The Retiree Clinic, formerly located in building 392 on Main Post, merged with the Outpatient Clinic on Feb. 18, in order to increase access to care for beneficiaries, according to Jeanne Dickerson, hospital spokeswoman.

This move allows patients to have their medical records, laboratory, X-ray and pharmacy services all in the same building, said Dickerson.

"The merger made it possible to extend the operating hours of the Outpatient Clinic and makes care more accessible for working patients or those with child care or transportation problems," she said.

Patients eligible for CHAMPUS, or the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, may now make evening appointments in the Outpatient Clinic until 11 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The extended hours should reduce the time patients must wait for service in the Emergency Room because less urgent patients will be referred to the Outpatient Clinic, said Dickerson.

The evening clinic will be staffed by partnership physicians who will be paid by CHAMPUS. There will be no charge to CHAMPUS-eligible patients for the care provided.

Medicare patients who have part B coverage may also be treated, but they will have to meet their deductible and pay a cost share if they see the evening physician. Medicare patients may still be seen during the day by hospital staff doctors at no cost.

Also, many medications will be available through the evening Outpatient Clinic, said Dickerson. Most medicines prescribed for acute illnesses will be stocked in the clinic, she said.

Appointments may be made by calling 544-3760 or 544-1705.

Fort Benning hosts Arbor Day ceremony

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

A red maple tree was planted on York Field in an Arbor Day ceremony held Feb. 21.

The tree was one of 39 planted post-wide in commemoration of Arbor Day, said Col. Patrick Kenny, director of Engineering and Housing.

The ceremony included an invocation by Maj. Robert L. Cox and a reading of poems and essays by the winners of the E.A. White Elementary School's Arbor Day Writing Contest.

Anna Loers, second grade, Lindsey Bradley, third grade, Nikki Donley, fourth grade and Irene Polley, fifth grade read the poems and essays they wrote for the contest.

The ceremonial planting of the York Field tree was done by Brownlee and the contest winners, who used a small shovel to fill the hole around the tree with scoops of earth.

In his remarks, Brownlee reminded the audience of the origins of Arbor Day.

"Arbor Day was started about 110 years ago in Nebraska by a man named J. Sterling Morton."

"We continue to celebrate every year with our children in hope of having some impact on all of those around us on how important it is to preserve our environment and how only we can perpetuate it."

"My charge is that if you see that this tree isn't taken care of, you give me a call," said Kenny, adding that the tree belonged to everyone.

"All of us who participated in this ceremony will look at this tree and we will remember the day that we were here— a beautiful, wonderful day at Fort Benning."

Kenny then presented contest organizer Candace Corcoran and each of the contest winners with a certificate of achievement.

Soldiers receive job assistance

Program offers job placement, assistance for outward bound

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

Today, some soldiers are worried.

Some of them are separating— voluntarily and otherwise— from what most people viewed as "a sure thing" — a job in the Army.

In today's depressed economy, with many private corporations also "downsizing" and thousands of employees in the civilian sector being laid off and terminated, the prospects of future employment for past soldiers could be shaky.

But soldiers separating at Fort Benning may have the upper hand on finding employment, with the help of an interview given recently by Sgt. Maj. Burkhard Berger, Adjutant General sergeant major, to Ron Martz of the Atlanta Constitution and support of the Americus-Sumter County Chamber of Commerce.

Soldiers shown as good potential employees

In the article, Berger told the Constitution that the Army, due to downsizing, would be releasing many good potential candidates for civilian employment.

"I wanted to let businesses know that soldiers are some of the most qualified people they could get," said Berger.

"If the soldier is honorably discharged from the Army, you already know a few things about that soldier, in relation to his or her qualification for civilian employment.

"You know that the soldier is at least a high school graduate, is drug free, can handle stressful situations, has a good work ethic and has leadership experience.

"These qualities alone make a soldier separating from the Army an asset on any team," said Berger.

Local businesses eager for Army's 'resources'

Local businesses are taking notice of the resources the Army has to offer.

Merrill Lynch offices in Augusta, plus the Wal-Mart Corporation and other companies, as well as two trucking firms— J.B. Hunt and RTC — are very much interested in taking on soldiers to be parts of their teams, said Berger.

"The press we are receiving is positive," said Berger. "The corporations are aware of the resources an ex-military member can bring to them and the soldiers are in need of jobs. It's a win-win situation," said Berger.

Chamber of Commerce gives soldiers the nod

The Americus-Sumter County Chamber of Commerce is also eager to give soldiers a shot in the civilian world.

According to Yvonne R. Durrett, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program will be notified if any corporations relocate in the Americus-Sumter County area with a need for qualified employees.

"I will keep Fort Benning ACAP updated on any job specifications that develop," said Durrett.

Troops face life out of uniform

Cuts will push thousands into civilian work force

By Ron Martz

Fort Benning, Ga. — After 20 years in the Army, Sgt. Maj. Butch Berger thought he had heard it all.

But he never expected to hear quality soldiers being encouraged to get out of the military.

"It's hard to stand in front of your soldiers now and say, 'Re-enlist.' Now they're being told if they have a good job at home to take it," Sergeant Major Berger said.

Faced with huge cutbacks over the next four years, the military is scrambling to reassess its role and its needs in a world without the Soviet Union or another major military threat like it.

While Pentagon planners and congressional budget-cutters tinker with numbers that will reduce the military at least 25 percent by 1996, the soldiers who will make up those numbers are being forced to take long, hard looks at their careers and decide whether to get out or to wait and possibly be forced out later.

The days of a guaranteed 20-year military career for anyone who wants it have disappeared. Only highly motivated, superbly qualified and physically fit individuals with good credit records and stable home lives need apply to become career soldiers.

CRIME WATCH

Military Police Activity

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from Feb. 13 to 19. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A private reported that while at the Hidden Door Club, he became involved in a verbal altercation with a specialist. The specialist produced a handgun and threatened to kill the private. The specialist then departed the club. The two individuals then became involved in a physical altercation outside the Main Post Office. The private reported the incident to his chain of command and a search of the specialist's room revealed the handgun used to threaten the private. The specialist was apprehended for aggravated assault.

• A private was arrested by civil authorities for theft, after taking a Ford pickup truck belonging to an off-post dealer.

• A family member was apprehended for forgery after-forging and negotiating two checks totaling $700 on the account of another. Investigation revealed the family member had stolen the checks earlier.

• Four soldiers reported that person(s) unknown had entered into the Airborne School barracks area and cut the locks to the wall lockers and removed the property consisting mostly of money.

• A specialist was apprehended for animal abuse/neglect and cruelty to animals after an animal control officer observed a dog being housed behind a set of quarters. The officer approached the animal and observed that there were four dead puppies on ground. Two other puppies showed signs of dehydration and there was no food or water in the area. The mother had a chain double wrapped around its neck.

• A specialist was apprehended on several charges stemming from the selling of two AK-47 assault rifles to covert agents. The specialist also sold other military equipment to the agents and stated that they had been brought into the United States from Iraq when his unit returned from Desert Storm.

• There were three cases of leaving children unattended, two were left in vehicles and the other one was walking about within a housing area. The parents were located and apprehended for the offense.

• Recently the lives of two Fort Benning soldiers have been lost needlessly and others have suffered serious injury as a result of traffic accidents. One involved alcohol combined with speed and the other involved speeding. The real tragedy of the incidents is that if seatbelts were worn the individuals involved may still be alive or may not have been seriously injured.

As a result of these accidents and many others the Military Police Activity has set up safety check points on Fort Benning, during all hours of the day and night. At these check points about 20 individuals were apprehended for driving under the influence. Others were apprehended for drinking under age and some were cited for no insurance or no proof of insurance.

• Remember that if you must drink don't drive and if you must drive don't drink. Use seatbelts when in your automobile and maintain your vehicle insurance and have proof of it in your vehicle. These things are not only the law, but buckling up and being a safe and sober driver can save your life or the life of another.

• Remember to help "Make our post the best - give crime arrest!" Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223.

AUSA speaker urges NCOs to shape soldiers

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

It's imperative that non-commissioned officers, particularly sergeants major, help lower-ranking soldiers become good leaders, a retired lieutenant general told 24 sergeants major and junior officers Monday.

Retired Lt. Gen. Andrew P. Chambers, now the director of Industry Affairs in the Association of the United States Army, spoke to members of AUSA at a luncheon at the Main NCO Club.

Chambers broke the ice with stories of his time as a second lieutenant and how NCOs he knew "kicked his fanny" into shape to become one of the Army's senior leaders.

Because of the cuts in the defense budget, Chambers said that it is important that soldiers seek professional development to maximize their potential in every assignment.

"The Army needs you now more than ever," said Chambers. "A strong defense is absolutely imperative to the survival of a nation."

CRIME STOPPERS

Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for a black male suspect in connection with the theft of several blank checks last month at a local senior citizen center. The suspect is described as:

A black male, 25 to 30 years old, slender build, with black hair, brown eyes, blue work pants, brown boot type shoes and a red hat.

On Jan. 22, about 2:28 p.m., the director of the Mariana Senior Citizen Center at 1212 15th St., reported to the police, that at approximately 2 p.m., she observed a black male walking out of her office. When she confronted him, he said that he was looking for a bath room. As the director attempted to talk to the suspect, he ran out the door toward the Warren Williams Apartments, with the blank checks and a small amount of cash.

A Lithokrome employee found the stolen checks near 13th Street and returned them.

In addition to this theft, there have been several burglaries here at the senior citizen center over the last year.

If you have any information concerning these cases, call Crime Stoppers at 571-585S, and you don't have to give your name. If your information leads to an arrest and indictment, you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Crime Stoppers also pays for the information on other criminal activity, stolen property, and wanted persons. The Crime Stopper lines are open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City, and Russell County areas.

Planning trips made easy

ITR helps Fort Benning community, takes pain out of vacation planning

Directorate of Community Activities

Once you have figured out where you want to go, half the battle is won; but, getting information about your destination, buying tickets and making reservations can be a war in itself.

But enter the cavalry. The Information, Ticketing and Registration Office, formerly referred to as ITT, is available to assist the Fort Benning community with travel and vacation plans.

Located in building 247 on Ingersoll Street, ITR offers discounts to soldiers, retirees and their family members at most popular vacation areas when ticketed through the ITR. In addition, the staff can arrange motel and hotel lodging, make and confirm reservations, ensure the lowest possible rates and assist with transportation requirements.

Military discount tickets are now available for Disney World's Magic Kingdom, Epcot Center and Pleasure Island in Orlando, Fla.

Discount tickets for Pine Mountain Wild Animal Park in Pine Mountain, Ga., and the Columbus RedStixx baseball games are also available.

During March, ITR will have discounted tickets for Wet N Wild, Orlando, Fla.; Whitewater, Atlanta, Ga.; Universal Studios, Orlando, Fla.; Gofer Fun Park, Columbus, Ga.; Dollywood, Sevierville, Tenn.; Calloway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga., and many others as they become available.

The ITR staff will also assist in obtaining tickets for college sporting events, major concerts, theater tickets and other events as they are scheduled. These tickets are not normally available with a military discount, however, the ITR will negotiate for the lowest possible rates.

"The biggest advantages of using ITR are the discounts that are available, the convenience of having tickets to events on hand and we make all the reservations," said Carol Murphy, ITR manager. "We don't have tickets for the Hawks, Braves, Falcons and some concerts on hand, but we can get them by using the customers' charge card and they may pick them up at the will call window or for a small service charge they may be mailed directly to the customer."

If a customer does not have a charge card, they can be charged to ITR and the customer pays ITR in cash.

For those who are interested in organized tours to major shopping centers, discount marts, sporting or entertainment events, children's parties, zoos or other places, the ITR operates a 24-passenger, air-conditioned tour bus for that purpose. For larger groups, the ITR can arrange charter buses.

Call 545-4155 or visit the office between 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday to have ITR help plan your vacation.

Bulldogs bite Wild Bunch, 59-56

Captures post crown

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

Given new life, the Bulldogs of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion., 18th Infantry Regiment, didn't let it go to waste when they came from behind late in the second half to defeat the Wild Bunch of Co. C., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., 59-56 Wednesday night at Audie Murphy Fitness Center for the 1992 U. S. Army Infantry Center men's basketball championship.

Because another team was pulled at the last minute, the Bulldogs who were eliminated in the semi-finals were given new life and a chance to play for the title.

In the first half, the Wild Bunch, led by Stafford Daniels' 12 points and the combined rebounding effort of Jeff Erron and Derek Patterson, who had six boards each, had the Bulldogs down by as many as 12 points.

Late in the half, the Bulldogs made a run at the Wild Bunch and outscored them 10-2. Kevin Gleaton, and Linza Chapman, keyed the offense with 8 and 7 points respectively. The Bulldogs went in at the half leading 30-28.

In the second half, the Wild Bunch came out and took control early, out rebounding the Bulldogs and hitting the outside shot to keep the Bulldogs off the defensive glass. The Wild Bunch took a 10-point lead midway through the second half with Daniels, adding 10 to his first half total of 12 to lead all scorers with 22 points.

However, the Bulldogs were not ready to roll over and play dead.

The Dogs made another run this time led by the tournament's Most Valuable Player Chris Harvey, who finished the first half with four points. Harvey scored 10 points in the second half and teammates Samuel Derrickson and Chapman added seven apiece.

With just under two minutes to play, the Bulldogs had made up the 10-point deficit and tied the game at 50.

Lan Norris hit a three-point shot from the left corner to finish with eight points and give the Dogs a three-point lead. The Wild Bunch came right back with their own three-point answer when Alfonso Thomas popped one in from the right side to tie the game again at 53.

The Bulldogs scored the next five points to take a 58-53 lead with under 30 seconds to play. Thomas hit another three-pointer to pull the Wild Bunch to within two. Chapman was fouled and went to the line to shoot one and one. He missed the first free throw and the Wild Bunch grabbed the rebound and called time out. There was time for one last shot.

The Wild Bunch inbounded the ball from the baseline and passed the ball upcourt to Thomas. He crossed the half court line, moved toward the top of the three-point line and let fly an NBA three-point attempt. It fell just short of the rim as time ran out.

"After the controversy that we had, I felt that we could do it and that's what I worked on all day just to prove our point," said Edward Graham, Bulldog coach. "I felt from the start of the season that we could win the championship. I feel real proud at this moment. I feel real good."

MVP Harvey said, "We were a little let down after the loss Tuesday, but we got a second chance and I told the team 'let's get fired up' and we did. This feels great."

Charleston to host road race

Charleston Air Force Base, S.C.

Organizers hope for close to 1,000 participants in this year's Annual Great American Road Race, held at Charleston Air Force Base S.C., March 28.

The 12th of its kind and following a one-year hiatus due to the Persian Gulf War, the race will feature 5,000m and 8,000m competitions and the 1.5-mile fun run. Presented by the Airlift Comptrollers Organization and the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Division, its proceeds will benefit base recreation programs.

"In the past, we were fortunate to have many other bases compete, such as Fort Bragg, Pope and Shaw, and we hope to have that kind of turnout again this year," said race director Steve Parrish. "The race is also a great way of the Department of Defense to open the door to the public."

Initiated in 1980 and dubbed GARR following the military tradition of acronyms, this year's race is sponsored by Heritage Trust Federal Credit Union and Lockheed Aeronautical Systems Company.

Runners may enter either event and try to set new records, beating the the current 5K course record for males; 14:43.07, held by Al Dunn, the females' record, 18:07.00, set by Terry Bartosh in 1990, the current 8K course record for men, 25:45.00, held by Danny White since 1990, Benita Schlau's women's record, 29:51.39.

"As in the past, the race is a great warmup for the Cooper River Bridge Run and participation may be counted toward the annual base aerobics requirements," Parrish said. Those CAFB runners not sure whether their participation in the race will be counted should inquire with their first sergeant.

Awards will be given to first, second and third place contestants in the 5K and 8K events in each age group, and school and squadron participation awards will also be presented. Trophies will be given to the Military Team in the 5K race and for school participation in all events.

Entry fees for the 5K and 8K races are $11 with T-shirt, $8 without. For the 1 1/2-mile fun run $8 with T-shirt, $4 without.

Late registration fees are $11 for the 5K and 8K events and $8 for the fun run. Late registrants will receive T-shirts while supplies last. Applications must be postmarked by March 18, and late registration closes 15 minutes prior to the first race.

For more information, call Parrish at (803) 566-3347.

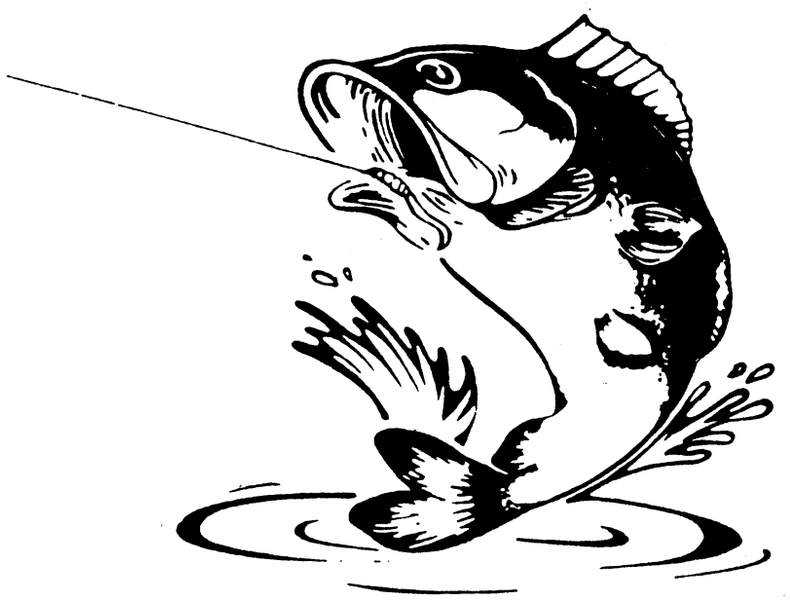
Trailers add flexibility

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation



Normally, spinnerbaits are weedless lures that can be cast into bushes and weeds without danger of snagging.

Why, then, would bass anglers add a trailer hook that takes away the weedlessness and limits the places the lure can be used?

A trailer or stinger hook may be the answer if bass are just nipping at the lure and not taking it aggressively, explains Guy Eaker, a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff and a 20-year veteran of professional tournament competition.

Sometimes you find bass that just won't engulf the lure, and you'll never catch them because all they're doing is biting the skirt.

In situations like this, Eaker uses a short shank trailer hook he hides in the skirt. He doesn't want a long trailer hook dangling out behind the lure, and he doesn t use a plastic trailer, either.

The trailer hook is attached by inserting the spinnerbait barb through the trailer hook eye. It is held in place with a small piece of surgical tubing or even a tiny piece of plastic worm.

"What I usually do," explains the Evinrude pro, "is to pull the skirt further down so it helps hide the trailer. Sometimes I even use scissors to trim the skirt a particular way so it s a little thinner, too.

"It extends just past the barb, so if a bass nips at the skirt, I m going to hook it."

Eaker remembers just such an incident at Georgia's Lake Lanier where he was missing as many as half the strikes he was getting. After he added the trailer hook and changed the skirt, he caught nine of the next 10 fish that hit.

"The best way to use a spinnerbait," explains Eaker, "is to throw it where other anglers don't, which is right into the thickest cover you can find. If you use a long-arm spinnerbait, it will usually come through brush without getting snagged, and the brush is where you're going to catch bass.

"When you add a trailer hook, you lose this weedlessness, but if bass are biting over submerged cover or in fairly open water, you can use a trailer hook very successfully."

Johnson and Evinrude dealers have a personal flotation device designed especially for fishermen. The arm holes are generously cut for ease of movement, and the side laces are adjustable to help keep you cool in any weather.

Protein good for diet

General Mills Inc.

Traditionally, a square meal is started with a hearty portion of meat. It was believed that lots of protein was needed for good health. Extra large quantities of protein were recommended for bodybuilders and diabetics as well as for those wanting to achieve stronger nails, more virility or a higher IQ.

Through extensive research, scientists have determined that we don't need as much protein as once thought. The average American diet contains more than adequate amounts of protein, says Mary Helen Gunkler, registered dietitian and staff nutritionist for Total cereal.

Certainly, protein is an essential nutrient and plays a key role in maintaining the body's tissues. However, once the body has used all the protein it needs for tissue maintenance, excess protein is either burned as fuel, if needed, or stored as fat, if not needed as fuel. Moreover, carbohydrates—not protein—are a more efficient source of fuel for the body.

The Dietary Guidelines for Americans recommend two to three servings of meat, poultry, fish, dry beans, eggs or nuts daily. A serving consists of 2 to 3 ounces of cooked, lean meat, poultry or fish, with a daily recommended total of 6 ounces. Alternative servings are 1 egg, 1/2 cup cooked dry beans or 2 tablespoons nuts or peanut butter.

A meal doesn't have to include one of these protein sources in order to supply protein. For example, you may be surprised at how much protein there is in a cereal breakfast. In fact, a breakfast with cereal and milk has as much protein as the same breakfast with an egg.

Gunkler says that it's easier than you think to fulfill your daily need for protein.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate Office

Q: I got a divorce last year. I'm working on my 1991 tax return and I'm not sure whether I can deduct the payments that I made last year to my ex-wife. She moved out in February, 1991 and I gave her monthly support immediately.

We signed a separation agreement in May and were divorced in November. Are all of the payments I made considered alimony? How are alimony payments treated for tax purposes?

A: Qualifying alimony payments are deductible by the person making the payments (the payor) and are included in the income of the person receiving the payments. Therefore, it is your advantage, from a tax perspective, if most if not all of the payments to your ex-wife qualify as alimony. However, certain requirements must be met to qualify payments as alimony.

Payments to a spouse made prior to being required by a separation agreement or court decree are not deductible as alimony. For payments made pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument to be deductible as alimony, each of the following requirements must be met:

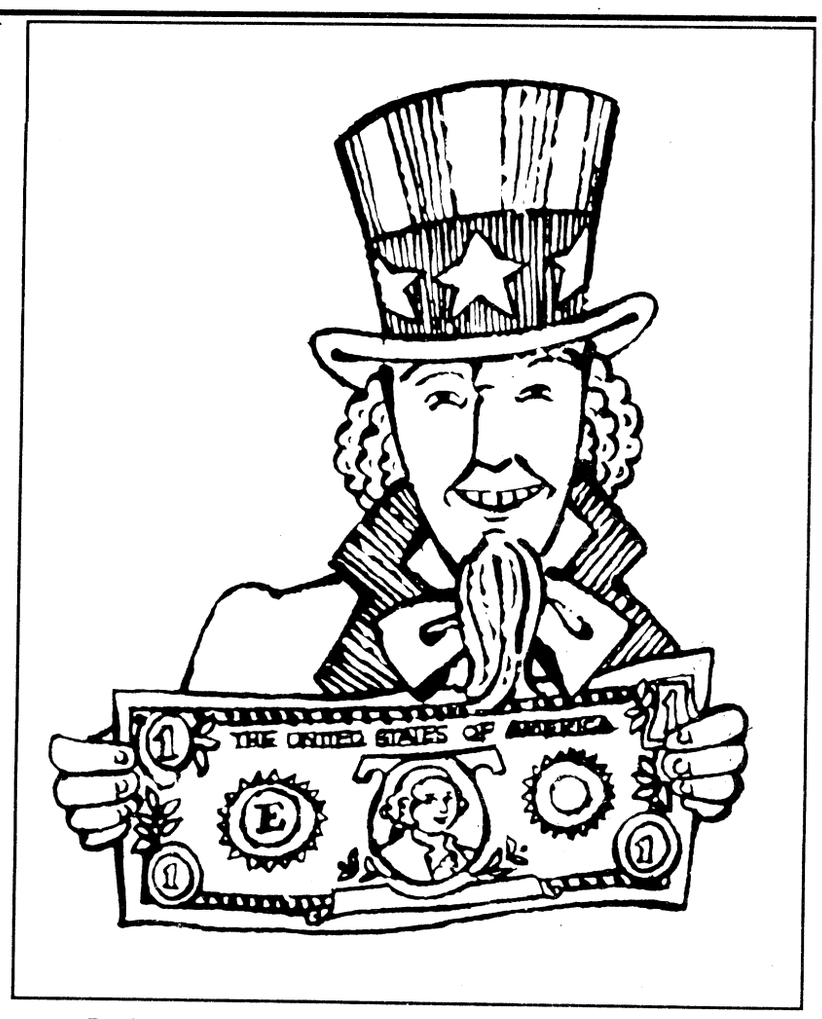
a. The payor and the recipient do not file a joint income tax return;

b. The payments are made according to the terms of an existing divorce or separation instrument that requires the payments as alimony or spousal support, and not as child support;

c.The payments are made in cash, or by check or money order;

d. The payments will terminate on the death of the recipient;

e. If the parties involved are divorced or legally separated, they must live in separate households when the payments are made; generally, the payments do not decrease by more than $15,000 from one calendar year to the next. If they do, certain recapture rules may apply. This requirement applies to divorce or support decrees and agreements executed after 1986. For agreements executed in 1985 and 1986, the rule generally is that if the payments exceed $10,000 in any calendar year, payments must be made in at least each if six calendar years and the payments could not decrease by more than $10,000 from one year to the next; and



g. Both the payor and the recipient do not make an election to avoid treating the payments as alimony.

If you have further questions regarding alimony and the tax consequences of a divorce settlement, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 or 545-3282 and request an appointment.

The Fort Benning Judge Advocate General Office is located at Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets.

Signs of gingivitis breed gum disease

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Gum disease is caused by bacteria that attach to the tooth and root surfaces. These bacteria organize to form a film, called plaque. Because plaque is sticky and is constantly forming, it accumulates on teeth and gums. If it is not removed daily, it produces toxins or poisons that irritate and inflame the gums.

Gingivitis

In the early stage of gum disease, known as gingivitis, toxins in plaque irritate the gums, making them red, tender, swollen and likely to bleed easily. Eventually the toxins destroy gum tissues, causing them to separate from the tooth and form pockets. The pockets then hold more bacteria and detach even further.

Periodontitis

In this stage, known as periodontitis, there can be irreversible damage because bone and soft tissue that support the teeth may be destroyed. The teeth may become loose, fall out, or need to be removed by a dentist.

Although gum disease occurs more frequently with advancing age, even children can be affected. For example, gingivitis is common during the teen years because of the hormonal changes that occur during puberty. Likewise, hormonal changes during pregnancy cause 30 to 60 percent of pregnant women to experience red, tender or bleeding gums. If gum disease has been present in either of these groups before hormonal changes, the symptoms may become even more severe or harder to control.

If you notice any of the following warning signs, contact your dentist immediately:

Warning signs

— gums that bleed during toothbrushing and flossing

— red, swollen or tender gums

— gums that have pulled away from the teeth

— persistent bad breath

— pus between the teeth and gums

— loose or separating teeth

— a change in the way your teeth fit together when you bite

— a change in the fit of partial dentures

Except in rare cases, gum disease can be prevented by daily brushing, cleaning between teeth with floss or interdental cleaners, and by regularly visiting your dentist for a professional cleaning.

Overseas students can find alumni

Overseas Brat Inc.

Every year Americans in your community who attended high school overseas look on with envy while their stateside counterparts eagerly plan their high school reunions. The dilemma overseas alumni face is how do you find classmates if your alma mater is several thousands of miles away where none of your peers live now and the federal government is in no position to release information about your friends?

Now there's hope for those associated with overseas schools. There's an organization that refers overseas alumni to their respective reunion committees.

Since its founding in 1986, Overseas Brats Inc., which is comprised of former dependents of U.S. military, government, and civilian personnel, has directed thousands of hopeful overseas alumni to their respective reunion committees and assisted dozens of overseas alumni organizations with their activities. Overseas Brats Inc. is a non-profit educational organization and a unique support network that publishes a magazine, sponsors seminars, and provides other services for its members.

One of the free services Overseas Brats Inc. provides all inquirers is information on more than 200 overseas alumni groups representing 156 high schools in 47 countries.

Dependables take to field in FTX

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The 324th Forward Support Battalion "Dependables" recently practiced what they do best — support.

During a week-long field training exercise, the battalion performed tasks in water purification, decontamination and ambulance exchange.

At a site along Randall Creek, a team pumps water out of the creek, through purification process and into holding tanks.

"This is the reverse osmosis water purification system, or ROWPU," said Lt. Col. Robert T. Dail, the battalion commander. "We can produce 600 gallons of drinkable water per hour and then haul it where it is needed."

In this instance, the unit is supporting the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry with 6,000 gallons on a Bradley firing range.

"Depending on the demand, we can run all day and night minus four hours for maintenance," said Sgt. Harold Hodges, a ROWPU operator in Company A.

"What's important is that our soldiers check the purification and then the medics double check," said Dail.

"We conduct a water quality analysis," said Sgt. 1st Class Michael Allen, the supply platoon sergeant. "It consists of a color, taste and odor test, a chlorine analysis, a check for solid particles and any suspected chemical agents."

As the soldiers began transferring the water for transport, the 3,000-gallon bag resembled a giant water balloon on the back of the truck.

At another location, the decontamination platoon, an element of the 91st Chemical Company of the 24th Infantry Division, ran a deliberate decontamination site.

"Our mission is to provide deliberate decontamination for the entire brigade," said 1st Lt. Ed Little, the decontamination platoon leader. "We run vehicles through six stations of decontamination while the soldiers conduct their own personal decontamination. We can probably decontamination an entire maneuver company in about three hours."

With all the soldiers wearing full chemical gear and masks, the stations are ready to receive the vehicles.

"The first station is a primary hot wash in which the hoses spray the vehicle down with water heated to about 200 degrees," he said.

"The next station is where the vehicle is scrubbed with DS-2, a chemical decontaminate," he continued. "Then it proceeds to a holding area for 30 minutes allowing the DS-2 to break down the contamination. After the 30 minutes, the vehicle is again washed with high pressure hoses before proceeding to the next station for decontamination of the interior of the vehicle.

"The last station uses detection papers and kits to check the vehicle for any remaining contaminates and if any are found, we start the whole process over again."

Ambulance exchange point personnel stress that soldiers depend on their leaders to ensure they are evacuated quickly if wounded. Company C establishes ambulance exchange points to ensure the process is timely.

"We always want to evacuate by air," said Dail. "The ambulance is a backup system, a defensive logistical procedure to shorten the lines of evacuation by ground."

"This is a halfway point from where patients are evacuated," said Staff Sgt. Ervin Walker, the ambulance platoon sergeant. "We have ambulances attached to the forward units, which initially bring patients to us, then we treat them and evacuate them as quickly as possible."

"As you can see, we really have a very diverse organization," added Dail.

Canadian Staff College students visit Fort Benning, tour Columbus

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Students from the Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College visited the U.S. Army Infantry Center Sunday through Wednesday.

Approximately 60 students visited the post. Fifty-four students are members of the Canadian Land Forces, two are U.S. Army officers, with one officer each from Kenya, Nepal, Malaysia and Jamaica. The students were accompanied by 18 staff members from the college.

The Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College, located in Kingston, Ontario, sends students to Fort Benning on a regular basis for familiarization with the U.S. Army.

The students receive orientations, briefings and demonstrations from the Infantry School regarding training techniques, weapons systems, staff procedures and a live-fire demonstration. They had the opportunity to tour the National Infantry Museum and observe an "Airborne 5000" and a Rangers in Action demonstration.

The students also toured various shopping malls and other sites in Columbus.

29th Inf. tests new NBC mask

Soldiers test mask's new drinking system to prevent dehydration

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, is testing a new nuclear, biological and chemical mask drinking system.

"The mask that is under experiment enables the soldiers to drink more freely," said Capt. George Dalton of the Test and Experimental Command, Fort Hood, Texas.

"It requires the soldiers to use a two-quart squeezable canteen," he said. "If the soldiers know that it is readily available and easy to use, they will drink more water, which is the goal. We have found that to many soldiers are dehydrating while in their chemical gear and we are trying to prevent that."

Company C's mission was to provide soldiers to test the new equipment for durability. The soldiers at times were exposed to as many as eight hours a day in their chemical gear.

According to Sgt. Paul Lewis, a dismounted squad leader with Company C, the system worked well and was easy to get to.

The soldiers practiced maneuver techniques, movement to contact, raids, ambushes and defensive missions. The soldiers were asked to perform these techniques to test how well the experimental mask drinking system would react to the ruggedness of the infantry.

Force to be briefed on Army reshaping

WASHINGTON — Soldiers and family members who have been waiting for comprehensive information about the drawdown do not have much longer to wait.

The entire force will be briefed soon on a "reshaping the Army" package. The package, "drawing down the Army — update 1," was developed by a Total Army Personnel Command team and blessed by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan. It will be presented by commanders down to company level.

Additionally, the Army will produce and distribute a pamphlet this spring dedicated solely to reshaping issues.

Both products will provide specific information on how the drawdown will affect soldiers in 1992, and on benefits available to those soldiers, Army civilians and family members who leave the Army.

Army chief lays out vision for Reservists

WASHINGTON— From the statues at Lexington Common and Antietam, to the monuments in Normandy and Washington, D.C., Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan wants Reservists to know that the value of the total force will never be forgotten.

In a speech to the Reserve Officers Association Jan. 21, Sullivan called the Army a "blend of active, Army Reserve, Army National Guard, and civilians," whose strength "stems from the fact that we are part of the people we are sworn to defend.."

Sullivan traveled to Greensburg, Pa., Tuesday to dedicate a monument to the soldiers of the 14th Quartermaster Detachment, U.S. Army Reserve, 13 of whom died in an Iraqi missile attack.

Sullivan said the soldiers of the 14th "demonstrated in blood that the Reserve components are full partners in protection and defending our ideals and way of life."

Army chow helps feed those in need

WASHINGTON —Rations that would have fed soldiers fighting a prolonged conflict in Southwest Asia have recently been used to feed countless needy people around the globe.

The rapid conclusion of Operation Desert Storm left a large supply of food originally intended for U.S. ground troops without a place to go in the Army. As a result, the Army formed a joint service coordination committee to redistribute the food.

So far, the rations have supported relief projects such as Operation Provide Comfort in Turkey and Iraq, Operation Sea Angel in Bangladesh, and Operation GTMO in Haiti.

All 50 states and Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and the Mariana Islands have also received some of the bulk food.

Additionally, Desert Storm rations are being distributed to 34 nations in Eastern Europe, Latin America, Africa and Asia.

Mortar class graduates

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Students in the Infantry Mortar Leadership Course graduated Feb. 14 at Infantry Hall.

The course, supported and taught by 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, is located at Eiler Hall.

The five-week-long class emphasized training in tactics, training management, survey techniques, nuclear biological and chemical training, M-16 plotting board training, mechanical training, fire direction center training, and a final field training exercise.

The guest speaker at the graduation was Lt. Col Randell Williams, chief of Combined Arms and Tactic Division, U.S. Army Infantry School.

"This is not a sought-after military occupational specialty; you are going to have to sell your system to your battalion commander," Williams told the graduates. "Be sure that your battalion commander thinks of his mortar platoon when he is making an operation order. Contribute to the fight and make it worthwhile to you and your soldiers."

The four honor graduates in the class were 1st Lt. Neil Sullivan, 2nd Lt. Michael Shackelford, 2nd Lt. Richard Gibbons and 2nd Lt. Paul Whitmer. Special guest, Brig. Gen. Stanley Genega, commander and division engineer South Atlantic Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers was there to see his son, 2nd Lt. Stanley Genega Jr., graduate.

All of the eight Fort Benning Schools celebrated Exceptional Children's Week all this week. Each of the schools sponsered a variety of activities to heighten awareness of and sensitivity to exceptional individuals in our schools and communities.

There are special education programs in each of the Fort Benning schools.

These programs serve approximately 450 students providing services that include programs for pre-school especial education, learning disabilities, behavior disorders, mentally handicapped, and speech-language disorders. Occupational and physical therapy services are also provided.

In one school, students wrote essays about famous people who have overcome a disability. In another school, children created posters with the theme "I'm special because—."

Some schools are having special activities for parents. Each Fort Benning School celebrated Exceptional Children's Week in its own unique way.

Donating items helps Thrift shop

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Items are donated to the Officers Wives Club Thrift Shop for a number of reasons, according to manager Maria Fuller.

Sometimes people are clearing post and don't want to bother with checking back to see if their items were sold. Others donate to the Thrift Shop because the profits go back into the community, and it gives them a good feeling. For others, it is a tax write-off.

Fort Benning's Thrift Shop, Furniture Barn and Craft Cabin not only sell things that have been donated, but also house items that are sold on consignment.

This means that people with military identification cards use these facilities to sell items of their own too.

This includes homemade crafts from afghans to needlework in the Craft Cabin, to furniture, strollers and lawn mowers in the Furniture Barn to clothing of all kinds in the Thrift Shop.

For consigners, the Thrift Shop takes 20 percent of the sale for their cut.

If something is not sold in the 60-day consignment period, the owner can take it out for a ten percent charge. When the owner doesn't come to get it, it becomes the property of the Thrift Shop, that automatically marks it at half price.

Consigners are allowed to have 10 items per building, per day, at each of the three places.

Either way, through donations or consignment fees, Thrift Shop profits go into the OWC Welfare Fund.

Last year 80 percent of that Welfare Fund was composed of Thrift Shop profits, and it distributed more than $20,000 to a variety of agencies on post.

These included Army Community Services, the National Infantry Museum, Santa's Castle, the First Steps Program, Fort Benning Schools Fine Arts Program and a variety of sports and youth programs.

Ash Wednesday begins preparation for Easter

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Ash Wednesday is a day of penitence to mark the beginning of Lent, the 40 days of preparation for the paschal feast of Easter. In Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, Lent begins 46 days before Easter. The name Lent comes from an old English word for spring.

For Christians this is a particular time for new beginnings in the faith, a time for returning to the Lord. On this day, the believer recalls mortality and waits upon the Lord for a renewing Spirit.

In churches across the world, as they have for more than 1,000 years, many Christians will participate next week in Ash Wednesday services to begin this spiritual pilgrimage toward Easter.

During this service, each worshipper will receive a sacramental sign of ashes. This is accomplished by the minister placing his forefinger in a bowl of ashes and making the sign of the cross on the forehead of the worshipper while stating, "Turn away from sin and be faithful to the gospel."

The scriptural symbolism of the ashes is drawn from the Old Testament. In Christian liturgy, the use of ashes symbolizes the mortality, the need to repent, the call to forgiveness, and a sign of the commitment to prepare for Easter.

The Fort Benning chaplains plan several special programs, observances and activities for the season of Lent.

Special Masses will be Wednesday at noon and 6 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel, at 7 p.m. at Lavoie Manor Chapel in Spanish and at noon at the Martin Army Community Hospital and the Kelley Hill chapels.

The Episcopal congregation will gather at 7 p.m. at the Regimental Chapel on the same day.

The hospital chapel will provide Protestant services March 11, 18 and 25 and April 1 and 8 as well as on Good Friday, April 17, from noon until 12:30 p.m.

Additionally, a traditional Lenten devotion on Fridays is the Stations of the Cross, 7 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel and 7 p.m. at Lavoie Manor Chapel in Spanish.

The Stations of the Cross, which can be traced to a Franciscan tradition, is a biblical meditation of the Lord's journey to Calvary.

By Benjamin Morrow
Infantry Training Center Chaplain

Editor's note: This the second part of a two-part series.

Morrow wrote the article to honor the memory of his mother.

In the South, the Negro washerwoman's efforts were largely supplemental, however, in the North she was often the sole wage earner.

Even when the black male was able-bodied, work was not available for him. Travelers saw these men sitting around unemployed, unable to get a job, and categorized them in stereotypical terms as lazy and shiftless.

This categorization was unfair, to say the least, yet it has been a major obstacle hindering the upward mobility of our noble climb.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson said in "A Century of Negro Migration," Negro men who had acquired skills in the South were barred from joining trade unions in the North. In many of the cities in the North, Negro men and children were fed and clothed with the meager earnings of hard-working black women.

Being removed from these austere and difficult times, too often we forget, that the struggle to get to where we are today, has not come easy but indeed we are standing on the strong shoulders of many nameless heroes and heroines who went before, and handed down to us a legacy of pride and hard work, which will not diminish with the passing of years.

The Negro washerwoman was always a vital part of the stability and a participator in its support at all levels of important functioning. If the family owned a home, you could rest assured that her income figured into its purchase. When husbands could not or showed indifference to the comfort of the home, it was she who made it her business to take up the slack.

While burdened with the responsibility to maintain the family, she was not too busy to participate in her church, never thinking herself too poor to contribute to its needs. But, to the contrary, she perceived herself as an integral supporter of the life of the church. It was the church that provided her the source of strength that prepared her for the difficult challenges of her day-to-day living.

Faced with the kind of insurmountable odds that might lead some to exclaim, as did the ancient Hebrew slave of long ago, sitting by the River of Babylon, bemoaning his pitiable state of oppression, declared, "But how can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" No matter how dark the night or difficult the way, no matter how high the mountains which needed to be traversed, faith had taught her that the Lord would make a way somehow.

Like the little boy in the classroom exclaimed when the teacher asked if anyone could tell her the secret to help the class understand why the lightening bug lights up, "It's because of the kind of stuff he's made of." In speaking of the tenacity of one so opposed by adverse conditions, she was nevertheless able to render an invaluable contribution some would dare to forget.

The Negro washerwoman was ambitious to see her children in possession of culture and education long since observed among whites. This education was usually financed through the wash tub. There can never be any reference to this contribution describing as dishonorable, but on the contrary, those unsung heroines deserve nothing short of our respect.

Those of us who have been fortunate enough to acquire a small amount of success, which has come as a result of our education, must never allow ourselves to forget that the boot straps we used to pull ourselves up by, were not our own, but those who went before us.

For the Negro washerwoman's contribution in maintaining the black family, a grateful people will have pleasant memories, and generations unborn may honor her in brass and stone.

I only hope today, that a contribution so great will not go unnoticed and that some informed and grateful recipient of so great a heritage, such as myself, will rise up and call her blessed.

DCG hosts breakfast for maintenance crew at hotel

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

In appreciation for the support the Fort Benning Billeting Maintenance staff has been providing recently, Deputy Post Commander Brig. Gen. Carl Ernst hosted a breakfast for the crew.

According to Mike Childs, Maintenance and Supply supervisor, Ernst cited the 10 workers for their efforts in being quick to respond to the needs of the visitors and students who occupy the Fort Benning Hotel.

This includes Infantry Officer Basic Course students, School of the Americas students, other transient troops attending short courses at Fort Benning, guest house visitors and those in the Distinguished Visitors Quarters.

Childs said that the crew is responsible for keeping the rooms in a repaired state and answering problems from plumbing to electrical to carpentry.

He added that because of the "in case of problems" cards that they leave in the rooms, sometimes people think it is one "Mike the Maintenance Man" who handles all of the problems that come up.

"In fact, just about every IOBC lieutenant has committed Mike's phone number to memory," said Lt. Col. John C. Cray, commander, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"In reality, it is these 10 men," said Childs.

Those honored at the breakfast included: Childs, Don Slovak, Robert Grear, Orian Henderson, William Burch, David McMillion, Nathaniel Brown, Dwight Johnson, Hank Den Haring, Clyde Lupus and A.C. Milstead.

Lucas brings Indiana Jones to series TV

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

When a younger Indiana Jones turned up in the prologue of the character's last movie adventure, it was a sign of things to come.

Though filmmaker George Lucas says 1989's "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" probably will remain the final feature in the series that began with "Raiders of the Lost Ark"

Sean Patrick Flanery as the teen-age Indiana Jones

(1981), the more-youthful Indy is about to find extended life of his own ... in a weekly television program designed to have a style of its own, with Harrison Ford nowhere in sight. Debuting Wednesday on ABC with a two-hour opener (which then will be repeated Saturday), "The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles" charts his history-related exploits both as a 10-year-old (played by Corey Carrier) and a 16-year-old (personified by Sean Patrick Flanery), as he travels extensively in the early 1900s with his lecture-giving professor father (Lloyd Owen, assuming Sean Connery's "Last Crusade" role). Still under the supervision of executive producer Lucas, the show begins with Indy encountering Lawrence of Arabia (portrayed by Joseph Bennett) and getting involved in a murder mystery in Egypt; however, it isn't solved until he's in his teens several years later, when he meets legendary bandit Pancho Villa (Mike Moroff) in New Mexico. Other figures incorporated into the initial episodes — each of which opens with an elderly Indy (George Hall) setting up the story that follows — include Sigmund Freud, Winston Churchill, Norman Rockwell and Theodore Roosevelt.

The international look of "Chronicles" is authentic, because Lucas and line producer Rick McCallum have been filming in locations ranging from London and Paris to Shanghai and Cairo. Similarly, noted directors from various countries have been recruited, such as Australia's Simon ("Lonesome Dove") Wincer and England's Nicolas ("Don't Look Now") Roeg and Terry Jones (of Monty Python's Flying Circus fame), and Academy Award-winner Vanessa Redgrave is among the other early guest stars. Nevertheless, the low-key Lucas maintains, "This is not that expensive. Everyone's loathe to have me give out numbers, though I'd love to give them out, because I'm very proud of what we've done. I think we've done an amazing job to produce a show that costs pretty much the average of hour dramas, and still have it look spectacular. I came up with this idea out of some other work I was doing, and I needed to find an appropriate medium if I wanted to actually make it become real. It's not the kind of idea that works in features because it's so big and sprawling, and I wanted to deal more with characters and relevant issues, so I naturally went to television."

"Young Indiana Jones" doesn't have remotely as much swashbuckling action as its motion-picture forerunners did, but Lucas stresses that his intention with the television edition is much different. "I've always been very interested in the way mankind operates," he explains, "and the best way to understand that is through history. I've been interested in historical figures as real people, and I think out of that, a lot of my work has sprung ... and this (series) in particular. In the beginning of television, there were a lot of documentaries on history and especially on World War II, and I think that influenced me. We have tried to be as historically accurate as possible (in the show). We do a great deal of research, and we have advisers come in and pore over the scripts, and tell us what is appropriate and what is not. I'm trying to stay true to the spirit of what was going on, and to the characters involved. Probably the most extreme thing we've done is to put Norman Rockwell in Paris when he was 14. He didn't go there at 14, but it was the allure of the idea, and his relationship to art sort of demanded that we put that perspective on it."

Lucas acknowledges that fans of Indy's big-screen escapades might anticipate more of the same bullwhip-cracking, rapid-fire excitement, but he cites the TV version as being "basical

Columbus Symphony plans Gershwin concert Saturday

Columbus Symphony

The Columbus Symphony will present the third in its 1991-92 Pops Series Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Three Arts Theatre, 1020 Talbotton Road. An all-George Gershwin program, the concert will be conducted by the CSO's music director and conductor George Del Gobbo. It is sponsored by American Family Life Assurance Corporation.

George Gershwin remains unquestionably the favorite American composer of audiences throughout the United States. A prolific composer of popular, Broadway and movie songs, he set the musical world afire with the composition of,"Rhapsody in Blue," a melding of jazz and classical music that remains to this day a favorite around the world.

Guest pianist for the concert is Mac Frampton, the nationally-known artist who has master's and doctoral degrees from the Cincinnati Conservatory and has delighted audiences worldwide with his dynamic performances, both solo and with his trio. As a young artist, he was heard improvising pop and jazz tunes by Van Cliburn who was so impressed that he urged Frampton to go professional, advice which the young artist took with great success.

Frampton has been guest soloist with the symphonies of St. Louis, Milwaukee, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Jacksonville and the Boston Pops, among others.

The pianist will perform the solo role in two pieces with the Columbus Symphony: "Rhapsody in Blue" and the lesser-known "I Got Rhythm Variations."

Also included in the concert will be "An American In Paris," "Girl Crazy Overture" and "Catfish Row," a medley of music from "Porgy and Bess."

Tickets are on sale now in the symphony office, lower level, Barnett Bank, 1234 First Ave. or by calling 323-5059. Reserved seats are $9, $12 and $15 for adults and $8 for students in special sections.

Columbus College presents chamber musicians Sunday

Columbus College

Internationally known chamber musicians, the Verdehr Trio, will present a concert at Columbus College on Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Davidson Student Center auditorium.

The trio — a clarinetist, violinist, and pianist — has performed in 13 European countries, Canada, South and Central America, Australia, Pakistan, and Asia as well as America. Three tours also have taken the group to China and India.

The group performs a repertoire of more than 50 works for the violin-clarinet-piano combination. Some of the works have been commissioned from contemporary international composers, and many are rediscovered 18th and 19th century pieces which have been reworked.

The concert will be followed by a clarinet master class at 5:30 p.m. which will be presented by the trio's clarinetist, Elsa Ludewig-Verdehr.

Sponsored by the children and grandchildren of Herman Spector, founder of Columbus' Sun-Ray Cleaners and an amateur clarinetist, admission is free to both the concert and master class.

For additional information, contact Columbus College's Schwob Department of Music at 568-2049.

Columbus Museum to host African-American artists

Columbus Museum

On March 15, an exhibition entitled, FOLK: The Art of Benny and George Andrews will open at the Columbus Museum. FOLK presents the work of two African-American artists, father and son, whose origins are deeply rooted in the heritage of the rural South.

The exhibition features recent figurative works by internationally recognized artist Benny Andrews and the folk art of his father George, who lives in Madison, Ga.

Highlighting the opening of the exhibition, Benny Andrews will conduct lectures and informal discussions. Additionally, local art instructor, Frances Spencer will be conducting an afternoon workshop inspired by the exhibition.

Thirty-eight paintings and drawings by Benny Andrews and more than 75 paintings and painted objects by George Andrews are included in the exhibition. The juxtaposition of their art, when examined in the context of its origins, clearly demonstrates the strength and vitality of the ongoing folk tradition that persists in the art of the father and continues to form the art of the professionally trained and highly accomplished son.

FOLK: The Art of Benny and George Andrews will be on view at the Columbus Museum until April 26.

The Columbus Museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road in Columbus.

Museum Hours:

Tuesday through Saturday ffrom 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Sunday, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Admission is free. Closed Mondays and legal holidays.

ly a coming-of-age story. It's much more an exploration of the younger boy growing up intellectually and learning about various ideas, and of the older boy confronting certain emotional situations that help him grow. It is not an action-adventure series, and that was a big issue when I first presented it to ABC. They were willing to take the chance, and go with something where people's perception of what it was going to be was considerably different from what it actually is. I'm hoping the show will find an audience apart from those who want just non-stop action."

Fort Benning's AER campaign gets under way

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning's Army Emergency Relief campaign kicked off Monday at 2 p.m. in Building 4's Classroom 4. Col. William R. Brownlee II, garrison commander, served as the featured speaker.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for AER marking its 50th year in offering emergency financial assistance in the form of no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, family members, retirees, widows and widowers and members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard.

According to Capt. Kevin Wainer, AER campaign officer, last year Fort Benning's AER campaign received $209,530. The goal for this year is to meet or exceed last year's amount, with the campaign to run through April 30.

Wainer noted that last year during Operation Desert Storm, AER provided $11.5 million in financial assistance Armywide, and $500,000 of that was distributed here at Fort Benning.

"When financial assistance is needed," Wainer said, "AER does not make moral judgments. It simply looks to see if there is a legitimate financial emergency. With proper documentation, a soldier can sometimes get a check before he leaves."

Alfonso Deane, AER financial counselor, said that there are certain recognized criteria for needing emergency financial assistance.

These include: funeral expenses, delinquent rent payments, deposits for rent (up to $950), enough to satisfy car payments, rent, etc. if funds have been lost or stolen (a copy of the police report must be provided), money to go for food beyond the two days of emergency assistance from the Food Locker and repair of essential personally owned vehicles so the soldier and spouse can get to work.

There are limits as to what amounts can be approved by whom, Deane said.

Amounts up to $1,000 can be approved by the local AER Office. Over $1,000 and up to $1,250 must be approved by Al Stewart, the director of Community Activities.

Amounts between $1,251 and $1,500 must be approved by the post garrison commander — more than $1,500 needs approval from the headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

All loans over $1,000 have to go through these channels.

Deane said that in 1991, more than $1 million was provided as assistance to a total of 2,411 people on Fort Benning.

Finance unit deploys

215th heads to Southwest Asia

By David Greer
36th Engineer Group

Family members and loved ones of the 215th Finance Support Unit said goodbye Feb. 27 at battalion headquarters to 12 soldiers leaving for Southwest Asia.

The soldiers will be deployed for six months in two different locations — Kuwait City and Dhaharan.

According to Lt. Col. George Oak Smith, commander of the 215th, which is part of the 36th Engineer Group, the unit's mission will be to provide total finance support for all active duty U.S. armed forces members who are not rotational (stationed there on a formal short tour).

Smith said he expects his soldiers to return in early October.

This will be the first visit to Southwest Asia for some of the 215th soldiers.

"It will be my first time over there," said Pfc. John Wimsatt. "I don't know what to really expect."

Some, like Sgt. 1st Class George Preston, who is getting his second visit to the region (he was deployed with his unit while stationed in Germany), expressed confidence in the 215th's ability to take care of family members.

"The preparations for this deployment are every bit as good as the ones that were made by my unit in Germany," he said. "I feel very confident that my family is in good hands."

Support for family members will be available through the family support group, according to the unit's first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Garry Reier. Anyone needing assistance should contact the unit first sergeant or the family support group leaders, he said.

Reier can be reached at 545-1583. The family support group leaders are Martha Reier who can be reached at 689-8193 and Nancy Smith who can be reached at 685-8544.

Custer Terrace to be renovated

$10 million project

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A $10 million project to renovate 292 sets of quarters out of the 893 in Custer Terrace is expected to begin around the first of September, according to Kenneth Hankins, Housing Division chief for the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

The project will include modernization of kitchens (new cabinets, sink, counter tops, dishwasher, range exhaust fan/hood with a fire suppression system), rewiring the electrical system, replacement of lighting fixtures, replacement of windows and the entrance door, installation of a front porch slab and a rear patio slab, adding a half or full bath, upgrading the existing full bath, providing additional parking and depending upon available funding, adding a carport and an overhead cover for the rear patio.

Also, because of the placement of the additional bath, some facilities will receive a new front facade.

All of this will be a major face-lift for Section 6 of Custer Terrace, a housing area for junior enlisted soldiers.

Hankins said it will modernize the units to today's standards.

James Young, Family Housing manager, noted that the Corps of Engineers designed the renovation, but the contract has not yet been awarded. It is expected to take about two years once it has begun.

Currently, as soldiers move out of the area, units are being held vacant so that work can begin as soon as a contractor is selected, Hankins said.

Included in Section 6 are all of the quarters along Craig Drive from Custer Road to Unit 471.

Involved in the renovation will be Kessler Court, Candle Court and North and South Valdez Courts, among others.

Women's accomplishments to be celebrated this month

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning will observe Women's History Month in March, and a March 24 luncheon sponsored by the post Federal Women's Program of the Equal Employment Opportunity Office will highlight the month's activities.

According to Committee Chairwoman Brenda Clark, contract specialist for the Directorate of Contracting, the event will be at the Officers' Club Supper Club at 11:30 a.m. The public is invited.

In keeping with this year's theme for the month, "Women's History: A Patchwork of Many Lives," the luncheon program will feature local Federal Women's Program Committee members portraying selected women who have made significant contributions to our country's development.

These women will include Patti Pfeiffer, Directorate of Civilian Personnel and chairwoman of the committee, as Sandra Day O'Connor; Carol Gilchrist, Adjutant General's Office, as Rosa Parks; Sgt. 1st Class Sylvia Mitchell, Military Police Activity, as Shirley Chisholm; Olga Espana, School of the Americas, as Antonio Novello; and Cindy Sepulveda, Martin Army Community Hospital, as Betty Ford.

In addition, a presentation will be made to Helen Pettingil, reporter-stenographer for the Staff Judge Advocate. The Civilian Personnel Office found her to be the female employee at Fort Benning with the most federal service. She began her continuous service in 1948, but worked on post some during World War II in 1943.

The observance of National Women's History as a national celebration began as a week during President Jimmy Carter's administration in 1977. Then in 1988, it was changed to a month-long observance commemorating women's contributions to American history.

Those interested in attending the luncheon should contact any FWP representative or Clark at 545-1119 or Winnie Torain at 545-3465. Tickets are $5.

Inversion causes thick smoke

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A temperature inversion following controlled burning in the Fort Benning area Monday caused some discomfort for residents near the post, according to the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

The controlled burning was completed by late Monday afternoon, however, some debris continued to smolder and cause smoke. This smoke was held close to the ground by the inversion and could not dissipate. This controlled burning was part of the post's ongoing scheduled burning of underbrush, which occurs on a three- to five-year cycle from Dec. 1 through March 15. During this period of 105 days, there are only about 20 days of good burning weather.

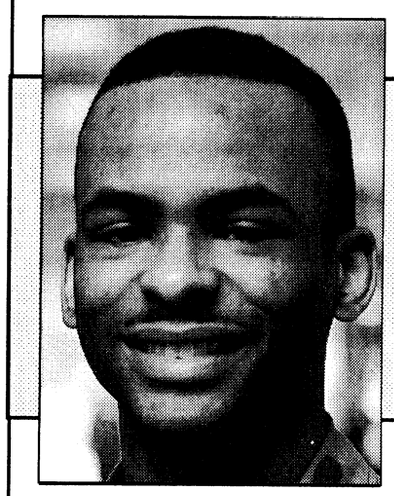
It serves several ecologically approved purposes, according to DEH Environmental Management Division officials. First, it eliminates underbrush, helping reduce the chance of larger fires in the summer. It also helps protect wildlife habitats and improves forest growth. Other beneficial effects of controlled burning include improved hiking, hunting and recreational opportunities, as well as better access for military training.

"Controlled burning is the most practical way to reduce fire hazards, which if not done this time of year pose worse fire hazards later in the year," said Maj. John J. Orosz Jr., Environmental Management Division chief.

The unusual inversion phenomenon is not expected to affect further controlled burning, which will continue to be announced in advance, according to the DEH office.

VARIOUS VOICES

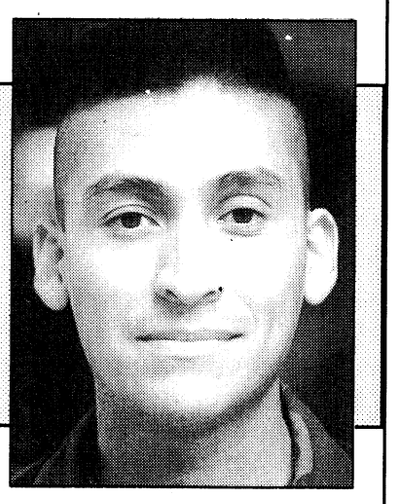
Do you think HIV-positive soldiers should be allowed to remain on active duty or should they be medically discharged?



Spc. Paul Rosemond, 598th Maintenance Company, 13th Supply and Service Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "I feel that HIV-positive soldiers should remain on active duty. If the soldier feels fit, fine. If not, they should be honorably discharged ."

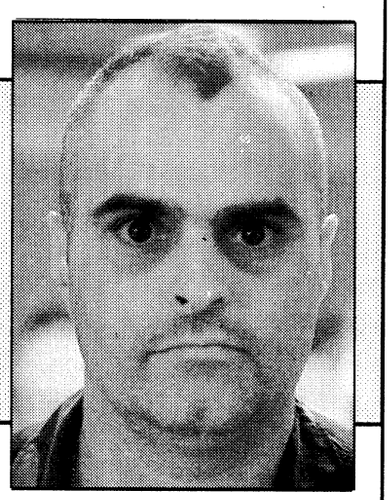
Lela Carlton, family member — "HIV-positive soldiers should be released. The nature of a soldier's work is too dangerous. The soldier could possibly infect someone else."

Spc. Martha L. Flores, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment— "I think HIV-positive soldiers should be allowed to serve to the extent of his or her physical capability as long as the soldier does not pose a risk to other people."



Sgt. Louis Maya, Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I don't think HIV-postive soldiers should serve in the military because they can't handle a hazardous environment. Over time, that soldier would affect the readiness of the unit as a whole."

Capt. Joel Manning, Infantry Officer Advanced Course 1-92 — "HIV-positive soldiers should be released from the military because they detract from overall unit readiness and could prove potentially harmful to other soldiers."



Staff Sgt. James Lawson, 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion— "I think HIV-positive soldiers should be allowed to stay on active duty. As a nurse, I've worked with HIV-positive soldiers. As long as soldiers act responsibly with their sexual behavior, it's possible for them to serve. It's a shame thata negative stigma has swept the country about the disease."

Drunk driving causes death

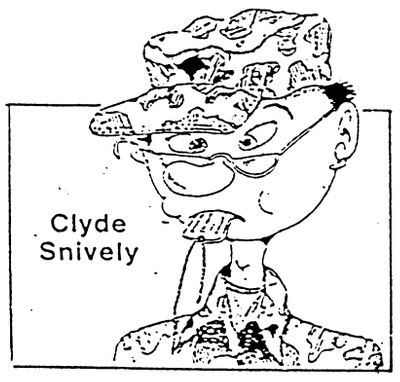
COMMENTARY



February was a bad month for soldiers driving cars.

Four of our comrades were killed in traffic accidents.

It didn't have to be that way.

Of the four killed, zero were wearing seatbelts.

Is it a macho thing? Do seat belts prevent us from leaning out the window to yell at our buddies?

Do the boom boxes disintergrate the buckles so they won't stay fastened like they do our brains?

I realize I'm pretty immortal. Just like you and you and you. Too bad those other four weren't.

But just as immortal as I know I am, I don't take chances with not wearing my seat belt.

I don't want to leave a grieving wife, kids, parents. I realize the $100,000 from my Servicemember's Group Life Insurance policy will help take care of them for a little while but how long?

Long enough to forget I ever was?

"Your daddy's never coming home again, kids, but don't worry. I've got some big bucks to buy you some new games and a wall-to-wall TV to help you forget him."

"No, he didn't leave because he didn't love us anymore. You see, that hard head of his proved to be softer than a telephone pole, so he's gone up to heaven now."

"Yes, I'm sure he's still watching us from up there, so you need to keep behaving."

Seat belts. Only one half of the equation.

The other half is we the drivers.

Just how safe are we?

Do we make sure our vehicles are in good operating shape? Brakes and lights work? Windshield clean?

Or do we try to prove our manliness by seeing how snockered we can get at the local watering hole before hopping into the car for the trip back home or to the barracks.

Do we sit on the bar stool as barracks buddy Joe Schmedlap falls to the floor as he dismounts his bar stool and heads to the parking lot and to the car, guffawing over the spectacle, wishing him luck on the way out.

Or, do we act as friends and either make him drive with one of us (of course, we have designated drivers whenever we go out to drink) or call him a cab?

Remember, I'm immortal, as are you, but what about him? He may not be, so we need to keep an eye on him.

While soldiers at Fort Benning were involved in four fatal accidents last month, the people in Columbus weren't doing much better.

So remember, even under the best of conditions, it ain't exactly safe to drive out there and when your brain's impeded with alcohol, it's doubly worse.

By the way, becoming a drunk walker instead of a drunk driver isn't going to save your life, either.

The only advantage in being a drunk walker (or bicyclist) is for the guy who may run into, over or through you.

He'll come out of it a lot better, and you'll just as dead.

So do yourself, your family and friends a favor — live a little longer by using seat belts when you drive, insisting your passengers use them and pass the keys to someone else when you've been drinking.

Safety required in workplace

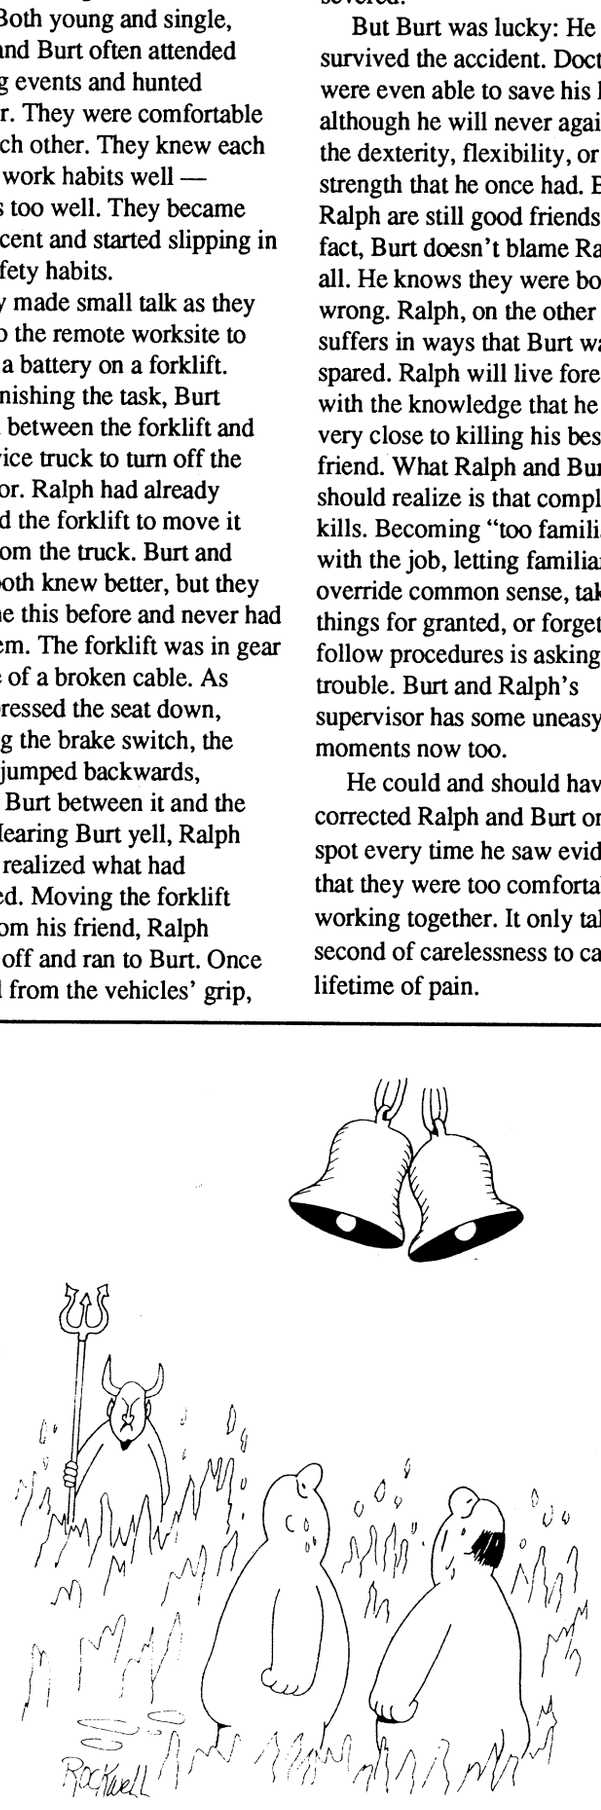
Infantry Branch Safety Office

Ralph and Burt, coworkers in the battery shop, became good friends as they worked together for several years. Both young and single, Ralph and Burt often attended sporting events and hunted together. They were comfortable with each other. They knew each other's work habits well — perhaps too well. They became complacent and started slipping in their safety habits.

They made small talk as they drove to the remote worksite to change a battery on a forklift. After finishing the task, Burt stepped between the forklift and the service truck to turn off the generator. Ralph had already mounted the forklift to move it away from the truck. Burt and Ralph both knew better, but they had done this before and never had a problem. The forklift was in gear because of a broken cable. As Ralph pressed the seat down, releasing the brake switch, the forklift jumped backwards, pinning Burt between it and the truck. Hearing Burt yell, Ralph quickly realized what had happened. Moving the forklift away from his friend, Ralph jumped off and ran to Burt. Once released from the vehicles' grip, Burt slumped to the ground and was immediately surrounded by a pool of blood. As Ralph approached his friend, he saw that Burt's right leg was almost severed.

But Burt was lucky: He survived the accident. Doctors were even able to save his leg, although he will never again have the dexterity, flexibility, or strength that he once had. Burt and Ralph are still good friends. In fact, Burt doesn't blame Ralph at all. He knows they were both wrong. Ralph, on the other hand, suffers in ways that Burt was spared. Ralph will live forever with the knowledge that he came very close to killing his best friend. What Ralph and Burt both should realize is that complacency kills. Becoming "too familiar" with the job, letting familiarity override common sense, taking things for granted, or forgetting to follow procedures is asking for trouble. Burt and Ralph's supervisor has some uneasy moments now too.

He could and should have corrected Ralph and Burt on the spot every time he saw evidence that they were too comfortable working together. It only takes one second of carelessness to cause a lifetime of pain.



"I always thought it was just an expression."

CG kicks off campaign

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the founding of Army Emergency Relief. Since 1942, AER has provided a source of support for soldiers and their families at Fort Benning.

The AER assisted 2,524 Fort Benning active duty and retired military families last year, totaling $1,278,075. The AER was a major factor in providing necessary monetary relief to families of soldiers deployed on Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Fort Benning began its AER campaign Monday and it will continue until April 30. It has two main purposes — first, to replenish the fund for grants, scholarships, and unpaid loans for 1992, and second, to increase awareness of this immediate source of financial support.

Last year we contributed $209,530. We need to do as well or better for our soldiers and their families this year.

I fully support the AER mission and echo Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon Sullivan's statement: "As our 1992 fund campaign for AER begins, I encourage your voluntary and generous contributions so that in its second half-century AER can continue helping the Army care for its own."

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White
Fort Benning commander

Soldiers allowed to use PRIMUS only after normal duty hours

The intended use of the Primary Care for the Uniformed Services, also known as PRIMUS, Clinic is to take the load off the emergency room of Martin Army Community Hospital during non-duty hours and to assist family members. Frequently, the PRIMUS Clinic has been misused to include a 2 1/2 ton truck with soldiers being brought in for a sick call.

Active duty personnel should not be using the PRIMUS Clinic during normal duty hours. The active duty soldiers have a troop medical clinic for medical support during duty hours and should utilize this service.

Continued misuse of the PRIMUS Clinic increases the cost of health care and minimizes the attention needed for valid medical cases using the PRIMUS Clinic.

Be aware of tax credits

American Forces Information Service

Take a few minutes to read the instructions that come with your federal income tax forms for 1991. Several changes this year may affect your return.

The personal exemption has increased to $2,150 for the taxpayer, spouse and each dependent. If an individual's adjusted gross income is more than $75,000, the deductible exemption might be less. Specific information is available in the tax booklet.

Any dependent 1 year old or older who is claimed on the Form 1040 or 1040A must have a Social Security number listed. If the child or dependent does not have a number, an application should be requested from the local Social Security office.

If an individual's adjusted gross income is more than $100,000 — $50,000 if married but filing separately — itemized deductions might be reduced. Personal interest is no longer deductible; this includes interest paid on credit card balances and typical car loans.

The standard deduction has increased this year. Depending on the taxpayer's filing status, it may pay to take the standard deduction rather than itemize. The standard deduction, which is determined by the filing status, is a flat amount subtracted from the adjusted gross income when a person does not itemize.

There are several changes with the earned income credit for 1991. Maximum income allowable for the credit is up to $21,250. If a family had a baby in 1991 and otherwise qualifies for the earned income credit, an extra credit payment is possible. However, they should compare this credit with the dependent-care credit to determine which one offers the better tax deal. Only one of the two credits can be taken if a newborn is the only child involved.

Military members who served in the Persian Gulf conflict should get a copy of IRS Publication 945, Tax Information for Those Affected by Operation Desert Storm. This free brochure, available by calling toll free ((800) 829-3676, covers such topics as combat pay extra allowances and deductions.

Errors on forms could delay return

Sending correct information on all tax forms saves time on return

American Forces Information Service

Take a few minutes to check the federal income tax return for errors before mailing it. It takes about eight weeks for a refund check to be issued, said Internal Revenue Service officials, and even a simple mistake can add at least another two weeks.

According to IRS officials, the most common mistakes made on federal returns for 1990 income were:

- Incorrect Social Security number;
- Wrong entries for estimated tax payments;
- Name incorrectly entered;
- Standard deduction not claimed;
- Wrong tax used or total tax not entered;
- Status boxes incorrectly marked;
- Duplicate return filed when not required, and
- Math errors in computing taxes.

IRS officials stress spending a little extra time when filling out the tax form and double-checking the work will save time in the long run.

Before mailing the completed tax forms, the IRS recommends checking:

- Name and Social Security number on each schedule;
- Name and Social Security number of each dependent on the return;
- Deductions;
- Tax from the tax tables;
- Earned income credit, if qualified;
- Entries on proper lines;
- Form W-2, schedules and other forms attached to the tax return; and
- Form signed and dated.

If everything is correct, make a copy of the tax return and its supporting forms for your files.

A final note before dropping the envelope in the mailbox: Check the postage. Attachments to the basic tax form could require additional postage.

Marital status can affect tax claims

American Forces Information Service

Whether you are married, single, divorced or separated can affect your filing status, as well as the number of dependents and exemptions you can claim on your federal tax return.

IRS officials said things to keep in mind include:

- You can file as a single person if the divorce or legal separation became final before the end of the tax year.
- If the divorce or separation is not final at the end of the year, you may file a joint return or as married filing separately.
- If you are unmarried or legally separated at the end of the tax year, you may qualify as a head of household.
- If you are married but have lived apart for the last six months of the year and meet other criteria, you may also qualify as a head of household.
- You can claim an exemption for your spouse if you file a joint return or as married filing separately provided your spouse had no income and was not listed as a dependent on another person's tax return.
- Only one divorced or separated parent can claim an exemption for a child; the exemption generally goes to the parent contributing the majority of support, and this is presumed to be the custodial parent, barring proof or an agreement to the contrary.
- Legal fees and court costs for a divorce are not deductible.
- Alimony or maintenance payments are tax-deductible for the individual who pays and count as income for the one who receives them.
- Child-support payments are neither deductible by the person who pays nor income to the recipient. For specific details on these and related subjects, see IRS Publication 504, Tax Information for Divorced or Separated Individuals.

Allow 8 weeks for refund

American Forces Information Service

Allow eight weeks from the time you mail your 1991 federal tax return before checking on your refund status, the Internal Revenue Service says.

If you have not received a refund by the end of eight weeks and you are wondering where it is, call the IRS Tele-Tax service toll free at (800) 829-4477. Information needed to check on the status includes your Social Security number, filing status and the amount of expected refund.

The service is in operation Monday through Friday during local business hours if you call from a rotary telephone and from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. if using a push-button telephone. IRS officials say the best time to call is Wednesday mornings. Tax-refund information is updated once a week.

Tax office now open for business

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Tax Office, located in building 5, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, is open and assistance is available for soldiers, family members and retirees. Hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Tax return preparation and electronic filing are provided free of charge on a walk-in basis. Individuals who use the center may have a long wait depending on the number of people there.

"We encourage soldiers to go to unit tax advisers first," said Capt. Evelyn Britt of the Legal Assistance Office.

However, taxpayers who plan to use the Tax Office should bring with them all the appropriate paperwork, she said.

Some of the items taxpayers should bring with them are:

- W-2 forms from all employers
- Form 1099 from banks showing interest earned
- Social Security numbers for every family member over 1 year old, including a non-working spouse
- Employer identification number or Social Security number and address of child-care provider (if applicable)
- Detailed itemized deductions (if applicable)
- Mortgage interest statement (if applicable)
- Spouse, if filing jointly
- Power of attorney, if filing for absent soldier
- A copy of last year's federal income tax return, if available

The Tax Office also has the capability to file returns electronically. Instead of mailing in a return, the tax office can send it to the IRS by means of a computer. The computer automatically checks the figures one more time before the return is filed. Electronic filing can speed up a return by as much as three weeks, according to Michael Lane, legal assistance attorney.

Lane said the Tax Office will electronically file returns prepared at the center, by unit tax officers, by a paid tax preparer or by individuals at home.

To file electronically, the individual must bring to the Tax Office a completed tax form and the supporting documents.

A U.S. Individual income Tax Declaration for Electronic Filing Form 8453 is also required. If filing a joint return, both individuals must sign the form, said Lane. This can be handled by picking up the 8453 in advance or by both parties coming to the Tax Office.

If an individual has direct deposit and wants his income tax return deposited directly into his account, he must bring proof of the account number, said Lane. This can be in the form of check, deposit slip, bank statement or a Leave and Earnings Statement. The wallet size cards with the account number are not acceptable, said Lane.

Once the electronic return has been accepted by the IRS, the refund should arrive in 10 to 20 days, said Lane.

If an individual would like a computer printout of his electronic return, he must wait at least one week after filing before returning to the Tax Office.

The phone number for the Tax Office is 545-1506.

IRS offers quick tips for filing returns

American Forces Information Service

Electronic filing

A quick way to file your tax return and receive your refund is with electronic tax filing. According to Internal Revenue Service officials, filing electronically can speed up a refund by as much as three weeks.

The forms must be transmitted to the IRS by an individual recognized by the IRS as an electronic filer. Options include preparing the forms and taking them to the filer and having a tax professional complete the paperwork and send it.

More than 7.5 million people filed their 1990 income taxes electronically.

Casualty losses

People who had property damaged or lost in an area declared eligible for federal disaster assistance by the president can choose when to claim the loss on their federal income tax return. Tax officials said a person can either deduct the loss for the year it actually occurred or file an amended return for the year preceding the disaster.

Information is available in several Internal Revenue Service publications, including Publication 547, Non-Business Disasters, Casualties and Thefts. For a copy of this booklet and others, call toll free (800) 829-3676.

File copies

Copies of previous years' federal income tax returns are available at a cost of $4.25 each. To request a copy of an earlier return, fill out Internal Revenue Service Form 4506, "Request for Copy of Tax Form," and mail it to the service center where the return was filed. Call toll free (800) 829-3676 for a copy of the form.

Social Security number

All dependents claimed on the income tax form who are 1 year old or older by the end of 1991 must have a Social Security number listed on the tax return. If the person doesn't have a Social Security number, apply for one at the nearest Social Security Administration Office.

If you handle the banking or other financial transactions for a dependent child or adult, be sure that individual's Social Security number appears first on the account. Otherwise, the interest or other income will be reported to the Internal Revenue Service as yours.

Automatic extension

Service members stationed outside the United States or Puerto Rico automatically qualify for a two-month extension to file their federal income taxes. Include a note with the tax return when you do file to explain how you qualified for the extension.

The Internal Revenue Service said if you need more time than the two months, file an IRS Form 4868, "Request for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return," by April 15. This provides a four-month extension. IRS officials stressed that any taxes owed should be paid with the request for the four-month extension, because interest on unpaid taxes accumulates from April 15. The additional time, said officials, is to gather the necessary tax papers.

Passports and taxes

If you have a passport, there is a good chance that the Internal Revenue Service has checked the application against its tax records. The IRS uses the application, with the Social Security number, to make sure that your tax records are current. IRS officials say there is a $500 fine for failure to list your Social Security number on the passport application.

Change of address

If you moved after filing your federal income tax, the Internal Revenue Service suggests that you provide your new address. Send your full name, Social Security number, old and new addresses and your signature to the IRS center where you filed your tax return. If you filed jointly, the same information, including signature, is also required from your spouse. Or use IRS Form 8822, "Change of Address," to let the IRS know you have moved.

For a copy of the form, call toll free (800) 829-3676.

Help available here Saturday

Free assistance with tax form preparation by Legal Assistance Office personnel will be available at the Post Exchange at the main mall on Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Be sure to bring all of your paperwork and the tax forms that you have received.

EIC offers tax break for families

American Forces Information Service

Low-income families with children may qualify for the earned income credit when filing their federal income tax return.

Internal Revenue Service officials said recent changes make the credit even better than in previous years. The credit is for working parents whose combined income is less than $21,250 and who have a child who lived with them for at least six months in 1991.

The earned income credit reduces the federal taxes owed, said IRS officials.

Taking into account certain variables and the income earned, the basic credit for a child may be as much as $1,192. New rules provide a separate credit for a child born anytime in 1991 and a supplemental credit of up to $428 if health insurance is paid for at least one qualifying child.

Tax rules define a qualifying child as the individual's son or daughter, stepchild, grandchild or adopted child. A foster child may qualify, but must have lived with the taxpayer for the entire year. A child born anytime in 1991 qualifies the parents if the remaining requirements are met.

To claim the earned income credit, certain prerequisites must be met. These include:

- Earned income of less than $21,250;
- Qualifying child;
- File for a 12-month period; and
- Live in the United States.

The Department of Defense continues to try to get the residency restriction lifted for military members and their families who live overseas and who would otherwise qualify for the earned income credit.

Parents who have only one child born in 1991 must choose between claiming the extra earned income credit. payment or the child- and dependent-care credit. They may claim both credits if they have other qualifying children. To claim either credit, a person must file using a Form 1040A or 1040 and attach the appropriate schedule, said IRS officials.

IRS Publication 596, Earned Income Credit, and Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expenses, explain how to deduct earned income credit and child-care expenses. Copies of the publications are available through the IRS at no charge. Call toll free 1-800-829-3676 or write to:

Children create deductions

American Forces Information Service

You may be able to claim a tax credit if you pay someone to take care of your child or disabled dependent or spouse.

Internal Revenue Service officials said the credit can be worth as much as $720 for one dependent to $1,440 for two or more.

The dependent-care credit is applied against any federal income tax, reducing the taxes owed, said IRS officials. However, if the credit is more than what is owed, the extra is not refunded.

To qualify for the dependent-care credit, you must meet certain requirements. These include:

- Dependent must be a child 13 years old or younger, or a disabled spouse or other qualifying individual.
- You and your spouse (if married) must be working or looking for work.

The credit must be claimed on either Form 1040 with Form 2441, "Child and Dependent Care Expenses," attached or 1040A with Schedule 2 attached. If married, you must file a joint tax return to claim the credit.

The name, address and taxpayer identification number (Social Security or business identification number) of the care provider must be also be listed. IRS officials said if you have not been able to obtain this information, keep track of your efforts.

IRS Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expenses, explains requirements, how to take the credit and more. For copies of the publication and forms, call toll free 1-800-829-3676.

Booklets provide help

Military pay taxes mind more than pocketbook

American Forces Information Service

Along with base pay, military members receive a number of different pays and allowances. Service members may be confused about what is taxable and what is not.

Making it even more confusing this year are the pays and allowances that more than 500,000 service members received for duty in the Persian Gulf. Internal Revenue Service officials said those members' base pay was taxable until Operation Desert Storm started and the gulf region was designated a combat zone.

Base pay for enlisted personnel and warrant officers became tax-free, as did the first $500 a month for officers. This special tax break for gulf region duty was still in force in mid-December, a DoD tax expert said.

Generally, the following military income is taxable:

- Active duty pay;
- Reserve training pay;
- Special pay for foreign or hazardous duty;
- Lump-sum payments upon separation or release to inactive duty;
- Re-enlistment bonuses;
- Military retirement pay based on length of service or age;
- Service academy pay; and
- Amounts received by retired personnel serving as instructors in Junior ROTC programs.

IRS officials say the following items generally are not taxable:

- Family separation pay;
- Basic quarters allowance;
- Variable housing allowance;
- Other quarters cost-of-living allowances;
- Forfeited pay, but not fines;
- Uniform allowance;
- Moving and storage expenses provided in kind, or reimbursements for actual expenses for permanent-change-of-station moves;
- Certain disability retirement pensions;
- Benefits under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance; and
- Department of Veterans Affairs benefits

Two free IRS booklets provide step-by-step instructions to do military taxes and answer most questions that might arise. TAX Q & A

By Jane M. Winand
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I came on active duty in November and I only made about $1,200 in 1991. Do I have to file an income tax return?

A: Your filing requirement depends on your gross income, your filing status and your age. Generally, if you are a U.S. citizen or resident, you must file a tax return if your gross income for the year is at least as much as the amount shown for your filing status and age in the Filing Requirements Chart for Most Taxpayers.

If your parent or someone else can claim you as a dependent, you should not use this chart.

Even if you are not required to file, there are certain situations in which it is still advisable to do so. You should file a federal income tax return if you had income tax withheld from your pay.You may also qualify for earned income credit, which is a special credit for lower-income workers who have a child or children living with them.

If you have further questions, call the Fort Benning Tax Office at 545-1506.

The Fort Benning Tax Office is located in Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets.

1991 FILING REQUIREMENTS CHART FOR MOST TAXPAYERS

To use this chart, first find your marital status at the end of 1991. Then, read across to find your filing status and age at the end of 1991. (Being blind does not change your filing requirement.)
You must file a return if your gross income was at least the amount shown in the last column.

MARITAL STATUS	FILING STATUS	AGE*	GROSS INCOME
Single (including divorced and legally separated)	Single	under 65 65 or older	$5,550 $6,400
	Head of household	under 65 65 or older	$7,150 $8,000
Married with a child and living apart from your spouse during the last 6 months of 1991	Head of household	under 65 65 or older	$7,150 $8,000

	Qualifying widow(er) with dependent child	under 65 65 or older	$7,850 $8,500

Tax forms

Right ones save

American Forces Information Service

Using the correct Form 1040 to file your federal income taxes can save time and energy and reduce the risk of a mistake. In some cases, say Internal Revenue Service officials, using the right form may even reduce your tax bill.

IRS color-coded the forms this year.

Just because you filed a certain form last year does not mean it is the right one this time around, said officials. Child-care expenses, marriage, divorce, pay raises, job losses and interest payments are just a few items that could change the form you need to file.

Use the green Form 1040EZ only if all the following apply:

- Filing status is single, under 65 and not blind;
- Claiming only one exemption;
- Taxable income is less than $50,000 and is only from wages, salaries, tips, taxable scholarships and fellowship grants;
- Interest earnings are less than $400; and
- Deductions are not itemized.

Use the pink 1040A short form for:

- Any filing status;
- Claiming one or more exemptions;
- Claiming earned income credit;
- Claiming child- or dependent-care expenses;
- Claiming blind or over age 64 exemption;
- Claiming contributions to an individual retirement account;
- Interest earnings more than $400;
- Taxable income is less than $50,000 and is only from wages, salaries, tips, taxable scholarships and fellowships, annuities, IRAs, pensions, dividends, Social Security and unemployment compensation; and
- Deductions are not itemized.

The blue 1040 long form is for:

- Any situation not covered by the 1040EZ or 1040A forms
- Taxable income is $50,000 or more or from certain types of income;
- Deductions are itemized; and
- Claim certain tax credits or adjustments to income.

Taxes can add stress

IRS says correct forms make filing easier

American Forces Information Service

One of the most frustrating things Americans have to look forward to every year is filing their federal income tax forms.

Internal Revenue Service officials say one way to simplify it is to make sure you have all the forms you need when you do your taxes. - Form 2119, "Sale of Your Home"
- Form 2441, "Child and Dependent Care Expenses"
- Form 2848, "Power of Attorney and Declaration of Representative"

- Form W-10, "Dependent Care Provider's Information and Certification"

Home upkeep affects taxes

American Forces Information Service

One of the great American dreams is to own your own home. Expenses associated with the upkeep of the house may affect your federal income taxes, say Internal Revenue Service officials.

Keep accurate records on home-improvement costs, repair costs, mortgage interest, selling costs and closing costs. These are just a few expenses the IRS checks on tax returns.

Be careful in determining which expenses you use when filing federal income taxes. For example, normal upkeep costs are not deductible. Remodeling costs can be added to the basis of the house. According to IRS officials, the basis for tax purposes is generally the qualifying cost. This may be the purchase price, the construction cost of the home or the fair market value, if you inherited.

Before taking a deduction or adding to the basis, make sure you meet all restrictions and requirements, said IRS officials.

Deductible homeowner expenses include:

- Limited theft and casualty losses with insurance reimbursements reducing the amount accepted.
- Closing costs, such as surveys, transfer taxes and attorneys' fees, can be added to the home's basis, while property taxes paid at the settlement can be deducted.
- Qualifying mortgage interest and assessed property tax may be an itemized deduction on Schedule A.

Tax officials said if you sell your home, it is possible to postpone paying taxes on the gain. Certain criteria have to be met to postpone, including buying a new home up to two years before or two years after the sale. Also, the purchase price of the new home must be equal to or more than the adjusted sales price of the old one. If you are 55 or older when you sell the home and you do not buy a new one, it may be possible to exclude all or part of the gain.

IRS free tax brochures that deal with homeowning taxes include:

- Publication 3, Tax Information for Military Personnel;
- Publication 523, Tax Information on Selling Your Home;
- Publication 530, Tax Information for Homeowners (Including Owners of Condominiums and Cooperative Apartments);
- Publication 551, Basis of Assets
- Publication 936, Home Mortgage Interest Deduction; and
- Form 2119, Sale of Your Home

Stopping at the post Burger King in a government vehicle is not allowed.

Transportation officials warn against misuse of government vehicles

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Driving through Burger King or making a quick stop at the bank while driving a government vehicle may seem harmless, but regulations strictly forbid the use of government vehicles for personal business, said Transportation officer Korin Mason.

"AR 58-1 clearly states that government vehicles, specifically Motorm Pool Vehicles, or TMPs, will be used for official purposes only," Mason said.

According to Mason, during one month alone, more than 170 violations were reported on post.

The most common violations include stopping at post banks, stores, recreational facilities, the golf course and personal residences while using a government vehicle.

Vehicles have been sighted at off post facilities as well, Mason said, which are also off limits.

Transportation Motor Pool officer Larry Strickland said that violators will be reported to their chains of command.

"The regulation provides appropriate penalties and individuals who continue to violate the regulation will be subject to stiffer penalties," said Strickland.

Mason said that Transportation personnel regularly watch for violators. She emphasized that commanders and supervisors need to ensure their personnel understand the regulation.

"We see too many violations on post. The vehicles belong to the Army and are not to be used for personal business."

TRADOC presents awards

Fort Benning directorates receive Communities of Excellence recognition

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel and the Directorate of Logistics received the Training and Doctrine Command's Communities of Excellence awards during a luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Feb. 25.

The Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va., has completed its 1991 "Communities of Excellence" evaluations.

The Communities of Excellence program evaluates the quality of services and functions provided by the various post facilities.

This is accomplished by surveying customer and employee interaction and satisfaction and facility design. Fort Benning was evaluated in August.

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel received an award in the category of large installations for providing the best civilian personnel administrative and managerial services within the command.

The Directorates of Logistics received two awards.

The Maintenance Division, Directorate of Logistics, received the award for the best maintenance facility within TRADOC. Despite being housed in World War II facilities, the division initiated procedures that promoted efficiency while servicing customers.

Employee attitudes demonstrated a high degree of care and concern for the soldier customer, according to TRADOC raters.

The Transportation Division, Directorate of Logistics, received the award for the best transportation division within TRADOC.

That division was recognized for a high degree of customer satisfaction, quality of service and attention to customer convenience.

Several functions had been relocated from Harmony Church to Sand Hill in an effort to provide more efficient and timely service.

Training and Doctrine Command Army Communities of Excellence officials said that the evaluations are designed to recognize and award those who demonstrate a high degree of commitment to excellence.

Army Communities of Excellence, they said, is a people-oriented program that seeks excellence in services and facilities.

Parking rules clarified

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

Illegal parking around Infantry Hall, building 4 has become a problem according to Lt. Col. Jimmy Duhaime, the bulding coordinator. Safety is the biggest concern because of the congestion caused by illegally parked vehicles, he said.

"However, parking at Infantry Hall has been limited, due to the construction of Building 6," said Duhaime. "Now that the building is finished, parking will soon get back to normal."

All military and civilian personnel employed at Building 4 and visitors to the building need to adhere to proper parking procedures whenever they are at the building, said Staff Sgt. Rock Davis, operations non-commissioned officer for Building 4.

•Vehicles illegally parked in designated spaces should be reported to Davis at 545-2218, or Room 111 in Infantry Hall.

•No parking is allowed in the fire lanes, since it blocks the flow of two-way traffic around the building.

•No parking is allowed on the grass, the curbs of the east and west parking lots or along the street in the front, back or sides of the building.

•Parking at the rear of Infantry Hall is reserved for post engineer vehicles, service vehicles and designated handicapped drivers.

•Creating parking spaces is not allowed. Unless a car is parked in a proper parking space, the vehicle is in violation of parking regulations.

Persons in violation of these parking regulations will be reported to the military police for issuance of a citation for illegal parking.

Eye on fashion

EEO sponsors show

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

The Black Employment Program Committee of the post's Equal Employment Opportunity Office sponsored a fashion show at the Officers' Club Feb. 28.

The event was to celebrate Black History Month, said Patricia Burns, committee chairwoman and one of the fashion show participants.

Fashions from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, available at the Post Exchange at the main mall, were shown, with outfits ranging from office attire to sporty to formal wear for men and women.

The highlight of the event was the showing of four authentic Nigerian designed outfits.

The outfits were supplied for the show by Dennis Osah, a Nigerian who has set up shop in Columbus selling imported African designs. The shop is African Art Window and is at 404 8th Street.

"The African fashions represented everything from casual wear to semi-formal and formal outfits," said Osah.

"I think that it is interesting that Americans are taking a wide interest in African and other ethnic cultures lately," said Osah. "Our heritage should be expressed more openly, though. During Black History Month, we should do more than talk about our culture. We should express it in our dress as well."

Shari Garrett, a secretary at the Officers' Club and one of the organizers of the event, was pleased with the outcome of the show. "The turnout was great," she said.

According to Elva Shoemaker, Black Employment Program manager for the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, the show was a success because of the interaction of all of Fort Benning — managers, employees, contributors to and guests of the fashion show.

"We are very appreciative of the directors allowing their employees the chance to participate in this event," said Shoemaker. "The cooperation of the directors was wonderful.

"We'd also like to thank AAFES for contributing the outfits that were displayed and for allowing some of their employees to participate as models," she continued. "ll of the participants did a super job in the show. Most importantly, we'd like to thank the guests who attended the event and helped to make it such a success.," said Shoemaker.

This event was just one of the many scheduled during February to celebrate Black History Month, said Shoemaker, who also functions as a post equal employment opportunity specialist and as an affirmative action specialist.

Schools win in Odyssey competition

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools sent three teams Saturday to the district competition of the Odyssey of the Mind and all came back winners.

The teams from Dexter School and Faith School each won first place in their respective categories. The Wilbur School team won third place in its category.

The Dexter team and the Wilbur team competed in the Odyssey competition for the first time this year. This is the sixth year that Faith School has competed in the competition. Last year, the Faith team went on to win third in the world competition.

Odyssey of the Mind is a problem-solving competition that was developed by Dr. Sam Miklus, a New Jersey College professor. It is a program that provides a mental challenge through problem-solving activities. There are two categories of activities: long-term problem solving in which students have several months to find a solution and short-term problem solving in which students must find a solution during the competition.

Competing this year on the Faith School team are Karen Adams, Jay Parker, Aaron Roggia, Aaron Smalser, Rachel Novier, Stacy Uselton and Anita Shaw. Their coaches are Cindy Givens and Libbie Kurinec.

The Faith Team, which competes in Division II (for sixth through eighth graders), won first place in a competition called Omument. The team's problem in Omument was to create and perform a skit that includes an original monument. The monument could be dedicated to any person, place or thing the team chose. During the performance, the team had to find a way to explain what the monument is and why it was developed.

The Dexter School team also competed in the Omument problem and won first place. They competed in Division I for fourth and fifth graders. Members of the Dexter School team are Kelley Belleau, Helen Hardy, Leah Hutchinson, Rick Kelly, Tara Moore, Frank Walsh and Susannah Wiley. Their coaches are Marge Brasfield, Margaret Koger and Kathryn Van Horn.

In addition to winning first place in the competition, the Dexter School students won two awards new to the competition. Kelly won an individual OMer Award for his character portrayal during the problem-solving skit. The Dexter team won a team OMer Award for its performance.

The Wilbur team won third place in the Division I competition in a problem called Alice in OMerland. In this problem, the students had to create and present a performance about an adventure through OMerland. That adventure had to include a character named Alice, music, poetry and a plant and an invention that came to life.

Members of the Wilbur School team are Ben Reed, Johnny Rodriguez, Jimmy Rumble, Lenice Scott, Brett Seauto, David Shier and Jessica Woodcox. The team is coached by Steve Pate. In addition to its third-place win, the entire team won an OMer award for an outstanding presentation of the Alice in OMerland skit.

The teams from Dexter and Faith will represent the district at the state competition March 21 in Warner Robins, Ga.

988th homeward bound in May

Special to The Bayonet

Families of the 988th Military Police Company, on rotation in Panama since Jan. 4, learned in a briefing at a family support group meeting that the 95 soldiers deployed are halfway finished with their mission there.

Sgt. Joseph Kacperski, rear detachment non-commissioned officer in charge, said that four babies have been born to the unit's family members since the soldiers left, and 10 more new babies are expected.

Maj. Bob Pelegreen of Military Police Operations noted that the conditions in Panama are stable, and no problems are foreseen. However, he is available at 545-2942 if anyone has any concerns.

The return for the 988th has been slated for about May 1.

In the meeting, spouses asked questions about leave-and-earning statements and planned a future outing. In addition, an Easter egg hunt for the children has been set for April 18.

Girl Scouts to celebrate birthday Thursday

By Janet Moore
Girl Scouts of America

Thursday is the Girl Scouts birthday, and the week in which it falls is designated as Girl Scout week in the United States.

Juliette Low, founder of the Girl Scout movement in America, started the first Girl Scout troop on March 12, 1912.

In celebration of their 80th anniversary, the various troops on Fort Benning have decorated fabric squares with environmental themes, to be pieced together into a wall hanging. It will be displayed, along with other items, in the display room of building 4 — Infantry Hall. The public is invited to view the display, which will be up this week.

The week starts with Girl Scout Sunday. All Fort Benning Girl Scouts are invited to attend the religious service of their choice. Most denominations across the U.S. acknowledge the day and recognize any Scouts in their midst; in some, the girls actually participate in the program.

The first baby girl born at Fort Benning during Girl Scout Week will become the Honorary Daisy Baby. Traditionally, the Fort Benning Daisy Scouts hold a small shower for the baby, although plans for this year are not yet finalized.

On Tuesday, the Fort Benning Girl Scouts will continue their celebrations with an ice cream social and games festival. Different troops get together to eat ice cream and to teach each other new games.

Selected juniors, cadettes, and seniors will participate in a formal flag retreat at Building 4 on Wednesday at 5:15 p.m. The public is invited to view the ceremony.

The final event during Girl Scout Week will be Core Camp for a Day, a mini-course in outdoor skills where Brownies that attend will complete activities in two separate Try-Its, and Juniors that attend will complete the Outdoor Dabbler Badge. Cadettes, Seniors, and adult volunteers will run the event, which is to be held at Camp T-Hideaway March 14.

Girl Scouting is a very exciting opportunity for girls, ages 5 to 17. However, due to a lack of adult involvement, many Girl Scouts are being left out of the learning and the fun. There are approximately 30 Fort Benning girls that have been and continue to be left out of the fun and learning, because there have been no more adults stepping out to give of their time and efforts as Girl Scout leaders. There are also several troop leaders who are carrying more than their fair share of responsibility because they lack co-leaders. If you have time to give and wish to make a difference in the lives of young ladies, contact Pat Corning at 322-5161.

Educator receives national award

Girls scouts of America

Dr. Dell Karr, assistant superintendent of Fort Benning Schools has recently been selected as a 1992 Concharty Council Woman of Achievement. The purpose of the Women of Achievement Program is to recognize area women who, through service to family, career and community, have set an example of excellence for the girls.

The honorees are selected from the 12 county region Concharty Council of Girl Scouts serves. These counties include seven in Georgia (Muscogee, Harris, Talbot, Chattahoochee, Marion, Stewart, Webster and Fort Benning) and five in Alabama (Lee, Russell, Macon Barbour, Bullock).

Karr

Karr has served as the assistant superintendent of Fort Benning Schools for four years. Before going to Fort Benning, Karr was employed at the Muscogee County School System for 14 years as an assistant principal, the health program director and a teacher. Currently, she is involved in the Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society, Phi Delta Kappa Program Committee, and the Network for Professionals and Executives.

Karr's volunteer interests include the Columbus Symphony Executive Board, the Girls' Club and Habitat for Humanity.

The 1992 Women of Achievement will be honored on Thursday, the 80th Anniversary of Girl Scouting, at noon at the Columbus Ironworks and Trade Center in Columbus.

Army Community Service

Army Community Service will host a free "Walk for Wellness" program sponsored by the Georgia Extension Service at Carver Park Recreational Center, Thursday and March 13 from 10 a.m. to noon.

"Walking is a great way to get involved in an exercise program and get into physical shape," said Mary Allen, Army Community Service Outreach coordinator.

"Have you ever planned to exercise, but somehow found an excuse to do something else? Or maybe you actually started an exercise program for one or two weeks, or even two or three months, and then slowly tapered off.

"If some of these problems sound familiar," said Allen, "it may be because a large segment of the population, whether overweight or normal weight, do not follow a regular exercise program, and in the process they lose out on its benefits.

"Families residing on and off post are encouraged to come and learn about the benefits of exercise, the relationship of diet and exercise and learn how to start an exercise program," Allen said.

Everyone can bring their walking shoes. Activities and refreshments will be provided for the entire family.

Allen noted the importance of including regular exercise in current lifestyles so that families may remain healthy and strong.

For registration, free transportation and further information, contact the Georgia Extension Service representative, Linda Kennedy, by Tuesday, at 571-4790 or call Army Community Service at 545-4357.

"Fort Benning Flower Shops Offer More Than Just Flowers"
by Marilyn Dayton, Special to The Bayonet

"We've made quite a few cosmetic changes to our shops and have expanded our inventory as well as our services," says Manager Dana Smith of the Ft. Benning Flower Shop. "You will notice there is new carpeting, mirrors, and especially the fresh flowers in the flower cart which is moved out into the entrance area, which draws a lot of attention now."

Dana has been in the "flower business" for over 22 years, and manages the shops for National Florist Supply of Maryland, now have some 65 shops in military locations. "Eighty-five percent of our business is spontaneous purchasing, so the shop presentation is very important. We have expanded not only our fresh flower supply, but offer more silk arrangements now. We were completely sold out on Valentine's Day, and had more delivery requests than we could accept." Ft. Benning Flower Shops specialize in weddings, funerals, and flowers for all occasions.

One of the services Dana has had a great deal of experience with is Special Event Design. "Over the years we have had many requests to decorate for weddings and other special parties. Especially enjoyable is the order for something special for change-of-command, whether Officers or NCO." Her work has been enjoyed by many of Fort Polk and Fort McPherson in past years.

Originally from Yugoslavia, Dana met her military husband and has "been around military for over 20 years -- most of my life. I don't think military people get the respect they deserve. So, I make sure out service is not just the right discounted price, but friendly and courteous . . . just as I would want to be treated as the wife of a military man."

Columbus Gateways

Honor society makes community project

Fort Benning Schools

Several members of Faith Schools Honor Society were recognized at the City Council meeting in Columbus on Feb. 24. In the council meeting these students and their teacher, Wanda Hagler, were named honorary gatekeepers of the Columbus Gateways project.

The Faith Honor Society members designed and created a 7-foot tall arch to be used by the Columbus Gateways project to record contributions to the project. Individual bricks naming contributors to the project will be displayed on the arch. The Honor Society students and their teacher devoted many community service hours after school to create the arch.

The Columbus Gateways project is a beautification and landscape enhancement program which incorporates 26 major gateways and arteries within the Columbus area.

Initial estimates of the overall project are $4.2 million over a FIVE- year period.

The program will be initially funded by private contributions from individuals and local corporations, with the subsequent majority of the funding coming from the state and federal departments of Transportation.

Seven gateways into Columbus, 12 arterial gateways within the City, four urban connectors, and three highway right-of-way projects have been initially selected.

The landscaping will include groupings of trees featuring the Southern Magnolia. Numerous other varieties of trees, shrubbery, flowers and grassed areas will further enhance the area. The first two gateway interchanges will be irrigated with underground sprinkler systems and will be maintained by private contract for first five years.

The Gateway logo represents the southern magnolia, which is indigenous to this area, and will be used in recognizable similar groupings on the major interchanges throughout and around the city.

The Columbus Gateways Committee was created by Mayor Frank Martin and chaired by John Flournoy in early 1991 for the purpose of bringing together the local interested organizations to include: Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission, the Columbus Chamber of Commerce Transportation Committee, the City Arborist, the Georgia Department of Transportation, local garden clubs and interested citizens.

Its purpose is to develop a coordinated prioritized list of projects to be accomplished within the next three to five years.

The committee selected Airport Thruway/I-185 interchange and the Traffic Circle/Victory Drive interchange as the first two priorities with the understanding that they would need to be completely constructed with contributions from local citizens, businesses and foundations.

Post schools recognize exceptional children

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

All eight Fort Benning Schools celebrated Exceptional Children's Week Feb. 23 through Saturday with a variety of activities that heightened the awareness of "exceptional" as a positive attribute.

According to Tommye Woods, director of Special Education for Fort Benning Schools, this was the first time the system took part in the observance. She said she was pleasantly surprised at the enthusiasm everyone displayed.

She added that though the state made suggestions for activities that could be used, Fort Benning teachers went beyond these, and in some, cases made it a function for the whole school to participate in.

One of the schools that had total involvement was Richard G. Wilson Elementary School. Kathy Einhorn, Wilson Special Education teacher, said that teachers in grades kindergarten through fifth voluntarily encouraged their students to participate in either the poster or essay contests with the theme, "I'm Special Because."

Other schools did projects such as making badges, holding a tea for volunteers and aides who help with the Special Education Program and holding trivia contests about famous people with an exceptionality, such as the singer Cher who is dyslexic.

Einhorn said that one student made the remark that if President Franklin D. Roosevelt could have polio and become president, think what she could do.

Phyllis Parker, Wilson principal, noted that this was a lot of extra work for the Special Education teachers because February is a month with a lot of other celebrations too, such as Black History Month.

According to Beth Middlemiss, director of Staff Development for the Fort Benning Schools, the Special Education programs within the system serve about 450 students.

Plan now for GS camp

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

Believe it or not, summer is just around the corner, and many families are already making plans for their children to attend a summer camp. For more than 40 years, Camp Concharty in Harris County has delighted and excited girls of all ages and is presently receiving applications for its 1992 summer program running from June 20 to July 31.

Located on 145 acres of woodland at the base of Pine Mountain, Camp Concharty is owned and operated by Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. Programs are available for Girl Scouts and non-Girl Scouts ages 6 to 17 years old. For the new camper, there is a special three-day, four-night program, "Woodland Whimsie," and for the experienced campers, Camp Concharty offers one- and two-week adventures that can be tailored to suit anyone's taste or style. In July, there is also a program, "Boys Will Be Boys," offered for brothers ages 6 to 11 years old.

Camp activities range from swimming, campfires, and nature crafts to sports, music and all-camp carnivals. For the horse lover, Camp Concharty offers a special horsing program with courses for beginners, intermediate riders, and advanced riders.

Fees to attend Camp Concharty range from $100 to $250 depending upon the program. Anyone interested in receiving a cap catalog, may contact Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, 1344 13th Ave., Columbus, Ga. 31901 or call (404) 327-2646.

Beware of hidden fees, high interest when getting loans

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers need to be aware of what they are doing when they get loans, according to officials at the Army Community Service Budget Counseling Program and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

All to often, according to Ann Pratcher, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program manager, soldiers simply don't realize what they are getting into when they go to a lending institution and sign their name on the dotted line for a loan.

"Soldiers don't even look at the contract, a lot of times," said Pratcher."

Before these soldiers know it, they've got payments they can't afford and the total amount they thought they were going to pay has doubled, according to Pratcher.

Pratcher said the next step a lot of soldiers take when the realization hits them that they are deep in debt is to get a bill consolidation loan.

A consolidation loan allows a borrower to pay off all existing debts with one loan. So, instead of having 10 or 12 bills a month, the borrower will only have one easy-to-make payment.

Loan amount	Months	APR*	Payment	Total cost
$2,000	48	14.0	$54.65	$2,623.34
$2,000	48	24.9	$66.20	$3,177.73
$10,000	48	14.0	$273.26	$13,116.71
$10,000	48	24.9	$331.01	$15,888.66

*Annual Percentage Rate—APR is the cost (or relative cost) of credit on a yearly basis. This is your key to comparing costs, regardless of the amount of credit or how long you have to repay it.

The problem with consolidation loans, according to Pratcher, is that it frees up existing credit cards, which could allow further debt. The second problem with bill consolidation is that interest rates are normally higher because lenders view the borrower as a higher credit risk because the borrower already can't pay the existing monthly bills.

The quickest, and possibly the best, solution is for soldiers to enroll in the ACS budget counseling program, said Pratcher.

ACS can set up a budget to allow soldiers to pay off those loans in a shorter period of time and still live within their means.

"Our counselors sit down with soldiers and family members and help them try to get a handle on things," said Pratcher.

ACS can also give guidance to soldiers on obtaining loans to avoid future loan and credit card purchase mistakes.

Not only that, ACS can contact creditors to establish working communication between the soldiers and the creditor.

According to ACS officials, contacting creditors is an important first step in getting out of debt. This may alleviate stress on the soldier by eliminating threatening phone calls and places the soldier on the offensive instead of the defensive.

ACS is currently helping 300 or more soldiers and their families who have gotten into financial difficulty.

"A lot of people just get in over their heads," said Pratcher. "They really need to make themselves aware of the total cost of what they are getting into."

Wrestlers go for All-Army slots

Wrestle off determines finalists for Army team

By Wallace Dawkins
USAIC Public Affairs office

The 1992 All-Army Wrestling Team was decided by a wrestle-off tournament that started Feb. 28 and ended Monday at Santiago gymnasium.

The tournament was the last event in the All-Army Trial Camp, which began here about two months ago.

Two wrestlers make the team in each weight class, one for Greco-Roman style and one for freestyle wrestling. The tournament is held in a round robin format where each individual wrestles everybody in the weight class.

Sometimes when there are three wrestlers that are very close in competitiveness, three wrestlers may be kept at that particular weight class, according to Tony Thomas, All-Army wrestling coach.

Final results:

105.5 — Bart Mease, Pete Gomez

114.4 — Keith Idlegurg, Martin Strmiska

125.5 — Shon Lewis, James McLinnham

136.5 — Robert Allen, Andrew Flagler

149.5 — Rodney Smith, Keith Steracki, Gustaton

163 — Philip Brown, Brandon Dennington

180.5 — James Gressley, Ryan Jibbens

198 — Derrick Waldroup, E. J. Pasteur

220 — Jerry Jackson, Jeffery Green

286 — James Demo, Edward Mitchell

Not all wildlife is endangered

PM Editorial Services

If you watch enough of the "nature specials" appearing on television, you might draw the conclusion that all of the world's wildlife is on the brink of extinction. From hummingbirds in Hawaii to condors in California, the death knell of a species is a recurrent litany in many nature programs. Bad news is good news when it draws both viewers and contributions.

Unfortunately, hunters often are blamed by a frequently simple-minded approach to endangered wildlife.

Of course, we all know of the plight of the African elephant, decimated by ivory poachers — or do we? In East Africa, the elephant is in dire straits, but we seldom hear about the thriving elephant herds in southern Africa. There, scientific and professional wildlife management uses selective "culling" (including licensed hunting) to control elephant numbers, reduce poaching and fund programs benefiting elephants and other wildlife species.

Closer to home, a similar system has been at work restoring North America's wildlife resources for the better part of the 20th century.

The "good old days" weren't so good for wildlife. In their pioneering zeal, our forefathers exploited the wildlife, thinking resources were inexhaustible. They were wrong.

In the East, bison and elk were eliminated and the white-tailed deer and wild turkey nearly so. With westward expansion, plains bison, elk and pronghorn antelope were hunted for the market. North American wildlife reached its lowest ebb toward the end of the 19th century.

A conservation-minded president, Theodore Roosevelt halted the destruction, with the support of America's sportsmen. Wild lands were protected as national parks and forests, commercial hunting was stopped and sport hunting was placed under controls.

Ninety years ago, the Eastern white-tailed deer were scarce; today, the deer population exceeds 20 million — possibly more than existed when Columbus discovered America. The wild turkey — almost gone by the turn of the century — now is numerous, occupying much of the range in which it flourished at the time of the Pilgrims. In the West, elk and pronghorn antelope are abundant, and even the plains bison fare well on the limited range that an expanded human population will allow.

These days, it is not the gun, but the chainsaw and the bulldozer wielded by human encroachment that endanger most wildlife. As rain forests fall and wild habitats are turned into human habitats, some wildlife species indeed are endangered.

At the same time, we have amassed an enviable record of wildlife restoration through good management, and today, may wildlife species are not at risk but are doing quite well.

Aaron Pass has written many articles about hunting, fishing and camping for newspapers and magazines.

Two Fort Benning soldiers recently took their wrestling act abroad.

Martin Strmiska and Derrick Waldroup, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently represented the United States in Bulgaria and France in international Greco-Roman wrestling tournaments.

Strmiska, a 114.5 pounder, won a bronze medal in Bulgaria losing only to the Bulgarian wrestler.

He went from there to France where he took a silver medal and placed higher than the Bulgarian that beat him in the earlier tournament. His only loss was to a Russian wrestler in the finals.

"I'm still trying to gain as much experience internationally as possible," said Strmiska.

Waldroup, a 180.5 pounder, won a bronze medal in France after losing some very close matches in Bulgaria.

Strmiska will be representing the United States in the Pan Am Games one week after the Armed Forces Championships here March 18 through 22.

Currently Strmiska and Waldroup are both ranked second in the United States in their respective weight classes.

COMMENTARY

With the number of black athletes in professional sports, it is surprising to many people that there aren't more black broadcasters in sports television. I have heard accusations of discrimination and racial bias on the part of the networks, charges that not enough blacks are getting a chance to succeed on television.

While I agree that there is a serious shortage of black broadcasters covering football and sports in general, I don't believe racial bias is the reason.

Let's face it, professional sports experience alone does not automatically qualify you for the broadcasting booth. To be in broadcasting, you have to have an extraordinary command of the English language, something too few professional athlete — black and white — have. This often is a result of educational backgrounds that emphasized athletics instead of communication and business skills.

I believe that the networks would like to hire more black athletes as sports commentators. Every year, auditions are held,and former sports stars are put through the routine by each network (all of which would love to find the next O.J. Simpson). Many athletes, however, have very serious, no-nonsense personalities, and in a field where a quick sense of humor means as much as sports knowledge,they often don't make the cut.

I know I wouldn't. Being in front of the television camera is a tough assignment. I have a good command of the English language, but get me under the lights and put pressure on me, and I get tongue-tied.

I think Dan Jiggets on CBS and Tom Jackson on ESPN, two successful black National Football League veterans on television, have shown that it takes that quick wit to make it these days. James Brown, who I think does a great job as a play-by-play man at CBS, never played in the NFL. He was a great basketball player and had several years experience in business before he came to television. The business experience, I'm sure, helped him learn the importance of being well spoken.

Look at Greg Gumbel, the anchor for "The NFL Today." I don't think Gumbel ever played a sport in his life. But he and his brother Bryant, who started with sports on NBC and now hosts "Today" every weekday morning, obviously have placed emphasis on developing the art of speaking well. These two brothers have great on-air composure, confidence and eloquence.

Television is a money-making business that always is looking for the next big star. My best advice to any young athlete who envisions success in professional sports followed by a career in television is to prepare your mind along with your body. A mind that is in shape will take you a lot more places than a well-conditioned body.

Pro flutters spinnerbait to attract more fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Ken Cook used a spinnerbait to win 1991 world championship, but he didn t retrieve it the ordinary way. Instead, he fluffed, fluttered and shook it.

"It sounds like the spinnerbait was dancing all the way to the boat," said Cook, a former fisheries biologist for the state of Oklahoma. "But what I was really trying to do was create an erratic action that triggered strikes from inactive bass."

The technique worked, for Cook brought in a five-bass limit on each of the three competition days, one of only six contestants to do so in the 40-angler field.

I had located fish around isolated clumps of vegetation several feet below the surface,"explained Cook. "But, they were not aggressive. I wanted to use a spinnerbait because I could cover the water more rapidly, so I started shaking my rod tip as I retrieved each cast."

Holding his rod tip down, Cook not only shook the spinnerbait, he also stopped his retrieve periodically. The two actions caused the spinnerbait blade to stop and start repeatedly, and also allowed the lure's skirt to fluff open and then close, as well.

"Each time I stopped the retrieve around the grass, the spinnerbait would start to flutter down beside the vegetation, too," noted the pro. "All in all, the lure presented something totally different and unpredictable, which is sometimes the key that triggers a strike."

Cook was especially pleased at the results, as the spinnerbait was one of his own design. He had spent months developing the lure and having it manufactured to his exacting specifications. It features one single willow leaf blade, rather than the more common tandem blade arrangement.

"Inactive bass usually pose a major problem to anglers," continued Cook. "Unfortunately, this is the way we find them most often.

"I learned through my experiences as a biologist, and now as a tournament angler, that to trigger a reflex strike from these fish you have to really excite them.

"You can do the same things with other lures. With crankbaits, a stop-and-go retrieve that bounces the lure off logs or rocks is often very productive, and with worms and jigs you can hop and jump them up and down instead of simply crawling them along the bottom," he added.

Post's airline ticket office saves soldiers money

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Want to plan your dream vacation or just buy an airline ticket but don't know where to go?

You can find a full-service travel agency right on post.

"SATO (Scheduled Airline Ticket Office) has been serving military soldiers and family members at Fort Benning since 1953," said SATO Leisure Travel Office Director Linda Guerrero.

SATO offers a full range of travel services, Guerrero said, but at special rates that other agencies cannot get.

Due to the large volume of service, SATO guarantees the lowest applicable airfare at the time of booking and can offer discounts of 50 to 75 percent off of air and cruise tickets depending on the rate structure at the time, she said.

Besides offering individual tickets, SATO can arrange complete vacation packages, including hotel reservations and rental cars, at discount rates.

SATO can also arrange conferences and conventions and offers group travel packages and rates.

Travel Agent Elsie Kindon said that SATO offers a great deal of flexibility to meet your vacation plans.

"We'll work with you to get what you want," she said. "Our number one commitment is quality, personal service."

Kindon recommended making your vacation plans in advance to ensure that you get the best deal. She suggested booking flights at least 14 to 21 days in advance.

Guerrero added that SATO offers some additional benefits to the post by contributing a percentage of each leisure or unofficial travel sale to the Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund.

In 1991 more than $132,000 was donated by SATO to MWR, Guerrero said.

The money helps fund and equip the post's recreational facilities such as pools and gyms.

SATO has three separate offices on post.

The Leisure Travel Office, building 247, is located on Ingersoll Street and is open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. The phone number is 682-0361.

The Airline Ticketing Office, building 2628, is located in Soldiers' Plaza and is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Call 685-4030 for more information.

The Sand Hill Reservation Office, primarily for use basic trainees, is open Monday-Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m and can be reached at 687-4900.

SATO/ITR plan travel show

Representatives from vacation spots bring wares to Fort Benning Thursday

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Whether you just want to find out about the attractions Georgia has to offer or you want information on booking a cruise to the Caribbean, the Scheduled Airline Ticket Office and Information, Ticket and Registration Office Travel Show should help make your vacation plans a reality.

The show will be held in the east wing of Building 4 Thursday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and will feature representatives from Delta Airlines, Disney World, Six Flags and many others. ITR Director Carol Murphy said that around 50 vendors from all over the Southeast, including Washington D.C., will have displays and booths at the show.

"Representatives will be explaining cruise, air and tour discounts and explaining their products and what they have to offer," Murphy said.

Besides free travel information, many of the vendors will be giving away free airline tickets, weekend vacation packages, and admission tickets to attractions, she said.

"Every vendor will probably be giving something away."

Linda Guererro, director of the SATO Leisure Travel Office, said that the Travel Show will be a great opportunity for soldiers to learn about what ITR and SATO have to offer.

"A lot of people don't even know that we exist," Guererro said. "People can get great discounts through us."

Murphy added that this will be the first travel show that SATO and ITR have held on post, although it is something they have been planning for about two years.

"The Travel Show should be a great success. Other posts have had a good turnout for their shows and you can really get some great information and discounts at the show," said Murphy.

Engineers use Saudi Arabia experience

By David Greer
43rd Engineer Group

Three multi-purpose buildings are being constructed at Lawson Army Airfield by members of Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

"They are called "K-Span" buildings and are the first of this unique type building to be constructed at Fort Benning," said 2nd Lt. Earl D. Lawson, construction platoon leader.

"These buildings are the wave of the future. With very few outside resources, a small group of trained soldiers can erect a building of any size and anywhere it may be needed," he said.

"What makes the whole building possible is the automatic building machine," said project site manager Staff Sgt. Ralph L. Dobson.

"This machine is able to take a five-thousand pound roll of flat steel and bend, press and roll it into individual building sections," he said.

"The K-Span building offers the Army a way to fulfill its need for hard type structures at a reasonable cost. At a cost of approximately $198,000 for three complete buildings that will last at least 12 years, it seems like a good deal."

"The effort required to build the structures is well within our troops' abilities," said Lawson. "It also increases our self-sufficiency in time of conflict," he said.

Dobson and some of his site crew gained experience with the K-Spans in Saudi Arabia.

"Over there, my unit put up a K-Span that was 18 feet wide and 350 feet long," said Dobson. "With the insulation sprayed on, we could keep the inside temperature at least 70 degrees with the outside temperature at more than 110 degrees," he said.

"We're well ahead of schedule," he said. "I expect to finish our part in less than 22 days on site, about eight days ahead of the time given us."

"Like anything new, there are still a few minor bugs to work out and things to improve on like the doors," Dobson said. "My crew has figured out an improvement to the roll-up doors that allows us to cut the time required for installation from 8.5 hours to 3.5 hours with no loss in quality."

First Sgt. Jerry W. Gilley echoed the sentiment of his troops. "These buildings are easy to put up," he said. "The cost is a lot less than a wooden structure and it will last at least as long as a wooden one. They're nice."

When the job is completed, the unit will send three non-commissioned officers to Jordan to evaluate Army Reserve soldiers constructing K-Span buildings in that country.

Parts of the K-Span building are lifted by crane and then fitted into place by Spc. Len Olivar (top) and Spc. Peter Freeman.

EIB tests 29th Inf. Regt.

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, are shooting to become expert infantrymen at Galloway Range.

Testing started Feb. 24, with a physical training test on which the candidates are required to score 70 percent or better. On the second day candidates had three hours to complete a 12-mile road march.

On the third day, candidates start the task testing. There are 23 tasks that the candidates must perform in order to complete the testing. The tasks that the candidates perform, are all out of the infantryman hand book that every infantry soldier receives in basic training.

Three weeks prior to pre-testing, the candidates practice these tasks at battalion level to become more familiar with what the instructors are grading on. "Just preforming the task doesn't cut it" said Cpl. Gerald Stevens, who is a combat life saver for the site. "Most stations require that you do the tasks in a certain amount of time, and in a precise sequence. It is not easy, but the more you drill it in your head, the easier it will come." Once the candidates become acquainted with the tasks, they move on to pre-testing at Galloway Range.

The pre-testing is conducted for two weeks, to further their skills. Following the pre-test, the candidates start the actual testing. "In any task, if a candidate receives a No-Go, they are required to preform the task again within one hour," said Staff Sgt. Luis Boeckh, the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, non-commissioned officer in charge of the battalion level train-up.

If the candidate fails the same task a second time, he is out. Should the candidate pass the task he will proceed on, however, if the candidate receives three No-Gos on three separate tasks, he must go back to train up, and wait for the next class.

"If these soldiers complete the tasks, the road march, and the physical training test, they have not only proven to themselves that they have the ability to perform all of the infantry tasks required of an infantryman, but they join a large and proud fraternity of EIB soldiers," said Boeckh.

29th Inf. conducts exercise

Red Cloud Range site of CAPEX

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment, conducted a capability exercise Feb. 21 at Red Cloud Range. The CAPEX was held for students from the National War College.

"The mission of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment is to provide the small arms portion of the exercise," said Lt. Col. Thomas P. Carraway, battalion commander of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. The small arms display of weapons fired were the M-9 45 caliber pistol, the M-16 A2 the M-24 Sniper Weapon, the MK-19 automatic grenade launcher, the M-966 tow high mobility multi-purpose wheeled vehicle, and the M-109 infantry tow vehicle.

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment had the responsibility of providing the M-2A2 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, the M-113 armored personnel carrier, the 4.2mm, 8.1mm, 60mm, and 120mm mortars. The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division furnished the M-l Abrams. After the show, the War College students were allowed to fire some of the weapons. All of the weapons that were fired, were displayed with charts that showed the abilities of the systems.

In addition, only officers in those categories who have at least one year of active duty in that grade as of March 1, 1992, and who would have less than 15 years of active federal service by Sept. 30, will be considered.

Officers on a promotion list will not be considered by the RIF boards.

This board may be the first in a series of RIF panels for the Army. The announcing message to the field says additional RIF boards will be conducted this year and in subsequent drawdown years, through fiscal 1995.

Rangers compete in Intel competition

U.S. Army Special Operations Command

Soldiers from three Army bases will compete in land orienteering Thursday at Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park to determine the best military intelligence soldiers in the Army's ranger units.

Rangers from Fort Benning, Hunter Army Airfield, near Savannah, and Fort Lewis, Wash., will vie for first place in the third annual Best Intel Ranger Competition. Each of the 14 rangers competing is assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment's headquarters, or one of its three battalions.

Each competitor will have to complete a 20-kilometer land orienteering course with seven stations that test the soldiers' intel proficiency, physical endurance and ranger skills.

The 75th, the Army's premier light infantry spearhead, will host the event with assistance from the Georgia Orienteering Club. Officials at Georgia's FDR State Park near Pine Mountain have opened the park grounds for the competition to take place.

29th conducts table 12 Feb. 15

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment conducted a table 12 for the first time Feb. 15 at Hastings Range. Company D and the Bradley Instructors Company of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, piloted the range.

A table 12 is an exercise on a range used by Bradley units to measure the ability of both the mounted crew and the dismounted crews by breaching obstacles and firing on targets.

"Delta Company's responsibility was to furnish a maneuver platoon of Bradley Fighting Vehicles and the dismounted elements to breach an obstacle and then engage the targets," said Capt. Bruce Davis, commander of Company D.

"It was a rare opportunity to have the dismounted soldiers and the mounted soldiers work together. All parties benefitted from the exercise, and it was a learning experience," said Davis.

SOA goes airborne

By Dan R. Wilson
School of the Americas

The Special Operations and Civilian Military Operations department of the School of the Americas will be officially designated an airborne unit Sunday at 12:30 p.m. at Fryar Drop Zone.

The ceremony will begin with a jump by SOA's Commando, the department cadre, Maj. Gen. Jerry White and Col. Jose Feliciano, commandant of the School of the Americas.

"Being airborne is an asset that enhances the effectiveness of SOA to train special operations to Latin American armies," said Master Sgt. Geraldo Cruzado sergeant major of the Special Operations and Civilian Military Operations. "We have ranger, special forces, psychological operations, intelligence and sapper personnel assigned, and we plan to expand further in the future.

"The school has become a prestigious assignment and offers a good opportunity for advancement and professional development," said Cruzado. "We are always looking for quality soldiers to work here. If you have an interest, contact me at 545-5621 or call Command Sergeant Major Legoas at 4328."

SGM brings new ideas and courses to Infantry School

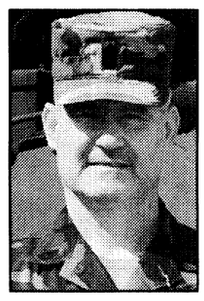
By Wallace Dawkins
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two ideas from the Infantry School's Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Cupit will provide hands on experience for sergeants major who have had a background in light infantry and build morale among young troops.

Cupit said that he had a background in both light and mechanized infantry, but most sergeants major have either one or the other. This course is designed for sergeants major that have had a background in light infantry, like Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Purdy of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion. He has 24 years experience in light infantry and then was assigned to a mechanized unit. He is one of the latest sergeants major to go through the course.

Purdy said, "I think it's an excellent course. You get to drive, shoot and perform maintenance on the vehicle, its fire power and its accuracy."

The course is a hands on with the Bradley and is full of basic information on the Bradley. It lets the sergeants major get familiar with all parts of the vehicle from operation to maintenance.



Cupit

Another program that Cupit has come up with is the Honorary Sergeants Major Program. The program finds a retired sergeant major with an outstanding military record, and makes him or her a honorary sergeant major of an active-duty unit. While at the 29th Regiment, Cupit made retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass the honorary sergeant major of the unit. Plass has three Combat Infantry Badges from World World II, the Korean Conflict and Vietnam.

Cupit said, "The young soldiers really like talking to him. They enjoy having him around at all the functions."

Cupit plans to start the program at the Infantry School and would like to see it carried on to other major units.

Hispanics can grow spiritually

By Michael J. Travaglione
School of the Americas chaplain

REFLECTIONS

In 1985, a group of Hispanic Catholics of the Fort Benning community felt the need to grow spiritually. They needed something more than the assistance at Sunday Hispanic Mass. It was then that the Holy Spirit guided them to form a prayer group. Recalling the words of Christ that where two or more are gathered in his name, he is amongst them, they assembled for collective and spontaneous prayer as well as the recitation of the rosary and the study of the sacred scriptures.

Originally these prayer meetings were held in private homes, but when the group grew dramatically, they gathered at the Custer Terrace Chapel. During the same period of time the Hispanic Catholic Mass was celebrated at Sand Hill.

When the School of the Americas arrived at Fort Benning, there was a dramatic increase in the number of Hispanic Catholics and the Mass was moved from the small Sand Hill Chapel to the larger Sightseeing Road Chapel. Consequently, the Hispanic prayer meeting was held weekly in the activity room at Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Unfortunately, many faithful believers of the Hispanic Catholic community are at the SOA and return to their home countries after a year or two. Nonetheless, a nucleus of dedicated Hispanics continues to assemble at the weekly prayer meetings. They understood the need for collective prayer in order to grow spiritually as a community of faith and to present to God in prayer the needs of the entire people of God.

Because of the prayer meetings, God's presence manifested itself in the lives of the members of this community. Many dedicated their lives to Christ and the church, and have had their marriages blessed by the church. Others have become involved in apostolic activities such as teaching Catholic doctrine, assisting the poor, visiting the sick, and ministering in the Catholic Hispanic parish as lectors or eucharistic ministers.

Presently, the prayer meetings are at the SOA Chapel at Lavoie Manor every Tuesday from 7 to 9 p.m. As chaplain of the SOA and pastor of the St. Francis of Assisi Catholic Hispanic community, I direct the Bible study.

We invite the Catholic Hispanics, brothers and sisters not only to join us at the weekly prayer meetings, but to celebrate the Hispanic Mass every Sunday at 10 a.m. We can all grow spiritually together and with the help of the Holy Spirit, grow stronger in the love of Christ and our brothers and sisters in Christ.

Luke 10:12 tells us, ""There is much to sow, but the laborers are few. Let us then ask (pray) to the proprietor (God) to send us more laborers."

And what benefit will you reach from prayer? Romans 15:17 give us the answer: "God, from whom all good comes, will fill you with peace and joy in order that you may have a super abundance of hope by the power of the Holy Spirit."

Youth group hosts artists

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Protestant Youth of the Chapel hosted the Covenant Players Feb. 21 and 22.

The Covenant Players is a ministry communicating the Lord Jesus Christ through the medium of drama.

"After a performance, we are gone, but our plays remain in the minds of the audience," one of the Covenant Players said. "Through the identification process of drama, the audience has been challenged and motivated emotionally and intellectually. The elements leading to renewal or deeper commitment are there, but they must be nurtured and led to fruition," he added. "It is at that point that Covenant Players becomes part of any ministry."

The youth not only watched the players perform, but participated in several skits. The result was a few giggles, much laughter and many new experiences.

"The teen-agers had a lot of fun, they gathered on Feb. 21 for a drama performance and an all-you-can-eat pizza bash," Kenneth Lee, youth director, explained. "The next morning the youth and the Covenant Players enjoyed a continental breakfast, a drama workshop designed to teach skills in drama, and a hotdog lunch."

The PYOC was founded one year ago and has been growing since. Presently, the teen-agers meet each Monday from 7 to 8 p.m. at the Religious Education Center for fellowship, singing and numerous activities.

The group has participated in a youth rally, a youth leadership training seminar and taken various trips.

The ministry has a logo, which was decided by casting votes.

The result was the acronym FOOT, which stands for Fellowship Of Outrageous Teens. The inspiration for this name originated from Isaiah 52:7.

The PYOC consists of teen-agers in grades 6 through 12. However, within the larger group there is a junior and senior high ministry. Adequate supervision is provided by the adult Youth Ministry Team members and a youth director.

For more information contact Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert McCrory at the Infantry Center Chapel, 545-2050.

Prayer: an avenue of hope

By James Leston
43rd Engineer Battalion chaplain

In a day where the Army's soldiers and family members are going through continual changes, there is one avenue of hope that is constant. This hope opens new doors of opportunity, settles the human spirit of anxiety, and gives meaning to our everyday life — this expression of hope is prayer.

Prayer is a mystery. It is the one privilege we have to access the very presence of God. We can see and feel the presence of God with our spiritual eyes. Prayers answered reaffirm that God does care and listens to his children.

It is sad to say that many fall short of an active prayer life and are robbed of a powerful resource in this unstable world.

Dr. George Washington Carver expresses the beauty and simplicity that prayer is when he stated, "My prayers seem to be more of an attitude than anything else. I indulge in no lip service, but ask the great God silently, daily, and often many times a day, to permit me to speak to him. I ask him to give me wisdom, understanding and bodily strength to do his will. Hence, I am asking and receiving all the time."

May all of us experience prayer as a power that can change our lives and the world in which we live.

Catholic women study Bible weekly

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women invite women to actively participate in the process of the Catholic Church and to share through eucharistic celebration, spiritual development programs and community activities.

The first Friday Mass and meeting will be the Thursday preceding the first Friday of the month, beginning with rosary and a Mass at 7 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The women meet for a Bible study each Wednesday from 10 to 11 a.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. The study is based on the "Share the Word" film series, which looks at the scripture for the next Sunday's Mass. Each week's study is independent and is taught by Father Joe Piskura.

During the study, the group discusses not only biblical principles, but also how to implement those principles into daily living. After the Bible study, from 11 a.m. to noon, the women craft rosaries.

Baby-sitting is available free of charge for each event.

On March 14, the MCCW and the Catholic Youth Organization will meet at 12:30 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel to visit the Deer Field Nursing Home on Warms Spring Road in Columbus.

Furthermore, MCCW is looking for volunteers to provide baked goods and help to give out rosaries to Sand Hill trainees at the Regimental Chapel after the 8:30 a.m. Mass March 15.

For information, call Joni Scott at 689-2725.

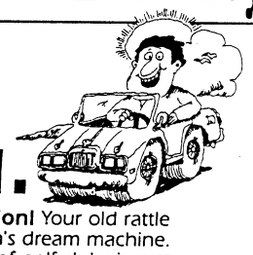
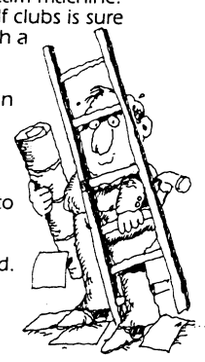
How to make money in three easy steps.



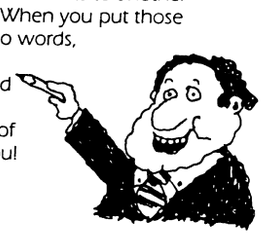
Step 1.

Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. And if you've got a skill to market or service you'd like to provide—there's someone looking for you in classified.



Step 2.

Aim for an audience. After you've selected a solution for another to seize, bring that person to life. Think about your product or service and its original value to you, then detail its features and benefits to another individual. When you put those benefits into words, others like you will find value too. And that's of value to you!



Step 3.

Contact classified. Give us a call. You'll cash in on the speed and effectiveness of the dynamic classified marketplace. Each day, highly motivated readers are seeking services and solutions for a variety of needs. Turn to the classified pages, and you'll turn your item to be sold into money! It's as easy as 1-2-3!

ValueCare Ownership.sm Now standard on every '92 Hyundai.

We call it ValueCare. You'll call it worry-free ownership. Because for the next two years or 24,000 miles, we pay for all of your scheduled service and maintenance. * That's protection over and above Hyundai's 3-year/36,000-mile bumper-to-bumper and 5-year/60,000-mile powertrain limited warranties.

You don't pay for wear items like wiper blades, belts and brake pads. We do. However, you do have to pay for gas. And for two years, that's about all you'll pay for.

*Includes all scheduled maintenance for 2 years/24,000 miles. Tires covered by manufacturer's warranty. Excludes repairs due to accident, abuse or modification. See dealer for details.

Offering something like ValueCare Ownership takes more than just confidence. It takes well-built cars. And well-built cars are something we've got. Come in and test drive one today.

For an Emmy-winning actress, a new TV-movie role has provided definite reminders of her own past.

Marg Helgenberger — who earned her award as Best Supporting Actress in a Drama for portraying caustic and pessimistic prostitute K.C. on the critically acclaimed series "China Beach," still shown in weeknight repeats on cable's Lifetime — has firsthand knowledge of multiple sclerosis, a disease that causes the deterioration of a person's nervous system, because her father was stricken by it.

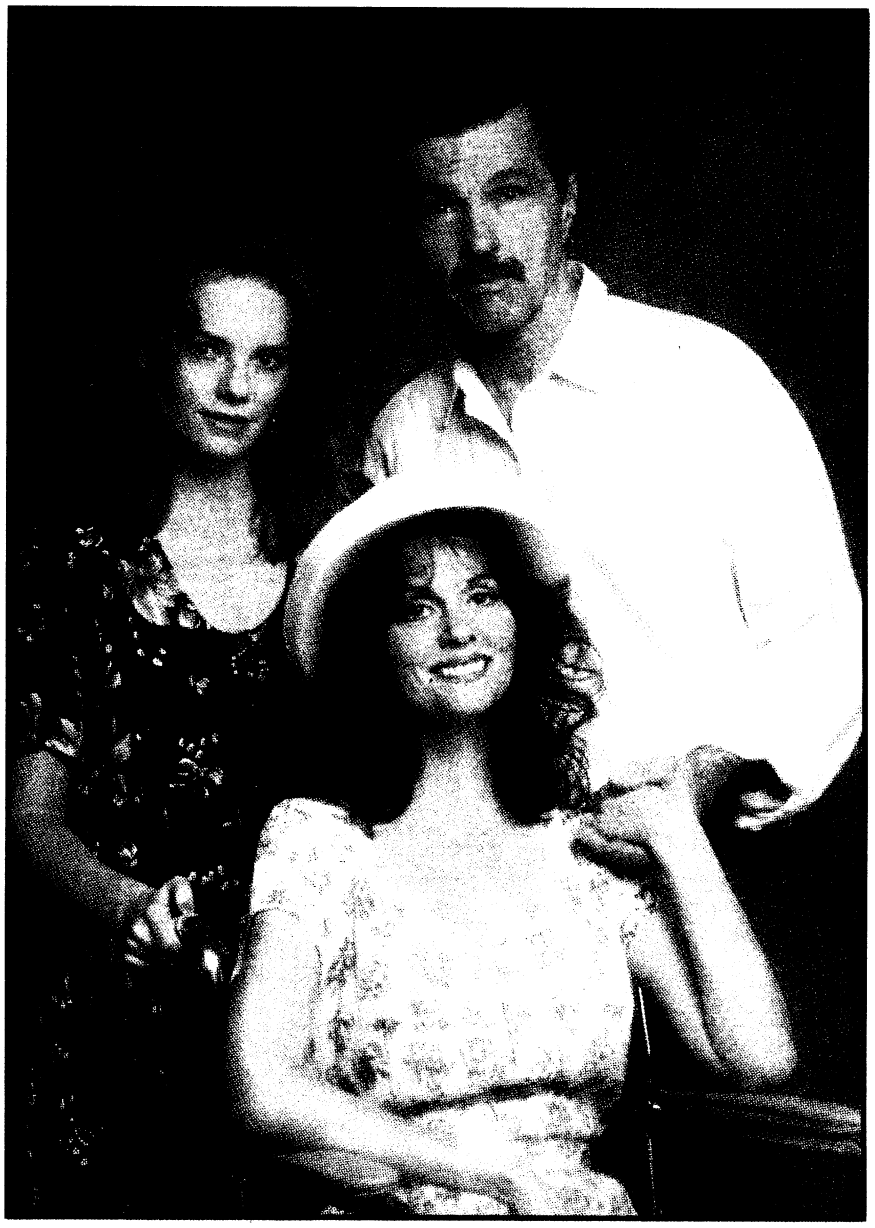
In Sunday's new CBS drama "In Sickness and In Health," Helgenberger appears as a new neighbor and hired helper to a wife and mother (played by Lesley Ann Warren) who has the same illness, and the newcomer's invigorating presence changes the dynamics of the household considerably ... especially when she falls into a romance with the Warren character's initially resistant husband (Tom Skerritt, of numerous films, including "Steel Magnolias" and "Top Gun"), an unexpected development that stirs deep resentment within the couple's teen-age daughter (Robyn Lively, of "The Karate Kid Part III"). The story was directed by another Emmy recipient, Jeff Bleckner, whose previous credits include episodes of "Hill Street Blues" and the PBS "American Playhouse" drama "Concealed Enemies."

The spirited Helgenberger confirms that her observation of the effects of multiple sclerosis (or MS) was "one of the main reasons I took the part, because I was familiar with the disease, and what it does to a family. My dad was an outdoorsman who loved to fish and hunt and that kind of stuff, and I distinctly remember those as the things he missed the most. He couldn't just go out into the woods anymore and watch the leaves change color, and (Warren's) character mentions the same sort of thing, concerning a flea market in particular. She says she used to love to go there, but that she doesn't have the opportunity anymore, because she considers it such a burden to get in the wheelchair and into the van and out again. That was the thing with my dad, too. It was something of an event to get him out of the house."



Warren (in wheelchair), Helgenberger and Skerritt

Also an alumna of the now-defunct ABC daytime serial "Ryan's Hope," Helgenberger says when she was offered the script for "In Sickness and in Health," its makers were unaware of her own background with its subject. However, she maintains that she didn't provide any sort of technical guidance on the set unless she was asked for it directly. "That was strictly up to Lesley," she reflects, "since she was playing the one who had MS. She actually does a really nice job with it, and she's very believable. There were certain things she would do, like the way she held her hands or something, and I would always compliment her on it. She was grateful for that, because she obviously knew I'd had close contact with someone who really suffered from the disease. She did a lot of research for it herself, because she's a very reality-based actress, to the point of being almost a perfectionist."

Ironically, though, Helgenberger had to suppress much of what she already knew to fulfill the requirements of her movie alter ego. "She hasn't dealt specifically with MS," the actress reports, "but as she mentions to Tom Skerritt's character, she's worked in a nursing home where she's had to deal with people who have had strokes, older people in need of 24-hour care. However, I can sympathize completely with the teen-age daughter when my character gets involved with Tom's. She senses what's going on and becomes very wary of me. If my mother had done that (in the wake of Helgenberger's father's illness), I would have flipped out. I would have reacted the same way, so I had to put the script aside and kind of let my personal feelings just dissolve for a while, then go back and read it again more objectively (from the stance) of my character's reasons and needs. I was

Travel through time with video tapes

Department of Natural Resources

Officials of the Georgia Department of Industry, Trade and Tourism and the Georgia Department of Natural Resources have produced a video, "Travelling Through Time: Restoring Historic Homes as Bed and Breakfast Inns," documenting the restoration of the historic Trowell House in Jesup, Ga., with the full cooperation of the owners, Yvonne and Lowell Mallard, who have turned it into a bed and breakfast home and restaurant.

The videotape can be used as an informational and educational tool to heighten awareness of the various aspects of undergoing such a project. The video is targeted to present and prospective bed and breakfast owners, preservation and tourism professionals, and others located throughout the state who are interested in preserving old homes or buildings.

The Mallards were particularly pleased with their community's support for the project. Both the bed and breakfast and the restaurant are proving popular. Yvonne Mallard comments, "This restoration has been well worth the effort. Our neighbors and plenty of others who were strangers have contributed to the success we're experiencing."

The restoration, which was directed by a Mennonite craftsman, was marked by challenges, problems and the joys of undertaking a historically accurate rehabilitation. The video explores heritage tourism and attracting visitors; turning a historic house into a profitable business; using the state and federal preservation tax incentives; the National Register listing process; restoration craftsmanship and other rehabilitation techniques; and community and neighborhood planning.

"We are pleased to have found the Trowell House and to be sharing resources with GDITT," said Dr. Elizabeth Lyon, deputy state historic preservation officer. "Heritage tourism gives us a way to share the Georgia of yesterday with the visitor of today."

"The concept of bed and breakfast travel has really taken off in the United States and in Georgia," said Hanna Ledford, Deputy Commissioner for GDITT. "According to research done for the state, bed and breakfast guests spent $96.09 million in Georgia in 1989. There is room for more growth in this area and we hope this joint project with DNR will encourage careful and responsible restorations."

The video was written by Emmy award-winning writer Becky Marshall of DNR and photographed by multi-award-winning photographer Bob Busby of GDITT.

Those interested in purchasing or borrowing a copy of the video, should call (404) 656-0779.

Mark Twain play to come to Fox

Theatre League of Atlanta

Hal Holbrook in Mark Twain Tonight! is coming to the Fox Theatre for one performance only, March 17 at 8 p.m.

Holbrook, a very versatile actor, has numerous credits on stage, screen and television. He has won four Emmy Awards for "The Senator," "Pueblo," "Sanburg's Lincoln" and "Portrait of America," plus a Tony Award and a Drama Critics' Circle Award for Mark Twain Tonight!. Holbrook has portrayed Mark Twain since 1954, constantly perfecting and expanding the character. Currently, he is part of the highly acclaimed ensemble cast of the hit CBS comedy series "Evening Shade."

Holbrook in Mark Twain Tonight! has won universal critical acclaim. Richard L. Coe of the Washington Post remarks, "What makes the portrait so remarkable is that as the world changes, Holbrook changes his Twain with it." "Deeper, richer and more uncanny than ever now... a flawless characterization. The two hours spent with him is a rare theatrical experience," says Douglas Watt of the New York Daily News. Elliott Norton of the Boston Herald American states, "He seems to have penetrated the man's soul... unquestionably the most successful one-man production of the American theatre."

The Twain characterization grew out of an honors project at Denison University after World War II. Holbrook and his first wife had constructed a two-person show, playing characters from Shakespeare to Twain. After graduation in 1948 they toured the show on the school assembly circuit in the Southwest, giving two and three performances a day in different towns, the first one at 8 a.m. They did 307 shows in 30 weeks and travelled 30,000 miles by station wagon. Audiences ranged in age from 7 to 20 years old, with the football team always sitting down front. Holbrook's first solo appearance as Twain was at the Lock Haven State Teacher's College in Pennsylvania, in 1954.

Holbrook has toured as Mark Twain in some part of every year since 1954, making 1992 the thirty-eighth consecutive year for this remarkable one-man show. It has become a popular classic attraction and one of the longest running shows in theatre history.

Tickets are $21.50 and are available at all Ticketmaster Outlets, including Turtles, Sound Warehouse, Coconuts and Tower Records and the Fox Theatre Box Office. To charge call 249-6400.

just too affected by it. It was very bizarre."

Conceding that the theme of an outsider being taken into a close-knit family is shared — albeit to a different extent — by the much-discussed movie hit "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," Helgenberger recalls, "I read that script shortly after I had a baby, and of course, I became very paranoid about the woman I had hired (as a nanny). The character that I play (in 'In Sickness and in Health') really is not in a position of power, though. She's more of a lackey or a servant, but she treats this woman (portrayed by Warren) as if she's a friend, finding out what her interests are and taking her along to get her out of the house. She's not a vixen or anything else that would cause her to be considered a culprit, but a widow who's kind of lonely herself, a real likable and energetic character who brings life back into the house."

Sirens sound warning about bad weather

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

If wailing weather sirens on post leave you wondering whether you should take preventive action or just go about your business, here is what the signals mean.

Col. Ted Chilcote, director of Plans, Training and Mobilization, said the 10 sirens on post are used to warn post residents of severe weather conditions.

If you hear the sirens emitting a steady sound of five minutes in duration, it means that a tornado has been sighted or formation is highly probable. This is known as a code black situation.

Chilcote said the code black signal is also used for severe windstorms in excess of 50 knots, so it doesn't necessarily always signal a tornado.

He added that the sirens are sounded 20 minutes before the weather is supposed to hit the post.

After the severe weather has passed, the "all clear" signal is sounded, which consists of a series of 3 steady 2 minute sounds interrupted by 2 silent periods of one minute each.

Chilcote also said that every Monday at noon the sirens are tested to ensure they are operational. If the possibility of severe weather exists at the time, the tests are not conducted.

Chilcote said that it is the time of the year when severe weather and tornados in the area are at their peak.

"We're coming into that season that begins around late winter and lasts until early summer when this sort of weather is common, but severe weather can happen any time of the year," he said.

Post Safety Officer Regis Beighley said that in the event of a tornado, seek shelter immediately.

If you are in an office building, go to an interior hallway on the lowest floor.

If you are at home, go to the basement if you have one, Beighley said.

In homes without basements, take cover in the center part of the house on the lowest floor in a small room or under sturdy furniture.

Severe weather warnings at a glance

Code Black
Tornado warning — A steady five-minute siren signals that a tornado has been sighted or formation is highly probable or severe winds exist

Code Green
Storm warning — Radio and telephone notification (no siren)

Army pay system to change this month

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning is scheduled to make the complete switch to the new Army pay system, known as Joint Service Software, March 24 said 2nd Lt. Phillip Collins, assistant JSS project officer.

A special training team from the Defense Finance and Accounting Service in Indianapolis, Ind., will be on post beginning Monday to brief unit commanders, sergeants major, first sergeants and train finance personnel, Collins said.

The team will remain on post after the conversion date of March 24 to monitor the finance office and ensure things are running smoothly, he said.

Collins added that the finance office will be operating with only half of its staff during the training period.

He also said that soldiers will receive the old Joint Uniform Military Pay System Leave and Earnings Statements for the month of March. The new JSS LES and Net Pay Advice Statement will be distributed to unit personnel administration centers beginning in April at mid-month.

Collins said that one of the improvements of the new LES will be a more accurate reporting of the soldier's state tax.

"Soldiers might think at first that something is wrong. They aren't being taxed any more or less, the LES is just reflecting the exact amount of their state tax, which the current LES does not do," said Collins.

He added that units that have not contacted the finance office to schedule a briefing from the JSS training team need to do so as soon as possible.

He can be contacted at 545-4419 or 545-5819, or units can call Capt. Barbara Gregory, JSS project officer, at 545-2959.

Playing it safe

MPs say drive safely, it could save your life

Safety checkpoints are for drivers' well-being

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

While you may have been annoyed at having to wait in long lines of traffic during recent Military Police safety checks, they were done for a good reason, said Staff Sgt. Karl Yeldell of the Traffic Investigation Section.

"A recent increase in fatalities involving soldiers under the influence of alcohol and DUI (driving under the influence) convictions prompted the use of safety checkpoints," said Yeldell.

He said the purpose behind the checks was not to harass drivers, but to ensure that safe driving practices are being used on post.

Yeldell said that in order to legally drive on post, you need to have the following in your possession: military identification, driver's license, and proof of insurance.

He added that you must have liability insurance to drive on post, even if you are a resident of Alabama.

Yeldell also said if you work or live on Fort Benning, you must have your vehicle registered on post and display the appropriate decal on the front window.

Rental and off-road vehicles do not need the decal, Yeldell said.

He noted that in some accident cases the owners of automobiles not registered on post were not able to collect money for the damages from their insurance companies.

Yeldell said that speeding and DUI violations were the most common offenses netted by the check points, followed by driving without a seat belt, proof of insurance or driver's license.

Yeldell said that seat belts must be worn in all civilian and military vehicles, except for civilian vehicles made before Jan. 1, 1964.

He also noted that driving an automobile with defective parts that could cause a dangerous situation on the road, such as a broken headlight or taillight, is also illegal on post.

Yeldell said that commanders and civilian supervisors should focus on safe driving practices in their safety briefings.

"Commanders and first sergeants should really emphasize driving safely on post.," he said. "It can help decrease the fatalities, but it's really up to the individual. MPs aren't out to harass anyone. We're just trying to implement safety. That's our main goal."

COMMENTARY

A small book, "Entertaining Ideas for Military Wives," landed in the Public Affairs Office the other day.

Since it was small, and it was written by Linda O. Anderson, a member of the Fort Benning community, I flipped through it.

I was also curious to see if the perception we enlisted folks have on officer shindigs was on the mark.

Do they really wear hats and gloves to teas where someone stands around and pours from a silver service and what do they talk about?

I was disappointed in that respect because about all Anderson mentions is that there are still teas and if you're invited to pour, consider yourself honored.

But, I still don't know what the getup for tea is or what it is they talk about. But then, I'm not sure what Emma talks about when she has the "girls" over.

All I know about Emma's kaffee klatches is her tea service is one of those tin pots that's supposed to whistle when the water starts boiling (it stopped whistling long ago).

Anderson did have some practical ideas, even for people of Emma's ilk (I'll provide the coffee; you bring the munchies).

In fact, that is one of Anderson's suggestions.

She notes that planning get-togethers is tough. Some can make lunches, others can make evenings, so she recommends a balance, to include morning coffees.

"Let the Pillsbury Doughboy or Sara Lee do the cooking. People will be impressed because you aren't trying to impress them with a big production," she writes.

I like this lady.

She also has some great ideas for luncheons, ideas that can go a long way to helping spouses appreciate the green suit members of the family: "Try Meals, Ready-to-Eat in mess kits."

My favorite bit of advice is to "act yourself. Do what you are comfortable with."

In other words, don't hire a cleaning team and a catering service just because you're having the unit spouses over. She says that if you're comfortable with the way your quarters are set up for the family, it should be good enough for guests.

And don't worry about the "meows," she writes. Catty people will be catty people no matter what.

This advice would suit Emma just fine. Her idea of housekeeping is to kick me off the couch long enough to get the potato chips out from between the cushions — unless her mother's coming for a visit. Then we have GI parties lasting late into the night.

Anderson also goes for the practical when it comes to bridal or baby showers and newcomer welcomings. She says put together a gift basket with practical items, items the new bride or arrival will need to set up housekeeping and the parents will need to get Buster through the first few weeks of life.

In the back of her book, she answers questions with the same common sense she demonstrates through the rest of it.

Reading this book, I have a difficult time picturing it being written by an officer's wife.

Are the horrors we enlisted hear about double chain of command not true? I mean, can a wife actually not host a cocktail party if she's not comfortable with them, as Anderson suggests, or can you really put up "no smoking" signs outside your house if you don't want people smoking?

It's unbelieveable.

In addition to the good ideas this book offers, I think it has to be good for any conscience-stricken spouse who thinks he or she isn't doing enough to help the military member's career.

To sum up, this is a good, common-sense book many spouses will find helpful.

It was written by Linda O. Anderson.

Much to her credit.

Safety required in workplace

By Regis Beighley
Infantry Office Safety Branch

The Commanding General's New Year's Resolution for 1992 is safety— first priority at Fort Benning.

In response to this commitment, a cross-functional team, jointly co-chaired by Directorate of Civilian Personnel and Infantry Branch Safety Office, was developed and an aggresive campaign was begun in order to reduce civilian injuries by 50 percent .

Fort Benning realized a 62 percent reduction in civilian injuries during the first quarter for fiscal 1992.

There were 46 injuries and illnesses reported in the first quarter 1992, as opposed to the 108 injuries reported first quarter of fiscal 1991.

This significant reduction is attributed to proactive safety measures with command emphasis.

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel and the Infantry Branch Safety Office representatives have merged in a concerted effort to identify and engineer systemic hazards from the workplace.

These processes also include close coordination with other representatives.

Estimated civilian injury costs for fiscal 1993 Armywidewill hit $1 million per day. Fort Benning's portion of that cost is an estimated $5,480 per day.

Civilian injury reduction is mission essential. The only effective way to control workers' compensation costs is to prevent injuries and occupational illnesses from occurring.

Seatbelts save lives

On July 28, Walter Whitehead, an employee of Clothing Initial Issue Point, Directorate of Logistics, was involved in a violent vehicle collision. He was wearing his seatbelt, which saved him from serious injury or possibly death.

Caution needed when riding bicycles

Infantry Branch Safety Office and Military Police Activity

As more and more adults and children take to their bicycles for both recreation and transportation, the need for bicycle safety has never been more important. Fort Benning Policy memo 91-22, dated Dec. 16, 1991, requires that cyclists on Fort Benning roads with speed limits of 35 miles per hour or greater follow these directives:

• Cyclists must wear highly visible, reflective vests or sashes and protective helmets that have been approved by either the Snell Memorial Foundation or the American National Standard Institute.

• Riders should ensure that their bicycles have good reflectors, front and rear. In addition, bicycles ridden at night will be equipped with headlights and taillights that are visible from a distance of 300 feet.

The following are some general rules of thumb for safe cycling anywhere:

• Choose a bike that "fits" you.

• When you straddle the horizontal bar, there should be about one inch between the bar and your crotch.

The seat should be high enough so that when the pedal is at its lowest point, your knee is just slightly bent.

Handle bars should be level with your saddle and shoulder distance apart.

Wear firm-soled, non-slip shoes to prevent feet from slipping off pedals.

Wear snug-fitting clothes to decrease "drag" and limit wool clothing for distance cycling or when cycling in cold weather to prevent loss of body heat (hypothermia).

A bicycle helmet is a critical piece of safety equipment and should always be worn regardless of how far you may be traveling.

Wheel reflectors, headlamps, and reflective clothing should always be used for night cycling.

Safety "flags" that attach to the rear of your cycle can help approaching motorists see you more easily.

Always ride single file and stay to the right, going in the direction of traffic.

Obey stop lights and all traffic signs. Be aware of cars even if they are parked. A sudden opened car door can block your path and send you flying.

Avoid cycling in heavy traffic. If you must cycle in traffic, use approved bike lanes and yield to cars whenever necessary. Do not weave in and out of traffic lanes.

Look out for pedestrians and always signal before turning, even if no one appears to be in sight. Watch out for gravel or uneven surfaces that can interfere with your traction.

Bikes are stolen from many places and by many people. The most common place that bikes are stolen from are the home. A few other target areas are parks, schools and libraries.

Using a simple marking code on your bike can act as a deterrent to would-be bike thieves and help law enforcement officers in identifying and returning your property in the event it is stolen or found.

There are several ways in which you can mark your bike. One way is to use a driver's license. The following marking code is an example of this method: MA 9262 DL. The first two letters are the abbreviation of your state; the numbers are the license number and the last two letters indicates a driver's license. A marking code is a simple method of identification that can be used with any type of identification; just remember to record the method used and the marking code.

Besides using the marking code to identify your bike, make sure that you have a physical description of it. Include in the description the color or colors of the bike, the make and model, the wheel size, if it has fenders and what speeds it has.

In the event that your bike is stolen, report it immediately to the police. Tell the police who you are, where and when the bike was stolen and a description to include the marking code and its location.

Rangers to 'lead the way' in June

Ranger community, Army to celebrate 50th anniversary

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Veterans and active duty members of ranger units from across the country will gather at Fort Benning to celebrate the Rangers' 50th Anniversary, June 17 to 19.

The anniversary commemorates the activation of the 1st Ranger Battalion in June 1942 at Carrickfergus, North Ireland.

The three-day celebration, hosted by the ranger community, includes dedication ceremonies for a Ranger Hall of Fame, Ranger Memorial, and a new Ranger Wing at the National Infantry Museum. Other activities include physically demanding events and tactical operations.

The anniversary begins June 17 with a mass parachute assault onto Fryar Field drop zone by the three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment. This marks the fourth mass tactical jump, one of which was conducted during Operation Just Cause in 1989.

Following the airborne assault, the regiment will conduct a river crossing and attack operation. Competitions among the regiment's battalions will follow to determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams, rifle teams and combat medics.

Throughout the day on June 18, rangers will participate in an "Endurathon," a gruelling series of events, which includes running, swimming, and biking. Other competitions include rubber boat races, obstacle course races, a 20-kilometer cross-country rucksack run, a 10-kilometer litter relay race, and a boxing smoker.

The Ranger Training Brigade will host a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at Victory Pond, followed by a Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony at RTB Headquarters.

On June 19, members of the regiment will start the day with a mass physical training formation and run, followed by a commemoration parade with ranger veterans of all wars. The parade will be led by surviving members of Darby's 1st Ranger Battalion.

Later in the morning, a ground-breaking ceremony for the Ranger Memorial will be held on Ranger Field, adjacent to Infantry Hall.

There will also be a dedication of the new Ranger Wing at the National Infantry Museum. Other activities will include a dedication and signing of the print, "Rangers Lead the Way," by renowned artist Jim Dietz at the museum.

AIDS briefing informs soldiers of health risks

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Kelley Hill soldiers received an AIDS prevention briefing recently.

Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division and the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment attended the briefing, given by Fort Benning nurse and HIV educator Sherry Kellman.

Kellman said that the high incidence of AIDS cases in Georgia (the state ranks number seven out of 10 nationally, while Columbus ranks number seven of Georgia cities) places Fort Benning soldiers at risk.

Kellman said that soldiers should first recognize the difference between the terms HIV and AIDS.

"HIV, or human immunodeficiency virus, is the virus that causes the disease AIDS," Kellman said. "There's a big difference between the two. A person can be HIV positive and seem totally healthy. They might not show the symptoms of AIDS for several years."

Kellman's message was simple: if you are going to have sex, use a condom, and use it properly.

Kellman advised soldiers to check the expiration date on condoms, to use a condom with nonoxynol-9 (a spermacide that kills the AIDS virus), not to use oil-based lubricants because they will cause the condom to disintegrate and to avoid sheepskin condoms because they contain tiny holes that do not block the transmission of the AIDS virus.

Kellman also said to follow sanitary practices in every day living and in the field such as not sharing toothbrushes or razor blades.

Soldiers attending the briefing raised several questions, including the possibility of receiving HIV positive blood through a field transfusion during combat.

Kellman said that personnel who are HIV positive are non-deployable and would be kept in rear detachments during wartime. She added, however, that that doesn't prevent someone from engaging in risky behavior just prior to deployment and then coming up positive after they have been deployed.

Kellman said that AIDS tests are given free to military personnel at Community Health Nursing, building 2631, in Soldiers' Plaza, on Monday from 8 to 10 a.m. and on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 12:30 to 4 p.m.

Kellman said the turnaround for test results averages 1 to 2 weeks, the same as civilian clinics.

For information, call 545-2930 or 545-4041.

Kellman gives briefings regularly to units on post. Commanders who wish to schedule a briefing can contact her at either of the above numbers.

Hospital begins billing insurance companies

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Several of the clinics at Martin Army Community Hospital now bill private insurance companies for the cost of outpatient care received at the hospital. This is called the third-party collection program. In time, all of the hospital's clinics will participate in the program.

The program has been in effect since 1987 but only for inpatient care. Recently passed laws now require military medical treatment facilities to bill private insurance companies for both inpatient and outpatient care. There is no cost to patients for outpatient care received at the hospital. Patients with health insurance will not be billed for care if their insurance does not pay for that care.

How will this help patients?

One benefit of the third- party collection program is that care provided at the hospital, paid for by a private insurance company, counts toward the insured's deductible amount. Another advantage is that inpatients with private insurance will not be billed for the per diem rate, this will be paid by the insurance company rather than the patient.

Many people fear that using their health insurance will increase their rates. This is simply not true. The cost of health insurance, unlike automobile insurance, does not increase based on the frequency of use.

VA Q &A

Q—I understand that the VA may bill my insurance carrier for the cost of medical care furnished to me for treatment of my non-service-connected conditions that are covered by my health insurance policy. How will this affect me?

A—It should not affect you adversely. The VA will bill your insurance carrier, but you will not be charged for any co-payment required by your health insurance policy.

Q—I plan to have my husband buried in a national cemetery. Will I be entitled to burial in the same cemetery?

A—Yes, assuming you have not remarried since the time of your husband's death. Burial in a national cemetery is open to a veteran's widow(er); minor children: unmarried children under the age of 23 who are attending school; and, under certain conditions, unmarried adult children.

Q—May VA request my Social Security number on my application for compensation and pension benefits?

A—Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, VA is required to request Social Security numbers to match its beneficiary rolls against files of other agencies. Beneficiaries have 60 days to respond. Those who fail to reply may face suspension or termination of VA benefits.

Q—Do veterans with compensable service connected disabilities have to pay a finder's fee when obtaining a VA-guaranteed home loan?

A—No.

Q—SInce national cemetery offices are closed weekends, how can a burial for the following week be scheduled?

A—When a death occurs late in the week or on weekends or holidays, interment for the next week may be scheduled by calling the local national cemetery where a recorded telephone number will refer the caller to one of the three large cemeteries that are staffed on weekends. A member of the cemetery staff will verify eligibility and schedule burial at the local cemetery.

Q—Is service in the Persian Gulf War considered wartime service for VA benefit purposes?

A—Yes. Under Public Law 102-25, the Persian Gulf War Veterans' Benefits Act of 1991, the Persian Gulf period is defined as beginning Aug. 2, 1990, and ending at a future date to be determined by presidential proclamation or by law.

Q— Is the VA claim number identical to the veteran's Social Security number?

A— A veteran who filed an initial benefit claim before 1974 will have a VA claim number. A veteran who filed after 1974 will be identified by his or her social security number. There are, however, two exceptions. Veterans who file for vocational rehabilitation are always assigned a VA claim number. Applicants for a VA home loan guarantee are assigned a home loan application. number, separate from either the claim or Social Security number.

Pesticides may be unsafe in summer

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Warm, hot weather, growing gardens and blooming flowers bring out summer insects. As a result, the do-it-yourselfers turn to sprinkling and spraying to get rid of these pests.

Self-exterminating is OK, if you know what you are using, how to use it and all the hazards and safety precautions involved with the operation.

Many people just won't read a label. They don't realize that most of these pesticides contain harmful chemicals that, if ingested, inhaled or absorbed through the skin, can be fatal even in small amounts.

They just won't follow the rules to prevent this type of poisoning. Here are a few simple practices that make this task safe and, if followed, will assure you and your family a more healthy environment.

1. When shopping for a pesticide, buy only the amount you need for immediate use to avoid storing a potentially hazardous product.

2. If storage is necessary, put the containers in a locked cabinet or one that cannot be reached by a child. Keep the product in its original container — never in soda bottles, fruit jars, or other common food or drink containers.

3. When applying pesticides, use only the amount stated on the label. If spraying indoors, keep children and pets out of the room and open the windows.

4. Your clothing should cover as much of your body as possible to avoid unnecessary skin contact.

5. Always wash your face and hands thoroughly and change your clothes after spraying. Be particularly careful when spraying in the kitchen. Remove or cover all food or water containers beforehand; be sure you include your pet's food and water dishes as well.

6. Dispose of empty containers immediately, washing them out if possible. Never throw any containers with leftover amounts of insecticide in the trash can or other places where children may find them.

Keep poisons away and out of reach of children always.

It's coming to the Fort Benning Commissary April 14...

533rd soldier teaches class in the Chinese 'Art of War'

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

If you are into the martial arts and would like to try a different style, Carl R. Burnett Jr. conducts classes Monday, Wednesday and Friday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center from 6 to 8 p.m..

Burnett teaches Kuo'shu or "The Art of War" and is of the Chinese faction of the arts.

Burnett, a truck driver with the 533rd Transportation Company, started teaching while stationed at Fort Dix, N.J., in 1982. He holds the rank of "Sifu," or teacher, and is a fourth-level or Hei Tie in Chinese Kuo'shu. He also has a first-degree black belt in Shodan karate.

Burnett, a member of the Fort Benning Tae Kwon Do Team and an All-Army selectee, started his school to teach the ways of the ancient Chinese. He has revised some of the forgotten methods of the martial arts training.

According to Burnett, these methods are essential for proper mental and physical growth for martial arts students. The physical side of the arts is only half of what the art is really about. The other half is your mental and spiritual application, said Burnett.

> "There is no creativity or positive purpose in destruction."
> — Carl Burnett > martial arts teacher

"For example, if you learn only the physical part with a philosophy of violence, you learn only to hurt or kill," he said. "There is no creativity or positive purpose in destruction."

"If you learn the physical part with the philosophies of compassion, humbleness, understanding, humility and love, you have no desire to destroy unless necessary, " he added. "You then use your mental and physical skills to prevent situations from happening or to help when there is no other avenue out."

The Shur Shen Lung training teaches the ways of the seven animals; the tiger, the crane, the leopard, the snake, the dragon, the monkey and the praying mantis. From these animals, their movements, sounds and fighting techniques are learned.

At the intermediate level, the art of ancient weaponry is learned. Skills with such weapons as the bow staff, tanfas, butterfly knives and chinese swords are taught.

For information, call 682-1762.

Nutrition month raises awareness

By Brenda J. Forman
Martin Army Community Hospital

March is National Nutrition Month. Americans are reminded of the of the importance of good nutrition. This year's theme is "Eat Right, America."

In an effort to promote nutrition throughout the Fort Benning community, the registered dieticians at Martin Army Community Hospital are reminding you to eat right.

One way this can be accomplished is by decreasing the fat in your diet.

The average American consumes 36 percent of his total calories from fat. The American Heart Association recommends that total fat should be decreased to not more than 30 percent of total calories.

How can this be done. It's not as easy as it sounds. Fat is frequently hidden in food and may not be very obvious because you do not always see it directly. Foods that you think may be low in fat, like snack crackers and popcorn, may contain fat.

Reading labels is your best defense against fat. Don't be fooled by products labeled "light," "lite" or "low-fat." You should always read the label to make sure the claim is accurate, although label reading may appear to be cumbersome and time consuming.

Here are some tips to mastering the art of label reading.

•Look at the ingredient listing. Each ingredient is listed in the order of its quantity in the product, with the largest amount of an ingredient listed first to the smallest amount.

•In reading labels, you should also be cognitive of words that mean fat. Look for hydrogenated vegetable oil, coconut oil, palm oil, palm kernel oil, butter, lard, shortening.

•You should also scan the nutrition information on the label for the grams of protein, carbohydrates, fat and total calories per serving. If you choose a low-fat product, the product should have less than three grams of fat per serving.

• Another important factor in label reading is to determine the percentage of total calories coming from fat. In order to figure this percentage, follow these steps:

1) Multiply total grams of fat per serving by nine. This gives you the total calories coming from fat.

2) Divide this number by 100. Make your goal to lower the fat from your diet. If you need assistance, contact one of the registered dieticians at the hospital. For more information, call the Nutrition Clinic at 544-1542.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

The Thrift Shop needs volunteers in the Furniture Barn, Craft Shop, and the main store. Consignors, clerks, and cashiers are needed. The Thrift Shop pays child-care costs, discounts merchandise, and provides incentive awards for all volunteers.

Youth Services needs chaperones, special events volunteers, and coaches for baseball season.

The National Infantry Museum needs volunteer tour guides and assistance in the Gift Ship. Training and child care costs are provided.

Red Cross needs individuals that are willing to become Red Cross course instructors. This volunteer position can be for soldiers or individuals employed full time. Courses can be scheduled for evenings and weekends. Child-care costs and training are provided.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Steve Kaczkowski
Staff Judge Advocate's office

Q: I'm getting ready to fill out my federal tax return. I've heard a little about Earned Income Credit, but I'm unsure as to whether I qualify for it. What, exactly, is the Earned Income Credit, and who qualifies for it?

A: The Earned Income Credit is designed to help the lower-income worker who supports a child who lives with the taxpayer. The EIC reduces the amount of tax owed to the federal government.

Since the amount of income and number of children cared for vary from taxpayer to taxpayer, the amount of the EIC will vary from case to case. The EIC is a refundable credit which means that not only does the EIC offset the amount of tax owed on a dollar-for-dollar basis, but the credit can be greater than the amount of tax owed to the government. In such a case the tax payer can receive a "refund" of the excess credit. The EIC is claimed by completing Schedule EIC and attaching it to either Form 1040 or 1040A.

The EIC is available to taxpayers who: (1) have worked during the taxable year, (2) have earned and adjusted gross income of less than $21,250, (3) have supported a "qualifying child" who lived with them for more than six months, and (4) file a joint return, if married.

Members of the military must be careful in determining whether they have earned less than $21,250. Certain income, which is excludable for purposes of determining the amount of tax liability, must be included for purposes of determining whether one qualifies for the EIC.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Tax Assistance Office, located in Building 5, can help you determine whether you may qualify for the EIC, as well as answer any other questions you may have which relate to tax preparation.

The Tax Assistance Office is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and is located at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets. You can reach the Tax Assistance Office by calling 545-1506.

Poisoning — beware of household items, cars

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Thousands of adults and children die each year from poisoning. Even eating, drinking, or breathing in something that seems safe can make you ill.

Eight out of 10 poison victims in the United States are small children. They usually can't read labels or describe what it is they've swallowed. Know the dangers and symptoms of poisoning. Acting quickly and calmly may save a loved one's health and even life.

Drugs, cleaners, pesticides — even a small amount of these "primary" poisons — can cause illness and death. Lotions, sprays, certain plants, milder drugs including aspirin or acetaminophen — "potential" poisons — can also make someone ill when taken in larger amounts.

Leaving potential poisons around, even where they seem safe, is dangerous. Small children love to explore and taste. At 6 months, they can open low cabinets. At 1 year, they can often climb onto counter tops. At 2 years, they can often reach medicine or liquor cabinets.

Never leave a potential poison where a child could reach it. Put childproof locks on all cabinet doors. Buy products in child-resistant packages. Don't transfer containers. Labels, especially on household cleaners, give first aid poisoning information.

Don't tell children medicine tastes good. When you're not looking, they'll want to try some. Don't buy items coated with lead-based paint. If old furniture has lead-based paint, watch to prevent your children from chewing it. Never leave a young child alone when going to the phone or answer the door, especially if there is a possible poison in the room.

There are four common poison dangers for adults: fumes, drugs, cleaners and mushrooms. Vapors and fumes from cars and charcoal grills can be deadly. Always operate them with plenty of fresh air circulating. Carbon monoxide has no smell, color, or taste, but it can kill someone in a few minutes.

Drugs, even aspirin, can make you ill. Take only the amount directed by your doctor or the drug manufacturer. Never give left-over prescription drugs to anyone else. Read medicine labels in good light to be sure you're taking the right amount and the right medicine.

Cleaners can be dangerous, especially if they are not in their original containers and are mistaken for another product.

Wild mushrooms are often dangerous, since most varieties can be fatal if eaten. Unless you are a qualified expert, never eat mushrooms unless they come from the produce department of your grocery store.

If you notice strange stains, smells, or behavior, or if cleaners or drugs are open near the victim, suspect poisoning. Any one of these symptoms may indicate poisoning: shallow breathing, convulsions or fits, excitedness, sleepiness, unconsciousness, mouth or throat burns, stomach pains, headache or nausea.

If you suspect poisoning, call the Poison Control Center at 571-1080, hospital, or doctor immediately. Give the victim's age and weight, the name of the suspected poison, and how much was taken.

Post emergency numbers where everyone can see them in several places around the house.

Family members get assistance in job placement through program

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Because of the significant changes in the composition of the Army family, the Army has placed a great deal of emphasis on its responsibility to address family member needs, according to Shirley Jarrett of Army Community Services' Family Member Employment Assistance Program.

Jarrett made the remarks to a group of family members during a recent employment assistance workshop.

"About 43 percent of our soldiers are now married," she said. "According to research statistics, an Army male 22 years of age is two times as likely to be married as his civilian counterpart."

Jarrett said the number of Army spouses now in the work force is on the rise. In fact, 63 percent of all Army spouses were employed in 1987, she said.

For this reason, her program, and its partnership with local employers since it began in 1987, has become more and more valuable in reducing some employment stress inherent in the mobile military lifestyle.

She said military family members and transition soldiers who will reside in Columbus and the surrounding area are able to take advantage of their service.

> "FMEAP can maximize the opportunities for ... employment in the ... community.
> — Shirley Jarrett
> FMEAP specialist

They hold weekly workshops to help military spouses explore options and receive job information for private sector employment in the local community.

In order to take part in this free workshop, interested persons should come to Building 2640 in Soldiers' Plaza between 8 a.m. and noon or from 1 to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, and complete an application.

Workshops are held Friday mornings from 8:30 a.m to noon.

Jarrett notes that FMEAP can maximize the opportunities for initial and continued employment in the public and private employment community.

She added that the program can help spouses explore career capability options, identify transferable skills, prepare resumes, improve interviewing skills, market themselves and make contact with Columbus employers.

Spouses want to work not only to augment their soldier spouse's income, but also to pursue their own career aspirations, she said.

With the downsizing of the Army, Jarrett said it is assumed that only the 'cream of the crop' will serve. With this in mind, it can also be assumed that the spouses of these soldiers will also possess exceptional talents and skills. FMEAP will continue to be available to help these people.

FMEA program to conduct typing labs

Army Community Services

A typing lab is available in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2640, as part of the Army Community Service Family Member Employment Assistance Program.

Each Wednesday during the hours 8 a.m. to noon a typing instructor will be available for beginning and intermediate students. Basic instruction and practice sessions will be conducted. This is an opportunity for military spouses to learn a new skill or brush up on their typing.

This will also provide military spouses a convenient place for typing the civil service application, Standard Form 171, updating resumes, or cover letters.

For more information on the typing lab, call Shirley Jarrett at 545-3344.

First-graders from three post schools perform musical play

Connie Bridges/Special to The Bayonet
Professor Zachary Russell speaks his part in "The Wackadoo Zoo" play.

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

First-graders in the Fort Benning academically talented classes at Frank R. Loyd School, Alexander M. Patch School and William H. Wilbur School presented a musical play entitled, "Wackadoo Zoo," at Loyd School March 4.

About 35 children were involved in the production that was presented to all the students at Loyd and all of the first-graders from Patch and Wilbur Schools.

According to Kenneth Stettes, Patch Principal, academically talented is unique to the first grade. It is an enrichment program that is designed to serve those children who demonstrate exceptional ability in the classroom.

Stettes added that this was the second year for the musical production.

Producer and director Marie Hand, the teacher for the academically talented programs in the six Fort Benning Schools that have first grade classes, said that she had only seven rehearsals with the cast. The rest of the lines and verses were learned by parents helping their children.

Included in the cast were: professors - Andrew Phillips and Zachary Russell; lions - Anthony Gibbs, Joseph Hill, Crystal Kesterson, Matthew Trussell, Patrick Wilkerson and Jamie McWilliams; monkeys - Tiffani Bell, Alex Colon, Benilda Devarie, Jonathan Haskins, Destiny Johnson, Jessica Lancaster and Jenny Walters; pigs - Paul Colon, Sean Eckhart, Tonya Gibbons, Wesley McRae, Toby Mejia and Alycia Rathbun; Goats - Adrienne Carraway, Dustin Edwards, Carla Houser, Bradley Hutchinson, Lisa Lawson and Kristina Praught; and Cows - Jessica Carden, Zachary Conaway, Betsy Dial, Marc Legoas, Michelle McEver, Jennifer Nelson and Joshua Turner.

Dexter, Wilson and McBride School first-graders in the academically talented classes presented their version of the play Feb. 27 at Dexter.

Fort Benning will participate in the annual U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Nutrition Awareness Program Competition during the month of March.

Nutrition awareness is one of a variety of Army initiatives to encourage good health, promote physical fitness and enhance personal and unit readiness. In conjunction with this initiative, the post dining facilities will emphasize nutritional awareness during the entire month of March.

All military families are invited to participate in a free family health assessment day Mar. 20 in the Martin Army Hospital pharmacy area from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Representatives from the military and civilian community will welcome families and offer them nutritional information and brochures.

The Georgia Extension Service staff will also provide a demonstration of low-fat food modules from the key basic health foods. A representative from Georgia Extension 4-H will present a nutritional program to fourth graders in the Dexter Elementary School. Staff from the local American Heart Association will be available to assist in checking cholesterol and to provide heart risk information.

In observance of National Nutrition Month, a committee composed of representatives from Directorate of Logistics Food Service, MACH Nutrition, Georgia Extension Service and ACS Outreach have coordinated activities to promote nutrition awareness and education among families by emphasizing the slogan "Eat Right America."

Nutrition theme of Children's Reading Hour at post library

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

With Nutrition Month being the theme for March, books read during the Children's Reading Hour at the Main Post Library will reflect this topic.

Julie Hinchcliff, library volunteer, said that the participants will also make a cookbook with recipes that everyone brings in. Then the children will be able to take turns checking it out.

Decorations for the theme every month are being made by Sharon Spaulding.

Hinchcliff said that the Children's Reading Hour takes place at the library every Tuesday and Thursday from 11 a.m. to noon.

"Sometimes we wait a few minutes to start for the children in the post preschool programs that let out at 11 a.m.," she added.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment is helping to sponsor the activity with purchasing a few supplies, and Hinchcliff said that they could use more help.

Any preschooler on post is welcome to come to the Children's Reading Hour.

Artist to visit Patch School

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning's Alexander M. Patch School is hosting Phyllis Stapler as its artist-in-education through March 20.

During the three-week residency, Stapler will meet with each of Patch School's kindergarten and first grade classes in six different sessions. In these sessions, she will take students through a series of activities centered around animals; the animals will range from prehistoric ones through household pets. The activities will include jewelry making, creating masks, creating murals, watercolor painting, and drawing.

She has taught at the Columbus Museum, Georgia State University in Atlanta, the Artsbusters Summer Camp, a spring camp for Inman Park Cooperative Preschool, children's activities for the Arts Festival of Atlanta, and the Soapstone Center for the Arts in Atlanta. Since 1988 Stapler has taught evening watercolor classes at Emory University in Atlanta.

Stapler states, "My ultimate goal as a teacher is to assist my students in realizing their own unique creative expression. By focusing on the experience of drawing and painting, beginning artists can develop the concentration to carry them through challenging visual tests."

Her own work has been exhibited in galleries ranging from Michael Kohn Gallery, Los Angeles and the McKenzie Smith Gallery, Tyron, N.C. to several in Atlanta, including her most recent at the Alias Gallery.

Fort Benning school students took a pledge to fight litter.

Girl Scouts announce plans

Girl Scouts of America

Some of the activities the Fort Benning Girl Scouts have participated in the 1991-92 Girl Scout year, are the Song Fest.

This is when all the troops come together and sing songs they have learned and have a camp fire. Also there was a storyteller that captivated the girls attention.

Also, for the Christmas holidays some girls joined in caroling for different organizations. Many troops participated in the annual Thinking Day.

Some of the Girl Scouts participated in a flag retreat at Infantry Hall this week.

An ice cream social is also scheduled for an upcoming event.

Junior Girl Scout Troop 193

Junior Girl Scout Troop 193 has done many activities this year, with plans for even more.

The troop has focused on recycling and the environment. The girls started the year collecting newspapers and aluminum cans in their homes and from their neighbors. Once a month, the items are taken to purchasing agents, with the monies collected going toward a camp scholarship for a physically-challenged child.

In April, the troop is taking a trek back to the birthplace of Girl Scouting in Savannah. The girls will visit the former home of Juliette Gordon Low, which is on the National Historic Registry. There they will participate in activities which will give them a taste of life in the 1870s. They will also tour the historic district of the city.

Rounding off the year will be a three-day camp-out at Camp Concharty. The girls will hone their skills by participating in water-safety, fire building, outdoor cooking, and wildlife activities. Beverlee (Buffie) Steffy and Barbara Singleton are the leaders of the 13-member troop.

Alpha Bears, families celebrate end of Bradley transition training

By Aurelio Feliberty and Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The Bible says Noah and his family spent 40 days and 40 nights on the ark until the flood waters subsided.

That's about the same time the "Alpha Bears" of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry spent learning everything they have to know about their new M-2A2 Bradley Fighting Vehicles during the unit's new equipment training, or NET.

After successfully completing their day-and-night, live-fire exercise on table eight gunnery March 7 on Carmouche Range, the Bears became the first soldiers in the Vanguard Battalion to earn the 11M, Bradley Fighting Vehicle crewman, military occupational specialty.

Many of the Bears family members joined them on the range for lunch and a live-fire demonstration as they received their certificates of training from the Bradley NET Team.

"Being the first company in the battalion to transition to the Bradley is not easy, but you really did a superb job," said Capt. Tyrone Turner, senior NET trainer with the team. "Some of the support soldiers don't get a lot of recognition, but the support soldiers in your Headquarters Platoon were always there when we needed them."

"You family members should be proud of your soldiers," Turner added. "They've got the top-of-the-line fighting vehicles in the armed forces today. Give these guys your continued support, and I know they'll do well in their next gunnery and next summer at the National Training Center."

"The entire NET was a tremendous experience," declared Lt. Col. Eric T. Olson, the battalion commander. "I m extremely proud of this company and everything they did during the last 40 days."

"You have 13 great crews in Alpha Company," Olson told Capt. Scott Denney, Company A commander, "but you also received tremendous support and outstanding performances from all the folks who are not assigned to your primary crews. The secondary crews and all the mechanics did a superb job."

"All that remains for you now is a few more days of maneuver training," Olson told the soldiers, "before you come out of the field for a couple days of recovery operations and some well-deserved time off with your families."

The soldiers were also enthusiastic about their experiences on the range.

"My crew did an exceptional job on the gunnery," said Staff Sgt. Kirk Patrick, a Bradley commander.

"Generally, my duties encompass the overall maintenance of the vehicle, as well as identifying and acquiring targets while giving proper engagement commands," he added.

"Since this was my first time firing the Bradley, I found it slightly difficult sighting a target and effectively hitting it," said Spc. David Lange, a gunner.

"But despite some initial problems, I was able to score 392 of out a possible 500 points during the daytime firing phase, good enough for runner-up behind the company commander's gunner," Lange added.

Denney and two of his crewmen received Impact Army Achievement Medals and "Top Gun" honors for scoring a total of 922 points on the day- and night-fire exercises. Denney's gunner is Spc. Robert Wallace, and Spc. Michael Smith is the driver.

Ala. students see role of Army women

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Students from Booker T. Washington High School of Tuskegee, Ala., visited the 324th Forward Support Battalion March 6 to get a look at life in the military.

The commercial bus rolled into the motor pool and 45 students jumped off to get a glimpse of women in the Army and the role they play.

The students were given instruction from Company A soldiers in refueling operations and chemical protection on the battlefield.

"Second lieutenant Susan Dutton is in charge of 35 vehicles, 28 soldiers and all the package products that go with running refueling operations," said Capt. Erogies Grigley, the company commander.

Dutton explained to the students how the platoon fuels the brigade's vehicle.

After exploring the aspects of fueling vehicles, the students received instruction in nuclear, biological and chemical training.

"Second lieutenant Sophia Thomas is in charge of these soldiers and trains them to standard," said Grigley.

Sgt. Darrell Copeland told the students about various pieces of equipment, including letting the students try on M-17A1 protective masks.

"There are very few jobs in the military that a women cannot do," said Capt. Lisa Ornoski, the battalion personnel officer. "And there are many ways to achieve a commission as an officer — West Point, ROTC, or like myself, Officer Candidate School."

"In closing, I would like to impress something upon you," said Grigley. "Whatever your plans, keep up your school work. In the days to come, an education will certainly be a factor. The Army is downsizing and in order to compete for skills in the Army, you're going to need a good GPA."

Platoon 'drives' U.S. Army Infantry School

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment support platoon is a platoon with many missions according to 2nd Lt. Amilcar Hernandez, the support platoon leader.

The platoon's mission is to provide wheel vehicle support for the U.S. Army Infantry School, the officer basic and advanced courses, the School of Americas, Officer Candidate School, and Ranger School.

The platoon is broken down into four squads. The first squad is composed of drivers of the high mobility multi-purpose wheeled vehicle, the second and third squads consist of 2 1/2 ton truck drivers, while members of the fourth squad provide petroleum, oil and lubrication to the remainder of the platoon.

"We work closely with the battalion maintenance section to get the vehicles dispatched and working, they work very hard for use and we appreciate it," said Hernandez.

The basic military occupational specialty for support platoon personnel is 88M, which are truck drivers. Lately, because of the downsizing of troops, the unit has been recruiting infantryman from the battalion to take their place, according to Hernandez.

Spc. Bret Thompson, an infantryman, volunteered to be a member of the support platoon. "I volunteered for the job because I enjoy going to the field," Thompson said.

"I'll admit, I never realized how much the support platoon worked until I got here," said Hernandez. "I feel like they are the hardest working soldiers in the battalion.

Military police officer is leadership course honor graduate

By Willie Hay

Grecken

As the Defense Department starts to trim its ranks, those who want a military career will have to compete for the dwindling slots in the Army of the 1990s.

One soldier who never passes up the chance to excel is Spc. David M. Gercken, a military police officer with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division.

Gercken recently proved his mettle when he was named distinguished honor graduate of his Primary Leadership Development Course at Fort Benning's Henry Caro Non-Commissioned Officer Academy.

Gercken won top honors in his class by earning a 96 percent academic average on all written exams, getting all first-time goes on performance testing, and receiving no negative counseling statements.

"With the Army drawdown on everyone's mind, I went into the academy with the idea of finishing at the top of my class," Gercken said. "I figure if I do the best I can in every situation, the Army will reward me for that."

The 23-year-old native of Great Falls, Mont., is also actively pursuing his civilian educational goals.

"I'm taking evening classes at Troy State University toward an associate's degree in criminal justice," he said. "I even made an arrangement with my instructor at Troy State to continue turning in homework assignments while I was in PLDC."

Gercken said building teamwork is the most important leadership trait the Army has taught him.

"When we were in the Persian Gulf, I worked mainly in three-man teams, processing enemy prisoners of war and providing site security and convoy security," he said. "You quickly learn the value of teamwork in PLDC, too, because there your squad consists of soldiers with a variety of specialties."

"My squad in the academy included an air traffic controller and a calibration specialist, as well as people with a lot of other combat and combat support MOSs (military occupational specialties)."

Gercken credited his wife, Leighanne, with supporting him during his four weeks at the NCO academy.

"She never once complained when I called and asked her to pick up emergency items I needed for the next day's inspection — or when I came home on the weekend with a load of dirty laundry," he said.

Serving as a military police officer in the Sledgehammer Brigade affords him "the best of both worlds," according to Gercken.

"Some MPs only get to work in garrison, while others spend most of their time in the field with their unit," he said. "In our company, we get to do both — patrol the installation and go to the field when the brigade has a unit out on a training exercise."

"That's the kind of well-rounded experience I was looking for when I joined the Army," Gercken added. "The more training I get in the service the more it will benefit me if I ever look for a civilian job in the police department after my military career ends."

Canadian students view CAPEX

By Andrew Temple

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

A capabilities exercise was performed Feb. 25 at Red Cloud Range for the Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College. This exercise, which was supported by the 29th Infantry Regiment, is a show of a units readiness and ability to conduct live fire techniques.

The Canadians started out the day at the Collins Training Center on Harmony Church where they were taught to drive the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and how to operate the turret in the unit conducted fire trainer, which is more commonly referred to as UCOFT.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's mission was to provide the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, the M-113 armored personnel carrier, the 60mm, the 81mm, and the 4.2 mm mortars for fire display. The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's job was to provide the small arms portion of the exercise.

The M-24 sniper weapon, and the improved tow vehicle were the vehicles on fire display.

The weapons on static display were the MK-19 automatic grenade launcher, the M-16 A2, the M-9, 45 cable pistol, and the AT-4 rocket Launcher.

After the demonstration, the students were allowed to test fire the weapons.

New logistics course to begin

TRADOC News Service

Fort Monroe, Va. — A pilot Combined Logistics Officer Advanced Course is scheduled to begin June 29 at Fort Lee, Va.

Designed by training developers at Combined Arms Support Command and associated logistics schools, the course will train officers to serve on multi-functional combat staffs as well as to be company commanders. It will be taught at Army Logistics Management College.

"Desert Storm showed the value of this type of training," said Lt. Col. Reg Foster, action officer in Training and Doctrine Command's leadership development division. "The logistics branches had to operate in a multi-functional mode. Much of the logistical success was due to the individual initiative and creativity of the various branch officers. This experience will be capitalized on in the new course."

"Logisticians do not work in a vacuum," said Lt. Col. John Brannon, CASCOM's chief of leadership development and education division at Fort Lee. "Airland Battle requires multi-functional logistics skills to accomplish sustainment imperatives. Operations Desert Shield/Storm confirmed the critical need for company grade officers who are technically and tactically competent, versatile, and multi-functional. CLOAC implements the principle 'train as you fight,' and promises even better support to the combat commander."

There will be 64 officers in the pilot course, representing six branch schools under the logistics umbrella — ordnance, ordnance missile and munitions, quartermaster, transportation, aviation logistics, and Army medical department.

The first seven weeks of the course at Fort Lee will consist of common core subjects. Then the students will attend five weeks of branch-specific training at their regimental homes. They return to Fort Lee for eight weeks of multi-functional staff training. The students will undergo an end-of-course command post exercise that will duplicate the way they may have to operate during combat.

'Good ideas' needed to help TRADOC, Army do the job

TRADOC News Service

Fort Monroe, Va. — Training and Doctrine Command leaders are looking for good ideas that will help to get the command's mission done easier, quicker and cheaper.

"We're not going to get more resources," said Brig. Gen Paul Chinen, TRADOC deputy chief of staff for base operations support. "The answer (to programmed budgetary and manpower reductions) is innovation and creativity...Unless we use good ideas, come 1995 we're going to be severely hurting."

"Good Ideas" has become an official, capitalized programing TRADOC aimed at finding productive, economical methods for accomplishing TRADOC'S mission and taking care of soldiers and their families. That includes maintaining high quality living and working areas.

The primary sources of the ideas are the 17 TRADOC installations. "The challenge is to help individuals at the installations be aware that there are needs for their ideas at other installations," Chinen said. "The tendency is to think that an innovation only applies to the installation where it is used."

According to Chinen, Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., TRADOC commander, has emphasized the program to commanders at all levels throughout the command. Because of the CG's (commanding general) involvement, the amount of contributed ideas has increased, Chinen said.

TRADOC Communities of Excellence evaluation teams are also on the lookout for innovative methods and procedures. During their annual visits to installations, they note any new, productive trends.

The person who accumulates and disseminates these proposals is Howard McDonald, the TRADOC Good Ideas action officer.

"So far 240 good ideas have passed the 'acid' test," he said. "Another 40 had merit but couldn't be used because of public laws, or systems or equipment requirements."

When McDonald receives an idea from an installation or an individual, headquarters' proponents assess legal aspects and applicability to all Army installations.

McDonald publishes those ideas that clear the "sanity check" and sends them throughout TRADOC, and to other military services, federal agencies and civilian organizations which are also sources for ideas.

A list of accepted suggestions, along with a summary and point of contact for each, is maintained on a "bulletin board" in PROFS, the Army-wide computer communications network. Anyone can access the bulletin board to select items to use.

"We're soliciting ideas without constraints," Chinen said. "It doesn't matter whether they come through formal channels or directly from individuals."

Howard does not limit his search for ideas to TRADOC installations. He goes to other military services, Defense Department and federal agencies, municipalities and civic government groups, such as the International City and County Management Association.

One potential source is a city manager in Oregon. Even though his city budget was cut while services were added, the manager achieved the mission without firing workers. McDonald wants to find out how he did it because there may be solutions for commanders facing similar circumstances.

In most cases, organizations cooperate with McDonald in exchange for TRADOC's catalog of good ideas.

"We are doing great things in the Army that have potential benefits in the civic communities as well as other service," McDonald said. "We want to make sure our installations are aware of these good ideas."

Ash Wednesday in the woods

Family Ministry Training Program assists chaplains in helping families

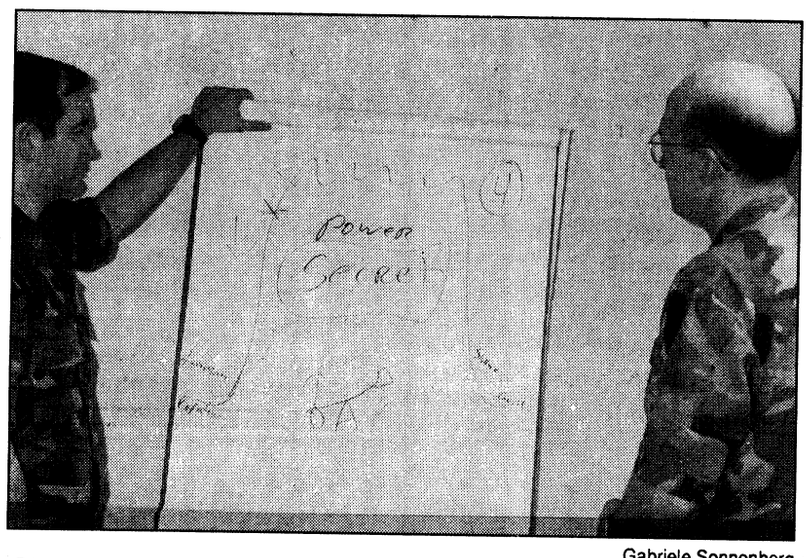
By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Currently, unit leaders spend 15 to 20 percent of their time dealing with family matters. This figure originates from panel findings for battalion commanders. Company and battery commanders and first sergeants report more than 50 percent of their time spent in family matters.

Furthermore, the marriages in the United States are being deinstitutionalized based on divorce statistics, high percentage of unwed teen mothers, children with only one parent and the decline of time spent with the spouse and children.

In order to deal with the changing demographics in relation to the family and update the training of chaplains as care givers, a Family Ministry Training Program has been established.

The purpose of this program is to provide training and supervision of counseling with couples and families and to equip the chaplain personnel in planning and conducting family ministries in their unit or parish.



Gabriele Sonnenberg

Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, post chaplain, is the director of the program. He is responsible for administration and management of the training.

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, family life chaplain, is the chaplain educator and he is responsible for selecting and training students, curriculum development, and student evaluation.

The program consists of training cycles. A cycle is 12 weeks in length, four hours weekly and it includes approximately 145 hours of supervised learning activities.

"The program requirements are individual and group consultation, participation in the weekly didactic sessions and writing of a reflection paper on each assigned topic," Roggia explains. "Some of the topics covered during the training cycle are, theology of family life, the therapist's own family, premarital counseling, counseling the alcoholic family, family violence, planning and conducting a marriage enrichment event, ministry to the single soldier, family therapy in pastoral ministry, treatment issues in cross-cultural marriages, and intergenerational family enrichment," he adds.

"The program is like a refresher course for professional development, which also includes new information and directions on applying that information," Chaplain (Capt.) Don Wilson, one of the trainees, said. "It has been extremely beneficial. On several occasions, I have used the techniques discussed in class, in ministry to families the very next week."

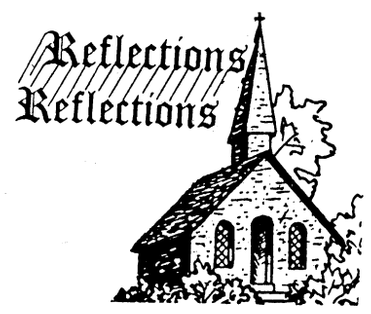
The present cycle started Jan. 9 and will conclude March 26.

"Each training cycle will enroll a minimum of four students and a maximum of 10 students," Roggia said. "This will allow both peer group and individual consultation learning to take place."

Purim

Party to end all parties

By Arthur Rutberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office



Don t worry, be happy!

This is the message of Purim, a rare, raucous, joyous holiday more like a wild party than a religious celebration. In fact, if you read the Book of Esther which contains the entire story of the Jewish Festival of Purim (pronounced poo-rim), it all begins with a party.

The party to end all parties, Le Grand Fete, was thrown by Ahasuerus, the King of Persia, for 180 days. He called upon Vashti his queen to delight his guests with her beauty. She refused. She was banished from the kingdom. After an exhaustive search, a beauty pageant and a few more parties, the king chose Esther to be his new queen. Unknown to him, Esther was Jewish and the niece of Mordecai.

As time went on, the king's vizier, Haman, demanded that everyone in the king's court (except the king and queen) bow down to him. Since Mordecai was by the palace watching out for his niece Esther, this included him.

But being a Jew, Mordecai would not bow down because Jews only bow down to God. This infuriated Haman and he decided to murder all the Jews. He chose the 13th day of the Hebrew/Babylonian month of Adar as the day of execution.

When Esther got wind of this plot from Mordecai, she arranged a banquet (you see what I mean about parties and Purim) where she confronted Haman in front of the king and revealed that she too was Jewish. Not wanting to lose a beautiful queen twice in one year, Ahasuerus ordered Haman executed and issued an edict that all Jews in his empire should defend themselves on 13 Adar.

When the dreadful day arrived, Esther and Mordecai sat in sackcloth and ashes and did not eat. Miraculously, not a single Jew lost his life on that day and the following day was decreed to be a day of feasting.

From that time on, the 14th day of Adar became the day of the "Feast of Purim."

This year, we will celebrate the holiday with our own "Purim Party" Wednesday. Our celebration will include the reading of the Megillah (Scroll of Esther).

The wearing of costumes, the playing of games and the making of loud, raucous noises when the name of the wicked Haman is mentioned.

Purim is not a holiday to be taken seriously and I never have, but, it is a holiday to be celebrated and rejoiced because if it wasn't for the intervention of Esther and Mordecai, we might not be here today.

Step 1.

Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. Rogers presides over awards show

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

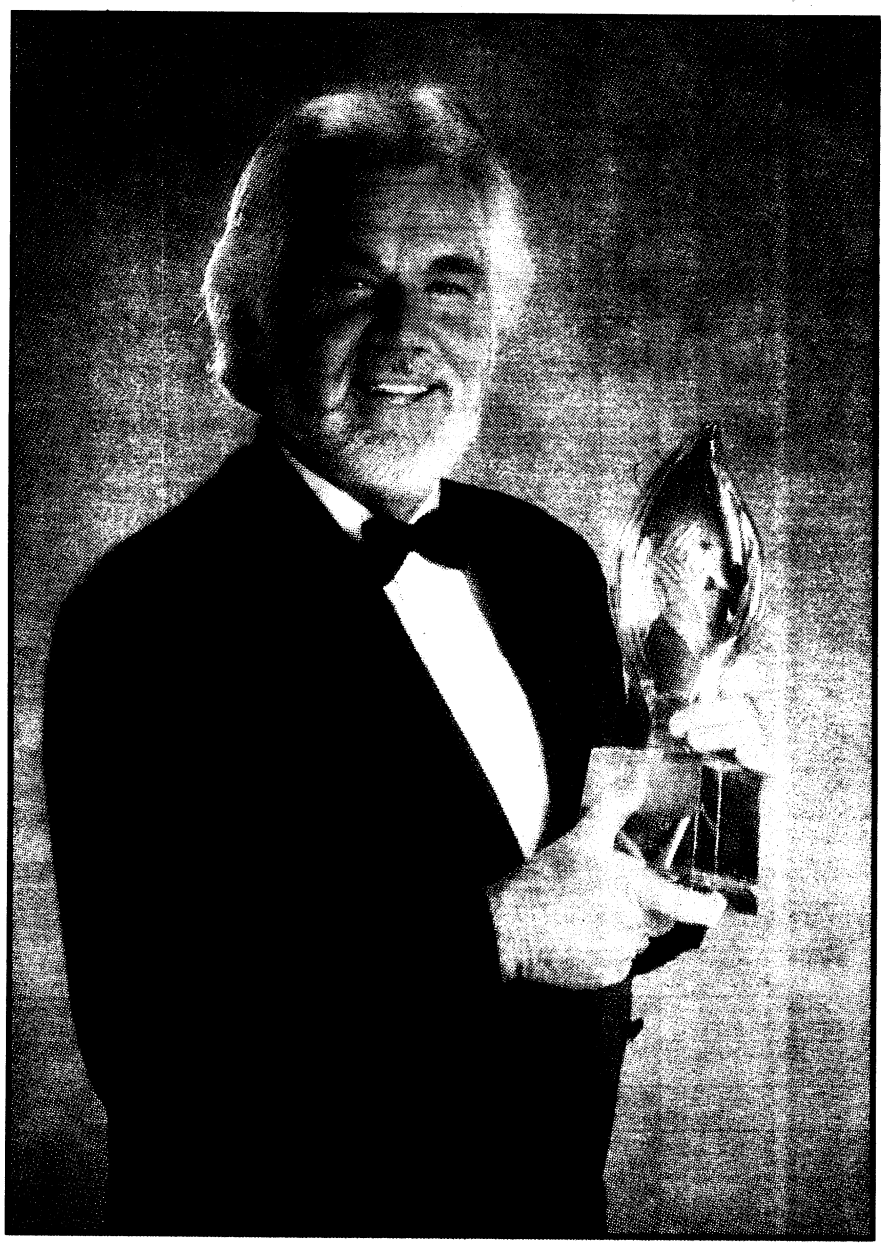
He has been the people's choice numerous times, and this week, Kenny Rogers is that again ... both as a nominee and a host.

The long-popular singer will preside over the 18th annual presentation of the People's Choice Awards, as CBS televises the ceremony Tuesday from Hollywood's Universal Studios, replete as usual with many well-known presenters. With the winners determined by a Gallup public-opinion poll, the event will reveal the past year's favorites in the areas of movies, television and music. Each of the 22 categories has three contenders (unless a statistical tie in the poll makes additional nominees necessary), and two new contests are included in the 1992 edition, Favorite Male and Female Performers in a Daytime Series. Additionally, veteran TV producer Aaron Spelling will receive a special tribute.

SPOTLIGHT

With such familiar tunes as "The Gambler," "Lucille" and "Coward of the County" to his credit, Rogers certainly is no stranger to People's Choice accolades: He has been named Favorite Male Music Performer and Favorite Male Country Music Performer five times each, and he also happens to be nominated in the latter category again this year, along with Garth Brooks and Randy Travis. In the face of such competition, he candidly maintains he'll be surprised if he wins.

"There were years when I felt I deserved to win a lot of things I didn't win, and that's kind of painful," the amiable Rogers says. "I think people who deserve to win should win, and I don't feel I deserve (a People's Choice Award) this year. This is a different award than most, so I guess it could swing either way, if the people (who vote) care more about one nominee than another. I won't be offended if I don't win it, though, because I've had my moment there. If I want another moment like that, I need to deserve it, and I need to work for it. That's kind of what I'm doing now, since in the last six months, I've refocused my career to see what I can do for the fun of it. As it does every 10 years or so, country music is becoming the dominant force in pop music again, thanks to Garth Brooks. Johnny Cash did it 20 years ago, and I did it 10 years ago, so the trick is to jump back on the bandwagon and let myself recycle. I think I can do it, and it's fun for me to try."



Kenny Rogers emcees People's Choice Awards

Indeed, after such recent musical departures as the genre-merging "Planet Texas" and the gospel-influenced "Something Inside So Strong," Rogers currently is working on a new album that has purely a country flavor. That's not only because he wanted to move in that specific direction again, but also because it fills a spot in his long-term career plans. "An 'entertainer' can work forever," he reasons, "but a 'singer' must have hits. It's crucial to learn to identify with your audience, and for them to learn to identify with you. That's a lesson I learned a long time ago. As long as I make people happy when they come (to personal appearances), they'll continue to come ... but if you only have hits, you'd better KEEP having hits."

Serving as an award-show host is hardly a new endeavor for Rogers. He has guided past Grammy and American Music Awards telecasts, among others. Though he's gotten used to that role, he admits, "The only thing I'm ever uncomfortable with is my eyesight. I'm very nearsighted, so they have to use huge letters on the monitors (which inform the host what to say or do next) in order for me to see them. We've always managed to get it, and get it done, and the good news is that it slows me down. I have a tendency to speak very rapidly, and they can only roll (the words on) those monitors so fast. That serves a good purpose for me, but as far as being out there (generally), I don't get frightened or antsy at all. It doesn't bother me."

It also provides an often-rare chance for Rogers to meet with many of his show-business peers, "because when we work, everybody sort of scatters to go and do their jobs. You only see each other at award shows, so it's nice to have those moments as well."

FRIDAY — ESPN presents the ACC basketball quarterfinals, with Florida State vs. North Carolina State at 7 p.m. and North Carolina vs. Wake Forest.

SATURDAY — WSFA broadcasts the SEC basketball semifinals, with the first game at 1 p.m. and the second at 3:30 p.m. For golf fans, WSFA presents the Honda Classic from Eagle Trace, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., at 4 p.m.

Springer Opera House holds over Sweeney Todd

Post employees get 30 percent discount

Springer Theater

The Springer Theatre's artistic director Paul Pierce has added two holdover performances of Sweeney Todd including a "Friday the 13th" show next week.

The Springer has added the public performances tonight and Saturday , both at 8 p.m. For observers of the Friday the 13th superstition, Sweeney Todd is an ideal choice of entertainment, given its horror tale story line.

Sweeney Todd is Stephen Sondheim's musical melodramatic thriller about a wild-eyed barber who seeks revenge on the world after a corrupt judge sends him off to prison on a trumped-up charge, drives his wife to suicide and adopts his baby daughter. When the barber escapes from prison, he slips back into his old neighborhood, assumes the alias Sweeney Todd and opens a shop above Mrs. Lovett's bake house, purveyor of the 'worst pies in London'. After discovering that the judge plans to force his now-teen-age daughter, Johanna, into marriage, Sweeney sets out to rescue the girl and visit retribution upon the judge and his crTickets for Sweeney Todd are $14, $12 for senior adults and $7 for students. Reservations may be made by calling the Spring box office at 327-3688.

All Fort Benning employees will receive a 30 percent discount.

Do you get Cable TV for "free?"

Occasionally, Cable service which should have been disconnected may have been left on. If you or someone you know is receiving Cable TV but not paying for it, or using an outlet that was not installed by a CVI technician, please contact our office.

We're currently conducting a system wide security check for signal leakage. During that time we'll disconnect service to people who have not asked to receive it. Policy enforcement begins June 1.

Post curbs vandalism

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

Several acts of vandalism by post youth have occurred at Fort Benning recently, according to Community Life and Military Police officials.

Recently, two Faith Middle School students ages 12 and 13 were apprehended in a hazardous act that nearly caused serious damage to government property.

The youths were playing in an open area adjacent to the new bachelor officer's quarters on Main Post, as well as the East Main Post family housing area.

The boys began playing with matches and set fire to bales of straw near the BOQs. The fire then quickly spread out of control. If not for the intervention of the Fort Benning Fire Department, the fire may have led to serious property damage of the BOQs and other surrounding property, said officials.

In another case, 16-year-old twin brothers were detained by Military Police officials for larceny of private property, according to Community Life officials.

The property in question was a set of survey stakes from a construction site

This was the third incidence of vandalism at this site. Each time, the site had to be resurveyed at a cost of $2,500 per time.

Acts of vandalism such as these are taken seriously on Fort Benning, said Sgt. 1st Class Audie R. Dame, non-commissioned officer in charge of the Community Life Office.

"The dollars that the Army needs to care for its soldiers and their families are getting more scarce every day," said Dame. "The cost in dollars and cents of property, private and government, vandalized on this installation is staggering. We just can't afford it.

Youths who are detained for acts of vandalism are brought before the Adolescent Advisory Council. The council has representatives from the Community Life Office, Military Police Activity, Staff Judge Advocate, the Community Health Nurse, Social Work Services, Army Family Advocacy Program, as well as representatives from juvenile courts of Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties.

Soldier thankful for AER

Army program assists soldiers, family members

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Spc. Antonio Alvarez and his wife, Martine, are thankful that there is such a thing as Army Emergency Relief.

After just moving here in October, the couple took out a lump sum loan with finance in February to catch up with their moving expenses. When the payment for the loan came out of March's check, there wasn't enough left to pay the monthly bills.

Antonio, who is with Headquarters and Headquarters Battery for the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, went to his first sergeant for advice. He sent Alvarez to AER.

The couple had extra moving expenses because they had married about a year ago when he was home on leave from Germany. Antonio went back to Germany, but Martine did not accompany him so that he could return to the States sooner.

Therefore, when they were assigned to Fort Benning, he came from Germany, and she from Sacramento, Calif.

Martine said, "It's hard to make ends meet having to live off post too, and we probably won't get quarters until September."

Since her father was military, she said she was aware of the AER program.

When they went to apply for the AER loan, the Alvarezes took a copy of their rental agreement and the other bills they needed help paying. They were issued a check the same day.

The contract for this no-interest AER loan has a repayment schedule that is based on the soldier's salary, and they will have about a year to repay the money.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for the campaign.

Post updates campaign

A total of $4,306 has been turned in to this year's annual Army Emergency Relief Campaign, which began March 2.

According to Capt. Francisco Marroquin, AER campaign officer, the drive is slated to run through April 30 with the goal being to meet or exceed last year's total of $209,530.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for this organization that offers emergency financial assistance through no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, dependents, retirees, widows and members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard.

TRADOC issues guidelines

TRADOC News Service

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, has emphasized five "points of main effort" to guide TRADOC in helping to shape the Army for a changing world situation.

Those points are:

- Lead the Army through intellectual change.
- Propose modernization alternatives to maintain the technological edge for soldiers on future battlefields.
- Sustain excellence and relevance in training and leader development.
- Foster organizational excellence
- Focus on soldiers.

Franks recently elaborated on each of the points.

Lead the Army through intellectual change:

"Gen. (Gordon R.) Sullivan (Army chief of staff) likes to call doctrine the engine of change," Franks said. "If we're going to change ourselves from essentially a Cold War Army ... into a post-Cold War Army, then we need to use our doctrine as the engine of this change."

The general said he was one of the commissioned and non-commissioned officer leaders who reported to the Army after Desert Storm. "Hey, our doctrine's not broken. It works. It's not a matter of our doctrine being broken, it's a matter that you can't stand still," Franks said.

The doctrine will describe operations that the future Army may be involved in "to fight and win." It will also outline operations that are short of war, how to deploy a strategic Army, and how to conduct joint operations.

"We'll involve the whole Army in this, in a sense of informed dialogue, so the Army can inform itself," Franks said.

Propose modernization alternatives to maintain the technological edge for soldiers on future battlefields:

"We need to provide for our Army modernization alternatives that have the balance between research and development and in procurement so that we can continue to provide ... the technological edge," he said.

In a time of diminishing resources, tough choices will have to be made from alternatives that are all good, he said. Proliferation of technology will require the United States military to work hard to maintain a current advantage.

Sustain excellence and relevance in training and leader development:

"We saw (during Desert Storm) how important training and leader development is to success on the battlefield," Franks said.

Franks said he knows of instances where soldiers fresh out of advanced individual training and basic officer courses went right into combat in Desert Storm and performed superbly.

"We want to sustain that excellence, but we also want to make sure it is relevant," he said.

By relevant, the general said the training should no longer concentrate on "Fulda Gap scenarios," but prepare soldiers for future operations in which they may have to operate.

Foster organizational excellence:

"Nobody wants to belong to a lousy organization; everybody wants to do what's right," he said.

Franks said his vision of TRADOC does not describe installations or buildings, but is more of a "conceptual notion."

Federal tax withholdings change

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Soldiers and civilians will soon see changes in the amount of federal income tax withheld from their monthly pay, said Bobby King, deputy finance and accounting officer.

King said that as of March 1, the withholding rates decreased because of measures by President George Bush.

"This does not change the amount of tax that people are paying," said King. "It just means that the government is withholding less each month. The IRS (Internal Revenue Service) tables used to calculate taxes when someone files their tax return is still the same."

The immediate benefit is that people will have more money each paycheck, however, people will receive less on their tax returns. If enough is not withheld from someone's earnings, the person will owe money at tax time, added King.

He said soldiers will see the change with their April Leave and Earnings Statement. Civilians will begin seeing the change on their LES as soon as the system is updated to take into account the change, probably within the next few pay periods, said King.

King also said that if soldiers or civilians feel that not enough of their income is being withheld from their paychecks for tax purposes, they can file a Form W-4 Employee Withholding Allowance Certificate to increase the amount being withheld.

For assistance, King said, personnel should contact their tax adviser, the Legal Assistance Office or the Finance and Accounting Office.

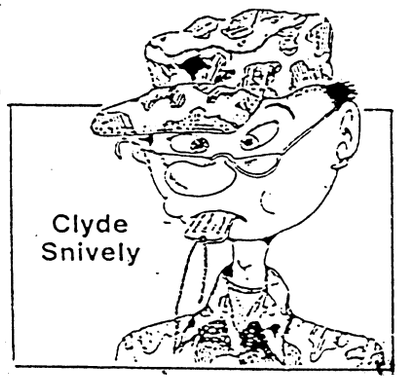
Soldier sings 'diet' blues

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY



The squad leader's stare was unnerving as he passed by during an in-ranks inspection.

I could even feel the penetrating glare of his cesspool-green eyes drilling into the back of my head as he went down the second rank.

When the first sergeant finally dismissed us, I started to bolt for the parking lot when a "Snively!" stopped me dead in my tracks.

"Yes, sergeant," I said, turning slowly to face him.

"Kumhere," he growled.

I did.

"Been puttin' on a little extra weight, ain't cha," he said.

"Maybe a pound or two," I admitted, remembering how, during the last weigh-in, I made sure my pockets were empty, I wore my old combat boots with paper-thin soles and had even cut off all non-essential buttons.

"I think it's time we went on a diet," he said.

"But, Sarge," I protested, "I passed the last weigh-in, and I'm sure you're within the weight limits."

"We ain't talking about me, soldier. I don't need a diet. But you do. You're woefully out of shape and I think losing a few pounds around the mid-section would help."

"After all, if you're going to stay in the Army today, ya gotta be lean and mean. Fail a PT test, weigh in over the limit, and your days are numbered, Bub."

I knew he was right. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to know this Army isn't going to coddle anyone nowadays. After all, more people want to stay in than there are spaces. So I agreed to do what was needed.

And what better time to start than during Nutrition Month?

That was a week ago. I've now put up with seven days of nutritious starvation.

You know how they talk about your sense of smell and taste improving when you give up smoking? Try giving up eating.

I can smell popcorn popping from one end of the hall to the other. And Infantry Hall has long halls.

I can hear a bag of chips being opened 50 feet away. I can feel the pulsating microwaves bouncing off a bowl of pasta. And I can taste the subtle juices of a stick of spearmint just watching a person's jaws exercise a piece of gum.

Never before has time crept by so slowly from my morning piece of dry toast to my lunchtime cup of yogurt to my broiled piece of fish in the evening.

My brain labors to push food thoughts aside as I try to concentrate on other things besides food. But with all the munching going on in The Bayonet office, radio and TV commercials that bombard us with all that forbidden fruit, it's tough.

Why even the commercials for diets make me salivate.

But I'm dropping the excess weight. I'm feeling better about myself. I know I'll do better on the PT test with less weight to carry around the track and to push away from the Earth.

I figure all that will make me more competitive when it comes time to decide who stays and who goes. Who gets promoted and who continues to languish at his current rank.

So color me lean and mean.

One vote can make difference

Voting Information News

When wondering if your vote will really make a difference in determining the outcome of an election, consider the case of the race between Democrat James M. Scott and his opponent, Republican David Sanders, for the 58th legislative district seat of the Virginia House of Delegates. After a recount, a 17-vote loss on Nov. 5 turned into a one-vote victory for Scott, a former Fairfax county official.

Scott was declared the winner after the recount led by a three-judge panel in the Fairfax Circuit Court on Dec. 19 found 6,493 votes for Scott and 6,492 for his opponent.

According to state sources, the change in the election results came from absentee ballots. Votes cast on electronic voting machines were unchanged. More than 150,000 military and overseas citizens claimed Virginia as their voting residence in 1991. Their absentee votes proved crucial in the Scott-Sanders contest and could prove key in determining the outcome of future races.

This outcome reflects the expanding importance of the absentee vote. Its growing significance was emphasized by Phyllis Taylor, director of the Federal Voting Assistance Program, in a recent interview.

"More elections at all levels of government are being decided by fewer voters. Absentee voting is growing, while the percentage of voting participation at the polls has been decreasing, thus military and overseas citizens could continue to make up a greater percentage of votes cast," stated the director.

Post honors Women's History Month

In recognition of the numerous contributions of women to every aspect of our nation, the month of March is proclaimed "Women's History Month." Public Law 100-9, enacted in 1987, designated March as National Women's History Month.

This year's theme, "Women's History: A Patchwork of Many Lives," reflects the strength, diversity and creativity of the military and civilian women who serve in the Army today. Their determination and success are an inspiration for all of us.

Women's strength to endure the hardships of establishing a new country, the stresses of war, and the struggle for equal rights, pay, and recognition stands as a monument for all to admire.

Their vision to see what America can be, a land where all can rise to their highest potential, certainly justifies this year's theme, "Women's History; A Patchwork of Many Lives."

I encourage all personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying the activities here at Fort Benning during "Women's History Month 1992."

Drinking, driving dangerous to everyone

Infantry Branch Safety Office

They kill themselves.

They kill their passengers.

They kill people they love.

They kill people they don't even know.

Why? For one thing, most of them do not realize how badly alcohol affects their mental and physical functioning. Since alcohol depresses the central nervous system, it makes them less alert and slows reaction time; it dulls the senses and interferes with coordination.

For another, drinking drivers don't believe they're going to get caught. According to the National Safety Council, the odds of getting picked up are about one in 2,000 in most places. Most drivers believe if they are convicted, the sentence will be light.

There is still another factor that allows drinking and drunk drivers on the highway. Drinking and driving is socially accepted behavior. It may not be endorsed or approved behavior, but it is accepted. How many times do you drink and drive? How often do you let someone you know drink and drive?

With the spring and summer months approaching, soldiers and civilians will be vacationing, going away for weekends, picnicking and partying. Safety meetings, promotion, and education on the dangers of drinking and driving are important, and supervisors should do more than meet mandatory requirements in these areas.

Special safety meetings should focus on dangerous drinking practices. The dangers of trying to travel too far on a weekend and partying besides should be emphasized. Both civil and military penalties for drinking while driving should be clearly impressed upon people.

TRADOC: main points

"TRADOC must be an organization that continues to look ahead, that stays ahead of change, that has its scouts out that's agile-minded enough to be able to do that."

He said to do that, training developers must visit units throughout the Army to find out training needs.

TRADOC military and civilian personnel must continue to operate with integrity and openness and realize there are no short cuts to doing a good job.

Even though a lot of hard work is required, Franks said, "We must keep a sense of humor about us, a sense of perspective. Spend time, as appropriate, with our families."

Focus on Soldiers

"It's a responsibility of the leaders to see to it that our soldiers receive the training and skills needed to execute their mission on the battlefield," he said. "That's a matter of trust between leadership and soldiers.

"It's a matter of trust ... to see that our soldiers have equipment that gives us the edge, that our training is relevant, ... and that there's a sense of family and command climate that promotes teamwork and a sense of ownership in the organization."

Vandalism: not tolerated on post

The council recommends sanctions for acts of youth vandalism to the command group for approval, said Dame. Once approved, completing the required sanctions is arranged by the child's sponsor, who has been counseled by the Community Life Officer.

In addition to community service, sanctions may include referral of the case to the county juvenile courts for prosecution or even eviction of the family from government quarters. The family may also be referred to seek counseling, said Dame.

"The purpose in requiring children to do community service is to attempt to make them understand that when they commit an offense, they not only embarrass themselves and their families, but they owe a debt to the entire community," said Dame.

Community Service includes such activites as picking up trash in high-visibility areas around posts chools and community facilitie , cutting grass and raking leav around installation chapels a removing waste from the horse stables at the Fort Benning Hunt Club, said Dame.

Normally, the sponsor of the family member or the sponsor's spouse, as well as the Community Life non-commissioned officers, must supervise the child while the service is being performed, said Dame.

"Soldiers who fail to ensure that their family members are law-abiding citizens of the Fort Benning community may be subject to revocation of their government quarters priviledge," said Dame.

"It's in everyone's best interest for parents to provide their children with proper supervision," said Dame.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: The following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. For more information, call (202) 535-8300.

Q — My father was exposed to radiation while on active duty in the early 1950s and later died of leukemia. Is my mother entitled to any benefits?

A — Possibly. The law now extends the presumptive period for leukemia from 30 to 40 years. If your father developed the disease within 40 years from his discharge and if exposure to radiation during military service is confirmed, the disease will be considered service-connected and your mother will be entitled to dependency and indemnity compensation.

Q — Are armed forces personnel who participated in the Montgomery GI Bill but who were separated "under honorable conditions" for the "convenience of the government" eligible for education benefits?

A — No. Separation must have been honorable. Discharges designated "under honorable conditions" and "general" do not establish eligibility for education benefits.

Q — I was granted a waiver of a VA home loan default. How does that affect my entitlement?

A — The debt must be paid in full before entitlement can be restored.

Q — When may a veteran draw a VA pension?

A — Only a veteran with at least 90 days active duty during a war period and who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable may be considered for a pension. The veteran must be permanently and totally disabled for reasons unrelated to military service or misconduct and meet income requirements. A pension should not be confused with disability compensation, which is payable to any veteran with a service-connected disability.

Q — Are premiums automatically waived on a National Service Life Insurance ordinary life policy when a veteran reaches age 65?

A — No. A disability must have originated before age 65 and the insured must apply for the waiver.

Q — What documentation is necessary to prove exemption from the funding fee on a VA-guaranteed home loan?

A — A photocopy of a recent VA compensation check, an award letter dated within one year of the loan application, a letter from any VA regional office, or a copy of the original disability compensation notice.

Women's history month to be celebrated on post

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning will observe Women's History Month with a luncheon Tuesday sponsored by the post Federal Women's Program of the Equal Employment Opportunity Office; the luncheon will highlight the month's activities.

According to Committee Chairwoman Brenda Clark, contract specialist for the Directorate of Contracting, the event will be at the Officers' Club Supper Club at 11:30 a.m. The public is invited.

In keeping with this year's theme for the month, "Women's History: A Patchwork of Many Lives," the luncheon program will feature local Federal Women's Program Committee members portraying selected women who have made significant contributions to our country's development.

These women will include Patti Pfeiffer, Directorate of Civilian Personnel and chairwoman of the committee, as Sandra Day O'Connor; Carol Gilchrist, Adjutant General's Office, as Rosa Parks; Sgt. 1st Class Sylvia Mitchell, Military Police Activity, as Shirley Chisholm; Olga Espana, School of the Americas, as Antonio Novello; and Cindy Sepulveda, Martin Army Community Hospital, as Betty Ford.

In addition, a presentation will be made to Helen Pettingil, reporter-stenographer for the Staff Judge Advocate. The Civilian Personnel Office found her to be the female employee at Fort Benning with the most federal service. She began her continuous service in 1948, but worked on post some during World War II in 1943.

The observance of National Women's History as a national celebration began as a week during President Jimmy Carter's administration in 1977. Then in 1988, it was changed to a month-long observance commemorating women's contributions to American history.

Those interested in attending the luncheon should contact any FWP representative or Clark at 545-1119 or Winnie Torain at 545-3465. Tickets are $5.

Women's History Month at a glance

•Women's History posters will be displayed in the Officer's Club, Main NCO Club, CB&T, First Union Bank, Main Post Bowling Center and Burger King throughout the month.

•The 598th Maintenance Company will present a Women's History Program March 27 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Youth Center. This program will include skits, a guest speaker, and a fashion show featuring today's trends.

•The Federal Women's Program will sponsor a Women's History Luncheon program Tuesday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Supper Club from 11:30 p.m. to 1 p.m. and costing $5 per person. The female civilian employee with the most time in civil service on Fort Benning will be honored. Members of the FWP will portray famous women in American history.

Rangers to celebrate 50 years of action, success

Fort Benning to host celebration for all rangers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Veterans and active duty members of ranger units from across the country will gather at Fort Benning to celebrate the Rangers' 50th Anniversary June 17 through 19.

The anniversary commemorates the activation of the 1st Ranger Battalion in June 1942 at Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland.

The three-day celebration, hosted by the ranger community, will include dedication ceremonies for a Ranger Hall of Fame, Ranger Memorial, and a new Ranger Wing at the National Infantry Museum. Other activities include physically demanding events and tactical operations.

The anniversary begins June 17 with a mass parachute assault onto Fryar Field drop zone by the three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment. This marks the fourth mass tactical jump, one of which was conducted during Operation Just Cause in 1989.

Following the airborne assault, the regiment will conduct a river crossing and attack operation. Competitions among the Regiment's battalions will follow to determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams, rifle teams, and combat medics.

Throughout the day on June 18, rangers will participate in an "Endurathon," a gruelling series of events, including running, swimming and biking. Other competitions include rubber boat races, obstacle course races, a 20-kilometer cross-country rucksack run, a 10-kilometer litter relay race, and a boxing smoker.

The Ranger Training Brigade will host a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at Victory Pond, followed by a Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony at RTB Headquarters.

On June 19, members of the 75th Ranger Regiment will start the day with a mass physical training formation and run, followed by a commemoration parade with ranger veterans of all wars. The parade will be led by surviving members of Darby's 1st Ranger Battalion.

Later in the morning, a ground-breaking ceremony for the Ranger Memorial will be held on Ranger Field, adjacent to Infantry Hall.

There will also be a dedication of the new Ranger Wing at the National Infantry Museum. Other activities on the 19th include a dedication and signing of the print, "Rangers Lead the Way," by artist Jim Dietz at the museum.

WORLD WAR II — A LOOK BACK

Military History Division

This week, 50 years ago during World War II:

° Flying Tigers move north under heavy pressure

Home loan interest rate rises

Department of Veteran Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has increased its maximum home loan interest rate from 8 percent to 8.5 percent.

This change reflects the department's response to recent changes in the credit markets and will continue to assure the availability of funds to veterans.

The last change occurred Dec. 20 when the rate was lowered from 8.5 percent to 8 percent — the lowest the VA rate had been in 14 years.

VA also increased by one-half percentage point the maximum rates for graduated payment mortgages to 8.75 percent, home improvement loans to 10 percent, manufactured home loans to 11 percent, manufactured home lot-only loans to 10.5 percent, and manufactured home and lot loans to 10.5 percent.

In fiscal 1991, VA guaranteed more than 181,000 home loans amounting to a total of more than $15.4 billion. In the first four months of fiscal 1992, VA has guaranteed more than 70,000 loans totaling more than $6 billion. The average loan guaranteed by VA in the current fiscal year is $86,249.

VA home loans may be used by qualified veterans, service members and surviving spouses to purchase, improve, or refinance a house or condominium, and to purchase or refinance a manufactured home.

VA speeds up insurance dividends

Department of Veteran Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs announced that for the first time since 1977, the payment of 1992 dividends to veterans' life insurance policyholders will be accelerated.

In announcing the decision, VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski said, "Accelerating these payments means that veterans won't have to wait until the policy anniversary dates to get their dividends. The result will mean that more than half-a-billion dollars will be injected into the economy."

The decision affects some 1.6 million veterans holding U.S. Government Life Insurance and National Service Life Insurance policies who have the "cash option" and receive an annual dividend check. Policyholders with anniversary dates (the date the policy was issued) in the months of February through December should have received their dividend payment in early February rather than on their policy anniversary date. Approximately $560 million will be distributed.

Armed Forces wrestling under way

Competition is being held at Briant Wells Field House through Saturday

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The 1992 Armed Forces Wrestling Championships are under way through at Briant Wells Field House.

All Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas said he thinks the team is as ready as it can be and will perform up to his expectations.

The level of competition at the championships will be at its very best. The Navy will be bringing 1988 Olympic Team member Dave Butler.

The Marines who used to dominate the wrestling competition are now coached by former olympian Danny Mellow and could be out for revenge since the Army has won the championships for the last two years running.

Thomas said he thinks the team matches up well against the Navy and the Marine's.

"If our new guys can pick up the second and third place wins we stand a good chance to win the title," he said. "It all comes down to who wants it the most."

This year's competition is a qualifier for the Olympic trials. The winners from Freestyle and Greco Roman qualify for the trials. In the past, the top three places from each style would qualify for the trials, and Thomas feels that the new format hurts the wrestlers.

" If you have two or three ranked wrestlers in one weight class and one or two of them get beat in this meet, they lose out on a chance to try for the Olympic Team."

The Greco Roman wrestling will start at 8 a.m. on Saturday and conclude at 6 p.m. .

The following wrestlers were ranked in the top six in the nation for 1991 for Greco Roman style.

Army:

Bart Mease, 105.5, ranked fourth of Fort Benning, Ga.

Derrick Waldroup, 180.5, ranked second of Fort Benning, Ga.

Jerry Jackson, 220, ranked fifth of Fort Benning, Ga.

James Demos, 286, ranked fifth of Fort Benning, Ga.

Marine Corps:

Eric Wetzel, 105.5, ranked second of Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Post b-ball champs play for charity

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The post basketball champions, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, recently squared off against their officers in a game for charity.

The game was played at the Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center to raise college money for the children of Staff Sgt. Raymond Hatcher and Capt. Kevin Wright. two Striker Battalion soldiers who were killed in Iraq on March 2, 1991.

"When the HHC team challenged the officer team," said Lt. Col. Bill Chamberlain, the battalion commander, "the executive officer decided to turn it into a fund-raiser. So far we've raised more than $1,100 from other events."

The game, which started off with the officers trailing, maintained a steady pace.

At the half, the post champs were ahead by six points, but in the second half, Rufus Smith rallied the officers by going on a stealing spree that put his team ahead.

Joe Purdue was the high scorer for the officers with 33 points, while Kevin Gleaton topped all scorers for HHC with 13 points. Even though the officers gave it their best shot, the post champions proved victorious once again winning by 2 points 81-79.

The game generated $121. The unit's next fund-raiser, a golf tournament, is May 29.

Florida State stomps Cruise-matics, 22-4

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Columbus- Fort Benning, Cruise-matics took on defending champion Florida State University in a rugby match Saturday at Stillwell Field and were defeated 22-4.

The Cruise-matics got on the scoreboard first when Bill Miriacle put the ball in the end zone for the first try of the game. The Cruise-matics led for the first and last time in the match 4-0.

The Seminoles came right back with scores by Chris Davis, Clarence Stringer and Julio Alverez to put the Seminoles up 12-4 late in the first half. The half ended with the score still only 12-4.

In the second half both teams went up and down the field without scoring until Seminoles fly half Ben Starret put the ball down for the Noles first score of the second half, the score was now 16-4.

The Cruise-matics put themselves in a hole when Ken Wolfe was ejected from the match for kicking a player in the head. The Cruise-matics played the rest of the match one man short due to the penalty.

Seminoles winger Sal Tozzi capped the scoring for the Noles at the end of the game when he broke free from the defense and put the ball down in the end zone, Alfredo Lopez kicked the extra point try and the final score was Seminoles 22, Cruise-matics 4.

Coach Jim Muldoon was disappointed at the loss but was still upbeat about his teams chances this year. "We should be able to play competively this year," he said. "We have some new faces this year and with the players from last year we should do all right."

Some patterns work anywhere

Outboard Marine Corporation

Fisherman spend hours and sometimes days trying to figure out a bass pattern, that almost mythical combination of fish location and lure presentation that unlocks the daily secret of catching bass. Sometimes they never find it.

"I don't know if it's always a usable pattern, but one of the most reliable patterns I've ever found is fishing boat launching ramps with a plastic worm," laughs Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler Cliff Craft. "It's not very glamorous or exciting, but it sure is easy, and it works.

"Nearly all lakes have at least one concrete launching ramp and usually several. As to lure selection, I use a plastic worm because I can work it slowly along the edges of the concrete, but I'm sure a jig or a crankbait will also work at times."

Craft discovered boat ramp bass fishing by accident while night fishing on Lake Lanier north of Atlanta. He noticed one particular ramp had a streetlight illuminating the ramp, and on a whim, Craft cast his lure up on the concrete. To his surprise, a nice largemouth hit.

Craft immediately cast again and caught another. From there he motored to the next ramp and promptly caught a third bass, and then a fourth at still another ramp.

"At this point, I became a dedicated boat ramp fisherman," smiles the Evinrude pro. Craft thinks boat ramps offer several ingredients bass find attractive. For one, the ramps have a hard bottom that often grows algae. This algae attracts small minnows upon which the bass can feed.

Ramps frequently offer quick access to deep water, a combination bass seem to prefer. They can feed in the shallow water, them move to deeper depths for safety and security.

"Still another factor worth considering," says Craft, "is that fish are often released around boat ramps. . "Not all released fish leave that area. These are the bass you can catch over and over again.

Powell: Army not bigger, but better

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

The military will be much smaller in the future, but what's left will be choice, according to Gen. Colin Powell.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said that if given time to do the job right, the U.S. military will maintain its qualitative edge against any foe.

He said the base force plan, which will cut the military by 25 percent by 1997, will allow the military to downsize without losing combat effectiveness. He has asked Congress to leave the plan intact.

During an interview with armed services reporters, Powell also commented on the importance of integrating the services' doctrines, personnel issues, continued U.S. military participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and requested cuts in the reserve components.

He discussed the various threats facing the United States, saying the greater threat is still "unknown."

With the demise of the Soviet Union, the Untied States no longer faces the monolithic "Red" army. Powell said instability and uncertainty about he Commonwealth of Independent States should be considered when reducing the military.

Powell said he was pleased by the way the services are implementing the base force plan.

The base force plan would allow the United States to deploy Desert Shield-size forces to two non-concurrent crises points.

In other words, sending a million service members to, for example, the Middle East and the Pacific so long as both crises did not start at the same time.

Powell said the way the services are taking the force down has pleases him greatly.

He said it is being done in a responsible way, with planners giving a great deal of thought to the impact that reduction will have on careers, families and assignment patterns.

Powell said the services are gauging the effect the drawdown will have on the military education system and also "on the anxiety that is in the heart and mind of every soldier who may be faced with a career choice."

"I'm very pleased, for example, with the Army, (where) senior commanders (are) sitting down their soldiers and saying, 'Look, here's what's happening. Here's how we're going to take care of you.'"

While the forces downsizes, the Defense Department plans to reduce recruitment, but not freeze it. Powell said the services are getting tougher at re-enlistment points so the force can be shaped in a balanced way.

"If you don't do it properly, you block advancement and promotion," he said. "Then people lose faith in the system. We don't want to run into some of the situations we ran into in the past where, as a result of the drawdown, nobody gets promoted for eight, nine or 10 years. That would be terribly destructive of morale.

"I think we can bring the force down in a way that will not break the great morale, esprit and professionalism that exist out there now, if we're given the time to do it."

Powell said the department's greatest concern is congressional support for the program. He said Congress may be tempted to look for additional savings in personal accounts, forcing DoD to break contracts and involuntarily separate people. This would "do terrible things to the force," he warned.

Powell also addressed the U.S. position in NATO. He said the United States will eventually have only 150,000 service members stationed in Europe. He reiterated the importance of a U.S. military presence in Europe, but said U.S. support must be provided in the context of NATO.

Finally, Powell talked about cuts to the reserve components. In last year's budget, DoD asked for a reduction in reserve forces.

The reasoning was that the threat in Europe had decreased and the reserve forces specifically raised to counter a Central European threat should also be reduced. Congress approved a smaller reduction than DoD asked for.

Powell said that if Congress again balks at approving the entire reduction, the total forces will suffer. "It means we will be retaining units that are no longer needed," he said. "The money going to that unheeded structure will not be available to support valid total force needs.

"I believe in the total force," he said. "I believe in the reserves. The reserves will be even more important in the future, but they must be reduced to a size related to missions and need. To do otherwise is to not make the best use of our defense dollar."

586th is going to Fort Bragg

By Alvin Williams
586th Engineer Company

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) will soon be on the road again after returning from Fort Stewart, Ga. A section of the company will deploy to Fort Bragg, N.C., Tuesday to be trainers in the engineer brigade bridge exercise.

A bridge exercise is an annual event allowing engineers throughout the continental United States to remain proficient in construction and receiving instruction on new techniques in bridging.

There will be five different bridges at different stations. The stations will encompass the bailey, M-4T6, medium girder (using single and double story), ribbon and field expedient bridging.

Different engineer units will go to Fort Bragg to receive instructions on the capability of the bridges, how to assemble and disassemble the bridging, and then to perform hands-on training.

Members of the 586th will be instructing and performing demonstrations at the ribbon bridge site.

The remainder of the company will depart to Fort Bragg the week of April 6.

29th holds suicide prevention class

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment held a suicide prevention class at the battalion classroom March 11.

The battalion chaplain, Capt. Ruben Colon, organized the class along with the help of Sgt. Terry James of Community Mental Health.

"The emphasis here is prevention," said Colon. "We want the soldiers to know that there are people who care and are willing to help."

More than 250,000 suicides are attempted each year in America, according to health officials. Suicide is also among the 10 leading causes of death each year in America.

"Things that you should look for are signs of depression, isolation and decline in job performance," said James.

This class will be given each month to a different company in the battalion. This specific class was given to Company E.

"We want everyone to understand that it is not just the responsibility of the chain of command to help soldiers in need; it is everyone's responsibility," said Colon.

"It was a good topic to bring up and make people aware of," said Pvt. 1 Christopher Boyle, a soldier in Company E.

Singer performs at retreat

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Protestant Women of the Chapel held a mini-retreat and a luncheon at the Religious Education Center.

A special guest speaker, Joan Miller, shared her inspirational testimony and her singing talent.

Miller is a speaker and singer at military installations worldwide, she was given the honor of singing for President George Bush and the families of the Desert Storm soldiers at Fort Stewart .

Miller was preparing for a career in opera when she met and married Frank Miller, an Army engineer.

"Frank and I went to Germany and that is where my life was changed as I answered God's calling to sing his songs for his people," Miller explained.

Since these early years as a military wife, she has traveled the world, while sharing her testimony and some of the lessons God has taught her, and is still teaching her.

She spoke of the joy, the pain and most important of all the growth that accompanies the military Christian's walk with the Lord.

Having been an active member of the Women of the Chapel for years, she has served as teacher, spiritual life coordinator and advisor.

"The ladies in the PWOC have ministered to me in a vital way. I consider it a privilege when asked to sing and speak for PWOC s worldwide," Miller said. "I have a special place in my heart for PWOC."

During the retreat her compassion triggered tears, and hearts seemed to be touched by her talent.

Since the title of the day was "He is Lord of our Talents," the women arranged tables with numerous crafts and arts.

PWOC meets Thursdays at the Religious Education Center, Intersection of Ingersoll and Dixie Road. Fellowship begins at 9:30 a.m. with the program lasting until 11:45 a.m. Baby-sitting is available at no charge. For more information, contact Ruth Bloomstrom at 689-4533 or Vickie Phelps at 687-7583.

Foreign wives form group

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A young German woman tries to capture the dreams and hopes promised to be found in the country of "great opportunities."

What has happened? Why does the reality seem to shatter the dreams she had?

Many foreign-born wives of soldiers enter the United States with unrealistic expectations. They have been painted a picture in pink. The grass seems always greener on the other side of the fence.

After awakening, she may find herself without the familiar surroundings, customs and most devastatingly without family and friends.

"Most of these women are hard-working housewives, loving mothers and are diligently working or seeking employment outside the home," Roggia said. "These are wonderful traits, however, they can place a great deal of stress on the individual, when she feels that she does not measure up to her expectations. The stress can affect the relationship. The purpose of this discussion group is to help couples adjust to the transition from one culture to another."

The Chaplain Family Life Center offers a group for women who seek understanding that develops through feminine, native friendship. The facilitator of the group is a German native married to an American soldier, and has experienced the difficulties created by a cultural transition. She is a trained listener and is able to empathize with the women who are lacking the support and understanding of someone "who has been there."

Since it is a custom in Germany to share coffee and cake, the group will meet for a "Kaffeeklatsch" to discuss and share their thoughts and feelings, and to reminisce. The "Kaffeeklatsch" will be at the Chaplain Family Life Center every second and fourth Thursday from noon until 1:30 p.m., and it is free of charge. Baby-sitting is not available.

The Chaplain Family Life Center will host a retreat for the German Women at the Blessed Trinity Retreat Center in Alabama from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. on April 8. The retreat, refreshments, lunch and baby-sitting is free of charge. Chaplain (Capt.) Don Wilson, Family Life Center chaplain will be the speak. To register, call the Chaplains Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Lent brings period of reflection

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Ash Wednesday is a day of penitence to mark the beginning of the Christian season of Lent, the 40 days of preparation for Easter.

"Christians have always observed with great devotion the days of our Lord's passion and resurrection," Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Roger Kappel, said during the Protestant Ash Wednesday worship on March 4.

At the same time, Catholic soldiers and family members were worshiping in the Main Post Catholic Chapel and elsewhere on post, fulfilling the customs of the Church to prepare for Easter with a season of penitence, fasting and prayer.

"This season of 40 days provided a time in which converts to the faith were prepared for Baptism into the body of Christ. It is also the time when persons who had committed serious sins and had been separated from the community of faith were reconciled by penitence and forgiveness, and restored to the fellowship of the church," Kappel said.

Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, a Catholic priest and the post chaplain, noted that the "entire congregation is thus reminded of the mercy and forgiveness proclaimed in the Holy Gospel of Jesus Christ and the need we all have to renew our baptismal faith."

Kappel addressed the congregation, saying "I invite you, in the name of the Lord, to observe a holy Lent, by self-examination, penitence, prayer, fasting, and almsgiving; and by reading and meditation on the word of God."

After the invitation to the observance of Lenten discipline, Kappel placed his forefinger in a bowl of ashes and made a sign of the cross on the forehead of the believers while stating, "Remember that you are dust, and to dust you shall return."

During the Lenten season, the following services are offered:

Learn to 'shake' the salt habit

Brenda J. Forman
Martin Army Community Hospital

"Pass the salt please." How many times have you made this request in the past week?

On an average, adults eat two to three teaspoons of table salt daily. If you couple this with the fact that sodium occurs naturally in most foods and beverages and is added to commercially processed and prepared foods, you can see why most of us consume two to three times as much sodium as we should.

Why is there so much concern about "sodium" in the diet? The latest reports issued by the National Academy of Sciences indicate that sodium is associated with the development of high blood pressure in susceptible individuals. Sodium may also aggravate existing high blood pressure.

How can you decrease sodium in your diet without eating food that is tasteless? First of all shake the salt habit by reading food labels. Look at the ingredient listing. Ingredients are listed in decreasing order by weight. For foods containing 10 or more ingredients, the first five are the most predominant. Avoid foods where salt or sodium appears as one of the first five ingredients. Keep in mind that a food may contain no salt, but may have sodium from other sources.

Secondly look at the nutrition information panel for the amount of sodium per serving. As a rule of thumb, food items containing more than 150mg of sodium per serving should be used cautiously. So now you ask, what if the product is labeled "Low Sodium" or "Unsalted?" What does this mean? The Food and DrugAdministration has defined what these terms mean:

Sodium free — Less than 5 mg sodium per serving

Very low sodium — 35 mg or less per serving

Reduced sodium — Reduced in sodium by at least 75 percent per serving compared with the food it replaces.

Unsalted — No salt added during processing

You can also decrease sodium in your diet by following these tips:

• Limit the use of added salt both during preparation and at the table. It is not necessary to add salt to water or boiling even if the recipe calls for it.

•Substitute spices and herbs for table salt to flavor foods. Remember that some spices such as garlic salt, onion salt, sea salt, and MSG (monosodium glutamate) are high in sodium and are not good table salt substitutes.

•Rely less on prepared condiments (such as ketchup, mustard, and relish), dressings, and sauces that are high in sodium.

•With the following foods, try substituting these spices and herbs for table salt when you cook:

Egg substitutes — basil, dillweed, garlic, parsley

Fish — basil, bay leaf, tarragon, lemon lime, thyme, parsley, fennel, sage, savory

Poultry — marjoram, sage

Salads — basil, bay leaf, marjoram, oregano, parsley, celery leaves, cloves

Vegetables — basil, parsley, savory

Italian blend — basil, marjoram, oregano, rosemary, sage, savory, thyme

Barbecue blend — cumin, garlic, hot pepper, oregano

Remember, you can shake the salt habit. If you need further assistance, Martin Army Community Hospital has four registered dietitians on staff who will assist you with any of your nutrition related problems.

For more information, call the Nutrition Clinic at 544-1542.

Teens won't be smiling about chewing tobacco

Smokeless tobacco is not a safe option

Teens who use smokeless tobacco (chewing tobacco or snuff) often believe that it is a "safe" alternative to smoking cigarettes. This is an unfortunate misconception. Studies show that smokeless tobacco may be more addictive than smoking cigarettes and may be more difficult to quit.

According to the American Dental Association, the primary cause of most oral (mouth) cancers is the use of tobacco products. This year, an estimated 30,000 cases of oral cancer will be diagnosed in the U.S. Of these cases, about 9,000 will result in death.

In addition to the high risk of developing cancer, the teen who uses smokeless tobacco may run the risk of developing periodontal (gum) disease and tooth loss. Teens are encouraged to think about the facts:

— One can of snuff per day delivers as much nicotine as 60 cigarettes.

—Smokeless tobacco users become dependent on continued use because nicotine, an addictive drug, gives them a 'buz'.

— When the supply runs out or the users try to quit, they may become moody, develop headaches and have trouble sleeping or concentrating.

— Some users become so addicted that they keep a pinch of snuff in place day and night.

— Long-term snuff users have a 50 percent greater risk of developing oral cancer than nonusers because the nicotine in tobacco contains cancer causing agents such as nitrosamine.

Because smokeless tobacco is harmful, labels have been required on all smokeless tobacco products since 1986. This law also prohibits TV and radio advertising of smokeless products.

Nutrition is key to health

Cutting down on sugar promotes better nutrition better living, better health

By Arlene Thomas
Martin Army Community Hospital

How much sugar do you eat?

Sugars are a simple form of carbohydrate. Sugar is often added to foods in the form of sucrose (white table sugar) and corn syrups.

Sugar is a source of calories but contains few other nutrients. A diet with large amounts of added sugar should be avoided because it may keep you from eating more nutritious foods and may increase the risk of obesity, diabetes and cavities.

How much sugar is in the foods you eat?

Listed below are common foods and the amount of sugar in each item:

Food	Sugar
1/2 cup of canned fruit in heavy syrup	4 tsp
8 ounces of lowfat fruit yogurt	7 tsp
1/16 of a cake with frosting	6 tsp
1/6 of 9-inch apple pie	6 tsp
1 can of cola	9 tsp

How can you cut back on sugar?

The answer is not to eliminate all foods that contain sugar from the diet. Learn to use foods that contain sugars wisely, rather than cutting them out of the diet altogether. For sensible sugar consumption, try these steps:

Check the ingredient label for sweeteners and sugars. Sugar is not the only word to look for on labels. Watch for words like sucrose, glucose, dextrose, fructose, corn syrups, corn sweeteners and sorbitol. Remember, each ingredient is listed in order of its amount in the product with the largest amount of an ingredient listed first to the smallest amount.

Control the amount of sugar added to cereals by choosing an unsweetened brand.

Experiment with reducing the sugar in favorite recipes.

Use less of all sugars and foods containing large amounts of sugars, such as white sugar, brown sugar, raw sugar, honey an d syrups. Soft drinks, candies, cakes, cookies and ice cream are also big sources of sugar.

Use artificial sweeteners like Nutrasweet instead of sugar.

DARE to be different

Instructor Lt. W.L. Jackson, a Department of Defense police officer, helps Michael Jackson prepare to speak about his ideas on drug education. Parents learn how changes affect kids

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Parents meeting the needs of their young children as well as their own was the subject of the last in the Young Children Lecture Series that was sponsored over the past few months by the Fort Benning Schools.

Dr. Patricia Nida, author of "Families on the Move," served as the guest speaker at this session for parents, caregivers and educators.

Her focus was on life changes and the effects that they have on families.

She noted that military families have more of these life changes than other people because of the recurrent moves they experience.

These life changes often seem scary and too much to handle. All of this puts families under stress, and many times isolation becomes a main characteristic because it is difficult to ask for help from others you haven't known long.

Also, Nida pointed out that there are times when the stress of the military member overcomes everything else, such as last year when soldiers were in Saudi Arabia.

However, it was from that experience that military families learned how to help take care of each other.

"Care must be taken," a quote from comedian Bill Cosby's book on "Fatherhood," was a survival trick she mentioned to use for ourselves and our loved ones in times of stress.

Nida worked in the Fort Benning School system last year, is a military mother and holds a doctorate in education from the University of Washington.

Well children should not be at MACH unless they have an appointment

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital strives to provide quality health care in a safe and pleasant manner. Certain policies must be followed in order to accomplish this goal, one of which is that children being seen by medical personnel are the only children permitted in clinics.

There are several good reasons to enforce this policy, most of which are in the best interest of the child. The child's safety is foremost, since there have been several small children who injured themselves during the past several months while the parent and physician were involved in patient care. One child picked up a sliver of glass and put it in his mouth, causing cuts. Another child stuck her hand in a container of used needles, causing several small puncture wounds.

Well children catch illnesses from exposure to sick patients. The person sitting next to your child in a waiting room may have a contagious disease. The presence of children other than those who are patients is a distraction when the doctor is trying to examine and evaluate other family members.

This is not a new policy. Clinic personnel have been reluctant to enforce this policy because they realize that babysitting service is sometimes hard to find. There are several child care facilities on Fort Benning, such as Tot Town, where you may arrange to leave your children.

Parents should be reminded that appointments may be rescheduled when children who do not require medical care are brought to the clinics, depending on the medical problem and the situation on the clinic at the time.

Local French organization offers many opportunities

Upcoming events to include spring luncheon, Bastille Day picnic

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A quarterly membership meeting March 31, spring luncheon to be prepared by a French chef and a picnic on Bastille Day, July 14 are just a few of the upcoming activities planned for the local French organization, Alliance Francaise.

According to Terry Followill, vice president, the local chapter of Alliance Francaise was established in May of 1991 as the result of efforts of two Columbus people, Don Bowman, Certified Public Accountan., and Charlotte Osterburg, intercultural liaison for the Human Relations Commission of Georgia.

It is a branch of a non-profit, worldwide, cultural and educational organization founded in Paris in 1883 to encourage and further the knowledge of the French culture and language, and to foster friendly relations between the American and French people.

Lt. Col. Dominique Mariotti, French liaison officer at Fort Benning, spoke at the group's last meeting.

Followill said that its current membership is at about 65, and Fort Benning is a direct link to the local French community for them. This has to do with the fact that allied officers from French-speaking countries take courses here and because soldiers are often well-traveled in Europe and interested in the French culture.

However, meetings are conducted in English, and a person doesn't have to speak French to join.

Also, their membership includes a cross-section of people from business, civic and educational sources.

Some of their past activities have included attending a French foreign film at Columbus College entitled, "Au Revoir Les Enfants" and an excursion to Atlanta to High Museum to view an exhibit of French impressionistic paintings called "Corot to Monet," which was followed by lunch at a French restaurant, Maizon Gourmet."

Also, Followill, a former high school French teacher herself, believes that some day the group would like to provide a French language school, but they need to get better established first.

Lucy Bowers, president, envisions the group someday going to France together. She has been a "goodwill ambassador" on her own matching up French visitors with American homes.

Other officers include: Roger Harris, secretary, and Martine Petite, treasurer.

As a benefit of being part of the international organization, the local Alliance Francaise is offered additional access to speakers affiliated with the national group. They also intend to work out some joint meetings with the Atlanta organization.

There are 175 chapters of this group in the United States and 1,300 chapters worldwide in 105 foreign countries.

For more information, contact Followill at 322-1790.

USAA. 70 YEARS IN THE MAKING.

Growth doesn't happen overnight. It takes a special kind of insight to envision the future and plan for it.

At USAA, our vision of tomorrow grew from one powerful idea - be the best at servicing our members and all else will follow. Post Students' Wives' Association host events

Students' Wives' Association

If you're a member of the Officers' Club and you're not attending the Students' Wives' Association events, you're missing out.

The events planned each week are really excuses to get together and meet other wives whose husbands are students attending Infantry Officer Basic Course, Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Ranger School, Airborne School or any other training school. Children are always welcome as well as other FBOC members.

April 2 - Stitch and Chat. Take a break, get out of the house, and bring your cross stitch, embroidery or other craft. If you don't have a craft, come anyway; SWA will help you learn one. Be there at 2 p.m.

April 9 - Trip to Columbus Museum. Meet at 10 a.m. at the Officers' Club. SWA will carpool to the museum.

April 16 - Image consulting class. 7 p.m. Enjoy a slide show on how to determine your perfect colors. Complete a make-up and fashion personality quiz. Learn your body type and how to build a core wardrobe. To make your dollars stretch while you improve your image.

April 23 - Sweatshirt painting, 11:30 a.m. You don't have to be an artist. Choose from a wide variety of iron-on transfers and if you can color in the lines, you're set to go. Bring a white or light colored sweatshirt,T-shirt, boxers, night shirt or whatever you'd like to decorate and $5 for the pant and supplies.

April 30 - Kid's Day Picnic at Uchee Creek. Meet at the club at 11 a.m. Everyone is invited to picnic and relax with or without kids. Bring your lunch. Grills are available.

Meet other wives going to your next duty station or meet wives who've already been there. Sign up to swap baby-sitting, get rides to post or to offer rides to those in need.

Girl Scouts participate in retreat ceremony

Fort Benning Girl Scouts

Girl Scouts from Junior Troops 104 and 193, Cadeete Troop 135 and Senior Troop 69 participated in a flag retreat ceremony March 11 as one of many activities to celebrate March as Girl Scouts month.

The ceremony was in front of Infantry Hall, building 4. The color guard for the event was from the 34th Medical Battalion and under the command of Staff Sgt. Chris Martin.

The Girl Scouts who wore full uniforms for the event were Dagny White, Toni Ross, Shinika Jackson, Tina Ortism, Schauntrice Scoggins, Fallon Simmons, Christine Singer, Sylvia Singleton, Melanie Steffi, LaShaundra Taylor, Christine Carter, Amber Floyd and Cindi Floyd. Stephanie Mason, a senior Girl Scout with Troop 69, called the commands for the ceremony.

Coordinators for the event were Inge Mason and Sandra Floyd. They invited the guard, visiting scouts, their parents and scout leaders to close the event with a friendship circle around the flag pole and to sing "Taps."

AAFES presents its summer catalog

Army and Air Force Exchange Services

The all services exchange mail order catalog's rolling out its spring/summer edition featuring more than 400 pages filled with merchandise from around the globe.

What's new this year? The look of the catalog has changed. Catalog sales officials point to improved layouts with better, less crowded, merchandise presentation. Also, shoppers will easily spot new items and they'll be marked with a logo.

The spring/summer edition includes categories never before offered to its customers:

• For those planning to walk down the aisle, the bridal collection features eight pages of fashions and wedding gowns, outfits for the flower girl, and bridesmaids dresses that also make elegant evening gowns. The line of bridal accessories includes gloves, veils and shoes.

• Another first for an additional charge, customers can protect their audio and video equipment as well as home computers with a two- to three-year extended warranty. The items included in the program are marked.

• There's also a selection of Navy Exchange and Army and Air Force Exchange Service house brands for basic household products — diapers, for instance.

Customers will again find the $5 coupon they can apply to their first purchase. The catalogs themselves sell for $3.

One feature officials want to make sure shoppers know about are the gift certificates available through the catalog. The certificates, from $15 to $500 redeemable at any military exchange, can be purchased to give to anyone with exchange privileges.

Who can use the catalog? The answer is simple. If you have exchange privileges, then you can shop the catalog. Active duty military, retirees, reservists and guard members, Coast Guard, or Department of Defense Civilians assigned overseas and dependents are authorized catalog customers.

Susan Lucci gets 'Double' exposure

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

Viewers who can't get enough of afternoon-TV superstar Susan Lucci are about to get a bonus, times two.

The perennial bridesmaid at the annual Daytime Emmy Awards for the past 12 years, since she has been nominated but has left without winning each time as the willful Erica of ABC's "All My Children," the actress gets a rare opportunity this week to play two distinctly different characters in the same story. Sunday's new CBS drama "Double Edge" casts her both as professional assassin Carmen Moore and as Maggie Dutton, an FBI agent who is dispatched to find and arrest the other woman.

The project reunites Lucci with Robert Urich, previously her co-star in the 1984 V-movie "Invitation to Hell," who now appears as Maggie's ex-husband and fellow FBI operative. Robert Prosky, Michael Woods and Paul Freeman also appear, but there's no question that the film's focus clearly is on Lucci ... twice over, no less, making it little surprise that she deems the result "the most demanding work I've ever done."

Though enacting look-alike parts might not seem especially unusual for someone who hails from the soap-opera world, the pleasant Lucci stresses that her alter egos in "Double Edge" are "not twins, not sisters, no relation at all. Sometimes, I am seen in both roles at the same time, so I'm basically playing scenes with myself. At other times, I'm just one character or the other and sometimes, I'm one character impersonating the other character."

That multiplication can get a bit hairy for a single performer, especially under the rapid production pace of a television film, but Lucci claims, "I was surprised that it was less confusing than I thought it was going to be, once I had firmly established each character. Still, I kept a real watchful eye on that, as did the director and the producers. I stayed focused on every single scene and every single exchange, because I just didn't want to drop the ball at any point."

Susan Lucci plays dual role in 'Double Edge'

Her past prime-time projects have provided her with images both overtly glamorous — "Mafia Princess," "Anastasia" — and comparatively ordinary — "The Bride in Black," last fall's "The Woman Who Sinned" — and Lucci feels that "Double Edge" gives her the best of both worlds:

"One is an FBI agent who is very good at what she does, and the other is a hired killer and a sociopath who has eluded the authorities for a number of years, and she's also very good at what she does. On the outside, they look like two people who would have nothing to do with each other ... but this really is about how, under the skin, they have some things in common that surprise even them. It's also about father-daughter relationships, and how they shape who these women are." Prosky is featured as the Maggie character's dad, a retired police officer.

Many daytime-serial talents state that working in that genre is some of the best training an actor can have, but Lucci gained another sort of education from doing "Double Edge," because she was exposed for the first time to the technical wizardry that allows her to appear on screen in both parts simultaneously.

"The cameras had to be locked precisely in place" while she switched costumes, she reports, "and it's a very involved process. In this case, there were other aspects as well, because I'm not playing two people who physically resemble other. There were certain changes (between the characters) to makeup and hair, and the body language and actual way of speaking also were different. Each part is very different from the other, and they're both very different from other parts I've played. For instance, Carmen is somebody who's a chameleon, who doesn't want to stand out in a crowd and needs to disappear sometimes. Being a sociopath is a clinical condition, and she doesn't believe she's a part of the human race at all."

Lucci admits that while she initially was excited by the prospect of the

Ray Charles to come to Columbus

Columbus Convention & Visitors' Bureau

Ray Charles is coming to Columbus Oct. 10 as part of the quincentennial celebration.

According to Brenda Price, executive director of the Columbus Convention and Visitors' Bureau, the festival is one of many events planned to celebrate the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' encounter of the new world.

The festival, slated for Oct. 2 through 10, will feature a nine-day musical extravaganza. Performers of music of all kinds, indigenous to, or developed in the Americas, will be featured.

"We look forward to Ray Charles coming to Columbus," Price said. "We think it is especially appropriate for him to be here for this celebration since he is a native Georgian."

Also, the five-member Raeletts and the 17-piece Ray Charles Orchestra will also be appearing.

dual duty "Double Edge" required of her, the rigors of actually doing it added up to a bit more than she had bargained for. "When they sent me the script," she recalls, "they said, 'While you're reading this, please keep in mind that we'd like you to play both parts.' As I read it, I felt that I would love to play either one, because they were both very rich and very detailed. I don't know whose idea it was to have me play them both, or why, but I was just thrilled to have the chance. It was great for me."

As with last season, when she also appeared in several episodes of "Dallas" and guest-hosted "Saturday Night Live," Lucci again has plenty of activities outside "All My Children." In addition to Sunday's movie, she also has been featured in the Arts & Entertainment Network series "The Class of the 20th Century" and she's continuing to market a collection of beauty products.

Post curbs vandalism

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

Several acts of vandalism by post youth have occurred at Fort Benning recently, according to Community Life and Military Police officials.

Recently, two Faith Middle School students ages 12 and 13 were apprehended in a hazardous act that nearly caused serious damage to government property.

The youths were playing in an open area adjacent to the new bachelor officer's quarters on Main Post, as well as the East Main Post family housing area.

The boys began playing with matches and set fire to bales of straw near the BOQs. The fire then quickly spread out of control. If not for the intervention of the Fort Benning Fire Department, the fire may have led to serious property damage of the BOQs and other surrounding property, said officials.

In another case, 16-year-old twin brothers were detained by Military Police officials for larceny of private property, according to Community Life officials.

The property in question was a set of survey stakes from a construction site

This was the third incidence of vandalism at this site. Each time, the site had to be resurveyed at a cost of $2,500 per time.

Acts of vandalism such as these are taken seriously on Fort Benning, said Sgt. 1st Class Audie R. Dame, non-commissioned officer in charge of the Community Life Office.

"The dollars that the Army needs to care for its soldiers and their families are getting more scarce every day," said Dame. "The cost in dollars and cents of property, private and government, vandalized on this installation is staggering. We just can't afford it.

Youths who are detained for acts of vandalism are brought before the Adolescent Advisory Council. The council has representatives from the Community Life Office, Military Police Activity, Staff Judge Advocate, the Community Health Nurse, Social Work Services, Army Family Advocacy Program, as well as representatives from juvenile courts of Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties.

Soldier thankful for AER

Army program assists soldiers, family members

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Spc. Antonio Alvarez and his wife, Martine, are thankful that there is such a thing as Army Emergency Relief.

After just moving here in October, the couple took out a lump sum loan with finance in February to catch up with their moving expenses. When the payment for the loan came out of March's check, there wasn't enough left to pay the monthly bills.

Antonio, who is with Headquarters and Headquarters Battery for the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, went to his first sergeant for advice. He sent Alvarez to AER.

The couple had extra moving expenses because they had married about a year ago when he was home on leave from Germany. Antonio went back to Germany, but Martine did not accompany him so that he could return to the States sooner.

Therefore, when they were assigned to Fort Benning, he came from Germany, and she from Sacramento, Calif.

Martine said, "It's hard to make ends meet having to live off post too, and we probably won't get quarters until September."

Since her father was military, she said she was aware of the AER program.

When they went to apply for the AER loan, the Alvarezes took a copy of their rental agreement and the other bills they needed help paying. They were issued a check the same day.

The contract for this no-interest AER loan has a repayment schedule that is based on the soldier's salary, and they will have about a year to repay the money.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for the campaign.

Post updates campaign

A total of $4,306 has been turned in to this year's annual Army Emergency Relief Campaign, which began March 2.

According to Capt. Francisco Marroquin, AER campaign officer, the drive is slated to run through April 30 with the goal being to meet or exceed last year's total of $209,530.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for this organization that offers emergency financial assistance through no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, dependents, retirees, widows and members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard.

Federal tax withholdings change

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Soldiers and civilians will soon see changes in the amount of federal income tax withheld from their monthly pay, said Bobby King, deputy finance and accounting officer.

King said that as of March 1, the withholding rates decreased because of measures by President George Bush.

"This does not change the amount of tax that people are paying," said King. "It just means that the government is withholding less each month. The IRS (Internal Revenue Service) tables used to calculate taxes when someone files their tax return is still the same."

The immediate benefit is that people will have more money each paycheck, however, people will receive less on their tax returns. If enough is not withheld from someone's earnings, the person will owe money at tax time, added King.

He said soldiers will see the change with their April Leave and Earnings Statement. Civilians will begin seeing the change on their LES as soon as the system is updated to take into account the change, probably within the next few pay periods, said King.

King also said that if soldiers or civilians feel that not enough of their income is being withheld from their paychecks for tax purposes, they can file a Form W-4 Employee Withholding Allowance Certificate to increase the amount being withheld.

For assistance, King said, personnel should contact their tax adviser, the Legal Assistance Office or the Finance and Accounting Office.

TRADOC issues guidelines

TRADOC News Service

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, has emphasized five "points of main effort" to guide TRADOC in helping to shape the Army for a changing world situation.

Those points are:

- Lead the Army through intellectual change.
- Propose modernization alternatives to maintain the technological edge for soldiers on future battlefields.
- Sustain excellence and relevance in training and leader development.
- Foster organizational excellence
- Focus on soldiers.

Franks recently elaborated on each of the points.

Lead the Army through intellectual change:

"Gen. (Gordon R.) Sullivan (Army chief of staff) likes to call doctrine the engine of change," Franks said. "If we're going to change ourselves from essentially a Cold War Army ... into a post-Cold War Army, then we need to use our doctrine as the engine of this change."

The general said he was one of the commissioned and non-commissioned officer leaders who reported to the Army after Desert Storm. "Hey, our doctrine's not broken. It works. It's not a matter of our doctrine being broken, it's a matter that you can't stand still," Franks said.

The doctrine will describe operations that the future Army may be involved in "to fight and win." It will also outline operations that are short of war, how to deploy a strategic Army, and how to conduct joint operations.

"We'll involve the whole Army in this, in a sense of informed dialogue, so the Army can inform itself," Franks said.

Propose modernization alternatives to maintain the technological edge for soldiers on future battlefields:

"We need to provide for our Army modernization alternatives that have the balance between research and development and in procurement so that we can continue to provide ... the technological edge," he said.

In a time of diminishing resources, tough choices will have to be made from alternatives that are all good, he said. Proliferation of technology will require the United States military to work hard to maintain a current advantage.

Sustain excellence and relevance in training and leader development:

"We saw (during Desert Storm) how important training and leader development is to success on the battlefield," Franks said.

Franks said he knows of instances where soldiers fresh out of advanced individual training and basic officer courses went right into combat in Desert Storm and performed superbly.

"We want to sustain that excellence, but we also want to make sure it is relevant," he said.

By relevant, the general said the training should no longer concentrate on "Fulda Gap scenarios," but prepare soldiers for future operations in which they may have to operate.

Foster organizational excellence:

"Nobody wants to belong to a lousy organization; everybody wants to do what's right," he said.

Franks said his vision of TRADOC does not describe installations or buildings, but is more of a "conceptual notion."

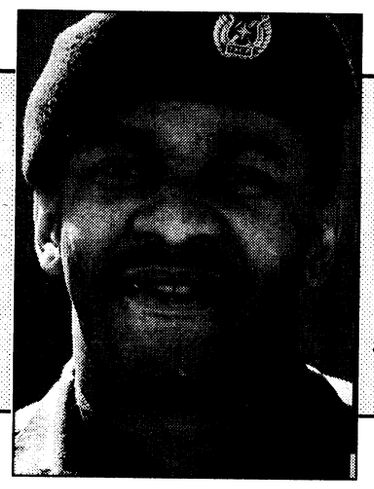
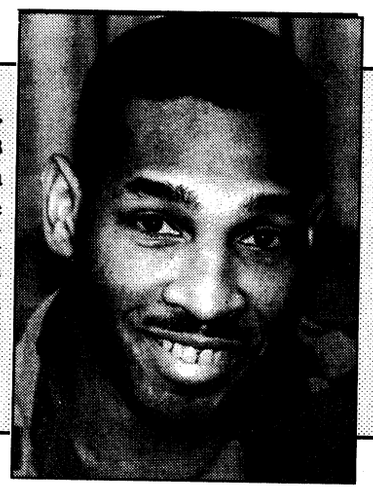
VARIOUS VOICES

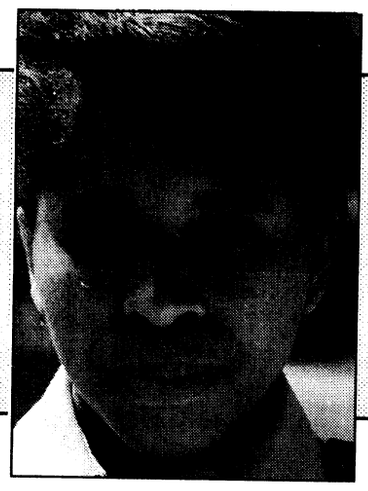
If you could create a holiday for any woman, who would it be and why?



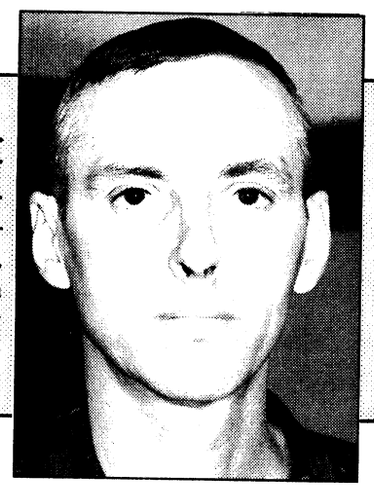
Air Force Staff Sgt. Michael R. Lacey, Detachment 4, 507th Air Control Wing— "I would create a holiday for my wife, Paula. Being a wife and mother is a full-time job, and she deserves recognition."



Capt. George Spriggs, U.S. Army Information Systems Command— "I would make a holiday for my mother. She taught me correct principles, ensured that I understood and practiced those principles, and most important, she taught me the values of turning the hearts of children back to the parents."



Spc. Debra Dawkins, U.S. Army Information Systems Command— "I would create a special day for all women. Women have made so many contributions and have so much to offer. Mother's Day doesn't cover all the single women who have made contribuitons to society."



Command Sgt. Maj. Wayne L. Gibney, command sergeant major of the Henry Caro Non-Commissioned Officers Academy — "I would create a holiday for my wife, Linda, for her 27 years of dedication to and love for our family, the Army and the soldiers she has helped."

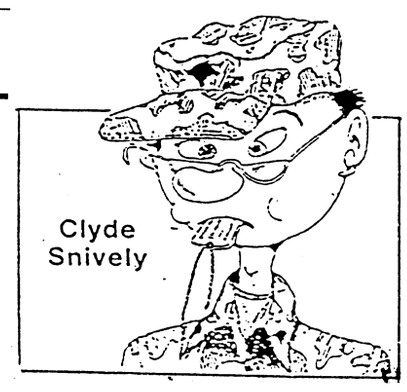
Rose G. Greer, civilian employee, Henry Caro Non-Commissioned Officers Academy— "I'd create a holiday for Mary Kay Ash, founder and president of Mary Kay Cosmetics, because she has shown women how to look their best and how to achieve, suceed and prosper in business."

Sgt. Michael C. Sullivan, Co. C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment— "I'd make a holiday for Coleen Thomas, my fiancee. Every day with her is like a holiday for me, and she should be recognized for being an outstanding person."

Soldier sings 'diet' blues

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY



The squad leader's stare was unnerving as he passed by during an in-ranks inspection.

I could even feel the penetrating glare of his cesspool-green eyes drilling into the back of my head as he went down the second rank.

When the first sergeant finally dismissed us, I started to bolt for the parking lot when a "Snively!" stopped me dead in my tracks.

"Yes, sergeant," I said, turning slowly to face him.

"Kumhere," he growled.

I did.

"Been puttin' on a little extra weight, ain't cha," he said.

"Maybe a pound or two," I admitted, remembering how, during the last weigh-in, I made sure my pockets were empty, I wore my old combat boots with paper-thin soles and had even cut off all non-essential buttons.

"I think it's time we went on a diet," he said.

"But, Sarge," I protested, "I passed the last weigh-in, and I'm sure you're within the weight limits."

"We ain't talking about me, soldier. I don't need a diet. But you do. You're woefully out of shape and I think losing a few pounds around the mid-section would help."

"After all, if you're going to stay in the Army today, ya gotta be lean and mean. Fail a PT test, weigh in over the limit, and your days are numbered, Bub."

I knew he was right. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to know this Army isn't going to coddle anyone nowadays. After all, more people want to stay in than there are spaces. So I agreed to do what was needed.

And what better time to start than during Nutrition Month?

That was a week ago. I've now put up with seven days of nutritious starvation.

You know how they talk about your sense of smell and taste improving when you give up smoking? Try giving up eating.

I can smell popcorn popping from one end of the hall to the other. And Infantry Hall has long halls.

I can hear a bag of chips being opened 50 feet away. I can feel the pulsating microwaves bouncing off a bowl of pasta. And I can taste the subtle juices of a stick of spearmint just watching a person's jaws exercise a piece of gum.

Never before has time crept by so slowly from my morning piece of dry toast to my lunchtime cup of yogurt to my broiled piece of fish in the evening.

My brain labors to push food thoughts aside as I try to concentrate on other things besides food. But with all the munching going on in The Bayonet office, radio and TV commercials that bombard us with all that forbidden fruit, it's tough.

Why even the commercials for diets make me salivate.

But I'm dropping the excess weight. I'm feeling better about myself. I know I'll do better on the PT test with less weight to carry around the track and to push away from the Earth.

I figure all that will make me more competitive when it comes time to decide who stays and who goes. Who gets promoted and who continues to languish at his current rank.

So color me lean and mean.

One vote can make difference

Voting Information News

When wondering if your vote will really make a difference in determining the outcome of an election, consider the case of the race between Democrat James M. Scott and his opponent, Republican David Sanders, for the 58th legislative district seat of the Virginia House of Delegates. After a recount, a 17-vote loss on Nov. 5 turned into a one-vote victory for Scott, a former Fairfax county official.

Scott was declared the winner after the recount led by a three-judge panel in the Fairfax Circuit Court on Dec. 19 found 6,493 votes for Scott and 6,492 for his opponent.

According to state sources, the change in the election results came from absentee ballots. Votes cast on electronic voting machines were unchanged. More than 150,000 military and overseas citizens claimed Virginia as their voting residence in 1991. Their absentee votes proved crucial in the Scott-Sanders contest and could prove key in determining the outcome of future races.

This outcome reflects the expanding importance of the absentee vote. Its growing significance was emphasized by Phyllis Taylor, director of the Federal Voting Assistance Program, in a recent interview.

"More elections at all levels of government are being decided by fewer voters. Absentee voting is growing, while the percentage of voting participation at the polls has been decreasing, thus military and overseas citizens could continue to make up a greater percentage of votes cast," stated the director.

Post honors Women's History Month

In recognition of the numerous contributions of women to every aspect of our nation, the month of March is proclaimed "Women's History Month." Public Law 100-9, enacted in 1987, designated March as National Women's History Month.

This year's theme, "Women's History: A Patchwork of Many Lives," reflects the strength, diversity and creativity of the military and civilian women who serve in the Army today. Their determination and success are an inspiration for all of us.

Women's strength to endure the hardships of establishing a new country, the stresses of war, and the struggle for equal rights, pay, and recognition stands as a monument for all to admire.

Their vision to see what America can be, a land where all can rise to their highest potential, certainly justifies this year's theme, "Women's History; A Patchwork of Many Lives."

I encourage all personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying the activities here at Fort Benning during "Women's History Month 1992."

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White
Fort Benning commander

Drinking, driving dangerous to everyone

Infantry Branch Safety Office

They kill themselves.

They kill their passengers.

They kill people they love.

They kill people they don't even know.

Why? For one thing, most of them do not realize how badly alcohol affects their mental and physical functioning. Since alcohol depresses the central nervous system, it makes them less alert and slows reaction time; it dulls the senses and interferes with coordination.

For another, drinking drivers don't believe they're going to get caught. According to the National Safety Council, the odds of getting picked up are about one in 2,000 in most places. Most drivers believe if they are convicted, the sentence will be light.

There is still another factor that allows drinking and drunk drivers on the highway. Drinking and driving is socially accepted behavior. It may not be endorsed or approved behavior, but it is accepted. How many times do you drink and drive? How often do you let someone you know drink and drive?

With the spring and summer months approaching, soldiers and civilians will be vacationing, going away for weekends, picnicking and partying. Safety meetings, promotion, and education on the dangers of drinking and driving are important, and supervisors should do more than meet mandatory requirements in these areas.

Special safety meetings should focus on dangerous drinking practices. The dangers of trying to travel too far on a weekend and partying besides should be emphasized. Both civil and military penalties for drinking while driving should be clearly impressed upon people.

TRADOC: main points

"TRADOC must be an organization that continues to look ahead, that stays ahead of change, that has its scouts out that's agile-minded enough to be able to do that."

He said to do that, training developers must visit units throughout the Army to find out training needs.

TRADOC military and civilian personnel must continue to operate with integrity and openness and realize there are no short cuts to doing a good job.

Even though a lot of hard work is required, Franks said, "We must keep a sense of humor about us, a sense of perspective. Spend time, as appropriate, with our families."

Focus on Soldiers

"It's a responsibility of the leaders to see to it that our soldiers receive the training and skills needed to execute their mission on the battlefield," he said. "That's a matter of trust between leadership and soldiers.

"It's a matter of trust ... to see that our soldiers have equipment that gives us the edge, that our training is relevant, ... and that there's a sense of family and command climate that promotes teamwork and a sense of ownership in the organization."

Vandalism: not tolerated on post

The council recommends sanctions for acts of youth vandalism to the command group for approval, said Dame. Once approved, completing the required sanctions is arranged by the child's sponsor, who has been counseled by the Community Life Officer.

In addition to community service, sanctions may include referral of the case to the county juvenile courts for prosecution or even eviction of the family from government quarters. The family may also be referred to seek counseling, said Dame.

"The purpose in requiring children to do community service is to attempt to make them understand that when they commit an offense, they not only embarrass themselves and their families, but they owe a debt to the entire community," said Dame.

Community Service includes such activites as picking up trash in high-visibility areas around posts chools and community facilitie , cutting grass and raking leav around installation chapels a removing waste from the horse stables at the Fort Benning Hunt Club, said Dame.

Normally, the sponsor of the family member or the sponsor's spouse, as well as the Community Life non-commissioned officers, must supervise the child while the service is being performed, said Dame.

"Soldiers who fail to ensure that their family members are law-abiding citizens of the Fort Benning community may be subject to revocation of their government quarters priviledge," said Dame.

"It's in everyone's best interest for parents to provide their children with proper supervision," said Dame.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: The following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. For more information, call (202) 535-8300.

Q — My father was exposed to radiation while on active duty in the early 1950s and later died of leukemia. Is my mother entitled to any benefits?

A — Possibly. The law now extends the presumptive period for leukemia from 30 to 40 years. If your father developed the disease within 40 years from his discharge and if exposure to radiation during military service is confirmed, the disease will be considered service-connected and your mother will be entitled to dependency and indemnity compensation.

Q — Are armed forces personnel who participated in the Montgomery GI Bill but who were separated "under honorable conditions" for the "convenience of the government" eligible for education benefits?

A — No. Separation must have been honorable. Discharges designated "under honorable conditions" and "general" do not establish eligibility for education benefits.

Q — I was granted a waiver of a VA home loan default. How does that affect my entitlement?

A — The debt must be paid in full before entitlement can be restored.

Q — When may a veteran draw a VA pension?

A — Only a veteran with at least 90 days active duty during a war period and who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable may be considered for a pension. The veteran must be permanently and totally disabled for reasons unrelated to military service or misconduct and meet income requirements. A pension should not be confused with disability compensation, which is payable to any veteran with a service-connected disability.

Q — Are premiums automatically waived on a National Service Life Insurance ordinary life policy when a veteran reaches age 65?

A — No. A disability must have originated before age 65 and the insured must apply for the waiver.

Q — What documentation is necessary to prove exemption from the funding fee on a VA-guaranteed home loan?

A — A photocopy of a recent VA compensation check, an award letter dated within one year of the loan application, a letter from any VA regional office, or a copy of the original disability compensation notice.

She began her continuous service in 1948, but worked on post some during World War II in 1943.

The observance of National Women's History as a national celebration began as a week during President Jimmy Carter's administration in 1977. Then in 1988, it was changed to a month-long observance commemorating women's contributions to American history.

Those interested in attending the luncheon should contact any FWP representative or Clark at 545-1119 or Winnie Torain at 545-3465. Tickets are $5.

Rangers to celebrate 50 years of action, success

Fort Benning to host celebration for all rangers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Veterans and active duty members of ranger units from across the country will gather at Fort Benning to celebrate the Rangers' 50th Anniversary June 17 through 19.

The anniversary commemorates the activation of the 1st Ranger Battalion in June 1942 at Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland.

The three-day celebration, hosted by the ranger community, will include dedication ceremonies for a Ranger Hall of Fame, Ranger Memorial, and a new Ranger Wing at the National Infantry Museum. Other activities include physically demanding events and tactical operations.

The anniversary begins June 17 with a mass parachute assault onto Fryar Field drop zone by the three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment. This marks the fourth mass tactical jump, one of which was conducted during Operation Just Cause in 1989.

Following the airborne assault, the regiment will conduct a river crossing and attack operation. Competitions among the Regiment's battalions will follow to determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams, rifle teams, and combat medics.

Throughout the day on June 18, rangers will participate in an "Endurathon," a gruelling series of events, including running, swimming and biking. Other competitions include rubber boat races, obstacle course races, a 20-kilometer cross-country rucksack run, a 10-kilometer litter relay race, and a boxing smoker.

The Ranger Training Brigade will host a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at Victory Pond, followed by a Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony at RTB Headquarters.

On June 19, members of the 75th Ranger Regiment will start the day with a mass physical training formation and run, followed by a commemoration parade with ranger veterans of all wars. The parade will be led by surviving members of Darby's 1st Ranger Battalion.

WORLD WAR II — A LOOK BACK

Military History Division

This week, 50 years ago during World War II:

° Flying Tigers move north under heavy pressure

• British commandos execute a daring raid on the port of Saint Nazaire, a strategic German submarine base.

• Due to the destruction caused by Japanese air raids on their base in Burma, the Flying Tigers are forced to move their base to southern China.

• Russian sources report more than 16,000 German troops have fallen on the Leningrad front in a period of only 13 days between March 9 and 22.

• Operation Save Malta - The Second Battle of Sirte. A British convoy, heavily armored, fights through to deliver supplies to the Mediterranean island. Although it manages to elude an Italian naval blocking force, the majority of the convoy is destroyed by enemy bombers as it sits in the Maltese port, waiting to be unloaded

• The Japanese prepare to launch the final offensive against the Bataan peninsula. The supply situation of the defenders has become precarious under the incessant bombing and shelling.

Home loan interest rate rises

Department of Veteran Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has increased its maximum home loan interest rate from 8 percent to 8.5 percent.

This change reflects the department's response to recent changes in the credit markets and will continue to assure the availability of funds to veterans.

The last change occurred Dec. 20 when the rate was lowered from 8.5 percent to 8 percent — the lowest the VA rate had been in 14 years.

VA also increased by one-half percentage point the maximum rates for graduated payment mortgages to 8.75 percent, home improvement loans to 10 percent, manufactured home loans to 11 percent, manufactured home lot-only loans to 10.5 percent, and manufactured home and lot loans to 10.5 percent.

In fiscal 1991, VA guaranteed more than 181,000 home loans amounting to a total of more than $15.4 billion. In the first four months of fiscal 1992, VA has guaranteed more than 70,000 loans totaling more than $6 billion. The average loan guaranteed by VA in the current fiscal year is $86,249.

VA home loans may be used by qualified veterans, service members and surviving spouses to purchase, improve, or refinance a house or condominium, and to purchase or refinance a manufactured home.

VA speeds up insurance dividends

Department of Veteran Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs announced that for the first time since 1977, the payment of 1992 dividends to veterans' life insurance policyholders will be accelerated.

In announcing the decision, VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski said, "Accelerating these payments means that veterans won't have to wait until the policy anniversary dates to get their dividends. The result will mean that more than half-a-billion dollars will be injected into the economy."

The decision affects some 1.6 million veterans holding U.S. Government Life Insurance and National Service Life Insurance policies who have the "cash option" and receive an annual dividend check. Policyholders with anniversary dates (the date the policy was issued) in the months of February through December should have received their dividend payment in early February rather than on their policy anniversary date. Approximately $560 million will be distributed.

Veterans with questions may call toll free (800) 669-8477.

Armed Forces wrestling under way

Competition is being held at Briant Wells Field House through Saturday

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The 1992 Armed Forces Wrestling Championships are under way through at Briant Wells Field House.

All Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas said he thinks the team is as ready as it can be and will perform up to his expectations.

The level of competition at the championships will be at its very best. The Navy will be bringing 1988 Olympic Team member Dave Butler.

The Marines who used to dominate the wrestling competition are now coached by former olympian Danny Mellow and could be out for revenge since the Army has won the championships for the last two years running.

Thomas said he thinks the team matches up well against the Navy and the Marine's.

"If our new guys can pick up the second and third place wins we stand a good chance to win the title," he said. "It all comes down to who wants it the most."

This year's competition is a qualifier for the Olympic trials. The winners from Freestyle and Greco Roman qualify for the trials. In the past, the top three places from each style would qualify for the trials, and Thomas feels that the new format hurts the wrestlers.

" If you have two or three ranked wrestlers in one weight class and one or two of them get beat in this meet, they lose out on a chance to try for the Olympic Team."

The Greco Roman wrestling will start at 8 a.m. on Saturday and conclude at 6 p.m. .

The following wrestlers were ranked in the top six in the nation for 1991 for Greco Roman style.

Army:

Bart Mease, 105.5, ranked fourth of Fort Benning, Ga.

Pete Gomez, 105.5, ranked third of Fort Benning, Ga.

Derrick Waldroup, 180.5, ranked second of Fort Benning, Ga.

Jerry Jackson, 220, ranked fifth of Fort Benning, Ga.

James Demos, 286, ranked fifth of Fort Benning, Ga.

Marine Corps:

Eric Wetzel, 105.5, ranked second of Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Lewis Dorrance, 105.5 ranked third of Camp Lejune, N.C.

Agustin Latosquin, 105.5, ranked fifth of Camp Pendleton, Calif.

George Williams, 114.5, ranked fifth of Naval Air Station Millington, Tenn.

Post b-ball champs play for charity

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The post basketball champions, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, recently squared off against their officers in a game for charity.

The game was played at the Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center to raise college money for the children of Staff Sgt. Raymond Hatcher and Capt. Kevin Wright. two Striker Battalion soldiers who were killed in Iraq on March 2, 1991.

"When the HHC team challenged the officer team," said Lt. Col. Bill Chamberlain, the battalion commander, "the executive officer decided to turn it into a fund-raiser. So far we've raised more than $1,100 from other events."

The game, which started off with the officers trailing, maintained a steady pace.

At the half, the post champs were ahead by six points, but in the second half, Rufus Smith rallied the officers by going on a stealing spree that put his team ahead.

Joe Purdue was the high scorer for the officers with 33 points, while Kevin Gleaton topped all scorers for HHC with 13 points. Even though the officers gave it their best shot, the post champions proved victorious once again winning by 2 points 81-79.

The game generated $121. The unit's next fund-raiser, a golf tournament, is May 29.

Florida State stomps Cruise-matics, 22-4

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Columbus- Fort Benning, Cruise-matics took on defending champion Florida State University in a rugby match Saturday at Stillwell Field and were defeated 22-4.

The Cruise-matics got on the scoreboard first when Bill Miriacle put the ball in the end zone for the first try of the game. The Cruise-matics led for the first and last time in the match 4-0.

The Seminoles came right back with scores by Chris Davis, Clarence Stringer and Julio Alverez to put the Seminoles up 12-4 late in the first half. The half ended with the score still only 12-4.

In the second half both teams went up and down the field without scoring until Seminoles fly half Ben Starret put the ball down for the Noles first score of the second half, the score was now 16-4.

The Cruise-matics put themselves in a hole when Ken Wolfe was ejected from the match for kicking a player in the head. The Cruise-matics played the rest of the match one man short due to the penalty.

Seminoles winger Sal Tozzi capped the scoring for the Noles at the end of the game when he broke free from the defense and put the ball down in the end zone, Alfredo Lopez kicked the extra point try and the final score was Seminoles 22, Cruise-matics 4.

Coach Jim Muldoon was disappointed at the loss but was still upbeat about his teams chances this year. "We should be able to play competively this year," he said. "We have some new faces this year and with the players from last year we should do all right."

Some patterns work anywhere

Outboard Marine Corporation

Fisherman spend hours and sometimes days trying to figure out a bass pattern, that almost mythical combination of fish location and lure presentation that unlocks the daily secret of catching bass. Sometimes they never find it.

"I don't know if it's always a usable pattern, but one of the most reliable patterns I've ever found is fishing boat launching ramps with a plastic worm," laughs Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler Cliff Craft. "It's not very glamorous or exciting, but it sure is easy, and it works.

"Nearly all lakes have at least one concrete launching ramp and usually several. As to lure selection, I use a plastic worm because I can work it slowly along the edges of the concrete, but I'm sure a jig or a crankbait will also work at times."

Craft discovered boat ramp bass fishing by accident while night fishing on Lake Lanier north of Atlanta. He noticed one particular ramp had a streetlight illuminating the ramp, and on a whim, Craft cast his lure up on the concrete. To his surprise, a nice largemouth hit.

Craft immediately cast again and caught another. From there he motored to the next ramp and promptly caught a third bass, and then a fourth at still another ramp.

"At this point, I became a dedicated boat ramp fisherman," smiles the Evinrude pro. Craft thinks boat ramps offer several ingredients bass find attractive. For one, the ramps have a hard bottom that often grows algae. This algae attracts small minnows upon which the bass can feed.

Ramps frequently offer quick access to deep water, a combination bass seem to prefer. They can feed in the shallow water, them move to deeper depths for safety and security.

"Still another factor worth considering," says Craft, "is that fish are often released around boat ramps. . "Not all released fish leave that area. These are the bass you can catch over and over again.

Powell: Army not bigger, but better

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

The military will be much smaller in the future, but what's left will be choice, according to Gen. Colin Powell.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said that if given time to do the job right, the U.S. military will maintain its qualitative edge against any foe.

He said the base force plan, which will cut the military by 25 percent by 1997, will allow the military to downsize without losing combat effectiveness. He has asked Congress to leave the plan intact.

During an interview with armed services reporters, Powell also commented on the importance of integrating the services' doctrines, personnel issues, continued U.S. military participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and requested cuts in the reserve components.

He discussed the various threats facing the United States, saying the greater threat is still "unknown."

With the demise of the Soviet Union, the Untied States no longer faces the monolithic "Red" army. Powell said instability and uncertainty about he Commonwealth of Independent States should be considered when reducing the military.

Powell said he was pleased by the way the services are implementing the base force plan.

The base force plan would allow the United States to deploy Desert Shield-size forces to two non-concurrent crises points.

In other words, sending a million service members to, for example, the Middle East and the Pacific so long as both crises did not start at the same time.

Powell said the way the services are taking the force down has pleases him greatly.

He said it is being done in a responsible way, with planners giving a great deal of thought to the impact that reduction will have on careers, families and assignment patterns.

Powell said the services are gauging the effect the drawdown will have on the military education system and also "on the anxiety that is in the heart and mind of every soldier who may be faced with a career choice."

"I'm very pleased, for example, with the Army, (where) senior commanders (are) sitting down their soldiers and saying, 'Look, here's what's happening. Here's how we're going to take care of you.'"

While the forces downsizes, the Defense Department plans to reduce recruitment, but not freeze it. Powell said the services are getting tougher at re-enlistment points so the force can be shaped in a balanced way.

"If you don't do it properly, you block advancement and promotion," he said. "Then people lose faith in the system. We don't want to run into some of the situations we ran into in the past where, as a result of the drawdown, nobody gets promoted for eight, nine or 10 years. That would be terribly destructive of morale.

"I think we can bring the force down in a way that will not break the great morale, esprit and professionalism that exist out there now, if we're given the time to do it."

Powell said the department's greatest concern is congressional support for the program. He said Congress may be tempted to look for additional savings in personal accounts, forcing DoD to break contracts and involuntarily separate people. This would "do terrible things to the force," he warned.

Powell also addressed the U.S. position in NATO. He said the United States will eventually have only 150,000 service members stationed in Europe. He reiterated the importance of a U.S. military presence in Europe, but said U.S. support must be provided in the context of NATO.

Finally, Powell talked about cuts to the reserve components. In last year's budget, DoD asked for a reduction in reserve forces.

The reasoning was that the threat in Europe had decreased and the reserve forces specifically raised to counter a Central European threat should also be reduced. Congress approved a smaller reduction than DoD asked for.

Powell said that if Congress again balks at approving the entire reduction, the total forces will suffer. "It means we will be retaining units that are no longer needed," he said. "The money going to that unheeded structure will not be available to support valid total force needs.

"I believe in the total force," he said. "I believe in the reserves. The reserves will be even more important in the future, but they must be reduced to a size related to missions and need. To do otherwise is to not make the best use of our defense dollar."

586th is going to Fort Bragg

By Alvin Williams
586th Engineer Company

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) will soon be on the road again after returning from Fort Stewart, Ga. A section of the company will deploy to Fort Bragg, N.C., Tuesday to be trainers in the engineer brigade bridge exercise.

A bridge exercise is an annual event allowing engineers throughout the continental United States to remain proficient in construction and receiving instruction on new techniques in bridging.

There will be five different bridges at different stations. The stations will encompass the bailey, M-4T6, medium girder (using single and double story), ribbon and field expedient bridging.

Different engineer units will go to Fort Bragg to receive instructions on the capability of the bridges, how to assemble and disassemble the bridging, and then to perform hands-on training.

Members of the 586th will be instructing and performing demonstrations at the ribbon bridge site.

The remainder of the company will depart to Fort Bragg the week of April 6.

29th holds suicide prevention class

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment held a suicide prevention class at the battalion classroom March 11.

The battalion chaplain, Capt. Ruben Colon, organized the class along with the help of Sgt. Terry James of Community Mental Health.

"The emphasis here is prevention," said Colon. "We want the soldiers to know that there are people who care and are willing to help."

More than 250,000 suicides are attempted each year in America, according to health officials. Suicide is also among the 10 leading causes of death each year in America.

"Things that you should look for are signs of depression, isolation and decline in job performance," said James.

This class will be given each month to a different company in the battalion. This specific class was given to Company E.

"We want everyone to understand that it is not just the responsibility of the chain of command to help soldiers in need; it is everyone's responsibility," said Colon.

"It was a good topic to bring up and make people aware of," said Pvt. 1 Christopher Boyle, a soldier in Company E.

Singer performs at retreat

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Protestant Women of the Chapel held a mini-retreat and a luncheon at the Religious Education Center.

A special guest speaker, Joan Miller, shared her inspirational testimony and her singing talent.

Miller is a speaker and singer at military installations worldwide, she was given the honor of singing for President George Bush and the families of the Desert Storm soldiers at Fort Stewart .

Miller was preparing for a career in opera when she met and married Frank Miller, an Army engineer.

"Frank and I went to Germany and that is where my life was changed as I answered God's calling to sing his songs for his people," Miller explained.

Since these early years as a military wife, she has traveled the world, while sharing her testimony and some of the lessons God has taught her, and is still teaching her.

She spoke of the joy, the pain and most important of all the growth that accompanies the military Christian's walk with the Lord.

Having been an active member of the Women of the Chapel for years, she has served as teacher, spiritual life coordinator and advisor.

"The ladies in the PWOC have ministered to me in a vital way. I consider it a privilege when asked to sing and speak for PWOC s worldwide," Miller said. "I have a special place in my heart for PWOC."

During the retreat her compassion triggered tears, and hearts seemed to be touched by her talent.

Since the title of the day was "He is Lord of our Talents," the women arranged tables with numerous crafts and arts.

PWOC meets Thursdays at the Religious Education Center, Intersection of Ingersoll and Dixie Road. Fellowship begins at 9:30 a.m. with the program lasting until 11:45 a.m. Baby-sitting is available at no charge. For more information, contact Ruth Bloomstrom at 689-4533 or Vickie Phelps at 687-7583.

Foreign wives form group

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A young German woman tries to capture the dreams and hopes promised to be found in the country of "great opportunities."

What has happened? Why does the reality seem to shatter the dreams she had?

Many foreign-born wives of soldiers enter the United States with unrealistic expectations. They have been painted a picture in pink. The grass seems always greener on the other side of the fence.

After awakening, she may find herself without the familiar surroundings, customs and most devastatingly without family and friends.

"Most of these women are hard-working housewives, loving mothers and are diligently working or seeking employment outside the home," Roggia said. "These are wonderful traits, however, they can place a great deal of stress on the individual, when she feels that she does not measure up to her expectations. The stress can affect the relationship. The purpose of this discussion group is to help couples adjust to the transition from one culture to another."

The Chaplain Family Life Center offers a group for women who seek understanding that develops through feminine, native friendship. The facilitator of the group is a German native married to an American soldier, and has experienced the difficulties created by a cultural transition. She is a trained listener and is able to empathize with the women who are lacking the support and understanding of someone "who has been there."

Since it is a custom in Germany to share coffee and cake, the group will meet for a "Kaffeeklatsch" to discuss and share their thoughts and feelings, and to reminisce. The "Kaffeeklatsch" will be at the Chaplain Family Life Center every second and fourth Thursday from noon until 1:30 p.m., and it is free of charge. Baby-sitting is not available.

The Chaplain Family Life Center will host a retreat for the German Women at the Blessed Trinity Retreat Center in Alabama from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. on April 8. The retreat, refreshments, lunch and baby-sitting is free of charge. Chaplain (Capt.) Don Wilson, Family Life Center chaplain will be the speak. To register, call the Chaplains Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Lent brings period of reflection

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Ash Wednesday is a day of penitence to mark the beginning of the Christian season of Lent, the 40 days of preparation for Easter.

"Christians have always observed with great devotion the days of our Lord's passion and resurrection," Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Roger Kappel, said during the Protestant Ash Wednesday worship on March 4.

At the same time, Catholic soldiers and family members were worshiping in the Main Post Catholic Chapel and elsewhere on post, fulfilling the customs of the Church to prepare for Easter with a season of penitence, fasting and prayer.

"This season of 40 days provided a time in which converts to the faith were prepared for Baptism into the body of Christ. It is also the time when persons who had committed serious sins and had been separated from the community of faith were reconciled by penitence and forgiveness, and restored to the fellowship of the church," Kappel said.

Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, a Catholic priest and the post chaplain, noted that the "entire congregation is thus reminded of the mercy and forgiveness proclaimed in the Holy Gospel of Jesus Christ and the need we all have to renew our baptismal faith."

Kappel addressed the congregation, saying "I invite you, in the name of the Lord, to observe a holy Lent, by self-examination, penitence, prayer, fasting, and almsgiving; and by reading and meditation on the word of God."

After the invitation to the observance of Lenten discipline, Kappel placed his forefinger in a bowl of ashes and made a sign of the cross on the forehead of the believers while stating, "Remember that you are dust, and to dust you shall return."

During the Lenten season, the following services are offered:

Martin Army Community Hospital chapel offers Protestant services from noon to 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 1 and 8 and Good Friday, April 17.

The Stations of the Cross will be offered at the Main Post Catholic church at 7 p.m. and at the Lavoie Manor church at 7 p.m. Services will be in Spanish.

Learn to 'shake' the salt habit

Brenda J. Forman
Martin Army Community Hospital

"Pass the salt please." How many times have you made this request in the past week?

On an average, adults eat two to three teaspoons of table salt daily. If you couple this with the fact that sodium occurs naturally in most foods and beverages and is added to commercially processed and prepared foods, you can see why most of us consume two to three times as much sodium as we should.

Why is there so much concern about "sodium" in the diet? The latest reports issued by the National Academy of Sciences indicate that sodium is associated with the development of high blood pressure in susceptible individuals. Sodium may also aggravate existing high blood pressure.

How can you decrease sodium in your diet without eating food that is tasteless? First of all shake the salt habit by reading food labels. Look at the ingredient listing. Ingredients are listed in decreasing order by weight. For foods containing 10 or more ingredients, the first five are the most predominant. Avoid foods where salt or sodium appears as one of the first five ingredients. Keep in mind that a food may contain no salt, but may have sodium from other sources.

Secondly look at the nutrition information panel for the amount of sodium per serving. As a rule of thumb, food items containing more than 150mg of sodium per serving should be used cautiously. So now you ask, what if the product is labeled "Low Sodium" or "Unsalted?" What does this mean? The Food and DrugAdministration has defined what these terms mean:

Sodium free — Less than 5 mg sodium per serving

Very low sodium — 35 mg or less per serving

Reduced sodium — Reduced in sodium by at least 75 percent per serving compared with the food it replaces.

Unsalted — No salt added during processing

You can also decrease sodium in your diet by following these tips:

• Limit the use of added salt both during preparation and at the table. It is not necessary to add salt to water or boiling even if the recipe calls for it.

•Substitute spices and herbs for table salt to flavor foods. Remember that some spices such as garlic salt, onion salt, sea salt, and MSG (monosodium glutamate) are high in sodium and are not good table salt substitutes.

•Rely less on prepared condiments (such as ketchup, mustard, and relish), dressings, and sauces that are high in sodium.

•With the following foods, try substituting these spices and herbs for table salt when you cook:

Egg substitutes — basil, dillweed, garlic, parsley

Fish — basil, bay leaf, tarragon, lemon lime, thyme, parsley, fennel, sage, savory

Poultry — marjoram, sage

Salads — basil, bay leaf, marjoram, oregano, parsley, celery leaves, cloves

Vegetables — basil, parsley, savory

Italian blend — basil, marjoram, oregano, rosemary, sage, savory, thyme

Barbecue blend — cumin, garlic, hot pepper, oregano

Remember, you can shake the salt habit. If you need further assistance, Martin Army Community Hospital has four registered dietitians on staff who will assist you with any of your nutrition related problems.

Teens won't be smiling about chewing tobacco

Smokeless tobacco is not a safe option

Teens who use smokeless tobacco (chewing tobacco or snuff) often believe that it is a "safe" alternative to smoking cigarettes. This is an unfortunate misconception. Studies show that smokeless tobacco may be more addictive than smoking cigarettes and may be more difficult to quit.

According to the American Dental Association, the primary cause of most oral (mouth) cancers is the use of tobacco products. This year, an estimated 30,000 cases of oral cancer will be diagnosed in the U.S. Of these cases, about 9,000 will result in death.

In addition to the high risk of developing cancer, the teen who uses smokeless tobacco may run the risk of developing periodontal (gum) disease and tooth loss. Teens are encouraged to think about the facts:

— One can of snuff per day delivers as much nicotine as 60 cigarettes.

—Smokeless tobacco users become dependent on continued use because nicotine, an addictive drug, gives them a 'buz'.

— When the supply runs out or the users try to quit, they may become moody, develop headaches and have trouble sleeping or concentrating.

— Some users become so addicted that they keep a pinch of snuff in place day and night.

— Long-term snuff users have a 50 percent greater risk of developing oral cancer than nonusers because the nicotine in tobacco contains cancer causing agents such as nitrosamine.

Because smokeless tobacco is harmful, labels have been required on all smokeless tobacco products since 1986. This law also prohibits TV and radio advertising of smokeless products.

Nutrition is key to health

Cutting down on sugar promotes better nutrition better living, better health

By Arlene Thomas
Martin Army Community Hospital

How much sugar do you eat?

Sugars are a simple form of carbohydrate. Sugar is often added to foods in the form of sucrose (white table sugar) and corn syrups.

Sugar is a source of calories but contains few other nutrients. A diet with large amounts of added sugar should be avoided because it may keep you from eating more nutritious foods and may increase the risk of obesity, diabetes and cavities.

How much sugar is in the foods you eat?

Listed below are common foods and the amount of sugar in each item:

Food	Sugar
1/2 cup of canned fruit in heavy syrup	4 tsp
8 ounces of lowfat fruit yogurt	7 tsp
1/16 of a cake with frosting	6 tsp
1/6 of 9-inch apple pie	6 tsp
1 can of cola	9 tsp

How can you cut back on sugar?

The answer is not to eliminate all foods that contain sugar from the diet. Learn to use foods that contain sugars wisely, rather than cutting them out of the diet altogether. For sensible sugar consumption, try these steps:

Check the ingredient label for sweeteners and sugars. Sugar is not the only word to look for on labels. Watch for words like sucrose, glucose, dextrose, fructose, corn syrups, corn sweeteners and sorbitol. Remember, each ingredient is listed in order of its amount in the product with the largest amount of an ingredient listed first to the smallest amount.

Control the amount of sugar added to cereals by choosing an unsweetened brand.

Experiment with reducing the sugar in favorite recipes.

Use less of all sugars and foods containing large amounts of sugars, such as white sugar, brown sugar, raw sugar, honey an d syrups. Soft drinks, candies, cakes, cookies and ice cream are also big sources of sugar.

Use artificial sweeteners like Nutrasweet instead of sugar.

Parents learn how changes affect kids

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Parents meeting the needs of their young children as well as their own was the subject of the last in the Young Children Lecture Series that was sponsored over the past few months by the Fort Benning Schools.

Dr. Patricia Nida, author of "Families on the Move," served as the guest speaker at this session for parents, caregivers and educators.

Her focus was on life changes and the effects that they have on families.

She noted that military families have more of these life changes than other people because of the recurrent moves they experience.

These life changes often seem scary and too much to handle. All of this puts families under stress, and many times isolation becomes a main characteristic because it is difficult to ask for help from others you haven't known long.

Also, Nida pointed out that there are times when the stress of the military member overcomes everything else, such as last year when soldiers were in Saudi Arabia.

However, it was from that experience that military families learned how to help take care of each other.

"Care must be taken," a quote from comedian Bill Cosby's book on "Fatherhood," was a survival trick she mentioned to use for ourselves and our loved ones in times of stress.

Nida worked in the Fort Benning School system last year, is a military mother and holds a doctorate in education from the University of Washington.

Well children should not be at MACH unless they have an appointment

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital strives to provide quality health care in a safe and pleasant manner. Certain policies must be followed in order to accomplish this goal, one of which is that children being seen by medical personnel are the only children permitted in clinics.

There are several good reasons to enforce this policy, most of which are in the best interest of the child. The child's safety is foremost, since there have been several small children who injured themselves during the past several months while the parent and physician were involved in patient care. One child picked up a sliver of glass and put it in his mouth, causing cuts. Another child stuck her hand in a container of used needles, causing several small puncture wounds.

Well children catch illnesses from exposure to sick patients. The person sitting next to your child in a waiting room may have a contagious disease. The presence of children other than those who are patients is a distraction when the doctor is trying to examine and evaluate other family members.

This is not a new policy. Clinic personnel have been reluctant to enforce this policy because they realize that babysitting service is sometimes hard to find. There are several child care facilities on Fort Benning, such as Tot Town, where you may arrange to leave your children.

Parents should be reminded that appointments may be rescheduled when children who do not require medical care are brought to the clinics, depending on the medical problem and the situation on the clinic at the time.

Local French organization offers many opportunities

Upcoming events to include spring luncheon, Bastille Day picnic

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A quarterly membership meeting March 31, spring luncheon to be prepared by a French chef and a picnic on Bastille Day, July 14 are just a few of the upcoming activities planned for the local French organization, Alliance Francaise.

According to Terry Followill, vice president, the local chapter of Alliance Francaise was established in May of 1991 as the result of efforts of two Columbus people, Don Bowman, Certified Public Accountan., and Charlotte Osterburg, intercultural liaison for the Human Relations Commission of Georgia.

It is a branch of a non-profit, worldwide, cultural and educational organization founded in Paris in 1883 to encourage and further the knowledge of the French culture and language, and to foster friendly relations between the American and French people.

Lt. Col. Dominique Mariotti, French liaison officer at Fort Benning, spoke at the group's last meeting.

Followill said that its current membership is at about 65, and Fort Benning is a direct link to the local French community for them. This has to do with the fact that allied officers from French-speaking countries take courses here and because soldiers are often well-traveled in Europe and interested in the French culture.

However, meetings are conducted in English, and a person doesn't have to speak French to join.

Also, their membership includes a cross-section of people from business, civic and educational sources.

Some of their past activities have included attending a French foreign film at Columbus College entitled, "Au Revoir Les Enfants" and an excursion to Atlanta to High Museum to view an exhibit of French impressionistic paintings called "Corot to Monet," which was followed by lunch at a French restaurant, Maizon Gourmet."

Also, Followill, a former high school French teacher herself, believes that some day the group would like to provide a French language school, but they need to get better established first.

Lucy Bowers, president, envisions the group someday going to France together. She has been a "goodwill ambassador" on her own matching up French visitors with American homes.

Other officers include: Roger Harris, secretary, and Martine Petite, treasurer.

As a benefit of being part of the international organization, the local Alliance Francaise is offered additional access to speakers affiliated with the national group. They also intend to work out some joint meetings with the Atlanta organization.

There are 175 chapters of this group in the United States and 1,300 chapters worldwide in 105 foreign countries.

For more information, contact Followill at 322-1790.

Girl Scouts participate in retreat ceremony

Fort Benning Girl Scouts

Girl Scouts from Junior Troops 104 and 193, Cadeete Troop 135 and Senior Troop 69 participated in a flag retreat ceremony March 11 as one of many activities to celebrate March as Girl Scouts month.

The ceremony was in front of Infantry Hall, building 4. The color guard for the event was from the 34th Medical Battalion and under the command of Staff Sgt. Chris Martin.

The Girl Scouts who wore full uniforms for the event were Dagny White, Toni Ross, Shinika Jackson, Tina Ortism, Schauntrice Scoggins, Fallon Simmons, Christine Singer, Sylvia Singleton, Melanie Steffi, LaShaundra Taylor, Christine Carter, Amber Floyd and Cindi Floyd. Stephanie Mason, a senior Girl Scout with Troop 69, called the commands for the ceremony.

Coordinators for the event were Inge Mason and Sandra Floyd. They invited the guard, visiting scouts, their parents and scout leaders to close the event with a friendship circle around the flag pole and to sing "Taps."

AAFES presents its summer catalog

Army and Air Force Exchange Services

The all services exchange mail order catalog's rolling out its spring/summer edition featuring more than 400 pages filled with merchandise from around the globe.

What's new this year? The look of the catalog has changed. Catalog sales officials point to improved layouts with better, less crowded, merchandise presentation. Also, shoppers will easily spot new items and they'll be marked with a logo.

The spring/summer edition includes categories never before offered to its customers:

• For those planning to walk down the aisle, the bridal collection features eight pages of fashions and wedding gowns, outfits for the flower girl, and bridesmaids dresses that also make elegant evening gowns. The line of bridal accessories includes gloves, veils and shoes.

• Another first for an additional charge, customers can protect their audio and video equipment as well as home computers with a two- to three-year extended warranty. The items included in the program are marked.

• There's also a selection of Navy Exchange and Army and Air Force Exchange Service house brands for basic household products — diapers, for instance.

Customers will again find the $5 coupon they can apply to their first purchase. The catalogs themselves sell for $3.

One feature officials want to make sure shoppers know about are the gift certificates available through the catalog. The certificates, from $15 to $500 redeemable at any military exchange, can be purchased to give to anyone with exchange privileges.

Who can use the catalog? The answer is simple. If you have exchange privileges, then you can shop the catalog. Active duty military, retirees, reservists and guard members, Coast Guard, or Department of Defense Civilians assigned overseas and dependents are authorized catalog customers.

Susan Lucci gets 'Double' exposure

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

Viewers who can't get enough of afternoon-TV superstar Susan Lucci are about to get a bonus, times two.

The perennial bridesmaid at the annual Daytime Emmy Awards for the past 12 years, since she has been nominated but has left without winning each time as the willful Erica of ABC's "All My Children," the actress gets a rare opportunity this week to play two distinctly different characters in the same story. Sunday's new CBS drama "Double Edge" casts her both as professional assassin Carmen Moore and as Maggie Dutton, an FBI agent who is dispatched to find and arrest the other woman.

The project reunites Lucci with Robert Urich, previously her co-star in the 1984 V-movie "Invitation to Hell," who now appears as Maggie's ex-husband and fellow FBI operative. Robert Prosky, Michael Woods and Paul Freeman also appear, but there's no question that the film's focus clearly is on Lucci ... twice over, no less, making it little surprise that she deems the result "the most demanding work I've ever done."

Though enacting look-alike parts might not seem especially unusual for someone who hails from the soap-opera world, the pleasant Lucci stresses that her alter egos in "Double Edge" are "not twins, not sisters, no relation at all. Sometimes, I am seen in both roles at the same time, so I'm basically playing scenes with myself. At other times, I'm just one character or the other and sometimes, I'm one character impersonating the other character."

That multiplication can get a bit hairy for a single performer, especially under the rapid production pace of a television film, but Lucci claims, "I was surprised that it was less confusing than I thought it was going to be, once I had firmly established each character. Still, I kept a real watchful eye on that, as did the director and the producers. I stayed focused on every single scene and every single exchange, because I just didn't want to drop the ball at any point."

Her past prime-time projects have provided her with images both overtly glamorous — "Mafia Princess," "Anastasia" — and comparatively ordinary — "The Bride in Black," last fall's "The Woman Who Sinned" — and Lucci feels that "Double Edge" gives her the best of both worlds:

"One is an FBI agent who is very good at what she does, and the other is a hired killer and a sociopath who has eluded the authorities for a number of years, and she's also very good at what she does. On the outside, they look like two people who would have nothing to do with each other ... but this really is about how, under the skin, they have some things in common that surprise even them. It's also about father-daughter relationships, and how they shape who these women are." Prosky is featured as the Maggie character's dad, a retired police officer.

Many daytime-serial talents state that working in that genre is some of the best training an actor can have, but Lucci gained another sort of education from doing "Double Edge," because she was exposed for the first time to the technical wizardry that allows her to appear on screen in both parts simultaneously.

"The cameras had to be locked precisely in place" while she switched costumes, she reports, "and it's a very involved process. In this case, there were other aspects as well, because I'm not playing two people who physically resemble other. There were certain changes (between the characters) to makeup and hair, and the body language and actual way of speaking also were different. Each part is very different from the other, and they're both very different from other parts I've played. For instance, Carmen is somebody who's a chameleon, who doesn't want to stand out in a crowd and needs to disappear sometimes. Being a sociopath is a clinical condition, and she doesn't believe she's a part of the human race at all."

Lucci admits that while she initially was excited by the prospect of the

Ray Charles to come to Columbus

Columbus Convention & Visitors' Bureau

Ray Charles is coming to Columbus Oct. 10 as part of the quincentennial celebration.

According to Brenda Price, executive director of the Columbus Convention and Visitors' Bureau, the festival is one of many events planned to celebrate the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' encounter of the new world.

The festival, slated for Oct. 2 through 10, will feature a nine-day musical extravaganza. Performers of music of all kinds, indigenous to, or developed in the Americas, will be featured.

"We look forward to Ray Charles coming to Columbus," Price said. "We think it is especially appropriate for him to be here for this celebration since he is a native Georgian."

Also, the five-member Raeletts and the 17-piece Ray Charles Orchestra will also be appearing.

dual duty "Double Edge" required of her, the rigors of actually doing it added up to a bit more than she had bargained for. "When they sent me the script," she recalls, "they said, 'While you're reading this, please keep in mind that we'd like you to play both parts.' As I read it, I felt that I would love to play either one, because they were both very rich and very detailed. I don't know whose idea it was to have me play them both, or why, but I was just thrilled to have the chance. It was great for me."

As with last season, when she also appeared in several episodes of "Dallas" and guest-hosted "Saturday Night Live," Lucci again has plenty of activities outside "All My Children." In addition to Sunday's movie, she also has been featured in the Arts & Entertainment Network series "The Class of the 20th Century" and she's continuing to market a collection of beauty products.

Commissary to open Value Mart

Warehouse to feature bulk merchandise for sale

By Barbara J. Ray
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Commissary will offer a new buying concept to patrons beginning April 14.

The Fort Benning Value Mart, 7,200 square feet of warehouse space on the east side of the Commissary, will house a variety of bulk merchandise.

"The Fort Benning Value Mart will offer approximately 150 items in multi-packs or bulk quantities at a 15 to 25 percent savings to the customer," said Larry J. Bentley, Commissary officer.

Bentley and Michael S. Waksmonski, deputy Commissary officer, came up with the idea, which is new to Fort Benning as well as the Defense Commissary Agency.

A variety of items will be offered based on the top sellers in each category sold at the Commissary and what is available through industry, said Bentley.

Some of the items to be offered include 60-count garbage bags, nine-roll packages of paper towels, 32-ounce boxes of crackers, 66-ounce jars of spaghetti sauce, assorted canned goods, four-pound tubs of margarine, 120-count diapers and limited chill and freeze items, he said.

The merchandising branch of the Southern DeCA Region, Montgomery, Ala., will assist in purchasing new items and deleting the ones that haven't proven themselves, said Bentley.

"To keep things competitive, we will swap items out," he said. "For example, if we have one brand of toilet tissue and another company comes up with a better price, we will go with the better-priced one keeping quality in mind. That way, the customer is always getting the best deal we can make for them," he said.

Customers are not limited to the number of items they may purchase and it will be all brand-name merchandise.

According to Bentley and Waksmonski, the only cost to starting this service will be the initial purchase of the stock.

"Once I sold the idea to John F. McGowan, director of DeCA Southern Region, approval for implementation was received from Maj. Gen John P. Dreska, DeCA commander," said Bentley.

Bentley and Waksmonski said they know there will be growing pains and they encourage Commissary patrons to make comments about the new concept when it is implemented.

Army retains title

Defeats Navy, Marines

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Army defeated the Marine Corps and the Navy for the third straight year to win the Armed Forces Wrestling Championships, which were held Thursday through Saturday at Briant Wells Field House.

The championships got off to a slow start for the Army; but, in the end, the All-Army team placed first in freestyle and Greco-Roman competition.

In freestyle, the Army outscored the Marine Corps for first place with 56 points, compared to 38 for the Marines and 16 for the Navy.

Although only six wrestlers won matches in the first round, the Army turned it around in the second session winning 18 out of 37 matches. This gave the Army seven wrestlers in six matches in the consolation round for third and fourth place and 10 wrestlers in eight matches for the championship round.

In the freestyle consolation round, the Army won five of its matches with lightweight Bart Mease and heavyweight Edward Mitchell leading the way.

In the freestyle championship round, the Army won seven of the eight matches with Martin Strmiska and Shon Lewis taking charge and winning their matches by fall.

The Greco-Roman competition Saturday proved to be a little harder for the Army to win.

"The Marines will not give up," said All-Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas. "They excel in this style; we can't get overly confident and think we are going to win this thing hands down."

Thomas was correct in his assessment.

In the first session, the Army won 14 out of 18 matches; the Marines won nine of 17 matches.

In the second session, the Army could muster only eight wins in 19 matches while the Marines were able to win 11 of the 19 matches they were in.

In the Greco-Roman consolation round, the Army won five of the eight matches; the Marines won four of seven, and the Navy won one out of three.

At the start of the Greco-Roman championship round, the Army held a slim lead over the Marines with the Navy in third.

The Army won four of itsr next seven matches while the Marines won only three out of seven, and the Navy won all three of its matches.

Derrick Waldroup and Rodney Smith had key victories that helped the Army stay ahead and seal the win.

Final standings for the Greco-Roman competition, Army 47, Marines 41 and Navy 22.

"I didn't expect us to win the Greco-Roman competition," said Thomas. "The Marines are so strong in that area. For us to come away with a win shows just how much we as a team wanted it."

Thomas will be leaving the wrestling team in October; he will be replaced by Derrick Waldroup.

Infantry forum April 7

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

The 1992 Infantry Conference will be hosted by the U.S. Army Infantry Center April 7 through 9. The conference will be in Infantry Hall, building 4.

According to Maj. R.G. Robertson, conference chief, the conference serves as a forum for infantry leaders to discuss doctrine, leadership development, training and other areas related to the infantry's mission.

This year's discussions will focus on the conference theme: "Infantry in the '90s — Maintaining the Edge."

Highlights will include not only a capabilities exercise on Red Cloud Range, but displays by defense contractors showing new Army equipment and technology that is about to be fielded or is being planned for the future.

Attendees will include officers and non-commissioned officers from the active and Reserve components and retired personnel.

Post plans open house

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military retirees and their family members are invited to the 11th annual Military Retiree Open House April 3 and 4 at Fort Benning.

Registration for the open house will be April 4 at 6:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, followed by an 8 a.m. assembly in Marshall Auditorium.

The guest speaker will be Max Beilke, deputy chief of Retiree Activities, Community and Family Support Center, Department of Army.

AER helps soldier

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

He had just gotten married on Valentine's Day, but his adjusted basic allowance for quarters and separate rations wouldn't appear on his paycheck until April.

These circumstances made finances difficult for a soldier who wishes to remain anonymous and will be referred to as Sgt. James Brown.

Brown and his wife didn't plan ahead for their wedding so they weren't prepared for some additional expenses.

When there was difficulty paying March's rent, Brown went to the Army Emergency Relief Office for help.

He had never used AER's services before, but when he brought his leave and earnings statement and a copy of his eviction notice, he left the office with a check in hand.

The Browns have 10 months to pay back the no-interest loan.

A medic stationed on Fort Benning, Brown said he appreciated AER being there for him in a pinch.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for this organization marking its 50th year in offering emergency financial assistance in form of no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, family members, retirees, widows and members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard units.

Fort Benning campaign at $15,086

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"This is our program for soldiers to take care of our own. If we don't care, no one will."

Col. W. R. Brownlee, post garrison commander, made those remarks regarding the Army Emergency Relief Campaign at its kickoff March 2. The total for the drive to run through April 30 currently stands at $15,086.

"We collectively determine who gets these funds," Brownlee said. "When you don't participate, you forfeit the right to complain about how things are done."

Last year, because of Desert Shield and Desert Storm, the largest amount of AER funds in history was given out.

At the kickoff, Karen Crowley of the Directorate of Community Activities said that of those who come to AER for help, 93 percent are approved.

AER offers emergency financial assistance in the form of no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, dependents, retirees, widows and members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard.

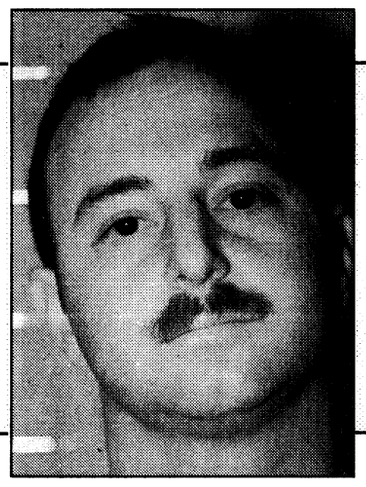
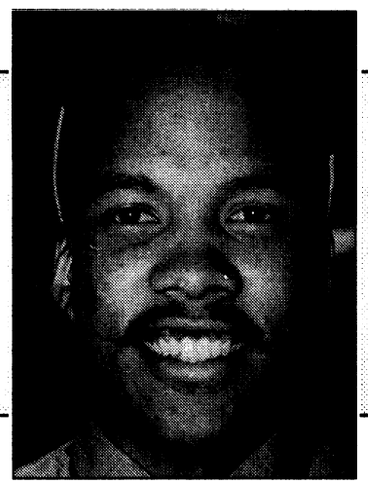
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think of legislators and the check-bouncing scandal?

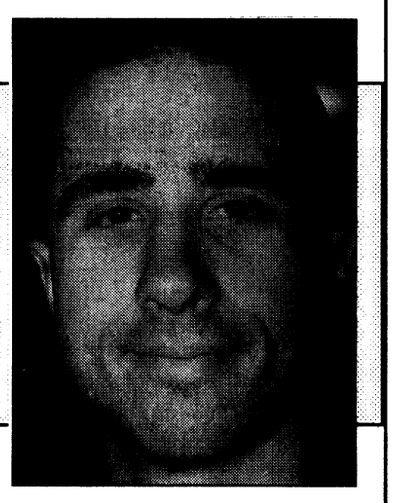
Sgt. 1st Class Gracie Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 324th Support Battalion— I know how strict the military is when it comes to writing bad checks, so it is inconceivable for me to understand how anyone, especially these people in such high places, is allowed to get away with such behavior"



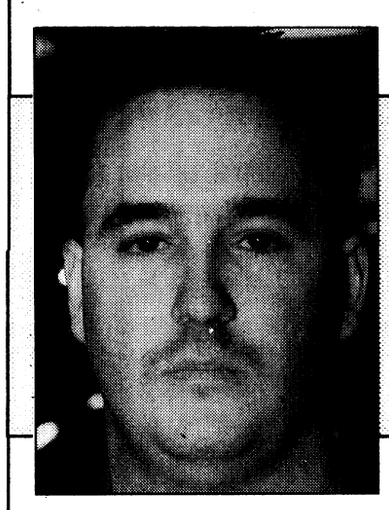
Staff Sgt. Wade Grubich, Company B, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment— "The offenders should be ejected from office. Lawbreakers have no right holding a position of leadership."



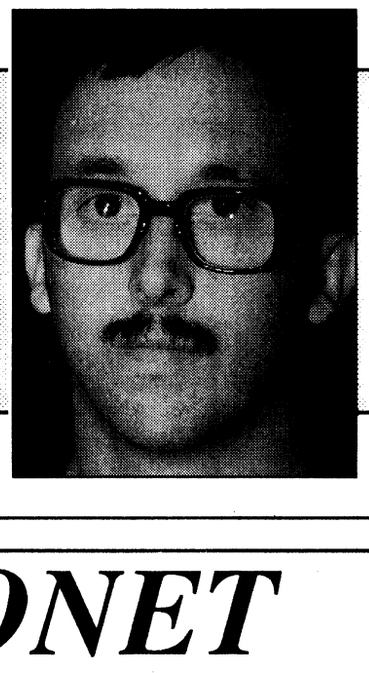
Markus Odomes, Army and Air Force Exchange Services employee— "The lawmakers should be prosecuted and fined like everyone else."



2nd Lt. Jeff Cuper, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment— "I think it's terribly irresponsible. These elected officials are responsible for the nation's budget, yet they can't even balance their checkbooks. It's a sad indictment of the office they hold."



1st Lt. Terrance McAvoy, Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment— "I believe that the names of the offenders should be released and that they should be punished like everyone else."



Spc. Brian Lemmon, Company A, 2nd battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division— "The offenders have a lack of responsibility, and they cannot manage their personal funds. This incident shows what type of people they are."

Staff bickers over he, she or they

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

A woman in The Bayonet office, who will remain nameless since she happens to be the editor and my boss, said it would be nice if I did something in recognition of Federal Women's History Month.

"And I don't need another of your stupid attempts at humor by changing all words that contain 'men' to 'myn' like you did last year," she said with all the charm of a womyn, er, woman snake charmer.

"You know," she said, in a more pleasant tone, "you could still do womanhood a service by discussing sexist writing and steps we can take to eliminate or at least cut back on it."

"Can you give me some examples?" I asked suavely, seeing an opportunity for her to write the column.

"You know what I mean," she said, getting into the swing of it. Those two yucky words we have to deal with constantly — 'he' and 'his.'

"Perfectly good words," I said.

COMMENTARY

"What's the problem with them?"

"Over-used," she said. "He and his don't represent the human race. Yet how often do you see the word 'he' when the person could be either he or she?"

"Well, I guess we're on safe ground around here in using 'he' when talking about infantry units, aren't we."

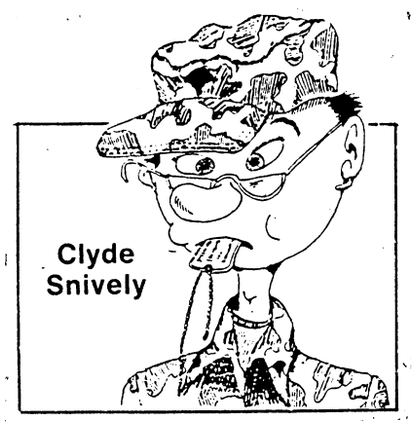
"Not so, four eyes, she lashed out at me. It just so happens there are women in infantry units. They aren't in the infantry, but they're in the units, providing support to the grunts," Miss Know-It-All said.

"OK, OK, you've got a point. What's your suggestion?" I said, squirming out from under her foot that was pressing against my Adams Apple."

"Write around it," she said.

"Such as?" I asked, intrigued, imagining the gobbledegook that would be created in the process.

"Well, if you read your Armed Forces Information Services Press Packet, you'd know the answer," she said, smugly.



"For instance, you can change the singular noun to plural. Two examples that David (M. Ginsburgh) used when he wrote about it were, 'He who hesitates is lost,' becoming 'They who hesitate are lost,' and 'He who laughs last laughs best,' becoming 'They who laugh last laugh best.'"

I saw her point. But she wasn't through.

"Let me give you a couple of other examples this guy Ginsburgh uses. For instance, 'if a person wants to leave the room, he must have permission,' would be 'A person who wants to leave the room must have permission,' or 'You can't leave the room without permission,' or 'Persons must have permission to leave the room.'

"Another technique if all else fails is to alternate the use of he and she," she said.

"Oh sure," I said. "Then our readers will no longer suspect we don't know what we're writing about, they'll know.

"I mean can you picture me writing a story about soldiers and one time I say he and the next time she? "The poor reader will say, 'make up my mind, is it a he or she?'"

By the additional pressure being applied to my neck, I could tell Madame Editor wasn't pleased. Finally she took her foot off me and said, "Well, at least you've got my point. So write a column."

"I think you've already done it for me," I said under my breath as I headed for the door and the cafeteria.

Although I still think the letter "y" would be a good way around it, substituting it for "e" or "a" whenever one comes across the masculine "men" or "man" in femyle words.

But what should I know, I'm only a specialist.

Carbon monoxide gas can be deadly

By Barry Williams
U.S. Army Safety Center

Each year, many soldiers get sick and a few die because of the effects of carbon monoxide. All of these injuries and deaths are preventable.

Carbon monoxide, often abbreviated CO, is a colorless, odorless, tasteless gas that is a product of incomplete combustion. Because combustion is never complete, carbon monoxide is almost always present whenever fuel is burned.

The greatest amounts of carbon monoxide are found in—

• Vehicle exhausts. An exhaust system with holes or leaks allows carbon monoxide to seep into the passenger compartment. Operating a vehicle in a closed maintenance bay without venting the exhaust outside is also extremely dangerous.

•Heaters and stoves. Improperly adjusted or malfunctioning carburetors can cause the gas to build quickly to a lethal concentration in poorly ventilated areas.

The hemoglobin in the blood, which carries oxygen to the cells, actually has a greater attraction for CO than for oxygen. Whenever CO is present in the air, it will gradually replace oxygen in the blood. The result: At first a tightness across the forehead, soon followed by headache, dizziness, pounding heartbeat, and nausea as the cells and brain suffer from lack of oxygen. However, if the carbon monoxide is concentrated, the victim may pass out without feeling any symptoms. Continuous exposure will cause unconsciousness and death.

It's not just an on-duty hazard. For example, one soldier's vehicle broke down on the highway. When he couldn't fix it, he decided to spend the night in the car. During the night it got cold, and he ran his heater to keep warm. Carbon monoxide leaked into the car through a faulty exhaust, and the soldier died.

Soldiers need to know that their own vehicles must have periodic exhaust system inspections. Be sure they know that a muffler or tail pipe that suddenly starts to make unusual noises is a danger signal.

Prevention is not difficult once you know the causes of these kinds of accidents. Ensure by preventive maintenance that the exhaust systems of vehicles are not leaking, and don't allow maintenance crews or operators to run vehicles inside without properly venting the exhaust. Don't allow personnel to sleep in vehicles with the engines running. Clean and inspect all stoves and heaters before operating. Be aware that any indication of fumes from an operating heater or the smokestack may be a sign that CO is present.

Fort Benning to participate in Safety Day

Fort Benning continues to save lives and preserve resources by fostering safe attitudes and implementing safe procedures.

To further advance our goals of providing a safe and healthful place for us to work and live, I am designating May 21 as Force Protection Awareness Day. If essential training or critical events preclude participation on this day, commanders may designate an alternate day.

Commanders and directors will plan and conduct programs relevant to their mission. The program should include a review of accident causes and participation in a variety of safety-related activities. A schedule of planned activities of this event must be submitted to the Infantry Branch Safety Office by April 20.

We owe each soldier and employee our best effort in ensuring their safety.

Follow me, safely!

Fire safety is a must on post

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Recently, a small fire at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall was quickly extinguished by an employee. A few years ago, a fire destroyed a Fort Benning maintenance building and equipment valued at several million dollars. Although no one was injured, several jobs were affected.

Since our older buildings are very susceptible to fire, we need to make fire safety a part of our everyday routine. Some ways to do this are:

•Frequently activated circuit breakers are warning of a faulty or overloaded system. All Self-Help/U-Do-It electrical work must be requested on a Facilities Engineering Work Request, Department of the Army Form 4283, and approved by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing in advance of accomplishment of the work. After such work is completed, notify DEH so that an inspection can be made prior to activating the circuits. In addition, report any observed deterioration or malfunctioning electrical wiring to Directorate of Engineering and Housing Work at 545-2135.

• Avoid using multiple outlets and extension cords in place of permanent wiring.

•Return all flammable liquids to the appropriate storage area after use.

• Turn off or disconnect all electrical appliances at the end of a workday.

• Restrict smoking to designated areas only.

•Check fie extinguishers and smoke detectors regularly.

•Turn off any cooking before leaving or going to bed.

• Train personnel to use fire extinguishers.

• Conduct fire drills.

• Conduct fire safety briefings prior to field training exercises.

Post dedicates housing area

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The memory of a Vietnam War hero shone as brightly as the afternoon sun March 20 as more than a dozen of his family members gathered at Fort Benning to dedicate a post housing area in his honor.

Ragin Court, a U-shaped housing complex on Dixie Road across from Easley Range, bears the name of Capt. William D. H. "Dave" Ragin, a Distinguished Service Cross recipient who was killed during an ambush Aug. 20, 1964, while serving as assistant adviser to a Vietnamese ranger battalion.

Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, commanding general of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and Ragin's brother-in-law, joined Myrtle Ragin, the honoree's mother, in unveiling a sign dedicating the complex.

"One of the reasons we're here today to name this courtyard is to allow today's young infantry soldiers to reflect on the meaning of Capt. Dave Ragin's life — what he stood for and what he contributed to his country," McCaffrey said. "His was a lesson of service, loyalty and character."

"He had a distinguished and short career," McCaffrey said of the Palatka, Fla., native, who was a 1961 graduate of The Citadel, the Charleston, S.C., military college, where he served as cadet captain of the regimental staff, vice president of his junior class, and regimental heavyweight boxing champion. "He became a company commander in the 101st Airborne Division back in the days when no one got command unless he was a senior captain. He was selected because of his enormous leadership ability."

McCaffrey recalled that Ragin was one of only four American soldiers with the Vietnamese unit at the time of his death.

"They became involved in an enormous battle while returning to home base, putting up a very stiff fight as the ranger unit broke contact," he said. "When Dave was last seen, he was manning a machine gun nest, bringing fire on the enemy formations."

"As they closed in on the ambushed truck convoys, Dave stood up and attacked into the face of the enemy."

McCaffrey told Ragin's family and members of the Chattahoochee Chapter of the Citadel Alumni Association present for the dedication that the memory of Ragin's courage was particularly appropriate for his remarks earlier that day to the graduating class at the 40th anniversary of the Ranger School.

"What a great statement (Ragin's life) makes about what young American infantry soldiers can be," McCaffrey said. "Thank you for bringing his lesson back to our memories — the lesson that our active infantry force will learn from his life."

Ragin Court is one of several post housing areas scheduled for renovation in the coming months. Lt. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, a former Fort Benning commander, was instrumental in arranging for the dedication in honor of Ragin, who was his classmate at the Citadel.

Senior aviator visits post to discuss safety practices

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

The Army's senior aviator, Maj. Gen. John D. Robinson, commander of the Army Aviation Center, Fort Rucker, Ala., visited Fort Benning Tuesday to discuss the importance of safety.

Soldiers from the Infantry Officer's Basic and Advanced courses and commanders and senior non-commissioned officers from around the post packed Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium to hear Robinson's presentation, entitled "Protecting the Force."

"For 20 years we have been building the force we have today — a force capable of delivering decisive victory. We need to figure out how to protect that investment," Robinson said.

Robinson focused on the responsibility of leaders to enforce good safety practices.

"Our soldiers count on us to take care of them as leaders. Unless we take the time to step back from what we're doing and take a look at what we're asking our soldiers to do, then we're failures as leaders."

"The nature of the Army and its missions makes it impossible to eliminate risky situations," said Robinson, "but good leaders practice risk management, Robinson said, which includes identifying and assessing risks, making decisions, and implementing and enforcing controls.

"What you need to do, whether you are a platoon sergeant or a company commander or whatever, is to assign in your mind whether something is a potentially hazardous situation or not. If you don't do that, you are letting yourself become vulnerable to whatever the fates want to deliver to you."

"The Army is fortunate," Robinson said, "in that it has standards for just about everything. Most accidents happen because of human error, when the standards are ignored, misunderstood, not enforced, or are not clear," he added.

"Eighty-three percent of accidents happen because of human error. That's because as human beings, we're not infallible."

Robinson said that if leaders practice risk management on a daily basis, the force will be protected and readiness enhanced.

"There are three questions that leaders need to have on their minds everyday: 'Who will have the next accident in my unit, what kind of accident will it be, and what am I doing about it?'"

Robinson highlighted his presentation with slides and a videotape of actual vehicular accidents, overturned vehicles and helicopter crashes caused by operator error.

DENTAC advises patients to plan ahead for dental care

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Any service member thinking of retiring or transitioning out of the Army, should schedule needed dental work as early as possible, according to Paula Dansereau, spokeswoman for the Fort Benning Dental Activity.

Most dentists are booked four to six weeks ahead and many types of treatment take a number of appointments. Specialized treatment such as oral surgery, periodontics, or prosthetics may require 12 to 18 months to complete. So plan ahead and avoid the possibility of considerable expense after leaving the military.

Family members 17 years of age and younger must have a parent or guardian remain in the clinic for the entire appointment.

"We also ask that if one of your children has an appointment, please do not bring other children with you," said Dansereau. "Many times the dentist will ask the parent to remain in the examining or treatment room with the child, and that leaves your other children unattended in the waiting rooms. Unnecessary noise is disruptive to other patients and there is always the possibility of injury to unsupervised children," said Dansereau.

All newborn infants or family members not previously registered in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System, or DEERS, must be entered before any dental treatment can be rendered. Sponsors should accompany family members to the Identification Card Section, Building 2638, Soldiers' Plaza. Proof of birth and marriage are required.

In accordance with the regulation, the following dress code will be enforced. Underwear will not be worn as outer garments. Men's tank tops or "muscle shirts" are not allowed nor shirts from which the sleeves have been removed nor T-shirts with lewd or suggestive logos or messages.

Summer physical training uniforms, modified uniforms such as cut-off fatigues or sleeveless fatigue jackets are unacceptable attire. Do not wear shower shoes or go barefoot to a dental appointment.

Dental Corps celebrates 81st birthday

Paula Dansereau
U.S. Army Dental Activity

The Fort Benning Dental Activity celebrated the Dental Corps birthday March 6 with a reception and dinner at the Officers' Club.

The guest speaker was Col. Dalton Diamond, 127th Medical Group commander, Alabama National Guard, and a veteran of Southwest Asia.

The Dental Corps celebrated its 81st birthday March 3. It was in 1911 that Congress established the Army Dental Corps with dentists commissioned as first lieutenants. However, the first dentists to serve in the military in the United States were conscripted by law to care for troops in the Confederate Army in 1864.

The U.S. Army's first recognized dentist was William Saunders who provided dental care to the corps of cadets at West Point in 1872.

The first woman dentist to be commissioned in the Army Dental Corps Reserves in 1951 was Dr. Helen E. Meyers.

Dental officers have served with distinction in World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Grenada, Panama, and Operations Just Cause and Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

DENTAC was recently awarded the superior unit citation for its efforts in troop mobilization during Desert Storm.

Post Air Force unit provides assistance

By Phillip P. Taber
Detachment 4, 507th Air Control Wing

The U.S. Air Force Detachment 4, 507 Air Control Wing stationed at Fort Benning, redeployed March 8 from Fort Stewart after participating in 24th Infantry Division Command Post Exercise, Gallant Victory 1992.

Approximately two miles east of Reynolds, Ga. on Highway 96, Detachment 4's convoy came upon the scene of a single car mishap. Realizing they were the first ones to arrive upon the scene, the detachment commander, Lt. Col. Kurtis Sutley, ordered the convoy to stop.

According to Sutley, the vehicle appeared to have rolled several times. A male and female had been ejected from their vehicle onto the highway.

Detachment personnel immediately went to work providing assistance to the victims, he said.

"Although a large crowd of spectators was beginning to gather along the highway," Technical Sgt. Randy Childers said, "no one seemed to be helping, so we took charge."

While several members of detachment personnel assessed the victims' conditions, other members began a search for other victims.

"It was as though everyone knew what to do," said Sutley. "My people were not only providing first aid to the victims, securing the accident scene, and attempting to control the large crowd of spectators, but also controlling the traffic jam which was developing."

"Both victims were conscious, but the female, the more critically injured, had a severe head trauma and significant blood loss," said Sutley.

"Efforts were begun to control the bleeding, and prevent her from going into shock. Due to the severity of the injuries, detachment personnel continued to provide life saving assistance even after emergency medical technicians arrived. Detachment personnel also assisted emergency medical technicians in the ambulance en route to the hospital."

Detachment personnel assisted local law enforcement with crowd and traffic control until the accident scene was cleared. The accident is under investigation.

The detachment provides close air support with Air Force aircraft to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, located on Kelley Hill.

Detachment personnel receive American Red Cross First Aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation training annually. All Air Force vehicles carry a first aid kit.

Luncheon honors women

Noted women portrayed

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

With the theme "A Patchwork of Many Lives," the National Women's History Month presentation at the Federal Women's Program luncheon offered portrayals of noted women's history characters.

Fort Benning's Chief of Staff Col. Burnet R. Quick noted how the theme showed the similarity between the work behind a patchwork quilt and the strength, warmth and value of many contributors in women's history.

The women whose achievements were honored and the Fort Benning people who portrayed them included: Sandra Day O'Connor, the first women appointed to the Supreme Court by Patti Pfeiffer, Directorate of Civilian Personnel; Shirley Chisholm, the first black woman in Congress by Sgt. 1st Class Sylvia Mitchell, Military Police Activity; the military nurse by Lt. Col Roberta Dyer, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity; former first lady Betty Ford by Cindy Sepulveda, MEDDAC; Antonio Novellc, first woman surgeon general by Eva Serrano, School of the Americas; Brig. Gen. Clara Adams-Ender, commanding general at Fort Belvoir, Va., by Rhonda Raglin, U. S. Army Infantry Training Center; and Rosa Parks, the woman who wouldn't give up her seat on the bus during the cvil right movement by Carol Gilchrist, Adjutant General.

FWP helps female employees achieve goals

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

March is Women's History Month and female employees at Fort Benning, military and civilian, were highlighted and honored during the month.

One organization on post that ensures that women employees receive fair and equal recognition and opportunity is the Federal Women's Program, according to Winnie Torain, the installation Federal Women's Program's manager.

The Federal Women's Program, a program under the Equal Employment Opportunity Office, was started in 1963 when then-chairman of the former Civil Service Commission, John W. Macy Jr., asked Evelyn Harrison to coordinate a women's program.

Although the program is a part of EEO, it was established as a separate entity to address the needs and problems of advancement for women in the civil service, said Torain.

"To have a successful Federal Women's Program, all levels of management must get involved," said Torain.

The overall goal of the Federal Women's Program is to achieve a civilian workforce in which women are represented in every occupation, category and grade level comparable to their representation in the local civilian labor force, said Torain.

Employee wins award

Recipient receives honor for longest time of civil service

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A total of 230 people attending the Federal Women's Program luncheon observing National Women's History Month Tuesday saw Helen Pettingil receive an award for being the female employee at Fort Benning with the most federal service here.

With 44 years of service, Pettingil began her civil service career in 1943 at the Veterinary Hospital on post. She recalls that this was during World War II, and her office still used horses because they were in charge of their care. She also saw Italian prisoners of war incarcerated here and remembers seeing Gen. George S. Patton and his famous tank division.

Pettingil had a break in service to start a family and returned to federal service in 1947 to work for the Air Force. She followed her husband to Fort Bragg, N.C., and worked as a secretary for the commander of the Psychological Warfare Center.

From there, her husband was sent overseas, and she then served as a medical secretary for the 98th General Hospital in Germany.

Their next duty station was back to Fort Benning where she became a stenographer for the chief of procurement. She remained there for nine years.

In 1965, Pettingil transferred to the operations section of Infantry Hall, from which she went to the Training Center to work as a reporting stenographer until 1970.

When the Training Center closed, she was moved to the Personnel Control facility as a reporting stenographer for courts martial.

In 1975, she became a reporting stenographer for the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate where she currently works. She also serves as the victim/witness liaison officer.

Responsible for processing all military action for driving while under the influence, both on and off post, Pettingil is also responsible for the presence of every witness, military and civilian, scheduled to testify in court martial proceedings.

CRIME WATCH

Military Police Activity

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from March 12 to 18. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A specialist was apprehended for housebreaking and assault after he gained entry into a set of quarters by breaking out a rear window. The occupant confronted the specialist and was assaulted.

• A family member reported that person(s) unknown had removed her son's unsecured bicycle from behind their Main Post quarters.

• Two civilians were apprehended for numerous offenses stemming from an incident with a family member at the Commissary. Both civilians were intoxicated and one assaulted the family member. When the Military Police attempted to apprehend one individual for the assault, the other individual interfered.

• A specialist was apprehended for driving under the influence, speeding and transporting a loaded weapon. A Military Police officer observed the specialist speeding and upon stopping the vehicle the officer noticed a handgun in the glove box. An inspection of the weapon revealed that it was loaded and not registered on post. The officer detected alcohol emanating from the specialist, who was given a field sobriety test that he failed.

• A sergeant first class and a specialist were arrested by the Columbus Police Department for carrying a concealed weapon, carrying a deadly weapon to a public gathering and carrying an unlicensed weapon. The two were observed in a local drinking establishment with handguns. A search of the individuals revealed each had a 9mm pistol.

• A civilian employee reported that an employee of an Army and Air Force Exchange Service concessionaire store in the Main Post Exchange Mall had embezzled $650. The employee failed to register payments made by numerous patrons and used the money for personal gain.

• A specialist reported that person(s) unknown had stolen his 1989 Ford Ranger pick-up truck while it was parked in the parking lot adjacent to Building 9025. It was also revealed that there was a .22 caliber rifle behind the seat of the vehicle at the time of the theft.

• A captain was arrested for driving under the influence after a Columbus Police officer conducted a traffic stop on the vehicle for traveling 75 mph in a 55 mph zone.

• "Lock it or lose it," a simple phrase with a powerful meaning. The days of being able to leave a bicycle in the front yard or leaving your car unlocked to take that "quick" run into the Post Exchange or Shoppette are gone. In today's society, people must protect their hard-earned belongings. They must use the locking devices that are in place or install them if they don't have them.

Many thefts are done on the spur of the moment — an individual sees the opportunity and feels little chance in being caught because of the ease. If you make yourself an easy target you are at a higher risk of becoming a victim. More than 50 percent of the property stolen on Fort Benning is unsecured, so do the smart and simple thing "Lock it or lose it."

• Remember to help "make our post the best — give crime arrest!" Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or 5223 or to the "Crime in Progress" line, 545-2222, if it is warranted.

Race packets, including the official 1992 race T-shirt, may be picked up May 1 at the Officers' Wives' Club Building from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., according to Coney Reamey, race chairwoman.

"Those wanting to walk are encouraged to join the 9 a.m. mile event," said Reamey.

Runners may register on race day beginning at 6:30 a.m. until 30 minutes before the event entered.

"A mile run for children 9 to 14 years is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. and for children under 8 years at 9:30 a.m.," said Reamey.

The mini-Ekiden will begin at 10 a.m. According to Reamey, each member of this five-person, long distance relay will run 2.62 miles.

Reamey said the race course is certified and medical personnel will be available.

Registration forms are available at the OWC Building across from Faith Middle School.

Improving vocabulary may improve fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

If you want to improve your bass fishing, you first have to improve your vocabulary.

That's the opinion of professional fisherman Ken Cook, and the words in question are 'cover' and 'structure.'

"These are two of the most important terms in bass fishing,' says the professional angler, 'but I don't think the majority of anglers actually understand them. If you want to catch more bass, you have to know the meanings of these two words.'

Structure, explains Cook, really refers to anything that changes the contour of the bottom and the depth. This can be a ditch or channel, a pile of rocks, a sunken ridge or mound, even a point of land.

"Cover, on the other hand," continues Cook, "refers more to some type of object that can actually provide bass a home. The best-known examples are grassbeds, blown-down trees, stumps, and boathouses.

"Basically, cover is where bass like to hide and where you need to be fishing."

Structure is important, notes the Evinrude pro, because although bass are basically shallow water residents, they prefer to have close access to deeper water. When conditions are no longer agreeable to them in shallow water, the fish head to deeper depths by the shortest possible route.

"Although bass can often be caught around structure, such as the edge of a deeper point or channel," says Cook, "the ideal situation is to find structure like this with cover on it.

"When you have that, you'll almost always locate bass."

One of Cook's favorite types of summer structure is around the mouths of tributary creeks where they flow into a main lake. He follows the creek channel to its intersection with the main river of the lake, then begins fishing the underwater points on either side of that intersection.

"Normally, these spots will have good depth changes on them so you have the basic shallow water/deep water combination," he says, "but just as often, you'll find stumps, rocks or grassbeds on the points, too, which provide the cover.

"You have to fish both points, but the down stream point is frequently the better of the two."

Cook usually begins probing the points with a deep diving crankbait, which is how he initially finds any cover present. Later he may change to a Carolina-rig worm or lizard.

"You should still fish the points, even if you don't find any special cover," Cook adds, "because these points are good structure, but your chances will always be better when you find cover on that structure."

ASK THE JUDGE

By David K. Dalition
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

As the end of tax season approaches, many of us will begin a mad scramble to organize our records and prepare our tax forms. Here are a few helpful tax tips for some commonly asked questions.

Q: What should I do if I am stateside and I will not be able to make the April 15 filing deadline?

A: You should fill out Form 4868 and you will receive an automatic extension until Aug. 17. You should be aware that an extension of time to file does not extend the time to pay the tax. If on filing the Form 4868, you underpay the tax owed, you will be charged interest on the unpaid amount.

Q: My spouse is stationed overseas and I would like to file on his/her behalf. Can I prepare a joint return and sign his/her name to it?

A: Only if you have a power of attorney authorizing you to do so. The IRS will accept a general power of attorney for this purpose if it specifically mentions tax matters.

Q: I sold a house and bought a new one last year. Since the new house cost more than the old one, I know no taxes are due. Do I have to file forms with the IRS about the sale?

A: Yes. File Form 2119, Sale or Exchange of Personal Residence, with your tax return. Among other things, it shows how much profit you made on the sale. Although you are permitted to defer the tax on that gain since you bought a new house, your basis in the new house is reduced by the amount of untaxed profit from the old house.

Q: Are state and local taxes deductible?

A: No, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 rescinded this deduction.

Q: To what extent is my credit card and loan interest deductible?

A: For 1991 tax returns, interest paid on personal loans is no longer deductible.

Q: What do I do with an overweight charge I received in 1991 for a permanent change of station move in a previous year?

A: You deduct it from your 1991 tax return using Form 3903 or 3903F and a Schedule A. You do not amend the tax return of the year you had the PCS move.

Q: What is the maximum deductible Individual Retirement account contribution that may be make by me and my wife filing jointly if my wife has no income?

A: $2,250. The Tax Reform Act limits this deduction, however, if adjusted gross income exceeds $40,000.

Q: What is the "standard deduction" for 1991?

A: For 1991, the standard deduction is $3,400 if single, $5,000 if head of household, $5,700 if married filing joint and $2,850 if married filing separate.

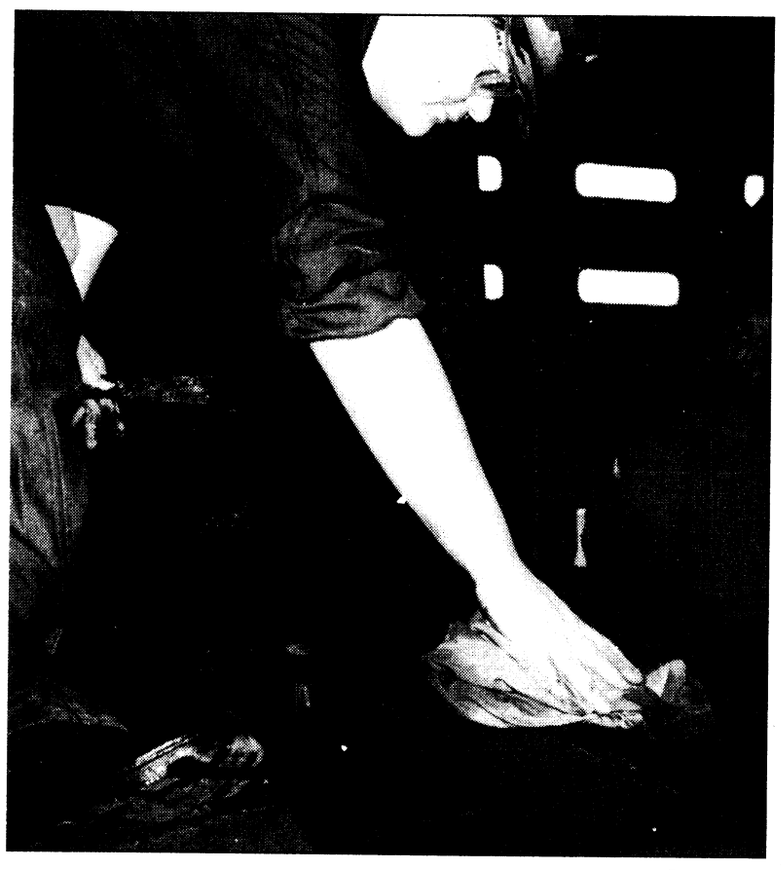
36th women have non-traditional jobs



David Greer

By David Greer
36th Engineer Group

The key to a successful unit is the quality of its teamwork.

In today's Army, that means teamwork between men and women. In support of Women's History Month, the 36th Engineer Group would like to salute all the women within its ranks.

In keeping with the Women's History Month theme, "A Patchwork of Many Lives," the 36th would like to highlight some of the women who are making history today by taking on jobs and roles that are non-traditional.

1st Lt. Adrienne Ruggles joined the Army in May 1989 after completing her bachelor of arts degree in civil engineering.

"I was looking for a challenge, something different," said Ruggles.

She is currently the executive office of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

Ruggles said being in a non-traditional role does not make her uncomfortable.

" I feel just like any other officer with a job to perform," she said. "I try to set the example for all my soldiers, not just the women."

Ruggles said she plans to make the Army her career.

When the term "truck driver" is used most people think of burly men with huge arms rolling down the highway talking on a citizen's band radio. While that may be true in some cases, the 36th has women truck drivers that in no way resemble that stereotype. The job they do is every bit as professional as the man.

Spc. Kelly Willy is assigned to the 533rd Transportation Company and is an 88M, truck driver. She said she joined the Army in September 1989 to learn a job that could be used in the civilian job market. She said she found an added bonus in the travel offered by the Army.

"I've been to Saudi Arabia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia and, of course, Georgia," said Willy. "I love the travel; it's fun to go to new places."

About her job she said, "It's a challenge; the guys here treat me just like one of them, and I can get a job outside the Army if I have to now."

Spc. Dawn Spencer is also assigned to the 533rd and breaks the truck driver stereotype. She said she entered the Army in March 1989 because she always wanted to be a truck driver, and her brother, who was a Army truck driver at the time, convinced her that she could get the training she wanted

"I've had no problems with the men in my unit; most are helpful," she said. "They work almost as hard as a woman can." Spencer, too, said she feels the training she has received will allow her to gain civilian employment if the need arises.

Besides the trucking field, the heavy construction equipment repair field has been an area for women to excel.

Spc. Donnittha Pugh is a 62B, heavy construction equipment repairer, assigned to the 598th Maintenance Company.

Although she has been on active duty only six months, she has had time to reflect on the differences between civilian and military life.

"Out there in the civilian world, women are expected to do 'women type' jobs; if you try to do something different, it is really difficult," said Pugh.

"In the Army, women can do almost anything a man can; all the advantages and rewards are there if you try. You're treated like an equal and that's important to me."

Command Sgt. Maj. James Gardner said that the women in the 36th Engineer Group, with few exceptions, are doing an excellent job.

"When it comes to work performance, I just see soldiers, not male or female," he said. "Our female troops are capable of performing any mission given them. In fact, I believe they should be allowed to serve in combat if the regulations are changed."

The women of 36th Engineer Group are making strides in breaking the female stereotypes.

Soldiers to compete in EOD contest

/ Richard Brill
ecial to The Bayonet

Two Fort Benning soldiers will mpete in the Explosive Ordnance sposal Worldwide Competition, be April 6 through 10 at Fort nning..

Staff Sgt. Brian Casteel and Sgt. ade Harrington of the 89th dnance Detachment will resent the southeastern United ates in the competition, which ts the ability of EOD personnel respond to simulated explosive idents.

Casteel and Harrington won top nors in January at Fort Rucker, a., in a regional competition that volved units from Forts Bragg, llem, Jackson, McClellan, wart, and Cape Canaveral Air rce Base.

Detachment Commander Capt. uglas Chambers said that it was third time that Fort Benning had n the regional competition. The competition is only in its fourth year, Chambers said. Fort Benning was not involved last year because of Operation Desert Storm..

Casteel said that the upcoming Worldwide Competition will follow the same format as the Fort Rucker event.

The competition consists of three parts, he said: simulated emergency situations in which the teams encounter conventional, chemical, unknown, or improvised explosive ordnance or devices and must perform the correct "render safe" procedures, an Army Physical Fitness Test, and a formal review board.

Participants are evaluated on their performance in the various events and given a point rating, said Harrington.

"The first two days test how you respond to simulated emergency incidents," said Casteel. "You draw a grid coordinate from a hat and then have a time limit of 30 minutes to navigate your vehicle to the site. Once at the site you have 90 minutes to evaluate the situation and follow the appropriate procedures."

Casteel said that the teams are given a total of eight incidents to respond to, four each day.

"At each site, we were also tested on our Common Tasks Skills. They might tell you something like ' a team member was shot in the chest. Perform first aid for a sucking chest wound,' so we were tested on more than just our EOD skills," he said.

Both Casteel and Harrington agreed that the competition was challenging.

"The biggest thing was the time constraints," Casteel said. "You had to really use your time wisely and if you couldn't read a map and navigate properly then you were out of the competition."

Harrington said that another challenge was not knowing what kind of emergency situation you would find at the site.

"One of the incidents was with an unknown piece of ordnance. Then you have to come up with your own procedures to deal with the ordnance and render it safe," he said.

Casteel said that participating in and winning the competitions takes a commitment to excellence.

"It shows that you really work hard toward being the best and it's rewarding too. Almost all of the people who place or win in the competition are promoted and the top teams are used in actual missions worldwide. It really says a lot to win the competition."

Chambers said the upcoming Worldwide Competition will involve units from Europe, Panama and Korea as well as the United States.

75th Ranger Regiment

Staff Sgt. Greg Lahr won the 75th Ranger Regiment's "Best Intel" Ranger Competition March 12 at Franklin Delano Roosevelt State Park in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Lahr beat other officers and non-commissioned of the Regimental Intelligence Section with only one no-go, and he completed the course in 5 hours and 16 minutes.

This was the Regiment's third competition, and like the previous two, each ranger's intelligence job proficiency was evaluated as well as physical endurance and ranger skills.

Thirteen rangers, staff sergeant and below, participated from the regiment's intelligence section as well as two rangers from the ranger battalions at Fort Benning, and Hunter Army Airfield, Savannah, Ga.

A total of seven stations were set up at the park. These consisted of a variety of tasks including, developing the doctrinal templates for threat evaluation, maintaining an intelligence journal and journal file and prioritizing avenues of approach according to size, directness and length. They also identitied and annotated target areas of interest, employed claymore mines, identifed allied or enemy aircraft, recognized vehicles and determined correct classification and downgrade markings for documents and materials.

The course covered a 20-kilometer area with individual stations scattered throughout Franklin Delano Roosevelt State Park in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Each competitor had to complete a 20-kilometer land orienteering course within eight hours. In order to determine the "best intel" ranger, the results were evaluated to identify the individual with the most "go's" within the shortest amount of time on the course.

SOA has unique library

By Daniel Maloney
School of Americas

Amos Library provides students with news from home.

The School of the Americas Amos Library is a unique complement to the overall educational experience the school offers its Latin American students.

Not only does the school provide instruction entirely in Spanish, the library contains numerous publications and offers all services in Spanish.

However, accessibility and availability may be the most prominent features of the school's library.

"The library is something very impressive for Latin Americans coming to the school, because they are not aware of the services offered in the U.S.," said Richard M. Barone, librarian for the Amos Library.

According to Barone, Latin American students are used to "closed stack" libraries where the books are handed out by the staff.

At the school, students receive an orientation on how the library system works in the United States.

"We orient them to our services, and the role I see for this library is to give them an idea of how library services are offered," Barone said.

Because the library orients the students, they can use any library on post and in the surrounding area.

However, the Amos Library caters to the needs of Latin American students by providing Spanish-language books and publications for research, as well as newspapers from their countries.

The library also uses a computer link to the other libraries on post so students can access, through a data base, their card catalogues.

In addition, the library has a link to the On-line Computer Library Center. The OCLC is an on-line computer library catalog that allows students to search a data base and place inter-library loans.

"A request is made through the computer and when the library receives the request they send it by mail," Barone said. "It (OCLC) allows a small library to, in effect, become a very large library with access to many titles."

All of this access is possible through computer systems, but our belief in the freedom of information also makes it possible.

This aspect may be even more startling to students from countries where information is supressed or censored.

For the Amos Library, showing students the democratic flow of information and freedom of the press comprises another of its key roles, according to Barone.

"We provide them with access to publications they may not have access to in their countries."

For Barone the library has a role to play in impressing upon students the importance of freedom of information as a part of human rights.

According to Barone, a Vietnam veteran who received his master's degree in library science from the State University of New York in Buffalo, the library plays a vital role in the students' military education and their education of the American way of life.

Students look back

Ancient war games help students with future strategy

By Enrique Gallego
121st Division

On the "Ides of March"1992, the conquest of Caesar was stopped short. Gallic tribes under the command of the Chieftain, Vercingetorix, smashed through the Roman fortifications at Alesia. The famed legions of Rome were routed as barbarians poured over the walls and into Caesar's elaborate fortifications.

It didn't quite happen that way in 52 (B.C.). The Gauls lost that crucial battle and Vercingentorix was captured. Yet, when war gamed here at the National Infantry Museum, Caesar lost.

The wargame was part of the monthly Battle Analysis Seminar , sponsored by the U.S. Army Infantry School Military History Division and the Historical Miniature Gaming Society. A symposium was moderated by Capt. Pete Panzeri from the USAIS Military History Division. Guest speakers include Capt. Edward Gibbons, small group instructor for the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Dr. Charles White, chief historian at the Infantry School, and instructors from the Military History Division.

Gibbons led a discussion on the Roman Army and warfare during the time of Caesar. White related the historical significance and background about the Alesia campaign.

When asked why study about the Romans, Gibbons responded, "There are a lot of parallels between the Roman Army of Caesar's time military professionalism and that of the U.S. Army today."

Following the lecture/ discussions, participating students from IOBC and IOAC courses wargamed the battle. To accomplish this, 15mm miniatures, wargame rules, and a terrain board were used to simulate the battle. In the end, Caesar lost — a very different outcome from what really happened.

Caesar with 10 legions, a force of 50,000 Romans and Auxiliaries, defeated a force that out-numbered him 6 to 1. He had been laying siege to a force of 95,000 in Alesia and was expecting a relief force of 250,000 to attempt to break the siege.

In preparation, the legions built elaborate fortifications to their rear as well as their front. The Gallic relief force attacked, but were defeated through the effective use of the fortifications, a cavalry strike force and mobile reserves. Finally, Vercingetorix was captured by Caesar's Legions.

Michael Graziano, from the Historical Miniature Gaming Society, was the host of the wargaming demonstration also showed a video from the British Broadcasting Company Soldier series.

"These battle analysis seminars are great for the military enthusiast and professional soldier alike," White said. "The participants are able to hear a little bit about the battle and then as a famous general said, 'To get inside the skin of the man who make a decision and then see in what way you could have improved upon it'."

On April 18, the Battle Analysis Seminar Series continues with a force on the American Civil War period, examining the Battle for Columbus, fought on April 18, 1865. For more information, call 545-7122.

O'Club offers trip plans

Computerized service makes travel easier

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

If you have ever taken a long road trip you probably know the hassle of poring over maps trying to find the best route to take.

You can save time planning your next trip by taking advantage of the Officer Club's new computerized trip planning service.

The service is free to all club members, said Comunity Operations Chief John Bush. "What it is is a computer program that contains hundreds of thousands of roads and cities in the United States," Bush said.

"You tell the computer your starting point and destination and it will tell you which route is the best for what you want, whether it's the shortest, quickest, or scenic route."

The computer will print out a black and white map showing the route and a list of specific directions that tell you what roads to take, the number of miles to travel on each road, what direction to turn, what cities you will pass through, and the average travel time.

Bush said that the club will soon be getting a color printer that will allow the maps to be printed in color. By selecting specific options you can create maps that show almost as much detail as a commercial road map, including state boundaries, city names, recreational areas, and major roads and highways.

The program allows for a great deal of flexibility when planning your trip, Bush said.

In addition to selecting the type of route (shortest, quickest, preferred, or alternate), you can enter up to four cities you would like to stop in on the way and can change the average used by the computer to calculate how long the trip will take.

"About the only thing that it can't do is print city maps and it doesn't have military posts," added Bush.

To use the computerized planning service, stop by the Officer's Club and ask someone upstairs for assistance, Bush said.

Civilian's skill a lost art

Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"It's a skill you don't see a lot of anymore. Everybody is phasing it out."

Dominick DeCarlo of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing was speaking of the work of his employee, Valerie Shelton.

Shelton repairs or builds all of the venetian blinds for family housing on post. She also services window shades, so in total she is responsible for the windows in 3,300 sets of quarters — about 99,000 windows.

The customers must clean the blinds first before bringing them in for her to fix. She replaces what is necessary to get the blinds back into good looking and working order. This means attending to the lattice, rope, slats, head, foot and gears.

At one time when there was nothing but venetian blinds in quarters, there was a crew of five people servicing blinds. Now she works alone with a two-week backlog unless there is a special duty soldier available to help the civilian staff in DeCarlo's office.

"She works hard to help the customers," DeCarlo said. "I've known her to work through her lunch hour to help people in a pinch. She's dedicated to her job."

A native of Donalee, Va., Shelton originally came to work at Fort Benning in 1977 and took a job in the Quartermaster Laundry. When it closed in October of 1982, she went to work in a temporary position in the Key and Shade Shop where a man named Whit Parker taught her how to build and repair venetian blinds. She learned what to do in two days.

In May 1985, Shelton once again became a seamstress, this time for the Directorate of Logistics until a regular position opened up in the Key and Shade Shop in 1987.

She worked building and repairing venetian blinds full time until 1988 when the shop was closed under reorganization plans. It was reopened in 1990, and Shelton came back.

DeCarlo said she is fast. "She can build an average blind in 30 minutes. Repairing takes a little longer because everything has to be taken apart."

"The Lord has been good to me," Shelton says. Having recovered from a bout with cancer, she noted she enjoys helping customers and would like to keep working for another two years since that would put her at retirement age.

DeCarlo pointed out while there will continue to be a blind shop, it's getting harder and harder to find someone to service the venetian blind machine. So his office is looking at going to the more modern mini-blinds, which are plastic, and away from the more costly aluminum venetian blinds.

Currently, they are surveying the 55 different types of quarters his office is responsible for, and in 14 types alone, they have come up with 39 different sizes of windows. This is because the quarters were built at different times from the 1930s to the 1960s, and in many cases they didn't have standard sizes.

Therefore, even after mini-blinds become the standard, many will have to be custom-made to accommodate to odd-sized windows.

In the meantime, Shelton enjoys working with the venetian blinds she knows.

White School to celebrate 30th

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Jane Pride's second grade will give its impression of what a classroom was like 30 years ago when Edward A. White School celebrates its 30th birthday May 19 with a variety of events including a homecoming reception for past alumni.

The birthday celebration will involve a student assembly at 10 a.m. in the Youth Activities Center, a homecoming reception at 3 p.m. in the school auditorium, tours of the school, the unveiling of the contents of a time capsule buried by the Student Council in 1976 and remarks from some guest speakers.

According to Janet Winn, principal, one of the invited guest speakers is retired Brig. Gen. Charles White Jr., brother of Edward A. White, for whom the school was named.

Killed in action in 1950 near Kumchon, Korea, 1st Lt. Edward A. White was among the first young officers of the lst Cavalry Division to die during the Korean conflict.

In the face of overwhelming odds, he drove a jeep from his outpost to the rear for more ammunition. He started back through concentrated enemy fire and was killed.

Norma Green, the current music teacher for White and Richard G. Wilson Schools who will help with the birthday activities, was also on hand for the dedication ceremony of White on Jan. 5, 1962.

She said that originally White was called the "Hospital-Area School" because the hospital was in what is now the National Infantry Museum, and White was across the street in some Army barracks that were located where the Youth Activities Center is today.

When the school was dedicated in 1962, it had only the main building and two pods. Almost immediately, the school was under construction again because there was only enough room for grades one through four.

White is currently under construction for a third time to make room for a library and four classrooms. It is expected to be completed next year.

According to Dr. Beth Middlemiss, director of Staff Development for the Fort Benning Schools, once the school in Bouton Heights is finished, the kindergarten and first grade classes at Alexander Patch School will be phased out with those children to be sent to White.

Then another construction adjustment will be sought to readjust the stage in White's Auditorium so that they will have a facility for assemblies to accommodate the entire student body. Currently, they must use the Youth Activities Center.

Middlemiss praised White School for its strong sense of identity and school pride.

In 1968, Green and the sudent council wrote their own school song. The mascot is Eddie the Lion, named after the school namesake. There is also a school flag. It was designed by Allison Christie, a noted artist in the area, who at one time had children at White School.

Former students and faculty members are encouraged to contact the office for invitations to the 30th birthday celebration.

Post residents learn about gardening, weed control

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Carlton Kirby, a private horticulturalist consultant, gave tips on fertilizer use, weed control and mowing at the Gardening Workshop held March 19 at the Custer Terrace Community Life Office.

Kirby recommended beginning lawn care by having a soil test done for $4 by the county agent at the Georgia Extension Service on the ground floor of the Government Center. This will tell what is lacking in the soil of your lawn.

The type of fertilizer should be based on the soil test report and the type of grass you are treating (centipede, bermuda, zoysia, St. Augustine).

He suggested that the ideal time for putting on fertilizer in the spring is when the grass is 50 percent green and just before a rain, not after. Also the concentration of nitrogen should be one pound per 1,000 square feet per year.

Centipede grass can be easily over-fertilized. Bermuda, on the other hand, requires five to seven applications of fertilizer per year. The last application should be around Oct. 1.

Kirby said that watering a lawn is best done when dark patches start to show up or you can see your footprints on the lawn when you walk on it.

The best time to water is early in the morning when it is already wet with dew cutting down on the total time that the grass is wet. Too long of periods of dampness results in disease organisms beginning to grow on the blades.

The soil should be wet six inches deep with about one inch of water per week. Setting out several cups to measure one inch is a good method to use.

During the cutting season, Kirby advised raising the mower blades one half inch to help the lawn survive the drought times during the dead of summer.

Custer Terrace Mayor Dana Pund noted that on April 27 Fort Benning Family Housing residents may pick up flats of potted plants from the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Self Help Store.

This is the time of year, they can also check into picking up fertilizer, lime, straw and an allotment of grass seed.

Pund said that last year begonias and geraniums were in the flats given out by Self Help last year.

Kirby noted that begonias are annuals meant to be planted in shade or semi-shade and good for use in edging. Geraniums are annuals best planted in containers.

The next program to be sponsored by Army Community Services Outreach for Fort Benning families will be April 8 at 10 a.m. at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center on "Coloring Easter Eggs."

Teen-agers to learn about cars

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"The number one cause of death in teen-agers is automobiles. I hope this class will maybe save a few lives by making kids more aware of the safety features on a car and defensive driving techniques."

Emilio "Mac" Masciovecchio made these remarks with regard to the upcoming Kids in Cars Program he will be conducting for Youth Services April 9, 16 and 23, from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Youth Activities Center.

Masciovecchio, of the Car Care Center at 3400 Buena Vista Road in Columbus, has taught "Defensive Driving" and "How to Take Care of a Car" on Saturdays at the YMCA in Atlanta and at one time taught Drivers Education at Columbus College.

"Driving a car is a full-time job," he said, "and teen-agers should realize this and not try to be doing other things at the same time."

He will be touching on such topics as tips for driving when it's raining, how to stop at lights effectively and information on how such items as the braking system in a car work so a person knows what signs point to trouble.

There will be no charge for the three, two-hour classes, but interested persons need to register in advance with Youth Services at 545-3070.

Catholic Youth Organization gathers for fun each Sunday

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Catholic Youth Organization meets each Sunday at 3 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The group gathers for service, ministry and fun. The goal is to eventually provide religious education, outreach ministries, cultural and athletic events.

"The newly resurrected CYO recently had approximately 20 to 25 young people gather for numerous activities," said Mary Wilburn, adult leader of the group.

The CYO consists of youth in grades 6 through 12. They recently participated in an ice-cream social, a trip to Providence Canyon and a visit together with the Military Chapter of Catholic Women to the Deer Field Nursing Home at Warm Springs Road in Columbus.

During the visit to the nursing home, the group played games with the elderly and handed out packages.

"Presently, the group is planning the Bread and Soup Supper for Lent. This supper will be a parish function, and they will share it with the congregation," Wilburn adds.

"Additionally, in their spare time, they craft rosaries for soldiers in their spare time. We try to get the older teen-agers of the group interested in a ministry of outreach," she commented.

"Dedicated adult leaders and volunteers are needed and anybody answering to this request would be greatly appreciated."

For more information, contact Father Jose Piskura at 545-3461 or Mary Wilburn at 297-7660.

Stepfamilies get help

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Both Jack and Mary had custody of their children when they began dating. Jack's wife had passed away 10 months before, about the same time Mary separated from her husband. Once Mary's divorce was final, she and Jack married and they lived in Jack's house with her three children and his two.

Jack and Mary dreamed they could make marriage better the second time around. Unfortunately, the couple found themselves repeating the patterns of their former lifestyles as soon as they settled into the first weeks.

Agencies are available to lend a helping hand in strengthening a stepfamily. The Army Family Advocacy and the Chaplain's Family Life Center are offering classes titled "Strengthening Your Stepfamily." This course is for stepparents, stepgrandparents, and adult stepchildren.

Myth will be separated from reality while stepfamily issues such as the following are addressed: making decisions, deciding who disciplines, helping step-siblings feel like a real family, overcoming the expectation of instant love, and living with the ghosts of a former marriage.

The classes will be from 7 until 8:30 p.m. Thursday and April 9, 16 and 23 at the Chaplains' Family Life Center, building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza. Additionally, a retreat from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. April 30 is planned. The retreat is optional and baby-sitting is provided free of charge for the retreat but not for the course. The retreat and the course are free of charge.

The classes will be taught by Chaplain (Capt.) George Holston.

For registration or for more information, call 545-1760 or 545-5301.

The musical will include close to 40 people and is created and arranged by Rhonda Eggleston and Karen McEver. The choir will dress in self-tailored costumes and will present in song and scenes the last week of the Lord's life before he was crucified and resurrected.

Plant your advertising message in the classified columns and reap the rewards.

A Funny Thing Happens When People Put Down A Newspaper.

They Start Spending Money.

Nothing puts people in the mood to buy like newspaper. In fact, most people consider it almost a prerequisite to any spending spree. Because that's where they make their decisions on where to shop and what to buy. Not on tv. Not on radio. And not jammed in little envelopes that come uninvited in the mail.

71% say newspaper is the place they turn for shopping advice. The place where they actually look forward to seeing the ads. And set aside the time to read them. That message comes through in study after study. More importantly, it also comes through in sales. Of course, if you want further proof of newspaper's effectiveness, run an ad and you can see it firsthand.

Oscar pays annual visit to Hollywood

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

For some of the nominees, it may be the only chance they'll ever get ... but for many behind-the-scenes people, it marks a happy return.

Each year's Academy Award ceremony normally includes first-time contenders among those competing for the motion-picture industry's coveted Oscar, but when ABC televises the 64th annual edition Monday from the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of the Los Angeles Music Center, some key talents will reunite to stage the event. For the third consecutive year, comedian-actor Billy Crystal will serve as host — after earning two Emmy Awards for his work on the 1991 telecast — and filmmaker Gilbert Cates also will be back for his third straight round as producer. Debbie Allen again will choreograph the musical portions, and for the fourth year in a row, Emmy-winning variety-show veteran Jeff Margolis will sit in the director's chair.

SPOTLIGHT

Centered on the theme "The Joy of Movies," the program will include tributes to "Star Wars" and "Indiana Jones" mentor George Lucas (the recipient of the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award) and director Satyajit Ray of India. Among scheduled presenters are current Oscar nominees John Singleton (the writer-director of "Boyz N the Hood") and Geena Davis and Susan Sarandon (the stars of "Thelma & Louise"), as well as such past winners of the statue as Kathy Bates, Whoopi Goldberg, Goldie Hawn and Joe Pesci.

Also the director of the newly released videocassette "Oscar's Greatest Moments," compiling highlights from the past 20 years of Academy Award telecasts, the friendly Margolis views this year's nominee roster as "a really good horse race" since no one film dominates the lineup. "In some years, with a movie like 'Dances With Wolves,' you have a pretty good feel for who will win in certain categories," he reflects. "This year, though, there's just so much good stuff that it's hard to tell." The Disney-produced and musically rich "Beauty and the Beast" has made history this year by becoming the first animated film to be nominated for Best Picture, and since it also has six other Oscar chances, Margolis admits that "It's kind of tough to make sure you spread those awards evenly throughout the show, and the music is so wonderful in that movie. I just think the show is going to be really spectacular this year, and Debbie (Allen) is putting some wonderful production quality into the numbers."

Billy Crystal and the Oscar

Having worked on the Academy Awards thrice before, as well as on the Emmy Awards twice and the American Music Awards 10 times, Margolis recognizes that such programs have built-in audiences ... but none quite as large, or as international, as the Oscars.

"I keep trying to make it better every year," he claims, "to outdo myself from the year before, and I think all of us who work on this show try to make it not so much bigger — because how much bigger can what's already the biggest show in the world get? — but just different, by giving it a little facelift, so that it'll remain interesting to the audience. From the time the nominees are announced until the show gets on the air, it's (a job that takes) 25 hours a day and eight days a week, but we love it."

In teaming up with both Crystal and producer Cates for the third time, Margolis explains, "We really like each other, which is the most important part of the whole process, and we've found that we have very similar creative thoughts. We enjoy coming up with the ideas that put this show together from start to finish."

As does Cates, Margolis participates in mounting the Oscar show from square one, and he maintains that they both "really get involved in everything. At first, we just get together and sit down and talk about what happened in movies during the past year, and about what we would want to do differently or keep the same from the shows of preceding years. Then, slowly but surely, Gil and I meticulously

Westville begins celebrating spring

Westville Public Relations

Spring has sprung at Westville, an 1850 living history museum at Lumpkin.

Activities will begin Saturday with a storytelling festival. The event will be led by master storyteller Mary Bass of Columbus and her students. However, anyone wishing a stage and an audience is welcome to participate.

The Springer Ballet Company will be dancing on the Singer House lawn April 5.

On weekdays of the festival, area school children will be in Westville's academy, where they will re-create school in 1850.

Westville is open for special events Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and from 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Do you get Cable TV for "free?"

Occasionally, Cable service which should have been disconnected may have been left on. If you or someone you know is receiving Cable TV but not paying for it, or using an outlet that was not installed by a CVI technician, please contact our office.

We're currently conducting a system wide security check for signal leakage. During that time we'll disconnect service to people who have not asked to receive it. Policy enforcement begins June 1.

put together what we think would be the best possible show for the billion or so people watching around the world." In a way, some of Margolis' potential problems in the opening moments have been solved by host Crystal's inventive "non-production number," which interpolates the names of various nominees into a mock song. "People can't wait for that now," Margolis muses. "It is such a gift for us to have him on the show, because he's so comfortable doing it, you almost have the feeling that you're sitting in his living room at a dinner party. He really enjoys being the master of ceremonies at the biggest television event in the world, but he works very hard in preparing for it. He works with a whole slew of writers on the opening monologue and his little bits throughout the show. He cares very much about it."

Infantry leaders to meet

Highlights include capabilities exercise

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

"Infantry in the '90s — Maintaining the Edge," will be the theme for this year's Infantry Commander's Conference, which will be Wednesday and Thursday in Infantry Hall.

"The overall goal of the conference is to provide each attendee with a professionally rewarding experience," said Col. Gary Jones, chief of the Infantry Proponency Office.

According to Conference Chief Maj. Bob Robertson, the yearly event provides "a centralized forum for exchange of warfighting dialogue between U.S. Army field commanders and the U.S. Army Infantry School with the primary focus on infantry doctrine, tactics, combat development and weapons."

Attendees will include officers and non-commissioned officers from the active and Reserve components and retired personnel, Robertson said.

Among this year's highlights are a capabilities exercise on Red Cloud Range and displays by defense contractors showing the latest Army equipment and technology being fielded or planned for the future.

The Columbus and Phenix City Chambers of Commerce and the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army will host a reception Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m. for conference attendees and members of AUSA, the Chambers of Commerce, and the Military Affairs Committee.

Attendees who require assistance or have questions during the conference can call or stop by one of the Conference Operations Centers located in Infantry Hall, Classroom 50 and Towle Hall, building 73.

The Infantry Hall Center is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. and can be reached at 545-4621 or 545-4624.

The Towle Hall Center is open from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. and can be reached at 545-1190 or 545-1191.

Spc. Timothy Bomboy of Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, lies in the prone position during the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System training conducted by the unit the week of March 23. The battalion's intent for the training was to maintain proficiency in infantry skills. For more about MILES training, see page B-5.

8th ID to case colors

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The colors of the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) are returning to the United States after 38 years of overseas service.

The colors will be cased and the division officially inactivated in a ceremony on York Field Thursday at 4 p.m. Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, chief of staff of the Army, will be the keynote speaker.

The ceremony is part of a reshaping of the U.S. Army in Europe, which included departure ceremonies Jan. 17 in Frankfurt for the 3rd Armored Division and in Baumholder with the "Pathfinder" Division.

That was exactly one year after the 3rd Armored Division and elements of the 8th Infantry Division joined the allied operation to liberate Kuwait.

During the departure ceremony, the colors of both divisions were furled and returned to the United States for the actual inactivation ceremonies. The 3rd Armored Division will be inactivated at Fort Knox, Ky.

The Fort Benning ceremony will mark the third inactivation of the Pathfinder Division in its long service to the country, dating to 1918.

Soldiers should review leases

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Because some may leave the Army before their scheduled Expiration Term of Service, soldiers may need to take a close look at their rental agreements.

According to Kenneth G. Hankins, chief of the Housing Division for the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, soldiers should make sure their lease agreements treat ETS orders the same as Permanent Change of Station orders.

He noted that realtors will honor a 30-day notice with proof of Permanent Change of Station orders, but some realtors will not honor ETS orders in the same manner.

Therefore, some of those soldiers who are leaving the Army early and want to go back home are having difficulty being released from their leases.

Daniel L. Winand, attorney and adviser for the Administrative and Civil Law Division for the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at Fort Benning, said that Georgia Code 44-7-37 provides that if a person is on active duty with the U.S. military and enters into a residential lease of property for occupancy and subsequently receives permanent change of station orders, any liability for rent and the cost of repairing damage to the premises caused by an act or omission of the tenant may not exceed 30 days rent after written notice and proof of assignment are given to the landlord.

Since the statute does not refer to ETS orders, the soldier could be held liable for the remaining amount of the lease.

Col. Donald Morgan, staff judge advocate, recommends that soldiers read their leases prior to signing them and attempt to negotiate a provision which treats ETS orders the same as PCS orders.

If there are any questions, before signing they should contact the Legal Assistance Division of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

Infantry Chorus to make debut

Needs more members

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

The newly formed Infantry Chorus will make its debut at the Army Chief of Staff's Dinner Thursday at the Supper Club at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Although a previous chorus once existed, said 1st Lt. Ferrell Lorraine, music director, the current ensemble was created at the request of Maj. Gen. Jerry White, post commander.

"We held auditions and units on post sent individuals to try out. For the audition each participant had to sing a prepared piece and a sight-read piece," said Lorraine, who has a bachelor of arts degree in music.

Being on the chorus is a full time job, she said. Members rehearse from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily.

"We're still soldiers though," said Lorraine. "We still do physical training and other soldierly duties."

The chorus is currently made up of 12 members, both male and female.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Durr, assistant music director, said that achieving a balance of sound is not difficult because the pieces the chorus is currently learning are all sung in unison, with very little harmony.

Durr, a drill sergeant with Company B, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry said he joined the chorus because of his desire to sing.

He has previously performed in the Army Soldier's Show, at Disney World, and in dinner theatre.

Chorus member Spc. Terra Pierce of the 690th Medical Company, one of the two female singers, said she was "discovered" by Spc. Katrina Lunceford of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, the chorus' other female member.

"I was in the motor pool singing while I was unloading supplies from an ambulance and Lunceford heard me and convinced me to try out for the chorus.

The chorus is seeking new members. Interested soldiers can contact Capt. Barry Washington at 545-3417.

AER fund campaign reaches $45,268

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A total of $45,268 has been turned in at Fort Benning for the annual Army Emergency Relief Campaign, which began March 2.

According to Capt. Francisco Marroquin, AER Campaign Officer, the drive is slated to run through April 30 with the goal being to meet or exceed last year's total of $209,530.

Karen Crowley of the Directorate of Community Activities, said that of those who come to AER for help, 90 percent are approved.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for this organization marking its 50th year in offering emergency financial assistance in the form of no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, family members, retirees, widows and members of the Reserve and National Guard units.

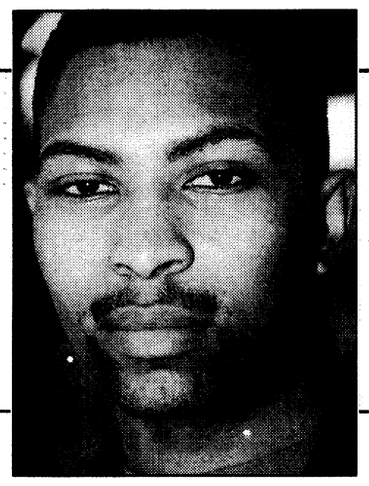
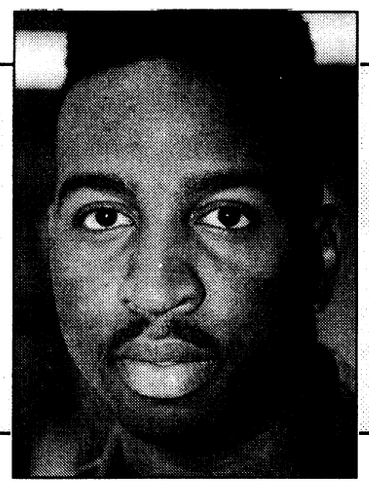
VARIOUS VOICES

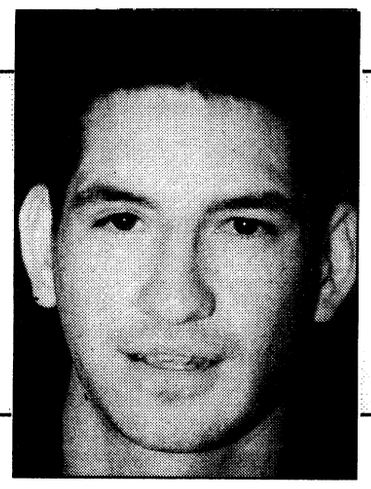
Do you think women can advance further and faster in a military or a civilian career?



Spc. Jimmy West, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division— "I think women will advance further in the civilian work force, because in today's Army, it's hard enough for male soldiers to get promoted, much less females."

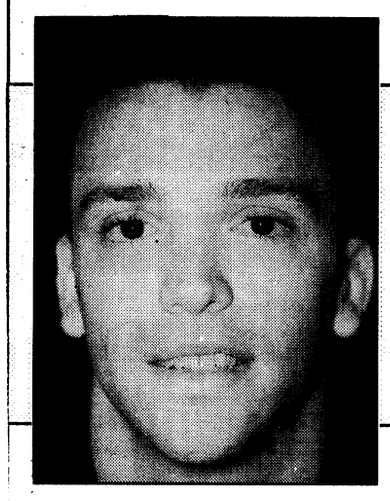


Spc. Richard D. Jamison, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment— "I think women have better chance for advancement in a civilian career, because ther are no rules that could hinder someone from getting ahead."



Pvt. 2 Ken German, Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment— "Women have a better chance for advancement in civilian employment. Women are becoming stronger in civilian areas like politics, and pretty soon, there won't be anything women can't do."

Staff Sgt. Gloria Tyson, U.S. Army Information Systems Command— "Women can advance quicker in the military, because the attitude of the military has changed. Now, women have shown that they can excel in areas that were once closed to us."



Pvt. 1 Cary Cooke, Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment— "I think women can advance faster in the military. With almost mandatory advancement and women excelling in so many areas in the military, it's hard for them not to advance."

Sgt. 1st Class Jay McCloud, 690th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion— "I feel that women have better chance for advancement in the civilian work force because a lot of the fields where a soldier can advance quickly, like infantry, are closed to women."

COMMENTARY

Keen reporter instincts told me something was awry when I visited the cleaners in the Mini-Mall the other day.

And I was right. Seemed there'd just been another case of shoplifting and the police were looking for the perp (that's their word for "bad guy who commits the crime," as in "the perpetrator of the offense," perp being easier to spell than perpetrator).

What surprised, and angered me, were the jerks on the sidelines who seemed to be pulling for the bad guy.

"I hope the guy's a real big bruiser and the cop runs into him. Maybe he'll pulverize the cop," said some non-commissioned officer who shoulda known better.

"Excuse me," I said. "Did I hear right? Are you rooting for the bad guy?"

"Just looking for a little excitement, specialist," he said, turning back to his buddies.

"I see," I said. "You think a cop doing his duty is fair game. These guys put their lives on the line every day. Each time they answer a disturbing the peace call in some family quarters, each time they stop some druken fool weaving from one side of the road to the other, they're at risk.

"Now we have a cop trying to apprehend some bum who ripped off the PX and you hope the cop gets his head handed to him."

"Oh, come on, man it's not that serious," said the NCO, trying play down his comment.

"Yeah, I guess you're right," I said. "I see you're a veteran of Southwest Asia. I'm sure you wouldn't have minded at all if some cornball on Victory Drive held up a "Go Iraq" sign to demonstrate his support of Sadddam Hussein. After all, isn't that what America's all about? Cheering for the underdog?"

"Hey, man, get serious. That'd be treason. That'd be like Jane Fonda posing with the enemy in North Vietnam. That's serious."

"No more serious than soldiers wearing the same uniform betting against each other," I said, seeing that I wasn't getting through to this guy, who apparently replaced the brains God gave him with Cream of Wheat.

"Let me put this in terms you might understand, sergeant," I said. "Pocketbook."

"Uhn?" he said.

"OK, it's obvious you don't have any respect for the law, even though you're probably one of those so-called leaders who can't wait to bring charges against one of your soldiers for the slightest screw up. So I'll put it in economic terms.

"Every time some dimwit rips off a store, the cost gets passed on to the customer. That's you and me.

"We pay higher prices because of the stuff these ignoramuses steal, and we pay higher prices because the stores have to install elaborate detection systems and hire store detectives, not to mention this clown's breaking the law."

I didn't toss in the loss of money to the Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund that comes from lost profits, because I could see this cretin in the Battle-Dress Uniform wouldn't understand it.

I also knew my time was running out as the veins on the NCO's neck were beginning to pop and his face turn from red to purple.

Fortunately, I had witnesses in case he decided to do to me what he wanted some punk to do to a policeman.

But, preferring to err on the side of caution, I quickly told the NCO to have a nice day, and beat feet for the parking lot and my car.

By then, I could see the police had called in reinforcements and I suspected that if the perp were caught, he wouldn't be trying anything funny.

LETTER

Parents grateful for post school system

The purpose of this letter is to thank the McBride School Staff for all of their help (with our son's reading program).

Without these people, especially Shelia Washington, Nancy Gordy, Kathryn Fronzaglio and Jim Rutland, we personally feel we wouldn't be where we are right now with our son.

Just saying thank you to these people doesn't seem like enough. We understand they are doing their jobs, but to us they are doing much more. Their time and caring is so unreal.

We have been in three other school systems, and the other two cannot compare to Fort Benning's. And the staff really cares, and not just because it's their jobs.

We wanted to let the staff at McBride school know just how very much we appreciate everything they have done and to let parents know how lucky they are to have their children attending Fort Benning schools.

Soldiers get help from ACAP

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet Staff Writer

Soldiers at Fort Benning who are about to separate from the Army are being offered the opportunity to enchance their marketability in the civilian workforce. This opportunity is presenting itself in the form of the Army Career and Alumni Program, a program designed to help the separating soldier make a smooth transition back to the civilian sector, according to Ted Craig, chief of ACAP at Fort Benning.

The only snag in an otherwise smooth operation is time, said Craig. Soldiers are not coming to ACAP soon enough before they leave the Army to take full advantage of the program's benefits.

"I've had soldiers with just six days left in the Army come to ACAP. How can you learn everything there is to learn about finding civilian employment in six days?"

The process is much more involved than that, said Craig. With all the differents facets of the program, Craig advised soldiers to come in as many as 180 days before their expiration term of service, or ETS, date.

"It's so important for commanders and first sergeants to allow soldiers to have that time to come to ACAP. Transitioning out of the Army — whether it's after five years or 25 years — is not an easy task. With ACAP, not only can the transition out of the Army run more smoothly, but the transition into a civilian workplace can be made a whole lot easier," said Craig.

The program starts for the soldier with the Transition Assistance Center, where all the agencies necessary for outprocessing are consoldidated, making for an easier transistion, said Craig.

The other half of ACAP deals with helping the soldier gain the skills to find meaningful civilian employment. The counselors at the Job Assistance Center help soldiers develop these skills, to include helping soldiers set up current job resumes, helping convert military experience into terms civilian employers can understand and helping soldiers develop skills needed in the civilian workplace.

The JAC also provides soldiers with leads to employment. Several employers wishing to employ separating soldier have contacted the JAC and asked them to release information on job openings, said Craig.

Culinary Arts Team returns successful

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning Culinary Arts Team returned from Fort Lee, Va., March 14 after competing in the 17th Annual Culinary Arts All-Army Competition. Food service personnel from installations Armywide were represented. The Fort Benning team consisted of food-service personnel from units across post. The team was competing for awards, based on excellence in culinary skills and professional dedication.

"Culinary art competition is an exceptional opportunity for Army cooks to display their culinary expertise and lay to rest the old adage that they are just cooks," said Master Sgt. Otis Hervey Jr., team captain.

The team competed in "live cooking" competition, working against the clock to prepare a three-course meal for 100 persons in the garrison. The team also entered the field competition, preparing a meal for 25 persons in the field, using only armed forces recipes; they displayed their talent in preparing large quantity meals of the highest quality, said Hervey .

Sgt. 1st Class Carolyn Lewis, from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, won a Gold and Silver Medal in the centerpiece category, with her centerpiece made from dead dough. Lewis also won a Silver Medal with her cold buffet dessert layout. She also received an Army Chef Certificate

Sgt. 1st Class Fritz Eugene of the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division received a Commendable Certificate for his cake entered in the non-edible cake category.

Spc. Shirley Locklear of the 36th Engineer Group won a Silver Medal in cold buffet desserts and Bronze Medal in dead dough.

Other team members who partcipated were Sgt. Reginald Calhoun of School of Americas, Sgt. Garrett White of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Regiment, Sgt. 1st Class Lee Stamper, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division and Spc. Erron Francier of the 36th Engineer Group.

"The show was an overall success for the Fort Benning team," said Hervey.

CONVICTIONS

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Georgia recently completed several criminal cases involving offenses committed on Fort Benning.

Since Fort Benning is federal property, all felonies committed on post by civilians are federal offenses and are tried in the Federal District Court.

These cases were prosecuted by a judge advocate assigned to the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate who has been appointed as a special assistant U.S. attorney.

Walter Avery III, Michael Cruz, Edward Coleman Heard, Lewis Ladale Miller and Joseph Anthony Vison were charged in an 11-count indictment by a federal grand jury of conspiring to break into automobiles on Fort Benning and steal car stereos, radar detectors, and other personal property during the summer of 1991.

They all pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy and one count of theft of personal property.

Each faces a maximum sentence on each count of five years imprisonment, a fine of $250,000, and a period of up to three years supervised release.

The defendants implicated themselves in more than 200 automobile break-ins on Fort Benning during 1990.

Albert Luke III and Tyresais Victorious Smyre were convicted after a two-day trial of conspiracy to steal motorcycles from Fort Benning and the thefts of several motorcycles.

Luke was convicted on all seven of his charges and faces a maximum sentence on each count of five years imprisonment, a $250,000 fine and a period of up to three years supervised release.

Smyre was convicted on all three of his charges and faces a maximum sentence on each count of five years imprisonment, a fine of $250,000 and a period of up to three years supervised release.

Dawn E. Fricano, Tywanna Y. Persons and Rodney Bynum entered pleas of guilty each to one count of theft of government property. Fricano cashed 50 checks at the Post Exchange totalling more than $7,000 after her checking account was closed.

Persons received more than $4,000 in medical care at Martin Army Community Hospital to which she was not entitled by using an unauthorized identification card.

Bynum, a former soldier assigned to Fort Benning, stole a 1991 Ford Aerostar leased to the Army and took it with him to Louisiana when he was discharged from the Army. Although the van was later recovered, the Army lost more than $12,000 due to damages to the van and rental charges for the time Bynum had the van.

They each face a maximum sentence of 10 years imprisonment, a fine of $250,000 and a period of up to three years supervised release.

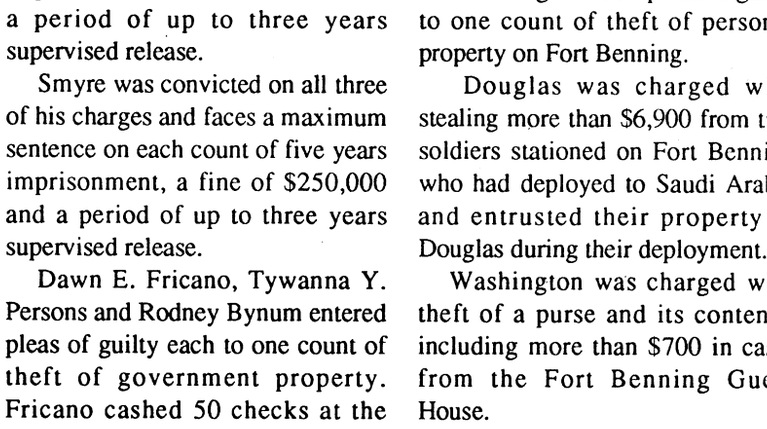
The Headquarters Support Company, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center Orderly Room, Supply Room and Drill Sergeant Orientation Course have relocated to Building 3245 (Company E area) on Sand Hill.

New telephone numbers are: commander and first sergeant at 544-8555 or 544-9913; personnel action center and training office at 544-9706; and supply room and executive officer at 544-9365. For more information, call 1st Sgt. Marcellus Washington at 544-8555.

Free tax assistance at Post Exchange

Free assistance with tax form preparation by the Legal Assistance Office personnel will be available at the Post Exchange in the Main Mall Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. For more information, contact Jane Winand at 545-3281. Be sure to bring all of your paperwork and the tax forms that you have received.

PET OF THE WEEK



This stray, male tan cat is looking for a home. If you would like to adopt him or another pet, contact the Veterinary Services office in Building 265, with the Animal Adoption Facility in Building 263 next door. Hours are Monday through Friday, 8 to 11:45 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. For more information, call 545-1127.

If you have lost a pet, Fort Benning has a stray impoundment facility. Animal control on post is a division of the Military Police Activity. An officer will pick up strays and take them to the stray impoundment kennels, located in building 283). Once the animal arrives, it has three working days to be claimed. If the pet is not claimed, it becomes government property and may be adopted or destroyed.

Rabies tags are important, too, because it's the only way Veterinary Services can contact the owner. Pet owners should update their records when changes occur and register pets.

The clinic is closed the last working day of each month.

Tax tips offer help for late filers

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

April 15, the filing deadline for 1992 tax returns, is almost upon us. Some of the following last-minute tax tips may be helpful.

Of course, you may direct any question about taxes to the Internal Revenue Service by calling 1-800-829-1040. Also, the Fort Benning Tax Assistance Office in building 5 is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. The telephone number is 545-1506.

No W-2 form: You may be able to file a return using the information from a Leave and Earnings Statement. This does not mean that you can simply mail in your LES.

The official IRS position is that you cannot use the Leave and Earnings Statement to file a return, since only a W-2 is an official statement of what you earned and how much was paid to the government as taxes during the year.

However, using a form 4852, Substitute W-2 Form, you enter the information from the LES onto the form, with a copy of the LES as an attachment, and prepare your tax return in the normal way.

There are drawbacks to this method, however. First, you cannot file a free electronic tax return through this office without a W-2. Second, the LES may not be accurate, so a later amended return, called 1040x, may be required.

Erroneous W-2s: Many personnel involved in Southwest Asia have received as many as three W-2s so far this year. If this happens to you, be sure to use only the latest W-2, since the earlier ones are superseded by revision.

If you filed with the first W-2, you have filed an erroneous tax return, and it will be necessary to correct any misstatements of income by filing a Form 1040x. If the later W-2 shows more taxable income on the form, you may have to return some of the refund you already received. Fortunately, the IRS has indicated that it will likely waive any interest and penalties which would normally accrue on a late tax payment if it was caused by the Army.

Again, the amended return cannot be filed electronically if a return has already been submitted.

Electronic filing deadline: The last day for filing electronic returns through the Tax Assistance Office, building 5, is April 10. This allows for error correction and processing before April 15. Be sure that you put a good telephone number on your Form 8453, the electronic filing form, and be sure to check back with the Tax Office in three to five days to be sure that there were no problems.

Refunds and electronic filing: The main reason that clients choose electronic filing rather than mailing in a paper return is speed and convenience. The electronic filing system is faster.

IRS says that a return will be transmitted to a bank account in 10 to 20 days from the date they accept the return. A check is mailed to electronic filers in 17 to 27 days.

This method is also convenient. Any forms are mailed for you by the transmitter of your return.

A reasonable fee for this service at a tax preparation service should be about $40. It is free at Fort Benning.

Rapid refund: Commercial tax services offer faster processing than traditional electronic filing, sometimes in as little as three days.

This service typically costs about $70, and is not electronic filing. It is in fact a loan, in which the taxpayer borrows money from a bank, and the bank gets the right to receive the tax refund.

There is nothing illegal about this practice, but it is expensive. Since the Tax Office is free, we do not arrange loans.

Free tax help will be at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Be sure to bring your W-2s, interest and dividend statements, and other information. Most federal forms are available, but bring any state forms.

Fiber intake promotes good health

By Karen Schultz
Martin Army Community Hospital

It's impossible to pick up a magazine or turn on the television without seeing an advertisement for a cereal or bread that is high in fiber. Why is fiber so important?

Studies show that diseases such as diverticulitis, colon cancer, diabetes and some forms of coronary heart disease occur with much less frequency with diets high in fiber.

For diverticular disease: High fiber diets are associated with a low incidence of diverticular disease. It is also the treatment of choice in uncomplicated diverticular disease.

For fat metabolism: Low serum cholesterol levels and a low incidence of cardiovascular disease have been reported in populations where diets high in soluble fiber from oat bran and pectin are consumed.

For carbohydrate metabolism: High fiber intake, especially from water-soluble fibers such as oat bran and pectin, has been shown to slow the rate of glucose absorption, extremely important to diabetics.

The cancer relationship: A reduced risk of cancers of the lower gastrointestinal tract has been cited as a benefit of increasing fiber intake according to several governmental and scientific groups. The National Cancer Institute recommends 20 to 35 grams of fiber per day should be included in the diet.

Now that we know why fiber is so important, what is it, and what foods are high in fiber? Fiber is the part of plant foods that is not broken down in the human digestive tract and absorbed into the blood stream. It is a complex carbohydrate that contributes virtually no calories to the body. Dietary fiber is the indigestible material actually remaining when food passes through the intestinal tract. It can be divided into two groups; insoluble fiber and water-soluble fiber.

Insoluble fiber does not dissolve in water. Wheat and corn bran, fruits, vegetables and nuts are high in insoluble fiber. They promote regularity and are part of a diet that may help reduce the risk of colon cancer.

Water-soluble fiber dissolves easily in water. Oat and barley bran, some fruits like apples and oranges, and some dry beans and legumes contain significant soluble fiber.

Remember, when adding more fiber to the diet, use caution. If fiber is increased too quickly, abdominal bloating, cramps and gas can occur. This is usually a temporary problem that disappears when the body adjusts to a high fiber diet. Also drink at least six to eight glasses of fluid, especially water, daily.

TRADOC announces plans to save resources

TRADOC New Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — A new Training and Doctrine Command base partnership program is designed to save resources throughout the command.

Under the partnership, TRADOC installations in "regions" will cooperate in performing base operations functions such as personnel administration, maintenance and laundry. These jobs are currently done at each installation but, as partners, only one may perform the service for several posts.

TRADOC's effort have also drawn the attention of Department of the Army officials. It is following developments to determine if the program is applicable throughout the Army.

"In the '90s we have to look at innovative way to do the base ops job," said Jim G. Freeman, program analyst with TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for base operations. "We must find more efficient methods for using the decreasing resources we will have."

So far TRADOC has amassed more than 200 suggestions for functions that possibly can be accomplished on a partnership basis. Most of the ideas came from installations rather than from the headquarters, according to Danny Spruill, chief of the Management Division.

"Some of the ideas are also the results of past studies," Spruill said. "We have given them renewed emphasis."

TRADOC staffers visualize the program growing to include not only the rest of the Army, but the entire Department of Defense; other federal agencies; state, regional and local governments; private business; and academic institutions.

"The first phase is to deal with those installations that the TRADOC commander (Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr.) has direct control over," Freeman said. "Then we will seek cooperation with other Army commands, DoD, and other agencies."

One example of regionalization is to have a single laundry for both Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Gordon, Ga. Another is to have one civilian personnel office for Fort Jackson, Forts Gordon and Benning in Georgia, and Forts Rucker and McClellan in Alabama.

Installations selected for a regional partnership will work out oeprational details, such as selecting the installation that will provide the support. They will also determine the savings to be realized from the arrangement.

While some of the ideas can be acted upon fairly soon, it will probably be two to three years before other ideas are implemented throughout TRADOC.

Post holds spring cleanup

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning has been doing its spring cleaning.

The Post Cantonment/Housing Area Cleanup campaign for spring has been under way all week.

"The purpose of this cleanup campaign is to improve the appearance of the post," said Sgt. 1st Class Audie R. Dame, Community Life non-commissioned officer in charge.

"All soldiers, commanders and other post personnel have been involved in the cleanup," said Dame. "We want to get the post housing areas in an outstanding state of cleanliness and repair."

"Soldiers who live on post are encouraged to clean the area around their post quarters," he continued.

"Also, area coordinators have been managing and supervising the cleanup of assigned areas," he said. "They are inspecting designated areas to ensure compliance with the campaign, and DEH (Directorate of Engineering and Housing) personnel have been removing large debris and rubbish from housing areas."

Tools and bedding plants were available to post residents from the Unit and Housing Support Branch, building 385. Yard tools, fertilizer, lime, pine straw, grass seed and bedding plants are also available through April 11, said Dame.

For more information on the Post Cleanup Campaign, contact Dame at the Community Life Office at 545-2830.

Life kills Cruise-matics 42-6

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Columbus Fort Benning Rugby Football Club Cruise-matics took on Life Chiropractic College of Marietta, Ga., Saturday at Stilwell Field and were soundly defeated 42-6.

Life scored fast and often, overpowering the Cruise-matics with crisp passing and a staunch defense.

Life players Mike Caulder and Paul Roehrig scored two tries each and teammates Tony Brooks, Mike Sutila, Jim Babiuk, and Paul McCartney (no, not of the Beatles) each had a try.

Kicker Aaron Tressler rounded out the scoring with 10 points on kicks.

The only score for the Cruise-matics came at the end of the game when Greg Strafer was able to get into the end zone off a scrum near the Life goal line. Strafer also kicked for the extra points.

The Cruise-matics next home game will be Saturday and Sunday when they host the Eastern Military Regional Tournament.

AMU shooters right on target

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will send 11 shooters to the 1992 World Cup USA Tuesday through April 11 at Petersen's Prado-Tiro Ranges in Chino, Calif.

With competition in 14 rifle, pistol, running target and shotgun events, the match will serve as one of the final pre-Olympic showdowns for nearly 400 athletes from 40 nations.

The list includes AMU rifle shooters Mike Anti, of Greenville, N.C.; Glenn Dubis, Bethel Park, Pa.; Boyd Goldsby, Little Rock, Ark.; Matt Suggs, Roanoke, Va.; and Tom Tamas of Columbus.

In pistol competition, John McNally of Columbus and Ed Suarez, San Jose, Calif., have been selected to compete.

David Edmondson of San Saba, Texas, and Troy Lawton of Fort Worth, Texas, will shoot in the running target competition and Brett Erickson of Bennington, Neb., will compete in trapshooting.

Civilian skeetshooter Al Mullins of Columbus has also been selected to the U.S. roster for the World Cup USA.

"This is the last major international competition in the Western Hemisphere before the 1992 Olympic Games," said Gary Anderson U.S. Shooting Team administrative director. "Several good U.S. shooters are starting to build their scores for the Olympic Trials and Barcelona. This is a good chance to see if they've been able to catch up with the top shooters in the world."

World Cup USA will be a Minimum Qualifying Scores event for the 1992 Olympic Games, meaning athletes of all nations can shoot the MQS for their respective Olympic tryouts.

Running target competition at World Cup USA will double as the fourth of five tryouts for the two-man 1992 United States Olympic Running Target Team.

598th soldier volunteers time, energy to teach aerobics to other post units

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

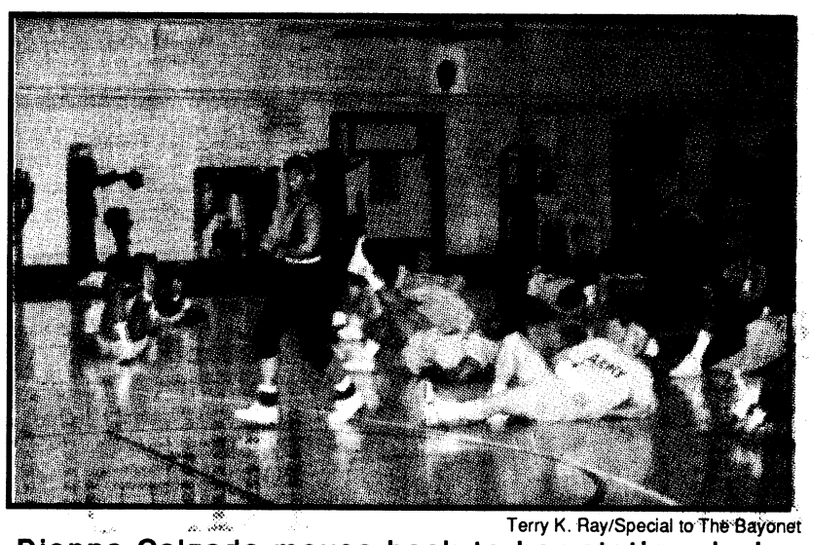
Dianna Calzada loves to workout. She loves it so much that on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 6 to 7 a.m. you can find her at Harmony Church Field House teaching aerobics to fellow soldiers.

Calzada volunteers her time to teach aerobics to various units on Fort Benning, Right now she is working with the 29th Infantry Regiment. The program she has started is strictly volunteer; units are not required to attend.

Calzada, a staff sergeant with the 598th Maintenance Company, initiated the idea herself when she found out there was no aerobics for military personnel on post.

She started with her own company and has since been asked to instruct classes at Harmony Church.

Calzada instituted similar programs at Fort Polk, La., and with the 19th Support Command in Korea.



Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet

Dianna Calzada moves back to her station during workout with Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

She hopes to branch out even further in the future; she is working on getting a building to open an aerobics class for family members and civilians. These classes would cost a few dollars for each class or 15 dollars a month.

"After my last child I gained a lot of weight and I didn't feel good about myself, so I started looking around for some type of exercise that would help me tone my body back up and lose weight at the same time; aerobics is that exercise," said Calzada.

When Calzada first started teaching on post, most of the soldiers were receptive to the idea; some weren't.

According to Calzada, "I learned some new techniques that involve football, basketball and baseball. The men tend to get more involved when it's something they can relate to."

Calzada also said, "Aerobics provides you with a way to relieve stress and get a complete work out at the same time."

For more information concerning classes contact Donald Baker at 544-6902 or Dianna Calzada at 545-7349.

Georgia accountants sponsor 1040K race

Georgia Society of CPAs

This year, certified public accountants will mark the passing of April 15 with the 10th anniversary of the Georgia Society of CPAs annual 1040K Road Race in Atlanta.

The race, which benefits United Cerebral Palsy of Greater Atlanta, has given CPAs, the Internal Revenue Service and the public the chance to pound the pavement with tax season frustrations for the past 10 years.

The idea for the timely race (named for the federal income tax form) came out of the Society's Public Service and Information Committee in 1982.

"The committee was looking for a way to publicize accountants, and an end-of-tax-season race was perfect," said Greg Hardwick, Atlanta accountant.

In 1983, 650 people ran the race, and 40 people worked as volunteers. Last year, the race boasted 150 volunteers and more than 1,000 runners from nine states, as well as Nova Scotia, Canada.

Hardwick said one of his most memorable moments from the 1040K was when Craig Virgin, an internationally-known runner and a member of the U.S. Olympic team, ran the 1040K Road Race.

Another year, a local dealership loaned the society a camper van for use as a results van, it was scraped against the side of a building. "Luckily, the management of the car dealership wasn't upset, says Hardwick.

Sponsors who have made substantial contributions to the race and the accounting profession, have also made the race memorable, adds Hardwick.

This year's race will be April 18 at the Holiday Inn Crowne Plaza-Ravinia in Atlanta. For more information, call (404) 231-8676 Ext. 509 or toll free (800) 282-1831.

RedStixx sign new lease

Columbus RedStixx

The future of professional baseball in Columbus was placed on solid ground last week when city officials and owners of the Columbus RedStixx Baseball Club signed a new, three-year lease for the use of Historic Golden Park.

The signing of the lease agreement stabilizes what had become a turbulent existence for the minor league franchise. In the four seasons since 1988, the team has undergone two ownership changes, four name changes and an affiliate change.

"We've turned the corner," said RedStixx President Henry Gilbertie. "I've thought all along that this is a great baseball town. Our intention in coming here was to build the team over the long term."

Gilbertie and general manager John Dittrich admit to losing money in their first year, but insist they were encouraged as well.

"The fans and businesses were outstanding last year," said Dittrich, who'll be entering his 20th year in baseball in 1992. "Most of our loss was incurred on one-time expenses used to re-start the franchise. We are very optimistic about the future here. I couldn't be happier."

The interesting feature of the lease agreement has the club's rent for the stadium increasing as attendance increases. A pre-determined table will be used to arrive at a higher rent payment due the city, the higher the turnstile count.

"This agreement really demonstrates the good relationship we've developed with the city government." said Gilbertie. "The better we do, the better the city does. There's nothing I'd rather do than hand over a big check to the city at the end of the year."

A turnstile count of 150,000 could result in over $20,000 rent paid to the city. Previous lease agreements called for nominal payments.

Under terms of the lease, the RedStixx will also provide a "Fan Appreciation Night" for Columbus residents. The tickets will be distributed by the city. The date for that night has not been set.

Gilbertie hopes fans will see the new lease as further evidence of the team's intention to stay in Columbus.

"We said when we changed the name (to RedStixx) that we were here for the long haul,"he said. "Now we're backing that up."

The RedStixx open the season Thursday in Macon. The home opener is April 11 at 7:05 p.m. against Charleston, W. Va.

Discipline hard for children, parents

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

"Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not turn from it," according to Proverbs 22:6 in the Bible.

The New International Life Application Bible explains the verse as follows.

Many parents want to make all the choices for their children, but this hurts them in the long run. When parents teach a child how to make decisions, they do not have to watch every step they take. They know their children will remain on the right path because they have made the choices themselves. Train the children to choose the right way.

All children, regardless of race, color, creed, economic background and social status create discipline problems, no matter how perfect the children or parents might be.

The overwhelming problems of parenting can often at least be minimized when parents learn how to match their parenting skills with their children's needs.

A workshop titled "Discipline without Shouting and Spanking" presented by the Chaplains' Family Life Center offers practical remedies for common behavior problems.

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, chief, Chaplains' Family Life Center, recognizes the need for parenting classes such as this, especially in transient, stressful military communities.

"The time to learn about how to care for you children is now, not only when problems arise," he said.

The discussion group will meet every Tuesday from noon until 1:30 p.m. April 14 through May 19 at the Chaplains' Family Life Center, building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza.

This course has been used by parents who were sincerely searching for new and innovative ways to raise responsible children.

Some of the topics covered are:

— a description of the symptoms, the causes, and a general approach to corrective action

— preventive steps to avoid the problem

— practical solutions to the misbehavior

— important information about what not to do

— a real-life situation that shows how the parents successfully handled the problem

The free workshop also provides an opportunity to share experiences and meet new people. Nursery is not provided. To register or for more information, call 545-1760 or 545-5301.

Casualties test 34th's readiness

Unit demonstrates ability to respond to medical emergency situations

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning's 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital conducted a mass casualty exercise March 27 near Fryar Drop Zone to test the unit's ability to respond to an emergency situation involving large numbers of severely wounded personnel.

The unit spent four days prior to the exercise setting up a complete field hospital with five wards and 60 beds that included intensive care wards, X-ray facilities, a pharmacy and an operating room. The generator powered complex of tents even had an air duct running through the center of the tents to provide temperature control and circulation.

"This would be the first hospital a soldier would see in a combat situation," said Executive Officer Maj. Theodore Taylor. "You would probably have two of these operating in the rear of a division, which might have anywhere from 10,000 to 19,000 soldiers."

Maj. Rick Dabbs, chief nurse, said that in wartime the hospital would follow the unit it is attached to into the combat zone and would be located near the scene of fighting. The hospital would be used to stabilize and provide emergency surgery to badly wounded personnel before evacuating them to a larger, more permanent facility.

Taylor added that patients probably wouldn't stay longer than 72 hours before being evacuated.

The mock casualties, real soldiers with a variety of simulated wounds, were brought to the hospital by air and ground ambulance from Main Post. Once unloaded at the hospital, they were quickly examined by doctors who prioritized the casualties according to certain categories and routed them to designated areas of the hospital for treatment.

Casualties needing immediate care were speeded into the Emergency Treatment Ward for stabilization. Those needing immediate surgery were then taken to the operating room, while those who could be delayed were placed in one of the intensive care units.

Taylor said that this is the first time since Operation Desert Storm that the unit has been able to conduct a large scale exercise because of delays in getting its equipment back from Saudi Arabia.

"This was a good opportunity to break out our equipment and use it again," said Taylor. " It's good training for the soldiers. A lot of the nurses involved in the exercise are assigned to the MASH, but work at Martin Army Community Hospital, so it gave them the chance to get a taste of the field environment."

Pfc. Mike Valdez was one of those who normally works at MACH.

"This was the first time I have been in the field on an exercise like this. It's a lot different than working in the hospital, but you learn a lot," he said.

During the exercise Valdez worked in the Patient Administration Division, whose function was to provide accountability of all the patients and their personal effects, including identifying and tagging the casualties as they were brought in, and creating a file for each patient.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Pfc. Antonio Wiggins and 1st Lt. Laura Pavano stabilize a patient.

Lt. Col. Richard Goyne, MASH commander, said he wants to conduct similar exercises at least once per quarter.

"You need to do this kind of thing frequently to maintain a level of proficiency," Goyne said.

The following day, March 28, provided a welcome period of relaxation for participants in the exercise.

Family members were brought out to the hospital by bus to visit, play volleyball, and enjoy a barbecue.

According to 1st Lt. Willie Lattimore, the Family Day gave family members the chance to get a taste of what their spouses have to go through in a field environment.

Artillery soldier in top spot

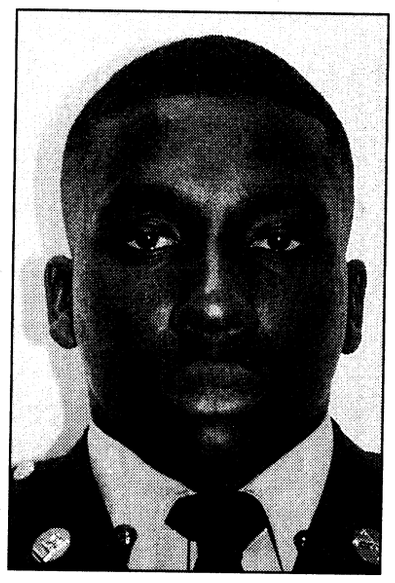
By Aurelio Feliberty
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

To excel is one of today's soldiers' goals if they intend to remain in the ever-changing Army. That is what 25-year-old Spc. Patrick W. Bean of Battery C, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, did by winning the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division Soldier of the Quarter Board March 20.

Bean is a native of Lake Charles, La. He and his wife, Marian, are the parents of Patrick Jr., 2, and Quanisha, 1 month. Bean says he joined the Army May 25, 1987, in search for career enhancement.

He serves as a fire direction center assistant for his battery and is finishing up his fire science degree at Chattahoochee Valley Community College.

Bean attributes his success to his wife and friends.



Bean

"They spent a great deal of time and effort quizzing me on likely board subjects and helping me study," he said. He advises other soldiers who plan to compete in such boards to study hard and to use common sense when answering the questions that are asked.

"The brigade soldier of the quarter board questions required more detailed answers, as well as more in-depth explanations, than the other boards did," he said.

3rd Brigade selects top NCO of quarter

By Willie Hay,
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

"When they asked me about my military goals, I told them I would like to become a command sergeant major. If you want to be a professional soldier, I can't see why anyone wouldn't want to accept the most responsibility — or rank — you can get."

Gibb

Those words sum up the impression Sgt. Charles E. Gibbs made March 20 on the members of the board who selected him as the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division Non-commissioned Officer of the Quarter for the second quarter of fiscal year 1992.

Gibbs, a 31-year-old native of Bradenton, Fla., with seven years of service under his belt, has already assumed a lion's share of responsibilities in his unit, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div.

In addition to serving as the unit's retention NCO, he also schedules soldiers for military schooling, coordinates its drug and alcohol abuse prevention program, administers skill qualification, skill development and common task testing, and instructs remedial physical training.

"I consider retention NCO my primary duty, but because our company has gotten smaller I get to wear about six different hats," Gibbs said. "It's a lot of responsibility for one person, but it allows me to become involved with just about every soldier's career and gives me a broad range of experience as a non-commissioned officer."

In his six months in the unit, Gibbs has guided 20 soldiers through the re-enlistment process. "The Army is really trying to seek out and retain only the highest quality soldiers," he said. "We're exceeding our retention objectives in this company, and I think every good soldier who wants to stay in deserves to re-enlist."

Gibbs came to HHC after serving as a mortarman in the now-defunct Delta Troop, 4th Cavalry, earning a Bronze Star for meritorious service in the Persian Gulf War.

"Out in the desert, we had the opportunity to train until we were proficient because we were totally focused on the war and able to train exclusively on combat mission."

Gibbs finds himself in a position to influence other soldiers chances for a military career through helping to keep them on track with military and civilian education, skills testing and physical fitness.

"Soldiers aren't naive — they know what they have to do to stay in the Army," Gibbs said.

Units get 'total' logistics system

By Richard C. McInnis
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

In an ever-changing Army, many soldiers are seeing a myriad of "institutions" vanishing before their eyes. During the next few weeks soldiers will be saying goodbye to untold hours of endless paperwork involved in the nightmare of logistics.

Currently, soldiers of the 3rd Brigade are being introduced to the "Unit Level Logistical System," or ULLS. It is a system designed to handle the "total logistical package," said Jay Sanders, chief of installation with the Mobile Training Team from the Combat Automation Support Command, Fort Lee, Va.

The ULLS became an integral part of the Standard Army Maintenance Information System in 1989, after being designated as such by the Army vice chief of staff. It was initially installed in the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga. It is now an automated system that puts the Class IX and maintenance functions at soldiers' fingertips. The binders full of paperwork are being replaced by diskettes.

According to Sanders, the course of instruction runs six weeks using the "Train the Trainer" concept. During the first cycle the MTT trains a group of soldiers who will later become the cadre to teach the system to other soldiers.

"Everyone in the brigade seems to be excited. There is a lot of motivation from these soldiers and they are performing very well," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Russell Ward, assistant brigade logistics assistance officer. "We have had maximum participation and haven't had to drag anyone to class with a leash."

According to Sanders, teams were dispatched during Desert Storm to assist 1,200 units in all divisions, including the 24th, to install the ULLS. "The desert operation proved that units which had to manually process requests didn't have enough time to complete all of the essential logistical tasks," Sanders added.

"The system costs approximately $3,000 and saves pencil-pushing hours and tons of paperwork, thereby reducing waste," said Sgt. Al Smith, a prescribed load list manager for elements of the 324th Forward Support Battalion. "Its value exceeds the cost of implementing the system."

MILES

1/29th maintains proficiency by training

By Andrew Temple
1st Battalion, 29th infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment conducted Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System training, also known as MILES, during the week of March 23 to maintain proficiency in infantry skills.

First platoon, Company A, supported the training. The platoon sergeant of 1st Platoon, Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Johnson, was the non-commissioned officer in charge.

"Being in 1/29, which is a support battalion, soldiers tend to lose touch with their infantry techniques," said Johnson. " This was an opportunity for the soldiers to get a rest from the motor pool, and fine tune their infantry skills."

The soldiers practiced their skills under the leadership of their squad leaders who present rigorous tasks and different scenarios days before the actual training.

"Any opportunity we can get to put the non-commissioned officers and the soldiers together for infantry training, we will jump at it," said 1st Sgt. Gary Cosper of Company E. "It is well worth the time and resources."

"I feel that this kind of training is essential to infantry soldiers and I would like to see more of it," said Spc. Timothy Bomboy of Company E.

"Every squad that goes through the course is evaluated on passage of friendly lines, tactically moving to the objective while observing noise and camouflage discipline, crossing a danger area, knocking out a bunker, and their after actions review," said Staff Sgt. Thomas James, an evaluator from Company A.

"This kind of training is excellent for the platoon leaders and platoon sergeants, because it give us the chance to evaluate their dismounted abilities," said Sgt 1st Class Charles Berk, second platoon's platoon sergeant in Company E.

"For example, every soldier who needs to raise his GT (general technical) score has the opportunity to attend BSEP (Basic Skills Education Program) during duty hours in the morning or afternoon. I recommend everyone try to reach a GT of 110 or higher."

As far as his own career is concerned, Gibbs refuses to become discouraged because his own military occupational skill, mortarman, is overstrength at the staff sergeant level and he finds himself more than 100 points short of the cutoff score for promotion.

"I plan to attend the Basic Non-commissioned Officer Course in June," he said. "Along with my on-the-job training as company retention NCO and soldiers in my MOS retiring at the senior NCO levels, I hope to get promoted in time to attend the Retention School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., and change my MOS to retention NCO. Retention is the career field that gives me the best chance for a full 20 years of service."

When he's not wearing one of his six hats in the company, Gibbs is pursuing a bachelor's degree in management from Troy State University, getting ready for the expected June birth of his first child with his wife, Judy, or making plans to add to the trophy case he keeps as an all-Army precision pistol champ.

"Ten years ago, I was a member of the XVIII Airborne Corps All-Army Marksmanship Training Unit at Fort Bragg," he said. "After a break in service, I came back in and served a tour in Korea before coming to Fort Benning. Then, because I had previously shot All-Army, they let me compete in the 1990 and 1991 matches. I was the top active Army firer in 1990, and finished first last year in three aggregates with the combat pistol among all the active duty and reserve shooters in the open division."

Gibbs displays the same confidence on the pistol range that he showed at the NCO of the quarter board.

"I don't practice much during the year, but I have 100 percent confidence in my front sight," he said. "The way I see it, just focus on that front sight, get a good lockup, let those rounds be a surprise coming out of the chamber, and you can't miss."

43rd Engineers dedicate new airborne building

By David Greer
36th Engineer Group

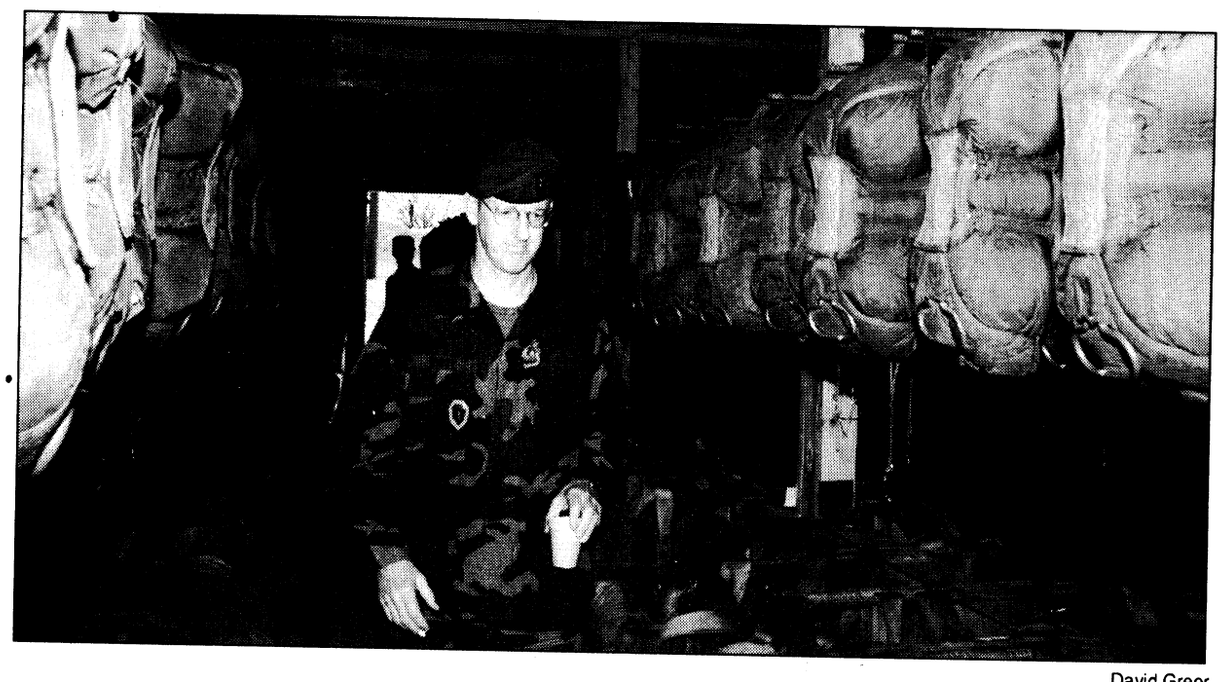
A harness shed and a storage facility for the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment was dedicated March 17 on Mann Field.

The building was constructed by Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

According to Maj. Orlando Rivera, the executive officer for the 507th, the building will be used to store reserve parachutes used during the ground phase of students attending Airborne School.

"What makes this building unique is that it was started before the onset of Desert Shield and Desert Storm" said Maj. Mario Carillo, executive officer of the 43rd Engineer Battalion. "Our soldiers stopped work, deployed to Saudi Arabia accomplishing all assigned missions, redeployed back to Fort Benning and then picked up the unfinished project like they never left. It's a tribute to our soldier's positive attitude and perseverance."

This sentiment was echoed by Rivera. "The 43rd has set the standard for all engineer units on this installation to follow," he said. "These guys were just great, truly professional in the way they built this structure. I just want the soldiers to understand that they will leave a piece of themselves (at Fort Benning) that will have a positive influence on others for many years to come."



David Greer

Col. Larry White Jr., commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment, walks through the facility.

Company B 1st Sgt. Jerry Gilley, stressed the training value of the building.

"Our soldiers got first-hand experience in wood construction, masonry skills and the forming and placement of concrete pads," Gilley said. "This is something that they don't get every day, and they are very useful skills if we are ever deployed again."

"This training will pay off for the soldiers who are scheduled to deploy to New Mexico in the May to June time frame," 2nd Lt. Earl Lawson, construction platoon leader, said. "They are going to be doing similar construction jobs as part of JTF-6 (A program that allows the military to support the Drug Enforcement Administration)."

The project's non-commissioned officer, Staff Sgt. Willy Lawrence, summed it, "Our soldiers got good training in many different skills relating to our Mission Essential Task Lis,t and we're ready for the next mission."

ADA officer trains with 29th Inf. Regt.

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Maj. Harry Bloomer of the 4th Battalion, 3rd Air Defense Artillery, 3rd Infantry Division in Germany, is the first air defense artillery officer to be trained on the Bradley portion of the precommand course held at the Collins Training Center, headquarters of the 29th Infantry Regiment. The Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, carries the responsibility of supporting the course.

"The one-on-one instruction that is provided is fantastic," said Bloomer. "Every time I have come to Fort Benning to receive training, it has been superior and this is certainly no exception."

The first few days of the week-long course emphasizes orientation, and maintenance. The next couple of days are geared towards the weapons systems and turret functions. On the final day, the students fire the weapons systems on a live-fire exercise, according to Sgt. 1st Class Dionicio Zuniga, an instructor at the precommand course.

Bloomer is the operations officer of 4th Battalion, 3rd ADA. His unit will be receiving Bradley vehicles in a new move by the Army to institute Bradley vehicles in air defense units.

"My battalion is sending the senior leaders of the battalion through the course to get a good understanding of the vehicle before we receive them," said Bloomer.

PEOPLE

SECTION C

Changes signal abuse

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Since April is both the Month of the Military Child and Child Abuse Prevention Month, the Fort Benning Family Advocacy Program is planning several events to create public awareness of these observances.

According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, there will be handouts at the April 18 Easter Egg Hunt to be at Riverside, classes will be scheduled on "Blending Families" and "Discipline Without Spanking and Shouting," and a display will be set up at the Main Post Exchange Mall.

Welch said the need to show people where to get help is evident in local post figures that say in fiscal 1991, there were a total of 164 substantiated cases of child abuse on Fort Benning. This is up from 99 substantiated cases in fiscal 1990.

She noted that hers is a helping agency, not meant to take children away from their parents, but rather designed to help teach parents how to cope with daily living and not take it out on the children.

The Family Advocacy Program also has access to lots of resources. In addition to classes like "Effective Parenting" put on by the Chaplains Family Life Center, she has booklets on stress, bonding and strengthening step-families, etc.

Besides her work in prevention of child abuse, Welch also serves as a liaison with the Military Police for reporting and Social Work Services for counselling and help when abuse is taking place, and with off-post agencies such as the Muscogee and Chattahoochee Departments of Children and Family Services.

Since Welch came to her position 3 1/2 ago, there is now a memorandum of agreement with off-post agencies outlining the notification and investigation process so everyone knows how things must be done regarding cases involving schools and child care providers in government quarters.

In the training area, she works continuously with the Military Police and Criminal Investigation Division, as well as the Fort Benning School teachers and counselors and Child Development Services (day cares) to teach the signs of child abuse for which to look.

Welch said these include unexplained bruises and welts, burns, fractures, lacerations or abrasions, consistent hunger, poor hygiene, inappropriate dress, consistent lack of supervision, unattended physical problems, abandonment, fatigue, speech disorders, lags in physical development and failure-to-thrive.

Physical indicators of sexual abuse may include difficulty in walking or sitting, torn, stained or bloody underclothing, pain or itching in the genital area, venereal disease, pregnancy, eating disorders, constipation, fecal impaction and self-mutilation.

In addition to abuse, child neglect in government quarters is defined as the deprivation of necessities - neglecting to provide nourishment, clothing, shelter, health care and supervision.

Welch said that the regulation that children under the age of 12 may not be left unattended in government quarters is often ignored. Also, when outdoors playing, children must be within sight distance of the caretaker. All reports are investigated.

Post offers tips for safeguarding children

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Safety tips for parents

• Know everything you can about your children's activities and friends. Monitor children's activities and participate with them. Don't allow children to play alone in fields, on playgrounds, or in other dangerous or isolated areas.

• Teach your children about strangers.

• Teach your children to refuse anything from strangers, including money, gifts or rides. Know where new items come from.

• Teach your children how to safely enter home alone. Teach them how to pretend you are home and how to answer the phone if they are alone.

• Teach your children to keep a safe distance from strangers and not to give strangers directions for help. Adults need to get help from other adults.

• Use secret codes with your children (for use when you may need to positively identify each other or ask for help.

• Do not let your children go to public places, especially rest rooms, alone. Develop a family plan stressing where to meet if lost when you are away from home. Do not have children meet you in the parking lot.

• Do not place your children's names on their clothing or on the outside of their possessions.

• Teach your children to say no to "touches" on the part(s) of their bodies covered by a swimming suit.

• Teach your children to say no, to tell someone, and to get away if someone bothers them.

• Join with other concerned parents to set up safety systems for your neighborhood.

• Teach your children about secrets and that some "secrets" have to be told if children and their parents are to be kept safe.

Faith team gets 6th win

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning's Don C. Faith School will once again be sending a team as a state winner to the World Finals of the Odyssey of the Mind competition. This is the sixth year that a Faith School team has represented Georgia in the World Finals competition. The team will compete at Boulder, Colo., at the University of Colorado on May 29.

The Faith team won first place in the Division II competition with the problem called Omument. Faith School team members Karen Adams, Jay Parker, Aaron Roggia, Aaron Smalser, Rachel Novier, Stacy Uselton and Anita Shaw created and performed an original skit that included an original monument.

The Faith team created a monument to an imaginary bird and called their skit "Spotted Sara Suda Sodder." During the performance the team had to find a way to explain what the monument was and why it was developed. The Faith team is coached by Cindy Givens and Libbie Kurinec.

Two teams from Fort Benning Schools competed in the state Odyssey of the Mind competitions. The team from Dexter School won second place in the Omument Division 1 problem. In addition to their second place win, the Dexter team also received a special award, the Renatra Fusca Creativity Award, for their performance.

Members of the Dexter School team are Kelley Belleau, Helen Hardy, Leah Hutchinson, Rick Kelly, Tara Moore, Frank Walshand Susannah Wiley. Their coaches are Marge Brasfield, Margaret Kogerand Kathryn Van Horn.

Odyssey of the Mind is a problem-solving competition that was developed by Dr. Sam Mikius, a New Jersey college professor. It is a program that provides a mental challenge through problem-solving activities. There are two categories of activities: long-term problem solving in which students have several months to find a solution and a short term problem solving in which students must find a solution during the competition.

Wilson 'band' performs with Infantry Band

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Students at Richard G. Wilson School made percussion and rhythm instruments and played along to the "Ghostbusters" theme with the Infantry Band at an assembly March 26 in celebration of "Music in Our Schools Month."

Under the direction of Sgt. Fred Catchings, the band also demonstrated for the students how to get low and high sounds out of brass instruments, what different sounds can be made opening and closing holes on woodwind instruments and how the percussion instruments are the "heartbeat" of the band.

The 283rd also played for Edward A. White and William H. Wilbur Schools during this special month, and Edwin Riley, a clarinetist from Columbus College, presented a fine arts program that was sponsored by the Enlisted Wives' Club.

Norma Green, music teacher for Wilson and White, said that these two schools participated in a national educational television program entitled "The World's Largest Concert," too.

Prior to the concert, all of the classes learned the songs involved, and then viewed and participated in the concert together.

Coach for the Faith School team was Patti Jones, a Faith school teacher.

This is the first year that Faith students have participated in the "Thinking Cap" Quiz Bowl. Faith students brought back a trophy to the school, and each member of the team will receive a certificate and a ribbon.

Forum to focus on family issues

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 100 delegates, representing all facets of the Fort Benning community, will meet April 23, to seek ways to improve the quality of life on post and in the Army.

The symposium is scheduled to run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and will be at the Officers' Club.

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, post commander, will welcome the attendees. He'll be followed by presentations dealing with post facilities, Martin Army Community Hospital and community activities.

Following the presentations, delegates will attend workshops where they will focus on all aspects of life at Fort Benning.

The symposium's theme is "Rising to the Challenge — Today's Vision, Tomorrow's Reality," according to Gwen Brownlee, symposium chairwoman.

She said that in keeping with the theme, the goals of the symposium are to improve Fort Benning quality of life; increase communications among soldiers, families, civilians and the community; establish a system for annual feedback on community operations; and emphasize the importance of the community "family."

She said the entire Fort Benning chain of command is involved in this year's Army Family Action Plan Symposium.

Class teaches car safety

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"The number one cause of death in teen-agers is automobiles. I hope this class will maybe save a few lives by making kids more aware of the safety features on a car and defensive driving techniques."

Emilio "Mac" Masciovecchio made these remarks with regard to the upcoming Kids in Cars Program that he will be conducting for Youth Services Thursday and April 16 and 23 from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Youth Activities Center.

Masciovecchio, of the Car Care Center at 3400 Buena Vista Road in Columbus, has taught "Defensive Driving" and "How to Take Care of a Car" on Saturdays at the YMCA in Atlanta and at one time taught Drivers Education at Columbus College.

"Driving a car is a full-time job," he said, "and teen-agers should realize this and not try to be doing other things at the same time."

He will be touching on such topics as tips for driving when it's raining, how to stop at lights effectively and information on how such items as the braking system in a car work so a person knows what signs point to trouble.

There will be no charge for the three two-hour classes, but interested persons need to register in advance with Youth Services at 545-3070.

"U-Save Offers Auto Rental Tips"

by Pam Folds , Special to The Bayonet

"We have the new 1992 Ford Escort LX", Sherris Stokes, U-Save Auto Rentals manager says. "This five passenger car comes with unlimited mileage and, of course, air conditioner and stereo with cassette."

U-Save Auto Rentals has been located at Building 1713-Mini-Mall for almost five years. They are the only automobile rental agency on post.

According to Sherris, there are several things you should remember when renting an automobile.

• You must have a valid Driver's License and be at least 21 years old. Also don't forget to bring your Driver's License with you when you come to rent your car.

• All auto rentals require a cash deposit. And U-Save Auto Rentals is no exception. (It's $200 deposit or a major credit card).

• Insurance is a must when driving a car. However, you do not have to have your own insurance policy. For an additional charge, you can get full coverage with zero deductible at U-Save Auto Rental.

• Always plan your trip carefully. When you realize you need a rental car, call well in advance. (Especially during the holidays and weekends.)

• Additional drivers are no additional bother at U-Save Auto Rentals. You can have up to two additional drivers at no more additional cost-as long as they are 21 years old.

• All rentals are two-way rentals. All automobiles must be returned to U-Save Auto Rentals.

"Courtesy and speedy service is most important to us. We try to get the customer in and out as fast as possible, because when they get to us, they are usually in a hurry," Sherris says. "We also try to figure the best mileage rate for each customer."

Call Sherris or her rental agent and assistant Darvin Gurrola, at (404) 687-1848. Hours are Monday through Saturday, 9-6, and they are closed on Sunday.

Girl Scouts shower 'Daisy Baby'

By Janet Moore
Girl Scouts of America

The Fort Benning Girl Scouts celebrated March 21 the birth of the first baby girl born at Martin Army Community Hospital during Girl Scout Week.

This year's "Honorary Daisy Baby" is Letecia Chavez, daughter of Spc. Martin and Margery Chavez. Chavez works with the 608th Ordinance Division. Letecia was born March 7 at 8 p.m., weighing in at 6 pounds, 7 ounces. She is the first baby in the Chavez family.

"Daisy" was the nickname of Juliette Low, the founder of Girl Scouts in America. It is also the name of the youngest group of Girl Scouts — the Daisy Scout.

The shower was hosted by Daisy Troop 263, led by Dena Wronko and Jean Maisel. Scouts from Daisy Troop 17 attended.

The Chavez family received shower gifts from the Daisy Scouts in Troop 263, Army and Air Force Exchange Service gift certificates from Troop 17 and the Fort Benning Service Unit, a hand-quilted baby blanket from Junior Troop 104, and a "Future Girl Scout" Daisy bib from the Concharty Council.

Leadership courses change buildings

Leadership Seminars

Fort Benning's Leadership Seminars conducted a one-week seminar March 23 through 27 in a new facility.

Previously, seminars were conducted in the 11th Regiment Chapel. However, now the program has moved to building 359 (behind the Red Cross building).

The new facility offers dedicated office and classroom space in an environment conducive to learning. New telephone numbers are 545-1217 or 545-1240.

Thirty-seven students attended the 17.5-hour course conducted over the course of five days.

The course covered a wide range of topics, including communication, values, group dynamics, community resources, stress management, meeting and time management community resources, stress management, meeting and time management and family support groups.

In addition to the instruction, one highlight of the week was the recognition of four new facilitators. Department of the Army Certificates of Training were awarded to Anne Marcure, Meleah Shelton, Julia Pfaff and Melody Knight. The four completed the 80-hour "Train the Trainer" program in group interpersonal facilitation skills and are now qualified as certified facilitators for future seminars.

Commissary tour educates shoppers about health

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Eleven veteran grocery shoppers took a guided Commissary tour in which they learned a new way to shop for groceries. They were taught how to shop in a way that saves on the food budget and improves their health.

1st Lt Karen Schultz, a registered dietitian in the Nutrition Care Division, Martin Army Community Hospital, escorted the shoppers through the store.

Cindy Sepulveda said she was very enthusiastic about the tour. She said she went on the tour to learn the healthy way to shop and cook for her family of four.

"I learned that if I eat before I go shopping, I won't be so easily tempted to buy the wrong foods," she said. "When I am hungry, it all looks good."

Sepulveda said she also learned that smart shoppers first plan their meals and then check the pantry to see which ingredients they already have on hand. After these two steps, it is time to make a shopping list of the items needed to prepare the meals. This not only reduces the cost of the grocery bill, it also ensures that items already purchased are used before the expiration date on the package.

What Sepulveda said she found most helpful, though, was how to read the labels on food containers. The ingredients are listed in order of the amount used in the food product. She said that knowing how to read labels taught her that because lard is the first ingredient listed on a can of refried beans, the package contains more lard than beans.

Another weapon in the war against cholesterol was learning that lite or light does not always mean low in fat; a "lite" salad dressing was compared to a fat-free product and the difference was surprising. Sepulveda said she will read food labels from now on, using the knowledge she gained on the tour to make choices that will promote good health for her husband and two young sons.

Sepulveda said that all of the shoppers expressed enthusiasm about the health information they learned.

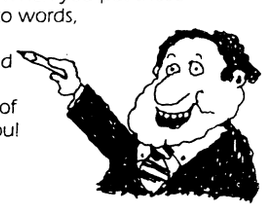
How to make money in three easy steps.

Step 1.

Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. And if you've got a skill to market or service you'd like to provide—there's someone looking for you in classified.

Step 2.

Aim for an audience. After you've selected a solution for another to seize, bring that person to life. Think about your product or service and its original value to you, then detail its features and benefits to another individual. When you put those benefits into words, others like you will find value too. And that's of value to you!



Step 3.

Contact classified. Give us a call. You'll cash in on the speed and effectiveness of the dynamic classified marketplace. Each day, highly motivated readers are seeking services and solutions for a variety of needs. Turn to the classified pages, and you'll turn your item to be sold into money! It's as easy as 1-2-3!

BUY IT. SELL IT. FIND IT. CLASSIFIED.

'Mann & Machine' debuts Sunday

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

If a new series doesn't seem on the order of "Law & Order," check first with the man who's producing both programs.

Effective Sunday, Dick Wolf also becomes NBC's supplier of "Mann & Machine," an hourlong adventure of a more fantastic nature, combining hints of buddy-cop movies like "Lethal Weapon" with traces of science-fiction efforts such as "The Terminator."

SPOTLIGHT

Set in "the near future," the show teams Los Angeles policeman Bobby Mann, played by David Andrews, of last season's law drama "The Antagonists," with a genuine "Machine," Eve Edison, a female "cyborg" (portrayed by Yancy Butler). Since advanced engineering has made her superior to mere mortals in almost every way — from faster physical speed to greater mental capacity — Eve's sudden presence forces Mann into a difficult period of adjustment, as he is faced with teaching her the sometimes tricky skills of interacting with humans.

Co-produced by "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and "Hill Street Blues" alumnus Michael Wagner and "St. Elsewhere" veteran Robert DeLaurentis, "Mann & Machine" is deemed to be "pure escapist entertainment" by the amiable Wolf, but he maintains that it still has some significance.

"I can honestly say that this delivers the most audience appeal of any one-hour show since 'Miami Vice,' " he states, and he's in a reasonably good spot to assess that. He was the trendsetting "Vice's" co-executive producer. "You never know what's going to work, but I hope people will appreciate that this is not a brainless show. It's done intelligently, and this is not to draw insidious comparisons in any way, but this (program) is not 'The Bionic Woman' or 'The Jetsons.' In many ways, it really is a role-reversal comedy of manners. Basically, you've got a male cop who is intuitive and operating from his gut, and a female who is completely logical and rather cold-blooded in her approach to human emotion. That's a major, major opportunity (to create something different in weekly TV), and the result is much closer to 'Moonlighting' than it is to 'The Bionic Woman,' with a polite nod toward 'The Avengers.' It's not like anything else that is on."

Yancy Butler portrays Eve Edison, a cyborg

In the course of the stories, Mann constantly finds himself educating the machine, and getting an education of sorts in return.

"There are constant misunderstandings with her," Mr. Wolf explains, "because no matter how well she's prepared for any situation, there are certain patterns of speech and examples of sarcasm, and there's no way she can understand those until she's confronted with them for the first time. This is a very realistic take on what her capabilities would be, as a creation of artificial intelligence."

To that end, the special effects in "Mann & Machine" are kept to a minimum. "This girl does not have superpowers," Mr. Wolf stresses. "There are no sound effects when she runs. She can't see through walls. Eventually, the line will be crossed where the machine will be as human as the human is ... and hopefully, it will take us five years to get there."

In the meantime, Eve will face some all-too-real perils of her background: An upcoming episode will find her infected by a computer virus.

Mr. Wolf accepts that those who know his work — TV critics in particular — might not be ready for a "Mann & Machine" from the same man who brings them the grittily realistic "Law & Order," just as some weren't prepared to get a "Tequila & Bonetti" from "Quantum Leap" mentor Donald Bellisario.

"You can write the potentially negative reviews yourself," Mr. Wolf concedes. "On the surface, you can see where it would be easy to take potshots at the concept. 'Oh, I see, the perfect woman is a machine.' It's not that kind of show, though. It is designed to really stake out some areas that nobody has been able to explore in a fun, light way in a drama. Frankly, the genesis of this was inspired by both 'The Terminator' and 'La Femme Nikita' (last year's French film about a government-sanctioned female assassin). We wondered what would happen if you crossed those, and this is what we came up with."

Jazz ballet company to perform on post

Seven performances set

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"They're not really a ballet company as such, but more of a variety show with song, dance and comedy."

Ed Hensley, Community Recreation Division administrative officer for the Directorate of Community Activities, said this of the Southwest Jazz Ballet Company of Houston, Texas, a group that will be performing at Fort Benning Wednesday through April 10.

Last year they came here just prior to Operation Desert Storm courtesy of a grant from Continental Airlines and performed for the Sand Hill trainees. Hensley said the Sand Hill Theater was filled each time.

The show is a singing and dancing salute to America's music with a strong sense of patriotism added. The troupe has performed for over 300 million people at more than 200 military posts, naval bases and ships, including the Pentagon.

Hensley noted that they were such a success a year ago that the Department of the Army asked them to perform at five Training and Doctrine Command installations this year. One they chose was Fort Benning.

Their other sponsor this year is Southwest Airlines providing their transportation to any military base in the country.

They will be coming here after entertaining at Fort Rucker, Ala., with two performance sites for the general public: one on Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Sand Hill Theater, seating capacity 994, and one on Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, seating capacity 300.

Hensley added admission is free, but it's first come, first serve.

At the Sand Hill Theater performance, Delta Airlines and Polaroid also will be making awards presentations to the following people:

Staff Sgt. Ricky L. Franklin, Henry Caro NCO Academy, 1992 Drill Sergeant of the Year,

Staff Sgt. Raymond C. Bernecky, Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, runner-up for Drill Sergeant of the Year,

Staff Sgt. Dennis Nichols, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, non-commissioned officer for the first quarter, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Sgt. Stephen Womack, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, soldier of the quarter for the first quarter, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

In addition, the Southwest Jazz Ballet will give masters dance classes at Edward A. White School, Richard G. Wilson School and Morris R. McBride School. There are also performances scheduled for ambulatory patients at Martin Army Community Hospital and the trainees at Sand Hill.

This is the 13th year of patriotic performances by the troupe, which has entertained armed forces personnel and their families for more than a decade.

Besides updated pop music like Kenny Loggins' "Danger Zone," some of the patriotic tunes added to the one-hour program include "Stars and Stripes Forever" and "God Bless the USA."

The Southwest Jazz Ballet is a non-profit public foundation based in Houston. Contributions and income received from individuals, organizations and commercial concerts are used to present free programs to the community and members of the armed forces.

It was formed in 1979 by Rita Brosh, artistic director, and Jerry DeFillipo, president. Their first show for the military was at Norfolk, Va., naval base, and the audience's response was so positive that the troupe began devoting its talents to performing for members of the armed forces and their families on a regular basis.

Museum's art exhibit is 'impressive'

By Va Ebron
Special to The Bayonet

The "Masterworks of American" exhibit is on display at the Columbus Museum of Art. It premiered Feb. 9, a national debut, from the Pfeil Collection in the Edward Swift Shorter Gallery.

The Pfeil Collection has not been available for publication until now.

It comes from major holdings of Chicago inventor, Richard Pfeil, and it will be at the Columbus Museum until Sunday.

Impressionalism is one of the most remarkable and popular movements in American Art History.

The Masterworks of American Exhibit is said to be one of the finest collections of American Impressionalism in the world.

Some of the pioneers of this period and their paintings in the exhibit are:

— Frederick Frieseke (1874-1939), and his pretty painting, Sun and Wind, 1914, oil on canvas.

— Philip Leslie Hale (1865-1931), 1902 Niagara Falls, oil on canvas.

— Dawson-Dawson-Watson (1864-1939) 1891 Harvest Time

— John Leslie Breck (1860-1899), Willows 1888, oil on canvas.

— Mary Cassalt, (1845-1926), 1910 Baby John Asleep, Sucking His Thumb, pastel on paper.

— Childe Hassam (1859-1935), 1899 Gloucester Harbor, oil on canvas.

— Robert Reid (1862-1929), 1908 Pond Lilies.

— Joseph DeCamp (1858-1923), 1912 The Violinist.

— George Luke (1866-1933), 1915 Madison Square, oil on pastel.

— William Horton (1865-1936).

— Phillip Little (1847-1942).

— Ernest Lawson (1873-1939), The Harlem River from High Bridge, oil on canvas.

— Frank Duveneck (1848-1919), 1900 That Summer Afternoon in My Garden

— John Singer Sargent (1856-1925), 1901 A Torrent in Norway, oil on canvas.

The next exhibit, after its premiere in Columbus, will be the Walters Art Gallery in Baltimore before continuing a traveling tour to other U.S. cities and then on the Europe.

The elegant and gracious William Kloss, nationally recognized historian and lecturer, presented a public lecture on Sunday.

During the Impressionism Period, artists painted lovely, pretty, pleasant pictures because, in Kloss' words, "They chose not to show the 'ugly sides' of life." And of Impressionalism, Kloss says, "Impressionalism has ten exceptions for every rule."

The idea is to appreciate art for art's sake. Kloss suggested, "look at the works," and "don't look at the labels!"

It works for me! Hope it works for you.

8th Inf. Div. inactivates

Colors to remain on post

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

For the third time in its 48-year history, the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) was officially inactivated Thursday in a ceremony on York Field.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan was the guest speaker and reviewing officer for the ceremony, which began with a demonstration by the Silver Wings Parachute Team.

In the ceremony, the 8th Infantry Division colors were passed from the former division command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney, to the former division commander, Maj. Gen. John P. Otjen, then to Sullivan, and then to Chief of Infantry Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White.

The passing of the colors from McKinney to Otjen to Sullivan signified the inactivation of the division. The colors were then passed to the Chief of Infantry to be displayed at Fort Benning.

The Infantry Band then played the 8th Division Song as a final tribute, followed by remarks from Sullivan.

The division was inactivated twice before, in 1920 and in 1945 after World Wars I and II.

After being organized in 1918 at Camp Fremont, Calif., the 8th Infantry Division spent 38 of its 48-year history overseas, participating in both World Wars and Operation Desert Storm.

Family symposium April 23

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1992 Fort Benning Army Family Action Plan Symposium will be April 23 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Officers' Club.

According to Col. William R. Brownlee II, garrison commander, the symposium serves as a forum for soldiers, family members and civilians to surface quality of life issues and lay the groundwork necessary for resolution of the issues. "The Army Family Action Plan directs actions to enhance readiness and increase retention by improving the quality of life for soldiers and their families," he said. "It stands as evidence of Fort Benning's commitment to the total Army family and demonstrates official recognition and attention to Army family issues."

The theme of this year's symposium is "Rising to the Challenge — Today's Vision ... Tomorrow's Reality."

Delegates chosen by their commanders will hear speakers knowledgeable on key issues such as health care, housing and family programs.

Delegates will include soldiers (single, dual military sole parents), retirees, family members (spouses an youth) and civilians.

Those unable to attend the symposium who want t submit issues for discussion may call 545-5917 or 687 8920 on the day of the symposium.

"The Army Family Action Plan works," sai Brownlee. "Policy changes have assisted in th implementation of increased household goods movin allowances; establishment of a community and famil support center and the Delta Dental Plan; travel to ar from overseas for college-age children; the creation the family member employment assistance progra and spouse preference for civil service employment.

36th Engineer Group

A new engineer combat support equipment company will be activated at Fort Benning July 16.

The 63rd Engineer Company will be assigned to the 36th Engineer Group. It is an engineer combat support equipment company with an authorized strength of 182 soldiers.

"The 63rd will be a welcomed addition to the 36th Group," said Maj. Robert Broadhead, 36th Group adjutant. "It will greatly increase our horizontal construction abilities (ability to build roads, airstrips and bridges) and the group's ability to support mechanized and armored divisions."

According to the commander of the 63rd, Capt. Troy Wilson, the stationing of his unit at Fort Benning is an example of the way the Army is preparing for the 1990s, relying less on forces deployed outside the U.S. and focusing more on the ability to quickly project power overseas.

The 63rd Engineer Company was most recently assigned to Fort Bragg, N.C., from January 1967 until its inactivation in August 1988. The company traces its lineage back to 1942, when it was activated during World War II, as the 609th Engineer Light Equipment Company.

Infantry commanders meet

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

The 1992 Infantry Commander's Conference was held Wednesday and Thursday in Infantry Hall.

Among the conference attendees were Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan as well as other active duty, Reserve and retired officers and non-commissioned officers.

"Infantry in the '90s — Maintaining the Edge" was the theme for this year's forum, said Maj. Bob Robertson, conference chief, who added that the conference's main activities were sessions devoted to discussing warfighting between U.S. Army field commanders and the U.S. Army Infantry School with the primary focus on infantry doctrine, tactics, combat development and weapons.

The conference also included a capabilities exercise on Red Cloud Range Wednesday, and displays by defense contractors of the latest Army equipment being fielded or planned for the future.

Among the displays were a hand-held, battery-operated radio that allows for covert communication of voice or computer data by transmitting the information via laser beam rather than by radio waves and a helmet mounted visor display that can be used to allow a soldier to shoot from around a tree or corner without exposing himself by using a camera mounted to the weapon that transmits the target image to the video display in the visor.

Other developments related to soldiers' appetites were shown in displays of improved Meals Ready to Eat that included milkshakes, hamburgers, hot dogs, pizza, burritos and heat stable chocolate bars that won't melt in temperatures up to 140 degrees Fahrenheit.

Also displayed was a small, light-weight tent dubbed the Troop Support System that can be used at the platoon and company level to provide hot showers and meal heating capabilities to soldiers in the field. A small box pumps and heats water from five-gallon water cans into the tent for use in the two showers and ration heating trays.

The conference closed Thursday with a dinner in honor of the Army chief of staff at the Officers' Club.

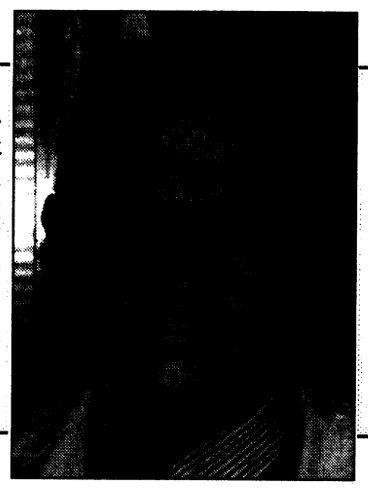
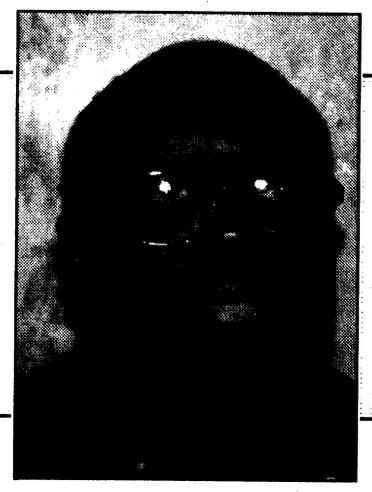
VARIOUS VOICES

How has the military changed over the years?

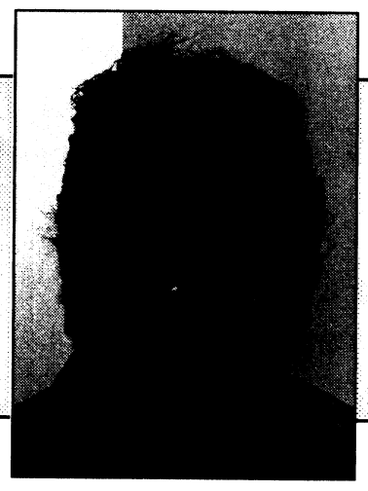
Retired Sgt. Thomas C. Sauls— "Quite a lot has changed. Now everything in the Army is more modern and up to date."



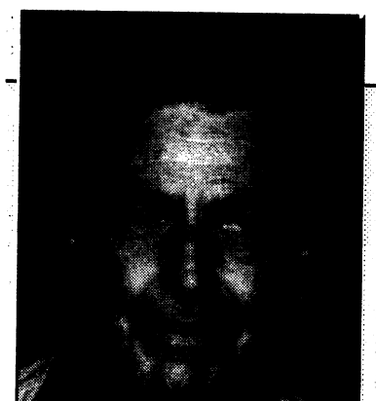
Retired Sgt. Maj. Franklin T. Williams — "I think the most significant changes since I've been in have been in equal opportunity and in care for family members. Equal opportunity is both spoken and achieved and the Army seems really concerned about not only soldiers but about their families as well."



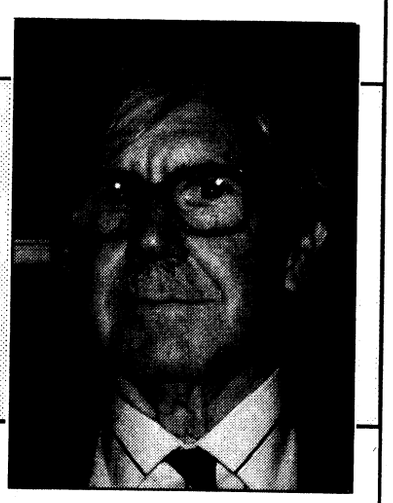
Retired Sgt. Maj. Johnes Sawyer — "It seems to me that they are trying to make the Army more like home. Soldiers today are younger and better educated. Everything is computerized, and the equipment is better. I think it all makes for a better Army."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Lowie Davis— "The soldiers today sure have it better than I did: the pay, the barracks, everything. When I was a soldier, we had open-bay barracks and you ate what they gave you. The quality of life has really improved."



Retired Lt. Col. John J. Morrissey— "The Army has made some big changes with women in the military. Also, the individual soldiers have a bigger variety of choices both on and off duty. There was more discipline when I was in, but every Army has to live in its own time frame, so the way it is today might be better for today's Army."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Bert ırrowood— "The biggest changes ave been in the quality of life and the ıcrease in pay. Promotions are andled better for both officers and ılisted personnel. I think the medical eld has gotten worse for retirees, ıough. We need more and better ıre."

Trainees bring back memories

By Clyde Snively

COMMENTARY

Diddly bopping past the Airborne area last week, I saw what appeared to be a mass of troops standing in lines waiting to be processed in.

It brought back a flood of memories. Most of them not pleasant.

I haven't changed duty stations all that often in my short career, but I can tell you, moving from one unit to another, from one post to another can be a harrowing experience.

Some of it's got a lot to do with the reception you receive. The other aspect is the fear of the unknown. What's in store for you? What kind of people are going to be in your unit? What kind of roommates will you get?

My first introduction to the green machine was the standard setter for all my future moves.

Three other guys and I joined the Army in Los Angeles and somehow "won" the sandy flats and slash pine of Fort Jackson, S.C. for our basic training locale.

Having the lowest General Technical, or GT, score, I was put in charge and told to have "my men," at the airport by 3 p.m. hours for a 4 p.m. hours departure for the East Coast.

One of "my men," just about gave me a heart attack by being 45 minutes late for our formation (he was married and had to say goodbye to his wife) forgetting command Private, No Authority Snively was being held responsible for delivering four warm bodies to Uncle Sam in a timely fashion.

Fortunately, he made it and we all took off for Atlanta in a nice big jet. I found myself sitting next to some green-eyed blonde, and being the suave, debonair, soon-to-be soldier, introduced myself, "Hi, I'm Clyde Snively. Don't believe I caught your name."

"I didn't give it to you," she responded icily. We had a four-hour flight of complete silence.

In Atlanta, we transferred onto a puddle-jumper that barely got off the ground, which flew us to Augusta, Ga. From there, it was a short cab ride to Fort Gordon, Ga. in the dead of night.

The cab driver told us he'd never heard of a reception station at Fort Gordon, so finally took us to the post headquarters.

"No reception station here," a sleepy non-commissioned officer told us.

"What are we supposed to do?" I, the great designated leader asked.

"Well," the NCO drawled, "You'll need new travel orders and tickets. But since this is Saturday, you'll have to wait until Monday. I guess we'll have to find a place for you to stay until then."

They plunked us in with trainees in their fifth week of training. Weren't they surprised to wake up and find four new soldiers. So surprised in fact, they armed themselves with bunk adapters and surrounded us, ready to do us in, thinking we were intruders who'd fallen asleep.

Monday we were put on a bus for Fort Jackson; but, since it'd taken so long to get our new orders and get moving, then get picked up at the bus station and brought on post, we did little more than sign in, so it was Tuesday before processing began and we finally got our uniforms.

And thank God for that, for I was one person who believed the recruiter who said, "Take no more clothes than what you'll be wearing."

When my mother got my gym bag a week later from Railroad Express, she opened the bag, closed the bag, and tossed it into the trash.

That was my introduction to the Army. Subsequent moves did little to alleviate my fears of changes of stations. I just hope those would-be airborne soldiers were having a better time of it than I.

Drivers should watch for pedestrians

The competition for space between vehicular and pedestrian traffic is growing. A patently unsafe condition exists that all must work to correct.

As a recognized standard or practice on Army posts, pedestrians have the right of way and priority over vehicles. This, of course, does not relieve or excuse pedestrians from taking common- sense and directed safety measures.

Times, routes and procedures to formalize common-sense measures for physical training are being staffed to ensure a safe environment for training.

Motorists are reminded that they will slow to 10 mph when passing dismounted soldiers in formation, close order or extended order. This applies any time, all the time.

Units are responsible for unit integrity, accountability and safety (reflective vests/sashes/strips, lighted wands/flashlights, road guards, etc.) when moving. Additionally, provisions must be made for straggler control and safety.

Individual runners or informal groups of pedestrians are reminded:

•To yield to vehicles

•To use sidewalks or road shoulders when possible.

•To move single file on the left side of the roadway — facing oncoming traffic.

•To observe the prohibition against using/wearing headphones.

•To wear reflective safety gear during periods of reduced/limited visibility.

•The cautions are not all inclusive, but represent the most frequently overlooked and required measures. See U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 385-2, Safety Accident Prevention Program, Feb. 27, for further details.

Post to celebrate Easter, Passover

The Jewish celebration of Passover and the Christian festival of Easter coincide this year in the observance of these holy days. These two great world religions and their messages of liberty, deliverance and hope are the touchstones for religious and individual freedoms from which most of our national heritage has developed.

We are a people and a nation bound together to proclaim, defend and exercise the highly-prized sanctions that a free people hold so dear. Our nation's commitment to the most cherished beliefs of the holy season is expressed in our readiness to defend freedom around the world.

One year ago, our own Fort Benning soldiers were returning from the Persian Gulf, having ensured the liberty of a sovereign nation, its deliverance from oppression, and affirmed its abiding hope to choose its own future. Consequently, by our commitment to and sacrifices on behalf of others, we protect our faith and freedom so that it will be preserved as a true hope and promise for future generations on earth.

As a means for God's purpose in fragile, yet challenging and opportune times, may this holy season be a time of remembrance, renewal, and rededication to the quest for spiritual growth. May it also be a time in which we emphasize human dignity and freedom for our world, our nation and our Fort Benning community.

I am proud of all members of the Fort Benning family for the sacrifices that you make on behalf of our nation's defense. We celebrate our freedom and look to the future with hope. I thank God for his care and protection over our family during these changing times. I extend my best wishes for this holy season to you all.

Helping accident victims saves lives in crisis

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Recently, a privately-owned vehicle accident caused the death of one of our soldiers. Circumstances surrounding this fatality indicate that necessary actions after an accident should be re-emphasized.

When a serious accident occurs, the following actions should be taken:

•Do what is necessary to protect victims from further injury (e.g., remove them from a burning car).

•Apply first aid measures as necessary (e.g., apply pressure to stop bleeding). Do not move victims with possible back or neck injuries unless it is necessary to protect their lives.

•Call an ambulance (544-3911, on post; 911, off post). Ambul-ance personnel have extensive training and equipment and know which hospital is most appropriate (e.g., The Medical Center has a 24- hour trauma center).

•Call the Military Police at 545-5222 for on-post traffic accidents and the Columbus Police at 911 for off-post traffic accidents.

•If a fire is involved, or could start, call the fire department on post at 117 or 687-8117 or off post at 911.

•When the ambulance or other emergency personnel arrive, follow their instructions.

•Notify the Infantry Branch Safety Office at 545-3267 during duty hours or the U. S. Army Infantry Center staff duty officer at 545-2218 after duty hours for any accident that results in a fatality or permanent total disability. Notify your chain of command for all injuries.

•Preserve the accident scene as mush as possible until told to clear it by law enforcement personnel or your chain of command.

Riders advised not to tailgate

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Motorists who "ride tail" on the car ahead are asking for a big dose of trouble. They are unable to avoid a collision if the car ahead stops suddenly.

The distance at which it is safe to follow another car depends on several things: how fast you're going, the type of road you're on, the amount of traffic on that road, the weather, the time of day (whether it's dark or light outside), the condition of your car and, of course, your own alertness.

Despite all these things, you can still apply a general rule to this matter of following the car ahead. Call it the 'one to 10" rule. That is, on dry pavement keep one full car length between you and the car ahead for every 10 miles per hour of speed. If conditions are bad, better allow at least three car lengths for each 10 miles of speed.

The danger zone in front of your car becomes more and more of an accident trap with every upward quiver of the speedometer needle. When your car gets up to 60 miles, you're definitely courting trouble.

Let's take an example. Can you imagine yourself driving your car off a 10-story building and plunging into the street below? Of course, not! And yet if you crash into another car at 80 mph, you'll meet with the same disastrous results as if you'd taken that flight off the building. It's the same pile of twisted steel, the same mangled and torn bodies, the same trip to the hospital . . . or the morgue.

Yes, excessive speed is dangerous. It's a killer. And yet, speed in itself is not the only villain. It's driving too fast for conditions that causes the biggest percentage of accidents.

It's up to you to determine the safe speed for every driving situation. Remember, give yourself plenty of time and distance to react to emergencies. By using your common sense along with the knowledge you've gained about stopping distances, you can steer clear of accidents. It may save your life.

Value Mart to open

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Commissary is set to open its new 2,700 square-foot warehouse of savings, also known as Value Mart, Tuesday in an opening ceremony at the site of the warehouse.

With the Value Mart concept in effect, shoppers will be offered approximately 150 items in multi-packs or bulk quantities that will pass a 15 to 25 percent savings on to the customer, said Larry Bentley, Commissary officer.

Some of the items to be offered at Value Mart include 60-count garbage bags, nine-roll packages of paper towels, four-pound tubs of margarine, 120-count diapers and the list goes on, said Bentley.

Customers will not be limited to the number of items they may purchase, and all items will be brand-name merchandise, said Bentley.

Students hear former VA official speak

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Former infantry officer and administrator of Veterans Affairs Harry N. Walters addressed students and faculty of the Infantry School Tuesday in Marshall Auditorium.

Walters

Walters came to Fort Benning at the request of Post Commander Maj. Gen. Jerry White to give a presentation that would assist in the professional development of Army leaders, military and civilian, said Elaine Livingston, chief of the Staff and Faculty Development Division.

"The subject of my address this morning is winning: winning in life, winning in sports, winning in business, winning in politics and winning in war....

"Winning cannot be overemphasized," Walters said.

"Vince Lombardi, a former assistant coach at West Point and later the famous coach of the Green Bay Packers, once said that 'winning isn't everything. It's the only thing.' Mr. Lombardi knew that in a free society fueled by the free enterprise system, life itself is competitive. There are winners and losers every single hour of every single day in this country."

Walters added, however, that losses are inevitable. "The good leader," he said, "knows how to absorb losses, overcome adversity, and rise to win again.

"Today's leaders must also be imbued with the winning spirit," he said.

"There are those in our society who believe that winning is overemphasized...but the facts of everyday life refute those arguments. Indeed, to train a good leader we must teach him or her how to win with decency, perseverance, aggressiveness, confidence and with tactical and strategical brilliance."

Walters used Operation Desert Storm as an example of what it takes to win. A classic American military victory was achieved, he said, because the environment had been set to win. The public and the civilian leadership in Washington supported the operation and were determined to achieve victory.

The Army's leaders must not forget how to win, Walters said, and this can be achieved through constant, aggressive leadership.

"You must win because in war losing is too costly. Human lives and the freedom of people everywhere hang on the balance of your victory," he continued. "The legacy of an infantry officer is your aggressive and positive leadership, your knowing how to set the environment for winning."

Walters concluded with a quote from poet Robert Browning: "Ah but a man's reach must exceed his grasp, or what is a heaven for."

Walters said that Browning's words are the perfect summary o what winning is all about.

"It's reaching beyond us, wel beyond us, a spirit that develops, ar environment that allows our gras to go farther than our reach."

"The Army will be smaller in th future, but it must be better....You real challenge is not to let yoursel or the U.S. Army to forget how t win."

AER helps pay soldier's late rent

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Spc. Anita Solomon said that when she went to Army Emergency Relief for help, "They were calm, understanding and real sweet."

Solomon had pay problems when finance took out a casual pay allotment when she didn't expect it. She knew there was not going to be enough there to pay the rent, and her supervisor recommended going to AER.

Solomon

She went in with proof of bills that were overdue, and that day came away with a check.

"They didn't give me any hassles," she said.

Would she do it again?

Solomon noted that no one likes to be in financial difficulties, but if she were in the same type of situation with no alternative, she would definitely go to them.

AER offers emergency financial assistance in the form of no-interest loans and grants to active duty soldiers, family members, retirees, widows and members of the U.S. National Guard and Reserve.

Solomon is with Company A, 324th Forward Support Battalion.

AER asks for 1992 donations

Currently at a total of $73,470, this year's Army Emergency Relief Campaign is closing in on its April 30 deadline.

According to Capt. Francisco Marroquin, AER campaign officer, the drive has a goal of $209,530 to meet or exceed last year's amount.

The campaign began March 2.

"Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own" is the slogan for this organization, which is marking its 50th year in offering emergency financial assistance in the form of no-interest loans and grants.

More than 90 percent of those who come for help are approved.

Marroquin said this involves checking to see if there is a legitimate financial emergency without making moral judgments.

New VSI/SSB windows open

Adjutant General's Office

Several of the Army's FY 92 separation programs have changed recently. Also many of the application windows have closed.

The Reduction In Force Board for captains in year group 82 was cancelled. There were a sufficient number of voluntary applications for separation received, so a RIF was not required.

However, the RIF Board for majors in year group 78 convened March 10. The secretary of the Army is expected to approve the RIF Board results around May 15. Officers must separate by Sept. 29. Those eligible majors may still apply for Voluntary Separation Incentive and Special Separation Benefits until May 1.

The second application window for the Officer Voluntary Early Release/Retirement Program closed April 1. Two categories remain open for application until May 1. First lieutenants with date of rank of Oct. 1, 1990 to Sept. 30, 1991 and retirement eligible lieutenant colonels and colonels who want to waive the three year time-in-grade requirement for retirement may still apply.

The VSI/SSB Voluntary Incentive Program, another officer category for applications was added in March. Officers who were considered for promotion the first time by the recent major and captain boards and were not selected may apply for VSI/SSB. The application window closes May 7.

The application window for Category 3 (enlisted soldiers with nine or more years of service and in one of the identified military occupational specialities and grade overstrengths) closed Feb. 29. Personnel Command expects to have final decisions on these applications by end of April to mid-May.

The only VSI/SSB categories that remain open for applications are:

Enlisted category 4 — soldiers with six or more years denied re-enlistment by Department of the Army PERSCOM. Closes August 92.

Officer category 1— majors under consideration by the RIF Board. Eligibles may apply for VSI/SSB until May 1.

Officer category 3 — any officers meeting basic criteria. Closes Aug. 1.

Officer category 6 — officers not selected for promotion to major or captain by the recent promotion boards. Closes May 7.

Best Ranger Competition features 12 events

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Best Ranger Competition consists of the following 12 events.

Army physical fitness test — consists of push-ups, sit-ups, pullups and a two-mile run.

Weapons firing — marksmanship will be tested on a firing range consisting of targets from 50 to 300 meters in range, arrayed in single and multiple exposures. The competitors will engage and hit as many targets as possible within a six minute time limit.

Spot parachute jump — one team member will jump, with combat equipment, from a helicopter using a maneuverable parachute, upon the command of the other team member acting as a pathfinder from the ground. Upon landing, he must move to an assembly area against time.

Canoe event — ranger teams will compete by paddling over a known distance down Upatoi Creek against time.

Forced road march — ranger teams carrying combat equipment at night will conduct a road march on dirt and hard surfaced roads for approximately 20 miles against time.

Ranger stakes — thirteen basic ranger and infantry skills will be evaluated during both day and night conditions. The skills include weapons assembly/disassembly, hand grenade throw, knot tying, first aid, and radio communications, among others.

Prusik climb and rappel — a timed 60-foot verticle rope climb, using Prusik rope climbing procedures, and descent using rappelling techniques

Night land navigation course — a timed and scored event where ranger teams move on foot cross-country during darkness to checkpoints between 2,000 and 4,000 meters apart over a 15 to 20 kilometer course containing 11 checkpoints.

Darby queen obstacle course — a timed event where ranger teams negotiate a 2,000-meter standard Army confidence course containing 25 obstacles.

Water confidence test — ranger teams negotiate against time a 35 foot high vertical beam, followed by a crawl across a horizontal rope, then drop 35 feet into the water. The second test consists of negotiating a 75-foot suspension traverse.

Helocast swim — a timed event where ranger teams drop free-fall from a low flying helicopter into Victory Pond with their equipment fashioned into a poncho raft, swim to shore and then carry the raft with equipment intact to the finish line.

2.7-mile buddy team run — a timed event where ranger teams negotiate a 2.7-mile course and finish together.

Department of Verterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs is announcing the availability of scholarships to nursing, nurse anesthesia and occupational or physical therapy students for the 1992-93 school year.

Two scholarships — the Health Professional Scholarship Program and the Reserve Member Stipend Program — provide financial support to associate degree nursing students in their last year of study, and third and fourth-year students in baccalaureate or entry-level masters' degree programs in nursing, occupational therapy and physical therapy.

In the Reserve Member Stipend Program, Reservists must be members of the Selected Ready Reserves and eligible for the Montgomery Reserve GI Bill.

VA Health Professional Scholarship recipients receive tuition, educational expenses and a monthly stipend of $621. Reserve Stipend recipients receive $400 monthly while enrolled in full-time course work.

In exchange, participants in both programs agree to serve as a full-time registered nurse or occupational or physical therapist in a VA medical center for a period of one year for each year of support. The maximum length of an award is two years.

Requests for applications may be made to the Health Professionals Educational Assistance Programs (143B), 810 Vermont Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20420, or by calling (202) 535-7528. Applications must be postmarked no later than May 26.

VA Q & A

Q — Can a student receive Veteran Administration educational payments while training for private pilot's license?

A — No. VA will only pay for training toward a commercial pilot's license.

Q — How long is a veteran eligible for VA educational assistance?

A — Benefits under chapters 30 and 32 end 10 years from the date of discharge or release from active duty. For chapter 106, benefits end 10 years from the date the veteran became eligible for the program, only if the veteran had remained in the Selected Reserve; otherwise, benefits end on the expiration of the term of service.

Q — What is the VA education assistance amount for correspondence courses under the Montgomery GI Bill?

A — Fifty five percent of the approved charge for each course.

Q — Do veterans with compensable service-connected disabilities have to pay a funding fee for a VA-guaranteed home loan?

A — No. They are exempt.

Q — I am attending school under the Montgomery GI Bill. Am I eligible to participate in the work-study program?

A — Yes. You may be eligible to earn allowance under the work-study program. The program allows you to work for VA in return for an hourly wage paid at either the federal minimum wage or your state minimum wage, whichever is greater.

Q — I have National Service Life Insurance and am totally disabled. Will VA waive my premium?

A — Yes. National Service Life Insurance policyholders who become totally disabled before their 65th birthday should consult VA about their entitlement to a premium waiver six months after the onset of the disability.

Q — Does VA have any publication regarding education overpayments?

A — "Avoiding VA Education Overpayments" (VA Pam. 22-90-1, May 1990) is available from any VA regional office.

Q — During the Persian Gulf War I was called to active duty in the middle of a semester and could not complete my courses. Will I be charged entitlement for the payments I received?

A — No. President George Bush signed legislation Oct. 10, that stipulated that educational assistance payments to Reservists who were called up for the Gulf War while attending school are not chargeable against entitlement.

Q — Will I be able to keep my Servicemen's Group Life Insurance after I am discharged next month?

A — Coverage continues for 120 days following separation with no additional premium payment. If you are totally disabled at separation, you retain coverage for up to one year, or until such time as the disability ceases to be total, whichever comes first. You may also convert to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, a five-year term policy in an amount not to exceed SGLI. If you choose to convert to VGLI, the first premium must be paid within 120 days of separation. The effective date for the new coverage will be day 121. You could apply for VGLI for one year after the 120th day, but in that case you would have to be in good health for insurance purposes.

Q — I understand that students enrolled under the G.I. Bill can now verify their registration by computer.

A — Soon, but not yet. A one-year test program got underway in California in January. Known as SAVE, Student Automated Verification of Enrollment — the program allows students to confirm enrollment by telephoning a toll-free number monthly instead of submitting forms. The new procedure is expected to expedite benefit payments as well as reduce administrative costs.

Q — What is the maximum tutorial assistance payment?

A — Tutorial assistance cannot exceed $100 per month, up to a maximum of $1,200 for certain educational assistance programs.

Q — Does VA offer scholarships to individuals pursuing careers in the health fields?

A — For the 1991-92 school year, VA is offering scholarships to individuals pursuing a degree in nursing, or occupational or physical therapy. For more information, call (202)535-7528: or write: VA Health Professional Scholarship P Ave., NW, Wash.ington, D.C. 20420.

Q — Has VA's clothing allowance for eligible disabled veterans been increased? What is the amount of the allowance?

A — The new allowance is $436 per year. Depending on the qualifying disability, the award may be recurring or the veteran may need to apply each year.

Q — I am the daughter of a deceased veteran and want to become a commercial airline pilot. Will my Chapter 35 Survivors and Dependents Education Program pay for flight training?

A — No. Only eligible veterans, Reservists and active duty servicemembers may receive VA educational benefits for flight training.

Q — My G.I. insurance policy lapsed three years ago. How many premium payments must I make up in order to be reinstated?

A — You must make two payments: one for the month in which the policy lapsed, and one for the month in which it is reinstated.

Open house keeps retirees informed

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

About 300 retired military personnel attended Fort Benning's 11th annual Military Retiree Open House April 3 and Saturday, hosted by the post Retiree Council and the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

According to Post Commander Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, the yearly event provides a way of continuing contact between active duty and retired soldiers and their family members.

"It is a great opportunity for us to keep the retired community informed of what is happening in the Army," said White in his opening remarks.

He added that despite budget cuts, Fort Benning will continue to offer services to the retired community, and he encouraged retired personnel in the Columbus area to write to him regarding their concerns.

The open house kicked off with a golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course April 3 and continued the next day in Infantry Hall with guest speakers and representatives from various agencies of particular concern to retirees.

Highlights included health, legal, and travel information; blood pressure checks; cholesterol screening and dental exams. Department of the Army representatives were on hand to provide assistance concerning survivor's benefits plans as well.

Speakers includedU.S. Rep. Richard Ray, Deputy Chief of Retired and Veterans Affairs Max Beilke, and Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs Rear Adm. Harold Koenig.

All three focused their remarks on retiree health care and survivors' benefits plans.

Ray said that one of his goals is to see a new hospital built at Fort Benning.

Following the presentations, attendees were taken by bus to one of the Sand Hill dining facilities to eat lunch with basic trainees before returning to Infantry Hall for door prizes.

Attendee Carl Carlson, a retired Air Force colonel from Montgomery Ala., said the day was well-planned and very enjoyable.

Retired Master Sgt. James Rhodes also expressed his appreciation for the open house but said that more needs to be done to improve health care for retirees.

"We're beginning to see our needs attended to, but we still need more," said Rhodes. "I want to thank Fort Benning for the retiree open house, though, but there are probably around 8,000 other retirees in the area that didn't come and they missed out."

Rangers to go to Fort Chaffee

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

The 75th Ranger Regiment will visit Fort Chaffee, Ark., April 28 through May 11 to sharpen its skills at the Joint Readiness Training Center.

"The routine training exercise serves to assess the combat readiness of ranger units for worldwide deployment," said Lt. Col. Mick Bednarek, regimental operations officer.

The exercise will begin with an airborne assault onto designated objectives and continue with several days of overland movement and light infantry tasks.

The exercise will allow the regiment to be evaluated specifically in such light infantry tasks as airborne assault operations, patrolling, and attacks on key target locations.

Around 600 Fort Benning rangers, including the Ranger Support Element, will participate in the exercise, which will also include elements of the U.S. Air Force and the Military Airlift Command to assist in the movement of the rangers.

The 75th Ranger Regiment conducted a field training exercise on post this week to prepare for the upcoming rotation to Fort Chaffee.

AMU shooters barrel down toward spots in Olympics

By David Erickson
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

After years of practice, endless hours of equipment preparation and testing and a year of preliminary competitions, the months of April and May will yield the selection of the 1992 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team.

The first round of Olympic selections Running Game Target took place in Guatemala March 30 through Saturday as part of the World Cup competition, the first in a series of world competitions held in various locations featuring the top competitors from all inter-national shooting disciplines.

The World Cup Running Target event was won by Eduard Elyav of Israel with a preliminary and final score of 669. U.S. shooters placed second, third and seventh in the match with Fritz Allen of Vail, Colo., leading the group followed by U.S Army Marksmanship Unit shooters Troy Lawton, second, and David Edmondson, seventh.

The preliminary results from the World Cup also counted as the first of three selection matches to determine the Running Target Olympic Team. After this first match, Allen leads the trials with a 572 total, followed by Lawton at 565 and Edmondson at 559 With two matches to go at the Los Angeles World Cup and Suhl World Cup (Germany), the two Olympic positions for Running Target are up in the air.

The Los Angeles World Cup started Tuesday and ends Saturday at the Prado Tiro Shooting Range in Chino, Calif., site of the 1984 Olympic Shooting events. This championship will be the premier international shooting event hosted by the United States. More than 300 of the world's best shooters are likely to attend.

Immediately following the L.A. World Cup, the rifle disciplines will select their Olympic team members. In the men's air rifle and 50-meter rifle disciplines the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has six contenders including former Olympians Boyd Goldsby ('80), Glenn Dubis ('84,'88) and Webster Wright III ('88). Other Olympic team finalists include Mike Anti, a 1991 Pan American Games Gold Medalist along with Thomas Tamas and Matthew Suggs, the 1991 National Air Rifle champion.

In the women's air rifle and 50-meter standard rifle events, Kristin Peterson, also a member of the 1988 Olympic Team, is a strong contender for a position on the 1992 Olympic Team.

After the rifle disciplines are selected, the international pistol trials will begin the first of three selection matches which culminate in May.

Three disciplines are being contested. In the 50-meter Free Pistol event Jimmie McCoy is a favorite after a strong performance in the 1991 Pan American Games.

In the 25-meter Rapid Fire Pistol event, the USAMU fields three strong contenders including 1984 and 1988 Olympian John NcNally and 1988 Olympian Eduardo Suarez. Rounding out the AMU contenders is Jon Frazier who was a member of last year's Conseil International du Sport Militaire championship team in Nigeria.

In women's Sport Pistol and Air Pistol, Rhonda Barush, a recent crossover shooter from the rifle disciplines is contesting for a team position along with Audrey Hayes who specializes in Air Pistol. Both were members of the 1991 CISM team.

Rounding out the 1992 Olympic Team selections will be the final leg of the International Trap and Skeet trials to be held in Colorado Springs, Colo., during May.

In International Skeet, the USAMU fields two of the top four finalists with two spots available. With 200 clay targets to go in the selection trials, former USAMU shooters Mike Schmidt and Matt Dryke, the 1984 Olympic Gold Medalist, lead the skeet field with scores of 583 and 582, respectively. USAMU team member Todd Graves is third at 580 with Shawn Dulohery fourth at 579. With the field tightly packed anything could happen before trials are finished.

In International Trap, the USAMU fields a powerful four man squad leading the competition for three positions on the plane to Barcelona. Entering the final selection match of 200 clay targets May 8 to 10, Bret Erickson holds a 12 bird lead with score of 586. Filling out the field are Graves at 574, William Roberts at 572 and Jay Waldron at 571. Former USAMU member Brian Ballard is in fifth position at 568.

The Cruise-matics, the Columbus and Fort Benning rugby team, hit Blue Field Saturday in a battle for the Eastern Armed Services championship.

There were four teams at the tournament, a Marine Corps team from Camp LeJeune, N.C., Air Force teams from Eglin Air Force Base and Tyndal Air Force Base, both in Florida, and the Fort Benning Cruise-matics.

The round-robin style tournament started Saturday with the two winners advancing to the championship round Sunday. The Eglin Air Force Base team and the Marine Corps team fought for the championship. A close game left the Marine Corps ahead by a score of 24-22.

The Cruise-matics finished in third place and the Tyndal Air Force Base team placed fourth.

"The Marine Corps had a super team and they kept everyone off balance," said Jeff Smith, a rugby player from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "A lot of things didn't go our way, but we're young and steadily improving."

The U. S. Armed Forces Rugby Championship will be in San Antonio, Texas, May 8 through 10.
