FORT BENNING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Michelle L. Gordon

The 2008 Post Guide is scheduled to arrive July 9, and all units and directorates are encouraged to call the Public Affairs Office to reserve their copies.

The free guide includes a post telephone directory, unit histories and maps.

"This year's edition is more organized and offers a cleaner layout than last year," said Elsie Jackson, Fort Benning media relations officer. "Last year's book was the first one we had published in 10 years, so it was still pretty rough around the edges. This is a big improvement."

Several of those improvements were the result of feedback from the online post guide survey the Public Affairs Office conducted last fall. Participants asked for more phone numbers and a more logical layout. Jackson said the guide will continue to be "a moving target" until Fort Benning has fully transitioned into the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

For more information or to arrange for post guide pick-up, call the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office at 706-545-3512.

During Tuesday's monthly Base Realignment and Closure town-hall meeting, Jay Brown, BRAC program manager for Fort Benning, told a handful of people the current status of Fort Benning's transformation process into the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

On the agenda:

- The virtual operating capability for the MCOE;
- Advertisement for bids on concrete batch plants;
- $350 million approved in the defense supplemental bill for a single-build hospital;
- Contract for the new reception battalion processing facility and conversion of the current reception battalion into a consolidated training support center, awarded June 27;
- Armor lieutenant colonel arrives on post as the new deputy of the Maneuver Center Realignment Coordination Cell; three additional Armor Center personnel inbound; and,

COMMANDER'S COLUMN

Fort Benning's tradition of excellence in training continues; Quality Assurance directorate does its part

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

Our Army has come a long way from the time it fought to help this nation declare its independence. After we won our independence, the Continental Army disbanded and amateur state militias became the nation's only ground Army. It didn't take long, though, to realize the need for maintaining a trained standing Army. Since then, our Army has continued to meet the standard of excellence in everything it does, especially in training.

Excellence in training doesn't just happen. At Fort Benning there are many factors helping us achieve it. We even have a directorate dedicated to ensuring the quality of our training, the Quality Assurance and Staff and Faculty Directorate (QASFD).

QASFD measures excellence in training and has been doing this in some form or another for decades. They started as the Directorate of Evaluation and Standards (DOES). In 1992, the DOES was reduced in force and eventually abolished at Fort Benning, and units began performing their own assessments and evaluations.

In 2000, the commander of Training and Doctrine Command ordered the reestablishment of this Directorate, and it was named the Quality Assurance Directorate. QA is the "eyes and ears" of the command. It provides an objective look at training and all facets of training support. TRADOC sets the standards for QA to measure.

One way they do this is by providing a feedback mechanism for students to comment on how well they are trained, and for commanders to make observations on how well students perform when they get to their unit.

All these comments are used to improve training, quality of life, and incorporate additional training into the program of instruction.

This QA system tracks the effectiveness of our training and opens communication between the field and the schoolhouse. QA also is responsible for the accreditation of eight Infantry battalions, seven Officer Candidate School battalions and three multi-functional battalions for the Army National Guard.

Many other factors affect training. Things like facilities, training aids, ranges, resources, and personnel are important, but at Fort Benning excellence in training begins and ends with the instructor. The QASFD is responsible for the training and certification of our instructors through the Army Basic Instructor Course.

An instructor must not only be knowledgeable about the subject, he or she must also be able to communicate the subject effectively. Effective communication motivates Soldiers to learn. Instructors must not only be subject matter experts, they must also possess patience, a positive attitude, a sincere desire to teach and train, a sense of humor, and the ability to produce Soldiers who are adaptive, competent, and confident.

We've all had instructors recite lessons to us word for word, and we know this is not effective. Instructors who convey their thoughts and experiences and give Soldiers a purpose for learning are our best instructors.

An instructor's effectiveness lies in a combination of factors, like technical and tactical proficiency, bearing, confidence, and appearance. This is what excellence in training is all about and I see examples of this at Fort Benning every day.

The 197th Infantry Brigade trains Soldiers in tactical and technical proficiencies; the 198th and 192nd Infantry Brigade transform recruits into Soldiers; the 199th Infantry Brigade focuses on leader training for Officers; the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate teaches company grade officers to be competent and confident leaders; and the Noncommissioned Officers Academy trains NCOs in Infantry and Armor skills and specialties. All of these units will form the Maneuver Center of Excellence. And all their training strives to achieve standards to prepare Soldiers for duties and responsibilities they will face when they begin to operate in the Contemporary Operational Environment - wherever that may be.

Our nation can rest assured that our Army's commitment to excellence in training will ensure the continued freedoms we celebrate today.

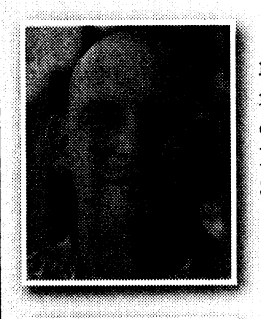
Do you have a holiday tradition?



Pretty much going to see the fireworks, really. It's something I remember seeing as a kid. Here, if I can't see the ones on Fort Benning, I try to catch them downtown. Sometimes I see both.

— Staff Sgt. Thomas Melnyk, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

I'm traveling up to Kentucky and going to a Fourth of July pig roast. Where I'm from, a lot of people do pig roasts. It's kind of like a rotisserie pig. It's huge; you have to have a truck to pull the spit.

— Kathy Long, Family member

It's a family thing. We live in Florida, so we go to the bridge and watch the fireworks. We always remember to take the kids so they can get a sense of the tradition, too. And we go to the beach every Independence Day.

— Spc. Yamson Foy, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

We set up a swimming pool for the kids and invite over as many people as we can and have a barbecue — hamburgers, hot dogs, baked beans, chips. It's fun.

— Spc. Magdalena Brown 14th Combat Support Hospital

Just spending time with the family at home. We usually grill out and enjoy relaxing together. It just brings the family together. We like it.

OPINION

Does this lipstick make me look distracted?

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Hey there, you in the blue SUV, that's killer lipstick you're wearing. I noticed it back there on I-185, when you merged between me and the motorcycle. I could see you there in your rearview, applying your lipstick. Nice.

You look like a fairly bright gal. The kids were strapped in safe and sound, and that thing protruding from your left ear leads me to believe you're a hands-free convert. High five you.

But here's something I bet you didn't know — applying lipstick, or makeup of any sort actually, while driving puts you and me and that guy on the motorcycle at a greater risk than most any other kind of distraction, including that cell phone.

According to a recent study by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, distracted driving causes about 80 percent of all automobile crashes in this country. Of course, we all know cell phones are a leading contributor to accidents and an increasing threat as more and more texters take to the road. But it surprised me to learn that hands-free phones pose just as great a danger as those that require an appendage.

And it surprised me more to learn that cell phones are not the riskiest distractions. Using the cell phone more than doubles your risk of having an accident, but that peach gloss, with the plumping molecules and SPF 15, actually triples your chance of being carted off to the morgue with a really great pout.

There are a number of other common behaviors that put us all at risk, particularly here in Georgia, which ranks third in the nation for distracted driving. Those who participated in the study confessed to eating, drinking and reading — yes, reading — while driving, even as they acknowledged the stupidity of it all. It seems we all know bad behavior when we see it, but we're not above doing it now and then.

The study also revealed this surprising fact; Very few people recognized the danger of driving without adequate rest. Experts call that driving while drowsy, but I think that's a misleading label.

Back in the day, when stupid was my style, I occasionally popped a caffeine pill, something like NoDoze, to keep me awake on that long journey from Indiana to Florida. The pill kept my eyes propped open, but I was always a jittery, sluggish mess. Not the definition of a safe driver.

According to the NHTSA study, I increased the chance of running my cute little Aspen into a tree (or a guardrail or another car) by a factor of four every time I climbed behind the wheel without adequate rest.

The problem of distracted driving is compounded in the summer, as more and more people take to the road for vacation and younger, inexperienced drivers have more time to kill behind the wheel, pardon the pun.

You're not responsible for the behavior of other drivers. You can't do anything about the guy texting or the gal putting on lipstick, but please make sure you're concentrating on the job at hand — driving, that is — so you can anticipate problems and react quickly should they, those other drivers, make a careless move. You may not be the culprit, but if you're too distracted to drive defensively, you're a danger to everyone else on the road.

Blackhawk Squadron welcomes new leader

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Lt. Col. Christopher Kennedy took command of 3rd Squadron, 1st U.S. Cavalry Regiment, from Lt. Col. John S. Kolasheski June 26 on Sledgehammer Field on Kelley Hill.

Kennedy

Kennedy said it is a tremendous honor to command on the same post where he was commissioned in 1991 and "where the spark of the desire, the goal of one day commanding a squadron was ignited."

He said it is a tremendous honor to command troops from 3rd Sqd., 1st. Cav., "who day after day, year after year, deployment after deployment, put their country, their unit and their fellow troopers above their personal wants and needs."

"Every one of them is a volunteer, and every one of them is a patriot who has chosen to follow the hardest path in the toughest profession on earth," Kennedy said. "I am proud to be here, and I am proud to be on their team. The brigade has a superb reputation from the last deployment during Operation Iraqi Freedom V, and it has had an excellent reputation for as long as I can remember."

Kolasheski

Kennedy last served as the Armor colonel's assignments officer at Headquarters, Department of the Army, Senior Leader Development, in Washington, D.C., prior to coming here.

From 2003 to 2006, he was assigned to the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment at Fort Carson, Colo., where he served as a squadron operations officer, executive officer and the regimental executive officer.

He spent two years in Iraq, and during his first tour in 2003, he said, his unit built systems to improve Ramadi and Fallujah, opened the border crossing at Ar Ar for the Hadj, were responsible for all of the Jordanian border and about one third of the Syrian border, and recruited and trained four border patrol brigades and several security units.

During his tour in 2005, he said, the unit disrupted the insurgency along a volatile fault line and helped recruit and train the first Iraqi Army forces in an area south of Baghdad known as the Fiyas.

Then they moved north to Tall Afar, where they defeated the insurgency and built security forces that operated independently by the spring of 2006, he said.

Kennedy said he and his wife, Janet, are extremely happy to be part of a close-knit Army community again, and he said everyone at Fort Benning is extremely welcoming, friendly and helpful.

Kolasheski returned to Fort Benning May 16 after completing 15 months of combat operations in the Baghdad Province, Iraq.

Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team commander, said Kolasheski's unit was responsible for 1,200 square kilometers of battle space — approximately 70 percent of the 3rd HBCT's area of operation — where they helped Iraqi citizens and disrupted the insurgents.

Under Kolasheski's leadership, Grigsby said, the unit detained four key high-value individuals and sent 218 extremists to the theater internment facility with a 78 percent pass rate (solid evidence that would likely lead to a conviction for long-term detention). The pass rate was one of the highest in Iraq, he said.

Grigsby said the unit also secured numerous weapons caches, making it difficult for extremists to function; executed 19 civil and medical engagements; formed the first Sons of Iraq group, locally recruited and primarily Sunni security forces, armed and supported by the U.S., in the Mada'in Qada; and completed 78 civil affairs projects, totaling more than $10 million, that improved the quality of life for Iraqis.

"John sets the standards for the men, Grigsby said. "He led from the front and was in harm's way with his men."

Kolasheski will attend the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Penn.

1-507th helps preserve Smoke Jumpers legacy

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Soldiers of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the Army's first black paratroopers, jumped into the history books in 1943.

Their legacy is now being preserved in a photo montage hanging in the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, headquarters building.

The new commander, Lt. Col. Jon A. Ring, said the montage, which went on display in June, helps preserve the tradition and history of the unit, so that it can be passed on to the Soldiers coming through Fort Benning and Airborne School today.

"The Triple Nickle is a very special unit with a proud history, and the closeness they have with this unit is special," Ring said.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Mike Lyde, 555th Parachute Infantry Association, Richard W. Williams Chapter president said it is his dream to see a similar display in Infantry Hall sometime in the future.

Soldiers of the Triple Nickle went through airborne training at Fort Benning and were assigned to guard the American Northwest searching for Japanese balloon bombs, a job requiring exact skills and courage, according to the 555th Parachute Infantry Association Web site. The paratroopers became known as Smoke Jumpers.

The montage includes photos of the first 16 black paratroopers, including 1st Sgt. Walter Morris, the first black enlisted man accepted for airborne duty, and photos from a 555th memorial bust dedicated in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The bust of Morris sits near the Buffalo Soldier monument.

Sledgehammer leaders to share war experiences

Junior leaders to hear about unit's deployment

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team commander, and 3rd HBCT Command Sgt. Maj. James Pearson will speak about their unit's 15-month deployment to Iraq during the Combat Leader Speaker Program at 4 p.m. Wednesday in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall.

Grigsby and Pearson will be joined by Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, including Lt. Col. John Marr; Capt. Richard Thompson; and 1st Lt. Ross Pixler, who was awarded the Silver Star for actions in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Maj. Charles Smith, CLSP coordinator, said Grigsby and his leaders were asked to speak because they have recent combat experience to share with Soldiers in the Fort Benning community, especially Officer Candidate School, Infantry Basic Officer Leadership Course and Maneuver Captains Career Course students.

The 3rd HBCT, the "Sledgehammer Brigade," captured 43 high value individuals, killed more than 160 enemy combatants, eliminated numerous weapons caches and IEDs, detained 600 suspected criminals and rebuilt the government in the area, according to an article released by the 3rd HBCT Public Affairs Office.

The brigade also established Sons of Iraq groups throughout the area of operation. SOI members are locally recruited and primarily Sunni security forces, armed and supported by the U.S.

More than 60 percent of the brigade's Soldiers were serving their second or third deployment. Thirty-two HBCT Soldiers were killed and more than 190 were wounded.

Hands off the fawns

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

They're cute, sure, but please don't touch the fawns.

People who "rescue" seemingly deserted fawns from the forest and bring them to the conservation branch on post are actually doing them a disservice, said David Mallard, post wildlife technician.

When fawns are born, typically in May, June and July, they aren't strong enough to keep up with the doe while she forages for food. For the first two to three weeks of their lives, the mother hides them on the forest floor. She is usually within hearing distance, if not within sight, of her young. The fawns' natural coloration camouflages them from predators.

When hunters or Soldiers happen upon these fawns, they often assume they've been abandoned, Mallard said.

When a fawn is brought in, they return it to the same location if possible and hope for the best, he said. There is a risk — the doe may reject her young because of the human scent on the fawn.

What appears like abandonment is actually a survival strategy, Mallard said.

"The best chance for that fawn to be able to survive is out there with the mother," he said. "People mean well, but they end up doing more harm than good. We appreciate their concern, but the best thing is to just leave them alone."

VOTE
2008 General Election

As the Army's Senior Service Voting Representative, I strongly encourage you to participate and cast your vote in the 2008 General Election. Voting is the essence of our democracy and one of our most fundamental Constitutional rights. Our elected officials have very important jobs; the good news is, you have a voice in who is elected to do them...if you vote. You can exercise your right to vote by completing the Federal Post Card Application (FPCA Standard Form 76) or complying with the ballot request procedures enacted by the state in which you vote. The FPCA Standard Form 76, or other request, should be mailed or sent electronically as soon as possible. You should then receive your absentee ballot as requested. The Federal Voting Assistance Program has been working with the states to allow ballots to be submitted and received electronically. Check with your Unit Voting Assistance Officer (UVAO) for your state requirements.

Mailing guidelines differ from state to state; therefore, we recommend you check your state's guidelines by contacting your UVAO, or by visiting the Army Voting Assistance Program website at www.vote.army.mil. It is imperative that you complete and send in your ballot immediately to ensure it is received by your hometown local election officials no later than your state's deadline. If you are an overseas voter and have not received your regular absentee ballot 30-45 days prior to your state's deadline, you should complete a Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot (FWAB) and send it to your local election official. If you later receive your absentee ballot, you should also complete and send it in for processing.

The 2008 General Election is quickly approaching, so please don't wait until the very last minute to register or send in your absentee ballot.

BE SMART. DO YOUR PART. VOTE!

Weapons training will be conducted over Fort Benning's eastern boundaries July 21. The training will involve weapons firing which may cause disturbances. For more information, call the Public Affairs Office at 706-545-2238. After duty hours and on weekends, call 706-545-2218.

TROY UNIVERSITY OFFERS TESTING

Troy University's Fort Benning site now hosts a National Testing Center at their Soldiers Plaza location, Building 2612 on Dixie Road where active-duty and National Guard Soldiers can take free College Level Examination Program tests.

Family members can take these tests for a charge of $65 per test. The Troy Testing Center is an open testing center for CLEP tests and offers 34 different CLEP tests.

Individuals interested in taking any of the CLEP tests that are offered through the Troy National Testing Center or those who simply want to inquire about the different tests should call Leon Johnson, test site administrator, at 706-685-5731, or send an e-mail to him at johnsonl@troy.edu.

WOMEN'S EQUALITY TO BE CELEBRATED

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office will host a Women's Equality Day luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Aug. 26 in the Benning Club Supper Room. This year's theme is "Celebrating Women's Right to Vote." The guest speaker will be Honorable Carolyn Hugley, Georgia House of Representatives.

For more information, call 706-544-9026.

MOTORCYCLE SAFETY FOUNDATION REGISTRATION PROCESS

To register for Motorcycle Safety Foundation courses, visit https://airs.lmi.org, select available courses, select Fort Benning in the garrison drop-down list, select the course from drop-down list and select the date of the course desired using the calendar that pops up on the page.

Double-click on the appropriate course listed. Motorcyclists must ensure they register for the course. There are two courses for each date: One for personnel using their own motorcycles and one for those using the trainer motorcycles. Complete the registration form, print a copy for your records and submit the registration by selecting save. Those experiencing difficulty registering should contact the Combat Readiness Office (Safety), Building 18, or call the MSF instructors at 706-545-0893.

REDEPLOYMENT CLASSES

The deployment is over, now what? Financial Readiness offers classes for units and family readiness groups to help Soldiers and their families deal with financial issues. Financial counselors will bring this training to you. To schedule a class, call 706-545-7517 or 706-545-4043.

OPINIONS CAN BE GIVEN ON ICE

The Interactive Customer Evaluation System allows customers to rate the services received from installation organizations. Visit the ICE Web site, http://ice.disa.mil, pick out the installation or agency of interest and answer the questions. The manager of the specific organization receives the comments and feedback will be returned upon request of the customer. ICE terminals are located in high volume customer service areas around Fort Benning.

VOTING INFORMATION AVAILABLE

Soldiers must ensure they are registered to vote and are on track to receive their absentee ballot at their current duty location.

For more information, contact the unit voting assistance officer or Donny Philips at 706-545-1876 or 706-545-5655 at the Installation Voting Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2620.

Update: Shows post progress in regards to BRAC

• Infantry Hall renovation solicitation advertised.

Lori Egan

Construction continues on an armor battalion area in Harmony Church. Four of the five initial entry training battalions are under construction now, said Jay Brown, Fort Benning's BRAC program manager. Nearly $3 billion of major construction on Fort Benning is programmed through 2016.

VOC

The Board of Directors for the MCOE will assign leads for the virtual operating capability, Brown said. The leaders will develop the business rules for each respective MCOE staff organization. As an example, Brown used the Directorate of Training Sustainment, an organization that doesn't exist at either the Armor or Infantry schools — but will exist at the MCOE.

A colonel with the Army Materiel Command is the designated lead for the new organization — DOTS. He and his staff will decide the business practices for the future 600-person organization, answering questions like how to handle the hauling assets for the Armor School and how to prioritize the training needs for both schools.

"But wait," Brown said, "he doesn't have a staff. This is where the strategic planning cells here and at Fort Knox help the VOC leads develop the business rules. When the DOTS staff is on board, then the strategic planners step away."

Once the leads are named and approved at the next Board of Directors meeting in August, the MCOE's virtual operating capability goes into effect Oct. 1, Brown said. The plan is to transition from virtual operating capability to initial operating capability in about one year's time.

Concrete batch plants

With the amount of construction taking place on Fort Benning, a solicitation for bids is being advertised for two concrete batch plants to be operated on post. The batch plants will lessen the construction traffic, because concrete will be made near the site and decrease the amount of wear and tear on the roads, Brown said.

$350 million

When the president signed the supplemental defense spending bill Monday, $350 million was appropriated for building a new hospital on Fort Benning. This money will be added to the $156 million originally allocated by BRAC law for construction of a replacement facility for Martin Army Community Hospital.

Now with more than $500 million, Medical Command will need to solicit a new design and build contract for a single build hospital, Brown said.

Col. Derick Wolf, deputy garrison commander for Transformation, said MEDCOM may choose to adapt a previous hospital design, which means construction could start by next summer.

But a new hospital will not be completed by Sept. 15, 2011, so Martin Army Community Hospital will use modular buildings for outpatient clinics to support the increased load until the new hospital is complete, Brown said.

Reception battalion processing facility

"We'll convert the old 30th AG Reception facility into a training support center," Brown said. "The Army standard is to have consolidated training support centers and Fort Benning qualifies for a large category Training Aids Support Center. This fits the bill."

Armor personnel inbound

Along with the arrival of the Armor lieutenant colonel who will be the deputy of the Maneuver Center Realignment Coordination Cell, a logistician, a major and a master gunner are inbound, Brown said. They will work in MCRC2. The logistician will plan for the integration of equipment from Fort Knox, logistic support and maintenance. The major will be the Armor Center and School liaison, and the master gunner will help develop new tank ranges, Brown said.

Infantry Hall renovation

The solicitation for Infantry Hall's renovation is being advertised. The Department of the Army approved full funding for the renovation, which means the project should start April 1, 2009.

"Phase I, for the towers, is on the street," Brown said. "Contractors walked the building last week."

Much of the headquarters staff will move to Building 35, the old Infantry School. Contractors are working on the roof, prepping the building for the move, Brown said.

"This is a complex process, moving from separate schools and centers to the Maneuver Center of Excellence," Brown said. "It's hard to fathom all the moving parts in the process, which is why we have the town-hall meetings — to keep the community informed."

Editor's note: Look for more information on the Maneuver Center of Excellence construction progress in an upcoming issue of The Bayonet. The information will cover construction that will begin, construction that will be completed and other changes the Fort Benning community will see during the next year.

Courage and confidence

Candidates learn combat water survival

Officer candidates in B Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, took on the Combat Water Survival Test Tuesday at Carey Pool on Main Post. The exercise is part of the second week in the 12-week Officer Candidate School course.

"It's a confidence builder," said 1st Lt. Robin Deavours, the platoon leader in charge of the exercise. "For them to even get in the water is a big step. It demonstrates the Army value of personal courage."

Just getting in the water earned candidates 20 out of 50 points. They received another 10 for each station they completed — a 15-meter swim with load-bearing equipment and a mock M-16 rifle, shedding their equipment while submerged and a three-meter blindfolded fall from a diving board.

"It was just scary," said Officer Candidate Justin Foster, after completing the last challenge. "When I went under there, I thought I wasn't coming back up, but I just couldn't quit."

Each of the stations has a unique purpose, Deavours said, and the last one — a step off the three-meter high board — is more about mental toughness than strength.

"It's supposed to be scary," she said. "The only thing you're supposed to be thinking is don't let go of your weapon. When you're in combat, you're not going to have a swimming pool where you need to jump off a three-meter (platform), but you never know what you're going to get over there, so we do everything."

Officer Candidate Jessica Cline, one of the team leaders, said she was motivated to do well because she wants to graduate with enough points to choose her branch of service. She completed all the challenges successfully.

"I think it's more of a mental struggle than a physical struggle," she said. "Jumping in the water for the first time is hard, but it feels good to accomplish it. When you first jump in, there's that shock of what it actually feels like — like you're not going to make it — but then you do, and you feel a little better about yourself."

Capt. Jake Jeffers, a platoon leader assisting the candidates in the Combat Water Survival Test, watches as an officer candidate steps off the three-meter platform with his mock M-16 rifle.

Independence Day

Photos by Lori Egan

A member of the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, lands on Stewart-Watson Field Saturday during the post's celebration of Independence Day. Military demonstrations, static displays of military equipment, music by the Commodores, Katie Rae Davis and Gary Nichols, food and fireworks kept upwards of 15,000 people entertained, said Donna Hyatt, marketing specialist with the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Post celebrates holiday early

THE BAYONET

For Pvts. Wayne Alderman and David Andrews, Saturday's rainstorms during the Independence Day celebration didn't dampen their break from training. However, gusting winds blew over a tent, the rock wall and a giant inflatable around 4:30 p.m. Three people were transported by ambulance to area hospitals for minor injuries.

"We got off the bus just as the rain stopped," Alderman said. "We hit the funnel cakes. Now we're going to camp out at the phones."

The battle buddies from 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, said they planned to spend their time using the cell phones Verizon provided to call home for free.

"We've been restricted from using phones for seven weeks," Andrews said after talking with his girlfriend in Phoenix. "I still want to call my parents."

Nearly 5,500 Sand Hill Soldiers attended the event that brought country music's Katie Rae Davis, Southern rocker Gary Nichols and the Commodores to York Field.

"This was our biggest Independence Day event yet," said Donna Hyatt, marketing specialist with the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation. "We estimate there were upwards of 15,000 people attending."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Montana Haas and his family are making Fort Benning's early July Fourth celebration a tradition, he said.

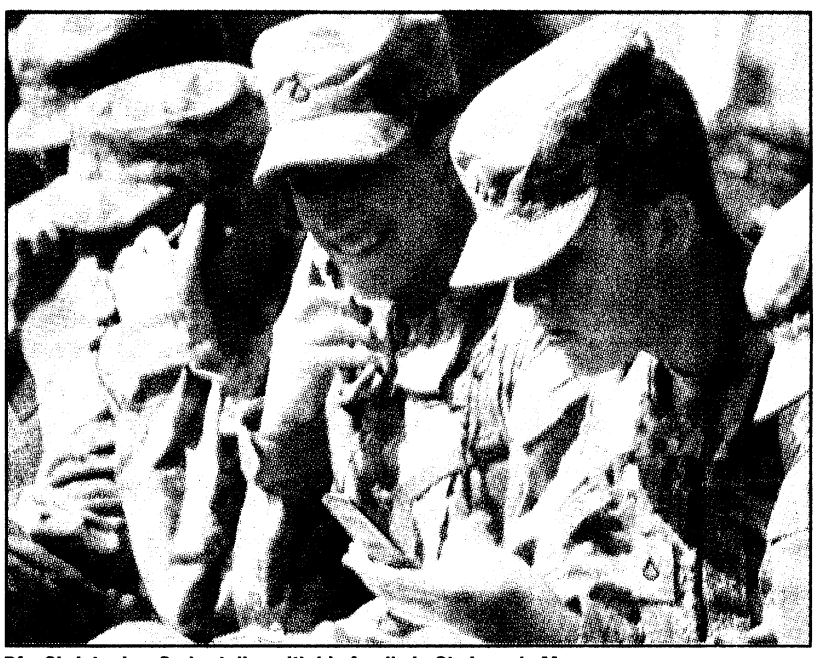
During the day, mixed martial artists demonstrated sparring skills, the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, jumped on to Stewart-Watson Field, and Rangers with the Ranger Training Brigade demonstrated fast-roping techniques.



Pfc. Christopher Godar talks with his family in St. Joseph, Mo.

New this year was the 197th Infantry Brigade's demonstration of Infantry squad capabilities. With Bad to the Bone blaring on loudspeakers, two Strykers sped onto the field and "popped smoke" to obscure the Soldiers as they dismounted the vehicles.

"That was awesome," said 15-year-old Will Iddins, who attended the celebration for the first time.

All in all, it was an awesome day, said Blair Tucker, who watched her husband, Sgt. Jammie Tucker, perform two songs with Nichols.

"They grew up together, played in the same band," she said. "In fact, Gary introduced me to my husband."

The Commodores played their hits from the '70s and '80s. They kept the crowd waiting for Brick House, the finale. As the last note died away, fireworks lighted the sky.

NBA draft results

The NBA drafted fresh faces June 26 at Madison Square Garden in New York. Point guard Derrick Rose was chosen first by the Chicago Bulls. Michael Beasley was chosen second by the Miami Heat, and O.J. Mayo was chosen third by the Minnesota Timberwolves, but they traded him to Memphis.

Olympic trials records

Swimmer Michael Phelps set a world record in the 400-meter individual medley June 29 in Omaha, Neb. Phelps finished in 4 minutes, 5.25 seconds in his first event at the trials.

Less than an hour later, Katie Hoff, and friend of Phelps, set her own world record in the 400-meter individual medley with a time of 4:31.12.

Bulldogs take top honors

Fresno State went the distance in the NCAA baseball College World Series, beating several seeded teams to make it to the finals with the University of Georgia.

Fresno State was the lowest seed in any sport to win an NCAA championship. Their 31 losses are the most ever by a championship baseball team.

Spain wins soccer title

Spain defeated Germany, 1-0, in the Euro 2008 final game to claim victory for the first time in 44 years June 29. Spain's midfielder, Xavi Hernandez Creus, was named the best player of the tournament. On a sad note, a 40-year-old Spanish fan was found dead during the celebration in Madrid. He had head injuries from an apparent fall.

Busch gets lucky

No, it's not Kyle who won a NASCAR Sprint Cup Series race on Sunday, but his older brother, Kurt Busch. Kurt broke his 29-race winless drought at New Hampshire Motor Speedway in Loudon, N.H., in a rain-shortened race.

NASCAR heads back to Daytona for the Coke Zero 400 this week. Coverage begins at 6:30 p.m. on TNT.

Wimbledon finals

Catch the finals of Wimbledon Saturday and Sunday on NBC. The ladies' singles and men's and women's doubles finals will air beginning at 9 a.m. Saturday. The men's singles and mixed doubles finals air from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday.

USSSA

Their nemesis, Team Georgia, a National Guard Team from Warner Robins, took second in the five-team, double elimination tournament, hosted by the DFMWR's Sports and Fitness.

The tournament was scheduled for Saturday and Sunday at Gowdy and Knappenberger fields, but late dropouts and foul weather resulted in a condensed schedule. It started shortly after 8 a.m. and wrapped up before the start of the fireworks show on York Field Saturday night.

Team Georgia lost an early match to the team from Warner Robins, which went undefeated, and faced them again in the championship game. Three teams from Fort Benning didn't fare so well. Fort Benning Team I and the Leftovers, a pick-up team from across post, suffered early defeats and called it a day before the second gale blew in late afternoon. Team II took third place.

Women's softball team optimistic despite setbacks

Despite a slow start, the Fort Benning Express women's softball team remains optimistic about their final tournament. The Express, with a record of two wins, 10 losses and a tie in Class D league play, will compete in the 2008 USSSA Military World Tournament Aug. 14-17 in Kissimmee, Fla.

Coach Kathryn Walker said the team has focused on offense in recent practices. The Express has averaged only six runs per game in the three USSSA tournaments they've played in.

"We have to work on our hitting," Walker said. "We need to learn proper batting stances and placement of the ball during the game."

The team, which currently consists of 14 players, has had roster changes because of reassignments and other military commitments. Walker said the slow start isn't a disappointment.

"With softball on this level, it is all about how you play the game," she said.

"It's not about the wins and losses. The players are committed, loyal and have a passion for the game, and those are the most important ingredients."

The Fort Benning Express, the post's women's softball team, includes Soldiers and civilians. Kathryn Walker, pictured on the far left, coaches the team in its inaugural year.

Even though the team has struggled in its inaugural year, the players feel the team is improving with each game.

"In the beginning it was tough, but we are coming together," said Ashley Seebaugh. "We've improved dramatically. Playing for this team has been a really rewarding experience. The more we play, the more support we'll get. It's all about letting the public know that 'hey, we have a women's team here,' and eventually we'll get over the hump and get better."

Former Benning Soldier coaches mixed martial arts

Former Fort Benning Soldier Mike Van Arsdale has always been a thrill seeker. Whether it was sneaking past his parents to play football with kids twice his age, battling some of the toughest men in the world inside a steel cage or joining the military, he said he has always taken great risks for what he saw as greater rewards.

Van Arsdale, a former Ultimate Fighting Championship fighter, was one of four mixed-martial artists who visited Fort Benning June 27-29.

"In many ways it felt like a homecoming," Van Arsdale said. "Fort Benning was a huge part of my life. When you join the Army, your life will never be the same. You're thinking about teamwork first, and I took what I learned very seriously."

Van Arsdale joined the military at the age of 33 after he was approached by an Army wrestling coach about joining the World Class Athlete Program. He went through basic training and Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning.

"Basic training was such a different experience for me," he said. "I was used to training for myself, and I never had to answer to anyone. But when you're in the Army, it's more than wrestling or sports. It's about the Army."

Mike Van Arsdale was one of four mixed-martial artists who visited Fort Benning June 27-29 to conduct self-defense classes. Van Arsdale went through basic training and Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning in 1998.

As a wrestler and coach in Fort Carson, Colo., Van Arsdale won the armed forces tournament and the World Military Games. His military career ended after doctors discovered three ruptured discs in his neck.

After his discharge, Van Arsdale, a former high school champion, collegiate All-American and Olympic alternate, did his second stint in the world of professional mixed-martial arts. But his return was unsuccessful. He was unable to perform because of the neck injury and lost four straight matches.

At 43, Van Arsdale, said he has found his calling as a teacher.

He has been coaching at the Jackson and Winklejohn Submission Academy in Albuquerque, N.M., for nearly two years. He currently trains 40 international MMA fighters and boxers, including UFC welterweight champion George St. Pierre, undefeated UFC fighter Rashad Evans and EliteXC fighter Joey Villasenor.

"Mike's extremely smart, and his work ethic is impeccable," said Villasenor. "He has pushed me to my limits and has helped me pinpoint techniques to improve my game."

Van Arsdale said he wants to instill the same discipline and work ethic he learned in the military into the fighters he coaches.

"Every single day that I coach, I feel like I'm experiencing the greatest moment in life," Van Arsdale said.

"It's like creating something by hand. I customize my practices according to what I see in these guys' eyes. To have the guys come up and thank me for how hard I push is payment for me."

Mixed martial artists teach combatives, self defense

Fighters from the world of boxing and mixed-martial arts taught self-defense and combatives techniques to Soldiers and family members last weekend at Smith Fitness Center.

"There are some really skilled guys here, and the Army's on the right track with their combatives program," said Joey Villasenor, an EliteXC mixed-martial artist. "To be in the presence of these heroic Soldiers is great, and it's an honor to share a part of my life with them."

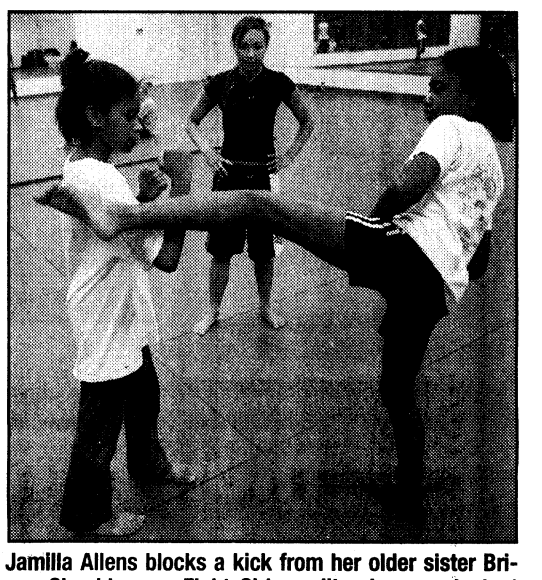
"It's thrilling to do kick-boxing, because it's something I always wanted to learn," said 12-year-old Briana Shoulders, who attended the classed with her 11-year-old sister Jamilla Allen. "Now I want to learn karate for real."

An awareness, prevention and safety workshop, provided tips on traveling in groups, carrying whistles and using mace.

"Self-defense, especially for women and young kids is a necessity," said Waterson, who has been practicing martial arts for 13 years.



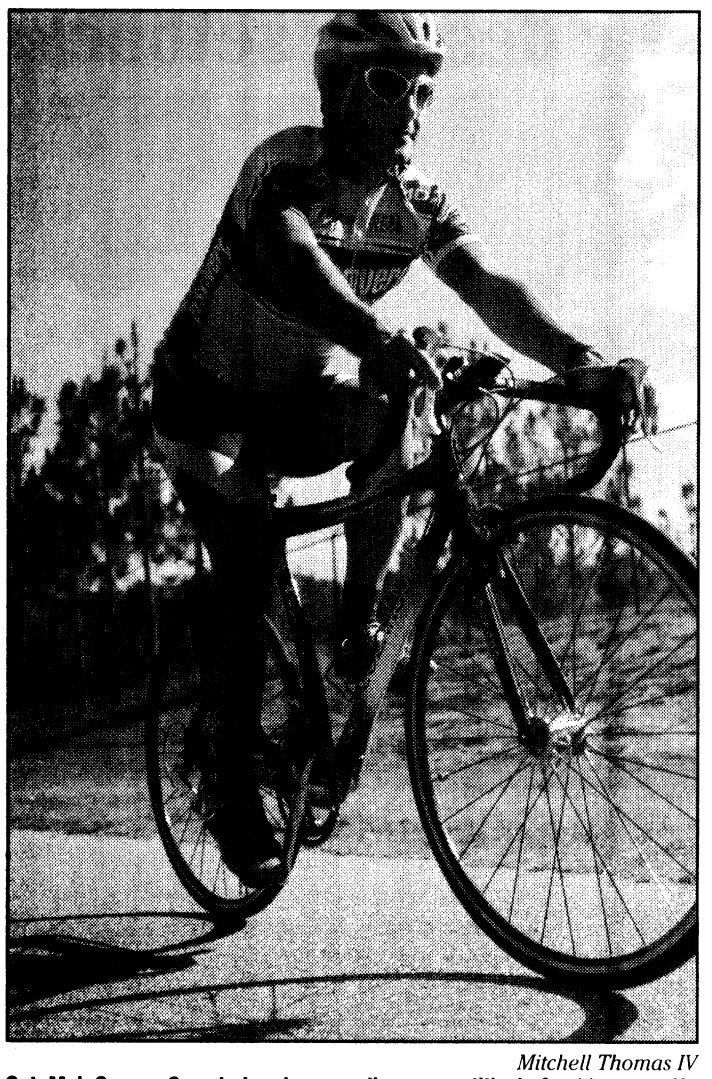
Jamilla Allens blocks a kick from her older sister Briana Shoulders as Fight Girls reality show contestant Michelle Waterson observes. This was both girls' first time participating in a self-defense class.

"You never know what can happen, and it's always better to be safe than sorry."

Villasenor and former UFC fighter Mike Van Arsdale taught the men beginning and advanced combatives skills including ground and grappling techniques, escapes, strikes and kicks.

"Getting a taste of some of the pro's tricks is always a good thing," said Sgt. Ian Peters, an instructor at the Fort Benning Combatives School. "It brings a different perspective to the way we do things already, and it can add to our overall game plans."

Post offers challenge, peace for cyclists



Mitchell Thomas IV
Sgt. Maj. George Gurrola has been cycling competitively for 11 years. He rides on Fort Benning six times a week.

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

For the last four months, Maj. Bill Venable has used the Riverwalk as a part of his 32-mile, round-trip cycling commute from home to work. He rides for exercise, to help the environment and to save money on gas. This year, Venable has only driven his car 6,000 miles.

"The Riverwalk is beautiful, and I wanted to take advantage of it," Venable said. "And if I can do my part to reduce pollution, it's even better."

Venable, who has been biking for 22 years, said riding at a pace of 13 to 15 miles an hour allows him to burn nearly 1,800 calories a day.

Sheryl Creek said biking keeps her connected with family and friends. The human resources specialist at the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center, has been cycling regularly for 10 years. She is a ride leader for the Columbus Cycling Club, a nonprofit organization for competitive and recreational riders.

"I never wanted to ride competitively," Creek said. "I make sure I get a workout from it, but it's all about the camaraderie."

Creek said Fort Benning's numerous areas for riding are perfect for beginners and veteran cyclists. One of the more popular routes is from the Riverwalk in Columbus to the old Infantry Museum on Baltzell Avenue, which is about a 20-mile ride.

Sgt. Maj. George Gurrola bikes to compete as well as relax. He has been cycling competitively for 11 years.

Gurrola finished first in the men's 30- to 39-year-old division and second overall in the 2007 Reverse Sprint Triathlon. He also posted the fastest cycling time among individual competitors at 22 minutes and four seconds.

Gurrola said the challenging "dragon's back" route, which loops around the ranges on the east side of post and Wildcat Road, is his primary area for race preparation. And the route from Uchee Creek to the Fryar Drop Zone helps with cardio training.

Gurrola, who has undergone two knee surgeries this year, said biking is a key to his rehabilitation.

"I feel safer when I bike as opposed to running. There is less impact on my knees, so I don't have to worry about getting re-injured," he said.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Snow, the Operations NCOIC of the Provost Marshall Office, said bikers should be equipped with appropriate reflectors on their cycles and vests during hours of decreased visibility. Bikers are required to abide by the same road laws as automobiles, including stopping at traffic lights and signs.

Snow said parents should be aware of their children's biking habits in the housing areas.

"A lot of times, kids feel because they're not on the main road that they don't need helmets or vests. But the housing areas are as frequently traveled as the roadways," Snow said.

"On post, there are no dogs chasing you, and there are no cars trying to run you off the road," Gurrola said. "It's just peaceful. It's definitely the best installation I've ever been on for biking."

Main Post defeated Sand Hill to win the All-Star intramural softball title Monday at Gowdy Field. Main Post won the first game, 15-5, and the third game, 15-7, in a best of three series.

In the first game, Main Post entered the third inning with a 9-0 lead. Andrew Bracero scored two of the team's runs in the game and finished eight for 10 in the three games.

Sand Hill brought in two runs in the third and three in the fourth.

In game two, Sand Hill took an early lead and never gave it up, winning 9-7.

In the deciding game, Sand Hill got off to a hot start, including an inside-the-park home run by Greg Miller in the second, which brought in three runs. Sand Hill had a 6-0 lead after three innings.

In the sixth, Main Post went on a hitting frenzy and scored 10 runs.

Three quick outs retired Sand Hill in the top of the seventh to end the game, 15-7.

"We just knew we needed to hit the ball better in the third game, plain and simple," said Matthew Graham, captain of the Main Post team. "We were able to get our momentum back and take it to the house."

The leagues resumed regular season play Tuesday at Gowdy and Knappenberger fields. Games begin at 6 p.m. Monday at Gowdy and Knappenberger.

FIT FACTS

DFMWR FITNESS
Lori Smith

Happy Fourth of July to you!

I hope everyone is enjoying a beautiful day spent with friends and family. I know the Fourth is normally a day spent outside having fun — I just hope everyone will remember to be safe.

This week I want to talk about safety and a few things we tend to forget when we're outside.

Let's start with insects and insect bites, probably the single most frustrating thing about the summertime in the South.

They're pesky, sure, those creepy, crawly things, but they can be dangerous as well. Ticks and mosquitoes can carry dangerous diseases.

The biggest threat from tick bites is Lyme disease, which is caused by the bacterium Borrelia burgdorferi. The bacteria are transmitted to humans by the black-legged deer tick, which is about the size of a pinhead and usually lives on deer. We all know there are plenty of deer around here.

Another insect-borne illness, the West Nile virus, is transmitted by mosquitoes and usually produces mild symptoms in healthy people. But the illness can be serious for older people and those with compromised immune systems. In 2002, there were 4,156 cases of West Nile virus in humans reported to the Centers for Disease Control.

Less than 1 percent of people infected with West Nile virus develop severe illness. The symptoms are flu-like and can include fever, headache, body aches and skin rash.

What can you do? There are no vaccines on the market for West Nile virus or Lyme disease. If you're spending time in tall grass or woody areas, use insect repellent with DEET to ward off mosquitoes and ticks.

But insect repellent should not be used on babies, and repellent used on children should contain no more than 10 percent DEET.

Check yourself and your children for ticks before bedtime. If you find a tick, remove it with tweezers, drop it in a plastic bag and store it in the refrigerator just in case you later develop symptoms. The CDC recommends cleansing the area of the tick bite with antiseptic.

Early removal is important because a tick generally has to be on the skin for 36 hours or more to transmit Lyme disease.

If you are bitten and notice any of the symptoms mentioned above, notify your physician.

Bee stings are another concern during the summer. Typically a bee sting only brings a bit of pain and lots of itching, but any time there is swelling in the face or an area other than where the sting occurred, your need to seek medical help.

Many people are very allergic to bee stings, but most do not realize it until after they are stung.

Other symptoms of an allergic reaction are hives, itching, rash, difficulty breathing and shock. Most reactions to bees are mild, but severe allergic reactions lead to between 40 and 50 deaths each year.

An allergic reaction can occur even if a person has been stung before with no complications.

What can you do? To keep bees away, wear light-colored clothing and avoid scented soaps and perfumes. Don't leave food, drinks and garbage uncovered. Treat a bee sting by scraping the stinger away in a side-to-side motion with a credit card or fingernail and then washing the area with soap and water. Pulling the stinger out or using tweezers may push more venom into the skin.

Watch for signs of allergic reaction to stings. These typically happen within the first few hours. If you or your child has ever had an allergic reaction to a sting, experts recommend carrying epinephrine, a prescription hormone given by injection to support blood pressure, increase heart rate and relax airways.

Another common injury we see this time of year are burns from fireworks and grills. The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates that about 8,800 people were treated in emergency rooms in 2002 for injuries associated with fireworks.

Most injuries involved the hands, head, and eyes. Children can also get hurt playing around grills or they get burned when they throw objects into campfires.

Always keep an eye out for where kids are playing while cooking. A child can easily forget to watch for that hot grill while playing toss in the yard.

Teach the stop, drop and roll technique just in case. Generally, minor burns smaller than a person's palm can be treated at home. But burns bigger than that and burns on the hands, feet, face and major joints usually require emergency treatment.

For a minor injury, run cool water over it and cover it with a clean, dry cloth. Don't apply ice, which can worsen a burn. Don't apply petroleum jelly or butter, which can hold heat in the tissue. Consult your family doctor if a minor burn does not heal in a couple of days or if there are signs of infection, such as redness and swelling.

Wishing everyone a safe and happy Fourth of July.

EAR TAGS

Auburn University is conducting a study of the feral pigs on Fort Benning to understand their population size, reproductive rates, movement patterns and food habits.

This information will help determine what impacts feral pigs have on the habitat, native wildlife populations and military training.

Pig hunters on post, please report the ear tag number, ear tag color, date harvested and general location of harvest to the Fort Benning Conservation Branch office.

Several pigs have been fitted with radio-tracking collars to help us determine habitat use.

Please attempt to identify and avoid harvesting these collared pigs.

If a collared pig is harvested or found, please return the collar to Conservation Branch, First Division Road, Building 5884, Harmony Church.

For more information, call 706-544-7079, 706-544-7516 or 707-544-7319.

$40 BOUNTY FOR PIGS

The Conservation Branch of the Fort Benning is offering a $40 bounty to hunters who harvest feral pigs on post.

Licensed hunters, including active-duty Soldiers, retirees and civilians who harvest feral pigs on post, will be paid after turning in the pig's tail. A data sheet must accompany the tail when collecting funds.

Tails and sheets are turned in at the Building 5884 on Tuesdays from noon to 2 p.m. and on the last Friday of every month from noon to 2 p.m.

For more information, call Maj. Bobby Toon at 706-536-6021.

Choosing adequate vehicle depends on driver's needs

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE
Tom and Ray Magliozzi

Dear Tom and Ray:

I need some straightforward and honest guidance on how important torque and horsepower are for a small car.

My husband recently passed away, and now I must downsize my F-150. I have done research during the past few weeks, looking for the best four-cylinder/automatic that would meet my needs.

I am down to the Ford Focus and Nissan Versa.

My question: The Focus has a slight edge in torque at 136 (at) 4250 rpm and horsepower at 140 (at) 6000 rpm, while the Versa has a torque listed at 127 (at) 4800 rpm and horsepower of 122 (at) 5200 rpm.

Both have comparable size, curb weight, quality and warranty. I am just not sure if the difference is worth the slightly higher cost of the Focus.

Can you tell me if it would make a positive difference in power and pickup during highway miles?

P.S.: Just a word about our family: My 11-year-old grandson recognized your voices when we went to the theater to see Cars. He has heard NPR in his grandma's truck often during the past few years.

— Kathleen

RAY: First of all, we're awfully sorry to hear about your husband, Kathleen, but we're glad you're continuing to corrupt your young grandson in his absence.

TOM: When looking at power numbers (horsepower is the overall power of the engine, and torque is the amount of twisting power the engine can generate), it's not enough to take the numbers by themselves.

You also need to consider the vehicle's weight.

RAY: Right. If you were asked to choose between two potential suitors, both of whom were 5 feet 9 inches tall, wouldn't you want to know that one of them weighed 375 pounds?

TOM: When we divide horsepower by the weight, we get a horsepower-to-weight ratio. That tells us that the Focus (.051 horsepower per pound) is, indeed, more powerful than the Versa (.045).

But the question is, do you need that extra power? Because, when it comes to power, the gold standard that you're shooting for is "adequate."

RAY: My brother's been shooting for "adequate" for years, and has yet to even come close. But he's right about engine power. If you don't have enough, you can be a menace on the roads or put yourself in danger by being in the way of faster-moving vehicles. But if you have too much, you'll be paying for that extra power in wasted fuel every time you run the engine.

TOM: So, how do you decide what's adequate? Well, the best way is to drive the car.

I suspect you're going to find both of these cars to be perfectly adequate, especially around town.

RAY: But don't limit your test-drive to around town. Try getting on a highway. In some parts of the country, where traffic is heavy, you really have to get up to speed quickly on a highway entrance ramp to avoid having an F-150, for instance, making intimate cooing noises near your rear bumper. So, try that and make sure you feel secure doing it.

TOM: Another factor is how many passengers you carry. Do you usually drive alone?

Or do you take your grandson's basketball team out for milkshakes after the game?

A heavier load calls for more power as well.

So, if you often carry passengers, invite a few along for the test-drive, and try the highway test again. If your heart is in your throat as you try to stay ahead of that semi that's coming up on you in the right lane, that'll be a signal that you need a little more oomph.

RAY: But if you're like most people, and usually drive alone or with one other passenger, and death-defying highway stunts aren't a regular part of your routine, almost any four-cylinder car will provide adequate power.

TOM: So, drive them both again and see which one you like better.

I don't think the amount of horsepower or torque should be the determining factor in this particular decision, Kathleen.

Garden party planned for Fort Benning moms, kids

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Fort Benning mothers of children 12 and younger and expecting moms are invited to the Columbus Botanical Gardens for a summer garden party from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. July 22.

The event, hosted by the gardens and Operation Homefront Georgia, will include refreshments, giveaways, kids' activities and more, all free of charge.

This party is a "thank you" from the community and local businesses to Fort Benning moms, said Nicole Sanchez, executive director of the gardens and a military mom herself.

"It's recognition for the role they play," she said. "I've heard Soldiers say everything they do is possible because of their support at home. That's what I hear from my husband, too."

Door prizes will include an all-terrain stroller, a TV, a car seat and a spa set.

"Everyone will walk away with something," said Kim Scofi, president of Operation Homefront Georgia. "We know how difficult it can be to be a military mom. We want them to know we're very proud of them."

Gifts will include a potted plant, a booster seat and at least one outfit per child.

"It's (like) a baby shower," Sanchez said. "But we won't make them play any silly games — we already promised that. They're going to have a good time."

There will be some group activities for the children and their moms. Children will learn about collecting bugs, how to grow their own food and outdoor safety with the Safe Kids robot.

Husbands are welcome, too, Scofi said, though they may be outnumbered.

The event will be helpful for moms new to the area, Sanchez said. They'll have an opportunity to network with other moms, and information about local and post resources for child care and safety will be provided.

The gardens are located at 3603 Weems Road, Columbus. Reserve a place by Thursday by calling 770-973-0014 or by sending an e-mail to georgia@operationhomefront.net.

"Grief is grief, I know that, and any parent who loses a child grieves. But our children walked into the face of death. They volunteered to serve knowing they might die in doing so. That's what we want this nation to remember"

Honor and Remember

Gold Star dad campaigns for new flag to honor fallen service members

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

She keeps a photo on the mantel, next to a tri-folded flag.

He sticks a ribbon to the back of the car and wears a dog tag on a chain around his neck.

They tuck coins away in a drawer — fat, shiny "challenge" coins presented to them at the funeral and later at a memorial service on post.

In so many ways, the moms and dads and spouses and children cling to the memories of loved ones killed in combat. Each and every memento is precious and personal.

But there's not a single, universal symbol of the grief and pride and faith shared by the countless members of the military's Gold Star family. One of them, George Lutz, the father of a Soldier killed in Iraq, has set out to right that wrong.

"With all the memorials out there, all the medals and the many ways people honor those who pay the ultimate price for our freedom, why is it we don't have something — one thing — we can all look to as a unified symbol by which we can honor and remember?" said Lutz, whose oldest son, 25-year-old Cpl. George "Tony" Lutz II, was killed by a sniper in Fallujah on Dec. 29, 2005, just six weeks into his first deployment to Iraq.

United Way donates 400 books to Sayers Library

"That's a lot of books; I think I'm just going to get one," said Angela Greene, 7, who witnessed the donation of more than 400 new and gently used books to Sayers Memorial Library Friday.

United Way of the Chattahoochee Valley, which organized the book drive, distributed more than 6,000 books throughout the tricommunity.

"Fort Benning is such a big part of our community," said Scott Ferguson, president of UWCV. "Maybe we're supporting some children whose parents are off protecting our freedoms. That's why we brought the books out to Fort Benning, because we value what they do."

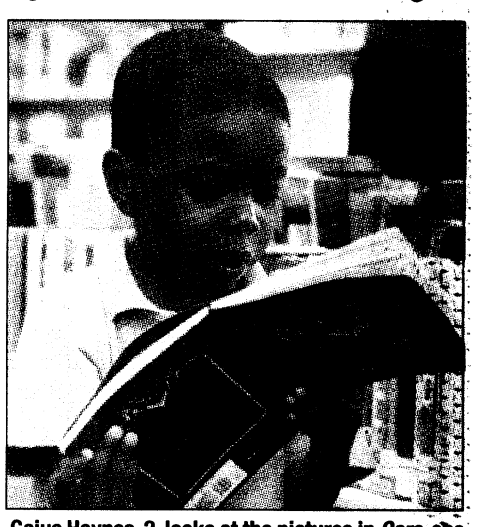
"What I like about reading is that it's really fun to learn about all the stuff in books … mostly animals, continents and the states," he said.

Most of the books will fill shelves in the children's department at Sayers. The less durable ones will become prizes for the summer reading program.



Gaius Haynes, 2, looks at the pictures in Cars, one of the 400 books donated to Sayers Library by United Way of the Chattahoochee Valley Friday.

Nancy Wahlstrom, technical services librarian at Sayers, said the popular, more current books they received will help update their collection.

"We have to keep the classics, but we really need those because that's what they like to read," she said, "so this is a great addition to our supply of books."

For more information about the new titles available, call the library at 706-545-7141.

Local seamstress offers free classes to military spouses

THE BAYONET

A professional seamstress will offer free sewing classes in July for military spouses.

"It's just one of the ways that I would like to be able to give back to the military community, because the military community gave so much to me when I was a military spouse," said Jennifer Herrington, an operations analyst on post who served with the Air Force and as a defense contractor in Iraq.

Classes will begin "as soon as the first wife calls me and says I want to learn how to sew," said Herrington, who can accommodate five to 10 people per class. She also offers one-on-one lessons. If enough interest is shown, she will also teach a course for teens.

Herrington, who started sewing at 5 in rural West Virginia, said the craft not only helps people save money but can also have a calming effect.

"It's therapeutic," she said. "There's just something about working with your hands and creating something out of nothing. You take a

Students donate 978 books to post hospital

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

Four Columbus State University students donated 978 children's books to Martin Army Community Hospital.

The Racing For Books Campaign was a project for their communications class. Carrie Blankenship, Susan Haycock, Crystal Avery and Cati Conley distributed donation boxes on post and off and went to businesses to collect books. Their goal: to collect at least 700 books.

"Our motto was 'go big or go home,'" Blankenship said. "The goal was to benefit the kids in the community and make a difference locally. All the hard work paid off when I saw those kids' smiling faces."

The group has broken the record for the largest donation of books to Martin Army Community Hospital, said Shiloh Hendrix, patient and family centered care program coordinator of Martin Army Community Hospital.

The books will be used in the volunteer reading program. Volunteers often read to young patients to get their mind off the doctor's visit.

There are plans at the CSU communications department to make the book drive an annual event at the hospital, Blankenship said.

DEDICATION

The Racing For Books project was dedicated to Sgt. Corey E. Spates, 21, who died Feb. 10 from injuries he received after a roadside bomb exploded in Diyala province, Iraq. Carrie Blankenship grew up with Spates in LaGrange, Ga.

Spates, a graduate of Troup County High School, joined the Army in May 2004 and was assigned to the 2nd Squadron, 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment, at Fort Hood, Texas.

Fireworks tips can help consumers prevent injuries

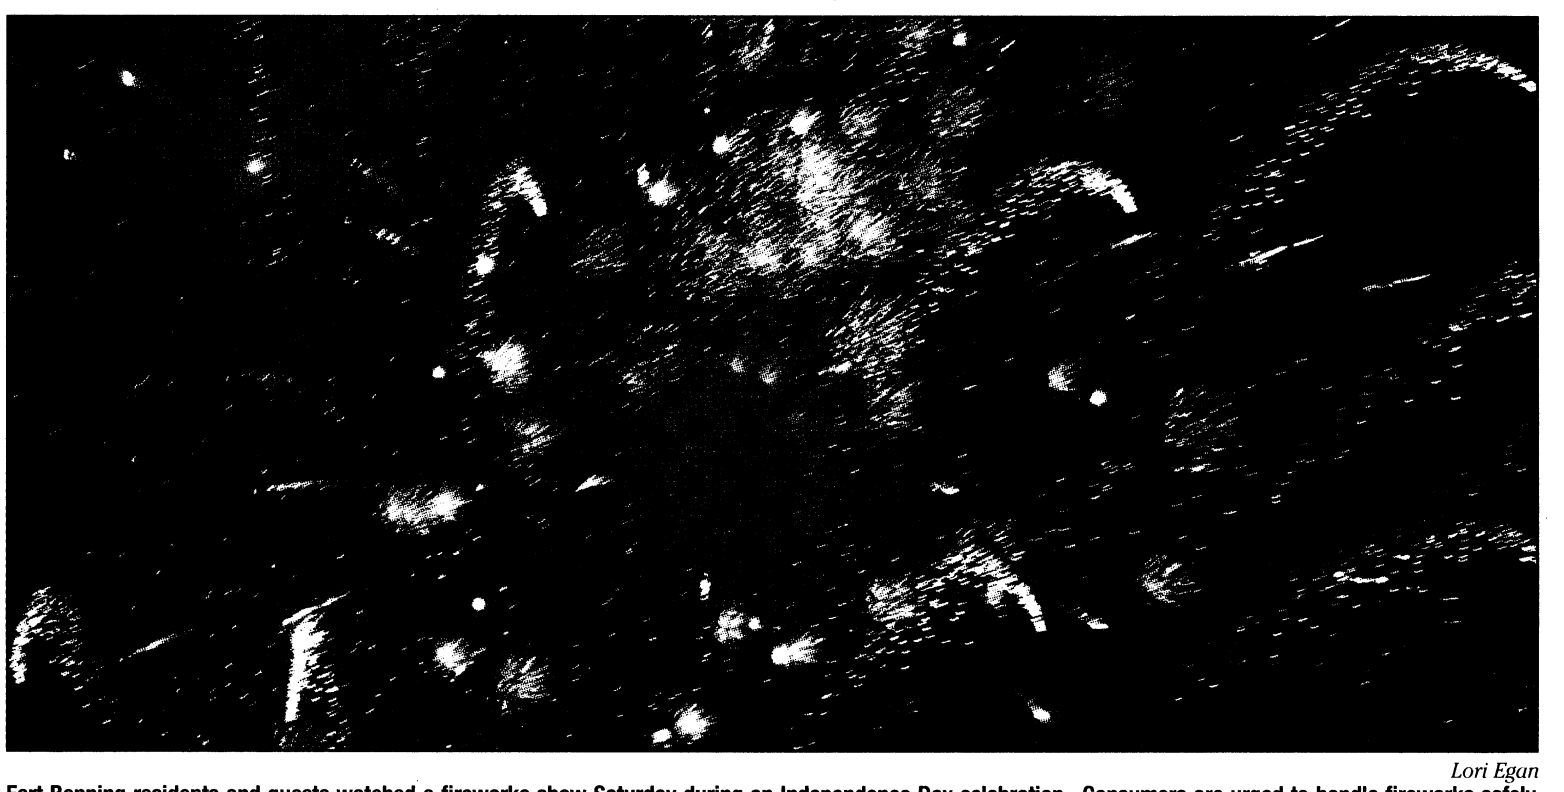
CHILDREN'S HEALTHCARE OF ATLANTA

Consumer fireworks cause serious preventable injuries in children, including bystanders. A study published in the Journal of Pediatrics estimated that more than 85,000 pediatric fireworks-related injuries were treated in U.S. emergency rooms from 1990-2003. The following are some of the major findings:

- 80 percent of the injured children were male with an average age of 11 years.
- One out of five bystanders were injured.
- Firecrackers caused 30 percent of injuries, sparklers and novelty devices caused 20 percent and aerial devices 17 percent.
- The most common injuries involved the eye (21 percent), the face (20 percent) and the hands (20 percent).
- Although most children were treated and released from hospital ERs, 5 percent required hospitalization.

To help consumers use fireworks more safely, Dr. Martin Belson of Children's Healthcare of Atlanta advises following the safety tips from the Consumer Product Safety Commission and Fireworks University :

No. 1 — Buy fireworks from reliable, licensed fireworks dealers who carry products that meet standards enforced by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Don't experiment with homemade fireworks.



Lori Egan

Fort Benning residents and guests watched a fireworks show Saturday during an Independence Day celebration. Consumers are urged to handle fireworks safely, because 85,000 fireworks-related injuries were reported from 1990-2003, according to a study published in the Journal of Pediatrics in July 2006.

No. 2 — Read directions, labels and warnings on each firework item to understand the product performance and hazards associated with it.

No. 3 — Do not allow young children to play with fireworks under any circumstances. Sparklers, considered by many the ideal "safe" firework for the young, burn at very high temperatures and easily ignite clothing.

No. 4 — Older children should only be permitted to use fireworks under close adult supervision.

No. 5— Always light fireworks on a hard, flat and level surface to insure the stability of the items. Grass is generally not suitable for any item intended to be used in an upright position.

No. 6 — Light fireworks outdoors in a clear area away from houses, dry leaves or grass and flammable materials.

No. 7 — Keep a bucket of water nearby for emergencies and for pouring on fireworks that don't go off.

No. 8 — Do not try to relight or handle malfunctioning fireworks. Soak them with water and throw them away.

No. 9 — Be sure other people are out of range before lighting fireworks.

No. 10 — Light only one firework item at a time.

unveiled on Memorial Day at the MacArthur Memorial in Norfolk, Va. The flag's design, a red and white field with a gold star and red flame, represents the honor due the nearly 2 million men and women who have died in service to this country since the American Revolution, Lutz said.

"Two things I've found to be most important to the families of these men and women," he said. "One, that their sacrifice was not in vain. And two, that their sons and daughters will not be forgotten. As long as the American flag waves freely, we know their sacrifices have not been made in vain. And now we have a flag that says they'll never be forgotten."

In the months following Tony's death, Lutz said, he discovered countless ways to remember Tony, a head-strong, fun-loving boy who became a devoted father and a proud Soldier. The walls of the Lutz's Chesapeake, Va., home are lined with photographs of Tony and his four siblings. Lutz and his wife Patty attended a memorial service at Fort Bragg, N.C., where their son was stationed when he was deployed. And he attended the services of other Soldiers slain in combat to offer comfort and support.

Along the way, Lutz said, he found himself collecting mementos of his son and his son's service to a nation he loved.

"Every time I went somewhere, I was given some kind of a gift, a token, like a coin or a shadow boxes, medals, that sort of thing," he said. "I became very conscious of how the military pays tribute to its fallen. And the more I clung to these things, the more I appreciated that military ideal. They're all about honor. I realized if I felt that way and I was going through this anguish, I wasn't alone. I know there are others who need to know that their Soldier will never be forgotten."

Deborah Tainsh is one of those others. She and her husband, retired Sgt. Maj. David Tainsh, lost their son, Sgt. Patrick Tainsh, in 2004. The Tainshes recently relocated from Midland, Ga., to a beach house in Florida. There they'll devote one room to the priceless mementos they collected after Patrick's death — the flag that draped his coffin, the Silver Star awarded posthumously, his Stetson, his spurs and his sword. Patrick was proud to serve with the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment, one of the Army's most historic units.

"We surround ourselves with the things that remind us of him, and not so much how he died but how he lived," Tainsh said. "Grief is grief, I know that, and any parent who loses a child grieves. But our children walked into the face of death. They volunteered to serve knowing they might die in doing so. That's what we want this nation to remember."

She has spent considerable time educating the public about Gold Star families, those who have lost a loved one in combat. It has often felt like a losing battle, she said — so few people know the meaning of that Gold Star flag hanging on her door. These days, she's happy to support an effort like Lutz's.

"We have to make people understand what that flag means — just like they know what the US flag or the POW/MIA flag means," she said. "That's the bottom line, we need the people of this nation to remember our children."

Since Lutz started his Honor and Remember campaign in April, he's encountered a number of naysayers, including a congressman who doubted the impact one man could have on society.

"He said, 'You're only one person,'" Lutz said. "That's not the kind of attitude that made this country great."

So Lutz forged on, like an Army of one. He began drumming up support with local veterans' groups and started an online petition in hopes of generating 2 million signatures — that's roughly the number of service members killed in combat in the last 233 years. He found a designer and had the flag trademarked just in time for the Memorial Day unveiling.

Now, as efforts continue to persuade the Department of Defense and Congress to adopt the flag as a national symbol, supporters continue to collect signatures at www.honorandremember.org. There the flag is available for purchase, as is or personalized with the name of a fallen hero.

"You know the POW flag was introduced in 1971. It took 18 years for it to be adopted," Lutz said.

"I know this won't happen overnight. But I don't think we should wait, either. We can fly the flag and get one into the hands of those who have lost a loved one in service. We can do that right now."

Classes: Offered free this month for military spouses

loved one's shirt or a pair of trousers, and all of a sudden you've transformed it into something you can carry — just that little bit of comfort you carry with you."

Herrington said sewing could be especially helpful during long deployments. Spouses can work on a project with their children, make gifts for family members of the deployed Soldier or create patriotic apparel and accessories.

During the classes, Herrington will cover basic projects like children's apparel and several military-themed items, such as quilts, Christmas stockings, tree skirts, pillows and bags. Topics covered will be tailored to participants' preferences and skill levels.

"Some of the spouses I've worked with have brought me uniforms, and we'll disassemble those and create a new piece," she said. "(That) brings such a sense of self-fulfillment. It hearkens back to a time when our spouses were at home sewing uniforms for Soldiers during the Revolutionary War, sewing uniforms in factories for Soldiers during the Civil War. It just speaks to the need to feel that you're doing your part."

The classes are not only for Army wives but for spouses of all service members — and that includes men, Herrington said.

"They can show their support by carrying a diaper bag that has a military theme to it," she said. "Why do you want to carry a pink or a green one when you can carry an Army cammo one?"

Owning a sewing machine is a plus but not a prerequisite, Herrington said. Participants will also learn hand sewing and embroidery stitching, how to choose and cut patterns, and what type of equipment and fabric to buy.

Herrington said she is passionate about the military because of her time on the ground with service members in Iraq.

"If you could see just one time the fresh face of an 18- or 19-year-old kid sitting in a chow hall on a holiday, and you know good and well they're missing home, it's just amazing to see their determination," she said.

"They sit there for a few minutes, kind of sad and quiet, and the next thing you know, they're going out and gearing up. They're putting on their black vest and their Kevlar. And their whole face changes from looking like Mom and Dad's little boy or little girl who used to sit at the dinner table to a young man or a young woman who's defending our nation."

Herrington said seeing their dedication and strength makes her proud. Reaching out to families here is her way of supporting the mission overseas.

"Sewing has been just a tremendous joy in my life, and now I can give other people the opportunity to share in that," she said. "I'm here to help."

To sign up for classes, call Herrington at 706-536-2398 or thecostumemistress@gmail.com. To see examples of her work, visit www.myspace.com/the_costume_mistress.

SERVICE CREDIT UNION ★★★★★ For People on the Move

NCUA

*Eligibility determined by credit score. Match+ applies to auto loan terms and restrictions that are consistent with Service Credit Union's (SCU) 60-72 month loan rates. Other loan terms do not apply. If SCU can not beat competitors' APR, we will credit $100 to a qualifying member's Service Credit Union account up to 30 days after Service Credit Union application, upon the applicant presenting a copy of their signed loan note & disclosure from the competitor. Dealer financing, non-financial loan rates and terms, and the institutions predetermined by the credit union are excluded from this promotion. Offer subject to change without notice. Rate shown is Annual Percentage Rate (APR), accurate as of 6/1/08, and subject to change without notice. The APR reflects a .35% reduction for direct deposit and automatic payment (example: 4.49 APR less .35% = 4.14%). Example: A $20,000 auto loan with a rate of 4.14% APR for 60 months: Monthly payment is approximately $369.60. Total finance charge is approximately $2175.72. Offer available on new, used, or current Service Credit Union Auto Loans qualify for additional funds of $2,500 or more.

April M. Phillips

ATLANTA — For most people, the summer means weeks of fun and travel. For the American Red Cross and thousands of hospital patients, however, this is a time of high anxiety. The summer traditionally means decreased blood donations, which result in a shortage of the blood types hospitals urgently need to treat trauma victims and other patients.

The Red Cross urges blood donors to make plans to donate at least once this summer to help prevent such shortages.

"Your blood is needed more than you think," said Randy Edwards, chief executive officer, American Red Cross Southern Blood Services Region. "Only about 38 percent of the population is eligible to give blood and only a fraction of those actually donate. When you make the decision to donate blood this summer, it could be the difference between life and death for area patients."

The blood supply typically experiences a drop in the summer. This drop occurs when schools and colleges close; people take vacations and extended holidays; and businesses hold smaller blood drives due to modified summer operations.

Because blood can be separated into three components — blood, platelets and plasma — one donation can benefit up to three individuals. It takes up to three days for blood to be processed and made available to hospitals, so it is important that a donation be made ahead of an emergency.

The American Red Cross Southern Blood Services Region, which supplies blood to more than 130 hospitals, needs 1,200 blood donors each weekday in order to meet the blood needs of area patients.

Blood donors must be at least 17 years old and weigh no less than 110 pounds. For more information, call 800-GIVE-LIFE or visit www.redcrossblood.org to make an appointment to donate blood.

AAFES offers young writers chance for prizes

DALLAS — School may be out for the summer, but the Army and Air Force Exchange Service has one more assignment for military dependents.

The "Back-To-School Essay Contest" will give students in the first through 12th grades the opportunity to submit an essay of 200 words or fewer on "What AAFES means to me and my family."

"Most military dependents have been shopping at AAFES for their entire lives," said chief marketing officer Richard Sheff. "As a result, we are anticipating some very good essays from these young students on what the benefit means both to them as well as to their families."

The essay contest, which runs through Aug. 31, will consist of four categories (first through third grade, fourth through sixth, seventh through ninth and 10th through 12th grades) with three winners from each category.

First place winners in each category will receive a computer, second place winners will be awarded $500 savings bonds and $200 savings bonds will be issued to third place winners. For more information, complete rules, including release forms and specific instructions on submitting essays, go to www.aafes.com and click the Patriot Family Connection link.

Q: What is a pet trust?

A: A pet trust is a testamentary trust, meaning it is created through a person's last will and testament, that sets aside money for the care of a pet or pets after the person's passing.

Pet trusts are not recognized in all states. If state law does not recognize a pet trust, then any language in someone's will establishing such a trust would probably be "precatory," meaning that it expresses a wish but does not create a legal duty or obligation.

A pet trust sets aside a specific sum of money for the benefit of a presently living pet or any similar pets that the person may have upon death. A trustee and a successor trustee should be named, and this individual will pay or apply so much of the interest and principal of the trust as may be sufficient to provide and care for the pets in the manner to which the pets were accustomed during the deceased's lifetime or to provide a suitable home for the pets elsewhere. The person making the will should discuss with the trustee the type of care to be provided for the pets, including issues such as when it may be best to put a pet to sleep to prevent its suffering.

To avoid conflict with the legal principle of "the rule against perpetuities," which puts a time limitation on certain provisions that may be contained in a person's will, a pet trust should terminate upon the death of all of the pets or at the end of 21 years from the date of the deceased's death. This may be an issue in some cases as certain types of pets, particularly birds, have a lengthy lifespan. The trust also needs to contain a provision to distribute any remaining funds in the trust after its termination.

Anyone who wants to set up a pet trust needs to speak with an attorney. Contact the Legal Assistance Division to schedule an appointment by calling 706-545-3281.

Separating God from government not easy

14TH COMBAT SUPPORT HOSPITAL
Chaplain (Capt.) Jean Gunn

There are a growing number of Christians who think believers shouldn't be involved in government and politics.

But in Romans 13: 1-7 the author notes that governing authorities are ordained by God, and therefore are very much a part of God's work.

The question is how do we separate God from our government?

Do we ban the Bible from the courts and Congress, and forbid its use when swearing in a witness or rendering the oath of office to the president of United States?

Should we cease to inscribe "In God We Trust" on our coins and paper currency?

Or what if we were to dismiss chaplains from their positions of federal, state, and local religious authority? Even though they are far from being God, they are nevertheless reminders of the presence of the "Holy."

What about the scripture posted above the L.A. city hall door: "Righteousness exalts a Nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Or the image of Moses carrying the tablets of God's law that faces the speaker of the House of Representatives?

Should we vanquish these religious relics from our halls of justice? How can we remove God from our government?

Despite the growing number of critics who feel that God and government shouldn't mix, the truth of the matter is, God will always be a part of every aspect of our human existence.

He ultimately governs and rules in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow can't fall to the ground without his notice, neither can we, as a nation, continue to rise without his help. Thank you God for your part in our nation's affairs.

Compromise, communication make a stronger marriage

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

The surgeon just told her something she didn't want to hear — "No, I'm sorry. There's nothing we can do. It's permanent."

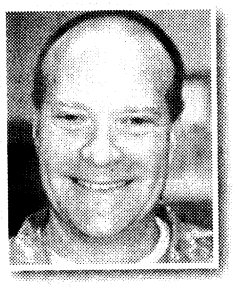
When the doctor removed a small tumor from the inside of her cheek, he accidentally clipped her facial nerve. She was a former teenage beauty queen. Now her lips were gnarled and her face was drawn and contorted.

The young Soldier looked down at his disfigured wife, cupped his hands around her cheeks and whispered, "I love you, and I'm not going anywhere."

What makes a love that strong? What makes real love?

Best-selling author and pastor of one of America's largest churches, Rick Warren, offers six characteristics to help you go the distance:

• Communication — This is a skill you must learn through practice. You've got to talk to each other. I read once in Newsweek that the average couple spends only four minutes a day talking to each other.



• Consideration — The Bible teaches we should show our love by being helpful to each other. Being considerate simply means paying attention to what your spouse says, showing common courtesy and treating each other with respect.

• Compromise — We're taught in the Bible that "love does not demand its own way" (1 Corinthians 13:5, LB).

The unloving thing to do is try to change your mate. Instead you should yield your rights and learn the art of negotiation and compromise.

• Courtship — If there was more courting in marriage, there'd be fewer marriages in court. You need to date your mate, making your relationship a priority — specifically developing things you like to do together.

• Commitment — I find it interesting that the media has finally discovered the value of commitment. Some headlines I've seen lately include Measuring our quality of life — happily married, Strong commitment brings satisfaction and Commitment — the key to marriage.

There were many times throughout our marriage when it might have been easy to bail out, but we agreed together that divorce was not an option. This forced us to change, to become flexible, to learn compromise and to grow out of our selfishness.

• Christ — Jesus gives you the power and the desire to develop the other five characteristics. He gives you love when you run out of love.

The greatest thing you can do for your spouse is to become like Christ and then begin to treat your spouse like Christ would.

Marriage and Divorce magazine discovered that one out of every three marriages ends in divorce, but when the couple is married in a church ceremony, and they attend church regularly, and they pray and read the Bible together, then the chances for divorce drop to one out of 1,105.

Practice the "Six Cs" so the fireworks you experience this Fourth of July will be a celebration of love and not an explosion of sparks and heartache in your relationship. Take heart and know that you can have a real love that will go the distance.

Want some help and encouragement to do that? Then call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 706-545-1769, Building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza.

If you are not currently attending a worship service, let me invite you to the CrossRoads Contemporary Service, a postwide service for everyone, at 1100 on Sundays at Follow Me Chapel or visit one of the other chapels on post. We have different services to meet a variety of worship styles right on Fort Benning.

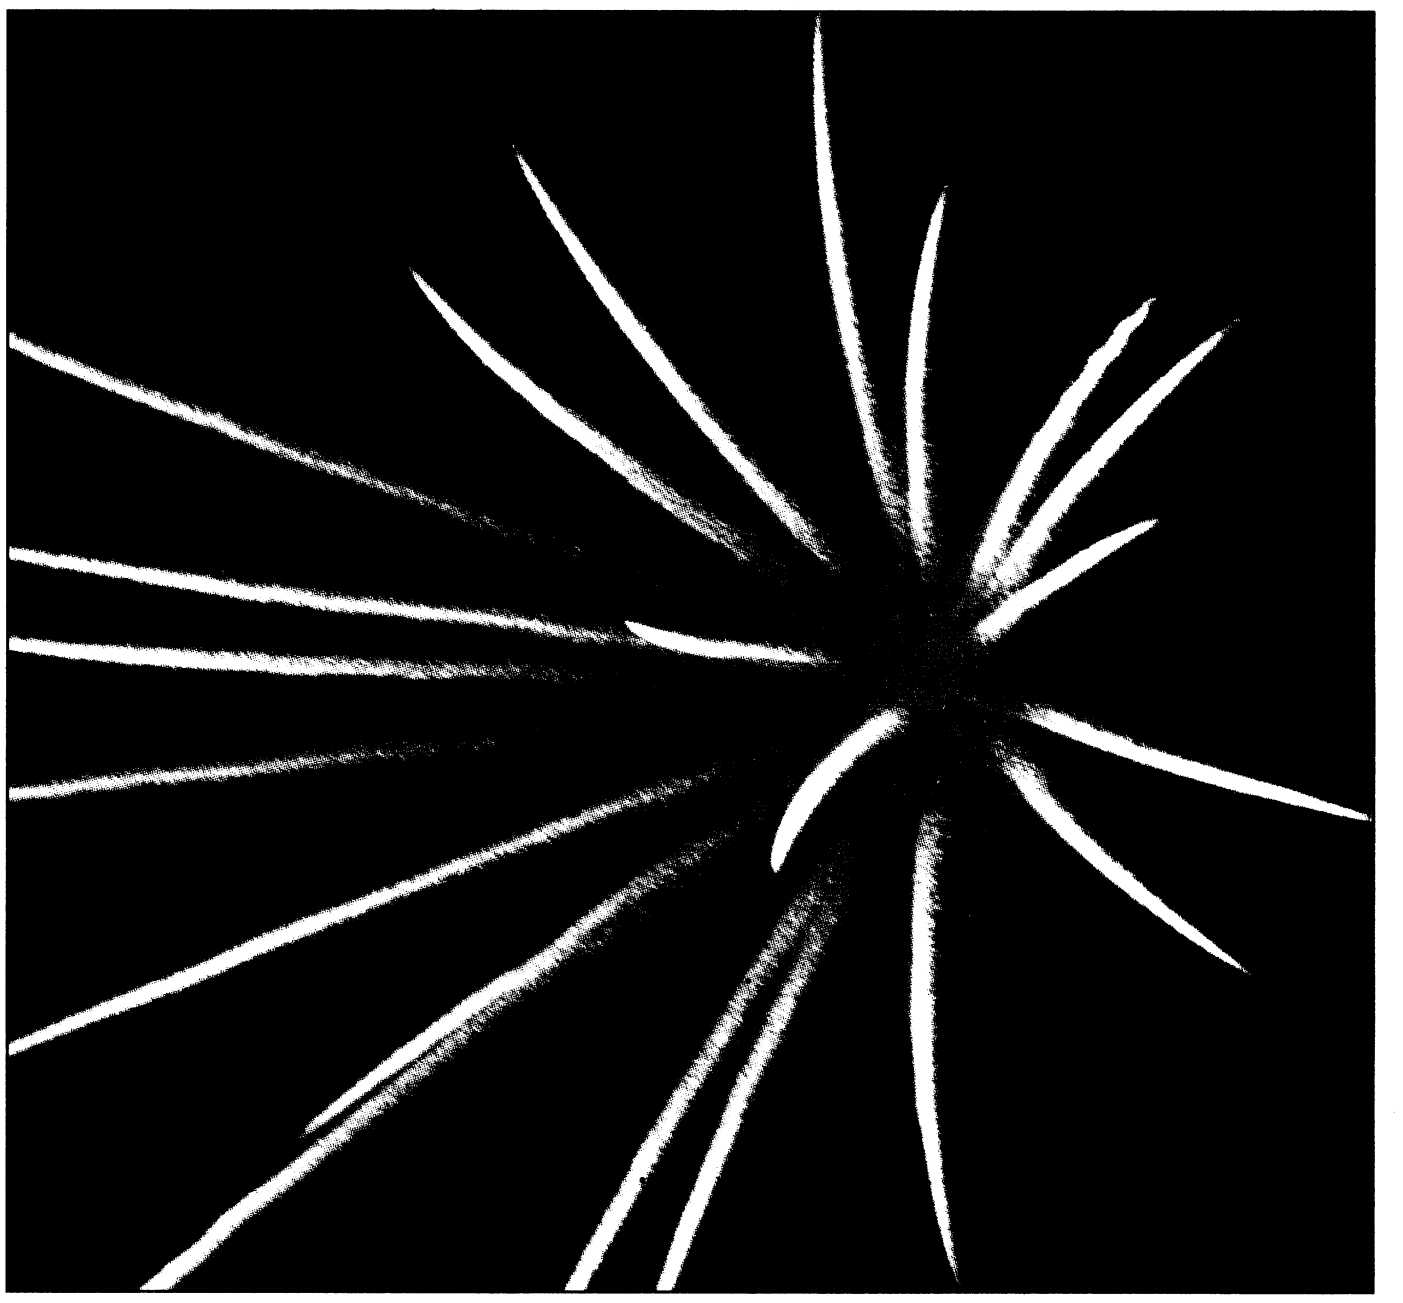
So many ways to celebrate Fourth

Plenty to do for the whole family — free! — this weekend, and they won't put a dent in the gas tank



Lori Egan

So much to do, and one long weekend to do it in. Take your pick from a variety of holiday events in the area. Enjoy, but enjoy responsibly, please. Slather on the sunscreen and drink lots of water. If you opt for something harder, be sure to designate a safe driver or call Safety Cab at 706-527-7248.

Thunder on the Hooch

The fun starts today at 1 p.m. and ends with a fireworks show at 9:15.

This free event, along the banks of the Chattahoochee River in Columbus and Phenix City, features food, rides, games, arts and crafts and entertainment of all kinds. Don't miss the watermelon eating contest at 5 p.m.

For more information, call 706-494-5400.

Surf & Sand Spectacular

Callaway Gardens will host a plethora of activities all day today, and they'll cap it off with a fireworks finale over Robin Lake at 9:30 p.m.

Between now and then, there will be circus performances, beach games, music and miniature golf. The kids will enjoy the Iceberg Island Floating Water Playground on the lake.

Tickets are $7.50 for children 6-12 and $15 for 13 and older. Kids 5 and younger get in free.

For more information, call 706-663-2281 or 800-225-5292.

Old Fashioned Fourth of July

From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today, enjoy an old fashioned July Fourth in downtown Pine Mountain. This event if free. Call 706-663-7721.

Providence Canyon

Providence Canyon State Park will host a Fourth of July celebration from 1-4 p.m. today. Guests can hike the canyon and create crafts. The event costs $1 per participant, and there is a $3 parking fee for entry into the park.

For more information, call 229-838-6202.

Westville

From 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. today, the historic Village of Westville, "Where it's always 1850," will host an old fashioned Independence Day celebration, including sack races, hoop rolls and climbing a greased pole. The Kiser House Restaurant will be open.

The entry fee is $10, but children in kindergarten through 12th grade get in for $4, and seniors, college students and those with military IDs get in for $8. There is no charge for preschoolers.

For more information, call 888-733-1850.

Warm Springs, FDR State Park

FDR's home away from home, Warm Springs, Ga., will host a celebration starting at 11 a.m. today. Activities will include a watermelon seed-spitting contest, a concert and a fireworks show at 9:30 p.m. at nearby Manchester Mill.

Saturday activities will include a Back to the '50s Dance from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Roosevelt State Park Amphitheater. The dance will feature a costume contest, limbo and trivia games. A $3 parking pass is required.

For more information, call 706-663-4858.

BOOK REVIEW

Take your pick: Many good military titles available this summer

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Don DeNivi

Interspersed among this summer's bumper crop of sound nonfiction military titles is a smart smattering of superb war tales. Refreshingly different in suspense and savagery, hard and vivid tactical details, to say nothing of solid, old-fashioned storytelling, each of the following five novels will make even the strongest reader whimper this summer.

In The God of War (St. Martin's Press, 384 pages, $25), Chris Stewart, the prolific novelist who wrote such acclaimed thrillers as Shattered Bone, The Fourth War and The Kill Box, provides us with yet another techno-thriller of contemporary interest and importance.

As a former fighter pilot assigned to fly the advanced SR-71 Blackbird and B-1 bomber, Stewart, having sat in the cockpit he so strikingly describes, brings a certain verve and expertise to his prose.

Full of sharp characterizations, The God of War begins with the unthinkable happening. In front of an international gathering in Paris during the unveiling of the Ares, the most powerful super jet ever designed, and named after the Greek god of war, is stolen by extremists determined to destroy America.

In steps Col. "Jesse" James, a decorated fighter pilot who is chief of the Ares test program, to save the nation. Facing a variety of obstacles, including jealousy and distrust from the president's inner circle, as well as a love affair with a beautiful woman whose allegiances are suspect, he single-handedly confronts a terrorist attack that appears too obvious to be credible.

The second volume and centerpiece of author Jeff Shaara's acclaimed trilogy focuses upon the involvement of the United States in World War II. The Steel Wave (Ballantine Books, 512 pages, $28) dramatizes all the major events surrounding the most famous aspect of the European war, the battle for Normandy after D-Day. By taking you into the minds of several of the key participants, namely Dwight Eisenhower, Erwin Rommel, Omar Bradley, George Patton, Sir Arthur Tedder, James Gavin, among others, including Sgt. Jesse Adams, the reader comes to "know" who made the history, seeing the events as they unfolded as each saw them, hearing their words and eavesdropping on their thoughts as the top players expressed them.

"My goal," author Shaara wrote, "was to write as believable a novel about June 6 as possible. The only way to achieve that was to put you, the reader, into the thick of things."

Thanks to Shaara, The New York Times bestselling author of The Rising Tide, To the Last Man and The Glorious Cause, we are privy to the personal feelings and account of those who planned and fought among The Steel Wave, as the Americans were called by the Germans during the Allied invasion.

Yet another near-perfect summer read is Carl Nelson's political-military thriller, Madam President and The Admiral (New Century Press, 270 pages, $17), the sequel to his award-winning novel Secret Players. Combining a touch of romance with east-meets-west suspense, the story begins with China shooting down a U.S. Navy aircraft during a routine surveillance flight over the Spratly Islands.

Located in the South China Seas and recently discovered to have an abundance of oil and natural gas deposits, the islands have the attention of numerous surrounding countries. China needs them to satisfy her oil shortages caused by a Russian takeover of the Chinese Pan-Asian pipeline. If China goes to war with Russia, the Chinese communists will use that as a reason to take control of the Indian Ocean oil supply lines.

Meanwhile, President Abigail Cass Steele enters the scene. The descendant of one of the most respected and established Michigan families, she is in her 60s with a gift for diplomacy and resolving difficult issues under pressure. In addition, she is still stunningly beautiful. But now she is faced with the toughest decision of her career. Does she send our troops into action? Beyond that, does she recall the man she loves to active duty, retired Admiral Blake Lawrence, to oversee the operation? Like the other Nelson novels, this one will keep you reading to the last sentence.

Co-authored by retired Vice Admiral William P. Mack and his son, William P. Mack, Jr., South To Java (Naval Institute Press, 460 pages, $20) focuses upon the courageous crew of the USS O'Leary, an obsolete U.S. Navy four-stack destroyer steaming toward a deadly battle in the Java Sea as the outbreak of World War II in the Pacific. As the allies attempt to defend the Philippines and Dutch East Indies against superior Japanese forces, the O'Leary officers and crew with little more than determination are facing one of the most highly trained navies in world history.

Bill Mack (1915-2003) was a gunnery officer on board the destroyer USS John D. Ford during the Java campaign, and later served as vice admiral and commander of the Seventh Fleet. With his naval expertise, to say nothing of his personal recollections, and coupled with son Bill's gift for narrative flow, South to Java offers a truly riveting story that historically-minded servicemen and women will appreciate.

Killing Rommel (Doubleday, 395 pages, $25) extends author Steven Pressfield's extraordinary talents as a master storyteller beyond his bestselling novels of ancient warfare, Gates of Fire, The Tides of War, The Virtues of War and The Afghan Campaign to even greater heights.

Narrated from the perspective of a young British lieutenant in the legendary Long Range Desert Group, which operated in the hot, barren deserts of North Africa, Killing Rommel is one of Churchill's top goals in 1941-1942. If accomplished, Hitler's powerful Afrika's Korps, without its inspiring Desert Fox, will soon wither away.

"Send a small, highly mobile, and heavily armed force behind German lines to strike the blow that will stop the German advance to Cairo and the Suez," Churchill orders.

What follows is Pressfield's combination of painstaking accurate details about the flair, agility and daring of the LRDG written in remarkably engrossing prose.

Add his ability to capture the camaraderie of these thirsty, dusty fighters to the tactics, weaponry and specialized skills needed under extreme desert conditions and you have one of the three best World War II novels of the recent decade.

Editor's note: Don DeNevi is a freelance book reviewer who has authored numerous books, including five World War II nonficiton titles.

HANCOCK

There are heroes ... there are superheroes ... and then there's Hancock (Will Smith). With great power comes great responsibility — everyone knows that — everyone, that is, but Hancock. Edgy, conflicted, sarcastic, and misunderstood, Hancock's well-intentioned heroics might get the job done and save countless lives, but always seem to leave jaw-dropping damage in their wake. The public has finally had enough, but Hancock isn't the kind of man who cares what other people think, until the day that he saves the life of PR executive Ray Embrey (Jason Bateman), and the sardonic superhero begins to realize that he may have a vulnerable side after all. Facing that will be Hancock's greatest challenge yet, and a task that may prove impossible as Ray's wife, Mary (Charlize Theron), insists that he's a lost cause.

Hancock is rated PG-13 for sequences of sci-fi action, violence and language.

Hancock (Will Smith) is an edgy, conflicted, sarcastic and misunderstood superhero, whose well-intentioned heroics might get the job done and save countless lives, but always seem to leave jaw-dropping damage in their wake. Hancock opens Saturday.

KITT KITTREDGE: AN AMERICAN GIRL

Kitt Kittredge: An American Girl is rated G.

ALSO PLAYING

WALL-E

After hundreds of lonely years of doing what he was built for, Wall-E (short for Waste Allocation Load Lifter Earth-Class) discovers a new purpose in life (besides collecting knick-knacks) when he meets a sleek search robot named Eve who realizes that Wall-E has stumbled upon the key to the planet's future. She races back to space to report her findings to the humans who have been awaiting word that it is safe to return home.

Wall-E is rated G.

WANTED

Wes (James McAvoy) is a 25-year-old disaffected, cube-dwelling drone and disengaged slacker. His boss chews him out hourly, his girlfriend ignores him and his life plods on interminably. There is little for Wes to do but while away the days and die in his slow, clock-punching rut — until he meets a woman named Fox (Angelina Jolie). Morgan Freeman is Sloan.

Wanted is rated R for bloody violence throughout, pervasive language and sexuality.

GET SMART

Maxwell Smart (Steve Carell) is on a mission to thwart the latest plot for world domination by the evil crime syndicate known as KAOS. When the headquarters of U.S. spy agency Control is attacked and the identities of its agents compromised, the Chief (Alan Arkin) has no choice but to promote his ever-eager analyst Maxwell Smart, who has always dreamed of working in the field alongside stalwart superstar Agent 23 (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson). Smart is partnered instead with the only other agent whose identity has not been compromised: the lovely-but-lethal veteran Agent 99 (Anne Hathaway).

THE LOVE GURU

Pitka (Mike Myers) is an American who was left at the gates of an ashram in India as a child and raised by gurus. He moves back to the U.S. to seek fame and fortune in the world of self-help and spirituality. His unorthodox methods are tested when he must settle a rift between Toronto Maple Leafs star hockey player Darren Roanoke (Romany Malco) and his estranged wife.

After the split, Roanoke's wife starts dating L.A. Kings star Jacques Grande (Justin Timberlake) out of revenge, sending her husband into a major professional skid — to the horror of the teams' owner Jane Bullard (Jessica Alba) and Coach Cherkov (Verne Troyer).

The Love Guru is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content, language, comic violence and drug references.

THE INCREDIBLE HULK

Scientist Bruce Banner (Edward Norton) hunts for a cure to the gamma radiation that poisoned his cells and unleashes the rage within him. Living in the shadows, cut off from the life he knew and the woman he loves, Banner struggles to avoid the pursuit of his nemesis, General Thaddeus "Thunderbolt" Ross (William Hurt). As all three tangle with the secrets of the Hulk's creation, they are confronted with a new adversary known as The Abomination, whose strength even exceeds the Hulk's.

THE HAPPENING

A family is on the run from an inexplicable and unstoppable event that threatens not only humankind, but the most basic human instinct of them all, survival. Mike Wahlberg stars as Eliot Moore.

The Happening is rated R for violent and disturbing images.

KUNG FU PANDA

When threatened by a gang of snow leopards, the jungle animals call upon an inept panda (Jack Black) to become a kung fu master and save the Valley of Peace.

The animated movie also stars Dustin Hoffman, Jackie Chan, Ian McShane, Lucy Liu, Angelina Jolie, David Cross and Seth Rogen.

SEX AND THE CITY

Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker), Samantha (Kim Cattrall), Charlotte (Kristin Davis) and Miranda (Cynthia Nixon) continue their adventures as they live their lives in Manhattan four years after the series ended.

Sex and the City is rated R for sexual content, nudity and language.

YOU DON'T MESS WITH THE ZOHAN

Zohan (Adam Sandler), an Israeli commando, fakes his own death in order to pursue his dream— becoming a hairstylist in New York. He romances his clients by giving them "special services" in the back room. However, he is eventually recognized and risks losing his newfound life and career.

This film is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content, language and nudity.

THE STRANGERS

Three mysterious strangers terrorize a young couple (Liv Tyler and Scott Speedman) in a remote house after they return from a wedding.

The Strangers is rated R for violence, terror and language.

INDIANA JONES AND THE KINGDOM OF THE CRYSTAL SKULL

THE CHRONICLES OF NARNIA: PRINCE CASPIAN

One year later, the kings and queens of Narnia find themselves back in Narnia, only to discover that more than 1,300 years have passed in Narnian time. During their absence, Narnia has been conquered by the Telmarines and is now under the control of the evil King Miraz (Sergio Castellitto). The four children soon meet Narnia's rightful heir to the throne, Prince Caspian (Ben Barnes), who has been forced into hiding as his uncle Miraz plots to kill him. With the help of a mouse, a badger and a Black Dwarf, the Narnians embark to find Aslan, rescue Narnia and restore the land.

I GAVE BLOOD AGAIN!

Congratulations, you did it!
Now please, do it again.

Every two seconds someone needs blood. The problem is that our donated blood supply has dwindled. So even if you, or anyone, donated blood this year, we're asking you to please give again. If you're an eligible donor, call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE to schedule your next appointment. www.redcross.org

Pick up 2008 edition at Infantry Hall

The 2008 Fort Benning Post Guide will be available for distribution next week.

All units and directorates are encouraged to call the Public Affairs Office to reserve their copies.

The post guide is a free publication published for the Fort Benning community. More than 4,000 copies will be available at the commissary within the next few days, and an online version will be posted in the next few weeks on the Public Affairs page at www.benning.army.mil.

In addition to an on-post telephone directory, the guide also includes unit histories and fold-out maps.

For more information or to arrange for post guide pick-up, call the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office at 706-545-3512 or 706-545-2237.

For the first time in nearly a decade, Fort Benning is Without a drought

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Let common sense and conservation rule the day.

Post officials announced earlier this week that Fort Benning is no longer under the watering restrictions the post has seen for nearly a decade. But residents are encouraged to use "smart watering practices."

"We're asking them to use common sense, particularly when it comes to watering their lawns," said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's deputy garrison commander. "We have plenty of water, but we certainly want to use it wisely."

"Smart watering" means adopting practices recommended by state conservationists and lawn care professionals:

• Over-watering is wasteful and harmful to the grass. A brief, thorough soaking, two to three times a week, promotes deep root growth, which extends the life and vitality of grass. Watering daily is counterproductive.

• Water during early morning hours and late in the evening to reduce evaporation and maximize absorption. Watering during the heat of the day will actually do more harm than good.

• Don't water on a windy day, when water tends to mist or drift away.

"Conservation should always be our policy," Walls said. "We're pleased to lift the restrictions we've seen for so many years, but we always want to use common sense and smart practices."

Confidence booster

Rachel L. Watkins

Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Training Regiment, wait to climb the ladder at Eagle Tower July 3. This was one of many obstacles the Soldiers completed. "This course is about helping them overcome fear and obstacles," said Capt. Demetrius McClellan, company commander. "They'll use the confidence they gain here in other situations." For more on Eagle Tower, see A9.

Looking for a hero

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Wanted: One Soldier, probably a medic, with two small children and a wife. Goes by the name of Derrick. Or maybe Eric. Looks a lot like Kojak.

Robert Lessingwell was in no position to take notes last week when he met that young Soldier from Fort Benning. There's an awful lot the 65-year-old can't recall about those moments just after his heart gave out and he fell to the ground on the banks of Lake Harding at Bartlett's Ferry in Alabama.

But this much he knows for sure — it was a Fort Benning Soldier who saved his life. He'd like to say thanks.

Lessingwell was fishing with his wife and son July 2, when he started to feel pains in his chest and side. He took a seat on top of the cooler, then keeled right over on the grass and started to choke.

Jodi Peterson wasn't there that day, but she's heard the story enough to know what happened next. Her brother and her stepmother cried for help, and a Soldier, who had been fishing nearby with his wife and kids, came running.

He cleared her father's airway and helped him swallow a nitroglycerine tablet. The first one came back up, but the second stayed down.

The Soldier soothed her father, assured him he'd be just fine and kept him stable till the ambulance arrived, Peterson said.

He said his name was Derrick or Eric or something like that. He was fresh back from Iraq. Or maybe Kuwait. And he was a medic.

"It was chaos, and my dad doesn't remember everything clearly. But he did say he was bald as Kojak," Peterson said Tuesday, when she called The Bayonet looking for help in her search for the man who saved her father's life.

"We just want to say thank you," she said. "We believe that if it wasn't for him, my dad would've died before the ambulance got there. Dad wants to thank him. My brother and I want to thank him. So do the grandkids."

Lessingwell is still hospitalized in Opelika, Ala. Doctors have cleared some blockage from his heart, but he's not out of the woods yet, Peterson said. It would "do him good" to meet that Soldier.

If you're the man he's looking for, please call Peterson at 706-593-3765.

Watch where you step
In Georgia, it's 'snake season' year-round

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

There are 40 species of snakes found in Georgia. Fortunately, only six are venomous. It was benign snakes, relatively speaking, that recently bit two people on post.

Post conservation officials warn residents to avoid areas that typically appeal to snakes. Stay away from tall grass, thickets, rocks or fallen tree branches.

During the summer, snakes are particularly active in the cool of the evening and after dark. During the worst of the heat, they seek cooler climates under ground, under logs or under rocks. But rain may drive them out of low-lying areas in search of dry ground.

The opposite is also true. Snakes may curl up on a rock or pavement to sun themselves.

Mark Thornton, a biologist with the Conservation Branch, said snakes are active in Georgia all year, but more sightings are reported in warmer weather because humans are more active outdoors, and they venture into areas inhabited by snakes more often.

Thornton urged residents to avoid areas where visibility is limited, where the ground is covered by brush or dead leaves. Be careful doing yard work. And when not in use, remove kiddie pools or inflatables that might create an inviting spot for snakes.

For those who enjoy hiking or climbing, Thornton recommended boots, gloves and pants made from leather or another impenetrable material. And use a walking stick to clear debris from your path — don't use your hands.

Should you encounter a snake, give it a wide berth, Thornton said. If bitten, seek medical treatment immediately.

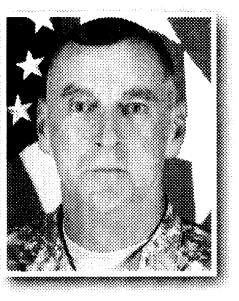
Transformation to MCOE includes Infantry Hall renovation

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

As many of you know by now, we have entered a new era in the history of Fort Benning as we continue our transformation from the Home of the Infantry to the Maneuver Center of Excellence (MCOE). Many characteristics of Fort Benning will change during this transition, right down to where some of us will be working. One of the major projects planned as part of the MCOE is the renovation of our headquarters building — Building 4 — also known as Infantry Hall.



Infantry Hall was constructed in 1964 and when it was first occupied, it was the first time in the history of the Infantry that all command and control elements were under one roof. Aspects of training, doctrine, testing, tactics, operations, and command were in one location, a key factor in the success of integrating all these elements. Infantry Hall was a one-stop shop.

At 525,000 square feet, it represented a $9.8 million investment in 1964. The renovation and modernization of Infantry Hall for the future has been approved for $138 million, which will include five temporary swing-space buildings and upgrades to the building's infrastructure. This project is considered one of the largest projects ever funded with Sustainment, Restoration and Modernization (SRM) dollars.

Beginning in early 2009, jackhammers and construction workers will replace books and instructors as contractors begin to dismantle parts of Infantry Hall. This construction project will take approximately three and a half years to complete and it will be accomplished in two phases.

Phase one will consist primarily of the building's tower portion and some adjacent areas of the ground-floor wings. During this time the east and west classrooms will continue to be used for training. When phase one is complete (in approximately 21 months) all administrative personnel will return to their offices. After the administrative personnel, to include the Armor School command, settles in, phase two of construction will begin.

Phase two will require our classroom operations to move to modular buildings — commissioned for phase one — in order to complete the renovations of the classroom wings and Marshall Auditorium. This phase is scheduled to be completed in the spring of 2012 — a construction time of approximately 18 months.

The engineering modernization effort, energy-efficient building systems, Antiterrorism/Force-protection requirements, and handicap accessibility considerations are all incorporated in the new proposed design of the facility.

The final renovated building is required to meet the silver rating sustainable criteria for Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED).

The interior design of the new MCOE headquarters includes state-of-the-art central hubs for restrooms, mechanical rooms, electrical rooms, telecommunications rooms, and copy and break rooms. Special and unique space requirements were included in the design of classrooms, conference rooms, Video Tele-Conference rooms and team rooms as identified by their users.

The plans are complete, and we expect to award the contract for this work later this year. Once the contract is awarded, the construction contractor should have the pre-engineered buildings assembled before year's end. These will be the buildings that will become the temporary home — or swing space — for G3. The remaining swing space should be completed by mid-February 2009, which will allow the command group to move from Infantry Hall to Building 35, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. At that point, the contractor will take possession of Building 4 and the renovation will begin.

Once the building's transformation is complete, Infantry Hall's façade will be new architecture with red brick, metal and glass areas — much like that of a modern day academic administration building or hall of higher learning. In conjunction with this image change our Infantry School and Armor School will combine within the walls of Building 4 to form the Army Maneuver Center of Excellence. The facility's new design will modernize both the exterior and interior elements to support the current and future missions of these Army command elements and the educational programs they serve.

This is just one of the many projects in the works for the Maneuver Center of Excellence transformation. It is indeed exciting to be at Fort Benning, but with all the changes, there is also bound to be some frustration. Please remain patient and know that we are all working together to make Fort Benning better than it has ever been — the best place to live, work and play in the United States Army.

Follow me.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES

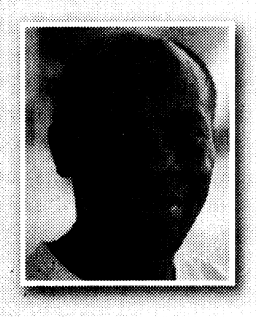
Sure, gas prices are soaring, and so is the temperature, but on the bright side ...

I'd say the support we're getting. For the most part, everywhere I go, people say "thank you" and "we're praying for you." Just the way everyone has come together — businesses, individuals, everyone. It helps when you get to hear that, when you come home and hear "we're behind you."

— Spc. John Burayi, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

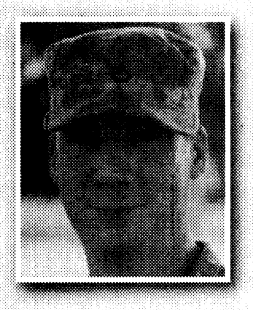
We live in the land of milk and honey. We have pretty much any right we want. I can go to Wal-Mart or the PX and buy my food. I don't have to depend on a government to provide food for me.

— Retired Chief Warrant Officer Tammy Right



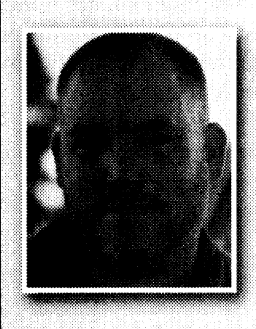
In America, the majority of people are courteous. If my car breaks down, I can always find someone who will stop and help me. When I went to school, we weren't integrated. Now, it's different. Everyone gets along better. They understand people's rights. I think that's a blessing.

— Retired 1st Sgt. Clinton Graves



It's beautiful scenery here. I bring my son to Russ Pond and the playgrounds. He loves it. There's also a lot of unity between the people, especially after 9/11. You can't have people fighting inside the country. You have to have the fight outside the country.

— Pfc. Steven Schaffer, 2nd Battalion 29th Infantry Regiment



I think the lifestyle down here is pretty good. More people are doing good than bad. There are a lot of people with good morals — morals based on religious values and passed down from generation to generation — and that gets them through tough times.

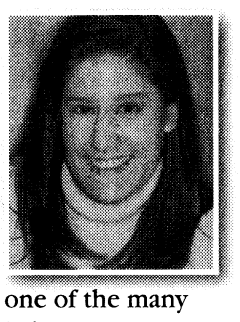
Going green really isn't such a hassle

FORT BENNING PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Michelle L. Gordon

"Can you put my items in these please?" I asked as I handed two bright red bags to the cashier. She kindly obliged and moments later, with my daughter in my arms and my bags slung over my shoulder, I headed out to my car. Too easy. Convenience is just one of the many reasons I use reusable bags.



I jumped on the reusable bag bandwagon last month. I always liked the idea, but I didn't want the hassle. I'm already carrying a purse, a 1-year-old and a shopping cart cover to protect the child from whatever diseases live on said shopping cart. The last thing I needed was one more item to lug into the store.

Then it occurred to me: I'm going through the "hassle" of the cart cover and going through the "hassle" of sanitizing everything she comes into contact with, so what's one more "hassle" if it means my daughter will enjoy a clean environment when she grows up?

I bought two small bags for $.99 each and a larger one for $1.49. The small bags hold the equivalent of about four standard, plastic bags and the larger holds about twice that, depending on what you buy and how you organize.

Plastic bags are inconvenient to store. I didn't want them lying around my car all the time. Reusables fold and zip or snap into a small, manageable size. And they're cute — always a plus for me.

Reusable shopping bags aren't a new concept, but they are growing in availability and popularity. Several stores, such as Publix and Target, kicked off the new year by launching their line of eco-friendly bags in January, and over the last several months more and more stores have followed suit. In fact they're even available at the Fort Benning Commissary, where the store manager says he can't keep them in stock they're so popular.

I hope this new trend is a lifestyle change rather than a fleeting fad, because we really need to reduce overall consumption of plastic shopping bags.

Each year, nearly a trillion bags are used worldwide at a rate of a million bags per minute. They're filling up our landfills and polluting our environment, and even though you throw them away, they don't just disappear.

In fact, the average plastic bag has a lifespan of 1,000 years. So just think, the 12 bags you used for 15 minutes, as you moved your groceries from the commissary to your house, will remain on our planet after you, your children and even your children's children are long gone.

Plastic doesn't decompose. Sure, you can recycle or reuse them, but very few people actually do.

Paper bags are another option, but paper is made from trees and it isn't necessary to destroy our forests when we have a viable alternative — reusable bags.

Changing the way you shop isn't difficult, and it doesn't require much effort. You don't have to use a particular bag at a particular store. Feel free to interchange. I use mine everywhere, even the mall.

I feel like I'm being a better parent and a better citizen because I am reducing my impact on the planet. When I first brought my bags home, my husband said I was turning into a hippie. Well if protecting the environment makes me a hippie then I say pass me the tie dye.

Letter to the editor

Thanks to MACH

This is a thank you to the staff of the Emergency Room and Intensive Care Unit at Martin Army Community Hospital. My mom, Josephine Collazo, called me June 22 in terrible pain and begged me to take her to the ER. I live in Stewart County, and she lives alone just off Fort Benning Road. I called 911, and an ambulance arrived at her residence by the time I pulled in. The driver was prepared to take my mother to a local hospital, but I was adamant that he take her to Martin Army.

Dr. Joe Kaplan and his staff found an intestinal blockage and recommended emergency surgery. Dr. Erin Switzer was called in on her day off to operate. She made my sister and me feel at ease while answering every question we had in language we could understand.

My mother is still at Martin Army. We are very grateful for the care she is receiving and the support from the hospital staff. I am extremely grateful for the family support program run by Shiloh Hendrix that allows my sister and me to visit any time we desire. This comforts my mother. We feel she could not have better care anywhere.

It takes a huge effort behind the scenes to make Martin Army a success, and everyone on staff deserves recognition. I can only offer my personal thanks to those we came in contact with: Maj. Erin Switzer, general surgeon, Capt. Joe Kaplan, ER doctor, Trina Davis, clerk, and RNs Barbara Oliver, Thuy Grant, Capt. Vernice Favor Williams, 2nd Lt. Cynthia Stafford, Linda Brannan, Laverne Walker, Chris Angeles and Brent Garrett, CRNA.

Also thanks to Shiloh Hendrix, Family Care, and all the others —, X-ray technicians, food service, laundry, maintenance, etc. who made my mother's stay at Martin Army a great experience for her, my sister and me.

— Yamill J. Collazo and Alma J. Chapman Collazo

Columbus honors Fort Benning Soldiers

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Spc. Ben Hutto

The city of Columbus honored Soldiers stationed at Fort Benning by proclaiming the month of July "Returning Heroes of Fort Benning Month" during the city council's monthly meeting Tuesday at the Government Center.

Soldiers from various units on Fort Benning were present as the proclamation was read.

Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., the commander of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, accepted a copy of the document and thanked the community of Columbus for its support.

"We are all so proud to be a part of the Columbus and Fort Benning community," Grigsby said.

"I am not from this area, but have spent a good part of my life here and have seen how much this place has improved over the years.

"The support you give our Soldiers and their families is amazing."

Mayor Jim Wetherington said Columbus is very proud of its relationship with the Soldiers of Fort Benning.

"You and your Soldiers mean so much to us," he said to Grigsby. "We are proud of how you and the Soldiers of Fort Benning have represented us all over the world in defense of our great country.

"We are so grateful for the sacrifice that you make for us in this country which we call the United States of America.

"We just want to thank you for everything and let you know how much we love our Soldiers," he said.

After the proclamation was read, the Soldiers were given a standing ovation and congratulated by each member of the city council.

New commander takes charge of Ranger Training Brigade

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Two Soldiers, who were in the same ROTC program 25 years ago, have crossed paths again.

Col. Douglas L. Flohr took command of the Ranger Training Brigade from Col. Gregory L. Hager Thursday at the Ranger Memorial.

Flohr

Hager

Flohr and Hager were both commissioned at West Virginia University; Hager graduated in 1984, and Flohr graduated in 1985.

It was during his years at West Virginia University when Flohr said he decided to join the Army.

Hager grew up surrounded by relatives who served in the Army, including his father, who is a retired Army Reserve colonel, and he made the decision to join the Army after high school, he said.

The two have a few other things in common. Both grew up in West Virginia, although Hager was born in Pennsylvania, and both did stints at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, and attended the U.S. Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. Both also have children planning or beginning Army careers.

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, U.S. Army Infantry Center commanding general, said he knows Flohr will uphold the honor and tradition of the Ranger Tab.

Flohr arrives with several prior assignments at Fort Benning. He was a battalion and brigade operations officer with the Ranger Training Brigade and the plans and liaison officer with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

He also commanded the 5th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp Frank D. Merrill, Dahlonega, Ga.

Flohr said he was honored to take command from Hager, who he called the most professional officer he knows.

Hager will become chief of staff of the Security and Intelligence Directorate, U.S. Southern Command in Miami, Fla.

Hager said it was an understatement to say it was his honor to serve in the best unit, on the greatest post and in the greatest community with the greatest Rangers and reconnaissance leaders there are.

Wojdakowski said Hager made important changes to the Ranger programs of instruction.

During the Ranger Assessment Phase, Hager reduced the time spent conducting assessment tasks, such as the Ranger physical fitness test, road march and land navigation test, allowing additional time for evaluated patrols. The result was an increased Ranger patrolling success rate.

Also during Hager's two years as Brigade commander, 4th Ranger Training Battalion implemented training 13 overlapping courses of the Reconnaissance and Surveillance Course in the recently built RSLC compound in Harmony Church.

Hager said, with great support from Fort Benning, numerous infrastructure improvements were made to Camp Rogers, Camp Darby, Camp Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and Camp Rudder in Florida.

Before taking command of RTB in 2006, Hager deployed to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, for two years in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, where he was assigned as director of operations and chief of staff, JTF-Guantanamo, which was responsible for detention and interrogation operations in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

Hager had a previous tour at Fort Benning, commanding 4th Ranger Training Battalion from 2001 to 2003.

New policy aims to help prevent loss of leave

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Donna Miles

WASHINGTON — Service members expecting to lose annual leave on Sept. 30 due to caps on carryover leave will be the first to benefit from a new policy that allows them to keep more annual leave, earn or hold on to certain special leave categories, and in some cases, sell back accrued leave.

The new military leave policy, part of the fiscal 2008 National Defense Authorization Act, allows troops to carry over 75 days rather than the previous 60 days into the next fiscal year, Sam Retherford, the Pentagon's deputy director of officer personnel management, told American Forces Press Service.

The new policy, in place until Dec. 31, 2010, is expected to reduce the amount of lost leave caused by the current high operating tempo.

Quality-of-life surveys conducted over the past five years show that about 13 percent of the force lost up to 20 days' leave each year, Retherford said.

Senior NCOs and officers who have accrued more leave were the most likely to be affected.

The Defense Department had been proposing policies to fix the situation, and welcomes Congress' support for measures that raise the leave carryover ceiling, increase the amount of "special accrued leave" earned in a contingency zone operation, and provides another opportunity for troops to sell back used leave, Retherford said.

The new policy also extends the period service members deployed to a combat zone or supporting a contingency operation have to use their accrued leave.

Those who served in a combat zone now have up to four years to reduce their leave from the maximum 120 days to the 75-day cap provided for under the new provision.

Those supporting contingency operations can take up to three years to get their leave down to the new cap.

The new policy also allows enlisted members to sell back up to 30 days of special accrued leave — leave earned in a combat zone or designated contingency operation — they would otherwise have lost beyond the 120-day limit, Retherford said.

Leave accrued in a combat zone is more valuable than regular leave, because it is not taxed.

Enlisted troops can sell back leave when they re-enlist or when they leave the military with an honorable discharge.

Troops can sell back only 60 days of leave over the span of their career, he said.

The new policy also extends the special rest and recuperation absence from 15 to 20 days for troops completing an overseas duty tour extension longer than 12 months and electing government-paid transportation. Those who pay for their own transportation for special rest and recuperation are still authorized the previous 30 days absence.

The new military leave policy ensures that service members don't lose out because they're unable to take leave due to the high operating tempo, Retherford said.

"Lost leave is an issue, because leave is an entitlement. It is worth money," he said.

"This new policy sends the message that the department values the worth of the entitlement, but recognizes that there is not always the opportunity for people to take leave because of the current operational environment."

Fort Benning birthplace of first black paratroopers

(Editor's note: The following article is the first in a series about the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the first black paratrooper unit. Three Soldiers of the original 16 paratroopers are still alive. With the help of Mike Lyde, president of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association in Columbus, they shared their stories.)

Sixteen Soldiers became members of 555th Parachute Infantry Company at Fort Benning in 1944. They were the Army's first black paratroopers.

Sixteen Soldiers became the Army's first black paratroopers in 1944 at Fort Benning. They were members of the newly formed 555th Parachute Infantry Company.

In 1943, Walter Morris said, he was the first sergeant of a service company that guarded Lawson Air Field and the Parachute School packing sheds, calisthenics field and jump towers. They went on duty after the white students ended their day.

Morris enlisted in the Army in 1939 after graduating high school, because jobs were scarce at the time, he said.

In those days, Morris said most "colored" Soldiers were servants, drove trucks or performed other menial tasks. They were also segregated.

Morris became a classification clerk at Fort Benning, and because of high military entrance exam scores, he started Officer Candidate School. He didn't finish the first time, but was asked to stay and reapply at a later date. He needed a job while he was waiting, so he became first sergeant at the service company.

Since their night guard duty wasn't very exciting, morale in his service company was low, said the Waynesboro, Ga., native.

During the day, his Soldiers watched the white students jumping, running and performing calisthenics and knew the routine by heart. Morris said he decided to liven things up by putting his men through the same exercises in the evenings.

"Those not on duty, I marched to the calisthenics field and assigned different posts," he said. "Attitudes changed. They enjoyed going through the exercises."

One day, Brig. Gen. Ridgley A. Gaither, the Parachute School commander, saw Morris and his men jumping from the mock fuselage and performing other exercises. After watching them for a while, he drove off. Morris was summoned to Gaither's office the next day at 9 a.m.

After explaining to Gaither why his men were training in the Airborne areas, the general told Morris he thought it was a wonderful idea, Morris said. Gaither then shared a "secret" with him, Morris said. He told Morris a colored paratrooper company was going to be formed and asked him if he wanted to be the first sergeant. Morris said yes, becoming the first Soldier accepted for the new outfit.

The 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion was activated as a result of a recommendation made in December 1942 by the Advisory Committee on Negro Troop Policies, chaired by the Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy, according to the 555th Parachute Infantry Association Web site. In approving the committee's recommendation for a black parachute battalion, Chief of Staff General George C. Marshall decided to start with a company, and the 555th Parachute Infantry Company was placed on the Army's rolls Feb. 25, 1943.

Morris and a few other Soldiers from the service company were chosen to train as paratroopers for the 555th, but most of the Soldiers came from the 92nd Infantry Division at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., a unit comprised of black Soldiers. All of the future paratroopers were volunteers.

Clarence Beavers was one of those volunteers. He began his career with the Army in 1938, serving with an all black New York National Guard Unit, but left when they changed to an artillery outfit. He wanted to be an Infantryman, Beavers said.

After being drafted in 1941, Beavers said he experienced his first taste of segregation at Fort Dix, N.J.

"Standing in front of the bus was a drill sergeant who said, 'Coloreds go this way, whites go this way,'" he said, noting that this was the first time he had seen this in the North. "We intermingled in New York City during the late '30s."

Because of his previous National Guard service, he became a drill sergeant at Camp Lee, Va., teaching combat skills to new Soldiers. After a year and a half, Beavers was reassigned and was working in an office in 1943 at Fort Indian Gap, Pa., when he found out the Army was looking for black Soldiers who wanted to become paratroopers. Beavers, Morris and 18 other black Soldiers began paratrooper training in late 1943 in freezing weather, Beavers said. They shared a 10-person hut, and they weren't allowed to go through the front door of the mess hall with the white Soldiers, but used a side door, Beavers said.

Beavers said the training was hard, and the first week was mostly physical conditioning. They also learned to make landing falls, absorb shock and received mock door training.

Morris said the following two weeks included training on the 34- and 250-foot towers, and the final week was the real thing — jumping from airplanes.

Beavers had never flown in a plane before, let alone jump from one. He said his first jump was a blur, but subsequent jumps became clearer.

"You had gone through the mock doors so many times, when (the jump master) hit you on the leg and said 'go,' you go," Beavers said. "The second time you go up, you see what happened the first time. The third jump was hardest because you know what you're doing."

One of the Soldiers from the 92nd Inf. Div., Roger Walden from Detroit, said during their jumps, the main thing he remembered was counting — "one-thousand, two-thousand, three-thousand." If he ever reached three-thousand and his main parachute didn't open, he had to open his reserve. However, Walden said the anchor line attached to his main parachute always snapped, and his parachute always opened.

The last jump was at night, and whoever completed it would graduate, Beavers said.

"When we made our night jump, we went in alphabetical order," he said. "It was Beal, then Beavers. When we landed, we hugged each other because we knew we were paratroopers."

Sixteen men graduated in February 1944. They were now Army paratroopers, ready to fight for their country.

Morris said although he was already proud to be in the Army and part of this country, the way people looked at him now was different.

"It was such a different attitude with your pants tucked into your brown boots," he said.

Sand Hill Soldiers tackle Eagle Tower

Soldiers from D Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Training Regiment, climbed to new heights July 3 at Eagle Tower on Sand Hill in their first week of basic training.

"This course is about helping them overcome fear and obstacles," said Capt. Demetrius McClellan, company commander. "They'll use the confidence they gain here in other situations."

More than 230 Soldiers climbed, crawled, dropped and rappelled from the tower, which includes a number of obstacles. The tower includes a one- and two-rope bridge, a cargo net, a ladder and a rappelling wall.

Twenty-two-year-old Pvt. Kevin Mitchell said he has a fear of heights.

"I'm confident that if I can do this, I can overcome any obstacle that comes in my way," Mitchell said as he prepared to climb the rappel tower.

Sixty percent of the Soldiers have never been on an obstacle course, McClellan said. Pvt. Justin Walker was one of them.

"Eagle Tower is definitely challenging. It tests your courage," Walker said. "It's also motivating to see other Soldiers complete it."

The course will help the Soldiers in combat, said McClellan, who was stationed in Iraq with the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Division, from 2005 to 2006.

Whether it's scaling obstacles or crossing bridges, the Soldiers will be prepared when they deploy, McClellan said.

Seeking help does not hinder military careers

Counseling related to family, grief, combat stress excluded from Question 21

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Until Army officials change Question 21 on the Questionnaire for National Security Positions, Soldiers are encouraged to answer "no" if they sought counseling for family, grief or combat stress issues.

As it is currently worded — "In the last seven years, have you consulted with a mental-health professional or consulted with another health-care provider about a mental health condition? — the question worries Soldiers who fear an affirmative response will prevent them from getting a security clearance.

According to a memorandum from the Secretary of Defense, the questionnaire, part of Standard Form 86, will be changed by the end of the year.

A note will be included to instruct personnel to answer in the negative if the counseling was for family, grief or combat stress issues and the treatment was not court-ordered or resulting from an act of violence by the Soldier.

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Voyles, deputy director of the Chaplain Family Life Training Center, said the position the Army is taking on Question 21 will help clear up a common misconception.

"Soldiers think that getting help will hinder their career, and so they don't get help," he said, "and that's what hinders their career — that it goes too long untreated. There really is no place on paper where seeking help is punitive. I'm hopeful that this (change) will encourage Soldiers to get help before their problems become crises."

The change is timely, said Yvonne Wilbanks, alcohol and drug control officer with the post Army Substance Abuse Program. Soldiers and Army Civilians recently returning from deployments may benefit from preventive counseling.

The guidance the Army is offering regarding Question 21 shows that it is appropriate for personnel to seek counseling, she said.

"Most individuals will have a period of adjustment coming from a deployment, and some of our combat veterans may develop symptoms of post traumatic stress disorder," Wilbanks said. "Getting help for adjustment difficulties early may reduce the development of PTSD."

Symptoms of PTSD can include nightmares, reliving the trauma, anxiety, avoiding reminders or anything connected with the trauma and trouble sleeping, among other things. If untreated, it can lead to issues with substance abuse, anger, depression or fear.

"Revising the (questionnaire) is a great step toward reducing the stigma associated with seeking help for mental health treatment," Wilbanks said. "Now, DOD is communicating through this change (that) it is expected that individuals will be getting help for marital, family and grief issues, and counseling for adjustments from service in a combat environment."

Wilbanks encouraged Army leaders to be aware of available resources and to promote early referrals. She suggested contacting Military One Source at 800-342-9647, a 24-hour help line, or www.militaryonesource.com.

Transition team experience makes officers competitive

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
C. Todd Lopez

> "Soldiers who serve on our transition teams and our provincial reconstruction teams are developing exactly the type of knowledge, skills and abilities that are vital for our Army to be effective in an era of persistent conflict."
>
> — Gen. George W. Casey Jr.

WASHINGTON — The chief of staff of the Army recently acknowledged the importance of service by Army officers on military transition and provincial reconstruction teams in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"Soldiers who serve on our transition teams and our provincial reconstruction teams are developing exactly the type of knowledge, skills and abilities that are vital for our Army to be effective in an era of persistent conflict," said Gen. George W. Casey Jr. in a recent memo.

The general backed up his words by instructing the boards that review officer records for promotion or for selection to command to consider service on TTs or PRTs as equivalent to other branch-specific "key developmental" positions like battalion operations or battalion executive officer.

The move both recognizes the importance of transition team service and helps alleviate concern on the part of some majors that a tour of duty within a transition team might adversely affect the career path they have charted for themselves, said Lt. Col. Steve Warren, a career manager with the U.S. Army Human Resources Command.

"There is hesitance in the field about going on TTs because officers are nervous that the time they spend on TTs is time away from their basic branch, and that this will then disadvantage them from promotion," he said. "This message removes that."

As a result of the chief of staff's directions, past and present officers who served 12 months as a major on a transition team or provincial reconstruction team will be recognized by future selection boards to have spent time in a key and developmental position that broadened them outside their normal basic branch of assignment.

"Depth of experience is good, but the chief of staff is now communicating that breadth is important and a TT or PRT is the exact type of broadening experience we desire for our officers," said Col. Jeff Lieb, chief of the maneuvers, fires and effects division. "As always, an officer's performance in critical jobs is more important than quantity of time spent in KD jobs."

By recognizing the importance of transition teams and the skills officers develop while serving on them, the Army hopes to build a more seasoned, capable and diverse officer corps that is better prepared for combat in future operations, Casey said.

"The tasks associated with transition teams, from direct combat to stability operations, will be a major part of full spectrum engagement in theaters of interest now and for the foreseeable future," he said. "I want to ensure that the officers that lead these teams are recognized and given the credit they deserve."

The chief of staff's message also adds transition team command slots to the list of potential positions to be filled by lieutenant colonels on a Centralized Selection List — the command billets of as many as 35 transition teams were identified.

"Because the success of these teams requires our best leaders, I have directed the Army Human Resources Command to award Centralized Selection List credit for lieutenant colonels serving specifically in the TT Commander positions that have direct leadership responsibility for a training/transition team," Casey said.

To comply with his directions, a new CSL sub-category called "Combat Arms Operations" is being created.

The sub-category is open to eligible maneuver, fires and effects officers as well as foreign area officers. The sub-category will come under the Operations category and will be effective with the fiscal 2010 CSL in September.

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
C. Todd Lopez

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense has set standards for how individual services will offer conduct waivers to those it recruits.

The new policy standardizes how the Army and other services classify offenses, how many offenses a recruit may have committed before requiring a waiver, and in what combination those offenses may have been committed.

"Terms like felony and misdemeanor get confounding," said Bill Carr, deputy under secretary of defense for military personnel policy. "What is a felony in one state is not in another. And what is a misdemeanor is the same thing."

The department has classified individual offenses into four categories, based on how "most states" classify the offense. If an offense like grand theft auto is a felony in most states, it would be classified as "major misconduct," Carr said.

"It's not correct to call it a felony, because it is not always a felony," he said. "But because it is a felony in most states, we will call it major misconduct. And that is the most egregious type of transgression that we want to look at."

Other categories include "misconduct," which would be offenses that in most states are classified as misdemeanors; "non-traffic," such as not depositing change at a toll booth; and "traffic offensives."

"There are four groupings the department will recognize in terms of gravity," he said. "Now that we know the terms, how many of them can you have?"

Some examples of what will require all services to seek waivers:

- One major misconduct requires a waiver.
- Two misconducts requires a waiver.
- One misconduct, along with four non-traffic offenses, requires a waiver.

Carr said services are free to create their own policies that are stricter than what DoD has standardized. The department has found that problems with recruits are more likely to happen with those that have a pattern of minor offenses than with those that have only a single major misconduct offense.

The DoD has created standard codes that describe the particulars of an offence. Recruiters, he said, would enter those standardized codes on enlistment records.

"With codes we can determine downstream performance and attrition and determine if something is a problem," he said.

The Army's G-1 conducted a study of enlistees accessed from FY03-FY06. The study compared 258,270 Soldiers who did not need conduct waivers and 17,961 who did, said Lt. Col. Val Siegfried, the Army G-1 branch chief for enlisted accessions.

The study did find differences between the two groups. For instance, the conduct waiver population re-enlisted at a higher rate. The conduct waiver Soldiers earned a higher ratio of valorous awards and combat badges — 13.87 percent compared to 12.73 percent and the conduct waiver population included more high-school graduates, higher scores on the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery, and fewer Soldiers scoring in the "Cat 4" range on it.

The study showed the Army lost about 2.3 more Soldiers per 100 due to "adverse losses" than it did among the non-waiver population.

Wimbledon results

It was sister versus sister, Venus and Serena Williams, in the women's final at Wimbledon July 5. Venus won her fifth Wimbledon title.

In the men's final July 6, Rafael Nadal beat Roger Federer after nearly five hours of play, the longest men's singles final on record. The match also had three rain delays thrown in. It was Nadal's fifth grand slam title.

Busch wins, yet again

It came down to the scoring loops to see who won at Daytona International Speedway July 5. With just a little more than a lap left, a caution came out, forcing NASCAR officials to review the scoring loops to see who was in the lead when the caution came out. Kyle Busch bested Carl Edwards by a nose to win the race.

All-Star's selected

Major League Baseball announced the All-Star selections July 6 for the 2008 All-Star game to be played at Yankee Stadium. Starters for the AL include Manny Ramirez, Joe Mauer, Alex Rodriguez and Ichiro Suzuki. NL starters include Chase Utley, Lance Berkman, Chipper Jones and Alfonso Soriano.

The 79th All-Star game will be played at 8 p.m. Tuesday on Fox.

The State Farm Home Run Derby is 8 p.m. Monday on ESPN. Players committed so far include Utley, Berkman, Hamilton, Dan Uggla and Grady Sizemore.

Favre coming back?

Rumors have been swirling for more than a week that Green Bay Packers' great Brett Favre is thinking about coming out of retirement. Favre has not confirmed the rumors, saying that they are just that, rumors.

Brett, you're one of the all-time great quarterbacks and Packers' fans love you, but stay retired, spend some time with the family, and let Aaron Rodgers get his chance at glory. He's waited long enough.

Sabathia trade happens

The Milwaukee Brewers set themselves up for success with the acquisition of 2007 AL Cy Young Award winner CC Sabathia. Sabathia was traded from the Cleveland Indians to the Brewers for four minor league players.

At the time of the trade, Sabathia had a 6-8 record with a 3.83 ERA.

Way to go!

Tight end Tony Gonzalez of the Kansas City Chiefs gets the good guy award of the week for performing the Heimlich maneuver on a fellow diner at a California restaurant and saving his life. Ken Hunter was choking on a piece of steak when Gonzalez went into action and within a few seconds, got the steak out. Nice job, Tony.

Kings finish No. 9 in basketball tournament

The YMCA Kings boy's basketball team competed in the Youth Basketball of America National Tournament June 28 through July 5 in Orlando, Fla. The team, mostly 10- and 11-year-olds from Fort Benning, ended their first season ranked No. 9 overall in the nation after finishing the tournament with a 2-4 record.

The tournament included more than 100 teams from around the country in various age groups.

"This was the first time the boys faced competition this stiff," said Capt. Karl Ivey, assistant coach. "There were some excellent teams out there, and we held our own."

Throughout the tournament, the Kings averaged 30 points per game, which gave them a rank of seventh in pool play. On July 3, they lost their first game in elimination bracket play but came back with a consolation match win July 4, which secured their ninth place finish.

"This entire year was a great learning experience for the boys," Ivey said. "They have done exceptionally well. They learned a lot about how to play the game, they worked hard, and they were able to have fun through it all, which is most important."

Junior Rifle and Pistol Club registration set for August

THE BAYONET

The Fort Benning Junior Rifle and Pistol Club will hold registration Aug. 19-21 at the Pool Indoor Range Complex on Main Post. The club, for shooters ages 12 to 18, has been active since the 1970s.

Shooters will receive training in the disciplines of rifle and pistol shooting, including standing, kneeling and prone positions. U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters will teach them firearm safety, proper positioning and handling of weapons.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Moore, a member of the AMU, said the skills the students learn will help them become better athletes as well as well-rounded young adults.

"This club helps instill the core values that young kids need, including discipline, respect and responsibility," Moore said. "These skills go hand-in-hand with shooting, and they are essential components to living a good life."

As students progress, they will compete in junior and national level competitions throughout the year.

Forrest Klein, a senior at Northside High School and member of the club for six years, won the Junior Men's Prone event during the USA Shooting Rifle and Pistol National Championship last week.

"The instructors on post are the best shooters in the world," Klein said. "They are our personal coaches. Their expertise has helped me in every aspect of my game."

Since the club's inception, 40 members have gone on to receive college scholarships.

The club meets every Tuesday and Thursday from 4 to 6 p.m. throughout the school year. The cost to join is $20 per month with the first 30 days free. Basic shooting equipment, including pellets and shooting jackets, will be provided. No experience is necessary to join.

USAMU shooter and three-time Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski won first in the Men's Free Pistol with a score of 1200.7. Szarenski, who will compete in the 2008 games in Free Pistol, also placed third in Men's Air Pistol.

Josh Pagel of Tacoma, Wash., competed in the Men's Prone last week during the USA Shooting National Rifle and Pistol Championships on Main post. It was Pagel's first visit to Fort Benning.

Forrest Klein, a senior at Northside High School and a member of the Fort Benning Junior Rifle and Pistol Club, finished first in the Junior Men's Prone with a score of 1280.

"I was kind of in a zone and things were just working out," said Klein, who has been shooting for six years. "I didn't let the fact that I actually had a chance of winning affect me. I just came in focused. It didn't even occur to me that I was in the top spot until the finals."

Although the tournament serves as a chance for competitors to qualify for the national team, Mary Beth Vorwerk, media and public relations manager for USA Shooting, said it is more of a "relaxed" shoot.

"We get a lot of participation from people who don't usually participate in team selection matches," Vorwerk said. "A lot of the shooters use these matches to polish their skills and learn from the pros."

First time competitor Josh Pagel, an 18-year-old from Tacoma, Wash., said competing alongside the best shooters in the world inspired him.

"They are open to giving the younger guys pointers and suggestions, and I'll be able to take what I've learned back to my teammates at home," said Pagel, who competed in Men's Prone. "My first time at Fort Benning has been an awesome experience."

Tomasie makes it three in a row

US PRACTICAL SHOOTING ASSOCIATION

SEDRO-WOOLLEY, Wash. — June was a very good month for Sgt. Travis Tomasie of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

He picked up his third Limited Division title at the United States Practical Shooting Association's Area 1 Championships held June 26-29 in Sherwood, Ore.

Earlier in the month, Tomasie walked away with the Limited titles in the Area 7 and Area 5 regional shooting matches.

Tomasie, who is stationed at Fort Benning, won eight of the 12 stages and held the lead for nearly the entire match, challenged only by second place shooter Phil Strader who briefly took the lead on three stages before relinquishing it back to Tomasie.

"As a native of Kirkland, Washington, Travis is a hometown favorite at the Area 1 Championships and it was great to see him back home and winning yet another title," said Bruce Gary, USPSA's Area 1 Director. "He is one of the best Limited Division shooters in the country, and his three Area titles in June alone prove that.

"I think he'll be on everybody's short list of potential winners at this year's National Championships in September," Gary said.

Rounding out the top five in the Limited Division were Phil Strader and Mike Seeklander, both from Owasso, Okla., finishing second and third respectively.

The USPSA Area 1 Championships were held at the Tri-County Gun Club in Sherwood.

A total of 300 top shooters competed in USPSA's Open, Limited, Limited-10, Production, Revolver and Single Stack divisions.

The USPSA Area 1 region includes Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, but competitors from Arizona, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Texas, Virginia and British Columbia, Canada attended.

The United States Practical Shooting Association is a nonprofit membership association affiliated with the International Practical Shooting Confederation (I.P.S.C.), which is comprised of approximately 67 nations. USPSA's now 17,000-plus members and 350 affiliated clubs make it the largest and fastest growing Practical Shooting sport.

Eller said he looks forward to going head-to-head with his friend and teammate.

"We've been shooting together for more than 10 years, we hang out as friends. It's an honor to be going with him," Eller said. "When we're competing, I want him to shoot well, but of course I want to beat him. It's very possible that we can both be on the medal stand together."

Holguin, who joined the Army in 2006, said the Army has helped him become a better shooter and a better person.

"The discipline and structure has helped me in so many ways," he said "Fort Benning has awesome training facilities and some of the best shooters in the world. My teammates are a great group of people, and we all push each other.

"If you want to get better, surround yourself with people who are as good as you or better."

CYS hosts camp

Child and Youth Services hosted a soccer camp this week for children ages 4 to 13. Ryan Crabbe, head coach of St. Mary's College in Notre Dame, Ind., led a group of instructors who taught the younger children the basic rules of the game and how to control the ball.

Older players practiced advanced skills, including attacks, defense and ball possession.

"It means a lot to me to reach as many kids as I can about this sport," said Crabbe, who has coached the camp for three years. "There are a lot of returning faces, which tells me that we're doing something right."

Eastler leads military athletes at Olympic trials

TIM HIPPS
FMWRC Public Affairs

EUGENE, Ore. — Air Force World Class Athlete Program Capt. Kevin Eastler led military athletes competing in the 2008 U.S. Olympic Team Trials for Track and Field by earning his second Olympic berth in the 20-kilometer race walk.

U.S. Army WCAP Sgt. John Nunn, who competed in the same event with Eastler at the 2004 Summer Olympics in Athens, Greece, finished fourth at the Trials on July 5, ending his bid to make Team USA and compete in Beijing.

On July 4, at Hayward Field, Army WCAP Capt. Michael Mai, a two-time Olympic Trials competitor, finished fifth in the hammer throw with a hurl of 71.75 meters. His first warm-up throw may have been good enough to make Team USA, but the throws that counted were not long enough.

"I tossed out a 75-meter throw that probably would have gotten me second place tonight," said Mai, 30, of Le Mars, Iowa. "I just couldn't quite get it as far out there as I wanted to when it counted."

Retired Air Force Capt. James Parker, a 2004 Olympian, placed seventh in the hammer with a throw of 69.97 meters.

Earlier in the eight-day meet, Army WCAP Spc. Nathaniel Garcia finished seventh in the first heat of the 400-meter hurdles semifinals. His time of 49.52 seconds was not fast enough to advance to the finals.

Air Force 2nd Lt. Dana Pounds finished second in the women's javelin throw with a mark of 57.83 meters but failed to earn an Olympic berth because she did not meet the qualifying standard.

Tim Hipps

Former Army WCAP distance runner Dan Browne, 33, a 1997 graduate of the United States Military Academy, doubled in the 10,000 meters and marathon at the 2004 Olympics. He finished 14th in the 10,000 meters at Eugene with a time of 28:42.78.

Eastler, 30, of Buckley Air Force Base, Colo., will be Team USA's only competitor in the men's 20K race walk in Beijing. He was the lone U.S. competitor to meet the Olympic qualifying standard before toeing the start line in Eugene, where a relatively slow pace prevented others from making the team.

Nunn, who finished in 1:30:35, knew he needed to both win the race and meet the qualifying standard of 1:24:30 to secure a berth in the Beijing Games. He took an early lead and separated from the pack during the first two of 20 laps around a one-kilometer loop outside Autzen Stadium. Eastler and second-place finisher Matthew Boyles of Miami Valley Track Club, however, quickly reeled in Nunn and passed him on the fourth lap.

"I knew he was going to do that," said Eastler, who won by more than a minute. "He needed to get a standard today, so it was expected that he was going to go out on pace. I wasn't in shape to do that today, so I just kind of let him go to see what happened. It's just a lot of pressure on an athlete to try to do both — win and get the standard — so he had a lot of pressure."

Having already met the qualifying standard, Eastler merely needed to finish the race to earn a trip to China — unless three other walkers beat him and met the standard, which nobody did.

"My only plan was to go out on a solid pace of between 4:20 and 4:25 per kilometer," said Eastler, a 1999 graduate of the U.S. Air Force Academy. "That's about what I ended up and it worked out."

Nunn felt ready for the challenge, but his legs did not cooperate.

"The first couple kilometers were OK, and then things slowed and I just couldn't get my turnover going," he said. "Quite honestly, I don't really have an answer for why. Some days it's on and some days it's not. ... When they passed me, I hung with them for just a little bit and I guess I just couldn't get my legs to move."

"I had so much focus on today that I'm going to have to sit back and talk with my coach and come up with a game plan," Eastler said. "We'll just have to see how the body holds up."

After competing in the 2007 World Track and Field Championships, Eastler had persistent pain in his left abdominal region and underwent sports hernia surgery in December.

He is nagged by knee tendinitis.

"My body's kind of telling me this is the final season, so, yeah, this is it for me after this year," said Eastler, who hopes to improve upon his 21st-place finish in Athens at Beijing.

Border Patrol
Protect America...and secure your future.

Are you interested in a job with wide-open spaces and opportunities to match?

As a Border Patrol Agent, your primary focus would be to work in tandem with your U.S. Customs and Border Protection partners to prevent terrorists and terrorist weapons from entering the United States. Border Patrol Agents also detect and prevent the smuggling and unlawful entry of undocumented aliens into the United States, and apprehend those people found to be in violation of the immigration laws. Also, due to the increase in drug smuggling operations, the Border Patrol is the primary drug-interdicting agency along the land border between the ports of entry.

We are looking for physically fit men and women who want the ever-changing missions we offer and have the intelligence and courage to handle the responsibility. If this is you, then accept the challenge!

FIT FACTS

MWR FITNESS DIRECTOR
Lori Smith

Wow is it hot. I have lived in Georgia most of my life, and I do not remember a summer this hot for a long time.

In this week's column, I want to address a very important element that is critical to a healthy lifestyle, in and out of the heat — hydration.

Water is one of the most essential components of the human body, yet it is probably the most overlooked. Water does the body good. It regulates body temperature, cushions and protects vital organs, aids the digestive system, and because it composes more than half of the human body, it is impossible to sustain life for more than a week without it.

Because of its importance to the healthy function of all internal organs, water must be consumed to replace the amount lost each day, and in heat like this, that can be quite a bit of water.

The 2004 Food and Nutrition Board released new recommendations for daily water intake with 80 percent consumed through beverages and 20 percent through food:

• Women should consume 2.7 liters, or 91 ounces, per day.

• Men should consume 3.7 liters, or 125 ounces, per day.

Active individuals need even more.

In one hour of exercise, the body can lose more that a quart of water, depending on exercise intensity and air temperature.

When the body does not have enough water to cool itself through perspiration, it goes into a state of dehydration, which can lead to muscle fatigue, muscles cramps and possibly heat exhaustion or heat stroke.

Here are some tips to stay hydrated:

• Try to drink 17-20 ounces of water two to three hours before the start of exercise.

• Continue to drink seven - 10 ounces of fluid every 10-20 minutes of exercise.

• Purchase a water bottle that measures content in ounces so you can track how much you drink.

• If you are working out at a higher intensity, drink a sports drink to help replace lost electrolytes.

You can get your daily dose of water intake in many ways. Fluids such as water, juice, soda, smoothies, tea and lemonade, and food such as soup, fruit and vegetables are great choices.

Drink up and keep reading for more Fit Facts.

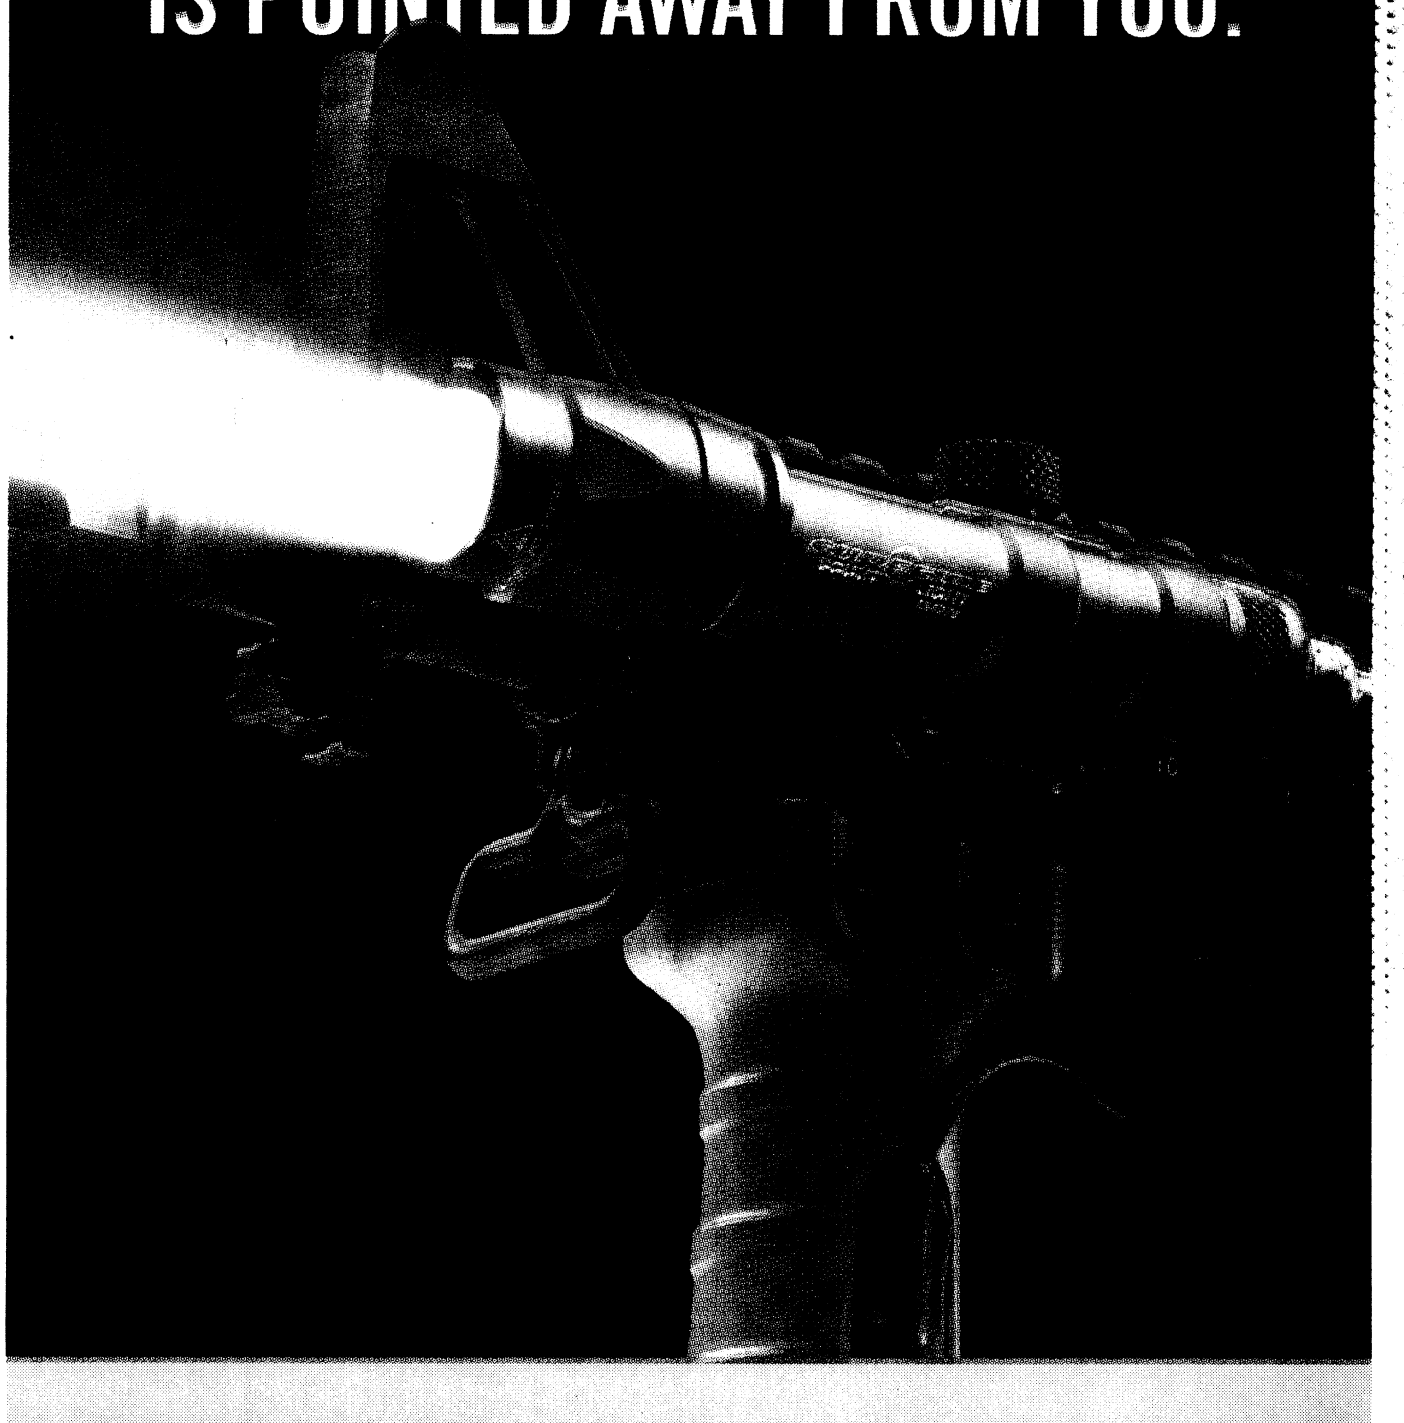
MAKE SURE THE BRIGHT LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL IS POINTED AWAY FROM YOU.



The SureFire Scout Light® was designed with one thing in mind, winning fights. It's cut from Mil-Spec hard-anodized aluminum, and its compact size means you have less to carry and more room left on your rifle. The Scout Light uses a microprocessor controlled LED to blast 120 lumens of white light through a beam-focusing optical lens for extended reach. It comes standard with a pushbutton switch as well as a plug-in remote tape switch, and it's virtually immune to the effects of shock and recoil. The Scout Light Kit (see below) comes equipped with infrared capabilities.

Tim Hipps

Fifteen-time PGA Tour winner Fred Couples, who played guest host for injured Tiger Woods at the AT&T National, congratulates Our Military Kids representative Margaret Rollins, daughter of Army Sgt. Tyrone Rollins, after she took a ceremonial first shot July 3 at the Earl Woods Memorial Pro-Am at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Md.

FMWRC PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Tim Hipps

BETHESDA, Md. — Although Army brat Tiger Woods was at home in Orlando, mending his wounded knee, the opening ceremony of his AT&T National PGA Tour event was a nonstop tribute to service members and their Families.

About 20 wounded warriors were seated beside the No. 1 tee box — not far from 25 children of deployed parents. An Air Force brass quintet seated between them entertained the crowd. A Joint Services Honor Guard backed 14-year-old Anna Nicholson's rendition of the The Star-Spangled Banner.

Five skydivers from the 101st Airborne Screaming Eagles Parachute Demonstration Team then dropped onto the lush fairway — delivering golf balls that had been struck by troops in Iraq, Afghanistan, Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom.

Thirteen-year-old Maggie Rollins and Jeff Dahl, 9, teed up and whacked two of the balls that officially opened the second-annual Earl Woods Memorial Pro-Am July 2 at Congressional Country Club.

Rollins, of Woodbridge, Va., is the daughter of Army Sgt. Tyrone Rollins, who recently returned from a tour of Iraq. Dahl is the son of New Jersey Air National Guard Maj. Thomas Jeffrey Dahl, who is serving in Pakistan. They represented Our Military Kids, which provides support to the children of deployed and severely injured National Guard and Military Reserve personnel.

The program provides grants for enrichment activities and tutoring that nurture and sustain the children during the time a parent is away in service to our country. It also provides activities and support programs that help children better cope with challenges that arise during a parent's deployment or injury recovery.

"I wanted this year's ceremony to honor the men and women who serve in our military and their families," said Tiger Woods, who donated 30,000 tickets for military families to attend the tournament. "I grew up in a military household, which gave me an understanding of the sacrifices these Soldiers and their families make for all of us. It's our way of saying thanks to them."

The Wounded Warriors Project hosted the group of Soldiers from Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, where they are recovering from life-altering injuries.

"It is the premiere organization that just steps up and supports the families and supports the warriors," said retired Staff Sgt. Dan Nevins, a double-amputee who was injured Nov. 10, 2004, in Balad, Iraq, when an IED exploded beneath his vehicle. "They're the people who can get guys like me out of the hospital bed and onto the mountains skiing and onto the river rafting and rock climbing — you name it — just to prove to you that you can do everything you used to be able to. You might have to change some things or have some adaptive equipment. I don't have any legs, but I can still play golf. I've whitewater rafted. You can go snowboarding, wakeboarding, you name it.

"I cannot imagine rehabilitation without it."

Later in the day, PGA Tour officials treated wounded Soldiers and their families to a barbecue at Walter Reed Army Medical Center's Mologne House as part of their Birdies for the Brave military outreach program.

"To be here on the Fourth of July week in the nation's capital celebrating our independence and our freedom with a group of guys who have given so much, a group of people in a sport who care more than they let on — they all do so much to give back — it's just been phenomenal," Nevins said. "You can't ask for more."

Since 2005, PGA Tour Charities Inc. – in conjunction with PGA Tour players, Tournament Players Club members, corporate partners and fans – has generated more than $2.4 million for military groups that are part of the DoD's America Supports You program, including:

- Homes For Our Troops – a non-profit organization supported by PGA Tour member Phil Mickelson that adapts or builds new homes designed for military men and women returning to America with serious injuries and disabilities. (www.homesforourtroops.org)
- Intrepid Fallen Heroes Fund – a non-profit organization supported by Tour member Rory Sabbatini that serves the families of military personnel lost in performance of their duty. (www.fallenheroesfund.org)
- Naval Special Warfare Foundation – a non-profit organization supported by Tour member Jerry Kelly dedicated to providing educational and motivational support, promoting health and welfare programs for the Naval Special Warfare community, and perpetuating the history and heritage of the U.S. Naval Commandos. (www.nswfoundation.org)
- Operation Homefront – a non-profit organization supported by Tour member Cory Pavin that provides emergency assistance and morale to our troops, to the families they leave behind, and to the wounded warriors when they return home. (www.operationhomefront.net)
- Special Operations Warrior Foundation – a non-profit organization supported by Mickelson dedicated to providing free college scholarships and educational counseling to the children of Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps Special Operations personnel lost in performance of their duty. (www.specialsops.org)
- Wounded Warrior Project – a non-profit organization supported by Tour members Frank Lickliter, Nick Watney and Jason Gore dedicated to honoring and empowering wounded warriors. (www.woundedwarriorproject.org)

Vaccinate to prevent canine disease

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Parvo kills.

Parvovirus, which affects only dogs and usually puppies, typically kills within two weeks, said Dr. Lena Harris, an associate at Benning Animal Hospital in Columbus.

Symptoms include vomiting and bloody diarrhea, which often lead to severe dehydration.

Fort Benning has had several "hot spots" of parvo in the past, Harris said, since the virus can live several months in the soil.

"Because of the military, we get dogs from all over the U.S.," she said. "They bring all kinds of breeds, and the dogs also bring all kinds of diseases."

The best medicine is prevention.

"If you really love your puppy, you get it vaccinated," Harris said.

Dogs should be vaccinated for parvo as soon as they are weaned, at around four to six weeks. The vaccination is given four times every two to three weeks, so a puppy isn't fully protected until it's about 16 weeks old.

The yearly parvo vaccination has the added benefit of protecting against other canine ills, including leptospirosis, hepatitis, distemper and parainfluenza, Harris said.

Treatment is possible but expensive. Harris saves about 80 percent of parvo cases — better than the 10 percent survival rate for dogs treated at home — but vaccination is much more effective and less pricey. The vaccine costs less than $20.

Another notorious dog disease, rabies can be transmitted to any warm-blooded animal, including humans, through the saliva of an infected animal. Pets with rabies must be euthanized, and people who suspect they are infected must receive immediate treatment.

Since rabies vaccinations are mandatory by law, there are few cases reported with household pets, Harris said. However, puppies and kittens are vulnerable to the virus before they can be vaccinated at 12 weeks.

Symptoms, which can include erratic behavior, excessive drooling, stupor or aggression, may not appear for up to 10 days.

The most common carriers in the Southeast are bats, raccoons and foxes, Harris said, but even if your pet never goes outdoors, it still needs to be vaccinated.

Don't take chances with parvo or rabies, she said. Vaccination is the surest method of prevention.

If owners suspect a pet has contracted rabies, they should contact their veterinarian immediately. Anyone who sees a rabid animal or sees an animal bite a person should call Animal Control. In Columbus, call 706-561-8602 or call 911 on the weekends. On post, call the Conservation Branch at 706-544-7077 or the Military Police at 706-545-5222 after hours. For more information about pet safety, call the vet clinic at 706-545-4444.

God Bless Fort Benning opens new office

Lisa Lavallee, the new executive director at the God Bless Fort Benning office, said she loves her job. "The most rewarding part of (what we do) is having the opportunity to show appreciation to the Soldiers for what they do," she said. At the office, Soldiers can drop in for a cold drink or surf the Internet, and it won't cost them a dime. The office is also available for meetings, hail and farewells, poker nights and luncheons. For more information, call 706-505-1358.

THE BAYONET

It was an evolutionary process.

A grass-roots effort to muster support for the troops led to the formation of God Bless Fort Benning Day, an annual celebration of all things Army, six years ago. God Bless Fort Benning, the non-profit organization, followed soon after. Now, the finishing touches have been made on the God Bless Fort Benning office in uptown Columbus, and the doors are open for business.

"Business" hasn't changed since the inception of God Bless Fort Benning Day six years ago, said Lisa Lavallee, the new executive director of the organization. The office, at 1106 Broadway, will be ground zero for Soldier support efforts. Soldiers can drop in for a cold drink or surf the Internet, and it won't cost them a dime. Here they can learn about local resources and activities available to them. And here they'll find a staff, mostly volunteers, with a heart for Soldiers, Lavallee said.

"The most rewarding part of (what we do) is having the opportunity to show appreciation to the Soldiers for that they do," said the Columbus native who is married to a Soldier.

The God Bless Fort Benning office, open from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, can accommodate 30 people, which makes it a great place for Fort Benning folks to host meetings, hail and farewells, poker nights or luncheons, Lavallee said. After-hour reservations may be accommodated. It costs nothing to use the facility.

For more information, to reserve the office or volunteer, call 706-505-1358.

Happy birthday, baby

Cheryl Rodewig

It was a "one-in-a-million" chance, said Christian Benner, daughter of Sgt. Kevin Benner, who gave birth to a girl, 8 pounds, 14 ounces, June 28. Elizabeth Jeanein Benner-Guerrero, born at 6:36 p.m., shares her birthday with her mother and her father, Jose Guerrero.

Kevin said the day will be a family celebration.

"A birthday is supposed to be a special day, but they don't have a special day because they're all the same, so it's a family day now," he said.

Christian and Jose said they were happy their daughter was born on their birthdays, nine days after her due date.

"You can't get the birthdays mixed up — you can't forget," Christian said. "If you forget you're in trouble."

Soldier finds plenty of reasons to commute on two wheels

Cheryl Rodewig

Maj. William Venable shows off his bike, a hybrid between a road and mountain bike, equipped with saddlebags for storage and a bell. In the future he hopes to add fenders for riding in the rain, he said.

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Bicycling helps keep the air clean, saves gas money and serves as a great form of exercise. Those are just three of the reasons that Fort Benning Soldier Maj. William Venable started biking to work five months ago.

"I did it initially for environmental reasons," Venable said. "I drive a big pickup truck, and I thought it was a waste for a single person. And now with the price of gas, there's an economic incentive as well."

Venable estimates that he saves about $150 a month on gas and maintenance for his truck. If he bikes to work every day, work and weather permitting, he will save his truck 7,000 miles and his wallet $1,800.

"And it only costs me an extra hour a day," he said.

Venable bikes at a moderate pace — about 14 miles per hour — during his 34-mile ride from Columbus to Fort Benning and back. In two hours, he burns about 1,600 calories.

Venable said his commute is also a stress reliever.

"It sets the tone for my day. By the time I get into the fifth or sixth mile going home, all the stress from the day is relieved," he said.

Venable also avoids the stress of congested traffic.

"I pass traffic jams every day, coming in in the morning and going home at night, and you just fly right by it," he said. "And it's fun. It kind of hearkens back to being a kid. You're on a bicycle, and you're going fast; the wind is in your face. There's a little bit of a sense of freedom versus being stuck in traffic."

Although biking has a lot of advantages over driving, someone who usually commutes via car will have to make adjustments.

You have to get up earlier, stay in shape and have a bike that can take longer commutes, said Venable, who added mirrors, saddlebags, road tires and lights to his bicycle for a safer, more efficient commute.

On post, bikers are required to wear a helmet, ride single file and adhere to the Soldier and Family Appreciation Day set for Aug. 1

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

It's the Fourth of July all over again.

The Aug. 1 celebration of Soldier and Family Appreciation Day on Fort Benning will include games, giveaways, fireworks and a concert. Activities will start at 5 p.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

"Whether Soldiers got back last year, six months or two days ago from a deployment, this is a welcome home for all of them," said Chuck Walls, deputy garrison commander. "It's also a way to thank Soldiers and their families who have endured significant hardships during deployments."

Soldier and Family Appreciation Day activities and refreshments will be free to all active-duty military and their family members with military ID cards.

Country music's Miranda Lambert will headline the music concert, followed by Eve 6, an alternative rock group, and Kimberley Locke, a rhythm and blues artist.

Other activities will include inflatables, video games, a rock wall, a petting zoo and crafts for the children. And for the adults, there will be a drawing for a big screen TV, a motorcycle and a truck.

The event will end with a fireworks show at 10:30 p.m.

For more information, call 706-545-3328.

Bicycling: Requires safety gear, common sense same rules of the road as motorized vehicles, according to Army regulation 190-5. During times of limited visibility, reflective clothing, front and rear reflectors and a white headlight visible at 300 feet are mandatory. Cell phones and headphones are also prohibited.

"I don't think you can ever be too careful," said James Whitlock, Combat Readiness safety specialist.

Whitlock said cyclists should use extra caution in the rain, when coming around curves, or whenever their reaction time is compromised.

"Sharing the road with bigger, faster vehicles puts you at risk," he said. "You can't rely on others for your safety. It's fun to go down the hill at 37 miles per hour, but it's not like when you're in a car with a protective shell. All you have is a helmet."

Whitlock, who recently completed a 400-mile bike run from Atlanta to Saint Simons Island, Ga., said having a traveling companion is a good idea for longer treks. On shorter trips, like his 13-mile commute to work, he carries tools to patch tires and adjust bike chains and his cell phone for emergencies. For rougher terrain, elbow and knee pads come in handy.

When considering bicycle safety, you also have to think in terms of personal fitness, Whitlock said.

"You might want to start slow," he said. "I didn't. I jumped on a bike one day and rode 17 miles, and when I got off, I realized I probably should have worked up to it. And I would suggest you always check with a doctor before any strenuous activity, especially long distance bike riding."

Whitlock, who cycles to reduce the impact on his knees that comes with most other forms of exercise, said bicycling is a wonderful pastime and a good way to meet new people, but safety must come first.

"It's great enjoyment. It saves you money. But use common sense," he said. "Everybody likes to just go and feel the breeze blowing, but you have to be careful."

For more information about bicycle safety and regulations, call Whitlock at 706-545-4844.

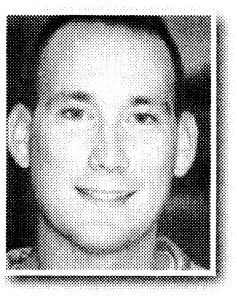
Don't let fear dictate how you live life

1ST BATTALION (AIRBORNE), 507TH PARACHUTE INFANTRY REGIMENT
Chaplain (Capt.) Neal K. Hicks



She had an amazing beauty, and it made my stomach sink like I had just ridden a roller coaster down a steep descent.

My friend Mike said I should ask her out, but I knew she was completely out of my league. Fear gripped me, and I would surely have never asked her out had Mike not questioned my manhood. But once he called me out, I knew it would be better to be turned down than to live on as the guy who would not call her. So with my pulse racing, I picked up the phone and faced my fear of calling that pretty little college girl.

Fear comes in many forms. Fear is present in our lives in many forms. Fear of being rejected by women is common. Some people fear reptiles, insects or the dark. Fear can keep us from doing the most wonderful and important things.

I watched Jaws before going on a weekend trip to Pensacola Beach, Fla. That almost robbed me of the joy of swimming in the warm gulf waters. Every time I was more than knee deep, I looked for a dorsal fin.

God speaks about fear in the Bible in 2 Timothy 1:7, which says, "For God did not give us a spirit of fear, but one of courage, love and self discipline." That is good stuff.

Have you ever felt fear take root in your heart? It feels like your insides are getting tight, you cannot breathe and it becomes hard to move or talk.

The Lord says that is not from him. And what do you do when there is something that is not from God in your life? Well, you have a few options:

• You can let it paralyze you and make you completely ineffective. People choose this option all the time. The person who chooses this usually has thoughts like, "If I sit here real still, the storm will pass and then I can get moving again."

• You can leave the situation. This is not a bad option at times, but people who choose it as a frequent response get used to running away. This person usually thinks, "This is not worth it. I'm out of here." Pretty soon his life is a string of missed opportunities.

• You can engage the source of fear. This usually has the best results, as God does not want us to let fear dictate our lives. This person usually thinks, "Lord, I'm uncomfortable and need your strength. Help me through this."

I encourage you to engage in option number three. When you feel that fear creep in — your breath gets short and your heart races — you recognize that you have a great opportunity.

You can choose to act against how you feel and embrace the spirit God desires you to have, which is the spirit of courage, love and self discipline. Great things come from following God's desire for your life, but they always come at the moment we must change.

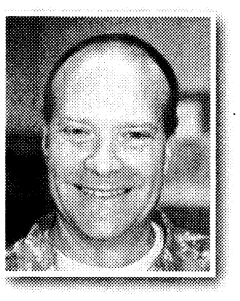
Twelve years ago, Mike played that card like a double-dog-dare, so I picked up the phone and called a girl. She said yes. First, she said 'yes' to a date on Nov. 9, 1996, and then again to marry me on Aug. 22, 1998. Next month we celebrate 10 years of marriage.

I only had to overcome fear one time, and I received God's greatest gift aside from salvation. How many blessings do we miss because of fear?

I hope you will fear no evil because the Lord, your God, is with you, and he wants to bless you.

Is our respect for others communicated by our words?

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey



I just finished a weeklong conference in San Francisco called "Smart Marriages." The conference offered a variety of programs, including Divorce Busting, becoming a Certified Love Educator and how to Avoid Marrying a Jerk.

After a 4:30 a.m. start, bad weather delayed the flight to Atlanta and late luggage almost made me miss the shuttle to Columbus. I wondered about Murphy's law.

The shuttle was full — me, an elderly woman, an older man and what appeared to be eight other Soldiers — and we weren't making much progress because of a wreck and rubbernecking.

Then the passengers starting using cell phones — "Sir, I am running late, we are stuck in traffic." "Hey, I am late, we will be another hour."

There is no privacy when you're using the phone in a van —everyone hears everything.

It wasn't a blissful day.

One call angered and embarrassed me. A Soldier called his buddy (I assume) and talked about the hangover he had from drinking the night before. He dropped the "F bomb" frequently.

What kind of an example is this Soldier? Does he not know where he is or even who is around him?

I was embarrassed and offended by the language he used within ear shot of someone's mother and probably grandmother. I wonder what that lady is thinking about Soldiers today.

Wasn't he taught to respect his elders? I wondered how he would speak to his own mother.

His behavior was totally lacking in respect for others. Are we still conducting sensitivity training?

Too often in our own relationships we disrespect our loved ones, too. We say harmful things to them, sometimes out of ignorance, and sometimes we forget to engage the brain.

Words have meaning and words say a lot about a person. What do your words say about you? You have heard that the pen is mightier than the sword. Words are powerful.

A collection of wisdom literature found in Proverbs says death and life are in the power of the tongue. Proverbs says even a fool is thought wise if he keeps silent, and discerning if he holds his tongue.

This is a lesson we all could benefit from. We all need to think about the power we hold in our tongues.

Are we building our spouses up or tearing them down? Are we encouraging our children or are we discouraging them by our words? Are we supportive to our neighbors and coworkers or are we gossiping about them?

If you are experiencing difficulty communicating with your spouse, family members or friends, I invite you to come and talk with us at the Chaplain's Family Life Center.

We have trained communication coaches who can keep you positively engaged with others and out of the dog house.

For more information, call 706-545-1760 to make an appointment or stop by our office at 2606 Dixie Road in Soldiers' Plaza. We are here to help with your journey in life.

Oh, and on the same van ride, the other conversations I overheard encouraged me: "Hey, honey, we are delayed about an hour, I will see you then. Love you." "Yes Sir, thank you sir. Yes Sir, I will as soon as I get there." "God works out the details." "God is good!" It was nice to hear Soldiers show respect for their loved ones.

Watch your tongue; you never know who will be listening and the impact you will have on them.

VOTE
2008 General Election

As the Army's Senior Service Voting Representative, I strongly encourage you to participate and cast your vote in the 2008 General Election. Voting is the essence of our democracy and one of our most fundamental Constitutional rights. Our elected officials have very important jobs; the good news is, you have a voice in who is elected to do them...if you vote. You can exercise your right to vote by completing the Federal Post Card Application (FPCA Standard Form 76) or complying with the ballot request procedures enacted by the state in which you vote. The FPCA Standard Form 76, or other request, should be mailed or sent electronically as soon as possible. You should then receive your absentee ballot as requested. The Federal Voting Assistance Program has been working with the states to allow ballots to be submitted and received electronically. Check with your Unit Voting Assistance Officer (UVAO) for your state requirements.

Mailing guidelines differ from state to state; therefore, we recommend you check your state's guidelines by contacting your UVAO, or by visiting the Army Voting Assistance Program website at www.vote.army.mil. It is imperative that you complete and send in your ballot immediately to ensure it is received by your hometown local election officials no later than your state's deadline. If you are an overseas voter and have not received your regular absentee ballot 30-45 days prior to your state's deadline, you should complete a Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot (FWAB) and send it to your local election official. If you later receive your absentee ballot, you should also complete and send it in for processing.

The 2008 General Election is quickly approaching, so please don't wait until the very last minute to register and or send in your absentee ballot.

BE SMART. DO YOUR PART. VOTE!

REUBEN D. JONES
Brigadier General, USA

Accountants offer tips for newlyweds

GEORGIA SOCIETY OF CPAS

ATLANTA — The summer is a popular time for weddings, and it's important that newlyweds get off on the right foot as far as their finances are concerned.

A total of 84 percent of couples said that money causes arguments in their marriages, according to a Money magazine survey. But taking the right steps now can save a lot of tension and disagreement later, according to the Georgia Society of CPAs. Here are some recommendations for getting the right start financially.

BE HONEST

To avoid unexpected surprises, talk before you tie the knot about each person's financial situation. A marriage is sure to get off to a rocky start if one spouse learns that the other has thousands of dollars in debt or earns far less than they had claimed.

Your spouse will find out your financial secrets at some point, so it's best to reveal them before marriage so that both people enter the union with realistic expectations.

SHARE YOUR DREAMS

It's also important to be candid about your financial hopes so you're sure your spouse shares them. There could be disagreements down the road if one spouse is aspiring to a luxury lifestyle while the other has a more low-key approach in mind. Sit down together before the wedding and have a truthful discussion about your income, your assets and liabilities and plans for the future.

Talk also about how you will make financial decisions in the future and how you will handle regular bookkeeping and investment planning. Understanding each other now will cut down on disagreements later.

GET YOUR DOCUMENTS IN ORDER

Marriage triggers several changes that should be reflected in key financial paperwork.

For example, you may want to add your new spouse as the beneficiary for your insurance policies, 401(k) plan, individual retirement account, investment and savings account or any other assets.

If you are taking your spouse's name, make sure the name change is made on your Social Security card, driver's license and other identification, as well as on insurance policies and bank or retirement accounts.

REVIEW YOUR INSURANCE

A newly married couple may find that their combined insurance leaves them with too much or too little coverage in some areas. If you are moving into a new home or combining households, assess your homeowner's or renter's policy to make sure it fully covers your new location. Look into each spouse's health insurance, as well, to see if one policy is cheaper and if it can be used to cover both spouses. This is also a good time to begin analyzing your life insurance options to ensure that each spouse is well provided for and that you have chosen the policy that best suits your needs.

LOOK TO THE FUTURE

To set a sound foundation for your future, create a budget immediately that is based on your newly combined incomes and monthly expenses and stick to it. A realistic budget can help you avoid financial problems and disappointments down the road. It's also a great tool to use when setting your near- and long-term financial goals.

And, as you begin your new life together, don't forget to write or update your wills. This step will ensure there are no unnecessary delays with inheritances later.

Six sun precautions to prevent burns

MCG HEALTH
Dr. Clay Stallworth

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Summer is a time for children to get outside and play without the worries of school and homework.

However, parents should take some basic precautions regarding sun safety.

The sun is healthy for us but can easily be damaging as well. It is estimated that we get about 80 percent of our total lifetime skin exposure in the first 18 years of life.

Research has shown that two or more blistering sunburns as a child or teen greatly increases the risk of developing skin cancer later in life.

Hide Inside Ultraviolet rays are most harmful between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., so it's best to "hide" indoors during this time. If this is not possible, try to find a shaded area. Babies 6 months and younger should be kept out of direct sunlight.

Fabrics with a tight weave are best.

To determine how tight a fabric's weave is, try holding the clothing up to a light and seeing how much light shines through.

The less light, the better. Clothing made of cotton is both cool and protective.

Top 'Em Off Hats are a fun and easy way to shade the face, ears, scalp and neck from the sun. Though baseball caps are well-liked by children, they do not provide protection for the ears and neck. Be sure to use sunscreen on exposed areas.

Rub It In There are many great sunscreens with special formulations for children. Use sunscreen with at least SPF 15 and UVA/UVB protection. UVA rays damage deep layers of skin and play a significant role in wrinkling and the dangerous skin cancer melanoma.

UVB rays damage the outer layer of skin, which is known as the cause of sunburn and as a key contributor to skin cancer and skin aging. It is important to protect your child from both forms of UV rays. Apply sunscreen 30 minutes before going outside and reapply every two to three hours. Don't forget about lips, hands, ears, feet, shoulders and behind the neck.

The American Academy of Pediatrics suggests that use of sunscreen on babies younger than 6 months old is not harmful.

They recommend using sunscreen on small areas, such as the face and back of the hands.

But the best defense against sunburn is avoiding the sun or staying in the shade.

Use sunscreen on cloudy days. Many of the worst burns occur on cloudy days when people think they "don't need sunscreen."

Protect 'Em Now Sunglasses are an important part of protecting your child's eyes from UV rays, which can lead to eye damage later in life. Look for sunglasses that block 100 percent of both UVA and UVB rays.

Shade It Out A young child can also get a sunburn while riding in the car. Car shades not only protect your child from the sun, but they also provide a more comfortable ride.

Along with protecting your child, it is important to protect your own skin as well.

Remember, you're an important role model. Kids are more likely to cooperate when they see you engaging in the same behavior.

ASK THE JUDGE

OFFICE OF STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE
Anthony Tempesta

Q: I want to set up a trust for my minor children in my will and use proceeds from my SGLI to fund the trust. How do I do that?

A: You have recognized an important fact — that insurance proceeds normally pay to a named beneficiary and do not become part of the decedent's estate.

If your SGLI policy, or any life insurance policy for that matter, names an adult as beneficiary, he or she will receive the proceeds in his or her own name. For example, if your brother Bob is beneficiary, upon your passing, Bob receives the face value of the policy. This is good idea if you want your brother Bob to get the money, but it is a bad idea if you are naming him as a beneficiary because you want him to manage the money on behalf of your minor child or children.

It is a bad idea to name an adult as an insurance beneficiary when the intended beneficiaries are your minor children for two reasons. First, the money is paid to the adult in his or her name, so the money belongs to him or her. It is possible the adult could take advantage and spend the money on himself and not on the children. Second, even if the adult was completely trustworthy, money in his name passes according to the terms of his will (or state law if there is no will).

It could be then that faithful brother Bob has every intention to provide for your children, but he passes away before he can do so. The insurance proceeds, which had become part of his estate, would then pass through his will or to his heirs, which may not include your children.

It is better to name an adult in his capacity as trustee to fund a trust for the benefit of your children. Your life insurance policy would not list "Robert K." as beneficiary, but "to my trustee Robert K. or successor trustee to fund a trust created for the benefit of my child or children under the terms of my Last Will and Testament." In this way, the proceeds are paid to the adult in his capacity as trustee for the express purpose of creating a trust to benefit your minor children.

A will cannot change insurance policy beneficiaries — this must be done with the insurance company. If you want a will with a testamentary trust, and that trust is to be funded by life insurance proceeds, you first need to create such a will and then change your insurance beneficiary designation as suggested above.

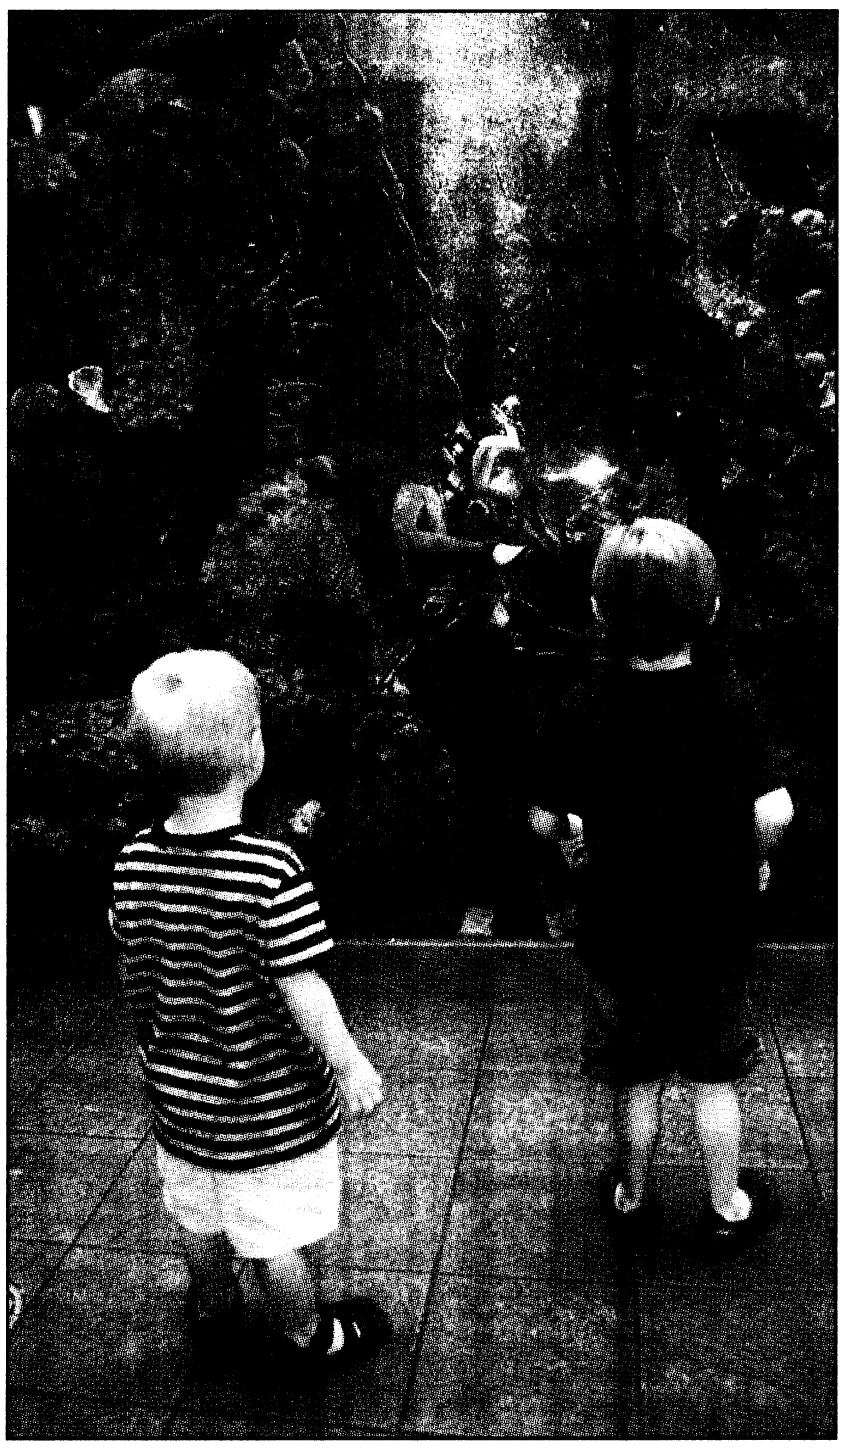
Aquarium visitors watch a whale shark swim by through the 60-foot wide viewing area in the Ocean Voyager display. The aquarium's whale sharks are the only ones on display outside Asia.

World's largest aquarium offers visitors plenty to see



Two youngsters take a moment to watch a diver feed the fish at the Tropical Diver exhibit. The exhibit contains the largest coral reef display of any stateside aquarium.

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Bob Purtiman

There's no shortage of things to do within a few hours driving from Fort Benning. That's a great benefit people get from working here. In less than four hours, you can be on the beaches enjoying the waters of the Gulf of Mexico or the mountains of North Georgia.

For those who prefer to keep their feet on dry land, yet still enjoy a taste of the open ocean, the Georgia Aquarium in Atlanta is the place to be, and it's less than two hours from Columbus. It's perfect for all ages. Billed as the world's largest aquarium, the facility holds more than 8 million gallons of water and more aquatic life than any other aquarium. It houses more than 100,000 animals from 500 different species.

It doesn't appear that large at first glance. As you enter the darkened building, the first thing you notice is the crisp, cool air that is very welcome on hot summer days. There is a corridor lined with fish that takes you into a large two-story, cave-like atrium. It is state-of-the-art and very clean.

The aquarium has five "themed" galleries, ranging from the artic to the tropics, and they are all accessed from the atrium.

The Georgia Explorer exhibit features touch pools with animals that live along the state's coastline, including small sharks, rays, horseshoe crabs, sea stars and shrimp. There are plenty of hand washing stations nearby. The exhibit also features a children's play area.

The River Scout gallery showcases a wide range of animals found in the rivers of Africa, South America, Asia and North America. There is an impressive display of electric fish and an opportunity to get a close up view of piranha, if you like meat-eating fish. It is the only fresh-water exhibit in the aquarium.

The Tropical Diver displays creatures as living art. As you walk through the exhibit enjoying the world of coral reefs, the lighting and music puts you at ease. Diver features a 164,000-gallon exhibit with thousands of colorful fish. It is the largest living coral reef exhibit of any stateside aquarium and features an overhead crashing wave. Depending on the time you visit, you may have the opportunity to see a diver feed the fish. It's a spectacle to watch, especially if you're younger than 10.

The Cold Water Quest features indoor and outdoor exhibits, with white Beluga whales, California sea lions, sea otters and the Japanese spider crab, which can grow up to 12 feet across. That's a big crab.

Capping it all off is the Ocean Voyager display, the largest single habitat in the world, with more than 6 million gallons of sea water and thousands of animals. One of the exhibit's features is a 100-foot long transparent tunnel that is home to the only Whale sharks on display outside Asia. The aquarium has four of them. It also boasts the largest collections of many fish, including giant grouper, tarpon and blacktip reef sharks.

If that isn't enough, the 4D theater is a great way to wind up the day. The theater uses interactive seats and special effects that are built into the theater. The aquarium offers behind-the-scenes tours and has a Learning Loop program for school-age children.

Overall, if the experience has to be rated on any level, I would give it five out of five stars. The facility is impressive, and the displays are well thought out, so people young and old can enjoy it. The 60-foot wide viewing window and area in the Ocean Voyager exhibit alone can be hypnotic, sort of like watching a gigantic Discovery Channel feature. There aren't many places you can go where you can say you touched a shark, sea star and shrimp on the same day and weren't anywhere near the ocean.

The entire experience can be completed in four hours or less, depending on how much time you sit in front of a huge window watching whale sharks swim by. If you're in early, you'll still have time to take in other Atlanta attractions or have a picnic in Centennial Park.

Put the Georgia Aquarium on your list of things to do while you're at Fort Benning. You'll be disappointed if you don't. For more information about the aquarium, visit the Web site at www.georgiaaquarium.org.

IF YOU GO:

- Buy your tickets at Omega World Travel at the Commissary Mall. Walk-up and online tickets are $26 for adults and $19.50 for children ages 3-12. Omega has the tickets for $23.25 and $17.75. There is no charge for children 2 and younger.

OPENING TODAY

JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH

A science professor's (Brendan Fraser) untraditional hypotheses have made him the laughing stock of the academic community. But on an expedition in Iceland, he and his nephew stumble upon a major discovery that launches them on a thrilling journey deep beneath the Earth's surface, where they travel through never-before-seen worlds and encounter a variety of unusual creatures.

Journey to the Center of the Earth is rated PG for adventure action.

MEET DAVE

A massive fireball from space hits New York's Central Park and an ordinary man (Eddie Murphy) emerges unscathed. The man turns out to be a spaceship operated by 100 human-looking aliens who are one-quarter inch tall and seeking a way to save their planet. Complications ensue when their captain falls in love with an Earth woman who's always picked losers for previous romances.

Meet Dave is rated PG for suggestive humor, action and language.

HELLBOY II: THE GOLDEN ARMY

After an ancient truce existing between humankind and the invisible realm of the fantastic is broken, hell on Earth is ready to erupt. A leader who treads the world above and the one below defies his bloodline and awakens an unstoppable army of creatures.

Now, it's up to the planet's toughest, roughest superhero to battle the merciless dictator and his marauders. He may be red, horned and misunderstood, but when you need the job done right, it's time to call in Hellboy (Ron Perlman).

His expanding team in the Bureau for Paranormal Research and Defense — pyrokinetic girlfriend Liz (Selma Blair), aquatic empath Abe (Doug Jones) and protoplasmic mystic Johann — will travel between the surface strata and the unseen magical one, where creatures of fantasy become corporeal.

Hellboy II: the Golden Army is rated PG-13 for sequences of sci-fi action, violence and language.

ALSO PLAYING

HANCOCK

There are heroes and superheroes, and then there's Hancock (Will Smith). With great power comes great responsibility — everyone knows that — everyone, that is, but Hancock. Edgy, conflicted, sarcastic and misunderstood, Hancock's well-intentioned heroics might get the job done and save countless lives, but always seem to leave jaw-dropping damage in their wake. The public has finally had enough — as grateful as they are to have their local hero, the good citizens of Los Angeles are wondering what they ever did to deserve this guy.

Hancock isn't the kind of man who cares what other people think — until the day that he saves the life of PR executive Ray Embrey (Jason Bateman), and the sardonic superhero begins to realize that he may have a vulnerable side after all. Facing that will be Hancock's greatest challenge yet — and a task that may prove impossible as Ray's wife, Mary (Charlize Theron), insists that he's a lost cause.

Hancock is rated PG-13 for some sequences of sci-fi action, violence and language.

KITT KITTREDGE: AN AMERICAN GIRL

Aspiring reporter Kit Kittredge (Abigail Breslin) is bright, inquisitive, generous and a natural born leader. But her happy childhood is abruptly interrupted when her father (Chris O'Donnell) loses his car dealership and must leave Cincinnati to look for work. Kit and her mother Margaret (Julia Ormond) are left to manage on their own, growing vegetables, selling eggs and even taking in an assortment of boarders including an itinerant magician, a vivacious dance instructor on the prowl for a husband and a zany mobile librarian.

When a crime spree sweeps Cincinnati, all signs point to the local hobo jungle, where Will and Countee live with a group of their impoverished companions. Kit recruits her friends to help her track down the real culprit. Together they uncover a plot that goes far beyond Cincinnati.

Kitt Kittredge: An American Girl is rated G.

A science professor (Brendan Fraser) and his nephew stumble upon a major discovery during an Icelandic expedition that launches them on a thrilling journey deep beneath the Earth's surface, where they travel through never-before-seen worlds and encounter a variety of unusual creatures. Journey to the Center of the Earth opens today.

WALL-E

After hundreds of lonely years of doing what he was built for, a Waste Allocation Load Lifter Earth-Class, known as Wall-E (Benjamin Bratt), discovers a new purpose in life, besides collecting knick-knacks, when he meets a sleek search robot named Eve (Elissa Knight) who realizes that Wall-E has stumbled upon the key to the planet's future.

She races back to space to report her findings to the humans who have been awaiting word that it is safe to return home.

Wall-E is rated G.

WANTED

Wes (James McAvoy) is a 25-year-old disaffected, cube-dwelling drone and disengaged slacker. His boss chews him out hourly, his girlfriend ignores him and his life plods on interminably. There is little for Wes to do but while away the days and die in his slow, clock-punching rut — until he meets a woman named Fox (Angelina Jolie). Wanted also stars Morgan Freeman.

Wanted is rated R for bloody violence, language and sexuality.

GET SMART

Maxwell Smart (Steve Carell) is on a mission to thwart the latest plot for world domination by the evil crime syndicate known as KAOS. When the headquarters of U.S. spy agency Control is attacked and the identities of its agents compromised, the Chief (Alan Arkin) has no choice but to promote his ever-eager analyst Maxwell Smart, who has always dreamt of working in the field alongside stalwart superstar Agent 23 (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson). Smart is partnered instead with the only other agent whose identity has not been compromised: the lovely-but-lethal veteran Agent 99 (Anne Hathaway).

Get Smart is rated PG-13 for rude humor, violence and language.

THE LOVE GURU

Pitka (Mike Myers) is an American who was left at the gates of an ashram in India as a child and raised by gurus. He moves back to the U.S. to seek fame and fortune in the world of self-help and spirituality.

His unorthodox methods are tested when he must settle a rift between Toronto Maple Leafs star hockey player Darren Roanoke (Romany Malco) and his estranged wife.

After the split, Roanoke's wife starts dating L.A. Kings star Jacques Grande (Justin Timberlake) out of revenge, sending her husband into a major professional skid — to the horror of the teams' owner Jane Bullard (Jessica Alba) and Coach Cherkov (Verne Troyer).

The Love Guru is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content, language, violence and drug references.

THE INCREDIBLE HULK

Scientist Bruce Banner (Edward Norton) hunts for a cure to the gamma radiation that poisoned his cells and unleashes the rage within him. Living in the shadows, cut off from the life he knew and the woman he loves, Banner struggles to avoid the pursuit of his nemesis, General Thaddeus "Thunderbolt" Ross (William Hurt).

As all three tangle with the secrets of the Hulk's creation, they are confronted with a new adversary known as The Abomination, whose strength even exceeds the Hulk's. To stop it, the scientist must make the choice to accept the peaceful life of Bruce Banner, or find heroism in the creature he holds inside.

Absentee Voting Campaign Kicks Off

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Carrie McLeroy

WASHINGTON - The nation will not only select a president in the 2008 elections, but also 34 senators, 435 congressmen, 13 state governors and thousands of local officials. As in the past, officials said the military vote promises to play an integral role in the democratic process.

In the 2004 general election, 79 percent of servicemembers voted, compared to 64 percent of the general public, according to the Department of Defense's 2005 Federal Voting Assistance Program report. Those numbers were up 15 percent from 2000.

Fifty-three percent of the military vote was as a result of absentee ballots, and 20 percent of uniformed men and women voted in person. The same report showed that 6 percent of military voters attempted to vote but failed for various reasons, down 6 percent from the previous general election.

"The Army hopes that by making information more accessible, and the way it is disseminated timelier and more efficient, the voting process will be even more successful this time around," said Alton Perry, the Army voting action officer.

"Voting assistance officers are working hard to ensure absentee ballots get into the hands of our Soldiers, DA civilians, and their family members who need them, in a timely manner," said Brig. Gen. Reuben Jones, the adjutant general of the Army and senior service voting representative.

Voting rights of servicemembers, Merchant Marines, eligible family members and other citizens residing outside the U.S. are covered by the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act. The FVAP carries out the responsibilities of the Act, and each service must ensure those responsibilities are met.

The 2008-2009 implementing instructions for the conduct of the Army Voting Assistance Program focus on two basic missions, with the primary focus being "the traditional voting assistance provided to Soldiers, their family members and overseas Department of Army civilian employees and their family members."

The second mission involves educating every Soldier about the significance of voting and the voting opportunities available to them.

In an effort to raise voting awareness throughout the services, the department has designated several absentee voting events throughout the year: Overseas Citizens Voters Week (June 28 to July 7); Armed Forces Voters Week (Aug. 31 to Sept. 7); and Absentee Voting Week (Oct. 12 to 18).

During these weeks, voting assistance officers will facilitate voter registration drives, distribute forms and provide servicemembers and their families with important absentee voting information.

During Army Voter Registration Month in August, commanders and voting assistance officers will work with Soldiers, civilians and family members to ensure that each person who wants to register and request a ballot from their state election official is able to do so.

"One of the freedoms we defend as Soldiers in the Army is the right to vote. It amazes me how many people take for granted the freedom to vote." Jones said. "Don't be one of those who gives up the rights you have sworn to uphold and defend for the nation. Exercising your right to vote is extremely important. Every vote counts - and yours should be one of them."

Voting assistance officers will use the Voting Assistance Guide for 2008-2009 and the FVAP Web site to assist them. FVAP provides VAOs with the information necessary to give voters several levels of support. Using these tools, VAOs can explain absentee registration and voting for each state, territory and other jurisdiction. They will also have the necessary forms including the Federal Post Card Application for registration and absentee ballot request, and the back-up Federal Write-In Absentee Ballots available for all potential voters, and will be able to walk voters through the steps to submit those cards and ballots.

All states and territories accept the Federal Post Card Application for voter registration and absentee ballot. It is a postage-paid in the U.S. mail, including the Military Postal System and State Department pouch mail. Voters can request the application from their VAO, or download it from the FVAP website, www.fvap.gov.

Once received, the card must be completed, signed, dated and mailed to the local election official. All states and territories except Guam accept the online version of the card.

The FWAB serves as a back-up ballot for citizens who have requested an absentee ballot from their state, but have not yet received it. During Absentee Voting Week, the VAOs will distribute these back-up ballots to citizens and encourage them to use them if necessary. The FWAB is also available on the web at www.fvap.gov, and is accepted by all states and territories.

"The Military Postal Service Agency has an excellent system in place to ensure all Federal Post Card Applications and Absentee Ballots arrive at the desired destination, making sure your vote will be heard," said Jones.

The FVAP stressed that voters should work with their VAOs or research their resident state's guidelines for state-specific guidelines, as they can differ.

Although the Help American Vote Act of October 2002 extended the FPCA's valid period to two regularly scheduled general elections for federal office, officials recommend that all citizens submit a completed FPCA to their state of legal residence annually, and each time there is a change of address. A voter's legal voting residence is generally the state or territory where he or she resided before entering the military, or the state or territory he or she has since claimed as his or her legal residence.

According to Perry, local election officials should receive the FPCA at least 45 days prior to Election Day, which is Nov. 4 this year, to ensure ample time for processing and mailing. If a voter has not received his or her ballot within two weeks of the election, he should request a FWAB from his or her Unit Voting Assistance Officer (UVAO) or Senior Voting Assistance Officer.

Although the percentage of voting difficulties decreased by double digits from 2000 to 2004, local election officials sited incorrect legal voting residence addresses, inadequate mailing addresses and illegible handwriting as the top disqualifiers.

"When completing voter registration forms and absentee ballots, it is highly recommended that voters consult their UVAO. This is an attempt to eliminate the problem of state election officials returning forms for inaccuracy during the 2008 general election," Jones said.

The Army's goal is to communicate to Soldiers and their families the importance of voting and the steps they must follow if they want to participate in the general election.

"While the military can't tell you to vote, we can supply you with the resources to vote. Especially for those who are out-of-state voters, but absolutely for those who are deployed," Jones said. "It's all about ensuring you submit your Federal Post Card Application in a timely manner, which ensures you are registered to vote and gets you an absentee ballot."

Voters can find more information regarding voting at www.fvap.gov, and at the Army Voting Assistance Program site, www.vote.army.mil. Voters can receive additional assistance by calling 1-800-438-VOTE (8683), DSN 425-1584, commercial (703) 325-4530, or DSN 221-4530.

"The ignorance of one voter in a democracy impairs the security of all."

Officials urge caution in construction traffic

THE BAYONET

Call them growing pains, those nasty bumps and bruises that result most every day from the traffic accidents that occur on the Interstate 185 corridor between St. Marys Road in Columbus and the post access control point at Lindsay Creek.

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski warned Fort Benning senior leaders in April that the temporary inconvenience resulting from BRAC expansion "will get worse before it gets better."

"We'll have to make the best of it," he said.

Certainly construction and congestion came as no surprise, but post safety officials have been frustrated by the spike in the number of traffic accidents in recent months. By and large, they result from driver error and excessive speed, said Lt. Kevin Sparks, the traffic officer for Fort Benning.

"We've always had a problem along that stretch, but since they started the construction there, it's just become more and more of an issue," he said.

"Sometimes we have three or four accidents a day, mostly rear-ending and that kind of thing, because people are just following too close."

Fortunately, Sparks said, most of those accidents have resulted in minor injuries only. But they've also brought morning traffic to a standstill a number of times, which reduces productivity on post.

The issue is complicated by dual jurisdiction;

Columbus dedicates fallen hero monument

THE BAYONET

Last November, after losing two friends in the war on terrorism, Columbus Judge Michael Cielinski rallied local politicians and professionals to drum up support for a monument to honor service members killed in combat.

"We can't thank them enough," he told them. "We need to do more." And "where would we be without them?"

But when it came right down to it, at the July 11th unveiling of the monument, Cielinski couldn't say a word. The senior Reporters' Court judge choked back tears and shook his head when it came his turn to speak at a noontime ceremony on the 10th Street side of the Government Center.

Paul Voorhees spoke for the both of them. The owner of Ranger Joe's, a longtime supporter of the troops, was quick to cast his lot with Cielinski, he said, because "no one should love the Soldier more than Columbus, Georgia."

"There's not another city in the United States that has benefited from the military as much as we have," Voorhees said. "We have a lot of good things going on in this town, but nothing of the magnitude of what Fort Benning does. Fort Benning has made Columbus. Let it be said if we're guilty of anything in this town, it's loving our Soldiers, past and present."

Mayor Jim Wetherington welcomed a number of representatives from Fort Benning, including the 75th Ranger Regiment's second in command.

Lt. Col. Joe Ryan said Soldiers recognize the value of the support they receive from the local community.

"I can tell you, we wouldn't want to be anywhere else," he said.

Expect training to become more combat relevant

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

A proposed update to Army Field Manual 21-20 will help training better reflect the challenges on the battlefield.

The suggested changes will integrate different facets of physical readiness training to focus on "training realistically," said Sgt. 1st Class Steven Lee, NCOIC of the Army Physical Fitness School at Fort Jackson, S.C.

"When you combine the three aspects of mobility, strength and endurance, you get a better warrior-athlete," he said.

In combat, Soldiers have to run, jump, roll and climb, said Command Sgt. Maj. Matt Walker, the U.S. Army Infantry School's command sergeant major.

A strictly regimented PT of push-ups, sit-ups and a 2-mile run doesn't cover what is needed downrange. The Army is trying to change the way personnel look at that paradigm.

Sky Soldiers break ground for memorial

NATIONAL INFANTRY ASSOCIATION
Cyndy Cerbin

With the new National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center as a backdrop, members of the 173rd Airborne Memorial Foundation broke ground July 11 on the site of a Sky Soldier memorial. It will be the first monument built on the 200-acre Patriot Park.

Country music duo Big and Rich took part in the ceremony and performed The 8th of November. Kenny Alphin and John Rich said they were moved to write the song after meeting a bartender named Niles Harris who told them the story of the 173rd's battle on Nov. 8, 1965, when 48 of Harris's comrades were killed in a Viet Cong ambush.

Singing quietly along with the duo was Sharon Goens, who was just 10 years old when her brother was killed in Vietnam. Spc. Don Michael, 19, single-handedly destroyed a Viet Cong bunker and was mortally wounded while chasing the retreating enemy Soldiers. He was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor.

"We were just country kids," Goens said. "Don did everything for his three little sisters. The day he left home, he

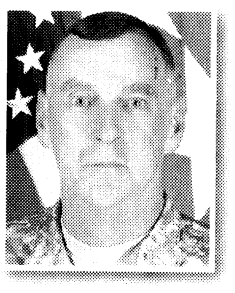
COMMANDER'S COLUMN

Fort Benning's DFMWR continues to provide quality programs, services with commitment to excellence

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski



We are fortunate that the early leadership of Fort Benning used foresight in planning and building the initial foundations of this installation. Their vision has allowed for the expansion — even now under construction in some areas — that will transform Fort Benning, blending the old with the new.

Some of our earliest World War I structures have been preserved for posterity and continue to be of service today. Other facilities have recently been built or are beginning to rise from the drawing board to meet the Maneuver Center of Excellence development requirements. Likewise, more amenities are forming as the Army Family Covenant takes root in our community.

As our mission grows larger, and more people make Fort Benning their home, we will make it easier for our citizens to find all the services and amenities to meet their needs. One way we are doing this, is by moving some of our programs and services under one roof.

Next month, the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation will relocate its Child and Youth Services registration offices from Building 359 on Baltzell Avenue to Building 104 on Marchant Street (next to the Main Post car wash and across the street from the mini-mall). The Youth Sports and Fitness and the Family Child Care offices will also relocate to the same site at that time. This will bring DFMWR's youth registration processes together in one central location just down the road from the youth baseball complex.

At the same time, Army Community Service will adopt Building 359 and turn the facility into a Spouse Training Center, a service born from a recommendation proposed by the Army Family Action Plan. AFAP and Army Family Team Building members will staff the center and provide instruction in AFTB subjects like understanding military terms, acronyms, customs and courtesies, military chain of command and chain of concern, community resources, and much more.

With space to accommodate more than 200 people, Building 359 will also be a prime site for FRG get-togethers, AFAP meetings, and other functions in need of a large meeting space. Additionally, most patrons who currently use the building's meeting spaces will be able to continue doing so by coordinating with ACS.

Another AFAP recommendation coming to life soon is a 24-hour restaurant. We are in the planning stages now to construct the only restaurant on Fort Benning that will be open 24-hours a day, seven-days a week. Huddle House will be a full-service, family-style eatery located on Ingersoll Street between CB&T Bank and Wynnsong Theater. The main restaurant will seat 80 people and will include an extra room that can accommodate 60 more.

Many more programs, facilities, and services are coming our way soon. A permanent stage and production house at Wetherby Field, new regulation-size fields for youth soccer and football, a boat launch on the Chattahoochee River, extended walking and biking trails, additional playgrounds, and a second dog park will begin to materialize in the very near future.

The Army knows how much Soldiers, Families and Civilians give in support of our great military.

Every effort is being made to improve the morale, welfare and recreation of Fort Benning's community. As we watch the changes taking place, which will ultimately mean a bigger and better future, Fort Benning's DFMWR will continue to provide top quality programs, services, and facilities with excellence, commitment, and teamwork during these days of historic growth and expansion.

OPINION

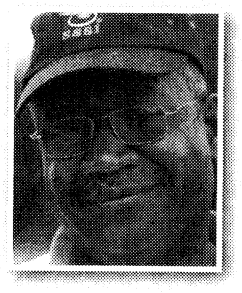
I thought that it was at least two car lengths, but here at Fort Benning, it's mostly bumper to bumper. If you have to stop suddenly, that's a concern. I wouldn't want to smash into the back of your car.

— Sgt. Kathryn Rodriques
14th Combat Support Hospital

It depends on the speed limit. If it's 30 mph, you need to be a minimum of three car lengths away.

— Pvt. Caleb Hillyer
11th Engineer Battalion



At 50 mph, you need three to four car lengths. Not many people do that. I take I-185 every day. People drive too close which affects reaction time. That means if someone stops abruptly, you could run into them.

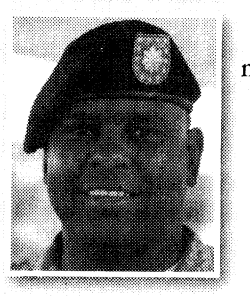
— Retired Master Chief Petty Officer Thomas Harden

I usually try to stay where I can see the back wheels of the car in front of me, so if they brake, I have time to stop.

— Staff Sgt. Tenesia Vann
Headquarters and Headquarters Company, USAIC

Two car lengths. I ride with my grandchildren, and I always make sure I'm at a safe following distance. You always have to look at the other cars.

— Lynn Kreie
Family member



Here on post, going less than 30 mph, probably a car and a half.

— Lt. Col. Peter Jordan
U.S. Army Infantry Center

 The correct answer, depending on which source you use, is two or three seconds between the front of your car and the rear of the car in front of you.

Welcome to the Fort Benning 500

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Bob Purtiman

NASCAR is big — especially here in the Southeast.

I feel closer to NASCAR than I ever have before, not because I'm a fan, but because I feel like I'm driving in the Fort Benning 500 almost every day. I may have to buy a helmet soon.

The most "sporty" time is in the morning. I-185 is a free-for-all. Sometimes I feel like I'm in turn four at Talladega — with two or three people drafting and others passing me on the right and left. There is no one type of offender — SUVs, trucks, cars and motorcycles, are all part of the mix.

I've seen it all, from multiple lane changes (sometimes while talking on cell phones) to passing in no passing zones. I can't help but wonder what is wrong with our drivers' education system. Is it no longer required?

What happened to turn signals? Is there a new law that says I can cross a solid white line? Isn't the left lane for passing only? Is the speed limit merely a recommendation? Whatever happened to driving according to the conditions?

Some drivers treat the main access control point like a pit stop — get a quick check and then quickly get back to cruising speed. I admit that I'm amazed, after going through the ACP and reaching the speed limit, that I'm still getting passed. It's ridiculous.

In the last few weeks, there have been numerous accidents on post and off. To slow people down on I-185, the military police have posted a patrol car to alert drivers to a dangerous curve.

What's the cause of this questionable driving? Is it education? Do people need remedial training?

Burned in my memory are images from the drivers education movie Red Asphalt. I remember seeing photos of high-speed wrecks on the German autobahn — burned in memory. I remember seeing the front passenger scream as the vehicle he was riding in slammed into the concrete median on I-85—burned in.

Those images, along with my driving instructor father-in-law, have helped shape the way I drive. With the father-in-law in the car, you can bet that he will count off the safe distance between my vehicle and the vehicle in front.

Maybe we all need to be reminded what a privilege it is to operate a motor vehicle.

I think one of the main contributing factors of the incidents is speed. If you're running late in the morning, don't make everyone pay for your poor planning. Take your counseling at work and leave earlier the next day. If you find yourself constantly running late, it may be time to look in the mirror and ask yourself some hard questions.

There are thousands of excuses people use for driving fast and unsafe. Short of a legitimate emergency, none of them are valid. Maybe some better planning and preparation will slow people down. For some, it won't. They will continue to drive like they do, not thinking about the person next to them.

'Don't Be That Guy' at Atlanta concert

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

Sunday 40,000 of my closest friends and I attended Kenny Chesney's Poets and Pirates concert at Turner Field in Atlanta.

His publicist sent 700 free tickets to Fort Benning, which DFMWR distributed to Soldiers, families and Department of Defense employees.

The show started in the rain with Gary Allen, it continued to sprinkle for LeAnn Rimes and stopped raining for Sammy Hagar, whose name, I'm embarrassed to say, I didn't recognize until I saw him. Then I couldn't remember the name of the band he was the lead singer for — Van Halen, which I only remembered after an e-mail text. It's been a long, long time since I've been to a huge concert. And what's amazing is how many people watched the concert while texting others. And drinking.

I saw several perfect examples of a "Don't Be That Guy." That Guy is a Department of Defense campaign to reduce alcohol abuse among military personnel.

It uses humor to exemplify social disapproval of That Guy, anyone who has a few too many drinks and becomes an embarrassment and burden to his friends. You've probably seen the billboards on Victory Drive and the ads in The Bayonet.

We sat in the nosebleed section of the stadium, which meant we were sheltered from the rain. When Brooks and Dunn were onstage, a young woman who obviously shouldn't be drinking used the steps to "sober up." She was lucky she didn't fall and break her neck. The buddy walking her wasn't any more stable.

But the all-time Don't Be That Guy moment came after Kenny Chesney took the stage. A 20-something man used the chain-link fence at the top of the stadium as a urinal. Gross. And definitely not cool. The vendors below probably thought it started raining again.

Later he fell down the steps. I doubt he'll remember the concert and why his back is scratched up.

But I, and many others, will remember the perfect example of Don't Be That Guy.

Sledgehammer leaders share lessons learned

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Maj. Joe Sowers

Leaders from the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, who recently returned from Iraq, took part in the Infantry Center's Combat Leader Speaker Program at Infantry Hall July 12.

Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., the 3rd HBCT commander, along with his sergeant major, a battalion commander, a company commander and a platoon leader, spoke briefly and then took questions from a crowd made up largely of officers in training at Fort Benning.

The Sledgehammer Brigade leaders emphasized training Soldiers and units on the basics prior to deploying for combat.

"If you train the basics, you are going to bring your Soldiers home," said 3rd HBCT Command Sgt. Maj. James Pearson.

Capt. Rich Thompson, the commander of B Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, said commanders need to balance multiple priorities to enable their units to continue training in combat, including patrol schedules, training periods and rest cycles to ensure Soldiers "stay current on new training, techniques and procedures, and standard training."

Grigsby stressed his "top five" priorities for training as: move tactically, actions on contact, synchronizing indirect fire, marksmanship and first aid. As far as first aid, he emphasized ensuring Soldiers are trained to stop bleeding when treating a casualty.

Beyond training Soldiers and units, Thompson stated leaders must know their mission statement, take care of their Soldiers and be aggressive.

"That will keep your men safe," Thompson said.

Pearson also gave his top techniques for defeating improvised explosive devices. He said tactics and techniques in Iraq are continually changing, and leaders must "stay on the computer, read the Center for Army Lessons Learned manuals and utilize unit safety boards" to keep pushing out the most up-to-date information.

Lt. Col. Jack Marr, commander of the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., said veterans are the most at risk when redeploying to Iraq. He said it's necessary to listen to the out-going units, because the enemy in Iraq is always adapting to changing conditions.

New commander takes charge of 1-15 Monday

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Spc. Ben Hutto

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division welcomed a new battalion commander, Lt. Col. Ken Harvey, during a ceremony Monday on Kelley Hill.

"We welcome you back," said Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd HBCT commander. "You will lead this group into the next fight and win."

Harvey

"It's a special day, but a hard day," Marr said. "Hard, because I am so proud to be part of such an awesome team of Soldiers. No offense to the other commanders present, but this is the best battalion in the United States Army, and I really hate to leave it."

Harvey received his commission from Appalachian State University in Boone, N.C., in 1991.

Marr

He was previously assigned to the 3rd HBCT when he served as the operations officer for the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment during Operation Iraqi Freedom I and the executive officer for the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., during OIF III.

Most recently, Harvey served as the Joint Exercise Planner at the United States Pacific Command in Hawaii.

He is a graduate of the Armor Officer Basic Course, Armor Officer Advanced Course and the Command and General Staff College.

His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal (second award), the Army Commendation Medal (second award), the Army Achievement Medal and the Combat Action Badge.

Marr is going to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to serve as the primary instructor and the battalion commander of the Pre-Command Course.

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Spc. Ben Hutto

The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, welcomed a new battalion commander, Lt. Col. Rob Ashe, during a ceremony Monday on on Kelley Hill.

"The new Panther 6 is no stranger to the Hammer Brigade and 2-69," said Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd HBCT commander.

"The Hammer Brigade welcomes you, your beautiful wife, Andrea, and your beautiful kids. It's always great to bring a former Hammer back."

Ashe

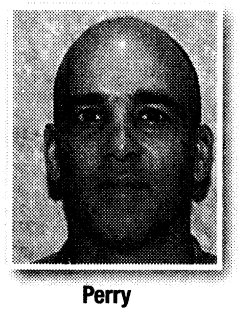
"I'd like to thank the Soldiers standing before you today," Perry said. "Their performance throughout the most demanding combat conditions has been inspiring."



Perry

Ashe received his commission from Albany State University in Georgia in 1990. He was previously assigned to the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., during Operation Iraqi Freedom III, where he served as the battalion executive officer.

Following his service with the battalion, he was assigned as the chief of plans for the 3rd Infantry Division during OIF V. His military education includes Armor Officer Basic Course, Armor Officer Advanced Course, Command and General Staff College and the School of Advanced Military Studies.

His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star (second award), the Meritorious Service Medal (fifth award), the Army Commendation Medal (second award), the Army Achievement Medal (second award) and the Combat Action Badge.

The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division welcomed a new battalion commander, Lt. Col. Shaun Tooke, during a ceremony Tuesday on Sledgehammer Field on Kelley Hill.

"We want to welcome the new Rock 6 to the Hammer Brigade," he said. "He's a known leader and a proven warrior," said Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd HBCT commander.

Tooke

"I've had the pleasure of serving with exceptional officers, noncommissioned officers and Soldiers who were all focused on the same thing: accomplishing our mission and bringing our Soldiers home," Sullivan said.

Tooke received his commission from Cameron University, Lawton, Okla., in 1990. He was previously assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 5th Field Artillery Regiment, as the battalion's operations officer supporting the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment in Ramadi, Iraq, during Operation Iraqi Freedom. Tooke deployed as the brigade executive officer with the 212th Field Artillery Brigade in support of OIF.

Sullivan

Most recently, he served as the secretary of the general staff to the commanding general at Fort Sill, Okla.

He is a graduate of the Field Artillery Officer Basic Course, Field Artillery Officer Advanced Course and the Command and General Staff College.

His awards and decorations include the Combat Action Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Pathfinders Badge and Ranger Tab.

Sullivan is going to serve as the Deputy Director Combined Arms Tactics Directorate and Chief of Combined Arms Leadership Division at Fort Benning.

"When we first come into the military, it's very much of an individual kind of thing — I'm going to get through basic training; I'm going to be able to do this. But even just during your first week, you realize you can't go through basic training individually. You have to learn to do it as a group."

Basic trainees tackle Leadership Reaction Course

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

After less than a week of basic training, 222 Soldiers took on 10 water obstacles at the Leadership Reaction Course on Main Post July 3. The objective for the day was less about avoiding the water and more about teamwork.

"The goal isn't to have them achieve (the obstacle), said Capt. Russell Perkins, company commander of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

"It's to get them working as a team, get them motivated. None of these Soldiers have really worked as a group before. They're all brand new. So they get a problem — for instance, taking an ammo can across the water with the provided materials — and they come together, make a plan and execute that plan. Whether it works or not is really not the point."

In one challenge, Soldiers had to quietly escape from a prisoner of war camp, or they would set off an alarm. In another, they had to tote several supplies across a bridge made of wooden planks, after the previous bridge had been destroyed.

They're not helped or coached, Perkins said. It's all up to the Soldiers, who have only 10 minutes to complete each challenge.

"We just fell short of time, said Pfc. Maurilio Velasquez, after his platoon failed to reach the other side with enough "hustle."

Even though the obstacle course wasn't an actual combat situation, Velasquez said, the things they learned there would impact their performance in the field.

"You have to treat every situation as if it's real," he said. "That's why you have to take this seriously — think quick, act quick and work as a team. The whole team put in their effort, and once we started putting our heads together, everything went great. If we were to do it again, we'd succeed."

Velasquez was one of several Soldiers who emerged as a leader that day to help his teammates conquer the course.

"Most of the time, we will see somebody step up and take charge," Perkins said. "That's important on several levels. These guys could potentially be in a situation where they don't have a leader. From whatever occurrence, the leader is out of the fight now, and somebody needs to step up. Somebody needs to take charge and act on the mission statement they were given previously. That's what it's about."

The teams of Soldiers had to strike a balance between having no leaders and having too many.

Pvt. Samuel Murray said his platoon of "hardcore warriors" capitalized on everyone's strengths to successfully complete many of the challenges. Some were best at transporting objects, others at climbing, and others at strategizing. Understanding both weaknesses and talents means a more efficient unit.

"When we first come into the military, it's very much of an individual kind of thing," he said. "I'm going to get through basic training; I'm going to be able to do this. But even just during your first week, you realize you can't go through basic training individually. You have to learn to do it as a group."

Although many Soldiers slipped into the water, ran out of time or were "captured" by enemies, Perkins said as long as they understood the value and effectiveness of working together, the exercise was a success.

The 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, welcomed a new commander, Lt. Col. Todd Zollinger, at a ceremony Tuesday on Kelley Hill.

"The Soldiers of the Buffalo Battalion are in good hands with Todd," said Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., 3rd HBCT commander. "He is a known leader and warrior and comes with an outstanding reputation and will lead this outfit into the next fight and win."

"You all made this brigade the most lethal force our country has seen in warfare and you are truly a part of one of the greatest generations," Ratliff said.

Zollinger received his commission from the University of Kansas in 1990. Recently, he served as the Joint Task Force Operational Planner for the 2nd Fleet at Norfolk, Va.

The 203rd Brigade Support Battalion of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division welcomed a new commander, Lt. Col. William Marks II, during a ceremony Wednesday on Kelley Hill. Marks assumed command from Lt. Col. Kelly Lawler who has commanded the battalion since June 2006.

"The new Eagle 6 (is) no stranger to the Hammer Brigade. Bill and Laura and your children, welcome back," said Col. Wayne W. Grigsby, 3rd HBCT commander. "I have trust and confidence in this young man."

Lawler thanked his Soldiers for their hard work and wished his successor success.

"Bill, I leave you the best support battalion in the free world," he said. "Take care of these great Soldiers and take them to the next level."

Marks was commissioned an Ordnance officer upon graduation from University of South Alabama in 1990. Marks is returning to the 203rd BSB, where he served as the executive officer for the battalion, during Operation Iraqi Freedom III.

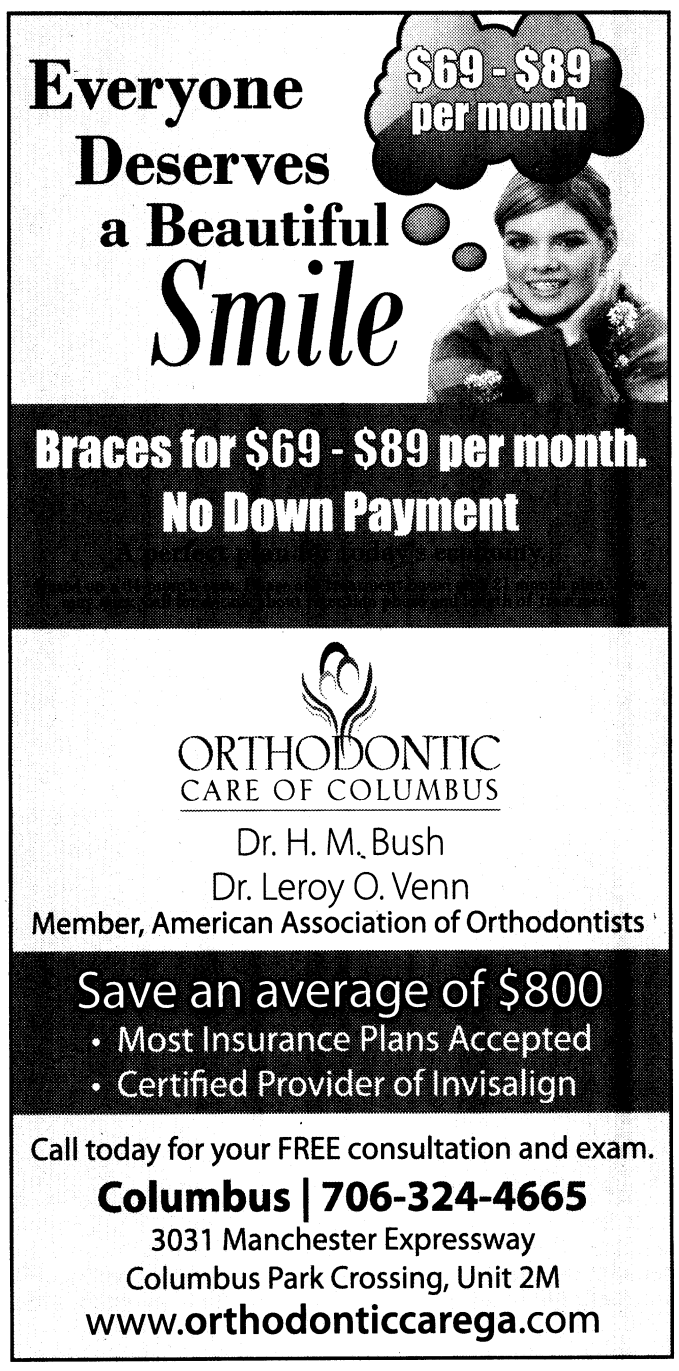
The Interactive Customer Evaluation System allows customers to rate the services received from installation organizations. Visit the ICE Web site, http://ice.disa.mil, pick out the installation or agency of interest and answer the questions.

The manager of the specific organization receives the comments, and feedback will be returned upon request of the customer. ICE terminals are located in high volume customer service areas around Fort Benning.



Army's first black paratroopers become Smoke Jumpers

Editor's note: The following article is the second in a series about the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the first black paratrooper unit. Three Soldiers of the original 16 paratroopers are still alive. With the help of Mike Lyde, president of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association in Columbus, they shared their stories.

Soldiers battle Japanese threat on U.S. soil

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Against the odds and sentiments of the times — segregation was in full force — the Army's first black Soldiers became paratroopers after the War Department appointed the Advisory Committee on Negro Troop Policies in 1942.

They recommended, among other things, that "an all-Negro parachute battalion be formed." Under Army Chief of Staff George C. Marshall's direction, the 555th Parachute Infantry Company was activated Feb. 25, 1943.

Walter Morris, the first sergeant of a black service company assigned to Fort Benning's Parachute School, was the first enlisted Soldier recommended to train as a paratrooper.

Morris said like their white counterparts, "colored" Soldiers wanted to fight for their country, but most weren't allowed to train for combat roles. Becoming a paratrooper was a huge event at the time, because most black Soldiers were assigned to service companies, where they performed menial tasks, like driving trucks or standing guard duty.

"We were given an opportunity to show we were just as good — no better and no worse — as the white paratrooper students, and we could accomplish the same things," he said. "When we were accepted as paratroopers that was a very big morale booster, because … you were no longer looked upon as a servant."

By mid-1944, the company had enough paratroopers to form the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, known as the Triple Nickles. The battalion had all black members, including officers, which was a new concept for the Army, said Morris, who became a second lieutenant in November 1944 after completing Officer Candidate School.

The battalion moved to Camp Mackall, N.C., in July 1944, where they awaited overseas orders.

They never came. Not only was the war winding down, the white commanders didn't want the black paratroopers, Morris said.

"It had never been done, and they didn't want the additional problems of integrating colored and white Soldiers," he said.

However, another mission awaited the Soldiers in the U.S. The Japanese were launching large hydrogen balloons that carried incendiary and antipersonnel bombs.

The deadly balloons rode the jet stream from Japan to the American Northwest, with one making it to Detroit.

Two Japanese balloon bombs landed in Oregon, and one of them killed six members of a family when they found and tampered with it, Morris said.

Other balloon bombs were found in Alaska, Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Iowa, Mexico and Canada.

Although only about 300 of the 9,000 Japanese balloon bombs launched were observed or found in the U.S. after the nearly 5,000 mile trip, each one was considered highly dangerous, according to the Axis History Factbook Web site.

Soldiers of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion are shown here in 1945 with Air Force jackets and trousers with fleece linings, football helmets with steel face protectors that resembled fencing masks and 200 feet of rope. They used this equipment during Operation Firefly, a mission in which they were assigned to recover and destroy Japanese balloon bombs and suppress forest fires started by the bombs.

Operation Firefly was the military's plan of action against this threat, Morris said. Soldiers from the 555th Parachute Inf. Bn., were told to report to Camp Pendleton, Ore., in May 1945.

Their mission was to recover and destroy Japanese balloon bombs, with the added mission of suppressing forest fires started by the bombs or by other means.

Clarence Beavers, one of the original 16 black paratroopers, said they were initially unhappy when they were told they were shipping out to fight fires in America's Northwest.

"We went through all of this training to get away from service units, and now we were back to one anyway," he said.

However, when the mission was explained, Beavers said they understood its importance and took the mission to heart.

Beavers said they were issued Air Force jackets and trousers with fleece linings, football helmets with steel face protectors that resembled fencing masks and 200 feet of rope, and they received forest-fire training.

Morris said they learned to use a maneuverable parachute developed by Frank Derry, a Forest Service smoke jumper. Conventional parachutes floated down in an inverted cone shape and were hard to control, but Derry's parachute could be manipulated by the paratroopers.

"We became smoke jumpers, and we had to learn how to jump into trees, which was counter to what we were taught (at Fort Benning)," Morris said.

Many of the trees were 75 to 100 feet tall, and most of the open areas were covered with boulders and rocks and other dangerous areas, he said. The only Soldier killed landed in a tree, but fell to his death as he tried to lower himself to the ground.

They were also trained to use pickaxes and saws, he said, and the work was difficult and dangerous.

"You were taught to cut down trees and form a fire lane, and that was hard work," Morris said. "That is how you fought a forest fire … because you don't put out forest fires. You prepare lanes and pray the fires stop."

Roger Walden, another of the original 16 black paratroopers, said they learned about the bombs, but most of them didn't see any.

"We worked with the Forest Service on the bombs to learn to deactivate them, but mostly we were fighting fires," he said.

This Japanese balloon bomb is shown reinflated at Moffett Field, Calif., after it was shot down by a Navy aircraft Jan. 10, 1945. Japanese balloon bombs were made of mulberry paper called washi, inflated with hydrogen and carried payloads varying from 26-pound incendiary bombs to 33-pound antipersonnel bombs and four 11-pound incendiaries.

Beavers said they jumped with nitrostarch, a secondary explosive compound, and blasting caps, which they were to use if they found any balloon bombs. Although he never saw a bomb, other battalion Soldiers did.

In all, the battalion fought 32 fires and made about 1,200 individual jumps, Morris said.

In the spring of 1945, German and Italian forces surrendered. The Japanese surrendered in September, and by then the war was all but over. However, the Soldiers of the 555th continued to fight fires until the 1945 fire season ended, Morris said.

Then, it was back to Camp Mackall in mid-October, but their assignment there was short.

The 555th Parachute Inf. Bn., was reassigned Dec. 6 to Fort Bragg, N.C., where they began a new chapter in their history.

There were other Gold Star family members at the groundbreaking. Standing next to Goens was Chloe Wilson, who also lost a brother in service with the 173rd. Pfc. Thomas Wilson was 21 when was he was killed in combat in Afghanistan. Wilson was manning the turret on a Humvee when his unit's convoy was ambushed.

The new monument, expected to cost about $650,000, will include Michael's and Wilson's names, as well as the names of the 1,700 members of the 173rd who died in Vietnam, Iraq and Afghanistan.

The 173rd conducted the only combat jumps in both Vietnam and Iraq. It has the record of the longest continuous service in combat of any American unit since the Revolutionary War. Despite recognition in various markers and monuments across the nation, officials say "there is no place where it all comes together, no place to tell our story." That's what led them to the National Infantry Museum.

"It's a dream 43 years in the making," said Ken Smith, 173rd Brigade Memorial Foundation president.

The National Infantry Foundation gave the group the piece of land the monument will occupy.

"It seems most fitting that a memorial honoring the Sky Soldiers be placed on this prominent piece of high ground overlooking the parade field," foundation president Jerry White said in his remarks at the ceremony.

"Every week hundreds of young Soldiers will graduate on that field and join the brotherhood of Americans who have fought and died for our freedoms."

The memorial will be dedicated sometime next year.

PT: Policy to reflect requirements of wartime mission to an 'accomplish my wartime mission' mentality is crucial in every unit in the Army, regardless of what you do for a living," Walker said.

"(Now), the Army has provided a single source document to assist leaders in planning, resourcing and executing their Physical Readiness Training programs to facilitate the Soldiers' physical development and ability to accomplish their war-fighting tasks across a wide spectrum of changing conditions while the physical standards remain constant," he said.

The goal is to encourage Soldiers to train like they fight, Lee said.

"The exercises mimic the events that occur in the operations field," he said. "For these exercises, precision is the key. Sloppy performance makes sloppy results."

Soldiers will be doing more training in full battle gear, preparing them for the added weight and heat associated with carrying equipment. This emphasis will be part of both the toughening and sustainment phases, Lee said.

The Army reviews the field manual every five years. The present manual has not been updated since September 1992. The new manual, FM 3-2.20, is currently in draft stages.

"The knowledge that is in FM 21-20 comes from the 1970's method of training and sports science," Lee said. "The new FM is using the new method that has been researched and developed to replicate warrior tasks and battle drills."

Walker said the transition for Infantry Soldiers on Fort Benning would be smooth, and training changes would be minimal.

Under the new field manual, it won't be about the number of hours spent doing a certain exercise but the performance level achieved, he said.

"It will change the way you think about PT to get Soldiers to think about their combat mission and train accordingly," Walker said. "This outcome-based training is already very much a part of the Fort Benning mission. What we focus on is preparing a Soldier for wartime. It's a balance. PT needs to be relatively fun, it should have a variety of exercises, and it should challenge the group," he said.

"What they do for a living is difficult," Walker said, "and being in shape is the only factor you can control. You can just do more PT, and you can make the Army better by making that one Soldier — you — better."

The Georgia Department of Transportation agreed to drop the speed limit on the installation from 55 to 45 miles per hour, said DOT state spokesperson Krystal Paulk-Buchanan. The reduction took place earlier this week, and it is expected to last until construction ends sometime late next year.

Paulk-Buchanan said the speed limit will not be reduced from St. Marys to the Lindsay Creek Parkway.

To help minimize the problem, an MP has been posted with his lights flashing at the entrance to the post to remind drivers to slow down, Sparks said.

"We can do all we can do, but in the end, it comes down to driver discipline," he said. "We've got to make people understand how dangerous the situation is along that stretch of road."

Under "normal" conditions drivers should maintain a two-second distance between themselves and the car in front of them, Sparks said.

Between St. Marys and Fort Benning, they should double that.

"You know how that works. Find a point along the road, like a sign or a pylon, and when the car in front of you passes it, count one-one thousand, two-one thousand ... If you don't get to four, slow down," he said.

Home Run Derby

Josh Hamilton, outfielder for the Texas Rangers, hit a record 28 homers in the first round of the Home Run Derby Monday at Yankee Stadium. Hamilton, who battled drug and alcohol addiction just years ago, was the feel-good story of the All-Star event.

The final round of the derby was won by Minnesota Twins' Justin Morneau, who beat Hamilton with five homers to Hamilton's three. Hamilton broke Bobby Abreu's record of 24 home runs in the first round, which Abreu did in 2005.

All-Star game

Texas Rangers' shortstop Michael Young ended the longest All-Star Game in the 79-year history with a sacrifice fly to score Justin Morneau for the American League win over the National League, 4-3. The game went into 15 innings at Yankee Stadium.

J.D. Drew, right fielder for the Boston Red Sox, won Most Valuable Player honors. He hit a two-run homer to left field to tie the game.

Favre flip-flops

Brett Favre, former quarterback for the Green Bay Packers, says he retired too early, and has asked for an unconditional release from the Packers. The Packers are saying they won't release him from the rest of his three-year contract.

Packers' general manager Ted Thompson said while they do not plan to release Favre, he could return to the Packers if he applies for reinstatement to the league, and he would be in a different role because of the team's commitment to now-quarterback Aaron Rodgers.

This is getting old

Kyle Busch won, again. Busch passed Jimmie Johnson on the second-to-last lap to claim his seventh victory of the season at Chicagoland July 12. Busch is unstoppable, and a lock to win the Sprint Cup championship if other drivers can't figure out a way to beat him.

Drivers have this week off to figure out that strategy. The next race is The Brickyard from Indianapolis Motor Speedway July 27.

Wounded warrior preps for bike race

One year after shrapnel ripped silver dollar-size holes in both his legs, a Fort Benning Soldier is preparing to compete in the 35-mile Gwinnett Bike Fest race next week in Gwinnett County, Ga.

Spc. Joshua Benefield, a two-time Alabama state cycling champion and former member of the Auburn University Flyers, thought his cycling and Soldiering days were over after being injured by an IED while on foot patrol in a village south of Baghdad in March 2007. The blast slammed him into an embankment, riddled his legs with shrapnel and severed a vein in his left calf.

After surgery, he was shipped back to the states and assigned to the Warrior Transition Battalion at Fort Benning for rehabilitation. Here his prognosis improved quickly, and Benefield was confident he'd rejoin his unit in Iraq.

"I know it's a bit of a cliché, but we really were a band of brothers," the 28-year-old Alabama native said. "We had been there seven months, so we were close. I was thinking as soon as I get over this, I'll get back to them."

That wasn't to be. Nerve damage has kept Benefield stateside and it will likely put an end to his Infantry career. With eight more weeks of rehab in front of him, Benefield is hoping to reclassify as a military intelligence analyst.

In July 2007, the doctor recommended that Benefield "take up biking." It would hasten his rehabilitation without putting strain on his injured muscles. Benefield, who won the 110-mile Cheehaw Challenge when he was 18 years old, hadn't ridden in nearly four years when he climbed on a stationary bike last year. He lasted all of 10 minutes.

"It was hard at first, but I stuck with it because I've always loved (cycling)," he said. "And for me, it is the perfect exercise. It's not an impact sport, but I get a good

Benning to partner with Maple Ridge for golf tournament

THE BAYONET

For more than five decades, the Bi-City Amateur Championship was a favorite among local golfers. But, by 2005, participation had dwindled so much so that organizers finally threw in the towel.

George Cliff sure hopes the Chattahoochee Valley Amateur Golf Championship will breathe new life into an old tradition. The business manager for the Fort Benning Golf Course said he's excited about the event, which is scheduled for Aug. 16 and 17.

"It's been a long time coming. The Bi-City has a strong legacy, and to be part of its new beginning is really special," Cliff said.

Maple Ridge Golf Club will partner with the Fort Benning Golf Course to host the event at Maple Ridge Aug. 16 and Fort Benning Aug. 17.

The 18-hole individual stroke play tournament, for amateur golfers of all ages, will be divided into five 24-player flights after the first round. There are 120 total player spots. Thirty players, the top six in each flight, will receive Maple Ridge Golf Club gift certificates worth $100 to $300. The total purse for the event is $5,450 in gift certificates. The overall winner will receive an additional $200 gift certificate.

The $130 entry fee will cover green fees, golf carts, balls, lunch on both days and a tee gift.

The deadline for entry is Aug. 11 or when the field reaches 120 players. Entry forms are available at Maple Ridge, Fort Benning and online at www.golfmapleridge.com. Tee times on both days are yet to be determined.

For more information, call 706-569-1025 or 706-687-1940.

Gowdy hosts two blowouts

There were two intramural softball blowouts Monday at Gowdy Field.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 198th Engineer Battalion, defeated 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, 13-2, in the first game.

The 198th put up eight runs in the fourth quarter en route to the victory, which was called for time in the sixth inning.

In the second game, 30th Adjutant General knocked off 14th Combat Support Hospital, 17-3. 30th AG shut out 14th CSH in the third inning and scored 10 runs. The game was called after time expired in the bottom of the fourth.

The 75th Ranger Regiment was disqualified for their game against 233rd Heavy Equipment Transportation Company because of a no-show. The 7-0 forfeit rule win keeps 233rd atop League 2 with a season record of 8-0.

Regular season games are played Mondays through Thursdays at Gowdy and Knappenberger fields. For more information, call sports coordinator Willie Spann at 706-984-1994.

Local skaters go to nationals

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

Four local skaters with GT Speed team are competing in the Speed Skating National Championship in Lincoln, Neb., July 13 through Wednesday.

Allison Pierce, Matt Stewart, Scott Burkhalter and Allen Wilkes will compete with more than 500 skaters, ages 5 and older, in 15 divisions.

"This is what it's all about," said Yamil Collazo, the coach of GT Speed. "When skaters get to this level, they know they have worked as hard as they could, and I've done the best job that I could do to prepare them. This event shows just how committed the skaters have been all year."

Collazo will miss this year's nationals to be with his mother, who recently underwent surgery. This is his first time missing the event in 20 years of coaching the team.

"I'm confident that they will be successful," Collazo said. "They treat every race like nationals, so this should be routine. I know where my responsibilities lie this year, and the racers understand this. They have been really supportive."

Matt Stewart, a 16-year-old lifeguard at Fort Benning, will be competing in the two-man relay. The 11-year GT Speed veteran is making his fourth nationals appearance.

"Nationals is all about the best of the best," Stewart said. "It's about who trains the hardest and who turns it on in the last mile of the race."

Pierce, a 9-year-old competing in the Juvenile Division, is making her third nationals appearance. Pierce set records in 2006 in the 100, 200 and 300-meter events.

Although Pierce said she is "100 percent excited" about being in nationals, she is nervous, mainly because of the absence of Collazo.

"I'm scared and sad that he's not going to be there," Pierce said. "But I know he'll be on the phone with my dad screaming for me when I'm racing."

For more information about GT Speed, call Collazo at 706-392-3629.

Wide-Open Spaces
Are you interested in a job with wide-open spaces and opportunities to match?
As a Border Patrol Agent, your primary focus would be to work in tandem with your U.S. Customs and Border Protection partners to prevent terrorists and terrorist weapons from entering the United States. Border Patrol Agents also detect and prevent the smuggling and unlawful entry of undocumented aliens into the United States, and apprehend those people found to be in violation of the immigration laws. Also, due to the increase in drug smuggling operations, the Border Patrol is the primary drug-interdicting agency along the land border between the ports of entry.
We are looking for physically fit men and women who want the ever-changing missions we offer and have the intelligence and courage to handle the responsibility. If this is you, then accept the challenge!

The SureFire Scout Light® was designed with one thing in mind, winning fights. It's cut from Mil-Spec hard-anodized aluminum, and its compact size means you have less to carry and more room left on your rifle. The Scout Light uses a microprocessor controlled LED to blast 120 lumens of white light through a beam-focusing optical lens for extended reach. It comes standard with a pushbutton switch as well as a plug-in remote tape switch, and it's virtually immune to the effects of shock and recoil. The Scout Light Kit (see below) comes equipped with infrared capabilities.

Raymond Reid heads to the plate in Fort Benning's first game Tuesday night in the Columbus Parks and Recreation's City Championship Tournament. Fort Benning beat Waggoner's Trucking, 20-8.

Post plays for championship

The Fort Benning Men's Softball Team will compete for the Columbus Parks and Recreation's city softball title at 7 p.m. Monday on Field 2 at the South Commons on Victory Drive.

The team played twice Tuesday. They beat Waggoner's Trucking, 20-8, and lost to Club Roc, 36-14.

The men's team won the Commercial League tournament last week.

Games at the South Commons Sports Complex are open to the public, and there is no charge for admission.

Idiot to idiot advice: Dump the SUV

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE
Tom and Ray Magliozzi

Dear Tom and Ray:

This will probably seem like a really stupid question, but I need professional advice. I own a 1-year-old Jeep in perfect condition, which I purchased for my job. I was laid off from said job, and now I own a gas-guzzling, really nice-looking Jeep Grand Cherokee that is too big and too expensive for me to drive, especially since I no longer have a job. My question is: Should I trade it in for a smaller, more fuel-efficient car? I have no payments, and being unemployed limits what I could purchase. With gas prices continuing to climb, I don't really know what I should do, since I own the vehicle outright. Care to advise an idiot?

— Micci

RAY: I guess this is what you might call "idiot to idiot" communication.

TOM: Or, more accurately, "idiot AND idiot to idiot communication." So consider yourself warned, Micci.

RAY: Actually, you're hardly alone. SUVs and pickup trucks were, for many people, a fashion trend during the past 10 years. And like many fashion trends, they were, at heart, exceedingly impractical.

TOM: Tell me about it. Try wearing a miniskirt like I did during the entire winter of '68!

RAY: People who didn't need pickups and SUVs bought them anyway, because they were seen as cool, despite the fact that they handled like crud, tended to flip over more than other vehicles, ripped countless inseams during ingress and egress, and drank gas like it was a dark-chocolate-caramel-mocha freddo from Peet's Coffee.

TOM: So now, here we are, with a lot of people stuck with SUVs that get 15 mpg while gas is $4 a gallon. What to do?

RAY: I'd say dump it, Micci. You're going to take a bath on it, no question. Anytime you sell a car that's a year old, you take a huge hit from initial depreciation.

Add to that the fact that you're selling a vehicle that not many people want nowadays, for the same reasons you don't want it. But there's always a price at which someone will take it.

TOM: If you don't want to sell it yourself, you can even try CarMax, if there's one in your area. They buy late-model cars at the wholesale price.

RAY: And since you own it outright, you can take the cash you get, buy a cheaper 2-, 3- or 4-year-old fuel-efficient car, and then put aside a few grand to get you through this period of unemployment.

TOM: If you had an income and weren't in desperate straits, you could hang on to it a little longer, to see if gas prices level off and come down a bit — which they might. That might make your Jeep a little more valuable on the used-car market.

But if you can't afford the gas to go out looking for a job, you need to do something now. Plus, I don't see gas prices coming down a lot.

RAY: Me, either. Combine the instability and war in the Middle East, increased demand from growing economies in China and India, and the decreasing supply of oil in the Earth, and the long-term trend for oil prices is up, rather than down.

TOM: That's why I'd say dump the Grand Cherokee now, while there are still a few other idiots out there who haven't caught on yet. Good luck, Micci!

Cyclist: Overcoming injury

cardiovascular workout, and I'm retraining my muscles."

These days, Benefield rides up to two and a half hours four or five times a week often with his girlfriend, Allison McElroy. The two "met" while he was in Iraq. Benefield's mother is a mail carrier who frequently talked to the folks on her route about her son.

McElroy lived on that route. She offered to write letters to Benefield.

Eventually they started e-mailing. Then, when he returned stateside, they talked over the telephone. They began dating in April 2007.

"She meant everything to me during my recovery," he said. "To have someone care that much about — someone I'd never actually met — that was a huge thing. Allison and my parents got me through this."

Benefield introduced McElroy to cycling, and she's helping him prepare for the bike fest in Gwinnett County next weekend. At this point, he's eying the finish line, not the winner's circle.

"If I can be competitive in this race, great. If not, I'll just keep pushing myself," he said.

Babysitting class set for July 26

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

The Red Cross will offer a babysitting class from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. July 26 at Building 2626, Soldiers' Plaza.

Esabel Sumlin, babysitter instructor, wants to make sure babysitters are prepared for any situation.

"This training could save a child's life," she said. "My goal is to make sure the babysitters can be calm and collected during an emergency."

Students will learn how to perform CPR and the Heimlich maneuver and what to do if a child chokes, drowns, gets burned or swallows poison.

"The child's safety is first — that's what I emphasize to the students," Sumlin said.

Students will also learn how to hold and burp a baby and how to change a diaper.

Each child will receive a babysitter's handbook, a first aid kit and a certificate for taking the class.

Youth 12 and older are invited, whether they have babysitting experience or not, Sumlin said.

The class costs $38 per person and participants must register by July 25. For more information or to register, call Sumlin at 706-545-5194.

Relax, biking doesn't have to be 'serious'

Cheryl Rodewig
Dell McMullen, left, and Shirley Jaeger commute two hours every weekday from Columbus to Fort Benning. They invite others to join them on their 9-mile ride on the Riverwalk.

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Two Fort Benning school administrators have proven that you can invest in your health and the environment without investing a lot of time or money.

Fort Benning Schools superintendent Dell McMullen and assistant superintendent Shirley Jaeger began riding bikes to work about a month ago. Neither had ridden in nearly two decades.

They take the Riverwalk twice daily on coaster bikes that cost less than $90 alongside "serious bikers" riding "serious machines" that set them back hundreds of dollars.

McMullen and Jaeger, they're just having fun. The savings in gas and the extra energy they feel — those are simply bonuses. Together, they bike for two hours most weekdays, about 18 miles round trip.

"It goes by so fast," McMullen said. "We feel like we're doing something good for ourselves and the environment, and it guarantees when you get to work you're in great mood, because you feel so alive. We love it."

The pair take the Riverwalk from the Trade Center in Columbus to their Fort Benning office.

Jaeger recommends the 15-mile Riverwalk. They share it with bikers, joggers and an abundance of wildlife. So far they have sighted rabbits, squirrels, armadillos and a fox, but they're keeping an eye out for alligators.

"When you come on the Riverwalk, it's wonderful," Jaeger said. "It's so beautiful and peaceful. We just feel relaxed."

McMullen parks her car at Jaeger's house, near the Trade Center, each morning and the two set out from there. But there are plenty of places to park by the Riverwalk, including Rotary Park, Rigdon Park, behind the Trade Center, at Oxbow Meadows and on Broadway.

Both women said they once had trouble fitting exercise into their schedules, but now they are more productive throughout the day, which more than makes up for the extra time it takes to commute.

McMullen said it has even helped her sleep better.

Commuting to work on two wheels is easier than people think, Jaeger said.

"We're not talking about serious biking here; we're just talking about enjoying the day," she said. "We ride side by side, and we talk all the way. It's just fun. Try it. Take it a little bit at a time and see what you can do."

McMullen and Jaeger plan to keep pedaling to work, even after school starts, and they welcome company.

"We would love to have a crowd. We promise you will be surprised how far you can go and how much fun it is," McMullen said.

For more information about the Riverwalk, call 706-653-4189 or 706-653-4190.

John King, 7, watches his sister Whitney, 3, eat a chocolate covered cricket as he eats a cricket lollypop.

Oxbow's annual Insectival draws hundreds

Crickets taste like burnt popcorn.

Chocolate covered crickets taste like candy.

Cheddar-flavored mealworms taste like stale crackers.

Depending on who you asked, the critters served up at the Oxbow Meadows' Insectival were yucky or yummy or, hmm, not bad at all.

The ninth annual Insectival Sunday, which drew more than 400 guests, included a cricket spitting contest, a Madagascar hissing cockroach race and an insect expo, featuring the world's deadliest scorpion, tarantulas, ants and pond flies.

"You gotta break the legs off so they don't get stuck in your mouth," he said. "It's also important to swish the bug in your saliva for about thirty seconds so you get some weight on him. Then roll your tongue and spit."

After four tries, Andreen won the contest after spitting 29 feet, 9.5 inches — less than one inch shy of the world record.

Personnel choose books for the 12-hour flight to Iraq Friday. Vietnam veteran Ken Sines distributes the books every week.

Retired Soldier still part of the team

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Retired Lt. Col. Ken Sines said he wants to remain "part of the Soldier team." The Vietnam veteran has served with the Directorate of Combat Developments on post for several years, and now, at 73 years old, he supports personnel deploying through the CONUS Replacement Center.

As an Association of the United States Army volunteer, Sines distributes free books, Bibles, exercise bands, inflatable pillows, eye masks, playing cards and other donated items for CRC Soldiers and civilians who deploy out of Freedom Hall.

"Week in, week out, every Friday, Ken is there," said retired Lt. Col. Steve Hesler, AUSA chapter vice president for programs.

Hesler and Sines started meeting outgoing CRC flights in 2003. By 2006, Sines had committed to be at the airfield every weekend.

"It became his mission in life," Hesler said. "He's the epitome of the volunteer. He feels like the Soldiers are counting on him to be there. He doesn't want to let them down. He's continuing to support the Army. He wants to do it all."

ASK THE JUDGE

OFFICE OF STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE
Anthony Tempesta

Q: My ex-wife and I have decided to reduce the amount of child support I am paying each month. Can JAG help me?

A: The answer depends on how the monthly child support obligation has been determined. If there is an oral or written agreement between the parties, such agreements can usually be modified by mutual consent.

A written agreement is always better than an oral agreement, because the terms of a written agreement are clearly set out and there is no room for misunderstanding.

Because you said your ex-wife however, which means there was a divorce action, the issue of child support was probably addressed in a court order.

Once the court has issued an order, the order stands until such time as it is changed by another court order. If the parties agree to change the child support amount therefore, they need to go back to court and get an amended order.

Many people complain that this is an expensive burden and say that they should simply be able to adjust court-ordered child support if they both agree.

Unless the court order gives the parties the ability to modify terms amongst themselves — and they almost never do — the party who stops paying what the court ordered is technically in violation of a court order.

This can lead to legal difficulties such as a contempt of court action, wage garnishment and seizure of your income tax refund.

The Legal Assistance Division cannot prepare court orders, but can discuss the matter with you.

To schedule an appointment, call the Legal Assistance Division at 706-545-3281.

Sines: Gives books to departing CRC personnel

Sines loads and unloads more than 1,000 paperbacks every Friday.

Personnel take about 250 books with them each flight, and Sines replaces these with as many popular titles as possible. He also seeks inexpensive or donated books for distribution.

"He has been an unsung hero who just took it on his own to say goodbye to Soldiers on their way to Afghanistan or Iraq," said Carl Pignato, a former coworker. "I think it's his way of saying thank you for their service."

Pignato said he was inspired by Sines' dedication.

"He's always been a standup, true professional officer," he said. "He's been retired for some time, and yet he's still trying to make a difference. Whether it's at 9 o'clock at night or 3 o'clock in the morning, Ken Sines is out there. He's doing it because he cares about Soldiers, and he feels it's the right thing to do. And I think that's an inspiration — to make that kind of caring sacrifice, to still be out there. He didn't walk away. He still cares."

Sines said what he does isn't much, but it's something he plans to continue until the last flight comes home.

"They need somebody to be responsible and to be here for the troops," he said. "I'm retired Army, so I help them any way I can."

He talks with anyone who comes to his stand. He also helps them sort through the books for specific authors, titles and genres.

Personnel often wait several hours in Freedom Hall before boarding their flight. That's the time to be there, Sines said.

"When he's down there the Soldiers have already said goodbye to the their families," Hesler said. "All the hugs are done, the cheers, all the farewells, the tears are done. They're Soldiered up. They have their game faces on. They don't expect to see anyone down there seeing them off."

That's when Sines is proud to show his appreciation for their service.

"They deserve it," he said. "And it's a good feeling. It makes me feel alive. There's no question about it. It makes you feel like you're part of them again. Camaraderie, I guess you'd call it. It's just the military family you're a part of. You have a church family, you have a military family and you have cousins and uncles. It's all part of being an American."

Commuting by vanpool saves money, eases congestion

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

"About 264 miles to the gallon: you can't beat it," said Bill Hogue, who commutes 72 miles round trip from Waverly Hall, Ga., to Fort Benning Monday through Friday.

His personal vehicle, a Ford F-150 SuperCrew, doesn't get that kind of mileage, but the white van he drives every day, carrying 12 other passengers, does. It replaces 13 vehicles that would otherwise be out on the road, he said.

Hogue joined the DoD vanpool a few weeks ago. The financial gain was his biggest incentive.

"It was a no-brainer," he said. "You can save on gas, save on insurance, save on wear and tear on your vehicle and cut down on the mileage of your vehicle. I was spending at least $600 a month on gas, so it was an automatic savings of almost $480. It's a win-win situation any way you look at it."

Hogue, an Army contractor with the Maneuver Center Realignment Coordination Cell, now spends about $120 on gas and his share of the van rental each month.

Military personnel from all branches and DoD Civilians are eligible to save even more money through the Army Mass Transportation Benefits Program.

Through this program, virtually all expenses of the commute are paid, said Peter Lukken, Fort Benning's sustainability planner. Participants receive vouchers every month for up to $115. The voucher is turned in to Enterprise to pay for the van and any leftover money takes care of the gas.

Lukken uses the vanpool and has reduced his driving costs considerably. It's also an enjoyable ride, he said.

"I used to never have time to read the paper," Lukken said, "and now I get to read it every morning or catch up on work or plan for the day. It's a much less stressful commute. I can't imagine anyone being displeased with it. By the end of the month, we expect to have six vans running, and by the end of the year, as many as 20 to 25."

As the installation transitions to the Maneuver Center of Excellence, more vehicles will be coming on post, and vanpooling is a smart way to limit congestion, Lukken said.

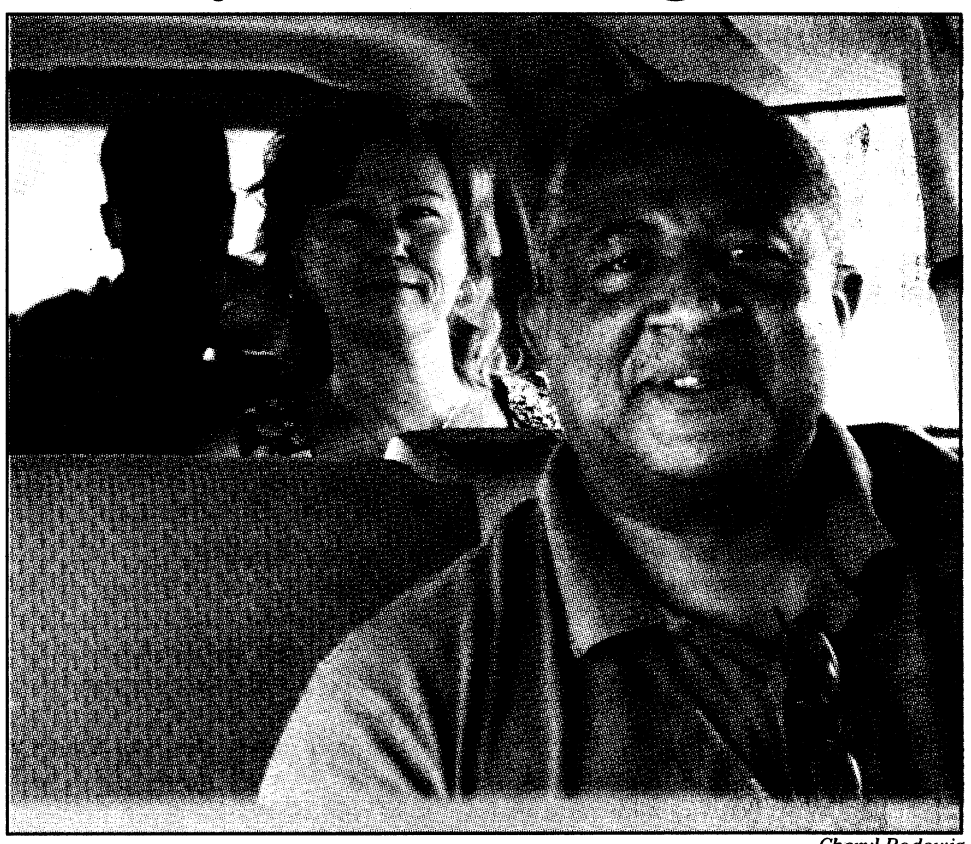
Fewer vehicles also means fewer accidents, said Hogue, who makes two stops on his route, one at the Methodist church in Ellerslie, Ga., and another at the new Wal-Mart near J.R. Allen Parkway in Columbus. Both the church and Wal-Mart agreed to allow commuters to leave their cars in the parking lot for the day.

While his vanpool accommodates a 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. work schedule, Hogue encourages other Fort Benning personnel to sign up for a vanpool that works for them. Vanpools originate from Opelika, Ala., Fort Mitchell, Ala., Russell County, Harris County and Americus, Ga. More are planned for the near future, including one from Newnan, Ga., and LaGrange, Ga.

Log on to https://warrioruniversity.army.mil, access the vanpool forum and post your commuting needs. Vanpool coordinators do their best to match up commuters with an appropriate van, Hogue said.

For more information, visit www.asafm.army.mil/rabp/masstrans or call Lukken at 706-545-1812.

"It's a really good deal," Hogue said. "Once people realize the (potential) savings, it's only going to get bigger."



Cheryl Rodewig

Terry Legette, Theresa Williams and Charles Henry prepare to leave Infantry Hall, with Bill Hogue as their driver, for the commute home July 10. By being part of the DoD vanpool, they save money on gas, reduce traffic congestion and help improve community air quality.

"You can save on gas, save on insurance, save on wear and tear on your vehicle and cut down on the mileage of your vehicle. ... It's a win-win situation any way you look at it."

— Bill Hogue

Green commuters have a guaranteed ride home for emergencies

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

People who vanpool, carpool, bicycle or walk to work are helping the environment and making the roads safer for everyone. Now, green-minded commuters have a safety net in case an emergency requires them to leave work in the middle of the day.

The Guaranteed Ride Home program, part of the Georgia RideSmart initiative, allows commuters five free rides home or to their car annually for an unscheduled event.

Examples include unexpected and mandatory overtime or a medical emergency involving the commute partners or immediate family members. Situations related to vehicle failures, appointments and inclement weather are not covered under the program.

After commuters fill out the GRH application at www.myridesmart.com, they are eligible to use the program. In Columbus and Fort Benning, they can call 87-RIDE-FIND to have an Enterprise rental car dropped off at their place of business.

RideSmart is sponsored by the Atlanta Regional Commission, the Georgia Department of Transportation and the Federal Highway Administration. The Web site has many other features for everyone, regardless of commuting style. It features a ride matching service, real-time traffic reports, a commuting costs calculator and information on the Clean Air Campaign's commuter rewards program.

For more information about RideSmart, call 877-433-3463 or visit the Web site.

CROZER KEYSTONE HEALTH SYSTEM

Crozer-Keystone Health Network (CKHN) is the largest primary care and specialty physician network in Delaware County offering an array of specialty and subspecialty services. CKHN is presently expanding it's Emergency Medicine Departments and has several excellent opportunities at various suburban locations to include:

- ✓ FT opportunities at it's Crozer-Chester Medical Center and Springfield Hospital locations
- ✓ FT opportunities at it's Taylor Hospital location
- ✓ as well as the option to fulfill a float position at multiple locations

These opportunities range from a low volume acuity hospital to a small community hospital to a large trauma center. There is also the opportunity to work with or without residents.

Crozer-Chester Medical Center is a level II trauma center and a well-known regional burn center with an annual census of 50,000-55,000 patients per year. 30% of patients are admitted. Night differential included.

Taylor Hospital has 16 beds and a 6 bed fast track area. 38 hours of Doc coverage in the main ED daily and the Fast Track area is open 40 hours a week.

Ideal candidates are Board Certified / Board Eligible Emergency Medicine physicians, residency trained and committed to providing high quality care in a community setting. These are employed positions with competitive salary, LIABILITY INSURANCE WITH TAIL COVERAGE, and other excellent benefits.

Please reply with C.V. to Pam DeVito, Physician Recruiter, Crozer-Keystone Health Network by email at pam.devito@crozer.org.

CROZER KEYSTONE HEALTH SYSTEM

2 Maternal-Fetal Medicine Subspecialist Opportunities

The Crozer-Keystone Health Network Division of Maternal Fetal Medicine is expanding -- we are seeking a Director as well as an MFM Subspecialist staff member – both are excellent full time opportunities for a Board Certified/Board Eligible MFM specialist to join the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology. The practice is located on the campus of a 422-bed tertiary care community teaching hospital, twenty minutes from downtown Philadelphia, PA.

Crozer-Keystone Health Network's Maternal Fetal Medicine Practice is part of a not for profit, well-integrated major provider of community healthcare. The Practice includes a well-equipped diagnostic and testing center, a 28 bed perinatal unit, a Level IIIa NICU, and 12 LDRS. The Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology provides general obstetrics and gynecology, gynecologic oncology, maternal fetal medicine, urogynecology, reproductive endocrinology and infertility, and an accredited OB/GYN Residency Program.

This is an employed position with a clinical academic appointment, competitive salary, malpractice insurance (with tail coverage) and other excellent benefits. Please reply by email with CV to Pam DeVito, Physician Recruiter, Crozer-Keystone Health Network at pam.devito@crozer.org.

Community, Facility, & Organization

The Crozer-Keystone Health Network (CKHN), the largest primary care and specialty physician network in Delaware County and a member of the Crozer-Keystone Health System, is a wellintegrated major provider of community healthcare. The practice is located twenty minutes from downtown Philadelphia, PA, close to beautiful urban and suburban homes and top quality private and public schools. Nationally recognized cultural and sports programs are available, as well as recreation activities for all ages. We are strategically located and only a three hour drive south to Washington, DC, a 90 minute drive north to New York City, 90 minutes east to historical Lancaster county, and less than one hour to the beautiful New Jersey or Delaware beaches.

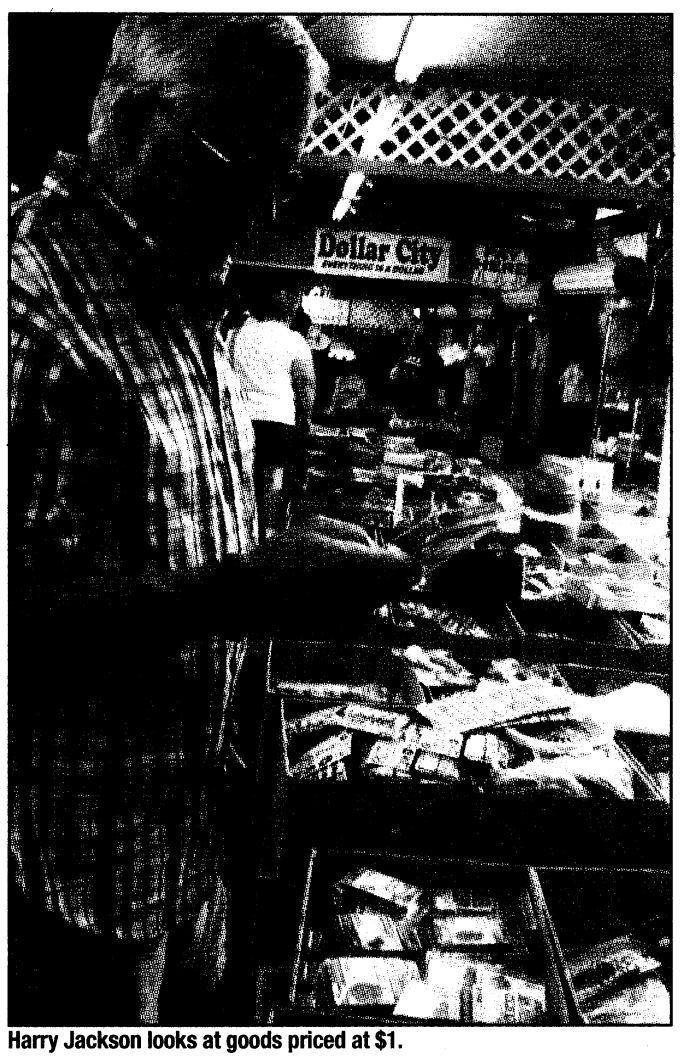
The big dog of flea markets

Photos by Elsie Jackson

Vendors pack the stalls and shoppers crowd the aisles at the Anderson Jockey Lot and Farmers' Market in Anderson, S.C. An estimated 30,000 to 60,000 shoppers visit "Anderson's largest tourist attraction" on weekends.

Jockey Lot flea market offers purses, socks, livestock for sale

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Elsie Jackson



Harry Jackson looks at goods priced at $1.

On a recent road trip to Virginia, I forced my family to take a six-mile detour off I-85 near Anderson, S.C., to the biggest flea market a shopper could ever hope to visit.

Need something? I'll bet it's there. And if it's not there this weekend, it will be next week. More than 2,000 vendors spread their good stuff across 65 acres.

And I do mean stuff. During our all too brief stop, I saw everything from puppies and kittens to brass knuckles, cell phone accessories to gloriously fresh produce and everything in between, all for sale at bargain basement prices.

There was a vendor selling little plastic turtle habitats with plastic palm trees and silver dollar sized baby red ear slider turtles.

"I haven't seen them for sale like that in years," my husband said.

"I figured it was because that wasn't legal any more," I said.

Our daughter was less enamored with the baby turtles, drawn instead to the puppies, kittens, guinea pigs, baby quail, ferrets and parakeets, although the baby snakes on display at another booth were worth a stop.

The booth draped from the rafters down to the floor with soccer jerseys and memorabilia also warranted a visit. A brief transaction with a vendor hawking sunglasses lightened her wallet by $4. That's my kid walking around with the neon yellow glasses with what looks like open louvers in lieu of lenses.

Since she occasionally forgets that socks are not disposable, investing $5 into a dozen pair seemed like a good idea. Once school starts, I'm going to wish I had spent $10.

Elvis lived on at another table, and if I were trying to add to my collection of Elvis, M&M, Hot Wheels, Harley-Davidson or any of a dozen themes, I would have had a field day.

And dollar stores have nothing next to Dollar City, where the proprietor watched over dozens of cardboard boxes of merchandise neatly organized around him.

If you carry a purse and are a purist, settling for nothing less than authentic designer labels, shopping at the Jockey Lot is not for you. But if you don't mind carrying a "designer inspired" version for a fraction of the price, the Jockey Lot is a wonderful place to be.

I use the term "booth" loosely. In places, it looks like one long table on each side of the warehouses. Sometimes it's hard to tell what belongs to who, but the vendors are a friendly bunch and often help each other out.

If you go, don't restrict your visit to the inside of the permanent structures. Wander out back to where vendors set up camp under awnings, or just set up tables. If you don't, you will miss some of the more unusual items, like baby pygmy goats.

The Jockey Lot is touted as "Anderson's Largest Tourist Attraction." With space for more than 2,000 vendors, daily attendance ranges from 30,000 to 60,000. It is open year-round on weekends from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturdays and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sundays.

Plans are being laid to marry up real world with e-commerce sales. I doubt that it will be able to recreate the atmosphere of shopping at the Jockey Lot, but it would save on driving. For now, visit the Jockey Lot Web site at www.jockeylot.com.

With gas at $4 a gallon, a drive from Fort Benning just to visit the Jockey Lot is probably not very practical. But if you are traveling on I-85, it's only six miles out of your way.

From Atlanta, take I-85 North to exit #32. Turn right at the stop sign, then travel East on Highway 29 six miles to the Jockey Lot.

If you're traveling South, from Greenville, S.C., take I-85 South to exit #34 (US Hwy 29). Follow Hwy 29 to the Jockey Lot, which will be on your left.

Look for the landmark Hammond Water District water tower. That ramshackle assembly of long, low warehouses in dire need of paint is the Jockey Lot.

Don't let appearances fool you. It ain't the mall. And with so much stuff for sale at bargain prices, it doesn't need to be.

I'm already looking for an excuse to drive north again. At least as far as Anderson.

OPENING TODAY

THE DARK KNIGHT

The Caped Crusader returns, raising the stakes in his war on crime. In The Dark Knight, Batman (Christian Bale) protects Gotham City from the mad criminal mastermind, the Joker, (Heath Ledger). With the help of Lt. Jim Gordon (Gary Oldman) and District Attorney Harvey Dent (Aaron Eckhart), Batman sets out to destroy organized crime in Gotham for good. The three together prove to be effective, but they soon find themselves prey to a rising criminal mastermind known as the Joker, who thrusts Gotham into anarchy and forces the Dark Knight ever closer to crossing the fine line between hero and vigilante.

MAMMA MIA!

Meryl Streep leads an all-star cast, including Pierce Brosnan, Colin Firth and Christine Baranski in the film adaptation of a musical featuring the music of ABBA. A bride-to-be locates three men, one of whom might be her father, and invites them to her wedding on a Greek island.

Mamma Mia! is rated PG-13 for sex-related comments.

SPACE CHIMPS

Three NASA chimps are sent to a far-away galaxy. Two have "The Right Stuff" and the other is a good-natured goofball with the "wrong stuff."

Space Chimps is rated G.

ALSO PLAYING

JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH

A science professor's (Brendan Fraser) untraditional hypotheses have made him the laughing stock of the academic community. But on an expedition in Iceland, he and his nephew stumble upon a major discovery that launches them on a thrilling journey deep beneath the Earth's surface, where they travel through never-before-seen worlds and encounter a variety of unusual creatures.

Journey to the Center of the Earth is rated PG for adventure action.

HELLBOY II: THE GOLDEN ARMY

After an ancient truce existing between humankind and the invisible realm of the fantastic is broken, hell on Earth is ready to erupt.

Now, it's up to the planet's toughest, roughest superhero to battle the merciless dictator and his marauders. He may be red, horned and misunderstood, but when you need the job done right, it's time to call in Hellboy (Ron Perlman).

His expanding team in the Bureau for Paranormal Research and Defense — pyrokinetic girlfriend Liz (Selma Blair), aquatic empath Abe (Doug Jones) and protoplasmic mystic Johann — will travel between the surface strata and the unseen magical one, where creatures of fantasy become corporeal.

Hellboy II: The Golden Army is rated PG-13 for sci-fi action, violence and language.

MEET DAVE

The man turns out to be a spaceship operated by 100 human-looking aliens who are one-quarter inch tall and seeking a way to save their planet. Complications ensue when their captain falls in love with an Earth woman who's always picked losers for previous romances.

HANCOCK

There are heroes and superheroes, and then there's Hancock (Will Smith). With great power comes great responsibility — everyone knows that — everyone, that is, but Hancock. Edgy, conflicted, sarcastic and misunderstood, Hancock's well-intentioned heroics might get the job done and save countless lives, but always seem to leave jaw-dropping damage in their wake. The public has finally had enough.

Hancock isn't the kind of man who cares what other people think — until the day that he saves the life of PR executive Ray Embrey (Jason Bateman), and the sardonic superhero begins to realize that he may have a vulnerable side after all. Facing that will be Hancock's greatest challenge yet — and a task that may prove impossible as Ray's wife, Mary (Charlize Theron), insists that he's a lost cause.

KITT KITTREDGE: AN AMERICAN GIRL

When a crime spree sweeps Cincinnati, all signs point to the local hobo jungle, where Will and Countee live with a group of their impoverished companions. Kit recruits her friends to help her track down the real culprit.

Kitt Kittredge: An American Girl is rated G.

WALL-E

After hundreds of lonely years of doing what he was built to do as a Waste Allocation Load Lifter Earth-Class, Wall-E (Benjamin Bratt), discovers a new purpose in life, besides collecting knick-knacks, when he meets a sleek search robot named Eve (Elissa Knight) who realizes that Wall-E has stumbled upon the key to the planet's future.

She races back to space to report her findings to the humans who have been awaiting word that it is safe to return home.

Wall-E is rated G.

WANTED

Wes (James McAvoy) is a 25-year-old disaffected, cube-dwelling drone and disengaged slacker. His boss chews him out hourly, his girlfriend ignores him and his life plods on interminably.

There is little for Wes to do but while away the days and die in his slow, clock-punching rut — until he meets a woman named Fox (Angelina Jolie). Wanted also stars Morgan Freeman.

Wanted is rated R for bloody violence, language and sexuality.

GET SMART

Maxwell Smart (Steve Carell) is on a mission to thwart the latest plot for world domination by the evil crime syndicate known as KAOS. When the headquarters of U.S. spy agency Control is attacked and the identities of its agents compromised, the Chief (Alan Arkin) has no choice but to promote his ever-eager analyst Maxwell Smart, who has always dreamt of working in the field alongside stalwart superstar Agent 23 (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson).

Smart is partnered instead with the only other agent whose identity has not been compromised: the lovely-but-lethal veteran Agent 99 (Anne Hathaway).

Get Smart is rated PG-13 for rude humor, violence and language.

THE LOVE GURU

Pitka (Mike Myers) is an American who was left at the gates of an ashram in India as a child and raised by gurus. He moves back to the U.S. to seek fame and fortune in the world of self-help and spirituality. His unorthodox methods are tested when he must settle a rift between Toronto Maple Leafs star hockey player Darren Roanoke (Romany Malco) and his estranged wife.

After the split, Roanoke's wife starts dating L.A. Kings star Jacques Grande (Justin Timberlake) out of revenge, sending her husband into a major professional skid — to the horror of the team's owner Jane Bullard (Jessica Alba) and Coach Cherkov (Verne Troyer).

The Love Guru is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content, language, violence and drug references.

THE INCREDIBLE HULK

Living in the shadows, cut off from the life he knew and the woman he loves, Banner struggles to avoid the pursuit of his nemesis, General Thaddeus "Thunderbolt" Ross (William Hurt).

THINGS to do

Robin Beach at Callaway
TODAY- AUG 10

A white sand beach in the middle of Georgia? Discover it at Robin Lake Beach at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga. Robin Lake has the world's largest, inland, man-made, white sand beach stretching one mile around the 65-acre lake.

Robin Beach is the hub of summer activities like Iceberg Island, a floating water playground as well as miniature golf, table tennis, shuffleboard, beach volleyball, miniature train rides, paddle boats, Rock Wall, Spider Jump and inflatable fun. Don't miss the Florida State University's Flying High Circus performances. And new this summer is the world's biggest inflatable water slide measuring four stories high.

Summer beach hours through Aug. 8 are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. for swimming, paddle boats, miniature golf, table tennis and shuffleboard.

The train runs from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., but closes for lunch from noon to 1 p.m.

The FSU Flying High Circus performances are at 8 p.m. Mondays and Fridays; 3:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays; 1:30 and 4 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

For more information, call Callaway Gardens at 800-225-5292.

Herb Cooking Seminar
SATURDAY

The Columbus Botanical Gardens, 3603 Weems Road, will present a workshop titled Herbs: Scents and Flavors to Preserve and Savor at 9:30 a.m. Saturday at the gardens.

Participants will learn preservation and cooking techniques and will make something to take home. Samples will be available.

The cost is $25 for non-members and $20 for members. For more information, call 706-327-8400 or send an e-mail to watchyourgardengrow@yahoo.com.

Montgomery Museum of Fine Arts
SUNDAY

The Montgomery Museum of Fine Art offers a free docent-led tour at 1 p.m. Sunday. Guided tours are available for groups.

The museum is located at Wynton M. Blount Cultural Park, One Museum Drive, Montgomery, Ala.

For more information, call the museum at 334-240-4333 or e-mail tours@mmfa.org to request a brochure or schedule a tour.

MONDAY

Movie Mondays at the Riverwalk Amphitheater in Montgomery, Ala., are free. Gates open at 6 p.m. Come see Dr. Seuss' Horton Hears a Who on July 21. Full concessions will be available. For more information, call 334-241-2100. The Amphitheater also has a splash pad fountain of water for children, and the surround sound system provides crystal-clear quality audio for each event.

Astronomy Nights
MONDAY-AUG 4

CSU's Coca-Cola Space Science Center continues its Monday evening Astronomy Night series through Aug. 4 at Callaway Gardens' Overlook Pavilion in Pine Mountain, Ga. Programs are free and start at 9 p.m. For more information, call 706-649-1470 or go to http://www.ccssc.org.

Rush
TUESDAY

Part of their Snakes and Arrows Tour, Rush will perform at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Verizon Wireless Amphitheater, 2200 Encore Parkway in Alpharetta, Ga.

For more information, call 678-297-2811.

Feast For The Eyes
JULY 25

A Feast for the Eyes will be at 6 p.m. July 25 at the Joseph House Art Gallery, 828 Broadway, Columbus. The gallery artist will create artworks with a "flair for cuisine." Each room will feature a different food course to accompany the artwork. It is free and open to the public.

For more information, call Jo Farris at 706-321-8948 or send an e-mail to jospehhouseartgallery@yahoo.com

JULY 26

Take the Plumleaf Azalea Hike from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. July 26. The hike, for ages 10 and older, is in The Preserve at Callaway Gardens, an area accessible to visitors only on guided programs, and is 2.5 miles long.

Trails have a natural, uneven surface and require sturdy walking shoes. In case of inclement weather, hikes and walks may be canceled.

The fee is $5 for members and $6 for non-members. Registration required; directions are sent with confirmation letter. For more information, call 800-CALLAWAY or visit www.callawaygardens.com.

Wilderness Survival Training
JULY 26, AUG 9, AUG 23

Imagine being stranded alone in the wilderness with night approaching. Learn how to build a shelter and make fire by friction at Providence Canyon near Lumpkin, Ga. The training is from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. July 26, Aug. 9 and Aug. 23. The cost of the program is $1 per person. Participants must be 14 or older. Pre-registration is required.

Providence Canyon is one of the seven wonders of Georgia. It has a three-mile hiking trail that circles nine canyons and a seven-mile back country trail. It is located eight miles west of Lumpkin on Highway 39C. A park pass is $3. For more information, call 229-838-6202 or visit www.gastateparks.org.

Sci-Fi under the Stars
JULY 27

CSU's Coca-Cola Space Science Center, on 701 Front Ave., will screen the 1964 film First Men in the Moon at 9 p.m. July 27 on the center's south lawn.

An adaptation of an H. G. Wells novel, the plot is based on a 1960s United Nations lunar mission that revealed evidence of a moon landing from earth several decades earlier.

The program is free and part of the center's Sci-Fi Under the Stars series. Guests are invited to bring snacks, lawn chairs and bug spray. For more information, call 706-649-1470 or go to http://www.ccssc.org.

Miles of trails at Auburn University
ONGOING

There are miles of wooded hiking and birding trails —15 named trails through a variety of animal habitats, ponds, streams, native azalea and fern viewing area, waterfalls and a butterfly garden at the 110-acre Louise Kreher Forest Ecology Preserve at Auburn University.

For more information, visit www.fp.auburn.edu/preserve.

Hyundai tours
ONGOING

The Hyundai Motor Manufacturing Alabama plant, located on 1,744 acres of land in Montgomery, Ala., offers free tours of its 2-million square-foot manufacturing plant and includes the stamping, welding, paint, vehicle assembly and engine shops. The hour long, guided tram tour is available Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9:30 a.m., 12:30 and 2 p.m. The tour is suitable for first-graders and above.

For more information, call 334-387-8019 Monday-Friday between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. or visit the Web site at www.hmmausa.com.

Walking tours in Monroeville, Ala.
ONGOING

Take one of the three self-guided walking tours in Monroeville, Ala:

• 1930s Monroeville — see some of the sites made famous by Harper Lee's To Kill A Mockingbird.

• Historic Downtown Monroeville — walk the downtown square and view historic sites and buildings. To request a guide, call 251-743-2879.

• Volkswalk is a 10K walk through historic Monroeville neighborhoods including Whitey Lee Park and lake. Pick up your map and points of interest information at the Monroeville Police Station, 49 South Mount Pleasant Ave.

While in Monroeville, visit Monroe County's Old Courthouse Museum. There are permanent exhibits on Truman Capote, Harper Lee and the Old Courthouse made famous by To Kill A Mockingbird. The museum's phone number is 251-575-7433 or 251-743-2879.

For more information on these and other Monroeville activities, call the Chamber of Commerce at 251-743-2879.

Botanical gardens in Dothan
ONGOING

The reasons to visit the Dothan Area Botanical Gardens keep growing. A tranquil, paved nature trail meanders through a beautiful rose garden, through herbs, day lilies, camellias, azaleas, past a peaceful pond, Victorian gazebo and a demonstration garden. The gardens are open daily from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. For more information, call 334-793-3224 or visit www.dabg.com.

U.S. community colleges face a 'turning point'

By Web Bryant, USA TODAY

By Mary Beth Marklein
USA TODAY

As enrollments climb amid rising demands for educated workers, two-year institutions are seeking more respect — and scrambling for more money

By Betty Young's count, it's been nearly three years since Jay Leno has made any cracks at the expense of community colleges. She should know: In the fall of 2005, after he had taken what she thought was a string of cheap shots, Young rode her Harley-Davidson more than halfway across the country to his Tonight Show studios and asked him to lay off.

He made no promises, but Young, a graduate and longtime president of community colleges, considers Leno's silence on the subject these days a victory. Perhaps more important, her public relations trek served as a sort of rallying cry for community college leaders nationwide. Tired of their image as the Rodney Dangerfields of higher education, they have become increasingly vocal in their demand for respect. Nothing less than the nation's economic future is at stake, they argue.

They might be right. Community colleges train 80% of the country's police officers, firefighters and emergency medical technicians and more than half of its new nurses and health care workers. They are the go-to destinations for displaced

Spending on vets exceeds 1947 high

U.S. still not meeting needs, lawmaker says

By Gregg Zoroya
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The federal government is spending more money on veterans than at any time in modern history, surpassing the tidal wave of spending following World War II and the demilitarizing of millions of troops.

Expenditures hit $82 billion in 2007, because of the rising cost of health care, the expense of caring for an aging population of mostly Vietnam War veterans and a new crop of severely wounded troops from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

That exceeds the $80 billion in inflation-adjusted dollars spent in 1947 after most of the 16.1 million Americans serving in World War II left the service, according to a Congressional Research Service report submitted to Congress last month.

An 11% hike in spending to $91 billion is slated for this fiscal year, and the Department of Veterans Affairs has proposed $94 billion for 2009. And still more is needed, says U.S. Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., who is seeking another $3.3 billion for the 2009 budget proposal.

"While we are spending more than in previous years, we are still not meeting many of the health care and benefits needs of our veterans," Murray says.

Last month's passage of a new G.I. Bill will add $100 billion in education benefits for veterans over the next 10 years, the Congressional Budget Office says.

Republican presidential candidate John McCain and his Democratic opponent Barack Obama clashed over the bill last month. McCain opposed it, saying its increased education benefits might encourage troops to leave the military. Obama backed the bill, saying it would boost the number of people interested in serving.

Also, medical costs could climb because of unanticipated long-term problems from wounds such as traumatic brain injuries, which remain little understood, says Adrian Atizado, assistant legislative director with the Disabled American Veterans.

Annual costs for a severe head injury can reach $400,000, according to a RAND Corp. study released this year.

About 1.6 million Americans have served in Iraq and Afghanistan. About 325,000 of those veterans use VA health care, records show. There are 5.5 million veterans of all ages now receiving VA health care and 2.9 million receiving compensation. Those populations overlap and the VA does not have a current figure on total number of veterans served.

Costs soared in 1947 because of a massive exodus of troops from the military, all entitled to education, training and loan guarantee benefits under the then-new G.I. Bill, the report says. Actual dollars spent in 1947 were $8.4 billion, the report says. Then, health care was only 12% of the veterans budget, says Dan Tucker, deputy assistant secretary for budget at the Department of Veterans Affairs. Now health care costs make up 44% of the budget.

Costs fell precipitously after 1947, surging slightly in 1975-76 because of Vietnam-era veterans, the report says. Roughly a third of the nation's 23.5 million veterans served in Vietnam.

Economy's stuck, but business is booming at therapists' offices

Mental health experts say financial stress taking a toll

By Marilyn Elias
USA TODAY

The struggling economy is hurting many Americans' mental health: Anxiety, depression, sleep problems and money-rooted marital conflicts are growing, experts around the USA say.

Requests for therapists increased 15% to 20% in the past three months, "primarily driven by concerns about the financial situation," says Richard Chaifetz, chairman and CEO of ComPsych in Chicago, the nation's largest employee-assistance mental health program. The program has more than 24 million members.

The number of people online who talk about economic problems triggering stress has surged, says John Grohol, a psychologist and publisher of Psych Central.com. "It's rare to see one topic so infiltrating the concerns of people who otherwise seem to have nothing in common," he says.

Joy Browne, a psychologist in New York whose WOR radio network talk show airs on 200 stations, says that for about a year she has been hearing from working-class listeners who have been beset by layoffs and hair-trigger tempers at home. But now even upper-middle-class people are taking a hit to their emotional well-being.

"They expected to retire, and now they can't," Browne says. "They're being asked to take care of their grandchildren's education. They have homes they can't sell, and they can't travel."

In Plantation, Fla., Priscilla Marotta says: "People are more agitated, anxious and angry. ... You wouldn't believe how much the economy is talked about in therapy these days. It's the first time I've seen it in 20 years of practice, and I'm hearing the same thing from colleagues across the country."

More than half the clients in her middle-class practice talk about economic fears, and one-quarter to one-third say financial stress was the main reason they sought therapy. Both were rare occurrences until the past six months, Marotta says.

In other cities:

▶ Barrington, R.I. Layoffs, job insecurity and college expenses are stressing out even fairly well-off patients, psychiatrist Scott Haltzman says.

▶ Los Angeles. In an area where 50-mile work commutes are common, gas prices are hammering people, psychiatrist Judith Orloff says. "I've had patients who were laid off and others worried about whether they can afford to get kids to faraway schools they need for special education." Sleep problems are soaring, she says. "They lie awake at night and worry."

▶ New York. Male managers who never had trouble switching jobs before now see their options closed, and they feel their masculinity eroding, says Alon Gratch, a psychologist. "The job situation creates crises at home. People are less tolerant of one another, and there's more conflict."

Many don't stick with community college, so success rates suffer workers and immigrants seeking language and cultural skills. Community colleges are where people most often go when they need to brush up on math or English before pursuing a college degree. And they have become increasingly attractive to families who can't afford to send their kids to a four-year school.

Now, community college leaders insist that their institutions, created to serve their local communities, have grown even more important on a larger stage. If the USA wants to keep pace with other industrialized nations, studies show, more of its workforce will need to be educated, including those who have traditionally been left behind by higher education: low-income students, working adults, underserved minorities and those who need remedial help before college. Community colleges, which were founded on the very notion that anybody who wants an education ought to be able to get one, are positioned to serve those populations, advocates say.

"This is really a turning point," says Travis Reindl of Jobs for the Future, a Boston non-profit focused on education and the workforce. "Some kind of education beyond high school is becoming a universal expectation."

Even so, as a policy concern, community colleges "are often invisible," says a report released in February by a national commission of community college leaders. Collectively, they survive on budgets that average about one-fifth of those of their four-year public counterparts.

In 2000-2001, the latest year for which Education Department data are available, the nation spent $140 billion on four-year public universities and just under $30 billion for public two-year colleges. That ratio has remained relatively stable over the years.

Yet for the last decade, enrollments have been increasing faster at two-year schools than four-year schools. Today, community colleges enroll 6.5 million degree-seeking students, or nearly half (47%) of all college undergraduates. And no one documents the expanding demand nationwide for non-credit courses such as English as a Second Language and workforce training. An estimated 5 million students are enrolled in those kinds of programs, says the American Association of Community Colleges, a Washington non-profit that gets data from its 1,200 member schools.

A wider audience appears to be acknowledging the role two-year colleges play in today's economy. The association has lobbied members of Congress — 205 in the House and 31 in the Senate — who are crafting legislation to help two-year colleges compete for more federal funds.

The Bush administration was the first to have a deputy assistant Education secretary for community colleges. And presidential hopefuls Barack Obama and John McCain have discussed plans to help community colleges.

"All things are possible": Amy Tan, who wrote such popular novels as The Joy Luck Club and The Kitchen God's Wife, says community college put her on a path to be a best-selling author.

For Amy Tan, it all began at community college

Author Amy Tan, 56, whose best-selling novels include The Joy Luck Club and The Kitchen God's Wife, attended San Jose City College in California before transferring to San Jose State University.

Going to a community college "was a wonderful decision," she said at a meeting of the American Association of Community Colleges in April. "Perhaps it was the only decision I could have made. I didn't have a lot of money, and I was putting myself through college. I earned a little money working in a pizza parlor. Tuition back then was $10 per semester. I could afford that.

"We were like the $1.99 family where you went to the restaurant, and you took all you could, and you ate all you took. When I was in college, you could take as many courses as you wanted for the same price. I took so many classes, I couldn't finish the homework.

"Today, I am a writer. And it astonishes me because nothing in my life — looking back, in those early days — ever would have led me to believe that I would become a writer. All things are possible. When your hopes are huge, all things are possible."

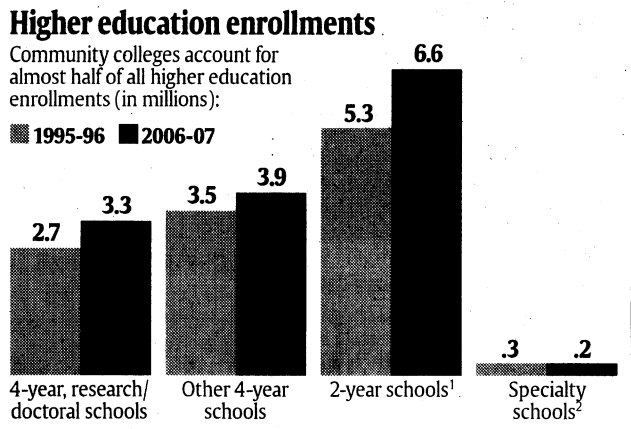
Higher education enrollments

Community colleges account for almost half of all higher education enrollments (in millions):



1 – Offering associate degrees. Includes community, junior and technical colleges.
2 – Offering degrees from bachelor's to doctorate, typically in a single field. Includes medical, business, art, music, design and law schools.

Businesses also are examining ways to better tap into community colleges. "The skills and capabilities we need in our workforce have changed dramatically," says William Green, CEO of Accenture, a consulting firm. A community college graduate himself, Green says they are "overlooked and underappreciated."

Some needs unmet

In 2001, Bruce Haupt was a high school dropout making $13 an hour. Today, at 26, he is enrolled at the Harvard Kennedy School and plans a career in community college administration. Without the support of "a couple of very key professors" and others while a student at Brevard Community College in Florida, he says, "I certainly would not be where I am today."

And yet, many of those who attend community college are far less successful. In the first six years after enrolling in a community college, only 36% of students earn a certificate or an associate's or bachelor's degree, according to an analysis of federal data by the Community College Research Center at Teachers College, Columbia University in New York. And just 51% of freshmen attending two-year institutions return for sophomore year, compared with a 69% national average for all public and private higher education institutions, says 2007 data from non-profit ACT Inc.

By Michael M. Brown, Northwest State Community College

Lesson for Leno: Betty Young on the Harley she rode to the NBC studios from Northwest State Community College in Archbold, Ohio.

There are countless stories behind those figures. Courtney Bailey, 19, who pursued a criminal justice degree last year at a community college in El Cajon, Calif., quit because "a lot of it just seemed like a waste of my time." Plus, her history teacher "hated me. ... He told me I didn't appreciate history enough so he wasn't going to pass me." She hopes to join a police academy when she turns 21.

Phil Bertoni, who teaches math part time at Lincoln Land Community College in Springfield, Ill., says students in developmental (sometimes called remedial) classes, particularly older students who work and support families, sometimes are surprised by the workload. "I would say, 'Look, I'm here to help. ... I want you to get through this with at least a C. But you have to do your part by attending class, doing assignments, being prepared, performing on quizzes and tests, asking questions. ... Gradually, then, the drops would come, and finally I would end up with about half of what I started out with."

The challenge ahead

Some community college presidents and educators say it's unfair to expect higher success rates, considering their shoestring budgets and their multiple goals. Like their four-year counterparts, though, they are under growing pressure to ensure that more students succeed.

A report released in June by California's Legislative Analyst's Office, for example, concluded the state's 109 community colleges "fail to provide a substantial number of new students with required orientation and counseling services," and teaching approaches "are often not aligned with students' learning styles."

Surveys conducted at hundreds of community colleges suggest California's schools are not unusual. Last year, the Community College Survey of Student Engagement, an initiative that helps schools assess whether students are engaged in practices that lead to learning, found that more than half of 310,000 students on more than 500 campuses reported they got little to no attention from advisers in their first four weeks. Nearly half (47%) said they had never talked with instructors outside of class about class, grades or assignments.

Such findings worry community college advocates. "If we're going to stake the future of our communities and our country on the ability of community colleges to educate more people, they are going to have to show us they're able to do it," says Kay McClenney, director of the survey at the University of Texas-Austin.

But the news is not all bad. In the last few years, a number of initiatives have been developed to help community colleges better track and understand student behavior. And a recent analysis found students at some community colleges reported notably higher levels of classroom participation in several categories than did freshmen at four-year research institutions.

While it's difficult to draw sweeping conclusions, "clearly some community colleges are providing a superior-quality undergrad education than a four-year" school, says researcher Kevin Carey, a policy analyst with Education Sector, a Washington think tank. He urges community college leaders to build on such data to ensure all students have a positive experience. If they did, he is willing to bet, community colleges could shed their junior status once and for all.

When it comes to educating undergraduates, four-year colleges are "afraid of being compared to you," he told community college leaders at a recent conference. The reason is simple, he says: "They have no way to go but down."

Four-year schools tend to get a bigger share of the revenue pie

But funding alone doesn't always produce results

By Mary Beth Marklein
USA TODAY

It's no coincidence that the most selective private universities also tend to be the richest. Or in the public realm, that the more elite an institution is, the more public money it gets. Higher education traditionally has favored the best and brightest.

But that status quo increasingly is being challenged, buttressed by growing consensus that the nation's best and brightest alone can't keep the U.S. workforce afloat in an increasingly global economy.

Today, the more urgent need is to ensure that more people complete at least some higher education, says a paper distributed this spring to presidential candidates. And "the fastest, most effective way" to achieve that is to focus on helping students who are most at risk of failing, says the paper by the non-profit State Higher Education Executive Officers.

Such students are most likely to begin their college education at community colleges, which sit at the bottom of the pecking order for funding for higher education. The country spends about three times more to educate students at four-year universities than to educate community college students, Education Department data show. Even after adjusting for funding to cover research or other functions not directly related to student education, community colleges "still receive dramatically less than their four-year" counterparts, says Jane Wellman of the Delta Cost Project, a Washington non-profit that studies higher education finance.

> "We must stop giving community colleges straw and expecting spun gold."
>
> — Gail Mellow, president
> LaGuardia Community College

On top of that, at a time when many states are cutting higher education budgets, community colleges feel the pain the most. That is true even when cuts are made evenly, because community colleges rely more than four-year institutions on state money.

Not only do they spend less on each student than their four-year counterparts, funding dropped between 2002 and 2006 while funding for all other sectors of higher education either remained level or increased.

To Gail Mellow, president of LaGuardia Community College in New York, the disparity "is shocking." Mellow spoke in February to nearly 1,500 higher education leaders and scolded her audience for allowing it to happen: "We must stop giving community colleges straw and expecting spun gold."

The argument for such differences primarily has to do with mission. Community colleges are "strong at communicating knowledge but they're not in the discovery-of-knowledge business," says Mark Yudof, who recently left the chancellorship of the University of Texas system to become president of the University of California system.

And academic research costs more than teaching. "Community colleges are underfunded, but I think four-year (institutions) are, as well," he says.

Many higher education experts, including Yudof and Mellow, agree more money alone is not the solution.

Last year, a state-by-state analysis comparing funding with productivity found that more money doesn't necessarily lead to higher degree-completion or retention rates.

Wyoming and Colorado, for example, each awarded credentials to about 20% of undergraduates in 2003, but Colorado spent about $5,600 a student, while Wyoming spent $9,700. Georgia spent about the same amount as Colorado but awarded credentials to 31% of its undergraduates.

Community colleges in some states "could improve their performance given the resources they already have, because many other states are already doing so with the same or less," says the non-profit National Center for Higher Education Management Systems, the Colorado consulting firm that did the study.

Even so, a growing chorus of voices are urging new priorities.

"As a nation, we tend to spend more on the education of the gifted, and it's hard to argue against that," says Paul Lingenfelter, president of the State Higher Education Executive Officers group. "But many students at community colleges need more support. ... If we really want to get better results ... we're going to have to pay for it."

NYC makes multilingualism official

Mayor Michael Bloomberg ordered city agencies Tuesday to offer services in the six foreign languages spoken most often in New York: Spanish, Chinese, Russian, Korean, Italian and French Creole.

Many services have been available in foreign languages for years, but the order marks the first uniform, citywide policy requiring agencies to provide assistance and translations. Bloomberg, an independent, said the 1.8 million New Yorkers who struggle with speaking English should be able to interact more easily with the government. "No other place on Earth can claim such incredible diversity — it is New York City's greatest historic strength — but it can also create significant challenges," he said.

Railroad to pay $102M in wildfire case

Union Pacific Railroad will pay $102 million to settle a federal lawsuit over damage caused by a California wildfire sparked by railroad workers in 2000. U.S. Attorney McGregor Scott said it is the U.S. Forest Service's largest-ever damage recovery for a wildfire and sets a precedent for assessing "the true, inherent value of forest land."

Union Pacific agreed to settle after a federal judge in Sacramento ruled against it in February, railroad spokeswoman Zoe Richmond said. Judge Frank Damrell said the government could seek more than $13 million for loss of public recreation and wildlife habitat, and as much as $33 million to plant new trees and $122 million for lost timber.

EPA postpones ruling on ethanol

The Environmental Protection Agency delayed a decision on Texas' request to lower ethanol requirements for gasoline, a change Gov. Rick Perry says is needed to rein in corn prices. EPA Administrator Stephen Johnson said the agency needs more time to review more than 15,000 public comments and consult with other departments. A decision had been due Thursday; the agency now says it could have a decision in early August. An energy bill passed in December required 9 billion gallons of ethanol to be blended into gas from Sept. 1 to Aug. 31 of next year. Perry, a Republican, asked the EPA in April to cut the requirement because the demand for ethanol is raising corn prices for cattle raisers.

Hurricane set to hit Texas-Mexico border

By Rick Jervis and Oren Dorell
USA TODAY

The winds of Dolly grew to hurricane force Tuesday and the storm was set to hit the Texas-Mexico border today with heavy rains that could cause serious flooding and levee breaks.

Dolly is expected to hit land this morning around Brownsville, just north of the Mexican border, said Colin McAdie, a meteorologist with the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Dolly's winds were clocked at 75 mph, making it just barely a Category 1 hurricane out of a possible five categories. It was expected to dump 15 inches of rain in some places, he said.

A hurricane warning was in effect from Brownsville to Corpus Christi. Meteorologists also warned of possible tornadoes from the storm.

"It's a fairly large, relatively slow-moving hurricane," McAdie said. "There's always reason to be concerned."

By Todd Yates, AP

Anticipating widespread flooding, local emergency officials readied boat rescue teams, opened shelters at schools and urged residents in low-lying and coastal neighborhoods to move to higher ground.

No mandatory evacuation was expected, said John Cavazos, a Cameron County emergency management coordinator.

Emergency officials worried that thousands of mostly Mexican illegal immigrants would not leave during a mandatory evacuation for fear of being deported.

Despite the Border Patrol saying it would not impede evacuations, some local officials have had to assure residents it's OK to leave in an emergency, Cavazos said. "There's still a lot of hesitation on their part," he said.

Another concern was whether levees in the Rio Grande Valley would hold against heavy flooding, said Chuck Hoskins, Cameron County's deputy emergency management coordinator. The levees have not been maintained and have been worn down from motorists driving on them, he said.

"If it does rupture and breach the levees, we have some potential problems," Hoskins said.

Many across the area didn't seem worried about the coming storm. Workers at Amberjack's Bayside Bar and Grill on South Padre Island boarded the restaurant's windows but remained open.

Amberjack's co-owner Lance Mullins said he'll monitor the weather to see whether it turns ugly but plans to stay open. Tuesday was overcast with patches of sun and a strong breeze, he said. "You wouldn't know there was a hurricane out there. ... The people who are here are staying — and having fun."

Professionals in 20s and 30s see chance to leave post-Katrina mark on society

By Rick Jervis
USA TODAY

NEW ORLEANS — Lauren Baum is part of a new wave of residents that could change the face of the city after Hurricane Katrina.

Shortly after the storm pummeled New Orleans, Baum, 26, left a job at a Manhattan public relations firm and moved here. Baum says she was attracted by a sense of adventure and an opportunity to rebuild the city better than before.

Today she works with the Idea Village, a local non-profit group that supports entrepreneurs in the city.

"I drank the Kool-Aid," she says. "We have a real opportunity to make a difference here. You could read about this in history books someday or you could take a role to help create it. I can't imagine being anywhere else right now."

While the population in New Orleans continues to limp back to pre-Katrina levels, a new rush of residents is moving in. They are typically young and educated, some with ties to the city, others without, and all tend to share a common goal: to rebuild a better New Orleans.

WATER MARK
Tracking recovery in New Orleans

Demographers say these "New New Orleanians" could alter the landscape of the city. New Orleans' future may greatly depend on whether these new residents stay and what they do while they're here, says Robert Edgecombe, a demographic analyst with New Orleans-based GCR & Associates.

"Along with the arrival of a large number of Hispanic residents, the number of in-moving 20- and 30-somethings may reflect the most significant changes in the city's demographic composition," he says.

Population more educated

Census data show the post-Katrina New Orleans population is already better educated than the population before the storm. In 2006, 32% of New Orleans residents had college degrees, as opposed to 26% before the storm, and only 19% didn't finish high school, compared with 25% before Katrina, according to a recent Brookings Institution analysis of the data.

A 2007 study by the Center for Bioenvironmental Research at Tulane University estimated a "brain gain" of 2,000 to 3,000 young professional newcomers to New Orleans since the storm, though that number may have grown since. The migration of young professionals is still just a trickle compared with the torrent of evacuees that left the city following the catastrophic floods of 2005, says Richard Campanella, the study's author. The city's population today is estimated at about 300,000, compared with 450,000 pre-Katrina.

The influx of young people is an important evolution in the city's recovery, Campanella says. "It's an encouraging and significant trend," he says. "Young professionals see this as an opportunity to make the world a little better while getting their careers off on the right track."

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., John Alford always wanted to run a charter school. While getting his master's from Harvard Business School, he took classes on the business and economics of schools. He was teaching math at charter schools in Baltimore when Katrina hit. After the storm, he moved to New Orleans and opened the Langston Hughes Academy Charter School, a kindergarten through eighth-grade school for at-risk youths. The school had 100 students in its debut last year and will add 350 next year, Alford says.

"Everyone here realizes for New Orleans to change its course, they need the schools to be high-performing," says Alford, 33.

Nathan Rothstein's greatest concern after graduating from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst with a history degree was not whether he'd land a good job. It was whether he'd be bored in a new career. Rothstein, 24, moved to New Orleans in 2006 and worked for a non-profit group, helping raise community awareness on city planning decisions.

When he noticed other young out-of-towners like himself moving into the city, he launched the YURPs — Young Urban Rebuilding Professionals — Initiative, an online and networking non-profit group that links people interested in New Orleans' recovery. Membership grew from 500 YURPs last summer to 2,400 today, he says.

His experience has been far from boring, he says. "This is our generation's Civil Rights Movement, it's our Freedom Summer," Rothstein says. "When I got here, I soon realized it was a feeling a lot of other people had as well."

Millennials jump in

Today's generation of graduating students — known as Millennials and classified as being born after 1982 — is helping to build communities and is getting involved in ways not seen since World War II, says Neil Howe, a historian and author. They have the highest voting participation rates in decades and are tackling problems created by previous generations, says Howe, who co-wrote the 2000 book Millennials Rising.

"One area everyone is noticing is the Millennial penchant for community service," Howe says.

Tess Monaghan, 24, left a high-profile job as a management consultant in New York City to help run a non-profit in New Orleans. Build Now helps middle-class residents buy affordable homes.

"New York doesn't care if you're there or not," says Monaghan, who grew up in Manhattan and graduated from Yale. "The city doesn't notice. Here, just the act of living here feels like a meaningful contribution."

Polygamist sect leader, 5 others indicted in Texas

The Associated Press

ELDORADO, Texas — A Texas grand jury Tuesday indicted polygamist sect leader Warren Jeffs and four of his followers on charges of felony sexual assault of a child. Another was indicted on a charges of failing to report child abuse.

Attorney General Greg Abbott said the first five men are charged with one count each of sexually assaulting girls under the age of 17. One of them, not Jeffs, faces an additional charge of bigamy.

Abbott said a sixth member of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (FLDS) is charged with three counts of failure to report child abuse.

Jeffs, already convicted of being accomplice to rape in Utah and awaiting trial in Arizona on other charges related to underage marriages, is accused of assaulting a girl in Texas in January 2005, according to the indictment issued Tuesday.

"Our investigation in this matter is not concluded. This is an ongoing investigation," said Abbott, whose office is acting as special prosecutor.

The identities of those indicted with Jeffs were not released because the indictments were sealed until the men can be arrested.

FLDS members have historically lived around the Arizona-Utah line and bought the Yearning For Zion Ranch in Eldorado about five years ago. Calls to spokesmen for the church were not immediately returned Tuesday.

The indictments follow a child custody case in which more than 400 children from the ranch were placed in foster care following a weeklong raid that began April 3.

The Texas Supreme Court ruled child welfare authorities overstepped in taking all the children from their parents and the state failed to show that any more than a handful of teenage girls were abused or at risk.

Prosecutors paint bin Laden aide as top al-Qaeda insider

By Alan Gomez
USA TODAY

GUANTANAMO BAY, Cuba — Salim Hamdan was so close to al-Qaeda's inner circle and so trusted by Osama bin Laden that he knew "the dome," an apparent reference to the U.S. Capitol building, was the fourth target on Sept. 11, prosecutors said during the opening of Hamdan's war crimes trial.

"Virtually no one knew the intended target, but the accused knew," Navy Lt. Cmdr. Timothy Stone said during opening statements at the Navy base here.

That image of the ultimate insider is how prosecutors portrayed Hamdan in the first U.S. war crimes trial since World War II. Hamdan could face life in prison if convicted of conspiracy and providing material support for terrorism.

Prosecutors said the Yemeni not only was bin Laden's driver and bodyguard but also helped the al-Qaeda leader escape after attacks on U.S. embassies in East Africa in 1998 and on New York City and the Pentagon on Sept. 11, 2001.

Hamdan's lawyers told a jury of six U.S. military officers that Hamdan was simply a father who worked for $200 a month in bin Laden's motor pool.

"The evidence is that he worked for wages, he didn't wage attacks on America," Harry Schneider, one of Hamdan's civilian defense lawyers, told the jury. "He had a job because he had to earn a living, not because he had a jihad against America."

Hamdan's trial is the first full test of the military commission system established by President Bush after 9/11. The system was halted by the Supreme Court and later rebuilt by Congress. Nineteen other Guantanamo Bay detainees face trials. Their lawyers, and observers from around the world, are monitoring the trial to ensure it is fair.

In testimony, two U.S. Special Forces soldiers described Hamdan's capture outside Taktapol, a city that U.S. and Afghan forces were overtaking on their way toward Kandahar, Afghanistan.

A team of 16 U.S. soldiers was working with more than 600 Afghan soldiers in the operation. Hamdan was stopped in November 2001 at a checkpoint outside the city with several other cars.

Maj. Hank Smith and an Army Special Forces soldier — whose identity was kept secret because he is still involved in covert operations — said Hamdan tried to run from the stopped cars but was caught. Neither of the U.S. officers saw Hamdan inside the car filled with evidence of terrorist involvement, but prosecutors say he was the driver.

In the car were two SA-7s, surface-to-air rockets, identification cards that didn't belong to him, a book by bin Laden, airline tickets, passport photos and a radio. The unidentified soldier, or "Sgt. Maj. A," said Hamdan also had pink code cards that paired words in Arabic — including the words "nuclear," "biological" and "chemical" — with numbers. Sgt. Maj. A said those codes were commonly used over unsecured radios by terrorist groups.

He also said a letter was found in the car signed by Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar allowing an al-Qaeda member to carry weapons in Afghanistan. The soldier said the back of the letter had the Arabic word for "hawk" on it, which he said was a name commonly used by Hamdan.

The trial resumes today and is likely to last about a month.

Drug abuse soars in Mexico

Better border control linked to new epidemic of addiction as dealers latch onto younger clientele in own backyard, pushing prices down and burdening treatment facilities

By Chris Hawley
USA TODAY

AGUA PRIETA, Mexico — Carlos Antonio López started using crack at age 11 to kill the pain of his mother's death.

"I started with marijuana, but after a while it didn't fill me up anymore," he says. "Then I started on crack. You get obsessed, you can't think about anything else."

Now 18, López is in his sixth stint in rehab.

Not so long ago, stories like López's were unusual in Mexico, where drug addiction had never been a widespread problem. These days, the country is dealing with an unprecedented epidemic of drug use that is partly a result of better U.S. border enforcement, experts say.

The new border fence and intensified patrols by both Mexican and U.S. federal agents have made it harder for Mexican cartels to get drugs into the USA. As a result, more narcotics remain in Mexico where they are sold to local consumers, says Marcela López Cabrera, director of the Monte Fenix clinic in Mexico City, which trains drug counselors.

The number of new patients at Mexican treatment centers has more than quadrupled since 2000. The health ministry has announced plans to build 300 new rehab centers, triple the current total, to deal with the overflow.

"We used to be mainly a country of transit for drugs. Now we've become a consumer," says Ricardo Sánchez, director of research for the health ministry's rehab centers.

Mexican President Felipe Calderón warned last month that cartels are no longer just trying to get drugs to the USA, but generate consumers "here in Mexico who will buy them, and buy them for the rest of their lives."

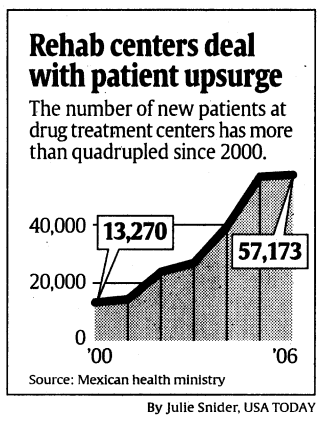
'Never get rid of obsession'

In Agua Prieta, across the border from Douglas, Ariz., the drug peddlers sell crack, meth, heroin, cocaine and marijuana from cars that cruise through the dirt streets. The addicts call them "ice cream trucks."

On the edge of town, recovering addicts gather for their noon pep talk at a private shelter. It's a grim place to have to kick a habit. The dormitories are dimly lit rooms with bare concrete floors. Mentally ill patients wander around a penned-in area with a few chairs. Meals are cooked on an outdoor fire.

The detox area, where patients spend their first days, is a room with a single light bulb off the dormitory. There is no door to muffle screams of newcomers going through withdrawal.

A few years ago, the shelter averaged 50 residents at a time. Now there are 92, and they are getting younger as the price of drugs drops, Assistant Director Miguel Salgado says. A rock of crack costs as little as $2.50 in Agua Prieta, he says.



By Julie Snider, USA TODAY

As bleak as conditions are, López says the shelter is better than the world outside. "I don't like to go out," he says. "Here I'm safe. Out there, you never know, because you never get rid of the obsession for more drugs."

Changing market pressures

President Bush has credited Calderón for sending 20,000 troops to border cities, killing or arresting kingpins and extraditing dozens of suspects to the USA. According to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, the reduced flow of drugs north has helped push cocaine prices higher in many U.S. cities; a gram of pure cocaine sold for about $118.70 in spring 2007.

Meanwhile, cocaine prices in Mexico have plummeted to "practically nothing," says Irving Aguilar, medical director at the Clinicas Claider treatment center in Mexico City. A gram of cocaine sells in central Mexico for about $19, he says. Crack cocaine is $9.50 a rock and getting cheaper.

Crack addicts began outnumbering alcoholics at his clinic in 2003 and now account for about 60% of patients.

Mexican addicts have also begun using drugs — particularly heroin and crystal methamphetamine — that until recently had barely appeared in the local market, Sánchez says.

"Before we didn't have crystal (meth) here in Agua Prieta," says Sergio Panduro, a recovering addict who is a counselor at the shelter. "Now it's here, and we have more youth doing it."

"There are more girls, too, and that's a big change," Panduro says.

Other factors may weigh in. The arrest of top cartel leaders has spawned a class of smaller-time drug smugglers who need the easy money from selling locally, says Arturo Arango, a researcher with the Citizens' Institute for Studies on Crime.

The U.S. crackdown on illegal immigrants has also led to the deportation of Mexicans who have been exposed to the USA's drug culture.

A recent health department study in border cities showed that 23% of Mexican youths who had lived in the USA had tried drugs, compared with 5% of those who had never left Mexico.

All the changes mean it will be hard to beat back the dope peddlers, say recovering addicts and their counselors.

There are at least two crack houses within walking distance of the Agua Prieta rehab facility, Salgado says, and the "ice cream trucks" run all night.

Chinese in poll take positive view of nation

By Calum MacLeod
USA TODAY

BEIJING — People in China, host of next month's Olympic Games, are highly satisfied with their roaring economy and the direction of their nation, according to a poll released Tuesday. Americans appear far more downbeat about the USA, placing fifth from last in the 24-nation survey by the Pew Research Center.

More than eight in 10 Chinese expressed positive views of the way China is going and described the economic situation as good.

When asked identical questions about the USA, two in 10 Americans offered the same upbeat assessment, according to the Pew Global Attitudes Project, which did one of the most comprehensive recent surveys of Chinese attitudes.

More than half the 3,212 Chinese adults interviewed from March to April said China will replace the United States as the world's leading superpower. One in three said they consider the United States as "more of an enemy" than a partner.

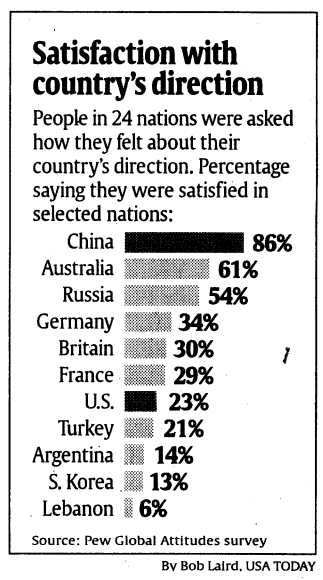
Despite the Chinese's positive sentiments about their country, warning signs should grab the government's attention, said Victor Yuan, chairman of Horizon Research, the polling firm that conducted the interviews for Washington-based Pew.

Chinese "identify with the country's general direction but have many complaints about specific issues. This year, rising prices and environmental worries are new worries that have not previously topped the list of concerns," Yuan said.

He said the respondents in face-to-face interviews were willing to give their opinions.

The poll shows that nearly eight in 10 Chinese said corrupt officials are a big problem, and 72% of those surveyed called rising prices a "very big problem."

Li Xiaozhuang of Beijing said Tuesday that complaints about rising costs and stepped-up security for the Olympics on Aug. 8-24 are widespread.



By Bob Laird, USA TODAY

Li, 46, embodies China's entrepreneurial spirit. He supplements his low wage as maintenance manager at a Beijing karaoke club with earnings from a glass dial workshop set up with friends.

"Vegetables, rice and flour all cost more now, because of global rises and security measures that stop deliveries from outside Beijing," Li said. "The falling dollar hurts our exports, and China's labor costs are rising, too."

Li agreed with 93% of the people surveyed that the Olympics will improve China's image worldwide. As for the competition, 75% said China will top the medals list, despite repeated efforts by sports officials to dampen fevered expectations here.

Other poll highlights:

- China's one-child policy limiting family size is approved by three in four people.
- Levels of personal satisfaction — jobs, family life, incomes — greatly trail overall views of China: 58% said they are very or somewhat satisfied with their household income.
- Seven in 10 said they are better off in a free market, but 89% said the gap between rich and poor is a big problem.

Kurds reject Iraq power-sharing bill

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Iraq's parliament passed a bill Tuesday meant to pave the way for U.S.-backed provincial elections that will redistribute regional authority. The measure was clouded by a Kurdish boycott, and critics predicted the ballot won't be held this year.

The measure still needs to be approved by Iraq's three-member presidential council. The council is led by President Jalal Talabani, a Kurd, who could reject it based on Kurdish objections.

Kurdish legislators, along with the two deputy parliament speakers, walked out of the chamber after lawmakers decided to hold a secret ballot on the bill, which includes a requirement for ethnic power-sharing in the disputed oil center of Kirkuk.

Holding elections for governing councils in Iraq's 18 provinces is seen by U.S. officials as another step toward repairing Iraq's sectarian rifts. Many Sunni Arabs boycotted provincial balloting in January 2005, enabling Kurds and Shiite Arabs to win a disproportionate share of power.

Deputy Speaker Khalid al-Attiyah, a Shiite Arab, said the secret ballot held in the parliament Tuesday was unconstitutional. He accused lawmakers of "arm-twisting."

He said the presidency council was unlikely to approve the bill, meaning it would go back to the parliament for further debate — a move that would make provincial elections this year unlikely.

"It is foolish and absurd to pass a law that has been rejected by an entire bloc," al-Attiyah said at a news conference. "Regrettably, after doing this, I do not see any chance for the elections to be held in this year if this process continues."

Al-Attiyah and the Kurdish deputy parliament speaker, Arif Taifor, suggested that even a December date was optimistic.

Kurdish lawmaker Mahmoud Othman said Kurds would raise the Kirkuk power-sharing provision with the constitutional court.

U.S. death toll

As of Tuesday morning, 4,116 U.S. servicemembers and 11 Defense Department civilians had been identified as having died in the Iraq war: 3,360 from hostile action and 767 from non-combat-related incidents.

Latest death identified:

A Taliban leader surrenders; another killed in Afghanistan

A senior Taliban leader has surrendered to Pakistani authorities, and another insurgent commander was killed by a British airstrike in southern Afghanistan. Lt. Col. Robin Matthews, a spokesman at the British defense ministry in London, said Tuesday that Mullah Rahim, the most senior Taliban leader in Afghanistan's Helmand province, gave himself up to Pakistani officials.

Matthews also said a precision missile strike by British aircraft just after midnight Sunday killed Abdul Rasaq, a Taliban leader who led fighters in the Musa Qala area of Helmand province.

In Kabul, the Afghan capital, a suicide bomber blew himself up Tuesday, wounding three civilians, while clashes in the country's west prompted U.S.-led forces to use airstrikes on Taliban militants, regional police spokesman Rauf Ahmadi said.

Serb nationalists protest Karadzic arrest

Serb nationalists skirmished with riot police in the capital, lashing out against the new Western-leaning government that captured Radovan Karadzic, accused of war crimes in the 1992-95 Bosnian War. His lawyer, Sveta Vujacic, vowed to appeal Serbia's plan to extradite the former Bosnian Serb chief to a United Nations war crimes court.

Riot police were deployed in downtown Belgrade to keep about 200 members of the Obraz group under control. The demonstrators threw stones and clay pots at the officers, chanting "treason!"

Serb officials said they arrested Karadzic on Monday near Belgrade. Karadzic had grown a long beard to conceal his identity. "His false identity was very convincing," said Vladimir Vukcevic, Serbia's war crimes prosecutor who coordinated the security forces arrest. Before his arrest, "he had moved freely in public places," Vukcevic said.

Italy issues guidelines for Roma census

Italy's Interior Ministry issued guidelines for a census of the country's Roma, or Gypsy, population, saying Roma will only be fingerprinted if they don't have valid identification documents.

The guidelines were sent to local authorities in Rome, Milan and Naples, where tens of thousands of Roma live in encampments on the cities' outskirts. Cities began collecting individual data after the government ordered the census as part of a crackdown on street crime.

Obama promises focus on Middle East peace

Before Dem's arrival in Israel, Palestinian attacks near hotel

By Kathy Kiely
USA TODAY

JERUSALEM — Barack Obama plans to emphasize his solidarity with Israel during a visit today that he hopes will build on his vow to bring "sustained energy and focus" on ending the intractable Arab-Israeli conflict.

Upon arrival on a late Tuesday night flight from Jordan, the Democratic presidential candidate delivered a statement at the airport condemning an attack near the hotel where he was to stay. A Palestinian rammed a construction truck early Tuesday afternoon into three cars and a bus, injuring five people before an Israeli civilian shot and killed the attacker.

Obama called the incident "a terrible tragedy" and "one more reminder of why we have to work diligently, urgently and in a unified way to defeat terrorism."

Obama also said the United States must help create "a greater sense that economic progress and increased freedom of movement is something that can be accomplished in the Palestinian territories." Jordan's King Abdullah II advised Obama during meetings in Amman that resolving the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the region's top priority, the Jordanian Embassy said in a statement.

Obama's goal is to reassure Israel on its security while remaining "credible" on Israeli-Palestinian diplomacy, said Aaron David Miller, author of The Much Too Promised Land: America's Elusive Search for Arab-Israeli Peace.

The Illinois senator plans a full day of meetings today that will take him across Israel both geographically and ideologically. It's a day that could enhance his credibility with a key constituency back home: Jewish voters who could tip the balance in states such as New Jersey and Florida. They are being courted heavily by Obama's rival, John McCain, who visited Israel in March.

One sign of doubt about Obama was evident as he pulled into his Jerusalem hotel: About a dozen protesters across the street carried McCain signs that identified them as "Democrats for Israel" and listed the states where they are registered to vote in the U.S. election.

Obama's schedule is heavy on events designed to highlight his sympathy with the suffering of Israelis. He will visit the Holocaust Memorial at Yad Vashem and helicopter to Sderot, a town on the edge of the Palestinian-controlled Gaza Strip that is frequently shelled.

Obama also will get a firsthand look at the checkpoints and fences that present a security nightmare for residents of the Palestinian territories when he drives to Ramallah to meet Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas.

"I hope he will realize how unjust the situation has been to the Palestinian people over the last 60 years," said Mustafa Barghouti, a former Abbas opponent and leader of the Palestinian National Initiative.

Obama should understand that the United States "cannot play the role of an honest broker and at the same time be biased toward Israel," he said.

Both sides may worry that Obama's focus on Iraq and Afghanistan would leave little time for the greater Mideast. Tamara Cofman Wittes of the Brookings Institution's Saban Center for Middle East Policy said, "How much energy does that leave for a U.S. president to dive into Arab-Israeli peacemaking?"

On his meeting with U.S. Gen. David Petraeus: "He wants to retain as much flexibility (in Iraq) as possible. ... But my job as a candidate for president and a potential commander in chief extends beyond Iraq."

On opposing the troop "surge": "With respect to the surge, you know, we don't know what would have happened if the plan that I put forward in January 2007 to put more pressure on the Iraqis to arrive at a political reconciliation, to begin a phased withdrawal" had been pursued.

McCain pushes offshore-drilling plan

'We have to do it' to ward off energy crisis, Republican says

By David Jackson
USA TODAY

John McCain said Tuesday that the nation faces an "energy crisis" with both economic and national security implications, requiring more offshore oil drilling to lower gas prices and offset imports from hostile countries.

"My friends, we have to drill offshore — we have to do it," McCain said during a town-hall-style meeting in Rochester, N.H.

McCain also touted alternatives to oil such as nuclear power and batteries to power cars, and he cast Democratic rival Barack Obama as a foe of increased energy production. Criticizing Obama's opposition to drilling for oil offshore, McCain joked that the campaign should change its slogan from "Yes, we can," to "No, we won't."

Congress must vote every year to renew a federal moratorium on drilling off most of the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, covering 80% of offshore drilling sites. McCain wants the moratorium lifted; Obama doesn't.

Obama spokesman Hari Sevugan said Obama's stand on energy is a $150 billion plan to develop alternative energy sources such as biofuels and low-emission coal plants that would "create millions of new jobs, keep the cost of energy affordable and secure our energy independence once and for all."

McCain says those ideas are no substitute for increasing domestic production of the fuel America depends on most — oil.

Last month, McCain supported a GOP energy plan in the Senate that would have allowed states to request to have the federal moratorium lifted for waters off their coasts. The measure was voted down 56-42.

Last week, President Bush lifted an executive moratorium on offshore drilling; Congress would need to follow suit before drilling could take place. Congress has not yet voted on renewing the moratorium this year.

McCain plans to promote more domestic oil exploration as well as the lifting of the moratorium when he visits New Orleans on Thursday. The Louisiana coast and some areas of the Gulf have oil wells that are exempt from the moratorium.

McCain has argued that 14 billion barrels of recoverable oil are available in waters now off-limits that would wean the U.S. off foreign oil and eventually bring prices down. Loosening the nation's dependence on foreign oil would cut off billions of dollars to countries that "don't like us," he said Tuesday.

McCain had supported the moratorium in his career as a senator. He has voted to allow new drilling in certain specific areas, including a 2006 piece of legislation that involved about 8 million acres off the coasts of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. "He has often voted for more drilling," said Tiernan Sittenfeld, legislative director with the League of Conservation Voters. "But it was a major flip-flop when he said he supported overturning the moratorium."

The league raises money and runs ads opposing candidates it says are anti-environment. It is backing Obama for president.

Although it's true that McCain has voted for the moratorium as part of the Interior Department budget, his aides said that was before gas was averaging $4 a gallon. Using America's own oil is one piece of a new approach to keep energy costs down that includes nuclear power and other fuels, senior adviser Charles Black said.

Nominees aim to polish Air Force image

The two men nominated to replace the ousted Air Force leadership said Tuesday that they'll work to restore trust and confidence in the service, under fire for mishandling its nuclear duties.

"I believe the most urgent tasks for the new leaders are to steady this great institution, restore its inner confidence ... and rebuild its external credibility," Michael Donley, the nominee for Air Force secretary, told a Senate confirmation hearing.

Donley appeared beside Gen. Norton Schwartz, nominated as Air Force chief of staff. Previous secretary Michael Wynne and chief of staff Gen. Michael Moseley resigned under fire in June.

Among problems the Air Force had faced were the flight of a B-52 bomber, mistakenly armed with nuclear warheads, across the USA last August, and a mistaken shipment of nuclear-related material to Taiwan.

House passes bill to tighten aviation safety

Federal aviation inspectors would have to wait two years before taking airline jobs in which they deal with their former government boss under legislation passed by the House.

The legislation, passed 392-0, is designed to pushed the Federal Aviation Administration to improve safety inspection practices and end the FAA's close relations with the airlines. It is in response to recent reports of lapses in FAA safety oversight.

The measure, which now goes to the Senate, also creates an Aviation Safety Whistleblower Investigation Office.

McCain team mocks media's 'love' for Obama

News from every state

Alabama: Decatur — Decatur General, a hospital with 1,100 employees, won't be able to fund its employee pension plan for a year after reporting an $8 million deficit. The hospital has funded its retirement plan every year since 1977, but won't contribute about $1.4 million in the next fiscal year.

Alaska: Anchorage — A fire destroyed the Trident Seafoods processing plant in the Alaska Peninsula village of Chignik Bay. Residents fought the fire for two hours before the area was evacuated because of the possibility that nearby ammonia tanks might explode.

Arizona: Phoenix — A radio station catering to Latino immigrants in metropolitan Phoenix plans to close its doors at the end of the month. KNUV-AM, the metro area's only news and talk radio station aimed at Latino immigrants, fell victim to a faltering economy and an ongoing crackdown on illegal immigrants, local media observers said.

Arkansas: Marion — Hino Motors Manufacturing said it won't lay off any staff, even though the 600-employee plant is planning to reduce production of transmissions it makes for Toyota vehicles. However, employees working fewer hours will be paid less during the reduction. Toyota is suspending production of Tundra trucks and Sequoia SUVs for three months.

California: Torrance — A dozen bystanders rushed to help Ludwig Geier, 70, collect several thousand dollars scattered by the wind as he left First National Bank. Geier, of Rancho Palos Verdes, said he had stumbled and the wind swept about 200 bills from an envelope across the parking lot. Geier, a machine shop owner, said he got back more than 95% of the money.

Colorado: Fort Collins — Colorado State University is creating a School of Global Environmental Sustainability to prepare students to work in the green economy. Diana Wall, a soil ecologist who has done research in Antarctica, will be the founding director. The school will open in 2010 and include professors and researchers from many university departments.

Connecticut: Ansonia — The Ansonia chapter of the NAACP wants the U.S. Department of Justice to investigate the arrest of a black police officer. Mustafa Salahuddin was charged with stealing a garden hose from the department. His lawyer said Salahuddin was seen bringing a hose outside to wash his police cruiser. The hose was found three days later at the department.

Delaware: Dover — Minority-owned businesses could win more state contracts, depending on the success of a pilot program. Delaware's Office of Minority and Women Business Enterprise plans to launch the voluntary program in late summer or early fall. It challenges state agencies to seek minority-owned businesses during bidding and track how often those companies win bids.

D.C.: City Council member Marion Barry called for an audit of a new information-technology system at the Department of Employment Services in the wake of a payroll snafu last week in the summer youth job program. Hundreds of participants said they weren't paid, and Barry said some youths who signed up but didn't work were paid instead.

Florida: Mulberry — A police dog left in a patrol car died after the air conditioning compressor failed. Officials said Sam Diesel, a German shepherd, was in the cruiser for about an hour while its officer handler was inside the police station. The vehicle had been left running, which police said is standard procedure.

Georgia: Atlanta — Vandy Beth Glenn, a former legislative editor for the Georgia General Assembly, said she was illegally fired after she announced she was going to live as a woman full time. The lawsuit claims that Legislative Council Sewell Brumby fired her on the spot, saying the gender transition would make her co-workers feel uncomfortable and lawmakers would view it as immoral.

Hawaii: Wailuku — Maui County and state officials are testing a pump and filter system that would remove algae from beaches and use it for fertilizer. Residents in South and West Maui have complained about algae buildup, its odor and potential health hazards.

Idaho: Twin Falls — The Board of Trustees at the College of Southern Idaho approved a smoking ban beginning Aug. 25. Students encouraged the prohibition, telling campus leaders a smoking ban is critical to the school's image as a leader in health science education. The community college joins Boise State University as the only two non-smoking campuses in Idaho.

Illinois: Chicago — The alleged "supreme Inca," or No. 2 leader, of the city's Latin Kings street gang was convicted in a large-scale cocaine-selling scheme. Fernando King, 38, was arrested in December 2006 with a number of others, some of whom have since pleaded guilty. His defense attorneys denied King's involvement in any drug plot. He faces between 20 years and life in prison when sentenced in December.

Indiana: South Bend — The private operator of the Indiana Toll Road said it will resume contract talks today with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, which represents toll collectors. Talks had stalled over the number of temporary workers at toll booths. The union wants no more than 10% temps; the Indiana Toll Road Concession Co. seeks 30%.

Iowa: Salix — A man died after he was buried in soybeans at the Ag Processing Inc. plant near here. The Woodbury County sheriff's office said Matthew Ball, 20, of Manson, was cleaning the inside of the concrete bin when the soybeans shifted, knocking him off his feet. Emergency crews could not get to him for about an hour.

Kansas: Kansas City — The company that operates the Woodlands announced it will close the dog and horse track next month, after it failed to reach a deal with the Kansas Lottery for slot machines. The track had been negotiating for 800 slots. It said it could not cover costs and make a reasonable profit under state law.

Kentucky: Lexington — A federal lawsuit alleges the city and the state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation are breaking the law by providing non-emergency services to illegal immigrants. The lawsuit said the brochures by the state agency try to cater to illegal immigrants and the city's health department provides services such as cancer and pregnancy tests.

Louisiana: New Orleans — Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in the French Quarter received no major damage from an electrical fire that broke out on its second floor. Fire Department spokesman Jonathan Pajeaud says a bystander reported smoke pouring out of a second-floor window shortly before 11:30 a.m. As it happened, a fire engine checking fire hydrants nearby reached the church almost immediately.

Maine: Augusta — The City Council unanimously urged legislators to change the name of a bridge here that is named for a deceased Catholic priest, John Curran. The resolution passed after members heard from Robert Dupuis, who said he was sexually abused by Curran in 1961 when he was a 12-year-old altar server in Old Town. Curran died in 1976.

Maryland: Cambridge — Victoria Jackson-Stanley was sworn in as mayor at a ceremony attended by about 200 supporters. She is the first African-American and first woman to hold the job there. Jackson-Stanley defeated two-term incumbent C.L. Rippons in voting July 9.

Massachusetts: Boston — State shoppers are in line for a sales tax holiday next month. The House and Senate voted overwhelmingly in favor of a plan to exempt most items from the 5% sales tax on the weekend of Aug. 16-17. Cars, boats and certain other luxury items would be excluded. Democratic Gov. Patrick has pledged to sign the tax holiday into law.

Michigan: Detroit — A once-ambitious development project downtown closed after a year. Asian Village, near the headquarters of General Motors, had planned to offer shopping, restaurants and entertainment but never advanced that far. The remaining feature, a restaurant, closed this week. A coffee shop and a food court shut down previously.

Minnesota: St. Paul — More than 700 dead birds, mostly double-crested cormorants, were found at two lakes. The Department of Natural Resources said pelicans, ring-billed gulls and a great blue heron were also found dead at Minnesota Lake in Faribault County and Pigeon Lake in Meeker County by workers banding pelicans. Initial tests for avian influenza were negative.

Mississippi: Natchez — An officer at a Natchez-based biofuels company falsely claimed to be able to make biodiesel from soybeans for 50 cents a gallon and to have a working plant and contracts, the Securities and Exchange Commission alleged. It also asked a federal court to make U.S. Sustainable Energy Corp. chairman and CEO John Rivera and companion Alice Price repay at least $721,000 from Price's sales of stock.

Missouri: St. Louis — An investigation into how a company that seized cars for city police allowed officers to use those cars is being reopened. Last week, the department announced an internal investigation found problems but no criminal wrongdoing. But now the U.S. Attorney's office has joined the investigation.

Montana: Helena — Gov. Schweitzer signed an executive order that will allow approximately $1 million from an emergency fund to be used for weatherizing the homes of low income residents. The Democrat said much higher energy costs are forecast for this winter, and now is the most efficient time to weatherize.

Nebraska: Tecumseh — An inmate serving six to 10 years in prison on robbery, weapons and drug counts faces an additional 20 years when he's sentenced for killing another inmate in a prison fight. Michael Sullivan pleaded no contest to manslaughter in the death of Reko Mitchell, 38.

Nevada: Las Vegas — A 19-year-old gang leader was sentenced to life in federal prison after he was convicted on charges including murder and racketeering. Donnie "Little Donnie" Bryant was prosecuted as an adult. He was accused of helping found a gang called "Squad Up" in 2003 that recruited heavily at Cheyenne High School in North Las Vegas and trafficked in marijuana and crack cocaine.

New Hampshire: Concord — State public health officials warned it's high-risk time for mosquito-borne illnesses such as West Nile virus and eastern equine encephalitis. So far this year, the state has tested more than 2,100 mosquito pools and found no signs of either illness.

New Jersey: Trenton — State residents getting driver's licenses will have to decide whether they want to be an organ donor under a bill just signed into law. Many states ask the question but don't require an answer. But within five years in New Jersey, people applying for and renewing licenses and ID cards will be required to state whether they want to be an organ donor.

New Mexico: Santa Fe — The feature film Crazy Heart, starring Jeff Bridges, Maggie Gyllenhaal and Robert Duvall, will be shot in and around Santa Fe from late August through late September, the state film office said.

New York: Albany — Drug addicts, gamblers and alcoholics trying to quit their habits in treatment facilities will no longer be allowed to use tobacco. The change, effective Thursday, makes New York the strictest state in the country when it comes to prohibiting tobacco use among people undergoing addiction treatment.

North Carolina: Asheville — A 10-year study found more than 6,000 species of plant and animal life previously unidentified in Great Smoky Mountains National Park. More than 1,000 scientists in the project worked to catalog over 16,000 species in the park, which covers about 800 square miles.

North Dakota: Bismarck — Backers of a state income tax cut turned in signature petitions, saying they have more than enough names to guarantee a statewide vote in November. Secretary of State Al Jaeger now has about a month to review the petitions and send postcards to a selected number of people to verify they signed it.

Ohio: Frazeysburg — Baughman Memorial Park and its giant sandstone statues of Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt and other famous Americans were sold piecemeal to the highest bidder. An auctioneer said the sculpture of Ulysses S. Grant brought the highest price, $35,000. Undertaker Daniel Baughman carved the statues beginning in 1898. His park was a tourist destination from the 1920s through the 1940s.

Oklahoma: Oklahoma City — The U.S. Department of Agriculture granted Democratic Gov. Henry's request to issue a disaster declaration for the drought-ravaged counties of Cimarron, Texas, Beaver, Harper, Woodward, Ellis, Roger Mills, Dewey and Woods. Ranchers and farmers there and in the contiguous counties of Alfalfa, Beckham, Blaine, Custer, and Major will be eligible for federal aid.

Oregon: Salem — A measure that would tie teacher pay and job security to loosely defined student performance drew enough valid signatures to get on the November ballot, the Secretary of State's office said. The plan, sponsored by anti-tax initiative activist Bill Sizemore, would base raises on performance instead of on experience or seniority. Teachers unions are expected to fight the measure.

Pennsylvania: Doylestown — The operator of two Bucks County landfills said it's suspending plans to dump radioactive sludge from the Limerick Nuclear power plant until public concerns can be addressed. Federal and state scientists have downplayed the risk.

Rhode Island: Providence — State Police said they arrested a man whose blood alcohol level measured .491 — more than six times the legal limit — and possibly the highest ever recorded in Rhode Island for someone who wasn't dead. The legal limit is .08. Stanley Kobierowski, 34, of North Providence was arrested after he drove into a highway message board on Interstate 95 in Providence, police said.

South Carolina: Charleston — Six former Wando High School students were sentenced to prison under the Youthful Offenders Act for acting as lookouts in the holdup of a grocery store in Mount Pleasant two years ago. While they could be held for up to six years, they're eligible to take part in correctional boot camp for 10 months and then be put on supervised release.

South Dakota: Aberdeen — Landowners are being asked to invest in a wind farm that could spread across three northeast counties: Roberts, Marshall and Day. Dakota Wind Energy is seeking investment funds from landowners who grant wind-rights to their property. The wind farm would have 500 turbines with a maximum capacity of 750 megawatts — enough electricity to power about 220,000 homes.

Tennessee: Nashville — A jury member said reaching a verdict was difficult at the public corruption trial of former Democratic state senator John Ford. He was convicted last week on federal charges of wire-fraud and failing to report more than $850,000 in payments from state contractors. Jury member Jackie Chandler said they ultimately decided Ford had deprived citizens of their right to expect honest service from him.

Texas: Austin — State investigators said a weekend probe of Sunmart gas stations found more than half of their 1,704 fuel pumps were cheating drivers. The state Agriculture department found the pumps were rigged to favor Petroleum Wholesale by as much as one-tenth of a gallon for every five gallons sold.

Utah: Salt Lake City — A survey suggests most state workers like the idea of switching to an energy-saving four-day work week, which is scheduled to happen early next month. The state survey said 60% thought the switch would not create any insurmountable problems. But about 7.5% of workers said they'd be looking for a new job.

Vermont: Bennington — The Southwestern Vermont Medical Center here is erasing a shortage of physicians in the community. Over the past year the hospital has recruited 17 doctors. Officials credit their in-house system, which includes a full-time recruiter and a website. The hospital would like to hire another 14 doctors.

Virginia: McLean — State transportation officials celebrated the start of a five-year construction project on the state's portion of the Capital Beltway with a groundbreaking atop a parking garage overlooking the road. The planned express lanes will be free to vehicles carrying three or more people; others will have to pay a toll.

Washington: Yakima — The nuclear reactor used to produce plutonium for the atomic bomb dropped on Nagasaki in Japan in World War II may become a national historic landmark. The B reactor at the Hanford nuclear reservation was given a unanimous vote by the National Parks System. Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne will make the final decision.

West Virginia: Charleston — Former state treasurer Tom Loehr wants to build a methane-fueled power plant at Charleston's landfill. He said private investors are lined up for the $3 million project, which would burn methane generated as a byproduct from the decomposing trash. The city would receive a 12.5% royalty on all power sold.

Wisconsin: Milwaukee — A gender discrimination claim filed by the state's first female police chief was dismissed. Wisconsin's Equal Rights Division found no probable cause that the city violated an employment law by paying former chief Nannette Hegerty less than her replacement. Hegerty earned about $135,000 when she retired in November; new Chief Ed Flynn makes nearly $144,000.

Wyoming: Casper — A new statewide survey found that nearly one-quarter of residents between the ages of 12 and 24 said they see little or no risk in trying methamphetamine. The Wyoming Meth Project commissioned the survey.

U.S. territory: Puerto Rico — A hospitality industry group said it's evaluating four hotel proposals around Arecibo and Barceloneta that would add nearly 1,000 rooms. The Puerto Rico Tourism Company said the resorts would help boost tourism revenue in the cash-strapped island.

Proposal for a well-lived day:

Become a master of all trades.

A common criticism of people who "wear many hats" or are "Jacks-of-All-Trades" is that they are good at many things but masters of none.

Jacks have the desire to master everything but don't have the energy to pull it off.

Mastery requires patience, and patient energy. The type that comes from a Starbucks Vivanno™ Nourishing Blend: 16 grams of high-quality whey protein, a whole banana, and all-natural Naked® Juice.

You can focus and hone these Jack-level skills slowly, deliberately, until one fateful, tide-turning day, your quest for mastery is complete.

Today's debate: The economy

Helping Fannie, Freddie also aids 'the little guy'

Our view:
However distasteful, bailout plan is best bet for propping up housing.

A question comes up these days as a common refrain: Why is the government so eager to bail out big institutions but not the proverbial little guy?

The question was posed in March when the Federal Reserve put together a plan to help J.P. Morgan Chase buy Bear Stearns. And it is being asked again now as Congress takes up legislation that would backstop faltering home mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

The short answer is that this lifeline is a plan to help the little guy.

This might not seem obvious after the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) said Tuesday that costs to taxpayers could reach $25 billion in two years. Nor is coming to the aid of two companies notorious for their arrogant attitude and political dealings something that should be done lightly.

As distasteful as it might be, the single most important thing the government can do now is to assure that the financial system can continue to lubricate the economy. If businesses can't borrow, jobs are lost. If banks curtail home lending, housing prices would plummet further because prospective buyers couldn't find financing.

That is where Fannie and Freddie come in. They don't deal directly with home buyers, but they buy mortgages from banks that do. Currently, they own or have guaranteed nearly half of U.S. home mortgages. In recent months, their share of new mortgages has surged to about 70%, as others have grown skittish of the American housing market. Many of the loans are in trouble, threatening to freeze the mortgage market.

Having so much housing risk concentrated in two companies makes little sense in the long run. These two companies need stricter oversight and tighter controls, two things the pending bill would provide. And, over time, their size needs to be limited to help spread the nation's mortgage risk.

In the short run, however, Fannie and Freddie have to be propped up. Now is not the time to stand on ideological purity. The bill would simply open lines of credit to the companies and allow the government to buy shares in them. Nor is it time to complain about the little guy getting a raw deal.

In fact, the little guy isn't getting such a bad deal. The government has already enacted a $157 billion stimulus bill, including tax rebates of up to $1,200 per family. The CBO said it's most likely that Fannie and Freddie will remain afloat without the government having to put up any money; the explicit guarantee alone might be enough.

The lifeline for Fannie and Freddie is part of a larger housing measure that would allow some homeowners to refinance out of toxic loans into more favorable ones insured by the government. It would also have the government buy some foreclosed houses in distressed areas. These ideas are questionable, as they would reward some people who made irresponsible financial decisions and invite government real-estate boondoggles.

Ultimately, the little guy is best served by a government that acts with an abundance of pragmatism to address one of the biggest threats to the economy. And that is what the Fannie/Freddie plan represents.

No blank check

Opposing view:
Proposed Fannie, Freddie bailout threatens taxpayers, lacks sense.

By Jim Bunning

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson's latest bailout proposal for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac is not only misguided, it is downright threatening to the American taxpayer and the free market.

Simply put, Secretary Paulson is asking Congress for a blank check to buy Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac stock and bonds. According to the Treasury secretary, my job as a U.S. senator is not only to protect and defend the U.S. Constitution, but also to dabble in the stock market, with your money.

How much money? The Congressional Budget Office estimates the bailout could cost taxpayers $25 billion over two years. A Standard & Poor's estimate puts the cost at as much as $1.1 trillion. That is one heck of a price tag. And it's your money. If you don't believe me, just ask Paulson. He said so.

Not only does this bill cost too much money, it does not make sense. With the addition of the Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac bailout, the Democrats' housing bill now taxes these government sponsored entities on one hand and buys their stock with the other.

That's right, at the very moment that the Treasury Department is fretting over the future of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, Congress is cutting their legs out from under them by levying a tax of $500 million to $800 million a year, every year. Not to mention, it permanently punishes the shareholders, many of whom are institutional investors such as pension funds. The tax also reduces the amount of capital these government-sponsored entities can provide to the mortgage lending system in a moment of serious liquidity issues in the market.

The beauty of the free market is that when a bank loses $30 billion, it has a pretty strong motivation not to make the same mistake again. The thing about bailouts is that they take away that motivation.

Unfortunately, the American taxpayer did not get a say when Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke bailed out Bear Stearns. Fortunately, the American taxpayer does get a say in Secretary Paulson's proposed bailout. Call your representatives in Washington and tell him or her you can't afford a bailout.

Two faces of evil

At the height of his power in the 1990s, the Serb leader Radovan Karadzic was disdainful, bombastic and vain. That he was credentialed as a psychiatrist and poet mattered little. No one who met him then would be surprised to find that he orchestrated mass murder.

His signature mane of silver hair waving, he would thunder in racist terms that his fight for a Greater Serbia was justified to right the injustices of history. He could see nothing wrong in the brutal tactics he used, including firing on civilians in Sarajevo from his headquarters in the hills above. In 1995, his army committed the worst massacre in Europe since World War II, murdering almost 8,000 Muslim men and boys in the town of Srebrenica.

A very different-looking Karadzic was finally captured on Monday after 13 years on the run. Like Saddam Hussein emerging from a hole in the ground, Karadzic, hiding as New Age healer Dragan Dabic, was virtually unrecognizable. With his long white beard, glasses and flat hair, he was a ringer for Professor Dumbledore in the Harry Potter movies. The hope now is that his transformation from a swaggering hero for many Serbs into a fugitive coward will provide the push that's needed to confront the horrors of the past and reduce the likelihood of future massacres, in the Balkans or elsewhere.

Reuters

Karadzic: As Dragan Dabic.

Karadzic's arrest reinforces an increasingly strong message to alleged war criminals that they will be tracked down, no matter how high their official position, how much time goes by or how they disguise themselves. The same message is sent by the continued pursuit of Nazi war criminals. It's sent, too, by the International Criminal Court's recent move to indict Sudan's president for continued genocide in Darfur.

Karadic, 63, will face long-standing war crimes charges at a United Nations tribunal in the Netherlands for his role in the 1992-95 Bosnia war, in which about 100,000 people died and 2 million were displaced. Since the war ended, Serbs have been split over whether to cling to the Greater Serbia dream or give up in return for membership in the European Union, with ample economic benefits as the reward. A recent election put European-leaning leaders firmly in power, but Serbia has yet to hand over the war's other high-profile fugitive, former Bosnian Serb military chief Ratko Mladic, and renounce claims to its former Kosovo province.

With Karadzic's arrest, "I think we finally turned a corner," said a jubilant Seska Stanoijlovic, foreign editor of the Serb magazine Vreme. And, finally, a once mighty leader will be held accountable for the ghastly crimes of Srebrenica.

A king's residence: King Abdullah of Jordan welcomes Barack Obama on Tuesday in Amman. Obama is set to go to Israel next.

People abroad eager for change in U.S. policy

As owner of a small international consulting business, I appreciated USA TODAY's article on Barack Obama's tour abroad. For the past seven years, working in international trade has been difficult for this American, at least, and I suspect for many others as well ("Obama prepares tour of Middle East, Europe," News, Thursday).

People in Europe, Asia, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America look forward to a return of sane and substantive foreign policy over that of the Bush administration, which many perceive as ideologically driven and abusive.

I already hear it from colleagues and friends across the world. There is a promise of hope, and a President Obama would deliver on that promise.

Troops deserve credit

The U.S. has had troops in Afghanistan for how long? Years?

Barack Obama now says that this is where the front is in the war on terror and that the U.S. failed to finish the job when it was distracted by Iraq ("Obama again vows to send 2 more Afghanistan brigades," USATODAY.com, July 14).

My prediction is that in the coming months — and if elected — Obama will keep saying the Iraq war has been a waste. If he can muster up anything resembling victory or slowing the spread of terrorism, he will claim the victory as his and his alone. He will disregard the efforts of the troops who've fought or lost their lives in Iraq.

Obama is traveling with a plane full of journalists. With an entourage that size, you know it's got to be safe. Because of the increasing stability in Iraq, it's also safe for anyone to say we need to bring home troops.

Obama still learning

A lot of emphasis is being placed on Barack Obama's trip abroad even though it appears it is in response to John McCain's criticism of Obama's lack of foreign affairs knowledge.

The Democrat seems more like a reporter gathering information as opposed to the Republican, whose familiarity with the subject matter permits him to better analyze and draw conclusions. Obama is on a learning curve as opposed to being able to rely on knowledge and experience to make decisions.

Conflicts drain nation

President Bush now has earned the record-low approval ratings that show up in polls.

He has brought our country to its knees militarily and economically. His war in Iraq has strained our National Guard and Reserves and could drain more than $2 trillion from our treasury through the next decade.

Banks are failing, and we have record deficits and record foreclosures. Inflation is on the rise, and the job creation numbers are non-existent.

The real hope for our nation is Barack Obama. We need to elect the senator of Illinois and increase the Democratic majority in Congress so that we can begin the long road back to our nation's recovery.

Naive nuclear goal

Barack Obama has announced that one of the objectives of his administration would be to render the world free of nuclear weapons.

Unfortunately, with rogue states such as Iran said to be on the threshold of nuclear bomb capability, and others attempting to achieve that status, such a goal is not only impossible but also naive. The only possible result would be for the U.S. to dispose unilaterally of its nuclear arsenal and end up being at the mercy of other nuclear-bomb-producing nations.

Hopefully, this approach to nuclear weaponry is not an indication of the possible foreign policy of his presidency, if he is elected.

Encourage children to stay active, healthy

The recent finding that there is a sharp drop in physical activity levels as children become teenagers underscores the urgency of our country's health crisis ("As kids get older, they drop the ball on exercise," Life, July 16).

Our current culture of inactivity, overconsumption and unhealthy living wasn't created by America's youth; they're its victims.

It's the responsibility of every parent, educator, policymaker, legislator, industry leader and medical professional to create a culture of health in this country that supports physical activity, sound nutrition and healthy lifestyle choices.

This includes increases in physical education requirements, legislation that supports healthy living and realigning our health care system to focus on prevention first.

The International Health, Racquet and Sportsclub Association recently started the Teen Fitness Connection, an outreach program that invites IHRSA health clubs across the country to fight physical inactivity and teen obesity.

Generation misnomer

I strongly object to being called a member of the Silent Generation, as described in USA TODAY's article "Is this the next baby boom?" Perhaps the Lucky Few is a closer reflection, but only in regard to our numbers (News, Thursday).

People of my generation made advances in science, medicine, government and the arts. Nonetheless, the sheer numbers of the Baby Boomers left us in the dust, so advertisers and number crunchers looked to them and their buying power.

My former minister's wife had the best name for our generation: The Rock 'n' Roll Generation.

And remember Elvis?

The Silent Generation?

I don't think so.

Way to save aircraft fuel

Some pilots say airlines want to reduce fuel on board to save weight and cut costs. Here is a safer way for airlines to save fuel and recoup costs.

Airlines can charge the same flat fee for each passenger, then add a fee for the number of pounds of the following:

- Checked luggage.
- All carry-on items.
- The passenger's weight.

These measures might encourage passengers to travel lighter, which would reduce weight and save the aircraft some fuel.

As a secondary effect, this might also encourage some people to lose additional pounds and develop a healthier lifestyle.

Reform health care

Mandatory insurance does not solve our underlying health care problem, which is government interference in the free market. This approach has already been tried in Massachusetts and has led to long waits, skyrocketing costs and frustrated patients ("Individual health policies leave many in the lurch," Cover story, News, Thursday).

Instead of government-imposed "universal health care," America needs free market health reforms — reforms such as eliminating mandatory insurance benefits, repealing laws that forbid purchasing health insurance across state lines, and allowing individuals to use health savings accounts for routine expenses and low cost, catastrophic-only insurance for major expenses.

Such reforms would respect individual rights, allow patients to choose from the best offerings from all 50 states, lower costs and make health insurance available to many who currently cannot afford it.

Modest goals for the other war

By Ralph Peters

By Web Bryant, USA TODAY

The battle for Afghanistan is the one that echoes of Vietnam, but where we go from here is what matters.

When the conflict in Iraq was going badly, critics repeatedly suggested parallels with the Vietnam War. None of the comparisons held up. But Afghanistan is different: One tragic parallel makes a decisive success almost impossible to achieve.

The problem is that our enemies have a sanctuary across the border in Pakistan — just as the North Vietnamese army enjoyed havens in Laos, Cambodia and north of the demilitarized zone above South Vietnam.

We dropped bombs then, as we sometimes do now (though in far lesser numbers today), but a ground enemy has to be defeated on the ground. Troops must pursue the enemy to his last stronghold to eliminate the threat.

At present, the Taliban, al-Qaeda and their affiliates can muster their forces in Pakistan, cross into Afghanistan, make deadly mischief, then withdraw to fight another day. It's a savage game of hide-and-seek that keeps Afghanistan's poorest provinces unsettled, blocking development and inflicting terror on those who simply want to live in peace.

The answer seems obvious: Send our ground forces into Pakistan. Democratic Sen. Barack Obama has suggested that, as president, he'd do this. But the obvious answer is the wrong answer.

Firsthand experience

I've been up in Pakistan's northwest frontier. Our enemies can hide in some of the most rugged terrain on earth — far more difficult than anything in Iraq. Vast, lawless reaches of ungoverned territory belong to Pakistan in name only. Extreme Islamic law prevails — and it's growing harsher. A military move across the frontier would have to be big, it would be resisted bitterly and our troops would have to remain indefinitely.

And that's only the beginning of the challenge. While Iraq has more than 27 million Muslims, some of whom like us, Pakistan has nearly 163 million, and anti-Americanism has been brewed to a vicious heat by generations of Pakistani politicians. Were we to cross the border in force, popular sentiment would demand a military confrontation with us, which Pakistan's army doesn't want but wouldn't be able to avoid.

Beyond that, a crucial issue goes ignored by just-send-in-the-troops advocates: Our forces (and NATO's) in Afghanistan depend on Pakistan's ports, roads and rail network for resupply. Were Pakistan to shut the gate, the flow of everything from fuel, ammunition and spare parts to food and bottled water would slow to the inadequate trickle that aircraft could deliver. Logistics problems could break our forces without a shot being fired.

The only alternative would be to bring in our supplies through Iranian ports — and Tehran's not about to allow that.

What can we do? Intensify what we're already doing: Rely on intelligence, special operations and selective airstrikes for now. As long as we throw well-aimed punches and leave, Pakistan's government will complain publicly but will accept our actions privately — and be glad of them.

Why can't Pakistan's army do the job? Pakistan is a Frankenstein monster of a country, cobbled together from ill-fitting body parts and diseased with corruption of immeasurable proportions. Only the military holds it together. The army's hesitancy to take on the insurgents suggests that its generals fear a major push to assert control over the frontier might bog down or even fail outright — unleashing anarchy.

As for Pakistan's politicians, key figures appear willing to write off the tribal areas — where the impoverished landscape offers little to steal — as long as the relatively wealthy and populous provinces of Sindh and Punjab remain under their control.

Reasonable expectations

Were the United States able to reach a cooperative agreement with Pakistan to pursue and destroy the extremists along the northwest frontier, Afghanistan would become a much more manageable problem. But we'd still need to have realistic expectations.

The Taliban, or something like it, will always have a constituency in backward areas and among severe Islamists. Even so, its numbers and influence can be driven to the margins of the margins. We're experiencing something never seen before in Afghanistan: The great majority of the people welcome or at least tolerate a foreign presence.

Afghans want peace. They tried Taliban rule, and many didn't like it. They appreciate the relative security, glimmers of prosperity and promises of development that a Western presence delivers. For all its daunting problems, this is a country with hope.

For our part, we need to base our policy on the recognition that Afghanistan will remain Afghanistan. It isn't going to turn into Iowa. It's a feudal, tribal society struggling to overcome generations of devastating warfare. The appropriate question is: Will it be a better Afghanistan, for its people, for us and for the world, than it was on Sept. 10, 2001?

The answer is that it's already a far better place. Terrorists don't run the country. Women aren't stoned to death in public. At least some young girls can attend school. And roads — those indispensable tools of development — extend deeper into the hinterlands by the day.

We shall never see a fully peaceful Afghanistan — not even with the long troop presence a durably positive outcome will require. Nonetheless, if the Pakistan haven problem can be solved, all the other problems can be managed. We won't stop terror completely, but we can help the Afghans build a state that terror can't reclaim.

IOC will bring new tactics to Beijing

By Jacques Rogge

American Michael Phelps is one of the favorites in the 200-meter butterfly swimming event at this summer's Olympics. In Beijing, when he steps up to the starting blocks and looks to his right and to his left, what should he see?

Phelps should be standing with fellow swimmers who are fit and ready to compete — eager to dive into the pool and give the race their best effort. It is our goal that Phelps will swim with athletes free from prohibited drugs and who will compete ethically and honorably in the true spirit of the Olympic Games.

Doping is one of the most serious threats to sport. The International Olympic Committee (IOC) is leading the fight against doping. We will enforce a zero-tolerance policy through a comprehensive new testing program that is both tough and thorough. If appropriate, we will refer those who dope to law enforcement officials.

Our message is clear: If an athlete cheats, he or she most likely will be caught.

Honesty reigns

Most athletes compete honestly and fairly, and they treasure their Olympic experience. We owe it to these athletes, who train so hard, to ensure that the Games are as free of prohibited drugs as possible.

The IOC's approach to doping is sophisticated and has evolved over the years:

▶ We began a list of banned substances after the tragic death of a Danish cyclist in a road race at the 1960 Olympic Games. The cyclist took a stimulant that allowed him to push his body beyond its natural limits, and his death resulted in the establishment of the IOC Medical Commission.

▶ In 1999, the IOC took a major step by founding the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA). Funded jointly by the IOC and governments, the agency has established anti-doping standards in all sports and in all countries around the world.

Elite athletes are the most visible victims of doping, which creates an unfair advantage for cheaters. It is not surprising then that most athletes themselves are calling for an intensified fight against doping.

Highest standards

In Beijing, we will be more vigilant than ever. From Sunday through Aug. 24, in cooperation with WADA, we will test the competitors at any time and at any place. And in a change of policy, athletes will be tested whether they are at an Olympic venue, the Olympic Village or a remote training facility.

Beijing

Moreover, the number of athletes tested will increase dramatically. In Beijing, we will conduct at least 4,500 tests. That's 25% more than were done in the 2004 Games in Athens and 90% more than the number of tests administered in Sydney in 2000.

Those caught using a prohibited substance will face new consequences. An athlete who is given a sanction of more than six months will be denied the right to participate in the next Olympic Games. This ban will extend to those caught breaking the doping rules outside the timeframe of the Games.

Simply put, if an athlete uses a prohibited substance, he or she is likely to ruin an opportunity to be an Olympian.

Doping is to sport what crime is to society. The actions of a few affect the many and harm the innocent. We know that human nature being what it is, we will probably never eradicate doping from sport, but we must never stop trying. The issues go to the heart of the Olympic value of fair play.

What causes colored lightning?

Lightning from storms often appears yellowish-white, but it can also take on other hues depending on what else is in the atmosphere between the strike and your eye.

2 Water droplets and water vapor within the cloud absorb red wavelengths. The resulting light can take on a bluish tinge.

4 The farther away the lightning, the more likely light will be scattered or absorbed, and thereby colored, as it passes through the atmosphere.

Home prices continue to fall

U.S. home prices in May were 4.8% lower than in May 2007, a record year-over-year drop, a government report says. The Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight also says prices, on a seasonally adjusted basis, fell 0.3% from April to May. The index is down nearly 5% from its peak in April of last year. The government index is calculated using mortgages bought or guaranteed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Meanwhile, foreclosures in California soared in the second quarter, to the highest level in at least 20 years, as many homeowners who bought at the height of the housing boom were unable to make mortgage payments, a research firm said. The number of default notices also jumped in the April-through-June period, according to DataQuick Information Systems. In all, 63,061 California homes were lost to foreclosure in the second quarter — the most in any quarter since 1988, when the firm began tracking foreclosures. (Fannie, Freddie rescue could cost taxpayers $25 billion, 3B.)

GE, sovereign fund form partnership

General Electric and an Abu Dhabi-based sovereign fund have agreed to a global partnership that includes a commercial finance business, research center for clean energy and water and plans to expand GE's aircraft engine service and repair in the Middle East. GE and Mubadala Development's deal provides for shared capital commitments to new joint ventures and investment funds. Mubadala also plans to become a long-term GE shareholder, the partners said. The expectation is that Mubadala will become one of GE's top 10 institutional investors. For the commercial finance venture, GE and Mubadala plan to each allocate $4 billion in equity over three years.

Charles Schwab founder stepping down

Online brokerage Charles Schwab said Tuesday that founder Charles Schwab would step down as chief executive in October, and will be replaced by Walter Bettinger. Schwab will remain executive chairman. Bettinger has been chief operating officer since February 2007. Schwab, the originator of the modern discount brokerage, said in a statement: "I will continue to serve as a very active chairman and look forward to continuing the strong partnership that Walt and I have developed."

Ogilvy & Mather CEO resigning

Ad veteran Shelly Lazarus, 61, will step down as CEO of Ogilvy & Mather, the world's third-largest agency, but will remain chairman effective Jan. 1, 2009. She led the agency since 1996. Filling the CEO spot will be Miles Young, 53, who heads the agency's Asia group. Martin Sorrell, CEO of parent company WPP, said, "Shelly has done a fantastic job as brand guardian of Ogilvy, building a first-class client roster and driving the company to fully embrace integrated marketing."

Patience can pay in dividends

Some companies' yields may be worth waiting for

By Matt Krantz
USA TODAY

When it comes to dividends, some are wondering if things have become too good to be true.

Of the companies in the Standard & Poor's 500, 46 are paying relatively fat annual dividend yields of 5% or more. Some of these cash payouts are real head-turners, including the 18.9% yield of investment firm American Capital.

Most of the mega dividends are coming from financial companies such as Bank of America at 7.9% and Citigroup at 6.1%, but some non-financials, such as drugmaker Pfizer at 7.0%, are paying, too.

Such yields are especially alluring to investors tired of getting low 3% returns even from high-yield savings accounts. And if the market has bottomed, and individual stocks have stabilized, the big dividends could be a great payment for patient investors, says John Snyder, portfolio manager for Sovereign Asset Management. "If investors have a time horizon of beyond three months, some of these stocks will work out," he says. "You're getting paid while waiting."

But there's a danger the fat dividends are only setting investors up for torment when the companies cut or eliminate them, says Don Taylor of Franklin Rising Dividends fund. Often, a dividend yield is high because Wall Street suspects the payout will be cut. Tuesday, two of the formerly highest-yielding stocks in the S&P 500, Regions Financial and Wachovia, slashed their dividends 74% and 87%, respectively. And a stock can always decline in value more than its dividend payout, wiping out any benefit.

Investors can reduce risks by:

▸ Sticking with those best able to maintain their dividends. Bank of America is considered one of the relatively strong banks, says Tom Cameron, portfolio manager at Dividend Growth Advisors, which owns the stock. The company has raised dividends every year for 30 years and will soon reveal its plans for 2008. "Bank of America is the pretty pig in the beauty contest," he says.

Snyder owns SunTrust, which yields 7.8%. While the bank is exposed to some troubled loans, it has been able to preserve its dividend in part by selling Coca-Cola shares it has owned for decades.

▸ Finding dividend payers with the biggest chances of increases. Investors should usually avoid the highest-dividend payers, says Richard Platte of Ave Maria Rising Dividend fund. Instead, he's buying companies with modest dividend yields, such as paintmaker Sherwin-Williams at 2.7%, that are likely to raise them.

But dividends are not money in the bank, especially after 23 S&P 500 companies have cut their dividends this year, nearly double those that did in all of 2007. "This is not without risk," Snyder says.

Dividend cuts surge

The number of S&P 500 companies cutting or eliminating dividends this year is nearly twice as high as it was for all of 2007:

Electronics retailers find service sells

Layoffs of tech-savvy staff hurt Circuit City business

By Jayne O'Donnell
USA TODAY

STERLING, Va. — Three of the TVs are dark in Wal-Mart's electronics department, where the only two clerks in sight stock a shelf and disappear. At a nearby Target, the digital camera desk is unmanned, and there's no staff roaming electronics. In Circuit City, a clerk concedes it's his first day on the job and first week in the country.

But over at Best Buy, three clerks staff the "Geek Squad" counter, and another hovers nearby, poised for questions, which he handles with ease.

A recent shopping trip with a sales training expert underscored the state of competition and service in retail electronics. Business at Best Buy, even in a weak economy, is thriving, thanks, experts say, to its emphasis on service. By contrast, its once-mighty rival Circuit City has fallen far, brought down by a reputation for lax customer service and aggressive competition from Best Buy, as well as mass merchants such as Wal-Mart and Target, online sites and office stores, including Staples.

"Everyone is going to be lowering price to the lowest possible point, so service becomes the most important differentiator between retailers."

— Robert Richardson, CEO of Associates Interactive

"Across many industries, we've seen that the retailers that grow customer-service ratings the fastest have greater sales growth," says Chris Denove of J.D. Power and Associates. "Prices have come down dramatically on electronics items, and at the same time, the complexity of the products has increased. Expert advice is more important than ever."

More college cafeterias suspend use of trays

Goal is to cut food waste and save water and energy

By Bruce Horovitz
USA TODAY

Something familiar will be missing when students buy meals at many college dining halls this fall: trays.

In a bid to discourage food waste and decrease energy use at all-you-can-eat campus cafeterias, dozens of college dining services — from New York University to University of Minnesota — are giving trays the heave.

With food costs rising and college students increasingly concerned about the imprint their schools leave on the environment, catering giants Aramark and Sodexo have turned going trayless into campus chic. No trays means no place to pile dishes of stuff many students only sample then toss.

Some campuses that already have tested the concept report food waste declines of up to 50%. Then, there's the thousands of dollars in energy savings when trays don't need washing. An astonishing 79% of the 92,000 students surveyed this spring by Aramark said they support trayless dining to reduce campus waste.

"It's a simple idea with profound consequences," says Theo Kalikow, president at the University of Maine-Farmington, which dropped trays last year. "There's less food waste, less energy consumed and less water used." Other trayless schools:

▸ New York University. In fall, one dining hall that serves 1,000 meals a day will be trayless. By the end of the first semester, 50% of the campus will be trayless, says Owen Moore, director of dining. Food waste has been cut from 4.03 ounces per tray to less than 2.37 ounces.

▸ University of North Carolina. The Chapel Hill campus nixed trays in two dining halls in October. It's saving thousands of gallons of water monthly by not washing trays, says Scott Myers, dining director.

▸ University of Florida. To show students why it was dropping trays last year, stacks of trays were tied up with rope, and signs detailed how much energy and water was being saved.

Most of the nation's 4,000 colleges and universities will cut trays from their dining services within the next five years, projects Julian Dautremont-Smith, associate director of the Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education.

"You can't be economically sustainable unless you're environmentally sustainable," says Anthony Cortese, president of Second Nature, a nonprofit sustainability group.

For the food-service giants, it's about containing food costs, which have risen 8.2% this year for Aramark. While trayless dining has mostly been a hit with students, faculty and staff at some schools have a harder time, says Chris Stemen, senior director of sustainability at Aramark.

Arlin Wasserman, vice president of corporate citizenship at Sodexo, concedes one blip. While demonstrating at Georgia Tech how to carry an entree, salad and coffee up steps — without a tray — he slipped.

As a result, he chuckles, his khaki pants are no longer khaki.

Electronics' complexity raises need for service

the critical role of customer service in the retail industry, especially electronics. Last year, Circuit City laid off thousands of its best-paid and most knowledgeable sales staffers, only to see many of them snatched up by Best Buy. And since March, Circuit City's answer to Best Buy's popular Geek Squad tech-help team — called Firedog — has laid off up to 200 people. And its cable TV-installation unit has shut down.

Earlier this month, Blockbuster dropped plans to buy Circuit City after studying its finances. Circuit City has said little about its plans other than to say it is exploring "strategic alternatives" to increase shareholder value.

"Best Buy's strategy is not to cut back on people," says Mike Mallett of Corporate Research International, which conducts customer and secret shopping surveys. "Best Buy gets it."

On the other hand, Mallett says, Circuit City is "going down because they're not doing a better job" of handling customers.

Denove agrees. Circuit City "decided to cut out its high-paid commissioned salespeople in favor of a younger and less experienced sales force," he says. "While this move cut costs in the short term, the new staff simply wasn't as effective at selling complex electronics and didn't provide the same levels of customer service. The net result was a downward spiral in sales."

Circuit City declined requests for an interview. But COO John Harlow told analysts last month that the company was working to improve service in home entertainment and to increase training.

Circuit City's plight underscores the challenges for retailers as a sputtering economy forces staff cutbacks, just as shoppers increasingly need hand-holding help with complicated high-tech products.

Geekmobile: Barthelemy is on the road to aid customers. "I prefer one-on-one interaction to show them and demonstrate," he says.

Signaling for help

The timing is crucial. In February, broadcast TV will switch from analog to digital signals — a shift that's expected to send crowds into stores to buy digital TVs that many won't know how to fully operate. Nearly a third of TV owners don't know what type of TV they have — analog or digital — a Best Buy survey of 1,000 consumers this spring found. And with financially squeezed families spending more leisure time at home, some sales data suggest that consumers may buy more gaming and other home-entertainment devices.

For retailers, success could increasingly hinge on service. D.L. Baron, CEO of Experticity, which develops electronic customer-service monitors, says his company's research shows at least 20% of customers will leave a store if they aren't helped quickly. In this economy, few companies can afford that risk.

Best Buy and Circuit City face rising competition, too. Wal-Mart is trying to enhance customer service: It announced last week that it will begin a pilot project of home-installation services this month.

Yet, with electronics stores, as in other retail sectors, it's small specialty shops that typically provide the best service of all, surveys show. (They also tend to charge more.) A mystery shopping report on customer service in TV sales released Monday by J.D. Power concluded that sales staff at smaller electronics stores are more attentive than those at Best Buy and Circuit City. The study also shows that Best Buy and Circuit City, in turn, outperform mass merchandisers, including Wal-Mart and Target, in service.

Whatever any shortcomings in service, Wal-Mart and other mass discounters have managed to raise their market share of electronics since at least 2005, according to the trade publication Twice. That suggests that some people, at least, are willing for forgo service for low prices, says Tim Herbert of the Consumer Electronics Association.

Focusing only on price, though, could be a mistake for most people, Denove says, especially with TVs. "Since TVs moved to solid-state technology in the '60s, they've essentially been 'plug and play' and completely maintenance-free," Denove says. "Today's HDTVs, by contrast, include so many inputs and outputs that unless you're very sophisticated with electronics, it's better to let a professional set your TV up."

Denove says cable and satellite installers have told him that in about half the homes they visit, the owners have hooked their TV up wrong, to the point where a new $2,000 TV isn't even playing in high-definition.

"There are a lot of confused customers, and they need extra help," says Lisa Smith, Best Buy's vice president for customer service.

Corporate Research International, which has been doing undercover shopping studies of electronics stores for nearly two years using about 3,000 shoppers, finds that Best Buy has consistently outperformed Circuit City during that period. And both rank higher in customer service than the big discounters do. Wal-Mart's test of installation services suggests that the discounter recognizes that further gains in electronics sales may be contingent upon superior service.

Online, Best Buy is posting informational pieces about electronics, along with answers to common questions about TV's digital conversion. It's also set up a toll-free line — 877-BBY-DTV9 — on which consumers can speak with a "trained home theater specialist" and also buy a converter box using the government-issued discount vouchers that are available to consumers.

Service best at specialty stores

The new J.D. Power mystery shopper study shows Best Buy's overall salesmanship — which includes courtesy and product knowledge — tops Circuit City. Still, as is the case throughout the retail industry, you get help even more quickly at the sometimes pricier small specialty stores. J.D. Power found it took more than three times as long to be helped at either Best Buy or Circuit City than at specialty stores. The J.D. Power study was based on reports by 2,000 "mystery shoppers" hired to shop anonymously.

The big national electronics stores have plenty of fans, of course. Roman Blahut of Pompton Plains, N.Y., bought a 52-inch flat-screen HDTV at Best Buy last year and paid a friend to set it up for him. This month, he bought an Apple laptop and a desktop computer from Best Buy and paid $300 for the Geek Squad to come set them up. He likes Best Buy because "I know they have good deals."

With his recent purchase, customer service played a big role because "I don't know anything about computers," Blahut says.

Still, some, such as Diane Messina of Tucson, say they're more concerned with price than service. She scours the Web to find the best price on any electronics items she's considering.

"I can handle most installations, and I don't have a need for the in-store clerks," Messina says. "If I find something that I cannot handle, the manufacturer's website, troubleshooting searches or online forums usually do the trick."

That's why retail strategist Michael Brown of Kurt Salmon Associates thinks big discounters will continue to succeed with electronics despite their spotty customer service. People such as Messina aren't afraid to take on technology alone. Discounters, including Wal-Mart and Target, "know their niche, and they know how they're going to market to that niche," Brown says.

In the meantime, Circuit City's Harlow also told analysts that his company is trying to mend its public image by viewing its stores through customers' eyes. It's adding policies on training and greeting, speeding up checkout, delivering quicker and friendlier service and improving merchandise presentation.

Revamping customer service has been a slow process, Harlow acknowledged, but he says it's proven to be time well-spent: Internal customer surveys and reports from mystery shoppers, he says, showed a big improvement.

"Admittedly, we have to go further in improving customer service in our stores, but I am encouraged by the significant progress we have made," Harlow said in the June earnings call.

J.D. Power's quarterly survey on customer service in TV sales shows no gains in Circuit City's scores, though results from Corporate Research International found that Circuit City's scores have risen slightly in the past few quarters.

The electronics retailers that do it right have true experts as salespeople, says Robert Richardson, the sales expert who led the tour of stores here recently and who is CEO of Associates Interactive in Buffalo. In addition, he says, they make sure displays are neatly arranged, all TVs are on and customers can enjoy hands-on experience in the store.

On the recent shopping trip here, prominently placed big-screen TVs were turned off at Wal-Mart. And the display models for several of the wireless mice and keyboards were missing at Circuit City. Clerks at both Best Buy and Circuit City were unclear about some of the products and services their stores offered, but Best Buy had more — and more knowledgeable — staff on hand.

Given the complex nature of electronics, salespeople need to be available and able to engage with customers about their needs, Richardson says.

"Good conversation skills," he says, "aren't intuitive, but they can be taught."

Chuck O'Donnell, Best Buy's New Jersey district services manager, who trains many employees in his area, says he stresses that clerks should talk as if they're speaking with friends or family: "A lot of this stuff is commoditized. So what is the difference? It's our people. It's got to be."

"As the economy tightens," Richardson says, "everyone is going to be lowering price to the lowest possible point, so service becomes the most important differentiator between retailers. It's the reason why a consumer would choose to shop at one over another."

Yahoo profit misses forecasts

19% dip could increase pressure on top execs

By Jon Swartz
USA TODAY

SAN FRANCISCO — Yahoo on Tuesday said second-quarter profit tumbled 19%, as it grapples with a wheezing economy and the specter of Microsoft's takeover bid.

Technology

The Internet pioneer reported earnings of $131 million, or 9 cents a share, during the quarter, compared with $161 million, or 11 cents a share, in the same quarter last year.

Financial analysts, on average, had forecast earnings of 11 cents a share, according to Thomson Reuters.

Revenue rose 6% to $1.8 billion. Excluding commissions paid to Yahoo's advertising partners, revenue was $1.35 billion — about $20 million below the average estimate by analysts.

> "They wouldn't have come close to their numbers (last year)" if not for foreign subsidiaries.
>
> — Roger Kay, Endpoint Technologies Associates

The lackluster numbers could heighten pressure on Yahoo executives to jack up the company's sagging stock price after spurning a $47.5 billion takeover offer from Microsoft in May, analysts say.

"Not great," says Roger Kay, president of market researcher Endpoint Technologies Associates. "They wouldn't have come close to their numbers (last year)" if not for foreign subsidiaries.

The results came a day after Yahoo reached an agreement with activist shareholder Carl Icahn to avoid a bruising proxy fight next week.

Icahn will join an expanded board, with two of his supporters, based on the accord.

"We're pleased with the progress we've made the last several months, and the board and management is dedicated to maximizing shareholder value," Yahoo CEO Jerry Yang said in a conference call.

Last month, Yahoo also said it would reorganize into three new divisions to help centralize its Internet products, build its worldwide audience and better capitalize on the growth of online advertising.

As a result, Yahoo said it's not changing its financial view for 2008 despite an ominous economy that is tamping down online advertising.

The news sent Yahoo shares up 2% to $21.83 in after-hours trading. In regular trading, they closed at $21.40.

Employees, their families and friends mingle, then wander across a sunny campus in search of a barbecue lunch and ice cream cones for dessert.

There's just one big difference. They've also come to ogle cars. Lots of cars.

Every year, a rich variety of eye-catching vehicles line the sidewalks and courtyard at the headquarters of Pixar, the Disney-owned digital animation studio. Corvettes, Mustangs, Jaguars and Lotuses. There are even a few surprises, such as an armored military truck and a General Motors hydrogen-powered SUV. Borrowing a name from GM history, the Pixar folks dub it "Motorama."

Pixar offers a fresh take on that old saw, the company picnic. And it's not alone. Other companies have expanded beyond three-legged races and watermelon-eating contests in favor of newfangled ideas, such as:

▸ Mountain biking. Microsoft's summer picnic this month takes an outdoorsy theme, with a mountain bike trail — all equipment provided — and a climbing wall, along with lots of other activities. This year, 54,000 employees and guests have registered to attend.

▸ Amusement park. In Southern California, the law firm Reed Smith rents the amusement zone on the Santa Monica Pier. Employees can ride the new Ferris wheel.

▸ Wine tasting. FRCH Design Worldwide in Cincinnati was host of a wine-tasting festival last year. This summer, it went more traditional: a pie-baking contest. Winner: peach-rhubarb.

▸ Rafting. PrintingForLess.com in Livingston, Mont., will offer river rafting, among other activities, at its summer outing. Last year, about 200 attended.

Pixar's car show last Friday wasn't totally off the wall. The studio, of course, created the animated feature Cars, along with Toy Story, The Incredibles, Ratatouille and the current Wall-E.

The gathering reflects the interests of Chief Creative Officer John Lasseter, who freely admits to having "cars on the brain." Son of a parts manager in a Chevrolet dealership, Lasseter adores vintage wheels to the point that he has names for favorites in his collection. His 1962 Ford Falcon is named Arnold. He sometimes tows it behind a motor home he named Betty.

There was no missing Lasseter, decked out in a Cars cap and automotive-themed Hawaiian shirt as he meandered through the display at the campus across the bay from San Francisco. One car on view was his own black 1952 Jaguar XK120.

He's one of many gearheads at Pixar. The studio's nearly 1,000 employees vie to have their cars displayed at the show. Up to 50 make the cut. Some show cars come from friends or the vintage car shop across the street. Automakers contribute, too, not wanting to get overlooked on future Pixar projects, especially the Cars sequel scheduled for 2012.

Ford hauled a retro concept car, first shown in 2001, from Detroit and also showed its newest crossover model, the Flex. "Over the years, we've developed a great relationship with Pixar," said Ford spokeswoman Jennifer Flake.

Gatekeeper to the annual collection of cars is Jay Ward, an art department manager.

"They know I have a love of cars," he says. His knowledge of how the bolts are arranged on the wheel of a Hudson Hornet paid off when it came to accuracy in composing one of the main characters in Cars, Doc Hudson. For the picnic this year, he brought his own two-tone metallic green 1957 Pontiac Safari wagon to the display.

Animators are drawn to cars because they have personality and amount to "poetry out of steel," says production designer Bob Pauley. "It's California car culture. We like the charm and the history of it."

No end in sight for economic imbalance

IMF official says dollar may be stabilizing, euro is overvalued

By David J. Lynch
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Despite the dollar's sharp decline, the global economy is likely to remain seriously unbalanced between debt-heavy Americans and the USA's cash-rich trading partners, according to the International Monetary Fund's No. 2 official.

The economy

"Large imbalances may be with us longer than we had originally envisaged," says John Lipsky, the fund's first deputy managing director.

Since 2002, the dollar has fallen by 25% against the currencies of its major trading partners, taking into account relative price levels — among the largest such moves since 1973.

The IMF now believes the dollar is closer to a sustainable value than it has been in a decade, while the euro is overvalued, Lipsky said in a speech at the Brookings Institution.

But a further decline in the dollar is likely, especially against key Asian currencies, according to economist John Williamson of the Peterson Institute for International Economics. The greenback has dropped more than 21% against China's yuan in the past two years but needs to fall an additional 30%, he says.

The IMF has joined U.S. Treasury officials in pushing the Chinese to allow the yuan to rise faster against the dollar. But China, which manages the yuan's movement against a basket of currencies, is reluctant to do so for fear of the potential impact on stability.

Today's global imbalances are the result of years of heavy U.S. consumption matched by equally impressive Asian savings. Sizable annual deficits emerged in the U.S. current account, the broadest measure of the nation's trade balance, as enormous cash stockpiles accumulated in the accounts of U.S. trading partners in Asia and oil producers in the Middle East.

Such imbalances are potentially dangerous, many economists say. If foreign investors' appetite for U.S. assets ever slackens, it could trigger a sharp fall in the dollar before causing interest rates to jump.

The dollar's ongoing decline is a key element in putting the global economy on sounder long-term footing. It makes made-in-the-USA products less expensive for foreign buyers and foreign goods more expensive here, helping trim the U.S. trade deficit.

The U.S. current account deficit has fallen to about 5.5% of gross domestic product from a peak of around 7% in 2005. So far, the decline has been orderly.

But the current financial crisis means there is a danger of a "more dramatic adjustment" of currency values, says David Lipton, Citigroup's head of global country risk management.

Still, forecasting has rarely been so difficult. Lipsky's remarks, for example, came five months after an earlier IMF analysis concluded that imbalances were narrowing faster than expected.

Fannie, Freddie rescue could cost taxpayers $25B

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal rescue of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac could cost taxpayers $25 billion, congressional budget experts said Tuesday as lawmakers put finishing touches on legislation that would tap the troubled mortgage giants' profits to help save homeowners from foreclosure.

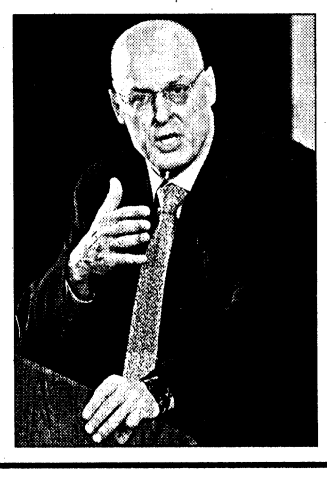
A costly rescue is just a worry, not a fact at this point. Peter Orszag, director of the Congressional Budget Office, predicted in a letter to lawmakers that there's a better-than-even chance that the government will not have to step in to prop up the companies by lending them money or buying stock.

But Congress is expected to vote as early as today on a bill authorizing the Treasury Department to throw Fannie and Freddie a temporary lifeline.

It's part of a plan to let hundreds of thousands of strapped homeowners refinance into more affordable, government-backed loans at fixed rates rather than losing their homes. The measure would create a new regulator and tighter controls on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the government-sponsored companies that own or guarantee nearly half the nation's mortgages. And it would create an affordable housing fund, drawn from the firms' profits, to cover any losses from the foreclosure rescue plan.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson has been pressing to add to the bill temporary power for the government to offer unlimited sums to prop up Fannie and Freddie, a backup plan he says is intended to help calm investors and stabilize financial markets. The firms' stocks have plummeted on fears about their stability in a chaotic housing market, with falling home values and rising defaults.

Orszag said the companies will likely stay afloat and the government won't have to put up any money. The $25 billion estimate reflects his office's guess of how big an infusion would be needed.



Henry Paulson: Wants rescue plan to include power for the government to offer unlimited sums to prop up Fannie and Freddie, which he says would help calm investors.

Attention to lighting can make a huge difference in your photos

By Jefferson Graham
USA TODAY

It's the middle of summer, and you have a brand-new digital camera, but your pictures aren't looking as stellar as you had hoped.

Perhaps there are huge shadows under the eyes of your subjects, or a whole lot of squinting faces.

It doesn't have to be that way. We checked in with Scott Kelby, author of the best-selling, two-volume The Digital Photography Book, for five basic lighting tips that can dramatically improve anyone's pictures — even those made with the most inexpensive point-and-shoot cameras.

Kelby's tips:

▸ Find the shade. "People who are new to photography always pull their subjects directly into the sun, which is the most unflattering light in the world," Kelby says.

Instead, take the shot in the shade. "The light will be soft, and your subject won't be squinting," he says.

Step under an awning, on a stoop, anywhere there's even light with no shadows on your subject's face.

If you're seeking shade under a tree, though, take care: Sometimes tree branches will produce light spots from the sun cracking through. That can make your subjects look sickly.

"Keep moving them to the left and right, until you get the spots off their face," Kelby suggests. "Just be sure they're totally in the shade."

▸ Shoot into the sun. Maybe you're at the beach, a running track or a parking lot, and there's no shade to be found. You have no choice but to shoot with direct sunlight.

Use the sunlight as a backlight, Kelby says. Position subjects with the sun behind them so it puts a nice rim light effect around them (outlining their hair). Use the point-and-shoot flash to put just enough light into their faces to make them blend in with the natural light that surrounds them.

Shoot like this . . . not like this

By Scott Kelby

TECH Jefferson Graham demonstrates lighting tips at tech.usatoday.com

▸ Window light. Go for what Kelby calls "the best light ever created: natural light." Put your subject directly in front of a window and stand to the side, and you have "beautiful, soft light," he says.

He suggests having the model stand just a few feet from the window and then take a few steps back yourself. "Shoot from the window position back at them, and you get beautiful, directional light."

▸ Turn the flash off. Many point-and-shoot cameras have overbearing flashes that can overpower your image: Your background turns to black, and your subject looks like a grinning light bulb with hair.

Solution: Turn the darn thing off. Look for the symbol on the back of the camera (we've never seen one without it). It looks like a lightning bolt, and they all work the same. Most cameras let you put the flash at half or quarter power or turn it off altogether.

If you're in a decently lighted setting with afternoon, morning or early evening sun, turn the flash off, and your background and foreground will be decently exposed.

▸ White balance. Ever notice how a picture taken under fluorescent lights has a background that seems very yellow or orange?

In the old days, film photographers used different kinds of film for different kinds of lighting. In the digital era, you can simply change a camera's lighting settings.

Cameras have a "white balance" tool (often listed as WB) that lets you choose among different types of light: daylight, fluorescent, flash, cloudy and incandescent. The standard setting, auto white balance, will work for you in most cases. But if the background colors look odd on the LCD preview screen, change the setting.

"It sounds so simple, but it will make a dramatic difference," Kelby says.

Beyond lighting tips, one simple solution for improving your digital photographs is to edit them with easy-to-use software.

You can tweak lighting from dark to light, convert to black-and-white, crop and rotate.

Digital cameras generally come with rudimentary software that will do the job. Much better choices are available elsewhere, often for free.

With Picasa, you can search for images, find them really fast and store them online at Picasa Web Albums.

Adobe makes the software synonymous with digital imaging: Photoshop. There are several versions of the No. 1 photo software. Top-of-the-line Photoshop sells for about $600. A consumer version, Photoshop Elements, is $99.

Adobe has a free online version available as well, Photoshop Express, which lets you improve lighting, crop, rotate, fix red-eye and add cool color effects to your photos.

It will take you more time to get your pictures into Photoshop Express than Picasa because you'll have to upload them to the Internet, but once they're there, they can be accessed from anywhere.

Another free online choice: Picnik has similar editing tools (crop, rotate, fix red-eye, etc.) and is somewhat easier and quicker to use than Photoshop Express.

All the programs offer easy ways to size your pictures properly for e-mailing or posting online.

Oil helps stocks leap financial sector woes

By Joe Bel Bruno
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wall Street shook off early doldrums and closed sharply higher Tuesday after another drop in oil prices encouraged investors to set aside financial sector worries and go bargain hunting across the market.

Stocks initially fell on uneasiness about the ongoing impact of the housing market downturn and the credit crisis on financial firm earnings. Disappointing results from companies such as American Express and Wachovia fed those worries.

But a $3.09 drop in oil to $127.95 a barrel, which took crude's decline in recent weeks to nearly $20 a barrel, persuaded investors to buy stocks.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 135.16 points, or 1.2%, to 11,602.50. The blue-chip index rose 400 points last week. The Standard & Poor's 500 index jumped 17.00 points, or 1.3%, to 1277.00. The technology-dominated Nasdaq composite, which was down for much of the session on tech earnings disappointments, ended up 24.43 points, or 1.1%, at 2303.96.

Even Wachovia, the nation's No. 4 bank, shot 27% higher after its stock tumbled to levels not seen since the early 1990s. The stock was pummeled after the bank posted an $8.9 billion loss because of charges and reserves for bad mortgage loans (story, 5B).

The market was looking at the long-term impact of cheaper energy — and likely betting that company earnings would pick up if oil extends its decline.

"There's the perception that this will get the economy going again," says Todd Leone, stock trader at Cowen & Co. But he says results at American Express, Apple and Texas Instruments all fell short of profit expectations.

Ryan Larson, trader at Voyageur Asset Management, says, "Oil prices are alleviating some fears" triggered by a number of disappointing earnings. Profits released in the past few days showed some signs that consumers are scaling back on purchases.

Highlights: American Express fell $2.91 to $37.99. The company, whose credit cards cater to more affluent customers, missed projections after setting aside more money to cover souring loans across all its portfolios.

▶ Apple, which makes iPods, iPhones and iMac computers, beat expectations but issued a weaker-than-expected forecast for the current quarter. It fell $4.27 to $162.02. Texas Instruments fell $4.17 to $24.35 after it missed expectations because of an order slowdown.

Brewer plans to squeeze more out of Bud Light Lime

Anheuser-Busch keeps up push to maintain success

NEW YORK — Brewer InBev is already looking for ways to cut costs once its acquisition of Anheuser-Busch is complete, possibly by year's end. In the meantime, A-B plans no let-up in the marketing of its brands, especially up-and-comer Bud Light Lime, which launched in April.

Marketing

A-B marketing executives want to sustain the success of the premium beer beyond Labor Day.

Bud Light Lime is lifting sales for the whole Bud Light category. Volume for the segment, down in the first quarter of the year, rose slightly in the second, says Dave Peacock, vice president of marketing.

InBev CEO Carlos Brito, on tap to be CEO of the merged company, said that the lime flavor would be a focus for the next two years under InBev's new ownership as a way to grow the Bud franchise.

Brito is leading the $52 billion acquisition of America's largest brewery and expects to shave $500 million in costs in addition to $1 billion A-B had already planned. A-B, known for lavish marketing, spent $1.47 billion in 2007. Brito says marketing expenditures won't be cut as long as those marketing dollars contribute to brand growth. "The first thing in brand marketing is not to change what's working," Brito said in a phone interview.

But "There are certain things to stop doing," admits Tony Ponturo, who handles how and where A-B's advertising and sponsorship dollars go. "We're looking at lots of things."

Last year, A-B pulled the plug on its NASCAR sponsorship. But this week, A-B renewed deals with the National Basketball Association and United States Olympic Committee through 2012.

The company also has deals with the National Football League, NCAA, Major League Baseball and the NCAA Bowl Championship Series — all through 2012. NBC's Super Bowl broadcast on Feb. 1 will include 10 spots for A-B brands, including a possible slot for Lime.

Benj Steinman, editor of Beer Marketer's Insights, doesn't think cuts in marketing are likely once InBev's acquisition of A-B closes.

"I think InBev gets the whole thing that they need to step up marketing to make Bud a global brand," he says.

For now, A-B still runs its own marketing, but InBev has some say, A-B's Peacock says.

"The worst thing that could happen with seemingly different cultures is to hold off working together until (the deal) closes," says Peacock, who helped lead Brito through a series of meetings at A-B's St. Louis headquarters last week.

That's why A-B is moving ahead with its sports deals and the next phase of marketing Bud Light Lime, a hit on many fronts. The product has a 2% share of beer revenue, in part because a six-pack costs about $1.50 more than Bud Light.

A-B wants to avoid the same major falloff that befell Miller Chill, the lime-flavored beer that Miller introduced two years ago. In fall and winter, Chill does about 20% of the peak volume that it does during the summer, Steinman says.

A $5 million campaign with four new ads may help Bud Light Lime stay fresh with consumers through colder months. Ads will run during sports programming and on cable with the message: Seasons change, but tastes don't. Ads will include people in hot tubs, barbecuing at winter-time parties and tailgating at football games.

"We established that summer is not summer until you break out the lime," says Bob Lachky, A-B's chief creative officer. "But we had to find a way to transition into the fall months."

Wachovia, WaMu losses bring back fear

The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE — Surprisingly large second-quarter losses at Wachovia and Washington Mutual have quickly revived concerns that the financial sector has a long way to go before it recovers from the year-old credit crisis.

Investors who were growing optimistic after a string of upbeat bank results were jolted Tuesday when Wachovia, the nation's fourth-largest bank, racked up an $8.9 billion loss because of charges and reserves for bad mortgage loans. The Charlotte-based bank also cut its dividend for the second time this year and is laying off 6,350 workers.

Wachovia said it lost $8.9 billion in the April-June period compared with net income of $2.3 billion, or $1.22 a share, in last year's second quarter.

Excluding $6.1 billion in write-downs and merger-related and restructuring charges of $128 million, Wachovia lost $2.67 billion, or $1.27 a share. Analysts on average expected a loss of 78 cents a share on revenue of almost $8.4 billion.

Washington Mutual, the nation's largest savings and loan, delivered a further blow after the market closed, swinging to a $3.3 billion loss as it boosted its loan loss reserve to more than $8 billion, betting it will have more soured mortgages. Seattle-based WaMu said it would be cutting up to $1 billion in expenses by the end of 2009.

WaMu's $3.3 billion loss compared with a profit of $830 million, or 92 cents a share, in the same period a year ago. Results include a previously disclosed, one-time reduction of $3.24 a share related to raising $7.2 billion in capital in April. Excluding that, the loss per share was $3.34.

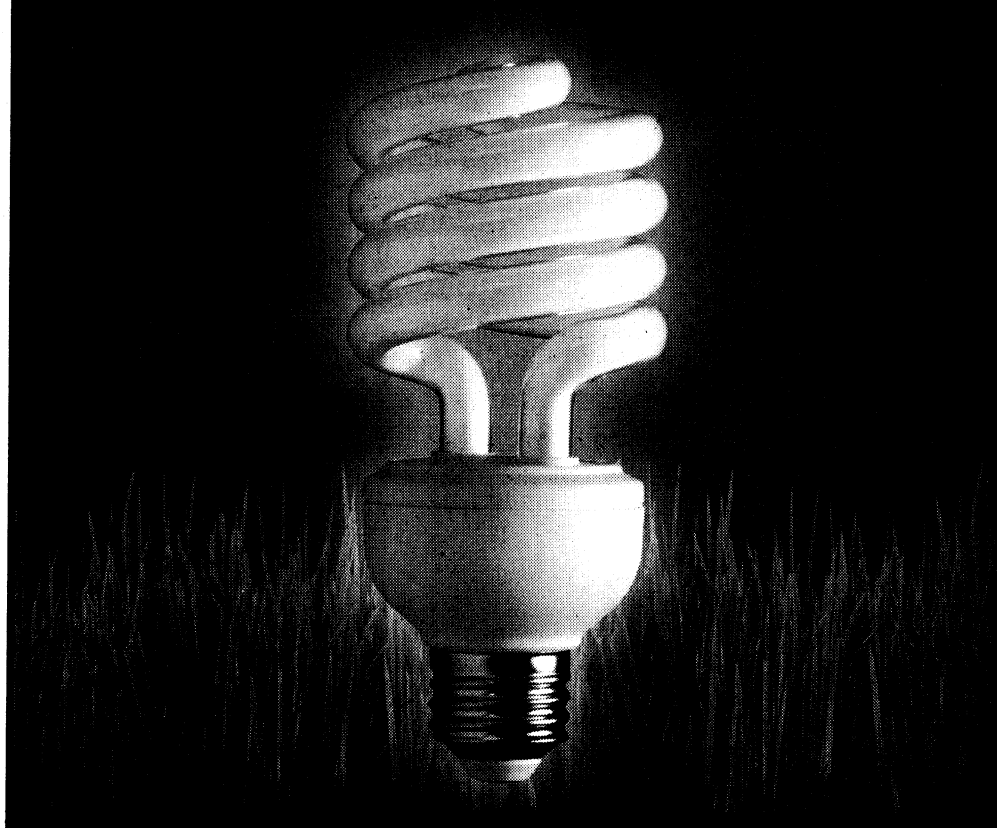
INVESTOR ALERT: The Company Advancing Next Generation Lithium-Powered Batteries

Power Production has a New Standard

OTCBB: SLAT

SUPERLATTICE POWER



Superlattice Power, Inc is focused on using its resources and efforts to develop and market lithium-powered vehicles and products for use in residential and commercial properties. Using its technology, the company is able to covert scooters, bicycles, mopeds, motorcycles, cars and even homes and businesses into zero-emission, lithium-powered vehicles and facilities.

The Future of Clean, Renewable Energy is Here and This Exciting Company has the Edge

Superlattice Power, Inc. (Symbol: SLAT)
Superlattice Power, Inc. is intent on developing a paradigm for the lithium ion battery. Using its resources, and focusing its efforts on a step-by-step process from the synthesis of cathode materials to evaluation and testing of the resultant product, Superlattice hopes within 6 to 12 months to develop a battery that will allow its all-electric vehicle to go 200 miles on a single charge.

Lithium-ion Battery Technology

Lithium-powered batteries can also be used to store power from alternative energy technologies for later use in homes and businesses, but Superlattice's initial push is the pre-production of a battery that can operate at higher than normal voltage ranges (4V to 2.3V). A typical lithium battery is composed of an anode, a cathode, and lithium ions which charge or discharge depending on their location, or polarity.

Lithium batteries were first developed in the 1970's, but were proved unsafe because lithium itself is unstable during charging. Further attempts at development worked with lithium-ion, which is typically twice as energy-dense as nickel-cadmium, one other component of batteries. The ion combination proved to be considerably safer, and in 1991 Sony commercialized the first lithium-ion battery. However, prior to Superlattice's work in the field, standard storage capacity was limited to 3.6 volts, and chemical compositions allowed for both deterioration and battery aging.

The Complete Innovation of a Widely Used Energy Source

With the sort of single-mindedness that made Thomas Edison great, Superlattice is currently focused on the production of a new cathode material that can be successfully integrated into a lithium ion battery to not only increase the battery's range but improve its energy density. This material, a superlattice structure (hence the company name) is hexagonal, or six-sided, and this honeycomb or crystalline structure with periodically alternating layers of substances (in this case, manganese, cobalt, nickel and titanium) not only accommodates more chemicals, and interaction, but provides more energy. A combination of special elements and transition metals now make the Superlattice cathode materials safe, environmentally friendly, and – most importantly – affordable.

Initial production, at a batch rate of 100 kg. each, potentially makes the battery so affordable it will induce drivers to switch from gasoline-powered vehicles to all-electric vehicles, thus improving not only the stability of the American economy but the environment. Also, as costs for fossil fuel energy continue to rise – spurred by demand and driven by supply fears – the modest cost differential between combustion-engine vehicles and hybrid vehicles like the all-electric car virtually disappear. Superlattice has positioned itself to take advantage of this factor, and what will certainly be growing demand.

Leading the Charge from the Laboratory to Production

The push to take battery technology like this from the experimental level to the production level has resulted in large-scale production of nano- and sub-micron materials, and Superlattice technicians now stand poised to deliver this futuristic technology to the average consumer in the form of lithium ion polymer batteries built on affordably-priced cathode materials.

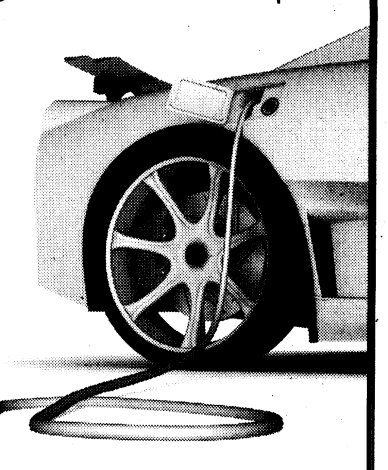
As Dr. Surajit Sengupta, director of battery research and development, observed: "This nanosphere superlattice structure will reduce the surface area for the same volume compared to faceted nanomorphology. This in turn will reduce the use of electronically conductive carboneceous material. The result is the battery will yield more capacity."

PRESS RELEASE Mooresville, NC – June 24, 2008

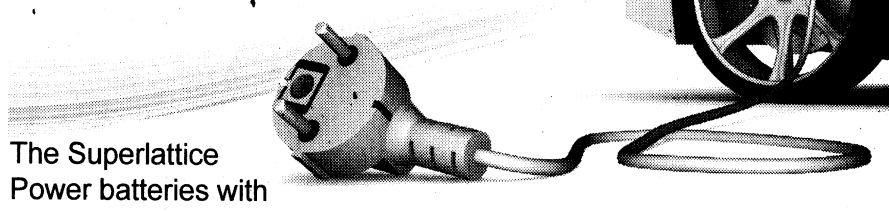
SUPERLATTICE POWER INC. (OTCBB: SLAT) TO POWER HYBRID TECHNOLOGIES' HIGHLY ANTICIPATED XPRIZE COMPETITION ENTRY EXTENDING DRIVE RANGE TO 200 MILES

Superlattice Power's Powerful Lithium Ion Battery Featured in Hybrid Technologies' Vehicle Participating in Progressive's Popular xPrize Competition

Superlattice Power, Inc. (OTCBB: SLAT - News) www.superlatticepower.com, emerging leader in the development and marketing of the next generation of lithium-powered batteries worldwide, will jointly develop with Hybrid Technologies its super lattice battery in the highly anticipated electric vehicle submitted by Hybrid Technologies in the xPrize Competition sponsored by Progressive.



Superlattice Power's new Lithium Ion Polymer battery with a new more affordable cathode material, Superlattice Structure, will be at the core of Hybrid's competition entry which increase drive ranges by 30% to 200 miles.



The Superlattice Power batteries with the superlattice structure is a hexagonal structure and can accommodate more Lithium and more energy. The elements and specially transitioned metals have been selected precisely to make Superlattice cathode materials safe, environmentally friendly and more affordable.

Hybrid Technologies is working closely with Superlattice Power to research and develop mass scale production of cathode superlattice nano and submicron sized structure for the use in rechargeable lithium ion batteries.

Contact Superlattice at info@superlatticepower.com for custom orders for any superlattice lithium battery from 145 mAh to 5 Ah.

Powell outruns Bolt in 100 showdown

Asafa Powell capitalized on Usain Bolt's weak start and edged the world recordholder by one-hundredth of a second, leading from start to finish in the 100 meters in the DN Galan track and field meet Tuesday in Stockholm. Powell won in 9.88 seconds. Bolt, who was slow out of the blocks, nearly caught his fellow Jamaican at the finish line. Third went to Norwegian Jaysuma Saidy Ndure in 10.06. Powell lost to his close friend Bolt in Jamaica's Olympic trials last month. Bolt set the world record of 9.72 in New York on May 31, breaking Powell's mark of 9:74. Also, Olympic champion Jeremy Wariner of the USA won his third consecutive 400-meter race in 44.29.

Parcells blames Romo for retirement

Bill Parcells tells HBO's Real Sports tonight that Tony Romo's inability to catch a snap for a field goal in the playoffs after the 2006 season forced him to retire as coach of the Dallas Cowboys. "We'd just lost to Seattle, and I'm flying back," Parcells says in a transcript provided by HBO. "I'm sitting up with the pilots. . . . And I said, 'This is probably going to be my last trip.' And you just know. You don't want to go through the whole process again, to get to right where we were. You know? And all you got to do is kick a field goal, the most elementary of plays, and then you just don't do it. And so I don't want to go through that process again. Too much blood." Parcells is now executive vice president of football operations for the Miami Dolphins.

Brawl, ejections mar Sparks' WNBA win

Candace Parker scored 21 points and DeLisha Milton-Jones added 19 before both were ejected after a scuffle in the final minute as the visiting Los Angeles Sparks held on to beat the Detroit Shock 84-81 Tuesday in the WNBA. The game turned ugly in the final seconds as a collision between Parker and Detroit's Plenette Pierson turned into a shoving match that saw players and coaches from both teams leave the bench. Shock assistant coach Rick Mahorn, who was involved in the Detroit Pistons-Indiana Pacers brawl on Nov. 19, 2004, as a Detroit broadcaster trying to break up the fight, appeared to shove Lisa Leslie to the floor at one point. Parker, Milton-Jones, Pierson and Mahorn were ejected, while Detroit's Cheryl Ford left the floor in a wheelchair after getting injured while trying to restrain Pierson.

New test may boost HGH detection

Non-invasive way possibly 'giant step'

By A.J. Perez
USA TODAY

Scientists from the USA and Italy say they have developed a urine test that detects human growth hormone. The finding is a potential breakthrough in efforts to find a non-invasive way to screen for the performance-enhancing drug that is banned across the athletic world.

Governing bodies and U.S. pro leagues have long sought a test that doesn't require blood to detect HGH, a synthetic hormone that aids in recovery and bolsters muscle growth. Even with the blood test, no prominent athlete has tested positive for HGH. Former track and field star Marion Jones and some baseball players, including New York Yankees pitcher Andy Pettitte, have admitted using it.

Virginia-based Ceres Nanosciences, partnered with George Mason University in Fairfax, Va., and Italy's Istituto Superiore di Sanità, could have the test on the market within six months, company CEO Thomas Dunlap says. Ceres' intention was first reported by the Washington Business Journal.

Widespread adoption of the test probably would depend on lengthy scientific reviews by anti-doping authorities, leagues and players unions. World Anti-Doping Agency representatives had a conference call with Ceres officials last week, WADA spokesman Frederic Donze says.

Initially aimed at cancer research, "Our aim wasn't to clean up sport like some social Santa Claus," says George Mason life sciences professor Emanuel Petricoin, a member of Ceres' scientific advisory board. "We locked onto HGH because it presented us with a challenge due to the fact it's so hard to detect. As a sports fan, it'd be great to know there could be a more-level playing field."

Don Catlin, a founder of the UCLA Olympic Analytical Lab, long has been trying to develop a urine test for HGH. "This invention could be a giant step forward. . . . I'm going to pay a lot of attention," he says.

Give him a hand: British soccer transplant David Beckham of the Los Angeles Galaxy is making the many millions the MLS has invested in him pay off.

In year 1, Beckham on target for MLS

Cover story

By Beau Dure
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — Oscar Wilde said the only thing worse than being talked about is not being talked about. By that measure, David Beckham's first year in Major League Soccer has helped the league.

Last year, he arrived in the USA in mid-July, just in time to present a trophy at halftime of the league's All-Star Game. Thursday, midway into his first full season with the Los Angeles Galaxy, he will be playing for the MLS All-Stars against England's West Ham in Toronto, where he's sure to be the center of attention.

In an exclusive interview with USA TODAY, he says he's here for the long haul, hoping to leave a lasting impact on MLS and in U.S. soccer. He already had opened a branch of the David Beckham Academy, a soccer school in Los Angeles, before his arrival. He wants to be involved with everything from youth development to the new women's professional league, which starts in 2009.

New buyers make it hard to drive bargain

On call: Brewers general manager Doug Melvin checks his phone July 7.

By Bob Nightengale
USA TODAY

For the first time as the July 31 trade deadline approaches, calls are coming from the 727 area code, home of the Tampa Bay Rays. That 305 area code isn't from the Florida Marlins calling to dump players but from them wanting to add help for the pennant stretch. And Milwaukee Brewers general manager Doug Melvin is likely on the other line with the same thing in mind.

"There certainly are new players to the game than we've had in recent years," Chicago White Sox general manager Kenny Williams says. "It makes it tougher to make deals."

The Brewers, who haven't been to the postseason since 1982, were two games out of first place in the National League Central through Monday. The Marlins, projected to lose 100 games this year, were one game out of first place in the NL East. The Rays, who have never reached the playoffs in their 10-year history, are in first place in the American League East.

"The major difference in the industry now," Colorado Rockies GM Dan O'Dowd says, "is that a lot of the mid- and small-market teams have their financial sheets in order. The teams in the past that used to move money are now looking to add players."

Precious few teams are willing to trade players and give up on the season, as 20 teams still were within nine games of first place in their respective divisions entering Tuesday's games. The teams that traditionally were out of contention by Memorial Day are now making the same trade requests as the big boys.

"The parity in the game is making it harder for teams to make trades," says Chicago Cubs GM Jim Hendry, who acquired starter Rich Harden from the Oakland Athletics a day after the Brewers picked up ace CC Sabathia. "You only have nine or 10 teams looking to move players."

New York City hotel Friday, leaning forward in his chair in short sleeves that showed his extensive tattoos. He says he's pleased and never asked for any sort of option in the five-year deal that pays him $6.5 million this year.

Cover story

"So far, I'm happy," Beckham says. "Attendances are up. I also think people are getting more interested in the game from what I hear, what I've seen. Everywhere I go, they're almost-sold-out stadiums, which is great."

When the paparazzi follow his wife — Victoria, also known as singer-actress Posh Spice — and sons, Brooklyn, 9, Romeo, 5, and Cruz, 3, MLS is again in the news.

News on Beckham travels so quickly he's sometimes the last to know. So when the New York Daily News reported the soft-spoken English midfielder with the perpetual gentle smile is now co-owner of a race horse with fellow ESPY presenters Danica Patrick and Will Ferrell, that was news to him. However, he does have the option for a 2% stake, ESPY gift-bag organizer Matthew Brady says. Beckham didn't realize as of Friday that the option was in his gift bag.

The attention and attendance aren't quite what they were when Beckhammania first hit the USA. SportsBusiness Journal reports ESPN2's MLS TV ratings rose from an average of 246,000 viewers for the first 13 matches in 2007 to an average of 289,000 viewers through 15 matches in 2008.

Some fans show up in the ubiquitous No. 23 shirt — MLS spokesperson Will Kuhns says sales of Galaxy jerseys with Beckham's name on them reached more than 300,000 worldwide in 2007. Some fans turn up to taunt Beckham over everything from England's failure to qualify for Euro 2008 to his wife's pop career.

The crowds were down for this year's East Coast visits — 35,979 on June 29 in Washington compared with 46,686 last year; 46,754 on Saturday at Giants Stadium compared with 66,237 last year. That's still nearly double the United's average and nearly triple the Red Bulls' typical numbers. Overall, MLS might finish slightly ahead of last year's average of 16,770, best since its debut year of 1996.

The league is faring better on several fronts — expansion to San Jose and Seattle, new stadiums underway in three MLS cities, lucrative TV deals (ESPN, Fox Soccer Channel, HDNet, Univision) and new sponsors such as Dick's Sporting Goods and Volkswagen. Many of the deals were underway before the Beckham buzz, which picked up in earnest when he signed with the Galaxy in January 2007.

"David was the impetus of a number of great things that happened in 2007," MLS Commissioner Don Garber says.

Fans of expansion team Toronto will get a chance to see Beckham for the first time at the All-Star Game. Beckham was the leading vote-getter among fans, players and news media and was second overall to teammate Landon Donovan, who led the GM-coaches voting.

On the field

Last year, Beckham had little opportunity to show his playing ability. He turned up with an ankle injury after helping Real Madrid surge to its first Spanish title in five years, then injured his right knee in the SuperLiga final against Mexican club Pachuca. He had little time to jell with the Galaxy, who missed the playoffs despite a late surge. Fans were frustrated. So was Beckham.

This year, Beckham and Donovan have combined with Edson Buddle into a potent offensive force. Los Angeles is second in the West despite a shaky defense and is the league's runaway leader in goals scored with 36 in 17 games. Being fit and bonding with the team in preseason, Beckham says, have made him feel more "settled."

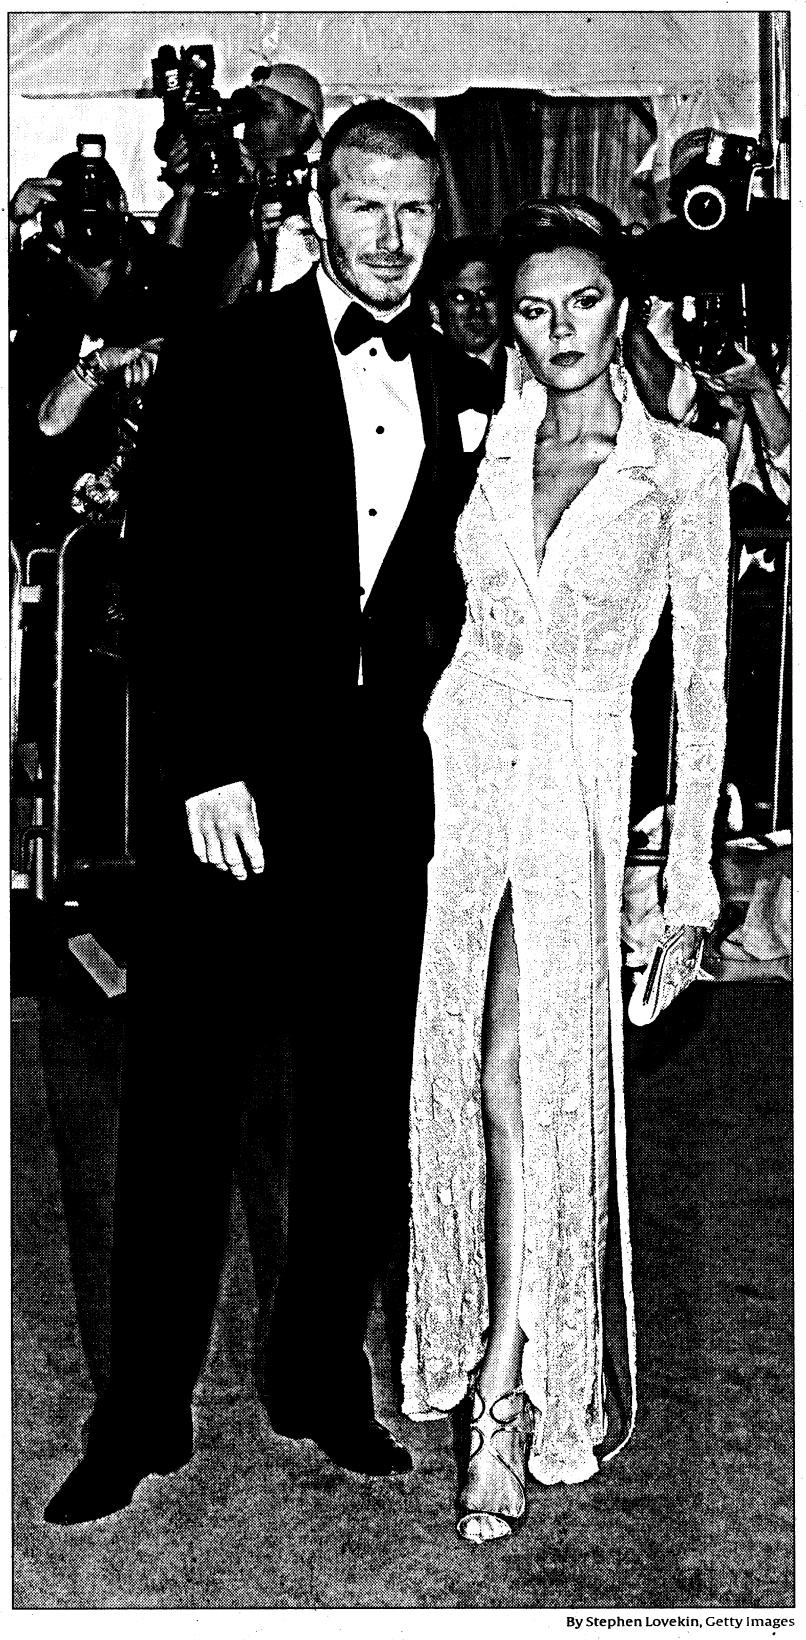
Even in games such as Saturday's in which he is relatively quiet — hot summer daytime games are brutal for an English-born player who refuses to give up his long sleeves — he can change the game with one touch, as he did with a pinpoint long pass to Buddle that led to a Carlos Ruiz goal in the 2-2 draw. That play didn't show up in his stats, yet he's still tied for second in the league with seven assists.

Beckham insists he's a player first and a celebrity second. He's pleased to have worked his way back onto England's national team. His news media schedule is less intense than it was in 2007, when the Galaxy's schedule was intentionally loaded with games after his midseason arrival. He skipped a network TV appearance last week in New York to attend a team meeting.

"We've proven this is not a stunt," Garber says. "He's a very committed MLS player."

"My soccer comes before anything I do — obviously not before my family, but anything else," Beckham says. "Soccer's No. 1. It's the reason why I'm the ambassador for the MLS and do different things in my life. People know that my priority's with soccer."

Beckham is comfortable in the ambassador's role. He beams as he talks about seeing children in Harlem, N.Y., kick a soccer ball for the first time.



By Stephen Lovekin, Getty Images

Pets of the paparazzi: Beckham and his wife, former Spice Girl Victoria Beckham, handle the glare of the spotlight with aplomb. "It's part of my life," Beckham says.

He's bullish on soccer's growth in the USA, noting the interest in Euro 2008 and new soccer stadiums that host MLS teams, such as The Home Depot Center, where the Galaxy play. He says he would "help in any way possible" in cities such as Washington that have been unable to reach a stadium deal.

The superstar is also interested in working with the new women's professional league, WPS, saying he has spoken to MLS chief Garber about his interest. "I've spoken to David personally about his interest, and we're thrilled," WPS Commissioner Tonya Antonucci says. "We'd love to have David as a kind of athlete and hero to soccer fans and the general public alike."

No regrets

At the league's request, Beckham does a postgame news conference to avoid locker room chaos, though he, his staff and the league limit his access at other times. Off the field, security and possibly paparazzi are always tracking him.

"I can't imagine what he deals with day-to-day," Buddle says. "He can't go anywhere by himself. I couldn't imagine what that's like. I see it, but I probably have no idea."

Beckham is used to it. He takes security with him when he goes out.

"If I was to sit back and think about it, I'd go mad. But it is part of my life. It's not a nice part, but at the end of the day, I've never complained about what my life is like."

MLS players aren't complaining, even though his salary dwarfs that of anyone else in a league that pays some developmental players less than $20,000. Cuauhtemoc Blanco, a Mexican star who joined the Chicago Fire last season, is second in MLS pay with guaranteed compensation of $2.7 million a year.

"I definitely don't think he's overpaid," says teammate Chris Klein, a 10-year veteran who'll make $150,000 this year. "I look at the exposure that he's brought to our league. I really don't think you can put a price tag on that. I always want players in our league to make more."

Beckham's contract runs through 2011. He probably would be too old to return to a major role in Europe. "Once I'd made the decision to come over here and once the family had made the decision between us that this was going to be our new life for a while, then that's the way it is," Beckham says. The travel is extensive — Beckham says he never appreciated how enormous the country is until he moved here.

"He's nothing if not resilient, and he has an amazing capacity to adapt," Galaxy general manager Alexi Lalas says. "He's not as high-maintenance as one might think."

Has he ever told Lalas things just weren't working here?

"Not one time," Beckham says. "There's always craziness in my life, so it's not as if I'm not used to it. I'm enjoying this new role that I've taken."

Beckham deal opened door for more stars

Major League Soccer had to rewrite its salary-cap rules to sign David Beckham while he was still a viable international player.

The league passed a "designated player" rule in late 2006, giving each team one cap exemption. That player can be paid anything, but only $400,000 will count against the cap, pegged by Sports-Business Journal at $2.3 million a team in 2008.

Beckham was the first and biggest star signed under the rule.

Designated players Cuauhtemoc Blanco (Chicago Fire) and Juan Pablo Angel (New York Red Bulls) have thrived with their clubs and will be on All-Star rosters.

MLS has not used the rule to raid Europe for its top players. The other designated players hail from the Americas.

Blanco, a Mexican star who has spent more than a decade on that country's national team, is closest to Beckham in popularity, with nearly 6,000 fans greeting him when he appeared at the Fire's stadium three months before he was scheduled to play.

"Very few athletes can make the kind of impact David has made in his sport," MLS Commissioner Don Garber says. "I'm not sure there is another David Beckham."

Olympic sports

Teen's 'dream' now a reality

By Gary Mihoces
USA TODAY

As a 12-year-old wrestler, Jake Deitchler was inspired by a 2002 moment of Olympic glory in a far different sport — figure skating.

"It was the Winter Games and watching Sarah Hughes win a gold medal at the age of 16," he says. "It was like, 'Wow!' ... It just kind of took off from there, watching the Summer Games, just every event. It didn't matter if it was gymnastics, track and field and obviously wrestling."

Now 18, just months after graduation from Anoka (Minn.) High School, Deitchler is an Olympian himself as the U.S. entrant in the 145.5-pound class of Greco-Roman wrestling.

Winner of the U.S. trials in June in Las Vegas, he is the first wrestler to make the U.S. Olympic team straight out of high school since Mike Farina of Illinois qualified in 1976 in Greco-Roman.

What are his chances in China?

"I truly believe that if he wrestles out of his head, like he did in Vegas, that he could win an Olympic gold," says Brandon Paulson, the 1996 Olympic silver medalist in Greco-Roman, a product of Anoka High and Deitchler's personal coach.

"Every guy he's going to face is going to be a great wrestler. But I wouldn't bet against him. He has such a big heart, and he wants to win so bad," Paulson says.

Deitchler, who will wrestle for the University of Minnesota in the fall, wrestled in China last year in the junior worlds. He came home "really frustrated" after losing his first and only match.

By Mark J. Rebilas, US Presswire

Boy among men: Jake Deitchler, 18, is the first high school wrestler to qualify for the Games since 1976.

"I said, 'I don't ever want this to happen again.' And I started rolling from there," he says. "Going (back) to China, I'll have experience as far as what it's like there. I won't be totally flabbergasted. I'll be ready to give it my all."

Minnesota is a hotbed for Greco-Roman wrestling, a style that allows no holds below the waist. Since 1968, the USA has had at least one Minnesotan on every Greco-Roman Olympic team, often more.

Anoka High, located in suburban Minneapolis, alone has produced five Greco-Roman Olympians: brothers David and James Hazewinkel (both Olympians in 1968 and 1972), Dan Chandler (1976, 1980, 1984), Paulson (1996) and Deitchler.

In the 2004 U.S. trials, Paulson came up short of making the team, losing a 16-minute, triple-overtime match to Dennis Hall.

When Paulson got home, Anoka High wrestling coach Todd Springer was waiting in his driveway with a proposal. He wanted Paulson to help coach a prodigy.

"He said, 'He's the next Brandon Paulson,' " says Paulson, who though skeptical started working with Deitchler.

"At first, it was just me plugging away," Deitchler says. "I just wanted to get better. I kept calling him. He saw that, and we built a relationship."

That included hard wrestling on the mat between the two. In January, Paulson tore an anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee during one of their sessions. He kept postponing surgery but finally had it in May. Now he's limited to demonstrating technique.

"I'm hoping to be able to go a little harder with him in Beijing," Paulson says. "I'm not telling my wife, though."

Learn about fellow wrestler Steve Mocco's favorite home-cooked meal via a Q&A at olympics.usatoday.com

Deitchler's trademark is full-throttle wrestling. In four matches in the trials, he lost all of the first periods by combined scores of 18-3. But he won the second and third periods. "When I'm down, I just find a way to win by just wrestling hard," he says.

Paulson says Deitchler will have a send-off workout next week with his high school team before leaving for China: "We're going to do that one morning and kind of get Jake pumped to go."

Not that Deitchler needs more pumping. "Just watching the Olympics, I said, 'Hey, I want to be there some day,' " he says. "It's like a life-long dream."

Karolyi 'disappointed' by ex-gymnast's claims

By Janice Lloyd
USA TODAY

Martha Karolyi shook off criticism leveled against her and her husband Tuesday by former gymnast Dominique Moceanu.

When Moceanu was asked on HBO's Real Sports if she thought Bela and Martha Karolyi should be pushed out of the sport, she replied, "If it was up to the athletes, it would have happened a long time ago."

The program aired Tuesday night. Earlier Tuesday, Karolyi said she was "disappointed" in Moceanu's comments.

Since defecting from Romania in 1981, Bela and Martha Karolyi have been the husband and wife team largely credited with the success of the U.S. women's gymnastic team. Moceanu was a member of the 1996 Olympic gold medal team. After retiring in 2000, she attempted a comeback in 2006, but her petition to make the team was denied because she wasn't physically ready.

"I feel sad that a gymnast as accomplished as Dominique can (only) remember the harder days during preparation," Martha Karolyi said. "I feel sad because the preparation to become an Olympic champion is a longer road and not every single moment is an easy moment."

Moceanu said the Karolyis limited what she could eat and showed little compassion.

"I think the majority of the girls certainly feel very proud that they were able to train those many years, be dedicated and deal with the sacrifices," Martha Karolyi said.

Briefly: The three alternates on the women's gymnastic team have not received visas to enter China yet and might be required to train in Tokyo while the rest of the team trains in China. Alternates are required to get tourist visas, unlike team members who get Olympic credentials that double as visas. "We are now working on making the final decision on the training location," said Steve Penny, president of USA Gymnastics. The men's alternates have their tourist visas and will train with the men's team in Beijing. ... USA Gymnastics named Miles Avery, the personal coach for Paul and Morgan Hamm and head coach at Ohio State, the assistant coach to the Olympic men's team. This is his fourth Olympics. He will be working with head coach Kevin Mazeika. ... Doug Logan, who last week pledged aggressive anti-drug action upon being named CEO of USA Track & Field, sent an open letter Tuesday to President Bush, urging that Marion Jones not be pardoned as she has requested. Logan wrote: "To reduce Jones' sentence or pardon her would send a horrible message to young people who idolized her, reinforcing the notion that you can cheat and be entitled to get away with it." Jones is serving a six-month sentence, due to end in September, after admitting to lying to investigators about her involvement in performance drug use and a counterfeit check ring.

Keeping score

From Iran to Beijing, via son, shot put

He followed his long flight from Iran with a train ride from New York to California. Mohammad Nikfar was 30, alone and scared.

A woman approached him. Why did she keep talking? He frantically shook his head.

I don't understand. I don't understand. I don't speak English.

She drew pictures of a cow and a chicken.

Oh. Oh! She works on the train. She wants to know what I want to eat!

He circled the chicken and thought, "This will be the easiest choice I'll have to make in my new life."

Commentary
By Paola Boivin

It was 1976. Nikfar had come to the United States to pursue a degree in electrical engineering. He was miserable. After three weeks, he bought a ticket to return. Stick it out, a nephew begged. He did, and within six months he had enrolled at San Jose State and fallen in love with an American woman he met while looking for shoes in a secondhand shop.

He worked 40 hours a week and attended school full time. He graduated with an engineering degree and opened his own contracting company. He married and raised two boys.

He worried. What would become of them and how would their mixed heritage be perceived? It was an era of strained relations between the United State and Iran. In 1979, Ayatollah Khomeini had returned from exile and Iranian militants had stormed the U.S. embassy in Tehran and taken hostages, leading to sanctions and the severing of diplomatic ties.

Nikfar found his Santa Clara, Calif., neighbors warm and supportive. They respected his work ethic and marveled at his two sons, who were blooming into talented athletes.

Although Mohammad is 5-9, the boys were tall like their mother, Diane. They excelled in football and throwing the shot put. The youngest, Amin, was 6-4 and good enough to attract the attention of California's track and field program.

My boys will be OK. They are getting a good education.

Just before Amin graduated from Berkeley in 2004, he received an anonymous e-mail that said he was close to breaking the Iranian national record and had the chance to represent Iran in the 2008 Summer Olympics in Beijing because of his father's heritage.

This was heady stuff. Amin was talented but never the best among his U.S. peers. He finished 21st at the 2003 and 2004 NCAA Outdoor Championships.

He worked hard and competed with Iran's national team. He loved it. His teammates embraced him, often inviting him to their rooms and grilling him with questions like, "Have you ever seen J.Lo in person?"

In 2006, he moved to Flagstaff, Ariz., to train with Northern Arizona track coach Mohamad Saatara, who was accomplished in the hammer throw and shared Amin's Iranian roots. They also shared a desire to get Amin to the Olympics, which required him to reach a qualifying mark.

Mohammad Nikfar watched in wonderment.

Amin, 27, enrolled in graduate classes at NAU and volunteered as a coach. Saatara helped redirect Amin's focus from strength training to technique. Amin had until today to qualify. He started his attempts in January but kept falling short. March passed. April. Finally, on June 26 at a meet in Flagstaff, his throw of 65-4 earned him a trip to the Olympics. He will be Iran's lone representative in the shot put and, he knows, one of the Games' biggest long shots.

Mohammad, 62, "can't even believe it's true." He thinks about how success stories come in a variety of shapes, how kindness can transcend politics, and how a train ride that started in New York has taken him and his family to the mostly unlikely of places: Beijing.

Today at Game On! Q&A with Mark Spitz

Seven-time gold medalist high on Phelps

Spitz predicts 'biggest schooling' in history of sports

Mark Spitz's name will be mentioned often as Michael Phelps pursues eight gold medals in swimming at the Beijing Olympics, in hopes of topping Spitz's record seven from 1972. But Spitz wants people to know there's one area where he's easily beaten — his cholesterol count if he weren't on medication.

Spitz, 58, learned of his genetic predisposition to high cholesterol when he was 39 and in the middle of a rigorous training program. Despite 2% body fat, his count see-sawed from 220 to 300. As a spokesman for the Medco Tour of Champions, Spitz encourages people to monitor chronic health issues.

Spitz spoke with USA TODAY's Tom Weir:

What's the difference between the pressure you faced in 1972 and what Phelps will face?
I was under the radar screen until I had five gold medals. . . . He for the last five years has been living with the middle name of Mark Spitz.

Can Phelps be beaten?
I think you're going to see the biggest schooling for his competitors in the history of sports.

Have speedsuits changed the sport?
If you believe that, then you and I should go out and buy Tiger Woods' golf clubs.

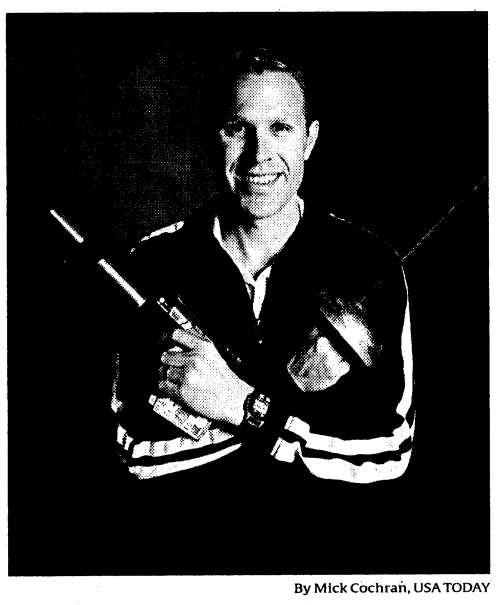
Olympic blogs An athlete in praise of drug testing



By Mick Cochran, USA TODAY

Clean team: Eli Bremer says no-advance-notice testing is "a small price to pay for . . . credibility."

Bremer: 'It's a great system'

Modern pentathlete is fine with being on call anytime

It's 6 a.m. and Olympic modern pentathlete Eli Bremer is sleeping. He gets a phone call and then a knock on the door of his Colorado home. It's the drug testers from the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency, and they're paying a house call.

The same scenario plays itself out at least a half-dozen times a year for the American athlete who hopes to bring home a medal in Beijing in a sport that combines running, shooting, show-jumping, swimming and fencing, and he doesn't mind, as he explains on his blog for USA TODAY.

"Going back about 10 years, there was clearly a major problem with drug usage by U.S. Olympic athletes. . . . The revelation that our highest-profile athletes . . . were using drugs tarnished the reputation of all (of us)."

Out of this turmoil came the now-independent USADA, Bremer writes, which has a policy of "no-advance-notice" out-of-competition testing that "makes cheating the system virtually impossible."

Athletes are required to keep location forms on file with the agency and be available for testing at any time

"While this might seem highly intrusive to many of you," Bremer writes, "I believe it's a great system. Those of us who compete clean are fairly proud to prove it."

Since the advent of USADA and their impromptu tests, Bremer believes that the American athletes who are packing their bags for China will be probably be the cleanest at the Olympics. "Which is a small price to pay for this credibility."

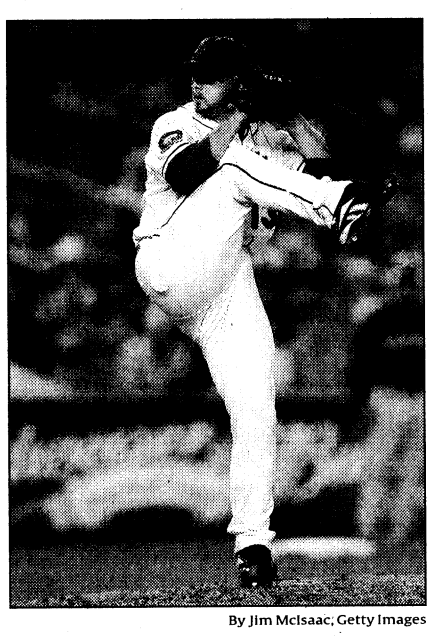
Fantasy Focus Sometimes, there's nothing to do but wait



By Jim McIsaac, Getty Images

No DL: The Mets' Billy Wagner has spasms.

Wagner puts cramp in owners' plans

Closer's shoulder pain just false alarm

New York Mets closer Billy Wagner has terrible timing. At least, that is, by fantasy baseball standards. On Sunday, Wagner told reporters that he had experienced cramping in his shoulder while warming up.

Several New York papers reported Wagner would have an MRI on Monday, filling fantasy owners with anxiety. On USA TODAY's fantasy chat Monday, several asked what the Mets would do if Wagner went on the DL.

But with a noon or 1 p.m. Monday transaction deadline, owners had little or no time to wait for the results of Wagner's exam.

Turned out Wagner's MRI showed just a muscle spasm. The Mets listed him as day-to-day.

Other questions:

How will the Milwaukee Brewers' acquisition of Ray Durham affect second baseman Rickie Weeks?
It seems the veteran Durham will serve mostly as a pinch hitter. But Weeks came into Tuesday's games hitting .219 — more than 70 points lower than Durham's .292 — so it's easy to see how Weeks owners might be feeling nervous.

What role will Colorado Rockies shortstop Troy Tulowitzki play now that he's returned from the DL?
It was reported that Tulowitzki still had to work out some "kinks" in his swing, partly because he was hitting .166 before he went on the DL and is now hitting .192. Tulowitzki went 5-for-5 Monday night, possibly cementing his status at the Rockies' starting shortstop again.

Web Watch Right rings, wrong score

33 years and no one noticed?

Steelers memento misses by 8 points

The first lesson of Sportswriting 101 is: Get the score right. But that directive apparently was lost on the Pittsburgh Steelers executives who designed the team's championship rings for Super Bowl IX, played in 1975.

The rings' decorations included the scores of all of the Steelers postseason victories, but got the outcome of the first-round win against the Buffalo Bills wrong. The correct score was Steelers 32, Bills 14; the rings have Pittsburgh winning 32-6.

The item, posted in Game On! blog, was the most commented upon sports story Tuesday at USATODAY.com. Among reader reaction:

▶ dgb68: "Those who don't care? Bet your team doesn't ever make the playoffs."

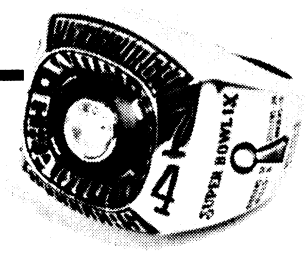
▶ bigshot: "I am sure the other 4 rings are correct."

▶ tazz7557: "(Former Steelers quarterback Terry) Bradshaw must have been in charge. Nobody realized? That's the closest thing to impossible I have ever heard."

Former Steelers public relations chief Joe Gordon agreed that it seemed impossible. "I'll be damned," he told the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "I find it almost impossible to believe because so many of us checked it."

The only reason the error has finally come to light more than three decades later is that one of the rings and another from Pittsburgh's Super Bowl X champions were sold on eBay recently.

The newspaper says they were the property of an unnamed front-office employee whose estate is undergoing a bankruptcy sale.



By Todd Plitt for USA TODAY

Flagged: Ring misses spread.

Gordon said, if the mistake had been noted, it was virtually certain the Steelers would have ordered a new set.

The error does not appear to have affected the ring's value. An unidentified bidder paid $32,751 for it.

American League notes

Baltimore: LH reliever Jamie Walker, on the disabled list with elbow woes, threw pitches of live batting practice and is closer to a return. After 25 pitches, Walker said he was tired because of the heat but said he could return by Thursday. ... SS Alex Cintron, on the disabled list because of a strained hamstring, is scheduled for rehab this weekend. ... OF Nick Markakis will not be signing a contract extension soon. Talks between the Orioles and their 24-year-old star were halted this week, The (Baltimore) Sun reported. The report suggested talks might reopen after the season.

Boston: LF Manny Ramirez again found himself the target of criticism Monday after local television analyst Dennis Eckersley sounded off about the left fielder's contract complaints. "I don't like the way Manny plays this game, not so much the way he plays it, but the way he's playing his act with his contract," Eckersley said in part. ... C Jason Varitek has been suffering through the worst slump of his career, but manager Terry Francona indicated he has no plans to pinch-hit for his captain in late-inning situations. Varitek hit his second home run in his last 42 games Monday.

Chicago: Manager Ozzie Guillen and LH closer C.J. Wilson of Texas traded jabs after their last game in Texas before the break, but both seemed uninterested in carrying it on into the current series. "I think it's done," Guillen said. "I never criticize anybody for having a style. But when you (disrespect) baseball and you (disrespect) the opposition, I don't think that's class." Said Wilson: "Whatever I allegedly did was a week ago. I haven't said anything about it. I just like throwing hard and having a Mohawk and being an idiot, you know?"

Cleveland: IF Jamey Carroll, who spent most of the last two months starting at second base, batted .352 in June but was hitting .188 in July through Monday.

Detroit: RF Magglio Ordonez was given Monday off by manager Jim Leyland even though he recently returned from the DL because the Tigers are in a seven-game stretch in steamy weather in Baltimore and Kansas City. RF Matt Joyce made the decision pay off by hitting a three-run homer, his 10th of the season in 105 at-bats. Joyce added a triple and two singles. ... RH reliever Freddy Dolsi had rough outings in his first four appearances after the All-Star break. The rookie pitched a scoreless seventh Monday but didn't retire any of the four batters out he faced in the eighth and all wound up scoring. He allowed six runs in 1⅓ innings over his previous four games.

Kansas City: RH reliever Joel Peralta, who was optioned to Class AAA Omaha on Monday when RH reliever Leo Nunez came off the DL, was recalled. Peralta is 1-2 with a 5.52 ERA in 24 relief appearances in two stints with the club this season.

Los Angeles: OF Gary Matthews Jr. started in right field Monday, his first start since July 12. Matthews is playing despite patellar tendinitis and a small tear in his left knee. He went hitless in four at-bats, striking out twice. His average fell to .232, and he had only six hits in his last 40 at-bats. Matthews also made an error in right field. ... C Mike Napoli began a throwing program to build strength in his right shoulder. Napoli has been on the DL for two weeks because of inflammation in the shoulder.

Minnesota: After giving CF Carlos Gomez plenty of time to break out of his slump, manager Ron Gardenhire finally dropped the 22-year-old from the top of the order to the bottom, with RF Denard Span moving from ninth to first. ... A CT scan on RF Michael Cuddyer's left hand showed no tears, Gardenhire said, adding doctors will discuss what step Cuddyer will take next after being on the DL since June 30 because of a strained tendon in his left index finger.

New York: C Jose Molina broke a 0-for-12 streak Monday with three hits on the day C Jorge Posada went on the disabled list. "I know (manager) Joe (Girardi) and all the guys want me behind the plate more than with my bat," said Molina, who increased his average to .227. "But I'd like to help the team with my bat, too." ... RH reliever Dave Robertson recorded his fifth consecutive scoreless appearance Monday, lowering his ERA to 1.54. He allowed two runs while striking out 14 in nine innings.

Oakland: 2B Mark Ellis was scratched less than an hour before the game because of a sore right shoulder. Brooks Conrad, called up the day before, moved from third base to second, and OF Ryan Sweeney moved into the leadoff spot. ... RH reliever Joey Devine, on the DL because of an elbow strain, was scheduled for a simulated game today, but it was pushed back to Thursday or Friday because he has neck stiffness. Should the Athletics trade RH closer Huston Street before the July 31 non-waiver deadline, Devine is expected to fill that role.

Seattle: RHP Carlos Silva, who left his start Sunday in the fourth inning because of tightness in his lower back, should make his next start, manager Jim Riggleman said.

Tampa Bay: SS Jason Bartlett ran the bases before Monday's game, and he said afterward that his right knee, sprained while he was stealing third base July 2, is nearly good enough for him to return to the lineup. He's hoping to be back Thursday.

Texas: C Taylor Teagarden was optioned to Class AAA (Oklahoma City) Oklahoma because he is going to Beijing with the U.S. Olympic team. ... DH-OF Milton Bradley made his first start in the outfield since July 4 on Monday.

Toronto: RHP Jesse Litsch (8-7), who allowed six runs on seven hits over 4⅔ innings Monday, is 1-6 in nine starts in June and July. ... C Rod Barajas snapped a 0-for-13 slide with a second-inning single Monday and added a sacrifice fly, raising his average to .256.

Markakis makes mark

By David Ginsburg
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Baltimore Orioles outfielder Nick Markakis has already achieved a career high in walks, receiving 63 through Tuesday compared with 61 all of last season. The reason? Well, that's open for interpretation.

"It's just being more patient, seeing pitches better and having confidence up there," Markakis said. "It's getting more experience. The more you play, the more you get a better understanding of the strike zone."

That's one theory. Baltimore hitting coach Terry Crowley has another.

"This is just a culmination of the respect given to one of the better hitters in the league," Crowley said. "A first- or second-year player takes a pitch, and a 10-year veteran takes a pitch, the odds of it being called a strike are higher for the lesser experienced player."

Now in his third full season, Markakis has found a home in the No. 3 spot in the lineup and is arguably the most dangerous hitter on the team.

"Nicky has gotten respect from the umpires, pitchers around the league, managers, coaches," Crowley said. "They intentionally walk him or throw him breaking balls he can't reach and end up walking him."

Crowley is convinced Markakis, 24, will soon be reaching personal bests in other categories. "He's always had a good eye. As he goes along, he's going to surpass his career highs in walks, in home runs, doubles, batting average, game-winning hits," Crowley said. "The sky is the limit."

Experience pays: The Orioles' Nick Markakis says he has a better understanding of the strike zone.

Tuesday's games

Toronto vs. BALTIMORE — Center fielder Adam Jones was back in Baltimore's lineup Monday after sitting out Sunday's loss to Detroit with a swollen right ankle. He has reached base safely in 20 consecutive games, going 29-for-78 (.372) with 15 RBI. The Blue Jays have lost seven road series in a row. A weak offense has been an issue all season for Toronto, which ranks 12th in the AL in runs scored (416) and last in homers (68).

YANKEES 8, Twins 2 — Bobby Abreu hit a two-run homer, his first since June 25, and drove in three runs and Derek Jeter and Robinson Cano each drove in two runs as the Yankees won the second of three games between AL playoff contenders. David Robertson got the win in relief and lowered his ERA to 1.59.

Athletics 8, RAYS 1 — Jack Hannahan hit a three-run homer and Dallas Braden held Tampa Bay to one run in five innings despite four walks. Three Oakland relievers combined on four scoreless innings of relief. Kurt Suzuki had an RBI double during a four-run eighth that made it 7-1.

Detroit vs. KANSAS CITY — Detroit's 19-4 win at Kansas City on Monday was its first victory in seven games with the Royals (45-55) this season and marked the third time the Tigers scored 19 runs.

Texas vs. CHICAGO — The Rangers have baseball's best offense, a unit that scores 5.5 runs a game, and the White Sox (55-44) came into their three-game series in Arlington before the break tied for the best ERA (3.40) in the majors. Texas roughed up Chicago's staff in that series, however, scoring at least seven runs in each game to win two of three, including a wild 12-11 finale.

Cleveland vs. LOS ANGELES — The Indians had scored 53 runs in their last eight games after scoring 34 in their previous eight. Blake had helped lead the way, hitting .355 (11-for-31) with three homers and 10 RBI over that stretch.

Boston vs., SEATTLE — Seattle had lost three consecutive games and nine of 12 to increase its AL West deficit to 22 games — the largest for any team.

Inside the Nationals-D'backs trade

By Haraz N. Ghanbari, AP

Rauch: Reliever's 2.98 ERA should help the D'backs.

▶ The trade: The Washington Nationals send reliever Jon Rauch to the Arizona Diamondbacks for minor league second baseman Emilio Bonifacio.

▶ Impact on Diamondbacks: Entering Tuesday, the Diamondbacks were tied with the Los Angeles Dodgers for first place in the NL West, but just 49-50. Rauch should help steady a suspect bullpen that most recently blew a four-run lead in the ninth inning Sunday against the Dodgers.

It's not known whether the Diamondbacks will demote current closer Brandon Lyon, the culprit in Sunday's meltdown, and use Rauch, who has 17 saves filling in for the injured Chad Cordero. Diamondbacks general manager Josh Byrnes acknowledged that Rauch is a "proven late game reliever."

Rauch has a 2.98 ERA with 44 strikeouts in 48⅓ innings while Lyon has 20 saves and a 3.86 ERA. Both have five blown saves.

▶ Impact on Nationals: Cordero should be back next season, and in last place in the NL East, the Nationals have little value for Rauch's stop-gap effort at closer. Turning away from Rauch, 29, Washington is looking toward the future with Bonifacio, 23, who projects to soon be a big-league leadoff hitter and one of the majors' fastest players. Although he was just 2-for-12 in eight games this season with the Diamondbacks, Bonifacio hit .302 with a .348 on-base percentage, five triples and 17 stolen bases in 85 games for Class AAA Tucson.

Strong return: Rick VandenHurk, making his first start for the Marlins since he was sent to the minors in April, held the Braves hitless through five innings in his victory Tuesday.

Marlins toss one-hitter

By Solange Reyner
The Associated Press

MIAMI — Rick VandenHurk and three relievers combined on a one-hitter, and Mike Jacobs hit a three-run homer to help the Florida Marlins beat the Atlanta Braves 4-0 Tuesday night.

Game of the day

VandenHurk (1-1), recalled Monday from Class AA Carolina (Zebulon, N.C.), pitched five hitless innings for his first win since last Aug. 23. He walked five and left the game after throwing 94 pitches.

Chipper Jones led off the sixth inning with a line-drive single up the middle off Joe Nelson, but Nelson retired the next three batters, Renyel Pinto pitched two perfect innings, and Matt Lindstrom pitched a 1-2-3 ninth.

The one-hit performance was the best by Florida since Anibal Sanchez threw a no-hitter against Arizona on Sept. 6, 2006. The one-hitter was the ninth for the Marlins, who have four no-hitters.

The game's first hit — Jacobs' homer — came on the 151st pitch. Charlie Morton (2-3) walked Jorge Cantu and Dan Uggla in the fourth, and with two out Jacobs hit his 20th homer.

Florida had three other hits. Royce Ring walked John Baker with the bases loaded to force in a run in the sixth. Morton allowed two hits and four runs in 5⅔ innings.

VandenHurk was sent to the minors in early April after giving up seven runs in 5⅓ innings in his first two starts.

National League notes

Arizona: LHP Randy Johnson lowered his ERA against the Chicago Cubs to 1.85 with his seven scoreless innings Monday, and his four strikeouts increased his total to 142 in 102⅔ innings.

Atlanta: Manager Bobby Cox was suspended for Tuesday's game and fined for his run-in Sunday with home plate umpire Chris Guccione that resulted in Cox's ejection. Bench coach Chino Cadahia took over as field manager. ... SS Yunel Escobar (left shoulder) was back in the lineup for the first time in almost two weeks.

Chicago: Manager Lou Piniella canceled batting practice for the final two games of the series in Arizona after Monday's 2-0 loss to the Diamondbacks. In the first four games of the trip, the Cubs were shut out once and scored one run each in two other games. ... 1B Derrek Lee entered Tuesday 3-for-17 on the trip. He led the NL in grounded into double plays, with 20.

Cincinnati: IF/OF Ryan Freel is scheduled for surgery today to remove the torn distal hamstring behind his right knee. The Reds said a prognosis for his recovery will be determined after the surgery.

Colorado: LH closer Brian Fuentes went into Tuesday having retired 21 consecutive batters, one short of the franchise record. He also had 101 career saves, one behind franchise leader Jose Jimenez. ... The Rockies left 16 runners on base Monday in their 16-8 loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers, one shy of the club record.

Florida: RHP Justin Miller (elbow) pitched a scoreless inning for the second consecutive day Monday at high-A Jupiter (Fla.) and was on schedule to rejoin the Marlins today.

Houston: The acquisition of LHP Randy Wolf from San Diego reunites the veteran pitcher with Ed Wade, who was the general manager when they both were in Philadelphia. Wolf, who was 6-10 with a 4.74 ERA for the Padres, was acquired for RHP Chad Reineke. ... RH closer Jose Valverde suffered his sixth blown save of the season Monday. Brought in with a 3-2 lead in the ninth, he gave up six runs on five hits with one walk. "I think in my career this is the first time this has happened to me," he said. ... RH reliever Dave Borkowski was designated for assignment for the second time this season.

Los Angeles: LF Juan Pierre (sprained left knee ligament) is on the verge of beginning a minor league rehabilitation assignment with Class AAA Las Vegas and could be in position to rejoin the club early next week. ... 1B James Loney's five-RBI game Monday gave him 24 in 14 career games at Coors Field in Denver, including six on May 3. Loney set an NL rookie record with nine RBI on Sept. 28, 2006, at Coors Field.

Milwaukee: RHP Jeff Suppan (right elbow) came off the disabled list to start Tuesday's game, and LH reliever Mitch Stetter was optioned to Class AAA Nashville.

New York: LH closer Billy Wagner's MRI on his pitching shoulder showed a spasm but no structural damage. He was listed as day-to-day.

Philadelphia: RH reliever Chad Durbin had struck out 16 of the 35 batters he faced in his last nine innings going into Tuesday, unusual considering he isn't regarded as a strikeout pitcher. But a key to Durbin's success has been his increased strikeouts. Durbin, who has become the Phillies' primary right-handed setup man, had 47 strikeouts in 54⅔ innings. ... RF Geoff Jenkins left Sunday's game after his bat broke at the handle and hit him on the right shoulder. X-rays were negative, and Jenkins was diagnosed with a bruise.

Pittsburgh: RHP Ian Snell will try again for his first road win since April 6 when he starts tonight's game at Houston. Snell has lost eight of his last nine decisions.

St. Louis: LF Chris Duncan (bulging disk in neck) was placed on the disabled list, and OF Joe Mather was recalled from Class AAA Memphis.

San Diego: RHP Chad Reineke pitched eight scoreless innings for Class AAA Round Rock (Texas) on Monday before the Padres acquired him for LHP Randy Wolf. Reineke, 26, was 5-9 with a 4.41 ERA in Class AAA. ... RH reliever Mike Adams has become the most effective member of a struggling Padres bullpen. Adams had made six consecutive scoreless appearances through Monday and had allowed only one run on nine hits over his last 11 outings (12⅓ innings).

San Francisco: Manager Bruce Bochy met with 41-year-old SS Omar Vizquel and told the 11-time Gold Glove shortstop he will play less in the second half. Rookies Emmanuel Burriss and Ivan Ochoa will help man his spot. "He understood what his role would be," says Bochy. "He's had a great career." ... LHP Steve Hammond, 26, acquired from the Brewers in Sunday's Ray Durham trade, has struggled at Class AAA. In four starts for Nashville, he was 0-4 with a 7.41 ERA. He opened the season at Class AA Huntsville (Ala.) and was 7-4 with a 3.45 ERA.

Washington: SS Cristian Guzman agreed to terms on a $16 million, two-year contract extension that takes him through the 2010 season. "I was looking for a longer deal, but I understand that," Guzman said. "I had my problems a couple years ago." He was referring to missing the 2006 season with a shoulder injury. ... 3B Ryan Zimmerman (left labrum tear) was activated from the disabled list and batted third, and RHP Garrett Mock was recalled from Class AAA Columbus (Ohio).

Up in the air: On the edge of contention in the weak NL West, the Colorado Rockies might decide to trade players such as Matt Holliday.

Deals brew as deadline looms

Trade market crowded with many teams still in contention

By Bob Nightengale
USA TODAY

General manager Doug Melvin, after pulling off perhaps the biggest impact trade of his career, has made it chic to be a Milwaukee Brewers fan again.

Oakland Athletics GM Billy Beane, as long as the battery lasts on his cellphone, keeps his players restless, knowing they can be the next to leave town.

There are eight days until the July 31 non-waiver trade deadline and 20 teams still in playoff contention, trying to make the move to enhance their chances of playing in October.

"This is the time of year where you have to decide whether you're in or out," Melvin says. "We made our decision clear. We're going for it."

The Brewers, who acquired defending Cy Young winner CC Sabathia before the All-Star break and second baseman Ray Durham last weekend, are intently watching the competition, seeing who is moved next.

Yet, since the Rockies entered Tuesday within seven games of first place in the morose NL West despite being 15 games under .500, it might be premature to pull the plug.

This was the same team, after all, that reeled off victories in 21 of 22 games to reach the World Series last year.

"I'm not going to do anything to preclude us from having that same opportunity again," Rockies GM Dan O'Dowd says, "or turn down something if it's stupid not to do it."

Atlanta Braves GM Frank Wren is in a similar position. He has no idea whether they can sign first baseman Mark Teixeira as a pending free agent, but being only six games out in the NL East, he realizes they have no chance of contending without him.

"There's a lot of congestion out there, so many teams that still have a chance for the playoffs," Arizona Diamondbacks GM Josh Byrnes says. "It's going to take a little more creativity."

To prove their point, the Diamondbacks acquired right-handed reliever Jon Rauch (4-2, 2.98 ERA) from the Washington Nationals on Tuesday for second baseman Emilio Bonifacio.

"I have a lot of great ideas to improve the Chicago White Sox," White Sox GM Kenny Williams says, "but unfortunately, nobody else I'm talking to thinks they're great ideas."

The Los Angeles Dodgers are playing short-handed with shortstop Rafael Furcal and closer Takashi Saito out indefinitely with injuries, putting them in pursuit of Fuentes and Oakland Athletics closer Huston Street.

"There's a lot of teams in precarious spots right now, not sure whether they are buyers or sellers," Dodgers GM Ned Colletti says. "All anybody wants is a chance, and you're looking for that guy to help give you a chance.

"The trouble is that everyone wants your good young players in return. It's flattering when people ask about them, but it also tells you where everybody's mind-set is."

The Brewers, with a horde of top prospects, already decided the future can wait. They traded four prospects to the Cleveland Indians for Sabathia and two more to the San Francisco Giants for Durham.

"Giving up young players is tough, but we're trying to win this thing," Melvin says. "It's nice being on the other side. It's really picked up our city." The trade focus now, Braves special assistant Jim Fregosi says, is on left-handed relievers and right-handed power hitters. There will be plenty of trades, he predicts, but perhaps no blockbusters.

"There have already been some pretty significant moves, but I think we'll see some momentum the last few days," San Diego Padres GM Kevin Towers says. "Everyone wants to make that one move, no matter how big or small.

Creating the buzz

Ten players whose names are being mentioned most often in trade talks before the July 31 deadline, according to a survey of eight general managers, who requested anonymity for competitive reasons:

- OF Matt Holliday, Colorado Rockies: He has one year and $13 million left before free agency, and after 2009 the Rockies will have little chance to keep him.
- 1B Mark Teixeira, Atlanta Braves: He's a free agent after the season, but if they're in the race, how can they move him?
- LH reliever Brian Fuentes, Rockies: He's a free agent after the season, and Manny Corpas is the future closer.
- OF Jason Bay, Pittsburgh Pirates: The Pirates are asking a lot, but why not?
- RH reliever Huston Street, Oakland Athletics: When GM Billy Beane makes up his mind to trade someone, it's a done deal.
- Others: 3B Adrian Beltre, Seattle Mariners; OF Xavier Nady, Pirates; RH starter Livan Hernandez, Minnesota Twins; 3B Garrett Atkins, Rockies; 3B Casey Blake, Cleveland Indians

Injuries, then diminished returns

By Ron Shandler
Special for USA TODAY

With players spending more days on the disabled list in recent years than at any point in history, injury analysis has become one of the hottest areas of study.

Teams have become overly cautious with their high-priced commodities, so when players come off the DL, in most cases they are deemed healthy enough to play. But can "healthy enough" be interpreted to mean "as productive as before they got hurt"?

Safety in numbers

Batters who have gone through at least a few games of minor league rehab tend to hit the ground running, as long as the type of injury would not be expected to impact their performance. For instance, batters with wrist injuries may be healthy enough to play, but their power skills may take awhile to return.

Pitchers typically do not rebound as quickly. In a study conducted at BaseballHQ.com last year, pitchers who missed at least 20 games tended to perform poorly in their first start off the DL. These pitchers did have their workload monitored — 85% threw fewer than 100 pitches in that return outing — but their aggregate ERA in those outings was 6.12. The 15% who tossed more than 100 pitches posted an ERA only marginally better — 5.08.

With a group of high-profile players set to come off the DL in the next week, what should our expectations be?

- Although he is recovering from a wrist injury, there is reason to believe Boston Red Sox DH David Ortiz will be performing at full strength when he is scheduled to return on Friday. He has hit well during a rehab stint, and the injury is similar to the one suffered by Pat Burrell in 2004. In Burrell's first month back from that injury he hit six homers.
- On the other hand, expectations for Chicago Cubs left fielder Alfonso Soriano should be low. His hand injury will sap his power output for awhile, though the time off may have helped his oft-injured quads. He could provide more steals than homers the rest of the way.
- Washington Nationals third baseman Ryan Zimmerman looked good enough in his rehab assignments to be activated, but that might not be enough. He has opted to rehab a small labrum tear in his left shoulder in lieu of surgery, but it has also been less than nine months since he sustained a wrist injury. There is both the risk of reduced power output as well as a risk of him breaking down again.
- The St. Louis Cardinals are hoping the return of ace Chris Carpenter will be an equivalent response to the recent mound acquisitions of the Cubs and Milwaukee Brewers. However, starting pitchers coming off Tommy John elbow surgery rarely pitch effectively the first few months back. It has been only 12 months since Carpenter's surgery and we should not expect a full return to form until 2009.
- New York Mets right-hander Pedro Martinez is not coming off the DL; he hasn't been on the DL, but perhaps he should be. Despite indications he will be back on the mound this weekend, his groin and shoulder are not 100%. Martinez's history is one where he'll put up occasional dominant starts mixed in with frequent struggles. That seems like a prudent expectation for the rest of 2008.

The bad boy: Paul Tracy, 39, will race a Subway-sponsored Dallara for Walker Racing on Sunday.

Tracy takes 'big risk' in return to open-wheel

By Travis Braun
USA TODAY

Former Champ Car titlist and Canadian Paul Tracy says he's "pushing all the chips in" this weekend in Edmonton, when he returns to open-wheel racing for the first time since April with a team that has been dormant as long as he has.

"It's definitely taking a big risk, but that's what it's all about," Tracy says. "In the beginning of my career, my dad mortgaged his house for me to go race. ... This is kind of the same thing."

Motor sports

Known for his aggressive driving, open-wheel's bad boy was sidelined as IndyCar absorbed Champ Car this year. Lack of funding kept his Forsythe Racing team out of IndyCar, and a contract held back Tracy too long to find another competitive team.

Until now. Tracy will race a Subway-sponsored Dallara for Walker Racing at Edmonton City Centre Airport on Sunday. Walker, a former Champ Car team, partnered with IRL IndyCar Series founder Tony George's Vision Racing for the one-time entry.

But Tracy, who competed the last three years at Edmonton with IRL drivers Justin Wilson and Oriol Servia, says he wants a full-time IndyCar ride and sees this race as a big opportunity: "It's not for fun, by any means. It's been frustrating sitting out and having to watch. I want to go there and win."

Tracy, 39, is keeping his career options open, as he will race in the NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series at Las Vegas Motor Speedway in September for Germain Racing. But he says it would be difficult to leave open-wheel after 17 years: "If this opportunity can continue, then I'm all for it."

Stewart's options: Sprint Cup driver Tony Stewart, who joins Haas CNC Racing as a co-owner next season, said Tuesday that there are still "a lot of drivers in the running" to be his 2009 teammate.

Stewart, 10th in Cup points, this month announced his 50% stake in the team that will become Stewart-Haas Racing. Stewart leaves Joe Gibbs Racing and Toyota to drive one of Stewart-Haas' Chevrolets. The search for the team's second Chevy driver is still wide-open.

"It's not narrowed down to just one driver right now," Stewart said. "I want somebody who expects to win races and expects to be a contender in the championship every year.

"If they don't have those intentions, that's not a guy that I want driving my race cars."

Ryan Newman, who this month said he would leave Penske Racing at the end of the year, has been considered one of the strongest candidates. But on Tuesday, Newman said the only phone call he had from Stewart was to drive one of his dirt sprint cars.

Just as Stewart has given no timetable on choosing a driver, Newman — 16th in Cup points — has put no deadline in choosing a team, likening it to dating.

"Maybe just on a Friday night you go out," said Newman, without a guaranteed ride for the first time in his Cup career. "And that's how it's going to work for me."

The Indiana native has no agent or manager, relying on friends and family to help decide his future. The workload associated with shopping himself takes a toll, Newman said: "It takes away from your main goal of driving."

Stewart, fifth in the last race, at Chicagoland Speedway, said his workload hasn't gotten easier after signing with Stewart-Haas Racing. Instead of looking for a team, he's looking for a driver.

"Now that we're through that, I can't say it's a big weight lifted off my shoulders," Stewart said. "Because it's like you just switched weights."

Roster size: Is 80 enough?

Limit for camp might tax teams

By Sean Leahy
USA TODAY

The long, hot days of training camp will be more arduous this summer for NFL teams. Reduced roster sizes could stretch the talent pool, put veterans in the unfamiliar position of doing grunt work and cut short the amount of time teams spend in camp.

NFL Europe is defunct, so there are no longer roster exemptions for players who participated in the developmental league. The limit for rosters is set at 80 — teams typically carried half a dozen or more additional players in previous years — which deprives clubs of bodies coaches say were important to the flow of camp.

"It doesn't sound like a big number," said Carolina Panthers coach John Fox, who begins drills with six fewer players this year. "But it is when you are practicing at camp twice a day."

Because some injuries carry over from the previous season and fresh ones are suffered in camp, coaches and executives across the league are concerned with how to minimize their impact on the 80-man limit.

For example, the Washington Redskins defense saw its load get heavier this week when it lost ends Phillip Daniels and Alex Buzbee on Sunday. Good thing Jason Taylor has arrived.

Until Daniels and Buzbee, who suffered season-ending injuries, were placed on injured reserve Tuesday, the team could not replace them on the 80-man roster. But placing someone on IR means the player cannot return this season and is not an option for those who are merely banged up.

"You can't say we have three hurt guys so we need three extra guys to replace them until they are 100%," said St. Louis Rams coach Scott Linehan, whose starting left tackle, Orlando Pace, is on the physically unable to perform list but counts as one of his 80 players. "You have to carry them to camp or they are not a part of the team."

At positions where teams have adjusted to carrying fewer bodies, injuries could force some players to bear more of the burden. Teams short on linemen must tax their big bodies in sometimes sweltering heat. Carrying fewer skill players puts added stress on players doing extensive running and cutting.

"The guys that are left work themselves into the ground," said Charley Casserly, a former NFL general manager and an analyst for CBS Sports and NFL Network.

Starting quarterbacks will have to take more repetitions than normal. Having only four quarterbacks in camp after releasing Sam Hollenbach this month, the Redskins will rely on Jason Campbell to be more active.

There might be less competition at some spots, especially kicker and punter, to provide bodies at positions that experience more contact. "Let's say you have a position like wide receiver," Casserly said. "You bring 10 guys in, and two go down. To run practice, now I have to cut short at another position."

The New York Giants' Tom Coughlin is one of several coaches who reduced the length of training camp this year. He said he's carefully managing the practice schedule so his healthy players don't get overworked.

And for NFL hopefuls seeking recognition at the fringes, there are fewer opportunities to earn camp invitations to showcase their talents. Of the roughly 200 players who won't receive invitations to serve as camp fodder, at least a handful could have earned regular-season roster spots.

Not getting that developmental time will force teams to forgo players they would otherwise cultivate. "Somewhere in there, you're missing out on an unknown," Casserly said.

The general sentiment among coaches and GMs, according to Casserly, is to increase the roster size. But adding players probably won't happen until the league works out a new collective bargaining agreement with the players association, an undertaking that could be years away.

For now, coaches and players will have to adjust. Casserly said some veterans could find coy ways to avoid the extra drills.

"You might have some angry veterans," he said, "who have hamstring injuries for a few days so they can't practice."

More reps: With roster exemptions for now-defunct NFL Europe eliminated, quarterbacks such as the Redskins' Jason Campbell are likely to get more work than usual with fewer players in camp.

Bears' Urlacher signs one-year extension through 2012

From wire reports

The Chicago Bears signed linebacker Brian Urlacher to a one-year contract extension Tuesday that would keep the six-time Pro Bowler with the team through the 2012 season. Financial details were not disclosed

Notes

Urlacher has 37½ sacks, 15 interceptions, seven forced fumbles, eight fumble recoveries and 71 tackles for loss in 121 career games.

The 2005 NFL defensive player of the year ranks sixth on Chicago's career sacks list. Last season, he became the second linebacker in team history to record five interceptions and five sacks in the same season.

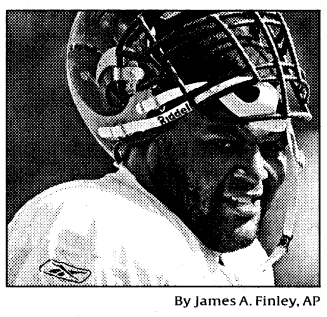
Dungy said Tuesday night he was optimistic the Colts' biggest question heading into training camp — Manning's recovering knee — could be resolved more quickly than expected.

Manning had surgery last week to remove an infected bursa sac.

"I have talked to Peyton, and we're just following the doctor's instructions right now," Dungy said. "I'm hoping for four weeks, but if he's truly out six weeks, I think it will be hard to keep him out. However it goes, he'll be ready when he comes back."

Pace on PUP list: Seven-time Pro Bowl offensive tackle Orlando Pace is close to returning from a shoulder injury, but he will begin training camp on the physically unable to perform list.

St. Louis Rams coach Scott Linehan said Tuesday the team would be conservative with Pace, who tore the labrum and rotator cuff in his right shoulder in the regular-season opener against the Carolina Panthers last season.



By James A. Finley, AP

Castillo extended: San Diego Chargers defensive end Luis Castillo has agreed to a five-year contract extension through 2014 worth more than $43 million. The deal, announced Tuesday, will pay Castillo a guaranteed $17.5 million in signing and roster bonuses. His contract was to expire after the 2009 season.

Patriot's plea deal: New England Patriots offensive lineman Nick Kaczur pleaded guilty Tuesday to speeding in a deal with Oneida County, N.Y., prosecutors that will put a misdemeanor drug possession charge on hold.

Kaczur, 28, was ordered to pay $355 in fines and fees by Whitestown Town Justice Stanley Wolanin, who said the drug charge will be dismissed if Kaczur stays out of trouble for six months.

Number change: New Washington Redskins defensive end Jason Taylor took the field Tuesday in a No. 55 jersey, a change from the No. 99 he had worn since entering the league.

"I thought about it last night," Taylor said after his first practice. "I talked to my wife and decided we'd let 99 stay in Miami and start a new chapter up here."

ACC aims to expand national reputation

League's prestige has taken BCS hit

By Kelly Whiteside
USA TODAY

GREENSBORO, Ga. — Clemson football coach Tommy Bowden, fresh off his team's coronation as the preseason favorite in the Atlantic Coast Conference, was asked what his legacy might be, given that he's heading into his 10th season without a championship on his résumé. "I'd like to talk about my legacy when I die or retire," Bowden told a group of reporters. When it was pointed out he wouldn't be able to discuss his legacy while 6 feet under, Bowden laughed and said, "Now I sound like my father (Florida State coach Bobby Bowden). When I retire, I should say. Don't bury me until I stop."

The same might be said about his league. For three days at the ACC's football kickoff event, coaches, players and officials answered numerous questions about the conference's legacy five years into its expansion.

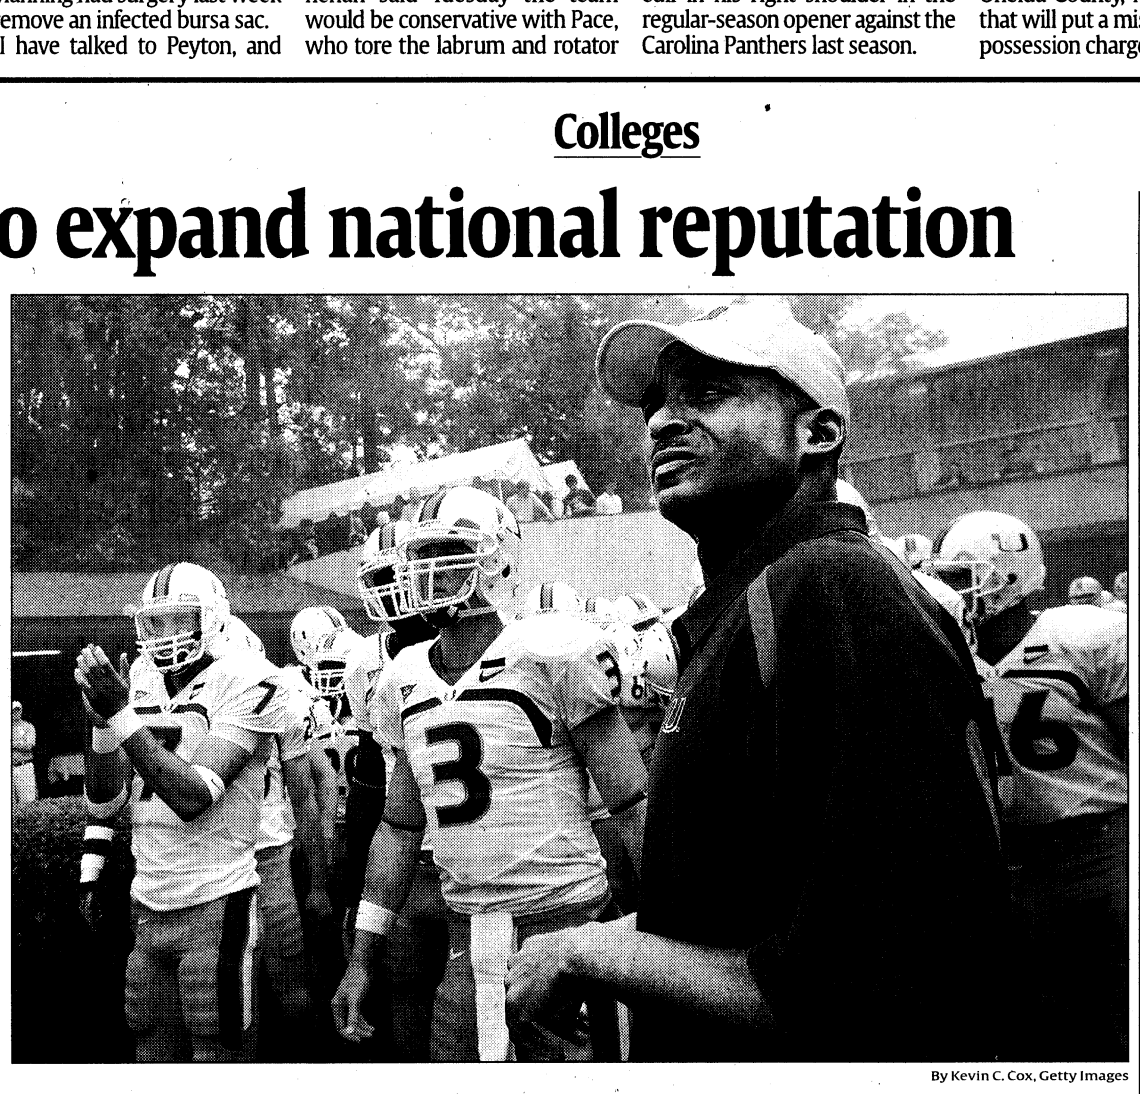
The ACC's underwhelming performance on the national stage is undeniable. The league is 1-9 in Bowl Championship Series games. The only win came before expansion in the 1999 season, when Florida State beat Virginia Tech in the national title game in New Orleans when the Hokies were still in the Big East. Also, an ACC team has never received an at-large bid to a BCS game.

Coming off a 2-6 record in bowls in 2007 with Miami and Florida State, the expected league heavyweights, still reeling from two disappointing seasons, questions abound.

Still, ACC Commissioner John Swofford said Tuesday that he "couldn't be more pleased" with expansion.

"When you're in a chair like mine, you look at expansion from a long-term basis," Swofford said. "That's what it's for, what gives you strength and stability over the long term. ... How we as a conference evaluate expansion is not based on the short-term competitive aspect."

It might be too early to bury the ACC, given it only added Miami and Virginia Tech in 2004 and Boston College the following year. Swofford said the league is deeper and stronger than ever. In the three years of the ACC championship game, five schools have competed for the league title and there have been three different champs.



By Kevin C. Cox, Getty Images

Running in cycles: Miami coach Randy Shannon says college football "is too competitive for one team or conference to be dominant. The SEC has had a nice run, and I'm sure another conference will take its place."

By J. Pat Carter, AP

Positive spin: ACC Commissioner John Swofford, center, says not to draw conclusions from the league's poor record in bowl games.

"This is a good conference; we just beat each other up a lot," Miami coach Randy Shannon said . "Someone has to finally go to a BCS game and win in it, then it's over. Until that happens, everyone will say the same thing."

On the plus side, expansion has been a financial success and attendance has grown. Also, the ACC became the first conference to have two of the top four NFL draft picks three consecutive years (No. 2 Chris Long of Virginia and No. 3 Matt Ryan of Boston College this year) and leads all leagues in overall players chosen with 115, including 25 first-round picks, during that period.

But a league's competitive worth is best measured by its wins on the biggest stage against elite opponents. The past four years, the ACC is 2-17 against non-conference teams ranked in the top 10 of the Associated Press poll.

Clemson's Bowden said the past dominance of Miami and Florida State or the reign of Southern California, followed by the power of Southeastern Conference teams such Florida and LSU, is just the nature of the game.

"Things go in cycles. It's just a matter of time," Bowden said. "College football is too competitive for one team or conference to be dominant. The SEC has had a nice run, and I'm sure another conference will take its place."

The ACC gets an early shot on that stage Aug. 30 when Clemson and Alabama meet at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta in a marquee non-conference game.

It's also the site where Clemson lost to another SEC team, Auburn, in overtime in last season's Chick-fil-A Bowl.

"It's time for Clemson to step up and solidify ourselves as a top team in the country," Tigers quarterback Cullen Harper said. "It's time for the ACC to step up and start winning these games."

Bowling for victories

Since expanding to 12 teams and splitting into divisions for the 2005 season, the Atlantic Coast Conference has struggled in bowl games, especially those in the Bowl Championship Series: How the ACC compares in bowl performance to the other BCS leagues with 12 teams and divisional play in that span:

	Atlantic Coast	Big 12	Southeastern
2005	5-3 in bowls (0-1 BCS)	5-3 (1-0)	3-3 (0-1)
2006	4-4 (0-1)	3-5 (0-1)	6-3 (2-0)
Totals	11-13 (0-3)	13-11 (2-2)	16-8 (4-1)

Regents reopen assault inquiry

Iowa's handling of rape allegations in question

From staff and wire reports

The Iowa Board of Regents has reopened its investigation into how the University of Iowa handled an investigation into the alleged assault of a woman by two football players.

The board met Tuesday to talk about letters sent by the mother of the woman who says she was raped Oct. 14 at a campus dorm. The letters, sent to school President Sally Mason, were not disclosed to the regents until last week.

In the letters, the mother accuses the school of mishandling its response to her daughter's allegations. She said officials encouraged her daughter, an Iowa athlete, to pursue a resolution "informally" and within the athletic department.

"This board owes Iowans a full accounting. And they will get it," board President David Miles said.

Notes

Abe Satterfield and Cedric Everson are no longer on the football team. Everson has been charged with second-degree sexual assault and Satterfield with second- and third-degree sexual assault. Both pleaded not guilty.

Rant pattern: To the masses, Mike Gundy is the ranting, raving coach on YouTube — "Come after me! I'm a man! I'm 40!" — blistering a sports columnist last fall for her portrayal of a demoted Oklahoma State quarterback.

A year later, the Cowboys coach finds humor in the episode. But no remorse.

"You have to make decisions. And then, at the end of each day, you have to lay your head down and go to sleep and feel good about the decisions you made," Gundy said Tuesday in Kansas City, Mo., at the Big 12 Conference's football preview. "And I don't have any problem going to sleep."

Given a do-over, he says he would have lowered his volume. Gundy, who turns 41 next month, directed the infamous tirade at The (Oklahoma City) Oklahoman's Jenni Carlson on Sept. 22 after a victory against Texas Tech.

He thought she was off base in characterizing Bobby Reid as too soft to remain the starting quarterback. Gundy said he did what any coach or father would do: come to the kid's defense.

Reid, among others, saw it as over the top, telling ESPN in April that the ordeal "basically ended my life." He has transferred to Texas Southern, where he has one season of college eligibility left.

"I think, at times, when you're young, you say things or act in a manner that maybe is not what's really inside you," Gundy said. "... We at Oklahoma State — I know myself personally — hope things go well for him. I think he's got great potential.

"I think if he continues to develop that he could play for a while."

Winning hasn't made Natalie Gulbis soft. It has made her angry.

A year removed from ending a six-year, 0-for-151 drought by earning her first LPGA win in the Evian Masters in France, a dearth of success that led people to start comparing her to former tennis star Anna Kournikova, Gulbis is back defending her title fervently, looking for her second victory on the spectacular course that overlooks Lake Geneva.

Although she played well the rest of 2007, nearly winning the $1 million jackpot in the season-ending ADT Championship and being a member of the victorious U.S. squad in the Solheim Cup and a winner in the Wendy's Challenge with Cristie Kerr and Morgan Pressel, her game has been wayward this season. The 25-year-old will be on a 0-for-22 streak as she returns to defend her title this week.

This year she's missed five of 16 cuts and has a season-best tie for 11th in the Ginn Tribute Hosted by Annika. Not exactly the success Gulbis and her coach, Butch Harmon, thought would emerge once she got her first win.

"I had dreamed of winning an LPGA event for a long time, and the win superseded anything I could have imagined," Gulbis said. "I couldn't hold my head up most of the time during the ceremony because I was crying so much. It was about me achieving my goal more than anything.

"But I am definitely very frustrated that I have not won an individual tournament since. I feel the same way that Butch did, that more wins would come after the first one. I am working just as hard to get win No. 2."

Victory No. 1 came in a one-hole playoff against South Korea's Jeong Jang, when Gulbis two-putted from 25 feet for birdie after Jang missed the green long and failed to get up-and-down. The tap-in for Gulbis shed the label that she was only a glamour girl known more for her calendars and reality show than for her talent on the golf course.

For Gulbis to make a successful defense, however, she'll have to top a strong field that includes Lorena Ochoa, Annika Sorenstam, Paula Creamer, Suzann Pettersen and every one of the rest of the top 10 in the world. The winners of the three majors in 2008 — Ochoa, LPGA Championship winner Yani Tseng and U.S. Women's Open winner Inbee Park — also are playing.

But Gulbis feels her best golf is coming as she heads into a stretch that will include the Women's British Open and the Canadian Open. Last year, she gave part of the credit for her win to a back injury two months prior that forced her to take a month off and change her swing.

She tested out drivers before heading to France and has changed her putting style — standing closer to the ball among the alterations — and feels she's putting better.

"Last year, I was in a similar position with my game heading to the Evian Masters because I was hurt," Gulbis said. "This year, I am healthy and I'm really looking forward to being in France.

"I want another win."

Mickelson uses his inner spaceman to push math, science

Beyond the tours

By Jerry Potter
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Phil Mickelson testified before Congress on Tuesday, and Secretary of Education Margaret Spellings noted his visit was unusual.

"Normally, you don't see athletes testifying before Congress unless they're in trouble," said Spellings, who hosted Phil and his wife, Amy, at the Department of Education.

Mickelson, the No. 2 golfer in the world, came to the capital to tell Congress that America is in trouble. Its schools, he says, aren't producing enough math and science graduates to keep up with the world. The National Science Foundation estimates that 80% of the jobs in the next decade will require some form of math and science skills.

"Everybody knows Phil as a golfer," Amy said. "But I think there's an astronaut trapped inside his body."

Mickelson loves to talk about space, but he stuck to golf to emphasize to a group of students, all members of First Tee, a group that teaches kids golf and life skills, how math and science is used in life.

"I use science every day in golf," he said. "I use it to better my game. It tells me what to practice and how to practice." He told the students, "Those little dimples of a golf ball are like wings on an airplane."

For the last four years, the Mickelsons have partnered with ExxonMobil to present the Mickelson ExxonMobile Teachers Academy, a professional enrichment program for math and science teachers who work with students in the third, fourth and fifth grades.

Each summer, teachers nominated through the website Sendmyteacher.com are selected — more than 600 in 2008 — to learn creative ways to make science and math interesting to students.

In Mickelson's group was Ramona Chang, a member of the academy's first class in 2005.

"I thought it would be another math and science conference," said Chang, director of curriculum for the Torrance Unified School District in California. "But it was a lot different. We learned, and then we talked about how to teach. Children love activities that give them these wonderful 'aha!' moments, like talking about roller coasters to explain science."

Mickelson presented some of his moments by teaching Spellings and the students about putting.

"The stroke you make is not nearly as important as the alignment of the face," he said.

'P-Rod' makes the jump to acting

Movie expected to propel street skater

By Sal Ruibal
USA TODAY

When ESPN first aired the Extreme Games in 1995, the typical action sports athlete was a somewhat goofy guy with a Day-Glo headband, spiky hair, a fuzzy soul patch growth beneath his lower lip and a personal net worth in the low three figures.

Fast forward 13 years to street skateboarder Paul Rodriguez, who recently pocketed $100,000 for winning the Maloof Money Cup. The slim, fashionably dressed 23-year-old Californian is the first skater and only the fifth athlete to have a signature Nike shoe. He even has a big-money nickname: "P-Rod."

He's also movie-star handsome, which is fitting because Rodriguez is about to become just that.

His first feature film, Vicious Circle, is in post-production and has the potential to launch his career well beyond the new SuperPark course he'll ride at next week's Summer X Games 14 in Los Angeles.

He wouldn't be the first action sports hero to make that leap: Jackass' Johnny Knoxville moved from MTV to the big screen, and Rodriguez's street rival Ryan Sheckler has been a reality TV star for two years.

"There must be something about street skaters," says Rodriguez, the son of popular actor and comedian Paul Rodriguez (P-Rod prefers to drop the "Jr."). "We don't wear all those pads and the helmets vert skaters have to wear, so we're more visible, more accessible."

In the heyday of Tony Hawk, vert skaters were the elite. But the smooth, natural flow of street skating has now become the soul of the sport.

"I never learned vert," he says. "I grew up in the San Fernando Valley. We didn't have ramps or pools. We used what was there: stairs, rails, curbs. That's what the majority of skaters do, so that's why street is so popular."

His character in Vicious Circle is an artist and street skater named RJ who becomes enmeshed in a dangerous feud that crosses ethnic and family barriers in a gritty Los Angeles neighborhood.

Writer and director Paul Boyd says he knew Rodriguez was the right guy for the role.

"I wanted P-Rod because of his energy and the skating element in the film," Boyd says. "When I found out he could really act, it was total magic. When (co-star) Emily Rios locked and clicked with P-Rod, the whole film went into warp speed."

Through his constant search for new places to skate, he has encountered real-life conflict.

"Good street spots are hard to find," he says. "So the local crews like to keep them to themselves. They take a lot of pride in their spot, and if too many outsiders come in, that can alert the cops, who then 'bust the spot.'

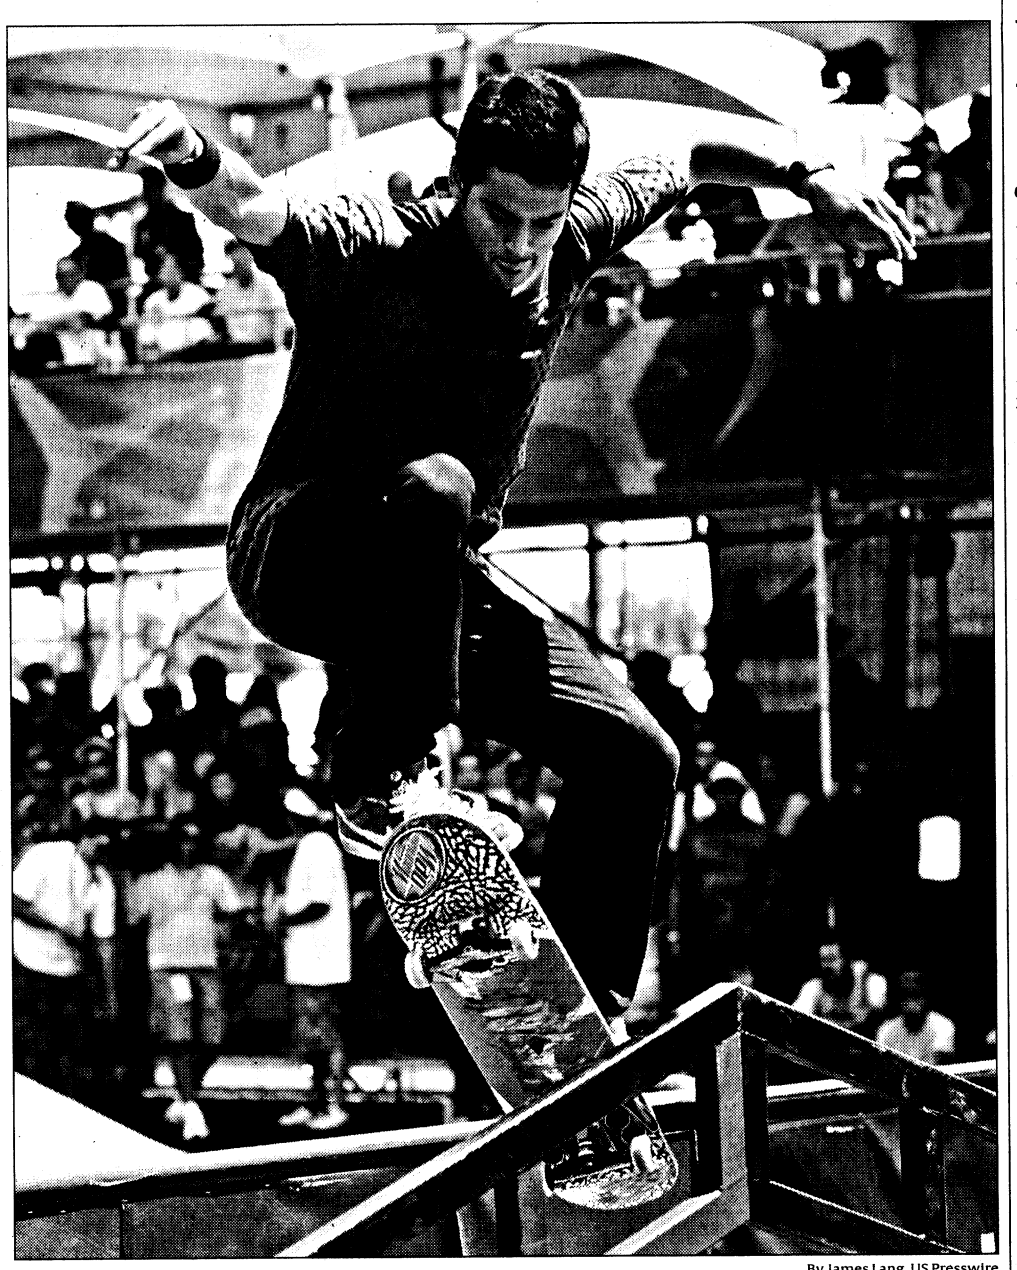
For the X Games SuperPark and street competitions, Rodriguez says he'll spend an hour or more exploring the course, searching for one-minute "runs" that link up to eight tricks in a smooth sequence.

His skating strategy is an apt metaphor for his career arc: "I want to set it up so that the finish of one move sets up the beginning of another. I have to calculate where I am at all times to make sure it all flows."



By James Lang, US Presswire

Using his tools: Paul Rodriguez, 23, who will star in Vicious Circle, says he took up street skating because there weren't ramps and pools available in his San Fernando Valley neighborhood.

More money: Athletes will compete at Summer X Games 14 for $1.65 million in prize money, a 6% jump from 2007. The total prize purse for all 2008 X Games events exceeds $3.3 million.

Doping

Detecting HGH just the beginning

Researchers hope to create better tests for cancer

By A.J. Perez
USA TODAY

The researchers behind Ceres Nanosciences' potential first-of-its-kind urine test for human growth hormone initially weren't out to combat doping in sports.

"We're more fans of cancer research," says Lance Liotta, a George Mason University life sciences professor and member of Ceres' scientific advisory board.

Creating a test for HGH is more of a way station for Virginia-based Ceres, which is partnered with George Mason and Italy's Istituto Superiore di Sanità. CEO Thomas Dunlap says if the test is adopted by sports leagues and anti-doping organizations, the revenue would go toward creating tests that can detect cancer in its earliest stages.

"That's the next stop for us," Dunlap says. "We want to be able to detect disease and viruses early so they can be more effectively treated."

The researchers developed a particle about one-tenth the size of a red blood cell that attracts, traps and protects HGH molecules, according to George Mason research professor Alessandra Luchini. The particles surround nearly 100% of the HGH molecules and act as an amplifier, so available testing equipment can detect the synthetic hormone.

Dunlap said the test can detect HGH two weeks after an athlete has last used it. Current blood screening for HGH, set to be used again at the Beijing Olympics, can identify HGH 24-48 hours after an athlete's last use.

Ceres has licensed three patents from George Mason in what it calls "Nanotrap" technology.

The next step is getting the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) and pro leagues to approve the test's use, a process that could take awhile, says Gary Green, a Los Angeles-based internist who serves as a consultant to Major League Baseball on performance-enhancing drugs.

"The company presented its early findings and provided preliminary results on the potential application for HGH detection," WADA spokesman Frederic Donze said in an e-mail.

"WADA encouraged the company to continue its work and emphasized that there is a robust process to be followed from research to the full implementation of a test for anti-doping purpose ... WADA must ensure that all detection methods it approves and implements can withstand any scientific and legal challenge."

Ceres soon will start conducting human trials, Dunlap says.

"If this proves to be a reliable test, this would be tremendously helpful," says Drug Free Sport President Frank Uryasz, whose company runs the NCAA's drug testing program.

Former senator George Mitchell, who led the investigation into baseball's steroid era, told Congress in January, "Many players have shifted to human growth hormone, which is not detectable in any currently available urine test."

MLB spokesman Rich Levin said in an e-mail that MLB could move to include a urine HGH test as soon as one is scientifically validated. Greg Bouris, spokesman for the Major League Baseball Players Association, said the union had no comment.

The NFL and its players union would have to collectively bargain the use of such a test.

"We are always open to reviewing any test but have yet to see a test that is available on a commercial basis," NFL spokesman Brian McCarthy said. NFL Players Association officials could not be reached for comment.

Don Catlin, founder of the UCLA Olympic Analytical Lab, has been trying to develop a urine test for HGH, most recently at his independent Anti-Doping Research lab in Los Angeles. He has received funding from MLB and the NFL for the effort.

A quick read on the news of the day

Advocates: Disabled athletes need a law

WASHINGTON — The U.S. needs a law that amounts to Title IX for the disabled, advocates said Tuesday in separate Capitol Hill briefings on the House and Senate sides.

"Title IX is a landmark law that launched so many opportunities for women," said Aimee Mullins, president of the Women's Sports Foundation. "I think a similar law for the disabled could have the same impact."

Title IX bans sex discrimination at schools receiving federal funds. This month Maryland enacted the Fitness and Athletics Equity for Students with Disabilities Act, which requires schools to ensure that students with disabilities have equal access to physical education classes and athletics programs. "We need a law like Maryland's on the national level," said Mullins, a double-amputee who set records in the 100-meter dash and long jump at the 1996 Paralympics. "Opportunity is the start of the possible. If opportunity is not there, how many will go down that path of pushing themselves in self-discovery?"

Terri Lakowski, public policy director of the Women's Sports Foundation, said what's needed next is a study by the Government Accountability Office to determine the state of scholastic participation opportunities for the disabled. "We are only at the starting point" in the fight for a federal law, she said. "But we gained some traction today."

IUPUI coach to take shoes to Peru

IUPUI basketball coach Ron Hunter's plan to help deliver shoes to the poor in Nigeria this month changed when the U.S. State Department said it wouldn't be safe to go, a spokesman for a group involved in the effort said Tuesday. Instead, Hunter said his group will travel to Lima, Peru, on Thursday to deliver about 15,000 pairs of shoes. Samaritan's Feet, a charitable organization based in Charlotte, N.C., convinced Hunter to go barefoot for a Jan. 4 game against Oakland to help their cause and says Hunter has raised more than 150,000 pairs of shoes. Some have gone to Liberia and the Darfur region of Sudan. Others have been delivered to children in Washington, D.C., and Virginia. Samaritan's Feet also plans to send shoes to Uganda and Mozambique in Africa, and Guyana in South America.

German tennis chief blasts new ATP structure

The head of the German Tennis Federation said the ATP Tour's planned tournament restructuring would have a devastating effect on the annual men's clay-court event in Hamburg. Georg von Waldenfels testified Tuesday in Wilmington, Del., that the ATP's plan to move the Hamburg event from May to July and downgrade it to second-tier status would make it difficult to attract top players to Germany. He said the planned July date would come at a time when top players are gearing up for the North American hardcourt season that leads to the U.S. Open.

Dessel wins Tour stage; Schleck still leads

Cyril Dessel won the second of three Alps stages in the Tour de France on Tuesday as Frank Schleck kept the race lead. Dessel, a 33-year-old Frenchman, sprinted clear at the end of the 97-mile leg from Cuneo in Italy to Jausiers in France. American Christian Vandevelde was sixth overall after finishing 26th on Tuesday. The race ends Sunday.

Bird, Cash lead Storm past Lynx

Sue Bird scored 22 points and Swin Cash added 17 points and 11 rebounds as the visiting Seattle Storm held off the Minnesota Lynx 76-73 on Tuesday in the WNBA. At Atlanta, Scholanda Robinson scored a career-high 17 points to lift the Sacramento Monarchs to their fifth consecutive victory, a 79-66 win against the Atlanta Dream.

Briefly ...

U.S. Olympic basketball forward LeBron James left practice with what the team described as a mild right ankle sprain Tuesday. "I don't think it's anything serious," U.S. coach Mike Krzyzewski said. ... The NBA's San Antonio Spurs re-signed free agent forward Kurt Thomas to an undisclosed deal Tuesday. Free agent Sebastian Telfair agreed to a multiyear deal to return to the Minnesota Timberwolves. Also, the New Jersey Nets traded guard Marcus Williams to the Golden State Warriors for a future first-round draft pick. ... A son of Philadelphia Eagles coach Andy Reid was sentenced to two years in a drug rehabilitation program Tuesday. Garrett Reid had pleaded guilty in May to trying to smuggle dozens of pills into the Montgomery County (Pa.) Jail. Reid was serving time for a drug-fueled car crash that injured a motorist. ... U.S. soccer star Freddy Adu will move from Portugal's Benfica to play with Monaco next season in the French league. ... High schools

2008 All-USA Track and Field team

The 2008 USA TODAY All-USA high school track and field teams were coordinated by Fred Baer. Selections were made by Jack Shepard, high school editor of Track and Field News. Criteria included ranking on USA TODAY and Track and Field News national lists, the number of top performances and head-to-head competition in the regular season and major postseason meets. Athletes are listed alphabetically in each general event area. Running events are in meters unless otherwise noted.

W = wind-aided
I = performed indoors
* = Returning All-USA performer

A play for the team: Gilbert Arenas' deal is the biggest in club history, but he could've gotten more.

Arenas' $111M deal leaves Wizards cap room

By Andrew Alberg
USA TODAY

Notes

WASHINGTON — Washington Wizards owner Abe Pollin thought re-signing free agent Gilbert Arenas was almost a foregone conclusion. But the club's celebration Tuesday as the All-Star guard spoke for the first time about his six-year, $111 million deal seemed to suggest otherwise.

"This is where I belong," Arenas said. "This is where I need to be. This is where I need to finish my legacy."

Despite the conviction in Arenas' words, and amid the hoopla of gold balloons scattered about in the shape of his No. 0, the notion lingered that this offseason could have turned out differently for the Wizards.

The club not only managed to retain its best player but magically did so at $16 million less than originally was offered. Arenas desired to leave the club with enough salary-cap flexibility to improve the roster, a move Wizards President Ernie Grunfeld said was "unheard of."

Pollin said he told Arenas, 26, before negotiations, "You will never, ever wear a jersey other than the Wizards." But Grunfeld conceded the unexpected salary-cap space available to the Golden State Warriors and Los Angeles Clippers after Baron Davis and Elton Brand opted out of their respective contracts made him somewhat uneasy.

"All the sudden, you had to compete against two other teams," said Grunfeld, conceding a contingency plan was in the works if Arenas signed elsewhere after five seasons with the Wizards.

Although he had promised to return if the Wizards re-signed forward Antawn Jamison, which they did, the self-represented Arenas did raise signing with his hometown Clippers or returning to his original club (the Warriors), Grunfeld said.

Wizards coach Eddie Jordan said Pollin's commitment to signing Arenas — who averaged 28.4 points in 2006-07 before a knee injury limited him to 13 games last season — was the key.

"It probably ended up not being as hard as it could have been because Gilbert was on the same page with Ernie and Abe all along," Jordan said. "But it was a little bit of a scare when Golden State came knocking, because he has ties to the Bay Area."

And what about that plan B?

"We had to go through plan B last year," Jordan said of the guard's lengthy injury absence. "We just don't want to go through plan B again. Plan A takes us to a championship."

The sentiment was echoed by the outspoken Arenas, who said the Wizards would be a "top five team" if they can stay healthy.

"We're going to put a banner up there. We're going to do it for Mr. Pollin," he said. "That's what kind of talent, that's what kind of team, that's what kind of belief we have."

Although Arenas signed for less than the maximum, his contract is the biggest in club history, which is not lost on the enigmatic star known as much for his offbeat antics as his scoring ability.

"I just need to cut out some of the foolishness I do," said Arenas, who said his knee feels good and he will resume playing Aug. 1.

New film re-teams agents with self-contained plot — and no aliens

CULVER CITY, Calif. — David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson look a little skeptical.

As Agents Mulder and Scully on The X-Files, the actors spent years exploring fictional conspiracies and mysteries. But now they have walked into one of the strangest places on Earth.

Cover story

It's the Museum of Jurassic Technology, a shadowy building in an otherwise banal business district, where the peculiar, unlikely and doubtful are showcased with sincerity and reverence.

Their latest X-Files film, I Want to Believe, opens Friday, and the museum's weirdness sets the appropriate tone. While The X-Files, in its nine seasons on TV and as a 1998 feature, mostly dealt with aliens, monsters and conspiracies, the Museum of Jurassic Technology highlights superstition, pseudoscience and, in some cases, madness.

New heroes rule the screen

Comic-Con displays depth as Marvel sits out

By Scott Bowles
USA TODAY

No one would have been surprised if anticipation for this year's Comic-Con were watered down a bit.

After all, the granddaddy of comic-book movie studios, Marvel, has no footage or sneak previews of upcoming films planned for the USA's largest convention of superhero devotees, which begins today in San Diego.

But when you rack up more than $850 million in a summer with superheroes, and three of them aren't from the Marvel universe, you don't need an Iron Man or Hulk to bring people to the party.

More films, TV series trying to make a mark, 3D

"I think there's a hunger in our pop culture for superheroes that aren't traditional," says 300 director Zack Snyder, who brings Watchmen to the convention. "It doesn't have to be comic books. Just heroes that they can relate to."

Indeed, the slate for the convention, which is expected to draw 125,000, runs the gamut from comic books to sci-fi to vampire love:

▶ Watchmen. No movie comes to Comic-Con with greater expectations than this $100 million, R-rated tale of superheroes who suffer real-life problems, from impotence to complacency. It's out March 6.

▶ The Wolf Man. Benicio Del Toro stars in this remake of the classic story of a man on the hunt for a killer cursed by a werewolf. Anthony Hopkins and Emily Blunt also star. Out April 3.

▶ Star Trek. It wouldn't be a Comic-Con without Trekkies, and they'll be out in force seeking clues to the final frontiers of this J.J. Abrams film, which examines the early days of James T. Kirk and the crew of the USS Enterprise. Arrives May 8.

▶ Terminator Salvation. Christian Bale hopes to do for the Terminator franchise what he has done for the Batman saga. This chapter will chronicle future soldier John Connor. It hits screens May 22.

"This is the first place you want to make a good impression," says Twilight director Catherine Hardwicke. "If you can make an impression with these fans, your movie is off to a good start."

What a great time to fly — down the highway

Since the price of gas has gone over $4 a gallon, we thought it a good time to take a summer road trip. You know, keep the economy going and all. Be good Americans. Chip in. Pay through the nose.

The final word

By Craig Wilson

We haven't taken a road trip in quite a while, but considering what a pain it is to fly these days, $4 a gallon seems a small price to pay to stay on the ground, still move forward and not be yelled at by some flight attendant about to lose her job.

There are other bonuses, too. We can fill up the trunk and not be charged for the second bag, we have all the legroom we want, and we can pretty much be assured our trip will not be canceled.

If our bags are lost, we have no one to blame but ourselves. And if they've shifted en route, who cares?

We don't even have to make sure our tray tables are up and in the locked position.

Good deal all around.

As much as I like him now, I wouldn't go back 50 years and take a road trip with my brother if you paid me.

I would, however, retake that road trip to Florida on spring break in college. The stories I could tell. I even remember them, which in itself is a feat these days.

But back to this summer's road trip.

By Veronica Salazar, USA TODAY

We decided to drive because we're visiting a number of friends along the way. Flying didn't really work. And the price of a plane ticket is hardly a lure these days.

I began my summer travels flying to Rochester, N.Y., to visit my mother over Memorial Day weekend.

It cost almost $600. The flight is only 45 minutes from Washington, D.C. That translates to about $13 a mile. Drink not included.

Now, I grew up outside Rochester, and I have very fond memories of the city. But for $600, shouldn't we end up someplace more exotic? I mean, the lilacs in Highland Park are lovely, but . . .

Ireland would be nice for $600. I'd settle for California.

A friend of mine paid the same price earlier this summer to fly to Cincinnati. He said he was upset that he ended up in Ohio.

Preminded him that Cincinnati was in Ohio, but his point was that for $600, he, too, wanted something more exotic. South Dakota maybe. Kansas?

What he's trying to do now is use his frequent-flier miles to get a free plane ticket. As we all know, that's as hopeful as thinking you're going to get something to eat on a transcontinental flight. And now some airlines say they're going to charge $100 to redeem them.

So, here we sit, we summer travelers. Do we go or do we stay? We've decided to go. By car.

Estelle Getty, 84, leaves behind a 'Golden' legacy

Actress played spitfire Sophia

By Craig Wilson
USA TODAY

Estelle Getty, best known as Bea Arthur's sarcastic, purse-swinging mother on The Golden Girls, said she was only "a teensy-weensy bit" like Sophia, the role she played on TV.

"I think people have me mixed up with my character," she told Gannett News Service in 1993. "I would like to be as sure and magnanimous and feisty and strong and indomitable as she is."

Appreciation

The New York-born actress was revered for her wisecracking, perennially caustic stint as Sophia Petrillo on the beloved 1985-92 series about four female retirees enjoying their golden years in Miami. She also played the role on Golden Palace and Empty Nest.

Getty, who had advanced dementia, died at about 5:30 a.m., said her son Carl Gettleman of Santa Monica.

"She was loved throughout the world in six continents, and if they loved sitcoms in Antarctica, she would have been loved on seven continents," Gettleman said. "She was one of the most talented comedic actresses who ever lived."

In a statement Tuesday afternoon, Arthur, 86, said, "Our mother-daughter relationship was one of the greatest comic duos ever, and I will miss her."

Getty, the queen of one-liners, was nominated for seven Emmys and won for best supporting actress in a comedy in 1988. She also won a Golden Globe in 1986. And she was the recipient of the Golden Razzie award for her equally caustic turn opposite Sylvester Stallone in 1992's Stop! Or My Mom Will Shoot.

1985 file photo

"Estelle always wanted to be an actress, and she achieved that goal beyond her dreams," Golden Girls co-star Rue McClanahan, 74, told the Associated Press. "Don't feel sad about her passing. She will always be with us in her crowning achievement, Sophia."

Betty White, 86, another Golden Girls co-star, said in an e-mail to the Associated Press: "The only comfort at this moment is that although Estelle has moved on, Sophia will always be with us."

Audiences loved Getty's verbal zingers. When McClanahan's "loose" character Blanche once complained that her life was an open book, Sophia shot back, "Your life's an open blouse!"

The prickly actress was as sharp-tongued as her character Sophia in interviews.

"I don't reveal my height or my age," she snapped to a reporter from London's Mail on Sunday in 1992.

Getty was married to the late businessman Arthur Gettleman. Besides Carl, she is survived by son Barry.

She made a career of playing mothers, including Cher's in Mask, but Getty didn't relish her own time raising her children.

"No, I wouldn't claim I enjoyed it," she told People in 1986. "It was the days of Dr. Spock, and everything was so regimented. You stayed home and never left. Fear kept me from enjoying my children. It was such a chore being a mother in those days."

Before Golden Girls made her the most famous grandma on television, Getty was a steadily employed, if largely unknown, theater actress who had two memorable turns in 1982's Tootsie and 1985's Mask.

But at an age when most actors write their memoirs and fade into obscurity, Getty became a star.

"I paid my dues," she told the Chicago Tribune in 1989.

Born Estelle Scher, a daughter of Polish immigrants, Getty grew up Manhattan's Lower East Side. She dreamed of being an actress and tried her hand at stand-up comedy in her late teens.

Had it not been for a chance meeting with actor Harvey Fierstein, Getty might have worked behind a desk and raised children. Instead, he cast her in Torch Song Trilogy on Broadway.

When she auditioned for Golden Girls, producers thought she was too young to play Dorothy's mother. (Arthur was born the year before Getty.) Getty proved them wrong. And she tried to enjoy every second of her late-found fame and fortune.

"People who make it to the top when they're young have to worry about staying there," she told People. "The nice thing about making it at this stage is that I don't have to worry about staying up here that long."

Stars hint at familiar faces, romantic attraction imagination, where an escape from the realities of the actual world can be found.

Duchovny stands before a glass case where a quintet of small dishes of silvery powder sits on a revolving tray. A plaque identifies them as 1.) Possession, 2.) Delusion, 3.) Paranoia, 4.) Schizophrenia and 5.) Reason.

"This is the actual manifestation of those things," Duchovny says with amused matter-of-factness.

A little doubt and paranoia might be in order for those behind the film right now as its debut follows The Dark Knight's record-breaking opening and stunning momentum.

Even before the Batman movie proved its power, one of the biggest mysteries surrounding the X-Files movie was whether Mulder and Scully still had what it takes to draw in an audience six years after the show went off the air.

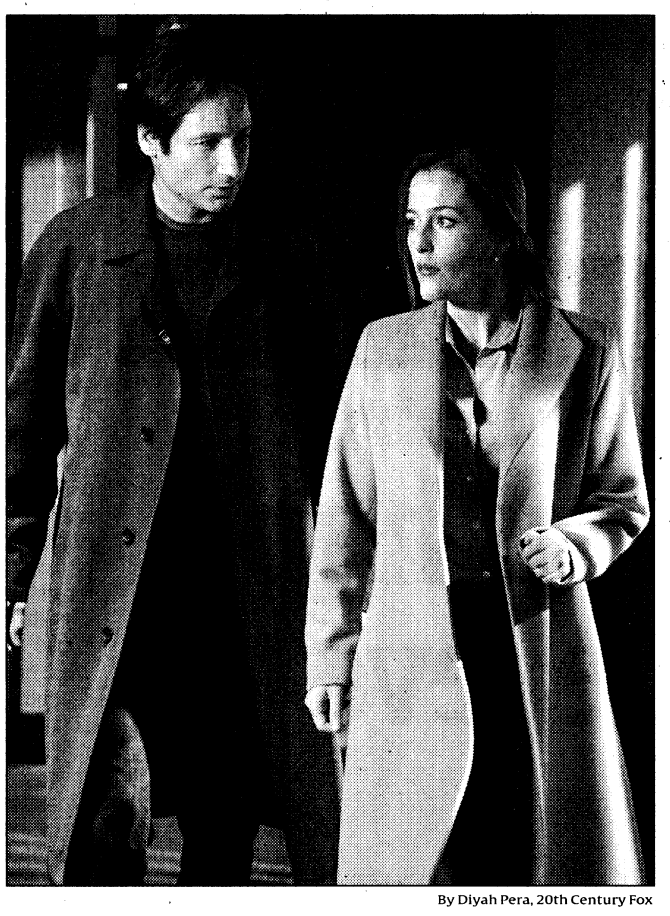
When the first X-Files movie made its debut in theaters in June 1998, the TV series was at its peak, and the film went on to gross $189 million at the worldwide box office.

But by the time the series wrapped in 2002, the labyrinthine alien-invasion plot at the source of the show's popularity had become a confusing muddle, and Duchovny had dropped out to appear in only a handful of episodes in the final seasons.

I Want to Believe — a title taken from the phrase on a UFO poster in Mulder's office — actually has nothing to do with extra-terrestrial visitors. It's a self-contained story in which Mulder and Scully re-team with the FBI to help track down a series of kidnapped women. It includes bizarre medical experimentation, a psychic disgraced priest (played by Scottish actor Billy Connolly) and in a hat tip to die-hard fans, an exploration of the romantic attraction between Mulder and Scully.

Keeping it straight

The series creator and film director, Chris Carter, has expressed interest in future X-Files films that revisit the old mythology. But even his stars acknowledge a need to reboot with this movie — re-energizing old fans and hopefully creating new ones.



By Diyah Pera, 20th Century Fox

No mythology: Mulder (David Duchovny) and Scully (Gillian Anderson) look into kidnappings that aren't alien-related in Believe.

"What behooves us all is to treat this ourselves as a stand-alone situation and not have any gross expectations," Anderson says. "If we're lucky, and it does really, really well, then that could potentially lead to future conversations" about more films.

As Duchovny puts it: "When we went off to publicize the first film, our agenda was to try to let people know that they didn't have to know all about The X-Files to see it. And that was (baloney), really," he says, making Anderson burst out laughing. "But in this case, it's actually not."

The actors are sitting in a small theater on the second floor of the museum, beside a gallery filled with paintings of dogs from the Soviet space program of the 1950s. (Russian scientists and dogs play a supporting role in the new movie, coincidentally.)

As the baffling exhibits around them prove, people like to have their heads spun.

On television, The X-Files was the forefather to the elaborate plot puzzles of such shows as Lost and Heroes.

But what starts out thrilling can easily turn frustrating, as Duchovny and Anderson eventually learned.

Even they couldn't keep it all straight — and still can't. While discussing which parts of the new movie shouldn't be spoiled, they note the surprise appearances of certain familiar faces.

As Duchovny asks whether even that much should be revealed, Anderson replies that fans couldn't tell who. "It could be anyone," she says, "Who knows that it's not (villain) Krycek or something?"

"Because he's dead," Duchovny points out.

"Oh, is he?" she responds, and they both laugh. "I never knew even when we were shooting it, so I'm no different now."

Stepping out of character

In the years since The X-Files ended, Anderson, 39, and Duchovny, 47, have gone on to other well-received projects. She has appeared in the film The Last King of Scotland, the BBC miniseries of Charles Dickens' Bleak House and is host of PBS' Masterpiece Classic, while he is now famous for the lothario screenwriter Hank Moody in Showtime's comedy Californication.

Both say success in other roles has soothed the chafing they felt after 202 episodes playing Mulder and Scully. "I was quite vocal about the fact that I needed a break," Anderson says.

"I think anybody would feel that way," Duchovny agrees.

Neither professes to be personally interested in the supernatural, but as they tour the museum, their personalities emerge. Duchovny is the joker, while Anderson seems charmed by the strangeness.

Anderson marvels at a wall of horns and antlers — elk, deer — with one single cone of hardened hair in the middle.

"The human horn," she says, reading from a plaque describing the object from a woman in 1688. Anderson grins: "I wonder if that's a mating thing?"

"Remember The Enigma?" Duchovny says slyly, referring to a sideshow performer who co-starred with them in a 1995 episode. "He actually had horns implanted after we worked with him. Two horns, like devil horns. I think he said they were coral implants, so they would continue to grow," Duchovny says.

"Is he doused with saltwater every day?" Anderson jokes.

As they study an exhibit of folk remedies, they seem to gravitate to the ones relating to pregnancy and children. Anderson is five months pregnant with her third child; Duchovny has two kids with wife Téa Leoni.

One display is about the belief that inhaling the breath of a duck can cure throat ailments in children, and Duchovny sarcastically says, "I've done that."

Inside another glass case, two long-dead mice are atop a slice of toast. "What's it supposed to cure?" Duchovny asks.

Bedwetting.

Anderson leans in for a peek. "No way, really?" Duchovny just looks at her.

She reads from another display: " 'A woman after childbirth is the most dangerous thing on Earth. All sorts of uncanny things surround the mother and infant, and if she goes to a river to wash, the fish will go away.' Hmm . . . " she says, cradling her belly.

"Keep that in mind," Duchovny says.

"I will," she answers, mock impressed.

While it's easy to dismiss these bizarre notions, Duchovny says the old-fashioned desire to make sense of a random world is what fueled the love of The X-Files.

"Human nature doesn't change. We are who we were 300 years ago. We're interested in the same myths," Duchovny says. "We're dealing with the ancient fears, like in the museum here. Whether gods exist, whether monsters exist. It's pretty fundamental. . . . They want to believe."

"There's an emptiness that will always be there, and people will constantly try to fill it," Anderson adds.

For a moment inside the folk remedies room, Duchovny abandons his wisecracks.

"The whole exhibit kind of fills me with sadness," he says. "It just reminds me of how fearful and powerless human beings are. I mean these are fake, but they're not. People believe we can actually ward off evil, or keep our children healthy or whatever."

Anderson adds: "And the most we can muster is breathing in the breath of a duck."

The Mulder-Scully fans are out there

By Maria Puente
USA TODAY

X-Files fans are not all alike, except for one thing: They cannot wait — pant, pant — for The X-Files: I Want to Believe to open Friday. And never mind The Dark Knight, which is still sucking up considerable box-office oxygen.

"We don't need to beat Batman, we just need to get and please an audience," says writer/producer Frank Spotnitz. "We want the fans to be happy and feel rewarded. It really feels like this movie was made because of the hard-core fans and to some extent for them."

A unique aspect of The X-Files phenomenon is the mutual admiration between fans and filmmakers.

Few filmmakers have reciprocated loyalty to fans as have Spotnitz and creator/writer/producer/director Chris Carter. "There's this misleading stereotype that huge TV fans are geeks, and it's just not true," Spotnitz says. "They are nice, smart people you'd be happy to meet anywhere."

During the series' run, the two were famous for paying attention to fan opinion.

"We'd go online to see how an episode was playing, and we wouldn't necessarily respond, but it was helpful to see what they were thinking, and they were always smart and appreciative," Spotnitz says.

They even named a character after an X-Phile who died and embedded names of fans in the opening credits.

Spotnitz just started an X-Files social-networking site, network.biglight.com, that has hundreds of members.

"They are so open and fan-friendly, they really reach out to that community," says L.A. fan Caileigh Scott, 24.

They are doing something filmmakers rarely do: They're hosting, with Twentieth Century Fox, a Fan Celebration at the Hollywood premiere today. X-Philes will get special seating in front of the theater to watch the red-carpet arrivals and will participate in a conference with the filmmakers and the stars, who will field fan questions before they face reporters.

"Their voices continue to be heard," Carter says, "but it's not just for the hard-core fan; it was important that we make this movie for a broad-based audience." He believes a new generation of X-Philes is just waiting to be tapped, including people who were only children when the TV show was on.

I Want to Believe is described as having a monster-of-the-week-style plot, making it accessible to people who aren't clued in to the shadowy government/alien conspiracy of the show.

There are signs interest is picking up, even in the shadow of Batman. The movie-ticketing site Fandango.com reports Believe is the most frequently searched movie on the site. Theaters are arranging more midnight showings. Fans are organizing viewing parties, and many say they plan to see the movie multiple times.

But there's some unrest among the two major types of X-Philes: The 'Shippers, who care most about the romantic relationship between Mulder and Scully, and the NoRomos, who care more about the murky mythology of the show.

Holly Simon, 25, a Canadian freelance Web designer, says arguments between 'Shippers and NoRomos run rampant on her fan site, Xfilesnews.com. "I tell people to take a chill pill — they're panicking over nothing," she says. "But some people are expecting the whole 'picket-fence' idea, and unless Mulder and Scully are sitting on a front porch with their little son at the end, they won't be happy."

Ana Virginia Quijada, 26, of Caracas, Venezuela, who runs two X-Files fan sites, is among those who plan to see the film over and over. "Not because it's a complicated movie, but because we're going to be so excited about just the fact we're seeing them on the screen that we will miss important details," she says.

What explains the intense fan loyalty?

Dean Kowalski, an associate professor of philosophy at the University of Wisconsin-Waukesha and author of The Philosophy of the X-Files, says it's because the show was about big ideas. "It's one of the most philosophical TV shows ever, because at its very core is the question: What ought I to believe?"

Adds Quijada: "Mulder's search is the one we're all making, trying to find that 'truth' that will make us whole."

Has Comic-Con become a beast?

Some say it's too big, too far from its roots

By Scott Bowles
USA TODAY

Years ago, Comic-Con quit being about comics and became more about creating pop-culture hits.

But has it become too much? The San Diego convention that once drew 400 people now lures 125,000 people a year, and some convention veterans wonder whether it has gotten to be too much.

"If you're an everyday fan, it's pretty hard to buy a toy or look at a comic book," says David Goyer, comic author, screenwriter for The Dark Knight and director of The Unborn, a horror movie he's bringing to the convention.

"The main rooms are so jampacked, it's hard to fight your way through them," he says. "It can be stifling and smelly. It's not as much fun as it was before the studios and networks decided they needed to be there every day."

Others, though, are glad to see that attendance has grown so large that it has made the convention as big as prestigious film festivals.

"For certain kinds of movies, it's as important as Sundance or Cannes," says Gale Anne Hurd, producer of The Incredible Hulk and Punisher: War Zone, which will have footage at the convention. "That can make it nerve-racking, but nothing feels better than having a good presentation before these fans — which is why I think so many people show up, regardless of genre."

To be sure, Comic-Con has over the years morphed into Demographic-Con, as studios and networks try to hit the vital 18- to 34-year-old audience on the big and small screen. This year's fare includes:

▸ Pineapple Express. Comic-Con favorite Seth Rogen returns to show footage from his comedy about two pot smokers who are on the run from a rogue cop. Opens Aug. 6.

▸ Tropic Thunder. The most politically incorrect comedy of the year, starring Robert Downey Jr. and Ben Stiller as actors who find themselves in a real war zone, arrives Aug. 13.

Lionsgate

The Spirit: Scarlett Johansson teams up with Samuel L. Jackson for the supernatural thriller, which opens Christmas Day.

By Merie Weismiller Wallace, DreamWorks

Tropic Thunder: Robert Downey Jr., left, Jay Baruchel, Jack Black, Nick Nolte, Ben Stiller and Brandon T. Jackson star in the comedy, out Aug. 6.

▸ City of Ember. Based on the Jeanne Duprau fantasy novel, Bill Murray stars in this tale of a magical city whose residents face extinction if the lamps that illuminate Ember flicker out. Due Oct. 10.

▸ Max Payne. An adaptation of the video game, starring Mark Wahlberg as the cold-blooded sharpshooter, comes to screens Oct. 17.

▸ The Day the Earth Stood Still. This remake of the 1951 classic stars Keanu Reeves as an alien warning of a pending invasion. Due Dec. 12.

▸ The Spirit. Samuel L. Jackson and Scarlett Johansson star in a supernatural tale of a cop who returns from the grave to fight evil. Dec. 25.

▸ Land of the Lost. Will Ferrell stars in the adaption of the campy Saturday-morning TV show about a family that stumbles into a strange land filled with dinosaurs and the dangerous race of Sleestak creatures. Out July 17, 2009.

Comics convention is a good tool for TV, too

Broadcast and cable networks also see Comic-Con's buzz value, both for raising interest in a new show, such as Fox's Fringe, or maintaining it for current hits, including ABC's Lost and NBC's Heroes.

At least one show from every broadcast network will have a panel, and many cable series will get a push as well.

Fox

Fringe: Joshua Jackson stars in the J.J. Abrams series.

NBC saw Comic-Con's power as a viral-marketing tool when it presented the Heroes pilot two years ago.

"It did a significant amount of our marketing for us just through word-of-mouth. We simply had to expose the show and let people talk about it," says NBC marketing chief John Miller. The convention has become "a huge press event as well."

This year, NBC plans to go beyond the convention's traditional fare, Miller says.

"Our booth is largely Heroes, but we also have The Office and 30 Rock, which we feel are somewhat in that Comic-Con demographic," Miller says. "Not pure comic-book or fantasy shows, but sort of a related show to the people who go there."

'Batman' star Bale is arrested

Denies assault accusation after U.K. hotel incident

By César G. Soriano
Special for USA TODAY

LONDON — Actor Christian Bale, star of the new Batman flick The Dark Knight, was arrested Tuesday on allegations of assaulting his mother and sister, British police and news media said.

Bale, 34, denied the allegations in a statement issued by his representative, Jennifer Allen. The actor went to the station "on a voluntary basis," it said. He "denies the allegation, cooperated throughout, gave his account in full of the events in question, and has left the station without any charge being made against him."

The arrest came after an incident Sunday at London's Dorchester Hotel, where suites go for $9,000 a night. A person who answered the phone at the hotel Tuesday evening declined to comment.

Bale's sister, Sharon, 40, shouted, "It's a family matter!" through a window to reporters outside her home Tuesday in County Dorset, more than 100 miles southwest of London, the BBC reports. A man who answered the door at the County Dorset home of Bale's mother, Jenny, 61, said she did not want to comment.

The Welsh-born actor was in town for Monday's London premiere of The Dark Knight, which opens in Britain Thursday. The film took in a record $158.4 million in its opening weekend in the USA.

Beyond the numbers
The news behind the ratings

Baseball was a ratings hit

▸ All stars. Baseball's marathon All Star Game Tuesday netted Fox 14.5 million viewers, the game's best at-bat since 2002 and up from 12.5 million last year. Monday's Home Run Derby on ESPN claimed a record 9.1 million and was tops on cable.

▸ Closer* opens. The fourth-season premiere of TNT's The Closer drew 7.8 million viewers Monday, down 1 million from last year, and the second-season opener of Saving Grace averaged 5.2 million, down from 6.4 million for last year's series opener.

▸ Talented. NBC's America's Got Talent hit a season-best 12.8 million Tuesday, but Wednesday's sendoff of Celebrity Circus sunk to a series-low 4.5 million.

▸ Cleaner* tidy. The premiere of The Cleaner, A&E's first original drama in years, earned an OK 2.6 million. Dog the Bounty Hunter, delayed by star Duane Chapman's family troubles, returned with 2.7 million Wednesday.

▸ Runway* record. The fifth-season opener of Project Runway — and the last on Bravo — sewed up 2.9 million viewers Wednesday, the best start yet for the reality competition series.

▸ To the dogs. CBS' Greatest American Dog fell to 7 million Thursday from 9.5 million for last week's opener, while the time-slot debuts of Big Brother (6.1 million Tuesday and 5.8 million Wednesday) were in line with last Sunday's low opener.

▸ High School* horror. The premiere of ABC reality series High School Musical: Get in the Picture tanked Sunday with 4 million viewers, finishing third in its time period and fourth among young adults.

▸ Cable openers: MTV's Run's House (1.8 million Wednesday, up from 1.6 million last season); Comedy Central's Thursday Gong Show (1.1 million) and Reality Bites Back (807,000); TV Land's Family Foreman (552,000 viewers Wednesday); TLC's Say Yes to the Dress (548,000) and Rock the Reception (467,000), both Tuesday.

The Mad Men — and their women — are headed back to Madison Avenue (and AMC Sunday at 10 p.m. ET/PT), so USA TODAY's Olivia Barker chatted up one of the stars of Seventh Avenue, Jill Stuart, about how to swing that early '60s style today.

Peggy Olson: Played by Elisabeth Moss.

Prim but perky

Stuart takes a Peggy Olson staple, the Peter Pan collar, and attaches it to a slimmer, shorter silhouette for a Swiss-dot dress that's "a little flirtier." The accompanying bag is a double wink to Betty Draper's omnipresent cigarette case. A chain-link shoulder strap carries it forward to 2008.

- "Mary" dress, $528
- "Adrienne" bag, $395
- "Cecile" pumps, $450

Betty Draper: Played by January Jones.

- "Desdemona" blouse, $328
- "Rochelle" shorts, $298
- "Cecile" pumps, $450

'Mad' for plaid

To freshen up sweet prints like Peggy's checks and Betty's plaids, Stuart ditches the dress and opts for something more youthful: high-waisted shorts and a matching, softly ruffled blouse. "It's sexier," she says. "It's more fun, more playful."

Joan Holloway: Played by Christina Hendricks.

- "Mariacarla" dress, $478
- "Emina" blouse, $248
- "Kasia" bag, $495

Siren shift

Around the office, Joan Holloway flaunts her famous figure in curve-hugging sheaths. Stuart suggests a velvet shift with a more hip-flattering circle skirt and a late-'60s, as opposed to early-'60s, hemline. It's layered over a bowtie blouse and paired with modern tote.

PORTABLE HOME BACK-UP POWER WITH A BRAIN.

Introducing HP²S, Honda Portable Power Systems. It's more than just power for home back-up. It's a choice of portable generators with a "brain" that directs power to only the circuits you need when you need it. And it's only available from Honda.

The Brain

Smart, programmable and easy to use, Honda's UTS (Universal Transfer Switch) allows you to prioritize individual circuits. This remarkable switch automatically manages your power and will "load shed" those circuits you have designated as a low priority when more power is needed to run more critical appliances. The results are a lower wattage generator that can do the job of a larger unit, which means less initial cost and lower fuel consumption. And that's smart!

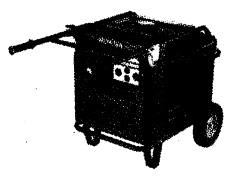
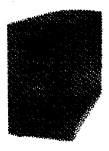
The Brawn

There are four basic HP²S packages available based on your individual power needs. Whichever Honda Portable Power System you choose, the legendary reliability and performance of Honda Generators can be there when you need it most.



The Back-Up



Two optional battery units are designed so that if you lose power while you're away, when you get home you'll still have power to open your garage door and have limited lighting to get your HP²S system up and running.

Use Your Generator For More Than Just Home

You can take your Honda generator RVing, camping, tailgating or wherever you want plenty of portable power. Even when you move, your entire HP²S system can be disconnected and go with you. See what we mean? Not just home back-up power, smart power.

ESTABLISHED JULY 26,1948

More than a decade before the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the armed services were laying the groundwork for unity in America. Desegregation was President Truman's order. On a July day in 1948, he gave all those who choose to serve their country the right to stand shoulder-to-shoulder under one flag. This act laid the foundation for a stronger, better, more effective Army. It set the nation on a course to greater unity. Join us at www.colorsthatmatter.com as we commemorate 60 years of change.

Ann Arbor, Mich., tops AARP healthiest list

Ann Arbor, Mich., home of the University of Michigan Health Center and more than twice the number of doctors per 100,000 people than the U.S. average, tops the list of the 10 "Healthiest Hometowns" for retirees in the September and October issue of AARP The Magazine.

The rankings are based on more than 20 measures of a community's vitality. Besides medical care, the authors examined such factors as the health of residents 50 and older (how many exercise regularly, how many eat fruits and vegetables regularly), longevity rates and air and water quality. Three of the top 10 — Ann Arbor, Madison, Wis., and Charlottesville, Va. — are college towns, and young people tend to demand lifestyle perks such as bike paths and fitness programs.

The top 10

1. Ann Arbor, Mich.
2. Honolulu
3. Madison, Wis.
4. Santa Fe, N.M.
5. Fargo, N.D.
6. Boulder, Colo.
7. Charlottesville, Va.
8. Minneapolis-St. Paul
9. San Francisco Bay area
10. Naples-Marco Island, Fla.

Few towns in the South made the cut because they tend to have some of the country's highest rates of obesity and chronic disease. One that did make the list might surprise some: Fargo, N.D., ranked fifth because of its clean air, 18 outdoor ice-skating rinks and renovated, hip downtown district.

People looking for warmth as well as healthy living can choose from Honolulu, Santa Fe and Naples-Marco Island, Fla., all in the top 10.

First lady rejects 'No Child' complaints

Laura Bush: Says the law is working.

No Child Left Behind can't catch a break lately on the campaign trail — Barack Obama last week slammed its "broken promises," and John McCain called it "a good beginning" that "has to be fixed." But first lady Laura Bush says the 2002 education law, championed by President Bush, will be a lasting part of his legacy. The law, which is up for renewal, requires annual reading and math tests. Critics say that the tests have forced schools to jettison rich subject matter such as arts, history and sciences. But in an interview last week with USA TODAY, the first lady flatly dismissed the complaints. If the required tests cover what is on state-approved curricula, she says, students are learning what states and school districts intended them to learn. "So I just don't buy that 'teaching to the test.' "— Greg Toppo

Group of endangered lemurs discovered

Reuters

Found in Madagascar: A group of greater bamboo lemurs.

Researchers on the Indian Ocean nation of Madagascar have found critically endangered greater bamboo lemurs living far from the only other place they were known to exist in the country, a discovery that raises hopes for the species' survival, experts said Tuesday. The discovery was made in the Torotorofotsy wetlands more than 240 miles north of the isolated bamboo forest where the rest of the known populations of the species live. Experts now believe 30 to 40 of the distinctive big-eyed lemurs live in Torotorofotsy.

Wildfires could offset Arctic warming

The Arctic might get some short-term relief from global warming if the North American wildfire season worsens, a study reported Tuesday. "Smoke in the atmosphere temporarily reduces the amount of solar radiation reaching the surface," says lead author Robert Stone of the University of Colorado. "This effect could partly offset some of the warming caused by the buildup of greenhouse gases and other pollutants." The smoke actually could cool the Arctic surface for several months at a time, says the study in Tuesday's Journal of Geophysical Research-Atmospheres, a publication of the American Geophysical Union. —Doyle Rice

FDA, CDC review says Gardasil is safe

Gardasil vaccine remains safe and effective for protecting women and girls from a virus that causes cervical cancer, health officials said Tuesday after reviewing thousands of reports of health problems following injection of the Merck vaccine. Consumers, doctors and others have raised questions about Gardasil's safety, but the Food and Drug Administration and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said the most serious problems did not appear to be linked to the vaccine. Of 9,700 reports reviewed, 6% were considered serious events, including 20 deaths reported as of June 30. "There was not a common pattern to the deaths that would suggest they were caused by the vaccine," the FDA and CDC statement said.

The state of community colleges A USA TODAY report

Today More look to two-year schools for education, employment training. Thursday College costs, financial aid problems still deter some students.

By Steve Marcus for USA TODAY

Hands-on experience: Chris Doing, who is earning an associate degree in casino management at the College of Southern Nevada, deals poker at the Mirage Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas.

An inequitable sleight of hand?

Colleges say that not including part-time students skews their graduation rates

By Mary Beth Marklein
USA TODAY

LAS VEGAS — If all goes as planned, Chris Doing will graduate with an associate degree in casino management in December. In his book, that's cause for celebration.

Two-year schools seeking respect, 1A

Yet when his community college, the College of Southern Nevada, reports graduation data to the Department of Education, Doing won't be part of the count.

Like 60% of community college students nationwide and about 75% of his classmates here, he attends part time. The Education Department asks colleges to track graduation rates each fall only for full-time students entering college for the first time. That represents about 17% of the more than 35,000 students who enrolled at this sprawling 17-campus institution.

The policy has been around since 1990, when the Education Department, responding primarily to concerns about academic performance of athletes, began requiring institutions that receive federal financial aid to submit graduation data.

The data are posted on a website aimed at helping consumers who seek college information. And as policymakers, legislators, accrediting agencies and the public increasingly focus on academic performance, the measure has become a thorn in the side of many community colleges.

Four-year universities have their complaints about it, too, but community college advocates say the numbers paint an unfair and inaccurate picture of what happens on their campuses.

For example, the data primarily reflect the behavior of traditional-age college students. But the average community college student tends to be older, commute from home and juggle work and family.

'To satisfy needs of the community'

Doing, 30, has been working about 40 hours a week in a variety of casino jobs, including dealing poker and blackjack, the four years he has been enrolled. "I kind of had to (work) so we could pay the bills," says Doing, who is married and using the GI Bill to cover his schooling.

He hopes his degree will help him move up the ladder in his hometown's flashiest industry. But in one of the few U.S. cities where a worker can make a decent starting salary without a college degree, many of his classmates have been content to just take a course on dealing poker or craps in the hopes of landing a casino job, he says.

In helping match students with employers, David Hernandez, head of the college's casino-management program, says the school is achieving its goals. "My mission is to satisfy the needs of the community," he says.

In a study published last year by the Community College Research Center at Teachers College, Columbia University in New York, researchers concluded that graduation rates are, indeed, misleading as a measure of a community college's performance.

Even so, it offered a caveat: For comparison purposes, graduation rates offer "a reasonable first approximation of relative college performance," the study said. When researchers factored in part-time students, tracked their progress over longer periods and compared them with other community colleges, the rankings stacked up pretty much the same. In short, the study says, "assumptions about community college student goals should not be used to justify low graduation rates."

Is it time for a new formula?

Congress is considering a measure to require all colleges to report graduation rates in more than 40 categories, broken down by such factors as gender, race and types of federal aid received. Higher-education lobbyists say the extra work the measure would require is pointless without changing other fundamental ways students are counted.

Some community college advocates argue for measures that more accurately reflect the practices and goals of the students. Alternative formulas have been tried in Texas, Florida and Indiana to track completion rates for as long as six years for students who start full time vs. those who start part time and to use age as another critical factor.

That's not to suggest college administrators don't want more students to enroll full time and earn a degree within three years. A number of studies show that unless Nevada's college attendance and completion rates improve dramatically over the next few decades, it will be unprepared to meet the demands of the workforce.

College of Southern Nevada data show 47% of first-time full-time students who enrolled in fall 2001 had not transferred or completed a degree or certificate by December 2007. Some are taking a break or have quit; others are still enrolled. The six-year completion and transfer rates for part-time students were 6% and 24%, respectively.

National studies show part-time students are among those most at risk of failing to complete programs. "Protracted time to graduate is a concern largely because of the difficulties it may create for the student," says Frank DiPuma, who until recently was the college's director of institutional research. "Students lose interest, some fields and disciplines change quickly, and previous work may need to be repeated."

In that respect, Doing expects to beat the odds. The son of a casino-working bartender and a waitress, he still hears about the days when casino workers were "juiced in" — that is, they got the job because they knew somebody.

Then, "going to college in management was kind of frowned upon." Now, as corporations take over, "it's become a little more cutthroat. It still helps to know people, but it's actually encouraged to have that degree."

Pre-diabetes must be treated, doctors urge

Endocrinologists' 'call to action' aims to change lifestyles

Mary Brophy Marcus
USA TODAY

Diabetes experts created the first recommendations Tuesday for the treatment of people with pre-diabetes in the hopes of curbing the diabetes epidemic.

There are now no solid guidelines for diagnosing and managing pre-diabetes, a condition in which a person's blood glucose levels are higher than normal but not high enough to be classified as diabetes.

If physicians do not recognize and treat pre-diabetes, diabetes will continue to inflate at great personal health and financial cost, says Daniel Einhorn, vice president of the American Association of Clinical Endocrinologists. The group is meeting in Oxon Hill, Md., near Washington, D.C.

In an early release of the new recommendations, members of the endocrinologist group agreed that diagnosing pre-diabetes should be based on more than the results of blood glucose tests, such as history of diabetes during pregnancy and family history of the disease. The group also decided that changes in ways of living, not medication, should be the first line of treatment in staving off diabetes.

"We, as endocrinologists, are saying we truly recognize a state of pre-diabetes, and I think the most important issue is that there is not one unifying point that defines it," Einhorn says.

The guidelines recommend that people with metabolic syndrome — defined by three or more of the following: elevated triglycerides, a low HDL (the so-called good cholesterol), a high fasting glucose, a big waist circumference and high blood pressure — be considered at high risk for pre-diabetes, as well as women with prior gestational diabetes, people with a family history of type 2 diabetes and obese patients.

"These people should all have their glucose tested," Einhorn says.

Millions at risk

Diabetes experts convened near Washington on Monday and Tuesday to develop guidelines that will help doctors know when and how to test and treat pre-diabetic people who are at risk for diabetes.

People with diabetes
24.1 million

The cost of diabetes in the USA
$174 billion a year

Source: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

The new guidelines also advise that primary-care physicians and specialists address cardiovascular problems such as blood pressure and lipid levels when diagnosing pre-diabetes.

Though there was some debate at the conference over whether medication should be used to treat pre-diabetes, the final consensus is that certain drugs may have a place if diet and exercise do not bring down glucose levels first.

"This is a call to action to recognize that there are people at special risk and that not doing anything can lead to complications of the eyes, kidneys, nerves," Einhorn says.

David Marrero, director of the Diabetes Translational Research Center at Indiana University School of Medicine, says the guidelines are only the first step. "There is no quick fix. We need to give primary-care doctors tools to help patients with lifestyle modifications. Most doctors don't know how to deal with this and don't have the resources to help patients."

Simmons makes move to get kids active at school

By Nanci Hellmich
USA TODAY

Fitness fireball Richard Simmons, 60, who has had people Sweatin' to the Oldies for years, will offer new ideas for pumping up physical education at a congressional hearing Thursday in Washington.

"Some schools have 15 minutes two days a week for PE classes, and a lot of schools don't have recess," Simmons says. "When you take the physical activity and the recess away, these kids are just sitting in the classroom all day."

He has talked to and surveyed parents, teachers, principals and superintendents and will offer the House Education and Labor Committee some ideas for "an economic way to get our kids moving every day."

He'll suggest that school systems "use the talent in their community" and have local certified fitness instructors teach classes in aerobics, yoga, Pilates, stretching and strength training during the school day.

These instructors would work under the direction of the school system's PE teachers. The classes could be set to popular pop tunes. Money for the instructors could be raised by the local PTAs or others, he says.

Being active helps children concentrate better, and it makes them feel better about themselves, Simmons says. Children who get a break to do some kind of physical activity come back to the classroom ready to work harder.

"A kid who moves is a kid who learns," he says.

Simmons, who has 50 fitness videos with titles that include Sweatin' to the Oldies, Dance Your Pants Off and Disco Sweat, says schools must offer more variety than just sports and games. "Everyone isn't made to play sports, but everyone wants to move."

He speaks from experience. As a heavy child growing up in New Orleans' French Quarter, he says, he often sat out during gym class because he wasn't picked for teams. "I'd sit down and open the other kids' lunchboxes and eat their lunches while they were playing."

His attitude as he visits the nation's capital will be a cross between "Norma Rae and Johnny Appleseed," he says. He'll be wearing a business suit for his presentation to the House committee but afterward will don his workout clothes and lead a "patriotic workout" for the public at the Cannon House Office Building terrace.

By Michael Buckner, Getty Images

He'll tell the House: Richard Simmons, who celebrated his 60th birthday July 12, says, "A kid who moves is a kid who learns."

This is not all he's doing for the younger set. He says he is developing a reality TV show in which he'll help children and families lose weight. "It's going to show Americans that it's possible to realistically lose weight, be happy and go on to other goals," he says. "It won't be an angry show with screaming and yelling. Just teamwork. No competition. It's about saving lives."

He also works with senior citizens, helping retirement centers set up health programs and classes. "Now that I'm an AARP member, I do conventions for seniors," he says. Last week, he led a class that included a 93-year-old woman who wore a headband and had a tank top that matched his. "She was rocking and rolling," Simmons says.

"If you balance your meals and you move your buns, you will live longer. If you are kind to your body, your body is kind to you."

Viagra helps women on antidepressants

By Liz Szabo
USA TODAY

Viagra may offer hope to women who experience sexual problems caused by antidepressants, a small study shows.

Up to 70% of men and women who take antidepressants for major depression experience sexual dysfunction, according to an article in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

In women, the drugs are associated with painful intercourse, loss of desire and lack of orgasm. Patients are so bothered by these side effects that up to 70% stop taking their medication as prescribed within the first few months, says co-author Julia Heiman, director of the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction at Indiana University.

In her study, 72% of women who took Viagra saw their symptoms improve, compared with 27% of women who took placebos.

Doctors randomly assigned 49 women to take Viagra for eight weeks and 49 to take a placebo. Neither doctors nor patients, whose average age was 37, knew which pill they were taking.

Although the study was small, its careful design makes it significant, says Jan Shifren, an obstetrician-gynecologist at Massachusetts General Hospital and Harvard Medical School.

The participants were chosen because they had depression that was controlled, were premenopausal and had good sexual function before starting antidepressants. The researchers wanted to ensure other factors that influence sexual function, such as menopause or a longtime inability to have orgasms, didn't influence their results.

Although Shifren says she would now be willing to prescribe Viagra to patients like those in the study, she says there's no evidence to suggest the pill would help other women.

Yet the study could affect millions, researchers say. About 180 million prescriptions are filled each year for antidepressants.

About twice as many women take antidepressants as men, according to the study funded by Viagra's manufacturer, Pfizer.

Viagra didn't help everyone, though. Four women taking Viagra quit the study early because it didn't work.

And Viagra didn't relieve all of the symptoms. Although Viagra improved the women's ability to have orgasms, it didn't boost their sex drive, according to the researchers. Women taking Viagra also were more likely to report side effects, such as indigestion, hot flashes, visual problems and nasal congestion.

Critic's Corner

Opie episode: Ron Howard on Andy.

▶ Does any night have more truly atrocious shows than Wednesday? It's as if the broadcast networks are using the evening this summer as some sort of historic gathering spot for TV's worst and dimmest: Wife Swap (8 ET/PT) and Supernanny (9 ET/PT) on ABC, Big Brother (8 ET/PT) and Criminal Minds (9 ET/PT) on CBS and two hours of Baby Borrowers (8 ET/PT) on NBC. Unless you're a fan of So You Think You Can Dance (Fox, 8 ET/PT), this might be a good time to get started on some of those chores you've been avoiding.

▶ Or if you're in the mood for a dose of nostalgia, turn to TV Land for The Andy Griffith Show (8 ET/PT) as Opie discovers a baby on the courthouse steps. Even if you're not an Andy fan, you may want to see the novice actor playing the baby's father: Jack Nicholson.

▶ Nicholson's Cuckoo's Nest co-star Louise Fletcher pops up on Ion in an ER (10 ET/PT) episode from 2005, as a woman Abby suspects is being abused by her sister (Pat Carroll).

▶ Stan searches for the secret origins of egg decorating on a South Park (Comedy, 10 ET/PT) Easter special. Odds are the plot description immediately will strike you as either enticing or horrifying; something you must see, or something you'd rather avoid. Go with your instinct.

When somebody needs a brother, here's Adam Scott

Sibling roles keep him in acting family

By William Keck
USA TODAY

LOS ANGELES — There's more than a little brotherly love in the air for Adam Scott.

The soft-spoken and unassuming actor has played Jennifer Lopez's gay best friend in Monster-in-Law, Leonardo DiCaprio's press agent in The Aviator and Katherine Heigl's nurse in Knocked Up. But lately Scott has found himself the go-to guy for whenever Hollywood needs a brother-type, often smarmy:

▶ He currently plays Josh Hartnett's brainy brother in August, about the fall of the dot-com businesses.

▶ He's the creepy brother of Will Ferrell and stepbrother of John C. Reilly in Step Brothers, out Friday.

▶ Later, he takes on the role in the low-budget Passenger Side as one of two brothers who run errands in Los Angeles.

▶ And in Lovely, Still, also out next year, he enjoys a brotherly-like bond with Elizabeth Banks as they care for an ailing man (Martin Landau) over the holidays.

Fortunately, Scott, 35, doesn't take the typecasting personally.

The actor, whose wife, Naomi, will deliver their second child in October to join son Graham, 2, enjoys a healthy relationship with his real-life older sister and brother, Shannon and David. David, Scott says, looks like him but is far more cerebral and inherited the intellect of their parents: Dougald and Anne, both of whom are retired teachers.

After his parents divorced and remarried, Scott ended up with a slew of step-siblings. So when he heard about Step Brothers, he thought "it was such a perfect idea." The plot finds two deadbeat adults (Ferrell and Reilly) forced to share a bedroom after Ferrell's mother (Mary Steenburgen) falls in love and marries Reilly's father (Richard Jenkins). Scott is Steenburgen's other, more successful son, who doesn't get along with either of the two.

The role called for Scott to hurl all sorts of insults at the two, leaving him feeling "like the bully on the playground, and we were all 6 years old."

He says he found it "intimidating" acting alongside Ferrell and Reilly. "But they're not intimidating people," he stresses. "They wanted me to be great."

Next month, Scott leaves comedy behind for a while to film his oftennaked role as Palek on HBO's disturbingly realistic therapy drama Tell Me You Love Me.

The show begins shooting 10 new episodes in August, and Season 2 premieres in January.

"I think the direction the show is going to go, from what I hear, is going to be surprising for a lot of fans," he says. "What all the characters end up doing will be very interesting."

Housing survey deadline extended

The deadline for the DA housing survey has been extended through the end of the month. The annual survey, which is open to all residents living in post housing, rates their satisfaction with customer service, maintenance and housing quality and assignment.

So far, only 16 percent of residents have responded, said Lon Sperry, investment manager with Pinnacle. That's more than a 6 percent drop from last year.

The purpose of the survey is to find out how housing meets occupants' needs and how it needs to change, said Sperry, who will conduct a survey later in the fall through the Fort Benning Family Communities, a partnership between the Army and Clark Pinnacle.

Decisions about the design of new homes, management, renovations and other aspects of housing are often based on information received in the surveys, Sperry said.

"This is an opportunity (for residents) to voice their opinions," he said. "The more people respond, the more accurate the information is. We need feedback."

The survey is available at https://survey.rdniehaus.com. For more information, call 706-545-0667.

Pfc. Jarred D. Palmer and Sgt. Kevin Miller from the 209th Military Police Detachment at Fort Benning competed in the 2008 Installation Management Command Soldier and NCO of the Year event last week at Fort A.P. Hill, Va.

Miller was named IMCOM NCO of the Year. He was also named alternate for the Army Soldier and NCO of the Year competition in September.

Miller said he was proud to have won for IMCOM.

Miller

When he arrived and saw 32 other competitors, he didn't think he stood a chance, he said.

Miller said he learned a lot from this competition, much of which focused on common task skills. Sergeants major and NCOs from other commands shared their experiences and knowledge with the competitors.

"The drills they took us through taught me more precise things about how to be a basic Soldier," he said.

Soldiers volunteer as Big Brothers Big Sisters

Eighteen Soldiers from the 362nd Engineer Multi-Role Bridge Company are being paired with children in Columbus through the Big Brothers Big Sisters program.

Of the 18 volunteers, 14 are male. That's good news, said Shanae Griffin, BBBS community relations specialist, since boys usually have to wait a long time for big brothers.

The first Soldier to be matched, Pfc. Ollie White, met his new "little brother," 4-year-old Jalen Jordan, June 28. White took him to the Independence Day celebration on Fort Benning and has since taken him to play at Monkey Joe's. Of all their activities, one sticks out in Jalen's mind.

"I can swim," said Jalen, after White bought him a life vest and helped him learn to stay afloat.

Jalen used to be terrified, even when he was waste-deep in water, but now he can swim from one side of the pool to the other, White said.

"I wouldn't have been able to teach him that," said Jalen's grandmother, Lavern Denson, who raises Jalen by herself. "He was elated by that swimming experience. He told me how he held his nose under water. He wants to go back."

Denson said she wants a positive male role model in Jalen's life to enforce the principles of respect and discipline and "give him some direction."

COMMANDER'S COLUMN

As Army celebrates 60 years of integration, the strength of today's Army remains its diversity

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

From the very beginning, the strength of our nation's Army has come from the strength of its people. America's power is the result of the devotion of individuals who come from different walks of life and join together to defend her. The U.S. Army is strong, not just because American citizens are in the Army, but because American citizens are the Army.

America is full of people with an unshakable integrity and an indomitable spirit. Courage is not uncommon here, but one of the greatest strengths the Army takes from its homeland is a strong tradition of diversity. This diversity prevents an Army of one from meaning, an Army of one and the same.

Tomorrow we celebrate the 60th anniversary of Executive Order 9981, issued by President Harry S. Truman, which established equal treatment and opportunity for all Americans in the Armed Services regardless of race, religion, or walk of life. The strength of today's Army is a legacy of that decision. The elimination of barriers between Soldiers based on racial divisions creates an Army that practices a policy of not just integration, but inclusion.

Diversity within our units has allowed for Soldiers with very different strengths gained from unique life experiences to combine different skills and approaches to strengthen their unit as a whole. This mix of talents creates teams that are remarkably greater than the sum of their parts, and in turn creates an Army that not only better represents the nation, but one that defends her better as well.

It is for this very reason that the military, more so than any other organization, encourages diversity within its ranks. And we often educate our Army Family about the different cultures and backgrounds that are part of our make-up. At Fort Benning, our Equal Opportunity Office hosts regular events that further expose our Soldiers, Families, Civilians and contractors to the diversity of our people. In August, we celebrate women's equality day, National Hispanic Heritage month follows, then Native American Indian Heritage month, and in February, African American History is celebrated.

Our Army is strong because it has the strength of countless individuals, who differ in race, creed, color, class, religion and gender, but use their differences to unite into a single force capable of overcoming any obstacle. Diversity of people is crucial to the Army's success.

The same holds true for the organization of our modern fighting force. Just as the many parts of a rifle, with their different functions, come together to create a single powerful tool, the different parts of the Army come together to form a more powerful whole. Fort Benning, for example, is an installation made up of units with different missions, but they all come together to create strong American Soldiers. We train Soldiers in units like the 192nd and 198th Infantry Brigades, Airborne and Ranger Schools. From units like the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, the 75th Ranger Regiment, and the 11th Engineer Battalion, Fort Benning sends Soldiers to fight the Global War on Terrorism. We develop new technologies at our Soldier Battle Lab and in our Directorate of Combat Developments. All parts of the installation work together to accomplish the mission: developing leaders and Soldiers who are imbued with the Warrior Ethos; highly trained and capable of dominating all enemies regardless of environment.

As we look toward the future and our transition to the Maneuver Center of Excellence, we see that diversity continues to play a role in the success of our mission. By bringing Armor together here with Infantry, the Army will strengthen the synergy of our fighting force on the battlefield. These two branches have two very separate and different functions that work together to accomplish a common goal — the defense of our nation.

Today's battlefields see Soldiers meeting scenarios and operations that are very different than anything we've encountered in the past. Units composed of diverse individuals with different skills and strengths make for units that are ready for anything, both here and abroad. It is the blending of our different backgrounds that is one of our greatest strengths as an Army. Individually we are strong, but together we are Army Strong.

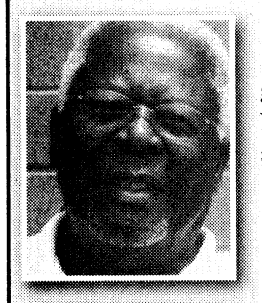
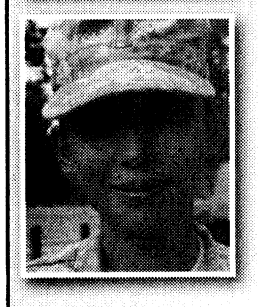
VARIOUS VOICES

How do you think integration has affected today's Army?



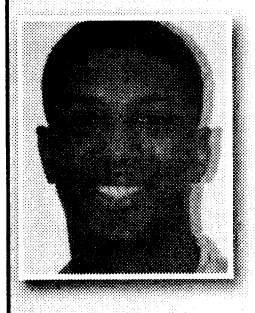
Integration has brought about great change to the armed forces. We have the "best with the best" serving and defending our nation.

— Retired Chief Warrant Officer Mace Kendrick, Columbus



Integration has allowed females to make more of an active presence in combat missions. As medics, we go to the front with the guys. We provide an important resource and gain insight.

— 2nd Lt. Renerose Lester BOLC II



We have more diversity in today's Army — it gains us credibility in our nation and internationally as we deploy. It breaks down barriers and helps us accomplish our mission.

— Capt. Michael Hamilton Maneuver Captains' Career Course

As our Soldiers are more adaptable, their children have learned to adapt. They are stronger, more responsible and better-rounded based on their experience as a military child.

— Bettie Harris Child and Youth Services

Integration has taught us what is behind the uniform — race, beliefs or backgrounds — isn't what makes you a great Soldier. It's what you do in the uniform.

— Pfc. Daniel Savato 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment

Sue Ulibarri

Army celebrates 60th anniversary of integration of U.S. military

"Culture does not change because we desire to change it. Culture changes when the organization is transformed; the culture reflects the realities of people working together every day. Culture is the beliefs and values practiced by an organization."

—Frances Hesselbein
Presidential Medal of Freedom recipient

On July 26, 1948, President Harry Truman issued Executive Order 9981, which established equal treatment and opportunity in the United States military, and Executive Order 9980, to integrate the civilian work force. The president believed it essential that inclusion — the highest standard of democracy — be afforded to those who defend our country. Thanks to President Truman's transformational executive order, our Army today is a reflection of our society — a diverse force strengthened by our many different perspectives, approaches and skills.

Military leaders understand that effectiveness depends on the ability of people of different military backgrounds to work together. With a culture that embraces diversity, the U.S. military is able to operate successfully across the nation and around the world. Army leaders, in particular, manage and promote diversity by creating and maintaining an inclusive environment where individual attributes are accepted, understood and valued — inspiring all Soldiers and Army Civilians to be culturally astute, agile and adaptive public servants.

So, let us celebrate this historic occasion, knowing that the blending of cultures and backgrounds is one of our nation's greatest strengths.

We are the best Army in the world, and together, we are Army Strong.

Letter to the editor

Soldier comes to her aid

Some say discipline is doing the right thing when nobody appears to be watching. Well, there is plenty of discipline in and around Fort Benning. Recently, my tire ruptured while I was driving along I-185. My spare was already pending repair from a similar fate. I wasn't on the side of the road for more than two minutes when a Soldier stopped to help. He was on his way home following his end-of-day workout. After a long day such as his, most people would simply bee-line it home. In this case, the Soldier stopped ascertained my situation, and without hesitation offered to return with a tire he had available that would fit my jeep.

He returned within 20 minutes, this time with his wife (you have to love that commitment to family and maximizing time with the ones you love!). Within minutes, I was on the road.

He wasn't your average Soldier. He is a senior NCO in 1st Battalion, 29 Infantry Regiment. 1st Sgt. John Finch is a true professional on and off duty. His strong sense of discipline was a superb reflection of his unit, Fort Benning, and the NCO Corps. This experience has renewed my faith and confidence in our Soldiers, our Army and our country. I have also renewed my support to our troops as they continue to win the Global War Against Terror.

Thank you 1st Sgt. Finch and the thousands others who would have selflessly done the same thing to help an American in need. God bless you, God bless our troops and God bless Fort Benning.

• The crushing power of the mighty land battleship, the Mark VIII tank, was demonstrated when two of the 44-ton monsters demolished the last of the post's Negro housing into a heap of splintered kindling. The buildings had stood at the site of the Infantry School since the turn of the century when they were built to shelter colored laborers on the old Woolfolk Plantation.

• A new rule was established for members of the Thanatopsis Club: No telephone calls during the game.

• In this week's Benning Herald, a gossip columnist poked fun at Lt. Tarpley for making a wrong turn in the post theater and ending up in the ladies' room. Really.

3rd BCT welcomes new commander

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Sgt. Natalie Rostek

Soldiers of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, bid farewell to their former commander while welcoming a new commander July 18 in front of the headquarters building on Fort Benning.

Col. Peter L. Jones assumed command of the brigade combat team from Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr. who had commanded the "Sledgehammer" brigade since June 2006.

Grigsby described his former Soldiers as disciplined and motivated, and congratulated them on a job-well-done during their most recent deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom March 2007 under Grigsby's command. Soldiers returned to Fort Benning in May.

"You always 'got 'er dun' and did the right thing when no one was watching," he told brigade Soldiers. "Just remember for the rest of your lives, hold your heads up high. You are the most important resource this country has."

Jones, a 1985 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y., served as the chief of strategic threats during the 3rd ID's deployment in support of OIF.

"It is truly an honor to become part of the 'Hammer' team and the great 'Marne' Division again," he said.

"This is a great brigade that has a proud history and tradition known throughout the Army. I will give my all to continue this great tradition and prepare the brigade for warfighting anytime, anywhere."

Jones' awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with "V" device and oak leaf cluster, the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Expert Infantryman Badge, the Parachutist Badge, the Pathfinder Badge and the Ranger Tab.

92nd Military Police Battalion relocates to Missouri

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

The 92nd Military Police Battalion is relocating to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and they cased their colors during a ceremony Thursday to symbolize their departure from Fort Benning.

As part of Army transformation, the Phoenix Battalion was assigned to the 4th Maneuver Enhancement Brigade, a new Army Force structure that can be employed on the battlefield to perform command and control maneuver space like a brigade combat team, said Lt. Col. Dennis M. Zink, battalion commander.

"This is a win-win situation for Fort Benning and Fort Leonard Wood," Zink said. "The 209th Law and Order Detachment will provide law and order enforcement duties at Fort Benning, and it gives the 92nd an opportunity to be part of a new Army Force structure at Fort Leonard Wood."

4th MEB is one of only two existing brigades of its kind in the Army, he said. The other is the 1st MEB, located at Fort Polk, La.

Col. John Huey, 89th Military Police Brigade commander, said no one was surprised that the Phoenix Battalion was selected to join the 4th MEB.

"This battalion has a long and tremendous history of varied and unique service dating back to 1945," Huey said. "The most recent addition to this legacy was a 15-month deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, where they did a marvelous job."

The 89th MP Bde. at Fort Hood, Texas, is the higher headquarters of the 92nd MP Bn.

Zink said the new brigade will give the Army many capabilities, such as providing combat assets, rear area law enforcement and infrastructure repairs, sustainment and stability. They can also provide host nation support, such as rebuilding infrastructure and improving logistical routes.

Zink said their mission to provide a deployable battalion headquarters for the U.S. Army Forces Command, anywhere in the world, and to provide law and order enforcement support in garrison remains the same.

The 4th MEB will be comprised of three basic units — military police, engineers and logisticians — and can have other units assigned to it for particular missions, he said. Air space management will be included, so they can operate as a separate brigade maneuver headquarters.

The 209th Law and Order Detach. will be commanded by a provisional headquarters run by Lt. Col. Willard Moore, Directorate of Emergency Services, and will continue to perform garrison duties under the new headquarters, Zink said.

The 92nd MP Bn. will have an unfurling ceremony to announce their arrival at Fort Leonard Wood in late August.

Residency program available for new dentists

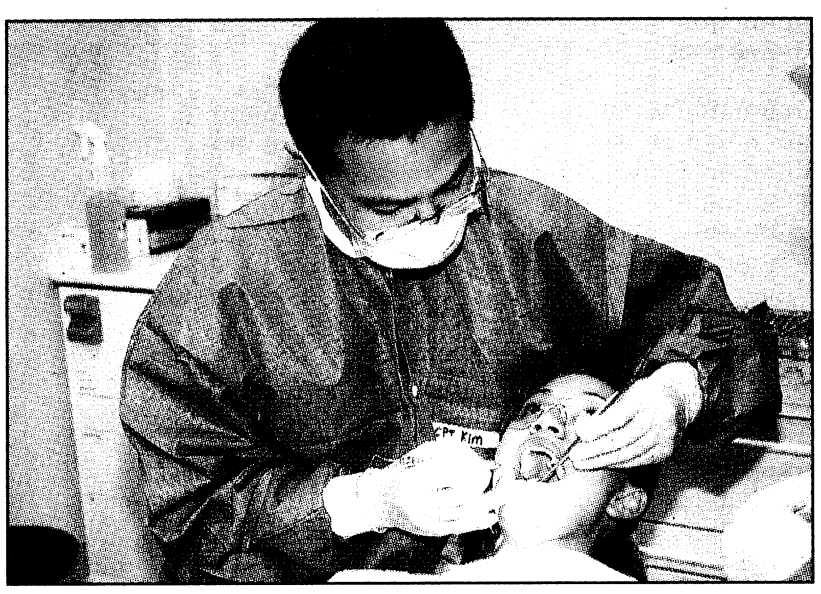
Doctors will be ahead of peers in experience

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Six dentists attending a residency program at Fort Benning will be five to six years ahead of their peers when they join their new units, said Col. Bob Manga, the residency program director.

When they graduate today, the dentists will be able to handle Soldiers' dental care in the desert and across the world. They will be able to take care of 90 percent of their patients' needs as opposed to dentists who haven't attended the program who won't be able to handle 50 percent of care, he said.

Manga said the officers leave dental school with some experience, but the residency program gives them the tools to become outstanding dentists.



Brenda Donnell

Capt. Sewhan Kim, a dental resident, examines a Soldier's teeth July 11 at Love Dental Clinic. Kim and five other dentists are attending a 12-month residency program at Fort Benning.

There are six Army residency one-year programs located around the U.S., Manga said, and the Army tries to train about 40 dentists each year in that program. Approximately a dozen dentists attend two-year programs, he said, and those numbers combined are about half of the dentists accepted by the Army each year.

Capt. Chad Eardley said he applied for the residency program because he wanted to get as much training as possible.

Eardley, a graduate of A.T. Still University of Health Sciences in Mesa, Ariz., said residents immediately begin working with patients, and they are exposed to multiple materials, equipment and treatment options.

Manga, who has been a dentist for 27 years, said board-certified specialists act as mentors. They provide one-on-one instruction in every facet of dentistry, including endodontics, periodontics, prosthodontics, orthodontics, oral surgery, pediatric and general dentistry.

The training is world-class, and the intent is to send the dentists to smaller assignments where there aren't any specialists available, Manga said.

Eardley said he has learned things he wouldn't have learned in the civilian world as a new dentist, and anything he doesn't know, he can find the resources to learn. He said he can also focus on what he is learning without other worries.

"Some of my colleagues who aren't in programs aren't doing much," Eardley said. "If they're in private practice, they're trying to figure things out, get their speed up, make money and there is a lot of pressure on them."

Eardley will be assigned to a unit in Germany when he graduates. He said eventually he wants to specialize in pediatrics dentistry. Eardley joined the Army in 2003 in the Health Professions Scholarship Program, which provides comprehensive scholarships in health-care fields.

ICE feedback helps improve post services, organizations

Comments can be made at any computer

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Have you ever wanted to give someone a piece of your mind? To put it all out so there is no misunderstanding about your feelings?

Fort Benning officials encourage Soldiers, family members, civilians and visitors to share their ideas and comments and provide feedback about services available on post through ICE — the Interactive Customer Evaluation program.

Ginny Basl, who is the installation ICE manager, said anyone can provide feedback by logging onto the ICE Web site from a home or office computer or at one of many kiosks around post.

Comments, both positive and negative, are sent directly to the organizations rated.

Responses are sent to the rater if requested, but those providing feedback don't have to leave their name or identifying information. However, if they do, their privacy is protected.

Organization managers have seven days to respond or take action on negative comments, Basl said, and the garrison commander is briefed quarterly about ICE feedback.

Brady Stewart, Security Division chief for the Directorate of Intelligence and Security, said ICE is an effective tool to ensure organizations are giving customers the best service.

"Customer feedback is important because it provides insight from a different perspective. It gives us the opportunity to check the level of service we are actually providing against what we think we are providing and adjust as needed to reach our goal of excellent customer service," Stewart said.

Danny Wilson, adjutant general, Directorate of Human Resources, said ICE helps improve his organization.

"Good feedback reinforces the quality of work we do for the customer, and the negative feedback assists us in determining ways we can improve," Wilson said. "We're very serious about customer feedback and have formal documentation requirements when we get negative feedback that requires branch and division chiefs to formally respond to our director."

Basl said any organization can have a section on the Fort Benning ICE Web site, and anyone can make comments about the services listed on the site.

Army's first black Soldiers integrated into all-white unit

Editor's note: The following article is the last in a series about the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the first black paratrooper unit. Three Soldiers of the original 16 paratroopers are still alive. With the help of Mike Lyde, president of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association in Columbus, they shared their stories.

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

The Army's first black paratroopers became members of the newly formed 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, Nov. 25, 1944. It was the first Army unit comprised of and led by all black active-duty Soldiers, and they became known as the Triple Nickles.

It was a milestone for black Soldiers because until then, most had not been allowed to train for combat in World War II, said Walter Morris, the first black enlisted Soldier chosen to be a paratrooper. Most were assigned to service companies, where they were basically servants performing menial tasks, he said.

Some black Soldiers had fought in combat, including members of the 92nd Infantry Division, from Fort Huachuca, Ariz., a unit comprised of black Soldiers and led by white officers. They made up the majority of the original 16 enlisted paratroopers

Once the 555th became a battalion, the unit moved to Camp Mackall, N.C., where they awaited orders overseas.

Instead, they received orders to the American Northwest and were assigned a secret mission designated Operation Firefly, to find and destroy balloon bombs that were launched from Japan on the jet stream. While there, they worked with the U.S. Forest Service.

The Triple Nickles arrived at Camp Pendleton, Ore., in May 1945, where they became the military's first smoke jumpers, according to the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion Association Web site.

"So, the 555th's mission became to seek and destroy any Japanese balloon bombs and fight any fires caused directly or indirectly by them," said Clarence Beavers, one of the sixteen original paratroopers.

Beavers said they were issued Air Force jackets and trousers with fleece linings, a football helmet with a fencing mask attached to it and 200-feet of rope, and they were taught to fight forest fires.

When they left the Northwest in October 1945, they had made 1,200 individual jumps and fought 32 fires.

The paratroopers returned to Camp Mackall. They were assigned to the 27th Special Troops, First Army, but by Dec. 6, they were attached to the 13th Airborne Division.

Later, they were attached to the 82nd Airborne Division under the command of Maj. Gen. James M. Gavin, who decided it was time to integrate his black and white Soldiers.

"Recalling my own experience with black troops, I knew the time had come for change," Gavin wrote in the forward of the book, Triple Nickles, by retired Lt. Col. Bradley Biggs, the first black officer selected to be a paratrooper.

In the face of segregation, Gavin went directly to Washington, he wrote, where he visited the Chief of Plans and Operations in the War Department at the Pentagon. Integration orders were delivered, and the 555th was deactivated Dec. 9, 1947, and redesignated the 3rd Battalion, 505th Airborne Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division. Gavin personally conducted the redesignation ceremony.

Morris and Beavers left the Army soon after they returned from Oregon, but Roger Walden, one of the original 16 paratroopers, stayed in the Army and retired in 1966 as a lieutenant colonel, receiving a Silver Star for actions in Korea.

Walden said, after black and white Soldiers were integrated, he spent most of his career with the 82nd and the 11th Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.

Throughout his 24-year career, Walden served with the 24th Infantry Regiment, Japan; 188th Airborne Infantry Regiment; 746th Armored Rifle Battalion, later designated 3rd Armored Rifle Battalion, 51st Infantry, in Germany; 6th Army at the Presidio, San Francisco; and Central State College in Ohio, where he ran the ROTC program.

Walden was also in charge of 100 Soldiers from 188th when they took part in Atomic Shot 2, one of the detonations of an atomic bomb, in Desert Rock, Nev.

Walden said many things changed throughout his service, and the Army has come a long way since 1944 when he and the other 15 black Soldiers first qualified as paratroopers.

"It was something to go through because of segregation," Walden said. "The Army set the example for the rest of the country."

Morris, now 87 years old, said when he thinks about the changes the U.S. has made in the last 50 years, he has an "amazing and wonderful feeling."

"Now, I am looking at the prospect of an African-American being the president," Morris said. "Every time I think of it, I have to smile. It's wonderful to be alive and see the advancements we've made as a nation."

A bronze bust to recognize the 555th was unveiled at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 7, 2006.

To learn more about the local 555th Parachute Infantry Association, Richard W. Williams Chapter, call Mike Lyde at 706-332-8653.

Origin of nickname, Triple Nickles

In addition to the obvious origin from the numerical 555, the historical roots of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, is derived from the buffalo nickel. The buffalo was also the symbol of the 92nd Infantry Division, which adopted the symbol from the Buffalo Soldiers, the black cavalry divisions that fought the Plains Indians and explored the West in the late nineteenth century.

The unconventional spelling of nickle instead of nickel makes the word visually similar to the word, triple.

The 2nd Ranger Infantry Company (Airborne) was activated Oct. 6, 1950, and in March 1951, became the first all-black Army unit to make a parachute jump behind enemy lines with the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team at Munsan-ni, routing 150 Korean guerillas.

First all-black Ranger company

Members of the 3rd Battalion, 505th Airborne Infantry Regiment, and the 80th Anti-aircraft Artillery Battalion, 82nd Airborne Division, were all part of the first all-black Ranger company, the first all-black company to parachute into combat and the last all-black unit activated by the Army, according to the 555th Parachute Infantry Association Web site.

The 2nd Ranger Infantry Company (Airborne) was activated Oct. 6, 1950, and in March 1951, became the first all-black Army unit to make a parachute jump behind enemy lines when it jumped with the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team at Munsan-ni, Korea, where they routed 150 Korean guerrillas. The company was attached to the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team specifically for this daring mission.

The company fought in four major campaigns and received numerous citations, including 10 Silver Stars and 11 Bronze Stars.

Before going to their branches, all officers go one of two places — Fort Benning or Fort Sill, Okla. — for Basic Officer Leadership Course II.

"Our mission is to build leaders who are competent and who are able to lead Soldiers in any operational environment," said Capt. Kevin Pelley, platoon mentor.

In BOLC II, Soldiers learn advanced land navigation, rifle marksmanship, convoy operations and dismounted urban operations.

They also learn what it takes to be a leader.

"A leader is willing to make that split decision with no hesitation, has confidence, and knows what needs to be done without being told," said Sgt. Marty Brossett, squad trainer.

BOLC II Soldiers had the chance to lead during dismounted urban operations training July 10 at McKenna MOUT site. They took turns leading four-man entry teams as they entered, cleared and secured two- and three-story buildings.

"When you're put in a position of responsibility, it tests your ability and pushes your limit," said 2nd Lt. James Tran.

The Soldiers are tested in an environment that is realistic to combat in Iraq, said Capt. Howard Donaldson, company commander. This helps test their leadership skills under pressure.

After entering buildings, students had to take down mock insurgents, care for wounded Soldiers, detain panicked civilians and differentiate an insurgent from a bystander.

"McKenna MOUT is a hard site to train on, because there are so many open windows and loop holes. There are openings in the wall where insurgents can put their rifles and shoot in a stairway. If the students can deal with this site, they can deal with anything," Donaldson said.

Soldiers even felt the sting of a bullet. Instead of blanks, they shot blue and red paint bullets at insurgents who shot back at them.

Pelley said the sting of the paint bullets adds to the realism.

"Feeling the sting, adrenalin jumps and you react as if you are in combat," the combat veteran said.

Soldiers also learned about themselves and others.

"This training has helped me with enhancing my leadership skills and more about teamwork," Tran said. "Communication is key — along with patience and understanding — to work well as a team."

Students graduated from BOLC II Thursday.

Soldiers: Compete in IMCOM Soldier, NCO of year event

MPs inducted into the 14th Military Police Brigade Hall of Fame during his tenure. He accomplished this by acing all qualifications during basic training and completing extra tasks.

"During company and battalion boards here, he stood out," Pearson said, noting that Miller is humble, physically gifted and a conscientious leader.

Miller, who is from Watertown, Wis., joined the Army Sept. 11, 2003. As the son of a Marine, he always wanted to join a military service. He plans to one day serve as a civilian police officer.

Palmer and Miller were named 2008 Soldier and NCO of the Year, respectively, for the IMCOM Southeast Region at Fort Stewart, Ga., June 26.

Palmer didn't win the worldwide IMCOM Soldier of Year, but he did extremely well, Pearson said.

"You've got a Soldier who has only 12 months in the Army competing at the this level — I mean it's just unheard of," Pearson said.

He said Palmer is mature, articulate and has a quiet confidence, which is unusual for someone of his age and experience.

Palmer credits Miller as one of the Soldiers who helped him through the boards and competitions.

"I wouldn't have anything right now if it wasn't for him," he said. "I would have been completely lost."

When he won his first competition, Palmer said he was surprised because he thought he hadn't done very well, and when he won the Southeast Region competition, he was very excited.

"The competitor I was going against was very "studied up," but physically I tried to stay in front the whole time," said the Oregon City, Ore., native, for whom military service is a family tradition.

Palmer said the IMCOM competition last week was challenging with a lot of events and more competitors than previous competitions. Although he didn't win IMCOM Soldier of the Year, the experience will help him in the future, he said

Palmer signed up for the Army in high school. He, too, hopes to one day become a civilian police officer, he said.

Pearson said his unit has a lot of outstanding Soldiers, but the fact that Palmer and Miller competed for the worldwide IMCOM Soldier and NCO of the Year validates their stellar qualities.

"I'm proud as I can be of them," he said.

Big Brother: Teaches respect, discipline

Her son and Jalen's uncle, a Soldier now training personnel in Korea, was a good influence on Jalen when he lived nearby, but since his deployment, she has been overwhelmed.

"He's a very active child; he never sits down. He's always going and going," Denson said. "I'm 67, and I get tired. I'm not able to run up and down the basketball court, but Ollie loves basketball. I'm just hoping (Jalen) can connect with his big brother."

Denson started thinking about the program when she heard Griffin speak at a meeting of K ship Care, a local organization for relative caregivers.

"Jalen always asks about his dad," Denson said, "so I thought if a big brother figure would take him out and maybe do some of the things he sees other boys doing with their dads, maybe Jalen would calm down and not act out so much."

As Jalen bonds with White, his behavior is starting to improve, she said.

"It's been a big help for me," she said. "I was just looking for someone he could trust and I could trust. Sending that young man into Jalen's life, it's more than I can say or thank God for."

The Soldiers will mentor the children for at least a year. White said he hopes to keep in touch with Jalen even longer.

"I'm not good with kids, but he's growing on me," White said. "This is a good experience for me. I never had a little brother, and to have someone look up to me — that he would consider me his big brother — makes me feel good."

This type of mentorship position is encouraging to young Soldiers, said 1st Sgt. Charles Fuller, 362nd Eng. Co.

"It gives them a sense of pride and helps them with leadership," he said. "It has an instant impact when you touch a kid's life — just the joy you see on a child's face."

Fuller said he was proud to see such an enthusiastic response to the program. Volunteering lets them show the positive effects of the Army on their lives, he said.

White said he is teaching Jalen about Army values like respect. He is firm with him when he misbehaves, but always loving.

"I just feel like this is a good chance for me to better this kid," White said. "I'm here to tell him what's wrong and what's right — just be his big brother. He listens to me, and I hope he will follow in my footsteps and do something positive with his life."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN A. NASH

Harrington wins Open

He started the final round two shots behind Greg Norman in the 137th British Open, but Padraig Harrington pulled it out and won by four strokes over England's Ian Poulter July 20. Norman finished six strokes behind Harrington. Norman was trying to become the oldest winner of a major, PGA Tour event or European Tour event.

It was Harrington's second straight British title.

Wie disqualified

Michelle Wie, the 18-year-old golfer who has made headlines for years, made more news July 20 when she was disqualified from the State Farm Classic for failing to sign her scorecard before leaving the scoring area after the second round.

Wie was one shot off the lead and had no explanation as to why she didn't sign the scorecard.

She is bouncing back, though, and is planning on playing with the men in the PGA Legends Reno-Tahoe Open this weekend.

Shockey, Taylor traded

Shockey has been known as disgruntled because he wanted more involvement with downfield passing. Maybe Saints' coach Sean Payton will use Shockey to his advantage.

In other NFL trade news, Miami Dolphins' defensive end Jason Taylor was traded to the Washington Redskins for a second-round pick in 2009 and a sixth-round pick in 2010.

Olympians get presidential send-off

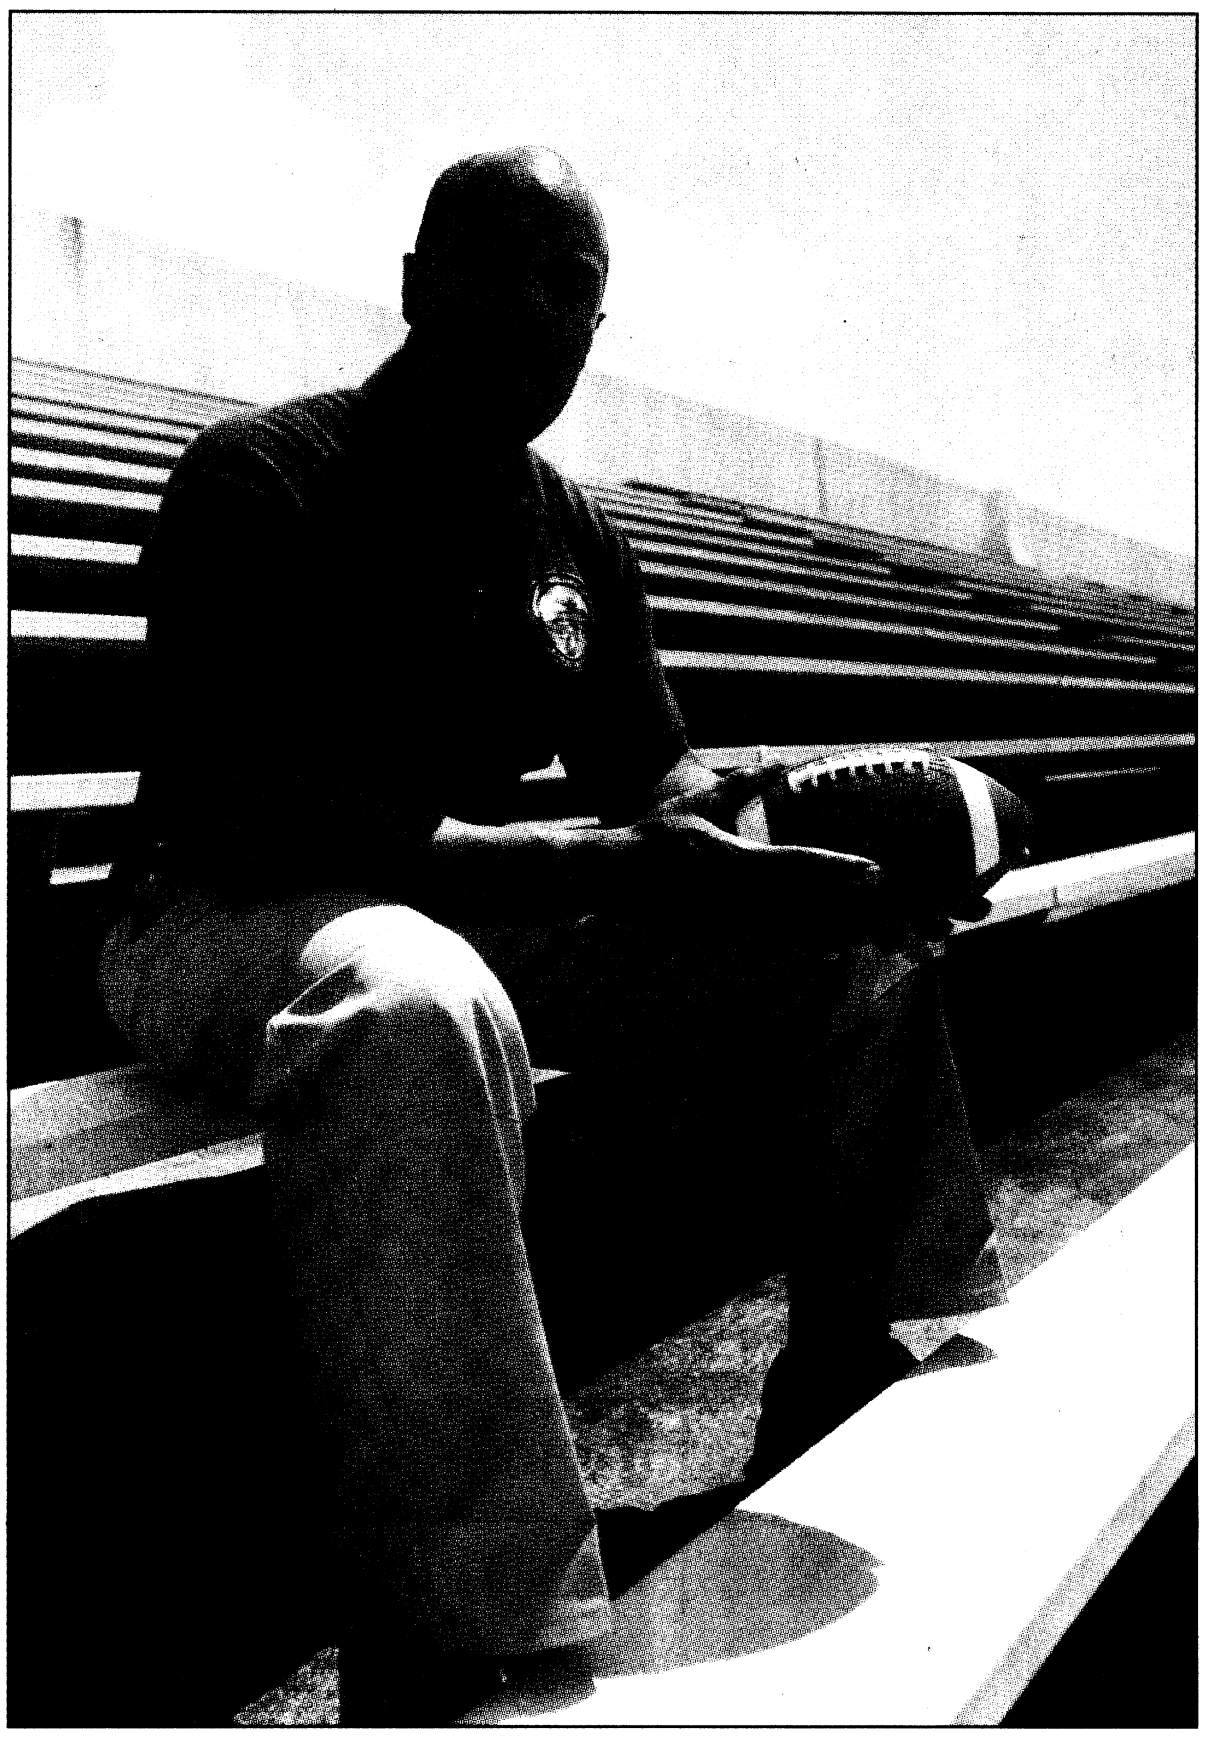
About two dozen Olympic athletes visited the White House Monday for a send-off from President George Bush and his wife, Laura. Bush will attend the opening ceremonies and stay a few days when the games start Aug. 8 in Beijing, China.

Olympic softball player Jennie Finch gave Bush a personalized jersey.

NASCAR hits the Brickyard

I might scream and pull my hair out this weekend if Kyle Busch wins another race. Luckily, the Brickyard at Indianapolis Motor Speedway is a race that every single driver wants to win. The Allstate 400 at The Brickyard starts at 1 p.m. Sunday. Finally, coverage will move from TNT to ESPN. TNT coverage was the worst — the commentators were boring and there were so many commercials, the coverage was confusing. Hopefully ESPN does a better job; it shouldn't be too hard.

'Mental toughness,' faith keys to success



Mitchell Thomas IV

John Mark III, a senior engineer for SAIC, is a retired Infantry Soldier, a former player for the Fort Benning Doughboys and a former member of the Army martial arts team.

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas

Football is all about aggression. Martial arts are all about self-discipline.

Real life — a successful life — means striking a balance between the two, said retired Sgt. 1st Class John Marks, who competed with the Army's martial arts team and played linebacker for the Fort Benning football team, the Doughboys, in the early '80s, when the team competed against the likes of Georgia Tech, Florida and Bear Bryant's Crimson Tide.

The 6-foot-1-inch, 227-pound combat veteran said he honed his physical strength on the football field long before he joined the Army in 1977. He made the all-state team in high school and walked on as a freshman at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach, Fla.

Martial arts came later in 1980. Marks took to the sport quickly, he said, earning his black belt in Chinese goju in less than two years.

"People think in martial arts you train to kick someone's butt," said Marks, a senior engineer with SAIC, "but it's really about learning to control yourself and walk away when you can walk away. You learn to be patient in dealing with people."

"Mental toughness," Marks calls it, and that, along with his faith in God, carried him through the darkest days of his life. In 1998, Mark's 15-year-old daughter, Bianca, died after being struck by a car while crossing the street after a chapel service on Fort Benning.

To heal, Mark's sister said, he'd have to forgive the young man who killed his daughter. He followed her advice and befriended the man.

"I heard so many people say I should sue him or hurt him," Mark said. "And all those things went through my mind. The tough side of me wanted to lash out at the guy, but I saw that this kid was hurting even worse than I was. (He) didn't mean to do it. If it was me who made the same mistake, I'd want forgiveness."

So Mark forgave, and it helped him find peace. But it wasn't enough to help the young driver, who committed suicide on the first anniversary of Bianca's death.

"I had no idea how bad he was hurting,"

Soldier hosts backyard volleyball games

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

2nd Lt. Daniel Allen, a former member of the 75th Ranger Regiment volleyball team, said Sgt. 1st Class Josh Marsh's "volleyball paradise" is the area's best kept secret for volleyball players.

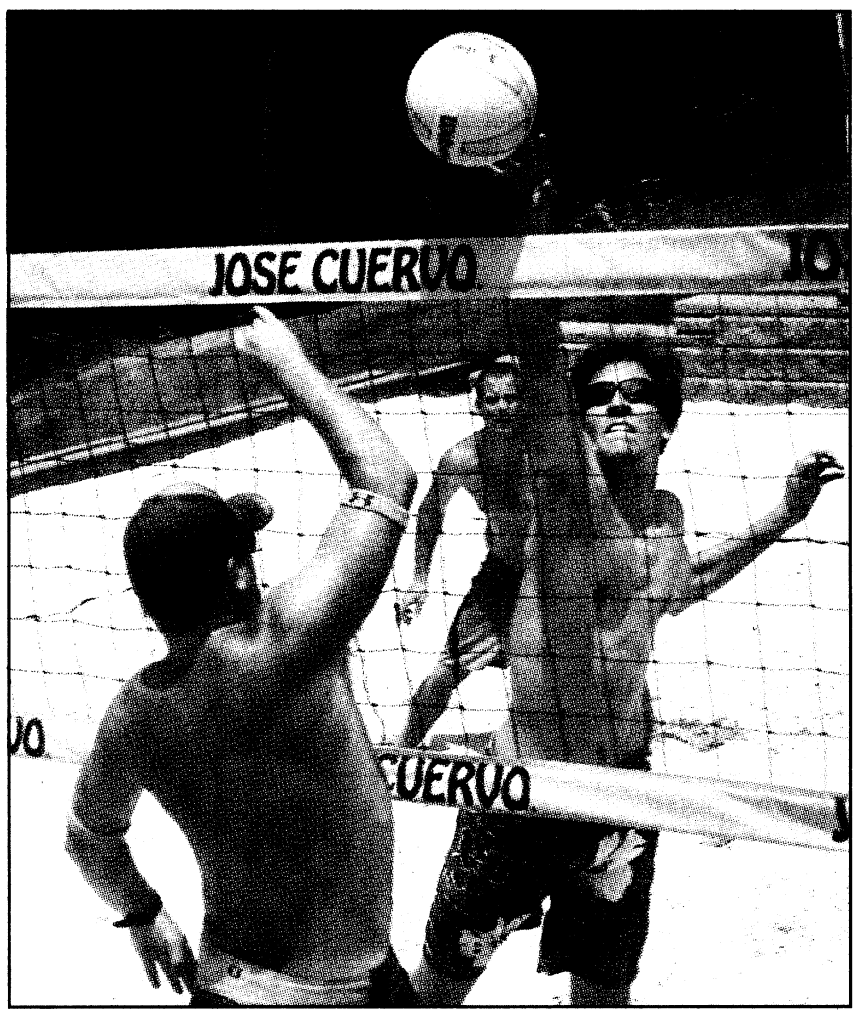
But Marsh's secret paradise, a competition-level volleyball court in his Midland, Ga., backyard, has been open to the public for two years.

"This is the nicest court in town. It has Cuervo nets, deep sand, and it's the same quality you see in the pros," Allen said. "The competition out here is the best in Columbus, and Soldiers who are looking to play need to take advantage of it."

Marsh and his wife Rachel, both competitive volleyball players, have held weekly sand, or "beach," volleyball games and taught players of all ages and skill levels for free since opening the court two years ago.

"We love the competition, it keeps us in shape, and we've made so many friends all over the country from playing," said Marsh, who has played for 15 years. "We love the game, and we want to share it with those who have the same passion for it."

After arriving at Fort Benning in 2002, Marsh, a California native, found very few places to play. He played for a few years at a local apartment complex's court. The idea to build his own court came after the apartment complex began forcing non-residents to leave the court.



Mitchell Thomas IV

Patrick Donnelly tries to tap the ball past Phil Enabnit during a tournament match Saturday at Sgt. 1st Class Josh Marsh's outdoor volleyball court. The court is free and open for pickup games and instruction.

"We had the space, and we had the means to make it happen, so we built it," Marsh said. "Most of the best players in town kept saying they didn't have a decent place to play, so we decided to do it and control everything ourselves."

The Marshes host pickup games for upper-level men's teams on Tuesdays and upper-level women's and coed teams on Wednesdays.

Once a month, they host pool play and double elimination tournaments for cash prizes. The registration fees for tournaments range from $25 to $40 per player.

"The level of competition is as stiff as it gets," said Tommy Roper, who has commuted from Atlanta to compete since the court opened. "I have my kids out here, and we all have fun. Josh opens his swimming pool to us and provides food and drinks. It's a family atmosphere out here."

On Thursdays, the Marshes give basic volleyball instructions for beginners. They also give refresher courses to experienced players and transitional lessons to players who play primarily indoors.

Chris Akers, the director of the Columbus Juniors Volleyball Club girl's indoor team, helps with the classes. Akers said playing on sand helps younger kids develop into better indoor players.

Rangers beat 198th by one

Intramural softball continued with three games Monday at Gowdy Field.

In the first game, the 75th Ranger Regiment edged out Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 198th Infantry Brigade, 7-6. The Rangers took control in the third inning with three runs. 198th brought in four runs in the sixth, but came up short as time expired.

In the second matchup, the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, fell to 203rd Maintenance, 7-11. In the first inning, 203rd scored six runs, including an in-the-park homer by Kateesh McDonald. 3/47 couldn't close the gap in the sixth inning before time expired.

In the final game, the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, knocked off the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, 21-10. After three innings, 2/19 held a one-run lead. In the fourth, 2/19 brought in six runs, making the score 14-7. They shut out 2/58 in the sixth and scored seven runs in the bottom of the inning.

Regular season games are played Mondays through Thursdays at Gowdy and Knappenberger fields. The playoffs will begin Aug. 4.

Express shut out in local tournament

The Fort Benning Express women's travel softball team went 0-2 in the ninth annual Lady Pirates Open Softball Tournament Saturday and Sunday in Phenix City. It was the first local tournament for the first-year team.

The Heartbreakers brought in eight runs to close out the game in the fifth, winning by the 10-run rule.

In their bracket play matchup Sunday, the Express was eliminated after putting up a solid offensive effort against the Buena Vista Coot Quarter.

After the Coot Quarter took a 13-6 lead in three innings, Hallingquest crushed a two-run homer in the fourth. The Coot Quarter brought in three more runs in the sixth before the game was called for time.

The Express will compete in the 2008 USSSA Military World Tournament Aug. 14-17 in Kissimmee, Fla.

Fired customer wonders what to do next

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE
Tom and Ray Magliozzi

I have been taking my cars for repairs and service to the same repair/tire shop for more than 10 years. The last time I went in for an oil change, the shop manager called me aside.

He said, "You've been coming in here for years for oil changes and so on, but I notice you have a brand-new set of tires and you didn't buy them from me, and I'd like to know why."

He was visibly upset, so I was very careful to say that it was just a matter of price, and that I had bought tires from him in the past.

He then got very upset and said, "Well, then you can let that other guy do your oil changes from now on, too." And he stormed off.

I felt like I'd been caught cheating on my wife. (NOT that I actually know what that feels like, of course). Why did he throw me out of his shop?

Can't I shop around for tires? The worst part is, now I have to find a new shop that I can trust.

— Peter

TOM: Geez, Peter. Your mechanic does not have what we refer to in the shop as "good heapside manner."

RAY: He was doing fine until he got visibly upset and fired you as a customer.

TOM: I think it was perfectly OK for him to inquire as to why you didn't buy the tires from him. Maybe that would have produced some useful information for him. Maybe you would have said, "I didn't know you sell tires," and he could have told you that he does, and taken steps to make sure other customers know that.

RAY: And if you said it was due to price, he could have considered lowering his prices or responded by saying, "Well, since you're a longtime customer, I'd be happy to give you a discount and match anyone else's price, so I hope you'll think of me next time you need tires." That would have been fine, right?

TOM: Or he might have said, "That's true, I can't compete with those big tire places on price, but since I see your car regularly, I can keep an eye on your tires for you, rotate them regularly and replace one if anything goes wrong." That would have an acceptable response too, right?

RAY: I can sympathize with the guy, to some extent. He probably feels like he's been good to you through the years, and he wishes you had at least called him and said: "Frank, I need tires, but they cost 10 bucks less per tire at Tires R Us. Is there anything you can do for me, or should I just get them over there?"

TOM: He just handled the situation poorly. So, now you have two choices, Peter.

You can call him up and say: "Frank, listen, I'm sorry about buying my tires elsewhere. And I assume you were just having a bad day. I've been a customer of yours for a long time, and I'd like to keep being your customer if we can get past this."

If he truly was just having a bad day — if he was unscrewing a spark plug, stripped the threads, dropped his wedding ring into the cylinder, and then went to the restroom and accidentally wiped himself with 100-grit sandpaper that day, he'll have a chance to apologize and get a good customer back.

RAY: Or, if you don't want to do that or don't think you should have to, you can go to our Web site, www.cartalk.com, and look at the Mechanics Files. Enter your ZIP code, and you'll get a list of nearby shops that other readers and listeners of ours have personally recommended. Good luck, Peter.

BASS Club stresses sportsmanship, conservation

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

While deployed in Iraq in 2003, retired Sgt. 1st Class Chris Cox said, he dreamed about two things — being with his family and bass fishing.

"When I'm in my boat bass fishing, I shut off my cell phone, and it's straight peace and quiet," Cox said. "If you want to talk to me, you have to swim to the boat.

"The thought that I would be back home fishing kept me sane while I was deployed."

Cox is one of 43 members of the Benning BASS Club, an organization that promotes education and sportsmanship, said Sgt. 1st Class Randy Duncan, the president of the club, which was founded in 1972.

"This organization has done so much for all of us over the years. We come together as men and women with the common desire to teach and learn new ways to fish," said Duncan, who's been a member for eight years.

The members meet biweekly to exchange ideas and techniques on all aspects of catch and release bass fishing. They compete in fishing tournaments every month.

Winners are determined after members weigh their best five catches after eight hours on the water. The entry fee is $15 for a one-day and $30 for a two-day excursion.

Members can qualify for state tournaments based on their yearly performances.

But more important than the competition is the club's contributions to the environment and the community, Duncan said. The club holds two charity tournaments annually, and they donate all proceeds to various local organizations.

Club members also conduct fishing rodeos to teach kids bass fishing skills.

In January, the Benning BASS Club formed the Benning Junior BASS Club.

Like the adults, the kids compete in tournaments, participate in conservation projects and conduct fishing derbies on post.

"When the kids help teach other kids who may have never fished before, it helps with the growth of the sport," said Command Sergeant Maj. John Burns, the director of the Junior BASS Club.

At present, kids must be family members of Benning BASS Club members.

Burns said the club will soon open to all children, although a member of the Benning BASS Club must sponsor the child.

Club dues for each child are $1 a month. The cost for tournament participation is $10.

Duncan said the addition of the Junior BASS Club helps the Benning BASS Club keep its focus on the future of the sport.

"I have been involved with fishing my whole life," Duncan said. "I have competed on the regional level, I have fished on pro tournaments and have bettered myself because of my involvement with the club. A lot of kids today don't know or care about fishing, so to see the look on my sons' faces when they fish makes it all worth while."

The Benning BASS Club is open to active-duty Soldiers, retirees, veterans, family members and DoD Civilians.

For more information on the Benning BASS Club or the Junior BASS Club, call 706-545-8825 or visit www.benningbassclub.com.

Skating safety classes offered every Saturday

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

Yamil Collazo, the coach for the local GT Speed skating team, conducts skating safety classes every Saturday from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m. at Jam Skate Center in Columbus. The classes are for skaters of all ages and experience levels.

Students learn basic skills, including what Collazo refers to as the "three Ss of skating" — starting, stopping and standing.

"Many people have no idea that there is a correct way to do basic things like standing on roller skates," said Collazo, who has taught the classes for 20 years. "You are going to fall, and there's no way around it.

"But you have to learn to fall in a way that protects you."

Beginners learn to control themselves on skates by playing games and performing drills.

They are also taught the proper ways to wear protective gear, including helmets and pads.

After the beginner's course, students can participate in the more advanced outdoor class.

Stacey White said the safety classes provide her peace of mind.

"My son has split two helmets while skating," White said.

"If he didn't learn how to wear his helmet properly, he could have had serious brain injuries. It is such a relief knowing that safety comes first with these classes."

Collazo said common sense and education are the best means for preventing injuries while skating.

"I'm an advocate of roller skating," he said. "I feel it's my responsibility to the community to be a safety officer."

Saturday classes are $6. Outdoor classes are free. New participants can skate free the first time if they bring a copy of this article.

for more information, go to www.gtspeed.com.

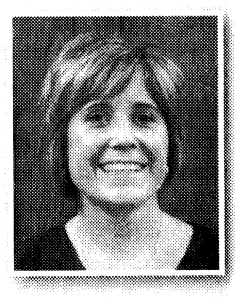
FIT FACTS

MWR FITNESS DIRECTOR
Lori Smith

I want to talk a bit about workout clothing. There are so many different options, it can get very confusing to know what's best for you.

Whether you're an athlete who endures constant, tough workouts or a "regular" who just enjoys staying active, you need the right clothing with the right fabrics and the right size. It's no fun to work out if your clothes and gear let you down. Plus, if you look good, that's a boost to your ego as well.



There are several things you have to take into consideration when choosing exercise clothes.

Let's start with temperature. In an air-conditioned exercise room, your temperature may fluctuate. You may get hot and sweaty as you exercise, then get chilled again when you cool down. When you leave air conditioned areas and walk to the car, you'll either be freezing or too hot. For all these reasons, layering is the answer to your workout wardrobe needs. You can probably stay comfortable with a pair of lightweight pants or shorts, a T-shirt, thick, absorbent socks and a sweatshirt or long sleeved shirt to prevent chills. I like to wear a T-shirt over my workout clothes, so I can take it off before my workout and put it back on after I cool down.

Cotton is an excellent fabric for exercise clothes because it is absorbent, comes in a huge variety of thicknesses and is easy to care for. Some of the new fabrics include moisture "wicking" material, which moves perspiration away from the body and into the outer layer of the clothing. Cotton has some natural wicking action, but it doesn't have the feel of some of the new synthetic blends. Cotton also tends to hold moisture, whereas wicking fabrics dry quickly. Discount stores, such as Wal-Mart and Target, sell inexpensive workout gear, so check these out before investing in high-end clothing.

Always choose comfortable clothes that stretch and bend with you. Try on athletic apparel and then try some of the activities you will be doing, such as stretching. Ideally, whatever you choose to wear will not only make you look wonderful, but will keep you comfortable during your workout.

Of course, you need shoes designed for the activity you are doing. Running shoes, for example, will not give you the lateral support you need in an aerobics class.

Remember, everyone has different tastes. You have to feel good to look good. Make sure you are comfortable in what you wear, and your workouts won't be so, well, uncomfortable.

TRANSITIONS FROM COMBAT WORKSHOP

SPECIAL WORKSHOP FOR COMBAT SOLDIERS & FAMILIES

AUGUST 4 - AUGUST 15

Are you a combat soldier or the spouse of a combat soldier? Are you and your family suffering the effects of combat trauma? If so, I'm facilitating a workshop for you and your family. I'll teach you about the impact of combat and a technique that can help heal the resulting pain and wounded relationships. Three international trauma specialists will join me in conducting this workshop.

The ten workshop sessions will be offered In late afternoons, evenings and weekends, outside of duty hours. The soldiers will participate in 7 sessions, the spouses in 4 sessions, and the whole family in 1 session and couples in 1 session. The location will be at the Columbus Airport Hotel (5351 Sidney Simons Blvd.). Childcare will be provided.

This offer will be limited to 40 soldiers and their families. The cost is $20 for entire workshop. Call 706-323-6123 for details and to register.

Sgt. 1st Class Josh Marsh, pictured here at the net, hosts volleyball games in his backyard in Midland, Ga.

Court: Open to local players

"The sand is huge in helping with conditioning, and you play with less people on the court," Akers said. "All high school volleyball players should play in sand, and learning on a court like Josh's is ideal."

Rachel said volleyball gives women an opportunity to stay involved in team sports as they get older.

"A lot of sports that women played in high school don't transfer well into their adult life," she said. "If they are cheerleaders, they can't continue it after college, and basketball can be tough on the body because of the playing surface. Playing beach volleyball is easier on the joints and knees than the hard gym floor. Whether you're male or female, 7 or 70, you can play and enjoy volleyball if you have some athletic ability."

Roger Sanford, a 53-year-old claims examiner in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate and former national-level player, said playing at the Marshes' court for the last two years has kept him in shape.

"There was a time when I had a really good vertical jump, and I could hit the ball really hard, but as you get older, you learn to play smarter," said Sanford, who also officiates volleyball for local high schools and Division II colleges in the state.

"It's a very technical sport, and you can continue to play it well into your later years. You just have to learn to change your game."

Marsh, who played on the Maneuver Captain's Career Course team that won the Commander's Cup in intramural volleyball last year, said one of his main goals is to spread the word to Soldiers.

"There are a lot of guys on post who are talented players, but with the turnover rate and Soldiers being sent to other posts, the talent pool gets diminished," Marsh said. "I want Soldiers who play the game to know that we have the place for them to compete at a high level."

For more information, call Marsh at 706-587-3576 or visit http://marshvolleyballparadise.spaces.live.com

Mark: 'I could tell that uniform meant something'

Mark said. "The entire ordeal was a learning experience about forgiveness. I don't know where I'd be if I hadn't followed (my sister's) advice."

His sister Elaine, his spiritual mentor, lost her battle with cancer eight years ago. With both his parents and Elaine gone, he took it upon himself to offer the kind of spiritual guidance and support she once offered to anyone in need. Younger sister Angela said he's filled Elaine's shoes quite nicely.

"John is such an amazing man," Angela said. "With all of these sudden losses, we all suffered. But as a family, we found strength in God. Elaine helped John in so many ways, and the strength he got from her has spread throughout our whole family."

Mark joined the Army when he was 18, after admiring a cousin who returned home from a tour in Germany.

"I saw how my family looked at him. They were so proud," he said. "And he was proud. I could tell that uniform meant something. I wanted to have that same look, and I wanted people to look at me the same way."

Angela said her brother succeeded. His family is very proud of his service, but even more proud of the Godly man he has become.

"Through all the tough times, he has become a better person," she said. "Nothing but God can help a person grow that much. I look at John very highly, and he's proven, as long as God's in his life, he can't go wrong."

Mark and his wife Peggy have a son, John Alec, an engineering major at Georgia Tech, and a daughter, Jasmin, who will graduate with a degree in journalism from Georgia State in November.

SPORTS BRIEFS

ON POST

GOLF SCRAMBLE

The next CG Golf Scramble is Thursday at the Fort Benning Golf Course. The cost is $25 if paid before the day of the event or $30 the day of the event. The fee covers the cost of cart and green fees, two mulligans, food and prizes.

For more information or to register, stop by the Fort Benning Golf Course or call 706-687-1940.

YOUTH SPORTS REGISTRATION

Registration for cheerleading, (6- to 13-year-olds), football (6- to 13-year-olds), and soccer (3- to 13-year-olds) will take place Aug.4-29 at Building 359 on Baltzell Avenue. Fees vary for each sport. Walk-in registration is available from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m, but afternoon registration requires an appointment. For more information, call 706-545-3582.

COACHES' MEETINGS

There will be a meeting for Commander's Cup flag football coaches at noon Aug. 6 at Gowdy Stadium. At 1 p.m. the same day, Commander's Cup Golf Competition coaches will meet at the golf course.

Coaches should bring their rosters to the meetings. For more information, call 706-984-1994 or 706-617-4622.

ARCHERY COMPETITIONS

There will be several archery competitions at Uchee Creek Aug. 7-10. The Fort Benning Cup kicks off the competitions. The five-person team must include two active-duty Soldiers from a major subordinate command and can be completed with any authorized user of Fort Benning and a professional archer. The Real Tree ASA Pro/Am Classic will take place Aug. 8-10 and is open to everybody.

Archery vendors will showcase a variety of bow hunting, archery and target items for sale. There is no entrance fee to watch the competitions. Daily starting times vary from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. For more information visit the FMWR Uchee Creek Archery Club at www.geocities.com/ucheecreekarchery or call 706-681-6995.

QUALIFY FOR THE MILITARY LONG DRIVE CHAMPIONSHIP

Service members can attempt to qualify for the Military Long Drive Championship Aug. 13 at the Follow Me Golf Course. The top long drive competitor will win a $300 Pro Shop gift certificate and advance to the second stage of the competition at Fort Meade, Md. The person who records the longest drive in the Southeast region wins an all-expenses-paid trip to compete in the military division of the RE/MAX Long Drive Championship, Oct. 23 in Mesquite, Nev. The service member who hits the longest qualifying drive during the championship will win $10,000 and be featured on ESPN's coverage of the event.

The $10 entry fee entitles competitors to six balls. The Fort Benning Golf Course will also award prizes to the second and third place finishers. More information about the Cadbury Schweppes-sponsored Military Long Drive Competition can be found by calling the Fort Benning Golf Course at 706-687-1940, or visit www.benningmwr.com and click on the Long Drive ad link.

ANNUAL HUNTING, FISHING OPEN HOUSE SET

Outdoor Recreation will host the annual Hunting, Fishing and Recreation Open House at 5 p.m. Aug. 27 at the Uchee Creek Activity Center. Information on Fort Benning's hunting opportunities and regulations will be available. Raffle tickets will be sold for $2.50. The grand prize is a $1,000 gift card to an outdoor recreation and hunting store. Other prizes include a Matthew Outback compound bow, a fishing package consisting of rod, reel, knife and tackle box, and dinner for two with a free two-night stay at the Destin Army Recreation Area. For more information, call 706-545-9636.

FITNESS CENTER CHILD CARE

Smith Fitness Center has extended the on-site child care hours. New hours are 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The cost is $3 per child per hour. For more information, call 706-545-4388.

GOLF CART RENTAL RATES

The price of an 18-hole golf cart rental at the Fort Benning Golf Course is $13 per rider. The nine-hole rate of $8 per rider will remain the same.

Active-duty sergeants and below playing fees are $6 for nine holes and $9 for 18 holes. Active-duty staff sergeants and above rates are $10 for nine holes and $18 for 18 holes. For more information, call 706-681-6999.

HARVEST REPORTING

Hunters are reminded that all deer, turkeys, hogs, doves, squirrels and quail harvested on Fort Benning must be reported using the TELTRACK Hunter Control System by calling 706-545-8387 and selecting menu item number 4.

EAR TAGS

Auburn University is conducting a study of the feral pigs on Fort Benning to understand their population size, reproductive rates, movement patterns and food habits.

This information will help determine what impacts feral pigs have on habitat, wildlife populations and military training.

Pig hunters, please report the ear tag number, ear tag color, date harvested and general location of harvest to the Conservation Branch.

Several pigs have been fitted with radio-tracking collars to help determine habitat use.

Please attempt to identify and avoid harvesting collared pigs.

If a collared pig is harvested or found, please return the collar to Conservation Branch, First Division Road, Building 5884, Harmony Church.

For more information, call 706-544-7079, 706-544-7516 or 706-544-7319.

$40 BOUNTY FOR FERAL PIGS

Fort Benning Conservation Branch is offering a $40 bounty to hunters who harvest feral pigs on post.

Licensed hunters, including active-duty Soldiers, retirees and civilians who harvest pigs, will be paid after turning in the pig's tail. A data sheet must accompany the tail when collecting funds.

Tails and sheets are turned in at Building 5884 on Tuesdays from noon to 2 p.m. and on the last Friday of every month from noon to 2 p.m.

For more information, call Bobby Toon at 706-536-6021.

FLY FISHING FOR VETS

The nonprofit organization Fly Fishing For Vets will provide fly fishing excursions for Soldiers wounded in combat.

The all-expenses-paid trip includes fishing lessons, equipment and lodging.

The trip is available to active-duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers, assigned to the Warrior Transition Battalion.

For information, call Ken Griffin at 678-993-9896 or Darlene Hines at 706-545-9636.

ALL-ARMY SPORTS

The Department of the Army Sports Office has an online application for the All-Army Sports Program. Go to www.armymwr.com and select the Recreation and the Army Sport link.

Soldiers can go directly to armysports.cfsc.army.mil. Those interested in applying can visit Smith Fitness Center and talk to Ken Wetherill or Lori Smith before submitting applications.

For more information, call 706-545-4300.

POOL TOURNAMENTS

Afterhours has weekly pool tournaments every Wednesday, and participants could win cash prizes. Call 706-689-0887.

MALL BOWLING CENTER

Open bowling is 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday to Thursday, 8 a.m. to 1 a.m. Friday, 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. Saturday, noon to 9 p.m. Sunday and 1 to 9 p.m. on federal holidays. Galactic bowling is from 6 p.m. to close Friday and Saturday.

For more information, call 706-544-2233.

ROCK WALL

The Smith Fitness Center rock wall is open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. weekdays and from opening to a half hour before closing time on weekends.

Certified instructors will help you get started.

GOLF RATES FOR SENIORS

Golfers 62 and older pay $370 for the entire year at the Fort Benning Golf Course. For more information, call 706-687-1940.

FITNESS CLASSES

Smith Fitness Center offers a number of fitness classes, including step, yoga, circuit training and water aerobics. Evening classes are offered on Monday and Wednesday from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. The class will be a combination of kick boxing, strength and cardio training. Pick up your copy of the fitness schedule at Smith or e-mail Lori Smith at lori.smith6@us.army.mil.

Chaplains offer array of services C6

CYS Back to School Bash set for Aug 1

First 500 will get free backpacks and supplies

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

Child and Youth Services will host the annual Back to School Bash from 9 a.m. to noon Aug. 1 at the Youth Services Complex on McIver Street.

The bash will be the "last summer hurrah" before the kids start school, said Linda Laine, assistant project officer.

The children can make arts and crafts, play basketball or horseshoes or play on inflatables. Or they can test their strength in a tug o' war.

One of the highlights of the event will be the dunk tank, Laine said. Students can dunk the CYS sports and Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation staff. If they successfully dunk a staff member, they will get a prize.

The first 500 military children from kindergarten to the 12th grade will receive a backpack full of school supplies, including pens, pencils, notebooks and paper.

There will also be a raffle for iPods, DVD players, bicycles and helmets.

The event is free and snacks will be provided. For more information, call 706-545-3062.

'I found my way'

Post Chaplain's secretary to retire after serving more than 40 years

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

God uses ordinary people.
He chooses people just like me and you,
Who are willing to do just as He commands.
God uses people that will give Him all,
No matter how small your all may seem to you;
Because little becomes much
As you place it in the Master's hand.

— Ordinary People, by Danniebelle Hall

Danniebelle Hall "spoke" to Barbara Vining in the words to her song Ordinary People. Vining found validation in the assertion that God uses people just like her.

"I heard that song, it was sometime in the mid-70s, and it really spoke to me. It says that God uses ordinary people in ordinary places," she said. "I was that ordinary person, and God wanted to use me here."

"Here" is the Fort Benning Chaplains Office, where Vining has served more than 40 years, most of them as secretary to a succession of installation chaplains, 18 of them in all. Here she has taken care of the chaplains, so they can take care of the Soldiers. Here she has taken care of countless family members — sometimes 10 a day — who call seeking reassurance that their Soldier will be OK.

Since May 1967, Vining has wanted nothing more than to serve.

"That's what I am, a servant. That's where I'm most comfortable. I never considered myself a leader," said Vining, who entered civil service in 1966 and spent five months at the AG Replacement Center before landing a job as a clerk typist at the Chaplains Office. Back then, Vining was Barbara Tindall, 21 years old and engaged to a young man named Kenneth Vining, a chemist with the R.C. Cola Company. He wasn't thrilled when Barbara left her position as clerk at the Medical Center to work on post, surrounded by young, single Soldiers. At first, Barbara wasn't thrilled either.

"I was scared to death," she said. "I remember that morning, on my way to work, I thought 'What in the world am I doing?' I knew nothing about the military. I got lost that afternoon going home. But I found my way. And I've been very happy here ever since."

See 'Ordinary,' C5

Barbara Vining will retire Aug. 1 in a ceremony at The Infantry Center Chapel, a place that's near and dear to her heart. "TIC was the first chapel I ever went in. I had been here two weeks when I got a call — they were looking for someone to play the organ at a funeral that same day. I played the organ at my church, so I offered. I walked in there and I couldn't believe my eyes. I just stood there. I'd never seen anything so beautiful as TIC Chapel."

House of Heroes needs team captains, volunteers

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

House of Heroes, a nonprofit organization that repairs houses of retired military and public service veterans and their spouses, is looking for volunteer team captains and team members. The volunteers do everything from painting, plumbing and carpentry to yard work, pressure washing and minor construction.

The organization was established in 1999. When Rev. Wayne Anthony, founder, conducted funerals at Fort Benning, he noticed the decline in attendance at veterans' funerals, as reported on the House of Heroes Web site. And he noticed that aging veterans were having trouble maintaining their homes. It was after this realization that Anthony created the organization.

House of Heroes has repaired 275 houses since 1999. In September, volunteers will repair as many as 45 houses.

Jay Brown has volunteered for House of Heroes since 2004. Although no experience is necessary, the Fort Benning contractor does it all — carpentry, plumbing, electrical work, cleaning and painting.

"House of Heroes is a way to say thank you to the men and women who have volunteered service to the community and the nation," he said.

Brown said he has a passion for helping others. Before he joined House of Heroes, he repaired elders' homes and helped them determine if they were getting a good deal on air conditioning, heating and electrical services.

Last year, Brown was the captain for a House of Heroes team. He and 20 volunteers helped Era Mae Patrick, the widow of retired Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Patrick, a Korean and Vietnam veteran. Patrick's home had erosion damage outside, water damage inside and light switches that didn't work.

"The most rewarding part of it is to see the homeowner's face after you repair their house," Brown said.

There are still openings for team captains and team members, said Janie Pearson, Fort Benning's House of Heroes liaison. Captains will be responsible for overseeing the work, scheduling a work day and ensuring all materials are at the site. The materials are bought using donations from companies and individuals. Each team will be in charge of repairing one house in Phenix City or Columbus.

To volunteer, call Pearson at 706-545-1942 or e-mail Janie.Pearson@us.army.mil. Those interested in being captains must attend a training session from 3 to 5 p.m. Tuesday at Classroom 4A, Infantry Hall. For more information, go to www.houseofheroes.org.

There's help for seniors raising grandchildren

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

> "We raised our children and thought we were done. This is my second time around, and God has given me the chance to do it well — or even better."
>
> — Haydee Dukes

More and more children are being raised by a family member other than a parent — about 7.5 percent of families nationwide. In Georgia, that statistic jumps to 10 percent. Many of these caregivers are older than 60 and retired.

Haydee Dukes is one of them. She and her husband, a former Fort Benning Soldier, took in their daughter's children more than 10 years ago. Since his death last year, Dukes has been raising the family herself.

"He was the backbone, the strength that held us up," said Dukes of her husband. "He was my encourager; he supported the children in their activities; he gave us wisdom and our financial security. Now, in a way, I'm a single parent."

Dukes has many roles to fill, from referee to counselor to president of the parent teacher organization. Despite its challenges, caring for her grandkids is a blessing, she said.

"There are times when I want to throw my hands up and say, 'God, how did I get myself into this?' Then there are times, like after my husband passed away, that having these kids has uplifted me," she said. "They've brought me into different avenues of life that I probably would have never walked in. The good outweighs the bad."

Dukes relies on prayer, a strong network of friends and, for the past three years, the Kinship Care program, a resource for relative caregivers.

Sponsored by the Area Agency on Aging, the program covers 16 counties, including Harris, Muscogee and Chattahoochee. Laura Walker, wife of Command Sgt. Maj. Matt Walker, heads up the program.

Most of the people involved here are grandparents, she said. They come from all walks of life and are raising their grandchildren through a variety of circumstances, but "the common thing that binds these grandparents is that they all are doing this because they love their families. We're just trying to provide as much information as possible to make their jobs easier."

Walker offers guidance on guardianship options, immunization requirements for school, and state and federal aid. She can also refer caregivers to legal assistance or medical providers.

The local support group meets the second Tuesday of the month at the Columbus Public Library on Macon Road.

"It provides a forum for grandparents to talk about what they're going through," Walker said.

Groups meet at 10:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. Guest speakers address a range of topics.

"It's not like it was raising our children a generation ago," Dukes said.

Actor visits wounded warriors, screens movie

D.B. Sweeney visits Soldiers, gives them coins

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Actor and producer D.B. Sweeney visited wounded warriors at Fort Benning Friday and treated them to a free screening of his movie Two Tickets to Paradise at Wynnsong.

Sweeney went to the Warrior Transition Battalion and the Soldier and Family Assistance Center where he signed autographs and handed out coins he designed. The coins, similar to military coins commanders give out, were Sweeney's way of thanking Soldiers for their service, he said.

Master Sgt. Marcus Jefferson, who was wounded in Iraq last July and is now an operations NCO at WTB, said Sweeney's coins took his visit "to the next level," because coins are usually associated with visiting military dignitaries — not celebrities.

Sweeney took advantage of the computers at the Soldier and Family Assistance Center to check on his flight arrangements, and spoke to Sgt. Lori Oetzel. She called her mother in New York while Sweeney, a New Yorker, spoke to the sergeant's mom.

Later, Sweeney met Soldiers and family members at the theater, chatting with them and signing autographs before the movie started.

Oftentimes, the military doesn't get the recognition it deserves, he said, and his visit gave him the opportunity to recognize the contributions of Soldiers and their families.

"You make me proud to be an American," he said.

Sweeney has starred in numerous films, including Fire in the Sky, The Cutting Edge, Eight Men Out and Stiletto. He plays a colonel in Spike Lees' Miracle at St. Anna, a movie about Soldiers from the 92nd Infantry Division. The movie will be released in September. He has a television drama series debuting later this year on cable's Starz called Crash, inspired by the Academy Award-winning Best Motion Picture of 2006.

Brenda Donnell

Actor D.B. Sweeney, center, greets family members and Soldiers at the Wynnsong Friday. Sweeney visited wounded warriors assigned to the Warrior Transition Battalion and treated them to a free showing of his movie Two Tickets to Paradise. During his visit, Sweeney thanked the Soldiers for their service.

ASK THE JUDGE

OFFICE OF STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE
Anthony Tempesta

Q: I was involved in a contested child custody case last year, and I paid several thousand dollars in attorney's fees. Can I deduct those costs?

A: No, you cannot deduct the cost of legal expenses in that case.

Certain personal legal expenses are deductible, when they are incurred attempting to produce or collect taxable income, or paid in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax.

If you are audited by the Internal Revenue Service, for example, and you hire an attorney to represent you, those legal expenses may be deductible.

Personal legal expenses may also be deductible if they are related to either doing or keeping your job, such as those you paid to defend yourself against criminal charges arising out of your trade or business.

A school teacher accused of striking a student for example, may be able to deduct the costs of defending himself in a criminal prosecution.

Personal legal expenses cannot be deducted for cases involving child custody actions, the breach of promise to marry, civil or criminal charges resulting from a personal relationship, damages for personal injury (except certain whistle blower claims and unlawful discrimination claims), preparation of a title (or defense or perfection of a title), property claims or property settlement in a divorce, or the costs of preparing a Last Will and Testament.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division at 706-545-3281.

MONSTER

'Ordinary': Servant retires

So much so that she turned down a number of opportunities to move into higher paying positions throughout the years, positions that might be considered more prestigious in some circles. She even went so far as to interview for a job with the post command group. "I don't know what I'm doing here," she told her interviewer. "I'm really happy where I'm at."

Barbara planned to retire in 2000 when she turned 55. Kenny had retired four years prior, and the two looked forward to their golden years with their children, Kenya, Kara and Kenny Jr., and their seven grandchildren.

But as the year approached, Barbara said, something held her back. She felt the need to keep working and did so with Kenny's blessing, figuring to work another three years, until June of 2003. Kenneth died suddenly in January 2003.

"That was it — that was the something that kept me here, I just didn't know it," Barbara said. "After Kenneth died, I needed to stay busy and to have that daily contact. I needed this job and these people. They just wrapped their arms around me and took care of me and got me through it. They were so wonderful. They've always been so wonderful. That's what kept me here."

In four decades, Barbara has seen a lot of change in the post's chaplaincy program. Her office has moved nine times since she first settled in with a manual typewriter in Building 35, which is now the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. In 1967, there were no ministry programs specifically for youth, no family life programs, fewer chaplains, fewer services and more chapels.

But some things haven't changed. Being part or privy to the death notification process has never gotten easier. Back then, with the war raging in Vietnam, the process of notifying and ministering to the families of fallen Soldiers was unrefined. The same can't be said these days, Barbara said, but dealing with the death of a Soldier is still the most sobering aspect of her job.

And then, as now, the chaplains and their assistants became close to Barbara and her family. Most of them stay in touch, and when they pass through town, they often drop in to check on Barbara and the kids.

"That's what I'm going to miss, the people. We're a family. It's a wonderful feeling to be a part of the Army family," Barbara said. She will retire Aug. 1. in a 2 p.m. ceremony at The Infantry Center Chapel on Main Post.

Barbara will be missed terribly, said Chaplain (Col.) Scott Davis, the installation's senior chaplain, who has the unenviable job of finding a replacement for her.

"Not an easy thing to do," Davis said. "She has been the face and voice of the installation Chaplains Office for four decades. She has a servant's heart; you can call on her at the drop of a hat to sing or play at a funeral. And in this office, where propriety and confidentiality is paramount, you can count on Barbara to leave it all right here. She's given so much not only to the chaplains but to this whole community."

Barbara, who will celebrate her 63rd birthday Monday, said her time with the chaplains has been "a gift and a blessing."

"The chaplains and the chaplains' assistants, they always thank me, but you know, I'm the one who's blessed," she said. "I'm so grateful to have known them and worked with them. They've touched my life. I've been given so much more than I gave."

Kinship Care: Offers resources for grandparents

"Having the Kinship Care program helps us. The people who come (to the meetings) support each other with strategies that have worked for them. I think it's one of the great programs that have been designed for grandparents raising grandchildren."

Kinship Care helps financially when possible by hosting holiday parties and giving out school supplies. Money is often a concern, Walker said, since almost half the participants are retired.

Dukes said money is certainly an issue, especially with growing teens in the house, but she's not worried.

"We raised our children and thought we were done," she said. "This is my second time around, and God has given me the chance to do it well — or even better."

Dukes said the program has helped her on this "second" journey. She recommends it to others in similar situations, whether they are resentful, overwhelmed or "just plain afraid."

"I truly believe they will find friendship, support and the answers and solutions to some of the questions and problems they have," she said. "I very, very strongly encourage them to call and not be alone in their circumstances anymore. Together, we can make a difference for people who find themselves in this situation."

For more information, visit the Web site at www.lcrdcaaa.org or call Walker at 706-256-2939.

Spiritual support available for Soldiers, family

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Post chaplains offer a variety of support services for Soldiers and their families. They offer counseling, perform rites such as marriages and christenings and lead religious-based activities.

One of the most important aspects of spiritual support is the worship services, said Chaplain (Col.) Scott Davis, the installation's senior chaplain.

There are 22 worship services held every weekend in seven chapels. Services range in style from contemporary to traditional and represent different faiths and denominations, including Catholic, Protestant, Jewish and Muslim.

"The ultimate goal, what we really want to do as chaplains, is about a growth in spiritual strength," Davis said. "Spiritual strength equals life strength. Spiritual strength gives you that ability to not only handle the stresses of military life but to flourish and succeed, to grow."

There are 46 chaplains serving full-time on post, more than 40 chaplain assistants, 10 chaplains in training and four reserve chaplains. They meet the needs of almost 4,500 worshippers on post, Davis said.

Although all chaplains are available for pastoral support, the Family Life Chaplain Training Center is a great resource for families seeking confidential counseling, Davis said, since the chaplains there specialize in counseling.

A chaplain is also assigned to each unit. They offer advice and act as a liaison between the Soldier and the command. They often host prayer breakfasts and Bible studies for the cadre.

Other weekly faith-based activities, such as youth groups, choirs, Bible studies and men's and women's classes, are organized through the chapels.

Single Soldiers and married couples can take a weekend retreat through the Strong Bonds program. The retreat includes classes on different Army-life related issues. For couples struggling during reintegration, it can strengthen their relationship, Davis said.

Davis said he hopes the spiritual programs on post will continue to grow.

"My hope is that our biggest problem would be not having enough room," he said. "We have some great programs — exciting things going on. If you don't know who else to talk to, talk to a chaplain."

For more information, call 706-545-2288.

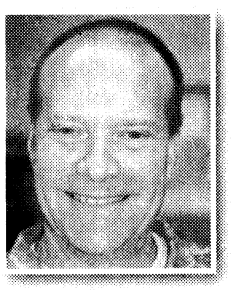
Learn to speak the same language as your spouse

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey



What woman wouldn't love to have the new power cleaning system with the bagless, ergo-gripped vacuum cleaner including the carpet cleaning attachment for her birthday or any other special day?

And what about him? Can you believe that a $15 greeting card with Elizabeth Barrett Browning's How do I love thee? embossed in gold leaf and lace, with the matching lovebird poem keychain got only a glance and grunt before being used to pick the meat out of his teeth after dinner?

What's the problem here? Well, the problem may have to do with the fact that in most relationships, we do not speak the same language.

Guys love things with power and cords. Remember Home Improvement? Power tools are cool. Men love horsepower, bigger and more powerful tools.

I learned the hard way that my wife's desires are not necessarily mine.

Men, here is a tip, do not buy her anything that plugs in (unless she specifically asks for it) on those days that belong to Hallmark.

Women, take no offense if your man doesn't melt after reading the sentimental card you bought for him. Going shopping with you for curtains is not a bonding activity.

I think I finally have it now. When my wife and I first married, I did not want to buy her cards or flowers on Valentine's Day or whenever because she expected it. Boy, was I a fool.

Fortunately, after 27 years of Valentine's days, I have gotten my act together. And part of the dance is knowing how to speak the same language.

Rookies in relationships often make the mistake of giving what they want, not giving what their mate wants — we just don't understand our mate's "language of love." Though there are many languages of love, here are six of the more common ones. Which language does your lover speak?

•The language of time — just being together, hanging out

•The language of encouragement — specific, positive affirmation

•The language of activity — doing something together that's fun and fulfilling

•The language of gifts — thoughtfulness in the form of small romantic purchases

•The language of affection — (not sex, guys) gentle, caring touch that doesn't demand anything

•The language of sex — (not affection, ladies) spontaneous, passionate, unbridled physical playfulness

Again, the key is not to give what you want, but what your spouse wants or needs. Ask your mate what his or her language of love is, and then see if you can speak his or her language in some way, large or small, at least once a day this week.

Want some more information or encouragement on how to speak your mate's language of love or how to help them speak yours? Then come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606 Soldier's Plaza, Dixie Road, or call us at 706-545-1760 to make an appointment.

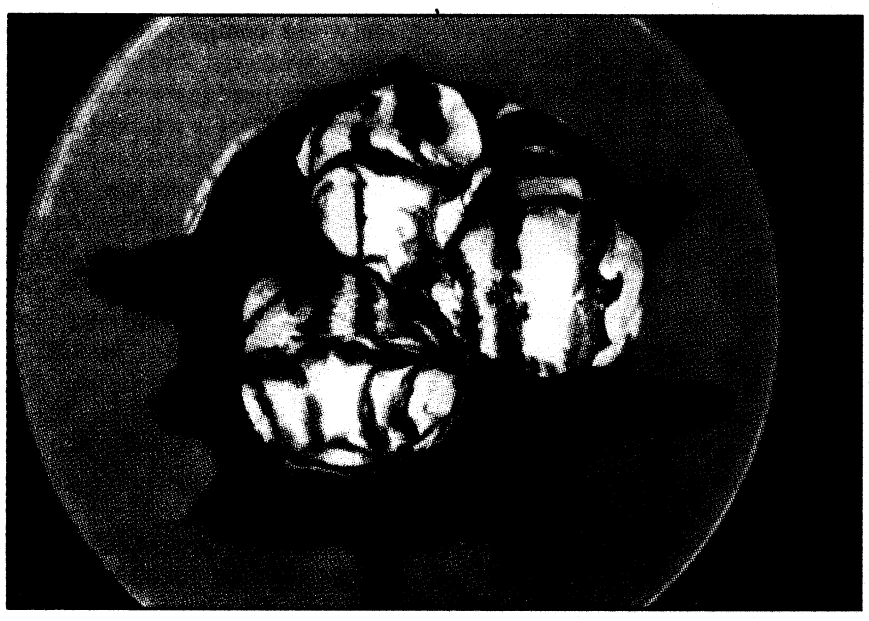
We all scream for ice cream

July is National Ice Cream Month, and like a double dip on a triple digit day, it's going fast

Ice cream, anyone?

July is National Ice Cream Month. Ronald Reagan said so back in 1984. Which is one of the reasons, by golly, he'll go down in history as the best president ever.

Reagan, recognizing that 90 percent of Americans enjoy ice cream (and the rest are Communists), issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with "appropriate ceremonies and activities."



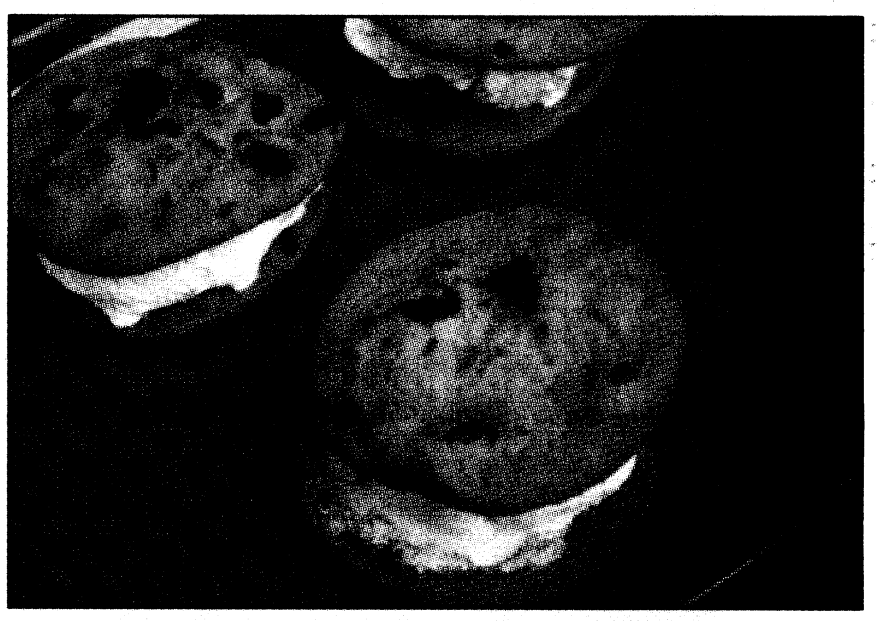
Vanilla with chocolate is the most popular ice cream combination in America, whether it's served in a dish, a cone, or a cup as a chocolate milk shake (that's vanilla ice cream, milk and chocolate syrup — stirred, not shaken).

Americans may be devoted to their ice cream, but we can't claim ownership. Ice cream evolved from a frozen sherbet-like treat in Italy, probably sometime in the 16th century. At or about the same time, the English were experimenting with something they called "cream ice." By 1660, ice cream was available to the general public throughout much of Europe.

The earliest account of ice cream in the New World comes from a letter written in 1744. Records show President George Washington, another true patriot, spent about $200 on ice cream during the summer of 1790. Even Thomas Jefferson had a favorite 18-step recipe for an ice cream treat much like what we know today as Baked Alaska.

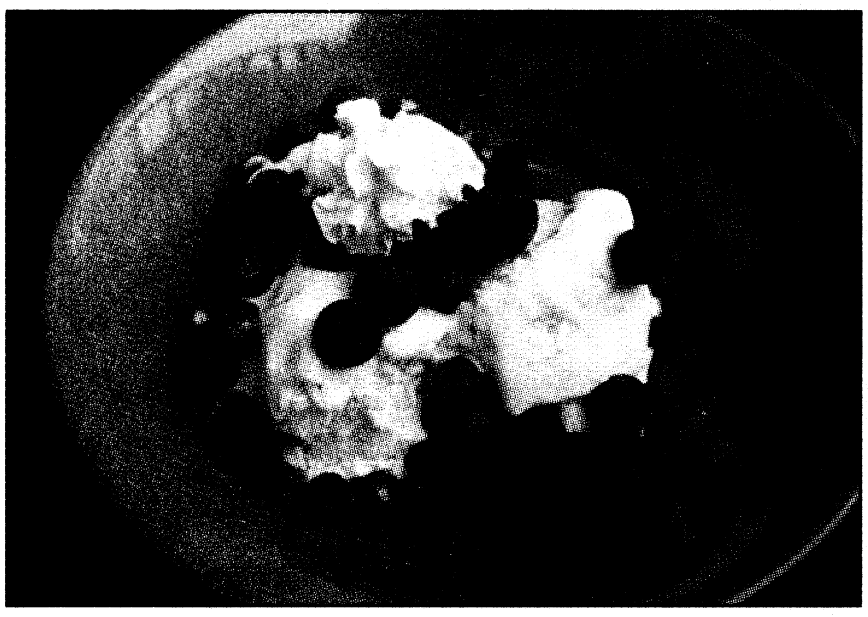
By the mid-1800s, ice cream production was an industry in America, pioneered by a Baltimore milk dealer named Jacob Fussell. Innovations like mechanical refrigeration, electric power and motorized vehicles increased the availability and popularity of the treat.

In the late 19th century, the sinfully good ice cream soda, a favorite at soda fountains shops popping up around the nation, drew criticism from puritans. The rich, decadent treat should not be served on Sundays, they cried. In response, an enterprising soda jerk left out the carbonated water and called his tamer version a Sunday. The crowd went wild. The spelling of the name was eventually changed to "sundae" to remove its association with the Sabbath.



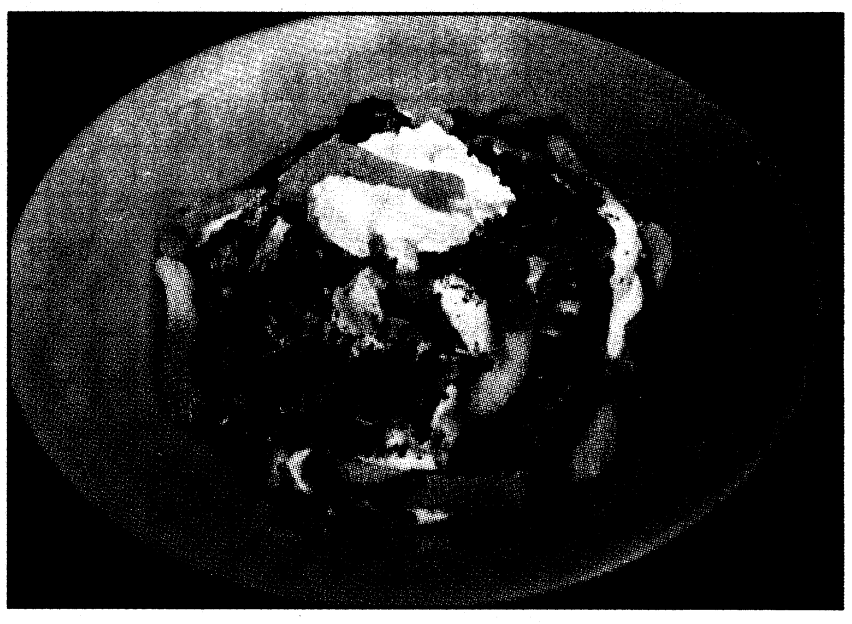
Cookie sandwiches: It doesn't get any easier. Sandwich a scoop of your favorite ice cream between two chilled cookies.

Fruit is still the most popular way to top a dish of ice cream. Aside from that ever-popular cherry, bananas and blueberries top the list of toppers.

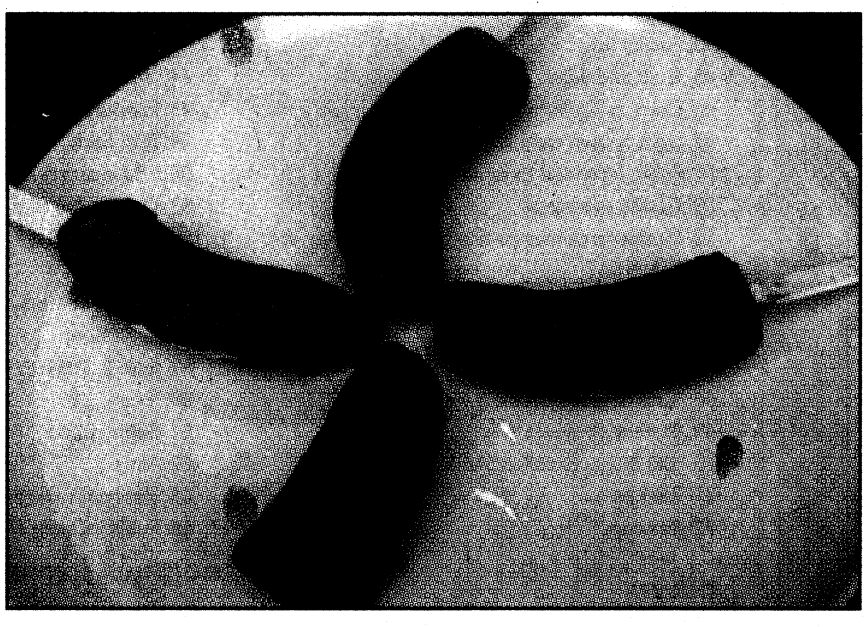


These days, good Americans spend more than $23 million every year on ice cream and ice cream accoutrements, like sprinkles, syrups, cones and such. Vanilla remains the most popular flavor in this country, followed by chocolate, butter pecan, strawberry and chocolate chip mint. Occasionally, we opt for flavors like gingerbread, peppermint, cookie dough or something called "blue moon." You can purchase garlic ice cream in California and haddock-flavored in New York. We are a wild lot.

On this page, you'll find a number of ice cream recipes and serving suggestions you can try at home using foods you might find in your pantry and pipe cleaner. Just kidding.. For more recipes and fun facts about ice cream, go to www.idfa.org.



Dirt sundae: Add gummy worms, crushed Oreos and chocolate syrup to a bowl of ice cream. Gross never tasted so good.



Banana pops: OK, there's actually no ice cream involved in this treat, but it's a great way to make use of chocolate syrup left over from that milkshake recipe. Skewer half a peeled banana with a coated popsicle stick, freeze it and dip it in quick-hardening syrup.

OPENING TODAY
STEP BROTHERS

Brennan Huff (Will Ferrell) is a sporadically employed 39-year-old who lives with his mother, Nancy. Dale Doback (John C. Reilly) is a terminally unemployed 40-year-old who lives with his father, Robert. When Robert (Richard Jenkins) and Nancy (Mary Steenburgen) marry and move in together, Brennan and Dale are forced to live with each other as stepbrothers.

Step Brothers is rated R for crude and sexual content and language.

THE X-FILES: I WANT TO BELIEVE

This movie is a stand-alone story in the tradition of some of the show's most acclaimed and beloved episodes and takes the complicated relationship between Fox Mulder (David Duchovny) and Dana Scully (Gillian Anderson) in unexpected directions. Mulder continues his quest for the truth, and Scully, the passionate, ferociously intelligent physician, remains inextricably tied to Mulder's pursuits.

The X-Files: I Want to Believe is rated PG-13 for violent and thematic material.

ALSO PLAYING
THE DARK KNIGHT

The Caped Crusader returns, raising the stakes in his war on crime. In The Dark Knight, Batman (Christian Bale) protects Gotham City from the mad criminal mastermind, the Joker (Heath Ledger). With the help of Lt. Jim Gordon (Gary Oldman) and District Attorney Harvey Dent (Aaron Eckhart), Batman sets out to destroy organized crime in Gotham for good. The three together prove to be effective, but they soon find themselves prey to a rising criminal mastermind known as the Joker, who thrusts Gotham into anarchy and forces the Dark Knight ever closer to crossing the fine line between hero and vigilante.

Michael Caine stars as Alfred Pennyworth and Maggie Gyllenhaal is Rachel Dawes.

The Dark Knight is rated PG-13 for violence.

MAMMA MIA!

Meryl Streep leads an all-star cast, including Pierce Brosnan, Colin Firth and Christine Baranski in the film adaptation of a musical featuring the music of ABBA. A bride-to-be locates three men, one of whom might be her father, and invites them to her wedding on a Greek island.

Mamma Mia! is rated PG-13 for sex-related comments.

SPACE CHIMPS

Three NASA chimps are sent to a far-away galaxy. Two have "The Right Stuff" and the other is a good-natured goofball with the "wrong stuff."

Space Chimps is rated G.

JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH

A science professor's (Brendan Fraser) untraditional hypotheses have made him the laughing stock of the academic community. But on an expedition in Iceland, he and his nephew stumble upon a major discovery that launches them on a thrilling journey deep beneath the Earth's surface, where they travel through never-before-seen worlds and encounter a variety of unusual creatures.

Journey to the Center of the Earth is rated PG for adventure action.

HELLBOY II: THE GOLDEN ARMY

After an ancient truce existing between humankind and the invisible realm of the fantastic is broken, hell on Earth is ready to erupt.

A leader who treads the world above and the one below defies his bloodline and awakens an unstoppable army of creatures.

Now, it's up to the planet's toughest, roughest superhero Hellboy (Ron Perlman) to battle the merciless dictator and his marauders.

His expanding team in the Bureau for Paranormal Research and Defense — pyrokinetic girlfriend Liz (Selma Blair), aquatic empath Abe (Doug Jones) and protoplasmic mystic Johann — will travel between the surface strata and the unseen magical one, where creatures of fantasy become corporeal.

Hellboy II: The Golden Army is rated PG-13 for sci-fi action, violence and language.

MEET DAVE

The man turns out to be a spaceship operated by 100 human-looking aliens who are one-quarter inch tall and seeking a way to save their planet. Complications ensue when their captain falls in love with an Earth woman who's always picked losers for previous romances.

Meet Dave is rated PG for suggestive humor, action and language.

HANCOCK

There are heroes and superheroes, and then there's Hancock (Will Smith). With great power comes great responsibility — everyone knows that — everyone, that is, but Hancock. Edgy, conflicted, sarcastic and misunderstood, Hancock's well-intentioned heroics might get the job done and save countless lives, but always seem to leave jaw-dropping damage in their wake. The public has finally had enough.

Jason Bateman and Charlize Theron star.

Hancock is rated PG-13 for sci-fi action, violence and language.

KITT KITTREDGE: AN AMERICAN GIRL

Aspiring reporter Kit Kittredge (Abigail Breslin) is bright, inquisitive, generous and a natural born leader. But her happy childhood is abruptly interrupted when her father (Chris O'Donnell) loses his car dealership and must leave Cincinnati to look for work. Kit and her mother Margaret (Julia Ormond) are left to manage on their own, growing vegetables, selling eggs and even taking in an assortment of boarders including an itinerant magician, a vivacious dance instructor on the prowl for a husband and a zany mobile librarian.

When a crime spree sweeps Cincinnati, all signs point to the local hobo jungle, where Will and Countee live with a group of their impoverished companions. Kit recruits her friends to help her track down the real culprit.

Kitt Kittredge: An American Girl is rated G.

WALL-E

After hundreds of lonely years of doing what he was built to do as a Waste Allocation Load Lifter Earth-Class, Wall-E (Benjamin Bratt), discovers a new purpose in life, besides collecting knick-knacks, when he meets a sleek search robot named Eve (Elissa Knight) who realizes that Wall-E has stumbled upon the key to the planet's future.

She races back to space to report her findings to the humans who have been awaiting word that it is safe to return home.

Wall-E is rated G.

WANTED

Wes (James McAvoy) is a 25-year-old disaffected, cube-dwelling drone and disengaged slacker. His boss chews him out hourly, his girlfriend ignores him and his life plods on interminably.

There is little for Wes to do but while away the days and die in his slow, clock-punching rut — until he meets a woman named Fox (Angelina Jolie). Wanted also stars Morgan Freeman.

Wanted is rated R for bloody violence, language and sexuality.

GET SMART

Maxwell Smart (Steve Carell) is on a mission to thwart the latest plot for world domination by the evil crime syndicate known as KAOS. When the headquarters of U.S. spy agency Control is attacked and the identities of its agents compromised, the Chief (Alan Arkin) has no choice but to promote his ever-eager analyst Maxwell Smart, who has always dreamt of working in the field alongside stalwart superstar Agent 23 (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson).

Smart is partnered instead with the only other agent whose identity has not been compromised: the lovely-but-lethal veteran Agent 99 (Anne Hathaway).

Get Smart is rated PG-13 for rude humor, violence and language.

THE LOVE GURU

Pitka (Mike Myers) is an American who was left at the gates of an ashram in India as a child and raised by gurus. He moves back to the U.S. to seek fame and fortune. His unorthodox methods are tested when he must settle a rift between Toronto Maple Leafs star hockey player Darren Roanoke (Romany Malco) and his estranged wife.

The Love Guru is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content, language, violence and drug references.

Trails have a natural, uneven surface and require sturdy walking shoes. In case of inclement weather, hikes and walks may be canceled.

The fee is $5 for members and $6 for non-members. Registration required; directions are sent with confirmation letter. For more information, call 800-CALLAWAY or visit www.callawaygardens.com.

Wilderness Survival Training
SATURDAY, AUG 9, AUG 23

Imagine being stranded alone in the wilderness with night approaching. Learn how to build a shelter and make fire by friction at Providence Canyon near Lumpkin, Ga. The training is from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 9 and Aug. 23. The cost of the program is $1 per person. Participants must be 14 or older. Pre-registration is required.

Providence Canyon is one of the seven wonders of Georgia. It has a three-mile hiking trail that circles nine canyons and a seven-mile back country trail. It is located eight miles west of Lumpkin on Highway 39C. A park pass is $3. For more information, call 229-838-6202 or visit www.gastateparks.org.

Sci-Fi under the Stars
SUNDAY

CSU's Coca-Cola Space Science Center, on 701 Front Ave., will screen the 1964 film First Men in the Moon at 9 p.m. Sunday on the center's south lawn.

An adaptation of an H. G. Wells novel, the plot is based on a 1960s United Nations lunar mission that revealed evidence of a moon landing from earth several decades earlier.

The program is free and part of the center's Sci-Fi Under the Stars series. Guests are invited to bring snacks, lawn chairs and bug spray. For more information, call 706-649-1470 or go to http://www.ccssc.org.

Robin Beach at Callaway
TODAY- AUG 10

A white sand beach in the middle of Georgia? Discover it at Robin Lake Beach at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga. Robin Lake has the world's largest, inland, man-made, white sand beach stretching one mile around the 65-acre lake.

Robin Beach is the hub of summer activities like Iceberg Island, a floating water playground as well as miniature golf, table tennis, shuffleboard, beach volleyball, miniature train rides, paddle boats, Rock Wall, Spider Jump and inflatable fun.

Don't miss the Florida State University's Flying High Circus performances. And new this summer is the world's biggest inflatable water slide measuring four stories high.

Summer beach hours through Aug. 8 are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. for swimming, paddle boats, miniature golf, table tennis and shuffleboard.

The train runs from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., but closes for lunch from noon to 1 p.m.

The FSU Flying High Circus performances are at 8 p.m. Mondays and Fridays; 3:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays; 1:30 and 4 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

Housing survey deadline extended

The deadline for the DA housing survey has been extended through the end of the month. The annual survey, which is open to all residents living in post housing, rates their satisfaction with customer service, maintenance and housing quality and assignment.

So far, only 16 percent of residents have responded, said Lon Sperry, investment manager with Pinnacle. That's more than a 6 percent drop from last year.

The purpose of the survey is to find out how housing meets occupants' needs and how it needs to change, said Sperry, who will conduct a survey later in the fall through the Fort Benning Family Communities, a partnership between the Army and Clark Pinnacle.

Decisions about the design of new homes, management, renovations and other aspects of housing are often based on information received in the surveys, Sperry said.

"This is an opportunity (for residents) to voice their opinions," he said. "The more people respond, the more accurate the information is. We need feedback."

The survey is available at https://survey.rdniehaus.com. For more information, call 706-545-0667.

Pfc. Amanda Cox screams as she's lifted up the 250-foot tower at Eubanks Field during "tower week" of airborne training last week. "If I had any fear of heights before, it's gone now," Cox said after descending from the tower. Cox and more than 400 of her classmates made five jumps from aircraft this week. They'll graduate today at 9 a.m. at the Airborne Walk.

Fort Benning MP wins IMCOM NCO of Year title

THE BAYONET
Brenda Donnell

Pfc. Jarred D. Palmer and Sgt. Kevin Miller from the 209th Military Police Detachment at Fort Benning competed in the 2008 Installation Management Command Soldier and NCO of the Year event last week at Fort A.P. Hill, Va.

Miller was named IMCOM NCO of the Year. He was also named alternate for the Army Soldier and NCO of the Year competition in September.

Miller said he was proud to have won for IMCOM.

When he arrived and saw 32 other competitors, he didn't think he stood a chance, he said.

Miller

Miller said he learned a lot from this competition, much of which focused on common task skills. Sergeants major and NCOs from other commands shared their experiences and knowledge with the competitors.

"The drills they took us through taught me more precise things about how to be a basic Soldier," he said.

Palmer

1st Sgt. Ted L. Pearson was Miller's drill sergeant at C Company, 795th Military Police Battalion, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., where Miller was the honor graduate for his cycle.

Pearson said Miller is also one of only two

Soldiers volunteer as Big Brothers Big Sisters

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Eighteen Soldiers from the 362nd Engineer Multi-Role Bridge Company are being paired with children in Columbus through the Big Brothers Big Sisters program.

Of the 18 volunteers, 14 are male. That's good news, said Shanae Griffin, BBBS community relations specialist, since boys usually have to wait a long time for big brothers.

The first Soldier to be matched, Pfc. Ollie White, met his new "little brother," 4-year-old Jalen Jordan, June 28. White took him to the Independence Day celebration on Fort Benning and has since taken him to play at Monkey Joe's. Of all their activities, one sticks out in Jalen's mind.

"I can swim," said Jalen, after White bought him a life vest and helped him learn to stay afloat.

Jalen used to be terrified, even when he was waste-deep in water, but now he can swim from one side of the pool to the other, White said.

"I wouldn't have been able to teach him that," said Jalen's grandmother, Lavern Denson, who raises Jalen by herself. "He was elated by that swimming experience. He told me how he held his nose under water. He wants to go back."

Denson said she wants a positive male role model in Jalen's life to enforce the principles of respect and discipline and "give him some direction."

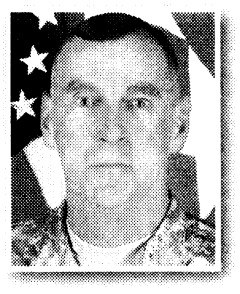
COMMANDER'S COLUMN

As Army celebrates 60 years of integration, the strength of today's Army remains its diversity

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

From the very beginning, the strength of our nation's Army has come from the strength of its people. America's power is the result of the devotion of individuals who come from different walks of life and join together to defend her. The U.S. Army is strong, not just because American citizens are in the Army, but because American citizens are the Army.



America is full of people with an unshakable integrity and an indomitable spirit. Courage is not uncommon here, but one of the greatest strengths the Army takes from its homeland is a strong tradition of diversity. This diversity prevents an Army of one from meaning, an Army of one and the same.

Tomorrow we celebrate the 60th anniversary of Executive Order 9981, issued by President Harry S. Truman, which established equal treatment and opportunity for all Americans in the Armed Services regardless of race, religion, or walk of life. The strength of today's Army is a legacy of that decision. The elimination of barriers between Soldiers based on racial divisions creates an Army that practices a policy of not just integration, but inclusion.

Diversity within our units has allowed for Soldiers with very different strengths gained from unique life experiences to combine different skills and approaches to strengthen their unit as a whole. This mix of talents creates teams that are remarkably greater than the sum of their parts, and in turn creates an Army that not only better represents the nation, but one that defends her better as well.
