party of the ceremony.

Following his address to the class, Lueck was presented an award of appreciation by The School Brigade Commander Col. James M. Jones on behalf of the graduation class.

Some of the graduates receiving honors were:

Capt. Doug J. Telleson, the top student of the graduating class, was commended as the distinguished honor graduate.

Capts. George L. Craig III, Ross B. DeBlois, William R. Gray, James L. Guerrieri, James E. King, Scott F. Paradis, Placido D. Valenciono and 1st Lts. William L. Boggs and Frank C. Hernandiz were honored as members of the Commandant's List.

Guerrieri was also the recipient of the class Distinguished Writer's Award, and Hernandiz excelled in physical fitness, scoring 465 points on the Army Physical Fitness Test. He received the class Physical Award for his efforts.

43rd Engineers build schools, clinics, goodwill in Honduras, Central America

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

'The Honduran people were extremely grateful for the work the unit did for them," said the commander of Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

Capt. Richard Blackwell and troops in his command arrived back at Fort Benning July 26 following a two-month rotation south of the border.

According to Blackwell, the unit completed various projects at four construction sites while in country.

"Our base camp was set up in northern Honduras near a town called Pinalejo," Blackwell said. "From there we traveled to each of the individual sites."

The projects included two schools, two medical clinics, a community kitchen and a community center.

"The combination clinic and school project was the most difficult because it was so hard to get to," Blackwell said. "The troops had to travel over two mountains to get to the site."

He said it took over an hour to travel 10 kilometers.

Although access to that particular project was the most difficult, Blackwell said it was a problem at all sites.

Blackwell explained that the region is so mountainous that it's unavoidable.

Setting aside the difficulties, Blackwell said the two-month rotation was very rewarding.

"The people in San Juan, Del Sipio were extremely appreciative of our efforts," he said. "They have been waiting for some assistance since 1982."

He added that the Hondurans pitched in and helped the soldiers on all of the projects.

"I believe we left Honduras on a positive note," he said.

some of the employment stressors that are associated with a military lifestyle.

"Army spouses can take advantage of the many opportunities existing in private industry if they are willing to invest the time in preparing themselves to compete in that market," she said. "FMEAP managers are committed to assisting spouses through this process."

Another program within FMEAP is youth employment.

Sneed says Army youth are encouraged to seek assistance from ACS FMEAPs in identifying employment opportunities and preparing to apply for positions in the federal summer hire program.

"FMEAP has a large mission," Sneed said. "But, family members and the Army are the biggest beneficiaries of the program."

ITC conducts Warrior Run

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

The Infantry Training Center's traditional Warrior Run was conducted on the July 28.

Over 7,500 soldiers made the four and a half-mile trek that encircled Sand Hill and ended at Wetherby field.

The formation extended over two and a half miles and included the ITC's eight Infantry battalions, the 30th Adjutant Reception Battalion, and the Headquarters and Service Company.

The focus of the run was to teach esprit de corps and unit cohesion to new Infantry soldiers.

Following the run, the Infantry Training Center commander, Col. Charles Viale, addressed the soldiers. He emphasized their role in national defense and how fitness and esprit de corps enhance their ability to complete the mission.

After the run, a drawing was held for prizes donated by the Warriors Association. Prizes included gift certificates from Columbus Square Mall, ARCCO, the Holiday Inn, Army & Air Force Exchange Service, the Fort Benning Burger King and Bonanza.

A round trip airline ticket to anywhere in the United States was the grand prize. The winning ticket belonged to 1st Lt. James Soboleski. He gave it to Private First Class Michael Bennett, a one station Unit Training soldier.

Both men are members of Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry.

Soboleski said that despite the fact that he hadn't been home in several years, he felt one of the OSUT soldiers needed the ticket more than he did.

"I thought that this was one way I could help the Training Center let the soldiers know that they are appreciated."

Soboleski gave the ticket to Staff Sgt. Antoine Haddad who selected Bennett because of his performance during Infantry training.

72nd Engineers, guardsmen vie for 'Top Gun' award

Engineers combine "Tom Gunner" competition with Reserve Component joint training

The 72nd Engineer Company recently hosted the first annual combat engineer vehicle gunnery and armored vehicle launched bridge joint training exercise with the 881st Engineer Company, 30th Infantry Brigade, of the North Carolina National Guard, Rockingham, N.C.

Twenty-four National Guardsmen from the 881st deployed to Fort Benning for the training. According to 1st Lt. Erik S. Musselman, platoon leader of the 881st's Assault and Barrier Platoon, this was the unit's first deployment to Fort Benning for joint training. The two-day event consisted of five stations: AVLB bridging of a tank ditch with a berm obstacle; bridging a ditch without a berm; operating with a hydraulic slave; measuring a gap with a compass; and zeroing and qualifying for record with the CEV.

Sgt. Edward E. Johnson, AVLB site evaluator and trainer said, "The guardsmen did well after we trained them in all of the evaluated tasks. Some of them had never bridged a gap with a berm obstacle, but they caught on fast and learned it the first time around."

According to Sgt. 1st Class Walter S. Crowe, the 881st's readiness NCO, the unit was unable to qualify on their own CEVs because of a shortage of qualified trainers and the fact that all tank crewmen were new, having been recently converted from military occupational specialty 12C (ribbon bridge crewman) to 12F (CEV crewman). Prior to their joint training with the 72nd, the guardsmen had only fired 165-millimeter CEV rounds for familiarization, Crowe said.

According to 1st Lt. Peter Thieschafer, platoon leader of the 72nd's Assault and Barrier Platoon, CEV gunnery is a five-gunnery table consisting of exercises which test the crews' ability to maneuver the CEV through combat lanes and employ their weapons systems to engage enemy targets.

Thieschafer added that the gunners must estimate the range to various targets and engage them within specified time limits. "Since the CEV has no range finder, the gunner has only two rounds to adjust fire and hit the target," he said. "Once the soldiers of the 881st had completed their training, our A and B platoons got down to the serious business of certification."

Staff Sgt. Ernest Farmer, platoon sergeant, added, "CEV gunnery is a semi-annual requirement. We use it as certification for our crews and, of course, it allows us to maintain the high level of readiness necessary for our crews to go to war and win."

"Without the long hours and hard work of the company maintenance team prior to our departure for gunnery, this training could not have been successful," said Staff Sgt. Ronald Tate, the CEV section sergeant.

Tate also expressed pride in his soldiers for their overall performance and long hours spent in preparing to meet the challenges of CEV gunnery. "With these crews I expect even better results next year," he added.

Seven crews competed for top scores during the gunnery qualification, and the 72nd's Top Gunner Award went to the crew of Staff Sgt. Charles E. McDaniel, tank commander; Pfc. Joel K. Spann, gunner; Pfc. Wilver D. Starell Jr., loader; and Pvt. 2 Robert E. Hubbard III, driver.

According to McDaniel, his crew made sure their vehicle was in top shape prior to firing. He added that inexperience on the part of his crew had little impact on their performance.

"While each crew normally consists of a staff sergeant as tank commander, a sergeant on the gun, and two enlisted personnel as loader and driver, my crew was made up of three privates straight out of AIT (advanced individual training)," McDaniel said.

"This was their first time firing the CEV's main guns. I'm proud of their achievement and impressed with how fast they grasped tasks such as prefire checks and immediate action drills such as reacting to gun malfunctions."

Added Spann, "Although we had a misfire and the main gun jammed, we overcame that by performing the misfire procedures right the first time to continue our mission."

Panthers fire top score in training test

By Karl Schelly
197th Infantry Brigade

Under stressful battlefield conditions and the unrelenting eye of external evaluators, the Mortar Platoon of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, beat a four-unit field to win top honors in the 197th Infantry Brigade Mortar Platoon Army Training Evaluation Program at Kilo Impact Area.

The Panthers scored 98.16 out of a possible 100 points, beating out platoons from the 1st Battalion and 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, and Troop D, 4th Cavalry.

From early in the morning July 15 until late night July 16, evaluator teams from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, and 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, scrutinized the mortar platoons. "They were looking for any dip in our tactical tenacity," said Sgt. 1st Class Rock E. Sims of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor.

The evaluators studied the platoons' gunnery skills, command and control, communications, movement techniques, nuclear-biological-chemical skills, timed exercises and survivability — the last an area where the Panthers Mortar Platoon excelled, according to evaluator, Sgt. 1st Class Paul E. Ashwood.

"Their overall knowledge beat everyone hands down," Ashwood added. "They came out here prepared for an ARTEP and looked excellent. Their actions in a combat environment, and their ability to survive in that environment, were outstanding."

According to 1st Lt. Kimmerick Vick, platoon leader of the Panther Mortar Platoon, training and preparation paid off for his men.

"We trained hard every day of this year for the ARTEP, submitting ourselves to internal evaluations and working closely with our supporting units," he said. "We spent a lot of our free time working, and it was great to see these guys in action."

The platoon will be scheduled later this month to receive the coveted Top Mortar Platoon trophy from Col. Theodore W. Reid, 197th Inf. Bde. commander.

371st Military Police Detachment

MP Reservists "On Guard."

The 371st Military Police Detachment, an Army Reserve component from Greenwood, S.C., performed annual training at Fort Benning July 8 to 20.

The reserve MPs performed a full range of tasks associated with correctional confinement.

The tasks included guarding, shakedown and accountability of prisoners.

Nine members of the unit were also awarded the 95 Charlie military occupational speciality or corrections specialists.

The 371st was assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company at the Fort Benning Installation Detention Facility.

The IDF houses military prisoners for up to six months after which time they are either returned to their unit, discharged or sent to other installations.

The 371st was given the chance to train with the active Army MPs. The Army reservists performed a variety of duties from gate guard to facility commander.

Training was also gained by administrative personnel.

The administrative clerks got a chance to learn about processing prisoners, filing forms and using computers.

They also had the chance to brush up on typing, which is a very important part of their military occupational specialty.

Health Fair attracts crowd

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The lobby of Infantry Hall was transformed into a shopping mall for those seeking health information during the Health Fair July 25.

The long, glass-enclosed hallway was lined with about 20 tables loaded with information on various subjects.

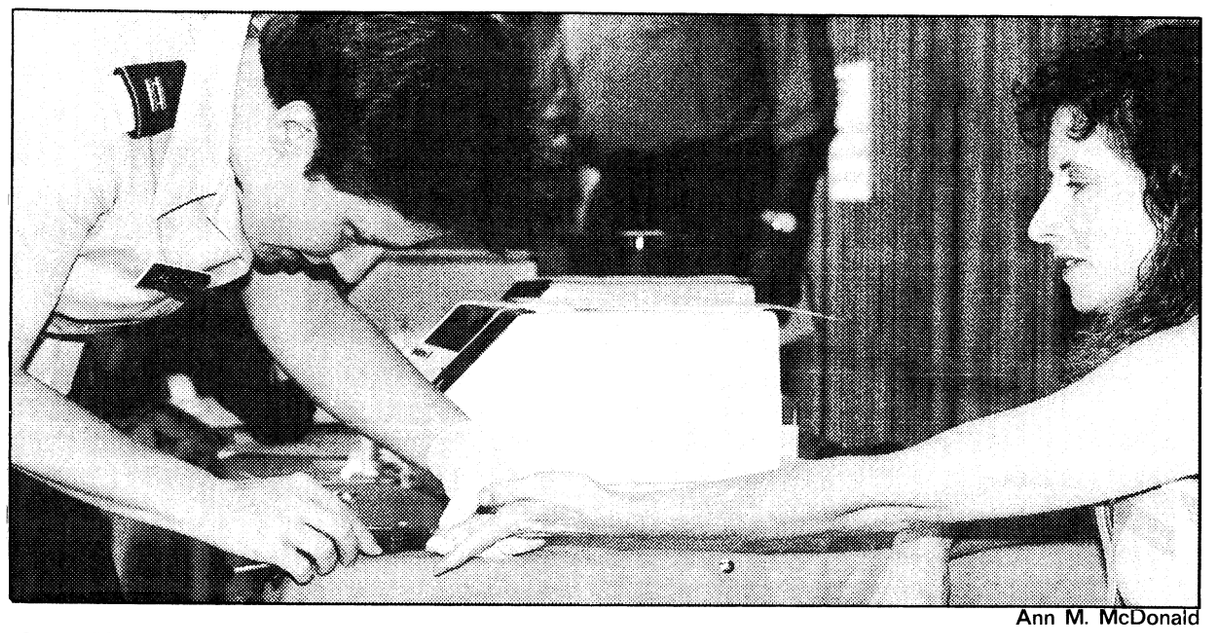
It included community health nursing, smoking cessation, physical therapy, nutrition care, obstetrics and gynecology, counseling, safety, pediatrics, podiatry, dental.

Medically trained personnel were on hand to test cholesterol and glucose levels and to measure blood pressure.

Although each display drew a fair amount of attention from visitors, the table conducting cholesterol tests drew the largest crowd.

Capt. Mary Laedke, with the Fort Benning Medical Activity, believes the test drew so much attention because of all the press.

"Everyone wants to know what their cholesterol count is," she said. "Once they have that information they want to know what level they are suppose to be at, and, if they aren't within that range, what can they do to reduce it."



Ann M. McDonald

Capt. Mary Laedtke, MEDDAC, extracts blood from Sheriell Duck to check her cholesterol level.

According to Capt. Edward L. Fair, Infantry Branch Representative, the fair was sponsored jointly by the Directorate of Community Activities and MEDDAC.

"It's part of the Fort Benning Health Promotion program," Fair said. "Each director was encouraged to give civilians the opportunity to take advantage of the free health screening."

Communication seminar for youth Tuesday

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Youth Activities Services is sponsoring a seminar for teen-agers and young adults on successfully interacting with other people on all levels.

The seminar, "Stress and Loss: Survival Techniques for Teens," will be at the Youth Activities Services Center Tuesday.

The seminar will be led by adult volunteers who are trainers and facilitators of a leadership seminar for the wives of Infantry Officer Basic Course students.

Patsy W. Chilcote, Jeanne A. Brown, Nancy B. Adams, Eileen J. Reid and Cristina M. Pulignani, members of the Leadership Seminars Association, said they felt there was a need to extend the essential tools of leadership to the young people of the Fort Benning and surrounding community.

"We want to help the kids obtain the tools for success that they will need later in life," said Chilcote.

"Because their parents are in the military, they lead a life that's a little different from other young people — the constant moving, having to adapt to different places, schools and people. We want to help them deal with any problems that may stem from that, or just let them talk about any problems or frustrations," she said.

The seminar is one in a series of 10 summer-long sessions aimed at children, teen-agers and young adults.

Yvette F. Womack, youth development specialist at the center, is enthusiastic about the program.

"I think that this is a positive and fun way for our young people to continue to learn during the summer months here," she said.

"Because summer is here, children think they don't have to learn anything. I want to show them that they can relax, have a good time, but at the same time, continue to develop, learn and grow.

"I don't want the center to be a place where kids come because they don't have anywhere else to go," she continued.

"I want it to become a place where they come to learn," Womack said.

The seminar will begin at 12:30 p.m. and last approximately two hours.

For more information about the seminar and other programs at the Youth Activities Services Center, contact Womack at 545-3070.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

A report issued in April by the General Accounting Office indicates that motorists are being cheated out of hundreds of millions of dollars while being sold gasoline with less octane than is posted on the retail pump.

The recent investigation has uncovered gasoline octane cheating across the nation which has initiated congressional efforts to stop the consumer fraud that apparently has been on the rise since 1984.

Indiana Representative Phil Sharp, called a hearing last week to submit draft legislation that would broaden the testing and enforcement powers of the states in an effort to curb octane mislabeling practices.

One of the main points in the Sharp-commissioned GAO report is that since 1981, the Federal Trace Commission (FTC) and EPA have not carried out their responsibilities to test and enforce octane rating compliance for the more than 113 billion gallons of gasoline consumers buy each year.

State officials that test octane ratings feel that prosecuting violators will be a challenge since state laws have been preempted by federal laws, and they have not been enforced.

In order to correct the situation, Rep. Sharp propses amending the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act to eliminate any uncertainty regarding preemption. GAO estimates that consumers may have paid as much as $600 million for octane they did not receive in 1988 alone.

The octane rating of gasoline relates directly to its anti-knock characteristics and can affect a car's performance. Regular unleaded gasoline has an octane rating of 87, while mid-grade gasolines have ratings of 89-91. Super or premium-unleaded gasolines have octane ratings of 92-94.

GAO's investigation found that 22 percent, 53 percent of the gasoline tested in four key states, has been found to be two to four octane numbers below the postings on the pump. From 1985-1988, GAO gathered test results from 11 of the 20 states that were then testing octane. In most of those states the incidence of octane mislabeling was less than 2 percent. Of 300 samples taken throughout retail outlets in Texas, violations exceeded 18 percent and appear to be widespread across the state and the industry.

A couple of plans which have been developed to try to deter octane fraud suggests that refiners add different colors of dye to differentiate between the various octanes. The FTC, however, feels that the costs and technical complications associated with such a scheme would outweigh and benefits.

Another plan called for a uniform national label for devices used to dispense automotive fuel to consumers that would identify the contents of the automotive fuel.

Since the release of the report, several states have contacted GAO officials to express concern about possible octane mislabeling and to indicate a desire to work with the officials to identify and prosecute the violators.

If you have a question concerning this or any energy related subject, contact the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

One important part of preparing children for school is health screening. All children who are entering the Georgia school system for the first time are required to have a Georgia form certifying that the student's immunizations are current. They also require a health screening consisting of dental, hearing and vision testing.

This can be accomplished at Martin Army Community Hospital but, if the appointments are booked late in the summer, may not all be done at the same time. MACH is requesting that parents call now to schedule health screening for their children, if they haven't done so, in order for the staff to assess the number of appointments needed. If the need for more appointments than planned is there, schedules can be adjusted to meet the demand.

If your child will be five years old by September 1, or is entering the Georgia school system for the first time, you will have to provide the school with a certificate. If you do not have an appointment for the health screening before school starts, you should take your child, his or her health records and immunization record to the Immunization Clinic on the ninth floor at MACH. The staff will review the records, give immunizations that may be needed, and provide you with the required Georgia form.

If you are given an appointment for health screening after the date that your child starts school, the school system gives a 90 day grace period in which to complete the screening. The school will accept an appointment slip to document that parents are making an effort to meet the requirement. Appointments may be made by calling 544-3862.

There are also health screening requirements for day care. These examinations are done through the Pediatric Clinic at 544-1086. Physical examinations for school sports are done through the Physical Examination Section on Main Post. Although appointments are not necessary, parents should call 544-4552 or 545-1443 to get information on the day and time these examinations are done.

For information, call Brenda Perez or Sue Jones at 544-1611.

Students strive for Expert Infantryman's Badge

By Bill Roberts
Co. D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Officers from Delta Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Infantry Officer Basic Course, have taken the first step toward earning the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

The students spent a week learning basic rifle marksmanship fundamentals at Roosevelt, English and Simpson Ranges.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday were spent on Simpson Range, which is a computerized qualification range.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Victor Boyce, primary instructor, Simpson Range is where the cadre find out just how much the lieutenants have learned.

Soldiers must fire expert with the M-16A2 rifle as a prerequisite for the EIB test, which is part of the new program of instructor for IOBC.

Boyce said he was confident that a large percentage of the students would become expert riflemen and take their first step toward earning the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

Fort Benning students resume classes Aug. 28

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools will begin its 1990-91 school year Aug. 28. It's time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade — to register.

This year, registration will be conducted during two weeks in August in all eight post schools. Rather than have parents come on one or two specific days, parents are asked to choose the date and time that best fits their needs.

Past practice indicates that there are large crowds on the first couple of days of the registration process. Parents who wish to avoid a long wait should consider this when choosing a registration time.

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the students' age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

- Parents of students who attended Fort Benning Schools in May of 1990 should complete and sign registration forms — nothing needs to be brought to the school.

REGISTRATION DATES

Aug. 6 - 10
Aug. 13 - 17

REGISTRATION TIMES

8:30 a.m. - 11:30 a.m.
1 p.m. - 3 p.m.

- Parents of students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should bring last year's report card or grade placement record and an immunization certificate.

- Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

A student must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1990, to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools.

School assignments are subject to change by school board action if increased enrollments in certain schools or grade levels make these changes necessary.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9-12) who did not attend a public school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1990-91 school year, should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue (Columbus) to pre-register.

High school students who attended a local public high school during the 1989-90 school year and students who are new to Fort Benning but have already obtained their school assignment from Columbus Roberts Center and pre-registered during the summer, must report to their school of assignment on Aug. 21 between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

At this time registration will be confirmed, class schedules and school bus pass obtained and any other required processing will be completed.

All high school students must present evidence of immunization. School will begin in Muscogee County on Aug. 27.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, call Fort Benning Schools at 545-2500.

Educators plan programs to help students get ahead

Fort Benning Schools

As students and parents begin to look forward to and plan for the upcoming school year, Fort Benning educators are putting the finishing touches on plans for the 1990-91 school year.

This time last year, the system was initiating Spanish instruction for middle school students, as well as a program for academically talented first graders, providing additional school counselors at the elementary school level, expanding the Drug and Abuse Resistance Education program to the elementary grades, and making plans for a strong emphasis on student writing and composition skills.

Each of those programs has proven to be extremely successful, and each will be continued as the new year begins.

When students return to school this year on August 28, the Fort Benning schools are implementing new programs designed specifically to assist elementary and middle school students who are now working significantly below what would be expected of students in their grade level.

The Reading Recovery program will bring concentrated assistance in reading to first grade students.

Success in Reading, a program that will replace the existing remedial program in the elementary grades, will be used with students who are in the second through the fifth grades.

Middle school students will find a new and innovative extended day program which has been designed to assist students in need of remedial help.

Reading Recovery

The Fort Benning schools will be the first school system in the state of Georgia to bring the Reading Recovery program to its students.

The program is internationally acclaimed as a program which allows educators to reach children who seem to be at risk of having problems learning to read.

By working intensively with first graders before they progress very far in their schooling, research has shown that the Reading Recovery teachers are able to diagnose individual learning problems and then meet individual student needs. Students then become able to function at a level comparable to other children in their grade.

By giving children additional help in first grade, research has shown that they will be much less likely to need additional remediation as they progress from year to year.

In order to implement Reading Recovery, Cindy Cantrell, a Fort Benning teacher, was sent to Ohio State University for an entire year of training.

Cantrell returned not only as a Reading Recovery teacher but also as a teacher of teachers. She is training a cadre of Fort Benning teachers this summer; these teachers will implement the program with first graders in six elementary schools this fall.

Success

The Success Reading Program will take on a new format next year to serve second through fifth grade students who are identified as being in need of concentrated instruction to bring their skills up to their grade level.

The Success in Reading is designed to produce confident readers and writers who are encouraged to achieve their personal best.

Success in Reading and Writing is founded on the belief that all children can learn when language is made meaningful and exciting.

The program employs a wide variety of reading materials and teaching techniques. Children are immersed in a print-rich environment that builds upon and expands their language experiences.

Teachers have been in training this summer to learn to implement the Success program.

the full spectrum of classes and activities, suffers.

If the student attends a remedial class during the day to help in reading or math, some other subject is being eliminated.

For this reason, the Faith School staff, under the direction of principal, Olin Harp, has designed an extended day program to provide the boost that students who are functioning a year or more behind may need.

An extra class session following the regular school day will allow teachers, with the help of teachers' aides, to work with very small groups of students to provide concentrated assistance in math and/or reading.

This also means that students attend all regular classes and do not have to miss any electives or special activities.

Extended day students will be those who are achieving significantly below grade level on nationally normed standardized achievement tests. Parents of these students will be contacted to meet with teachers to discuss the program.

Transportation will be provided by the school system for all students who participate in the program.

"We think that this program has tremendous potential," said Olin Harp. "The Faith staff believes that the needs of students will be better served by providing this additional, concentrated work time after the regular school day.

"These middle school students will not only be better equipped to function in their classes; they will also have an improved belief in themselves and their own abilities."

Students must meet requirements to attend schools on Fort Benning

Fort Benning Schools

To be eligible to attend on-post schools, children must reside on-post or fit one of two exceptions to the residency requirement.

As an exception, children living off-post may attend on-post schools if the sponsor has a written notice from Family Housing indicating that post quarters will be available for the family within 90 school days.

The second exception allows a child to continue to attend on-post schools for the remainder of the year if when the family moves off post due to the sponsor's retirement or permanent change of station move.

Periodically, families move from post housing into the local community and ask to leave their children in the Fort Benning Schools. If the move is not connected with the retirement of the sponsor or PCS move, the children must be withdrawn from school by no later than the end of the grading period during which the sponsor no longer lives in post quarters.

Eligibility for attending Fort Benning Schools is governed by federal law and in the Department of Defense directive.

Parents with questions regarding eligibility for school attendance are urged to call the school office at 545-2500.

Fort Benning's new Faith Middle School houses students in 6th, 7th, 8th grades

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School, built in 1986-87, is the only school at Fort Benning that houses the sixth, seventh and eighth grades.

Faith Middle School was named after Lt. Col. Don Carlos Faith Jr., who was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery and service in Korea in 1950.

Located on Ingersoll Street, Faith is located near the old Don C. Faith Middle School building that had served students since 1952.

Instruction at Faith is accomplished through the use of teaming.

A team is a group of teachers who, although they teach different subjects, are assigned and teach the same group of students.

The teachers plan together and coordinate their teaching plans to provide activities that complement the material being taught in other classrooms.

This approach helps students understand how all the subject areas fit together and how they might relate to real life situations.

The staff at Faith School believes that the school exists and functions primarily for the children and that a program of quality education should be provided for every student.

They further believe that this quality education must be designed to meet each pupil's needs in the following areas of growth: aesthetic, emotional, intellectual, physical and social.

It is the responsibility of a middle school to meet the educational needs of the general population of its students and at the same time to provide for the needs of special students.

For that reason, Faith Middle School's curriculum includes a common core of academic subjects as well as exploratory courses.

Exploratory courses include: art, home living, industrial arts, computers, choral and instrumental music and Spanish.

Sixth-grade students go through a full rotation of these seven exploratory elective courses. Seventh-grade students may choose to take band and chorus for a full year or four of the exploratory courses for nine week sessions. Eighth-graders have the option to choose band, chorus or Spanish for for the full year or two of the exploratory courses for eighteen week sessions.

Faith School began making the transition to the "Middle School Concept" about 10 years ago. Since that time there has been an increasing emphasis on the special needs of individual students.

Primary to the concern for individual needs is the necessity for an effective guidance and counseling service in the school. Faith school has such a program. Counselors use the developmental, preventive guidance model. Counseling is offered to students on an individual basis as well as on a group basis.

Meeting student needs on an individual basis is at the heart of what the middle school is all about.

Throughout the years, Faith has served as an example and has often been used as a model for those seeking to provide quality middle school programs throughout Georgia and the nation.

Fort Benning schools accredited since 1963

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning schools have been accredited since 1963. The organization for accreditation, the Southern Association for Colleges and Schools, first proposed standards for the accreditation of elementary schools at that time. Fort Benning Schools were among the first in this region to be accredited.

What is accreditation and why is it desirable? The Southern Association has developed a comprehensive set of standards covering all facets of the organization and functioning of schools. Demonstrating that a school or school system meets these standards qualifies it for accreditation and ensures a quality program is in place.

Parents entering their children in a school for the first time may be assured the school is operating within stringent guidelines for excellence when they see the certificate of accreditation posted in the office.

Fort Benning Schools have been accredited continuously for more than 25 years. Accreditation is maintained by the schools through filing annual reports with SACS and through involvement in in-depth, on-site inspections by a team of trained educators every five years. The last on-site visit occurred in the fall of 1988, and the team recommended continuing accreditation in all eight schools at that time.

Each SACS accreditation team visit brings not only commendations for things well done but recommendations for continued growth and improvement. Fort Benning Schools are heeding many of those recommendations and looking forward to continued excellence as they remain accredited by Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Services are available for special children

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools offer services to many "special" children, including programs for specific learning disabilities, behavior disorders, speech-language disorders, physical and mental handicaps.

A full-time occupational therapist and a part-time physical therapist also provide specialized support for students with specific therapeutic/educational needs and serve students in all eight schools.

Special programs are available in each school including educational screening, evaluation and individualized educational services for the handicapped.

Some students with severe handicaps may be served in an adjoining school district with Fort Benning Schools providing transportation, tuition and professional support.

New students entering Fort Benning with special education records will be placed in programs based on their current individualized education plan.

Parents and teachers may refer students for screening by the Child Study Committee.

The Child Study Committee may include the principal, classroom teachers, special education teachers, counselors, nurses and parents.

This committee screens referrals, evaluates school achievement and makes educational recommendations to meet the specific needs of students.

Parents are an integral part of referral, evaluation and placement in special education. Parents are encouraged to attend conferences and assist teachers in planning and implementing individualized educational goals.

If you have a handicapped child or if you want to know more, call your school principal, your child's classroom or special education teacher or Tommye Wentland, director of Special Education, 545-5520.

Open house gives parents chance to learn about school

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will be welcoming parents back to school in September, too. Each school will hold its own open house — a time for group conferences when parents meet teachers and principals and see the classrooms.

Parent group conferences also provide an opportunity to briefly review curriculum and classroom guidelines.

Before the end of the first grading period, an individual conference will be scheduled to allow the teachers and parents to talk together regarding each child's achievement and progress. At this conference, the first report card will be given and the grading system explained.

Fort Benning educators look forward to seeing all parents at both the group conferences and the individual conferences. Working together, school staff and parents can provide success and a rewarding school experience for all involved.

Helping out

Connie Acton, school volunteer, helps Giovanni Colon, a second grade student at Richard G. Wilson school, with his work. Acton is one of the many volunteers who fill a vital role in the operation of Fort Benning Schools.

Volunteers play active, important roles in school

Fort Benning Schools

School volunteers play active and important roles in each of the eight Fort Benning Schools by assisting teachers and students with activities during the school day, working on special school projects, serving as officers and committee members of parent-teacher organizations and serving as resource speakers.

The Fort Benning Schools invite community members to share their time and talents as school volunteers.

Information about volunteering in the schools is available through the school principal in each Fort Benning school.

Kindergarten offers creativity, independence for young minds

Fort Benning Schools

Exploration, new experiences, independence, discovery, curiosity, creativity, spontaneity. . . is what kindergarten at Fort Benning is all about.

The schools welcome these youngsters to their first school experience and strive to make it a positive and rewarding one.

Children must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 of the year they enter the Fort Benning kindergarten program.

At registration, both birth certificate and certificate of immunization are required as is verification of physical examination, which has been completed within the year.

Kindergarten registration will occur in August at the same time as registration for other grades.

Kindergarten at Fort Benning is a regular, full-day program consisting of all of the academic areas.

Fort Benning's VIP line keeps parents informed

Fort Benning Schools

When children return to classes in the Fort Benning Schools this summer, their parents will have one more channel of communication with the schools.

The Very Informed Parent Line has been instituted at each of Benning's schools.

This informational telephone recording can be dialed from 5 p.m. to 7 a.m. daily.

Since being implemented last December, the weekly service has provided information on current events in the particular school being telephoned.

It provides the school principal with another way of updating parents on events, important dates, and special programs which are occurring in the school.

The home-school partnership is considered to be critical to a successful education experience. Involvement of parents is a strong factor in the development of positive feelings in the child toward school. Good communication with the school is central to that process.

The VIP Line is the latest effort on part of the Fort Benning Schools to reach out to the community.

In addition, the schools communicate to parents with monthly newsletters from each school principal as well as updates sent home from the classroom teacher.

Bus transportation provided for students in elementary school

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning School System provides transportation for elementary school students who live one mile or more, by the nearest traveled route, from the school they will attend and for middle school students who live more than a one-and-one-half-mile radius from Faith Middle School.

The school system is required to contract for transportation services each year. The contractor for the 1990-91 school year is J.R.W. Enterprises of Portmouth, Virginia.

Under terms of the contract, buses are used for normal daily operations as well as numerous school related field trips. These buses are inspected annually by the Georgia Highway Patrol to insure that they meet all Georia requirements.

If parents have questions or concerns regarding school bus transportation, they may contact Alice Harrell in the superintendent's office at 545-2500.

Due to the yearly differences in grades and locations of the students transported, there are always changes made in bus routes during the first few weeks of school. Parents are asked to bear with the school system and the contractor as they attempt to implement the necessary changes as quickly as possible.

The school system also requests the assistance of parents in implementing the Bus Safety Program.

Parents will receive a brief list of bus rules at registration, which, if followed, will help to provide a safe and pleasant atmosphere on the bus.

Parents are asked to review these rules with their children so that children will know that their parents support and will help to enforce these regulations.

The school system appreciates parental support and asks that they contact their child's principal or Harrell should they observe unsafe practices on a school bus. The safety of the children is the number one concern.

Benning students learn ways to say no with Project DARE

Fort Benning Schools

School year 1990-91 will see all students in the Fort Benning Schools actively participating in Project DARE.

DARE — Drug Abuse Resistance Education — is a substance use prevention education program designed to equip students with skills for resisting peer pressure to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

In it's seven-year history, it has grown to the point where more than 300 agencies in 30 states, DoDDs overseas, and schools in New Zealand have been certified to deliver the DARE program.

Fort Benning's school system is among the first in Georiga to provide the DARE program.

The most striking difference between this drug education program and others is that DARE lessons are taught by active duty, uniformed police officers.

At Fort Benning, Lt. Walter Jackson, a Department of Defense policeman, will serve as DARE coordinator and primary instructor.

Jackson will teach 17, one-hour lessons dealing with decision-making skills and techniques for resisting peer pressure in a variety of situations not strictly related to substance abuse to sixth grade students at Faith School.

As preparation for his assignment, Jackson attended a two-week Project DARE training institute conducted by the Lexington Fayette County Police Department in Lexington, Ky.

The DARE program uses a positive approach to substance abuse education and focuses attention in four major areas:

- Accurate information about tobacco, alcohol and drugs
- Teaching students decision-making skills.
- Showing students how to resist peer pressure.
- Giving students ideas for alternatives to drug use.

In addition to sixth grade students at Faith Middle School, the program also serves students in kindergarten through fourth grade in each of the Benning elementary schools.

Post's eight schools serve students in grades K-8

Fort Benning Schools

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School is located on Yeager Avenue and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live on south Main Post. The facility is Fort Benning's newest elementary school, having been built in 1969. Additions were constructed in 1989-90.

The school serves 375 students to include students from throughout the post who are enrolled in programs for the gifted. In addition to the standard elementary program offered, special instruction is available in art, music and physical education as well as programs in special education and counseling.

Dexter's new principal is Vicki Rogers. Rogers is a familiar face to most of Benning's teachers and students because she served as Language Arts/Social Studies Coordinator in the Benning system for the last three years.

Rogers came to Fort Benning with a wealth of experience as an educator. She previously taught in the elementary grades for 12 years and then served as a teacher assessment specialist for the State of Georgia for seven years.

Rogers holds a bachelor's and a master's degree in elementary education from Georgia Southwestern College. She recently completed her specialist's degree in educational administration at the University of Georgia.

"I believe that parent involvement is a key factor in the success of a school — that parents and school should work collaboratively to build a positive, caring learning environment — one that believes in children. I welcome continued involvement of parents in a partnership that will prepare today's children for tomorrow's future," said Rogers.

Don C. Faith Middle School

Don C. Faith Middle School is Fort Benning's newest facility, having been completed in the spring of 1987. The building houses about 875 children from throughout the post in grades six through eight and is one of the area's only true middle schools.

The school was constructed in wings with each grade level having essentially a self-containing wing. Special area subjects such as music, art, physical education, industrial arts, home economics and computers are available to all students in a central area.

The school has a large multipurpose room used as both an auditorium and a gymnasium and contains a separate cafeteria that doubles as a large group meeting room.

The media center is at the center of the facility and is one of the most active parts of the school.

As a true middle school, Faith features teams in which groups of students are together with the same teachers for English, math, social studies and science each day with the focus being on providing a child-centered program that helps the student make the transition from elementary school to the highly structured secondary school.

Olin Harp has been the principal of Faith Middle School for the past 12 years, having served prior to that as assistant principal and teacher at Faith. Harp, a Cusseta native, holds a bachelor's degree from LaGrange College and a master's degree from the University of Georgia.

Harp will be assisted by David Murray and Melanie Bast.

Murray has been an assistant principal at Faith for the last four years. Prior to that, he was a classroom teacher and served as an elementary school principal in Missouri.

Melanie Bast, who begins her first year as assistant principal at Faith moves to that position after having served with distinction for the last seven years as band director there. Prior to her arrival at Benning, Bast had taught English and was also assistant band director for three years in Fitzgerald, Georgia.

Bast holds a bachelor's degree in English and in music. She has recently completed her master's degree in education administration.

Though Bast is moving from her music position at Faith, she will still be using her musical skills on a regular basis. She is a sergeant in the Alabama National Guard and plays the flute in the 151st Army Band.

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School is located on Santa Fe Road adjacent to Spencer High School. Children in grades kindergarten through five who reside in north Bouton Heights, Upatoi, Terrace and the Davis Hill communities attend the school.

The school opened in September of 1959 and currently serves about 425 children, providing a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, and programs in special education as well as the services of a counselor and a nurse.

Additionally, Loyd School serves all mentally handicapped children of elementary school age at Fort Benning and provides special programs for the physically handicapped. The building, while an older building, is a light, spacious facility that is carpeted throughout and centrally air conditioned.

Dr. Judy Gilliam is Loyd School's new principal. She brings to this new assignment 18 years of experience in education — both as an elementary classroom teacher and a teacher of teachers at the college level.

At Auburn University, LaGrange College and in her most recent assignment as consultant with the State of Georgia, she has taught graduate courses in elementary education and in instructional methods for the teaching of reading.

Dr. Gilliam holds a bachelor's degree, a master's degree, and a doctoral degree in education from Auburn University.

"I am delighted to be at Fort Benning, and I look forward to assuming the leadership role with the strong faculty and programs currently in place at Loyd."

Morris R. McBride School

Morris R. McBride School, located on Cusseta Road, was built in 1965 and serves 525 children in grades kindergarten through three living in the McGraw Manor community.

The McBride School offers a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, counselor, nurse, and program in special education. The building is centrally air conditioned and carpeted throughout.

Del Hicks is beginning his third year as principal of McBride School.

A native of Illinois, Hicks was a superintendent, principal and classroom teacher in Illinois before coming to Fort Benning seven years ago. Here, he served as principal of Dexter and Wilbur schools at Fort Benning.

Hicks holds a bachelor's and master's degree in education from Northern Illinois University.

Glenn Hughes will serve as assistant principal at Loyd School and at McBride School this year. Hughes is a veteran Benning teacher; he has taught fourth or fifth grades for the last seven years here. Prior to coming to Benning he taught for two years in the Muscogee County School District.

Hughes has recently completed an education specialist's degree in educational administration. He also holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education and a master's in middle grades education.

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School, located at the corner of Lumpkin Road and Baltzell Avenue, is Fort Benning's oldest school, having been built in 1931.

For several years following its construction, it was the only Fort Benning school. Currently Patch School serves those students in kindergarten and first grade who live in sections of Main Post and Davis Hill.

Patch is a small school, enrolling about 150 students, and the Fort Benning Schools share the building with the Early Childhoods Development Center, which operates a program for 3 and 4 year-olds.

The Patch building has many of the advantages of an older school to include lots of space and a charm not found in newer schools. Classrooms are carpeted, and the building is air conditioned.

Ken Stettes is the principal at Patch School. He also serves as a coordinator for special projects with the school system.

Stettes has served as a principal at Wilbur School and Patch School and as a physical education teacher in the Fort Benning system. He taught in the Harris County Schools prior to coming to Fort Benning.

A native of Missouri, Stettes holds a bachelor's degree from Missouri Southern State College and an Education Specialist's degree from Georgia State University.

Edward A. White School

Edward A. White School serves approximately 400 children in grades two through five. The White School student body is made up of all second through fifth graders who reside in the north center main post areas and the south portion of Bouton Heights as well as students in grades four and five who live in McGraw Manor.

The school was built in 1962 and consists of four classrooms pods and a main building containing the office, media center, multi-purpose room and two classrooms. Each pod contains several classrooms and restrooms and is essentially a self-contained unit.

The school is carpeted throughout and is air conditioned. White School offers a standard elementary school program to include opportunities for students needing special education, a school counselor, a school nurse, and specialists in art, music and physical education.

White School is adjacent to the Youth Activities facility and uses the YA gymnasium for physical education classes.

Janet Wynn is the new principal at White School. Wynn holds a bachelor's degree from Florida State and a master's degree from Columbus College.

She has taught second grade in Colorado Springs, first grade and kindergarten at Wilbur School, and served as assistant principal at McBride and Wilbur for the last one and one-half years.

William H. Wilbur School

William H. Wilbur School is located on Custer Road and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live in Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart.

The building was constructed in 1950 and underwent extensive remodeling recently. The facility is carpeted throughout and has air conditioning in all classrooms.

Wilbur School provides a standard educational program to about 450 children in grades kindergarten through five to include special programs in music, art, physical education, counseling and special education services.

Gail Wilson returns as principal of Wilbur School this year. She has previously served as principal of Patch School, as assistant principal at Faith School, and as a special education teacher in the Fort Benning system. Wilson holds a master's degree in education from Columbus College and an education specialist's degree from West Georgia College.

Ann Justice, the new assistant principal at Wilbur, moves to Wilbur after 16 years of teaching at Dexter School. During 14 of those years Justice taught first grade. Prior to coming to Benning, Justice taught sixth, seventh and eighth grades for 10 years in Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Justice holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education, a master's degree in middle grades and early childhood education, and an education specialist's degree in early childhood education. In addition to serving as Wilbur's assistant principal, Justice will be a teacher at Wilbur in Benning's new Reading Recovery program.

Richard G. Wilson Elementary School

The Richard G. Wilson Elementary School, located on Lavoie Avenue, serves children in the Lavoie Manor community in grades Kindergarten through five. The building was constructed in 1965, with an addition being completed two years ago.

The school enrolls about 425 children and includes facilities for instruction in art and music, a computer lab, a library media center, special education facilities and a multi-purpose room serving as auditorium, gymnasium and lunchroom.

The school is carpeted throughout and air conditioned. Children experience a standard elementary school program with additional opportunities to work with computers, a counseling program, physical education, music and art.

For students with special needs, a special education teacher and speech language teacher are assigned to the school. A counselor and school nurse also serve Wilson School.

Phyllis Parker begins her first year as principal at Wilson school. She brings a wealth of classroom experience to this new assignment having taught 12 years in various elementary grades in Georgia public schools and three years as a sixth grade teacher at Faith. Her last two years have been spent serving as an assistant principal at Faith School.

Parker holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education, master's degree in elementary education, and an Educational Specialist's degree in elementary education and educational administration.

"Community involvement is one of the goals toward which I will work," said Parker. "I invite members of the community to come out and be a part of the Wilson School family."

Fort Benning community gets involved

Energy aware students

Troy Tow and Sarah Mann, students from Alexander M. Patch School, visit with "Captain Conservo" during Energy Awareness Month in the Fort Benning Schools.

Community support schools

Fort Benning Schools

The agencies and individuals who make up the Fort Benning community care about Fort Benning Schools and Fort Benning children.

This is shown through the various safety precautions taken as they make their way to and from school and other programs directed at keeping Fort Benning children safe and happy.

Early each year, professionals from the provost marshal's office coordinate with the schools to provide instructions and materials to remind students of the need for safe practices when walking or riding their bicycles to school.

Throughout the school year, these dedicated individuals make themselves available to visit the schools and to provide programs on crime prevention, substance abuse and safety practices.

In addition to the military police, several other post agencies reach out to the schools.

During October, the firemen help the children "learn not to burn" bringing puppet shows and fire fighting equipment — the big trucks — to the school sites to emphasize their message.

In fall and spring, the Fort Benning energy office provides materials for teachers and incentives for students to become involved in the worldwide effort for energy conservation.

Before the break for winter holidays, the 82nd Ordnance Detachment to help teachers instruct the students on safety procedures with ammunition and duds that might accidentally be found by a child at play during the holiday season.

Soon after the new year begins, teams from the Dental Activity set up fairs at the schools that show children how to care for their teeth and provide on-the-spot, dental health screening for each child.

Later in the spring, Benning residents observe the Month of the Military Child, and children and families are drawn together in a variety of activities to celebrate the uniqueness of the experience of having a military child.

The Staff Judge Advocate's office provides a host of speakers and learning opportunities for students in the springtime, which leads up to an exciting Law Day observance in each of the schools in May.

Throughout the year, regardless of the need, the Fort Benning community is responsive to the Fort Benning Schools and the children.

From Martin Army Community Hospital to the Youth Activities Center to the host of volunteers that give so freely of their time to the schools, the people of the community show they care and demonstrate that caring through action and involvement.

Fort Benning Schools are unique because they serve and are served by very special and unique agencies and individuals within the Fort Benning community.

Post schools operate under direction of school board elected by parents

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools operate under the direction of a school board elected by parents of children attending the schools.

Board members are elected on the second Tuesday each May to two-year terms, with terms being staggered to provide continuity.

Half of the ten-member board comes up for election each year.

The board includes a president, a chaplain and one representative from each of the eight schools.

The president and chaplain are elected by parents of all eight schools while the individual school representatives are elected by the parents of the individual school they represent.

The school board is a policy-making group that has ultimate responsibility for the operation of the schools. The board also approves the school budget, selects the school superintendent, and approves educational programs and materials.

The board functions very much like school boards do in local communities.

Board meetings are open to the public and are held in the school administration building on NCO Drive. Persons interested in attending meetings may call 545-2500 or 545-3500 to learn when meetings will be held.

Schools offers students variety of things to do

Fort Benning Schools

Students who attend Fort Benning Schools have a variety of activities and programs available.

Learning Center

"I get to go to the LRC." "I found it in the LRC." "I learned about that in the LRC." What is the LRC, and why it is a special part of your child's school life?

The letters LRC represent the concept of a Learning Resource Center, that area at school once was known as the library. But in this information age, the function of the library has moved far beyond the housing of books.

In the Fort Benning Schools, the Learning Resource Centers have individual learning centers where children go for practice and reinforcement of basic skills.

In the Learning Resource Centers, filmstrips are shown, the computer may be used, tutorial devices such as the robot, Charlie, or the Combo-8 film stick machine, provide drill and practice on math and reading skills and broad games that teach are employed to make learning fun.

The Learning Resource Center functions as the hub of the school. It is a busy, bustling place where students come and go as their needs dictate, sometimes under teacher supervision and sometimes independently, working with the learning center staff to find appropriate materials or to engage in appropriate activities.

The old horse-drawn library is a thing of the past; enter the space-age technology of the Learning Resource Center.

School Field Trips

Callaway Gardens, Westville, Sunshine Bakery and the Infantry Museum are just a few of the exciting places Fort Benning Schools' children visit on field trips during the school year.

The Fort Benning Schools' philosophy is "We believe real situations should be used in providing learning experiences, whenever feasible." Teachers do that throughout the year as they plan field trips to correlate with their various units of study.

Children at all grade levels and at every school may be involved in field trips. Parents are often invited to share the experience and to assist by being chaperons.

School Lunch Program

The Fort Benning Schools participate in the National School Lunch Program as governed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture through the Georgia State Food Service Program.

In addition to regular-priced meals, free or reduced meals are available for children of families whose income falls below certain levels established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

All Fort Benning Schools offer a hot lunch program each day. Three schools, McBride, Wilbur and Wilson also offer a breakfast program. Information regarding the free and reduced meal program will be available in each school during registration, and applications may be completed at that time.

Second Language Program

The English as a Second Language programs, at White School for second through fifth grades and at Faith Middle School for sixth, seventh and eighth, assist those students whose native language is not English.

Students who speak no English receive support from a specialized teacher to make their school experience a profitable one. The classes are taught in English with the ESL teacher acting as a consultant to the classroom teacher. Students in kindergarten and first grade are served within their home school.

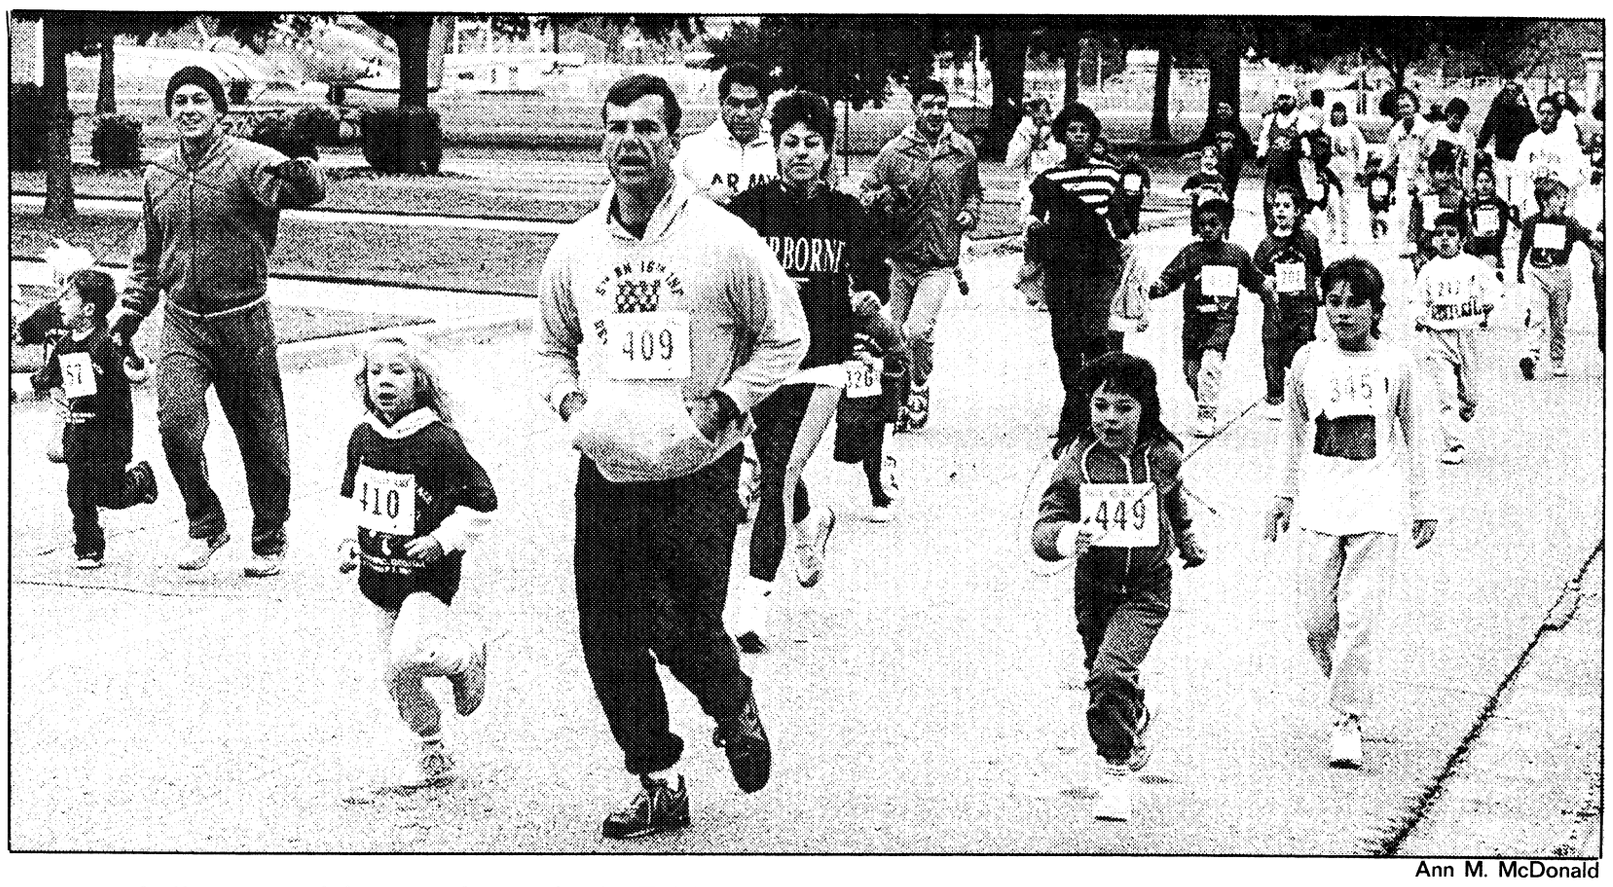
Because of the many countries represented by Fort Benning Schools' students, the ESL program is a vital component in the educational process for children from all over the world.

Guidance and Counseling

The guidance and counseling curriculum's primary goal is to help develop happy well-adjusted individuals who can function in our ever-changing society.

The program provides information on self-understanding, interpersonal relations, expressing ideas, gathering and processing information, rights and responsibilities, decision making, achievement, motivation and problem solving.

Each school is staffed by a school counselor who provides group guidance, individual counseling and consultation with teachers and parents.



Ann M. McDonald

Runners of all ages participate each year in the Faith School Race held the first Saturday in December.

Faith Race attracts hundreds of runners

Fort Benning Schools

The first Faith Race was held, Dec. 8, 1979. The attendance far surpassed what was anticipated.

The attendance each year has varied from 500 to more than 1,000 runners. The Faith Race has established a reputation of being the best family-oriented event on post, according to a former commanding general of Fort Benning.

Three distances are offered to appeal to children of all ages and abilities. A one-mile race is conducted for runners who are 14 years old or younger. The two-mile and five-mile runs are open to all ages.

All entrants get a T-shirt with the traditional Faith mouse on it. Awards are given to over-all, open division winners and to the top three in each age group.

The original race course was changed when Faith School moved into its new building. New course records have been established and are currently held by:

Five Mile — Male — Lloyd McDonald — 26:22

Five Mile — Female — Molly Sinclair — 32:27

Two Mile — Male — Bradley Sievers — 10:01

Two Mile — Female — Jasmine Watford — 12:44

One Mile — (0-8) — Male — Jean Shuttleworth — 6:46

One Mile — (0-8) — Female — Ashar Smith — 8:00

One Mile — (9-14) — Male — Scott Teixeira — 5:12

One Mile — (9-14) — Female — Heather Dickson — 5:53

The 12th annual race is scheduled for Dec. 1 this year. Mark your calendars and make plans to participate.

Tuesday is shorter for students, not teachers

Fort Benning Schools

Why is Tuesday a shorter day for Fort Benning Schools?

The weekly required hours of attendance for Fort Benning School children meet state standards for school attendance in Georgia, but the schedule has been arranged to add 15 minutes to every day to permit students to be dismissed an hour early on Tuesday.

Teachers, however, are on duty until 4 p.m. on Tuesday giving them a two-hour block of time on that day for parent conferences, staff meetings or in-service training.

This time on Tuesday afternoons is a positive and unique feature of the school system that permits on-going development of professional knowledge and skills.

New programs, new materials, new teaching techniques, and updates on current techniques and requirements are all covered during sessions that take place Tuesday afternoons.

It is a time in which teachers can work together in their individual school or can work with teachers from throughout the school system.

Tuesday afternoons also promote better communication between school and home and school and community.

Additional time is provided then for parent conferences and for coordination of teaching activities with agencies on post who contribute their time and talents to providing learning experiences for students.

Fort Benning Schools' staff is always searching for ways to grow and improve.

Tuesday afternoons provide increased opportunities for that growth and improvement.

Benning schools have five registered nurses

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools are fortunate to have five registered nurses on the faculty.

Each school houses a well-equipped clinic staffed by a full or part-time school nurse prepared to administer first aid and deal with medical emergencies or illness.

These school nurses are educators as well as health care workers. Their primary educational goal is to promote wellness. The school nurses help students learn more about themselves, to handle personal health problems and to make personal health decisions.

The school nurse may teach a kindergarten class about poisonous substances and how to take precautions; or teach a unit on sex education to a sixth grade homeroom; or chart a diet and exercise program for an individual student.

Vision, hearing, dental and scoliosis screenings (grades four through eight) are conducted each year for all students by the school nurse.

Today's school nurse does more than dispense bandages. She is an active participant in the health education curriculum and an important part of the school faculty.

Child Find program helps handicapped

Fort Benning Schools

The passage of a new law will require all school systems to provide services for handicapped children ages 3 and 4 by 1990-91.

Public Law 99-457 is an amendment to the landmark legislation Education of The Handicapped Act and outlines educational services for preschool children who are handicapped.

Fort Benning Schools initiated a "Child Find" project in August 1989 to locate 3- and 4-year-old handicapped students who live on post and who require special education services.

Psychological, speech, occupational and physical therapy evaluations will be available to identify the specific needs of these handicapped children.

In January 1990, Fort Benning Schools began some home-based programs such as speech therapy and parent education and training.

Preschool handicapped students currently enrolled in certified educational programs may apply for psychological services, OT, PT and may qualify for limited transportation to their current setting.

If your handicapped child will be 3 or 4 years old by Sept. 1, and lives on the military reservation, contact the Fort Benning Schools Special Education Department, 545-5520 after Sept. 1.

If you have questions regarding this program, call Tommye Wentland, director of Special Education, or Jackie Stansel, school psychologist, for more information.

Teachers learn, too

Louise Anderson, (right) first grade teacher, explores the uses of the computer with media specialist Mabel Ditchfield.

While their students were enjoying the long days of summer, professional educators of the Fort Benning School System were participating in a variety of courses to help them be more effective teachers and administrators.

For the last six years the Fort Benning Schools have had a staff development program which provides courses desinged to meet the specific needs of Fort Benning Schools' personnel.

Courses are taught evenings, weekends and in the summer. Over 130 educators were enrolled this summer in the course work which included courses in computer usage, instructional strategies, science instruction, teaching writing skills, and working with children with special language needs.

Students teach, learn with school computers

Fort Benning Schools

The mystique is gone, the novelty has worn off, the truth can now be told — computers have a place in today's schools.

In the Fort Benning Schools, that place is in the hands of learners: students learning new ideas and means of expression and teachers learning new methods and exploring possibilities never before available within the confines of the classroom.

Over the past six years the Fort Benning Schools' computer education program has evolved from an initial awareness level to its present focus on utilization of the computer as a tool. Rather than teaching and learning about computers, users will be better served by teaching and learning with computers.

Toward this end, access to computer equipment includes early learning experiences with computer-assisted instruction for kindergarten students and carries through with problem solving and "real world" word processing for upper elementary and middle school students.

Several of our schools feature computer labs staffed by teacher aides who assist classroom teachers with software preparation and student monitoring. The lab provides the opportunity for whole class or large group instruction when needed.

Other schools utilize computers as learning aids in the classroom. This is generally accomplished through the use of a computer as a learning center in which children work individually, in pairs or in small groups.

In either setting, one effect of computer assisted instruction obvious to even the most casual observer is that of children learning from each other. This "peer tutoring" usually involves guiding a classmate through the operation of a particular program, but also extends to discussion of the possible outcome of a shared decision.

Whether in a lab or the regular classroom, every child in the Fort Benning Schools will have access to these powerful learning tools and software appropriate to their needs.

Putting computers in the hands of active learners — in the Fort Benning Schools are empowering students to be their best.

Faith students participate in Odyssey of the Mind

During the last four years, students from Faith Middle School have participated in a program known as the "Odyssey of the Mind" competition.

Not only have they participated, but each year they have gone on to win district and state competitions to represent the State of Georgia at the World Finals.

In 1988, a Faith team captured first place in the World Finals, and this past year found the Faith team in third place in the World Finals competition.

Odyssey of the Mind is a problem solving competition that was developed by Dr. Sam Micklus, a New Jersey college professor.

Corporate sponsor for the Odyssey program is the IBM Corporation which has given grants to prepare and distribute curricular materials to over 7,000 schools worldwide.

These materials help teachers relate Odyssey of the Mind problem assignments to class work in science, math, social studies, language arts, and technology education.

Libbie Kurinec, a Faith teacher, and Joan Hutchins, school volunteer, have served as coaches for the Faith teams during the four years that the program has been in place at Faith.

Last year's team was made up of Ben Engel, Ahmad Hernandez, Greg Maschek, Jennie Maschek, Elisabeth Moore, Ty Poe, and Danielle Woods.

Their third place win involved a problem called "Seven Wonders of the World."

In this problem students were required to suggest replacements for the seven wonders and to write, produce, and perform a creative presentation exploring those replacements.

Physical education at Faith can be fun

Fort Benning Schools

You're in the seventh grade, and here you are changing schools again.

At the last school, the other girls whispered and snickered at "dressing out" time, and you know they were calling you names.

You knew that six weeks of volleyball would find you being the last asked for a team every time. And thinking of the long weeks of softball ahead gives you a real headache.

It's all just too boring and humiliating.

But wait. This is Faith Middle School. You're in luck. The word boring should be unknown in physical education classes here.

First, there is no dressing out (unless you are in gymnastics, wrestling or track and field where safety is accommodated by the student wearing his choice of shorts and sweats.)

They allow jeans here along with athletic shoes, no one ever has to buy a special gym suit.

At Faith, 875 students are presented no less than 36 different physical education activities.

Success is the key word here. Even a student who has been teased in physical education classes before can be successful in many parts of the program, as can a child with cerebral palsy or artificial arms.

No activity lasts more than 10 days, and there are several mini-courses.

In addition to meeting the special needs of middle school students, the program is tailored to the needs of a transient population.

As a Department of Defense school on a military base, Faith teachers have found that only 12 percent of the students stay at Faith for all three years. Many are at Faith for only three or four months.

Since none of the activities lasts more than two weeks, every child finds some activity in which he or she can succeed and build self-esteem.

Intramural activities are offered at least twice weekly. Normally one hour of activity is scheduled.

HIV testing required before outprocessing

Human immunodeficiency virus testing is required for soldiers outprocessing for overseas assignments, according to officials at the Adjutant General Personnel Processing Center.

HIV test results cannot be more than six months old prior to departure. The results of the test normally take five to seven days. Therefore, failure to be tested will delay outprocessing.

Testing is done at Building 66. The hours are: Mondays from 8 a.m. until 10 a.m.; Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from 12:30 to 4 p.m.; closed Wednesdays.

Officers to soon wear black shoulder insignia

Officers will soon join enlisted soldiers in wearing black shoulder marks as insignia of grade on the AG-415 green shirt.

Officials in the Army Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics said all officers will be able to wear the new black shoulder marks beginning Oct. 1, 1991, with a one-year phase-out for the current green shoulder marks.

Black shoulder marks for lieutenant generals and generals are already available in Army and Air Force Exchange military clothing sales stores; they may purchase and wear the new insignia immediately.

Brigadier generals and major generals will be able to purchase and wear the new insignia in August.

The black shoulder marks will cost $2.35 per pair for both the long and short versions.

Officers may continue to wear the current green shoulder marks until October 1992.

DoD shifts funds

Move will eliminate layoffs, freezes

By Tim Downey
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense will reprogram about $1.5 billion out of various weapon accounts into personnel and medical accounts. Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney and House Speaker Thomas Foley reached agreement to do so recently.

From the standpoint of uniformed personnel, DoD will not have the kind of massive layoffs, freeze in promotions and stopping of permanent-change-of-station moves that would have otherwise been required, said Cheney.

"By doing the reprograming now, basically everybody is covered for the remainder of this fiscal year, and we'll be able to run our personnel policies in a way that makes sense."

Cheney went on to say that the reprograming action shores up a flagging medical account. Costs for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services have been higher than expected, he said.

Backing up his long-standing pledge that "people are my first priority," Cheney ordered money transferred from noncritical areas. The money to pay for the personnel and medical shortfalls came from several programs.

Figures show that DoD will pare $307 million from strategic programs such as the Air Force's Minuteman II and Peacekeeper missiles. Major conventional programs coughed up $294 million, with the Army's Bradley fighting vehicle taking the deepest cut.

The hope-for reprieve from an otherwise unsettling situation for thousands of service members has been answered — for this year, said Cheney.

He noted that there are no guarantees past that and pointed out that the only places to cut for immediate outlay savings are the personnel and operating accounts.

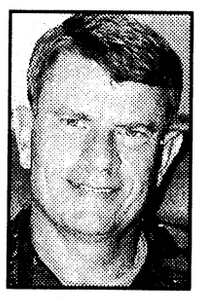
Resolution of the reprograming impasse had nothing to do with an earlier announcement, said Cheney, of a DoD study that will determine financial and strategic consequences if a 25 percent reduction in the military force structure were to occur.

Post welcomes new chief of staff

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Thursday's ceremony welcoming Fort Benning's new chief of staff represented more than an official assumption of duty; it represented a reunion of a team.

Col. John D. Fuller, the post's new chief of staff, and Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza are a team once more.



Fuller

The two men started their team affiliation when they were both assigned to the 7th Infantry Division, Fort Ord, Calif.

It's not a coincidence that the two are reunited.

According to Fuller, Cavezza asked him if he would be interested in keeping the team together and bringing it to Fort Benning.

Fuller said that is one question he didn't have to think twice about.

For him, an assignment at Fort Benning is like coming home, he said.

This is Fuller's fourth tour of duty here. Fourteen months ago, he relinquished command of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

He's been a Ranger instructor; headed up the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Task Force, U.S. Army Infantry School; commanded the 2nd Training Battalion, Infantry Officer Basic Course, The School Brigade and served as chief, Tactics Division, Combined Arms and Tactics, USAIS. His time spent here as a student would double the list.

Fuller said he knows Fort Benning.

"I'm familiar with the system within the Infantry School and the Infantry Center," Fuller said.

He said he believes that knowledge will make it easier for him to do the job than someone brand new to Fort Benning.

"I know how General Cavezza thinks, and we're comfortable with each other," Fuller said. "We work well together. I absolutely admire the man and his leadership style."

"It's fun to work for someone who really cares about everyone around him," he continued.

"My job will be to ensure that what General Cavezza wants done, gets done right — the first time," he said.

Fuller said as chief of staff he isn't going to jump in and try to change things.

"I'm not here to fix anything," he said, "Fort Benning isn't broken. I'm going to sustain the good programs that already are in place."

People are what Fuller said he is all about. Describing himself as a people person, he said he likes people who smile and like to have a good time.

"Along with that good time, they have to have good work ethics," he said. "I like people that are up front and honest."

Fuller added that with that honesty he expected people to tell him the bad news as well as the good and also to tell him if they think he is doing something wrong.

"I'm really looking forward to working in my new position," he said, "The Army is in for some challenging times. It will be interesting to be part of these times and to be a part of shaping the Infantry for the future."

College grads can enlist as specialists

Army News Service

College graduates who enlist in the Army can now begin their service careers as specialists.

According to an announcement from the U.S. Army Recruiting Command at Fort Sheridan, Ill., the new policy allows degree holders to enter active duty with more "stripes on their sleeves and money in their pockets."

The previous accelerated promotions policy capped at allowing recruits with more than 60 semester hours of college to enter the Army as a privates first class. Under the revised policy, recruits who have 60 or more semester hours, but who have not obtained a baccalaureate degree, may enter the Army as privates first class.

Recruits with from 30 to 59 semester hours may continue to enter the Army as privates two.

'Rightsizing' Army seems to be guessing game — a scary one

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you're like me, you're probably wondering what the heck the future holds in store for you.

On one hand, you hear the Army officials saying they can handle cuts of 35,000 a year until we reach what they call an "end state" of 580,000 in 1997.

I think the in term for this is "Rightsizing."

On the other hand, you read news stories about Congress considering cuts of 100,000 in one year. Yipes! That's scary.

The Army, which has a plan — unlike the Air Force and Navy that can cut costs by not buying a B-2 or an aircraft carrier — picked the 35,000 number because the people in the puzzle palace say they can reach that number without a reduction in force and by keeping promotions moving.

But, if I understand what's happening, Congress is waiting for proposals from those other services before looking at the Army's plan -– which, the Army guys say, is a very good one.

For instance, the Army folks say they can avoid a RIF and continue to promote by reducing the number of soldiers and officers coming into the Army (about 18,000) and "encouraging" others to leave (about 17,000).

This gives the noncommissioned officers and officers with seven to 16 years of service the best chance of survival and promotion. Why worry about these guys (Army officials who want to sound important call it the "bubble") because those are our future first sergeants, sergeants major, colonels and generals.

Gotta get 'em from somewhere, they don't just show up overnight.

"So where does that leave me?" I continue to wonder.

It certainly won't leave me filling the same boots as a woman staff sergeant I know.

Up until recently, she's been walking around with a chip on her shoulder, daring the brass to kick her out of the Army.

Now, as talks shift to RIFs and separation pay, she's trying to change direction and work hard enough to last until the RIF, when she hopes to be kicked out and given some bucks in the process.

Wrong move, make-up breath. I think the Army might give you what you truly deserve.

First, you gotta have the RIF, second you gotta get Congress to approve the separation money. I'd like to bet against you sometime.

"But where does that leave me?" I still ask, as I'm sure many of you do.

A colonel in the Pentagon told me that first, there's still a need for our Army. There's a lot to do. There's still a nation with worldwide interests to defend and plenty of trouble lurking out there.

And in this Army, he says, there will always be a need for good soldiers. He said it'll certainly get competitive, but the good ones will stay.

How do you know if you're one of the competitive ones? His advice — ask your first sergeant, your battalion sergeant major or battalion commander.

If you're good, they'll tell you so — short of promising you a bright future, since no one can do that. On the other hand, if they're honest and have integrity, they'll also let you know if you should think about preparing to become a civilian in the near future.

Speaking of civilians. . .you civilians are also wondering about your futures with the federal government.

You got me there. You know as well as I that if the number of soldiers shrinks, the number of civilians shrinks. You know as well as I do if the amount of money a post has for civilian salaries shrinks, the number of civilians shrinks.

I know Fort Benning is managing civilian positions very carefully. I also know Army planners are "hoping" for a two percent reduction in real dollars for next year.

Something obviously has to give.

I'm also willing to bet the armed forces — heck, the federal government, won't have a budget until sometime in January of 1991.

After all, what congressman wants to tip his hand on what he plans to do with the budget prior to an election where one-third of the senators come up for re-election and all of the representatives do?

That gives them barely two months to act, certainly not enough time, before the Christmas break, which begins around Thanksgiving.

The next thing you know, it's time to install a new congress. Think the old guys want to get involved?

My advice? Practice holding your breath until next March.

Soldiers' compensation lags behind that of their civilian counterparts

Association of the U.S. Army

When the Secretary of Defense publicly states that there isn't much that can be done about the wide disparity between military and civilian compensation, it doesn't do much for the morale and well-being of the many bright young men and women who have volunteered to serve in uniform.

There is no logical reason why the people who choose to make a career of military service to the nation should be paid less than their civilian counterparts who, for the most part, don't have to put up with the same dangers and inconveniences.

When military and civilian pay match, this coincidence is called "comparability." It was achieved briefly in 1972 when it became apparent that a volunteer armed force had to be at least as attractive as employment in the civilian sector.

But it slid backward as politicians who gave lip service to volunteerism decided it was too expensive. The result was the "hollow Army" of the late 1970s.

Comparability was regained in 1981, but only after several years of campaigning by groups representing all the members of the armed forces and by a relative handful of Senators and Congressmen who recognized the inequity.

Now in the midst of severe budget deficits and six years of declining defense budgets, it is a fact that the principle of comparability has been submerged once again.

Hard experience has shown the armed forces that whenever military pay falls behind comparability with civilian pay they can expect to begin losing good people.

In the past when the Secretary of Defense and Congress recognized a dangerous widening of the comparability gap, they formulated and passed legislation to correct the situation.

When they delayed doing so, they usually found themselves with more problems than they had bargained for.

Before the present situation worsens, the Administration and Congress must give evidence of their true concern for the most valuable asset our national defense establishment possesses — its devoted career people.

They also must make sure that compensation for valued military service does not again fall below comparability with pay in the civilian sector.

LETTER

A special "thank you" goes out to the Family Support Group of Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, for an outstanding homecoming when Co. B soldiers returned from Honduras.

The soldiers were welcomed home at the airfield with an "Engineers Red" balloon launch, welcome home signs and the music, "Proud To Be An American."

After being greeted by family members and friends, Lt. Col. Philip Jones welcomed the soldiers back.

The soldiers and their family members were then transported by bus back to the company dayroom, where a buffet of cold cuts, vegetable trays and homemade desserts were served.

An extra "thank you" to the following family members who made this the best homecoming ever: Cathy Meisner, Cathy Blackwell, Rhonda Oliver, Pamela Collier, Merri Jones, Sgt. Peter Barros, Debbie Barros, and Susan Eckhart.

507th PIR implements quality management

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Implementing Total Quality Management into the safety program at 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, has reduced injuries to soldiers according to the post Safety Officer.

Regis Beighley, post safety officer, said the number of injuries has dropped significantly since implementation of TQM.

"There was nothing wrong with the training they were giving the students," he said. "They just needed to change some things they did or add more."

Some examples Beighley gave were the usage of more coaches on the drop zone when airborne students made their jumps. He said the additional coaches reduced injuries because the coaches could tell the students what they were doing wrong in time to avoid getting hurt.

Another change made directly to the drop zone prevented a near fatal accident.

Beighley said the plowing of Fryar Drop Zone prevented a soldier who encountered a parachute malfunction from sustaining further injury during the fall.

"If the ground was harder I'm sure the soldier would have been more seriously injured," he said.

The investment of a tiller for softening sawdust has greatly reduced injuries related to training conducted prior to the actual jump.

The safety officer said that a problem with sawdust hardening on the swing landing trainer directly correlated with the number of injuries. Regular tilling of the sawdust makes the landings softer and reduces the force on impact.

"The entire chain of command at the 507th has been very instrumental in the reduction of accidents throughout the three week course," he said. "These changes weren't brought about by one person. It was a team effort."

Financial counselors meet

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military and civilian financial counselors gathered at the Columbus Trade and Convention Center July 30 through Aug. 3 for a financial counseling seminar.

The seminar was sponsored by Fort Benning Army Community Service and the Cooperative Extension Service and Consumer Credit Counseling Service.

Financial experts from across the nation addressed such topics as financial security, the role of the credit bureau, life and health insurance, budgets and debt management.

Fort Benning played host to seminar participants Aug. 1.

Activities included a lecture on legal issues, an ACS overview and a tour of the Infantry Museum.

This is the second year the seminar has been conducted in Columbus.

Last year, more than 60 participants from 19 states across the United States participated.

Company, president face charges

Army News Service

A company and its president have been charged with filing false reports, according to an announcement by a U.S. attorney.

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command Fraud Team in Huntsville, Ala., together with the Defense Criminal Investigative Service, recently completed a six-month investigation that led to a three-count indictment against the company and its president.

C & S Testing and Inspection Inc. and Harold Richard Chandler, its president, pleaded guilty to charges of providing false inspection reports to the Army Corps of Engineers, according to U.S. Attorney Frank W. Donaldson.

Army Special Agent Charles Phillips, of the Huntsville Fraud Team, investigated the case which dealt with false reports on ultrasonic testing of welding done on giant gears. The gears are part of the auxiliary lock at the Wilson Lock and Dam in Florence, Ala.

The defendants submitted false reports about inspections which were to be performed on the gears. The false reports were discovered before the gears were installed in the lock.

U.S. District Judge Sam C. Pointer Jr. ordered the corporation to pay a $5,000 fine, plus a special assessment of $600.

He placed Chandler on probation for three years, with the special condition that he perform 100 hours of community service while on probation.

In addition, he ordered that Chandler pay a special asssessment of $150 and directed the defendants not to oppose a debarment of up to three years by the U.S. Army.

A debarment would prohibit the defendants from working on or bidding for any government contract.

Bicycling

Nationally, over 1,100 accidental deaths are attributed to bicycle operation. Forty-two percent of these deaths occur in the age group below 15 years old, and 25 percent in the 25 and over category. It is a problem that spans the generations.

National Safety Council statistics show more than 41,000 personnel are injured annually in bicycle accidents, with 21,000 alone being in the 5 to 14 age group.

The operation of any vehicle has some intrinsic dangers. The goal is to minimize the hazards through proper maintenance of equipment, proper operation and appropriate education on how to do it safely.

The equipment checklist for safe operation of bicycles include:

● Headlamp — should be clean and visible at night.

● Horn — should operate properly and is loud enough to attract attention.

● Saddle and handlebars — adjusted to the correct height and angle and tightly fastened to prevent inadvertent movement.

● Reflectors — clean and visible from 300 feet away at night.

● Tires — check tire pressure and tread wear. Check for cuts or gouges. Is the tire valve straight and uncut?

● Wheels — do they roll free and evenly, without wobble or rubbing on the forks. Are the spokes broken or bent?

● Pedals — tight and not excessively worn. Are the reflectors unbroken and clearly visible?

● Chain — check for broken or damaged links or for too much play.

● Brakes — check for smooth, effective operation.

As a minimum, the following bicycle rules of the road should be observed:

● Obey all traffic regulations, signs, signals, and markings.

● Obey post rules concerning bicycles.

● Ride with traffic, not against it.

● Ride in single file only. Don't ride alongside cars and trucks.

● Ride on the right side of the road always.

● Watch for road surface hazards.

● Don't carry passengers or large packages.

● Use hand signals for turns and stops.

● Have reflectors and a bright light. At night, wear light colored clothing and a reflective vest.

Redleg platoons conduct live-fire exercise

Matt Smith

Soldiers from Btry. C, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., defend firing point from two-man firing positions.

By Troy McKeon and Matt Smith
197th Infantry Brigade

At 6 p.m., the platoons of Battery C, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, were at firing point Kilo-22 overlooking the Kilo Impact Area.

When the enemy broke through the battery's front lines and appeared in the impact area, each platoon engaged the enemy at 2,000 meters with 155-millimeter direct fire.

The engagement was a success, as the Redlegs scored six direct hits out of 18 rounds fired.

Next, the enemy dismounted their burning vehicles to continue the attack. Charlie platoon members reacted by leaving their howitzers to man dug-in positions in an attempt to hold their position.

When the Redlegs engaged the enemy with small arms fire, the enemy strategy failed as the defenders mowed them down.

The above scenario — with stationary vehicle targets and silhouettes popping up at various locations to simulate dismounted enemy movement — was the first exercise in which an artillery unit at Fort Benning has ever integrated direct live-fire artillery with live small arms fire, according to Range Control officials.

"Normally, artillery is used as an indirect weapon system. In other words, an artillery unit does not sight in on its target," said Sgt. 1st Class Henry Burns, platoon sergeant of Charlie Battery's 1st Platoon.

"In extreme cases, when the enemy is closing in on the firing battery, an artillery unit will engage the enemy through their own sights, somewhat like shooting a rifle," he said

The soldiers set up howitzers on Kilo-22 and began honing their direct fire skills. Later, they left the howitzer and moved into two-man fighting positions.

"This was an excellent opportunity for the men to see just how effectively they could defend their own positions," said Capt. William L. Carter Jr., battery commander.

"We need to do this kind of training more often," added section chief, Sgt. Lance Washington.

"Not only was this a good training exercise for Charlie Battery, but it boosted the morale of the soldiers as well," said 1st Lt. Donald Heilig, platoon leader of 1st Platoon, who originated the idea of integrating small arms fire with artillery fire.

"This training event could not have taken place without the cooperation of Range Control and the Targeting Division," said Capt. Kevin Stibich, battalion S-1. "Coupled with these post agencies, we will continue to schedule safe, realistic training for the soldiers of this battalion."

Students tackle land navigation, assault tactics

Squad leaders analyze attacks

y Newman Yang
d Battalion, 11th Infantry

Infantry Officer Basic Course udents in Company D, 2nd Battlion, 11th Infantry, spent July through August 3 in the field orking on day and night land avigation skills and squad assult tactics.

The first two days were spent Yankee Road improving indidual land navigation techques.

The lieutenants were briefed on ways to use terrain analysis and dead reckoning to reach a certain point on the practice course.

After a day of practice and training, the students were tested on land navigation skills.

Each student was given three hours to complete each phase of land navigation. Minimum requirements were six out of nine points for day land navigation and three out of five points for night land navigation.

After six hours of work and effort trudging through the thick underbrush of the land navigation course, the students proved their competence by having a very high percentage of people passing both phases to include several lieutenants attaining maximum scores of nine and five points on day and night land navigation, respectively.

After a final night at Yankee Road, students went to Pierce range to work on squad assault tactics and prepare for their first live fire exercise.

The lieutenants of fifth platoon received instruction on squad reaction to direct and indirect fires and tactical movements. After that, everyone got hands-on experience on how to set up and dig fox hole positions for M-16s, M-60s, and Dragon weapon systems.

After eating dinner in the rain, students moved to the assault course to conduct a dry run at Pierce Range.

"The dry run was made even more difficult as a result of the rain showers just minutes before," said Capt. Mark Vaughn, principal instructor. "Puddles of water and sandy grit added to an already difficult course."

Upon completion of the practice run, the lieutenants retired for the evening in anticipation of an exciting day of live fire exercise and tactics the following day, he said.

After preparations for combat, the squads crossed the line of departure. "All squads performed remarkably well despite running the course in the blistering afternoon heat," Vaughn added.

The members of Co. D, 2nd Bn, 11th Inf., learned how difficult an assault on the enemy could really be.

"We jumped over walls, maneuvered through entrenchments," Capt. Ronnie McMillan, 4th platoon trainer said. "It proved very demanding on the lieutenants," he said.

The high crawl, low crawl, and three to five second rushes physically drained the hard charging lieutenants, McMillan added.

During after action reviews, each of the squad leaders analyzed their attacks and recommended ways to improve their techniques as leaders and showed how difficult it was to maintain control and communications of the unit in such a fast paced and dirty battlefield.

After a brief rest following the assault course, the soldiers marched back to IOBC headquarters to clean weapons and take advantage of a well-earned weekend.

Benning students start school Aug. 28

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools begin the 1990-91 school year Aug. 28. It's time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade — to register.

This year, registration will be conducted during two weeks in August in all eight post schools. Rather than have parents come on one or two specific days, parents are asked to choose the date and time that best fits their needs.

Past practice indicates that there are large crowds on the first couple of days of the registration process. Parents who wish to avoid a long wait should consider this when choosing a registration time.

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the students' age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

● Parents of students who attended Fort Benning Schools in May of 1990 should complete and sign registration forms — nothing needs to be brought to the school.

REGISTRATION DATES

Aug. 6 - 10
Aug. 13 - 17

REGISTRATION TIMES

8:30 - 11:30 a.m.
1 - 3 p.m.

new to the Fort Benning School System should bring last year's report card or grade placement record and an immunization certificate.

● Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

● A student must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools.

School assignments are subject to change by school board action if increased enrollments in certain schools or grade levels make these changes necessary.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9 through 12) who did not attend a public school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1990-91 school year, should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue in Columbus to pre-register.

High school students who attended a local public high school during the 1989-90 school year and students who are new to Fort Benning but have already obtained their school assignment from Columbus Roberts Center and pre-registered during the summer must report to their school of assignment on Aug. 21 between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

At this time registration will be confirmed, class schedules and school bus pass obtained and any other required processing will be completed.

All high school students must present evidence of immunization. School will begin in Muscogee County on Aug. 27.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, call 545-2500.

Safety tips help parents, children prepare for school

American Forces Information Service

Summer vacation is over, and school-bound children everywhere are trading their swimsuits and skateboards for notebooks and pencils. But children and their parents often may overlook one key item on the list of things to consider in preparing for school — safety.

Seth Maher, chief of the DoD Dependents Schools' Logistics Division, and the National Safety Council have some tips for both parents and children:

Parents

● If your elementary-age children are going to walk to school or hike a long distance to the bus stop, go over the safest route with them before school starts. Remember, the safest route isn't always the shortest. Children shouldn't go through alleys or wooded areas.

● Put reflective tape on your child's backpack or jacket.

● Obey signs that say where to unload passengers. Follow signs for pickup and dropoff zones, especially during bad weather when drivers' visibility may become lessened.

Children

● Wear bright colors, especially on cloudy days.

● Be extra careful boarding the school bus. If you're in a foreign country, remember that some don't have laws that require drivers to stop when a school bus stops.

● Never walk behind or to the side of a school bus — the driver won't be able to see you. Maher said kindergartners and first graders are at the greatest risk of being injured by the school bus in this way. If you must cross in front of a bus, get at least four or five feet in front of it.

● Where there are no sidewalks, walk facing traffic.

● Try to wak with a group of friends so you can be seen more easily by drivers. Also, a group of children is less likely to be harmed by strangers than a child walking alone would be.

● Cross only at intersections. Don't dart from between parked cars.

● The safest route for bicycling will probably be different from the best walking route. Cyclists should try to avoid busy streets and use bike paths if available. Ride with, not against, traffic. Ride single file.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. While stationed in the Republic of Korea, I bought a hand-knotted Oriental rug. In early April, my son spilled soda on it. I took the rug to a carpet cleaner that same day to have the stain removed.

The shop owner told me that, because the rug was of such exceptionally fine quality, the cleaning charge would be a little higher than the usual charge. I agreed to pay the higher price.

He called on April 10 and told me that the rug was ready to be picked up. Unfortunately, I didn't have the money to pay the bill right then. I told the shop owner that I would pay him as soon as I could. He said that he was going to hold the rug until I paid the money.

Financially, things just got worse. I couldn't scrape up the money for the cleaning bill. Suddenly, on July 10, I got a certified letter from the shop owner saying that if I didn't pay the bill within 10 days, that he was going to sell my rug.

I couldn't reach him by phone before I had to go the field for a week. He sold the rug on July 20 and offered to pay me what was left over after his charge for cleaning was subtracted. Can he do that?

A. The law of Georgia provides that any person, firm or corporation that launders or cleans clothing, goods, rugs, or other articles has a lien on the items laundered or cleaned for the agreed price or the reasonable value of their services. The shop owner has the right to keep the laundered items until you pay the cleaning charge.

If the shop owner had decided to give you the rug before you had paid him, the lien for the cleaning charge would attach to any of your other items that may later come into the shop owner's possession.

If the items have been in the shop owner's possession for 90 days after the cleaning has been done without the charges being paid, he has the right to sell the items.

However, before the items can be sold, he must send notice by mail to the last known address of the owner of the items to inform the owner that the items will be sold in 10 days if the charge remains unpaid.

The notice must give the name of the owner of the items, if known, a description of the items, the time and place of the sale, the amount of the charges for which the items will be sold, and the name of the person, firm or corporation proposing to make the sale.

The proceeds from the sale are first used to satisfy the outstanding cleaning bill and the remainder of the proceeds will be paid to the owner when he demands the money from the cleaner.

According to your facts, the shop owner met the requirements of the Georgia law.

If you wish to discuss your case in more detail, you should make an appointment to speak with a Legal Assistance Attorney by calling 545-3281/3282.

Bring the notice and any other paperwork that you have with you.

MARTIN CARE

Rabies is a killer that is justifiably feared; it brings to mind images of an uncontrollable, slobbering mad dog.

This deadly disease still exists, mostly in wild animals, and occasionally poses a threat to humans despite rigid controls and vaccinations.

Each year, there are one to three cases of human rabies. Rabies is preventable. However, once clinical signs appear, it is generally considered 100 percent fatal.

This is obviously a disease to be taken seriously.

A soldier was recently bitten by a rabies positive dog in Taylor County, about 40 miles east of Columbus.

Most people are familiar with some of the signs of rabid animals such as unusually aggressive behavior, biting, and heavy salivation (frothing at the mouth).

However, they may not know that, on a military installation, all bites and scratches are considered potential health risks and should be treated as such.

Although most vaccinated dogs and cats do not carry rabies, it is still a potential threat.

Dogs and cats account for 90 percent of all reported bites to humans but are only seven to nine percent of all rabid animals reported nationally.

It is interesting that during the past several years, the number of positive rabies cases in cats has exceeded that in dogs in the United States.

Anyone bitten or scratched should report immediately to the Emergency Room to have the wound treated.

This treatment consists of deep flushing and soaking of the wound in a viricidal solution. If there is reason to believe there is danger of contracting rabies, the patient is given rabies prevention, consisting of an antiserum to provide quick protection and a series of five shots of rabies vaccine given over a 28 day period.

The old regimen of 21 injections given in the abdomen is no longer necessary.

A very important factor in deciding treatment needs is availability of the animal for quarantine or testing.

Bite incidents should be reported to the Military Police so a search for the animal can be initiated, if necessary.

Be prepared to give a description of the animal and the location of the attack.

Dogs and cats are quarantined for 10 days. If the animal is healthy after that time, rabies can be ruled out. Since quarantine is not feasible for wild animals, rabies detection is based on laboratory testing.

Early signs of rabies in animals are changes in behavior, which resemble other disorders, such as digestive problems, a foreign body in the throat, poisoning, or early infectious disease.

Animals usually stop eating and drinking, seek solitude and urinate excessively due to irritation of the urinary tract.

After one to two days, advanced signs develop, including paralysis and heavy salivation caused by inability to swallow caused by throat and jaw paralysis.

Animals usually die shortly after this occurs. The furious form of rabies, the "Mad Dog Syndrome," is most well known. These animals are viciously aggressive and will attack without provocation.

In this area, the greatest threat of rabies is from raccoon, skunks, foxes and bats.

A total of 181 cases of raccoon rabies were reported in Georgia.

If you see an animal behaving in a way that causes suspicion, do not approach it. Call the police.

Parents should instruct children to let them know if they see even a familiar animal behaving strangely.

If bitten or scratched, have the injury evaluated at the Emergency Room. Do not attempt to handle any wild animal; notify the police. They are equipped to handle this.

Have your dogs and cats vaccinated for rabies beginning at three months of age, followed yearly (or every three years, depending on the vaccine) booster shots.

If you have any questions about rabies or vaccinations, call the Veterinary Services at 545-1127/4444 between 8 a.m. and noon and 1 to 4 p.m.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

A form of energy that is taken for granted is gasoline. Although, at this time, gasoline appears plentiful at the pumps, oil is a nonrenewable resource. The largest percentage of oil used in the United States is imported, and reserves are being depleted at a faster rate than they are being discovered. Most Americans have become accustomed to lifestyles that leave them very dependent on petroleum products.

The largest reserve of petroleum are located in the Middle East and the Soviet Union. In order for the United States to become more energy independent, alternate forms of energy must be developed.

Decreasing dependency needs to begin with modifications of lifestyles and can be as simple as walking to a destination instead of driving. Eliminating unnecessary trips and consolidating errands can also save gas. Carpools can be major energy savers, since about a third of private automobile mileage is used in commuting to and from work.

Keeping cars tuned up can save up to 10 percent of gas consumption. Letting cars idle uses more gas than it takes to restart the vehicle, so avoid this whenever possible. Driving at the appropriate speed for maximum fuel economy conserves gas also. On the highway, an average car gets 21 percent more miles per gallon at 55 miles per hour than at 70 miles per hour.

Commanders and supervisors should stress speed limits set for government vehicles. Attention to proper maintenance and tire inflation is also instrumental in conserving fuel. Other areas where conservation could be improved is walking to training areas whenever possible, using buses rather than several smaller vehicles to transport troops. Utilizing training areas closer to the unit can also eliminate vehicle use.

It is necessary to do as much as possible to decrease oil consumption and along with it, dependence on oil. Because of the world's political climate, economic uncertainty and the limited supply of oil in reserves, blind dependence on oil is risky at best.

Making small changes in habits and lifestyles now will be much easier than being forced to change in drastic ways later. Questions about this or any energy-related subject should be directed to the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Motto of Family Members with Special Needs Program.

Army Community Service is helping handicapped adults and children make their dreams become reality.

ACS's Family Members with Special Needs Program helps military family members who have special needs develop educationally and socially. Also, the program gives the whole family the support they need. One of the ways the program achieves this is through its annual summer camp.

One hundred and two family members, with handicaps ranging from speech impairments to cerebral palsy, participated in this year's camp.

According to Marcia O'Connor, FMSNP coordinator, the camp, which began July 2 and ends today, consisted of three, two-week sessions.

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center served as the primary camp facility where the family members worked on arts and crafts activities, daily living skills, educational and cultural programs and gross and fine motor activities. Swimming took place at the Youth Services' pool.

Recently, the camp participants took a trip to the Tumbling Bears gymnastic center in Columbus. The Tumbling Bears staff and gymnasts put on a demonstration and then set up an obstacle course for camp participants.

While the Exceptional Family Member program is the Army's way of identifying family members with special needs and ensuring that proper care is available at posts, FMSNP deals with the community side by giving families support and referring them to community agencies designed to help the special family member.

The program handles family members with medical, emotional, physical or psychological disabilities. Some of the family members have hearing or speech impairments; some have learning disabilities. Others are more severely handicapped with mental impairments, muscular dystrophy or cerebral palsy.

"We deal with a whole spectrum of handicaps," said Lydia Brunk, program recreation specialist.

The program is not only for the family member with special needs, but also for the siblings. Brunk said that taking care of a handicapped child is a full-time job. Having the siblings attend the summer camp gives parents a chance to rest.

"The program also gives the Travel underwater at Florida's Sea World

Sea World Inc.

Guests at Sea World of Florida's Shamu Stadium soar above Alaskan glaciers, then plunge to the chilly depths of the killer whales' home in a once-in-a-lifetime adventure titled "Shamu: New Visions," narrated by James Earl Jones.

The journey is made possible by a huge, waterproof video screen (measuring 15 by 20 feet), the first of its kind in the United States. Through underwater cameras and video technology, visitors come closer than ever before to the majestic animals — and closer to understanding their mystique.

Ancient legends preserved by Northwest Indian tribes tell the on-screen story of man's fascination with the black-and-white creatures. Graceful ballets, juxtaposed with thrilling aquatic teamwork between man and animal, demonstrate a growing pool of knowledge about the whales' complex behavior and personalities.

Four live cameras follow the action. Close-ups of audience participation bring the delight of touching a killer whale to every person in the 5,000-seat stadium.

Guests feel the tremendous adrenaline rush a trainer experiences as an 8,000-pound whale swims at full-speed toward the underwater camera.

They gasp as whale and trainer break the surface together, then dive separately to the depths below. And, they share the wonder of the child chosen to sit on Shamu's back as a "little" smile fills the center stage screen.

Even the killer whales find the addition to their five million-gallon habitat entertaining.

"We've seen them looking up at the images during rehearsals," said Chuck Tompkins, assistant curator of animal training. "At one point during the show, they actually take their cues from the screen rather than from us," he added.

The larger-than-life screen offers viewers an up-close perspective of live action, but also goes behind-the-scenes with taped segments highlighting Sea World's animal care program and training techniques.

These include monitoring the health of an expectant killer whale, creating the inland sea that is the Shamu family's home, and the training process to become a Sea World animal behaviorist.

Tracie Ruiz Conforto, 1984 Olympic Gold Medalist in synchronized swimming, makes an on-screen guest appearance, recognizing the world-class athletic abilities of the Sea World trainers.

At one point the audience is treated to an exhilarating high speed swim with the whales, thanks to a special camera worn by a trainer. Fortunately, they're spared the 50-degree water!

But some are not. Despite several warnings, children who visit Sea World hoping to be splashed by Shamu refuse to budge from their front and center seats. And, they're not disappointed. Eight thousand pounds of whale move a tidal wave of water over the pool's edge.

Staging "Shamu: New Visions" required expanding the technical staff from one to five persons per performance.

A sound booth high above the audience was enlarged to twice its original size and houses a technical director who oversees audio and video operators. Two staffers operate video cameras, and two underwater cameras function by remote control.

In the control room, 14 monitors keep track of video tapes, laser discs, freeze framing capabilities, photo printing operations, graphics and camera angles.

On the audio side, 10 cartridge players work in concert with a state-of-the-art mixing board.

During performances, the director studies which shots he will take next and covers the action with appropriate music, much the same as a sporting event or live television show.

"It's an ambitious undertaking," admited Art Freeman, vice president of entertainment, "but we feel 'Shamu: New Visions' brings a perspective of Sea World and the whales to our guests that they're never had before."

Perhaps, these new visions will nurture an obligation to protect the aquatic environment on which all life forms ultimately depend.

Sea World of Florida is owned and operated by the Busch Entertainment Corporation, the family entertainment subsidiary of Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc.

Busch Entertainment also owns and operates the Busch Gardens theme parks in Tampa, Fla., and Williamsburg, Va.; Sesame Place in Langhorne, Pa.; Adventure Island in Tampa; the Sea World parks in San Antonio, Texas; Aurora, Ohio; and San Diego, Calif.; and Cypress Gardens in Winter Haven, Fla.

siblings a chance to learn more about their handicapped brother or sister, and learn to accept them for their accomplishments instead of their disabilities," Brunk said.

According to Staff Sgt. Julie Clemens, the program helps teach the family members how to interact and accept those whose handicaps are different from theirs.

"Once the children learn about everyone's different disabilities, they learn to accept it and how to help each other. It teaches the children to accept others for the way they are," Clemens said.

Staff members of the program include a recreation specialist, ACS volunteers, soldiers on special duty, parents and summer hires.

The motto, said Brunk, reflects what the program staff tries to teach the family members.

"We tell them never to limit themselves or let anyone else limit them. They have to set goals and never quit reaching for them," Brunk said.

"They have to look within themselves to achieve. They can't depend on the world around them to do it for them.

"If they work with their potential, they've got a future," she said.

Post soldier runs closer to his dream of winning gold

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When a Fort Benning runner learned the Goodwill Games would be held in Seattle, Wash., he said he had to compete.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier Lloyd McDonald's dream is to be a member of the 1992 U.S. Olympic Team.

According to McDonald, the only way he can obtain his goal is by competing with the best in the world.

So that's what he did.

McDonald ran in the Goodwill Games marathon, the only event open to the public.

In a field of 4,000 runners, he finished 34th with a time of 2:39:31.

Although he didn't come back with a medal, he sports a coin applauding him for competing.

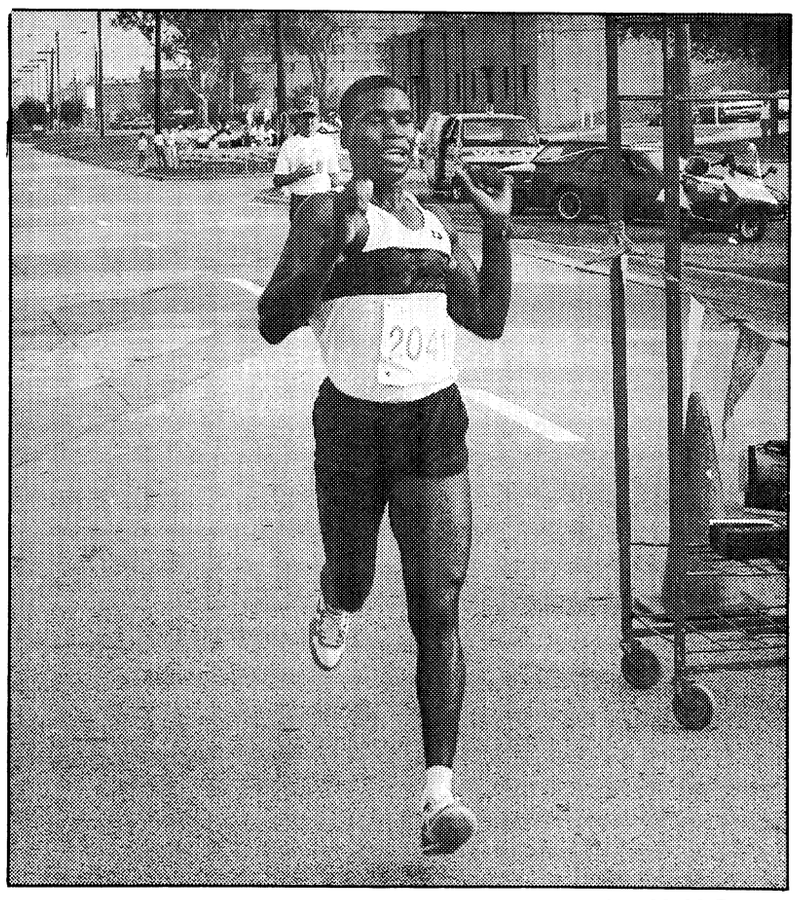
"The race was run magnificently from start to finish," McDonald said. "However, I didn't do as well as I'd hoped."

He explained that just over the 20-mile mark, he began to falter.

"Until I hit that point, I was doing everything just as my coach and I planned," he said. "I'm not sure what happened, but I won't let that stop me from trying to achieve my goal."

His next big race is the USA National Championships in Parkersburg, W. Va. on Aug. 18.

"If I run a 1:10 half-marathon, I can qualify for the Olympics," McDonald said.



Ann M. McDonald

Lloyd McDonald demonstrates his winning form in the Celebrate Columbus 10K race.

After that he said he will be gearing up for the Army 10-miler.

"The Fort Benning women's team is the defending team champion," he said. "The men are going to have to work hard, but there's enough talent here to assemble a good team."

McDonald said the 10-miler is one of his favorite races.

"You are going head to head with some of the best runners in the Army," he said.

Bass Club co-sponsors outing for underprivileged children

Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club, in conjunction with the South Columbus Exchange Club, sponsored a day of fishing and water education for underprivileged children Aug. 4 at Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

The program was provided for underprivileged youths in the Columbus-Fort Benning area including children from single-parent families, youths who are assigned to the Juvenile Detention Center in Columbus and children from families that can't afford to provide basic, necessary supervised recreation.

The club adopted the event to steer less fortunate children away from the streets and drugs and into a more healthy recreational outlet, according to Jackie Marsh, club member.

Boats and operators were provided to take the youths out in groups of 10 or less. They were able to fish for panfish and game fish for about two hours.

While one group was on the water, another group stayed on shore going through different stations set up and manned by Bass Club members.

Club members provided education on subjects such as water and boating safety rules and regulations, different types of fishing gear, and hands-on instructions about various knots used in fishing lines.

"We feel that this was a worthwhile endeavor," Marsh said. "If we were able to reach just one child and steer him or her from drugs and a life on the streets, then our efforts were not in vain.

"The children seemed to have enjoyed themselves immensely," Marsh continued. "Some of them had never been in a boat nor gone fishing. We hope to be able to do this again in the near future."

The club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of the organization should contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Ben McGuire at 568-0699.

Prospective members are invited to attend one of the club's meetings held the second and fourth Tuesday each month in building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

Infantry beat Redlegs at their own game

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

In their last outing on the greens, the Redlegs of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, nipped the duffers of both 1st Battalion and 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, in the 18th's own Patriot Open.

Three weeks later, the Vanguards of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. turned the tables when they edged the Redlegs in their own tournament, the Redleg Open.

Willie B. Thames, James L. Sparkes Jr., Kent E. Kingsley and Joe Funderburk won the right to display the Redleg Open revolving trophy in battalion headquarters when they shot a 62 in the 18-hole tournament.

Finishing in second place, second flight were David Bolding, Allen Edwards, Lee Enloe and John Thyng.

Richard Sanchez, Tom Malone, Rickey Mathis and Claudy Moore finished third.

William Deavor, Frank Jones, Charles Ziegler and William Catron rounded out the second flight slate with a fourth-place finish.

The tournament format was four-ball scramble, which allowed each team to play the best of four shots from the tee box to the green.

In the first flight — for the players with the lower handicaps — Theodore W. Reid, Archibald Arnold, Bob Letourneau and Rodger Hewitt picked up individual trophies for their first-place team finish.

Placing second were Wesley Vaughn, Mark Mann, Bob Bailey and Jack Nelson.

The team of Tony and Stacy Bennett, Dick Meriaux and Howard Elliott finished third, followed by the fourth-place team of Eric Larson, Tom Smith, Sean Edwards and Deac Heiling.

"The greens were excellent," said Archibald Arnold. "They were a little long and somewhat tricky for most of the golfers today, but considering the amount of practice time the 197th Brigade is able to get in because of deployments, I think we did quite well."

"I'm very pleased to see the tradition that I started back in 1985 growing stronger every year, with more golfers entering the tournament and with the addition of female players, said tournament founder Bobby Rich.

Rich commanded 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 4-41's old unit designation.

Results from test show bass adequate

Results from seine samples obtained by the Fish and Wildlife Branch during mid-July indicate that King's Pond presently holds adequate numbers of bass and bream.

The "No Bass Fishing" signs have been removed and bass fishermen may begin to remove bass from the pond according to the limits set forth in the installation's hunting and fishing regulation.

The limit for bass is 10 per day, 12 inches or above.

Averett's Pond was drained and restocked with channel catfish, bass and bream during 1988-1989.

A seine sample conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Branch indicates the pond is ready to be fished in. The pond will be open for fishing when possible. Check the hunter access boards for daily fishing opportunities.

Also, Weems Pond is closed for herbicide applications until further notice.

SPIRITUAL

Chaplain explains Assumption of Mary

By Orlando R. Fuller
197th Support Battalion Chaplain

According to the scriptures, nothing is impossible with God. Hence, God could make the assumption of Mary happen. But, what does that mean and what significance does it have in one's spiritual life?

Pope Pius XII declared the assumption as a divinely revealed dogma in his Apostolic Constitution Munificentissimus Deus (Nov. 1, 1950). The definition precisely states that "after her life on earth, Mary was raised body and soul into heaven."

The phrase "after her life on earth" needs some explanation.

It simply means the completion of her existence on earth. It doesn't necessarily mean her death. Whether she died or not before the assumption was then, and still is, an unresolved controversy based on the issue of her immaculate conception.

Nothing is said about the time and the manner of the assumption. Tradition, however, says that Mary was assumed 15 years after the Ascension of Christ.

She was assumed into heaven with that same body that gave birth to Jesus; but, that body is now a glorified body, for example, resplendent in glory like her son's.

Her existence in heaven is unique and different from the other saints' in that both her body and soul are there. She now reigns as queen, at the right hand of her son.

A dogma is presented by the Catholic Church to the faithful not only as something to be believed or to be held as true (orthodoxy) but also as something to be practiced or applied in one's spiritual life (orthopraxy).

Mary's bodily assumption teaches the faithful how rewarding it is to make sacrifices, particularly the surrender of our bodily pleasures that run contrary to God's will; the eternal reward is worth the temporal price we have to pay in self-control.

The assumption is a tangible proof of such. Indeed, the assumption is a call to penance.

Mary's bodily assumption also gives us hope that one day we will gloriously rise from the grave.

It teaches us that we are destined for glory not only in the spiritual but material realm as well. Political theologians call this "total salvation," for instance, salvation of both body and soul.

Learning English helps families adjust to life in United States

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A friendly smile, a caring glance and a moment of patience are some of the important prerequisites for volunteer English teachers at the Religious Education Center.

This is the 21st year of the class designed for those for whom English is a second language.

The class is a rich blend of culture, customs and language, yet studies are bonded by circumstance and a desire to learn.

This helps the students make the most of their stay in the United States — whether it's for a few months or for a lifetime.

Students in the class come from Korea, Panama, Central and South America, Mexico, Germany and hosts of other nations. They explore the English language and the American way of life, from traditions and history to everyday colloquialisms.

"Each student receives a workbook appropriate to his level and is encouraged to study between classes at home," said Bill Putnam, director of Protestant Religious Education.

Groups average about five students each, but when more teachers are available, it is not unusual to see individual instruction.

Volunteer teachers don't need an English or teaching degree or experience. It is not necessary to speak another language fluently.

The program is designed to accommodate any level of need, as well as teaching ability.

"I really enjoy teaching. I remember how hard it was for me when I first came to the United States," said Frances Bergschneider, a volunteer originally from Mexico.

Bergschneider explained how the weekly class seems to enhance the lives of the students. It helps them accept their surroundings better and develop more self confidence, she said.

These abilities can help their military spouses to concentrate more on their jobs and less on the vulnerability of their families.

Two decades of special interest in those for whom English is a second language has blended cultures and communicated the international language of caring.

Catholics encouraged to attend religious classes

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Catholic religious education classes, Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, is being offered for children 3-years-old through high school and adults.

The classes begin Sept. 9. and are from 10 to 11 a.m. at Dexter Elementary School.

Registration for CCD may be done at Main Post Catholic Chapel after Masses during August.

Also, an inquiry class for those interested in learning more about the Catholic church begins Sept. 12 at 7 p.m., in the Religious Education Center.

This class, the Rite of Catholic Initiation for Adults, is open to everyone. It is especially intended to help non-Catholics who wish to become Catholic or are just curious about the Catholic faith.

Catholics who wish to more fully understand their own practices are also encouraged to attend and sponsor candidates.

For more information, contact Phil Reilly, at 545-2771 or 545-5508.

Little Rock Bible study begins soon

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A Bible study program, designed to help those who want to make a real connection between their faith and everyday living, is being offered through the Catholic Religious Education Program.

The Little Rock Scripture Study is a structured, in-depth look at the Bible through study and discussion.

Students and facilitators are needed now to begin the studies in September.

Phil Reilly, director of Catholic Religious Education, said the study helps people understand and apply God's word to their daily life.

The Little Rock program is comprised of four essential elements:

- Study — Each day students read and reflect on a Bible text. A commentary aids their understanding. A study guide will lead reflection time.
- Sharing — Students discuss the results of study and reflection at weekly small-group meetings with the assistance of a trained leader.
- Lectures — At the conclusion of each small-group meeting, there is a lecture intended to develop and clarify the lesson's theme.
- Prayer — Students find guidance, strength, and spiritual support in personal and shared prayer.

The Little Rock program is highly recommended," said Reilly. "It can help people find the meanings the Bible holds for them today, and also can help them to become more comfortable in discussing the Bible."

Among the many scholars and clergy who recommend the study is Archbishop Roger Mahony of Los Angeles.

He recommended Little Rock enthusiastically and said the beauty of the program is that the study materials and manual are so thorough that anyone can lead a scripture study group.

The study uses the dynamics of combining scripture study with prayer to bridge the gap of ordinary faith and Christian action that can hopefully transform believers into "doers of the word."

Anyone who is interested in learning more about this program should contact Phil Reilly at 545-2771 or 545-5508.

The first session will be a 7 p.m. Sept. 27 at the Religious Education Center.

Meals, Ready to Eat sold at commissary

Troop Support Agency

The field MRE — the packaged Meal, Ready to Eat — is sometimes on sale in your U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissary.

That's right, to satisfy those who love Army field exercise picnics, the commissary will sell that nutritious food in the plain brown plastic bag when available or when requested.

Field soldiers know MREs as the meal they love to make fun of. And yet, the ubiquitous MRE has developed a popular following.

Surprised? The MRE package holds a complete meal and more, and the eats are really good.

MREs are available in 12 different menu packages: ham, turkey, beef — slices or barbecued, chicken and so on. Some fruit items are dehydrated. Each package includes the main course, a dessert, crackers and a spread, beverage powder and an accessory packet with condiments, chewing gum, matches and toilet paper.

Their popularity makes a market. Commissary managers take requests, usually from persons who want the MREs for hunting, fishing or camping trips. Families have been known to have them in the pantry for use during emergencies.

Commissaries do not normally stock MREs.

The MRE is a single meal food package nutritionally designed to provide high calorie and full vitamin needs to soldiers in high stress environments.

Each meal has about 1,300 calories, with 50 grams of protein and 160 grams of carbohydrates, and with 36 percent of the total calories from fat.

If you eat everything, you take in all the above and about 120 milligrams of cholesterol and 1,815 milligrams of sodium.

Clearly, MREs are not for those on a weight loss or low salt diet.

One soldier said, "I'm in the field so much that I don't go camping for fun. Maybe it's all a plot to let the free market declare what is, after all, the favorite MRE."

"Most of the time, you got handed your MRE for your next meal in the field. You didn't choose it. You took a package and found out what it was. Maybe it was your favorite, maybe not," he said.

MREs are bought and stored by the installation Troop Issue Subsistence Activity. The commissary manager asks the Troop Issue Subsistence Officer for the requested cases.

So the next time you plan to go camping or hiking, stop by the commissary and pick up the lightweight MRE.

The commissary donated two all-terrain bicycles, and WCGQ-FM donated a free weekend at the Marriott in Atlanta.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. While on active duty, my military pay was reduced by $100 a month for 12 months for use under the Montgomery GI Bill. May I withdraw these funds if I elect not to participate in the program?

A. No. Unlike the earlier Veterans Education Assistance Program, money paid toward entitlement under the Montgomery GI Bill is not refundable.

Q. Are the proceeds from National Service Life Insurance considered as income for a VA Improved Pension?

A. Yes. Under the current pension program, proceeds are considered as income.

Q. I was granted a waiver on a VA home loan default. How is my entitlement affected?

A. The portion of entitlement that was used to obtain the loan cannot be restored until the indebtedness is paid in full.

Q. Will my VA insurance dividends be affected if I get a loan on the policy?

A. No. Earned dividends are not affected by a loan on the policy. However, you may use your dividends to reduce the balance of your loan. For more information on this and other dividend options, call 1-800-422-8079.

Q. Can I use my VA-guaranteed home loan to buy land I plan to build a house on in the future?

A. A VA-guaranteed loan cannot be used to buy undeveloped land unless it is part of a package that includes the building of your home.

Q. How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in VA claims matters last?

A. A power of attorney does not expire. It must be revoked or cancelled. The Department of Veterans Affairs treats designation of a new power of attorney as an automatic cancellation of an earlier one. You may cancel a power of attorney at any time by notifying VA.

Q. Is there a toll-free number for the Department of Veterans Affairs Insurance Center?

A. Yes. You can call the VA Insurance Service at 1-800-422-8079 if you have questions or need any service performed on your VA insurance policy.

Q. Are common-law marriages recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs?

A. Yes, if the relationship was established in a state that recognizes common-law marriages.

Q. Can I get a release of liability from the VA if a non-veteran assumes my VA-guaranteed home loan?

A. If the buyer meets with Department of Veterans Affairs approval, you may be released from liability.

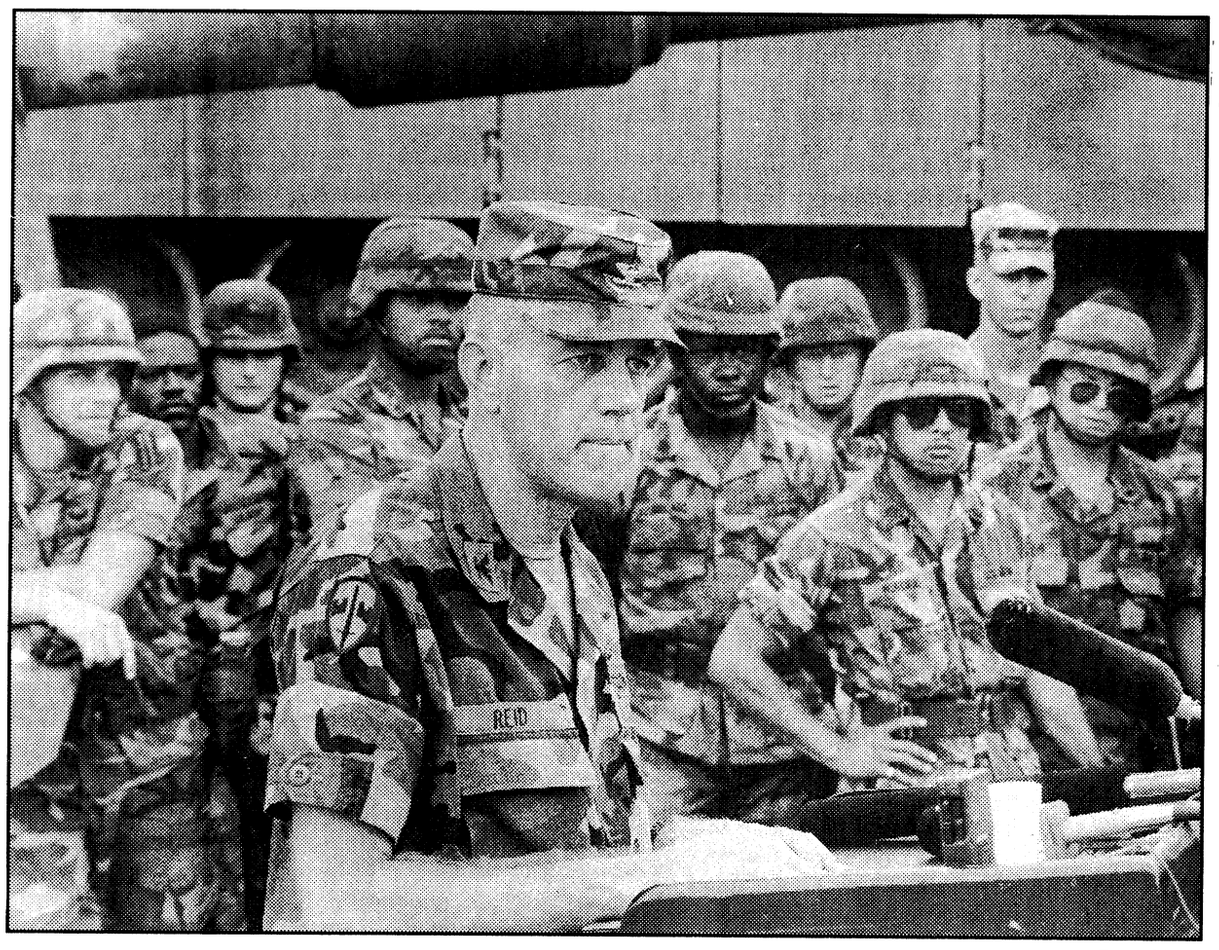
197th to go to Middle East

Soldiers ready for task at hand

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Ron Allen

197th Inf. Bde. Commander Col. Ted Reid addresses media at press conference.

The 197th Infantry Brigade has been ordered to Southwest Asia to take part in operation "Desert Shield," post officials announced Thursday.

"The 197th Infantry Brigade is the largest mechanized Infantry brigade in the Army," said Col. Ted Reid, the 197th commander. "While in Southwest Asia, we will work with the armed forces of Saudi Arabia and other nations to preserve the integrity of Saudi Arabia and deter further Iraqi aggression."

"When we arrive we will immediately begin training exercises," he said. "I would like to assure everyone that the soldiers of the 'Sledgehammer Brigade' are prepared for the task at hand."

Reid said that basically the entire brigade was going, but that he could not discuss the exact time the unit was leaving, other units deploying or the number of troops involved.

"Through our presence, as well as through training and exercises, our multinational forces will enhance the overall capability of the Saudi Armed Forces to defend their kingdom," Reid said.

"Our soldiers are well trained and motivated," he said. "Despite rumors to the contrary, only two soldiers have gone AWOL since we were alerted for this move, and one of those was only gone long enough to get married. Many have extended their enlistment or have reenlisted to go with the brigade on this operation."

"Our units have been to the National Training Center three times, and they were last there in March and are acclimatized to hot weather," he said. "Also, they are well trained in chemical protection and have received refresher training in that area as well as all new chemical protection supplies."

Each soldier will initially have two complete chemical protection suits and antidote kits, which can be resupplied if the need arises, Reid said.

"I'm extremely proud of all the hard work the soldiers have done this past week," he said. "In addition, our family support groups have been at work with various agencies on post to see that all our family members are taken care of.

"Any combat unit's effectiveness is a reflection of the training and discipline of the soldiers and the support of their families," Reid said.

"Our soldiers can be assured their family members will be well looked after at Fort Benning and in the civilian communities, Reid said. "Family members can be assured that the soldiers of the Sledgehammer Brigade are prepared."

Soldiers' mission to deter further Iraqi aggression

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

The mission of U.S. soldiers in Operation Desert Shield in the Middle East is to work together with those of Saudi Arabia and other nations to preserve the integrity of Saudi Arabia and deter further Iraqi aggression, President Bush said in a news conference Aug. 8.

"Through their presence as well as through training and exercises, these multinational forces will enhance the overall capability of Saudi Armed Forces," Bush said.

Commander of U.S. forces in Saudi Arabia, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander-in-chief, U.S. Central Command, added that "once we are in position to deter, we will immediately begin training and exercises.

Fort Benning's 197th Infantry Brigade is the latest to join the list of Army units to deploy to the Middle East. The Division Ready Brigade of the 82nd Airborne Division has deployed, and eight ships of the Joint Task Force Middle East are in the Persian Gulf.

Patriot surface-to-air missile units from the 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade headed for Saudi Arabia Sunday.

Other Army units already deployed include elements of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Stewart, Ga., and the 101st Infantry Division (Air Assault) at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Cavalry veterans gather for reunion

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

More than 1,500 cavalry veterans from World Wars I, II, Korea and Vietnam gathered at the Columbus Ironworks Trade and Convention Center August 8 through 12 for the 43rd Reunion of 1st Cavalry Association.

Yellow and black, the traditional colors of the cavalry, could be seen in all forms of paraphernalia as reunion attendees toured various places both on Fort Benning and in Columbus.

Most attendees sported the traditional cavalry symbol in some form of attire.

According to Charles Butler, a member of Companies A and B, 8th Engineer Battalion, 1st Calvary Division in Hokkaido and Honshu Japan, there is a legend behind the patch.

"The division commander's wife designed it," he said. "She said she wanted it big enough to be seen across the parade field."

She got her wish and the tradition stands.

According to Butler, the yellow shield was the color designated for the cavalry and the horse head represents mounted infantry. The black bar represents a bedroll used by mounted soldiers.

"Soldiers used to do all kinds of things to modify the patch," Butler said. "They would make reins with string so that people would not mistake the horse for a dog."

There would be no mistake on the horsepower within the units these days. The 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood, Texas, is comprised of the M-1 Abrams, the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the Apache Helicopter.

The cavalry has come a long way.

Retired Maj. Gen. John J. Tolson, III, a former commander of the 1st Cavalry Division recalled that during its earliest days, the cavalry was on horseback and then basically was changed into an Infantry division, air mobile and now it's present state armor.

"It's quite a contrast," he said, "between its beginning and today. There is still the strong sense of camaraderie."

The camaraderie is what drew many of the attendees to Columbus said one reunion goer.

"This is the only time I get to see some of these people, and it really is nice to see them," he said.

Butler said that one man has attended the reunion 41 out of the 43 years it has been conducted. The person who came the farthest to attend hailed from Oregon. He traveled to Columbus to spend some time with others who have experienced the black and gold patch of the cavalry.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What are your thoughts about sending U.S. troops to the Middle East.

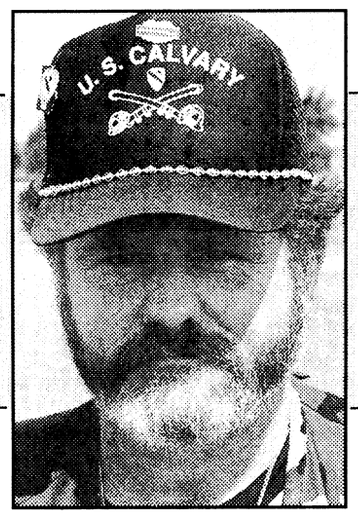
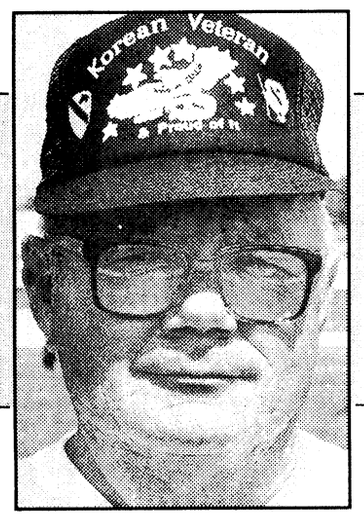
Ronald H. Benton, Co. D, 2nd Bn., Recon., 7th Cav., 1965-66 — "I consider it to be absolutely necessary. However, I hope we don't go and screw around like we did in Vietnam. I fought there, and I saw some young men killed unnecessarily."

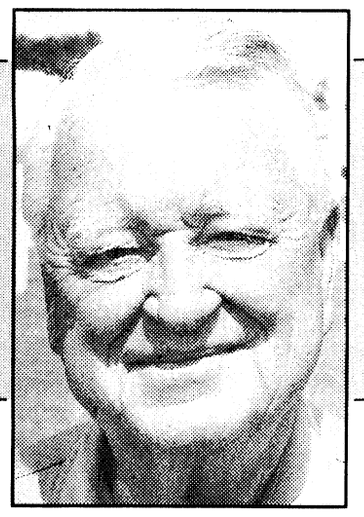


Douglas Lee Hall, Co. C, 1st Bn., 5th Cav., 1965-66 — "What it boils down to is the United States has to fulfill a verbal obligation. We said we'd support them. Now that it has happened, we have to keep our end of the bargain."

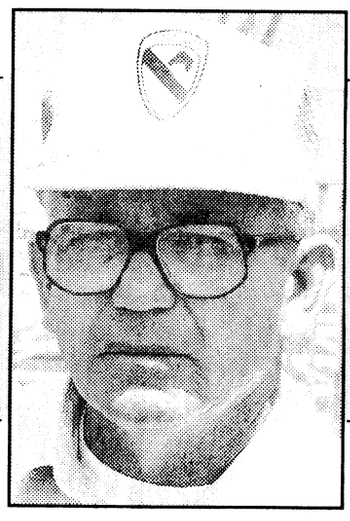


Gerald D. Gingery, Co. H, 5th Cav., 1949-50 — "I don't have any regrets about it. We're sending people over there because it is in our best interest. If I was younger, I would go."

Joe R. Camp, Hq., 16th RCM, 1943-45, 1947-51 — "We don't have a choice. We have another Hitler on our hands."



Retired Lt. Gen. John J. Tolson, III, 1st Cav. Div., 1967-68 — "I think it's something we have to do. The president has made a commitment. I just hope it doesn't lead to anything that will cost too many lives."



Charles Butler, Co. B, 8th Eng. Bn., 1st Cav. Div. — "I think it's appropriate for the situation. In world politics, you have to consider what will happen if you don't take any action."

Threat of war adds meaning to soldier's life

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Bible admonishes us to love our enemies.

The wisdom of that advice sure struck home last week.

There we were, U.S. Army soldiers, backs against the wall, trying to fend off Congressional budget cutters trying to remind the American public why we have an Army as they increasingly began to ask: "Why an Army, isn't the Soviet bear nothing but a bearskin rug?"

And bam, along comes Saddam Hussein.

"Whoa, slow down, wait a minute," people are beginning to say as the Middle East verges on the brink of all-out war and American drivers begin to wonder if they shouldn have bought that economical, 35 miles-per-gallon car instead of that V8-turbo, gas guzzler.

Suddenly, we've got world leaders comparing the Middle East with Europe of the '30s. They're equating madman Hussein with megalomaniac Adolph Hitler.

They're beginning to worry. They remember how the world stood by as Hitler marched, unopposed, into Czechoslovakia, took Poland with ease and nearly caught the entire British Army at Dunkirk as his Nazi Panzer units blitzkrieged across France.

I'm sure none of our brass are sitting back at the Pentagon saying, "I told you so." What they are doing is keeping war plans ready and maintaining a tight string on our military assets while keeping a close eye on Hussein.

Not only does he have an urge to restore Iraq to the glory days of Mesopotamia, but he has a large, well-trained, veteran Army and a pretty fair Air Force. He might be a braggart, but he can back up most of his claims as far as other Arab states are concerned.

Assuming, and hoping, that things return to "normal," we can only hope that this little lesson isn't soon forgotten and relegated to the category of "freak incident," by our various representatives and the American public.

Sure, we can afford to "Right-size" the Army, but there's a point of no return, a point where we lose our credibility as a deterrent with would-be international adventurers.

What Hussein's done is also good for our Army schools. Now when our OSUT soldiers go through the live-fire obstacle course, they can imagine themselves being pinned down by Iraqi bullets, and they can take training seriously.

The same applies to sergeants and officers who might have begun to wonder if they'd ever have the chance to apply some of the tactics they're learning to real world situations.

Yep, I'm not sure if Hussein was a God-send, an Allah-send, or, as some wise-guys have suggested, a plot concocted by the Secretary of Defense. But, one thing I am sure of: His actions have certainly put more meaning into my life as a soldier.

Writer says being new in military can be scary

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Being new in the military can be downright scary. I know.

Like a baby bird, Uncle Sam kept me in the protective nest of the training environment for only so long, before he nudged me off the branch for my first solo flight — to my first duty station.

Of course, I had been equipped with a working knowledge of military customs and courtesies and the basic ins and outs of how everything in the military all comes together.

But, there are questions and concerns that are definitely not covered during the training period, and this ignorance can lead to a very confusing, painful start to military life.

So where does a new soldier go to get the real story on how to become happily adjusted to the military way of life?

At Fort Benning, new personnel are held at the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, until further assignment to their permanent unit.

According to 1st Sgt. Linton Porter of the AG Replacement Detachment, soldiers are processed in a quick and efficient manner.

Open 24 hours, soldiers are welcomed around the clock, whisked through the process and shipped off to their permanent duty stations in three to five working days.

Even while this is being done, physical training is conducted Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and details are administered and performed daily.

I arrived at Fort Benning — my very first duty assignment — a mere six weeks ago. A wide-eyed, naive, and rankless young private, I was ushered to AG, quickly briefed on the dos and don'ts, given linen and room assignment, and very much on my own.

Two days later, I was assigned to my permanent unit, once again given linen and room assignment, and once again very much on my own — with no money, no transportation, and no idea of where to go next.

Of course, I was assigned a sponsor. But, that did not satisfy my desire to know more about the post or answer many of the questions about military life that a more experienced soldier takes for granted, but that I, as a private fresh out of training, had no clue about.

I am sure that I am not the only soldier who has ever experienced this.

Going through a period of uncertainty about what is expected of me and what I could expect from the military has wrapped a blanket of insecurity around me that I cannot afford to have as a military journalist.

Something that could have helped me, and might help other young soldiers, is a program just for lower enlisted soldiers coming to Benning as their first duty assignment.

This program could be included as part of their stay at AG Replacement, and it perhaps could include a tour of the post and a daily question-and-answer session to help alleviate any concerns the soldiers may have.

If there were any personal problems, one-on-one sessions with AG Replacement staff members and new soldiers could be scheduled.

As for me, it has been a long road paved with frustration, tears, and loneliness.

But, the situation is getting better day by day.

I now have transportation, can identify important places on post, know that if I want to make an important phone call, I have to go off post to get a decent line, and that the speed limit is subject to change every two blocks in any direction.

As I rattle around town in my 1980 Dodge Challenger, proudly sporting mosquito wings, reporter notepad, and camera bag, I am starting to regain some of the confidence I felt before.

I only hope that with some kind of assistance, the next young private assigned here can make the transition from a training environment to a permanent-party lifestyle smoothly and have a problem-free "solo flight."

Former Benning commander addresses Rangers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"If there were a Mount Rushmore for the founders of Rangers, his face would be the first one on it," said the commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

That was how RTB Commander Col. Keith Nightingale introduced retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, the guest speaker at Ranger Class 8-90 graduation ceremony.

According to Nightingale, Leuer created and later commanded the 1st Ranger Battalion, Fort Stewart, Ga. and is considered the creator of the Ranger concept. Leuer later commanded Fort Benning, and the former chief of Infantry retired in 1988.

After the introduction, the father of Rangers took his place at the podium.

Leuer said it was great to address the recipients of the coveted Ranger tab.

He told the graduates the ceremony did not mark the end of their journey, rather the beginning.

Leuer then outlined the start of the Ranger concept. "I'm telling you this because I'm convinced you can't go forward without knowing where you came from," he said.

In 1974 Leuer received orders from then Army Chief of Staff Gen. Creighton Abrams to create a "golden" Infantry unit.

Abrams wanted the men to have a creed and music; he wanted the best, he said.

"That task was not an easy one; the Army was in shambles," he said. "However, General Abrams did allow me to have my pick of anyone in the Army and one of the men I chose was Colonel Nightingale."

He said Nightingale was responsible for obtaining the music for the Ranger entitled "Rangers go March."

The training for what was to be 1st Battalion began here, Leuer said.

"The NCOs and officers trained and trained and we instituted something that scared everyone," he said. "Every exercise we did was with live rounds."

When the men finished their training at Benning, they hopped on a plane and jumped into Fort Stewart for the official activation.

"After the ceremony, we headed into the woods for a month," he said. "Some came out earlier, but I don't know where they went. The men I was concerned with were the ones who finished the exercise. I knew we were a team."

Leuer's team has blossomed into a full blown league. Now, there is the 75th Ranger Regiment, 2nd Battalion and 3rd Battalion.

There are also other additions that have come about at Leuer's urging.

"I thought there was a need for desert training in Ranger School," he said. "We didn't have the funds, but we did make it happen."

Leuer attributed his can do attitude to being a Ranger. He explained the history of the uniform, the beret and the Ranger scroll.

Upon completion of his history lesson, he charged the graduates to undertake the future with the seriousness of those before them.

"Remember the Ranger Creed. If you feel yourself slipping, recite it to yourself," he said. "If you can't remember it or if you don't know it now, maybe you shouldn't be wearing the tab."

Project DARE begins 3rd year

Military Police Activity

The Fort Benning Schools will begin the 1990-91 school year Aug. 28 and the Drug Abuse Resistance Education Program will be there to welcome the children.

DARE will begin its third year in Benning Schools. The program is made possible by a collaborated effort of the Military Police Activity and the Fort Benning School System.

DARE was created in Los Angeles in 1983. Convinced that prevention is the only long-term answer to the drug problem, the Los Angeles Police Department and the County Unified School District developed the program. Since its introduction in California, DARE is now taught in schools in 45 states.

The DARE program is positive and substantive, according to Walter L. Jackson, DARE coordinator and instructor. "It avoids scare tactics and relies on accurate information and a straightforward approach," he said. DARE lessons focus on:

- Providing accurate information about drugs and alcohol
- Teaching students decision-making skills
- Showing them how to resist negative peer pressure
- Suggesting healthy alternatives to use
- Building self-esteem

"We think DARE is a step toward a generation of nonusers," Jackson said. "It is one of the most exciting, helpful programs here at Fort Benning. "Principals, teachers, students, parents and school board officials all believe in DARE. The rapport that develops between DARE officers and students and between officers and teachers is remarkable. It is a key to DARE's effectiveness."

The DARE program is designated to keep children from becoming involved in drugs. DARE not only educates children about the dangers of drugs, but it empowers children with specific techniques and strategies to use when confronted with these difficult situations, Jackson said.

Fort Benning's DARE effort represents a partnership between education and law enforcement. By combining experienced classroom teachers and police officers, the students benefit from the perspectives of both.

Boating

Recreational boating as a family sport grows more popular every year. America had 6 million recreational boats in 1961. That number has now grown to nearly 17 million. The following checklist can help avoid boating casualties:

Float plan

Tell someone where you are going and when you will be back, what your boat looks like and other identifying information. This will make finding your boat much easier, should the need arise.

Weather

The weather and water conditions should always be checked before leaving shore. Take a radio with you and listen to updated weather reports.

Life jackets

Make sure you have one on board for each individual in the boat. Make sure they are accessible. Encourage everyone to wear a life jacket. Set an example by wearing yours. It won't work if you don't wear it.

Fuel

Check to make sure you have enough gas. Use the "one-third rule" in fuel management. Use one-third of the fuel to go, one-third to get back and one-third in reserve.

Alcohol

Boating and booze don't mix. More than half of boating deaths are alcohol-related. Operating a boat while intoxicated is illegal and subject to a fine, with increased penalties for causing injury or death.

OPERATION DESERT SHIELD

Military leaders stress delicacy of Mideast mission

Army News Service

Amid all the preparations to deploy U.S. military forces to the Middle East, Defense Department officials want all deploying to understand the significance of their mission.

"U.S. forces will work together with those of Saudi Arabia and other nations to preserve the integrity of Saudi Arabia, and deter further Iraqi aggression," said Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of the U.S. Central Command.

CENTCOM Middle East analysts say the Arab people are sensitive about the basing of foreign troops on their soil.

American forces are being advised to avoid any comments or actions that could lead anyone to believe that the U.S. deployment could be permanent.

The objective, they say, is to stress the defensive and temporary nature of the military's mission, while emphasizing that the United States will stay on as long as needed.

Here are some guidelines for soldiers deploying to the Middle East regarding Arab customs, courtesies and gestures:

● Alcohol — Moslem religion restricts the use of alcohol and it is prohibited by many host countries in the Middle East theater. Army officials say that in deference to the Arab hosts, alcohol will be prohibited.

● Pornography and sexually explicit literature is equally unacceptable in the Arab society, officials say, and is also prohibited in the theater.

● Handshaking — Shake hands whenever you meet an Arab, and when you leave him.

● Sitting — Never sit and expose the sole of your shoe or bottom of your feet to an Arab; it is regarded as an insult.

● Conversation — Generally take the lead from what an Arab brings up in conversation, but avoid asking personal questions. Do not ask questions about the women of an Arab family.

● Friendship — Arabs take friendship very seriously. Whereas Americans form quick and casual friendships, the Arab concept of friendship is one of duration and intensity.

Before an Arab enters into a friendship, he must find out all about you to see how much influence you have, what you can do for him and if you might embarrass him.

Expect a healthy interest from the Arabs in your social, professional and academic background. If you misrepresent your background, not only will you affect your credibility; but more important, you can seriously harm an Arab's standing and that of his family.

When favors are asked by an Arab, never give a flat "no," because it will signal a desire to end a friendship. Instead, say "I'll see what I can do" or "I'm checking on it."

● Touching — Touching and holding hands with members of the same sex in public is acceptable among Arabs, and demonstrates friendship. Touching or kissing members of the opposite sex in public is considered to be in extremely bad taste and could be considered obscene.

● Distance — Arabs stand very close together when talking. You may find this to be uncomfortable, but do not back away.

● Time — Do not be impatient with local people. If you hurry, nothing will get done. However, if you arrive too late for an appointment, you are publicly insulting the individual.

● Criticism — Unlike Americans, Arabs do not accept or give criticism directly. Even constructive criticism of an Arab's work or ideas in public is considered an insult. It is especially rude to contradict a person of status or a superior in rank or age. An Arab's ideas or suggestions should always be given recognition.

If criticism is required, take the Arab aside privately and gradually lead up to the subject in an indirect and very tactful manner.

American "frankness" is always too direct and usually misunderstood as criticism. Arabs understand and appreciate tact because it protects public image, avoids insult and displays culture.

● Patronizing — Do not talk down to someone because he doesn't speak English well.

● Photography — Do not take pictures of military or civilian installations and equipment, military or civilian police, or civilian airport or seaport facilities without permission of the host country. Do not photograph people at close range (particularly women) without permission.

● Women — Do not stare at or strike up a conversation with Arab women in public.

● You, as the technical expert, should never respond to a question from an Arab by saying, "I don't know, but I will find out." No one will listen to you again.

Instead, respond by saying, "Let me show you how to look up that information"; or, "I must see my superiors; come back in an hour."

● Gestures — Stroking the moustache in connection with an oath or a promise indicates sincerity. Placing the right hand or forefinger on the tip of your nose, top of your head, lower right eyelid, moustache or beard means, "It's my obligation."

Placing the palm of the right hand on the chest when greeting another shows respect or thanks. Hitting the right fist onto the open palm of the left hand indicates obscenity or contempt.

● The western A-OK sign is, to the Arab, a sign of the evil eye and used only in conjunction with curses. Do not use the A-OK sign. Biting the right forefinger, which is placed sideways in the mouth, may be either a threat or an expression of regret.

● Food and beverages — When you're offered food or drink, accept it even if you don't want it. Decline further offerings by saying that the first serving was quite sufficient.

Media tips help family members handle press

TRADOC News Service

When soldiers deploy to protect American interests in hostile parts of the world, that makes headlines. But now the families they leave behind are part of the news, too.

That was very much the case during Operation Just Cause to Panama. Local and national news media organizations around the country interviewed wives, parents and children to report the emotional upheaval created by their husbands, sons and fathers being sent to combat.

In interviews, family members expressed their opinions of the action, concern for the soldiers and, in some cases, told what they knew of the operation.

Army leaders do not want to keep spouses from talking to reporters. However, they do want them to know what their rights are and that they should be careful about what information they do tell.

● The first thing family members should understand is that American news media are doing a job vital to democracy.

● It is not harassment when a reporter calls a wife at home or stops her in the supermarket for an interview. It becomes harassment if the reporter persists after being told no.

● Family members do not have to talk to reporters. If they decide to, then they have the right to stop at any time.

● A spouse should know the reporter's name, phone number and news organization before answering any questions. Even if he or she has refused to be interviewed, that information will help to discourage the reporter.

● Spouses should also remember that an enemy has access to the interview the moment it appears. Even information that seems harmless may be helpful to an opponent when placed with other data.

● People should not talk about things they are not familiar with. Anyone being interviewed should know it's fine to say "I don't know." They should never speculate.

Operation Just Cause was probably the first time that so many combat troops made phone calls home from the battlefield. They simply used the public telephones on the streets of Panama City.

Soldiers wanted to reassure their families, but they also passed along much erroneous information. Soldiers discussed comrades who they thought had been injured or wounded.

Naturally, the families of those identified as being injured or wounded were extremely upset.

Spouses who receive such phone calls should realize that rumor is rife in combat. Also, the situation constantly changes.

In these circumstances, spouses should not discuss anything their soldiers tell them.

Another reason Army officials do not want to discourage family members from granting media interviews is that they are important to soldiers' morale.

It is a boost for the troops when they see their loved ones expressing support for their missions.

Infantry students test mettle, learn skills

By Jake O'Connell
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Infantry Officer Basic Course students in Company D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, spent August 6 through 10 experiencing a medley of training, which included weapons qualification, early morning bayonet drills, classroom instruction on the operations order, and the Leadership Reaction Course.

To start the week of training, elements of Delta Company arrived at Coursen Range for instruction and qualification on the M-60 machine gun.

For many of the students, it was their first hands-on experience with the Army's primary machine gun. Sgt. 1st Class Steven Dedrich, Range noncommissioned officer in charge, led the lieutenants through classes on the M-60's operating procedures and the use of the transverse and elevation mechanism in conjunction with the tripod.

After qualification, the students were allowed to engage targets down range to fully develop their appreciation for the capabilities of the weapon.

Tuesday, the lieutenants received instruction on the newly formatted operations order. Lt. John Rinaldi said he had never had instruction or any real experience writing operations orders. "I wrote my first one for this class," he said.

The importance of well written operations orders was emphasized by Sgt. 1st Class Jerry Fountain, an instructor for the School Brigade, who used events in the Middle East as a realistic backdrop for discussion.

Wednesday, Delta Company went back to the range for qualification on the M-203 grenade launcher. After classes on field zeroing, operating procedures, and performing a functions check, Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy Chavez, a member of the company cadre, gave a safety briefing and put the students on the firing line.

Each student received nine practice rounds and two high explosive cartridges for use against vehicular targets. A number of the cadre moved about the firing line sharing their experience with the students and coaching some on technique and firing posture.

Capt. Jibir Saliuhadin, a member of the Malaysian Defense Forces, fired the M-203 for the first time and said he was impressed with the utility of the weapon. "My country has nothing like this," he said. "Most of our equipment is purchased from Great Britain. This would be useful in our jungles."

With weapons qualification complete, the lieutenants tackled the challenging Leadership Reaction Course in squad elements Thursday. Each lane matched the squad against a fictitious scenario, which forced the students to utilize their physical abilities, analytical skills, and teamwork to successfully complete the requirements.

Friday provided a fitting end to a full week of training for Delta Company. The day started with a battalion five-mile run led by 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Commander Lt. Col. Patrick MacDonald. Following physical training, the lieutenants attended classes on military history and the integration of air assets within the Army battle plan.

The week culminated with the Bayonet Assault Course, which was the final block of bayonet instruction. Except for Monday, regular morning PT had been replaced with bayonet instruction, which had the lieutenants yelling the spirit of the bayonet instead of returning the standard Jody calls.

The course, run at Sand Hill, was the only event separating the lieutenants from their weekend, and it showed in their hustle and resolve to complete the course quickly but correctly.

Capt. Ronnie McMillian, standing on a berm obstacle didn't hesitate to make students repeat the course if their participation was not up to expectations.

"The week has proven to be both fun and challenging," said 2nd Lt. David Oclander, "while covering most areas of a soldier's training spectrum."

3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. holds Organizational Day

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Pride in the accomplishments of the 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, was the theme for the unit's Organization Day ceremony recently.

A reveille observance, posting the battalion's campaign streamers, and a memorial for fallen comrades were the highlights of the early morning activities.

Lt. Col. James Davis, 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. commander, said the ceremony was intended to instill a sense of pride in the unit and its lineage.

"This ceremony is a solemn tribute to members of the 32nd Infantry, both past and present," he said. "We should always remember the sacrifices of others throughout the regiment's history."

Liaison NCOs serve important function

By Norman S. Brinsley
Reserve Components

Fort Benning displays the motto "Excellence begins here."

For almost nine thousand Army National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers who arrive at the Infantry Training Center each year, their opportunity to make their own contribution to excellence may depend on the speed and efficiency of the Directorate of Reserve Components Liaison noncommissioned officers.

Fort Benning's Reserve Component Liaison NCOs operate under a basic philosophy of "remember the soldier."

A popular way for reserve component soldiers to enlist to serve in National Guard and Army Reserve units is to do so under the Army's split training option program.

The split training option program is an alternate training program designed to recruit and train students and seasonal employees who can't take enough time away from their principal endeavors to complete one station unit training or basic combat training and advanced individual training at one time. To do so may require 13 weeks or longer.

Split training option allows trainees to enter the service and complete basic combat training, return to their civilian occupation, then return the following year to complete their advanced individual training.

The program is designed to permit soldiers to serve in their unit of choice during that year between completing basic training and returning to finish the skill qualification requirements.

There are specific requirements in this program to make certain soldiers in phase I are returned to their point of entry as scheduled.

Administrative problems, training related problems and personal problems affecting a soldier's ability to train should be resolved expeditiously and in a manner that the soldier can continue training.

Fort Benning's Directorate of Reserve Components has made the liaison program a priority for Army Community of Excellence Improvements among its many other activities.

Sergeants major Clifford McDonald and Franklin Havens, DRC's senior liaison NCOs, apply the concept of "working with a sense of urgency" to a function that is on call 24 hours per day.

As a first step in promoting the concept of excellence within the liaison office's operational area, their office was taken down to the bare wood then painted, decorated, carpeted and landscaped.

This program and its initiatives to attain excellence helps take care of soldiers.

Reserve Component soldiers train to the same standards as their active Army counterparts. The difference in their assignment to active duty is that they are on orders which expire in short periods of time as compared to an active Army soldier who has enlisted for two years.

Because of their limited time on active duty, the Reserve Component soldier must be kept as close to the scheduled training plan as possible. This is where the liaison program becomes essential.

Problems with orders, physical injury, emotional problems including those from family members, and simply concluding the soldier may not be suitable for military service are all issues requiring the involvement of the liaison noncommissioned officer.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

A Georgia coal-burning power plant is slated to become one of the "showcase" facilities in the nation's program to demonstrate advanced methods of reducing a key pollutant known to cause acid rain and smog.

Under a Clean Coal Technology agreement, Southern Company Services of Birmingham, Ala., will outfit a 500-megawatt boiler at Georgia Power Company's Plant Hammond, near Rome, Ga.

The boiler will have a new, advanced pollution control technology that promises to reduce NOx (nitrogen oxide) emissions from coal-fired power plants by more than 50 percent.

The $11.7 million project is outlined in an Energy Department report sent to Congress in November of 1989.

The Georgia project is the first project in the Clean Coal Technology demonstration program to focus solely on cutting NOx pollution, which has received increased attention recently as a contributor to air quality problems.

NOx, along with sulfur pollutants, combine with water vapor in the atmosphere to form acid rain.

In addition, chemical reactions between NOx and other air pollutants in the presence of sunlight, create urban smog.

Coal-burning electric power plants produce about 25 percent of the nation's total NOx emissions.

Clean Air legislation proposed recently by President Bush and being considered by Congress calls for coal-fired utilities to substantially reduce NOx emissions by the year 2000.

NOx emissions levels vary depending on the boiler temperatures, the ratio of fuel to combustion air, and other features of boiler design. Most older units were designed to achieve rapid, efficient coal combustion at high temperatures, the very conditions that tend to produce high NOx levels.

Researchers have found that by controlling the temperature and availability of air during the combustion process, significant reductions of NOx can be achieved without major plant modifications.

Various tests will be performed, the first consisting of a process known as "advanced overfire air," where part of the combustion air if diverted away from the hot burners to limit the availability of oxygen to form NOx.

The diverted air is then injected through ports added above the primary combustion zone where combustion is completed in cooler temperatures.

The second set of tests will replace the existing burners with special "low NOx burners" that control the initial fuel/air ratio to create a fuel-rich flame that retards NOx formation.

These burners are expected to reduce NOx emissions by 50 percent.

The utility will then operate both techniques simultaneously in hopes of boosting NOx reductions even further.

Of the project's total cost, Southern Company is providing $5.5 million, DOE $5.2 million, and the Electric Power Research Institute $1.0 million.

If you have questions about this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

As the Active Duty Dependents Dental Plan begins its fourth year of operation, three new benefits have been added and two existing benefits have been expanded.

The new benefits are:

— sealants on permanent molars for patients under 14 years of age,

— partial payment toward some cast crowns for permanent teeth (also called the "alternative treatment allowance"), and — prefabricated resin crowns for baby front teeth.

Benefits which have been expanded are:

— space maintainers, now covered for premature loss of baby eye teeth, as well as for baby back teeth for patients under the age of 14,

— examinations and X-rays, which are now paid for in connection with both covered and noncovered dental services.

Services that are fully covered under the Dependents Dental Plan include dental examinations, teeth cleanings, fluoride treatments and X-rays. Restorative and repair services that are cost-shared include fillings, stainless steel crowns on baby teeth, and repairs to dentures.

All covered benefits are subject to some limitations.

The Active Duty Dependents Dental Plan, operated by Delta Dental Plan of California, is a voluntary program that covers or shares the cost of basic dental care for eligible family members of active duty service members of all uniformed services. Family members who live in the United States, Puerto Rico, or the U.S. Virgin Islands may enroll.

Sponsors who enroll dependents pay a monthly premium through payroll deduction. Effective Aug. 1, the premium for a single dependent is $4.57. All eligible family members can be enrolled under the single premium.

Enrollment is for a minimum of two years unless:

The sponsor is transferred to a duty station where the local military medical facility provides dental care to dependents or, the sponsor is transferred overseas and the family accompanies him/her, or family members who are enrolled in the plan become entitled to other dental coverage.

Dependents may choose any properly licensed dentist but receive special benefits when they patronize members of the nationwide Delta Dental Plan network of more than 108,000 participating dental offices. For example, the offices will handle all paperwork except the patient's part of the claim form and will accept fees established by Delta for covered services as payment in full. These offices will also require only the patient's estimated share of the cost, if any, at the time treatment is provided.

The Health Benefits Adviser at Martin Army Community Hospital has a list of Delta participating dental offices in this area. Before making an appointment, patients should always check to ensure that the dentist they are considering participates in the plan.

Claims are sent directly to: Delta Dental Plan, P.O. Box 9086, Farmington Hills, Mich., 48333-9086. Properly completed claims are normally processed within 21 working days.

All families currently enrolled will receive an updated booklet within the next month. Booklets are also available from Delta Dental or from the Health Benefits Adviser on the seventh floor at MACH. Information is also available by telephone from Delta Dental by calling (313) 489-2240.

STUDENT LOAN REPAYMENT FOR PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT.

If you're leaving the Active Army service and plan to continue your education, the Army Reserve has some good news for you. Besides earning a steady extra income, the Army Reserve can help you pay off any qualifying student loan (Guaranteed Student Loan, National Direct Student Loan, or Federally Insured Student Loan) which you may incur after you enter the Army Reserve.

For each year of duty, 15% of your loan, or $500, whichever is greater, may be repaid, up to a total of $10,000. For some specialties, the total increases to $20,000. That can go a long way toward easing the financal burden of going to college.

The Student Loan Repayment Program is another reason why it pays to join the Army Reserve. For details, call your Reserve Component Transition NCO.

Junior Reserve Officer Training Course students from eight schools in Muscogee County participated in the Leaders Course from Aug. 6 to 10.

The course was on the campus of Columbus College and in various locations at Fort Benning. This is the second year the course has been held.

According to retired Col. Floyd G. Stephenson, director of Army Instruction, about 10 sophomore, junior or senior students from each school were chosen to attend the course.

The goal of the course, Stephenson said, is to provide the high school students with instruction and training, which will improve their personal leadership skills and allow them to have a positive impact on their entire JROTC program next school year.

The students will be better prepared to perform their duties next year and be more prepared for life beyond high school, he said.

At Fort Benning, students were given the opportunity to rappel, go through the Darby Queen Confidence Course, and go through the Leaders Reaction Course.

The Leaders Reaction Course includes several obstacles surrounded by water. One student, who is chosen to be the leader, is given instructions on his mission.

He must relay the instructions to the others and give them a plan to complete the mission.

However, failing to follow instructions or losing one's balance and falling can result in the entire group taking a dip in the water.

According to retired Lt. Col. Thomas Fluker, senior Army instructor at Baker High School, the leader's position is rotated after each mission so everyone gets a chance.

James Parker, a student from Hardaway High School, said that the Leaders Course was "definitely a challenge for him."

"It requires a lot of mind work and teamwork," he said. "This course will build a team faster than a lot of other things will."

French liaison officer takes many memories, lessons back to share with native countrymen

New liaison officer wants to study Infantry concept

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"When my family and I came to the United States so I could perform my duties as French Liaison Officer at Fort Benning, my wife couldn't speak a bit of English. Now, she's the first to say she wants to stay," said the outgoing French Liaison Officer.

Lt. Col. Francois Migeon and his family departed for France Aug. 10 where he will serve with the Training and Doctrine Command headquartered in Paris.

Francois Migeon

Migeon called his assignment here a dream come true.

He said that as a child he had always dreamed of coming to the United States.

"Our country was liberated twice by the U.S. so I feel it's a vital part of our history, and it was something that I had always wanted to explore further," Migeon said. "This assignment gave me that opportunity."

He said he has done much more than he expected in his position as a representative of his country and his Army.

During his tour, Migeon was able to mix training and learn new doctrine at the same time.

"I'll take back many memories with me, and I'll also be able to share those memories and lessons," he said. "I'll be able to pass on the importance of training so my fellow countrymen can benefit from it."

Migeon said his fondest professional memory is the training exercise he participated in with the 82nd Airborne Division at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

He said the parachute jump into Normandy with the Ranger Training Brigade will always hold a special place in his heart.

"The setting was very much like it was during the initial operation," he said. "It was very gratifying."

Migeon said he will leave here with a much broader view of the Infantry.

"Everything is done here," he said. "I've seen today's and tomorrow's Infantry."

Migeon said he will take that knowledge and use it in his new position.

Dominique C. Mariotti

The soldier filling his position here, Lt. Col. Dominique C. Mariotti, is looking forward to gaining more of the same information as his predecessor.

Mariotti comes to Fort Benning from an assignment as the deputy commandant of the French Foreign Legion Regiment in Castelnaudary, France.

"I'd like to share my training ideas and compare and share my experience with experts here," he said.

"I'd like to go deep into the Infantry concept. Our Armies have a lot in common, and we both have the love of freedom."

Mariotti said he and his entire family have been looking forward to this assignment.

Already a graduate of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff Course, Mariotti said he has experienced life here and would like to build on it.

Redlegs beat Panthers, 9-6

By Kevin Stibich
197th Infantry Brigade

The Redlegs of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, recently beat the Panthers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 9-6, on Kelley Hill's Essebagger Field for the 197th Infantry Brigade officer softball championship.

The championship climaxed a week of round-robin playoffs which saw both teams climb off the canvas and score come-from-behind victories in the semifinal match ups.

The Redlegs earned their berth in the title game on a three-run rally in the bottom of the seventh inning to edge the Separate Units team 7-6, while the Panthers managed five runs in the seventh inning to knock out the 197th Support Battalion.

Redleg coach Tabb Benzinger pointed out that this was the second straight softball championship for the officers of his battalion, despite a complete turnover in the team roster this year.

Last year we won with our bats; this year we won with our gloves," Benzinger said. "Gone are the big guns. Now, we have a bunch of slick guys."

No one was slicker than Redleg shortstop Danny Furlong, who made two spectacular catches and turned two double plays.

Furlong refused to take credit for his performance. "Luck had a lot to do with it," he said. "Tony Bennett's pitching was right on target, and we got a lot of ground balls hit to us."

Nevertheless, Furlong's teammates voted him Most Valuable Player.

Both teams struck early in the game, with the Panthers picking up a run in the first inning, only to be answered with three runs from the Redlegs in their half of the inning. Redleg second baseman Deac Heilig's home run highlighted the first inning action.

Bennett and the Redleg defense went on to shut down the tanker scoring until the fifth inning, when the Panthers reeled off five runs. But the Panther rally fell short because the Redlegs had already built up a 9-1 advantage and stopped them at six runs to win the championship title.

Buljung leads U.S. team

U.S. Olympic Training Center

Olympic silver medalist Erich Buljung, an Army Marksmanship Unit shooter from Fort Benning, led the U.S. Shooting Team with an 11th place finish in the free pistol event on the second day of competition at the World Shooting Championships, which began Aug 5 in Moscow.

The current U.S. free pistol champion, Buljung fired 560 out of 600 points to finish near the top of the field. USAMU shooter Jimmie McCoy of Columbus and Don Nygord of LaCrescenta, Calif., posted 18th and 36th-place finishes, respectively.

Bulgarian Spas Koprinkov tied the world record, shoting 671 out of 700 points en route to winning the world free pistol title. World Cup USA double gold medalist Yifu Wang of China took the silver medal with a score of 663, while Soviet Sergei Pyzhianof finished three points behind to win the bronze.

In team competition, Hungary won the world title, followed by the Soviet Union and Sweden, respectively. The U.S. team finished 18th.

Other events include the finals in the women's air rifle event, in which world record hold Deena Wigger of Colorado Springs competed.

The U.S. team is directed by Lones Wigger, a four-time Olympian. The head coaches include: Martin Edmondson, running target; Dan Iuga, pistol; Robert Mitchell, rifle; and Lloyd Woodhouse, shotgun.

Youth Activities Services throws party to celebrate going back to school

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Youth Activities Services is planning an end-of-summer extravaganza for the youth of Fort Benning and surrounding communities Thursday at the Youth Activities Center.

According to Yvette F. Womack, youth development specialist at the center, the "Back-to-School Blowout" promises to be a special event for the community youth.

"We are going to have several activities going on that night. There will be a splash/block party, where we barricade the block and hold many of the events in the street. Also, we will hold different contests and award prizes.

"Tentatively, we have scheduled a skateboard competition, a Bart Simpson look-alike contest, a slam dunk contest and several others surprises," said Womack.

There will be a fashion show, and radio station WCGQ 107.3 FM will also host a live remote, she said.

Ron S. Battle, account executive for the radio station, is excited about the event and his station's participation in it.

"I love to work with the youth and give them more opportunities than we had when we were young," said Battle.

"I'd like to see more adults participating in activities with the young people — after all, they are tomorrow's leaders. Young people need more activities that are in a positive vein," he added.

The event will be held at the center from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m. For more information on the event, contact Womack at 545-3070.

Move-in housing allowance begins for soldiers overseas

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

A new allowance for overseas-bound service members who will live in off-base housing goes into effect Sept. 1.

The move-in housing allowance has three elements that can reimburse service members for some of the costs to set up housekeeping in foreign rental housing, said Navy Capt. Dick Tangeman, director of DoD's Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee.

Service members eligible for overseas housing allowance who will live in economy housing will benefit from the miscellaneous portion of the move-in housing allowance. "People are reimbursed for the average cost of having homes ready — buying essential fixtures to make their home habitable," Tangeman said.

"This allowance can give them — up front — a few hundred dollars to ore than $1,000 to cover expenses, depending on the assignment area and what's generally available in rental dwellings," he said. Service members moving into off-base homes often find they must purchase such things as light fixtures, closets, refrigerators, stoves and kitchen cabinets.

"Service members will not need to supply receipts for these items, as the miscellaneous portion of the allowance will reimburse service members the fees they pay on a cost-by-cost basis," Tangeman said. Those fees include finder fees, security deposits and other non-refundable charges. Receipts are required.

The three-part move-in housing allowance will eventually replace the initial terminal occupancy allowance. That allowance currently pays service members residing in economy quarters a monthly stipend throughout the member's tour to cover set-up costs.

Bowling centers receive new look

Directorate of Community Activity

The Main Post and the Mall Bowling Centers have installed new lanes and equipment.

These new lanes are constructed of synthetic materials, designed to improve pin action, raise scoring and to enhance appearances.

According to Jim Cantrell, manager of the Mall Bowling Center, the lanes are synthetic, so they are not affected by humidity and other occurrences as are wood lanes. Because conditions are constant, a better game is achieved.

The new lanes are accompanied by a modern self-propelled vacuum and a state-of-the-art computerized lane-conditioning machine and will also aid in better pin action and sanctioned high games and series.

These renovations are done at a cost of $145,900 plus $13,000 for the equipment at each center, said Cantrell.

Les Ferrell, a regular bowler, said he has raised his overall game by about 30 pins.

Tony Szeluga, another local bowler and member of the All Army winning team, rolled several practice games from different lines.

Szeluga said he could average 225-230 pins per game with no problems under these new lane conditions.

Jim Cantrell, manager of the Mall Bowling Center, said "With the lanes as consistent as they are now, it's only a matter of time before someone wins the $5,000 Pot-O-Gold."

There are only 42 of the computerized lane conditioning machines in operation nationwide. Armywide, only Fort Benning and Fort Bliss have this type of equipment available.

"Fort Benning has surged to the front in providing the best for its soldiers and families," said Cantrell.

There are numerous leagues that may be of interest to active duty, military retirees, Department of Army and non-appropriated funds civilians and their families.

Registration for leagues start Sept. 4.

Both centers have registration sheets for individuals, couples, and unit leagues. Any unit desiring to organize a late night league, starting at 9 p.m., Monday through Thursday, will be given special rates of three games for $3.50 instead of the normal price for league bowling.

Department of Army civilians and their families are authorized to open bowl in either bowling center with proper identification.

For more information about joining a league or special rates for forming a late night league, call 682-7777 or 682-7781.

Chaplain explains difference between conviction, preference

By Jon Wright
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A recent newspaper headline read, "U.S. will stand by friends." I thought about what it means to "stand" and realized it has to do with conviction, rather than preference.

Notice these words from the book of Ephesians, "Be strong in the Lord and in His mighty power. Put on the full armor of God, so that when the evil day comes, you may be able to stand your ground, and after you have done everything, to stand. Stand firm then. . ."

These words have to do with conviction, and not just preference.

The goal is to "stand our ground." You can't do that unless you first have a conviction about which ground is worth a fight, and even laying down your life, if need be.

Today in the Middle East, the United States has drawn a line, taken up positions, and armed itself to take a stand. If a stand is to remain firm, it must be based on conviction, not preference.

The same principle applies in day-to-day personal decisions. Every individual must ask himself: What is the "ground" in my life for which I will fight and be prepared to die?

Is it family, a job, a religious freedom, or profound belief? Is it worth a stand? Is it firm ground for life? If it is, the person should have a conviction about it, and stand firm, and not just base life on preferences.

Here are some differences between preference and conviction.

First, preference is feeling-based, but conviction is principle-based. When the media conducts a poll of opinions, often the results reflect preferences, rather than convictions. A "stand" in life depends on what a person believes is right or wrong, rather than how he or she feels at the moment.

Second, preference is short-term, but conviction is long-term. A question often asked has been, "Can we be counted upon to stand by our friends over the long haul? Will we support a long-term commitment?" Standing up in the face of formidable obstacles and opposition requires a long-term commitment. If a person believes something is right, then he should be in it for the long haul.

Third, preference is based on convenience, but conviction demands sacrifice. A poll in the paper reported that the majority of Americans are willing to "sacrifice" in a major time of crisis. So often we have the tendency to do only as much as is convenient. Each of us needs to ask, "For what am I willing to sacrifice, and even die? What is most meaningful in life? What is really of value?"

Finally, when decisions are made based on preference, they are made based on what satisfies and gratifies. The person is doing just what he wants. But if he has a conviction, he will consider the good of others and what pleases God.

A long-term sacrificial stand is to be made for a cause greater than just myself. Many people have a lot of personal preferences (such as Pepsi over Coke), which can easily change. But convictions relate to greater things — such as God, family, country, and the basic worth of humanity, all of which are greater than the individual. For these an individual should be willing to take up ground, and fight, and stand firm.

PWOC offers Bible studies, more

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Protestant Women of the Chapel offers many opportunities for Bible studies and fellowship. Meetings will begin Sept. 6.

PWOC meets at the Religious Education Center the first Thursday of each month for a general meeting. Other Thursdays, the group meets for Bible studies.

Baby-sitting is available in the Religious Education Center at no charge.

A time of fellowship is followed by a time of praise and prayer, then they break up into study groups.

For many years, individual chaplains have encouraged women's groups within the chapel activities. These were sometimes merely study and prayer groups, but they met a need in the lives of the women, particularly overseas.

In 1955, the PWOC began to take official form. A conference in Berchtesgaden, Germany was attended by 250 women. In 1956, the first PWOC convention was held there with twice as many attending.

The official motto, "We are workers together with Christ" became official in 1957 and by 1959. Newsletters were published on local, district and area levels.

The Fort Benning PWOC begun Dec. 1, 1957. Chaplain Albert C. Wildman, post chaplain, had just returned from Europe and was inspired by the PWOC movement there. He led the organization of the first chapter. Several other small chapters were formed on post including a Student Brigade Chapter and one for the 197th Infantry Brigade. Throughout the years, denominational groups such as Episcopal and Lutheran have been formed.

In 1963, a PWOC Council was organized. The purpose was to unite and assist the chapters in accomplishing aims and purposes of individual groups and to sponsor major activities such as retreats, mission studies and Bible Study groups.

For more information on PWOC, call Diane Boucher, 689-6206; Lilliet Garrison, 687-8012; or Ruth Bloomstrom, 689-4533.

Armed Forces Voters Week begins Aug. 27

By Tim Downey
American Forces Information Service

Armed Forces Voters Week ceremonies get under way at DoD installations Aug. 27. The week draws attention to the right and civic duty that service members have to vote.

Henry Valentino, Federal Voting Assistance Program director at the Pentagon, said Armed Forces Voters Week focuses attention on the upcoming general election in November and transfers attention from the primary elections, which have been going on since February.

The week reminds service men and women to apply for absentee ballots. Those who haven't registered are encouraged to file, he added.

Though the week signals primaries are fast coming to a close, the voting director noted they do not officially end until Oct. 6. Don't wait to request a ballot, he said: do it during Armed Forces Voters Week.

Service members have several ways to learn about the candidates and issues, said the director.

"Almost all service members have access to Autovon," Valentino said. "Call Autovon, 223-6500 or commercial, 1-202-693-6500. That's the Voting Information Center, and it's open 24 hours a day."

The Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division is conducting an investigation of an assault, which occurred on the night of Aug. 6.

The CID Office needs to locate two black males who were washing a car at the main post Car Wash between 9:30 and 10 p.m. Aug. 6. They may have witnessed the assailant who stopped to provide directions to the victim.

If the two black males, or anyone else, have information reguarding this incident, contact the Fort Benning CID Office at 545-2516 or 545-7950 or 545-5271.

Operation Desert Shield won't stop promotions

Soldiers whose deployment to the Middle East prevents them from attending mandatory leadership training will nonetheless be allowed to compete for promotion.

According to Army personnel officials at the Pentagon, an exception to policy has been granted so that soldiers in Operation Desert Shield can be selected for promotion whether or not they have completed the required level of NCO Education System schooling.

Personnel officials say the exception applies to specialists competing for promotion to sergeant and staff sergeants who would be considered for promotion or Advanced NCO Course training by the October 1990 sergeant first class board.

Commanders may promote deployed specialists who meet the monthly cutoff scores for promotion to sergeant but who have not attended the Primary Leadership Development Course. PLDC became a requirement for promotion to sergeant on Oct. 1, 1989.

Personnel officials say commanders should reschedule those soldiers for PLDC as soon as possible; this will ensure they receive the necessary training and become eligible for Basic NCO Course attendance, they say.

Staff sergeants whose deployment prevents them from attending BNCOC but who are otherwise eligible for promotion may be considered for promotion or ANCOC attendance by the selection board slated to convene Oct. 10.

However, personnel officials say commanders are required to report to the Total Army Personnel Command the names of soldiers who are deferred from BNCOC due to Desert Shield involvement.

Cooking machine poses possible fire hazard

A possible fire hazard exists on a propane cooking machine (model 5477A751, sale price $89) from Coleman Company.

In cooperation with the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the company is recalling the propane hose installed on this electronic ignition propane cooking machine because it may come loose from the fuel valve connection after repeated use.

This item was distributed in 1989. Retail facilities should report stock quantities by calling 214-780-3256 (commercial) or 967-3256 (autovon).

Customers should call Coleman's toll-free hot line at 1-800-835-3278 for instructions concerning replacement of the hose at no charge.

2,000 family members, friends bid farewell

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Units from the 197th Infantry Brigade departed Fort Benning Tuesday during the first of three farewell ceremonies held this week at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

About 2,000 family members, friends and well-wishers gathered outside the center to express their support to soldiers as they prepared to depart to Saudi Arabia to participate in Operation Desert Shield.

Thousands of flag-waving, on-lookers waited patiently along the Manchester Expressway and Interstate 185 for a glimpse of the convoy of buses bearing the troops bound for the Middle East.

Post officials announced Aug. 13 that the brigade had received orders to deploy to the Middle East. The mission, known as Operation Desert Shield, is to deter any aggression and, if necessary, to assist the kingdom of Saudi Arabia in defense of its nation, officials said.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, Fort Benning commanding general, was present to extend encouragement and Godspeed to the departing troops. He said that the soldiers were, "combat-ready and confident" and that "their readiness was a credit to the soldiers, their commanders and the many military and civilian workers who put in many hours to help them get ready for this mission.

"We hope and pray that the situation ... will be resolved without a fight," he said. "However, if it should come to a fight, you will kick their rear ends hands down!"

Cavezza told the troops that their family members would be well taken care of in their absence.

Col. Ted Reid, 197th Inf. Bde. commander, expressed similar sentiments to his troops.

"We have been called to do a job by our nation and our president, and we will do that job and do it well," he said. "I have confidence in these soldiers. They are well-trained, motivated and ready to take on the mission at hand."

Reid also asked family members and friends to "pray daily" for the troops' "safety and speedy return."

The 283th Army Band played during the ceremony and later as the troops left Kelley Hill in 50 buses for Fort Stewart where they will train prior to being sent to the Middle East.

Operation Desert Shield causes patient care concerns at hospital

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Patients concerned about reductions in access to care at Martin Army Community Hospital because of Operation Desert Shield can rest assured for now, but that may change, according to hospital officials.

Jeanne Dickerson, director of Patient Affairs and Community Relations, said many patients who are concerned about access to care have called here office. "Care for all categories of patients is currently at normal or near normal capability," she said "But, that is subject to change if medical troop deployments increase in support of Operation Desert Shield."

Dickerson said access to care is available through the usual primary care providers, the Outpatient Clinic in building 392 (telephone 545-5564 or 545-3835), the 197th Family Practice Clinic on Kelley Hill (544-4279), and the Aviation Medicine Clinic (544-1617).

Patients with nonemergency medical conditions can expect longer waiting times for appointments, she said.

Active duty soldiers can receive primary care through their Troop Medical Clinic, she added.

Another source of primary care is the PRIMUS Clinic on Boxwood Boulevard off Macon Road where patients may walk in without an appointment, Dickerson said. Hours for the PRIMUS Clinic are 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and holidays. The PRIMUS Clinic telephone number is 569-9464.

Waiting time for specialty care appointments at is not expected to increase at this time, however, length of waiting time can fluctuate based on the availability of specialists, Dickerson said. No change is expected in the ability to provide inpatient care for all categories of beneficiaries, she said.

"The hospital is continuing negotiations to expand the number of partnership providers in an effort to offer increased access to care for nonactive duty patients," she said. "Partnership providers are civilian physicians who treat CHAMPUS-eligible patients. CHAMPUS is the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

"Every effort is being made to continue providing Martin Care to all of our patient population," she said.

Army troops in Mideast on rise

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) gets to Saudi Arabia to participate in Operation Desert Shield, they will join a list of Army units that are already there or on their way, according to Defense Department officials.

The 1st Cavalry Division and the 2nd Armored Division from Fort Hood, Texas, have been added to the list of units deploying soldiers to the Middle East, officials said.

DoD officials will not release the exact number of deploying soldiers due to security concerns.

Officials say other units already in or deploying to the region for Desert Shield include: the 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, the 101st Airborne Division from Fort Campbell, the 24th Infantry Division from Fort Stewart, the 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade from Fort Bliss, the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Bliss, and the 1st Corps Support Command from Fort Bragg.

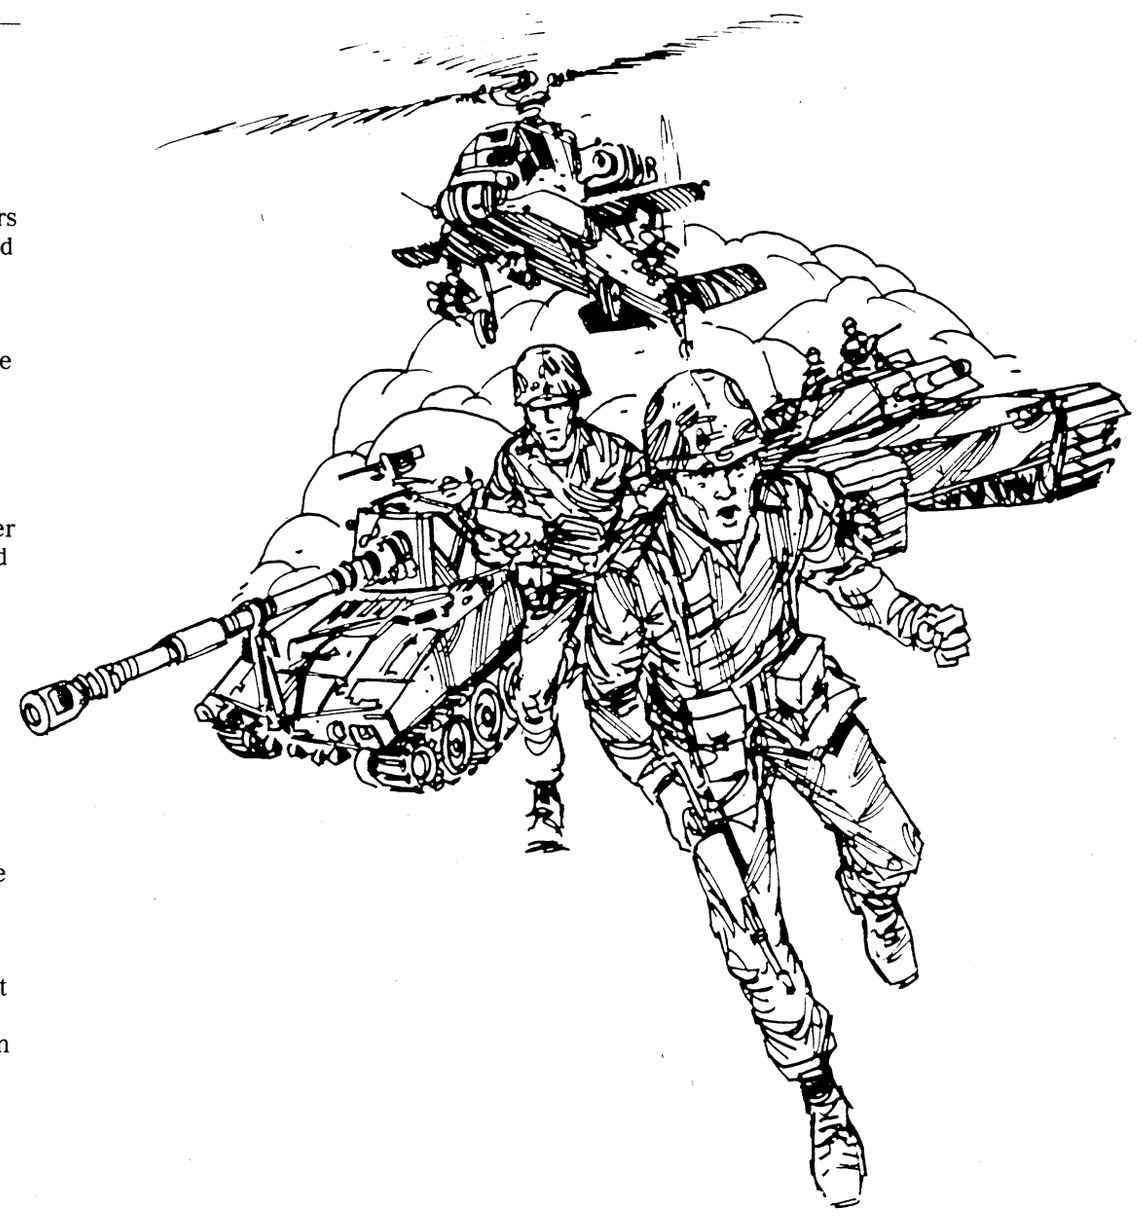
197th deployment brings cheers, tears, even fears

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade left this week in a series of what can be described as "double handkerchief" ceremonies.

The band played, commanders gave speeches, spectators waved American flags and family members cried as the Forever Forward troops pulled out to defend American interests in the Middle East.

I'm not sure I'd want to be fighting in the Saudi desert — they've got poisonous snakes, it doesn't rain and summertime temperatures regularly soar over the 120-degree mark. But, if I did have to fight, I'd want to be on the 197th's side.

I mean like these guys are trained warriors. Didn't they practically win the war single-handed on the last Reforger? Plus, they're such regular customers at the National Training Center that they've had time to paint practically all the rocks with the brigade patch and battalion crests.

If I were Saddam Hussein, I'd be very careful about which part of the line in the sand I'd dare cross. If there were soldiers from the Sledgehammer Brigade on the other side, I think I'd go looking for another crossing point.

Saddam might be crazy, but I don't think he's crazy enough to butt heads with the brigade's infantry, armor and artillery units, not to mention the cavalry, the engineers and the ever-present support battalion.

I think his generals would learn real quick that fighting our guys is a lot different than going up against a bunch of teen-agers from Iran.

I know the Air Force has already announced they can win the war by bombing the dickens out of the Iraqi supply lines and knocking out their tanks with all those smart bombs.

I'm certainly not one to turn down any help, but the war's going to be won in the sand, not the sky, unless we decide to nuke them back to the stone age.

Of course that's why their brave leader is using American and British citizens as shields around his defense posts and chemical plants, figuring we won't do anything with our citizens there.

I'm just glad I'm not in charge of making any decisions. It's kind of hard for a civilized nation to deal with a barbaric country where the laws of land warfare don't seem to apply.

Granted, some people will tell you laws of warfare is an oxymoron, but without some common laws for fighting wars, I think the people on this planet would have blown themselves up long ago.

Sure some people will tell you we need to make war too horrifying to contemplate as an alternative way of doing business. But then they overlook the fact that people like Saddam Hussein may one day become his country's ruler.

As for me, I'm getting ready just in case. Sure, I've been told the kitchen sink will deploy before me, but you never know.

So here's what I've been doing.

First, I've been practicing sweating. They say sweat helps cool you, although around here in August one will never know.

But, at least I find I can sweat profusely.

The second thing I found to be a little more difficult. I read in some newspaper reports that soldiers need to drink six gallons of water a day. Make that six gallons of gin, and I might be able to handle it. But not water. I have a hard enough time downing six quarts.

Finally, chemical warfare scares the pyridospigmine out of me.

Also, I hate the idea of having to wear all that protective gear. Like I get claustrophobia when I wear the mask, and I start itching all over and can't scratch because of the heavy gloves.

But, always wanting to be ready, I began practicing. Have you ever tried to talk on a telephone with a protective mask? You have to move the telephone back and forth between ear and mouth — and remember which end is which to hear and be heard.

And, as for trying to type — forget it. I finally grabbed two pencils and used them. That's why I missed a week with my column. Last week's column was supposed to run two weeks ago.

Missing deadlines around here is a mortal sin. In fact, it nearly earned me an opportunity to join the 197th in the land of the big sand.

Somehow I think they'll get along just fine without me.

197th commander thanks post

As the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) deploys to Saudi Arabia, we, the soldiers of the Brigade, wish to express our sincere appreciation to the installation staff, both military and civilian, who worked so hard in assisting us on this deployment.

Deploying a heavy, separate brigade from Fort Benning is not an easy task. Through the assistance and dedication of the installation staff, we were able to upload our ammunition, receipt for thousands of short tons of supplies and receipt for equipment which was critical and which will be needed desperately in Saudi Arabia.

Although I do not have the time to personally thank each of the individuals who supported the Brigade, I most categorically state that we could not have made it without their support.

Thanks to everyone who assisted us — each contribution was vital to the success of our deployment.

We look forward to a speedy and safe return.

Army Chief of Staff sends message to Operation Desert Shield soldiers

You are embarking on a vital mission. Your success will be critical to the security and prosperity of the United States and, indeed, of the entire community of nations.

Your presence on the Arabian peninsula will be instrumental in deterring further aggression and in achieving the objectives established by our president.

You demonstrate that the United States will not be intimidated by threats or pressure.

Fighting alongside American Marines, airmen, and sailors, and together with forces from other nations, you will guarantee our inevitable victory, should deterrence fail.

You have trained to the highest standards, and you are ready to fight and win.

As you deploy, rest assured that we will take care of your loved ones at home.

We will provide all the support that your families need during your absence. The Army has always taken care of its own.

I am confident that should we be challenged, you — the American soldier — will once again fight with valor and determination.

Everyone in the Army and in our nation is proud of you as you deploy to defend the United States and our way of life.

Coping

children. The soldier's going through a whole range of emotions, too, as he or she prepares to leave for an extended period of time."

As well, according to Jellen, families encounter sadness, wondering and fretting over how they are each going to get through the weeks and months ahead. As sadness decreases, the family settles into a routine.

"But it never seems to fail — when dad or husband is away, everything breaks down. Normal day-to-day living may be easily handled, but each 'unexpected' event can bring back anger at the spouse who is away or despair at having to handle all the problems alone."

Jellen said the final stage is the return adjustment. This stage, while a happy one, can be filled with anxiety and doubts.

"Spouses often fear that decisions they've had to make won't be appreciated. They also wonder, after a long separation, if love is still there. The soldier, seeing that everything has been handled, wonders if he is really needed.

"Even recognizing the stages cannot force them to go away," Jellen said. "But recognizing them and taking simple steps to minimize the effects of the deployment can help the entire family survive the separation."

Jellen offered some tips families can use to improve their coping skills:

● Take the children to the unit's point of departure to reduce fantasies.

● After the departure, plan an activity, such as shopping or a movie, or dinner out with another waiting family to help ease the first-day hurdle.

● Carry on children's activities the same as if the soldier were home.

● Notify teachers that the soldier has just left, so they will have more of an understanding of children's behavior.

● Talk about what to say in a letter.

And for the soldier, Jellen recommends he call home upon reaching the final destination. He should take time to write regularly, and write to each family member individually when time permits.

"It is very difficult for the spouse. Children's activities go on; so should the waiting spouse's. A lot of the tips for getting through separations apply whether the soldier is away from home or not.

"Set some goals for yourself. Get involved in activities — whether they be paid work, volunteer work, new hobbies; or return to those pastimes you gave up for lack of time."

Jellen added that participation in unit Family Support Group activities can also serve a number of purposes.

"The flow of reliable information is one of the functions of the groups. Planned activities with others going through the same separation as you help make it a little easier. Knowing someone is there if needed on an emergency basis or just for day-to-day support eases the feelings of isolation.

"Too often, mothers feel guilty about going out with friends and leaving children with a baby sitter.

"This is really the cheapest form of sanity you can find. It is also good to plan family activities instead of sitting home thinking, 'If only he were home, we could do something this weekend.' Get a group of spouses and families to do something special – a picnic, a day at the beach, a movie night or pot luck dinner.

"Most of all," Jellen advised, "don't be afraid or embarrassed to ask for help if you run into problems.

"If the family support group members cannot meet your needs or help you resolve problems that arise, the staff at Army Community Service can either help you or get you to the right place to get the help you need.

"I've always been told that problems don't get better with time. The longer they're left unattended, the worse they seem to get. ACS and other family support agencies are there to help you survive the separation."

Questions

general power of attorney should allow the person receiving the power to do just about everything the grantor could do. Some businesses and on-post agencies may not accept the power of attorney because of their own policies or regulations. If you have a problem, contact Legal Assistance, and let them try to work it out.

Q. What do single parents in the Army need to do to allow someone to watch their children while they are deployed?

A. They will need a Special, "Medical Plus," Power of Attorney to allow someone to take care of their children. This power of attorney will allow this person to take all actions that the soldier, as a parent, could take if he were present. It is particularly important for medical care. Only a parent, a legal guardian, or a person with power of attorney can authorize medical care for a child under the age of 18.

Q. We are about to close on a house. Do I need something special to allow me to close on my own without my spouse?

A. The exact requirements to close will depend on your lender, your realtor and your seller. While a general power of attorney should be good enough, the other party may require a special power of attorney. Some agencies provide their own form. You should ask your agent or lender if they will require some special form. If they do, get a copy and bring it to the Legal Assistance Division to have it notarized. If they do not require a special form, Legal Assistance has a special power of attorney form that you can fill in with the special information you need.

Q. Where do I get Legal Assistance while my spouse is gone?

A. All soldiers and their family members are entitled to legal assistance. The Legal Assistance Division is located in the Staff Judge Advocate building at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets. It is between the Main Post Chapel and the commanding general's quarters. For notarizations and powers of attorney the division provides walk-in service between the hours of 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

For more complicated matters such as wills and contracts, the division operates on an appointment basis. You may make an appointment by phoning the division at 545-3281. All you need when you come to the office is your military ID card and any legal papers associated with your case.

Communication goes two ways

Directorate of Community Activities

The need for two-way communication continues even though a couple is seperated by distance.

The following is a guide which may make it easier to talk to each other through letters.

1. Answer all questions. Write with his letter and picture in front of you as though talking directly to him.

2. Let him know how much you appreciate the letters, tapes, pictures, etc. Mention one or two things in each communication which made you feel especially close.

3. Remember the need to verbally express affection does not diminish with the miles. "I love you" means just as much when it is written during separation as it does when it is whispered in person.

4. Share your feelings as openly and freely as you can without indulging in self-pity. Let your spouse know you'd like to share his or her feelings.

5. Above all, express yourself clearly so he or she won't have to say. "I wonder what was meant by that!"

On the other hand, don't try to read between the lines or interpret a puzzling remark. If you don't understand, ask questions in your next letter. Otherwise take things at "face value."

Telephone

Telephone calls are a quick way to communicate. However, remember overseas calls are very expensive and your spouse does not always have access to a telephone.

Overseas deployments sometimes involve going into a different time zone. The time your spouse may call could be your sleeping hours.

If you need to get important information to your spouse quickly, contact your rear detachment officer to relay the message. This may take some time due to units being spread out in the field.

Taping

If letter writing is difficult for you, consider buying a pair of small tape recorders so that you and your spouse can send "talking" letters. Younger children can also say "Hello, daddy."

Nuisance calls

1. Do not talk to the caller. Hang up immediately. You are in control of your phone, don't talk to anyone unless you want to.

2. Don't provide unknown callers with information such as "my husband is out of town." Children and baby-sitters should be taught to be especially cautious.

3. Don't give your number when someone asks. "What number is this?" Simply ask what number is being called and tell the caller whether he or she is right or wrong.

4. Act as though another adult is in the room with you by saying, "That must have been a wrong number," while hanging up the phone.

5. Buy a whistle. Say you are tired of the phone calls, and blow the whistle into the phone.

6. If the calls are repeated, report them to the military or local police.

7. If the caller threatens life or limb, call the military or local police immediately.

Families take precautions

Directorate of Community Activities

● Don't discuss your spouses absence in public.

● Use the "buddy system." Don't go places alone, especially at night.

● Keep your doors locked at home and in your car.

● Beware of unknown telephone callers. Do not tell them your spouse is deployed. Teach your children and baby-sitters this policy if they answer your telephone.

● Check identification of anyone asking to enter your home while your spouse is away if you don't know them (i.e. repairmen, etc.).

● Know your neighbors. You may need their help on an emergency basis.

● If you notice strangers loitering in your neighborhood, notify the military or local police, include any description possible.

● To discourage burglars, engrave your name or social security number on items. Call the Military Police at 545-5222 for more information.

Fort Benning and other Army installations deploying forces to the Middle East are extending a hand to the families left behind.

That helping hand comes in the form of local family assistance centers, explained Col. Monte Pickens of the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va. He is the director of family support in the CFSC Army Community Service directorate.

The Fort Benning Family Assistance Center, organized and run by the Family Support Division and Directorate of Community Activities, has developed a system to ensure that soldiers' families are cared for during their absence, said Becky Carroll, acting chief of FSD.

The Family Assistance Center has representatives available to provide family assistance in these areas:

- Army Community Service
- Army Emergency Relief
- Army Family Advocacy
- Financial Counseling
- Red Cross
- Transportation
- Finance Office
- Volunteer Supervisor
- Housing
- Chaplain
- Legal Assistance

If family members need help getting a loan due to an emergency in the family, for instance, the Family Assistance Center can direct in the family member to the right activity, Carrol said.

Chris Wigley waits on the curb for the buses carrying the Savannah-bound 197th Brigade soldiers on their way to participate in Operation Desert Shield.

Or if a family member needs budget counseling, the center can help there too, she added.

To make things easier on the family member, the system is broken down into a chain. That way, Carroll said, the family member can go to one place or person with a problem and someone else will find out the answer.

Each unit has a family support group made up of spouses within the unit who have volunteered to help other spouses by listening to problems, answering questions and refering individuals to the proper agencies for solutions.

The volunteers are knowledgeable of the Army's organization, traditions, customs and responsibilities.

The support group has a Chain of Concern, which is used to relay information and concerns to official channels and to ensure family members get the word on events that concern them.

If the support group has not been able to solve a problem or if official approval is needed, information will be passed on to the family support group leader or rear detachment leader. If the problem can't be solved on their level, the rear detachment leader will refer the family member to the center.

"We want to try to eliminate some of the hassles for family members, Carroll said.

Surviving separations:

How Army families can cope with deployment

Army News Service

For many soldiers, the wait is over. But thousands more are packed, still awaiting orders to join Operation Desert Shield — the largest deployment of U.S. troops since the Vietnam War.

Waiting with them are the families who will have to cope with the departure of a loved one.

Anger, fear, hurt, denial — military families experience the entire range of emotions as soldiers prepare to deploy.

However, knowing that those feelings are normal, even predictable, can help families divided by deployments along the road to coping, said officials at the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

"There is no denying the military lifestyle, and especially unexpected deployments to areas where there is unrest, can disrupt the entire family unit," said Maj. Linda Jellen, CFSC's chief of Army Community Service.

"The actual packing to leave is the easy part," she said. "As time draws nearer for departure, these tasks barely cover the tight nerves and tempers under the surface, as the whole family is often on edge."

Jellen explained that each member of the family goes through different feelings during the separation-return cycle.

"With everyone on edge, the frustrations of the situation bubble up. While recognizing the requirements, those left behind might feel that it is unfair that the soldier is leaving.

"There is also the fear of the unknown — will he come back? Will he be hurt?

" Sometimes the parents' feelings are also transmitted to the 10 ways to 'survive' deployment

Directorate of Community Activities

● 1. Set goals. Begin a self-development program.

● 2. Get involved in some activity. Start a new hobby or return to one given up for lack of time.

● 3. Go out occasionally with friends and leave the children with a baby-sitter.

● 4. Don't run home to "mother" if the going gets rough. That is a temporary solution and can be very expensive.

● 5. Keep a diary of your thoughts and activities while your spouse is absent. Include snapshots of yourself and the children.

● 6. If you and your spouse have some differences, try to work them out before you are separated.

● 7. Find a "buddy"— another military spouse who is also alone temporarily. Time passes quicker with a friend.

● 8. Don't sit at home thinking, "Oh, if only he were here." Take the children on an outing. Go to the museum, to the library or to the beach.

● 9. Break up the week with special activities—a Friday night movie or a Tuesday morning shopping trip.

● 10. Once your spouse comes home, take time to adjust to each other.

Family members prepare for sponsor's deployment

Directorate of Community Activities

To receive many the benefits offered by the Army, family members should know where important papers are kept and be able to get them at any time.

They should be kept in a secure and permanent place.

If a safe deposit box is used, check with local banks to see what their regulations are for a spouse to have access to it when the other spouse is away.

If original documents are secured at the bank, copies should be close at hand.

Important documents should include:

- Birth certificate for each member of the immediate family
- Naturalization papers if family member was not born in the United States
- Marriage certificates, to include former marriages
- Court orders that pertain to support and custody of legal dependents
- Divorce decrees
- Adoption papers
- Death certificate of children or former spouse
- Deeds and mortgage document
- Wills
- Power of Attorney
- Proof of service and any other important Army papers
- Family Social Security numbers
- Family hospital card numbers
- Identification card numbers (dependent privileges)
- Inventory of household goods
- Savings bonds and securities
- Insurance policies
- Titles to all automobiles
- Extra set of keys to house, car, mailbox, etc.
- List of credit card numbers
- Copy of latest Leave and Earning Statement

All family members who are 10 years of age and older must have an identification card that is current. ID cards are necessary before the following services can be used:

- Medical services
- Commissary privileges
- Exchange privileges (post exchange, gas station, etc.)
- Library use
- Special services

Check the expiration date on the ID card. A current ID card ensures continued enrollment in Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System to receive medical treatment at either a military hospital or under Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

Check to be sure any child under the age of 10 is also on the DEERS list.

If a family member's ID card is lost while the sponsor is deployed, the rear detachment commander in the soldier's unit should be notified. He will verify the required information from the soldier's personnel records and prepare the appropriate forms.

Family Assistance Center answers most commonly-asked questions

Directorate of Community Activities

Chaplain

Q. Where will religious services be conducted when my spouse deploys?

A. There is a list of services for all faith groups which are conducted through post. Times and locations are provided in a handout.

Q. How can a I contact the chaplain if there is an emergency?

A. You can contact the chaplain at any time in one of the following ways: call the rear detachment personnel and they can provide you with the name and telephone number of the chaplain covering that unit; call the Chaplain Activity Office at 545-2288 or 545-2289 during duty hours; or after duty hours, contact the chaplain through the Staff Duty Officer at 545-2218.

Adjutant General

Q. If a soldier is on assignment instructions, will the family permanently change stations prior to the deployment?

A. If a soldier has PCS orders, but is deployed with a unit, those PCS orders will be revoked and the family will remain here until the soldier returns.

Q. If a soldier is recalled to his unit from a temporary duty school, will he be able to attend the school when he returns from deployment?

A. Commanders are authorized to recall personnel from TDY schools. After this deployment, attempts will be made to reschedule those schools.

Q. If a soldier is scheduled to separate or retire from the service while he is on deployment, will he be involuntary extended?

A. As of now, the soldier will be returned to the continental United States to separate or retire as scheduled. However, if a full mobilization is directed, all releases from the military may be terminated.

Q. If a soldier reenlisted for a specific school or movement option, will he be assigned to that same school or location upon return from deployment?

A. The soldier's retention noncommisioned officer will coordinate the school or movement option upon redeployment to home station. However, the soldier will be deleted from orders to deploy with the unit.

Q. Where is the ID Card Section located?

A. Building 2638, Soldiers' Plaza, Dixie Road. It is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Q. How far in advance can I get an identification card?

A. Forty-five days before expiration date.

Q. How do I get an ID card if sponsor has deployed?

A. If sponsor has deployed, go to ID Card Section, building 2638, with old ID card. Bring certified copies of marriage certificates and certified copy of birth certificate in case the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System computers are down.

Q. What do I do if I lose my ID card?

A. Bring picture proof identification to ID Card Section. If no picture identification is available, bring marriage certificate and Social Security card.

Q. What documentation will be required for issuance of dependent ID cards and Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System enrollment?

A. Certified copies of marriage certificates, certified copies of birth certificates, certificate of living birth of newborn.

Q. How does a soldier enroll his dependents into DEERS?

A. Bring certified copy of birth certificate or copy of Certificate of Live Birth to ID Card Section.

Do family members need a power of attorney to get an ID card?

A. No. Family members are enrolled in DEERS. The noncommisioned officer in charge of ID Card Section has the authorization to sign for the sponsor if he has deployed.

Q. What does a guardian have to do to shop in the Commissary or Post Exchange for children of a sole parent or Army married couples?

A. The guardian needs to bring guardianship papers, power of attorney, child's ID card and picture proof identification. A letter of authorization to shop in Commissary and PX for a period of six months will be issued. The letter will state baby necessities only.

Red Cross

Q. My child gets sick every time my spouse leaves. Is it possible for my spouse not to be deployed based on my child's health?

A. Deletion from deployment will be based upon written medical statements. You must go to Martin Army Community Hospital to speak to the pediatrician. Any statements received from MACH needs to be taken to the command. Decisions will be made by the command.

Q. If there is an emergency in my family while my spouse is deployed, can I receive financial assistance to go home?

A. Yes. If the emergency is in the immediate family of the spouse, Red Cross will make the financial assistance. If the emergency involves non-immediate family members, Army Emergency Relief will assist.

Q. If my spouse needs blood, can I donate blood to him? How safe is the blood?

A. Directed donations of blood for transfer to the deployment area will not be possible. The blood that is transfused goes through a very careful screening process. The blood is safer now than it has ever been.

Q. How will I be notified if my spouse is a casualty? I will be leaving the area to go home.

A. The only source of information with regard to casualties will be the Casualty Assistance Office at Fort Benning and the Chain of Concern from the rear detachment. If you leave the area, you must let the rear detachment know. They will then contact the Casualty Assistance Office closest to where you are to accomplish the notification. No other source of information is valid.

Volunteer Center

Q. Now that I have transportation and some time on my hands, how can I help? Can my child care be reimbursed if I volunteer?

A. There will be many opportunities for volunteering during this period. Call the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5602 for additional information.

Housing

Q. Can my family return to home of record and still retain government family quarters?

A. Yes, but the family must make arrangements to have the quarters looked after. Next-door neighbors should be provided a key in case entrance into quarters by Directorate of Engineering and Housing maintenance is required. The family should also make arrangements for someone to maintain the yard.

Q. Will soldiers residing off-post and receiving BAQ, who are deployed, continue to receive BAQ?

A. Yes. Department of Defense Pay Manual table 3-2-3 authorizes this.

Q. Will soldiers on the housing waiting list receive priority for on-post housing?

A. No. Consideration will be made on a case-by-case basis.

Mail

Q. How long will it take for my correspondence to get to the area of deployment?

A. About two weeks. Mail waits in New York until a load is full. Custom declarations must be on packages mailed. No alcohol, tobacco or religious material may be mailed.

Transportation

Q. Can a soldier have his household goods moved or stored?

A. All soldiers on deployment orders for more than 90 days or an indefinite period of time are authorized non-temporary storage of household goods. Soldiers are not authorized shipment of household goods or a local move on deployment orders.

Q. What criteria will be used in determining storage of personal property?

A. A main consideration is when the security of the soldier's property is in question, and is questionable because of the soldier's absence due to deployment — not because the spouse or family members are departing the area. Property in troop billets and government quarters on the installation is considered adequate security. Questionable security will involve single soldiers and married Army couples who have both deployed, who are living off post.

Q. As a spouse of a soldier deploying, what will I need to do in order to have my household goods stored?

A. Spouses will need a power of attorney to make arrangements for storage of household goods. You will also need a marriage license or a Leave and Earning Statement.

Q. Where will I need to go to make arrangements for storage of household goods?

A. You will need to go to the Transportation Office, Building 280. The hours of operation are 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. or later if required, in order to get your household goods picked up. No appointment is needed. They will be able to assist you within a short period of time.

Finance and Accounting

Q. What additional entitlements will I receive as a result of my spouse serving in a hostile area?

A. Foreign Duty Pay is payable for enlisted soldiers deployed for eight or more continuous days. Foreign Duty Pay rates range from $8 to $22.50 a month depending on rank. Family Separation Allowance Type II is payable to all soldiers whose duty requires separation from their dependents for more than 30 continuous days. Rate of pay is $2 per day or $60 per month. Imminent Danger Pay or Hostile Fire Pay, if authorized, are payable at the rate of $110 per month.

The separation pay will not start until the deployed soldier has been away from his assigned duty station for more than 30 days. The rear detachment commander must submit documentation to the Finance Office in order for this entitlement to start; it is not automatic.

Q. Why does a soldier's separate rations pay stop?

A. Basic allowance for subsistence is an entitlement which belongs to the soldier. The government either provides meals or pays the soldier for meals not provided. While the soldier is deployed, the Army will provide meals; therefore, payment for separation rations will stop.

Q. How do I receive my spouse's Leave and Earnings Statement while he is deployed?

A. All Leave and Earnings Statements will be provided to the unit's rear detachment commander. If a soldier desires for his spouse to receive his LES, he must sign a statement giving the unit authority to release the LES.

Q. My spouse is due for a military pay raise in September. Will his deployment have an effect on this?

A. No. The raise will go into effect as scheduled.

Q. My spouse and I have an allotment that needs to be stopped in April. What will happen?

A. The soldier has to stop the allotment. It can be accomplished from overseas, but it would be better to put in the paperwork now if you know it's going to stop.

Civilians prepare BDUs for deploying soldiers

Many employees work around clock

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Besides military personnel participating in Operation Desert Shield, there are many civilians who are also working hard to make the mission a success.

Some of them are from the Directorate of Logistics Central Initial Issue Point located at the 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion.

Twenty employees of the CIIP voluntarily worked around the clock preparing uniforms for Fort Benning soldiers deploying to the Middle East.

Seamstresses sewed American flags, unit patches and U.S. Army tags on more than 17,000 desert camouflage battle dress uniforms in only four days.

Larry Strickland, Chief of the CIIP, said he was told last Thursday evening that desert BDU's were on the way to his shop for sewing. Their job was to have them ready for the soldiers Monday morning.

The CIIP immediately put two 12-hour shifts into operation. "I called the employees together and explained the situation," Strickland said. "Once everyone found out that it was in support of Operation Desert Shield, they all volunteered."

According to Strickland, even employees who can't sew wanted to work.

Soldiers from the Infantry Training Center who were waiting to begin training also volunteered for the project. They helped by moving the uniforms to various locations so the seamstresses could spend more time at their machines.

"We couldn't have done it without the soldiers' help," Strickland said. "They really did a good job."

The uniforms were finished on schedule and soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade received them in time for their deployment this week.

The CIIP's ability to complete a job of this magnitude on such short notice is a real source of pride for everyone involved, Strickland said.

He attributes the success of the project to the patriotism and dedication of the participants, both civilian and military.

School lunch prices to rise

Fort Benning Schools

Lunches will cost more for students attending Fort Benning schools, school officials have announced.

"Even though most neighboring Georgia and Alabama systems have increased their meal prices in the last several years, until this last year we have been able to use cash reserves in our lunchroom account to keep prices stable," said Richard Skinner, Assistant Superintendent for Logistics.

"The school board reviewed the information regarding the school meal program at the July school board meeting. The board discussed the fact that until last year, there had been year-end bonuses from the U.S. Department of Agriculture school meal program.

"Those bonuses were no longer available, and, consequently, Fort Benning's school meal program sustained an approximate $10,000 loss during the 1989-90 school year.

"The board determined, therefore, that an increase in meal prices was necessary in order to keep our school meal fund on a break-even basis."

New prices reflect an increase of five cents in breakfast costs for students, a 10 cents increase in lunch costs for students, a five cent increase for extra milks for students, a 10-cent increase in breakfast for adults, and a 25 cents increase in lunches for adults.

The new prices are:

	Breakfast	Lunch
Student, full pay (w/coupon)	$.50	$.80
Student, reduced pay	$.30	$.45
Adult	$1.00	$1.75
Extra milk	$.20	$.20

"The new approved meal prices for the Fort Benning schools are comparable to or lower than those of the neighboring systems," said Skinner.

"We are confident that these price increases will enable us to maintain the quality lunchroom programs that currently exist in each of our schools."

Employees, units receive Project SPIRIT awards

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

"We are here to say 'good job' and 'thank you' to those of you who lead the the way in improving productivity ... it is imperative that others follow your lead in using what we have to the fullest."

With these words, Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff congratulated and commended the Directorate of Engineering and Housing and the Directorate of Informatiom Management for winning the Project SPIRIT (Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in TRADOC) awards Aug. 14.

Along with the individual awards, the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity was honored as the command/major unit winner of the SPIRIT award, the Directorate of Logistics was the Directorate Staff winner, and the Equal Opportunity Office won for personal and special staff.

The idea behind Project SPIRIT is that through more efficient use of the government's resources, the Army will become a greater defense asset. For fiscal 1989, 65 actions were submitted, resulting in the government saving $12 million, said Fuller.

The individual winners were: Directorate of Engineering and Housing; Craig D. Taylor, chief, Buildings and Structures Branch, Facilities Maintenance and Operations Division; Stephen A. Turner, Energy Management Branch, Facilities Maintenance and Operations Division; Dom DeCarlo, Unit and Housing Branch, Facilities Maintenance Division; Dennis Bonair, Engineering and Services Branch, Engineering Division, Directorate of Information Management; Sgt, 1st Class Sharon M. It's goodbye to long lines at Benning commissary

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Do long lines at the checkout counters of most stores make your blood boil? Do you ever wish that someone would come up with a quicker, more efficient system to get you checked through the line and on your way?

Starting Aug. 28, the commissary will do just that. According to commissary officer Larry J. Bentley, a new course of action will be implemented to help alleviate the problem of long lines at the checkout counter.

The new system, known as "queuing," is a program designed to more effectively direct traffic through the checkout line, thus cutting down on the amount of time customers spend waiting in line, said Bentley.

"We want to continue to serve our customers in the quickest, most efficient manner possible, and we hope this program will prove helpful to them. It will take a little while to work out all of the bugs, because it is new. But, I have every confidence that the program will prove invaluable to the customer," said Bentley.

The program will eliminate the need for lines forming at every register. Instead, only two

OPERATION DESERT SHIELD

MIDEAST UPDATE

Navy ships intercept Iraqi coastal tankers

Two U.S. Navy ships intercepted two Iraqi coastal ships Aug. 17, Defense Department officials report.

The Iraqi ships were moving toward Iraq and were located off the Kuwait coast, and the U.S.S. England and U.S.S. Bradley challenged the Iraqi ships, officials said.

After assessing that the vessels were empty, they were allowed to proceed. The ships were not boarded.

Navy deploys ships to Mediterranean Sea

The U.S.S. John F. Kennedy and its accompanying battle group have been deployed to the Eastern Mediterranean.

The U.S.S. Denobola, the last of the Navy's eight fast sealift ships, has been activated and is preparing to sail to the Port of Savannah, Ga., to take on equipment in support of Operation Desert Shield.

U.S. Air Force KC-135 tankers, and A-10 "Thunderbolt II" ground attack aircraft from Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, South Carolina, have begun arriving today in the Middle East.

Nine of the Military Sealift Command's Ready Reserve Force ships have been activated and are moving to loading ports in support of Operation Desert Shield.

The U.S. Air Force has deployed four Air Transportable Hospitals to the region. Medical personnel and equipment have come from MacDill Air Force Base, Fla.; Langley Air Force Base, Va; Shaw Air Force Base, S.C.; and Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, N.C.

Also arriving in the region are elements of the Army's 101st Aviation Brigade, Fort Campbell, Kentucky.

Army sets up toll-free number for families

Unaccompanied Army family members returning from the Middle East have a newly established, 24-hour, toll-free telephone line by which to seek information and assistance as they relocate.

Families returning from the Middle East include those of attache and embassy personnel working in the region, said Maj. Tom Bowlin, a U.S. Forces Command joint planner in the personnel division.

Set up and operated by the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va., the new number — 1-800-542-9254 — is staffed daily by teams able to provide information on resources.

Reserve airfleet plans stage one activation

Gen. H.T. Johnson, commander in chief of U.S. Transportation Command and the Military Airlift Command announced Aug. 17 that he will activate stage one (lowest stage) of the Civil Reserve Air Fleet plan in order to meet mounting airlift requirements for Operation Desert Shield in the Middle East.

The capability of both military aircraft and existing support provided by civilian air lines will be supplemented by aircraft activated under CRAF. CRAF airlift support is expected to be needed for several weeks.

The CRAF program is designed with three stages so that MAC can tailor the airlift force needed for any contingency. Stage one calls for civilian air lines that are part of the CRAF to provide airplanes within 24 hours of MAC's request. These aircraft would be used to augment MAC's routine overseas missions as well as operations in the Middle East.

The CRAF currently includes 29 airlines. In the first stage, 16 civilian airlines would provide up to 38 airplanes.

Soldiers may recover cost of unused tickets

Soldiers and their families whose airline travel plans had to be cancelled due to Operation Desert Shield may be able to recover the cost of their tickets.

According to a message to the field from the Military Traffic Management Command headquarters in Falls Church, Va., many airlines have offered help to soldiers who bought non-refundable airline tickets for vacation travel but were unable to use them because of deployment to the Middle East.

The message, sent to the worldwide Army on Aug. 13, says that U.S. air carriers have offered options ranging from full refunds to waivers of cancellation penalties and reticketing. Some of the airlines, it said, will honor deployed soldiers' tickets up to a year later.

To date, airlines offering waivers include American Airlines, America West, Continental Airlines, Delta Air Lines, Pan American World Airways, TWA, United Airlines, USAIR and Southwest Airlines, MTMC officials say.

Heat poses medical threat

Army News Service

Heat injuries initially will be the largest of numerous medical threats facing American troops deployed to Saudi Arabia as part of Operation Desert Shield, say officials at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research.

"During August, temperatures in Saudi Arabia often fall between 110 to 120 degrees Fahrenheit during the daylight hours and drop to about 80 degrees Fahrenheit in the evening," said Maj. Patrick W. Kelley, chief of advanced preventive medicine for WRAIR.

"Most of our troops are largely unacclimatized to temperatures that hot. It's during the first 24 to 48 hours that soldiers must deal with the effect of the heat as well as jet lag and possible dehydration from the plane flight to Saudi Arabia.

"The availability of water will continue to be a consideration, however, because much of the water available in Saudi Arabia is desalinated seawater that is piped in great distances."

After the first 48 hours of deployment, the next biggest concern for field operations will be diarrhea, Kelley said. Individuals can get diarrhea through consuming contaminated food and beverages.

Soldiers can reduce their chances of getting diarrhea by washing their hands after using the latrines and by avoiding potentially unsafe native cuisine and beverages.

The third major health concern is sandfly fever. August is the worst time of the year for sandflies, he said. Sandfly fever is an insect vector-borne disease. It's not fatal, but does make a person quite debilitated with flu-like symptoms.

"We have no vaccine against this," Kelley said. "But if soldiers will wear their uniforms correctly, with their sleeves rolled down, and use the insect repellent lotion issued to them, they can reduce the likelihood of getting bitten by sandflies."

Normally, Kelley added, malaria, hepatitis A and typhoid fever would be a concern for any American traveling to the Middle East.

"Malaria is not a problem in Kuwait, but there are spots in Saudi Arabia where it still exists," Kelley said. "However, we don't feel it will be a major concern for our soldiers because every week while exposed they will be administered an effective anti-malarial drug called Chloroquine."

Military personnel are also administered immune serum globulin or ISG to prevent them from getting Hepatitis A. The drug ISG has proven to be 90 percent effective in preventing the disease.

Typhoid fever shouldn't be a major problem because soldiers are vaccinated against it and sanitary precautions are generally effective, Kelley said. The vaccine is said to be 70- to 80-percent effective.

"Fortunately, many of the first units deployed to Saudi Arabia have had a fair amount of familiarity with the medical threats faced in this part of the world," Kelley said. The 82nd Airborne regularly sends battalions to train in Egypt, and the 24th Infantry Division's main mission is to prepare for armored warfare in the desert.

"Units sent in subsequently have been better informed about these medical hazards," Kelley said.

"We are now preparing to educate the Army doctors, nurses and noncommissioned officers around the country about these particular medical threats," he added.

The U.S. Army Medical Research and Development Command has been tasked to provide three preventive medicine physicians to help develop a curriculum at the Academy of Health Sciences, Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

The physicians will then lead teams composed of environmental scientists, chemical casualty officers and entomologists who will train medical personnel fillers for field medical units around the country about these medical problems.

Threat of Iraqi terrorism heightens

Army News Service

On the heels of a call by the leader of an Iraqi-supported terrorist group for attacks on United States interests and Arab allies, Army officials are cautioning soldiers and family members to be on guard against possible terrorist actions.

A wire service story reported Aug. 16 that Abu Abbas has ordered his guerrillas to attack U.S. interests around the world and particularly troops deployed in Saudi Arabia. One report from the region suggests that several thousand Palestinian guerrillas have volunteered to help Iraq in terroristic attacks.

Last year the State Department removed Iraq from its list of countries sponsoring terrorism. Several months ago, reports from the Middle East suggested that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein was renewing his support for terrorists in Baghdad led by Abu Nidal.

Now, as the multinational forces in the Persian Gulf tighten the blockade against Iraq, Army officials said terrorist strikes are more likely than ever.

Army officials have assembled a wealth of information which can assist soldiers and their families in protecting themselves from terrorism.

By definition, terrorists strike without warning, most often against undefended and easily accessible individuals. Such acts are most likely to succeed when people are lax in personal security and begin following predictable daily routines.

The key thing to remember is to be alert, assume nothing, be prepared to act, and use good common sense.

Here are some additional steps you can take to safeguard against terrorist attacks:

- Be alert to the people around you.
- Remember that identification cards can be forged.
- Carefully examine all of your mail before opening it.
- Be alert for abandoned or unusual packages. If you become suspicious about a package or letter, the best procedure is to isolate the item until an expert can be contacted.

Postal officials announce units' mailing addresses

Army News Service

Here are the mailing addresses that have been established for Operation Desert Shield.

Army postal officials say using the proper Army Post Office number will reduce transit and sorting time at the military post office.

- 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), APO NY 09309
- 82nd Airborne Division, APO, N.Y. 09656.
- 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), APO, N.Y. 09315.
- 1st Corps Support Command, Fort Bragg, APO, N.Y. 09657.
- 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate) (Mechanized), APO, N.Y. 09315.
- 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade, APO, N.Y. 09656.
- 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment, APO, N.Y. 09209.
- 1st Cavalry Division, APO N.Y. 09306.
- 2nd Armored Division, APO N.Y. 09371.

Officials say that mail sent to a soldier's regular mailing address will be forwarded.

To keep soldiers' mail flowing smoothly, they say that the military has placed a temporary restriction limiting first class mail to 12 ounces or less.

Currently, delivery time between the continental United States and Saudi Arabia is about 10 days.

Luncheon highlights celebration of Women's Equality Day here

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A luncheon commemorating women's accomplishments highlights the post's celebration of Women's Equality Day.

The day, by presidential proclamation, is Sunday.

The luncheon is today at 11:30 a.m. in the Supper Club at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Linda Pierce, clerk of Superior Court, Columbus Consolidated Government, is the keynote speaker.

"Women's Equality Day Commemorates the certification of the 19th Amendment (to the U.S. Constitution), which gave women the right to vote.

Rosemary Howard, the Department of Defense's Federal Women's Program manager, said the day is tied to Armed Forces Voters Week, which begins Monday.

Howard passed on some facts about women and voting. For example:

●In 1872, Susan B. Anthony and several other women were arrested for voting.

●The Women's Suffrage Amendment, to give women the right to vote, was first introduced in Congress in 1878 and then reintroduced every year for the next 40 years.

●In 1890, Wyoming became the first state to give women the vote.

●In 1916, Jeannette Rankin of Montana became the first woman elected to the U.S. House of Representatives.

●By 1917, 30 states allowed women to vote.

●The 19th Amendment was ratified on Aug. 18, 1920, and was certified by the secretary of state eight days later. An amendment is ratified when it receives enough votes to pass and is certified when it is determines that the count was correct.

Bicycle thefts increase

By Paul Kennedy
Crime Prevention

An increase in bicycle thefts has occurred on Fort Benning in the last few months, according to Military Police officials.

This is not due to increased bicyclist activity, but mainly because individuals are not properly securing their bicycles, officials say.

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service has a variety of locking devices, which are suitable for bicycle security and are relatively inexpensive.

For soldiers living in the barracks, units should provide some type of bicycle rack to secure bicycles.

In housing areas, bicycles can be stored in storage sheds, in the house or locked to a stationary fixed object.

Taking these precautionary measures will not eliminate the possibility of becoming a victim of a bicycle theft, however they will reduce the risk of becoming a victim of a theft, officials said.

One question individuals may ask is, "What can I do to assist the MP's in their investigation and recovery of a stolen bicycle?"

The answer: have your bicycle registered with the Provost Marshal's Office, Crime Prevention Section.

Registration is Monday through Friday during regular duty hours, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

There is no fee for registration. All that is needed is the serial number, make and model. And, the process only takes about five minutes.

Also, individuals should maintain a copy of the serial number and a picture, if possible, to identify a bicycle in case it is recovered.

The Crime Prevention Section of the Military Police Activity has available an electric engraver that can be used by anyone in the Fort Benning community to mark valuables with other identifying marks, such as driver's license number, etc.

The engraver can be signed out Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Anyone wanting to report a crime should call the Military Police desk sergeant at 545-5222.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Two promising new gas technologies for faster, more economical, and more efficient drying in the food processing industry are now in development.

The first is the microgas dryer being developed by Energy International Inc. for the Gas Research Institute. The dryer is a hybrid thermal/dielectric (a nonconductor of electricity) heating system combined with a cogeneration unit.

The second is the Unison pulse combustion dryer being developed and tested by Bepex Corporation, in conjunction with the American Gas Association Laboratories and the Gas Research Institute.

Natural gas is the dominant energy source within the food processing industry, an industry that ranks fifth in total energy consumption. Drying, the removal of moisture from a product, is one of the most energy-intensive processes in the food industry.

Gas is the preferred fuel for drying because it is the only fuel that burns cleanly enough to be applied directly to the product.

Most dryers in the food industry are air dryers. In this drying process a temperature and a pressure gradient develop between the air and the interior parts of the product. Typically, the air in the air dryer is heated directly by the combustion of natural gas.

One of the most popular of the air dryers is the versatile tunnel dryer. Heated air is introduced into the tunnel and circulates through the product. The heated air absorbs moisture from the product and is then exhausted.

Microwave dryers have been introduced recently in the food processing industry. While they have not been used for complete product drying, microwave dryers have been used successfully for the final drying of pasta.

The microgas dryer is an alternative to the conventional tunnel dryer and the electric microwave dryer. By combining the thermal/microwave system with a cogeneration unit, the microgas dryer not only provides the clean and economical advantages of drying with natural gas, but also provides all the electric requirements for the dryer and microwave unit.

Gas-heated hot air is used to partially remove moisture and to help control product temperature to avoid overheating. Microwaves, or radio-frequency waves, heat the food product throughout its entire volume, which means higher drying rates and improved product quality.

Preliminary estimates indicate that the microgas dryer can decrease energy costs by 30 percent. By shortening cleaning and processing time, the microgas dryer also can raise productivity by as much as 35 percent.

Food processing as a whole is an energy-intensive industry, and drying and cooking are its major energy-consuming activities.

The development of new gas technologies that can save money, time, and energy is therefore especially important. The microgas and Unison dryers, which increase efficiency, decrease cost and improve product quality, are important examples of such new technologies.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Protect your home while away

By Adraine Williams
Crime Prevention

The vacation season is still here, and the thieves are still around. So when leaving your home for an extended period of time, don't forget to ensure that the following things have been accomplished.

Never leave your home for an extended period of time without ensuring that all doors and windows are locked.

Give a trusted friend or neighbor a key to your home in case of an emergency. Ask that he or she collect your mail and newspapers and place these items inside of your home. A thief always looks for a pile of mail and newspaper.

Request a quarters check from the Military Police. To accomplish this, the requester must come to the MP station and notify the desk sergeant, who will ensure that the necessary paperwork is filled out.

After the paperwork has been filled out, the Military Police will handle the rest. Once you have departed the area,the Military Police will begin to check your home twice daily.

The Military Police are not allowed to check the inside of your home unless it appears to have been burglarized. A check of your home will be accomplished until you return from your vacation.

Tips to help protect your home:

● Leave some lights on and the radio playing.

● Keep your garage door closed and locked.

● Use inexpensive timing devices to turn inside lights, radios and televisions on and off at different times.

● Remember there is no sure fire way to prevent your home from being burglarized. But, taking proper crime prevention measures will deter the thief and have him or her look elsewhere.

Shoplifters

Stealing out of our pockets

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

It may be the risk of being caught, lack of money or just plain greed. But, whatever the reason, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service at Fort Benning is losing thousands of dollars.

Shoplifting.

Last year, 249 people were detained for stealing about $10,000 worth of merchandise, according to Eugene R. Wheeler, exchange manager. That does not include the shoplifters who are not caught.

Wheeler and Gary Raymond, area chief of security for AAFES, estimate that only one in every 10 shoplifters is caught.

At an estimated average of $37 worth of merchandise stolen per shoplifter, the amount skyrockets to nearly a hundred thousand dollars worth of merchandise and profits stolen from the shelves a year, and the numbers continue to rise.

Although the shoplifter may get away with the loot, it is the honest customer who ends up paying, said Wheeler.

Prices inevitably rise to make up for the losses, security tightens and customers' shopping conveniences suffers.

Those who are not AAFES shoppers end up losing too, because a part of AAFES profits goes into a fund for Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

"Less profits means less money goes to the soldier and his family," Wheeler said.

There is not a certain type person who is a shoplifter, Raymond said. The spectrum is wide, ranging from privates to offices to children to spouses, he said.

The reasons for shoplifting are just as diverse.

"Many times, the shoplifter will have money in his pocket to pay for the items he has stolen," Wheeler said.

"There was one instance where a soldier had just cashed his paycheck in the store and then shoplifted a can of snuff," Wheeler said.

"His reason he said was he didn't want to stand in line to pay for it," Wheeler said.

In an effort to bring shoplifting to a halt, AAFES has placed plain-clothed detectives and 22 surveillance monitors, which are constantly recording customers' activities. A sign in front of the store informs customers of the cameras.

Detectives are also placed at other AAFES facilities including the branch exchanges on post.

"We don't like the idea of being a big brother, but we hope that our efforts will deter shoplifting," Wheeler said.

Raymond voiced a desire to have more security systems installed, but this wouldn't adhere to AAFES's policy of customer convenience, he said. However, he admitted that shoppers do end up suffering.

For example, customers must wait longer for refunds when returning items. AAFES personnel now double-check returned merchandise to see if it was stolen. The procedure has been successful in catching shoplifters.

The consequences of being caught shoplifting are severe.

According to Maj. Don Curry, Staff Judge Adcovate's chief of Criminal Law, soldiers caught shoplifting can ruin their military careers.

The soldier, under his commander's decision, is punishable under the Uniformed Code of Military Justice.

Curry said that the maximum punishment for stealing items with a value of $100 or less is a bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to pay grade E-1 and confinement for six months.

The maximum punishment for stealing items with a value of $100 or more is a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to pay grade E-1 and confinement for five years, he said.

Family members caught shoplifting are referred to civilian magistrate court.

Because Post Exchange and Commissary privileges are just that — privileges — they can be revoked, too, Curry said.

According to Wheeler, the honest customer can do something to stop shoplifters.

"If a customer sees someone he thinks is shoplifting, he should go immediately to any AAFES employee and report it," he said. "Customers should not try to approach the shoplifter themselves."

Wheeler also said that soldiers can impress on their family members the severity of shoplifting.

"The consequences of shoplifting are not worth throwing away your career," Wheeler said.

32nd Infantry reunites here

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Members of the 32nd Infantry Regiment, family and friends, gathered at Fort Benning recently to celebrated the unit's first official reunion.

The unit, called "The Queen's Own," was organized 74 years ago in Hawaii. Soldiers who attended the reunion had seen battle during World War II or the Korean War.

Part of the unit's history comes from the Korean War when soldiers of 1st Battalion were cut off at the Chosin Reservoir.

Under the command of Lt. Col. Don C. Faith, the battalion was led through five days of fighting, often resulting in hand-to-hand combat.

There were severe shortages of ammunition and supplies and almost non-existent communication. The battalion entered the fight with over 1,300 soldiers and returned three days later with only 136, most of who were wounded. Faith was killed while organizing an assault.

Some of the Chosin survivors were present at the reunion.

Among some of the activities planned for the event was a memorial service for deceased soldiers of the unit and a tribute to the living soldiers held at the Regimental Chapel of the Infantry on Sandhill.

During the memorial service, Lt. Col. James Davis, present commander of 3rd Battalion, 32 Infantry Regiment, remembered the fallen soldiers, one of which included Lt. Col. Don C. Faith.

"Thousands of men have both died and been victorious under the colors of the 32nd Infantry," Davis said. "This ceremony is not to commemorate soley the dead, but to celebrate their bravery, their commitment, and their belief in freedom."

Also, there was awards ceremony to recognize the soldiers' accomplishments during their time in war.

Among the soldiers recognized were: Sgt. 1st Class Dolphus Belch, Joseph Reding, Ruben Hoffer, Capt. John H. Rines, Pfc. Robert Norris, Sgt. 1st Class Lester J. Pitzer, Sgt. William Grasty, Sgt. Chester Bair, Sgt. 1st Class Alan M. Yager and Sgt. Leroy Knackstedt.

Current company commanders of 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt., presented the awards.

Parent involvement vital to DoD child care program

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense's child care program is regulated and watched very closely. But regulations aren't fail-safe, and parents shouldn't take their children's care for granted.

That word comes from Linda Smith, DoD's child development program coordinator.

In the last 10 years, the relationship between child care and military readiness has developed into more regulation and stricter controls.

"There's no doubt that command and department oversight and the quality of care today are much improved from just five years ago. Parents have an obligation, however, to be equally concerned and involved," Smith said.

The Military Child Care Act of 1989 requires that child care centers organize parent advisory boards. "We hope that requirement extends to home care as well," Smith added.

Together, DoD and the military have developed stringent facility and safety standards. Training requirements are now mandated for program staff and providers.

This year, 1,000 child development positions are being added to installation programs and facilities. Higher wages have been approved to help reduce care giver turnover and attract better trained staff.

DoD has reached a milestone where safety and building standards are pretty much in check. Since 1985, DoD has built and approved plans to build or modify more than 150 child care centers. The rapid changes taking place in Europe and within the military services have caused defense officials to review all military construction projects, including child care facilities. DoD is striving, however, to meet future needs as the defense budget allows.

While safety, health and building defects are often easily spotted, parents should pay equal attention to the children's physical, emotional and educational environment," she said.

"By and large, we, as child care providers, want to be responsive to children, but it's not only the provider's responsibility," Smith said. "The parents must be equally concerned, involved and alert." She suggested that parents look as critically at the quality of care as they do at the condition of the facility.

"Look at the quality of interaction between care givers and the children. Ask questions. Soon, parents can begin looking for the DoD operating certificate in the child care centers," she said. "All installation child care programs should be certified by spring 1991."

Similar to state child care licenses, the certificates are issued following unannounced command or service headquarters' inspections.

Smith suggested parents take time to talk to the care giver, even in the rush to get to work or get home: "Take a minute in the morning or evening to ask how the day went, ask if Tommy ate well or if Cindy got enough rest. I think that sends a very important message to the care giver that the parent is concerned about the quality of care and the child's development.

"Whether at a center or in home care, take a look at the daily activity schedule. Are snacks and naps scheduled at appropriate times for the child's age? Are the activities proper for the age group? Are children allowed to choose their own activities based on their particular interests? It often helps to look at the surroundings and activities from the children's perspective," she said.

Smith suggested that parents look closely at the quality of care for infants:

- Are they held for feeding?
- Are infants allowed in crawl areas to explore and move around?
- Are they taken outdoors in good weather?
- Do care givers talk, sing and read to them?
- Do care givers respond to infant cries and provide plenty of individual attention?

She also discussed the challenge of caring for toddlers. "They're active, on the go and unable to verbalize what they want, like and dislike, and how they feel," she said. Parents should look carefully at the type of play equipment for toddlers and preschoolers. The size may be right, but the purpose may be wrong. What's designed for preschoolers can be inappropriate for toddlers, she warned.

"Toy kitchens and climbing equipment are often beyond the toddler's grasp," she said. "Toddlers are curious. They will climb into the toy oven and up higher than safety allows."

Survey shows how families feel about Army child care

Army News Service

One of the greatest needs in the Army child care is before and after school care, based on findings of a survey conducted at Fort Benning and two other Army installations.

The finding is the result of the first survey ever conducted to determine the preferences of parents for child care service.

The survey was conducted at Fort Monroe, Va., Fort McClellan, Ala., and Fort Benning. The three posts represented small, medium and large installations, respectively, in the command.

Analysis showed that most parents would use several of the child care programs on their posts if they were available.

Kim Jahn, Training and Doctrine Command's family child care manager, oversaw the conduct of the survey. "We feel the survey validates what we always felt, that parents would use the child development centers if they had the choice," she said.

TRADOC officials feel the survey results can be applied throughout the command because the numbers of responses were so high. Analysis showed a 56 percent return of questionnaires; about 46 percent would have ensured 95 percent confidence that the results could apply command-wide.

The survey also seems to support the current method of determining facilities needed for child care programs throughout the Army. That method used by the civil engineers is based on a formula that takes into account the population of a post.

Installation commanders and child care specialists throughout TRADOC can use the results of the survey to try to provide the types of child care needed, according to Jahn.

The survey may not apply throughout the Army, she said, because child care demand may be affected by types of missions and other factors.

Parents were asked to indicate the type of child care they needed — full day, part day, before and after school, and hourly. The results showed that in three of the categories there were mixed conclusions; installations' capabilities were greater for some types of care and less for others. But in the category of before and after school care, the demand far outstripped the installations' capabilities.

"What this means to us is that we must find some way to satisfy this need," Jahn said.

Fishing at night brings bountiful bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

During the hot weeks of summer and early fall, many bass fishing guides take their clients out at night to escape the heat. Frequently, they can catch bass as the fish move into the shallows to feed.

One of the best shallow water areas to consider, said popular guide and bass tournament pro Randy Fite, is around the rock riprap of dams and bridges.

"The rocks offer natural habitat and hiding places for all types of small creatures," explained the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler, "including crayfish, lizards and small minnows.

"Under the cover of darkness, they frequently become more active, and their activity brings in larger fish, including bass.

"You can work a crankbait down the riprap, bouncing it off the rocks to imitate a crayfish, and often each outstanding stringers of bass."

Jigs, buzz baits, and spinnerbaits will also produce well, especially when retrieved slowly. Plastic worms are more difficult because the sliding sinker frequently snags in the rocks.

"You can begin by working your way down a riprap bank," explained the Johnson pro, "but pay particular attention to corners or angles where the riprap changes direction. Work corners from several directions and with different lures."

Fite said he is continually surprised at how shallow bass will move in the rocks when they're feeding at night.

Sometimes, it seems as if there isn't enough water to cover their dorsal fins.

"Make your casts right to the waterline," he advised, "and be ready for a strike anytime. Even the big bass will move into really thin water."

Anglers aren't always the only ones out at night, however, and going fishing doesn't automatically guarantee catching bass, no matter how shallow they may be.

"A client had agreed to a night fishing trip to Lake Conroe, north of Houston," recalled Fite, "and we began by casting crankbaits along the rock riprap near the dam.

"The fish were quite shallow that night so we really had to cast close to the shoreline to catch them.

"Sometimes, our lures would actually land on the bank and we'd just pull them down into the water and start cranking them in."

This technique worked fine, said Fite, until his lure snagged on the bank. At least he thought it had snagged.

"It was really dark so I couldn't see anything," said the Johnson pro," "so we started to troll over to free it. At the same time, I jerked the rod to try to get the plug loose.

"Suddenly, my rod heeled over like I had a big bass on, but the lure started heading away from me up the rocks instead of across the water.

"I kept tight pressure on the line, and when I reached the bank I discovered I'd hooked a raccoon."

Fite's cast had evidently landed right in front of the animal as it patrolled the rocks looking for crayfish, and thinking it might be edible, had picked it up. Fite felt the resistence and set the hook.

"It took a little careful maneuvering, but we finally worked the lure free and the raccoon left to do his fishing somewhere else," said the guide. "My client and I continued working our way down the riprap, but I was a lot more careful about my casting the rest of the night."

Powerlifting enhances one's size, strength

By Dean Rose

The payoff to the military is obvious; a stronger body is better able to do things like pass the Army Physical Fitness Test, carry rucksacks and walk long distances.

The idea is that a strong body and an aerobically fit body are not mutually exclusive goals. The best examples of this are powerlifters who have been able to mix the aerobic goals of a military career with successful powerlifting competition.

A powerlifting routine is geared around low repetitions done at high weight through a full range of motion. While the workouts need to be intense, a lifter only goes on "heavy" on a particular body part once a week. An hour to hour and a half workout a day four days a week is sufficient to produce a strong individual in a surprisingly short time.

Other keys to powerlifting routine are proper rest and nutrition, not necessarily to include nutritional supplements. Research indicates that proper rest and nutrition are fundamental to successful powerlifting.

The success of various supplements depends upon the individual lifter's body and the placebo effect they tend to have on a lifter's mental attitude.

Steroids, prevalent in lifting as in other sports, are not mandatory for lifting. Several post lifters, including me, have made excellent strength gains without taking steroids and risking potentially severe side effects: liver damage, acne, hirsutism, baldness, fluid retention, decreased sperm count and muscle strength increasing so fast that tendons and ligaments snap.

However, as a powerlifter gets stronger, he may have to suffer from comments about being a steroid user from those who cannot exercise the discipline and perseverance needed to get good results.

Powerlifting as a sport grew out of efforts to develop a sport more indicative of pure strength than the technique heavy Olympic lifting events. Powerlifting consists of three events: squat, bench press and dead lift. During a lift, one gets three attempts at each lift. The highest successful attempt from each event to finish the meet.

Lifters compete against individuals of roughly their same body weight and strength level. Lifters are divided by weight class and age. With this system, a 150-pound beginner does not have to compete against a 250-pound world class lifter.

The system is also tailor made for setting goals, much like a runner tries to achieve a certain times and competes against himself.

There are several national organizations which oversee and regulate powerlifting. Fort Benning meets abide by the rules and regulations of the U.S. Powerlifting Federation.

Results from test show bass adequate

Results from seine samples obtained by the Fish and Wildlife Branch during mid-July indicate that King's Pond presently holds adequate numbers of bass and bream.

The "No Bass Fishing" signs have been removed and bass fishermen may begin to remove bass from the pond according to the limits set forth in the installation's hunting and fishing regulation.

The limit for bass is 10 per day, 12 inches or above.

Averett's Pond was drained and restocked with channel catfish, bass and bream during 1988-1989.

A seine sample conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Branch indicates the pond is ready to be fished in. The pond will be open for fishing when possible. Check the hunter access boards for daily fishing opportunities.

How to help children deal with separation

USAIC Chaplain's Office

"Should my children see me cry?"

Any of the wives or husbands of soldiers recently shipped out to Saudi Arabia may have tossed this question around, even if subconsciously.

Grief is one of the most difficult processes for most people, experts say.

"If your children do not see you cry," said Chaplain Rick Roggia, chief of the Chaplains' Family Life Center, "they will cry for you."

He explained that children may experience the same feelings as their parents do when faced by separation.

Roggia explained that if parents are not honest, reality of the separation is avoided, and children remain totally unprepared for the pain they will eventually feel. Deep down, the children will then feel as if the parent left behind has lied to them, saying that everything is fine.

Helping a child cope with the emotions of separation requires that the family be open to the honest expression of feelings.

The following advice is from the Family Readiness Handbook from Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Before deployment

1. Spend time explaining at the child's level, why the parent is going, where, with whom (i.e., with Mary's Dad) and for how long he will be gone.

2. Sit down with the whole family and talk about feels. Let each family member express how they feel about the separation. Talk about what will happen when dad or mom is gone, and what will be different when he returns.

3. Let the older children relate their assessments of previous deployments with younger children; how long it seemed, what they did, how they felt during the separation.

During deployment

1. Display pictures of father at the kid's eye level. Let each child have a picture of himself with dad in their room.

2. Routine is important. Keep the same rules and family schedule. The children need the stability of unbroken routine.

3. Make opportunities for special outings, especially on weekends and holidays when dad would usually be home. (i.e., picnics, breakfast out, visit historic sites, build a bird feeder together.) Encourage writing letters and enclose school work or drawings.

4. Have the parent who is gone write a separate letter to each child occasionally, mailed in a separate envelope. That extra 25 cents is well worth it.

5. The deployed parent can read stories and talk to "the kids on tape."

6. Have each child choose a chore that the deployed parent usually does. It will be a special contribution to maintain the house and will develop responsibility.

7. Keep in touch with teachers. Work together to evaluate, avert or redirect unusual behavior.

8. Discuss with the kids that people do change, so after a long period of separation, they may see some changes in the deployed parent. They will adjust better to the changes if they are explained — they will know that the deployed parent's seemingly "strange" behavior does not mean he does not love them.

Experts say that it is better to communicate painful feelings than to leave important things left unsaid. This is important to keep in mind when saying farewell to the soldier, as well as in attending to children during the separation.

To learn more about parenting in times of separation, attend the next Systematic Training for Effective Parenting Class offered by the Chaplains' Family Life Center. There is no cost or obligation for the class.

Reflections Reflections

Soldiers must do more with less

By James Leston
Sand Hill Chaplain's Office

Our soldiers face new pressures; they must do more with less while maintaining quality job performance.

A strong faith in God and application of Biblical principles can help soldiers maintain their spiritual and professional edge within the ever-changing military environment.

Our spiritual life cannot be separated from our daily workday world. The apostle Paul realizes that Christians are in a spiritual combat.

He encourages Christians to equip themselves with spiritual armor in order to perform our very best in our daily tasks. (Ephesians chapter 6, verses 10 through 17)

Christianity and strength go hand in hand. Paul encourages the Christian soldier to be "strong in the Lord" and to "put on the full armor of God." Paul tells us the essential equipment to live and work above the stress of the work-day world.

First, we are to "put on the belt of truth." Today's soldier must be a person of truth and high integrity. He or she must speak honestly and be trustworthy.

Second, "put on the breastplate of righteousness." The righteousness of God is received through Jesus Christ to forgive our sins and heal the past in order to function in the present as an essential part of the unit.

Third, put on the boots of "the gospel of peace." The word of God becomes the foundation for living. We should be peacemakers in the company, platoon, or squad, not the one creating problems, but the one to find a solution.

Fourth, "take up the shield of faith," and fifth, put on the "helmet of salvation."

No matter what circumstances may arise in the military today there is one sure fact: in God's army, there are no cutbacks.

In God's army, we are reassured that He is always there to help put all of life's pieces together. There is hope for the future and a peace that He will never forsake His children.

Sixth, "take up the sword of the Spirit." We should be on the offense and try to uphold freedom with dedication and sacrifice. We should live life boldly and not be afraid to take the challenges set before us.

With God, all things are possible to those who belief and trust.

Unit's engineers first troops from Benning to arrive there

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group, were the first from Fort Benning to arrive in Southwest Asia.

With fewer than six hours notice, the unit departed post Aug. 24 aboard C-5A and C-141 aircraft, arriving some 36 hours later in the Middle East.

The unit left at four different times throughout the day.

The unit's primary mission will be moving ammunition and assuring that it can be fired safely.

Because of the short notice, some family members and friends were unable to make the departure ceremonies, officials said.

The soldiers marched into the ceremonies sporting the new desert camouflage battle dress uniform and boonie hat.

Sewn on the shoulder of each BDU blouse was an American flag; the colorful patch brightly contrasted the dull shades of brown and black of the uniform.

Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commanding general, spoke at the ceremonies and wished the soldiers well.

At one of the ceremonies, Pvt. 1 Cindy Halvorson sat on her rucksack and talked about her feelings about the deployment.

Halvorson is a new soldier to the 608th Ord. Co. — fresh from Advanced Individual Training. She said she had orders for somewhere else but they were cancelled. She ended up here, she said.

"I'm scared," said the ammunitions supply specialist. "Yeah, I'm really scared, but this is what I raised my hand for when I enlisted. I know I can do it.

Meanwhile, some of soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade continue to train at Fort Stewart, Ga., while waiting to deploy overseas.

Hospital services to be interrupted

Officials say measures taken due to shortage of health care providers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Some health services at Martin Army Community Hospital will be temporarily interrupted, a hospital official announced Monday.

Col. Vernon C. Spaulding, hospital commander, said the interruption is due to a shortage of some key health care providers.

The interruptions will occur in the following clinical specialties: general surgery, orthopedics, obstetrics and gynecology, to include newborn delivery capability, and may occur in medicine, family practice and psychiatry, Spaulding said.

Basic primary care services at the PRIMUS clinic, outpatient clinic and, to some extent, at the Family Practice clinics will be maintained, Spaulding said, adding that he anticipates the recent presidential call-up of selected reserve component personnel will help alleviate the interruption of services.

Officials say every attempt will be made to continue to accommodate families of deployed soldiers and other authorized beneficiaries.

As an interim measure, some requirements for health care services may have to be transferred to local hospitals under the Civilian Health and Medical Program for Uniformed Services, he said.

Patients are reminded that they can obtain outpatient care under CHAMPUS without a nonavailability statement, Spaulding said; however, inpatient care does require a statement of nonavailability.

The health benefits advisors at Martin Army Community Hospital is available to assist patients seeking care under the CHAMPUS program, he said.

The health benefits advisors can be reached at 544-3461 or 544-1347.

In a joint announcement Thursday, representatives from Doctors Hospital, East Alabama Medical Center, Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital, Phenix Medical Park Hospital, St. Francis Hospital and The Medical Center said they intend to support MACH in the provision of needed health care services and ensure continuity of care for military patients.

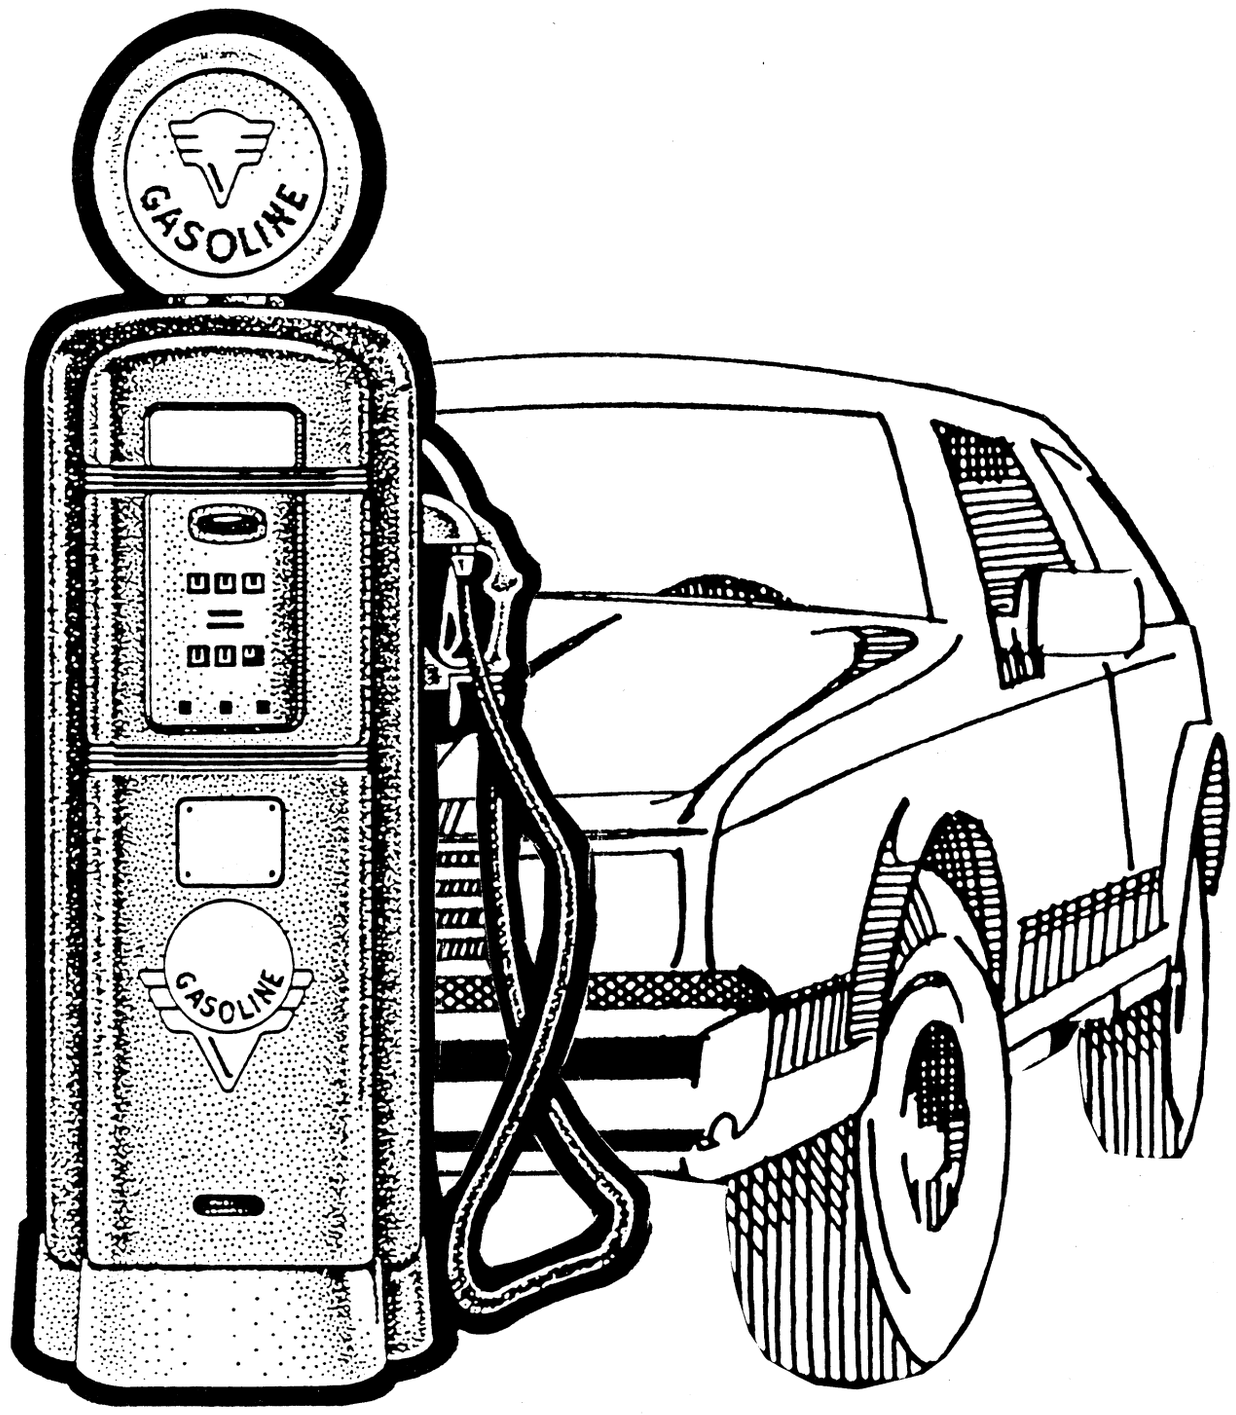
Americans need to expend more energy saving energy

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Gasoline guzzlin' consumers were in line at a local service station this weekend, hoping to save themselves a couple of bucks.

Service station attendants dressed in A-rab garb were pumping the liquid gold.

While I thought the gesture on the part of the service station owner noble, I considered the role of the consumers foolish.

Here you've got a line of cars reaching back practically to Saudi Arabia with people inside either sweltering in the heat or running their air conditioners, thus their autos, to save what, maybe three bucks?

But, how much did they expend idling their cars or driving to the place? And, above all, is that all their time's worth?

Yet, I'll bet these same people don't hesitate to burn up a couple of bucks a day on cigarettes, fork out money for sodas in the machine instead of buying them at the commissary and bringing a supply to work and keeping them in a refrigerator (those who have refrigerators at work), or get in their cars or trucks to drive two blocks to visit a friend.

The point I'm making is we need to expend more energy saving energy than worrying about where we can get the best price for a gallon of gas.

After the gas crisis in 1974, Americans resolved never to be held captive by oil-owning camel jockeys again. Cars were made smaller, lighter and mileage increased.

But, as the gas shortage days passed into history and out of memory, cars gradually increased in size and before long the behemoths of the 50s, 60s and early 70s began to creep back into American garages.

Once again we're more concerned with comfort, convenience and trunk space than we are in conserving energy.

Where has it all led us?

It's led us to a point in the Saudi Arabian desert where our guys are looking their guys in the eye, daring the other guy to blink.

Already we've got soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group over there. They'll soon be joined by soldiers from the Sledgehammer Brigade and possibly other post units.

And they're not going over there to play football. In this game, there is no "wait until next week." In this game there is no winner. Just losers.

Sure, our soldiers will kick rear ends, hands down. But, even the kicker gets hurt when the name of the game is "war."

I realize oil isn't the only reason our troops are in the Mideast. We're also there to checkmate a madman before he gets totally out of control and sets all of Southwest Asia afire.

But let's face it, oil and the pursuit of the American way of life (cheap gas) is the driving factor.

There are countries throughout the world that are attacking one another everyday. But, since they don't play a role in what we pay at the gas pumps, we don't get overly stressed.

We're slow to learn our lessons. And whether the current crisis is resolved peacefully as we all pray it will be or by young men and women slugging it out in the sand, I hope we learn something. And that something is we've got to become energy independent.

We need to car pool, use public transportation, cut down on the use of plastics (oil-based) and set thermostats on the edge of the discomfort zone.

It may be too late to stop war from coming to the Middle East this time around, but it's never too late to start conserving energy.

Writer says wives can help husbands by being strong

By Susan N. Wightman

They're made of steel — and pudding.

They are cool and aloof one minute and close to tears the next. They vacillate between nausea and diarrhea, headaches and insomnia.

They're wrapped together these days with paper tape — staying away from pats on the back or, worse yet, hearty bear hugs. A slight tear could start a complete collapse.

These are war wives.

They are left here to maintain stability for their children, strength for their husbands, a casual facade for their relatives and without much left over, a warm body for their job duties.

Some of the less experienced wives and girlfriends are occupied in hysterical begging: "Do you really have to go?" "Can't you get out of it?" "How can you leave me with sick babies, two dogs and a broken truck?"

Then comes some acceptance: "Well, if you have to go you could at least spend some time with me now." "Can't you come home early tonight?" "Why don't you want to make love?"

The reality that these women fail to see is that from the moment of the first "alert" call some days ago, their husbands were already in the Middle East. . .mentally at least.

Sixteen-hour, command-filled work days do not breed loving, attentive, family-oriented men. An exhausted body is only good for sleep.

As difficult as it is, wake up and smell the gunpowder, ladies: Your husband's mind is in Saudi Arabia and his body is soon to follow.

No amount of hysterical bargaining will help. It can only distract him from the good job that he knows he has to do. . .for you and the rest of the world.

A wise woman who is also my mother told me once, "You can do anything you have to do."

We have no choices in this conflict — we have to maintain so we'll be in one piece when these men finally come home. Then we'll all be heroes.

I feel the nausea coming on again. It's going to be another one of those nights.

A few tips for those desperate moments:

- Pray hard, and constantly.
- Take slow, deep breaths.
- Call a friend. She's probably feeling desperate, too.
- Maintain your paper tape. It gets stronger, and so will you.

Post's new phone system switches on-line Sept. 14

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's long awaited switch to the new telephone system will begin Sept. 14 according to the project manager for the operation.

Directorate of Information Management employee Keith Porter said the changeover should be completed by Sept. 17.

Porter said the transition is being made during the weekend so that downtime will be minimal.

He attributed the lengthy processing time to the number of switches involved.

"There are three switches and a remote," Porter said. "There is a switch at Sand Hill, the hospital, main post and a remote in Harmony Church."

He said the switches are the last phase of a year long project, which included the installation of fiber optics and other equipment.

"This will bring the post telephone system into the 20th century," Porter said. "However, that does not mean that everyone will get new telephones."

Eventually, the telephones will be upgraded, he added; but, the features included with the new system will work on the rotary telephones.

"Individuals from each directorate have been trained how to use the system," Porter said. "Once they are trained it is their job to pass the information to their co-workers."

User guides are also available as quick reference for anyone who needs them, he said.

"A lot of the problems associated with the current system should disappear," Porter said.

Examples he gave are the autovon line connections and placing a call to Fort Benning from an off-post line.

"A new feature allows a person trying to gain access to autovon to dial a code. The telephone will ring back when a line is available," Porter said. "Fiber optics will allow off-post callers easier access."

Porter said that DOIM expects some problems while post workers are adjusting to the new system, but he doesn't foresee anything major.

"As with anything new, there are always some bugs that need to be ironed out, but it shouldn't disrupt service," he said.

Labor Dept. pilot program to be tested at Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is one of two Training and Doctrine Command installations that are sites for a Department of Labor pilot program to help members separating from the military prepare for civilian life.

Benning and Fort Eustis, Va., are two of six Department of Defense sites participating in the development of the DOL program, which began May 1.

The Veteran's Transition Assistance Program is expected to be fully operational by 1994 at all DOD installations in the United States.

"The DOL transition program will be particularly helpful to military personnel who will have to leave the service because of budgetary cutbacks," said Warrant Officer Jan Oetker, assistant chief, soldier support division, for TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for personnel, administration and logistics .

However, the program will be open to all military who are retiring from the service or separating under normal circumstances.

Congress recently authorized and provided funds for DOL to start the program. DOL officials will present an evaluation of the program's effectiveness to Congress in 1992, when a decision will be made if it should be continued.

When a soldier is within 90 to 180 days of separation, he or she will be scheduled to attend the program. A three-day workshop will provide personal appraisals, teach resume writing, acquaint soldiers with the job interview process, describe the resources for finding a job, and give other information and assistance.

Attendees are also introduced to DOL's Civilian Occupational and Labor Market Information System, a national computerized system that tracks jobs around the country.

"This program is possible because the Army feels that we have a moral responsibility to the men and women who have served their country," said Col. L.R. Bixler, adjutant general for TRADOC's DCSPAL.

"When soldiers near the end of their service commitments, we have an unwritten obligation to help prepare them for future careers," Bixler said.

Hatch Act restrictions limit employees' political activities

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

A recent bill lifting Hatch Act restrictions on federal employees' political activity passed Congress but was vetoed by the president.

Since the Senate did not override the veto, the act remains in full force.

But an informal poll of civilian federal workers revealed that many don't know what the Hatch Act permits and what it prohibits.

Some think they can campaign for a partisan candidate while on annual leave; people at the other extreme think they can't even write a letter to the editor as private citizens.

The Hatch Act applies to most employees in the executive branch of the federal government, including part-time and temporary employees.

Restrictions also apply when covered employees are on sick or annual leave, leave without pay, administrative leave or furlough.

Exceptions apply mostly to appointed officials, including the heads of military departments. Consultants are covered only during the 24-hour period of any day in which they are actually employed.

The government's Office of Special Counsel investigates Hatch Act violations.

According to office spokesmen, Thomas Jefferson once suggested that federal employees "should not take any part in the business of electioneering."

But not until 1939 did Congress determine that government employees' partisan political activity had to be limited if public institutions were to function fairly.

It then passed the Hatch Act.

Courts have held that the Hatch Act does not infringe on workers' constitutional right to freedom of speech because they retain the right to speak out on political subjects.

However, they may do so only as individuals and not as part of organized efforts of political parties or candidates.

The most severe penalty for violation is removal; the minimum penalty is suspension without pay for 30 days.

Federal employees may be candidates in non-partisan elections. For example, they may serve on a town council where no other candidate represents the Democratic or Republican party.

In certain communities designated by the Office of Personnel Management where the majority of residents are federal employees, an employee may run as an independent candidate against partisan candidates.

Following is a general rundown of employees' rights and restrictions under the Hatch Act.

Covered employees may:

- Register and vote as they choose;
- Assist in non-partisan voter registration drives;
- Express opinions about candidates and issues;
- Participate in campaigns where no candidate represents a political party;
- Contribute money to political organizations or attend fundraisers;
- Wear or display political buttons or stickers;
- Attend political rallies or meetings;
- Sign nominating petitions; and
- Campaign for or against referendum questions, constitutional amendments and municipal ordinances.

Covered employees may not:

- Be candidates in, or campaign for a candidate in, a partisan election;
- Make campaign speeches or engage in other campaign activities to elect partisan candidates;
- Collect contributions or sell tickets to political fund-raising functions;
- Distribute partisan campaign material;
- Organize political meetings or rallies;
- Circulate nominating petitions; or
- Work to register voters for one party only.

Teachers, counselors ready for students' needs

Fort Benning Schools

Teachers returned to school last week to begin to ready classrooms and lesson plans for the opening of the school year.

When they returned this year, an additional concern before them was meeting the special needs of children of deployed soldiers.

Before the books were opened and the lesson planning began, teachers joined with administrators and counselors to discuss the special concerns that Fort Benning children and their families will be sharing as students return to school.

These counselors, who returned to work on Aug. 15, had already been meeting together and with their school administrators to discuss the kinds of services that would be needed.

The Fort Benning Schools have counselors in each of the eight schools except Patch School, which shares a counselor with Dexter School.

While individual schools are planning special awareness activities on their own, the school system will be working to meet special needs of children of deployed soldiers in three ways:

- Teachers will be discussing issues in the Middle East so that students are aware of current happenings there.
- Counselors will be working with students individually and in group settings to meet specific needs of students as they arise.

Counselors are also ordering and/or developing materials for use in dealing specifically with concerns related to deployment.

- All Benning educators will be looking for ways to provide additional assistance to children and their families.

"Since we have daily contact with children of deployed soldiers, we have an important role to play in helping to reduce the stress associated with deployment," said Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, Superintendent.

"Much of what we will do in this regard will come naturally as we demonstrate concern and provide appropriate support to children and their families."

Soldiers of the 197th take a break at Fort Stewart. Jonas Jordan

197th soldiers fine tune skills while awaiting deployment

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

197th Infantry Brigade soldiers at Fort Stewart awaiting deployment to Saudi Arabia are fine tuning their skills and morale remains high, according to the brigade's inspector general.

"Troop morale is the highest I've seen in the brigade," said Capt. Gary McGuire, the 197th's inspector general. "I don't think we could find their morale, patriotism and dedication any better than it is right now."

Brigade operations officer, Maj. John Batiste, attributed the soldiers' high spirits to the state-of-the-art equipment recently issued and the additional survival skills they are currently being taught.

Since their arrival at Fort Stewart, Batiste said the soldiers have been working hard to fine tune their skills.

"They're training with a purpose — to keep the peace in Saudi Arabia," he said. "If conflict should arise, we will be ready."

Batiste said training has run the gamut from zeroing and firing the newly issued M16A2 to firing tank table 12 for tankers and firing 105-millimeter high explosive rounds for the artillery.

"Commanders have had the opportunity to talk to their people and conduct battle drills," he said. "We've done everything we could to train, and the Fort Stewart community has been super in providing us with National Guard equipment and ammunition."

In addition to weapons training, soldiers are being given classes on nuclear, biological and chemical defense.

"We're sending every soldier through the gas chamber, again," said Sgt. 1st Class Larry Burrgett, first sergeant of the 72nd Engineer Company. "We did it before we left Fort Benning, and we're doing it a second time to make sure everyone's mask fits properly."

To round off their training while awaiting deployment to Saudi Arabia, soldiers have been acclimatizing themselves to lower the risk of dehydration once they touch down in the desert.

FOR THE RECORD

In the Aug. 24 issue of the Bayonet, the winners of the Project SPIRIT awards were announced.

In the story, it was not clear which directorate won this quarter's SPIRIT award. The winner was the Directorate of Logistics.

Also, it may not have been clear which quarter the awards were for. The ceremony recognized winners for the third quarter, 1990.

Equal Employment Opportunity Office won for personal and special staff.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Howard O. McGillin Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I have several insurance policies as well as my Service Member Group Life Insurance. I want to leave them all to my little brother. Can I make a change to my will to do this? Will the "By-Law" selection on my SGLI accomplish this?

A. The answer to your question requires a brief explanation of both wills and insurance law. Your will and your insurance make up the bulk of your estate plan, but are very different legal concepts.

Your will is a document that tells your executor and the probate judge of your home state how you want your property and money distributed after your death. The only property you can distribute under a will is property you own when you die.

Life insurance is a contract between you and an insurance company. You agree to pay premiums for a set period of time. In return the insurance company agrees to pay a predetermined amount of money when you die. As part of the insurance contract, you tell the insurance company who to pay the money to when you die.

The only way you can control the distribution of your insurance proceeds by your will is if you tell the insurance company to pay the money "To my estate." This instruction tells the insurance company to make out the proceeds check to your estate. If the money is paid to your estate, no one can take or use any of the money until after your will is probated.

The biggest disadvantage to paying insurance to your estate is the time delay. Insurance companies usually pay the proceeds of a policy within a few weeks of death. Probate of a will can take up to a year in some states. Remember, if you pay the insurance to your estate, it goes into probate along with everything else you own.

There are also some problems with estate tax that may apply if you pay your insurance to your estate. Ordinarily, insurance is not taxed. If you pay it to your estate, depending on your state, the state may tax the proceeds.

Finally, many people use insurance to help pay the bills after they die. If you pay to your estate, it may take longer to pay the bills, therefore running up unnecessary interest charges.

The "By-Law" designation on your SGLI is one of the most overused and least understood designations. The regulation that governs SGLI states that personnel assisting soldiers should discourage the use of the "By-Law" designation. "By-Law" pays first to your spouse, then to your children in equal shares, then to your parents, and finally to your estate.

The best way to guarantee your brother receives your SGLI is to put his name on the designation form. These designations take a little more time, but they ensure that your insurance goes where you want it to go. Do not let anyone tell you how your insurance has to be paid out.

If you have any questions, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to see a lawyer. The attorneys there can assist you in setting up your entire estate plan.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Soldiers often become aware of the Exceptional Family Member Program only when they are advised they are going to be assigned overseas.

They are then told that they cannot have orders cut until they undergo medical screening at the EFMP Diagnostic Center.

Army regulations require this screening to identify any special health or educational needs of family members.

These needs are then considered in the personnel assignment process for overseas tours. All family members must be screened and, if necessary, enrolled, prior to an overseas permanent change of station.

The regulation provides soldiers a way to let Department of the Army assignment personnel know that a family member needs certain medical treatment or special education because of physical, emotional or developmental problems.

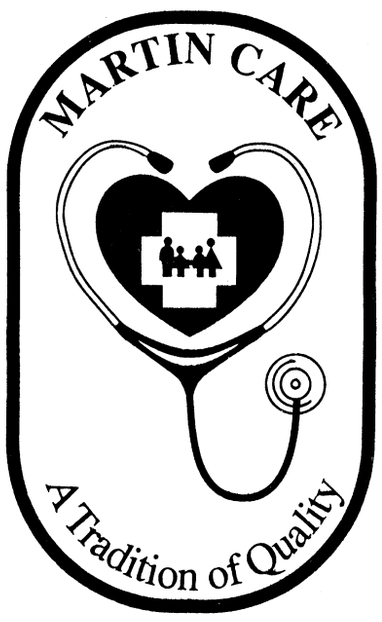
Availability of facilities to meet these needs is considered when making assignments overseas and soldiers will be assigned to an area that can provide the needed facilities, if there is a valid personnel requirement for the soldier's specialty and grade.

All soldiers remain eligible for worldwide assignment. EFMP enrollment will not adversely affect a soldier's career, assignment or promotion.

EFMP screening is not required when a soldier is assigned to an unaccompanied tour.

The Exceptional Family Member Program Diagnostic Center is in Building 316, behind the Infantry Museum on main post.

If you feel that a member of your family may be in need of special consideration or if you have questions, call 545-4710.



Deadline nears for cashing checks

Veterans Affairs

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler is reminding recipients of benefits checks from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs that there is now a deadline for cashing government checks.

Regulations which went into effect Oct. 1, 1989, require that checks issued by the U.S. Treasury Department must be cashed within one year. "Benefits recipients who may be holding checks dated prior to Oct. 1, 1989, have only until Sept. 30, in which to cash these checks," Wheeler said, "otherwise, the checks will be voided and recipients will have to initiate a request that the authorizing agency reissue the checks."

Wheeler added that the new check-cashing deadlines do not affect an individual's entitlement to benefits payments or the direct deposit of government checks. Some two-million recipients participate in the direct deposit program.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. My spouse and I do not live together, neither do I contribute to her support. Can I claim her as a dependent on my pension claim?

A. No. A pensioner can claim a dependent spouse only if living with the spouse or, if separated, contributing to the spouse's support.

Q. I receive VA compensation and I wish to claim an adopted child as a dependent. What type of documentation does the Department of Veterans Affairs require?

A. You should provide VA with a certified copy of the final decree of adoption or the adoptive placement agreement. In areas where court records of adoption are not readily available, a certified copy of the revised birth certificate showing the name of the veteran as parent may be acceptable.

Q. Can my VA education benefits be deposited directly into my checking account?

A. There is no provision for direct deposit of your VA education benefits.

Q. I just started receiving Social Security benefits. Will this affect my VA compensation payments?

A. No. Compensation benefits are not affected by your income.

Q. I send the Department of Veterans Affairs a check every month for my insurance premium. Do I have other options?

A. Yes. Premiums are discounted if you pay them quarterly, semiannually or annually. Your premiums can also be deducted from monthly VA compensation or pension checks; or if you receive military retired pay, an allotment can be established to pay premiums. You can also use VA Matic, where monthly premiums are deducted from your checking account. Payment options can be effected by calling 1-800-422-8079.

Q. I have questions regarding the Montgomery GI Bill. Can I get information from the local VA regional office?

A. Yes. Questions regarding the Montgomery GI Bill should be directed to any VA regional office. Toll-free telephone numbers are listed under U.S. Government in your local directory.

Q. I am a retired Army officer and have applied for disability compensation from the Department of Veterans Affairs. Will my grade entitle me to increased compensation?

A. No. Military grade is not a factor in determining the degree of disability attributed to military service.

Q. I am an honorably discharged veteran of the Vietnam era. I plan to retire shortly and I would like to buy a new home. I know that I was entitled to VA-guaranteed home loan when I got out of the service, but I believe the time limit has expired. Is this correct?

A. Loan guaranty eligibility is not subject to an expiration date.

Commissary baggers:

Providing service with smile

Elizabeth Cabanilla loads groceries into a customer's car.

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

They are swift, efficient and careful. They work hard.

In their uniforms of crisp, white shirts, dark pants, sturdy shoes, baseball caps and red identification tags, they are unmistakable. They are commissary baggers.

They come from almost every walk of life — retired military, family members, summer college students, shift workers from Columbus. They are young, old and in-between. Some seem ageless. Some support families. Some just want extra cash. Some work part time. Some work full time. They serve the Fort Benning community.

They work in, but are not employees of, the Troop Support Agency commissaries. They rely solely on the tips of their customers.

Most of the baggers agree that $2 is a reasonable tip, said Barbara Wilkins, a bagger at the commissary.

Whether they receive a tip or not, they attempt to be friendly and courteous. These workers try hard to be appreciated for the services they perform.

Three baggers are normally assigned to each checkout counter. This practice ensures that there is always one waiting to bag the customer's groceries.

In some commissaries, a bagger is at the front of the checkout to unload the cart onto the conveyor belt. This service especially helps mothers accompanied by young children and the elderly who might have trouble unloading shopping carts.

The baggers, while self-employed, take direction from and answer to a head bagger, who is an elected individual.

The head bagger at the Fort Benning commissary is James Hankins. He retired from the military as a Sgt. 1st Class at Fort Benning in 1974 and spent much of his 24 years in the service at Fort Benning. This is home for him.

Hankins started working at the commissary as a bagger in 1974. After two years, he was elected by his fellow baggers to the position of head bagger, a position he has filled ever since.

Hankins schedules work days and hours, assigns checkout counters, hires and fires, fields complaints and solves disputes concerning the baggers.

Baggers operate under a license issued by the Department of Defense Commissary Executive Board.

A bagger very rarely gets fired, said Hankins. If a problem arises, however, Hankins said he has many names on a list waiting to be baggers.

Kumsai Ketchen, wife of Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth D. Ketchen, has worked as a bagger at the commissary since 1976.

"I wanted to have something to do while my husband was away. I'm from Thailand, and I don't speak, read or write English well. Working at the commissary helps me to keep busy while my husband goes different places. Besides, I enjoy the work and the tips."

Schools welcome new teachers and administrators

Fort Benning Schools

They came to Fort Benning from hometowns such as Casa Grande, Ariz.; Sea Girt, N. J.; Lebanon, Ky.; and Salt Lake City, Utah. They are the 28 new teachers who are joining the Fort Benning school system.

These new teachers bring with them a wide variety of backgrounds, educational preparations, and personal experiences.

The group brings to their teaching assignments here at Fort Benning an average of 4.3 years of teaching experience.

All hold bachelor's degrees and eight hold master's degrees in education.

Of the new teachers coming on board, most grew up in the South, but the West, Midwest, and the Mid-Atlantic region are also represented.

Several of the new teachers are married to service members and have traveled extensively.

Included in the countries visited are Tunisia, Turkey, Paraguay, Brazil, Mexico, areas of the Carribean, and most of the European countries.

These new teachers have come to the Fort Benning Schools for a variety of reasons.

"I was looking for a school system that is dedicated to and involved with the community," said Virginia Wilcox, Dexter School fourth grade teacher. "I have found that here."

"Programs like Reading Recovery and the writing program were what brought me to Fort Benning," said Margaret Koger, first grade teacher at Dexter School.

"I've been impressed since being here to see that the system is truly a child centered system that believes that every child can learn."

By sharing their skills, experiences and talents with students and with their fellow educators, this talented new group promises to make the Fort Benning Schools an even stronger educational environment for Benning children.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit recently wrapped up a competitive summer season of rifle and pistol matches in which the Army Shooting Team brought home a cache of individual and team championship titles.

The Army Service Rifle team began their "summer trip" by snatching four of the five team matches from the U.S. Marine Corps during the interservice matches at Quantico, Va. in July.

Spec. Lance Hopper also claimed the title of interservice champion in the service rifle long range matches.

This set the stage for the competition at the national matches at Camp Perry, Ohio where the Army service rifle team won seven individual matches and placed among the top three in five team matches.

Army swept first, second and third places in the National Service Rifle Individual championship. Sgt. Eric Uptagrafft is the national champion, Capt. Dave Erickson placed second and Hopper placed third. Uptagrafft also won the Vanderberg trophy and placed third overall in the national high power rifle individual championship.

More than 800 competitors shot in these matches.

Sgt. Vince Greiner won the national trophy individual match, followed by Erickson, who placed second. Pvt. Grant Singley won the Coast Guard trophy and the Crescent Cup, and Pvt. Bradley Kelsey won the Air Force Cup.

Hopper also won the President's Hundred match ahead of a field of more than 1600 competitors.

Eleven other shooters on the Army service rifle team made the President's Hundred: Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Gilbreath, Sgt. Kyle Weaver, Spec. Colin Windows, Sgt. Sean Lynch, Pvt. Christopher Irish, Capt. Dave Erickson, Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk, Spec. Matthew Miller, Sgt. Steven Cerny, Pvt. Grant Singley and Staff Sgt. H. John Chubb.

In the team matches, Army placed first and third in the enlisted men's trophy match and was the Division "A" winner of the Romanian trophy match. Army teams also placed second in the Herrick trophy match and the national trophy infantry team match.

In the national trophy team match, the first, second and third place teams all broke the national record, however, Army placed second, one point behind the U.S. Army Reserve team.

Maj. James E. Meredith is the smallbore three-position national champion. This championship is based on the aggregate of six matches: metallic sights, prone, kneeling and standing at 50 yards; and any sights, prone, kneeling and standing at 50 yards. Meredith placed second overall in both the metallic and any sight championships. His combined score put him two points ahead of former USAMU rifle team member, retired Lt. Col. Lones Wigger Jr., who placed second. USAMU's Capt. David Chesser placed third. 1st Lt. Rhonda Barush won the women's championship.

The USAMU rifle team (smallbore) was unbeatable in the three-position and prone team matches, making a clean sweep of all four matches.

During the pistol competition of the national matches, Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie McCoy placed second in the national pistol championship behind Air National Guard Tech Sgt. James Lenardson. Six Army shooters also made the President's Hundred for pistol against a field of 1022 competitors: McCoy, Sgt. 1st Class Gary Marsh, SSgt. William Albrecht, Master Sgt. Erich Buljung, Master Sgt. Joe Steed Jr. and Sgt. 1st Class Rojelio Arredondo.

Youth make big splash at back-to-school bash

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A splash and block party for the youth of Fort Benning and surrounding communities was Aug. 23 at the Youth Activities Center.

The party, tagged as the "Back-to-School Blowout," was hosted by radio station WCGQ 107.3 FM.

The station provided a live remote at the party with disc jockey Mark Dark as the master of ceremonies.

The party featured several activities for the youth to enjoy. Some of the events included: a watermelon eating contest, a dance marathon, a basketball "slam dunk" contest, a balloon toss, and an "Electric Slide" dance contest.

Winners were awarded prizes of tapes, records, trophies, T-shirts, coupons and certificates.

Live entertainment was provided by the teen rap group Ikwan-Shamir. Members of the group Andrew Lovett, Derek D. Simmons, Rodney J. Payton and Antonio Smith are military family members.

Yvette F. Womack, youth developmental specialist and coordinator of the event, said she was pleased with its success.

"Everyone was able to come out and enjoy themselves without any complications," said Womack.

The party would not have been so successful without the efforts of the adults volunteers, she said.

"When you sponsor an event for young people, there is a need for much adult supervision.

"Kudos to all of our adult volunteers for their part in making the 'Back-to-School Blowout' a real success," said Womack.

Labor Day: time for rejoicing

By Chap. James E. Rayburn
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Labor Day weekend was always a special time for me. On Sunday my home church would sponsor special services, including a picnic and afternoon gospel sing.

Monday would be a big celebration at Central Park to honor those who worked in the mines, on the railroad, or in the steel plants. However, the most important event would be the visit of Uncle Ernest.

Uncle Ernest was a big man. (I used to think he was the original "John Henry" of the old mountain legend.) He would always greet us with an iron grip of a handshake and a smile as big as the mountain he called home.

I soon learned that this giant of a man was the most gentle spirited person I would ever meet.

Later in life I learned about some of the adversity Uncle Ernest had suffered. He had left eastern Kentucky to work in some new mining fields in West Virginia. Soon upon his arrival he suffered a back injury, which resulted in a permanent disability. He raised nine children, took care of an invalid brother-in-law, and his wife, who was ill most of her life. He accomplished all of this on a very meager income but always with an optimistic approach to life.

After I graduated from high school, I would take my family up to West Virginia for a visit with Uncle Ernest. It was during those visits that I learned some of life's greatest lessons.

The first lesson Uncle Ernest taught me was the power of a smile. With all the adversities he experienced in life, I never remember seeing him without a smile. Somehow his big old smile had a way of giving folks around him a special peace. It was like a calm even in the midst of a storm. His smile could communicate a presence of the Lord, perhaps likened unto Christ's presence on the troubled sea.

Secondly, Uncle Ernest taught me the power of a song. Not only would Uncle Ernest have a smile, but he always had a song to go with it. I remember him singing and playing his portable organ on Saturday mornings at the old country store.

As people came to do their weekly shopping, Uncle Ernest would entertain and encourage them by singing some of the old gospel favorites.

I remember going with him to the church one afternoon. He went up to the piano and said, "James, have you ever heard this one." He started off singing about taking off the old coat and putting on the new, about traveling on with the Lord, and then closed with a song of promise about heaven.

On this Labor Day weekend, we are facing some of life's greatest challenges. Let us face these challenges with the faith in God that brings a smile of God's peace.

Let us sing the songs of praise to encourage one another. Let us again affirm God's presence within us.

Remember Psalm 118:24: "This is the day the Lord has made, let us rejoice and be glad in it."

Army suspends separations

Soldiers needed as support demands in Middle East increase

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Many enlisted soldiers may be extended on active duty indefinitely as the Middle East crisis continues, Army officials have announced.

As directed by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney, effective Saturday separations may be suspended for certain soldiers who:

- are or are about to be engaged in conduct of operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula
- are or are about to be engaged in direct support of operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula
- possess critical skills in the active component associated with operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula
- possess skills in short supply in the active Army.

According to Lt. Col. Timothy Decker, selected soldiers in the active component and all soldiers in reserve component units alerted for activation in support of Operation Desert Shield will remain on active duty. Decker serves in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

This action, known as "Stop Loss," applies to enlisted soldiers assigned to Health Services Command, Military Traffic Management Command and those assigned to U.S. Forces Command and Central Command who are currently eligible to re-enlist.

It specifically limits separations of enlisted soldiers Armywide possessing a primary, secondary or additional military occupational specialty in 21 designated career management fields.

Those fields include: 11 - infantry, 12 - combat engineering, 13 - field artillery, 16 - air defense artillery, 18 - special forces, 19 - armor, 29 - signal maintenance, 31 - signal operations, 33 - electronic warfare/intercept systems maintenance, 51 - general engineering, 54 - chemical, 55 - ammunition, 63 - mechanical maintenance, 67 - aviation maintenance, 76 - supply and services, 77 - petroleum and water, 88 - transportation, 91 - medical, 95 - military police, 96 military intelligence, and 98 - signal intelligence/electronic warfare operations.

Decker said that those enlisted soldiers already on transition leave, or with a transition leave request approved before Aug. 28, and who have a separation date on or before Nov. 30, are not affected by the Stop Loss actions — they will separate from the Army on their ETS dates. Soldiers won't be allowed transition leaves after Aug. 28, regardless of their ETS date.

This Stop Loss also covers all extensions of service except those for receiving medical care.

Soldiers on their way from overseas assignments for separation processing will report to the transition point designated on their ETS orders. Soldiers coming back from overseas — or already at transition points — will be held there. Transition point commanders will request disposition instructions from the appropriate U.S. Total Army Personnel Command career branch.

Decker emphasized that this Stop Loss doesn't affect retirements.

Separations for qualitative considerations — punitive discharges, quality management program actions, administration separations, discharge in lieu of elimination, medical or moral unfitness or bar to reenlistment — will also continue.

There are also "humanitarian" exceptions, officials said, and discharges for hardship and maximum age or length of service will continue.

197th soldiers make most of stay at Stewart

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

While 197th Infantry Brigade troops awaited transportation to Saudi Arabia from Fort Stewart, Ga., last week, they made the most out of the time they had, according to the unit commander.

Col. Ted Reid said the troops were doing a lot of hard training, but were still keeping up their morale.

He said the stay at Fort Stewart allowed them the chance to rezero weapons and receive additional training on nuclear, biological, chemical warfare and various weapons.

"A lot of this was made possible through the National Guard," he said. "They have really helped us a lot."

Reid said although his troops went through some heavy training, he allowed the soldiers some free time.

"We've had some great football games in the barracks area," he said. "They are also allowed to go various places on post until they are on alert for deployment status."

Guard, reserve units move into action

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Just when you've become comfortable with the notion that Guard and Reserve soldiers merely ply the limited defense role of "train, train, train/wait, wait, wait," world events come into play and propel those soldiers into support of their active component counterparts.

Such is the case with Operation Desert Shield, the massive deployment of troops, weaponry, equipment and supplies in defense of Saudi Arabia. In particular, during the past several weeks, hundreds of reserve component soldiers have been volunteering their services to support the deployment.

Now comes word from defense officials that the continued commitment of active combat forces to the operation will require backup from reserve component units.

Under presidential authority, the secretary of defense may call up for active duty as many as 25,000 reserve soldiers for Desert Shield during the next several weeks, officials say.

Some of the Army's selected reserve soldiers can be expected to provide combat support and combat service support during the operation, officials say. Others will be made available to fill critical military support vacancies in the United States or elsewhere.

In a news briefing at the Pentagon Aug. 23, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs Pete Williams said, "This activation reflects the Administration's serious commitment to the stability of the Persian Gulf region. The call-up ... could begin as early as tomorrow."

Within 24 hours of Williams' announcement, soldiers in reserve component units across the nation were receiving alert calls for them to report to their reserve centers and armories.

Officials explain that, as in any such presidential call-ups, the period of active duty can last for 90 days, and may be extended for another 90 as conditions warrant.

Stop Loss delays officer separations

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Stop Loss action invoked in the wake of Operation Desert Shield also affects a limited number of officers and warrant officers.

As directed by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney, voluntary separation for officers and warrant officers is suspended if they: are or are about to be engaged in conduct of operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula, are or are about to be engaged in direct support of operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula, possess critical skills in the active component association with operations in and around the Arabian Peninsula or possess skills in short supply in the active Army.

Personnel officials at the Pentagon say that specifically Stop Loss applies to officers and warrant officers in the following branches and functional areas: SC 15 - aviation, SC 18 - special forces, SC 21 - engineer, SC 25 - signal, SC 35 - military intelligence, FA 39 - psychological operations, FA 48G - Mideast/North Africa specialists, SC 74 - chemical, SC 88 - transportation, SC 91 - ordnance, SC 92 - quartermaster, SC 60-62 - medical corps, SC 63 - dental corps, SC 64 - nurse corps, MOS 600A - physician assistants, medical specialists: 68H, 68K, 68M, 68N, 68P, 68R, 68S; officers and warrant officers who are Arabic linguists, regardless of specialty code.

Officers with transition leave approved before Aug. 28 who have a separation date on or before Dec. 1 aren't affected. After Aug. 28, officers won't be granted transition leave, unless they're retiring.

Stop Loss doesn't affect officer retirements. However, the secretary of the Army may voluntarily or involuntarily recall officers to active duty to meet shortage skill requirements.

POST BRIEFS

Post cycle thefts on rise

Motorcycle thefts on Fort Benning are increasing, according to a Crime Prevention official.

In the past two months, 15 motorcycle thefts have occurred, said Staff Sgt. Adraine Williams, and a similar high rate of thefts is occurring off post.

Williams said the Columbus Police Department and Fort Benning's Military Police have been investigating the thefts, which appear to be the result of an organized professional theft operation.

Williams recommends owners take the following actions to deter a thief:

- Park motorcycles out of sight, in a garage or basement.
- Mark motorcycles with an identification number.
- Lock your motorcycle with a case-hardened chain or cable.
- Use a fork lock, which can be found in the post exchange or most hardware stores. For extra protection, invest in a heavy U-shaped lock made of extremely hard steel.

Williams advises owners whose motorcycles break down on post to avoid leaving it unattended over a 24-hour period.

Personnel interested in performing deputy game warden duties during the upcoming deer season should contact Benny Wright, chief, Department of Defense Police, at 545-1280 or 545-2942.

Personnel applying must be: active duty sergeant first class or chief warrant officer or above, authorized to operate a vehicle on Fort Benning, and authorized to hunt and fish on Fort Benning.

The deadline for applying is today.

Suicide workshop set

A workshop about the prevention of suicide among adolescents will be sponsored by the Civilian Counseling Services, Family Support Division, in conjunction with the Bradley Center Sept. 20 from 12:30 to 2 p.m.

Post provides 24-hour hot line

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Individuals who have questions about Fort Benning soldiers deploying to the Middle East can call 545-4663 or 545-HOME.

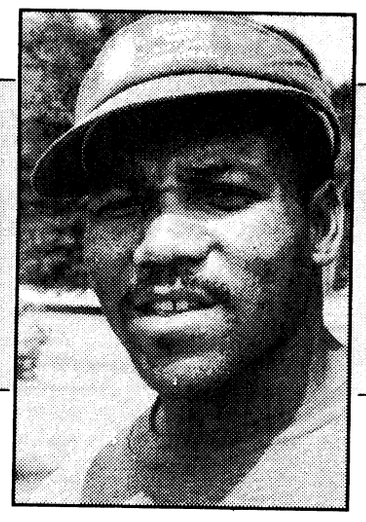
That's the number for the post's 24-hour hot line service, which provides the latest information about what post units are doing.

A recorded message will provide information, and callers can leave a message if they have a question.

Additional information is available to post cable subscribers on Channel 13.

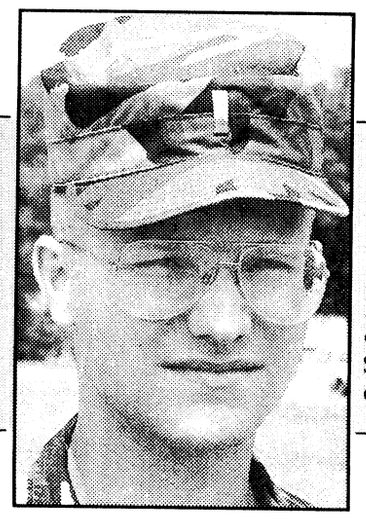
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:
What message would you like to give to the soldiers in Saudi Arabia?



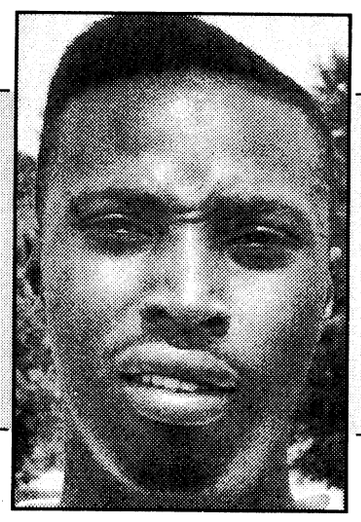
Charlie Davis, JAD Construction — "I'd like to wish them all good luck, and I hope they make it back safely."

Nancy Hinkley, family member — "I'd tell my husband I love him and not to worry about us. The whole family misses him, and we'd all like for him to write. I'm sure all the men over there are safe, but I'd like them to know our hearts are with them."

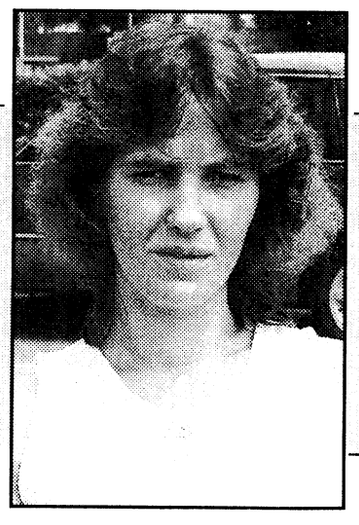


2nd Lt. Christian Pfeil, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. — "I'd like to tell everyone to hang in there. I wish everyone over there good luck, and I'd like for them to know that all the soldiers and civilians here in the United States support them 100 percent."

2nd Lt. Patrick Walsh, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. — "I'd tell them that they are getting to do what we all have been trained to do. It's our job and our profession. Remember, we are there for our country and what it stands for."



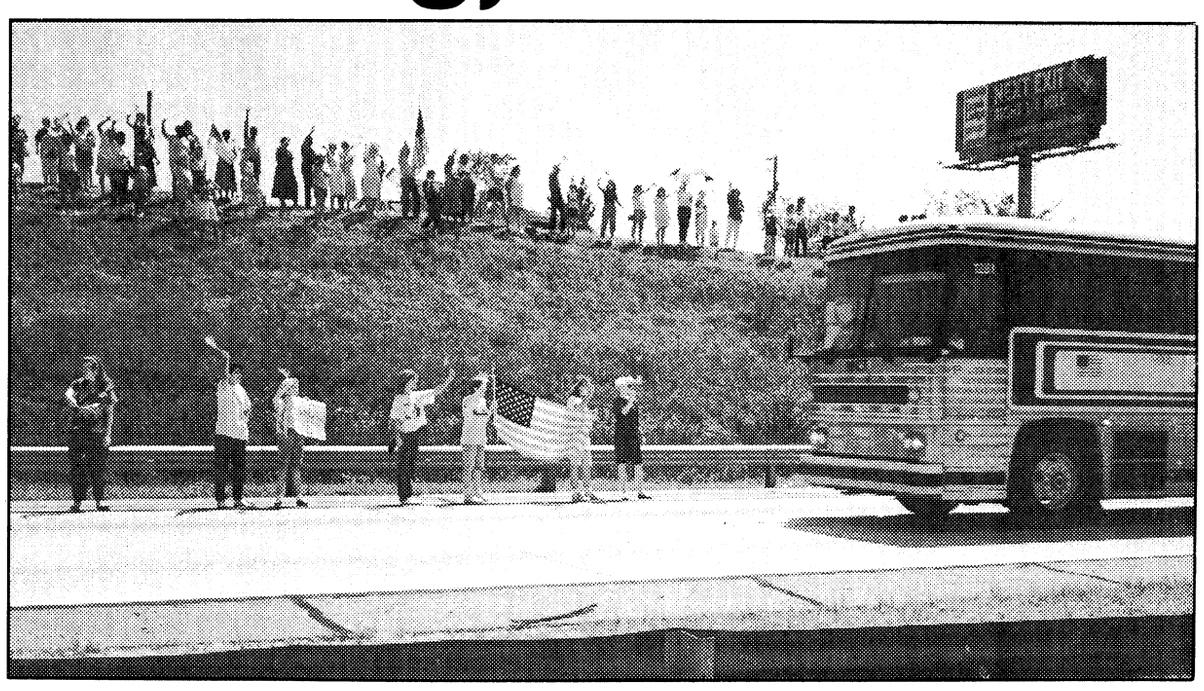
Derwin Durden, family member — "I'd like to tell them to stand up for their country no matter what it takes."



Jabriella Ranwick, family member — "I'd tell them that I'm praying for them, and I wish them good luck and hope they'll be back soon. Also, I'd tell my husband that I love him, and I'll be waiting for him when he returns."

There are people who care about Benning, its soldiers

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Charles Butler

Supporters lined I-185 when the 197th Infantry Brigade bus convoy departed Benning.

Life goes on.

We've got nearly 5,000 soldiers from Fort Benning in the Middle East now. But, after the initial flurry of newspaper stories and television coverage, who, outside the family members left behind and those directly supporting the effort, gives it much thought any more.

The attention span of the American people is definitely short as we turn our attention to other things.

Sure, the national media still covers the crisis, but the big thing now is will the "guests" of Saddam Hussein be allowed to leave and if so, by caravan or jet?

Meanwhile, in Columbus we wonder who killed Laura Palmer on "Twin Peaks," note that Geraldo is planning to spend 24 hours on death row (wish it were more) while wondering why a burger chain needs twin burgers as little old ladies fall down in their homes but are saved through medic-alert.

We wonder about the timing of the people at our front gate who are going on an all-water diet to protest our training El Salvadorean soldiers while we wistfully wait for the dog days of August to end as we conclude our first week in September.

But, the Middle East hasn't gone away. It's still there. Ask the family members of the soldiers. Ask the soldiers who know they'll be going. The only question they have is "when?"

These men and women haven't forgotten about the Middle East. For them, it's a grim reality.

Other evidence is the way the Army Community Service food locker is wiped out nearly as fast as it can be replenished by family members left in the lurch, while at the same time, we get calls from absentee businessmen who wonder why their restaurant's business has fallen off.

There are, however, people out there who care. Local radio stations stage fund-raising drives to replenish the supplies at ACS. School kids want to get letter-writing campaigns underway, the University of Auburn will be sending videos of their football games to the Middle East, and Georgia Tech donated 1,000 tickets to tomorrow's game against North Carolina State (at $18 a head, that quickly adds up).

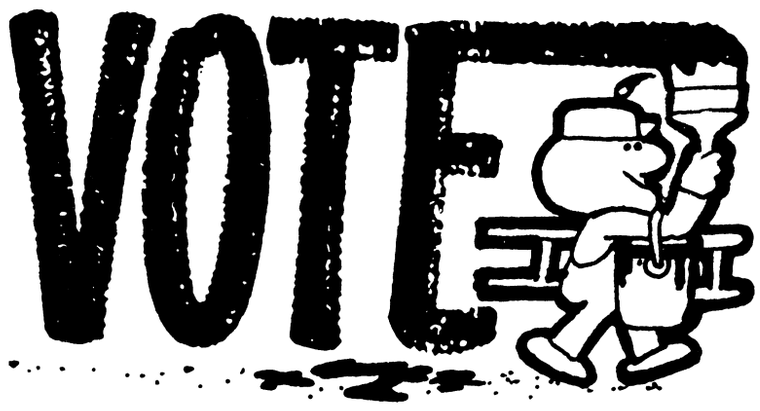
We may sweat our gonads off too many months of the year. We may wonder where the guy in front of us learned to drive (probably New York) and we might wonder what there is to do at night (besides count the sweat balls rolling off the tip of our noses); but, when it comes to being assigned to a town that loves its soldiers, there's no place better than Columbus, Ga.

I know, I've done my share of complaining about life in Columbus, (I'd complain about life in Eden). But, what I've seen around here since the crisis developed, makes me a rah-rah supporter of the people here.

By the way, if you want to support ACS, the number is 544-4969; if you want an update about what's happening, check either Channel 13 on post during duty hours, or call the deployment hot line 545-4663 (HOME) which has a message 24 hours a day. You can also leave questions on the answering machine. Finally, we still have a few Georgia Tech football tickets left if you can beat feet and make it over here by 5 p.m.

Voting — a duty and privilege

By Cheryl Stall
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Throughout the years, the American soldier has been the epitome of patriotism. These few, proud individuals have gone beyond baseball, apple pie and love for their country. They have enlisted in the armed forces to preserve, protect and defend the ideals that each American holds in such deep regard.

From the moment a soldier raises his hand swearing to support and defend the constitution, he agrees to show his patriotism always.

He has agreed to show the proper respect for officers placed over him. He has willingly consented to render the correct courtesies to our flag and national anthem. He has agreed to wear his uniform with pride and act becomingly.

The recent deployment of troops to Southwest Asia has American patriotism at an all time high. Americans who sat passively are now rallying behind a cause, uniting each other in a way that has not been seen in some time.

Also, soldiers are exhibiting an added surge of allegiance. The recently deployed soldiers stood even taller and more proud as they awaited the orders to depart.

With dedication at an all time high, both in the civilian community as well as among soldiers, why is it that we as soldiers continue to neglect our most basic right and obligation? To vote.

There are three commonly used retorts to this question — "I'm only one single individual, it won't make a difference," "I don't know how," or "I don't really care."

Come on folks, you're going to have to think of a better excuse than that.

For those of you who think your one individual vote is not going to make a difference, you are in good company. According to a recent survey conducted by the Department of the Army, about twenty percent of the active duty population participated in the last nonpresidential election.

In an army of more than 750,000 soldiers, that's over half a million people whose votes could have made a difference. Maybe this is not such good company to be in after all.

For those of you who "don't know how," let me assure you that much is being done to assist you in enlightening yourself on the ease of voting by absentee ballot.

The Department of Defense designated the week of August 27th as Armed Forces Voters Week to increase awareness of service members. They have also set up a voting information center open 24 hours a day to answer questions. The number is autovon 223-6500, or commercial (202) 693-6500.

Additionally, Fort Benning has several ways for you to get the information you need. Each company has a voting assistance officer who will assist you in getting the information you need to register to vote by absentee ballot.

For those of you who just really "don't care," maybe you should reevaluate your sense of patriotism and reconsider.

Remember, the same people who we are bound by oath to serve are the same individuals who approve our pay raises, decide on military budget cuts and legislate the law of the land in which we live.

This is the law we protect, enforce and at any moment may be asked to give our lives for. As patriotic American soldiers, we don't question those in authority over us. Shouldn't we then exercise our ability to influence those who make the law?

Voting doesn't take much time and with the assistance the Department of Defense and Fort Benning has provided, it's not very difficult.

Reconsider your loyalty. Reconsider your heritage. Reconsider what you as an American soldier stand for. It's your duty and privilege — to vote.

CG proclaims Thursday DARE Day

DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) is a program teaching young people ways to resist peer pressure to experiment with drugs and alcohol.

It targets young people when they are most vulnerable to tremendous drug abuse pressures and teaches the skills to make positive decisions to resist the pressures.

Twenty million students in more than 100,000 classrooms in 49 states as well as Department of Defense Dependent Schools were reached through DARE.

DARE is taught by experienced and dedicated police officers who help students understand self-image, recognize stress and manage it without taking drugs. They also learn to evaluate risk-taking behavior, resist gang pressure, apply decision-making skills, and evaluate the consequences of the choices available to them.

At Fort Benning, DARE is taught in all eight schools and is a joint effort of the Fort Benning Military Police Activity and the Fort Benning School System.

It has achieved outstanding success teaching positive and effective approaches to what is one of the most difficult problems facing our young people today — drug abuse.

As commanding general of Fort Benning, I designate Sept. 13, 1990, DARE Day.

Benning to host Training & Military Education Conference

By Jose A. Fernandez

The U.S. Army Infantry Center, with the School of the Americas as the executive agent, will host the Third Training and Military Education Conference (TMEC) of the Conference of American Armies (CAA). Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, commanding general of Fort Benning, will chair the conference scheduled for 21 to 26 October 1990.

TMEC was created by CAA to provide a permanent forum for the discussion of military education issues of concern to member armies. The first TMEC was held in 1986 in Buenos Aires, Argentina. SOA hosted the second TMEC at Fort Benning in 1988.

The intended outcomes for this year's conference are to discuss non-commissioned officer development and provide a recommendation as to the applicability of computers in the education process. Also, the first edition of the Glossary of Military Terms will be issued.

Over 300 people will participate in the conference, including senior military officers from 18 Latin American countries as well as the United States and Canada. Various U.S. Army schools and organizations with Latin American interests are also expected to send representatives.

SOA names Soldiers of the Year

NCO of the year

By Keith F. Johnson

The School of the Americas' non-commissioned officer of the year 1990 is SSgt. Rodrigo Arreola.

Arreola, who has been in the service for almost seven years, is a small-unit leadership instructor with the School's Department of Tactics and Combined Arms. He has been at the School since Mar. 1, 1990.

Arreola said he was assigned to the School because he is fluent in Spanish and Ranger qualified.

"The School has a big mission as far as training," Arreola said. "There is a large volume of students who come to the School, it's our responsibility to give them quality instruction."

Arreola entered the service soon after graduating from high school.

"I have always wanted to do hard things to prove I am worthy as an individual and a soldier, to be all I can be," Arreola said.

It is that attitude that led Arreola to become a Ranger.

"The Ranger is an elite soldier;" Arreola said, "one of the best in the world and I wanted to be part of that group."

"After you graduate from the school that's when being a Ranger really begins, you have to carry on the tradition, honor and prestige."

Arreola is continuing that tradition by setting his sights high for the future. Winning the NCO of the Year meets one of the goals he hopes will eventually lead to becoming a Sergeant Major.

Other military schools he has graduated from are the Primary Leadership Development Course and the Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course as well as Sniper, Airborne and Air Assault courses. Arreola was also the Distinguish Honor Graduate of the National Training Center IQC Winter and Summer course.

Arreola's next goal is to compete in the next Best Ranger Competition. He spends part of his off-duty time training for the competition by running, weight lifting and biking.

"I always want to prove to myself and my chain of command that I am a good soldier," Arreola said.

Arreola's military decorations include the Expert Infantry Badge, Ranger Tab, Army Commendation Medal, the NCO Professional Development Ribbon with Numeral 2, the Army Service Ribbon and the Overseas Service Ribbon.

Arreola considers loyalty to the chain of command and discipline the two most important lessons he has learned while in the service. He hopes to impart those lessons on the soldiers he trains.

"I like working with soldiers and teaching them as well as being there when they need advice, both personal and military," Arreola said. "Taking care of the soldiers, that's what I do best."

Soldier of the year

By Keith F. Johnson

The School of the Americas' Soldier of the year is Spec. Cristina S. Cruz.

Cruz, who joined the army two years ago soon after arriving in the United States from the Phillipines, is a Radio and Television System Specialist for Fort Benning's Educational Television department.

"I had many choices of what I wanted to do when I joined the service but I enjoy communications so I am very happy with my choice," Cruz said.

Cruz spent her first year in the army at Lowry Air Force Base in Denver, Colorado learning how to assemble, disassemble and repair the different types of equipment her job entails.

Working with high-technology equipment was not new to Cruz who received a degree in medical x-ray technology from Marian College in Manila. Cruz also owned and operated a construction materials trading company called Silangan Trading.

Although successful in the Phillipines, Cruz decided to come to the United States to become a U.S. citizen. The best way to do that was by joining the service. According to Cruz, after three years of active duty she will become a U.S. citizen. Her ultimate goal is to become a nurse.

"The army is a good stepping stone toward becoming a resident and a good reference for work," Cruz said.

Since being in the army, Cruz says she has had many opportunities to learn and experience more.

"Most of the videos are instructional, such as Air Assault, so I have learned alot about the army by watching the videos," Cruz said.

"I also enjoy going out on the shoots and seeing the different types of training. I get to do things I never dreamed I'd be able to."

Cruz feels the videos her department makes and copies are very important to the success of the army.

"We make the tapes so people can learn and improve their job skills or for recruiters to use and encourage people to join the army," Cruz said.

It is that attitude and dedication that has helped Cruz be successful before and during her career in the service.

School of the Americas presents

Nations of Latin America

Republic of Colombia

Area: 439,737 square miles, the size of New Mexico, Texas, and Louisiana combined. Fourth largest nation in South America

Population: 31,821,000, roughly equal to the combined populations of California and Oregon

Ethnic groups: 58% mestizo, 20% white, 14% mulatto, 4% black, 4% other

Religion: 95% Roman Catholic

Literacy rate: 90%

Life expectancy: 68 years

Language: Spanish

Capital city: Bogota, which nestles in an Andean plateau 8,000 feet above sea level (higher than Denver)

Economy: Industries - textiles, processed goods, steel, chemicals, coal

Major exports - coffee, rice, corn, cotton, sugar

Per capita income: $1,110

In 1538, the colony of New Granada, with its capital at Bogota, was established, and for most of the period up until 1740, the area was within the jurisdiction of the viceroyalty of Peru. It was in that year that a new viceroyalty was established at Bogota that included the areas of modern-day Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, and Venezuela. During the wars of independence against Spain, forces under Simon Bolivar were victorious over the royalists at the Battle of Boyaca in 1819, and the region gained its independence in 1821.

Colombian political struggle since the 1850's had been characterized by a rivalry between two groups that coalesced into the Liberal and Conservative parties. The Liberal-Conservative struggle led to at least six civil wars, which often ended in inter-party compromise. The effort to define the political structure was largely resolved with the Constitution of 1886, which made Colombia a unitary republic. The president is elected by popular vote every four years.

A world leader in emerald and gold production and a major coffee exporter, diamond-shaped Colombia connects South and Central America with a stunning geographical variety. The Andes Mountains confine the major population centers to the western one-third of the country, the remaining two-thirds consist of grassy plains and Amazonian jungle. The semi-desert of the Guajira Peninsula marks the continent's northernmost point with huge reserves of high-quality coal.

Tourist-oriented Cartagena on the Caribbean coast features the largest Spanish stoneworks in the New World and hosts minor league baseball.

Colombian native Gabriel V. Marquez won a Nobel Prize for Literature in 1982.

The Island of Hispaniola, or Santo Domingo, as it came to be known, was discovered by Christopher Columbus on Dec. 5, 1492 during his first voyage. This event gave way to the conquest and colonization of Santo Domingo, where many of America's "first" took place. For example, the first cathedral, university, and law courts of the New World, which was also the seat of the Governor of the Indies (now a museum). The first military fort, Santo Domingo, was the gateway to the New World where all ships carrying "Conquistadores", priests, and adventurers stopped to get supplies for their trips. Among the homes that still stand that date back to colonial times (early 1500's) are those belonging to Christopher Columbus, Ponce De Leon, Francisco Pizarro and Hernan Cortez, all of which are now museums.

In 1795, the French took control of the entire island. The Dominican's declared independence under the leadership of Juan Pablo Duarte from Haiti in 1844. The country was occupied by U.S. Marines from 1916 to 1924. From 1930-1961, the Dominican Republic was under the dictatorship of General Trujillo. In 1965, Civil War broke out and the U.S. 82nd Airborne Division deployed as part of a Multinational Peace Keeping Force and occupied the country. Since 1966, the Dominican Republic has had a democratic government. The country is presided by Joaquin Balaguer, who was inaugurated August 16, 1990. The president's term of office is for a four year period.

In 1992, the Dominican Republic will celebrate the discovery of the New World with its 500th anniversary. A large celebration will be held to honor this important event.

Land swap would take many months to finalize

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A proposal to swap land with Fort Benning, announced Aug. 23 by Columbus city manager Michael Brown, would take many months before it's finalized, according to a Directorate of Engineering and Housing official.

John Baggett, deputy director of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, said once, and if, the swap is approved, it would take many more months before the swap could actually take place.

The proposal is part of a Defense Authorization Bill, which has been submitted to the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

If approved, Columbus will purchase 4,000 acres of land in Chattahoochee County and exchange it for 3,000 acres of Fort Benning land near the Columbus landfill on Schatulga Road.

Baggett said before Fort Benning could release the land, an environmental and biological assessment would have to be made.

"Officials would also have to do an archaeological and land survey," he said.

"A land survey would need to be done to establish the boundaries on both properties."

He added that the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization would have to assess the land owned and land swapped for its training value.

Once those requirements are met, a swap could be made, he said.

The idea for the swap stemmed from a Chamber effort last year to identify industrial development land somewhere in the city according to Michael Gaymon, President of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

Although the need for industrial development land was the seed of the idea, Columbus will benefit in many other ways, according to Chambers officials.

Plans for the land if the swap is approved include a landfill, a city park and additional space to house the overflow of prisoners from the county jail, officials said.

Benning schools plan open houses

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools have planned open houses to provide parents the opportunity to learn more about their child's educational experience.

The open house or back-to-school night is a time for parent-group conferences and orientations when parents learn about plans for the school year.

The parent-group conference provides a brief review of school policies and procedures, curriculum and classroom guidelines. It also provides an opportunity for parents to meet school personnel who will be working with their children.

Open houses will be at 7 p.m. at each school as follows:

McBride School — Tuesday.
White School — Wednesday.
Loyd School — Thursday.
Wilson School — Sept. 17.
Wilbur School — Sept. 17.
Dexter School — Sept. 18.
Faith School — Sept. 19.
Patch School — Sept. 27.

Parents of Fort Benning students are urged to mark their calendars and to make plans to attend the open houses where their children attend school.

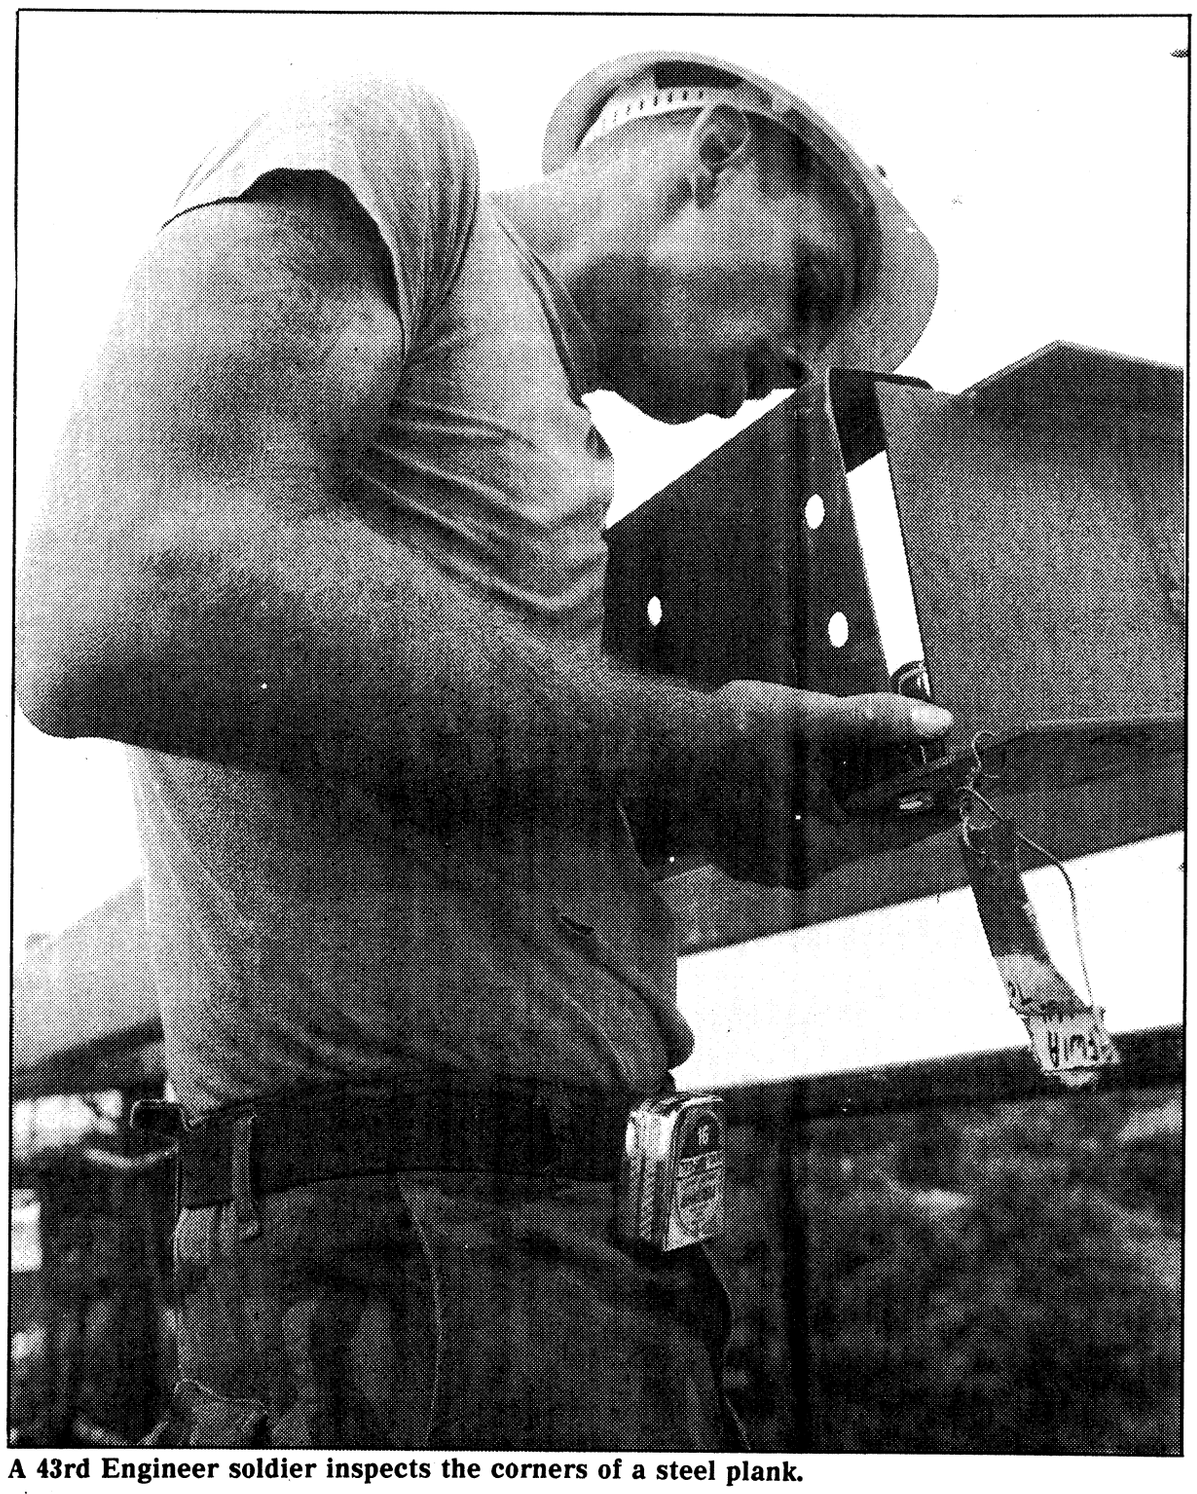
Engineers' Honduran project nears completion



A 43rd Engineer soldier inspects the corners of a steel plank.

By Mike Simpkins
367th Public Affairs Detachment

CHOLUTECA, Honduras — The first steel and masonry gymnasium in southern Honduras will soon be completed for the high school of this small city by the U.S. Army's 43rd Engineer Battalion from Fort Benning.

On schedule for a Sept. 15 completion, the 118-by-100 foot gym will contain two volleyball courts and a full basketball court with bleachers.

It will also be used for gym classes by the 1,600 students at Jose Cecilio Del Valle High School.

Alpha and Bravo Companies completed preparatory work, each deploying in two-month increments beginning last April. The battalion's Charlie Company will complete the project.

"The soldiers get quality training in masonry, steelwork and carpentry here," said 2nd Lt. Adrienne Ruggles, the project officer. "The opportunity for cross training arises every day."

"We had no problems with material supply," said Staff Sgt. Urel T. McGill, in charge of steel work here.

Many materials came from Honduran suppliers who expedited the necessary items. This helped the local economy at the same time.

The students and faculty here cooperated very well throughout the six-month project, officials said.

"The high school president and teachers help us get everything we need," said McGill. "Sometimes just keeping inquisitive kids out of the way is the greatest help."

School president Abel Carrasco said the gym will also provide a place for meetings, social functions and parties.

"Physical education is very important to my students," said Carrasco through a translator.

"In addition to the regular curriculum, everyone here must take a gym class. We appreciate the U.S. Army doing this for us."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My reserve unit was just called to active duty, and we report for duty next week.

I am a truck driver in the civilian world and pull in a pretty nice paycheck twice a month.

My pay as a private first class isn't going to stretch nearly as far. I heard that as soon as I go on active duty the interest on my car loan automatically drops to six percent. Is that true?

A. Congress enacted the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act in 1940 to protect military personnel fulfilling the requirements of the national defense.

Since military service often interferes with the soldier's ability to protect his or her legal rights or meet his or her financial obligations, the SSCRA was passed to help the soldier in certain circumstances.

The SSCRA is a long act with many parts, and it cannot be explained in a few words. However, in response to your specific question, the SSCRA does have a provision concerning the maximum amount of interest that may be charged on all or any portion of a debt from any civil obligation, such as a contract, tax or assessment (except income tax), which arose prior to entrance on active duty.

The interest rate can include service charges, renewal charges and fees. The maximum rate of interest under the SSCRA is six percent.

To obtain either a reduction in the amount of interest on a loan or a stay of enforcement on an obligation, the soldier must demonstrate that his or her ability to make the payments has been "materially affected" by entrance on active duty. It is not automatic.

The soldier has the obligation to initiate court proceedings during his or her service or within six months thereafter to take advantage of the SSCRA's protection.

The court's order will reduce the interest rate or suspend the enforcement of the debt, whichever the soldier requested, for a certain period of time.

The court order does not permit the cancellation of the debt. The soldier must ultimately work out a satisfactory repayment schedule with the creditor that will include repayment of all of the interest and payments not enforceable against the soldier once the court order was granted.

In addition, although most car loans authorize the lender to repossess the vehicle if you miss any payments, the SSCRA requires creditors to get the permission of the court before repossessing your vehicle.

This protection is for car loans signed before the soldier comes on active duty.

This information is extremely brief. Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 and make an appointment with an attorney to discuss your case in detail.

lie Hay said visits from family members were allowed and soldiers had easy access to the telephone.

Spec. James Woodruff, a newlywed soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company said he was able to talk to his wife every evening on the telephone.

Woodruff and his new bride Jeannie arrived at Fort Benning, Aug. 6, and before he knew it, he was being sent to Saudi Arabia.

Although it was tough leaving his new wife, he said he was itching to get over to Saudi Arabia.

"I'm ready to go," he said. "I have the utmost confidence in our equipment and training."

Cpl. Jose Villastrigo, HHC Bde., is in much the same situation as the Woodruffs. He is also recently married.

Tina, his wife since June, got word that he would be one of the first to fly out from Fort Stewart so she drove down to bid him farewell.

The two sat on the hood of the car under a shade tree awaiting his departure. There were no tears.

The separation will be difficult for both of them Villastrigo said, but that's his job and that's why he joined the Army.

"I'm hurt that he's leaving," Tina said. "But, I'm proud of him too. I know he'll be back.

Hay said the attitude of the Villastrigos and the Woodruffs is an accurate reflection of the entire Brigade. "The Sledgehammer Brigade is ready to move forward," he said.

Fort Benning names year's top soldiers

NCO winner reaches one of his goals

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Education and support from the chain of command were key factors for motivating the newest Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

Staff Sgt. Ricky D. McGill, an operations sergeant at the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy, is proud of his latest achievement.

"I feel proud of what I have done. I've reached one of the many goals that I have set for myself," said McGill.

McGill credits the members of his chain of command and his peers as a major factor in his win. They often stopped him in hallways with impromptu questions to test him on his knowledge of military subjects, said McGill.

Education is also a driving force for the post's top NCO. Currently attending Troy State University, McGill is pursuing his bachelor's degree in criminal justice.

"I think you should never stop striving for the top ... excellence is not an 'extra' but a requirement," said McGill.

Having been a service member for the past 11 years, McGill said he understands what excellence is all about. He has attended the airborne, air assault, and drill sergeant schools, as well as the primary, basic and advanced noncommissioned officer courses.

McGill said that he enjoys the knowledge that is gained through appearing before boards and offers this advice to other young soldiers:

"Remember your education is important, and it is your responsibility. Never stop setting goals for yourself — always strive for excellence."

Infantryman earns top title

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The support of his chain of command was the driving force behind the motivation of Fort Benning's newest soldier of the year.

Pfc. John D. Nolan, Company E, 29th Infantry Regiment, is the post's Soldier of the Year.

Noland, a mechanized infantryman, came through to gain the title "top soldier" by excelling before noncommissioned officer boards and evaluation teams.

"I think it's great that a young soldier like Noland can excel," said 1st Sgt. Gary E. Kosper, first sergeant for Company E. "He has a lot of self-initiative. His standards are very high. Noland is tougher on himself than his superiors are on him. He excels in everything he does — physical training, skill qualification test — everything."

Nolan said he is ecstatic about the achievement.

"I think it's great, and I attribute my success to my chain of command. My advice to other soldiers who would like to go for this award is to listen and follow up on the advice given by your chain of command, and study the regulations diligently."

Keeping yourself motivated throughout the entire process is also a key factor in achieving success, said Nolan.

Hispanic population growing dramatically, may become largest minority group in U.S.

Equal Opportunity Office

Millions of Americans have their roots in Central and South America and the Caribbean Islands. These people, commonly referred to as Hispanic Americans, have grown in population dramatically over the past 20 years.

In the 1970 census, Hispanic Americans accounted for 4.5 percent of the U.S. population and by 1980, 6.4 percent.

Demographers predict that by the year 2000, Hispanic Americans will number more than 47 million in the United States and represent the nation's largest minority group.

All Hispanic Americans can trace their language, ancestry and customs back to Spain and to a lesser degree, Portugal.

Spain was one of the earliest centers of human development and later became a center of culture, blending European and Arabic traditions. Spain was not an industrial country in early times, but rather depended on exploration of unchartered lands for economic riches.

This exploration ultimately led them to the Americas in the 15th Century. Spain was a leader in education and culture, and the rich culture profoundly influenced and dominated the culture of the new world for centuries.

In their zeal to spread Catholicism in the New World, the Spaniards established many missions in North, Central and South America, including several in what is now California, Arizona and New Mexico.

Over the succeeding centuries, the Spanish explorers and settlers assimilated the many Indian people into their culture.

Many of these Indian tribes, such as the Mayas, Aztecs and Incas, were very highly developed themselves and the result was a Latin American culture that was a blend of the old world and the new world.

As the Hispanic American population has grown in this country, their economic and political influence has grown also.

The top Hispanic-owned business in the U.S. accounted for $8.7 billion in total sales and had more than 65,000 employees in 1985.

Hispanic American voter registration has increased at a faster pace than other ethnic groups in recent years, and it is estimated that over 51 percent of eligible Hispanic Americans are registered to vote.

At present, there are 14 Hispanic American members of Congress.

The Hispanic American culture is deeply rooted in the "melting pot" that is known as the United States of America.

Hispanic Americans have been involved in the development of this country since the beginning.

Hispanic Americans are civil leaders in education, economics, religion, politics and the sciences. They are also leaders and heros in our military services, with many earning our country's highest military award, the Medal of Honor.

An understanding of our Hispanic citizens can assist in a deeper understanding of America.

Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 will mark the second Hispanic Heritage Month. Congress expanded the observance from a week to a month last year.

The 1990 theme of "500 years of Hispanic Heritage 1492-1992. . . Education Excellence" combines the celebration of Columbus' Spanish-sponsored voyage to the new world and a look at how Hispanics can improve their lives in the future.

A ceremony Sept. 14 in Marshall Auditorium at 3 p.m. will kick off Hispanic Heritage Month for Fort Benning.

Jose Z. Garcia, director of the Latin American Institute at the University of New Mexico, will be the speaker.

Fort Benning has a recreation area in Destin, Fla. The resort-type area is on the Gulf Coast, and it is operated year round. It is available to all active duty and retired military and their family members, and Department of the Army and Nonappropriated Fund civilians.

Destin is between Pensacola and Panama City and is only 13 miles from Eglin Air Force Base and its facilities (i.e. emergency medical treatment, post exchange and service station).

A new 10-unit motel was completed in the last year bringing to two the number of motels in the area. Also, the recreation area has six 2-bedroom cabins, three 3-bedroom cabins, and six duplex cottages. A swimming pool is available and there are 62 campsites, 33 of which are complete with water, electricity, and sewage hook-ups. The other 29 have electricity only.

A comfort station, with toilet facilities, showers, and laundry facilities, is adjacent to the campgrounds.

Rental equipment is available, including a 48-foot deep sea charter boat, party barges, sailboats, fishing boats, or water skis. A marina is on premises and a 300 foot pier extends into the Chotawatchee Bay for those who prefer to fish closer to shore.

OPERATION DESERT SHIELD

586th Engineer Bn. soldiers support Desert Shield

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 586th Float Bridge Company and Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, are doing their part to support Operation Desert Shield by loading equipment onto ship in Florida.

Headed up by Col. Joseph Trez, the 300-man contingency has been working 12-hour shifts, around the clock, loading ships bound for Saudi Arabia at the Jacksonville, Fla. port.

586th soldier 2nd Lt. Brett Bowman said the morale of the soldiers has been extremely high so far.

"They are doing a completely different mission; they're near the water and they are doing something new," he said. "So far, everyone has liked the duty."

Bowman said although shiftwork makes for long hours, they've arranged for buses to take them to the beach and to the nearby Naval post exchange.

"The place where we're staying is comfortable, and we have access to a pool so that keeps them happy," he said. "They have us staying in a local motel because there isn't any billeting available."

He attributed the lack of facilities to their location.

"This is a civilian port," he said. "We are acting as the port support activity working hand in hand with civilians."

Bowman said their job is to move the vehicles from point to point and make sure they are properly prepared for transport to Saudi Arabia.

Trez said their mission essentially is to deploy the 101st Airborne Division over to Saudi Arabia.

"The soldiers from the Engineers were deployed to help move them out," he said. "General Cavezza (Fort Benning commanding general) was tasked to supply the support, and these soldiers were selected."

Working hand in hand with workers from the local community to get the ships loaded is a unique situation, Trez said.

"Each ship is different, and it varies each time," he said. "It has taken as long as 36 hours to load one ship."

Trez estimated that once a ship is loaded, it takes more than two weeks for it to arrive in Saudi Arabia.

"The unit will estimate how long it will take each unit's equipment to get there and coordinate their arrival with that time," he said.

Trez said he was unsure how much longer the mission would take, but he did mention that the unit's stay had been extended for 30 days.

VA emergency medical system goes into place

Department of Veterans Affairs

Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski says that VA plans to serve as a backup to military hospitals are in place and ready for any medical emergency if hostilities break out in the Middle East.

Addressing the Veterans of Foreign Wars national convention, Derwinski described contingency plans now in place at the nation's 172 VA medical centers which would make beds available to support hospitals operated by the armed services.

Derwinski said VA is providing the Defense Department with a daily count of available hospital beds and that VA is surveying its current staff to determine how many doctors and nurses are reserve members. These steps, Derwinski said, would enable VA to meet any demands brought on by military casualties.

"VA is part of America's readiness," Derwinski said. "We are standing by with equipment, supplies and the resources of our medical system if the need arises."

Derwinski spoke on the day following an address by President Bush who told the VFW members that the U.S. was committed to stopping aggression by Iraq.

Deployment causes medical staff shuffle

Army News Service

The deployment of medical soldiers from installations in the continental United States to the Middle East will likely result in some health care professionals being temporarily reassigned to installations where shortages occur, say Health Services Command officials.

According to a statement released by Col. Michael P. Kehoe, HSC's public affairs officer, health care at continental United States installations will continue for all eligible patrons despite the deployment of medical personnel supporting Operation Desert Shield.

"Some medical treatment facilities will send a significant number of their direct health care providers with the deploying forces," Kehoe said.

"In order to continue providing medical care to remaining soldiers, family members and other authorized beneficiaries at affected treatment facilities, there may be some temporary reassignments" from one facility to another.

Bret Erickson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit recently won the gold medal and established the world record for doubles trap at the 1990 World Shooting Championship in Moscow.

Erickson was one of 13 U.S. Army shooters who participated in the World Championship as members of the U.S. team. More than 900 shooters representing 63 nations rounded out the competition in Moscow.

Glen Dubis, currently assigned to the 2nd Armored Division in Germany, is the world champion in the standing 300-meter rifle event and was a member of the first-place U.S. team in standard rifle

Other members of the team are USAMU's Steve Goff and Brad Carnes. Dubis, Carnes and Tom Tamas were members of the second-place 300 meter prone (English) match.

Tamas placed third and Carnes fourth overall in the English match.

In pistol events, Ed Suarez was a member of the third-place U.S. team for center fire pistol and Erich Buljung and Jimmie McCoy were members of the third-place standard pistol team.

Denise Morrison was a mamber of the third place U.S. Ladies team in doubles trap.

Other USAMU shooters who participated in the world championship are: Cindy Raahauge, skeet; Alger Mullins, skeet; Martin David Edmondson, running target and Stan Hayes, pistol.

Earlier this summer, several of these international shooters participated in the World Cup in Rio de Janiero, Brazil.

Choosing fishing tackle requires consideration

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

With hundreds of new bass fishing tackle items due on store shelves within the next few weeks, anglers should study their own fishing styles and needs carefully before making purchases.

That's the advice of Evinrude Pro Staff angler Denny Brauer, who recently returned from the annual meeting of the American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers Association in New Orleans where he had the opportunity to see much of the latest equipment on display.

"For the past several years, fishing equipment has become more and more specialized," explains Brauer. "There are rods, reels, lines, lures and even tackle boxes designed specifically for a certain fishing technique or condition.

"Before purchasing anything, I suggest a fisherman carefully analyze his own fishing style, the type of water he fishes most, and his own preferences.

"Specialized equipment can make anyone a better bass angler, but it may have limited applications that don't really suit a fisherman."

The most obvious specialization has been with rods, explains the Evinrude pro, and because they are often quite expensive, it is important for an angler to study how he might use a particular rod. Many rods can be used for several different types of fishing techniques.

Brauer also suggests anglers pay particular attention to light-line spinning equipment, even if they prefer heavier baitcasting outfits.

"Today I probably catch more than 30 percent of my tournament bass on spinning tackle with six and eight-pound test line," he notes. "On more and more lakes, the heavy fishing pressure is causing bass to become more wary of lures.

"Bass fishermen will see a lot of new spinning rods and reels in the tackle stores next year, and I strongly suggest they study them carefully."

When looking at the many new lures that will become available, Brauer recommends trying one and experimenting to see how well it works before purchasing more of them.

"A lot of fishermen, myself included, will buy four or five of the same lure just because we think it will catch bass," he laughs. "It makes much more sense to purchase one and try it first.

"Remember, new lures are not going to obsolete older lures. If you have developed confidence in one particular lure, you'll catch bass on that lure no matter how old it is."

• • •

Bass fishermen may want to install an OMC SysteMatched Parts & Accessories water pressure gauge on their boat to provide an early warning of possible overheating problems.

Outboards can lose water pressure if the motor is trimmed or raised too high, or if the water intake is covered with weeds or mud.

A water pressure gauge gives earlier warning of trouble than an engine temperature gauge.

Results from test show bass adequate

Results from seine samples obtained by the Fish and Wildlife Branch during mid-July indicate that King's Pond presently holds adequate numbers of bass and bream.

The "No Bass Fishing" signs have been removed and bass fishermen may begin to remove bass from the pond according to the limits set forth in the installation's hunting and fishing regulation.

The limit for bass is 10 per day, 12 inches or above.

Averett's Pond was drained and restocked with channel catfish, bass and bream during 1988-1989.

A seine sample conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Branch indicates the pond is ready to be fished in. The pond will be open for fishing when possible. Check the hunter access boards for daily fishing opportunities.

Also, Weems Pond is closed for herbicide applications until further notice.

SPIRITUAL

Reflections

Winning souls essential for success

By Dale V. Heinlein
Chaplain, USAITC

Most people like to win. Almost no one enjoys losing. That is true whether you are young or old, play soccer, football, chess or Nintendo. It is true of parents trying to share their morals, values and ethics with their children. It is true if you are a private, non-commissioned officer or a commanding general.

To be a winner in this side of eternity is one thing. To be a winner in the world to come is quite another.

Solomon, son of King David, penned that the one, "who is wise, wins souls," (Proverbs 11:30). This depicts that there is more to life than what meets the eye. If someone is truly wise now, then that person is concerned about spiritual matters — concerning the winning of "souls."

The adage, "It doesn't matter if you win or lose, it's how you play the game," does not provide much comfort to the team players who have accumulated fewer points at the end of the contest. The same holds true on the battle fields of life, as well as on the battle fields of war.

In life, we soon learn to chose our battles carefully. There are many brush fires burning around us vying for our time and energy, but there are fewer full blown forest fires that demand our full attention.

If we attempt to focus all our time and effort into everything or situation gone awry, we soon find ourselves wasted away with little or no energy and sanity left to try to win the battles that will have lasting results.

From youth, we learn that the road to victory is often paved with compromise. If you want the car tonight," says the father, "then clean it out and wash it today."

In the soul side of life, however, there is no margin for compromise. It is all or nothing. You either believe in God's plan to rescue human creatures placed on this planet, or you do not.

Are you living to win, or are you living to lose in eternity? The person who is wise wins souls — including his own soul. This precious prize is for the winner — a prize worth everything. God offers this to you through faith.

Those who remain God's faithful followers will one day be revealed as the winners they truly are. God is faithful.

Numerous people and "things" demand your time and energy. However, none of them are worth losing your faith — which assures your soul being "won." So, choose your battles in life carefully.

Even more important is to devote your unwavering dedication to the winning of your sour — and the souls of others. God is counting on you. And so are others.

Potluck lunch begins council's fall schedule

A special "Women of Faith" gathering is planned for the January 4 meeting. Games, door prizes and fellowship will accompany a gathering of Protestant, Jewish and Spanish-speaking Catholic Women, as well as ladies from the Fort Benning Church of Latter Day Saints and Samoan Pentecostal.

A mini retreat to Blessed Trinity Shrine in Holy Trinity, Ala. is planned for March, and a sedar meal is also being planned for that month.

In April, Father Killian Moonie will speak on the events taking place in Medjugorie, Yugoslavia. Apparitions of the Blessed Mother are said to take place in this small town. New officers will be elected that day as well.

The May first Friday will be a potluck luncheon to say goodbye to old officers and welcome the new.

At some restaurants "Family Night" means: Bring your kids. The owners' family needs a new yacht.
At Cucos, "Family Night" means: Every Tuesday night you get a freshly prepared dinner made from real ingredients, in real ovens at a really good price.
And kids 12 and under eat free from our children's menu when accompanied by an adult ordering an entree.
So round up the little ones and give them a taste of true Mexican culture. "Family Night"... Cucos' style.

Columbus College Theatre holds auditions for fall play

Columbus College

The Columbus College Theatre is holding auditions for its fall production, "The Boys Next Door," a comedy by Tom Griffin, Sept. 24 to 25 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 109, Fine Arts Hall, Columbus College.

Try-outs are open to the public including Fort Benning soldiers and their family members, as well as to college students.

Auditionees don't need to bring memorized materials since they will be reading from the script. Copies of the script may be checked out from the Department of Speech and Theatre, Fine Arts Hall, room 113-115.

Volunteers are also needed to work backstage. College credit hours are available for both acting roles and technical positions. Call 568-2048 for more information.

Hazel Hall, chair, Department of Speech and Theatre, will direct and Bill Evans, Columbus College Theatre designer and technical director, will design the production. "The Boys Next Door" will be presented as a dinner theatre production Nov. 8 to 11 and 15 to 18.

"The Boys Next Door" is a compassionate comedy about mental retardation. There are roles for seven men and two women as follows:

Arnold, marginally retarded, is a very tense man in his 40s. He lives in an apartment with three other mentally handicapped men and works as a daytime janitor in a movie house.

Lucien, a large black man about 50 and severely retarded, has been notified that his Social Security benefits are being cut off. He is to appeal his case before a State Senate subcommittee, and feels that since he knows "The Alphabet Song," he will be okay. A very challenging but rewarding role.

Jack, a wry man in his mid-30s, is a social worker who has supervised the men for eight months. A caring man, he is becoming increasingly "burned out."

Norman, fat, sloppy, about 30 and retarded, works at a doughnut shop where he is known as "Billy Bulemia." Lucien never takes off his large ring of keys "because I can't get into things without my keys."

Barry is a 28-year-old schizophrenic "teetering on the edge but clearly resourceful." He calls himself a golf pro and advertises private lessons for $1.13 an hour.

Sheila is Norman's girlfriend and no "Skinny Minny" herself. A shy woman, she is in her late 20s or 30s. She dresses and speaks poorly, and more than anything, wants Norman's keys.

Mr. Kemper, Barry's father, is a coarse, violent man, who after years of rejection and neglect, visits Barry, with devastating results.

34th Med., 215th Finance deploy

Units' medical, financial soldiers to provide support

By Cynthia Barnes
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from two Fort Benning units and a National Guard unit departed from Lawson Army Air Field this week to participate in Operation Desert Shield.

Personnel from the 34th Medical Battalion and the 215th Finance Support Unit and the 1241st Adjutant General Company, an Alabama National Guard unit, are the latest to leave Benning to join American forces in the Middle East.

Also joining them were historians from the 44th Military History Detachment from Fort McPherson, Ga. Their mission will be to make sure that all documents are maintained properly by the units and not destroyed so they can be placed in Army archives.

Personnel from the 926th and 359th Medical Detachments left Friday. Their mission will be to provide medical support for those already deployed to the Middle East.

The 926th, which is the first element of Fort Benning's 34th Medical Battalion to leave, specializes in preventative medicine, and the 359th is a neurosurgical team.

The first National Guard unit to depart for Saudi Arabia from Fort Benning, the 1241st AG Company, left Sunday evening.

The unit from Montgomery, Ala. arrived on post five days prior to their departure and will be providing postal and administrative support in the Middle East.

The 215th Finance Support Unit boarded a C-141 aircraft Monday morning en route to Saudi Arabia. Their mission there will be to provide services for commanders and soldiers, including individual pay concerns, according to Lt. Col. Morgan F. Denny, commander of the unit.

They will even cut checks and send them back to the United States, and they will have electronic capability back to the states, Denny said. The unit will be working with the 18th Corps Finance Group.

The morale of the unit is high, according to Sgt. Darryl M. Gates, a 215th squad leader. "We are a high-speed finance unit. I know that we will successfully complete our mission because our state of readiness is at an all-time high. We're very well-trained and ready to get busy," said Gates.

Farewell ceremonies were held for each departure so soldiers could say goodbye to family members and friends.

Unit's deployment won't affect finance, accounting operations

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The deployment of the 215th Finance Company will not affect Fort Benning's finance and accounting operations, according to the Finance and Accounting Sergeant Major for the Directorate of Resource Management.

Sgt. Maj. Ed Gresham said the 215th was activated here for the purpose of providing ground support for units in situations such as the one in Saudi Arabia.

"The 215th and the Finance and Accounting Office have trained for this day on several different occasions," he said.

He explained that the 215th prepared for this day by doing mini-deployments, training with nuclear, biological and chemical equipment and weapons qualification.

"Whenever the soldiers in the office went to the field, civilian personnel took their place," Gresham said. "The average soldier will not even be able to distinguish that we've changed the way we do business," he said.

He added that this is exactly how it is supposed to be. The 215th is at Fort Benning for the sole reason of providing support to deployed units during times of conflict, he said.

"The soldiers of the 215th are placed in different sections within Finance and Accounting to keep their financial skills sharp," Gresham said.

"I'd say they are one of the best trained units of this type in the Army. They are prepared and so are we."

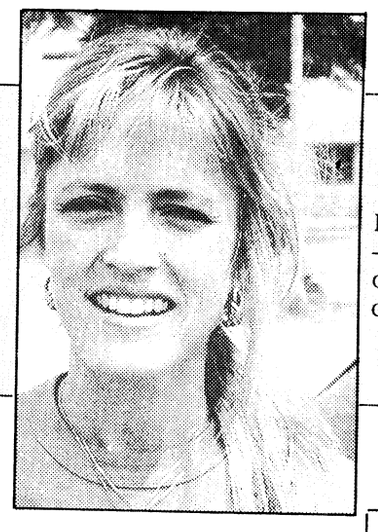
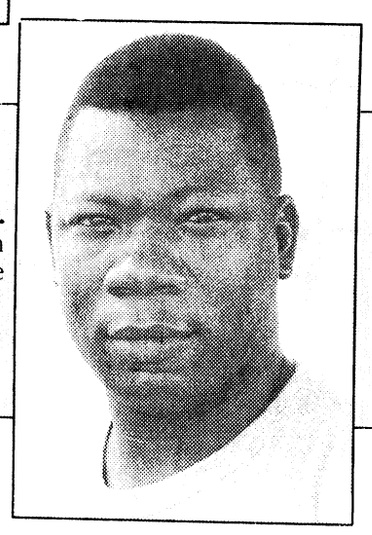
VARIOUS VOICES:

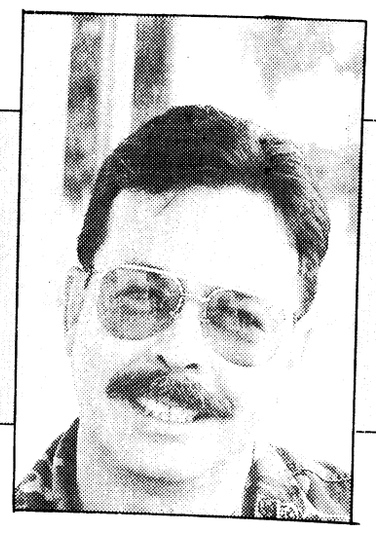
With the threat of an oil crisis, what are you doing to conserve gasoline?



Kysa George, family member — "My husband and I take one car instead of using two when we can."

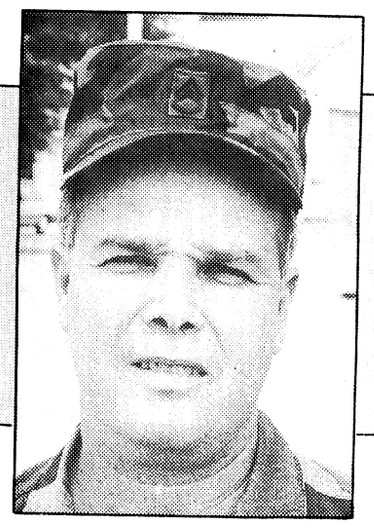


Staff Sgt. Franklin Williams, Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I'm traveling less. I've stopped some of my trips to Florida."



Lt. Col. Manuel Rojas, SOA — "Well, it's pretty hard to do. But, when I can, I won't drive places that I can walk to."

Virginia Wyckstaadt, family member — "I limit myself to three dollars worth of gas every other day."

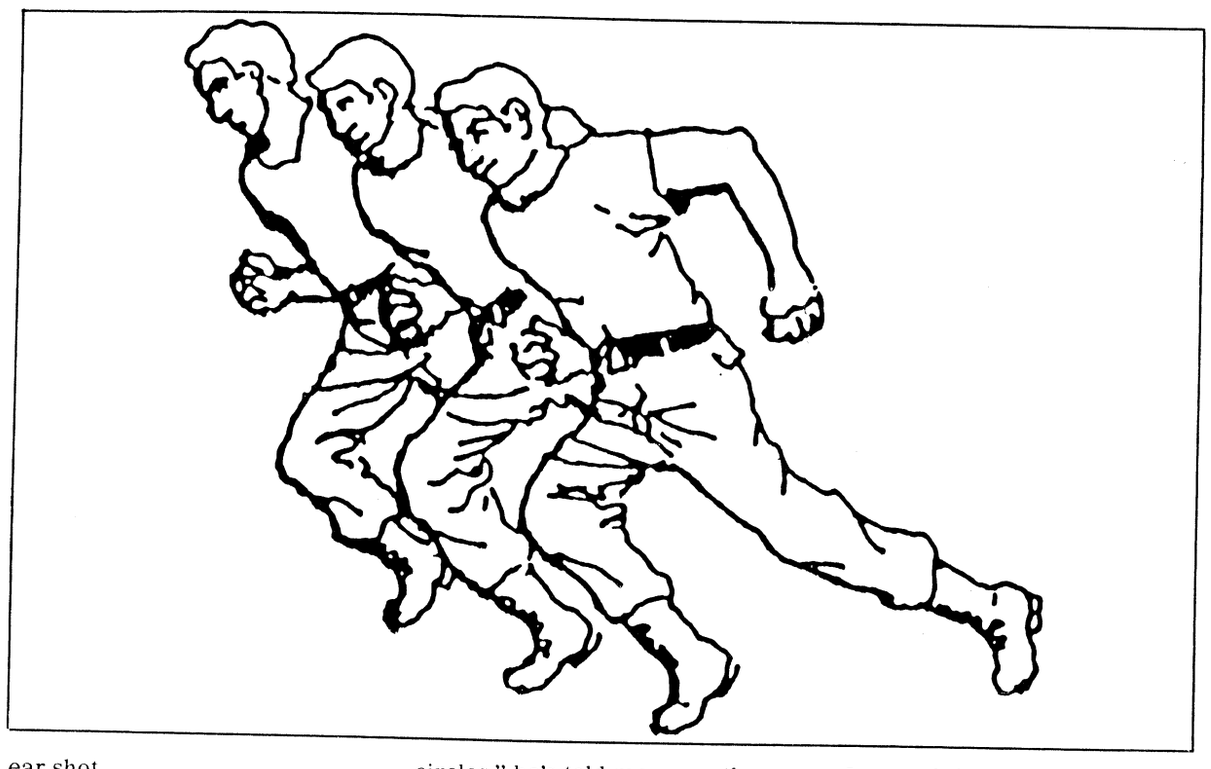


Staff Sgt. Enriquez Irizarry, SOA — "If I can walk somewhere, for instance if it's within a mile radius, I'll do that instead of driving."

Sgt. Shelby Baize, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "When we go shopping, we try to do it all at once so we don't have to keep making trips."

Real soldiers run on roads, not a lighted, running track

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Did all the REAL soldiers from Fort Benning deploy already?

I've seen some rag-tag PT (physical training) formations before, but what I came across the other day really takes the cake.

I was tromping back from the morning run when I noticed a gaggle of people disguised as soldiers in the gray PT uniforms shuffling along toward Infantry Hall.

As they reached the intersection, one kept going and the other stopped while a male voice out of the darkness bellowed, "turn left here."

A woman's voice then relayed the command to the shuffler who'd continued shuffling, to come back. The shuffler reluctantly turned back, and the gaggle passed in front of the Follow Me Statue, making the bronze statue shutter, I'm sure as the conversation went something like this:

Male voice: Keep running.

Female voice: I've been doing this for 15 years, I know what I'm doing.

Male voice: Keep running.

Female voice: I'll do it my way.

Male voice: We'll never find the rest of the unit. They're probably spread out all over in the OCS (officer candidate school) and airborne barracks by now.

Female voice: I'm doing it my way.

They were still chewing at each other as they passed out of ear shot.

I was just glad ol' sarge wasn't around to hear them. He'd have either eaten 'em alive on the spot or passed out from apoplexy.

I mean he's old Army. He's white name tag, black and gold U.S. Army, old Army. He still hasn't gotten over the fact that you don't need to do pull ups to get into airborne school, that the uniform for PT is no longer fatigues and combat boots.

You can still see him out there every day, running in his combat boots. But you won't see him running on the running track across from Infantry Hall.

"That track's for PT tests. Soldiers should be out running on roads, singing cadence, waking up 'em sleepy heads. You don't do eight miles running in circles," he's told me more than once.

In fact old sarge can't believe what's happened to the track.

"Any sojer worth his C-rats ain't gonna be worried about trippin' in some durn hole. I don't care how dark. That's why ya pick up yer dad blammed feet. That's why ya wear combat boots.

"So what do they do? They smooth the track. Then what do they do? They put them lights on it. What's this supposed to be ... Central Park? The New York subway system? We got muggers on Stewart Field at six A-em?

"If we're worried about someone mugging sojers on a PT field, we got real problems," he said, finally running out of breath.

I agreed that perhaps we'd over done it a bit. My concern, I told him was getting hit by an airplane.

"Some pilot new to the area might mistake the field for Columbus Airport," I told him.

"That ain't a problem boy, when's the last time you saw any plane coming into Columbus afore nine A-em?"

I had to admit, he had a point there and was about to tell him that when he grabbed a colonel walking by and began his litany all over.

As I was leaving, I heard him saying, "The next thing you know they'll be putting in a sand track so sojers can practice running in sand for when they chase Sadman Insane out of Iraq."

Commanding general proclaims Hispanic Heritage Month on post

The period of Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 is proclaimed Hispanic Heritage Month at Fort Benning to recognize the contributions of Hispanic Americans.

This year's theme is "500 Years of Hispanic Heritage ... The Continuing Adventure: Education, Excellence — Key to Our Future."

The military and civilian contributions of Hispanic Americans reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy, which are the strengths of the United States.

The various Hispanic cultures continue to contribute significantly to our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the planned activities by units, staff, and other agencies.

Officers' Club staff thanks sponsors

The management and staff of the Fort Benning Officers' Club wish to thank the sponsors of the third annual Bi-City Tennis Tournament for their support.

Appreciation goes to: Allied Van Lines/Livingston Storage, Ranger Joe's and Rhodes Furniture. The tournament was a tremendous success, due largely to the support given by the sponsors.

More players participated in this year's tournament than in previous years.

Reader wants to see separate containers for recycle materials

Almost every week, I read articles in the Bayonet about saving energy and (stopping) pollution.

Still, there is a lot to do.

I live in a Fort Benning housing area, and I would welcome different garbage containers for separating household garbage from items that can be recycled.

For instance, there could be one container for glass, one for aluminum, and another for paper.

The money for these containers could come from profits made from recycling.

I would also like to see a place where old batteries, medication, and other harmful products could be returned for proper handling.

Reader dedicates poem to 197th

To Our 197th Soldiers:

As you stand in formation, so proud in your Army greens,
We begin to understand what being a soldier means.

You will go and fight for our red, white and blue,
While all of us here will be praying for you.

The band stands up, the Army song they begin to play,
As the 197th marches to buses that will carry them away.

We wave goodbye, there are tears on our faces,
For we know you are going to hostile, far away places.

Go forth our soldiers, be brave and be strong,
For we'll await your return, no matter how long.
Our love and best wishes to you we send,
And we know we'll come out on top in the end.

Government loses money through waste, fraud, abuse

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Temporary duty assignments are the norm in the military and the paperwork that surrounds them can be a nightmare.

But, travelers should be forewarned that doctoring TDY paperwork could constitute fraud.

According to Ted Craig of Internal Review and Audit Compliance, fraud represents a personal gain of an individual or organization and a loss to the government.

Craig said fraud has certain characteristics — it must be intentional and there must be deception.

Fraud comes in many varieties he said. Examples are offers, payments, or acceptance of bribes or gratuities; making false statements; submitting false claims; suppressing the truth; misrepresenting material fact; falsifying records; conflict of interest cases and criminal irregularities.

Craig, who handles Fraud, Waste and Abuse on Fort Benning, said that fraud is the most serious offense, whereas waste and abuse are in a separate category.

"With fraud you run into the chance of losing your job, your retirement, or fines and imprisonment," he said.

"Waste and abuse are generally handled administratively with bad proficiency reports or counseling," he added.

Craig said the greatest loss to the government is probably through waste and abuse.

"This is where Total Quality Management comes in," he said. "TQM prevents waste and abuse through proper management."

Waste, defined as the extravagant, careless, or needless expenditure of government funds, or the consumption of government property that results from deficient practices, systems, controls or decisions, can be controlled with TQM.

Abuse, which is the intentional or improper use of government resources, can be controlled the same way he said.

"The reasoning behind this," he said, "is that waste and abuse usually stem from mismanagement."

"TQM will help set the moral climate in which to operate," he added. "It encourages the organization to accomplish plans and follow its policies."

The Internal Review and Audit Compliance Office investigates cases of Fraud, Waste and Abuse on a regular basis.

"We aren't out to get anyone," he said. "But, we do want to make people aware of what constitutes fraud, waste and abuse and try to keep the government from losing money."

Craig said if you suspect fraud, waste or abuse, you can call his office at 545-3067 or the hot line at 545-3984.

OPERATION DESERT SHIELD

Special identification cards available

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Special identification cards are available for family members of spouses who deployed as part of Operation Desert Shield.

The cards can be used by family members for admission to special events and discounts on post.

One place spouses will find them handy is at the auto craft shop, according to John Bush, deputy director of Community Activities.

According to Bush, the auto craft shop will do diagnostic tests of the spouse's car at a special rate.

Armed with this information, the family member can then go to a mechanic, secure in the knowledge that he or she won't be charged for work that doesn't need to be done.

The auto craft shop will also inspect transmissions and rear ends.

Additionally DCA is working on special family night events that families will be invited to, the ID card being all that's required for admission.

Family members can get the ID card by picking up a form at either the Family Support Group in their unit's area or by coming to the Family Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza, building 2640.

Once the card is filled out, it needs to be turned in to the rear detachment commander for verification. Next, the rear detachment commander will take it back to building 2640 to be laminated. Five days later, the card will be ready for pick up.

Channel 13 airs updates

Alert Cable Channel 13 runs updates on post units deployed to Saudi Arabia. The updates are run from noon to 4 p.m. daily.

Along with the updates, footage of the departure ceremonies can be seen.

There are no exact times, and the tapes are run continuously.

Army clarifies emergency-leave travel for Operation Desert Shield soldiers

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Deployed soldiers serving in Operation Desert Shield have the same full access to emergency-leave travel entitlements as does any soldier performing temporary duty away from his/her permanent duty station.

That clarification comes from a recent message to the field from the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va. It cites a provision of the Joint Federal Travel Regulation as authorizing a TDY deployed soldier to travel at government expense from the place of temporary duty to the permanent duty station or other location.

If the emergency-affected soldier chooses a location other than the permanent duty station, the government is authorized to cover the transportation cost, provided that it doesn't exceed the cost of transportation to the permanent duty station.

The PERSCOM message explains that the Desert Shield policy "does not affect the emergency-leave travel entitlements of soldiers and their family members whose permanent duty station is outside the continental United States. Their entitlements will continue to be handled as routine ... "

Those soldiers returning from the Middle East "should be advised," the message says, 'that PERSCOM has personnel assistance points at Charleston, John F. Kennedy and Philadelphia airports to assist soldiers."

DESERT SHIELD QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The following questions were received on Fort Benning's Desert Shield Hot Line. Answers were compiled by the Public Affairs Office.

Can I mail packages?

A: The 12-ounce restriction on mail has been lifted. However, normal customs restrictions listed in postal regulations should be followed. No pornographic materials, to include semi-nude photographs, no alcohol and no pork or pork products can be mailed to Saudia Arabia. Furthermore, no religious or political material, which is contrary to the official Saudi government or religion, should be mailed. Keep in mind, mailing large packages can get expensive.

Q: I heard that all soldiers deploying had to have their wisdom teeth removed before departing. Is this true?

A: No. The soldiers did undergo thorough dental screening and processing to ensure they would have no dental problems while in Saudi Arabia. Only teeth that needed it were pulled.

Q: When the 197th returns, will its units be reassigned to other posts in the United States?

A: There are no plans to break up the 197th Infantry Brigade when it returns to Fort Benning.

Q: Why did some wives get to visit their husbands at Fort Stewart, as reported in the Bayonet, when we were told by the command, not to visit.

A: While at Fort Stewart, soldiers of the 197th trained and further prepared for deployment, often in remote areas on post. Family members were advised not to visit, primarily because of the uncertainty of meeting with their spouse and the limited places to stay. However, as reported in the Bayonet, some wives were able to time their visits.

Q: Can soldiers make phone calls home from Saudia Arabia?

A: There are public pay telephones in Saudia Arabia, however not all soldiers are close enough to these phones to use them. Some calls have been made from there, but it is difficult.

Q: How long are the soldiers going to be in Saudia Arabia?

At this time, that is unknown. The tour length will be determined by the outcome of events in the area.

Q: How do I address mail to the soldiers of Operation Desert Shield?

A. The first line of the address should be the soldier's rank and name, the second line should read 'Operation Desert Shield,' the third line should be the soldier's social security number, this is not mandatory but will help get the mail delivered. On the fourth line, you should put the soldier's full unit designation such as th 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate) (Mechanized). On the fifth and final line you should put the unit's APO number. The following are the APO numbers of units from Fort Benning:

- 197th Infantry Brigade - APO New York 09315
- 608th Ordnance Company - APO New York 09657
- 926th Medical Detachment - APO New York 09657

Q. Are the soldiers getting news from home? I heard they were desperate for news?

A. Soldiers from Fort Benning will be receiving copies of the Bayonet on a weekly basis and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer on a daily basis. Also, Armed Forces Radio is broadcasting to Saudia Arabia.

Q. How do I get more information about my soldier's unit and what they are doing?

A. Call the Fort Benning Hot Line at 545-4663 (HOME), call the soldier's rear detachment commander, get in contact with family support groups, read the local newspaper and watch local newscasts — all of these will help keep you informed. Also Fort Benning cable subscribers can watch Channel 13, information will be aired on that channel as it becomes available.

Q. What is the time difference between here and Saudia Arabia?

A. Seven hours. For example, when it's 7 a.m. here, it is 2 p.m. there.

Marksman sets record

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Capt. John McNally of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit recently set a new national record in the rapid fire pistol event at the Indiana State Pistol Championship. McNally won the rapid fire and standard pistol events of the match and placed second in center fire.

USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class Rojelio Arredondo won the air pistol match, placed second in standard pistol and third in center fire. Pvt. 1st Class Donald Carl placed second in both air and free pistol. Staff Sgt. Jonathan Frazer placed second in rapid fire and Staff Sgt. John Ulrich placed third in free pistol.

This match proved to be a good warm-up for the interservice pistol match at Fort Benning one week later. USAMU "Blue" swept all of the team matches and Army shooters won five of seven individual interservice titles.

Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie McCoy won the men's free pistol followed by Master Sgt. Erich Buljung in second place. Maj. Philip Neil, U.S. Army Reserve, placed third in the event.

McNally won the rapid fire pistol title with Pvt. 1st Class Ed Suarez in second. Maj. Terry Anderson, USAR, placed third.

Buljung and McCoy placed first and second respectively in the center fire event. Ulrich won the standard pistol match.

Suarez and Buljung placed second and third behind Sgt. 1st Class Eugene Ross, USAR, who won the air pistol event.

USAMU's Spec. Audrey Hayes won the interservice title for ladies air pistol and placed third in ladies sport pistol.

2 selected for promotion to brig. general

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The brigadier general promotion list contains two officers who have a strong ties with Fort Benning.

Col. William F. Kernan, commander, 75th Ranger Regiment, and Col. Linwood E. Burney, commander, 2nd Brigade, 7th Infantry Division, have been selected to receive their first star.

Kernan assumed command of the Regiment June 30, 1989. During his first year as commander, the Rangers spearheaded the Operation Just Cause mission in Panama.

He received his commission from Officer Candidate School in 1968. Since then, he has served in various command positions, which include top spots in 1st and 2nd Battalion, 75th Rgr. Regt.

Burney served at Fort Benning from 1985 through 1988 as the secretary, then deputy assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Confirmation is expected soon, and selectees will be promoted according to sequence number.

1st Battalion, 19th Infantry receives stone monument

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Visitors to Kinsman Barracks, home of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, can now enjoy the unit's latest addition to its impressive collection of memorabilia.

A stone monument, which stands at the barracks' entrance, was dedicated Sept. 7.

The memorial is an engraved rock from the Chickamauga Military Park. The plaque at its base reads, in part, "Symbolic of the steadfast defense of the 19th Infantry at the Civil War Battle of Chickamauga on Sept. 20, 1863 ..."

It represents the unit's nickname, Rock of the Chickamauga. The ceremony featured unveiling the rock and remarks by the Honorary Regimental Commander retired Lt. Gen. William B. Caldwell.

The unit earned the title during the Civil War when it stubbornly held Snodgrass Hill allowing the rest of the Union Army to safely retreat from Confederate advances.

Lt. Col. Gregory Vuksich, 1st Bn., 19th Inf.'s commander, launched the project in February of this year. After finding the "perfect" rock, the real work began.

Sgt. Calvin Stalling and Spec. Charles Zieglar of the 533rd Transportation Company transported the rock to Fort Benning.

Getting a four-ton rock on and off a tractor trailer truck is no easy task, however. Yates Wrecker Service of Chattanooga, Tenn., and members of the 36th Engineer Group and 608th Ordnance Company, helped out with their wreckers.

Daniel Newman, from Chickamauga, did the engraving. He etched the unit crest and "Chickamauga, 1863," into the rock.

Newman said the job was a labor of love and he said he dedicated the project to the memory of his brother who was killed in Vietnam.

The unit hopes to give soldiers a sense of identification and purpose by displaying artifacts like this, according to Chap. (Capt.) Sidney Eckert.

SUICIDE: Claiming America's teens, young adults

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Staci, according to her family and friends, had been acting "weird" lately. A 17-year-old petite brunette with piercing hazel eyes, she appeared to have the best of everything.

A senior in high school, Staci had a 3.7 grade-point average, was a majorette, a member of the yearbook staff, a student council representative and ran cross-country track.

Her boyfriend, Jeff, was handsome and popular, a member of the football team and a member of the student council. Staci and Jeff were a definite "item"and had been for months.

Staci was quite popular with a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Pretty and popular, with a loving, supportive family, Staci appeared not to have a care in the world. She had even received a notice of early acceptance to California State University to pursue environmental studies. Staci wanted to save the world.

She appeared to have it all, the best that life could offer a modern teen-ager.

Everyone thought that Staci's "weird" behavior, which could best be described as a lack of her usual enthusiasm, was just a phase.

Imagine the shock her parents experienced when they returned home from the movies one Tuesday evening to find the lifeless body of their "happy, well-adjusted" daughter sprawled across their bed, an empty bottle of her father's prized cognac at her side, a bottle of her mother's prescription tranquilizers, now less than half full, on the floor and a suicide note laying by her side.

Suicide.

In 1987, 4,924 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 committed suicide across the nation, according to Gwendolyn Harvey, board member and past president of the American Association of Suicidology. That averages out to 13 young people every day of that year taking their lives.

Why?

According to Yvonne Linsenbigler, coordinator at Civilian Counseling Services, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, the transition from adolescence to adulthood is a challenging and often difficult one.

Staying emotionally healthy, getting along with family and friends and coping with the normal stress this time period brings can be problematic, she said.

Some of these troubled young people give many warning signs signalling emotional distress. Some, like Staci, show no outward signs at all.

"There are several warning symptoms that can pinpoint the start of potential emotional disruption in a teen-ager's life. Some of these signs are: withdrawal from family and friends, persistent boredom or difficulty concentrating, decline in school performance, neglect in appearance, preoccupation with death, changes in eating or sleeping habits, drug or alcohol abuse, running away from home and talking about suicide.

If the person has a past history of attempted suicides or a major change in their life, such as the break up of a relationship or moving, it might also contribute to mental unrest," said Linsenbigler.

Feelings of hopelessness and helplessness are common emotions in suicide, she added.

There are several myths that surround the mystery of suicide, according to Training and Doctrine Pamphlet 600-20.

One of these myths is that people who talk about suicide rarely attempt or commit suicide. The fact is that nearly 80 percent of those who attempt or commit suicide give warning of their intentions. When someone talks about suicide, they may be giving a warning that should not be ignored.

Another myth is all suicidal people want to die and there is nothing that can be done about it. Actually, most suicidal people are undecided about living or dying. They may gamble with death, leaving it to others to rescue them. Frequently, they call for help before and after a suicide attempt.

Another common misconception is that talking to people about their suicidal feelings will cause them to commit suicide. Talking to someone about their suicidal feelings usually makes them feel relieved that someone finally recognizes their emotional pain and they will feel safer talking about it.

Suicide is not an act of impulse with no previous planning, as commonly believed. Most suicides are carefully planned and thought about for weeks.

In dealing with a potentially suicidal person, it is important to remember these guidelines specified in the pamphlet.

- Remember to take all threats seriously and trust your suspicions.
- Answer all "cries for help," whether they are actually verbal or shown through actions.
- Confront the problem directly. Be sure to tell the person that you do care, and encourage them to seek professional help.

Getting involved and watching for signs of emotional turmoil are the only ways to avoid more young people ending up like Staci.

Editor's note: Staci is a fictitious character.

Suicide signs, symptoms

In 1985, 400,000 adolescents attempted suicide; 6,000 succeeded. The peak months for suicide are March, April and May, so be aware of these warning signs.

- Changes in eating/sleeping habits
- Withdrawal from family/friends
- Persistent boredom/difficulty concentrating
- Unexplained decline in school performance
- Unusual neglect of appearance
- Preoccupation with death
- Giving away prized possessions
- Constant complaining of bodily aches without being hurt or injured
- Drug/alcohol abuse
- Repeated runaways
- Unexplained, extreme personality change
- Thinking or talking about suicide
- Friend's recent suicide

Tech's Yellowjackets sting Wolfpack

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Almost 1,000 members of the Fort Benning community journeyed to Georgia Institute of Technology in Atlanta to watch the Georgia Tech Yellowjackets sting the North Carolina State Wolfpack 21-13 in their first football game of the season Saturday at Georgia Tech's Bobby Dodd Stadium.

Retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register, a member of the board of directors of the Association of the United States Army, made this possible by calling Georgia Tech and requesting 1,000 tickets to the season opener.

Colonial Bus Lines donated buses to the 197th Infantry Brigade for family members of the deployed soldiers and newly-activated reservists currently filling jobs left empty due to the deployment.

The game was a slow-starting one for the Yellowjackets with a fumble by halfback William Bell in the first quarter.

The Wolfpack promptly recovered and set up a 21-yard field goal by Damon Hartman, resulting in a 3-point lead for North Carolina. Tech fullback Stefen Scotton fumbled once again, giving North Carolina free safety Snake Vinson ample opportunity to recover and make the touchdown, handing the Wolfpack a 10-0 lead.

Tech made a half-hearted attempt at a comeback with a 23-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Shawn Jones to wide receiver Greg Lester in the second quarter, bringing the score to 10-7 still in favor of the Wolfpack.

In the third quarter, Bell regained his composure from earlier fumbles and caught Jones' eight-yard pass for a touchdown, bringing the Yellowjackets ahead for the first time, 14-13.

Tech running back Jeff Wright made the final touchdown, pushing the Yellowjackets over the winning edge 21-13 against the Wolfpack.

"We kept our composure this time, and I'm really happy with the way Tech turned things around. I think our defense was really tight. I'm also happy about my contribution to the game," said Wright.

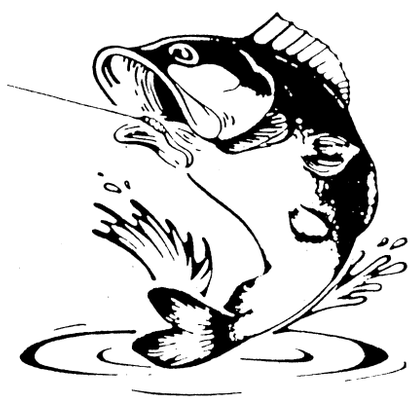
Pitching lures add versatility to fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

If you want to become a better bass fisherman, learn to pitch your lures rather than cast them.

That's the advice from top tournament pro Denny Brauer, a former B.A.S.S. Angler of the Year, a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff, and one of the sport's top lure pitchers.

"A pitch is simply a technique to present a lure to a bass more effectively," says Brauer. "In its most basic form, a pitch is an extended flip, and is used when fish are in hard-to-reach places, such as under overhanging limbs or boat docks."



The type of rod used for pitching, spinning or casting, isn't critical, says Brauer, but having a longer rod in the 6½' to 7½' range is. The extra length produces the added distance in pitching.

"To make a pitch," explains the Evinrude pro, "put your reel in free-spool, and pull about six feet of line off the rod tip so you can hold the lure with your hand. Point the rod downward toward your target, then swing the rod upward by snapping your wrists.

"As you do this, turn the lure loose so centrifugal force sends the lure out toward the target. Ideally, the trajectory of your lure will keep it close to the water so it doesn't make a big splash with it lands.

"With practice, you'll be able to consistently put a lure into a coffee cup at 30 to 40 feet."

Pitching is easier to perform than to explain, laughs the former Missouri guide, and most anglers should be able to master it in a few days.

"The real value of pitching comes in clear water where you spook bass if you get too close to them," Brauer points out, "and a normal cast lands too loud. With an underhand pitch, you can drop a lure with pinpoint accuracy and with hardly a ripple."

Pitching is also valuable when bass hideouts are protected by overhanging brush and limbs. A normal cast will send a lure into the trees, but a pitch will take the lure underneath those obstacles.

"Pitching can also be used when there aren't any obstacles," Brauer adds. "It's less tiring than overhand casting, and it's also faster. Some of the pros use pitching almost exclusively when they're fishing brushy shorelines or in narrow creeks."

Practically any lure can be pitched, says Brauer, but the most commonly used are plastic worms for warm water and jig/pork combinations in colder water.

"If you're serious about your bass fishing," Brauer says, "you owe it to yourself to learn to pitch. The technique will add a lot of versatility to your lure presentations, which in turn will lead to more bass."

NFL to realign by '94

By Gale Sayers

The National Football League recently announced that it will expand by two teams in 1993 and begin realignment in 1992. Complete realignment would take place in 1994.

I am in favor of these moves, but I think more must be done to hold teams in place once the realignment has occurred.

Realignment — a reorganization of the divisions and conferences — would be done along geographical boundaries and hopefully would have several benefits.

First, it would solve the dilemma of teams like the Phoenix Cardinals who play in the NFL East Division, despite the fact that they are three time zones away from most of the division, and the Atlanta Falcons who are in the NFC West. That makes for some hard road trips.

Realignment also would, ideally, create some natural rivalries that should exist now and don't because of current alignment.

It would be great to see teams like the Houston Oilers and the Dallas Cowboys in the same division. Right now they aren't even in the same conference and rarely play a regular season game.

Their annual preseason games are always great, with the winner promised "the bragging rings to Texas." Regular division play between these two teams could create one of the hottest rivalries in football.

The same situation exists with the Miami Dolphins and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers who rarely see each other during the regular season.

But a true rivalry is built on more than geographical locations; it is built on great players playing against each other year after year.

One of the great rivalries of all time is the Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Bears. I was lucky to be playing for Chicago and feel what that rivalry was like during its heyday.

Players like Dick Butkus, Bart Starr, Ray Nitzchke and Paul Hornung lived for football and great competition. Fans want to hang their hats on players, and it's tough these days with everyone jumping from team to team.

Great football traditions are built on guys like Walter Payton. I couldn't imagine Payton pulling the business that some players do, always looking for a better deal somewhere else.

Some team owners are even worse. Guys like Cardinals owner Bill Bidwell, who pulled out of St. Louis for Phoenix, and Robert Irsay, who left Baltimore for Indianapolis, will cause problems for realignment if they are allowed to pull up stakes at any time.

Again, rivalries are not built on greed, but love for the game, and a city and a team that stick together.

The NFL must, when studying realignment, find a way to better control an owner's right to move a team.

There has to be a commitment to NFL cities. Without a commitment, the game will be in trouble, and realignment will have been for nothing.

Editor's note: Gayle Sayers is a former Chicago Bear and a member of the National Football League's Hall of Fame.

Results from test show bass adequate

Results from seine samples obtained by the Fish and Wildlife Branch during mid-July indicate that King's Pond presently holds adequate numbers of bass and bream.

The "No Bass Fishing" signs have been removed and bass fishermen may begin to remove bass from the pond according to the limits set forth in the installation's hunting and fishing regulation.

The limit for bass is 10 per day, 12 inches or above.

Averett's Pond was drained and restocked with channel catfish, bass and bream during 1988-1989.

A seine sample conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Branch indicates the pond is ready to be fished in. The pond will be open for fishing when possible. Check the hunter access boards for daily fishing opportunities.

Also, Weems Pond is closed for herbicide applications until further notice.

6 native artists come home for museum exhibit

Columbus Museum

A unique group exhibit will showcase the work of six contemporary artists when "Home Again: The Return of Six Artists Native to the Chattahoochee Valley" will be on view at the Columbus Museum through Oct. 28.

All of the participating artists were born in the Lower Chattahoochee Valley region and now live and work in other parts of the United States.

The artists — Bo Bartlett, Roger Brown, George Dudley, Dorothy Dierks Harris, Mike Howard, and Daniel Morper — will each exhibit four to six recent works.

Painter and photographer George Dudley is a Columbus native who now works in New York City. His innovative work combines bold colors and real-life elements into unique "living art scenes."

Columbus native Dorothy Dierks Harris is Chairperson of the Art Department at Jersey City (N.J.) State College.

Landscape painter Daniel Morper resides in Sante Fe, New Mexico, and comes to the "Home Again" show by being born at Fort Benning. His work often depicts scenes from such diverse sources as New York City and the desert Southwest. Morper has studied at the University of Notre Dame, Columbia University School of the Arts and the Corcoran School of Art.

Civic Chorale conducts auditions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Columbus Civic Chorale will conduct auditions Sept. 23, at 2 p.m. and 3:30 p.m.

The auditions will be conducted by Professor Ned DeJournett.

All men should try to audition on Sunday, and most women should try to audition on Sept. 23.

Based on the result of the auditions, each selected individual will be designated as either a Core Member, an Extended Member, or a Special Member.

Core Members will participate in all four of this season's concerts.

Extended Members will participate in all of the concerts except the Dec. 4 "Christmas Brass" program.

Special Members will participate only in the two special concerts: The December Messiah performance and the February Music Extravaganza.

Singers may request to audition for any of the three categories of memberships. If no request is made, it will be assumed that the singer is auditioning for Core Membership but will accept whichever category of membership he is deemed qualified for.

Interested individuals should select an audition date and call to reserve a specific time. An accompanists will be provided.

Individuals should arrive early and wait in the lobby of Fine Arts Hall to be called.

The audition for each singer will consist of the following four, brief activities. They are listed in decreasing degree of importance:

1. A tonal memory evaluation to determine the extent to which the singer can recall and echo pitches of varying degrees of difficulty.

2. A solo song (or portion thereof) to show the size and quality of the voice and the extent to which it can be expected to blend with the total ensemble.

3. An easy, single-line piano sight-reading evaluation to determine if the singer has the ability to teach himself a part in a new composition.

4. A sight-singing evaluation to determine the level, if any, at which the singer can sing melodies at sight.

For more information, call the Columbus College Schwob Department of Music at 568-2049.

Society could use patience

By Chap. Robert Hester
4th Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

It is said that one thing that characterizes life in the United States today is the lack of patience. Humorist Oren Arnold describes the prayer of the modern American: "Dear God, I pray for patience. And I want it right now!"

We all realize that we live in a society that is in a hurry. It may not know where it is headed, but it is in a hurry to get there. Automated Teller Machines put instant cash at our fingertips. Gas stations offer self-service pumps so we can fill up and be off quickly. Fast food restaurants offer drive-thru windows so we can eat in the car, "woofing" down that burger and fries as we speed off to our next meeting or appointment. One TV channel doesn't tell you all the stories, just "Headline News, Around the World in 30 Minutes." I can't even drive to the Columbus Airport in 30 minutes.

We become angry at stop lights, fume in the commissary check-out line when there is more than one person ahead of us, and get mad at the young waitress who has 10 tables to cover by herself and no one to assist her. With few exceptions, modern Americans are not patient people (except when fishing. A wife doesn't know what a patient man she has married until she sees her husband fishing!).

God's Word, however, blows away the fog of hurriedness and gives us a clear perspective on patience. In the New Testament, Galatians 5: 22-23 informs us that patience is a great spiritual virtue. It reads, "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience. . ." Our word "patience" comes from a Greek word that means "slow to anger." It describes someone with a "long fuse," able to accept delay, setbacks, and detours, not someone who is hot tempered.

Now, I'll be the first one to admit that it is hard to be patient while we sit in rush hour traffic at Exit Four, wishing we could give the city planner or engineer who designed that intersection a piece of our mind. So we fume and try to use a rarely-known short cut that only Davey Crockett or some other adventurer could have figured out. In the long run, we don't save any time.

Friends, the Bible takes patience seriously. Ultimately, our model for patience is the Lord Himself. II Peter 3:9 reads, "The Lord is not slow about His promise as some count slowness, but is patient toward you, not wishing for any to perish, but for all to come to repentance."

While our "instant potatoes and microwave oven society" has taught us to hate delay, inwardly we long for the days of Andy, Opie and Aunt Bee sitting leisurely on the porch of their Mayberry home. God slowly taps His foot, waiting for us to come to Him.

As God is patient with you and me, let's demonstrate patience toward others. Who knows, over time we might just develop a patient spirit, able to deal with the impatience of those around us.

Let's all pray that God would grant us a patient spirit toward all people.

Chaplains offer support to spouses

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Big brown eyes looked sullen as the eight year old boy picked at his dinner. His mother noticed the silence and asked him what was making him feel so blue.

"I miss dad," he said thoughtfully.

Expecting that answer, the mother had rehearsed a reply in her head for days, hoping to say the right thing at the right time.

"I miss him too, honey. Sometimes it makes me sad and I don't feel like eating either. But we need to learn to keep everything together so that when daddy comes home, we can welcome him back. He has been gone before, so let's remember how we felt the last time he went to the desert in California, O.K.?"

Without a second's delay, the boy gave a matter-of-fact reply.

"Mom, this is different."

Eight years old is not an age of immense wisdom, but it is a child's honesty that adults may benefit from. Operation Desert Shield is indeed a different situation than a National Training Center exercise in the California desert. Now mothers, fathers, and children must deal with separation with an intangible, unrecognizable end.

Support groups are offered through may agencies, including unit spouse groups. A support group can be as common as two or three wives meeting on a sidewalk by chance.

Woes and laments are shared. The familiar question, "Have you heard from your husband?" is tossed aimlessly into the chatter. By this time, the question sounds much like the overused and unheeded "have a nice day."

Most people agree that it feels good to know others may be feeling the same anxieties. Experts find the key to offering support and comfort is best found when someone who is not directly affected by the same problem can facilitate the discussions.

That is the basis for support groups. The chaplains at Fort Benning have recognized the additional need for spouse support with the recent deployments.

Custer Terrace Chapel has begun a new group for families of deployed soldiers offered each Wednesday from noon to 1 p.m. It will be facilitated by a chaplain.

"I appreciate the support and information I get from our Brigade group," said one wife of a 197th Infantry Brigade soldier who asked not to be named.

"I don't have what most would consider major difficulties, but adjusting to this had been very hard for me. The chaplains have given me advice I can use to handle day-to-day difficulties. It is also kind of nice to be around wives who are not in my husband's company once in awhile."

Complicated issues, questions, anxieties and fears are on the minds of most members of the Fort Benning community. What should not be forgotten is that among these there is also hope and the age old practice of keeping the home fires burning. Spouses may find great satisfaction in dealing with the difficulties of separation and keeping sights set on a joyous homecoming.

Many wives, especially young ones, are tempted to go home to their parents during the Desert Shield rotation. What these wives do not take into consideration is the support they will be missing if they are in another city or state.

If you or someone you know needs additional support, take advantage of these opportunities. It may prove priceless the next time a small set of eyes looks to you for answers to a situation that is new and different.

Help is offered to spouses through many agencies. Anyone who is interested in joining a group through the chaplains may call 544-3179, 545-2289, 545-2050.

There will be a six-week Active Parenting Class beginning Oct. 17 at the Family Life Center. The course will be from noon to 1:30 p.m. Registrate now. Call 545-1760 or 545-5301.

Writing duo to visit post school

Fort Benning Schools

Sharyn Kane

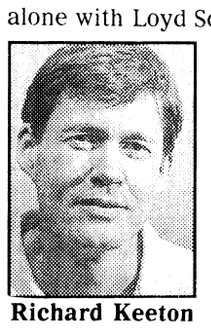
The husband-and-wife writing team of Sharyn Kane and Richard Keeton will be coming to Fort Benning's Wilbur Elementary School Monday through Sept. 28, and that means students will get a double dose of artistic stimulation and fun.

Both Kane and Keeton have over 20 years of professional writing experience, and have published hundreds of stories. Both former reporters for the Chicago Tribune newspaper, Kane and Keeton also write for national and regional magazines, including Best of Business Quarterly, Writers Digest, the Main Event, and many others.

Their teaching experience began with the Artist-In-Education program of the Georgia council for the Arts and has expanded to include accreditation with Fulton County Arts program, as well as extensive adult education. They have taught the nonfiction writing course for the past two years for the Council of Authors and Journalists.

In 1991, they will present the annual Byron Herbert Reece Memorial Lecture in honor of Georgia poets and other native writers.

To teach writing, Kane and Keeton use many unusual motivational techniques such as juggling, singing and acting. Their experience includes workshops for all ages, from kindergarten through senior citizens. In past years, they have worked together with students at Faith School, and Keeton did a residency alone with Loyd School students.



Richard Keeton

"Our goal is to show how much fun writing can be and to help other writers gain confidence in their ideas and talents for sharing those ideas on paper," they explained.

By combining music, mime, dance and the visual arts, the team intends to offer something of interest for all students at Wilbur.

DARE enters third year at post schools

Fort Benning Schools

DARE, one of the most effective anti-drug programs, is entering its third year of operation in the Fort Benning Schools.

DARE, or Drug Abuse Resistance Education, originated in Los Angeles as a cooperative effort of the Los Angeles Police Department and the Los Angeles Unified School District.

Locally, the program is the result of an agreement between the Fort Benning Schools and the Military Police Activity in a joint effort to teach students how to resist peer pressure to experiment with drugs and alcohol.

The overall goal of DARE is to prevent substance abuse among school children. The objectives of the program are to equip students with skills to recognize and resist pressure to use drugs, alcohol and tobacco, to build self-esteem, to help build interpersonal communication skills, how to be assertive in saying no, to teach positive alternatives to drugs, and develop skills in risk assessment and decision-making.

The DARE curriculum focuses on 5th and 6th graders, but at Fort Benning, age-appropriate versions of DARE are presented to all Benning students in kindergarten through sixth grade. During the first half of the year, the program will be implemented in kindergarten through fifth grades at Loyd School, McBride School and Wilson School. During the second half of the year, DARE will be taught at Dexter School, Patch School and Wilson School.

DARE is taught to groups of sixth graders all year long at Faith School. These sixth-grade students "graduate" from the DARE program at the end of a 17-week course of study. Highlights of the program at Faith include a Parent Night and a Role Model Day.

Lt. Walter L. Jackson of the Department of Defense Police implements the program locally. "It has been shown through research that there is need for a long-range plan resulting in the elimination of the demand for drugs. Through DARE, we work to show alternatives to drug abuse," said Jackson.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Howard O. McGillin Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: My husband recently deployed on Operation Desert Shield. He left me his power of attorney. How do I use it? How can I get copies of it, and what do I do if I lose it?

A: A power of attorney makes you the designated representative of your husband. In order to use it to do something for him, you will generally have to present it to the agency or business that you are dealing with.

If they want to keep the power of attorney for their records, ask them to make a copy rather than giving them your original.

If a copy with a raised seal is needed, bring the original power of attorney to the Legal Assistance Office, building 5, at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos on Main Post. If you do not have the original with the raised seal, a true copy with a raised seal we cannot make a true copy. It is always recommended that you keep the original.

If you have to sign for your husband, you should first sign your name and then print "As Attorney In Fact For" and print your husband's name.

Some banks want you to sign and put the letters POA and your husband's name after your signature. That is acceptable.

Don't attempt to imitate your husband's signature.

If you sign your name and write the text suggested above, you will be showing the agency or business that you are acting for your husband, under the authority of his power of attorney.

If you try to sign his name, someone may try to accuse you of forgery.

If you lose the power of attorney, you will have to write to your spouse and ask that he send a new power of attorney to you.

The deployed units have lawyers of the Judge Advocate General's Corps with them, or one assigned to a higher headquarters. These attorneys will be able to prepare new powers of attorney for your spouse in the area of operations.

Losing a power of attorney is very dangerous. It can be a very powerful and dangerous document in the hands of an unscrupulous person. You should always keep the original in a safe place. Never let it get out of your control.

If you have questions about power of attorneys or are having trouble using one, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Copies of power of attorneys are made from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on a walk-in basis in Building 5.

The Legal Assistance Division is attempting to provide priority service to family members of deployed soldiers.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Although you may never have considered how the national energy consumption affects the national economy, a comparison will show that the two are directly related.

Patterns of the Gross National Product and energy consumption are very similar. Therefore, a shortage of energy in any form could have a negative effect on the national economy.

In a shortage situation, the cost of manufacturing and delivering goods and providing services would go up, driving the costs of those goods and services up as well.

As consumer costs go up, demands would go down, causing surpluses and layoffs. Unemployment would drive down the cost of labor, reducing wages and salaries. The end result would be unemployment and inflation.

Obviously, the shortage of an energy resource upon which we rely heavily would be disastrous.

Oil supplies half the energy we use in the United States, making an oil shortage a prime example of such a possible crisis.

With the deployment of our troops to Saudi Arabia, the reality of our dependence on foreign oil is a sobering thought. Consider that over 50 percent of the oil we use in the United States is imported.

This leaves the nation vulnerable to those who sell oil and those who have the ability to halt shipments.

Additionally, oil reserves won't last forever. Current estimates are that the known reserves will last less than 30 years at our present rate of consumption. Considered together, these facts can be quite alarming.

The situation won't resolve itself — a great effort must be made by a great number of people to conserve the resources we already have.

By extending the life of current energy resources, we can buy time to develop and improve ways of harnessing energy from less conventional resources, such as nuclear, solar, wind, biomass and geothermal energy.

For example, many problems still must be solved regarding the disposal of radioactive waste from nuclear power plants. Community and environmental safety factors are a major concern.

Although solar energy is a cheap and renewable energy source, the technology and implementation is expensive and not yet perfected.

The wind, also a renewable, clean source of energy, is not reliable and technology has not been developed to make it a viable solution to our energy problems.

Technology needed to tap into other energy sources, such as biomass (burning waste to produce methane gas), and geothermal (energy extracted from the earth's interior) has not yet been sufficiently developed.

Time is also needed to deal with problems of converting to indigenous sources of energy, such as coal.

Coal is plentiful in the United States, making up 90 percent of our energy resources, but widespread use poses many major problems.

Coal does not burn as cleanly as other fuels, so solutions to air and water pollution problems must be solved. The effects of wide-spread strip mining creates a major obstacle, and transportation systems for moving the coal must be built.

Conserving energy now seems to be the best tactic in dealing with our energy situation. Developing good energy-conserving habits will affect our lifestyle much less than an energy shortage with a resulting economic crisis.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Military Postal Service solves mail problem

There have been several calls to the post's Desert Shield Hot Line and rear detachment commanders about 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers not receiving mail.

Officials from the Military Postal Service Activity in Washington, D.C., said some mail had been misdirected to the wrong APO number. But, as of Sept. 14, the problem had been corrected. Officials say the soldiers should be receiving mail by today.

Provost Marshal issues warning about ribbons

Fort Benning's Provost Marshal has issued a warning to residents who display yellow ribbons on their houses and vehicles in support of Operation Desert Shield.

Col. Fred W. Liebe, Fort Benning's Provost Marshal, said residents are putting themselves at risk by displaying the ribbons on their houses and vehicles to symbolize their support of the United States' involvement in Saudi Arabia.

Liebe said criminals see the symbols as an opportunity to commit a criminal act because they suspect the male spouse will not be home.

Fort Benning officials said the Columbus Police Department has also reported receiving numerous complaints from military families who live in the Columbus area.

Liebe said it is vital that family members take added precautions during this period.

Hospital nearly back to normal

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital's clinical capability is nearly back to normal due to the addition of 109 Army Reserve physicians and nurses, a hospital official announced Tuesday.

Col. H. Dale Brown, deputy commander for Administration, said the hospital is "nearing full clinical capability" due largely to the addition of 109 physicians and nurses from the 1207th U.S. Army Reserve from Tuskegee, Ala., the 3297th USAR from Chamblee, Ga., and other individual Reserve volunteers.

Brown said MACH's ability to provide a full range of health care for all categories of its beneficiary population has almost returned to the levels they were at before Operation Desert Shield.

Martin Army normally operates 176 beds, but the number had been reduced to 95 for some time due to Desért Shield support requirements.

"We expect to reach a capacity of 163 beds this week," Brown said.

Brown further stated that Martin Army received wonderful support from the local civilian medical community.

The areas that were affected but are now back to full or normal capability are: primary care to include family practice, the outpatient clinic and PRIMUS; the emergency room; general surgery; obstetrics and gynecology; pediatrics; psychiatry; eyes, ears, nose and throat services; and internal medicine, to include rheumatology consultations.

Orthopedic services will still be restricted to active duty military personnel until further notice, Brown said.

Civilians brace for possible furloughs

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Office of Personnel Management has told all government personnel directors to notify employees that they may be furloughed — forced to take days off without pay.

Furloughs might be necessary to help the government cut its fiscal 1991 budget deficit to $64 billion, the ceiling permitted by the 1985 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act. The president issued an initial sequester order Aug. 25, to be effective Oct. 1. OPM Director Constance Newman said the president will issue a final sequester order that triggers automatic spending cuts if Congress and the administration fail to agree on a deficit reduction program by Oct. 15.

In a memorandum to all agencies, the Office of Personnel Management said the "magnitude of the sequester, estimated to be 32 percent, requires that agencies begin now to make necessary personnel plans."

Agencies were told that these plans must include possible furloughs of 30 calendar days or less. A "short" furlough of 30 continuous calendar days is equal to 22 workdays under current rules.

Although OPM said agencies have to consider furloughs as one cost-cutting option, it suggested other options be considered as well. These include hiring freezes, freezing or limiting promotions, separating temporary employees, reducing overtime and delaying training.

According to the OPM memo, "A furlough is the placing of an employee in a temporary non-duty, non-pay status because of lack of work or funds, or other non-disciplinary reasons."

A furlough of 22 workdays or less is covered under adverse action procedures. OPM staffing specialist Tom Glennon said employees have certain rights under these procedures.

First, they must be given 30 days' notice as soon as the employer receives the written notice, so OPM suggested agencies hand-delier them.

Employees have the right to respond to the notice, and the agency has to consider that response in issuing a final decision. For more information on your rights, see your personnel specialist.

Furloughs longer than 22 workdays are covered under reduction-in-force procedures. "Reduction-in-force furloughs are not necessarily more difficult for an agency to run than short furloughs. No matter which kind of furlough an agency runs, it can cost them a lot of time and administrative man power," said Glennon.

To avoid furloughs, Congress and the administration could agree on a budget. Other options include a congressional vote to suspend Gramm-Rudman-Hollings or to delay the budget balancing deadline from fiscal 1993 to 1995.

The largest multiagency government furloughs in recent years were in 1982. They affected some 40,000 employees. DoD employees were not included.

More soldiers, convoys head out

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Three more units and convoys of medical vehicles have departed Fort Benning to participate in Operation Desert Shield in the Middle East.

Forty-one members of the 598th Maintenance Co. departed Benning Sept. 12. Soldiers from the 34th Medical Battalion departed in convoys of approximately 75 medical vehicles Monday. The 533rd Transportation Co. and the 361st Trailer Transfer Detachment had a departure ceremony Wednesday at 5:30 ap.m. for approximately 170 troops.

The 533rd's mission will be to transport ammo, food, barriers and sandbags. The 361st will maintain trailers that load and unload equipment.

The 598th Maint. Company's technical supply platoon was deployed, along with the remainder of the 215th Finance Support Units, and 314th Public Affairs Detachment from Birmingham, AL, officials said.

The platoon's mission is to supply class nine items, such as engines, tires, and other things necessary for large vehicle repair, said 1st Lt. Joseph O. Campbell, executive officer of the 598th.

Troops to get combat pay

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Troops serving in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Shield will be paid an extra $110 "combat pay" monthly, according to an announcement made by Defense Secretary Dick Cheney Sept. 19.

The money, technically called "imminent danger pay" by finance officials, is already given to soldiers stationed in areas of conflict such as the Philippines, Colombia, Liberia and El Salvador.

Cheney said he directed the supplemental payment to recognize the sacrifices and risks the soldiers are facing in the Middle East.

World politics create, stir up winds of war

By Clyde Snively
JSAIC Public Affairs Office

If politics make strange bedfellows, how about the winds of war?

Has anyone tried to keep track of the good, the bad and the ugly since the president drew his line in the sand?

I'm certainly no historian, but what little I know tells me the world is topsy-turvy once again.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but weren't we kind of siding with Iraq when they were battling Iran just a few years ago?

Correct me if I'm wrong, but prior to that didn't we like Iran — you know, back in the days of the Shah?

Wasn't it also Iraq who allied itself with all the communist countries, except North Korea which sent arms to Iran?

Wasn't it Iran that provided us with our supply lines to the Soviet Union during World War II.

Remember lend lease? This of course was after the Soviet Union's treaty with Hitler was shattered when Germany attacked its former ally, sending Soviets over to our side, before it became our number one nemesis, which was before it became our good friends again.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but doesn't Iran still consider us the "Great Satan," while condemning Iraq's invasion of Kuwait?

Correct me if I'm wrong, but aren't we currently courting Syria, a stronghold of terrorists, a big time violator of human rights? But, now they're our good buddies because they don't like Iraq.

And what's with Jordan? I always thought those guys liked us, but the way they're acting now, I'm not too sure.

Then there's Israel. These are the guys we supported in its three wars with Arab nations, but we're scared to death they'll get involved because if they do, then all the Arabs unite to fight Israel and any of her buddies.

Of course, this is the same Israel that pays Americans to spy on their own country — the U.S. — and the same country that withholds intelligence and gets more than 200 of our Marines blown to bits in Lebanon.

And, of course, Israel is watching us give the latest military hardware, such as Patriot missiles to Saudi Arabia and getting very nervous about that and telling us we need to give her (Israel) more hardware.

And don't forget the PLO. The latest word is they actually attacked Abdu Nidal's terrorists camps.

I think things were simpler when Iraq was Mesopotamia and Iran was Persia and the most Americans knew about the Middle East was there were pyramids in Egypt, the sand was plentiful and hot air and oil came from Texas.

I guess when you're trying to accomplish a mission of maintaining the peace, the end justifies the means, and it doesn't really count who you ally yourself with as long as you reach an equitable solution.

By the way, now that the weight limitation's off and it's care package time, a strong recommendation is send fruit — dried fruit, canned fruit, doesn't matter.

If you've ever eaten Army field rations, be they K-rats, C-rats, Lurps, or MREs, you'll know why. Those things will plug you up for weeks on end.

In fact, when the British went to defend Kuwait against an invasion 29 years ago this summer against — you guessed it — the Iraqis, nearly every hospital patient was there because of hemorrhoids. War never broke out; the Iraqis backed down after three months — which was a good thing considering the condition the Brits were in. As for food, I guess all armies get their food from the same place, only the names change.

Kool-Aid might have been the drink of the day in Vietnam. In the desert, prune juice is shaping up as the drink of choice.

Sign seen in a Pacelli High School classroom: An Iraqi soldier on a camel, centered in a bore sight. The words beneath: "I'd fly 10,000 miles to smoke a camel."

Writer advises spouses to keep busy, be strong

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Okay, okay. So some of you spouses are feeling as if Uncle Sam just came and snatched your man or woman away.

Well, I hate to say it, but welcome to the Army.

Like it or not, that's what your spouse said he or she would do upon swearing in and signing on that dotted line.

It's been so long since a deployment of this magnitude took place we've forgotten the exact reason an Army exists. For most, myself included, it was a job and an adventure.

Operation Just Cause woke me up and made me realize just how important our red, white and blue really is.

I was too young for Vietnam and too far removed from Grenada. Just Cause was the first time I had any ties with a unit that went into combat.

People I know and care about put their lives on the line for the Panamanian people.

In every interview I conducted, each Ranger said he'd do it again. They'd have done it again even though some came back missing limbs or with gaping bullet wounds in their shoulders.

The point I'm making is our colors don't run. That's why our troops are in the Middle East today. It's also why they will continue to deploy.

These soldiers are fortunate to have the general public behind them. Spouses have it easier because support groups are formed and services provided by agencies such as Army Community Service are available.

A spouse of a retired soldier, who served in Vietnam, told me that none of that existed during Vietnam.

The general public hated soldiers for being there, and the old adage back then was, "If the Army wanted you to have a wife, it would have issued you one."

Spouses are still not issued at the Clothing Issue Facility, but at least now they're not looked upon as second class citizens.

The money's still not great and the separate rations have been taken away. That hits a person where it hurts the most — the pocketbook. But we need to look at it in perspective.

Although they are far away, they have not yet felt the heat of battle. However, they signed on the dotted line saying they would be there if needed. So, that's where they are.

I'm the type of person who sticks to her word, as is the case of most soldiers. We're here to support and defend.

If I'm not mistaken, wedding vows are very similar. In other words, support your spouse.

Don't let your spouse know you're down because that will probably make your spouse more miserable than he or she already is.

Now's the time for you to do something constructive.

- Clean out the garage and all the closets. (Now's the time you can get rid of those old shoes your soldier keeps retrieving from the trash).
- Save the money you would normally spend together so you can do something really special when your spouse gets back.
- Concentrate on shedding those couple of extra pounds while your spouse is away.
- Take up a new hobby, or learn how to play golf.
- Take group walks with your friends.
- Have potluck dinners with other spouses. Invite someone new each time. Who knows, you eventually might end up with the whole company.
- Have your kids create homemade cards for mom or dad and then let them mail them all by themselves (with a little supervision).
- Take pictures of the kids so your spouse won't suffer such a time lapse.

There are countless other things that can be done to alleviate the pain of resulting from the absence your spouse. One just has to think — then act.

Library sets up Mideast display

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A display about the Middle East crisis and Fort Benning's involvement in Operation Desert Shield has been set up in Donovan Technical Library in Building 4.

A library staff member said the Middle East/Operation Desert Shield display has been set up to provide information about the crisis and related topics.

The display was erected three weeks ago and will remain up as long as there is an interest in the Middle East situation and a need for information, according to Betty J. Van Sickle, reference librarian and creator of the display.

"We were flooded with requests for information about the Middle East and updates on the crisis.

"We were receiving so many requests that I decided to put all the information on the crisis in one central location.

"The display is in a prominent place, which makes it easier for our patrons to find the information they need, and saves wear and tear on the staff," she said.

The display is also set up in honor of Benning soldiers servicing in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Shield, said Van Sickle.

Items included in the display are two maps of the Middle east countries involved in the crisis, information on the military structure of Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and Iraqi forces, a notebook of articles concerning the crisis from local papers, handbook/country study of Iraqi and Saudi Arabian history, economics, political system. There is also a pamphlet of the Arabian culture and the dos and don'ts of the country's society, as well as a life-sized mannequin dressed in the Army's desert battle dress uniform.

"We were very happy to do this," Van Sickle said. "Not only does it help the morale of the soldiers here, it provides them, as well as the entire community with pertinent information.

"Everyone should feel free to come to the library and browse through the information we have available," she said.

Soldiers can report waste via hot line

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Department of Defense Hot Line has soldiers seeing red.

Red and white are the colors of the posters distributed Army-wide to make soldiers aware of their right to issue a complaint if they see evidence of fraud, waste or abuse.

According to Benjamin J. Simon, Director of the Defense Hot Line, the Inspector General has directed a revitalization of the Defense Hot Line publicity effort.

Simon said the hot line is one of a number of channels available to members of the military and the general public to seek resolution to fraud, waste, abuse and mismanagement which they may perceive to exist in their local commands.

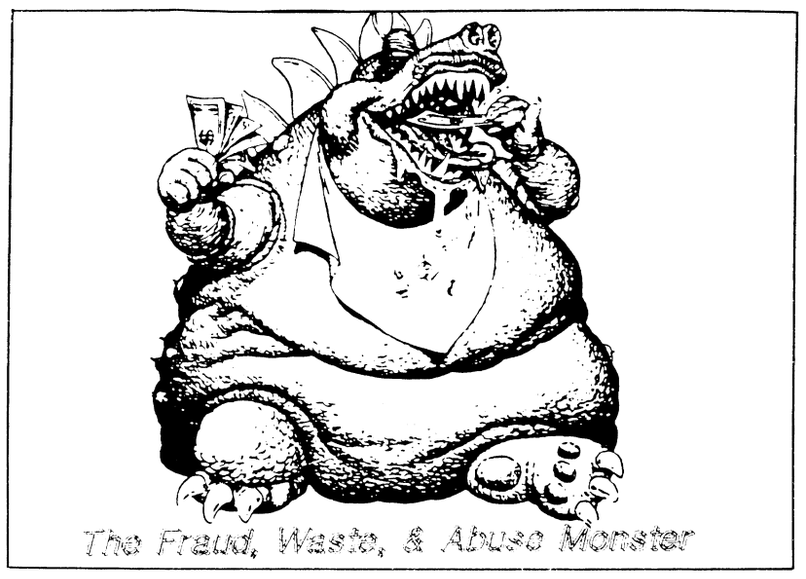
"It is a program that has been successful," he said. "Information provided to the hot line has resulted in $100 million in savings over the past eight years."

For continued success of the program service member and DoD employees need to be reminded of the hot line's existance, Simon said.

A memorandum from the Secretary of Defense, Dick Cheney emphasizes the president's and his commitment to the reduction of fraud, waste and abuse, and mismanagement in Defense programs.

Cheney cites the hot line as an important tool in that effort.

He said the hot line has identified instances of product substitution, falsified test records and defective material that could have endangered the lives of military personnel had the problem remained undetected.



Cheney added that a continued effort is required to minimize the effect of fraudulent and wasteful practices that threaten the safety of DoD personnel or that eat away at the tax dollars provided for national defense.

Hot line officials remind soldiers and DoD civilians that the identities of writers and callers are fully protected.

To report waste, fraud and abuse call toll free 1-800-424-9098; autovon 223-5080 or write Defense Hot Line; The Pentagon; Washington, D.C., 20301-1900.

AUSA holds fish fry

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The succulent odor of fresh snapper, hush puppies and french fries filled the air, tempting the tastebuds of the attendees of the Chattahoochee Valley Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army General Membership Meeting at the Bovinity Pavillion Sept. 13.

Although the gathering is called a meeting, business is not the order of the day. It's fish. There was plenty available at the AUSA annual Fish Fry.

According to Sgt. Wade Shell, AUSA representative, the fish fry is set in an informal atmosphere so the members of the community and the soldiers can relax together.

"Casual dress is worn by both the soldiers and civilians," Shell said. "A Pledge of the Allegiance is led by a designated member of AUSA to render respect to our color and usually remarks are made by the post commanding general and the president of AUSA."

Shell said the longest portion of the meeting is the awards that are given to various units for assisting AUSA."

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza was on hand at the meeting and gave each soldier present their designated award.

Although it was billed as a festive occasion, the thoughts of the soldiers currently in Saudi Arabia were with everyone in attendence.

"The soldiers overseas were mentioned on more than on occasion," Shell said. "The chapter recognized the wives by giving designated individuals a rose."

OPM answers furlough questions

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

If a furlough occurs, government employees will not be paid for the days they're off. While that is pretty clear, many other tougher furlough-related questions come to mind. Here's how Office of Personnel Management's written guidance and staffing specialists responded.

Do federal employees keep their health benefits while furloughed?

Yes. The federal government continues to pay its portion of the premium (about 60 percent) while the employee is furloughed. If employees' pay is sufficient to cover their share of the premium, it will continue to be deducted from pay.

Employees whose pay is insufficient can pay the agency the difference directly or have the agency cover the shortage and deduct the total from pay upon return to duty.

Do furloughed workers keep their group life insurance?

Yes. If the employees' salary is sufficient to cover the entire premium, the employee's share will be deducted. (If the salary is insufficient, then life insurance continues free for up to 12 months in non-pay status.

Can employees work on a volunteer basis while on furlough?

No. Furloughed employees are in a non-duty status and should stay away from the work place. The law prohibits federal agencies from accepting voluntary services from employees, unless the safety of human life or protection of property is at stake. Furthermore, furloughed employees who come to work and are injured are ineligible for workers compensation.

How does furlough affect retirement?

Up to six months' furlough or non-pay time per calendar year is creditable toward retirement. Retirement coverage continues at no cost to the employee in non-pay status.

How does furlough time effect promotions?

For promotion purposes, there is no federal requirement to extend qualifying periods by the number of non-pay days. However, agencies may extend qualifying periods to meet training requirements. Non-pay status (such as furlough) does not affect time-in-grade requirements.

Does furlough affect within-grade increases?

Within-grade increases, merit increases and performance awards in which payment is required by law or agency regulations will be processed during a furlough but may be paid later. A lengthy furlough could delay within-grade increases for both general schedule and wage grade employees.

Can an employee take annual or sick leave to substitute for furlough days?

No, because employees are paid for annual and sick days, so the goal of saving the government money would not be accomplished. If the furlough would cause employees with "use-or-lose" leave to lose it, agencies should try to make some accommodation.

However, employees may request leave without pay as a substitute for scheduled furlough days. Leave without pay has the same effect on employee benefits and creditable service as a furlough, but provides employees and management with more scheduling flexibility and reduces documentation requirements.

Are employees on furlough eligible for unemployment compensation?

Depending on their particular state's laws, they may be. Some states provide unemployment compensation for as few as five consecutive days without pay.

Can employees take other jobs while on furlough?

Yes, but they must get their agencies' permission and follow conflict of interest and Hatch Act provisions.

Community members pitch in, donate items to ACS Food Locker

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Operation Desert Shield is bringing more than just families together.

Members of the local community and various units on post are making contributions to the Army Community Service Food Locker so that family members of soldiers deployed to Saudi Arabia have food available if it's needed.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Leverne Bellamy, Army Emergency Relief Assistance Officer the response for their cry for assistance has been phenomenal.

He said assistance was needed because at one point the food locker was completely wiped out.

Bellamy said WCGQ was the first to come to their assistance and since then many others have responded.

"CB&T, the Fort Benning NCO Wives Club and wives of soldiers in the 197th have brought things in," he said. "The 197th is helping their own as much as they can."

The 34th Medical Battalion is helping out their own by having soldiers bring a can of food to Friday morning physical training formations so they can be donated to the food locker said executive officer Maj. Steve Lemon.

"This will continue even as units within the battalion are deploying," he said. "We want families to know we care."

Demonstrating that people care is exactly why WCGQ began their efforts to keep the food locker stocked, said program director Chuck Harris.

"It's my job to stay in touch with the community," Harris said. "The Army plays a big role here in Columbus, and we want to make sure it's taken care of.

Harris said that the station has been soliciting for baby items and food during various program. Money was raised through a "Whack Irack" campaign sponsored jointly with Jay Pontiac.

"The campaign involved people taking a whack at a car with sledgehammer," he said, "For a dollar they could hit a car covered with Hussein pictures and other things related to Iraq."

Harris said more than 100 people took a whack and the funds were contributed to the food locker.

Bellamy said he is delighted at the response and hopes it will keep coming in. He noted that items of most use are baby food and pampers.

Harris said WCGQ is continuing to do its part with a new campaign the station is doing with Subway and Six Flags.

"With a sandwich purchase Subway customers will receive a coupon for six dollars off admission at Six Flags," he said. "A portion of the admission fee will go toward the food locker."

Post officials study family care plans

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The possibility of long-term troop deployments from Fort Benning to participate in Operation Desert Shield in Saudi Arabia has prompted post officials to take a hard look at family care plans of single-family soldiers and dual-service couples here.

Unit commanders, in conjunction with the Family Support Division, Directorate of Community Activities, have been ordered to make sure that the children of single-parent soldiers and dual-service couples have temporary caretakers provided for them during the soldiers' deployment.

The temporary caretakers must also be briefed to fully understand the military services available for those children, according to Rebecca L. Carroll, acting chief of the Family Support Division.

Those services include medical and dental care, as well as access to exchanges, commissaries and other facilities.

Adults who are not personally eligible to use those services — but who are caring for military children must be granted access to the facilities so the children receive their entitlements.

That access is provided for in the soldiers' family care plans, said Carroll.

"We want to make sure that single-parent soldiers and dual-service couples have thoroughly briefed the designated temporary caretakers of their children on the entitlements available to those children," said Carroll.

"They need to be told where the nearest available services are and what the procedures are for them to gain access to those facilities for the children."

Soldiers' family care plans should include powers of attorney for their childrens' guardians, applications for the childrens' military identification cards, and allotment forms or proof of financial provisions being made for the children.

The children should also be enrolled in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System, or guardians should have copies of the childrens' birth certificates to prove eligibility for medical care, said Carroll.

Carroll added that guardians should be briefed on using the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services and the Delta Dental Plan to cover medical costs for the children.

AT&T offers free fax on messages bound for Desert Shield soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Family members and friends can send facsimile greetings to soldiers in the Middle East free of charge effective today, according to an announcement by AT&T.

AT&T officials said the fax service will enable family and friends of American military personnel serving in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Shield to send facsimile greetings to the soldiers free of charge.

Officials said AT&T will begin accepting messages today at its 400 Phone Center Stores located across the country.

Columbus' AT&T Phone Center is located at 2026-1/2 Auburn Avenue, On The Hill in Cross Country Plaza, off Macon Road. The center is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

AT&T is offering free use of its network to transmit letters and drawings one-way to troops in the Mideast as part of a morale-boosting effort called Desert Fax.

The duration of the free service will depend on several factors, including cost, volume of messages and benefits to military personnel and their families.

Because the fax messages will be sent electronically, the time required to reach their destinations will be significantly reduced.

"Desert Fax will provide a quick and easy way for family and friends to send a half-page home leave to U.S. service people in Operation Desert Shield," said Robert Dalziel, AT&T vice president, Global Networks.

After the fax messages are sent to the Mideast, the military postal service will deliver messages to soldiers during regular mail calls.

The special fax forms that AT&T will provide at Phone Centers will be available beginning today. Family members and friends will fill in the forms with the name of the person stationed in the Mideast, the APO/FPO address, and the person's social security number. A designated space for a written message or drawing occupies three-fourths of the form.

Users must have a valid APO/FPO address, otherwise the phone centers will not be able to accept and send messages.

For more information, call Terry Henson, store manager at Columbus' AT&T Phone Center, at 563-1488.

The address of other AT&T Phone Centers can be obtained by calling 1-800-555-8111, Ext. 36.

Rangers hold three changes of command

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

They say three's a charm, and the Ranger Training Brigade not only has its third leader at the helm, but there have been three major changes of command during September.

Kicking off the chain of events was the switch at brigade level between Col. Keith Nightingale and Col. John J. Maher Sept. 11 on Todd Field.

Maher is the third man to hold that position since the unit was activated in 1987.

The command change trend continued with the 6th Ranger Training Battalion. Lt. Col. Paul J. Burton assumed Lt. Col. John T. Keneally's duties Sept. 14 in a ceremony at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

The 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., will complete the triangle today. Lt. Col. Albert Brownfield will relinquish the top spot to Lt. Col. Jack Donovan.

Maher follows Nightingale's 27-month tour of duty with the brigade.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza remarked at the brigade ceremony about the high morale Nightingale fostered during his tenure and commented on the great job he has done in the top position at RTB.

He added that, "Although a great commander is leaving, there is another great one to take his place. That's one of the great things about the Army."

Cavezza said he is totally confident in Maher's ability to command the RTB.

During Nightingale's turn at the podium, he recapped his 27 months with the RTB. He said that he, however, did not command it by himself.

"The whole staff made my time in command a success," Nightingale said. "I couldn't have done it without everyone in this command."

Maher concluded the remarks by saying how proud he was to follow in Nightingale's footsteps and that all policies remain in effect.

Regulation change allows soldiers to wear special skill tabs

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Authorization to wear two special skills tabs, as outlined in Army Regulation 670-1, is changed to permit the simultaneous wear, on an optional basis, of two special skills tabs, according to Army officials.

The current wear policy is that both the special forces and ranger special skill full color tabs may be worn with the Army green uniform.

The special forces tab will be centered on the left shoulder sleeve one half-inch from the shoulder seam.

The ranger tab will be centered one eighth-inch below the special forces tab. The subdued may be worn on the utility uniforms and cold-weather camouflage jackets (field jackets) in the same position as on the Army green uniform.

The regulation currently states that the subdued tabs will be worn one eighth-inch from the shoulder seam, and this directive will be changed to one half-inch.

Both the special forces and ranger full-sizes metal replica may be worn with on the blue and white dress uniforms and on the AG 415.

When worn on the pocket flap of these uniforms and shirts, they will be worn one eighth-inch from the top of the pocket and approximately one inch between the tabs.

If no badge is worn from groups one through three, the replicas may be worn above the ribbons in the same precedence as established above.

Special forces and ranger metal tab replicas are classified as group four special skill badges.

The special forces and ranger dress miniature metal tab replicas may be worn on the blue and white mess and evening mess uniforms and on the blue and white dress uniforms.

Montgomery Ward offers free video services to soldiers, spouses

Army News Service

A retain chain is offering free of charge to spouses of deployed soldiers an opportunity to video a "letter" to soldiers participating in Operation Desert Shield, according to store officials.

Montgomery Ward's Project "Better than a Letter" uses store equipment and is being offered to family members at no charge.

According to Mike Medlin, the local Montgomery Ward's project manager, families can tape a 30-minute "letter" at the store using store equipment. The videos are then given to the families to send to their soldiers.

Also, Desert Shield soldiers will have an opportunity to make video messages to send to family members and friends at home.

Two million dollars worth of videotaping equipment is being donated by Montgomery Ward for use by soldiers deployed on Operation Desert Shield, USO officials in Chicago announced Sept. 13.

The equipment, provided by Sharp, JVC, Zenith and Maxwell, is being donated by Montgomery Ward and Company, a national specialty store retailer.

The donated equipment will be shipped overseas in the next few weeks for use free by all military personnel, officials said.

The project will bring approximately 450 camcorders, 370 videotape recorders, 350 televisions, 250,000 blank videotapes and video mailing material to soldiers in the Persian Gulf to use to send video messages.

The project sponsors also are providing free-of-charge mailing back home of the videotape for each soldier.

Families without access to a VCR may arrange with local Montgomery Ward stores for a private viewing of tapes they receive, said store officials.

The effort "sends a message to our troops and to the world that America is very much aware of where they are and what they are doing, and we are thinking about them and supporting them in every possible way," said Kevin McCarthy, USO director of marketing and communications.

The flow of visual and voice communication will help service members and their loved ones "bridge an emotional gulf," said Bernard F. Brennan, chairman and chief executive officer.

"Families will want to keep these tapes for many years to come, which is why we want every military man and woman over there to have the opportunity to send a message home."

Columbus' Montgomery Ward, located in Peachtree Mall, has already begun taking appointments to film videos.

Medlin said that video tapings are done by appointment only and the store will try to schedule a time to accommodate families.

Medlin said he is unsure how long the project will continue.

For more information or to make an appointment, call Montgomery Ward at 322-6761.

197th soldiers experience problems getting mail

There have been several calls to the post's Desert Shield Hot Line and rear detachment commanders about 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers not receiving mail.

Officials from the Military Postal Service Activity in Washington, D.C., said some mail had been misdirected to the wrong APO number. But, as of Sept. 14, the problem had been corrected. Officials say the soldiers should be receiving mail by today.

Also, the commander in chief, United States Central Command announced recently that the 12-ounce restriction on mail to APO and FPO addresses in Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf has now been lifted.

The military postal support system in Saudi Arabia and sufficient airlift capabilities are now in place to handle the increased volume in mail.

All classes of mail up to the maximum weights allowed will now be accepted.

Currently, it is taking an average of seven days for first class mail to reach Saudi Arabia.

Contrary to recent press reports, postal patrons may mail tobacco products and use U.S. stamps depicting the American flag.

The Military Postal System and the U.S. Postal Service are correcting the isolated cases where letters or packages are returned because of this erroneous information.

Army plans limited recall of retirees to active duty

About 500 retired soldiers face recall to active duty to fill critical requirements in support of Operation Desert Shield, say Army officials.

The action marks the first time that retirees will be recalled involuntarily since the Army's Retiree Recall Program was developed in 1981.

Retirees with critical skills, including physicians, nurses, linguists, aviators and water-purification specialists will be issued individual orders, officials say.

Most positions will be located in the Continental United States, although some requirements may result in the deployment of a few recalled retirees to the Middle East. Of the number recalled, about 250 will perform medical-related duties and 150 will provide family support services.

Officials say they expect the initial recall to be for a period of 180 days.

Government hotel rates affected by Desert Shield

Effective immediately, Choice Hotels Incorporated, formerly Quality International, has temporarily expanded their agreement to accommodate Operation Desert Shield.

Until Sept. 30, nonsponsored family members (in-laws, grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins, etc.) traveling in connection with Desert Shield, are authorized government rates at all Choice Hotels.

In order to receive the rate and the agreed upon commission payment, Information Travel and Reservation offices must book the reservation by calling 1-800-221-2222.

Reservation sales agents will be on duty 24 hours a day to book reservations and offer assistance.

All eligible personnel traveling in a PCS or leave status, including Desert Shield, should be reminded they can receive the government rate at several well-known hotel chains by booking their reservations through ITR.

ITR receives a commission for each room booked, benefiting the installation Single Fund.

Army distributes guide about Saudi Arabia

Approximately 100,000 copies of a pocket-sized booklet titled "A Soldier's Guide to Saudi Arabia" will soon be sent to a number of continental United States installations and to Army forces already deployed in Saudi Arabia.

Based on projected dates provided by the contract printer, the booklets should arrive at the designated locations no later than Monday.

Intended distribution is for all active duty and reserve soldiers facing deployment through either Phase I or Phase II call-ups.

The booklet, which contains general information on Saudi Arabia, as well as details about the country's customs and culture, is 32 pages long, and was produced by the Office of the Chief of Public Affairs Print Media Branch.

For more information, call Capt. Dave Stockwell at 225-3102 (autovon) or (202) 695-3102. Area code changes to 703 on Oct. 1.

Deploying soldiers may reschedule SGM course

Sergeants Major Course selectees who cannot attend the January class due to deployment for Operation Desert Shield will be allowed to reschedule their class dates.

In a recent message to the field, Total Army Personnel Command officials say commanders have until Sept. 30 to defer soldiers from attending the January class, number 37, at the Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Only soldiers assigned to deployed units or units alerted for deployment can be deferred, the message says.

Commanders who pull soldiers off the January class roster must notify PERSCOM, TAPC-EPT-FN, by the Sept. 30 cut-off date.

PERSCOM officials say deferred soldiers will be rescheduled for the first available class after they return from the Middle East.

Army clarifies reserve promotion procedures

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Promotion procedures for reserve component soldiers called up for Operation Desert Shield have been clarified.

In a recent message to the field, the Army's personnel chief at the Pentagon said that because of federalization of Guard units some of the original regulatory guidance may at times have come into conflict.

To rule out such conflict in the future, the message provides the following clarification:

- Enlisted soldiers in the Army National Guard and Army Reserve who are ordered to active duty will continue to be promoted under provisions of AR 140-158 or under Chapter 6 of NG Regulation 600-200.
- Those Guard and Reserve enlisted soldiers involuntarily ordered to active duty under the presidential call-up or who are serving voluntarily on "temporary tour, active duty" will retain promotion consideration under the provisions of AR 140-158 and NG Regulation 600-200.

Reserve component officers will remain under the reserve promotion system covered by AR 135-155, Chapter 8 of NGR 600-100 and Chapter 7 of NGR 600-101.

The message says that "If the period of deployment becomes extensive, we will re-examine the instructions contained herein and provide further guidance."

Desert Shield soldiers to receive paperbacks

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Desert Shielders are being equipped with more than weapons, tents and chow.

Kits of food-for-thought in the form of selected paperback books for soldiers' leisure-time reading are making their way to Operation Desert Shield in Saudi Arabia via the Army's library system.

So far, said Nell Strickland, "the library division here at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va., has issued more than 22,500 paperbound books to our troops over there."

Division chief Strickland said that the books came from stockpiles at the various installations that had been selected for maneuvers and exercises.

"Paperback kits are sent monthly to most installations and stockpiled until needed by the post libraries that issue the books to units headed for the field," she said.

As the first of the Desert Shield troops were deploying with the books from the maneuver/exercise stockpiles, the CFSC library division was busy selecting special kits of books to be sent to all soldiers serving in Saudi Arabia.

"The first 1,000 of these special kits — totaling some 25,000 books — are ready for direct shipment. Orders have been placed for another 2,000 kits, and selection continues for titles to be included in future shipments as needed," Strickland said.

How does the selection process work? "The professional librarians here," she answered, "have tried to make sure that each kit contains a variety of fiction and non-fiction titles.

These would include classics and best-sellers, plus at least one each of the most popular genres (mystery, western, fantasy, science fiction, etc.)".

As to content, "The subject matter and covers of the books must be appealing to the soldier — but not be offensive to the host country.

Selection also is influenced by responses to the center's biennial survey of recipients of the kits.

The survey results' predominant subjects and authors are represented in the kit."

In the future, the library division plans to process orders for popular magazines and newspapers to be delivered to Desert Shielders.

Strickland said all this constitutes the job the Army library system began 50 years ago — "supporting our troops with professional library services."

1/19th gets new commander

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

The 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, has a new leader this week.

Lt. Col. William Uselton took command of the unit Sept. 11.

Uselton comes to Fort Benning from Ankara, Turkey. He served as the chief of Plans and Programs for the Joint U.S. Military Mission for Aid to Turkey.

Lt. Col. Gregory Vuksich, who relinquished command, took over as chief of staff, 1st Infantry Division (Forward) in Goeppingen, Germany, Sept. 13.

2/29th conducts food drive

2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Post family members in need of food will find plenty available at the Army Community Service Food Locker thanks to the soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The food locker of ACS had been drawn down to such an extent that it was incapable of supporting needy Army families, such as some of those whose military members had deployed to Saudi Arabia for Operation Desert Shield, ACS officials said, and post units were asked to help out.

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, under the leadership of Lt. Col. Paul S. Feyereisen and Command Sgt. Maj. Cleophus Childress, responded by initiating a food drive entitled, "A Can A Man."

The approximately 650 soldiers in the battalion were asked to contribute one can of food to ACS. All the soldiers were briefed about the situation so they could understand why they were being asked to give.

"The response was overwhelming," said Francis Doyle. "We collected more than 850 cans of food, and it was handed over to ACS Sept. 12. The soldiers were proud to make a contribution."

Doyle said the battalion will be conducting additional food drives once a month in order to alleviate the crisis for ACS.

"We realize that by helping needy Army families, we only help our own," Doyle said.

POW MIA DAY

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

National POW and MIA Recognition Day, Sept. 21, honors America's returned prisoners of war and rekindles the resolve to account for U.S. servicemen still missing.

The first recognition day was in 1980, sponsored by the National League of Families of Prisoners of War and Missing in Action. Spouses of prisoners of war being held in Vietnam founded the organization in 1970. National POW and MIA Recognition Day is the third Friday in September.

Last September, 2,344 Americans were listed as prisoners or missing in Southeast Asia. As of July 20, 1990, the number was 2,300.

"The important point to remember is that the U.S. government is committed to the fullest possible accounting of prisoners of war and those missing in action. We are making progress. It is slow and frustrating, but it is progress," said Navy Lt. Cmdr. Edward Lundquist, a DoD spokesman.

Since 1974, about 400 sets of remains have been returned from Vietnam. Of these, the U.S. government has identified only 245 as American. Of the remainder, most have been Asian, although the government is still analyzing some.

Increased Cooperation

The Vietnamese government increased its cooperation in returning remains following the August 1987 mission of retired Army Gen. John W. Vessey as a special presidential emissary. Since then, the Vietnamese have repaired 240 remains, of which 100 have resulted in accounting of Americans.

Recently, the remains of three Americans have been identified. In June 1990, the remains of Navy Lt. Cmdr. Larry Van Renselaar of Las Vegas, Nev., who was lost in North Vietnam on Sept. 30, 1968, were identified. His remains were among 15 repatriated by Vietnam on July 31, 1989; nine of that group have now been identified.

In July, two soldiers were identified: Army Capt. Keith A. Brandt of Bellingham, Wash., and 1st Lt. Alan B. Boffman of Norfolk, Va. The two men were killed in an aircraft crash in southern Laos.

Forensic scientists identify remains at the Army's Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii. The laboratory serves all services.

Lundquist said lab identifications consider all evidence. Dental remains that match records on file is the best evidence, but scientists can also match other physical evidence against health records.

Even so, he continued, an identification is not official until reviewed by a panel of outside experts and accepted by the family of the missing person. The families may have an independent expert review the lab's work. The service secretaries are the final reviewers in identification.

Since 1987, technical experts have held more than a dozen meetings in Hanoi to discuss evidence related to identifying missing Americans. The United States has also provided humanitarian assistance to Vietnam, such as providing equipment and training to fit amputees with artificial limbs.

President's Promise

On behalf of the U.S. government, the president promised America would write no last chapters, close no books and put away no final memories "until your questions about missing and possible prisoners of war have been answered.

"In Ecclesiastes, it is written that there is a time of war, a time for peace and a time to heal. We will never forget those who served our country. And when we receive final answers about their fate, then this will truly be a time for healing," President George Bush said in 1989 remarks to the National League of Families.

Former American Prisoners of War eligible for special veterans benefits

Department of Veterans Affairs

Former American Prisoners of War are eligible for special veterans benefits, including hospital medical care, priority outpatient treatment and disability compensation for injuries and disease presumed to be caused by internment.

These benefits are in addition to regular veterans benefits and services to which they, as veterans, are entitled.

More than half of the Americans held prisoner in the last four wars are now living.

Some 142,227 Americans, including 81 women serving on Guam or in the Philippines, were captured and interned during World War I, World War II, the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War.

Of that total, an estimated 73,435 were still living on Jan. 1, according to Charles A. Stenger of the American Ex-Prisoners of War Association.

This includes 150 from World War I, 68,340 from World War II, 3,340 from the Korean Conflict and 605 from Vietnam.

Congress defines a former prisoner of war as a person who, while serving in active military duty, naval or air service, was forcibly detained or interned in line of duty by an enemy government or a hostile force, during a period of war or in situations comparable to war.

Compensation

Studies have shown that the physical deprivation and psychological stress endured as a captive have life-long effects on subsequent health and on social and vocational adjustment. These studies also indicate vulnerability to psychological stress is increased.

A former prisoner of war may be eligible for disability compensation if there are symptoms of any of the following disabilities: avitaminosis, beriberi, chronic dysentery, helminthiasis, malnutrition, pellagra, post-traumatic osteoarthritis, psychosis, any of the anxiety states, a depressive neurosis, peripheral neuropathy, irritable bowel syndrome or peptic ulcer disease.

For POWs detained or interned for 30 days or more, it will be presumed that the disability was incurred or aggravated during military service, unless there is evidence of some other cause. The laws of former POW benefits recognize that military medical records do not cover periods of incarceration. Adequate medical reasons are required, however, for relating any current condition to military service or POW status.

Compensation is paid based on the degree of disability. Veterans rated 30 percent or more disabled qualify for dependency allowance. Dependents of those rated 100 percent disabled may qualify for educational assistance. Widows of veterans rated 100 percent disabled for 10 years prior to death and widows of veterans who died as the result of service-connected disabilities are eligible for dependency and indemnity compensation based on the veteran's military pay grade.

Medical Care

These special health-care provisions for former POWs apply regardless of length of captivity:

- Special POW protocol medical examinations.
- Inpatient treatment for both service-connected and nonservice-connected conditions.
- Outpatient care for any condition.
- Dental care for any condition if internment was for 90 days or more.

POW coordinators have been assigned to each VA regional office and medical center.

As a result of the success of POW coordinators' efforts, a national phone hot line has been discontinued.

Toll-free phone service continues to be available for each VA regional office.

For further information and assistance in filing a claim as a former POW, call the nearest VA regional office, listed in local phone books under U.S. Government.

Bell ringing ceremony honors constitution

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A bell-ringing ceremony was Tuesday at the National Infantry Museum to commemorate the signing of the Constitution 203 years ago on that date.

Represensentatives from the Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, United States Navy, and various Ft. Benning elementary schools came out to ring the commemorative "freedom bell" on the steps of the museum for 203 seconds to remember each year that the Constitution has been in effect.

On Sept. 17, 1787, 39 men signed their names to a document and established the first government of the the people, by the people and for the people.

Today, the Constitution is the world's oldest written instrument of national government, according to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Consitution.

"I feel proud to represent the U.S. Navy on this occasion. All Americans need to take the opportunity to celebrate our freedom whenever we can," said Petty Officer Third Class Raymond V. Spaulding, Navy Representative.

"With the Persian Gulf crisis going on right now, it's good to remember that freedom is our main objective — for now and for always."

"Our organization tries to sponsor events such as this to celebrate early American history," said Clara Blackmon, regent of the George Walton chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution.

" I feel that it's important to commemorate important events like the signing of the Constitution."

After nearly half a century of service Fort Benning civilian employee retires

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Almost 100 family members, friends and fellow employees came out for a party to wish one of Fort Benning's longest-serving civilian employees well upon her retirement after 49-1/2 years of service. The retirement party was in the Regimental Room of the Officers' Club Wednesday.

Josephine Haggard began working at Fort Benning Dec. 16, 1937, at the post finance office. She was a clerk-typist who typed Civilian Conservation Corps checks.

The CCC was a program set up by President Franklin D. Roosevelt during the Depression era.

Haggard needed a waiver to begin working, due to an age barrier. An employee had to be 18 years old to be employed on post, and she was only 17 at the time.

Haggard has actually been connected to the post much longer than 1937. She first began visiting the post when she was seven years old, staying with friends of her family.

Allyana B. Clay-Heard

Jospehine Haggard retires after 49-1/2 years of service.

In 1939, the CCC program was disbanded at Fort Benning. Haggard, then married to Herman, was transferred to Fort Moultrie, S.C., to work in the finance department there.

With the declaration of war in 1941 came a great many job openings. The Haggards then returned to Fort Benning to work. Haggard worked at the post headquarters at that time (now the Staff Judge Advocate building) in a typing pool with four others.

During the World War II years, General Dwight D. Eisenhower was fighting in Europe, but his family resided at Fort Benning. Haggard often tended the three Eisenhower children after work.

In 1947, Haggard resigned from work to have her only son; Buddy. Three years later, she returned to Fort Benning to work in the training publication department of the Infantry School under Col. Harry W. Stephenson.

Haggard then transfered to the Inspector General office in 1952, where she spent the next 38 years as a clerk-stenographer.

"I still wish that I was working and doing what I liked to do — come to work and take my physical training at lunch by walking over to the Catholic Chapel for mass," said Haggard.

"I never obtained much of a pay grade, but I did what I was capable of doing, and I enjoyed every minute of it. I've worked with some wonderful military and civilian people over the years."

"Mrs. Haggard was the consummate employee throughout her career,"said Sgt. Maj. Leland D. George, sergeant major of the Inspector General.

"She was dedicated and loyal, witnessed by her 38 years with the IG. She loves soldiers and the Army.

29th Inf. soldier gets cash for good idea

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 29th Infantry Regiment soldiers received a cash award Sept. 5 for an idea that saved Fort Benning thousands of dollars.

Cpl. Kevin D. Cowart of Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, received $1,315 for an idea that saved Fort Benning $20,520.

Col. Richard St. John, commander of the 29th Regiment, presented the Army Ideas for Excellence award during a ceremony Sept. 5.

Cowart's idea was to combine all short cycle training on the Bradley Fighting Vehicles at Building 5500. In the past, the vehicles were moved between buildings 5500 and 4345 daily.

This process cut short the training time. Cowart's suggestion allows for more actual training time, cuts down on maintenance of the vehicles and saves fuel.

The suggestion saves Fort Benning and the U.S. Army $20,520 a year.

According to Beverly Howell, Army Ideas for Excellence Program coordinator, some of the biggest money saving ideas come from the everyday routine activities performed by the soldier and civilian.

For more information on how to put your ideas to work for you, call Howell at 545-IDEA.

Employment assistance program helps family members find jobs

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Army Community Services' Family Member Employment Assistance Program is working together with a local company to bring employment to Fort Benning family members.

According to Pat Sneed, manager of FMEAP, the W.C. Bradley Company, which makes charbroil gas grills, will be hiring 50 people to start work Oct. 15. with an additional 70 to 100 workers being hired Nov. 5.

Prospective employees who have skill and experience in production or assembly line work are needed. However, anyone with a desire to work is encouraged to fill out an application, Sneed said.

Training will be provided during a two-day class Oct. 11 and 12.

Workers are need for two shifts — one from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. and the second from 4 p.m. to midnight.

Sneed said, the W.C. Bradley Company, which recently won a contract to work with K-Mart, expects the job to be finished sometime in May or June.

"This is an ideal opportunity for mothers with children in school, since the job will end before the children start summer vacation," Sneed said.

Last year's winners repeat performance in SOA annual run

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The second annual Run of the Americas ended with few surprises as last year's male 5K and 10K winners again finished triumphant and the women's 10K winner coming off a recent victory.

The two-mile formation race began the day at Mudcat Stadium at 7:30 a.m. with the School of the Americas' El Salvador Officer Candidate Course students winning with a final time of 11:56.

The 5K race began at 8 a.m. at the Columbus Ironworks Trade and Convention Center. A little less than 17 minutes later, Pablo Sanchez and Terry Anderson raced to the finish line only two seconds apart. Sanchez and Anderson finished first and second last year and recently finished first and second in the Family Health Trek 5K Sept. 8.

Sanchez, 23, came straight to the race just after finishing a 12-hour shift at his job as an embosser for Total Systems.

"I try to pick out races that are a little bit different as far as style, distance or just something extra and out of the ordinary," Sanchez said.

Anderson agreed adding that the runners enjoy the competition and camaraderie of the races.

"I used to be able to beat him (Sanchez) occasionally but now he usually finishes first," Anderson said. "He's been hitting it pretty good lately."

Anderson, 40, who works as a tractor-trailor driver for Yellow Freight Systems, started running a little over 10 years and 42 pounds ago.

"I have to run," Anderson said, "as a truck driver I don't get too much exercise so I started running. Now I feel bad when I miss a day."

The most impressive victory of the day came in the male 10K race which had Lloyd McDonald outdistancing Lloyd Sampson by over two minutes.

McDonald, a supply sergeant with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning, is currently training for the Army 10-miler trials Sept. 29. After that, McDonald has the Boston Marathon and, hopefully, the '92 Olympics Marathon to prepare for.

"All of the training I'm doing right now is building up for the Boston Marathon," McDonald said. "So far, everything is right on target in my training."

At age 35, McDonald feels like he is hitting his prime as a distance runner.

"A marathon runner is usually peaking in his mid to late 30s because he is a more mature runner who has gained experience and become more mentally tough," McDonald said.

"There is a lot to be learned about race tactics and mental tactics, which are very important to improving as a runner," McDonald added.

Local television personality Denise Schwab, weekend news anchor for WTVM, won the female 10K race. Schwab arrived in Columbus six months ago and began entering the races to meet people. Lately, she's had to wait at the finish line to meet the rest of the female competitors. Schwab won the Family Health Trek 5K a week before winning the 10K at the Run of the Americas.

The award ceremony began at 10:30 a.m. with Jeb Stuart of South 106 calling out the winners in each age group category as Col. William A. DePalo, commander of the School of the Americas, presented the awards.

Two soldiers are recent winners in the Main Post Bowling Center's Pot-O-Gold.

Command Sgt. Maj. S. D. Walker, Headquarters, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, and Sgt. 1st Class Colen Jones won $500 and $1,625, respectively.

Walker rolled seven strikes in the designated frames of three games. He said he would continue bowling until he wins the $5,000 Pot-O-Gold prize.

Jones was a big winner. He won $500 Sept. 6, $75 Sept. 7, $50 Sept. 9 and $1,000 Sept. 13.

Community supports families during spouses' deployment

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Community support for families of Fort Benning soldiers is abundant, especially with the recent deployment of soldiers to the Mideast.

Many local churches and organizations have contacted the United States Army Infantry Center chaplain's office to offer support, according to Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz, post chaplain.

"We appreciate the [illegible] of concern from the [illegible] community. Some churches have offered to provide counseling and other services. However, these services are available here through our Unit Ministry Team as well as other Army services."

Tangible ways the community can help families left behind are many. The Army Community Services Food Locker has been depleted and many chapel groups on Fort Benning have been collecting food and clothing for needy military families.

Designated offerings through the military chapel community are being taken throughout September and these monies are being given to ACS as well.

Maj. Charles Walls, Rear Detachment Commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, says the needs of some families have increased with the recent deployments. A crisis food locker has been established and any food donations may be brought to Headquarters, 197th Building, Kelley Hill.

If local groups are interested in helping Fort Benning in this time of crisis, they are welcome and appreciated.

Potluck dinner provides fellowship to community

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Although sponsored by the Military Council of Catholic Women, the potluck dinner and sundae social to be held tonight at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex is designed to include those of all faiths and denominations, and provide fellowship especially for those families directly affected by recent deployments.

Monica James, MCCW president, said that invitations to everyone in the community have been extended, including the ladies from the Jewish community, the Protestant Women of the Chapel, Las Damas Catholicas, and the ladies from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"We recognize the need of many families to join together for fellowship and support, especially when so many soldiers are away from their families," James explains.

Many door prizes will be given during the evening.

"Businesses in the community have been very supportive and enthusiastic," James said, adding they seem especially agreeable when they feel they are doing something for waiting family members. Prizes from Burger King, Anthony's Pizza and Main Post Video Rental are among the many donations.

Families are asked to bring a main dish. Ice cream sundaes and refreshments will be provided. For more information, call 545-2288.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am on active duty here at Fort Benning, and my wife and I have recently purchased a home in Columbus. I understand that there is a "homestead exemption" that can possibly reduce my property taxes on the house, but I hear that military people can't get it. What can you tell me about this?

A. Property in Georgia, including real estate, is taxed on an ad valorem basis — that is, by its value. With a homestead exemption, a portion of the fair market value of property is exempted from the tax, resulting in less property tax to pay.

To qualify for the exemptions, the owner must meet two requirements:

1. The applicant must be a permanent resident of Georgia; and,

2. The owner and/or his or her family must occupy the property as a residence.

In most cases, the test of whether or not the owner meets these requirements is fairly simple.

In the case of an active duty soldier, the tax office will look to the leave and earnings statement to see what state the soldier lists for income tax purposes. If Georgia is listed, and if the soldier and/or his family lives in the house, the exemption is granted. As long as the soldier maintains Georgia as his or her residence, the exemption will remain available, even if the soldier moves out of state due to PCS orders.

However, the soldier, or a member of his immediate family, should notify the tax commissioner of his or her absence and of the fact that the absence is caused by his or her military duties. This notice should be given each year the soldier is absent from the state and should be given before April 1st of each year.

The more interesting situation is where the soldier is a non-resident, but his or her dependent spouse is a Georgia resident. If the property is jointly owned by the spouses, the resident spouse has the right to apply for and receive the exemption for as long as he or she remains a resident of Georgia and for as long as he or she remains a resident of Georgia and for as long as he or she actually occupies the property as a residence.

The dependent spouse's Georgia residency needs to be clearly established. Generally, we look to voting registration, driver's license, and the filing of Georgia income tax returns on the dependent spouse's income as indications of residence in the state.

The dependent spouse should be very careful about taking any action which would tend to show nonresidency.

For example, in a recent case, a nonresident military husband and his Georgia resident wife bought a home and applied for the exemption.

Later, in order to avoid paying ad valorem taxes on their car, the husband filed a serviceman's affidavit declaring that he is not a Georgia resident. Because the car was in both the husband's and wife's name, the tax commissioner took away the homestead exemption on the home, taking the position that the wife should not be able to get the benefit of both the homestead exemption and the nonresident military exemption on the car.

Although the legality of the tax commissioner's decision is not clear, the case demonstrates that the tax commissioner's office does look closely at claims of residency.

Staff attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office are available to advise you concerning the homestead exemption. Call 545-3281/3282 for an appointment.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

"Martin Care" has been defined as "all care provided or arranged for by Martin Army Community Hospital." A good example of this coordination of care recently occurred at the hospital when the waiting time for routine screening mammograms became too long to be acceptable.

The Managed Care Branch of the Patient Administration Division, stepped in to relieve the backlog of shifting some of the workload from Radiology Service at the hospital to the PRIMUS Clinic on Boxwood Boulevard.

Capt. Michael Peyton, chief, Managed Care, coordinated with the PRIMUS manager, and it was agreed that the MACH Patient Appointment System would shift routine screening mammograms to the PRIMUS Clinic. As a result of this arrangement, the waiting time has been reduced from approximately 90 days to less than half of that time.

The mammogram appointment clerk in Radiology, Leonora Robinson, went through the appointments already scheduled and provided a list to the PAS supervisor who had her staff call patients to offer them earlier appointments to the PRIMUS Clinic.

Those called were only those scheduled for routine screening; patients who have symptoms or need follow-up for previous problems were not included because they did not have to wait as long. Moving routine mammograms to PRIMUS frees more appointments for patients with problems.

When patients are scheduled for mammograms at the PRIMUS Clinic, MACH provides the previous films to PRIMUS so the films may be compared.

Films are later returned to MACH Radiology files. This is done by MACH; patients do not have to carry their own films. If the patient has the next mammogram done at MACH, PRIMUS will provide the ones dones there to MACH for comparison.

At present, patients can be scheduled for routine mammograms at PRIMUS within 10 days and a MACH within approximately 40 to 45 days.

In order to schedule this diagnostic procedure at either MACH or PRIMUS, a request from a physician is needed.

For more information, call Leonora Robinson at 544-1131.

ENERGY WATCH

Prepare for winter by weatherproofing now

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Labor Day is over and school has begun, signaling the end of summer. Although the south still can enjoy a few more weeks of warm weather, it's not too early to begin preparing for the cold and blustery winter days ahead.

Making sure your home or office is ready for winter is simple and will help keep you much more comfortable on cold days. This means adequately weaterproofing offices and homes to keep heated air in and cold air out.

Air leaks are common around windows, doors, corners, baseboards or other seams. To locate drafts, follow these steps:

- Tightly close all doors, windows and dampers. Tape over exhaust fans and turn off heating units.
- Place a large fan in a centrally located window, facing outside. Use plastic and duct tape to seal the rest of the window.
- Turn on the fan to depressurize the building. This will strengthen incoming drafts, making them easier to find.
- Beginning with the outside walls of rooms, slowly pass a burning incense stick along the edge of windows, doors, baseboards, ceilings, attic doors and any corners or seams where two surfaces come together.
- If the smoke drifts straight up and hangs, no draft is present. If the smoke moves to the side, it's due to an air leak. Ask a friend or family member to take notes of any drafts you locate.
- Now that you know where the leaks are, seal them. Weatherstripping can be sued around doors and windows, and most other air leaks can be sealed with caulking. Plastic sheets attached to windows with masking tape serve as good temporary storm windows. Drafts under doors can be blocked with rolled towels or rugs.

Weatherproofing materials are issued for most buildings on post at the Unit and Housing Support Branch (formerly Self Help) in building 385 on Vibbert Avenue. Occupants and housing residents can get weatherstripping, caulking, plastic sheeting and duct tape for winterproofing. Hours of operation are Tuesday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The telephone number is 545-4207.

Weatherproofing your home or office is easy, and it can make a big contribution to your personal comfort as well as saving energy.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office, 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Law protects soldiers' financial interests

American Forces Information Service

Guardsmen, reservists and recruits squeezed by contracts, leases and other deals they made before being mobilized may find help in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Capt. Jessica L. Kole of the Army Judge Advocate General's office in the Pentagon said the 1940 law recognizes that military duty sometimes prevents service members from meeting their lawful obligations. The relief act was last amended in 1972.

"The law applies whether members come on active duty voluntarily or involuntarily," she said. "Protection begins once the member receives the call to enter active duty, and it ends 30 to 90 days after discharge, depending on which part of the law is being invoked." The law doesn't protect service members from most deals they make while on active duty and doesn't relieve them from paying their bills if they have the means, she emphasized.

Kole said relief act aspects of immediate interest to service members are those protecting them from landlords and other creditors.

"A landlord whose rent doesn't exceed $150 a month needs a court order to evict a member's family while the sponsor's on active duty or if the sponsor has received orders to report," Kole said. "While $150 rent doesn't sound like much, we know of at least one case where the court adjusted it for inflation since 1966, when Congress last raised the cap from $80.

"The judge hearing the case can hold off eviction proceedings for up to three months if the family can show that military service has had 'a material effect' on the sponsor's ability to pay," she added. Material effect, such as a sudden plunge in income, also figures in mortgage and consumer debt disputes, Kile said.

For instance, she said, 6 percent is the most interest a creditor can charge on debts a service member incurred before coming on active duty — unless the creditor can convince a court that such relief is unwarranted. If the member prevails, the interest cap lasts as long as the period of active duty and applies to all financial obligations, including home mortgages, auto loans and credit card debts, she remarked.

Material effect arguments may protect a family from mortgage foreclosure if the sponsor or family member bought the home before the sponsor entered active duty. If the court finds in the family's favor, Kole said, it can postpone foreclosure proceedings or order the sponsor to make reduced payments.

"If a service member enteres into an installment contract to buy real or personal property and pays a deposit or installment before entering active duty, the creditor can't cancel the contract or repossess the property without court authority," Kole said. "If the court finds a material effect in the member's favor, the court can stay proceedings for the period of military service and up to three months thereafter." She noted the court also can order a compromise, such as swapping property for a full refund.

Service members who enter leases for residential, business or farming purposes before they enter active duty and who have "occupied the premises" can cancel the lease by giving the landlord written notice. Members must make payments until their cancellation takes effect, which depends on how the lease was written, Kile warned. Oral notices don't count, she added.

Members involved in judicial proceedings as plaintiffs or defendants are entitled to stays if military duty has a material effect on their ability to prosecute or defend. Maximum stay is the period of active duty plus 60 days.

"In this case, material effect is usually shown when members prove their military duties will prevent them from being in court at the appointed time," Kole said. "Courts will require that members be diligent in their attempts to appear in court, however, and they'll be reluctant to grant long-term stays."

Service members who need advice, full details and guidance on exercising relief act rights should contact their legal assistance officers.

More Benning units deploy

Morale high as troops head to Saudia Arabia

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The 533rd Transportation Co. and the 361st Trailer Transfer Detachment deployed Wednesday to join the multinational forces in Saudi Arabia participating in Operation Desert Shield.

These units are part of the 36th Engineer Group, which has deployed several of its other units to the Middle East over the past two months.

The 533rd is a transportation unit whose primary mission is to drive military vehicles and move cargo, which is imperative to providing logistical support to combat troops, said Sgt. Thomas L. Mott, 533rd's rear detachment first sergeant.

"The morale of the unit has been super," said 1st Sgt. Bobbie J. Hollis. 533rd's first sergeant. "The unit move thus far has been positive, and we are a high-speed support unit.

"Transportation is necessary to support the combat troops in Operation Desert Shield. We're going to perform as well as we know we can."

There are many females deploying with the unit, but Hollis said he is not concerned with their abilities, in spite of the possibility of problems arising due to the differences in Saudi Arabian culture concerning the roles of females.

"Our female soldiers are some of the best soldiers we have in this unit. Their morale has been at an all-time high and they are ready to move out.

"The females are ready to face any possible negative reactions from the Saudi Arabian people due to their position in the mission. They are qualified to work side-by-side with their male counterparts in this unit, and will do so, unless otherwise directed," said Hollis.

Sgt. Joann H. Banks, a member of the company's first platoon, is taking the entire situation in stride.

"I don't gripe when I receive the paycheck, so I can't complain when I'm called upon to do my job," said Banks.

"As for problems with the culture difference, I'm going to drive my truck until I receive orders from a superior to stop."

The 361st Detachment is a trailer-transfer unit whose primary mission is to check cargo, inspect trailers, and coordinate deliveries in line with logistical support for combat troops.

The detachment is commanded by 1st Lt. Georgetta S. Bennett. Sgt. 1st Class Anthony J. Heath is the detachment operations sergeant.

"Our detachment is at a high state of readiness — we've been ready for two weeks," said Bennett. "We will perform our mission as best we can, and prepare to return when this situation has resolved itself."

"We're a small unit, but the training we've received has been excellent, and we work well together. The morale is high, as our success rate will be," said Heath.

Newly-married Army couple spends 'honeymoon' in Mideast

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

One couple assigned to the 533rd Transportation Co. here will get the opportunity to spend an all-expense-paid "honeymoon," courtesy of Uncle Sam at a true hotspot — at least a hotspot in current world events.

Pfcs. Diane and Charles Manning, both of the 533rd Transportation Co., deployed with the rest of their company Sept. 19 to take part in Operation Desert Shield in Saudi Arabia.

Married since Aug. 2, the couple barely had time to settle into marital bliss before they were forced to settle down to the business of being soldiers.

This situation has not rattled the Mannings one bit. They said they are both optimistic about the matters that lie ahead.

"I think it's better that we are both going," said Diane. "I'll have some peace of mind knowing exactly where Charles is and what he's doing.

"In that respect, I feel I'm in a better position than a lot of wives whose husbands are deploying. The sitting at home, waiting and worrying would kill me," she added.

"Having her with me is a definite morale-booster," said Charles. "I know that Diane is capable of handling herself in any situation, and having her there with me will cut the worrying down by at least 85 percent.

"In any case, we're both soldiers and we have a mission that requires us to put personal feelings aside and do our job for a time. After this situation is resolved, things can return to normal," he said.

Troops receive combat pay

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning soldiers who are serving in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Shield will receive $110 dollars extra in their paychecks every month as imminent danger pay, according to Ray H. Winderweedle, post chief of military pay .

This directive came into effect Sept. 19, and will show up on the soldiers' paychecks Monday, said Winderweedle.

"I am assuming that 95 percent of Fort Benning's soldiers in Saudi Arabia will receive their imminent danger pay in their next paycheck.

"If it does not happen, that is only because they were deployed after our last day for notification, or we were not informed of the unit's deployment until after that cutoff date," he said.

Operation Desert Shield troops can send mail for free

Army News Service

Legislation authorizing free mail privileges for service members participating in Operation Desert Shield has been passed by Congress, and was signed by President George Bush Sept. 18.

The legislation authorizes members of the armed forces assigned to the Persian Gulf region to send post cards, letters and audio tapes without postage as long as the mail is destined for an address in the United States or within the military postal system.

Postage must still be paid for parcels and mail destined for international adresses that are not part of the military postal system.

In regards to sending packages to soldiers in Saudi Arabia, there are certain articles that are restricted from being shipped or brought into that kingdom.

These include: alcoholic beverages of any kind, narcotics, weapons or explosives (without proper permit), pork and pork products, pornography and material contrary to the Islamic religion.

U.S. government policy is that U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia will respect the laws and regulations of the kingdom.

U.S. postal regulations which apply to the military postal system, similarly prohibits the shipment of alcohol, narcotics, pornography and munitions.

For purposes of all mail destined for Saudi Arabia, pornography is considered to include depictions of the nude or seminude human body and all sexually-oriented literature and materials.

Contrary to widely-circulating rumors, there is no ban on photographs of females dressed according to accepted American standards of good taste.

Materials contrary to the Islamic religion includes religious literature intended for general distribution. Problems are not anticipated with mailing religious items for the personal use of individual members of the U.S. Armed Forces, such as single copies of bibles and prayer books. There is no objection to greeting cards associated with religious holidays.

Postal and customs regulations for Saudi Arabia are within purview of the Saudi Arabian government. While only the Saudi Arabian government can speak authoritatively on its own standards, the Department of Defense anticipates that following these guidelines should avoid potential problems.

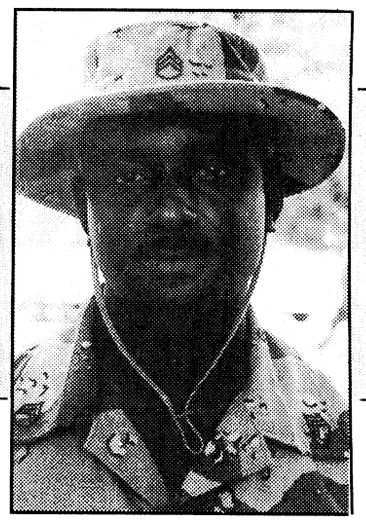
OPINION

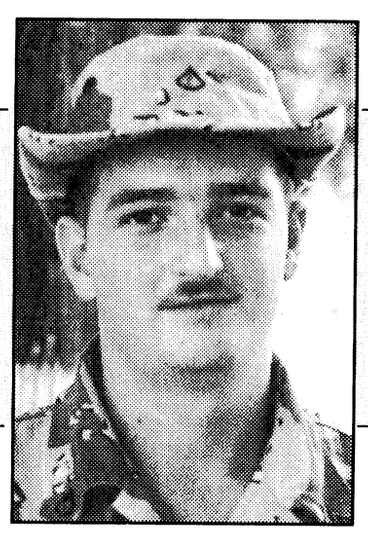
VARIOUS VOICES:
What do you think will be Saddam Hussein's next move?



Staff Sgt. Thomas Holman, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I think Hussein will back down and start moving his troops out of Kuwait."

Spec. Clifton Scott, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I think the next obvious step is war. (Hussein) knows that he's in a no-win situation, and he has to justify his aggressive actions. If Hussein uses chemical agents, the United States will have no choice but to launch a full-scale defensive attack."

Pfc. Diane L. Manning, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I will not venture to make a prediction because you can't foresee the actions of a crazy man."



Pfc. Charles G. Manning, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I don't care what Hussein's next move is because I'm going to do my job and do it well — no matter what happens."

Spec. Joshua E. McNeil, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I hope that as the pressure of the situation continues to rise and U.S. troops continue to build up, Hussein will be wise enough to consider a compromise."

Pfc. Patrick E. Clark, 533rd Trans. Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "Hussein has really backed himself into a corner in this situation, and he'll either have to pull out of Kuwait or make an aggressive move against the troops of Operation Desert Shield to initiate a war. It's a case of wait and see at this point."

Ranger in a roar about regulation

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The man was standing over my desk.

Purple veins bulged beneath the folds of skin on his neck. Muscles on arms as big as ham hocks rippled with each beat of his heart. His dog breath enveloped me like a wet Army blanket as he bellowed: "What the snot's this!"

"Scuze me sir," I whimpered weakly back.

BAM! The fist came crashing down on my desk, nearly splintering it.

"That's sergeant, not sir. I work for my living, pencil neck," he clamored, sending a fresh wave of hounds breath across me, taking the last crease out of my uniform.

"Yes, sir, sergeant," I said, pushing my chair as far away from this demented soul as possible. "Anything you say. Is there anything I can do for you? You seem troubled," I said in a rush, hoping my words would fend off another of his assaults.

"Did you see this Four-eyes," he snarled, once again fumigating the room with his breath as he tossed a copy of The Bayonet on my desk.

In fact I could hear the cock roaches in my desk beating feet out of there, as I meekly reached for the newspaper, wondering where the heck the world champion Fort Benning power lifters were when I needed them.

"Read the durn thing," he rumbled, bathing me in another blast of hot air when I didn't begin reading fast enough to suit him.

After all, it's hard to concentrate on reading when a 250-pound gorilla is ready to pounce on you. But I forced myself to pick up the paper and read it.

What I read was an article that announced holders of Special Forces skill tabs could now wear them on their uniforms.

"Soooo," I said, glancing up warily.

"Did you read the entire story, paper-pusher?" he snarled.

"Of course I did," I said. "It said the Special Forces skill tab will be worn a quarter of an inch below the shoulder seam and the Ranger tab will be worn an eighth of an inch below.....ohhhh," I said, finally putting the black beret peaking out from his thigh pocket with what the message was saying.

But I didn't need to be a detective. For the man was about to explain it all to me in sulphuric breaths.

"Never, in all my Army days have I ever heard of another skill tab going over the Ranger tab.

"That policy musta been written by some snake-eater at Fort Bragg. That message tells people that Special Forces training is tougher and more highly regarded than Ranger school.

"And that's a crock.

"The Ranger tab goes over the airborne tab, it goes over the Special Forces airborne tab and it even goes over the Ranger regimental patch.

"To put that Special Forces tab above the Ranger tab is like saying the Army supports the Air Force. It's like putting the Iraq flag above the U.S. Flag."

"You've got a point," I said, trying to appease him, hoping he'd leave.

"A point! You knuckle head. A point! I show you a clear example of treason in the Army and all you say is I got a point!"

"Well, a rather strong one, I admit," I said.

"Whatcha gonna do about it?" he then wanted to know.

"Talk to my editor about it?" I simpered.

"I want a full-page ad. I want the brass at the Pentagon to know how badly they hurt us."

"I don't know if we can do that but..."

"Listen, you little wimp, if you've developed any fondness for your body, you'll get the word out and let the world know Rangers are second to none, no matter what some ivory-tower, class-B uniform, typewriter pounding, desk jockey may decide with a piece of paper."

"You got it, you got it," I said, wondering how fast I could get orders to Saudi Arabia or Fort McCoy.

Prejudice has no room in U.S.

By Greg Markley
Fort McClellan Public Affairs Office

Last week, at a restaurant in Anniston, I overheard two men, one black and one white, talking about the crisis in the Middle East.

One said he'd like to see the Iraqis repelled because they are "all just a bunch of worthless camel jockeys anyway." The other one said, "Yeah, you're right."

Life just ain't that simple. Americans don't engage in foreign conflict based on whom they hate at a particular time.

There are many reasons why Saddam Hussein should be stopped, but his religious roots and skin color are not among them. And who knows the last time Hussein even sat on a camel, the poor person's means of conveyance?

It's no surprise that there are ignorant people out there; that's why prejudice continues as a worldwide malady.

But, I am upset to see the anti-Arab sentiment that is spreading in this frustrated country while Saddam holds the world's attention and our hostages.

Edward R. Murrow, the famous TV journalist of the 1950s, remarked once that "everyone is a prisoner of his own experiences. No one can eliminate prejudices — just recognize them."

We recognize that certain Arab and Moslem extremists have not been kind to Uncle Sam in recent years. Led by the late Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran and by Libya's Moammar Khadafi, the Arabs have done some horrible things to Americans. This explains why Arabs are generally considered unfavorably in the United States.

But a bunch is more than a few rotten apples. We must remember the many Arabs who have migrated here and contributed much to our culture, economy and national worth. We must recall that Anwar Sadat, who forged a separate peace with Israel for his Egyptian people, was also a devout Moslem.

We should recognize that the fanatics don't speak for an entire race, no more than the Nazis were Germany incarnate. (They were not.)

Arabs are not the only soldiers who take their religion seriously: many Americans soldiers do, too. Believing in something based on faith and tradition provides comfort to many in this trying national defense business. That's acceptable and healthy, so long as the religion doesn't conflict with the state's business.

Mustafa, a Moslem friend of mine who worked in an on-base crafts shop in Sinop, Turkey, always joked around when I put two scoops of sugar in my coffee. He would say, 'What, you don't have natural sweetness?'

All of us, no matter the heritage, have various degrees of "natural sweetness." As humans, we all have some innate goodness. As individuals with unique personalities and free choice, we may tend to one spectrum or the other on the sweetness scale.

Those who subscribe to prejudice only compound the difficulties in the world, reducing politics to pettiness. We Americans are better than that, despite the best efforts of Saddam Hussein and other ogres to cheapen us.

Writer says threat of criminal activity won't stop her support of Desert Shield

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

It's a shame.

The local violators of the law and perpetrators of criminal acts have found yet another way to make their job of sustaining the local crime level in the community even easier.

It's those yellow ribbons.

According to Col. Fred W. Liebe, post provost marshal, criminals see the ribbons as an opportunity to commit criminal acts because they suspect that the male spouse has been deployed and is absent from the home.

Yes folks, showing your support for the troops in Saudi Arabia could be hazardous to your health.

Well, I don't have a spouse that's been deployed. I don't have a spouse at Fort Benning, period.

Yet, as a soldier and member of this community, I feel that I have every right to show my support for my fellow soldiers participating in Operation Desert Shield — whether it's tying a yellow ribbon around my car antenna or wearing a "I support Desert Shield" button.

Have the criminals ever stopped to consider that there are many male soldiers who are still on post?

I guess they haven't.

I could imagine the look on some burglar's face as he attempts to ease through a window of a ribbon-bearing house, only to be met by a six-foot, 10-inch powerhouse of a sergeant ready to defend his position.

The way I see it is, if I'm going to be victimized, there's probably little I can do besides following safety rules and using common sense.

So, I refuse to be frightened.

I will continue to wear my ribbons — proudly. I will continue to put one on my front door, my car, and my person.

Many friends of mine are scared, but that didn't stop them from going to Saudi Arabia to perform their sworn duty and defend this country, its interests and me.

I think that's more than enough reason to do what I can to support them.

And no criminal will ever stop me from doing that.

LETTER

My heart goes out to the troops and families of the 197th. I'm sure the majority of the families left behind are coping the best they can.

This letter is intended for some of the officials and spouses who seem to be in a panic.

I would like to know why the spouses of deployed troops are getting "special ID cards"? There are a lot of wives in the Fort Benning and Columbus area whose husbands are gone on unaccompanied tours. They do not have special ID cards.

My husband has been in Korea 10 months. In a recent letter, he told me he will be extended indefinitely because there are no replacement troops.

Also, when he does come home, he'll probably go to Saudi Arabia.

It is a known fact in the military that when your spouse is gone, you lose separate rations.

So why the shock? Why is the ACS Food Locker empty? Separate rations haven't even been taken out of checks yet!

When my husband left, my grocery bill went down considerably.

I buy Kool-Aid instead of soda, popcorn instead of chips, and cheaper brands of food. If I can't pay all of the bills, I pay what I can pay until things get better.

My husband has expenses where he is so sometimes things are "tight" at home.

The troops have only been gone three weeks! What happens if they're gone a year or more?

Let's get off the "pity party," and deal with it. This is part of being a soldier's spouse. You take a deep breath, pray, and do the best you can do. Make your soldier proud.

Some of you reading this are going to say, "She can talk, her husband is in a 'safe' place." My son's father was killed in Vietnam so I've been "there," too.

Get it together people.

Commander addresses furloughs

By Cynthia Barnes
Bayonet staff

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, met with some of Fort Benning's civilian work force Sept. 21 and plans to meet with more Tuesday.

During the civilian call, Cavezza addressed the issue of possible civilian furloughs recently announced by the Office of Personnel Management.

Cavezza said that while some agencies, both Department of Defense and non-DoD, are saying beware, the Army is being optimistic that it will all be worked out.

He added that he isn't lobbying for more for Fort Benning, but is trying to hold on to what the post has.

Fort Benning's role will continue to increase, as it has since the start of Operation Desert Shield, explained Cavezza.

This post has played a major part in the 500,000 man call up of Reservists by the President.

As a major mobilization station, one of Fort Benning's missions is to get Reserve units equipped, trained and sent out.

Cavezza also addressed budget cuts, saying that he hoped that normal attrition would allow Fort Benning's work force to continue uninterrupted.

Another issue of concern included the post's air conditioning system which had to be turned off seven times this summer in order to conserve.

"Georgia Power gives us power at a cheaper rate with the provision that we cut back when the system's demand is too high," he explained.

OPERATION DESERT SHIELD

Army postal staff delivers mail to servicemembers in Mideast

Army News Service

Each day the Army postal system delivers more than 100,000 pieces of mail to soldiers deployed on Operation Desert Shield.

From cookies to clothing, junk food to photos of a newborn baby, everything gets to the soldier the same way — through the Army Post Office.

"It's a huge, complex system at work here," said Maj. Willie Newson, "and it's working well."

Newson is the theater Army postal officer.

The flow of mail into Saudi Arabia has risen steadily since the operation began.

"In 10 days, I saw it jump from two-and-a-half tons per day to four-and-a-half tons per day, and there seems to be no end in sight," said Col. Courtney Starbird.

As Central Command adjutant, Starbird is responsible for making sure deployed soldiers get their mail.

Recent media reports have charged that soldiers are not getting their mail. Starbird defended his soldiers, saying that they are working long hours and operating 24 hours a day.

"It is their policy not to leave at night or at the end of their shift until the work is done."

The goal of the APO, said Starbird, is to get the mail from "Anywhere USA" to the soldiers in 10 days. Currently, the average delivery time is five to six days, Starbird said, although it may take a couple of weeks for newly arrived soldiers to receive their first mail.

All mail is being cancelled by hand, but postal workers have ordered an automatic stamp canceller to speed up the process.

The military postal staff in Saudi Arabia has grown with the rising volume of mail.

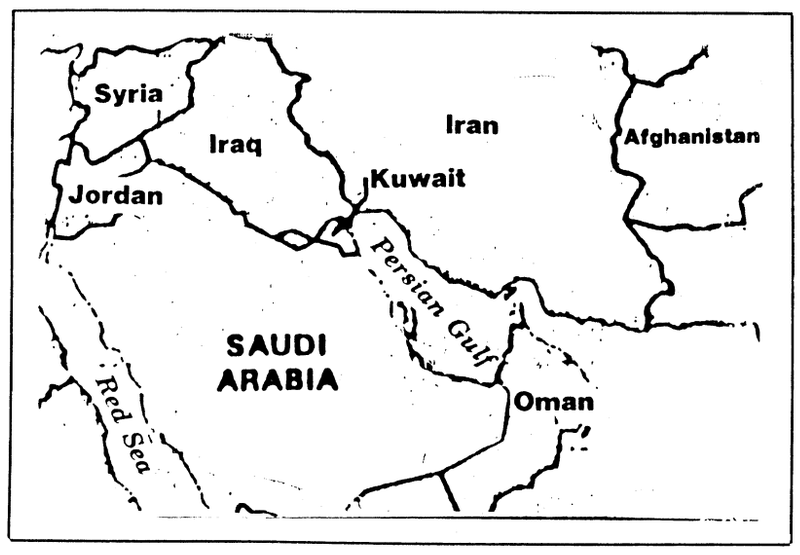
The 129th Postal Company from Fort Bragg, N.C. was deployed to augment an Air Force postal team that was in Saudi Arabia before the operation.

Additional help soon followed from the 1241st Postal Company of the Alabama Army National Guard in Birmingham.

With the recent relaxing of restrictions on size and weight, Starbird says he expects to see a considerable increase in the amount of mail passing through.

"The care packages are coming," he said.

Editor's note: This article was compiled from information provided by Spec. Kevin Hudson, 14th Public Affairs Detachment.



Army outlines additions to base pay, entitlements

Army News Service

Soldiers deployed on Operation Desert Shield may see some changes in their pay and entitlements. Here are the most common additions to a soldiers base pay:

- Basic allowance for quarters for officers and enlisted soldiers: dollar amount varies, based on soldier's rank and marital status. The amount remains unchanged when soldiers are deployed;
- Basic allowance for subsistence for officers: they receive about $124 per month, and are charged per day for their rations while deployed. Enlisted: If they qualify, they receive about $180 per month. This is discontinued while a soldier is deployed;
- Foreign duty pay for enlisted only: $8 to $22.50 per month for grades E-1 through E-9;
- Family separation allowance for officers and enlisted soldiers: $60 per month. To qualify, a soldier must have dependents and be gone for at least 30 days;
- Imminent-danger pay for officers and enlisted: $110 per month. Soldiers serving in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Shield will receive imminent danger or hostile-fire pay. The secretary of defense determines if a situation is a hostile-fire or imminent-danger environment and therefore determines whether the soldiers should receive the extra pay.

Policy clarifies basic allowance for subsistence

Army News Service

Deployment of thousands of soldiers on Operation Desert Shield has yielded some misunderstanding about soldiers' pay and entitlements, said Army officials. One of the entitlements in question: basic allowance for subsistence.

Basic allowance for subsistence is an "integral part of every soldier's military compensation." BAS is paid either directly in cash every payday, or indirectly in the form of meals provided in-kind by a dining facility.

Most single soldiers receive this allowance-in-kind instead of cash payments. Enlisted soldiers with rank of sergeant first class and above, and all married soldiers and officers, receive a cash allowance for subsistence.

Soldiers deployed in support of Operation Desert Shield receive field rations or receive meals through a field messing facility. Therefore, their cash allowance (BAS) is stopped.

Most soldiers who receive BAS are familiar with how the policy works from past experience. BAS is stopped whenever a soldier deploys on maneuvers, war games, field exercises, or similar types of operations of greater than 14 days' duration where he receives meals through a field messing facility.

Lt. Col. Joe Zehnder, chief of the Compensation and Entitlements Branch in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, said the Army did not make this policy. Federal statute defines the circumstances when soldiers are eligible for BAS. Any change would require a mandatory legislation.

"There's a common misconception that BAS is part of a soldier's pay and should not be stopped. That's wrong. BAS is an allowance. It's meant only to defray the soldier's normal food costs; when meals are provided to the soldiers, they're not entitled to draw their BAS."

However, said Zehnder, Army leaders understand how a soldier's deployment can put a strain on the family budget. He said that soldiers participating in Operation Desert Shield may be authorized a family separation allowance and foreign duty pay.

In September 1990, the Secretary of Defense declared Saudi Arabia as an "imminent danger pay" area, thereby entitling all soldiers to $110 per month.

The family separation allowance for officers and enlisted is $60 per month. Foreign duty pay varies, Zehnder said, depending on an enlisted soldier's grade. Officers are not entitled to foreign duty pay.

PERSCOM says no Army-wide PCS freeze

Army News Service

Dismissing rumors that Operation Desert Shield has prompted a freeze on all soldier reassignments, officials at the Total Army Personnel Command say soldiers not deploying to the Middle East will continue to march on change-of-station orders,

An Aug. 19 message to the field from PERSCOM, located in Alexandria, Va., says soldiers assigned to units not deploying "will comply with assignment instructions."

"We've heard that (reassignments freeze) rumor, too," said Capt. William Patterson of the PERSCOM Enlisted Personnel Management Directorate.

"It's not true. There are some deletions and deferments being processed, but only for soldiers in units deployed for Desert Shield."

Patterson said soldiers in units deploying for Desert Shield who currently have permanent change-of-station orders with report dates between now and March will likely have their reassignments cancelled.

However, he added that could change as the situation evolves.

"That's the guidance today," Patterson said. "But the situation is too dynamic to make predictions about whether that'll still be the policy next month."

Commanders of deploying units can request deletions or deferments for soldiers assigned to their units.

However, they must wait until 30 days before the scheduled deployment to request a change in the soldiers' orders.

In addition, they must notify PERSCOM at least five days before deploying of the name, rank, Social Security number, assignment data and unit of all soldiers deleted or deferred.

Former POW speaks of experiences

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

He committed no crime. He was only serving his country, yet he was held prisoner for more than five years.

Retired colonel, Dr. Floyd H. Kushner was captured by the Vietnamese on Dec. 2, 1967 while serving with the 1st Squadron, 9th U.S. Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division. He was released March 16, 1973.

Kushner was the guest speaker at the Sept. 21, Prisoner of War and Missing In Action Day ceremony in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

The Florida ophthmologist was introduced by Fort Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, who briefly described the plight of the former prisoner of war and how he came to speak at the ceremony.

According to Cavezza, Kushner doesn't normally give speeches about his prison experiences, however he made an exception because of his friendship with Col. Theodore Chilcote, Director of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

Kushner served with Chilcote while he was on active duty and said he was honored when the DPTM head asked if he would speak at the ceremony.

The audience signaled its approval with a round of applause as the former POW approached the podium.

During his speech he spoke about the politics surrounding prisoners of war and the strength that was needed to overcome his time in capacity.

"POW's need to keep the faith and believe in the Constitution they have sworn to defend," he said.

Kushner said that is the general consensus among POW's but it's sometimes a rocky road.

He noted there was some good out of his incarceration.

"It gives you the ability to concentrate better," he said. "It also makes you more aware of what a miraculous wonderful country this is."

Kushner said for over 200 years, Americans have achieved peace through periodic elections.

"That has to me some kind of record," he said.

Experiences such as Kushner went through gave him a unique perspective of life — one he wishes he didn't have.

Kushner said he would never take his freedom for granted. Upon his release he said he vowed he would never forget the day he was set free.

However, Kushner has broken that promise to himself. He said he's enjoying his freedom in this wonderful land.

He said he attributed his broken promise to looking forward instead of into the unfortunate past. "I'm alive."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am on alert for deployment and my wife is staying here with our kids. She cannot drive my pickup, so we are planning on parking it at the apartment complex while I am away. We can save over $400 every six months by dropping the insurance on the truck. I say go for it, but my wife says we should ask the judge first. What about it?

A. The writer shows great ingenuity in thinking up this money-saving idea, but my advice is: perish the thought!

There are several things which can happen to you if you cancel auto insurance, all of them unpleasant.

The most obvious is the liability you might suffer if someone used your car while it was uninsured. All of us know better, but every year several pay for this mistake.

Second, there are consequences if the truck is financed, as are most vehicles. Almost all automobile contracts require the debtor to maintain insurance on the vehicle, usually collision and comprehensive.

Failure to maintain such insurance allows the creditor to purchase insurance to protect his debt, and add the cost of the coverage onto the debt contract, plus interest. This coverage is usually more expensive than the former coverage. If several years go by, the debtor may discover that instead of a paid-off truck, he owes another thousand dollars or more.

Even if the truck is paid for, there are reasons to leave the insurance in effect. The state of Georgia requires minimum liability insurance for every vehicle, and failure to have such insurance must be reported by the insurance company.

The penalty is suspension of your driver's license until new insurance is secured, and required multiple visits to the patrol offices to straighten out.

If you live in Alabama, which has no insurance minimum requirements, you still can't avoid carrying liability insurance accordance with the minimum amounts, because Army and Fort Benning regulations require insurance, and failure to do so subjects the offender to discipline.

Q. My son and his wife have deployed, leaving me to keep their children. Where can I get help to answer questions about problems that arise, and how can I find out something about Army privileges for myself?

A. The Army is very concerned that all its agencies respond with sensitivity and support for the children of dual service and single parents. There are a number of steps that should already have been taken by your son to insure that you have most of the tools to take care of their children until their return. For example, you should already have a power of attorney, an identification card for the children, birth certificates or Defense Eligibility Enrollment Report enrollment, and possibly a guardianship form.

Installation commanders may authorize post exchange and commissary privileges for the care giver on behalf of the child.

CFC begins drive

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The Combined Federal Campaign will begin its annual fund raising drive Tuesday at the Follow Me golf course clubhouse. The event will be a stand-up social and Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, will be the host.

The campaign presents an opportunity for federal employees to give financial support to over 100 charity and support organizations here, said Capt. Tyrone C. Kirk, Fort Benning's CFC officer this year.

"This year's goal of $500,00 is lower than last year's goal of $565,000. The drop is due to the post's involvement with Operation Desert Shield and the deployment of a significant number of troops from the post," said Kirk. "The population of the post is much smaller, though the need is greater to help the spouses and families of those soldiers during their deployment."

Each unit has their own designated project officer, who will have the campaign materials available and listings of the agencies eligible for contributions, said Kirk.

In spite of the Middle East crisis, Kirk is optimistic about this year's campaign. "I don't foresee any problems this year. Federal employees, both soldier and civilian, are generous by nature. We're hoping that everyone will just pull together to meet our goal." he said.

The campaign will continue until Nov. 15.

Benning soldiers trespass, make illegal parachute jumps

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from Fort Benning have allegedely been conducting parachute jumps from the WTVM Channel 9 television transmission tower located in Cusseta, according to Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff.

In a letter received from John Maxwell, transmitter supervisor of WTVM, it was reported that soldiers from Fort Benning have trespassed onto the site to scale the 1749-foot tower in order to conduct illegal parachute jumps. Concern was also expressed, due to the hazardous nature of such an activity.

"I am very concerned about the hazards involved in this activity,"said Fuller. "Not only is the jumper exposing himself to obvious physical danger, there is a significant threat from radio frequency radiation emanating from the facility. Additionally, there exists the possibility that the tower itself could be damaged. Regardless, this conduct is improper and will not be tolerated."

Fuller further requested that a serious effort be made to prevent an injury or fatality and to preclude further incidents of this sort.

"Soldiers should be informed of the dangers involved and the possibility of being criminally charged for such misconduct." said Fuller.

VA expands education benefits program

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) is expanding its education benefits program Monday to include vocational, technical, correspondence and apprenticeship training for reservists, and reinstating flight training for both reservists and veterans.

Reservists enrolled in the Montgomery G.I. Bill program, along with veterans, already were eligible for college benefits. The expanded program will allow reservists to join veterans and active-duty members in non-college education programs as well.

The reinstatement of the flight training program, for a 4-year period that expires Sept. 30, 1994, is for students pursuing careers as pilots.

The Montgomery G.I. Bill provides education benefits for individuals entering military service after June 30, 1985. Servicemembers going on active duty after that date enroll in the program by having their basic pay reduced by $100 a month for the first 12 months of service.

Reservists are eligible for Montgomery benefits if they enlist, reenlist, or extend an enlistment in the Selected Reserve for a period of six years or more. No deductions are made of reservists' pay; but before enrolling in classes, reservists must complete the initial period of active-duty training and the requirements for a secondary school diploma or equivalent.

VA programs have been providing educational benefits to veterans since 1944, but reservists have been eligible only since 1985, when the Montgomery G.I. Bill went into effect. Through June 30, 1989, more than 70,000 veterans and servicemembers, and 170,000 reservists have used Montgomery G.I. Bill benefits.

Education benefits are payable for a maximum of 36 months. The basic benefit amounts to $300 a month for full-time training for veterans serving on active duty for three years, or for two years plus four years in the Ready Reserve or National Guard. For reservists, the basic benefit is $140 a month for full-time training.

To receive flight-training benefits — solo training by law is not authorized — students must hold an unlimited private pilot certificate issued by the Federal Aviation Administration. VA pays for 60 percent of the cost of flight training.

For further information, contact the nearest VA Regional Office. Toll-free telephone numbers are listed in most directories.

Workshop discusses suicide among America's teen-agers

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A workshop discussing adolescent suicide was given Sept. 20 at the Youth Services Center. The workshop was sponsored by the Civilian Counseling Center in conjunction with the Bradley Center.

Gwendolyn Harvey, past president and present board member of the American Association of Suicidology, was the guest speaker.

Harvey gave many of the causes of adolescent suicide, including depession. She also gave many of the physical, verbal and emotional warning signs to alert a possible emotional disruption in a young person's life.

Joanne C. Duncan, a paralegal at Trial Defense Services on post, came out to hear Harvey's lecture and said she was quite impressed.

"I am a member of the Harris County School Board, so I have a great interest in adolescent concerns. I was quite impressed with Ms. Harvey's lecture. I felt that it was very informative," Duncan commented.

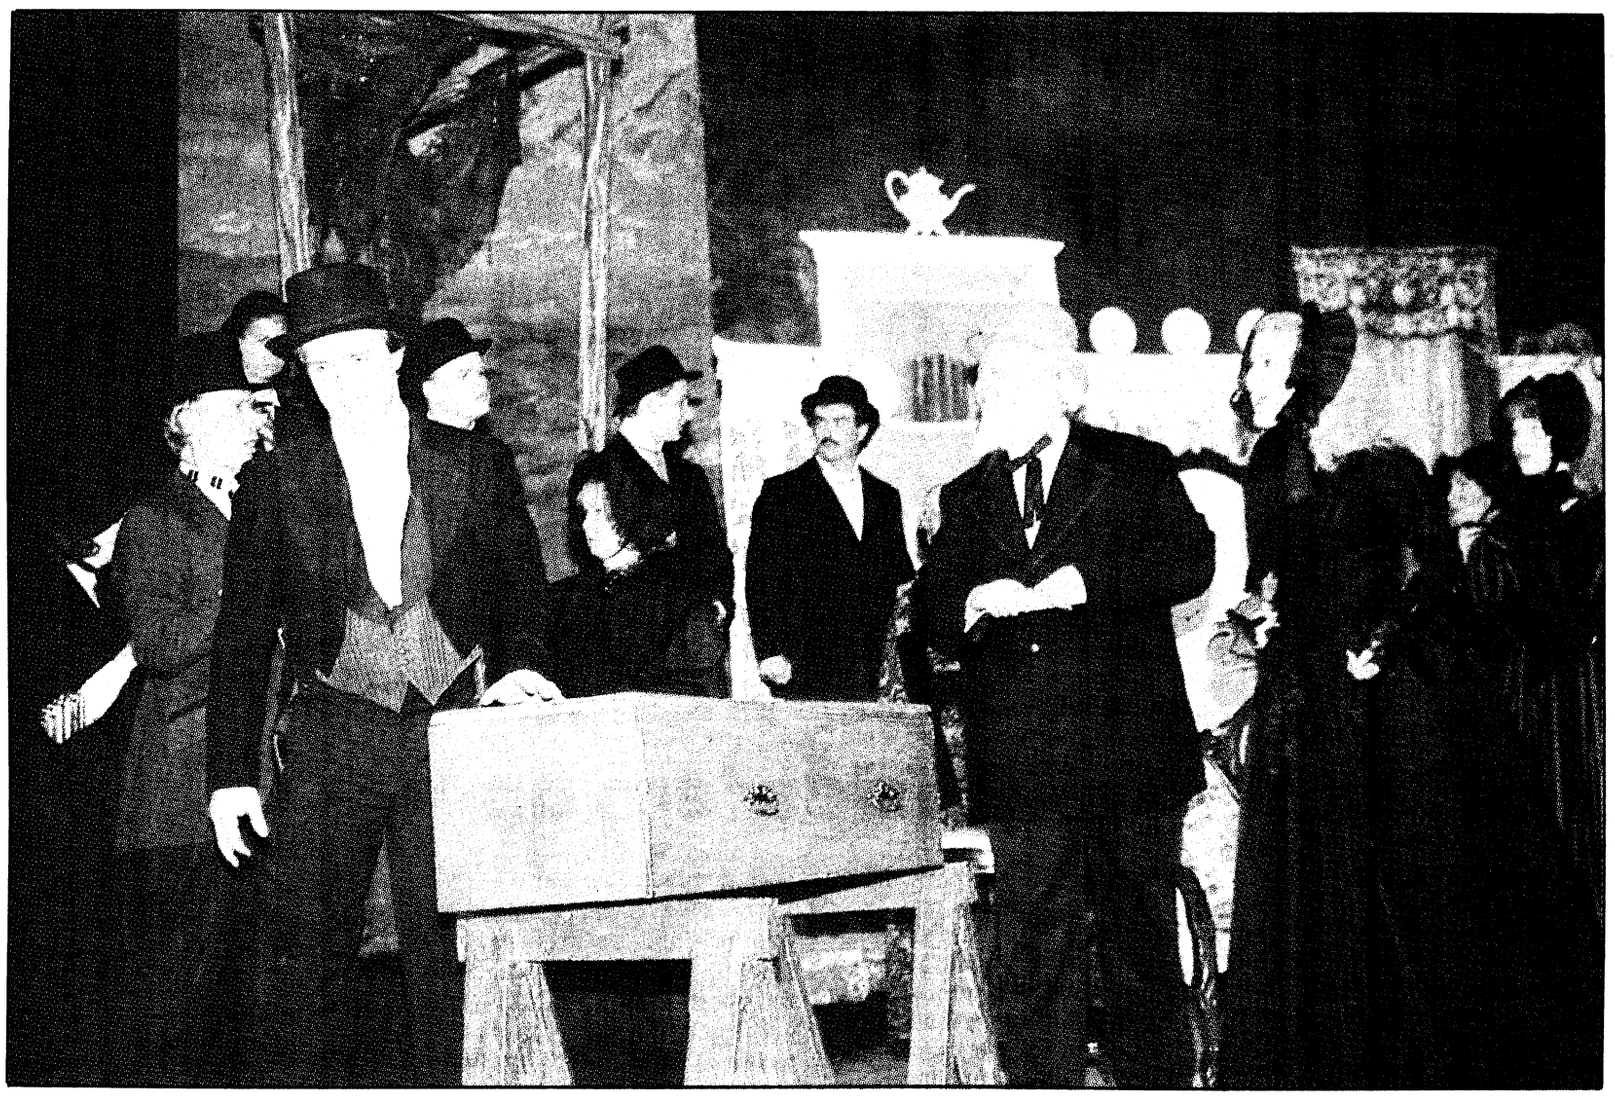
Take a ride down Big River



Ann M. McDonald

Cast members of the musical "Big River" sing and dance during a performance.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Looking for something to "wet" your appetite for entertainment this weekend?

Why not take a ride down the "Big River."

Not as in the Chattahoochee, but as in the season opener at the Springer Opera House, "Big River, the adventures of Huckleberry Finn."

The musical production, directed by Paul Pierce, takes audiencesback 20 years before the Civil War.

Based on Mark Twain's American classic, the story revolves around two men, one white and one black and their adventures while rafting down the Mississippi.

"Jim," the runaway slave portrayed by Madison Jackson and "Huck Finn," portrayed by Jason Ferguson, learn the true meaning of friendship when circumstance pushes them together.

The answer to their search for freedom and truth seems to lay somewhere along the shores of the river.

Their smooth journey comes to a sudden halt when they run into the likes of "The King," played by Raymond Campbell and "The Duke," played by Jimmy Motos.

The two hoodlums and their endless get-rich-schemes put "Jim," and "Huck" into some interesting situations.

The royal scoundrels and the soul searchers encounter everything from angry townspeople, farmers and three girls mourning for their dead pappy.

All of this is set to song and dance numbers directed by Paul Vander Gheynst.

The music includes jazzy chorus numbers, choir gospel and numerous solos.

Set creator David Deacon demonstrates his talents with a set that changes the small stage into a house, a cabin, an island, a river complete with raft, a living room and a farm.

Deacon's night sky twinkles with stars and his daybreak scenes shine with the many hues of dawn.

Fort Benning fans should be sure not to miss "Mark Twain" and the "doctor" as portrayed by Martin Army Community Hospital pharmacist Roger Stai.

Stai, however, is not the only member of the 40-member cast who has a dual role. Almost everyone has two roles, some as many as three.

Even then the credits don't include the countless times the performers stand in the eaves, lending their voices as background.

All of those numbers add up to a first class production of "Big River" at a businessmans' price.

Tickets for tonight and Saturdays' 8 p.m. performance are $12 ; $10 for senior adults and $6 for students. For more information call 327-3688.

WHAT: Musical production of Mark Twain's "Big River"

WHEN: Today and Saturday at 8 p.m.

WHERE: Springer Opera House

COST: general admission tickets, $12; senior adult tickets, $10 and student tickets, $6.

Post shuttle bus route to change

By Cynthia Barnes
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning shuttle bus routes will change beginning Oct. 1.

The bridge that was recently constructed in Sand Hill allows the post shuttle bus system service more housing areas, according to Korin J. Mason, post transportation officer.

The housing areas that will be added are McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi and O'Brien Circle.

Because of increases and decreases in the ridership on certain routes, other changes to the schedule include adding two busses to the Main Post route and cutting back by one to Harmony Church and Sand Hill on the weekend.

Shuttle bus service is provided for enlisted personnel between troop billets and place of duty, military and civilian employees between offices and work places during duty hours, and military dependents when space is available. Parents are responsible for ensuring the proper behavior of their children who ride the busses, Mason said. The shuttle operates 365 days a year and travels an average of 180,000 miles to transport 420,000 people annually.

The Harmony Church, Sand Hill bus serves Kelly Hill and all transfers to different routes can be made at the Main Mall stop 35 minutes past the hour.

Times shown indicate minutes after the hour. Transfer point between routes is at Main Mall.

Post fishing club fries 'em up

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club monthly tournament and annual family fish fry was Sept. 15 and 16. The tournament was a 10-hour event out of Uchee Creek.

The fish fry was at the Uchee Creek Recreation Center. The fishing hours were Saturday from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The first place honors went to George Mendez with a total of 19 pounds, 8 ounces. Brenda Carter took second place with 11 pounds, 12 ounces. Jim Stutts placed third with a total of 10 pounds, 11 ounces. George Mendez took the big fish pot with a 7 pound, 15 ounce catch.

The fish fry was a huge success and, as usual, everyone enjoyed themselves and ate far more fish than they should have.

The following vendors in the Columbus area supported the tournament: Buffalo Rock Company, Georgia Crown Distributors, Racetrac Service Station, B&B Beverage Co., Triangle Beverage Co., Victory Bait & Tackle, Calvin's Outdoors, and Leon Jordan Marine.

The club will hold its October tournament Oct. 13-14 at Lake Sinclair. Fort Benning Bass Club holds one points tournament each month of the year.

The Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year. Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club which promotes conservation, good sportsmanship, community pride, as well as fishing, contact Brenda Carter at 689-7474 or Ben McGuire at 568-0699.

Prospective members are invited to attend one of the club's meetings, which are held the second and fourth Tuesday each month in Building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

Latest issue of Infantry Magazine features Vuono

Infantry Magazine

In the September-October 1990 issue of Infantry Magazine, General Carl E. Vuono, Chief of Staff of the Army, lays out his vision of the Army of the future.

In "Shaping the Army of Tomorrow," he discusses six imperatives that "have forged the Army of 1990" and that "now serve as a beacon to guide us into the next century."

Also in that issue, the Infantry School launches Project SHARE 90, the aim of which is to solicit publishable accounts of small unit actions from the operations of Grenada and Panama.

The project is similar to the one initiated in 1966 to obtain articles on actions in Vietnam. Numerous articles from that project were published in Infantry Magazine and subsequently in two books — Infantry in Vietnam, published in December 1967, and a Distant Challenge, published in 1970.

The feature articles in Infantry's September-October issue cover a variety of subjects:

●In "An Infantry Mount for the 21st Century," Lieutenant Colonels Thomas R. Rozman and Edward E. Blankenhagen give a brief history of the development of "mobile and protected" infantry over the centuries and then consider the employment of heavy infantry units in the future.

Their primary purpose is to stimulate discussion on the kind of heavy infantry mount needed for the 21st Century.

Colonel Rozman is assigned to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Training, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, and Colonel Blankenhagen is a U.S. Army Reserve Advisor to the U.S. Army Training Support Center.

●In "Scouts, Snipers and Designated Riflemen," Sergeant First Class John E. Foley describes the similarities and differences in the roles of these marksmen and the way they can be used together to increase a unit's combat effectiveness. Sergeant Foley is a platoon sergeant in the 1st Battalion, 506th Infantry in Korea.

●In "Light Infantry Company at REFORGER," Captain Richard F. Dauch and Lieutenant Shawn R. Schiffer relate their company's experiences while participating in light and heavy joint operations in REFORGER 1990. Both are assigned to Company C, 3d Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

Information about Infantry Magazine, including subscription rates and writers guidelines, is available from Editor, Infantry, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605; AUTOVON 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

SPIRITUAL

Chapel honors the missing

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Hundreds occupy a space meant for six in the small Catholic Chapel.

Those attending Mass need to sit a little closer together now. Satin ropes and a small, basic plaque are all that may occupy the space where half a dozen sat only a week before.

No one can sit there until the hundreds are all accounted for.

Prisoners of war and soldiers missing in action are those voices not heard when Amazing Grace is sung. They are the communion hosts not taken and the prayer book not opened. They were those who were remembered and honored during Mass at Main Post Catholic Chapel Sunday.

The observation coincided with POW/MIA Day last Friday.

Intended to remind people that everyone needs to keep these soldiers and their families in their players, the reserved seats are placed in the midst of the congregation.

Those gathered for Mass prayed together, ". . .We remember those still listed as missing in action and those we suspect might still be held as prisoners of war. Help us, O Lord, to never forget them or their families and loved ones who wait for even the slightest bit of information concerning their fate. May there be an accounting, if not here on earth, may it be in thy presence, O God, our strength and our hope. . ."

In the midst of everyday business and worries, it is hoped that those who glance a moment at the memorial in the tiny chapel, remember those who suffer horribly in grief and anxiety.

With something as simple as a tiny plaque and an empty seat, the hundreds missing from our lives can be remembered and held in prayer.

Spouses left behind are not alone

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Many spouses and parents have suddenly found themselves facing daily life alone because of the deployment of soldiers to the Mideast.

It's not easy.

But spouses are not really alone. There are opportunities available to help family members cope with the problems they face now or in the weeks to come.

Parenting classes are offered at the Chaplains' Family Life Center, building 2606 in Soldier's Plaza. The next six week session, Active Parenting, begins Oct. 17, from noon to 1:30 p.m.

"The important thing that waiting spouses need to remember," said Chaplain (Maj.) John Bjarneson, Family Life Center Chaplain, "is that there are others who genuinely care about their well being and are willing to help."

Bjarneson recently finished teaching a Systematic Training for Effective Parenting class.

"Increasing parents' understanding of their children can make all the difference in the household. Parents can do this by intensely listening to their children," Bjarneson said.

"Children really feel the loss of their parents who are now in Saudi Arabia. They know that this is not a regular notion of them being 'in the field.' Children sense the increased anxiety of the remaining parent. They are also aware of outside events from the news and other children," he added.

"A smart thing for both parents and teachers to do is to talk about current events. They should show children where the parent is located on a map.

"The bottom line is to help the kids know they are not alone and that we are all in this together. Don't exclude children, they are full partners in the big event. They also need to know that their thoughts, feelings and prayers are just as important as everyone elses."

To register for Active Parenting classes, call the Family Life Center at 545-1760 or 545-5301.

Another type of support for spouses of deployed soldiers can be found in a group which meets at the Custer Terrace Chapel each Wednesday from noon to 1 p.m.

This group is facilitated by Chaplain (Maj.) Herb Marbury and Chaplain (Capt.) John Houser. To join the group, spouses may simply come to the center or call 544-3179 or 544-2213.

Sometimes it is not enough for troubled spouses to talk to friends, family, or others in essentially the same situation.

When additional counseling or guidance is needed, the Chaplains at Fort Benning are happy to be of help, according to Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz, Post Chaplain.

"Additional chaplain coverage has been arranged for family members left at Fort Benning while units have been deployed to Saudi Arabia," Chaplain Gudz explained.

Appointments are available for individuals or families experiencing the need for guidance during this stressful time. These may be made through the soldier's unit chaplain, the Protestant Chapel (545-2050), or the Main Post Catholic Chapel (545-1452).

Chaplains at Custer Terrace Chapel (544-2213) and the Chaplains Family Life (545-1760) Center are also available for counseling appointments.
