In staggering succession, some of Wall Street's oldest and biggest firms have been seized, failed outright or merged into other companies.

"It's the worst news out of Wall Street since I've been alive," says Steve Romick, manager of FPA Crescent fund.

The credit crunch, which began in the real estate market, has emerged as a full-blown financial crisis threatening the global credit markets. Thanks partly to nimble emergency moves by the U.S. government, the financial system has avoided a full-scale collapse. There is widespread concern, however, that other financial institutions could be brought down by the sliding home mortgage market.

In the short term, it will be harder for people with shaky credit to get loans, particularly mortgages. And if you're investing in stocks for retirement, your savings have shrunk by 20% or more in the past 12 months. For most others — even those invested in brokerage accounts at Lehman or Merrill — the developments are likely to have little immediate effect because of government safeguards that protect individual investors with up to $500,000 in their accounts.

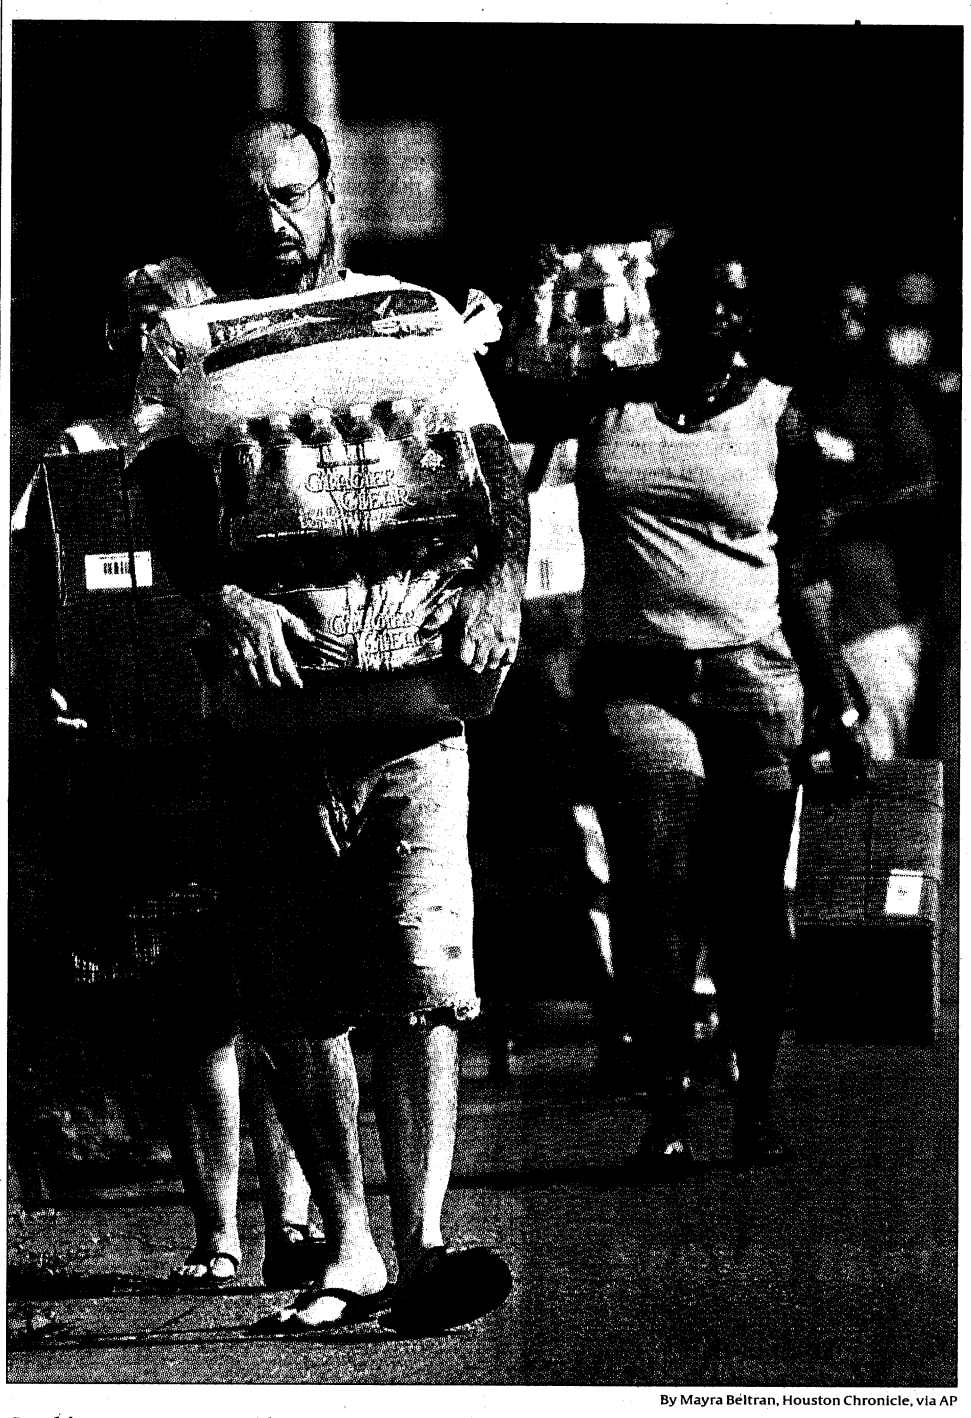
Ike expands reach, havoc

Rescue workers tend to Texas as storm remnants douse Midwest



By Mayra Beltran, Houston Chronicle, via AP

Stocking up: Houston residents received supplies such as water, ice and boxed meals at a federal distribution hub Monday. "The next 24 hours are telling," a Texas official said. "I'm holding my breath."

By Marisol Bello and Kevin Johnson
USA TODAY

GALVESTON, Texas— Emergency crews on Monday reached some of the beach towns most devastated by Hurricane Ike, which left a giant disaster zone spread from the Gulf Coast to the upper Midwest.

Three days after Ike crashed ashore, 39 people were reported dead, the majority outside Texas. Ike's remnants caused flooding as far north as Chicago. Across the Midwest, the violent weather closed hundreds of schools and blocked roads.

In Texas, the largest search-and-rescue operation in state history was likely to continue for several days. Rescuers found 60 survivors on the Bolivar Peninsula, which stretches across the Texas Gulf Coast. Some communities were nearly washed away, including Smith Point and Oak Island just north of the peninsula.

"I think the next 24 hours are telling," says State Sen. Tommy Williams, whose district includes six of the hardest-hit counties in Texas. "I'm holding my breath."

Among the biggest problems in Ike's aftermath:

▶ An estimated 3.7 million people were without power Monday in Texas, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Louisiana and Arkansas, the Energy Department reported.

▶ Nearly 40,000 people were in shelters, said Joe Becker, American Red Cross senior vice president.

▶ About 99% of crude oil production operations in the Gulf region were offline, said Kevin Kolevar, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for electricity delivery.

Galveston's stormy past

■ City digging out again, 3A

President Bush, who travels to Texas today, warned the price of gas will rise. "There's going to be a pinch," he said.

Galveston officials pleaded with residents who stayed behind to leave so city workers can focus on restoring services. Oak Island, which has about 500 residents, lost about 95% of its homes, says Sarah Cerrone, economic development director for Chambers County. The county conducted door-to-door searches Monday. About 100 people have been rescued, Cerrone says.

Galveston Mayor Lyda Ann Thomas said the situation is nearing a health crisis. The city can produce only a tiny amount of clean drinking water, there is minimal electricity and the University of Texas Medical Branch is unable to care for seriously injured people.

To the roughly 20,000 people who remained, Thomas said simply, "Please leave. The city is in ruins."

U.S. to widen intel operations at Afghanistan prison

New interrogators, analysts key to plan

By Peter Eisler
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon plans to expand intelligence operations at its main prison in Afghanistan, records and interviews with military officials show.

Interrogators and analysts are being sought for a bigger Bagram prison scheduled to open next year. They will be hired to question prisoners and provide intelligence that can be used on the battlefield, according to contract solicitations reviewed by USA TODAY. The Army also is seeking a "trained Mullah" to conduct Islamic services for detainees and advise U.S. officials on religious issues.

The developments are the latest indication of U.S. plans for a long-term presence in Afghanistan, where the fundamentalist Muslim Taliban militants have regained strength since U.S. forces ousted them in 2001.

Originally built as a Soviet air base in the 1980s, the Bagram prison was meant to be a short-term holding site. Bagram has been a flash point in the debate over U.S. treatment of detainees. The International Red Cross has negotiated with U.S. officials about conditions and access to detainees.

After peaking at nearly 700 prisoners in 2006, the population at Bagram has hovered for the past year at its 600-prisoner capacity, according to Central Command figures provided in response to a USA TODAY inquiry.

The intelligence hires are to be in place before next summer's scheduled completion of the detention center that will hold 1,000 prisoners, an increase in capacity by 65%.

"In 2001 ... we never thought we'd still be (at Bagram) today," said Brig. Gen. Robert Holmes, deputy operations chief at U.S. Central Command, which oversees Afghanistan operations. "Now that we see this as a sustained activity, there were improvements to be made."

On Monday, the Pentagon announced that 2,000 Marines will go to Afghanistan in November to deal with the increased fighting.

The new facility and staff at Bagram will allow U.S. officials to gather more diverse intelligence from the added prisoners as more U.S. forces arrive in the country to take down Taliban strongholds, said Seth Jones, a military analyst at the RAND Corp. think tank.

"One thing we have not taken advantage of is just trying to understand what is motivating people to join the insurgency," he said.

The new $60 million facility will include more space for detainee religious services, education programs and family visits.

Selling off bad holdings and raising more money will be difficult independent companies. Lehman Bros., which began 158 years ago as Alabama cotton traders, filed for bankruptcy protection. And Merrill Lynch, whose bull mascot has been Wall Street's iconic symbol of optimism since 1970, agreed to be absorbed by Bank of America.

"It took my breath away," says Jim Dunigan of PNC Wealth Management. "I don't think anyone would have come up with that scenario."

Cover story

The stock market, still reeling from the government takeover of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, plunged Monday.

The Dow Jones industrial average sank 504 points, or 4.4%, to 10,918 in the biggest point drop since Sept. 17, 2001, the day stock trading resumed after the Sept. 11 attacks. Monday's sell-off wiped out $700 billion in shareholder wealth.

As bloody as Monday's market trading was, the carnage was less than some had expected. "It wasn't pretty, but it wasn't a catastrophe," says Bill Gross, manager at the Pimco mutual funds.

Even so, the danger isn't over. Analysts say too many companies have borrowed too much to buy high-risk assets — mainly securities backed by subprime mortgages, which are loans made to borrowers with poor credit.

Now, companies that own those securities must write off their losses and raise fresh cash. That means fewer consumer loans and stricter loan standards, says Hugh Johnson of Johnson Illington Advisors.

More cautious lending

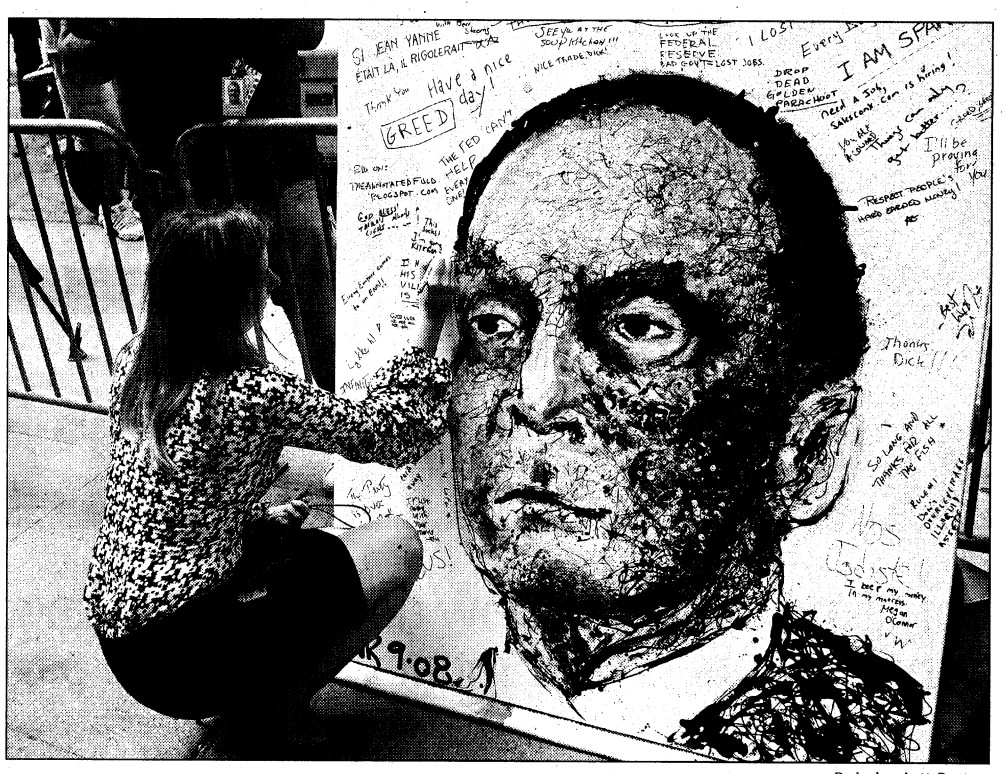
The unfolding financial crisis means that banks — those that do not fail — likely will become much more cautious about how much they lend, and to whom, than they were from 2004 to 2007. "It's back to basics," Johnson says.

The stock market was spared an even steeper fall Monday because the government had moved to make sure Lehman's collapse didn't spark the immediate failures of dozens of other financial institutions.

It was a vital step. Lehman is an investment bank. Unlike a traditional bank, which makes loans, an investment bank arranges financing for commercial banks, companies, cities and states. Should a city, say, need to issue bonds for a new bridge, an investment bank will arrange the terms of the financing and sell the bonds to interested investors.

But Lehman also arranged many other types of financing, including debt backed by subprime mortgages and complex financial arrangements called derivatives. On a given day, many of those notes come due or are renewed. The government assured those who might have trouble with their Lehman trades that they could receive short-term loans until matters can be sorted out.

To make sure that companies weren't caught short, the Federal Reserve made it easier for troubled institutions to raise cash. Meanwhile, a group of 10 major banks cobbled together a $70 billion emergency loan pool.



By Joshua Lott, Reuters

In New York: Lehman Bros. employee Jennifer Roeder writes a message Monday on a portrait of Lehman CEO Richard Fuld. Lehman began 158 years ago as Alabama cotton traders.

The crisis could spread. American International Group (AIG), an insurance giant, is scrambling to raise cash. Shares of Washington Mutual, the nation's largest savings and loan, have plunged more than 90% during the past 12 months. Both have been damaged by heavy subprime mortgage holdings.

Before they can resume normal operations, the companies must sell off their bad holdings and raise more money. "Until some entity with a checkbook steps up to buy those assets, instead of the government financing them, then we have a problem," Pimco's Gross says.

That will be difficult. For one thing, AIG and Washington Mutual are only the most visible companies trying to raise capital and sell problem investments. Other large holders, such as hedge funds and sovereign wealth funds, are scrambling to unload such securities, too.

But few investors want to buy subprime-mortgage-backed securities. And those who are willing to do so will buy them for just pennies on the dollar. So not only are those troubled securities nearly impossible to sell, they're worth far less than their holders would like.

"They're marked to the low-ball bid," says Ron Muhlenkamp, portfolio manager of the Muhlenkamp fund. So even if the institutions don't sell their holdings, the assets they count as capital have been marked down drastically. That, in turn, reduces the institutions' ability to operate.

Financial institutions seldom suffer alone. When banks take losses, or fail entirely, fewer loans are available for homes and businesses. A $1 billion loss at a major bank could mean that as much as $10 billion is no longer available to lend, says FPA's Romick. (Bank loans are often deposited in other banks, giving those banks the ability to borrow more.)

Fewer loans mean companies will have less money to borrow to expand. That could spell further weakness in the economy.

For financial services companies, even a best-case scenario could mean huge stock losses. When a company raises fresh capital, it dilutes the value of existing shares. And many financial services companies need capital.

Politicians and market participants are calling for reforms. Some argue that accounting rules are forcing banks to mark down their holdings too sharply.

"Real estate in a lot of areas is down 20% to 25%, but banks are being forced to mark down their portfolios 60% to 70%," says former FDIC chairman William Isaac. Those sharp markdowns severely limit the amounts banks can lend, making an already sluggish economy even weaker.

"Someone has to stop this nonsense," Isaac says.

Others worry that offering too much aid to failing institutions encourages reckless behavior, a type of risk called "moral hazard." That's one reason the government didn't bail out Lehman Bros., as it did Bear Stearns. Federal officials decided that giving government backing to two major investment banks would be worse, in the long run, than doing so for just one.

"Moral hazard is something I don't take lightly," Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said Monday.

But Jon Faust, director of the Center for Financial Economics at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, says people shouldn't read Lehman's trip to bankruptcy protection as a sign that the Fed won't ever step in again to prevent an investment bank's failure.

So far, at least, investors aren't panicking. Calls to the Vanguard Group, the big mutual fund company, "surged at the beginning of the trading day and subsequently subsided," says spokesman John Woerth. There was no increase in stock fund redemptions, he says.

"We're stressing that the fundamental benefit of a mutual fund is that you're broadly diversified," Woerth says.

Vanguard Total Stock Market Index, Vanguard's largest fund, has only 0.02% of its assets in Lehman stock and 0.19% of its assets in Merrill Lynch, Woerth says.

T. Rowe Price also saw a jump in calls from investors Monday morning, but by afternoon, "It had leveled off a bit," says spokeswoman Heather McDonold.

"Investors are more inquisitive than jittery," she says. T. Rowe doesn't disclose information about fund redemptions.

If you're an investor, taking a few steps can help you weather the storm. Try to pay off any high-interest loans. Repaying a credit card with a 19% interest rate is equivalent to earning 19% on an investment.

If you don't have an emergency fund, start one. Ideally, you should have enough in the bank to pay at least three months' worth of bills. If you're laid off, you'll need your emergency fund to tide you over while you're looking for a new job.

FPA's Romick remains cautious about investing in stocks in general and financial stocks in particular. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index is down about 20% from its October peak (assuming dividends were reinvested), Romick says.

These are no ordinary times, he says. When banks and investment banks fail because they borrowed too much to buy bad assets, "It doesn't end with the market being down just 20%."

A silver lining?

Optimists point out that the recent failures can be a positive because the financial system finally will measure the size of its problems and work to fix them, says Jonathan Merriman, CEO of investment bank Merriman Curhan Ford.

"You're talking about the guys with the most exposure to the toxic paper," he says. "You're coming to the end of the list."

The fact that Bank of America is willing to buy Merrill Lynch in what seems to be the depth of the turmoil shows that at least one bank sees a recovery coming, says Keith Stock, CEO of investment management firm First Financial Investors.

Portfolio manager Muhlenkamp is anxious about the economy and the market but is fairly sanguine. "Have we been there before? Yes," Muhlenkamp says. "Is the flavor different? Yes. Will we survive? Yes."

Ex-aide to Detroit mayor chooses trial

Christine Beatty, former chief of staff to Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick, declined an offer by prosecutors to plead guilty in a perjury case. Kilpatrick, a Democrat, has pleaded guilty and will leave office Thursday. Beatty will stand trial on criminal charges that she lied on the witness stand during the trial of a police whistle-blower lawsuit last year.

The Detroit Free Press in January published text messages that Kilpatrick and Beatty exchanged on city-issued pagers that showed they lied about an affair and gave misleading testimony about whether they intended to fire a deputy police chief investigating allegations of wrongdoing by members of the mayor's inner circle. Beatty was charged with perjury and obstruction of justice in March.

Rules tighten marketing on Medicare

No more free lunch, federal regulators said Monday in barring private health insurers selling Medicare drug and medical plans from luring beneficiaries to enrollment events by offering free meals.

The new rules, aimed at preventing deceptive marketing practices, also bar telemarketing efforts and lower the amount of commission a sales agent earns when the agent first enrolls patients.

Advertising for the plans, which include Medicare Advantage policies that cover drugs and medical care and stand-alone drug policies, will begin Oct. 1 for the 2009 enrollment period.

3 men, 3 teens charged in N.J. killings

Three men and three teenagers were indicted on murder and other charges in the 2007 execution-style slayings of three college students in Newark.

Iofemi Hightower, Terrance Aeriel and Dashon Harvey were killed Aug. 4, 2007, behind a school, police said. The grand jury charged the suspects with murder, attempted murder, robbery and weapons offenses. They could receive multiple life sentences if convicted.

Essex County Prosecutor Paula Dow said the indictments took a year because charges against the three teens, a 17-year-old and two 16-year-olds, were upgraded from juvenile to adult court and because multiple agencies worked together to ensure the case was airtight.

Florida voters will find an amendment on the ballot in November to remove the 1926 "alien land law," which permits legislators to bar Asian immigrants from owning property, the South Florida Sun-Sentinel said (sun-sentinel.com).

More than a dozen states had similar laws, but Florida remains the only state that still does. Florida legislators have never put the law into practice.

Recovery hard despite practice

Storms part of Galveston's difficult history

By Donna Leinwand and Oren Dorell
USA TODAY

GALVESTON, Texas — Keith Scotton can easily recite Galveston's major storms: 1900, 1915, Carla, Alicia, Frances, Ike.

His marine store on Bayou Vista in Galveston got 2 feet of water during Tropical Storm Frances in 1998, four feet during Hurricane Alicia in 1983. This time, the watermarks stand just over 6 feet.

In what has become a morbid routine in the 169-year history of this coastal city, Scotton and other Galveston residents are cleaning up, weighing the future of their beachfront city and deciding, family by family, whether this hurricane will be their last.

"Some of them, you couldn't beat out of here if you did this once a month," Scotton says. "Some will be out of here the first time the wind blows."

Hurricane Ike, which made landfall as a strong Category 2 with 110-mph winds, is blamed for dozens of deaths in 10 states. The storm sent more than 35,000 people to shelters and left more than 2 million without power around Galveston and Houston. The city remains uninhabitable. No power, water or gas. Toilets don't flush. Phones don't work. Homes have collapsed.

"I can't really think of too many buildings that haven't been touched by this storm," said Galveston spokeswoman Alicia Cahill.

Perhaps more than any other U.S. city, Galveston's history has been influenced by hurricanes.

More than 6,000 people died in the Hurricane of 1900 when entire sections of the city washed away. The storm prompted federal officials to build the 17-foot-high, 10-mile-long seawall that has largely protected the city ever since, but the 1900 storm completely halted Galveston's rise, said Don Carleton, director of the University of Texas' Center for American History.

"It stopped everything," Carleton said.

Prior to that, Galveston was the fourth-largest city in Texas. As the only fully functioning deep-sea port in the state, it was the gateway for trade, immigration and culture.

"Historically, port cities are more culturally sophisticated and connected to the outside world. Galveston was that for Texas," Carleton said. "Dallas was a backwater."

After the storm, the city languished for decades. It experienced a rebirth in the 1970s by marketing its history to tourists.

'Not much of anything left in Crystal Beach'

By Marisol Bello
USA TODAY

HIGH ISLAND, Texas — As 25-foot waves from Hurricane Ike battered their house, Frank and Deeann Sherman sought refuge in their attic, along with their two dogs and six of their pet birds.

Walls crumbled around them, and the first floor filled with water.

"The ocean rose up like a big hand and went through the house," says Deeann Sherman, 59. "We were in the attic 24 hours, holding on and praying. It was such a mean storm. It was the longest storm I've seen in my life."

Their house of 35 years in Crystal Beach on the Bolivar Peninsula — across the bay from Galveston — stood on 16-foot stilts. Only the frame, roof and pilings remain. "There's not much of anything left in Crystal Beach," Deeann Sherman says. "People's lives are scattered all over the beach."

On Monday, the couple and their animals were rescued by state game wardens patrolling the hamlets tucked in the far southern reaches of Galveston and Trinity bays. As state officials reached some of the hardest-hit areas for the first time, they began to assess the extent of Ike's destruction on the southeastern coast of Texas.

Along the 30-mile Bolivar Peninsula, which stretches across the southern part of Galveston Bay, towns were accessible only by boat.

Gilchrist and Crystal Beach — home to seaside vacation getaways and shrimping and fishing operations — were demolished, says Texas Parks and Wildlife game warden Bobby Jobes.

"There's nothing there," says Jobes, who rescued two women and their dog and cat in Crystal Beach on Monday. "There is total devastation."

Floodwaters receded Monday, leaving a 6-inch layer of muck on a blanket of debris that stretched down the peninsula. Homes were knocked off stilts, leaving empty slabs where the houses had stood. Cars rested upside down on piles of junk, and 80-foot shrimping boats were pushed on land.

"There was a solid debris line with plywood, sinks, anything you can imagine, just about every household object," Jobes says.

State Sen. Tommy Williams, whose district includes six of the counties in southeast Texas most damaged by the storm, says the destruction is more extensive than Hurricane Rita's in 2005.

In Montgomery, one of the counties he serves, he says officials have enough fuel for 36 hours. The areas are isolated, and the surrounding communities also have been impacted, making it difficult to get supplies.

"The areas hit the hardest are the ones we're not hearing from now because we have no communications," Williams says.

Chambers County on the eastern side of Galveston Bay has no electricity, water, fuel or cellphone or Internet services. "We're all pretty impaired," says Sarah Cerrone, director of economic development for the county. "We're feeling pretty isolated."

About 85% of the county's tax base is industry from oil, ranching, oyster fishing and distribution centers for big retailers, Cerrone says. The land used for pasture and farming could take five years to recover from the saltwater inundation, she says.

As the recovery effort begins, Deeann Sherman says she and her husband will leave the coast and move to the Dallas area to be closer to their children. "There's a passage in the Bible that says woe be to those who live on the coast," she says. "I'm going to heed that warning. . . . I'm leaving."

By Earl Nottingham, Texas Parks & Wildlife Dept., via AP

Late to leave: Game wardens escort Angeline Tompkins, left, and Donna Ginther off Crystal Beach on Monday. They rode out Hurricane Ike for their pets.

Jeff Sjostrom, president of Galveston Economic Development Partnership, said the city had been experiencing an even broader "economic renaissance" in recent years. Anchored by the University of Texas Medical Branch — the area's main medical center — 14 biotechnology start-up companies moved to the city. Its port flourished because of the maritime support industry, which services oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico.

The urban core of Galveston — protected by the city's seawall — was water damaged but remains largely intact. The worst damage is on the island's west end, where the seawall ends.

Galveston Mayor Lyda Ann Thomas said the city's recovery will take three to five years. She said the city has $14 million in reserves that can run operations for about three months. The port didn't receive major damage, Sjostrom said, and could reopen within days. Even so, the city will need state and federal assistance. "This recovery is going to be a marathon, not a sprint," Sjostrom said.

Prosecutor: Nevada jurors will see 'true face' of O.J. Simpson

By Ken Ritter
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A prosecutor told jurors Monday that they'll learn "the true face" of O.J. Simpson during the former football star's trial on charges of robbing sports memorabilia dealers in a hotel room.

Prosecutor Chris Owens began his opening statement by playing an audio recording of the confrontation and pointed out one voice barking commands: "Don't let nobody outta here . . . stand the (expletive) up before it gets ugly in here."

Simpson looked on impassively while Owens described the rest of the recording. "The audio will show threats, it will show force, it will show demands, and it will show the taking of property from the victims in this case," Owens said.

Simpson: Wanted to reclaim items.

"In our presentation of the evidence, we are going to spend the next few days finding which may be the true face of . . . Simpson, not necessarily the one he tries to put out to the world," he said.

In his opening statement, defense lawyer Yale Galanter asserted that the evidence will not show that Simpson intended to commit a crime, but that he wanted to recover stolen personal effects.

"You can think what you want about his past, and you all as jurors have agreed to ignore that. . . . What you're going to hear in this courtroom is not a case about hiding anything from anybody. It's a case about recovering personal items," Galanter said.

Simpson, 61, and co-defendant Clarence "C.J." Stewart, 54, a former golfing buddy from North Las Vegas, have pleaded not guilty to 12 charges including kidnapping, armed robbery and conspiracy.

NTSB: Safety system would've halted train

Agency has been seeking upgrade since 1990

By Alan Levin
USA TODAY

The deadly head-on train collision in Los Angeles last week could have been prevented with new safety technology, government safety advocates and lawmakers said Monday.

The death toll climbed to 26 Monday as one of the severely injured survivors died, said Kitty Higgins, the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) member assigned to the scene. At least 135 people were injured, including 40 critical cases, Higgins said.

It appeared that the engineer of a Metrolink commuter train ran through a stop signal Friday evening, Higgins said. The passenger train was heading to Los Angeles' northern suburbs when it struck a Union Pacific freight train in a violent collision.

NTSB investigators believe that systems designed to automatically slow trains when they run through stop signals "would have prevented the accident," agency Chairman Mark Rosenker said. The NTSB has made such safety systems part of its "most wanted" list of safety enhancements every year since 1990.

"The unwillingness of rail companies to make the needed investments in safety have prevented this technology from being fully implemented," said Rep. Jim Oberstar, D-Minn., chairman of the House transportation committee. Oberstar supports legislation that would require train-control systems.

Higgins said she had spoken to Oberstar and California's two senators, Democrats Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, and they vowed to finalize the train legislation.

The systems, known as "positive train control," are designed to automatically prevent trains from entering unsafe tracks. Using computers and sensors, a train would try to stop if an engineer did not heed a red stoplight. Such systems are in place on Amtrak's busy corridor between Washington, D.C., and Boston and on several freight rail beds.

Freight rail companies are concerned that the technology is not ready, said Tom White, spokesman for the Association of American Railroads. For example, train braking systems are so complex that computers cannot easily slow a train, he said.

The Federal Railroad Administration believes the systems should be voluntary, spokesman Steven Kulm said. The agency is concerned about the high costs of the systems, Kulm said.

Deputies again arrest missing Fla. girl's mother

The Associated Press

ORLANDO — The mother of a missing toddler, whom authorities have called a "person of interest" in the girl's disappearance, was arrested a third time Monday on new theft charges.

Orange County sheriff's deputies took Casey Anthony, 22, into custody as she visited the jail to meet with her case manager about other charges. Her daughter, 3-year-old Caylee, was reported missing in July, about a month after the girl was last seen.

Detectives have said lab tests show Caylee's decomposing body was in her mother's car, and Anthony is their only "person of interest" in the disappearance.

The three additional counts recommended by sheriff's deputies Monday were identical to several others for which Anthony had already posted bail.

Anthony's spokesman accused investigators of grandstanding.

"It is like addicts going through withdrawal," spokesman Todd Black said in a statement. "When things start calming down a little, the authorities inject another media fix, instead of conducting themselves professionally and taking care of whatever charges they have at the same time."

The sheriff's office said it expected Anthony to remain jailed at least until a hearing today.

Prosecutors have charged Anthony with child neglect, making false statements to investigators and 10 counts of theft, for allegedly buying goods with a friend's stolen checkbook. Monday's charges involved the same alleged theft.

Candidates pin blame in financial 'crisis'

But rivals don't agree on causes of Wall St. woes

By David Jackson
USA TODAY

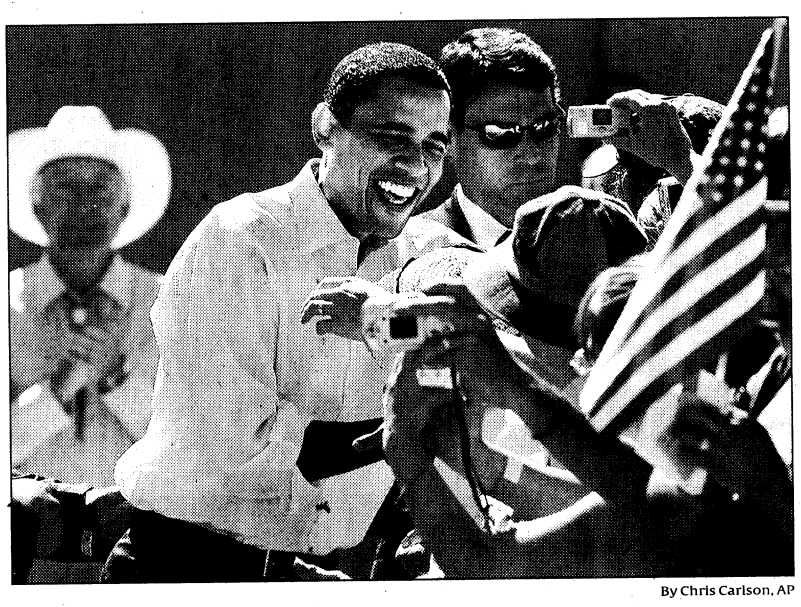
WASHINGTON — Presidential candidates Barack Obama and John McCain called Monday for tougher oversight of Wall Street while arguing over the causes of what both called a financial "crisis."

Republican McCain blamed "self-interest, greed, irresponsibility and corruption" at the top of the U.S. financial system. Democrat Obama cited GOP economic policies that he said favor the wealthy at the expense of everyone else.

"It's a philosophy that says even common-sense regulations are unnecessary and unwise," Obama said while campaigning in Grand Junction, Colo.

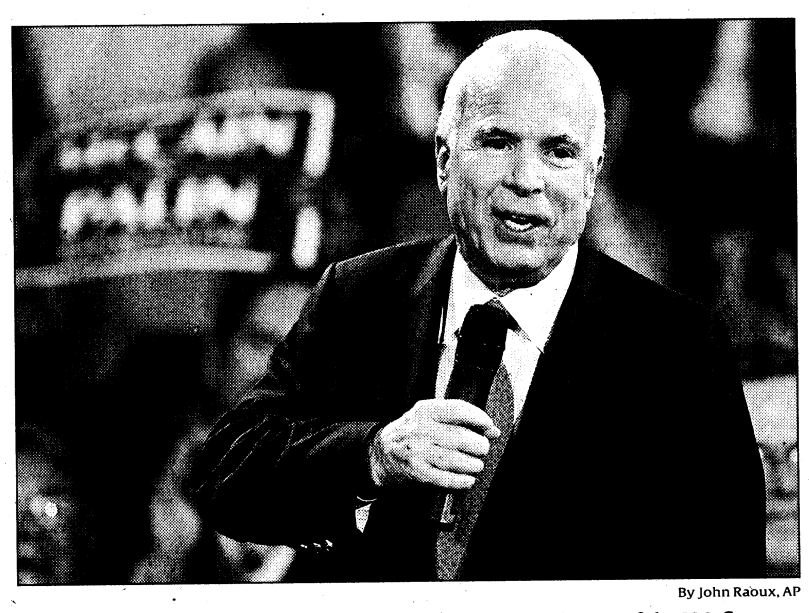
Obama also blasted McCain for saying "the fundamentals of our economy are strong." The Illinois senator said it shows his Republican opponent is out of touch. McCain said he was referring to the skills and productivity of U.S. workers. "We are going to reform the way Wall Street does business," McCain said during a town-hall-style meeting in Orlando.

The campaigns reshuffled their messages Monday after the collapse of two Wall Street giants. Lehman Bros. declared bankruptcy, while Merrill Lynch merged with Bank of America.



By Chris Carlson, AP

In Grand Junction, Colo.: In the wake of Wall Street's turmoil Monday, Democrat Barack Obama placed blame on GOP economic policies he says favor the wealthy.



By John Raoux, AP

In Orlando: Republican John McCain cited corruption at the top of the U.S. financial system as the cause of Monday's collapse, vowing "to reform" Wall Street.

Mark Bloomfield, president of the American Council for Capital Formation, a think tank, said the candidates are not traditional members of their parties: McCain advocates more regulation of big business than many Republicans, while Obama is more free-market-oriented than other Democrats.

"They are backing the Federal Reserve and the Treasury and the economic policymakers on stepping in as they have stepped in to date," he said.

McCain's campaign released an ad, called "Crisis," that advocates "tougher rules on Wall Street to protect your life savings." Obama senior economic adviser Austan Goolsbee said McCain has "no record" on financial regulatory issues, adding Obama's plan is "to set the rules of the road and re-establish public trust" in financial markets.

Both candidates opposed any sort of taxpayer bailout of Lehman Bros. Both traced the overall problems of the financial system to the housing crisis, including a record number of foreclosures due to faulty loans.

Obama has proposed a federal definition of mortgage fraud, with money for state and federal prosecution of offenders. He has also proposed requiring a specific schedule for borrowers of what they owe and when they need to pay.

McCain economic adviser Carly Fiorina said his goal is "to require more transparency and more accountability," to help lenders and borrowers. McCain has also called for increasing required down payments for home purchasers, so they will have more equity invested.

Both campaigns protested the patchwork of federal regulatory agencies over financial institutions, such as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Maya MacGuineas, director of fiscal policy with the non-partisan New America Foundation, said both candidates have made sensible suggestions. The question is what the new regulations may look like, she said, and both candidates may be wise to avoid getting too specific at this point. "The danger here is that this process gets politicized instead of leaving it up to experts," she said. "You want this to be technically driven, not politically driven."

In months, N.Y. politics go from red hot to ice cold

Battleground states getting 'all the attention' now that Clinton, Giuliani and Spitzer are out of the spotlight

By Jay Gallagher
USA TODAY

ALBANY, N.Y. — New York pollster Lee Miringoff thought there would be two hot poll questions for New Yorkers this fall:

1. Which presidential candidate from New York would carry the state in November, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton or former New York City mayor Rudy Giuliani?

2. Whom should Gov. Eliot Spitzer appoint to the Senate to fill Clinton's term if she goes to the White House?

To say things didn't work that way is one of the great understatements of modern New York politics.

Clinton lost the Democratic nominating contest to Barack Obama. Former GOP front-runner Giuliani failed to win a single Republican primary or caucus despite spending tens of millions of dollars.

Even if Clinton had won, Spitzer wouldn't have been the one deciding who'd replace her. The Democrat resigned as governor in March after he was linked to a prostitution ring.

"A lot can change in six months," Miringoff says. And so New York is back in the role it has played in presidential elections for the past 20 years.

"In presidential politics, New York's votes are already assigned," says Maurice Carroll, a former longtime New York City newspaper political reporter now doing polling on New York issues for Quinnipiac University in Connecticut. "So why should either Obama or McCain give much attention to New York, except for the money, except for the publicity?"

Peter LaMassa, 39, of Massapequa, Long Island, says he doubts the presidential candidates will even bother running many campaign ads in New York.

"It makes you question the whole electoral process," says LaMassa, who works in financial services. "I think it's sort of disappointing that only the battleground states get all the attention. It makes some states irrelevant and others so important."

Scandal: Then-New York governor Eliot Spitzer announces March 12 that he will resign. The Democrat was linked to a prostitution ring.

elections, from 1928 to 1948, at least one New Yorker was the presidential candidate of one of the major parties.

In 1944, two New Yorkers squared off: incumbent Democratic President (and former New York governor) Franklin D. Roosevelt and Republican Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

Roosevelt, the only man ever elected president four times, was the sixth (and last) New Yorker to be president. He died in office in April 1945.

In 1948, Dewey seemed likely to make it five presidential wins in a row for New Yorkers, but he managed to blow a big lead to Democrat Harry Truman.

In those days, "New York was a leader with both parties because its demographic and population characteristics converged with the national demographic and population characteristics," says State University of New York-New Paltz Vice President Gerald Benjamin, the leading academic expert on New York government and politics.

As the country became more suburban and the South and West surged, New York became less important, he says.

"There's no doubt New York has lost some of its luster," says Gov. David Paterson, the former lieutenant governor who got the top job when Spitzer left.

The rest of the country seemed less tolerant of the sometimes boisterous, aggressive attitude of many New Yorkers, some of whom in turn resented the shift.

"New York seems to get lost in the shuffle sometimes," says Kandi Desrosiers, 43, from Rensselaer, N.Y.

Tara Golden of Albany, 28, concurs.

"Democrats always get the New York vote," she says. "I'm a Republican, so I don't really care about Hillary Clinton, (but) I think Giuliani would have been good."

Lamont Pinckney, 40, a digital editor who lives in the Bronx, says he doesn't mind if the presidential candidates focus their attention elsewhere in the remaining weeks of the campaign. "I don't feel it's right to spend so much time in New York when other states have issues and problems," he says.

> "New York was a leader with both parties because its demographic and population characteristics converged with the national demographic and population characteristics."

New Yorkers have had their moments in the sun in recent decades.

Former governor Mario Cuomo became an instant national celebrity after his "Tale of Two Cities" keynote speech at the 1984 Democratic convention, and he seemed poised to be a serious contender for the nomination in 1988 and 1992, but he never put his hat in the ring.

"All you need is the right circumstance," he said this week when asked what it takes to be a hit on the national stage. "If you get there, and get lucky, anything can happen."

McCain: Obama 'wrong' but didn't call Palin pig

Republican presidential nominee John McCain said Monday that he does not believe his Democratic opponent meant to call Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin a "pig" last week. But McCain defended a Web video his campaign produced that accused Barack Obama of doing just that.

"No," McCain said to reporters in Florida when asked if he thought Obama was calling Palin a pig. But McCain went on to say that Obama "chooses his words very carefully" and that "it was the wrong thing to say." McCain said he was offended, "so we respond(ed)."

Obama had been speaking about McCain's economic policies when he used a common line — that you can put lipstick on a pig, but it's still a pig — to mock them. Palin made a joke about herself the week before, saying there's one difference between pit bulls and "hockey moms": lipstick.

Latest state polls

Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama and Republican John McCain split the leads in two polls from battleground states released Monday. A third poll showed Obama 5 percentage points ahead of McCain in New York, a state Republicans haven't won since Ronald Reagan was president:

▸ In Ohio, McCain and running mate Sarah Palin are 4 points ahead of Obama and running mate Joe Biden, the Suffolk University Political Research Center said. The score: McCain, 46%; Obama, 42%. Suffolk surveyed 600 likely voters Sept. 10-13. The margin of error: +/–4 percentage points.

▸ In Virginia, SurveyUSA said the Democratic ticket leads 50%-46%. The poll of 732 likely voters was conducted Sept. 12-14. The margin of error: +/–3.7 percentage points.

▸ In New York, the Siena (College) Research Institute poll showed Obama ahead, 46%-41%. The survey of 626 likely voters was done Sept. 8-10 and has a margin of error of +/–3.9 percentage points.

McCain thanks Floridians for early help

John McCain thanked Floridians on Monday for looking after his first wife and children when he was in a Hanoi prison.

"The people of Orange Park, Fla., took care of my wife and family," the Republican presidential candidate told a crowd of several thousand during a rally at the Jacksonville Veterans Memorial Arena, referring to Carol McCain and their three children.

McCain did not know until he returned from Vietnam in 1973 that Carol McCain was in a terrible car accident during his captivity and she needed 23 operations. They divorced seven years later. Soon after, he wed Cindy Hensley.

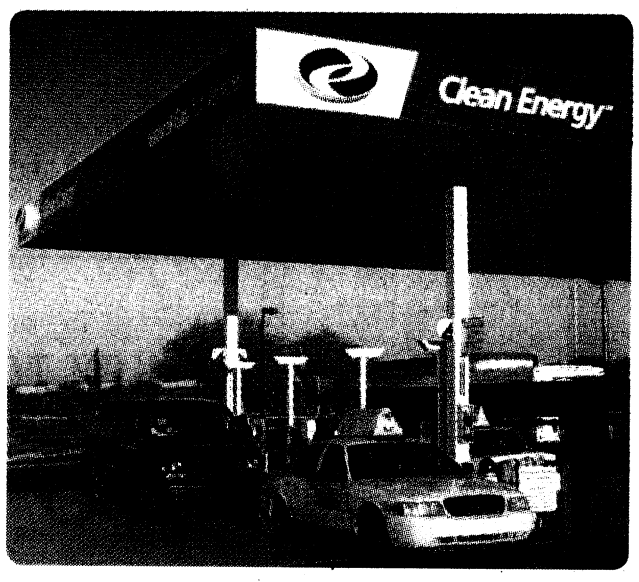
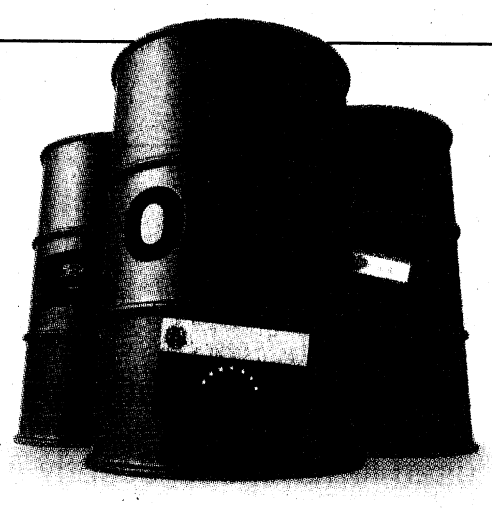
DEMAND NATURAL GAS NOW!

CNG

CNG IS COMPRESSED NATURAL GAS



PAY ABOUT 40% LESS, POLLUTE UP TO 90% LESS AND REDUCE OUR ADDICTION TO FOREIGN OIL.



THE U.S. IS SPENDING $500 BILLION A YEAR ON IMPORTED OIL.

But we desperately need the oil to fuel most of our transportation, even though we've been talking about "energy independence" since the '70s.

It's hurting the dollar. Late last year, Iran's president announced it would stop selling any of its oil for U.S. dollars, calling our currency a "worthless piece of paper," underscoring the dangerous nature of reliance on foreign oil.

Pickens CNG

The Pickens Plan wisely calls for CNG, compressed natural gas, to replace gasoline in America's vehicles. We agree that "natural gas is the best fuel to reduce our addiction to foreign oil."

We have been limited to one fuel for nearly a century. "Pain at the pump" continues to devastate the American auto industry. For closed plants and laid-off workers, there is no end in sight. We need a good answer, one that's available NOW. That's CNG.

CNG VEHICLES NOW.

In America today, only Honda makes a CNG vehicle, the Civic GX. It's the "greenest vehicle" in America and comes with a $4,000 tax credit. Given loud public demand, Honda may sharply accelerate production.

But with financial incentives for manufacturing CNG vehicles in the U.S., automakers can lead a renaissance of the American auto industry.

Incentives will also help consumers have their gasoline-powered vehicles retrofitted to CNG. Let's ask Congress to act now!

CNG SERVICE STATIONS NOW.

Vast numbers of gasoline stations already have natural gas lines that can be fitted to dispense CNG. Adequate federal economic incentives for station owners are key to making this happen quickly.

CNG HOME REFUELING NOW.

More than 70% of U.S. homes have access to natural gas. With a simple compressor unit installed in the garage, drivers can refuel overnight. The Phill® unit currently comes with a $1,000 federal tax credit that should be raised.

A simple home refueling unit handles overnight fill-ups.

CNG IS CLEAN, ABUNDANT, AFFORDABLE, AMERICAN.

CNG is so clean, it cuts pollution by up to 90%[2]. CNG vehicles earn tax credits and HOV lane access – and make it much easier for cities to protect their EPA Clean Air status.

A new landmark study[3] shows North American natural gas supply far exceeds industry forecasts. With 22 U.S. gas-rich shale basins that 21st-century technologies have made economically productive and accessible, long-term abundance is assured.

Nothing says affordability like saving about 40% on fuel. But low maintenance and operating costs (as a result of using this cleaner fuel) provide further savings.

We now import nearly 70% of our oil. But driving with a domestically produced alternative fuel supports American jobs and keeps U.S. dollars at home.

America's rescue is urgent. To drive change, demand CNG.

Female bomber kills at least 22 at police celebration in Iraq

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — A suicide bomber blew herself up Monday among police officers who were celebrating the release of a comrade from U.S. custody, killing at least 22 people, Iraqi officials said. Separate bombings in Iraq killed 13 other people.

The suicide attack happened northeast of Baghdad in Diyala province, where Sunni insurgents have carried out persistent attacks despite security gains elsewhere in the country. The female bomber targeted the home of a police commissioner who had been detained by U.S. troops for allegedly cooperating with the Mahdi Army, a Shiite militia.

Maj. Gen. Abdul-Karim al-Rubaie, the military commander in Diyala, said most of the 22 fatalities were police officers and that 33 people were wounded in the evening attack in Balad Ruz, 45 miles northeast of Baghdad.

The U.S. military confirmed the bomber was a woman but gave a lower death toll, saying 17 Iraqis were killed, including the city's deputy chief of police.

Al-Rubaie said police had gathered to celebrate Iftar, the meal that breaks the sunrise-to-sunset fast during the Islamic holy month of Ramadan, with Adnan Shukr al-Timimi, a police commissioner who was held at U.S.-run Camp Bucca, a detention center in southern Iraq.

Al-Timimi, his parents and two children were among the dead, a hospital official said on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the news media.

Insurgents are increasingly turning to women for suicide attacks because they can conceal explosives under long garments and evade searches by male security guards.

In Baghdad, a double car bombing struck a busy commercial district, killing 13 people in one of the deadliest attacks in the capital in weeks. Iraqi officials said the explosives-laden cars were parked between a passport office and a courthouse when they blew up almost simultaneously in the mainly Shiite neighborhood of Karradah.

U.S. death toll

As of Monday morning, 4,147 U.S. servicemembers and 11 Defense Department civilians had been identified as having died in the Iraq war: 3,377 from hostile action and 781 from non-combat-related incidents.

Latest death identified:

▸ Army Sgt. 1st Class Daniel R. Sexton, 53, Wentzville, Mo.; died Wednesday at Joint Base Balad of wounds suffered in a non-combat-related incident; 164th Military Police Company.

South American leaders gather to discuss Bolivia

South America's presidents converged on Chile for an emergency summit Monday over Bolivia, which has split in two amid attempts by President Evo Morales to institute socialism.

Morales said he was there to get support from his South American counterparts. He accused opposition Bolivian governors of trying to topple him. Among those attending the summit were key Bolivia ally President Hugo Chávez of Venezuela. The governors were not present for the meeting.

Morales' drive for deep socialist policies such as land redistribution has polarized Bolivia. Thirty people died last week in rioting in provinces where elected governors refuse to cooperate with Morales' edicts. The governors in the lowland regions want greater autonomy from the central government and a larger share of energy resources.

NATO demands Russia exit Georgia immediately

Diplomats from every NATO nation demanded immediate Russian withdrawal from Georgia in a show of support as they met in the U.S. ally's capital, Tbilisi. NATO Secretary-General Jaap de Hoop Scheffer led 26 envoys in calling on Russia to comply with a cease-fire deal and withdraw to positions its forces held before fighting erupted Aug. 7.

De Hoop Scheffer said the visit would help "assess how to further enhance the NATO-Georgia partnership." Georgia is not a NATO member but has asked to join the alliance.

Cooperation in Zimbabwe

Agreement reached: Supporters of President Robert Mugabe sing and dance at the signing of a power-sharing deal between Morgan Tsvangirai and Mugabe in Harare on Monday. The leaders of Zimbabwe's rival political parties agreed to work together.

Germany lectures Iran over nuclear cooperation

Germany's foreign minister criticized Iran for insufficient cooperation with the United Nations' nuclear watchdog at a meeting with his Iranian counterpart. He urged a constructive response to international efforts to defuse tensions over Iran's nuclear program.

Iran's Manouchehr Mottaki and Germany's Frank-Walter Steinmeier met for more than an hour at the Foreign Ministry in Berlin — a meeting held at Iran's initiative. An official with the German delegation said Steinmeier expressed disappointment over Iran's lack of cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency. The official spoke to the Associated Press about the private meeting on condition of anonymity. The IAEA hasn't been able to determine whether Iran is making nuclear weapons.

United States approves storm aid for Cuba

The United States will provide $1.5 million to relief organizations helping Cuba's recovery after Hurricanes Ike and Gustav. Cuba has refused $5 million in direct aid from the U.S. government. Henrietta Fore, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said Cuba also rejected a planeload of humanitarian supplies.

Al-Qaeda suspect's son returns to Pakistan

The 12-year-old son of a woman suspected of links to al-Qaeda was freed by Afghanistan and sent to relatives in Pakistan. The boy and his mother, Aafia Siddiqui, were detained in Afghanistan's Ghazni province in July. She was handed over to U.S. custody and flown to New York to face charges of assault on U.S. personnel.

A U.S. indictment alleges that during an interrogation in Ghazni, Siddiqui grabbed a soldier's rifle, announced her "desire to kill Americans" and fired at U.S. soldiers and FBI agents. She was wounded by return fire. According to U.S. prosecutors, when Siddiqui was taken into custody in Afghanistan, she had notes on a "mass casualty attack" and a list of New York landmarks such as the Empire State Building.

Across the USA
News from every state

Alabama: Birmingham — The Sixteenth Street Baptist Church marked the 45th anniversary of the racist bombing that killed four black girls on Sept. 15, 1963. The church tolled its bell on Monday, and a civic group said it would present a lifetime achievement award to bombing survivor Sarah Collins Rudolph. She testified for the prosecution against reputed Ku Klux Klansmen who were convicted in the case.

Alaska: Kenai — Groups monitoring pollution in the lower Kenai River said the news is good from sampling this summer. Preliminary findings indicate water quality improved with new anti-pollution measures in place. State water quality officials in 2006 listed the lower Kenai as an impaired waterway because of high hydrocarbon readings.

Arizona: Tucson — The University of Arizona is trading in its slogan as "Arizona's First University." The Tucson school now wants to be known as "Arizona's World-Class University." Another UA marketing campaign put up 15 billboards in the Phoenix area this month encouraging people to "Head South, Move Ahead."

Arkansas: Cabot — Police said a man was killed and his wife was injured when they were struck by a motorcycle while leaving a high school football game. Police said Jeffery and Rebecca Marvin were leaving the Cabot-Sylvan Hills game on Friday when they were struck by a cycle driven by Larry Dalhaus. An investigation was ongoing.

California: Marysville — An improvement in Yuba County's bond rating will save its taxpayers $70 million on a project intended to strengthen the levees along the Feather River. The county expects to pay $166 million for the project over 30 years, counting interest. That's down from the original projected cost of $236 million over 35 years. The improved bond rating was based on the county's fiscal health. Yuba County will start repaying the levee bonds in 2015, officials said. ... Redding — Shasta County broke its record for illegal marijuana eradication. Local law enforcement agencies and California National Guard troops destroyed nearly 90,000 plants last week, bringing the total for the year to nearly 410,000. The Sheriff's Department said that eclipsed last year's total of about 365,000 plants.

Colorado: Fort Carson — Five barracks under construction here are being tested for mold after spores were discovered in at least one of them. A Fort Carson spokeswoman said ownership of the buildings will not be transferred to the Army until the testing is complete and any required remediation is done. Hensel Phelps Construction President Jeff Wenaas said the mold grew after some prefabricated barracks modules got wet during transport.

Connecticut: New Britain — The city, its police chief and several officers are being sued by Andrew Glover, 60, who claims police tore out his catheter and roughed him up during a search of his apartment. Glover said officers violated his civil rights during their investigation into a child pornography case. He also alleges that he was severely injured during the search, which occurred as he was recovering from intestinal surgery.

Delaware: Middletown — Some New Castle County residents object to the Workforce Housing Ordinance, which was crafted to address the county's shortage of sale or rental homes priced below $270,000. The measure gives bonuses and other incentives to developers to build below-market-value homes. Opponents say the developments will hurt their property values, crowd schools and bring more traffic.

D.C.: Longtime D.C. Council member Carol Schwartz said she will run as a write-in candidate in November in a bid to keep her at-large seat. Schwartz is a 16-year council veteran who was defeated in last week's Republican primary by newcomer Patrick Mara. He was backed by members of the business community, who were upset that Schwartz supported legislation mandating paid sick leave for most workers.

Florida: Miami — More than 100 passengers on an American Airlines flight had a bumpy landing Monday morning at Miami International Airport. An MIA spokesman said two of the plane's tires — one on each side of its main landing gear — blew after touching down on the runway. Flight 631 was arriving from Washington, D.C., with 113 passengers. No one was injured. The cause of the blown tires was under investigation. ... Daytona Beach — Authorities said a tourist from Tennessee was the 22nd shark-bite victim of the year in Volusia County. A beach patrol spokesman said the man, 32, was swimming in waist-deep water when he was bitten Sunday morning, receiving two lacerations to his heel. The incident tied the county's record for most shark bites in a year.

Georgia: Jonesboro — Several preachers led a prayer service outside the justice center on behalf of Clayton County's 50,000-student school system. They prayed for an end to the dysfunction that led to the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to revoke the district's accreditation Sept. 1. The event Sunday was designed to rally voters before today's special election for the school board.

Hawaii: Honolulu — A Maui snorkel tour company agreed to pay penalties of about $400,000 for damage inflicted on coral reefs when its boat sank off Molokini island two years ago. Marine biologists said hundreds of coral colonies were destroyed by the 32-foot boat's aluminum hull and an operation to salvage the vessel. They said it will take 80 years for the coral bed to recover.

Idaho: Ketchum — A fire early Monday on Main Street here destroyed two buildings, damaged a third and knocked out power to a portion of the resort town, officials said. No injuries were reported. The building holding Whiskey Jacques' dance club was destroyed while the amount of damage sustained by the neighboring Sawtooth Club bar and restaurant was still being determined.

Illinois: Huntley — Classes were canceled for nearly 8,200 students after teachers went on strike in the northern Illinois community of Huntley. School board member Larry Snow said the union rejected an offer that would have increased teachers' overall compensation by more than 17% over three years. The union blames the board's negotiators for forcing them into a strike.

Indiana: Evansville — The state's National Guard is trying to track down former soldiers who may have been exposed to a toxic chemical while guarding the Qarmat Ali water treatment plant in Basra, Iraq, in 2003. Indiana Adjutant Gen. R. Martin Umbarger said the Guard is working to contact all 139 soldiers with the 1-152nd Infantry based out of Jasper and Tell City. He said they need medical evaluations.

Iowa: Des Moines — A group of legislators is said to be assembling a compromise to allow gambling devices in establishments open only to adults, as a way to ease bar owners' concerns about Iowa's new smoking ban. State Rep. Brian Quirk said allowing limited and "heavily regulated" gambling machines like video Keno in bars could help offset a decline in business that some bar owners complain is a result of the smoking ban, which took effect in July.

Kansas: Salina — Something was missing at Sunday's Hispanic Heritage Celebration in Salina — Mexican food. Just before the event started, a Salina-Saline County health inspector shut down food service by two area restaurants for failing to use nonabsorbent tables. The inspector said the wood tables the restaurants had set up under the shelter did not meet health standards.

Kentucky: Frankfort — Pulaski County Circuit Judge David A. Tapp granted a temporary injunction blocking, in three counties, the state's plan to release some inmates early to ease soaring prison costs. Tapp said state officials may not apply the General Assembly's early release plan to inmates from his jurisdiction. Prosecutor Eddy Montgomery was asking for a statewide ban, but Tapp's order only applies to Lincoln, Pulaski and Rockcastle counties.

Louisiana: Baton Rouge — Officials said Hurricane Gustav created far fewer environmental nightmares than Katrina and Rita in 2005. Harold Leggett, who heads the Department of Environmental Quality, said DEQ is not faced this time with a huge load of ruined appliances and hazardous household waste. He said most of the debris is trees, branches, leaves and other vegetation.

Maine: Milo — The state fire marshal's office said an early morning fire that destroyed part of downtown Milo was set. Investigators said the fire started under a rear stairway on the outside of a building that housed Hobknobbers Pub. The fire spread to four other buildings on Main Street. The fire marshal's office said the pub had been broken into before the fire. No arrests were made immediately.

Maryland: Bloomington — The Upper Potomac River Commission said the Savage River Reservoir probably will have to be drained for dam repairs because a floodgate is stuck. Work to replace all four of the floodgates over the next 2½ years is due to begin once funds for the $6 million job are secured. Allegany County is seeking help with the costs from other governmental units downstream that can tap into the drinking water.

Massachusetts: Boston — A bill expanding state laws against animal fighting has been sent to Gov. Patrick. The measure would impose penalties who stage animal-fighting events and on those who attend them. The bill also cracks down on depictions of animal cruelty, including video recordings, electronic images, streaming videos or video downloads. Violators could face a $500 fine or up to a year in jail.

Michigan: Detroit — The state's nonprofit hospitals spent at least $2.6 billion to provide free and discounted care last year to patients and to make up for losses from government programs, according to a new report. Michigan Health and Hospital Association. Executive Vice President David Seaman said most hospitals are seeing a 25% jump in costs, which also include losses on uncollected patient debt. Losses on patient care are made in other areas, such as through philanthropy. ... Chassell Township — A man died after his parasail struck a tugboat along Houghton County's Portage Canal in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, police said. A strong gust of wind had caused him to lose control of the parasail. He dropped 50 feet and struck the parked tugboat.

Minnesota: Minneapolis — The Minnesota Twins' new ballpark will be called Target Field. The team and Minneapolis-based Target Corp. announced a deal that will put the retailer's name on the ballpark for 25 years. The field is scheduled to open in 2010. Financial terms were not released. Target and the Twins also will collaborate on the design of a public gathering space connecting Target Field to downtown Minneapolis.

Mississippi: Jackson — State lawmakers are starting work on next year's $5.5 billion budget. The Joint Legislative Budget Committee is holding hearings this week and next to consider state agencies' spending requests. This is the first step in a long process of deciding how to divvy up tax dollars for fiscal 2010, which begins July 1. Gov. Barbour said the budget will be tight, but the state will be fine.

Missouri: Kansas City — Survival of the critically endangered Wyoming toad may depend on the Kansas City Zoo's ability to breed them in captivity. The 19 toads are in plastic cages in a sealed quarantine room, inside a locked building that's off limits to the public. The zoo spent about $10,000 setting up the quarantine room with high-tech air and water treatments. The Wyoming toad became extinct in the wild in 1994.

Montana: Bozeman — The 1,900 students at Bozeman High School must wear or carry identification badges during the school day and at after-school events, the Bozeman School District decided. The security requirement will "allow us to identify students in school, and clearly identify if they're in school and shouldn't be," Superintendent Kirk Miller said. ... Kalispell — A nearly century-old chalet high in the Glacier National Park backcountry has new kitchen stoves delivered by helicopter. The Minuteman chopper that transported the two cook stoves also carried away two that were in the kitchen at Granite Park Chalet for 53 years. The chalet, which was built in 1914 by the Great Northern Railway and provides summer lodging for hikers, is at an elevation of 7,000 feet.

Nebraska: Lincoln — A teenager was left at a hospital here under the state's new safe haven law. Police said a 44-year-old woman who is the legal guardian dropped off her 15-year-old nephew over the weekend, saying the boy had behavioral problems she couldn't handle anymore. He's now in temporary protective custody. Nebraska's law says "a child" may be left at designated safe spots, and some have interpreted that to mean anyone under the age of 19.

Nevada: Reno — The two state universities reported slight increases in enrollment despite tougher admission standards. The universities had feared a repeat of declining enrollments and a loss of minority students that followed the last time they increased the required grade point average, in 2006. Preliminary figures show fall enrollment up 1% over last year at the University of Nevada-Reno, and up 1.9% at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

New Hampshire: Manchester — State officials succeeded in getting a child-killer sent away from New Hampshire. Federal officials transferred Raymond Guay, 60, to an undisclosed state. Guay killed a 12-year-old boy in Nashua 35 years ago, served his sentence and recently had moved into a rooming house in Manchester after being released from federal prison in West Virginia on unrelated crimes.

New Jersey: Morristown — A Rockaway Township police sergeant's hunger cost him his job. Sgt. Christopher Stahl, 39, pleaded guilty to theft for walking out of a Quick Chek in Rockaway Borough with eight breakfast sandwiches worth nearly $30. Under his sentence in state Superior Court, Stahl also must pay $100. Prosecutor Robert Bianchi said the plea "represents the fact that no one is above the law."

New Mexico: Albuquerque — A city police officer caught on videotape attacking a television cameraman who was covering a crime scene was fired after an independent review. Daniel Guzman can appeal the ruling. Albuquerque police Chief Ray Schultz said Rick Foley was covering a police standoff for KOB-TV and was outside police lines when the encounter with Guzman occurred. Foley was within his rights to be on a public street, Chavez said.

New York: Buffalo — Starting this week, New York drivers have the option of buying an enhanced driver's license to comply with stricter travel requirements adopted after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks. The licenses will have an identifying computer chip and can be used instead of a passport at U.S. land and sea border crossings between Canada, Mexico, Bermuda and the Caribbean. The special licenses will cost around $80. ... Fort Drum — In January, 3,700 Fort Drum troops will head for Afghanistan. The 3rd Combat Brigade of the 10th Mountain Division was originally scheduled to be sent to Iraq, but conditions in Afghanistan prompted the change, officials said. The 3rd Brigade returned from Afghanistan in June 2007.

North Carolina: Durham — Designated members of two local clubs will be able to hunt deer with bows in Duke University's Duke Forest as part of an effort to slow damage the animals cause. Duke researcher Jeff Pippen said the forest is dying because the deer are overrunning vegetation. It's estimated there are as many as 80 white-tail deer per square mile in parts of the forest. Albino deer will be spared.

North Dakota: Fargo — On the day his trial was to start, a teenager accused of killing his sister last summer pleaded guilty to charges of murder and a deviate sexual act. Sergei Carlson, 16, of Sun Prairie, Wis., was charged in the death of Whitney, 16, of Fargo. He's scheduled to be sentenced next month. Defense attorney Mark Beauchene said Carlson wanted to spare his family a trial.

Ohio: Columbus — The city is moving toward eliminating its rat eradication program, putting the job of controlling the rodents into the hands of homeowners. The two-year program to eradicate rats downtown and in the neighborhoods surrounding Ohio State University has been successful, city health officials said. But Columbus Public Health is facing a 3% spending cut, leaving no room for the $275,000-a-year rat program in next year's proposed budget. ... The state Department of Insurance is advising Ohioans to check and document storm damage. Insurance director Mary Jo Hudson said people should photograph property damaged by Sunday's high winds. A standard homeowners, renters or auto insurance policy will cover much of the damage, officials said.

Oklahoma: Tulsa — A man who police say stabbed another man to death in a road rage incident was ordered to stand trial. Alexander Busby is to go on trial Sept. 22 for first-degree murder in the death of John Hines in May. Police said Busby stabbed Hines eight times when the two stopped in the parking lot of a convenience store after the car Hines was in cut Busby off on an interstate off-ramp.

Oregon: Knappa — Vandals with axes or baseball bats broke every window — more than 100 of them — at Knappa High School, closing it and the adjacent elementary school for the day. The reason the elementary school in the Columbia River town also shut down was so its pupils would not be exposed to obscene graffiti. District Superintendent Rick Pass said the schools may reopen today, weather permitting.

Pennsylvania: Philadelphia — A former inmate who became head of the city's agency for helping felons has been reassigned. Ronald Cuie was appointed in February to run the Mayor's Office for the Re-Entry of Ex-Offenders. But The Philadelphia Inquirer reports that, since then, Cuie has overspent his budget to the point where the city had to cancel a contract to make up the shortfall. Mayor Michael Nutter reassigned Cuie to a nonsupervisory role in the office. ... Vandergrift — The local Volunteer No. 1 Fire Department sold a 1983 fire engine online for $4,050 to Fire Rescue Development Program, a non-profit that helps equip firefighters in developing countries. The truck is headed to Alice Town, a village on the island of Eleuthera in the Bahamas.

Rhode Island: Bristol — The former head of the U.S. detention camp at Guantanamo Bay is now in charge of leading the Rhode Island Veterans Home. Rick Baccus, a retired brigadier general, came on board about a year after a legislative report found "troubling administrative patterns" at the Bristol facility that is home to about 230 veterans, most of them from the World War II era. ... Providence — The chairman and chief executive of CVS Caremark Corp. will head a committee to find the next president of the University of Rhode Island. Tom Ryan, a URI alumnus, heads a four-person search committee. Robert Carothers formally announced his retirement, effective June 2009. He's been president since 1991.

South Carolina: Charleston — The Citadel dedicated a plaque marking remains from a cemetery excavated at the military school's football stadium. During renovations in 2004 and 2006, more than 340 grave pits were found; about 275 contained remains. In 1999, the first crew of the Confederate submarine Hunley was found beneath the stadium and reburied in Magnolia Cemetery in Charleston. The stadium site once was a cemetery for seamen, widows, orphans and paupers.

South Dakota: Pierre — The state Department of Social Services is sponsoring free education sessions in 17 communities through December to provide information on long-term care, its costs, and what Medicare and Medicaid will cover. State officials said South Dakotans need to consider long-term care insurance because the average cost of nursing home care in the state is $4,750 a month.

Tennessee: Knoxville — Online classes and flexible scheduling have allowed some Tennessee community colleges to increase enrollment this fall, despite rising fuel prices and a shaky economy. The schools are offering scheduling that reduces the number of days students have to drive to campus. Community colleges tend to see more students enroll when the economy is bad because people return to school to improve skills or learn new ones, officials said.

Texas: Galveston — Galveston Historical Foundation executive director Dwayne Jones said the famous 1877 tall ship Elissa lost several sails when Hurricane Ike hit but seemed to ride out the storm well. The vessel sails once a year and should be able to make a voyage in March, he said. ... Dallas — Latino advocates and a civil liberties group filed a federal lawsuit against a Dallas suburb whose officials are trying to drive out illegal immigrants. The plan by Farmers Branch to ask house and apartment renters to obtain a license is unconstitutional, critics say. Rental applicants would be run through a federal database to check their status.

Utah: Salt Lake City — The Capitol campus closed Monday after a water line broke inside an underground tunnel. About 800 state workers were told to stay home. Four buildings housing several departments were shut down for lack of water in restrooms. Officials said the broken line caused no significant damage. Not affected were the governor's office, attorney general's office and legislative offices in the Capitol.

Vermont: St. Albans — Vandals spray painted graffiti, broke windows and ripped radios out of 13 school buses in a pair of weekend attacks that did as much as $20,000 damage. Seven buses were vandalized overnight Friday and six on Saturday night, according to police, who suspect more than one person was responsible. Personal items left on board were stolen, fire extinguishers discharged and buses pushed or driven into one another.

Virginia: Richmond — Officials ordered 200,000 more voter registration forms to keep up with demand before an Oct. 6 deadline for the November elections. The State Board of Elections already distributed nearly 350,000 forms in July and August. Many were sent to county elections boards, and groups trying to register voters also received tens of thousands. Since Jan. 1, Virginia's voter registration rolls have increased by 211,000 people, to nearly 4.8 million.

Washington: Everett — Hundreds of miles of public road and highway paving projects are back on in western Washington, after about a two-month delay when Tesoro halted production of liquid asphalt at its oil refinery in Anacortes. That led to a shortage of the road paving material for at least four counties. ... Seattle — King County elections officials said new voter registrations could break a record this year. The county is just 41,000 voters away from its all-time high. More than 16,000 new voters signed up in September and 19,000 enrolled in August. The deadline for mail-in or online registrations for the November elections is Oct. 4. Voters have until Oct. 20 to register in person.

West Virginia: Charleston — Bayer CropScience agreed to pay more than $1 million to settle federal allegations of violations by the previous owner of its plant in Institute, Aventis CropScience. Under the proposed settlement, Bayer CropScience will pay $112,500 in fines and spend more than $900,000 on pollution-control systems at the plant and on equipment to first-responder organizations in the Kanawha Valley.

Wisconsin: Madison — The assistant prosecutors' union filed a complaint with state employment officials, saying Wisconsin is negotiating for a contract in bad faith. The Association of State Prosecutors alleges the state did not make a new wage offer until February, about seven months after the old contract expired. They also said the state won't address high turnover in assistant prosecutors ranks.

Wyoming: Casper — The state Department of Transportation said it's finding more geocaches in highway rights of way. A geocache is a hidden box, containing more or less valuable items and a logbook, to be located using GPS devices. People can find a geocache by looking up its coordinates online and going to those coordinates. Wyoming officials said they're concerned about the safety of people who park along roads while looking for geocaches.

U.S. territory: Puerto Rico — An island prosecutor said a onetime suspect who served eight months in prison for the killing of a Canadian businessman had no involvement in the 2005 slaying. The courtroom announcement came more than three months after FBI investigators determined that Jonathan Roman Rivera was innocent and wrongfully sentenced to 105 years in prison. They arrested another man on charges of killing businessman Adam Anhang.

Herd mentality leads Wall Street off a cliff

What's the difference between the collapse of companies such as Enron and WorldCom and the failure of venerable Wall Street institutions such as Bear Stearns and, now, Lehman Bros.?

From the perspective of a wiped-out shareholder or laid-off employee, the answer is: Not very much. One total (or near-total) loss brought on by bad management is pretty much the same as another, regardless of whether people go to prison. Like the con artists who ran Enron and WorldCom, today's humbled Wall Street bosses vastly overstated their companies' prospects and understated their risks.

The key difference is that the former group was aware of the deceptions, accomplished through accounting tricks. The latter group appears to have been more clueless than venal. In their quest for ever-higher profits and bonuses, the executives violated the first rule of investing, which is to know what you're getting into.

Perhaps it's time to reconsider the "greed is good" sentiment of the 1987 movie Wall Street, which has served as a mantra for the unfettered capitalism, financial market deregulation and bull markets of the past quarter-century or so.

Greed has its uses. But more recently it has blinded and deceived. It has caused smart people to behave in stupid and destructive ways, to put their companies at risk and to jeopardize the national and world economies in the process.

Wall Street chieftains — at Bear Stearns, Lehman, Merrill Lynch and elsewhere — acted this way because, for a while it least, it would confirm their status as financial geniuses and justify their big compensation. (Lehman CEO Richard Fuld collected a $35 million bonus last year, part of a $9.5 billion bonus bonanza for Lehman staff. Stanley O'Neal, who presided over much of Merrill's demise, was paid $161 million last year when he was forced out.) And they did it because no one in Washington said they couldn't.

They poured money into portfolios of dubious loans, ensuring the housing collapse that is at the root of today's problems. They borrowed massively to boost their profits. And they invented an endless series of risky new financial instruments that supposedly mitigated their risk but did more to hide it. Five years ago, no less a figure than Berkshire Hathaway Chairman Warren Buffett called derivatives "financial weapons of mass destruction." Now, those weapons are exploding.

The urgent need, obviously, is to contain the damage. More companies will fail, but to protect the public that must happen in a slow, orderly way. Longer term, the regulatory structure over financial institutions has to be overhauled.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, who outlined a plan in March, said as much Monday as he tried to reassure a nation shaken by the bankruptcy filing of 158-year-old Lehman, the shotgun sale of Merrill to Bank of America and a cash crunch at American International Group, the nation's largest insurer.

It makes little sense to have traditional banks under state and federal regulations designed to prevent the worst excesses and then permit an alternative and unregulated universe on Wall Street.

Whether this week's roiling economic rapids will lead to a waterfall or to calmer waters ahead remains unclear. The Dow Jones industrial average dropped 504 points Monday — a bad day, to be sure, but not as awful as some had expected given the magnitude of the upheaval. The scariest part is that no one seems to know the full extent of the financial toxic waste, or how far it has spread. People know only that there is more.

The lesson of Wall Street's meltdown is that the financial services industry needs more transparency, oversight and accountability. Even more, it needs leaders who demonstrate less greed and more prudence and humility.

On her turf: Republican vice presidential nominee Sarah Palin, governor of Alaska, campaigns in Anchorage on Saturday.

Palin marks return to classic feminism

What perfect timing: We just celebrated the 88th anniversary of women winning the right to vote and along comes Sarah Palin, cutting right through 40 years of feminist orthodoxy in two weeks. No wonder some feminists hate her ("Feminist template obliterated," The Forum, Thursday).

Palin recaptures the historic position and collective sentiment of early women's rights campaigners such as Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and the very first woman presidential candidate, Victoria Woodhull, who uniformly opposed abortion. Alice Paul, author of the original 1923 Equal Rights Amendment, denounced the abortion-rights position of later ERA advocates, calling abortion "the ultimate exploitation of women."

One thing is clear in this election cycle: American women are most definitely not an unthinking, monolithic herd that can be manipulated by the likes of NARAL Pro-Choice America and the National Organization for Women. Groups such as Feminists for Life are far more representative of mainstream contemporary American women. The historical record is clear: Classic feminism is pro-woman and pro-life.

VP pick halts progress

Years ago, people in marketing realized women's strength in numbers and targeted them in advertising campaigns. Now, with the future of our country at stake and with the success of Hillary Clinton's candidacy, Republicans see the power of women to win this election. So they chose a "skirt" for their nominee for vice president.

With the choice of Palin, the Republicans have insulted women and have set back feminism. Palin is a virtual poster girl whose appeal, ironically, is to men: She is a cheerleader, a gunslinger, an anti-abortion-rights advocate and a member of the religious right.

This is not the woman for whom feminists have waited. Even so, she's a woman, and she'll appeal to those people who think having a woman in office is progress.

The most frightening part is that Palin's beliefs are the antithesis of what feminists have fought for.

Most important on that list is her stance on Roe v. Wade and the right to choose.

Palin is against abortion even in cases of rape or incest. This woman would set feminism back half a century.

Rewards are one way to encourage students

Student incentives are indeed one — but not the only — tactic to encourage academic performance among our young people ("CEOs split on paying for good grades," Cover story, Money, Thursday).

The National Math and Science Initiative has taken a much more comprehensive and unique approach: utilizing an integrated menu of proven strategies of which mini-scholarships are a small component.

This year, the organization launched the Advanced Placement Training and Incentive Program in 67 schools in six states, based on a pilot program in more than 100 schools in Texas. Over 12 years, this pilot produced a more than twentyfold increase in the number of participating students passing their AP math, science and English exams.

Our program has several key components: providing extensive teacher training, including utilizing master academic coaches for teachers; focusing more time on students; and awarding mini-scholarships to students. All these are vital in boosting student achievement, particularly in math and science.

In the first year, our six grantee states have collectively seen nearly a 60% increase in AP enrollment among students, and more than 13,000 students are receiving more rigorous course work.

No other program can boast these results, and it is essential that we work diligently to replicate this proven model. We are facing the full force of global competition and must, as a nation, commit to ensuring that our students get the education they need to succeed and lead in math and science.

Grim future for doctors

Instead of the headline "Boomers may see doctor shortage," USA TODAY's article should have been titled "Boomers will see doctor shortage" (News, Wednesday).

Imagine how many applicants would apply for this job description: "Idealistic Generation X/Y overachievers with low- to mid-six-figure student loans to work in imploding health care system currently subject to runaway entitlement spending. Future salary to be subject to government whim and guaranteed not to keep up with inflation. Will be subject to unreasonable expectations of patients and held responsible for less-than-perfect outcomes by consumer advocates and trial lawyers. Must be able to work 70-80 hours per week, not including on-call duties, and place family obligations a distant second to career pursuits."

This reflects the reality of practicing medicine in the USA in 2008 and beyond. Are there any takers?

An avoidable train tragedy

Grieving families are burying those who died — at least 26 — in Friday's commuter train disaster in California, the deadliest in 15 years. Scores more victims are struggling to recover from injuries. Metrolink, which operates the commuter train that crashed into an oncoming freight train, has said that the engineer failed to stop at a red light. The engineer, who was killed in the crash, also might have been distracted by text messages sent to two teenage train buffs.

If the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), which investigates accidents, confirms that human error is to blame, is that the end of the story?

Far from it.

Consider this. If human error had placed trains on a similar path to disaster on parts of the Northeast rail systems, or some routes between Chicago and Detroit, the result would have been different. No deaths. No injuries. No grieving families.

The difference is that these rail systems have installed "positive train controls" that combine digital communications with the Global Positioning System to monitor train location and speeds. The controls compensate for human errors — running a red light, say, or traveling too fast — by automatically taking charge of the train. The systems also place warning signals inside a train, not just outside where they can be missed or obscured by fog or rain.

This isn't a new idea. The NTSB first pushed for trains to install the positive controls after a crash in 1976 in Louisiana. In 1990, the agency placed such controls on its "most wanted" list for rail improvements. In 1996, 11 people died in an avoidable commuter train crash in Maryland. An NTSB report last year cites a long list of train accidents involving operator fatigue, sleep disorders, medications, inattentiveness or mistakes in judgment.

Federal rail officials, labor unions and many railroad companies, however, have dragged their feet on installing life-saving technology. To justify their inaction, they cite expense and doubts about the technology's effectiveness.

The Federal Railroad Administration estimates a price tag of more than $2.3 billion for covering 100,000 miles of the 140,000 miles of track nationwide. That's a hefty tab, but safety should trump expense. When passenger and freight trains share a single track — as in the California crash — it's not even a close call.

Thirty-two years after the positive train control systems were first recommended, they have been installed on only about 4,000 miles of track, though railroads in 16 states have at least some plans for them. If the California crash is to have any silver lining, it will be to put these vital safety measures on a faster track toward completion.

Prohibition pushes marijuana crop onto parkland

Until Congress comes to its senses and ends the war on Americans who prefer marijuana to martinis, pot will continue to be grown on public lands ("80% of pot crop invades parkland," News, Friday).

Drug war distortion of supply and demand causes big money to be grown on little trees. Civil asset forfeiture laws create disincentives for personal-use cultivation in private homes. All this benefits international drug cartels. The big losers in this battle are the taxpayers.

Marijuana prohibition has failed miserably as a deterrent.

U.S. rates of marijuana use are higher than in any European country. That includes countries such as the Netherlands that have decriminalized marijuana. Marijuana prohibition not only criminalizes citizens who choose a recreational drug that is arguably safer than legal alcohol, but it also creates a gateway to hard drugs.

As long as organized crime controls marijuana distribution, consumers will come into contact with addictive drugs such as methamphetamine and cocaine. Marijuana might be relatively harmless, but marijuana prohibition is deadly.

Sniffing out plots of pot: There were about 5 million marijuana-plant seizures at outdoor sites in 2006, the Drug Enforcement Administration says.

Legalize marijuana

I have a simple solution that would eliminate 99% of the pot grown on federal land and in our national parks: Legalize marijuana.

How much tobacco is grown on federal lands? I bet none or almost none. Why? Because it's legal. If we were to criminalize tobacco, the situation could change. Then tobacco would be unregulated, untaxed and controlled by criminals just as marijuana is today. And perhaps it would be grown on federal lands.

Gay marriage? Not in the South

By David Person

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. — Lauren Martin, 17, and Chelsea Overstreet, 18, have matching rings. They each wear the shiny, silvery circles on the fourth finger of their respective left hands.

They exchanged the rings — they call them "promise rings" — in front of their families. One day, if all goes well, they'll get engaged and then married.

But not here. Lauren and Chelsea are gay, and Alabama is one of 24 states that have banned same-sex marriage by constitutional amendment and by statute. The biggest clump of these, 10 states, are in the South.

Chelsea remains undaunted. "If I could get married tomorrow, I would," she said.

To do so, she'd have to hop on a plane or hunker down for a long car ride. Only Massachusetts and most recently California — at least for now — will marry same-sex couples.

The upcoming presidential election won't make things easier for Lauren and Chelsea. Neither Barack Obama nor John McCain supports gay marriage. While Obama does favor civil unions, McCain backs the November ballot initiative in California to amend the state constitution to ban same-sex marriage.

If Lauren and Chelsea married and decided to return to their home in Scottsboro, their marriage wouldn't be recognized by the state. And this, unfortunately, is exactly how most Alabama voters and politicians want it.

Overwhelming consensus

A 2005 statewide poll by Gerald Johnson of the Capital Survey Research Center, the most recent available on the issue, found that nearly 87% of respondents support allowing only heterosexual couples to marry. More than 71% oppose civil unions for gay men and lesbians. And nearly 53% oppose making sure that gays have the same rights as straights.

In 2006, 82% of Alabama voters supported the constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage.

Alabama is not unique among Southern states. The Pew Research Center found that 64% of Southerners believe that homosexuality is morally wrong, a percentage higher than in any other region of the country.

Attribute this to the high percentages of evangelical Protestants, white and black, who live in the South. In the 10 Southern states that have banned gay and lesbian marriage by constitutional amendment and by statute, their presence dominates, ranging from at least 31% of the population to 51%.

> In the region where the seeds of the civil rights movement were sown, gay rights are still a foreign concept.

By Olan Mills Portrait Studio

Prom date: Lauren Martin and Chelsea Overstreet in Scottsboro, Ala. The education board said no to their going to the dance as a couple, but a court said yes.

By contrast, very few same-sex couples live in these 10 states — at least those like Lauren and Chelsea who openly acknowledge it. Georgia has the highest percentage of all of them, a mere 1.1%. Maybe this is what makes it so easy to support openly discriminating against gay men and lesbians.

Ironically, Southern states were the main battleground in another fight for civil rights 40 years ago. Well before her death in 2006, civil rights activist Coretta Scott King, an Alabama native and the widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., began speaking out for gay rights and same-sex marriage. Few acknowledge this part of her legacy.

"Gay and lesbian people have families, and their families should have legal protection, whether by marriage or civil union," she said during a speech at the Richard Stockon College of New Jersey in 2004. "A constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriages is a form of gay bashing, and it would do nothing at all to protect traditional marriages."

Alabama and other Southern states are the norm, rather than the exception, in discriminating against lesbians and gay men. Nearly all 50 states restrict gay rights, same-sex marriage or civil unions. But some Alabama officials have been especially provocative when doing so.

Public officials reflect views

Former Alabama chief justice Roy Moore — who was later ousted for defying a federal judge's order to move a Ten Commandments monument from the state Supreme Court building — in a concurring opinion in a 2002 child custody case in which the mother was a lesbian, wrote: "Homosexual conduct is, and has been, considered abhorrent, immoral, detestable, a crime against nature, and a violation of the laws of nature and of nature's God upon which this nation and our laws are predicated. Such conduct violates both the criminal and civil laws of this state and is destructive to a basic building block of society — the family."

In 2005, state Rep. Gerald Allen of Tuscaloosa introduced a bill that would have banned from public schools any books or plays written by gay authors or that feature gay characters. He told CBS that he was alarmed by the "homosexual agenda" that he found in various books. Thankfully, the bill died without a vote.

Meanwhile, tolerance has made small steps of progress since Allen sponsored his ill-fated bill. Jefferson County voters elected the state's first openly gay legislator, Patricia Todd, in 2006.

And thanks to a court order, Lauren and Chelsea were able to go to the prom at Scottsboro High this spring. Of course when they arrived, Chelsea recounted, all eyes were on them.

"The whole room stopped," she said.

Some of their schoolmates expressed support. Others just stared.

Nevertheless, Lauren and Chelsea have not let the opposition stop them. And they and other same-sex couples have found support in some places. When Sarah Collins, Chelsea's mom, began attending the Rock church in Scottsboro, she said she told them that her daughter is gay. "They said she's welcome here," Collins said.

Surely, Coretta Scott King would have been proud.

False innuendos on Palin do a disservice to Obama

By DeWayne Wickham

The only thing that scares me more than the thought of a right-wing wacko being elected vice president are the left-wing wackos who apparently created the nonsense that showed up in my e-mail after the selection of Sarah Palin as John McCain's running mate.

Though she's clearly a right-winger, I don't know, yet, whether Palin is a wacko. But I'm certain those responsible for these e-mail attacks on her are wackos — or something much worse.

The first attack I received came from a guy who said that while mayor of Wasilla, Alaska, Palin tried to ban a book by Maya Angelou from the city's public library. "Why the heck would I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings be on a banned list? ... This woman is surely whacko (sic)," he e-mailed.

The book by Angelou was on The New York Times' best-seller list for nearly three years. But according to the e-mail sender, it was one of scores of books Palin tried to ban. The list included Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman, four of J.K. Rowling's Harry Potter books and The Learning Tree by Gordon Parks. Palin also wanted to keep the good people of Wasilla from getting their hands on Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, he wrote.

If true, this would have put Palin in the company of Joseph Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda minister who oversaw Adolf Hitler's 1933 book-banning bonfires.

But it's not true.

Palin never gave the library a list of books she wanted banned. Shortly after being elected mayor in 1996, she did ask the city's librarian how she would respond to a call for censorship, according to the Mat-Su Valley Frontiersman, Wasilla's local newspaper. "She asked me if I would object to censorship, and I replied, 'Yup,' " the librarian told the paper. City records show that since 1986, there have been four attempts to ban a book from Wasilla's library, none of them was successful and none was initiated by Palin.

Now if that offends your sense of political fair play, this ought to really make you want to holler.

Shortly after it was revealed that Palin's 17-year-old daughter, Bristol, is pregnant, a young black man showed up in a YouTube video titled, "Father of Bristol Palin's baby speaks." Identifying himself as Kevin, he said he had an affair with Bristol "last summer" and is the real father of her unborn child.

Nevermind that Bristol's due date is in December and that Kevin botched the pronunciation of her last name. Several people sent me the link to the YouTube video with notes suggesting a Palin family coverup. They argued that the Palins wanted to hide from the Republican Party's Christian conservative base — at least until after the election — that Bristol had conceived a child out of wedlock with a black man.

By Robyn Beck, AFP/Getty Images

True or false? A black man has something to say about Sarah Palin's pregnant daughter on YouTube.

The video has been viewed more than 300,000 times since it first appeared on You Tube on Sept. 3. Dozens of websites have posted links to the video in which Kevin argues that Levi Johnston, Bristol's 18-year-old boyfriend, is not the father of the child.

Like the book-banning story, this video was raw meat for some of Barack Obama's most rabid supporters. They are no more interested in determining the truth of these matters than President Bush was in making certain that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction before invading Iraq. They want to use these attacks on Palin to bludgeon McCain, whose campaign has been energized by her selection.

So it's not surprising that I haven't received follow-up e-mails from these folks after Kevin's latest video, in which he admits his claim was a hoax.

"The only way that tomorrow can be better, it depends on you," Kevin said. "It's not the candidate running for office, it's you. Everybody who made the video famous ... for every time you viewed it, or e-mailed it to one of your friends, it's up to you. What's important? The issues, the policies," he said, not whether a 17-year-old girl is pregnant or who fathered her child.

In essence, what Kevin said to those who so willingly embraced his hoax is what Obama told us when he accepted his party's presidential nomination: "We are a better country than this."

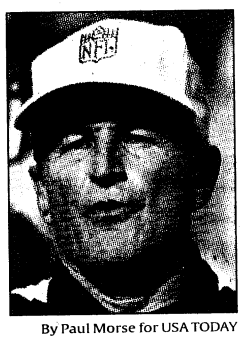
NFL referee Hochuli to be graded down

Ed Hochuli's acknowledgement that he erred on a call late in Sunday's San Diego Chargers-Denver Broncos game will mean lower grades for one of the NFL's highest-profile referees.



By Paul Morse for USA TODAY

Blown call: Low grades for referee Ed Hochuli.

"Ed has been an outstanding official for many years, but he will be marked down for this call," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said Monday. "Under our evaluation system, an official's grades impact his status for potentially working the playoffs and ultimately whether or not he is retained."

With the Broncos at the Chargers 1-yard line in the final minute, Denver quarterback Jay Cutler dropped back and the ball slipped out of his hand, bounced off the grass and into the arms of San Diego linebacker Tim Dobbins.

Hochuli ruled it an incomplete pass. Replay ruled it a fumble, but it was Denver's ball at the 10, where the ball hit the ground, because the rules didn't permit possession to be awarded to San Diego because the whistle had blown. Denver went on to score, convert a two-point try and win 39-38.

San Diego coach Norv Turner said the Chargers sent in video of the plays in question.

The play also is likely to be reviewed in the offseason by the league's competition committee.

Cyclists want USOC executive ousted

The Olympic cyclists who wore masks at the Beijing airport are seeking the ouster of the U.S. Olympic Committee executive who they say humiliated them and bullied them into making an apology "or else." "He just treated us like children," Sarah Hammer said Monday of the meeting last month with Steve Roush, the USOC's chief of sport performance. The call for Roush's job came three days after the USOC sent a letter to the athletes, acknowledging their mishandling of some parts of the situation and encouraging the athletes to "reach out to the USOC directly" if they had other concerns. Roush did not make himself available for comment.

Coaches feeling heat before it's fall

By Jorge Ortiz and Tom Pedulla
USA TODAY

ALAMEDA, Calif. — The 16-game NFL regular season is 2 weeks old, and already head coaches are uneasy.

The Oakland Raiders' Lane Kiffin tops the list of those feeling uncomfortable. The San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News, citing unidentified front office personnel, reported Sunday that ever-impatient owner Al Davis had decided to fire Kiffin.

The second-year head coach said he had not spoken to Davis since a 23-8 road victory against the Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday. He recognized the silence might signal a bad ending.

"I think you feel it a little bit," Kiffin said during his regular news conference Monday. "Every time there's so much media coverage about something ... you have some issues.

"But that's what I was most proud of our guys for — hanging together and not letting it be a distraction. As long as I'm here, we're going to have to continue to do that."

By Jamie Squire, Getty Images

Under the gun: Raiders coach Lane Kiffin, yelling during Sunday's 23-8 win vs. the Chiefs, is well aware of reports saying owner Al Davis plans to fire him.

Even if Davis grants Kiffin a reprieve, how long will it last? Oakland finished 4-12 a year ago and lost its season opener 41-14 at home to the AFC West rival Denver Broncos.

Kiffin said he advised concerned players, "Stop worrying about it. I can't control it. You certainly can't. So let's get back to work." Oakland visits the 2-0 Buffalo Bills on Sunday.

▶ An uncertain ownership situation might be all that's saving the St. Louis Rams' Scott Linehan. A 3-13 record has been followed by a start in which the winless Rams have been outscored 79-16. They rank last in the NFL in offense and defense.

▶ The Cincinnati Bengals opened 3-7 last year to fall out of contention early and are again stumbling at 0-2. Marvin Lewis, in his sixth season, has more worries than whether to call his wideout Chad Johnson or Ocho Cinco.

▶ The Detroit Lions, losers of seven of their last eight games to close 7-9, have yielded 82 points during a 0-2 start. And Rod Marinelli was brought in for defense before the 2006 season.

Great collapses tied to pressure vs. momentum

A funny thing happened to the Milwaukee Brewers on their way to the playoffs. It's called September.

The Brewers looked like a lock when the month began. They have lost 11 of 14 games since and fired manager Ned Yost on Monday hoping the shake-up can pull them out of a tailspin and into the playoffs for the first time since 1982.

It is unprecedented for a manager to get canned when his team is tied for a playoff spot with two weeks left in a season. But the Brewers are desperate to pull free from the undertow of history. And events of the last 12 months suggest no lead is safe these days.

▶ The Los Angeles Lakers led the Boston Celtics by 24 points in Game 4 of the NBA Finals in June — and lost.

▶ Memphis led Kansas by nine with a little more than two minutes to play in the NCAA men's basketball title game in April — and lost.

▶ The New York Mets led their division by seven games with 17 to play last fall — and lost.

Yost's late dismissal

After 150 games with Ned Yost as manager, the Milwaukee Brewers were tied atop the National League wild-card race. But after 11 losses in the last 14 games, the Brewers decided to fire Yost on Monday, the latest in the season a manager in playoff position has been dismissed. The firing came a day after a loss of a doubleheader at Philadelphia gave the Phillies a tie for the wild-card lead. The Brewers also faded in 2007 after gaining a tie for first in the NL Central on Sept. 18. "This was a collaborative decision to put our club in the best position for the final two weeks," general manager Doug Melvin said.

Milwaukee 'home' games no hit for Astros

By Paul White
USA TODAY

It's like any other road trip for the Houston Astros — at least now it is.

The Astros are in Florida today, focused on their improbable bid for a playoff berth rather than a difficult journey that began Sunday morning in hurricane-battered Houston and continued through two days of on-field futility in Milwaukee.

One day after the Chicago Cubs' Carlos Zambrano no-hit the Astros, left-hander Ted Lilly held them hitless into the seventh inning of an eventual one-hit, 6-1 Cubs win.

The total after the Astros' two "home" games forced by Hurricane Ike to Milwaukee's Miller Park: no runs, one hit in 53 at-bats (a .002 batting average) and two losses.

"We need to move on," Astros owner Drayton McLane told the Associated Press after the Astros fell 2½ games back in the wild-card chase. "We've got a wonderful opportunity to win the wild card."

The decision was made Saturday to move the games to Milwaukee, something Astros management and players were against because they would be playing in front of a pro-Cubs crowd.

After a scramble to find buses to get the Astros to George Bush Intercontinental Airport and a charter plane to fly them to Milwaukee, they left Houston before noon Sunday and arrived at Miller Park about three hours before game time. First baseman Lance Berkman said he had to get up at 4 a.m. to get back to Houston because he had moved his family about 200 miles inland to escape the hurricane. The Astros allowed players and coaches to bring family to Milwaukee because many homes in the Houston area were without working utilities.

As pressure builds, sinking feeling grows

Aftershocks from that implosion continue as the Mets try to hold off the Philadelphia Phillies again this year. "Because people keep bringing it up, that makes it tougher for us to win," Mets general manager Omar Minaya says. "We don't think about it necessarily, but win or lose we have to answer those questions."

Collapses are nothing new. They have been with us since Adam and Eve — who lost a big lead, with home-garden advantage, to the serpent. Why so many have come lately is hard to say.

Perhaps odds are that things that happen against all odds will come to pass a small percentage of the time. That would mean we look for reasons when occasional collapses are nothing more than a coincidental confluence of events.

"Yeah, I'm certain coincidence plays into some of it," sports psychologist Patrick Cohn says.

But that's too easy an answer. Most collapses, he thinks, come from some combination of growing pressure on the party that starts to lose a big lead — and momentum that builds in favor of the party staging a comeback.

"I like to call momentum 'confidence squared,' " Cohn says. "The players start to perk up and get excited when they have that feeling of momentum.

"In terms of collapse, momentum can go in the opposite direction. There's a spiraling downward where you're now losing any momentum you had within a game, which is deflating or defeating."

The first thing to get straight is that not all collapses are created equal. Some happen in single games, such as the Buffalo Bills' comeback from 32 points down against the Houston Oilers in 1993. Some happen over days, such as the Boston Red Sox erasing a 3-0 series deficit against the New York Yankees in 2004. And some happen over weeks, such as the 1964 Philadelphia Phillies, who lost a 6½-game lead with 12 to play.

Each category of collapse offers its particular agony. The Mets' collapse seemed to come in slow motion, Memphis' at hyper-speed.

"This thing was bam-bam-bam-bam — what in the world just happened?" Memphis coach John Calipari says. "But baseball, you're up a bunch of games with so many to play — that stuff is over days and weeks and maybe over a month where things are building."

Pressure and momentum are at play in both circumstances but in different ways, Cohn says:

"You've got finger-pointing and dissension in the ranks where things are breaking down and you can't finish off a season. Then the questions start, and that leads a team to doubt and that leads to further performance decrements.

"So it's the old thing: Winning breeds success and more success. And losing breeds failure and more failure. When things start to break down, you begin to have doubts about a team's ability to get it done. You know, 'Here we go again.' "

Avoiding failure

We know what great collapses look like: Jean Van de Velde wading in the burn in the 1999 British Open, pants legs rolled up, his place in history as sunk as that fateful golf ball.

What we don't know is why they happen, beyond abstract concepts such as pressure and momentum. Cohn, who runs Peak Performance Sports in Orlando, has other ideas. He says teams or individual athletes build big leads by striving to achieve success — and lose them by trying to avoid failure.

"You stop playing the game you played to be in that position," he says. "And the moment you switch to trying not to screw up, you go from a very offensive mind-set to a very defensive mind-set. If you're focusing too much on the outcome, it's difficult to play freely."

Van de Velde succumbed to self-imposed pressure, Cohn believes. "As you elaborate and think about what it would mean to win the British Open, then that starts the wheels turning. And that becomes the source of pressure that the athlete feels.

"And now they're worried more about the consequences and what's going to happen than what they need to do right now."

That's where Calipari says his Memphis Tigers deserve a break. Say whatever else you want about them, he argues, but don't say they stopped playing.

"In no way do I think my team played not to lose," Calipari says. "I think they were playing to win. We got a steal late. We got to the line late. ... We just missed our shots and they made all of theirs. I still can't believe we lost."

Kansas guard Mario Chalmers hit a remarkable three-point shot to force overtime, "like a guy on a golf course chipping in from 15 feet out and he wins the tournament," Calipari says. "How does he do it? Well, that's sports.

"Look, the talking heads will always try to come up with answers why (teams lose big leads). That's what they do. And mostly they're going to say the opposite of what we did is what we should have done.

"At the end of the day, we were chasing the stars and we bumped into the moon. We were that close. And when the confetti came down, I was thinking, 'Man, that should have been us.' "

Breaking down the collapses

The USA TODAY sports staff picked some of the great collapses of history, broken down by category:

Single game or event

NFL playoffs, Buffalo Bills 41, Houston Oilers 38, Jan. 3, 1993

Oilers safety Bubba McDowell intercepts a Frank Reich pass and returns it 58 yards untouched to give Houston a 35-3 lead in a playoff game early in the third quarter. The Bills score five consecutive touchdowns to take a 38-35 lead. The Oilers tie the score, but the Bills win in OT. The Bills' comeback remains the biggest in NFL history.

British Open, 1999

Jean Van de Velde needs double-bogey 6 on the final hole to be the first Frenchman to win since 1907. He shoots triple-bogey 7. That leaves him tied with Paul Lawrie and Justin Leonard. Lawrie wins a four-hole playoff. Van de Velde's 18th is a classic collapse: driver off the tee fades right. Second shot strikes the grandstand, bouncing 50 yards backward into knee-deep rough. Third shot lands in the water of Barry Burn, and he wades in, sans socks and shoes, well on his way to a seven-stroke meltdown.

Wimbledon women's final, 1993

Steffi Graf wins the first set 7-6. Jana Novotna wins the second 6-1. She holds a 4-1 lead in the deciding set and is up 40-30 in the sixth game — one service point from a 5-1 lead. But she double-faults and disintegrates, losing the set 6-4. The Duchess of Kent tries to console her during the awards ceremony: "Don't worry, Jana, you'll be back next year." Novotna disintegrates again, weeping softly on the duchess' shoulder. (She would win Wimbledon in 1998, her only Grand Slam victory.)

Series collapse

ALCS, 2004, Boston Red Sox vs. New York Yankees

The Yankees cruise to a 3-0 series lead and have Mariano Rivera, the best postseason closer in history, three outs from a sweep in Game 4. Instead, the Red Sox tie the score in the ninth and win in the 12th on David Ortiz's homer. That seems to matter little, as no baseball team had ever lost after leading a series 3-0. But the Red Sox win Games 5, 6 and 7, the finale a 10-3 drubbing.

World Series, 1986, New York Mets vs. Red Sox

Boston is one out from the championship in Game 6 with a two-run lead when ... well, does the name Bill Buckner mean anything to you? The Mets' two-out rally starts when Gary Carter and Kevin Mitchell single. Ray Knight is down in the count 0-2, one strike from elimination, before he singles to center to score Carter and advance Mitchell to third. Mookie Wilson comes in to hit and Bob Stanley to pitch. His wild pitch scores Mitchell and moves Knight to second. Wilson hits a slow roller up the first-base line that finds its way between Buckner's legs, scoring Knight to win Game 6. In Game 7, the Mets win again 8-5.

Stanley Cup Finals, 1942, Toronto Maple Leafs vs. Detroit Red Wings

After the Red Wings charge to a 3-0 series lead, the Leafs eke out a 4-3 win in Game 4 and then sweep the last three: 9-3, 3-0 and 3-1. The New York Islanders duplicate the feat when they fall behind the Pittsburgh Penguins 3-0 in the 1975 playoffs and win the next four. These hockey teams and the 2004 Red Sox are the only ones in major team sports to erase three-game deficits in best-of-seven series.

Late-season collapse

1964 Philadelphia Phillies

The Phillies lead the St. Louis Cardinals by 6½ games with 12 to play Sept. 21. That night the Phillies play the Cincinnati Reds. Chico Ruiz — a name that lives in Philadelphia infamy — steals home in the sixth inning and the Reds win 1-0. That begins an inexplicable 10-game losing streak.

1978 Boston Red Sox

The Red Sox lead the Yankees by 14½ games in July, but the Yankees pull even Sept. 10 with a four-game sweep known as the Boston Massacre. The teams play evenly over the last three weeks and meet for a one-game playoff in Boston. Bucky Dent's three-run homer in the seventh is the best-remembered blow in the Yankees' 5-4 win.

1951 Brooklyn Dodgers

The Brooklyn Dodgers hold a 13-game lead in August, but the New York Giants surge and the old rivals meet for a three-game playoff. They split the first two. In the third game, the Dodgers lead 4-1 in the ninth. The Giants are down 4-2 and have two on when Bobby Thomson homers off Ralph Branca for the "shot heard 'round the world."

Mutual respect precedes Nogueira-Mir heavyweight bout

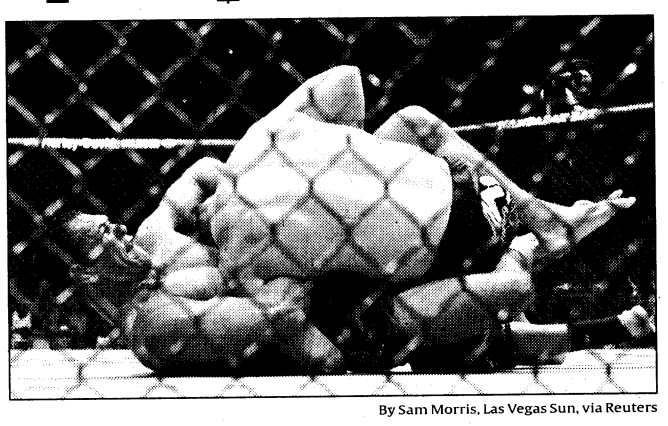
By Beau Dure
USA TODAY

Don't expect to see any Tito Ortiz vs. Ken Shamrock-style feuding between the coaches when the eighth season of The Ultimate Fighter premieres Wednesday (10 p.m. ET, Spike) with veteran heavyweights Antonio Rodrigo Nogueira and Frank Mir calling the shots.

Nogueira found a new reason to be motivated for his bout with Mir, but not through any harsh words.

"I didn't see him really training, but I saw how much he pushed himself," Nogueira says. "He's probably training hard every day. It's good to see that. We are competitive opponents. That's a good motivation."

"I borderline idolize the guy," Mir says. "When it comes to competition, you want to win, but at no point did I ever try to be disrespectful. There was no confrontation between him and I."



By Sam Morris, Las Vegas Sun, via Reuters

No such guarantee for the fighters living in close quarters while chasing a UFC contract.

"In a house with no outside communication, they responded pretty much how anybody would respond," Mir says. "If you stuck 16 priests all from the same religion in a house together for six weeks, I guarantee someone's choking somebody out."

Alexander talks music and MMA, Nogueira and Mir talk about fighting, and Alan Belcher talks about training through a hurricane, at mma.usatoday.com

The timing of the show complicates UFC's heavyweight championship picture. Nogueira won the interim belt while champion Randy Couture was in a legal dispute with UFC. Couture returned to UFC while the Ultimate Fighter wheels were already in motion, so he'll fight Brock Lesnar in November, with the winner fighting the Nogueira-Mir winner.

Mir has already beaten Lesnar but sees the appeal of giving the hard-hitting, marketable fighter a shot at Couture while he and Nogueira are otherwise occupied. In the meantime, he sees a good group of fighters contending on the Ultimate Fighter.

"Only one guy in each weight class can win the thing, but there's guys that didn't make it that are definitely going to be fighters in the UFC and doing very well," Mir says.

Fight Night: One Ultimate Fighter alumnus doing well is Nate Diaz , a winner in the fifth season in 2007. He's in the main event of the UFC Fight Night card (8 ET Wednesday, Spike) broadcast live from Omaha before the Ultimate Fighter premiere.

Diaz has won all three of his UFC fights by submission but faces a tricky opponent in Josh Neer, who lost to Diaz's brother, Nick, two years ago.

"I learned a lot from fighting Nick," Neer says. "Their stand-up is kind of awkward. Their whole game is a lot different than other fighters, so I think it's an advantage for me that I got to fight his brother."

Neer also should have plenty of fan support.

"I'm originally from close to Des Moines, so my hometown's only two hours away," Neer says.

The crowd also should erupt for Houston Alexander, a local fighter who also hosts a Sunday night hip-hop and R&B show on Omaha's Power 106.9. "I've been talking about my town for the past year and a half, so I guess they decided to come here and see how it was," Alexander says.

Keeping Score

USA braces for another Euro beating

Commentary
By Mike Lopresti

The invaders have landed. Recent history warns us what will happen next.

They intend to pillage and rampage, and then exit, slightly champagne doused.

It's the European Ryder Cup team, golf's answer to a SWAT unit.

The Ryder Cup is this weekend in Louisville, just up the road from Fort Knox. I'd keep a close eye on the gold.

You need not know what number the Golf Channel is to understand how Europe has been administering biennial thrashings to the USA. The Old World has won five of the last six Cups, and eight of the last 11. The final scores of the two latest events looked like a USC-Ohio State football game.

What in the name of Jack Nicklaus has been going on? Nobody knows for sure, though there is a theory that the Europeans are better suited for team play, with firmer purpose and tighter camaraderie.

It takes prize money to get Americans fully engaged, the idea goes, and the Ryder Cup offers none. Just a trophy named after a seed salesman.

How much any of that really means is debatable. But bottom line: One side keeps outplaying the other, to a degree that not even the active participants seem to understand.

"I wouldn't have a clue," European captain Nick Faldo said at one of his news conferences, "why now we are holing all the putts and they are missing them all."

What we do know is that the last time the Ryder Cup was played on these shores — Oakland Hills in 2004 — the USA was blown away by a team that included several players with blond-tipped hair and one Spanish guy in a ponytail.

Now it's time to duel again and see if anything has changed.

True, the Ryder Cup will be fighting for attention this weekend with the last game at Yankee Stadium, Florida vs. Tennessee in the SEC and NFL fantasy leagues. But it is always intriguing, seeing what the country club set can do to restore national honor, not to mention its own.

The American captain this time, in case you missed it, is Paul Azinger. He's beaten cancer, so how tough should Sergio Garcia and Padraig Harrington seem?

A new selection process is supposed to help the cause. Plus, maybe it's the right year to win back the Cup. The USA has already restored supremacy in the other two international competitions that really count — which, of course, are the gold medal in Olympic basketball and the Fourth of July hot dog-eating contest.

But you probably know the bad news. No Tiger Woods.

Woods has been positively mortal in the Ryder Cup, with a 10-13-2 record. There is even some thought that seeing him lose has sometimes been a psychological boost for the Europeans and a downer for the Americans. A folly, though, to suggest he won't be missed.

"I don't see any positives," Azinger said, "to not having Tiger Woods on the team."

Matters will rest upon, among others, Phil Mickelson and Jim Furyk, whom everyone knows, and 23-year-old Anthony Kim, whom some might not know.

For the Europeans, the platoon is so strong that Faldo did not take Colin Montgomerie, who has beaten more Americans than the Chinese table tennis team.

There is a compelling nature to the Ryder Cup that makes it eminently watchable. You rarely see professional athletes so openly undone by the moment.

"I've seen men lying on the floor of the locker room either laughing or crying," Faldo said. "It's quite amazing what we will put ourselves through for one point."

Especially if it is the turning point. Except, the last two routs were so complete, Azinger noted, "I don't think there was any significant defining moment."

The brutes are back inside our borders now. If it turns out badly again, there may be only one thing left to do.

What's Kobe Bryant's handicap?

Game On! Syracuse's Orange Express

More than a sports movie, 'Express' is captivating story

The Express, a movie about former Syracuse star Ernie Davis, will be released in October. Davis, the first African American to win the Heisman Trophy (1961), died before he could play in the NFL. The movie details the player as well as Davis' role in the civil rights movement. Actors Rob Brown and Dennis Quaid, who play Davis and Syracuse coach Ben Schwartzwalder, talked to USA TODAY.

Is playing a real life figure more pressure or more relaxing for an actor?

Brown: It was kind of a burden not to have a blueprint to go off of, but it offered me a lot of flexibility because there was no blueprint.

Quaid: I feel a responsibility to capture the spirit of that person, to do it in a real way and not an idealized way. Ben Schwartzwalder was a great man but a flawed individual, a man of his time. Ben was one of those old-school dudes, too. He was one of our soldiers who stormed the beach at Normandy.

What is the appeal of this movie to someone who doesn't go to "sports" movies?

Brown: Ernie's struggle in general of being a person, being a college kid. The transition of a teenager and a black man in a time of civil unrest. Ernie's story translates and resonates even if you don't like football because his story is so incredible.

Quaid: This film really is about meeting life's challenges with grace. That was Ernie.

So which one of you is the better athlete?

Brown: Pleeease!

Quaid: Tell Rob to meet me at the golf course.

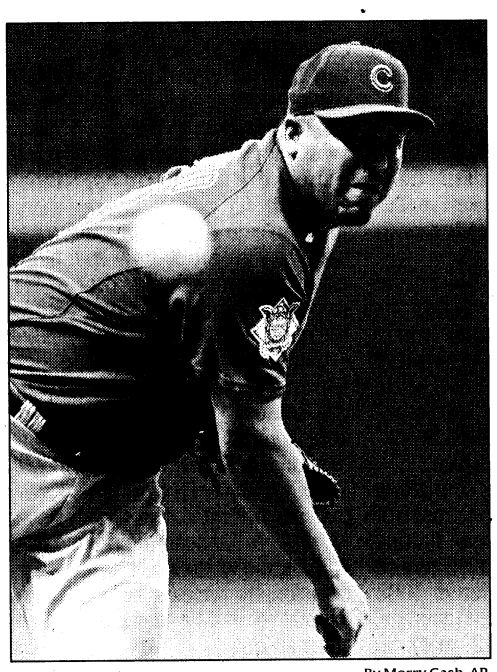
Web Watch Ike playing role in Houston's playoff run



By Morry Gash, AP

Untouchable: Carlos Zambrano's no-hitter on Sunday put a crimp in the Astros' playoff plans.

Wandering Astros stumble

Switch in venue unkind as team makes Milwaukee home

Mother Nature — a non-roster non-invitee — is sticking her nose into the National League playoff race, much to the dismay of the Houston Astros.

Forced to leave Texas on Sunday morning to play a "home game" the same day 1,000 miles away, the Hurricane Ike-stricken Astros fell to the Chicago Cubs 5-0 on Carlos Zambrano's no-hitter.

Monday, Houston managed just one hit off four pitchers as the Cubs won again 6-1.

The contests at Milwaukee's Miller Park, with noisy Cubs fans in attendance and the city buzzing about the firing of Brewers manager Ned Yost, were played after Commissioner Bud Selig scratched other sites due to weather and availability.

The decision to shift the series brought a sharp response from Richard Justice of The Houston Chronicle, who charged that Selig "should be embarrassed to have thrown a team in the thick of playoff contention into this situation."

Chip Bailey on the Astros FanBlog said the league and union "should have reached a better solution . . . even if it meant delaying the playoffs."

One reader, olarmy96, read Justice's column, then called the series shift "a crock," and urged the Astros to consider forfeiting.

Of course, a forfeit would have only hurt the Astros, who are 2½ games behind the Brewers and Philadelphia Phillies for the wild card entering today's series opener in Florida. Houston had won 14 of 15 games before the storm.

Another Chronicle reader, quapaw12000, had little sympathy for the Astros, saying "the basic dimensions of all the parks are the same" and labeling the Astros "typical Texas crybabies!"

Houston fans — many of whom are still battling the effects of Ike — did receive some consolation on Monday when the Astros announced refunds for games not played Friday and Saturday at Minute Maid Park.

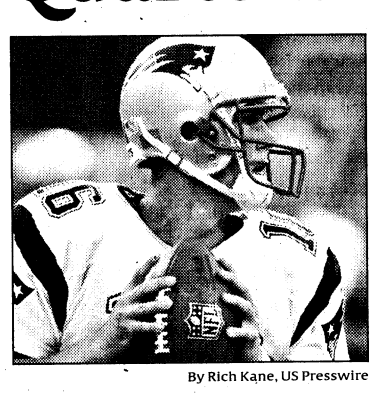
The Huddle Patriots take history lesson

Quarterback debuts have a familiar ring



By Rich Kane, US Presswire

Understudy II: Matt Cassel threw for 165 yards in his debut Sunday.

There they go again. Our bloggers at The Huddle thought the debut of Matt Cassel seemed familiar, and found similarities with the debut of Tom Brady in 2001:

Cassel		Brady
"I thought Matt did a good job."	Bill Belichick's take	"Tom did a real good job."
16-for-23, 165 yards	Stats	13-for-23, 168 yards

ESPN can thank lucky rabbit for Ryder Cup

ESPN's channels, with their first Ryder Cup action, will air 18 hours Friday — after showing the opening ceremony Thursday.

Such blanket coverage is typical for the network. What isn't typical is how ESPN got the Cup's first-round action from NBC, which retains live weekend play.

Cup play came as part of the 2006 trade that sent then-ABC/ESPN announcer Al Michaels to NBC — to call Sunday night NFL — and brought 1927 Walt Disney cartoon character Oswald the Lucky Rabbit to Disney. Oswald had preceded Mickey Mouse.

Monday, ESPN Cup host Mike Tirico noted his gratitude: "Oswald is my personal favorite rabbit."

American League notes

Baltimore: 3B Melvin Mora was given Sunday off by manager Dave Trembley. Mora returned from a strained hamstring last week, and Trembley has made a regular practice of resting veterans in day games after night games. Mora is expected to play today.

Boston: LH reliever Hideki Okajima will return for a third season after a vesting option for 2009, hinged on him making 115 relief appearances over the last two seasons combined, was triggered Aug. 20. Okajima will make $1.75 million next year. ... OF Jacoby Ellsbury collected four stolen bases in six games through Sunday. His steal of second in the first inning Sunday was the 114th stolen base of the season for the Red Sox. That tied the 1973 Red Sox for the franchise's second-highest total in the last 91 years. The 1934 Red Sox had 116.

Chicago: Even with rainouts Friday and Saturday, the White Sox can't avoid needing a fifth starter at least once this week, probably Wednesday. RHP Lance Broadway remains the leading candidate to get that start. ... RH reliever Scott Linebrink, recently off the disabled list, was supposed to be back as the eighth-inning man last weekend, but the rainouts played havoc with the bullpen. Manager Ozzie Guillen used Linebrink in the seventh inning in Game 2 on Sunday, and the veteran allowed two runs to start Detroit's comeback. LH reliever Matt Thornton finished the eighth inning in both of Sunday's games.

Cleveland: The Indians have committed to playing in Cleveland through 2023. The club signed a new lease with Gateway Economic Development Corp. The previous lease was set to expire in 2013. The Indians began play at Progressive Field, then called Jacobs Field, in 1994. As part of the new lease with Gateway, the Indians will be permitted to play up to five home games at sites outside of the USA and Canada over any five-year period.

Detroit: LHP Kenny Rogers missed one start with a sore hip before returning Sunday for what turned out to be his final appearance of the season. Manager Jim Leyland said Rogers, 43, has been shut down for the year. Rogers was roughed up for seven runs in 4⅔ innings in the second game of Sunday's doubleheader against the White Sox.

Kansas City: Ryan Shealy, who is out of minor league options, is making his case to be the starting first baseman in 2009. Shealy had his first four-hit game Saturday and added three more hits, including two home runs, with five RBI to match his career high Sunday. Shealy, 28, started Monday batting .370 (10-for-27) with four home runs since being recalled from Class AAA Omaha on Sept. 2. ... OF Alex Gordon (right hip) played Sunday for the first time in more than three weeks. He doubled in his first at-bat, then added a single.

Los Angeles: 3B Chone Figgins (elbow) is expected to return to the field during the series that begins today in Oakland. Figgins missed four games and was limited to the designated hitter role in two after being hit by a pitch Sept. 8. ... The Angels are adjusting their rotation for the playoffs by starting RHP John Lackey today after nine days of rest and giving RHP Ervin Santana seven days off before his next start Monday. That sets up Lackey and Santana to start Games 1 and 2 of a first-round playoff series. Lackey is 14-3 with a 2.67 ERA in 26 career starts against the Athletics, including 2-0 with a 0.56 ERA this season.

Minnesota: The Twins' new ballpark will be called Target Field. The team and Target Corp. agreed in principle on an exclusive 25-year partnership that includes naming rights to the stadium, scheduled to open in 2010. Target and the Twins will collaborate on the design of Target Plaza, a pedestrian bridge and public gathering space connecting Target Field to downtown Minneapolis.

New York: C Jorge Posada reignited the debate over RHP Joba Chamberlain's future Monday, recommending the young pitcher be kept in the bullpen and predicting more injuries if the Yankees put him back in their starting rotation. "I think if you start him and he pitches 200 innings in one year, you're going to lose him. He's going to get hurt. I don't see him as a starter," Posada said during a session of CenterStage, scheduled to air on the team's YES Network starting Sept. 28.

Oakland: 2B Mark Ellis is likely to get an old injury repaired at the same time he gets his more recent right shoulder problem fixed. He is awaiting a second opinion, but the initial recommendation was surgery for bone chips and cartilage damage in the shoulder. Before the 2004 season, Ellis also tore the labrum in that shoulder, which could be contributing to some of his current discomfort.

Seattle: With Adrian Beltre done for the year in preparation for Thursday's surgery day on his left thumb and left shoulder, rookie Matt Tuiasosopo probably will get most of the final 14 starts of the season at third base. Tuiasosopo had three hits in his first 15 at-bats through the weekend.

Tampa Bay: After throwing 83 pitches in five innings in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader against the Yankees, RHP Matt Garza will be brought back on three days of rest to face Boston on Wednesday.

Texas: RHP Vicente Padilla received no decision Sunday against Oakland and remained unbeaten against AL West opponents this season. Padilla is 5-0 with a 2.98 ERA in nine starts against the West. His final two scheduled starts would both come against the Angels.

Toronto: LH reliever Scott Downs, who sprained his right ankle in mid-August, could be done for the season after reinjuring the joint. Downs left Saturday's game when his ankle gave way and he fell while trying to field a slow grounder. A doctor's examination was scheduled to determine if he can return this year.

No hustle: Robinson Cano was pulled from Sunday's game and kept out of Monday's.

Yankees bench Cano

By Mike Fitzpatrick
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Robinson Cano was benched again by the New York Yankees on Monday for not hustling after a ball the previous day.

The slumping second baseman was yanked from Sunday's game against the Tampa Bay Rays after he was late retrieving Cliff Floyd's hard grounder that caromed into shallow right field. Cano didn't immediately chase the ball after it deflected off the glove of diving first baseman Jason Giambi, and Floyd beat right fielder Xavier Nady's throw to second for a double.

Cody Ransom started at second Monday in the opener of a four-game series against the AL Central-leading Chicago White Sox.

"Obviously, continue to discuss some things with Robbie, and we'll move forward," Yankees manager Joe Girardi said. "You just don't want what happened yesterday to happen again."

Cano said he was "embarrassed" about being pulled from the game but not angry and he didn't protest Girardi's decision Monday.

"He's the boss," Cano said. "My mistake, so I've got to take the responsibility."

"Ninety-nine percent of the time I play hard," he added. "Sometimes you're frustrated in something that you do and you don't realize that you do it. He's the manager, and whatever he decides I agree with him."

Cano, 25, is struggling through the worst season of his four-year career, batting .260 with 13 home runs and 61 RBI. He entered 2008 with a .314 career average, including a .342 mark in 2006 when he was selected to the All-Star team.

Plus, close buddy Melky Cabrera was sent to the minors earlier this season.

"Robbie's had a year that has been difficult on him," Girardi said. "It's been a year that he's had some ups and downs, and as players you have to learn to go through those ups and downs, because every year you're not going to hit .330. Players just don't do that. And you have to figure out how to play the game always the same way no matter what the result is."

Cano signed a four-year, $30 million contract before this season. With the Yankees likely to miss the playoffs for the first time since 1993, some have grown impatient with his casual style of play. A smooth fielder with a sweet swing, Cano occasionally appears lackadaisical, even if he might be going all-out.

But Girardi said Sunday that was different: "There was just no effort after the ball."

Monday's games

INDIANS 3, Twins 1	Scott Lewis pitched six scoreless innings in his second career start. Lewis (2-0) has yet to allow a run in 14 innings since being called up from the minors Sept. 7.
YANKEES 4, White Sox 2	Mariano Rivera moved into second place on the career saves list. Beginning its final week at Yankee Stadium — barring an incredible playoff surge — New York got a two-run homer from Xavier Nady in the second inning and a tie-breaking double by pinch-hitter Wilson Betemit in the seventh.
Boston vs. TAMPA BAY	The Red Sox tried to pull into a first-place tie with the Rays when the teams began a three-game set at Tropicana Field that could go a long way toward deciding the East champion. Tampa Bay and Boston had split their first 12 regular-season meetings, with each team sweeping six games at its home park.
Detroit vs. TEXAS	Dontrelle Willis made his first start in three months as the Tigers opened a three-game set with the Rangers. This was the fifth start of the season for Willis (0-1, 10.32 ERA), who is in his first season in Detroit after coming over as part of a December trade from Florida that included Miguel Cabrera.
Seattle vs. KANSAS CITY	Looking to extend their three-game winning streak, the Royals opened a seven-game homestand — their last of the regular season — with a four-game set against the Mariners.

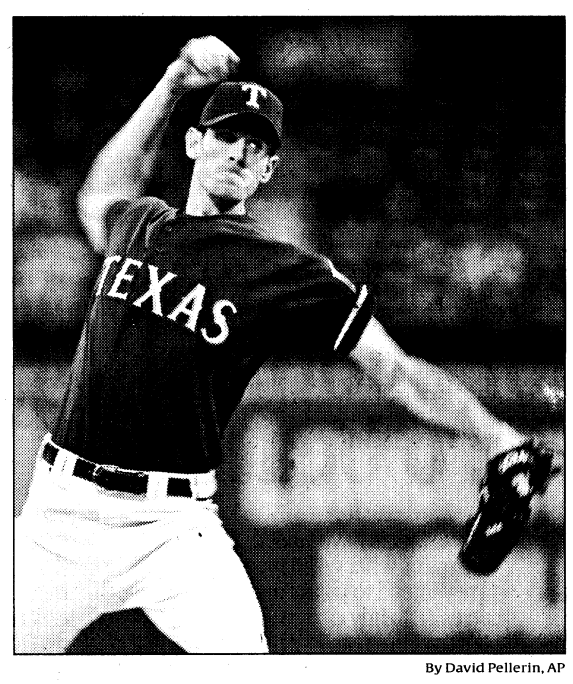
Inside the AL



By David Pellerin, AP

Brief appearance: The Rangers' Brandon McCarthy pitches Monday before injuring his hand in the first inning.

McCarthy injures hand: Texas Rangers right-hander Brandon McCarthy left Monday's start against the Detroit Tigers in the first inning with a strained flexor tendon in his pitching hand.

McCarthy got the first two outs and then began shaking his hand after delivering a pitch to Magglio Ordonez. Manager Ron Washington and team trainers ran to the mound to check on McCarthy, who could not continue.

Luis Mendoza came on to replace McCarthy, who has been limited to five starts for the Rangers this season because of right forearm inflammation. Texas will monitor McCarthy's condition over the next few days to determine whether surgery will be necessary.

Different kind of debut: With the Boston Red Sox in the heat of the AL East race, rookie catcher George Kottaras wasn't expecting to see action Saturday at Fenway Park. But with the Red Sox getting stymied 8-1 by the Toronto Blue Jays' A.J. Burnett in the first game of a doubleheader, manager Terry Francona went heavily to his bench.

Moments after being told to get loose, Kottaras found himself in the game in the seventh inning.

"I had a deer-in-the-headlights look for a second," Kottaras said. "Then I ran to get my stuff. Two minutes later I was in the game. It was pretty fun, actually."

If Kottaras was surprised, imagine how his parents felt as they caught a glimpse of their son walking to the plate for his first at-bat. They were in a Sears store in Toronto, shopping for a couch.

"My mother just called me and congratulated me," Kottaras said. "I don't know if they bought the couch, but they stayed there for an hour and a half watching the game. She said they were sitting on the recliners."

His parents, both Greek immigrants to Canada (Kottaras played for Greece in the 2004 Olympics), saw a curious first plate appearance. Kottaras reached thanks to a wild pitch on a swinging third strike, advanced on an error and scored Boston's run. Later, he narrowly missed a home run when his fly ball down the right-field line drifted foul.

"I thought it had a chance. It was close," said Kottaras, 25, who was obtained from the San Diego Padres to complete an Aug. 31, 2006, trade for David Wells. He hit 22 home runs this season at Class AAA Pawtucket (R.I.), where he batted .243 with 65 RBI. — Seth Livingstone

Stadium value disputed: New York State Assemblyman Richard Brodsky said he would issue a report today finding New York City manipulated the assessed value of the new Yankee Stadium to get an IRS tax exemption.

"We have done a fair, careful, thorough analysis and have uncovered some very disturbing things," Brodsky said.

Seth Pinsky, president of the New York City Industrial Development Agency, said he hadn't seen the report but rejected its claims. He said the stadium would create 1,000 permanent jobs, would add infrastructure and transportation access to the Bronx and already was subject to nearly 20 public hearings.

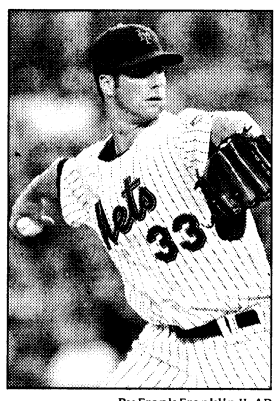
Inside the NL

Maine to close? Right-hander John Maine would be willing to work out of the New York Mets' problematic bullpen — maybe even as the closer — if he returns this season from a right shoulder injury.

Maine tossed a ball 35 times on flat ground Monday and hopes to return during next week's season-ending homestand, he said before New York's game against the Washington Nationals.

"I felt good. ... I didn't throw more than 60 feet," said Maine, on the disabled list since Aug. 24 with a bone spur in his throwing shoulder. "I'll do it again tomorrow, hopefully stretch it out a little bit more."



By Frank Franklin II, AP

Big help: The Mets' John Maine wants to contribute.

He is 10-8 with a 4.18 ERA in 25 starts this season. But he's open to relieving, if it gets him back on the field.

"I hate sitting down and not doing anything. I hope to be back by the homestand — sometime. Whether it's an inning or two out of the 'pen, that's fine," Maine said. "I just want to get out there and pitch."

Going into Monday, the Mets had 27 blown saves, including 11 in the ninth inning, and Maine himself raised the subject of trying the closer's role.

"If it helps the team, I'll do it," he said. "If I can't start a game this year, I'd like to go to the 'pen and throw the ninth inning."

Lidge impresses in Philly: Brad Lidge knows how tough it is for opposing relievers to warm up in Philadelphia's cozy ballpark. It can be uncomfortable for Phillies pitchers, too, if they're not doing well.

Fans line up along the railing just above the elevated visiting bullpen in the outfield and hurl insults at anyone in view. By the time closers start throwing, the rowdies have been drinking for a while and they can be downright vicious after a couple — or several — brews.

"I've been a visiting player and I couldn't wait to run out on that field," Lidge said.

Lidge doesn't have to worry about the verbal abuse anymore. He has been immune to boos in his first season in vociferous Philly because he's perfect. The hard-throwing righty is 36-for-36 in save opportunities with a 2-0 record and 1.99 ERA in 66 games.

Not bad for a guy who many thought couldn't do it anymore. The Houston Astros gave up on Lidge, trading him to Philadelphia last November in a five-player deal.

Lidge, 31, responded with the best season of his seven-year career. He wasn't intimidated by hitter-friendly Citizens Bank Park because he pitched in a similar environment at Minute Maid Park in Houston.

Lidge has been so key to Philadelphia's success — the Phillies are tied with the Milwaukee Brewers for the NL wild-card lead and were one game behind the New York Mets in the East entering Monday — that he could get some MVP consideration. The last two winners were Phillies, Ryan Howard in 2006 and Jimmy Rollins in '07.

With 12 games remaining, Lidge is more concerned about making the playoffs than individual accomplishments. "I'm just trying to be ready every night if I need to throw," he said. "I have to get the job done for my team."

Flat Brewers oust Yost

By Bob Nightengale
USA TODAY

The Milwaukee Brewers, desperately looking to end their September collapse and 26-year playoff absence, fired manager Ned Yost on Monday with 12 games remaining in the season.

The move marks the latest point in a season a manager has been fired with his club in playoff position, according to the Elias Sports Bureau. The Brewers have lost 11 of their last 14 games but are tied with the Philadelphia Phillies for the lead in the wild-card race.

"I never imagined that could happen in this game. That's awful" said Atlanta Braves manager Bobby Cox, one of Yost's closest friends. The two spent 12 years together in Atlanta. "That's unheard of. They're still tied for first. That's a sad commentary."

The Brewers, who had a 5½-game lead in the wild-card race on Sept. 1, replaced Yost on an interim basis with third-base coach Dale Sveum. The Brewers also hired Hall of Famer Robin Yount to replace bench coach Ted Simmons.

"Our play was very unproductive and lethargic the last few weeks," Brewers general manager Doug Melvin said. "We asked ourselves if there was some way to jump-start the club with 12 games left. We discussed coaching changes, player moves, roster moves, but we're running out of time."

Yost, whose team went 20-7 in August, did not return a message on his cellphone. He was frustrated, Melvin said, but understood the decision.

"Ned had pretty much exhausted everything he could think of," Melvin said. "Dale brings a different voice. We just hope the chemistry is such that we can turn things around."

The move comes after the Phillies swept four games from the Brewers. Milwaukee was outscored 26-10 with its starting pitchers lasting 17 innings and yielding a 10.06 ERA.

"The series was a complete and total disaster," left fielder Ryan Braun told reporters Sunday. "It couldn't have gone any worse. They couldn't have played any better. We couldn't have played any worse. We can only go in one direction from here. It's not going to get worse."

The Brewers, who had an 8½-game NL Central division lead in late June last year before fading in the second half, have been outscored 75-38 in September and are hitting just .207 with a 4.68 ERA this month.

"I don't think it was necessarily his fault," Braun said Monday. "We really like him as a person, we really like him as a manager, but they had to do what they felt was best for us as a team to get to the postseason.

"There's 12 games left, and if they think making a change is what's best for us, then they had to make that move."

Monday's games

Dodgers 8, PIRATES 2 — Hiroki Kuroda allowed three hits over seven scoreless innings for his first road win in more than two months and Manny Ramirez had three hits. With Juan Pierre homering for the first time in nearly two years, the Dodgers rebounded from Sunday's 1-0, 10-inning loss at Colorado for their 13th victory in 15 games — a surge that has given them a five-game lead in the NL West over Arizona.

NATIONALS 7, Mets 2 — Washington's John Lannan limited New York to one hit over seven innings, and Anderson Hernandez delivered a two-run single off Pedro Martinez. The Mets lost for the third time in four games, and their lead over idle Philadelphia in the NL East fell to a half-game. New York held a 3½-game cushion as recently as Wednesday.

San Diego vs. COLORADO — The Rockies — in the midst of a nine-game stretch at Coors Field — tried to make it two in a row Monday, when they opened a three-game series against the last-place Padres. Colorado avoided its third eight-game slide of the season with a 1-0, 10-inning victory Sunday against the Dodgers.

San Francisco vs. ARIZONA — The Diamondbacks, who started a four-game series against the Giants, were 4-15 since Aug. 24, when they owned a three-game lead over second-place Los Angeles in the NL West. The Dodgers now have a five-game advantage in the division.

National League notes

Arizona: 1B Josh Whitesell received his first major league start Monday in an attempt to add production to the lineup. Whitesell, 26, hit .328 with 36 doubles, 26 home runs and 110 RBI at Class AAA Tucson this season, breaking Lyle Overbay's Tucson record for RBI on the final day of the season.

Atlanta: LHP Chuck James had the shoulder surgery he had been trying to avoid for two seasons. James had a slight tear in his rotator cuff repaired, and the frayed labrum was cleaned up. James will be out for the first half of 2009 and possibly longer.

Chicago: RH reliever Chad Gaudin isn't a sure thing to return in the regular season. Gaudin hasn't pitched since Aug. 29 because of lower back soreness, but pitching coach Larry Rothschild said Gaudin was making progress at the team's Arizona facility. Rothschild said Gaudin played long-toss Sunday, and that he next was scheduled to throw a side session.

Cincinnati: Sunday's 2-1, 10-inning win at Arizona was the Reds' seventh consecutive one-run decision. Cincinnati won five of the seven games. "The only way to learn how to play one-run games is to play in them," manager Dusty Baker said.

Colorado: RHP Aaron Cook finished 2-0 with a 1.14 ERA in three starts this season against the Dodgers, allowing three earned runs in 23⅓ innings. On the season, Cook has induced 28 double plays, tops in the majors through the weekend.

Florida: CF Cameron Maybin, a key piece of the eight-player trade that sent IF Miguel Cabrera and LHP Dontrelle Willis to Detroit in December, will be among four Class AA players who will be called up today. Maybin, 21, batted .277 with 13 homers, 49 RBI and 21 stolen bases and 108 games this year for Carolina (Zebulon, N.C.). Last year, Maybin was 7-for-49 (.143) with one home run and two RBI in 24 games with the Tigers. Also coming up today: 1B Gaby Sanchez and RHPs Ryan Tucker and Jesus Delgado.

Los Angeles: 3B Casey Blake was out of the starting lineup with lingering effects from the lower back stiffness that knocked him out of Sunday's game at Colorado after five innings. Through the weekend, Blake was hitting .259 since the Dodgers acquired him from Cleveland on July 26 to be their everyday third baseman. He also had hit nine home runs in 47 games.

Milwaukee: LHP Manny Parra has surrendered 19 hits and 16 runs (10 earned) in 11⅓ innings in three starts in September (7.94 ERA). Parra has pitched 160 innings this season, well above his previous career high, 139 innings for Class A Beloit (Wis.) in 2003. He threw a combined 133 innings last year in the majors and the minors.

New York: RHP Brandon Knight, an Olympic bronze medalist, will receive a spot start Wednesday against Washington, interim manager Jerry Manuel confirmed. The start by Knight is required because Friday's rainout pushed LHP Johan Santana into a Saturday doubleheader. Knight allowed four runs in five innings against St. Louis on July 26 in his lone start for the Mets before joining Team USA.

Philadelphia: After RHP Joe Blanton tossed seven solid innings in the opener of Sunday's doubleheader against Milwaukee, pitching coach Rich Dubee said that Blanton had pitched through a mild bout of biceps tendinitis for at least two starts. To cope with the discomfort, Blanton unknowingly altered his mechanics, changing his arm slot and affecting his control. Blanton said he corrected his flaws during a bullpen session last week.

Pittsburgh: RHP Jimmy Barthmaier is expected to start Saturday against Houston at home. The rookie was originally supposed to pitch today before the rotation was shuffled when RHP Jeff Karstens' start was pushed back due to a dental problem. Barthmaier has pitched in one major league game, losing to Tampa Bay on June 27, when he gave up seven runs in 2⅓ innings. He went a combined 5-5 with a 4.02 ERA in 26 starts for Class AAA Indianapolis and Class AA Altoona (Pa.) this season.

St. Louis: C Yadier Molina, who had missed three games due to a bruised left thigh, returned to action briefly Sunday. He had to leave the game after suffering a strained left quadriceps during a fourth-inning at-bat. Molina may miss a few more games.

San Diego: RHP Cha Seung Baek, who left Sunday's game after two innings with a strained right triceps, expects to make his next start, scheduled for Sunday in Washington. Baek's run of 18 consecutive starts dating back to June 2 is the longest active streak among the team's pitchers.

San Francisco: CF Aaron Rowand and C Bengie Molina entered Monday with 13 homers apiece, sharing the team lead. The Giants had 89 homers, the only team in the majors that hadn't reached triple digits. The last time San Francisco hit fewer than 100 homers (in a season not shortened by strike or lockout) was 1980, when the team hit 80.

Washington: RHP Collin Balester carried a no-hitter into the sixth inning Sunday against Florida, and he allowed just one run on four hits before departing in the seventh. However, the rookie wasn't all that impressed with his performance. "I didn't feel like I had my best stuff," Balester said.

Ryder Cup

USA changing course to its advantage

Azinger puts his stamp on giving team shot at victory

By Jerry Potter
USA TODAY

LOUISVILLE — For the Ryder Cup, the golf course setup has become a game within the game.

Paul Azinger says he hasn't created any special advantages as captain of the U.S. team that faces Europe beginning Friday at Valhalla Golf Club.

But consider: Valhalla course superintendent Mark Wilson has spent the last 18 months working closely with Azinger, giving him the course he wants. The captain has had so much input that the first cut of rough, a strip of grass that's only slightly deeper than the fairway turf, is called the "Azinger cut."

The rest of the rough is only 3 to 3½ inches. It was 5 inches for the 1996 PGA Championship and about 4 for the 2000 PGA.

"I don't want anybody feeling handcuffed — well, I mean, I don't care if Europe feels handcuffed, but yeah, I don't want our guys to feel handcuffed," Azinger says.

"A bomber is probably going to like this course."

Tiger Woods is recovering from reconstructive knee surgery, so the U.S. team will not have the premier power player in golf. But it does have five players who rank in the top 40 in driving distance on the PGA Tour.

The longest is J.B. Holmes, who at 310.9 yards is going to be the longest hitter in the competition.

Ireland's Padraig Harrington singled out Holmes last week when talking about the U.S. team, but he added that it would be a mistake to think the Europeans couldn't take advantage of a long, forgiving course.

"Paul Casey will be our longest hitter," Harrington says. "But our three, four and five players certainly won't be struggling. We have a number of guys whose ball speed off the driver is 180 mph."

Harrington mentioned Henrik Stenson, Robert Karlsson and Sergio Garcia.

"J.B. is substantially longer off the tee than everyone else," Harrington says. "After that there is no advantage."

Harrington says the biggest challenge for the Europeans won't be taking advantage of Valhalla's fairways, which will have generous landing areas about 300 yards off the tee.

"I see the biggest difference is the greens," he says. "We've won recently because we've made more putts. Slower greens play right into our hands."

Two years ago at The K Club in Ireland, the USA, which had Woods and Phil Mickelson as its premier power players, faced a course that had fairways that were narrow and greens with slower putting surfaces.

The Europeans won by nine points, giving them two consecutive romps vs. the Americans and five victories in the last six competitions.

Valhalla will present a challenge that's just the opposite. Jack Nicklaus, who built Valhalla, spent two years redesigning it for this week. He rebuilt four greens completely, added nine tees and 24 bunkers.

The course can play 7,500 yards, but it probably won't play that long in each of the three days of competition. In fact, it's expected that the par-4, 13th hole — which has an island green — will be played at least one day during four-ball matches as a drivable par 4 of 260 yards.

"Europe has done a great job of exploiting an advantage on us for a long time," Azinger says. "I am looking for anything I can get. This is the first time that we have done this, and it might just be a perception thing. But if I can get a perceived advantage, then I am going to hunt it down."

Azinger also will have a hand in setting the pin placements.

"Overall, I'm very comfortable with the way the course is going to likely be set up," PGA managing director of championships Kerry Haigh says. "It will make for a truly great Ryder Cup experience."

No. 13 will dare players to attack

LOUISVILLE — Match-play golf always is good for risk-reward situations, and there's probably going to be one major chance for players to take a risk this week at the Ryder Cup.

PGA of America officials, who have consulted with course officials and U.S. captain Paul Azinger, probably will set up the island-green 13th as a 260-yard drivable par 4 during part of the competition. From the back tees, it's a 352-yard par-4.

"Now, that could be a lot of fun," U.S. team member J.B. Holmes says. "If they did that, people could go for it ... if you are playing best-ball. It sure would make for a lot of excitement."

Kerry Haigh, the PGA's managing director of championships, said tee locations will be decided just before each round.

Moving up the tee probably would be used in the fourball (better-ball) format, so one player could try to drive the green.

Valhalla takes hit from wind, storms

Even as European captain Nick Faldo and seven of his players arrived Monday on a charter flight from London, much of Louisville was without power as the host city tried to recover from a spin-off storm generated by Hurricane Ike that brought 60 mph wind.

Fairways that normally are as clean as carpet were littered with small twigs and leaves, with larger branches scattered in the rough. Dozens of workers were busy raking the leaves into piles, and carts zipped along the roads removing the debris. A TV tower collapsed onto the back of the 12th green, causing enough damage to possibly eliminate one back hole location.

Course superintendent Mark Wilson and his crew patched up the dents with pieces of sod in the shape of circles and squares.

Hotels housing players did have power, the PGA said.

On track: Lightning defenseman Paul Ranger, playing March 13 vs. the Bruins, is recovering from a shoulder injury but looks to be on track to start the season. The same is true for star center Vincent Lecavalier.

Lightning going far to get close

Overhauled team extends Europe trip for more bonding time

By Kevin Allen
USA TODAY

General manager Brian Lawton is counting on the Tampa Bay Lightning learning more about one another by living out of a suitcase together than by playing alongside each other.

In working out the final details of Tampa Bay's season-opening games against the New York Rangers in Prague, Czech Republic, the Lightning purposely extended the trip to give players more time to bond.

"We are not an expansion team but we have made a number of changes to our roster, and it's imperative for us to jell as soon as possible," Lawton said. "There is no better way to do this than in this type of environment."

Tampa Bay finished 30th out of 30 NHL teams last season, and since then the team has changed its ownership, GM and coaches. And it likely will enter the 2008-09 season with 12 new faces on the roster. The Lightning and the Rangers will open training camp today, as will the Ottawa Senators and Pittsburgh Penguins, who will open the season playing each other in Sweden.

"We are over there the longest of the four teams, and that's by design," Lawton said. "There are half as many distractions."

Before playing the Rangers on Oct. 4-5, the Lightning will play exhibitions vs. European teams in Berlin and Bratislava, Slovakia. The bonding time will be as much for coaches and management as players, because coach Barry Melrose and Lawton have worked together for less than three months and spent much of that time changing the roster.

"But the one common theme since I came here is how impressed I am with Barry," Lawton said, "not only as a coach but also as a person."

Although Melrose hasn't coached in the NHL in 13 years, Lawton said he's up to speed.

In 1993, Melrose took the Los Angeles Kings to the Stanley Cup Finals, where they lost to the Montreal Canadiens.

"It's not like he's been on a desert island or away from the game," Lawton said, referring to Melrose's longtime job as ESPN hockey analyst. "He knows the styles that teams have been playing, and he's a great motivator."

Lawton, a former player and agent, has issues to deal with once training camp starts. His team probably has too many veteran forwards. He said he has had talks with teams about possible trades but is in no hurry to make a deal. The most vulnerable Lightning players likely are Jussi Jokinen and Michel Ouellet.

Lawton says he gets almost daily reports on Vinny Lecavalier and Paul Ranger (shoulder injuries). Both appear on track to start the season.

"Vinny will play the last two or three exhibition games," Lawton said. "We will continue to monitor them, but so far we think it's going well."

Around the rinks: Wayne Gretzky won't return as executive director of Team Canada at the 2010 Olympics, though he'll likely be with the team in some capacity, Hockey Canada said. ... Boston University professor Jack Falla, 62, Sports Illustrated's NHL writer in the 1980s, died Sunday of a heart attack.

Oregon QB Roper to miss some time

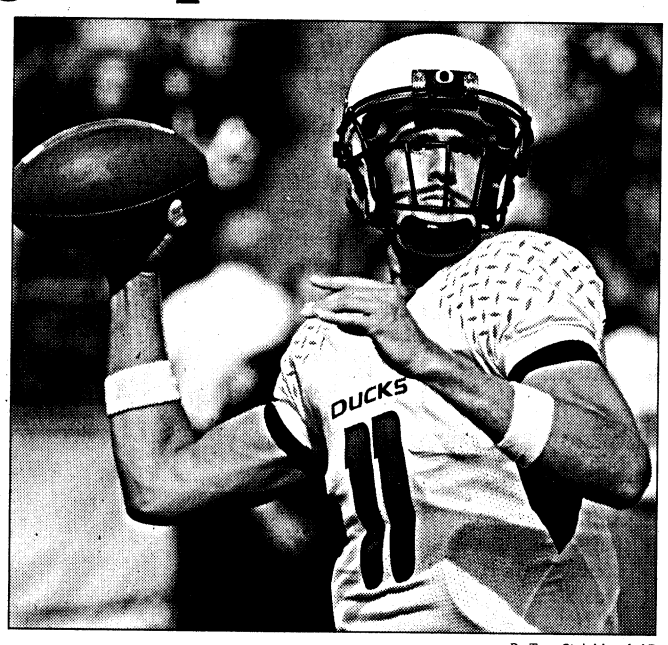
From staff and wire reports

Oregon quarterback Justin Roper will be out for two to four weeks because of a partially torn ligament in his left knee.

Ducks coach Mike Bellotti said Roper injured his knee late in a 32-26 double-overtime victory Saturday at Purdue and preliminary reports indicate a partial tear of his medial collateral ligament.

Roper was picked to start for No. 12 Oregon (3-0) in the week before the team's opener against Washington when projected starter Nate Costa injured his left knee in practice. Costa is expected to miss the season.

The Ducks host Boise State on Saturday. The team is expected to use backup Jeremiah Masoli and true freshman Chris Harper at quarterback.



By Tom Strickland, AP

Banged up: Justin Roper partially tore a ligament late in Oregon's comeback win in double-overtime against Purdue last weekend.

Pirate sidelined: East Carolina linebacker Quentin Cotton probably is out for the season after injuring his right knee Saturday during the Pirates' victory at Tulane.

Cotton, one of East Carolina's top defensive players, was hurt in the second quarter during a goal-line stand in the 28-24 come-from-behind win.

The senior had started 15 games the last two seasons and all three games this year for No. 17 East Carolina, which visits North Carolina State this week. Cotton has two interceptions.

East Carolina probably also will be without left tackle Stanley Bryant, who is out indefinitely after injuring his knee. He started all three games this season.

In memoriam: The oldest college football fan in the country, Walter Seward, died Sunday at 111. The fifth oldest male in the world, he was a dedicated Rutgers fan who lived in West Orange, N.J. He missed only six of his class reunions since graduating in 1917.

He lived in the same dorm as Paul Robeson and was a practice player and manager for the football team, even playing in one game. "I got in for one play," he told USA TODAY in a 2006 profile.

He was not much more than 5-feet-something. Did he make a play? "Never had the chance." The ball never came his way.

Seward most recently was featured on the back cover of Rutgers' alumni magazine. In the article, he was asked his secret to a long life. "Strawberry ice cream," he said. He ate a bowl every day and just missed reaching his 112th birthday Oct. 13.

Storm damage: The Hanover-Butler football game Saturday has been canceled because of severe weather that left the Hanover, Ind., area without power and water. The game was to have been played in Indianapolis.

The storm that moved through southeast Indiana on Sunday forced Hanover to cancel classes and extracurricular activities, including sports, until Sept. 22. The schools' athletics directors spoke Monday.

Butler is a non-scholarship Championship Subdivision (formerly I-AA) program. Hanover is a Division III program.

Biffle making a nickname for himself

'The Biff' hopes to be called one thing after Chase

By Nate Ryan
USA TODAY

LOUDON, N.H. — In a sport enduring a dearth of good nicknames after once producing "The Intimidator," "The Silver Fox" and "The King," understated Greg Biffle already has two.

There's "The Biff," a creation of TV talking heads who apparently like Back to the Future, and "The Dark Horse," a tribute to Biffle's low profile despite 13 Cup victories and two NASCAR championships.

In Sunday's Sylvania 300 victory at New Hampshire Motor Speedway, the Roush Fenway Racing driver showed he could be ready to be fitted with a more prestigious label: "The Champ."

Biffle, the only member of the 12-driver Chase for the Sprint Cup field with a shot at being crowned the first king of NASCAR's three national series, proved worthy of championship consideration by dethroning the two-time defending Cup ruler.

Jimmie Johnson was sailing toward his third consecutive win and an impressive opening bid for capturing his third consecutive title when Biffle snookered Johnson shortly after a restart with 13 laps remaining. On lap 289 of 300, Biffle slid the nose of his No. 16 Ford inside Johnson's No. 48 Chevrolet and zoomed by on the back straightaway.

The Chase is on . . . : Greg Biffle celebrates his victory Sunday at New Hampshire as he makes a run for his third NASCAR series title.

"He had been watching me all day overdrive the car and (make) some mistakes, so he was probably planning on me making a mistake in the last 13 laps," Biffle said. "He's won a lot of races, and we have to beat those guys in order to get that Sprint Cup trophy that I saw in New York."

The Vancouver, Wash., native is familiar with championship hardware, having won the 2000 Craftsman Truck Series title and 2002 Nationwide Series crown, and he likes his chances in the final nine races of 2008. Biffle, 38, has won at four of those tracks (including the next two) — Dover International Speedway, Kansas Speedway, Texas Motor Speedway and Homestead-Miami Speedway.

"I felt like we were a definite threat because of the momentum we've had and how good the racetracks are in the Chase for me," Biffle said. "I was a little nervous about Loudon, Martinsville and Talladega. We've gotten through (Loudon) better than I expected, so I feel like we're definitely the dark horse."

Because five of the 10 Chase races are on 1.5-mile tracks, perhaps Biffle (eight wins on 1.5- to 2-mile ovals) should be receiving more consideration. He missed the last two Chases after finishing second to Tony Stewart (35 points behind) in 2005, and the favorite chatter during a New York media day Wednesday overlooked Biffle in favor of Johnson, Carl Edwards and Kyle Busch.

Biffle is 30 points behind Edwards and Johnson and 44 ahead of Busch, who placed 34th on Sunday.

"Overlooked, dark horse, not the favorite, it really makes no difference to me," crew chief Greg Erwin said. "I certainly wouldn't take that personally."

Neither does Biffle, who laughed while reviewing his many monikers in a postrace news conference Sunday. "They named me 'The Biff,' and then they said I was a dark horse and now I don't know what else they're going to call me," he said.

"Winner," Erwin replied.

Logano debut: Joey Logano finished three laps down in 32nd place in his Sprint Cup debut Sunday. He started 40th and was penalized 39 laps into the race for taking the jack with him as he exited pit road.

College football

Big 12 quarterbacks putting up eye-popping numbers

By Steve Wieberg
USA TODAY

John Hadl's reputation might endure at Kansas, but his numbers don't.

In two All-America seasons at KU in the early '60s, he totaled fewer completions and touchdown passes than the Jayhawks' current quarterback, Todd Reesing, has in three games this season.

"It's a whole different world today," says Hadl, now 68 and an associate athletics director at the school. "Better athletes and better coaching. Everything's just better."

Consider: Reesing, who came up spectacularly short of lifting KU to a comeback win at South Florida last week, is major college football's 24th-highest rated passer. But he's only eighth-best in his conference. From Oklahoma's Sam Bradford to Missouri's Chase Daniel to emerging freshman star Robert Griffin at Baylor, the Big 12 — with roots in Oklahoma's ground-based wishbone and Nebraska's power option — is flush with talent behind center and awash in video game-like passing numbers.

Bradford, Kansas State's Josh Freeman and Daniel rank 2-3-4 in the nation in efficiency this week. Add Texas' Colt McCoy, Oklahoma State's Zac Robinson and Griffin, and the Big 12 accounts for six of the highest-rated 13.

The league's 12 starting QBs boast a combined 69.5% completion rate for 256 yards and a little more than two TDs a game. Their teams have a combined record of 28-4, with five ranked in both the USA TODAY Coaches' and Associated Press media polls.

"They're (in) fast-break, attack-style offenses that run up some numbers and move the football very fast and efficient," says Oklahoma State coach Mike Gundy, a former record-setting quarterback at OSU. "And obviously, the quarterback is the guy that's going to get the credit, whether it's good or bad."

To this early point in the season, it's largely good.

Some of the success, you could see coming. Bradford, the nation's top-rated passer as a redshirt freshman a year ago, and Daniel, fourth in the Heisman Trophy balloting as a junior, were among 10 starting quarterbacks returning this season — 11 if you counted late-2007 injury replacement Joe Ganz at Nebraska.

Their impact extends beyond individual abilities, Texas Tech coach Mike Leach says.

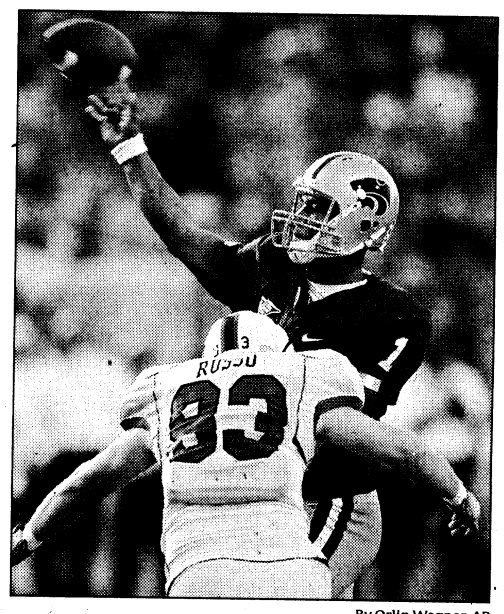
"You tend to have really good, cohesive offenses just because of the influence those players have," he says. "(Teammates) are used to responding to that guy, following that guy. And if they're good work-ethic guys, I think they got more out of their offseasons."

To that add the Big 12's embrace of high-yield spread offenses and a spate of nonconference mismatches. Its teams have played just eight of their first 28 games against teams from other marquee leagues (Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big Ten, Pacific-10 and Southeastern), though the pedigree of opponents has made little difference.

Bradford passed for 183 yards and two TDs in a mercy-shortened appearance against lower-division Chattanooga, then 305 yards and five TDs at Washington last weekend. Daniel threw for three touchdowns against No. 23 Illinois, three against outmanned Southeast Missouri State and four Saturday against Nevada.

Again, it's early. But both quarterbacks, along with K-State's Freeman, have higher efficiency ratings than Colt Brennan's major-college record 186.0 for Hawaii in 2006.

It's enough to lead an old Kansas great to admire a guy in archrival Missouri's black and gold. "That Daniel, he just plays catch," Hadl marvels. "It's the (darnedest) thing I've ever seen. He just hits 'em."



By Orlin Wagner, AP

Armed and dangerous: Kansas State's Josh Freeman is third in the nation in passing efficiency.

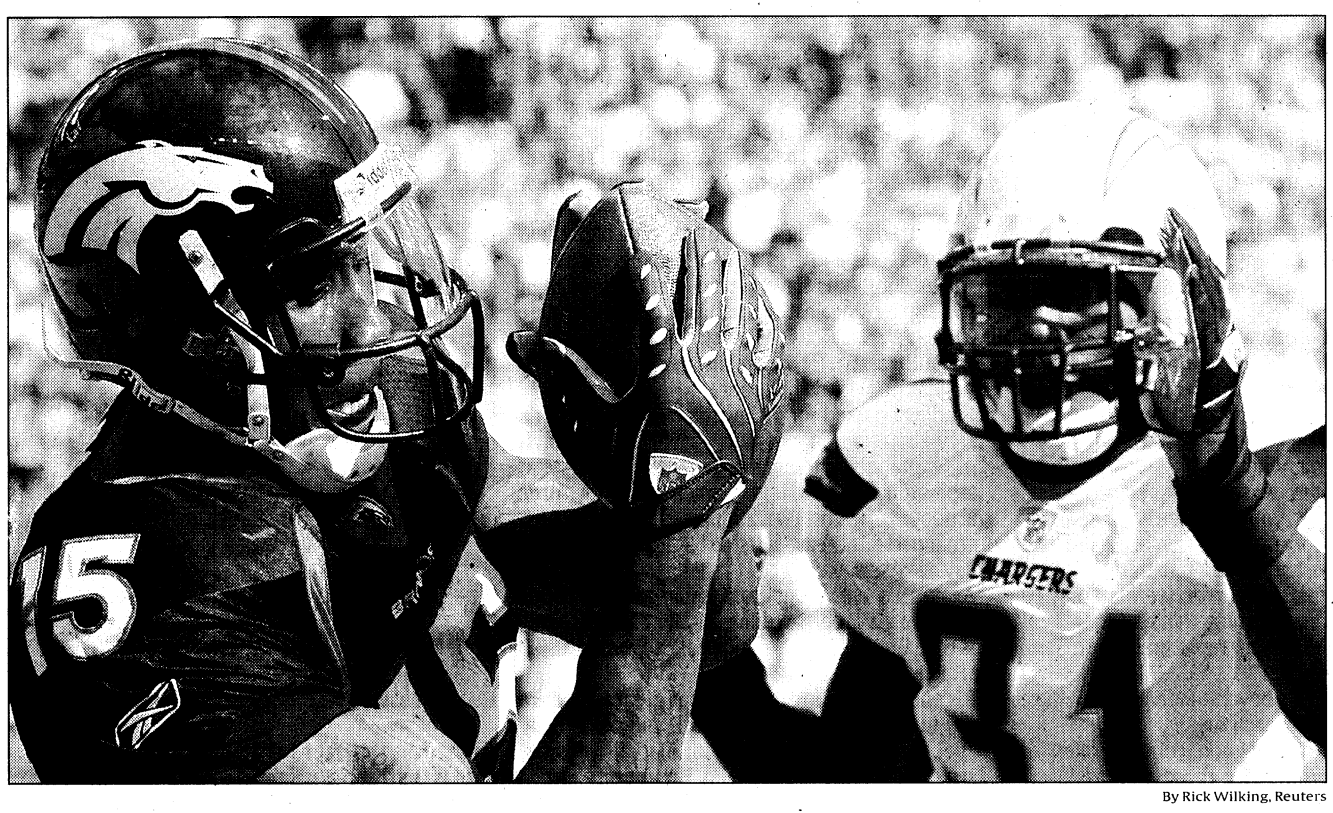
National Football League



By Rick Wilking, Reuters

A gripping game: This second-quarter touchdown grab was one of Brandon Marshall's 18 catches Sunday, breaking Rod Smith's Broncos record of 14 and tying Tom Fears for the second-best single-game performance in NFL history. Terrell Owens holds the record with 20.

Grab for record comes close

1st Catching on

Brandon Marshall said his goals haven't changed. He still wants to set records.

Back from a one-game suspension for violating the NFL's personal-conduct code, Marshall caught 18 passes for 166 yards and a touchdown Sunday in his debut, the Denver Broncos' 39-38

Four downs
By Larry Weisman

victory against the San Diego Chargers.

It turns out he wasn't even talking about the team record for receptions, held previously by Rod Smith (14, in 2001 against the Arizona Cardinals). He had in mind the one Terrell Owens set in 2000 with the San Francisco 49ers — the NFL single-game mark.

"I believe the record was 21 or 22, so I was close," Marshall said.

Closer than he thought. Owens caught 20. Marshall's 18 tie him for second all time with Tom Fears, who did it in 1950 while with the Los Angeles Rams.

Smith, who retired in late July, had been introduced with the Broncos starters as the honorary captain for the Chargers game.

2nd Back attack

Getting information from Tom Coughlin can be like pulling tusks.

Just a few days ago, the New York Giants coach was asked about his three-pack of running backs in general and Ahmad Bradshaw specifically. Brandon Jacobs got plenty of carries in the opening victory against the Washington Redskins, and Derek Ware saw his share, but Bradshaw got none.

In response, Coughlin first talked about run-pass balance. Then he mentioned how all three backs get snaps in practice. What about actual carries for Bradshaw against the St. Louis Rams?

"We will see," said the Oracle of East Rutherford, N.J. "It depends on how the game goes."

The game went better because Bradshaw saw the ball. He scored two of the Giants' three fourth-quarter touchdowns that buried the upset-minded Rams. The Giants won 41-13, but they led only 20-13 when Bradshaw got busy. He caught an 18-yard pass and scored untouched to give the Giants a 27-13 lead and scored again on a 31-yard run that produced the final points.

Jacobs, Ware and Bradshaw combined to rush for 203 yards, or two more yards than the Rams gained in total offense all afternoon. Running back Steven Jackson was the Rams' leading rusher with 53 yards on 13 carries, while quarterback Marc Bulger threw for 177 yards.

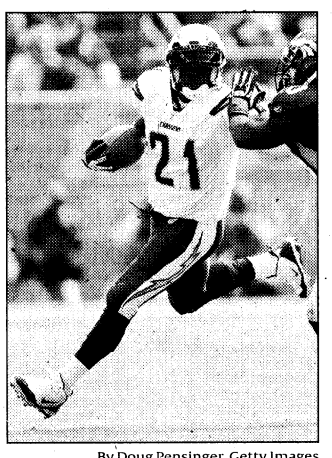
Harassed: The Titans hounded Carson Palmer and the Bengals.



By Doug Pensinger, Getty Images

3rd Bengals bungle

They're 0-2. They stop no one, other than themselves. Bad against the run for years, they are bad against the run again. Only now their offense has no pop. The Cincinnati Bengals have a player who changed his name but none who change the game.

Hammered 24-7 at home by the Tennessee Titans, the Bengals got a look at what a tough-minded team does when beset by problems. The Titans dealt all week with quarterback Vince Young's injury and unsettled state of mind and then bailed out backup Kerry Collins with a running game that produced 177 yards on 41 carries.

The Bengals? They punted the first four times they had the ball and in the final quarter endured a blocked punt and interceptions on consecutive possessions. Chad Ocho Cinco (formerly Johnson) had four receptions that didn't matter and was penalized for holding and offensive pass interference. Hello, 0-2 ... and that's the club's worst start since Marvin Lewis became coach in 2003.

No Era of Good Feeling here. Just errors. Consider Lewis' response after Titans rookie Chris Johnson's 51-yard run: "I think everybody in the stadium knew they were going to run a draw, except for maybe the 11 guys on the field."

They'll try to turn it around on Sunday on the road against the Giants. "We're still a good enough team to go to New York and get a win," quarterback Carson Palmer said. "We've just got to find a way to do it."

Always the hardest part.

4th Discharged

The Chargers showed last season they were a second-half team. They were 5-5 just past midseason and getting booed at home and then ran off six consecutive victories and two more in the playoffs before falling to the New England Patriots in the AFC title game.

They might have to do it again. They're 0-2 after last-play and last-minute losses. Their next outing is Monday night vs. the New York Jets and Brett Favre.

"This is two weeks in a row that we've allowed a team to score at the end of the game, and we can't do that," safety Clinton Hart said.

Finishing strong can erase the taint of these defeats. The Chargers understand that success in the playoffs often belongs to the teams that get hot later, as the Giants did to win the Super Bowl and as the Pittsburgh Steelers did two years before.

"It's a long season, and we all know that," running back LaDainian Tomlinson said. "It is hard on everybody when you start 0-2. It will test the character of our team, but I don't think that we have any quitters."

Titans to stay course with Collins at helm

Coach: It makes sense to go with him

From wire reports

The Tennessee Titans are sticking with veteran Kerry Collins as their starting quarterback as long as the team keeps winning.

Coach Jeff Fisher said so Monday after the Titans' 24-7 windy win at the Cincinnati Bengals. The Titans are 2-0 for the first time since 1999, when they made their lone Super Bowl appearance.

Notes

"We're going to get Vince back, get his knee back, work with him, get him back involved in the offense," Fisher said. "But Kerry's going to play for us until either he struggles or whatever else happens. You saw by the way he played. ... It just makes sense to go with him."

That's not what Young was expecting last week when he talked to news reporters about what prompted the search to check on his mental well-being. Asked if he would have to win his starting job back, Young said he doubted it. "They drafted me to be the quarterback here at the organization, and that's what they want me to do. What I like about our organization is they're behind me all the way from Houston," Young said last week.

But for now, Fisher said, it just makes sense to go with Collins after watching him play nearly mistake-free against the Bengals.

"Kerry did a great job managing the game," Fisher said.

Texans to practice: The Houston Texans will resume practicing today, with uncertainty about their future after Hurricane Ike seriously damaged Reliant Stadium.

Aerial photos of the stadium's retractable roof showed five pieces missing, with four on one end of the stadium, and officials said large pieces of debris had fallen into the $352 million stadium, which was the first in the NFL to have a retractable roof.

Around the league: Washington Redskins tight end Chris Cooley apologized Monday for posting an explicit photo of himself on his website. Cooley accidentally revealed more of himself than he wanted when he took a picture Sunday morning while preparing for the game against the New Orleans Saints. Cooley wanted to show the readers of his popular blog some of the study materials the players were given by coach Jim Zorn. Cooley, however, was studying in the nude, and he didn't examine his photo closely before posting it. ... Atlanta Falcons safety Lawyer Milloy has been arrested on DUI and speeding charges in suburban Atlanta. Authorities say the 34-year-old player was released from jail Monday morning after posting bond of $1,600.

No excuses: Coach Romeo Crennel said the Browns "ran into two pretty good teams, but every team in the NFL is good."

Strong opponents, weak offense put Browns in 0-2 hole

By Gary Mihoces
USA TODAY

BEREA, Ohio — In a season they began with high expectations, the Cleveland Browns are 0-2. Coach Romeo Crennel took no consolation Monday from the fact that those home losses have come against the Dallas Cowboys and the Pittsburgh Steelers, neither a homecoming opponent.

"We ran into two pretty good teams, but every team in the NFL is good," Crennel said. "Everybody has firepower, and you have to play good if you're going to beat them."

The Browns were beaten 10-6 Sunday night by the Steelers in a game played in gusting winds and intermittent rain. It was the Browns' 10th consecutive loss to the AFC North-rival Steelers and the 16th defeat in their last 17 meetings.

"I think our defense did a hell of a job. To hold a team like that to 10 points, all the credit to them," Browns tight end Kellen Winslow II said. "If we can play like that throughout the 16-game season, then we're going to win a lot of games.

"Offensively, special teams, we've got to pick it up a little bit. So we'll see them (the Steelers) in December."

He referred to a Dec. 28 game in Pittsburgh on the last weekend of the regular season. Next up for the Browns is a road game Sunday against the Baltimore Ravens.

"It's a division opponent this week, so we've got to make sure we go out there and get a big win," cornerback Eric Wright said.

Sunday night, Crennel opted for a 38-yard field goal by Phil Dawson with 3:24 left rather than try for a game-tying touchdown on fourth-and-7 from the Pittsburgh 20-yard line. The kick cut the lead to 10-6, and the Browns had three timeouts left.

"At that time, I said, 'OK, we've got time on the clock, so let's kick the field goal," Crennel said. "As I'm looking at it, thinking about the way the defense has played all game ... we can stop them. Then I think that our offense will have enough time to drive the ball down the field and give us a chance to win."

The Steelers, 2-0 going into their Sunday game at the Philadelphia Eagles, had other plans.

On a drive that started at the Pittsburgh 31-yard line, the Steelers picked up a first down on a 19-yard pass from Ben Roethlisberger to tight end Heath Miller. A 19-yard run by Willie Parker gave Pittsburgh another first down.

The Browns didn't get the ball back until Pittsburgh turned it over on downs at the Cleveland 26-yard line with 26 seconds left. Cleveland quarterback Derek Anderson threw two incomplete passes with a sack in between, and the game was over.

In the first round of the playoffs last season, Pittsburgh had a similar chance to run out the clock in the final minutes against the Jacksonville Jaguars. Instead, Pittsburgh went three-and-out and the Jaguars drove for the winning field goal.

"The last drive, that's what it takes to put the dagger in a team. ... That just says a lot for our offensive line," Parker said.

Said Crennel: "We didn't stop them. We got the ball too late. ... We just didn't have enough time to mount an effective drive."

Update

A quick read on the news of the day

Olympic medalist tells of sexual abuse

Margaret Hoelzer, the U.S. swimmer who won three medals at the Beijing Olympics, says she was 5 years old when a playmate's father started sexually abusing her, the Associated Press reported Monday.

Although the timeline is a bit fuzzy due to her young age, Hoelzer and her mother believe the abuse went on for at least two years, ending when that family moved away.

"I was going to their house on a regular basis," Hoelzer said in an interview with the AP. "I would spend the night at their house from time to time. ... It was definitely a situation where I was taught to trust that person."

AP

Hoelzer

Even after the abuse stopped, it took years to realize what happened.

The alleged molester was arrested. There was no real physical evidence because Hoelzer wasn't raped. Also, the passage of time and a child's still-developing memory raised doubts about whether a conviction could be reached. The case was taken to a grand jury, but no formal charges were ever brought.

"I was very angry for a long time that nothing happened and he got off scot free," Hoelzer conceded.

"Now that I'm older," she added, "I realize that's not how it is. A lack of evidence is just a lack of evidence."

Dutch doubles team wins at Paralympics

Korie Homan and Sharon Walraven won gold in wheelchair tennis at the Paralympics on Monday in Beijing, defeating Dutch compatriots Jiske Griffioen and Esther Vergeer 2-6, 7-6 (6-4), 6-4. The Paralympics wind down today with the final day Wednesday.

▶ Swimmer Kelley Becherer of Sheboygan, Wis., claimed gold Monday in the women's 50-meter freestyle with a time of 27.85 seconds. ... In wheelchair rugby, the USA beat Great Britain 35-32 to earn a berth in the gold-medal game. The Americans play Australia today. ... The U.S. women's wheelchair basketball team beat Germany 50-38 to claim gold. Christina Ripp led the team with 16 points. ... In the men's shot put, Iraq war veteran Scott Winkler of Grovetown, Ga., finished in fifth place, setting a personal best — 11.27 meters and 995 points.

Witchcraft rumor sparks riot at soccer game

Accusations that a soccer player was using witchcraft during a match in eastern Congo sparked a riot that killed 13 people, a U.N.-funded radio station reported Monday. Most of the victims were between the ages of 11 and 16, Radio Okapi said. They were suffocated as panicked crowds ran for the exits during the mayhem Sunday in Butembo in eastern Congo's North Kivu province. Radio Okapi said police tried to control the violence at Matokeo stadium by firing into the air to protect their commander, who was hit in the head and wounded by fans.

▶ In Major League Soccer, the New York Red Bulls signed goalkeeper Terry Boss, the older brother of New York Giants tight end Kevin Boss, to their roster on Monday.

NCAA rules against N.C. prep school

Athletes attending Charis Prep school in Wilson, N.C., could face a tougher path to NCAA eligibility after the organization did not approve the school's academic credentials Monday. The decision means the NCAA will not use the school's core courses, grades or graduation records to determine freshman eligibility although students enrolled this year can still ask the NCAA for individual reviews. Charis Prep has appealed. Two highly recruited basketball players at the school that could be affected are Bawa Muniru, a 6-9 forward from Ghana, who is being recruited by several big schools, including Indiana; and Keith DeWitt, a 6-10 forward who has committed to Missouri.

▶ UNC-Asheville's Kenny George, at 7-foot-7 the nation's tallest college basketball player, might not play this season because of a foot injury. George had two surgical procedures on an infected right foot, the school said.

Garcia wins 15th stage; Contador leads Vuelta

David Garcia Dapena of Spain won the 15th leg of the Spanish Vuelta on Monday, while compatriot Alberto Contador held the overall lead. Garcia Dapena completed the 126-mile route from Cudillero to Ponferrada in a time of 5 hours, 2 minutes, 27 seconds. Contador holds an overall lead of 1:17 over the USA's Levi Leipheimer.

▶ Italian cyclist Dario Frigo and his wife, Susan, were given suspended sentences of six months each Monday after being convicted on drug charges in Albertville, France. The banned endurance-boosting hormone EPO were found in her car during the 2005 Tour de France.

Briefly ...

Olin Stephens, a naval architect who designed eight America's Cup winners along with thousands of cruising and racing yachts, has died. He was 100. Stephens, the senior member of the New York Yacht Club, died Sept. 13 in Hanover, N.H., US Sailing reported on its website, without giving a cause. ... A Kentucky safety panel on Monday voted to outlaw certain kinds of whips and riding crops that have a snapper — strands of material at the end that can leave welts on horses — in harness racing. It also recommended restrictions on the way in which a driver can hit a horse. The Kentucky Horse Racing Commission could approve the new rules at its next meeting Sept. 22.

Sagarin college football ratings

These computer ratings for Division I football were devised by Jeff Sagarin, a 1970 MIT mathematics graduate. The rating is a numerical measure of the team's strength. A hypothetical victory margin is determined by comparing the rating of the two teams after adding 2.87 points to the home team. This home edge will vary during the season. Only Division I games are counted for rating and schedule strength. *-Football Championship Subdivision (Division I-AA) team.

A diminishing-returns principle exists to prevent teams from building up ratings by running up large victory margins against weak teams. Instead, it rewards teams that do well against good opponents. The BCS (Bowl Championship Series) does not factor in scoring margin. For more Sagarin ratings go to www.usatoday.com.

Dow tumbles 504

Over $700 billion in wealth obliterated

By Matt Krantz and Adam Shell
USA TODAY

The stock market suffered its worst rout in seven years Monday amid growing fears that the credit crunch is entering a more dangerous phase.

With a growing number of U.S. investment banks, insurers and other financial institutions fighting for survival, some investors are coming to the conclusion that the entire system is at risk.

"The fear is that mortgage credit risk exists everywhere," says James Stack, president of InvesTech Research. "As a market historian who has been through the '87 crash and 2000 tech meltdown, I can't say I'm not concerned."

Stocks suffered their worst losses since the Sept. 11 terror attacks as jittery investors struggled to digest one of the biggest and most sudden upheavals in the financial system in decades — the collapse of Lehman Bros., the buyout of Merrill Lynch and solvency concerns at AIG.

The pain was widespread:

- The Dow Jones industrials fell 504.48 points, or 4.4%, to 10,917.51. It was the sixth-largest point drop in history.
- The Standard & Poor's 500 index dropped 59.00 points, or 4.7%, to 1192.70, its first close below 1200 since Oct. 28, 2005. Financial stocks in the S&P 500 fell a record 10.3%.
- The sell-off obliterated more than $700 billion in shareholder wealth.

Dow drops

The Dow Jones industrial average suffered its sixth-biggest point loss ever Monday. Dow's biggest daily declines:

Market veteran Hugh Johnson of Johnson Illington Advisors called the market turbulence "historic." Investors were encouraged earlier in the day as the S&P 500 traded above its prior closing low for the year. But the selling pressure gained, and the index hit a fresh low for the year. It's now 23.8% off its all-time high.

The bulk of the selling centered around stocks in the insurance and diversified financial industries. AIG fell 61% and Lehman fell $3.44, or 94%, to 21 cents.

Selling was exacerbated by so-called short sellers, who bet that stocks will fall further, says Todd Leone, a trader at Cowen. A short seller profits by selling borrowed shares and buying them back at lower prices. "It seems like everyone is saying who is next to fail," Leone says.

While panic selling hadn't set in early Monday, that doesn't mean it won't, says Edward Wedbush, president of Wedbush Morgan Securities. "The selling is disciplined, and the panic part has not shown up," he says. "The question is, will it show up? It could get considerably worse."

But other investors are optimistic this is the washing out that's needed for the system to heal, says Jon Merriman, CEO at investment bank Merriman Curhan Ford.

Regulators and banks try to save AIG

Several options considered to shore up global insurer

By Edward Iwata and Sue Kirchhoff
USA TODAY

Insurance giant American International Group struggled Monday to find a financial lifeline that would prevent it from becoming the next victim in the market crisis sweeping the financial sector.

Government regulators and Wall Street banks working with AIG weighed several potential plans to shore up the global insurer, which has been crippled by the credit and subprime mortgage meltdowns.

New York Gov. David Paterson said in a news conference that AIG could use $20 billion from its subsidiaries as collateral to raise cash to sustain itself during the financial crisis.

Paterson, who is involved because states regulate the insurance industry, said that the move will help the insurer fund its daily operations. Paterson also said the state is asking federal regulators for an extraordinary extension of credit to help AIG manage.

AIG executives met in New York with Timothy Geithner, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and representatives from the Treasury Department and the New York State Insurance Department. Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan Chase, a financial adviser to AIG, are also involved.

Bloomberg News

Willumstad

Details of possible plans were not disclosed. But among the possibilities is participation by Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan Chase in a loan fund of $70 billion to $75 billion to help AIG, according to a financial industry official who would not be named because talks are private. The Wall Street Journal website first reported the possibility of the private sector fund to backstop AIG.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson on Monday downplayed the possibility of the government stepping in with special aid for AIG. During a White House news conference, he said, "What's going on in New York is a private sector effort."

AIG, one of the world's largest insurers, with $1 trillion in assets in 2007, posted $13 billion in losses in the first six months of 2008 after being rocked by the subprime loan debacle. The insurer, which named former Citigroup executive Robert Willumstad as CEO in June, may face more losses from hurricanes that recently hit the Gulf of Mexico region.

AIG could write down $30 billion in the current quarter, and credit-rating agencies likely will downgrade it, says Citigroup analyst Joshua Shanker. "We believe AIG will survive," Shanker wrote in a report. But he said it's unclear what assets AIG will sell to stay afloat.

AIG's stock, which traded at about $70 last fall, tumbled 61% Monday to $4.76.

Hewlett-Packard cutting 24,600 jobs

Hewlett-Packard plans to cut 7.5% of its workforce, or 24,600 jobs, in order to wring efficiencies from its recent acquisition of Electronic Data Systems, the company said Monday. In a statement issued before meeting Wall Street analysts to discuss plans for the $13.2 billion EDS merger, HP said it intends to carry out the cutbacks over the next three years, while replacing about half these jobs in new areas of its services business. HP said it will take a charge of $1.7 billion in its fiscal fourth quarter, which ends in October. Accounting for goodwill will cost $1.4 billion, while the cost of the restructuring will involve an additional $300 million. HP estimated $1.8 billion in annual cost savings once the three-year cost-cutting program is completed.

Best Buy purchasing Napster

Napster, the online music community that rose from a dorm room project to became the scourge of the global recording industry, is being bought by Best Buy for nearly $127 million as the retailer tries to boost its digital music business. The $2.65-per-share all-cash deal announced is nearly double the network's Friday closing price but a small sum for Best Buy to pay, as it gets access to Napster's 700,000 subscribers, who pay a monthly fee to access digital music catalogs. In a statement, Best Buy valued the deal at $121 million, and said the difference was due to unvested employee stock awards at Napster. Its most recent quarterly filing says Napster had about 47.9 million shares outstanding as of Aug. 8, implying a price of $126.9 million.

Wendy's approves buyout by Triarc

Shareholders approved Wendy's International $2 billion buyout by Triarc, the Arby's sandwich chain owner controlled by billionaire investor Nelson Peltz. The deal, which combines Triarc with the No. 3 U.S. hamburger restaurant, is expected to close at the end of September and the merged entity will be called Wendy's/Arby's Group, the companies said. Wendy's shares fell 84 cents to $22.00; Triarc shares fell 18 cents to $5.20.

USA TODAY opening Travel Zones

Timed to its 26th anniversary this week, USA TODAY will open its first three Travel Zone stores at Detroit Metro airport's new North Terminal on Wednesday. Featuring the newspaper's familiar colored banners, the USA TODAY stores will be divided into sections aligned with the newspaper's content. The red Sports section will carry sports magazines, for example, while the green Money section will sell books and magazines about investing and personal finance. The stores will also sell refreshments and merchandise, with stocking decisions made by its partner, HDS Retail North America. BofA buys out Merrill in bold move

CEO: It's the 'strategic opportunity of a lifetime'

By Kathy Chu and Matt Krantz
USA TODAY

Bank of America's purchase of Merrill Lynch will create the nation's largest retail bank even as it signals the end of independence for the 94-year-old brokerage house known for bringing Wall Street to Main Street.

Bank of America's decision to acquire Merrill Lynch in an all-stock transaction — the culmination of 48 hours of frenzied negotiations — will give it the nation's largest retail brokerage network and a sizable investment banking presence.

It's a bold move and a noteworthy reversal for CEO Ken Lewis, who last fall, when steep trading losses in BofA's own investment banking division helped cut the bank's third-quarter profits by almost a third, said he wasn't interested in growing it.

"I've had all the fun I can stand in investment banking at the moment," he told banking analysts in a conference call, according to a transcript.

Lewis was more upbeat Monday about BofA's prospects with the nation's biggest brokerage house in its growing empire. Buying Merrill was the "strategic opportunity of a lifetime," Lewis said.

Investors were less enthusiastic. In a day that saw steep losses in the market, BofA's shares fell 21% to $26.55. Merrill's shares rose a penny to $17.06.

With the bank's shares worth less, that cuts the value of the transaction to less than $40 billion, or about $22 a share, from about $50 billion, or $29 a share, based on Friday's closing prices.

The acquisition is an aggressive move by Bank of America to expand its already gigantic financial footprint only two months after acquiring Countrywide, previously the nation's largest independent mortgage lender. It comes as a growing number of

Oil prices fall, but gas prices don't

Gas up 18.7 cents a gallon as crude slides under $100

By Barbara Hagenbaugh
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Oil prices closed below $100 a barrel for the first time in more than six months Monday, but the lower crude prices aren't giving drivers relief.

Energy

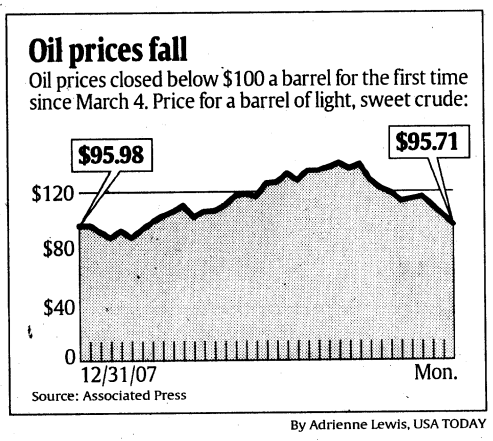
One-fifth of the nation's refining capacity continued to be shut down as companies continued to assess damage and wait for electricity to return after Hurricane Ike. That fed supply concerns and boosted retail gasoline prices at the fastest pace in three years. There were reports of stations being out of gas.

The price of a barrel of crude oil for delivery in October dropped $5.47, or 5.4%, to $95.71. That was the lowest in seven months and the first time that light, sweet crude oil has closed below $100 since early March. The decline came amid expectations for continued low demand in the U.S., and early reports of limited storm damage to production in the Gulf and refining on the coast.

Since peaking at $145.29 at the close on July 3, oil prices have fallen more than 34%. But they are still up nearly $17 from a year ago.

"The market still looks like it wants to head lower," says Thomas Bentz, senior energy analyst at BNP Paribas Commodity Futures. Bentz says oil in the next few days may seesaw higher, but will likely be below $90 in the next few months.

Meanwhile, the nationwide average price of a gallon of regular gasoline was $3.835 Monday, up 18.7 cents from a week earlier, the Energy Information Administration said. That was the biggest one-week increase since the period following Hurricanes Katrina and Rita in 2005.



By Adrienne Lewis, USA TODAY

There were "sporadic" reports of stations out of gas, says Jeff Lenard, spokesman for the National Association of Convenience Stores, which represents many gasoline stations. Some station owners were having trouble getting gas, but others were not buying available fuel because of high wholesale prices, he says.

Fourteen refineries continued to be shut Monday, according to the Energy Department. The department said the refineries appear to have "suffered minimal damage." But American Petroleum Institute chief economist John Felmy says it will be at least a few more days before the Gulf refineries are running. The main issue is a lack of electricity. Firms not only need power to run the machinery within the refinery, but to operate pipelines. Plus, the process of restarting a refinery usually involves a number of safety checks, he says.

"Restarting a refinery is more than just flipping a switch," Felmy says.

Nearly all of the oil production and 93.8% of the natural gas output in the Gulf of Mexico remained shut off Monday.

Lehman seeks buyers for some units

Bankruptcy filing is largest in history

By Kevin McCoy and Matt Krantz
USA TODAY

Lehman Bros. sought buyers for some of its divisions Monday after the nation's fourth-largest investment bank filed for bankruptcy court protection in the largest Chapter 11 case in history.

Regulators, other financial firms, investors and Lehman's more than 25,000 employees meanwhile scrambled to limit the financial fallout and assess the demise of the 158-year-old financial giant.

Lehman listed assets of roughly $639 billion in its bankruptcy filing in New York. The company also listed $613 billion in debts. Lehman owes more than $157 billion to its 10 largest unsecured creditors, chiefly U.S. and Japanese banks.

Shares of Lehman plummeted $3.44, or 94%, to 21 cents a share, on Monday.

Financial and credit market instability linked to the national real estate market drop "created significant liquidity problems," Lehman CFO Ian Lowitt said in a bankruptcy affidavit.

Lehman said it was exploring the sale of its broker-dealer operations, the heart of the firm. Several potential buyers are discussing the firm's investment management division, the company said.

Private-equity firms are among the likely buyers, said Fred Cannon, a research analyst for Keefe Bruyette & Woods. Banks that passed on buying Lehman outright might bid for divisions, he said.

Regulators assured Lehman brokerage customers their accounts were protected and would be transferred to other firms. As of March, Lehman's investment management division had roughly $277 billion in assets under management, according to a Securities and Exchange Commission filing.

The SEC said its staffers would remain on-site at Lehman to oversee an orderly transfer of accounts to brokerages insured by the federal Securities Investor Protection Corp.

SIPC President Stephen Harbeck said it was "unlikely" any liquidation procedure would be initiated against Lehman's brokerage division.

Although Lehman had been a significant player in helping state and local governments issue bonds, other investment banks will fill any gaps, predicted Frank Chin, chairman of the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board.

Chin and New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg said they expected financial expertise and longstanding client relationships would enable many of Lehman's employees to land new jobs.

But a Lehman memo gave few assurances. Referring to salaries, the memo, which was provided to USA TODAY, said Lehman "is working to ensure payment of payroll in the ordinary course."

Q&A

How secure are your investments?

Most deposits and accounts are safe, so no need to panic

By Sandra Block
USA TODAY

An earthquake hit Wall Street, and investors braced for the aftershocks. In hallways and coffee shops, people fretted about retirement savings, insurance policies, even their bank accounts. Will the disruptions on Wall Street derail your financial security? Here are some answers:

Q: I have a brokerage account with Merrill Lynch. Is my money safe?

A: Yes. The Bank of America acquisition of Merrill Lynch will have no impact on Merrill's brokerage customers. In a press conference Monday, Bank of America CEO Ken Lewis said Bank of America intends to "keep the (Merrill Lynch) name and organization intact." Merrill Lynch has more than 16,000 financial advisers and $1.6 billion in customer assets.

Q: What about investors who have brokerage accounts with Lehman Bros.?

A: Lehman's brokerage unit is still in business, and Lehman is expected to sell the subsidiary to another firm. While Lehman Brothers Holding filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, the firm's brokerage subsidiary wasn't included.

The Securities Investor Protection Corp., which covers investors in the event of a brokerage failure, said all the brokerage firm's customer cash, stocks and securities have been accounted for.

The Securities and Exchange Commission said its staff will remain on-site at Lehman to make sure customers' assets are protected when the unit is sold to one or more SIPC-insured brokerage firms.

Q: What if all this turmoil causes a brokerage firm to fail?

A: If your brokerage firm goes under, SIPC will replace up to $500,000 of your assets. You'll have to prove which securities you owned when the firm failed, so make sure you keep copies of your brokerage statements and confirmation slips.

Q: I bought Merrill Lynch stock at $78. Now, it's worth about $17. Will SIPC cover my losses?

A: No. SIPC covers you only if your brokerage fails and can't return all the cash and securities in your account. It won't protect you against investments that go sour. For more information, go to www.sipc.org.

Q: I have an insurance policy with AIG, which I also understand is in trouble. Is my policy protected?

A: Life and health insurance policies are covered by your state's guaranty association. Most states cap an individual's total coverage at $300,000. If you have questions, you should contact your own state's guaranty association. You can find contact information at the National Organization of Life and Health Insurance Guaranty Associations, www.nolhga.com.

On Monday, New York Gov. David Paterson said AIG will be allowed to use $20 billion of assets from its subsidiaries to shore up its balance sheet.

Q: I read that Wachovia's shares took a nose dive on Monday. I have a certificate of deposit there. Should I be worried?

A: No, as long as your deposits don't exceed federal deposit insurance limits. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. insures up to $100,000 per depositor in individual accounts, or up to $200,000 in joint accounts in which each account holder has equal withdrawal rights. It also insures up to $250,000 for individual retirement accounts invested in insured deposits. Still, the FDIC estimates that up to 37% of all bank deposits are uninsured. When the FDIC took over IndyMac in July, about 10,000 customers of the California-based mortgage lender had $1 billion in uninsured deposits. For more information about insured deposits, go to www.fdic.gov.

Q: What happens if my mutual fund company goes under?

A: By law, your mutual fund is owned by the fund shareholders, not the company that manages it, says Mike McNamee, spokesman for the Investment Co. Institute, the main trade group for the mutual fund industry. The mutual fund's assets are kept in a custodial account, where they're protected from claims by creditors if the company files for bankruptcy, he says.

financial institutions are teetering amid a faltering economy and soured real estate investments.

Bank of America is already the largest credit card issuer and mortgage lender. But the merger — expected to close in the first quarter of 2009 — will boost its investment-management business because of Merrill's 50% ownership in BlackRock, a global asset manager with $1.4 trillion under management.

Cover story

Ladenburg Thalmann analyst Richard Bove, in a research note Monday, called Bank of America's acquisition "a natural fit" because it increases the brokerage sales force by 16,000 and makes the combined company a major stock underwriter. Other analysts were cautious. Moody's Investors Service put some of Bank of America's debt ratings on review for a downgrade, saying the acquisition poses "substantial integration challenges" at a time when the economy remains weak and Bank of America is digesting its purchase of Countrywide, a mortgage lender pummeled by loan defaults.

Market jitters

Quincy Krosby, chief investment strategist at The Hartford, an insurance company, said the sell-off in Bank of America's stock Monday is a sign of "jittery financial markets" and investor concerns about "overall system risk in the credit system."

"What the market is saying is BOA overpaid," Krosby says. "But Bank of America didn't want to risk losing the deal. It wanted to lock in the deal."

But Bank of America has proved skeptics wrong before. When it acquired FleetBoston Financial in 2003 for $45 a share, analysts thought it overpaid. But the deal has generally been seen as a boon to BofA, expanding its presence in the Northeast and then making it the second-largest U.S bank, by assets, behind Citigroup.

Bank of America's latest deal took shape this weekend, as executives from major Wall Street firms huddled with top Fed officials inside the stone, fortress-like building of the New York Federal Reserve Bank in Lower Manhattan.

Merrill Lynch Chief Executive John Thain jumpstarted the whirlwind merger talks when he phoned Bank of America Chief Executive Lewis on Saturday morning to explore the possibility of a merger, the executives told reporters Monday.

Bank of America's adviser, J.C. Flowers, a private-equity firm, had done "quite a bit of due diligence" on Merrill Lynch in recent years, says Lewis, which was "one of the key ingredients in being able to do this as quickly as we did."

Mortgage originations

Bank of America took control of Countrywide this year. Their combined volume of mortgage originations in the first half of 2008 was $75.5 billion more than No. 2 Wells Fargo.

Lender	Mortgage originations (billions)
Countrywide	$132.0
Wells Fargo	$129.0

Merrill has lost more than $45 billion on its mortgage investments, raising fears that it could be the next bank to go under. The firm was one of the largest issuers of collateralized debt obligations, which are securities that package together mortgage and other debt and are sold to investors.

Merrill however, has taken aggressive steps to reduce its exposure to risky assets, putting it in better shape than some of its competitors. In July, it said it would take a pretax write-down in the third quarter of $5.7 billion, to sell off a chunk of its riskiest investments at a sharp discount.

Lewis says Bank of America, which just Friday had been weighing a purchase of Lehman Bros., turned its attentions to Merrill because it was the "opportunity of a lifetime."

Lehman, unable to find a buyer, filed for bankruptcy court protection Monday morning.

Thain says the merger wasn't the "outcome I would have expected when I took this job," but that it's a win for Merrill shareholders because they'll own stock in the "leading most-diversified financial services company."

The deal's quick turnaround, says Thomas Cooley, dean of NYU's Stern School of Business, also reflects the "volatility in the economy and the fear that others could follow the fate of Lehman."

Deal experience

Lewis is no stranger to large acquisitions. Before the Countrywide purchase — which is still being integrated — Bank of America in 2005 purchased MBNA, mainly known as a large credit card issuer. During Lewis' tenure as CEO, the bank has also bought Chicago-based LaSalle Bank, FleetBoston and U.S. Trust.

Lewis' banking career started in 1969 as a credit analyst at NCNB Corp., a company that eventually merged into the behemoth known as Bank of America. He took the reins of Bank of America in 2001, and has cultivated a reputation for aggressive dealmaking.

Buying Merrill Lynch raises the question of whether the deal would violate banking regulations that say no bank can hold more than 10% of the nation's deposits, says analyst Bove.

Lewis, on a CNBC interview Monday, dismissed this concern, saying that a portion of Merrill's deposits is from thrifts and industrial loan corporations, which are not subject to banking rules.

Would bank be dangerously indispensable?

Still, the bank's growth raises concerns because it is now "one of the few indispensable titans of the world," says Peter Schiff, president of brokerage firm Euro Pacific Capital and author of Crash Proof: How to Profit from the Coming Economic Collapse.

By buying Merrill, Bank of America has made itself "too big to fail," at a time when other weakened financial institutions are seeking government assistance, Schiff says.

The deal won't solve all of Bank of America's troubles. Lewis said Monday that he doesn't expect the economy to begin recovering until the second half of next year.

"I don't see the clouds parting, as I would like them to, in 2009," Lewis says.

But Anthony Polini, an analyst at Raymond James, says the merger was the best option for Merrill. Had the deal not been arranged this weekend, shares of Merrill likely would have plunged and severely reduced the price any buyer would be willing to pay, Polini says.

Also, Polini says, the weak economy has allowed Bank of America to capitalize on a rare opportunity to pick up assets at prices some wouldn't have expected years ago.

As the economic turmoil continues, more troubled institutions will be under pressure to strike deals with larger and better-capitalized firms.

"It is definitely a very, very difficult time and it's not going to get better quickly, but it will eventually, and we will be well positioned when it does," Thain said Monday.

Adds Lewis: "There are going to be fewer companies, and we're going to have to be better at what we do."

Bag-check fees lead to stuffed bins overhead

Passengers try to cram more on board

By Roger Yu
USA TODAY

By Paul Sakuma, AP

Loading up: A passenger checks a lot of luggage at an American Airlines counter in May at Mineta San Jose International Airport in San Jose.

Checked-bag fees recently imposed by airlines to increase revenue are squeezing business travelers out of their most precious real estate: the overhead bins.

Frequent business traveler Jeff Brown was boarding his US Airways flight at Hartford, Conn., when he was told that the overhead bins were full, just after passing the first-class cabin.

About 20% of the passengers were still in line to get on board, says Brown, a machinery manufacturing company executive from Kansas City, Mo. "Around 20 bags had to be gate-checked. It was so packed, there were people sitting in their seats holding small to medium-sized bags because they couldn't go either way in the aisles."

Airline officials, flight attendants and frequent travelers say Brown's case is hardly unique. Passengers are bringing more carry-ons, and finding enough space to put them away properly is becoming increasingly difficult, they say. The situation is more acute on routes that are favored by leisure travelers, such as flights to Florida or Las Vegas.

Even before the new fees were introduced, overhead bin space was already stretched thin. Planes are flying with some of the historically highest "load factors," or the percentage of occupied seats, as demand remains relatively robust, despite the weakening economy. Airlines are also flying smaller planes, with more regional jets mixed into the fleets, to serve small and midsize cities.

"Flight attendants are seeing more bags in the cabin, and we have to work harder to make sure they fit," says Candace Kolander, coordinator of air safety, health and security for the Association of Flight Attendants (AFA). "It could also be a safety hazard. In the very unlikely event of a crash, there is the possibility that the bin door could open and bags will fall out."

Airlines aren't required to reveal the number of checked bags. But American Airlines, the nation's largest carrier, says the average number of bags checked per passenger has dropped since it began imposing fees ($15 for the first bag, $25 for the second) earlier this year. Prior to introducing the fees, an average of 1.2 bags were checked per passenger. Now, it's slightly below one, spokesman Tim Smith says. "The biggest percentage drop is in the second bag (checked). It was more noticeable."

United Airlines, which said Monday that it will raise the fee on the second checked bag to $50 from $25, has also seen a decline in the average number of bags checked per person since February, spokeswoman Robin Urbanski says.

Still, checked-bag fees have been a sizable revenue stream since they were introduced in the spring. Continental Airlines said last week that its new bag-check fee will result in about $100 million in revenue.

More roller bags rolling on board

According to data released by the Department of Transportation Monday, the U.S. airlines industry collected $183 million in excess-baggage fees in the second quarter of 2008, up from $122 million in the first quarter and $113 million in the second quarter of 2007. The DOT defines excess baggage as any bag that requires payment for checking.

Typically, airlines allow two carry-ons – one bag no heavier than 40 pounds and no more than 45 inches in length, width and height combined, as well as a personal item small enough to fit under the seat.

But now with the new fees, cabin crews are seeing more roller bags brought on board, and not all are within the size limit, says AFA's Kolander. "(Passengers) who may have checked their roller bags before are now bringing them on board. They're going to fill the bins faster than handbags."

Frequent traveler Judith Briles, a consultant based in Aurora, Colo., says she's noticed more travelers putting their luggage in the first overhead space available, instead of trying to place them near their assigned seats.

"There have been several non-pleasant verbal exchanges when they are told to remove them by passengers who are clued in and in their seats," she says. "I've seen two large rollies come on per person."

Traveler Tim Riemenschneider, a sales executive based in Hudson, Wis., thinks clearing security checkpoints has also been slowed because of more carry-ons. He tries to board as quickly as possible to find enough overhead bin space, but he finds others are onto a similar strategy.

"I'm sure the bag fee is generating additional dollars for the airlines. However, I wonder if anyone will review the costs associated with the delays," he says.

Airlines say flight attendants and gate agents are trained to flag carry-ons that are larger than the limit and gate-check them on the jet bridge or tag them for moving down to cargo.

But AFA's Kolander says employees' ability to police passengers' luggage has been hampered by dramatic staffing reductions in the last several years. In June, the airline industry employed 415,000 full-time equivalent employees, or 6% fewer than four years earlier.

Most airlines no longer staff additional flight attendants beyond the federal requirement of one for every 50 passengers, and it's not unusual to have one agent working at each gate during boarding.

At least one airline is looking for ways to enforce the carry-on-size limit.

American has eliminated the standard silver metal crate used to measure them because they are ineffective, Smith says, and is considering several new designs for a luggage-sizer that could handle different shapes.

American and United are also staffing employees at the security checkpoints of some airports to alert customers who are attempting to pass through with bags that are larger than the allowed limit.

"At every point of contact, (employees) are looking to see if people are out of line," Smith says.

U.S. airlines find money in bags

Excess-baggage fees collected by major U.S. airlines bring in more revenue in 2008 (in millions):

	Q2 2007	Q2 2008
American	$30.0	$37.1
Delta	$22.4	$42.5
Continental	$11.0	$16.4
US Airways	$7.5	$17.9
Northwest	$9.0	$15.7
United	$13.4	$19.7
JetBlue	$4.0	$7.3
Alaska	$4.0	$6.1
Southwest	$5.5	$6.6

Wall Street in Crisis

Are investment bank survivors safe?

Only Goldman, Morgan remain

By Adam Shell
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — It's getting lonely at the top of Wall Street's investment bank pyramid.

With the financial crisis deepening, the only two major players still standing are Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley.

The mushrooming credit crunch has already taken out Bear Stearns, Lehman Bros. and Merrill Lynch. The big question on the minds of shell-shocked investors is whether the survivors will suffer a similar fate as their former rivals.

Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley have stronger balance sheets and far less exposure to toxic real estate assets. And that reduces the chances that they will succumb to the kind of stock-price destruction, spiraling losses and higher borrowing costs that doomed rivals.

"Will it come to the point where we see the disappearance of Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley? I don't think so," says David Stone, a securities lawyer at Neal Gerber Eisenberg.

▶ More Wall Street coverage, 1A, 1B, 2B

But, "You can never rule out a bear attack, or run, on any company," he says, referring to the increasing practice of "short sellers" who exacerbate the downward pressure on stocks by betting that they will fall further. In a short sale, an investor profits by selling borrowed shares with the hopes of buying them back later at a lower price.

Short sellers have been blamed for much of the carnage in stocks such as Lehman, Merrill and beleaguered insurer AIG.

All eyes will be on Goldman today when it reports quarterly earnings. Morgan Stanley reports Wednesday.

Unlike Lehman, which reported a $3.9 billion loss last week, analysts expect both companies to report profits. The short-run outlook for Goldman and Morgan Stanley could be turbulent, noted James Mitchell, an analyst at Buckingham Research Group. The winding down of Lehman's assets will depress the values of all assets, he says. Goldman shares tanked 12.1% to $135.50 on Monday, and Morgan fell 13.5% to $32.19.

Despite lowering his ratings on the two stocks Monday, Mitchell says they are "better positioned to weather further asset declines."

Analyst Prashant Bhatia at Citigroup, which downgraded Morgan to a "hold" Monday and upped Goldman's risk rating, also says deleveraging in markets will stress asset values.

But the longer outlook for the so-called survivors is better in a world populated by fewer competitors.

"Before this is over, there is going to be a massive changing of the guard," says Gary Kaltbaum, president of Kaltbaum and Associates. "Do not believe anyone is safe."

New York steels for aftermath

Thousands of job losses loom

By Charisse Jones
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — A city whose economic fortunes are closely tied to Wall Street's ups and downs braced Monday for fallout from the collapse of one financial pillar and the sale and likely restructuring of another.

Economists and city officials said the nose dives could lead to the loss of thousands of jobs and affect the livelihoods of everyone from real estate developers to limousine drivers.

Financial experts were reluctant to speculate how many would be out of work after Lehman Bros. Holdings filed for bankruptcy protection and brokerage firm Merrill Lynch was sold to Bank of America.

New Jersey, Connecticut and suburban New York counties also could take a hit, because thousands of Wall Street executives and workers live there.

Barbara Byrne Denham, chief economist for Eastern Consolidated, a New York City-based commercial real estate firm, said the city already has lost about 10,000 financial-sector jobs since September 2007 and predicted, "We'll definitely lose at least 10,000 to 20,000 more before we see the end."

Big bank job cuts

Now that it has filed for bankruptcy protection, Lehman Bros., with 25,000 employees, may surpass Citigroup for most job cuts in financial services this year. Job cuts as of Sept. 12:

Bank	Jobs cut
Citigroup	14,074
Bank of America	11,150
Bear Stearns	9,159
Wachovia	8,393
Commerzbank	8,000
Lehman Bros.	7,890
Royal Bank of Scotland	7,200
UBS	7,000
Merrill Lynch	5,220
Morgan Stanley	4,440
Washington Mutual	4,200
JPMorgan Chase	4,100
IndyMac Bancorp	2,800
HBSC	1,650
Credit Suisse	1,565

Source: Bloomberg News

New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg cautioned that while job losses will certainly rise, the city has taken steps to minimize their impact.

"As sobering as the economic news is, the city is as well positioned as it's ever been to handle turmoil on Wall Street," Bloomberg said. He said the city has set aside surpluses and beefed up other industries such as tourism and the biosciences.

Still, the salaries and hefty bonuses traditionally earned on Wall Street pump cash into everything from restaurants to high-end co-ops and hired-car services and have a larger impact on other local businesses and tax revenue than any other industry.

"This multiplier effect will have a serious impact not only on the financial-sector employees who lose jobs but also on many New York families who are indirectly affected by those job losses," said Bloomberg, who noted that one job on Wall Street generally creates at least two others in the city.

The city has weathered other financial crises. Denham said that 32,000 financial jobs disappeared in the two years after the 9/11 attacks. "9/11 ... was far more critical to the city," Denham said.

Outlook shifts some on rate cut

Fed meets today to decide what to do

By Sue Kirchhoff
and Barbara Hagenbaugh
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve meets this afternoon amid growing calls for a cut in its key interest rate to bolster financial markets after Monday's stunning Lehman Bros. bankruptcy-protection filing and the stock market plunge.

Last week, many economists and market participants predicted the Fed would hold its target for the rate, a benchmark for many consumer and business loans, steady at 2% when it meets for a scheduled review.

With credit markets in distress, sentiment was changing Monday. Further, the actual rate was higher than the Fed's target Monday, even though the central bank provided extra liquidity to the markets.

Brian Bethune, chief U.S. economist at Global Insight, said that without a rate cut to buffer the pain, "The risks to the financial system and the economy are massive. ... The economy is very weak. The recession wolves are pounding down the door."

Supporters of a rate cut also noted that crude oil prices fell $5.47 Monday to $95.71 a barrel, the lowest in seven months, which could help blunt inflation pressures. Production at factories, mines and utilities declined in August, another sign of a weakening economy. The economy grew at a 3.3% annual rate in the second quarter but is expected to slow significantly through the end of the year.

Others discounted the possibility of a rate cut. "I really don't think cutting rates is the answer," says Kim Rupert of Action Economics. RDQ Economics said in an advisory that a rate cut wouldn't solve market problems, but that its economic experts are concerned about the possible impact of inaction, given rising market expectations.

Vince Reinhart of the American Enterprise Institute, a former top Fed economist, says that if the Fed doesn't cut rates today, it should suggest a willingness to do so later. "Easing does lift some credit constraints. ... It won't necessarily do a lot, but it is (a step) in the right direction."

Treasury's Paulson says future bailouts aren't off the table

By Sue Kirchhoff
and Barbara Hagenbaugh
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said Monday that he "never once considered" using taxpayer dollars to bail out investment bank Lehman Bros. but emphasized he'll act as needed to protect the economy.

Paulson commented at a White House press briefing after Lehman filed for protection from creditors in bankruptcy court. That action followed a series of weekend meetings in which no taxpayer-backed plan emerged for saving Lehman.

"Don't read (this weekend) as no more (support from the government). Read it as that it's important ... for us to maintain the stability and orderliness of our financial system," Paulson said.

The move over the weekend to let Lehman fail was a sharp break from recent, dramatic market interventions, including the federal takeover of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and a $30 billion Federal Reserve loan for the March sale of troubled investment bank Bear Stearns.

Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke has been among those worrying that the efforts, though justified, encourage firms to take undue risks. "Lehman seemed the appropriate place to draw the line," says Vincent Reinhart, former director of the division of monetary affairs at the Fed.

Unlike Bear Stearns, Lehman had been rumored to be struggling for months, meaning its fall was less likely to spark a financial panic. And Lehman has had access to funds from the Fed under a lending program set up after the sale of Bear.

The Fed and Treasury will likely be tested again, given the line of companies in financial straits, from insurer American International Group to savings-and-loan Washington Mutual.

Jon Faust, a former Fed economist now at Johns Hopkins University, says what happened this weekend doesn't mean the Fed won't step in again. "They don't want to bail out somebody if they don't have to." But, "If something came up today that they thought threatened the stability of the financial system as much as Bear Stearns did, I would think they would make a similar decision."

Boise

Correction 'relatively mild,' but home sales did hit a rough spot

By Christine Dugas
USA TODAY

Boise isn't known just for Idaho's russet potatoes. Though the area is still a leading site for farming and ranching, it's also home to many entrepreneurs and high-tech companies.

The county seat of Ada County is headquarters to Micron Technology and Hewlett-Packard's LaserJet division. This year, CNNMoney.com anointed Boise the nation's No. 3 launching pad for high-tech companies, after Bellevue, Wash., and Portland, Ore.

It's also known for a pleasing quality of life, with skiing, trout fishing and water rafting, along with relatively low smog, traffic, crime and living costs.

"Boise is fortunate to have an amazing confluence of positive attractions," says Marc Lebowitz, executive officer of the Ada County Association of Realtors.

"We have incredible natural beauty," he says. "We have some of the lowest taxes in the country and pretty solid employment."

Still, Boise's growing attraction never led to an outsized housing boom of the kind that some other areas experienced.

As a result, it has side-stepped any resulting collapse in the mortgage market.

"We did not have a bubble that really burst," says Dan Hernandez, a real estate agent. "The correction here in the last couple of years has been relatively mild."

That doesn't mean home sales haven't hit a rough spot. In particular, high-end houses — $750,000 or more — have languished, Hernandez says.

But more modest homes that are selling for $100,000 to $275,000 are still moving briskly, he says.

Though Boise has suffered some foreclosures, they've involved mainly new homes that builders hadn't been able to sell, Lebowitz says, and so haven't tended to force families out on the street.

Month over month, area home sales are starting to climb back up. But the weak economy is making many people nervous.

"The recovery is slow, and it's fragile," Lebowitz says. "It wouldn't take much to tip this back."

Shaken investors bail out of stocks

By Tim Paradis
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A stunning makeover of the Wall Street landscape sent stocks falling precipitously Monday, with the Dow Jones industrials sliding 500 points in their worst point drop since the September 2001 terrorist attacks.

Investors reacted to a shake-up of the financial industry that took down two storied names: Lehman Bros. and Merrill Lynch. (Stories, 1A, 1-2,4B.)

The Dow Jones industrial average sank 504.48 points, or 4.4%, to 10,917.51. The Standard & Poor's 500 index declined 59 points, or 4.7%, to 1192.70 — also its biggest drop since 9/11. The Nasdaq composite index fell 81.36 points, or 3.6%, to 2179.91. The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies fell 30.50 points, or 4.2%, to 689.76.

Declining issues overwhelmed advancers on the New York Stock Exchange, where 164 stocks rose compared with 3,064 that fell.

Oil closed below $100 for the first time in six months as investors worried that a slowing economy would hurt demand. The price of a barrel of crude fell $5.47 to $95.71. Oil is down sharply from its mid-July highs, when it hit a record over $147 a barrel. (Story, 2B.)

Bond prices surged as investors sought the security of U.S. government debt. The dollar was lower against other major currencies, while gold prices rose. "This is sort of groundbreaking-type stuff," said Scott Fullman, director of derivatives investment strategy for WJB Capital Group.

Fullman noted that the Dow contains companies, such as retailer Wal-Mart Stores, that could help cushion some of the selling in the financial sector. Wal-Mart fell 78 cents to $61.63, while Coca-Cola rose 25 cents to $54.75.

But even good news like a drop in oil and some resolution to fears about Merrill couldn't prevent widespread selling.

The shake-up on Wall Street comes only a week after the government took over mortgage lenders Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and ahead of sizable economic developments this week.

Highlights: Financial stocks fell as investors worried about the strength of banks' balance sheets. Washington Mutual fell 73 cents, or 27%, to $2, while Wachovia fell $3.56, or 25%, to $10.71.

▶ AIG fell $7.38, or 61%, to $4.76 as investors worried that the insurance company would be the subject of downgrades from credit ratings agencies. (Story, 1B.)

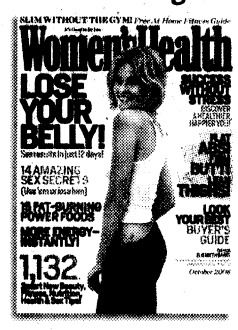
Spears follows VMAs with 'Circus' act

Britney's back — again. On the rebound after winning big at last week's VMAs, Britney Spears is set to release Circus, her sixth studio album. The Dec. 2 album coincides with her 27th birthday and arrives little more than a year after her last disc, Blackout, which got solid reviews and restored her to musical relevancy. For Circus, she's again working with longtime collaborators Max Martin and Guy Sigsworth, as well as Danja (Gimme More), Bloodshy & Avant (Piece of Me) and Dr. Luke (Kelly Clarkson, Katy Perry). Lead single Womanizer, produced by up-and-coming Atlanta team The Outsyders, hits radio Monday.

New adventures of Iron Man, Hulk

Marvel Comics is launching new stories featuring the movie versions of Iron Man and The Hulk on its Marvel Digital Comics website. It's the first time the subscription service (marvel.com/digitalcomics) has been used for original material of top characters. Iron Man makes his debut Wednesday, and Hulk arrives Oct. 8. Both series serve as bridges to future films. The service, which includes access to 5,000 reprints, has special introductory subscription rates: $60 annually, $10 monthly.

Understanding the first family



"When Josh (Brolin) and I started talking about our characters (President and Laura Bush) I was like, 'From everything I read and see about them, I think they're really in love.' They're devoted and that's something I understood and could play."

— Elizabeth Banks on playing the first lady in Women's Health, out today. Banks, who stars in two October films (W and Zack and Miri Make a Porno), is the magazine's first celebrity cover.

Spirit triumphs in 'Acedia & me'

Writing helps to fight apathy

By Cathy Lynn Grossman
USA TODAY

LOS ANGELES — Kathleen Norris — poet of the Plains in Dakota, explorer in the realms of prayer and time in The Cloister Walk, anthropologist of religious language in Amazing Grace — is stepping out after nearly a decade in the shadows.

Her new book, one of spirit and struggle, examines her lifelong wrestling with a moody demon that monks have suffered with for millennia: a soul-crippling spiritual apathy known as "acedia."

Acedia & me: A Marriage, Monks, and a Writer's Life, in stores today, weaves essay and memoir, in particular the lingering illness and death of her poet husband in 2003.

In a style that is familiar to readers who made her earlier spiritual memoirs best sellers, Norris traverses theology, psychology, literature and personal experience in lyrical, blunt, scholarly and surprisingly funny prose.

When she complains to a Benedictine monk friend that acedia, known as the "noonday demon," seemed like a 24-hour proposition, he replies, "Well, we are speaking of cosmic time. And it is always noon somewhere."

By Larry Armstrong for USA TODAY

Struggling spirit: Spirituality writer Kathleen Norris revisits her husband's death and her own soul-crippling "acedia."

A better Life

A saint's prescription for spiritual apathy, 4D

Acedia & me also radiates with the classic Norris theme of Benedictine "hospitality," the idea of opening yourself, without reservation, to God and to others.

Yet she says it's a book she almost could not write.

Long before her 30 years with husband David Dwyer, even as a teen growing up in Hawaii, Norris experienced bouts of crushing apathy, periods sunk in sloth or frantic with pointless busy-ness.

After her husband's death, Norris recalls, she survived on speaking tours and editing gigs, mired in acedia.

"The only way to do this book," she realized, "was to bring all sides of me to it."

While writers and monks, husbands and wives are particularly susceptible, she writes, "acedia can strike anyone whose work requires self-motivation and solitude, anyone who remains married 'for better, for worse,' anyone who is determined to stay true to a commitment that is sorely tested in everyday life."

But everyday life also holds the seeds of salvation.

Norris found that "the most important thing I can be doing" is to care for others, to pray and to write.

Knightley carries bigwig role

Royal role: Keira Knightley dons wigs and costumes to play The Duchess, out Friday.

In 'The Duchess,' the costumes reflect the historical story's drama

By Donna Freydkin
USA TODAY

TORONTO — For someone constantly scrutinized for her slender frame, Keira Knightley knows how to stuff her face.

"I have food! That's so good!" crows Knightley, surveying the spread before her. She jams chunks of a banana into her mouth and cheerfully recounts an earlier mishap with an ingestible.

Cover story

"I was wearing really great trousers, but then I spilled tea down (them)," says Knightley, who changed into a flouncy green skirt paired with a white blouse, blue jacket and decadent Chanel Mary Jane heels.

She points to her gams, now on display. "And I didn't shave my legs. It's quite embarrassing," says Knightley, as she admits how hard it is to shake the illusion that "randomly, somebody is just rubbing them up and down."

Knightley, 23, may act laissez faire about her own sartorial misfires, but her latest character is dubbed the "empress of fashion." In the lavish historical drama The Duchess (opening Friday), Knightley dons staggering headgear and spectacular, intricate gowns as Georgiana Spencer, the Duchess of Devonshire, an 18th-century "it girl" trapped in a frigid mar-

Death delivers the ultimate 'Indignation'

Life loses luster for young hero

Indignation
By Philip Roth
Houghton Mifflin, 233 pp., $26

Book review
By Bob Minzesheimer

Campus novels are more often comic than somber and haunting. But the 19-year-old narrator of Philip Roth's Indignation, with much to be indignant about it, isn't laughing.

For starters, Marcus Messner is dead, which he discloses by way of a complaint after 54 pages. Talk about foreshadowing. How he dies isn't revealed until the end.

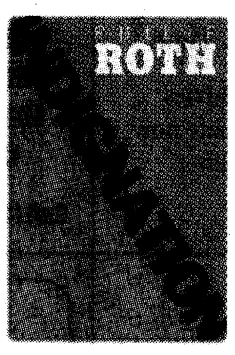
His afterlife is lonely. Just him and his memories of how "everything suddenly became so difficult" in 1951.

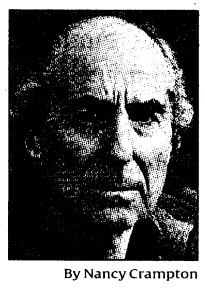
In a triumph of the narrator's voice, Roth's 25th novel is a fresh take on his familiar themes (questions of Jewish and sexual identity) and targets (unexamined traditions and values).

After his last two books, Everyman and Exit Ghost, featured aging protagonists, Roth, 75, imagines a young, confused hero who's haunted by images of the Korean War, only a student deferment away.

Messner is the dutiful, intellectual son of a hardworking kosher butcher in Newark. The father becomes so obsessive about his son's safety that he drives him off into another world: a backwater Ohio college where only two of the 12 fraternities are open to Jews.

But Messner is smitten by the cover of the college catalog, showing two happy students under big, leafy trees:





By Nancy Crampton

Roth: 25th novel revolves around college student.

"The girl was smiling so appreciatively at the boy, and the boy looked so confident and carefree beside her, that I filled out the application."

In Newark, Messner tells us, he was a "responsible, diligent hardworking A-student who went out with only the nicest girls, a dedicated debater, and a utility infielder for the varsity baseball team."

In Ohio, all that changes after he falls for a bright, beautiful and troubled student. Another student calls her "the kind of oddball who's exceptionally good at sex."

What the novel lacks in scale, it compensates for in its writing. Roth lovingly describes the bloodletting rituals of a kosher butcher.

And is there a more succinct portrait of a mother's grief than this? "There was not a single day when she did not look at the high school graduation photograph of her handsome boy in its frame on the dining room sideboard and, aloud, ask in a sobbing voice of her late husband, 'Why did you hound him out of the house?' " riage to a frosty duke (Ralph Fiennes) who demands a male heir she can't produce. Georgiana channeled her energies into frocks, electoral activism and an affair with budding politico Charles Grey (Dominic Cooper) as things on the home front became ever grimmer.

"The costumes, I saw them more like an armor than anything else," Knightley says. "She creates the person she wants to be. As it gets worse and worse and worse, the (costumes) get bigger, and the wigs get wider. It's more that, 'I'm here, and I'm fine.' A lot of the time, we do do that. I've got a friend who says, 'When something (expletive) happens, you put your red lipstick on, and you go out.' "

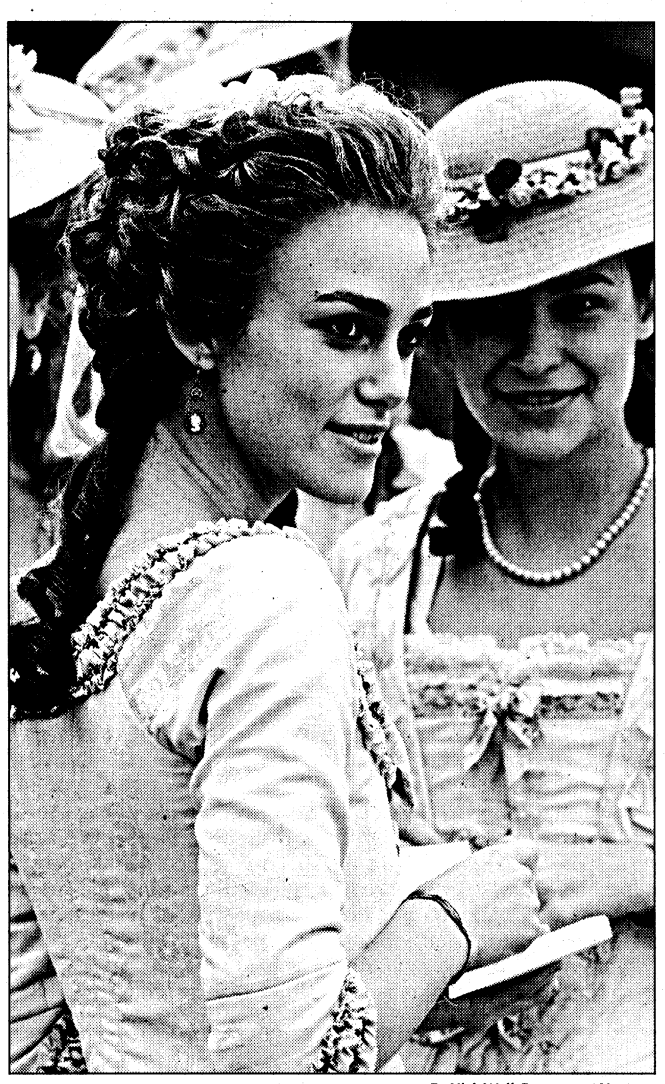
The Duchess is the first film almost entirely carried by Knightley, who earned a best-actress Oscar nomination for her spunky turn as Elizabeth Bennet in 2005's Pride & Prejudice and sashayed through three Pirates of the Caribbean hits with Johnny Depp and Orlando Bloom. Since then, she has gravitated toward smaller, more intense films, such as last year's Atonement and the upcoming Dylan Thomas drama, The Edge of Love, written by her mother, Sharman Macdonald.

Last year, Knightley said she was apprehensive about playing the duchess, the subject of a best-selling biography by Amanda Foreman. The film delves into only a small part of Georgiana's colorful life, largely skimming over her gambling addiction and debts, and not touching on her relationship with France's equally stylish royal Marie Antoinette. Though Knightley had read Foreman's book and Antonia Fraser's Marie Antoinette: The Journey, she simply couldn't nail down how to get into Georgiana's head or the most real way of playing her.

But once she reported to work, she laced up that corset and felt "really excited, actually. In every performance, in everything I try to do, you have to look failure in the face," she says. "You have to accept that you're going to fall down in a really embarrassing way and then dive into it knowing that it could go very wrong but trying your best. It was scary but equally so rare that such a wonderful character comes through the door. You can't say no. You have to play her."

Of course, Georgiana's accoutrements proved rather unwieldy for Knightley, who, when not on red carpets, mostly kicks around at home in flats and T-shirts.

"High heels are bad enough. I don't think you need a corset and wigs, as well," she says. "The wigs were the problem. They were big like birdcages. The hats were sewn onto the tops of them. And the whole thing was glued to my head, pinned in. I had neck aches. I literally couldn't hold the thing up. So they built me a stand so I could rest the whole lot on."



By Nick Wall, Paramount Vantage

Costume drama: Keira Knightley, left, stars as Georgiana, the Duchess of Devonshire, and Hayley Atwell is Bess, her best friend.

He's the duke, not Voldemort

Neck aches aside, there's also the heartache of playing hostile spouses. She and Fiennes had never met before the film and in the movie have no loving, or even coolly affectionate, scenes together. His duke lavishes warmth on his dogs but dismisses her. Her duchess shacks up with a younger and far more attractive lover. He threatens to take away her kids. She refuses to save the marriage. In real life, both say they got along just fine. "To play a married couple that have no familiarity with each other was an interesting test," Knightley says.

So, how did she keep the tension and rancor alive even as she got to know Fiennes better?

"I don't know. It's a very American question, how. It's (expletive) acting!" retorts Knightley.

One thing she avoided? Watching Fiennes' Lord Voldemort torture and torment Hollywood's most beloved young wizard in Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix and Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire. "I've read the books but haven't seen the films. He's a snake, right? I didn't watch it because I decided I think it would frighten me if I had to play his wife," she says.

Fiennes stayed in a hotel while Knightley opted to share a house with co-stars Cooper and Hayley Atwell, who plays her confidante. The arrangement helped them keep their distance on-screen.

Because of their proximity, Knightley says, her trio "formed a little group."

"It was good fun, that house. We had good fun, long dinners that were cooked for us."

Fiennes, for the most part, was excluded. "When it was me as the duke, I thought, 'She didn't like me,' " says Fiennes, referring to his off-screen relationship with Knightley, which he says was actually a positive one. "It's a shame we don't have any scenes where they are companions. I sort of decided he loved her deep down but didn't know where to start. And they don't start off as adversaries. She's just bruised by his insensitivity. He expects her to understand that it's absolutely fine that he brings in his illegitimate daughter."

Knightley doesn't see much of herself in Georgiana, a feisty yet ultimately tragic figure. Her best friend (played by Atwell) moved in with the couple and had a long-term affair with the duke, and Georgiana, meanwhile, was forced to give up the infant conceived during her tryst with Grey.

> "I live with me every day. It's not that fun. I'm not looking for biographical work."
> — Keira Knightley

"I live with me every day. It's not that fun. I'm not looking for biographical work," Knightley says. Taking the role was "about escapism. She was a character so easy to sympathize with, empathize with. I wasn't looking for any parallels with myself. It's more general terms than going, 'Oh, I gave my baby away, too.' "

She pauses just a beat. "Which I didn't, by the way."

Knightley just 'has it'

For someone barely in her 20s, Knightley is preternaturally poised and mature in interviews, her self-professed jet lag notwithstanding. She's quick-witted, swears like a sailor and comes across as just self-deprecating enough to be real.

"Keira has great clarity as a person (and is) amazingly open for her age," Fiennes says.

Even though he and Knightley are hardly buddies, they did click during the shoot. "She has a great maturity and an openness and a natural spontaneity, a vivacity. That's a crucial thing you can't act. She has it," he says.

She doesn't moan about the paparazzi attention she gets at home in England and dismisses her peers who act surly and dismissive in public. "They hate their jobs," she says with a laugh.

Yet she draws a firm line between business and her own real life. To wit, she has never talked about her boyfriend, actor Rupert Friend, and won't even confirm she has one.

Knightley buries herself in books and has a penchant for the bleak. Recent reads include Bernhard Schlink's "beautiful" The Reader and Richard Yates' Revolutionary Road. "Two really depressing books but really good," she says. "Not exactly a barrel of laughs."

This time last year, she was devouring Gitta Sereny's Into That Darkness: From Mercy Killing to Mass Murder, an account of Treblinka's commandant Franz Stangl. Now, she has moved on to the works of novelist and war correspondent Martha Gellhorn.

"Not exactly happy, but interesting. Really great writing creates such amazing images," Knightley says. "It's a compilation of investigative journalism. She has just gone into Dachau. It's awful, but the way she writes is wonderful. I just started it. I'd never read any Martha Gellhorn before, and she's a wonderful writer."

She'll have plenty of reading time after she's done promoting The Duchess. Knightley has nothing lined up for the rest of '08.

"I haven't quite found what I'm looking for yet," she says, adding that her selection process is more instinctive than calculated. "What I'm not capable of doing is, 'For my career, I should be doing this right now.' I can't do that because I can't try and be interested in something that I'm not."

Nor can she fake enthusiasm for a film she despises when it's time to go out there and sell it.

"It has to be about something that I do actually want to talk about. It can be really embarrassing and depressing and very cynical if you sit there and go, 'Well, I got a really big paycheck.' "

Knightley isn't all doom and gloom. In fact, when it comes to films, she says the oddball and offbeat move her. "There's an amazing film called Couscous (La Graine et le mulet) — so beautiful, about a guy who's trying to open a couscous restaurant," says Knightley. "I sat in the cinema crying and crying and crying. I want to phone the guy up and say thank you.

"Film can be so magic."

Wright: Pink Floyd architect

Keyboards, writing helped give band unmistakable sound

Appreciation
By Ken Barnes

Richard Wright, who died Monday from cancer at 65, was the key sonic architect in constructing the musical foundation for Pink Floyd.

Though Roger Waters and David Gilmour assumed the reins of the hugely influential and popular British band, it was the unmistakable sound of Wright's otherworldly keyboards, with Syd Barrett's whimsical, adventurous songs, that caught the world's attention four decades ago.

Wright, Waters and drummer Nick Mason played together in bands in Cambridge, and when joined by Barrett, became Pink Floyd in 1965. Wright's organ and piano dominated 1967 debut album The Piper at the Gates of Dawn, helping to define the sound of British psychedelia, and he sang on several tracks as well.

When the troubled Barrett's continued presence in the band proved unfeasible, Wright became even more prominent, taking over some writing duties on second album A Saucerful of Secrets (the swirling Remember a Day) and dominating key space-rock tracks such as Set the Controls for the Heart of the Sun. His keyboards continued to provide distinctive coloration for the band's songs as Waters and 1968 recruit Gilmour assumed control.

Wright contributed an entire side to the double album Ummagumma in 1970, and wrote two songs, The Great Gig in the Sky and Us and Them, for the classic, mega-selling Dark Side of the Moon album in 1973.

From there he receded both in the public eye and within the group, being fired by Waters during sessions for The Wall in the late '70s, being rehired on a salaried basis, and only rejoining the band after Waters left in 1985, after which the band's productivity slowed to a crawl.

Solo and group projects failed to draw much response, but he did appear with Waters, Gilmour and Mason at Live 8 in 2005 — the quartet's first appearance in a quarter-century. He also played with Gilmour on the guitarist's projects, including the Live in Gdansk CD/DVD, out Sept. 23, and a 2007 DVD, Remember the Night, on which he, fittingly, played and sang Arnold Layne, Pink Floyd's first single.

'30 Rock' carries Fisher to Emmys

Carrie Fisher

The role

Rosemary Howard, a nutty TV writer from the '70s on 30 Rock. She's up for guest actress in a comedy series.

The competition

- Polly Bergen, Desperate Housewives
- Kathryn Joosten, Desperate Housewives
- Sarah Silverman, Monk
- Edie Falco, 30 Rock
- Elaine Stritch, 30 Rock

Fisher's other roles

Fisher, 51, a child of Hollywood and the Cinnabon-haired princess of the first Star Wars trilogy, doesn't do much acting now. She is touring in her one-woman stage show, Wishful Drinking, covering such topics as her Star Wars experiences and bipolar disorder.

By Anne Joyce, NBC

Q: To what do you owe this overdue recognition?

A: I have no idea, having not seen the other performances. I don't watch much TV except 30 Rock. It's incredibly well written, and those are the only kinds of parts to play.

Q: You have had trophy opportunities, including a BAFTA for the Postcards From the Edge script.

A: I don't really pay attention. I don't have a good memory anymore. I know I got a Los Angeles Pen Award for Postcards the novel, and I get a lot of awards for being mentally ill. It's a lovely combo.

Q: On 30 Rock, you played drunken TV writer Rosemary Howard, an idol of Tina Fey's Liz Lemon. How was it to play this crazy lady?

A: She was a pill addict, too. Not a big reach. I have never officially been a drinker, though. She is a pathetic creature. I am friends with Alec Baldwin, and he was great to work with. I loved when he yelled, "Don't ever make me talk to a woman that old again!"

Q: Will you attend the Emmy ceremony?

A: I don't think I can because I am on tour. I've never gone to an awards ceremony, but I've written for them. That is the best way to go. As a writer.

Q: You worked on the Oscar show three times, including in 2002, when Denzel Washington and Halle Berry won.

A: That was fun, because I was fighting with Wanda Sykes (a co-writer) the whole time. The first two times I was paid with one of those gift baskets — they are so awesome. That's why I did it as much as anything. But the last time ... they stopped giving out baskets. Bummer. I don't care if they charge taxes. It's like having a really great Easter. Who wants chocolate when you can get mattresses and watches?

Q: Do you still do script doctoring?

A: Not since I've been doing my show for the past year. Doctoring has changed over the last five years. Whereas before they offered the job to you and you worked on it, now you have to pitch how you will change the script. They keep those ideas whether they hire you or not. You have to work before you get the job.

Q: How is your stage show going?

A: I do miss my daughter, Billie. I keep having nightmares about her when I am not seeing her. She's not that interested in me. She's in the 11th grade. I did not like my mother at that age. But the show is doing really well. My crowd is gay, the mentally ill and seniors.

Q: Will you be taking it to Broadway next?

A: I just got my best review ever in life from The Washington Post. That review cinched our going to Broadway, but I will have to work it out with them. It's just a hard show to do for 2½ hours every night but Monday, four times on the weekend. I have no understudy.

House moves squarely into the limelight

His rift with Wilson dominates tonight

House
Fox, tonight, 8 ET/PT
★★★★ out of four

Preview
By Robert Bianco

Now more than ever, House is about House.

The show's title character has always been the most important one as well, but he has usually served as the pivot point for what is basically a medical procedural. There was that unfortunate diversion when this usually reliable Fox hit made House the object of a mad cop's revenge, but generally his antics — entertaining though they may be — play out around the central medical mystery.

Tonight, in a carry-over from last season's brilliant finale, House is firmly in the forefront. And when you have an actor of Hugh Laurie's range, depth and charisma, putting him center-stage makes perfect sense, particularly when you've written a story that explores the character and his primary relationships in a way that seems integral to the series, rather than being parachuted into it.

The dramatic catalyst in the two episodes provided for preview is the death of Amber, which has driven a wedge between House and his only real friend, Wilson (a superb Robert Sean Leonard). Two months have passed since the two men have spoken to each other, and House is trying to decide what he feels and what he's willing to share.

Don't worry: TV's most acerbic medic has not gone soft on us.

We first see him playing a video game he stole from pediatrics and using a comatose man's hand as a drink holder. As for his general approach to Wilson's grieving process, House is as insightfully bitter as always: "Grief is Newark. It's there. Can't avoid it. The idea is to hold your nose, hope the traffic's not too bad and get on to Manhattan as quickly as possible, not to buy property."

Some of House's callousness is an act, and sometimes the show lets the act go too far. But one of the series' primary strengths is the way the writers and the star keep us guessing as to where that act ends and reality begins.

What's startling in these opening episodes is the way House persuades you to empathize with the pain of a character who inflicts so much pain himself. Each time you think you know how House will react, Laurie and the writers take you to a deeper level — just as each time House thinks he's prepared for the worst, the even worse arrives.

Some structural quirks do remain. With its blend of old and new casts, the show still seems a bit crowded, and the crowd may be growing, as next week House tries to buy another friend. I'm not sure House really has the room, but the new character (amusingly played by guest star Michael Weston) is certainly an interesting one, so I'm willing to see how it plays out.

And these days, really, who wouldn't want to play with House?

Smithsonian goes digital for artifacts

Clough: New chief of museum.

The Smithsonian Institution will work to digitize its collections to make science, history and cultural artifacts accessible online and dramatically expand its outreach to schools, the museum complex's new chief said Monday. "I worry about museums becoming less relevant to society," secretary G. Wayne Clough said in his first interviews since taking leadership of the Washington, D.C.-based museum in July. Clough, 66, who was president of the Georgia Institute of Technology for 14 years, says he's working to bring in video-gaming experts and Web gurus to collaborate with curators on creative ways to present artifacts online and make them appealing to kids. No word yet on how long it will take or how much it will cost to digitize the 137-million-object collection.

Parents' arguing means trouble for kids

Children whose parents argue a lot are more likely to have problems, both in school and psychologically, according to new research on how conflicted parental relationships affect kids. A two-year study by the University of Rochester, Syracuse University and the University of Notre Dame looked at 216 mostly white 6-year-olds for problem behavior, participation in academic activities and cooperation with peers. Parents and teachers also were questioned. Of the parents, 40%-50% expressed dissatisfaction with their relationships. Kids who worried about their parents' relationship had more attention problems a year after their concerns were raised, increasing the likelihood of school problems, found the study in the September/October issue of the journal Child Development. — Sharon Jayson

Jeronimo: Had to take remedial English in community college after "A" work in high school.

Remedial classes tax colleges, students

One-third of college students have to enroll in remedial classes designed to bring them up to speed on material they were supposed to have learned in high school. The bill to colleges and taxpayers: between $2.3 billion and $2.9 billion annually. "That is a very large cost, but there is an additional cost, and that's the cost to the students," says former Colorado governor Roy Romer, chairman of Strong American Schools, which issued the report "Diploma to Nowhere" Monday. "They think they're prepared. They got a 3.0 and got through the curriculum they needed to get admitted, but they find what they learned wasn't adequate." Christina Jeronimo was an "A" student in high school English but was placed in a remedial course when she arrived at Long Beach City College in California. "The demands of the high school teachers aren't as great as the demands for college," she says. "Sometimes they just baby us."

No eyes: New species of blind, subterranean predatory ant is named Martialis heureka.

Specimen a link to early ant evolution

A newly discovered species of blind, subterranean ant is likely a descendant of one of the very first ants to evolve. Researchers found the only known specimen of the species in dead plant material in the Amazon rain forest. It has been named Martialis heureka, or "ant from Mars," because it is so unlike any other known ant. It is adapted for dwelling in the soil, is 2 to 3 millimeters long, pale, has no eyes and has large mandibles, likely used to capture prey. The ant is considered a new subfamily, one of 21 subfamilies in ants, says a report published online Monday by the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

FDA OKs patch to fight chemo sickness

The Food and Drug Administration said Monday it has approved the first anti-nausea patch for chemotherapy patients, intended to provide relief for up to five days. The patch, called Sancuso and made by the pharmaceutical company ProStrakan, is worn on the arm and delivers the widely used anti-nausea medicine granisetron through the skin.

Writer throws off cloak of apathy

Memoir helps her find God's joy again

By Cathy Lynn Grossman
USA TODAY

LOS ANGELES — "I thought I was finished." Kathleen Norris, author of three best-selling spiritual memoirs in the 1990s, found herself "stupefied and unable to write even a postcard." It was 2003.

Her father had died the year before. Now after 30 years together, her husband, poet David Dwyer — brilliant, infuriating, chronically ill, endlessly absorbing David — had died at age 57.

"I just gave up for a while and hoped I would find my way back," Norris says.

She did by way of a heartfelt new book on acedia, an ancient term for suffocating gloom that robs one's soul of joy in God.

In Acedia & me: A Marriage, Monks, and a Writer's Life, Norris, 61, tells how bouts of "helplessness, self-pity and terror" began in high school in Honolulu, infiltrated her college years and continued into her marriage.

A return to her classic themes, 1D

She and David lived in her grandmother's house in Lemmon, S.D. She wrote, taught and began to study and pray in nearby monasteries. She become an oblate, or a lay associate, of St. John's Abbey in Collegeville, Minn. The experience was the inspiration for her most acclaimed book, The Cloister Walk.

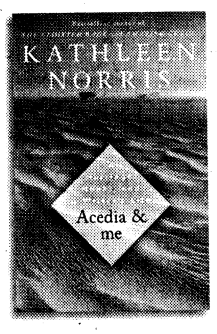
"I was not aware that even as I maintained a busy and productive life, sloth, acedia's handmaid, had a firm grip on me. For I had become aware that it was possible to reject time, as well as embrace it. If I wanted to, I could live just barely, refusing the gift of each day," she writes.

Acedia is like morphine, she says: "You know the pain is there, yet can't rouse yourself to give a damn."

Acedia & me draws wide and deep from biblical desert fathers to philosophers, from Dante to Ian Fleming.

"Acedia is not a relic of the fourth century or a hang-up of some weird Christian monks," Norris writes, but a modern force that "easily attaches to our hectic and overburdened schedules.

"We appear to be anything but slothful, yet that is exactly what we are, as we do more and care less, and feel pressured to do more still."



Sloth is one of the Catholic Church's seven deadly sins; acedia is defined as spiritual sloth. Unlike the grave illness of depression, acedia is a conscious choice, a moral choice; that's what makes it a sin, Norris says.

She chose to fight back. It had been eight years since The Virgin of Bennington, a confessional look at her college years and early career, which did not fare as well with critics or sales as her earlier books. A publisher's deadline loomed. "I was trying to do essays about the monastic experience of acedia and the writer's side. Finally, I realized the personal had to be there as well. All three in strange juxtaposition."

Acedia & me has an unsparing beauty, like a Georgia O'Keefe painting of bleached bones, and flashes of unexpected humor.

Norris, who had devoted every waking minute to David's care, recounts how she missed his last breath. A poet at another poet's deathbed, she was offended by the chaplain's choice to pray from a clunky translation of the Bible and turned to rummage in her purse for another. "I'm only trying to find you a decent translation," she told David. At that moment, his heart stopped.

"I inherited from my father's side a humorous fortitude, a gift for jokes in dire moments," Norris says.

With frank hazel eyes and no-fuss cropped hair, she laughs at her glossy book-jacket portrait. It doesn't show her round glasses dangling on a librarian's chain or the St. Benedict medal at her neck.

At the Getty Museum, she talks about her new book and visits one of her oldest. A volume of her poems on the Dakotas, All Souls, illustrated by an artist friend, is in a Getty collection. Like the plains and the sky, the book's cover shifts in color, brown to violet, depending on the perspective of the viewer.

Her life is shifting, too. There's the book launch, a tour of interviews and readings so tightly scheduled that she once compared it with an NBA team's schedule. Fly, land, run, shoot, get back to the plane and do it over again.

Norris was just back from her first trip to Egypt's Sinai Desert, where the earliest monks and hermits once secluded themselves and struggled with acedia poisoning their prayer. In order to go, she had to arrange extra care for her mother, 91, who lives in assisted living near Norris' Honolulu condo. Norris spends much of each day with her, "an honor and a privilege," she says.

When the tentacles of acedia encroach, she turns to the Lord's Prayer. St. Gregory of Nyssa calls it "a way to remember that the life in which we ought to be interested is daily life. . . . Our Lord tells us to pray for today, and so he prevents us from tormenting ourselves about tomorrow."

There it is: One is saved by the small daily acts, by the most ordinary.

What also helps, Norris adds with a chuckle, "is a great dose of humility. Who the hell do I think I am to be so bored?"

Bond: 007 (Sean Connery, From Russia) condemned boredom.

Acedia & observations

Kathleen Norris' Acedia & me includes a compendium of woeful observations on acedia down through the ages. A sampling:

Psalms 61:3

"From the end of the earth I call; my heart is faint."

Amma Syncletica
(Fifth-century desert hermit)

"There is a grief that is useful, and there is a grief that comes from the enemy, full of mockery, which some call accidie (acedia). This spirit must be cast out, mainly in prayer."

Thomas of Chabham
(13th-century English theologian)

". . . On account of this many have killed themselves when they are so absorbed that they have no joy in God."

Dante's 'Inferno'
(From The Divine Comedy)

"Once we were grim/and sullen in the sweet air above, that took/a further gladness from the play of sun; Inside us, we bore acedia's dismal smoke. We have this black mire now to be sullen in."

G.K. Chesterton
(Orthodoxy)

"Perhaps God is strong enough to exult in monotony. . . . It may not be automatic necessity that makes all daisies alike; it may be that God makes every daisy separately, but has never gotten tired of making them."

Franz Kafka
(Diary entry)

". . . Nothing, nothing. Emptiness, boredom, no, not boredom, merely emptiness, meaninglessness, weakness."

Ian Fleming
(In From Russia, With Love)

"Just as, at least in one religion, accidie is the first of the cardinal sins, so boredom, and particularly the incredible circumstance of waking up bored, was the only vice Bond utterly condemned."

Meanness appears to rub off on viewers

Research finds a connection

By Greg Toppo
USA TODAY

Researchers have long known that watching violence on TV or in movies ratchets up aggression, but what about watching people being mean to one another? Could watching Mean Girls make you as aggressive as watching Kill Bill?

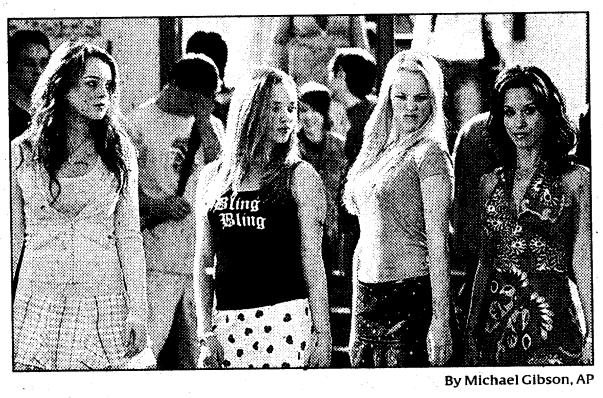
A new study suggests the answer is yes.

Brigham Young University professor Sarah Coyne and colleagues asked 53 British college-aged women to watch one of three video clips, featuring either physical aggression (a knife fight from Kill Bill), relational aggression (a montage from Mean Girls) or no aggression (a séance scene from the horror movie What Lies Beneath). They then filled out a brief questionnaire and were allowed to leave the room. Right outside was another researcher who asked if they would like to participate in a study involving reaction times.

Once the women agreed to take part, the researcher behaved rudely, telling them to hurry. When they showed uneasiness, she said, "Great! This is really going to screw things up!"

The researcher left the room, and the subjects took two tests that are commonly used to test aggression.

Subjects who viewed the Kill Bill and the Mean Girls clips reacted in similarly aggressive ways. Prompted to subject the rude researcher to a sharp noise by pushing a button, they turned up the noise louder than a control group. They also gave lower scores than the control group on an evaluation form that supposedly was going to be used to decide whether the researcher should be hired.



By Michael Gibson, AP

Coyne says the findings suggest parents should pay more attention to relational aggression and perhaps even push to make it part of movie and TV ratings. "Everyone's concerned about violence in the media, as they should be, but we're missing out on lots of violence out there," she says. "We need to look at these other types of aggression out there because we know that they're having an effect on aggression."

Coyne, who is now studying reality TV shows, says they are loaded with instances of relational aggression. She doesn't recommend eliminating conflict from drama shows, but she worries young children in particular are viewing a lot of relational aggression. It's "almost always portrayed as justified, almost always portrayed as rewarded," she says.

The study is in November's Journal of Experimental Social Psychology.

Sorry, Buckcherry, 'Black' lacks daring

Buckcherry, Black Butterfly
★★½ MOTH-EATEN ROCK

Buckcherry's sound, sleazy glam-rock tattooed by Mötley Crüe with a riff template hammered out by AC/DC, hasn't shifted dramatically since 2006's 15, which dished up hits Crazy Bitch and Sorry. On its fourth studio album, the Los Angeles hard-rock quintet continues to draw from the wells of Kiss and the New York Dolls for its mix of uptempo barroom rockers and swollen ballads, all competently delivered but lacking the kind of distinction a band with more daring and unconventional impulses might inject.

Witch trial tale has personal twist

Author's link to the accused informs 'The Heretic's Daughter'

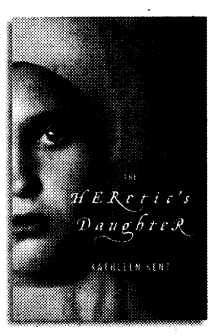
The Heretic's Daughter
By Kathleen Kent
Little, Brown, 332 pp., $24.99

Review
By Carol Memmott

The most shocking aspect of the 17th-century Salem witch trials was that anyone with a grudge could accuse a neighbor of being in league with the devil. Charges often were brought against women who weren't considered submissive enough in a male-dominated society.

It is the fundamental outrageousness of these tragic events that Kathleen Kent portrays to great effect in her debut novel, The Heretic's Daughter.

Kent's moving story comes straight from her heart as well as the historical record. Her ancestor Martha Carrier was found guilty of witchcraft and hanged in 1692. The Heretic's Daughter draws much of its ambience from Kent's impassioned link to her history.



Martha, in real life and in this fictional account, is accused of witchcraft, mainly by neighbors with whom the Carriers were battling over boundary disputes. And Martha wasn't the only Carrier under suspicion.

Her daughter Sarah's accusers were the ultimate mean girls of their time — young women who through sheer hatefulness or mass hysteria implicated dozens of their neighbors.

Eventually, four of Martha's five children would be arrested.

Much of this novel illuminates the challenges of surviving smallpox epidemics, poor crop yields and the bitter forces of nature.

But it is Kent's descriptions of the months that Martha and her children spend in the damp, filthy underground jail cells that are most memorable.

The prisoners included infants and children, men, women, the aged.

There was no heat in winter, no toilet facilities beyond a bucket, no food unless family members brought it to them — otherwise they traded the clothes off their backs or went into debt to the jailer's wife for a hard crust of bread.

Their suffering was only matched by their heroism and bravery.

In Kent's book, the defiant Martha insists that her children testify against her so they will be spared the hangman's noose that soon will be her fate.

Kent tells a heart-wrenching story of family love and sacrifice. Its warnings about the dire consequences of intolerance and fundamentalism still have meaning in the modern world.

A family story: Kathleen Kent's great-grandmother, nine generations back, was accused of being a witch and hanged.

Queen of Scots, queen of intrigue

The Other Queen
By Philippa Gregory
Touchstone, 438 pp., $25.95

Review
By Deirdre Donahue

Imagine if Angelina Jolie were placed under house arrest in your home. With you and your husband put in charge of keeping her locked up. For years. Do you think you'd get a little jealous? Particularly if hubby fell madly in love with the siren Angie?

The Eliżabethan-age equivalent of this fictional ménage à trois provides the basis for Philippa Gregory's new The Other Queen. Just as she did with The Other Boleyn Girl, Gregory whips up a delectable mélange of history, fiction and female feuding.

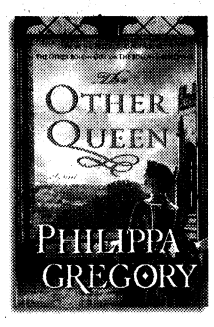
The Jolie character is Mary, Queen of Scots, one of history's most romantic heroines. She was beautiful. She was passionate. Married three times, she was no virgin queen. And she caused chaos wherever she went.

Born in Scotland, reared in France, Mary was driven from her Scottish throne in 1568, partly because her nobles suspected she'd had her second husband murdered by the rogue who became her third.

Mary escaped to England, where her cousin Queen Elizabeth I ruled.

Bad career move. As a childless Protestant, Elizabeth was rightly suspicious of the Roman Catholic sexpot Mary. The 26-year-old queen did indeed have her eye on Elizabeth's throne.

The novel opens when Elizabeth deposits the just-arrived Mary in the keeping of George Talbot, the Earl of Shrewsbury. George has just married Bess of Hardwick, a 40ish widow who has risen through four marriages from poverty to wealth.



Gregory is historically on target: Self-made Bess was a famous go-getter and dynasty-launcher. Think Suze Orman in a ruff collar.

Gregory successfully probes this fateful triangle from each perspective.

Poor George represents the old ways of chivalry, as well as the agony of falling under the spell of Europe's It girl. Bess is all about the gold. But she will win the sympathy of many woman readers because she had to manage the household logistics — which included hosting Mary's 60-plus retinue.

Gregory makes us grasp Mary's impossible position. She was a queen without a country.

Like all great potboilers, The Other Queen ends still bubbling with tears, blood and heartbreak.

Nelly, Brass Knuckles
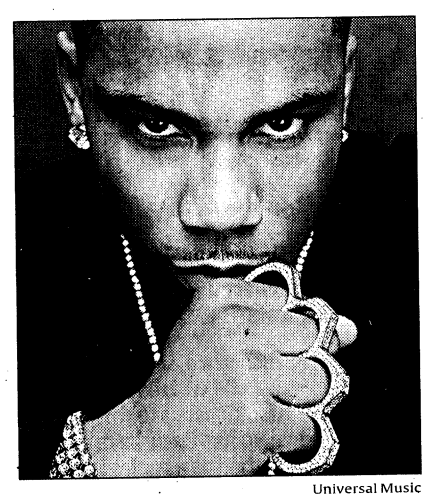
★★★ CRUISIN' FOR A BRUISIN'



Universal Music

Nelly's last new material four years ago was the double punch of Sweat and Suit. He's throwing only a single jab this time, but it has enough guest stars to fill a box set. Given a broad spectrum of sounds, he's loaded up, as usual, with bumping club jams and seductive slow jams. His trademark Midwestern drawl is a bit more strident at times, especially on songs with the likes of Rick Ross and Snoop. But with the prodding of Fergie, Ashanti and Ciara, he still finds his playful voice as well. — Steve Jones

Kristy Lee Cook, Why Wait
★★ MUSICAL WALLPAPER

Cook's signing to 19 Entertainment and Arista Records (where she spent about six months as a teen) ranks as one of American Idol's great mysteries. After all, the woman gave some of the most disastrous performances in the show's history, ones Simon Cowell described, not inaccurately, as "whiny," "terrible" and "horrendous." Working with Brett James, who produced Jessica Simpson's latest and co-wrote Jesus, Take the Wheel, Cook avoids the kind of embarrassments she visited upon the viewing public on an almost weekly basis last season. She does, however, return to her strength — a cover of Lee Greenwood's God Bless the USA. That, plus the year's pettiest country single (15 Minutes of Shame) and eight songs that could form the foundation of a mediocre Lorrie Morgan album, brings to mind one of Cowell's more generous assessments — "musical wallpaper … you notice it, but you can't remember it." We should all be so lucky. — Brian Mansfield

★★★★ BRILLIANT CONSTRUCTION

Few rock musicians can make a guitar sing as sweetly as Buckingham. On this album, his finest since 1992's Out of the Cradle, he veers from gorgeously lyrical soundscapes such as Time Precious Time and Bel Air Rain to songs that evoke the pulsing, melodic savvy of his best solo and Fleetwood Mac work. ★★★½ RETRO-SOUL VISION

For more than 20 years, Saadiq has bridged the gap between old-school soul and contemporary R&B. This time he makes a sonic pilgrimage back to the '60s and '70s, with tour stops in Motown, Memphis, Philadelphia and New Orleans. Saadiq, who contributes on bass, guitar and drums, is backed throughout by live instrumentation. Guests Joss Stone and Stevie Wonder fit right in, though the Jay-Z appearance on the closer — a remix of the Delfonics-evoking Oh Girl — snaps you out of the time warp. — Jones

★★½ HOOTIE GOES COUNTRY

Back in the mid-'90s, Hootie & The Blowfish were given a lot of credit — or, in Nashville, blame — for bringing listeners back to pop radio from country. The songs on frontman Rucker's solo departure into country aren't so different from Hold My Hand and Let Her Cry. Rucker doesn't stray too far from standard country story lines, either — lost possibilities, busted relationships, the simple life, family and wrecks on the highway. But he understands what makes them work, and he strengthens them with a workingman's voice and some good guests, including Brad Paisley, Vince Gill and Alison Krauss. — Mansfield

George Clinton and His Gangsters of Love
★★★ CLASSIC R&B REVISITED

Latter-day funkateers may have trouble wrapping their maggot brains around the idea of Dr. Funkenstein evoking Ruby & The Romantics, but the Clinton-led Parliaments were originally a doo-wop group. An all-star lineup helps him get back in touch with his R&B roots, often with surprisingly satisfying results. Carlos Santana fuels a mesmerizing Gypsy Woman, while the Red Hot Chili Peppers make sure they Let the Good Times Roll. Sly Stone, El DeBarge, Kim Burrell and The RZA provide good times of their own. Clinton even remakes himself, updating The Parliaments' 1965 single Heart Trouble. — Jones

★★½ POP OF MANY FACETS

Jem's light, breathy voice is perfectly suited to glibly groovy confections such as It's Amazing, a single also on the Sex and the City soundtrack. And the dance and world-music flourishes on the Welsh singer/songwriter's second album are artful and agreeable. But the less breezy, more pensive tracks, even the ones that flirt with sentimentality, find Jem at her most earthy and engaging. — Gardner

LEGAL NOTICE

LEGAL NOTICE

If you believe you cancelled your NetZero dial-up internet service and were charged by NetZero after cancellation between March 6, 2002 and June 30, 2008, you may be entitled to a payment from a class action settlement.

The Superior Court of the State of California for the County of Los Angeles authorized this notice. Your rights may be affected by a proposed class action settlement in a lawsuit entitled Barbara Rasnake et al. v. NetZero, Inc. If the proposed settlement is approved by the Court, you may be eligible to receive a payment and other benefits.

This is only a summary. You should receive in the mail the official Class Action Settlement Notice ("Official Notice"). If you have not already received the Official Notice in the mail, you should request one by calling the number or visiting the website below.

ARE YOU AFFECTED?

This settlement will affect individuals who cancelled their NetZero dial-up internet service but continued to pay charges after cancellation.

WHAT IS THIS LAWSUIT ABOUT?

This lawsuit was filed in 2006 in the Los Angeles County Superior Court against NetZero, Inc. ("NetZero"). The lawsuit alleges that NetZero (1) continued to charge subscribers after they cancelled their NetZero internet service, and (2) made untrue and/or misleading statements in its advertising regarding its cancellation and billing practices.

NetZero denies all allegations of liability or wrongdoing and maintains that there is nothing unlawful or improper about its business practices. Nonetheless, NetZero has agreed to a Settlement to avoid the time and expense of continuing litigation.

The Court has made no determination about the strengths and weaknesses of either the Plaintiffs' or NetZero's contentions in this case. The settlement is not an admission of wrongdoing or an indication that any law was violated.

WHAT DOES THE SETTLEMENT PROVIDE?

As part of the settlement, NetZero will provide payment to members of the Class who make valid claims. The amount you will receive if the settlement is approved depends on certain factors, including the number of months you paid charges after cancellation of your NetZero dial-up internet service and whether you submit documentation to support your claim.

Payments will range between $10 and $34 per Class Member. In addition, NetZero will implement certain business practices regarding its cancellation procedures. For more information about these and other settlement benefits, refer to the Official Notice.

HOW DO YOU RECEIVE PAYMENT?

To receive payment from the settlement, you must send in a claim form by December 16, 2008. You should have received a claim form in the mail along with the Official Notice. If you have not already received a claim form, you may obtain a claim form by calling the number or visiting the website below.

WHAT ARE YOUR OTHER OPTIONS?

If you do not want any settlement benefits, or you do not want to be legally bound by the settlement, you must exclude yourself from the Class by October 16, 2008, or you will not be able to sue NetZero regarding the legal claims in this case. If you exclude yourself, you will not receive a payment from the settlement. In order to exclude yourself, you must follow the procedures set forth in the Official Notice.

If you do not exclude yourself from the Class, you may comment in support of or in opposition to the settlement by October 16, 2008. The Official Notice describes how to comment on the proposed settlement.

On November 6, 2008, at 11:00 a.m., the Court will hold a public hearing in Department 324 of the Superior Court of the State of California for the County of Los Angeles, 600 South Commonwealth Avenue, Los Angeles, California, 90005, for the purpose of determining whether to approve the settlement, and Class Counsel's application for attorneys' fees and an incentive award for the Class Representatives. You may request to appear at the hearing, but you are not required to do so. For more details about the hearing, refer to the Official Notice.

Please do not contact the Court, NetZero, or any of their agents for information regarding the settlement.

QUESTIONS

If you have any questions, please contact class counsel by sending an email to netzerosettlement@girardgibbs.com or writing to Girard Gibbs LLP, 601 California Street, 14th Floor, San Francisco, California 94108.

For an Official Notice and Claim Form
Call toll-free: 1-877-273-9542 or visit: www.nzsettlement.com
Or Write: NetZero Settlement Administrator, P.O. Box 4234, Portland, OR 97208-4234

LEGAL NOTICE

On or about September 16, 2008, Verizon is increasing or decreasing, as applicable, a limited number of Special and Switched Access rates in its Tariff F.C.C. Nos. 1, 11, 14 and 16 for effect 15 days following filing with the F.C.C.

Fox

Garth: Old rivalry resurfaces on 90210.

▶ CW's retro-soap 90210 (tonight, 8 ET/PT) apparently hopes to stop its precipitous ratings plunge by promoting a new brat-fight between Brenda (Shannen Doherty) and Kelly (Jennie Garth). Which raises two questions: Does the show's teeny target audience really know or care who Brenda and Kelly are, and shouldn't the show be concentrating on establishing its own identity?

▶ Fox's Fringe (9 ET/PT) bolsters last week's premiere with a strong second effort that points to where the show is headed. Olivia (Anna Torv), Peter (Joshua Jackson) and Walter (John Noble) are working as a team for Broyles' (Lance Reddick) secret "committee." Their investigation into a scientifically induced birth defect leads Olivia to reopen an old case and old wounds. As with most second episodes, some time is devoted to restating the premise, but just as much is spent on strengthening the bonds among the main characters and deepening our understanding of them. And while I do hope Olivia eventually will lighten up a bit, it only makes sense for her and her show to be a tad dark for a while.

Late-night talk

Beyond black and white

Obama's rise spotlights gains in race relations — and how ethnicity remains a dividing line on some issues

Cover story

It's not all black and white.

Americans across racial and ethnic lines say Barack Obama's groundbreaking candidacy has both spotlighted the state of race relations in the United States and changed it.

A nationwide survey exploring the complicated crosscurrents of race and politics — co-sponsored by USA TODAY, ABC News and Columbia University — finds that the first nomination of an African American for president by a major party has prompted a surge in national pride and political engagement among blacks.

It also shows a clear consensus among whites, blacks and Hispanics about the top priorities for the next president, especially when it comes to the economy.

Fredrick Harris, director of the Center on African American Politics and Society at Columbia, says the poll results may signal "the passing of a generation" as many blacks move toward "race-neutral" solutions to economic and other challenges.

He notes that African Americans split evenly when asked whether they saw themselves as blacks first or Americans first. "That's quite new for a group that's been marginalized in society and considered second-class citizens for much of its history," he says.

But the survey also makes clear

VA plans to raise disability benefits

Recognizes impact of mild brain injuries

By Gregg Zoroya
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The government plans to substantially increase disability benefits for veterans with mild traumatic brain injuries, acknowledging for the first time that veterans suffering from this less severe version of the Iraq war's signature wound will struggle to make a living.

"We're saying it's real," said Tom Pamperin, a deputy director for the Department of Veteran Affairs, about the significance of the change to benefits in the regulation the VA plans to publish today.

Up to 320,000 troops who served in Iraq and Afghanistan suffered traumatic brain injury, a RAND Corp. study estimated this year. The vast majority of the cases are mild and came from exposure to an explosion, often from a roadside bomb. Most veterans with mild cases recover, Pamperin said, but some are left with permanent problems.

Compensation could reach $600 a month, the VA said. Currently, veterans with symptoms such as headaches, dizziness, sensitivity to light, ringing in the ears and irritability and insomnia collect $117.

After it takes effect in 30 days, the new regulation will benefit between 3,500 and 5,000 veterans a year, the department said. It estimated the changes would cost an extra $120 million through 2017.

More than 1.6 million U.S. troops have served in Iraq and Afghanistan. About half of those are now veterans, and slightly less than half of those veterans have sought health care from the VA, records show. In the past year, the department has screened 190,000 of these veterans for brain injury. About 20% showed signs of a brain injury, but only about 5% were confirmed as suffering the wound.

The regulation modifies a 1961 rating schedule for mild brain trauma and brings compensation for this ailment into the 21st century, said Lonnie Bristow, chairman of an Institute of Medicine committee that studied veterans' benefits.

The old regulation failed to recognize that wounds such as brain injuries from blasts — which do not show up on scans — are only understood by what patients say they are suffering, Bristow said.

"VA has been assessing their injuries based on outdated science," said Sen. Daniel Akaka, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee.

Veterans groups, such as the Disabled American Veterans, applauded the change. However, they said the estimated numbers of traumatic brain injury cases may prove low, because the science around blast damage to the brain is still new.

Veterans who have suffered the most severe brain injuries will not receive much, if any, extra money because existing regulations provided adequate compensation in serious cases, Pamperin said. Consolidating all brain injury standards into one regulation, he said, will make it easier for veterans to get extra benefits to pay for special circumstances such as being housebound by the injury.

More parents move in with kids

In-laws, too, and others

By Greg Toppo
and Anthony DeBarros
USA TODAY

In the 1990s, your family came for dinner. Now they're moving in.

The number of parents, siblings and other relatives who live with adult heads of households grew 42% from 2000 to 2007, according to data released today by the U.S. Census Bureau.

Leading the way: parents, up 67%, to 3.6 million.

The figures suggest it isn't only elderly parents moving in. The number of parents under 65 in these households increased by 75%, and those 65 and older were up 62%. Both groups outpaced the rise in the number of people in family households overall, which is up 6% since 2000.

"This is just a major trend," says Stephanie Coontz, a family history professor at Evergreen State College in Olympia, Wash., who directs research at the Council on Contemporary Families.

Coontz suspects that a host of factors — among them higher housing costs and the USA's struggling economy — are prompting families to combine expenses. Also, intergenerational households are more common among the country's growing number of immigrants, she says.

But Coontz also notes that parent-child relationships are closer now than in the past. The downside, she says, is the emergence of the so-called helicopter parent who may hover too closely, but the upside is a tighter bond between generations and, in many cases, closer friendships between grown children and their parents. "I don't know how many of my students have told me, 'This may sound weird, but I talk to my parents more than I talk to my friends.' "

The average size of both families and households grew from 2000 to 2007, the data show, after shrinking slightly in the 1990s. The average family in 2007 had 3.2 people, up from 3.14 in 2000. The average household, which includes those in which someone lives alone, had 2.61 people in 2007, up from 2.59 in 2000.

Among other factors changing households:

▸ A 40% increase in the number of other live-in relatives, including the head of household's mother-in-law or father-in-law, to 6.8 million.

▸ A 24% increase in the number of live-in brothers and sisters, to 3.5 million in 2007.

▸ An 8% increase in non-relatives, including unmarried partners and roommates, to 6.2 million.

Alaska had the highest percentage change in parents living with householders, up 167%. South Dakota had the lowest, still up 7%.

The Census Bureau's annual American Community Survey collects data from about 3 million U.S. households each year.

Relatives and roomies

In millions	2000	2007	Pct. change
Parents in adult child's household	2.2	3.6	67.2%
Other relatives in household	4.8	6.8	40.2%
Grandchildren in household	5.3	5.8	10.6%

'Touch' DNA offers hope in cold investigations

Testing method may generate leads in old cases

By Kevin Johnson
USA TODAY

For 35 years, Anne Arundel County, Md., police have been baffled by the murder of a 17-year-old girl whose battered body was discovered in an abandoned quarry in suburban Washington.

Last month, David Cordle, chief investigator for the county's State Attorney's Office, attended what would have been Donna Dustin's 35th high school reunion in pursuit of information about her death. His visit produced 18 leads, two new names — but no definite answers.

Cordle has not given up hope. The investigator has submitted evidence for new forensic testing using a DNA technique that in July cleared JonBenet Ramsey's family in her death.

The success of the little-known method in her case is triggering requests for the test from law enforcement officials seeking similar breakthroughs in unsolved crimes. Private and state-run laboratories report increases of up to 20% in use of the technique called "touch" DNA.

Analysts scrape or swab surfaces such as clothing or food to try to get enough microscopic cells to identify or rule out suspects in violent crimes, robberies and burglaries. Unlike other DNA methods, touch DNA is used on surfaces without a visible stain, such as blood, but that investigators suspect might contain genetic material.

Experts say the technique can provide a powerful tool to develop fresh leads in unsolved cases, some of which are decades old.

"In select cases, this has the potential to find a person's DNA when it couldn't be found before," says Gregory J. Davis, professor of pathology and laboratory medicine at the University of Kentucky College of Medicine. "It has great potential for prosecutors who may be able to confirm a suspect's location at the time of the crime and for defense attorneys who may argue that their client was nowhere near the scene of the crime."

More requests from authorities for testing: Jennifer Quinlan works in the Bode Technology Group's laboratory in Lorton, Va. The facility handles DNA evidence in criminal investigations.

Analysis: Some of the investigations the lab works on are cold cases in which other methods of forensic investigation have failed.

Cordle, past president of the Mid-Atlantic Cold Case Homicide Investigators Association, said he decided to seek the "touch" DNA testing after he attended the association's conference last month in Annapolis, Md., which featured the analyst who oversaw the method's use in the Ramsey case. "Some people think it's a shot in the dark," he says. "But if you don't have anything else, why not go for it?"

Rise in interest

Though some laboratories have used touch DNA since early this decade, forensic analysts and police officials say investigators are just learning about it.

At Bode Technology Group, the Lorton, Va., firm that performed the Ramsey test, analysts are fielding about 30% more calls from investigators inquiring about touch DNA and about 20% more requests for testing, says Angela Williamson, Bode's director of forensic casework.

Since the Ramsey results were made public, Williamson says, touch DNA tests at her firm have advanced at least 10 "major cases." In half of those, the results helped rule out possible suspects. In the other half, profiles for potential suspects were developed, she says.

Orchid Cellmark, based in Princeton, N.J., also has seen a rise in touch DNA cases. Touch testing there jumped from about 3% of overall cases two years ago to about 15% now, says Robert Giles, executive director of research and development.

In Texas, the state Department of Public Safety has received dozens of requests, says Brady Mills, assistant director of its crime lab services.

The success rate is unclear. Pete Marone, director of Virginia's Department of Forensic Science, says his laboratories curtailed touch testing in 2004 after analyses produced mixed results.

He says investigators submitted evidence for testing without considering what would work best. Analyses of doorknobs and other common surfaces yielded multiple or partial genetic profiles that often did not advance investigations.

Marone's labs began requiring more specific requests. Touch DNA tests have steadily increased in the past year, and he says they are yielding better results.

Ramsey developments

Like Cordle, Boulder District Attorney Mary Lacy learned about touch DNA at a conference.

Within weeks of the August 2007 gathering, sponsored by the Justice Department, prosecutors decided to consider new testing in the Ramsey case, a statement by the Boulder district attorney's office says.

Williamson, who supervised the Ramsey testing at Bode, says analysts spent hours with Boulder authorities to review evidence gathered 12 years earlier.

Family photo

Dustin: Teen's murder is unsolved.

Evidence supported the "likelihood" that JonBenet's attacker removed her clothing and then redressed her, the statement says. Analysts scraped the waist areas of long johns JonBenet had on when her body was discovered in the basement of her home Dec. 26, 1996. Williamson says they were able to retrieve enough cells to produce an unidentified male profile.

The findings did not resolve the murder, but they excluded the 6-year-old's parents and brother. Lacy cleared the family and apologized for the suspicions that made their lives "an ongoing living hell."

Davis worries the Ramsey case will spur "unrealistic" expectations about touch DNA. "We have to be cool-headed, scientific and look at its limitations," he says.

Yet Cordle and others hope for similar results in cases that have dogged them for years. "Word is spreading, and lots of agencies are responding," Cordle says.

In Charlotte, a panel is reviewing about 400 cold cases dating to the 1970s. Police Capt. Paul Zinkann says experts are deciding whether relatively new forensic techniques, including touch DNA, could be applied to some of the cases.

Among those under consideration is the unsolved murder of women's rights activist Kim Thomas, 32, who was stabbed multiple times at her Charlotte-area home in 1990.

Zinkann says a decision on whether to seek touch testing in her case will be made after a review of the evidence.

Cordle, who took on the Dustin case in 1997, acknowledges that inquiry has been "very frustrating." He declines to identify the evidence he submitted for testing but hopes for a long-sought breakthrough when the results are known in November. "We may never be able to resolve some of these cases," he says. "If we don't try, we'll never know."

How testing technique works

1. Evidence is often submitted based on a theory of the crime, in which possible genetic material is suspected but not visible.

2. Virtually any surface, from a gun handle to clothing, can be tested.

3. Microscopic cells, including skin, are lifted using a scalpel, a swab or simple tape.

4. Cells are measured and processed for the possible retrieval of a genetic profile. To obtain a profile, 200 to 300 cells are needed.

5. It takes about a week to obtain a result suitable for consideration by a court. The tests cost about $1,000, comparable to other analyses.

Wolves could go back on endangered list

Six months after taking the gray wolf off the endangered species list, the Bush administration asked a federal court Monday to put the predator back under federal protection. The request comes after U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy sided with conservationists who argued that the gray wolf has not bred enough to maintain stable populations in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming.

Sharon Rose, spokeswoman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Mountain-Prairie Region, said the agency had yet to decide how to address concerns over the wolves.

Court orders release of detainee photos

The United States cannot block pictures of detainees abused by soldiers in Iraq and Afghanistan by saying their release might incite violence against Americans, a federal appeals court in New York ruled Monday. The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with a 2006 ruling by Judge Alvin Hellerstein ordering the release of 20 pictures to the American Civil Liberties Union. Hellerstein had ordered identifying facial features be removed from the pictures. The photos were taken by servicemembers in Iraq and Afghanistan.

National Guard funding reaches record

Funding for the National Guard has reached a record level amid the largest mobilization of America's citizen soldiers since World War II, Defense Secretary Robert Gates said. Almost 80% of Army National Guard equipment will be fully modernized by the end of budget year 2013, he said. "For the first time ever, the Guard will receive the latest equipment provided to the active force," Gates said in a speech for the National Guard Association conference in Baltimore. In the budget year starting next month, the Guard's budget will top $30 billion, up $1.2 billion from the previous year.

Sun Belt 'burbs see influx

By Haya El Nasser and Paul Overberg
USA TODAY

Foreign-born Americans are moving from place to place in patterns similar to those of the native-born, according to a USA TODAY analysis of Census data out today offering the first detailed look at migration since the beginning of the decade.

The foreign-born, who in the 1990s concentrated in enclaves in large metropolitan areas, are increasingly following the same trajectory as natives. They're often leaving congested, expensive coastal cities for smaller, middle-class metropolitan areas where schools are better and housing is cheaper.

It's the first time since the 2000 Census that such detail on the movement of Americans in and out of thousands of places has been collected.

The 2007 numbers open a window on the effects of a tumultuous decade marked by terrorist attacks, natural disasters, globalization and a housing boom and collapse.

"The new immigrants, especially Hispanic immigrants, are assimilating geographically much more quickly than at the turn of the previous century," says William Frey, demographer at the Brookings Institution.

"They're more quick to leave the inner city and go to the suburbs," he says.

North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas are among the states gaining the most natives and immigrants from other states. Both groups also are moving in substantial numbers to Sun Belt counties in smaller metropolitan areas: Mecklenburg (Charlotte); Tarrant (Fort Worth); Richland (Columbia, S.C.); Cobb and Gwinnett (Atlanta).

"Hispanics are both aspiring to be in the American middle class and, according to this data, to a large degree they're succeeding," Frey says. Other findings:

▶ Immigration slowdown. The foreign-born population grew by about a half-million from 2006 to 2007, half as fast as in previous years this decade. It had been growing by an average 1 million a year since 2000.

Fourteen states, including traditional immigrant magnet states such as Illinois and New Jersey, had declines in their foreign-born population, Frey says.

"It's pretty clear that immigration has tanked in the last year, perhaps in response to the losses in employment opportunities," he says.

Research by the Center for Immigration Studies, a group that seeks immigration limits, also attributes the slowdown to a crackdown on the undocumented.

Net migration

A handful of states gained the most new residents in several demographic categories from 2006 to 2007. States and number of residents gained from other states (numbers rounded to the nearest thousand because they are estimates):

U.S.-born
1. North Carolina	108,000
2. Texas	92,000
3. South Carolina	66,000
4. Arizona	66,000
5. Georgia	63,000
Foreign-born
1. Texas	39,000
2. Georgia	12,000
3. North Carolina	11,000
4. Nevada	11,000
5. Washington	10,000
Non-Hispanic white
1. Texas	80,000
2. North Carolina	70,000
3. Arizona	48,000
4. South Carolina	48,000
5. Georgia	27,000
Hispanic
1. Texas	34,000
2. North Carolina	16,000
3. Nevada	15,000
4. Arizona	15,000
5. Utah	10,000

Source: Analysis of U.S. Census data by Paul Overberg, USA TODAY, and William Frey, Brookings Institution

▶ Fewer new households. Only about 750,000 households were created from 2006 to 2007, compared with an average 1.3 million a year over the past decade.

The share of household heads under age 25 dropped from 5.4% in 2005 to 4.7% in 2007, says Casey Dawkins, co-director of the Metropolitan Institute at Virginia Tech.

"It suggests that young householders may be delaying new household formation, living with parents longer in the face of rising housing costs," he says.

▶ More roommates. The share of non-family households made up of roommates, boarders and unmarried partners rose to 18.1% in 2007 from 15.9% in 2005.

▶ More Spanish speakers. At least one in five residents of Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas spoke Spanish at home in 2007. About 12.3% of U.S. residents speak Spanish at home.

"While the nation has a higher share of Spanish speakers, they are still clustered in a handful of states," Frey says.

In 80% of homes, English is the only language spoken.

"We are far from becoming a bilingual nation or Spanish-English society," Frey says.

More Americans strain to meet housing costs

By Anna Bahney
USA TODAY

A growing number of Americans are struggling to pay for housing, despite a steep drop in home prices.

Last year, 38% of homeowners with mortgages spent 30% or more of their before-tax income on housing — the threshold the government defines as unaffordable, according to an analysis of Census data done for USA TODAY by the Joint Center for Housing Studies at Harvard University.

And 15% of homeowners without mortgages and half of all renters had trouble meeting housing costs, the analysis found.

Dan McCue, a research analyst at the Joint Center, said the number of households straining to pay for housing grew despite "serious price declines" in real estate across the USA.

The median home price slumped 7.1% to $212,400 from July 2007 to July 2008, according to the National Association of Realtors.

Among the largest 100 metro areas, Miami-Fort Lauderdale had the highest percentage of cash-strapped homeowners with mortgages. Nearly six out of 10 homeowners with mortgages there are spending 30% or more of their income on housing. Stockton, Calif.; Riverside-San Bernardino, Calif.; Cape Coral-Fort Myers, Fla.; and Los Angeles-Long Beach round out the top five.

In 13 of the largest metro areas, at least half of homeowners with mortgages spent 30% or more of their income on housing.

Most of those markets are also in areas of the country hit hardest by the recent wave of home foreclosures as the value of real estate — which soared during the housing bubble — collapsed in the past year.

McCue says the growth of homeownership was halved from 2006 to 2007, while renting reversed itself and gained in popularity. "From 2005 to 2006, renting went down by almost a quarter of a million households. It went up by almost as many from 2006 to 2007."

Nearly 75% of homeowners with household incomes under $50,000 struggled to pay their mortgages, vs. 23% of those who made more than $50,000.

Homeowners with mortgages and whose incomes were lower than $20,000 continued to struggle most. Nearly all spent at least 30% of their income on housing.

Areas where pinch is greatest

Among the largest 100 metropolitan areas, half or more of homeowners with mortgages in these metros were in the "cost burdened" category of spending at least 30% of their gross income on housing in 2007.

Metro area	Share of mortgaged owners "cost burdened"
Miami-Fort Lauderdale-Miami Beach, Fla.	58%
Stockton, Calif.	57%
Riverside-San Bernardino-Ontario, Calif.	55%
Cape Coral-Fort Myers, Fla.	55%

'Genius grants' awarded to 25

By Caryn Rousseau
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — An architectural historian who studies ancient bridges and a family physician who rebuilt an Alabama health clinic after it was destroyed by Hurricane Katrina are among 25 recipients of this year's MacArthur Foundation "genius grants."

The $500,000 fellowships were announced today by the Chicago-based John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. Recipients may use the money however they wish.

Regina Benjamin says the money will help rebuild her rural clinic in Bayou La Batre, Ala., which serves 4,400 patients. Volunteers rebuilt it after Katrina destroyed it. Then it burned down months later. "The patients I treat have their own disasters," says Benjamin, adding the new clinic is about half built. "Hopefully this grant will help them."

John Ochsendorf, an associate professor of architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says he at first didn't believe that he had received a grant. "I had to sit down. I had tears running down my face. . . . It changes everything."

Ochsendorf, 34, uses engineering and architecture to explain the ancient world. His research team studies Incan suspension bridges that cross gorges of the Andes Mountains.

The MacArthur Foundation names the fellows, who are recommended to the foundation's board by a 12-member selection committee.

"Giving support to exceptionally talented people allows them to develop their talents, and society is better for the work they do," says foundation president Jonathan Fanton.

Other winners include an inventor of musical instruments, an urban farmer and an astronomer who studies the geometry of the universe.

U.S. energy resources—part of the solution.

One way to respond to high prices at the pump is to responsibly develop new energy supplies from a variety of different sources and locations—including right here in the United States.

It is estimated that there is enough oil and natural gas offshore and in non-wilderness lands in the United States—but currently ruled off-limits for production by the federal government—to fuel 50 million cars and heat nearly 100 million homes for the next 25 years.

To make these resources available for exploration and production, Congress must act.

The energy industry has developed proven offshore technologies that can safely make huge resources available to consumers while protecting the environment.

Some claim energy companies are letting lands they lease for oil and gas development "lay idle." Not so. Our industry has every incentive—especially when prices are high—to explore and produce from the limited areas where we can lease today.

If leased acreage is promising, ExxonMobil is actively producing or evaluating it. The problem is that industry does not have access to some of the most promising acreage, so we are attempting to find new supplies from the limited offerings of the last ten years.

Drilling is only part of the solution to the energy challenges Americans face. Improved efficiency and developing other economic energy sources will also be required.

By pursuing an integrated set of solutions, Americans can achieve a prosperous, secure and responsible energy future.

Broadway broadens pedestrian access

Traffic lanes transformed to plazas for dining, biking, strolling

By Charisse Jones
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — Nancy Bielfeldt says it felt good to be outside, nibbling on pasta, grabbing a bit of sun. Never mind that a few months ago, the place where she was sitting was a traffic lane in the shadow of Times Square.

"Definitely sitting here, I feel like I'm in the middle of the street," says Bielfeldt, 23, a designer for Calvin Klein Jeans. "I think it's kind of cool, being in the middle of things."

In New York, where pedestrians and cars engage in a never-ending game of chicken, the city has given one round to those shuttling around on two feet.

On Broadway, the neon-lit, iconic avenue that slices through Manhattan, city officials have transformed two traffic lanes between Times Square and Herald Square into pedestrian plazas where folks can sit at tables and watch the city rush by. The spaces opened last month, and another plaza, in nearby Madison Square, opened Sept. 5.

"I look at our streets as our patios, our playgrounds, our backyards," says Janette Sadik-Khan, commissioner of the city's Department of Transportation. "For many years, our transportation policy has been about moving cars as quickly as possible from point A to point B, and we're trying to rebalance that system."

The creation of pedestrian plazas helps fulfill a goal of Mayor Michael Bloomberg's to have all New Yorkers live within a 10-minute walk of a park or open space. It's part of a broader plan to tackle climate change and improve the quality of life in a city that is likely to have 1 million more residents by 2030.

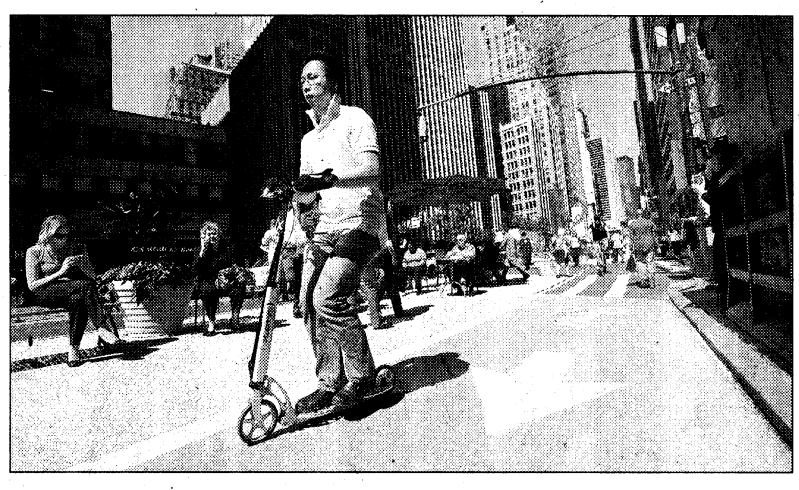
Reshaping New York City: Carolyn Bielfeldt, left, 28, and her sister Nancy, 23, have lunch at the new esplanade on Broadway in Midtown Manhattan. "I think it's kind of cool, being in the middle of things," Nancy Bielfeldt says.



More open space: People use the new esplanade on Broadway. The change reflects Mayor Michael Bloomberg's vision of reducing pollution in New York City.

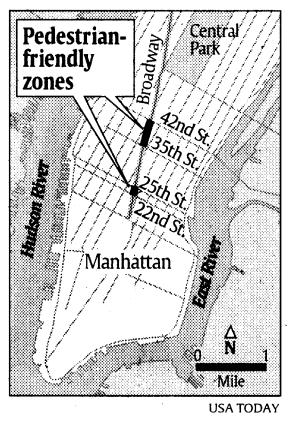
Giving walkers a break

The increasing concentration of Americans in the nation's urban centers has helped spur efforts to make walking or bike riding safer and more appealing, advocates say. Communities encourage walking to tackle obesity, reduce the level of carbon emissions spewed by cars and promote a sense of community. That leads to initiatives that range from educating motorists about a pedestrian's right of way to creating sidewalks where there were none.

"This is really the traditional way to build a society, to make it a walkable, livable space," says Jeffrey Miller, president of the Thunderhead Alliance for Biking and Walking, a national coalition of state and local organizations.

Community groups and walking advocates stage events to make public streets more inviting. Cities from New York to Bakersfield, Calif., participated Friday in "National Park(ing) Day," when hundreds of parking spaces were turned into miniature parks. In October, Chicago will have "Boulevard Sundays," two days when 7 miles of streets will be turned into car-free promenades, echoing similar events this year in New York and Portland, Ore.

"Even these temporary events leave a lasting imprint," says Wiley Norvell, spokesman for Transportation Alternatives, based in New York. "People are looking ... for ways to spend the day that don't involve a tank of gas. So in New York and cities across the country, it's been about providing the alternatives and showing the potential of our streets to do more than move cars."



USA TODAY

Cities often have closed off streets and created pedestrian areas to economically revitalize neighborhoods. The Broadway plazas are different. "This is a new movement. It's about room to breathe," Norvell says.

The plazas sit on a taupe surface bordered by bike lanes and flower-filled planters that protect those sitting under umbrellas and on benches from the trucks and taxis barreling by.

The Madison Square space cost $1 million, and the plazas closest to Times Square, dubbed "Broadway Boulevard," cost $700,000, Sadik-Khan says. Three other plazas have been created in parking spaces and roadways in other parts of Manhattan and Brooklyn. The city aims to build four plazas a year.

'People vote with their feet'

"Any time we create a new plaza, it's instantly filled," Sadik-Khan says. The plazas are maintained by local business improvement districts.

"You just put orange cones down in New York City and people will use" the space, Sadik-Khan says. "People vote with their feet and their coffee cups. Broadway and Madison Square were instant successes even before the concrete was dry."

She expects the plazas to remain popular even in winter and said winnowing traffic lanes has not led to congestion. "People understand that it's faster to take parallel routes along Broadway rather than Broadway itself," she says.

Bill Lindauer of the New York Taxi Workers Alliance disagrees. "Traffic is terrible enough without making it worse, and these make it worse."

Bianca Assim-Kon, 30, was initially skeptical about the plazas. "I saw them doing this, and my co-worker and I (said) all the tourists are going to sit there and we're going to laugh at them because they're going to get hit" by cars, says Assim-Kon, who works as a production assistant in a building across the street from one of the plazas. "And now here I am, sitting."

Reading a "chick-lit" novel on her lunch break, she says she can eke calm out of the surrounding cacophony. "I'm a New Yorker," Assim-Kon says. "You learn to focus."

Paul Deo, speeding through the new bike lane, appreciates the car-free zone. "I love it," says Deo, 37, an artist going to pick up supplies. "This helps me a lot. Before, there was no way to get down here without risking your life."

Amar-e Smith, 28, a bike messenger, is less enthusiastic. "It's the worst," he says, noting that pedestrians amble through the bike lane, creating another hazard as he goes about his job.

Stevens' political future up to Washington jury

Alaska senator's trial could affect race for 8th term

By Matt Kelley
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens faces the fight of his political life this week as his trial begins on criminal charges he failed to disclose more than $250,000 in gifts from a large oil services company.

Stevens, the longest-serving Republican in the Senate, pleaded innocent and pushed for a trial before the Nov. 4 election. That puts his political future largely in the hands of a Washington jury, since a conviction likely would doom his chances for re-election to an eighth term.

He is charged with seven counts of making false statements on the yearly financial disclosure forms required of members of Congress. Prosecutors say he accepted gifts from oil services firm Veco, including remodeling of his home in Girdwood, Alaska, without reporting them.

Stevens has said little about the case, which is part of a larger federal probe into political corruption in Alaska that led to convictions against three state lawmakers and four others. In a statement released after his July indictment, Stevens said he "never knowingly submitted a false disclosure form."

Jury selection began Monday as a pool of 184 potential jurors filled out questionnaires asking about such matters as what newspapers they read and their opinion on the "ethics and honesty" of members of Congress. U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan read the jurors a list of potential witnesses in the case, including Democratic Sens. Ted Kennedy, Patrick Leahy and Daniel Inouye, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch and former secretary of State Colin Powell. The judge did not say which side might call which witnesses.

Opening statements are scheduled to begin Wednesday. It is the first trial of a sitting senator since 1981, when New Jersey Democrat Harrison Williams was convicted on corruption charges. Both sides say they expect Stevens' trial to last about a month.

Longest-serving Republican: Sen. Ted Stevens is accused with lying on his financial-disclosure forms.

Losing the seat held by the 84-year-old Stevens would be a blow to Republicans nationally, as the GOP battles Democrats' efforts to increase their 51-49 voting majority in the Senate. Opinion polls in Alaska show Stevens has narrowed the gap with his Democratic opponent, Anchorage Mayor Mark Begich, who opened a double-digit lead over Stevens shortly after the senator's indictment in July.

Sullivan has rejected Stevens' requests to move the trial or dismiss the indictment. Although Stevens is not charged with bribery, prosecutors plan to introduce evidence of help Stevens gave Veco, including writing to the World Bank to support the company in a dispute with Pakistan.

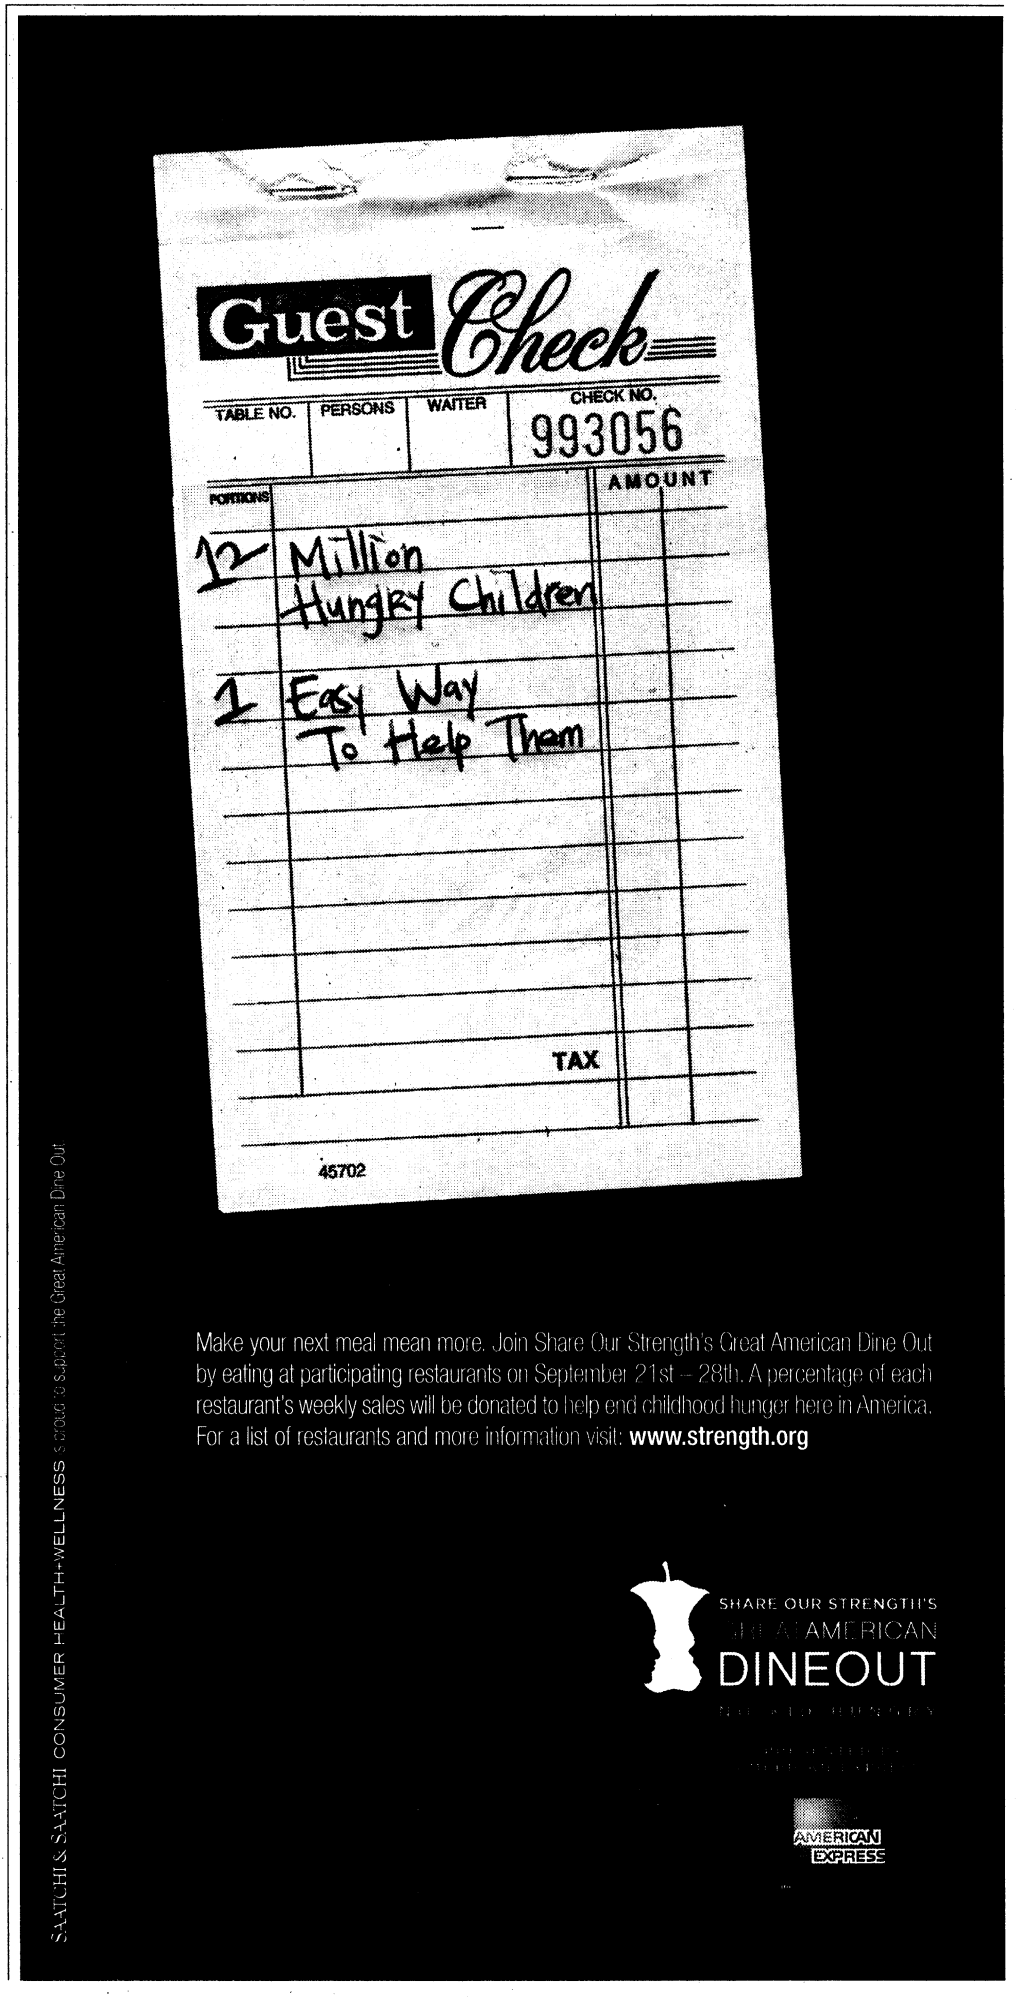
Stevens is likely to argue he made honest mistakes on the complicated disclosure forms, says Robert Kelner, a defense lawyer in Washington.

"This case is going to come down to whether the jury views those omissions as inadvertent, or whether the prosecutor convinces them that Sen. Stevens intentionally kept them out of the report," Kelner says.

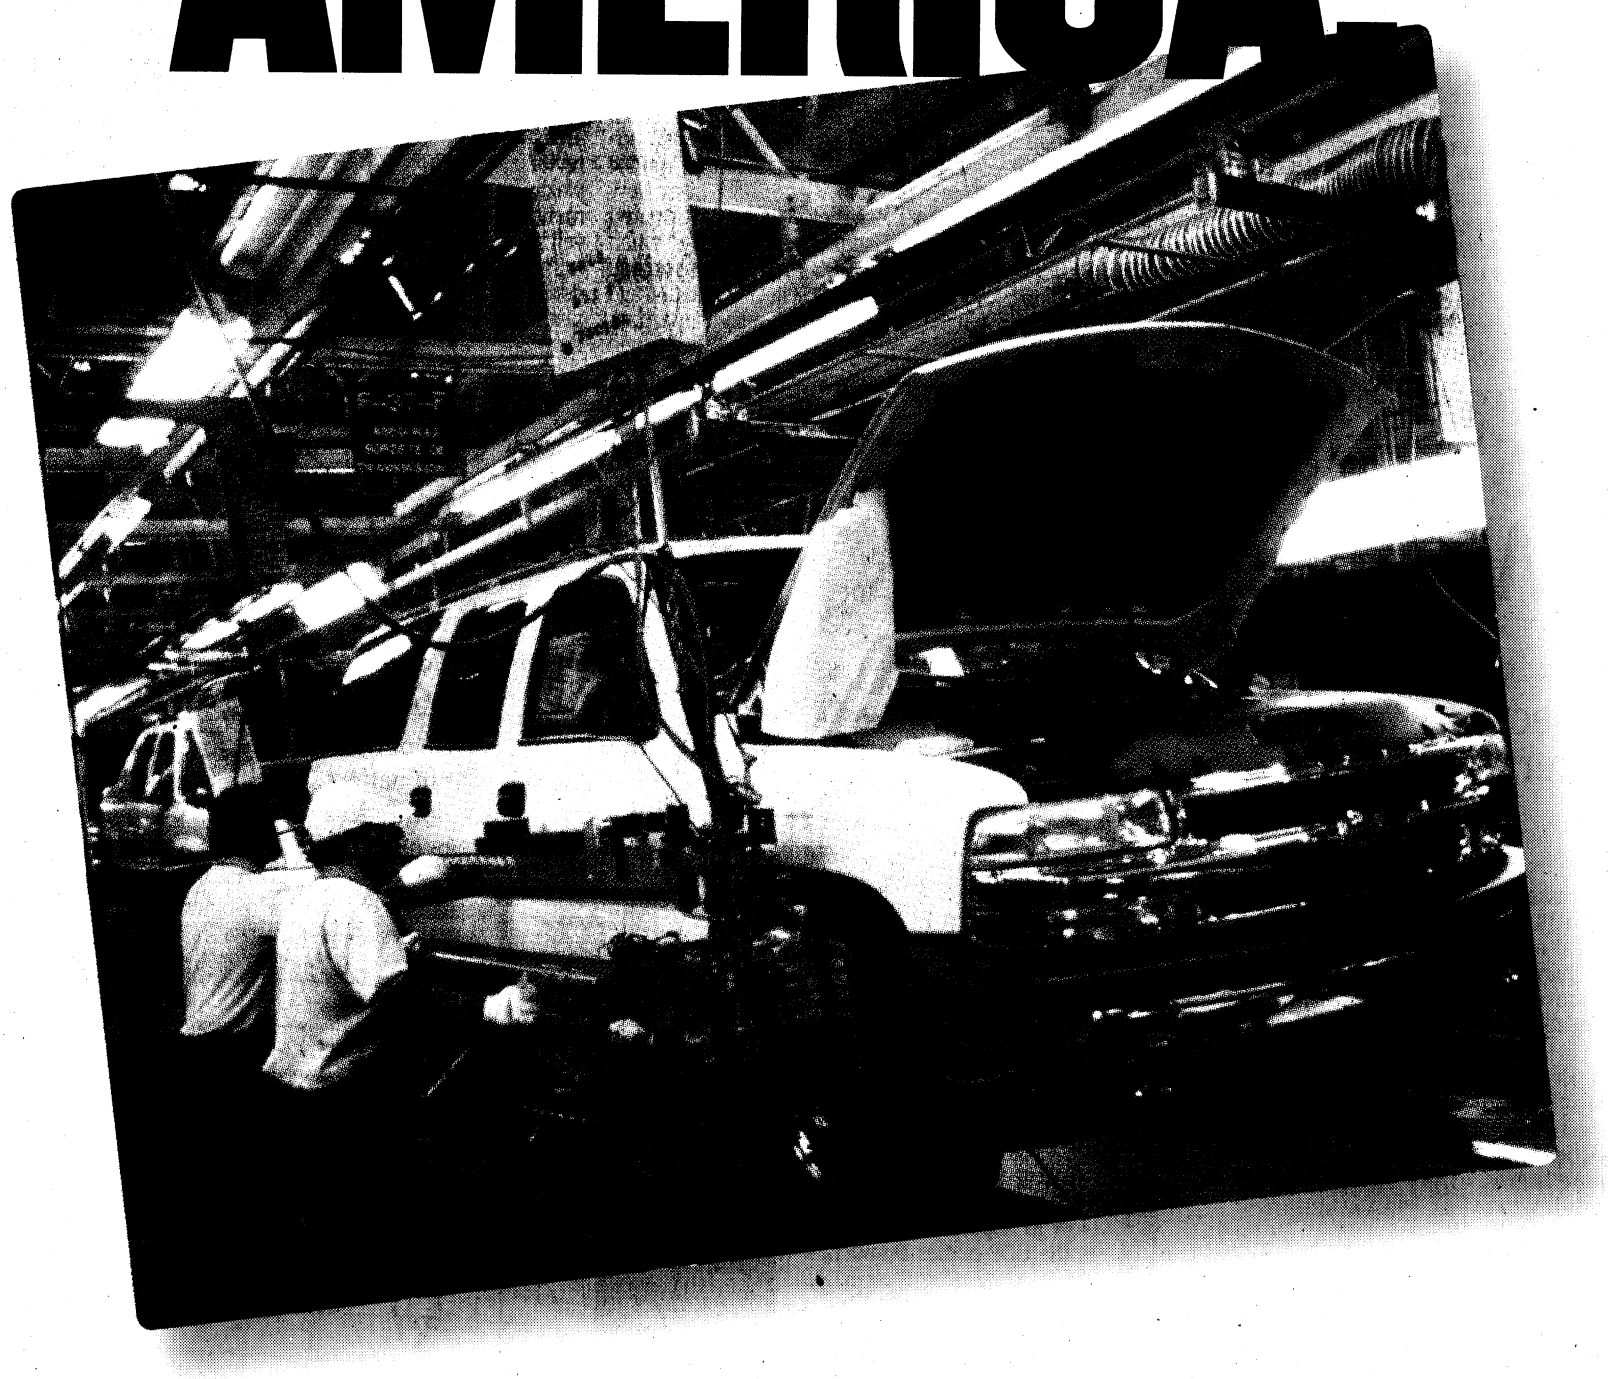
Stevens' defense lawyer, Brendan Sullivan, does not talk to reporters while a case is pending.

Stevens also may try to attack the credibility of one of the government's main witnesses, Veco founder Bill Allen.

Sullivan granted Stevens' request to examine Allen's medical records. Allen suffered brain damage in a 2001 motorcycle accident. He testified at corruption trials in Alaska that the head injury affected his speech but not his memory.



HELP DETROIT RESCUE AMERICA



DEMAND NATURAL GAS NOW!

CNG

National Average [1]

CNG: THE SOLUTION TO AMERICA'S TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

CNG COSTS ABOUT 40% LESS AND POLLUTES UP TO 90% LESS.

Americans need to be driving with CNG (Compressed Natural Gas). It not only costs less and pollutes less than gasoline, it's abundant and American. The mystery is why does only one automaker offer a CNG vehicle in this country (the Honda Civic GX)? CNG vehicles are popular around the world – and automakers behind them include GM and Ford, as well as Volkswagen and Mercedes-Benz.

BUILDING CNG VEHICLES IN AMERICA.

Given American automaker layoffs, recent plant closings, large inventories of unsold pickups and SUVs, and sharply declining sales, the CNG solution seems obvious.

Many people – because of their business or family needs – require larger vehicles. They are experiencing hardship because they have to consider buying vehicles that don't fit their needs.

In 2005, Chevy produced a CNG Silverado, but withdrew it in 2006. Ford also produced CNG F-series pickups for several years, but stopped – which means they could resume if the refueling infrastructure can be built.

With financial incentives funded by the billions of dollars we'll save by reducing imported oil consumption, the switch to CNG can lead a renaissance of the American auto industry.

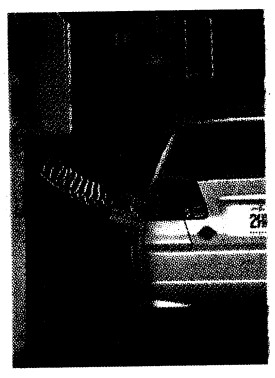
CNG SERVICE STATIONS NOW.

More than half of the CNG fueling stations in the U.S. are available for public use; others are for fleet vehicles only. Plus, vast numbers of stations that now sell only gasoline and diesel already have natural gas lines that can be fitted to dispense CNG.

Adequate federal economic incentives for station owners are key to making this happen quickly.

CNG HOME REFUELING NOW.

More than 70% of U.S. homes have access to natural gas. With a simple compressor unit installed in the garage, drivers can refuel overnight. The Phill® unit currently comes with a $1,000 federal tax credit.



The Phill® station handles overnight fill-ups at home.

CNG IS CLEAN, ABUNDANT, AFFORDABLE, AMERICAN.

CNG is so clean, it cuts pollution by up to 90%[2]. CNG vehicles earn tax credits and HOV lane access – and make it much easier for cities to protect their EPA Clean Air status.

A new landmark study[3] shows North American natural gas supply far exceeds previous government forecasts. With 22 U.S. gas-rich shale basins that 21st-century technologies have made economically productive and accessible, long-term natural gas supply abundance is assured.

Nothing says affordability like saving about 40% on fuel. But lower maintenance and operating costs (a byproduct of clean fuel) provide further savings.

We now import nearly 70% of our oil and export more than $500 billion per year in national wealth to pay for it. But driving with CNG, a domestically produced alternative fuel, supports American jobs and keeps U.S. dollars at home.

The need to rescue America is urgent. To drive change, demand CNG. Email lawmakers at CNGNOW.com.

Blacks, whites, Hispanics overwhelmingly say USA on wrong track that blacks and whites see the presidential campaign through different prisms.

Seven in 10 blacks expect Obama to win in November. Among the 13% who predict Republican John McCain will prevail, racism is the reason most often cited. The 50% of whites who expect McCain to win are most likely to cite the candidates' levels of experience as the reason. Only 5% of whites who say McCain will win call racism the key factor.

"Especially with the economy the way that it is, the fact that we're in two wars — I don't necessarily think that people will choose somebody who really doesn't have all that much experience," says Andrew Dufkin, 22, a student and painter from Coxsackie, N.Y., who is white. He was among those called in the survey.

However, Lee Rutledge, 65, a freelance writer from Riverside, Calif., who is black, says that racism "is always kind of lurking in the background," although the "Whites Only" signs he saw when stationed by the Army in Georgia in 1964 are a thing of the past.

By Gerald Herbert, AP

Campaign stop in Philadelphia: Republican presidential candidate John McCain arrives at Independence Hall on Sunday. The Arizona senator's support among whites outpaces that of Obama, 56%-36%.

By Chris Keane, Reuters

In Charlotte: Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama greets supporters during a rally on Sunday. Blacks are supporting Obama in the presidential campaign by 92%-4%.

Cover story

Beyond politics, blacks and Hispanics are much more likely than whites to see racism as a persistent problem in their communities and to report it as part of their own lives. Six of 10 blacks and 4 of 10 Hispanics say they personally have experienced discrimination often or occasionally, compared with 14% of whites.

Blacks also are much more likely than whites to report serious problems in their neighborhoods with crime, poor schools and a lack of jobs. They put a higher priority on addressing poverty, inequalities in the criminal justice system and reparations for slavery than whites do.

Hispanics rank immigration as a more critical issue than non-Hispanics do.

Even so, the current angst over the economy bridges racial and ethnic divides. Blacks, whites and Hispanics agree that the economy and jobs should head the new president's agenda in January. The other concerns near the top of everyone's list: terrorism, health care and education.

By overwhelming margins, all three groups agree that the country is on the wrong track. One-third or a bit more of whites, blacks and Hispanics say they feel financially insecure.

"We are all searching for the same thing: a better life for ourselves and a better life for our children," says Debbie Seymore, 49, a Hispanic woman from Boca Raton, Fla., who works for a communications company. "I've been working for this company for 27 years now, and every day I wonder, 'Am I going to get laid off?' "

The economy and health care "matter to everybody," says Diana Butler, 56, a school bus attendant from Washington, D.C., who is black, "because everybody is in the same boat."

The 'black experience'

The telephone survey of 1,032 blacks, 543 non-Hispanic whites and 315 Hispanics, who can be of any race, was taken Sept. 11-14, just before last week's Wall Street maelstrom broke into public view. To encourage candid responses to sometimes sensitive questions, three-fourths of the respondents were surveyed by poll takers of their own race. Interviews with Latinos were conducted in English and Spanish.

The racial divide is sharp in the presidential election. Among registered voters:

- Blacks support Obama by 92%-4%.
- Hispanics support Obama by 57%-33%.
- Whites support McCain by 56%-36%.

That partisan divide isn't unusual; African Americans make up the Democrats' most loyal voter group. Four years ago, Democrat John Kerry received 88% of the black vote, according to surveys of voters as they left polling places. Republican George W. Bush received 58% of the white vote.

What's different this time is the high level of engagement by African Americans, which could signal an increase in turnout on Election Day. Blacks are following the presidential contest more closely than whites this year. They are 50% more likely to say they've contributed to a campaign and twice as likely to say they've worked for a candidate.

North Carolina, Alabama and other states also report a jump in voter registration by blacks.

That's true even though Obama usually hasn't chosen to emphasize his race, focusing instead on winning over white voters critical in the Democratic primaries earlier this year and in the general election Nov. 4. At the Democratic convention in Denver last month, the landmark nature of his candidacy was rarely mentioned from the podium.

Some older civil rights leaders, including Jesse Jackson, have complained that Obama has done too little to address issues of particular concern to blacks and that his remarks on the need for more personal responsibility by black fathers and others were an effort to curry white support.

Those complaints have gained little traction, the survey finds. Seven of 10 African Americans say Obama has been addressing issues of special concern to blacks. (Just one-third of whites say that.) By 4-1, blacks say Obama's calls for personal responsibility were made more to appeal to blacks than to whites.

Of those African Americans who say there is a distinctive "black experience" in America, nine of 10 say Obama is in touch with that experience.

Obama's nomination "shows the country is changing for the better a little bit as far as racism is concerned," says Paul Rhodes, 51, a Detroit resident who is black and was surveyed.

"I do think it is a big breakthrough," says Kelly Benchoff, 33, a stay-at-home mom from Tucson who is white. "It's also a great breakthrough that Sarah Palin is on the Republican ticket as well. It doesn't matter if you're a man or a woman, black or white, or whatever race you are — it's the ideas you have for the country and who supports you on them."

'Black, white, purple, green'

Some of those surveyed say news reporters and commentators are making too big a deal of Obama's race.

"It doesn't matter if you're black, white, purple, green — just as long as you do the right thing when you get into office," says Natanya Hopkins, 31. A student from Columbus, Ga., who is black, she supports Obama.

"I think Obama was the right person at the time," says Brian Douglas, 31, an engineer from Jericho, Vt., who is white and supports McCain. "He was the best candidate that the Democrats had at the time, regardless of race."

Among whites, only 10% say they're concerned that Obama's election would give blacks too much influence over government policies, the same number who worry that blacks would have too little influence if that happens.

On the other hand, an AP-Yahoo News poll on racial attitudes released Saturday concluded that one-third of white Democrats and independents attributed negative characteristics such as laziness or violence to blacks, creating a serious electoral hurdle for Obama. The online survey used a technique called "affect misattribution," which involves showing a series of faces of people of different races quickly on a screen before displaying a neutral image to assess.

In the USA TODAY poll, whites by 56%-29% say that a "lack of initiative" is a bigger factor than racism in the difficulties blacks face. "You have a lot of people who want something for nothing," says Tom McKenna, 61, a retiree from Aurora, Ind., who is white.

Blacks by 44%-37% also chose a lack of initiative as the more significant factor.

Across racial lines, those surveyed see Obama's candidacy as a force for change:

- An overwhelming 79% of blacks, 71% of whites and 68% of Hispanics say his nomination represents not only an individual achievement but also progress for blacks in America generally.
- By wide margins, all three groups predict his candidacy will change the way black people think about themselves. Nearly all of those say the change will be for the better.
- A 51% majority of blacks say Obama's nomination makes them prouder to be an American; 47% say it doesn't affect their feelings about the country. In comparison, 36% of whites say his nomination makes them prouder; 61% say it doesn't affect their sense of pride.

Rhodes is particularly proud that Obama won the nomination in large part because of support in primaries and caucuses from white voters. "He won in some white states like Utah and Idaho, and you can't get much whiter than that," he says.

"It wouldn't be a good thing only for African-American people to see that if you work hard you can follow your dream and things can happen," says Dominique Flournoy, 22, a black customer-service representative from Phoenix. "Those who are just becoming Americans can see that you don't have to be a certain color to achieve certain goals in life."

A matter of race and income

Flournoy doesn't expect the nation's racial problems to vanish if Obama is elected.

"Just because we may have the first African-American president, it doesn't mean that all African Americans will be living better," she says. "We still as a group of people would have to work extra hard and work just as hard as the next person to succeed."

Racial divides persist on some issues. Among blacks, 76% support affirmative action programs based on race; 61% of whites oppose them. Still, solid majorities of blacks, whites and Hispanics support such programs for hiring, promotions and college admissions if they are based on income instead of race.

Some aspects of racial identity that fueled the civil rights movement in the 1960s seem to have eased. In the survey, most blacks and whites say blacks should "work within the system" rather than protest to get ahead. By nearly 3-1, blacks say they should concentrate on building economic power rather than gaining political power.

Blacks, whites and Hispanics say by wide margins that they have more in common with those in their economic and social class than with those of their race.

And the goal of racial equality?

Most Americans say equality for blacks has been achieved already or will be achieved in the foreseeable future, although the 75% of whites who take that view outnumber the 52% of blacks who hold it. Less optimistic: 20% of whites, 25% of Hispanics and 44% of blacks who say racial equality won't be achieved "in my lifetime" or beyond.

William Cook, 42, of Bonham, Texas, a counselor now working on a master's degree, is among the optimists. Obama's candidacy "speaks volumes for the progress that we've made as a nation," says Cook, who is black.

"Have they achieved full equality? Probably not, but I think they certainly will relatively soon," says Dufkin, who is white. "It's definitely a work in progress."

This is not just a car. It's a vision of our future.

This is the Chevy Volt. Yes, it's a car, but it's so much more than that. It's a glimpse of what is to come from General Motors as we begin our second century. The Volt will change the way we drive. How? For starters, it will use electricity. And for up to the first 40 miles of driving, it will use zero gasoline and produce no emissions. For longer trips, the Volt's gas - or E85-powered range-extending engine will be used strictly to generate more electricity. As we see it, electricity is just one of many paths to the future of transportation. And the Volt is the first step toward completely reinventing the automobile.

Maryland feels pinch of thinning federal dollars

Urban renewal, social service programs have suffered, but both McCain and Obama promise help

By John Fritze
USA TODAY

BALTIMORE — Where Anthony Hurt once saw rubble and litter, he now sees a bright mural. From his second-story window, the view of drugs and decay has given way to sunflowers and trees.

More than 150 formerly vacant lots in this city, which is often derided for its high rate of violent crime, have been transformed into community parks — in part with the help of federal grants.

"It's what most neighborhoods need, instead of a dead lot," says Hurt, 52, who lives across the street from the new park. "It helps bring back up the neighborhood."

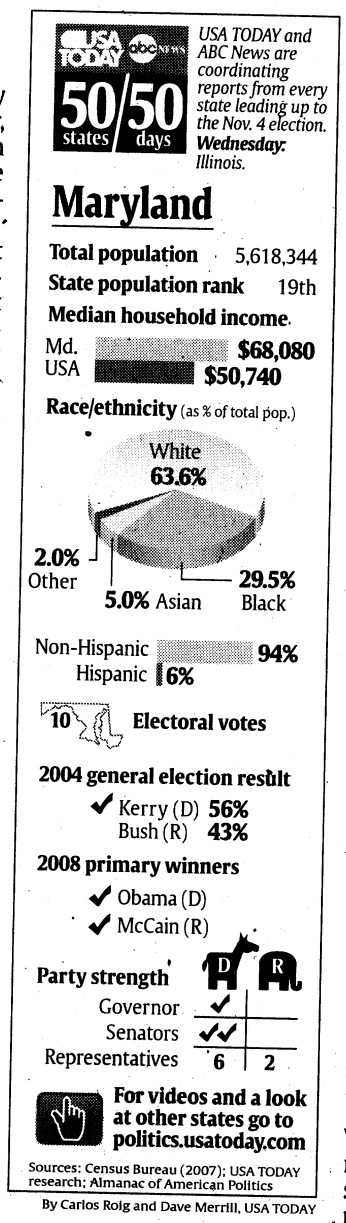
Urban governments rely on federal grants to pay for job training, police and even community parks. But many grant programs have been deeply cut in recent years, forcing local governments to find the money elsewhere or forgo services.

Reductions have hit especially hard in Baltimore, Maryland's largest city, which had 282 homicides last year, according to FBI statistics. The Census Bureau estimates that about 20% of its residents live in poverty.

"We rely heavily on those grants to revitalize neighborhoods and communities, to create opportunities for citizens," says Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon, a Democrat. "Over the last eight years ... we've lost a great deal of grant money."

Party enrollment figures favor Democrats 2-to-1 in Maryland, giving Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama a significant advantage over Republican nominee John McCain. Both candidates have voiced support for grant programs that would help this state's poorest communities.

Obama would "roll back" cuts made to some programs, according to a campaign statement that offered few specifics about what he believes is an appropriate level of spending. McCain's campaign says the Republican would focus more attention on especially needy neighborhoods while reducing administrative costs.



By Carlos Roig and Dave Merrill, USA TODAY

Fixing up neighborhoods

Baltimore has 11,200 vacant lots and 16,200 abandoned structures, says Cheron Porter, a spokeswoman with the city's Department of Housing and Community Development. Block after block of vacant and crumbling homes attract crime and rats and lower property values, according to a 2007 report by the agency.

Martha Best's east Baltimore neighborhood was strong when she moved in 35 years ago, she says. Now, every home on her block but five is boarded up. A police camera hangs on a utility pole at the end of the street.

In the past year, the city leveled buildings on two corner lots near her front steps. That has brought hope.

"I told them when they knock down, I don't want an empty lot," says Best, 76. "They would be dumping trash and junk and stuff in them. That's worse than the houses being there."

Under a program called Civic Works, teams of AmeriCorps members are building two landscaped gardens on the lots. The non-profit group uses donated plants and stones. Among other things, federal grant money keeps gas in the organization's backhoe.

Costs for programs such as Civic Works, which was founded 15 years ago, continue to climb. The organization's federal grant is down 42% since 1999, Executive Director Dana Stein says.

Overall, federal grants to states and cities have increased, according to Census data, but that increase is largely driven by big-ticket programs such as Medicaid, which is affected by enrollment and health care costs. Groups such as the U.S. Conference of Mayors have focused on losses of discretionary grants, such as Community Development Block Grants.

'Barely holding its own'

Block grants, which pay for services for low-income neighborhoods, have been cut by 18% since 2001, according to Federal Funds Information for States, a non-partisan research group for the National Governors Association and the National Conference of State Legislatures. Another program, which pays for local police salaries and training, fell 43% during the same period.

Marcia Howard, the research group's executive director, says that while defense and Medicaid spending increased, aid to state and local governments did not fare as well.

"Everything else is kind of barely holding its own," Howard says. "It's basically just dead in the water."

Maryland has lost money in 85 grant categories since 2005, according to data provided by the Maryland Department of Budget and Management.

Even small grants can make a big difference, recipients say.

Mac Ramsey is the executive director of the Arc of Prince George's County, an organization that provides services to disabled people. He says the $20,000 he receives in federal money helps pay for a year-long program that teaches office skills to about 60 individuals with disabilities. The training translates into higher-paying jobs for his students, he says.

"It prepares them for the world that they are going to be in," Ramsey says, estimating his federal funding is off 40% from five years ago.

Clinton says he understands Palin's draw

From staff and wire reports

NEW YORK — Bill Clinton said Monday that he understands why Republican vice presidential nominee Sarah Palin is popular in the heartland: because people relate to her.

"I come from Arkansas, I get why she's hot out there," the former president said. "Why she's doing well."

Clinton said voters could relate to the Alaska governor and her family. Palin has five children, including a 17-year-old daughter, Bristol, who is pregnant and going to marry her boyfriend. Palin's youngest son, Trig, was born with Down syndrome. Palin's husband, Todd, is a four-time winner of the Iron Dog snowmobile race across Alaska.

"People look at her and they say: 'All those kids. ... I'm glad she loves her daughter and she's not ashamed of her. Glad that girl's going around with her boyfriend. Glad they're going to get married,' " Clinton said.

Clinton's comments came before a meeting later this week of his Global Initiative, a non-partisan group of global leaders addressing problems such as AIDS. GOP presidential nominee John McCain is scheduled to attend on Thursday.

The former president said voters would sympathize with Palin's family, especially infant Trig and Todd Palin's sports exploits, including finishing this year's snowmobile race with a broken arm. Clinton said voters would think, "I like that little Down syndrome kid. They're wonderful children. And I like the idea that this guy does those long-distance races. Stayed in the race for 500 miles with a broken arm. My kind of guy.

"My view is ... why say, ever, anything bad about a person? Why don't we like them and celebrate them and be happy for her elevation to the ticket? And just say that she was a good choice for him and we disagree with them?" Clinton said.

Clinton will campaign this fall for Democrat Barack Obama and running mate Joe Biden.

Financial crisis threatens rivals' campaign vows

Bailout deal would leave massive deficit and difficult decisions for next president

By Kathy Kiely and David Jackson
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — No matter who is elected president, budget experts say Republican nominee John McCain and his Democratic rival, Barack Obama, will have a harder time fulfilling their campaign promises because of the federal government's effort to calm the mortgage and credit markets.

"Both are going to be shocked by the size of the deficit they are going to inherit," said Leon Panetta, a Democrat who headed the House Budget Committee and then served as President Clinton's budget director and chief of staff.

On Monday, both candidates indicated they would support a bailout only with conditions.

"We must work quickly, in a bipartisan fashion, to resolve this crisis and avert an even broader economic catastrophe," Obama told a Green Bay, Wis., audience Monday. Like Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and Speaker Nancy Pelosi, the top Democratic leaders in Congress, Obama is insisting on an additional economic stimulus bill and relief for homeowners facing foreclosure.

Speaking in Scranton, Pa., McCain said the Bush administration's proposal "makes me deeply uncomfortable" because "so much power" would be in the hands of the Treasury secretary. He proposed a bipartisan oversight board. Both McCain and Obama favor caps on the compensation of executives in bailed-out companies.

Though the federal government could end up making money when it begins to sell assets of the bailed-out companies, the deal will at least temporarily balloon the federal deficit. That will make the first year of the next administration "a very difficult time in terms of starting new programs," said former senator Warren Rudman, a New Hampshire Republican who co-founded the bipartisan Concord Coalition to lobby for deficit reduction.

The White House estimates the deficit will be $482 billion when the next president takes office on Jan. 20. Panetta estimates that figure could jump to $700 billion because of the bailout.

"This is a tough bill of goods, whether it's John McCain or Barack Obama," agreed House Budget Committee Chairman John Spratt, D-S.C.

It could complicate McCain's efforts to sell his plan to make permanent a series of Bush administration tax cuts that are due to expire at the end of next year. Scott Hodge, president of the Tax Foundation, a non-partisan research group, estimates the 10-year cost of extending those tax breaks at $1.5 trillion.

Obama's wish list includes a series of middle-income tax breaks that he estimates would cost $85 billion a year and expanded health care coverage at about $65 billion a year.

Jason Furman, a top economic adviser to Obama, insisted the current financial crisis only "magnifies the importance of a plan to grow the economy."

Thomas "Mack" McLarty, Clinton's first chief of staff, recalled that a larger-than-expected deficit in Clinton's first term caused him "to revise some of the tax cuts he had run on." President George H.W. Bush reneged on his pledge not to raise taxes because of the deficit he inherited from Ronald Reagan.

If Obama and McCain don't think they will have to make adjustments, "they're operating in never-never land," Panetta said.

Electionline

Poll shows more Americans attuned to presidential race

Americans are more interested than ever in presidential politics, Gallup said Monday. The survey firm reported that 43% of those it interviewed earlier this month said they were "very closely" following the presidential race. That eclipsed the previous high in Gallup's database: the 36% who said that in September 2004. The polling firm has been asking the question in presidential years since 1996.

Of the rest in Gallup's latest poll of 1,007 adults, 44% said they were following the election "somewhat closely."

The margin of error on the results is +/–3 percentage points.

Biden promises to bolster nation's police rolls, patrols

Democratic vice presidential nominee Joe Biden says an Obama-Biden administration would secure federal funding that would put 50,000 more police officers on the nation's streets.

The Delaware senator made the pledge during a conference call in which the 238,000-member National Association of Police Organizations endorsed the Democratic ticket.

By Steve Ruark, AP

Biden also said Monday that the National Guard deserves a stronger voice within the Defense Department, given its role in the war on terrorism. Addressing the annual conference of the National Guard Association of the United States in Baltimore, Biden noted that more than half of the veterans of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom are Guardsmen and reservists.

Probe of Palin e-mail hacking takes FBI to Tennessee

The FBI has searched the home of the son of a Democratic state lawmaker in Tennessee looking for evidence linking the young man to the hacking of Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin's personal e-mail account.

Two law enforcement officials told the Associated Press that the search was conducted over the weekend at the Knoxville home of David Kernell, the son of state Democratic Rep. Mike Kernell.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the investigation.

David Kernell, a 20-year-old University of Tennessee student, has not returned repeated phone calls or e-mails from the AP. His father is chairman of the state's House Government Operations Committee.

"I had nothing to do with it, I had no knowledge or anything," Mike Kernell told the AP last week.

"I was not a party to anything of this nature at all," he added. "I wasn't in on this — and I wouldn't know how to do anything like that."

Palin to meet with U2's Bono, Afghan leader in NYC

A rock star/humanitarian has been added to the list of those whom Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin will be meeting with today and tomorrow in New York City. The Republican vice presidential nominee will sit down with Bono, singer for the Irish group U2 and founder of the aid organization One.org, as well as heads of state including Afghan President Hamid Karzai.

Fact checkers find rivals' ads low on truth

McCain leads with attacks packed with false assertions. Obama's strikes not much better.

By Jill Lawrence
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Cut through the din of this presidential campaign and you will find something new this year besides the usual record spending: candidate ads divorced from facts, and a platoon of fact checkers trying to keep up.

Veteran campaign watchers say they have never seen ads quite like some from Republican John McCain. The spots contend that Democrat Barack Obama caused high gasoline prices, called McCain running mate Sarah Palin a pig, plans to raise taxes on the middle class and — in an ad called Education that's emblematic of the trend — wants to teach graphic sex to kindergartners. All the claims are false.

News analysis

Education "is a terribly misleading ad, designed to deceive voters," says Brooks Jackson, director of the non-partisan Factcheck.org.

Obama, of course, is running plenty of his own negative ads. In a reversal of earlier weeks, the Wisconsin Advertising Project says he aired more of them than McCain in the week following the GOP convention, 77%-56%.

Some of Obama's assertions have drawn censure, such as that McCain favors a 100-year war in Iraq (McCain was talking about a peacetime presence) or has plans that would halve Social Security benefits ("a gross distortion," The Washington Post said Monday).

So far, several analysts say, most of Obama's ads mislead and misrepresent in familiar ways — twisting a statistic or a snippet of video to make a questionable point, for instance. They say McCain has been in a different league, epitomized by Education.

"McCain is making no effort to be truthful," says Farhad Manjoo, author of True Enough: Learning to Live in a Post-Fact Society. "The lies aren't routine political lies where they stretch the truth of what a candidate might have said, or take a candidate out of context."

PolitiFact.com, a fact-check team from the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times and Congressional Quarterly, rates 22 statements and ads from McCain as barely true, 23 as false and six as "pants on fire" (absurdly, ridiculously false) out of 117 analyzed. For Obama, the score is 14 barely true, 18 false and one "pants on fire" out of 120 analyzed.

Anatomy of an ad

Education is the ad that has come to crystallize the difference between 2008 and earlier years.

McCain's campaign says the spot was a response to What Kind? — a Sept. 9 Obama ad that said: "John McCain voted to cut education funding, against accountability standards. He even proposed abolishing the Department of Education. And John McCain's economic plan gives $200 billion more to special interests while taking money away from public schools."

Education Week's Alyson Klein called What Kind? misleading on accountability and arguably fair on school funds.

McCain spokesman Tucker Bounds says the funding charge was offensive and unsupported. He says he tracked it to a National Education Association study "based on our proposals to freeze discretionary spending, ignoring the fact that John McCain had pledged to fully fund the No Child Left Behind Act. It was a blatant falsehood. It was a lie."

McCain struck back later that day with Education. It proved to be a tipping point. Reporters, columnists, editorial writers and watchdog groups produced fact checks pronouncing it beyond the pale even by the elastic standards of political advertising.

"It was a remarkable ad because it was wrong in so many ways," PolitiFact.com editor Bill Adair says. Its rating was a mix of "barely true" and "pants on fire."

The script: "Education Week says Obama 'hasn't made a significant mark on education.' That he's 'elusive' on accountability. A 'staunch defender of the existing public school monopoly.' Obama's one accomplishment? Legislation to teach 'comprehensive sex education' to kindergartners. Learning about sex before learning to read? Barack Obama. Wrong on education. Wrong for your family."

Only the first quote is from Education Week. It's accurate, but the paper also praised Obama's work on teacher quality and early childhood education and said McCain didn't have much of an education record either.

Furthermore, Obama did not sponsor or co-sponsor the 2003 bill, and it was never enacted.

Bounds declined to discuss the ad or make the McCain ad team available. GOP media consultant Alex Castellanos, who did not make the ad but is familiar with it, says the bill lowered the age for sexual education from sixth-grade to kindergarten. "McCain was right about sex ed before learning to read. That was true. Obama voted for sex ed" in kindergarten, he says.

But did Obama vote for "comprehensive sex education" in kindergarten? The bill repeatedly said instruction should be age appropriate, with parents able to pull their kids out if desired.

The sponsor of the bill, retired state senator Carol Ronen, did not return a call for comment.

Pam Sutherland, a legislative expert at the Illinois Planned Parenthood Council, says proponents made clear in hearings that age appropriate for grades K-3 meant teaching kids about bad touching, so they could protect themselves against predators. "That's what is generally taught" at that age, she says. That's also how Obama described the bill in 2004.

On ABC's The View, Joy Behar said to McCain, "We know these ads are lies. But you say 'I approve these messages.' Do you really approve them?"

"Actually, they are not lies," McCain responded.

For all the ruckus, Education ran only 36 times in smaller markets, mostly on one day — Sept. 10. Total outlay by the McCain campaign: Slightly more than $30,000, according to the Campaign Media Analysis Group.

In that, it was typical of many ads this year — Web-only or barely run. CMAG ad tracker Evan Tracey calls such ads "tomatoes for food-fight TV" and the blogosphere. Like Education, he says, an Obama ad depicting McCain as a relic who doesn't use e-mail "almost never aired."

A bad year for accuracy

Darrell West, author of Air Wars: Television Advertising in Election Campaigns, says 2008 is shaping up as "much worse in terms of factual inaccuracy" than the heavily negative years of 1964 and 1988.

That's even including the provocative Willie Horton ad an independent conservative group ran against Democrat Michael Dukakis 20 years ago. "There was a case of this convicted felon who, while out on furlough, did terrible deeds," West says. "Although the ad was racially tinged, it was factually accurate."

This year he says "McCain has been a much worse violator of the facts than Obama has been. There are statements that can be disproven that still are appearing ... in paid advertisements."

McCain ads on Obama's tax plan are a case in point. Factcheck.org has scored McCain for "multiple false and misleading claims" about the plan, citing studies that show families making under $250,000 would fare better with Obama. The group says McCain is engaged in a months-long "pattern of misrepresentation," most recently with a new ad late last week.

McCain also has the distinction of misusing Factcheck itself in an ad. "Those attacks on Palin that we debunked didn't come from Obama," the group protested.

Obama is edging into McCain territory, Manjoo and others say, with a new Spanish-language ad that suggests McCain is hostile to immigrants, ties him to offensive remarks from Rush Limbaugh and quotes Limbaugh out of context to boot.

"There goes Barack Obama, down into the deceptive-campaign-ad gutter with John McCain," The New York Times editorialized Friday. The ad earned Obama his first "pants on fire" rating from PolitiFact.

Doug Bailey, a retired Republican admaker who founded the political tipsheet Hotline, says outside groups did the dirty work in past elections. "Now you have the candidates authorizing ads run by the campaigns themselves which are just blatantly false," he says. Fact checking is important, he says, but may not be able to compete with the ads.

Manjoo argues in his book that partisan blogs, websites and cable shows keep people in their comfort zones and make it easier for politicians to lie. "We'll see in this election whether fact checking or lying wins out," he says. "If McCain does well with these types of ads, it will give people license to do this in the future."

McCain's 'Education' ad: A case study

Republican presidential nominee John McCain's ad called Education has become Exhibit A in a campaign some analysts and fact checkers say is setting new lows for truth in political advertising. A close look at what the ad said, where and when it aired and how its claims hold up.

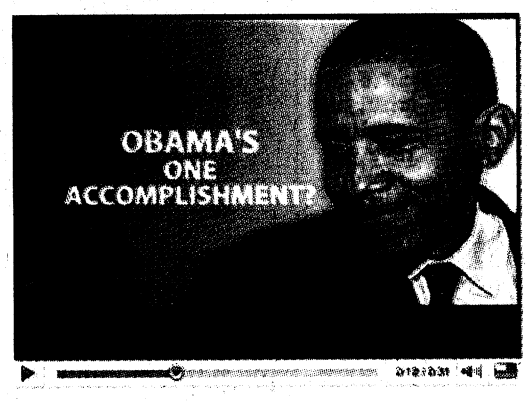
Ad text

"Education Week says Obama 'hasn't made a significant mark on education.' That he's 'elusive' on accountability. A 'staunch defender of the existing public school monopoly.' Obama's one accomplishment? Legislation to teach 'comprehensive sex education' to kindergartners. Learning about sex before learning to read? Barack Obama. Wrong on education. Wrong for your family."

A closer look

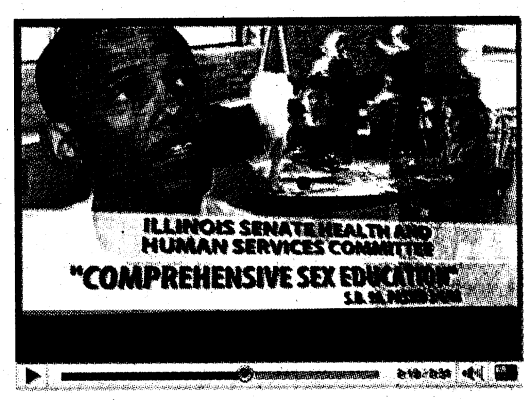
Text: "Education Week says Obama 'hasn't made a significant mark on education.'

Reality check: The publication said he had focused on other issues as a state and U.S. senator, but it praised his work on early childhood education and improving teacher quality. It also said McCain "doesn't have much of a record" either.



Text: "Obama's one accomplishment?"

Reality check: Obama was not a sponsor or co-sponsor of the 2003 bill, and it never passed.



Text: "Legislation to teach 'comprehensive sex education' to kindergartners."

Reality check: The bill repeatedly said that "comprehensive" instruction in grades K-12 was to be "age appropriate." Planned Parenthood's Pam Sutherland said testimony in hearings made clear that for K-3, that meant learning to protect against predators.

When and where the ad ran

The ad aired 36 times between Sept. 10 and Sept. 16 and is now out of rotation. It aired:

- 2 times on national cable
- 12 times in Sioux City, Iowa
- 4 times in Grand Rapids, Mich.
- 10 times in Rochester, Minn.
- 2 times in Youngstown, Ohio
- 2 times in Pittsburgh
- 2 times in Wausau, Wis.
- 2 times in Wheeling, W.Va.

Bush to take conciliatory tone in U.N. address

In his last time before the world body, he will press for action in Iran and Sudan

By Richard Wolf
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — President Bush comes before the United Nations General Assembly for the last time today as a multinationalist, committed to working with a league of nations he circumvented six years ago by launching a war against Iraq.

The president's last address will be conciliatory and forward-looking, according to national security adviser Stephen Hadley, but with a sense of urgency for balky U.N.-related missions such as probing nuclear activity in Iran and deploying peacekeepers in Sudan.

The speech was being rewritten Monday to incorporate an explanation of his administration's projected $700 billion effort to bail out financial institutions for bad loans. "The whole world is watching to see if we can act quickly," Bush said in a statement Monday.

Bush has had a troubled relationship with the U.N. ever since going to war in Iraq in 2003 without the backing of its Security Council. Over the years, he has been more willing to work with the international organization for peacekeeping and other purposes.

Today, Bush comes before the body as a president eager to work with other nations to steer Iran and North Korea away from their nuclear programs. Those efforts have been largely unsuccessful, as shown by Monday's latest developments: North Korea's threat to restart its nuclear reactor in Pyongyang and the International Atomic Energy Agency's declaration that Iran has not cleared up questions about its nuclear activities.

"Bush still gets a bit of a raw deal by being accused of being a unilateralist," says Reginald Dale, senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington. "Even with two of the three members of the 'axis of evil,' he has worked with other countries."

The president's schedule here includes his first meeting with Pakistan's new president, Asif Ali Zardari, just days after a bombing killed 53 people at the Marriott hotel in Islamabad. That meeting could be testy: Bush wants to pursue terrorists across the Pakistani border, which Zardari has warned against. There have been unconfirmed reports — denied by the U.S. military — of Pakistani troops firing at U.S. helicopters in recent days along the nation's mountainous western border with Afghanistan.

By Rick Maiman, AP

In New York: President Bush presented the Presidential Lifetime Volunteer Service Award on Monday to Joe Rizzolo for organizing a walk to honor 9/11 victims.

Bush's schedule includes meetings with political dissidents and Iraq coalition members, but it pales in comparison to the busy agenda of Republican vice presidential nominee Sarah Palin, who got her first passport last year. She has meetings today and Wednesday with the leaders of Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan, India, Georgia, Ukraine and Colombia, as well as with former secretary of State Henry Kissinger and rock star/humanitarian Bono.

Bush's agenda bespeaks the dangerous state of the world as he prepares to leave office. Most of his major international goals remain unfulfilled: Arab-Israeli peace, blocking Iran's nuclear ambitions and reversing North Korea's, even improving relations with Russia.

Lee Feinstein, visiting fellow at the Brookings Institution, cites "an administration that has come very late, and then only half-heartedly, to the idea that there are ways that the U.N. can support and reinforce American commitments and human values."

Bush's exit will be greeted with a "sigh of relief" from some members of the United Nations, says Stewart Patrick of the Council on Foreign Relations, citing what he calls "the most traumatic period in U.S.-U.N. relations, arguably, since the founding of the United Nations." Still, Patrick says, Bush has partially repaired that relationship after recognizing that the U.N. "remains an indispensable, if flawed, institution."

USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's plan to put more drones in the skies over Iraq and Afghanistan as a critical weapon against insurgents relies on a company that government investigators and military analysts say has not met the skyrocketing demand for the aircraft.

General Atomics Aeronautical Systems, maker of the unmanned Predator and Reaper planes, has shown it can't keep up with the workload for its contracts, according to a Government Accountability Office report released last month.

The company's Predator and Reaper drones are at the heart of the Pentagon's efforts in Afghanistan, as the drones are used to attack Taliban targets hiding in mountainous areas hard to reach on the ground.

Defense Secretary Robert Gates has made deploying more drones his top priority. The Taliban, the fundamentalist Muslim group that controlled Afghanistan until it was ousted by U.S. forces in October 2001, has regained strength in the past two years.

"It's a concern because the Army and Air Force are trying to surge their production," said Loren Thompson, a military analyst with the Lexington Institute in Arlington, Va. "If General Atomics can't keep up with the demand, war fighters can't get the intelligence they need."

General Atomics disputed the GAO's findings, saying it is running one month ahead on some contracts and has produced 300 Predators and 50 Reapers so far.

"These major efforts and activities have been accomplished by an extremely efficient and innovative company staffed by exceptional employees," General Atomics President Tom Cassidy said in an e-mail. "Such monumental accomplishments could not have been made possible if all the criticisms detailed in the GAO's report were true."

The GAO report was prepared in response to a protest filed by General Atomics and an affiliated company after they lost the bidding for a Navy drone contract.

Air Force budget documents detail General Atomics' problems in supplying the aircraft. It took the company 10 months to deliver 24 Predators ordered in July 2006, records show, and it will take 17 months for the company to deliver the same number of aircraft ordered in April. They won't start arriving until September 2009.

A Predator costs $4 million. The more-advanced Reaper costs almost $12 million.

"General Atomics is a good engineering company that has had problems transitioning to high volume," former Air Force secretary Michael Wynne said.

Thompson said General Atomics has lacked the resources of larger contractors, making it difficult to meet the skyrocketing demand for unmanned aircraft.

Gates has made fielding drones a top priority, akin to the production of the Mine Resistant Ambush Protected (MRAP) vehicles that have been rushed to war zones to protect troops from roadside bombs.

The Pentagon wants Predators and Reapers to fly 50 combat air patrols per month in Iraq and Afghanistan. Currently, it has 28 combat air patrols a month and wants to reach 31 by year's end.

The need for more battlefield video provided by drones has been insatiable. There has been a 300% annual increase for full-motion video, according to the Pentagon. It has been used to track insurgents planting roadside bombs, the top killer of U.S. troops in Iraq.

ElBaradei: Iran's stonewalling of U.N. agency a "serious concern."

IAEA: Iran blocking nuclear inquiry

The Associated Press

VIENNA — The head of the International Atomic Energy Agency warned Monday that he cannot determine whether Iran is hiding some nuclear activities.

IAEA head Mohamed ElBaradei said Iran's stonewalling of his agency was a "serious concern."

"Iran needs to give the agency substantive information" to clear up suspicions, he said at the start of a 35-nation board IAEA meeting in Austria, in comments made available to reporters.

ElBaradei rejected the Iranian suggestion that the IAEA probe could expose non-nuclear military secrets, saying the IAEA "does not in any way seek to 'pry' into Iran's conventional or missile-related military activities."

"We need, however, to make use of all relevant information to be able to confirm that no nuclear material is being used for nuclear weapons purposes," ElBaradei said.

He urged Iran to "implement all measures required to build confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear program at the earliest possible date." If it fails to do so, ElBaradei said, the IAEA "will not be able to provide credible assurances about the absence of undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran."

A senior Iranian envoy accused the United States of trying to use the IAEA as a tool in Washington's confrontation with Tehran. Iran has fully cooperated with the agency, said Ali Ashgar Soltanieh, the chief Iranian delegate to the IAEA. Allegations of nuclear weapons work by Tehran is based on forged documents and the issue is closed, he said.

"The international community and all member states of the IAEA are frustrated with this kind of United States actions in the IAEA," Soltanieh told reporters. "The Americans are every day isolating themselves.

"Iran is of course very advanced in missile activities and technology," the envoy said. "But there is no activity at all related to nuclear weapons."

Ahead of the meeting, hardline Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad declared that Iran's military will "break the hand" of anyone targeting the country's nuclear facilities.

Iran insists its nuclear activities are geared only toward generating power. But Israel says the Islamic Republic could have enough nuclear material to make its first bomb within a year. The U.S. estimates Tehran is at least two years away from that stage.

Iraq's Awakening Councils muffled

Political underdogs allege bias in ruling parties' crackdown

By Charles Levinson
USA TODAY

By Charles Levinson, USA TODAY

In hiding: Top leaders of the Awakening Council of Diyala province discuss strategy in the rural village of Isfayt, north of Baqouba.

ISFAYT, Iraq — In a mud farmhouse, down a maze of dusty roads guarded by masked teenagers with machine guns, the men who helped suppress al-Qaeda in Iraq are now hiding.

"Our government is after us," says their leader, Mulla Shihab al-Safi. "We sacrificed hundreds of our sons to drive al-Qaeda out. Now the government says we are no different than the terrorists."

Al-Safi is a local leader of a nationwide movement known as Awakening Councils. They are former insurgents, mostly Sunni, who turned on al-Qaeda and allied with the United States in early 2007.

Their success in fighting al-Qaeda in Iraq earned them popularity in the streets, but it also made them a threat to the ruling Shiite political parties that hold power in Baghdad and many of the provinces, including here in Diyala province north of Baghdad.

Since Iraq launched a military operation in Diyala in July to restore security, the government has started arresting Awakening Council leaders and other political rivals as well as legitimate militants, says Maj. Tim Hunt, the U.S. Army's liaison to the provincial government.

"I think what's occurring here indicates there is a sectarian political bias in how the government is prosecuting security operations," Hunt says.

By Karl Gelles, USA TODAY

The crackdown by the ruling parties on political rivals raises questions about the sort of democracy taking root in the country. By arresting leaders of a movement that helped defeat al-Qaeda in Iraq, the government may be inadvertently helping al-Qaeda re-establish itself, residents of the provincial capital of Baqouba fear.

Al-Qaeda's calling card?

"After the Awakening pulled back, we have started having problems again," stationery shop owner Naza Khaleq says. "The people are afraid al-Qaeda will return."

There are worrisome signs that is already happening. Three weeks ago, masked gunmen calling themselves the Abu Mustapha Brigades paraded in the middle of the night through the Tahrir neighborhood of Baqouba, Khaleq says.

Days later, bloodstained letters showed up on the doorsteps of Shiites, according to Iraqi police Col. Faisal Mohsen. One letter read: "You have 24 hours to leave your homes. We are coming."

Such incidents are the hallmarks of al-Qaeda in Iraq, Mohsen says. The trouble forced Iraq's National Police, which supposedly had secured the neighborhood in late July and then moved on, to reoccupy it this month.

Meanwhile, some of the men credited by the U.S. military and residents of Diyala for ousting al-Qaeda insurgents are either in prison or on the lam.

The Iraqi government insists that security, not politics, determines who is arrested, but the timing of arrest warrants for three Awakening Council leaders suggests otherwise. The government issued the warrants on May 27, just days after the three leaders had declared themselves candidates for the provincial council.

The arrest warrants also came just one day before candidates could begin registering for party alliances, and thereby disqualified the men from running. The Awakening Council candidates had been urging other Sunni parties to form an alliance to challenge the ruling Shiite parties.

Provincial elections could be held later this year or early next year, depending on when Iraq's parliament passes a needed election law.

"The moment we made it clear we intended to enter the political process, we found ourselves under attack by the security forces," says al-Safi, who is one of the three Awakening Council candidates now wanted by the government.

"There may be a connection between the arrest warrants and the elections," admits Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's representative in Diyala, Saad al-Dujayli. "The government is not united on this. There are political powers with differing goals, and there is conflict even within the government."

Rash of arrests a rude awakening

Al-Dujayli says he made a formal request five weeks ago that Baghdad cancel the arrest warrants but has been ignored.

In another example, the headquarters of the Sunni Islamic Party, which is allied with the Awakening in Diyala for the upcoming elections, has been raided three times in the past six weeks, provincial lawmaker Mahdi Saleh al-Jabbouri says.

At least a half-dozen of the party's leading politicians have been arrested or are wanted, he says.

The most well-publicized arrest came Aug. 18, when an Iraqi special forces unit stormed the provincial capital headquarters in the middle of the night and shot and killed the provincial governor's secretary before nabbing Islamic Party lawmaker Hussein al-Zubaidi.

Hunt, the U.S. Army liaison, says al-Zubaidi was known for his close ties to the Awakening and his arrest "enraged U.S. forces," who viewed him as an ally. Al-Zubaidi remains in custody on terrorism charges, though Hunt says the U.S. military has seen no evidence to back up the allegations. When U.S. military doctors checked on al-Zubaidi after his arrest, "he appeared very roughed up"; his face and body were covered in bruises, Hunt says.

"Every time the government of Iraq does something like that, it nudges these moderate Sunnis back toward the insurgency," Hunt says.

Back in the rural hideaway, al-Safi says he feels as if he is back in the insurgency and fleeing the authorities.

This refuge was once an al-Qaeda slaughterhouse where luckless captives were beheaded and buried in unmarked graves, he says. Today, thanks to al-Safi's fighters, it's safe enough that an American journalist can visit. This rural farming village north of Baqouba is filled with piles of rubble where houses once stood.

"Those were houses that belonged to our fighters. Al-Qaeda snuck in and blew them up," he says. "Now the government arrests us. That's democracy in Iraq — bombings and arrests."

Bomb kills 5 youths playing soccer near Mosul

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — A bomb hidden under a pile of trash struck children playing soccer near the northern city of Mosul on Monday, killing at least five of the youths, Iraqi officials said.

The blast occurred about 6 p.m. in the Sunni town of Hamam al-Alil, just south of Mosul, which has been the site of ongoing U.S.-Iraqi military operations aimed at routing insurgents.

"My son was playing soccer with his friends in an open area, but suddenly a bomb exploded near a heap of trash," Hazim Dawood said. "We were astonished why the bomb would be left in this place."

Ahmed Khalid, a doctor at the Mosul hospital, and police officials said the hospital had received the bodies of five children. Three other children were wounded, the officials said.

Baghdad explosion: Iraqi police inspect the scene of a car bombing Monday near a government office in the Karradah neighborhood. Al-Qaeda in Iraq was suspected in the attack.

Violence has dropped dramatically in Iraq, but the U.S. military has warned that Sunni and Shiite extremists maintain the ability to carry out deadly attacks.

Baghdad also faced more violence on Monday.

The deadliest attack in the capital was a parked car bombing near a residential building across the street from a government office that issues national identification cards in the Karradah neighborhood, officials said.

Iraqi police and hospital officials told the Associated Press that two men and a woman were killed and seven people were wounded in the attack. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to release the information.

The U.S. military said its initial assessment was that al-Qaeda in Iraq was behind the attack. It said two civilians were killed and 15 were wounded.

Also Monday, a mortar round slammed into a house in northwestern Baghdad, killing one man and wounding four others, police said.

Meanwhile, Iraq and Royal Dutch Shell PLC signed a deal to establish a joint venture that will tap natural gas in southern Iraq, the government said Monday.

Iraqi Oil Minister Hussain al-Shahristani and four executives from the Anglo-Dutch company signed the deal, Iraq's second with a foreign company since the U.S.-led invasion in 2003.

The joint venture with the state-run Iraqi South Oil Co. will invest in natural gas in the southern oil-rich province of Basra, Oil Ministry spokesman Assem Jihad said. Some of the extracted gas will cover domestic needs in power stations and factories, while the majority will be exported, Jihad said.

News from every state

Alabama: Russellville — Investigators checked missing persons reports and conducted forensics tests Monday after a dog brought home the severed foot of a young child in north Alabama. Russellville Police Chief Chris Hargett said a daylong search by two teams failed to locate additional remains on Sunday, and groups planned to fan out again today with tracking dogs. No children have been reported missing in the area, Hargett said.

Alaska: Anchorage — Two grizzly bear cubs will leave on Thursday for their new home at the Indianapolis Zoo. The cubs were taken in by the Anchorage-based Alaska Zoo after their mother was shot and killed in August by state wildlife officers. The sow was suspected of mauling a bicyclist in a city park, but DNA testing later disproved that. FedEx will move the cubs, accompanied by two keepers from Indianapolis.

Arizona: Phoenix — A seven-member task force appointed by the state Board of Education is reviewing Arizona's high school graduation test. One idea on the table is replacing the Arizona Instrument to Measure Standards with a national college exam. Another is continuing to use AIMS as a high school graduation test but adding a higher level version to gauge college readiness. The task force is to report its recommendations by June 30.

Arkansas: Nashville — A state prisoner accused of shooting two people over "domestic issues" while on a weekend furlough has died of an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound. Officials said the body of Craig Beavers Jr. was found in woods near Nashville, about a half-mile from where the shooting occurred Sunday. The two victims, who have not been identified, are expected to recover fully, authorities said.

California: Del Mar — Hundreds of raucous surfers and environmentalists packed a public hearing to protest a proposed 16-mile, six-lane highway that would cut through San Onofre State Park and pass close to a world-class surf break. Proponents argued the road is needed to alleviate congestion and serve as an alternate route for emergency vehicles in Orange and northern San Diego counties. ... Pomona — Retired NFL kicker Tony Zendejas pleaded not guilty to charges that he drugged a woman and raped her. Prosecutors allege that in January Zendejas gave a woman at his sports bar in San Dimas a drink that made her groggy. She told authorities she woke up in a motel and had been raped. Zendejas played with the Los Angeles Rams, Houston Oilers, Atlanta Falcons and San Francisco 49ers.

Colorado: Denver — A state legislative committee studying the wildfire threat proposed a requirement that all counties have preparedness plans. The committee also is looking to put $50 million over five years into wildfire mitigation. State Sen. Mike Kopp said the money would be used to reduce fire risk on federal land as well. Next, the committee will decide whether to draft a bill for the next legislative session.

Connecticut: Greenwich — Authorities said they issued more than twice as many safety and equipment violations to big rigs checked at Greenwich's Interstate 95 weigh station in the first part of this year compared to the same period a year earlier. State troopers upped inspection hours at the station, one of six in the state. Troopers recorded 5,236 violations and $1.2 million in fines in the first six months of 2008.

Delaware: Dover — Police accused Alfonso Rondo of Wilmington of entering the backyard of a home in Dover and grabbing a boy playing on his swingset. Rondo let the boy go when neighbors confronted him. He was later arrested and charged with second-degree kidnapping and second-degree trespassing.

D.C.: Metro's general manager said the transit agency would need $11.3 billion over 10 years to keep up with growth in ridership and replace worn-out rail cars. John Catoe said it would take $7 billion just to maintain the current service and keep the system running safely and reliably from 2010 to 2020. That includes repairs to leaking tunnels and crumbling platforms.

Florida: Sanford — A judge is considering whether a 22-year-old man who pleaded guilty to murdering his ex-girlfriend and a University of Central Florida student should be sentenced to death or life in prison. Andrew Allred waived his right to a jury in his sentencing hearing. He pleaded guilty to shooting and killing Tiffany Barwick and her friend Michael Ruschak in September 2007 in Oviedo. ... Bartow — Polk County authorities are searching for a burglar who stole five autographed footballs from a vacation home. The sheriff's office said two of the footballs were signed by quarterback great Johnny Unitas. One was signed by O.J. Simpson, one by Ricky Williams and one by the undefeated 1972 Miami Dolphins.

Georgia: Jekyll Island — Prime birding season is under way on Georgia's coast as fall begins and birds start flying south. In Golden Isles, 370 species of birds can be seen, especially on the Colonial Coast Birding Trail. The Georgia Department of Natural Resources' Brad Winn said shorebirds are top picks for spotting. Guides will be available during the Colonial Coast Birding and Nature Festival Oct. 9-13 on Jekyll Island. ... Jonesboro — The FBI reports a sharp rise in violent crime last year in Clayton County, south of Atlanta. There were 1,366 violent crime reports, up 21% from 2007. County Police Chief Jeffrey Turner said the poor economy may have been a factor.

Hawaii: Honolulu — Gov. Lingle said the state can't afford high-technology tax credits currently in place because tax revenues have dropped. The credits aim to diversify Hawaii's tourism-dependent economy and in 2006 saved business about $100 million. Lingle did not offer specifics on the changes she'll be seeking. She has ordered departments to cut spending because of the lower-than-expected revenues.

Idaho: Sandpoint — A chaplain resigned his ministry at a jail in northern Idaho to speak publicly about the mental competency of a man facing first-degree murder charges in the shooting death of Leslie Carlton Breaw. A judge ruled Keith Allen Brown is mentally unfit for criminal trial proceedings. Scott Herndon, who as a chaplain spent time with Brown, insists the man is sane.

Illinois: Springfield — When state lawmakers return to Springfield this week, Gov. Blagojevich will push for legislation requiring insurance companies to cover autism treatment. The governor wants insurers to cover up to $36,000 a year and unlimited doctor visits until age 21 for people with autism spectrum disorders. Currently, only people in large insurance pools can get such coverage, and only for mental health services. ... Chicago — Federal authorities approved a nearly $1 billion highway project for northeastern Illinois. The Prairie Parkway is meant to improve infrastructure in the fast-growing counties of Kane, Kendall and Grundy. Officials said the project will relieve congestion and help spur economic growth.

Indiana: Lowell — Northwestern Indiana farmers are weighing their crop losses after recent flooding that, for some, was the second wave this year. Bill Peterson Sr. said heavy rains in June flooded 400 of the 1,000 acres of corn he farms. He replanted in soybeans, but flooding Sept. 13-14 wiped them out. Soybean growers have more to lose during floods because corn is already topped out and their ears well above the ground, while soybeans sit close to the ground.

Iowa: Des Moines — The nonprofit group Trees Forever is using high-definition images of the city to guide the planting of hundreds of thousands of trees over the next several years. The University of Vermont analyzed the laser images that were collected by plane. Urban tree-planting can affect people's utility bills, property values and quality of life, said Randy Cook, an urban forester with the Iowa Department of Natural Resources.

Kansas: Topeka — The Department of Education reports enrollment in all-day kindergarten programs more than tripled over the past decade. In the last school year, more than 27,000 students were enrolled in such programs, compared with about 8,000 during the 1998-99 year. The enrollment during the 2007-08 school year was 25% higher than it was the previous year.

Kentucky: Louisville — Federal authorities conducted a surprise inspection of Kentucky's largest residential center for adults with physical and mental disabilities. Afterward, state officials said they expected to get most federal Medicaid funding restored. Federal officials gave preliminary approval to conditions at three of four units at Bluegrass Communities at Oakwood in Somerset, which lost Medicaid funding in May because of poor treatment of residents.

Louisiana: Grambling — State and local officials broke ground for the Eddie Robinson Museum on the Grambling State campus. The museum was first approved by the Louisiana Legislature nine years ago, just after Robinson's retirement from a football coaching career that ended with a Division I record 408 career victories. A series of disagreements over where the exhibits would be housed slowed the project until recently. Robinson died in 2007.

Maine: Augusta — Five years after Gov. Baldacci signed a bill creating Dirigo Health, the state-sponsored insurance program has not come close to its goal of covering a large share of Maine's uninsured. Although it aimed to cover 136,000 uninsured Mainers by 2009, Dirigo now serves only about 18,000, one-third of whom are part of the Medicaid program.

Maryland: Earlville — A 2-year-old girl from North East was burned when she fell into a campfire pit while playing at the Elkview Shores Campground in Cecil County, the State Fire Marshal's Office said. The girl's mother pulled her out and drove her to a paramedic station. The girl is hospitalized with first- and second-degree burns.

Massachusetts: Boston — The Justice Department said Massachusetts must provide Spanish-language ballots and materials to Puerto Rican voters in Worcester to settle allegations the state violated the Voting Rights Act. Federal officials said the state's failure to provide the translated materials to Worcester residents in 2001 resulted in Puerto Rican voters not being able to access the polls or cast an informed ballot. ... State Sen. Dianne Wilkerson decided to seek a recount after her 228-vote loss to challenger Sonia Chang-Diaz in last week's Democratic primary. Wilkerson, of Boston, is gathering signatures for a recount in five wards.

Michigan: Detroit — The city dropped all charges against more than 100 people who attended a "Funk Night," members-only party at the Contemporary Art Institute of Detroit in May, according to the American Civil Liberties Union. Police had said they raided the midnight to 5 a.m. event because they suspected illegal alcohol consumption. The ACLU said officers forced everyone to the floor and ticketed them for loitering. ... Michigan colleges are adding film-making classes as Hollywood continues to take advantage of lucrative state tax breaks, officials said. Dearborn's Henry Ford Community College is retraining workers for technical jobs. Michigan's Film Office expects to add a manager of job training, education and development by next month to work with schools.

Minnesota: Minneapolis — A new study by the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency found the weed-killer atrazine is showing up in lakes in northern Minnesota, far from farms. Scientists believe the chemical, used to control weeds in cornfields, is picked up and carried by wind and then falls from the sky in dust or rain. Steven Heiskary, a research scientist with the MPCA, said the atrazine concentrations were very low.

Mississippi: Fulton — Students in Itawamba County are being guaranteed two years of tuition at Itawamba Community College starting with the Class of 2009. Officials said the Three Rivers Planning and Development District will contribute up to $25,000 annually to the county program and offer matching grants to its other counties — Lee, Monroe, Pontotoc and Chickasaw. ... Biloxi — The Mississippi Department of Marine Resources is working to restore more than 1,000 acres of oyster reefs by distributing more than 62,000 cubic yards of cultch material, consisting of oyster shells and limestone. About 97% of the state's commercially harvested oysters come from the reefs in the western Mississippi Sound.

Missouri: St. Louis — Healthy Communities said a study by the University of Missouri-Columbia School of Medicine found a higher rate of underage drinking in St. Charles County than state and nation averages. The group said about one in four students surveyed reported using alcohol in the past month. Parents are being warned against hosting underage drinkers.

Montana: Great Falls — The state Highway Patrol is recruiting up to 10 troopers for training beginning in April 2009. The patrol's head recruiter said the effort continues improvements made after the 2005 Legislature boosted funding. The Legislature created a $5 vehicle registration fee, generating $6.6 million a year. Lawmakers also raised starting pay for troopers from $26,800 a year to almost $39,000.

Nebraska: Alliance — The Department of Veterans Affairs granted nearly $3 million to build a new state veterans cemetery in Alliance. Federal officials said the grant will cover the entire cost, including construction of a main entrance, roads and supporting infrastructure. The city donated 22 acres for the cemetery, which officials hope to open by fall 2010.

Nevada: Las Vegas — The state's electric utilities will soon be known simply as NV Energy Inc., company officials said. The utilities serving northern and southern Nevada, Sierra Pacific Power in Reno and Nevada Power in Las Vegas, will remain separate legal entities under the Reno-based parent, but each will do business as NV Energy. Company president Michael Yackira said the move won't mean layoffs or require much more than changing logos.

New Hampshire: Conway — This town is considering opening a public warming station as temporary shelter this winter to reduce the strain on its welfare budget. Officials say they were busy all summer with people needing help paying rent and utilities and expect demand to spike come winter. Towns must step in when people don't qualify for other programs or need immediate help, said Town Manager Earl Sires, but Conway's budget is tight.

New Jersey: Trenton — The state Supreme Court heard arguments over when police can conduct searches of cars without a warrant. State law says police must show there was probable cause and a safety risk to them or the public. The state argued that New Jersey should adopt the federal standard which only requires police to believe there is contraband in a car. The justices are considering two cases in which police uncovered drugs and weapons.

New Mexico: Las Cruces — A man charged with extreme cruelty in the deaths of five beagles kept a SWAT team at bay during a seven-hour standoff after authorities tried to serve a warrant. Mark Burbano, 47, was charged with five counts of extreme animal cruelty and one count of obstructing an officer. He was undergoing a psychiatric evaluation, authorities said.

New York: Syracuse — Attorney General Andrew Cuomo launched a website to help New Yorkers avoid home improvement scams and dishonest contractors. www.nyknowyourcontractor.com lists contractors who've had a complaint or lawsuit filed against them. Cuomo's office has handled more than 1,550 complaints against home improvement contractors since Jan. 1, 2007. ... New York — Ravaged lungs and rotting gums are among the images on a new line of matchbooks issued by the city's health department. The matchbooks say "Cigarettes Are Eating You Alive."

North Carolina: Chapel Hill — A committee of students and faculty at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill chose the South African human-rights campaigner and Nobel Peace Prize winner Desmond Tutu to be the commencement speaker next spring. The first black Anglican Archbishop of Cape Town led international protests in the 1980s to end racial segregation in South Africa.

North Dakota: Bismarck — A bridge that's carried traffic across the Missouri River between Bismarck and Mandan for more than 80 years will be destroyed next month. Once the Liberty Memorial Bridge has been stripped of usable materials, contractors plan to demolish it in three 480-foot pieces. The Demtech company will use explosive charges to burn through the bridge's steel structure. A new bridge recently opened just south of the new one.

Ohio: Cleveland — The state's top elections official is giving voters in the largest county more opportunities to cast absentee ballots in person. Secretary of State Jennifer Brunner sided with fellow Democrats on the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections to allow absentee voting Saturdays and Sundays on the five weekends leading up to Election Day. Republicans wanted to open the board's offices to absentee voters on only the four Saturdays and on two Sundays. ... Blue Ash — A charity in this Cincinnati suburb said it's being confused with a political action committee running local radio ads in support of Barack Obama. Matthew 25 Ministries said people have been calling the nonprofit asking why it's taken sides in the presidential race. But the ads are actually being aired by the Washington, D.C.-based Pac, Matthew 25 Network.

Oklahoma: Oklahoma City — Election Board Secretary Mike Clingman said state law prohibits former felons from registering to vote until the full length of their prescribed sentence has expired, even if they're no longer in prison or supervised by the Department of Corrections. The American Civil Liberties Union has said former Oklahoma felons have the right to register to vote in the upcoming presidential election if they are no longer incarcerated or under supervision.

Oregon: Salem — Marion County residents may soon be tossing stale pizza, leftover chicken and just about all their food into a recycling bins for compost. Residents already can pitch in fruit and vegetable scraps. A plan the county is developing would extend that to bread, dairy products and meat. The plan aims to improve the county's recycling rate, already among the best in Oregon.

Pennsylvania: Reading — Two constables are charged with theft, accused of billing Berks County for work they never did. In Pennsylvania, constables are elected and work as contractors for the court system. Also charged was one constable's wife, who had worked as a secretary for a judge. The charges follow a six-month investigation, prompted by reports in the Reading Eagle that some Berks County constables were making tens of thousands of dollars more than their counterparts elsewhere. ... Pittsburgh — Carnegie Mellon University began its University Digital Library project with the aim of putting all the world's books online. But for the time being, two-thirds of the 1.5 million books at www.ulib.org are in Chinese. Project co-founder Michael Shamos said the imbalance is largely due to U.S. copyright laws.

Rhode Island: Providence — A commission studying the state pension system is looking into stricter rules for retirement benefits. State officials said the pension fund has lost $1 billion since the start of the year. The commission suggests requiring workers and teachers to wait until their Social Security retirement age to begin collecting pensions, among other options. The panel's also considering scaling back retirement packages for many.

South Carolina: Charleston — One of the most popular annual events in this city where 18th-Century architecture is a major tourist attraction returns this week. The Fall Tours of Homes and Gardens is in its 32nd year of showing off the interiors of Charleston's private homes, gardens, churches and public buildings. The event opens on Thursday and runs through Oct. 26.

South Dakota: Pierre — A lawyer predicted constitutional problems if the state tries to put a fee on interstate underground pipelines to pay for cleaning up spills and leaks. State Department of Environment and Natural Resources attorney Joe Nadenicek said the U.S. Constitution gives Congress jurisdiction over interstate commerce, and states generally are banned from interfering. A crude oil pipeline is under construction in eastern South Dakota.

Tennessee: Memphis — Inmates at the West Tennessee State Penitentiary gave $1,200 to help support two children who survived a house fire Aug. 16 that killed their mother, four siblings and two cousins. The donation was made during a worship service at Greater Hope Baptist Church and came from inmates who make 50 cents to $2 per day at prison jobs. The house had a history of electrical problems.

Texas: Dallas — The tallest dude at the State Fair of Texas is ready to greet visitors when it opens Friday in Dallas. Workers erected 52-foot-tall Big Tex using a cage-like skeleton with 4,200 feet of steel rods. His fully dressed weight tops 3 tons, featuring a bright yellow shirt and blue denim jeans. Also at this year's fair, which runs through Oct. 19, the free-flying Birds of the World Expo marks its 20th consecutive year. ... Killeen — A would-be pilot is being sought after a stolen ultralight aircraft wiped out some mailboxes before crashing. Police said two men were noticed running from the crash scene. The experimental aircraft, taken from Killeen's Skylark Air Field, ended up damaged on the ground, police said. The owner said he had not given permission for anyone to fly the aircraft.

Utah: Kaysville — Police and the FBI are investigating the release of nearly 7,000 mink from a farm here. Davis County officials said all but about 1,000 of the animals were recovered. FBI special agent Juan Becerra said investigators have not determined who broke into the farm. The break-in was the second from a Wasatch Front mink farm in the last month.

Vermont: Montpelier — Officials at the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant want to know by spring if the state will give the facility permission to operate for 20 years beyond the 2012 expiration of its license. But several other groups said more time is needed before the Public Service Board can make an informed decision. Officials with the administration of Gov. Douglas said if the plant won't be extended, the state needs time to find other power sources.

Virginia: Richmond — The State Police needs an additional 600 troopers, investigators and supervisors to address highway safety, identify theft and other issues, according to an internal manpower study obtained by the Richmond Times-Dispatch. But Virginia's budget problems could hinder efforts to add personnel. Gov. Kaine plans to slash state spending and has asked directors of state agencies to submit contingencies by Friday.

Washington: Bellingham — Whatcom County's first case of measles in 13 years wasn't measles after all. The county health department said testing by the Centers for Disease Control contradicted the initial positive blood tests done by the state this month on a 48-year-old woman. The health department had notified anyone who had contact with her to watch for symptoms: runny nose, cough, fever and rash. Earlier this year in Grant County, 19 measles cases were confirmed. ... Tacoma — The state will continue leasing a ferry from Pierce County until August 2009 to run on the Port Townsend-Keystone route. The state Transportation Department pulled aging Steel-Electric Class vessels in November because of corroding hulls. The state plans to build new ferries that would begin serving the route in 2010.

West Virginia: Charleston — Attorney General Darrell McGraw's office is investigating complaints that some retailers may be violating West Virginia's gas gouging law. The office said it's received more than 200 telephone calls from residents complaining about gas price increases. McGraw has issued subpoenas to retailers seeking invoices and information to determine whether the increases were illegal.

Wisconsin: Fond du Lac — Hit with a decline in retail boat sales, Mercury Marine is reducing engine production and its work force. The manufacturer of recreational marine engines plans to reduce its hourly work force in Fond du Lac by 160 positions during the next two weeks. Mercury employs about 2,500 salaried and hourly people in the city. Parent company Brunswick Corp. announced it planned to trim $300 million from its operations.

Wyoming: Cheyenne — Police said a woman died when the driver of a motorcycle on which she was a passenger led police on a high-speed chase, then crashed in a field. The Wyoming Highway Patrol identified the dead woman as Stacey M. Thyarks, 25, of Cheyenne; the motorcycle operator was Adam B. Williams, 27, of Superior, Mont. Neither were wearing helmets. Williams was hospitalized in serious condition.

U.S. territory: Puerto Rico — Heavy rains drenched Puerto Rico on Monday as a tropical disturbance lingered over the U.S. Caribbean territory, killing four people, flooding streets and forcing closure of public schools. Police Superintendent Pedro Toledo said that among the dead was a 76-year-old man who suffered a heart attack as he swept water from his house. Two people drowned and the fourth victim also had a heart attack.

China's food safety chief quits over milk scandal

Producer knew for months of tainted formula

By Calum MacLeod
USA TODAY

SHIJIAZHUANG, China — The head of the Chinese agency responsible for food and product safety resigned Monday as the government tried to contain public anger over the growing crisis of tainted baby formula that has sickened 53,000 infants and killed four.

The company at the heart of the scandal, China's dairy giant Sanlu Group, has been shut down, but it had known for months that its baby formula was tainted with the industrial chemical melamine, the same chemical that poisoned thousands of American pets last year, the state-run Xinhua News Agency said Monday.

"They violated rules on reporting major incidents involving food safety," said an investigation team sent by the State Council, China's Cabinet, Xinhua reported.

The tainted baby formula and other milk products reveal lax standards that still plague the nation, despite government promises to clean up the made-in-China image after similar problems last year with pet food, toothpaste and seafood.

Sanlu, based here in Hebei province, began receiving complaints about sick infants in December 2007 and didn't run tests until June, after it discovered melamine was added to create a false protein reading in milk that would otherwise be rejected, the State Council investigation found.

Sanlu reported the matter to the Shijiazhuang government Aug. 2 — eight months after learning of the problem, Xinhua said.

Li Changjiang, director of the General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection and Quarantine, quit on Monday, according to Xinhua, which called him "the highest ranking official brought down so far by the dairy product contamination scandal."

Almost 13,000 children, most younger than 2, remain hospitalized, and 104 are in serious condition, according to China's Ministry of Health. Melamine can cause kidney stones and kidney failure.

An official investigation discovered melamine in 20% of China's producers of infant formula and also in liquid milk products of China's top three dairy giants, including Olympic sponsor Yili.

The United States and Europe ban Chinese milk products, but the health scare has spread to Asian neighbors. Several markets in the region have banned or recalled Chinese dairy products.

Zhang Yong, the father of 13-month-old twin girls, says one has urinary tract problems after drinking Sanlu formula.

"I feel cheated by the company," says Zhang, 29, who works in a Beijing shopping mall. "I knew that Sanlu was the biggest producer of milk powder in China, and the doctor also suggested we feed Sanlu when our babies were born. Officials should do more to protect consumers. I am so angry that they didn't warn us earlier."

The Chinese public "has lost trust in Chinese-made dairy products," says Chen Lianfang, a dairy analyst at Beijing Orient Agribusiness Consultant. Recent success is partly to blame. Raw milk production jumped to 36 million tons last year from 5 million a decade ago, Chen says.

"The growth has been too quick and much basic work such as inspection has failed to keep up. Adding illegal materials to milk is quite common in China, as the prices set by companies are unfair to farmers," he says.

Chen says the testing standards should be higher, and the government needs stricter inspections.

Suo Kuilu insists he adds nothing to the milk from the 20 cows on his small dairy farm in Hebei province, one of China's key dairy regions. "We dairy farmers are very worried as no one wants to buy our milk now," says Suo, 68. "We have never had quality problems here, but we may have to slaughter or sell our cows."

Chinese police have said that Sanlu's contamination most likely occurred at the milk collection stage, when melamine was added. At a milk collecting station in nearby Liangzhuang village, Mi Pengyong, 45, has not sold any milk for five days.

"Officials have said we will receive subsidies for our losses, but I am worried by rumors that they will shut down small dealers like me," Mi says.

He shows off a $2,500, U.S.-made analyzer he uses to check the quality of the milk he receives from 20 local farmers.

Zhou Qin, a writer who follows food safety issues, says, "Food safety is growing worse and worse in China. Every one or two years they arrest a government leader, or one resigns, but the system remains the same."

Livni gets formal approval to assemble Israeli government

Israeli Foreign Minister Tzipi Livni on Monday received formal approval to form a government, starting the clock on a 42-day period for putting together a team and resuming Mideast peace talks.

Livni, 50, once an officer in the Mossad spy agency, has pledged to pursue peace with the Palestinians and Syria, following up negotiations started by Prime Minister Ehud Olmert. She would be Israel's first female prime minister since Golda Meir retired in 1974.

If Livni fails to set up a coalition that can win parliamentary approval, Israel will hold an election within 90 days. Then the work of hammering together a coalition government would start over, stretching into next year. As leader of the largest party in the parliament, Livni was the automatic choice to succeed Olmert, who resigned Sunday because of a string of corruption allegations.

Canada temporarily allows deserter to remain

A U.S. Army specialist who fled to Canada after learning his unit was to be deployed to Iraq has won a last-minute stay of deportation.

A Canadian Federal Court judge said Jeremy Hinzman 29, can stay in Canada while the court decides whether he can appeal his deportation order. A reason for the stay wasn't immediately given.

"We're elated," Hinzman said, but "we're not out of the woods at all. We just have a stay of removal."

Hinzman was due to be deported today to the USA.

Before he fled Fort Bragg in North Carolina in January 2004, Hinzman had served a tour of duty with the 82nd Airborne Division in Afghanistan. He served in a non-combat position because he applied for conscientious objector status before his unit deployed to Iraq in 2002.

13 mowed down by car in Jerusalem

A Palestinian resident of Jerusalem slammed a car into a crowd in central Jerusalem late Monday, injuring 13 people, nearly all of whom were Israeli soldiers.

Jerusalem police commander Ilan Franco said a soldier in the group killed the driver. He said two of the 13 injured were in serious condition while the others sustained slight wounds. Doctors at the hospitals said all were conscious and were being treated. Franco said the driver was a Palestinian resident of East Jerusalem who acted alone. Israel Radio said the soldiers, from the Artillery Corps, were on a tour of Jerusalem before the Jewish New Year holiday next week.

It was the third terrorist attack in Jerusalem in which vehicles were used as weapons in recent months. In July, two Palestinians living in Jerusalem carried out separate attacks using heavy construction machinery that killed three people and injured several others. Both attackers were fatally shot by police and soldiers.

U.K. experts: Stonehenge perhaps pilgrimage site for ill

Archaeologists said Stonehenge, Britain's most famous prehistoric monument, may have been an ancient pilgrimage site for the sick who believed its stones had healing qualities.

"It was the magical qualities of these stones which ... transformed the monument and made it a place of pilgrimage for the sick and injured of the Neolithic world," a statement from a team of archaeologists at Britain's Bournemouth University said.

Geoffrey Wainwright, president of the Society of Antiquaries of London, told BBC Radio that a number of the burials around Stonehenge showed signs of trauma and deformity, which led the archaeologists to their conclusion.

The bluestones at the site were placed there between 2400 B.C. and 2200 B.C. Fragments of charcoal dating from before 7000 B.C., show that humans were active in the area much earlier.

U.S. denies copters drew fire at Pakistan border

The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — U.S. helicopters flew into Pakistan's militant-pervaded border region but returned to Afghanistan after troops and tribesmen opened fire, intelligence officials said Monday. Washington denied the account.

Two intelligence officials told the Associated Press that two U.S. helicopters crossed 1 mile into Pakistan in the Alwara Mandi area in North Waziristan on Sunday. They asked for anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the news media.

Citing informants in the field, they said Pakistani troops and tribesmen responded with small-arms fire, but it was not clear whether it was aimed at the choppers or just warning shots. The helicopters did not return fire and re-entered Afghan airspace without landing, the officials said.

That account was denied by Pentagon officials. "There was no such incursion; there was no such event," said Col. Gary Keck, a Defense Department spokesman.

Hotel in ruins: A rescue worker searches inside a room at Islamabad's Marriott Hotel on Monday. Saturday's blast killed 53.

White House press secretary Dana Perino, talking to reporters on Air Force One about the report, said: "I would question that report, and I'm going to refer to the Department of Defense for the veracity of the report, but that has been debunked."

Pakistan's army said it had no information on the reported incursion across the poorly demarcated border.

Its military chief and newly elected President Asif Ali Zardari have said the missile strikes and incursions were violations of Pakistan's sovereignty and only fueled extremist violence.

"Give us the intelligence, and we will do the job," he said in an interview with NBC. "It's better done by our forces than yours."

Meanwhile, Dubai-based TV channel Al-Arabiya said Monday it had received a tape from a group calling itself "Fedayeen Al-Islam" — Arabic for "Islam commandos" — claiming responsibility for the bombing Saturday of a luxury hotel in Islamabad that killed 53.

Interior Ministry chief Rehman Malik said Zardari, the prime minister and other top government officials had been due to dine at the Marriott on Saturday, but they decided to change the venue at the last minute. However, Jamil Khawar, a spokesman for the hotel owner, said, "We didn't have any reservation of such a dinner."

If foreign oil has us over a barrel now, what happens when our population increases by another 100 million?

As rising fuel prices put renewed pressure on family budgets, many worry price increases will continue. Some recall the mile-long gas lines years ago when Americans had to compete for a share of dwindling energy supplies. With America's population at a record 300 million today, supplies are again tight in spite of record high prices. And the U.S. Census Bureau projects that another 110 million people will be added to our population between 2000 and 2040*. What will happen to energy prices then? Not to mention food and other resources. Fortunately, there is some hope. Americans are already consuming less. Alternative fuel sources are now being vigorously pursued. And another major leap in population is avoidable if we all work together. According to the Pew Hispanic Research Center, 82% of America's projected population increase between 2005 and 2050 will result from immigration. If we can continue reducing our energy consumption, begin leveraging alternative fuels and agree on a reasonable plan to reduce immigration, we may be able to reduce the threat of even higher prices tomorrow. Aren't we all tired of foreign interests having us over a barrel?

Amish mantle and miracle invention help home heat bills hit rock bottom

Miracle heaters being given away free with orders for real Amish fireplace mantles to announce the invention that help slash heat bills, but Amish craftsmen under strain of early Christmas rush forces household limit of 2

Save money: only uses about 8¢ electric an hour; so turn down your thermostat and never be cold again

Everyone hates high heat bills. But we're all sick and tired of simply turning down the thermostat and then being cold.

Well now, the popular HEAT SURGE® miracle heaters are actually being given away free to the general public for the next 48 hours starting at precisely 8:00 a.m. today.

The only thing local readers have to do is call the National Distribution Hotline before the 48-hour deadline with their order for the handmade Amish Fireplace Mantle. Everyone who does is instantly being awarded the miracle heater absolutely free.

This is all happening to announce the HEAT SURGE Roll-n-Glow® Fireplace which actually rolls from room-to-room so you can turn down your thermostat and take the heat with you anywhere. That way, everyone who gets them first can immediately start saving on their heat bills.

Just in time for winter weather, portable Amish encased fireplaces are being delivered directly to the doors of all those who beat the deadline.

These remarkable fireplaces are being called a miracle because they have what's being called the 'Fireless Flame' patented technology that gives you the peaceful flicker of a real fire but without any flames, fumes, smells, ashes or mess. Everyone is getting them because they require no chimney and no vent. You just plug them in.

The Fireless Flame looks so real it amazes everybody because it has no real fire. So what's the catch? Well, soft spoken Amish craftsmen who take their time hand building the mantles have a process that forces a strict household limit of 2 to keep up with orders.

"We can barely keep up ever since we started giving heaters away free. With winter just around the corner, everyone's trying to get them. Amish craftsmen are working their fingers to the bone to be sure everyone gets their delivery in time for Christmas," confirms Timothy Milton, National Shipping Director.

"These portable Roll-n-Glow Fireplaces are the latest home decorating sensation. They actually give you a beautifully redecorated room while they quickly heat from wall to wall. It's the best way to dress up every room, stay really warm and slash your heat bills all at the same time," says Josette Holland, Home Makeover Expert.

And here's the best part. Readers who beat the 48-hour order deadline are getting their imported hi-tech miracle heaters free when encased in the Amish built real wood fireplace mantles. The mantles are being handmade in the USA right in the heart of Amish country where they are beautifully hand-rubbed, stained and varnished.

You just can't find custom made Amish mantles like this in the national chain stores. That makes the oak mantle a real steal for just two hundred ninety-eight dollars since the entire cost of the miracle heater is free.

This free giveaway is the best way to slash heating bills and stay warm this fall and winter. The HEAT SURGE Roll-n-Glow Fireplace gives you zone heating and all the beauty and warmth of a built-in fireplace but rolls from room-to-room so it can also save you a ton of money on heating bills.

Even people in California and Florida are flocking to get them so they may never have to turn on their furnace all winter. And since it uses only about 8 cents of electric an hour the potential savings are absolutely incredible.

"We are making sure no one gets left out, but you better hurry because entire communities of Amish craftsmen are straining to keep up with demands. For now, we are turning away all dealers in order to let readers have two per household just as long as they call before the deadline," confirms Milton.

It's a really smart decision to get two right now because for only the next 48 hours you get both miracle heaters free. That's like putting five hundred bucks right in your pocket and you can save even more money on your monthly heating bills.

"Everyone's calling to get one but those who are getting their Christmas shopping done early are surprising the whole family by getting two. So when lines are busy keep trying or log onto amishfireplaces.com. We promise to get to every call. Then we can have a delivery truck out to your door right away with your beautiful Heat Surge Roll-n-Glow Fireplace," Milton said.

"You'll instantly feel bone soothing heat in any room. You will never have to be cold again," he said. ■

■ GENUINE AMISH MANTLES MADE IN THE USA: Everyone wants to save money on heat bills this winter, so entire Amish communities are working from the crack of dawn to finish. These fine real wood Amish made fireplace mantles are built to last forever. The oak mantle is a real steal at just two hundred ninety-eight dollars because all those who beat the order deadline by calling the National Hotline at 1-800-918-4312 to order the fireplace mantles are actually getting the imported hi-tech Fireless Flame HEAT SURGE miracle heaters for free.

Missionaries accuse Brazil of allowing infanticide

Christians threaten Indian culture, government says

By Dan Harris
Special for USA TODAY

BRASILIA, Brazil — Evangelical Christian missionaries have launched a campaign against what they claim is the widespread practice of infanticide among Amazonian Indians. The missionaries, associated with the U.S.-based group Youth With A Mission, say the Brazilian government is turning a blind eye to the killing of babies born with birth defects, many of which are treatable by Western medicine.

Brazilian government officials say the missionaries are exaggerating and exploiting the issue to justify their attempts to convert Indians to Christianity, destroying ancient civilizations in the process.

The fight has spilled into American churches and Brazilian national politics. It has reached the point that the Brazilian Department of Indian Affairs accuses the evangelicals of enslaving Indians and disguising their intent to evangelize.

ABC NEWS
See Dan Harris' report Wednesday on Nightline.

A girl named Hakani

At the center of the debate is a girl named Hakani, a member of the Suruwaha Indian tribe, who has been adopted by evangelical missionaries, Marcia and Edson Suzuki.

The Suzukis say members of the tribe tried to kill Hakani by burying her alive because she was disabled.

"When she was born, she looked normal," Marcia Suzuki says. "But when she was 2, she couldn't walk or talk, so they thought she had a monkey's soul, not a child's soul."

The Suzukis say Hakani was rescued by an older brother, who carried the girl out of the jungle on his back. When they first saw Hakani, they say, she was 5 years old but weighed only 15 pounds and had scars all over her body.

Eight years later, Hakani walks and talks normally. Doctors diagnosed her with treatable thyroid problems.

The Suzukis have hospital records and pictures of how the girl looked when they found her. They admit there is no way to verify what they say happened with the remote jungle tribe.

They teamed up with David Cunningham, an American film director whose father founded Youth With A Mission, to make a movie, Hakani, that graphically recreates Hakani's alleged attempted murder. It is shown on the Internet and at churches in the USA and Brazil to raise money and awareness of legislation against infanticide in the Brazilian legislature.

'It's a taboo'

The missionaries say Hakani's is not an isolated case. They say infanticide is common among Brazil's more than 200 indigenous tribes, which they say sometimes kill babies because they are deformed or are born to a single mother. The missionaries say the Brazilian government often overlooks the killings in the name of respecting Indian culture.

"It's a taboo," Suzuki says. "No one is allowed to talk about it or interfere."

The Brazilian government has tried to discourage infanticide, but the Department of Indian Affairs does not have a policy that requires action to stop it from happening.

In an interview here in the Brazilian capital, Antenor Vaz of the Department of Indian Affairs says that the state is not "in favor of death" but that it would be dangerous to "criminalize indigenous actions."

The state, he says, should not use the moral judgments of modern culture "to regulate the indigenous cultures who have survived in this land a lot longer than us whites."

To do so, he says, risks subverting ancient cultures. "We are not defending death," he says. "Very much to the contrary, we are defending the cultural survival of a people."

'The kindest thing to do'

It is a view shared by some activists. "I'm not going to defend infanticide," says Fiona Watson of Survival International, a group that defends the right of native tribes all over the world. "But I think you have to understand," she says, that in the context of Indian culture, "it's not considered murder."

"In fact," she says, "it's often considered something which is a kind thing to do. If you have somebody who is born into your community who is not going to survive, who is very badly deformed and you are an indigenous people who are living deep in the jungle, you don't have access to medical care, that is the kindest thing to do."

Critics say the missionaries' claim of 200 baby killings a year is seriously overstating the problem. "Infanticide is quite rare, and it's dying out," Watson says.

For the missionaries, "this is part of a strategy to justify their presence on indigenous lands," Vaz says.

He and activists such as Watson are offended by the Hakani movie, which they call racist. "Community actions are taken out of the cultural context and portray the Indians as savages, barbarians," he says.

When Brazil's Indian tribes are being forced off their land or killed by ranchers, miners and loggers, Watson says, the infanticide issue is a destructive distraction.

She says evangelical missionaries have emerged as perhaps the greatest threat to the Indians' survival. "I think they are doing a huge amount of harm," Watson says. "They are destroying people's beliefs."

Watson says erasing Indians' traditional faiths destroys their cultures, which have remained self-sufficient for hundreds, if not thousands, of years. "I have seen that," she says, "where a once proud people end up subdued, dependent upon people, because they have lost their beliefs."

Government accusations

Vaz recently completed an investigation into Youth With A Mission. His report accuses the group of "hiding their intent to evangelize" and bribing tribe members with tools and medicine to get them to listen to the gospel.

The report, without elaboration, accuses the missionaries of slavery, illegally taking blood samples from Indians and illegally removing Indian children.

Braulia Ribeira, who runs YWAM's operations in the Amazon, denies the allegations. "I think they threw as many accusations as they could, hoping that at least one of them would stick," she says.

"They are trying to take the focus off the problems," Marcia Suzuki says. "Children are being killed, hundreds, in very cruel ways ... but the government is trying to distract people and say, 'No, it's not the problem. The problem is the missionaries.' "

The missionaries deny that they are using infanticide as a smokescreen for efforts to convert Indians. YWAM members, including Marcia and Edson Suzuki, often live with tribes for decades, learning their ancient languages and providing health care and education. Despite their religious orientation, Ribeira says, they do not proselytize. "Our main mission," she says, "is to provide access to means of survival."

At one site where YWAM works, deep in the jungle near Porto Velho, an Indian girl wears a Jesus T-shirt.

Francisca Irving, one of the missionaries working there, admits preaching the gospel to Indians. "Yes, we teach Jesus," she says. "I would lie if I told you we didn't talk about Jesus."

The legislative push against infanticide is gaining steam in the Brazilian legislature. One house of the Brazilian legislature has passed a bill that would allow children whose lives are "at risk due to cultural practices" to be removed from their homes.

Vaz says the Department of Indian Affairs is developing a policy.

"Infanticide is a serious issue, which needs to be discussed," he says. But "this is not a discussion that must only be seen through the Christian perspective."

Father Damien: 19th-century Catholic priest who cared for lepers is up for sainthood.

KALAUPAPA, Hawaii — In a state known for bustling tourist destinations such as Waikiki and the Kilauea volcano, Kalaupapa is sacred ground. It has a history of disease, suffering and isolation.

Since the Hawaiian Kingdom started exiling leprosy patients here in 1866, about 8,000 people have died on this remote peninsula. Many lepers were taken from their families and left to scrounge for shelter, clothes and food. The vast majority were buried in unmarked graves.

Today, visitor interest in Kalaupapa, on the northern edge of Molokai island, is growing. It will likely increase when the Vatican proclaims Father Damien — the 19th-century priest who cared for the leprosy patients — a saint, most likely late next year.

The two dozen patients still living here are eager to celebrate Kalaupapa's most famous resident. They would welcome pilgrims at Damien's church and grave.

However, the patients and their supporters also don't want throngs of tourists disturbing the community's privacy and desecrating the land.

"The priority is the patients. That's why we have to approach this very delicately," state Sen. J. Kalani English said. "Their privacy is paramount, their security is paramount, their dignity is paramount."

Kalaupapa's attraction for tourists and pilgrims is heightened by the dramatic story behind the Vatican's recognition of a miracle attributed to Damien, who died in 1889 after contracting leprosy himself.

Audrey Toguchi, an 80-year-old Catholic from the Honolulu suburb of Aiea, came to Kalaupapa 10 years ago to pray for help at Damien's grave after she was diagnosed with terminal cancer. Less than a year later, Toguchi's cancer disappeared.

In July, Pope Benedict XVI ruled Damien had intervened because there was no scientific explanation for Toguchi's recovery.

Kalaupapa is dramatically isolated, a peninsula cut off by 2,000-foot cliffs and surrounded by ocean. It can only be reached by small plane, mule ride or a one- to two-hour hike. Only 100 people live here, including the patients and care workers.

The state Department of Health limits visitors to Kalaupapa at 100 per day, and each visitor must obtain a permit. On average, only about 25 people make the trip.

Terryl Vencl, executive director of the Maui Visitors Bureau, which promotes Molokai tourism, expects more people will want to visit. The bureau has no plans to market tours after Damien is canonized but will give travel agents information about Kalaupapa.

Lawmakers, state officials and the National Park Service, which operates a historical park at Kalaupapa, all promise they won't allow the visitor cap to be raised without approval from the remaining patients.

Anwei Law, a historian who has been coming to Kalaupapa for almost 40 years, said visitors need to remember that Kalaupapa is not just another tourist attraction.

"It's a sacred place because you've had so many people live there and die there," Law said. "It's a place where people had everything taken from them, but their response was not one of hatred."

Leprosy, also known as Hansen's disease, is spread by person-to-person contact, although it's not easily transmitted. It can cause skin lesions, mangle fingers and toes and lead to blindness.

It's been curable since the development of sulfone drugs in the 1940s and people treated with drugs aren't contagious. Hawaii did away with the exile policy in 1969.

Patients sent here before 1969 are free to leave, but many have chosen to stay because it's become their home.

The state has promised to keep the settlement open and care for patients until the last one dies. The youngest is now 67.

After that, the National Park Service will take over management of the peninsula.

The kingdom began strictly enforcing its isolation policy in 1873 — the year Damien arrived — sending hundreds of people to Kalaupapa even though there was no housing for them and no doctor to care for their sores. They were expected to build their own homes, grow their own food and make their own clothes even though many of them were profoundly sick.

When a resident doctor finally arrived in 1879, he wouldn't touch anybody and left medicine on a fence post.

Damien, born in Belgium as Joseph de Veuster, stayed and put no barriers between himself and the patients. He built homes, constructed a water system and imported cattle. He had no medical training, but he did have a medical book and a bag, and he made rounds washing and bandaging patient's sores.

He shared his pipe with patients and ate from the same bowl. Even before he contracted Hansen's disease, Damien began his sermons saying "We lepers."

Damien was diagnosed with leprosy 12 years after he arrived at Kalaupapa and died four years later, at age 49. He's the only health care worker in Hawaii who ever contracted Hansen's.

Henry Nalaielua, 83, a patient who moved to Kalaupapa in 1941, said it would be "a glorious day" when Damien is canonized and would welcome pilgrims.

"I know all of us hope that he does become a saint," said Nalaielua, a Catholic. "And that his church here will maybe become a shrine, instead of just Father Damien's church."

Even so, patients and their supporters are firm in wanting to retain the 100-person-per-day limit.

Law said the limit on visitors should be maintained even after the last patient dies.

"You really need to be able to feel the isolation of the place. If you're there with 500 people, you're no way going to feel the isolation that people had to go through," Law said.

"You lose a lot of the lessons of history and the meaning."

McCain leads Obama in race to distort each other's records

Presidential campaigns have never been genteel debates over policy disagreements, but what's really disappointing about this one is that candidates who promised that this would somehow be a better and more substantive discussion have given in to the same imperatives that turned other campaigns ugly, abandoning honest attacks for distortion and outright falsehoods.

Don't take our word for it. Truth-squadding candidates' assertions has become a full-time business for journalists and has raised the profile of at least two straight-shooting websites — FactCheck.org and PolitiFact.com — that measure candidates' statements against the facts.

A fair reading of all the fact-checking shows that both Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama have stepped over the line dozens of times and keep doing it. That same fair reading suggests that while both nominees are guilty of sometimes outrageous falsehoods, McCain — who has prided himself on "straight talk" and took the high road when scurrilous attacks helped cost him the GOP presidential nomination in 2000 — has crossed the line more often and more egregiously.

This isn't about ending negative advertising, which is sometimes helpful. It's perfectly fair for a candidate to point out his opponent's deficiencies. McCain hit Obama for taking more campaign money from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac than almost any other member of Congress when those two institutions were trying to avoid stricter regulation. The money came not from the firms but their employees, but it's still a fair shot.

What's not fair, and what demeans the candidates when they do it, are statements that flatly misrepresent their opponent's positions or their own. Fact-checking websites pride themselves on neutrality and avoid comparing the candidates' mendacity, but we toted up Politifact.com's ratings and found McCain beats Obama about 5 to 3.

Five of the worst from both candidates:

▸ McCain on Obama and taxes. McCain has repeatedly implied that Obama wants to raise taxes on every taxpayer. A total distortion, fact-checkers say, noting that Obama would actually cut taxes on low- and middle-income people more than McCain would. Obama would raise taxes — but on the sort of upper-income people (such as families making more than $250,000 a year) who would get the biggest tax breaks from McCain.

▸ Obama on McCain and Social Security. Obama distorted the effects of President Bush's proposal to partially privatize Social Security (which McCain supported), charging that it would cut retirees' benefits in half and implying that it would leave current retirees' benefits to the mercy of the stock market. FactCheck.org points out that no current retirees would have been affected by the Bush plan, and even future retirees wouldn't have had their benefits cut in half.

▸ McCain on Obama and sex education. A widely derided McCain TV spot charges that Obama supported sex education for children as young as kindergarteners. Fact-checkers dismantling the ad's script found little if anything that was true. Obama supported warning kids about predators and backed an opt-out provision for parents.

▸ Obama on McCain and immigration. Politifact.com awards Obama his only "pants on fire" lie (McCain gets six) for a Spanish-language TV spot that grossly distorts McCain's immigration position by falsely tying McCain to out-of-context comments from talk radio host Rush Limbaugh. McCain favored a bipartisan approach that Congress defeated.

▸ McCain on Palin. McCain says his vice presidential running mate, Sarah Palin, never sought earmarks as governor of Alaska. In fact, her administration sought 83 earmarks worth $453 million for 2008 and 2009. McCain and Palin both say she rejected the infamous "bridge to nowhere" earmark. In fact, she supported the bridge until it lost support in Washington. The state kept the money anyway.

What's worse than being ignorant of the truth is being indifferent to it — repeating falsehoods after they've been pointed out. After McCain's claims are revealed to be false (earmarks and taxes, for example), he often repeats them anyway. Obama has changed some of his false assertions, though not all.

Before this campaign began, both candidates had records of avoiding the low road, and with so many differences between them, they shouldn't need to travel that path. When they do, they're essentially saying that they can't win on merit.

The McCain campaign declined to provide an opposing view to this editorial.

Political Pinocchios

PolitiFact.com rates candidates' statements on a six-category scale from "true" to "pants on fire" falsehoods. Their analysis suggests that while both presidential candidates have stretched or ignored the truth, Republican John McCain has done that more often than Democrat Barack Obama:

▸ Barely true
McCain — 22
Obama — 14
▸ False
McCain — 23
Obama — 18
▸ Pants on fire
McCain — 6
Obama — 1

Rally round: Wall Streeter Brian Dolan worked through the buying surge following news of a multibillion-dollar bank bailout.

Stop rewarding incompetence and greed

When many hardworking Americans are struggling to keep a roof over their heads and food on the table for their family, the recent government bailouts and guarantees for Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and American International Group present a problem.

Should these companies have been bailed out at taxpayers' expense to prevent further economic ramifications? Probably.

However, the CEOs and upper management all earned so much more than the average worker does. Now they will be rewarded for their shortsightedness and greed. Even if these upper management folks are terminated, many will walk away with many millions of dollars in corporate guarantees and golden parachutes.

When the bailouts are at the taxpayers' expense, the incompetence of the executives should not be rewarded.

I, for one, would like to see our government take back any monies these executives receive in golden parachutes. Let them claim unemployment as employees of the affected companies might have to do and other Americans affected by these hard economic times are forced to do.

Joel Worthington
Excelsior, Minn.

Who is to blame?

Wall Street leads to Capitol Hill. Congress is so embedded in corporate America and large financial institutions that it constantly displays arrogant disregard for the issues of the people.

When taxpayers bail out corporations on the slippery slopes, we "the people" should own them outright. The executive management team, or lack thereof, should be replaced. Further, profits should be distributed as a dividend check to those Americans who pay taxes, similar to Alaskan residents receiving a portion of the state's oil royalties.

Congress should pass legislation that keeps financial entities from becoming such industry megaliths that just the thought of their insolvency or demise throws the U.S. economy into disarray. Surely lawmakers' moms told them: "Don't put all your eggs in one basket." Then why put our national well-being in one basket of greed?

The fat cat executives manipulated securities based on risky subprime home loans. Accountability means little in corporate America, and it shows. The American dream is fast becoming an ongoing nightmare.

Evangelicals are masters at using double standard

I was disappointed by the reactions of evangelical Christian apologists to the excellent points raised in commentary writer David Gushee's carefully reasoned Forum piece "The Palin Predicament" ("Women as secular — not spiritual — leaders," Letters, Friday).

These readers, like the Republican politicians they support, are masters at balancing double standards and putting a positive spin on obvious problems.

The fact of the matter is that the Bible is consistently sexist because it was written by patriarchs living in a patriarchal society. What else could it be? If the Bible supports women in political leadership roles, why is it that we mainly read only of kings of Israel in the Bible?

Furthermore, if women cannot be trusted to rule over men in a measly household or storefront church, why should they be trusted to lead millions of men in the White House? If they cannot be trusted to teach the Bible to men from the pulpit of a church, why should they be trusted to teach men about foreign policy, the economy, energy, crime reduction and so forth in government?

Gushee hoped that this would be a good time for evangelical Christians to finally reevaluate sexism in their religion. Forget about it. As long as they are able to rationalize it, they will surely do so.

Uses for lie detectors

The "physiological screener" being tested by the Homeland Security Department sure looks and sounds like a lie detector with a different name ("Anxiety-detecting machines could spot terrorists," News, Friday).

I guess the first big application would be to use it on White House representatives when they testify before Congress and speak at news conferences. It also could be used on the presidential candidates during the debates. A meter in the corner of the screen could indicate the probability that something being said is a lie.

Space program lacking

I fear the U.S. space program is lost in space and going nowhere ("NASA chief requests Russian craft," News, Friday).

What happened to NASA's mastery of human space flight? It's a sad day for America when NASA Administrator Michael Griffin requests Congress' approval to buy Russian spaceships to be able to send a crew to the International Space Station, starting in 2011.

Have we no pride? What happened to U.S. leadership in space? Space exploration is an investment in our future and will benefit humanity. Congress has no vision for the future.

Wake-up bomb

A massive bomb went off at the upscale Marriott Hotel in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad over the weekend. Big news? Not nearly as big as it would have been without the economic crisis, and that's too bad.

It could have focused attention on the fact that Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama and Republican rival John McCain have only sketchy approaches to the U.S. conflict in Afghanistan and across the border in Pakistan. Yet that war might dominate the next presidency as much as Iraq has this one.

By Aamir Qureshi, AFP/Getty Images

In Pakistan: A soldier guards the Marriott Hotel on Sunday.

Scores were killed and injured in a blast that bore the hallmarks of Islamic extremists likely tied to al-Qaeda, whose leaders are thought to have refuge in Pakistan's tribal areas bordering Afghanistan.

The blast no doubt had a few intended messages. One was to the new Pakistani president, Asif Ali Zardari: that cooperation with the United States is risky. It might have been aimed at killing Pakistani leaders who had been scheduled to meet at the hotel.

The candidates' views of all this are sure to be tested Friday in their first debate, focused on foreign policy. Both say they'd inject more U.S. forces, but neither has defined a strategy or matched the number of troops to a mission — a backward approach that has sometimes led to trouble. Each gives Afghanistan cursory treatment on his campaign website. Neither lists it as a separate issue. And each has seemed more keen to outdo the other in the number of troops he wants to add.

More troops are undoubtedly needed. The U.S. now has about 146,000 troops in Iraq and 34,000 in Afghanistan. Military officials constantly ask for more. The shortage has forced them to rely heavily on air power, which has killed Afghan civilians, spurring resentment of the U.S. — no way to win a battle for hearts and minds.

If the Iraq war has taught anything, it is that troops alone are not enough without a credible plan. The troop surge that is credited with bringing calm to Iraq succeeded because it was coupled with other efforts: persuading Sunnis to abandon al-Qaeda, partly by paying them; embedding troops in front-line areas to maintain security; and strengthening Iraq's forces and its government.

A workable Afghanistan strategy is hardly obvious. Afghanistan is a more vast, underdeveloped and complex country than Iraq is. Traditionally, Afghanistan has been ruled by regional warlords more than by a national government. The heroin trade is rampant. Taliban and al-Qaeda forces launch attacks from their stronghold in Pakistan, and recent U.S. counterattacks — important though they are — stir deep resentment in the world's only Muslim nuclear power.

Ways need to be found to pressure Pakistan's military to crack down in the tribal areas. Anti-Americanism might be reduced with targeted aid, but only if done right.

Perhaps the Iraq model could be employed to split al-Qaeda from its Taliban protectors, but the radical religious bond between the two makes the task tougher. The point is that fresh approaches to the deteriorating conflict are needed. Sending troops without clear goals isn't the answer.

Witnesses' testimony should be reason enough

Defense Secretary Robert Gates appointed a five-member panel to give its opinion on whether Marine Sgt. Rafael Peralta's actions met the standard for the nation's highest military honor. And Gates received just that: an opinion ("No Medal of Honor for Marine who saved others," News, Thursday).

I'm sure that this panel is well trusted, but shouldn't the testimony of the men who saw what Peralta did be reason enough to award him the Medal of Honor? Witnesses said a gravely wounded Peralta scooped a live grenade thrown by insurgents under his body.

Perhaps he sacrificed himself, knowing he wasn't going to make it, to save his fellows. Gates needs to reconsider and give Peralta's mother the Medal of Honor her son surely deserves.

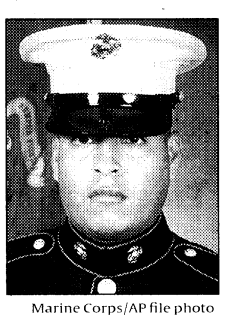
Decision is perplexing

As a child of a Navy officer who served for 33 years, I often heard the phrase that I'm sure is familiar to others with connections to the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps: "No guts, no Navy Cross."



Marine Corps/AP file photo

Sgt. Rafael Peralta

The account of the panel that determined Sgt. Rafael Peralta's actions did deserve the Navy Cross but did not warrant the Medal of Honor is perplexing.

If I am to understand the opinion correctly, Col. Eric Berg, an Army pathologist, determined — contrary to eye-witness testimony — that Peralta would have been incapable of scooping the grenade under his body to protect his fellow Marines because the gunshot wound he had suffered would have prevented such heroics.

The inference by Berg suggests that once Peralta was shot in the head, he must have fortuitously fallen on the live grenade before it exploded.

I guess I have just one question: Since when does the Marine Corps hand out the Navy Cross to people who are shot and just happen to fall on live grenades?

John Howland
Huntersville, N.C.

Unjust conclusion

It seems that Defense Secretary Robert Gates has "swift boated" Marine Sgt. Rafael Peralta with his decision to accept the recommendation of the five-member panel he appointed over the word of the five Marines who saw what happened.

It seems highly unlikely, if not impossible, that Peralta scooped the grenade under his body after he was dead.

Yet no one disputes that the grenade exploded under his body.

Shame on everyone who participated in this unjust conclusion.

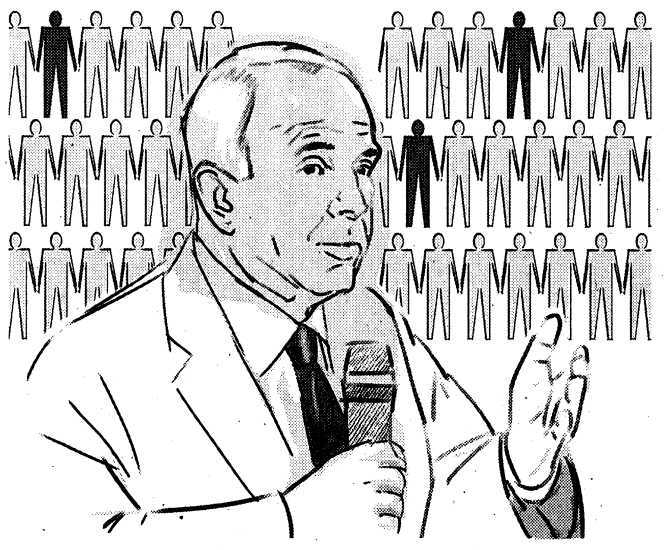
The Forum

A losing proposition

Republicans since Reagan have lined up to oppose affirmative action but have found little political gain in doing so. After a summer fling with the issue, McCain appears to have concluded that he need not go there.

By Peter Schmidt



By Keith Simmons, USA TODAY

When Sen. John McCain voiced support over the summer for a proposed Arizona ballot measure curtailing the use of affirmative-action preferences, some critics said he was latching onto a wedge issue long used by the GOP to split Democrats along racial lines.

In the two months since McCain's remarks to ABC's George Stephanopoulos, the senator of Arizona has been conspicuously silent on the issue. Given the politics of affirmative action, that may well be a wise decision.

After all, it's a mistake to assume McCain stands only to gain politically by supporting such measures, which appear likely to be on the ballot in Colorado and Nebraska this November.

Affirmative action is indeed a wedge issue. But this wedge has not just divided Democrats. It has also has badly split the GOP.

Social conservatives may have cheered McCain's opposition to affirmative-action preferences by public colleges and other government entities, but his stand could cost him support among other key Republican constituencies.

Many leaders of big business, for example, have long embraced affirmative action as a cost-effective tool for staving off discrimination complaints and diversifying their workforces. When the U.S. Supreme Court weighed in on affirmative action in college admissions in 2003 — in two cases involving the University of Michigan — nearly 70 Fortune 500 companies signed on to friend-of-the-court briefs urging the justices to leave the university's race-conscious admissions policies intact.

Meanwhile, Republican political pragmatists have long worried that opposition to affirmative action will alienate the nation's growing Hispanic electorate and limit the GOP's appeal among women. If McCain's critics are able to use his affirmative action stand — or his increasingly tough stand on immigration — to paint him as racially insensitive, he could lose support from moderate voters.

An unavoidable issue

Avoiding the affirmative-action issue probably was not an option for any presidential candidate this election year, even if the state ballot measures had not come up. The political rise of Democratic nominee Barack Obama — who opposes such ballot initiative as threatening the progress of minorities and women and "all too often designed to drive a wedge between people" — almost naturally evokes discussions of how much the nation has moved beyond its past racial divisions, and whether blacks and other minorities still need the leg up that affirmative action offers.

But in allying himself with those who seek to abolish such preferences, McCain is charging off in a direction where no recent GOP president has gotten far.

Ronald Reagan harshly criticized affirmative action, but in two terms in office, he failed to issue a single executive order ending or even restricting its use by the federal government. His administration was left gun-shy as a result of the uproar over its attempt in 1982 to restore the tax-exempt status of South Carolina's private Bob Jones University, which prohibited interracial dating. (It took just days for his administration to reverse itself.)

Reagan's Republican successor, George H.W. Bush, took a more moderate approach. He reined in appointees when they challenged affirmative action too aggressively, and his administration disavowed assertions by the Education Department's assistant secretary for civil rights, Michael Williams, that most college scholarships for members of minority groups violate federal anti-discrimination law.

Unless President George W. Bush surprises people by doing something drastic to curb affirmative action in his last few months in office, he too will have disappointed social conservatives in his dealings with this issue.

His administration has gone one step beyond where his father's did, by challenging minority-only college scholarships and programs, but otherwise has handled affirmative action gingerly. Its position on the University of Michigan cases was widely regarded as a contortionistic attempt to please everybody: Bush had his lawyers file a brief opposing Michigan's policies, but he declined to challenge race-conscious admissions in general, and then, oddly, applauded when the Supreme Court rejected most of his lawyers' arguments and upheld the Michigan law school's consideration of applicants' race.

Rally the base?

Recent history also does not lend much support to the idea that having affirmative-action bans on the ballot in Colorado — a swing state — and Nebraska will help McCain's chances by mobilizing conservative voters. In the three other states that have adopted such measures — California (in 1996, with 54% of the vote), Washington state (in 1998, with 58%) and Michigan (in 2006, also with 58%) — many of the Republican candidates who shared the state ballot fared poorly.

Affirmative action is unpopular enough to be vulnerable when put to a vote, but it appears that much of the electorate is capable of simultaneously rejecting affirmative action while backing the Democrats who defend it.

McCain might have chosen to voice opposition to affirmative-action preferences out of adherence to some principle such as a belief that government should be color-blind. After all, he has consistently opposed racial quotas. But if he based his decision on some political calculation, his campaign might want to crunch those numbers again.

His recent silence on the issue, at the Republican National Convention and elsewhere, suggests he might have already joined the Republican presidents he hopes to succeed in concluding that an aggressive fight against affirmative action is politically a losing proposition.

Flood. Rebuild. Repeat

Hurricanes strike, federal dollars flow and lessons are never learned

By Rob Young
and Orrin H. Pilkey

During moments like these, the country understandably feels sympathy for those who have lost property in the wake of Hurricane Ike. But there is an important question that should be raised while the nation's attention is once again focused on billions of dollars in damage.

Should the federal government pay to rebuild along vulnerable shorelines such as Surfside Beach, Texas? Surfside Beach, which is at the west end of Fallets Island, had houses built out on the beach. Many of those homes were destroyed.

Of course, it might make fiscal sense to repair our Houstons and our downtown Galvestons, but oceanfront communities perched on highly vulnerable, storm-prone shorelines are another matter.

Vulnerable communities

The Texas land commissioner has proposed that development be set back 60 times the erosion rate. So if the shoreline is eroding a foot a year, then building would start 60 feet back. This is a good start, but it wouldn't have saved many of the homes.

Surfside Beach is not the only example of a dangerous place to build. There are many highly vulnerable coastal communities that have suffered repeated, and recent, damage from tropical storms. The list includes Grand Isle, La., Santa Rosa Island, Fla., Waveland, Miss., and Topsail Island, N.C. The continued and repeated destruction of these communities is predictable. Yet, they have all been rebuilt with federal funds multiple times, costing taxpayers billions of dollars.

Several weeks ago, many in the path of Hurricane Gustav talked about dodging a bullet. But Dauphin Island, Ala., was not so lucky. After Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005, the federal government paid $4 million to rebuild the beach and to construct a sand berm on Dauphin Island. Gustav has removed that berm, and waves from Ike overwashed the island. Dauphin Island has been hit by tropical storms seven times since Hurricane Frederic in 1979. This has cost the federal taxpayers about $80 million (excluding Gustav).

Emergency law at fault

The problem lies in the 1988 Stafford Act. When the president declares an emergency, financial and physical help is immediately forthcoming. Public aid has repeatedly poured into these risky communities to fund the replacement of damaged infrastructure in the same vulnerable location. No lessons learned.

It is time for major reform of the Stafford Act. It is time to cut places such as Surfside Beach and Dauphin Island loose. What are the consequences of no longer applying the act to certain communities? Most likely, the west end of Dauphin Island and Surfside Beach would be abandoned by current property owners. In other oft-damaged beach communities, local taxpayers would decide based on their own economic calculus.

Our policy of providing federal funds for repetitively damaged communities makes no sense in a time of rising sea level. In coming decades, as sea level rises, storm damage will increase.

If you choose to build in an area subject to repeated coastal hazards, you pay for the cleanup, for replacing the roads, for putting the beach back in front of your homes or to move the house back from the shoreline. This is a matter of fiscal responsibility and fairness that all Americans should be able to agree on.

Rob Young is professor of geosciences at Western Carolina University in Cullowhee, N.C., where he directs the Program for the Study of Developed Shorelines. Orrin H. Pilkey is James B. Duke Professor of Earth and Ocean Sciences Emeritus at Duke University's Nicholas School of the Environment and director emeritus of the PSDS.

putting America's energy resources to work

Meeting our nation's energy challenges — and responding to high prices Americans are paying at the pump — requires that we pursue an integrated set of solutions. We must moderate demand by using energy more efficiently. And we must also increase supplies by responsibly developing energy resources from a variety of different sources and locations — including right here in the United States.

It is estimated that there is enough oil and natural gas offshore and in non-wilderness and non-park lands in the United States — but currently ruled off-limits for production by the federal government — to fuel 50 million cars and heat nearly 100 million homes for the next 25 years.

A significant majority of Americans believe we should explore and produce these resources. For this to happen, however, Congress must act.

If Congress were to expand the areas available for active exploration, we could make more domestic energy available to Americans in the future, while sending a strong positive supply signal to markets today, potentially putting downward pressure on prices. It would also strengthen U.S. energy security by further diversifying Americans' energy portfolio, and therefore mitigating the impact of a disruption in any one producing region of the world.

The energy industry has evolved tremendously with more than 50 years of worldwide offshore exploration and production experience. With the technological innovations developed by ExxonMobil and other companies, the United States' offshore resources can continue to be developed safely and with minimal environmental impact.

For example, directional drilling enables us to develop large areas from a single location, minimizing the environmental footprint. Advances in subsea production ensure facilities remain safe and largely hidden from view. Technology currently in place in the Gulf of Mexico ensured there have been no significant spills during hurricane season over the past several years. We would apply these and other technologies elsewhere off U.S. shores, and preserve the safety, biodiversity and beauty of America's coastline.

Some claim that energy companies are letting leased acreage "lay idle." Not so. Companies like ExxonMobil incur real financial costs and risks when we pay the federal government significant sums to acquire and maintain a lease for a limited term. Naturally, we have every incentive — especially when prices are high — to explore and produce on the lands we lease as quickly as possible.

If leased acreage is promising, ExxonMobil is actively producing or evaluating it. The problem is that industry does not have access to some of the most promising acreage, so we are attempting to find new supplies from the limited offerings of the last ten years.

But drilling is only part of the solution to the energy challenges Americans face. It must be combined with improved efficiency, robust development of other economic energy sources, and other measures. By pursuing an integrated set of solutions, Americans can achieve a prosperous, secure and responsible energy future.

What's the highest dew point ever recorded?
The highest dew point was likely the 95-degree reading measured in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, in July 2003. However, the record reading is uncertain due to questionable instrumentation. Regardless of that record, locations in countries along the Persian Gulf, the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden are some of the most hot and humid on the planet, where dew points in the upper 80s are common in summer.

Ex-NBA ref Donaghy to report to prison

Convicted felon and former NBA referee Tim Donaghy is scheduled to report to prison today in Pensacola, Fla., on a 15-month sentence for wire fraud and transmitting wagering tips through interstate commerce.

Bloomberg News

Donaghy: Pleaded guilty 13 months ago.

Donaghy, 41, pleaded guilty 13 months ago and was sentenced in July. Still to be released is the NBA-commissioned review of its policies relating to gambling and its officiating program.

Joel Litvin, the NBA's president of league and basketball operations, says the report "will be out well before the start of the season" Oct. 28.

Liberty oust Sun from WNBA playoffs

Rookie Essence Carson scored 15 points and the New York Liberty advanced to the Eastern Conference finals with a 66-62 win Monday against the host Connecticut Sun. The Liberty won a postseason series for the first time since 2004. They will play the Detroit Shock or Indiana Fever beginning Thursday. That series is tied, with Game 3 tonight.

No. 23 Trinity newest team in Super 25

Trinity (Louisville) is the newest member of USA TODAY's Super 25 high school football rankings at No. 23. Trinity, which defeated then-No. 20 St. Xavier (Cincinnati) 17-8 on Friday, finished last season at No. 23 in the Super 25 rankings after beating another St. Xavier (Louisville) for the Kentucky 6A title.

Nike to exit elite swimwear market

Nike said Monday that it is leaving the elite swimwear market. The company will continue to provide swimwear for colleges and sell to traditional retail customers. But it said it will not compete against the likes of Speedo to get the swoosh on the world's top swimmers. Nike said it made a "strategic decision as part of the company's long-term growth plan."

Boston College tops men's hockey poll

Defending champion Boston College earned top billing as the top four teams at the end of the 2007-08 season filled the first four spots in the USA TODAY/USA Hockey Magazine's preseason Division I men's poll released Monday. The Eagles grabbed 27 of 34 first-place votes and are followed by Michigan, Notre Dame and North Dakota. The Western Collegiate Hockey Association led all conferences with six schools in the top 15. Joining North Dakota are No. 4 Colorado College, No. 6 Denver, No. 9 Minnesota, No. 13 Wisconsin and No. 15 St. Cloud State.

NFL superpowers not so super

Pats routed, Colts 1-2, Giants almost upset

By Tom Pedulla
USA TODAY

Same old, same old? Not in the NFL.

Not when the New England Patriots are trounced at home 38-13 by the rebuilding Miami Dolphins for their first regular-season loss since Dec. 10, 2006, a record span of 21 games.

Not when the 1-2 Indianapolis Colts face their greatest deficit since the inception of the AFC South in 2002 after being toppled 23-21 by the visiting Jacksonville Jaguars.

And not when the defending Super Bowl champion New York Giants are extended to overtime by the winless Cincinnati Bengals before escaping with a 26-23 win at home.

That improbable trifecta exposed the vulnerability of some of the league's perceived superpowers, especially the Tom Brady-less Patriots.

It'll probably take defending AFC champion New England its bye week and then some to digest what happened against a Miami team it had swept by a combined 77-35 during its 16-0 regular-season in 2007.

"We don't live off the past, and this is a new season. But this being our first loss of the season, it definitely hurts," wideout Randy Moss said. "What makes matters worse is that it was in the division. They really came in and handed it to us in our house."

With an opening-day knee injury ending Brady's season, the Pats have work to do to catch the 3-0 Buffalo Bills and extend their record by winning their sixth AFC East title in a row.

The same goes for Indianapolis. The five-time defending AFC South champion has never faced a two-game deficit in a division currently ruled by the 3-0 Tennessee Titans. The Colts are below .500 through three games for the first time since quarterback Peyton Manning's rookie season in 1998.

"It is what it is," Manning said. "We have to try to do something about it."

New York coach Tom Coughlin credited Cincinnati for giving his Super Bowl champion Giants a scare. He dismissed a news reporter who questioned his team's desire, saying, "Don't give me that flat stuff."

"It's therapeutic": Rays manager Joe Maddon says bicycling makes him freer in his thinking.

Maddon's Rays riding high

Manager's unorthodox thinking works

By Paul White

BOSTON — Joe Maddon might intentionally walk your best hitter with the bases loaded. He might use five outfielders against you. He most certainly won't shy away from breaking with tradition if he thinks it will help his Tampa Bay Rays win.

The manager of baseball's surprise team is an out-of-the-box thinker who insists he doesn't make those decisions by the seat of his pants. The seat of a bicycle is another story.

An avid rider, Maddon often cruises around major league cities trying to conjure ways for the Rays to win. This season it has worked, as he has managed Tampa Bay to its first winning season and playoff berth in its 11 seasons.

"It's therapeutic," Maddon says. "Managing definitely is a passion. But bike riding (is), too, if that makes any sense."

Maddon, who turned 54 the day before the Rays clinched their playoff spot Saturday, has been waiting for this moment longer than the fans — 31 years in the Angels organization before he became Tampa Bay manager in 2006; since he was a

Finding success in red zone, but not always wins

By Jack Carey
USA TODAY

Football coaches often preach about red-zone productivity, the ability of an offense to cash in on scoring opportunities when it gets the ball inside an opponent's 20-yard line.

The NCAA is tracking red-zone efficiency this season for the first time, in response to interest from news reporters and fans. A look at the teams at the top shows that for real efficiency, the kind that leads to winning, you have to get to the red zone first.

AP

Stoops: Pushes red-zone practice.

No surprise there, but it also shows numbers can be deceiving.

The NCAA grades on a percentage basis, and eight teams have a perfect 1.00. They range from undefeated Oklahoma, which is 18-for-18 with 17 touchdowns and one field goal in three games, to winless North Texas, which has reached its opponents' 20 five times in three games and has three TDs and two field goals.

▶ Injured Ball State player's career probably over, 8C

For the Sooners (3-0), red-zone practice has made perfect.

"We do work it a lot on both sides of the ball," coach Bob Stoops said. "We compete against each other. Our offense goes down there almost every day for a certain number of plays, and we go against each other through the year, whether it's in the summertime or spring ball, where we have sessions of defense against offense that are live and very competitive. It definitely is emphasized."

Northwestern has used its red-zone prowess en route to a 4-0 start. The Wildcats have nine touchdowns and seven field goals in 16 trips.

But efficiency in the red zone is not necessarily a sign of overall offensive productivity. Syracuse (1-3) is 11-for-11 with eight touchdowns and three field goals; Pittsburgh (2-1) is 9-for-9 with seven touchdowns and two field goals. The Orange are last in the eight-team Big East in total offense; Pitt is sixth.

'People tell me I'm different'

6-year-old in blue-collar Hazleton, Pa., where his fiercely proud 75-year-old mom still works at the Third Base Luncheonette.

All the while, the kid the locals called "Broad Street Joe" for his quarterbacking prowess — "I was calling audibles at 10," he says — has been doing things his way, a baseball lifer finding the road that doesn't require following the crowd.

Cover story

"I always felt they're going to have to go to my route," Maddon says a few hours before his team knocks off the Boston Red Sox in a showdown for first place in the American League East. "People tell me I'm different. I don't see that."

He's a wine connoisseur and a voracious reader; a student and tinkerer of everything from baseball to the human psyche. And that combination, unusual as it might seem in a locker room, all comes together during his rides.

"When I'm able to ride, I feel a lot freer in my thinking," Maddon says.

"Free thinker" is how Los Angeles Angels manager Mike Scioscia describes his former bench coach of six years, with whom he won a World Series in 2002.

"If Joe wasn't in baseball, he would have been an incredible engineer," Scioscia says. "He's always looking at things from the perspective of, 'Let me break it down and see if there's a better way to do it.' "

That could mean positioning five players in the outfield against the Red Sox's David Ortiz or intentionally walking the Texas Rangers' Josh Hamilton with the bases loaded. It could mean daring Rays pitcher Scott Kazmir to try to hang a slider. It could mean trying to persuade players and coaches to read Malcolm Gladwell's Blink: The Power of Thinking Without Thinking.

"I thought I was doing stuff by the seat of my pants," Maddon says of how Blink changed him. "All that stuff I thought about on bike rides gets all stirred up in a vat. That's what instinct is."

Perhaps Maddon's greatest skill is his ability to feed players the heavy stuff and not lose them. "He's a genius and a good guy," designated hitter Cliff Floyd says.

'Just Joey'

The lofty praise is coming from many directions these days for Maddon, but it's nothing a dose of home-cooking can't balance.

Which major league manager has done the best job this season? Cast your vote at baseball.usatoday.com.

"He's just Joey," younger sister Carmine Parlatore says. "I don't see a different guy. Oh, he gets all California on you sometimes, the (designer) glasses, the clothes, the little collar up. Oh, please."

That's partly the influence of Jaye Sousoures, whom Maddon plans to marry in November after dating her for nearly five years. Maddon has a 22-year-old son and 25-year-old daughter from his first marriage. Sousoures is equally comfortable alongside Maddon on a bike ride to the beach or at a Rolling Stones concert, but he laughs at the notion he's some sort of renaissance man.

"I'm a little raw, too," Maddon says. "I'm from Hazleton, Pa., man."

Parlatore still lives in Hazleton, in northeastern Pennsylvania coal country, as does the Maddon family matriarch — Albina, or Beanie as most people call her — who splits her days between preparing food at what locals call Third Base and watching via satellite TV as one of her two sons manages a first-place team.

"It's Joe this, Joe that, whether they know him or not," Beanie says of her son's celebrity status in Hazleton.

A local radio station began airing Rays games this month. Check out the Maddon page on Baseball-Reference.com, and you'll see it's sponsored by Casamato's Restaurant, a regular stop for Maddon when he's at home.

Maddon was a star in town years before he was a major league manager, though. "Broad Street Joe" — named after Hazleton's main drag — was the stud quarterback at Hazleton High about the same time Broadway Joe Namath was starring with the New York Jets.

"He wasn't that jock type," Parlatore says. "He was a good guy. Everyone knew him, and everyone loved him, especially all the girls. He was cute. I would have never said that then, but I'll say it now. The coolness came later. But, you know, our dad was cool, too."

Joseph Anthony Maddon, who died in 2002, would be proud today, but his eldest son remembers the one time Dad wasn't so cool, when Joe announced he was giving up his starting quarterback position on the Lafayette College team to concentrate on baseball.

"It was really tough," Joe says of breaking the news back home, where football was king. "I was kind of disgraced, considered a quitter."

Being unable to resist the sound of bats and balls on a nearby field during football practice was only part of Maddon's life-altering experience at college.

"Where I come from to Lafayette is 50 miles, but there's no more polar opposites," he says. "The people I started to live with expanded me, helped me grow. Once I got over the fear of being from Hazleton and being in a place like this, the road really beckoned."

That road turned out to be minor league baseball, about 170 games as a catcher, before he turned to coaching. But the college time also created Maddon's thirst for knowledge.

"I became a voracious reader," he says. "It's not the classics. ... (William) Faulkner and all those dudes I couldn't get into."

Baseball common sense

Maddon also reads enough to get inside his players' heads.

When he asked Kazmir to hang a slider, a pitch that wasn't working well that night, Maddon was using paradoxical intent. Sure enough, Kazmir tried it, and the free-and-easy approach produced several sharp sliders.

"I can give you a better one than that," Kazmir says of a seventh inning last September at Fenway Park. Last-place Tampa Bay led 1-0, but Boston had runners on first and second with one out.

"I thought for sure he was coming to take me out," Kazmir says. "He just said, 'This is like a playoff situation. Let's see what you've got.' It really got me going."

Kazmir struck out Jacoby Ellsbury and got Alex Cora on a groundout.

"The thing about Joe is that he's got a great deal of common sense when it comes to baseball," says San Diego Padres manager Bud Black, who was on the Angels coaching staff with Maddon.

Still, turning around the Rays was an uncommon challenge. Maddon concedes he wasn't counting on 90-plus victories this year.

"We're trying to build the Rays way of doing things," he says. "That tone is how you build a successful organization. We're not talking about anything pretentious. ... It was very different the first year, especially coming from the Angels."

Maddon's team lost 101 games in 2006, 96 last season. Nothing worked, it seemed, "No matter what I attempted," Maddon says. But it was working.

"I've never seen someone who has earned so much respect," Rays first baseman Carlos Pena says. "Time reveals a man's character. Everyone here respects Joe.

"At the end of last year, I realized I had never seen this much chemistry. We would talk about it amongst ourselves: Wow, this is special."

But passing the New York Yankees and the Red Sox in the standings is more than even the Rays could have imagined.

"Playing in our division, we have to do things differently," general manager Andrew Friedman says. "It challenges the way we think. He even exceeded our expectations on that front."

Donaghy's sentence to start today

Ex-referee to report to federal prison in Fla.

By Jon Saraceno
USA TODAY

Today marks a historic moment for the NBA, but not one it wants to commemorate. The league contends that for the first time in major professional U.S. sports, a referee will walk into prison a felon convicted on a gambling charge related to his employment.

It is an embarrassing day not only for Tim Donaghy, 41, who will report to a minimum-security federal camp in Pensacola, Fla., to start a 15-month sentence, but also for a league with a lucrative global footprint and a system of officiating that has taken a blow.

Donaghy pleaded guilty 13 months ago to felony charges of wire fraud and transmitting wagering tips through interstate commerce. He admitted to betting on NBA games, but neither the league nor federal investigators found evidence he wagered on games he worked. He was fined $500,000 and ordered to pay the NBA restitution.

Donaghy, enduring divorce proceedings and living in Florida with a friend, was sentenced in July. The former referee could be let out after 12 months.

"Needless to say, this is a difficult time. ... Tim is accepting of his situation," said his attorney, John Lauro. "He understands that he was going to be punished. But he's also looking to rebuilding his life. That's his hope."

A book might be in his future. "The (full) story has not come out yet," Lauro said. Donaghy, post-prison, also is considering counseling gambling addicts.

Meanwhile, the NBA awaits results of an investigation by Lawrence Pedowitz, hired by Commissioner David Stern, regarding its hierarchy of referees and potential gambling issues. Beyond reorganization of the officiating department this summer, further reform is possible because it was the FBI, not the NBA, that stumbled upon the corruption.

"Once you ruin the integrity of the sport, it is tough to regain it," said Hall of Fame basketball player and TNT analyst Charles Barkley, who has his own gambling issues. "The basketball family and fans need to know if there's anybody else involved."

The NBA says no. Donaghy's father, Gerry, a former college basketball referee, isn't so certain about the league's credibility. He remains "angry at the whole NBA — especially David Stern," he said in an interview with USA TODAY.

His son is "no worse than a lot of other people who should have been helped, not chastised, like the NBA did to him," Gerry Donaghy said. Stern "stood up there (at the Finals in June) and put on a show ... and called (Tim) a rogue referee, when there's at least 10 other guys floating around in that organization who are doing things just as bad."

Gerry Donaghy offered few specifics, preferring to emphasize his belief his son deserves punishment but shouldn't be singled out as the league's only villain.

"What has me (upset) is very simple," he said. His son "did a bad thing and he's going to pay the price. ... He doesn't have a nickel. He's sleeping on some guy's sofa that's good enough to loan it to him. He's going to jail for 15 months. He deserves all that for what he did. But there are other people who deserve something, too, and Stern's burying it."

Joel Litvin, NBA president of league/basketball operations, said the NBA "has no reason to want to continue (Tim's) suffering, no reason to want to cover anything up. That would be the worst thing we could do since, as they say, the cover-up is worse than the crime."

Azinger gets raves, Faldo faces razzes

By Steve DiMeglio
USA TODAY

LOUISVILLE — As the last of the deafening "U-S-A, U-S-A" chants faded Sunday night at Valhalla Golf Club, a different mantra was launched before the victorious Americans went off to celebrate their first Ryder Cup triumph since 1999.

"Zinger in '10, Zinger in '10, Zinger in '10."

After a spirited USA dispatched Europe 16½-11½, Phil Mickelson and Justin Leonard led a chorus at the team's final news conference for the return of captain Paul Azinger, who made all the right moves and set the tone with his fierce loyalty to team and country.

There were no such calls for European captain Nick Faldo, who faced a barrage of criticism long before the 37th biennial matches and was subject to even more biting commentary after Europe's three-match winning streak ended.

"Captain Calamity" read a headline Monday in London's Daily Mail, which also suggested the loss could in part be pinned on the "desperate blundering" of Faldo, whom it referred to as the USA's 13th man.

Though critics bashed Faldo's lineup, including a decision to save some of his best players until the end in Sunday's singles, his team and a former captain came to his defense.

"We hold the clubs, we hit the shots," Lee Westwood of England said after the final outcome.

Four-time European captain Tony Jacklin also backed Faldo.

"I don't think he did anything wrong," Jacklin told Reuters on Monday. "The best team won, and Paul Azinger turned out to be a very good captain."

Azinger, meanwhile, earned raves.

"Why change?" U.S. rookie star Anthony Kim said about Azinger. "He let us be who we are, he let us have fun, he led us to victory. He was great."

Azinger looked stunned when the idea of another round as captain was broached. "I'm not going to think about it," Azinger said of the 2010 Ryder Cup in Wales. "I'm just going to stay up all night and party with my boys."

Joe Steranka, CEO of the PGA of America, which runs the Ryder Cup, isn't thinking about 2010, either. Usually, the U.S. captain serves one two-year term, and there is no timetable to announcing the next captain — or Azinger's return.

"It seems we have more candidates for the job than we have Ryder Cups to play," Steranka said. "We don't have enough to go around."

Whoever is named might want to take a page out of Azinger's playbook. He thought for years about implementing a strategy he thought would promote cohesive units. So when the Americans arrived at Valhalla, they were split into three groups of four players each — and each group practiced and played the matches together. For instance, Kim, Mickelson, Leonard and Hunter Mahan played practice rounds together, and Kim-Mickelson and Leonard-Mahan teamed in foursomes and four-balls.

"It's just a concept I thought would work," Azinger said, "and they embraced it."

The fans packing Valhalla fairways embraced Azinger and his call for the home crowd to be the 13th man.

Perhaps too much at times, according to Westwood.

"All of the abuse that I got was fairly nasty, and that was pretty shameful," he said. "That was only a minority, and the crowds were great. I expected them (the fans) to get behind the American team, which they did, but some people don't know the difference between supporting their team and abusing the opposition team, which is unfortunate."

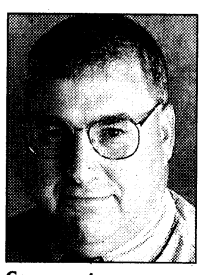
Keeping Score

Complaints that should be benched



Commentary
By Mike Lopresti

Quiet, please.

We've come to politely suggest that some of the most notable whining, carping, and hand-wringing of the day be put on hold.

After all, the leaves are turning, Christmas is only 13 weeks away, and now that the Tampa Bay Rays have made the playoffs, we absolutely know there is a Santa Claus.

▶ No more howling need be heard from the Houston Astros, about how evil Bud Selig made them play two home games against the Chicago Cubs in Milwaukee because of Hurricane Ike.

Yeah, it was a loopy decision. But what'd the Astros do, pout for the next five days? Is that how to explain getting outscored by the Cubs and Florida Marlins 38-5, with only 16 hits in five losses? If the Astros were so undone by pro-Cubs crowds of 23,441 and 15,158 in Milwaukee, they hardly are made of stern enough stuff to deserve a wild card.

▶ Lee Westwood can quit with the moaning about how the American fans "abused" him at the Ryder Cup in Louisville.

Undoubtedly there were a handful of foul-mouthed knuckleheads among the 40,000 fans. But there was never a persistent or large-scale problem that affected the competition, or its outcome. So why bring it up?

If a few voices — and a guy in a ghost suit, as mentioned at a news conference — signify "abuse," it is a good thing Westwood does not earn his living playing the outfield in Philadelphia. Or soccer in London, for that matter.

But a look at the British news media on Monday suggested the complaint served its intended purpose — something of a diversionary tactic to the European bashing. If it is "abuse," Westwood wants, he should see what some of the tabloids are saying about Nick Faldo.

▶ Yankee-haters can chill out. The party is over at the Stadium, and it was clear long ago that the New York Yankees would be spending this October with the common folk. They are now just another also-ran team with a new ballpark. Just like the Washington Nationals.

▶ New England supremacists, shocked at a new world where nobody is scared of the Patriots, can desist from dumping all the blame on Matt Cassel.

True, he has neither the passing aura nor the social calendar of Tom Brady. But he can't be blamed for 461 yards by the Miami Dolphins. Not unless he was playing linebacker.

▶ Enough from the Tampa Bay area about all the excuses for shunning the Rays games.

Yes, Tropicana Field has the ambience of an urologist's waiting room. Yes, there was an orientation period needed when the Rays went from last-place fixtures to contenders, just as people once had to get used to the idea that the world wasn't flat.

But those are not reasons that a team putting together one of the great underdog stories of the age should play to barely 22,000 a game.

Tampa Bay has the third-best record in the major leagues but the 26th-best attendance — 7,000 a game behind the Seattle Mariners and their 57-98 record. Those numbers do not compute.

▶ Silence from Joe Paterno detractors — who were absolutely sure he had nothing left to offer — while we watch the latest scoring pyrotechnics from Happy Valley.

He's surely lost a step or two, but his Penn State offense obviously hasn't. That raises a question. If the game has not passed him by at 81, will it ever?

▶ Finally, no more from those who have insisted that without Tiger Woods, golf is a barren desert.

It strains logic to say he was not missed at the Ryder Cup. But not one moment the past weekend lacked for drama because Woods was there only in spirit and text messages.

And now that the Europeans have been beaten, perhaps Paul Azinger and his team should consider taking on that other golf juggernaut.

The South Korean women.

Game On! Wrestling's MVP on lessons learned

Montel Vontavious Porter, better known to WWE fans as MVP, talked to USA TODAY about his life in pro wrestling. MVP served 9½ years in prison for robbery and kidnapping and survived a heart disorder called Wolff-Parkinson-White syndrome to become a champion. MVP, along with his buddies, can be seen on the Friday Night SmackDown, which is moving to My Network TV on Oct. 3 (8 p.m. ET).

Best lesson learned as a child: No matter what happens, always get back up. Fight defeat.

One thing you learned in prison: To believe in yourself because prison is full of despair and hopelessness, and it's easy to give up on life.

Secret of your signature move (The Playmaker): I can't tell you that.

New signature move (The Drive By): A running kick to the head, which is even more effective than The Playmaker.

The person you would like to get in the ring with: Probably like to get the Rock back.

Best wrestler besides you: The Undertaker.

One thing people don't know about the sport: We are on the road about 250 days a year. We give 52 weeks of original programming.

Car I would see you driving: Mercedes CLS 500. I got an impressive sound system you can hear from blocks away, $10,000 custom-made rims. Pretty impressive car.

Song you sing in the shower/car: Huge musical fan. From Johnny Cash to Amy Winehouse to Young Jeezy. Last song singing to myself was Natural Mystic from Bob Marley.

Best thing about being 6-3, 252 pounds: I'm rarely told no.

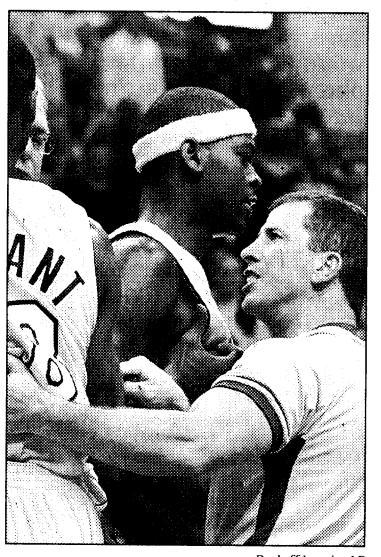
Web Barkley blows the whistle on Donaghy



By Jeff Lewis, AP

Faith: Charles Barkley thinks Tim Donaghy's case was an isolated incident.

You could say Charles Barkley knows a little something about two of his favorite subjects: professional basketball and gambling (not necessarily in that order, of course).

That is what makes his take on the stunning downfall of former NBA referee Tim Donaghy so interesting. The Hall of Famer tells USA TODAY's Jon Saraceno he has several concerns about the potential fallout as Donaghy reports today to a federal prison camp in Pensacola, Fla.

On whether Donaghy's betting on NBA games is an isolated case, Barkley replies, "That's a good question."

"I've got faith in our officials that they wouldn't be that stupid," he says. "But I've been wrong once."

Barkley suggests that if Donaghy, who claims NBA refs rigged playoff games a few years ago, has more information, "he needs to say something about it" — and not in a book. "That would be a travesty," he says. "It would show you he has no remorse."

The NBA says separate investigations determined Donaghy was the only referee who wagered on games.

"The thing that surprised me is that this guy was making a couple hundred thousand dollars (a year) and he's getting chump change to give tips," Barkley says. "Why would you screw up your entire life for that?"

On the other hand, Barkley has fallen prey to the seductive lure of the "action" himself, leading him to conclude that, "I'm not saying I have an addiction, but at some point — whether you're an alcoholic, gambler or drug addict — you can go to all the treatment programs you want, but you've got to say, 'You know what? I've got to stop this.' "

Book review Tales from dark side of 1990s Cowboys

Jeff Pearlman delves into that seedy side of one of the most compelling teams in NFL history with his Boys Will Be Boys, the Glory Days and Party Nights of the Dallas Cowboys Dynasty.

The book is filled with gritty off-field detail of strip club forays and drug use and opens with a confrontation that led Hall of Fame receiver Michael Irvin to slash teammate Everett McIver's throat with a pair of scissors.

Irvin acknowledged that incident in an interview with the Dallas Observer but didn't discuss it for the book.

Another Hall of Famer, Emmitt Smith, refused an interview, but Pearlman has pieced together a mosaic of the Cowboys dynasty that won three Super Bowls in the '90s through hundreds of interviews with bit players and people who were around those Cowboys.

Pearlman says his research also left him wondering what it is about the Dallas community that has made fans tolerant of bad behavior.

"I still don't get that city," he says. "It's a great city, it's a very conservative city, but they embrace the Cowboys, and they can do anything."

The story that likely will provide the most Internet fodder recounts defensive lineman Charles Haley's penchant for nudity at team meetings.

On radio shows, Pearlman has found it difficult to use suitable on-air terms to discuss additional nuances of this habit, and has resorted to the euphemism of "Charles Haley's personal sack dance." Pearlman says about 25 former Cowboys offered details about Haley. "They just poured out right and left," Pearlman says. "He wasn't that beloved."

For Pearlman, the more memorable reporting came from finding such former Cowboys as linebacker Robert Jones, who as an infant was in the room when his father killed his mother, and defensive back Clayton Holmes, who survived sexual abuse and beatings as a child. — Tom Weir

TV ratings Rounding up weekend overnights

Ryder Cup golf can be immensely entertaining, since facing off against foreigners — whether it's in swimming or snowboarding — can allow U.S. fans to loudly express their patriotism.

But even with a U.S. win Sunday in a better time slot than the 2006 Cup — which was held in Ireland and presented time-zone complications for U.S. TV — NBC's rating Sunday didn't come close to the average final-round rating for a major, despite getting a better number than the 2006 event.

NFL: main game Pittsburgh-Philadelphia	Sunday, 4:15	13.5 (10.3 million)	CBS
The comparison: Off 1% from comparable coverage last year.
The spin on the spin: CBS, with the AFC TV package, can't be happy with marquee teams such as New England and Indianapolis looking vulnerable.

Event	Day, time (p.m., ET)	Rating (households)	Outlet
Golf: Ryder Cup	Sunday, noon	3.3 (2.5 million)	NBC

The spin on the spin: Fun to stand up in your living room, pump your fist and chant, "USA! USA!" after chip shots.
MLB: Baltimore-N.Y. Yankees	Sunday, 8:15	2.6 (2 million)	ESPN
The comparison: Up 225% from Houston-St. Louis game in time slot last year.
The spin on the spin: It's hard to compare this game's rating to anything else, since it was the final game at Yankee Stadium. If you tuned in, maybe you could sell your TV remote as memorabilia on eBay.

One rating point equals 1% of the USA's 77 million overnight TV homes — excluding Houston and Louisville this week — in Nielsen Media Research's 56 selected major markets. Cable rating converted to broadcast equivalent. Sources: CBS, ESPN, NBC, ABC, Nielsen

"I really enjoyed watching (the Ryder Cup). It was exciting to see the leaderboard and all of the moving parts coming into play. To me, the Ryder Cup has way more drama than any of the tournaments — including the majors. I like the format, the strategy, the patriotism. It all makes for great entertainment.

— cc in Ohio

"I'm very impressed with the play of the younger Ryder Cuppers. (Anthony) Kim has a very bright future and will have a spot reserved on this team for many years. That said, I hope the next U.S. captain takes the same approach Paul Azinger did this year: take the top qualified players, then mix in some hungry, young talent.

— GriffeyB 8

There is no question that Tiger Woods is the best player on the planet. But after this weekend's victory in the Ryder Cup, it has to be questioned whether Tiger is good for the U.S. Ryder Cup team. It is obvious that this team knew they each had to step up and did so.

American League notes

Baltimore: 3B Melvin Mora (strained left hamstring) said his leg was too sore for him to start. Mora missed two weeks with a strained hamstring this month and might be shut down for the season. ... RHP Jeremy Guthrie (right shoulder impingement) threw another side session. He is expected to throw a simulated game Wednesday before the club decides whether he can pitch again this season.

Boston: OF Jason Bay is one of seven players in major league history to reach 100 runs, 30 home runs and 100 RBI and get traded in the same season. The others: Mark Teixeira (2008) Carlos Lee (2006), Carlos Beltran (2004), Fred McGriff (1993), Ralph Kiner (1953) and Goose Goslin (1930). Dodgers LF Manny Ramirez is one run away from joining the group. ... DH David Ortiz, who has had a sore wrist for much of the season, entered Monday's game with eight home runs and 36 RBI in his last 38 games. "You can tell by his body language when he's spitting on those gloves that he's feeling pretty good," manager Terry Francona said.

Chicago: The White Sox face a crucial series at Minnesota beginning tonight, but C A.J. Pierzynski doesn't sound nervous. "I think some guys get caught up in, 'Oh my God, it's the Metrodome,' instead of going in there with the mind-set of, 'We're going to go in there and kick their (butt),' " Pierzynski told the Chicago Sun-Times. ... DH Jim Thome's $13 million contract option for 2009 kicked in last weekend. He needed 564 plate appearances this season to qualify for the option. ... 2B Alexei Ramirez is the seventh rookie in club history to reach the 20-homer plateau in his first season.

Cleveland: Sunday was the third time this season Ryan Garko has had five or more RBI in a game. Although he had a career-high 84 RBI through Sunday, Garko had only 12 home runs, nine fewer than his total last year. It's uncertain whether Garko will be the Indians first baseman of the future. He hasn't shown consistent power, and most of his RBI this year came after Cleveland fell out of contention.

Detroit: 1B Miguel Cabrera left Monday's game against Kansas City because of upper back tightness and is day-to-day. He was replaced in the top of the third inning by Jeff Larish. Cabrera leads the Tigers with 36 home runs and 125 RBI, and his 18 homers at Comerica Park are the most by a player since the stadium opened in 2000. ... LH Dontrelle Willis took a step back in his comeback Sunday with a six-walk performance at Cleveland in which he was unable to pitch past the second inning. Willis was effective against the two left-handers the Indians had in the lineup (0-for-4, three strikeouts), but he gave up five hits to the right-handers in 2⅓ innings.

Kansas City: The Royals hope to pass Detroit and climb out of the AL Central basement. "I think it gives all of us satisfaction to some degree, but it has to be kept in perspective," manager Trey Hillman said. The Royals have finished last in the division the last four years.

Los Angeles: The Angels took a 21½-game lead into the final week of the season. Three teams since 1900 have won their division or league by larger margins: the 1995 Cleveland Indians (30 games over the AL Central), the 1902 Pittsburgh Pirates (27½ games over the National League) and the 1998 New York Yankees (22 games over the AL East).

Minnesota: LH reliever Jose Mijares pitched a perfect eighth inning Sunday. Manager Ron Gardenhire made it clear that the rookie, who has six innings of major league experience, will get more chances. "We're coming into a big series, (and) I don't have any problem putting him out there," Gardenhire said. "If he's hot, he'll go in." Mijares has faced 20 major league hitters and has retired 18 of them.

New York: DH Hideki Matsui was scheduled to have season-ending knee surgery after putting off the procedure in the hopes of helping the Yankees reach the playoffs. With that possibility dwindling, Matsui said he at least wanted to play in the final game at Yankee Stadium on Sunday, and he did.

Oakland: 2B Mark Ellis (shoulder surgery) was placed on the 60-day disabled list, and IF Donnie Murphy's contract was purchased from Class AAA Sacramento. Murphy gives the Athletics an extra backup with 3B Jack Hannahan out because of a strained rib-cage muscle.

Seattle: RH reliever Miguel Batista's blown save Sunday was the 31st of the season for the Mariners. That was the most in the big leagues this year to that point (St. Louis had 30). It's also a club record for the Mariners. Said manager Jim Riggleman of his bullpen: "It's hard to know who to turn to."

Tampa Bay: RHP Andy Sonnanstine failed Sunday in his sixth try to win his 14th game, which would tie RHP Rolando Arrojo's 1998 team record. Though winless, Sonnanstine has a 0.92 ERA over his last three starts.

Texas: The Rangers struck out a season-high 16 times Sunday, increasing their season total to 1,162 and making a second consecutive season with at least 1,200 strikeouts likely. The Rangers struck out 1,224 times last year, the third most in AL history.

Toronto: With RHP Shaun Marcum scheduled for surgery today and RHP A.J. Burnett expected to leave as a free agent, the outlook for the Jays rotation next year isn't promising. "I hate to use the word 'devastating,' " RHP Roy Halladay said of the loss of Marcum. "It obviously hurts. You never know what the next season holds. Jesse Litsch came out of nowhere (in 2006); who's to say we don't have guys who can do that next year? Hopefully we can still be competitive."

Three-game series: "We're in first place, so we need to act like a first-place team and go play like one," said lefty Mark Buehrle of the White Sox, who play the second-place Twins.

AL Central's crucial clash

By Dave Campbell
The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Neither the Chicago White Sox nor the Minnesota Twins have been playing like contenders over the last month. They're determined to change that during the final week of the regular season.

The White Sox will bring a 2½-game lead in the AL Central on the Twins to a packed-and-loud Metrodome today for the start of a three-game series that should, finally, define this slow-developing race.

"We're in first place, so we need to act like a first-place team and go play like one," said Chicago lefty Mark Buehrle, who will take the mound Wednesday.

Minnesota is glad to be back after playing 24 of the previous 30 games on the road and going 9-15 in that stretch. The Twins are 49-26 at the Metrodome this year, with a 3.25 staff ERA under the bubble compared with 5.14 on the road.

"We're going to go home and play hard," said Twins left-hander Francisco Liriano, who won't pitch in the series after throwing seven innings Sunday.

These rivals have been no further apart in the standings than the current margin since July 27.

Chicago has been in front for 144 days and all but nine since May 17 but has not led by any more than 3½ games since June 19.

"It's like you're fighting for 12 rounds and you know you're winning, but a lucky punch gets you in the last round and you're done and you lose the title," White Sox manager Ozzie Guillen said.

Indeed, though his team can clinch with a sweep, three wins the other way would put Minnesota in first place. "That's what we're here for. We're close, and we have them at home," first baseman Justin Morneau said.

The magic number is down to five for the leaders, meaning any combination of White Sox wins and Twins losses adding up to that will give Chicago the title.

Monday's games

Indians 4, RED SOX 3
Despite the loss at Fenway Park, Boston still needs only a victory or a loss by the New York Yankees to lock up a playoff berth. The reigning World Series champion Red Sox moved a step closer to their fifth playoff appearance in six years with Sunday's 3-0 victory at Toronto. Daisuke Matsuzaka picked up his 18th victory.

Royals 6, TIGERS 2
David DeJesus went 4-for-4 and Mike Aviles drove in two runs to lead Kansas City.

Rays 4, ORIOLES 2
Jason Bartlett doubled in the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning and Tampa Bay took another step toward its first AL East title. The victory reduced the Rays' magic number for winning the division crown to four. Any combination of Tampa Bay wins and Red Sox losses totaling four would make the Rays champions of the AL East. Tampa Bay has already clinched a playoff spot for the first time in franchise history. The victory left the Rays (93-62) one win shy of tying the 1991 Atlanta Braves for most victories by a team that had the worst record in the majors one year earlier.

Oakland vs. TEXAS
Oakland wrapped up a 7-3 homestand by winning seven of the final eight games, including Sunday's 5-3 victory against Seattle. Aaron Cunningham tied the score with a pinch-hit, two-run double in the seventh inning, and Jack Cust hit the go-ahead two-run homer in the eighth.

L.A. Angels vs. SEATTLE
Los Angeles secured its fifth postseason appearance in seven years Sept. 10. The Angels have since won eight of 10 contests — all against AL West foes — and capped a three-game sweep at Texas with Sunday's 7-3 victory.

Last call at Yankee Stadium: The New York Yankees closed down Yankee Stadium on Sunday night with Andy Pettitte getting the victory, Mariano Rivera the final out and shortstop Derek Jeter the final speech.

After the Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles 7-3, the team gathered at the pitcher's mound while Jeter grabbed the microphone, thanking the fans and saying the good thing about memories is they can be passed on.

"Take the memories from this stadium, add it to the new memories that come with the new Yankee Stadium and continue to pass them on from generation to generation," Jeter said.

Jeter also took the stadium's final curtain call after he was replaced with two outs in the ninth inning. Jeter joked that it was a good thing, "So I could work on my speech."

The Yankees, who opened Yankee Stadium on April 18, 1923, with a home run by Babe Ruth in a 4-1 win against the Boston Red Sox, will move into a $1.3 billion ballpark across the street next season. Opening day is April 16 vs. the Cleveland Indians.

Jeter made the final Yankees out at the stadium on a grounder to third. He also had the Yankees' final strikeout. Jason Giambi had the stadium's final hit, a single to left. The Yankees' Jose Molina hit the final home run.

No makeup: The Orioles-Oakland Athletics game postponed because of rain this month will not be made up.

Baltimore and Oakland are not in the playoff race, and because the A's would have a difficult time returning to Baltimore, Major League Baseball determined the game should be canceled.

The game originally was supposed to have been played Sept. 7, but because the NFL's Baltimore Ravens were at home that day, it was rescheduled for Sept. 6 as the first part of a day-night doubleheader. However, rain from Hurricane Hanna forced the postponement of the day game.

Indians-Tigers suspensions: Cleveland pitcher Fausto Carmona was suspended for six games and Detroit Tigers slugger Gary Sheffield for four games Monday for their brawl last week. Indians catcher Victor Martinez and infielder Asdrubal Cabrera were suspended for three games each and fined an undisclosed amount by MLB disciplinarian Bob Watson.

Sheffield was hit by a pitch from Carmona on Friday in Cleveland. Moments later, the designated hitter charged the mound from first base, starting a bench-clearing scrap.

Carmona and Martinez will appeal their penalties, which were to have started Monday when the Indians played at Boston. It was not immediately known whether Cabrera would appeal; his suspension was to begin Thursday.

Sheffield was to start sitting out Monday when the Kansas City Royals visited Detroit. He needs three home runs to reach 500 but said he didn't consider appealing to give himself a better chance to do it this year.

Deal in works: Pedro Alvarez and the Pirates have agreed on terms, but an earlier grievance is holding things up.

Pirates, top pick close on deal: The Pittsburgh Pirates are nearing agreement on a $6.4 million, four-year contract with their top draft pick that would end a contentious two-month dispute that led the players' union to file a grievance against the commissioner's office.

Pedro Alvarez's major league deal would replace the $6 million minor league deal he agreed to last month, according to the Associated Press.

For a Pirates-Alvarez deal to be finalized, the commissioner's office and players' association would have to settle a grievance filed by the union Aug. 27 alleging that Major League Baseball violated its labor agreement by approving a verbal deal between Alvarez and the Pirates that was reached shortly after the midnight deadline on Aug. 15.

Arbitrator Shyam Das heard the first day of testimony Sept. 10, with commissioner Bud Selig the first witness, and additional hearings are set for today and Wednesday.

Alvarez's agent, Scott Boras, contended Pirates President Frank Coonelly used his influence with MLB to get the deadline extended. Before he was hired last year by Pittsburgh, Coonelly was the MLB legal counsel who drew up the slotting system that recommends specific bonuses for draft picks based on how high they were chosen.

Coonelly, in turn, commended Alvarez for agreeing to a deal his agent didn't want and alleged Boras wasn't looking out for his client.

Ruling delayed on Marlins' park: A judge said she will delay her final ruling on the financing plan for a new Florida Marlins ballpark until early October. Circuit Court Judge Jeri Beth Cohen said she would wait until the end of a 15-day period in which the Florida Supreme Court could rehear motions on a decision. The high court's ruling undermined one of the key claims in auto dealer Norman Braman's lawsuit.

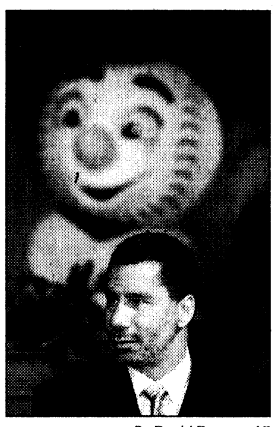
Cohen said she would issue her ruling on the remaining count in the lawsuit by the close of business Oct. 2, and said she was unlikely to switch her opinion in the case.

"You think he's going to file something and I'm going to change my mind?" Cohen said. "It's not going to happen."

Last week, the Florida Supreme Court said voter approval was not required for the use of redevelopment bonds in roads, buildings and other local projects. Those projects typically increase property values, which in turn generate more tax revenue. The bonds then are repaid with that additional income.

The ruling, which is not final until the period for rehearing motions ends, helped clear the way for the Marlins' proposed 37,000-seat, retractable-roof stadium.

Buffalo joins Mets' farm system: The New York Mets signed a two-year player development contract with Buffalo, 45 years after the Bisons became New York's original Class AAA affiliate. New York broke ties with New Orleans after just two years.



By David Duprey, AP

Mr. Met: Governor David Paterson was on hand as the Mets named the Bisons their Class AAA club.

The Mets shared their top minor league team in Syracuse (N.Y.) with the Washington Senators in their inaugural season in 1962 before Buffalo became the Class AAA affiliate for three years starting in 1963.

Buffalo affiliated with the Cleveland Indians starting in 1995, but that relationship ended when the Indians recently signed a four-year deal with Columbus (Ohio).

The Mets now have three of their minor league affiliates located in New York, with the Bisons joining Binghamton (AA) and Brooklyn (A).

Also, the Washington Nationals signed a two-year agreement to make Syracuse their Class AAA affiliate and New Orleans will be the Marlins' Class AAA farm team for the next two seasons.

Shooting for the postseason: Manager Jerry Manuel and the Mets have lost their lead in the National League East but still have the inside track to the wild-card berth.

Time to face the music

Three playoff spots remain for five clubs

By Bob Nightengale
USA TODAY

It may be unfair, but for a quintet of National League teams, their seasons will be defined by this final week of the regular season.

The Milwaukee Brewers, New York Mets, Philadelphia Phillies, Los Angeles Dodgers and Arizona Diamondbacks, vying for the NL's three remaining playoff berths, will be remembered for their greatness under pressure, or as chokers in a pennant race.

The Brewers opened September with a 5½-game lead in the wild-card race, only to lose 15 of 20 games.

They return home to Miller Park tonight against the Pittsburgh Pirates with a new manager, two new coaches, and a 1½-game deficit.

"We're just hoping for one hot week," says Brewers general manager Doug Melvin, who fired manager Ned Yost and replaced him with coach Dale Sveum. "We're starting to feel good about ourselves, but we need help."

The New York Mets, who are haunted by last year's nightmare of blowing a seven-game lead with 17 games remaining, are hoping to at least dim that memory.

Yet, it will only be exacerbated if they don't reach the playoffs this year. They had a 3½-game lead in the NL East over Philadelphia on Sept. 10, but have lost six out of their last 10 games. They trail Philadelphia by two games pending Monday's outcome vs. the Chicago Cubs (the only team that already has clinched an NL playoff spot).

But the Mets held a 1½-game lead over Milwaukee in the wild-card race entering Monday.

"It's not how we drew it up, but you have to play the cards that you get sometimes," Mets third baseman David Wright says. "We're still in control of getting into the playoffs the last seven games, and that's what you ask for."

The Phillies, winners of 10 of their last 11 games, including a 6-2 success vs. the Atlanta Braves on Monday, may be in the best position among NL teams yet to earn a playoff berth. They have a two-game lead in the NL East, and a 3½-game in the wild-card race. They finish the season with five soft games — two more against Atlanta (69-88) and three vs. the Washington Nationals (58-98).

The Phillies say their difference-maker in September has been MVP candidate Ryan Howard, who's hitting .379 with eight homers and 24 RBI this month.

The Dodgers had a comfortable 4½-game lead over the Diamondbacks just three days ago, but after dropping two of three to the San Francisco Giants, watched Arizona cut the lead by Monday to 2½-games.

The Dodgers finish the season playing the San Diego Padres and Giants while the Diamondbacks close against the St. Louis Cardinals and Colorado Rockies.

"There is no use panicking," Dodgers third baseman Casey Blake says. "We're in the driver's seat."

Monday's games

REDS 7, Marlins 4 — Joey Votto homered and doubled, helping Cincinnati rally from a four-run deficit in a makeup game.

PHILLIES 6, Braves 2 — Pat Burrell hit a three-run homer in the eighth and NL East-leading Philadelphia posted its 10th win in 11 games. The Phillies reduced their magic number for clinching their second consecutive division title to five, pending the outcome of the New York Mets' game against the Cubs. Philadelphia's magic number for clinching a playoff berth is three. Kelly Johnson hit a two-run homer for the Braves, who helped the Phillies by winning two in a row against the Mets over the weekend.

Chicago Cubs vs. N.Y. METS — Despite going 4-6 in their last 10 games the Mets retained a 1½-game lead over Milwaukee in the wild-card race. The Mets led Atlanta 4-2 in the seventh Sunday but the team's shaky bullpen lived up to its reputation, allowing a run in the seventh and four in the eighth of a 7-6 loss.

Arizona vs. ST. LOUIS — Brandon Webb looked to become the first NL pitcher in three years to win 22 games as the Diamondbacks continued their run at the NL West title when they opened a four-game series with the Cardinals. Arizona was 2½ games behind the first-place Los Angeles Dodgers. The Diamondbacks have won six of their last seven, and Webb will get two more starts.

National League notes

Arizona: 2B David Eckstein played his first game at Busch Stadium since leaving the organization as a free agent after the 2007 season. "Everybody knows it's a business," Eckstein said. "That doesn't lessen my experience here at all. You show up and play the game for your teammates and the fans, and they were always there." Eckstein, the MVP of the Cardinals' 2006 World Series victory against Detroit, missed the previous two games after being hit by a pitch in his left knee Friday. ... LHP Doug Davis has given up three earned runs or fewer in each of his last eight starts but has only a 2-1 record to show for it. Davis has no decisions in his last four starts despite a 2.59 ERA. The Diamondbacks have won three of those games.

Atlanta: RF Jeff Francoeur hit .391 (9-for-23) on the six-game homestand that concluded Sunday. Through the weekend, he was batting .306 (22-for-72) in September, a vast improvement over the .230 mark he carried into the month.

Chicago: Manager Lou Piniella has juggled his rotation for the series against the Mets. LHP Sean Marshall will start today, with RHP Carlos Zambrano going Wednesday and RHP Rich Harden going Thursday. Harden originally was scheduled to pitch today, but Piniella wants to give him two more days. Piniella said Harden's troublesome right shoulder is fine. The playoff rotation will be set this weekend when the team is in Milwaukee, Piniella said. ... SS Ryan Theriot was struggling for the second consecutive September. From Sept. 1 to the end of the 2007 season, he hit .202 (20-for-99). He was batting .183 (11-for-60) this September through the weekend.

Cincinnati: 3B Edwin Encarnacion was back in the lineup after missing five games with a sore left wrist.

Colorado: Troy Tulowitzki has hit .317 (64-for-202) since he came off the disabled list July 21, and he has the highest average among NL shortstops in the second half. Tulowitzki has batted second, where he thrived last year, the past five games, going 6-for-20 (.300) with three doubles. "He's found his edge again as far as I'm concerned," manager Clint Hurdle said.

Florida: SS Hanley Ramirez returned to the starting lineup after missing four games with a strained left shoulder. With Ramirez back hitting leadoff, rookie CF Cameron Maybin was dropped to seventh in the batting order.

Houston: 2B Kaz Matsui sat out Sunday in what manager Cecil Cooper called a "medical day off." Cooper said he will have to give often-injured Matsui more off days in an attempt to keep him healthy.

Los Angeles: OF Matt Kemp has struck out 148 times this season. That leaves him one short of the franchise record, for both Brooklyn and Los Angeles, set by Billy Grabarkewitz in 1970. Kemp snapped an eight-game hitting streak Sunday when he went 0-for-4 and struck out twice against San Francisco.

Milwaukee: RHP Jeff Suppan's next scheduled day to pitch would be Wednesday against Pittsburgh. But Suppan is 0-3 with a 10.47 ERA in four September starts, and the Brewers listed "TBA" for that game while interim manager Dale Sveum pondered his options.

New York: RHP John Maine (bone spur behind right shoulder) tossed a second simulated inning against Mets batters before the opener against the Cubs, and he is ready to be activated from the disabled list for relief duty, interim manager Jerry Manuel said. Maine's fastball showed more life than in his workout in Atlanta on Saturday, when he registered just 86-87 mph.

Philadelphia: Thanks largely to RH closer Brad Lidge's 40-for-40 success rate on save chances through the weekend, the Phillies were 75-0 when leading after eight innings. "He always seems to come up with a big pitch," manager Charlie Manuel said. "That's what talent does for you. That's why a guy can have runners on base and still work out of it."

Pittsburgh: John Grabow's 2.88 ERA is second among National League left-handed relievers with at least 65 innings pitched behind only the 1.69 mark of the Dodgers' Hong-Chih Kuo. Grabow's ERA is 1.93 since the beginning of July, second among all NL left-handers with at least 30 innings pitched to the 1.81 mark of Milwaukee's CC Sabathia.

St. Louis: RH reliever Jason Motte was nearly unhittable in the first eight games of his big-league career. Through Sunday, he had allowed one unearned run in seven innings, yielding just three hits and one walk while striking out 12. Foes were batting .130 against him.

San Diego: 1B Adrian Gonzalez has seven homers and 21 RBI in the last 14 games to push his season totals to 35 homers and 116 RBI. There are only five better totals in each category in Padres history. Gonzalez has hit safely in nine of his last 10 games (16-for-43, .372).

San Francisco: RH closer Brian Wilson recorded his 40th save of the season Sunday, joining Rod Beck and Robb Nen as the only Giants to reach that figure. Beck saved 48 games in 1993, and Nen saved 40 in 1998, 41 in 2000, 45 in 2001 and 43 in 2002.

Washington: CF Lastings Milledge needs six RBI in the final six games for the Nationals to avoid having the majors' lowest RBI total for a team leader since 1988. C Jesus Flores leads with 59 RBI, but he is out for the season. Milledge is second with 57. The lowest RBI total for a team leader in the past 20 years was 62, by Kansas City OF Emil Brown in 2007.

College football

Ball State receiver's career probably over

By Eddie Timanus
USA TODAY

Ball State wide receiver Dante Love will almost certainly never play football again, although he should be able to live a normal life after five hours of surgery to repair damage to his spine, coach Brady Hoke said Monday.

The Cardinals' 42-20 win Saturday at Indiana, the first in program history against a BCS conference school, has Ball State enjoying the best of times at 4-0. But Love suffered a back injury during the game that probably will prevent him from rejoining his teammates on the field.

Notes

"He's getting better by the hour," Hoke said in a teleconference Monday. "Obviously this is a pretty traumatic injury."

Later Monday on campus, Hoke added, "Due to the injury Dante sustained, his football career is expected to be over. He should have normal and healthy functions for the rest of his life. He touched a lot of lives, and he will continue to do so."

The Cardinals, off to their best start since 1988, are preparing to host Mid-American rival Kent State. It probably will take a committee to replace Love, a senior, who is the school's all-time leader in kickoff return yards and is second in career receptions.

"We're trying as much as possible just to stay with our routine," Hoke said. "There's a point of grieving when there's an injury of that nature, particularly that night for our kids. Obviously, he was one of those guys that we liked to get the ball in his hands as much as possible. But just like any other injury that happens, there's got to be guys that step up and do a great job of being accountable to their teammates."

Auburn academics: An NCAA official labeled as absurd comments made by a former Auburn professor regarding the association's approach to academics. After the NCAA determined Auburn did not commit academic fraud in allowing students, including football players and athletes in other sports, to take courses that required little or no time in the classroom, former professor Jim Gundlach told The New York Times, "Expecting the NCAA to protect academics is like expecting the fox to protect the hens. Second, the notion that the NCAA is interested in maintaining academic integrity is a myth. ... The truth is that they are only interested in increasing the cash flow to the business of big-time college athletics."

NCAA spokesman Bob Williams told USA TODAY, "Any assertion that the NCAA is not committed to academic reform, and integrity is absurd. All one has to do is look at the facts and data over the last five years and any reasonable person would see that not only has academic reform taken hold, but it has positively changed intercollegiate athletics."

The NCAA found Auburn committed secondary violations involving athletes who repeated the courses after completing their eligibility for sports in 2005 and 2006. The NCAA had investigated claims a sociology professor was helping football players and other athletes stay eligible through independent-study courses, which allow students to avoid classroom time.

Notre Dame arrests: Prosecutors will review police reports before deciding whether to file formal charges against Notre Dame tight end Will Yeatman, 20, and center Mike Golic Jr., 18, son of an ESPN radio personality. They were among nearly 40 people arrested on preliminary alcohol charges at a weekend party.

Yeatman could face more serious charges because he pleaded guilty in February to drunken driving and reckless driving for driving on a campus sidewalk.

Golic's father, Mike Golic, is co-host of Mike & Mike in the Morning. He said on the show Monday that he couldn't say much about what happened other than everything was "going to be fine. We learn lessons in life all the time. And he's a good kid."

Briefly: North Carolina quarterback T.J. Yates (broken left ankle) is expected to miss at least six weeks. ... New Mexico quarterback Donovan Porterie is out for the season after tearing two ligaments in his right knee Saturday in a 56-14 loss at Tulsa. ... James Madison (3-1) moved from No. 5 to No. 1 in the Championship Subdivision (formerly Division I-AA) coaches' poll after beating then-No. 1 Appalachian State on Saturday.

Childress drivers keep Chase leaders in sights

Solid efforts put trio fourth, fifth, sixth

By Seth Livingstone
USA TODAY

DOVER, Del. — With Greg Biffle riding consecutive victories, Carl Edwards sitting in first place and a string of their favorite tracks coming up, Roush Fenway Racing drivers have stolen the early spotlight in NASCAR's Chase for the Sprint Cup.

At the opposite end of the spectrum, Joe Gibbs Racing has witnessed Kyle Busch's dream season transformed by a two-race nightmare. He and teammate Denny Hamlin bring up the rear in the 12-driver points race.

Between the glory and the gloom are Richard Childress Racing's Chevrolets.

Jeff Burton, Kevin Harvick and Clint Bowyer have been unspectacular but solid enough to sit fourth, fifth and sixth in the points race, still within easy striking distance of Edwards, Biffle and Jimmie Johnson in the top three positions.

"I really think we still have the momentum to win this thing," said Harvick, whose sixth-place finish Sunday at Dover International Speedway was his eighth consecutive top-10 — the longest such streak of his career.

Harvick, who hasn't won a race since the Daytona 500 in 2007, gained five positions but trails fourth-place Burton by 19 points and leader Edwards by 101.

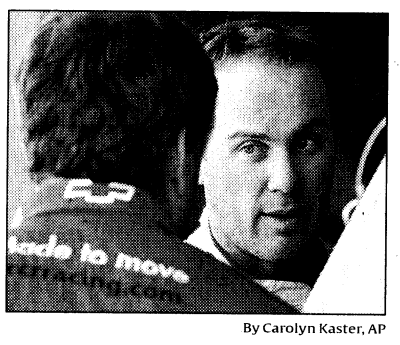
"We can see them (the leaders), but that ain't quite good enough," said Harvick's crew chief, Todd Berrier. "We need to win a race. If you can run 10th or sixth or fifth, you can win a race. We're looking for a little something to take that next step."

Burton started 21st and finished ninth Sunday.

"We're only 20% into the Chase, and anything can happen," he said.

Bowyer wound up eighth but had his sights on pole-sitter Jeff Gordon, who finished seventh.

"I needed a couple more laps and I think I could have gotten by Jeff," Bowyer said. "But we got out of Dover with all four fenders and a top-10."



By Carolyn Kaster, AP

In the hunt: Winless Kevin Harvick says he has the momentum to win the title.

Ashley Force recounts her NHRA weekend in her diary at motorsports.usatoday.com.

McMurray, too: Jack Roush couldn't have been happier with the way his Fords ran at Dover — and not just the cars of Biffle, Edwards and Matt Kenseth, who finished first, second and third.

"The best car we had may have been Jamie McMurray's," Roush said.

McMurray qualified ninth and led 35 of the first 65 laps. He finished 36th after getting swept into the wall.

Pit note: Brad Keselowski, 24, will attempt to qualify a fifth Hendrick Motorsports entry for the Bank America 500 on Oct. 11 at Lowe's Motor Speedway and the Dickies 500 on Nov. 2 at Texas Motor Speedway. Keselowski is third in the Nationwide Series standings and has two victories and 10 top-five finishes.

Price suits Canadiens just fine

Club believes in young goalie

By Kevin Allen
USA TODAY

With the Montreal Canadiens celebrating their 100th anniversary, there seems to be a sense around the Quebec city that there couldn't be a better time for Les Habitants to win their 25th Stanley Cup championship.

"I think here in Montreal it's always been high expectations," coach Guy Carbonneau said. "It doesn't matter the season. But obviously with the centennial and the fact that we finished first last year, there's a little bit more higher expectation."

With general manager Bob Gainey courting Mats Sundin and acquiring Alex Tanguay and Robert Lang, he gave the impression he urgently wants to move past the Pittsburgh Penguins to become the team to beat in the Eastern Conference.

Last season, the Canadiens had the Eastern Conference's best record of 47-25-10, then lost to the Philadelphia Flyers in the playoffs with rookie goalie Carey Price unable to match the same level of success he had in the regular season.

"People said he went down in the playoffs, but I think we should turn the page around and look at what (Marty) Biron did for the Flyers," Carbonneau said.

Price did give up 12 goals for a .830 save percentage in his last three losses against Philadelphia, but Carbonneau's point is that Biron probably did the most damage to his team by posting a .944 save percentage in winning those three games.

Carbonneau believes Price, who turned 21 last month, learned from his experience.

"He's in better shape," Carbonneau said. "He's a lot stronger physically and mentally. And I think he'll be just fine this year."

Along with perhaps being the starting quarterback for the Green Bay Packers or a manager of the New York Yankees, there aren't too many sports positions that come with the pressure of being the No. 1 goalie in a city where hockey is ingrained in the culture. But Carbonneau believes Price can handle that load.

"(It's because) of his background," Carbonneau said. "He's proven in the junior years that he played that he can perform to a high level. He did it in the World Junior Championship in a tough situation. Right after that, now he went to Hamilton (in the American Hockey League). And, again, not to disrespect the players around him, but they didn't have a top team and they won a Cup there, too."

If Price does his job, the Canadiens are expected to have more than enough goals to again push for the top spot. They were second in the NHL last season with 257 goals, and with the additions of Tanguay and Lang, plus the improvement of younger players such as Andrei Kostitsyn, the Canadiens could push toward 280 if their injury luck holds.

The team added Georges Laraque to improve toughness. They did lose Michael Ryder, Bryan Smolinski and Mark Streit, but Streit was the only player whose loss will be felt because he was a key power play performer. He left to go to the New York Islanders.

"We think we're set," Carbonneau said. "But every time you have a main (training) camp, there are always surprises. There's always options that you want to keep open ... one guy can really kind of open our eyes."

The Canadiens are healthy — even the coach, who had hip replacement surgery.

"It's still sore a little bit," Carbonneau said. "But it's getting better every day. I work out and I ride the bike and I'm trying to get my leg stronger. But it feels a little bit better than it used to."

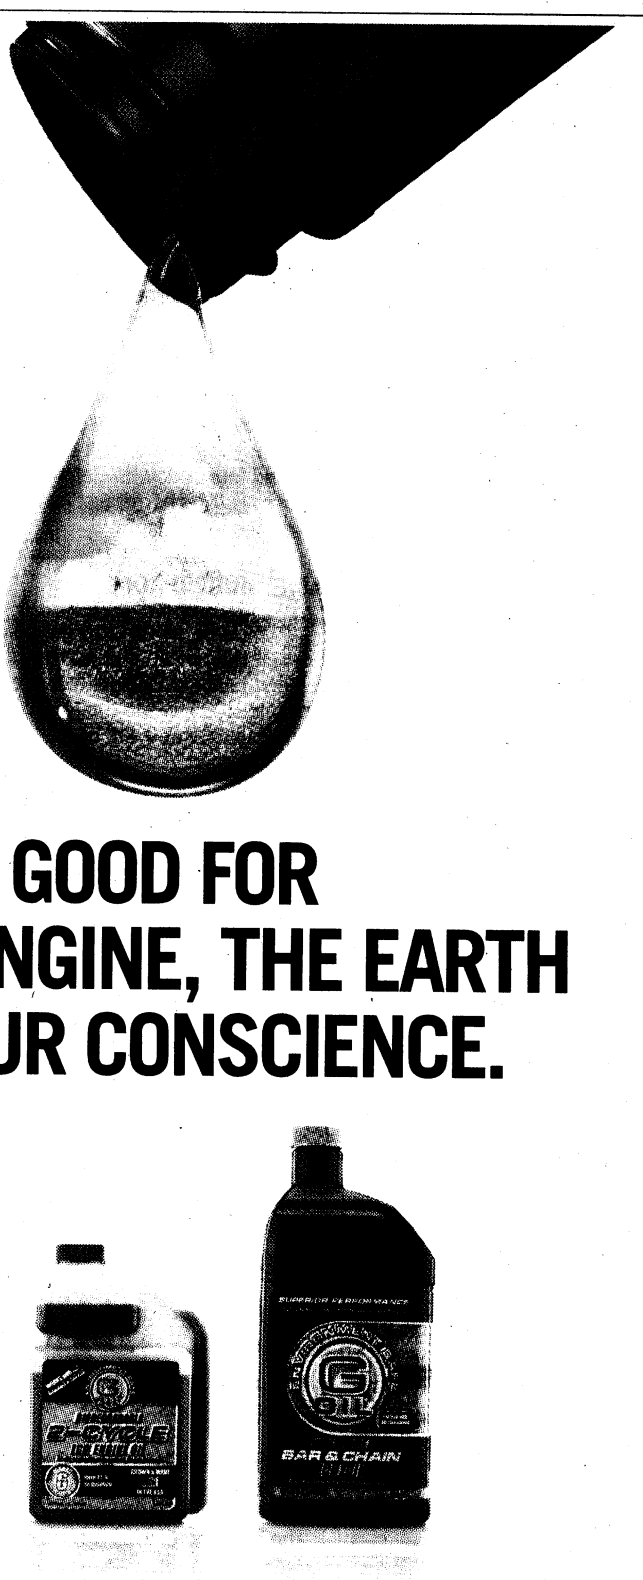
Unfazed: Canadiens stopper Carey Price isn't feeling the pressure of playing in Montreal, where they have Stanley Cup on their mind.



Cowboys finally win at Lambeau

High-powered Dallas goes to 3-0

By Colin Fly
The Associated Press

GREEN BAY, Wis. — There was a discussion about touchdown celebrations and a trademark big grin after the Dallas Cowboys' win, and Terrell Owens wasn't even part of the postgame lineup at the podium.

Austin caught a 52-yard touchdown pass and Dallas used the bruising running attack of Marion Barber and Felix Jones to wear down the Green Bay Packers 27-16 on Sunday night, the Cowboys' first win in franchise history at Lambeau Field.

"We have a bunch of weapons, I believe," said Austin, who has primarily played special teams for three years with the Cowboys. "I don't really consider myself a weapon, but we've got Terrell, Jason (Witten), Felix — Felix is fast — Marion. Pat Crayton makes plays. We've got a bunch of guys out there."

Dallas joined the New York Giants as the NFC's only undefeated teams at 3-0, and owner Jerry Jones said coach Wade Phillips helped the team ignore the previous five setbacks at Lambeau, including the Ice Bowl in 1967.

"This team is undefeated in Green Bay," Jones said. "The team's never been here, the owner has and went home limping. I thought he did it well and got the team in the right frame of mind coming up here and he just told the team in here they're undefeated in Green Bay."

And they stayed that way with a big day by Barber, who finished with 142 yards and a touchdown, to go along with a stout defensive performance. Felix Jones added a 60-yard TD run in the second quarter to put Dallas ahead for good after coaches told him he'd get more carries in his third week.

"I was ready," said Jones, who established a 10-6 lead in the second quarter that the Cowboys wouldn't relinquish.

Tony Romo was 17-for-30 for 260 yards even though Owens was held to two catches for 17 yards.

Owens made a big block that helped spring Jones on the TD, and Jones and Austin complimented Owens' performance off the stat sheet afterward even as the star declined to talk.

"Him having two catches, 17 yards doesn't explain what he did today. He's attracting double coverage, triple coverage all the time," Austin said. "For him to do that, it's almost bigger than him making the play. He's opening it up for other people."

Jones became the first Cowboys rookie to have TDs in his first three games, and Barber, who received a seven-year, $45 million contract this offseason, plowed through a tired Packers defense.

"I would expect nothing like this to ever happen again with our defense. We've just got to move on from there and get better," defensive tackle Ryan Pickett said. "He's definitely a good back. He did well tonight. He found the openings in our defense. The weak point in our defense, they did a good job of attacking it."

While the Packers defense allowed 453 yards — the most in nearly four years — Aaron Rodgers failed to match Dallas score for score and didn't get a whole lot of help beyond Greg Jennings, who caught eight passes for 115 yards.

"These guys are probably the most athletic defense we've faced so far and one of the most athletic in the league," said Rodgers, who finished 22-for-39 for 290 yards and was sacked five times.

Dynamic defense: Titans cornerback Cortland Finnegan, who later scored on a 99-yard interception return, celebrates after a stop Sunday. Tennessee's defense continued its stingy ways against the Texans, allowing a touchdown and two field goals, all in the first half.

Titans, Bills shaking up AFC

Four downs. Four chances to examine a key moment, trend, performance or stat and consider how it will play out the following Sunday.

1st Tennessee tightens

Look at the top of the AFC South. There sit the Tennessee Titans at 3-0. Nobody but the Indianapolis Colts has won this division since 2002 when the Titans did it, and the Titans now are 3-0 for the first time since 1999. That's also the only season the Titans played for the NFL title, losing 23-16 to the St. Louis Rams in Super Bowl XXXIV.

Forget those Titans and remember these. They came through the fire of quarterback Vince Young's injury and off-the-field difficulties in a fashion typical of their demeanor. When in doubt, rely on the defense. The Titans have allowed two touchdowns in the last 10 quarters and three this season.

"I don't want to say we feel invincible. I just want to say we have confidence," defensive tackle Tony Brown says.

In beating the Houston Texans 31-12, the Titans turned the red zone into the red-faced zone. The Texans made six trips inside the Tennessee 20-yard line. They scored one touchdown, kicked two field goals, gave the ball up on downs twice and surrendered a touchdown on cornerback Cortland Finnegan's 99-yard interception return. The Texans had a 15-play drive that lasted more than eight minutes that yielded no points, ending at the Titans' 2-yard line when a fourth-down run by Steve Slaton gained only 1 yard.

"You're not going to run the ball on us on third and fourth down," defensive end Jevon Kearse says. "You better just punt the ball and be satisfied with that."

2nd Buffalo horns in

Look at the top of the AFC East. There sit the Buffalo Bills at 3-0. Nobody but the New England Patriots has won this division since 2002, when the New York Jets did it. The Bills are 3-0 for the first time since 1992, the second-to-last time they played for the NFL championship. They reached Super Bowl XXVII as a wild card and lost 52-17 to the Dallas Cowboys.

As their coach, Marv Levy, loved to ask his team, "Where else would you rather be?" First place is good.

In edging the Oakland Raiders 24-23, the Bills had to engineer their second consecutive fourth-quarter comeback. They trailed the Raiders 16-7 going into the final 15 minutes, which receiver and return artist Roscoe Parrish described as "a yucky feeling."

Don't like it? Change it. Parrish's 14-yard TD reception with 4:03 left cut the Raiders' lead to 23-21 and Rian Lindell's 38-yard field goal on the final play won the game.

The Bills won't say they played one of their better games, but they know what bouncing back in this one means. "I think it builds confidence," guard Kevin Dockery says. "I think it's shown that we can win close games, but it's going to get tougher."

Not immediately. Next up: the winless St. Louis Rams, who rank 31st in the NFL in total offense and last in defense.

3rd Sea legs

Short of wide receivers, the Seattle Seahawks needed a victory in the worst way. So they can thank one of the NFL's worst teams for helping them get right.

Can't throw it with six receivers ailing or out? Run it. The Seahawks rushed for 245 yards against the Rams in a 37-13 blowout. The Seahawks scored on their first four possessions and five of their first six.

"We knew we had to play the game a certain way," coach Mike Holmgren says. "I thought we did."

The 245 yards on the ground were the most by the Seahawks in a game since Oct. 16, 2005, when they piled up 320 against the Texans. Julius Jones gained 140 against the Rams, giving him Seattle's first back-to-back 100-yard efforts since Maurice Morris did it in 2006.

So the 1-2 Seahawks are OK again? Well, maybe. This victory was their seventh in a row against the Rams. They have a bye this week and then play on the road Oct. 5 against the unbeaten New York Giants.

4th Brown out

It would make an interesting classified ad in The Cleveland Plain Dealer. "Missing. One offense. Prolific a year ago. If found, please call coach Romeo Crennel."

The Cleveland Browns, who scored 402 points last season, have managed 26 in a 0-3 start. They can't get in the end zone, extend drives or hold on to the football. They rank last in the league in total offense.

They led the Baltimore Ravens 10-7 at halftime Sunday, then gave the ball up on interceptions on consecutive possessions. The Ravens scored touchdowns after both, the second being a 32-yard return by safety Ed Reed. The Browns didn't add another point in the 28-10 loss, punting four consecutive times and ending their last possession with Derek Anderson's third interception.

"I'm just frustrated," says Anderson, a Pro Bowler last season. "I expect more out of myself and more out of everybody on the team."

Perhaps relief is on the way. The Browns play the equally frustrated (and equally winless) Cincinnati Bengals on Sunday. This should be a fair fight. The Bengals rank 30th in total offense.

Lions official says Millen should leave team

From wire reports

Bill Ford Jr. has seen enough of the way team President Matt Millen is running his father's Detroit Lions.

The Ford Motor executive chairman spoke to news reporters Monday after a Detroit Economic Club meeting. The vice chairman of the Lions said he was disappointed in the team's performance and said fans deserve better. When asked, he said Millen should leave the team, but he didn't have the authority to make such a change.

Notes

His dad, William Clay Ford, is the team owner and chairman.

The Lions are 0-3 this season and an NFL-worst 31-84 since hiring Millen, who won Super Bowls as a linebacker and was an acclaimed TV analyst but had no front office experience when he was hired by Detroit.

No Taylor for 'Skins: What seemed like an annoying kick in the calf turned into a significant medical issue for the Washington Redskins and defensive end Jason Taylor, who had a 20-minute emergency procedure Monday and will miss Sunday's game against the Dallas Cowboys.

Taylor's leg became painful and sore Sunday night, and he lost feeling in his ankle as blood began to pool. "They went in and cut open that portion where the blood was pooling and released that pressure," coach Jim Zorn said.

The injury will end Taylor's consecutive games streak at 133, the seventh longest among active players.

Kiffin still Raiders coach: Lane Kiffin was back at work Monday as the Oakland Raiders coach despite more reports his firing could be imminent. Speaking at his weekly news conference, Kiffin says he will assume he is still the coach until owner Al Davis tells him otherwise. Kiffin says he has not spoken to Davis since before the season opener against the Denver Broncos on Sept. 8.

Hernia shelves Shockey: New Orleans Saints tight end Jeremy Shockey will be out for three to six weeks because of a sports hernia. Team spokesman Greg Bensel confirmed that Shockey was scheduled to have surgery this week. He had five catches for 56 yards in Sunday's 34-32 loss at Denver.

Harris' spleen ruptured? Green Bay Packers cornerback Al Harris was having medical tests Monday amid a report he might have ruptured his spleen in Sunday's loss to the Dallas Cowboys. The National Football Post, a website that lists Harris' agent as a contributor, reported the injury could end Harris' season. Agent Jack Bechta did not immediately return a message from the Associated Press.

Update

A quick read on the news of the day

School district limits access to turf fields

A Pacific Northwest school district is limiting access to an artificial turf field used by students as a precaution against exposure to lead.

Portland (Ore.) Public Schools students 11 and younger won't be allowed on the field at Mary W. Rieke Elementary, and the city parks department also will limit some of its programs on the surface.

The district had independent tests on its three fields after reports about lead in East Coast turf fields. District spokesman Matt Shelby said the elementary school field installed about six years ago came back with limits above those recommended by the Centers for Disease Control for that age group, although it was under benchmarks set by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

"There seems to be differing opinions between the CDC and CPSC," Shelby said. "It's tough for a district like ours to know exactly what to do. What we do know is that youngest students are the most susceptible to lead poisoning."

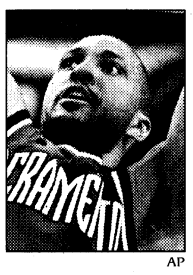
A CPSC release in July said children were "not at risk from exposure to lead" from playing on artificial surfaces, but that disclosure didn't halt the debate. The California Attorney's General's Office filed a civil suit against three turf manufacturers this month after potentially unhealthy levels of lead from samples taken around that state.

Prep association looking into racial taunts

The Maryland Public Secondary School Athletic Association is looking into allegations racial epithets were used in a game Friday between Dunbar (Washington, D.C.) and Fort Hill (Cumberland, Md.). Dunbar was leading 14-8 with four minutes left in the third quarter when its coach, Craig Jefferies, pulled his team off the field. Jefferies told The Washington Post that Fort Hill's players were using racial taunts against his players. Fort Hill won the game by a 2-0 forfeit. "We certainly want to get statements from the schools involved and see if there needs to be any actions," state association executive director Ned Sparks told USA TODAY on Monday. Fort Hill principal Steve Lewis, who in March banned the use of the Confederate flag at Fort Hill because of racial tensions between students at the school, said he also was looking into the situation. However, he disagreed with Jefferies' decision to pull his players off the field. "I won't speculate on why he did what he did, but I wouldn't recommend it," Lewis told the Cumberland Times-News. — Jim Halley

Kings' Abdur-Rahim retires with knee woes

Sacramento Kings forward Shareef Abdur-Rahim retired from the NBA on Monday because of a persistent right knee injury. Abdur-Rahim, 31, played 12 seasons for four teams, beginning his career in 1996 when the Vancouver Grizzlies made him the third overall draft pick. The 2002 All-Star averaged 18.1 points, 7.5 rebounds and 2.5 assists in his career, but he reached the playoffs once, with the Sacramento Kings in 2006. He appeared in six games last season before season-ending surgery in December on his right knee.



AP

Abdur-Rahim: Has arthritic knee.

▶ The Washington Wizards picked up a one-year option for coach Eddie Jordan that carries through the 2009-10 season. Jordan is the Eastern Conference's longest tenured coach, third in the NBA behind Jerry Sloan of the Utah Jazz and Gregg Popovich of the San Antonio Spurs.

Mystics fire GM Hargrove after 10-24 season

Washington Mystics general manager Linda Hargrove was fired Monday after four seasons with the WNBA team following a 10-24 season that ended with a nine-game losing streak. The Mystics missed the playoffs the past two years. Team President Sheila Johnson had promised changes, saying, "We cannot continue on this path."

▶ The technical foul Indiana's Ebony Hoffman received in Game 2 of the Fever's playoff series vs. the Detroit Shock was upgraded to a flagrant foul by the WNBA. Hoffman also was fined for the play in which the Shock's Plenette Pierson was knocked out of the game with a shoulder injury.

Briefly ...

Worcester (Mass.) police are interviewing witnesses as the investigation continues into the death of Minnesota basketball coach Tubby Smith's nephew, who was fatally stabbed during a fight at an off-campus apartment. Police say William L. Smith, 19, was killed early Sunday. ... The USA was disqualified Monday from its fourth-place finish in the Olympic team dressage event for a positive drug test. The International Equestrian Federation said Courtney King's horse Mythilus tested positive for the banned substance felbinac. The medication is used as an anti-inflammatory pain reliever. ... The Kentucky Horse Racing Commission on Monday unanimously approved a ban in harness racing on whips and riding crops that have strands of material at the end called a snapper. The commission also banned one-handed whipping on Standardbred drivers. ... General Motors Corp. said Monday it will not air a TV ad during the 2009 Super Bowl as the automaker slashes expenses. ... Seventh-seeded Rainer Schuettler of Germany beat Ivan Navarro of Spain 2-6, 6-3, 6-4 Monday in the China Open tennis tournament at Beijing. In the women's draw, seventh-seeded Daniela Hantuchova of Slovakia defeated Gisela Dulko of Argentina 6-3, 6-1.

Sagarin college football ratings

These computer ratings for Division I-A and I-AA football teams were devised by Jeff Sagarin, a 1970 MIT mathematics graduate. The rating is a numerical measure of the team's strength. A hypothetical victory margin is determined by comparing the rating of the two teams after adding 2.87 points to the home team. This home edge will vary during the season. Only Division I games are counted for rating and schedule strength during the season.

A diminishing-returns principle exists to prevent teams from building up ratings by running up large victory margins against weak teams. Instead, it rewards teams that do well against good opponents. The BCS (Bowl Championship Series) does not factor in scoring margin. For more Sagarin ratings go to www.usatoday.com.

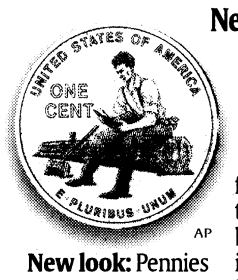
GM shares fall more than 11%

General Motors shares fell nearly 12% Monday following news that the automaker had tapped a large line of credit, taking out the remaining $3.5 billion from the $4.5 billion credit line it secured last year. Citigroup analyst Itay Michaeli told investors in a research note that accessing the credit indicates GM is burning cash at a severe rate in the second half of the year. GM had about $21 billion in cash at the end of the second quarter and has said it needs about $11 billion to $14 billion on hand to fund day-to-day operations.

New look for pennies



AP

New look: Pennies out next year.

The U.S. Mint unveiled four pennies commemorating the bicentennial of the birth of President Abraham Lincoln, with the first in the series depicting the log cabin where he was born. The first coin will go into circulation Feb. 12, 2009, the 200th anniversary of Lincoln's birth, the Mint said Monday. The other coins will depict the self-educated Lincoln studying while working as a rail splitter in Indiana, Lincoln as a lawyer in front of the Illinois State Capitol and the construction of the U.S. Capitol dome during Lincoln's term as the 16th president.

Briefly ...

Microsoft plans to buy back up to $40 billion of its own stock, and it raised its quarterly dividend by 18%, it said Monday. Microsoft's shares rose 5% after it said it would pay a quarterly dividend of 13 cents a share, up from 11 cents. Shares later closed up 1% to $25.40. The world's biggest software maker also said that its board authorized debt financings from time to time of up to $6 billion. ... Circuit City says its chairman and chief executive is stepping down immediately. Philip Schoonover joined the company in 2004 and also served as president of the beleaguered electronics retailer before resigning Monday.

Oil prices make historic gain

'Panic' ensues as traders have to buy at any cost

By James R. Healey
USA TODAY

The price of oil, below $100 for much of last week, rocketed to its biggest one-day dollar gain in history on Monday as speculators had to buy at any price to deliver on contracts expiring that day.

"A short-term panic," says Joe Marshall, energy trader at McNamara Options. "I've never seen a move like this in one day."

Light, sweet crude oil for October delivery closed the Nymex trading day Monday at $120.92 per barrel, a leap of $16.37 a barrel from Friday's close.

The run-up smacked against Nymex's $10 limit, halting electronic trading for five minutes in the afternoon before the limit automatically reset to $20. There was no interruption in "open-outcry" trading at the Nymex, says spokeswoman Brenda Guzman.

"Traders (in recent days) were thinking, 'The price is going down so let me get it tomorrow when it's cheaper,' but inventories got to very low levels so traders were stuck and had to purchase" at escalating prices to cover October contracts, says A.F. Alhajji, chief economist at NGP Energy Capital Management.

Source: USA TODAY research

Contracts to buy oil for delivery in November through next March were priced much lower — $108.78 to $109.37 per barrel — suggesting Monday's price explosion was an aberration.

"The fundamentals are there; the market will go up no matter what — but not ($16.37) in one day. Outrageous," Alhajji says.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission said it will review the day's trades to make sure the jump wasn't a result of market manipulation.

Also putting upward pressure on prices in two ways was the administration's proposed $700 billion bailout of financial institutions holding troubled mortgage-based investments.

Currency traders worried that the huge price tag of the bailout could weaken the U.S. and make its currency a riskier bet. That was blamed for a big drop Monday in the value of the U.S. dollar and, because oil is priced in dollars, a fall in the dollar's value means higher oil prices.

The dollar drop was steepest against the euro, which hit $1.4804 late Monday, up from $1.4470 Friday. That was the euro's biggest one-day jump against the dollar since it was introduced in 1999, according to the Associated Press. The dollar also fell against the British pound and Japanese yen.

Others thought the bailout would stabilize the U.S. economy, and that would increase oil demand.

"It could be perceived that way, that demand is back," says trader Marshall. "But that's too subtle to do that much (to oil prices) in one day."

Wall Street in Crisis

He's 'The Hammer' behind the plan

Paulson's known to be decisive and tenacious

By Kevin McCoy and Edward Iwata
USA TODAY

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson is accustomed to making big changes in a hurry.

When he was named chief operating officer of Goldman Sachs in 1994, he had to relocate to Manhattan from Chicago, where the salesman and executive known as "The Hammer" had risen rapidly through the ranks producing new clients for the investment bank.

Cover story

Within days, his wife, Wendy, had looked at dozens of apartments and narrowed the list to two. Paulson, cellphone pressed to his ear, spent about five minutes apiece striding through the units, signaled his preference, then immediately winged off on an international business trip.

Today, Paulson is spearheading an unprecedented global change as the Bush administration point man for the proposed $700 billion bailout of the U.S. financial industry as the economy reels from the credit crisis sparked by the national real estate slump and spiraling mortgage failure rates. Congress cringes at bailout proposal

By Sue Kirchhoff and Fredreka Schouten
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The White House push for rapid congressional approval of a historic $700 billion taxpayer rescue of the financial sector ran into political turbulence Monday, with both conservatives and liberals balking at its price and scope.

Congressional leaders of both parties underscored the importance of responding to extreme stress in credit markets but said they couldn't swallow the plan as proposed. House Financial Services Committee Chairman Barney Frank, D-Mass., said Democrats and the Bush administration are moving toward agreement on some of lawmakers' chief concerns, such as more help for homeowners with troubled mortgages. Talks are continuing over other changes, such as limiting special pay of executives whose firms benefit from federal aid and letting bankruptcy judges alter mortgage terms.

Rank-and-file lawmakers, returning from weekend meetings with angry, anxious voters, said the plan gave Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson too much power, might not stanch financial bleeding and would stick average Americans with the bill for years of Wall Street excess.

"We're now seeing eight years of reckless Bush economic policies come crashing down with unimaginable speed and severity," said Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev.

Reid said Congress must pass a second bill to help workers by extending unemployment aid and investing in public works projects.

Senate Banking Chairman Chris Dodd, D-Conn., proposed an alternative plan that — though more limited in several aspects — would give the government the authority it wants to buy bad assets other than mortgage securities, such as those backed by credit card debt and car loans.

Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., top Republican on the Senate Banking Committee, called the Treasury plan neither "workable nor comprehensive, despite its enormous price tag," adding it would be "foolish" to waste taxpayer dollars on a plan that could simply mean more ad hoc bailouts. He said Congress must work on an alternative.

Rep. Marilyn Musgrave, R-Colo., said, "I refuse to burden families already struggling with soaring energy and food prices with bailing out investment banks that made bad decisions."

Ragged investors sink Dow 373 points

By Adam Shell
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — Don't look for a quick fix to Wall Street's problems.

The government's inability to quickly finalize its bank bailout plan and an unexpected surge in oil prices did little to soothe the frayed nerves of investors Monday, prompting a 4% Wall Street sell-off that wiped out all of Friday's manic gains.

Markets

It took just took one trading session for the initial optimism surrounding the government's proposed $700 billion plan to rid banks of toxic real estate assets to fade. Unlike late last week, when the mere rumor of a major intervention from Capitol Hill ignited a two-day, 779-point rally in the Dow Jones industrials and raised hopes that market turbulence would give way to stability and renewed confidence, investors on Monday opted to focus on the unknowns and bearish unintended consequences of the costly plan.

Analysts say the massive government borrowing needed to unclog credit markets was partly behind the record $16.37 jump in a barrel of oil. It was also a factor in the renewed weakness in the U.S. dollar. Both were viewed negatively, as pricey oil depresses consumer spending, and a weak dollar stokes inflation.

"This is the worst possible scenario that (Treasury Secretary Henry) Paulson wanted to see," says Gary Kaltbaum, president of Kaltbaum and Associates.

The Dow Jones industrial average plunged 373 points, or 3.3%, to 11,016, and is 22.2% off its high. The massive moves up and down are unprecedented. For the first time ever, the Dow has had closing point moves greater than 350 points in four sessions in a row.

The proposed bailout is also supposed to thaw frozen credit markets. Monday, there were some signs of progress but also signs of stress. A 10-year Merrill Lynch corporate bond was trading nearly 4 percentage points above a comparable U.S. Treasury bond, vs. a nearly 6-point gap in last Wednesday's panic. But there was a dearth of bonds issued, a sign that credit markets are still frozen, says Marilyn Cohen, president of Envision Capital Management.

The good news is that "yield spreads are narrowing and moving in the right direction," says Wan-Chong Kung, a senior portfolio manager at First American Funds.

Uncertainty continues, adds trader Todd Leone at Cowen & Co.: "People are not sure what will happen. No one is jumping into stocks."

Paulson ranked among highest-paid Wall St. CEOs

the plan at a Senate Banking Committee hearing today.

The plan, crafted with Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke, an academic, softer-spoken Sundance Kid to Paulson's dealmaking Butch Cassidy, has brought him rock-star-like praise, along with mounting questions for the virtually unchecked power over the bailout fund penciled in for the Treasury secretary and his successors.

To hear those who know him tell it, there's no one more suited for the job.

"He's very tenacious," says Peter Fahey, a friend and retired Goldman Sachs partner who has known Paulson from their undergrad days at Dartmouth.

Fahey, noting that Paulson won All-East football honors as an offensive tackle despite an estimated 195-pound frame considered small for the position, cites one key to his friend's success on the gridiron and in professional life: "He does not take no for an answer."

The nation hasn't faced such high financial stakes since the Great Depression after the 1929 stock market crash.

In recent weeks, Lehman Bros. collapsed in bankruptcy. The government bailed out Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and insurance giant AIG. Bear Stearns and Merrill Lynch were forced into abrupt sales. And credit markets remained all but paralyzed until last week's announcement of the bailout plan seemed to at least temporarily calm the chaos.

The most prominent public face leading Washington's rescue effort is a 62-year-old father of two, former Eagle Scout, Wall Street multimillionaire, teetotaling Christian Scientist and passionate wildlife advocate.

Paulson earned an MBA from Harvard University. He went on to work in the White House and the Defense Department during the waning years of the Nixon administration before landing at Goldman Sachs and rising to the top job.

Leading change

Paulson successfully led Goldman's transition to a publicly traded company. He also took a personal hand in Goldman's recruiting, ensuring that Northwestern University's Kellogg Graduate School of Management, where he long served on an advisory board, sent many of its top graduates to the investment bank.

"The man really cares about excellence," says Dipak Jain, the school's dean.

Paulson ranked among the highest-paid Wall Street CEOs, collecting about $30 million a year in salary and equity-based compensation in the mid-2000s, says Paul Hodgson at The Corporate Library proxy research firm.

Hodgson criticized several private investment funds that Goldman Sachs set up for executives and their spouses, or entities owned or controlled by employees. In 2006, for instance, Paulson received a $7.4 million distribution from one of the funds, according to Securities and Exchange Commission filings.

The mammoth salary and other Goldman Sachs payouts enabled Paulson and his wife to become one of the nation's top benefactors of wildlife causes. They ranked 18th on The Chronicle of Philanthropy's 2006 list of America's Most-Generous Donors, based on $100 million the couple donated to Goldman Sachs' charitable causes and the Bobolink Foundation, a Chicago organization they founded to aid conservation.

"He's a very keen conservationist," says Peter Jenny, a friend who is CEO of The Peregrine Fund, a group devoted to saving falcons and other raptors.

Paulson, a previous member of the organization's board, has kept favorite photos of the fierce-looking birds in his offices, Jenny says.

He also managed to combine his love of wildlife with his business skill. He chaired The Nature Conservancy, one of the world's largest environmental organizations, when it faced a Senate investigation several years ago after a Washington Post investigation disclosed questionable financial practices by the group.

Paulson cut the size of the board in half to 21 members, revamped the committee structure and made sure all key strategy moves went before the full board, says former COO Stephanie Meeks. "Hank guided the organization through a difficult period," she says. "The Nature Conservancy came out a much stronger organization."

Describing conservation causes as Paulson's true "life's work," Fahey says his friend probably planned to turn to that work full time after his Wall Street career. But in 2006, President Bush sought him for Treasury secretary.

Paulson initially declined. It's not hard to understand why. His immediate Bush administration predecessors in the job, Paul O'Neill and John Snow, had what were widely considered to be minor accomplishments. Paulson agreed to serve only after White House chief of staff Josh Bolten, a Goldman Sachs alumnus, convinced him he'd have real influence over national economic policy.

Since his appointment, Paulson has done just that in a role that is becoming even more important as Bush's low approval ratings and waning presidency limit his effectiveness.

But former SEC chief accountant Lynn Turner contends that Paulson has grabbed responsibilities for securities and investment policy that should be handled by Washington's market regulator, not the Treasury Department.

Additionally, some critics think his failure to pressure China more to loosen its undervalued currency, the yuan, has hurt the economy and contributed to the record U.S. trade deficit with China of $256 billion last year.

"If Paulson had wanted to really do something, he would have been serious about dealing with the Chinese currency issue," says Clyde Prestowitz, founder of the Economic Strategy Institute and a former Commerce Department official during the Reagan administration.

Despite the criticism, Paulson is a financial expert and is persuasive in private meetings, even though he is a sometimes halting public speaker. That can be a drawback as Congress moves closer to a vote on the bailout plan, because the White House lacks a compelling spokesman who can explain the stakes and reassure voters.

On a political level, Democrats and Republicans respect Paulson, who, more than most Bush administration officials, has been willing to reach across party lines to negotiate deals. House Financial Services Chairman Barney Frank, D-Mass., Monday said he is "very impressed" with Paulson's performance.

Target for criticism

But as the financial crisis has dragged on, and the White House has asked Congress to take tougher and tougher votes, some lawmakers' confidence in both Paulson and Bernanke has waned.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Chris Dodd, D-Conn., is among those who voice concern that the bailout plan would give Paulson and his successors too much power because drafts circulated so far specifically omit any provision for court or congressional oversight.

"The idea that we're going to turn over $700 billion to one individual ... is asking an awful lot," Dodd said over the weekend. On Monday, Dodd proposed changes that would limit the bailout to one year instead of two and create an oversight board to keep an eye on Treasury asset purchases and sales.

Even GOP presidential candidate John McCain, while describing Paulson as "a person I admire and respect a great deal," said Monday at a Pennsylvania campaign stop, "Never before in the history of our nation has so much power and money been concentrated in the hands of one person."

"This arrangement makes me deeply uncomfortable. And when we're talking about a trillion dollars of taxpayer money, 'trust me' just isn't good enough," McCain said.

Supporters say Paulson will listen to the criticism, then do what he does best, negotiate a deal that wins approval, however grudging.

FAQs on Morgan-Goldman changes

How will their conversion affect us?

By Kathy Chu and John Waggoner
USA TODAY

The conversion of the last big investment banks, Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs, into bank holding companies will usher in sweeping changes to the nation's financial system.

The era of the giant investment bank is over, but the day of the gargantuan bank holding company could be just beginning. And with that rise is real danger that such outsized financial titans will become so big that they'd become, undoubtedly, too big to fail. Nevertheless, the changes give Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley — and the financial system — "more stability" for now, says John Foff, a senior analyst at SNL Financial. "They also give investors more transparency into these companies."

Here's a look at the latest reshaping of the financial world:

Question: Why are Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs doing this?

A: A major reason the banks decided to convert to bank holding companies was to gain access to a stable source of funding: customer deposits.

Investment banks have traditionally relied on borrowed money, rather than deposits, to turn a profit. But as the economy has faltered, and it's become harder — and more expensive — to borrow money, they've realized the appeal of plain-vanilla deposits.

Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs had been mulling the conversion for weeks, but Lehman's bankruptcy last week — along with Merrill Lynch's merger with Bank of America and the government's takeover of AIG — accelerated the decision.

Morgan Stanley further stabilized its finances Monday by striking an agreement to sell Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group, Japan's largest bank, as much as a 20% stake.

The developments mean that Morgan Stanley's talks with Wachovia about a potential merger are on hold, according to a person with direct knowledge of the matter but who is not authorized to be quoted publicly.

Q: How is regulation different for a bank holding company vs. an investment bank?

A: Three ways.

Banking consumers

By Lucas Jackson, Reuters

▶ Bailout plan hits political snags, 1B

Wall Street

By Richard Drew, AP

First, bank holding companies have stricter requirements about the amount of capital they must hold — that is, the amount of money they have to offset losses. Historically, investment banks have had few restrictions on how much capital they must have.

Second, investment banks haven't had strong regulatory oversight. Although the SEC has had a watchdog role in investment banks' activities, bank holding companies generally have far more rigorous oversight from the Federal Reserve.

Finally, there are some things that bank holding companies just aren't allowed to do — use large amounts of borrowed money to buy and sell securities, for example. Much of the financial crisis has stemmed from exactly that.

Q: How will Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley acquire deposits?

A: Now that Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs are bank holding companies, they will aggressively try to expand deposits. Initially, at least, they may do so mainly through their existing brokerage and wealth-management clients, much as Merrill has done for years.

But Robert J. Ellis, a senior vice president at Celent, a financial-services research firm, said he wouldn't be surprised if the firms each struck a deal "within weeks" to merge with a bank, in an effort to quickly build their deposit base. "Our plan is to acquire (deposits) that will impact the balance sheet, but this won't result in ATMs on every corner," says Lucas Van Praag, a Goldman Sachs spokesman.

Q: Is the independent investment bank doomed?

A: Not at all, although the large investment bank is now a thing of the past. Many small and midsize investment banks have survived the carnage on Wall Street. If they make it intact through the current crisis, they could do quite well.

"Many smaller boutique firms will carry on," says Hugh Johnson of Johnson Illington Advisors. In fact, Johnson says, many of the more aggressive people from the big firms may well land in smaller investment banks. "That's where the risk takers go — those who can't operate in the new culture at Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley will go to small and midsized firms," Johnson says.

Smaller firms that are able to attract new employees will get another benefit: the business contacts of their new hires. "We see small and midsized investment banks increasing their market share," says Michael Turner, partner at Fort Lauderdale investment bank Farlie Turner.

Q: What effect will this have on consumers?

A: Gary Stein, a partner with Capital Performance Group, which consults with banks, says more players in the banking world leads to more competition. More competition, in turn, he says, could result in better loan terms for consumers.

Yet the reason such savings may not materialize, says Ellis, of Celent, is that historically, as banks have captured more market share, they've also raised their fees. That means, he says, that consumers could ultimately get "less interest on their deposits and pay more interest on their loans."

Q: What does this mean for securities underwriting?

A: In general, very little. Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley will still be able to bring new stocks and bonds to market, just as they always have.

But because stocks are in the grip of a bear market, new stock offerings will probably be scarce. At the moment, the new issues calendar is about as empty as the Bear Stearns employee cafeteria. "Given the market's volatility, it's not a good time to contemplate new equity issue," Turner says. And, because the debt markets are in such turmoil, there's not much demand for new bonds, either. Eventually, however, new issue demand will return.

Ban on short sales grows

Protected firms list goes over 900

By David Lieberman
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — The number of companies temporarily protected from short selling soared from 799 to more than 900 on Monday as the two top stock exchanges added widely traded firms, including American Express, General Electric and General Motors, to a list that the SEC put out on Friday.

The Securities and Exchange Commission hopes to prevent a run on financial-services companies by temporarily limiting the ability of traders to bet that their shares will decline. Short sellers borrow and sell stock held by other people; they profit when they can repurchase the shares later at a lower price before returning them to the owner.

In a press release on Friday, the SEC said that "unbridled short selling is contributing to the recent, sudden price declines" in financial institutions' shares. It added that they are "particularly vulnerable to this crisis of confidence and panic selling."

The SEC halted short-selling in designated firms through Oct. 2. The restriction could be extended for a total of up to 30 days.

It also told the New York Stock Exchange and Nasdaq Stock Market that they could include other companies. "We're not trying to maintain a master list," says SEC spokesman John Heine.

That led to a flurry of activity over the weekend.

For example, the NYSE sent a blast e-mail asking members to determine whether they met seven criteria set up by the SEC. The exchange now has added 71 names, including Credit Suisse Group, Discover Financial Services, Legg Mason and Moody's.

Monday afternoon, the NYSE added 40 companies to the morning's list of 31, with late additions including Met Life, McGraw-Hill, Ford Motor and student loan company SLM Corp. "It's kind of a fluid situation," says NYSE spokesman Scott Peterson.

Nasdaq added 66 companies, including Commerce Bancshares, Fifth Third Bancorp, Insure.com and State Bancorp.

Short sellers say that the SEC acted too hastily, as evidenced by the changes on the protected list.

"There's no real discussion about who gets on the list, or why," says Richard Baker, CEO of the Managed Funds Association, which represents hedge funds. "It doesn't make market sense."

What's more, he says that the SEC hasn't shown that short sellers contributed to recent problems at financial institutions.

"What are we solving?" Baker says. "If you think somebody's manipulating (the market), then let's go get them."

David Tice, manager of the Prudent Bear Fund, says that the exchanges may have added companies that just want to keep their stock prices up. "There are probably some requests from managers who say, 'This sounds good. Put me on the list.' "

Meanwhile, sellers are being unfairly vilified: "Short sellers have been warning about the excesses caused by Wall Street for more than a decade," Tice says.

The additions to the ban list came the same day that financial-services companies led another big slide in the stock market in which the Dow Jones industrial average fell 373 points to 11,016. (Stories 1B, 9B.)

Outlook on low-risk investments not so bad

Before you panic, take a closer look at money market funds, annuities

Investors who stash their cash in money market funds, certificates of deposit or fixed-rate annuities aren't looking for big gains. They just want to protect their principal and earn a little bit of interest.

By Sandra Block

That's why the sudden collapse of some of Wall Street's most venerable institutions has unnerved so many people. Is anything safe? Should you yank all your money out of the financial markets and stock up on canned goods?

That's probably not necessary. Here's a rundown on the outlook for low-risk investments:

Money market mutual funds. Last Monday, the share price of the Reserve Primary Fund, a money market mutual fund, fell below $1, which means shareholders lost some of their principal. The fund cited losses from investments in Lehman Bros., which filed for bankruptcy protection last week.

While money market mutual funds aren't covered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., they've long been considered nearly as safe as insured deposits. The funds typically invest money in short-term Treasury securities and IOUs from big companies.

In an effort to calm investors, the Treasury Department announced a temporary program to insure money funds. However, Treasury said Sunday that the insurance would be limited to funds shareholders had in money funds as of Sept. 19.

What about future investments in money funds? If the fund is offered by a large financial institution that manages money conservatively, "The odds of running into trouble are extremely low," says Karen Dolan, director of fund analysis for Morningstar, an investment research firm. Reserve Fund's management company may not have had enough money to replace the Lehman losses. But mutual fund behemoths such as Fidelity Investments and Vanguard have a vested interest in maintaining their money funds, she says, and will use their own money to prevent a fund from falling below $1 a share.

Loss of confidence

Assets in money market mutual funds fell by $169 billion for the week ended Wednesday:

Week ended	Total assets (trillions)
Aug. 27	$3.573
Sept. 3	$3.586
Sept. 10	$3.582
Sept. 17	$3.413

Source: Investment Company Institute

Find links to previous Your Money columns at money.usatoday.com.

A fund's yield offers important clues to its management style. If a fund is offering significantly higher yields than its competitors and isn't charging lower fees, it's probably taking more risks, Dolan says. The Reserve Fund is a case in point. In Morningstar's database of 2,100 money market funds, the Reserve Fund had the largest trailing 12-month yield.

Annuities. AIG is the largest issuer of fixed-rate annuities in the USA and the ninth-largest seller of variable annuities through banks. As a result, a lot of people who have their retirement savings with AIG have been rattled by the federal government's $85 billion bailout of the insurance giant.

Here's the problem: Ditching your annuities could trigger costly surrender charges. Marvin Feldman, president of the Life and Health Insurance Foundation for Education, says AIG's financial problems stem from risky investments made by its holding company.

AIG's insurance subsidiaries are "highly regulated and well-capitalized," he says.

If the insurance company failed, Feldman says, losses would be covered by your state's guaranty association, up to the maximum guaranteed by your state. Most states cover up to $100,000 in withdrawal and cash value for fixed annuities.

The state guaranty associations don't cover variable annuities. However, those annuities offer another type of protection for investors, Feldman says. Most variable annuities offer a choice of mutual funds, known as subaccounts. These are segregated accounts, Feldman says, which means that if the insurance company files for bankruptcy, creditors can't file claims against them.

Insured deposits. The FDIC insures up to $100,000 per depositor in individual accounts, or up to $200,000 in joint accounts in which each account holder has equal withdrawal rights. Over the past 75 years, no one has lost a dime in insured deposits.

With credit drying up, banks are eager to attract customer deposits. While the average rate for a one-year CD was 2.47% last week, some banks are offering up to 4.5%, according to Bankrate.com.

Keep in mind, though, that if your bank fails and is acquired by another institution, there's no guarantee you'll continue to get the same interest rate until the CD matures, says Greg McBride, senior analyst for Bankrate.com.

If the new bank decides to lower your rate, you can redeem your CD, plus interest you've earned, without paying a penalty, McBride says.

Still, if you're a retiree who needs a predictable return on your CDs for the next few years, you might want to check out a bank's financial health before investing, he says. You can find information about a bank's safety and soundness at www.bankrate.com.

Europe welcomes U.S. bailout, but has no plans to take similar path

By Jeffrey Stinson
USA TODAY

LONDON — Although they applauded U.S. plans to have taxpayers bail out bad bank loans, no other countries followed suit on Monday.

Members of the G-7 group of industrialized democracies, including Germany, France and Britain, said in a statement that they "strongly welcomed" the $700 billion U.S. rescue effort to prevent a collapse of the financial system.

They also said they were ready to "take whatever actions may be necessary" to ensure global stability. What they didn't say was they would jump on the bandwagon and ask their taxpayers to buy up toxic debt held by banks in their countries in a fashion similar to the United States.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson on Sunday had urged other countries to follow and said he expected many to do so after the turmoil in global markets in the last two weeks. Congress is considering Paulson's plan.

The German and French governments said they see no need for a bailout, saying their banks weren't as exposed to as much bad debt as U.S. banks. Other G-7 members, Japan, Canada and Italy, also haven't seen bank failures, though their markets have been rocked by the crisis.

Ulrich Wilhelm, spokesman for German Chancellor Angela Merkel, said Washington had a "special responsibility" in the yearlong financial crisis that began in the U.S. subprime mortgage market. He said a U.S.-style bailout isn't "necessary at the moment" for Europe's biggest economy.

Inaction by European governments is understandable, said Mark Duckenfield, who lectures on the politics of the world economy at the London School of Economics.

"They don't have the same monumental failures as we've seen in the U.S.," he said. "They can take the attitude, 'Why not let the U.S. and the U.S. taxpayers carry the ball?' "

The news last Thursday that U.S. regulators, the White House and Congress were putting together a bailout package resulted in a big turnaround Friday on European exchanges, with stocks going up after steep dives in the days before.

By Thomas Lohnes, AFP/Getty Images

Wall Street's ripple effect: A stockbroker watches her screen at Frankfurt's stock exchange last week.

Britain, home to Europe's biggest stock exchange, has been rocked more than other European nations by the crisis.

Prime Minister Gordon Brown is traveling to New York today to talk with U.S. regulators about imposing greater oversight on banks and markets.

Matthew Watson, associate professor of political economics at England's University of Warwick, said he suspects that Britain could well follow and establish a government stability fund after Brown returns from the USA. He said helping stabilize Britain's panicky housing and financial markets could help Brown politically at a time his popularity has fallen.

More hotels spruce up breakfast offerings

Gourmet menus help boost revenue

By Gary Stoller
USA TODAY

At left, waiter Akli Merzouki serves breakfast to Pierre Grandsagne and Regine Concato-Dougnol at Cézanne. Gourmet breakfast specials are becoming more popular at hotels.

Photos by Robert Hanashiro, USA TODAY

Move over pancakes and omelets. Make room for lobster hash and five-spiced waffles with duck confit.

A growing number of hotels, particularly upscale ones, are treating breakfast like dinner, offering gourmet specials in addition to common breakfast foods.

Special entrees can increase restaurant revenue, attract local residents and differentiate a hotel from its competitors. Chefs can be more creative and use more local or seasonal foods. Guests also benefit because they have more choices and, maybe, a more memorable hotel stay.

"There's a big emphasis on special menus," says Jeanne Bischoff, publisher of Hotel F&B, a food-and-beverage trade magazine.

"Breakfast may be a guest's only meal at a hotel or the last time a guest talks to a hotel representative before checking out," Bischoff says. "Hotels want a guest to leave with a good memory, and their culinary offerings can accomplish that."

Offering more breakfast specials comes at a time when many hotel kitchens are looking to satisfy guests by adding more healthy foods and organic items to their menus.

Hotel guests are becoming "more sophisticated and discriminating" with their palettes, says Giuseppe Pezzotti, senior lecturer at Cornell University's School of Hotel Administration.

Breakfast specials this month at Le Merigot, a JW Marriott hotel in Santa Monica, Calif., include lobster hash with smoked paprika hollandaise and Kobe beef corned beef hash with fried organic eggs. The lobster dish cost $20, $4 more than the Kobe beef entree.

From special to regular menu item

At La Mansion del Rio in San Antonio, executive chef John Brand says he and guests were so pleased with a July breakfast special that it has become part of the permanent menu.

"It started as a blini, but now it's lemon ricotta pancakes with pine nuts and raspberries," says Brand about the $10 menu item.

Brand, a breakfast chef at four hotels in the past eight years, is fond of several entrees that he occasionally offers his morning diners. They include five-spiced waffles with duck confit, smoked salmon crepes and poached eggs over crab and cornbread.

Breakfast specials are "a growing trend," says Bart Bruning, vice president of food and beverages for The Ritz-Carlton. "We want to offer our guests variety and give our chefs an opportunity to be creative and to introduce more seasonal items."

Some frequent business travelers welcome such an approach.

"I would love to see more special offerings for breakfast," says Matthew Evangelista, a salesman from Industry, Pa. "I think eating the same thing day after day gets old really fast."

Marla Juliano, of Birmingham, Ala., likes the cooked-to-order breakfasts served at Hilton Garden Inn. On Sept. 15, some of the chain's hotels added three nutritious menu items: multigrain waffles with blueberry thyme compote; beef brisket hash with kale, whole-grain bread, poached egg and roasted sweet potatoes; and granola and flaxseed parfait with yogurt, strawberries and honey.

Juliano, who works in the beauty industry and stays at a hotel two or three days a week, wishes there were more choices at other hotels. "There are some mornings when I want more than simply continental and would love to see some bistro-type items offered," she says.

Breakfast specials are rare at many less expensive hotels that offer a complimentary breakfast, but some have begun offering better-quality and healthier foods.

Embassy Suites is the free-breakfast "trend-setter," says Michael Costa, an editor at Hotel F&B. The chain offers cook-to-order omelets with a choice of at least 10 ingredients.

At Hilton's Homewood Suites, complimentary breakfast items vary at each of the more than 240 hotels. At least two hot items, such as eggs, sausage, bacon and hash browns, are offered, as well as fruit, yogurt, toast and beverages.

At hotels that charge for breakfast, specials may or may not be priced higher than regular menu items.

Ritz-Carlton doesn't routinely price its breakfast specials higher than other menu items, Bruning says. The specials may help sway guests to make another visit to a Ritz-Carlton hotel and may attract local residents, he says.

Trying to exceed expectations

At the Barona Valley Ranch Resort & Casino in Lakeside, Calif., specials last week were $8 to $10. They included prime rib hash and poached eggs with organic chives and a shrimp egg-white omelet with artichoke and spinach.

Executive chef Dean Thomas says he offers many specials because the hotel is "constantly trying to exceed our guests' expectations at all meal periods."

At the Dolce Atlanta-Peachtree hotel in Peachtree City, Ga., specials are more the norm than regular menu items.

Special foods are added daily to the breakfast buffet, and the breakfast menu changes every week, says executive chef Len Elias.

Breakfast entrees that often appear on the menu include Tasso bacon spinach and mushroom quiche with fresh fruit and white chocolate pecan bourbon French toast with andouille sausage.

"I've never treated breakfast differently than any other meal," says Elias. "I look at what I can offer guests to keep them excited and eating on property."

Wasilla, Alaska

Doing well with affordable homes

By Christine Dugas
USA TODAY

Since Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin became the Republican vice presidential nominee this month, her hometown of Wasilla has been under a spotlight. Until now, few people in the Lower 48 states knew much about it. But in Alaska, Wasilla is popular and thriving.

Mat-Su Valley, the borough where Wasilla is situated, "is really the only place in Alaska that you can say has been growing very rapidly over the past decade," says Neal Fried, an economist at the Alaska Department of Labor.

Between 2000 and 2007, as the state's population grew 9%, Wasilla's surged 29%, and Mat-Su Valley by 35%, Fried says. The city, with a population of about 7,000, is essentially a bedroom community, about 40 miles north of Anchorage, the state's largest city.

One reason Wasilla continues to flourish is that homes remain more affordable than in Anchorage. "You can get a lot more for your money," Fried says. "You can get bigger lots, and it has more of a country feel to it."

Wasilla's real estate market hasn't suffered very much from the fallout from subprime loans and foreclosures, as did many cities in Florida and California. "We didn't have a big market correction," says Brad Cole, president of the Mat-Su Valley Board of Realtors. "Our prices have been very stable."

Still, sales have dipped. In particular, high-price homes are selling more slowly now.

That's happened because in recent years, many new homes were priced at $300,000 or higher. "We just don't have the financial base here to afford those homes," Cole says. "The high-end market was saturated."

To make matters worse, higher gas prices have held back some buyers who work in Anchorage. "There are families spending more for fuel to drive back and forth to work than they're paying for their mortgage," Cole says.

Of course, not everyone in Wasilla works in Anchorage. In Mat-Su Valley, which is as big as West Virginia, there are jobs in tourism, health and retail, Cole says. As the retail center for the valley, Wasilla has many big stores, including Home Depot, Lowe's and Wal-Mart.

But shopping isn't the only attraction. People move to Wasilla and Mat-Su Valley because they enjoy snowmobiling, fishing, hunting and skiing. "A lot of people want to live here for the quality of life," Cole says. "This is a beautiful area, with the lakes, rivers, mountains and glaciers."

Tough choices: Steve and Charlotte White walk along a bridge near their South Carolina home on Sunday. White spent six months researching health insurance before retiring, and it still wasn't cheap.

When Steve White began preparing to leave his medical practice in a small Georgia town 12 years ago, he and his wife, Charlotte, began searching for a reasonably priced retiree health care policy that would last until they qualified for Medicare.

They never quite found it. Today, the Whites, who are in good health, pay $12,000 for an annual policy with a $20,000 deductible. Steve White, who turns 65 next week , says he knows people in affluent Hilton Head, S.C., where the Whites live, who can't afford to retire until Medicare kicks in at age 65, because private health care is prohibitively expensive.

"Health care premiums," White laments, "hold more people hostage from retirement than any other issue."

Everyone knows that wannabe retirees are in a bind today as they consider whether they have the financial security to make the leap. Shrinking nest eggs, nagging inflation, stagnant wages, vanishing pensions, dubious advice and runaway health care costs are among the obstacles that can block a retiree's escape route.

Despite the long odds, there are still people, such as the Whites, who have managed to liberate themselves from office cubicles, assembly lines and other workplaces. These are people whose paths to retirement weren't paved with stock options, gold-plated executive benefits or multigenerational wealth. Yet they somehow defied the threats that thwart the ability of so many middle-class people to save enough for retirement.

How did they do it? Most of them were habitual savers. They avoided or paid off debt. They invested early and often for retirement. When they needed to, some of them pursued a little extra paid work.

But many of them were also fortunate. They tended to enjoy traditional company pensions and, if they were really lucky, received employer-provided retiree health insurance, too.

Older workers are all too aware that the pension safety net has been unraveling as companies such as IBM, Fidelity Investments, Verizon and Hewlett-Packard have frozen or terminated their pension plans. According to Boston College's Center for Retirement Research, only 43% of workers from 25 to 65 in Corporate America still qualify for traditional employer-provided pensions.

The old-fashioned pension may eventually exist mainly in the government sector alone, where strong legal protections have kept such "defined-benefit" plans the norm in city halls, state capitals and federal offices around the country.

Roger Cook, 64, a retired state archeologist in Lincoln, Calif., and his wife, Rae, 56, an assistant office manager in the state attorney general's office, are taking full advantage of their state pension coverage. The couple didn't start saving for retirement until 15 years ago. But they always knew their fallback was his-and-her defined-benefit plans.

"It's a real boon to anybody to have a guaranteed amount of money that will be coming in every month," says Roger Cook, whose pension plan allowed him to retire at 59½.

In weighing various scenarios, the Cooks decided that Rae would work until next year to boost her eventual pension check. And she's considering not tapping Social Security until she turns 67, thereby raising the amount of her monthly checks.

Worried about having to rely solely on their pensions and Social Security, the couple also started stashing away 25% of their paychecks several years before Roger's retirement. Rae continues to maintain that pace. And Roger, whose frugality includes driving a 14-year-old Ford pickup, is faithfully contributing to a spousal individual retirement account each year.

Don't be in rush to tap into Social Security

If your retirement plan doesn't include a pension, it can be hard not to feel a tad envious of the happily-ever-after retirement stories of others who are covered. But a growing number of Americans, whose retirement prospects might look like financial dead ends, are proving that all is not lost. These workers are finding that they can join the ranks of successful retirees by dawdling at the exit.

When workers resist the temptation to grab Social Security benefits at age 62 and wait until their full retirement age (66, for Boomers near retirement age), they'll boost their monthly benefit check by 33%, says Alicia Munnell, director of Boston College's Center for Retirement Research and co-author of Working Longer: The Solution to the Retirement Income Challenge. Those who can hold off retirement till age 70 will see their Social Security payments grow a lot more — by 75%.

"Delaying retirement and delaying Social Security," Munnell observes, "is one of the most powerful tools you have at your disposal to secure a successful retirement."

Michael Rosner, 64, of Melrose, Minn., understands the math all too well. Burned out, he retired as a physical therapist in 2005 and devoted himself to working as a Red Cross volunteer. But two years later, boredom, rather than financial need, pushed him back into the workforce part time.

As a Social Security recipient, though, he triggered a financial penalty when his salary exceeded the allowable limit. Social Security discourages younger retirees from "double-dipping": receiving the federal benefit and a paycheck simultaneously before your full retirement age. Consequently, Rosner faced the prospect of having Social Security deduct $1 from his benefit check for every $2 he earned over the limit of $13,560.

At that point, Rosner decided to pay back the two years of Social Security he'd already collected so he could wipe the slate clean. He realizes now that resisting the allure of early Social Security checks will pay off handsomely with larger checks when he eventually retires for the second time.

Rosner is urging others, including his director of nursing, to avoid grabbing the cash at the first opportunity. "I told her," Rosner recalled, "that she better think twice before drawing Social Security at age 62."

Don't be in a rush to retire, either

Delaying retirement will, of course, sound like a downer to many people. But aging employees don't have to live like hermits during their extra working years. That's the conclusion of a recent study by T. Rowe Price that suggests that people who delay their career exit can treat themselves well during their extra years on the job.

T. Rowe Price researchers examined what it would take for a 62-year-old to turbocharge his eventual retirement purchasing power from his own savings and Social Security. If he managed to save 25% of his paycheck each year, he could boost his annual retirement income by 8.2% for every year that he continued his herculean savings. So if he quit work at age 65 rather than at 62, his retirement purchasing power would jump nearly 25%. (The formula assumes the saver is invested in a re-

10 secrets to a financially secure retirement

By Lynn O'Shaughnessy ■ Special for USA TODAY

Five ways to boost your income

1. Don't retire impulsively.

Each year, the Employee Benefit Research Institute surveys Americans, and every year without fail they tell the pollsters that they plan to retire at age 65. Regardless of what they say, though, retirees usually bail at age 62.

"There's a disconnect between what people say they will do and what they end up doing," observes Alicia Munnell, director of Boston College's Center for Retirement Research. Munnell used to find this reality puzzling, but she thinks she's found an intriguing reason to explain the behavior.

"The decision to retire is sometimes made for superficial reasons," Munnell says.

She's heard many stories of older workers quitting suddenly because they had been stuck on airplanes too long during business trips. She heard of a woman recuperating from a sprained ankle who decided she really liked to watch daytime television, so she retired. Some quit because they were peeved at younger bosses.

Leaving in a huff without developing a solid exit strategy, though, can be financially foolhardy.

2. Invest in stocks for the long term

Plenty of investors turn timid as they age, so it's no surprise that many retirees consider stocks off-limits. What they fail to realize is that an ultra-conservative portfolio stuffed with bonds and certificates of deposit can't keep up with inflation. It may be hard to imagine, given the current bloodbath on Wall Street, but over the long run, returns from stocks and stock mutual funds tend to surpass the returns on other investments.

Adding stocks to a retirement portfolio can boost your returns without exposing you to reckless risk. "If you have a portfolio with 20% to 30% stocks, your volatility is about the same or less than if you bought long-term bonds," says Larry Swedroe, an investment adviser in St. Louis and the author of The Only Guide to Alternative Investments You'll Ever Need: The Way Smart Money Diversifies Risk.

3. Seek pension help.

Those lucky enough to retire with a pension must often decide whether to take a lump sum or a lifetime of monthly checks. Grabbing that huge chunk of change all at once is exceedingly tempting, but retiring workers should consider consulting a pension actuary before making such a momentous decision.

Where do you find an actuary? The American Academy of Actuaries sponsors a program called the Pension Assistance List, which links pensioners who need assistance with actuaries who will provide up to four free hours of help. You can contact the academy at (202) 223-8196 or www.actuary.org.

4. Delay Social Security.

You can start collecting Social Security checks at age 62, and most Americans go for it. But their eagerness can curtail their retirement income. If you delay Social Security past age 62, your benefits will increase significantly. Crunch your own numbers, using various retirement scenarios, by visiting the Social Security Administration's website at www.ssa.gov.

5. Be a smart investor.

What's required to be a successful investor hasn't really changed from the days when stock prices were ripped off ticker tapes.

"The whole purpose of investing for the long term is to make your money grow faster than inflation deteriorates it, " says Lewis Schiff, author of The Middle-Class Millionaire: The Rise of the New Rich and How They Are Changing America. "For those investors who take the long view and practice the simple arts of diversification, compound returns and dollar-cost averaging, and especially those who do so in tax-advantaged accounts, this growth is well within reach."

If you're not confident in your own investing skills, consider using low-cost target retirement funds offered by big mutual fund companies such as Fidelity, T. Rowe Price and Vanguard.

Five ways to reduce expenses and debts

1. Pay attention to after-tax performance.

"People need to remember that it's after-tax returns that matter," says Taylor Larimore, co-author of The Bogleheads' Guide to Investing. The after-tax performance of mutual funds can look shockingly different from their posted figures. During the decade that ended in 2007, for instance, Lipper estimated that fund investors lost anywhere from 17% to 44% of their returns to taxes.

Many retirees woefully underestimate their tax hit because they incorrectly assume that their tax burden will plummet once their paychecks dry up. But that's not always true, especially when retirees are forced to begin making mandatory withdrawals from their individual retirement accounts.

A great way to stanch the tax hemorrhaging is to invest in tax-efficient index and exchange traded funds.

2. Shrink credit card costs.

Obviously, carrying a credit card balance is a no-no, but if you haven't managed to erase your debt, there's a painless way to tackle the problem: Call your card issuer.

"If you have good credit — a 700 FICO score or better — you have a ton of leverage with credit card companies, which are scared and worried about their profit margins," observes Liz Pulliam Weston, author of Your Credit Score: How to Fix , Improve, and Protect the 3-Digit Number That Shapes Your Financial Future. Card issuers hate losing customers, so they're generally willing to negotiate. If you enjoy good credit, you should be able to capture a rate below 10%.

3. Track expenses.

No one's asking you to deny yourself a $4 latte, but if you're living beyond your means, it makes sense to root out the budget-busters. "You have to know where the money is going in order to know where to cut back," Weston says. Recording your purchases for a week can prove a tremendous help.

4. Be a frugal investor.

Investment fees are a natural enemy of retirement portfolios. But many investors are oblivious to this predator. Why? Because investors of mutual funds and annuities aren't billed for these expenses. Instead, the fees are automatically deducted.

You can see for yourself the damage that even average expenses can wreak on a mutual fund by using the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's mutual fund cost calculator at www.sec.gov/investor/tools.shtml. Try sticking with mutual funds that charge an annual expense ratio of 1% or less.

5. Think healthy.

Regardless of your age, take care of your health and you'll probably save money. "Eat right, exercise and care for your teeth, eyes and ears," says Henry Hebeler, the creator of AnalyzeNow.com, a financial website geared toward retirees.

"By the time we get to retirement age," Hebeler adds, "health care costs are the single largest item in most of our budgets, and early prevention of health problems pays huge financial dividends."

In Antigua: Vin and Bonnie Feudo sold their stuff so they could pursue their retirement dream.

They turned lives inside out to retire

Adviser helped them strive for exotic dream

By Lynn O'Shaughnessy
Special for USA TODAY

Before he retired, Vin Feudo could buy just about any toy he desired. For years, Feudo, a college professor, tooled around suburban Augusta, Ga., in a sports car, but his real passion was sports memorabilia. Among Feudo's prized possessions was a Red Sox jersey with Ted Williams' autograph and boxing gloves that Muhammad Ali had signed.

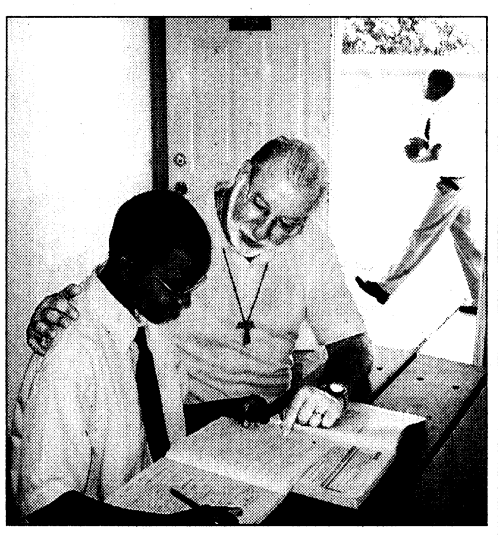
Like Feudo, 62, his wife, Bonnie, 58, an elementary school teacher, was no slouch as a shopper. She couldn't remember all the stuff that she had bought that ended up crammed into the closets of the couple's four-bedroom home.

"Money would come in," Vin recalled, "and we'd spend it."

Three years before retiring in 2005, the Feudos stopped their profligate spending. All they needed was motivation from an investment adviser, who encouraged their exotic retirement dream: to move to a pinprick on the globe, the Caribbean island of Antigua. But they weren't interested in settling into a leisure life of sunscreen and lounge chairs. Their goal was to teach impoverished kids.

Vin and Bonnie managed to pull it off. Today, the couple live happily in a double-wide trailer that has a flushable toilet — a luxury for most island residents — though no hot water.

To get there, the Feudos sold their house, their cars and nearly everything else they owned. On Mother's Day weekend in 2005, an auctioneer sold all the furniture that had been hauled onto the lawn, as well as nearly everything inside the house.



Life in retirement: Vin Feudo and Mickael Carmel work on class work at school on Antigua.

Hardly anything was spared, except for what the couple's four grown children claimed.

The auction started at 10 a.m. By 3 p.m., they say, you wouldn't have known that hundreds of people had traipsed through the house or even that it had been recently occupied. On the following Monday, the Feudos finalized the sale of their house and sold their cars.

Mustering the moxie

"What people could not understand — our parents, other family members and friends — was how could we give up our beautiful house," Vin says. "We were probably living the American dream as far as most people were concerned. But it wasn't really our dream."

The Feudos say they probably wouldn't have mustered the moxie to strike out in a radically different direction had they not consulted Will Rogers, a financial adviser in Augusta, who devised their retirement plan in 2002.

In reviewing the couple's retirement assets, Rogers told them they needed to save more aggressively, pay down debt and consolidate accounts that were scattered in various financial institutions.

It was during this time that they and Rogers discovered an overlooked pension plan.

"When we researched their past employment, it turned out Bonnie only needed to work a few more days in her former school district to be vested," Rogers recalls.

Living on $3,000 a month

From a nest egg that's more than $500,000, the couple are living on $3,000 a month. They decided to postpone taking their Social Security to max out their benefits later.

They're planning to return to the States in a few years when they're ready to slow down.

For now, they say, they've never been happier, getting up before dawn to begin their day teaching students at three Catholic schools. They typically don't collapse until 11 p.m.

"We learned you can live a larger life with simplicity, without all those thing that people aspire to have — a house, car, pool — we had all that," Bonnie says. "I couldn't tell you one thing I had in those closets, and I don't miss it."

Without pensions, people may need to work longer tirement account and keeps 40% of his investments in stocks, 40% in bonds and 20% in shorter-term bonds.)

That savings regimen would strike most people as extreme, especially for those who don't want to boycott Starbucks. But it doesn't have to be painful, insists Christine Fahlund, a T. Rowe Price senior financial planner.

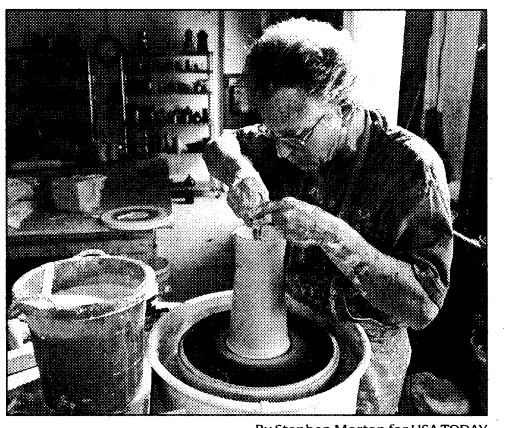
How come? Because even if a worker doesn't save a dollar more after passing up early retirement at age 62, she could retire with roughly the same 25% boost of income just by working till age 66 — just one year longer than the aggressive saver.

Many people, Fahlund explains, choose to retire early because they're eager to start having fun. Yet if they stay put in their jobs and stop contributing to 401(k) and IRA plans, they can use the extra cash they would have paid into their retirement accounts to enjoy more elaborate vacations and splurge in ways they probably thought weren't possible until retirement. (Get a copy of the research at the fund family's website, www.troweprice.com, by typing Price Report into its search engine. The study is discussed in the summer 2008 issue.)

The research is good news for late savers, and there are plenty of them. According to the Employee Benefit Research Institute, more than three out of four Americans 55 or older have saved less than $250,000.

An early start is always best

By contrast, many of today's successful retirees had begun stashing money away at a young age. In fact, experts say, retirees who were diligent savers at the start of their careers gave themselves a big cushion if they happened to stumble later. Many people count on earning their peak salaries during their 50s and early 60s. But catastrophes, such as



By Stephen Morton for USA TODAY

layoffs and debilitating illnesses, during these years can suddenly gut nest eggs.

If older Americans are forced to retire earlier than they'd planned, or are stuck in part-time work or underpaying jobs, they might no longer be able to afford to contribute to their retirement accounts. Still, this won't be so crippling if their nest egg has been growing exponentially for decades, thanks to the power of compounding.

An early start can also inoculate small-business owners whose dreams of cashing in when they sell their medical practice, travel agency, plumbing outfit or other enterprise never materialize.

Henry Hebeler, a retired Boeing executive and founder of AnalyzeNow.com, a financial website for retirees, knows several dentists who had sizable portions of their net worth tied up in the commercial buildings where they worked. Selling their practices and the property during the real estate slump has hurt them.

Small proprietors, Hebeler says, often don't enjoy many options when they're ready to retire and cash out: "It's not easy to sell some of these small businesses."

Successful retirees also tend to display financial prudence and sound judgment. White, the retired doctor, recalls that he never succumbed to the temptation of questionable dot-com or real estate investments that so many investors gobbled up.

"I've never been into things that seemed like gambling," says White, who has two-thirds of his retirement portfolio invested in diversified stock index funds.

White recalls younger colleagues in their 40s who were planning early retirements during the giddy late 1990s, when their tech portfolios seemed to be printing money. Their chatter fell silent once tech's golden goose turned into an albatross.

Instead, White began hearing people complain that they "had too much house." In his area, White says, that's code for, "I've lost my shirt, and now I'm going to have to sell the house."

Play it safe with stocks

Taylor Larimore, a moderator on the popular Bogleheads investment forum, which attracts lots of retirees, says he understands how easy it is for investors to be swept up in the market's mood swings. Larimore, a former IRS employee, used to publish a market-timing newsletter but ditched that strategy in the 1980s and embraced index funds instead.

Larimore sees plenty of retirees who continue to make foolhardy mistakes.

"The majority of new investors come to the forum seeking hot funds to beat the market," he says. "However, studies tell us that by simply buying and holding a total stock market index fund, we'll outperform about 80% of long-term investors with less risk and less taxes."

Stocks fall as bailout bliss wears off

From staff and wire reports

NEW YORK — Stocks tumbled Monday, giving back a big chunk of last week's massive rebound, as the initial euphoria about the $700 billion Wall Street bailout gave way to uncertainty.

The Dow Jones industrials fell 372.75 points to 11,015.69, a 3.3% drop that ate into the Dow's 779-point, 7.3% surge on Thursday and Friday. Broader indexes also sank, with the Standard & Poor's 500 index down 47.99 points, or 3.8%, to 1207.09. The Nasdaq composite lost 94.92 points, or 4.2%, to 2178.98.

The most intense action once again centered in financial-services stocks as traders try to sort out possible winners, losers and survivors in the Wall Street bailout. Monday, Capitol Hill lawmakers tried to work out details of who and what will be covered in the final rescue plan (story, 1B). Oil added to pressure on stocks as it jumped a record $16.37 to $120.92 a barrel (story, 1B).

Highlights: Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs each spent their first day trading after regulators approved the investment banks' transformation into traditional bank holding companies (story, 3B). Goldman fell $9.02, or 7%, to $120.78. Morgan, which also announced it would sell a stake to Japanese bank Mitsubishi UFJ Financial for as much as $8.5 billion, fell 12 cents to $27.09.

▶ American International Group added 87 cents, or 23%, to $4.72 the day it was booted from the Dow Jones industrial average following the insurance giant's $85 billion bailout by regulators. Kraft Foods, which replaced AIG in the Dow, fell $1.59, or 5%, to $33.09.

▶ Among other big financial firms, JPMorgan Chase lost $6.25, or 13%, to $40.80; Washington Mutual fell 92 cents, or 22%, to $3.33; and Wells Fargo fell $4.62, or 12%, to $35.18.

▶ But some of the hardest selling hit lesser-known companies that have exposure to the shaky financial and real estate sectors. Federal Agricultural Mortgage had the sharpest drop on the New York Stock Exchange, down $10.72, or 59%, to $7.40. Other big losers: mortgage insurance firm MGIC Investment, off $3.23, or 32%, to $6.98; home builder Standard Pacific, off $2, or 29%, to $4.85; and futures and options broker MF Global, down $2.35, or 27%, to $6.40.

▶ General Growth Properties fell $5.34, or 25%, to $16.08. The shopping mall owner resumed a slide it started last week on worries it will have trouble refinancing its debt. Monday the company said it would consider asset sales.

Emmy ratings sink to new low

The 60th annual Emmy Awards on Sunday night honored low-rated cable series and earned low ratings to match: ABC's three-hour broadcast averaged 12.2 million viewers, according to preliminary Nielsen estimates, slightly below the record low set in 1990, when Fox averaged 12.3 million. Last year's broadcast, then the second-lowest and also on Fox, earned 13 million.

Rock Hall of Fame nominees announced

Jeff Beck, Chic, Wanda Jackson, Little Anthony and the Imperials, Metallica, The Stooges, Run-DMC, War and Bobby Womack have been nominated for induction to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum. Five of the nine nominees will be announced in January as new members of the Hall of Fame and inducted April 4. For the first time since 1997, the ceremony will take place in Cleveland instead of New York, and tickets will be available to the public.

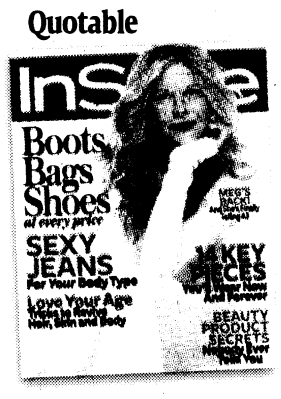
Il Divo promises a world tour

Il Divo's fifth CD, The Promise, arrives Nov. 18 (pre-order on Amazon.com at $14). The singing group, which has a new long-term deal with concert promoter Live Nation, will launch a world tour in February.

'Potter' read-a-thon kicks off today

Marcia Gay Harden, Kaycee Stroh and other stars will join the 10th anniversary celebration of the U.S. release of Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone at the Harry Potter Cover to Cover Day party today in New York. The read-a-thon starts at 8 a.m. at Scholastic headquarters. Fans may watch the event via a live webcast at scholastic.com/readharry. In other Potter news, the paperback edition of Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows ($14.99) arrives in July.

Quotable



"Dennis was not faithful to me for a long time, and that was very painful. I found out more about that once I was divorced."

Hootie's Rucker tops country chart

By Brian Mansfield
Special for USA TODAY

Before this week, only two black singers had topped the country singles charts: Ray Charles and Charley Pride.

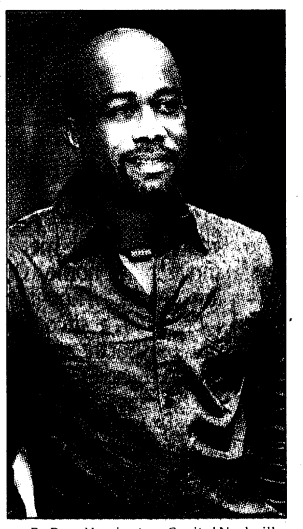
Now, Hootie & the Blowfish frontman Darius Rucker joins that exclusive list, as his Don't Think I Don't Think About It goes No. 1 on USA TODAY's country singles airplay chart.

Charles was the last black artist to have a No. 1 country single. His Seven Spanish Angels duet with Willie Nelson topped the charts in March 1985. Pride, a Country Music Hall of Famer, had more than two dozen No. 1 hits. His last, Night Games, reached the top slot 25 years ago this week.

"It's awesome, and I can't believe it's happening, but I didn't make the record for that stuff," says Rucker, 42, whose Learn to Live album is expected to land atop the country albums chart this week, as well. "I just wanted to make a record that people wanted to listen to."

Rucker grew up in South Carolina listening to a broad range of music, including country. He says demos of the hits he wrote for Hootie often had a country feel.

Hootie & the Blowfish sold 16 million copies of 1994 debut album Cracked Rear View. Hits like Hold My Hand and Let Her Cry, along with Sheryl Crow's early singles, often were credited with luring fans away from country stations and ending a long boom period for the country format. "Those two artists put the pop back into pop radio," says Capitol Nashville president/CEO Mike Dungan.



By Russ Harrington, Capitol Nashville

Rucker: Wants to bring listeners back to country.

Hear a clip of Don't Think at life.usatoday.com.

Rucker's history as part of a pop act could have proved a bigger stumbling block to country success than his race.

Jewel and Jessica Simpson have found only moderate radio success with recent country singles. And Bon Jovi, which had a chart-topper in Who Says You Can't Go Home with Sugarland singer Jennifer Nettles, faltered with its own country singles.

To move Don't Think up the charts, Rucker had to win over skeptical programmers.

When Rucker visited WQYK-FM in Tampa, program director Mike Culotta expected an aloof rock star, "somebody who would have entitlement." Instead, he says, "Darius engaged everybody."

"He's doing what he always wanted to do. There's no way listeners don't hear that."

Rucker says he'll continue to perform with Hootie, "but as far as gigs and touring, I'm concentrating on this."

At some point, Hootie will record another album, "and I'm down for that, if the timing's right. But I'm a country singer. That's what I am now."

Start spreading the news: America Ferrera is still fashion-challenged on Ugly Betty.

By Donna Freydkin
USA TODAY

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y. — The fashion industry, they say, is a dog-eat-dog kind of place. And on this sunny Friday afternoon, America Ferrera is in blissful agreement.

A litter of 8-week-old Samoyed puppies has invaded the Queens set of ABC's Ugly Betty, and no one's more ecstatic than the show's star.

Spotting one of the white furballs, Ferrera leaps off her chair, ditches her iced coffee and her BlackBerry, and rushes to pick up the pup she had staked out earlier and dubbed Buddha. Ferrera promptly asks a bystander to use her phone to snap her holding the dog, so she can send the picture to her boyfriend, Ryan Piers Williams.

Cover story

"He's so sweet," she coos, snuggling against the dog as he nuzzles her face. "You did a good job," she praises, of the pup's role in a cover shoot for the fictional Mode magazine.

Cuddly canines aside, Ugly Betty's stars hope the show has more bite in its third

'The Mentalist' is familiar but smartly done

New show The Mentalist
CBS, tonight, 9 ET/PT
★★★ out of four

TV preview
By Robert Bianco

When you're certain you've seen something before, it can pay to take a closer look.

At first glance, much is familiar in The Mentalist, a seeming mash-up of Psych, House and CSI that represents a CBS retreat to its procedural safe place. You've even seen the star on CBS, which has tried twice to make Simon Baker a household name, first with The Guardian, then the blessedly short-lived Smith.

You just haven't seen him like this, at least not on TV. Finally allowed to showcase the cad-you-can't-resist appeal he brought to The Devil Wears Prada, Baker emerges as the full-blown TV star CBS thought he'd be.

He's Patrick Jane, a former fake psychic who uses his powers of observation to solve crimes. His team of investigators is led by Teresa Lisbon (Robin Tunney, doing an admirable job of playing Cuddy to Baker's House).

If Teresa comes across as long-suffering but ultimately charmed, Baker's Jane gives her reason for both. Like House, Jane is smart, caustic, wounded, rude and a bit unhinged. And like many talented people, Jane enjoys showing off his talents, even if it means using them to torture co-workers, a well-cast team that includes Tim Kang, Amanda Righetti and Owain Yeoman.

The murder plot that creator Bruno Heller (Rome) has concocted for tonight is something of a mess. But as a pilot, The Mentalist works. It establishes the characters, gives us an idea of where the series is headed and does it all with some wit and restraint

CBS

Under the surface of crime: Simon Baker teams with Robin Tunney.

— from Jane's petulant excuse for being rude ("He irks me. He's irksome") to Heller's decision not to show us the horror that keeps Jane awake.

That horror, which stems from Jane's connection to a serial murderer, helps give the story depth by linking him to the pain of the victims. It also separates The Mentalist from Psych, though that show's producers can be excused if they don't think it's separation enough.

For all its virtues, The Mentalist is, in some ways, a step back for CBS, which tried and failed last year to break its procedural bonds. Still, TV is a business, and incompetent innovation, even well-intentioned, does little good for a network or its viewers. The Mentalist may be a copy, but it's a well-done copy sparked by an actor who has come into his own as a TV star.

It doesn't take a psychic to know that's something TV can always use.

It's an NYC homecoming, of sorts season, which premieres Thursday (8 p.m. ET/PT). The show has moved to the East Coast, shooting on location in Manhattan and in its Queens-based studio, ending up where it should have been all along, says executive producer Silvio Horta.

"We shot the pilot here, and I always wanted to shoot the show in New York, but it was too expensive," he says. A tax rebate lowered the costs, and suddenly New York seemed not just doable, but a must-do.

"We felt like it was the best thing for the show," he says. "There's a reality to shooting here that you don't get in L.A. It seems to ground the show. It's big and zany, and being out in the city gives it a level of realness."

The move has given the series, which went from 11.3 million viewers during its inaugural season to 9.3 million last season, some much-needed juice, say those involved. Being in Gotham, Ferrera says, has given Betty "an incredible boost in energy and production values. It opens the show up. This week, we shot in Coney Island and we shot at the heliport in South Street Seaport. We shot in Queens and Brooklyn. The skyline and the energy — you can't think of a more beautiful city to photograph."

Ferrera's Betty Suarez still works at Mode, but now harridan Wilhelmina Slater (Vanessa L. Williams) is in charge. Betty is more mature dealing with various romantic and family issues, but still as quirkily attired as ever, thanks to the stylings of costumer Patricia Field. At work, there's a power struggle between Wilhelmina and the former editor, Daniel Meade (Eric Mabius), who has been relegated to running a lad mag. Receptionist Amanda (Becki Newton) and Wilhelmina's assistant, Marc (Michael Urie), are still the resident gossips and snoops.

But it's Manhattan that has become Ugly Betty's most standout star.

"The city is a character on Ugly Betty, and L.A. is like the understudy," says Urie. "Downtown L.A. doesn't look like anything.

By Patrick Harbron, ABC

Set in New York: Michael Urie, America Ferrera and Becki Newton film an outdoor scene on location.

And green screen is limited. The Paramount back lot looks fake, like a sitcom. We've been working at a disadvantage. Artistically, I think the show is going to be so much better."

His sentiment is echoed by his colleagues, who all say they responded positively when ABC informed them the show was being transferred.

"They just kind of told me, 'You need to be there in two months.' It happened really fast. They told us in our last episode in our last season," says Ferrera, who lives downtown with her boyfriend and their two dogs. "We made it happen."

In fact, much of the Betty cast is from the East Coast, so in some ways, moving felt like a homecoming. Ferrera lived in New York before landing the Betty gig. Williams has a house in Westchester, and three of her four kids were going to school here already. Urie, a graduate of the Juilliard School, had lived in Queens and squeaked by on $1,000 a month before getting cast and heading west. Newton and her actor husband, Chris Diamantopoulos, own a place in the city.

News that the show was moving was "a little shocking," Newton says. "My husband is an actor, and we know circumstances can change. The second they said we were moving back, I couldn't be happier personally and for the sake of the show. My apartment was waiting for me, so I got to move back home. Our families are elated." Though in a twist worthy of a sitcom, Diamantopoulos shortly after was cast on an L.A.-based TV show.

Still, says Williams, "a lot of people had to scramble. Judith (Light) is still in the process of trying to find where she's going to go. America just moved into a temporary place until her place is finished in another year. ... In the grand scheme of things, I had the easiest move. It's easy to go back home."

Along with a new location comes a very different magazine. Williams' Wilhelmina has left her mark on Mode. "She has eradicated all signs of orange," Williams says. "It's sleek, black, white, chrome. The first episode everyone is wearing black because they're terrified to wear any color. Wilhelmina has a high standard and expects everyone to come up to that level. Whoever doesn't make the cut, she has no problem dismissing them. That hasn't changed."

But Wilhelmina shouldn't get too settled.

"She's ruling Mode, but things happen in the second episode," Horta says. "A lot happens very quickly."

Among the drama that will unfold this season: incidents with Botox, a mannequin, Lindsay Lohan and a food fight, a savage pigeon and Betty's new crush (a cool downtown musician played by Val Emmich).

The office power struggle, says Newton, affects some characters more than others. On the lower end of that scale is her Amanda, who's oblivious "because she's sitting at the reception desk."

But Amanda will face a personal crisis that "a lot of people can relate to," Newton shares. "We may see her working together with Betty and Marc. I love the interaction between them."

And, thanks to the new locale, we'll actually see her outside the office. "I don't know if we've ever seen Amanda and Marc on the street. People think she lives in the reception desk," says Newton.

"Now we have so much to draw from," she says. "Next week we're working in Central Park. My first day of shooting was in DUMBO (the neighborhood Down Under the Manhattan Bridge Overpass). Being here, the vibe is so authentic. Having the fashion to draw from — you see around you what you're trying to create."

Of course, shooting in Times Square or on Seventh Avenue instead of a secluded set means real people — and paparazzi — gawking and calling out your name when cameras are rolling.

"It's just an added thing," says Ferrera. "When you're in a close-up and they're right behind the camera clicking away, it's bizarre. But I guess if no one cared, that would be worse."

Being around regular people makes Urie and his co-stars feel "more inspired," says the actor, who lives on the Upper West Side, near his pal Newton. "The human experience is so much clearer here than in L.A. In L.A, the human experience is show business. Here, you can actually people-watch."

Ferrera gets her people-watching fix by taking the subway and walking around the city. And though she was born and raised in Los Angeles, she says that once she got over the shock of having just two months to pack up, she got excited.

"Just yesterday, after work, getting to watch the sunset down in Battery Park and having a view of the Statue of Liberty and kids playing on the lawn — there's such a sense of life."

Emmy winners or not, the stars got to party

After the Emmy trophies were all handed out Sunday evening, the night had only just begun. USA TODAY's Bill Keveney and Donna Freydkin and reporter Sharon Knolle hit the after-party scene in Los Angeles:

The Governors Ball

At the Los Angeles Convention center, diamonds were the theme to commemorate the Emmys' 60th anniversary. The menu included an entree of roasted New York strip steak and balsamic-glazed barbecue prawns.

▶ 30 Rock's Alec Baldwin talked about the show's best-comedy Emmy. "We're very, very happy because there are a lot of funny shows out there right now. ... For us to win has really, really special meaning." As for his acting Emmy? "That was a miracle."

▶ The Office's Jenna Fischer shared her opinion about her character's love life: "I think I'm the only person in America who's rooting for Jim and Pam maybe not to be together. ... I would really love to see Pam have an interest in her life outside of the relationship she's in."

▶ Desperate Housewives' Felicity Huffman and Nicollette Sheridan were dining together, and Sheridan offered an observation about the show skipping a few years. "Only on Desperate Housewives do we jump five years ahead and everybody looks 10 years younger." — B.K.

'TV Guide'

The vibe was romantically Asian at The Kress on Hollywood Boulevard, where waitresses donned short kimonos. On the menu? Sushi, of course.

▶ Lindsay Lohan, now a guest star on ABC's Ugly Betty, came in right when the doors opened at 8 p.m. "It looks very nice, welcoming," said Lohan, sitting with pal Samantha Ronson.

▶ Two and Half Men's Jon Cryer, who lost the supporting comedy actor trophy to Entourage's Jeremy Piven, wasn't shedding too many tears. He joked: "Someone else apparently won in my category. It's wrong in so many ways that it cast a pall over the rest of the evening." — D.F.

'ET'/'People' magazine

At the Walt Disney Concert Hall, the rooftop held a Francis Ford Coppola Wine lounge, and Billy Idol performed. The menu included seafood paella and a mashed-potato bar with all the trimmings, including truffle butter and Roquefort cheese.

▶ Mad Men creator Matt Weiner compared today to his show's setting, 1962, saying, "It's a very similar time, where we are as a country. We're in this moment of greatness and asking, 'Where are we going?' ... It's the feeling of, 'This is the greatest country in the world, but with all the greed and luxury — is there an emotional bankruptcy?' "

▶ The show's January Jones (Betty) said that in their modern clothes, "No one recognized any of us!"

▶ Jeff Probst, one of five Emmy hosts and winner for hosting Survivor, conceded that the multi-host format might not have been a winner: "I'm not sure they'd ask us back, and I'm pretty sure I'd say no even if they did." — S.K.

New projects are Pussycats' meow

Dolls draw big guns out for 'Domination'

By Elysa Gardner
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — The Pussycat Dolls may want to rule the world, but relax, ladies: They have no interest in stealing your men.

The group that rocketed to fame in 2005 by posing the musical question "Don't cha wish your girlfriend was hot like me?" is hardly a haven for homewreckers. Sitting in their record company offices, all glammed up for a photo shoot, the women pass around Mentos and describe themselves as good girls more interested in being role models for their core audience.

Music

That would be "girls between ages 3 and 15," says Jessica Sutta, 26. "Everyone says, 'Oh, a lot of guys must come to your concerts.' But from the start, it's been the girls — and the gay boys.

"When you have a huge gay following, that's when you know you've made it," she says. "Madonna has one. Cher has one."

The Dolls aren't resting on their laurels, though. Their sophomore album, out today, is titled Doll Domination and showcases A-list co-writers and producers, among them Timbaland and Sean Garrett.

Rodney Jerkins helmed the first single, When I Grow Up, already a top 10 hit and No. 1 dance track. The follow-up, Whatcha Think About That, features Missy Elliott.

"Our old fans are going to love it, and hopefully we'll get new fans," says lead singer Nicole Scherzinger, 30. "There are fun songs that everybody can dance to, and there are really emotional songs that people will be able to relate to."

Granted, the Pussycat Dolls — conceived as a burlesque troupe before being reformed as a band — didn't become a household name solely by virtue of musical prowess, as its members acknowledge.

"PCD is a brand, a powerhouse, a machine that's constantly expanding," says Ashley Roberts, 27. In addition to the CW reality show Pussycat Dolls Present: Girlicious, which just wrapped a season, there are lingerie and denim lines and a Pussycat Dolls lounge at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas. A second lounge is scheduled to open in West Hollywood this fall, and more are planned.

"You want to keep the train moving," says Roberts, employing a metaphor that several bandmates use to describe their momentum. "Albums (aren't selling) the way they used to, so we're trying to evolve and touch people in as many ways as we can."

If the Pussycat Dolls are professionally pragmatic, they're also creatively ambitious. Each member has a solo track on the deluxe edition of Domination, and all concede that they see the group partly as a launching pad and are keen to eventually pursue their own paths. Scherzinger's solo album was delayed after single Baby Love and other club and download tracks failed to produce sufficient buzz. Four songs originally intended for that project are on Domination.

"Knock on wood, it will come out next year," Scherzinger says. "I'm honored that my songs were put on the Dolls' album, and I feel like I'm building a foundation."

Sutta wants to record a dance album, while Roberts would love to act in romantic comedies. Melody Thornton, 24, will "focus on music," and Kimberly Wyatt, 26, is writing a book about her life and starting a website "where I'll put my blogs, poetry and art."

Rolling Stone.com deputy editor Caryn Ganz suspects that some Dolls may have an easier time forging individual careers than others. "Nicole is obviously the talent of the group," she says. "I'm sure there are little girls who follow them all, but I can't name the other girls. You knew who all the Spice Girls were."

In conversation, at least, the Dolls articulate a clearer, more serious-minded definition of girl power than their '90s predecessors did. Only two of them, Scherzinger and Roberts, have boyfriends, and Sutta, Wyatt and Thornton are eager to dispel the notion that all single women are dissatisfied. "To me, you're born into this world alone, and you leave it alone," says Thornton, who is "abstinent."

"I don't understand the concept of trying to find someone else to complete you."

Each Doll wants marriage and children down the line. "Once this is all done, I would love to settle down and have, like, 10 or 20 babies," Sutta says.

For now, Sutta is content to juggle her "four girlfriends — the (other) Pussycat Dolls," and feel maternal warmth for her young fans.

"When you see those little girls looking up at you, you know exactly why you're there — because you were that little girl at one point. I know I'm standing for them."

'Domination' by dance ditties

Pussycat Dolls, Doll Domination
★★½ SINGLE SERVINGS

If the Dolls are to succeed in Takin' Over the World, they're going to have to convince listeners that they're more than just fashionistas backed by an elite corps of producers and songwriters. Their second album boasts the same formula as 2005's PCD: sexy, sassy tunes purred over thumping dance beats. But they seem more interested in pushing their brand than pushing boundaries.

While Nicole Scherzinger hogs the lead vocals on the 16-track regular edition, Jessica Sutta, Melody Thornton, Kimberly Wyatt and Ashley Roberts each get showcase songs on a 21-track deluxe edition. If the idea is to broaden the franchise by spinning off solo acts, none are distinctive enough to make a compelling case for it. Scherzinger's own solo project, in the works for years, has had difficulty getting off the ground.

As a group, though, they can sell catchy dance ditties such as the Rodney Jerkins-produced When I Grow Up, which is getting airplay at top 40 radio. Timbaland, Missy Elliott, Polow Da Don, Snoop Dogg, R. Kelly and Sean Garrett are among the writers, producers and guests giving the project some bite.

Still, the Dolls are best served up a single at a time. Collectively, these come-hither, club-hopping, man-dissing tracks are a lot to swallow. — Steve Jones

Kings of Leon, Only by the Night
★★★½ SOLID NIGHT MOVES

Last year's Because of the Times found the Tennessee quartet aiming for a broader audience. On this fourth album, the Followill clan of brothers Caleb, Nathan and Jared and cousin Matthew push that agenda further with a leap into commercial arena rock. Fortunately, Night's sleeker lines don't smooth over the band's trademark raw, fiery defiance, still firmly enthroned in the Kings' slurry garage-bred Southern rock. Roguish charms remain throughout, and what's not to like in the stadium-big chorus and U2 guitars of Use Somebody? Night's flaws lie in banal lyrics, especially the politically flat Crawl, an impassioned rant with a blurred message. — Edna Gundersen

Demi Lovato, Don't Forget
★★½ TRYING TOO HARD

The 16-year-old leading lady of Disney's Camp Rock launches her solo career with a sizable assist from camp-rocking cohorts the Jonas Brothers, who co-wrote and co-produced six tracks. They provide an insidious, Go-Go's-like single in Get Back and a pretty ballad in The World Inside, but La La Land is far too frantic for its own good. As for Lovato, her vocals rock pleasantly but are far too mannered, cooing coyly one minute, shrilly over-emoting the next. She shows promise as a singer and writer, but less showing off would improve matters. — Ken Barnes

Jenny Lewis, Acid Tongue
★★½ THE REFLUX

Acid Tongue finds the Rilo Kiley singer lurching from such floaty vocal gems as Black Sand to the fruity See Fernando on a painfully uneven album that could have been pruned into an impressive EP. Lewis shines on the angry Godspeed, mournful Sing a Song for Them and Carpetbaggers, a winning country duet with Elvis Costello. Even with assists from Zooey Deschanel, M. Ward, Johnathan Rice and the Black Crowes' Chris Robinson, the outing founders on Lewis' overweening ambition and inability to recognize her limitations, as evident in the sizzle-free torch of Bad Man's World and bloated The Next Messiah. — Gundersen

>>Download: Black Sand, Godspeed, Carpetbaggers >>Consider: Trying My Best to Love You, Jack Killed Mom >>Skip: The Next Messiah, Bad Man's World, See Fernando

Jackson Browne, Time the Conqueror
★★½ STILL UNVANQUISHED

Don't be put off by that salt-and-pepper beard on the CD cover: Jackson's earthy baritone hasn't aged a day. The songs may have a wearied, sometimes wearying feel, but their mellow warmth and plaintive edges offer little sense of either resignation or renewal. And songs such as The Drums of War and Far From the Arms of Hunger prove Browne's social conscience is as sharp as ever. — Elysa Gardner

Jazmine Sullivan, Fearless
★★★ EMOTIONS IN MOTION

It's been a long time since a debut artist has brought as much drama as this 21-year-old Philadelphia singer/songwriter. The reggae-tinged single Need U Bad, produced by Missy Elliott, only scratches the surface of the edgy emotions Sullivan puts on display. She may fall dangerously in love with the wrong guy, but cross her and you're lucky to get away with only a busted windshield. — Steve Jones

Old Crow Medicine Show
Tennessee Pusher
★★★ METHEDRINE THEIR MADNESS

OCMS sings about methamphetamine the way earlier string bands sang about moonshine. Sure, they touch on other topics — sex and food, old lovers and Martin Luther King Jr. — but it's the meth and the drugs and the booze that fuel most of these songs and characters. And the band just lays it out, never really taking sides. Some tales are cautionary, some are celebratory, but others just zoom down the lost highway on nothing but nervous energy barely contained by the frailing banjos and flailing fiddles. — Brian Mansfield

>>Download: Alabama High-Test, Highway Halo, Methamphetamine >>Skip: Humdinger

Gavin Rossdale, Wanderlust
★½ TOPICAL JUNGLE

On his solo debut, the hubby of Gwen Stefani abandons the sexy grunge poses of '90s U.K. band Bush and jumps headlong into bombast and sentimentality, with scattered Eddie Vedder impersonations for nostalgia's sake. Rossdale can still growl and mope through a polished rocker; unfortunately, he attempts serious topical commentary, which almost makes the power ballads palatable. The same can't be said for the syrupy This Is Happiness. This is sappiness. — Gundersen

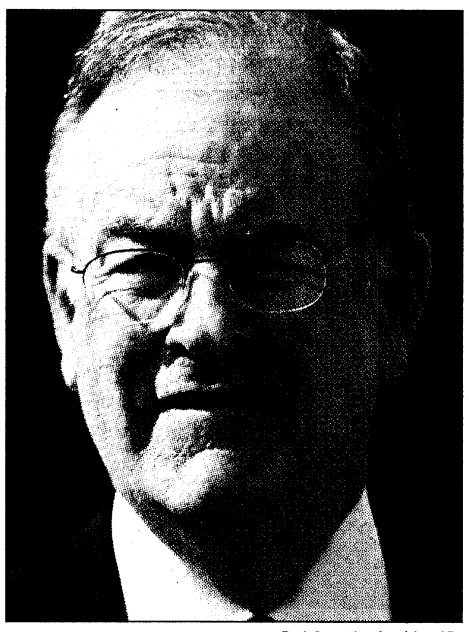
Bloviation factored into O'Reilly's youth



By J. Scott Applewhite, AP

Starting early: Fox News' Bill O'Reilly writes that he was brash even in third grade.

Cable talker calls himself traditional, not conservative

By Bob Minzesheimer
USA TODAY

After four best sellers, Bill O'Reilly asks: "So what is there left to say? I mean, come on, everybody knows O'Reilly is a champion bloviator, but is another book really necessary?"

Yes, he writes in A Bold Fresh Piece of Humanity (Doubleday, $26, on sale today). "I've never really explained how I got to be that showy bloviator."

With a nightly audience of about 4 million, Fox News' The O'Reilly Factor is cable TV's most popular news/talk show.

His memoir mixes what he calls traditional (rather than conservative) values and memories, most of them fond, of his youth and Catholic school education in the modest New York suburb of Levittown.

The title comes from a nun's description of O'Reilly as a brash, restless third-grader.

With a huge first printing (775,000 copies), it's more personal than his previous best sellers, including Culture Warrior (2006) and Who's Looking Out for You? (2003).

His publisher, Doubleday, reports 5 million copies of his four major best sellers are in print.

O'Reilly, 59, is nostalgic: "I liked my country better pre-Vietnam. It was more fun. The Aquarius deal was too confusing. I mean, John Lennon thought he was a walrus. What was that all about?"

Even as a college student, he writes, he never got drunk or did drugs: "I did not want to be under the influence of anything other than my own dubious personality. Ever."

He complains that the "crazed, dishonest ultraliberal media" brands him a conservative. He criticizes conservatives on several issues, including a failure to curtail illegal immigration.

He also attacks "left-wing loons," such as former Democratic presidential candidate John Edwards, who's a "pinhead."

And O'Reilly cites himself as proof there is a God:

"Next time you meet an atheist, tell him or her that you know a bold, fresh guy, a barbarian who was raised in a working-class home and retains the lessons he learned there.

"Then mention to that atheist that this guy is now watched and listened to, on a daily basis, by millions of people all over the world and, to boot, sells millions of books.

"Then, while the non-believer is digesting all that, ask him or her if they still don't believe there's a God!"

Melting pot: Dennis Lehane's Given Day captures some of America's most turbulent times. But the novel is more than a history lesson.

The Given Day

Review
By Carol Memmott

In 1919, a holding tank burst, sending a tidal wave of thick, sticky molasses through Boston's North End. It's said that the wave moved at 35 mph. It knocked down buildings, rolled over people and animals and even lifted a train off its tracks.

It's one of many fantastical real-life events that thread their way through Dennis Lehane's ambitious historical novel, The Given Day.

This may be Lehane's finest work. His understanding of history, mixed with his skill as a writer — he is best known for his searing crime novels, including Mystic River and Gone Baby Gone — brings alive a period that sounds like the early 21st century.

In post-World War I America, immigrants were widely feared, the working class was struggling, suspected terrorists were held without charges, and acts of terrorism were carried out on American soil.

America was a churning melting pot of racism, class struggles, inequality and political unrest.

Lehane captures these turbulent times, focusing mainly on the roiling atmosphere in Boston and the lead-up to the city's infamous police strike in 1919. He binds the era's historical fabric to real and imagined characters who represent all that was good and bad about this colorful time.

At the center is fictional Danny Coughlin, a Boston police officer who fans the flames of a growing push toward unionization. In 1919, unions were scarce; their proponents were seen as anarchists and "Reds."

The overworked police were paid below-poverty wages and had to buy their own uniforms and weapons.

Through Danny, Lehane carries the reader through the policemen's hardscrabble life and the short-lived strike. All the while, he recounts other significant events of the time: the plotting of anarchists, a deadly influenza epidemic, the fight for women's rights, the country's growing love affair with baseball and the formative years of the NAACP.

Famous Americans make appearances, including Babe Ruth, John (J. Edgar) Hoover, Calvin Coolidge and Emma Goldman.

But The Given Day is more than a history lesson. It's the story of the stubborn, proud Coughlin family, which is ripped apart by grudges and its members' explosive personalities.

It's also the story of Luther Laurence, an equally proud African American who is forced into ugly decisions so he can save himself and his family.

Through these men and their contemporaries, Lehane captures the essence of being American in a fast-changing society that eerily reflects our own.

Simple Plain White T's still look good

Plain White T's
Big Bad World
★★★ NEITHER BIG NOR BAD

Replicating an inescapable international hit such as Hey There Delilah isn't possible, so Plain White T's hardly even try on Big Bad World. Instead, Tom Higgenson and Co. use the benefits such a hit provides to play to their strengths as a hopelessly romantic power-pop band. On the unabashedly simple 1,2,3,4 and elsewhere, they've tightened their lyrics into near-perfect hooks. And the band fleshes out its arrangements more fully, adding a buoyant horn part to the bridge of Big Bad World and subtly employing strings on Someday.

But even if the band's success has drawn the attention of gold diggers such as the one in Natural Disaster, it hasn't gone to their heads, since they still favor simple but effectively clever songs inspired by The Beatles, the Beach Boys, Bo Diddley and the Bay City Rollers. — Brian Mansfield

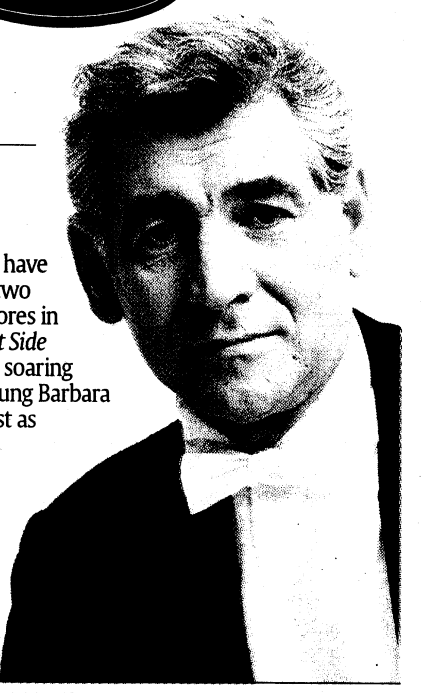
Make Our Garden Grow
Original Broadway cast, Candide



Leonard Bernstein, who would have turned 90 Oct. 14, introduced two of musical theater's greatest scores in 1956 and 1957. The latter, West Side Story, is better known; but this soaring number, featuring a radiant, young Barbara Cook, proves that Candide is just as sublime. — Elysa Gardner

USA TODAY music critic Elysa Gardner highlights 10 intriguing tracks for your downloading consideration.

Never Give You Up Raphael Saadiq	The lavishly gifted Saadiq goes back to the old school with one of its master teachers, Stevie Wonder.
Part of the List Ne-Yo	Ne-Yo's tenor is as searing as it is sweet on this bracing, blazing track from Year of the Gentleman.
Spiralling Keane	Coldplay who? This exuberant single kicks off the year's best British rock import, Perfect Symmetry, with a big bang.
U Want Me 2 Sarah McLachlan	McLachlan's deceptively breezy new single is a good showcase for her easy intensity and understated sensuality.
Lollipops and Roses Natalie Cole	Cole's Still Unforgettable includes a typically warm, elegant spin on this irresistible chestnut.
Wichita Lineman James Taylor	With his new collection of Covers, Taylor joins the list of great singers who have given Jimmy Webb's great song its due.
Sing Kristin Chenoweth	The singer/actress captures the childlike wonder of a song written for Big Bird (and immortalized by the Carpenters).
Pitter-Pat Erin McCarley	The rising troubadour sounds seductively haunted on this highlight from her debut, Love, Save the Empty (Oct. 28).
Somewhere The Temptations	The classic group's soulful 1967 recording is one of the better pop readings of this Bernstein favorite.
Lonely Town Bill Charlap Trio	Jazz pianist Charlap and colleagues mine the wistful melancholy of this other Bernstein goodie, from On the Town.

'Godfather' films finally restored to glory

Faded look is rubbed out

By Mike Snider
USA TODAY

The Godfather is remembered as a dark picture. But over the years it has become less dark than intended.

The opening scene of the best-picture Oscar winner is the ultimate example. Emerging from shadow is the face of Bonasera (Salvatore Corsitto), the father who asks Don Corleone (Marlon Brando) for a favor on the day of the Don's daughter's wedding.

But when director Francis Ford Coppola saw the 1972 film on a screen for its 25th anniversary, he thought, "Gee, the picture doesn't look like I remember it looking. This very, very beautiful photography of (cinematographer) Gordon Willis over the years had faded."

The movie is back to its inky finest — thanks to an assist from Steven Spielberg — on The Godfather: The Coppola Restoration, available today on a new five-disc DVD collection with all three Godfather films and two discs of bonus features, as well as a four-disc Blu-ray set ($73 and $120, respectively; each film on individual DVDs, $20).

Paramount Pictures Home Video

Second chance: The restaurant scene in which Michael (Al Pacino) shoots Sollozzo and McCluskey was filmed over two nights; some footage, which was incorrectly processed, looked washed-out. It's now fixed.

The Godfather was a victim of its own success. It earned $135 million in the USA, which in modern terms would make the film the No. 21 box-office earner of all time, according to boxoffice mojo.com.

To meet demand, Paramount quickly made large numbers of copies to ship to theaters. As a result, "the negative was ultimately destroyed through the practice of printing it so much," Coppola says from Buenos Aires while editing the film Tetro.

A decade ago, Paramount stored all its Godfather film elements in a cold vault to help preserve them until a full digital makeover was possible. "No matter how seriously the studio wished to solve the problems at that time, it would not be possible until digital technology provided the tools," says Robert Harris of The Film Preserve, which eventually handled the restoration of both The Godfather and The Godfather: Part II (1974).

Fast-forward to 2005: Coppola, looking to renew the preservation effort, wrote to Spielberg when DreamWorks was acquired by Paramount. Could Spielberg, who had been involved in restoring Lawrence of Arabia, spur on the project? It was an offer Spielberg could not refuse. He took the request to studio chairman Brad Grey, who set into motion the two-year process, overseen by Paramount post-production executive Marty Cohen and done at Warner Bros. Motion Picture Imaging in Burbank, Calif.

No single usable Godfather negative remained that was suitable as a source. In the end, Harris and the preservation team gathered a bunch of backup film elements and an Italian-subtitled print used as a color reference.

Over months, the restoration technicians carefully scanned the material and then began cleaning up the footage in its digital form, 4K files (meaning the video is made up of 4,000 lines of horizontal resolution, more than four times the quality of HDTV).

In addition to digitally removing scratches and repairing damage — more than 1,000 man-hours of dirt removal was performed on The Godfather — the technicians were able to fix errors that were more than three decades old. The restaurant scene in which Michael (Al Pacino) shoots Sollozzo (Al Lettieri) and Capt. McCluskey (Sterling Hayden) had been filmed over two nights. But one night's footage had been incorrectly processed, resulting in less detail and a washed-out look — an error that has been corrected digitally.

"Without those innovations, we would not have been able to move forward with the same results," Cohen says. "This is about rebuilding to some degree and putting new paint on the house."

Coppola and Willis consulted on every step of the restoration, which is detailed in a documentary on the new collections. Thanks to the restoration, Willis has regained his title "Prince of Darkness," Coppola says.

"So much of his art was to have the blackness of the black be so vividly black that everything else stood out from it," he says. "The restoration achieved that again."

Study: Physicians show little empathy

By Rita Rubin
USA TODAY

Doctors might be superb at diagnosing and treating diseases, but they could use a lesson or two about how to care for their patients' psyches, a study suggests. It found that cancer specialists and surgeons rarely responded with empathy to patients' concerns.

Researchers assessed transcripts of 20 audio recordings of consultations between men with lung cancer and surgeons or oncologists at a Veterans Affairs hospital. The transcripts revealed 384 opportunities for the doctors to show empathy — patient comments such as "this is overwhelming" and "I'm fighting it" — but they missed all but 39, researchers write in Tuesday's Archives of Internal Medicine.

"They really responded more to the concrete patient concerns and not so much to their existential fears about living and dying," says lead author Diane Morse, assistant professor of psychiatry and of medicine at the University of Rochester in New York. "I think doctors themselves can feel vulnerable about the issue of death and dying. It is a scary subject, especially if it's someone who has cancer and is close to their own age."

Previous studies have shown that patients whose doctors show empathy are more satisfied with their medical encounters, which leads to a better understanding of their condition and lower anxiety, Morse and her co-authors write.

"All people go to medical school because they want to help people," Morse says. Sometimes, she says, a simple "I know that this is really scary" can go a long way in making patients feel better.

How old? Rings may be billions of years old.

Age, size of Saturn's rings reconsidered

The rings of Saturn may be much older than previously thought, according to research being presented today at the European Planetary Science Congress in Muenster, Germany. The suspicion that the rings are billions of years old comes from observations by the orbiting Cassini spacecraft and theoretical calculations. Larry Esposito of the University of Colorado, a member of the Cassini team, says the findings suggest that it might be common for other planets, those orbiting distant stars, to have such rings. Because the rings appear so clean and bright, it was thought that they were much younger than Saturn, which is 4.5 billion years old. But the new calculations indicate they could be a lot older than they look.

Less radiation for breast cancers?

Some women with early breast cancer may safely condense radiation therapy from five weeks to three, says a study presented Monday at the American Society for Therapeutic Radiology and Oncology in Boston. Women who have lumpectomies typically get five weeks of radiation to kill any cancer cells that remain after surgery. Shorter treatments, however, are less expensive and more convenient. In this trial, doctors randomly assigned 1,234 women to get either three or five weeks of radiation to the affected breast. After 10 years, 6% to 7% had relapses in both groups. These results are similar to those of a British study presented last year. Some patients may not be eligible and are advised to talk to their doctors. — Liz Szabo

Genetic link: Jenna Stoller, a freshman at Cornell University, tested positive for a gene that puts her at a higher risk for breast and ovarian cancer.

Pondering cancer gene tests for kids

Women are going for breast cancer gene testing in record numbers, forcing more parents to face a tough question: Should we test the kids? Medical experts say little can be done to prevent or screen for breast or ovarian cancer before age 25, so the knowledge would only cause needless worry. But many people who have BRCA gene mutations, which increase the risk of some cancers, disagree. "I'm more comfortable knowing something about myself than not knowing," said Cornell University freshman Jenna Stoller, who tested positive earlier this year, shortly after her 18th birthday. Research shows there can be benefits to at least talking about testing and inherited cancer risks with teens. It led some to quit smoking, one study found. Myriad Genetics, based in Salt Lake City, sells the only BRCA gene test, which costs up to $3,000.

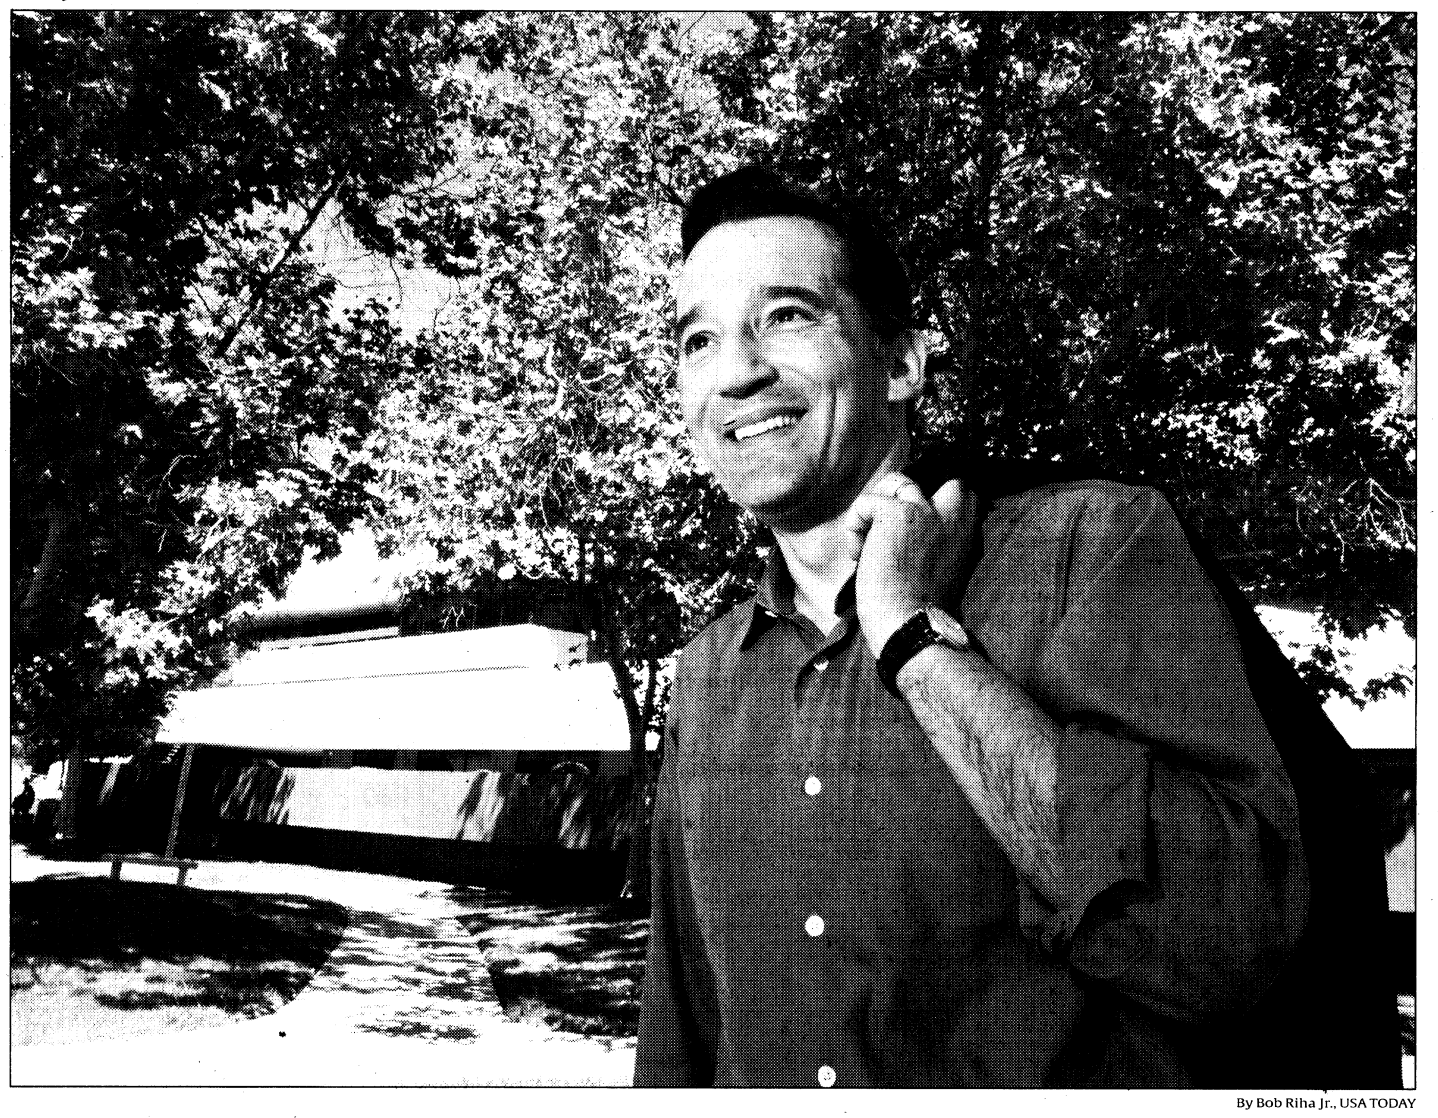
David Wolpe looks into his questioning heart to explain why faith ultimately matters



By Bob Riha Jr., USA TODAY

Reason to believe: Rabbi David Wolpe has written Why Faith Matters in response to recent best sellers by atheists and the rise of religious fanaticism.

An L.A. rabbi takes on atheists and fanatics alike

By Cathy Lynn Grossman
USA TODAY

LOS ANGELES — Who loves questions more than Rabbi David Wolpe?

That's a trick question. Wolpe has incontestable faith in questioning — about science, history, evil, tragedy, mystery, and most of all about God. They are "all questions that could open doors," he writes in his new book, Why Faith Matters.

And if "some questions had answers beyond what I could know," that would be all right with Wolpe, 50. He has encountered much of the tragedy and the mystery.

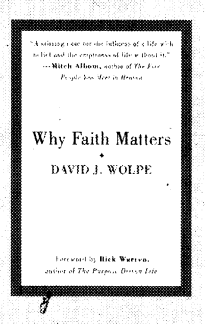
He has seen his mother struggle for 30 years with a stroke that left her unable to speak. His wife survived a rare cancer after the birth of their daughter. Then Wolpe developed a brain tumor. Four years after the tumor was removed, he was stricken with an unrelated, incurable form of lymphoma, which is now in remission.

In the past 11 years he has become a nationally known leader of Sinai Temple in Beverly Hills, a Conservative synagogue with 2,100 families. He has taught on theology and religion and science at the University of California-Los Angeles and studied Torah weekly with Kirk Douglas.

Before Sinai, he taught and wrote six other books. including a succinct handbook, Why Be Jewish?.

But he says that as he lay sidelined by chemotherapy, a question emerged: "Wow, I'm facing mortality. Is there something more I really want to say?"

Why Faith Matters is his answer. It addresses two great threats that have troubled him in recent years. The first is that the only choices on religion appeared to be cold denial or flaming fanaticism.



Excerpt

"... In our time, from this tiny corner of the world, a fraction of a fraction of the known universe, clever men deduce that there is no God. Others among us, perhaps less clever but no less clear, feel certain that there is, and that our lives are immeasurably better for believing it. ...

"... Faith is both an achievement and a gift: It is an achievement of seeking, questioning, yearning, reasoning, hoping, and it is a gift of God, who fashioned this world, whose goodness sustains it and whose teachings could save it if only we — believers and deniers both — would listen, would love."

— Why Faith Matters

He was "infuriated" by a wave of best-selling books by atheists, including Sam Harris, Christopher Hitchens and Richard Dawkins, all glibly sure that God does not exist and that faith is for fools, he says.

"What's so appalling is the idea that there is no mystery that won't yet be solved. That if we don't know it all yet, we will," Wolpe says.

The other is the threat of violent religious fundamentalism that turns belief into a scourge, he says.

"The tremendous good that is done by faith in this world is sometimes overlooked or belittled. But most of those who are able to stand up to tyranny and hatred feel that they do so because they are empowered by a force beyond themselves," he writes.

He wanted to offer what he has seen of faith as a rabbi who steps into "the privilege of every important moment" in people's lives.

"Faith is all about relationships: It's 85% of the day-to-day of life. Proving the Bible is not my point," he says. "To have questions is not the opposite of faith. Questions assume faith. They assume there is a God to ask 'Why?' "

Wolpe points out that the Bible is packed with great questions from the very first, when Adam and Eve are cowering in shame and God asks, "Where are you?"

Faith, he says, is how you answer, "Where am I?"

You triangulate, he says. You find your place "in relation to other people, to your soul and to the world. You can't find yourself alone because faith is not in solitude. It requires others. It requires you to think that your soul matters. And it is worthless if it doesn't help you make God's world better."

In Wolpe's book, of course, that does not require Jesus, although he cites Christians as well as Jews who have found in faith the ability to "grow in soul, to achieve goodness, to work for causes larger than existence alone."

His vision of prayer is "you, leaping up. It is the constant possibility you can experience God's presence. To feel God powerfully, always open and available to those who open themselves to him."

And what was Wolpe's own prayer, through the brain surgery, through cancer treatment?

"God, stay close," he says.

The book comes with a forward by evangelical powerhouse Rick Warren, pastor and author of The Purpose-Driven Life. He calls Wolpe "a great soul, a brilliant thinker, and a captivating writer."

Warren says he wrote the foreword because, "although the book is not about Jesus, Christian believers can learn a lot from this candid account," just as some Jews tell him they did from Warren's book.

This fall Wolpe will take on the atheist arguments, debating Christopher Hitchens in New York in October and California in November.

Why Faith Matters is timed to Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, which begins at sunset Monday. The holiday ushers in the 10 Days of Awe, the period when Jews examine the past year and pray for a good year to come, leading to Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

The hardest question of these holidays is not, "How can I be better than last year?" says Wolpe, but rather, "What will I be like six months from now?"

Dietary supplements cause 600 'adverse events'

First data since reporting law

By A.J. Perez
USA TODAY

Serious side effects from the use of food supplements resulted in 604 "adverse-event" reports — a list that includes at least five deaths — through the first six months that such accounts have been required by law.

The Office of Nutritional Products, Labeling and Dietary Supplements in the Food and Drug Administration's Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition acknowledged receiving 368 mandatory reports from supplement manufacturers and 236 reports from consumers or health care professionals.

An adverse event can be anything from a concern that a supplement isn't working to a serious illness that follows consumption. FDA spokesman Michael Herndon said five deaths and 85 hospitalizations were reported through April 15, the most current numbers available. "Some of these deaths were likely due to underlying medical conditions," he says.

The FDA did not identify the supplements linked to the adverse events. The agency defines dietary supplements as including vitamins, minerals, amino acids, herbs or botanicals, and enzyme supplements.

Dietary supplements have long been a controversial topic, with consumer advocates critical of the fact that, unlike with drugs, supplement makers don't have to prove their products are safe or effective before they reach the market.

Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., sponsored legislation in 2006 to require supplement manufacturers to inform the FDA when there are adverse events. The bill took effect Jan. 1.

"Five years ago, the dietary supplement industry claimed that they had no reports of health problems — zero — related to their products," Durbin said in an e-mail.

"Thanks in part to our legislation, we today know there are hundreds of serious problems each year, many involving hospitalization and death," he says.

If the trend continues, there will be fewer than the 960 adverse-event reports the FDA had estimated it would receive each year.

"These numbers don't alarm us," says Steve Mister, president and chief executive of the supplement trade group Council for Responsible Nutrition. "We thought they would be much less than the FDA estimate."

The legislation pushed by Durbin came in the wake of several deaths related to the now-banned supplement ephedra. The weight-loss and energy enhancer was implicated in the deaths of Minnesota Vikings offensive lineman Korey Stringer in 2001 and Baltimore Orioles pitcher Steve Bechler in 2003.

"There's still no assurance that supplements are safe," says Peter Lurie, deputy director of Public Citizen's Health Research Group. "Many people are under the impression that the FDA has approved supplements, but that's not the case. There's really no assurance that what manufacturers say is in the product is really in there."

Adverse-event reporting has been required for prescription and some non-prescription drugs for years. The FDA took in 482,154 adverse-event reports for prescription drugs last year.

Critic's Corner

CBS

Mark Harmon: NCIS agent Gibbs.

▶ House (Fox, tonight, 8 ET/PT) continues on its early season roll with another excellent episode, as the team tries to find out what has gone wrong with an organ donation. But House, of course, is more interested in finding out about Wilson — so much so that he has hired a private eye, amusingly played by Michael Weston.

▶ As fans know, there has been a personnel shakeup at NCIS (CBS, 8 ET/PT), leaving Gibbs without his old team. He may not get them back in tonight's premiere, but he finds out why they were taken away.

▶ Here's a special no film fan will want to miss. PBS' American Masters series premieres You Must Remember This: The Warner Bros. Story (9 ET/PT, times may vary), a five-hour, three-night studio history. Clint Eastwood narrates.

▶ The staff-change train rolls along with Without a Trace (CBS, 10 ET/PT), as Steven Weber begins a guest-star stint as the new head of the Missing Persons Squad. Which is unlikely to sit well with the old head, played as always by the terrific Anthony LaPaglia.

▶ Over at Law & Order: SVU (NBC, 10 ET/PT), the big draw is a guest. Sara Gilbert helps open the show's season as the victim in an unsolved rape case that Benson (Mariska Hargitay) decides to reopen.

Doubts shadow bailout

Plan draws anger, skepticism from both parties

A call for action

"You worry about taxpayers being on the hook? Guess what: They're already on the hook."

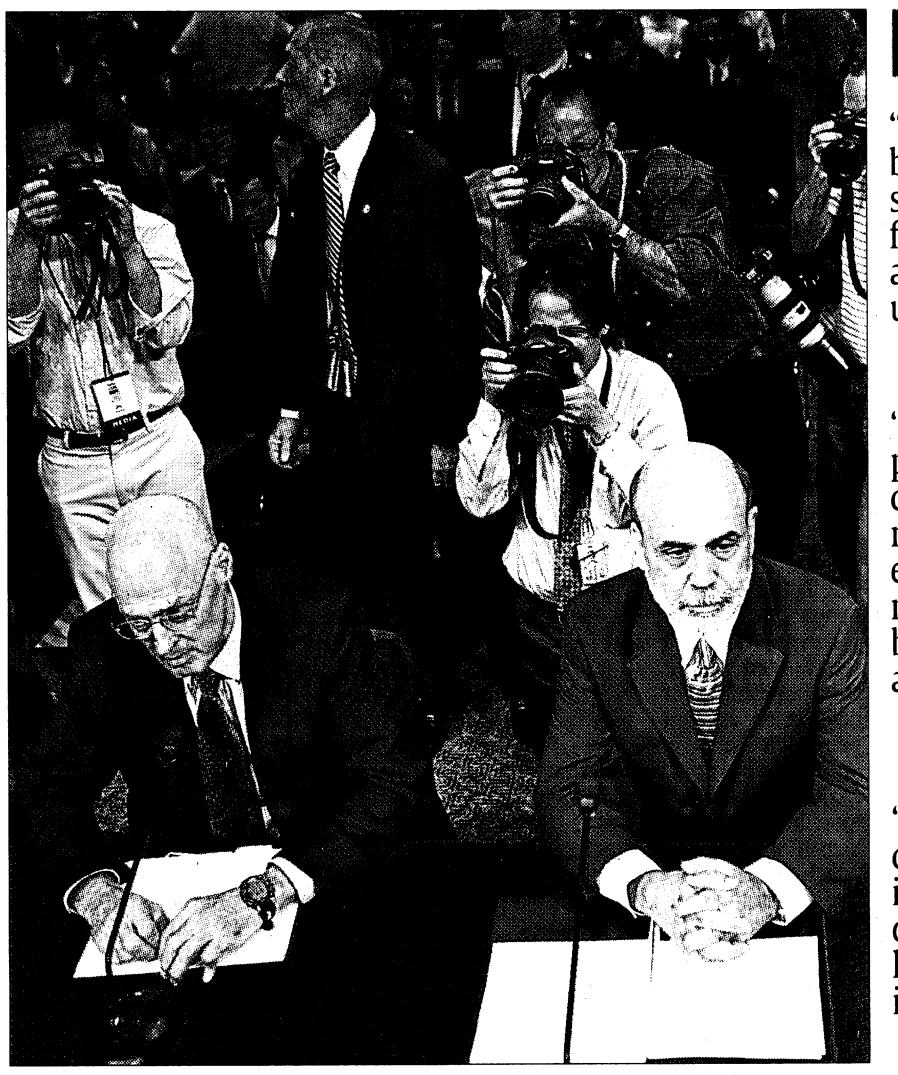
— Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson

"I share the outrage that people have. It's embarrassing to look at this, and I think it's embarrassing to the United States of America."

— Paulson

"The financial markets are in quite fragile condition, and I think, absent a plan, they will get worse."

— Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke



Tough sell: Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, left, and Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke appear before Congress at a hearing Tuesday about the $700 billion financial bailout plan.

A cool response

"This massive bailout is not a solution. It is financial socialism and it's un-American."

— Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky.

"After reading this proposal, I can only conclude that it is not just our economy that is at risk, Mr. Secretary, but our Constitution as well."

— Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., to Paulson

"Just because God created the world in seven days doesn't mean we have to pass this bill in seven days."

— Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas

WASHINGTON — From the start of Tuesday's hearing on Capitol Hill, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke's urgent call for an unprecedented federal bailout of the U.S. financial system was met by skepticism, criticism and even anger among senators in both parties.

Before long, it was clear that the sweeping proposal introduced late last week by Paulson, Bernanke and Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Christopher Cox to try to ward off a devastating credit crunch will have to be altered — perhaps significantly — to win Congress' approval.

Cover story

During the contentious hearing before the Senate Banking Committee, Paulson implored lawmakers to swiftly approve the White House's blueprint that would give the Treasury Department broad new powers to buy up troubled mortgage-backed securities and other assets. He urged senators to move "quickly and cleanly, and avoid slowing it down with other provisions that are unrelated or don't have broad support."

Paulson called the plan the "single most-effective" way to help taxpayers and the economy.

But skeptical lawmakers — who have been bombarded with phone calls and e-mails from constituents outraged by the notion of giving Wall Street a $700 billion bailout to help make up for careless lending and investment practices — were not prepared to sup-

Bernanke warns of bleak results if Congress balks

Fed chief calls crisis 'unique and new'

By Sue Kirchhoff and Barbara Hagenbaugh
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke warned Tuesday that the economy could plunge into a prolonged downturn if Congress doesn't pass a $700 billion plan to rescue the financial sector.

"If the credit markets are not functioning ... jobs will be lost, the unemployment rate will rise, more houses will be foreclosed upon, (growth) will contract, the economy will just not be able to recover in a normal, healthy way," a wan-looking Bernanke, an expert on the Great Depression, told the Senate Banking Committee during a packed, sometimes tense hearing.

Bernanke and Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson were among the government leaders urging action by a skeptical Congress at the hearing on the Bush administration's bailout plan. Meanwhile, the Dow Jones industrials fell 162 points, on top of a 373-point drop Monday.

But shares of Wall Street giant Goldman Sachs rose 8% after regular trading hours on the news that legendary investor Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway has invested $5 billion.

Tuesday evening, the Associated Press reported that the FBI is investigating four more companies at the heart of the financial collapse, bringing to 26 the number of firms under investigation in the past year. Mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, insurer American International Group and Lehman Bros. and those who ran them are being investigated, according to law enforcement officials who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity because the investigations are ongoing. USA TODAY couldn't confirm the report.

In possibly the darkest economic assessment from him since he became chairman 2½ years ago, Bernanke told lawmakers Tuesday that failure to approve the legislation would have "significant adverse consequences for the average person." He said the crisis is unlike what the USA has seen at any time in history.

Paulson warned of "a continuing series of financial institution failures and frozen credit markets that threaten American families' financial well-being, the viability of businesses ... and the very health of our economy."

Government to secure potential 'dirty bomb' source

Plan tamper proofs hospital equipment

By Mimi Hall
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — A new government program aims to make it more difficult for terrorists to steal dangerous radioactive material from the nation's hospitals and medical research labs to make "dirty bombs."

About 1,300 machines in medical facilities will be fitted with new security measures by the end of next year that will make it much harder for anyone to steal the cesium chloride inside, officials at the Homeland Security and Energy departments said. The machines use the material to irradiate blood, primarily for cancer patients.

The cesium contained in just one machine would be enough for a terrorist to make a radioactive bomb, said Vayl Oxford, head of Homeland Security's Domestic Nuclear Detection Office. The new program "takes a potential threat off the table," he said.

Although there is no immediate or credible threat, government security officials have long been concerned that terrorists will set off dirty bombs in the nation's cities. A dirty bomb would not kill many people, but it would wreak havoc and contaminate streets and buildings.

Concerns about hospital security took on new urgency last year when government "red teams" were able to break into irradiation machines in as little as two minutes, Oxford said. The retrofitted machines "will help keep potentially dangerous material safe and secure from theft or misuse," said Thomas D'Agostino of the Energy Department's National Nuclear Security Administration. That agency is splitting the cost — up to $3,000 per machine — with Homeland Security.

Rep. Jim Langevin, D-R.I., of the House Homeland Security Committee, praised the effort. "A handful of radioactive substances have legitimate medical and commercial uses ... and the most effective way for terrorists to get their hands on this type of material is to steal it."

The work began this month at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City. Radiation safety officer Jean St. Germain says the center's machine is kept in its blood bank. It is used to irradiate blood for patients with weak immune systems.

"It's not as if we can stop using this device," St. Germain says.

New York Police Department counterterrorism chief Richard Falkenrath called the retrofits "very basic and relatively cheap" and said they are "long overdue."

Radioactive retrofit

The federal government's plan to better secure dangerous radioactive material used at hospitals and in medical research labs will:

- Require retrofitting 1,300 blood irradiation machines nationwide.
- Cost up to $3,000 per machine.
- Be done by the Homeland Security and Energy departments.

Congress wants to know what's in the bailout plan for taxpayers port a three-page plan that many consider too vague.

Their questions hammered at Paulson and Bernanke about the proposed expansion of Treasury's powers while shielding it from legal challenges. Lawmakers also blasted what they said was the plan's failure to strengthen oversight of Wall Street and punish executives who have profited from risky mortgages. And they demanded to know why the plan doesn't guarantee that taxpayers would share in possible profits from mortgage bonds and other assets that would be acquired under the bailout program.

"This proposal is stunning and unprecedented in its scope and lack of detail," said Senate Banking Committee Chairman Chris Dodd, D-Conn. Later, Dodd was uncertain about the chances for swift congressional action on the plan, which the Bush administration wants passed by the end of the week.

"Congress is not a rubber stamp," said Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala. "They're talking about a historic government intervention in the private sector, and they'd prefer the Congress not to ask questions."

Financial markets also concluded the bill had become a tougher sell in Washington. After starting the day in positive territory, stocks tumbled Tuesday as investors became concerned that lawmakers would not pass the bill. The Dow Jones industrial average ended the day down 162 points at 10,854.

Investors are "quite concerned that this is going to stall," says Conrad DeQuadros, senior economist at consulting firm RDQ Economics.

The sense that the White House proposal was an evolving document was evident before the hearing, as Paulson agreed to Democrats' call for provisions in the plan that would reach out to homeowners in danger of foreclosure, and to set up some type of oversight body that would examine the assets the Treasury Department would buy and sell under the program.

The key issues to be debated in the coming days include:

Testimony: A demonstrator holds up a sign as Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, left, and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke testify Tuesday before the Senate Banking Committee about the $700 billion rescue plan for Wall Street.

▸ Executive pay. Democrats and many Republicans are demanding limits on compensation for executives of companies that take part in the bailout. Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., says some view limiting executive compensation as a way to make the bailout more palatable.

Without it, "This will be a very hard sell to the American people," he says.

Bernanke and Paulson warned Tuesday that imposing mandates such as compensation limits on companies could make executives more hesitant to participate in any bailout program, which could make it far less effective. Executives at companies that need to sell their assets are taking a financial hit, Paulson assured lawmakers.

"When we have needed to come in and do something to save a failing institution, there have been very harsh consequences," Paulson said.

Sen. Bob Casey, D-Pa., said the administration's continued resistance to limits on executive pay "will be a huge stumbling block" if it's not dropped.

Bloomberg News

Murtha: "I try not to be fooled."

▸ Accountability. Lawmakers are uncomfortable giving Paulson — and his successor — the sweeping authority the plan seeks. The plan shields the Treasury Department from legal challenges and does not require any reporting to Congress until three months after the program begins. Treasury, which has proposed a two-year program, would hire Wall Street firms to manage asset purchases.

"It's unprecedented, unfettered power," said Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md. "The intrinsic nature of our Constitution ... was always checks and balances."

Paulson told senators he is not opposed to oversight. He said the administration plan presents a simple outline because he thought it would have been "presumptuous" to come up with an oversight mechanism, which he called Congress' role.

"We need oversight," he said. "We need transparency. I want it. We all want it."

Lawmakers have been discussing a variety of ways to oversee the program, including the possibility of having the Congressional Budget Office or Congress' Government Accountability Office oversee Treasury's work.

▸ Taxpayer protection. Lawmakers from both parties said that to sell voters on the legislation, Washington needs to include greater assurances that Wall Street firms will take a hit and that taxpayers will get back whatever profits the Treasury gleans from the sale of assets.

"Right now, Main Street hasn't seen what's in it for them," said Rep. Tom Reynolds, R-N.Y.

Bernanke pointed out that when the Fed provided an $85 billion loan to insurance giant American International Group, it made a claim on nearly 80% of AIG stock. But he said the proposed bailout program is a different matter. Companies whose troubled securities would be bought are not necessarily failing.

Bernanke said he does not want to threaten firms that are still operating and have reasonable business prospects because that could persuade them not to participate in the program.

Paulson had a stark reply to questions about taxpayers being on the financial hook for a system plagued by risky credit investments:

"Guess what: They're already on the hook. They got put on the hook by the system we had ... the system Congress, administrations ... let exist. If this system is not stabilized, they're going to bear the costs."

▸ Distressed homeowners. Several lawmakers say the White House's bill does too much to help Wall Street and not enough to directly help Americans in danger of losing their homes. Senators from both parties demanded changes, such as allowing bankruptcy judges to reduce the value of mortgages.

Bernanke pointed to a series of previous Fed efforts and recent legislation passed by Congress to try to get banks to write down mortgage loans. The recent takeover of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac should also help, he said.

Paulson said the best thing to do is to make sure that the capital markets are open and running well.

Congress has two hearings on the plan scheduled for today.

Further complicating efforts at finding a middle ground is deep-seated distrust between the political parties — fueled by election-year politics — and between the Democrat-led Congress and the Republican White House.

Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., says lawmakers who believe the Bush administration exaggerated the threat from Iraq before the war now wonder whether the dire warnings of a financial apocalypse are not similarly overblown. "For a guy who has been around a long time, I try not to be fooled more than once or twice," the 36-year House veteran says.

Murtha says mail and phone calls from his district are running 90% against the plan. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., has received 12,000 calls and e-mails from constituents, nearly all opposed to the Treasury proposal.

A poll by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press that ended Monday night found 57% of Americans said the White House proposal is the "right thing" to do, while 30% were opposed to it.

Republicans were more likely than Democrats to favor the plan. Pew said Americans' interest in the economy is at its highest in Pew's nearly 20 years of polling.

Lawmakers aren't coming out against the bill in large numbers, aware of the potential political consequences of inaction. But few are ready to climb aboard.

"The longer it sits — it doesn't get improved — it gets complicated," says Reynolds, the New York Republican. " Each day that passes is that many days closer to an election."

Among the upset voters is Carol McCulloch, who owns a housing appraisal business in Battle Creek, Mich. She says that on Election Day, she will consider how the measure took shape and how lawmakers voted.

"I don't think we can rush. Something of that magnitude — giving the power to one person — is insane," she says. "I would hope that they keep in mind the average Joe on Main Street, because they have been hurt badly and have been ignored while they worry about the fat cats."

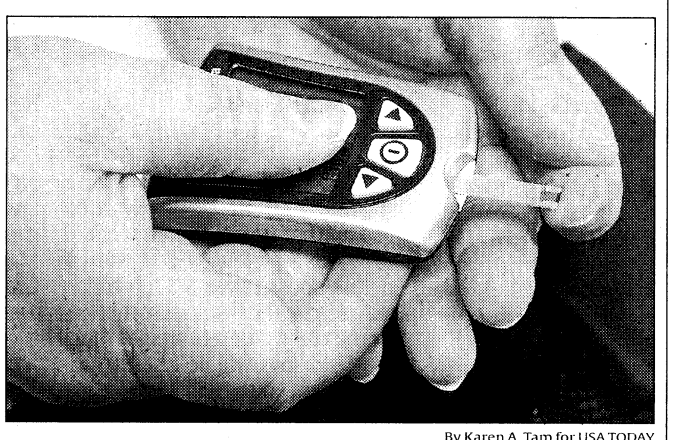
Report: Medicare spending millions on suspicious claims

Among the items: Walkers given to paraplegics

By Julie Appleby
USA TODAY



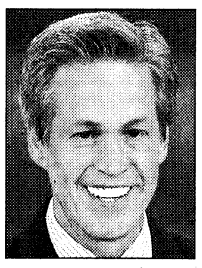
By Karen A. Tam for USA TODAY

Diabetes supplies in demand: Medical suppliers submitted hundreds of thousands of claims for testing strips — used in glucose meters like this one — for those whose diagnosis codes didn't warrant it.

Medicare pays millions each year for medical supplies such as walkers and glucose test strips for patients who don't appear to need them, congressional investigators say in a report out today.

Investigators reviewed bills submitted by medical suppliers from January 2001 to December 2006 for 18 different items and found questionable claims totaling more than $1 billion.

Those included walkers for patients identified by special "diagnosis codes" as having sinus congestion, paraplegia or shoulder injuries. There also were hundreds of thousands of claims for diabetes-related glucose test strips for patients whose diagnosis codes listed them as having breathing problems, bubonic plague, leprosy or impotence.



USA TODAY

Coleman: Top Republican on panel.

Investigators from the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations also looked at medical equipment claims submitted from 1995 to 2006. They found $4.8 billion in Medicare payments for bills submitted with diagnosis codes that were invalid or blank. Some used smiley faces or exclamation points instead of the proper coding, but the bills were still paid.

"Since when did doctors start prescribing blood-glucose test strips for the bubonic plague? It seems like a no-brainer that Medicare should check the diagnosis before paying for expensive medical equipment," says Sen. Norm Coleman of Minnesota, the subcommittee's top Republican.

Medicare has required diagnosis codes that designate patients' ailments on billing data from medical suppliers since 2003. The report says Medicare should pay more attention to those as a tool to spot potential fraud. Failing to do so leaves "billions of taxpayers' money susceptible to fraud, waste and abuse," the report says.

Medicare officials say they do consider the diagnosis codes.

"This report highlights a vulnerability that we addressed five years ago," says Peter Ashkenaz, spokesman for the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS).

"CMS has always used clinical information, including diagnosis codes, to target certain vulnerable and high-risk claims. Since 2003, CMS has validated diagnosis codes on all (durable medical equipment) claims," Ashkenaz says.

The Senate investigation showed spending on claims paid with invalid codes fell dramatically after 2003 but still topped $23 million from 2004 to 2006.

Investigators did not calculate post-2003 claims that used valid but questionable diagnosis codes, except for blood-glucose test strips. They found that use of questionable codes did not drop for the strips after 2003 — and more than doubled for one diagnosis: incontinence.

The report is the third in a series on medical equipment from the subcommittee. A report released in July estimated the agency paid $77 million to $92 million over seven years to purported suppliers who used the Medicare ID numbers of deceased doctors.

Its latest report comes amid increased scrutiny and efforts to stop fraud. Last week, federal agents arrested 18 Los Angeles-area residents on charges of conspiring to commit fraud by falsely billing Medicare.

The Government Accountability Office estimates that Medicare made improper payments based on mistakes, abuse or fraud totaling about $700 million for medical supplies in 2007 alone. That represents about 7.5% of all payments made for medical equipment in the program.

Launch slip possible for Hubble mission

The astronauts assigned to fix the Hubble Space Telescope lost so much training time to Hurricane Ike that their mission may have to be delayed, crew commander Scott Altman said Tuesday.

Crews do most of their training at Houston's Johnson Space Center, which was closed for more than a week because of the storm. The crew had been scheduled to launch on space shuttle Atlantis Oct. 10 to replace the telescope's aging batteries and pointing devices, among other work. Crewmembers' houses were damaged, Altman said, but "the good news is, all of us are standing here." A launch date will be set next week. — Traci Watson

New fertilizer may foil bombmakers

Honeywell said Tuesday that it has developed a nitrogen-based fertilizer that is difficult to ignite. The innovation may reduce criminals' ability to make explosives used in major terrorist attacks such as the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing, which killed 168.

The company said its fertilizer combines ammonium sulfate with ammonium nitrate, providing the nitrogen and sulfur needed for plant nutrition but making it largely useless as a fuel for explosives.

Ellis Island strives to tell whole tale

New center will highlight other eras in immigration

By Charisse Jones
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — For 62 years, millions of immigrants passed through the corridors of Ellis Island on their way to becoming Americans. Their journeys, however, are only part of the story.

What of those immigrants who came before and those who continue to come long after? What of the Africans who came not of their own free will and the Mexicans who through annexation suddenly found themselves Americans?

A center on Ellis Island soon will tell those stories, too.

Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne and other officials are scheduled to unveil plans today for The Peopling of America Center. It's an expansion of Ellis Island's Immigration Museum that will chronicle the years before the historic portal opened in 1892 and the evolving face of immigration since it closed in 1954. The center is scheduled to open in 2011.

"There were other ports of entry," says Stephen A. Briganti, president of The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, "but there's none as symbolic as Ellis Island, so we think it's important we tell the story of everybody, even the many people who didn't come through Ellis Island."

The new $20 million center will illuminate other eras in immigration history, such as the arrival in the mid-1800s of more than 4 million Irish, Germans and Scandinavians, the nation's first mass immigration, says Alan Kraut, a history professor at American University in Washington, D.C. The National Park Service has contributed some of the funds; the rest will come from private donations.

"It's very important that we tell in the fullest way possible the story of the peopling of America, and that's much larger than the Ellis Island experience," says Kraut, chairman of the foundation's history advisory committee. "We're talking about slaves who were part of a forced migration, Mexicans who were literally engulfed by the United States; the earliest arrivals, of course, Native Americans. ... Then in the later period, especially since 1945, we're looking at waves of Southeast Asians (and) Latinos."

About 2 million people visit Ellis Island annually, and some have said that they did not see a reflection of their own family's experience there, Briganti says.

Salju Thomas, 28, who came to the USA from India when he was 4, is one of a dozen people who will become a U.S. citizen during today's presentation. A former Marine who is a student at Hofstra University on Long Island, he said it's important that the museum recognize newer immigrants. "America is changing," he said, and the museum "definitely needs to reflect that."

In the new center, maps, videos and interactive exhibits will help visitors understand the challenges immigrants faced as they traveled to and reshaped a new land.

Those who are creating the center say it won't shy away from the topic of illegal immigration. "That's part of the story," Briganti says. "There's always been controversy ... about who was being let in, and that continues today."

Ultimately, though, the center will honor the nation's diversity, Kempthorne says.

A look back in time

More than 12 million immigrants passed through Ellis Island upon entering the USA, according to the National Park Service. Paperwork for 5 million more was processed there. Key dates:

1892 — The first Ellis Island Immigration Station officially opens. The first immigrant to pass through is Annie Moore, 15, whom The New York Times describes as a "rosy-cheeked Irish girl" from County Cork.

1907 — Peak year; 1,004,756 immigrants are processed.

1924 — The Immigration Act of 1924 marks the end of mass immigration to America. Ellis Island's main function changes from that of an immigrant processing station to a staging ground for detention and deportation of people who had entered the USA illegally. The buildings at Ellis Island begin to fall into disrepair.

1954 — Ellis Island and its 33 buildings are closed.

1984 — The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, partnering with the National Park Service, raises funds for the restoration of the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island.

1990 — The Ellis Island Immigration Museum opens. More than 30 million people have visited. Also unveiled is the American Immigrant Wall of Honor, the world's largest wall of names, where individuals can have the name of an immigrant ancestor inscribed.

2001 — The American Family Immigration History Center opens. Visitors can explore records of people who entered the USA through Ellis Island and the port of New York between 1892 and 1924. The online database has had 12 billion hits.

More areas implement breeder permits

System designed to help reduce unwanted pets

By Dirk VanderHart
USA TODAY

Breeding cats became a bit costlier for Carla Turner in June.

The San Antonio resident has been a Bengal cat breeder for years, but it wasn't until she tried to place an ad for her most recent litter that she realized she needed the city's permission to sell the kittens.

San Antonio has joined a growing number of communities mandating pet owners pay for licenses when their pets give birth if they intend to sell the offspring or give them away. Part of the ordinance requires ads placed for the animals to include the license number, according to Jeff Hale, director of San Antonio's Animal Care Services.

The licenses, called breeder or litter permits, typically allow a pet owner to breed a dog or cat once a year. Many provide incentives for owners to have their pet spayed after a litter is born.

The system is intended to reduce the number of unwanted puppies and kittens. Owners pay a fee — in San Antonio it is $50 — for the right to sell litters. Owners who plan to keep the animals don't need a permit.

"We're trying to send a message to the community that producing litters is adding to the problem," Hale said.

Palm Beach County, Fla., also added breeder permits this year, said Capt. David Walesky of Palm Beach County Animal Care and Control. Permits cost $150.

A permit ordinance is also being considered by the Springfield, Mo., City Council.

"The per-litter fee is a concept we're seeing more and more of," said Stephanie Shain, director of outreach for companion animals with the Humane Society of the United States. "It's a great way to help people who may be on the fence about spaying or neutering their pets."

Other cities that require litter permits include Fort Wayne, Ind., and St. Joseph, Mo.

The Humane Society estimates that between 6 million and 8 million dogs and cats wind up in shelters each year, Shain said. Of those, she said, between 3 million and 4 million will be euthanized.

The Humane Society, citing a report by the International City/County Management Association, estimates each animal taken to a shelter, cared for, fed and then adopted or euthanized costs the shelter $100 or more a month.

Some communities offer cheaper dog or cat licenses to owners who have their pet fixed, Shain said.

Turner says litter permits might do more harm than good. "There's already a dumping problem here in San Antonio," she said. "If they have to get a permit to sell or give them away, there's no incentive to do that."

In St. Joseph, Mo., which has mandated breeder permits since 1995, pet owners pay $100 for the right to sell a litter. Half of that is returned if the mother is spayed within 30 days. "It is my observation that it has worked," said Rick Smith, director of the St. Joseph Animal Control Department.

VanderHart reports for the Springfield News-Leader in Missouri

An open letter to America's investors.

Dear Investor,

These are unprecedented and unsettling times for investors. As a longtime investor myself, I know that in an environment like this, it's hard to sift through all the information and make clear decisions. Especially when the news creates concerns not just about your own financial well-being, but also the safety and stability of the financial system and institutions you depend on.

So, first and foremost, I want to express my conviction that stability and equilibrium will return to the markets. The process of finding that balance may be uncomfortable, but it will return.

What Should Investors Do?

I've been asked this question many times this year. Of course, no one piece of advice can apply to everyone. Each of us has our own time frame for investments and comfort level with risk.

But, having lived through previous market downturns, I do believe that everyone should review their portfolio to ensure that their asset allocation is in line with their long-term targets. And, if everything is aligned, then stick with it. During times of uncertainty, investors often make the mistake of trying to time the market by simply stepping out of it.

If my years in investing have shown me anything, it's that asset allocation, diversification and periodic rebalancing are the tools investors should use to weather market downturns. Having the right investment mix doesn't mean that the value of holdings will never go down—but rather helps strike the right balance between risk and reward, given your goals. I am also mindful that some people are focused exclusively on the safety and stability of their assets. If that's true for you, I encourage you to discuss available options with your investment professional.

A Special Thanks to Our Clients.

Thank you for your confidence in Schwab during this period. I hope we are providing the level of service and assistance you expect. We recognize that many investors feel challenged at times like these and our priority is to be here to help you in the way that works best for you.

I hope this perspective is helpful. Please speak to a Schwab Investment Professional if you would like additional insight or help, either by phone or at one of our branches. That's what we're here for.

Candidates voice concerns over Wall St. rescue

Obama, McCain stop short of saying they'd vote against the plan

From staff and wire reports

As their colleagues in Congress crafted an unprecedented government bailout of Wall Street, Democrat Barack Obama and Republican John McCain agreed Tuesday that the plan must include ways to reimburse taxpayers and ensure corporate executives do not profit.

In separate campaign appearances, the two presidential nominees both stopped short of saying they would vote against the $700 billion rescue plan for the nation's financial system. They essentially repeated principles they outlined last week for the bailout, but included some new details.

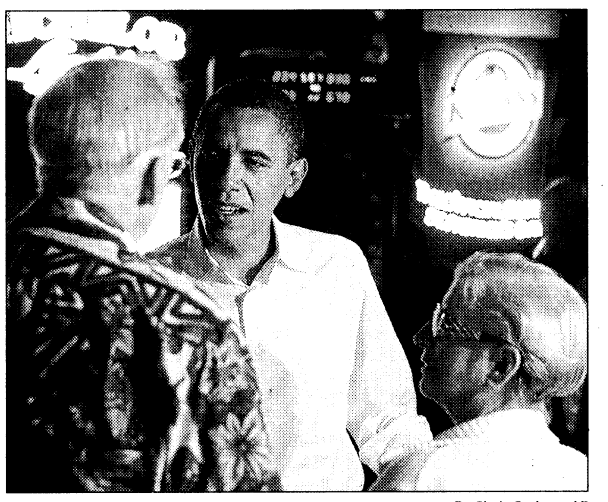
Obama, speaking in Florida, challenged President Bush to drop what the Illinois senator characterized as a "my way or the highway" attitude toward the proposed bailout. "The president's stubborn inflexibility is both unacceptable and disturbingly familiar," he said.

In Michigan, McCain said he wants to make sure that funding for lawmakers' special projects — known as earmarks — are not included in the legislation, which must pass before Congress heads home to campaign for the Nov. 4 elections.

"It would be outrageous for legislators and lobbyists to pack this rescue plan with taxpayer money for favored companies," said the Arizona senator, who opposes and does not request earmarks.

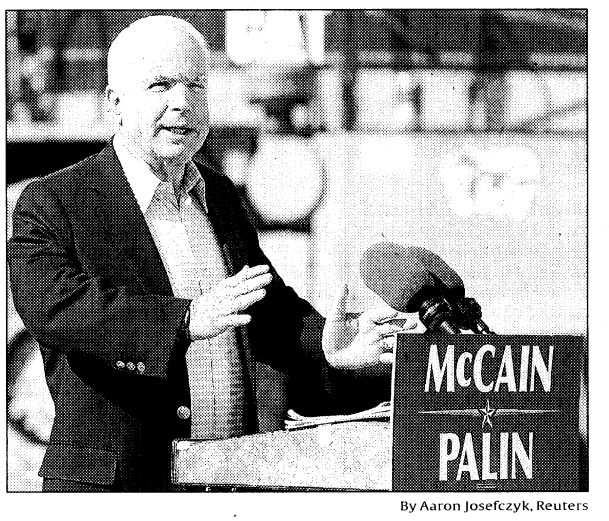
Obama and McCain agreed that taxpayers should get a return on their investment in helping the ailing financial firms. Obama suggested an ownership stake in the companies that are bailed out and a new fee on financial services to repay the government aid.

"This plan cannot be a welfare program for Wall Street executives," Obama said.



By Chris Carlson, AP

In Clearwater, Fla.: Democrat Barack Obama talks with customers during a campaign stop Tuesday at O'Keefe's Pub.



By Aaron Josefczyk, Reuters

In Strongsville, Ohio: Republican John McCain addresses union workers at a construction site Tuesday.

He added that his proposed middle-class tax cuts remain "absolutely necessary" despite the economic turbulence. He said they would put money in the pockets of working families at a time when the economy might be worsening.

Both candidates have called for a bipartisan oversight board so the decision on how to spend $700 billion is not left entirely to the Treasury secretary.

"We will not solve a problem caused by poor oversight with a plan that has no oversight," McCain said.

The candidates also took swipes at each other. Obama repeated his criticism of McCain's statement last week that the fundamentals of the economy are sound. "We've got a leaky boat," Obama said. "We've got to make sure we get that boat into harbor, and then we have to do a lot of repairs."

McCain's campaign accused Obama of "simply following in John McCain's footsteps" on the oversight board and restrictions on executive pay. "Obama has shown indecision ... at a time when the American people need certainty," spokesman Tucker Bounds said.

In Illinois, big results expected of Obama

But some say former cynics have now set bar too high

By Judy Keen
USA TODAY

CHICAGO — Catherine Haskins is 36 and has never bothered to vote in a presidential election. She says that will change Nov. 4 when she votes for Barack Obama.

Until now, Haskins, a single mom and small business owner in Washington Park, one of this city's poorest neighborhoods, never believed that any presidential candidate could make a difference in her life or the lives of her three sons.

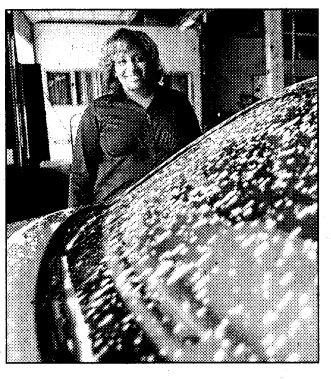
In Obama, she says, she sees a politician who was raised by his own single mom and by his grandparents, a former community organizer who worked in Chicago neighborhoods much like her own. "He gets it. He's lived it," she says.

Illinois, which sent Obama to the U.S. Senate in 2004 with 70% of the vote, could help elect the USA's first African-American president. That prospect has prompted some people here to set aside cynical attitudes about politicians, says Haskins, owner of a car wash and detailing business. "I just know that he's going to make things better for people like me," she says.

Paul Green, a political science professor at Chicago's Roosevelt University, worries that people in Washington Park expect more from Obama than he can deliver — even from the Oval Office.

The community's problems are "the same old story: jobs, education, drugs," he says. "Change is not going to be done by a president. It's not going to be done by waving a wand."

People invested the same expectations in Harold Washington, a Democrat, when he became Chicago's first black mayor in 1983, Green says, and "nothing changed."



Voting this time: Catherine Haskins is inspired by the prospect of electing Barack Obama.

Retiree Marilyn Nash, 61, says she understands why people think Obama can improve lives here, but she isn't sure he can fulfill those hopes. "Our problems are deep and old," she says. "We need better-paying jobs, better housing, real stuff. Politicians, even Barack, mostly give us words. That's not enough."

Obama lives in a big brick home a few dozen blocks away — across the park for which the neighborhood is named — from Washington Park. His Hyde Park neighborhood is integrated and solidly middle class, home to the University of Chicago.

Hope for a community

In Washington Park, where median income in the 2000 Census was $15,160 and more than 97% of residents are black, there are scores of vacant lots where homes and businesses once stood. There are some renovated homes and new condos, but just as many boarded-up buildings.

It's not unlike the Roseland and Riverdale neighborhoods south of here, where Obama worked as an organizer in the 1980s. In Dreams from My Father, his 1995 memoir, he described "boarded-up homes, the decaying storefronts, the aging church rolls."

Some people in Washington Park say Obama represents hope for a community that has long felt alienated from politicians. Before Obama, "politicians were somebody to be tolerated, not inspired by," says Richard Tolliver, rector at St. Edmund's Episcopal Church. "That's changing."

There's little doubt about which candidate will win Illinois' 21 Electoral College votes. Obama leads John McCain in Illinois, 53%-37%, a Big Ten Battleground Poll conducted last week found. Democrats Al Gore and John Kerry carried the state by more than 10 percentage points over George Bush in 2000 and 2004.

Finding McCain supporters in Washington Park isn't easy, but Walter Henry, 56, a mechanic, thinks the Arizona Republican might be a better choice. "He was a prisoner of war, and he's been shaking things up in Washington for a long time," Henry says. "These are tough times, and Obama might not be quite ready."

April Stogner, 35, who grew up in public housing projects and works for a tax-preparation company, says she feels a connection to Obama despite his Ivy League education and political success.

"We have pretty much similar backgrounds," she says, and he understands what life is like here. "We're barely surviving," she says. If he's elected, "a lot of things are going to change."

Counting on more jobs

People in Washington Park say they are counting on an Obama administration to help bring jobs back to an area that was once filled with commerce and industry and now has little of either. They want homes and apartment buildings fixed up, but they don't want high prices and rent to force them out of the neighborhood.

"We've been neglected for so long, we need Obama in there," says FedEx employee Andre Bishop, 45. "He touches all of us — not because he's black, but because he represents change."

If Chicago's bid to host the 2016 Summer Olympics succeeds, Washington Park would be home to a 90,000-seat stadium that residents hope would attract new businesses and new customers. A redevelopment corporation formed by St. Edmunds has invested $50 million in housing. Gentrification is edging south into the area.

Bishop says those signs of a better future have renewed interest in politics, thanks mostly to Obama. He sees volunteers going door to door every Saturday registering people to vote. Tolliver says his parishioners include men in their 20s who have never been involved in politics but are taking their sons to hear Obama.

Haskins sees in Obama "the beginning of something new" here and across the country. "He's not disconnected from poor and struggling people."

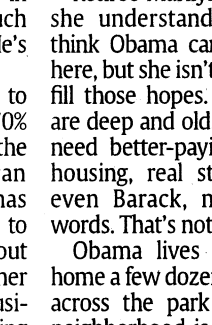
Clinton says she has no doubt Obama will win

Hillary Rodham Clinton said Tuesday that she has "no doubt" fellow Democrat Barack Obama will be elected president this year. The New York senator, whom Obama defeated for their party's presidential nomination in a hard-fought, sometimes-bitter contest, said on CBS News' The Early Show, "Barack Obama's going to win. No doubt ... if anybody looks at the mess we're in today."



Bloomberg News

Clinton: 58% of her supporters now back Obama.

Obama's support from voters who favored Clinton in the primaries has not changed since he won the nomination, according to an Associated Press-Yahoo News poll released Tuesday. The survey showed that 58% of those who previously supported Clinton plan to vote for Obama. That is the same percentage who said so in June, when Clinton ended her bid.

More sharp ads from both sides

Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama take some more hard shots at each other in new TV ads. The ads are going on some national cable networks and will be on the air locally in some battleground states.

McCain's ad accuses Obama of being "mum" on what to do about the financial crisis that confronts the nation. Obama has discussed the principles he says any rescue plan needs to follow.

Obama's ad accuses McCain of pledging to "protect tax breaks for American corporations that hide their profits offshore." McCain campaign spokesman Tucker Bounds said the ad "cleverly ignores two key facts: (Obama's) headquarters is provided by a company based in Bermuda and is guilty of the very same offshore benefits he's attacking."

The Obama campaign and the Democratic National Committee also released Spanish-language TV and radio ads in New Mexico, Florida, Nevada and Colorado.

The ads criticize McCain for saying early last week that the economy's fundamentals are strong. McCain has said he was referring to the productivity and competitiveness of American workers, not to the housing or financial crises.

No indictment in hacking of Palin e-mail

A federal grand jury in Chattanooga ended its meeting without indicting anyone in an investigation into the hacking of Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin's personal e-mail. The investigation is continuing. Last week, investigators searched 20-year-old David Kernell's apartment in Knoxville, where he is a student at the University of Tennessee, but no charges have been filed. Kernell's father is Democratic state Rep. Mike Kernell. Neither has returned calls from the Associated Press.

British leader ties image to Obama

British Prime Minister Gordon Brown used months-old video of Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama to boost his image before a decisive speech on his future. The fleeting glimpse of the Illinois senator came during a Labor Party video montage documenting Brown's 15 months in office. The video was played to delegates as a prelude to the keynote speech that was part of an effort to burnish his dour image and stamp out a rebellion from detractors in his party.

"Prime Minister Brown has a clear sense, not only how to rebuild the economy for the people of Britain, but also a broader vision of how we all have to work together," Obama says in the video.

Palin gets foreign policy course in first meetings with leaders

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Sarah Palin met her first world leaders Tuesday.

It was a tightly controlled crash course on foreign policy for the Republican vice presidential candidate, meant to build her résumé for voters concerned about her lack of experience in world affairs. The conversations were private, the pictures public.

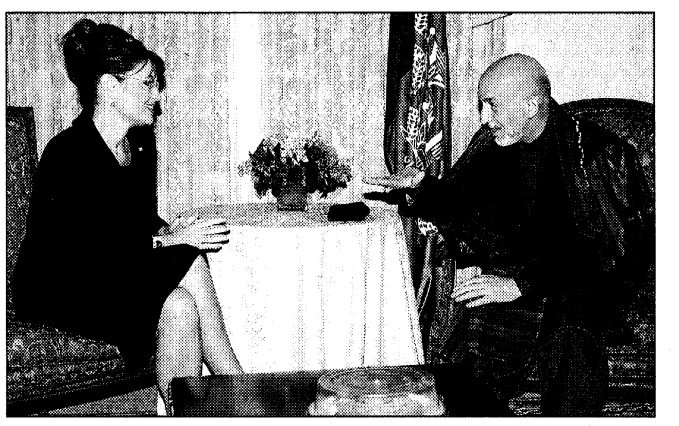
Palin sat down with Afghan President Hamid Karzai and Colombian President Alvaro Uribe. "I found her quite a capable woman," Karzai said later. "She asked the right questions on Afghanistan."

The self-described "hockey mom" also asked former secretary of State Henry Kissinger for insights on Georgia, Russia, China and Iran, and she'll see more leaders today on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly meetings.

She also got her first intelligence briefing Tuesday. It lasted more than two hours.

Randy Scheunemann, a foreign policy adviser to GOP presidential nominee John McCain, was close at hand during Palin's meetings. McCain aide Stephen Biegun also accompanied her and briefed reporters later.

Karzai and Palin discussed security problems in Afghanistan.



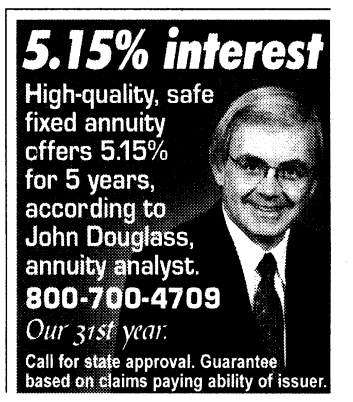
By Henny Ray Abrams, AP

Security a priority: GOP vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin, left, meets Afghan President Hamid Karzai on Tuesday in New York City.

They also talked about the need for more U.S. troops there, which McCain and Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama say is necessary, Biegun said.

He said Palin's meeting with Kissinger covered national security and foreign policy issues. "Rather than make specific policy prescriptions, she was largely listening, having an exchange of views and also very interested in forming a relationship with people she met with," Biegun said.

Today, McCain and Palin are slated to meet with Georgian President Mikheil Saakashvili and Ukrainian President Viktor Yushchenko. Palin is then to meet with Iraqi President Jalal Talabani, Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari and Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.



Across the USA

News from every state

Alabama: Birmingham — Former Jefferson County Commissioner Mary Buckelew admitted to one count of obstruction in a federal probe of a sewer bond deal that has Alabama's largest county near bankruptcy. The U.S. attorney said Buckelew, 62, could be sentenced to up to 20 years in prison for lying to a grand jury when she denied receiving $4,000 worth of expensive shoes, a purse and spa treatments from an investment banker.

Alaska: Anchorage — A federal judge ordered the Army to grant conscientious objector status and an honorable discharge to a Fort Richardson soldier. Pfc. Michael Barnes' had told the Army that he experienced a religious awakening in Iraq two years ago that left him opposed to war in any form. The judge said military investigators had failed to provide a factual basis for contending Barnes' religious objections to war were insincere.

Arizona: Phoenix — A woman in El Mirage who called a radio show in 2006 and claimed she killed her boyfriend, and made it look like a suicide, won't face murder charges. The Maricopa County Attorney's Office said there's no evidence that Megan Vice's boyfriend died at the hands of another. They said evidence is consistent with suicide, which is how medical examiner classified the 2001 death.

Arkansas: Fayetteville — A man who pleaded guilty to helping in the shooting deaths of a couple was sentenced to 50 years in prison. Under a deal with prosecutors, Jesse Westeen, 21, must serve about 35 years before becoming eligible for parole. Prosecutors said Westeen drove Gregory Decay, 22, to an apartment in Fayetteville where Decay shot Kevin Jones and Kendall Rice, both 24, in April 2007. Decay was convicted and sentenced to death.

California: Seal Beach — A medical marijuana user filed a $1 million lawsuit against police here over as many as 50 pot plants that were seized. After smelling marijuana in the apartment of Bruce Benedict, 43, the local officers returned with federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents to take the plants. California law allows medical marijuana, but federal law prohibits it. ... Fresno — Nearly two-thirds of all children living in the San Joaquin Valley are Hispanic, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. The figures show Hispanics make up 48% of Fresno County's overall population and 60% of children younger than 10. While immigration accounts for some of the gain, demographers say Hispanic women are having children at a rate one-third higher than non-Hispanic white women.

Colorado: Morrison — An injured bobcat cub is recovering after being rescued along a state highway west of Denver. The bobcat was found near the body of another young bobcat that had been hit by a vehicle. Police and animal control officers took the 7-month-old survivor to a veterinary hospital for treatment of broken thigh bones in both hind legs. If the 10- to 15-pound cub recovers, it could be released back into the wild.

Connecticut: Hartford — Gov. Rell said the projected state budget deficit has more than doubled to $300 million, driven partly by a decrease in income taxes and other revenue in the poor economy. Rell said she's considering more spending cuts on top of $140 million already enacted. She said she hopes to avoid laying off state employees, but that everything is on the table.

Delaware: Wilmington — A worker fell to his death from an elementary school gymnasium roof, police said. The 58-year-old man was checking some of the 48 skylights at Bancroft Elementary School when he fell through plexiglass to the gym floor 30 feet below. The Christiana School District said no children were in the gym at the time. The man's name was not released.

D.C.: Five men began a 24-hour hunger strike at the National Archives to protest what they call President Bush's violations of the Constitution. Members of Veterans for Peace climbed a fence early Tuesday to sit on the edge of a platform at an entrance to the marble building. The veterans oppose what they consider the occupation of Iraq and unlawful detention of prisoners.

Florida: North Miami Beach — U.S. officials are returning 150 pre-Columbian artifacts to Ecuador as part of an ongoing program to send stolen cultural heirlooms to their countries of origin. The artifacts, recovered in Miami in 2006, consist of pottery, baskets, jewelry, carvings, figurines and sculptures that predate Christopher Columbus' arrival in the Americas. The FBI said the items are considered by experts to range from 2,000 to 5,000 years old. ... Tampa — The 2008 North American Gaming Almanac ranks Florida sixth nationwide in gaming-industry revenue, with $3.7 billion in 2007. That's a 5.4% increase from 2006. According to a breakdown, gaming revenue at tribal facilities increased 2.3% from 2006 to 2007, to $1.6 billion.

Georgia: Atlanta — A new report shows the number of Georgia schools facing the stiffest sanctions under the federal No Child Left Behind law is decreasing, bucking what has become a national trend. But the report from the Center on Education Policy said the drop could be because Georgia sets the bar too low for what's considered proficient. The number of Georgia schools undergoing restructuring fell from 51 in 2004 to 46 last year.

Hawaii: Honolulu — A lawmaker said the state may need to help some farmers move away from Kilauea volcano to escape the effects of vog, or volcanic smog, and stay in business elsewhere. The chair of a special legislative committee, Rep. Bob Herkes, noted that Hawaii helped Hilo farmers move to safer ground after tsunamis in 1946 and 1960. Big Island communities have been coping with dramatically larger amounts of vog from Kilauea since March.

Idaho: Pocatello — A man accused of poaching deer lost his hunting and fishing privileges for life. Russell Mee, 53, was accused of killing at least three deer and dumping two near his property after he suspected he was being investigated by Idaho Fish and Game. A judge sentenced Mee to 45 days jail, 10 years of probation, more than $21,000 in fines and banned him from hunting and fishing in the state.

Illinois: Urbana — Solo Cup plans to close its plant in the Chicago suburb of Highland Park and move nearly 50 of the jobs to its Urbana plant later this year. The plant employs about 420 people. A company spokeswoman said about 200 jobs will be moved to other plants. She said Solo is closing in Highland Park because of improved efficiency at its 13 other plants. The Urbana plant makes plastic cups and containers. ... Chicago — A woman who was assaulted by two homeless people is dealing with medical issues including a brain injury, seizures and 20 knocked-out teeth. Jennifer Hall said she doesn't have insurance, leaving her unable to pay her medical bills. Two suspects are being held in Cook County Jail on $500,000 bonds.

Indiana: Bean Blossom — A nonprofit foundation is working to buy a music park and campground in Brown County that's been home to the Bill Monroe bluegrass festival for over 40 years. Indianapolis businessman Steve Johnson, a lifelong bluegrass fan, established the foundation to purchase and maintain the park. Owner Dwight Dillman agreed to transfer ownership once the foundation raises $500,000 for a down payment on the $3 million price.

Iowa: Urbandale — Officials are beginning to measure the effect of greenhouse gas emissions on the state's environment. A report by the Department of Natural Resources shows emissions in 2007 — from 276 of Iowa's largest polluters — accounted for slightly less than half of the overall emissions and was equal to annual emissions from more than 9.5 million cars or electricity used by nearly 6.9 million homes. The biggest polluters included electrical and manufacturing plants.

Kansas: Leavenworth — The curator of Carroll Mansion here is the new director of the Kansas Museums Association. Joanie Soukup will begin her duties Jan. 1 as director of the nonprofit organization that started in 1969. Soukup has worked full time at Carroll Mansion since May. She started at the museum in February 2007, working part time while she finished her master's degree in museum studies at the University of Kansas.

Kentucky: Covington — Fire investigators said a white powder found in an envelope at an Internal Revenue Service building in northern Kentucky turned out to be corn starch. Covington Fire Department Batallion Chief Bill Shelton said crews were called to the building on Monday when roughly a teaspoon of the powder was found in an envelope.

Louisiana: Houma — A man suspected of killing as many as 23 men in south Louisiana over 10 years pleaded guilty to eight counts of first-degree murder. Ronald Dominique was sentenced to serve eight consecutive life terms. Prosecutors said Dominique's pleas were reached after consulting with the families of the eight victims. Dominique was arrested in December 2006. Authorities said Dominique confessed that he would solicit sex from men before killing them.

Maine: Portland — The Maine Turnpike is delaying plans to widen a nine-mile stretch of the toll highway from Scarborough to Falmouth for at least two years. The turnpike's head of government relations said the plan to add two lanes is being put off because traffic numbers are down. A leg of the turnpike farther south was widened from four to six lanes several years ago.

Maryland: Annapolis — Anne Arundel County police said an elderly woman wielded a reacher device, normally used to grasp objects, to fend off a man who broke in. Two elderly women were in their home on Cedar Lane in the Hillsmere community when the man kicked in the door. He demanded money, but they said they had none. After the man started going through a purse, one of the women grabbed the reacher. The man fled with the purse, authorities said.

Massachusetts: Boston — Supporters of a ballot question that would ban greyhound racing accused the owners of a race track of misleading potential voters. The owners of Raynham-Taunton Greyhound Park said in a newspaper ad that the industry has a "100% adoption rate" for retired greyhounds, and has contributed more than $1.3 million to promote greyhound adoption. But a group supporting the ban said 2006's adoption rate was closer to 14%.

Michigan: Lansing — West Nile virus appears to be on the decline in Michigan this year, but health officials still urge residents to take precautions against the mosquito-borne illness. Five human cases of West Nile had been reported — all in the southeast part of the state — as of late last week. That's down from 10 cases statewide at the same point in 2007, but this West Nile season is not over. ... Lake Township — Officials at American Electric Power Co. said a fire on Saturday in Unit 1 of the Donald C. Cook Nuclear Plant here began when turbine vibrations caused a generator to leak hydrogen, which ignited. The utility said fire damage was minimal but the vibrations more seriously damaged turbines and steam piping.

Minnesota: Coon Rapids — A Blaine High School senior who faced expulsion for having a box cutter in his locked car will be allowed to return to school. The Anoka-Hennepin School Board voted to let Tony Richard, 17, back on probation. The vote came after heated comments from parents, who said the district's zero tolerance policy for weapons was too harsh. ... Minneapolis — A new study shows three of four school nurses in the state believe students' needs are not being met due to staffing shortages. The School Nurse Organization of Minnesota suggested a 1-cent tax on each 12-ounce carbonated beverage sold in the state, which could raise as much as $29 million annually and allow the hiring of 600 more school nurses.

Mississippi: Jackson — Prosecutors asked a federal appeals court to reconsider its acquittal of a reputed Ku Klux Klansman who was serving life in the 1964 abductions of two black teenagers who were later killed. James Ford Seale, 73, was convicted in June 2007 on kidnapping and conspiracy charges. Seale had served just over a year when his conviction was overturned. A 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel ruled the statute of limitations for kidnapping had expired. ... Oxford — Free rides will be offered on Oxford's new public transit system from its launch next month until the end of the year. Officials with the Oxford-University Transit Commission said five buses will begin service through town and the University of Mississippi campus starting Oct. 20.

Missouri: Van Buren — Trial for a man accused of shooting a State Highway Patrol sdergeant was pushed back again, meaning the case will go before a jury four years after the crime. Lance Shockley, 30, of West Plains is charged with murder and leaving the scene of the shooting death of Sgt. Dewayne Graham in 2005. A Carter County judge set a new trial date of March 23 after a new attorney was appointed for Shockley.

Montana: Billings — Michael Victoria III, a 16-year-old accused in the Huntley Project High School fire, has been charged as an adult in District Court. Victoria pleaded not guilty to two felony counts of burglary and one count of arson. The judge set bail at $20,000. Victoria is one of four teens accused of breaking into the Worden school and using chemicals from a classroom to start the fire, destroying the school and displacing 230 students.

Nebraska: Grand Island — A state commission that investigates discrimination claims will try community outreach here in response to controversy over break requests at a meatpacking plant. Muslim workers at JBS Swift & Co. recently asked for break times to allow them to pray at sunset. Non-Muslim employees protested after the plant accommodated the requests. The plant then reversed the break accommodations and fired workers who left without permission.

Nevada: Las Vegas — A candidate for the state Board of Education owes the Nevada Education Department more than $500,000, according to a court's ruling involving a program she ran to provide meals to needy students in the 1990s. The agency sued Willia Chaney's company seeking repayment. In August, a judge ruled for the department and ordered Chaney to pay back the money. The state shut down the Chaney-run program after a report identified questionable expenses.

New Hampshire: Concord — Seat belt use is not required for adults in New Hampshire, but officials said more people are wearing them than ever before. Highway Safety Coordinator Peter Thomson said voluntary seat belt use among adults this year is 69%, the highest since the state starting keeping track 24 years ago. In the first survey, in 1984, seat belt use was 16%.

New Jersey: Cape May Court House — The state has improved its plans to quickly evacuate large numbers of people from coastal areas if there is a hurricane or other emergency, but it still could do better, according to State Sen. Jeff Van Drew. At Cape May County's annual hurricane-preparedness conference, Van Drew said he supports bills drawn up over the summer that would help traffic flow and use schools to accommodate evacuees.

New Mexico: Las Cruces — A man charged with extreme cruelty in the deaths of five beagles kept a SWAT team at bay during a seven-hour standoff after authorities tried to serve a warrant. Mark Burbano, 47, was charged with five counts of extreme animal cruelty and one count of obstructing an officer. He was being held for a psychiatric evaluation, authorities said.

New York: New York — A city park is getting a dozen treehouses perched high in branches. Japanese artist Tadashi Kawamata arrived at Manhattan's Madison Square Park to begin building. Each of the huts, resembling a child's treehouse, will be unique and will be out of the public's reach. Tree Huts is an artist-in-residency program at the park. The installation opens Oct. 2. ... Gov. Paterson called for Congress to look into the workings of the federal Railroad Retirement Board. Paterson's statement came in response to a published report that a high number of Long Island Rail Road workers received post-retirement disability benefits. The state attorney general's office is also issuing subpoenas for railroad records.

North Carolina: Concord — Barber-Scotia College's new president is the first white educator to run the historically black school since 1932. David Olah, 64, had been the acting president since Carl Flamer retired from Barber-Scotia in June. Olah said he is working to help the school regain the accreditation it lost in 2004. Barber-Scotia, which was founded in 1867, has just 46 students this semester.

North Dakota: Fargo — A federal judge rejected a Fargo woman's request for more than $71,000 in compensation for time spent in prison on an illegal gambling conviction that was later overturned. The judge refused to sign a certificate of innocence for Susan Bala, the former president of Racing Services, a horse racing simulcast company, so she could recover damages.

Ohio: Toledo — Mayor Carty Finkbeiner, the police and fire chiefs and more than 60 other employees will be taking two days off without pay in the face of a multimillion-dollar shortfall in Toledo's operating budget. Municipal employees also are giving up their city cellphones, those who take vehicles home have to pay for their own gas, and officials are looking at whether to lay off more than a dozen workers.

Oklahoma: Muskogee — A federal judge ordered the release of former state senator Gene Stipe from a prison hospital in Missouri. Stipe, 81, had been undergoing tests and treatment since May after being ruled mentally incompetent to face a probation revocation proceeding. Stipe pleaded guilty in 2003 in a federal campaign fraud case. He faces a new indictment accusing him of conspiring to have hundreds of thousands of state dollars benefit a business he secretly co-owned.

Oregon: Coos Bay — Salvage crews lifted the final big piece of the New Carissa shipwreck out of the sand on a beach near Coos Bay. Workers plan to cut up the 170- to 200-ton chunk of the wreckage, believed to be the aft part of the engine, and load the pieces onto a barge. The wood chip freighter ran aground in February 1999 and broke apart, leaving about half of the ship stuck in the sand.

Pennsylvania: York — Senior York County Prosecutor Timothy Barker said a case he handled showed that penalties for elder abuse need to be stiffened. Barker said Frances Donohue, 61, deserved time in state prison after being convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the death of her 87-year-old mother-in-law, who was confined to a bed and denied medical treatment. Instead, a judge freed Donohue on probation after she served 17 months.

Rhode Island: Providence — A group of college students loudly protesting proposed bus service cuts forced the cancellation of a state meeting. The Rhode Island Public Transit Authority board was discussing its $12 million deficit when the 20-strong Students for a Democratic Society said instead of cutting routes, the agency should ask the state for more money. ... Bristol — Roger Williams University is honoring Beat Generation author Jack Kerouac by offering a partial scholarship to a student from his hometown of Lowell, Massachusetts. The school will offer a one-year, $14,000, half-tuition scholarship for study of creative writing or journalism.

South Carolina: Charleston — Thirteen female Air Force pilots and crew members from Charleston Air Force Base are honoring the World War II aviators known as WASPs. The service of the Women Air Force Service Pilots was not recognized officially until 1977. A C-17 transport jet will carry a group of the now-elderly female aviators from Robins Air Force Base in Georgia today to a reunion in Irving, Texas. ... Greenville — Federal regulatory judges rejected an environmental group that sought to block an electricity company from building two nuclear reactors in northern South Carolina. The judges ruled against 11 objections raised by the Blue Ridge Environmental Defense League. The group questioned the impact on water supplies and global warming if Duke Energy completes the new nuclear plants.

South Dakota: Pierre — The state treasurer's office reports record activity in its unclaimed property division. It says $2.5 million in unclaimed property was returned to South Dakotans in the budget year ending June 30. Banks and other businesses must give the state any cash, stocks, bonds and other similar property when the owners can't be found. The treasurer's office holds the property as it tries to find the owners.

Tennessee: Newport — A judge in eastern Tennessee struck a deal to get ethics charges against him dropped. Cocke County General Sessions Court Judge John Bell agreed to never direct defendants in his court to a private probation firm owned by his brother-in-law or anyone else with family ties. In return, the court agreed to close the investigation of Bell.

Texas: San Antonio — Hundreds of Toyota Motor workers are cleaning up parks here while their plant is idle. Toyota last month shut down its Tundra pickup plant due to slow sales as fuel prices rose. The company won't produce new trucks at the site until November. But Toyota is still paying its 2,000 full-time employees during the lull. Some took vacation, but others agreed to work at city parks.

Utah: Salt Lake City — The Census Bureau said Utah has an increasing number of gay and lesbian couples living together. The American Community Survey compared data from 2000 and 2007. It showed a 23% increase in the number of lesbian partners together and a 21.5% jump in the number of cohabiting gay men. The number of unmarried partners living together increased by 42%, but traditional families still make up most Utah households.

Vermont: Richmond — The state Agency of Transportation offered to restore a bridge here for $3 million — and at no cost to the community. Officials said the historic Bridge Street span could be usable again by spring. The 79-year-old bridge was closed earlier this month after engineers determined it was unsafe. The state's proposal is an alternative to a town suggestion to build a temporary bridge while the old one is replaced.

Virginia: Waynesboro — A bald eagle is bound for California after undergoing rehabilitation at the Wildlife Center of Virginia for nearly two years. It will be transferred today to Los Angeles, to become part of the Conservation Ambassadors, an environmental education program. The wildlife center said the eagle can't be released because of a recurring injury to the primary flight feathers on the bird's left wing.

Washington: Seattle — University of Washington Professor David Montgomery, 47, said his $500,000 genius grant will make life more comfortable as he writes two more books. He was recognized by the MacArthur Foundation for work in geomorphology — the study of how the surface of the earth changes over time. He wrote "Dirt: The Erosion of Civilizations" and plans books on floods and urban agriculture. Montgomery plays guitar in a folk rock band, "Big Dirt." ... Seattle police said increased patrols in the area around the Pike Place Market in the past year reduced the number of assaults, disturbances and complaints about drinking and urinating in public. The department spent nearly $1 million in overtime to beef up patrols in the high-crime neighborhood. Police plan a similar emphasis in the nearby Belltown area.

West Virginia: Huntington — Permits for two proposed mountaintop removal mines along the Clay-Nicholas county line are being challenged by an environmental group. The Ohio Valley Environmental Coalition claims the permits issued by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers are flawed. They allow Fola Coal Co. to dispose of excess rock and dirt in fills that bury waterways. A hearing is scheduled Sept. 30 in federal court on OVEC's petition.

Wisconsin: Madison — State spending on the University of Wisconsin System has trailed inflation and overall state spending, according to a report by the nonpartisan Wisconsin Taxpayers Alliance. The report shows state funding for UW nearly doubled between 1983 and 2007. But state aid and tax credits for primary and secondary schools more than tripled, as did overall state spending, while inflation also contributed to the disparity.

Wyoming: Cheyenne — Mountain pine beetles are taking a heavy toll on pine trees around Cheyenne. State Forester Bill Crapser said citizens are spraying for the beetles, but his office is still getting reports of many trees dying. The beetles have also been reported in pine trees in northern Colorado cities. Experts believe the tiny insects may have been brought in by infested firewood.

U.S. territory: Puerto Rico — Torrential rains from a slow-moving tropical system killed thousands of plantain trees and caused an estimated $8 million in losses, concentrated in the southeast. The flooding could lead to scarcity of the island's food staple until at least May, according to legislator Javier Rivera Aquino. Storms have caused at least four deaths and dumped more than 24 inches of rain in 24 hours.

U.N. must toughen up to stop tyranny, Bush says

Organization should do more to prevent terrorism 'instead of only passing resolutions'

By Richard Wolf
USA TODAY

UNITED NATIONS — President Bush challenged the United Nations on Tuesday to stop terrorism, punish Iran and North Korea for their nuclear programs and see Russia's invasion of Georgia as a violation of the U.N.'s charter.

Speaking in sharp terms for the last time to the 63rd General Assembly, Bush said the U.N. must offer greater support to peaceful democracies and hand out tougher punishments to tyrannies that sponsor terrorism.

It was a valedictory of sorts for a president who warned in 2002 that the body could become irrelevant unless it fulfilled its stated purpose to promote peace and prevent war.

"The United Nations and other multilateral organizations are needed more urgently than ever," Bush said. "Instead of only passing resolutions decrying terrorist attacks after they occur, we must cooperate more closely to keep terrorist attacks from happening in the first place. Instead of treating all forms of government as equally tolerable, we must actively challenge the conditions of tyranny and despair that allow terror and extremism to thrive."

The president singled out for criticism Iran, North Korea and Russia, which recently invaded Georgia in a dispute over breakaway republics. As he spoke, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad smiled and waved to reporters.

Later, Ahmadinejad delivered a fiery speech to the world body, railing against "bullying powers" and "murderous Zionists" who he said were manipulating Europeans and Americans. He said Zionism "is on a definite slope to collapse" and "the American empire in the world is reaching the end of its road."

Bush's admonition was based on his belief that the U.N. has not lived up to its promise, Assistant Secretary of State Brian Hook said. The United States pays 22% of the U.N.'s basic budget, more than any other country. Japan is second at 19%.

"In its history, the U.N. has been accused of having a culture of inaction," Hook said. "What matters most to this president is results."

The president called on the U.N. to support Georgia in its battle with Russia over breakaway republics. The U.N. charter reaffirms the equal rights of "nations large and small," he said. "Russia's invasion of Georgia was a violation of those words."

Bush lauded Afghanistan and Iraq, as well as Lebanon, Liberia and others, as fledgling democracies that have joined the fight against terrorism.

"Like slavery and piracy, terrorism has no place in the modern world," Bush said.

Bush has had a rocky relationship with the U.N. ever since it refused to endorse the war in Iraq in 2003. In September 2002, he questioned whether the world body would "serve the purpose of its founding, or will it be irrelevant?"

In his speech Tuesday, Bush called the U.N. "an organization of extraordinary potential." He said it should be more united in preventing terrorism and more accountable for turning good intentions into concrete results.

Bush faulted the U.N. for not helping the citizens of Burma and Sudan overcome tyrannical governments and for allowing its Human Rights Council to protect violators.

U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki Moon and other world leaders struck an equally ominous tone in their remarks Tuesday. Ban said the world faces a "challenge of global leadership," and he urged the U.N. to become swifter and stronger in its response to humanitarian problems such as a world food crisis that has more than doubled the price of rice.

Earlier, before meeting with new Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari, Bush said he would state his respect for Pakistan's sovereignty but seek to help it fight terror, such as last week's bombing that killed 53 at an Islamabad hotel frequented by foreigners.

Bush's schedule here included meetings on international food security and with political dissidents from more than a dozen countries.

Troops mistakenly kill U.S.-allied leader

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — American soldiers accidentally shot and killed the leader of a local U.S.-allied Sunni group Tuesday after coming under attack north of Baghdad, the military said.

The shooting comes a week before the Shiite-led Iraqi government begins to assume authority over the Sunni Arab groups known as the Sons of Iraq, or Awakening Councils. The military has credited the Sunni revolt against al-Qaeda in Iraq as a major factor in the sharp decline in violence over the past year.

The head of the group in Siniyah, Jassim al-Garrout, was killed after he rushed to the site of an ambush against U.S. forces in the area between the northern oil hub of Beiji and Tikrit, according to witnesses and police.

One of al-Garrout's comrades said the group would demand an apology from the Americans.

"The Awakening Councils have become targets of al-Qaeda, the government and sometimes even the U.S. forces. We do not know our fate, and we are feeling lost," Farooq Sami said.

"We have participated in maintaining peace and security in our area, yet we sometimes do not get our salaries," Sami said.

Lt. Gen. Lloyd Austin, the No. 2 U.S. commander in Iraq, said the Iraqi government will begin next week paying the salaries of about 54,000 of the mostly Sunni fighters in the province surrounding Baghdad.

In Tuesday's incident, the U.S. soldiers were hunting for insurgents and weapons after they were hit by a roadside bomb and small-arms fire near Siniyah, 110 miles northwest of Baghdad, an e-mailed military statement said.

The troops came under fire while searching a house and "shot a Sons of Iraq leader who was mistaken for the enemy when he entered the house," said Navy Lt. Cmdr. David Russell, a U.S. military spokesman.

He said U.S. soldiers had warned their Sunni allies to stay clear of the house.

U.S. death toll

As of Tuesday morning, 4,161 U.S. servicemembers and 11 Defense Department civilians had been identified as having died in the Iraq war: 3,377 from hostile action and 795 from non-combat-related incidents.

Latest deaths identified:

▸ Army Pfc. Leonard J. Gulczynski, 19, Carol Stream, Ill.; died Wednesday in Baghdad of injuries suffered in a vehicle accident; 555th Engineer Brigade.

▸ Army Staff Sgt. Matthew J. Taylor, 25, Charleston, S.C.; died Sunday in Baghdad of injuries suffered when he encountered enemy small-arms fire during a dismounted patrol; 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry).

▸ Army Capt. Darrick D. Wright, 37, Nashville; died Wednesday in Baghdad of a non-combat-related illness; 926th Engineer Brigade.

Seven soldiers from the Army's 36th Combat Aviation Brigade died Thursday when their CH-47 Chinook helicopter crashed near Tallil:

▸ Chief Warrant Officer Corry A. Edwards, 38, Kennedale, Texas; Texas National Guard.

▸ Sgt. Daniel M. Eshbaugh, 43, Norman, Okla.; Oklahoma National Guard.

▸ Sgt. Anthony L. Mason, 37, Springtown, Texas; Texas National Guard.

▸ 1st Sgt. Julio C. Ordonez, 54, San Antonio; Texas National Guard.

▸ Chief Warrant Officer Brady J. Rudolf, 37, Oklahoma City; Oklahoma National Guard.

▸ Cpl. Michael E. Thompson, 23, Harrah, Okla.; Oklahoma National Guard.

▸ 1st Lt. Robert Vallejo II, 28, Richland Hills, Texas; Texas National Guard.

Masked gunman kills 10 people at school in Finland

From staff and wire reports

KAUHAJOKI, Finland — A masked student whose violent YouTube postings prompted police to question him a day earlier opened fire Tuesday at his trade school in Finland, killing 10 people and burning some of their bodies before fatally shooting himself in the head.

Police had questioned the student Monday about YouTube postings in which he is seen firing a handgun, but he was released because there was no legal reason to hold him, Interior Minister Anne Holmlund said.

"The detective who handled the case did not think that the circumstances were such that they required a confiscation of the weapon or a withdrawal of the license," she said.

It was Finland's second school massacre in less than a year, and the two attacks had similarities. Both gunmen posted violent clips on YouTube before the massacres, both were fascinated by the Columbine school shootings in 1999 in Colorado, both attacked their own schools, and both died after shooting themselves in the head.

Police spokesman Jari Neulaniemi said the attacker walked into the school armed with a .22-caliber pistol and carrying explosives. He killed 10 people, burning some of them beyond recognition, Neulaniemi said.

Neulaniemi said the gunman left two handwritten messages at the school dormitory saying that he had planned the attack since 2002 and that he hated the human race. The police spokesman said the attacker started several fires using "petrol bombs or Molotov cocktails."

The gunman, dressed in black and carrying a large bag, started firing in a classroom during an exam.

The shootings began just before 11 a.m. as about 150 students were at the Kauhajoki School of Hospitality, 180 miles northwest of Helsinki.

"I heard several dozen rounds of shots. In other words, it was an automatic pistol," school janitor Jukka Forsberg told Finnish broadcaster YLE. "I saw some female students who were wailing and moaning, and one managed to escape out the back door."

Finnish news media identified the gunman as Matti Juhani Saari, 22, a student at the school, which offers courses in catering, tourism, nursing and home economics.

"He was just a regular and calm guy. Nothing outstanding. He had lots of friends. Nothing that would have given an idea that something like this would happen," student Susanna Keranen told an Associated Press television crew outside the school.

Prime Minister Matti Vanhanen called the rampage "a tragic day" for the country and declared today a day of mourning.

Most of the school's students are 18 to 25 years old; some are older.

Finnish authorities did not confirm which YouTube clips were linked to the shooter. In one YouTube clip posted by a 22-year-old "Mr. Saari," a young man wearing a leather jacket fires several shots in rapid succession with a handgun at what appears to be a shooting range.

The posting was made five days before the shooting, and the location was given as Kauhajoki (pronounced COW-ha-yer-key) — the town of 14,000 where Tuesday's shooting occurred. The posting included a message saying, "Whole life is war and whole life is pain. And you will fight alone in your personal war."

On YouTube: Clip shows the shooter.

"Mr. Saari" also posted three other clips of himself firing a handgun in the past three weeks. Clips from the Columbine school shootings in Colorado were listed among his favorite videos.

Another clip shown by Scandinavian news media showed the alleged gunman pointing his gun to the camera and saying, "You will die next" before firing four rounds.

Last November, gunman Pekka-Eric Auvinen, 18, killed eight people and himself at a school in southern Finland, an attack that triggered a fierce debate about gun laws in this Nordic nation of 5.3 million people with deep-rooted hunting traditions in the sub-Arctic wilderness.

According to the Interior Ministry, there are 1.6 million licensed firearms in the county.

"There are many of the same factors as a year ago: a lonely young man in the Internet world and then with access to a gun," said Fredrik Almqvist, a professor of child psychiatry at the University of Helsinki.

Almqvist, who has studied school violence, said there was growing evidence that the virtual world of the Internet can give some alienated youth a way to build an identity and copycat ideas for violent behavior.

Gates says Pakistani government at risk

Islamist safe havens in western Pakistan are threatening the existence of Pakistan's civilian government, U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates said on Tuesday.

"During this time of political turmoil in Pakistan, it is especially crucial that we maintain a strong and positive relationship with the government, since any deterioration would be a setback for both Pakistan and Afghanistan," Gates said. "The war on terror started in this region. It must end there."

Up to three more combat brigades could be available to go to Afghanistan in early 2009, Gates said.

Pakistan security forces backed by helicopter gunships and artillery killed more than 60 insurgents in battles Tuesday close to the Afghan border in northwest Pakistan, army spokesmen Maj. Murad Khan and Maj. Gen. Athar Abbas said.

Burma frees seven political prisoners

Burma's longest-serving political prisoner was among more than 9,000 inmates freed days before the first anniversary of the junta's crackdown on anti-government protests led by Buddhist monks.

Win Tin, an aide to pro-democracy opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi, was held for 19 years. The 78-year-old was one of at least seven political prisoners released, Amnesty International said.

The rights group estimates there are 2,100 political prisoners in Burma, also known as Myanmar, which has been under military rule for 46 years.

Asked how it felt to be free, Win Tin replied, "I will be happy only when all political prisoners, including Aung San Suu Kyi, are released."

Detainee questions judge's impartiality

Confessed 9/11 mastermind Khalid Sheikh Mohammed questioned a judge's impartiality in a hearing at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Glaring at Judge Ralph Kohlmann, Mohammed pressed the Marine colonel to explain how he could ensure a fair trial as a member of the U.S. military at war with al-Qaeda.

"How can you, as an officer of the U.S. Marine Corps, stand over me in judgment?" Mohammed, who is acting as his own lawyer, asked in English.

Mohammed also questioned the judge about his religion. The judge responded that he has attended Lutheran and Episcopalian services.

China's milk system 'out of control'

China's agriculture minister Sun Zhengcai said the country's milk-gathering system was "out of control" and led to abuses that put contaminated dairy products in stores across Asia, sickening at least 53,000 babies and killing four.

At least nine countries have banned Chinese dairy imports. Melamine, used in plastics and fertilizer, has been found in infant formula and other milk products from 22 Chinese dairy companies.

Bill boosts assistance for kids in foster care

By Wendy Koch
USA TODAY

Advocates for children are hailing a bill, passed by Congress with little fanfare, that will help tens of thousands of children in foster care find permanent homes or improve their job prospects.

The bill will provide $3 billion over 10 years to increase adoption or guardianship of the 500,000 children in foster care. It was approved late Monday by the Senate and last week by the House. White House spokeswoman Emily Lawrimore said President Bush is expected to sign the bill.

"It's a landmark piece of legislation," said Gary Stangler, executive director of the Jim Casey Youth Opportunities Initiative, a private foundation that helps kids transition from foster care.

The bill will reimburse states for continuing monthly payments to foster care youth until age 21 if they are working, in school or disabled. Currently, with few exceptions, federal aid ends at 18.

"Kids aren't ready at 18 to be thrown out on their own," Stangler said. He says studies show they fare better economically and educationally if they get help for a few more years.

The bill will also:

- Continue federal aid to grandparents and other relatives who become legal guardians of children they have cared for as foster parents. Relatives have more rights as guardians, but in most states, they lose monthly subsidies if they take that role.
- Provide monthly payments for all foster children who are adopted. Currently, half are not eligible for payments because the income of the child's birth family was too high to qualify under welfare rules.
- Increase payments to states that find adoptive families for more foster children, especially those with disabilities.

Dems won't try to renew ban on offshore drilling

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats have decided to allow a quarter-century ban on drilling for oil off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts to expire next week, conceding defeat in a month-long battle with the White House and Republicans set off by $4-a-gallon gasoline prices this summer.

The Senate, meanwhile, passed a tax bill Tuesday that would save more than 20 million taxpayers from the bite of the alternative minimum tax (AMT) for another year.

In the House, Appropriations Committee Chairman Dave Obey, D-Wis., told reporters that a provision continuing the drilling moratorium will be dropped from a stopgap bill to keep the government running after Congress recesses for the election.

Republicans made lifting the ban a key campaign position after gasoline prices spiked this summer and public opinion turned in favor of more drilling. President Bush lifted an executive ban on offshore drilling in July.

"If true, this capitulation by Democrats ... is a big victory for Americans struggling with record gasoline prices," said House Republican leader John Boehner. Democrats had hoped for only a partial repeal of the drilling moratorium, but the White House had promised a veto, Obey said.

The Interior Department estimates there are 18 billion barrels of recoverable oil beneath coastal waters now off-limits.

In the Senate, the one-year reprieve on the AMT was part of a giant tax package.

The AMT was designed to collect taxes from high-income earners who had used deductions to reduce their tax bills drastically. It is not linked to inflation, leaving more middle-class taxpayers subject to its provisions as their incomes rise.

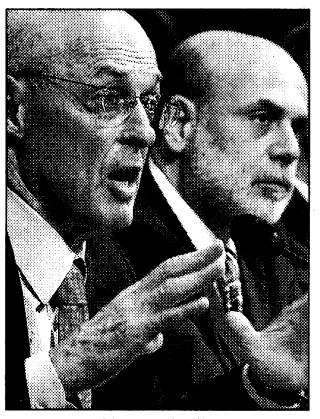
If taxpayers bear the risk, let them share in reward

In 1979, the U.S. government bailed out Chrysler, the No. 3 domestic automaker. Thirteen years later, the citizens of Sweden bailed out their banking system. Despite differences, the two actions share one common feature: The taxpayers did not end up getting soaked.

If a $700 billion bailout of the U.S. financial system is in order now — and the credit crisis and precarious world markets suggest that it is — these cases are a guide for how it might be structured. Their central feature was that taxpayers did not simply pump money into troubled companies; they took an equity stake that allowed them profit later.



By Chip Somodevilla, Getty Images

In Chrysler's case, Washington guaranteed $1.2 billion in loans and in return got warrants (the right to buy shares of Chrysler at a predetermined price). When the company recovered, it paid its debts and the government sold its stake for a handsome return.

In the Swedish case, when the nation's leading banks accumulated too much bad debt, as U.S. institutions have, the government took them over and filled them with cash. When things returned to normal, the government reissued stock in the banks and recouped most of its money.

The same principles should apply now, probably in the form of requiring warrants from the institutions that offload their troubled loan portfolios on taxpayers. Because the bailout proposal would provide up to $700 billion to buy those loans, which are of dubious value, taxpayers would, by design, pay a premium. As Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama, the top Republican on the Senate Banking Committee, put it at Tuesday's hearing: "If taxpayers are going to take the risk, they should get the reward."

An equity stake (the government took one in troubled insurance giant American International Group last week) would help solve one of the biggest questions looming over the rescue: What is a fair price for these toxic mortgage products? Even if the government overpays upfront, it could recoup money as the value of its warrants increases. It would also be more politically palatable because it would transform a straight bailout into a painful, if necessary, investment.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson says the government's best interest is to simply resell the toxic securities once the housing market recovers. He argues that an equity plan, such as limits on executive pay, could discourage institutions from participating.

Well, so be it. If some feel secure enough to decline the government offer, that's their choice.

For members of Congress, the choice should be clear: Come to the rescue, but get something in return. Banks don't lend out of pure altruism. Neither should taxpayers.

Today's debate: Open government

Running out the clock

Our view:

In Washington and Alaska, officials try to stall unwelcome investigations.

What does the Washington controversy over fired federal prosecutors have in common with Alaska's state trooper dispute?

On the surface, not much. The central question in a congressional investigation into the U.S. attorney firings is whether the White House tried to tamper with the administration of justice. The trooper probe by the Alaska Legislature is asking whether Gov. Sarah Palin, the Republican nominee for vice president, used her office to try to get her former brother-in-law fired.

The scale is vastly different, but the principle is the same. Both involve efforts by chief executives to stonewall lawmakers, leave the public in the dark and run out the clock until the November election.

In case you've forgotten, the U.S. attorney scandal began in 2006 when the Bush administration fired eight federal prosecutors. Congressional hearings revealed that the Justice Department had, in many respects, become a political arm of the White House, infuriating many of its professionals who wanted to protect its longstanding independence. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales resigned, but questions remained about whether top White House aides tried to use the department for political gain.

Congress has never been able to get to the bottom of this because President Bush, who a spokesman said had minimal involvement in the firings, has invoked a preposterously broad claim of "executive privilege" and agreed to make aides available only under absurd strictures: Not in public, not under oath and not if anyone kept a transcript. This, the White House claims, is "cooperation." The inescapable conclusion is that it fears the facts.

Both sides forced the matter into court, where lawmakers won the first round in July. A federal judge ordered a former White House counsel to appear before Congress and Bush's chief of staff to turn over certain records. The White House has appealed. Meanwhile, the public gets stiffed and the clock ticks down to Nov. 4 — which, it appears, is what the administration wants.

That's similar to what's happening in Alaska, where Palin is accused of firing the state's public safety commissioner because he refused to dismiss a trooper who had been divorced from Palin's sister. We take no position on the underlying issue because as happens in family feuds, the facts are messy. And that's the point: Citizens in Alaska and elsewhere deserve to learn them to determine whether there was any misconduct.

In July, when the probe began, Palin promised cooperation. Days after John McCain named her to the ticket, Palin sought to suspend the investigation and switch the probe to a venue of her choice. Since then, her husband, Todd Palin, has raised objections and refused to comply with a subpoena to testify.

To be sure, Democrats in Alaska and those in Congress have postured and attempted to milk these inquiries for political gain. But that doesn't change the central issues.

The public has a right to answers about possible wrongdoing. Lawmakers and the executive branch should settle their disputes through negotiation, not lawsuits or dueling headlines. And presidents and governors who duck valid questions look as if they have something to hide.

No reason for confrontation

Opposing view:

Democrats' unprecedented refusal to compromise is bad for democracy.

By Lamar Smith

The case against White House chief of staff Joshua Bolten and former White House counsel Harriet Miers involves two favorite Washington subjects: politics and power.

In 1993, President Clinton removed more than 90 U.S. attorneys. Several had undertaken investigations into elected officials, including the president himself. But Congress' Democratic majority conducted no investigation into the firings.

Now, 15 years later, President Bush's removal of eight U.S. attorneys has provoked a constitutional showdown. House Democrats voted to hold Miers and Bolten in contempt for refusing to testify or provide documents under subpoena, launching Congress and the White House into an unprecedented court battle over executive privilege.

I support Congress' right to compel testimony, conduct investigations and, if merited, subpoena officials. But after a two-year probe, I've seen no evidence to justify a constitutional confrontation. The facts refute Democrats' allegations of wrongdoing.

President Bush's claims of executive privilege are not unprecedented. They reflect Clinton Attorney General Janet Reno's own assertion that "the president and his immediate advisers are absolutely immune from testimonial compulsion by a congressional committee." Presidents of both parties have claimed executive privilege to preserve their right to confidential advice from aides.

What's unprecedented is Congress' refusal to negotiate. The White House released thousands of pages of documents and offered interviews with senior administration officials. But Democrats refused to compromise, opting instead for litigation.

A court ruling in this power struggle will significantly damage our democracy's foundation. The balance of power will shift toward one branch or the other, weakening incentives for future compromise. The result? Either a weaker White House or a weaker Congress. Neither is good for democracy.

If House Democrats were truly interested in the facts, they would accept the offer to interview White House officials. Should they find a "smoking gun" meriting a public hearing, then Congress can consider subpoenas, contempt and even a court battle. Until then, Democrats should not risk the balance of power for their own temporary political gain.

Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, is the ranking Republican on the House Judiciary Committee.

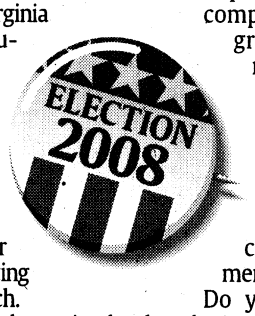
Students learn how to protect voting rights

It's a sad sign for our democracy when officials sworn to uphold our system try to prevent those newest to politics from getting involved, adding confusion to an already confusing process. ("Ballot box blues," Editorial, Sept. 12).

Unfortunately, a registrar's memo discouraging Virginia Tech students from voting locally is just the latest in a long history of attempts to disenfranchise student voters. This year, in an election when record numbers of young people are registering and hitting the polls, Rock the Vote is taking on voting rights as a core fight.

Recently, our first Rock Your Rights event, at Virginia Tech, brought students out to educate their peers about students' rights to vote in Virginia. Students registered to vote and found out how they could volunteer to protect their voting rights at Virginia Tech.



Rock the Vote is determined to ensure that every eligible young person be able to cast a ballot on Election Day. But we can't do it alone. In the weeks leading up to Nov. 4, we hope that elections officials will work with us, our volunteers and our partners so that all who want to are registered and can vote on Election Day.

Race always matters

When has race not been an issue in America ("Poll: Race may be issue for Obama in election," USATODAY.com, Saturday)?

As a freelance writer who is also a black American, I know that writing about race is probably the most difficult and touchiest subject one can tackle. I've been called racist by white colleagues simply because I write about race.

If Barack Obama does not win this election, the next chance a black American will have to win the White House will probably be in 400 years.

And as for race, when will the color of one's skin not matter in America? When our real enemies succeed in dropping that nuclear bomb on this great country, then and only then will the color of one's skin not matter because we won't have any.

McCain's many faces

USA TODAY's editorial on bipartisanship missed the forest for the trees ("Who's the better uniter?," Our view, Bipartisanship debate, Thursday).

Of course John McCain can cite more examples of working across the aisle. He has been in Washington longer. The piece failed to put enough emphasis on the fact that the McCain of 2008 is a far cry from previous incarnations. The McCain of today has taken extreme right positions on everything from Iraq to abortion to tax giveaways for corporations.

This Republican once favored comprehensive immigration reform but now says he wouldn't even vote for his own bill. Worse, the McCain of today has run one of the most dishonorable campaigns in recent memory.

Do you really believe that the McCain of 2008 could unite the country after the smear job he has run on Barack Obama? No, the new McCain sold out the old one a long time ago and with it any hope of uniting the country.

Garth Lewis
Sunnyvale, Calif.

Obama doesn't get it

Barack Obama's response " 'Unite the American people' " doesn't address the issues in USA TODAY's editorial. Rather, his response is political discourse at its best and is inflammatory (Opposing view, Bipartisanship debate, Thursday).

What senator has not fought to keep nuclear weapons out of terrorist hands? Also, doubling fuel-efficiency standards will not end our dependence on oil. McCain voted 85% of the time with Republicans and 90% of the time with President Bush, but Obama voted with his party 97% of the time. Where's the reaching out?

The examples Obama uses to show that he has reached across to Republicans are non-issues compared with Social Security reform, health reform, energy independence, financial integrity and anti-terrorism measures. (It isn't just about Iraq.)

I want straightforward truth. I've watched all the candidates. I see and feel truth with John McCain and Sarah Palin.

Eat healthy rather than genetically modify food

As a physician, I am deeply troubled by the Food and Drug Administration's proposed regulations that would allow genetically modified animals to be sold for human consumption. We have no idea how this would affect human health, wildlife, domesticated animals or the environment ("FDA moves on genetically altered animals," News, Friday).

The most disturbing part is that producing genetically engineered animals is completely unnecessary.

There is no need to use gene modification to make the meat from a pig contain nutrients such as omega-3 fatty acids (a healthy fat) when we can easily leave unhealthful foods off our plates.

Replacing meat, egg and dairy products with low-fat, high-fiber vegetarian foods is a simple solution for improving America's health. Numerous scientific studies have demonstrated the wide-ranging benefits of a plant-based diet, including lower rates of obesity, diabetes, heart disease and several cancers.

Consumers deserve to know whether the food they purchase came from genetically modified plants or animals, but knowing about the role of good nutrition in overall health, weight management and disease prevention could be even more beneficial to their well-being.

Push alternatives to oil

People who advocate drilling for oil in sensitive areas such as the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and off our coasts are uninformed, pandering to the oil companies or doing both.

All oil, regardless of where it comes from, is extracted by oil companies that sell it to the highest bidder on the worldwide market. It might be "our oil," but we don't control the processing and distribution of it, and it would not increase oil production enough to lower gasoline prices.

With some experts saying worldwide output is at or near its peak, and with demand growing faster than supply, oil prices will continue to rise. We all need to understand this. The only thing drilling for U.S. oil in sensitive areas of our country will accomplish is to increase oil company profits; it won't lower the price of gasoline.

We need to break our dependence on finite carbon-based fuels, regardless of their source, and shift as quickly as possible to renewable, sustainable, non-carbon-based energy sources. Until we act to achieve independence from finite energy sources, we will continue to lose jobs, strangle our economy and alter our environment.

Don't be fooled into supporting drilling for oil in sensitive areas.

Faithful should do more

"Jail and Jesus" was largely on the mark in pointing out that mainstream churches don't go far enough in addressing the root cause of incarceration. The faithful give lip service plus donations to prison ministry and preventive programs, and too many are content to dust the pews once a week (The Forum, Sept. 8).

That's why America is experiencing an exodus from those churches by people thirsting for a deeper, more meaningful relationship with God. And they are flocking to more conservative, Bible-teaching churches simply because these churches stress that we must individually answer Christ's call to action to minister to others and help them help themselves. I know; I'm one of them.

Teeming prisons call for individual response. I see it happening in the Christ-led responses of many friends who volunteer to work in prison ministries, who help fund and counsel inner-city youths, pregnant teens, divorced parents and people addicted to drugs. I see that Christ-led response in thousands who stock food banks and spend far more time than Uncle Sam does to help people recover from disasters.

We as a nation fail to fix what's eroding our foundation because it's not politically correct to bring God and moral values into the public square. That's why our jails will continue to teem with prisoners.

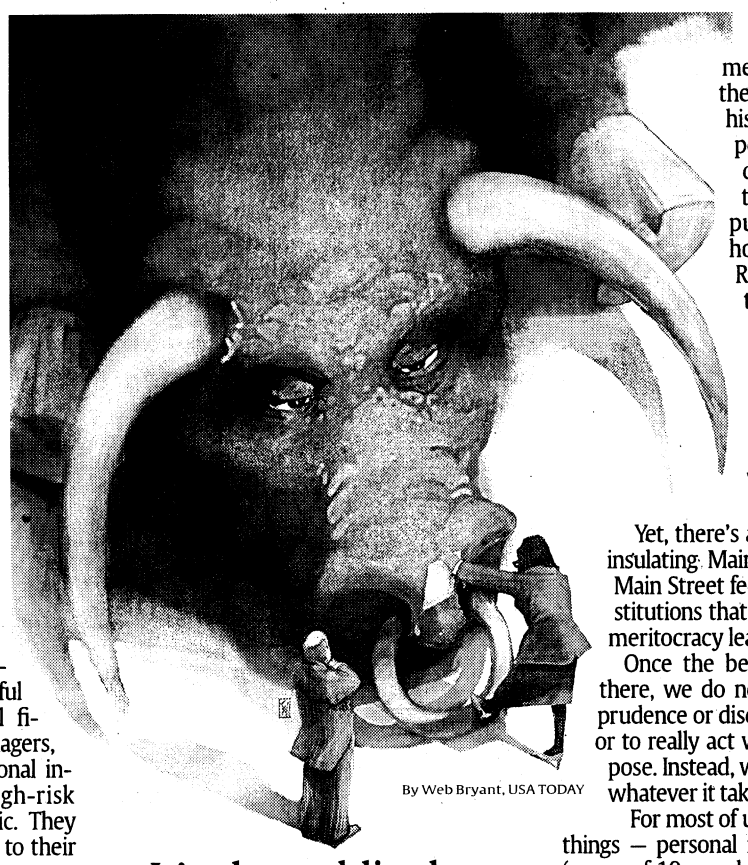
Main Street's blind faith

By Ted C. Fishman



By Web Bryant, USA TODAY

Main Street must be insulated from Wall Street, U.S. financial rescuers assert. Everyone, from the Democratic leadership in Congress to the (formerly) free-market gladiators of the Bush administration, has pledged to protect the lambs back home.

It is an appealing idea, straight out of a Frank Capra film: Crisis forces Americans to seize upon our better selves and rein in a corrupt elite. Using the financial clout of the U.S. government, we can keep the George Baileys safe from the Old Man Potters. All the recent rescues combined would add $1 trillion to the U.S. government debt, but by gum we're gonna do this. Tell the newspaper boys and bloggers to get the word out: The American public is back.

Main Streeters have every reason to believe that the financial crisis is indeed a massive moral failure of America's elite. Over time, the most powerful moneyed interests rigged the global financial system so that money managers, banks and a rarified class of institutional investors profited from massive high-risk schemes that beggared financial logic. They never fully heeded the potential costs to their clients or the public.

Every investment has a risk-reward balance, but in the world Wall Street made, the reward went to its own, and the risk went to the rest of the world. The financial sector worked Washington, with hundreds of millions of dollars in political lobbying and donations, to strip away prudent regulation and to install watchdogs that came from Wall Street's kennels.

The minor leagues

Step back a bit from the marquee players in the financial crisis, and the failures of the elites run even deeper. Begin with the institutions that groom America's best and brightest for lucrative Wall Street careers, our great public and private universities. The top universities in the USA, especially their business schools and law schools, are the "farm teams" of the power elite. Though their host institutions claim to promote truth and service, the ethics of the business schools that fed the firms now costing the nation so dearly is strictly survival-of-the-fittest Social Darwinism.

If that sounds paranoid, ask Michael Lissack, holder of an MBA from the Yale School of Management and a genuine — albeit reformed — scoundrel who in the mid-1990s, while at Smith Barney, took part in a rich fraud scheme in municipal finance. Business schools now invite him to give courses on ethics. Mostly, his classes are ignored because, Lissack says, "ethical education in business school is a joke."

It's the public that feeds the Wall Street beast. In fact, now is the time to end this cyclical con game.

He adds: "In finance and accounting, you're basically taught how to look for loopholes you can drive a truck through."

Lissack's view is mirrored in a 2004 report by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business, a group that grants accreditation to MBA programs. The report addressed the concern that schools are "teaching students to bend the rules to make the numbers" and "gloss over ethical conduct in examining business transactions and ... encourage students to bypass policies, procedures and even the law to ensure favorable results." No wonder the legions whom business schools send to Wall Street stir trillion-dollar scandals. In the movies, fat-cat scoundrels always get the public shaming they deserve. Maybe Main Street should demand the same of university presidents and business school chiefs. Churches excommunicate sinners, maybe universities might disown the schemers they graduate.

How about we force the perpetrators of the meltdown to give up some of the money they reaped. For his role is overseeing the vaporization of a $46 billion company, stoking panic through the economy and putting taxpayers on the hook, Lehman Bros. chief Richard Fuld gets to keep the $466 million the firm paid him over the years, and he'll likely get at least $5 million in final compensation when he walks out the darkened offices.

Whatever it takes

Yet, there's a problem with the idea of insulating Main Street from Wall Street. Main Street feeds Wall Street and the institutions that serve it. It is the place our meritocracy leads to.

Once the best and the brightest land there, we do not want them to teach us prudence or discipline, to espouse wisdom or to really act with a sense of public purpose. Instead, we entrust Wall Street to do whatever it takes to, well, bail us out.

For most of us, being smart is hard. Bad things — personal reversals, business failures (seven of 10 new businesses go dark) and big forces, such as the current crisis — often dash our best plans. We might lack the ability or moral fiber to save. Smart people, we hope, will bail us out by extending credit when it is otherwise unwise, by selling us stock or real estate that will let us ride a speculative boom, or by crafting mutual funds or hedge funds assured to miraculously outperform the overall market (which they seldom do). They work their magic for nearly every institution in our lives, often with fantastic promises.

Despite whopping scandals, Main Street never reins in the smart guys. We can't even stop conning ourselves. Think the banks, insurers and investment firms are unique in playing chicken with our private nest eggs and the public treasure? State and local governments have $2.73 trillion in unfunded pension and retiree health care liabilities over the next 30 years, and Medicare will go broke in the next decade, just to name two untenable schemes we're all party to. If we paid our smart people to deliver sense, and we chose to listen, then they would pour themselves into public purpose. Even if Main Street finds some temporary insulation from Wall Street's woes, it still won't rein in our moral failings that push us to extremes.

Palin's Alaska makes case on climate change

By Michael A. Levi and Scott G. Borgerson

BARROW, Alaska — Eight years ago, George W. Bush campaigned on a promise that he would cap carbon dioxide emissions from power plants in a bid to combat global warming. His running mate, Dick Cheney, was not a fan. Soon after coming into office, they ditched the plan.

John McCain has shown far more commitment to confronting climate change than Bush has, but his teaming up with Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin, who doubts that climate change is man-made, should raise worries that we will see a repeat performance if they are elected. McCain, who conspicuously avoided the words "climate change" and "global warming" when he accepted the Republican nomination, needs to reaffirm in no uncertain terms his commitment to vigorously combat climate change — and he needs to make his running mate do the same.

Plenty of signs of Arctic ice melt

Palin knows that something is amiss with the climate. In the same interview in which she rejected the scientific consensus on global warming, she noted that "a changing environment will affect Alaska more than any other state." She is undoubtedly right. In travels around the state last month, we witnessed how Alaska is changing.

In Fairbanks, we met with top polar scientists and discussed the historically low ice coverage in the Arctic. In Barrow, where the Chukchi and Beaufort seas meet, we observed — or more precisely did not observe — this literal sea change, as the ice that had been present off the Arctic shore weeks earlier was long gone. The Arctic's ice is melting much faster than experts predicted. The ice near the North Pole has lost as much as half its thickness in the past seven years alone, and the fabled Arctic passages have just opened together for the first time.

These physical effects are having wide-ranging implications. We spent a week on board the U.S. Coast Guard Cutter Spar as it began a voyage from Kodiak Island through the Bering Strait, which separates the U.S. from Russia, to the U.S.-Canada border in the distant Arctic, a mission that no one would have contemplated even a few years ago. The Spar dropped us in Kivalina, where we visited with tribal leaders and Army engineers. The vanishing ice pack has exposed that small Inupiat community to storm surges that are washing their home away.

Total political support needed for change

These signs are only the beginning — but they will become far worse if we allow global emissions to grow unchecked. And we will succeed in tackling the problem only if we do it with broad political support. That is why Palin should immediately and explicitly embrace McCain's support for a mandatory cap-and-trade system.

McCain should learn from Palin, too. Alaska has begun a concerted effort to adapt to climate change — and the U.S. will need to match a comprehensive effort to cut emissions with a national adaptation strategy. Emphasizing this as they speak, even if it rankles the most hard-line supporters, would be in keeping with their self-styled images as mavericks and reformists.

Or McCain could let Palin slowly but undeniably undercut the growing GOP support, which he has led, for strong action to confront our greenhouse gas emissions. In a "drill, baby, drill" world, it would be the politically convenient choice. It would also be a shame.

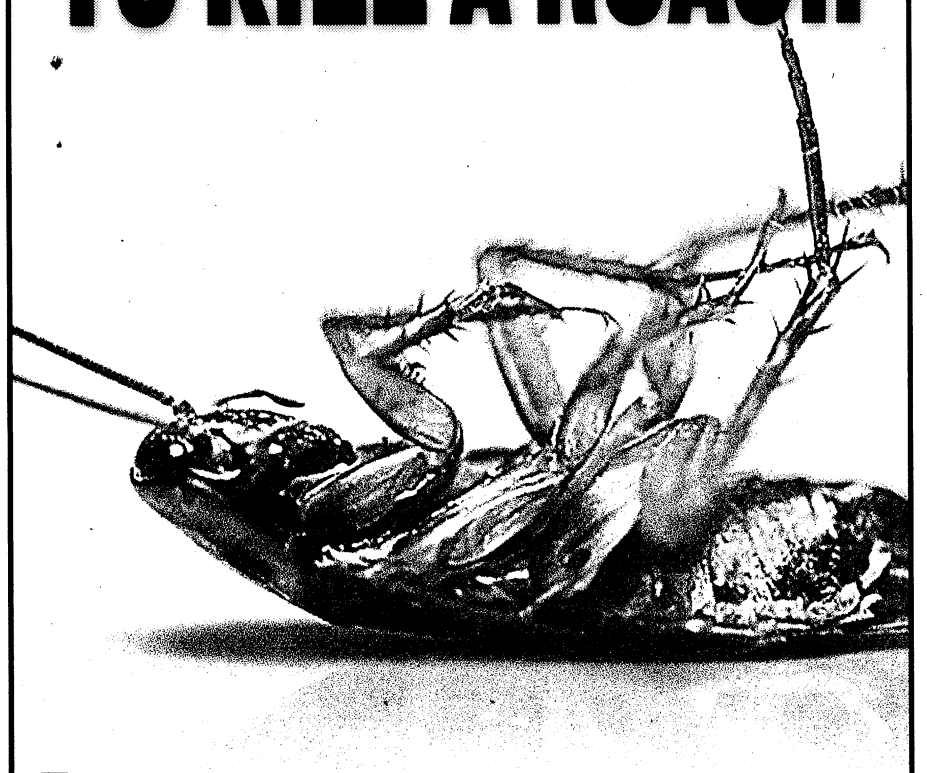
A GREENER WAY TO KILL A ROACH



Today it seems everyone is moving toward becoming "green" and detoxifying their life. While this may be a new concept for some, we've been doing it for over 86 years. Mr. P. F. Harris was commissioned in 1922 to rid the White House of roaches and other pests. Harris "Famous Roach Tablets" were so revolutionary, they were granted a patent and are now the oldest EPA registered roach killer in America. Made with boric acid, and our famous special lure, roaches can't resist eating the tablets. Sold for years in Publix Super Markets and hardware stores, today Harris Famous Roach Tablets are being discovered by a new generation looking for a greener, and effective way to kill a roach.

Writers of lovesick songs have often used rain to express heartache, perhaps none as effectively as Carole King and Howard Greenfield in Crying in the Rain. The song was a hit for The Everly Brothers in 1961, peaking at #6 on the Billboard chart. Cover versions by Tammy Wynette and Norwegian group, a-ha, have also hit the charts.

Stocks fall on bailout uncertainty

Stocks sold off late in the day Tuesday as investors grew frustrated that the proposed $700 billion bailout for the financial system appears to be hung up in Congress. The Dow Jones industrial average ended up losing 161.52 points, or 1.5%, to 10,854.17 despite having been up nearly 130 points earlier in the day. Bond investors also got slightly more cautious, running back to government debt and pushing the yield, which moves opposite of price, on two-year Treasuries down 0.09 percentage points to 2.08%. (Bailout plan, 1A; markets stumble, 4B.)

Senate OKs renewable energy package

The Senate on Tuesday approved a package to extend $18 billion in tax credits for using renewable energy and also provide incentives to cut energy consumption. Breaks for solar energy investment would be extended eight years. The tax credit for producing electricity from wind would be extended for one year and for other renewable sources, such as wave and ocean tide projects, for two years. To cover the costs, the oil industry would pay higher taxes. The House must still vote on the measure.

Oil prices trade lower

Oil prices fell Tuesday after Monday's record-setting rally, dropping below $107 a barrel as concerns over the U.S. financial bailout plan and a stronger dollar led investors to shed commodities. Light, sweet crude for November delivery fell $2.76 to $106.61. Some decline was to be expected after crude soared 16% on Monday, the biggest one-day gain ever, partly because speculators scrambled to cover their positions as the October contract expired. DuPont names first female CEO

DuPont has named Ellen Kullman its chief executive, making her one of the most powerful women in industry and marking the first time in DuPont's 206-year history that a woman has taken its helm. Kullman, 52, will take over Jan. 1 from Charles Holliday, who is retiring after heading the U.S. chemical company for more than 10 years. Kullman was also named president and a director of the company, effective Oct. 1. Holliday, 60, will serve as chairman of DuPont and as a board member until Kullman's expected succession as chairman, DuPont said.

Wall Street in Crisis

Bailout could pinch executive pay

But targeting compensation may lead to regulatory snarl

By Edward Iwata
USA TODAY

The proposed $700 billion bailout bill for the financial industry will intensify the scrutiny of highly paid executives — a long-running flashpoint between shareholders and companies.

Frank Glassner, CEO of the Compensation Design Group, says the financial meltdown is forcing lawmakers and businesses to more closely examine pay practices and "to ask whether it is fair, appropriate and under control."

A House of Representatives' proposal would limit pay incentives that encourage executives to take "inappropriate or excessive" risks. It would also prohibit firms aided by the government from paying severance to executives.

The bill also could include so-called clawbacks, allowing the government to recoup executives' pay if it is pegged to earnings or other measures that are "later proven to be false and inaccurate."

The Federal Housing Finance Agency has already said it won't pay millions of dollars in severance to former CEOs of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which the government took over this month.

Wall Street executives rank among the highest-paid executives anywhere, with 50% of investment bank earnings going to their pay, according to Charles Elson, director of the University of Delaware's Weinberg Center for Corporate Governance.

But linking pay limits to bailout legislation will lead to more regulatory headaches and confusion about complex pay practices, he warns.

"The bill clouds the pay issue," Elson says. "It's like a guy with a coronary going to the emergency room but getting his knee fixed."

Corporate boards, the Securities and Exchange Commission and shareholders' attorneys already can recover the pay of executives who engage in questionable or illegal behavior.

Last year, in the largest stock-option backdating corporate scandal, former UnitedHealth CEO William McGuire returned $600 million in cash and stock pay to UnitedHealth and shareholders.

Companies from Citigroup to GE also are steadily adopting clawback practices. According to the Corporate Library research firm, 295 of 2,121 companies surveyed earlier this year have adopted clawback policies — up from 14 companies in 2003.

If Congress decides to limit pay, Glassner says, executives should be paid "reasonable and competitive amounts" but without guarantees, to prevent excessive pay if a company or executive fails or falls short of financial criteria.

Given the unprecedented scope of the bailout plan and its impact on public dollars, Glassner says executives' pay should be based on the money returned to taxpayers and the government.

"Since taxpayers are being asked to pick up the bill," he says, "pay should be linked to a metric that measures return to the taxpayers. Why not, in a case like this?"

Weighing the value of the unwanted

Pricing mortgage-backed securities will be tough

By John Waggoner and Matt Krantz
USA TODAY

You probably know how much your checking account is worth. You may well know what your company's stock is worth.

But what if you had to put a price on that '87 Dodge Omni rusting in the driveway? Your collection of Beanie Babies? How about that chipped Wedgewood you picked up at Bill's Scratch 'n Dent Shoppe?

Some things are easy to price. Others, not so much. And that's the $700 billion problem facing the U.S. Treasury: how to value vast amounts of mortgage-backed securities that no one wants to buy.

Cover story

And buy them they must, the government says: Otherwise, the credit crisis will continue to worsen, threatening the entire financial system.

But figuring out how much to pay is the one of the thorniest issues the government has had to wrestle with to date. Pay too much, and the government will look like patsies of the securities industry. Pay too little, and the Treasury will drive some financial services companies out of business. And ultimately, no matter what the government pays for Wall Street's garbage securities, investors, taxpayers and politicians will argue that the price wasn't right.

Buffett swoops in, buys $5B stake in Goldman

Bank plans $2.5B stock sale; CEO calls infusion 'strong validation'

By Kathy Chu
USA TODAY

In a move it hopes will ease concerns about its liquidity, Goldman Sachs said Tuesday that it would raise at least $7.5 billion by selling stakes in the company to famed investor Warren Buffett and to the public.

That comes two days after Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley — which were the last big investment banks standing — received permission to convert to bank holding companies partly to gain more access to customer deposits, long considered a stable source of funding for financial institutions.

Under the agreement, Goldman will sell $5 billion of preferred stock to Buffett's company, Berkshire Hathaway, giving it 10% of total shareholders' equity. Separately, Goldman expects to raise at least $2.5 billion by selling stock in a public offering.

Joseph Mason, a banking professor at Louisiana State University, said that Buffett buying the stake means that "either Goldman is a great investment on its own, or the (contemplated government) bailout is so valuable that it makes sense to invest in banks" that may benefit.

Lloyd Blankfein, CEO of Goldman, said in a statement that the firm views the investment as "strong validation" of its business prospects.

Buffett, meanwhile, said in a statement that Goldman has an "unrivaled global franchise, a proven and deep management team" and the financial strength to outperform the industry.

The investment gives Goldman flexibility to grow its business, says Tom Marsico, founder of Marsico Capital Management — which owns 4% of Goldman on behalf of its clients — by giving it a "cushion of capital to buy distressed (financial) assets."

Berkshire will receive warrants it can exercise within five years to buy $5 billion of common stock at $115 a share. Berkshire's preferred stock carries a dividend of 10%.

Big dealmaker: Warren Buffett.

Goldman's stock rose $4.27 to $125.05 ahead of news of the investment late Tuesday, then topped $135 in after-hours trading. Last week, the stock hit a four-year low of $85.88 before rebounding, amid the bankruptcy filing of rival Lehman Bros. and the hasty sale of Merrill Lynch to Bank of America.

Less than a year ago, Goldman was posting record profits and paying record bonuses: Blankfein and his two top deputies reaped payouts totaling more than $67 million for 2007.

The company, while suffering from a decline in trading and investment banking revenue, has booked $4.9 billion of losses on devalued assets. That's a fraction of the write-downs taken by rivals such as Citigroup, Merrill Lynch and Morgan Stanley.

Morgan got its own cash infusion Monday, agreeing to sell a 20% stake for more than $8 billion to Mitsubishi UFJ Financial of Japan.

SEC chief urges oversight of credit-default swaps

Cox asks Congress to act soon to protect investors

By Kevin McCoy
USA TODAY

Congress should approve federal oversight of credit-default swaps, an unregulated, $62 trillion market of investment contracts that have been cited as a factor in the nation's financial crisis, the nation's top securities regulator said Tuesday.

Testifying at a Senate Banking Committee hearing, Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Christopher Cox described the lack of oversight as a potentially costly mistake Washington should address "to enhance investor protection."

Credit-default swaps are insurance-like contracts issued to cover potential losses on corporate debt, municipal bonds or mortgage securities. Typically sold by banks and hedge funds, they are designed to provide protection against any defaults.

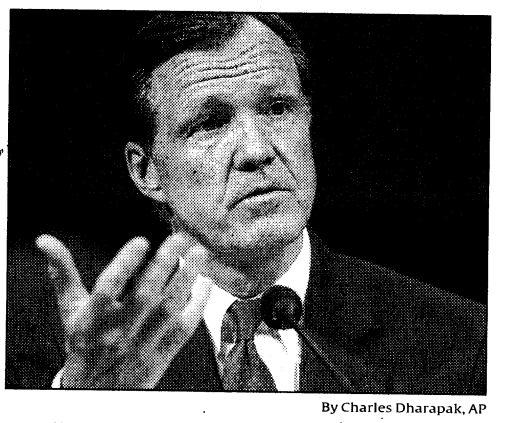
The nation's commercial banks held $180.3 trillion in derivative contracts during the first quarter of 2008, with more than half that total in credit-default swaps, according to data from the federal Comptroller of the Currency.

Cox warned that investors in the fast-growing market are tantamount to short sellers of the municipal or corporate bonds covered by credit-default swaps, because the investors profit if the bonds default.

Over the last decade, speculators have increasingly used credit-default swaps to place investment bets on a given company's failure.

Moreover, investors aren't required to own the bonds upon which credit-default swaps are based. This has led to widespread buying by speculative investors in so-called naked swaps, or naked shorts — bets on bond defaults.

"This potential for unfettered naked shorting and the lack of regulation in this market are cause for great concern," said Cox, who urged Congress to act on the issue after action on the proposed $700 billion bailout of the U.S. financial industry.



By Charles Dharapak, AP

SEC chairman: Christopher Cox testifies Tuesday before the Senate Banking Committee.

Cox's recommendation, echoed by Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, came one day after New York Gov. David Paterson announced that his state's insurance department would regulate credit-default swaps starting Jan. 1.

The International Swaps and Derivatives Association, however, said it opposes government oversight apart from efforts to guard against manipulation of the credit-defaults swap market.

"Proposals which would seek to treat privately negotiated contracts as securities, or otherwise apply ill-fitting regulatory regimes to these agreements, are likely to deter healthy economic activity," Robert Pickel, the association's executive director and chief executive officer, said in a statement Tuesday.

▶ Shaping the bailout plan, 1A

But Tano Santos, a finance professor at the Columbia University Graduate School of Business, said the current "opaque" market makes it difficult to determine a given company's financial risk from credit-default swaps.

"It is precisely because of the decentralization of this market that we have seen this (financial industry) distress," said Santos.

Treasury may have hard time deciding how much to pay for securities

Sliced and diced

Mark Batatian, president of Prudential American pricing services, has been valuing obscure securities for 40 years. If you want to know General Motors' closing price on Feb. 20, 1956, or the value of that dusty stock certificate in grandpa's closet, he could find it for you. And his company, like many others on Wall Street, can give you a good estimate of a security's worth if it hasn't traded for a long time.

Cover story

He values many mortgage-backed securities all the time. "They have benchmarks for those," he says. "You have a public record on a daily basis." But what about the types the Treasury will be buying? No clue. "They are totally in the ozone," he says. "No one knows what's right."

Ironically, the overwhelming majority of mortgages aren't hard to value. Mortgages are negotiable, which means they can be bought and sold. If you have a mortgage, your note has probably been sold several times, often as part of a pool of mortgages sold to mutual funds, pension funds and insurance companies.

Those overwhelming majority of mortgage-backed securities are traded frequently, and therefore, easily valued. Unfortunately, the mortgage-backed bonds that are causing so many problems are really and truly awful. Many, for example, are filled with subprime mortgages, which are home loans made to people with poor credit histories. When the economy is in recession, these people are usually most prone to defaulting on their loans.

Other mortgage-backed securities are chock-full of creative financing options that were popular during the housing boom. Some, for example, have low initial payments that can soar after a year or two. Others are "low-doc" or "no-doc" loans, which means, essentially, that a borrower didn't have to prove capable of repayment. In the mortgage business, those became known as "liar loans."

Even subprime mortgages are reasonably easy to value. But Wall Street sliced and diced many of the mortgage-backed securities created during the housing bubble, making them much harder to value. Many had various classes of holdings. The senior class, for example, would get first claim on all payments from the pool. In return, because it had less risk, its yield would be the lowest of all the pool's classes.

Each class would be a bit lower in the pecking order. To offset the risk of losses, however, each successively lower class of security would get a higher yield. In a normal housing market, only the very lowest class would expect to get dinged by defaults.

In the greatest housing collapse since the Great Depression, however, many investors wound up getting stuck with defaults. And because Wall Street looks ahead, not behind, buyers fretted about rising defaults, and offered lower prices to anyone who wanted to sell securities backed by subprime mortgages.

Eventually, the worst happened: Just as investment banks, hedge funds and other big institutions wanted to unload their subprime mortgages, buyers disappeared. And when there are no sales, it's nearly impossible to price a security.

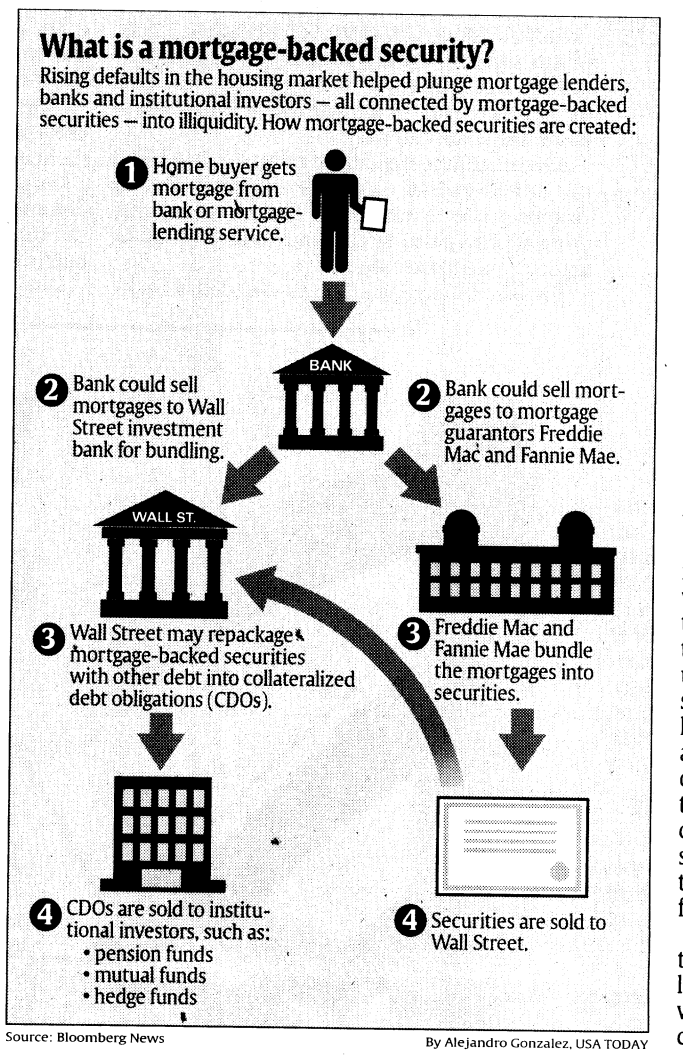
Educated guesses

The Treasury, then, is left in the difficult position of naming a price for assets that no one else will buy. And that's where things get tricky. Some possible approaches:

▶ Fire sale. Not everyone thinks that the market for mortgage-backed securities, even subprime ones, is dead. "There is a market for these assets, but the sellers don't want to accept the price," says Alessandro Pagani, senior securitized asset strategist at Loomis Sayles. Merrill Lynch effectively sold a massive chunk of mortgage securities at the distressed price of 22 cents on the dollar. Those securities were collateralized debt obligations, which are more complex and riskier than most mortgage-backed securities, Pagani says, and most of what the Treasury will be buying should fetch higher prices, even at a fire sale.

The drawback: Banks and other institutions would have to book the sale as a loss — meaning they would probably have to raise more money as a cushion against future losses. And that's very difficult to do in the current market environment.

▶ Reverse auction. Unlike a regular auction, where many players put in bids for one item, a reverse auction would have only one bidder: the Treasury. Several financial companies would offer their assets to the Treasury and give an offering price. The Treasury would take the lowest bid, in theory setting the price at the lowest level that companies feel they could afford to take.



Source: Bloomberg News

By Alejandro Gonzalez, USA TODAY

The drawback: Reverse auctions can be complicated to set up, particularly because you need to have a reasonable number of companies offering very similar securities. Given the vast array of securities that Wall Street produced in the past five years, that could be tough.

▶ Future payouts. Accountants are trained to measure assets' value by examining what equal or comparable securities are trading for. It's not unlike how you can figure out how much your Pez dispenser is worth by looking for completed auctions on eBay. Robert Maltbie of Singular Research estimates that a price of 30 cents on the dollar for the debt is prudent, based on recent transactions.

Lacking a market, one solution might be to measure the value using the so-called discounted cash flow approach, says Colum Chan, chief investment officer at CC Investments. Here, analysts can estimate how much cash the investments will generate each year as mortgage borrowers continue to make their payments, then adjust those cash flows based on the interest rate a buyer would demand to be paid for taking the risk.

This method, used by some stock and bond investors, would allow the government to estimate the value of the securities and perhaps pay a reasonable price, which the market is unable to pay due to excessive fear of the unknowns, he says. "If the government sells when things start calming down, taxpayers might end up winning in this one," he says.

The drawbacks: Not having an active market to indicate what the securities are worth isn't the only challenge. There's also the problem of not knowing just how high the delinquency and foreclosure rates will ultimately be on the securities, Maltbie says. The delinquency rate on mortgage loans finished the second quarter at 6.4%, and the foreclosure rate was 2.75%, according to the latest data available from the Mortgage Bankers Association. It's unclear how ugly things could get, Maltbie says. During the Depression, Maltbie says, the delinquency rate ended at 27% and the foreclosure rate at 10%.

Even if the current crisis gets as bad as the Depression, Maltbie estimates, the loans the government is taking over would ultimately be worth closer to 80 cents on the dollar. And since the government can be patient and hold the securities rather than dump them at the same time and drive down the price, there's a greater chance taxpayers will get that value back.

But the cost in the short term is unavoidable, as the government is forced to borrow more to cover the losses. Maltbie estimates that the price tag will end up being $300 a year on average per taxpayer for the next 10 years if taxpayers are left holding the bag and there is no workout or resale of the mortgages. And that's the decision that Congress — and the Treasury — is wrestling with now.

Chrysler pulls some electric cars out of its hat

Automaker plans a full line of plug-in vehicles

By Sharon Silke Carty
USA TODAY

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Chrysler on Tuesday showed three plug-in electric cars, one of which will be in showrooms in 2010 as part of a plan to eventually use electric power in some form across its entire product lineup.

The automaker has quietly watched General Motors tout its own plug-in electric Chevrolet Volt, unveiled in production form last week. The Volt, built on a new E-Flex platform that might be used for a variety of vehicles, also is to go on sale in 2010.

Autos
Going green

"We've kept a pretty good secret here, perhaps because we haven't tooted our own horns," said Tom LaSorda, vice chairman and president of manufacturing and business development for Chrysler. "We believe action speaks louder than words."

Chrysler's strategy is to integrate electric power into existing products rather than create a new vehicle. Executives say that lets Chrysler focus on developing the powertrain without the design and production issues of an all-new model and provides flexibility to use it in many models.

"We're not talking about a car, we're talking about a full line," said Chrysler CEO Bob Nardelli. "We are staking out a leadership role in the future of the automobile."

The newbies: Chrysler unveiled three plug-in prototypes: a sports car, a minivan and a Jeep.

Alternative powertrains such as the one Chrysler showed on Tuesday are investments the industry might have to scale back, Nardelli said, if Congress fails to approve money for $25 billion in loans promised in last year's energy bill to help automakers retool plants for more fuel-efficient cars.

Without the loans, Nardelli says, "We are going to have to make some very tough trade-offs."

An electric powertrain with a small backup gasoline engine to recharge the batteries after about 40 miles when the plug-in charge is used up was shown in a Chrysler Town & Country minivan and a Jeep Wrangler. Also on display was an all-electric Dodge sports car called the EV. It has only a lithium-ion battery with a range of about 150 miles before it must be recharged externally.

At least one of the three will go on sale in 2010; Chrysler said it has not decided which. The electric models will cost a yet-to-be-determined amount more than the gas equivalents but will be one-fifth to one-sixth cheaper to run, Chrysler says.

Buyers of pure electric cars, such as the Chevrolet Volt and the model Chrysler decides to produce, could qualify for a tax credit up to $7,500 under energy legislation passed Tuesday by the Senate. It's unclear if plug-in hybrids planned by several automakers would qualify. The measure still needs to be passed in the House and signed by the president.

Most massively multiplayer online role-playing games are about conflict: fantastic clashes between warriors, wizards, aliens, orcs and elves.

And unlike most video games that have a plot and an ending, MMOs (massively multiplayer online games) are living, evolving virtual worlds that players can explore and influence. They're hugely popular — and lucrative.

The current behemoth, World of Warcraft, has 10 million-plus active members that spend $40 to $60 to buy the game, then pay a $15 monthly subscription fee. Most MMOs run on PCs or Macs with interactive features and new content delivered via an Internet connection.

Now there's a battle involving MMOs going on in the real world, as gamemakers attempt to challenge, or at least siphon off some of the success of, World of Warcraft. New strategies include design changes to make it easier to woo new players, as well as MMOs based on popular franchises such as Star Trek and Star Wars. At stake: a U.S. market expected to amount to about $800 million this year, compared with $700 million last year and $332 million in 2004, says market research firm DFC Intelligence.

The newest skirmisher is Warhammer Online: Age of Reckoning, published by Electronic Arts and created by Mythic Entertainment. Launched last week, the game shipped 1.5 million copies to retailers, a record for initial PC game shipments at industry giant EA.

Although the companies wouldn't provide sales specifics, "We are either the or one of the fastest-selling MMOs of all time," says Mythic co-founder Mark Jacobs.

A big investment

Warhammer is based on a Tolkien-esque fantasy universe similar to Dungeons and Dragons. Players can explore performing individual and group quests that give their character (such as a warrior, healer, priest or magician) increased power and skills.

Mythic, based in Fairfax, Va., began work on Warhammer in fall 2005; EA acquired Mythic in June 2006. The company's offices are covered in drawings of monsters, weapons and fantastical environments and decorated with hundreds of handcrafted items sent from fans.

Playing: Warhammer players fight alongside the armies of Order or Destruction to defend their territories and conquer enemy realms. At top is an orc, an organic war machine.

During a recent visit, one of the several floors Mythic had grown to inhabit teemed with 150 customer service trainees. They were exploring the game universe and receiving instruction on handling call-in and online problems. More than 250 people have worked on Warhammer over the past three years.

Jacobs would not comment on the cost of developing the game. But Michael Pachter, analyst at Wedbush Morgan Securities, estimates that EA and Mythic may have invested $50 million.

With Warhammer, Mythic is changing the MMO rules by making the game easier for players who might not have enough time to commit to long sessions. (Many MMOs require hours devoted each week to advance your characters.) That might appeal to some longtime players — and attract newcomers, too.

"You can literally step into our game for 15 minutes and have a really interesting experience," says the game's executive producer, Jeff Hickman. "Or you could spend five hours playing our game."

Finding ways to attract new MMO players or keep current ones strengthens a proven business model. "If you have a game that's successful, it's a recurring revenue stream," Pachter says. "The success of World of Warcraft has emboldened competitors to put ever-increasing amounts into the development of their games because they now see the potential is well beyond a million subscribers, if you do it right."

The MMO market has expanded "in size and shape beyond what anyone thought possible a decade ago," says Mark Arsenault, editor-in-chief of Massive Gamer magazine.

Growing competition

Arsenault expects to see many more MMOs based on familiar properties. Games already in the works include DC Universe Online, which features Batman, Superman, Wonder Woman and The Flash; Star Trek Online, based on the popular television show; and Stargate Worlds, tied to the cable TV sci-fi franchise. BioWare, makers of the Knights of the Old Republic video game spinoff of the Star Wars movies, is working on a similar MMO, according to Arsenault.

Developers and publishers of these games and others will be watching Warhammer's campaign in this changing market. If Mythic and EA cannot succeed long term, others may be leery of entering the marketplace. "They are putting their stake in the ground," says DFC Intelligence analyst David Cole.

There's a lot to lose. Notable MMO flameouts include attempts at broadening the market, such as The Sims Online and The Matrix Online, each of which cost $20 million or so to develop. "Nothing has really come along to match World of Warcraft," Cole says. "It's a really great business model if you can make it work. The profits you can reap if you have a successful product is huge. But actually being able to do that, that's the killer."

Cole estimates that a "monster" MMO could achieve a 40% profit margin, or nearly half of the monthly fees. With subscribers of 500,000, that could reach $7.5 million.

"If you can get to 500,000 (subscribers), you can be very profitable," Pachter says. "At 1 million, the initial investment can be repaid quickly."

Mythic has a history in the MMO space. It launched Dark Age of Camelot in 2001, and the well-regarded MMO is still in business. Its size doesn't rival Warcraft (Camelot had 250,000 players at its peak), but "Over the years, millions have gone through the game," Jacobs says.

Warhammer need not vanquish World of Warcraft to succeed in its quest to offer another MMO alternative, Jacobs says. "We don't need to expand the market in order to succeed," he says. "So many more people now play these games than have ever played in the past."

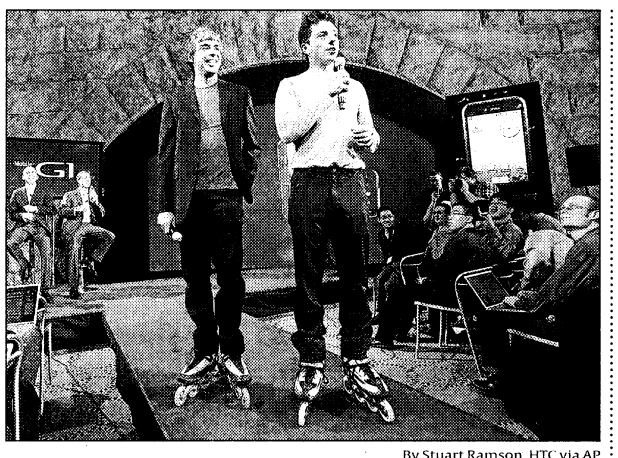
Google vaults into global wireless ring with G1 phone

T-Mobile first up with co-branded gizmo

By Leslie Cauley
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — The Google phone, called the G1, made its long-awaited debut Tuesday in New York, officially marking the arrival of Google to the big-stakes game of global wireless.

T-Mobile is the first U.S. carrier to offer the device, which will cost $179. Consumers must sign a two-year contract for data and voice. Data plans will start at $25 a month. The device won't be available until Oct. 22, but buyers can pre-order on T-Mobile's website.



By Stuart Ramson, HTC via AP

Technically, it was T-Mobile's announcement, but there was no doubt about who was running the show: Google. To get the device, consumers must register for a Gmail account, Google's e-mail service.

Rich Miner, group manager of mobile platforms at Google, says the requirement is tied to synchronization of the device's calendar, address book and other applications. The synchronization process owes to the design of Android, the new mobile operating system used by the G1, which was also developed by Google.

Miner says G1 achieves what Google had hoped for: a device "that delivers the best mobile Google experience" possible.

In another nod to Google, the G1 is being co-branded. The tagline: "G1 with Google."

Cole Brodman, T-Mobile's chief technology officer, says the carrier likes the association because, "Google is the face of the Internet." Brodman downplayed the Gmail requirement, noting that customers don't have to actually use it. "You just have to sign up."

Still, some may find the requirement "objectionable," says Morgan Gillis of LiMo, a global coalition that supports the idea of open-platform mobile phones. "This brings up a big question about freedom of choice."

Roger Entner, senior vice president of Nielsen IAG, says the Gmail requirement serves a larger purpose for Google: It creates a "unique identifier" for each customer that can be used, eventually, "to target ads to you. That's why they did Android — to help satisfy Google's need for ad revenue" from the mobile Web.

Miner says that's not Google's plan, although he acknowledges that the G1 clearly focuses on Google.

"You wouldn't be buying a co-branded phone" with Google's name on it "if you didn't want Google services," Miner says.

T-Mobile, for its part, is hoping to use the G1 to drive sales, Brodman says. "We hope to sell lots and lots of devices."

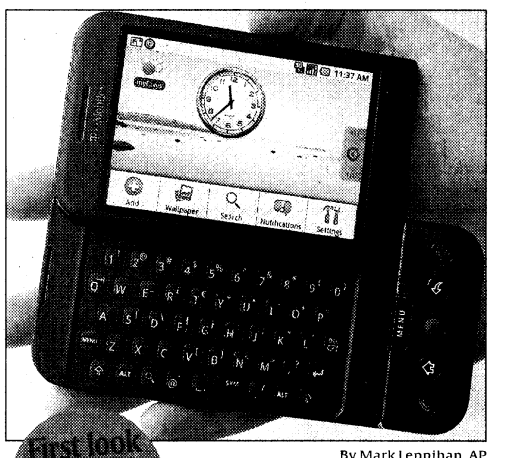
T-Mobile, owned by German phone giant Deutsche Telekom, is the No. 4 wireless provider, with about 25 million subscribers. The carrier has been building a 3G wireless network across the USA, with the goal of generating revenue from advanced services such as Wi-Fi, mobile broadband and video calling as consumer interest in the mobile Web soars.

T-Mobile's G1 is homely but not bad

Personal Technology
By Edward C. Baig

Don't expect to see long lines around T-Mobile stores when the G1 — the first phone to run on Google's Android mobile software platform — goes on sale next month.

Sure, the device has such niceties as a slide-out qwerty keyboard and touch screen. Consumers can download applications, some free, from the Android Market storefront. There's also an MP3 store from Amazon. And it comes with a 1-gigabyte SD card that can hold about 500 songs (expandable to 8GB).



By Mark Lennihan, AP

Nice: The G1 has a slide-out keyboard and easy access to Gmail and YouTube.

The device has GPS location-smarts, Bluetooth, Wi-Fi, voice recognition and an iPhone-like "accelerometer" motion sensor. There's easy one-touch access to Gmail, YouTube and Google Maps Street View (complete with a built-in compass). Tap your finger, and an HTML-Web browser with a zoom function expands the screen size. Alas, you cannot pinch the screen to expand Web pages as you can on an iPhone. Still the interface, which I want to test further, has potential. I like the way you can drag menus down from the top of the screen.

That said, in an era when good looks and fashion count nearly as much as the smarts within the device, the 5.6-ounce G1 won't win any beauty contests. The hardware — made by HTC — comes in black, white or brown and is frankly homely next to an iPhone or a newer BlackBerry.

The G1, for now, is aimed at consumers rather than the large businesses that Research In Motion dominates with its BlackBerry. There's no Microsoft Exchange support for corporate e-mail at this stage or any way to sync up Outlook contacts.

Indeed, there's something of an unfinished feel to the device. "As a first effort it's not bad," says Michael Gartenberg an analyst with Jupitermedia.

"Not bad" is about my take, too, at least based on the little time I've had to spend with it. Whether "not bad" is good enough in this highly competitive space remains to be seen, though having Google's market power and financial resources ought to help.

T-Mobile is only now pushing out its 3G, or third-generation, network in certain markets; the phone presumably will not work as well in areas of marginal 3G coverage. (That's where Wi-Fi may help in certain instances.)

Google is also pushing Android's "openness" with third-party developments. Google's Andy Rubin says that makes it "future-proof." But for all the benefits to openness, all consumers want are fun and/or useful applications.

I did spend a few minutes playing Pac-Man on the device and briefly checked out ShopSavvy, which lets you compare prices and bring up product information by scanning the barcode on the product. Another application I quickly peeked at is Ecorio, which helps you track your "carbon footprint" based on your recent travels.

I'm looking forward to testing the G1 out in the real world.

Markets trip on obstacles to bailout plan

By Matt Krantz
USA TODAY

Selling hit stocks again Tuesday as concern grew about congressional opposition to the $700 billion Wall Street bailout plan (cover story, 1A).

The Dow Jones industrial average alternated between losses and gains and was almost even before buckling in the final 45 minutes of trading. The Dow fell 161.52 points, or 1.5%, to 10,854.17, which widened its 2008 loss to 18.2%.

The Standard & Poor's 500 dropped 18.87 points, or 1.6%, to 1188.22. The technology-packed Nasdaq composite performed slightly better, falling 25.65 points, or 1.2%, to 2153.33.

The initial euphoria that sent the Dow surging in a 779-point, two-day reversal at the end of last week has faded as the deliberations on Capitol Hill made it clear any bailout might be slow in coming, says Joseph Saluzzi of Themis Trading. "People are coming to the realization this is not an overnight cure," Saluzzi says.

Still, trading appeared more orderly than on Monday, when investors rushed into hard assets such as oil and gold. Gold fell $18.40 to $885.50 an ounce Tuesday after surging $43.30 Monday. And oil, which soared a record $16.37 a barrel Monday as the October contract expired, fell $2.76 to $106.61 in trading of the November contract.

Meanwhile, demand stayed high for three-month Treasury bills, considered the safest short-term financial asset. The discount rate on the three-month T-bill fell to 0.78%; last week, it was around zero after investors flooded into T-bills as the credit markets seized up.

The real key for Wall Street remains what happens as the bailout gets hammered out.

"The market this week is showing us it doesn't have confidence in what we're getting out of D.C. It's discouraging," says Jennifer Ellison of investment firm Bingham Osborn & Scarborough. "Right now, we have to figure out how to get out of the mess."

Financial stocks were turbulent again as investors waited for a bailout. Merrill Lynch fell $1.85 to $26.20, Wells Fargo fell $1.01 to $34.17 and Chubb slid $5.05 to $53.05. In one potentially positive sign, Goldman Sachs late Tuesday said it will sell a $5 billion stake to Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway in a private stock sale and then will raise at least $2.5 billion more in a public offering. Goldman shares, which rose $4.27 to $125.05 in regular trading, topped $136 after hours (story, 1B).

Toyota decides to give natural-gas cars another chance

By Chris Woodyard
USA TODAY

PORTLAND, Ore. — Toyota will announce today that it is taking a new look at an alternative fuel that it had left behind: compressed natural gas.

Autos
Going green

And Honda, the only maker now of a CNG-powered car, plans to make twice as many of those environmentally friendly Civics for the U.S. in 2009 as it did last year.

Toyota says it will display a concept version of a CNG-electric hybrid Camry at the Los Angeles Auto Show in November. Though it has made no commitment to production, the unveiling is tied to a burst of renewed interest.

"With this concept, we are confirming our interest in pursuing CNG," says Irv Miller, a vice president for Toyota Motor Sales, the U.S. sales arm. He lauded CNG as cheaper than gasoline, low in emissions and more plentiful than oil. Data presented at a Toyota-sponsored conference here made the case for oil production declining faster than natural gas supplies, pointing to the need to look anew at the fuel.

Toyota is "testing the waters," says John O'Dell, senior editor for Edmunds Green Car Advisor. "They want to be ready" if it looks like CNG will make a comeback.

The announcement comes amid splashy, big-budget ad campaigns that have attempted to move natural gas off the energy back burner. Texas billionaire T. Boone Pickens has touted natural gas and wind power as the centerpieces of his "Pickens Plan" for energy independence. And Chesapeake Energy, one of the nation's largest natural-gas producers, has ads promoting CNG.

Toyota's new look at natural gas "demonstrates there is a great deal of attention at progressive auto manufacturers who are looking at the opportunity to use a clean, abundant, affordable, American fuel," says Chesapeake Senior Vice President Tom Price.

Several automakers, including Toyota, offered CNG-powered vehicles nearly a decade ago but quit when interest flagged. CNG-powered vehicles usually have less range than gas-powered vehicles and less trunk space because of the large fuel tanks.

Also, there currently are only about 1,000 CNG fueling stations nationwide, half available to consumers.

Yet high gasoline prices have spurred enough interest that Honda says its CNG-powered Civic GX has a wait of several months. It plans to make 2,000 next year. The Civic GX costs $25,090, nearly $7,000 more than the gasoline equivalent.

The GX is mostly sold to fleet customers, except in California and New York, where it is sold to consumers. Demand jumped when gasoline prices rose, says spokesman Chris Martin.

He says Honda is supportive of Toyota's renewed interest. "We think it helps acceptance" of natural gas to have more models available from all makers.

Nolan leads Shock to conference finals

Deanna Nolan scored 21 points, Katie Smith added 15 and the Detroit Shock advanced to the WNBA Eastern Conference finals for the third consecutive year with an 80-61 victory Tuesday against the Indiana Fever. The Shock, who led by as many as 31 points in the first half, will face the Liberty in the conference finals, with Game 1 on Friday in New York. Detroit has home-court advantage in the series. But because of a scheduling conflict, they will play their home games at Eastern Michigan University, about an hour from The Palace of Auburn Hills. Tammy Sutton-Brown led the Fever with 20 points. Tamika Catchings scored 15.

Contador could leave if Armstrong signs

If eight-time Tour de France champion Lance Armstrong joins the Astana cycling team for his comeback, then Alberto Contador is ready to leave. "I think I've earned the right to be the leader of a team without having to fight for my place," the Spanish rider said Tuesday in AS newspaper in Madrid. Contador, the 2007 Tour de France champion, won the Spanish Vuelta on Sunday. Armstrong announced this month that he is returning to cycling after three years in retirement. He could be reunited with Johan Bruyneel, his former coach who now leads Contador at Astana.

Eight Belles trainer Larry Jones to retire

Eight Belles trainer Larry Jones says he is retiring from the Thoroughbred business. Jones told the Associated Press on Tuesday that his stable won't be taking any new horses. He will continue to train the ones he has but plans to be largely retired by next year's Breeders' Cup. Jones has trained the last two runners-up in the Kentucky Derby: Hard Spun last year and filly Eight Belles this year. Eight Belles broke down and had to be euthanized. He says the scrutiny he has received since then has taken a toll.

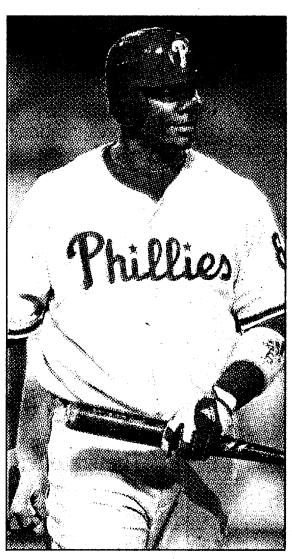
Besides .248, 195 K's, Howard has MVP stats



By Lisa Blumenfeld, Getty Images

Uptick: Two hits Tuesday helped Ryan Howard's cause.

By Mel Antonen
USA TODAY

Ryan Howard could finish this season with a dubious statistical distinction, an MVP award — or both.

The Philadelphia Phillies first baseman has put together a September surge, hitting .342 with nine home runs and 27 RBI as the Phillies have taken control of the National League East.

He easily leads the majors in home runs (46) and RBI (121). But his batting average — .248 after Tuesday's game vs. the Atlanta Braves — puts him in rare statistical territory. Howard could be the first major league home run king with a batting average of less than .250 since the Detroit Tigers' Darrell Evans hit .248 with 40 homers in 1985.

"It's been one of those seasons, and that's just the way it goes sometimes," Howard says. "I don't think about stats things. That's for after the season. Now I'm trying to produce runs and make the playoffs."

Howard, the 2006 NL MVP, also is in the rare position of surpassing his single-season strikeouts record — or losing it altogether. Howard had a record 199 strikeouts in 2007 and 195 this season but was second in the majors to the Arizona Diamondbacks' Mark Reynolds, who had 198 entering Tuesday.

Howard has been hot and cold, hitting .215 after three months, .311 in July and .213 in August before his September resurgence.

▸ Amateur could blaze new trail from Japan to USA, 6C

Despite Howard's inconsistency, his latest hot streak has been highly valuable to the Phillies, who have won 10 of their last 12 to turn a three-game deficit into a 1½-game lead.

"Pitchers worked him differently this season because they don't want to get hurt by him," Phillies manager Charlie Manuel says.

"At times, he probably wanted to hit too much. When he's patient, he's consistent. He's our guy. He can carry us."

Chasing a playoff berth

Where teams seeking playoff spots stand:

- Red Sox: Won to clinch a playoff berth.
- White Sox, Twins: Opened a three-game series in Minnesota, with the Twins trailing the White Sox by 2½ games.
- Phillies, Mets, Brewers: Philadelphia leads New York in the NL East by 1½ games; the Mets led Milwaukee in the wild-card race by 1½.
- Dodgers, Diamondbacks: The Dodgers had a two-game lead on the D'backs in the NL West.

Singh gets a fine-tune

'Big Fijian' excels after body, mind makeover

By Steve DiMeglio
USA TODAY

ATLANTA — In a commercial Vijay Singh shot this year for the St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, he is surrounded by children who are battling cancer. In the spot, the kids call Singh the "Big Fijian," not because he's 10 feet tall, and not because he hits the ball a mile. It's because of his big, charitable heart, as one child indicates with a tap on Singh's chest.

▸ Love snags award, 6C

The ad, conversely, led to an earful of jovial ribbing aimed at Singh, as caddies and fellow golfers played off the nickname and started feigning fear in his towering 6-3, 205-pound presence. "Oh, no, here comes the Big Fijian," was a regular, mocking refrain.

The teasing, however, has given way to redirected respect as a resurgent Singh has regained his imposing footing atop golf's world order. With a collision of kinesiology, technology and psychology that has fine-tuned his body, swing and mind, Singh has won three of his last six events, including the WGC-Bridgestone Invitational, and risen to No. 3 in the world. His dominance has been so complete the Big Fijian already has wrapped up the biggest paycheck in golf, thanks in part to wins in The Barclays and the Deutsche Bank Championship in suc-

Elite schools strike balance

Making grade in classroom, on field

By Andy Gardiner
USA TODAY

The season is only a month old, but Vanderbilt, Wake Forest and Northwestern — the smallest schools by enrollment in their conferences — are matching academic success with victories on the football field.

The schools annually rank among the best in the Football Bowl Subdivision (formerly I-A) in terms of graduation rate and the NCAA's academic progress rate. They are also a combined 11-0 this season.

▸ TCU gets defensive, 8C

Vanderbilt (4-0) and Wake Forest (3-0) are unbeaten in conference play and have wins against ranked teams. The Demon Deacons are 15th and Vanderbilt is 25th in this week's USA TODAY Coaches' Poll. Northwestern is 4-0 for the first time since 1962.

"I think a lot of it is consistency in recruiting and the fact that we keep guys in school for four or five years and redshirt when we can," Vanderbilt coach Bobby Johnson says. "Bigger schools have to deal with transfers and guys going to the pros. It's hard to replace them with freshmen."

Vanderbilt's undergraduate enrollment of 11,847 is the smallest in the Southeastern Conference. Wake Forest (4,000) has the same status in the Atlantic Coast Conference, as does Northwestern (7,900) in the Big Ten.

"If you do things the right way, you can win anywhere," Northwestern coach Pat Fitzgerald says.

Johnson says another key is stability in the coaching ranks. He is in his seventh season at Vanderbilt and has had two changes on his staff in that time. Jim Grobe is in his eighth year at Wake Forest, and Fitzgerald is in his 12th as a player or coach at Northwestern.

A focused Singh has transformed his game

cessive weeks. All Singh has to do this week to win the four-event FedExCup playoffs, the PGA Tour's season-ending showdown, is show up at The Tour Championship, tee off and finish four rounds to collect $10 million.

"I think this is the best I've ever played," the 45-year-old says. For comparison's sake, Singh won nine times in 2004 and became the only player in the new millennium to supplant Tiger Woods as the No. 1 player that same year.

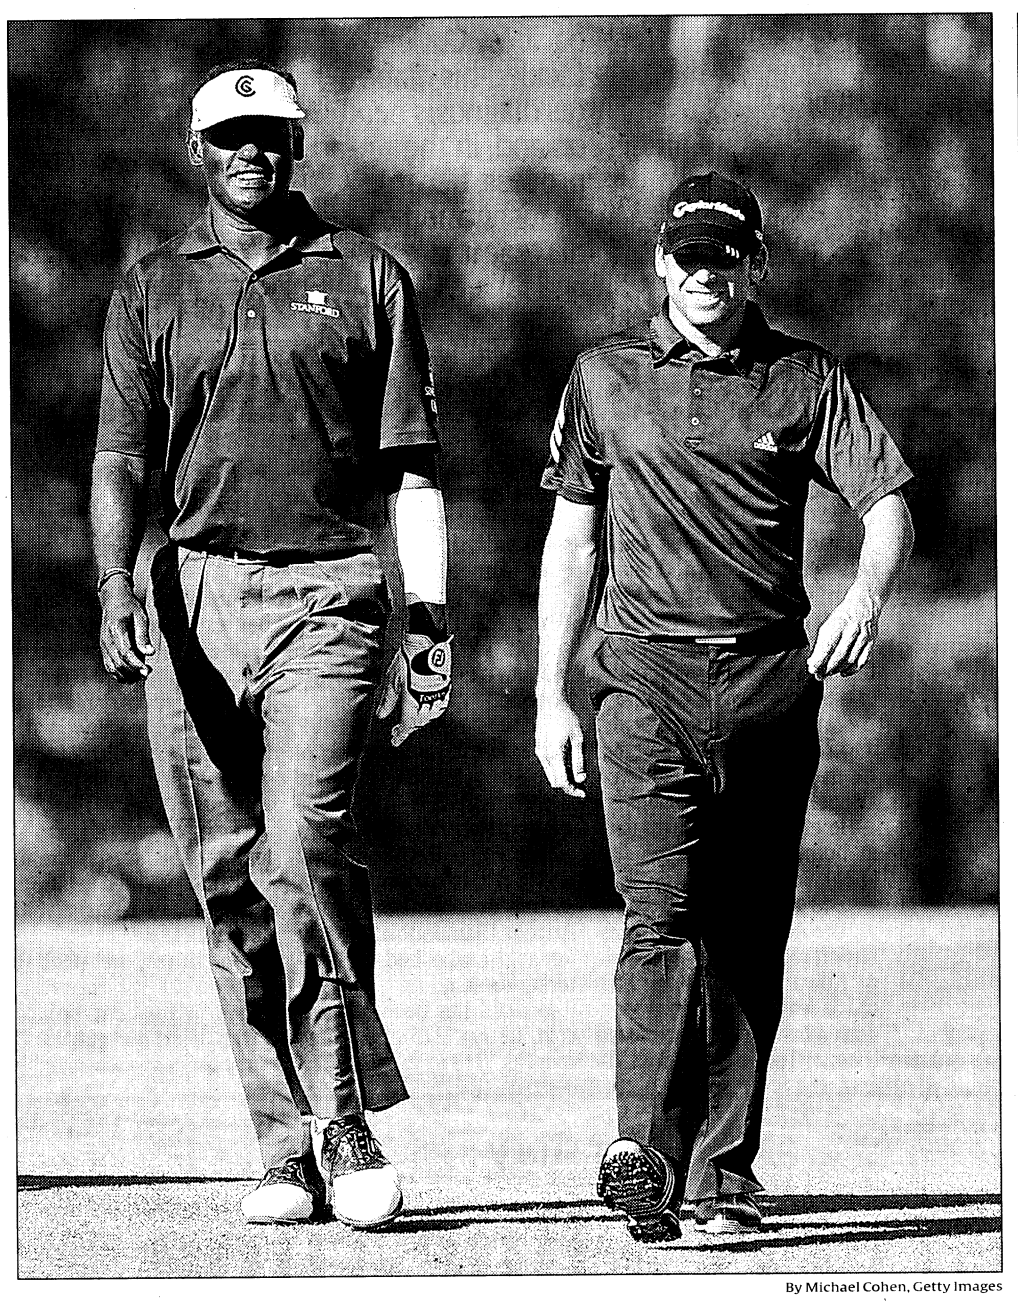
Cover story

Singh, a three-time major champion (1998 PGA Championship, 2000 Masters, 2004 PGA), is well aware that his recent winning ways have come with Woods, last year's FedExCup winner, on the sidelines after season-ending knee surgery in June. Never one to back down from a challenge, however, from Woods or anyone else, Singh is eager to hook horns with the game's best next year.

"I feel very comfortable with my golf swing, and I feel as good about it as I ever have," he says. "I understand it a bit more. And this is the best I've ever putted."

Those Singh has left in his wake in recent weeks have been left in awe by his blend of power, precision and putting — and subpar rounds. His most brilliant was an 8-under-par 63 in the final round of the Deutsche Bank in gusty conditions featuring crusty, demanding greens that capped a tournament-record 22-under-par 262 and gave him a five-shot win over Mike Weir. A week earlier, he made three birdies in his final four holes, including on both playoff holes, to beat Sergio Garcia for The Barclays title.

"When Vijay is playing like this and rolling the ball like he's rolling it, it's hard to get him," Garcia says. "It's like when Tiger is playing well."



By Michael Cohen, Getty Images

High praise: Sergio Garcia, right, says when Vijay Singh's game is on "it's like when Tiger's playing well."

Physically fit

Before his recent streak, Singh, inducted into the World Golf Hall of Fame in 2006 and a winner of 34 Tour titles — a record 22 since turning 40 — wasn't playing like Woods, or himself, for that matter. His world ranking dropped to 13th last year, his lowest since he was 18th a decade ago, and his last win came in the March 2007 Arnold Palmer Invitational.

Determined to modify his swing and physique to prolong his career and halt his decline, Singh made numerous changes last year, including replacing personal trainer and good friend Joey Diovisalvi, whom he'd worked with since 2001, with Jeffrey Fronk.

"He's taken my physique to another level," Singh says of Fronk. "I'm much stronger and much fitter now than I ever was."

Seven years ago, Singh says all of his workouts were on the driving range hitting balls. Four years ago, Singh, who lives on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean in Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla., added a two-story weight room to his mansion and turned into a workout-aholic.

And he stills hits 500 to 1,000 balls a day.

"He works as hard as any athlete I've ever witnessed," says Fronk, a former assistant trainer with the Jacksonville Jaguars and New York Jets. "There is no quit in Vijay. I consider golfers elite athletes. I know golfers get a bad rap, but Vijay does all the power movements that an NFL player would do."

The two meet six days a week to improve his flexibility, mobility and strength. They go through two 90-minute sessions a day, using medicine balls, jump ropes, dumbbells, free weights and cardiovascular machines. Fronk says many exercises incorporate multijoint movements that recruit more muscle fibers, including powerful weightlifting moves.

During tournament weeks, they typically work out 45 minutes in the morning and an hour after the round. The regimen has been cut back because Singh has been bothered by tendinitis in his left forearm for about a month and has been wearing a bandage. Fronk says Singh is highly acute to not overdoing it and rehabbing injuries is a big part of the regimen.

"He talks about it all the time — he wants to keep playing on the Tour for as long as he can, when he's 50, 55. Maybe longer," Fronk says.

Mentally stronger

Singh has been a fixture on driving ranges around the world. Some players have joked that some practice balls don't spend as much time on the range as Singh. Or as fellow Ponte Vedra Beach resident and Tour veteran Jim Furyk says, "I see Vijay all the time back home. Well, he lives on the back of the range at (TPC) Sawgrass."

Though often distant with the news media and occasionally controversial — including making harsh comments about Annika Sorenstam's participation in the 2003 Colonial — Singh is popular with his peers, a big-hearted fellow who shares loads of laughs on the range in his high-pitched cackle. He is quick with advice when asked, too, and not just counsel on how to hit a fade with the driver or a lob with the wedge. Colleague Bubba Watson often recalls the time, after celebrating his first big paycheck in 2006, Singh told him to set his goals on winning and not on worrying about keeping his card.

Many of his colleagues stop by just to see the latest gadget Singh is working with. His hitting area is always strewn with weighted clubs, alignment props and training devices. One such instrument, which uses a wireless transmitter to help measure swing speed, has been in his cache since the U.S. Open in June. It was invented by Robert Grober, a professor of applied physics at Yale University, and helps improve swing consistency.

"I'm hitting a lot farther with every club. There's a lot more pop in the swing," Singh says.

The last piece in Singh's return to golf's conversation was his mental approach. Though he played decently earlier this year, nearly winning at Pebble Beach and Doral, he also racked up indifferent results. As his victory drought extended and ultimately reached 35 events, he began doubting his decision to change his swing. All he had to do, it turns out, was stop doubting his putting stroke.

Tired of his well-documented putting woes and weary of going back and forth between his short and long putters, Singh just started thinking he was the best putter in the world.

"I spoke to a psychologist that was trying to help me, but deep down it has to come from me," Singh says. "My unconscious mind had a lot of stored-up bad thoughts in there, and that was the key, to get rid of all that. I just tell myself I'm the best putter on the planet."

Mind over mallet started working when the FedExCup began. In The Barclays, he didn't have a single three-putt and nailed a 26-foot birdie putt to extend the playoff after Garcia had seemingly won with a 27-foot birdie putt. In the final round of the Deutsche Bank, Singh made 175 feet of putts, including birdies of 35, 40 and 60 feet.

"When I started putting comfortably, my whole game started coming around," Singh says. "If I keep doing this, I'm going to win a lot more golf tournaments."

Which isn't good news for Weir and the rest of the Tour.

"He just keeps getting better and better," Weir says. "His work ethic, his talent, his commitment. The man puts in the time, and we've seen it pay off."

Singh's swing in sync

Sonic Golf brings sound to the game. Vijay Singh has used this training device because it helps define proper swing tempo, rhythm and timing. The better the swing tempo, the less work on mechanics. "It's like a symphony," Singh says. "It goes like, zing, zing, zing. It helps my rhythm."

How it works:

A wireless transmitter is inserted into the shaft of the golf club.

Data are sent wirelessly to a receiver worn by the golfer (attached to the waist).

The receiver converts the data into an audio soundscape, which provides an acoustic representation of the swing.

- The transmitter measures the speed of the club in real time.
- The slower the club speed, the lower the volume and the lower the pitch.
- The faster the speed, the louder the volume and the higher the pitch.

Freestyle motocross injuries common

Four-time world champ forced to skip event

By Sal Ruibal
USA TODAY

The winner of Saturday's LG World Championships of Freestyle Motocross might be the last man standing. Literally.

Jeremy "Twitch" Stenberg won last year's title with a broken ankle. Nate Adams, who won the first four world championships before Stenberg's victory, is not competing this year because of injuries.

Stenberg is the favorite to flip and twist his Yamaha motorcycle to another win, but he, too, has been battling back after tearing ligaments in his right thumb in August in the X Games. He had surgery but wasn't able to return to practice until last week.

An 11-year veteran on the FMX circuit, Stenberg has seen the sport grow from practice-session tricks by bored motocross racers into a global sport. "We just did it for fun," he says of the early days.

"Now we take it very seriously. We have trainers; we're working out in the gym. If you're weak, you can't compete."

Stenberg, who has broken both legs, says injuries are part of the game.

"There's not a lot of science to success," the 2006 X Games gold medal winner says. "You just try to ride every single day that you can. Your career in this sport can be short, but if you're dedicated, you can make a good living at it."

The Santee, Calif., resident notes that his top competitors at the Los Angeles County Fairgrounds event — Jeremy Lusk, Adam Jones and Robbie Maddison — have been practicing while he has been recovering. "I'll get in as much riding as I can this week," he says. "I'm dedicated and doing it for the right reasons."

Those reasons include wife Susan and daughter Katrina, 8, whose proud father says she is already riding a motorcycle.

He belongs to the notorious Metal Mulisha crew, but having a family means no more party scene. "Back in the day, that was a part of my life," says Stenberg, who turns 27 Saturday. "If I win, I'll celebrate with my wife and daughter."

The LG World Championships of Freestyle Motocross will be televised by CBS on Dec. 7 at 5 p.m. ET.

Rampage: The Red Bull Rampage freeride mountain bike competition is Oct. 2-3 near Virgin, Utah. The annual celebration of the most daring stunts on mountain bikes includes a 1,000-foot descent peppered with 30-foot gaps and cliff drops that will challenge some of the biggest names in freeriding, including Kyle Strait, Cedric Gracia, Cam McCaul and Darren Berrecloth.

Honors: The Mountain Bike Hall of Fame will induct its class of 2008 today at the Interbike trade show in Las Vegas. Inductees include John Finley Scott (pioneers), Brian Lopes (racing history), Nat Ross (racing history), Steve Blick (promotion), Philip Keyes (advocacy) and Bob Girvin (industry).

Unwelcome: Despite winning the USA a bronze medal in the first Olympic BMX event, Jill Kintner has lost her GT Bicycles sponsorship in 2009.

USA's Markgraf finally scores after 193rd game

By Beau Dure
USA TODAY

In her 193rd game with the U.S. women's national team, the pressure finally got to defender Kate Markgraf.

Not that the game, an exhibition with Ireland in Bridgeview, Ill., was particularly tense for an Olympic champion. The pressure came from her teammates to take a penalty kick and remove the "0" from her career international goal total. She always declined, not wanting to put her team's chances at risk.

Notes

With her team already up 1-0 Saturday, she finally relented. New career goal total: 1.

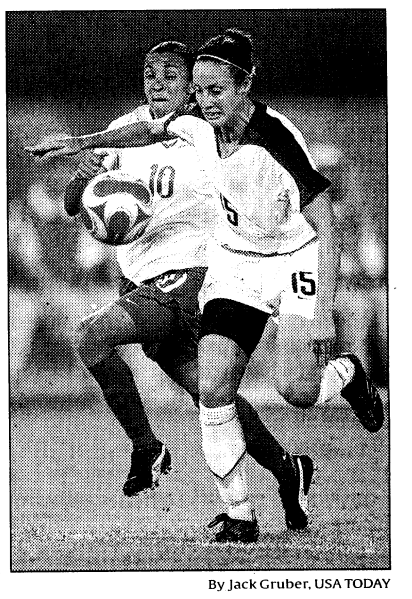
"It was nice, in hindsight," Markgraf says. "I'm really happy that when I'm done playing overall that's not going to be the one thing always next to my name — the only player who has never scored a goal."

Markgraf hasn't had many chances to remove the goose egg. She's a stay-at-home defender who usually doesn't go forward on corner kicks. And she's fine with that. "I went up for corner kicks during the Olympics, and it was fun, but at the same time, I didn't really know what I was doing up there," Markgraf says. "I almost wanted to mark the player instead of trying to lose them."

Markgraf has had one goal called back on an offside call. Aside from that, she said the closest she had come to scoring was a ball that hit the post, which she confesses was intended as a cross.

The Notre Dame alumna, who did score a few goals in college, didn't score in her WUSA career, either. But now she's scoring at a one goal a game clip at Toyota Park, where she'll play next year with the Chicago Red Stars in the new Women's Professional Soccer league.

Trophy in Puerto Rico: As a former Major League Soccer coach, Colin Clarke has sympathy for MLS teams that have struggled in the CONCACAF Champions League. But his Puerto Rico Islanders have done a little better, advancing to the group stage and winning their first game, while playing even more games than the MLS teams complaining about overcrowded schedules.



By Jack Gruber, USA TODAY

Netting one: Kate Markgraf, right, scored on a penalty kick.

Should MLS adjust its schedule? Join the discussion at soccer.usatoday.com.

"It's always easy to complain when you're losing," Clarke says.

Clarke knows his team has been lucky to avoid the injury problems that have plagued the New England Revolution and Chivas USA, which failed to advance from the CONCACAF preliminary round. Yet he thinks the Islanders' success is also half-mental.

"You've got to approach the games with the right frame of mind, and we're certainly doing that," Clarke says. "I'm not so sure the MLS teams have been."

While juggling a schedule that occasionally includes four games in eight days, the Islanders clinched the USL regular-season title last weekend. The team gets the Commissioner's Cup and an important first-round playoff bye.

But for all the success the Islanders and other USL teams have had in tournaments this year, Clarke still sees a chance for some of his players to move to bigger leagues. One is Fabrice Noel, a Haitian who gained political asylum in the USA after two of his brothers were murdered.

"I know he had a little bit of time in MLS with Colorado," Clarke says. "He was a young kid then. He's grown up and matured a little bit. I wouldn't be surprised to see him back in MLS."

On ice or off, 'Great One' is a class act

It's staggering, really, how unfailingly polite Wayne Gretzky remains to this day, nine years removed from a hockey career that shaped one of professional sports' greatest legacies. No, you're doing him a favor, his demeanor suggests, acting as if he's never heard these questions before.

Save one silly stint in Saturday Night Live's "Waikiki Hockey" sketch in 1989, this man is a heck of an actor.

Commentary
By Paola Boivin

What Gretzky chose to do with his life once he unlaced his skates is fascinating. He didn't need any of this. The monotonous questions, the personal life scrutiny. He could have traded in his hockey stick for a 7-iron and his accessibility for reclusiveness. He opted instead for a foray into coaching, even if it meant opening up his legacy to re-analysis.

"I don't worry about it," says Gretzky, who is starting his fourth season as coach of the NHL's Phoenix Coyotes. "People's opinions are what make the world go 'round. As a player, I did what I did, I'm proud of what I've accomplished and nobody can take that away.

"As a coach, I've got to earn my stripes and pave my way."

Despite his dual residences — his family lives in suburban Los Angeles — his recent decision to not return as Team Canada's executive director for a third consecutive Olympics was a strong statement about his commitment to the Coyotes. Phoenix failed to reach the NHL playoffs his first three seasons, but the offseason acquisition of center Olli Jokinen, the return of goalie Ilya Bryzgalov and the expected improved play of young players such as forwards Peter Mueller and Martin Hanzal have turned heads.

A five-year contract Gretzky signed in 2006 and the team's improved play last season quieted skeptics who wondered if his heart was really in it.

His family makes it work. They are often together on weekends, with wife Janet and some combination of their five kids flying to Arizona to see him, or Gretzky flying to see them. His oldest son, Ty, 18, is an aspiring golfer, and Trevor, 16, a college prospect in both football and basketball, is the junior varsity quarterback at Oaks Christian in Westlake Village, Calif., where he throws passes to Trey Smith, son of actor Will Smith. The varsity quarterback, by the way? Nick Montana, offspring of you-know-who.

Daughter Paulina, 19, continues to pursue her singing and dancing careers and has had songs featured on MTV's Laguna Beach. Gretzky's other children are 8 and 5.

"It's because I have a great family that this works," Gretzky says.

They've provided perspective during rocky times. In 2006, his good friend and former assistant Rick Tocchet was charged with operating an illegal gambling ring and Janet's name was raised for allegedly placing bets through the ring. Tocchet landed two years' probation. Neither Gretzky nor his wife was charged.

During a lifespan when few have turned on him, Gretzky took some heat. He chugged along, lauded when the Canadian Olympic team won a gold medal in 2002, criticized in 2006 when it did not.

He sounded almost giddy talking about this season's Coyotes, who play their second preseason game today. Many close to Gretzky say he is enjoying himself this season as much as ever.

He seems determined to show that great players can make great coaches, not to prove a point but to meet an internal challenge, a tactic that served him so well as a player.

He still has a fighting spirit and the hunch here is he'll come out of his coaching experience with his legacy firmly intact.

"Right now, I can see the light at the end of the tunnel," Gretzky says, "and it's brighter and stronger than ever."

Paola Boivin writes for The (Phoenix) Arizona Republic.

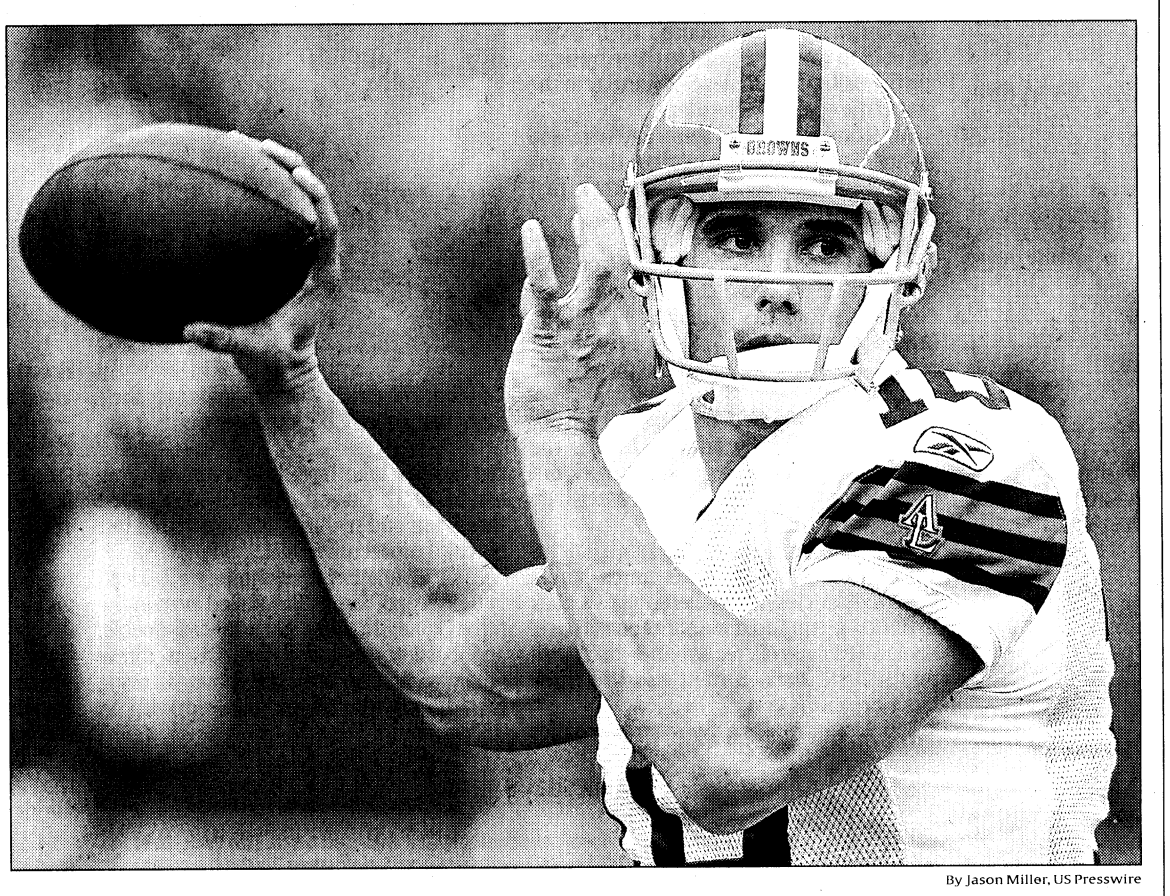
Green no savior, but he might help



By Jason Miller, US Presswire

Next? Brady Quinn, above, could supplant Derek Anderson at quarterback if the Browns offense continues to sputter.

The Rams decided to make Marc Bulger the scapegoat for their horrendous start, but don't look to Trent Green to save your team.

You can grab Green if you are desperate for quarterback help, especially with six teams taking the weekend off as byes kick in. The Rams' problems extend far beyond the quarterback, and Green is unlikely to have much luck, especially with only Torry Holt as an effective receiver.

Green, 38 and with a history of concussions, is probably one big hit away from a career-ending injury, and he has only 12 touchdown passes vs. 16 interceptions since 2005.

Elsewhere on the waiver wire:

▶ Miles Austin, WR, Cowboys. Dallas finally might have somebody to replace Terry Glenn's deep speed. Austin caught only two passes against Green Bay, but his 57.5-yard average will inspire QB Tony Romo to take a few more shots to him.

▶ Michael Clayton/Antonio Bryant, WRs, Bucs. There is no telling when Joey Galloway will be back, and the Bucs threw 67 times last week.

▶ Brandon Lloyd, WR, Bears. Lloyd has made a career out of inconsistency, so don't be convinced his 124-yard game is for real. He is, however, the team's latest No. 1 receiver.

▶ Le'Ron McClain, RB, Ravens. He will keep getting chances if the Ravens keep up their league-high average of 45 attempts a game. McClain won't scare anybody with his speed, but at 6-0, 260 pounds, he is tough to stop on the goal line.

▶ Billy Miller, TE, Saints. The Saints are running out of options with WR Marques Colston and TE Jeremy Shockey out and WR David Patten limping. Miller is next up, taking over for Shockey.

▶ Brady Quinn, QB, Browns. His debut will come soon if Derek Anderson keeps struggling to move the team.

▶ Mike Tolbert, RB, Chargers. As if you needed another San Diego running back to track, the Chargers are throwing regularly to Tolbert, including a TD Monday. Look for him to continue getting three to four chances a game.

A marathon for college hoops lovers

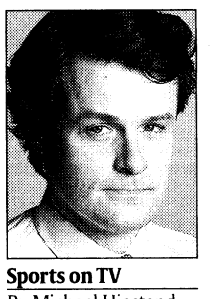
Attention insomniacs: Now you can while away the predawn hours, on Nov. 18, watching live college hoops.

The idea, says ESPN programmer Ilan Ben-Hanan, was to create a made-for-TV "stunt" to give college basketball a sort of round-the-clock opening day — albeit days after games are already being played.

ESPN's College Hoops Tip-Off Marathon, which will be formally announced today, will get a handy lead-in from the Cleveland Browns-Buffalo Bills on Monday Night Football. It will begin just past midnight Eastern time on Nov. 18 with Massachusetts at Memphis, a team which reached last season's NCAA title game.

Then, ESPN will follow with two games each tipping at 11 p.m. local time — Fresno State at St. Mary's in Moraga, Calif., and then Idaho State at Hawaii — which will amount to a sort of time travel experience for East Coasters: Because of time zone differences they each begin on Nov. 17.

Afterward, a Tip-Off studio show at 6 a.m. ET will lead into Penn playing Drexel at 10 a.m. ET. After that, ESPN's TV platforms — and its ESPN360.com broadband service, so you can goof off at work — will air a stream of games involving 15 conferences that won't end until past midnight in the East.



Sports on TV
By Michael Hiestand

ESPN's Ben-Hanan says the "linchpin for this massive basketball-wide stunt" was having games leading into a marquee matchup — which will be Kentucky-North Carolina at 9 p.m.

He says getting that Nov. 18 matchup, originally scheduled for Dec. 6, wasn't a problem with UNC, which had the date open. But it involved moving around five other Kentucky games — including moving a game against Coppin State from this season to next season. Ben-Hanan says he doubts if the famed Wildcats and Tar Heels would have moved their games "if it wasn't for something bigger than just their game."

Ben-Hanan says "by no means would we pressure anybody" to take nocturnal tip times. Rather, teams saw it as a "unique exposure opportunity. And we suggested they maybe turn the games into pajama parties."

Game On!

Idaho cheerleaders get cover-up order

The University of Idaho has ordered that the Cover 2 be implemented. Not for the football team, for the cheerleaders.

For the second time this season, the Vandals have been directed to make a wardrobe adjustment.

The first problem was having the UI logo sewn onto the seat of the young ladies' pants. Now the squads' two-piece outfits with halter tops have been scrapped.

An editorial in the school newspaper, The Argonaut, said:

Jaws dropped at the Vandal football game on Sept.6, and it wasn't because the football team finally won a game. It was because of the dress of the cheerleaders. There was an uproar about the taste level of the Vandal spirit squad's uniforms with laced-up details and low cut halter-tops that didn't seem to provide much support.

"There were a number of complaints after the Idaho State game from parents and alumni and community members that the uniforms were not appropriate," Bruce Pitman, vice provost of student affairs, told The Argonaut. "We decided that we needed to replace the uniforms that were used with other uniforms that would be more comfortable."

Speaking to the Associated Press, Pitman added: "To be fair, there were a number of fans who liked them."

The Idaho cheerleaders ranked as the top two Internet searches Tuesday morning, according to Google.com, and the top hit among blog items at USATODAY.com.

The scrapped uniforms cost $4,200, paid for out of the student fee fund.

New ones are expected to arrive for the Vandals' Oct. 4 home game against Nevada, purchased with private money. In the interim, the cheerleaders have worn football jerseys and volleyball shorts.

Said Shelly Robson, an adviser to the spirit squad: "Girls are just bigger these days. Not everybody's a size zero. . . . We're not being a bunch of prudes."

Doctor gets Armstrong's drive

When Lance Armstrong announces details today about his plan to race in the Tour de France, there's an orthopedic surgeon in Utah who understands the challenge.

Dr. Eric Heiden rode the Tour in 1986, the year after he won the U.S. professional cycling championship. His cycling career came after he became the most successful U.S. speedskater in history, winning five gold medals at the 1980 Winter Games.

"Having been involved in other sports, I'll tell you the hardest sport out there is cycling when it comes to three-week-long stage races," Heiden says. "You're working with a team, but it's a lot of individual effort."

Heiden, 50, practices medicine in Park City, Utah, and serves as team physician for U.S. Speedskating and USA Cycling. He has been busy promoting his new book with Dr. Massimo Testa, Faster, Better, Stronger, which teaches people about exercise and healthy living.

Heiden says Armstrong has done a "great job promoting cancer awareness" and he's not surprised the Texan is back in the saddle. "When you think of some of the demands in the sport, Lance is probably in his prime or maybe a little bit beyond his prime for his aerobic conditioning.

"I think he's going to be very successful. I will be surprised if he doesn't stick around a couple of years and doesn't try to win 10 Tours."

American League notes

Baltimore: Aubrey Huff remembers vividly when Tampa Bay was a last-place team. Now that the Rays are headed to the playoffs, he is delighted to see a few old friends enjoying success. Huff spent five seasons with the Rays. He was traded to Houston late in the 2006 season and signed with the Orioles as a free agent in January 2007. The Orioles are in last place. "I am happy for a few guys I played with," Huff said. "If we're not going to be in there, I'd love to see them in there and go all the way."

Boston: RF J.D. Drew (lower back), who has been out for more than a month, received a second epidural shot Monday, but there was no word on when he might play. Manager Terry Francona hoped to get him into the lineup during the final week. . . . 3B Mike Lowell (right hip), who has not played since Sept. 16, has made slight improvement, but the Red Sox have given no indication as to when he might return.

Cleveland: When OF Ben Francisco was hit by a pitch from RHP Josh Beckett in the fifth inning Monday, it marked the 99th time an Indians hitter was hit this season. The major league record is 100, set by Houston in 1997. . . . OF Brad Snyder, the Indians' first-round pick in the 2003 June draft, was lost Monday to the Cubs, who claimed him on waivers. At Class AAA Buffalo this season, Snyder batted .246 with 12 home runs, 61 RBI and 123 strikeouts in 411 at-bats.

Detroit: C Dusty Ryan was behind the plate for the sixth consecutive game Monday as the Tigers continue to evaluate him as a 2009 roster possibility. But the Tigers are concerned about his seven passed balls. . . . Starting C Brandon Inge was at third base for the sixth consecutive game Monday in the absence of 3B Carlos Guillen (lower back), who has been out of the lineup since Aug. 25. Guillen probably will not play again this season.

Kansas City: 1B Eric Hosmer, the third overall pick of the June draft, played three games with rookie-level Idaho Falls (Idaho) before receiving a directive from the commissioner's office to stop. Hosmer became entangled in a grievance filed by 3B Pedro Alvarez, the second overall pick by Pittsburgh. Alvarez's agent, Scott Boras, who also represents Hosmer, contended the agreement with the Pirates was finalized after the Aug. 15 midnight deadline and was void. The Pirates said Hosmer agreed to terms after Alvarez but worked out a contract with Alvarez this week, ending the dispute. The Royals were waiting for official word so they could send Hosmer to the Fall Instructional League in Surprise, Ariz. . . . With another strong outing Monday, RHP Gil Meche won for the 10th time in 13 decisions and logged his 13th victory of the season, four more than he had last year.

Los Angeles: LHP Joe Saunders missed his start Tuesday because of a kidney stone that had been bothering him since Friday. He visited a doctor Monday in Seattle, and the Angels hope he will be able to pitch again Sunday.

Minnesota: C Joe Mauer entered Tuesday's game with an 11-game hitting streak and a .330 average, which gave him a six-point lead in the AL batting race. If Mauer can hold on, he will win his second batting title in three years. In 2006, he became the first AL catcher to win the batting title.

New York: SS Derek Jeter was scratched from Tuesday's game against Toronto because of a sore left hand. Johnny Damon dropped from first to second, and Brett Gardner moved up from ninth to bat leadoff. Cody Ransom started at shortstop and batted eighth. Jeter was replaced by a pinch-runner after being hit in the hand by a pitch from Baltimore reliever Jim Miller in the ninth inning Saturday. Jeter, who was hit on the left hand by Baltimore's Daniel Cabrera on May 20, is batting .301 with 11 home runs and 69 RBI in 148 games.

Oakland: RHP Justin Duchscherer will see Thomas Byrd on Monday in Nashville. Byrd repaired the torn labrum in Duchscherer's right hip in July 2007, along with shaving calcification at the top of Duchscherer's femur. Duchscherer, a two-time All-Star, wants a definitive answer about the cause of his recent hip soreness before he begins offseason workouts.

Seattle: The Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported that LHP Erik Bedard (shoulder) will have surgery to repair a shoulder tear and might be out until the All-Star break next year. He might not return to the Mariners because they have the option of declining to tender a contract offer this winter.

Tampa Bay: LF Carl Crawford's surgically repaired right hand is feeling so much better that he will try swinging a bat in hopes of accelerating his return for the first round of the playoffs. The Rays have talked about activating Crawford and limiting him to defense and baserunning, but he wants to do more.

Texas: After missing consecutive starts, SS Michael Young (finger) returned to the lineup Monday. It was Young's 150th game of the season; he has played at least that many games for seven consecutive seasons.

Toronto: The Blue Jays reached a two-year agreement with Las Vegas to be the site of their new Class AAA affiliate. The Blue Jays considered reopening talks to return to Syracuse, N.Y., but Chiefs owner John Simone chose to go with Washington.

Rays inch closer to title

By David Ginsberg
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — James Shields pitched seven effective innings to earn his 14th win and the Tampa Bay Rays reduced their magic number to win the AL East to three by beating the Baltimore Orioles 5-2 Tuesday in the first game of a doubleheader.

Any combination of Tampa Bay wins and Boston Red Sox losses totaling three will give the Rays their first division title.

Game of the day

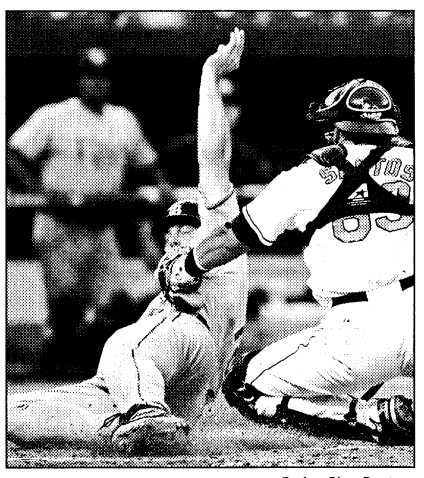
The victory extended Tampa Bay's lead on Boston to three games and enabled the Rays to match the 1991 Atlanta Braves for most wins (94) by a team that owned the worst record in the majors one year earlier.

Shields (14-8) tied the club record for wins, set in 1998 by Rolando Arrojo. The right-hander gave up eight hits, struck out eight and walked one in his career-high 32nd start of the season.

Dan Wheeler worked the ninth for his 13th save, the second in two games. Tampa Bay's regular closer, Troy Percival, was back in Florida getting epidural shots on his back. Rookie Fernando Perez went 3-for-3 with two RBI and Jason Bartlett also had three hits for the Rays.

Lou Montanez hit a two-run homer for the Orioles, who have lost seven in a row and 26 of 32. Garrett Olson (9-10) allowed three runs and six hits in six innings but lost his third consecutive start.

After Montanez gave Baltimore a 2-0 lead in the second, Tampa Bay pulled even in the fifth. Dioner Navarro hit a leadoff double, and Bartlett singled before Olson threw wildly to first on a pickoff move, allowing Navarro to score. Perez followed with an RBI double.



By Joe Giza, Reuters

Gotcha: The Orioles' Omir Santos tags the Rays' Ben Zobrist, but the Rays won 5-2.

Tuesday's games

RED SOX 5, Indians 4 — With the win, Boston clinched at least a wild-card berth. Tim Wakefield outpitched Cliff Lee and midseason acquisition Jason Bay hit the go-ahead single as the Red Sox scored three times in the fifth inning to rally from a two-run deficit. Boston still has a chance to catch Tampa Bay in the AL East.

Royals 5, TIGERS 0 — Zack Greinke and Leo Nunez combined for a four-hitter to lift Kansas City. Mike Aviles, Ryan Shealy and Alex Gordon homered for the Royals, who have won 10 of their last 12. Detroit, which has eight hits in its last two games, has lost 11 of its last 12 games and was shut out for the 13th time this season. The Royals also moved out of last place in the AL Central, just ahead of the Tigers.

Yankees 3, BLUE JAYS 1 — Despite the win, New York will miss the postseason for the first time since 1995. Mike Mussina pitched five scoreless innings to earn his 19th win, and Jason Giambi homered. Mussina (19-9), who also won 19 games with Baltimore in 1995 and 1996, will try for a career-high 20th victory when he faces Boston at Fenway Park on Sunday in the final game of the regular season.

Oakland vs. TEXAS — The Athletics looked for their fifth consecutive victory in the middle contest of a three-game road series against the Rangers.

Chicago White Sox vs. MINNESOTA — The Twins and first-place White Sox began a three-game series that could determine the Central champion in Minneapolis, where Chicago has won once in six games this season.

L.A. Angels vs. SEATTLE — The Angels looked to move closer to gaining home-field advantage throughout the playoffs when they tried to hand the Mariners a 13th consecutive loss.

Major League Baseball

Inside the NL

Winging it: Milwaukee Brewers interim manager Dale Sveum said he plans to pitch CC Sabathia again on short rest today. After that, Sveum doesn't have a clue, except to say Sabathia would be available for Sunday's finale, if needed. "We'll just wing the rest of it," said Sveum, who replaced Ned Yost Sept. 15.

By Morry Gash, AP

Sabathia: To pitch today on short rest, maybe Sunday.

"Depending on what happens tonight and tomorrow, we'll make those decisions as the next two days unfold."

The Brewers are on their most important homestand since they last played in the postseason in 1982. They have a new manager and a one-game deficit to overcome against the NL wild card-leading New York Mets coming into Tuesday's game with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"Whether people think its right or wrong, you still do whatever you can with your personnel to put best people out there that are going to win that game that day," Sveum said. "That's where we're at."

Surgery recommended: A specialist recommended injured St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Chris Carpenter have surgery for a compressed nerve in his shoulder, a procedure the team believes could have him back by spring training.

General manager John Mozeliak described a "simple surgery" that could return the right-hander to activities in six weeks with an overall recovery time of about three months. Mozeliak said the injury is related to nerve damage that knocked Carpenter out for the 2004 postseason.

Carpenter, the 2005 NL Cy Young Award winner, was shut down for the rest of the season on Sept. 12 due to what the team then described as persistent weakness from a muscle strain in the shoulder. He last pitched at Arizona on Sept. 2, working an inning of relief.

Alvarez-Pirates case: Testimony was called off Tuesday as lawyers tried to complete a $6,355,000, four-year contract between third baseman Pedro Alvarez and the Pirates and a settlement of a grievance filed by the players' union. Arbitrator Shyam Das began hearing the case Sept. 10 and had scheduled additional testimony for Tuesday and today. In case a deal isn't reached, today's hearing date remained on hold.

Alvarez, the No. 2 pick in the June draft, agreed to a minor-league contract with a $6 million signing bonus minutes after the Aug. 15 deadline, and the union contended the commissioner's office and the Pirates could not move the deadline without consent of the players' association.

Spring expands for WBC

By Ronald Blum
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Spring training is expanding by nearly a week next year because of the World Baseball Classic.

Players will start reporting to training camps Feb. 14 under an agreement between the players association and the commissioner's office. Exhibition games will start about Feb. 25.

"If spring training were shorter, it would be great. Obviously, everybody would like it to be a little shorter," Toronto Blue Jays outfielder Vernon Wells said. "It's the same thing over and over again."

In most years, pitchers and catchers open workouts 45 days before opening day and are followed by position players five days later. Under that schedule, workouts would not have begun until Feb. 20.

"It drags," New York Yankees captain Derek Jeter said, while adding he thought spring training was important. "You feel as though you need it."

Under the new schedule, all players on WBC rosters of China, Japan, South Korea and Taiwan and pitchers and catchers from other WBC teams must report to their major league clubs Feb. 14, which will be the voluntary report date for all other pitchers, catchers and injured players.

Remaining WBC position players must report by Feb. 17, which will be the voluntary report date for all other major league position players.

The mandatory reporting date for non-WBC players was moved up to Feb. 22 from March 5.

"After the '08 Olympics, having some pride for the U.S., having (Michael) Phelps bring all that gold back, baseball players are going to want to jump on board and represent the U.S," Tampa Bay Rays outfielder Johnny Gomes said.

Japan won the inaugural WBC in 2006, defeating Cuba 10-6 in the final. The USA was eliminated in the second round.

Tuesday's games

Braves 3, PHILLIES 2	Casey Kotchman homered and Mike Hampton won for the first time in a month. The NL-East leading Phillies missed a chance to reduce their magic number for clinching their second consecutive division title. The Phillies left the bases loaded in the third and ran themselves out of a rally in the sixth.
METS 6, Cubs 2	New York's Johan Santana had a broken-bat infield single and struck out 10 in eight innings. Jose Reyes had a three-run triple for his 200th hit of the season for the Mets, who ended a three-game skid.
NATIONALS 9, Marlins 4	Alberto Gonzalez went 4-for-5 with two doubles and two RBI as Washington broke a five-game losing streak. The Marlins, who lost their fourth in a row, were mathematically eliminated from the wild-card race.
Cincinnati vs. HOUSTON	A one-time wild card contender, the Astros returned to Minute Maid Park likely to just play out the string, starting with the series opener against the Reds.
Pittsburgh vs. MILWAUKEE	The Brewers looked to win their 10th in a row against the NL Central's last-place team when they opened a three-game set with the Pirates at Miller Park.
Arizona vs. ST. LOUIS	The Diamondbacks tried for their fourth consecutive road victory as they continued their series with the Cardinals.
San Diego vs. L.A. DODGERS	The Dodgers' magic number to clinch the NL West for the first time since 2004 was five.
Colorado vs. SAN FRANCISCO	The Giants sent right-hander Tim Lincecum to the mound for his first of two scheduled starts this week when they opened a three-game home series against the Rockies.

Pitcher seeks direct route to the majors

Amateur snubs Japan's leagues

By Paul White
USA TODAY

Junichi Tazawa might not have the impact of other Japanese players who have come to the major leagues, but the 22-year-old pitcher could have a lasting impact on the flow of players between Japan and North America.

Tazawa, who hasn't played in Japan's major leagues, has informed teams there he would prefer to go to the USA rather than be taken in Japan's draft Oct. 30. That has upset some Japanese team officials and Nippon Professional Baseball, governing body of the Japanese leagues.

Tazawa has been drawing increased attention from U.S. and Japanese teams while pitching three years for ENEOS Oil in the Japanese Industrial League, a common practice for players who are not high draft picks out of high school. Industrial League players remain amateurs but have jobs with the companies that sponsor the teams.

Japanese news media have reported scouts from the New York Yankees, Boston Red Sox, New York Mets, Atlanta Braves, Los Angeles Dodgers, Detroit Tigers and Arizona Diamondbacks have watched Tazawa, a right-hander who throws a fastball in the low 90s. He will be a free agent in December.

No rules prohibit Tazawa from leaving Japan, but NPB executive director Kazuo Hasegawa said no amateur has signed with an MLB team since a 1962 agreement between NPB and MLB, though that deal refers only to professionals.

"That indicates that this was more than just a gentlemen's agreement, but rather an implicit understanding that the majors would do no such thing," Hasegawa said in the release.

Hasegawa and other NPB officials discussed the issue with MLB executives last week in New York. Representatives for both sides said they would have no comment on the meetings.

Two previous Japanese players have skipped pro teams to come to the USA, but with unusual circumstances. Pitcher Mac Suzuki moved to California in 1992 after he was expelled from high school in Japan as a junior. He signed with the Seattle Mariners the next year. Pitcher Kaz Tadano signed with the Cleveland Indians in 2003 after Japanese teams would not draft him because he appeared in a pornographic movie while a college student.

The then-Anaheim Angels offered pitcher Koji Uehara $3 million when he came out of Osaka Taiiku University in 1998, but he signed as a first-round pick with the Yomiuri Giants and went 20-4 as a rookie. Uehara, 32, will be a free agent this winter.

Agent Don Nomura, a Japanese American who has represented players such as Hideo Nomo and Hideki Irabu, has said he would like to test the system by persuading a top Japanese high school player to come directly to the USA — thus avoiding the Japanese leagues, in which players must wait nine years to be free agents. The only other route to the USA is through the posting system negotiated between MLB and NPB.

Pioneer: Junichi Tazawa, 22, is trying to bypass Japan's professional leagues and sign with a major league team, a move Japanese baseball officials say violates the spirit of a 1962 agreement with MLB.

Veteran Anderson proves 'invaluable' during Rays' run

Maddon finds a spot for assistant

By Paul White
USA TODAY

Brian Anderson came to spring training an extreme long shot to make the Tampa Bay Rays.

Sure enough, the 36-year-old pitcher's attempt to come back from two Tommy John surgeries and three years on the sidelines ended when he blew out his elbow for good during a March exhibition game. But he's still with the Rays, on the field and in the clubhouse every day as assistant to the pitching coach, a position created by manager Joe Maddon.

"He's been invaluable," says Maddon, who was a coach with the Angels when former first-round pick Anderson pitched there. "I told Andrew (Friedman, Rays general manager), even if this guy blows out, he'll probably be worth keeping around."

Anderson was invited to spring training partly because the Rays hoped the lefty might help in their bullpen but mostly because Maddon and Friedman were adding a stronger veteran influence to their clubhouse with players such as pitcher Troy Percival and designated hitter Cliff Floyd.

Anderson helps coaches on the field during batting practice, then retreats to the clubhouse during the game because the Rays already have their limit of six uniformed coaches allowed on the bench and field. Jim Hickey is the Tampa Bay pitching coach.

In the clubhouse, Anderson admits, he's always wondering how long it will take for his constant chatter to distract veteran coach Don Zimmer, a Rays advisor who also is not on the bench during games. More important, Anderson watches the games on TV and discusses strategy with some of the Rays young pitchers, especially Matt Garza, and catching prospect John Jaso, recently called up from the minor leagues.

Anderson's job isn't the only one created by Maddon. Former major league infielder Tim Bogar is the quality assurance coach, a new position this year, which mostly consists of scouting the Rays every day as another team would scout them.

"Everybody talks about quality control," Maddon says. "But that means evaluating things after they've occurred. Quality assurance means we're evaluating things in advance, trying to head off our mistakes."

Maddon, in his three seasons as Tampa Bay manager, has gained a reputation for deviating from baseball tradition on the field, too, by using unusual defensive alignments such as a five-man outfield against some left-handed sluggers and three infielders on the left side of second base against Dan Uggla of the Florida Marlins. Maddon even intentionally walked Texas' Josh Hamilton with the bases loaded earlier this season with a four-run lead in the ninth inning.

"For years, we've accumulated all this information (from scouting other players),"Maddon says. "Why not use it? We use it."

"He's one step ahead of everybody else," Anderson says of Maddon. "Now, all we have to do is win so people see how valuable my job is and maybe I can make a career out of it."

Maddon says Anderson need not worry.

"He's going to make a good pitching coach for somebody," Maddon says.

Doing his part: With his playing days over, Rays pitching assistant Brian Anderson has provided a strong presence in the clubhouse.

Golf

Wall Street worry hits PGA, too

From staff and wire reports

Financial problems on Wall Street are a "major concern" to the PGA Tour, Commissioner Tim Finchem said.

Finchem said Tuesday in Atlanta in advance of the season-ending Tour Championship that the Tour, whose tournament sponsors include Wachovia Corp. and Morgan Stanley, might be facing some "real challenges."

If a sponsor decided to end its contract, Finchem said, the Tour could draw upon operating reserves until a replacement was found. Though no sponsors have pulled out in the financial slump, further market drops could shrink the reserve that's built on investment income, he said.

"If we have an additional downturn, the situation might be different," he said. "But right now, we can absorb a certain amount of falloff if it were to happen."

Stewart Award: Davis Love III was honored Tuesday with the Payne Stewart Award, given to a PGA Tour player who reflects Stewart's respect for tradition, charity and presentation through dress and conduct.

The award has been presented at the Tour Championship each year since 2000, one year after Stewart died in a plane crash on his way to the season finale.

"Payne was a great competitor and a great friend, and to have my name on the trophy is going to be quite an honor," Love said.

Love, in addition to his 1997 PGA Championship title, played on six Ryder Cup teams and likely will be the U.S. captain one of these years. But it doesn't sound like 2010 will be it.

"I would consider myself too young and too interested in still playing," said Love, 44.

Winning captain Paul Azinger said he has not thought about returning to that role, even if he is asked. The heavy favorite would be Corey Pavin, because Fred Couples will be the Presidents Cup captain next year, and most other candidates are on the Champions Tour or too young.

"I'd love to be considered," Love said. "But I'd love to play, too."

Briefly: Azinger was so spent after the Ryder Cup that he turned down offers to be on the late-night TV shows. But there is one appearance Azinger would love to make. "I want to throw out the first pitch at a Rays game," he said. Azinger grew up south of Tampa and still makes his home there. ... Among the text messages Tiger Woods sent to Azinger at the Ryder Cup: "You will win ... because only Americans win on that course." Valhalla hosted the PGA in 1996, won by Mark Brooks, and in 2000, won by Woods.

Honored: Davis Love III, who received the PGA Tour's Payne Stewart Award, said the late golfer was "a great competitor and ... friend."

Allmendinger leaving Red Bull

Kansas could be last race with team

By Nate Ryan
USA TODAY

A.J. Allmendinger will be out of a ride at Red Bull Racing after the 2008 season and perhaps much earlier.

A team spokeswoman said the former Champ Car star will drive the No. 84 Toyota this weekend at Kansas Speedway, but his status for the final seven races hasn't been determined. Mike Skinner replaced Allmendinger in testing Tuesday and today at Lowe's Motor Speedway.

Allmendinger, 26, missed the first eight races this season but had shown improvement, scoring his first top-10 finish at Indianapolis. His Camry, which was driven by Skinner for five races after Allmendinger failed to qualify in the first three, is ranked 34th in owners points.

"A.J. is a talented driver, and we really enjoyed working with him," Red Bull Racing general manager Jay Frye said in a statement. "He's come a long way in just two years, and we wish him nothing but the best."

Allmendinger is considered a candidate for Chip Ganassi Racing with Felix Sabates' Dodge, which is being vacated by Reed Sorenson.

Former Formula One driver Scott Speed also will be testing at Lowe's for Red Bull in preparation for attempting his Cup debut next month. Frye has said Speed, who will test a No. 82 Camry, could drive full time in Cup next year.

Lowe's testing: Jeff Gordon and the rest of the Cup series were testing Tuesday and today at Lowe's, which is the site of the four-time champion's most recent victory last October.

During a teleconference Tuesday, Gordon said he deserves as much blame for his 33-race winless streak as crew chief Steve Letarte, whom he gave a vote of confidence.

"If there's going to be criticism, I want it across the board," Gordon said. "Steve has done an amazing job. We communicate very well. Unfortunately we just haven't seen the results like last year."

By Nam Y. Huh, AP

Moving on: A.J. Allmendinger missed the first eight races this season but finished 10th at the Allstate 400 at the Brickyard.

RIR testing: IndyCar drivers Tony Kanaan and Oriol Servia tested about 15 tire combinations of varying compound and construction Tuesday at Richmond International Raceway. Firestone scheduled the test after drivers complained of a lack of passing in the previous two races at RIR. Dario Franchitti led 242 of 250 laps in 2007, and Kanaan was one of three drivers who combined to lead all 300 laps in June.

"I don't think it was a good race," Kanaan said. "I would not blame it on the tires, but there's room for improvement. ... We're looking for grip we lacked in June. That's why we couldn't race side by side."

Kanaan also will be among those testing for Firestone in a session next week at Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

IndyCar news: Servia was testing with KV Racing Technology but hasn't signed a contract to return in 2009, though staying with the team is his preference.

"It'd be great to keep everything the same," he said. "Money is going to dictate a bit of that. ... Everybody is trying to sign the sponsors and get better deals."

Graham Rahal also tested at RIR for Newman Haas Lanigan Racing and said the team is working on sponsorship to firm up its driver lineup for 2009.

F1 appeal denied: A three-judge appeals panel affirmed Lewis Hamilton's Belgium Grand Prix penalty, which dropped the McLaren driver's finish from first to third for cutting a chicane. Hamilton has a one-point lead over Ferrari's Felipe Massa.

Amish mantle and miracle invention help home heat bills hit rock bottom

Miracle heaters being given away free with orders for real Amish fireplace mantles to announce the invention that help slash heat bills, but Amish craftsmen under strain of early Christmas rush forces household limit of 2

Save money: only uses about 8¢ electric an hour; so turn down your thermostat and never be cold again

Everyone hates high heat bills. But we're all sick and tired of simply turning down the thermostat and then being cold.

Well now, the popular HEAT SURGE® miracle heaters are actually being given away free to the general public for the next 48 hours starting at precisely 8:00 a.m. today.

The only thing local readers have to do is call the National Distribution Hotline before the 48-hour deadline with their order for the handmade Amish Fireplace Mantle. Everyone who does is instantly being awarded the miracle heater absolutely free.

This is all happening to announce the HEAT SURGE Roll-n-Glow® Fireplace which actually rolls from room-to-room so you can turn down your thermostat and take the heat with you anywhere. That way, everyone who gets them first can immediately start saving on their heat bills.

Just in time for winter weather, portable Amish encased fireplaces are being delivered directly to the doors of all those who beat the deadline.

These remarkable fireplaces are being called a miracle because they have what's being called the 'Fireless Flame' patented technology that gives you the peaceful flicker of a real fire but without any flames, fumes, smells, ashes or mess. Everyone is getting them because they require no chimney and no vent. You just plug them in.

The Fireless Flame looks so real it amazes everybody because it has no real fire. So what's the catch? Well, soft spoken Amish craftsmen who take their time hand building the mantles have a process that forces a strict household limit of 2 to keep up with orders.

"We can barely keep up ever since we started giving heaters away free. With winter just around the corner, everyone's trying to get them. Amish craftsmen are working their fingers to the bone to be sure everyone gets their delivery in time for Christmas," confirms Timothy Milton, National Shipping Director.

"These portable Roll-n-Glow Fireplaces are the latest home decorating sensation. They actually give you a beautifully redecorated room while they quickly heat from wall to wall. It's the best way to dress up every room, stay really warm and slash your heat bills all at the same time," says Josette Holland, Home Makeover Expert.

And here's the best part. Readers who beat the 48-hour order deadline are getting their imported hi-tech miracle heaters free when encased in the Amish built real wood fireplace mantles. The mantles are being handmade in the USA right in the heart of Amish country where they are beautifully hand-rubbed, stained and varnished.

You just can't find custom made Amish mantles like this in the national chain stores. That makes the oak mantle a real steal for just two hundred ninety-eight dollars since the entire cost of the miracle heater is free.

This free giveaway is the best way to slash heating bills and stay warm this fall and winter. The HEAT SURGE Roll-n-Glow Fireplace gives you zone heating and all the beauty and warmth of a built-in fireplace but rolls from room-to-room so it can also save you a ton of money on heating bills.

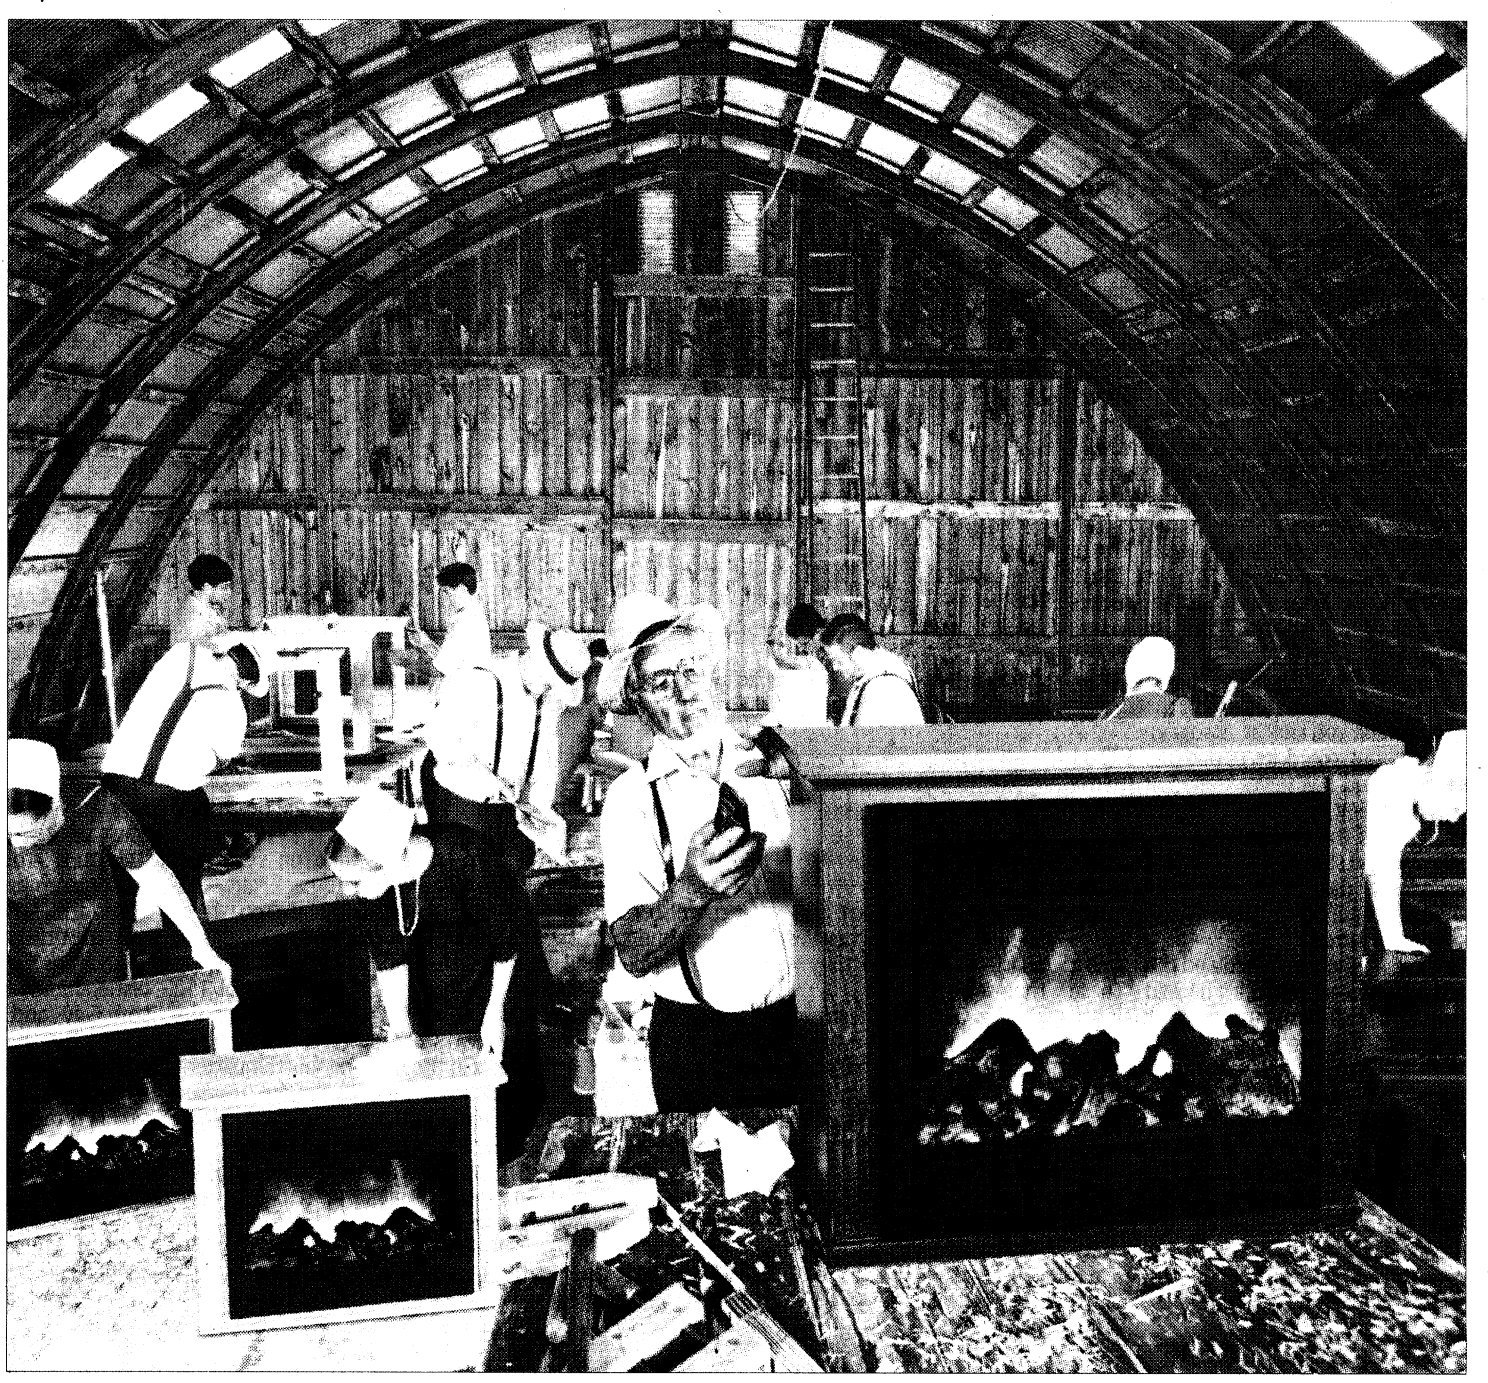
Even people in California and Florida are flocking to get them so they may never have to turn on their furnace all winter. And since it uses only about 8 cents of electric an hour the potential savings are absolutely incredible.

"We are making sure no one gets left out, but you better hurry because entire communities of Amish craftsmen are straining to keep up with demands. For now, we are turning away all dealers in order to let readers have two per household just as long as they call before the deadline," confirms Milton.

It's a really smart decision to get two right now because for only the next 48 hours you get both miracle heaters free. That's like putting five hundred bucks right in your pocket and you can save even more money on your monthly heating bills.

"Everyone's calling to get one but those who are getting their Christmas shopping done early are surprising the whole family by getting two. So when lines are busy keep trying or log onto amishfireplaces.com. We promise to get to every call. Then we can have a delivery truck out to your door right away with your beautiful Heat Surge Roll-n-Glow Fireplace," Milton said.

"You'll instantly feel bone soothing heat in any room. You will never have to be cold again," he said.



GENUINE AMISH MANTLES MADE IN THE USA: Everyone wants to save money on heat bills this winter, so entire Amish communities are working from the crack of dawn to finish. These fine real wood Amish made fireplace mantles are built to last forever. The oak mantle is a real steal at just two hundred ninety-eight dollars because all those who beat the order deadline by calling the National Hotline at 1-800-918-4312 to order the fireplace mantles are actually getting the imported hi-tech Fireless Flame HEAT SURGE miracle heaters for free.

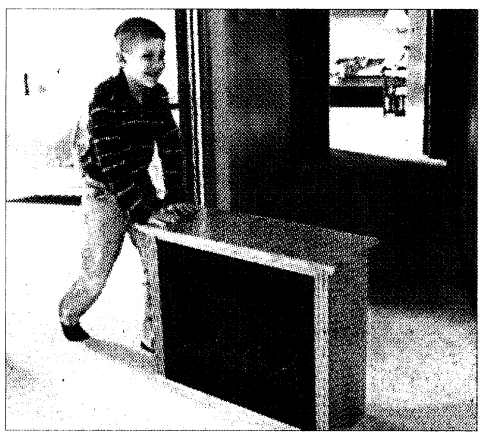
Rolls anywhere to throw an instant heat wave with no chimney, no vents, no wood and no smoke



EASILY ROLLS ANYWHERE: This is the portable Roll-n-Glow® Fireplace that easily rolls from bedroom to living room to keep you warm. No vents, no chimney and no tools. Just plug it in.

SAVES ON BILLS: Everyone can get low bills and stay warm and cozy. The new Roll-n-Glow Fireplace saves a ton of money and makes your front room look like a million bucks.

SAFE: The Fireless Flame looks so real it fools everybody but there is no real fire. That makes the flame safe to the touch. It's where the kids will play and the cat and dog will sleep.

FREE: Get this $249 miracle heater free. It is being given away free to all who beat the 48-hour order deadline for your choice of the oak or cherry finish Amish Mantles. The free heater comes already encased.

Sooners to test TCU's defense

By Andy Gardiner
USA TODAY

Something will have to give Saturday night when unbeaten TCU tries to stay on track against No. 2 Oklahoma.

The 23rd-ranked Horned Frogs are tops in Bowl Subdivision rushing defense (30.5 yards a game) and sixth in points allowed (7.8). Oklahoma leads in scoring (54.7).

"The reality will probably come down somewhere in between (the two extremes)," said Horned Frogs coach Gary Patterson. "You're not going to stop Oklahoma's offense; you have to try to control it. You can't let them have the big play or throw the ball over your head.

"If we can do what we've done offensively, get some turnovers, get some short fields — that's the only way you beat Oklahoma in Norman."

Patterson could also show his team film of the opening game of the 2005 season. That's when the Horned Frogs stunned the Sooners in Norman 17-10, Oklahoma's only home loss since late 2001.

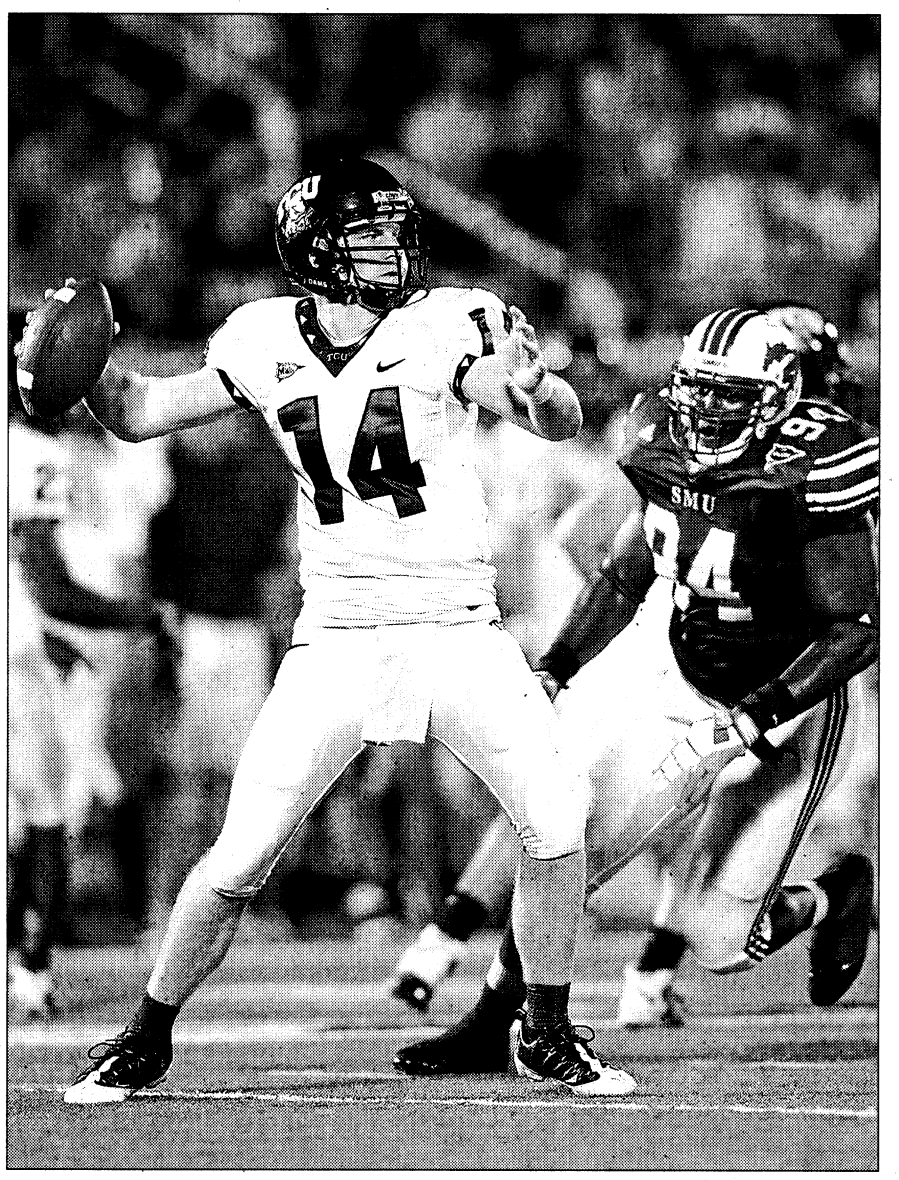
"Of course I'm going to remind our players," OU coach Bob Stoops said of that defeat. "It's something you look at, absolutely."

TCU has outscored its opponents 172-31 this season and has never trailed. It used a 48-7 pummeling of Southern Methodist last week to crack the coaches' top 25, and Patterson sees the showdown with the Sooners as an integral part of his plan to make the Horned Frogs part of the Bowl Championship Series conversation.

"We knew when we scheduled this game it would be a measuring stick," he said. "These are the kind of games you have to play if you want people to remember you.

"For us, we're excited about being where we're at. We wanted to be 4-0 going into Oklahoma and see how it went from there."

TCU was coming off a 5-6 season when it upset OU in 2005, the start of an 11-1 campaign that included the Mountain West Conference title and No. 9 ranking in the final coaches' poll. But Patterson said the circumstances surrounding the Sooners now are different.



By Tim Heitman, US Presswire

Running smoothly: Quarterback Andy Dalton has no touchdown passes, but he is one of four TCU players with at least 162 rushing yards, helping the Horned Frogs to a 4-0 start.

No. 23 TCU (4-0)
at No. 2 Oklahoma (3-0)
Where: Norman, Okla.
When: Saturday, 7 p.m. ET, Fox Sports

"I think (now) they have great chemistry," he said. "(In 2005) they were trying to find a quarterback, I think they were trying to find themselves.

"This Oklahoma team knows where it's at. They have talent at every position and have a chance to be in the BCS title game."

TCU linebackers Robert Henson and Jason Phillips key a unit that has allowed opponents inside the 20-yard line only five times and exceeded expectations.

"With the loss of two defensive ends and two safeties plus a linebacker, we didn't know what to expect," Patterson said.

Both teams maximize their scoring opportunities. Oklahoma has 17 touchdowns and a field goal in its 18 trips inside the opponent's 20-yard line. TCU has converted 22 of 23 chances, with 19 touchdowns and three field goals.

The Horned Frogs rely more on a committee of runners than on quarterback Andy Dalton. Four players (including Dalton) have rushed for more than 162 yards this season, and seven have touchdowns.

Dalton has thrown for an average of 152 yards a game, but Marcus Jackson has the team's only two scoring throws.

TCU excels in the first and fourth quarters, outscoring opponents 92-0. The Horned Frogs also lead the Bowl Subdivision with a plus-12 margin in takeaways/giveaways.

"They're ranked in the top 25 and rightfully so," Stoops said. "I think they're 5-1 (in their last six games) against Big 12 opponents.

"Gary's teams always play incredibly disciplined, you still see a lot of that. They play great, great defense."

Handling of alleged assault gets two Iowa officials fired

From wire reports

Two University of Iowa officials were fired Tuesday after being faulted for their response to an alleged sexual assault involving two former football players.

School spokesman Steve Parrott said Phillip Jones and Marcus Mills were fired by school President Sally Mason a day after rejecting her offer for resignations.

The firings came two days before Mason was scheduled to meet with the Iowa Board of Regents to discuss the school's response to the alleged assault.

Mills and Jones faced sharp criticism in an independent review of the school's response to the alleged assault. Findings of the review, conducted by a St. Louis-based law firm, were released last week.

Former players Abe Satterfield and Cedric Everson face charges in the case, which stems from an incident in October 2007, and are scheduled for trial Nov. 3.

The report said the school's response was flawed and inadequate but that there was no attempt to cover up the alleged assault.

Penalties upheld: The NCAA upheld sanctions against Arkansas' track program, although the school still hopes to keep two national titles in question.

Arkansas said Tuesday that it will ask an NCAA committee handling track and field scoring to clarify how many points it must vacate from the 2004 and '05 men's outdoor national championships for using an ineligible athlete. The Razorbacks won the title both years.

Arkansas was penalized for violations involving sprint star Tyson Gay and an ex-assistant coach. The NCAA made the ruling in October, taking away the national titles and giving the school three years' probation.

Legal action: A former Southern Methodist women's basketball player has filed a $2 million federal lawsuit, alleging the school failed to follow its own policy when it revoked her athletic scholarship. Jennifer Colli, who filed the lawsuit Sept. 15, also names coach Rhonda Rompola in the suit. The lawsuit alleges Rompola regularly asked Colli and her teammates about their relationships with each other, Dallas-Fort Worth television station KTVT reported Monday.

▶ The family of a Rice football player who died at practice two years ago filed a wrongful-death lawsuit Tuesday against the school, former coach Todd Graham (now the coach at Tulsa), the NCAA and others. Dale Lloyd II, 19, died a day after he collapsed during a conditioning workout Sept. 24, 2006. Tulsa spokesman Don Tomkalski said Graham would have no comment.

Briefly: Ohio State running back Chris "Beanie" Wells is probable for Saturday's game against Minnesota, coach Jim Tressel said. Wells missed the last two games with an injury to his right foot. ... Joe Paterno didn't list himself on the injury report, but Penn State's football coach designated himself "hopeful" to be back on the sideline for the 12th-ranked Nittany Lions' game Saturday night against Illinois. Slowed by a sore right leg, the Hall of Famer moved to the press box after halftime of last week's rout of Temple. ... Notre Dame football coach Charlie Weis said tight end Will Yeatman can practice but won't play until prosecutors decide the outcome of alcohol-related charges he faces. Yeatman and center Mike Golic Jr. were among 37 people arrested on preliminary alcohol charges at a weekend party. It's the second time Yeatman, 20, has been charged with an alcohol-related offense. Weis said any punishment of Golic, son of ESPN radio personality Mike Golic, will be handled internally. ... South Carolina starting left tackle Jarriel King was taken to the hospital after experiencing what coach Steve Spurrier called a heart flutter. Athletics officials say King was lifting weights Tuesday morning when he had the problem. He is expected to recover fully and only miss a day of practice.

Stats can be deceiving: Tim Tebow's final numbers a year ago were historic, but Florida struggled en route to a 9-4 season. His numbers aren't the same this season, but Florida is playing well and winning.

Less equals more for Tebow

By David Jones
Florida Today

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — The formula for Tim Tebow winning the Heisman Trophy as a sophomore last season didn't necessarily determine success for the Florida football team.

The Gators lost four games while Tebow became the first player in college history to pass for 20 touchdowns and run for 20 in the same season.

So far this season, Florida coach Urban Meyer has chosen to concentrate more on controlling the football and taking fewer chances on offense, winning the field-position game with special teams and relying more on the defense.

So far, a perfect plan. Florida (3-0) hasn't given up a first-half touchdown and leads the Southeastern Conference in total defense at 213 yards a game. But being more deliberate is decreasing the chances Tebow is getting to pile up statistics.

Florida could be a better team this season, and Tebow could be staying home in December when the 2008 Heisman is announced.

Saturday's 30-6 win at Tennessee was a classic example of how Meyer thinks Florida can win. The Gators got a touchdown on special teams for the third game in a row, ran the ball 39 times (12 by Tebow) and passed 15 times.

Even Meyer confessed his team's offensive numbers put him a little on edge: "I look at the score sheet and ... where are the yards? Where are the points? Let's get going."

Meyer also understands fans and news media members are wondering about the strategy.

"It's not real interesting to people," he said of the importance of defense and special teams. "But it's how you win."

Tebow even used the term "3 yards and a cloud of dust" in describing the Tennessee win. While some would argue more team success should translate into more Heisman votes for Tebow, that's not how the system works. Voters for the award want to see victories for a candidate's team, but they also watch statistics closely.

Of course, to pile up nice stats, you need the opportunity. In the first three games of 2007, the Gators had 190 offensive plays. This year, they have 171 — and many have been when the object was to run out the game clock.

"You think we're playing Tennessee and I'm worrying about how many passes I'm throwing?" Tebow said this week with a testy chuckle. "Everything else will come. ... You just have to have patience and trust the future."

Still, the numbers are very different, after three games, from a year ago:

▶ In 2007, Tebow was 45-for-61 for 835 yards and eight touchdowns. He also had 192 yards rushing on 43 attempts.

▶ This season, the left-hander is 38-for-64 for 489 yards (almost half as many yards per completion) and five scores. He's carried the ball 34 times for 118 yards and no scores.

That means he's had a similar number of attempts but hasn't been as productive, so far, as a junior. But it's not that Tebow has played worse.

Florida is the only major college team that hasn't turned the ball over this season. Tebow has a streak extending to last season of 145 passes without an interception. He ranks No. 2 in the SEC in passing efficiency with a rating of 149.3 but is seventh in the league in passing yards a game at 163.

How will all this affect any shot Tebow has at a second consecutive Heisman? For now, it means very little. But it does mean he has a lot of work to do to get back on top of the contenders.

"Tim is still Tim," Florida tailback Emmanuel Moody said. "We're happy. We're 3-0. The games we've won, they haven't really been that close."

Florida hosts LSU on Oct. 11 and meets Georgia on Nov. 1 in Jacksonville. As long as the Gators win their other games, those contests likely will be his showcase chances in the Heisman chase.

In the meantime, Florida seems content to concentrate on winning and less about style points or Heisman votes.

But does the lack of big stats bother him?

"You'll see them eventually," Tebow promised. "We just beat Tennessee. I'm not complaining about anything."

Get ahead of the crowd.

AFC notes

Baltimore: SS Dawan Landry is expected to return this season after sustaining a spinal cord concussion Sunday against Cleveland. Landry was released from the hospital Monday and will wear a cervical collar for at least a week. His stability tests are normal, coach John Harbaugh said. Added Harbaugh: "He'll be playing in some number of weeks. It won't be too many weeks." While Landry is out, Jim Leonhard will start.

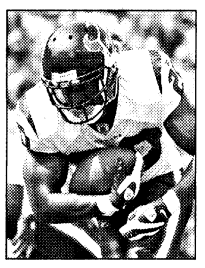
Buffalo: QB Trent Edwards has started only 12 NFL games but already has three fourth-quarter comeback victories — two in a row. In the fourth quarter Sunday, Edwards completed 13 of 18 passes for 177 yards and led the Bills to 17 points. "Trent grew up in front of us," RB Fred Jackson said. "He had another spectacular game like last week."

Cincinnati: WR Chad (Johnson) Ocho Cinco has eight catches for 88 yards in three games but is staying calm. In the past, he concedes, "I'd (have) been here like a little pit bull, fussing. But no need. I think, right now, we're fine. We might not be in a position that we really want to be in, but, right now, we don't need my problems being a distraction."

Cleveland: After QB Derek Anderson completed 14 of 37 passes for 125 yards and three interceptions Sunday, coach Romeo Crennel said backup Brady Quinn will get increased reps with the first unit in practice this week. "I think that we'll definitely try to get the other guy (Quinn) ready, and we'll see how it goes from there."

Denver: The Broncos haven't been a 3-4 defense under coach Mike Shanahan. But they used the look Sunday on a handful of plays in passing situations. Denver ditched its 4-3 look to bring Jamie Winborn on the field as a fourth linebacker a few times. "It's something we threw in real quick, utilize all the guys we had," Winborn said.

Houston: In his first start Sunday, RB Steve Slaton ran for 50 yards on his second carry and finished with 116 yards on 18 attempts. RT Eric Winston said: "We all knew he had that speed and with our system that he can break one anytime. He's not big, but he took some shots and he kept plugging his legs. I know he got a lot of respect out of us."



By John Russell, AP

Slaton: Scores against the Titans.

Indianapolis: QB Peyton Manning acknowledged that the offense's timing is a bit off with several new linemen. "We got some young guys playing up front," Manning said. "Anytime you have new guys, you're going to work through it and try to get comfortable with those guys."

Jacksonville: K Josh Scobee missed a 37-yard field goal attempt in Week 1 vs. Tennessee. His 51-yard kick Sunday beat Indianapolis with four seconds left. "It's kind of funny, the contrast between weeks," he said. "If you have a bad game, people can look at you like you aren't part of the team, but when you have a game like this where it comes down to the kicking team, it feels a lot better."

Kansas City: After seven games last season, the Chiefs were 4-3. Since then, they have lost 12 consecutive games, including Sunday's loss to Atlanta in which they never led. That extended another streak: The Chiefs have gone 21 quarters without being ahead in a game. The last time the Chiefs held a lead was Dec. 16 against Tennessee.

Miami: Rookie DEs Phillip Merling and Kendall Langford were impressive in Sunday's upset of New England. Merling had three tackles, a sack, a quarterback hurry and a pass deflection, while Langford had three tackles, one for a loss, and a pass deflection. Said DE Vonnie Holliday, "Our young guys ... bring a lot of energy to the game."

New England: WR Randy Moss had four receptions for 25 yards Sunday and has four catches and one touchdown in three games. After three games in 2007, he had 22 and five. "The main thing is, no matter what, we have to stay upbeat," Moss said. "Not just myself, but you've got a whole team and coaching staff that has to stay upbeat."

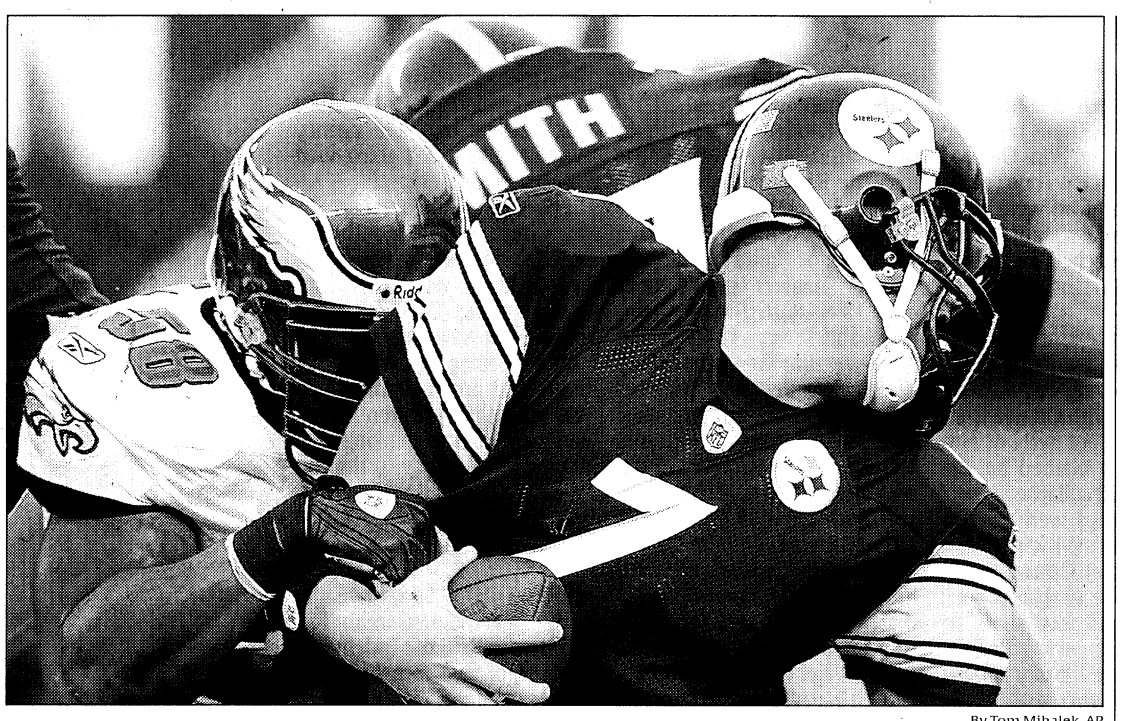
New York Jets: After Monday night's loss to San Diego, QB Brett Favre walked off the field with a slight limp. Sitting in front of his locker after the game, Favre's left ankle was wrapped with a bandage. Saying he "rolled" the ankle in the third quarter, Favre said, "I'm sure it'll feel terrible tonight. But we just did some X-rays on it, and I think it's OK ... aside from the old ankle."

Oakland: Sunday's loss in Buffalo prevented the Raiders from winning back-to-back road games for the first time since 2001, when they beat Indianapolis and Philadelphia. The latter came after their bye. In 2004, they won consecutive road games vs. Carolina and Denver with a home game in between. Since then, they're 4-23 on the road.

Pittsburgh: QB Ben Roethlisberger was sacked 46 times in 2006, 47 times in 2007 and is on pace for 64 sacks this year. Said RG Kendall Simmons: "I'm going to bite my tongue. All I'll say is they were bringing more people than we could handle. We can block five or six, but when they bring seven or eight, there's nothing we can do."

San Diego: Defensive coordinator Ted Cottrell used frequent blitzes and the defense played at a high level Monday night vs. the Jets. "That's how we should be playing," LB Shaun Phillips said. Added SS Clinton Hart: "To make this step from the last two games ... Ted and the coaches did a great job allowing us to get the pressure we need."

Tennessee: CB Cortland Finnegan's 99-yard interception return Sunday not only set a franchise record for longest interception return, but it also gave Finnegan four interceptions this season. After the game, he credited the defensive line with making the interception happen. "They give you a chance to make a play out there," he said.



By Tom Mihalek, AP

Defensive assault: Eagles defensive end Trent Cole sacks Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger in the second quarter Sunday, one of nine sacks for the Eagles on the day. Cole was called for a face-mask penalty.

Eagles blitzed early, often

Roethlisberger pays for lessons learned in loss to Cowboys

Philadelphia Eagles defensive coordinator Jim Johnson usually lives by the maxim of bringing pressure — the more the better.

Johnson went from uncharacteristically sitting back and getting blitzed by Dallas Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo for three touchdowns in a 41-37, Week 2 loss to throwing the kitchen sink and seemingly every other appliance at Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger.

Big Ben got his clock cleaned with nine sacks and a relentless pummeling that ended with X-rays on his right hand proving negative.

NFL notebook
By Jim Corbett

According to senior producer Greg Cosell, who breaks down coaches video for ESPN's NFL Matchup show, Johnson went from blitzing Romo nine times in 30 passes to blitzing Roethlisberger and Byron Leftwich 21 times in 32 drop backs, not counting sacks.

Cosell saw a creative wrinkle in which linebackers Omar Gaither and Stewart Bradley alternated shooting the center-guard gaps. "What they consistently did was put Gaither and Bradley in the A-gaps, showing blitz," Cosell says. "They really created the pre-snap illusion of pressure. A couple of things led to the perfect storm. Jim Johnson was committed. It clearly created protection confusion.

"The best way to describe Ben Roethlisberger is that he's an intuitive quarterback who has a tendency to have a fast clock in his head. He's more of an instinct quarterback than a precision quarterback. He tends to flush himself from the pocket and play fast and frenetic under pressure."

Roethlisberger has been sacked a staggering 105 times in the last 33 regular-season games — once every 8.9 drop backs.

Dealing with diabetes: The Jay Cutler effect has been dynamic on and off the field.

The third-year Denver Broncos quarterback's hot start has mesmerized Broncos fans, including Michael McDermott, director of endocrinology and diabetes at the University of Colorado Hospital. McDermott helped Cutler learn to manage his Type 1 diabetes after his April diagnosis.

The quarterback has provided a confidence boost for his 3-0 team — as well as others diagnosed with the serious disease.

"I've always been a Broncos fan," McDermott says. "But I'm a particular fan of Jay Cutler's. Once I saw his reaction to being diagnosed with this disease, I was impressed.

"I'm very encouraged that patients I have who are struggling with diabetes see his example and are encouraged to say, 'If Jay Cutler can work that hard and do that well, I can control this illness, too.' "

McDermott contacted team trainer Steve Antonopulos two weeks ago to learn Cutler is as adroit at injecting himself with the proper amount of insulin before games as the 6-3 passer has been in shredding defenses.

"Jay wasn't sad or upset about having diabetes," McDermott says. "He looked tired. He was under 205 pounds (down from 235). Now he's happy and optimistic.

"He's treated diabetes like it's a very small obstacle he's able to overcome."

Going Green: After Kerry Collins, Gus Frerrote and Brian Griese sparked the Tennessee Titans, Minnesota Vikings and Tampa Bay Buccaneers to Week 3 wins, 0-3 St. Louis Rams head coach Scott Linehan is trying to catch veteran backup quarterback lightning in a bottle.

Fourteen months after giving Marc Bulger a six-year, $65 million extension, Linehan announced Tuesday that Trent Green will start Sunday against the 3-0 Buffalo Bills. Green, 38, played seven seasons in Rams offensive coordinator Al Saunders' system with the Kansas City Chiefs and the Rams.

Bulger doesn't have a 200-yard game, and the Rams have been outscored 116-29. But will a leaky line protect Green any better than it did Bulger, who has absorbed 11 sacks? Will Green, who suffered a second serious concussion in 13 months during the Miami Dolphins' 2007 opener, provide a spark? Or will he become just another sacrificial Rams quarterback?

Injured Tomlinson plows ahead

Star back, slowed by toe, grinds out two-TD night

By Jarrett Bell
USA TODAY

SAN DIEGO — That was pretty much LaDainian Tomlinson's alter ego lining up in the San Diego Chargers backfield Monday night. There was nothing for the video scrapbook. No signature juke-shakedowns in the open field to choke oxygen. No astonishing spin moves requiring slo-mo verification. Not even an option pass.

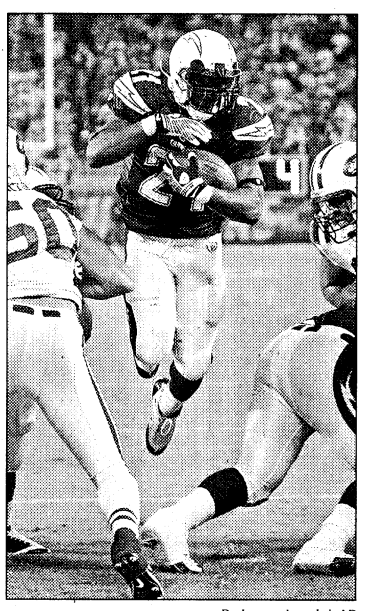
No, this was grunt work.

It is life when one of the NFL's most explosive players meets a sprained right big toe.

LT, a plodder. He was unable to bounce outside, and his longest rush was 5 yards.

"That was my whole approach," Tomlinson said after gaining 67 yards on 26 carries (2.6 yards a rush) amid a 48-29 beatdown of the New York Jets. "I knew with my toe, there are certain things that I'm limited in doing. I told myself (it) was going to be one of those physical running days, hitting it up in there, making one cut and going. Because straight ahead for me is not a problem. It's when I try to do a lot of cutting. You've got to be able to adjust as a running back."

The NFL's reigning rushing champ took heat in January after a sprained left knee forced him out of the AFC title game loss at the New England Patriots after three plays.



By Lenny Ignelzi, AP

Night shift: LaDainian Tomlinson scores a 2-yard TD against the Jets.

The criticism stung Tomlinson, although that wasn't the reason he was on the field Monday when San Diego had an 18-point fourth-quarter lead. The Chargers (1-2) lost each of their first two games on touchdowns — and in the Denver Broncos game, a TD with a two-point conversion — in the final seconds and apparently were nervous about lightning striking a third time.

"He wanted to play," coach Norv Turner said. "I mean, 18 points and they are getting onside kicks. We went about 18 minutes and didn't have the ball. We needed to get points, and he needed to play."

Tomlinson, who scored his second 2-yard TD of the night with 3:55 left, backed his coach on this. Never mind that he was knocked out of the Denver game with 10 carries after aggravating the injury suffered in the opener against the Carolina Panthers.

"We were trying to leave no doubt the game was over," he said.

It is telling that, despite his modest numbers, none of Tomlinson's rushes lost yardage.

"I can't imagine what it's like," quarterback Philip Rivers said. "If you know when you're going to cut, it's easy. But you never know, especially the way LT runs. He had some tough, hard-nosed runs."

The Chargers, who punted once, offered a versatile display of firepower. Rivers had 10 consecutive completions at one point, and his three TD strikes gave him an NFL-high nine on the season.

And Tomlinson's backup, Darren Sproles, provided LT-like sizzle in averaging 11 yards on seven touches. The defense collected four takeaways — including an interception Antonio Cromartie returned 52 yards for a TD — and three sacks.

With a trip to play the Oakland Raiders looming, Tomlinson thinks he's close to being himself again. Last week he didn't practice until Friday.

"If my toe feels like it does now, I think I'll practice this week," he said. "The full week."

NFC notes

Arizona: Instead of returning home from Washington after Sunday's game against the Redskins, the Cardinals stayed in the D.C. area and are practicing at Catholic University before Sunday's game at the Jets. "At some point, if we get to the Super Bowl, that's what this week would be like," coach Ken Whisenhunt said.

Atlanta: RB Jerious Norwood, who finished with 75 yards rushing on 14 attempts in Sunday's win vs. Kansas City, was used at quarterback in the shotgun during the game. Off a direct snap, he picked up 4 yards around the right end. The second time, WR Harry Douglas was tackled by DL Tank Tyler on a reverse for a loss of 8 yards.

Carolina: After 11 false starts in the last two games and allowing five sacks in Sunday's loss to Minnesota, the line will welcome back LG Travelle Wharton, who missed those games because of a sprained knee. Said coach John Fox: "Not to say that (Sunday's) mishaps were all about that change. But getting Travelle back in there will be helpful."

Chicago: WR Marty Booker's streak of 60 consecutive games with a reception ended Sunday vs. Tampa Bay. Booker has two catches this season for 11 yards and was asked if he's growing frustrated waiting for an opportunity to contribute. "I've been waiting all my life," he said. "I don't know what's going on, man."

Dallas: LG Kyle Kosier is out again after re-injuring his sprained right foot Sunday. Kosier, who suffered the injury late in the game and was in a protective walking boot Monday, will be out for two to three weeks. It was Kosier's first game back since suffering a sprained foot Aug. 22 against Houston.

Detroit: WR Roy Williams reiterated his opinion that the Lions should use their four-receiver set more often to run and pass. "When we need it, we go down and score in four wides," Williams said.

Green Bay: C Scott Wells might return to the starting lineup Sunday. He was activated Sunday as an emergency backup for the first time this season after he aggravated a strained lower back a month ago. RG Tony Moll could be back on the bench, with Jason Spitz moving back to right guard.

Minnesota: QB Gus Frerotte, starting in place of benched Tarvaris Jackson, said he got plenty of help from the guy he replaced during Sunday's victory against Carolina. "Tarvaris was great (Sunday). He was right in the game," Frerotte said. "I would come over to the sidelines, we would talk about everything. He did a good job."

New Orleans: G Jamar Nesbit was suspended Tuesday for four games for violating the NFL policy on anabolic steroids and related substances. Nesbit became a starter for the Saints in 2006, and he has started every game since then.

New York Giants: RB Brandon Jacobs, after averaging 104.5 yards for the first two games, was held to 35 yards on 14 carries Sunday by Cincinnati, but second back Derrick Ward responded with 80 yards on nine carries and added three receptions for 26 yards. "Derrick has done that consistently all season," coach Tom Coughlin said.

Philadelphia: An MRI on RB Brian Westbrook's injured ankle showed no serious ligament damage, but it's uncertain if he will be able to play Sunday against Chicago. Said coach Andy Reid: "He was on crutches (Sunday) and is limping around (Monday) without the crutches. I guess that's a positive. We'll see how he does."

St. Louis: Offensive coordinator Al Saunders said Monday, "We need to establish a sense of confidence in Marc (Bulger) that he will be protected." Coach Scott Linehan said Tuesday that Trent Green will replace Bulger as the starting quarterback Sunday vs. Buffalo. In three games, Bulger has completed 58.4% of his passes for 519 yards, with two TDs, two interceptions and a 73.2 passer rating.

San Francisco: The 49ers rank 11th in the league in offense and have scored 30-plus points in consecutive games for the first time since 2003. "This is a different team now," RB Frank Gore said. "It's fun. It seems so easy now. Last year, it was a struggle to get the ball across the 50, and now we can score 21 points like it's nothing."

Seattle: S Deon Grant had an interception Sunday against St. Louis and could have had two but dropped one toward the end of the game around the 5-yard line. He initially said he dropped it so he wouldn't put the offense in poor field position. "I can't even look you in the eye when I say that," Grant laughed. "I was trying to catch the ball."

Tampa Bay: WR Dexter Jackson might have lost his job as the kickoff returner after his performance in Sunday's win against the Bears. Jackson rarely got past the 20-yard line and stumbled on two of his returns, a recurring problem this season.

Washington: RT Jon Jansen could be back in the lineup against Dallas because Stephon Heyer sprained his left shoulder against Arizona. "We'll see how his shoulder responds," coach Jim Zorn said. "He would have to practice by Thursday."

Redden adjusting to New York

By Sam Weinman
The (Westchester County, N.Y.) Journal News

NEW YORK — Wade Redden has lived in Manhattan for nearly a month, yet the first time anyone recognized the defenseman was when he took the Madison Square Garden ice Monday in his New York Rangers preseason debut.

NHL

While some players might covet the attention that comes with playing in the media capital of the world, Redden's perspective might be colored by his previous stop with the Ottawa Senators. At the core of a team that reached the Stanley Cup Finals in 2007 and then imploded down the stretch last season, the 31-year-old was revered when the Senators were winning but scorched by fans and sports media when things went precipitously south.

In search of a fresh start when he signed a six-year, $39 million deal with the Rangers on July 1, Redden has been able to familiarize himself with his new city in relative quiet. "In Ottawa, there's no chance no one would recognize him if he were out," said Rangers assistant Perry Pearn, who coached Redden as a Senators assistant from 1996 to 2004.

He established himself as one of the game's premier puck-moving defensemen when he was with Ottawa from 1996 to 2008, but fairly or not, he was widely blamed for the team's 2007-08 collapse.

Both extremes were on display in Monday's 2-1 win against Redden's former Ottawa teammates. Decisive with the puck and able to put four shots on goal in the first period, Redden was also burned badly on the outside on Ottawa's goal.

"I don't know what was more weird: just being here for the first time or playing against that one," Redden said. "But it was good to get both out of the way, so it's something to build on."

While Redden did struggle in his last season with the Senators, the Rangers saw mostly a player affected by what had become a toxic atmosphere.

Coming off their run to the Finals, the Senators jumped out to a 29-10-4 start. But they finished the season 14-21-4 and were swept in the first round of the playoffs. Redden's numbers reflected the decline. After five goals and 15 assists with a plus 19 rating in the first part of the season, he had a goal and 13 assists with a minus 8 rating the rest of the way.

"I think it (Ottawa's collapse) had a lot more to do with factors that weren't in players' control. And my sense was when good players like Wade were struggling, it wasn't because they had all of a sudden become bad players," Pearn said. "But what happens in those situations is the guys who take the brunt of the criticism were the best players. And it didn't help that Wade was heading into free agency. When things aren't going well, it's easy to pick targets."

Now, though, Redden can enjoy a fresh start. A month after signing with the Rangers in July, he married his wife, Danica, and the two already have settled into the life of New Yorkers.

"Just coming to the rink, not that it was an adventure, but it was something different," Redden said. "I was thinking how driving (on the way to the rink in Ottawa), I wouldn't even see a stoplight on my way to the rink. It's a little different."

Blues injury: Second-year St. Louis Blues defenseman Erik Johnson will be out indefinitely because of two torn ligaments in his right knee. He led St. Louis defensemen last season in goals, assists and points.

Armstrong to discuss agenda

Topics: '09 Tour, cancer initiative

By Janice Lloyd
USA TODAY

Whatever remains to be told about Lance Armstrong's comeback — and surely some choice nuggets have been saved — will be outlined today at the Clinton Global Initiative in New York.

Armstrong will hold his first press conference since the news about the seven-time Tour de France winner broke on the Internet three weeks ago. He will discuss his Tour return and his plans for a global cancer initiative.

Cycling

"The most important issue is taking the global epidemic of cancer to a much bigger stage," Armstrong told the Associated Press on Sept. 14 after winning the 12 hours of Snowmass mountain bike race in Colorado. "The best way to do that is to race the bike all over the world."

Armstrong was given a 40% chance of survival at age 25 after being diagnosed with testicular cancer in 1996. During his treatment, he established The Lance Armstrong Foundation, which has become a vast network for cancer survivors and has raised $260 million for research.

The 37-year-old Texan will attempt to become the oldest cyclist to win the Tour, scheduled to start July 5 in Brittany. Armstrong won a record number of Tours from 1999 to 2005. He retired to spend more time with his three children and to try his legs at marathons and mountain biking.

But the hunger to return to the Tour surfaced this summer when he competed in a mountain biking race in Leadville, Colo., according to a story posted Sept. 10 at Vanity Fair's website.

Old speculation about doping has resurfaced. Armstrong has never tested positive and vowed to submit to stringent testing. His coach, Chris Carmichael, told the AP that Armstrong "has never doped and never will dope."

One of the big questions is not about which team Armstrong will lead, but where Alberto Contador will land. He said Tuesday that he deserved to be the lead rider for a team and wouldn't ride for Armstrong.

Contador, the Tour winner in 2007, is lead rider for Astana, but Astana team manager Johan Bruyneel expects to reunite with Armstrong.

Back on his bike: Seven-time winner Lance Armstrong apparently is planning to return to the Tour de France. He last raced in it in 2005.

Donaghy starts serving his time

By Chris Colston
USA TODAY

Former NBA referee Tim Donaghy, living with a friend in Florida this summer after his sentencing, flew from Tampa to the Pensacola (Fla.) Federal Detention Center on Tuesday to begin serving 15 months for wire fraud and transmitting betting tips through interstate commerce.

Donaghy — Register No. 75377-053 — arrived about 2 p.m., unaccompanied by police. "It was pretty standard," said his attorney, John Lauro. "We're hoping he can be moved to a community center to start his transition back to society in 12 months," on early release for good behavior in a minimal-supervision program.

NBA

So long, Marbury? What was anticipated all summer might become reality by week's end if, as Newsday reports, the New York Knicks waive Stephon Marbury. Because of taking the hit on the final year of Marbury's contract, worth $21.9 million, Madison Square Garden chairman James Dolan has been reluctant to end the chaotic tenure of the veteran point guard.

Once Marbury clears waivers and a buyout is reached, he would be free to sign with any team. Reports in Newsday and South Florida news media included interest from the Miami Heat.

According to Newsday, which cited several persons with knowledge of the situation, Marbury has recovered from surgery in January to remove bone spurs in his left ankle, has worked out all summer and trimmed his playing weight to 200 pounds.

His best statistics in 4½ seasons with the Knicks came in 2004-05, when Marbury averaged 21.7 points and 8.1 assists. Hs numbers have declined, while his feuding with management and teammates increased. The low point might have been in November, when Marbury missed a game in Phoenix without permission and returned to New York.

Tinsley not in Pacers' plans: Another tricky situation exists with the Indiana Pacers and their point guard, Jamaal Tinsley, what with T.J. Ford acquired from the Toronto Raptors in the trade for Jermaine O'Neal.

The Pacers were on the lookout to deal Tinsley this summer, without much luck. The Indianapolis Star now reports the Pacers removed the nameplate from his locker at Conseco Fieldhouse and Tinsley is not expected to be at media day Monday.

Coach Jim O'Brien doesn't seem too concerned. "I don't see how it's a distraction," he told The Star.

By Ray Stubblebine, Reuters

Available? Should he get waived, the Heat are reportedly interested in signing Stephon Marbury.

"I'm worried about the guys that have uniforms."

Suns sign backup for Nash: The Phoenix Suns signed Slovenian point guard Goran Dragic, acquired in a draft-day trade with the San Antonio Spurs, to a multiyear contract and say he will play this season. Dragic, 22, is seen as a backup and eventual replacement for Steve Nash, 34.

Dragic reached a $2 million buyout agreement with Spanish team TAU Ceramica. He played last season with Union Olimpija, helping the team win the Slovenia League title and the Slovenian Cup.

Also: Free agent guard Juan Dixon is returning to the Washington Wizards, who chose him with the 17th overall pick in the 2002 NBA draft. In six seasons (8.9 points, 1.7 assists a game), Dixon has been with the Wizards, Raptors, Portland Trail Blazers and Detroit Pistons. He could help fill in the first month of the season while Gilbert Arenas recovers from knee surgery. ... The Spurs signed first-round pick George Hill. The 6-2 guard, the first drafted out of Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis, averaged 21.5 points, 6.8 rebounds and 4.3 assists last season for the Jaguars.

How to Choose a Nursing Program

By Linda K. Amos, Ed.D., RN, FAAN
Excerpts from Peterson's 2009 edition of Nursing Programs published in cooperation with the American Association of Colleges of Nursing

With more than 700 baccalaureate nursing programs in the United States, a prospective student must do research to determine which programs match his or her needs and career objectives.

If you have no health care experience, it is best to gain some insight into the field by volunteering or working part-time in a care facility, such as a hospital or an outpatient clinic. Talking to nurse professionals about their work will also help you determine how your attributes may apply to the nursing field.

When considering a nursing education, consider your personal needs. Is it best for you to work in a heavily structured environment or one that offers more flexibility in terms of, say, integrating a part-time work schedule into studies? Do you need to stay close to home? Do you prefer to work in a large health care system, such as a health maintenance organization or a medical center, or do you prefer smaller, community-based operations?

As for nursing programs, ask the following questions: How involved is the faculty in developing students for today's health care industry? How strong is the school's affiliation with clinics and hospitals? Is there assurance that a student will gain up-to-date educational experience for the current job market? Is a variety of care settings available? How much time in clinics is required for graduation? What are the program's resources in terms of computer and science laboratories? Does the school work with hospitals and community-based centers to provide health care? How available is the faculty to oversee a student's curriculum? What kind of student support is available in terms of study groups and audiovisual aids? Moreover, what kind of counseling from faculty members and administrators is available to help students develop well-rounded, effective progress through the program?

Visiting a school and talking to the program's guidance counselors will give you a better understanding of how a particular program or school will fit your needs. You can get a closer look at the faculty, its members' credentials, and the focus of the program. It's also not too early to consider what each program can offer in terms of job placement.

A quick read on the news of the day

Report: Grant NCAA anti-trust exemption

Congress should grant the NCAA a limited anti-trust exemption to restrain spending growth in college athletics departments, the Women's Sports Foundation recommends in a report released Tuesday.

"The costs are rising so fast that the numbers are unsustainable," said Marjorie A. Snyder, WSF chief program and planning officer. "We are looking for solutions to that."

Snyder said more money could be spent on women's athletics and men's minor sports if less money were spent on coaches' salaries and recruiting in football and men's basketball. She said such an anti-trust bill has no sponsor in Congress at present. "We've been discussing it with some of our friends on the Hill," she said. "As with all legislative efforts, we're looking for the right moment. We think it will be a long process."

The NCAA cannot restrict salaries without an exemption. The NCAA learned that in the 1990s when it lost an anti-trust suit over "restricted earnings" assistant coaches.

Wally Renfro, senior adviser to NCAA President Myles Brand, said the organization recognizes and has studied problems with the growth of athletics expenditures "and frankly we have not been encouraged that (a limited anti-trust exemption) is a likely solution." — Erik Brady

Md. attorney general looks into racial taunts

The Maryland attorney general's Office of Civil Rights is looking into complaints of racist taunts at a high school football game in Cumberland, Md., on Friday between Dunbar (Washington, D.C.) and Fort Hill (Cumberland). Dunbar coach Greg Jeffries pulled his team off the field in the third quarter of a game, though his team was leading 14-8, telling referees it was because of racial taunts directed at his players by the Fort Hill players. "The allegations have been brought to our attention and we're looking into them," said Shanetta Paskel with the attorney general's office. On Monday, Alleghany County's school officials announced their own findings, concluding allegations of racist language were unjustified. "There was no trash talking that any of the officials observed on the field, let alone racial," referee Robert Broadwater told USA TODAY. Fort Hill banned the use of the Confederate flag at the school last March because of racial tensions. — Jim Halley

Trinity jumps 107 spots in Massey Ratings

Trinity (Louisville) made a huge move in the Massey Ratings released Tuesday. The Shamrocks jumped from No. 118 to 11th in the high school football computer rankings after its 17-6 win against St. Xavier (Cincinnati) last week. But it was more than just the victory that propelled Trinity 107 spots. In the Massey Ratings, strength of schedule is taken into account, which means Trinity benefits from its schedule (No. 8 in the state) and from St. Xavier's schedule (No. 3 in the nation). "Most important is your opponent," said Ken Massey of HighSchoolSports.net. "But everyone is connected. If your conference does well and your out-of-conference opponents do well, that's going to reflect on you." Trinity (Euless, Texas) remains No. 1. The Trojans started the season No. 2 but jumped over Colerain (Cincinnati) after defeating Cedar Hill (Texas). — Jeff Zillgitt

▶ Is it a confirmation of something more than friendship between actress Lindsay Lohan, 22, and DJ Samantha Ronson, 31? "A very long time" is what Lohan said on the Los Angeles-based radio show Loveline when she was asked how long she and Ronson had been going out. The pair have been photographed out in public together for months, and Lohan accompanied Ronson when the DJ performed at various summer festivals.

▶ Clay Aiken confirms he is gay in the next People, out Friday. The headline "Yes, I'm Gay" runs on the cover, which shows Aiken holding his infant son, Parker Foster Aiken. When asked about the cover, which appeared online Tuesday, a People rep confirmed that Aiken and his son are featured in the next issue and said to find out more at People.com at 7 a.m. ET today. The baby's mother is Aiken's friend and record producer Jaymes Foster.

Recognizing stars' work, philanthropy

▶ Actor/director Sean Penn will be honored with the Stanley Kubrick Britannia Award for Excellence in Film at the Nov. 6 Britannia Awards, given out by the British Academy of Film and Television Arts/Los Angeles. Previous winners include Clint Eastwood and Denzel Washington.

▶ Washington and his wife, Pauletta, will be recognized for their philanthropic efforts and receive the Brass Ring Award on Oct. 25 at the 30th anniversary Carousel of Hope gala in Beverly Hills. Among performers hitting the stage at the event, which benefits the Barbara Davis Center for Childhood Diabetes: The Jonas Brothers, Josh Groban, Kenny "Babyface" Edmonds and Katharine McPhee. Celebrities such as Halle Berry, Will Ferrell and Scarlett Johansson are designing and signing Carousel's Guess green T-shirts to be auctioned on eBay starting Nov. 5.

Celebs are going to the dogs for charity

Williams' work: Statue is up for bid.

▶ Vanessa Williams, Richard Gere, Martha Stewart and other stars are showing their canine-loving artistic side by painting dog statues to be auctioned on charityfolks.com as part of Celebrity Dogs Unleashed, sponsored by Halo Purely for Pets brand of pet products. Proceeds will benefit Green Chimneys, a residential treatment center for children and farm for rescued animals in New York. The first wave of painted pups is already open for bids.

▶ Felicity Huffman and her adopted pup, Tucker, will appear on The Oprah Winfrey Show tomorrow (check local listings) to kick off the 10th anniversary Iams Home 4 the Holidays pet adoption program, which aims to place pets in loving homes.

Romance colors 'Grey's' this season

New and old couples click

By Bill Keveney
USA TODAY

Grey's Anatomy ended last season on an upbeat note: Doctors Meredith Grey and Derek Shepherd got together for good.

That leads to a new question as the ABC medical drama opens Season 5 (Thursday, 9 ET/PT): What happens after happily ever after? For Meredith (Ellen Pompeo) and Derek (Patrick Dempsey), being a committed couple is hardly the end of the story, creator Shonda Rhimes says.

"They've never had the chance to get past the 'Will they, or won't they?' and be in the 'What happens now?' part of it," she says. "There's a lot of humor and pathos and pain to be played in what it's going to mean for the two of them to really be together."

Dempsey says the two are "always going to have conflict. They're always going to be working on issues."

In addition, "for good" doesn't necessarily go past this season, Rhimes says. "But they're definitely together for good for now. I'm with them. They believe they are together for good. I believe they are together for good."

Other stories include:

▶ Romantic possibility for Cristina Yang (Sandra Oh). In Thursday's two-hour premiere, which features victims of an ice storm, she's attracted to a military doctor (Kevin McKidd), but he must return to Iraq. "We will see him again," Rhimes says.

By Fred Prouser, Reuters

Playing Cupid: Creator Shonda Rhimes hints at love for Yang, Torres and Hahn.

▶ A "lovely story" for Izzie Stevens (Katherine Heigl). Details are hush-hush, but part of it involves things heating up between Izzie and Alex Karev (Justin Chambers). She won't get a brain tumor as has been rumored.

▶ "Devirginized" doctors. Callie Torres (Sara Ramirez) and Erica Hahn (Brooke Smith) will each explore first-time feelings for another woman. Rhimes consulted GLAAD (Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation) to try to make the story authentic. There are humorous possibilities as Callie sorts out a new direction: "What would she be thinking? What would she be doing?" Rhimes says.

▶ Lexie Grey's (Chyler Leigh) attraction to roommate George O'Malley (T.R. Knight). "It doesn't go where you'd expect," Rhimes says.

And Mary McDonnell (Battlestar Galactica) is in final talks for a multi-episode arc.

Viewership fell 20% last season (15.6 million) but rebounded with a big finale (18.1 million). The writers' strike hurt ratings, although Grey's felt a sharper decline than many other hits.

The strike also shortened the season, which delayed the Seattle Grace residents from finishing their second year. They will face pressure trying to reverse a drop in national hospital ratings.

Still, the mood of the characters is "pretty happy," Rhimes says. "Everybody is starting fresh. There are some good leaping-off points from the end of last season."

Stone says film strives for understanding

LOS ANGELES — A man stands in the middle of a sunny baseball field, beaming a smile as the roar of an approving crowd is heard.

An echoing announcer's voice calls out his name: "Ladies and gentlemen, the 43rd president of the United States ..." But as the camera pans back, the cheering fades, and the stadium is revealed to be empty.

With outstretched arms and raised head, the character's body forms an unmistakable symbol: W.

It's the opening scene of Oliver Stone's movie of the same name, which he is still racing to finish in time for its debut Oct. 17. Stone chronicles the youth of George W. Bush, his rise to the White House and the crises he has faced over the past eight years. And it's a comedy.

Good punctuation brings periods of happiness

The Final Word
By Craig Wilson

Today is National Punctuation Day, a day set aside to reflect on the fact a semicolon is not a medical problem. At least that's what NPD founder Jeff Rubin, a former newspaperman, wants to impart.

I hesitate to write about punctuation since it has never been my strong suit. Commas especially. Or is it commas, especially?

I have long held the belief that I must have been sick the day commas were taught. Where to put them. When to use them. When not to use them. Do you put one before the conjunction in a simple series of three or more items? (The answer is yes. I just looked it up on Rubin's website, nationalpunctuationday.com)

Because of my comma condition, I have driven more than a few editors crazy, which is not necessarily a bad thing.

"Weren't you ever taught about commas?" one editor barked at me early in my newspaper career.

"No," I answered. "I was sick that day."

"Obviously," he said.

And so he would insert commas where commas belonged, and we went to press. After that, I would put commas most everywhere. Like, after, every, word. Just for good measure.

Then another editor would bark at me.

"Was there a sale on commas somewhere?" she would ask.

By Alejandro Gonzalez, USA TODAY

"I guess there was," I would reply.

And then she would go back, remove most of them, and we went to press. I would then go back to never putting a comma in any sentence no matter how long laborious lovely or lively.

Correct punctuation, like good conversation, has become a lost art. That's why Rubin began NPD a few years ago.

E-mail has not helped any, mainly because it's often communication through sentence fragments. Dashes and ellipses galore. Maybe that's why I use lots of exclamation points in my e-mail. It's not that my sentence fragments are exciting. I'm just trying to make them so. Like this!

My journalism professor, who loathed exclamation points, is rolling in his grave, and if he's not there yet, I'm sure an e-mail from me could send him there.

His rule: Never use an exclamation point unless the sentence is about the end of the world, and the end of the world is tomorrow. Example: The end is near!

F. Scott Fitzgerald understood the exclamation point. He said, "An exclamation mark is like laughing at your own jokes."

I'll try to remember that. I'll also try to remember the rule about semicolons. I've used them on occasion, but once an editor removed one from a story. He called it pretentious. He said a period worked just as well.

He was right, of course. We hate nothing more (please insert exclamation point).

Liberal Stone says he 'tried to stay true to this man' director of JFK, Nixon and World Trade Center, this film's satiric tone is something new for him. Not that he thinks the actual history is funny.

"It was so painful for me. The reaction is to laugh a little because the pain would be too much," he says, sitting in his office after showing the first act of the movie in his editing bay.

The baseball stadium intro?

"We all have retreat fantasies," Stone says with a laugh. "He did have the express desire to be baseball commissioner, and I think some people, historically, would say if he had become baseball commissioner, it would have saved us a lot of problems."

By Sidney Ray Baldwin, Lionsgate

Pet project: President George W. Bush (Josh Brolin) plays with his dogs on the White House lawn as Karl Rove (Toby Jones) checks messages. Also in the cast: Jeffrey Wright as Colin Powell, Thandie Newton as Condoleezza Rice, James Cromwell as George H.W. Bush.

Cast of big names

W. features an all-star cast playing the White House's highest-profile figures: Josh Brolin as the president, Elizabeth Banks as Laura Bush, Richard Dreyfuss as Vice President Cheney, Jeffrey Wright as Secretary of State Colin Powell, Thandie Newton as Condoleezza Rice and James Cromwell as George H.W. Bush.

Stone, an outspoken liberal, Vietnam War veteran and longtime cinematic provocateur, is not an admirer of the president. And he's prepared to be dismissed by Bush die-hards.

But he insists he and screenwriter Stanley Weiser (who also wrote 1987's Wall Street with him) "tried to stay human and true to this man. It's supposed to be a fair and true portrait. People get me confused with my outspoken citizen side, but I am a dramatist first and foremost."

He already has been criticized by the administration. White House assistant press secretary Emily Lawrimore told the Los Angeles Times last month that the president would ignore the movie. "Oliver Stone is an accurate historian like Gilligan was an accurate navigator," she said.

But Stone also says those with an extreme dislike of the president will be disappointed if all they want from W. is an attack.

"I'm not interested in that radical 15% that hate Bush or the 15 to 20% who love Bush. That's not our audience. Those people probably won't come," he says. "I'm interested in that 60% in the American middle who at least have a little more open mind."

The movie portrays Bush as charming, spiritually devout and well-intentioned but also reckless, a kind of daddy's boy, always relying on his father, wealthy friends or Bush family connections to launch his career forward or extract him from trouble. He's also depicted as overly trusting.

'Cheney is a brilliant player'

In one scene, Cheney presents him with an executive order authorizing "enhanced interrogation techniques" of detainees. The president approves the idea but warns, "Just remember, though, we don't use torture in this country." He then doesn't want to read a long report with the details, tosses the document on the table and says, "Only three pages. Good!"

Dreyfuss' Cheney manipulates the president through praise and whispered asides, and his presence is always looming. At one point, Bush lashes out for upstaging him during a national security meeting, though Cheney hardly said a word.

"I think Cheney gamed him and gamed the whole system. Cheney is a brilliant player," Stone says. He adds that the recent book Angler: The Cheney Vice Presidency by Pulitzer Prize winner Barton Gellman backs up the depiction.

Along with the public record, a host of books provided background. Stone rattles off a list: Bob Woodward's State of Denial, James Risen's State of War, Ron Suskind's The One Percent Doctrine, Stephen Mansfield's Faith of George W. Bush, Bill Minutaglio's First Son, about his early years.

Stone also read Kitty Kelley's The Family, a gossip-heavy account of the Bush family, for insight into the father-son dynamic but did not include the book's allegation that the president, who has acknowledged that he had a drinking problem, once used cocaine.

"We didn't have to take cheap shots, and we didn't want to be malicious. We're very careful. We didn't want to go over the line," Stone says, though he acknowledges sometimes tiptoeing perilously close.

In a scene set in the early 1970s, before Bush was married, he is confronted by his father, who asks about a rumor that a girlfriend may be pregnant.

Stone notes the character emphatically denies it ("That's a dang lie, Poppy!"). Despite the character's refutation, it's clearly a "Do you still beat your wife?" kind of jab.

"Some of this stuff is not specific," Stone acknowledges. He says he plans to create a website with footnotes explaining either the source or the rationale for such controversial moments.

Reputation as a radical

Even so, many are bound to disregard W. simply because of the filmmaker's reputation.

"Stone is seen as such a left-wing radical by everyone on the right that the danger is people dismiss this film immediately as just Oliver Stone trying to ruffle our feathers," says Syracuse University film professor Kendall Phillips, author of Controversial Cinema: The Movies That Outraged America. "But he's good at getting under everybody's skin. He has consistently been able to push the right button to set people off on both the right and left."

New York Post film critic Kyle Smith, who often writes about political themes in movies, says Stone has little credibility with those right of center. "I think Oliver Stone, if he directed your kid's kindergarten school play, he would turn it into a demented fever dream about the failure of American ideals," Smith says. "I expect the movie to be totally demented, and around the bend, and I look forward to it. It will be entertainingly ridiculous."

Stone's reputation is a mixed blessing from a box-office perspective, says BoxOfficeMojo.com analyst Brandon Gray. For every hit (JFK, Platoon, Born on the Fourth of July), Stone has had some financial misses (Alexander, Nixon, U-Turn).

"Oliver Stone is one of the few star directors. And it's his most provocative pictures that tend to be his more popular ones," Gray says. But "this president has been lampooned many, many times. What is this movie offering beyond being just about Bush?"

Though the movie is released in the thick of an election season, Stone says he doesn't expect W. to have any effect. "I went to Vietnam, and then I did three movies about it. Didn't do (anything), right?" Platoon and Born on the Fourth of July won him Oscars for best director, but he says the anti-war message always fades. "They went to Iraq the same way, same length of time, and the media was beating the drum."

He says W. is not a polemic but a character study about a man who is simply interesting.

"Bush is not a lightweight. He has determination. What did I learn? I really learned how powerful the willpower and discipline is that he has," Stone says. "I'm not making political judgments. We're not looking to condemn. He says what he says and does what he does. You're going to like him, and at the same time, you're going to be horrified by some of the stuff he does."

Scenes featuring Bush involved in binge-drinking and fraternity hazing are contrasted with a scene of him cavalierly setting the stage for armed conflict in a 2002 Oval Office meeting where the term "Axis of Evil" is crafted.

Powell warns that such bellicose language may commit the nation to three simultaneous wars. "I'm not saying war, I'm saying 'Lay down the law!' " Bush barks, propping his shoes up on the desk and leaning back in a style that suggests an Old West sheriff.

Stone also depicts warmer qualities in the character: "Faith, family and friendship," Stone says. "You could argue he is a good born-again Christian. He has been good with his family. There's a scene where he goes to the hospital and talks to the soldiers, and we honestly looked at the stuff he said and did."

But neither is Stone forgiving.

The Laura Bush character, upon meeting her future husband at a Texas barbecue, refers to him playfully as a "devil in a white hat."

"I think Bush is going to be accountable to history in a big way," Stone says. "These people who dismissed this movie, who wouldn't give us the money to make it — especially the American studios (the film was independently produced and picked up for distribution by Lionsgate Films) — had this attitude that he's too hot a potato, and at the same time, he's going away in January, so 'who cares?'

"Who cares? I'll tell you what — his policies are going to be still paying off 20 years from now. ... He's not gone, baby."

There are certain parallels between the lives of the filmmaker and his subject. Both had powerful fathers; both started at Yale in 1965 (Stone quit two years later to join the Army); both did military service, Stone taking combat duty in Vietnam while Bush joined the Texas Air National Guard and remained stateside.

"And drugs. And alcohol. And women," Stone says, making his own list of comparisons. Bush was arrested for DUI in 1976, and Stone was, too, in 1999 and 2005.

The two men obviously turned out far differently. Stone bristles when asked whether he found anything about Bush to like.

"Empathy is understanding, it's not liking. ... Why can't you just try to understand somebody? This whole polarizing 'Do you hate him? Do you love him?' doesn't work for me."

So how does he see the president? "Ever notice how impatient Bush is at press conferences with questions, like, 'What right do you have to ask me a question?' " Stone says, noting the comical names the president makes up for reporters, friends and colleagues. "I would say he's a bully. It's classic bully syndrome. The nicknames, for instance, are bullying."

When Stone met Bush

Bush and Stone never met during their time at Yale, but they did encounter each other face-to-face in 1998 at a Republican breakfast in Los Angeles when Bush was governor of Texas.

"I was the token liberal who was invited. It was hilarious. Not hilarious, it was scary," Stone corrects himself. "He was talking about tough love and justice in Texas because he was known as a guy who executed all these people.

"He brought me up (to his hotel room) afterward. I didn't know he'd been to Yale with me, so he told me that. He knew more about me than I knew about him! He was definitely a charismatic guy. I knew he'd be president because there was no question that guy had absolute confidence."

He says Bush introduced himself by laying an arm around his shoulder and shaking his hand tightly, grinning with a twinkle in his eye and asking, "How are ya?"

Did he give Stone a nickname?

The director thinks for a moment, then flashes his gap-toothed smile.

"Not yet," he says.

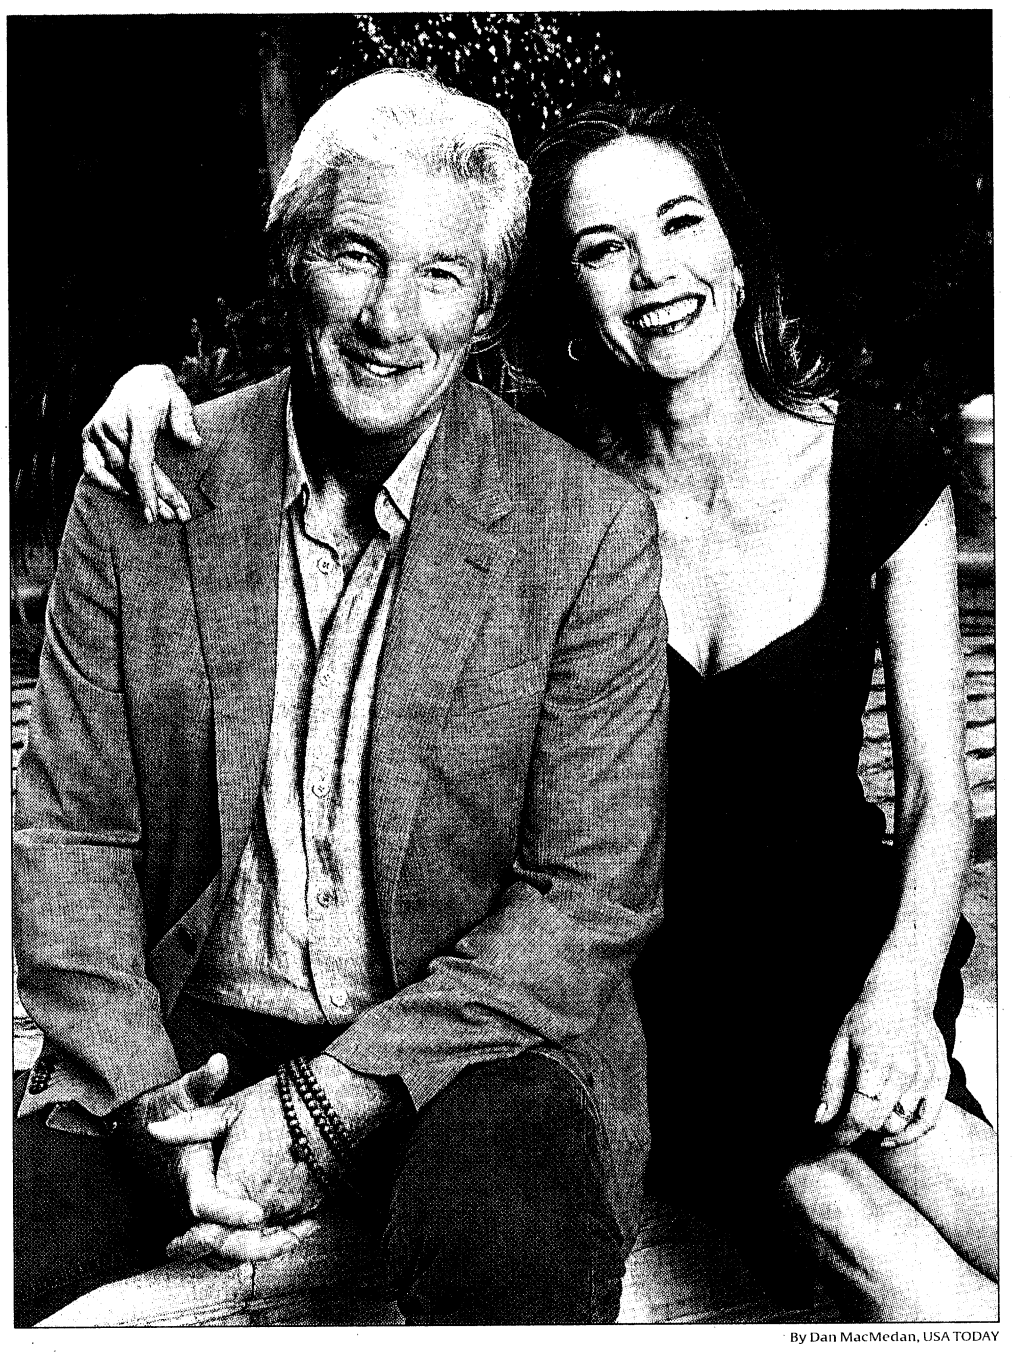
Lane, Gere finally get their happily ever after

Romance of 'Rodanthe' is new territory

By Anthony Breznican
USA TODAY



By Dan MacMedan, USA TODAY

Third time around: Richard Gere and Diane Lane team up on screen again for Nights in Rodanthe, which opens Friday. They also have co-starred in The Cotton Club (1984) and Unfaithful (2002).

LOS ANGELES — Romantic chemistry? Diane Lane and Richard Gere aren't sure how they got that reputation, especially since their past on-screen pairings always skewed toward the dysfunctional.

In 1984's The Cotton Club, she was a sultry jazz singer and he was a troubled cornet player.

They joined again 2002's Unfaithful, earning Lane an Oscar nomination and causing a stir with its steamy scenes — though not with Gere. He played the cuckolded husband.

Now, with the film adaptation of the Nicholas Sparks tearjerker Nights in Rodanthe, opening Friday, Gere and Lane finally get to rush into each other's arms.

Lane plays a mother of two who is separated from her husband but weighing whether to rebuild the relationship. She escapes to oversee a seaside inn on the Outer Banks of North Carolina, where she meets a doctor (Gere) who is trying to reconstruct his life after he realizes his own marriage and relationship with his son (James Franco) have collapsed.

Naturally, being stranded alone together at the gothic beachside home — as a hurricane is about to strike — triggers feelings of love between them.

It was producer Denise Di Novi (Message in a Bottle) who "had the vision," Lane, 43, says, sitting with Gere in The Polo Lounge of the Beverly Hills Hotel. "She said, 'I want you guys paired up together again because of the C-word.' "

Gere, 59, puts a hand on her arm and laughs. "There are a lot of C-words," he says.

Lane is stunned. "I mean 'chemistry!' "

After a weekend of interviews, the statement "Talk about your chemistry ..." was repeated to the point that Lane doesn't even want to say the word out loud.

"If you want to be a scientist about it, fine," she says, "but don't ask the petri dish to explain it to you."

The template for Rodanthe epitomizes another C-word — chick flick — though Gere protests that it's more. The male characters, quarreling fathers and sons, are given substantial stories, he points out.

"What would you call Bridges of Madison County? Is that a women's picture?" he asks. "Because it's definitely in that world, there's no question about that. But its not like, I forget the title, the uh ... Traveling Pants? It's not that. And that to me is a women's picture."

Lane laughs. "You could have The Brotherhood of the Traveling Pants. But it would be a very different movie."

"Make it Biker Jackets instead," Gere says.

Though it may not be the newest genre, straight-up romance is something new for them together. Most famous screen couples end up playing similar roles in similar movies.

Gere and Lane tend to be more experimental.

Cotton Club was a 1930s crime thriller and a train wreck behind the scenes. "I saw it the other night (on cable) and was freaking out," Lane says. "It is a beautiful oil painting of a film."

"Which film is that?" Gere asks.

"The Cotton Club," she says. "It just needed the patina of time to be fully appreciated."

Gere rolls his eyes. "It's astonishing that even the narrative holds together." He laughs and says, "There was never a script."

In Unfaithful, they were more at odds than in love.

Neither is sure why their film relationship has evolved this way. "We never plan these things," Lane says.

"I think next time, we need to do something that's less naturalistic, something outsized," Gere says.

"This is a fairy tale already, so outsize that," she says.

Even the name "Rodanthe," a real town on North Carolina's Hatteras Island, sounds as if it might be next door to Narnia. "Or from Arabian Nights," Lane says.

Even the seaside estate where the characters meet, with its wooden towers and jutting decks, is a kind of hazy fantasy.

"It's this fantasy dreamscape ... It's someplace else. Your imagination. Once upon a time ..." Gere says.

Asked to share some bold romantic experience of his own, Gere (who is married to actress Carey Lowell) defers to his co-star. "I've never had anything like that," he says, presumably joking. "But Diane has had a lot of this. So I'm going to go away and come back when she's done recounting."

Lane (who is married to Josh Brolin), laughs and says, "I can't compete with things that even happened in our film."

Her character builds boxes out of driftwood and stuffs them with mementos, and she offers that she has a similar habit.

"I have different boxes for different people. I'm a very sentimental person, and I have to come to terms with this because it's very hard for me to part with even a concert ticket. It'll be on the fridge for a year, and then I get embarrassed and have to put it in a box."

It's Gere's turn again, but he still demurs. He stands and says he needs to finish packing for his flight home to New York. "Come on," he says. "You could fill two pages with what Diane just said. You've got no more space."

"It's this fantasy dreamscape ... It's someplace else. Your imagination. Once upon a time ..."

— Richard Gere, on the seaside estate in Nights in Rodanthe

By Michael Tackett, Warner Bros. Pictures

Love in Rodanthe: Lane and Gere star as parents whose marriages are failing. They meet when they both escape to the Outer Banks.

The news behind the ratings

'Fringe' gets the benefits

▶ House* home. The fifth-season premiere of Fox' House averaged 14.8 million viewers Tuesday, down from 18.3 million last fall in a later time slot. But House gave a big boost to new drama Fringe (13.3 million), up 46% from last week's opener.

▶ Emmy low. ABC's 60th annual Primetime Emmy Awards drew just 12.3 million viewers Sunday, matching a record low set in 1990, and ranked sixth for the week. Companion special Jimmy Kimmel's Big Night of Stars was anemic with 4.6 million against CBS' 60 Minutes (14.6 million), which had its best numbers since January.

▶ Supernatural* super. CW got a dose of good news with Thursday's fourth-season premiere of Supernatural (4 million, its largest audience since February 2006). Smallville's eighth-season start (4.3 million) was down from last year's 5.2 million. Monday's Gossip Girl hit a series-high 3.7 million.

▶ Football record. ESPN's Monday Night Football matchup, Dallas vs. Philadelphia, drew 18.6 million viewers, a record for any cable program. Sunday's NBC contest, Dallas at Green Bay, averaged 22.2 million.

▶ Closer* closes. TNT's top-rated cable series The Closer wrapped up its fourth season Monday with a sturdy 7.6 million viewers, though down from last September's series-high 9.2 million windup. The same night, Showtime's Weeds also finished its fourth season with 1 million, its most-watched finish yet.

▶ Less Sunny. The season opener of FX comedy It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia racked up 1.7 million viewers Thursday, down from 2.3 million for last fall's start.

▶ Reality roundup. Tuesday brought the season opener of NBC's The Biggest Loser (7.9 million viewers), down from 10.5 million for the last cycle in January; and the final curtain for CBS' Big Brother (7.6 million), up modestly from the past two installments.

Jungle gyms and 'Lipstick Jungle'

Brooke Shields is happily back home in NYC

By Donna Freydkin
USA TODAY

NEW YORK — Like the movie exec she plays on Lipstick Jungle, Brooke Shields knows how to juggle long days at work with two kids and an extra-caffeinated cup of coffee.

She smiles as daughters Rowan, 5, and Grier, 2, stop by a downtown coffee shop with their nanny to kiss their mom goodbye before heading to the park. "I try to maximize all of my time," says Shields, 43. "I worked until late last night and this morning. I was like, 'Girls, this is what we're going to do, and you'll come with me to where I need to be so we can spend an extra hour together.' I made a plan for them."

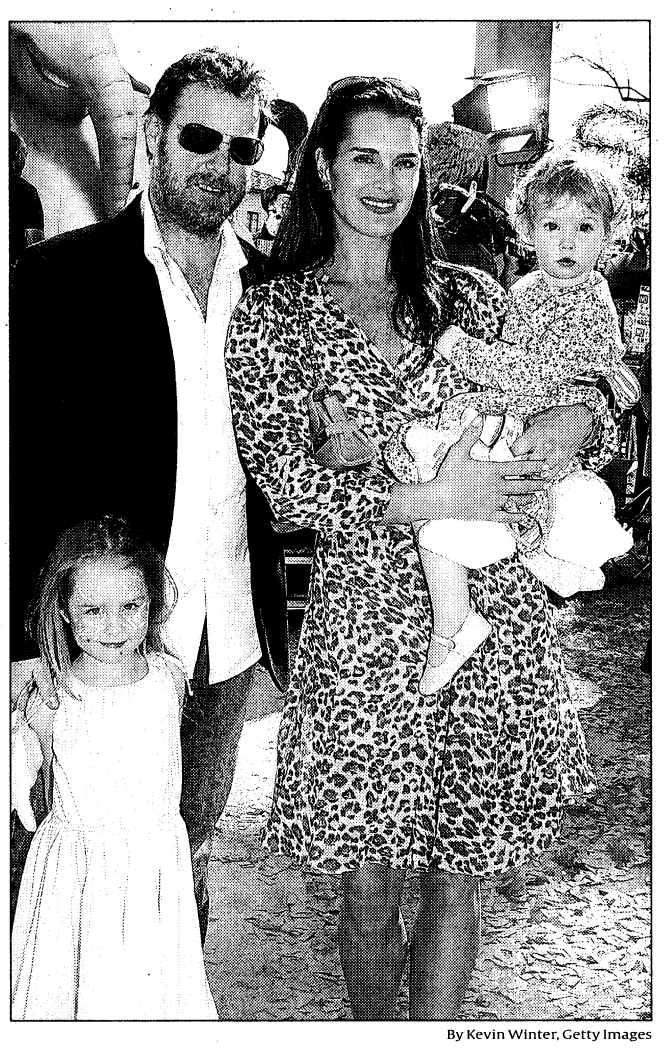
And with Lipstick Jungle returning tonight (10 ET/PT) on NBC, Shields is busier than ever.

Q: Is your schedule as packed as it was last season?

A: Undeniably, it's crazy. But you just have to keep going. There's no point complaining, because I'm so happy to have the job — I love the job, and I love the show. It's quite extraordinary how lucky we are and how tenuous it is. We need ratings that are a certain number. We need to win our time slot. We need everybody to tune in. Otherwise, they won't keep us on the air.

Q: What's on tap for your character, Wendy, this season?

A: Wendy has a lot on her plate. Her stuff is so much heavier this year. Some major things have happened in her marriage and in her job that throw her completely upside down. Last night we had this scene where I break down and say, "I don't know what to hold onto anymore." I don't want to see her marriage too threatened. I believe you can have a healthy marriage. It's not easy, but I also think it exists.



By Kevin Winter, Getty Images

Finding time to be together: Lipstick Jungle's Brooke Shields, her husband, Chris Henchy, and their daughters Rowan, left, and Grier.

Q: Since you and your co-stars (Kim Raver, Lindsay Price) have big careers on the show, what do the women do together? Shop? Have lunch?

A: I don't remember the last time I really lunched with my friends. We need to find organic ways to have them in each other's lives. I want to see us drinking in the day, quite honestly. It's realistic.

Q: You seem so happy to be back in Manhattan.

A: It's home. It's everything I've grown up with. The rhythms are familiar. I got home last night in time to take (the girls) out. I took the two of them out together. It's such a New York moment. Sometimes it's just the nicest time when it's the three of us. They've got very different tastes. And they're not me. Go figure. I expected two of me.

Q: So are you here for good?

A: As long as the show goes. I don't want to take my daughter out of school. It's hard because (husband) Chris (Henchy, Entourage executive producer) commutes. He's on the West Coast.

Q: How was it being a guest judge on Project Runway when the contestants designed a look for your show?

A: We were there for days. Full eight-hour days sitting in those chairs. Every stage of it is at least an hour, for every critique of every person. I was just so exhausted. It's too emotional to critique these people. It's the first time I'd gotten that close to fashion from that angle. The winning outfit was beautiful. Of course they sent me the winning outfit, and it fits my pinkie. I was like, "You're kidding, right?"

Ortiz of 'Ugly Betty' looked inside for role

Her pain served as Hilda's motivation

By Kelley L. Carter
USA TODAY

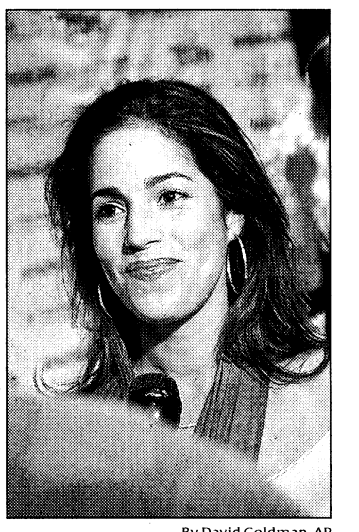
When Ugly Betty's Ana Ortiz needed to take her character, Hilda, to a painful place last season, she knew exactly where to pull from.

Ortiz, 37, allowed herself to go back to when she was in her 20s and involved in a romantic relationship that turned physically abusive.

When Hilda's fiancé was killed in a store robbery, she says, "I used some of that subconsciously. ... It's something that is always with me."

The actress is finally speaking out about her past and encouraging other women to, too, by partnering with Allstate Foundation's "Tell a Gal P.A.L." campaign. It encourages women to talk about domestic violence and teaches about the resources available to victims. The group kicked off a drive this week for purses to be donated to Dress for Success, which helps disadvantaged women acquire professional attire. Women also can enter into a drawing for a bag donated by Ortiz.

The actress is happy to be a symbol of getting past the violence. Her life now couldn't be better. She has been married to musician Noah Lebenzon for a little over a year, and Ugly Betty relocated this summer from L.A. to her native New York for its third season. It premieres Thursday (ABC, 8 p.m. ET/PT).



By David Goldman, AP

Ortiz: Says she was a victim of domestic violence in her 20s.

Shooting in New York has brought out a constant parade of fans. "Especially when we shoot in Queens," Ortiz says. "The families around the neighborhood, they bring lawn chairs and coolers and sit around and watch us shoot all day. It's so wonderful."

The show has been getting lots of attention because of guest star Lindsay Lohan, who Ortiz says is fitting right in. Lohan won't be the only familiar face gracing the set, though. "We've got such random and cool guest stars like Ralph Macchio coming through," Ortiz says.

Oh, and one more thing: Ortiz hopes viewers will see a lot of Hilda from the neck up — or carrying lots of boxes. "We're definitely looking forward to starting a family, and we have a lot of support from the production," she says. "It's on the horizon. But it hasn't happened yet."

SUMMARY NOTICE OF PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT

TO THE CLASS OF: All persons or entities (except any governmental agencies, departments or instrumentalities and any subsidiary, affiliate or related entity of Burlington Resources Oil and Gas Company LP ["Burlington"]) who own or owned a working interest in any onshore drilling or spacing unit, secondary recovery unit, or other enhanced recovery unit or property or in onshore oil and gas wells wherein Burlington was or is the operator. Also excluded from the class are any officers or directors of Burlington and all persons or entities whom Class Counsel are ethically prohibited from representing under the Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct (the "Settlement Class").

This notice is given pursuant to the Order of the District Court of Dewey County, Oklahoma (the "Court"), pursuant to Okla. Stat. tit. 12, § 2023. The purpose of this Notice is to advise you that pending in the District Court of Dewey County, Oklahoma, is the case styled Timberline 83 Limited Partnership v. Burlington Resources Oil & Gas Company LP, Case No. CJ-02-23 (the "Class Action Litigation"). The Class Action Litigation was originally filed on May 14, 2002. Plaintiff, individually and on behalf of the Settlement Class, has made claims against Burlington regarding certain aspects of the billings made by Burlington on onshore oil and gas properties operated by Burlington in which members of the Settlement Class owned non-operating working interests. The claims asserted in the Class Action Litigation, and which are proposed to be settled, are referred to in this notice as the "Released Claims." The term "Released Claims" means and includes all claims that were or could have been asserted in the Class Action Litigation (including, but not limited to, claims for breach of contract, fraud [both actual and constructive], conspiracy, fraudulent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, fraudulent concealment, conversion, tortious breach of contract, unjust enrichment, for an accounting, and any alleged violations of state Acts and statutes) that are related in any way to those charges by Burlington, where Burlington was or is the operator: (1) relating to charges for field office costs, including allocated costs from district offices, on Burlington-operated properties in the United States for the time period January 1997 through December 2006, and/or (2) relating to volume discounts, volume rebates and other like credits received by Burlington and not taken into account to reduce Burlington's billings to the joint account on Burlington-operated properties in the United States for the time period 1997 through 2005.

Burlington continues to deny all of Plaintiff's allegations of liability and damages and asserts var-ious defenses to the Class Claims. If the settlement with Burlington is approved and events giving Burlington the right to terminate the agreement are not triggered, the Class Action Litigation will be dismissed with prejudice to refiling, and the Released Claims will be released.

By giving this notice, the Court is not expressing any opinion regarding the merits of either the Released Claims or Burlington's claims or defenses. Nothing contained in this notice should be construed as suggesting the Court's view as to which side might prevail should this matter proceed to trial.

This is to additionally provide you with notice that (a) The Class Action Litigation has been certified by the Court, for settlement purposes only, as a class action. (b) Plaintiff, on behalf of itself and as representative of the Settlement Class, and Burlington, have entered into a Compromise and Settlement Agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") which shall become effective, if at all, upon a Court Order approving the settlement becoming final and unappealable. (c) The Court, which has direct control of the settlement process, will conduct a hearing to determine whether to approve the Settlement Agreement (the "Settlement Fairness Hearing").

IT IS IMPORTANT THAT YOU READ THIS NOTICE CAREFULLY AND IN ITS ENTIRETY. YOUR RIGHTS WILL BE AFFECTED BY THE LEGAL PROCEEDINGS IN THIS LAWSUIT.

The basic terms of the Settlement Agreement between the Settlement Class and Burlington which the Court is being asked to approve include, among other provisions, the following: (1) Burlington will pay $2,400,000.00 (the "Settlement Proceeds"). (2) The Settlement Class will settle, release the Released Claims and dismiss with prejudice the Class Action Litigation. Released Parties will include Burlington its affiliates, including but not limited to direct and indirect subsidiaries, parents, and all past and present directors, officers, employees, attorneys, agents, servants, stockholders, representative, predecessors, heirs, successors and assigns of Burlington. (3) Class Counsel has requested that the Court award Class Counsel an attorney's fee of $800,000.00 out of the Settlement Proceeds; award the Class Representative a fee of $25,000.00; and award reimbursement to Class Counsel for expert and consulting fees and litiga¬tion expenses actually incurred in an amount not to exceed $100,000.00. If the Court approves these requests for fees and expenses, said amounts will be deducted from the Settlement Proceeds before distribution to the Settlement Class.

The Settlement Fairness Hearing will be held on October 22, 2008, at 2:00 p.m., before the Honorable Ray Dean Linder at the Dewey County Courthouse, Taloga, Oklahoma.

YOUR OPTIONS AS A SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBER?

A. You can participate in the proposed class settlement with Burlington by doing nothing.

B. You may opt out of the Settlement Class: If you do not wish to participate in the settlement, then you may opt out of the Class as long as you do so in writing mailed to the Dewey County Court Clerk at the address shown below and postmarked by the U.S. Postal System on or before the date that is seven (7) days prior to the Class Settlement Fairness Hearing. If you do not opt out by that time in writing, you will remain a member of the Settlement Class and be bound by any rulings or judgments affecting the Settlement Class. If you wish to opt out of the Settlement Class, you must send a letter to the Dewey County Court Clerk, P.O. Box 278, Taloga, Oklahoma 73667, in generally the following form and content: "Dear Judge, I do not want to be a member of the Settlement Class in Timberline 83 Limited Partnership v. Burlington Resources Oil & Gas Company LP, Case No. CJ-02-23, in the District Court of Dewey County, Oklahoma." The letter must be signed by you and notarized by a Notary Public.

C. You may remain a member of the Settlement Class, but Object to the proposed Class Settlement or to Class Counsel's request for attorney's fees, class representative's award, expert and consulting expenses and other litigation expenses. IF YOU WISH TO OBJECT, you will need to comply with certain procedures ordered by the Court. Please promptly contact Class Counsel at the address or telephone number shown below to obtain a list of the procedures that must be followed in order to make a proper objection. Objections in proper form and content must be filed with the Court Clerk of Dewey County at least seven (7) days prior to the Settlement Fairness Hearing. Any Settlement Class Member who fails to timely file and distribute such written statement and provide the required information will not be permitted to present any objections at the Settlement Fairness Hearing.

D. You May Retain your own Attorney to Represent you at the Settlement Fairness Hearing.

This Notice contains only a summary of the Class Action Litigation and the proposed Settlement Agreement. For more detailed information regarding the Class Action Litigation, and for a more-detailed Notice document, you may obtain additional information from Class Counsel at the address and telephone number shown below, or you may refer to the pleadings and orders in the Court file, which may be inspected during regular business hours at the Office of the Court Clerk, Dewey County Courthouse, Taloga, Oklahoma. The date of the Class Settlement Fairness Hearing, and dates for related proceedings, may be changed without further published or mailed notices to the Settlement Class. So, interested persons should monitor the court files for possible changes. You may obtain a copy of the Settlement Agreement, and the specific documents described in this Notice, by emailing a written request to Class Counsel at the following email address: pate_wolfe@sbcglobal.net. Class Counsel, Kandi Jepsen Pate and Mark A. Wolfe, may also be contacted at Pate & Wolfe, 1900 N.W. Expressway, Suite 1300, Oklahoma City, OK 73118, telephone number (405) 858-0012.

If you believe that you are a member of this Settlement Class, but did not receive a copy of this Notice by mail, you should contact Class Counsel concerning your claim. If you wish to communicate with or address questions to Class Counsel, you may contact them at the above listed telephone number and address. You may, of course, seek the advice and guidance of your own attorney if you desire.

PLEASE DO NOT TELEPHONE THE COURT OR THE COURT CLERK'S OFFICE FOR INFORMATION.

By Order of the District Court of Dewey County, State of Oklahoma.

Dated the 15th day of September, 2008.

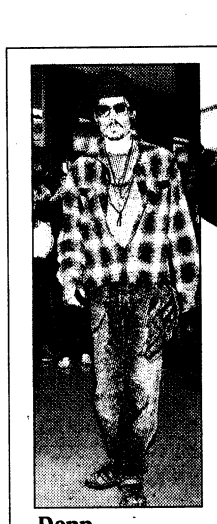
Cool fall for the fellas

Because a T-shirt over a thermal looks just a little tired this season, USA TODAY's Olivia Barker took a cue from Hollwood's sweats-free faction and consulted Sam Spector, senior stylist for Target, about fresh ways guys can gear up for fall — no celebrity salary necessary.



Depp

No rifle required

Plaid is a perennial, of course, but as Will Smith and Johnny Depp have shown, this fall's version looks more early-'90s grunge kid than early-'50s suburban dad. Depp is "a style icon, so if he's wearing it, you know that it's a major trend," Spector says. He takes the trend further north, from the Seattle mosh pit to the Alaskan hunting cabin, with a rugged buffalo plaid. "It's really masculine."

- Mossimo striped thermal in black/red, $12.99

- Merona herringbone wool vest in charcoal, on sale for $19.99
- Merona plaid collared button-down shirt in navy, $19.99
- Merona striped silk tie in navy/brown, available at select Target stores for $19.99
- Merona dress pants in brown glen plaid, $24.99
- Mossimo belt in brown, on sale for $16.99

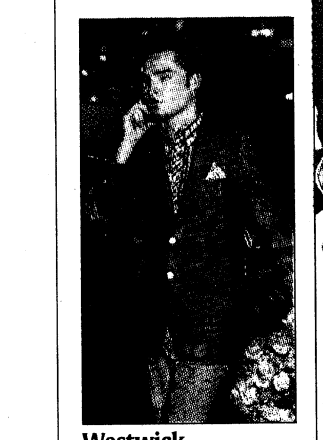
Glover

Sir mix-a-lot

Plaid cotton plus herringbone tweed plus striped silk might add up to fashion fright in the minds of many men. But "if you pair all these together," like pattern-and-texture layerers Danny Glover and Spike Lee do, "it's a more unexpected look," Spector says. Just stay in the same color continuum.



Westwick

The dapper dandy

Gossip Girl has ushered in, or at least helped explode, so many style trends — for girls and guys. Ed Westwick's character, Chuck Bass, for instance, has had a manicured hand in reintroducing color to the male wardrobe. "It's about taking risks," Spector says.

Hormones not for all prostate cancer cases

A new study raises additional questions about the benefits of drugs given to more than half of prostate cancer patients.

Hormone therapy, which blocks production of the testosterone that feeds prostate tumors, improves survival in patients who have aggressive tumors that are still limited to the prostate, research shows. Doctors also sometimes use hormones in men who have early prostate cancer to shrink a tumor, which makes it easier to kill with radioactive "seeds."

There's no evidence that hormones help patients with slow-growing tumors, says lead author Amy Dosoretz, who presented a paper on "low-risk" patients on Tuesday in Boston at a meeting of the American Society for Therapeutic Radiology and Oncology. In the past two years, studies have suggested that hormone therapy increases the risks of heart attacks and diabetes.

In a study of 1,707 prostate cancer patients, Dosoretz found that men over 70 who were given hormones before their seed implants were more likely to die than patients treated only with the implants. After five years, 19.1% of those on hormones died, compared with 16.6% of those who didn't take hormones. Dosoretz, a resident in the Harvard Radiation Oncology Program, notes hormones didn't raise the risk of death in men under 70. Men got hormone therapy for a median of 3½ months.

Grace Lu-Yao, an associate professor at the Robert Wood Johnson Medical School in New Jersey, says some patients — men with early tumors, the elderly and those with other health problems — may be more hurt than helped by hormones.

The LHC at the CERN: World's largest atom smasher is out of commission for now.

Particle collider stalled until spring

Scientists at the European Organization for Nuclear Research (CERN) will have to wait until spring to use the world's biggest atom smasher for groundbreaking research because repairs will run into the laboratory's normal winter shutdown, officials in Geneva said Tuesday. An electrical failure on Friday, nine days after the Large Hadron Collider was first started, released a large amount of liquid helium into the tunnel that houses the machine, forcing CERN to shut it down. Spokesman James Gillies said the repairs would go past the facility's winter break, which runs from mid-November to the end of March or early April, to avoid the heavy use of electricity during the winter months when Europe has high demand for power.

McGraw winners opening college doors

Blais

Berry Griffin

Reed

Three educators who have worked to increase college access and success for U.S. students are the recipients of the 2008 McGraw Prize in Education. The winners are: Richard Blais, vice president and co-founder of Project Lead the Way, which works to advance the number of students prepared to study engineering; Judith Berry Griffin, president and founder of Pathways to College, which identifies talented students of color in low-performing schools and helps prepare them to achieve in selective colleges; and Charles Reed, chancellor of the 450,000-student California State University system. Reed launched a successful initiative throughout the state college system to recruit and retain more minority students. The awards, which come with a $25,000 prize for each recipient, are named for Harold McGraw Jr., chairman emeritus of McGraw-Hill Companies.

Hospitals urged to tighten protocol

A regulatory group is telling hospitals today to adopt strict measures to prevent errors involving blood thinners including heparin — mistakes that have been made nearly 60,000 times and led to dozens of deaths in recent years. The Joint Commission issued a safety alert saying hospitals need to adopt prevention measures that could include barcoding technology for medicines or computerized drug orders. It advised hospitals to more closely monitor patients on these drugs and make sure that adult-strength heparin is stored nowhere near children's units. The alert said 28 deaths are among 32 reports of drug errors involving blood thinners that it received between 1997 and last year. The Oakbrook Terrace, Ill.-based commission is a private group that sets hospital standards and accredits most of the nation's hospitals.

Pet-friendly campus: Kristina Durkoske, 20, lives with her dog, Vinny, in her dorm room at Washington & Jefferson College in southwestern Pennsylvania.

My roommate has 4 legs!

It's not a college horror story, just a dorm with pets

By Sharon L. Peters
Special for USA TODAY

Puppy love: Kristina Durkoske with her bichon frise, Vinny, and her boyfriend's boxer, Diablo, at Washington & Jefferson, one of about a dozen schools with student residences for pet owners and pet lovers.

Kristina Durkoske figures Vinny is about as perfect a roommate as anyone could hope for. He's cheerful and adaptable, likes her friends and is respectful of the other dormitory residents. And when Durkoske is stressed, he does what he can to help.

"He really is my baby," says Durkoske, 20. Six-year-old Vinny is her family's bichon frise. Vinny has traveled with her to Mexico, Canada and Italy and now shares her dorm room at Washington & Jefferson College near Pittsburgh, where Durkoske is an international business, Spanish and pre-law major. "When I graduate, he'll go with me to wherever I get a job. That's just the way it is."

Two years ago, Washington & Jefferson joined what appears to be a growing college-life trend: pet-friendly dorm rooms offered to interested students. There are at least a dozen such colleges, and administrators and students alike declare the concept a hit.

"The pet owners really like it, of course, and those who don't have pets like the interaction," says Mike Robilotto of Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Fla., which has allowed pets in a few dorm rooms for decades and now has more than 40 pets in three residences. The pet housing is full now, he says, "and the students are trying to push for more."

Factors contributing to a college's decision to establish pet-friendly dorms: Many animal lovers have opted to live off-campus, which bites into colleges' housing income; and prohibitions haven't always prevented pets from being smuggled in. But mostly, the policies seem to have emerged in response to a pet-loving society and from recognition that animals can reduce stress and make acclimating to college easier.

"We have students who have said, 'I came here because of your pet program,' " says Stephens College's Deb Duren. Stephens, in Columbia, Mo., joined the pet-friendly fray four years ago and now has more than 60 rooms in two residence halls that are home to cats, dogs, hamsters, rabbits and guinea pigs.

Still, the notion of making it easier for college kids to have pets isn't universally applauded. The chaos of campus life, the tendency among young people to make impulsive choices, and the vagaries of postgraduation life make many students poor candidates for pet ownership, some experts say. Shelters in many college towns report end-of-semester pet dumping or abandonment.

The Humane Society of the United States warns that pets require a commitment of time and money that lasts 15 years or more, and many students don't think that far ahead. Just food and routine vet care can cost hundreds of dollars a year, and if a pet is hurt or sick, the tab can be thousands.

But the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is "cautiously supportive" of pet-friendly campus policies, says the ASPCA's Stephen Zawistowski. "We know kids will have pets anyhow ... and it's probable that if the college has a good program that's well-structured," with regular monitoring, it works to the animals' advantage.

Many colleges, in fact, don't allow recently acquired animals into pet-friendly dorms — an effort to dissuade a spontaneous pet adoption by a student who merely wants company for a semester. And most have rules about shots and the animal's behavior and care.

In four years, during which Duren reckons about 150 animals have lived on the Stephens campus, she has temporarily taken pets away from two students who weren't giving them proper care and attention (both cleaned up their acts and reclaimed their dogs), and she once returned a dog to the student's parents because it was still a puppy and had not been neutered. In the more minor category, she says, there have been dogs that snarled at each other and one that barked incessantly, but a trainer came in and solved that.

And at Eckerd College, the pet policy was modified to limit the size snake a student could keep after a 12-foot boa constrictor freaked out some students.

Some who opt to live in pet-friendly rooms don't own a pet, they just want to be near animals. Others apply for pet buildings so they can give foster care to animals from local animal shelters. "I'd say we've had about a dozen cats or dogs from (a local rescue group) that students have cared for until they got permanent homes," Duren says.

Whether the pets-in-dorms movement will grow much remains to be seen. Some believe student demand will prompt more schools to adopt such policies; some say a pet program requires more time, attention, policymaking and monitoring than many administrators are willing to tackle.

"A lot of schools think it's harder than it is," says Robilotto, who has helped several set up their programs.

But it does take work. Says Duren, "I could totally respect that for another institution, this sort of thing might not be a good fit."

A nugget of one pet policy

Excerpts from the pet policy at Eckerd College:

- Cats, dogs, rabbits, ducks and ferrets are considered pets and must be properly registered with the Pet Council. Any cat or dog living on campus must be at least 1 year old and have lived with the student's family for at least 10 months prior to living on campus. The acquisition of a dog or cat while a student at Eckerd is prohibited.
- Fish, small birds, hamsters, gerbils, guinea pigs, amphibians and reptiles are considered domestic animals and must be properly registered with the Pet Council before residing on campus.
- Dogs may not exceed 40 pounds when fully grown. Pit bulls, Rottweiler and wolf breeds, or any mix containing these, are not allowed.
- No pet is allowed to be left in a residence hall room/suite unattended during any break.
- One pet or two small domestic animals per owner is permitted on campus in any academic year.

Lung drugs might be taking toll on the heart

Medicines popular in treating COPD

By Rita Rubin
USA TODAY

Widely prescribed drugs recommended as first-line therapy for chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, or COPD — the USA's fourth-leading killer — raise the risk of heart attacks, strokes and death from heart disease, a study suggests.

COPD refers to two incurable lung ailments, chronic bronchitis and emphysema. Most COPD patients have both. The most common cause is cigarette smoking.

Researchers pooled the results of 17 clinical trials of 14,783 patients that compared the drugs tiotropium or ipratropium with other COPD treatments. The studies followed patients for six weeks to five years.

Tiotropium is sold under the brand name Spiriva. Ipratropium is an older medication that is sold as Atrovent or in combination with another drug as Combivent.

Boehringer Ingelheim, a German company that markets Spiriva with Pfizer, says worldwide sales rose 35% in 2007. Boehringer also makes Combivent, and Pfizer makes Atrovent.

Overall, 1.8% of patients given tiotropium or ipratropium died of cardiovascular disease or had a non-fatal heart attack or stroke, compared with 1.2% of patients on other drugs, a statistically significant difference.

Looking at stroke risk alone, the researchers did not find a statistically significant elevated risk with tiotropium or ipratropium. But the 53% increased risk of heart attack and the 80% increased risk of cardiovascular death were statistically significant, the authors write in this week's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

For every 40 people who got one of the drugs in a year, there was one extra death, says co-author Curt Furberg, a Wake Forest University epidemiologist. "It's a big drug, so it's affecting a large number of people."

In response to Furberg's study, Boehringer and Pfizer released a new analysis that had not gone through a journal's peer review process. It found no increased risk of cardiovascular problems linked to Spiriva.

Last week, a study in the Annals of Internal Medicine found a 34% increased risk of dying from a heart attack or irregular heartbeat in COPD patients using ipratropium, which is in the same class as Spiriva, compared with those using albuterol, another COPD drug, or using nothing. The study focused on veterans diagnosed before Spiriva was approved in 2004.

Lead author Todd Lee, a researcher at Northwestern University's medical school, says his and Furberg's studies "raise some important questions about these medications."

In March, the Food and Drug Administration notified health care professionals that a pooled analysis comparing Spiriva with a placebo revealed a possible increased risk of stroke in patients on the drug. The analysis by Boehringer found that 8 per 1,000 Spiriva patients a year had a stroke, vs. 6 per 1,000 on a placebo.

At the time, the FDA said it had not confirmed the finding.

Louis-Dreyfus: A wife for Christine?

► In its never-ending attempt to make life as difficult as possible for The New Adventures of Old Christine (tonight, 8 ET/PT), CBS has now moved the show to a new night and an incredibly competitive time period where Christine and the premiering Gary Unmarried are somehow expected to build a sitcom foothold. The only good news for fans is that Christine has responded with a sharp, fast, funny premiere as Christine (Julia Louis-Dreyfus) decides to marry Barb to stop her best friend's deportation. The episode provides room for each member of the terrific cast to shine (with perhaps a special nod to Clark Gregg's adorably clueless Richard). Best of all, though, it tones down Christine's sometimes overexaggerated selfishness. She's hardly altruistic tonight, but at least now she's working out of a more enlightened, and more amusing, self-interest.

► There's good news over at NBC as well with the entertaining relaunch of Lipstick Jungle (10 ET/PT). It's still not a great TV show, but after a rough start, it's grown into a fairly entertaining one, an adult soap that has moved the emphasis from melodrama to comedy and camaraderie. And as a bonus tonight, you get a guest shot from Mary Tyler Moore as Wendy's (Brooke Shields) visiting mom. (Shields Q&A, 5D)

'Knight Rider': Not up to speed

New show Knight Rider
NBC, tonight, 8 ET/PT
★ out of four

If we must pitch dreck at children, can't we at least make it age-appropriate dreck?

There is much to despise in Knight Rider, a shockingly incompetent, barely coherent, ad-driven rip-off about a shape-shifting autobot that owes more to Transformers than it does to the cheesy '80s original that shares its name.

TV preview
By Robert Bianco

But if we must settle on just one low point, choose an out-of-the-blue scene midway through, in which the sexy villain suddenly cuts off a man's thumb. Let's hope when NBC and its partners at Ford get around to selling little toy KITTs, they come complete with a tiny finger in the glove compartment.

I know, your kids probably have seen worse. That, however, is more an indictment of the increasing coarseness of our culture than a defense of Rider.

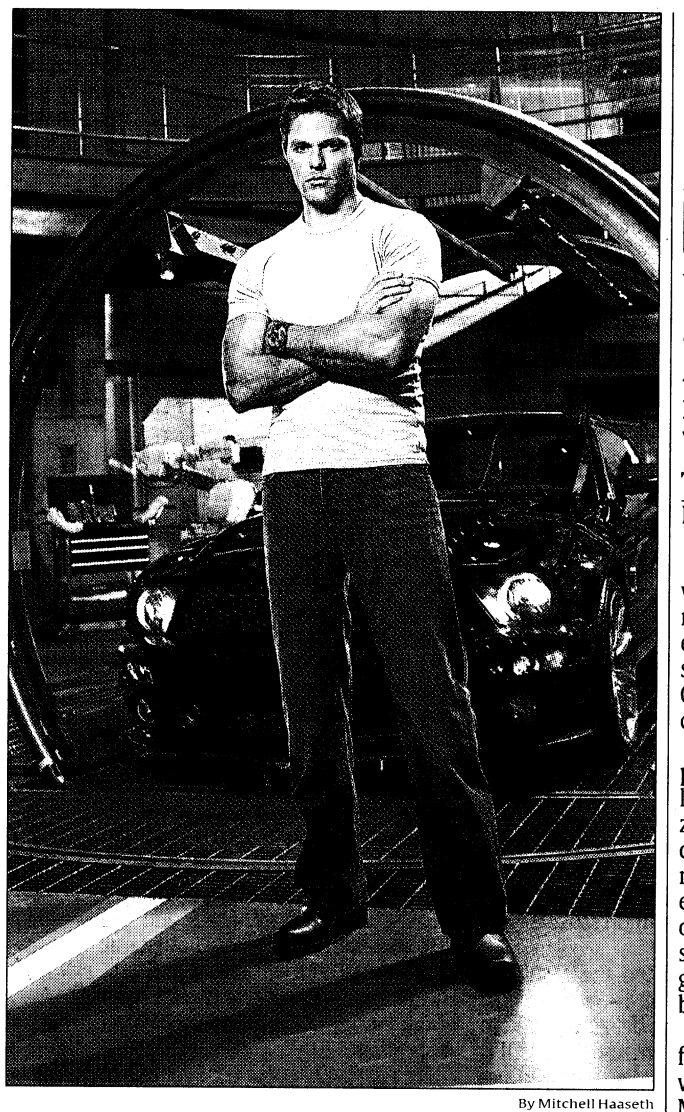
Chances are those kids will never make it as far as the digit-dumping. They'll be chased away by a near-incomprehensible opening that turns car-boy Mike (Justin Bruening) into James Bond, with Val Kilmer's monotone talking car as Q. From there, it's off to super-secret headquarters, where Mike and Sarah (Deanna Russo) have a team waiting to save them from a firebomb crisis. Unfortunately, it requires the actors to pretend to be hot, a masquerade that apparently exceeds their range.

But then seldom has a major network launched a show boasting as many terrible performances or jaw-dropper moments as this premiere.

There's Sydney Tamiia Poitier as an FBI agent who refuses to issue a security override — until Bruce Davison's scientist says "please." Or there's Smith Cho as a tech genius who can speak nine languages and manages to be annoying in all of them. And while no one expects reality to intrude much on this Rider, even a 10-year-old may wonder why Mike just stands there dumbstruck when the villain approaches.

Maybe that's answer for the next Rider revamp. Instead of just aiming the show at children, maybe NBC should let them write and perform it.

They could hardly do worse.



By Mitchell Haaseth

Transmission trouble: Justin Bruening is Mike Tracer, and Val Kilmer supplies the voice of KITT in the remake of the 1980s show.

'Gary Unmarried' can make it work

New show Gary Unmarried
CBS, tonight, 8:30 ET/PT
★★½

Blue-collar guys are in short sitcom supply these days.

So are sitcoms, which is part of the problem, and those we do have tend to shy away from folks who actually labor for a living.

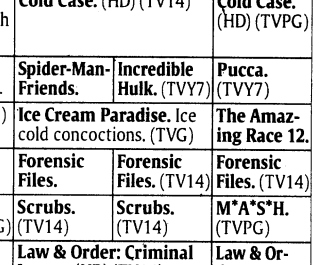
TV preview
By Robert Bianco

Gary Unmarried hopes to fill that gap.

It would be nicer if it did so with a little more flair or originality. But the show is funny enough, and the performers and setup are solid enough to hope CBS will give this working-class comedy a little time to work.

Gary's best asset is the guy playing Gary: Jay Mohr, whose last sitcom star turn was as a sleazy movie producer in the critics' darling Action. Time and age have rounded out Mohr's sitcom edges and increased his chances of popular appeal, making him a surprisingly good fit for a guy's-guy contractor buffeted, but not bowed, by his ex-wife and kids.

His problems tonight all stem from the opposite sex. His ex-wife (an amusing, well-cast Paula Marshall, who is better at being bitter than warm) is about to marry their therapist (Ed Begley Jr.). His son (Ryan Malgarini) is making the move from "virtual" girls to real ones. And Gary himself is putting the moves on the woman who hired him to paint her condo, fetchingly played by Jaime King.



By Monty Brinton, CBS

Blue-collar guy: Jay Mohr, with Jaime King, is Gary.

The situations are standard-issue, but the twists Gary puts on them should stand the show in good stead. Gary and his ex may bicker, but they don't hate each other, and they both try to do what's best for the kids. And sometimes, Gary actually gets to be the one who knows best, a relief from those shows in which the dad is always an idiot.

For tonight, at least, it works for me.

DFMWR offers refund for canceled concert

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

The cost of tickets purchased for Saturday's rained out Army Concert will be refunded.

Safety was the reason for the decision to cancel the show, said Shannon Poole, marketing director for the Directorate of Family, Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

"There was significant lightning," she said. "There was no place to take cover on the field. We felt it was the safest thing to do."

People who bought tickets online from Ticketmaster will receive an automatic refund to the debit or credit card they used. Those who bought them in person at a Ticketmaster outlet must return to the outlet to be reimbursed.

Tickets were also on sale at different locations on Fort Benning. Refunds are available for individuals who purchased tickets on post at the Directorate of Family, Morale, Welfare and Recreation headquarters, Building 2783 on Eckel Avenue.

The office is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Basic training Soldiers who bought tickets on Sand Hill started receiving refunds Wednesday.

"This is the first time we have ever had to cancel the concert due to weather, since it started five years ago," Poole said.

They couldn't reschedule the concert since the headliners, Grand Funk Railroad and Bowling for Soup, are booked, Poole said, but they will keep them in mind for future concerts on post.

For more information, call Poole at 706-545-3328.

House of Heroes: 'Biggest blessing I have ever had'

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

A team of about 30 NCOs with the 11th Engineer Battalion arrived at Lillian Hill's Columbus home Sept. 4 with lawn mowers, tools, doors, new railings and paint. They were on a mission to help the widow of a veteran through House of Heroes, a nonprofit organization that repairs houses of retired military and public service veterans and their spouses.

In her early 20s, Buena Vista native Lillian met the late Louis Hill at Fort Benning. In her 25 years of marriage to him, she traveled to Germany, France, Chicago and Maryland. After Louis retired as a sergeant first class, the couple settled in Columbus.

It's been five years since Louis died.

"I miss him keeping things straight around the house," Lillian said. "He was a handyman."

Whether it was house repairs, yard work or car work, Louis did it.

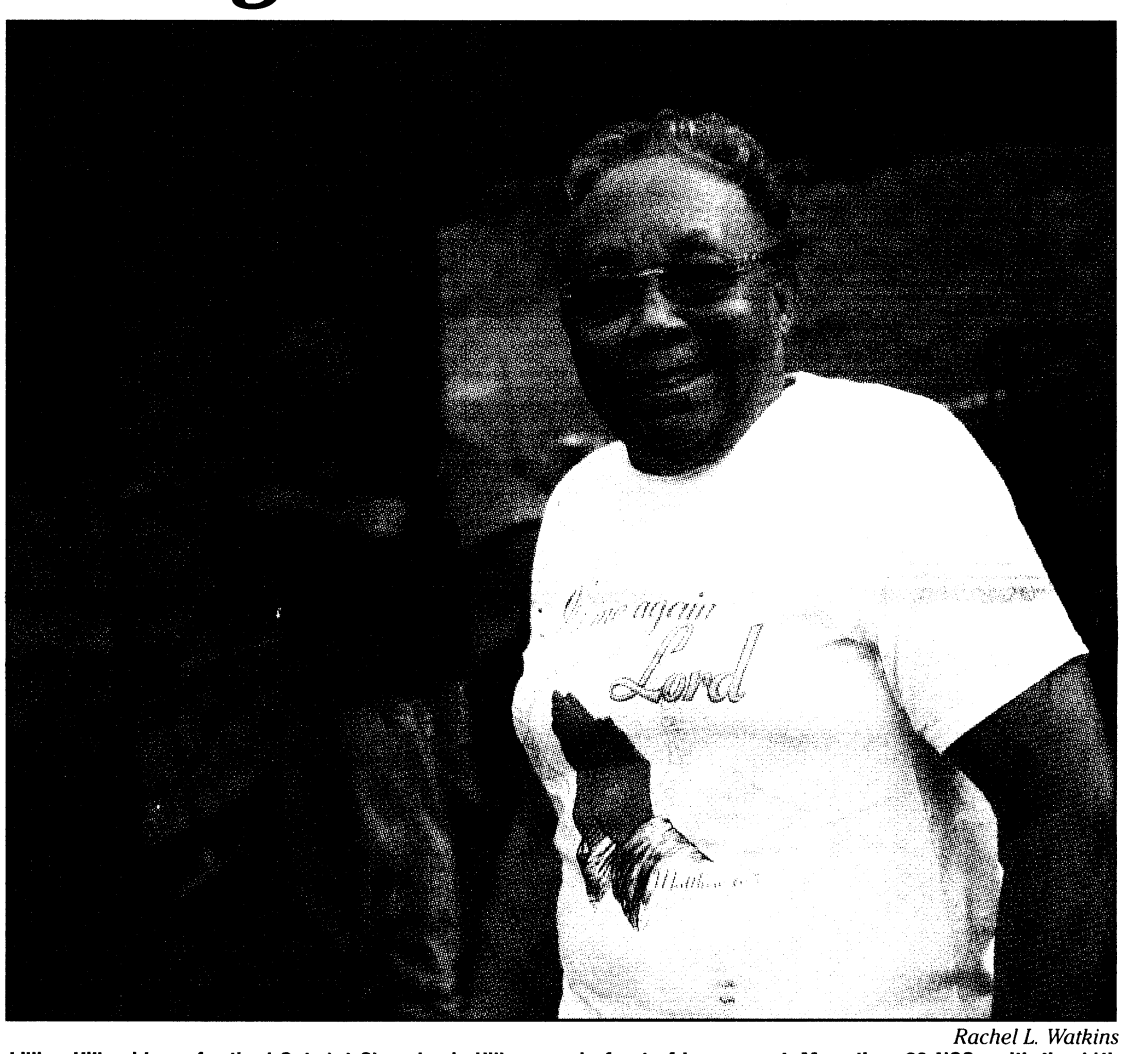
But now, the grass has grown tall, the leaves have collected in the gutter and miscellaneous items — chairs, plywood and an old lawn mower — are scattered on the carport, and the trim on the house was faded.

The 11th Engineer Battalion cleared out the carport, mowed the lawn, painted the house trim, installed a new door and porch railing and cleaned out the gutters.

"House of Heroes is the biggest blessing I have ever had," Lillian said. "I am so thankful because there are some repairs I can't do on my own."

Veterans and their families deserve the help, said Sgt. 1st Class Jose Batista of the 11th Engineer Battalion.

"Veterans are the foundation of America," Batista said. "They sacrificed so much so we could have our freedom and they deserve thanks for all of their hard work."



Rachel L. Watkins

Lillian Hill, widow of retired Sgt. 1st Class Louis Hill, poses in front of her carport. More than 30 NCOs with the 11th Engineer Battalion came to her house to pressure wash, clean out the gutters, clean the carport, and install new railings and doors. The work was done through House of Heroes, a nonprofit organization that repairs houses of retired military and public service veterans and their spouses.

No matter what generation, the Army is one big family, it's important to stick together, Batista said.

House of Heroes has repaired 275 houses since November 1999. Throughout September, volunteers will repair as many as 45 houses. For more information, to volunteer or to apply for help, go to http://www.houseofheroes.org.

Benning TV to host special

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

Fort Benning TV will host a special edition of The Benning Report, starting Saturday off post and Monday on post. It will include an introduction to the 2008 Infantry Warfighting Conference.

Conference attendees will get a snapshot of what Fort Benning is all about and learn about the Infantry Warfighting Conference, said Nathan Snook, producer and director of Fort Benning TV.

In the special edition, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, will talk about the past, present and future of the Infantry. There will be a chronology about improvised explosive devices and how Soldiers are trained to deal with them. And Soldiers will talk about their thoughts on the mine resistant ambush protected vehicle.

The show will air at 6:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. every day next week on the Columbus Consolidated Government channel (Charter channel 3, Knology channel 17 and MediaCom channel 21). It will also air at 5, 6, 7, 8:30 and 10:30 a.m., at noon, and at 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30 and 10:30 p.m. for the next two weeks on Channel 4 on Fort Benning.

Fort Benning introduces alternate work schedule

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Fort Benning initiated an alternate work schedule for Department of the Army Civilians July 22. The schedule is made up of eight nine-hour work days and one eight-hour work day, totaling 80 hours every two weeks.

"You essentially get a three-day weekend out of the deal, which is good for morale," said Col. Thomas Macdonald, the post garrison commander. "When morale is higher, you tend to get a better product out of people."

It also takes away one day of commuting every two weeks. Fewer cars on the road means a savings in gas for employees, reduced traffic congestion and fewer accidents, Macdonald said.

"We've started a lot more construction with the Maneuver Center of Excellence," he said. "(AWS) reduces the amount of traffic at a given point in time during the week. By spreading out everybody's schedules, you put less vehicles on the road and (have) more people staying in their offices longer. That also allows you to have a longer period of time that your office can be operational, because you have an extended work day for some people."

Carole Ann Jones, director of Resource Management used to keep her office open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Now, it's open an hour earlier and an hour later, which is good for customers, Jones said.

Switching to AWS is an employee choice. They can return to a regular work day schedule if the alternate schedule doesn't suit them,

See Schedules, A9

AWS helps traffic congestion, environment

More people working alternate work schedules means reduced traffic congestion and cleaner air for Fort Benning.

Several thousand Soldiers, family members, DoD Civilians and contractors drive onto post every day. About 3,000 of these are Department of the Army Civilians eligible to participate in AWS, said Capt. Kevin Sparks, traffic supervisor on post.

That number will increase during the transition to the Maneuver Center of Excellence, he said.

Civilians who use the alternate schedule will drive on post one day less every two weeks.

"It would help us tremendously with our traffic problem," said David Benefield, civil engineer on post with the Directorate of Public Works.

They are making several changes in preparation for the incoming Armor School, including more access control points and reinforced bridges for the tanks. AWS is just one of the changes that will smooth the transition, Benefield said.

"If we can cut down on the number of trips to Fort Benning, that logically cuts down on the time for everybody involved at the ACPs," he said. "It cuts down on the amount of gas everyone uses, the amount of time spent in their cars, the frustration (from traffic). It builds on itself."

"We have a lot of people coming, and we have a lot of construction people already here — and more and more coming every day. We're doing everything we can, we just need everybody to participate," Benefield said.

Fewer cars on the road will also help reduce the number of accidents, he said.

MCOE's transformation process continues as CDID implements virtual operating capability

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

Fort Benning continues its transformation to the Maneuver Center of Excellence. In February we installed our first director of the Capabilities Development and Integration Directorate (CDID), and last month we implemented Virtual Operating Capability (VOC), which places all the "Futures" organizations at both Fort Knox and Fort Benning under the CDID. This virtual command and control structure allows the Army to gain synergy and efficiency; combining Infantry and Armor capabilities before any physical movement. The concept allows administrative control of CDID organizations provided by the host installation, and operational control managed centrally by the CDID director. This phased approach allows the CDID organizations located at Fort Knox and Fort Benning to begin working as members of the same team.

The affected organizations at both installations include our Combat Developers, who conduct requirements determinations, and our Battle Labs, who conduct experimentation work. Requirements determination has been split between Soldier and Mounted Requirements Divisions and the two Labs have been merged to create the Maneuver Battle Lab (MBL).

The CDID organization also provides command and control over TRADOC Capability Managers (TCMs) for the Infantry, Stryker, and Heavy Brigade Combat Teams, Platform Battle Command (PBC) and Combat Identification (CID), and TCM-Soldier. This virtual command and control structure allows the CDID director to better integrate the efforts at both installations, and will culminate when all CDID organizations from Fort Knox physically relocate to Fort Benning.

The effectiveness of the CDID virtual structure has already been demonstrated by their recent highly successful work on the Brigade Combat Team (BCT) and Armored Cavalry Regiment (ACR) holistic review.

Building on the successes of the CDID virtual operating structure, we will begin implementing this concept across other MCOE organizations as they reorganize under the MCOE model; the Noncommissioned Officer Academy (NCOA), Directorate of Training and Doctrine (DOTD), and the Directorate of Training (DOT) will all form initially under the VOC concept.

We have accomplished much in the last three years since we began working and building toward the objective MCOE organization; extensive new Armor School construction projects currently underway at Harmony Church, the merger of our Captains Career Courses and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Courses, and the virtual establishment of our Capabilities Development and Integration Directorate just to name a few. The efforts of our Infantry and Armor team members have been outstanding and have ensured that the Maneuver Center of Excellence will train the Army's finest Infantry, Armor, and Cavalry Soldiers well into the twenty first century.

I am proud of the effort made by all of our Soldiers, Department of the Army Civilians, and contract workers from both the Armor and Infantry Centers. The work that this combined arms team has performed will establish the Maneuver Center of Excellence as the world's premier installation. The Maneuver Center of Excellence will determine future capabilities requirements and train Soldiers who are motivated, highly skilled, and ready to join the operating force anywhere in the world.

What issue would you like to submit to AFAP?

I came from Fort Jackson, S.C., and buses came every 45 minutes. We need a more frequent schedule for the buses.

In the PX, most of the time the fashions are either very expensive or very cheap. They don't have anything in the middle. Everybody can't go in and pay $115 for a skirt, but I don't want a $15 skirt either.

I'd like to have the main PX open to midnight, because if you need something past 9:30, you have to go to Wal-Mart. I'd rather go to AAFES.

If they would monitor traffic early in the morning, that's when all the accidents happen. Dixie Road can't support that much traffic during rush hour. They should make it four lanes instead of two.

Army Family Action Plan gives voice to community

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Michelle L. Gordon

I feel empowered. Actually I'm almost to the point of giddy. I just submitted my first Army Family Action Plan issue, and I feel like I've done something to improve both my life and the lives of other Fort Benning families. I've been an Army spouse for about six years now, and I've always been aware of AFAP, but I've never taken part, which is the reason for my current giddiness.

The program allows everyone on the installation to voice their opinions about what is or isn't working and how they recommend it be improved. Each issue is then discussed by a panel of volunteers during a two-day symposium and a decision is made on how to solve the problem. The last day of the symposium includes an open to the public out-briefing, where the major issues and resolutions are presented by the commanding general to the Fort Benning community.

This year, Army Community Service is celebrating the 25th anniversary of the program. Since its inception, thousands of issues have been raised and more than 600 of them were elevated to the Department of the Army.

When I talked to Fort Benning AFAP coordinator Barbara Singleton, she told me those 600 issues have resulted in nearly 150 changes to DoD policies and regulations, and 173 improvements to programs and services. In fact, because of issues raised during an AFAP symposium, Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance was increased from $50,000 to $200,000 and the family member separation allowance was increased from $75 to $100 a month for deployed Soldiers.

Also, several of those changes to policies and regulations started here at Fort Benning, such as the recent increase in Soldier leave accrual. Prior to January, Soldiers could only carry over 60 hours of annual leave from year to year. Now, because of an issue submitted from a Fort Benning AFAP symposium, Soldiers can bank up to 75 hours.

ACS collects issues year-round for discussion at the annual symposium. The next one is scheduled for Oct. 22-24. Singleton encourages everyone who wants to submit an issue to go ahead and do so now because this is your opportunity to have a voice. Every issue, no matter how minor, is reviewed and discussed. The majority of them are handled locally, but if the issue will affect all Army Families then it is sent forward for further review and discussion.

The program is great because it allows you to not only say what you think is wrong but also to weigh-in on how you would fix it. Not everyone has a good solution and sometimes the good-idea fairy gets in the way, but the only way to make change is to get involved. I've done my part and you still have time. Forms are available at the AFAP office, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2624, or online at http://www.benningmwr.com/AFAPissues.pdf.

This week in Fort Benning history

• The road connecting the post to Columbus was apparently in very bad condition.

In the Benning News, one reporter noted: "A number of student officers and instructors who live in Columbus and make daily trips to Fort Benning in their cars … seem to be of the opinion that officers making this trip — especially those who drive flivvers — should be excused from taking the prescribed course in athletics which is part of the Infantry School curriculum."

• "When a feller needs a friend is the time he is looking for quarters." The Benning News urged post residents to open up their homes and lend their automobiles to incoming officers looking for a place to call their own.

• With Congress having recently passed legislative action to drastically reduce the Army — effectively reducing the number of officers by more than 1,300 — the Benning News reprinted an editorial satirizing the decision.

"At the time this legislation was enacted there was a widespread feeling that the way to protect this country from the dangers of foreign war was to abolish the Army and Navy altogether. So the scrapping and chucking out began.

"We must be getting safer and safer every minute. If this keeps up until we have discharged every officer above the grade of second lieutenant, and are unable to get any second lieutenants, surely our foreign foes will curl up and die of chagrin and we will be forever safe from the horrors of foreign war."

• In its first edition, the publisher said the purpose of the Benning News was to foster athletics and recreational activities. "This paper has nothing to do with politics," he wrote.

But in regard to an article published elsewhere in the paper — an article poking fun at Congress for downsizing the Army: "In view of the fact that somebody has said that the use of the Army as a political football is the most interesting outdoor sport at the present, it is believed that such items have a place in our columns."

— Bridgett Siler

Correction: In the Aug. 29 edition of The Bayonet, it was incorrectly reported that there is only one female drill sergeant on Sand Hill. We regret the error.

AAFES offers 3-cent discount per gallon of gas

When customers use Military Star Card or Military Star Rewards MasterCard

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Post gas station customers can take advantage of a 3-cent discount on each gallon of gas purchased with their Military Star Card or their Military Star Rewards MasterCard. The discount is taken immediately at time of purchase.

When people use their military card, Army & Air Force Exchange Service doesn't have to pay a fee to a bank or company the way they do with traditional credit cards, said Ken Brewington, the post AAFES director. Those savings are passed on to customers.

With gas prices as high as they are now, the discount is a good opportunity, Brewington said.

The initiative went AAFESwide Aug. 29. Service members, retirees, DoD Civilians and family members may sign up for a card by filling out an application available at the PX on Marne Road. The form may be submitted to customer service inside the PX.

Both cards are credit cards, so a credit check is necessary, Brewington said.

The Military Star Rewards MasterCard, which was developed earlier this year, differs from the regular Star Card. It can be used at any location, not only stores run by AAFES, and cardholders can earn points toward airfare, car rentals, hotel stays, theme park admission, cash and more with each purchase. Purchases at AAFES earn two points per dollar spent, and those at other locations earn one point per dollar.

As an incentive to get the card, customers can earn two points for every dollar they spend within the first 60 days.

For more information about the discount or either card, visit any AAFES store on post or call 706-682-0826.

Unofficial Internet traffic slowing network, DOIM says

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Sue Ulibarri

The director of Information Management issued a warning to the Fort Benning work force to minimize unofficial Internet traffic because it's slowing down the network. The installation's network is almost at maximum capacity.

"Traffic on Fort Benning's network has increased at a rate faster than we are able to increase the bandwidth going off the installation," said Paul Yates, director of the Directorate of Information Management. Fort Benning's network traffic is currently at 95 to 100 percent of its available 30 megabytes.

"Since we're maxed out, a few of our network models show some users are suffering as much as a 40 percent blockage rate — causing a major slow down in data flow and an increase in operational problems," he said. "This hampers access to key functional systems and vital to day-to-day operations."

The Internet is a resource to accomplish the mission, not reduce productivity, said Col. Thomas Macdonald, garrison commander.

"As we increase use of the Local Area Network with online training with such courses as Rosetta, AKO-based training and other new systems coming online, we're taxing an already stressed system," he said. "We need to take steps to minimize the impact of day-to-day use. I need everyone's support in reducing unnecessary use of the network."

A major factor in the slowdown is streaming media files, Yates said.

"We saw a significant slowdown during events such as the Olympics and March Madness," he said. "While you have one person watching video playbacks during work hours in one place, you have another person trying to access the network to conduct official business, but can't because they're blocked out."

Yates called streaming video and video download sites, streaming audio and audio download sites, interactive Internet sites "bandwidth hogs." Control measures will deny access to them.

"If we don't reduce or eliminate our access to these sites, we may have to go to more stringent controls, such as blocking all sites except .mil and .gov sites," he said.

3rd HBCT Soldiers attend Warrior Leader Course

3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Sgt. Natalie Rostek

3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team Soldiers will graduate today from a special 15-day Warriors Leaders Course.

More than 150 Sledgehammer Soldiers learned NCO leadership tactics and responsibilities during the abridged course.

The class was only open to 3rd HBCT Soldiers because of the high enrollment of the brigade. Classes before and after the current class are 30 days.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Guinn, who works in the brigade's schools department, attributes much of the high enrollment of Sledgehammer Soldiers to the high rate of re-enlistment during the unit's most recent deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Sgt. 1st Class Alison Kempke, senior enlisted advisor of Fort Benning's Warrior Leader Course, said the students benefit from having a class consisting of mostly combat veterans.

"Being a combat vet makes it easier during class discussions," Kempke said. "They are able to talk about their experiences and their peers learn more from that."

The graduation ceremony for the current Warrior Leader Course will be held 5 p.m. today in Marshall Auditorium.

OCS tackles LRC

THE BAYONET
Rachel L. Watkins

Here's the scenario: after a bridge collapses, a leader must figure out how to move his squad and supplies across water using two boards, two plastic barrels and two pieces of rope. Whoever falls in the water is a "casualty."

This is one of many challenges officer candidates tackled at the Leadership Reaction Course Friday.

"The course is more of a thinking obstacle course than it is about physical ability," said Capt. Edward Goldner, commander of A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment. "They have to use their ingenuity to figure it out — it's like solving a puzzle."

Officer candidates went through more than 15 obstacles, on land and over water, each with a different scenario. The challenges included building bridges and rafts and transporting supplies across water. Soldiers could use only certain items, including boards, ropes and barrels to complete an obstacle. They were given only 15 minutes to complete each challenge.

Officer Candidate Brad Vick learned that improvisation is key when it comes to leading.

"This course forces you to think of a different way to find a solution," he said. "It's fast paced, too — you have to be able to make a decision at a moment's notice."

Each officer candidate led the squad at least once.

"You have to be flexible and know what your role is," Vick said.

"When you are a leader, you have to be able to give direction, and when you are in a supporting role, you have to be able to take that direction."

The goal wasn't to complete all of the obstacles perfectly, Goldner said.

"It's not as important to succeed in the obstacle as it is to see leadership skills," he said. "We want leaders who aren't afraid to take charge and make decisions in a situation where there is no obvious answer and no easy solution."

The officer candidates are in their third week of training. They are slated to graduate in November.

THE NEWS THAT MATTERS TO MILITARY FAMILIES
FORT BENNING'S AUTHORIZED MILITARY NEWSPAPER

around Post

REWARDS

A reward of $500 is being offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of person(s) who stole a black, 2006 Miller-Built LS8218 20' two-axle trailer, serial number 5K1BU82061006086, and a number of tent frame poles from Wetherby Field between June 23-24.

A reward of $1,200 is being offered by U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command for information leading to the identification, apprehension and conviction of the person(s) responsible for the theft of numerous sets of aluminum bleachers from Lee Field and Malone 7 between June 20-25.

Anyone having knowledge of the thefts, but not wishing to be identified will be briefed on options for confidentiality. For more information, call 706-545-7905 or military police at 706-545-5222.

DD93 PROBLEM, NEEDS TO BE REDONE

The Army has identified a problem with all DD Forms DD93 (Record Of Emergency Data) that were prepared or reviewed July 1 and after.

The problem pertains to the Death Gratuity Beneficiary Designation options. As a result, all Soldiers affected must have these forms redone as soon as possible, but not later than Oct. 3. Soldiers who fall in this category will be informed by their S1s and will be given several options in order to comply with this requirement. In addition, an effort is underway to ensure all Soldiers and their spouses are properly advised of the new options for designating death gratuity beneficiaries, and of the requirement to inform spouses, in writing, if there are other beneficiaries included other than themselves.

For more information, contact the battalion personnel officer.

CID RECRUITING

CID special agent duties comprise investigating felony crimes involving U.S. Army personnel and assets, crime prevention, and personal protection of U.S. and foreign dignitaries. CID special agents are federal law enforcement officers. CID needs qualified Soldiers. The qualifications are: U.S. citizen, at least 21 years old, have a GT score of at least 110, possess two years of military experience, be a specialist or nonpromotable sergeant, suitable character established by a Single Scope Background Investigation leading to a Top Secret clearance, no record of psychological or pathological personality disorders, no record of unsatisfactory credit, at least 60 semester hours of college, no civil or courts-martial convictions, normal color vision and have a physical profile of 222221 or higher.

The training includes U.S. Army Military Police School Special Agent Course; advanced training in specialized investigative disciplines; opportunities to attend training at the FBI National Academy, the Canadian Police College, Scotland Yard and pursuit of a master's degree in forensic sciences from George Washington University.

For more information, call Special Agent Jeremy McCormick at 706-545-0247.

INFANTRY WARFIGHTING CONFERENCE

The commanding general of the U.S.Army Infantry Center will host the Infantry Warfighting Conference Monday through Wednesday at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center. The public is invited to attend briefings and lectures by Army leaders and commanders. More than 100 vendors will display defense equipment and give technology demonstrations. The theme for this years' conference is: "The Infantry: Heart of the Army in the Contemporary Operational Environment." The conference is open to the public and admission is free. BRAVERY UNDER FIRE

3-1 Cav. Soldier risks life to protect battle buddy

3RD HEAVY BRIGADE COMBAT TEAM
Spc. Ben Hutto

While in Iraq, Spc. Ben Frahs and the scouts of A Troop, 3rd Squadron, 1st Cavalry Regiment, left the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team at Forward Operating Base Hammer to set up Patrol Base Assassin — a half-mile of concrete slabs that would become their home for the rest of their 15-month deployment.

The base was in the Four Corners market district, one of the main economic hubs of the Mad'in Qada. The troop converted three permanent structures located on the outpost into a command post and makeshift barracks for the Soldiers, but construction was ongoing.

"We had a few wooden towers set up to see over the hesco barriers we had for protection, but we didn't have our surveillance equipment operating yet," 1st Sgt. Mecko Johnson said.

With 25 Iraqis filling sandbags for the entry control point, Frahs and Pfc. Justin Pinna provided security.

"It was a typical morning," Frahs said. "We were assigned to guard the local workers who were helping put up our fortifications. We had our interpreter out there with us, so everything was going smoothly."

Until the mortars started to fall.

"The first mortar sounded like a high-caliber rifle," Frahs said. "It really didn't sound that loud at all. To be honest, it took us a few seconds to realize that we were being attacked."

The workers and interpreter evacuated on a gun truck while the two Soldiers provided security.

"I was in the (command post) talking with the commander (Maj. Arthur Mcgrue), when the mortars started coming in," said Capt. Michael Keathley, the executive officer of A Troop at the time. "In a few moments, we started hearing reports on the troop nets (communication bands) and we realized we had Soldiers out near the perimeter."

Frahs provided security, which allowed Pinna to get inside the patrol base when the second mortar landed.

"Things seemed to slow down and I felt like the life was being sucked out of me for a couple of seconds," Frahs said. "I saw Pinna get hit and go down. I had to take a few moments to check myself to make sure I wasn't hit. It was weird because I couldn't hear anything, but I remember everything crystal clear."

The concrete slabs the patrol base was on made the mortar attacks more deadly, Johnson said. In addition to the shrapnel from the mortar rounds, their impact fractured the slab's surface sending additional pieces of concrete shards into the air. Several of these jagged pieces of concrete injured Pinna.

"I didn't know how badly (Pinna) was injured so I crawled to his right side and removed his first-aid pouch to start treating him," Frahs said. "I could hear the rounds being fired, so I laid on top of him to protect him. I remember counting eight rounds. It took a couple of seconds for them to land from the time they came out of the tube. I figured out I had about thirty seconds to work him between rounds before I had to get back on top of him."

Inside the CP, Mcgrue was forced to wait for the attack to subside before sending Soldiers out for Frahs and Pinna.

"I was praying the whole time that no one would come out during the attack," Frahs said. "If they had, we would have had a lot more injuries."

A minute and a half later, the attack was over. Nine mortars were shot at the patrol base from close range.

"After the last round hit, I called to the tower and told them we had wounded," Frahs said. "Several gun trucks came out to get us soon after that."

An air medical evacuation was called for Pinna. Frahs was one of the Soldiers who helped carry the liter out.

"I knew he was in pain and just wanted him to know I was there," Frahs said. "I just wanted him to know that everything was going to be OK."

For his actions, Frahs received the Bronze Star with valor.

Johnson said Frahs' level head kept him and Pinna from receiving further injuries.

"I just followed my training and tried to protect my battle buddy," he said. "This guy is my friend. I couldn't leave him out there alone. I don't think my actions merited an award. I just happened to be in the wrong place at the right time."

Frahs said he is amazed at how lucky he and Pinna were.

"I examined where the rounds impacted afterwards," he said. "We were about 70 meters away. The kill radius for the rounds that were fired at us is 120 meters. For Pinna to survive and for me to walk away with no injuries is a miracle."

Frahs, a devout Mormon, said his faith is one of the reasons he was able to remain calm throughout the attack.

"Even though I was out there alone, I never felt alone," he said. "Religion is a big part of my life. Before I enlisted full-time, my wife and I prayed and we felt like this was something God wanted me to do. I have received multiple blessings to keep me safe from harm and accidents and my wife and I held on to that throughout the deployment."

Editor's note: This is the fourth of a series of articles Spc. Ben Hutto is writing on 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team's recent 15-month deployment in Iraq.

Protect America...and secure your future.

Wide-Open Spaces

Are you interested in a job with wide-open spaces and opportunities to match?

As a Border Patrol Agent, your primary focus would be to work in tandem with your U.S. Customs and Border Protection partners to prevent terrorists and terrorist weapons from entering the United States. Border Patrol Agents also detect and prevent the smuggling and unlawful entry of undocumented aliens into the United States, and apprehend those people found to be in violation of the immigration laws. Also, due to the increase in drug smuggling operations, the Border Patrol is the primary drug-interdicting agency along the land border between the ports of entry.

We are looking for physically fit men and women who want the ever-changing missions we offer and have the intelligence and courage to handle the responsibility. If this is you, then accept the challenge!

Army turns to junior leaders for suicide prevention

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Elizabeth M. Lorge

WASHINGTON — With National Suicide Prevention Week ending Saturday, Army officials are reviewing current policies and emphasizing the help junior leaders and fellow Soldiers can provide to a team member in crisis.

This year's theme, "Shoulder-to-Shoulder: No Soldier Stands Alone," emphasizes the strength and teamwork necessary to combat suicide, said Brig. Gen. Rhonda Cornum, assistant surgeon general for force protection. It is reminiscent of the Warrior Ethos' "I will never leave a fallen comrade."

The number of Soldier suicides in 2008 may exceed last year's all-time high of 115, Army officials said. The Army has confirmed 62 suicides this year, with another 31 pending — higher numbers than at the same time last year, said Col. Eddie Stephens, deputy director for human resource policy for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, G-1.

"It is a potentially preventable tragedy and every effort must be made to inform Army personnel of risk factors involved and to train our Soldiers, families and civilians to actively intervene, and I think that is the biggest difference this year. ... We've done a lot of education previously, but this year, the idea is to actively intervene if necessary and to make sure that people are aware of what professional assets are available," Cornum said.

> "Our goal is to develop an approach that builds life-long resilience in our recruits, makes them successful Soldiers, as well as successful citizens, long after they leave the Army, and makes strong mental health as much of a priority as physical health."
> — Brig. Gen. Rhonda Cornum

While the Army plans to continue existing suicide-prevention programs such as battlemind training, which teaches other Soldiers and family members how to recognize a Soldier in crisis; deploying mental-health advisory teams to theater; recruiting more behavioral-health specialists and most importantly, reducing the stigma associated with getting help — its new focus will be on teaching Soldiers, families and Army civilians how to help.

For example, the Army is working with Lincoln University in Missouri to launch an interactive prevention-training DVD. Soldiers will become characters in the story, and the outcome changes depending on what options they choose. Each Soldier will also carry an "Ace" card reminding him or her to never leave someone alone to get help, but to personally escort that Soldier to help. And starting in 2009, resilience and prevention training will be incorporated into basic training.

Two groups are absolutely essential in ensuring Soldiers get the help they need, officials said.

Junior leaders have the most face time with their Soldiers and know them the best, so they have to be able to recognize risks, Stephens said.

"We're targeting our junior officers and noncommissioned officers because that's the face of the Army to those thousands and thousands of privates out there," he said. "Building that relationship allows them to listen and be heard and communicate on a one-to-one basis with the troops they are leading, and building their trust and confidence ... so when (their Soldiers) have problems, they will be part of the solution."

Chaplains are also crucial to helping Soldiers find balance and hope, said Col. David Reese, director for ministry initiatives for Office of the Chief of Chaplains. Not only does the chaplaincy's Strong Bonds program help invigorate failing relationships — one of the leading causes of suicide — chaplains provide safe places for Soldiers to go without any stigma attached.

Right now the Army can't track how many lives like this have been saved; it can only count attempted and completed suicides. But plans are in the works to change this as well, to determine how successful prevention efforts really are.

Stephens said the Army is creating a suicide analytical capability at the Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine in early 2009 to fill some of these gaps. This cell would integrate all investigative reports and statistical data for Army suicides, with the goal of finding better ways to prevent it in the future.

While Cornum said one suicide is one too many and was dismayed by the upward trend, she said the numbers could have been even higher if the Army hadn't taken the steps it did.

In addition, the Army can't just work on prevention, it has to do more, Cornum said. While health-care experts have been unable to find one definitive way to prevent suicide, she said the Army needs to focus on lifestyle changes, building resilience, increasing social confidence and enhancing problem-solving skills for Soldiers, providing a sense of purpose for the future and a path to get there.

"Our goal is to develop an approach that builds life-long resilience in our recruits, makes them successful Soldiers, as well as successful citizens, long after they leave the Army, and makes strong mental health as much of a priority as physical health," she said.

Schedules: Will help relieve traffic congestion

Jones said, but she has heard nothing but good feedback from the 44 out of 50 people in her department who chose the new schedule.

"They like it," she said. "It's nice to have an extra day off. It's also good for managers. I went to the compressed work schedule myself. It's a good thing for Fort Benning to do. It's a privilege we've given our employees, and I do think it really and truly helps the individuals themselves."

Using the compressed work schedule takes some coordination, said Ron Shehane, director of Logistics on post. His department started using the schedule as a pilot program two years ago. Shehane cross trained everyone in the department, so they wouldn't miss any "one key person" on a given day.

The new schedule has proven successful, he said.

"It improves productivity in the employees," Shehane said. "They come in fresher. It gives them a little extra motivation (and) more flexibility. It saves in terms of traffic, gas, parking. We haven't heard a single complaint from customers, and we even have extended hours."

Not every department on Fort Benning uses the alternate schedule.

Blanche Robinson, human resources officer with the Civilian Personnel Administration Center, said they are still in the process of negotiation with the unions. She expects to see AWS implemented in the coming months.

"There may be some agencies where it really doesn't work well," Macdonald said.

"You can't allow it to degrade services. Mission accomplishment is going to come first."

To sign up for AWS, contact your supervisor or department director.

Cheryl.Rodewig@militarynews.com

AWS: May help improve air quality locally

With AWS, there will be less traffic during the days employees take off and during rush hour, since workers will have to stay later or come in earlier to work a longer day.

Traffic has increased exponentially on post, Sparks said. In November 2006, there were about 6,000 vehicles inbound from I-185. Now, more than double that number pass through the Lindsay Creek Bypass checkpoint on any given weekday.

As traffic accumulates, so does pollution, said Polly Gustafson, real property specialist and environmental coordinator with Master Planning Division.

Recently, the Chattahoochee Valley was in danger of going into non-attainment status, a designation from the Environmental Protection Agency for areas that exceed state pollution limits several days throughout the year. Last week, the EPA determined the area's pollution levels did not exceed state limits, but air quality is still a concern, Gustafson said.

"We have to keep striving to keep the air clean. We're never home free," she said. "We need to be good neighbors. I truly believe that alternate work schedules would reduce area emissions. We're taking cars off the road, and we're not having as many cars idling in traffic. Every little bit helps."

ARMOR
RUGGED MOBILE COMPUTERS

Soldiers don't take time off, even on the hottest days. Neither does ARMOR.

Some jobs have to get done, regardless of the weather. So ARMOR mobile computers work in desert heat, arctic cold and any climate in between. The ARMOR C12 Convertible complies with MIL-STD-810F and IP54, so it can easily handle vibration, impact, moisture and dust. It's what you'd expect from a company that supplies computers to the US military and its allies for use in the world's harshest environments.

Lance to ride again

Lance Armstrong is pulling a Brett Favre and coming out of retirement. Lance, who won the Tour de France seven times, annouced Tuesday he is ending a three year retirement and plans to ride in the Tour in 2009.

Johnson still contender

Don't count out Jimmie Johnson yet for his third straight Sprint Cup championship. Johnson had his second straight victory in a rain-delayed Chevy Rock & Roll 400 Sept. 7 at Richmond International Speedway. It was the last race of the regular season.

The drivers who made the Chase are: Kyle Busch, Carl Edwards, Johnson, Dale Earnhardt Jr., Clint Bowyer, Denny Hamlin, Jeff Burton, Tony Stewart, Greg Biffle, Jeff Gordon, Kevin Harvick and Matt Kenseth.

The first race in the Chase is the Sylvania 300 from New Hampshire Motor Speedway. Pre-race coverage begins at 1 p.m. Sunday on ABC.

Federer, Williams win

I will eat my words from last week that nearly guaranteed Rafael Nadal the win at the U.S. Open. But I would have chosen Roger Federer second, I swear. Federer defeated Andy Murray in straight sets Sept. 8 to win his fifth consecutive U.S. Open title. Bill Tilden was the last tennis player to have that achievement, albeit it was 84 years ago.

In the women's championship, Serena Williams routed Jelena Jankovic Sept. 7 to win her third U.S. Open title. With the win, Williams regained the number one ranking for women in the world.

Patriots lose Brady

Tom Brady, quarterback of the New England Patriots, is out for the season. There, I said it, but it doesn't make me happy. Brady was hit by Kansas City Chiefs' safety Bernard Pollard during the first quarter Sept. 7, and left the field and never returned to the game. The NFL deemed the hit "clean," and while I tend to agree with them, it's dirty in the sense that Brady has to have knee surgery.

There's been a lot of speculation and rumors that the Patriots will bring quarterback Chris Simms in for a workout, but coach Bill Belichick dispelled those rumors in his press conference Sept. 8.

All I can say, as a lifelong Patriots fan, is that I'm upset. Rookie QB Matt Cassell has a lot of work ahead.

Girardi will be back

Despite the likelihood that the New York Yankees will not make the playoffs this year, co-chairman Hank Steinbrenner said Sept. 8 that manager Joe Girardi will be back next season.

The last time the Yankees didn't make the playoffs was in 1993.

"Keep that wheel down," said Staff Sgt. Jimmie McCormack as he watched 8-year-old Alvaro Zanella race across the River City BMX track.

McCormack has mentored young bikers like Alvaro at the track since he returned from Iraq with the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team in May.

"He helps hold you, so you don't fall. He's really tough," said Alvaro, who won first place in his division at the state qualifier Saturday.

"It feels like you're in NASCAR, but you're riding on dirt," he said.

McCormack competed in state BMX races more than 20 years ago. He hasn't raced as much since he joined the Army in 1994, but he still enjoys the hobby.

"It helps me get back in shape," he said. "It's different from PT. This is like sprinting. I just like going as fast as I can. It's the whole thing with speed and jumping."

Hunters are reminded that all deer, turkeys, hogs, doves, squirrels and quail harvested on Fort Benning must be reported using the TELTRACK Hunter Control System by calling 706-545-8387 and selecting menu item number 4.

EAR TAGS

Auburn University is conducting a study of the feral pigs on Fort Benning to understand their population size, reproductive rates, movement patterns and food habits.

This information will help determine what impacts feral pigs have on habitat, wildlife populations and military training.

Pig hunters, please report the ear tag number, ear tag color, date harvested and general location of harvest to the Conservation Branch.

Several pigs have been fitted with radio-tracking collars to help determine habitat use.

Please attempt to identify and avoid harvesting collared pigs.

If a collared pig is harvested or found, please return the collar to the Conservation Branch, First Division Road, Building 5884, Harmony Church.

For more information, call 706-544-7079, 706-544-7516 or 706-544-7319.

$25 BOUNTY FOR FERAL PIGS

Fort Benning Conservation Branch is offering a $25 bounty to hunters who harvest feral pigs on post.

Licensed hunters who harvest pigs will be paid after turning in the pig's tail. A data sheet must accompany the tail when collecting funds. Tails and sheets are turned in at Building 5884 on Tuesdays from noon to 2 p.m. and on the last Friday of every month from noon to 2 p.m.

For more information, call 706-545-7048.

FLY FISHING FOR VETS

The nonprofit organization Fly Fishing for Vets will provide fly fishing excursions for Soldiers wounded in combat.

The all-expenses-paid trip includes fishing lessons, equipment and lodging.

The Soldier's spouse will be treated to a day at the spa. The trip is available to active-duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers, assigned to the Warrior Transition Battalion.

FIT FACTS

MWR FITNESS DIRECTOR
Lori Smith

A few weeks ago I wrote an article about the fitness classes we have at Smith. I gave a brief description of each class and listed the times they are currently scheduled.

I realized (after a very nice e-mail from one of my instructors) that I left out one class — spinning. So, this week I want to talk a bit about spinning.

Spinning is a cardiovascular workout for the whole body that uses a special stationary bicycle.

The class is led by an instructor and also set to music. This instructor leads the participants through routines that are designed to simulate terrain and situations similar to riding a bike outdoors. Some of the movements and positions include hill climbs, sprints and interval training.

Now, I know what you're thinking — I'm not a professional bike rider; I could never do this class. Wrong. The class and bikes are designed for every fitness level and every ability level. You basically set your goals and level of difficulty during the class. Some participants in the class will choose to work and maintain a moderate aerobic intensity level, while others drive their heart rates higher in intervals of anaerobic activity.

Burning between 400 and 600 calories in 40 minutes, spinning is not only a great form of aerobic activity; it is also beneficial in strengthening the muscles of the lower body. It tones the quadriceps and hamstrings, along with working the back and hips.

The spinning class is done on a stationary bike — nothing fancy, no special computer, calorie counter or special digital profile to follow. The only "gadget" you will find is the twist knob for changing the pedaling resistance. This way each participant can decide the proper level of difficulty for any part of the workout. People from every ability level can train in the same class.

There are few things to keep in mind about the bike set up. If the exercises are not done properly, and the bike is not set up correctly for you, injuries can occur.

Seat position is at the top of the list in importance. The seat should be set at such a height that one leg is fully extended with the foot resting on the pedal. Handlebar height can also be adjusted for comfort. Less experienced riders may want to set them higher to ease lower back discomfort.

There are three basic positions used in indoor cycling, with each working a different part of the body. Position one is when the rider is seated in the saddle and hands are resting on the center of the handlebars.

Position two is when the rider stands up but can still feel the saddle between their legs and their hands are lightly placed on the handlebars for balance. Position three is used for heavy climbing and the body is extended over the handles. Typical classes will consist of these different types of positions and will incorporate each one into the routine.

Now, I would recommend bringing plenty of water with you to class. Indoor cycling is very energetic and causes a lot of sweating. A person near dehydration can easily be dehydrated by the end of an hour of hard riding. One ounce of water consumed for each minute of work is the recommended hydration ratio, but this could vary depending on your weight.

The class is available at Smith Fitness Center from 10:30 to 11:15 a.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays and from 8:30 to 9:20 a.m. Saturdays.

The fitness instructor teaching our spin class is Jody Berg. She is a great instructor, very friendly and has tons of energy. She will give you a great workout, and one you will not forget. If you are new to class, please stop by a few minutes early and talk to her. She can help explain some of the basics of spinning as well as some important safety tips that you will need to know before class starts.

I hope this gave you a better understanding of spinning. We are very lucky to have spin bikes at Fort Benning and an instructor as knowledgeable as Jody. Her class fills up quickly, so don't be too upset if you can't get a bike for today's ride.

Have a happy and healthy weekend, and thanks for reading Fit Facts.

The grass will always be greener at Yankee Stadium

SPECIAL TO THE BAYONET
John Bastone

Courtesy photo

It was late spring 1960 — I was 9 years old and still mad that my Brooklyn Dodgers had moved to Los Angeles three years earlier — when my dad took me to the "Big Ballpark" for the first time. It was a doubleheader. The Yanks were playing the Red Sox.

My Dad splurged that day — he bought two box seat tickets for $4.50 each, so I knew it was a special day.

I recall (still with awe) just how immense the stadium looked to a 9-year-old boy. Centerfield went on and on forever. The grass was the greenest grass I'd had ever seen.

The fans began to fill the stadium, and my heroes emerged from the dugout. I was specifically looking for numbers 7 (Mickey), 8 (Yogi), and 9 (Roger Maris, the new right fielder the Yanks picked up from the Kansas City Athletics). Out they came, running to their positions on the field.

I called out my favorite player's name — "Mickey!" Now, of course, I sincerely doubt he heard me, but when he looked over his shoulder, I believed he was looking at me.

As I recall, the Yanks split the doubleheader with the Red Sox on that glorious day in May, when my dad took me to Yankee Stadium for the first time. They won the World Series the next year. And the next.

In 1963, my parents bought a house in the Bronx, so as a teen, I often went to the stadium with my cousins and friends.

I introduced my younger brother to Yankee Stadium in 1968. I bought a couple of general admission tickets for $2.80 — not as large an expense as my dad had put out, but I was proud that I paid for the tickets and took my 11-year-old brother, Anthony. The Yanks split a doubleheader with the Detroit Tigers, who won the World Series that year.

The Yanks went into a deep decline in the '60s and early '70s. But I continued to follow my hometown team through the good years and bad. I always found a way to get to the stadium during my visits home. I marveled at the renovation of the place in 1975 and their resurgence during the Reggie Jackson years in '77 and '78.

The Yankees have been a constant in my life — the NY logo on the hat and jersey; the pinstripes; the pennants; the titles; the great players; and the Big Ballpark at 161st Street and River Avenue in the Bronx.

Yankee stadium will be torn down after this season and replaced by a new, state-of-the-art facility that will look like the original.

My son and daughter bought me tickets to travel to the house of my summer heroes one last time. On Aug. 15 — 48 years since that 9-year-old boy rode the subway to see Mickey play for the first time — I made my last visit to the stadium with my sons and brother Anthony. Dad's spirit was there as well.

I assured myself, after I saw the new construction, that the Yankees will be forever part of the Bronx. The grass will still be greener than ever. The footsteps of Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joltin' Joe DiMaggio, Mickey, Yogi, Thurman Munson, Reggie Jackson, and Donnie Baseball Mattingly will take the field along with Derek Jeter and A-Rod, across the street.

While I will always remember the Big Ballpark and feel sadness, the new stadium ensures that the Yanks will continue to play where they were meant to play, in New York City, in the Bronx.

After competing in the novice division of the BMX state qualifier Saturday, Dakota Rutledge, 16, from McDonough, Ga., performs a jump at the top of a hill on the River City BMX track.

Staff Sgt. Jimmie McCormack was on hand Saturday to encourage and help young racers he mentored during the last three months. "For me, it's more for the kids," he said, "to help them learn how to ride and compete."

BMX: 'Like a roller coaster'

Expert racers might easily go as fast as 20 miles per hour, said McCormack, who placed second in Georgia in the cruiser class in 1992.

Kids as young as 5 and adults of all ages competed Saturday at the eight-lane, 1,100-foot track in Columbus.

The BMX track is the only one of its kind in a 100-mile radius, said owner Aaron Oney, who opened the track a year ago.

"BMX is the coolest thing in the world," he said. "It's exhilarating — just wide open, fast paced, raises your adrenaline — it's like a roller coaster."

BMX has gained more national attention as a sport since it debuted at the Olympics this year.

It's not exclusive, McCormack said. It's good for families, young and old, men and women.

"You have to try it," he said. "You have to be willing to come out and sweat a little bit. Anybody can do it."

The track, located off of Victory Drive behind O'Reilly Auto Parts, is open for practice riding from 3 to 6 p.m. Thursdays for a $10 fee. Riders may rent or purchase a bike at the store. Races are held on Saturday afternoons. Racers must attend eight local races and three state races to qualify for the state championship.

For more information, call River City BMX at 706-888-9466 or visit the Web site at http://rcbracer.tripod.com. McCormack's BMX site is at http://rivercitybmx.shutterfly.com.

We will never forget

"Seven years after the attacks of 9/11, the American Soldier continues to lead the fight against terrorism around the world. Our Fort Benning Soldiers and their Families remain steadfast in their commitment to this cause. Just as we will never forget where we were that day, we fight with the conviction that there is coming a day when we will celebrate, with our neighbors and our nation, triumph over terrorism. Until that day, we will fight. And we will never forget."

Military student creates high school guide

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

A new guide to local high schools is available through the post School Liaison Office.

It includes information on the public high schools in the seven counties in the Chattahoochee Valley, said Tawanna Brown, post school liaison officer.

Newcomers Guide to High Schools and Activities was written by Breanne LaCamera for her Girl Scout Gold award.

"I wanted to do something to help my community. This was the first thing that came to mind, because that was what was most important to me," said Breanne, who attended 11 schools during her father's Army career. The LaCameras were stationed at Fort Benning from June 2005 to August of last year.

"You want to make the transition as easy as possible, and you also want to get as familiar as you can with the area, and type of education you're going to get," she said, "because you could either be set back the next time you move or you could be ahead. I actually ended up taking U.S. history seven years in a row."

Breanne's parents, Col. Paul and Theresa LaCamera, moved so many times they knew how to research high schools before the family PCSed to Fort Benning three years ago. Some of her friends, however, didn't have the same advantage. Breanne created the guide for military children like them, she said.

"All these schools in the Columbus area offer different things," Breanne said. "If some people want to take the baccalaureate program, they go to Hardaway. If they want to go to the all-magnate school, they go to Columbus. Shaw has a vocational program. I just think it's good information to get out to people. I would have wanted that when I was there, so I'm glad that other people will be able to look at it."

Breanne, 18, now attends the College of the Holy Cross in Massachusetts. Choosing a high school with "the best fit" is important, she said, since it affects what students do after high school.

After Breanne submitted her project to the liaison office, Brown expanded the guide, which originally included only high schools in Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties.

Printed two weeks ago, the newcomer's guide includes information about school population, honors classes, awards and test scores, student teacher ratios, after-school activities and contact numbers.

"It's a great tool for students coming into the area," Brown said. "And it's not just for families that live on the installation."

The information comes at a good time, Brown said, since there will be an influx of families from Fort Knox, Ky., transitioning here with Base Realignment and Closure. Brown plans to mail copies to the families before they PCS.

For more information, call Brown at 706-545-3062 or visit the School Liaison Office, Building 2783 on Eckel Avenue.

GradeSpeed connects parents, teachers, students

THE BAYONET
Cheryl Rodewig

Parents will be able to keep up with their children's progress in school thanks to a new Department of Defense Education Activity program, GradeSpeed, which kicked off Sept. 9. GradeSpeed allows parents to access their students' grades online at https://dodea.gradespeed.net.

It ran as a pilot program last year at Faith Middle School and was very successful, said Joyce Jones, education technologist for the Georgia and Alabama DoD school district.

On Fort Benning, the program is for parents with children in grades four through eight. Parents received a pamphlet earlier this month explaining the details of the user friendly Web site, which is password protected and regularly updated with new scores, Jones said.

Besides grades, information posted through the "Parent Portal" may include grading rubrics, homework assignments and teachers' comments, said Angie Cotton, the assistant principal at Faith.

"It's all about communication," she said. "We want to keep parents connected and make sure students are making progress."

It's especially helpful for parents or guardians who are deployed, Jones said.

"You can log in anytime," she said. "Everybody is up-to-date and informed, and there are no surprises at report card time. The more informed (parents) are about what's going on, the more they can work together (with teachers)."

It also helps students be accountable for their work, Jones said.

'Is this stuff still good?' Food-product dating made easy

DEFENSE COMMISSARY AGENCY
By Kay Blakley

FORT LEE, Va. – Understanding how food-product dating works might not be a subject you've lost any sleep over. But, if you're a typical consumer, it has probably been a source of confusion that's resulted in some perfectly good food being thrown in the garbage or poured down the drain.

Many consumers incorrectly assume that a date stamped on a product's package is an expiration date. They automatically throw it out once that date arrives, thinking the food is unsafe to use. This is not true.

How long most perishables will stay fresh:

Milk: up to 5 days after the sell-by date

Yogurt: 7-10 days after the sell-by date

Eggs: 3-5 weeks after the sell-by date

Meat & Poultry: Stamped with a use-by date

Infant Formula & Baby Food: Stamped with a use-by date

Does federal law require product dating?

Except for infant formula and some baby food, product dating is not required by federal regulations. Even so, you will typically find what's called an "open date" (use of a calendar date as opposed to a code) on perishable foods such as meat, poultry, eggs and dairy products. This dating is done voluntarily by the manufacturer. It is intended to help the store determine how long to display the product for sale, and to help the consumer know the time limit to purchase or use the product at its best quality. It is not a safety date.

Types of dates and what they mean

If a calendar date is shown on a product, federal regulations do require that a phrase explaining its meaning be printed immediately adjacent to the date. These phrases are "sell-by," "use-by" and "best if used by (or before)."

· A "Sell-By" date tells the store how long to display the product for sale. You should buy the product before this date.

· A "Best if Used By (or Before)" date is a recommendation for best flavor or quality. It is not a purchase or safety date.

· A "Use-By" date is the last date recommended for use of the product while at peak quality. This date is determined by the manufacturer based on analysis of the product throughout its shelf life.

Most asked about items

The items that cause most concern among commissary shoppers are exactly those perishable items listed above – dairy products, eggs, meat and poultry. So, let's take a look at each product or category of products separately.

· Milk: A "sell-by" date is normally stamped on every carton. Make sure you purchase the milk before this date. Take it straight home and refrigerate immediately at 40 degrees or lower. Don't leave it in the trunk of your car while you squeeze in a few more errands on the way home, and don't let it linger on the counter or table during a meal. Pour the servings you need and return the carton to the refrigerator promptly.

Under optimum conditions, milk should remain fresh up to five days or longer beyond the "sell-by" date.

· Yogurt: Most yogurts will be stamped with either a "sell-by" or a "best if used-by" date. Store yogurts in the same manner as fresh milk (refrigerated at 40 degrees or lower) and use by the "best if used-by" date for highest quality.

After that date you might see some separation of fluid in the product, which will affect its appearance, but this factor alone is not an indicator of spoilage. It may be perfectly fine once it is stirred. Trust your own sense of taste and smell, plus your personal knowledge of how well it has been cared for since coming to live at your house when deciding to use it or toss it.

Yogurts stored under optimum conditions can be expected to be of good quality and freshness seven to ten days beyond the "sell-by" date.

· Eggs: Egg cartons will normally be stamped with a "sell-by" date. At home, refrigerate the eggs in their original carton. It is designed to keep the porous shells from absorbing odors from other foods, and to protect the eggs from breaking.

Eggs have a very long shelf life. Properly refrigerated, they can be expected to maintain reasonable quality for three to five weeks beyond the "sell-by" date.

· Meat and Poultry: Vacuum packed meats sold in all DeCA commissaries require both Date of Pack and Sell By Date.

Commissaries carry both a "sell-by" and a "use-by" date. Purchase these meats before the "sell-by" date, keep them refrigerated properly and either use or freeze by the "use-by" date.

Tray-packed fresh meats and poultry, including turkey, plus fresh rabbit and duck are normally stamped with a "use-by" date. Recommendations for handling and storage of vacuum packed meats also apply to these products.

Once a perishable product such as meat or poultry is frozen, these dates become irrelevant because, according to USDA experts, foods kept frozen continuously (at 0 degrees or below) can be safe indefinitely.

Infant formula and baby food

Federal regulations require a "use-by" date on the product label of infant formula and the varieties of baby food under FDA inspection. If consumed by that date, the formula or food must contain not less than the quantity of each nutrient as described on the product label. Additionally, infant formula must maintain a sufficient quality to pass through an ordinary bottle nipple. If stored too long, formula can separate and clog the nipple.

Dating of baby food is for quality as well as for nutrient retention. Do not buy or use baby formula or baby food after its "use-by" date.

Practice safe-food handling at home

Your commissary maintains rigid quality assurance and sanitation standards to make sure the foods you are offered are fresh, wholesome and safe. After making your selections, though, it's up to you to care for them properly until consumed. To answer the "Is this stuff still good?" question with confidence, practice these four rules at your house.

· Purchase fresh-dated products before the "sell-by" date.

· Refrigerate perishable products promptly, and use or freeze meat and poultry products before the "use-by" date.

· Remember that product dating is a guide for quality, rather than safety.

· Also, remember these rules do not apply to infant formula and baby food, which should not be used after the "use-by" date.

Ruck up and get on with your journey

OFFICER CANDIDATE SCHOOL
Chaplain (Capt.) John M. Sedwick

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt once declared that Sunday, Dec. 7, 1941, was a day of infamy because of the unprovoked attack against U.S. Army and Naval forces in Pearl Harbor by the military forces of Japan.

I would also include every third Friday as a new and improved day of infamy (or maybe just agony) after participating in the OCS ritual 10-mile foot march up and down the hills and dales and passing over many of the dusty trails of Fort Benning.

Indeed I experience this "Ground Hog Day" of infamy every three weeks as the senior officer candidate company "celebrates" the conclusion of their three week field problem with a pleasant 10-mile stroll through the southwest Georgia countryside with 150 of their closest friends and 40 or more pounds on their backs — along with the complimentary Columbus heat and humidity. I usually spend the following Saturday and Sunday drinking Geritol like Kool Aid and navigating my way around the house using an ACU camouflaged walker.

Besides taking a poor stab at some self-deprecating humor, I also want to illustrate how our command sponsored 10-mile ruck marches paint a larger picture of OCS — and indeed our Army careers. Every journey consists of easy and hard miles.

After having participated in more than a dozen of these 10-mile road marches I would categorize the first few miles of the ruck march as easy ones. The mood is light, the ruck sack doesn't feel too heavy, and the pace is constant and comfortable.

By miles four, five and six, the traditional summertime Fort Benning heat and humidity start to take their toll as officer candidates frequently sip water from their hydration systems and discover that their uniforms have started to stick to their skin.

The initial reverie associated with the joy of literally marching away from their final field exercise drips away with the beads of perspiration streaming down overheated faces.

The ruck sack seems a bit heavier and the pace (although constant) seems to be getting faster. The last few miles of the ruck march push some (especially 46-year-old chaplains) to the brink of exhaustion.

ACU blouses and trousers aren't just sticking to the skin; they have become one with the skin. The beads of perspiration have transitioned to streams of sweat that burn eyes and darken ACU blouses as they continue their descent down the torso.

Blisters pop with each painful step and ruck sacks and weapons feel like albatrosses to the back and arms. Some officer candidates (and all 46-year-old chaplains) wonder if they can make it to the end.

And lo and behold almost everyone makes it successfully to the end each and every time — happy, healthy and more complete, confident and capable leaders for having taken the journey. Every journey consists of easy and hard miles. The path ahead of you here at Fort Benning (whether it be basic training, AIT, Airborne or Ranger school, BNCOC or ANCOC, OCS, BOLC II or BOLC III) may seem distant and difficult, but you can do it.

Your Army and your country need you to ruck up and get on with the journey.

You'll never regret a day of it once the journey is complete. And you never march alone: Jesus says in the 11th chapter of Matthew: "Come to me, all who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn from me, for I am gentle and lowly in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."
