Swim with hammerhead sharks, discover sunken ships as a recreational scuba diver

"The sea, once it casts its spell, holds one in its net of wonder forever."
— Jacques-Yves Cousteau

Seventy-five percent of the Earth's surface is covered by water. Oceans, rivers, lakes, and even the nearby watering hole, add up to millions of miles of underwater adventures for scuba diving enthusiasts. Become a recreational diver and you can see the world you've been missing that's located literally beneath your feet.

CPT Mike Jones, an instructor at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and a recreational diver since 2005, said some of the most interesting things he's seen in the water include moray eels, barracudas and a shipwreck off the coast of Panama City, Fla.

"What draws me to scuba diving is being able to find those things that maybe some other people can't see, or haven't seen or discovered yet," said Jones, who completed nearly 65 dives as a recreational diver. "I also enjoy seeing what other people have found."

So what's under the water that has divers like Jones talking?

"Megalodon shark teeth," said Josh Blair, a diver since he discovered the hobby in 1997 while stationed at Fort Benning.

Blair, a course director, which is one of the most advanced types of divers, took a team of divers to the Cooper River in South Carolina recently and they returned with a bucket full of prehistoric shark teeth Blair estimates are 16 million years old.

"Some people like to go search for treasures like shark's teeth … or explore reefs and the biology under water," he said. "Diving has it's own appeal and it can be a very addictive sport."

If treasure hunting is not your style, there are other things to discover beneath the waves.

"I did a dive at a spot in Maui called the 'underwater cathedral'," said 1LT Jaime Lopez, training officer for the 11th Engineer Battalion at Fort Benning. "There was a natural rock formation that made it look like a cathedral and the light seeping through its cracks made it seem like there were stained glass windows. I saw someone performing a marriage ceremony down there. They had the facemasks on as they said their vows. That was pretty cool."

Lopez, who has been a recreational diver since 2004, said his most memorable dives included swimming with hammerhead sharks in Maui and looking at a 1,000-foot reef wall in Cozumel, Mexico.

"Once you do your first dive, you will get hooked," he said.

Recreational divers can dive to a depth of up to 130 feet, said Blair, who is also a scuba diving instructor and owner of Chattahoochee Scuba in Columbus.

To become a recreational diver, you must be certified as an open water diver, he said.

More advanced classes and specialty classes enable divers to dive deeper as well as learn the techniques for cave diving, wreck diving, rescue diving and a variety of other skill levels.

If someone is interested in scuba diving, Blair recommends finding a dive shop that offers certification classes from the Professional Association of Diving Instructors.

"PADI is one of the largest agencies and they are the most recognized scuba agency in the world," Blair said. "For about 95 percent of travel destinations, whether you go to the Caribbean, Europe or anywhere else, your PADI card will be recognized. The process is smoother if you have a PADI certification card as opposed to certification from another agency."

For more information or to find out about classes available online, visit www.padi.com.

Josh Blair shows off two megalodon sharks teeth he found in Cooper River, S.C., on a recent scuba diving trip. Blair said many newcomers are drawn to the hobby "for the adventure, something completely new that they've never done before."

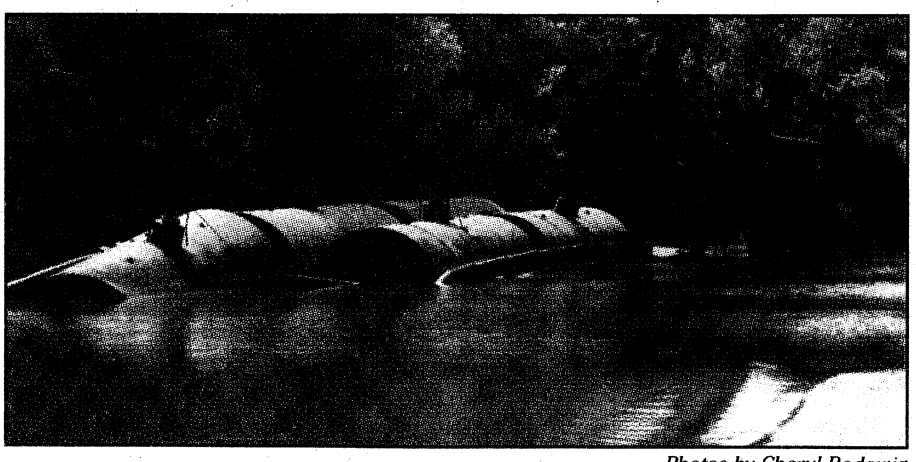
Divers swim over a reef at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. CPT Mike Jones, an instructor on Fort Benning, said he enjoys scuba diving in Panama City, Fla., because of the abundant aquatic life.

Float way down yonder on the Chattahoochee

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

After more than 10 years without river cruises, the tricommunity can once again boat on the Chattahoochee, this time on a 44-foot catamaran named the Explorer.

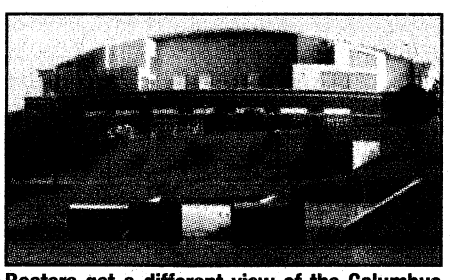
SpiderLily River Tours offers two-hour cruises on the waters of the Chattahoochee River. Customize your excursion with decorations, music, an actor or storyteller, a themed meal or a stop along the river for pictures and a picnic. The company can host chartered tours for student field trips, team building corporate events or private special occasions.



The boat goes to Uchee Creek, Lake Point Resort, Florence Marina State Park and other points of interest. During your ride, you may explore the flora and fauna native to the valley, see Indian mounds or even spot a few nautical ruins from an earlier time.

If you choose, the Columbus Convention & Visitors Bureau can link you with an interpretive guide who can share some of the river's folklore, ghost stories and history, hearkening back to Columbus' heyday as the center of the steamboat trade route in the Southeast.

Group packages start at $45 per person. If you'd like to rent the boat for a smaller group, the fee is $1,200 for the two-hour ride.



The ride cannot take place if the captain judges it unsafe because of inclement weather, but refunds are available. If the group cancels, there is a $150 cancellation fee.

For more information, call Carrie Clark Standridge, the events and attractions coordinator for the Columbus CVB, at 706-322-1613, ext. 206, or e-mail cclark@visitcolumbusga.com.

The Sintilla tugboat and a nearby barge are partially submerged in the Chattahoochee River.

Boaters get a different view of the Columbus Civic Center from the river.

Riders aboard the Explorer sail toward a bridge over the Chattahoochee River that links the Alabama coast with the Georgia side. The passenger boat, a 44-foot catamaran piloted by a captain with more than 30 years of experience, seats 44 people and is available for rental by request.

The Home of the Infantry now has the added distinction of being home to the best rigger company in the Army. After a weeklong competition Aug. 10-14 at Fort Bragg, N.C., against nine teams from the U.S. and Europe, the parachute riggers of E Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, came out on top at the 2009 Rigger Rodeo.

"The pivotal moment when we knew we could win was toward the end, when the points came out after the (Army physical fitness test)," See Riggers, A8

Fort Benning tests new M-8 bandoleer

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Soldiers from the Maneuver Battle Lab's experimentation force tossed around the current M-8 bandoleer and a candidate replacement version during a weeklong assessment on Fort Benning.

Eighteen members of A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, took part in the strength and dependability tests, which included a look at how easily they could access the clipped 5.56 mm ammunition from the bags. The evaluation was held Aug. 17-21 at the McKenna Urban Operations Complex.

The M-8 bandoleer is a bag with small pockets for storing cartridges and magazines, worn over the shoulder and across the chest.

Lisa Aversa, a packaging engineer from Picatinny Arsenal in New Jersey who observed the limited objective experiment, said the bandoleer now in use by the Army and Marine Corps is oblong-shaped with four pockets and made of cotton or a cotton-polyester blend. The potential replacement is all polyester, features two pockets and is produced through ultrasonic welding, which makes it more compact. Both bags hold 120 rounds of ammo.

Early in the week, the Soldiers took both bandoleers on McKenna's See Bandoleer, A8

Patrol caps limited to field environments

Command enforces proper headgear with on-the-spot corrections

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

The headgear for garrison operations is the black beret. The headgear for training environments is the patrol cap.

Leaders are enforcing this standard by placing NCOs in high-traffic civilian areas to make on-the-spot corrections, said CSM Earl Rice, U.S. Army Infantry Center command sergeant major.

"A uniform that's designed for work detail, for field environment, should be kept for that environment. You don't take garrison uniform out to the field. When you go out to those locations, then you dress accordingly," Rice said. "It's deeper than a beret versus an ACU cap. It's something about standards and discipline. It's something about getting Soldiers to do what is right. It's discipline."

Areas where the patrol cap is prohibited include off post, the shoppette, the PX and the commissary.

Sand Hill scores hat trick

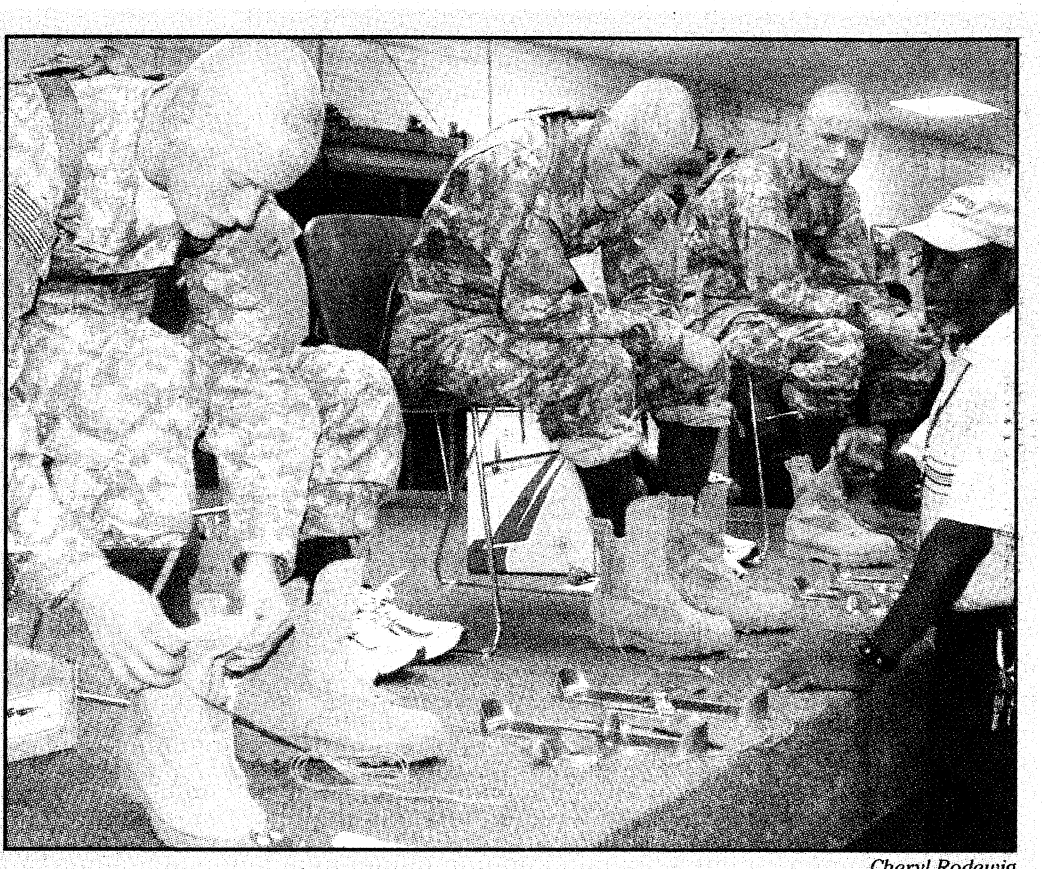
The cadre at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) aren't seeing double — they're seeing triple. That is, Joshua, Jacob and John Temple, identical triplets who arrived at the battalion Aug 17.



The Temple brothers are the first triplets to pass through in more than 20 years, said Erma Thompson, chief of personal affairs, who has worked at the battalion since it opened on Sand Hill in 1983.

"I've seen several twins, a father and son going through basic at the same time ... no triplets," said Thompson, who processes about 28,000 to 30,000 new recruits every year. "The triplets are phenomenal for us."

The El Dorado, Ark., natives signed up for the Army National Guard March 30, 2009, just four days after their 17th birthdays.

"It's kind of a family thing," said PV2 Jacob Temple, of their mutual decision to join the service.

VARIOUS VOICES

What qualities make a good NCO?

Leadership. Caring for their Soldiers. You have to know how to take care of your Soldiers. A lot of the new Soldiers don't know what the Army has to offer, so as an NCO, you need to know where to send your Soldiers when they need help. You need to be stern but approachable. My Soldiers know they can call anytime, day or night.

— SSG Lesley Phillips
11th Engineer Battalion

I am a former NCO. Quick and decisive decision-making. Good leadership, good direction giving. To be able to effectively lead troops in situations that arise. It's about getting the job done and getting it done correctly and safely, or as safe as possible. That's probably the most important right there. That's what an NCO does.

— Robert Williamson
CH2MHILL Constructors Inc.

He or she is one who takes care of Soldiers, not afraid to admit mistakes and learn from those mistakes as well as one who takes ownership of everything he or she does and leads by example. These qualities make a well-rounded NCO. Everybody needs somebody to look up to and being an NCO is being a leader, and a leader needs to be able to lead troops with their own unique leadership style.

— SSG Tanisha Quintanilla
14th Combat Support Hospital

The length of the experience of NCOs and what they take from those experiences. (My husband) is an NCO. I think what makes him a good NCO is he loves his job ... his overall dedication to his company.

— Billie Elliott
Family member

What makes a good NCO in my opinion is you know how to work downward to train and take care of the Soldiers and also upward and train the chain of command. That's personal courage to train Soldiers to do the right thing and to train the chain of command. Nobody sees the battlefield like an NCO. He's a battlefield expert, and the chain of command needs to trust him and listen to him. The Army will be a better Army once we let the NCO be an NCO.

— Chaplain (MAJ) Carlos Huerta
30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception)

Care and concern for the Soldiers he's responsible for, but that has to be sincere. That, of course, is expressed in various ways. If we had a lot more concerned NCOs, we'd probably have a lot less crime in the Army. I was an NCO before I became a warrant officer. Leading by example is supposed to be the NCO's creed, but that really resonated with you when you become a senior NCO, because it's flat out true.

3 qualities every NCO needs

CPT Charles Barrett
3RD HBCT

As it is the year of the NCO, I'm taking this opportunity to highlight the backbone of the Army — NCOs. I'd like to explain what I believe are the three qualities every NCO should have. They are qualities I feel every leader and Soldier would desire in an NCO. Before I sat down to write this I knew I didn't want it to just be words regurgitated from the NCO Creed or some Army regulation, but instead I wanted to try and quantify those words to better illustrate their meaning.

There are many qualities I want my NCO to have, such as loyalty, integrity, and the ability to make solid recommendations, but there are three which stand out above all others.

Almost nothing in the Army goes according to plan. Therefore, an NCO must be flexible. This phrase is used over and over, some may even say to excess. However, you must dig a bit deeper to fully understand what it means to be flexible. Every NCO appears to be flexible on the outside. Orders are given and an NCO moves out at a high rate of speed to execute the task. However, the fact that the task is executed is not the flexible part. Well, not entirely anyway. The flexible part is how the NCO executes the task.

How many tankers does it take to change a road wheel? I'd say at least 10; two to change the road wheel and eight others to critique how the first two are doing. When in a leadership position, others will be critical of you. After all, everyone has an opinion on how something should be done. So, while in the execution of being flexible a leader must also be open to recommendations from subordinates. That's one of the things that makes our Army so successful. At the same time, however, the subordinate, who is being critical, should have the personal courage to make a recommendation and execute the decision made regardless of the outcome.

The integrity of all NCO traits must also be maintained while being flexible. An NCO who complains while performing duties is not keeping the good order and discipline of the unit, least of all if it's in front of Soldiers. Sure the mission may get accomplished, but at what cost?

Being flexible should also take into account available resources, including Soldiers. These resources should be used as necessary. Using in excess is wasteful and using too few burns out the Soldiers doing the work. I've always liked the phrase, "Work smarter, not harder."

It's also about allowing your Soldiers to be flexible. In other words, don't micromanage. As long as a Soldier understands and reaches the end-state, then it shouldn't matter how they got there within rules and regulations. If you're not allowing your Soldiers to be flexible then how flexible are you?

Second, an NCO must be compassionate. This trait is one of the hardest to define because it's not about accomplishing the mission and there's not always a clear finish line. The world is filled with tragedy and heartache and Soldiers don't suffer any less when things turn bad. Empathy can truly help round out a leader. Taking time to understand an individual Soldier's needs isn't always highlighted in the duty description of an NCO, but it should be. An NCO who feels burdened by helping a fellow Soldier shouldn't be an NCO. It's about a strong desire to want to see your fellow Soldiers survive and excel.

It's also about deflecting praise, something Ronald Reagan was very good at. NCOs should take every opportunity to recognize the good deeds of their Soldiers. When you praise the good deeds of others, people see that, and it tells them what kind of leader you are.

A compassionate attitude will breed like-minded attitudes. So it's important to associate yourself with others who have these qualities. A compassionate NCO cannot have a "me" mentality. It must always be about the team or the unit.

Lastly, an NCO must be willing to sacrifice. This is the most difficult quality to understand, but it is also the most important. Of course mission success is critical, but how do you get to that point? What hurdles or walls are going to stand in your way?

When given a mission, an NCO can fail, succeed, or go above and beyond the standard. You cannot go above and beyond without sacrifice. If you come to a brick wall and turn around then you have failed. To be successful you must go around it, climb over it, dig under it or blow a hole right through it. Going above and beyond is doing this despite not having the skill set to do so or the task not even being in your duty description.

The word sacrifice shouldn't be used as a cookie cutter write-up to an award or NCO evaluation report. An NCO truly needs to surrender personal time, making that conscience decision to act in a way that betters the unit.

Many NCOs have a bottom line. The bottom line of this story is, "Take care of your Soldiers and they will take care of you and the unit."

A good NCO should be the right kind of flexible, be truly compassionate toward their Soldiers, and always should be asking, "How can I go above and beyond my normal scope of duties?" An individual's character should not be judged based on the actions of a single event, but rather on the actions of every event.

WHINSEC: DoD school with strategic reach

LTC Jose M. Marrero
WHINSEC

Given the new geopolitical conditions and the contemporary operational environment, or COE, the success of current and foreseeable future conflicts will be influenced by the degree of international cooperation of allies and friendly countries.

International partnerships, like personal friendships, are not developed overnight. They are cultivated with a process that includes effective communication, reciprocated support and the identification of common goals. This progression must lead to mutual understanding, trust and the unwavering willingness to make shared sacrifices.

With just 218 military and civilian personnel — operated with a budget smaller than the cost of a Black Hawk helicopter — the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation serves as both a powerful promoter for strategic partnership while building effective capabilities. The organization brings military, civilians and police from more than 22 nations together in an environment where the official language is their native tongue. It constitutes a unique hemispheric forum where international students and guest instructors learn about each other, developing personal relationships leading to international cooperation — a vital element during these challenging times.

As both a training provider and strategic asset, WHINSEC supports the Southern Command, the Northern Command, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, and Department of the Army goals and objectives in the hemisphere. In general, the institute directly supports U.S. policies, and anchors U.S.-Latin American relations.

The institute provides counter-drug and disaster relief capabilities, which is needed in the Western Hemisphere. The hemispheric military, police, and civilian organizations have been capably responding to these hemispheric threats and realities. The WHINSEC experience has helped them to dismantle drug trafficking organizations, interdict narcotics, and effectively prosecute kingpins and their gunmen.

At WHINSEC, democratic, human rights, and ethic values are not only taught but lived. They are, in fact, part of the command climate or work environment.

With a modest investment of resources, the "economy of force" organization has prevented many hemispheric conflicts. If every key geographical area of the globe had a WHINSEC equivalent supporting each combatant commander, numerous wars and conflicts could be prevented — wars that are certainly much more expensive than one Black Hawk helicopter, not to mention the lives lost.

Heart to Heart seminar features Grammy Award-winning artist

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

Jennifer Holliday knows depression and loneliness can fuel suicidal thoughts.

Holliday, best known for her role as Effie White in the original Broadway production of Dreamgirls and her R&B hit And I am Telling You I'm Not Going, nearly took her own life in 1990 after years of depression.

Through her faith in God, Holliday said she survived her battle with depression and for the last 17 years has served as an advocate for suicide prevention and erasing the stigma of depression.

"I want to provide some inspiration and encouragement that there is hope for people who are suffering," Holliday said. "And, if you are depressed or feeling overwhelmingly sad, that there is a place for you to get help. That is my main goal."

This goal is why Holliday partnered with Fort Benning's Army Substance Abuse Program to talk to Soldiers and families about suicide prevention. Holliday will conduct training sessions at the Benning Conference Center from 10 to 11 a.m. and from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. Sept. 10.

"In her delivery, she talks and then she sings. She hits you on different levels," said Yvonne Wilbanks, chief of ASAP, who attended a presentation by Holliday in Columbus last year. "The seminar title 'Heart to Heart' is indicative of the type of program that it is, one person caring about another and helping them through life's struggles. And she does a tremendous job in sharing her life story in a way that is meaningful to the audience."

Wilbanks and Denise Stephens, Fort Benning's suicide prevention manager, hope the presentation encourages those who need help to get it and to reduce the stigma attached to seeking help for behavioral health problems.

"Anytime we lose a Soldier (to suicide) it's very tragic. Tragic for the units, the families and the community," Stephens said. "There are agencies upon agencies ready to act for Soldiers in need. Suicide is a personal choice made in a difficult situation when someone isn't aware of the wealth of support available to them."

Blending together a Grammy Award-winning singer's personal experiences and a tough talk on suicide, Wilbanks expects the message to be both powerful and entertaining.

"People will be touched by what she has to say," Wilbanks said. "Anyone can have problems with depression, even famous individuals who seemingly have everything going for them."

To sign your unit up to attend, contact Stephens by e-mail at denise.w.stephens@us.army.mil or by phone at 706-545-5441. Individuals do not need to register in advance.

Beret: Distinguishes Soldiers, shows professionalism

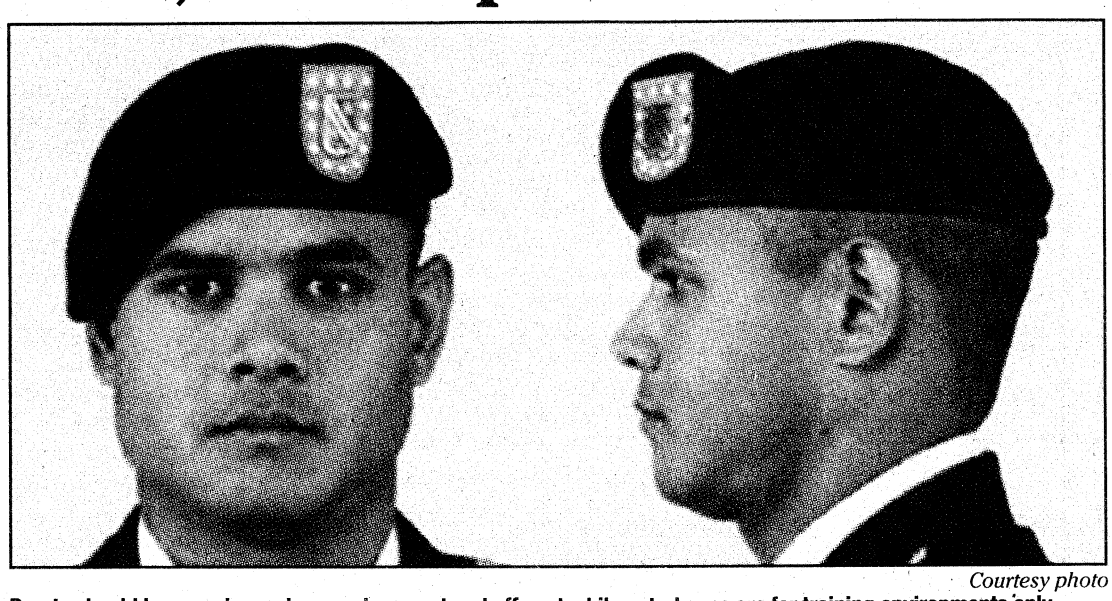
regulation is to distinguish the parol cap strictly as a field cover, said CPT Christopher Russo, an assistant operations officer for 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.



"I was out at a local restaurant and caught some of my fellow junior officers — very new to the Army — come into the establishment with the improper headgear," he said, "so I went over and said something to them and tried to explain the policy."

Russo said it was frustrating for him to task NCOs with an extra duty when some of his fellow officers were disobeying the rules.

"It shows that we're not professionals if we don't care about the simple things encompassed in our profession," he said. "It's too easy to just bring your beret if you're going to leave post. To say that's a ridiculous policy to follow is just being lazy."

The black beret, which carries historical significance and distinguishes Soldiers from the other services, presents a uniform front to the community, Russo said.

"We place a pretty big emphasis on Soldiers when they don their beret for the first time: 'These men have earned the title Soldier and are authorized to wear the black beret,'" he said. "It's a uniform item that's so distinctive to us. It should be worn and shown as a mark of a Soldier. We're Soldiers all the time, not just 9 to 5. We want to present Soldiers in a better way when they're leaving work."

PV2 Taylor O'Connell bounds ahead to the next barrier as his teammate provides fire cover during fire team training Tuesday.

"This is the essence of what Infantry Soldiers do at this level ... if they don't have these principles down, when they get to their units they won't be ready for the fight."

— SFC Clint Brubeck

The fire team training lane at Malone 3 taught Soldiers to use different types of barriers for cover and concealment during a fire fight. The training lane included half-walls, wrecked cars and barrels. The goal was to teach Soldiers to move as a team and communicate.

THE BAYONET

After eight weeks of training, Soldiers with E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, 198th Infantry Brigade, are well on their way to becoming Infantrymen.

Following a few days of practice runs, nearly 160 Soldiers participated in their first live-fire fire team training event Tuesday at Malone 3.

"Fire team training is where they start their base level of understanding how teams move," said CPT Philip Armstrong, E Company commander.

"A fire team is the smallest maneuver unit and it's the first size unit these privates are going to work in when they get where they are going," said SFC Clint Brubeck, range NCOIC for the company. "Basic rifle marksmanship comes into play here, loading and reloading magazines, keeping an eye downrange, communicating back and forth between team members to find out if they are ready to move and then covering them."

In teams of four, the Soldiers moved down the 200-yard training lanes using bounding techniques and various props for cover as they shot at pop-up targets and braced for grenade blasts. Props along the course varied from brick compound walls and remnants to wrecked cars and sand mounds.

"This was cool because we actually got to get out there and start doing Infantry-type stuff," said PV2 Taylor O'Connell, who was with one of the first fire teams to go through the lanes.

The troops learned how to use the cars and half-walls to protect themselves from enemy fire. For O'Connell and his teammate, PVT Kirk Liner, finding a way to cover and conceal themselves behind a damaged, windowless car in the open field was a challenge.

Liner said they chose to hide behind the engine block of the wrecked car because it was the only place that would stop a bullet.

O'Connell and Liner finished the event with smiles on their faces.

"This is the closest we've gotten to a real-life scenario," O'Connell said.

PVT Michael Mendez and PVT Joshua Pace, both recent high school graduates, were teammates for the event and said despite a few setbacks due to weapons malfunctions and reloading, their team did well.

"I think overall we did OK," Mendez said. "There were a few things we could have fixed, like using the barriers more."

A Soldier takes cover behind the engine block of a wrecked car as a drill sergeant moves with his team and evaluates their positions.

"This is a big transition from being in high school and being little kids," Pace said. "Then coming here and growing into men."

Brubeck said an important aspect of the training was building confidence and trust between team members.

"They are learning to have confidence in themselves firing on a live-fire range while they move," Brubeck said. "But, also, confidence in their battle buddies, to say that 'hey, I can move ahead of my battle buddy without getting shot.'"

The company commander said the Soldiers could apply fire team training to skills they will learn in the coming weeks.

"Once they understand how a team moves, they will put that together (with) how a squad moves and then eventually how a platoon moves," Armstrong said.

"This is the essence of what Infantry Soldiers do at this level," Brubeck said. "They shoot, communicate and (move) to take the enemy out. If they don't have these principles down, when they get to their units they won't be ready for the fight."

Next week, the troops will begin a three-day field training exercise covering squad-level tactics that will build upon what they learned as fire teams. The Soldiers are set to graduate Oct. 2.

VA simplifies compensation for PTSD

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Veterans Affairs Department is taking steps to help veterans seeking compensation for post-traumatic stress disorder, VA Secretary Eric K. Shinseki said Monday.

"The hidden wounds of war are being addressed vigorously and comprehensively by this administration as we move VA forward in its transformation to the 21st century," Shinseki said.

VA published a proposed regulation Monday in the Federal Register to make it easier for a veteran to claim service connection for PTSD by reducing the evidence needed if the stressor claimed is related to fear of hostile military or terrorist activity. Comments on the proposed rule will be accepted over the next 60 days, and a final regulation will be published after consideration of all comments received, VA officials said.

Under the new rule, VA would not require corroboration of a stressor related to fear of hostile military or terrorist activity if a VA psychiatrist or psychologist confirms that the stressful experience recalled by a veteran adequately supports a diagnosis of PTSD and the veteran's symptoms are related to the claimed stressor.

Previously, claims adjudicators were required to corroborate that a noncombat veteran actually experienced a stressor related to hostile military activity. This rule would simplify the development that is required for these cases, officials explained.

PTSD is a recognized anxiety disorder that can follow seeing or experiencing an event that involves actual or threatened death or serious injury to which a person responds with intense fear, helplessness or horror, and is not uncommon in war. Feelings of fear, confusion or anger often subside, officials noted, but if the feelings don't go away or get worse, a veteran may have PTSD.

VA is bolstering its mental health capacity to serve combat veterans, adding thousands of new professionals in the last four years.

The department also has established a toll-free suicide prevention helpline — 1-800-273-TALK — and has a Web site available for online chat in the evenings at http://www.suicidepreventionlifeline.org/Veterans/.

Traffic devices at Lawson to have 'minimal' impact

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Flashing traffic control devices have been installed at three locations near the intersection of Sunshine and Sightseeing roads to ensure an unobstructed radar signal to aircraft approaching Lawson Army Airfield from the south during inclement weather, the airfield division chief said this week.

Adrian Cerdedo, who's also the Lawson Army Airfield manager, said the system would only be activated when an aircrew requests precision approach radar guidance and conditions are hampered by low visibility and cloud cover.

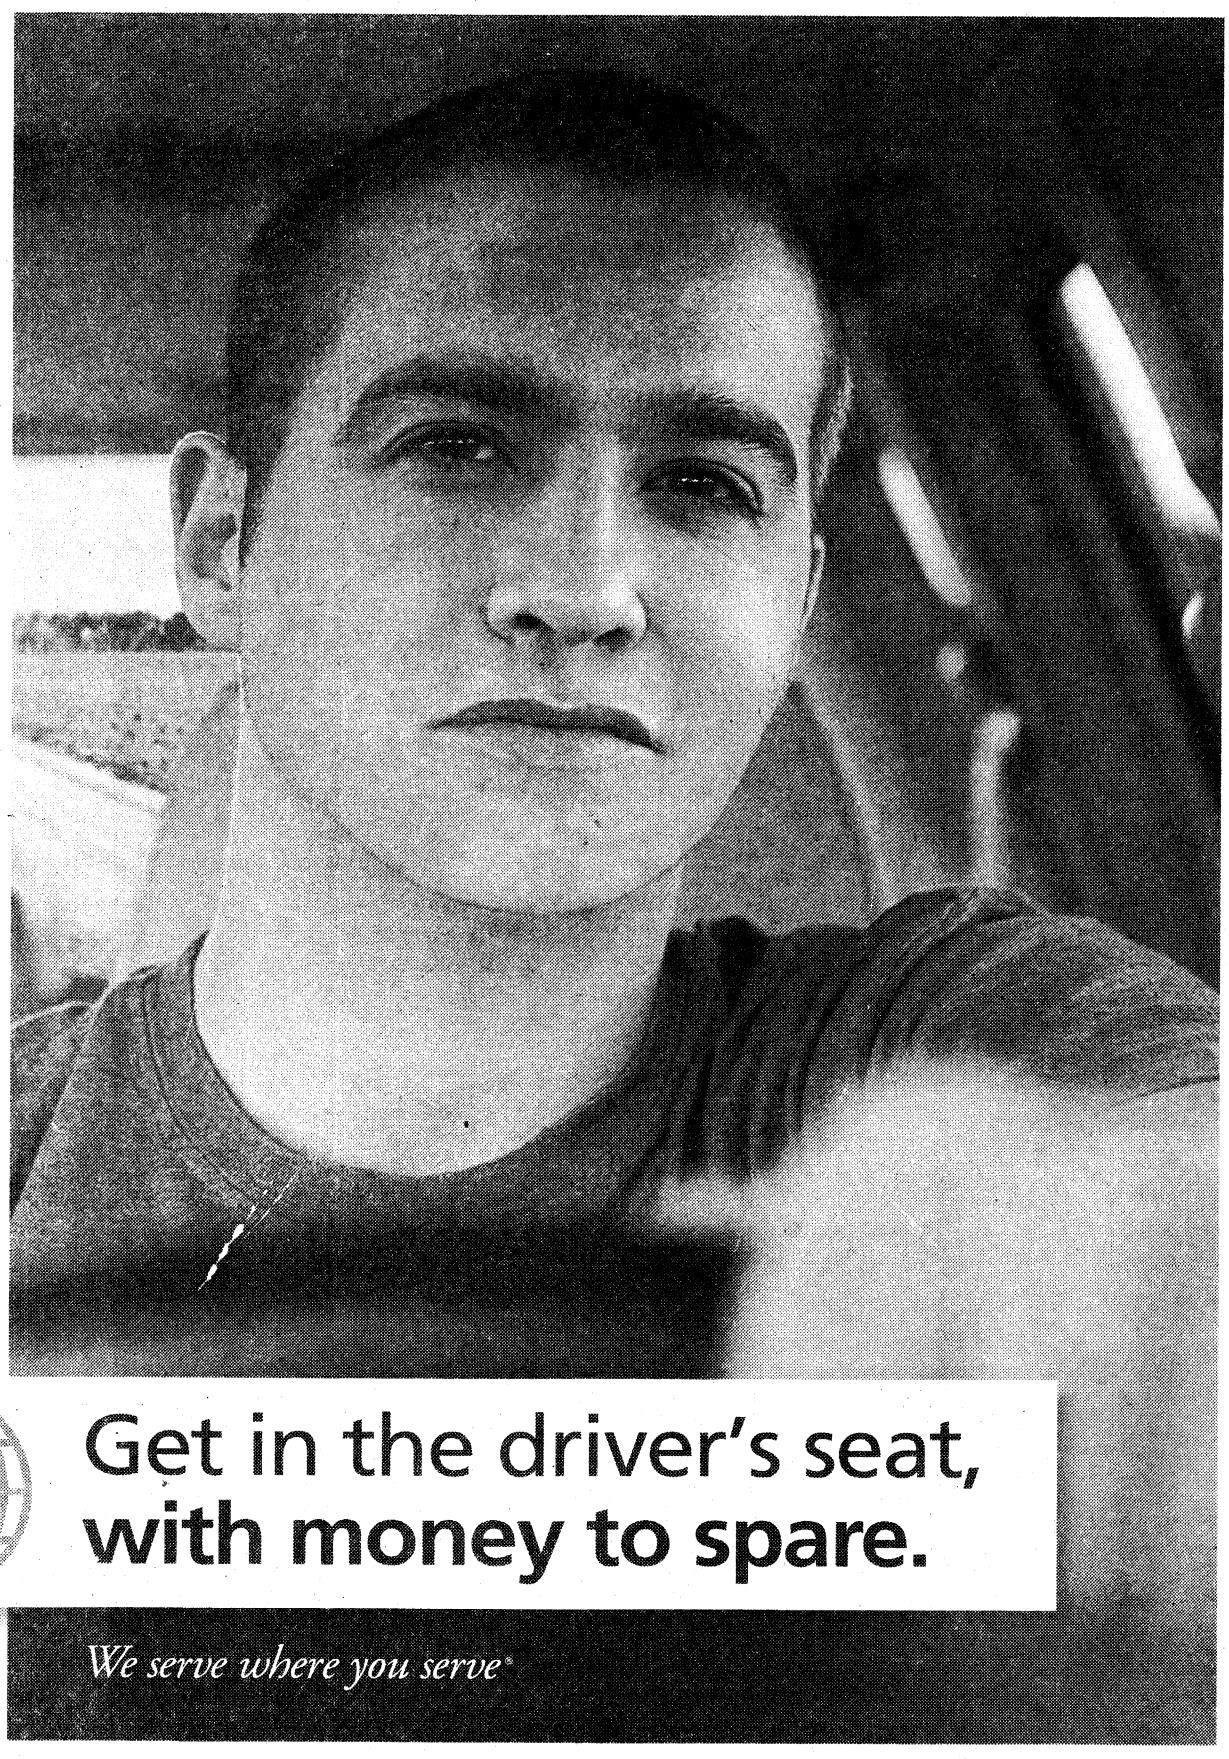
"We do not anticipate use of these devices during clear weather, day or night," he said. "It should have very minimal effect to no effect on traffic in the area during fair weather."

The traffic signs were put in place Saturday and are scheduled to be fully operational starting Monday.

Cerdedo said engineers discovered an anomaly at the airfield. After conducting multiple systems tests, they learned that large vehicles traveling along a portion of Sightseeing and Sunshine roads near the runway's south end were causing interference with the radar signal.

The traffic control devices will instruct motorists to stop when the sign is flashing due to approaching aircraft, he said. An automatic timer will deactivate the system after about three minutes.

"Our air traffic controllers will still have the option to shut down the TCDs when they are no longer needed, prior to the three-minute timer," Cerdedo said.



He said the system is a low-cost solution that will allow Lawson Army Airfield to continue providing a fully certified fixed base precision approach radar service to the flying community.

"I would ask the general driving public to offer up due patience during ... the very few times that we will need to activate the TCDs, in order to protect the radar signal being used to guide the aircraft," he said.

For more information about the new traffic control devices, call Lawson Army Airfield at 706-545-1357 or 706-545-2857.

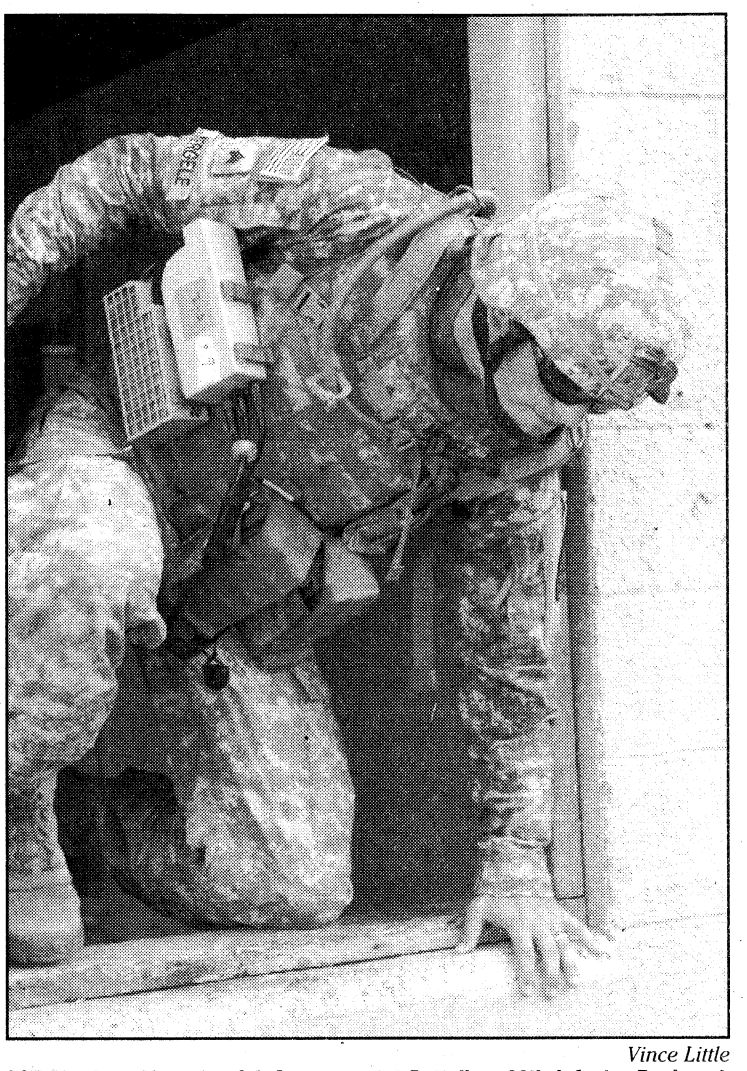
Soldiers try to maintain 'cool' during Battle Lab experiment

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The Army is looking at ways to keep Soldiers cooler in the desert and reduce the number of heat-related illnesses within the ranks.

As part of the effort, Fort Benning's Maneuver Battle Lab collected feedback from 18 Soldiers this week during an experiment on microclimate cooling options for individual troops. The evaluation, which began Monday and was scheduled to end today, took place at the McKenna Urban Operations Complex.



Officials said the two mechanisms under examination are the integrated microclimate cooling system — two small modules connected by a short hose — and the personal microclimate cooling system, a single cylindrical unit.

Both operate on standard military batteries and generate 120 watts of cooling, said Walter Teal, a chemical engineer from the Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center in Massachusetts. The two systems weigh about 4 pounds each.

"We've been working on cooling options for the dismounted Soldier, something smaller and lighter weight," Teal said. "These are not necessarily going to make you feel comfortable. You're still going to be hot and sweaty. But it's enough cooling in most situations to prevent you from becoming a heat casualty."

He said the Army documents 1,500 to 2,000 cases of heat-related incidents each year.

In 2005, there were 1,467 Soldiers treated for heat exhaustion, 258 cases of heat stroke and six deaths caused by heat exposure, Teal said, citing data from the Army Office of the Surgeon General.

Vince Little
SGT Matthew Mergele of A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, crawls through a window Monday at McKenna's urban assault course during the Maneuver Battle Lab's evaluation of microclimate cooling options.

"That's just the medical cases," he said. "It doesn't count every time a Soldier had to take a break in the shade and rehydrate. We suspect there are a lot more heat incidents that interfere with the operations tempo, and we think the numbers will go way down if they have some cooling options."

Soldiers can mount the two cooling systems to any MOLLE (Modular Lightweight Load-carrying Equipment) area on their body armor or rucksack, as the straps are weaved through the webbing. Engineers also put tubing on Army combat shirts.

Teal said the systems chill water and pump it through the tubing on the shirts.

The Soldiers in the evaluation are assigned to A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — the Maneuver Battle Lab's experimentation force. They completed about two hours of physical activity each day.

Fred Dupont, the NSRDEC representative to Fort Benning's Maneuver Center of Excellence, said the Soldiers tackled a four-mile road march with backpacks weighing 40 to 50 pounds. They also entered and cleared rooms on an urban obstacle course and went through McKenna's Individual Movement Techniques Course.

"We're assessing their mobility in that environment and durability of the systems," Dupont said. "The courses stress every fighting position a Soldier would have to take."

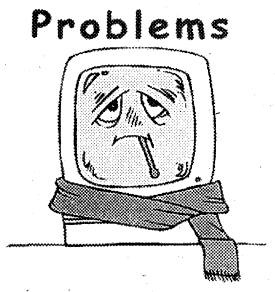
He said the Army has worked to develop the technology for about seven years and it's gone through several reiterations to make the systems lighter and quieter with a longer battery life.

"The tubing is a little bulky and it's a little unreliable," said SPC Isaiah Ramirez. "Half the Soldiers said they were having issues with the equipment."

SPC John Twist said individual cooling systems would help troops in Iraq and Afghanistan if the kinks can be worked out.

"It's a great idea if they can make it more lightweight and you can count on it to work," he said.

Teal said engineers would use the experiment to resolve mounting issues with gear and make voltage adjustments.



"Did the system snag on anything? Are Soldiers able to do normal activities without getting hung up on anything? Is the cooling you get worth the added weight you have to carry? That's what we're looking to see," Teal said.

"This will give us guidance to make system improvements and eliminate those hazards."

Bandoleer: Evaluated by Fort Benning's Battle Lab

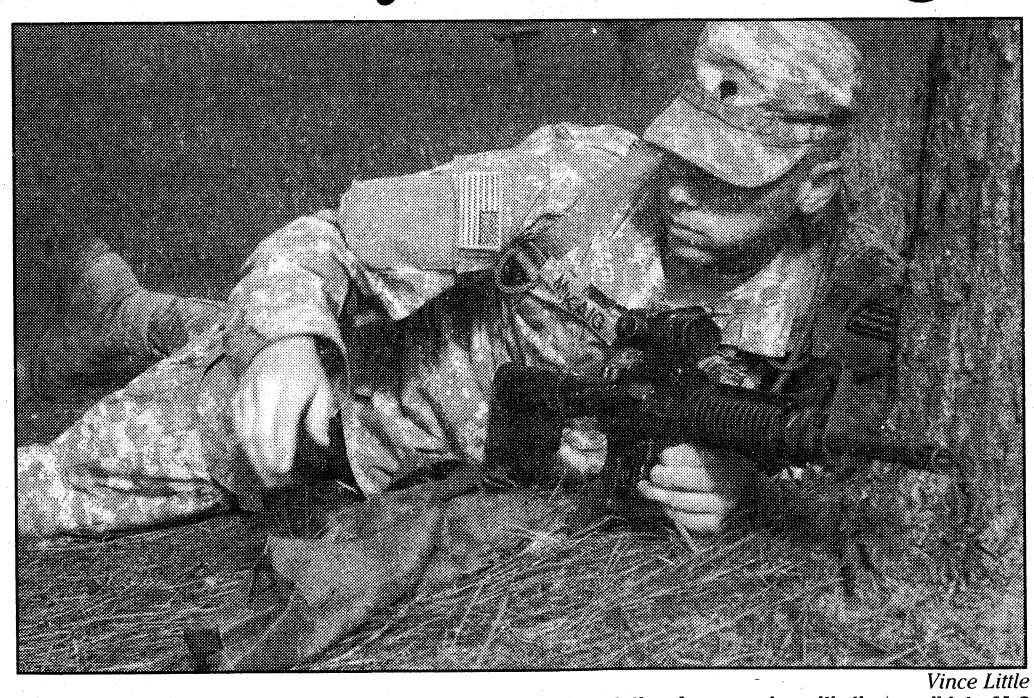
individual movement technique, or IMT, obstacle course. Evaluators also measured how far the Soldiers could throw the bags.

They resupplied each other during mock daytime and nighttime raids on a building and house, tossing the bandoleers through a second-floor window. In a separate scenario, they distributed ammunition along the perimeter of a "patrol base" under attack.



Large containers with fully packed bandoleers for U.S. troops have been dropped on battlefields for more than 50 years, said Niral Patel, a packaging engineer from Picatinny Arsenal.

"The ammo can be distributed quicker or carried quicker," he said. "You can throw it over your shoulder and go."

But many Soldiers from the experimentation force said the present bandoleer was sturdier than the candidate replacement version. Some also said they'd rather use other ammo-dispersal methods in combat.

"The material on the new one is brittle. It's not as tough as the old one," said SPC James Mocello. "When the new ones get tension on them, they just break off."

SGT William MacMillan said the candidate bandoleers "tear pretty easily" on the obstacle course and while throwing them around to other Soldiers. He fears "bandoleers would be (strewn) all over the place" in a firefight.

Vince Little

SPC Royston McKaig of the Maneuver Battle Lab's experimentation force works with the candidate M-8 bandoleer Aug. 19.

"We found better ways to distribute ammunition — especially in combat," MacMillan said. "Any time we need to refit each other, I never have used bandoleers. We normally use a rucksack or backpack because you can carry more ammo, and it's easier to distribute.

"If I had to pick, the old (bandoleer) works better. But if there needed to be a change, I don't think it matters, because we really don't use them anyway."

Soldiers aren't being told to choose the bandoleer over a backpack or rucksack, Patel said. But he said he thinks the candidate replacement version is a better option than the current bag because the new design uses less material, which makes it easier to unload and repack small-caliber ammunition.

"Any candidate bandoleer should be as good as or better than the current one," said Jonathan Porter, a project officer for the Maneuver Battle Lab's futures branch. "Even though Soldiers might not use it all the time, it should provide equal or better capabilities. Our main objective was to assess the durability and reliability between the two to get a comparison."

Aversa said cost savings in manufacturing the candidate M-8 bandoleer could be significant because polyester is less expensive than cotton per square foot.

"We'll be looking at things we could maybe tweak in the design," she said.

Officials said any prototype changes would be based on the Maneuver Battle Lab's final report, which is due Oct. 2. An integrated product team will ultimately decide whether the current bandoleer is replaced.

Triplets: Joined for same reasons, similar goals

"Our family has been in the military for a long time," he said. "Our grandfather was in the Navy. Our uncle is Air Force Reserve. Our dad used to be in the Army. (Our) great-grandfather was in the Army. I have his jacket."

The brothers also share in common their MOS as Infantrymen and the reasons behind their decision to join the military, which include a solid career, financial help for college and a good foundation for raising a family, they said.

"When we were younger, we did things together, but as we grew older, we started doing our own thing, got our own friends and kind of went our different ways for a little bit — and here we are now," PV2 John Temple said.

John said he wants to major in computer programming at a West Coast university. After that, he hopes to become an officer.

"I joined because I thought it would help me become a better man and set a future for me," he said. "Being 17, I still have growing up to do, and I was hoping it would help speed that process up. I want to learn the leadership skills of the officer and maybe that will help me become a better person in life."

"I'm in it for the experience pretty much," said PFC Joshua Temple, who has also set his sights on becoming an officer after college. "I've been told it's supposed to be a really fun experience. I think it'll be worth it."

Joshua said working with his brothers in the same unit will have its ups and downs.

"We do have conflicts sometimes ... very competitive," he said.

But their level of competition can be used for good, said Jacob, who plans to attend South Arkansas University and later become a warrant officer specializing in aviation.

"It helps encourage each other," he said. "If we're always trying to outdo each other — do better than him or him — he's going to try to do better than me, because I'm trying to do better than him. So, it's always pushing us further."

Though they greet their new assignment at A Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, with a mixture of emotions, overall, they are happy to launch their military career, they said.

John summed up their sentiments: "I'm very excited to be here," he said.

Riggers: Took early lead in weeklong competition said team leader SGT Johnny Delgado, of E Company's Pack Platoon.

Parachute riggers, or Red Hats, are trained to pack, maintain and repair parachutes. Depending on their tasking, rigger companies can specialize in maintenance, aerial delivery or, as is the case with E Company, packing. E Company supports Airborne School operations and any paratrooper who comes through Fort Benning.

All of the Soldiers were first-time competitors at the event.

The E Company team, made up of Delgado, SPC York Peters, PFC Jaime Esparza and PFC Ismael Navarro, started off strong at the Rigger Rodeo with a first-place showing after the first day's events.

The Soldiers took second place in the "Red Hat" four-mile ruck march and MC1-1D parachute packing competition and took the lead with a first-place finish in packing the reserve parachute.

"Line replacement was the hardest part for me ... to have only a week before the event to practice something we don't ever do was kind of challenging."

— SPC York Peters

Taking the lead early on boosted the team's confidence, Navarro said.

"When we finished the ruck march, I didn't know we were in second place until they told us. I didn't realize how many teams we'd passed up," said Navarro. "My whole thing was to keep that lead and do the best in everything else."

E Company led by 30 points at the end of the day.

On day two, the riggers headed to Luzon Drop Zone for an Airborne operation. In this competition, each team appointed a jumpmaster and three jumpers. Despite taking third place in the Airborne competition, E Company widened their overall lead by 25 points.

On days three and four, E Company stayed in close contention with the 612th Quartermaster Company, which at times trailed by only five points, Delgado said.

During the next two days, the team packed G12E cargo parachutes, prepared A22 cargo bags for airdrops, replaced suspension lines and sewed patches into parachute canopies.

"Line replacement was the hardest event for me," Esparza said. "We don't do maintenance at Fort Benning, all we do is pack the (parachutes). And to have only a week before the event to practice something we don't ever do was kind of challenging."

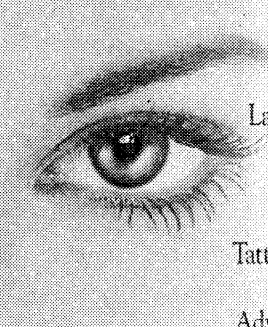
"Repairing the canopy. That was the tough part for me," said Peters, who works in control and issue for the Airborne School. "My time wasn't good, but I got a score of 100."

Esparza and his fellow team members credited their team leader with teaching the skills they needed to win.

"He has experience in every field," Esparza said. "He showed us little tricks on how to go faster, what to do, what to look for."

After securing a second-place victory in the Army physical fitness test, and a team-high score of 326 by Esparza, the team went into the final event, the written test, with a 15-point lead over the 612th QM.

The E Company riggers blew the competition away with 332 points, nearly 60 points ahead of the second place finisher and last year's champ, the 5th Quartermaster Detachment.



They finished with a score of 897 points out of a possible 1,000.

E Company returned to Fort Benning with the Rigger Rodeo trophy and Army Commendation medals. Navarro received an individual award for having the highest score on the written test, Delgado said.

"We had some great competition," Delgado said at the rodeo when the win was announced. "612th (Quartermaster) gave us a run for our money the whole time. I couldn't do it without (the) Soldiers I came out here with."

The Chattahoochee County High School Panthers (Region 4-A) defeated the Columbus High School Blue Devils (Region 2-AAA) 22-16 in the first scrimmage game of the season Friday at Chattco.

The Blue Devils drove the ball to the Panthers' 10-yard line and with less than six minutes in the first quarter, scored on a 27-yard field goal. Panther Dequavious Barbin scored a touchdown from 20 yards out, and with the two-point conversion, they led 8-3 to close out the quarter. In the second quarter, the Panthers took possession after stopping the Blue Devils on a fourth down.

Scoring another touchdown and two-point conversion, the Panthers increased their lead to 16-3. With two minutes left on the clock, Blue Devil Demetrius Jackson scored from the

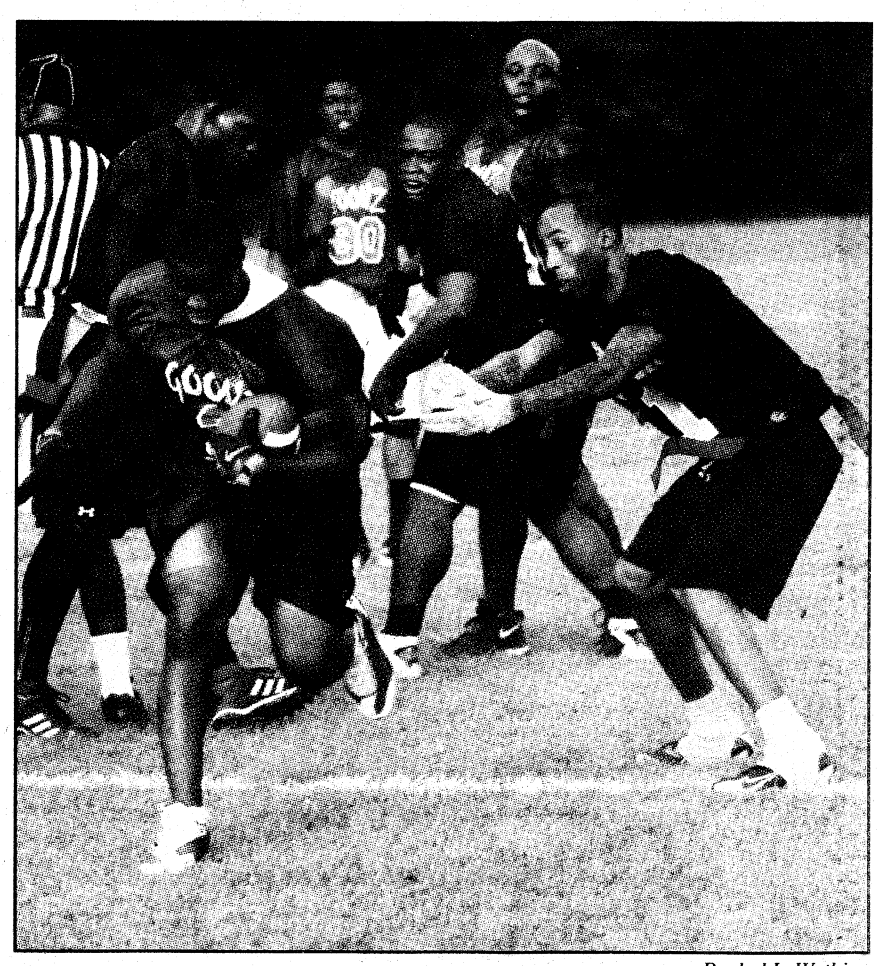
Goonz earn spot in championship finals

Rachel L. Watkins
THE BAYONET

The Goonz defeated the Dawgs 7-0 in the winner's bracket semifinals of the Preseason Flag Football Commander's Cup tournament Monday at Essebagger Field, to earn a spot in the championship finals.

The Goonz of the 598th Maintenance Company broke the scoreless stalemate with MEDDAC's Dawgs in the first quarter when Greg Woulard returned an interception, 10 yards for a touchdown. Goonz' Willie Miller scored the one-point conversion to give the Goonz a 7-0 lead for the only score of the game.



The Dawgs missed two scoring opportunities in the first quarter with one pass that was caught just outside the end zone boundaries and another incomplete pass in the end zone.

"We played a good game and our defense shined through but we have a few adjustments to make before Wednesday's game," Goonz' coach Besean Hollis said. "I am impressed with my offense and defense and I have no doubt that we will defend the championship. Whoever we play for the championship, they aren't going to beat us twice — our team is too strong."

After the win, the Goonz earned an automatic spot in the championship game. The Goonz took the post title in 2008 at the postseason championship and want to keep it, Woulard said.

"I think we will see MEDDAC again in the championship game," he said. "I think as long as we play hard and stay focused, we will defend our title."

Look for coverage of the championship game in the Sept. 4 edition of The Bayonet.

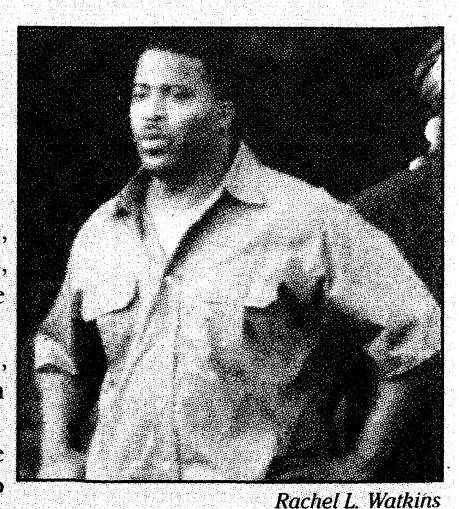
COACHES' SPOTLIGHT

Coach steers players in 'right direction'

Rachel L. Watkins
THE BAYONET

When Phillip Moore stopped playing football, he said the next best thing was coaching.



"I am going to leave the playing to the younger guys," he said. "I love coaching — I can still be involved in the game and it's a chance for me to mentor the players and steer them in the right direction. When I was a young Soldier and I first began playing football, I was a hothead. The coach of my team sat me down and steered me in the right direction and that gave me a desire to want to help other guys do the same."

The "right direction" includes instilling discipline, integrity, accountability and team work into players, Moore said. Putting egos aside and playing the game as a team is key to heading in the right direction.

Moore has coached in South Korea, Fort Bliss, Texas, and Fort Benning. He coaches the MEDDAC team in the intramural flag football league.

Moore said he looks for players who have a desire to come to practice and players with heart and who are competitive. Those who don't have a passion or

OCS gives Chattco new look

Rachel L. Watkins
THE BAYONET

Chattahoochee County High School football stadium has a new look thanks to the work of 172 officer candidates from A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, and purchases and donations from the school board. The Soldiers spent every Saturday in August, about 20 hours, scrubbing, priming and painting walls and cleaning the bleachers, press box and restrooms. The plain concrete bleachers are now painted in black and yellow — the school's colors — with the word "Chattco" etched and hand-painted on the wall.

"It's great that we were afforded the opportunity to do outreach with the local community," said Officer Candidate Craig Zagorski. "Service is not just going to work everyday. It's reaching out to the local communities. You should actively improve your communities because when you help the community, it helps everybody."

The project is a good way to establish a bond between Fort Benning and the community, said OCS platoon trainer CPT Christopher Brown.

"I like to show the community that the military is not a far-off place no one knows about," he said. "The project is a good way to spread the Army message. It's a way to show others what the Army value selfless service is and how a team can come together and accomplish a common goal."

The project would have cost upward of $20,000 if the school hired labor to paint, said the school's principal, Jim Sims.

"We had a vision of what we wanted, but by no means, did we expect the officer candidates to do it all," Sims said. "Words can't describe how appreciative we are for their work. This project would have taken us years if they had not donated their time."

Sims said the new additions to the stadium reflect a sense of school spirit.

There is still work to be done, Sims said, but he can't thank the Soldiers enough for their work.

A Company was recognized at the Chattco football scrimmage game against Columbus High School Friday at Chattco and received free admission to the game.

Panther's 16-yard line, narrowing the Panthers lead to 16-9 at halftime.

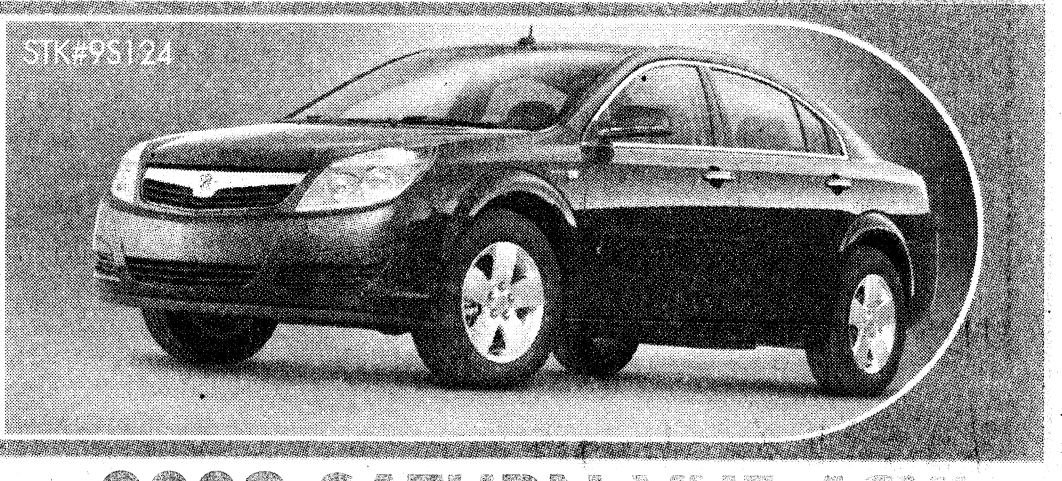
Late in the third and final quarter, Columbus tied the score 16-16. With 12 seconds left on the clock, Panther quarterback David Cochran hit Niko Jones on a 35-yard catch-and-run scoring the winning touchdown.

"There are a lot of mistakes made in scrimmage (games) but the team showed an amazing amount of heart and fought through adversity to get the win," Panthers' coach Josh Kemp said. "We were in control most of the game except for the last few minutes. We had some crucial mistakes that almost cost us the win."

Kemp said the entire offense and defense are new because many players graduated, so he is working on rebuilding the team.

"We won today, but it's back to work tomorrow," he said.

"The game was close toward the end of the third quarter. We played pretty good defense and offense and everybody worked hard and played well," said Barbin, a Chattco senior and son of SFC Anthony and LaTonya Barbin. "I saw a lot of hustle, dedication and heart on the field."



Cochran said the team can use the scrimmage as a learning tool.

"The offense is not where we need to be right now," he said. "We are still making mistakes, but we will work those out before we play our next game."

Up next for the Panthers is their first season game at 7:30 p.m. today in an away game against the Calhoun County High School Cougars (1B-A).

Twelve golfers competed in the Fort Benning tournament and tried a total of 42 times to get the highest distance. The golfer who drives the ball the farthest within set parameters will get an expenses-paid trip to Mesquite, Nev., to battle against 20 competitors Oct. 28 in the military national finals organized by Army Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Command. The national winner will receive a $10,000 check, the military championship title and a spot in the RE/MAX World Long Drive Championships. discipline for the game, Moore works on motivating them to get excited.

"Some players haven't been disciplined but once the players know I am not belittling them and am trying to help them improve, they come around," he said.

Moore said he always challenges the team to put forth extra effort.

MEDDAC played in the Preseason Flag Football Commander's Cup tournament this week and made it to the winner's bracket semifinals before losing to the Goonz of 598th Maintenance Company and falling to the loser's bracket. They won 20-9 against Kelley Hill in the semifinals Wednesday for a spot in the championship finals.

Up next for the team is preparing for their first regular season game against 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment at 8 p.m. Monday at Essebagger Field.

Fight the flu C3

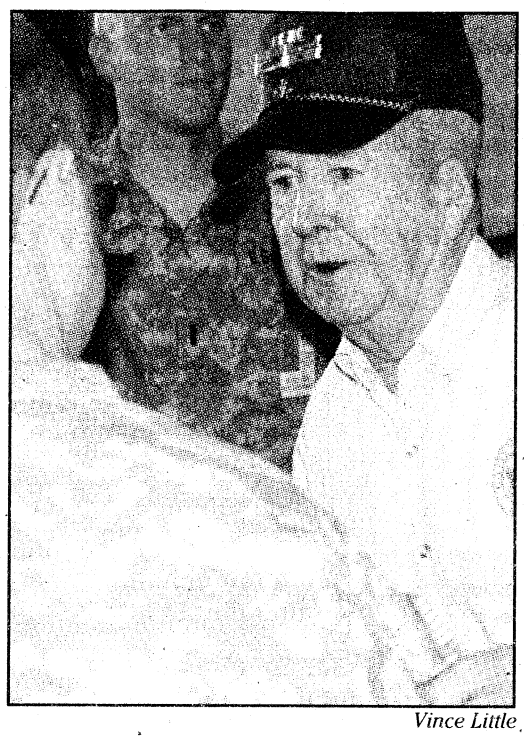
'Someone has to show appreciation'

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

One by one, CSM(R) Virgil Greene greets the U.S. personnel walking out the door, shaking each hand as if it were the first. It's become a weekly ritual for him, a CONUS Replacement Center chaplain and unit leaders.

Since early 2007, the 79-year-old highly decorated Soldier, who fought in Korea and Vietnam, has never missed a deployment or Freedom Flight at Lawson Army Airfield. He's met thousands of U.S. troops, Department of Defense civilians and military contractors headed to and returning from 36 different countries as part of the war on terrorism.

"I owe it to these people," Greene said Friday as about 270 departed Freedom Hall during the CRC battalion's weekly mission.



"In my war service, I never got a handshake from anyone, except my family. People just didn't seem to care — and someone has to care and show appreciation for what these people are doing over there. I tell them how proud I am of their service."

To put it in perspective, Fort Benning's CRC — the only one left in the Army — handles about 36,000 people annually in the rotating cycles, said MAJ Mark Kottka, the battalion's executive officer. Departures to Kuwait take place each Friday, while the return flight arrives on Sunday afternoon.

"Every week, Sergeant Major Greene arrives at Lawson Army Airfield well before the departing and returning Soldiers who process through the CRC," Kottka said. "Then he mingles with the troops, chewing the fat, trying to place their minds at ease before they depart or welcoming the Soldiers home and personally congratulating them for a job well done.

"His positive attitude, friendly smile, firm handshake and words ... have had long-lasting positive effects. His efforts show a selflessness that is hard to find in this ever-hectic world we live in."

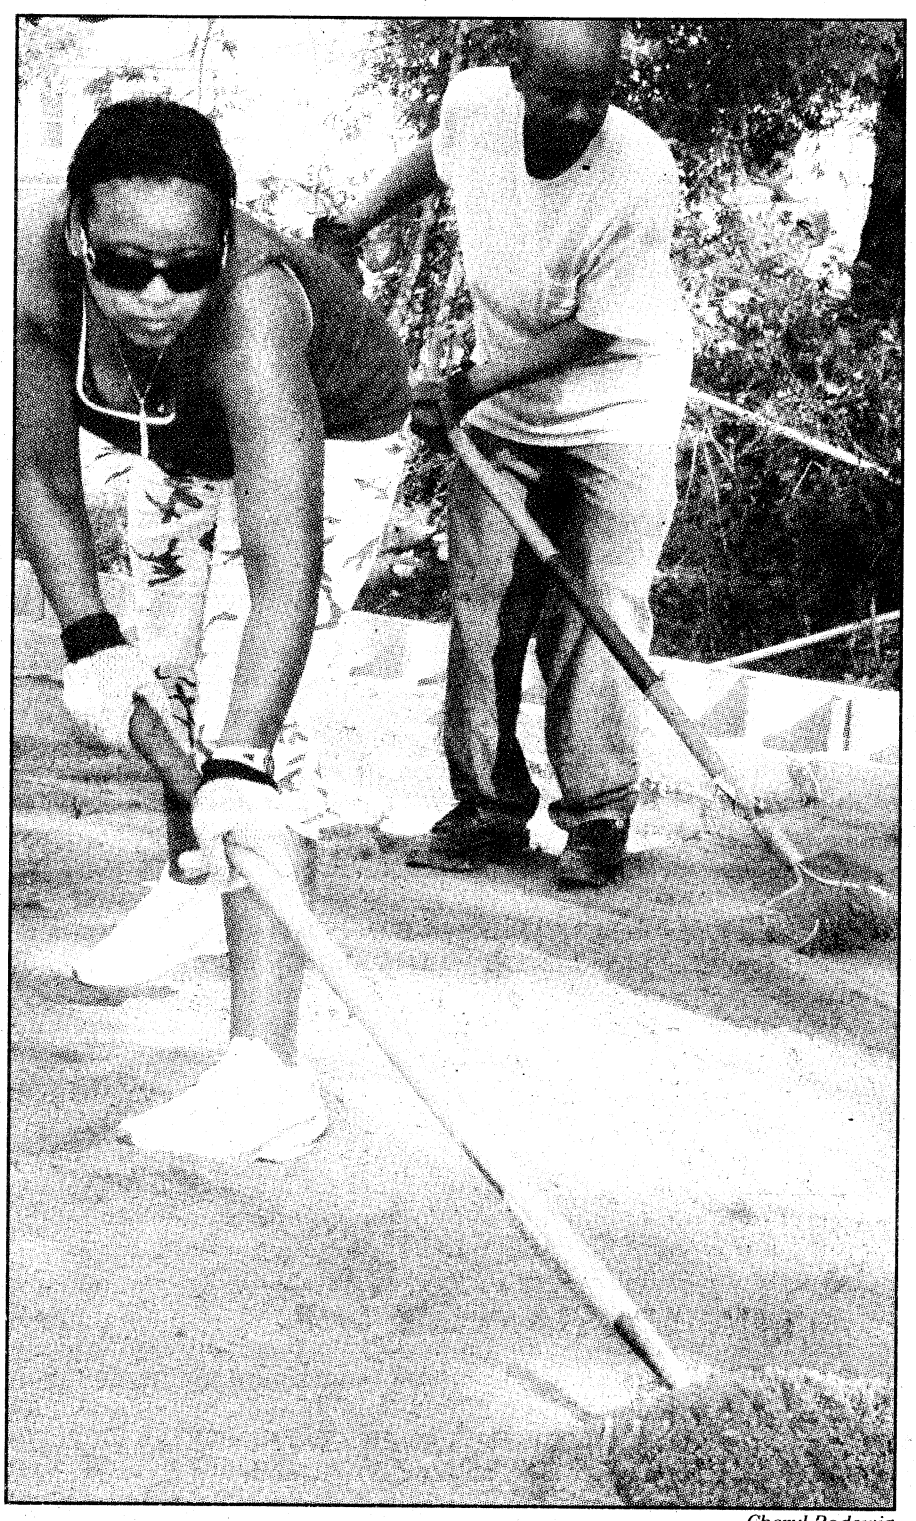
Soldiers hear 'shock jocks' of drunken driving

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The show's hosts are billed as the "shock jocks" of alcohol awareness and anti-drunken driving, according to the group's Web site at www.savealifetour.com.

The National Save A Life Tour made a stop at Fort Benning Aug. 17-21, delivering a message to Soldiers that featured a graphic video presentation depicting scenes of road carnage with personal stories of loss related to driving under the influence. Spectators also got to experience a drinking and driving simulator, while an open casket reserved for the next drunken-driving victim was among the displays.



Brian Beldyga, the tour's senior manager and lead presenter, brings a brash style to the show but said his intent is clear.

"Don't be an idiot. Take the keys," he said. "If you use emotion, it's a proven fact the mind will retain the information longer, as harsh as it is."

Beldyga founded the National Save A Life Tour nine years ago. Based in Grand Rapids, Mich., the organization gives presentations at high schools, colleges, universities and military installations nationwide.

The group had never been to Fort Benning before. Event organizers said they hoped the tour's message would reach up to 2,000 Soldiers throughout the week.

Veronica Brown, wife of CPT James Brown, and SSG Kevin Fulgham, B Company, CONUS Replacement Center, rake crushed rock for the foundation of a new house Tuesday on Brooks Road in South Columbus. The volunteers, who include family, DoD civilians and Soldiers connected with the CRC, worked on two Habitat for Humanity houses that will go to families who could not otherwise afford to own their own home.

"As family members, we do what we can to support our Soldiers, and when they're doing something like this, we want to stand beside them."

CRC volunteers build new habitats

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

Work started at ground level Tuesday on the Habitat for Humanity site near Benning Drive in South Columbus. Several Soldiers and civilians with the CONUS Replacement Center laid the foundation for a new home that will be sold at cost, with interest-free loans, to a family in need.

The project is the CRC's second time collaborating with Habitat for Humanity, said battalion commander LTC Twanda Young, who aims to involve the battalion in at least one volunteer project a month.

"It breeds good camaraderie, humility, and it's just a great opportunity for the command to come together and take time to give to the community," she said. "The key thing is servanthood. You can't be a good leader without having a servant's heart. And what better way to do that than to give your time, your sweat, your effort to somebody else?"

As they worked on the foundation of the home, the volunteers laid the foundation for a solid team, Young said.

"We're a team of teams, and no one can do a mission without the buddy on the right and the buddy on the left," she said. "Out here, we have people shoveling, we have some raking, we have some picking up trash. Everybody has to play a role well in order for the mission to get completed — no different than being in a war zone. We're out here doing it side by side. I think that within itself is a cornerstone of leadership."

The CRC began its volunteer work with Habitat for Humanity in July. CPT Jeremy Griggs chose to partner with the nonprofit agency because of its direct influence on the local community.

"(Volunteers) can see the fruit of their work. It gives them a sense of fulfillment," said Griggs, formerly attached to the CRC and now part of

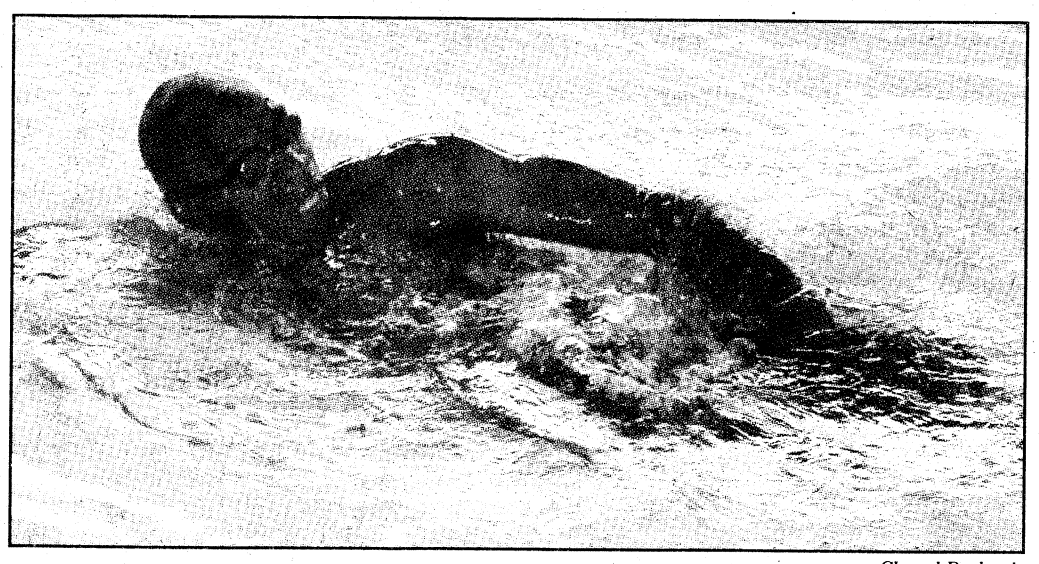
Soldier conquers fear of water with swim lessons

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET



Less than a year ago, 2LT Robert Welch felt unsafe entering water more than six feet deep. Now, he can swim comfortably and with confidence, thanks to swimming lessons at the Briant Wells pool, part of Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Aquatics.

After arriving on post last year to earn his commission through the Infantry Basic Officer Leadership Course, Welch heard about free adult swimming lessons held Tuesdays and Thursdays at Briant Wells.

"It's a skill I needed — and you can't beat free," said Welch, who attended the biweekly lessons, as his training schedule allowed, since September.

"I basically knew just one stroke and was pretty weak at it, and I didn't really have the confidence to get in the water by myself, so that's where I started out," he said. "Now, I'm proficient on one stroke and I'm OK with two other strokes. I went from not going in the deep end to being able to swim or even dive into the deep end by myself."

Welch started the lessons to prepare for the combat water survival assessment, a requirement for students on the first day of Ranger School, Welch's next assignment. The assessment includes a rope drop from 30 feet into Victory Pond and a 15-meter swim.

Cheryl Rodewig

2LT Robert Welch, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, swims the length of the Briant Wells pool Aug. 20.

"You just have to know how to swim. You never know when you're going to need that skill," Welch said. "You might be thrown into a situation where you're in a river crossing, and the last thing you want to do as a leader is not be able to help someone or even help yourself if something goes awry."

DFMWR Aquatics revitalized the swim lessons recently, focusing on keeping them on a regular schedule, after several Soldiers showed an interest, said Ken Wetherill, sports, fitness and aquatics director.

"It was a Soldier who came to one of the lifeguards and said, 'I have to pass CWSA, and my training is next week, and I cannot swim my way out of a plastic bag,'" said Katelyn McConnell, water safety instructor and pool operator. "More and more Soldiers kept coming up to lifeguards and saying, 'Hey, I've got training next week.' 'I have to go to Ranger School.' 'What's the best stroke to use?' Lifeguards were getting bombarded with questions."

Take action against flu through preventive techniques

WEST CENTRAL HEALTH DISTRICT

A new school year has started and local health departments are receiving reports of students and members of the community with influenza-like illnesses.

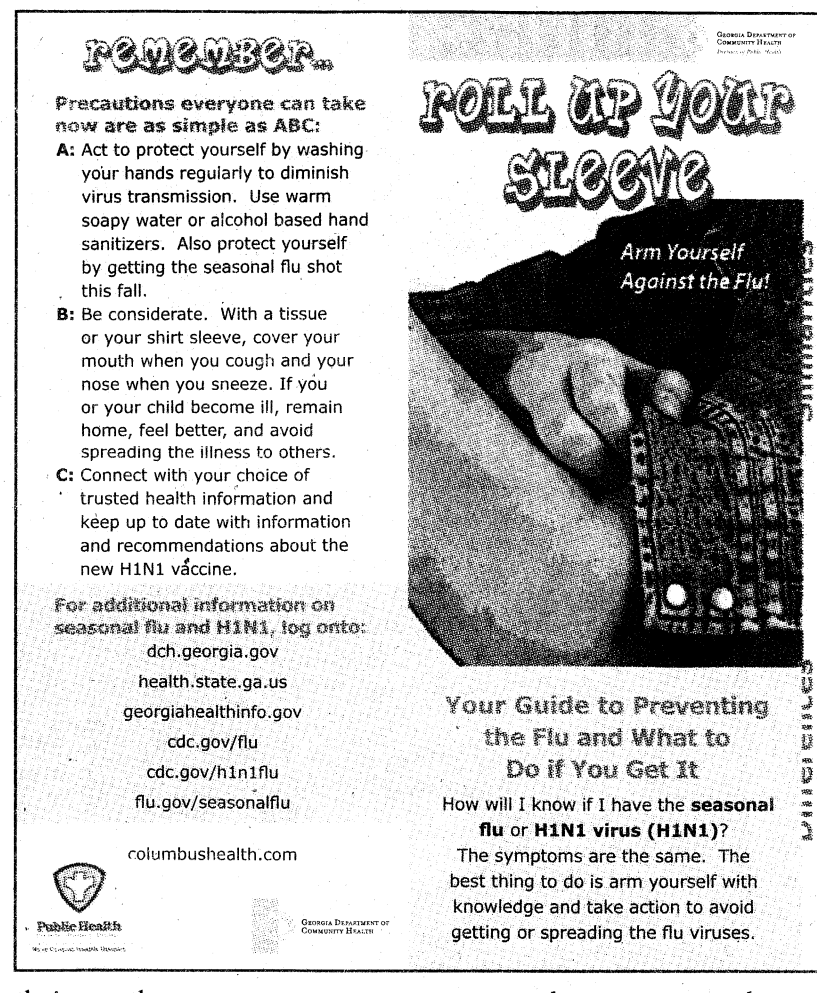
There have been phone calls from citizens who are concerned their friends and family may be infected with the H1N1 virus. While many health care providers have the capability of conducting rapid flu screening tests in their offices, these rapid tests do not differentiate between regular seasonal influenza A and the H1N1.

Currently, the Centers for Disease Control recommends that this testing be done only for hospitalized patients.

Therefore, there have only been a small number of confirmed cases of H1N1 in our district. However, during the past few weeks, approximately 98 percent of all specimens sent to reference labs for confirmatory testing have tested positive for H1N1. Therefore, it is highly likely that there are many cases of H1N1 in the community, and most people who develop the flu during the next few weeks will likely have H1N1.

Most people who have become ill with the H1N1 have recovered without requiring medical treatment. Spread of H1N1 virus is thought to occur in the same way that seasonal flu spreads.

Flu viruses are spread from person to person through coughing or sneezing by people with influenza. Sometimes people may become infected by touching something — such as a surface or object — with flu viruses on it and then touching their mouth or nose.



The symptoms of H1N1 flu virus in people are similar to the symptoms of seasonal flu and include fever, cough, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose, body aches, headache, chills, fatigue and some have reported diarrhea and vomiting.

Dr. Zolt Koppanyi, director of the West Central Health District, said the CDC is not recommending any school closures unless there are enough students or teachers absent to make holding classes impractical.

Public health officials said people in high-risk groups should consider taking both the seasonal influenza vaccine and the H1N1 vaccine when they become available. The seasonal vaccine should be available through local health departments in early September and the H1N1 by mid-October. The regular flu shot does not provide protection against H1N1, and vice versa, health officials said.

"We continue to monitor both the spread of the virus and how severe the illness is," Koppanyi said. "Meanwhile, it is important to practice prevention measures and to be aware of how to care for loved ones who may become ill."

Vet: 'Here till this whole thing's over'

Greene was drafted in 1951 and got pulled into the Ranger Corps while serving in Korea. After the war, he took a two-year hiatus but returned to active duty in 1956. He completed three tours in Vietnam with the U.S. Army Special Forces.

Among 38 total decorations, Greene earned two Silver Stars, four Bronze Stars with "V" device for valor and the Army Commendation Medal with "V" device on four occasions.

After retiring from the Army in 1979, he spent another 19 years in the civilian work force. Greene now lives in Phenix City, where he is the mayor's military liaison to Fort Benning.

Greene, who was the 3rd Brigade's command sergeant major when it was still in Germany, started volunteering at unit activities after the brigade moved to Kelley Hill. In 2004, he became an honorary sergeant major with the brigade's 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

In early 2007, Greene said CRC commanders asked him to review the deployment processes and arrangements at Harmony Church and Freedom Hall.

Among improvements at Harmony Church, he arranged for an upgrade to the unit's dining facility and played a role in setting up the Religious Learning Center. At Freedom Hall, he suggested replacing meals-ready-to-eat with a contracted hot-food line and was instrumental in getting the USO involved during deployments.

A week after his first visit to the terminal, Greene was named a CRC honorary command sergeant major.

He said he doesn't differentiate between military member and civilian or contractor.

"Our progress would not be as far along without the DoD contractors," he said, "because they are taking positions that would have to be filled by active-duty Soldiers ... We're a nation at war. Everybody has got to be brought together."

Greene said he lost track of how many service members, civilians and contractors he's encountered at Freedom Hall in the past 32 months.

"I shook so many hands now that people will say, 'You told us you'd be here when we got back,'" he said. "I'll be here till this whole thing's all over. Hopefully, it's over soon, but we want to win it, too."

Habitat: Creates homeowners

Cheryl Rodewig

CPT Jeremy Griggs, Warrior Transition Battalion, flattens the foundation of a home on a Habitat for Humanity construction site. Earlier this year, Griggs spearheaded the CRC's effort to partner with Habitat for Humanity because of the charity's positive effect on the local community and its flexible volunteering schedule.

the Warrior Transition Battalion.

"It's fun once you get out there," he said. "You feel good about doing something for someone else. If you look, everybody has smiles on their faces."

Veronica Brown, who worked alongside her husband, CPT James Brown, said she had fun building the house.

"As family members, we do what we can to support our Soldiers, and when they're doing something like this, we want to stand beside them," she said. "I think this is an awesome program. It is a lot of hard work, but I'm actually enjoying myself. When you're doing it for other people who you know really need it — I don't mind doing it at all."

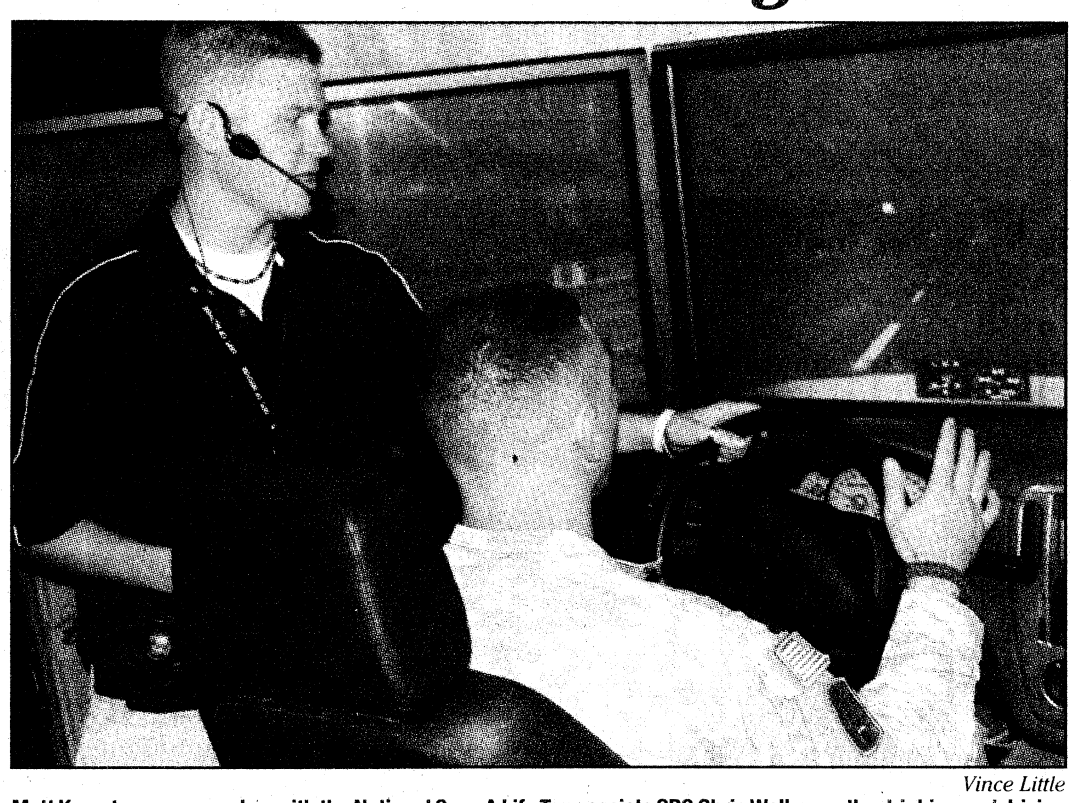
CRC cadre also worked next to people who would eventually own a Habitat home.

Anyone who wants to purchase a house through the program must put in 500 hours of "sweat equity," said SGM(R) Regino Diaz, site manager for the construction.

The goal of Habitat for Humanity, Diaz said, is to help people who couldn't otherwise afford a home and to revitalize neighborhoods, making them safer and productive parts of the community.

Diaz started volunteering as a Soldier at Fort Benning, working with all stages of the building process, including the final moment when volunteers hand new homeowners the keys to their house.

"That's one thing I enjoy when people move into the houses, how happy they are. It's a big step," he said. "That's everybody's dream: to have a home."



Diaz said Habitat needs volunteers Tuesdays through Saturdays year-round. It can be a group or an individual working for a week or an hour.

"One hour — half an hour — makes a difference," he said. "(You) don't have to have a skill; age is not a problem; handicap is not a problem."

Diaz said it would take him and his coworker two days to do what the CRC volunteers finished in two hours.

Tour: Warns of dangers linked to drunken driving

Vince Little

Matt Kwant, a crew member with the National Save A Life Tour, assists SPC Chris Walker on the drinking and driving simulator Aug. 18 at Freedom Hall. The simulator works like a real car and has a 180-degree field of vision.

> "People driving home from the bar drunk is a sad reality. I can't turn that switch on in their heads ... (but) I push it in a certain way. I want them all not to be idiots."
> — Brian Beldyga

"Any opportunity Soldiers receive to gain knowledge on the adverse effects of drinking and driving can help save lives," said Oskar Schlömer, prevention coordinator for Fort Benning's Army Substance Abuse Program. "Soldiers are our most valuable commodity. We're just taking care of each other and taking care of our Soldiers. That's what this is all about."

According to the tour's mission statement, the objective is to use every available method "to bring home the shocking reality of the life-changing and often deadly consequences of drinking and driving because adults and peers saying 'Don't drink and drive!' has lost its impact" on today's youth.

Drinking and driving incidents in the United States have not declined in four decades, Beldyga told the audience. The U.S. ranks No. 37 globally in alcohol consumption but is third in drunken-driving episodes.

Beldyga said 40 percent of licensed drivers in America drive drunk on a regular basis. It's estimated that one person is killed every 32 minutes in an impaired-driving crash, he said, and there have been 2 million homicide investigations linked to drunken driving in the U.S. since 1970.

While in college, Beldyga said, he lost his fiancee to a drunken driver.

"People driving home from the bar drunk is a sad reality," he said. "I can't turn that switch on in their heads. Everyone has free will ... (but) I push it in a certain way. I want them all not to be idiots. But I'm also a realist."

The $2.5 million simulator works like a real car — with a 180-degree field of vision — and gives participants a unique perspective on the effects of driving while intoxicated, he said.

"It was different," said SPC Andrea McCalpine of Flight Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "I can't compare it to anything I've done. I've never drank and drove before. If that's how it is, I definitely won't do it."

She said she liked the videos because they showed real people, not actors.

"I know people who drink and drive, and it freaks me out," McCalpine said. "Just to know you might lose someone, it scares me ... I've had to take keys away before. This makes me more inclined to stop someone."

SPC Chris Walker of B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, called the presentation a "reality check" and said he never saw an alcohol awareness program like this.

"The videos were a nice touch. They were better than 'death by PowerPoint,'" Walker said. "(Beldyga) jumped out and grabbed my attention pretty quickly, and held my attention."

Beldyga said it's simply "behavior modification 101."

"We attempt to show people the realities of drinking and driving, and give them answers to the puzzles, so they can't make any excuses for doing it," he said.

Aquatics: To form swim club, competitive team

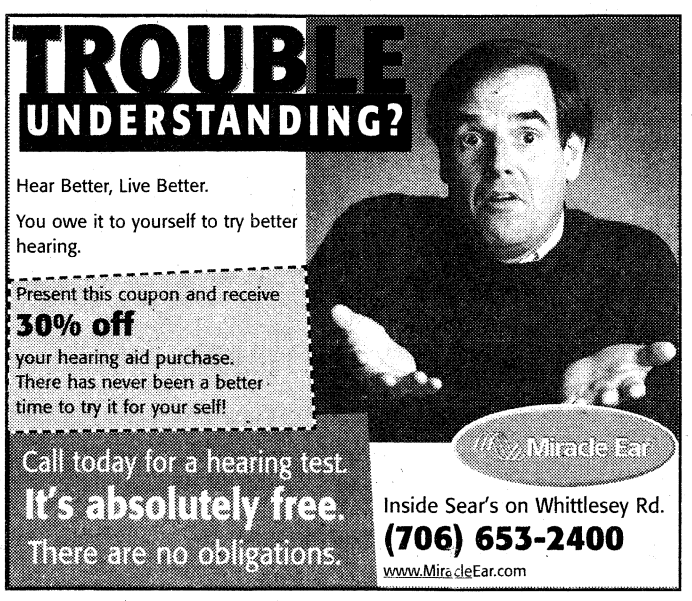
That's when DFMWR decided to make free adult swim lessons available to military ID cardholders. Since July, classes have become regular, with forty-five minute lessons led by Red Cross certified lifeguards at 5 p.m., 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday.

With dedication and regular attendance, swimmers may see exponential improvements, said McConnell, who worked with Welch for about six months.

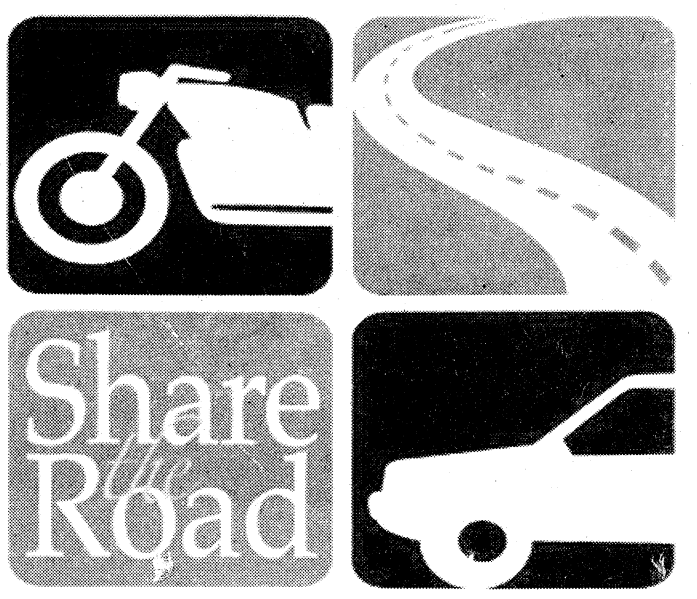
"When I first started teaching him, he was terrified of the water," McConnell said, "and now, he's comfortable swimming."

Welch isn't alone, McConnell said. Many adults either don't know how to swim or aren't comfortable in deep water.

"I've worked with a lot of people who are embarrassed about being scared of the water. Some of them don't want to risk taking their kids because they don't feel like their swimming skills are good enough to make a save if they have to," she said.



"I think their embarrassment comes from letting their fear grow for too long. There's nothing to be worried about. Our lifeguards will always be able to make a rescue or an assist if there is one needed."



The instructors can work with all levels of swimmers, McConnell said, whether that's teaching them how to stay afloat or how to execute a backstroke or high dive.

A competitive swimmer, McConnell plans to start an adult swim club by the end of the year. She hopes the club will form a foundation for an eventual postwide swim team, she said.

For more information about the club or the free swim lessons, e-mail katelyn.mcconnell@us.army.mil.

Commissaries help customers prepare for any disaster

DECA

FORT LEE, Va. — The appearance of Bill, the first hurricane of the Atlantic season, serves as a reminder that the Defense Commissary Agency can help customers prepare for any natural or man-made disaster.

DeCA Director and CEO Philip E. Sakowitz Jr. urges customers to check their medicine and kitchen cabinets, garages and wherever else they may keep their "survival kits," and use their commissary benefits to purchase items that are missing at savings of 30 percent or more.

"Hurricane Katrina was a tragic example of why it's important for us to heighten preparedness awareness and provide customers with items that will sustain them during a crisis," Sakowitz said. "Our 'What's in Your Closet' disaster preparedness campaign is just one of the many ways in which we help our customers stay prepared without busting their budgets."

In September, customers can stock up their pantries and prepare for the unexpected at DeCA's worldwide case lot sales.

Customers can save up to 50 percent or more on products bought in bulk. These items range from canned goods, toilet paper, paper towels, pet supplies, cleaning and laundry products and more.

DeCA recommends customers have the following items in their emergency "closet:"

- Water - at least one gallon, daily, per person for three to seven days.

Students planning on taking ACT should register by Sept. 18

ACT

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Registration is now open for the Oct. 24 ACT achievement test. Students who wish to take the college admission and placement exam must register before Sept. 18.

The ACT is a curriculum-based achievement exam with four sections — English, mathematics, reading and science — and takes about three hours to complete. Students who take the ACT Plus Writing complete an optional writing test that requires an additional 30 minutes.

Unlike other exams, students are not penalized for guessing or answering all the questions on each test section. In fact, it is beneficial for test takers to answer all questions within the time allowed.

During registration, students may select up to four universities to receive their score reports. ACT scores are accepted by all four-year colleges and universities across the United States.

ACT reports scores only when requested to do so by the student. Additional score reports are available for a fee.

All students complete a detailed inventory of questions during ACT registration. Each test taker receives an ACT score report that includes a wide variety of information to assist with high school course selection, college readiness, career planning, and college admissions.

The cost for the ACT test without writing is $32. When combined with the optional ACT Writing Test, the total cost is $47. Students who qualify may apply for a fee waiver through their high school counselor.

The ACT Web site, www.actstudent.org, has helpful information, free sample items, and options to order inexpensive test prep materials to help test takers get ready for the exam.

However, the best preparation for the ACT is to take rigorous core courses in school, study hard, and learn the academic skills needed in college.

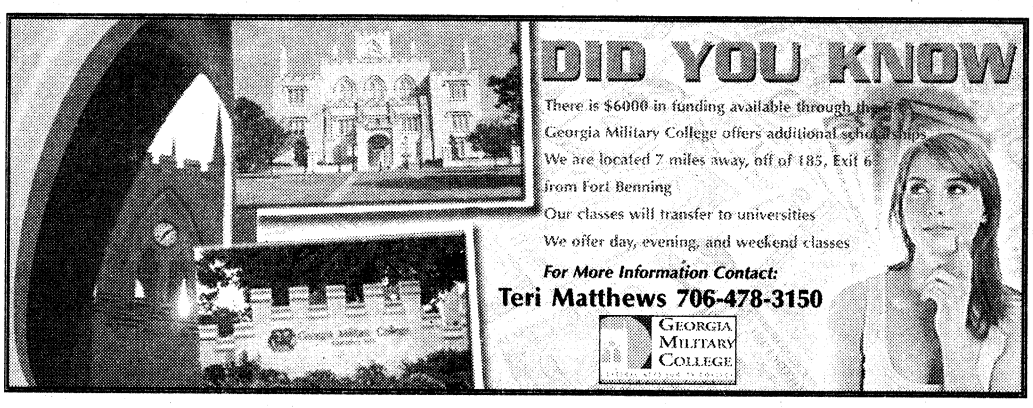
Most students register online at www.actstudent.org. Students may also pick up registration forms from their high school counseling offices; these forms must be postmarked by Sept. 18. Late registration is available from Sept. 19 through Oct. 2 for an extra $21.

Irregular bleeding can signify cancer, pregnancy, blood disorders

Dr. Gerald F. Joseph Jr.
THE AMERICAN COLLEGE OF OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS

The average menstrual period lasts between three and seven days with about 21 to 35 days in between each menstrual cycle. However, some women experience bleeding more often than every 21 days, extremely heavy bleeding, a menstrual period that lasts seven days or longer, or a combination of these problems. In fact, bleeding that is not part of a normal period is the reason for more than 1.4 million ob-gyn visits each year.

It can be hard to pinpoint the source of the bleeding; the vulva, vagina, cervix, uterus, urinary tract or rectum may be involved. In adolescents, common causes of bleeding include missed ovulation, which may be related to a young, immature ovulatory system, stress, polycystic ovarian syndrome (PCOS); contraception, pregnancy or blood disorders such as von Willebrand disease.



Abnormal bleeding in older women is most often related to pregnancy, noncancerous masses such as fibroids and polyps and missed ovulation caused by PCOS, hormone therapy or problems with the lining of the uterus (endometrium). Infection or trauma, which may be a sign of rape or abuse, may also factor in to the unexplained bleeding. A physical exam and blood tests may be used to diagnose a woman's specific problem.

Cancer of the endometrium is sometimes the cause of bleeding in menopausal women and may be a factor for younger women as well, although endometrial cancer in women younger than 35 is rare. An endometrial assessment should be performed in any woman older than 35 with abnormal bleeding to rule out cancer. Some patients between 19 and 35, such as those who do not respond to medical therapy for abnormal bleeding, should also be assessed.

Hormonal medications such as birth control pills, cyclic progestin, or progestin-containing intrauterine devices can help regulate menstrual periods and are typical treatments for abnormal bleeding. Other drugs, such as ibuprofen, may be used to relieve cramps. Antibiotics may be prescribed if an infection is to blame. Women who no longer desire to have children may also consider a hysterectomy or a procedure called endometrial ablation, which may be an efficient and cost-effective alternative to hysterectomy.

Any bleeding that is not related to a menstrual period is not normal. Talk to a doctor if this happens.

Knowing how much and how often bleeding occurs, age, health status, plans for having children, and other disorders, doctors can evaluate the condition and develop a management plan to treat the underlying cause.

Families gather for the annual Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival at Callaway Gardens. This year's festival kicks off with a "balloon glow" at sunset Friday along Robin Lake Beach. About 25 balloons will be on display and giving rides at the festival. Events will continue throughout the weekend. Planned activities include rock-wall climbing, bungee jumping, paddle boating, miniature golf, kite building and a triathlon.

THE BAYONET

When the sun sets Friday, more than the moon will light up the night. The 11th annual Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival, presented by Callaway Gardens, will kick off Labor Day weekend with a "balloon glow" along Robin Lake Beach.

"It will be an 'ooh' and 'ahh' fun kind of evening," said Rachel Crumbley, public relations manager for the gardens.

Callaway Gardens, located 30 minutes north of Columbus, houses 13,000 acres including a 4,000-acre preserve, butterfly conservatory, horticultural center, inland beach, nature trails and gardens.

"I just love it," said Kaye Minchew, a repeat visitor to the annual festival. "I think it's a fun atmosphere. We've been there when the balloons take off and it's just so pretty."

The annual balloon festival is expected to draw hundreds and will have something for everyone Sept. 4-6 as guests look for a great way to end the summer.

The gates open at 5 p.m. Friday with live music from Leon Jacobs and a brass quartet to set the mood from 6 to 9:30 p.m.

The hot air balloons will be inflated at sunset, creating the glow effect spectators can expect to enjoy against the backdrop of the night sky, Crumbley said.

Children can take part in the Bubble and Kites, Oh My! family activities at Callaway Gardens.

On Saturday and Sunday, the balloons will head for the skies at sunrise and sunset for hot air balloon rides, weather permitting. Guests can purchase tickets for a balloon ride. Tethered balloon rides of 40-50 feet into the air will also be available.

Following the morning balloon launches, breakfast will be available at the Columbus Exchange Club Pancake Breakfast for $5.

For those who like to keep their feet on the ground, plenty of family-friendly activities will be available at Robin Lake Beach from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on both days. Guests can choose from rock-wall climbing, bungee jumping, sandcastle building, swimming, paddle boating, table tennis, shuffleboard, the Xcelerator water slide, miniature golf, kite building, face-painting, T-shirt tie-dyeing, disc dog demonstrations and more.

Tethered and non-tethered balloon rides will be available at the festival, weather permitting. The festival will feature two balloon launches a day, at sunrise and sunset, which are the optimal times for wind speed and direction.

The Radio Control Model Boat and Seaplane Regatta will take to both Robin and Martin lakes for the second year in a row. The daylong event begins at 9 a.m. Saturday. There will be demonstrations and competitions among the more than 150 fast-electric boats, sailboats and utility boats expected to participate. A classic car show

MOVIE REVIEW

Time Traveler's Wife misses mark

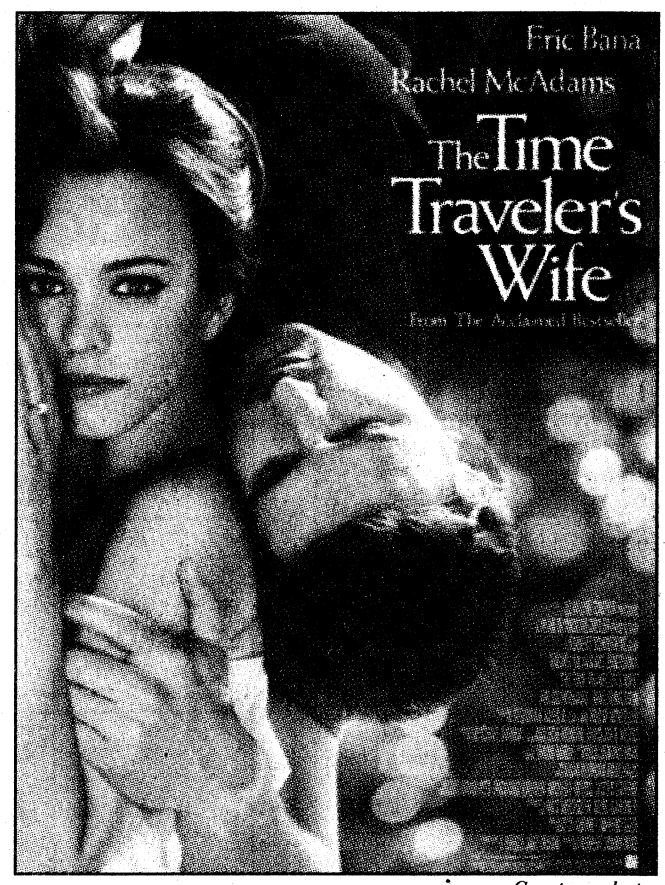
SGT Junius Stone
192ND INFANTRY BRIGADE

I'm a lifelong science fiction fan and I let my geek-freak flag fly proudly. As a history major, the concept of time travel has always grabbed me. Is there one timeline, and if time travel can happen, is fate or destiny locked in stone, or can it be rewoven and fates played with? Or do multiple time streams exist, with a timeline incorporating each possibility? Is there another you, elsewhere, going zag, where you instead zigged? What if you could observe and interact with your own past and future, what would be the result?

Good time travel stories play with such concepts. Unfortunately, this is not the case with The Time Traveler's Wife, the film based on the novel by Audrey Niffenegger.

Eric Bana plays Henry DeTamble who, because of a childhood trauma, meets a stranger who identifies himself as DeTamble. He bounces in and out of time, seemingly beyond his control. At random, Henry is displaced, chronologically and geographically.

During his adult life, many of his jaunts take him near Clare (Rachel McAdams). She experiences him popping in and out of her life and develops strong feelings toward him. He returns them, but curiously, they don't join up "in time" until he meets her as a librarian when he is in his early 30s.



So, picture this: You are a man in love with a woman. But you develop your relationship with her "out of sync" with her life or you are the woman and have known this great guy your entire life, yet he comes and goes at random, and you see him at different points in time. Real-life relationships are difficult enough. Imagine making home and hearth with the temporally displaced.

Why is this happening? What does this say about the past and future, for themselves as well as the world? I went and peeked at the novel, which is sitting in my "waiting to read stack." The novel did go into these bigger, deeper issues. So I'm watching this film and wondering, "Where are they?" A friend of mine described this film as a "pared down" version of the story. Too pared down. All the interesting questions are gone, and remaining, we have two people being inconvenienced by time travel. Time travel is too profound a concept to be trivialized.

The movie is beautifully shot, well acted, and has an ethereal soundtrack. But without the grist for the mill, not much more than a run of the mill chick flick. However, that may be your thing.

Editor's note: Stone said, "I live, eat and breath cinema." It was Stars Wars that hooked him. His top three favorite movies are: Blade Runner, Free Enterprise and Rushmore.

Stone first joined the Army in 1988. After a break in service, he rejoined in 2001 and is now a broadcast journalist.

OPENING THIS WEEK

THE FINAL DESTINATION

On what should have been a fun-filled day at the races, Nick O'Bannon has a horrific premonition in which a bizarre sequence of events causes multiple race cars to crash, sending flaming debris into the stands, brutally killing his friends and causing the upper deck of the stands to collapse on him. When he comes out of this grisly nightmare, Nick panics, persuading his girlfriend, Lori, and their friends, Janet and Hunt, to leave, escaping seconds before Nick's frightening vision becomes a terrible reality. Thinking they've cheated death, the group has a new lease on life, but unfortunately for Nick and Lori, it is only the beginning. As his premonitions continue and the crash survivors begin to die one by one — in increasingly gruesome ways — Nick must figure out how to cheat death once and for all before he, too, reaches his final destination.

REMEMBER: NO MEANS NO!

Know how to reduce the risk of becoming a sexual assault offender:

- Remember: sexual assault is a crime. You will be held responsible for your actions.
- Ensure that your partner consents to sexual activity. You must have consent from your partner before you can legally engage in sexual activity. If someone is passed out, unconscious, or asleep from alcohol, drugs, or fatigue, they are legally unable to give their consent.
- Ensure a potential partner is of legal age. Ignorance is no excuse.
- Communicate your expectations to a potential partner. Misunderstandings and lack of communication, especially between people who don't know each other very well, can lead to dangerous and career-threatening situations.
- Avoid using drugs or excessive alcohol. People under the influence of alcohol or drugs often have different memories of how an event occurs.
- Remember that NO MEANS NO even if the other person:
  - o Says yes, but changes his or her mind
  - o Has been kissing you or "making out" with you
  - o Has had sex with you before
  - o Has been drinking alcohol
  - o Wears provocative clothing.

If you're not sure how your partner feels about your actions, ask the question! Remember: No means No.

For additional information, please contact Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy and Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program Manager, at (706) 545-0892 or Michelle Fonseca, Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) at (706) 545-8740. Post becomes Maneuver Center Oct. 1

Bridgett Siter
MCOE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Fort Benning will become the Maneuver Center of Excellence effective Oct. 1, with the post commander, MG Michael Ferriter, designated commanding general of the MCOE, announced Jay Brown, Base Realignment and Closure project manager, during the monthly BRAC community update Tuesday at the National Infantry Museum. The commander of the Armor Center will retain the position of chief of Armor until the consolidation is complete.

During the update, Gary Jones, executive vice president of military affairs for the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, urged local communities to prepare for an increase in demand for housing and a population increase in schools over the next two years as the Armor School moves here from Fort Knox, Ky.

Jones, speaking to the local residents, elected officials and business leaders, said growth on the installation directly impacts local economies, and BRAC growth specifically may impact 10 counties in Georgia and Alabama if those counties plan to attract and accommodate new residents.

Jones introduced the Valley Partnership's Regional Growth Management Plan to help officials identify issues in the areas of affordable housing, education, public safety and health and social services that might inhibit their ability to leverage BRAC-related growth. Information on the management plan is available at www.thevalleypartnership.com.

The next BRAC update will start at 3 p.m. Oct. 6 at the National Infantry Museum. For more information, call 706-545-6169.

SSG Michael Chance of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, sets up his M-240 B on the new lightweight adjustable bipod during a movement exercise Aug. 26 at Buckner Range.

New bipod tested for shooting stability

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Fort Benning's Maneuver Battle Lab evaluated handling of a lightweight adjustable bipod for the M-240 B medium machine gun Aug. 24-28 to determine whether the new attachment provides an effective platform for stable fire.

Sixteen Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, fired the weapon on Malone 4 and 5, hauled it over obstacle courses at the McKenna Urban Operations Complex and participated in movement exercises at Buckner Range.

Rusty Schulten, project officer for the Maneuver Battle Lab's Soldier team, said the current M-240 B bipod does not have adjustable legs capable of leveling the weapon on uneven terrain. The lightweight adjustable bipod features legs similar to the M-240 H machine gun — with an exposable spike at the collapsed-leg position — and can be deployed using one hand, he said.

"It stows in the same position as the standard bipod and folds rearward," Schulten said.

SSG LaTrevius White said the bipod currently in use will swivel, affecting the weapon's balance. The lightweight adjustable version handles more easily, he said.

"It has potential (and) seems pretty durable," he said. "It's easy to use and looks like it can take a beating. The new bipod gives you more options as far as configuring ...The taller guys can adjust better because it adapts more to their body type."

Schulten said the Maneuver Battle Lab collected data, while Chris Carstens — a research psychologist with the Human Research and Engineering Directorate — received Soldier feedback. The M-240 B's product manager will use the assessment to confirm Soldier acceptance of the bipod design and gather information for any needed changes prior to fielding.

If shown to be effective, the lightweight adjustable bipod could be delivered to the field sometime next year, he said.

Post kicks off CFC with $1M goal

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

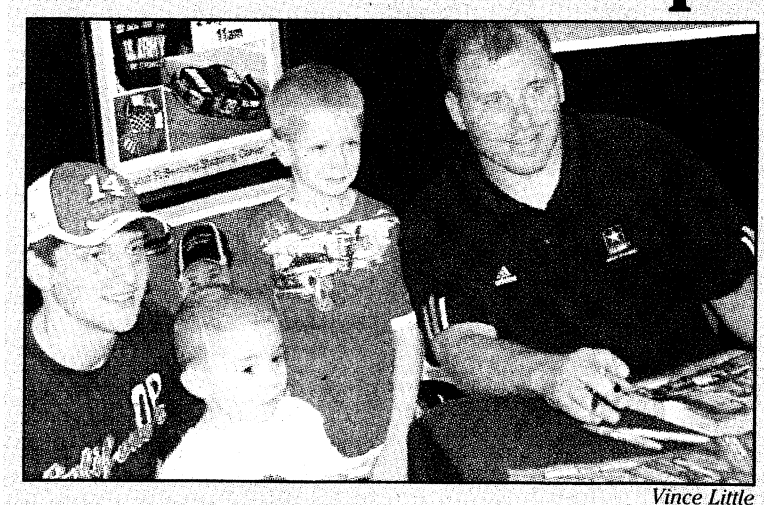
Fort Benning kicked off the 48th annual Combined Federal Campaign Wednesday at the Benning Conference Center.

Created in 1964, the CFC provides a venue for nonprofit organizations to approach federal employees to ask for charitable contributions.

"CFC is a very proud tradition here," said COL Charles Durr, post chief of staff. "For nearly five decades, we've come together to offer our generosity and support ... to support the agencies that support our Soldiers and the community at large."

The goal for the Columbus/Fort Benning Regional CFC this year is to raise $1 million, post commanding general MG Michael Ferriter said in a video message during the kickoff.

"The Combined Federal Campaign gives all of us an opportunity to help improve the quality of life for someone in need," Ferriter said. "Now, a million dollars is a lot of money, but with you and me and all of us working together I know we can reach it."



Soldiers and DA Civilians can contribute to a variety of charities by designating a specific CFC code. They have the option to donate in one lump sum or with biweekly

Newman makes pit stop at Fort Benning

NASCAR veteran Ryan Newman, preparing for this weekend's Pep Boys Auto 400 at Atlanta Motor Speedway, stopped off at Fort Benning Wednesday for a round of appearances.

The driver of the No. 39 U.S. Army Chevrolet landed at Lawson Army Airfield and rode in a Stryker Infantry Carrier Vehicle to the Warrior Transition Battalion to visit wounded Soldiers.

"I wanted to hear their stories, but they were just talking about racing," Newman said. "They love NASCAR and the U.S. Army car."

For two hours around lunchtime, Newman was greeted by a long line of fans at the Post Exchange, where he signed autographs and posed for pictures with Soldiers and families.

The 31-year-old hasn't won this season but ranks seventh in the Sprint Cup standings heading into Sunday night's race in Atlanta. He's closing in on a spot in the Chase, which gets under way Sept. 20 at New Hampshire.

Newman debuted on NASCAR's premier series in 2000 and has 14 career victories, including last year's Daytona 500.

VARIOUS VOICES

What is the most interesting job you have ever had?

I took apart a brick wall off the side of a house, brick by brick, because there were cracks in it. I cleaned all the mortar off of it, and then I relaid the brick wall. It was a summer job. I worked for a construction company. For that job, they paid me 25 cents a brick. It took me a week and a half to do.

— 2LT Patrick Jones
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

I have six brothers and six sisters. During my childhood, we dug the worms up to sell to people to fish with, and one of the odd things is you could find a lot of them under cow patties. I did that from when I was 7 years old probably up until my teen years. I think a can was a dollar and there were probably 20 worms in a can. We did a lot of stuff for money: blackberry picking, picking up bottles off the side of the road. We were poor when we were growing up.

Before I joined the Army, I made the anglehead flashlights for the Army. It was all right. It was my first job. I was 16. Basically, what I did was quality control for the reflector that went inside the flashlight. I can actually still remember the nomenclature of the reflector. It's the same one today as it was 15 years ago.

— SSG Kevin Duquette
Warrior Transition Battalion

When I was in high school, I worked after school, and I had a job changing light bulbs. It was in a research facility. They had an entire maintenance shop — a carpenter, an electrician, a plumber ... and me, the bulb changer. It was very easy. Actually, it paid pretty well, too.

— SFC(R) Ronald Evans
Columbus

The most interesting job I've had was being a youth football coach. I did it for just a short time during the summer when I was injured. I hurt my knee. I just thought it was interesting, because I got to help out young kids. I'd love to be a coach one day if the opportunity presented itself.

— 2LT Michael Fleming
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

I think being a mom is a fascinating and rewarding job. It's interesting. Every day is a new adventure in the lives of children. It's full of surprises.

Jean Dubiel
ARNEWS

All I wanted to do was mow my lawn. It was a warm Sunday morning, my beloved boyfriend had just placed a spanking new drive belt on my Craftsman rider, and I was just about to climb aboard when I noticed a little bug on my arm.

I mindlessly brushed at it, but it did not move.

I looked closer and discovered it was a tick. He hadn't been there long because he wasn't engorged yet, but he had been there long enough to bury his head, so I had to really tug to get him off.

I say "he" because, as I discovered later, it was male. I have seen ticks before, but this one was kind of pretty. He had bright red legs and mandibles and white striations down his back. I let him crawl around on my fingers as I inspected him, them flicked him back into the wind. I considered keeping him in case I ended up with Lyme disease, but the chances of that are quite small, right?

About a week later, I noticed a raised blister at the bite site. I tried to "pop" it, but nothing much came out.

The next day, I had a slight fever, and my blister looked a little yellow, so I slathered some good old anti-bacterial cream on it. The day after that, I had a higher fever.

By Friday, I was achy in my bones and very feverish. I thought I was getting "the crud" that had been going around the office.

Saturday morning I awoke to find more tiny blisters on several parts of my body, and the bite site was raised with a large red circle around it, a definite infection. My fever was fluctuating from 100 to 102.9, and no amount of Tylenol was reducing the fever, so I decided I should go to the emergency room.

While I was waiting for my dearest to get dressed, I finally decided to look up ticks on the Internet, just in case it was a Lyme disease carrier. It turns out Lyme disease is carried by brown-legged ticks, like the deer tick and American dog tick. My tick had red legs. Then I found two photos of a species called the Gulf Coast tick — a male and female. The male has the white striations on the back, just like mine had.

I was relieved to discover this species does not carry the bacteria that cause Lyme disease. It does, however, carry different bacteria. This little guy is notorious for spreading something called Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever.

I think I'd have preferred the Lyme disease.

Don't let the "Rocky Mountain" name fool you; it's only called that because that's where it was first discovered. The emergency room fixed me up with a tetanus shot and, because I am allergic to penicillin, a sulfa-based oral antibiotic and antibiotic cream for the wound.

I followed up with my family physician and explained my situation. He gave me another antibiotic and sent me for blood tests. I began to feel better after using the second antibiotic, a great little drug called rifampin, which is also used to treat tuberculosis and meningitis.

On my follow up, the doc said the blood tests were negative for the spotted fever. But, he said there was a chance the antibiotics they gave me at the ER had begun to break it down before I could get my blood tested. Nonetheless, my doc treated me for spotted fever with the rifampin, and my symptoms went away.

Like a good little patient, I took all 15 days of my antibiotics. On day 15 I consumed the last pill, and thought I could at last mow the grass in peace.

After about two hours mowing, I came in to shower off. I was itchy, and thought it was from all the dust and clippings. No such luck. I had hives.

The hives were on me Saturday, Sunday and Monday, which was when I revisited the good doctor. Apparently, I had developed an allergy to the antibiotic and needed a steroid shot and antihistamines to get relief from the itch.

I got home from getting my shot, took a nap, and awoke to find hives on my lips and eyes, not to mention all the other strange places I found them. Miserable, I called the doctor's office to ask how long it would take the shot to take effect. Her reply: 24 hours. What? Another whole day of this infernal itching?

These three weeks of physical ailment gave me time to evaluate the actions, or lack thereof, that brought me all this misery. I should have:

- Worn long sleeves and pants and bug spray to mow the lawn,
- Kept the tick in a small container with a damp paper towel to prevent dehydration of the specimen, that way it would have been tested instead of me,
- Left the 'blister' alone and seen the doctor after the first night of unbreakable fever, and
- Visited the ER for the steroid shot Saturday instead of waiting for Monday morning to see my regular doctor (I thought I'd save a few bucks that way, but I paid for it with four days of scratching).

Now I am recovered (I think) from the trauma, but I felt it was important to warn others that big surprises can come in small, pretty packages. And by the way, darling, if you're reading this, would you mind mowing the lawn for the rest of the year?

Wife's concern saves life

Mark Allen
ARNEWS

Walking with my surgeon from the exam room to his office to schedule my impending surgery, I told him it was my wife's concern about an unsightly mole on my back that sent me to a dermatologist.

The surgeon, Dr. Robert Stone Baxt, wheeled around and said, "Your wife saved your life."

Here's the skinny on skin — function, form, beauty, it does it all. Skin is the body's largest organ. This waterproof barrier breathes, sweats, cools, provides sensation, absorbs vitamins, and is a thing of beauty even though it is often vilified for not being deeper.

But, I never knew that.

As children, my brother and I lived the lives of modern-day Tom Sawyers in the Missouri Ozarks. Typically, we wore a pair of jeans everyday — no shoes, no shirt. Little did we know that our skin's number one enemy — that jolly old Sun — was planting the seeds of destruction that would erupt under my skin with deadly promise.

I visited a dermatologist every year. After he retired, I was examined by the doctor, who took over his practice, and he did not share the concern my wife continued to voice.

Finally, I got a referral from my internist for his dermatologist and made an unscheduled visit the next morning. I ambushed Dr. Charles Samorodin outside of his locked office.

Immediately, he said he did not like the looks of my odious mole, and he was going to take a biopsy. "You should thank your wife," he said as he excised a piece of my back, "for getting you here when she did."

Subsequently, Dr. Samorodin got the dermatopathologist's report and asked me to come and see him.

He said I had advanced dysplasia, a pre-cancerous condition, and I would have to have surgery to ensure removal of all the tissue that could turn malignant. He recommended a surgeon, and I agreed.

Dr. Samorodin is a true patriot. Following medical school, he volunteered for the Army and Vietnam. He served a tour in South Vietnam from 70-71 with the 199th Light Infantry Brigade, and later, in Long Binh. He was awarded the Bronze Star for a medical program he initiated that impressed the brass in Saigon.

After leaving active service, he stayed in the Army Reserve providing much-needed medical services to our Soldiers for a total of 20 years.

My surgeon also turned out to be a Vietnam veteran. He served as a U.S. Navy flight surgeon working helicopter medical evacuations.

I honor these two patriots for their military service and for their skills of diagnosis and surgery that will truly save my life, but also and especially a wife who looked at my beautiful skin and saw something ugly.

14th CSH Soldiers remember 'mentor, friend'

Soldier dies in Kuwait from medical condition

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

SPC Richard Allyn Walters made a lasting impression on the troops of 14th Combat Support Hospital, who gathered Friday at Sightseeing Chapel to pay final respects to a man they called a father figure, mentor and friend.

"I will never forget my fellow brother-in-arms nor what his life has meant to me in the short time I've known him," said SPC Milton Warner, who spoke at Walters' memorial service.

Walters, 41, from Cleveland, died Aug. 10 at Ali Al Salem, Kuwait, of a medical condition shortly after arriving in country.

Warner and Walters met last year while both worked as licensed practical nurses at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. Both were former Marines who returned to military duty with the Army after a 15-year break in service.

"Allyn was very compassionate and caring with patients, and always went out of his way to help families," said Warner, who is assigned to the unit's rear detachment. "He cared about everybody and never met a stranger. He was a good friend and I was trying to be like him in my profession."

Walters and Warner joined the 14th CSH in May. Shortly before the unit deployed, Walters received word that his father was terminally ill. Walters' father passed away in July and he was prepared to join his unit downrange in August.

From day one, Walters proved to be a dedicated Soldier and "left a lasting impression on me," said LTC Robert Mon, the 14th CSH rear detachment commander.

Mon recalled a task-force run the day before Walters deployed. Walters helped stragglers by driving a duty vehicle behind the running formation.

"I was speaking with a Soldier after the run and Specialist Walters got out of the duty vehicle and approached me. I knew he was deploying the next day and I said 'What are you doing here? Aren't you flying tomorrow?' Walters responded, 'Yes, sir, I'm just trying to help out,'" Mon said. "'Just trying to help out' left a marked impression on me for a Soldier who just lost his father, was leaving his family and friends for a year and (in one more day) flying into harm's way."

Walters was known for his good heart and ability to turn bad situations into positive ones, said SGT David Digiandomenico, a medic with the 14th CSH.

"The last time I saw him, I dropped him off at the airport to go to Kuwait," Digiandomenico said. "I joked around with him and said 'Hey, try to get me to Iraq, I want to get out of "Rear D", don't forget me Walters.' He said to me 'No, sergeant, I got you, don't worry about it.'

Soldiers with the 14th Combat Support Hospital remember SPC Richard Allyn Walters, who died in Kuwait Aug. 10 from a medical condition.

"It was a shock to me when he passed away," Digiandomenico said. "It's kind of hard to swallow."

In a letter read at the memorial service, CPT Felicia Thomas, Walters' company commander, said, "Walters was a loyal friend, father figure and mentor. He was kind, giving, humble, funny and a darn good Soldier."

Walters is survived by his wife, Stephanie, and 11-month-old daughter, Rachel.

His awards and decorations include the Combat Action Badge, Navy Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Service Medal with Bronze Service Star, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, Southwest Asia Service Medal with Bronze Service Star, Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, Army Service Ribbon, Overseas Service Ribbon, Navy Fleet Marine Force Ribbon, Sea Service Deployment Ribbon and the Kuwait Liberation Medal.

He was promoted posthumously to the rank of sergeant.

USAMU welcomes new senior enlisted adviser

SGM Fuller retires after 21 years

Michael Molinaro
USAMU PAO

SGM Martin Barreras assumed responsibility of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit from SGM Thomas Fuller during a ceremony Friday at Pool Indoor Shooting Complex.

Barreras becomes the 23rd senior enlisted adviser at the "Home of Champions." He arrives from the 75th Ranger Regiment, where he served for more than 20 years. He served with distinction in all three Ranger battalions as well as the regimental headquarters.

"Sergeant Major Barreras arrives to the USAMU with a tremendous reputation — one of inspiring leadership, extreme competence, and extraordinary professionalism," said LTC Daniel Hodne, USAMU commander. "I eagerly anticipate continuing the forward momentum and building upon the tremendous achievements and initiatives of this unit with the benefit of the counsel and leadership of Sergeant Major Barreras."

Fuller is retiring after 21 years in the Army. Under Fuller's mentorship, two of the unit's Soldiers earned Olympic Gold medals in 2008.

"In this year, the 'Year of the NCO,' it is entirely fitting that we honor such an outstanding NCO for his years of service in the defense of our nation," Hodne said. "I feel extremely fortunate that I had the opportunity to serve alongside a noncommissioned officer of such caliber."

Fuller put an emphasis on training that contributed to measured progress on the USAMU's marksmanship training programs, Hodne said. He also developed a concept to field a paralympic shooting team at the USAMU for wounded warriors, as well as institute a program for all command sergeants major that provides a venue to share marksmanship training techniques for dissemination throughout the Army.

"The last two years (at the USAMU) has been an indescribable honor," Fuller said. "True human greatness is achieved when you are part of something bigger than yourself."

SGT Christopher Granger, a signal support systems specialist with the 164th Theater Airfield Operations Group out of Fort Rucker, Ala., helps provide 360-degree security while his squad leader calls for fire. The call for fire was the final task of five, which included a casualty evacuation, a security halt, reacting to an IED and facing an ambush.

Soldiers take 'important step' with leadership

SPC Jason Kimesh provides security while the squad leader, SPC Quyen Bui, calls for fire. SSG Anthony Green, the instructor for the squad, grades the Soldiers on their performance. "You have to stay alert," said Bui, who found it challenging to keep track of so many elements at the same time. A signal support systems specialist, Bui said she was not familiar with Infantry patrol missions, but after the training, she would be better prepared for a similar mission in the future.

Warrior Leader Course certifies Soldiers as sergeants

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

One hundred and fifty-nine Soldiers in the Warrior Leader Course are learning what it means to be an NCO.

The Warrior Leader Course basically certifies them as sergeants, said SFC Murphy Serignet, NCOIC for the field exercise portion of the 15-day course, conducted by the Noncommissioned Officer Academy.

"It's to make them understand … (they) need to step up to the next level — to go ahead and lead troops, care for the welfare of their Soldiers and be more responsible," Serignet said.

Making the leap from specialist to sergeant is about leadership and responsibility, said SPC Nathan Smith, who graduated from the course Thursday.

"It's a very big step," he said. "It's an important step. It's a good feeling to know that you're leading and taking care of Soldiers."

During the course, students learn field tactics and procedures in a classroom environment before applying the information in a hands-on environment. The culminating event is a four-day mission-based exercise where Soldiers react to IEDs, face ambushes, pull security and handle casualties. Squad leaders rotate after each mission, so every Soldier has the opportunity to lead.

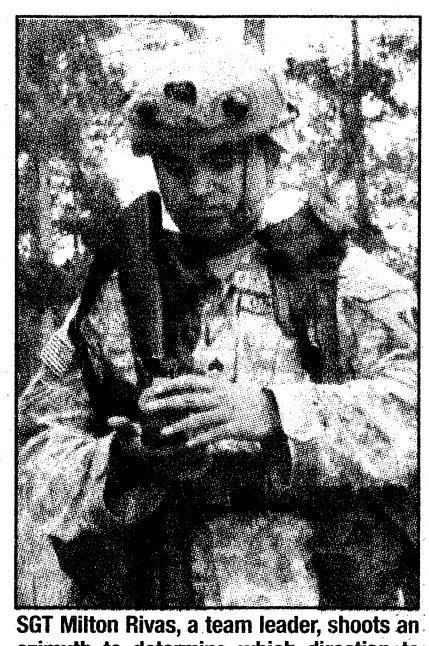
SPC Quyen Bui, who acted as the squad leader for a patrol mission Monday on Wendy Hill, said this was her first time in that type of leadership position.

"I'm not very experienced, but I will do better next time," said the signal support systems specialist. "I learned a lot, (but) I need to learn more about leadership. If you're not squared away, you're not able to be in that position to lead a Soldier."

Soldiers in the Warrior Leader Course come from a variety of MOSs, but they all conduct Infantry-type missions of clearing rooms on urban sites and leading patrols in the woodline.

SGT Sadie Tollberg works in the orderly room and has a background in chemical operations. She started the course Aug. 19, so she could graduate before deploying with the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team in October.

"I could tell you anything about paperwork and desk work and anything in my actual MOS, but I haven't done a lot of this stuff since basic, and some of it I haven't even done there," she said. "It's difficult. A lot of the responsibility falls on you. You have to be confident. The main thing is to maintain accountability and make sure everybody is doing what they're supposed to be doing. It's a lot to watch at the same time. I'm really pushing myself beyond a limit I didn't know was possible."



Tollberg said she is having a rough week, but the course has helped prepare her if she should ever be in a similar situation.

"I think there's a bigger picture here," she said. "It's not necessarily that I'm going to take my Soldiers into a woodline. It's more that you have to do something immediately … under stress, and you have to know what it's like to have everybody depend on you."

SGT Milton Rivas heads into the woods at the start of the patrol mission with squad leader SPC Quyen Bui, left, instructor SSG Anthony Green and SPC Nathan Smith behind him.

SGT Milton Rivas, a team leader, shoots an azimuth to determine which direction to continue in the woods Monday on Wendy Hill. Rivas said this type of mission was familiar since he is an Infantryman, but the course was still helpful because he learned different tips and techniques from other Soldiers. "It's a great school for everyone to learn something new," he said. Rivas will deploy with the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team this fall.

Vietnam-era panel discusses challenges of 3rd HBCT's upcoming advisory mission

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

Seven former advisers in Vietnam and one Vietnamese officer met with more than 30 officers from the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team Friday at the National Infantry Museum to discuss the challenges and lessons they learned in developing partnerships.

"We learned some hard lessons," said U.S. Navy Capt.(R) Ken Jacobsen, a Vietnam veteran and president of Counterparts, an organization that brings together advisers and advisees from the Vietnam War.

The 3rd HBCT officers will serve as advisory team chiefs and deputies during the unit's upcoming deployment, said MAJ Robert Boone, the brigade's Stability Transition Teams operations officer.

The 3rd HBCT, which is preparing for its third deployment to Iraq, is transitioning from a combat mission to an advisory mission. The brigade will be divided into 16 STTs that will fan out across southern Iraq when the unit deploys in October, said LTC James Carlisle, 3rd HBCT's civil military operations officer.

Other members of the panel, all Counterparts members, included U.S. Marine Corps Col.(R) James Coolican, CPT(R) David "Pappy" Hicks, MAJ(R) Richard Webster, Dr. James Willbanks, Michael Lund, author John Loving and Tran Ngoc Hue, a former lieutenant colonel with the 1st Army of the Republic of Vietnam.

"We are bringing in folks from the Vietnam era who did the jobs we are doing now," Carlisle said.

The wars in Vietnam and Iraq can't be compared to one another but the advisers for both wars have faced similar issues in developing partnerships and gaining the respect of their counterparts, he said.

The panel shared its experiences, took questions from the audience and offered advice in building relationships with counterparts.

"An adviser may need to be something more than an 'up the guts with lots of smoke' Soldier," said Coolican, who was an adviser to Hue and the ARVN during the 1968 Tet offensive. "My greatest weakness in Vietnam was language. I always seemed to be struggling to make a point, or to make sure that we all understood each other. In the heat of the battle that is no good.

"As part of being accepted, I found that as an adviser it was imperative that I lived, ate, traveled and shared with the Vietnamese as if I was a Vietnamese. The more time I spent with them and away from the compound, the better my relationship developed."

Jacobsen asked the future advisory team leaders to see the bigger picture from the viewpoint of the Iraqi counterpart.

"Understand the pressures of your counterpart," he said. "Understand that his family may be fighting on the other side. Recognize that his way of getting from point 'a' to point 'b' may be the best way in his culture and that your way may flatten the grass."

Hue, who commanded an Infantry battalion before being captured by the North Vietnamese and spending nearly 13 years as a prisoner of war, said the qualities he looked for in an adviser were trustworthiness and respect to his customs.

"I would love for my adviser to acknowledge that we have the same enemy, the same goal, the same benefits in winning the war we are fighting," Hue said. "And most of all, I would prefer to have a friend who is willing to help me rather than a commander who orders me to do this or that."

After Hue was captured, he said his adviser at the time, U.S. Marine Corps Lt. Col. David Wiseman, never gave up on finding him.

Kristin Molinaro

Tran Ngoc "Harry" Hue, a former Vietnamese soldier with the 1st Army of the Republic of Vietnam, and one of his former American counterparts, U.S. Marine Corps Lt. Col.(R) James Coolican, take questions from 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team officers during a panel discussion on their experiences in Vietnam working on advisory teams. The 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team is transitioning from a combat mission to an advisory mission.

Twenty years later, and seven years after Hue was freed, Hue said Wiseman located him and his family after a chance encounter with a Vietnamese man who recognized the photo of Hue that Wiseman kept on his desk in the hopes someone would come forward with answers.

"He finally found me and my family and brought us to the United States," said Hue, who linked up with Coolican, another former adviser, to help him find a job and start his new life. "He never gave up hope."

LTC Rhett Griner, an STT leader, said he hopes to forge as strong a partnership with his future counterpart as the one displayed by Hue and his former advisers.

Griner said the biggest thing he learned from the panel discussion was the importance of being loyal to his Iraqi counterparts.

"You've got to be teammates," said Griner, who will deploy to Iraq for the third time with the brigade. "I need to make sure I embrace the guy, understand what he wants to do and help him do it."

Another transition team leader, COL Paul L. English Jr., said he enjoyed getting firsthand information from advisers who've been through what the brigade faces in its new mission.

"It's confirming some of the stuff I've read," he said. "I'm talking to guys who lived the history."

In October, the brigade will head to Fort Bliss, Texas, to train with Homeland Security to prepare for its upcoming deployment.

Newman: Spends time with Fort Benning Soldiers

"It's an honor to represent the U.S. Army," Newman said. "I'm just thankful for all the troops we have fighting for our freedom."

SPC Frederick George of the Mississippi Army National Guard was facing a fourth Iraq deployment before injuring his left ankle and landing at Fort Benning's Warrior Transition Battalion.

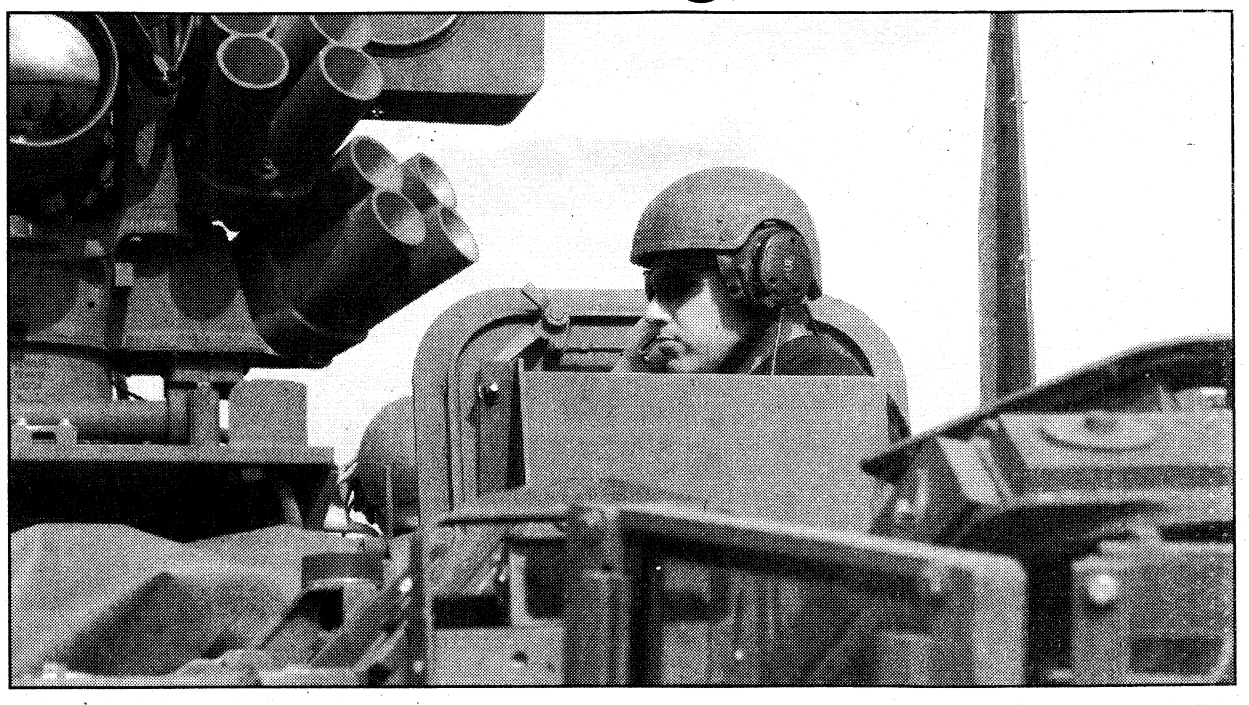
He got to ask Newman questions about drafting and his prospects for winning in Atlanta.

"I'm a big-time NASCAR fan," George said. "I pull for anyone who drives the Army car ... I appreciate him coming out here (and) supporting our military and what they do."

Lauri Salazar said she rushed over to the PX to catch the NASCAR star, but only as a favor for her husband, MAJ Reggie Salazar.

"He couldn't make it out here today," she said, "but he loves to watch (Newman) and always cheers for the Army car. That's his favorite driver."

"Every once in a while, I do kind things for him," she joked.



Shortly after collecting an autographed picture, SGT Andrew Boston of C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said he's a Jeff Gordon fan but always throws his support behind any Chevy driver.

"I grew up with NASCAR and was always around dirt-track racing," he said.

"It's good of him to come do this and support all the troops and everything.

"This is the first time I got to meet somebody in something I really, really enjoy."

Later Wednesday, Newman observed Airborne training and took part in a shoot with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Poole Range.

"It was cool to see all the Soldiers, ride in the Stryker vehicle and meet the wounded troops," he said.

"It was great to be able to talk to the fans and hear some of their stories about what the Army does for all of us."

"The Combined Federal Campaign is the world's largest and most successful workplace charity campaign. Last year, the campaign raised over $275 million," Durr said.

"It's important for us to continue to contribute. Last year, the Fort Benning community contributed about $975,000, just short of a million. There were 300 organized CFC campaigns across the country — ours was one of the largest and the best participated in, because Fort Benning is a giving and caring community and, I think, we espouse selfless service."

Durr said when he was on Sand Hill, he was amazed by the generosity of basic trainees who sometimes even had to be counseled by their drill sergeants to contribute smaller amounts.

Laura Walker, manager of the local CFC, holds the CFC Commander's Trophy, previously held by the 198th Infantry Brigade. The trophy will later be awarded to "the best all around CFC unit," Walker said

"That's just an example of what brand new privates in the Army want to (do), and I think it's important that we do our share," he said.

To help get the word out, the Columbus/Fort Benning CFC is doing something "a little different" this year, said Laura Walker, manager of the local campaign.

"We wanted to try to reach out into the community and introduce the CFC in a fun way to some members of our group who don't know about the CFC," she said.

The first event, a Jeans & Jazz Luncheon, will be held from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Sept. 18 at the Benning Conference Center. The Fort Benning public is invited to listen to The Infantry Center Band Jazz Combo and win CFC door prizes during lunch.

CFC Hero Competition and Agency Fair will be from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 3 at the GameStop in the PX. Participants can play Guitar Hero and compete for prizes. The final event, the Lunch & Putt Competition, will begin at 11:30 a.m. Oct. 13. People can compete for prizes on the Fort Benning Golf Course on Main Post or watch from the sidelines and enjoy lunch.

For more information about the events, call Walker at 706-545-9782. For information about how to donate, individuals should contact their CFC key person.

STOP SEXUAL ASSAULT! DON'T BE A BYSTANDER!

If you saw a fellow Soldier being sexually assaulted—would you do something? Would you intervene, call for help, phone the military police...or avert your gaze, speed up your footsteps, and pretend it never happened?

There are indicators that Soldiers should watch for so they can be a good bystander:

- Inappropriate touching or disregarding set boundaries
- Suggestive remarks
- Inappropriate intimacy
- Attempts to isolate someone
- Pressuring someone to drink
- Violent behaviors
- Targeting someone who is visibly impaired

For additional information, please contact Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy and Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program Manager, at (706) 545-0892 or Michelle Fonseca, Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) at (706) 545-8740. Soldiers may call the Fort Benning Sexual Assault Response Line 24 hours a day/7 days a week at (706) 566-7393.

BENCH NOTES

JOHN W. PEELER

Ring morphin

From TV and action figure to the Mixed Martial Arts ring, that is where Mighty Morphin Power Ranger Jason David Frank will morph next.

Frank, the Green Ranger, has been training with UFC lightweight Melvin Guillard and although his debut has not been scheduled, he is looking for a management team so he can get in the ring as soon as possible.

The 35-year-old better hope his superpowers work in the ring because there is no place to run and hide.

I sure would hate to see the Green Ranger beat up. Contender or pretender?

Are there any more superheroes out there who want to get beat up?

Chase for the cup

With two races left, several NASCAR drivers can breathe easy, but Kasey Kahne, Matt Kenseth, Mark Martin, Juan Pablo Montoya, Greg Biffle and Ryan Newman have Kyle Busch and Brian Vickers sneaking up in their rear-view mirror.

Busch and Vickers trail Kenseth by less than 50 points in the standings for the 12th spot and Kahne by less than 60 points. With two good races, both Busch and Vickers could find themselves above the cutoff and in the Chase.

NASCAR racing resumes this week in Atlanta and will be televised on ESPN at 7:30 p.m. Sunday.

Vick reinstated?

ESPN is reporting the Philadelphia Eagles expect a ruling today from NFL commissioner Roger Goodell on when quarterback Michael Vick will be fully reinstated.

Goodell originally said he would make the decision by Week 6 of the regular season, but with Saturday's mandated cutdown to 53 players the Eagles would have the latitude to place Vick on the roster-exempt list rather than have to cut another player until he returns.

The only thing I wonder is if the song Who Let The Dogs Out has been banned from being played in the NFL stadiums he will have to play in.

We'll see.

Friday Night Lights

If you haven't seen a high school football game under the lights in a while, now is your chance. Columbus' Pacelli Vikings will play the Stewart-Quitman Royal Knights from Lumpkin, Ga., at 7:30 p.m. today in a Region 4-A battle at Doughboy Stadium.

The game is the first region game for both teams. Admission is free.

Dawgs unleashed, win championship

Rachel L. Watkins
THE BAYONET

After being forced out of the winner's bracket semifinals of the Commander's Cup Preseason Flag Football Tournament, the MEDDAC Dawgs fought back through the loser's bracket to face a familiar foe — the Goonz of the 598th Maintenance Company. This time the outcome favored the Dawgs as they came away with two consecutive victories in the double elimination tournament to win the preseason title Aug. 27 at Essebagger Field.

"Coming from the loser's bracket we knew we had a hard game — we had to beat them twice," said MEDDAC's Chris Thomas who scored three touchdowns against the Goonz. "After the first game, I knew we had to get up on them early in the National Guardsmen from Illinois, New Jersey, South Carolina and as far away as Guam competed in the Army National Guard Combatives Tournament Saturday and Sunday at Briant Wells Field House.

Melvyn Manibusin, stationed in Guam, said the 22-hour plane flight was worth it to compete in the tournament.

"It's not every day you get to compete with guardsmen from around the world," he said. "This is my first combatives tournament and I am excited to go to the finals."

Manibusin advanced to the finals and took first place in the lightweight category.

"There's some tough competition," 37-year-old Timothy Muldrow said. Muldrow, who is stationed in South Carolina, took the heavyweight title. "Those young guys make you work for what you get. In the intermediate rules, I couldn't think (about)

The Red Rockets defeated Dem Boyz 26-7 in a regular season intramural flag football game Monday at Essebagger Field.

After several possessions, Dem Boyz of 13th Combat Sustainment Support Battalion led 7-0 after Dem Boyz's Bruce Adams intercepted a pass near their own goal line and scored a touchdown and one-point conversion.

Red Rockets of E Company, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, came back in the second half when quarterback Josh Hall scored a touchdown and one-point conversion to tie the score 7-7.

On the Red Rockets' second possession of the half, Hall threw a 17-yard pass to Dustin Gelner for a touchdown and with the one-point conversion, led 14-7. With 2:25 left in the game, the Red Rockets scored two more touchdowns, winning 26-7.

"It was a good game. The team did their best and tried their hardest," Red Rockets coach Jonathan Lopez said. "At halftime, we talked about the problems with the defense and about covering our zones."

"We started off slow in the beginning, but we hit our stride in the second half," Hall said. "We have good team chemistry and I have a good feeling that we are going to make it to the postseason championship playoffs."

Flag football games are at 6 and 7 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays at Essebagger Field.

Tournament: Champions must be 'well-rounded fighters'

how much longer I had and I kept hoping (my opponent) would tap out sooner or later because I didn't have much more."

The double elimination tournament was broken up into three rounds using standard, intermediate and advanced rules. The standard-rules round included no strikes, while the 10-minute intermediate-level round allowed fighters to use hand strikes, closed fists to the body and kneeing below the waist. The final 14 competitors from seven weight classes advanced to the championship round and fought with advanced rules, including three five-minute periods with closed fists, punching, and kicking and kneeing to the torso.

"You have to be a well-rounded fighter to win this tournament," said Austin Randolph, NCOIC for the National Guard Warrior Training Center on post. "Some guys are good fighters on the ground but when it comes to getting hit in the face, it changes the whole aspect of the game. They develop an overall better game as far as fighting."

The tournament is a good way for competitors to take what they have applied in a classroom environment to a competitive environment, said Jamison Kirby, operations officer for the Warrior Training Center. In a competition, the fighters have to think on their feet and be prepared for any move, he said.

The event is in its second year and Kirby said he wants to make it a National Guard tradition.

"It's a good opportunity for the Guard to show we are keeping up with the programs that are out there and training our guys to standard," he said.

Going shopping with $50 million

John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

Every year hundreds of thousands of sports enthusiasts get the chance to live out their fantasy of being the owner of a National Football League team through the many fantasy leagues offered on the Internet.

I am one of those enthusiasts.

While I prefer to concentrate on football, fantasy sports leagues have grown to epic proportions over the past few years and include almost any sport imaginable — ESPN.com even offers fantasy poker, arcade and fishing.

A form of entertainment? Yes, but everyone I have talked to takes fantasy sports very seriously — I know I do.

Every week I spend hours upon hours researching players and teams to field the best fantasy football team I can. After all, I am living my fantasy of being an NFL team owner and like all owners, my goal is to win and be the best.

Hey, it's not every day someone gives you $50 million and tells you to "go shopping." But just because the money isn't real doesn't mean a fantasy shopper doesn't have to be frugal.

While many may load up on running backs like Adrian Peterson and Michael Turner to round out their starting offensive backfield, those two backs could eat up about one quarter of the salary cap and lead to having to scrimp on other positions.

Decisions, decisions — it's tough being an owner.

With the start of football season, The Bayonet begins another year of the Pick 12.

Last year's winner, CPT Stephen Magennis, aka Man-genius, as we refer to him, returns to defend his title as the top prognosticator. He's no Jimmy the Greek, the longtime Vegas oddsmaker, but he is the man to beat. And, as professional wrestler Ric Flair says, "To be the man, you have to beat the man." Right now Man-genius is the man.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate has entered the fray with CPT Mike Tregle, so we will have to make sure there are no loopholes in our rules as to what is a win, and what is a loss. And no, we do not have an appeals process. Live with it.

We have also added Lance Cpl. Robert Patterson from the Marine Corps. We felt it was appropriate we included a brother in arms from another branch — now all we have to do is make sure he realizes "take the beach" is not an appropriate response for who he likes to win a game.

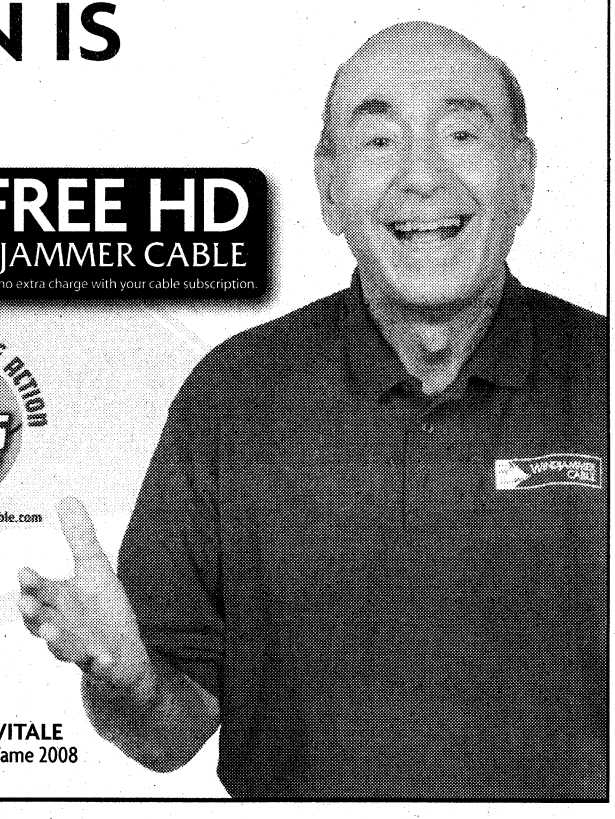
Then, we have the usual suspects: Michelle Gordon, Don "The Shadow No More" Sando and Carl "Don Vito" Pignato, who have all said this year will be different from last year — yeah, right. That's what they all say.

All kidding aside, whether you play online or follow The Bayonet Pick 12, fantasy sports gives the sports enthusiast a way to get involved in sports even if it is just a fantasy.

For those who play in fantasy football leagues, here are my top five picks for each position.

Quarterback: Drew Brees, Tom Brady, Peyton Manning, Kurt Warner, Phillip Rivers.

Running back: Adrian Peterson, Michael Turner, Maurice Jones-Drew, Matt Forte, LaDainian Tomlinson.



Wide receiver: Larry Fitzgerald, Calvin Johnson, Greg Jennings, Reggie Wayne, Randy Moss.

Tight end: Jason Witten, Tony Gonzalez, Owen Daniels, Antonio Gates, Dallas Clark.

Kicker: Stephen Gostkowski, David Akers, Ryan Longwell, Nate Kaeding, Mason Crosby.

Defense: Pittsburgh Steelers, New York Giants, Baltimore Ravens, Philadelphia Eagles, Minnesota Vikings.

Dawgs: Claim championship, bragging rights game again and show them we could beat them. They beat us last year in the postseason championship so there was a little rivalry."

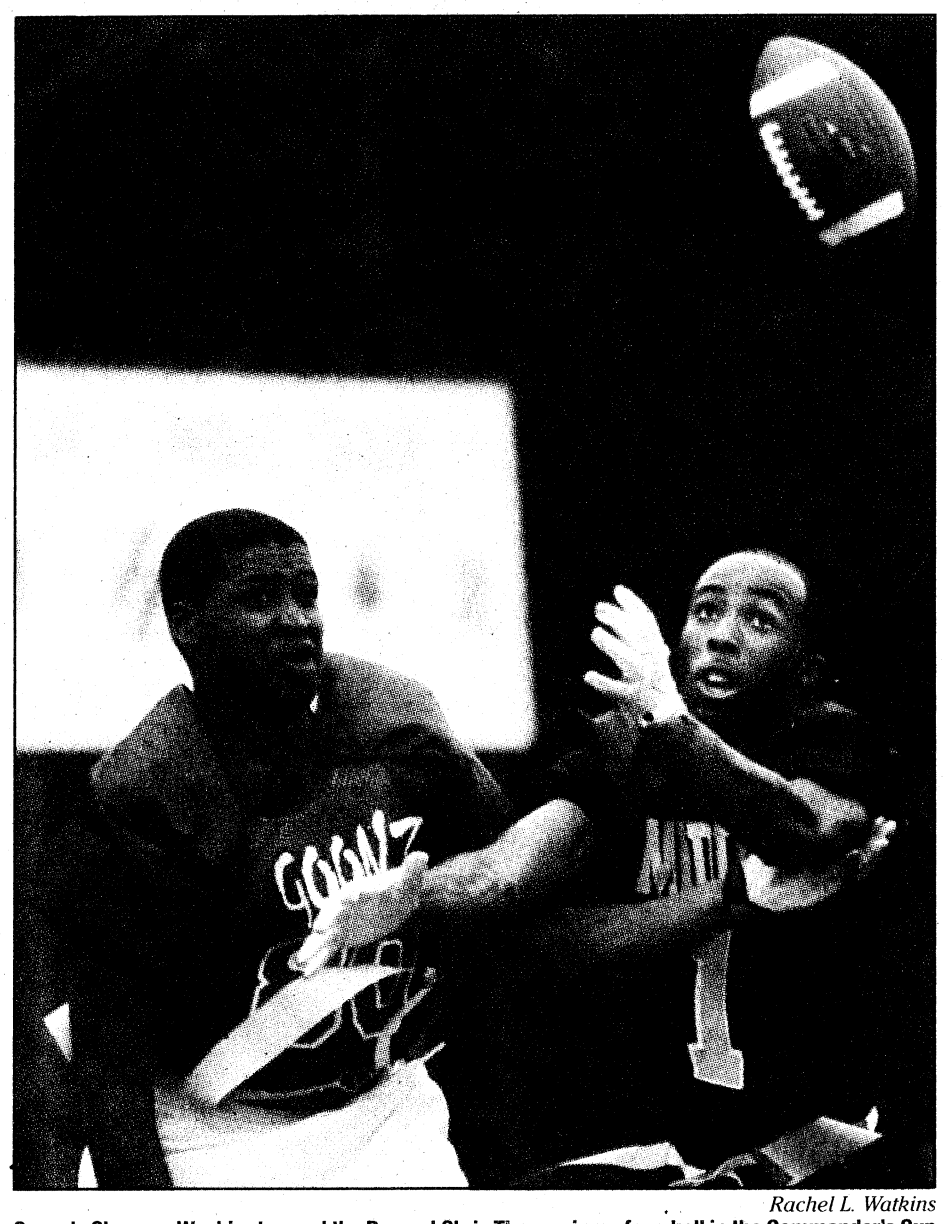
In game one the Goonz took a 6-0 lead after a Lamar Williams touchdown, but the lead was short-lived when Dawgs' John Spaulding scored and with the one-point conversion, the Dawgs led 7-6. Thomas added to the Dawgs lead with the first of his three touchdowns on a 10-yard run to seal the game for the Dawgs forcing the second game.



The Dawgs began the second game with Raymond Wilhelm throwing a 25-yard touchdown pass to Thomas and with Thomas' one-point conversion, led 7-0.

Wilhelm threw two more touchdown passes to Jorge Santiago and Thomas and the Dawgs scored a one-point conversion in the first half to lead 20-0.

The Dawgs allowed a safety in the second half, but won 20-2, earning the championship title and bragging rights.

"We played as a team — when a mistake was made, nobody got down," said Dawgs' coach Phillip Moore. "I am happy about the win but I have another mission for the team and that's winning the post season championship."

Both teams, along with all Fort Benning flag football teams, kicked off the regular season this week.

ID card scanners in use at Eddie Bridge gate

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

Starting Tuesday, Eddie Bridge gate guards will begin scanning identification cards for all personnel entering post from the southeast side of Lawson Army Airfield.

The access control point is the fifth to add the Intellicheck Mobilisia handheld scanners since the additional security measures went into effect Aug. 17. Each week another gate will add the devices until all 10 ACPs are up and running, said Jim Webster, physical security specialist for the Directorate of Emergency Services.

The handheld readers can scan information from common access cards, family member identification cards, contractor badges and most driver's licenses.

The scanners check for expired or forged identification cards and run background checks against terrorist watch lists and wanted criminals.

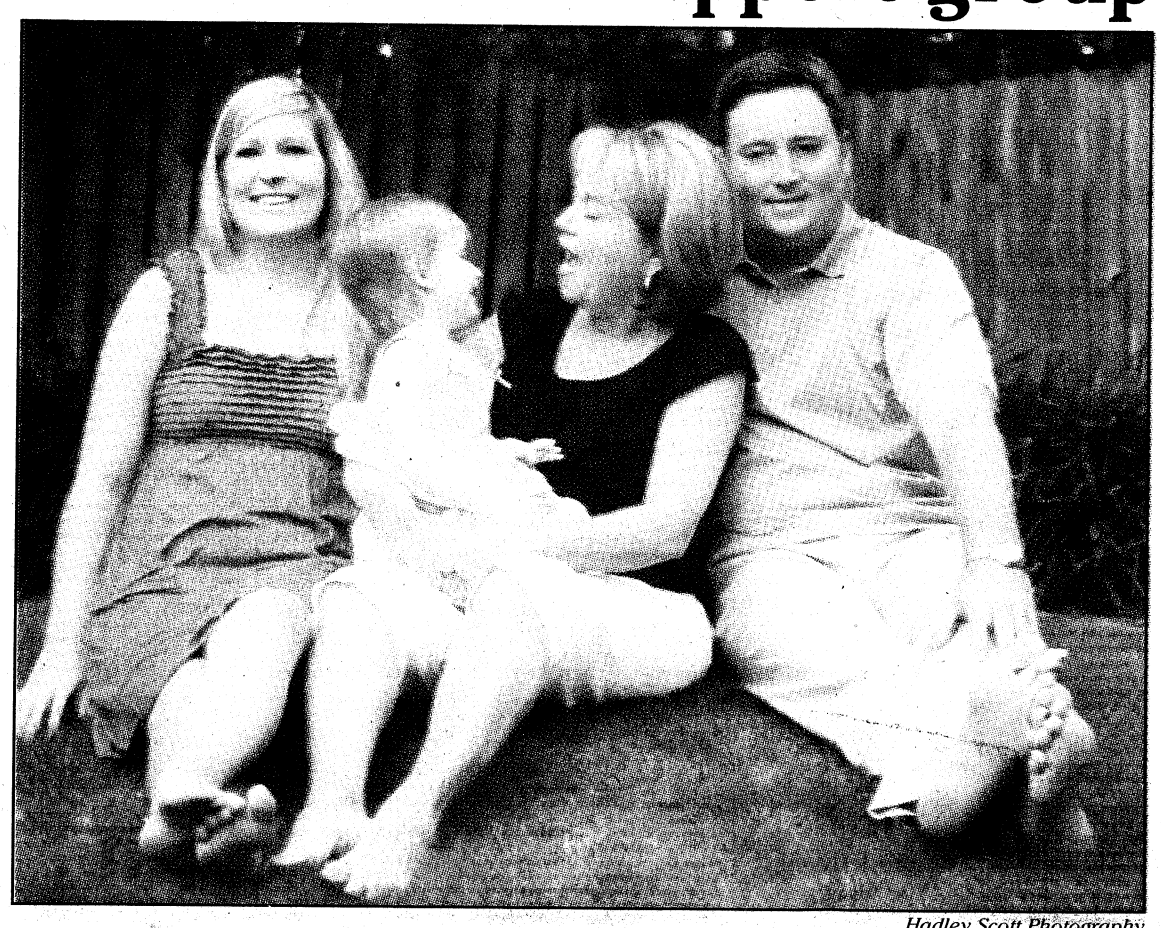
Webster said he expects all ACPs will have the scanners by Oct. 13, well ahead of their Oct. 31 deadline for full implementation.

"This will give us a few weeks to work out the kinks and get the community adjusted to the new procedures," he said. "We want to have minimal impact on the installation while still increasing the safety of the Fort Benning community."

Scanners are currently being used at Benning Road, South Lumpkin Road, Custer Road and Buena Vista Road gates, Webster said. There will be a slight delay at the gates initially but Webster said measures are in place during rush hours and periodic backups to move things along.

The slowdowns are expected to decrease as people become more familiar with the scanning procedures.

Greg Sandell, captain of the guard for Wackenhut Services Incorporated, said the best thing drivers can do to speed the process is to have their identification ready when pulling up to the gate.



Waiting for people to get IDs out of their wallets or to collect IDs from multiple passengers contributes to delays at the gate, he said.

MITOCHONDRIAL DISEASE AWARENESS

Grandmother rallies for support group

Gail LaFramboise holds her 2-year-old granddaughter, Ava Wilson, as they pose for a family picture with Ava's parents, Chey and Jill Wilson, in the backyard of their Columbus home.

Two-year-old Ava Wilson has blonde hair and hazel eyes. She likes splashing around in the water, playing pat-a-cake, watching Baby Einstein and other activities children her age enjoy, but Ava has a challenge that most kids her age don't. One year ago, she was diagnosed with mitochondrial disease.

According to www.umdf.org, mitochondrial disease affects the body's ability to create energy. As a result, weakness, poor motor control and inability to gain weight are common.

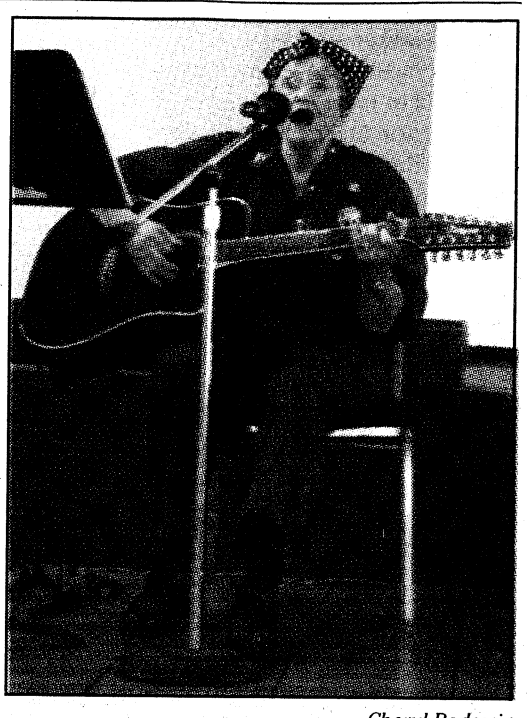
Before Ava received the diagnosis, her family had never heard of the disease.

"Every 30 minutes, a child is born who will develop a mitochondrial disease by age 10 — basically one in 3,000 births," said Ava's grandmother, Gail LaFramboise, who retired from Fort Benning schools this year.

"We knew something was wrong early on because (Ava) wouldn't eat very well. She refused nourishment," LaFramboise said. "The diagnosis they (initially) gave was failure to thrive. In her first year of life, she was in the hospital five times.

"If you saw Ava, you would think she was this perfectly normal little girl. She's just a little over two and a half now and gives the appearance of a 1-year-old. She's not walking and not talking and is fed with a feeding tube. But she is one happy, smiling, laughing, socially interactive child who is a joy to be around."

Since her retirement, LaFramboise is working to raise awareness in the tricommunity about mitochondrial disease. She hopes to start a local United Mitochondrial Disease Foundation group, she said; to provide support to those affected by the disease and to supply an avenue for resource information and fundraising. The only UMDF chapter currently in Georgia is in Atlanta.



Chey Wilson, Ava's dad, said a support group would be helpful.

Members could take turns visiting the Atlanta meetings and work to find a way to offset medical costs, many of which aren't covered by insurance, he said.

"There are a lot of expenses involved, and there's just a lot of help that's needed. It would be nice just to share ideas," Wilson said. "Ava's at the point where she needs therapy daily, especially if we want her to be walking and talking in time for kindergarten."

National Mitochondrial Disease Awareness Week is Sept. 20-26. The Atlanta UMDF

Rosies remember wartime service

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

"It was an adventure into the man's world," said Jean Liparoto, a 90-year-old "Rosie the Riveter."

Liparoto was one of several members of the local Rosie the Riveters organization who attended the Women's Equality Day luncheon Aug. 26 at the Benning Conference Center. The luncheon highlighted women from the 1940s, known as "Rosies" who filled war-related jobs in factories and businesses typically considered men's work.

Liparoto worked in Monroe Auto Equipment, a Michigan-based car factory that was converted to create parts for weapons and Army vehicles during World War II. Liparoto's job, which paid $85 a month, was inspecting 20 mm shells.

She took the position for extra money and "to help the war effort, so the guys could come home quicker," she said. "I had to stand for hours … breathing the fumes. And your clothes smelled like hot oil. You could wash them all you want, they still smelled like oil."

About 6 million women worked and 3 million women volunteered between 1941 and 1945, said keynote speaker Jonnie Melillo Clasen.

Women also served during World War I. They worked in munitions factories, volunteered with the Red Cross and enlisted in the Navy, Clasen said.

"These women did all this before they had the right to vote. Many went on to give birth to baby girls who grew up to follow in their mothers' footsteps by becoming Rosie the Riveters of the 1940s," said Clasen, who founded the Columbus and Phenix City chapter of the American Rosie the Riveter Association in April 2008, partly to honor her mother, the late Frankie Thompson Melillo, who managed the canteen at Camp Wheeler, Ga., after America joined World War II.

During the women's equality celebration, Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians got a glimpse of the iconic Rosie the Riveter through Carol Cain. Cain, a nationally recognized storyteller, sang Rosie the Riveter and presented examples of working women, from Frankie the crane operator to Adele the machinist.

June Midkiff Tinker, a real Rosie the Riveter who worked at Patterson Field, Ohio, riveting and cutting sheet metal for warplanes, also performed. The 84-year-old Rosie sang a piece

Wilson gives kids something to cheer about

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

"Go, go; let's go!" More than a dozen fifth-grade girls learned their first cheer Monday at Wilson Elementary School.

The newly formed Wilson Wildcats Cheer Club celebrates school spirit, physical fitness, teamwork and leadership, said Marissa Jessup, first-grade teacher at Wilson who, along with Spanish teacher Christi Wells, will head the club.

"Basically, fifth-graders are kind of coming into their own at this age, especially girls, and we wanted to teach them — before they get into the crucial years — how to become a leader, what the important values are, what example to set for other kids," Jessup said.

With a parent's permission slip and $1 for a personalized T-shirt, fifth-grade students at Wilson Elementary are invited to learn what cheerleading is all about.

"It's not just dancing; it's not just showing off what you can do," Wells said. "It's taking your strengths, using those with the strengths all the other girls have — as a team — and showing it to your school."

Cheering is especially great for military children because it builds confidence and camaraderie, Jessup said.

"I was a cheerleader in high school," Wells said. "It helped me find my voice. I knew what I was supposed to say, and I believed with all my heart what I was saying: 'Go, go; I want my team to win.' It gave me confidence because I had all these girls around me as a support group."

Wells said she believes the club will be that support group for Wilson cheerleaders.

Ten-year-old Shian Hayes said she is excited to start cheerleading.

"People say I'm shy. I am," Shian said. "So, it's probably the best way to express myself. I would like to show more spirit for the school … because this is a really cool school."

The club was entirely the students' idea, Wells said. After the fifth-grade class visited Columbus State University for a field trip in August and saw cheerleaders perform, many of the students were interested in the concept.

Rosies: Paved way for women's equality in workplace

Cheryl Rodewig
Carol Cain plays the part of a "Rosie" Aug. 26.

she wrote for her brother, Kenneth Midkiff, a Marine sergeant who died on Iwo Jima in 1945.

"My two brothers had joined the Marines just as soon as the war started, and my sister and I decided we wanted to do our part," Tinker said. "We heard about them hiring women to work in the factories in the war effort, and we decided we would do that. Some of our friends were going to go with us, and we all signed up. The day we were to leave the other girls backed out, but we went because our brothers were in there."

Tinker was 17.

"Being away from home for the first time was exciting as well as knowing I was doing something to help in the war effort," she said. "I repaired B25s and B29s when they came back from the war. I was young, and I don't ever remember getting tired. The only difficult part of the job was trying to stay awake at night when I had the night shift."

> "Being away from home for the first time was exciting as well as knowing I was doing something to help in the war effort."
> — June Midkiff Tinker

Since that time, the country has made great strides in women's equality, said Tinker, who retired from civil service at Fort Benning after more than 20 years of work.

"When I grew up, women didn't have too much to say. The men had all the say about most everything. Usually, the woman didn't have her name on the home mortgage; it was always the man," she said. "We didn't wear pants; we wore dresses and skirts. Most women did not work outside the home. And all I looked forward to was getting married and having a family. That's what I aspired to do — until the war started, and then this all changed. I've always worked ever since. And I like to work."

Women's equality is an ongoing effort, Clasen said, but it gained much of its momentum thanks to the Rosies who stepped into the work roles required of them.

"They were the trailblazers. They were the ones who opened up the workplace and made it possible for women and men to work side by side," she said. "If it hadn't been for them, it would have taken a lot longer."

chapter will help spread awareness throughout the month with activities to raise money for treatment and cure research. Events include a walk, Braves game, and a music show.

The Atlanta chapter has around 100 families, LaFramboise said, but a local support group could connect families in the Chattahoochee Valley area who struggle with this disease and possibly even affect legislation to promote researching a cure.

"I know when we went to Atlanta we gained so much information from people who had been going down this road now for years," she said. "As a local group, we could support each other in terms of sharing experiences and talking to others who are on this same journey. It would be an excellent way to make a difference, give people hope and be a part of a larger effort to find treatments and ultimately a cure for mitochondrial disease."

"We have hope that one day she will be able to perform on average with her age group," Wilson said. "That's probably a long way down the road, but we are optimistic that will one day happen."

For more information about mitochondrial disease or UMDF events, visit www.umdf.org. To promote awareness or be involved in a local support group, call LaFramboise at 706-888-4245 or e-mail her at gwbirdie@aol.com.

Scanners: To shorten wait time

If a scanner says an ID card is expired, Sandell said the first thing security personnel will do is verify the card is expired by looking at the expiration date.

"If a government-issued ID is expired, we will then confiscate it and give the owner a DA Form 4137 receipt," Sandell said.

Security personnel will not confiscate an expired driver's license but will ask the person to produce another acceptable form of identification, he said.

To find out which ACP will be next to add scanners, see next week's edition of The Bayonet.

Club: Builds confidence cheer club, she signed up.

"I call myself a bendy straw," she said. "I love to do splits, cartwheels, backbends. It's kind of like my talent, something I do every day."

Kiara said she will like the opportunity to learn moves from someone else, make new friends, improve her flexibility, and "realize what school spirit is."

"They said if you want to be in cheerleading you have to get the spirit straight," Kiara said. "That's probably one of the things I'm more focused on, not mostly the moves but the spirit that I'm going to bring in the school — the spirit of the wildcat."

The club plans to perform at upcoming school events, such as field day. Membership is open to any fifth-grader at Wilson Elementary School. For more information, call 706-545-5723.

Gestational diabetes a risk during pregnancy

Dr. Gerald F. Joseph Jr.
THE AMERICAN COLLEGE OF OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS

An increasing number of women in the United States have diabetes. Women with diabetes face some additional health risks during pregnancy such as having a very large baby, cesarean birth or pregnancy-induced high blood pressure. Extra prenatal care is needed to ensure a healthy pregnancy and delivery.

Glucose, a sugar, is derived from digested food and is important to the nourishment of the cells in the body. Diabetes occurs when insulin — a hormone that helps the cells use glucose — is in short supply or does not function properly, allowing glucose to build up in the bloodstream. Diabetes is diagnosed when screening tests show blood glucose to be higher than normal.

Type 1 and type 2 diabetes are the most common forms, affecting roughly one out of every 100 nonpregnant U.S. women. Additionally, between 2 percent and 10 percent of women who do not have diabetes will develop gestational diabetes during pregnancy.

Though it usually goes away after delivery, gestational diabetes raises a woman's risk of related conditions, such as glucose intolerance or type 2 diabetes, in the future. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists recommends that all pregnant women be screened for gestational diabetes.

Factors that can increase a woman's chances of developing type 2 or gestational diabetes include being overweight, physical inactivity, high blood pressure, low HDL ("good") cholesterol levels, previous abnormal glucose screening results, a family history of diabetes, gestational diabetes in a previous pregnancy, or giving birth to a baby weighing more than nine pounds. Gestational diabetes risk is also increased in pregnant women who are older than 25.

If you are diagnosed with gestational diabetes during pregnancy, your doctor will set up a treatment plan to ensure a healthy pregnancy. You will need to visit the doctor more frequently. Diabetes can be controlled with careful monitoring of blood-glucose levels, changes in diet, regular exercise, and medications. A registered dietician can help devise a diet that will keep blood sugar in check, reduce the risk of having a large baby, and ensure proper nutrition and calorie intake. If diet and exercise don't work, some pregnant women will need to take insulin to control their blood glucose levels.

ACOG recommends that women with gestational diabetes be rescreened for diabetes six to 12 weeks after delivery. Women with normal results should be rescreened at least every three years, and those who are found to have diabetes can be put on a management plan.

For more information, the ACOG Patient Education Pamphlet "Diabetes and Pregnancy" is available in English and Spanish at www.acog.org/publications/patient_education.

Tips for caring for flu patients at home

WEST CENTRAL HEALTH DISTRICT

The H1N1 flu virus infection can cause a wide range of symptoms, including fever, cough, sore throat, body aches, headache, chills and fatigue. Some people have reported diarrhea and vomiting with it. Like seasonal flu, H1N1 flu can vary in severity from mild to severe.

The main way influenza viruses are thought to spread is from person to person in respiratory droplets of coughs and sneezes. Influenza viruses may also be spread when a person touches respiratory droplets on another person or an object and then touches their own mouth or nose (or someone else's mouth or nose) before washing their hands.

People with H1N1 flu should:

- Check with their health-care provider if they are pregnant or have a health condition such as diabetes, heart disease or emphysema.
- Keep away from others. Do not go to work or school. Stay home for at least 24 hours after fever is gone, except to seek medical care. Fever should be gone without using fever-reducing medicine.
- Get plenty of rest and drink clear fluids (such as water, broth, sports drinks, electrolyte beverages for infants) to keep from being dehydrated.
- Cover coughs and sneezes. Clean hands with soap and water or an alcohol-based hand rub often.
- Treat fevers and aches with fever reducing medicines; however, do not give aspirin to children or teenagers who have the flu. Also check labels on over-the-counter medications to make sure they do not contain aspirin.
- Keep the sick person in a room separate from the common areas of the house.
- If possible, sick persons should use a separate bathroom. This bathroom should be cleaned daily with household disinfectant
- The sick person should not have visitors other than caregivers. A phone call is safer than a visit.
- If possible, have only one adult in the home take care of the sick person.
- Avoid having pregnant women care for the sick person. Pregnant women are at increased risk of influenza-related complications and immunity can be suppressed during pregnancy.
- All persons in the household should clean their hands with soap and water or an alcohol-based hand rub frequently, including after every contact with the sick person or the person's room or bathroom.
- Use paper towels for drying hands after hand washing or dedicate cloth towels to each person in the household.
- If possible, consideration should be given to maintaining good ventilation in shared household areas.
- Antiviral medications can be used to prevent the flu, check with health-care provider to see if others in the home should use antiviral medications.
- Avoid being face-to-face with the sick person.
- When holding small children who are sick, place their chin on your shoulder so that they will not cough in your face.
- Clean your hands with soap and water or use an alcohol-based hand sanitizer after you touch the sick person or handle used tissues or laundry.
- Keep surfaces (especially bedside tables, surfaces in the bathroom, and toys for children) clean.
- Linens, eating utensils and dishes belonging to patient do not need to be cleaned separately, but should be washed thoroughly before use.

The Shack tries to answer questions about God

Tandi Cain-Morris
BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

I am a member of the Benning Book Club, which meets monthly at Sayers Library. Our latest read, The Shack by William P. Young, is controversial, but I left the controversy out to share the wonderful things I found within the novel.

The story centers on Mack, a husband and father, who suffers an agonizing tragedy. This tragedy throws him into the depths of despair and depression, which he refers to as "The Great Sadness." So destructive was The Great Sadness, there had to be an intervention, but it was not staged by family and friends — it was staged by God.

The meat of the story is the weekend that Mack spends with God "Papa," Jesus, and the Holy Spirit "Sarayu."

Before you dismiss this as a religious book, don't. It really is so much more than that. It is a novel — a story, but within the story, there is an attempt to address many of the age-old questions humans have had of God.

How about this one: "If you are such a great God, how can you let bad things happen?"

I think this book does a great job of trying to address it. I mean when you read it, it seems like good old common sense, but when one is in the middle of devastation - common sense does not really play, does it? What is the answer this book provides? I will give you a hint, but the entire book addresses it throughout. The overall concept is that God's love for us does not exert power, take control of our choices, or force us to do anything. Sarayu says, "He (God) doesn't stop a lot of things that cause Him pain. Your world is severely broken. You have demanded your independence, and now you are angry with the one who loved you enough to give it to you." Sarayu said, "We carefully respect your choices." Then Papa continues, "But, your choices are also not stronger than my purposes, and I will use every choice you make for the ultimate good and the most loving outcome."

At one point Mack says, "I just cannot imagine any final outcome that would justify all this," to which Papa replies, "We're not justifying it. We are redeeming it." Goosebumps!!!

Papa also teases with this thought, "Nobody knows what horrors I have saved the world from, because people can't see what never happened."

Each of us has seen our devastations and experienced our own "Why God?"

And for many, it has kept them from trying to understand who God is. For some, it is the foundation from which they declare there is no God at all. For all, I would encourage you to pick up this book. Cheers to a good read!

If you would like to share your thoughts on the books reviewed, get The Reading Girl's List of Favorite Books, or the Benning Book Club's List of Books Read, feel free to e-mail me at fbreadinggirl@aol.com.

Editor's note: Tandi Cain-Morris has been a member of the Benning Book Club for three years. She has become an avid reader largely due to her involvement in the book club. The Benning Book Club reads a diverse selection of books that are chosen by the club members. Tandi has read some books she loves, some she doesn't and others that have fallen right in the middle, but the true benefit of the book club for her is that reading has become a part of her everyday life.

The Benning Book Club

The Benning Book Club is open to all. If you would like to join, a schedule of upcoming books and meetings is provided below:

Sept. 25 — The Guernsey Literary and Potato Peel Pie Society by Mary Ann Shaffer

Oct. 16 — The Help by Kathryn Stockett

Nov. 13 — The Patron Saint of Liars by Ann Patchett

Dec. 11 — The Christmas Sweater by Glenn Beck

All meetings start at 10 a.m. at Sayers Library on Ingersoll Street.

Refreshments are served and books can be borrowed from your local library. For more information, call the Sayers Library at 706-545-4911.

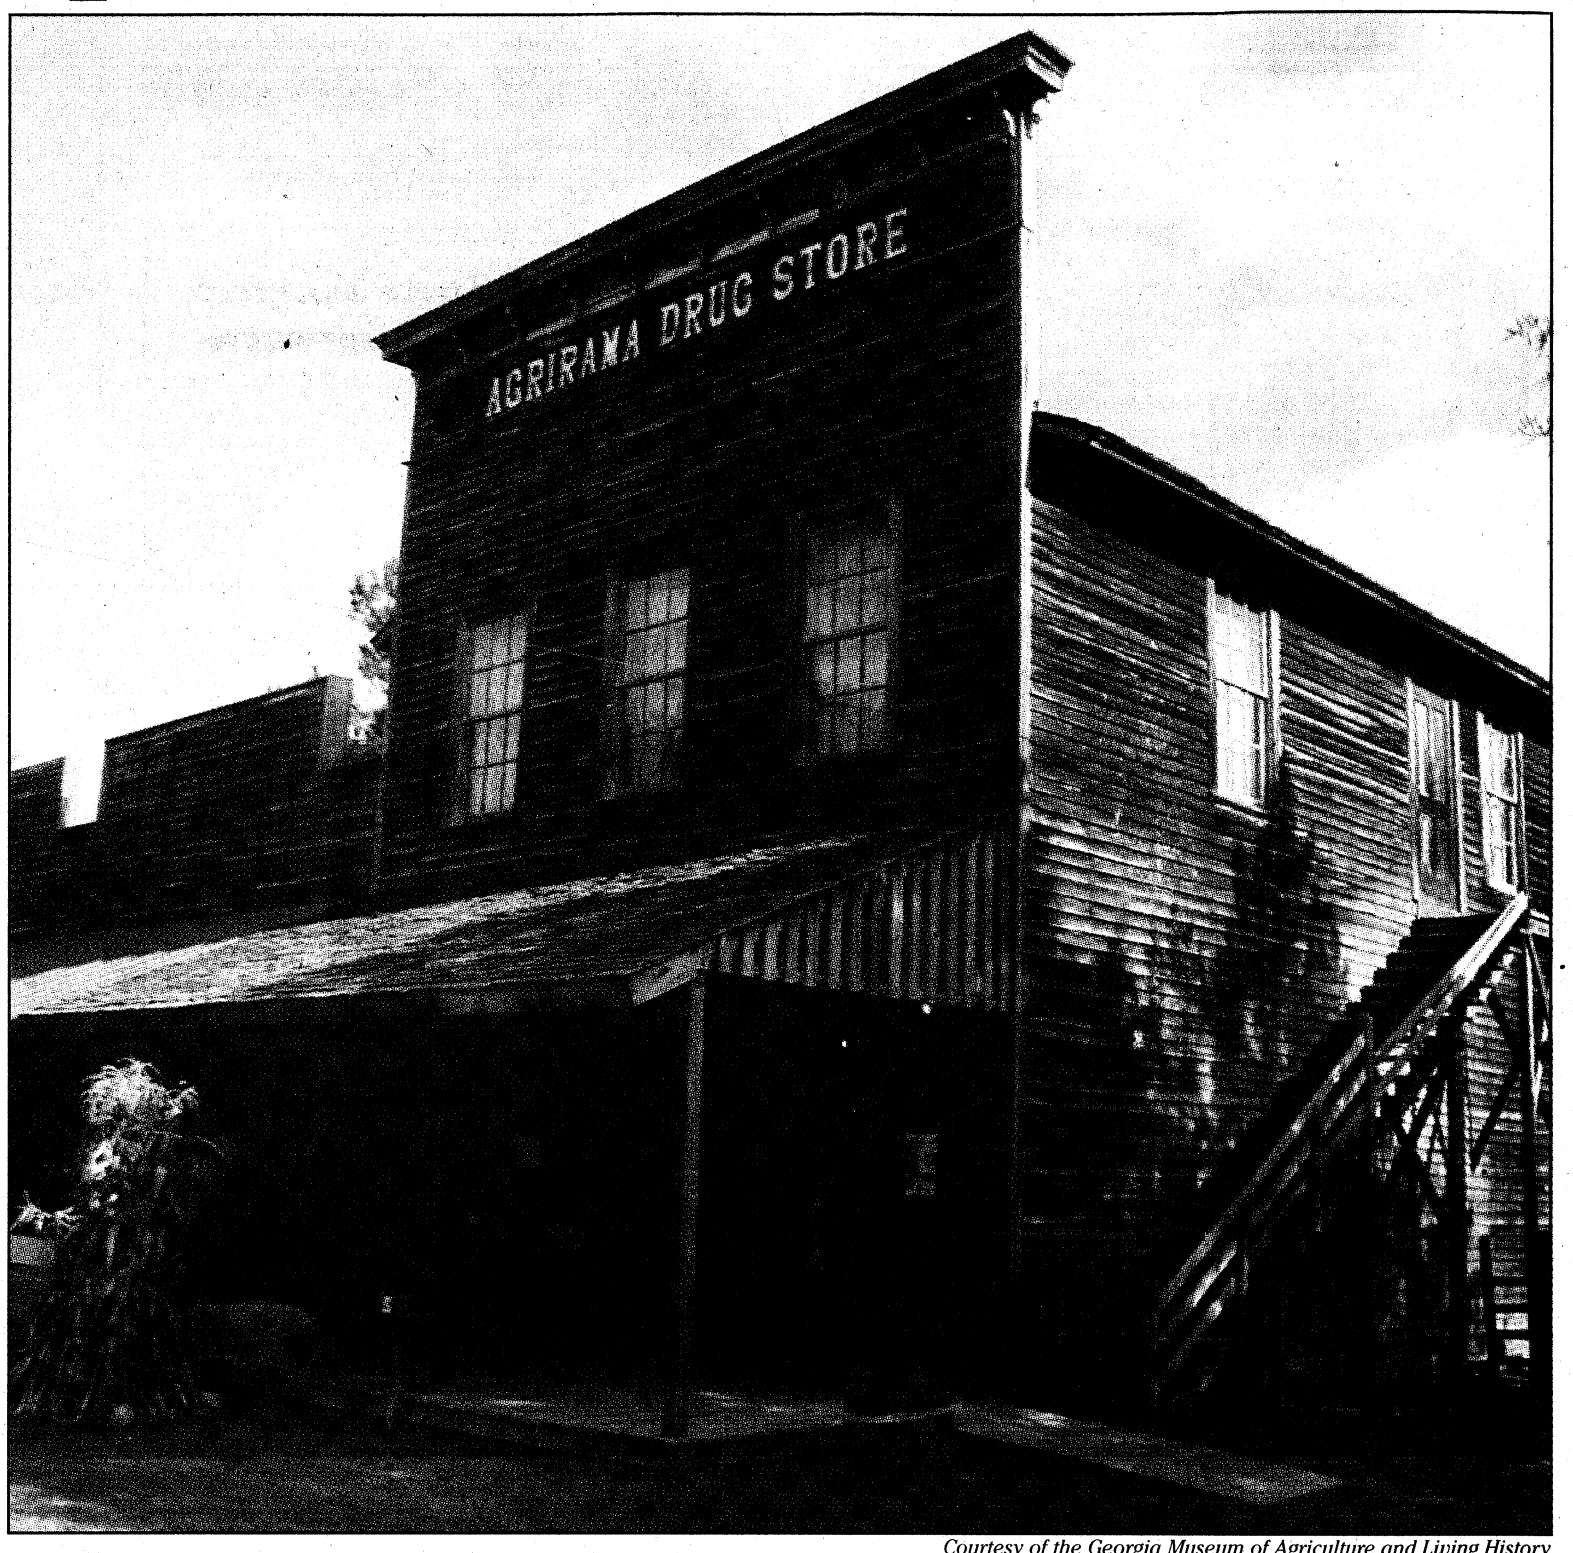
Break up your next road trip with these fun Georgia attractions

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

If you are heading to the sunshine state in the next few months, ditch the airplane ticket and take a road trip to check out fun Georgia sites on the way to Florida beaches.

Whether you take Highway 280, Highway 80 or Interstate Highway 75 here is a roundup of roadside attractions to beef up your trip's itinerary:



Peaches and Planes in Fort Valley

Fort Valley, Ga., roughly a two-hour drive from Columbus along Highway 80/96, is a good place to stop and stretch your legs. Once you connect to I-75, you can visit many nearby attractions including the U.S. Air Force Museum of Aviation off of exit 146, Lane Southern Orchards at exit 142 and Massee Lane Gardens a little farther down at Exit 135.

The aviation museum houses more than 90 aircraft, from the early 1896 Glider to the Mach 3-traveling SR-71 Blackbird, a strategic reconnaissance aircraft. The museum is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. For more information, visit www.museumofaviation.org.

The peach orchard offers fresh fruit, peach pie, peach ice cream, peach hot pepper sauce and other peach-inspired snacks. In October, the orchard has a fall festival with a pumpkin patch and seven-acre corn maze. The orchard is open 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily. For more information, visit www.lanesouthernorchards.com.

Massee Lane Gardens is a peaceful stopping point to view blooming camellias, azaleas, daylilies, roses and other plants. The gardens are open 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 1 to 4:30 p.m. Sunday. For more information, call 478-967-2358.

Courtesy of the Georgia Museum of Agriculture and Living History
The present meets the past at Agrirama, the Georgia Museum of Agriculture and Living History. Visitors can explore a traditional 1870s farmstead, see ham curing in the smokehouse or stroll up the street to the feed store. The complex also houses the agriculture museum and the national peanut complex.

Peanuts and a president in Plains

Plains, Ga., is the hometown of President Jimmy Carter and boasts his boyhood farm, which is a national historic site. The town also has President Carter's Campaign Museum. If you happen to swing through this way Sept. 26, you can also take in the annual Plains Peanut Festival. If you have a bit of flexibility in your road trip schedule, you can park the car and hop on the SAM Shortline Excursion Train and take a day trip to Archery, Americus, Leslie, the Georgia Veterans State Park or Cordele. For more information on Plains and SAM, visit www.plainsgeorgia.com.

Discover Habitat for Humanity in Americus

A short distance past Plains along Highway 280, Americus, Ga., is the operational headquarters of Habitat for Humanity and the Global Village Discovery Center. You can experience the nonprofit's worldwide effort to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness. The discovery center includes life-size Habitat houses from countries around the world. The center is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Friday and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday. For more information, visit www.habitat.org.

Pick up the phone in Leslie

Just down the road from Americus, the Georgia Rural Telephone Museum in Leslie, Ga., is home to a large collection of antique telephones and memorabilia. The collection is housed in a renovated 1920s cotton warehouse and some exhibits date back as early as 1876, according to the museum's Web site. The museum is open 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday-Friday. For more information, visit http://grtm.org.

THE MOVIE GUY'S REVIEW

Final Destination: Surprise! It's a flop

SGT Junius Stone
192ND INFANTRY BRIGADE

When reviewing a movie, unfavorable reviews are harder than favorable reviews. It's easy to extol the virtues of a film you want to encourage people to see. It's much harder to lay it down why a movie is less than desirable. Because you must make it clear that:

• a — this movie may actually have some merit and it's just not your thing or

• b — this one really is poop on celluloid.

It's a much harder thing to finesse, if you want a negative review to be more than just a ranting hit piece.

It's what I strive for. So here we go.

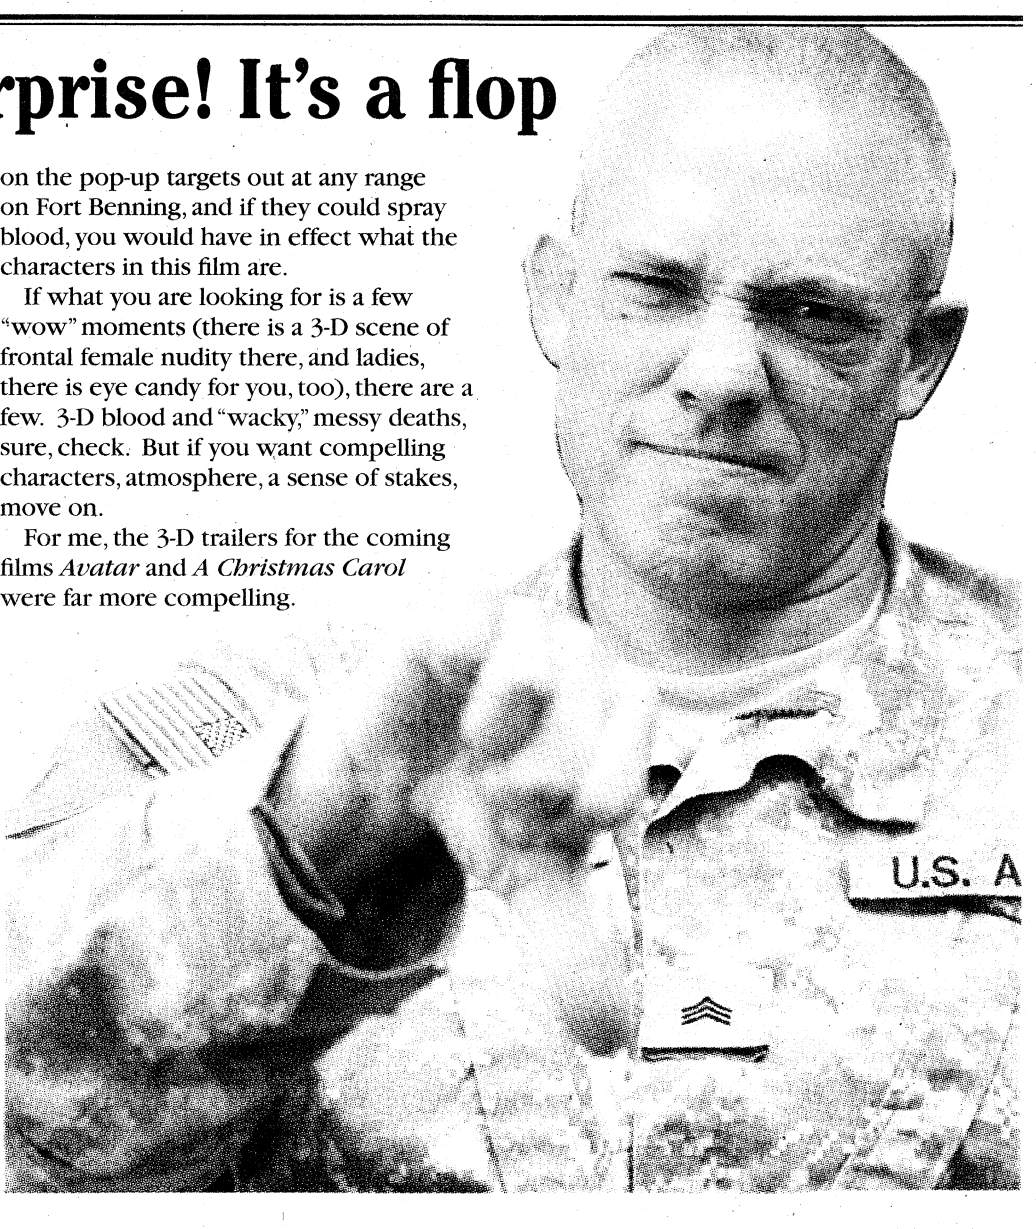
The general scenario of all four Final Destination films is thus ... you have a set of generally generic characters at some scene. They miraculously avoid death.

For the rest of the film, increasingly improbable events conspire to pick them off. It's described as death personally seeking to close a loophole that has appeared in the cosmos. Which speaks to me of a sloppy metaphysical makeup if death feels compelled to come down and whack multiple groups of pretty people all Rube Goldberg-style. But never mind that.

Originally, Glen Morgan and James Wong, two of the talents behind the masterful TV series, The X-Files envisioned this as an episode of the series. And it would have been GREAT for one episode of said series.

But now, we have four films out of it. Same scenario. Fate sets these pretty empties up, death knocks 'em down.

Now, I like horror movies. But for me, for a horror film to really work, you have to have some of the basics all storytelling has. Namely, a compelling scenario and more importantly, interesting characters that wrap you up in the tale. I haven't seen the other Final Destination films, but if this one is anything to go by, they fail.



So, what do you have left? Well, at least in the case of this film, you do have the gimmick of 3-D effects. When you buy your ticket at the box office, they hand you a funky pair of glasses. And when you go in and sit front row center, yep, it does have a neat-ew gross factor when viscera starts flying.

At the beginning of the film, which opens at a racetrack, a piece of gear falls off one of the cars. And when it appeared that piece was headed right for my forehead, I ducked, no lie. When the gore begins to a'fountain, you may feel tempted to shield your popcorn from the flood.

You'll note that I haven't mentioned any of the actors yet. Nor am I going to. You can look them up if you wish, but they really don't matter. You don't even really have characters in this film. Just set ups for slaughter. You could put wigs and clothes on the pop-up targets out at any range on Fort Benning, and if they could spray blood, you would have in effect what the characters in this film are.

If what you are looking for is a few "wow" moments (there is a 3-D scene of frontal female nudity there, and ladies, there is eye candy for you, too), there are a few. 3-D blood and "wacky," messy deaths, sure, check. But if you want compelling characters, atmosphere, a sense of stakes, move on.

For me, the 3-D trailers for the coming films Avatar and A Christmas Carol were far more compelling.

ALL ABOUT STEVE

Mary Horowitz is a cruciverbalist — a crossword puzzle constructor. Her brain spins at warp speed with an endless stream of arcane information. She can come up with the perfect word — and dozens with the same meaning — at a moment's notice, but "normal" behavior eludes her. For Mary, nothing is typical, especially relationships. When she is set up on a blind date with handsome cable-news cameraman Steve, Mary thinks the chemistry is undeniable — that Steve is "the one."

Steve, on the other hand, thinks Mary is crazy. Mary decides to do anything and go anywhere to be with him. She begins to pursue Steve relentlessly as he crisscrosses the country, covering breaking news stories. Mary's escalating infatuation is encouraged by news reporter Hartman Hughes, who enjoys torturing his insolent cameraman. With Mary never far behind and Hartman urging her on, Steve becomes increasingly unhinged. But when Mary becomes embroiled in the news story of the year, Steve and Hartman begin to see her differently. Despite the media storm surrounding her, Mary with her upbeat, unaffected manner brings together a small community of new friends. And all who encounter Mary will realize that sometimes the ones who don't fit in are the ones who really stand out.

The film stars Sandra Bullock, Thomas Haden Church and Bradley Cooper. It is rated PG-13 for sexual content including innuendos.

NOW SHOWING

THE FINAL DESTINATION

On what should have been a fun day at the races, Nick O'Bannon has a premonition in which multiple race cars crash, sending flaming debris into the stands, killing his friends and causing the upper deck of the stands to collapse on him.

Nick panics, persuading his girlfriend, Lori, and their friends, Janet and Hunt, to leave, escaping seconds before Nick's vision comes true. As Nick's premonitions continue and the crash survivors begin to die one by one, Nick must figure out how to cheat death before he, too, reaches his final destination.

The film is rated R for strong violent and gruesome accidents, language and a scene of sexuality. It stars Bobby Campo and Shantel VanSanten.

Stuck with her eccentric family and a stack of rejected job applications, Ryden starts to feel like she's going nowhere. The only upside is spending time with her best friend, Adam, and running into her hot next-door neighbor, David. But to survive life as a post grad, it may be time for a new plan.

But when the grown-ups get control of the Rock, trouble really starts, and Toe and his new friends must save the town.

The film stars Jimmy Bennett and Kat Dennings. It is rated PG for mild action and rude humor.

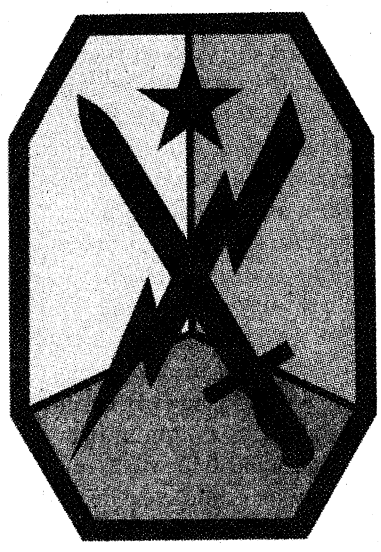
Post cable company vows better service

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

Technicians with Windjammer Cable, including the company's top regional engineer, arrived on post Tuesday to assess the amplifiers that control the signal quality received on the installation.

Over the next two months, the company will upgrade the 10th Mountain Division Road facility that receives and transmits signals to improve power stability and troubleshoot other active devices around post.

"That should help all services, whether it be Internet, video or phone. Everybody should start noticing a big difference," said Jim Bennett, regional general manager for Windjammer Cable.



"When it's all said and done, we'll have gone through the entire system. If anything is not working the way it should, we'll be able to identify and repair it," he said. "It's a priority. We want to provide the best service we can, take care of the customers we have and gain new customers."

Bennett said he expects the process to be finished by the

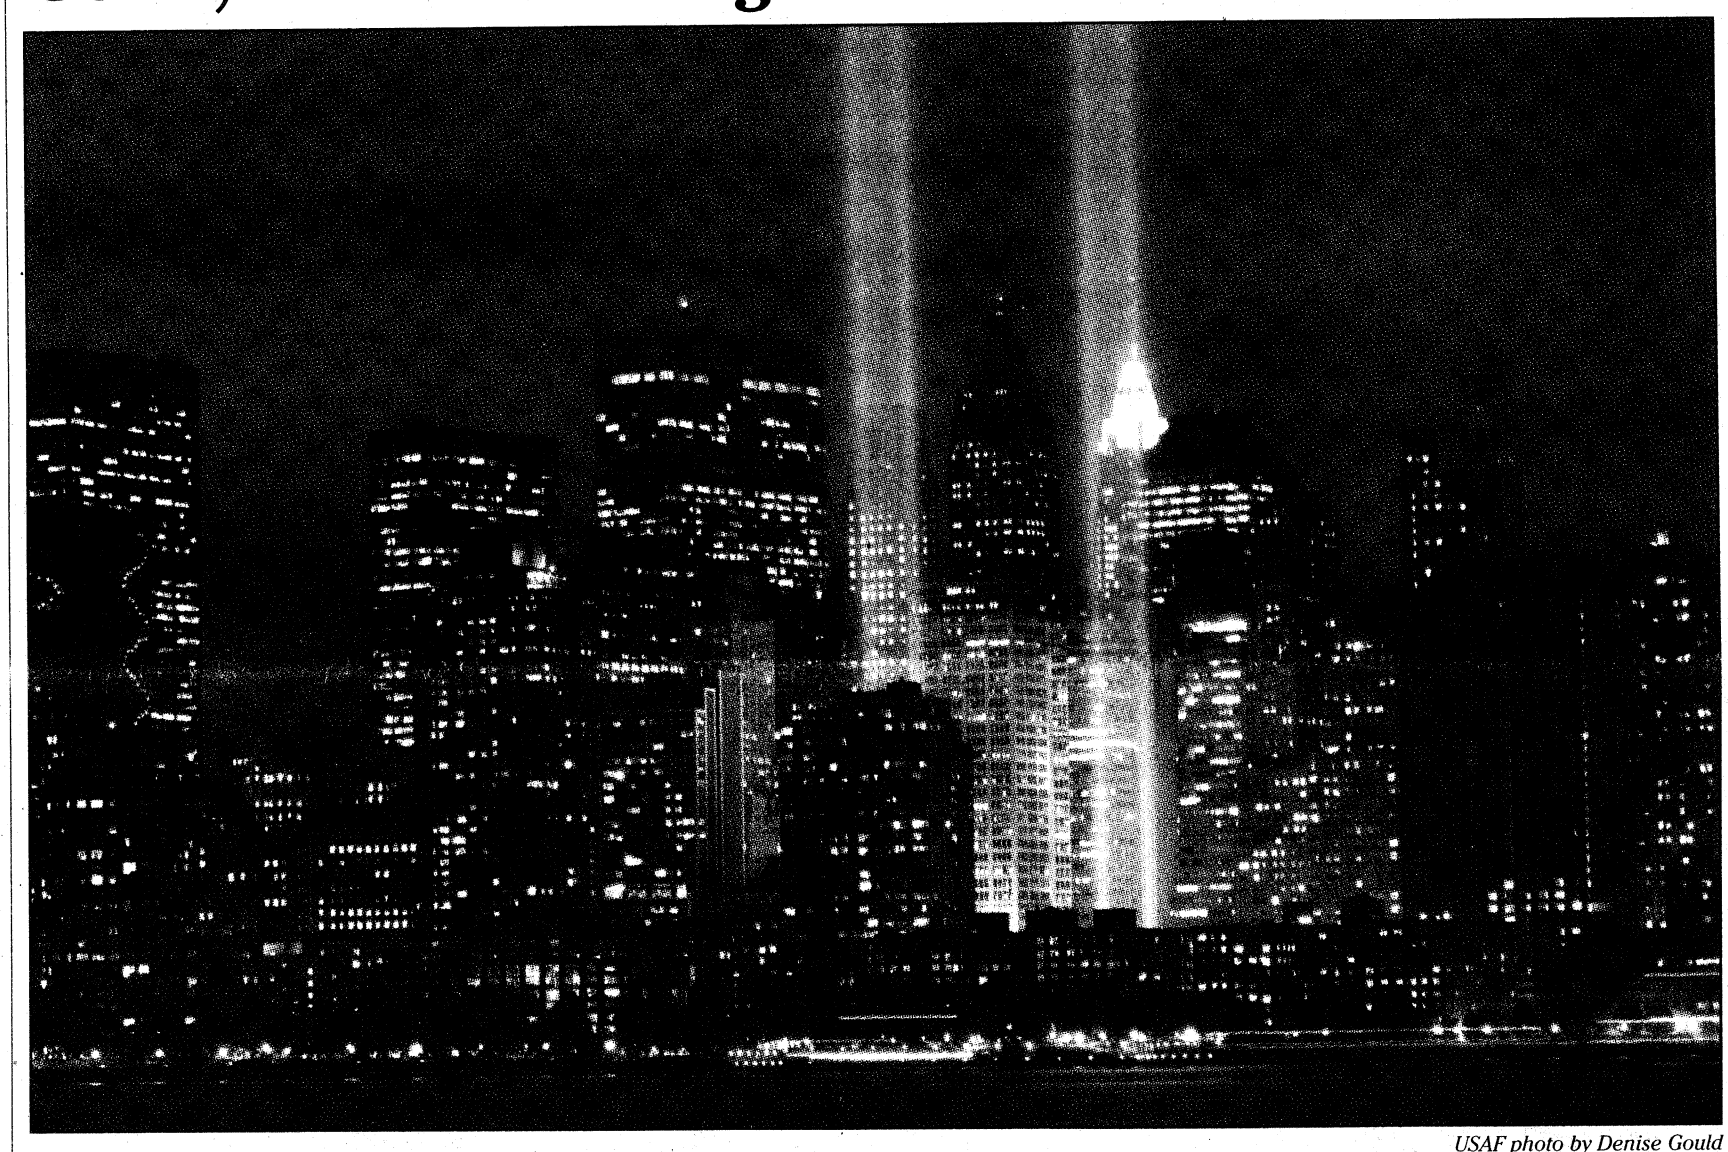
The new octagonal shape replaces the former upside-down spear shape, a symbolic gesture of distress

Patch dons new shape

Bridgett Siter
MCOE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

When the first Soldiers of the Maneuver Center don new shoulder insignia during the MCOE activation ceremony Oct. 1, it will be a revised version of the new patch introduced in February 2008. Fort Benning's Chief of Staff COL Chuck Durr made the announcement earlier this week.



The new octagonal design, approved by the Army Institute of Heraldry and the Army G1, replaces the spear-shaped patch that was often perceived as an upside-down Follow Me patch.

An upside-down emblem in the military normally is a signal of distress or defeat, said LTC(R) Selby Rollinson, deputy chief of staff for Fort Benning. The interior design remains the same with the lightning bolt and yellow depicting the Armor's speed, power and branch color. The bayonet and blue symbolize the Infantry's mission to close with and destroy the enemy and branch color. The red symbolizes valor and sacrifice.

The MCOE shoulder insignia, motto and crest were designed from a compilation of suggestions submitted during a 2007 Armywide design contest.

A spokesman for AAFES said the new patch will be available in stores in about 90 days.

COL(R) Rick Rescorla, a Vietnam veteran who died during the terrorist attacks on 9/11, will be honored with the unveiling of a bronze statue at 11 a.m. Sept. 17 at the National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center.

Rescorla, the vice president of corporate security for Morgan-Stanley, is credited for saving the lives of 2,700 people who worked in the World Trade Center's Tower 2. Seeing the first tower burn from his office on the 66th floor, he ordered employees to evacuate — putting to use the regular evacuation drills he had implemented after the 1993 truck-bomb attack. Halfway down, the second plane hit Tower 2. After getting the firm's employees out of Tower 2, Rescorla returned to the building. He didn't make it out.

"His heroic actions on (9/11), along with his extraordinary foresight and preparation, saved the lives of 2,700 people," said his widow, Susan Rescorla.

The bronze statue was based on a Peter Arnett photo taken at la Drang, Vietnam, in 1965, when Rescorla served as a second lieutenant with 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment. The photo appeared on the original cover of the best-selling book We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young by LTG(R) Hal

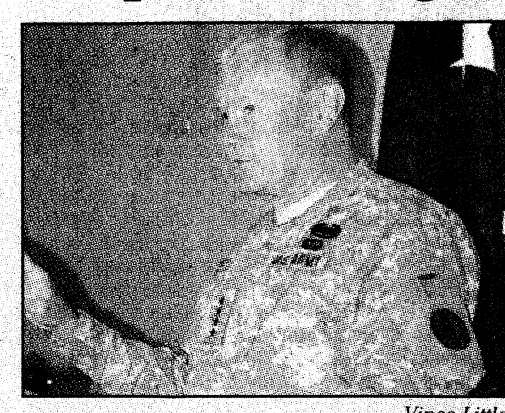
TRADOC commander discusses leadership, training

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The Army wants Soldiers to develop the attributes that will allow them to anticipate changes on the battlefields in Afghanistan and Iraq, the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's commanding general said.

GEN Martin E. Dempsey addressed training at Fort Benning and around the service while attending the Summer 2009 TRADOC Initial Entry Training Forum Sept. 1-2 at the Columbus Iron Works and Trade Center.



"We're trying to decide how to build in new skill sets for our leaders to meet the hybrid threats that exist in these uncertain times," Dempsey said. "The pace of change adds to the increasing complexity ... We're seeking creative thinking skills and trying to replicate those complexities in our training scenarios. We want to build on the ability to adapt."

The 198th Infantry Brigade hosted the forum, which brought together officials from all commands where initial entry training Soldiers attend basic training — Fort Benning, Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Sill, Okla., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Knox, Ky.

Army training center representatives gather about twice a year to review tasks and seek ways to improve training and achieve consistency, said COL Daniel Kessler, the 198th Infantry Brigade commander.

He said many discussions this time centered on marksmanship instruction and outcomes-

OPINION

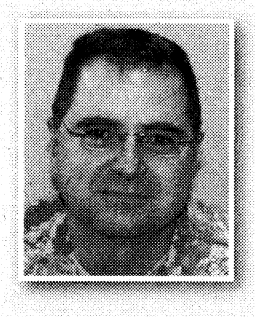
What would you do to improve Fort Benning?



The only thing I can say is down on Harmony Church there's a lot of construction, and the roads we have to use are bad ... potholes, it's uneven, and the speed limit doesn't help any either because it's 35 mph. The ones they're working on now are (for) the Maneuver Center of Excellence, so they have rerouted traffic. They need to maybe consider rebuilding those roads, too. That would make my commute a lot better.

— SFC Nicole Freeman
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

I wish there were more signs for directions because we get lost every time we come here. You just need more signs for civilians, telling them where to go — like "so many miles to this" or "turn here." Because there are so many areas; it's all over the place. Other than that, you have everything here; it's just knowing how to get there.

Fort Lewis, Washington, has the premier scuba diving facility in the Department of Defense. They are a five-star facility. We ought to look at doing something like that here. I would like to see Fort Benning have an MWR-sponsored dive shop. And it doesn't have to be at the cost of the local dive shops ... but we can provide a service for our Soldiers and families — make it more affordable and accessible.

— LTC Ken Sweat
TCM Soldier

The backup when you first come on post. We were stationed in Alaska before and they had ... more ID check stations. When the traffic gets congested during really busy hours, they should have more people to check IDs. Even if they had one additional person at each security point, I think it would move things along.

More restaurants — a sandwich shop like a Panera Bread or Jason's Deli. We run out of options here and we're always forced to eat quickly. A place that promoted healthier eating, I'd like to see that ... one place with a lot of healthy eating options. You got one restaurant and you order soup, salads, sandwiches or wraps. Maybe fruits instead of cakes or pies. Because you're going to eat where it's convenient.

What does it matter to you?

Bernard Goss
CUSTOMER SERVICE OFFICER

If you really want to make a difference in the services at Fort Benning, now is your chance.

From now until Friday, people who live, work or do business at Fort Benning have an opportunity to provide detailed feedback on all of the post's services.

The 2009 Customer Service Assessment, which falls under Customer Management Services, is the Installation Management Command's annual Armywide program for collecting customer feedback and using the data to evaluate and improve the installation programs and services. The assessment is intended to answer the all-important question in IMCOM — "What does it matter to Soldiers and to their Families?"

This assessment represents an opportunity to provide a comprehensive review and report on the garrison services customers use.

While the Interactive Customer Evaluation (ICE) Feedback system only captures individual customer satisfaction data from a single provider, the Customer Service Assessment captures much more.

This is an opportunity for customers to assess garrison services based on their expectations of the performance and importance of that service. The services are rated from a customer's viewpoint.

When you take the survey, you will be asked to provide demographic data that will automatically direct you to the appropriate assessment questions. In that way, family members or retirees will not be asked to rate services like the Central Issue Facility or the Ammunition Supply Point — two services used by Soldiers and their leaders.

The survey is incredibly important and will allow an opportunity for you to provide input into a comprehensive assessment of Fort Benning services. The more who take the survey, the better the data.

With thousands in Fort Benning and surrounding communities your voice will be heard. The survey can be completed in 15-20 minutes and covers services provided by every agency in the garrison, from the ID card section and family housing to Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs.

The Leadership assessment piece will provide measurable feedback from unit commanders and staff officers from the company, battery and troop level through Fort Benning leadership to include senior civilian leaders.

Using a scale of 1 (very poor) to 5 (excellent), leaders rate the "performance" and "importance" of the services provided by each of the garrison's directorates (DHR, DPW, DMWR, DOL, etc). They will also be asked to identify the top five most important services within each directorate that contribute to the accomplishment of the organizational mission.

It's a fantastic opportunity for Soldiers and their families to directly affect how services are provided. Everyone will be able to rate how well the services they receive match their expectations. IMCOM can use this feedback to improve services, which should ultimately affect Soldier and family quality of life.

The more customers in each category who take the time to complete the assessment, the more accurate and substantial the information will be. The data will be returned to Fort Benning in November where it will be used to identify and document best practices and to develop plans for improvement in services where you say there are issues.

If you want your voice heard and want to make an impact on the future of Fort Benning, take the time to complete the assessment.

For more information about the Customer Service Assessment, call 706-545-5267.

Going beyond the book answer

SPC Ben Hutto
3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS

There are all sorts of things I memorized for my promotion board. I can tell you everything from the muzzle velocity of the M-4 rifle to how many gallons of water a lister bag can hold. I can recite the noncommissioned officer and Soldier's creeds, even if five very intense pairs of eyes are staring at me. Using a combination of the online Army study guide, various field and training manuals and the knowledge of noncommissioned officers who helped prepare me for my board, I have accumulated quite a bit of information. Information that will, hopefully, make me a better leader in the future.

During my preparation, the NCOs who helped me prepare for the board quizzed me on these subjects. Nine times out of 10, I gave them the answer I memorized out of the study guide.

Most asked another question after my response. It normally went, "That is the book answer, but what does that mean? Explain it to me like I was your Soldier."

I always knew being an NCO was more than enforcing rules, but that question helped me understand it better. Most Soldiers will do anything they are ordered to do. I believe Soldiers perform tasks better if they understand the purpose behind it.

Army leadership is the ability to influence others by providing purpose, direction and motivation in order to accomplish the mission and improve the organization.

A good NCO is capable of showing his or her Soldiers how their task, no matter how small, is important and necessary. Soldiers want to feel like they aren't wasting their time.

The best NCOs I've worked with found a way to make sure I understood the purpose behind what I was doing.

The book answer will give Soldiers the correct information on how to do things, but it can't give them the little tips and tricks that come with experience. I'm talking about the best way to lace your boots before a ruck march or how to close a duffle that is filled to the brim. Most NCOs don't understand how much knowledge they have accumulated until they get new Soldiers, new Soldiers that don't have the knowledge experienced NCOs take for granted.

There isn't an Army regulation that tells you how to reach each and every Soldier. As an NCO, I hope I am able to remember every Soldier reacts to situations differently. What is effective in reaching one Soldier may intimidate and hinder the job performance of another.

Senior leaders rarely ask "book" questions or give missions that fall in neatly with every Army regulation. On my last deployment, my brigade was doing things that were considered "outside the box" and were tackling unique problems we couldn't have anticipated. It wasn't that we were throwing the book out the window; we simply had to write our own chapters and come up with our own answers.

As an NCO, that is what it all boils down to: coming up with answers.

Good leaders use their experience and knowledge to figure out the correct answer when it isn't spelled out in black and white. Good leaders listen to their subordinates and use their knowledge base to add to their own. A good leader realizes that in the end, whether the answer comes "from the book" or from the hip is unimportant. The only thing that matters is if it is correct.

"A tongue weighs almost nothing, but some have problems holding it."

Free combat-stress workshops focus on acceptance, open to community

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Ranger Joe's is sponsoring a two-day stress management program aimed at helping Soldiers, civilians and families of deployed service members tackle trauma.

The free workshops, broken into two daily sessions, are scheduled for 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sept. 18-19 at the National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center.

They'll be led by Harold McRae, a professional counselor and licensed marriage and family therapist with a private practice in Columbus, and Sarah Bird, a leading practitioner in energy psychology from Ireland who's worked as a personal development consultant for the past two decades.

Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joe's on Victory Drive, said he's paying about $6,000 out of his own pocket to fund the program. He took the classes last year and said he's gotten very positive results.

"It's something too good to sweep under the rug (and) I cannot imagine me trying to charge for it," Voorhees said.

"This is a situation where we plan to save lives. It's just that simple ... This is being done with pure love for our Soldiers. But it's open to anyone."

The workshops aren't just geared toward the individual dealing with a traumatic event, he said. Spouses, family members and friends also are encouraged to attend.

He said the program, which was devised as a way to help women who had been raped, is not carried out in a traditional group therapy manner.

"People don't have to say or talk about anything. It's not something where you empty your soul out. There's a procedure you go through," Voorhees said.

"It's so simple, yet it works. The beautiful part about it is after the four sessions, you don't ever need to go to another one if you don't want to ... I had immediate results within 20 to 30 minutes."

According to a program advertisement, the classes can help participants learn basic knowledge about combat stress and how it affects deployed troops; develop self-awareness and understanding by addressing certain emotions, beliefs and fears; and discover how to live life in the present through inner strength and new ways to relax and release tension.

"It allows your mind to accept there are things in this world you can't do anything about. What people are experiencing is normal, and there's a way to relieve it," Voorhees said. "We're real excited about it. People need to come in with an open mind and allow it to work."

Advance registration is preferred but walk-ins are welcome. For more information, contact McRae at 706-323-6123 or e-mail him at mcraeoffice@mindspring.com.

Army to launch 'master resiliency training'

In October, the Army plans to begin "master resiliency training" within the force — including the Guard and Reserve — as part of the Comprehensive Soldier Fitness program, according to a Sept. 3 report by the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation public affairs office.

The Comprehensive Soldier Fitness program focuses on the five dimensions of strength: emotional, social, spiritual, family and physical. Master resiliency training is aimed at building mental toughness.

GEN Martin E. Dempsey, the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's commanding general, talked about mental health and the rising rates of post-traumatic stress and suicide in the Army during the Summer 2009 TRADOC Initial Entry Training Forum in Columbus.

"We've been doing a lot of thinking and introspection to try to understand what eight years of war may have done to the fabric of our men and women who served," Dempsey said. "We want to build some coping skills at the basic training level to help them deal with situations they may encounter in the Army."

In mid-August, about 50 Soldiers — mostly drill sergeants or platoon sergeants with combat experience in squad or platoon leadership positions — attended a 10-day "master resiliency training" session at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, according to information provided by Walter Thompson, chief of the Directorate of Training's Central Taskings Office, current operations division.

The goal is to have noncommissioned officers who attended the course go back to their installations and teach "resiliency" to their unit's Soldiers or basic trainees, BG Rhonda Cornum, the Comprehensive Soldier Fitness director, said in an article posted on army.mil prior to last month's training program.

She said MRT would operate as a "train-the-trainer" program and eventually be taught during basic combat training, at officer schools and throughout the Army.

The program will be offered to family members and Army civilians on a voluntary basis beginning in October 2010, the DFMWR report stated.

Every summer at Camp Perry, Ohio, prior to the National Rifle and Pistol Trophy Matches, Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit take time out of their own training and preparation to pass their knowledge and superb shooting skills on to the next generation of American shooters.

The Small Arms Firing School was instituted in 1918 by the Department of Defense and is conducted by the USAMU. The school is held so the military can teach the efficient application of the fundamentals of marksmanship, said SFC Jason St. John, USAMU. The USAMU is assisted by members of the Air Force, Navy, Coast Guard, Marine Corps, and Army Reserve and National Guard.

The concept sprang so that civilians had familiarity with the weapon and could make a smooth transition from civilian to Soldier if the nation's security situation became unstable. More than 1,000 eager-to-learn shooters took part in this year's class.

"We are teaching civilians so that in a time of war, with the knowledge that they have and if it's a real bad deal, then they can help out the military," said SFC Lance Dement, USAMU. "But they are also going to become competitive shooters. We're going to show them what is right and stress to them the basics of shooting."

The day starts with classroom instruction and covers everything from the functioning of the weapon to proper positioning. The instructors are among the best in the industry, as evident at the pistol class, where 2009 National Pistol Champion SFC James Henderson of the USAMU was among the lead instructors. After a few hours in the classroom the students make the short trek to the range and get a feel for the weapon in dry fire simulation. There are two students per military instructor.

Upon their return from lunch, students load live rounds into the chamber and shoot, some for the very first time. The USAMU provides M-16 A2 rifles for the students to use and installs a block to deny the use of the "burst" or automatic function on the rifle. The school ends with a sanctioned Excellence in Competition match where shooters are afforded the opportunity to earn four points toward their distinguished badge.

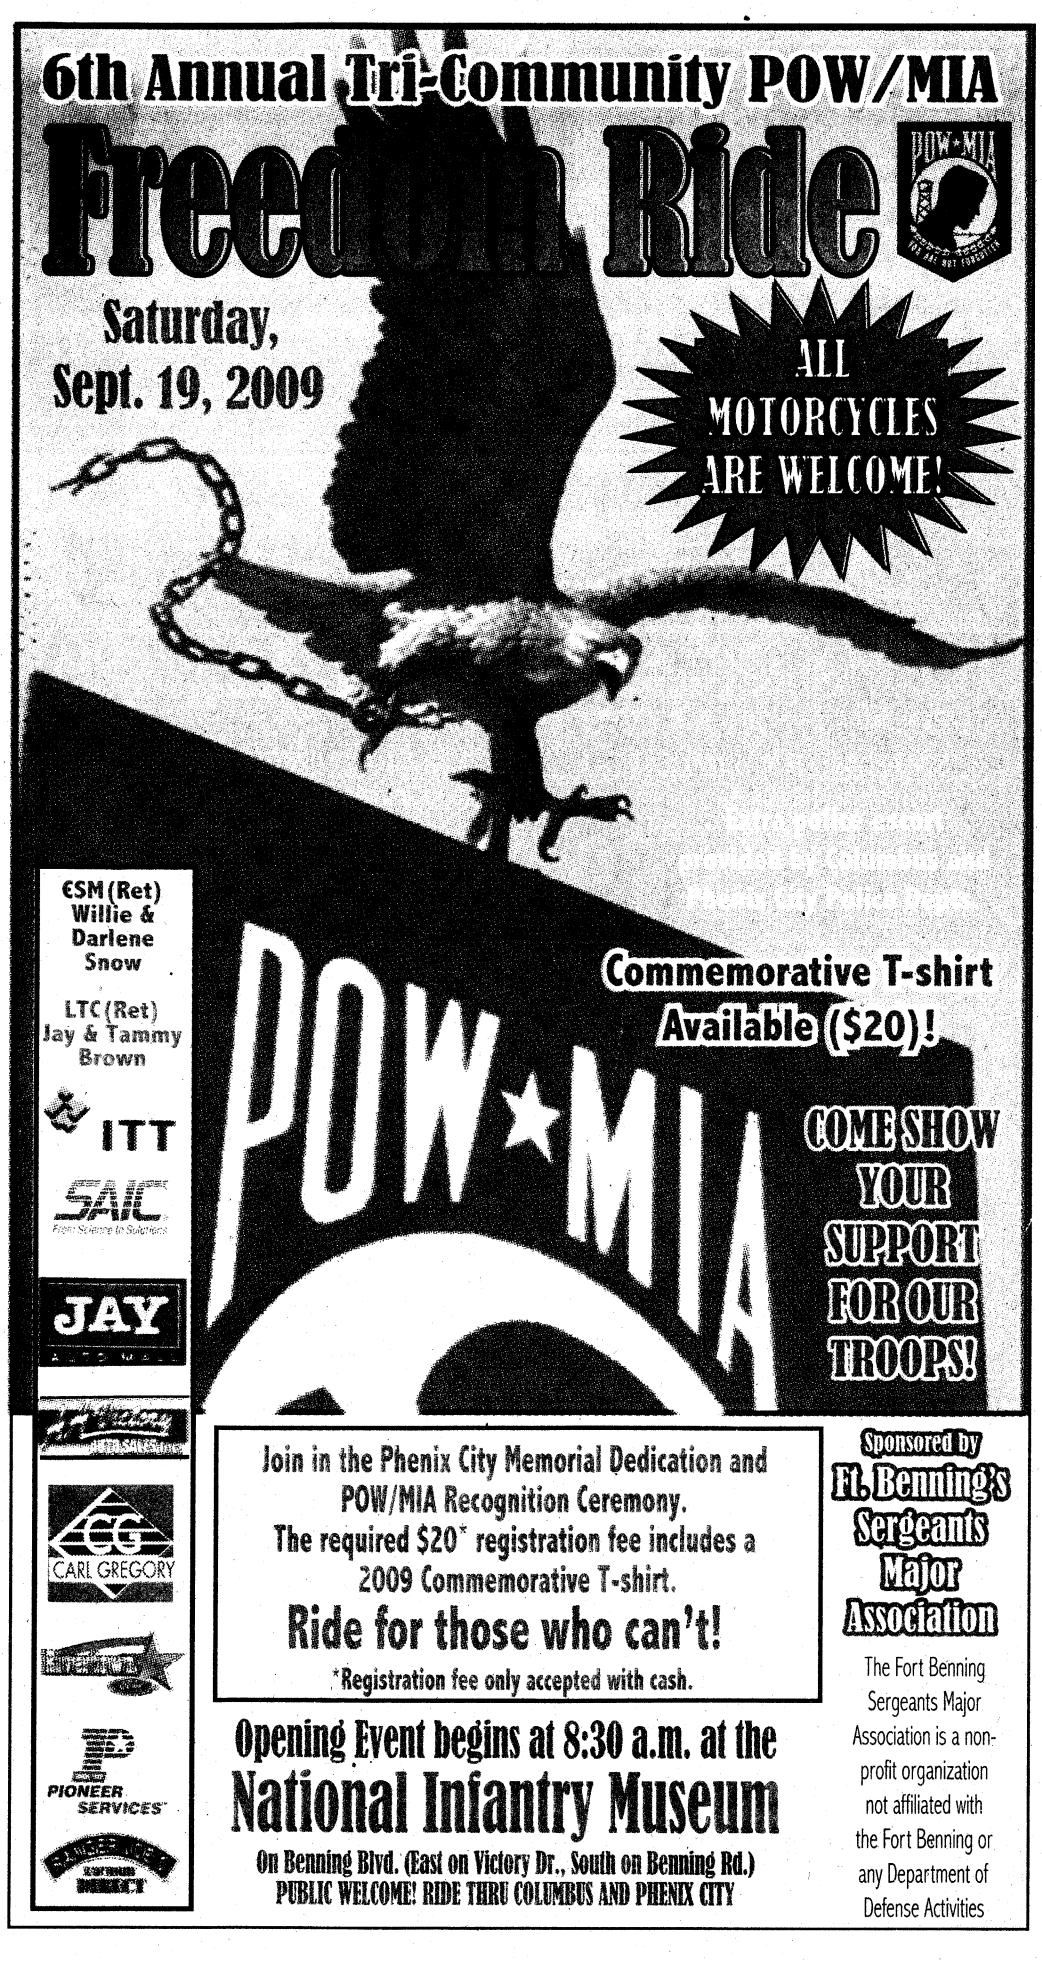
The school was tweaked this year and broken into a basic and an advanced class. The basic class was tailored for those who have never shot a pistol or rifle, said St. John. They were given an introduction to the military small arm and an inclusion to what a shooting competition encompasses.

"The advanced class was a clinic for middle-of-the-road to top-of-the line competitive shooters and covered mental management training, preparing for a competition, and basically what it's going to take to get to that next level," said St. John.

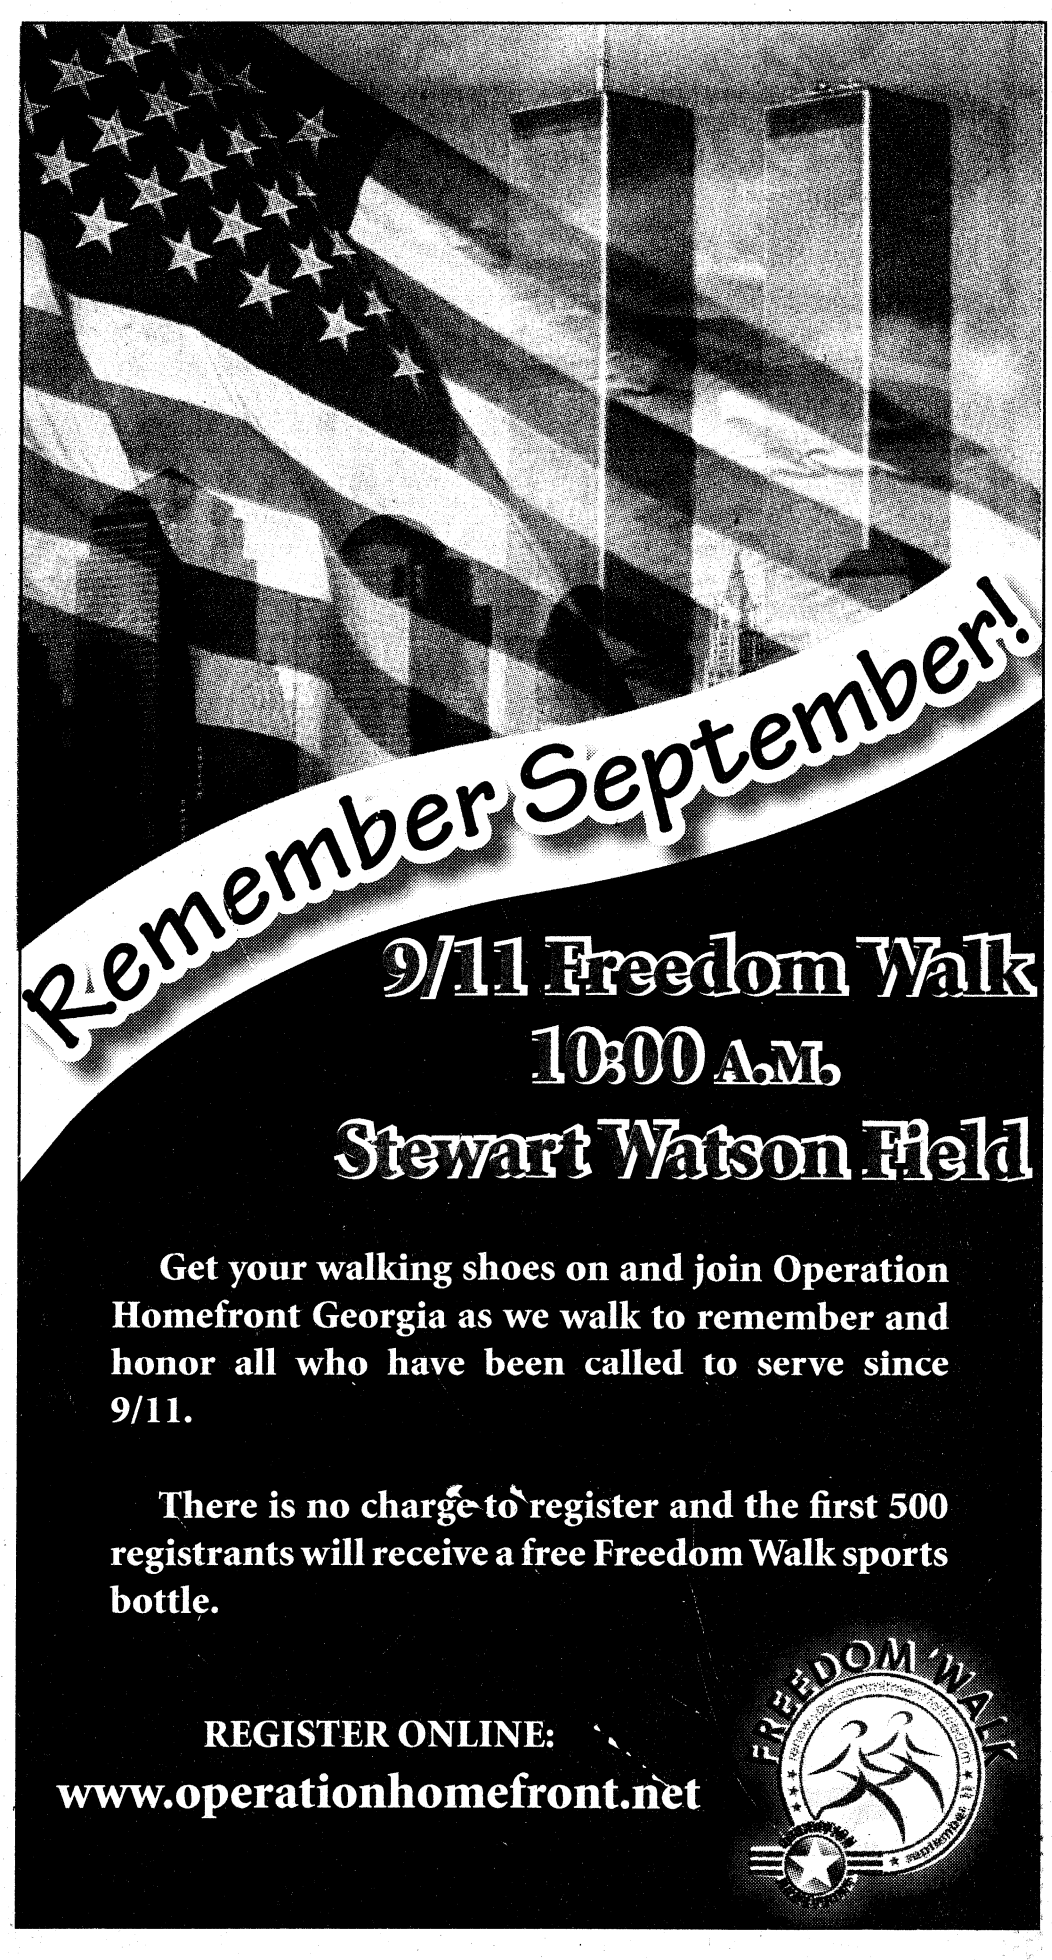
Splitting the class into two and enabling the instructors to teach in relation to a shooters experience instead of a general audience seemed to be a success as apparent by the large number in attendance.

"It's the first time we've done this and I think it's the way to go," Dement remarked. "In previous years we had around 400 students or less (for the rifle class) and now we're close to 700. With the price of ammo going up, the cost of fuel, the economy the way it is, and people are still coming — that's a good thing. They are the future of the sport."

All walks of life took part in the class—men, women and children. The students ranged in age from 11 to 70, St. John said. State junior shooting teams showed up, families planned their vacations around the trip to Perry and others flew a very far distance to learn from the best military in the world.



"I've been looking forward to this for sometime," said Stewart George, who traveled all the way from Belrose, Australia, with three others to take part in the school. "A friend of mine heard about the school and we wanted to learn from the best, so here we are. I've done some Army reserve time and shot a rifle, but not an M16A2."



The class enables the USAMU to connect with America. The dedication, professionalism and expertise the Soldiers demonstrate to the students instill positive impressions of the Army that may help prospective candidates in their decision to enter the Army.

"It's such a great thing," said Jim Davis, Hamilton, Ind. "This is the best place in the country, maybe the world, to learn about shooting and everything that goes with it."

Davis took his son and three other children from the DeKalb County 4-H Club to the rifle class, stressing to them how valuable the instruction they are receiving is to them now and down the road.

"I still remember when I came to this school as a teenager," he said. "I tell my kid that this is something that you'll always remember."

Troops to receive H1N1 flu vaccinations

Jim Garamone
AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — All military personnel will be vaccinated against the H1N1 flu virus, and the vaccine will be available to all military family members who want it.

The H1N1 vaccination program will begin in early October, said LTC (Dr.) Wayne Hachey, director of preventive medicine for Defense Department health affairs.

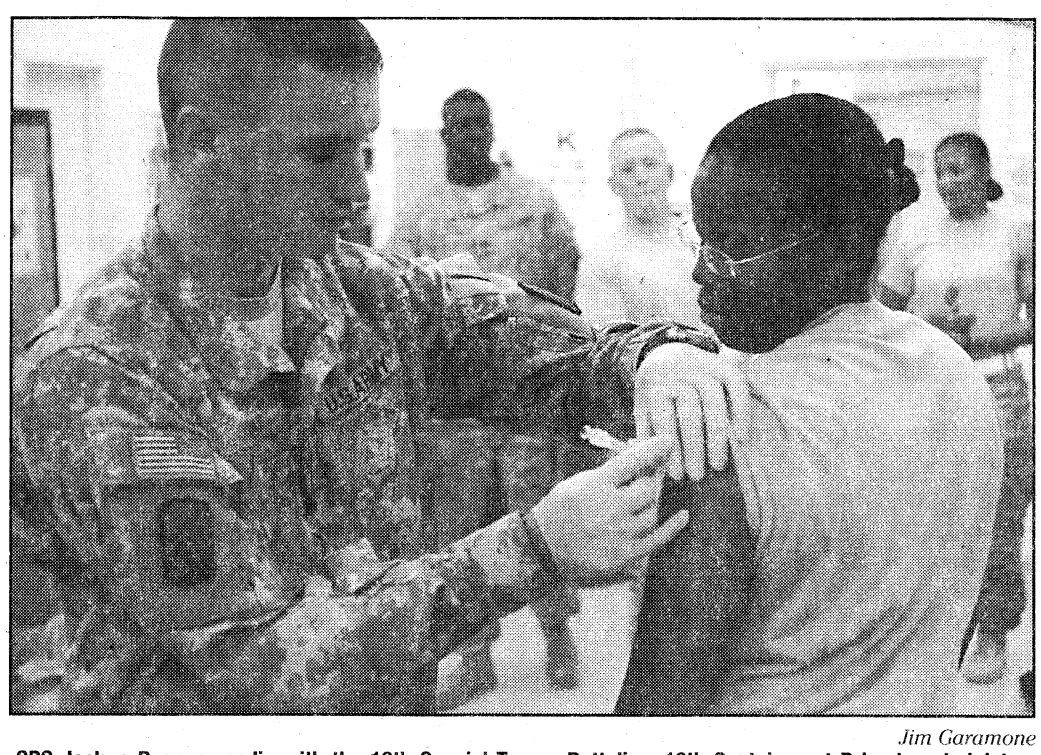
The vaccine, which is licensed by the Food and Drug Administration, will be mandatory for uniformed personnel, Hachey said.

"What we want to do is target those people who are at highest risk for transmission," he said.

Health care workers, deploying troops, those serving on ships and submarines, and new accessions are at the top of the list.

"Any place where we take a lot of people, squash them all together and get them nice and close and put them under stressful conditions will get the vaccine first," he said.

The department will use the usual seasonal flu vaccine distribution chain for the H1N1, Hachey said, noting that while the mass H1N1 vaccinations are new to the general population, the process for vaccinating against seasonal flu is old hat for the Defense Department.



"We've been doing this for decades," he said. "The system is tried and true."

The department initially will receive 1 million doses of the H1N1 vaccine, and another 1.7 million doses later in October.

Officials don't know yet whether people will need one dose or two, Hachey said.

"The assumption right now is that people will need two doses, 21 days apart," he said. "That may change."

FDA officials still are studying H1N1 and the vaccine, and the results should be known by the end of the month.

Jim Garamone
SPC Joshua Ryan, a medic with the 16th Special Troops Battalion, 16th Sustainment Brigade, administers the influenza vaccine to SSG Jacqueline Atkins at the troop medical clinic at Contingency Operating Base Q-West, Iraq, last November. On Sept. 1, the Department of Defense announced all troops will receive the H1N1 vaccination.

Seasonal flu vaccine already is available, and the Defense Department will begin giving those shots shortly, Hachey said.

"That has been our message to immunizers: to try and get as many people as they can immunized against the seasonal flu early," he said.

Guidelines for giving priority to family members will follow those for the general population, Hachey said. The Department of Health and Human Services is buying millions of doses of the vaccine.

"Installations are going to register with each state as an immunizer," Hachey said. "They will tell how many people they care for. This includes dependents, retirees and so on."

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention will place the order and will ship the vaccine where needed. Family members will have multiple opportunities to get the vaccine, whether at Defense Department medical facilities or off post, Hachey said.

The CDC has established target groups for those at greatest risk for transmitting or being affected by the H1N1. They include pregnant women, health care workers, those younger than 25 or older than 65, and those with pre-existing health conditions.

Hachey said previous plans are serving the Defense Department well.

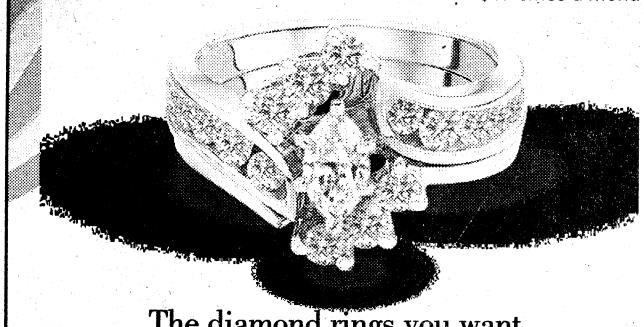
"We have been preparing for pandemic flu because of its potential impact on the mission," he said.

The symptoms of the H1N1 flu are almost the same as the seasonal flu: fever, sore throat, runny nose, nausea, muscle aches and fatigue. The 2009 H1N1 virus — formerly known as swine flu — is a pandemic virus, according to the World Health Organization.

U.S. officials call the virus "troubling" and urge communities across the United States to take actions to mitigate its effects. The federal government is urging states and municipalities to begin preparing now for the fall flu season.

President Barack Obama addressed the H1N1 pandemic following a White House meeting.

"As I said when we saw the first cases of this virus back in the spring, I don't want anybody to be alarmed, but I do want everybody to be prepared," he said. "We know that we usually get a second, larger wave of these flu viruses in the fall, and so response plans have been put in place across all levels of government."



But government cannot do it all, and the American people have a responsibility to stop the disease's spread, Obama said.

"We need families and businesses to ensure that they have plans in place if a family member, a child or a co-worker contracts the flu and needs to stay home," he said.

"And most importantly, we need everyone to get informed about individual risk factors, and we need everyone to take the common-sense steps that we know can make a difference," the president said. "Stay home if you're sick. Wash your hands frequently. Cover your sneezes with your sleeve, not your hands. And take all the necessary precautions to stay healthy. I know it sounds simple, but it's important and it works."

WTU major uses writing to soothe pains of war

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

"Do not forget the soldiers who died;
The ones who gave their life for the freedom ride;
The ones who volunteered to serve and did not hide;
America please don't forget."

In some ways, the opening lines of Raymond Christian's poem titled, America Don't Forget, have become a microcosm for his life, said the Army major who's been assigned to Fort Benning's Warrior Transition Unit the last eight months.

He wrote it earlier this year as a tribute to U.S. troops who fought in Iraq, Afghanistan, Vietnam and past wars. Only 20 copies are in distribution.

Christian said he presented the poem to a Vietnam veteran, who "broke down in tears and thanked me." Other recipients include three U.S. senators, and another was sent to President Barack Obama.

A poet and author with four books to his credit, Christian said he now uses writing to deal with his own struggles in the aftermath of a yearlong deployment to Afghanistan in 2008.

"I write to help, not to hurt," he said. "I want the American people not to forget the lives that have been lost, the families that have been destroyed due to Soldiers serving in war, their injuries and illnesses, the inability to function daily due to what the Soldier has sacrificed for your freedom and safety, your rights to go just about anywhere.

"I kneel and pray, I plead and beg with the American public … do not forget those who served to protect the shores of this great land."

Christian said he will chronicle the experiences and challenges he faced in an upcoming fifth book titled, Afghanistan: Eyes Down Range.

Luquita King, the reference librarian at Sayers Memorial Library, said she got to know Christian when he'd come in to do research.

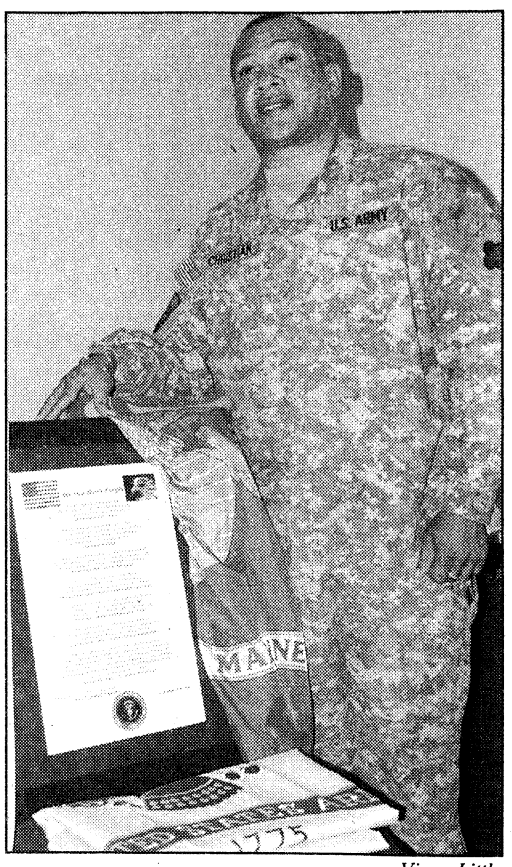
"The more I read his stuff, the more I saw the passion in his work and how great it is," she said. "He has so much compassion for people in general. You would've thought war would've made him jaded … but his writing is all about love and compassion. I think that's wonderful for someone who had been in a combat environment."

Christian later donated one of his books, Women Tell What Men Should Know, which he spent more than three years writing, to the library. In the book, he rails against gangsta rap as "degrading" to women and also interviews several prominent female figures.

His military career began in 1980 when he enlisted for four years in the Marine Corps. A decade later, he was commissioned as an Army Infantry officer after graduating from the University of Central Oklahoma.

Last year, he was attached to the New York Army National Guard's 27th Brigade Combat Team as an active-duty augmentee during the unit's deployment to Camp Phoenix in Kabul. Christian headed a logistics task force, served as a camp contracting officer representative and public affairs officer. He rode on numerous convoys and took part in humanitarian assistance missions and civil military operations.

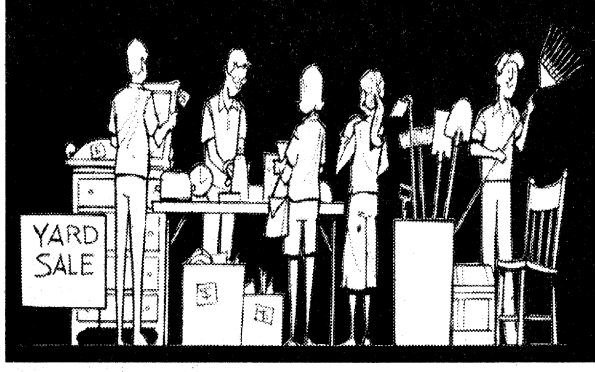
"Our reason for being over there is justified … I'd return if I could," he said. "There is still much more that can be done in giving aid and assistance to Afghanistan. It was a heart-wrenching experience and one I'll never forget."



Christian, an ordained elder in the Church of God in Christ, said he counseled Soldiers for two hours a night in Afghanistan and prayed for their safety outside the wire.

King said he's humble but calls him a "multifaceted" individual and great representative for the Army and military.

"He's very diverse in his interests and things he's capable of doing," she said. "I think his patriotism is beyond question. You can hear it in his voice, the love for his country. It's awesome. And you see the same things in his writings."



Christian, who was inducted into the National and International Poets Hall of Fame in 1997, said America Don't Forget conveys his love for the U.S. military and all who served in the nation's wars.

"Do not forget those who will return wounded and scared for life;
They will carry it around when they return, the memories of war;
Rejected, traumatized, disfigured, badgered but not beaten;
Do not forget them America, Don't forget."

Forum: Focuses on changes for small-unit leaders

based training, which is aimed at cultivating Soldier adaptability.

"They need to be able to take what they know and use it to work through any problem, regardless of the situation they get placed into," Kessler said.

"We want to give the Soldier a set of skills to be able to solve problems within his level of responsibility."

Under a Fort Benning initiative, Soldiers in the IET environment go through combat familiarization fire, he said. The program places trainees in a simulated combat environment and forces them to combine all the marksmanship skills necessary for success in combat today.

Kessler said it presents Soldiers with multiple scenarios and numerous targets, forcing an individual to identify the most dangerous threat. Trainers also randomly insert "dummy rounds" within a magazine to cause weapon malfunctions.

"(A Soldier) could be firing and suddenly have to deal with that and continue to engage the enemy," he said. "He has to make decisions on what cover he will use and when to change magazines ... It is a very good example of an outcomes-based training environment that forces the Soldier to solve problems and be adaptive."

At the forum, TRADOC medical officials talked about health-related issues for basic trainees such as heat-injury prevention and the proliferation of the H1N1 flu virus, Kessler said.

"We're always looking at ways to prevent flu and potentially a spread of the flu virus within the basic training world," he said. "As you can image, with 60 guys living in a bay, it's like a petri dish at times. We do a lot of prevention against infections."

Kessler said the conference produced good collaboration and sharing of best practices.

"We're developing connections with brigade commanders at other training centers — all in the spirit of partnership and building a better team," he said.

Dempsey said the Army has changed its approach to training and carrying out missions in Iraq and Afghanistan. Since the early days of the conflicts, the focus has shifted dramatically at the tactical level, he said.

"We've made some enormous changes to try to push the capabilities required to small-unit leaders, because this kind of conflict is really more about small-unit leaders than it is about senior leaders," he said.

The four-star general said the Army must continue molding Soldiers for the drastically different environments they'll face on both fronts in the war on terrorism.

He called Fort Benning a "center of excellence for small-unit tactics and marksmanship" and a key player in that effort.

> "The question comes back to ... are we giving them the right skills?"

> — Gen. Martin E. Dempsey, TRADOC commander

"The question comes back to ... are we giving them the right skills?" Dempsey said.

"We are faced with unique challenges today. We have to make sure we make best use of the time and resources available to ... (forge) a consistent way forward."

Dempsey became TRADOC commander last December after serving as acting head of U.S. Central Command from March to October 2008.

New NCOs to be honored at ceremony

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

More than 60 newly promoted sergeants and appointed corporals are expected to take part in the U.S. Army Infantry Center's NCO Induction Ceremony Sept. 25 at the Benning Conference Center.

The ceremony, set to begin at 2 p.m., honors the Fort Benning Soldiers who became noncommissioned officers during the fiscal year's third and fourth quarters, which stretches from April to September.

"It is important to witness the transition of the junior enlisted Soldier into the Army's time-honored corps of noncommissioned officers," said SGM Agnes Bennett-Green, the operations NCO for USAIC's Directorate of Operations and Training. "This is a significant milestone in a Soldier's career."

She said the group will be administered the Noncommissioned Officer Charge, a creed and right of passage read at promotion ceremonies. CSM Earl Rice, the command sergeant major of USAIC and Fort Benning, will speak during the ceremony.

All Soldiers promoted to the NCO level since April should be provided an opportunity to participate in the ceremony, Bennett-Green said. Any who would like to attend is asked to contact his or her brigade operations sergeant major no later than Thursday.

For more details, contact Bennett-Green at agnes.bennettgreen@us.army.mil or 706-575-8650.

Corps awards $10.2M for construction of central wash facility at Harmony Church

U.S. ARMY CORPS OF ENGINEERS

SAVANNAH, Ga. — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Savannah District, awarded a $10.2 million contract for the construction of a state-of-the-art central wash facility on Harmony Church to R.C. Construction of Greenwood, Miss.

The 20-acre central wash facility will accommodate the tanks coming to post when the Armor School relocates to Fort Benning as part of the Army's Base Realignment and Closure program.

This project is second of its kind at any Army installation in the United States, said Billy Birdwell, Public Affairs officer for the Corps of Engineers, Savannah District. A similar facility is under construction in Alaska.

This project differs from other standard wash facilities because it will incorporate InterClean basin technology, Birdwell said. Widely known in the construction industry, InterClean Equipment Inc. is a worldwide leader in heavy-duty, automatic high-pressure cleaning systems.

While standard wash facilities have multiple, large, in-ground basins to recapture and reuse water, the InterClean basin technology operates with only two storage basins. It smaller and easier to operate than standard systems, he said. Also, while standard basins often require a time delay in order to refill between heavy wash volume, InterClean basin technology ensures a continuous supply of water with no delay.

The scope of work includes parking and staging areas for 52 vehicles, three drive-through washing lanes equipped with InterClean basin technology, 20 individual wash stations, an enclosed break shelter and an operating booth.

The facility will have the capabilities to wash 80 tracked or wheeled vehicles in about 10 hours. Design and construction will span 540 days, according to the contract.

Like all Army construction, the central wash facility will satisfy Silver rating criteria established by the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) rating system, in accordance with the U.S. Green Building Council standards, Birdwell said.

For more information, call Birdwell at 912-652-5014 or 912-652-5279.

Unveiling: Coincides with I-beam dedication

The statue unveiling will coincide with the arrival of a steel I-beam from the North Tower of the WTC.

The beam, which begins a 1,000-mile road trip from New York to Fort Benning Saturday, is being dedicated to all the men and women of the U.S. Army who have lost their lives since the attacks and the Soldiers who continue to serve, said Greg Alspach, a volunteer coordinator with Iron and Steel-NYC.

Fire Engine No. 343, the New York Fire Department's ceremonial engine, will transport the 14-foot beam to Georgia with an escort from approximately 1,000 motorcycle riders, Alspach said.

A sister section of the beam was given to the U.S. Marine Corps at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

In 2010, another section will be escorted to Washington, D.C.

The assessment is intended to answer the all important question in IMCOM — "What does it matter to Soldiers and to their families?"

The assessment, available at www.myarmyvoice.org, takes 15-20 minutes to complete. The data will be returned to the installation in November where it will be used to identify and document best practices and develop plans for improvement in services where customers say there are issues. BENCH NOTES

JOHN W. PEELER

Seymour a no-show

Five-time Pro Bowl defensive end Richard Seymour, acquired by the Oakland Raiders Sunday from the New England Patriots, still hasn't reported to the Raiders following his trade.

New England acquired Oakland's first-round draft pick in 2011 for Seymour.

While Oakland coach Tom Cable has said Seymour wants to play for the Raiders, you have to wonder if this isn't another one of those slick moves by Patriots coach Bill Belichick to cheat the system.

Big Ben saga continues

The former Nevada casino worker, Andrea McNulty, who accused Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger of sexual assault, has new conditions for dropping the lawsuit against the quarterback.

McNulty wants Roethlisberger to acknowledge the rape, apologize and donate $100,000 to the Committee to Aid Abused Women, a Reno-based nonprofit organization.

The attorney for McNulty said his client wants to regain her dignity and wants to dispel the appearance she is only doing it for the money.

Roethlisberger's camp rejected the offer.

Kahne in the Chase?

NASCAR driver Kasey Kahne's win in Atlanta Sunday vaulted him from 11th place in the Chase for the Cup to sixth.

Only four drivers have locked up a spot in the 12-driver Chase. Drivers in the fifth through 15th spot are separated by just 122 points, so the final eight spots will be determined in the final regular-season race.

Kahne jumped five spots in the last race, so he will have to guard against having a bad race if he wants to stay in the hunt for the cup.

ESPN will televise the final regular-season race at Richmond, Saturday beginning at 7:30 p.m.

BYU jumps 11 spots

It didn't take long for some of the college football preseason favorites to drop out of The Associated Press Top 10.

Following its upset of Oklahoma, BYU jumped from No. 20 to No. 9 in the poll.

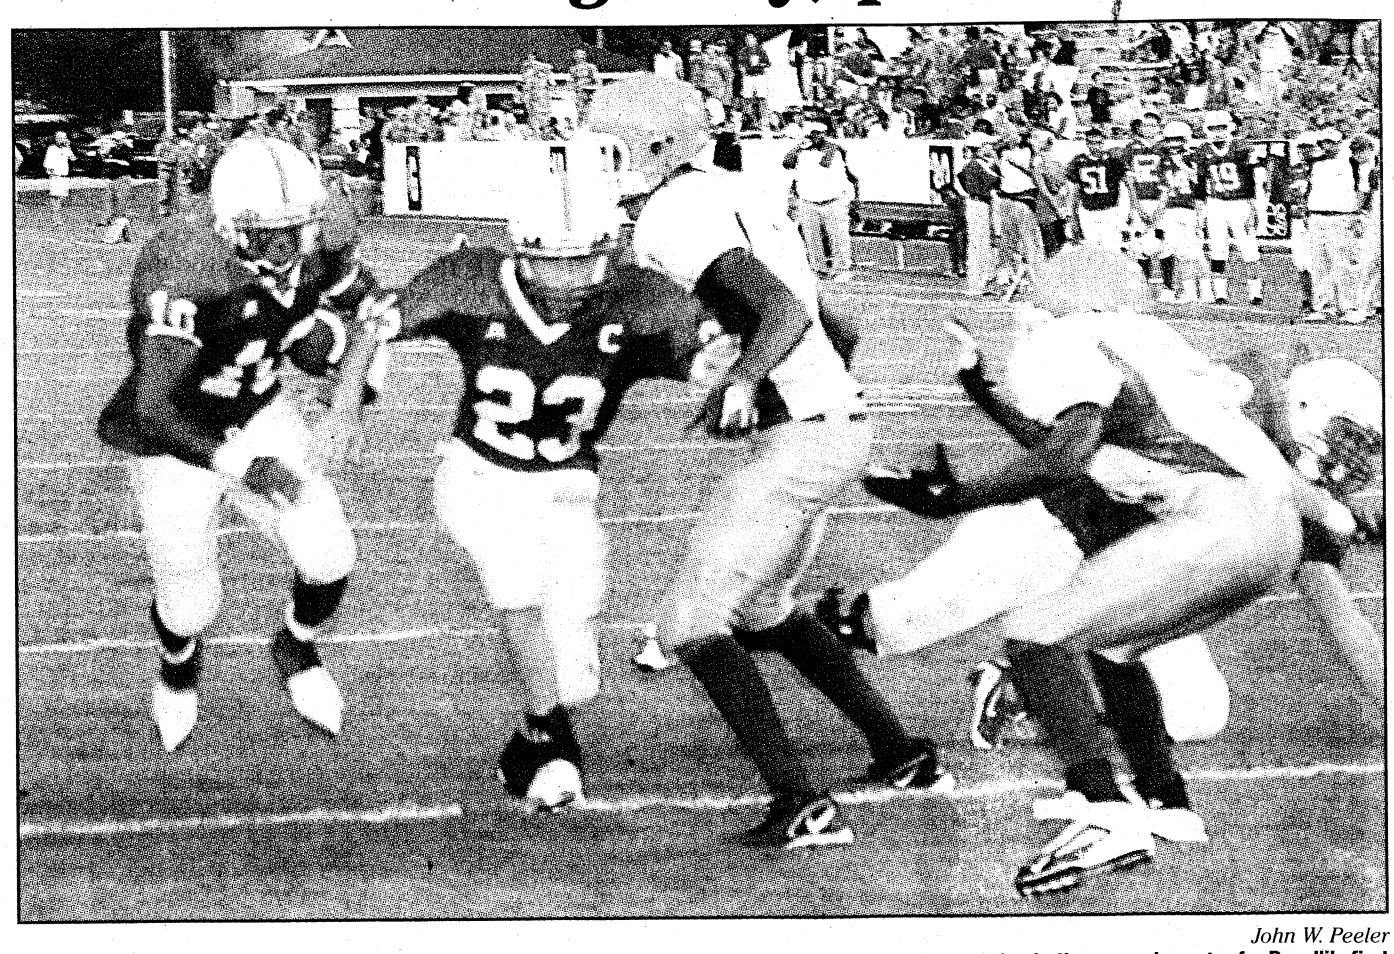
Florida and Texas kept their No. 1 and No. 2 ranking, respectively, while USC jumped one spot to No. 3 followed by Alabama, which moved up one spot to No. 4.

Oklahoma State moved up four spots to No. 5 after beating Georgia, which fell from No. 13 to No. 21.

Rounding out the Top 10 are Mississippi at No. 6, Penn State at No. 7, Ohio State at No. 8, and California at No. 10.

Things could shake up next week with USC playing Ohio State.

Vikings return to Doughboy, post shutout



John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

The last time Pacelli High School head coach Bryan Eason ventured into Fort Benning's Doughboy Stadium as a member of the Vikings coaching staff, he was a position coach — the Vikings won the 2003 Region 2-AA title that year.

In his second year as a head coach, Eason brought his Vikings back to Doughboy Stadium Friday coming away with a 21-0 victory over Lumpkin's Stewart-Quitman Royal Knights in the first region matchup for both teams.

"I tell you, it's a special feeling," Eason said. "I am from a military family and I always said if I had a chance to do that (play in Doughboy) again, I would do something special for the Soldiers. I think it went great. There were around 4,500 (Soldiers)

CPT Jason Tebedo has experienced at least half the pain of a triathlon. He'll face the full brunt next month.

On Oct. 10, he's scheduled to compete in the Ford Ironman World Championship at Kona, Hawaii, an endurance race that leads participants over 2.4 miles of swimming through ocean waves, 112 miles of biking and a 26.2-mile marathon run.

The Ironman is considered the sport's biggest stage, with tens of thousands of triathletes bidding for a spot in the field every year, according to the event's Web site at http://ironman.com/worldchampionship. Only 1,800 make it.

Tebedo, 28, said he earned a berth by placing first in his age division at the Hawaii Half Ironman on May 30. He was stationed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, and took advantage of a special qualifier for state residents. Tebedo finished a 1.2-mile swim, 56-mile bike ride and 13-mile run in five hours, six minutes.

He started the Maneuver Captains Career Course at Fort Benning two months ago and will graduate in December.

Tebedo said his shot at completing the Ironman is Finding normalcy in a world of football fanatics

John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

Player jersey — check. Team hat — check. Ritz crackers and squeeze cheese — roger that.

Now all I need to do is wait — two more days.

After waiting eight months, unless your team played Thursday or plays on Monday Night Football, the long-awaited National Football League season kicks off Sunday.

For a long time I subscribed to the NFL Sunday Ticket package with DirecTV, but I missed the days of going to the local sports bar and grill and interacting with other less-than-rational, often foolish admirers of NFL teams.

No, we — the fans of NFL teams — do not always have our best face on when watching our team play — but we do have our game faces on — albeit sometimes painted.

We are not always rational and don't claim to be when it comes to our team. We walk around with headgear resembling something you would expect to see in a Nordic assault or perhaps a block of cheese in a Kraft commercial, but it all has meaning to us.

While normal people scoff at the oversized jerseys we wear with someone else's name on it, we consider those who don't wear said jerseys to be abnormal.

I've heard NFL fans' elevators don't always go to the top, but the support for our teams is always over the top.

If you want a lesson in loyalty, look no further than an NFL fan.

NFL fans weather bad seasons with their teams yet they have to have faith. We believe in a higher authority and have plays named in honor of that authority such as the "Hail Mary" and the "Holy Roller."

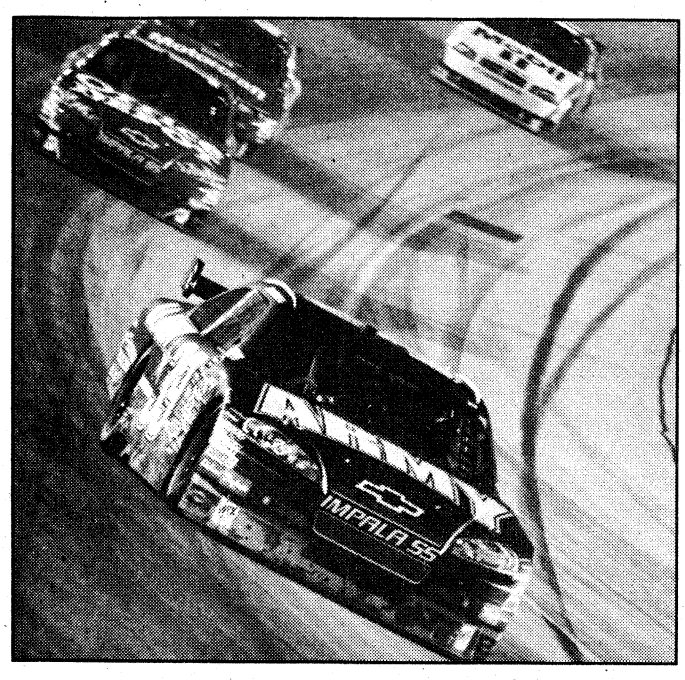
We are family-oriented and that is why we can badmouth our team when it makes blundering mistakes, but will defend said team when another team's fan badmouths them. After all, no team is perfect, and you don't throw stones if you live in a glass house.

NFL fans are a talented group — if you don't believe me, watch a televised broadcast. It takes a lot of artistic ability to come up with recognizable and relevant slogans to match the letters CBS, NBC, FOX and ESPN — try it yourself — not easy, is it.

With the exception of having a dog as a mascot — for obvious reasons — NFL fans are animal lovers.

We root for our beloved animal mascots on land, sea and air. We cheer our beloved Broncos, Dolphins and Falcons, and let's not forget Lions and tigers and Bears — oh my.

Finally, no matter where you go NFL fans are normal people every other day of the week, except Sunday.



As a recruiter, I was taught to combat negative inferences about the Army by saying, "The Army is a cross-section of society and it takes all kinds of people to serve."

The same is true of NFL fans — we are a cross-section of society, and it takes all kinds of people to be fans.

Today, I am the mild-mannered Clark Kent. Sunday, I will have my game face on and will be the most irrational, headgear and jersey wearing, over-the-top, loyal, God fearing, family oriented, artistic, animal-loving "normal" person you have ever laid your eyes on.

I am a fan, hear me roar.

Newman chases the cup, finishes ninth in Atlanta

Cameras in Action
Army driver Ryan Newman speeds around a turn Sunday in his No. 39 Chevy Impala during the Pep Boys Auto 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway, where he finished ninth.

David Ferroni
ARNEWS

HAMPTON, Ga. — Ryan Newman made another late-race charge to post a ninth-place finish in Sunday night's Pep Boys Auto 500 Sprint Cup race at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

The U.S. Army/Haas Automation pilot claimed his 11th top-10 result of the season in his No. 39 Chevy Impala SS.

Despite the performance by the Stewart-Haas Racing team, Newman dropped two spots in the driver standings — from seventh to ninth — but is still 81 points inside the Chase cut line.

The final race before the 12-driver Chase for the Sprint Cup Championship field is set will be Saturday night at Richmond International Raceway.

Regardless of any other driver's finish at Richmond, Newman's clinch scenarios for a Chase berth are: finish 16th or better, or finish 17th and lead at least one lap, or finish 19th and lead the most laps.

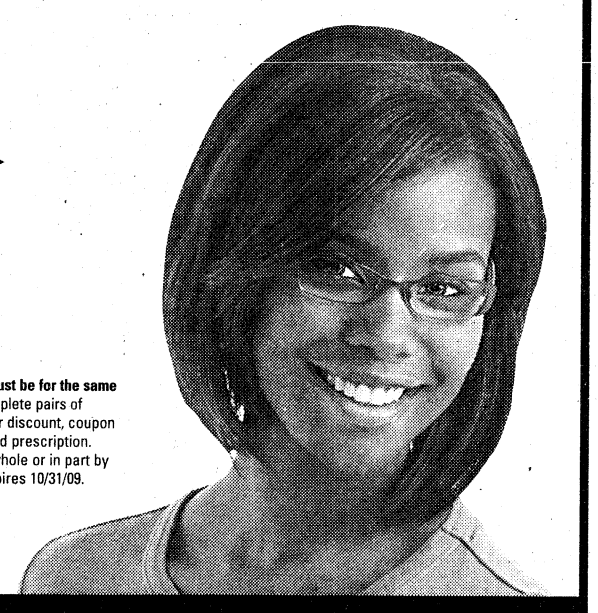
"We're not taking anything for granted, but we do control our own destiny," said Newman, who has been inside the Chase standings since the May 2 race at Richmond.

"We need to make sure to take care of our own business and not be concerned with what other teams might or might not do," he said.

Newman's march to a top-10 finish during the under-the-lights race at Atlanta started to come to life as the 325-lap event was winding down on the 1.54-mile oval. With 50 laps remaining his track position was in the high teens.

"It was another Soldier-like effort by this Army/Haas Automation team," said Newman, who qualified 23rd. "We were inconsistent with handling issues for a good portion of the race, but never gave up the fight and battled for every spot until the checkered flag flew. It was a strong come-from-behind effort and a good points race.

"We stayed patient through our problems. It was frustrating not running up front, but we didn't want to do anything stupid that could have taken us out of the race.



"The good news is that we got the kinks worked out when it counted and were able to make a nice gain in track position."

Newman's teammate and points leader, Tony Stewart, finished 11th. The race winner was Kasey Kahne.

Rounding out the top five in order were: Kevin Harvick, Juan Pablo Montoya, David Reutimann and Mark Martin.

Pacelli: Vikings blank Royal Knights

there, so it was great."

Eason said there were some adjustments he had to make in order to play in the stadium — and he didn't mean the stadium lights going out for 26 minutes in the third quarter, or the sprinklers coming on.

"The thing that always gets me is the noise level they (Soldiers) bring to a stadium," Eason said. "They get loud cheering you on, so when you come in you had better have some hand signals. That is one adjustment we had to make."

Following a scoreless first quarter, the Vikings got on the scoreboard on a 3-yard run by Marvin Lawrence, and with Mike Jacobs point after, the Vikings led 7-0.

With 4:30 left in the second quarter, Vikings' quarterback Wil Wells hooked up with tight end Rhydian Coyle on a 49-yard touchdown pass to put the Vikings ahead 13-0. Jacobs added the point after, and at the half Pacelli led, 14-0.

Pacelli defensive back Jon Duncan intercepts a Royal Knights pass on the Vikings 2-yard line with 4:58 remaining in the game.

The Vikings scored their final touchdown of the game with 6:32 remaining in the third quarter on a 66-yard scamper by running back Joseph Reese. Jacobs added the extra point to round out the score, 21-0.

In the loss, Stewart-Quitman had Chris Brown touchdown runs of 22 and 17 yards called back by holding penalties, turned the ball over on downs eight times and had one interception.

"We knew going into the game they were going to be a different team (than in the past) ... I think they will sneak up on someone during the season," Eason said. "They have a great coaching staff who are trying to turn things around for them."

Eason said the team made some changes to prepare for some tough teams ahead after last week's loss, so the changes were made earlier rather than later.

"Not to take anything away from them, but we knew after this game we were going to run the gauntlet (of tough teams)," Eason said. "We made some personnel changes from the week before and it got us off a little shaky. We moved some tackles and guards around and a new center, so we need to work on some things to get better for our next game."

With the win, the Vikings moved to 1-1 overall and 1-0 in Region 2-A while Stewart-Quitman is 0-2 overall and 0-1 in Region 2-A.

Pacelli and Stewart-Quitman take on Region 2-A foes at 7:30 p.m. today with Pacelli taking on Marion County in Buena Vista, Ga., while Stewart-Quitman takes on Central-Talbotton in Talbotton, Ga.

Ironman: Raising money for Wounded Warrior Project

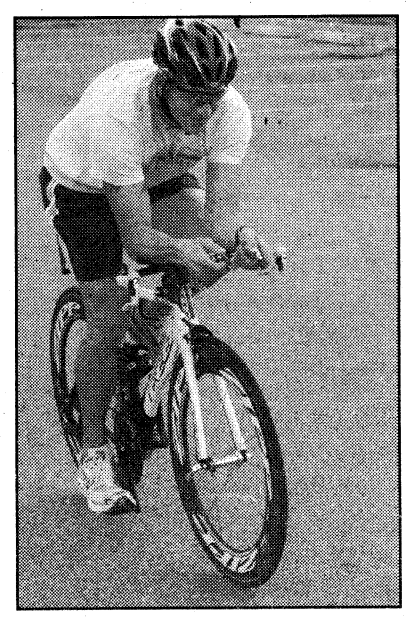
more than just a personal goal. He's raising money and awareness for the Wounded Warrior Project. He's collected almost $2,000 so far but hopes to reach $5,000 in donations.

"I am not seeking sponsorship," he said. "I am seeking help in the form of donations for wounded Soldiers who receive financial assistance from the WWP."

Tebedo, who has gone through Ranger and Airborne schools, said he got the idea to attempt a triathlon during his 15-month deployment to Iraq with the 25th Infantry Division. After returning in March, he began preparing for the Hawaii Half Ironman.

"It was kind of like that next challenge in life, something to push myself to complete," he said. "I had a buddy who did triathlons. I thought, if this guy can do it, I can do it."



By engaging in a sport that taxes the body and mind so heavily, Tebedo said he also views himself as a role model for others, particularly his Soldiers.

"If you really apply yourself, this is what you can accomplish," he said. "Knowing the Soldiers I lead see me do this, maybe they'll think they can do it too or do more."

The Ironman is a grueling test of wills run under demanding conditions that make it among the world's toughest events, Tebedo said. Temperatures are typically in the 90s and the humidity is above 90 percent. The heat radiates off an asphalt blacktop most of the time, and winds can gust to 20 mph.

Since its inception more than three decades ago, the Ironman has produced images of triathletes literally crawling across the finish line, physically and emotionally drained.

"It's hard to describe misery," Tebedo said. "You're already depleted by the time you get to the bike or the run. It's not easy by any means. It's just a miserable event."

Vince Little

CPT Jason Tebedo goes for a bike ride Wednesday as part of his training regimen for next month's Ford Ironman World Championship in Kona, Hawaii.

At his worst moments in May's half-triathlon, he said he persevered through the pain by reminding himself what he was racing for.

"If I go out there and quit, I wouldn't just be letting myself down but a lot of other people as well who have been supporting me," he said. "It's so easy just to say 'I quit' and get on the bus and go back home. Or you can suck it up and remember why you're there in the first place."

Tebedo said his training regimen is intense. He'll start as early as 4:30 a.m. and spend three hours on a long run, bike ride or swim. After MCCC class every afternoon, he works out for a couple of more hours.

On weekends, he hops on the bicycle for six to seven hours and often jumps in the pool afterward for more conditioning. There are no off days, he said.

Tebedo hopes to finish the Ironman course in 11 hours. It's taken some people up to 24 hours. But he said he has no doubt he'll make it all the way.

"My family will be there. I'm raising money for this cause and thinking of my Soldiers, leading by example," he said. "I know I'll finish — even if I have to crawl across the finish line."

To donate to his effort, visit the Wounded Warrior Project's Web site at www.woundedwarriorproject.org. Under the "Get Involved" tab, click on "Sponsor a Participant." Then type in "Jason Tebedo" to reach his personal page.

"God gives us all talents in life. It's what you do with it that makes a difference," Tebedo said. "I believe that God has enabled me to have this opportunity to go to the Ironman, and I want to use this opportunity to further a greater cause than myself."

Combatives: Competition measures proficiency competition is open to anyone assigned to an Army unit, he said.

Preliminary bouts will begin Friday with the finals being conducted Sept. 20. The top team and the top three finishers in each weight class will be recognized.

While resembling a cross between martial arts and boxing, Larson said there is a more practical use.

"Combatives are the way, or the things, that are used and are useful in close combat," he said. "It is the techniques and tactics that are useful in a fight. The Combatives program is the method the Army uses to ensure Soldiers have proficiency in those techniques and tactics."

Larson said close to 300 competitors and 40 teams attended the championships last year.

"We expect numbers somewhere around the same," he said. "There are seven weight classes and a team can have two Soldiers in each weight class. An installation can send one person, or up to 14. We don't dictate how they make up their teams, but we want to encourage competition."

The competition, in its fifth year at Fort Benning, will pair competitors in weight classes ranging from 125 pounds to 205 pounds. Larson said the competition is gender neutral, but female participants are given a weight allowance to make up for the physiological differences.

"Right now, that difference is 7 percent, so a female can weigh over," he said. "So, for example, in the 125-pound weight class the man has to weigh 125 pounds and the woman can weigh 7 percent over or around 132."

Participants in the championships will compete with a set of graduated rules, Larson said. Larson said the reason combatives use separate sets of rules for each level is so competitors don't train just to win matches within the rules, but keep focused on the battlefield.

"The purpose of the combatives program is to train Soldiers for war," Larson said. "Competitions are simply a way to keep people motivated to train harder, so our competitions have to keep the focus on the battlefield. So what we are encouraging people to do have to be things that can be useful on the battlefield. It's what separates us from all other sports and sports in general. It is directly related, it is training."

In the double elimination tournament, Soldier will go through three levels of rules. In the preliminary rounds, standard rules will be used. Larson said the rules were basic grappling rules with striking not permitted. As the competitors move forward, the rules open up, he said. In the semifinals, the intermediate rules will apply and advanced techniques can be used such as kicks to the head, open-hand strikes to the head and closed-fist strikes to the body. In the finals, the advanced rules will apply and allow participants to knee to the body and use closed-fist punches to the face, which is the way someone would fight on the battlefield, Larson said.

"All the competitors who come here are champions someplace else," he said. "This is the championship and these are the best fighters in the Army. Every year the combatives program grows around the Army, the level of the fighters gets higher and higher and we are more successful training Soldiers around the Army.

"This is the culmination of all those Army, Guard and Reserves from around the world — the best fighters in the Army come here for this event."

For more information on the championships, call 706-545-2811.

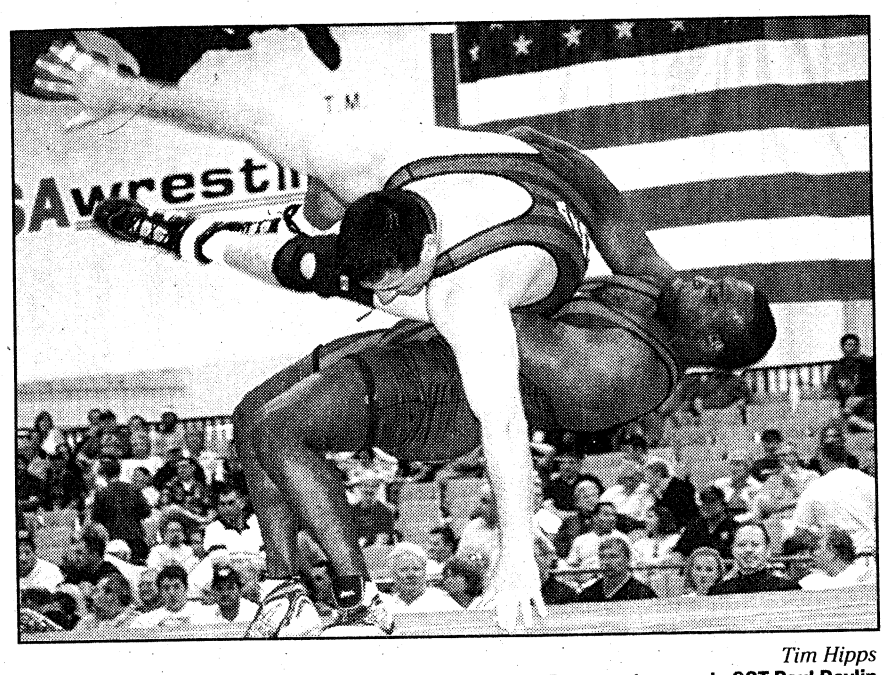
Senior NCO takes on world's best

Tim Hipps
FMWRC



Greco-Roman heavyweight wrestler Dremiel Byers recently joined the ranks of senior NCOs with his promotion to sergeant first class, and is preparing to represent the Army on Team USA at the 2009 World Wrestling Championships Sept. 21-27 in Herning, Denmark.

"A senior NCO can really take the guys to a higher level on the military side," said Army World-Class Athlete Program wrestling coach SSG Shon Lewis, who also is among the U.S. contingent headed to Denmark. "As a staff sergeant, you can walk some things through. Of course, the more rank you get, the farther you can walk with it, so that's going to be huge for the wrestling team."

Byers has been walking the walk on wrestling mats for the past decade. He reiterated his primary purpose at so many international tournaments that it has become his personal working mantra: "Get my hand raised," Byers said, "and our song played."

A world champion in 2002, Byers helped Team USA win its only Greco-Roman team title in amateur wrestling at the 2007 World Championships in Baku, Azerbaijan.

Byers has been wrestling in and out of the shadow of two-time Olympic medalist Rulon Gardner, who posted an upset at the 2000 Sydney Games against Russian legend Alexandre Karaline, who had not lost a match in 13 years. Gardner also turned the tables on slightly-favored Byers at the 2004 U.S. Olympic Team Trials in Indianapolis, which left Byers serving as Gardner's training partner that summer in Athens, Greece.

Tim Hipps
SFC Dremiel Byers throws U.S. Army World-Class Athlete Program teammate SGT Paul Devlin during the 2003 U.S. National Wrestling Championships in Las Vegas.

Three years later, Byers claimed Team USA's Greco-Roman heavyweight spot for the 2008 Olympics in Beijing, where he finished a disappointing seventh.

In 2002, he captured a gold medal as the first African-American and fourth member of Team USA ever to win a Greco-Roman crown at the World Wrestling Championships in Athens.

Byers defeated Hungary's Deke Bardois in the 264.5-pound Greco-Roman finale of the 2002 World Wrestling Championships.

For his efforts, Byers earned the Army's 2002 Male Athlete of the Year honors and received a similar award from the United States Olympic Committee.

Seven years later, Byers, an eight-time national champion, is set to take on the best Greco-Roman heavyweights at the World Wrestling Championships. At age 35, Byers will be the wily veteran on a U.S. team he expects will surprise wrestling observers around the globe.

"I'm getting older. It's getting harder. But I still know that I can get it done," Byers said. "Once you're number one, you want to stay number one."

Defense secretary listens to education issues

Donna Miles
ARMY NEWS SERVICE

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — As President Barack Obama spoke to the nation's schoolchildren Tuesday, Defense Secretary Robert Gates heard about the challenges military children face in the education system.

After speaking with parents in a closed-door session, Gates said he has some issues to consider, including:

• Exploring the possibility of opening more Defense Department schools on military bases, particularly elementary schools on larger posts experiencing regular troop rotations;

• Assigning more dual-military families to the same post to reduce family separations;

• Getting training for public-school teachers and counselors so they're better equipped to help military children cope with the unique challenges they face;

• Ensuring policies created for the old "garrison Army" are re-examined and updated as necessary to be more realistic for highly mobile modern-day Army; and,

• Making the Tricare military health system more user-friendly for families geographically separated because of deployments and other duty obligations.

Nearly 44 percent of the active-duty military have children — about two-thirds are age 11 and younger,

Laura Miller, Joanna Thomas and Tiffani Cunningham show off some of the goodies currently in the Santa's Castle storeroom. These items and more will be on display when the store opens in December to Soldiers and families, selected by their chain of command, who are in financial need during the Christmas season. Toys are arranged by level, including "gold" and "silver," and the age and gender they are geared toward.

Santa's Castle spreads holiday cheer

A stuffed animal for a toddler, a new bike for a teenager, a board game for the family — that's what Santa's Castle does, said Tiffani Cunningham, publicity coordinator for Santa's Castle.

The nonprofit organization lets Soldiers who are facing financial hardship pick out toys to give as Christmas presents to their children — "like a Toys R Us, only smaller, with that family feel," Cunningham said.

Each year, Santa's Castle receives a bulk of its funds from the Soldiers and Families Support Association, but with the economic downturn in recent years, the amount of money donated has declined, too, said Jeffrey Saeli, chairperson for Santa's Castle.

In better years, Santa's Castle has received as much as $10,000 from SFSA, Saeli said, which helps the staff make Christmas that much better for military families.

"To see them come in and to see their faces, to help them provide a better holiday for their children is rewarding," he said. "We're a 100 percent volunteer organization. Our only monthly expense is our phone bill. All the rest of the money goes to the purchase of toys."

SFSA, funded primarily through the Combined Federal Campaign, supports a variety of private organizations on post. These include Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, Parent Teacher Associations and the Army Community Service Volunteer Support Association.

The money is divided among the organizations based on need, said Barbara Singleton, secretary for SFSA. Santa's Castle, with

HISPANIC HERITAGE

Post plans luncheon

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office will celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month Wednesday with a luncheon at the Benning Conference Center.

The theme for the luncheon is "Embracing the Fierce Urgency of Now," a quote attributed to Martin Luther King Jr.

Hispanic-Americans have been underrepresented in America's government for the last several decades, said SFC Primus Brown, the event's NCOIC, and the luncheon theme points to the need for immediate change.

The keynote speaker will be CSM(R) Efrain Hernandez, a founding member of the Hispanic Business Outreach Committee of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, which promotes the development and mainstreaming of Hispanic-owned business.

Born in Puerto Rico, Hernandez enlisted in the Army in 1978. He retired after 24 years of service at Fort Benning and remains involved in the community through the Red Cross, Chattahoochee Valley libraries and Junior Achievement.

Entertainment for the luncheon includes Latin-inspired music by Son Tropical, a Columbus-based band. The menu features quesadillas, pupusas, rice, beans, salad and fried plantains.

Brown said he expects the luncheon to be not only fun but informative, leaving

Former NCO leads West Point Corps of Cadets

MSG Dean Welch
ARMY NEWS SERVICE

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Since 1872, the U.S. Military Academy has selected one firstie to lead the Corps of Cadets as its brigade commander or First Captain. The names of the First Captains are etched on plaques outside a room in Eisenhower Barracks documenting the history of the position.

Sometime before graduation, Tyler Gordy will add his name just under Ben Amsler, last year's First Captain. Forever linked with the likes of Douglas MacArthur; Robert Woods, who lettered in football at West Point and Navy; Pete Dawkins, winner of the Heisman Trophy and Rhodes Scholarship, class president and "Star Man;" Vincent Brooks, the first African-American First Captain; and Kristen Baker, the first woman to hold the position.

Gordy's road to West Point began as an Infantryman with the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

> "When the terrorists attacked on 9/11, I felt it was my time to answer the call for my generation."
> — Tyler Gordy

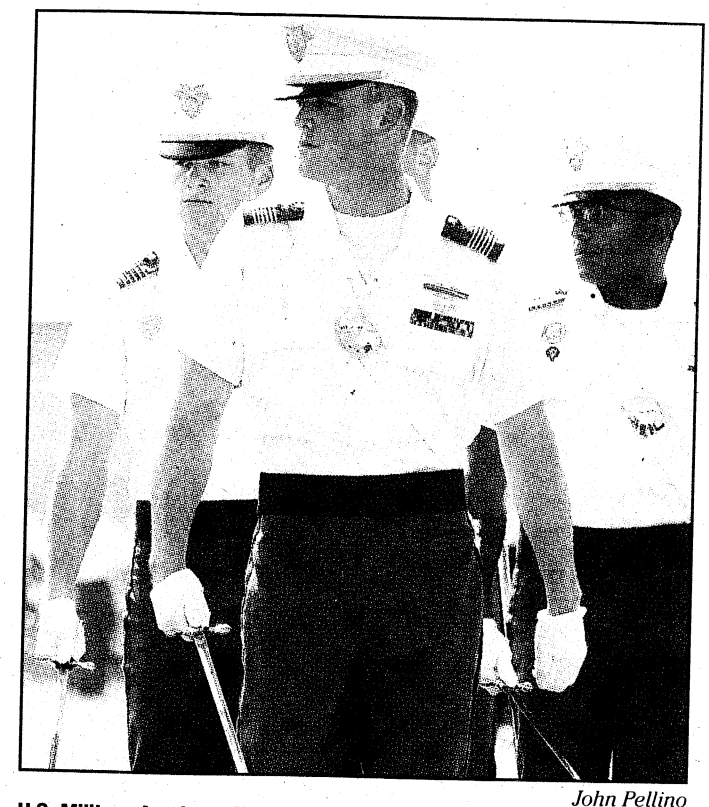
While at the U.S. Military Academy Prep School, Gordy said his decision to enlist was forged by the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

"When the terrorists attacked on 9/11, I felt it was my time to answer the call for my generation," Gordy said.

His natural ability as a Soldier and leader was soon evident to his command.

Maj. John Stroh III, Gordy's company commander with the 101st, said Gordy was one of the top marksman in the battalion. But it was his ability to lead that set him apart.

"He was able to enforce standards and train others even when they were his peers or outranked him," Stroh said in an e-mail.



"He was not a yeller (or) screamer, but a calm, collected and quiet NCO — completely professional."

Gordy deployed with his unit in 2003 for the invasion of Iraq.

While on patrol in Mosul, Gordy said he noticed a man watching his two-vehicle patrol. Out of the corner of his eye he saw the man had thrown something toward the humvee.

"I turned to the NCO sitting next to me, and said, 'Hey, I think that guy just threw a rock in the Humvee.'"

Secretary: Hears concerns of military families

Gates said. Of the 1.2 million military children, only about 85,000 attend Defense Department schools.

"These parents would love to have schools on post," he said, listing some benefits the parents raised — teachers and counselors would understand what their students deal with and be trained to help them, kids would be surrounded by peers who understand the military lifestyle and issues, parents would have more confidence in the quality of their schools, and students wouldn't always find themselves playing catch-up or repeating what they already learned as they moved from one school to another.

Gates said expanding the Defense Department school system may not be possible from a financial or political standpoint, particularly at the high-school level.

"But one of the questions I am going to ask coming out of this is, at least on big posts where we have a lot of repeated rotations, ... could we at least do elementary schools?"

Gates said he plans to look into White House or Education Department initiatives that can better prepare public schools to meet military children's needs.

The secretary said he's optimistic that the new Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children will reduce the difficulties for children transitioning between school systems in different states.

Twenty-five states have agreed so far to the initiative, which standardizes eligibility, enrollment, placement and graduation requirements.

The California state legislature has passed the bill, too, and once California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger signs it into law, the compact will cover 81 percent of all military children, the secretary said.

One concern about public schools surprised him, Gates said. Teachers who expressed negative views of the war or the military — insensitive to the children whose parents were off fighting it.

"So you have a child whose parent is deployed and in danger, and at the same time, (you have) a teacher perhaps being critical of what they were doing, or (of) the military," Gates said. "That is an obvious concern."

The secretary said his visit reinforced his belief that too many dual-military families spend too much time apart. After meeting SFC Sumalee Bustamante, an MP and mother of two who has lived with her husband, SFC John Bustamante, just 10 months out of the last six years, Gates vowed to see what needs to be changed to get more dual-military families assigned together.

"That is just not acceptable," Gates said. "This is something we really need to do a better job of as we work with military families."

CFC: Helps families

its family-focused mission, receives one of the largest shares.

Singleton has seen that mission in action firsthand as a volunteer, or "elf," at Santa's Castle.

"For most of them, it has really made a difference, and I see that every time I go there," she said. "You see their faces light up. Some of them are in tears — in a good way — because of the quality of the (toys). They're just so grateful because they're able to give that extra to their children, because they feel someone cares. They see that through Santa's Castle they're able to do a little better for their families."

Giving to SFSA means giving to the military family, Singleton said, and that's what happens when people designate SFSA as the organization they want to donate to through CFC.

"The more money we have to give out, the more support we can give to the families ... enhancing their quality of life," she said.

Firstie: Wants to take care of Soldiers

A grenade exploded inside the vehicle.

For his actions, Gordy received the Purple Heart and the Army Commendation Medal with "V" device for valor.

It was during his time with the "Screaming Eagles," the battalion commander suggested Gordy apply to West Point.

"He basically said there would be doors, in and out of the Army, that would never be open to me because I am not a West Point graduate," the former high school football player said.

Gordy said he had been planning on leaving the Army, but started to think about West Point.

A Soldier applying to West Point through the Soldier Admission Program needs a letter of recommendation from his company commander and Stroh, Class of 1999, said it was a no-brainer to write a letter on Gordy's behalf to his alma mater.

"I saw a young man with tremendous potential for future service to our nation," said Stroh, now an instructor in the Department of Military Instruction.

When Gordy entered the academy in June 2006, the former NCO said he had to relearn humility.

The 2002 graduate of Lincoln High said although his mom might care he's a First Captain, his Soldiers won't.

"The only thing they will care about is if I care about them. I came here to be a platoon leader and go back and work with those (Soldiers). Being with those guys on some hilltop in Afghanistan making their life, somehow, just a little bit better (is what I'm striving to do)," he said.

Smart Choices helps shoppers find items within caloric needs

LTC Karen E. Hawkins
DECA

If you are looking for nutrition guidance on the front of the foods you buy in the commissary, your search just got easier. The Smart Choices Program was developed based on the value of a single, credible and uniform front-of-package nutrition labeling system that U.S. food manufacturers and retailers can voluntarily adopt.

This system is designed to help shoppers identify smarter food and beverage choices within product categories that fit within their daily calorie needs. The new symbol will be allowed only on those products that meet strict science-based nutrition criteria derived from the Dietary Guidelines for Americans, reports from the Institute of Medicine and other sources of consensus dietary guidance.

Specific qualifying criteria were developed for 19 product categories, such as beverages, cereals, meats, dairy and snacks, based on the presence of nutrients to limit (for example, fats and added sugars), nutrients to encourage (for example, calcium and potassium), and food groups to encourage (for example, fruits and vegetables and whole grains).

By developing nutrition criteria for these 19 product categories based on consensus dietary guidance, the Smart Choices Program is designed to help guide consumer choices within each product category. To help you better understand the science behind the check mark, below is more information from http://www.smartchoicesprogram.com.

Nutrients to Limit: These are nutrients that Americans need to eat less of in their diet for better health.

Nutrients to Encourage: These are the "nutrients of concern," that is, nutrients lacking in the diet, as identified by the Dietary Guidelines for Americans.

Food Groups to Encourage: These are groups of foods, rather than individual nutrients, that are recommended in the Dietary Guidelines for Americans.

Public policy consistently recommends that people eat within an appropriate daily calorie intake to achieve and maintain a healthy weight. Therefore, all products displaying the Smart Choices Program symbol will be required to display the calorie information that clearly states calories per serving and number of servings per container. The intent of the calorie information is to help people stay within their daily calorie needs and easily compare the calorie content of foods within categories.

The Smart Choices Program includes 19 product categories that must meet the general qualifying criteria of nutrients to limit and nutrients or food groups to encourage. Each category was then evaluated to fine-tune the criteria so that it was in line with the Dietary Guidelines for Americans and other sources of nutrition science and authoritative guidance.

For more information about making healthy choices, visit Ask the Dietitian on http://www.commissaries.com and post your questions on the DeCA Dietitian Forum. Be sure to look for other useful information in the Dietitian's Voice archive. Sign up with the DeCA Dietitian on twitter.com and get messages sent to your cell phone today. Get deployment ready, legally fit

OFFICE OF THE STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE

With the next deployment just weeks away, what sorts of things should a Soldier look for in a legal checkup? Here are some examples:

- Do you have a will? If so, does it still accurately reflect your desires?
- Do you need a power of attorney (POA)? If you have given out a POA, is it still valid?
- Are you up-to-date on your income tax filing? Both Federal AND state? Do you have copies of your prior year returns? Does your spouse have an IRS Power of Attorney for filing tax returns?
- Do you have certified copies or originals of important legal documents, such as birth and marriage certificates? Are they somewhere easily accessible?
- Do you have copies of all other documents of legal significance, such as divorce decrees, court orders for child or spousal support, leases, etc.?
- Are your cars properly registered? Will your spouse need a POA to reregister?
- Do you have any outstanding legal issues? If so, have you brought them to the attention of an attorney?
- Have you checked your credit report in the past year? Have you attempted to resolve any unfavorable entries?

If you need a legal document or have a legal problem, contact an attorney. Being legally fit is as important as being physically fit! Stop by the Legal Assistance Office in Bldg 359, 7021 Ingersoll Avenue if you have questions or call for an appointment at 545-3281.

Forgiveness offers health benefits

CH (MAJ) DARIN M. POWERS
MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Forgive and forget — easier said than done, right? Well, now studies show forgiveness is not only good theology, but good medicine as well.

According to the latest medical and psychological research, forgiving is good for our souls — and our bodies. People who forgive benefit from better immune functioning, lower blood pressure and have better mental health than people who do not forgive. Forgivers feel better physically; have lower amounts of anger, fewer symptoms of anxiety and depression and maintain more satisfying and long-lasting relationships.

"When we allow ourselves to feel like victims or sit around dreaming up how to retaliate against people who have hurt us, these thought patterns take a toll on our minds and bodies," said Michael McCullough, director of research for the National Institute for Healthcare Research and a co-author of To Forgive is Human: How to Put Your Past in the Past.

It seems to me that when we hold grudges, we don't hurt the other person, we hurt ourselves. Bitterness sets in and joy is lost. However, when we adopt the attitude of God and choose to forgive, freedom automatically follows.

The bible says that God takes our sin and removes them as far as the east is from the west (Psalm 103:12). Talk about to infinity and beyond! That is a long way. The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy (Psalm 103:8). If it is good enough for the Almighty to hand out forgiveness to those who sincerely ask, don't you think it should be good enough for us? Forgive as you have been forgiven; not a suggestion, but a command. I truly don't think God commands that to burden us, but to set us free.

When you talk about forgetting, you may say "I may forgive but I have a memory so I won't literally forget this offense."

Well, of course you won't. In this context, forgetting simply means you won't bring it back up against the person again. In doing that, you just may actually forget it after all. So this week, let's take a good look at that area of our lives, and as you release forgiveness, watch the physical, mental, and spiritual blessings begin again.

Register now for upcoming job fair on post

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

"Network and network early," Vickie Washington said. "Because it's through networks and contacts you've made that you may ultimately find a job."

Vickie Washington is a senior career expo coordinator for civilianjobs.com, a job fair that brings together personnel transitioning from military service and employers seeking people with military backgrounds.

The civilianjobs.com expo will be at the Benning Conference Center from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sept. 24. Companies and industries represented will include aviation, health care, law enforcement, logistics, maintenance, management, engineering and sales.

Civilianjobs.com offers an alternative to traditional job fairs by matching people with potential employers prior to the expo, Washington said.

When candidates pre-register for the expo, their information is run through a matching program to determine which employers can meet their needs in terms of job desired, location preferences and type of work, Washington said.

Then, the networking begins as links to the candidate's resume are sent to employers to review before the expo. Employers can contact candidates ahead of time to set up interviews at the job fair.

"A lot of times these employers will hire from the floor after doing on-the-spot interviews," she said. "This makes the process a lot more productive for the employers and job seekers."

Washington said this process benefits military personnel because at many job fairs it is easy to get lost in the masses, but with the civilianjobs.com expo, the employer is already aware of their qualifications if they've pre-registered, she said.

As a retired sergeant major, Washington understands what Soldiers face finding civilian employment after their military career is over.

When Washington retired from the military, she used civilianjobs.com.

"I found out about their Web site when I was going through the Army Career and Alumni Program," said Washington, who served as the senior NCO of U.S. Army Reserve public affairs. "I posted my resume on their Web site and got a call that same evening for an interview the following day. I got hired by civilianjobs.com on the spot and started my new job the following Monday."

Washington said finding a job so quickly may be the exception to the rule, but she has seen many Soldiers walk away from an expo with job offers.

"We just had a expo in Norfolk, Va., and one of the companies, U.S. Capital Police, set up interviews with their matches beforehand and did all the required testing at the expo," she said. "All of the candidates who passed the test will be direct hires if they do everything else they need to do."

"Those candidates were able to walk away knowing they may have a job when their ETS or retirement date rolls up," she said.

Mark Mills, Fort Benning's employment readiness program manager, said job fairs benefit not only those looking for jobs in the immediate future, but Soldiers who are considering getting out of the military in the next few years.

Soldiers and families can use job fairs to gauge the job market and see what benefits are available to them before they make the decision to leave the military, he said.

"It can give you a chance to talk with human relations people with these companies so you can make a good decision later on," Mills said.

The civilianjobs.com expo is open to military, family members and veterans.

The deadline to pre-register and receive potential matches is Sept. 14. Registration begins at 9 a.m. the day of the expo.

For more information or to pre-register, visit www.civilianjobs.com or call 678-819-4170.

Project earns top award

Monty Eddins, project manager for Caddell Construction, and George Condoyiannis, Fort Benning area engineer with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, accepted the Associated Builders and Contractors National Excellence in Construction Pyramid Award in June in Washington D.C.

The Savannah, Ga., District U.S. Army Corps of Engineers completed a large-scale project last year at Fort Benning. By working closely with Caddell Construction of Montgomery, Ala., the district finished a 205,000-square-foot Kelley Hill Barracks Complex three months ahead of schedule. The project cost $40.9 million and included 10 facilities.

The award recognized the Kelley Hill Barracks Complex as the No. 2 project in the nation for the institutional category in the $25 to $99 million range.

Safari fills tall order

A giraffe, native to the African plains, peeks inside a bus window to look for food. Giraffes spend 15 to 20 hours a day feeding, aided with an acute sense of sight, hearing and smell. According to www.animalsafari.com/safari, a giraffe, which is the tallest land animal, occasionally sleeps lying down but usually stands for its naps.

An American bison eyes a passenger inside a "Zebra Bus" Saturday at Wild Animal Safari.

Walk on the WILD side

The Bayonet
CHERYL RODEWIG

Eye to eye with a 15-foot giraffe — it doesn't happen most every day, unless you're at Wild Animal Safari, that is, where it's nothing out of the ordinary.

At the park, there are animals from six continents, everything from the American bison and blackbuck antelope to the Bactrian camel and kangaroo. But don't expect your typical zoo experience. On the 200-acre preserve in Pine Mountain, Ga., you'll get up close and personal with the animal. If you choose, you can pet them, feed them and, if you're not quick, be slobbered on by them.

The "Serengeti Adventure" begins aboard a tour bus. A guide drives along a paved trail and points out zebras, sheep, buffalos and giraffes as they approach the bus or — as I saw Saturday — try to board the bus. The animals crowd around the vehicles. Many stick their heads through the window, perhaps in the spirit of camaraderie, perhaps following the scent of food, which you can buy for $2.25 a bag.

Visitors can rent a van or even drive their own car along the trail, though I've heard the hooves, antlers and horns can be rough on a car's exterior.

For an enjoyable safari, remember to bring a bag of feed, a camera and a towel. The camera will help you capture those priceless moments of a family member or friend feeding an elk. The towel is there for the slimy aftermath. Or you can buy a souvenir "I Got Slobbered" towel.

See Safari, D4

A hamadryas baboon stretches his jaws Saturday inside his cage. Found in Ethiopia, Saudi Arabia, Somalia and Yemen, this species grows up to 37 inches long and lives for around 35 years.

SGT Junius Stone
192ND INFANTRY BRIGADE

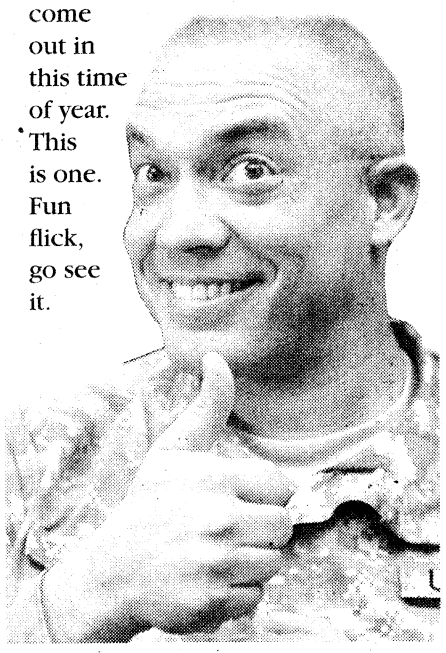
Sandra Bullock, delightful pixie who sprang onto the American entertainment mainstream by sidekicking with Sylvester Stallone in 1993's Demolition Man, has enjoyed off and on again success at the box office. I admit, I haven't seen most of her films, but in Demolition Man, as the nostalgic, action-hero obsessed cop, Lt. Lenina Huxley, she established herself as the master of quirky, fun, cheerful, well-meaning, good-natured and endearing characters. Playing Mary Horowitz, a red go-go boot wearing crossword puzzle instructor in All About Steve, she embraces the oddball all the way.

Mary is eccentric, merrily marching to the beat of her own drum. Many of those around her don't care for her strange ways, but like true independent characters, she carries on.

But she is lonely. And when she meets the handsome TV journalist Steve (Bradley Cooper from The Hangover and Alias) on a blind date, she is convinced that they are soul mates. She then proceeds to follow him across the country, determined to have him see things her way.

Now, if their roles were reversed, or Mary less cute and endearing, this might be called stalking. But there is clearly no menace or selfish intent in Mary's pursuit, just quirky sincerity. Plus, you have some of Steve's co-workers making merry sport of this, encouraging Mary and watching Steve squirm.

And thus we have our story of a cute, odd girl and a guy who feels someone stalking him, not Mary, but Cupid, who has an arrow with Steve's name on it.



I tend to favor independent, good natured oddballs. This world puts crushing pressure to conform to set molds. We, as humans, are discomfited by those marching to a rhythm we are unaccustomed to.

Those who carry on anyway have a certain grit to them. I admire this. Probably many of us do, even the non-misfits, though they may be loath to admit it. I say "they," because I'm quite the quirky misfit myself. But like many, I make it work for me.

But does it work out for Mary and Steve? That would be telling. Love is not an easy quest, especially for the oddballs, but again, typical of many of your quirky types, Mary has a certain pluck, never-say-die attitude and optimism that just won't quit.

Besides this movie also has Thomas Haden Church (Wings, Sideways) as well as Keith David (The Thing, They Live) in it. These two alone are usually worth the price of admission. Throw Sandra Bullock in there, you are now up to the price of a big bucket of popcorn.

There are a few good movies that come out in this time of year. This is one. Fun flick, go see it.

Powered and enabled by the invention known as the Great Machine, the world's machines have turned on mankind and sparked social unrest, decimating the human population before being largely shut down. But as our world fell to pieces, a mission began to salvage the legacy of civilization; a group of small creations was given the spark of life by a scientist in the final days of humanity, and they continue to exist post-apocalypse. With their group so few, these "stitchpunk" creations must summon individual strengths well beyond their own proportions in order to outwit and fight against still-functioning machines.

The film features the voices of Alan Oppenheimer, Tom Kane, Christopher Plummer, Martin Landau and John C. Reilly. It is rated PG-13 for violence and scary images.

SORORITY ROW

When five sorority girls inadvertently cause the murder of one of their sisters in a prank gone wrong, they agree to keep the matter to themselves and never speak of it again. This proves easier said than done, when after graduation a mysterious killer goes after the five of them and anyone who knows their secret.

The flim stars Briana Evigan, Leah Pipes, Rumer Willis, Jamie Chung and Carrie Fisher. It is rated R for strong, bloody violence, language, some sexuality/nudity and partying.

TYLER PERRY'S I CAN DO BAD ALL BY MYSELF

When Madea, America's favorite pistol-packing grandma, catches 16-year-old Jennifer and her two younger brothers looting her home, she decides to take matters into her own hands and delivers the young delinquents to the only relative they have: their aunt April. A heavy-drinking nightclub singer who lives off of Raymond, her married boyfriend, April wants nothing to do with the kids. But her attitude begins to change when Sandino, a handsome Mexican immigrant looking for work, moves into April's basement room. Making amends for his own troubled past, Sandino challenges April to open her heart. And April soon realizes she must make the biggest choice of her life.

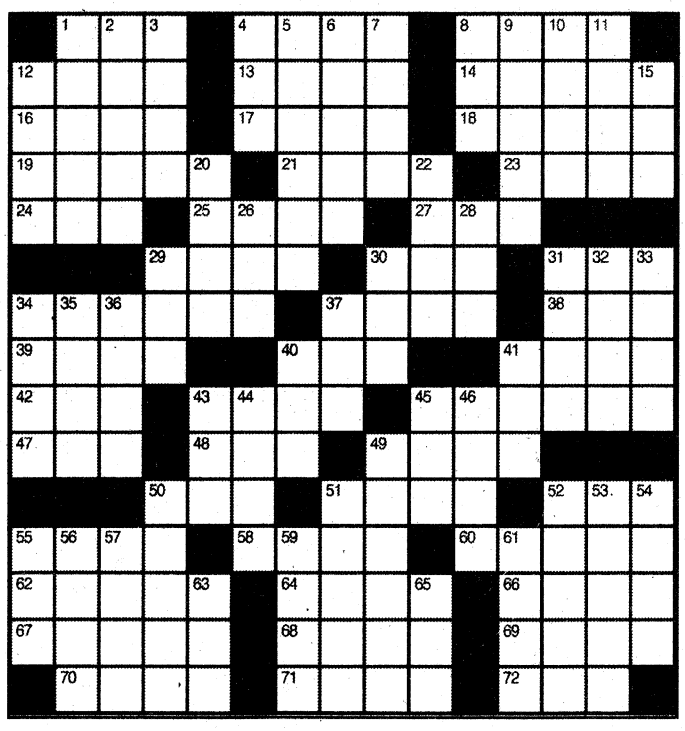
The flim stars Taraji P. Henson, Adam Rodriguez, Brian J. White, Hope Olaide Wilson and Mary J. Blige. It is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material involving a sexual assault on a minor, violence, drug references and smoking.

WHITEOUT

A lone U.S. marshal stationed in Antarctica is drawn into a shocking murder investigation. With only three days until winter, she must solve the crime before the continent is plunged into darkness and she is trapped with the killer. U.S. Marshal Carrie Stetko is the only law enforcement in this unforgiving territory. She's been sent to investigate Antarctica's first homicide. A shocking discovery in itself, it will plunge her into an even more bizarre mystery and the revelation of secrets long-buried under the endless ice–secrets that someone believes are still worth killing for.

The flim stars Kate Beckinsale, Columbus Short, Gabriel Macht, Tom Skerritt and Alex O'Loughlin. It is rated R for violence, grisly images, brief strong language and some nudity.

NOW PLAYING



ALL ABOUT STEVE

Mary Horowitz is a cruciverbalist — a crossword puzzle constructor. She can come up with the perfect word — and dozens with the same meaning — at a moment's notice, but "normal" behavior eludes her. For Mary, nothing is typical, especially relationships. When she is set up on a blind date with handsome cable-news cameraman Steve, Mary thinks the chemistry is undeniable — that Steve is "the one."

Steve, on the other hand, thinks Mary is crazy. Mary begins to pursue Steve relentlessly. With Mary never far behind, Steve becomes increasingly unhinged. But when Mary becomes embroiled in the news story of the year, Steve and Hartman begin to see her differently. Mary, with her upbeat, unaffected manner, brings together a small community of new friends. And all who encounter Mary will realize that sometimes the ones who don't fit in are the ones who really stand out.

The film stars Sandra Bullock, Thomas Haden Church and Bradley Cooper. It is rated PG-13 for sexual content including innuendos.

Safari: Educates, entertains

A Scottish highlander tries to hitch a ride on a tour bus Saturday at Wild Animal Safari.

A Vietnamese pot belly piglet pauses inside its pen in The Walk-About portion of Wild Animal Safari. Piglets, usually about a month old, are available for purchase for $25.

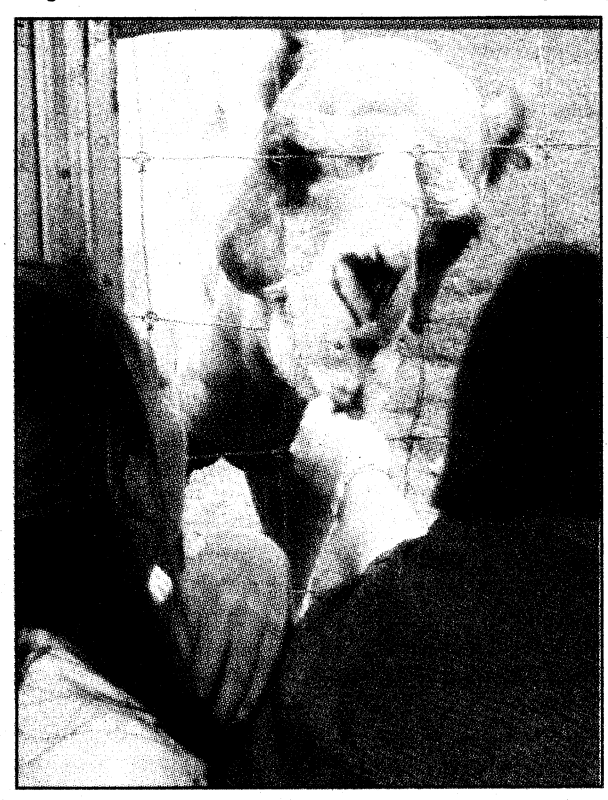
You'll want to save a little bit of your feed for "The Walk-About" portion of your safari. Many of the species in this section are among the more carnivorous: an alligator, hyenas, wolves, black bears and ligers — half lion, half tiger. They won't be interested in the feed. However, a small barnyard animal area provides a place for you to snap some more pictures and use up the rest of your animal snacks.

Each exhibit has signs providing extra information about the animal on display. The park's mission is to offer not only an entertaining experience but also an educational one. Some of its animals, such as the water buffalo, Siberian tiger and banteng, are endangered. Others, including the lion, ring-tailed lemur and gaur, are at high risk of extinction in the near future.

With nearly twice as many animals as Zoo Atlanta, Wild Animal Safari is suited to any age and any size group.

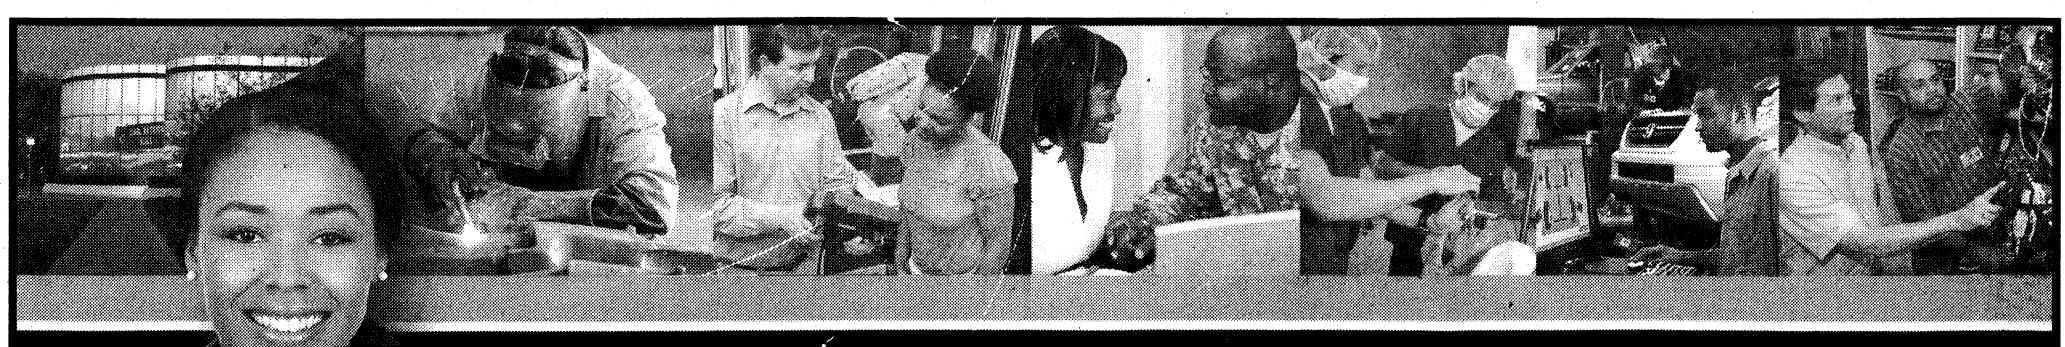
Park officials suggest allotting at least two hours for your stay, but you can spend longer, especially if you venture into the gift shop or café.

Admission is $17.95 for adults and $14.95 for seniors and children. Military and emergency personnel receive a 10 percent discount and children younger than 3 get in free. Season passes, discounted next-day tickets and group rates are available.



The park opens at 10 a.m. and closes at 6:30 p.m. on the weekend and 5:30 p.m. weekdays. For more information, visit www.animalsafari.com/safari or call 706-663-8744.

An emu with a beak too sharp for hand feeding snatches food from a bus window.



A liger cub — a cross between a male lion and female tiger — plays inside its cage.

Passengers aboard a Zebra Bus feed a 16-year-old Dromedary camel named CJ after it sticks its lips through the fence in search of food. Visitors are allowed to hand-feed most animals on the Serengeti Adventure. Exceptions for safety reasons include zebras and birds. Camels are native to northwestern China, Mongolia and the Middle East. According to the Wild Animal Safari Web site, there are two varieties of camels: Dromedary and Bactrian. They can be distinguished by the number of humps on their back. A Dromedary has one and a Bactrian has two.

New services, renewed commitment

Vince Little

Fort Benning introduced community members to the new $7 million School Age Services Center during a grand opening Wednesday, while post leaders reaffirmed their commitment to Soldiers and their families by re-signing the Army Family Covenant.

The child-care facility is among the first Base Realignment and Closure projects to be completed at Fort Benning, officials said. Construction began in April 2008 and ended in May, but the doors opened to about 200 children in kindergarten through fifth grade when school began early last month.

Al Gelineau, director of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation, called the center a "magnificent structure" and major upgrade over the previous facility, which had become dilapidated because of age.

"The engineers took a little extra care and pride in building this," he said prior to the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

The new School Age Services Center features a multipurpose activity room, demonstration and teaching kitchen, computer lab with 14 terminals, performing arts room, homework lab, video game room, and an art and science activity room.

LTC Flip Wilson, the chief of Infantry office director, and his wife, Relisa, were among those who stepped inside to check the place out. They arrived at Fort Benning in mid-July from Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, with their four daughters — two of whom will use the facility.

"I hear people say the kids don't ever stay in one room here," the lieutenant colonel said. "It encourages them to develop, grow and see new things through interaction … This is one thing that will definitely impact our children."

Relisa Wilson said the Army should use it as a model for future child-care construction projects.

"It's the best facility I've seen in all the installations we've been to, and that includes some Air Force bases," she said. "They set the bar here, for sure … The creative arts and creative playing they have set up will definitely help our children's confidence."

SFC Ernesto Prince and PV2 Natacha Falu, a dual military couple, were on stage for the Army Family Covenant re-signing. Their two children — Ilirijana, 9, and Peter, 7 — took part in the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

Falu, who enlisted in the Army five months ago, was recently assigned to the 206th Military Intelligence Group at Fort Gordon, Ga. For the past three years, the kids attended the former School Age Services Center, she said.

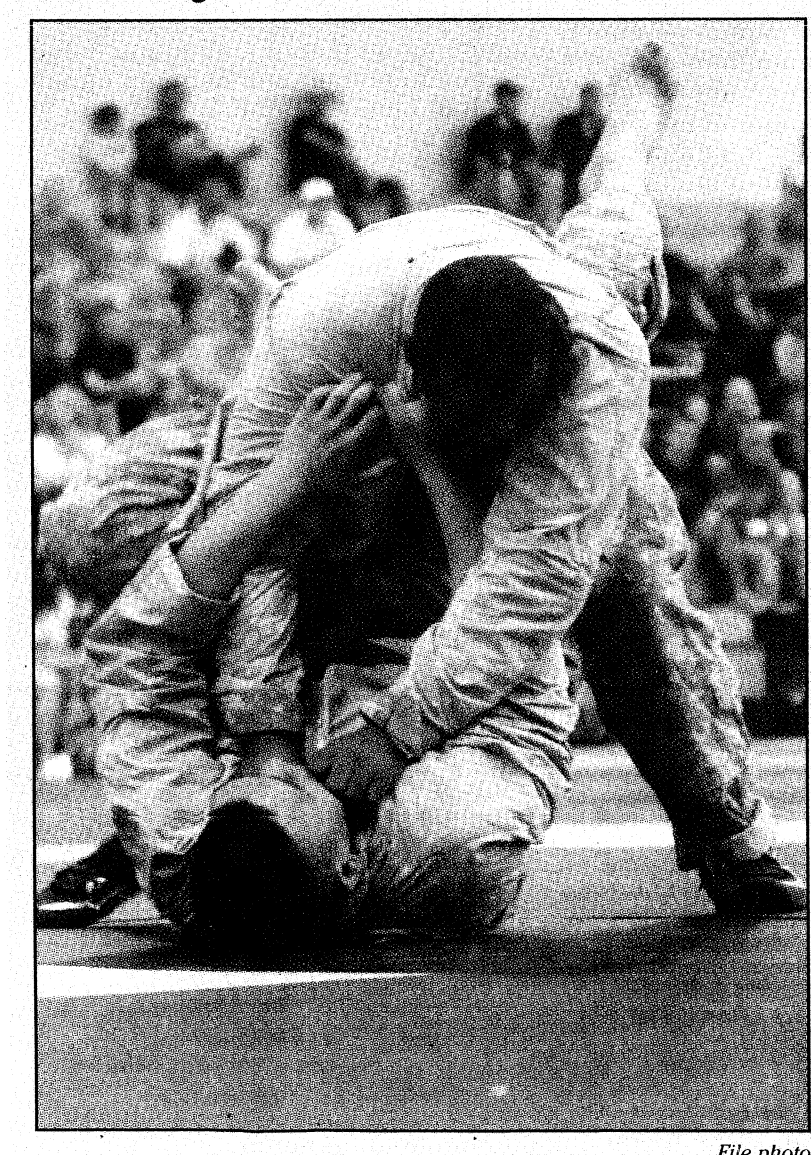
MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

In the coming weeks, flu shots will be available at Martin Army Community Hospital for eligible beneficiaries. For information on the schedule, check The Bayonet and Web page at www.army.mil/benning and the Martin Army Community Hospital Web page at www.martin.amedd.army.mil. In the interim, beneficiaries may use their Tricare benefits to obtain a flu vaccination.

Although there are always many strains of the flu that circulate, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is dividing them into two categories this year, and separate vaccines are being prepared for them.

• Seasonal flu — This year's seasonal flu vaccine protects against three common strains and is currently available in many locations throughout the United States.

• H1N1 — A vaccine against the H1N1 virus is being produced and should be available in late October for people at high risk of serious complications from infection with the new H1N1 virus.



The H1N1 vaccine is intended to be used in addition to the season flu vaccine and can be administered the same day.

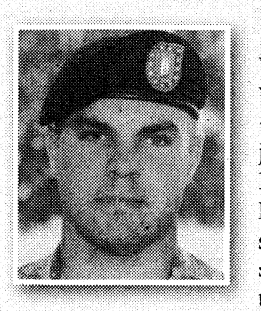
Steel beam, Rescorla statue unveiled

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

The threat of rain was not enough to keep hundreds from gathering Thursday outside the National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center to celebrate the unveiling of the COL(R) Rick Rescorla statue and greet the arrival of a steel I-beam from the North Tower of the World Trade Center.

"It was Rick's death that caught the attention of the media and the masses," said MG Michael Ferriter, commanding general of Fort Benning and a speaker at the event. "But it was his life – not his death – that defined him as a true hero and a great leader."



Rescorla, a Vietnam veteran and vice president of corporate security for Morgan Stanley, is credited with saving the lives of 2,700 people who worked in the WTC's Tower 2, also known as the North Tower. Seeing the first tower burn from his office on the 66th floor, he ordered employees to evacuate Tower 2 — putting to use evacuation drills he had implemented after the 1993 truck-bomb attack. Halfway down, the second plane hit Tower 2. After getting the firm's employees out of the tower, Rescorla returned to the building. He didn't make it out.

It wasn't the first time Rescorla demonstrated heroism, said his widow, Susan, who accompanied hundreds of motorcycle riders escorting the steel support beam on its four-day ride from Brooklyn, N.Y., to Fort Benning.

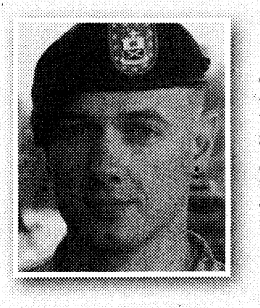
VARIOUS VOICES

Why do you think POW/MIA Day is important?

It's important. I know my uncle was a POW in World War II. He was a staff sergeant in the Army — that's what made me want to join the Army. It was the Bataan Death March in the Philippines. It just makes you think: When somebody's captured, that's somebody's family who's out there. And that's important.

— 2LT Matthew Evon
BOLC II



We don't want to forget them. We have to get them home if at all possible. The family wants the peace — to know their son or daughter is finally home. We're still trying to find people from the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

— LTC(R) Jose Recio
Columbus

Because they sacrificed their lives, their time, their families, for our freedom. It's hard to imagine what my husband does on a daily basis;I can't imagine what it would be like for him to be missing. We need to remember what they did for us. If they're missing in action (or) they went over there for us and they got captured, it's all because of our freedom and our country. We just really need to pray for their families.

— Lori Hunter
Family member

Just to remember the sacrifices of Soldiers who came before us. If you forget you start forgetting about the code of conduct. You don't want to forget something great that someone has done or a tragedy they went through.

— SSG Dan Whitten
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

You have to always keep them in mind. So we have to be mindful and keep those people in our thoughts and prayers. It's to bring the issue to the forefront, to keep people informed, to keep them (aware) of what's going on with our missing in action as well as prisoners of war. I just really feel that's what the day is for.

Honor our missing heroes

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

If there is a day to put away petty gripes, it is today. Each year, the third Friday of September is set aside to honor our prisoners of war and missing in action. It is a time to reflect on their sacrifices and remember their stories.

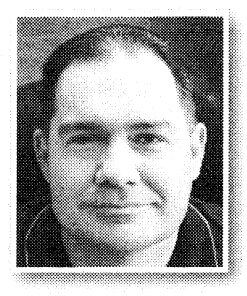
"SSG Keith 'Matt' Maupin, we are still looking for you and we will find you" was a frequent phrase in military newsletters downrange and on Web sites devoted to his memory in the days after his capture in Iraq April 16, 2004. As time went on, the phrase took on a new meaning. It was a mantra for those who refused to leave a Soldier behind. As Soldiers came and went in Iraq, the saying remained, carrying his memory on and reminding us what it truly means to never leave a comrade behind: Honor their memory, take up the torch and share their story.

So I would like to share one with you.

SGT Ahmed Altaie was more than a translator. I met him when I was a young sergeant deployed to Iraq with the 363rd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment out of St. Louis in late 2005. Our small Army Reserve unit was attached to the 4th Infantry Division for 12 months and Altaie was one of a handful of translators we relied on to help us get our job done. He was an Iraqi-American, mentor and friend. He was two weeks away from completing his deployment with 4th Infantry Division when he was kidnapped in Baghdad Oct. 23, 2006. The news came as a shock to those of us who knew him. He was a calm, quiet, intelligent man who called Ann Arbor, Mich., home and was devoted to his wife. He immigrated to the U.S. as a teenager and joined the Army Reserve in 2004.As a fellow Reserve Soldier, he fit right in with us. He spent six months working in our media operations office at Camp Liberty. I remember his everlasting patience with younger, inexperienced interpreters who kept coming around for help with Arabic translations. He was in high demand in our office full of journalists and broadcasters. When I needed an interpreter for a story, I always hoped it would be him. More often than not, it wasn't.

What I know of Altaie is not much, what I know of other POWs and those missing in action is even less. But I will spend this day learning of their bravery in the face of adversity.

According to the Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association, more than 10,000 American service members have been listed as missing in action since World War I. Thousands more have been incarcerated as prisoners of war. Take time today to think about what our prisoners of war and missing in action have gone through and continue to go through.



Today is their day, so make it count.

POW/MIA Freedom Ride

The Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association will conduct the sixth annual Tricommunity POW/MIA Motorcycle Freedom Ride beginning at 10:15 a.m. Saturday at the National Infantry Museum. The ride is in conjunction with the Phenix City POW/MIA Memorial Dedication and Recognition Ceremony at 11 a.m. at the Phenix City Amphitheater. A monument to POWs and MIAs will be unveiled. Speakers will include MG Michael Ferriter, post commander, and CSM Matthew Walker, the U.S. Army Infantry School command sergeant major and president of the Sergeants Major Association.

Riding a time warp to the holidays

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The years tick off way too fast now — 2009 is vanishing before our very eyes.

December seems like a long time away, but before you know it, we'll all be decking the halls, roasting chestnuts on an open fire and toasting another New Year.

For me, when football season starts, it's like hopping in the DeLorean time machine straight to Christmas Day.

Even after five months back on Georgia soil, it's still hard to believe sometimes that Wendy and I don't live in Japan anymore. We spent seven years in our adopted "second home" and adored every second of it.

Don't get me wrong. Coming back to the U.S. has been splendid.

I'll always miss interacting with the Japanese people and riding the trains and subways around Tokyo — not to mention the sushi, yakiniku, gyoza and izakaya outings with friends and coworkers that offered up a lifetime of memories. But we're thrilled to call the tricommunity home. This is where we belong.

As expected, there's been some reverse culture shock along the way. The transition, however, has gone remarkably smooth. We may even have discovered a few things in the process.

For instance, I now know Columbus has the worst roads in Georgia but the most immaculate, majestic Burger Kings I've ever seen.

At least I finally have all the shortcuts down between our apartment off Milgen Road and the good times up at Columbus Park Crossing.

And our Japanese food favorites? They've been comfortably replaced by late-night Krystals, hot wings at the sports bar, barbecue sandwiches and Waffle House.

Back in the South again, we're closer to family in Atlanta and Florida, but safely within the confines of that all-important "pop-in visit" buffer zone. It's also been nice watching our beloved Atlanta Braves, Florida State Seminoles, Atlanta Falcons and Jacksonville Jaguars without having to be up at 3 a.m. to catch it on AFN — minus that pesky 14-hour time difference.

We really loved Japan, but the timing was right. In life, quality time is what it's all about. Spend it wisely.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Training builds resolve, will in Soldiers

One afternoon I witnessed Soldiers in training, road marching with very heavy loads, and drill sergeants yelling, trying to motivate them to keep going.

Although I knew why, I could not help but feel sorry for the Soldiers having to carry such a heavy load on such a long stroll. But reality set in as I was leaving and I saw the looks on some of the Soldiers' faces — some almost to the point that, to me, they seemed like they wanted to give up and go back home where they think they belong.

But still something kept them from leaving, something kept them enduring to the end. As I passed that ever so long, slow-moving force of future protection, I was reminded once again, why training has to be hard, has to be long. I was reminded why it has to take individuals past their breaking point where they reach deep within and pull from their inner core to find the will to keep going, the will to see this through.

I understood once again what it means to serve and protect, and for those young brave and bold Soldiers, they will become that protecting force.

Their loads have to be heavy, for as I told my mother, that may have to be their buddy or fellow Soldier they may have to carry during war. Their strolls have to be long because they have to endure whatever distance there is to the next safe line, maybe sometimes while carrying their buddy.

Their training has to be tough so that in difficult situations of war, they will know that deep within, they have the strength to keep going and the will to survive. They will know that although it seems far away, there is an end to each endeavor and they can look back and say, "I conquered."

That's when those young brave and bold Soldiers realize that they have to be tough, they have to keep going, they have to endure, they have to be ready — for they will be part of the protectors of the nation, part of the legacy that keeps us free. They have to be challenged and they have to overcome because they are Infantrymen.

MCOE to meet BRAC milestone

Lori Egan
THE BAYONET

Fort Benning will reach another milestone in its transformation to the Maneuver Center of Excellence Oct. 1 when MG Michael Ferriter becomes the center's first commanding general and its Soldiers don the redesigned MCOE patch.

COL Bryan Owens, who was nominated for promotion to brigadier general Aug. 28, will become the commandant of the Infantry School. MG James Milano, who assumed command of the U.S. Army Armor Center Aug. 27 at Fort Knox, Ky., remains the chief of Armor, and COL David Teeples becomes the commandant of the Armor School.

Because of the Base Realignment and Closure 2005 legislation, the Army is satisfying a need that has existed for 91 years, said Infantry historian Dave Stieghan.

Infantry and Armor need each other — an Infantryman can't carry a .120 mm cannon or walk over barbed wire, and a tanker can't see a RPG gunner or a mine.

"To survive on the battlefield and to operate effectively, Infantry and Armor Soldiers need to train together and know each other's doctrine," Stieghan said.

As the Infantry and Armor schools co-locate as the MCOE, the goal is to ensure "we can do this without interrupting the training and education we provide," said GEN Martin E. Dempsey, the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's commanding general, when he was in Columbus for TRADOC's Initial Entry Training Forum earlier in the month.

Both schools are the Army's premier outfits for teaching Soldiers how to close with the enemy, he said.

"We're connected now, but having them physically together will enhance our ability to do that," said the 1974 U.S. Military Academy graduate who was commissioned as an Armor officer. "We're pretty excited about it."

Jay Brown, Fort Benning's BRAC program manager, said with the Oct. 1 standup, staffs are no longer operating in a virtual capacity, but the changes will be transparent to most. There will be a ceremony recognizing the Maneuver Center's activation, but it's being planned for mid-October.

With nearly $1 billion in construction and another 14 projects to be awarded by the month's end, "we are on track to have all courses relocated before Sept. 15, 2011," Brown said.

The Federal Register published the record of decision for the MCOE's environmental impact statement Sept. 4. It's available online at www.hqda.army.mil/acsim/brac/nepa_eis_docs.htm.

Documentary on meeting troops opens

Transformation is focus of movie

Lori Egan

The Way We Get By, a documentary that follows troop greeters in Bangor, Maine, opens today for a weeklong screening at Carmike 15.

Troop greeters are volunteers who meet at Bangor International Airport to greet the military who are on flights to and from Iraq and Afghanistan.

"My mom is troop greeter," said director Aron Gaudet. "And I've watched how her life has transformed from a 76-year-old birdwatching retiree to a woman who leaves the house at 3 a.m. in the winter to get to the airport to meet the troops."

This movie is about three volunteers who have dedicated their lives to be at the airport, to greet and shake the hands of almost 900,000 Soldiers who have landed at the airport in the last six years, he said. It celebrates senior citizens who share their love with strangers who need and deserve it.

"Hopefully, it will be inspiring to others," he said.

The one hour and 24 minute film shows daily at 1, 3:10, 5:20, 7:30 and 9:45 p.m. Carmike 15 is located at 5555 Whittelesey Blvd., in north Columbus.

A UH-60 Black Hawk lifts cargo into the air during a successful sling load operation Monday at Lawson Army Airfield. The Pathfinder students practiced sling load operations in preparation for going to the field.

SPC Chris Gunter, a UH-60 Black Hawk crew chief, peers through a door in the belly of the helicopter to supervise a student using a static probe to discharge electricity from the helicopter before his teammate hooks up a load of cargo.

SGT Nathan Rodeheaven uses a static probe to discharge static electricity from a UH-60 Black Hawk before his teammate, PV2 Danny Browning, hooks up the cargo to the helicopter. The safety measure prevents the hook-up man from being electrocuted in the event there is accumulated static electricity.

Pathfinders deliver the goods at rodeo

Forget roping a steer, when the students of Fort Benning's Pathfinder course head out for a rodeo, they aren't referring to a sport but rather the safest, fastest method of resupply currently available.

"We call it the sling load rodeo," said Derick Herd, the course's NCOIC. "The students practice hooking up a cargo load to a UH-60 Black Hawk."

Delivering supplies via aircraft is faster and safer than convoy operations because convoy's may be slowed down by road conditions or encounter improvised explosive devices," said SFC Richard Wentz, a Pathfinder instructor supervising teams of Soldiers at one of four landing zones selected for Monday's sling load exercise at Lawson Army Airfield. "With sling load operations, you can sling fuel, water trailers, humvees, just about any piece of equipment the Army's got so long as the aircraft can pick it up."

The students began the three-week course Aug. 31.

In the first week, students learned air traffic control fundamentals, medical evacuation procedures, close air support operations, the basics of sling load operations and became certified to rig and inspect sling loads. Students also learned to plan and establish helicopter landing zones for day and night operations. In the second week, students were taught how to establish different types of drop zones, pickup zone operations and conducted an Airborne jump from a UH-60 Black Hawk. The students also took the sling load hands-on exam, a 25-question test that is often the most difficult part of the course, Herd said.

In the third week, the students practice hook-up procedures in preparation for their field training exercise and final exam.

Sling-loading doesn't sound hard, Herd said, until students learn they must factor in a lot of circumstances: a helicopter hovering feet above their heads, built-up static electricity in the hook-up cables and a half-ton of cargo, just to name a few.

"A lot of these guys have never been underneath an aircraft before so they are nervous," Wentz said.

Most of the 45 students were Soldiers with 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, who bought out the course, Herd said.

The students worked in three-man hook-up teams, which consisted of a signalman, static electricity probe man and hook-up man.

With their cargo packed and cables attached, SGT Nathan Rodeheaven, with the static probe, and PV2 Danny Browning, the hook-up man, hunkered down next to a load as their signalman, SSG Bryan Valentine, guided the helicopter in.

Once it was in position, Rodeheaven and Browning reached up and hooked the load to the helicopter, ensuring they'd discharged any accumulated static electricity using a rod with a hook at the end of it. The team then hustled away from the helicopter before it lifted off.

PV2 Danny Browning grips the cargo hook that will attach a half-ton load to the helicopter.

Rodeheaven, an Infantryman with B Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., said the sling load went smooth on his first try.

"It wasn't difficult," he said. "But it could've been, depending on how the helicopter came in."

Browning, a cavalry scout with the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, was a walk-on student.

"The hardest part is retaining the knowledge," he said. "You don't have much time to learn these skills and you have to get it absolutely perfect or else you don't make it."

For Valentine, a fire support specialist with the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., and the third member of the team, the benefits of the course are clear.

"Knowledge and ability," said Valentine, who has 11 deployments under his belt. "With sling loads you can get (supplies) into harder-to-reach places accessible only by foot. If I have to do it, I'll feel somewhat prepared."

The students graduate today.

National Infantry Association awards two Doughboys

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

GEN(R) John W. Foss and CSM(R) Jimmie W. Spencer are the 2009 recipients of the Doughboy Award in recognition of their contributions to the Infantry.

The National Infantry Association will honor the two during a dinner Tuesday night in conjunction with the Infantry Warfighting Conference at Fort Benning and Columbus. It's the highest award the chief of Infantry can present to an Infantryman.

Past recipients include former Secretary of State and GEN(R) Colin Powell, Sen. Daniel Inouye, Ross Perot, Bob Hope, and former Sens. Robert Dole and John Tower.

Spencer said the selection left him with mixed emotions.

"To be nominated is a great honor and to be selected is just overwhelming," he said. "You go on a list of names with people that are real American heroes. I'm just honored to be mentioned in the same breath with them.

"There's shock, too, because I don't consider myself the most worthy person for it. But I guarantee nobody's more appreciative of the selection than I would be."

Spencer enlisted in the Army in December 1961. During 32 years on active duty, he had various assignments with Infantry, Special Forces and Ranger units. He completed two combat tours in Vietnam — first as a squad leader and platoon sergeant with the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) (Airborne) from 1965 to 1966 and then as a military adviser to South Vietnamese forces from 1969 to 1970.

"That was the most satisfying feeling to come back after that first tour, as a combat Infantryman, knowing I was up to the task ... because it came very early in my career," he said.

Spencer held numerous command sergeant major positions, including stints with the 2nd Infantry Division at Camp Casey, South Korea; U.S. Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va.; and U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C. His many military awards include the Bronze Star with one oak leaf cluster; Purple Heart; Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster; and Vietnam Honor Medal.

He now lives in Alexandria and retired from the military in 1993 to become director of the Association of the United States Army's Noncommissioned Officer and Soldier Programs. In 2004, he was inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

"I always wanted to be one of those Soldiers who would volunteer in times of need and emergency. I always thought of myself (as) willing to step up and do my part," Spencer said. "That's what I consider the Infantry to be. We're the first responders. We put ourselves between family and friends and those who would do us harm. I was always proud to be known among that group of Americans."

He said building quality teams and surrounding himself with talented individuals led to success in his Army career and beyond.

"I always had the rule that if I'm smarter than you, you're not on my team," he said. "It's not about you, it's about the unit, the team, the organization. As long as you're willing to measure success by how well the unit does, then I think you'll be successful in the Army ... I've carried that philosophy with me into my post-Army career."

> — CSM(R) Jimmie W. Spencer

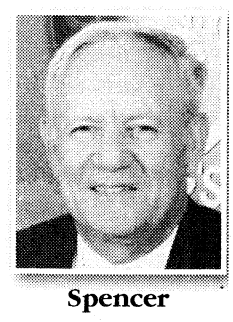
Spencer said his life goal was to be considered a good Soldier, and he views the Doughboy Award as validation in a sense, since it comes from his peers.

"That sounds a little self-serving — and I don't want to sound that way — but this award means a lot to me," he said. "When I accept it, I'm going to tell them I'll do everything I can the rest of my days to make sure they don't regret giving me this great honor."

Foss, meanwhile, has a rich heritage of Army service. His father, Peter, was a combat Infantryman in World War I. An older brother, Pete Jr., graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1951, and Foss followed suit five years later. The two siblings later served as battalion commanders at the same time in Vietnam.

Foss, 76, began his career as an enlisted Soldier in the 136th Infantry of the Minnesota National Guard in April 1950 and joined the regular Army the following year as an Infantryman. After gaining his commission, he went on to hold numerous command and staff positions in the U.S. and overseas.



He wound up completing two combat tours in Vietnam. His stint as commander of the 3rd Battalion, 12th Infantry, turned out to be the most memorable in his career, he said.

"Commanding a battalion against the North Vietnamese was a challenge and among the greatest rewards I could have," he said. "The battalion did very well, but the troops were the ones who excelled."

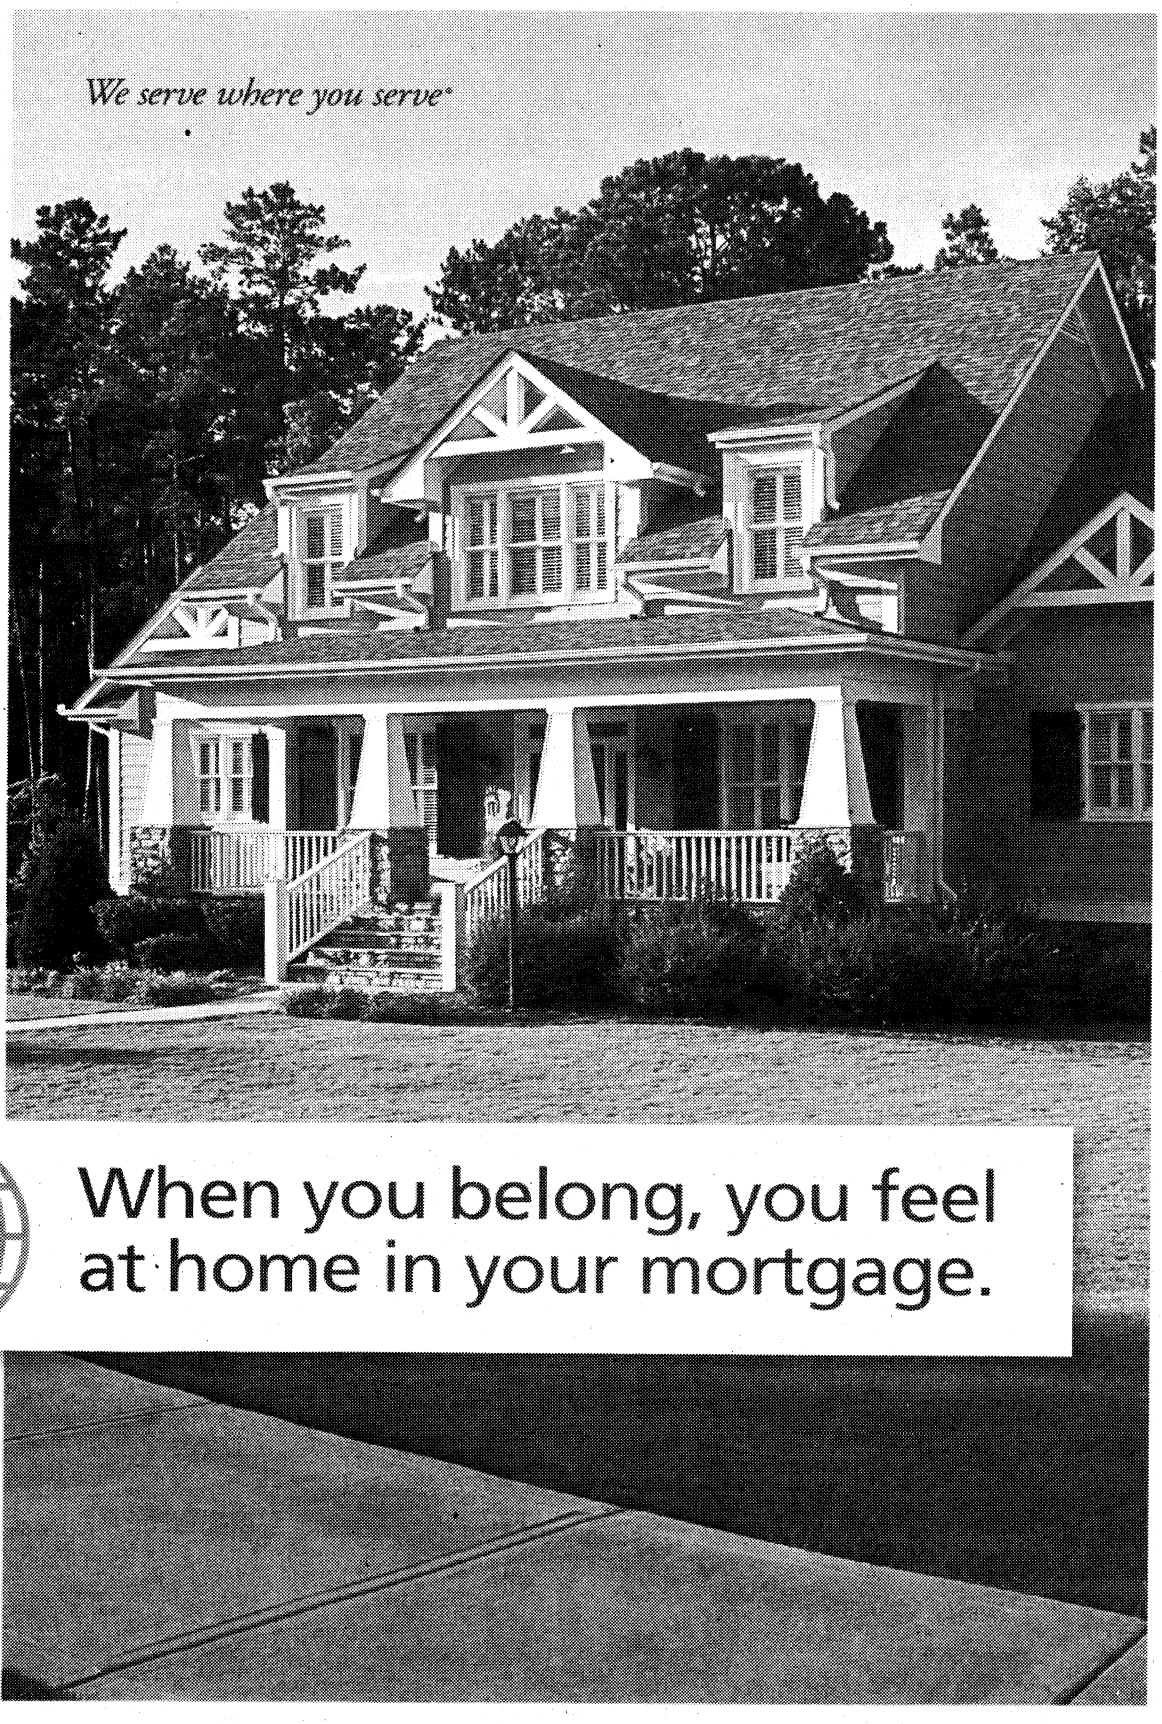
Foss was the Infantry School's 37th commandant and served as commanding general at Fort Benning from March 1984 to January 1986, arriving just as the Army launched its Light Infantry concept.

"As I look back at that period, that really transformed our Infantry into the best in the world," he said. "No one else can stand up to them. So I was glad to be a part of that."

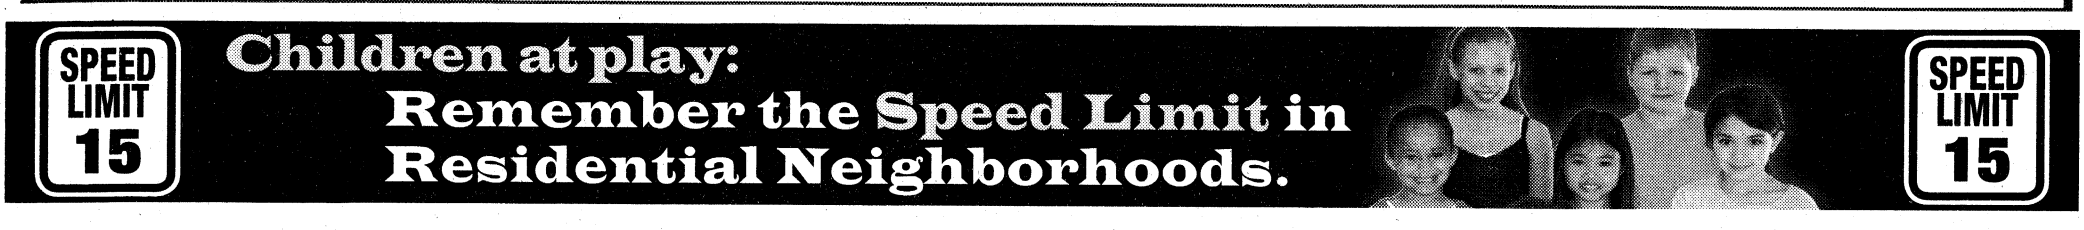
Foss also commanded the 82nd Airborne Division and XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, N.C., where he deployed units on emergency operational missions to Honduras, Panama and the Persian Gulf.

Spencer

Foss



"Everybody should be that lucky. Great Soldiers, great mission," he said. "I served in eight divisions, and the 82nd worked harder than anyone else."



Foss spent four tours in Europe and four in the Far East. He also was commanding general of the Seventh Army Training Command in Germany, deputy chief of staff for Army operations and plans, and commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command. His awards include two Silver Stars, the Distinguished Flying Cross and Distinguished Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters.

Foss retired from the Army in 1991 and was inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame four years later. He lives in Williamsburg, Va.

"It humbles me very much," Foss said of his selection as the Doughboy Award's officer recipient. "All these great Infantrymen I served with through the years — I think about them, and those not with us anymore ... the great NCOs and officers.

"It means I've been recognized by the people I consider the best Soldiers in the Army, the Infantry. It's a very humbling thing."

'Soldier's NCO' first to earn MOH in Afghanistan

Elizabeth M. Collins
ARMY NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Ask anyone — family, friends, Soldiers — who knew SFC Jared Monti of the 10th Mountain Division, and they'll tell you he was the best friend, best Soldier, best noncommissioned officer and best person they ever knew.

Model Soldier

"He set an example in every way, shape and form," said former CPT Ross A. Berkoff, the unit's intelligence officer, explaining that Monti was known as the best NCO in the 3rd Squadron, 71st Cavalry Regiment (Recon), 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

"He was willing to stand up for his Soldiers," added SSG Christopher J. Grzecki. "He didn't care what the guy above him thought of him as long as he knew that he was doing the right thing to take care of his guys."

Monti would have done anything for his Soldiers, so after the initial shock, no one was surprised that he sacrificed his life to save another Soldier during an intense firefight with Taliban insurgents in Afghanistan on June 21, 2006.

First for Afghanistan

He was posthumously promoted to sergeant first class the following day and will be the first Soldier awarded the Medal of Honor for Operation Enduring Freedom Thursday when President Barack Obama presents the nation's highest honor to Monti's parents in a White House ceremony.

Monti will be the second service member to receive the Medal of Honor for valor in Afghanistan as a Navy SEAL, Lt. Michael Murphy, was posthumously presented the medal two years ago for his actions in a 2005 battle against Taliban fighters in the remote Hindu Kush mountains.

Monti will also be inducted into the Pentagon's Hall of Heroes in a ceremony Friday.

Monti earned the Medal of Honor when he and 15 other Soldiers became the first American service members to ever set foot in the Gremen Valley, near the Pakistan border. Reports had shown insurgents were in the area, but not their exact location, their numbers or the types of weapons they had.

Kill Teams

Monti's patrol consisted of two six-man "Kill Teams" led by now-SFC Christopher M. Cunningham and now-SSG John Hawes, combinations of snipers and forward observers. Because the mission was dangerous, the teams were assigned several extra scouts, a medic and Monti. Although Monti had helped build the Kill Teams with his best men, he hadn't been out on a mission with them yet and the men were excited to work together.

Then-SSG Jared Monti, seen in the mountains of Afghanistan sometime before the battle June 21, 2006, in which he gave his life trying to help another Soldier.

They were on a reconnaissance mission to provide their command with information on the enemy before the 3rd BCT began a larger push into the region for Operation Gowardesh Thrust. They were supposed to stay hidden — not an easy feat for 16 men — and avoid engaging the enemy if possible; but Hawes said both he and several other Soldiers had gut feelings that something wasn't right.

Dropped off at a mortar-firing position near the Gowardesh Bridge on the evening of June 17, the Soldiers began a difficult climb up the mountain the next day. Moving mostly at night to avoid enemy detection, they climbed for three days before reaching their first observation point at a plateau 2,600 feet above sea level the evening of June 20, the night before the operation was scheduled to begin.

But unit commanders were forced to push the attack back at least 24 hours. Cunningham said they knew they had to push forward because of the danger of detection, but they needed more food and water.

A resupply was supposed to occur after dark, protecting their position, but Hawes was chagrined to see large white packages dropping less than 150 meters from them in broad daylight. When some of the men returned with the supplies, it was to see a man watching them with military-grade binoculars — unusual for the average Afghan villager.

Overwhelming firepower

A couple of hours later as dusk was falling and Monti, Cunningham and Hawes were discussing their options, a rocket-propelled grenade flew over their heads and they were overwhelmed by a stunning amount of firepower. Some of the Soldiers' rifles were shot out of their hands while others couldn't even reach their weapons. Monti got on the radio to call in air and indirect-fire support, and Hawes remembered the Soldiers taking cover behind a few boulders and passing weapons back and forth to take the best shots.

Cunningham soon realized PFC Brian J. Bradbury was missing. He was injured and laying about 20 meters away in a slight depression. Cunningham was closer and offered to get him, but Monti refused, saying Bradbury was his Soldier.

He handed his radio to Grzecki and said, "You are now Chaos three-five," his call sign, and ran toward Bradbury. The wood line erupted with intense fire aimed at Monti. He made it a few meters before he was pushed back behind a small stone wall where another Soldier lay dead. He ran out again, was pushed behind the wall again and then ran into fire a third time.

Running into fire

"Monti ran straight for Bradbury as we all provided covering fire," Hawes wrote to Monti's mother, Janet. "I remember seeing Monti running and I was firing…as close as I dared…. Just as he was about to reach Bradbury, I ran out of ammo and as I dropped behind the rock to change magazines…I heard an RPG…explode. Monti's scream that he had been hit followed shortly after." Monti said he made his peace with God and asked someone to tell his parents he loved them before falling silent.

"It's not surprising in any way," Cunningham said. "I know he knew what he was going up against to help out his Soldier. I know he knew the consequences…. Ultimately, he knew he needed to get his guy."

Air support came a few minutes later and they finally pushed the insurgents back as darkness fell. The Soldiers spent an anxious night and after helicopters arrived to evacuate the dead the next morning, the patrol high-tailed it down the mountain.

An unwanted honor

Medals were the last thing on Cunningham and Hawes' minds (both men were later awarded Silver Stars and Grzecki and other Soldiers received the Bronze Star with Valor or the Army Commendation Medal with Valor), but when their commander said he was putting Monti in for the Medal of Honor, both men knew he deserved it.

And when the award finally came through and the president called Monti's father, Paul, he called Cunningham with the overwhelming, bittersweet news.

> "To him it would represent every single Soldier, Marine, Sailor, whoever, whether they're still in Afghanistan or Iraq or home…This (award) is for all of them."
> — Janet Monti, SFC Jared Monti's mother

"I have a tremendous feeling of pride," Paul Monti said. "But I still can't get over not having my son. I would give all of this up, all of it, everything, just to have him back, just to be able to hug him one more time."

Monti's family and friends agree that the award would have been the last thing he wanted. Monti was humble to a fault and most of his family didn't know he had received two Bronze Stars and a Purple Heart on a previous deployment until his funeral because he believed each award represented the death of someone's son, father or husband.

"It's nothing you want," Hawes explained. "When you start getting into that level of award, especially the Silver Star and higher, it's sounds cool when you read about it in a book, but when you realize what it takes to earn it … it really has to hit the fan and friends and stuff die, and that's not worth anything."

He would have wanted the medal to go to his men, Monti's mother said.

"To him it would represent every single Soldier, Marine, Sailor, whoever, whether they're still in Afghanistan or Iraq or home; whether they came home alive or in a casket; came home spiritually, emotionally or physically wounded….This (award) is for all of them," Janet Monti said.

Living on through his men

Monti taught Hawes and Grzecki how to be NCOs and take care of their men, and Cunningham explained that he had the "luxury" of working with Monti's men. They loved him so much and emulated him to the extent that Cunningham felt like he was still working with Monti.

Hawes is stationed now at Fort Jackson, S.C., and has shared Monti's story with his holdover recruits, inspiring several to stay in the Army, so Monti's values, the Army values, continue on today.

Statue: To be displayed alongside steel I-beam

Photos by Kristin Molinaro

The COL(R) Rick Rescorla statue was unveiled along Heritage Walk at the National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center Thursday. Both the statue and the steel I-beam will be on permanent display outside the museum once the monument is complete next year.

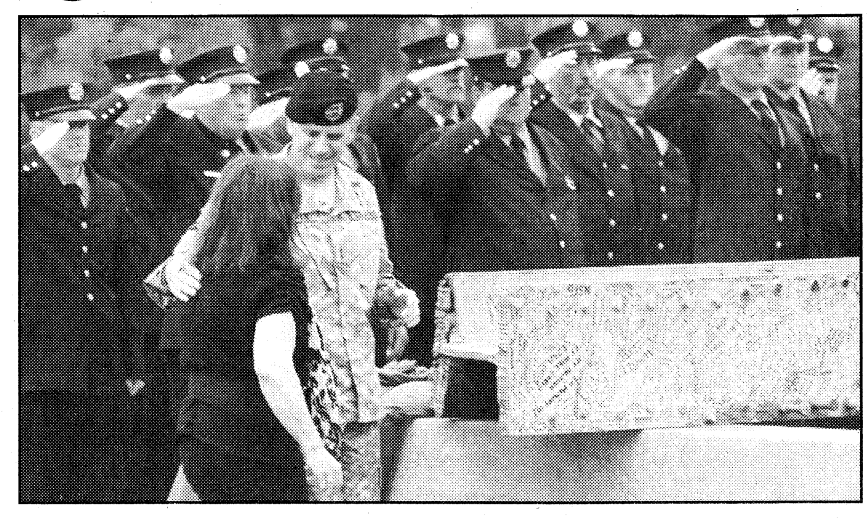
Rescorla served as a second lieutenant with 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, in Vietnam. The bronze statue unveiled at the ceremony was based on a Peter Arnett photo taken of Rescorla at the battle of la Drang. The photo was also on the original cover of the best-selling book We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young by LTG(R) Hal Moore and Joe Galloway.



"He strongly believed good men should defend liberty whenever and wherever it is jeopardized," Ferriter said.

The ceremony began with a performance by the Fannin County Middle School choir followed by a procession of New York City firefighters and the department's ceremonial Fire Engine No. 343.

The beam was dedicated by Paddy Concannon, a retired New York Fire Department lieutenant and founder of the Fire Family Transport Foundation, to the men and women of the U.S. Army, who've lost their lives since the attacks on 9/11, and to the Soldiers who continue to serve.

"I'm so proud to be with these men and women," Susan said. "This is something I will never forget."

After the event, the audience was encouraged to write well wishes and sign the support beam.

MG Michael Ferriter, commanding general of Fort Benning, stands with Susan Rescorla, the widow of COL(R) Rick Rescorla, at the unveiling of a steel I-beam from the World Trade Center's North Tower. Rescorla died inside the North Tower on Sept. 11.

One signer, Jim Kelly, a former platoon leader with A Company, 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, in Vietnam, met Rescorla during the war.

Kelly said they had many conversations during the war but one stuck out the most.

"We were talking about what history would say about (the Vietnam War) and Rick said, 'Jim, forget about history, we are making history,'" Kelly said. "How true it was many years later."

The statue and steel beam will be on permanent display in the spring when they are incorporated into a 9/11 memorial being constructed along Heritage Walk, said Cyndi Cerbin, director of communications for the National Infantry Museum Foundation.

"The memorial will encompass elements from each of the tragedies of that day — the twin towers, the Pentagon and the field in Shanksville, Pa.," she said.

Covenant: Renews promise, reaffirms commitment

the old facility. There's more space to study and a larger computer lab," Falu said. "We have a lot of great caregivers in there to help them ... It's a safe, secure place."

Peter said he likes the more spacious setting.

"The gym is my favorite thing because it's large," he said, "and we can go outside and play."

Ernesto Prince will deploy to Iraq next month with the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, leaving his family behind at Fort Gordon, where the children will attend Child, Youth and School Services programs on that installation.

He said it's a "new experience" with his wife now in the military, but he praised the Army's support structure, saying he's confident the family will be in a strong, helpful environment while he's away.

"It's a good thing seeing how they care for families and kids," Prince said.

MG Michael Ferriter, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning commanding general, said the Army Family Covenant is more than a document.

"It's a commitment, and I believe it is important every now and then to come together to reaffirm our convictions that the heart and soul and strength of our Army is our families. And it's important to renew the promise to those families," he said.

"America's strength is its Army. The Army's strength is its Soldiers. And the Soldiers' strength are their families. It's no stretch to say the strength of America depends on the strength, the well-being and resilience of our Army families."

Enhancing quality of life can "mitigate the negative impacts" of Soldier training demands and extended deployments on families, Ferriter said.

"If a Soldier knows his leaders care and his family's needs are being taken care of, he or she will be most effective," he said.

Ferriter said re-signing the covenant is a fresh pledge to continue to improve family health care; provide them with affordable, comfortable, contemporary housing; expand educational and employment opportunities; and keep open the lines of communication to deployed Soldiers, including social media outlets. Fort Benning also will explore more opportunities for children through youth programs, sports and outdoor recreation, he said.

Not far from the new School Age Services Center, renovations are under way on French, Green and Blue fields to create a $1.4 million sports complex that will include 17 fields, a concession facility, walking trail and dining pavilions.

A $5 million child-care center is being built near McGraw Village on Custer Road, while work continues on a $4 million facility close to Indianhead Terrace.

New program rates levels of severity for influenza

MACH PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

What is MACH FLU (Condition) CON Program?

A new program that measures the level of severity of seasonal influenza based on trigger mechanisms. Who makes the determination? The Maneuver Center commanding general or designee can change FLUCON based on guidance from director of health services or public health emergency officer (PHEO). Leadership may consider alternate or additional triggers to those listed based on special situations or additional surveillance methods.

FLUCON	SITUATION	REQUIRED MINIMUM ACTIONS AT EACH FLUCON
GREEN	No significant influenza-like activity	Sustainment, revision of plans and preparation for higher level flu conditions. Implementation of IVIP.
YELLOW	Expected seasonal flu-like activity	Increased utilization of preventive measures: • hand washing/hand sanitizer • cough/sneeze etiquette • use masks as appropriate • authorized school/work absences
ORANGE	Novel or unexpected flu-like activity	Aggressive implementation of preventive measures. Heightened awareness/ surveillance in cooperation with non-DOD federal, state and local agencies. Active planning/preparation for FLUCON RED or BLACK.
RED	Flu-like illness at an incidence higher than that seen typically during traditional flu season with average morbidity rate	Continue FLUCON YELLOW and ORANGE actions. Decision Point — Commander will recommend following actions to CG: limited social distancing measures, authorize telecommuting if feasible, limit unnecessary social gatherings, consider post school closure if absentee rate threatens mission effectiveness. Establish extramural evaluation/treatment site.
BLACK	Flu-like illness with high incidence and high morbidity or any incidence and high mortality rate	Decision Point — Commander will recommend following actions to CG: significant social distancing measures, cancel community gatherings, close school(s), limit duty to essential personnel, cancel non-mission essential training, fully activate emergency action plans.

BENCH NOTES

U.S. Open upset

After winning five consecutive U.S. Open titles, Roger Federer proved fallible, losing to Argentinian Juan Martin del Potro Monday at Flushing Meadows, N.Y. The only other player to beat Federer in a major final is Rafael Nadal.

In the women's final, Kim Clijsters beat Caroline Wozniacki for the title. Clijsters became the first mother to win a major title in 29 years, which Evonne Goolagong did at Wimbledon.

Venus and Serena Williams took home the women's doubles trophy.

Hamlin wins, Vickers in

Denny Hamlin won at Richmond International Raceway Saturday, his "home" track. He called it the biggest win of his career, and hoped the momentum would keep swinging his way as the Chase begins this week.

Going into the race, Matt Kenseth was 12th in points, but slipped back, along with Kyle Busch, who did not make the Chase for the Cup. Brian Vickers claimed the last spot.

The first race of the Chase will be at 2 p.m. Sunday on ABC at New Hampshire Motor Speedway.

Woods gets sixth win

Tiger Woods mopped the greens with the competition at Cog Hill Sunday, winning the BMW Championship by eight strokes over Jim Furyk and Marc Leishman. It was his sixth victory of the year and assures him of the No. 1 seed for the final tourney of the FedEx Cup.

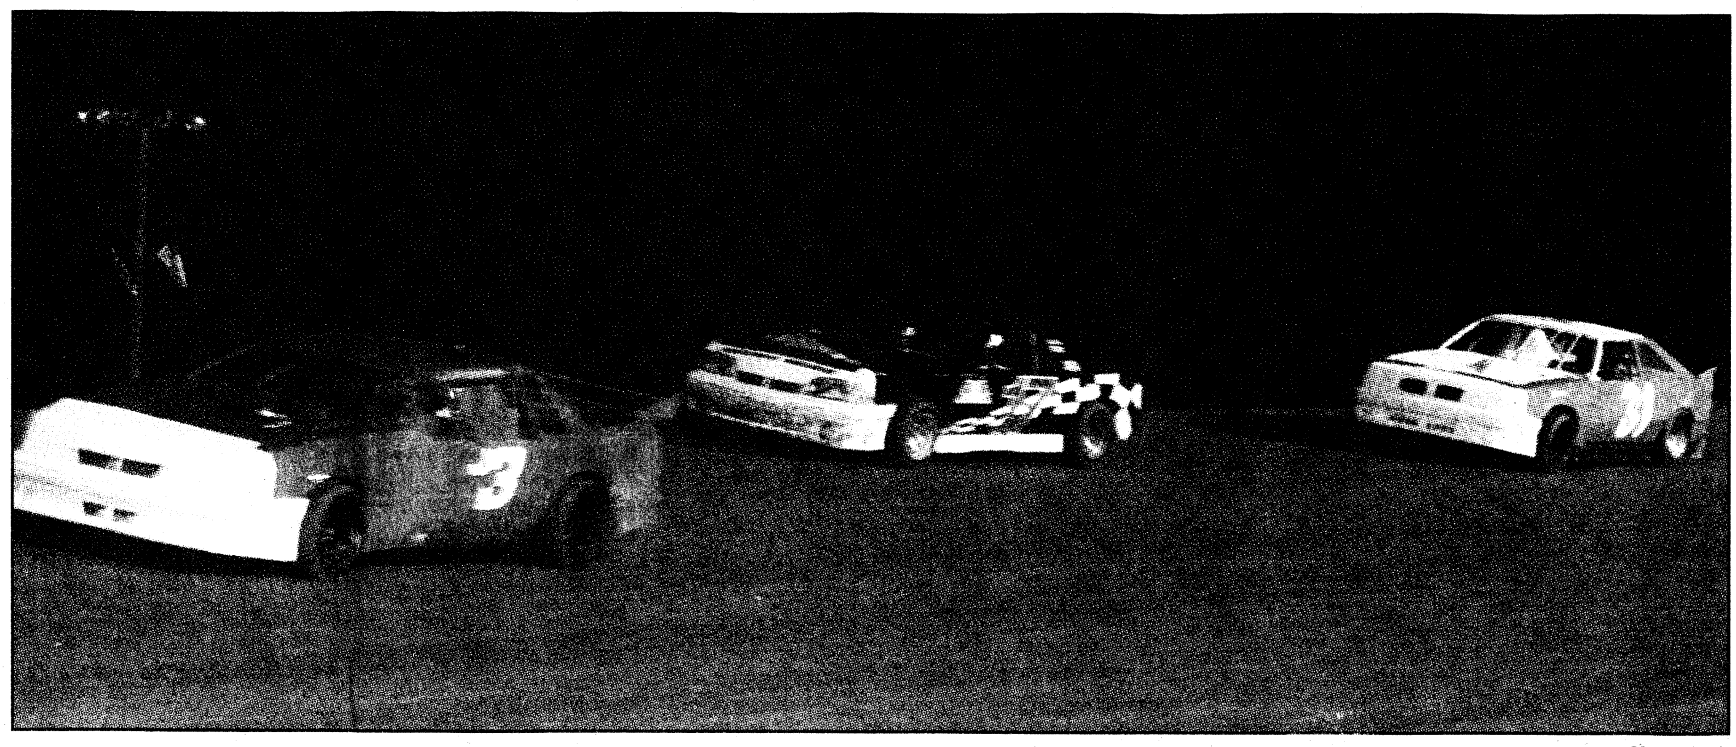
The Tour Championship will be Thursday through Sept. 27 at East Lake Golf Club in Atlanta and shown on NBC.

Serena fined

Serena Williams was fined $10,000 for profanities yelled at a U.S. Open line judge Saturday. She was also fined $500 for smashing her racket.

Williams was not happy with the judge calling a foot fault and giving Kim Clijsters the penalty point, which came on match point, thereby giving her the win in the semifinals.

Williams said in a statement Sunday, "...everyone could truly see the passion I have for my job."



Passion is one thing, Serena, professionalism is another.

Gators still No. 1

It's no surprise the Florida Gators are still ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press Top 25 after a big victory over Troy Saturday. Texas remains at No. 2, followed by USC, Alabama in fourth and Ole Miss and Penn State tied in the fifth spot.

Michigan made its way into the top 25 with a 38-34 win over Notre Dame. It's the Wolverines' first showing in the poll since the end of the 2007 season.

Down and dirty in East Alabama

SSG Rick Gilliland, driving the No. 31 Ford Mustang, stays close to John Capps III (3) and Patty Ann Howell (17) during the Pony Stock division qualifying heat Saturday night at East Alabama Motor Speedway in Phenix City. He went on to a runner-up finish in the 15-lap feature race.

Soldier on right track at local speedway

Vince Little

When Rick Gilliland returned to Fort Benning in March — with an eye toward retirement in two years — the staff sergeant said he and his wife, Marcia, wanted to buy a boat. He wound up with a race car instead.

On Saturday night at East Alabama Motor Speedway in Phenix City, Gilliland capped his rookie season in the Pony Stock division by driving that 1980 Ford Mustang to a second-place finish in the Alabama State Rules Race. John Capps III dominated the 15-lap feature to grab the win, while Patty Ann Howell came home third.

It marked the second straight runner-up finish for Gilliland, who appeared in 10 events this year at the 3/8-mile dirt track. He won a race last month and also garnered a third-place showing and two fourth-place efforts along the way.

There is some money on the circuit but drivers in the speedway's seven divisions face more sacrifice and grind than windfall, he said.

"On a normal Saturday night feature race, there are money prizes for us, but not much," Gilliland said. "It covers the entrance fee and fuel costs ... Unless you're a big NASCAR driver with a lot of sponsors, this race at East Alabama is a hobby for most of the guys. It gets you out of the house and gets the families out there."

The 41-year-old Soldier, who works for the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Headquarters and Headquarters Company, began racing in June and ran about every other weekend. Because of his

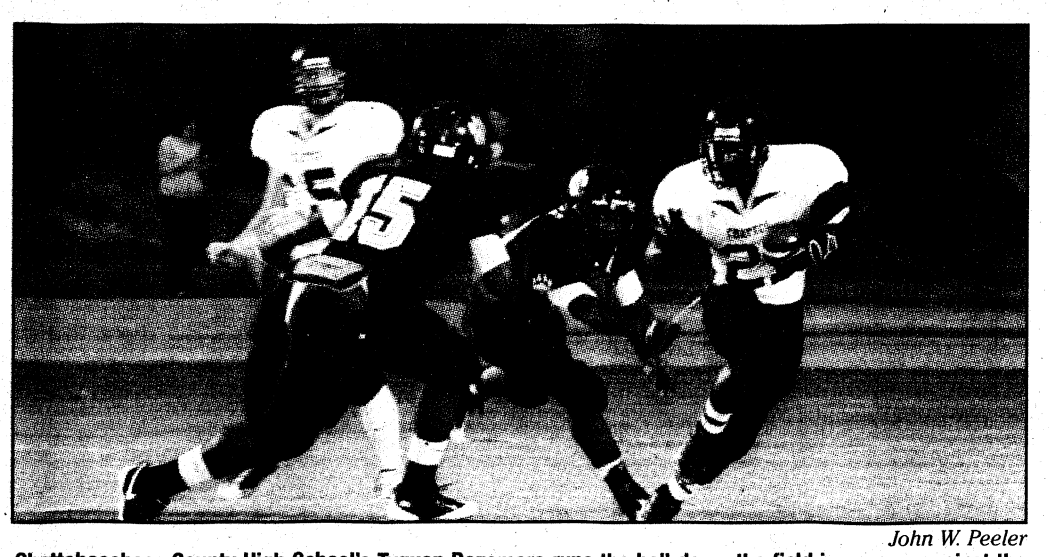
Chattco High School Panthers remain undefeated



John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

Chattahoochee County High School Panthers remained unbeaten in Region 4-A with a 14-7 come-from-behind victory over the Wildcats of Schley County Friday in Ellaville, Ga.

Following a scoreless first quarter, Chattco turned the ball over on their own 9-yard line on a botched snap from the shotgun formation. The Wildcats needed only one play to capitalize on the miscue, scoring on a Trae Mann run. With the successful Carlos Ixcot point after, Schley led 7-0.

Both teams continued to struggle offensively and went into halftime with Schley holding a one-touchdown lead.

Chattco got on the scoreboard in the waning seconds of the third quarter capping a 7-play, 55-yard drive on a 2-yard run by running back Eric Zeigler for the touchdown. The Panthers elected to go for the two-point conversion with quarterback David Cochran scoring on a keeper giving the Panthers an 8-7 lead. Cochran was 1-for-3 for 34 yards through the air and gained 4 yards on the ground during the drive while Zeigler rushed three times for 12 yards.

John W. Peeler
Chattahoocheee County High School's Tyquan Bazemore runs the ball down the field in a game against the Schley County High School Wildcats Friday in Ellaville, Ga.

Schley's offense kept the ball for four minutes on the opening possession of the fourth quarter but was forced to punt to Chattco after failing to convert on 3rd-and-24. Eight plays later, Chattco scored on a 29-yard pass from Cochran to Niko Jones. The point after failed and Chattco took a 14-7 lead with 4:42 remaining in the game.

On the ensuing kickoff, Schley moved the ball from their own 25-yard line to Chattco's 46-yard line and on fourth-and-10 any comeback attempt by the Wildcats faded when Chattco's Dequavious Barbin intercepted the ball with 50 seconds remaining in the game

The victory moved the Panthers to 3-0 overall and 2-0 in Region 4-A while the loss dropped the Wildcats to 1-2 overall and 1-1 in Region 4-A. Up next for Chattco is Central Talbotton. Game time is 7:30 p.m. today in Cusseta, Ga.

Coaches not a dime a dozen

John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

Fort Benning Children Youth and School Services has never went without offering sports programs for the youth on post, but having enough volunteer coaches for this year's football, soccer and cheerleading presented a challenge sports specialist Dorrie Wagner said.

"With the 3rd ID leaving, all the people who normally coach are deploying so that took away a lot of coaches," she said. "But, we made it and they are all out there practicing and getting ready for the season."

Wagner said many of the coaches who normally volunteer to coach the sports programs on post could not commit to coaching because of the upcoming deployment, but said there were some coaches who signed up to coach although they would have to leave at some point in the season.

"Everyone has a coach right now, but if someone wants to be an assistant coach, that would be great," she said. "We do have a couple of coaches who will have to leave, so we definitely need some assistants who can take over."

Wagner said although mostly Soldiers volunteer to be coaches, this year's 9- to 11-year-old soccer program is a little different.

"Our 9 to 11 soccer team has all moms coaching," she said. "That is not a bad thing. It is just unusual for all of one age group to have moms as coaches."

With the exception of assistant coaches for this year's football, soccer and cheerleading programs, CYSS has turned their sights toward seeking coaches for the upcoming wrestling and basketball season.

Wagner encourages individuals interested in coaching wrestling and basketball to get in contact with CYSS as soon as possible. Wrestling is open to children ages 4-15 and basketball is open to ages 6-15.

"We always have kids wanting to participate in sports," Wagner said. "But programs can't run without coaches."

For more information on becoming a volunteer coach, call 706-545-1853 or 706-545-3582.

Take swing at post golf course

John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

If you are looking to learn the game of golf or wanting to improve your game, the Fort Benning Golf Course is a good place to start, said Fort Benning golf pro Bubba Patrick.

Under the tutelage of teaching pro Hugh Royer, those wanting to learn the sport are taught everything from the basics of the setup, stance and swing to putting and chipping.

"We have junior, ladies and men's lessons available and do children's lessons during the summer for kids 7 and older," Patrick said. "All the lessons are open to the public. If you have access to the post, then you have access to the golf course."

Patrick said individual lessons are $50 while series lessons, three one-hour sessions, are $130.

Located on Main Post, the Fort Benning Golf Club has three 9-hole courses: The Bradley, The Marshall and The Patton.

In addition to the three courses, the club also has a lit practice area, a putting green, and a practice green with bunkers.

An annual player package is available for golfers who play regularly or a greens fee card for those who play less regular. A daily fee plan and corporate members is also available.

Patrick said specials are also available every month.

"For September and into the first week of October we have our Monday Quarterback Club," he said. "It's a dollar a hole. You can get 18 holes for $18 or nine holes for $12. This includes cart and greens fees. It is a pretty good deal."

The golf course has an on-site pro shop with all the latest golf equipment necessary, in-house special ordering and handicap services from the Georgia State Golf Association.

Course hours are 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Pro shop hours are 8 a.m. to dark Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. to dark Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Both the course and pro shop are closed Christmas Day.

Gilliland: Plans to race full season

late start — most drivers opened the campaign in February — Gilliland wasn't part of the Pony Stock points battle this year but said he plans to race a full season in 2010.

Gilliland, of Huntsville, Ala., was assigned to Fort Benning the first time in 2000. He said he lived across the street in Smiths Station from Rodgerick Dykes, who was competing in the Pony Stock division at the time.

"I'd go watch him run at the track. That's how I got interested in it," Gilliland said.

Two years later, he debuted at East Alabama Motor Speedway and ran in two Pony Stock races. But ramping up for an Iraq deployment in 2003 with the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team took him away from the sport.

After returning here in March, Gilliland said he went back to the dirt track and "got the fever again." With assistance from Dykes and Terry Braswell, another friend who has an entry in the Modified class, he managed to get back in it.

Braswell and Dykes helped Gilliland find a car and the two lend support when possible. Four years ago, they built the engine he uses now.

"It's a lot of work just to make it out here," Braswell said. "This past week, I spent 40 hours at my job and 80 hours on my race car."

Gilliland said he can relate to the routine.

He gets off work around 4:30 p.m. each day. After resting for about 20 minutes at home, he'll head outside to pop the car's hood. Some nights, Gilliland is still at it past dark, trying to balance a flashlight while making that final adjustment.

"Some of my friends can take their cars to a shop in Smiths Station," he said. "I got a driveway with no cover."

Between practice laps and a qualifying heat Saturday night, Gilliland often labored in the pits as a one-man crew. During the race, he had to negotiate the final three laps after getting splashed with engine oil in the cockpit.

"I couldn't see a thing," he said afterward. "I tried wiping it off my helmet, but that just made it worse."

Keeping the car on the track is the key to success at East Alabama, he said. Some drivers occasionally get too high on the banked clay oval and drift over the track's edge.

"It is a rush, I won't lie," Gilliland said. "I do get hyped up about getting in there. It's a tense moment, because you're always concentrating, especially on this dirt track."

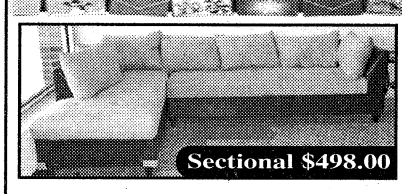
The 31st Annual Alabama State Championships are scheduled to begin Thursday and continue through Sept. 27. Gilliland doesn't plan to enter, however.

In December, he said he'd start looking for some sponsors to help him out next year.

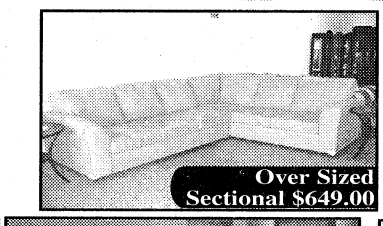
"Racing is not cheap. It costs a whole lot to actually get into it," he said. "And as you move up in the divisions, it gets more expensive."

Gilliland estimates his Ford Mustang is worth about $7,500. But Dykes, who runs in Late Model — the top series at East Alabama — owns a car valued at $40,000.

The speedway does not offer a military discount but there are special promotions and appreciation nights for service members during race season, officials said. For ticket information, visit www.eamsdirt.com.



"It would be nice to see some stands fill up with military guys from Fort Benning," Gilliland said. "And it's family-oriented out here. Every now and then, they have monster trucks and demolition derby, too."



A 20-year Army veteran, Gilliland said he hopes to retire in March 2011 and move to Clearwater, Fla. He's already heard about a dirt track in the area.

"I would have to make some modifications to the car and engine. But there is the possibility of continuing to run," he said. "I'd like to move up to the Hobby stock or Bomber series (and) try those two out before I get out of it someday."

Jungle Cats: Claim victory

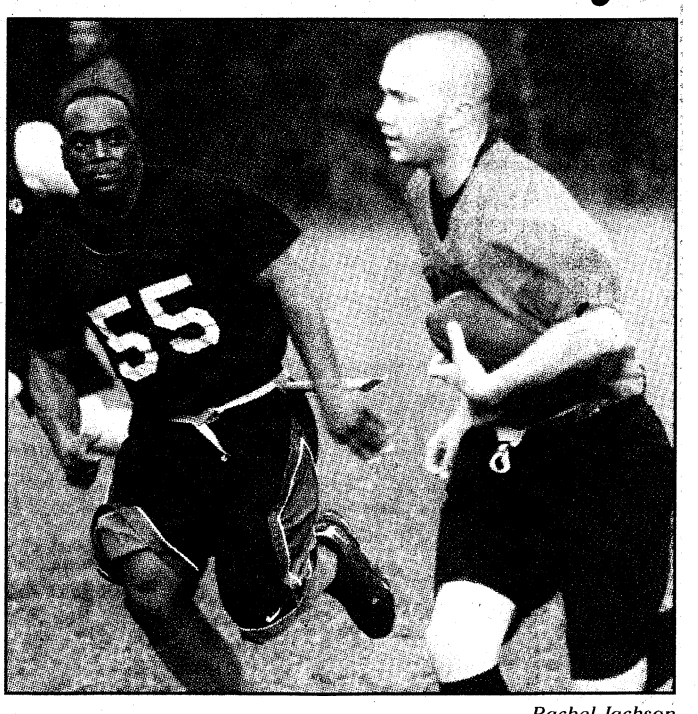
the Road Dawgs a 7-0 lead, which they carried into halftime.

The Jungle Cats of the 11th Engineer Battalion stepped up their game in the second half, with Erick Williams returning an interception 18 yards for a touchdown. Christian Jones ran in a one-point conversion to tie the score 7-7. The Road Dawgs answered with a touchdown to take the lead, but with 30 seconds left in the game, the Jungle Cats scored a touchdown and a one-point conversion to take the 14-13 win.



"We gelled as a team and came together at the right time, kept our composure and didn't crack under pressure," said Jungle Cats' coach Sanqwey Walker. "We were down 7-0 at halftime, but we stepped our game up and came back. We knew at halftime we had to step the defense up and we did that."

Walker said there was a bit of rivalry between the teams because they scrimmage against each other frequently.

It was a well-fought game by both teams, Williams said.

"It was a really close game and there were some crucial plays we could have stopped, but overall I saw good ball movement on the offense and good eyes on the defense side," he said.

Up next for the Jungle Cats is a game against 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, at 7 p.m. Sept. 28. The Road Dawgs will take on Kelley Hill at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

Never underestimate your opponent's knowledge

John W. Peeler
THE BAYONET

Just when you think you know a lot about sports, someone comes along and proves you are not as "all knowing" as you think you are.

I try and stay up on most sports and considered myself above average on sports knowledge — until I was asked, "How many dimples does a regulation golf ball have?" My response — what do dimples have to do with playing golf? Well, come to find out a regulation golf ball has 336 dimples. I guess it shows how closely I follow golf. I still don't know what dimples have to do with golf.

Being the smart aleck I am, I instructed the questioner to stick to the "major sports" where I felt I would be able to show just how smart I really was.

When asked what my favorite sport was, I said "football." So, the second question was football-related. Ready to show off my knowledge, I puffed my chest out and waited for the question.

How many cows does it take to supply the National Football League with enough leather for a year's supply of footballs?

I know, I know, footballs are made from leather, but again, what does this really have to do with the sport of football? Well, the answer was 3,000.

That isn't a real football question. How was I supposed to know that little tidbit, sports are played every day of the year — well that isn't true. I found that little tidbit out with the answer to question No. 3 — there are two days during the year when no professional sport is played — the day before and the day after baseball's All-Star game.

After being shown up in golf, football and baseball, I was ready for the basketball question — whose silhouette is used on the National Basketball Association patch? Well, it was no surprise I didn't know the answer to that question, either — it is Jerry West.

Maybe I should have communicated my knowledge of sports clearer. Maybe I should have said I have an above-average knowledge of sports when it comes to how the game is played, the rules and the strategy of the different sports.

I did learn some things from the thrashing I took at the hands of someone much younger than I — make sure you always communicate effectively, remember there is always someone who knows more than you do and never underestimate the knowledge of today's youth.

Did you know at least one of the colors in the Olympic rings are in every flag in the world? I do now.

FORT BENNING REMEMBERS 9/11

Freedom Walk commemorates Sept. 11

Participants 'say thank you,' remember sacrifices of 9/11

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

Kristin Molinaro
The Freedom Walk at Stewart-Watson Field, which commemorated the eighth anniversary of 9/11, drew more than 100 participants Friday.

Though Phillip Flick is too young to remember the events of Sept. 11, the 11-year-old joined more than 100 people Friday to commemorate the eighth anniversary of the terrorist attacks by walking nearly two miles at Stewart-Watson Field before heading to class at Faith Middle School.

"I wanted to say thank you," said the middle-schooler, whose dad is currently deployed with the 14th Combat Support Hospital, "to everybody currently deployed trying to protect everybody in the United States."

Flick and several teammates from the school's cross-country track team broke a sweat as they lapped the mile-long track twice in a symbolic gesture.

Kim Scofi, president of Operation Homefront's Georgia chapter, described the event as a "physical symbol of moving forward from 9/11."

Operation Homefront, an organization that provides emergency assistance to troops and their families, sponsored the event, which drew families with strollers, military personnel and children from both Loyd Elementary and Faith Middle schools.

The event began with the playing of the National Anthem and an invocation by Chaplain (LTC) Joel Funk.

Dexter students plant autumn garden

Seven-year-old Sarah Morgan, a second-grader at Dexter Elementary School, plants a sweet potato Friday in the class garden.

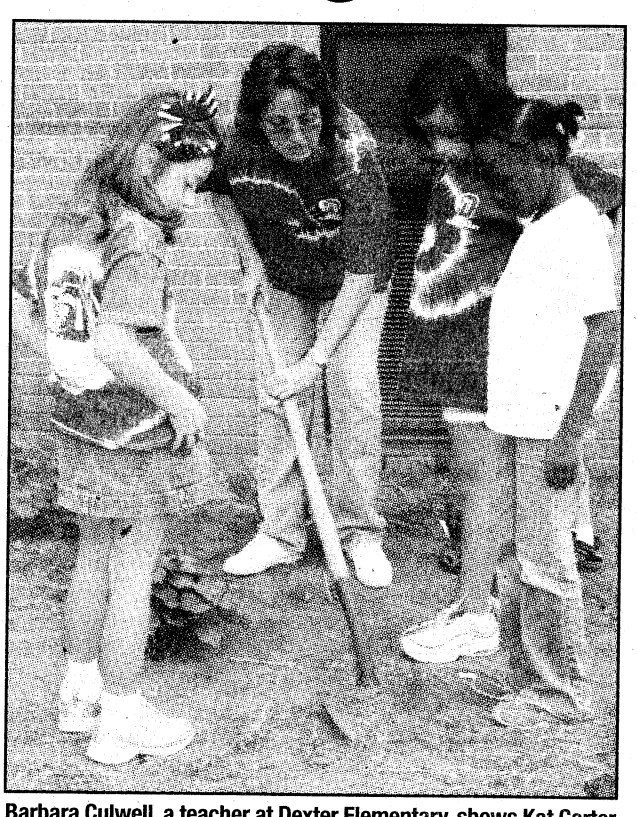
"I just love gardening," said 6-year-old Parker Boone, after pulling weeds from his classroom garden Friday at Dexter Elementary School.



"We planted some onions, sweet potatoes and beets," Parker said. "I'm excited about it growing and eating it. I like sweet potatoes and onions, (but) I never tried beets."

Barbara Culwell, an avid gardener who teaches a multiage class at Dexter Elementary, incorporated gardening into her curriculum three years ago when she started at Dexter.

Taking advantage of the gas-heated greenhouse near the playground, Culwell let her students plant flowers, parsley, sage and other spices. When the kids outgrew their indoor space, Culwell started an outdoor vegetable garden.

The exercise has multiple learning implications, she said.

"A lot of times kids don't necessarily have an interest in things like learning how to use the ruler correctly or how to use the magnifying glass, but if they're looking at something that is meaningful to them, it's easier to teach it that way," she said. "Plus, it develops responsibility in them. If we don't get rain for an extended amount of time, where does their plant get water? We're going to have to remember to do that. It encourages healthy eating also."

Barbara Culwell, a teacher at Dexter Elementary, shows Kat Carter, 7, Lydia Benitez, 8, and Angel Nesmith, 6, how to use a shovel.

Students learn about avoiding waste by sharing extra produce from their garden and making compost with leftover fruits and vegetables from the cafeteria.

"I really want them to see how what they do

Speak up: AFAP takes submissions

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

When CPT Michael Brabner took his family to the Perkins Village outdoor pool last week, he was surprised to find it had closed for the season. Pools on Fort Benning typically close after the Labor Day holiday and reopen Memorial Day weekend, but Brabner, a student in the Captain's Career Course, hopes to change that policy.

"Temperatures stay in the comfortable range well into November," Brabner said. "Why isn't the pool open?"

The Fort Benning Army Family Action Plan wants people like Brabner to let their voices be heard.

"This is an opportunity for everybody to be a part of the solution," said Randie Gibson, AFAP program manager on post.

AFAP is taking submissions until Oct. 2 for issues to be addressed at the post's AFAP conference in October.

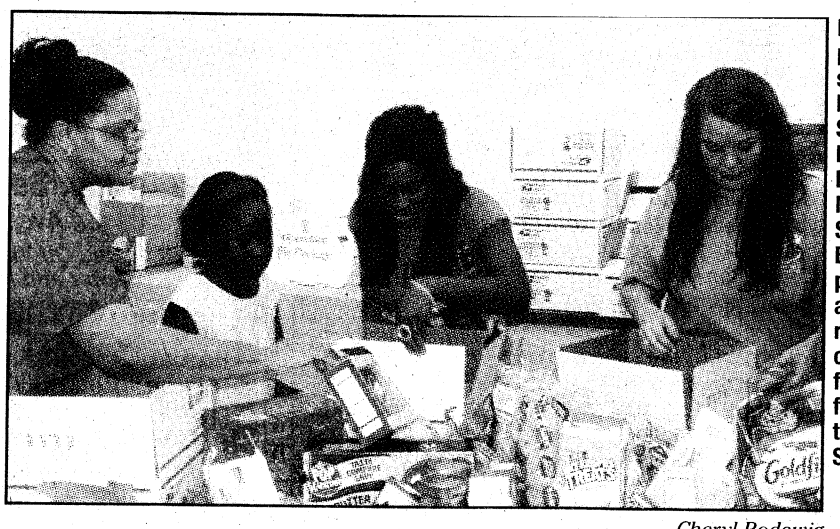
Volunteers make care packages for deployed Soldiers

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

Volunteers with Big Brothers Big Sisters of the Chattahoochee Valley and Davis Broadcasting packed more than 50 care packages Friday at the National Infantry Museum to ship to Soldiers in Iraq.

The project originated with Sally Gowins, special programs and volunteer recruitment coordinator for Big Brother Big Sisters, who wanted to plan a fun day at the museum for "Bigs" and "Littles" in the program while tying in community service.



Gowins, a military spouse, said she knows firsthand how much a small gesture, like sending a care package, can mean to a deployed Soldier.

"My husband is about to go back to Iraq," she said, "and I see how important it is for them to know how much we appreciate what they're doing. They defend us every day. They stand up for us — this is the least we can do. It's not just a box full of stuff. It's from the heart; it's personal, and that's what counts."

After gathering donations from drop-off locations around the community for three weeks, Gowins thought Patriot Day would make "the perfect wrap up for everything," she said. "I think Sept. 11 makes us all stop and think exactly how close as a nation we came to possible disaster, and that's why the Soldiers do what they do."

Adults and children, matched through the mentorship program, wrote letters to Soldiers

Students thank parents for service to country

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

"It's about service and sacrifice, and it's about gratitude," said Glenn Hughes, principal of Edward A. White Elementary School, as he opened the school's first Freedom Friday program Friday in the multipurpose room.

Spearheaded by White's parent teacher organization, Freedom Fridays will be the last Friday of each month when students are encouraged to wear red, white or blue to show their patriotism.

PTO president Rachel Wilkins said she chose to kick off the program on Patriot Day to bring in an uplifting spirit of appreciation that will be the theme for the entire school year.

"I just really want to focus this year on our military families — just to celebrate each other, be proud to be military brats, be proud of who we are, what we do," she said.

Not every Freedom Friday will involve a program, Wilkins said, but the Patriot Day event included patriotic songs and poems and a presentation about heroes by Owen Ditchfield, who served as the media specialist for White Elementary for 21 years before retiring in 2008.

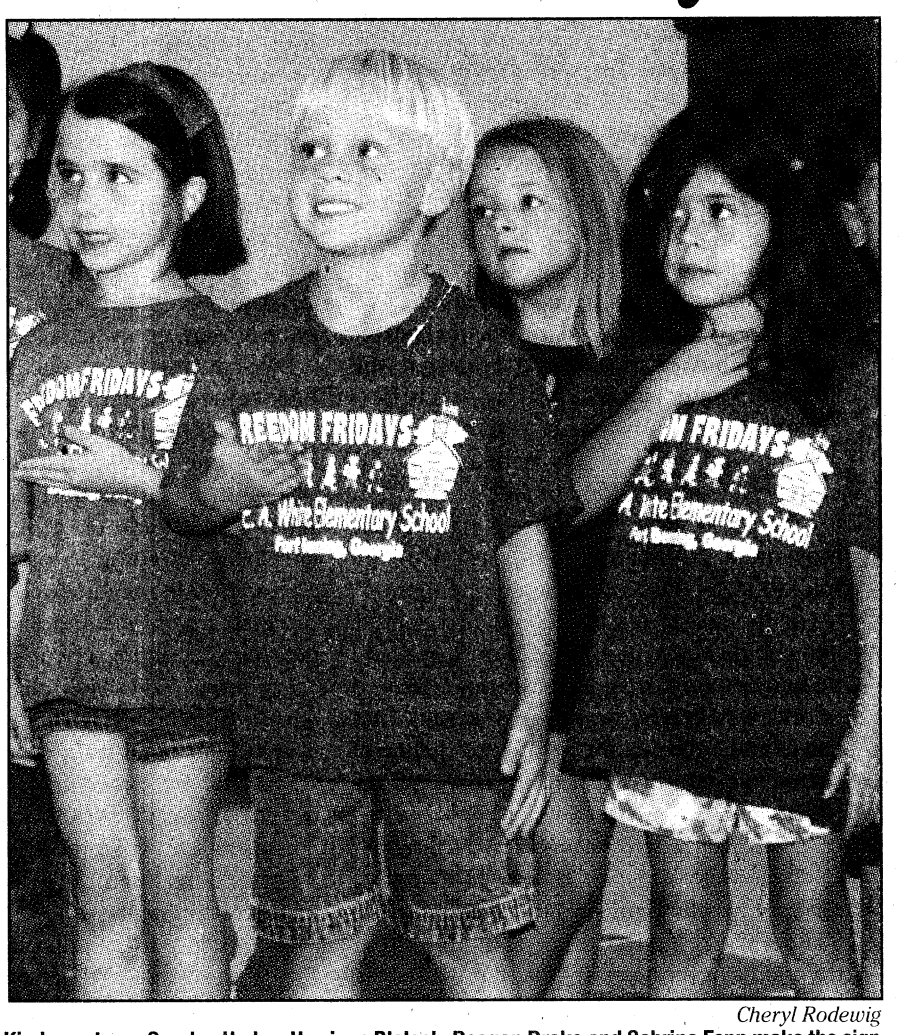
"The word 'hero' has several different meanings, but the main meaning ... is a man or woman who has done a great deed of courage, especially if they did something that risked their life or actually died for what they were doing," Ditchfield said to more than 200 students.

"Our school is named after a hero called Edward A. White," he said. "When the war broke out in Korea, his unit was shipped there, and only two years after graduating from West Point, he was killed leading his Soldiers against the enemy. For that, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the second highest medal for bravery the Army can give."

Many people who serve in the military, including several parents of E. A. White students, are heroes because of their heroic deeds, Ditchfield said.

During the assembly, students learned how to sign the international sign for "thank you" to their parents who attended the program.

"I'm a proud E.A. White parent," said Chaplain (MAJ) Dave Bowlus, 75th Ranger Regiment, after seeing his children sign their thanks to him from across the room.



"It's (nice) to see them understand the meaning of commitment and also learning to say thanks to those who serve," Bowlus said. "Military kids grow up surrounded by the military; to them, it may not mean that much. I think today maybe some eyes were opened to a greater appreciation of what it means to serve."

Nine-year-old Joseph McCaffrey said it felt good to thank his dad, COL Sean McCaffrey, for his service.

"I never really thought about it that way before," he said. "I give him a hug every time he comes home, but I never thought about thanking him."

Joseph said he enjoyed learning about Edward A. White and others who serve his country.

"Freedom Friday is about celebrating," he said. "There's so much to celebrate — the freedom we have, that we get to choose what we believe in. (It) just feels good to celebrate."

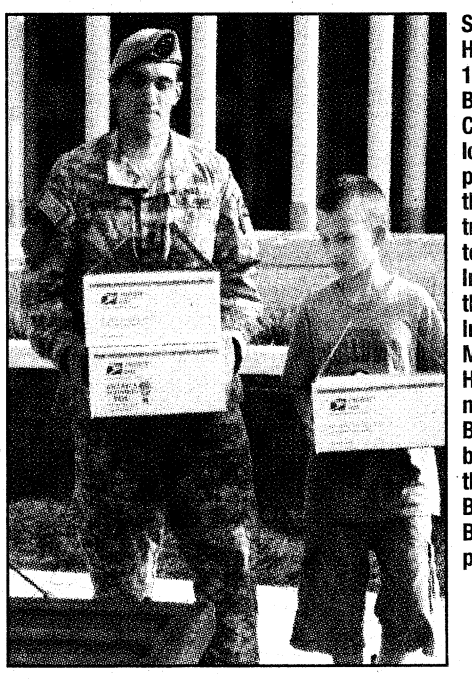
Care packages: Give 'amazing feeling' to add to the items in their care packages.



Willie Barnes, 11, said that in his letter, he thanked the Soldiers for their service.

"I came out here with my big brother Josh to support the Soldiers," Willie said. "They could have been at home with their family. They didn't have to go overseas to help our country out. But they decided to do it, and I just thank them for putting their life on the line."

Special Agent Nicole Fermanis, Criminal Investigation Command, brought her little sister, 9-year-old Chakayla Flagg, to help prepare the care packages.

Fermanis said she had Soldiers from her previous unit currently deployed in Iraq, and it was with them in mind she volunteered her time.

"I have (received care packages), and it's an amazing feeling," she said. "Anything at all, even the smallest thing, means something. Even if it's a card with your signature on it, you thought enough to pick out that card and send it to them. It's just nice to know the Americans you're protecting care enough to send you something. When you get your down time over there, that's what keeps you going. You just know you're fighting for something."

SPC Shane Harris and 10-year-old Bradley Cosgrove load care packages on the back of a truck to send to Soldiers in Iraq Friday at the National Infantry Museum. Harris is matched as Bradley's big brother through the Big Brothers Big Sisters program.

To send a care package to a Soldier who receives limited mail, Gowins suggests logging on to www.anysoldier.com.

The packages will be shipped to Soldiers from Fort Benning and to several Soldiers listed on the Any Soldier Web site.

Conference: Shares issues with Army

know what works, what doesn't work and what they think will fix it.

"If the issue can be solved at Fort Benning, it will be worked locally," Gibson said. "If not, then it gets forwarded to the next level, which is the Training and Doctrine Command AFAP conference. These issues have the potential of going all the way to the Department of the Army AFAP conference."

Fort Benning delegates, who represent many demographics on post including spouses, Soldiers, retirees, civilians and wounded warriors, review the issues during the AFAP conference. The directorate responsible for resolving the issue as well as the installation command team also reviews each issue, Gibson said.

Issues that originated at AFAP conferences and led to changes Armywide include the transferability of G.I. Bill benefits to dependants and the authorization of paternity leave for male married Soldiers, said Andrea Kunst, a civil service delegate for the TRADOC conference.

Kunst said hot issues in AFAP right now include housing for larger families, Basic Allowance for Quarters expenses when Soldiers move to a new post and family readiness group fundraising.

"These were hot topics when we left the conference last year," said Kunst, who has attended two TRADOC AFAP conferences. "If you keep an issue up there long enough, they will either kill it or forward it on if enough people are talking about it."

"For anything local, there is a more immediate resolution through the post's customer service officer," Gibson said. "AFAP and customer service work hand-in-hand to solve local issues. So if someone is submitting a parking issue, they don't have to wait a year for it to get resolved."

Gibson admits some issues will take longer to resolve because they can't be fixed at the local level, but said anyone who wants an update on the status of an issue, can visit the Fort Benning Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Web site at www.benningmwr.com.

Updates are also available at the AFAP conference or by e-mailing Gibson at Randie.M.Gibson@us.army.mil.

Garden: Teaches children responsibility

in the environment can have a direct impact on each one of them," Culwell said.

"If they get used to growing their own vegetables, they're going to take pride in what they grow (and) take less for granted because they're going to remember how much work went into tilling the soil and doing the planting. I want them to make that connection."

Culwell has 23 students in first through third grades. Her oldest student, Lydia Benitez, who has been in her class for three years, has developed a passion for gardening.

"Once I started gardening, I was really, really excited," said 8-year-old Lydia. "I didn't know how plants grew, I didn't know what plants were called, so I learned a lot."

Taking her hands-on learning from Culwell's tutelage, Lydia created her own garden at home, planting peppers, zinnias, cilantro and more.

"I started it about a year ago because I didn't want to have to go to school and just look at the school garden," she said. "I wanted to have a garden I could look at any time, so I could go outside and get whatever I needed. I get tons and tons of harvest. I had these tiny tomato plants and now they're over 9 feet tall. I like to see how my garden has changed and the plants have changed and how big they've grown."

> "Getting your hands dirty is what it's all about."
> — Lydia Benitez, 8

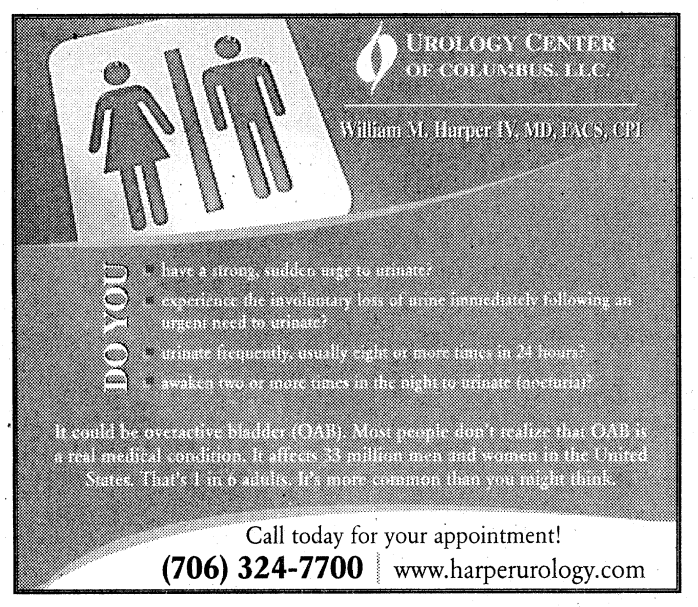
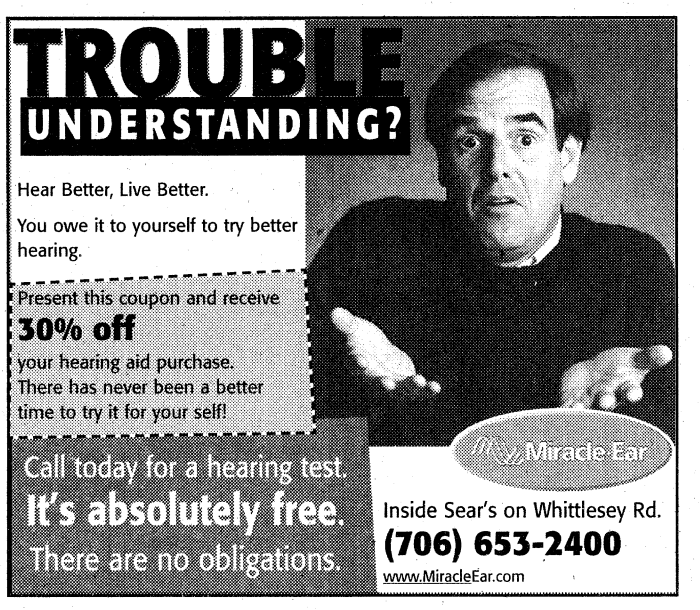
At school, students measure their plants and record the growth.

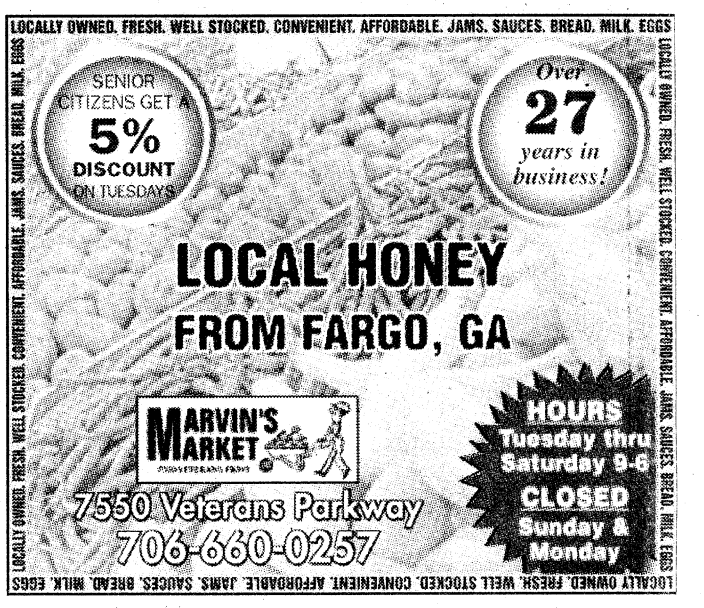
Many read books about horticulture to learn extra tricks and techniques. When their plants are ripe, they wash them off and eat them in class, sometimes taking home leftovers.



"Even though they're little kids, to be able to take home the top part of an onion they grew — that's a big deal for them," Culwell said.



Culwell plans to expand the garden next year with new types of vegetables, so her students are continually engaged in the learning process.



"We want to learn from what we did in the past — what works, what didn't work — and make next year's garden even better than this year's," she said. "That's my goal."

Meanwhile, Lydia is planning to grow her garden, too.

"I think I'll garden my whole life," she said. "Getting your hands all dirty is what it's all about."

Springer 'cuts loose' with No Shame Theater debut

Open-mic style theater to feature local talent

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

Magic, music, dance and drama, even stand-up comedy or acrobatics — you might see all this and more in one night of No Shame Theater, said Jens Rasmussen, director of No Shame Theater, which debuts in Columbus Friday at the Springer Opera House.

"You don't know what you're going to get," he said. "It has this stability and this complete wild card kind of feel."

Created in 1986 and now a nationwide movement, No Shame gives a twist to the traditional talent show or open mic night.

For the artists, it's first come, first served, and the pieces, which must be original and no longer than five minutes, are not censored or reviewed in advance, Rasmussen said. That leaves audience members with the chance of seeing everything from performance poetry to juggling.

"I was just blown away by it," Rasmussen said. "It was so exciting and such a broad range of people came in. When you go to No Shame, you're going to see something that no one has ever seen before. It's shameless; it's risk taking. Even if the art is not polished, the spirit of it is just so engaging. That's really at the core what No Shame is."

Ashley Laughter, campaign coordinator for the Springer, said she is excited about opening night.

"It's like an adventure," she said. "Come with an open mind. Come prepared to be shocked — but in a good way."

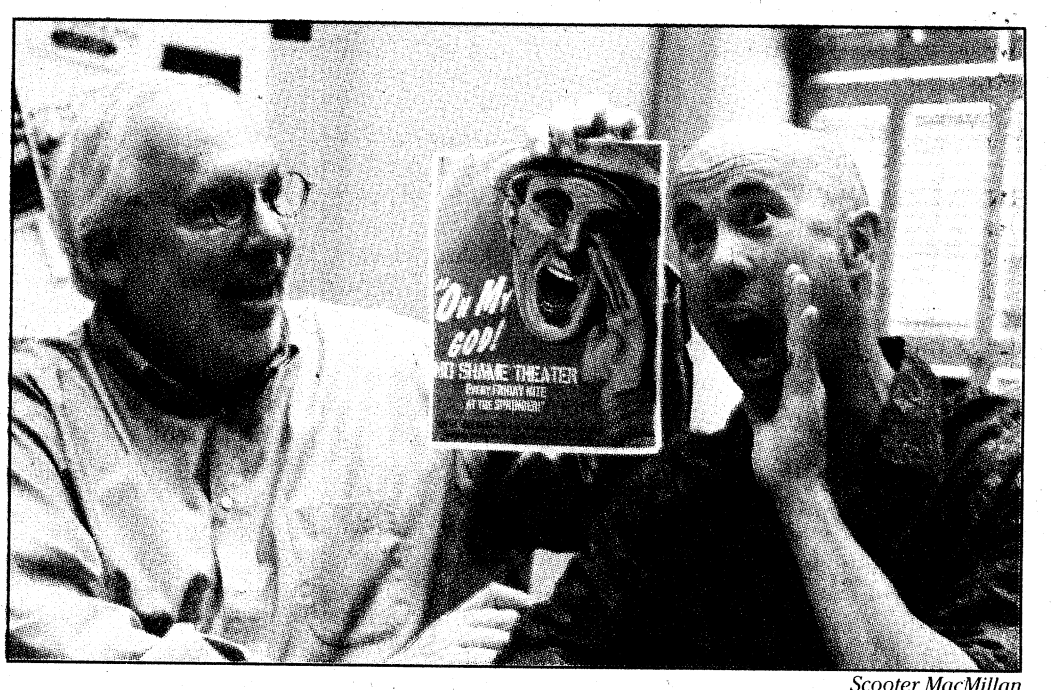
Laughter said the unique form of entertainment will help the Springer cater to a younger audience and will be particularly good for Soldiers, since it's a weekly event with no sign-up necessary.

"We always try to get Soldiers involved here at the Springer, but it's hard for a Soldier to make a commitment to a show because it can be time-consuming," said Laughter, wife of a Sand Hill drill sergeant. "But this is 'bring what you got and do it one night.' I think No Shame is going to offer the Columbus area something brand new. All the works are original, which is something you just don't get to see as often as people should."

Laughter said she plans to perform with a burlesque dance group — "kind of reminiscent of the vaudeville era."

She will be joined by other local talent, including Becky Macy, an actor in the Springer's current production of Footloose and wife of an Infantry Mortar Leader Course instructor on post.

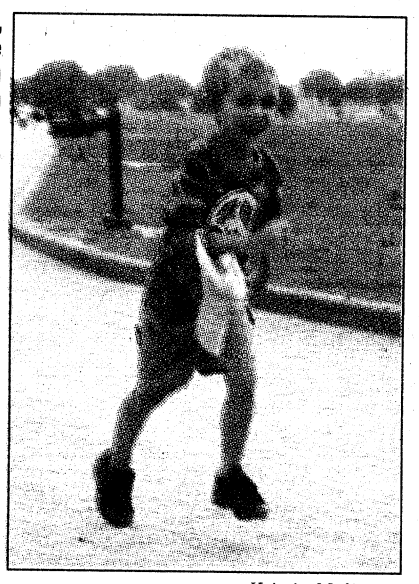
Macy said participating in No Shame will appeal to people of diverse backgrounds.



"It's less pressure. You don't have to audition. It's an outlet for your own creativity," she said. "I just think it can be inspiring … everybody has something to put out there."

To "cast themselves," people 18 and older should show up at 10 p.m. at the Springer, Rasmussen said. The first 15 in line get to perform.

The show starts at 10:30 p.m., lasts roughly 90 minutes and costs $5 per person, performers and attendees alike.



"It's a small investment, and it's going to be a really welcoming, laid back, enjoyable group … a great place to meet people, to make new friends, to talk about new ideas," Rasmussen said. "It's about fearlessness: it's about putting yourself out there and not censoring. It's about cutting loose — individual expression. There's no limits."

The Springer saloon will be open during the show. For more information, call the Springer at 706-324-5714. For more about No Shame Theatre, visit www.noshame.org.

James Jacobs, 5, races to the finish line during Friday's Freedom Walk at Stewart-Watson Field. Jacobs, along with his dad, SSG James Jacobs, was the first to finish the opening mile-long lap of the event, which commemorated the events of 9/11 and the lives lost. Participants were encouraged to do as many laps as they could.

gave a speech to participants encouraging them to use the walking time to reflect.

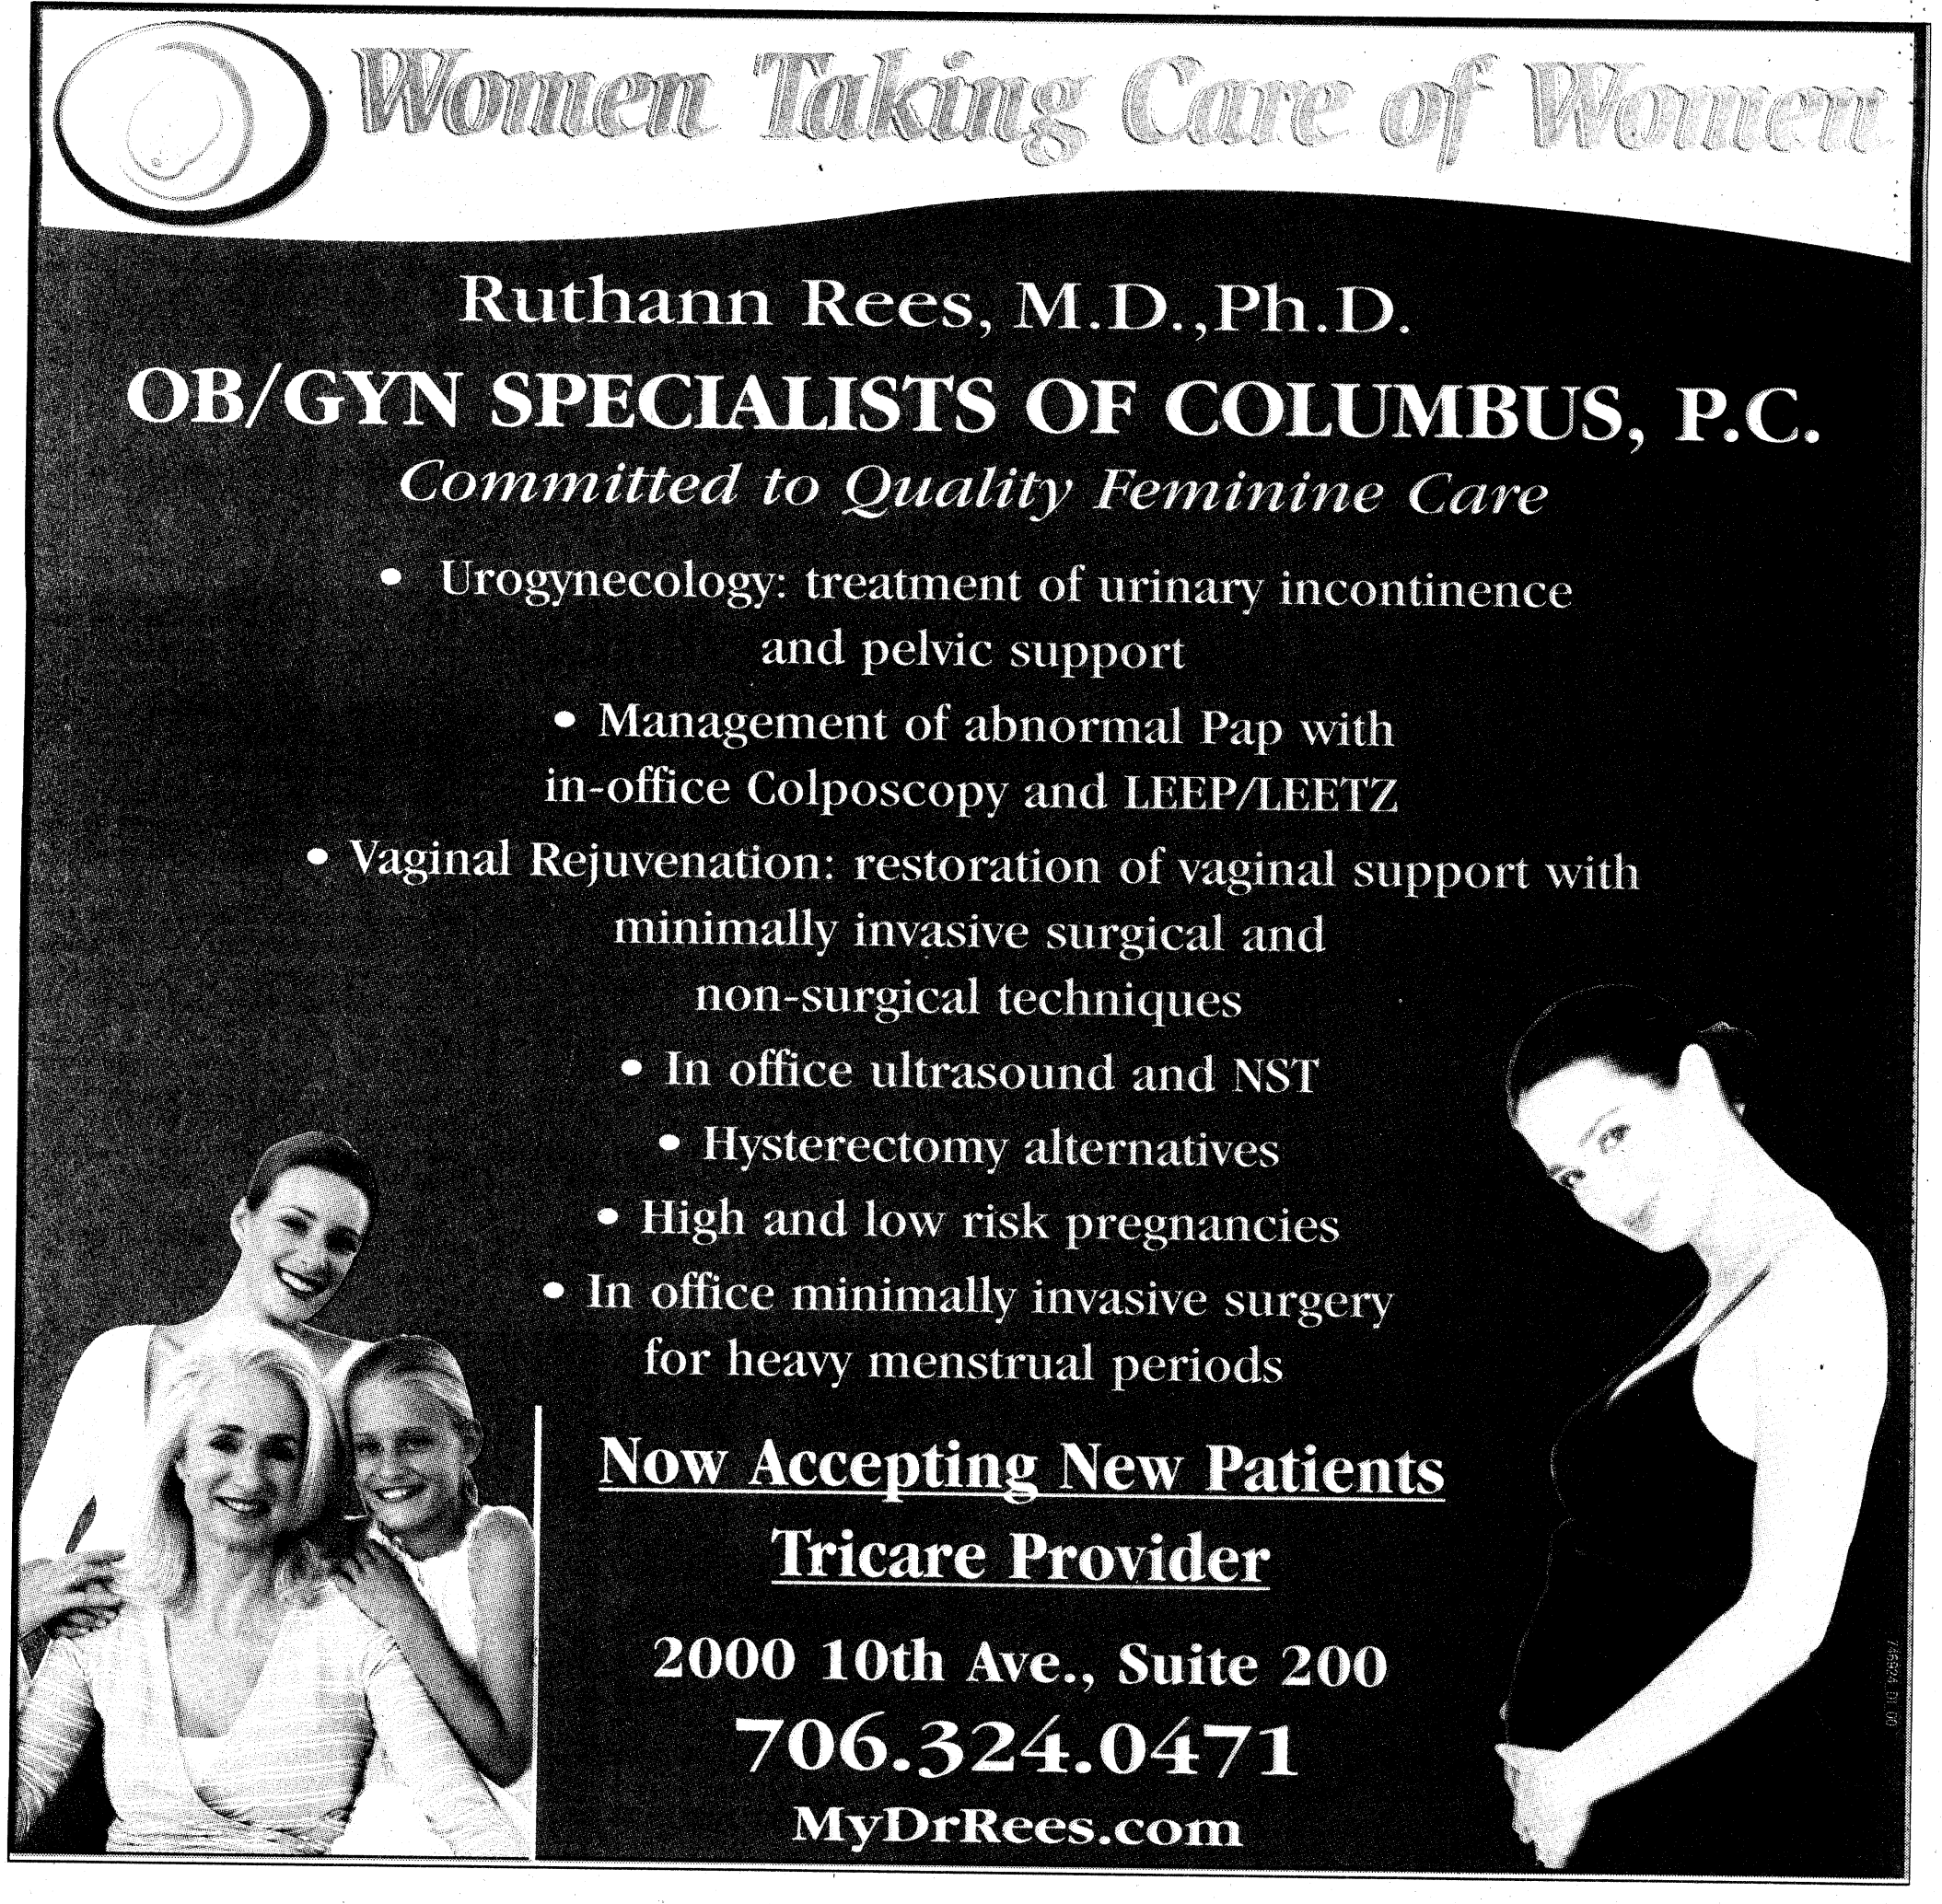
"We gather to honor the nearly 3,000 Americans who lost their lives in the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001," he said.

"And the nearly 5,000 service members who've lost their lives since that day in selfless service to our nation … Today, as you walk, remember those who've given their lives or are in harm's way right now to secure our freedoms."

Walker also challenged the crowd to rejoice in being American rather than wallowing in grief for 9/11.

Walker's words touched Flick, who said the speech was his favorite part of the event.

"You have to be proud of your country and what everybody is doing to keep us safe," he said.



After Walker's speech, the participants were encouraged to walk as many laps around the mile-long track at Stewart-Watson Field as they could before the event concluded. Across post, approximately 220 Dexter Elementary School students ran laps around their school to coincide with the Freedom Walk.'

The first participant to complete a lap around the track was 5-year-old James Jacobs, followed by his dad, SSG James Jacobs.

The elder Jacobs, a heavy construction mechanic with the 63rd Engineer Company, 11th Engineer Battalion, said he hoped to spread a message by participating in the Freedom Walk.

"Don't forget about (9/11)," he said. "We need to keep the patriotism going and keep the flags flying."

Public safety officials honored

Before a Chattahoochee County High School home football game Friday, Chattahoochee County and Fort Benning public safety officials were recognized for their service to Chattahoochee County. Representatives from fire and rescue, law enforcement and medics were on hand from both communities. Each representative was presented with a certificate of thanks by members of the Chattco JROTC and school superintendent Dr. Jimmy Martin.

Prostate cancer screenings available

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Prostate cancer is the second-leading cause of cancer-related death in American men — more common than any other major cancer. Every three minutes an American man finds out he has prostate cancer. Although men may have urinary symptoms that are common as they get older, there are no warning signs of prostate cancer. Since 1995, approximately 2.6 million men in the United States have been diagnosed with prostate cancer, while nearly 375,000 have lost their lives to it.

The best way to beat prostate cancer is through early screening and detection of the disease in its initial stages, said Dr. (MAJ) Brian Parnes, with the Department of Urology at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Parnes said men are often reluctant to be screened for the disease, but early detection saves lives and testing is wise. This applies especially to Caucasian, Hispanic and Asian males between the ages of 50 and 75 and to African-American males or men with a close relative with prostate cancer who are older than 40.

The screening involves a digital rectal exam and a blood test called a prostate-specific antigen.

In conjunction with Prostate Cancer Awareness Week, a national program of the Prostate Cancer Education Council, the urology clinic at Martin Army will be conducting free prostate cancer screenings Monday and Tuesday for all eligible beneficiaries. Screenings will consist of a short medical history, the exam and blood test. They will be on a walk-in basis from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. both days.

For more information, call the clinic at 706-544-2292. For more information about prostate cancer, visit www.urologyhealth.org or www.auanet.org.

Yom Kippur
Sept. 27

As we enter into this season of Heavenly Judgment, we pray for Grace and Compassion for all.

To those whom we may have hurt in the year past: we ask forgiveness; and to those who might have offended us, we say: Forgiven!

Praying hard for Peace, Amity, Love, and Understanding, we extend hands and hearts to all our friends and neighbors in Our Columbus.

Look ahead to journey's end for daily encouragement

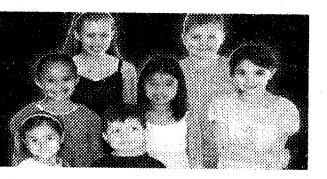
Chaplain (CPT) Andrew Ropp
2ND BATTALION, 58TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

The air-conditioning system in my pickup does not work. In fact, the fan cannot be shut off and it blows hot air — so hot that I cannot place my hand on the vent from which the air blows. I drive this vehicle to and from work every day for more than 30 minutes one-way. The trip can be particularly miserable when the afternoon is very hot, when I have to stop at all the stoplights or when it is raining — which prevents me from leaving my windows down.

I love my job. I enjoy what I do and the people I work with. I look forward to getting to work and interacting with the Soldiers, cadre and issues of the day.

I love my wife and where I live. I look forward to getting off work so that I can go home and spend time with my wife in the new home we purchased after arriving at Fort Benning.

I may look forward to getting some place in particular, but I might not always enjoy where I am along the way. Sometimes in life we might find ourselves in a difficult situation or hardship that is uncomfortable or downright miserable.



However, most often the present experience may very well be a part of a journey that takes us where God wants us to be. And, once we arrive there, we can look back and say that the arrival has made the journey worthwhile.

This is what James was talking about when he wrote, "Consider it pure joy, my brothers, whenever you face trials of many kinds, because you know that the testing of your faith develops perseverance. Perseverance must finish its work so that you may be mature and complete, not lacking anything." (James 1:2-4).

James is giving us a different perspective. He tells us we should not focus on the hardship while we are in it; rather, we should look ahead to where the journey is taking us.

In so doing, we might experience a little more spring in our step, fewer gripes and complaints, more frequent smiles, and perhaps even an inclination to thank God for what He is doing in our lives and where He is taking us — to a place where we can look back and say, "The arriving has made the journey worthwhile."

A monarch butterfly lands on a flower in Oakhurst Farm's butterfly garden Sunday after several butterflies, including monarchs and painted ladies, both types native to Georgia, were released. According to the Web site, www.flutterfest.com, butterfly releases are often used at weddings, funerals and other occasions. The festival also included white dove releases near the garden.

Flutterfest

Oakhurst Farm in West Point, Ga., uses butterfly garden to educate kids

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

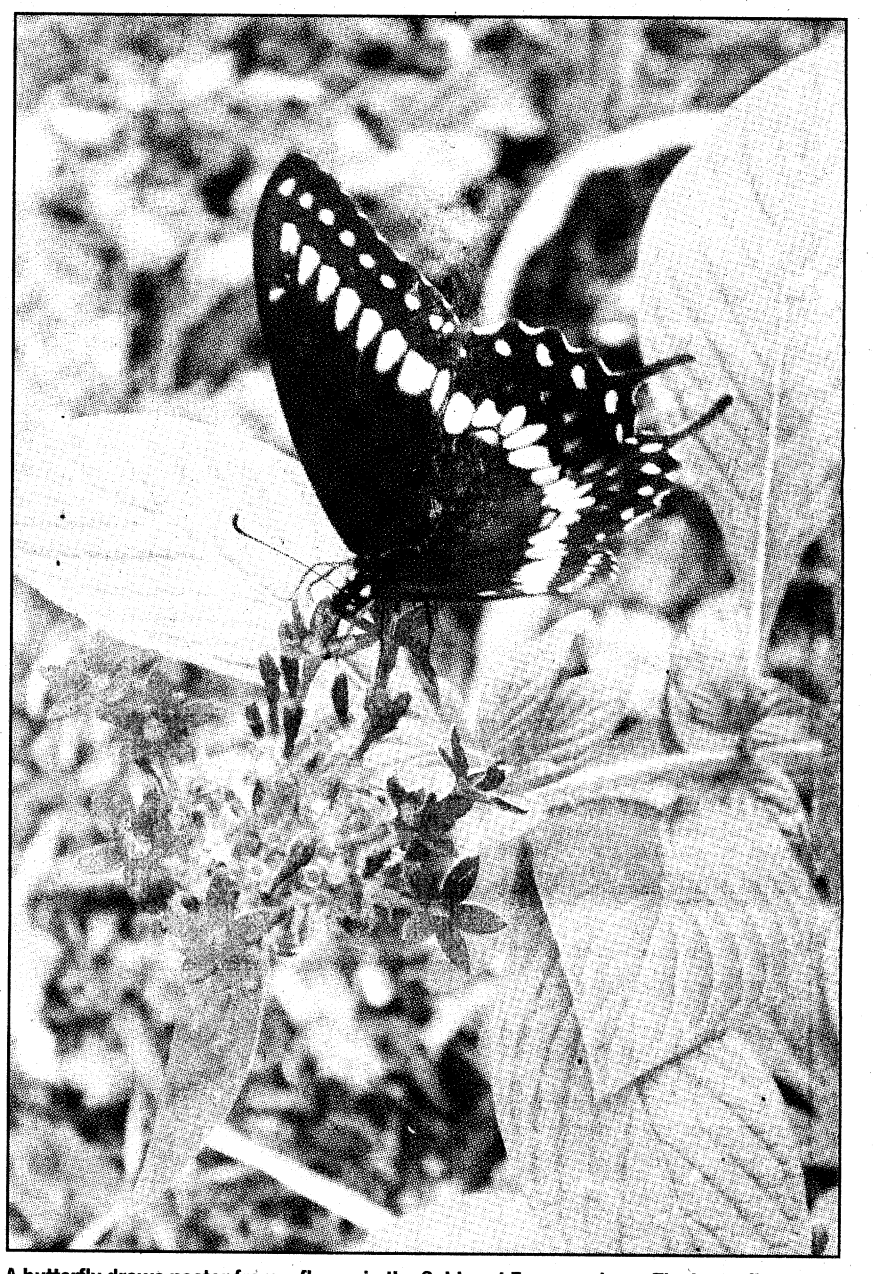
Dozens of butterflies flit back and forth in the gardens at Oakhurst Farm in West Point, Ga. The gardens, a monarch waystation certified by Monarch Watch, feature a variety of blossoms in all colors of the rainbow. It is these bright colors that draw the butterflies in and make Oakhurst Farm a special treat for butterfly lovers.

Encouraged by his grandson's interest in these colorful insects, Oakhurst owner Lon Marlowe decided to create a butterfly garden two years ago.

The garden includes food plants, such as fennel and parsley, for caterpillars, host plants, such as passion flowers and milkweed, for the larvae, and nectar plants, such as coneflower and zinnias, for the adult butterflies. The result is a mixture of purples, yellows, pinks and greens with butterflies native to Georgia, like the eastern tiger swallowtail and the painted lady, fluttering from bloom to bloom.

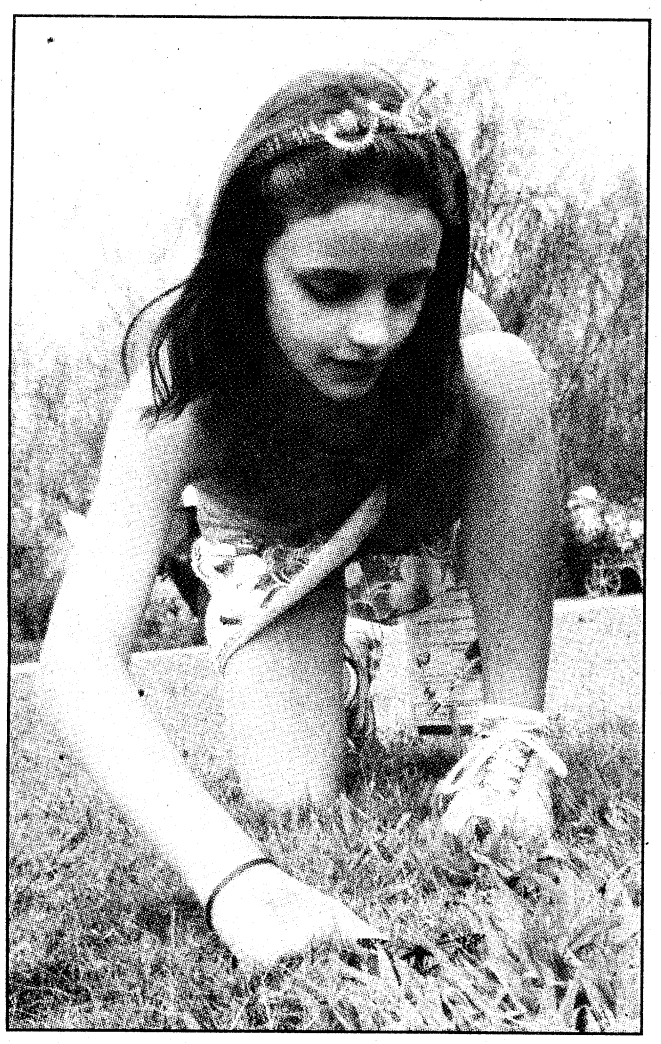
Monarchs are also a common sight in the garden, attracted by the appropriately named butterfly bush, a gardener's best option for starting and maintaining a butterfly population.

Marlowe was so proud of his butterfly garden, he started a festival devoted to it last September — Flutterfest. Marlowe showed off the butterflies and blooms Sunday at a second Flutterfest. Activities included crafts, kite making, hayrides, live music, a butterfly puppet show and ballet, and exhibits about pond life, honeybees and birds.



Marlowe said he hopes to use the garden as a jumping off point for educating children. Though the farm currently focuses on special events, Marlowe plans to open it in the future for tours where kids can learn about farm life and nature.

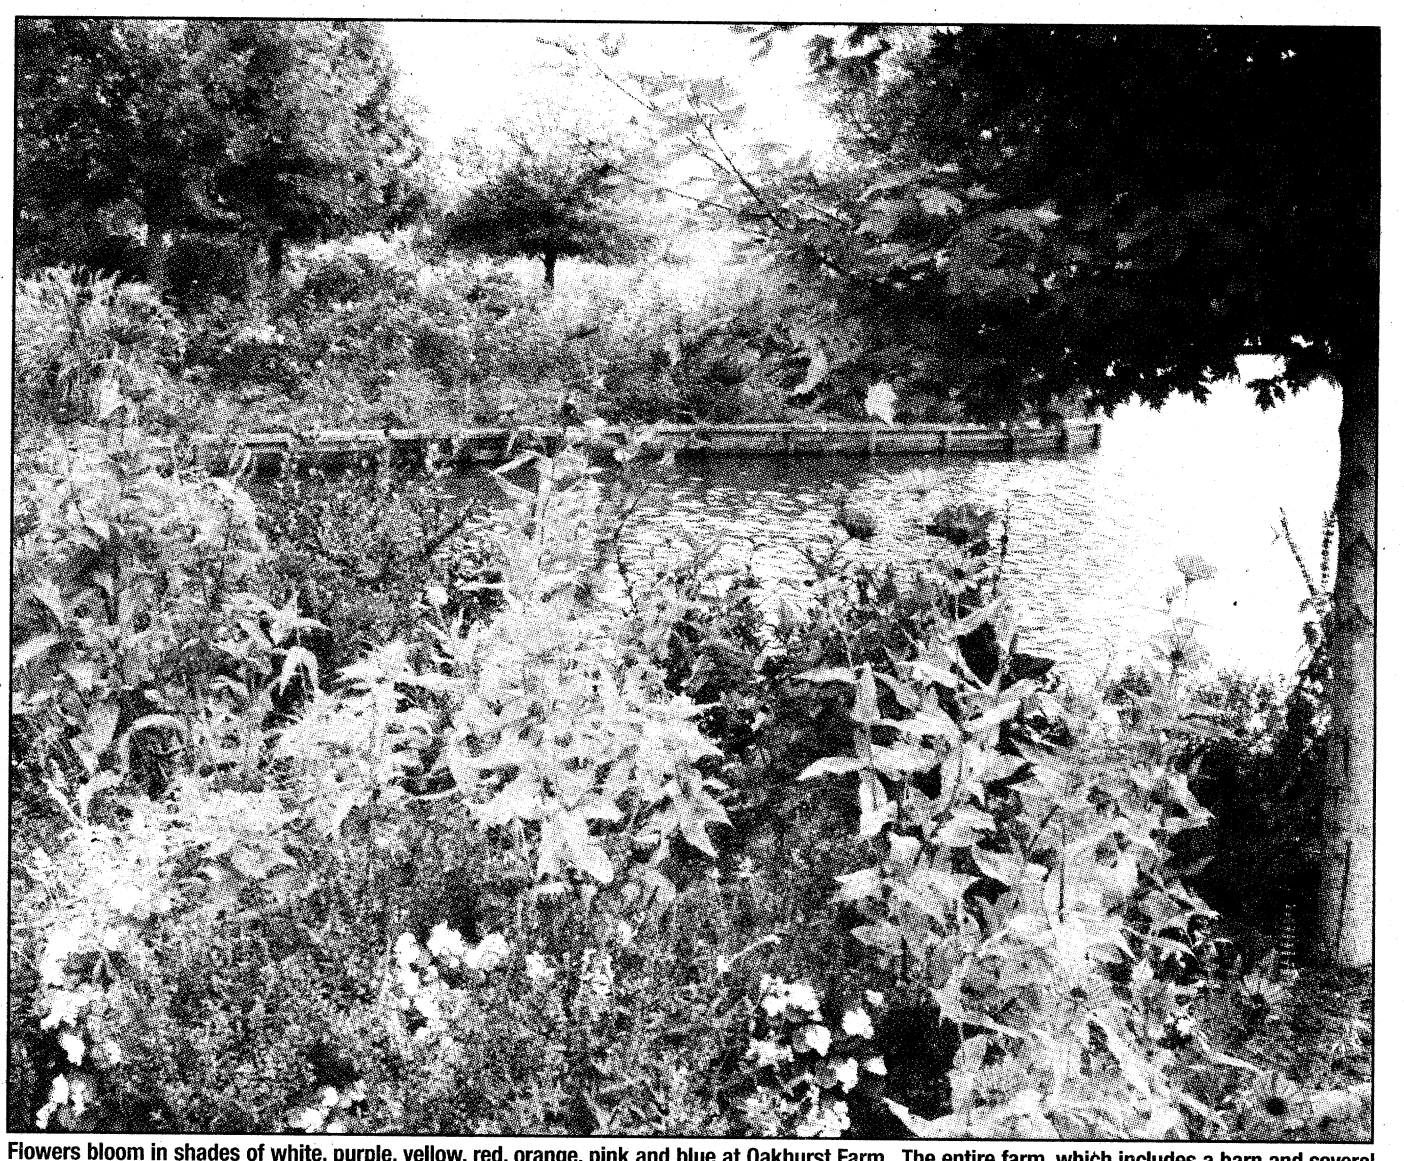
For now, he invites people to stop by the gardens if they're near West Point. When the weather is sunny and warm, visitors can expect plenty of butterflies, their own personal "flutterfest" on display. If you want one to land on you, consider wearing orange, yellow or purple, a butterfly's favorite colors. To pick one up, never touch the wings, but slide your finger gently underneath the insects legs.



Besides the butterfly garden, the farm includes a rock waterfall, a 10-acre lake surrounded by a manicured lawn, a Koi pond and a covered bridge. Be sure to bring a camera and plenty of sunscreen.

Oakhurst Farm is about 30 minutes north of Columbus.

If you plan to visit, call 706-289-8762 in advance to make sure there isn't a conflict with a planned event. Admission is free. For more information, visit www.flutterfest.com or www.oakhurstfarm.org.



A butterfly draws nectar from a flower in the Oakhurst Farm gardens. The butterfly garden is certified as a monarch waystation by Monarch Watch, a network of people dedicated to studying monarchs. The garden includes a walking path around the flower beds, a bench, a small fountain and sculpture and a variety of flowers and plants designed to attract and nourish caterpillars and butterflies.

Flowers bloom in shades of white, purple, yellow, red, orange, pink and blue at Oakhurst Farm. The entire farm, which includes a barn and several animals, sits on 152 acres in West Point, Gs., about half an hour north of Columbus, off of I-185. Four of those acres are manicured lawns kept in season with different species of plants throughout the year. Butterflies have exceptional vision regarding color, said Amy Waite, Flutterfest coordinator, so planting flowers with a variety of brilliant hues helps attract these creatures to backyard gardens. Waite suggests using native plants since they are hardier and more likely to survive in the Georgia climate.

THE MOVIE GUY'S REVIEW

9: A dark, fantastical quest story

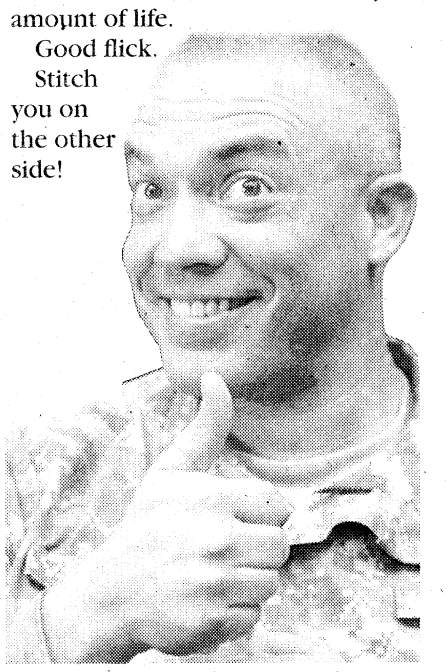
SGT Junius Stone
192ND INFANTRY BRIGADE

The movie 9 isn't precisely a Tim Burton flick. Well, it is, as he produced it.

But he didn't direct it. That honor goes to Shane Acker of Wanted fame. Kind of an interesting choice, since Wanted was more of a kinetically driven action piece, while this is a more moody fantastical quest story. But Wanted also moved on striking visuals, and this film certainly has that, taken up several notches. But it does have some of the traditional Burton hooks, like a dark mood, goth trappings and ... stitches.

Not speaking of costumes here. The main characters are creatures called "stitchpunks." They are the guardians of the remnant life forces of humanity, awaiting the day they can release this back on the planet.

What happened to us? Oh, just like many other stories of science or fantasy or speculative fiction, by one way or another, we created machines just a bit too smart and a bit unappreciative of the fact that we brought them into existence. So they proceed to express their appreciation, or lack thereof, with extreme prejudice. The scientist who was the chief creator of the machine intelligence weaves a bit of magic in his final days, creating with his own life force a squad of stitchpunks, magical creations that we will depend on to get us, humanity, going again.



Of course, for the quest to save humanity, we need a hero. Enter 9, voiced by Elijah Wood. His is the curiosity and the sense of duty that will drive him forth into the blasted landscape patrolled by the machines. He will meet other stitch creatures, with voices provided by others, such as John C. Reilly (5) and Jennifer Connelly (7), who will provide important points and assistance as he heads into the world.

We've had some impressive visual films to date this summer. As usual, it's science fiction or fantasy that steps up to provide the most sumptuous of visual feasts. Star Trek, Transformers 2, District 9, all these set a buffet of tasty eye candy to take it. There is plenty of it, delivered in heaping portions as this post-apocalyptic fairy tale is spread out before you.

One thing about doing animation, is that often otherwise-talented actors who deliver when in front of the camera, seem to only half step when just behind the microphone. Or, they overdo it, perhaps the lack of physical presence throwing them off their game. But in this case, everyone seemed to be summoning their inner stitch, or otherwise in tune with the soul they occupied for the time of this tale. Tim Burton loves his fables, and again, love poured into this one. And fortunately, it's a much better rendition of the post-apocalyptic quest story than was his remake of Planet of the Apes. His choice of collaborators and material seemed to fill this one with the necessary amount of life.

Good flick.

Stitch you on the other side!

OPENING THIS WEEK

LOVE HAPPENS

When a self-help author arrives in Seattle to teach a sold-out seminar, he unexpectedly meets the one person who might finally be able to help him help himself.

The film stars Aaron Eckhart and Jennifer Aniston and is rated PG-13 for language including sexual references.

CLOUDY WITH A CHANCE OF MEATBALLS

Inspired by the children's book, the film focuses on a town where food falls from the sky like rain. Bill Hader voices Flint Lockwood, a young inventor who dreams of creating something that will improve everyone's life. Anna Faris takes on the role of Sam Sparks, a weathergirl covering the phenomenon who hides her intelligence behind a perky exterior. Mr.T plays the by-the-rules town cop Earl Devereaux, and Tracy Morgan takes on the role of Earl's rule-breaking son, Cal. It's rated PG for brief mild language.

JENNIFER'S BODY

A cheerleader with the perfect life becomes the girl from hell when she gets possessed and begins killing boys in a small town.

The film stars Megan Fox, Amanda Seyfried and Johnny Simmons. It's rated R for sexuality, bloody violence, language and drug use.

THE INFORMANT!

What was Mark Whitacre thinking? A rising star at agri-industry giant Archer Daniels Midland (ADM), Whitacre suddenly turns whistleblower. Even as he exposes his company's multinational price-fixing conspiracy to the FBI, Whitacre envisions himself being hailed as a hero of the common man and handed a promotion. But before all that can happen, the FBI needs evidence, so Whitacre eagerly agrees to wear a wire and carry a hidden tape recorder in his briefcase, imagining himself as a kind of de facto secret agent.

Unfortunately for the FBI, its lead witness hasn't been quite so forthcoming about helping himself to the corporate coffers. Whitacre's ever-changing account frustrates the agents and threatens the case against ADM as it becomes almost impossible to decipher what is real and what is the product of Whitacre's rambling imagination. Based on the true story of the highest-ranking corporate whistleblower in U.S. history.

The film stars Matt Damon, Scott Bakula and Joel McHale and is rated R for language.

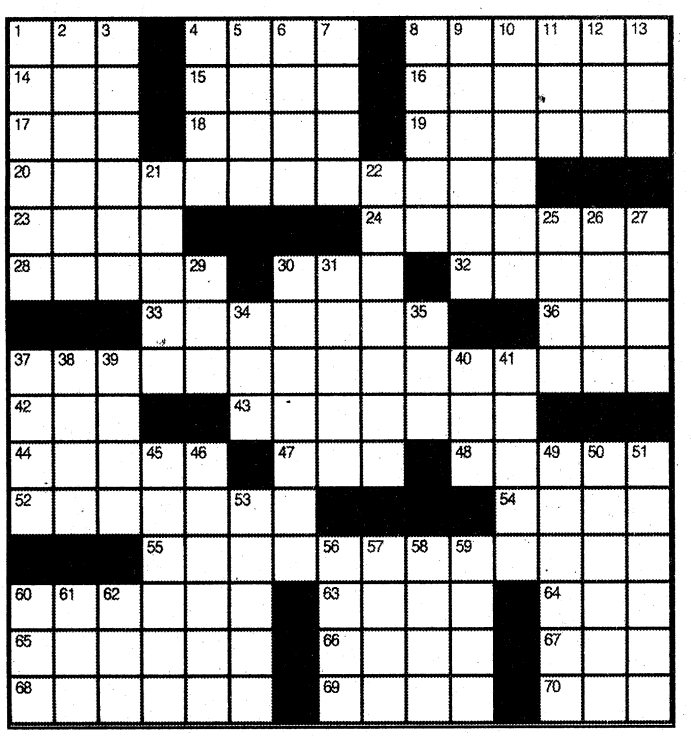
Powered and enabled by the invention known as the Great Machine, the world's machines have turned on mankind and sparked social unrest, decimating the human population before being largely shut down. But as our world fell to pieces, a mission began to salvage the legacy of civilization; a group of small creations was given the spark of life by a scientist in the final days of humanity, and they continue to exist post-apocalypse. With their group so few, these "stitchpunk" creations must summon individual strengths well beyond their own proportions in order to outwit and fight against still-functioning machines.

The film features the voices of Alan Oppenheimer, Tom Kane, Christopher Plummer, Martin Landau and John C. Reilly. It is rated PG-13 for violence and scary images.



TYLER PERRY'S I CAN DO BAD ALL BY MYSELF

When Madea, America's favorite pistol-packing grandma, catches 16-year-old Jennifer and her two younger brothers looting her home, she decides to take matters into her own hands and delivers the young delinquents to the only relative they have: their aunt April. A heavy-drinking nightclub singer who lives off of Raymond, her married boyfriend, April wants nothing to do with the kids. But her attitude begins to change when Sandino, a handsome Mexican immigrant looking for work, moves into April's basement room. Making amends for his own troubled past, Sandino challenges April to open her heart. And April soon realizes she must make the biggest choice of her life.

The flim stars Taraji P. Henson, Adam Rodriguez, Brian J. White, Hope Olaide Wilson and Mary J. Blige.

It is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material involving a sexual assault on a minor, violence, drug references and smoking.

"When you are commanding, leading (Soldiers) under conditions where physical exhaustion and privations must be ignored; where the lives of (Soldiers) may be sacrificed, then, the efficiency of your leadership will depend only to a minor degree on your tactical or technical ability. It will primarily be determined by your character, your reputation, not so much for courage — which will be accepted as a matter of course — but by the previous reputation you have established for fairness, for that high-minded patriotic purpose, that quality of unswerving determination to carry through any military task assigned you.

— General of the Army George C. Marshall
Speaking to officer candidates in 1941

Welcome to the Infantry Warfighting Conference

CSM Rice and I welcome you to Fort Benning and Columbus for the 2009 Infantry Warfighting Conference. Your attendance is important as we consider this conference to be mission essential to the Infantry and to the Army.

The conference will provide a great opportunity to discuss recent transitions in our Infantry formations and how to train and fight full-spectrum counterinsurgency operations from the strategic to tactical level.

We will have arrival and registration on Day 1, Monday, followed by the reception at the National Infantry Museum. The National Infantry Association has also scheduled a golf tournament on that day.

The conference includes presentations from some of the Army's top leadership and command teams recently returning from Theater, which will be executed on the following two days.

Day 2, Tuesday, will start with an update on the Infantry and the Maneuver Center of Excellence. A schedule change allows GEN Stanley McChrystal to participate in the conference via VTC. There will be an update from the Command Arms Center Commander LTG Caldwell and executive sessions to discuss selected topics and issues among the senior officer and NCOs in attendance.

GEN Petraeus will address the audience in the afternoon. Day 2 will end with the annual Doughboy Dinner and Award Ceremony with presentations to the 2009 recipients GEN(R) John W. Foss and CSM(R) Jimmie Spencer.

We will start Day 3, Wednesday, with a COIN overview by Ambassador Dailey, the former State Department Coordinator for Counterterrorism and updates from three Brigade Command teams addressing their combat experience in IBCT/HBCT/SBCT. The conference will conclude with an update from our Army leadership. Fort Benning provides our Army the best trained, equipped and led Soldiers in the world. Your participation will add to the training and leadership of Infantrymen today and in the future.

Columbus Convention & Trade Center

The Columbus, Georgia Convention and Trade Center is located in the Historic Columbus Iron Works. Painstakingly restored to its Civil War splendor, the Iron Works is situated on the banks of the Chattahoochee River. The Trade Center has become a local landmark of the downtown area.

History

The Columbus Iron Works produced a variety of equipment on this site for over a century. Aside from farming implements and mechanical gears used by local textile businesses, it produced firearms for the Confederacy during the Civil War. It also produced machinery to drive at least fourteen naval vessels in the Confederate fleet.

In the early 1970's the company had substantially outgrown the old buildings and moved to new facilities on the outskirts of town. In 1975 the City of Columbus became involved with the buildings. Plans were formulated for a downtown convention center and this building has potential to serve in that capacity. Through a careful blending of the old and new, the Columbus, Georgia Convention and Trade Center was created.

The massive structures of the Iron Works appear little changed from the last century. The old brick walls, huge timbers and exposed ceilings, representing the best of 19th century craftsmanship, create an ambience unknown to modern construction.

RIVERSIDE:

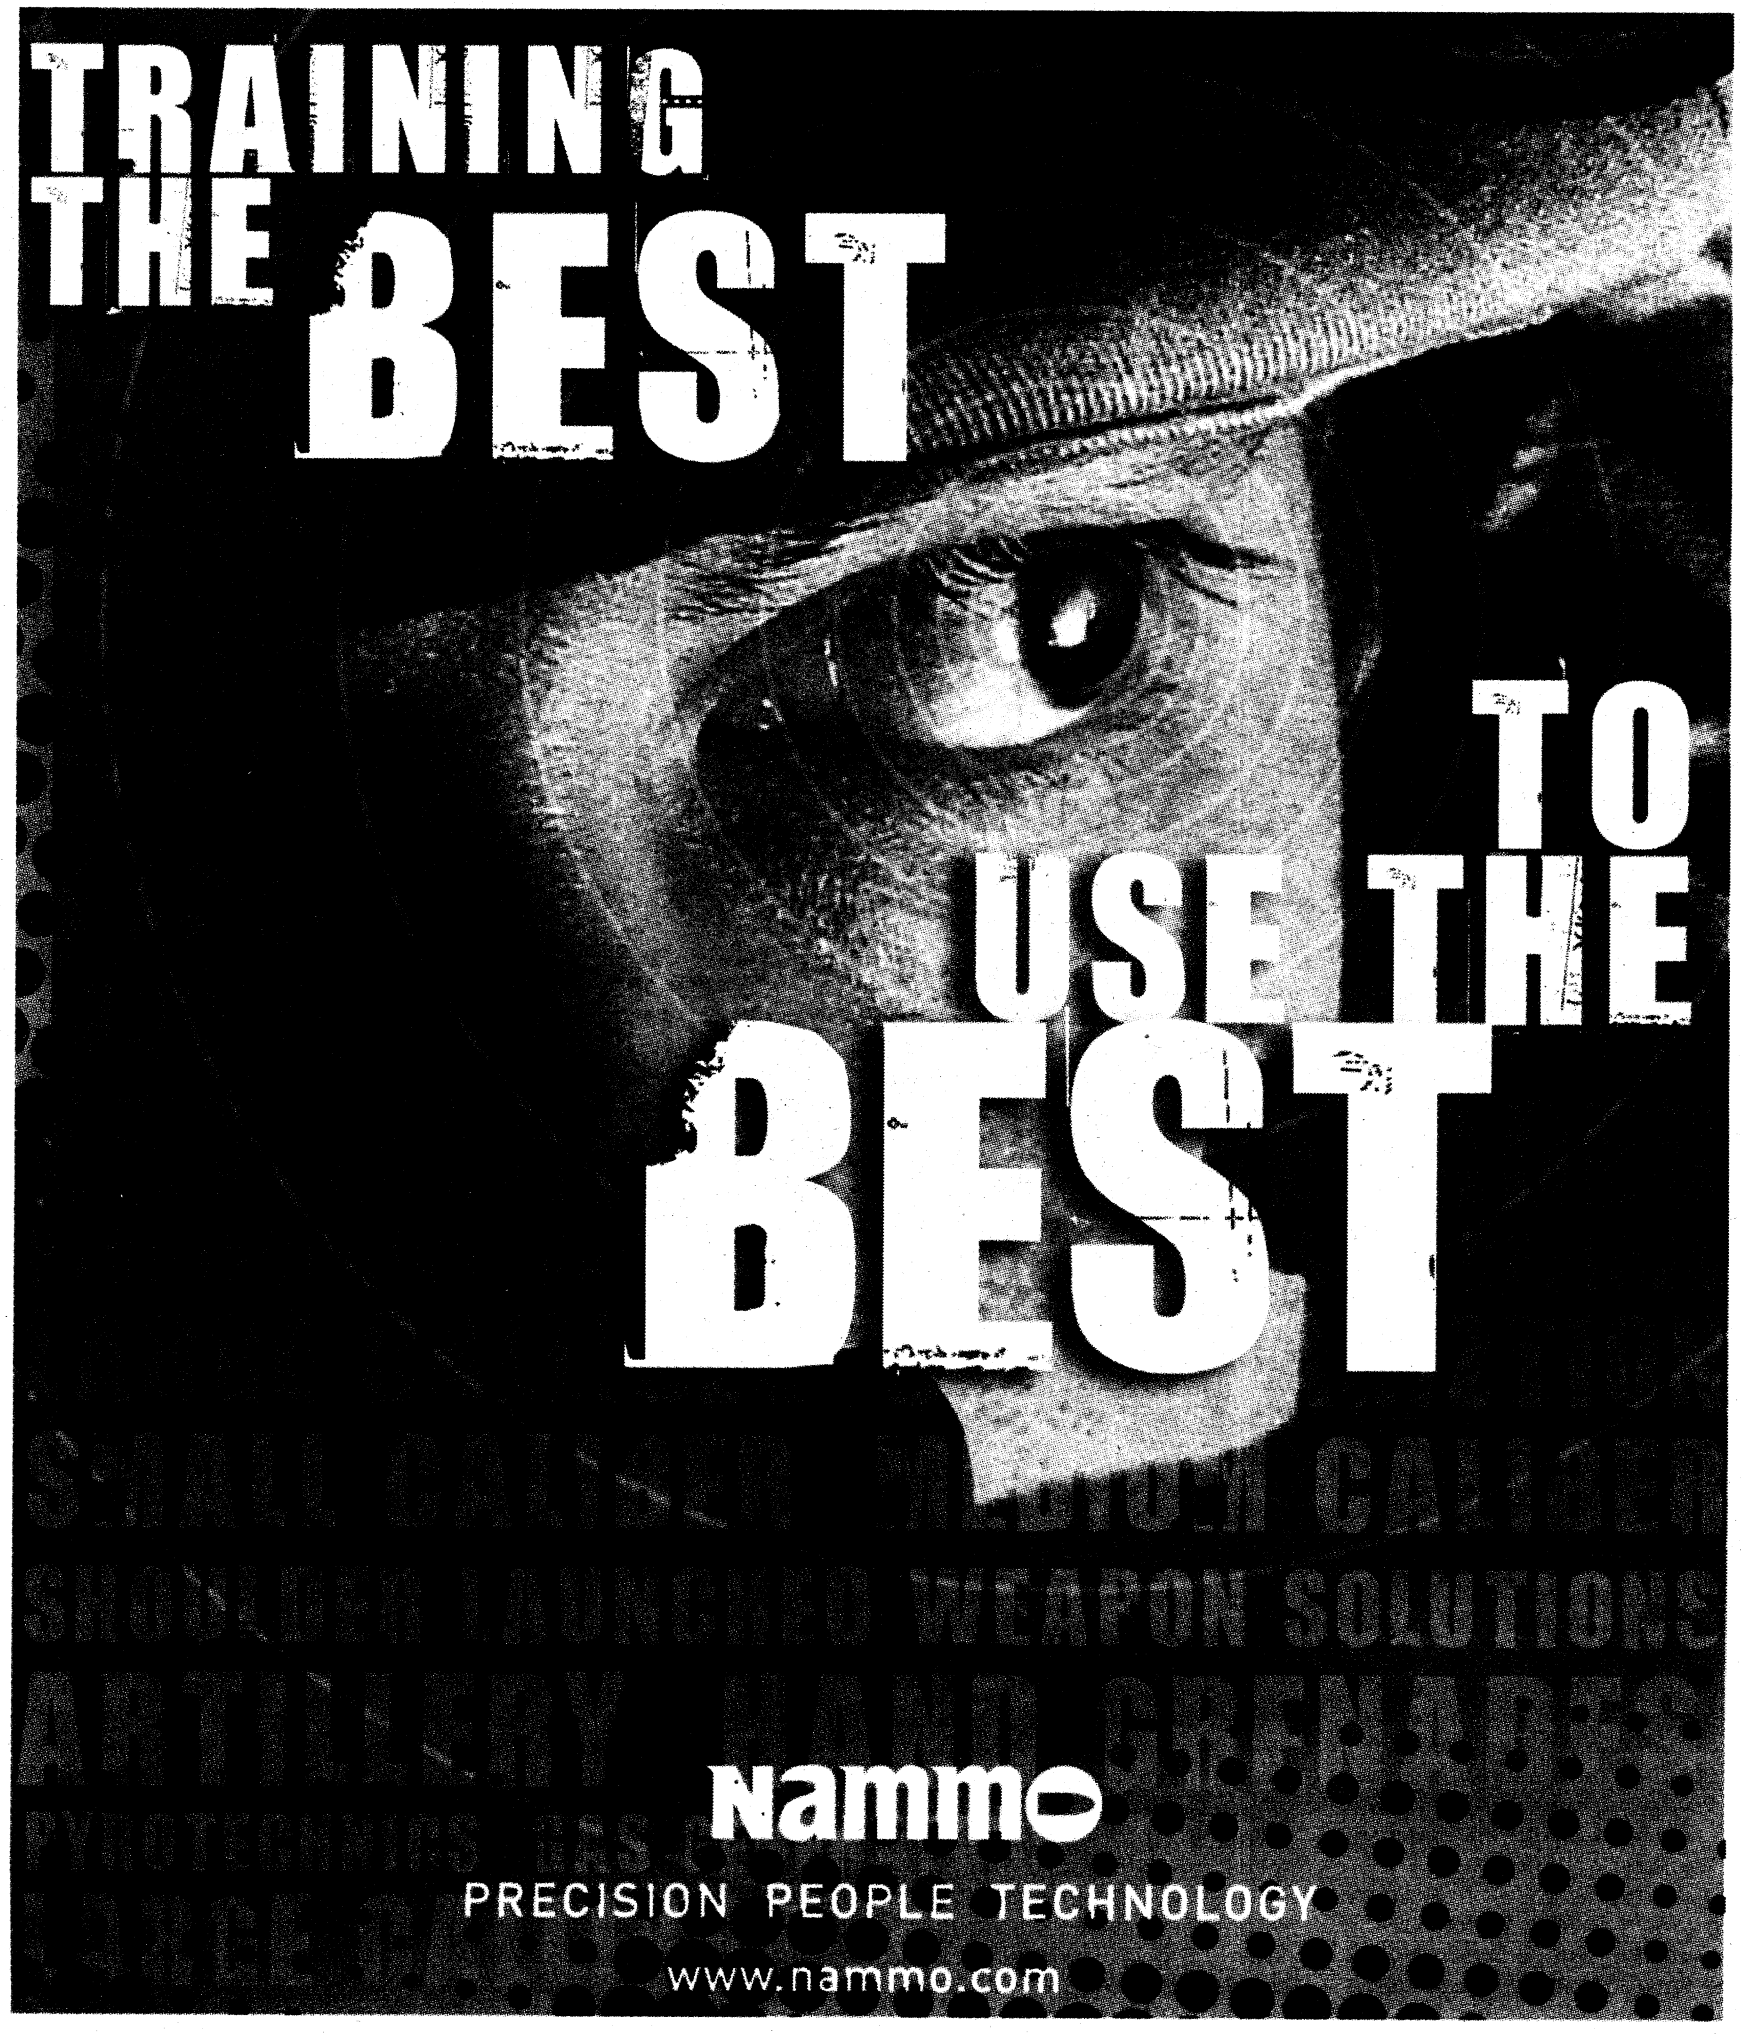
Home since 1918

Bob Purtiman

Riverside sits on an 18-acre estate, a plot of land equal in size to the grounds at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. This year, the white-columned frame house, home to a succession of commanding generals — including Omar Bradley, Courtney Hodges, Joseph Harper and Carmen Cavezza — turns a century old. Fort Benning officials said it's the oldest structure on post.

Built in 1909 by Arthur Bussey, a Columbus businessman, the dwelling was a family summer home and among the last major self-supporting plantations in west Georgia, according to historical data. The kitchen, part of an old meeting house moved to Riverside on logs from Lumpkin Road, dates to the early 1800s.

Riverside became a military quarters in 1918 after the Infantry School moved to Columbus from Fort Sill, Okla. Since then, 50 commandants have resided there. Other famous Army figures also lived on the property.



Gen. of the Army George C. Marshall, a lieutenant colonel and assistant commandant from November 1927 to June 1932, resided in a structure behind the home that was later demolished. Between August 1926 and January 1927, Gen. of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower occupied quarters to the right front of Riverside. At the time, the future president was a major and commander of the 2nd Battalion, 24th Infantry.

The five-bedroom home was added to the National Register of Historic Sites in 1971.

ARMY CAPSTONE CONCEPT

Purpose balances winning today's wars with preparing for future conflict operations

John Harlow

SPC Maurice A. Galloway

Soldiers from the 17th Fires Brigade and 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division arrive by air and convoy to assist the Iraqi Army provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the citizens of Faddaqhryah and Bahar in Basra Province.

Updates to the Army Capstone Concept, expected to be published in December, were briefed at the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's senior leader conference.

"We have to be able to defeat the enemy, conduct security operations, and also conduct a broad range of activities while conducting stability operations — and be able to transition continuously across the spectrum of offensive, defensive, stability and civil-support operations," said BG H.R. McMaster, director of the Army Capabilities Integration Center's Concepts Development and Experimentation Directorate.

The new Capstone Concept, McMaster said, examines how the Army operates under conditions of complexity and uncertainty in an era of persistent conflict. The concept's purpose is to put into operational terms Army Chief of Staff GEN George Casey's vision of balancing the Army to win today's wars while describing how the future Army will fight the wars of tomorrow.

The previous writing of the Army Capstone Concept was in 2005 and was led by MG David Fastabend.

"The biggest change is that we're recognizing some of the limitations in technologies that were designed to improve situational understanding and situational awareness," said McMaster. "We understand now how enemy countermeasures can place what we need to know about the enemy and what we need to know about the situation outside the reach of technology."

In the new edition of the Army Capstone Concept, understanding the situation will be better defined and what the Army learns about the ethnic and cultural aspects of a situation will be factored into whatever threat the Army will face in the future.

The primary purpose of the capstone concept is to lead force development and employment by establishing a common framework to think about future Army operations; place modernization decisions in a broader context of future armed conflict; establish a conceptual foundation for subordinate concepts; guide experimentation in Army operations and capabilities; and guide capability development.

"We looked at how the Army intends to operate and face the challenges in the future operating environment against what we're calling hybrid threats," said McMaster. "By looking at the current operating environment and the hybrid threats we face and could face in the future, this helps the Army make a grounded projection into the near future and understand what challenges our Army will face as part of a Joint, interdepartmental and multinational force, and then develop the capability our Army will need to fight the future battle."

The new Army Capstone Concept isn't going to change the way the Army operates.

"This will help our Army fight effectively as part of the Joint force," said McMaster. "We looked at what the Army brings to the fight. The Army has to bring to the situation the ability to establish control over wide areas and defeat enemy forces. To establish control and defeat the enemy, we need to have capabilities complementary to those in the Joint force. In this concept, we have identified what we need to bring to the fight in combined arms capabilities."

As the 20-member team led by McMaster began planning for the development of the capstone concept, there were several major questions they hoped to answer when the final product is published: one, what is a description of future armed conflict; two, how should the Army operate to conduct Joint land operations that contribute to political outcomes consistent with strategic objectives; and three, what additional or new capabilities should the Army provide to Joint force commanders to meet a broad range of national security threats?

See Concept, S11

Concept: Recognizes need for reassessment

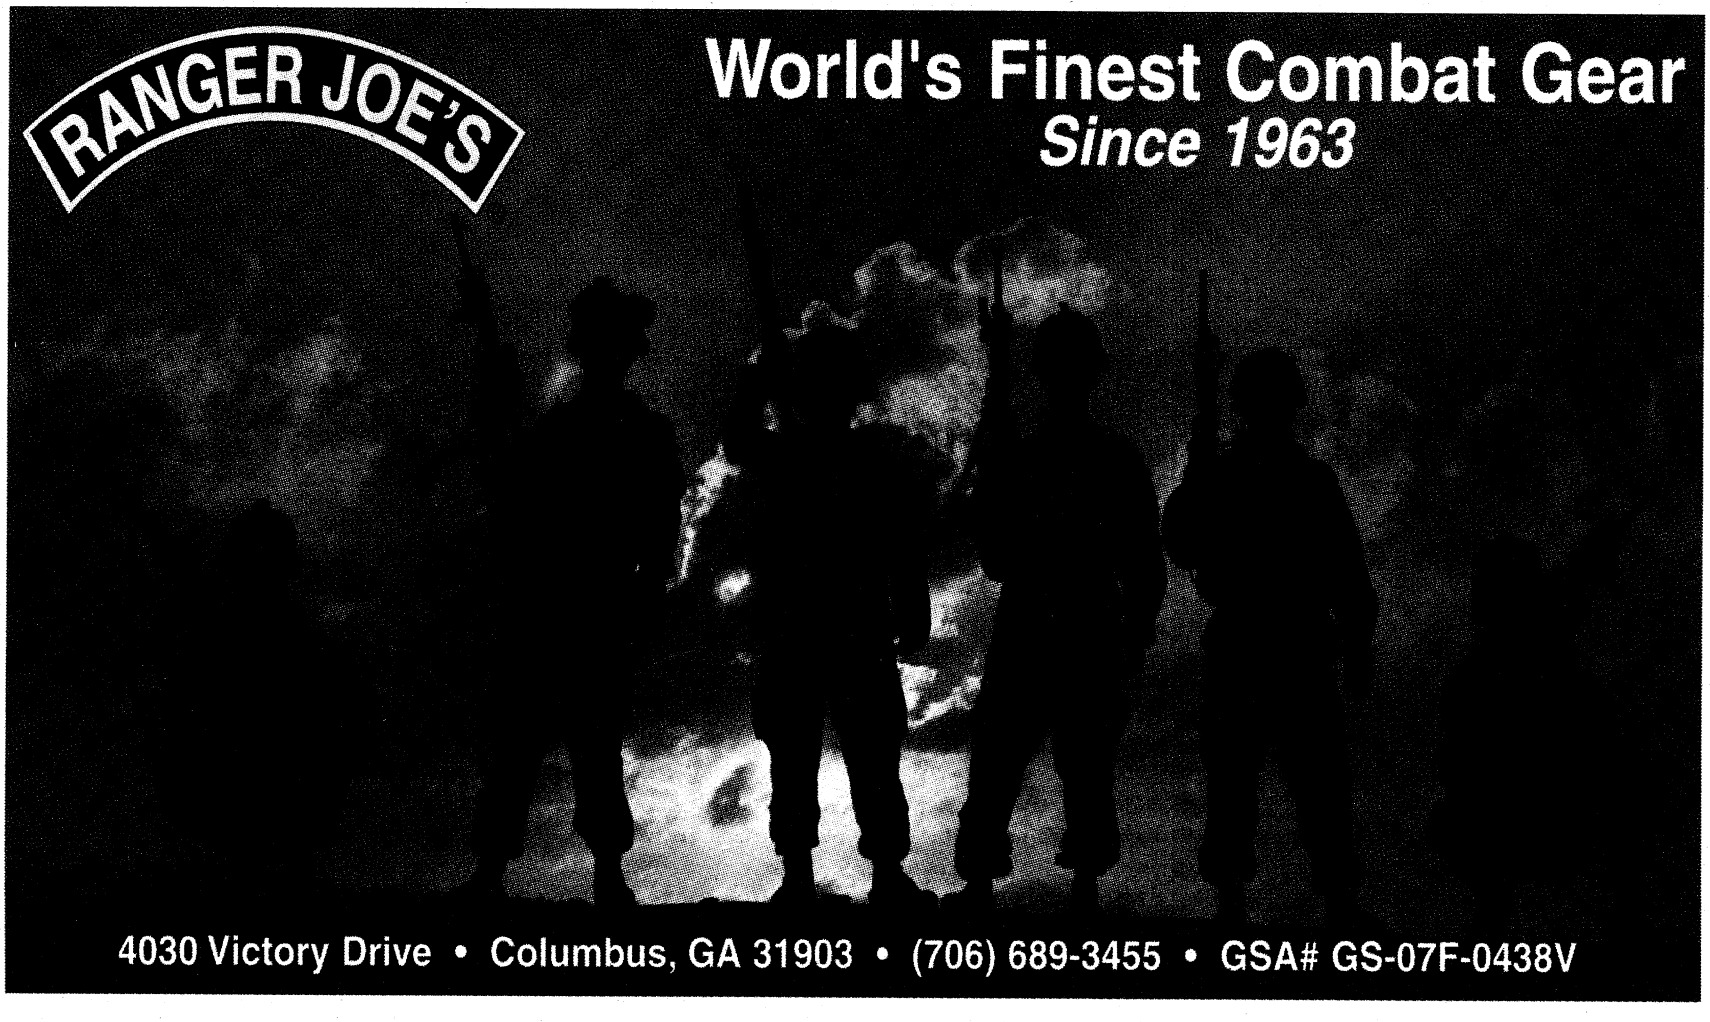
As the concept is being developed, McMaster's team realized that the Army faced a constant problem. How does the Army apply resources made available to them to overcome a combination of hybrid threatsand adaptive enemies in complex operating environments?

"The first thing the Army needs to do is understand what the demands on it will be," said McMaster. "The key thing is to have flexibility. No matter how hard we think about it, you're never going to get it quite right. The key is to not be so far off the mark that you can't adjust once the demands of future armed conflict are revealed to you."

There are many aspects that go into the problem and many different solutions:



- Conducting operations under the condition of transparency;
- Conducting operations with partners and among diverse populations;
- Overcoming anti-access in the context of a Joint operations;
- Conducting and sustaining operations from and across extended distances;
- Fighting for information (physical reconnaissance and human intelligence);
- Employing the manpower, mobility, firepower and protection to close with the enemy;
- Conducting area security operations over large areas (including population security and precision fires to limit collateral damage);
- Developing partner capabilities (for example, security force assistance);
- Protecting the network and routinely fighting in degraded mode;
- Overcoming hybrid threats/ complex web defenses in complex urban terrain;
- Ensuring tactical mobility in complex terrain and overcoming enemy countermobility efforts; and
- Reshaping logistics and the demand side of sustainment to ensure operations without pause and freedom of movement in non-contiguous areas of operations.

With operations ongoing in Iraq and Afghanistan and facing an uncertain future with a possible unknown enemy, what is happening in the world is a fluid situation, so the Army Capstone Concept needs to be able to be adjustable to what the Army faces in the future, McMaster said.

"The concept recognizes that we are in a very complex environment," said McMaster. "We're engaged and will continue to be engaged in conflicts that will continue to evolve based on interaction with the enemy and other destabilizing factors. We will work to continually reframe and reassess the situation — and that is one of the foundations of the Army Capstone Concept."

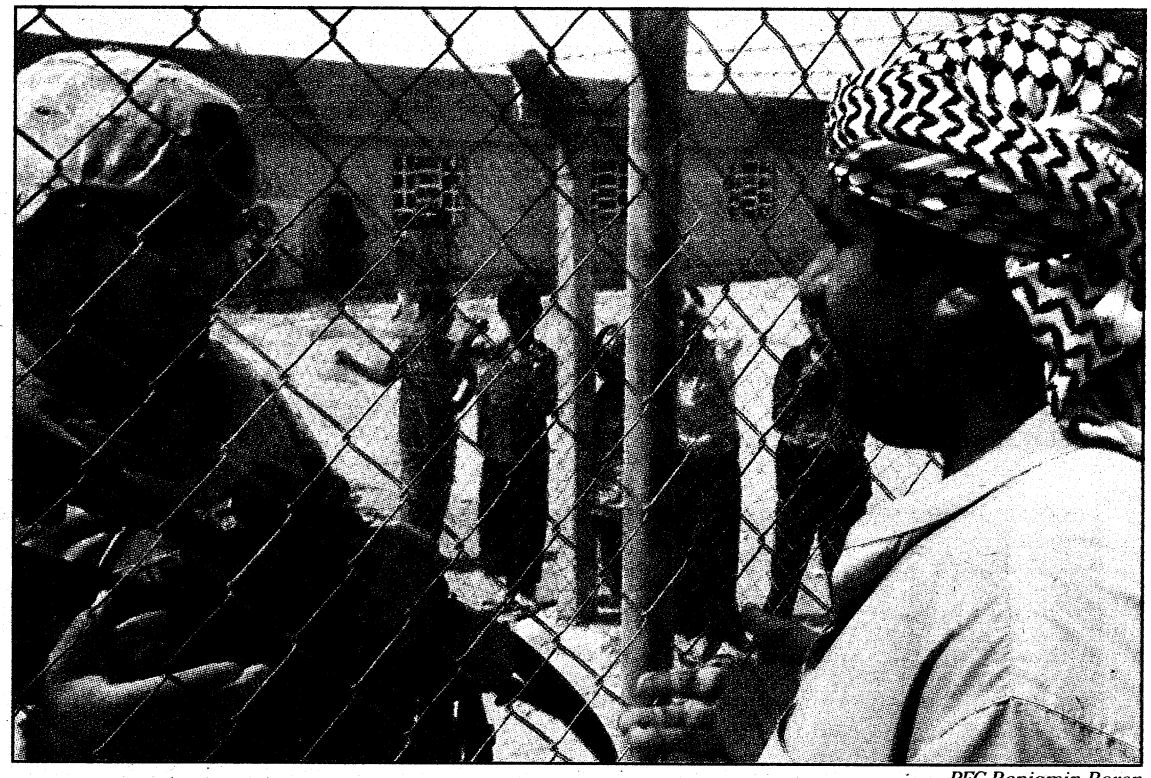
The concept isn't directive in nature and is intended to be a guide of how to prepare for the possibility of future conflict.

"We are trying to capture a broad range of contingencies that are derived from national security guidance (and the) national defense strategy," said McMaster. "The concept is based on what we see as current and emerging threats to national security. Those include some we have familiarity with, such as networked terrorist organizations, hostile states and hybrid threats from both state and non-state actors — and grafted on top of the problem are criminal organizations. You also have insurgency and counterinsurgency, and that has a dimension of civil war involved (in it)."

"Good leaders understand that they cannot train on everything; therefore, they focus on training the most important tasks. Leaders do not accept substandard performance in order to complete all the tasks on the training schedule. Training a few tasks to standard is preferable to training more tasks below the standard."

— FM 7-0, 2-46

Training full spectrum – less is more



GEN Peter W. Chiarelli, VCSA

Transformation is truly a never-ending journey. In the midst of fighting two wars, the Army has organizationally recreated itself within a modular formation and doctrinally ground itself in the capstone operational concept of Full Spectrum Operations.

Our combat leaders balance the probabilities of offense, defense and stability tasks within a shifting landscape of nuanced transitions. Through the capturing and leveraging of experience they have learned how to orchestrate and dominate the human terrain much the way same way we orchestrate and dominate the physical terrain. They are savvy in manipulating all the elements of national power — kinetic and non kinetic — and can recognize and act upon shifts in the strategic environment. They are versatile and agile. Those in Iraq in and Afghanistan today find their formations involved in combat operations for short, intense periods of time, but just as quickly can reorient across the spectrum of non-kinetic tasks to exploit created opportunities and keep the momentum.

It is an amazing transformation that has leveraged the experience of combat to compensate for the compressed periods of dwell afforded by the demands of the Nation and the finite resource of Army Forces. The Army's Force Generation model becomes a different organizational fight at home. ARFORGEN at the unit level becomes a cyclical endeavor to orchestrate and synchronize the flow of people and equipment to a training strategy that gives our Soldiers and leaders the confidence in their capabilities, their equipment, and their leaders.

As those leaders develop a training strategy, the debate that established a C-METL and D-METL may have allowed the drift induced by eight years of war distract us from fundamentals that have always defined our excellence in mission focused training. Today, a precise understanding of the true nature of the Mission Essential Task — balanced against "full spectrum operations"— is more important than ever. As GEN Marty Dempsey wrote in last month's Army Magazine:"If we are true to our claim to be an expeditionary, campaign-quality, full spectrum force, then our METL is the constant and the conditions are the variable in our training and readiness reporting."

PFC Benjamin Boren

A U.S. Soldier talks to civilians at the control point outside of a medical facility during a combined medical capabilities mission with members of the Iraqi army and U.S. Soldiers from the 30th Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 1st Cavalry Division, in Baghdad, Iraq, Sept. 1.

I cannot agree more. Our concept of a METL is the ultimate expression of commander's intent, and unfortunately the one resource we cannot buy more is time. FM 7-0 states clearly that training a few tasks to standard is preferable to training more tasks below the standard. Quality must override quantity. Though modern METLs are combinations of offense, defense and now stability, a balance must be achieved where leaders have enough time to train their formations to standard rather than to time.

To get the harmony in music each instrument must support the others. To get harmony in battle, each weapon must support the other. Team play wins.

— George Patton, 1941

The Gordian-like knot presented by complex operational environments over extended periods has unearthed an inevitable conclusion that must be recognized as we create unit training strategies. In a hybrid world our adversaries will always meet us where we are not both tactically and operationally. If you willingly accept this premise, then the ability to "cut the knot" lies in creating organizational agility, or rather the ability to rapidly assess, adjust to, orchestrate and synchronize kinetic and non-kinetic effects across the operational environment. To paraphrase George Patton's remarks — To get harmony in the full spectrum operating environment, each warfighting function and each element of national power must support the other.

See Training, S13

Training: Focus on fewer battle tasks

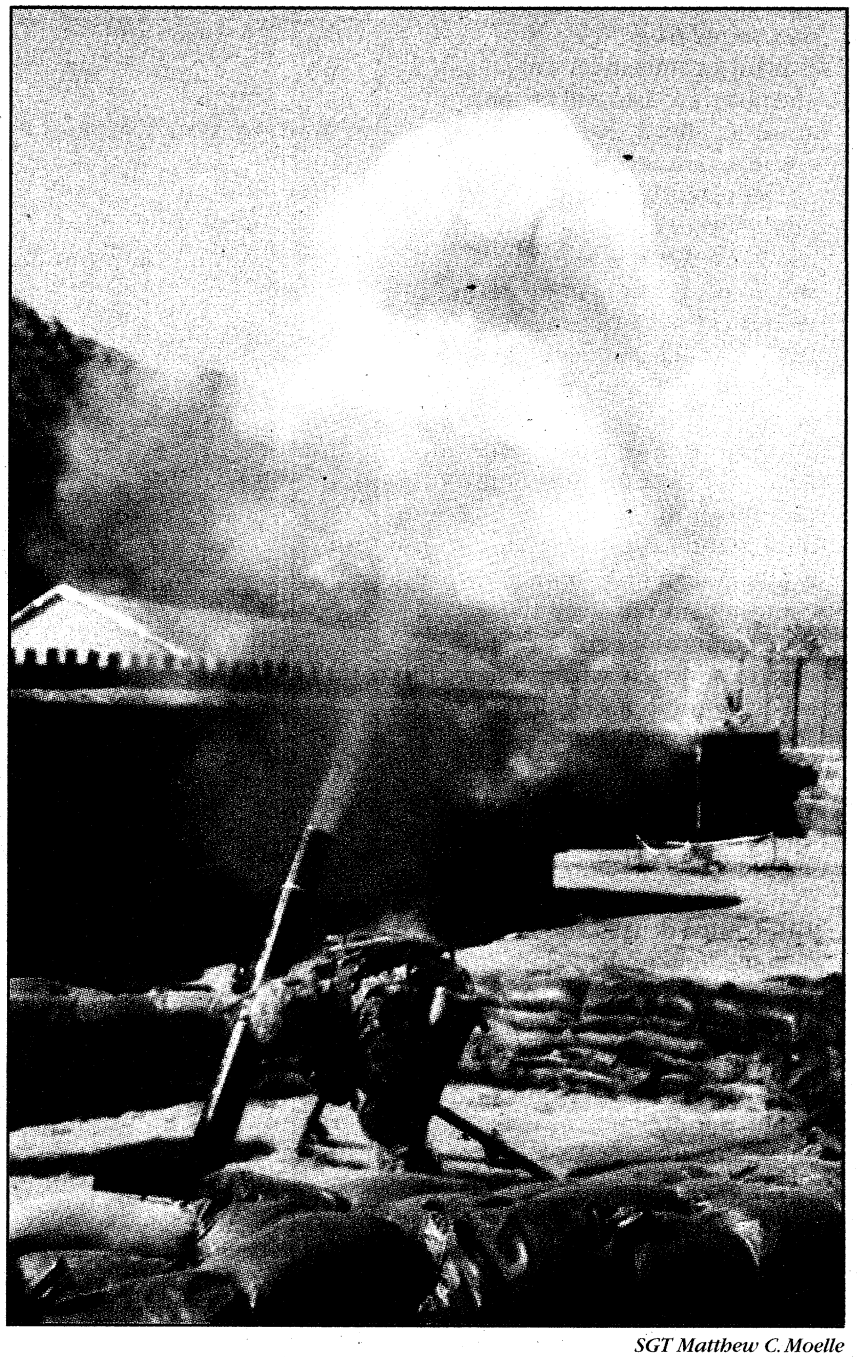
If the enemy is going to go where you are not, how can a leader say his force is ready if it is not trained to go where the enemy takes the fight? COL John Boyd knew this as he convinced the Air Force to create airframes with a higher thrust to weight ratio and taught pilots that winning meant anticipating and turning inside the enemy aircraft's abilities. It is simply impossible to plan and train for every possible scenario our Soldiers and their leaders may encounter within the complex reality of the contemporary operating environments. The simple evolution of adversary ways and means and the rapid exponential growth and leveraging of technology are all telling us something if we just listen.



In the late 80s as a young major, I had the privilege of resourcing and providing oversight to the U.S. Army's Canadian Army Trophy (CAT) team. It was a truly revealing experience watching an Armor Company focus with an intensity and drive on a single task — Platoon Level Gunnery. They trained for a single battle run consisting of three defensive and two offensive engagements. A total of 32 main gun targets (with as few main gun rounds as possible but no more than 40), and 20 machine gun targets (with as few 7.62 rounds as possible but no more than 200) — that's all they trained for. They did not qualify or even carry their individual weapons. They conducted no maneuver training. Their protective masks and GDP battle books stayed locked in storage. Through 18 months of complete mission focus the unit eclipsed the competition and took home the trophy.

I thought I had learned a lot as I watched the unit train, help resource, and come home victorious. Unbeknownst to me the most important lesson revealed itself later. With a little more than a month between the end of the CAT competition and an impending Combat Training Center rotation, the unit aggressively turned its focus and attention away from gunnery to mastering the tactical fundamentals they would need for the upcoming rotation. With the steady ease of a team well trained in a few collective tasks, the CAT team leveraged the organizational dynamics and short-hand they had developed over 18 months of intense gunnery training to adapt to the emerging operating environment — in this case the Combat Training Center at Hohenfels.

The CAT team flat-out dominated the rotation. It was there that I realized a few mission essential tasks — well trained — by far exceeded the need to train a whole lot of everything. The quality of a mission essential training approach created the base mechanics by which the unit could adapt to the changing environment.

"Team play wins" is the confidence of good organizational dynamics that lay on a bedrock of a few perfected mission essential battle tasks creating the agility to proactively react and dominate transitions in the operating environment.

Units that focus on fewer full-spectrum battle tasks (that matriculate into a prioritized set of collective and individual tasks) build the individual, collective and staff mechanics and dynamics needed to rapidly adjust and orchestrate within the complexity of contemporary operating environments achieving Patton's harmony.

The Task Force Mountain Warrior Soldiers increased operations in their area in order to disrupt insurgents before the country's second national elections.

We must refocus the 'why' behind in training, and then integrate the cutting edges of learning theory and technology to the block and tackle of building a unit to fight and win. It is not just the building of skill sets, but the human dimension of team mechanics and fundamentals that can adapt and orchestrate all the instruments of national power within the hybrid environments that demands full spectrum operations.

When the compression of time available between deployments begins to ease, the pressure to expand a commander's mission essential task lists will become apparent. But a mission focused re-evaluation of the anticipated operating environment, senior/junior leader dialogue and guidance, doctrine and orders should not result in more essential tasks, but a simple refinement tailored to the analysis and balanced to create unit agility and versatility.

Training: Leverage combat experience

As far back as 1963 GEN Bruce C. Clarke figured out in Guidelines for the Leader and the Commander that: "There is not enough time for the commander to do everything. Each commander will have to determine wisely what is essential, and assign responsibilities for accomplishment. He should spend the remaining time on near-essentials." (Later, this quote would headline the chapter on METL development of the 1988 version of FM 25-101, Battle Focused Training, as a compendium to the FM 25-100, Training the Force.)

Leaders have to maintain the discipline to identify and eliminate nonessentials that steal time required for training essentials. Our Chief of Staff GEN George Casey has given us very definitive guidance: "We need to leverage the combat experience of our Army and think about what that means as we develop our training plans."

As young leaders do just that — leverage the experience in our mid-grade non-commissioned and commissioned officer corps as a risk mitigation strategy during this era of decreased dwell — senior leaders must counter the seemingly benign risk mitigation strategy of trying to cover every possible contingency with directed training tasks which creates incredible turbulence at the unit level.

Paratroopers assigned to Troop K, 5th Squadron, 73rd Cavalry, 82nd Airborne Division, Multi-National Division-Baghdad, position themselves to provide fire support for their fellow Paratroopers and their Iraqi counterparts assigned to the 3rd National Police Brigade, 1st NP Division as they prepare to clear a nearby village during "Operation Winged Lion II." The Iraqi-led air assault clearance operation was in order to deny insurgent movement into the Iraqi capital.

At the same time, we leaders cannot discount the value of an individual leader's education and broadening experiences to creating versatility. As a force that is persistently committed, it cannot in good conscious hold on to talent as a short term risk mitigation strategy in an era of persistent conflict. Instead, we must take a cumulative, longitudinally broader view towards building the bench of smart, talented leaders who will see problems through different lenses because they have had the time to reflect and expand on their experiences.

Building unit agility and versatility comes from a focused approach to training. The uncertainty and volatility of fighting in a hybrid environment demands that our leaders and their units develop the capacity to "shift from a known point." The "known point" becomes the mission focused attention to a few tasks identified by a commander as mission essential. The harmony we desire in our formations within full spectrum operations, and the ability to turn inside an adversary's decision cycle, is more a product of the quality of training rather than the quantity. As an expression of commander's intent, METL focused training creates teams that ultimately dominate the shifting complexity of modern wars.

Living life in the Korengal Valley

Sgt. Matthew Moeller
5TH MOBILE PUBLIC AFFAIRS DETACHMENT

KUNAR PROVINCE, Afghanistan - As bullets started to rain down on Baker Company's position, a Soldier sighed, and said, annoyingly, "Well here we go."

Over the next twenty minutes the service members fired everything from bullets to curse words at the invisible enemy attacking from the surrounding hills.

"Just once I'd like to come out here and not get shot at," said an exasperated U.S. Army Sgt. Graham Mullins, of Columbia, Mo., using a four-foot stone wall for cover. "Just once."

Near the end, two F-15 fighter jets pummeled the insurgent forces with 500-pound bombs, and an eerie silence fell across the battlefield. For the U.S. service members, it was just another morning in the notorious Korengal Valley.

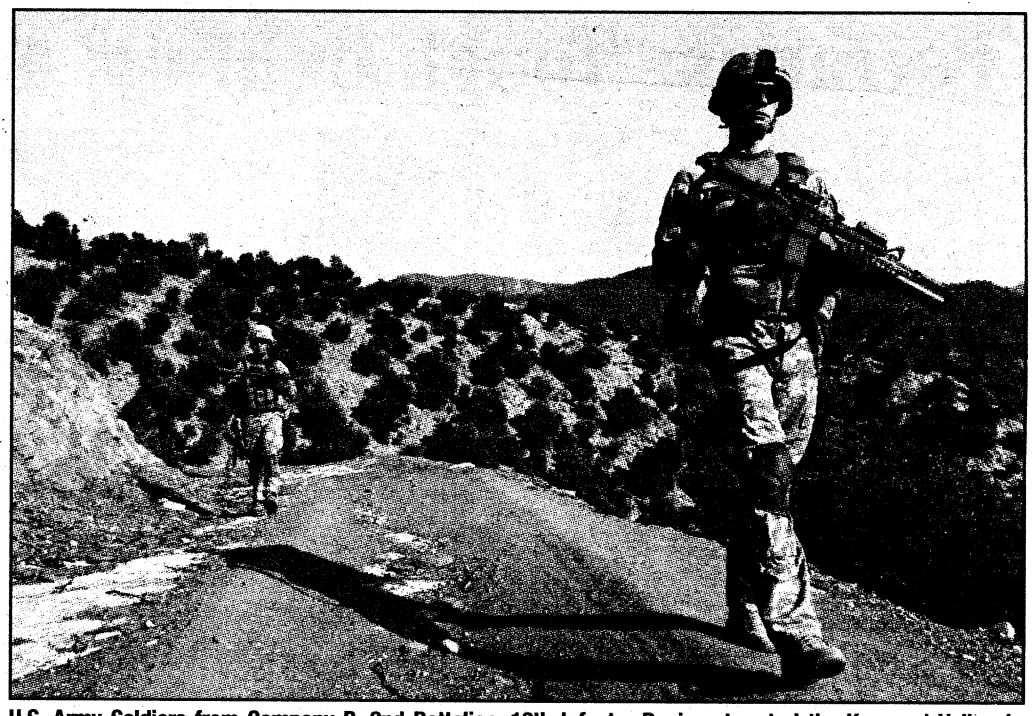
Nicknamed "The Valley of Death," the 2nd Battalion, 12th Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Division, Soldiers have called the isolated valley, in Afghanistan's Kunar province, home, since arriving in June.

"This place is definitely its own monster; there are a lot of other dangerous places in Afghanistan, but I would say this place lives up to the hype," said U.S. Army Capt. Mark Moretti, Co. B. commander, and New Windsor, N.Y., native.

"It's all just a waiting game," said a Co. B Soldier, during a "routine" patrol. "We come out here, and wait for them to open fire on us."

Seeing some of the toughest fighting in Afghanistan on a daily basis, many Baker Co. Soldiers find humor in the idea that many of their fellow Soldiers are envious of their assignment, who often refer to the almost constant battle as the "infantryman's dream."

"I would tell them to seriously reconsider their thinking positions," U.S. Army Spc. Guadalupe Gardenias, a B Co. Soldier, said, laughing.



Living in conditions that rival the third-world villages they patrol, the tiny U.S outposts dotting the valley walls are in stark contrast to other American mega-bases in Afghanistan, such as Bagram Airfield, which offers everything from personal Internet to American fast food restaurants.

Here, if a resupply helicopter gets cancelled, Soldiers miss not only letters from home, but risk having to ration their food.

At the Korengal Outpost,

Soldiers use outhouses and hope to shower once a week to conserve water. At nearby Restrepo Outpost, Soldiers lack any running water, and eat field rations for every meal.

"The conditions out here are tough, and it's a tough fight," said Moretti. "But given the chance, I don't think anyone would want to leave."

Despite daily gun battles, poor hygiene and tortuous terrain, the men of Baker Co. seem content living their life in the "Valley of Death." When asked if they would take an easier assignment, the answer was always the same. "Not unless everyone else came with me."

To these Soldiers the debate back home about the war in Afghanistan means little. To them, it's the brotherhood, born in combat, keeping these Soldiers motivated to stand shoulder to shoulder.

"Before I came into the Army a lot of people would talk about brothers in arms, and I thought it was kind of cheesy, but being out here, I can definitely say that it brings us a lot closer," said Gardanias. "Cause no matter what we say, or what we do, nobody besides us is going to know what we went through, and what it was like."

Petraeus: 'Tough fighting' ahead in Afghanistan

John J. Kruzel
AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

John J. Kruzel
Spc. Guadalupe Gardenias calls in coordinates as fellow Soldiers watch for suspicious activity, during a routine patrol in Afghanistan's Korengal valley. Gen. David Patreaus has said fighting there will become tougher.

WASHINGTON — The commander of U.S. Central Command said tough fighting lies ahead in Afghanistan, where the Taliban and other extremists have expanded their strength and influence, but he cautioned that success there demands more than battlefield victories.

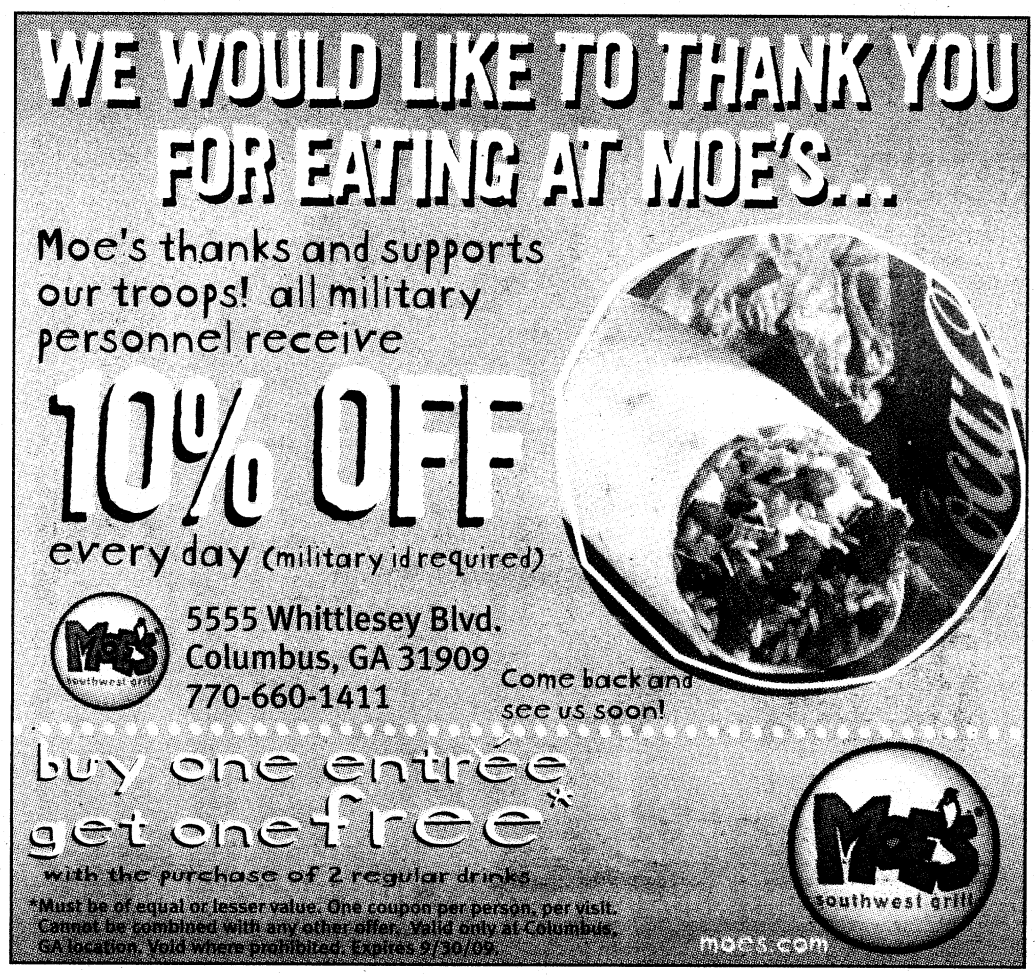
With violence reaching peak levels this summer, reversing enemy security gains will require sustained commitment from U.S. and multinational forces, Army Gen. David H. Petraeus told the American Legion in Louisville, Ky.

"Despite important achievements in various areas,given the deterioration in the security situation, an enormous amount of hard work and tough fighting lie ahead in Afghanistan," Petraeus said in his prepared remarks.

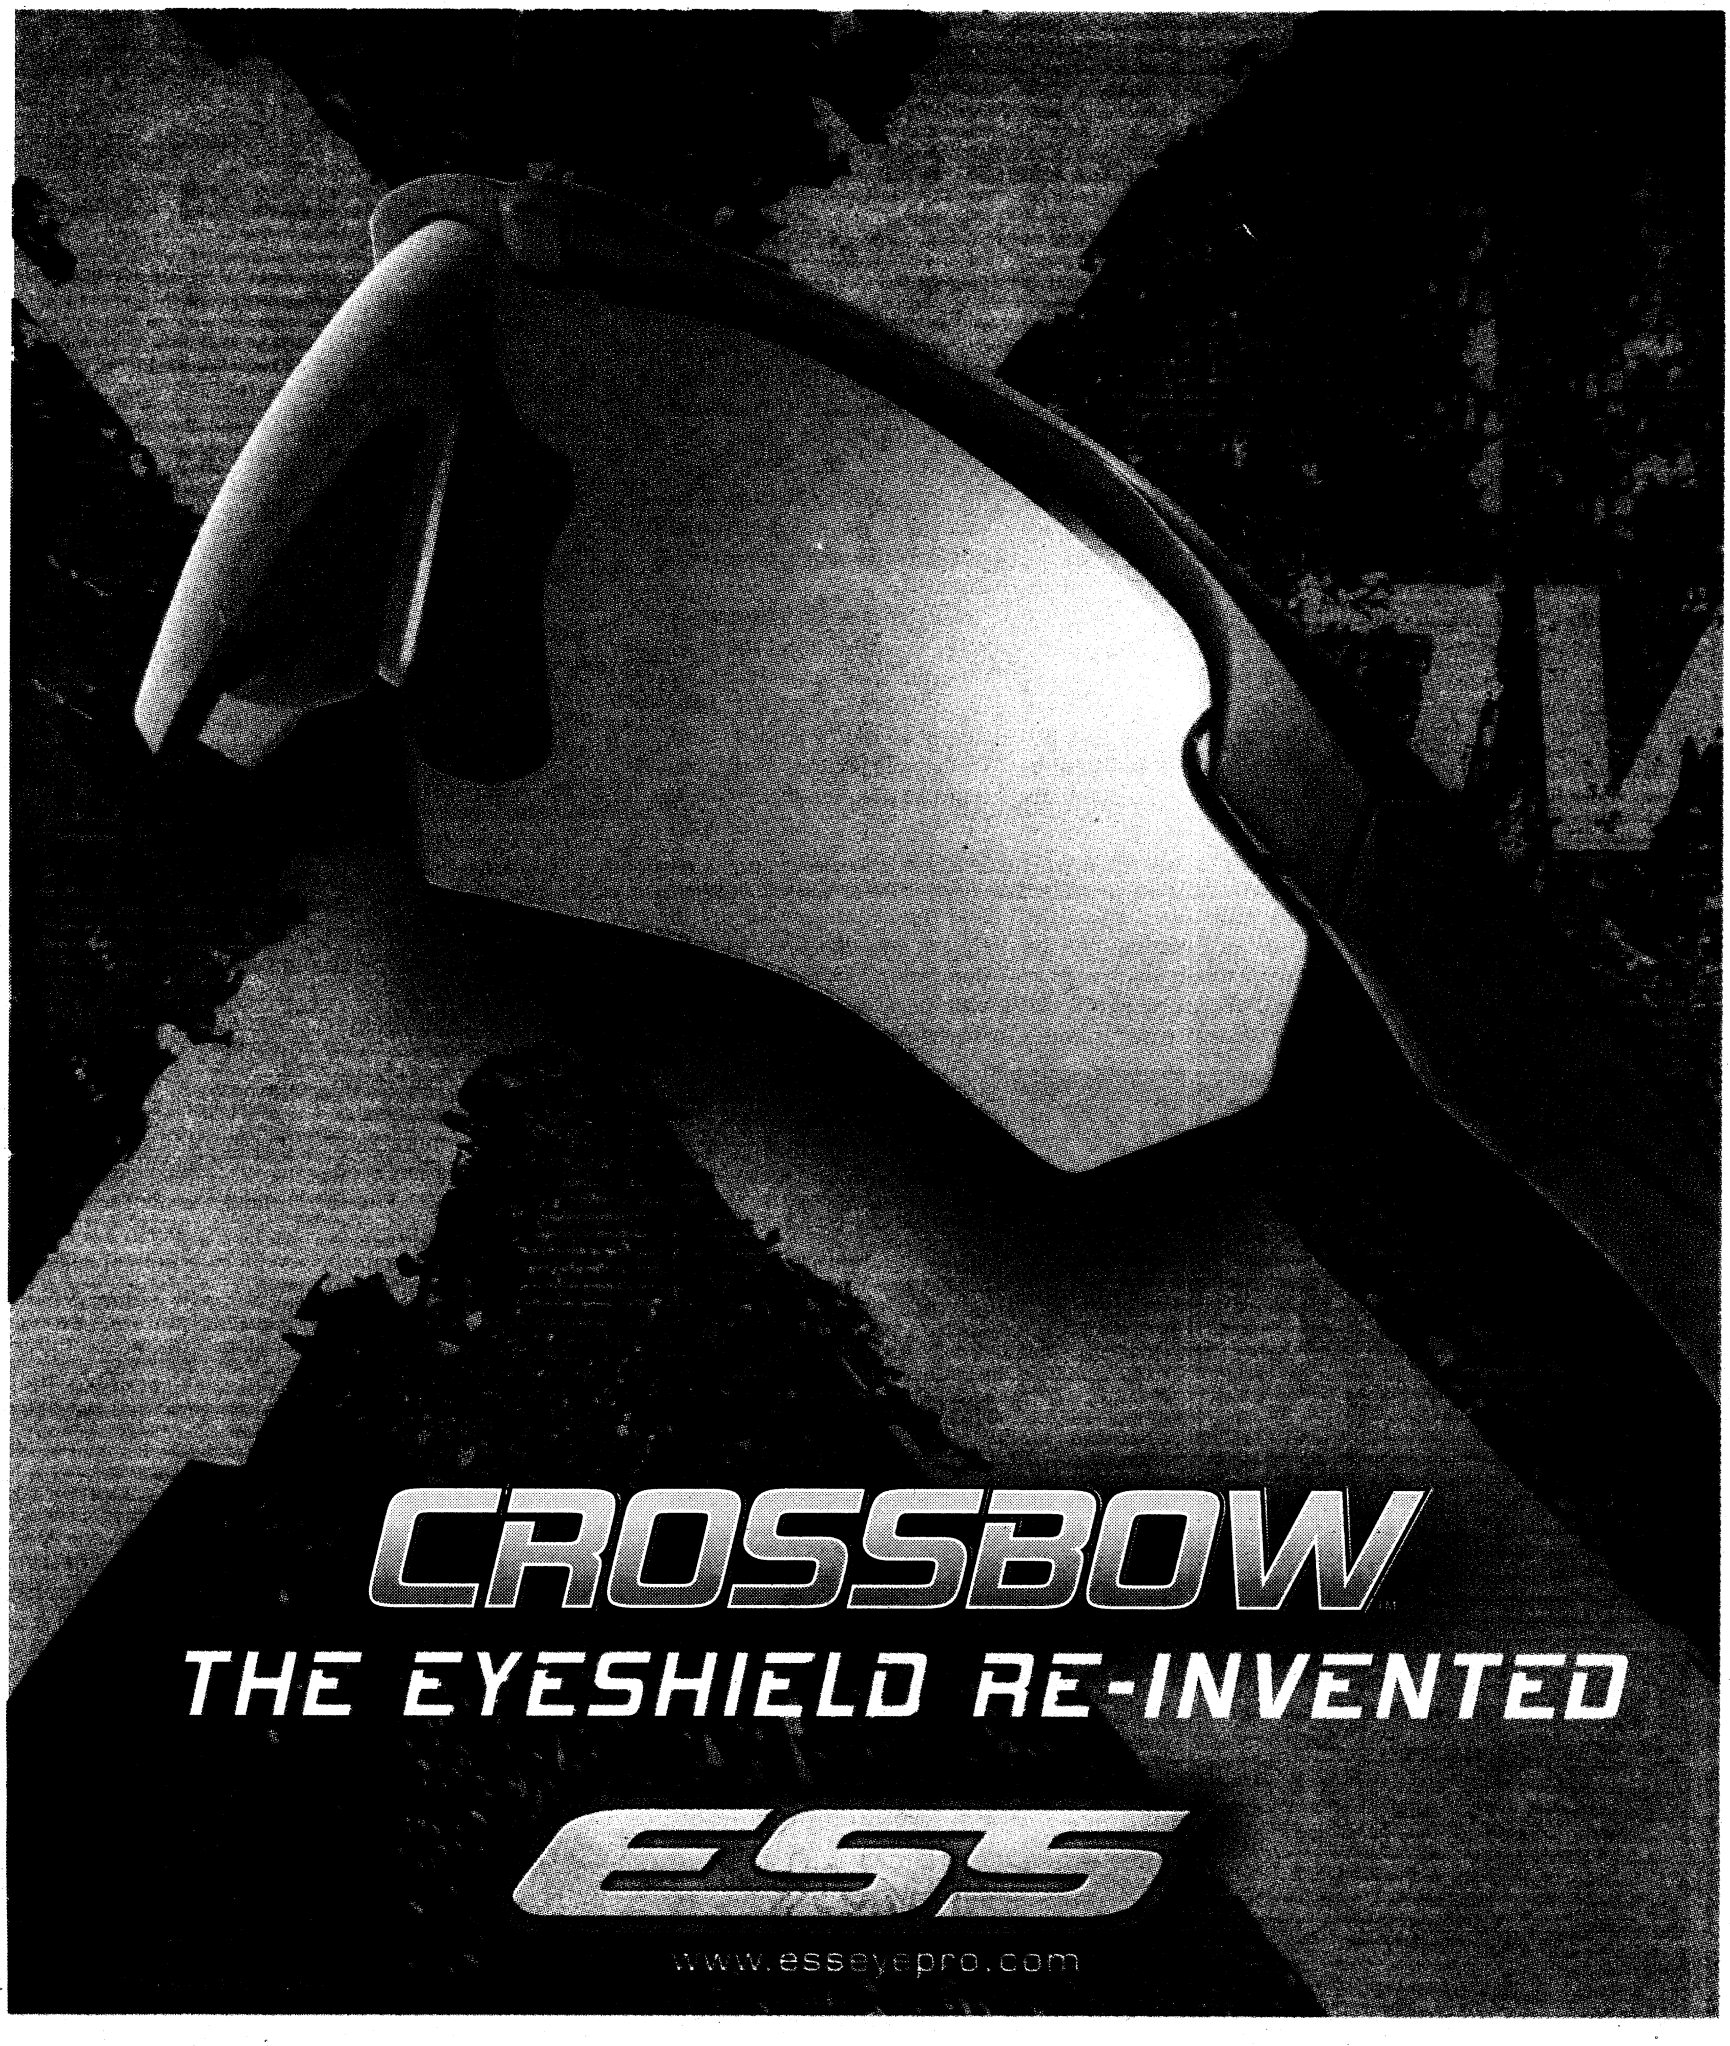
Nearly eight years into the war in Afghanistan, Petraeus said the primary objective remains clear: to ensure that transnational extremists such as al-Qaida are not able to re-establish the sanctuaries they had prior to the 9/11 attacks. But more than just killing or capturing terrorists and extremists, he added, the mission requires a counterinsurgency campaign akin to the strategy he oversaw as the top U.S. commander in Iraq — an effort that placed greater focus on securing the population.

"And that is exactly what our troopers, along with their Afghan, NATO and other international partners, are intent on executing," he said. About 62,000 American and 38,000 allied forces are deployed to Afghanistan.

Petraeus gave a snapshot of the counterinsurgency tactics that troops are carrying out: rebuilding communities recently cleared of insurgents, developing Afghan security forces, flipping "reconcilable" insurgent members into allies and stemming the flow of illegal drugs.



"They are also working with our civilian partners in helping to foster the growth of Afghan governance so it can achieve legitimacy in the eyes of the people," he said. "Our troopers' hard work has, despite the increase in violence, paid dividends in a number of areas."



Multinational troops last week aided Afghan security forces in protecting some 6,000 polling stations during the country's national election, the first such balloting in Afghanistan in 30 years. The polling results are expected to be announced by Thursday, defense officials said.

"Despite widespread Taliban threats and numerous attacks, millions of Afghan citizens stepped forward to vote for their next president and for provincial councils," Petraeus said.

Citing counterinsurgency successes since the fall of the Taliban regime in 2001, Petraeus highlighted a 600 percent increase in the number of students — matched by a seven-fold increase in trained teachers – at thousands of newly constructed schools, and other achievements in building roads, hospitals and the nation's physical and political infrastructure.

At the same time, however, Petraeus said the Taliban and other elements of the so-called extremist syndicate have expanded their strength and influence, demanding a sustained push from those engaged in counterinsurgency efforts in Afghanistan.

Robotics Rodeo aims to save

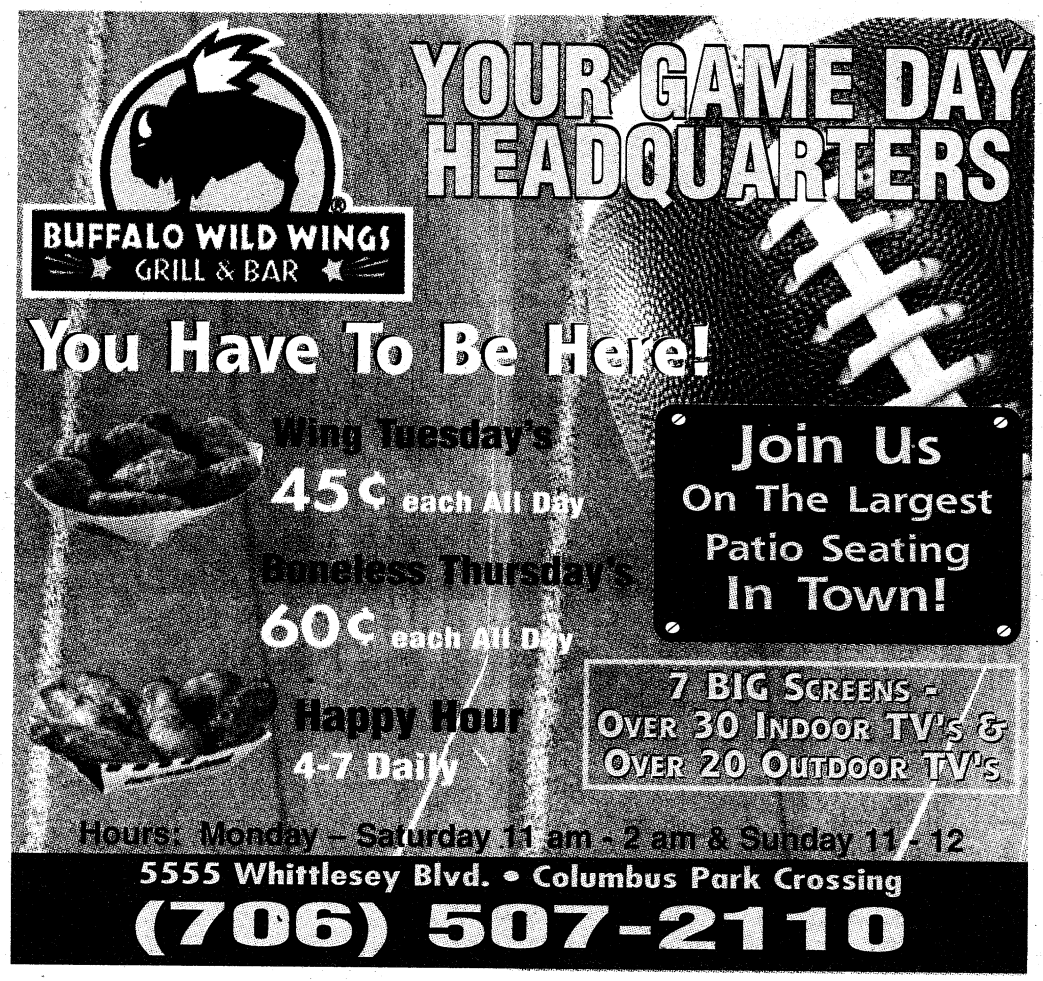
New technologies focus on autonomous robots

SSG Jason R. Krawczyk
ARMY NEWS SERVICE

FORT HOOD, Texas — A Robotics Rodeo was held Sept. 1 with exhibitors from all over America descending on Fort Hood to show off the latest advancements in robotics technology.

"If we're not fielding, we're failing; it's all about saving Soldiers' lives," said Lt. Gen. Rick Lynch, III Corps commanding general. "It's not about technology demonstrations, not about how much money you can garner from the U.S. government, it's all about saving Soldiers lives."

Robotics are currently in use in many areas of the military. There are robotic doctor's assistants that video the Soldiers' wounds to enable long-distance monitoring of vital signs and allow consultations with distant medical specialists. Robots also search for and disassemble improvised explosives devices.



The most recognizable integration of robotics in the Army may be the unmanned aerial vehicles that provide surveillance and reconnaissance assets for warfighters such as the Predator.

The focus of the Robotics Rodeo was autonomous robotics capabilities. Autonomy allows robots to function without a user interface, which helps significantly in areas of low or no communication ability or when Soldiers have other tasks to focus on, said Derek Wadsworth, a robotics researcher and operator with Idaho National Laboratories.

"We don't want to give them (Soldiers) a tool that they have to focus on instead of focusing on the task," Wadsworth said. "We want to give the Soldiers a tool that acts as a companion, not something they have to babysit."

The three-day event was packed with more than 30 different exhibitors running their robots through field demonstrations. Soldiers and civilian evaluators were on-hand to give feedback based on the demos and hands-on experience.

The rodeo ended Sept. 4 and the evaluators turned in their feedback sheets to help determine what systems will best meet their future warfighting needs.

Army 'deadly serious' about replacement ground vehicle

C. Todd Lopez
US ARMY NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — After cancellation of its Future Combat Systems program, the Army continues to focus on modernization of the force and a replacement for the canceled Manned Ground Vehicle.

"We've got our very best people working on it," said Lt. Gen. Stephen Speakes, deputy chief of staff, Army G-8. "We're doing everything we can to reflect the lessons of combat, we're deadly serious about getting this as right as we can."

The result of a recent Acquisition Decision Memorandum spelled the end of the Army's expensive modernization strategy, FCS. The ADM gutted the program of its eight centerpiece "manned ground vehicles."

"There was a commitment to Army modernization, there was a specific objection to individual programs that were part of Army modernization, and so, for example, the MGV did not enjoy the support of the senior leadership in the DoD," Speakes said. "We are getting a do-over."

There's no disagreement, however, that the Army needs a new ground vehicle.

"The Army's got about 16,000 fighting vehicles – Bradleys, tanks, 113s, howitzers," said Lt. Gen. Ross Thompson, the military deputy for the Army Acquisition Executive. "At some point in time the Army's got to modernize those 16,000 fighting vehicles for the future or we are going to put Soldiers in harm's way if we don't do that."

The Army is working now to develop a new ground vehicle – the Ground Combat Vehicle – that is meant to fill the need for a more modern ground vehicle. Currently, operational requirements for such a vehicle are being developed by the Army's Training and Doctrine Command.

The Army is also focused on modernization through the "spinout" technology from the FCS program. Spinouts from FCS include such things as the non-line-of-sight launch system, the tactical unmanned ground sensors, the urban unattended ground sensors, the class-1 UAV, the small unmanned ground vehicle and the network integration kit. Those technologies will be part of the set of spinouts to the first seven infantry brigade combat teams.

Also part of Army modernization, Speakes said, is to better include the mine resistant ambush protected vehicle into the Army. That vehicle, he said, has proven combat effective and a better plan must be developed to fit it in to BCTs.

"Our challenge is clear, which is to take a vehicle that's been proven in combat and now over the course of the days and months ahead, develop a specific blueprint for how we're going to do that for the future," Speakes said.

More than a dozen Soldiers from Fort Benning test-fired an enhanced .50-caliber machine gun that allows troops to rapidly change the barrel without having to check or reset headspace and timing, officials said.

The Maneuver Battle Lab conducted its experiment on the M-2 E2 weapon at Coolidge Range. It began July 8 and ended Wednesday.

Rusty Schulten, test director and project officer for the Maneuver Battle Lab's Soldier team, said the Army identified the need for a revision to the M-2 HB, the .50-caliber machine gun now in use. The upgraded version increases safety and improves survivability, he said.

"The M-2 HB requires headspace and timing to be set, which exposes Soldiers to enemy fire for extended periods of time while performing barrel-changing procedures," Schulten said. "The M-2 E2 implements a fixed headspace and timing operating system. These modifications are intended to make the .50-caliber machine gun easier and safer to employ."

The Maneuver Battle Lab collected data and Soldier feedback, he said.

"Our only objective is to provide an unbiased evaluation of the operational effectiveness of the M-2 E2 in order to inform future acquisition decisions," Schulten said.

General Dynamics Armament and Technical Products developed the M-2 E2 12.7mm weapon. Along with the Quick Change Barrel system, the enhanced machine gun also reduces muzzle flash, making it more night-vision friendly, according to the company's Web site.

Experiment officials said no decision has been made on how soon the M-2 E2 could be ready for the battlefield.

Operational testing in hot and cold environments is under way at Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland, said Matt Pintsch, an engineer from Picatinny Arsenal, N.J., who was here as an observer.

"They have the final say on safety issues," he said. "You have to get their approval before moving on with the program."

If effective and fielded to the Army, the M-2 E2 would ease training requirements and decrease the chance for weapon malfunctions, Schulten said.

Sixteen Soldiers — 11 from the 11th Engineer Battalion and five with the 209th Military Police Detachment — took part in the testing at Coolidge Range. They fired the old and new .50-caliber machine guns at known distances and were timed on barrel changes from the tripod and vehicle mounts.

"It's pretty hot," said SSG Mark Hooks of the 209th MP Detachment, referring to the upgraded weapon. "The components are a lot better. Everything is going to go so much faster because you don't have to do headspace and timing adjustments. You're alleviating a whole lot. We went from 10 minutes to 10 seconds."

The M-2 E2 would significantly cut down on prep and readiness time in a combat zone, he said.

"People will be ready to go twice as fast," Hooks said. "If I got a squad out there getting fired at, I've got to go out and help them right away … This is probably one of the best things I've seen the military do weapons-wise."

Other Soldiers also touted the machine gun's effectiveness.

"It makes the barrel change a lot more efficient and doesn't take as much time," said SGT Fred Roberts of the 209th MP Detachment. "But the main operation of the weapon is exactly the same."

SPC Arthur Coleman of the 11th Engineer Battalion said the fixed gauges on the M-2 E2 are a major difference over the M-2 HB.

"I love it," he said of the Quick Change Barrel. "It fires just like the old weapon. But on the old weapon, you had to check the headspace and timing every time. If you're in a firefight, this will make it a whole lot easier to change the barrel out."

Soldiers test new version of M-8 bandoleer

Maneuver Battle Lab experiment assesses candidate replacement version

SPC James Mocello tosses an M-8 bandoleer during an Aug. 19 scenario in which Soldiers distributed ammunition along the perimeter of a "patrol base" under attack.

Experimentation force Soldiers tossed around the current M-8 bandoleer and a candidate replacement version during a weeklong assessment by the Maneuver Battle Lab on Fort Benning.

Eighteen members of A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, took part in the strength and dependability tests, which included a look at how easily they could access the clipped 5.56 mm ammunition from the bags. The evaluation was held Aug. 17-21 at the McKenna Urban Operations Complex.

The M-8 bandoleer is a bag with small pockets for storing cartridges and magazines, worn over the shoulder and across the chest.

Lisa Aversa, a packaging engineer from Picatinny Arsenal in New Jersey who observed the limited objective experiment, said the bandoleer now in use by the Army and Marine Corps is oblong-shaped with four pockets and made of cotton or a cotton-polyester blend. The potential replacement is all polyester, features two pockets and is produced through ultrasonic welding, which makes it more compact. Both bags hold 120 rounds of ammo.

Early in the week, the Soldiers took both bandoleers on McKenna's individual movement technique, or IMT, obstacle course. Evaluators also measured how far the Soldiers could throw the bags.

They resupplied each other during mock daytime and nighttime raids on a building and house, tossing the bandoleers through a second-floor window. In a separate scenario, they distributed ammunition along the perimeter of a "patrol base" under attack.

Large containers with fully packed bandoleers for U.S. troops have been dropped on battlefields for more than 50 years, said Niral Patel, a packaging engineer from Picatinny Arsenal.

"The ammo can be distributed quicker or carried quicker," he said. "You can throw it over your shoulder and go."

But many Soldiers from the experimentation force said the present bandoleer was sturdier than the candidate replacement version. Some also said they'd rather use other ammo-dispersal methods in combat.

"The material on the new one is brittle. It's not as tough as the old one," said SPC James Mocello. "When the new ones get tension on them, they just break off."

SGT William MacMillan said the candidate bandoleers "tear pretty easily" on the obstacle course and while throwing them around to other Soldiers. He fears "bandoleers would be (strewn) all over the place" in a firefight.

"We found better ways to distribute ammunition — especially in combat," MacMillan said. "Any time we need to refit each other, I never have used bandoleers. We normally use a rucksack or backpack because you can carry more ammo, and it's easier to distribute.

"If I had to pick, the old (bandoleer) works better. But if there needed to be a change, I don't think it matters, because we really don't use them anyway."

Soldiers aren't being told to choose the bandoleer over a backpack or rucksack, Patel said.

But he said he thinks the candidate replacement version is a better option than the current bag because the new design uses less material, which makes it easier to unload and repack small-caliber ammunition.

"Any candidate bandoleer should be as good as or better than the current one," said Jonathan Porter, a project officer for the Maneuver Battle Lab's futures branch. "Even though Soldiers might not use it all the time, it should provide equal or better capabilities. Our main objective was to assess the durability and reliability between the two to get a comparison."

Aversa said cost savings in manufacturing the candidate M-8 bandoleer could be significant because polyester is less expensive than cotton per square foot.

"We'll be looking at things we could maybe tweak in the design," she said.

Officials said any prototype changes would be based on the Maneuver Battle Lab's final report, which is due Oct. 2.

An integrated product team will ultimately decide whether the current bandoleer is replaced.

Maneuver Battle Lab evaluates redesigned buttstock for M-240B, M-249

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The Army wants to make the M-240B and M-249 automatic weapons easier to handle for U.S. military forces, particularly in urban areas.

As part of the effort, Fort Benning's Maneuver Battle Lab collected input from 10 Soldiers with 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, during a three-day experiment on the collapsible buttstocks of both machine guns. The attachments were redesigned based on recommendations and surveys taken from a Limited Objective Experiment conducted by the Maneuver Battle Lab last November.

"The main difference is the buttons are vertical instead of horizontal and you only have to push one button rather than two in order to adjust the buttstock," said Freddy Rose, project officer for the Maneuver Battle Lab's Soldier team, who directed the evaluation July 22-24 at Wagner and McKenna ranges.

He said the buttstocks are adjustable from 10.125 inches to 7 in five increments, each approximately .75 inches apart to accommodate comfort for any gunner body type.

At Wagner Range, the Soldiers fired the M-240B the first day and tested the M-249 in the second session. On Friday, they engaged individual movement technique, or IMT, and urban obstacle courses at McKenna.

"The collapsible buttstock can provide the gunner a number of comfort positions depending on the individual body and shooting style," Rose said. "It also shortens the gun by seven inches, which can make it a little easier when in urban areas."

While many Soldiers praised the design change on the M-240B — which is considered a medium machine gun — some said they prefer the standard collapsible mechanism on the M-249, a light machine gun and squad automatic weapon.

"It's easier to manipulate, less complicated to use. You don't need to have as much focus on it," said SPC Robert Paskiewicz, who's assigned to B Company. "But one button is good for the 240. It cuts down on the length of the weapon, and makes the weapon a little more balanced."

SPC Austin Mistretta, also of B Company, who routinely works with both weapons on Fort Benning's SAW range, had a similar impression.

"The 249 is a shoulder-fired weapon with a thicker, bigger stock. It's better for urban operations," he said. "I don't like the one-button (buttstock) on the 249 because you can't adjust it as quick. It's too thin. But it works better on the 240."

SSG Dino Vassilakos of C Company said the M-249 modification is negligible but the single-button buttstock significantly improves the M-240B's handling without compromising firepower.

"One button definitely makes it more shooter-friendly," he said. "It can adjust to the shooter, depending on the person's size, but the weapon fires the same as before."

After the recent data and feedback are analyzed, the Maneuver Battle Lab will provide a final report to the program manager to assist in a decision on type classification for the buttstocks, Rose said.

21st Secretary of the Army assumes duty

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — John McHugh was sworn in as the 21st Secretary of the Army Monday following his confirmation.

As Secretary of the Army, McHugh has statutory responsibility for all matters relating to the U.S. Army: manpower, personnel, reserve affairs, installations, environmental issues, weapons systems and equipment acquisition, communications, and financial management.

He is responsible for the Department of the Army's annual budget and supplemental of over $200 billion. He leads a work force of more than 1.1 million active duty, Army National Guard, and Army Reserve Soldiers, 221,000 Department of the Army civilian employees, and 213,000 contracted service personnel. He also provides stewardship over 14 million acres of land.

McHugh served more than 16 years as a member of Congress. During his service, he earned a reputation as a staunch advocate for Soldiers and their families, working tirelessly to ensure they had proper facilities, training, and the quality of life necessary to carry out wartime missions while caring for those at home.

Petraeus draws 'big picture'

MCOE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

At the Infantry Warfighting Conference Tuesday, GEN David Petraeus walked nearly 2,000 Soldiers through "the big picture," in respect to counterinsurgency operations in the region that constitutes the United States Central Command, the smallest but most volatile of the six U.S. geographic combatant commands.

Petraeus

The region has "no shortage of problems," Petraeus said. "It is indeed a world of contrasts — the richest of the rich and the poorest of the poor."

The CENTCOM region, which includes Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan and 17 other countries, is rich in energy-producing reserves of petroleum and natural gas, but it suffers from a dearth of potable water, basic services, adequate governance and economic development, Petraeus said. Those problems are compounded by the proliferation of terrorist groups, extremist elements, militias, state-based aggression, piracy,

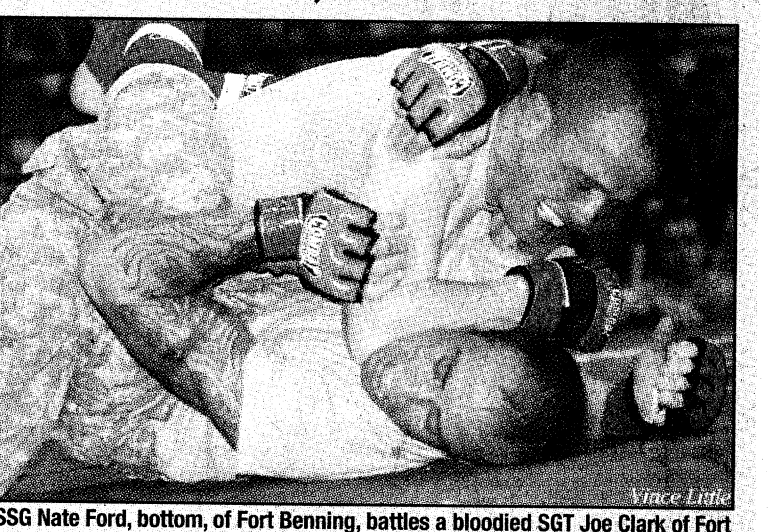
It's been settled. The Army has found its most elite fighters for 2009.



More than 300 Soldiers from around the world slugged it out over three straight days at Fort Benning's Smith Fitness Center during the fifth annual U.S. Army Combatives Tournament, and individual champions emerged Sunday in seven weight classifications — bruised, battered and bloodied in some cases.

Fort Campbell, Ky., home to the 101st Airborne Division, claimed the team title with 271 points, ahead of the 3rd Infantry Division (262) and Fort Riley, Kan. (248). Fort Benning (197) finished sixth, while the 75th Ranger Regiment (159) wound up 10th overall.

"It was the best tournament yet," said U.S. Army Combatives School director Matt Larsen. "The number of fighters and level of expertise has grown exponentially ... The fights are getting harder. We had some past champs that got beat in the prelims this time."

SSG Brandon Sayles of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, wasn't among them, however. He landed a big left hook against SGT Nathan Freeman of the 3rd Infantry Division early in the first round of their

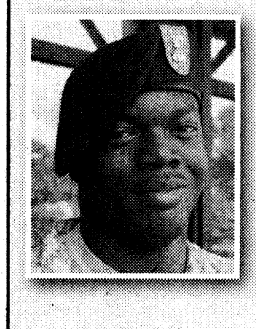
What was your best yard sale find?



One time my mom and I went to a yard sale in Junction City, Kan., to look for decorations for my bedroom. We found a candleholder that looks like a lamp and has beads around it. We also found a picture frame with blue crystals on it in the shape of flowers. It's been years but I still have them because it was a special time when I was with my mom and I no longer live with her.

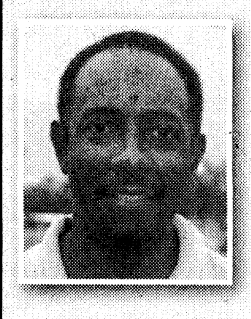
— Deneshia Barnes, Family member

I remember when I was 12 or 13 getting a pair of sunglasses that I wore pretty much nonstop for about two years. I don't have them anymore. I stop by whenever I see a yard sale but I don't usually hunt them out.

— PFC Harper Evans RIP student

As a kid, I found old toys at yard sales like Transformers. I would find those and baseball cards and basketball cards, the old collectible cards. They used to pick up a pretty penny but now they don't mean much anymore. I still collect basketball cards but I don't have time to hunt yard sales anymore.

— SGT William Dorsey 60th Engineer Company



I found a $400 Sidekick cell phone for $25 a couple weeks ago at a yard sale in North Columbus. Me, my adopted mom and her children went out. The only thing I had to do was buy a charger for it because there wasn't one. I gave it to my adopted sister and her husband because they needed a cell phone. It will be a memorable find for a while.

— Melissa Carter Network Enterprise Center

I bought a large deep fryer for $5. If I had to buy that fryer brand new it probably would've cost me at least $110. At most yard sales, people just want to get rid of stuff and a dollar is better than throwing it in the garbage. I've had it for eight years and I use it to deep fry chicken, hot wings and big things for gatherings like Super Bowl Sunday.

— Willie Kelly Army Recreation Machine Program

I served 23 years in the Army so I've been to a lot of post yard sales. I like a good bargain but I also don't want to cheat the Soldiers so if the price is too good to be true, I help them out with a few extra bucks. My wife is in child care and we found benches and art desks at a yard sale for the children to use.

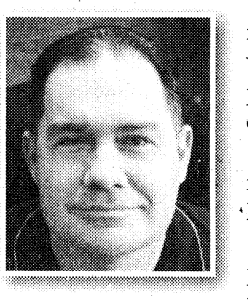
One person's trash can be another's antique oak dresser

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

My mother once found rose-colored Depression glass at a yard sale near her home. "They have no idea what they've got," she said after reading the $5 price tag for the antique set of bowls. To my mom, that swirl-patterned, pink glass was a treasure, so she took it home and displayed it in her china cabinet, telling me (much to my chagrin) that one day it would be mine.

I'm not into Depression-era glass. Truth is, I don't understand the fascination at all. But I do understand the feeling one gets from finding something special at a yard sale for a bargain price. My husband and I, and no doubt a lot of other families, will be scouring the yard sales Saturday across Fort Benning during the postwide yard sale, looking for treasures.

Some treasures are simpler than others. You may not find that set of china or antique oak dresser you always wanted, but you may find priced-to-sell furniture that needs some light work, books for your children or a gown to wear for an upcoming banquet.



I know there is plenty I could find to fill the back of my husband's Chevy. We recently bought our first home and other than an old, stuffy couch from my husband's bachelor days, we don't have much in the way of furniture. The cats don't seem to mind, but I think my parents would object to sitting on the floor when they visit. So I will be out Saturday hunting for furniture and maybe I will be lucky enough to come across a "they have no idea what they've got" find.

Organizers recommend finding an area with a high concentration of yard sales and parking your vehicle in a central location. You can wander from yard to yard without having to move your vehicle or fight the flow of traffic. The good stuff tends to go first, so be early and carry cash. Don't forget to bargain. A well-worn dresser may be marked to sell at $25, but who's to say the seller won't take $20 for it? The postwide yard sale is scheduled for 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. and is open to all.

Good luck, bargain hunters.

Army combatives: A spectacle of skill, stamina and sheer will

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Sunday's finals of the U.S. Army Combatives Championship at Smith Fitness Center marked the third time I have covered a fight tournament, and I get more hooked on the spectacle every time out.

You'd be hard-pressed to find a bigger sports fan in America than me, but I've never been much into mixed martial arts or Ultimate Fighting. And I'm downright bothered by stories of kids — some as young as 8 — being entered in tournaments by their parents under the guise of sport.

In the Army, however, combatives is a graphic, yet dazzling display of individual capabilities, skill, resolve, stamina and power. It embodies all the might and grit you'd expect to find in a U.S. Soldier.

Combatives has become part of Army doctrine. The hand-to-hand combat techniques are taught to Soldiers starting in basic training — but participants have a bonafide passion for it. It seems to get in their blood.

Army leaders laud the discipline as an effective tool for Soldiers to close with the enemy. And it can save lives, they say.

More than 300 Soldiers from around the world squared off in seven weight classifications over three days at the fifth annual tournament. With 2,500 people packed inside Smith Fitness Center, the third-place and championship matches unfolded Sunday. An announcer ushered fighters to the ring, music blaring to accompany the entrance.

That's when the real show began.

While the preliminary rounds were held under standard rules — which allow for takedowns, knees to the torso and various other submission locks — the fists, kicks and open-palm slaps to the head started flying in the semifinals and championship rounds. And so did the blood.

I got a workout just trying to keep up with them as I roamed the perimeter, getting down on my 40-year-old knees near the ring apron to angle for the best photo.

Each finals match consisted of three five-minute rounds, providing a submission or referee stoppage didn't occur first.

Watching the toll it took on the fighters, I imagine a sprint from Fort Benning's Freedom Hall to Buffalo Wild Wings in North Columbus might be easier than going three rounds against any of the Soldiers who qualified for the Army Combatives Championship.

The odds of me ever becoming a combatives participant are slim. The chances of getting LeBron James to renounce basketball are probably higher. But when the Army Combatives Championship returns to Fort Benning for its sixth installment, count me in — as a spectator.

The men and women who suit up for the fights are good. I'd never want to cross any of them in a dark alley. But I'm awfully glad they're on our side.

• A columnist warned newcomers they'd not find their new quarters attractive unless they lived in Columbus, in which case they'd find the road to Fort Benning even less attractive.

• To allow residents to vent their frustrations, the paper instituted the Knockers column, giving readers an opportunity to relieve pressure without liability to court martial. One contribution, from an anonymous knocker, said: "Someone please tell the PX officer that the war is over and he need not continue to charge war prices in the Post Exchange."

• "Fort Benning and Columbus are dependent upon each other," a columnist wrote. "Some of us of the military personnel are prone to remark something like this, 'If it wasn't for Fort Benning, where would Columbus be?' As a matter of fact, Columbus managed in some way to worry along without a military post in her vicinity for almost 100 years. Those of us who belong to the military can not afford to be too independent in this connection, because, while it is a fact that Columbus has benefited in a financial way because of the proximity to Fort Benning, the city has other sources of income and is not solely dependent upon our support for progress.

"Likewise, neither can Columbus act too independent of the financial support being received from Fort Benning because this does run up into big figures within the course of six months or a year. All of which suggests that by working together the military and civilian population of any community can be of mutual benefit."

• To fund the completion of the post's third theater, one that would seat 2,310 people, post officials urged residents to attend a movie at one of the two established theaters each night. At least 1,000 people should attend every night to raise a surplus $600 for the completion of the new theater.

SFC Rich Miranda of the 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne) took third in light heavyweight with a second-round submission triumph over SPC Guillermo Villa of the Tripler Army Medical Center in Hawaii.

"In previous tournaments, there might be a few good fighters but most were so-so," Miranda said. "Every single person that showed up for this one had some skills. There were no easy fights."

LTC Larry McCord of the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment overwhelmed SSG Colton Smith of 4th Battalion, 3rd Infantry Regiment (The Old Guard) for the cruiserweight title, forcing a submission just 22 seconds into the match.

"I felt really good," said McCord, who was runner-up a year ago after reaching the semifinals in his first two appearances. "My coach directed me through the tournament. I just followed his instructions, and things worked out."

McCord, who works as chief of the cadet health clinic for the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., compared the Army Combatives Tournament to a marathon and said he was able to conserve strength through the preliminary rounds Friday and Saturday by staying focused but loose.

"If you don't save your energy, you'll gas out in the finals," he said.

In an intense matchup at the middleweight level, SSG Jacob South of the 95th Division stopped SGT Walter Bubenzer of Fort Knox, Ky., via submission in Round 2. South was the 2007 cruiserweight champion but was unable to make last year's tournament, he said.

"My cardio felt great and my technique was good today," South said. "I waited for the right moment ... I was able to grind him down, and he tapped out."

SSG Pedro Lacerda of the 75th Ranger Regiment picked up the welterweight title with a second-round submission victory over SSG Michael Robinson of Fort Jackson, S.C. Meanwhile, the lightweight division belt went to CPT Ken Laird of Fort Carson, Colo., who earned a unanimous decision over CPT Neil Chitwood of the SROTC Battalion at Capital University in Bexley, Ohio.

In a grueling, bloody battle for the flyweight championship, SGT Joe Clark of Fort Lewis, Wash., defeated SSG Nate Ford of Fort Benning when the referee stopped the fight in the second round.

A total of 318 Soldiers, representing more than 40 installations, began the tournament Friday. The field included seven women.

"In my eyes, it's one Army, one team — no matter if you're male or female. If you're going to come out here, you're coming out here as a Soldier," said SGT Jamie Johnson of the 205th Infantry Brigade at Camp Atterbury, Ind., who competed in the lightweight division. "It's a huge rush, and builds confidence really.

"Being a female, you can't back down. I'm going to look you straight in the eye and say, 'Give it what you got.' It gives you confidence and makes you stand a little taller."

The Modern Army Combatives Program, launched in 1995, teaches hand-to-hand combat. It's a mixed martial arts form that combines Brazilian jiu-jitsu, boxing, striking, takedowns and ground-fighting techniques. Combatives also employs practices used in judo, kick boxing and Greco-Roman wrestling.

MG Michael Ferriter, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning commanding general, said combatives allows Soldiers to close with the enemy in any environment.

"It lets them engage in full-spectrum operations," he said. "They can confidently move in the streets of Iraq, the hills of Afghanistan, and clear houses if they have confrontation ... When they go in the room, they know they can handle themselves."

CSM Earl Rice, the command sergeant major of USAIC and Fort Benning, praised the discipline as a great tool within the warrior ethos.

"I will never quit," he said. "Even if faced with huge odds — an overwhelming enemy presence, being short on ammo — I still got the lethal weapon, which is the Soldier."

Larsen said skills have gotten sharper over time because combatives is now a permanent part of the Army's fabric. It's taught in basic training and is fundamental to Soldier development.

"It takes a long time to get to the level you see them doing here, but that is what's happening in the tournament," he said. "After 10 or 12 years as a Soldier, they should be an expert in this."

South, this year's middleweight champ, said he loves the sport.

"There's nothing better than something fun that gets you fit, and it can save your life at the same time," he said.

Nearly 60 CSMs from across the Army traveled to Sand Hill Wednesday to view changes to Army training, as well as existing programs that continue to need the support of senior NCOs to keep them going, such as the Army Combatives School. The director of the School, Matt Larsen, delivered a briefing on the benefits of exposing basic training Soldiers to combatives. The briefing sparked a discussion among the senior leaders on what must be done to keep the program alive. "The (CSMs) are responsible for continuing the combatives program," said CSM Alan Gibson, of the Center for Army Leadership at Fort Leavenwoth, Kan. "Combatives is a confidence builder but the reason it might go away is because we're not involved. We are the trainers for the Army and we need to support this program."

Senior NCOs take in Fort Benning training

SMA Kenneth Preston and nearly 60 command sergeants major from across the Army got a firsthand look at changes to Army training Wednesday when they ventured out to Sand Hill to observe first aid, combatives and rifle marksmanship.

The event was in conjunction with the 2009 Infantry Warfighting Conference in Columbus.

The senior NCOs began with early morning physical fitness with basic trainees from the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, 192nd Infantry Brigade. The group then headed by bus to Sand Hill's AO Law to observe Combat Lifesaver and First Aid III training with F Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, 198th Infantry Brigade, followed by combatives training with C Company, 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt. The event culminated with a trip to Malone 14 to observe advanced rifle marksmanship training with C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, 198th Infantry Brigade.

Preston said the event is "leveling the bubble" so all CSMs become aware of the changes happening in training and begin thinking ahead to the next step in Army training.

"The schoolhouse is not afraid of change," Preston said. "We've let go of some of the old ways we did business and we continue to transition because when you stop transforming, that's when you stop progressing."

Matt Larsen, director of the U.S. Army Combatives School, was on hand to brief the leaders on the importance of the combatives program.

"Imagine how big the average room in Iraq is, about 8 to 10 feet," Larsen said. "When you go through that door, if you have a weapon malfunction and you're three feet from the bad guy, are you going to take a knee and pull SPORTS or are you going to (fight) the guy?"

Larsen addressed the combatives program's plan to implement standard phases of basic, intermediate and advanced courses for Soldiers, and senior- and master-level courses for instructors.

"The more advanced courses will cover more difficult scenarios like taking down someone at a checkpoint," he said.

The new curriculum is expected to be complete in the next three months, he said.

Another change senior NCOs learned more about Wednesday was the introduction of advanced rifle marksmanship for basic training Soldiers. ARM is a step up from basic rifle marksmanship, incorporating elements of urban operations by training Soldiers to shoot from behind barricades in a prone, kneeling and standing position.

"It's more realistic," Preston said. "You want to try to replicate the environment you are going to fight in."

The CSMs had the opportunity to experience the training before moving on to a demonstration of the Close Combat Missions Capability Kit. The kit gives Soldiers a safer, more realistic option when conducting close quarters battle training, SFC Stephen Daggett, a drill sergeant with C Company, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

The kit consists of non-lethal, man-marker rounds filled with wax. When the round hits a Soldier, he's splattered with colored wax. The rounds are effective up to a range of 50 meters. The kit also comes with weapons conversions for various weapons.

British army Command Sgt. Maj. Mark Willetts, commandant of the School of Infantry, said he enjoyed the opportunity to get an American perspective on how training is going.

"There are certain elements between the U.S. and British armies that are exactly the same, and others that are completely different," he said.

Willetts said the combatives training is something the British army has yet to add but after listening to the briefing, he's convinced it should be incorporated into the curriculum.

"It will give the guys confidence and could be used as a good retention tool because many people join the British army thinking they will learn how to fight, but that is not the case," he said.

As the trip wrapped up, the Sergeant Major of the Army said he would gather feedback from the conference and observations of other leaders, which may lead to subtle tweaks and adjustments in training as time goes on.

"What's great about our Army is we don't wait until we have to do a major transformation to make the changes," he said. "We are very flexible and adaptable. Change is always ongoing, not a final destination."

Kristin.Molinaro@us.army.mil

One of the biggest benefits of the conference is it draws together senior NCOs and gives them a chance to talk one on one about tactics and techniques to make Soldiers better combat fighters, SMA Kenneth Preston said.

DOIM takes new name but 'mission has not changed'

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Fort Benning's Directorate of Information Management has become the Network Enterprise Center as part of a transformation move that shifts organizational control of all DOIMs from the garrison level to the U.S. Army Network Enterprise Technology Command and 9th Signal Command.

Beginning Thursday, the start of the new fiscal year, the post organization officially will belong to the 93rd Signal Brigade out of Fort Eustis, Va., which falls under the 7th Signal Command at Fort Gordon, Ga., said Paul Yates, the NEC director. A new sign was placed outside Building 16 last week.

"Yes, our name has changed, but our mission really has not," Yates said Tuesday. "The average Fort Benning user will see no real change or effect. The services will remain, but for individual commands, they'll have to get used to some procedural changes.

"My budget is fixed. Now, units might have to pay for extra services, depending on the nature of the requirement. If it's within the NEC service list, I can do it. But we will be more specific about what we do."

DOIMs, created by the Army in the mid-1980s, were realigned under Installation Management Command about six years ago.

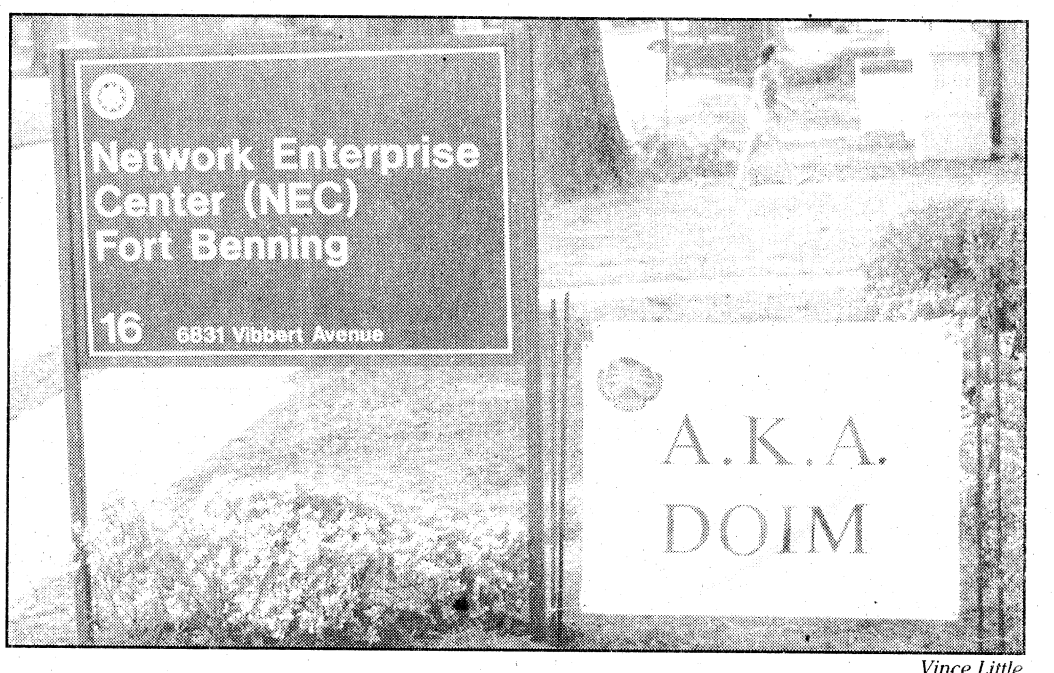
Yates said the primary difference today is that IMCOM command and control, as well as funding, is being replaced by NETCOM support.

"Our funding stream follows the command and control stream," he said. "Now, if I want to add specialized equipment on the network or change someone's credentials, it must be approved at the 7th Signal Command level."

The reorganization also is a major step in fulfilling the Army's worldwide "reach requirement," directing the establishment of the Global Network Enterprise Construct, which streamlines communications across the service and formally links all NEC outfits, Yates said.

When units deployed under the old arrangement, he said, they normally carried their own network capabilities, infrastructure and internal servers to set up communications in any fashion possible. The new setup consolidates Army signal operations under the NETCOM umbrella — with processing carried out along distribution nodes all over the world.

"The GNEC goal is no matter where you go, the capability is there to run your data someplace else," Yates said. "Pure and simple, the Army saw the network as a combat enabler that was critical to their entire operation and success. Because of that, they saw a need to consolidate all the Army's networks and develop GNEC, the construct that the network is a combat platform."



Since continental U.S. installations are used as deployment platforms, NECs were the obvious setting to launch the consolidation, he said.

"Network communication has become strategic in nature. In the past, it was tactical," he said. "If you're not picking up feeds properly, the mission could be in jeopardy."

Yates said the GNEC concept opens up fresh possibilities in many areas, including customer service, because operations can be centralized.

"That is the ultimate vision," he said. "Things will continuously get better."

As part of the NETCOM transformation, DOIM handed responsibility for records management back over to the Directorate of Human Resources. In July, visual-information tasks returned to the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

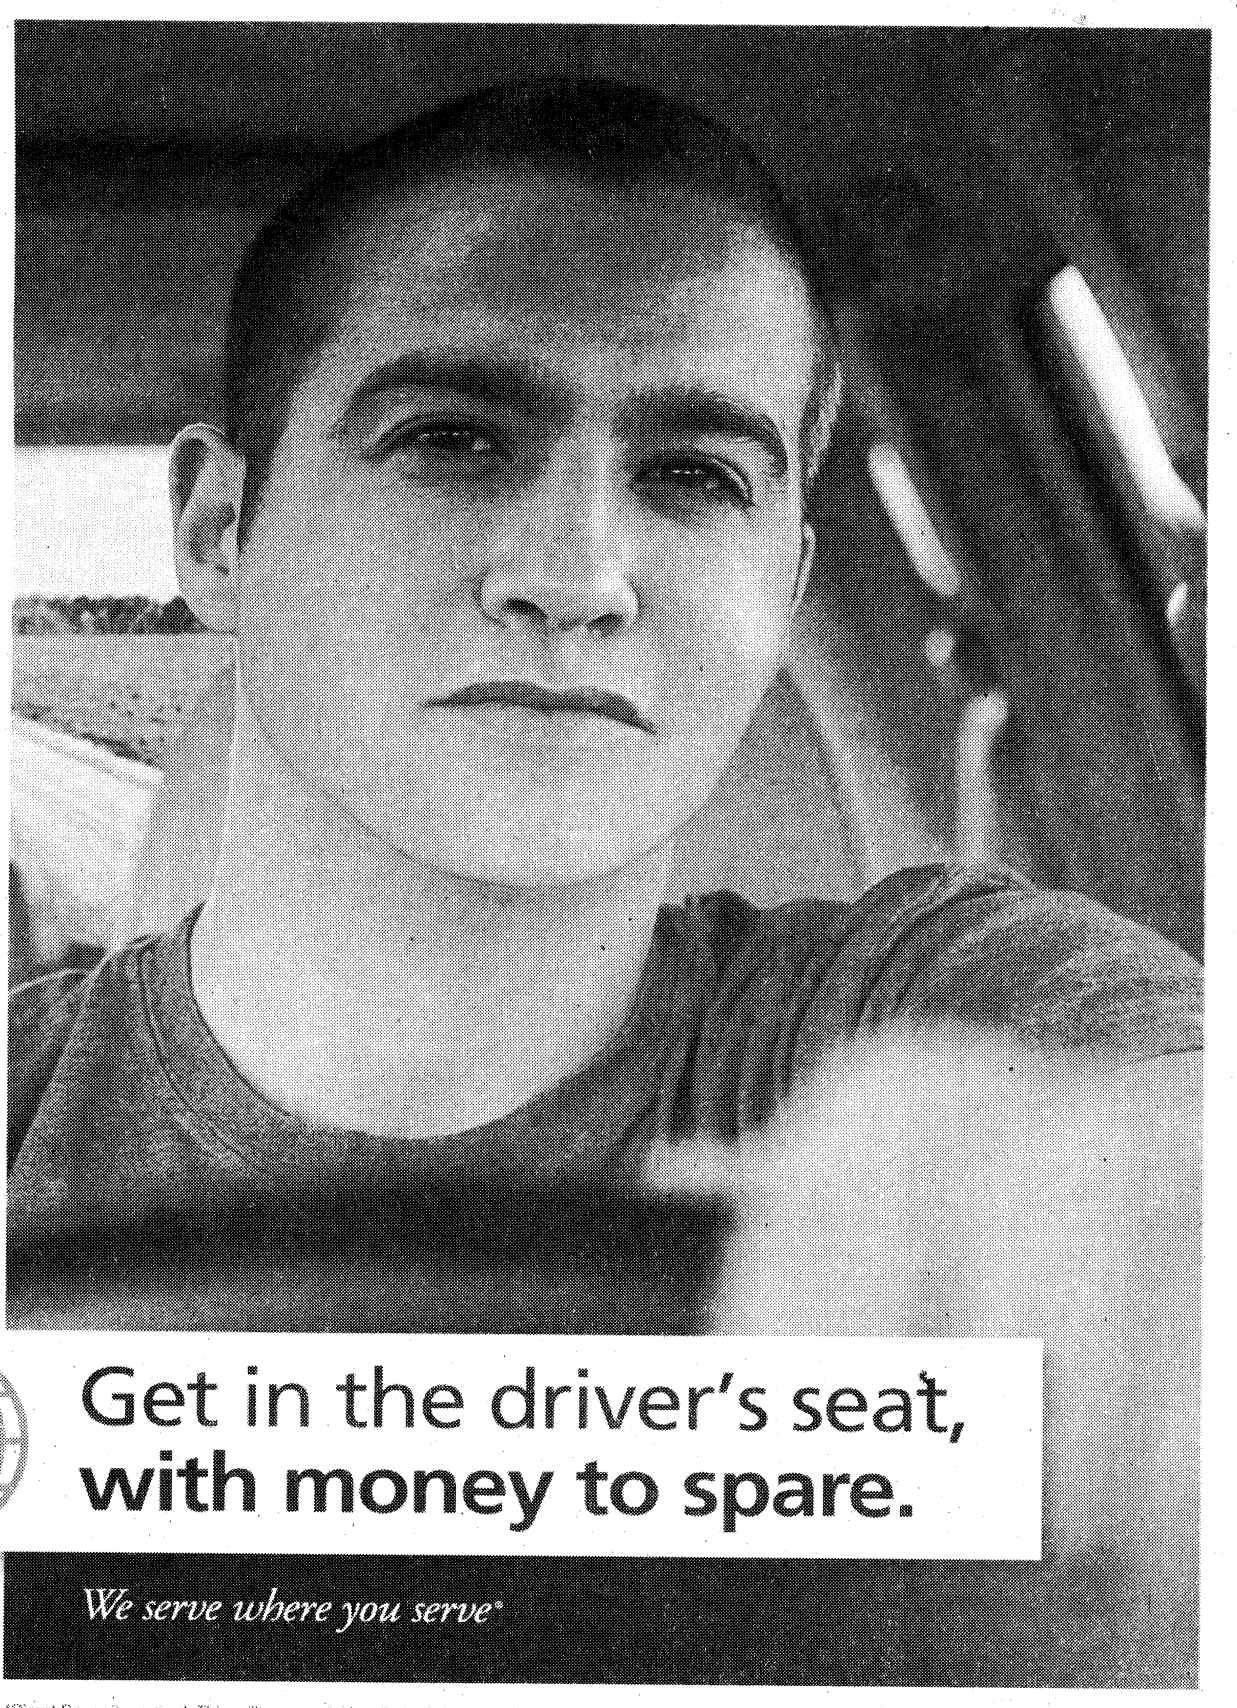
Fort Benning's Directorate of Information Management has a new name — the Network Enterprise Center. A new sign was placed outside Building 16 last week. "Yes, our name has changed, but our mission really has not," said NEC director Paul Yates.

Fort Benning's NEC might set up remote offices in Harmony Church and Sand Hill in the next two years to accommodate growth triggered by Base Realignment and Closure projects, Yates said.



In the meantime, the end product will remain the same for Fort Benning network users, he said.

"I am still going to fix computers and make telephones work to the best of my ability," he said. "My focus in life is to take care of my post and the people here. That won't change at Fort Benning."

Balance must be restored, Preston says

Bridgett Siter
MCOE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

We live in an era of persistent conflict, and that's not likely to change any time soon, Sergeant Major of the Army Kenneth Preston said Wednesday on the final day of the annual Infantry Warfighting Conference in Columbus.

Preston

The current protracted confrontation with forces who use violence to further their political and ideological agendas demands an aggressive, protracted counterinsurgency campaign, Preston said. To do so successfully, balance must be restored to a force that's overtaxed, under strength and war weary.

"Right now, the demands exceed our capabilities," Preston said. "With the current pace and tempo, many question our ability to sustain an all-volunteer force."

Aside from the stress inherent to combat, the present state of affairs is taxing military families and non-deployable assets who work overtime to compensate or support operational forces. It also accelerates the wear and tear on combat equipment and takes a toll on garrison infrastructures supporting training and housing for active and Reserve component forces. Ultimately, these stresses compound the strain on the force, Preston said.

> "TRADOC has been the shock absorber for the Army ... I've done it all, and I can tell you I worked far harder in the schoolhouse than I did in the operational unit."
> — SGM Kenneth Preston, CSM of the Army

The amount of time between deployments is far short of the two-year Army standard, he said. Current resets are insufficient, given the "redeployment, block leave, reset, train up, and gear-up" process that often gets compacted into 12 months.

And when we tell Soldiers it's time to "take a knee," Preston said, they're assigned to the schoolhouse, NTC or recruiting duty, where they'll work six or seven days a week, 10 and 12 hour days, to train Soldiers or meet the mission.

"TRADOC has been the shock absorber for the Army, and in some cases with manning at seventy percent," Preston said. "I've done it all, and I can tell you I worked far harder in the schoolhouse than I did in the operational unit."

In spite of all that, Preston was optimistic about the future of the force. With initiatives under way to grow the Army by 22,000, promising retention rates and the completion of modular reorganization and BRAC realignments within sight, the Army may well be balanced in the next few years.

To do so, we must retain good Soldiers, and Soldiers will re-enlist for three reasons, Preston said.

"A command climate that creates an atmosphere where Soldiers want to be part of the team, where they feel that they're part of something bigger than themselves," he said. "Job satisfaction. A Soldier wants to feel satisfied that he's contributing to the cause, no matter what his job is. And he wants his family to have a quality of life ... as good as or better than back home in Hometown, U.S.A."

Major commands to 'lift' and 'shift' in FY11

Anthony O'Bryant
USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS

GEN Charles Campbell, Army Forces Commanding General, discussed the two "great epiphanies" of the Army after the Iraq War during day two of the Infantry Warfighting Conference.

First, the Army came to the realization that they needed a way to replace the forces that had been generated and deployed for OIF1, Campbell said.

"The previous process the Army used to generate forces was a more linear system," he said. "Because of the requirement to repetitively deploy formations, because of a supply and demand mismatch, and because we were changing our structure to a more mobile brigade-centric Army, we developed a rotational Army Force Generation model or ARFORGEN."

First instituted in 2006, FORSCOM has continued to refine the ARFORGEN process. This process involves moving units through a cyclical process of three categories or pools — train and reset, ready pool and available pool — based on when they are expected to be available for deployment. This allows the Army to be agile and respond to changing demands for forces.

"You all live this model. You deploy, then redeploy and reset for a period of time and then get prepared to deploy again," Campbell said.

The complex process incorporates several large Army systems such as manning and equipping with other Army initiatives like re-stationing units from Europe, modularizing the force and growing the Army by approximately 65 thousand Soldiers or 18 brigades.

Campbell asked the Soldiers in attendance how many planned on being in the Army during the summer of 2011.

"There are not many people in the Army that have executed a MILCON program of this size and magnitude and that is this ambitious. Ten billion dollars and a host of projects are unfolding all across our Army's footprint, not the least of which is here at Fort Benning," Campbell said.

Eight major commands, including Forces Command, Army Materiel Command, Training and Doctrine Command, Installation Management Command and Human Resources Command are going to "lift" and "shift" during fiscal year 2011, and all will do so without a loss in capabilities to provide coherent command and control.

Although some strategic decisions will need to be made for force structure in Afghanistan, FORSCOM expects to deploy roughly 52 brigades next year.

"And unless I can get a presidential waiver for more than 40 years of service, I'm going to be on a veranda in Louisiana," Campbell said.

The "second great epiphany" for the Army was "operationalizing the National Guard and Reserves" or changing roles from a strategic reserve to integrated components of an operation, he said.

"Without question we have relied on our National Guard and Reserves during this persistent conflict, and they have stood up and delivered," Campbell said. "More than 75 thousand citizens Soldiers are mobilized on any given day."

Campbell ended his presentation with quote from scripture, saying, "Let us not grow tired of doing good, for in due time we shall reap our harvest, if we do not give up."

He encouraged Soldiers in the audience to stay focused on their mission in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere around the world, because he said it allows people from other nations to see hope where there was once only despair.

Phenix City gets POW/MIA monument

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

Members of the tricommunity unveiled the third memorial to prisoners of war and those missing in action Saturday at the Phenix City Amphitheater along the banks of the Chattahoochee River in front of hundreds of families, veterans and Soldiers. The memorial completes a project begun by the Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association more than five years ago to bring POW/MIA monuments to Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City.

The creation of the monuments "underscores the value we place on those who defend our freedoms and protect our shores," said CSM Earl Rice, Fort Benning's senior NCO. "Their stories encourage and inspire us. The devastating effects of what they endured may last a lifetime."

The event began with the sixth annual Tricommunity POW/MIA Motorcycle Freedom Ride from the National Infantry Museum to the amphitheater by more than 100 motorcycle riders. Key speakers at the event included Rice, CSM Matthew Walker, command sergeant major of the Infantry School and president of the Sergeants Major Association, and Phenix City councilmember Max Wilkes. On hand to unveil the monument alongside the speakers were MG Michael Ferriter, Bill Heard and De Anderson. Cadets with the Russell County High School Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps program put together the missing in action remembrance table followed by a 21-gun salute by the 198th Infantry Brigade and the playing of Taps by the Infantry Center Band.

Houston Stephens, a veteran who served five tours in Vietnam and resident of Phenix City, said he was glad to see a POW/MIA monument finally erected in his city.

"We can never forget," said Stephens, who participated in the freedom ride. "I don't think you can move forward without looking back."

The 8-foot-tall black granite monument is engraved with the POW/MIA flag on the front and POW/MIA statistics for each conflict from World War I to operations in Somalia. Sitting atop the monument is a sculpture of an eagle breaking free of its chains.

The monuments are exactly alike down to the smallest detail, with the exception of the dedication dates etched into the granite, said Lynn Evans, a memorial consultant with Columbus Monument Company, responsible for creating the monuments.

The first monument was erected near the Government Center in downtown Columbus in 2004. The second was installed a year later at Sacrifice Field on Fort Benning. The Phenix City monument, originally planned for 2006, took an additional three years to construct as the Sergeants Major Association raised money to finish the project, Walker said.

Photos by Kristin Molinaro
CSM Matthew Walker stands next to the newest POW/MIA monument in the tricommunity area. The third monument was unveiled outside the Phenix City Amphitheater Saturday. The monuments were a project of the Sergeants Major Association, of which Walker is president.

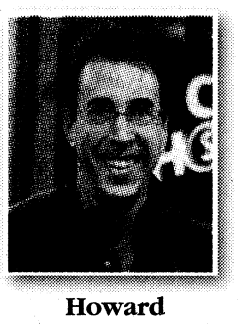
The monuments do not contain POW/MIA statistics for the current conflict, but Walker said there are plans to add them in the future once the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan conclude. Walker said the intent of the monuments is to raise awareness.

"I hope when people walk by this monument it will catch their eye and make them think for a minute about our POWs and MIAs," Walker said.

Since World War I, more than 10,000 American service members have been listed as missing in action. Thousands more have been incarcerated as prisoners of war, according to the Sergeants Major Association statistics.

CNN radio, TV personalities to visit Fort Benning

Vince Little
THE BAYONET



Consumer advocate Clark Howard and HLN morning TV personality Robin Meade will visit Fort Benning Friday for a series of radio and TV tapings.

Meade

The centerpiece will be a town hall — scheduled for 1 to 2:30 p.m. at the National Infantry Museum — focused on providing military families with personal finance advice. The forum is open to the public.

Kawain McClarin, a CNN spokeswoman, said the venue was picked because of Fort Benning's heritage and the "tremendous sacrifice of those who trained and served there."

"To be honest, we very much wanted Clark and Robin to be at a large post, where they could connect with a considerable population of active-duty personnel," she said. "The goal is to answer questions which could benefit all those serving in the military, and Fort Benning serves as a great representation for the entire armed forces population.

Howard

"The National Infantry Museum ... allows for an open atmosphere for both Army personnel and the general public."

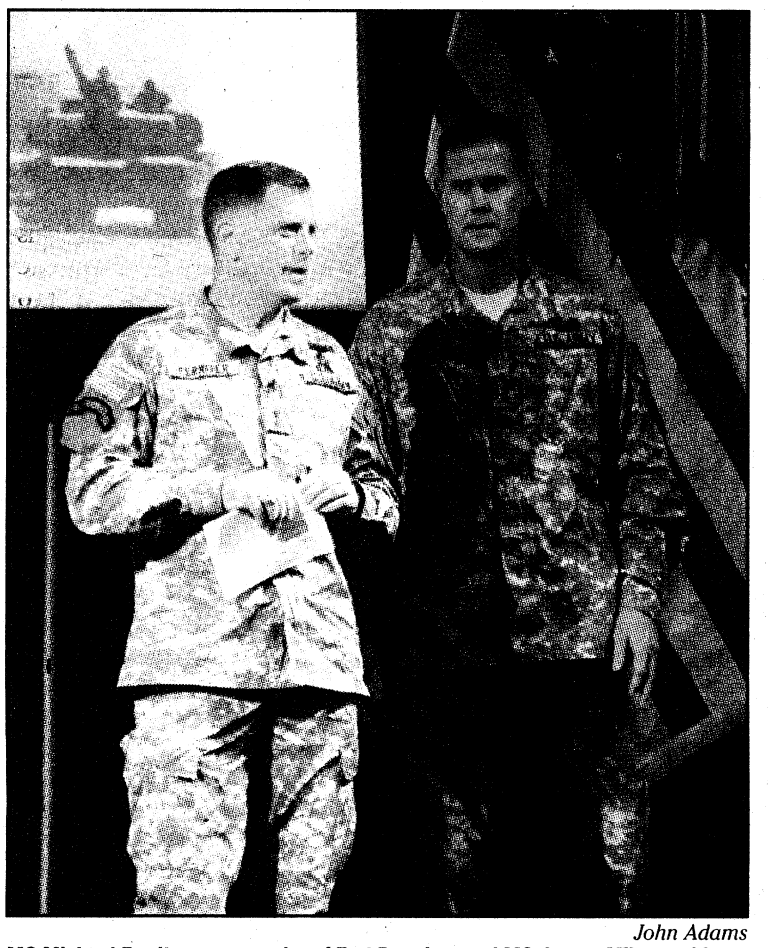
Meade is anchor of HLN's morning show, Morning Express with Robin Meade, while Howard hosts The Clark Howard Show, a nationally syndicated radio program.

From 10:30 a.m. to noon Friday, Howard is scheduled to tape part of his talk show inside the National Infantry Museum. He'll also interview Meade during a guest spot beginning at 10:50 a.m.

Meade will stop by the Fort Benning Post Exchange from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. to meet Soldiers and families and sign copies of her new book, Morning Sunshine! How to Radiate Confidence and Feel it Too.

In the book, released Sept. 10, Meade tells how she conquered her fear of public speaking while offering readers a four-step approach to building confidence.

"It's about Robin's struggle to overcome paralyzing anxiety and the tips that helped her do so," McClarin said. "Many people who suffer — even high-profile people — are closet sufferers. Robin wanted to put a face on the problem and provide tips that worked for her."



During the television town hall, Howard will answer audience questions while Meade works the crowd.

"Clark will address unique financial issues for military families (and) offer guidance," McClarin said.

After the shoot, Meade will gather material for use in her "Salute to Troops," a Morning Express segment in which she highlights letters, e-mail, photos and video messages from loved ones to their deployed family members.

Later that afternoon, Howard also will interview two or three families for profile pieces on the financial strain and budget challenges they face during a deployment.

McClarin said the town hall footage is set to air in November, with elements on Morning Express and a half-hour special on HLN's "Clark Howard" over Veterans Day weekend and Thanksgiving weekend.

MG Michael Ferriter, commander of Fort Benning, and MG James Milano address thousands at the 2009 Infantry Warfighting Conference.

MCOE: Change to be 'intensive'

construction under way on Fort Benning's Harmony Church and another $2 billion earmarked for BRAC-related growth across the installation, Fort Knox and Fort Benning are in the midst of a "giant team-building event," said Ferriter, who will pass responsibility as chief of Infantry to COL Bryan Owens, currently his deputy commander, when Ferriter becomes the first Maneuver Center commander next month. Milano will retain his position as chief of Armor and commander of Fort Knox until the physical move is complete.

With more than 800,000 U.S. Soldiers deployed around the globe, the Infantry and Armor centers cannot afford to lose sight of their first mission during the "intensive" transformation process, Ferriter said. That is, to train ready, adaptive Soldiers for an Army at war. When the maneuver center is fully operational, more than 50 percent of all Soldiers will take initial training at Fort Benning, he said, and all Infantry and Armor officers will pass through the Basic Officer Leader Course and the Captain's Career Course.

"And when you take into consideration that in a year or two every Armor and Infantry staff sergeant will come through here," Ferriter said, it's easy to see how the Maneuver Center will "shape, steer and move the Army."

"That is the bottom line," Ferriter said of the anticipated troops-in-training increase from nearly 116,000 annually to 144,000, "That's where the rubber meets the road."

In spite of the "complexity and scope of the transformation," Milano said, "there will be no degradation of quality or quantity of trained Soldiers during the move." The process is complicated by Fort Knox's simultaneous transformation to the Human Resources Center of Excellence.

More than 6,500 troops are bound for Knox, even as the Armor School prepares to ship out 200 tanks, 10,000 small arms, 41 programs of instruction, 50 hands-on training systems and 4,500 cadre, Milano said.

The first of the 41 courses will end at Fort Knox in October 2010 and resume at Fort Benning in January 2011. The remaining courses will follow suit with just 90 days to wrap, pack, move and resume instruction.

"You have to remember, there are people involved — families. We have to do this right," Milano said. "It's going to be tough, but we have the right people leaning forward to make it happen."

Milano and Ferriter opened the annual Infantry Warfighting Conference at the Trade Center just down the road from Fort Benning, where top Army leaders have been meeting every year for more than half a century to confer on all matters Infantry-centric. The conference ended Wednesday.

Petraeus: Stability operations keys to success

smuggling and drug trafficking. Add to that the "youth bulge" — 45 percent of the population is between the ages of 15 and 29, inadequately educated or educated in extremism — and you have "a fertile field for extremism."

Though violence in Afghanistan is 60 percent greater this year than last, and concerns in Iran remain "huge," recent progress in Iraq and Pakistan has been "heartening," Petraeus said — "still fragile and still reversible," but less so than last year at this time.

"Clearly we have our work cut out for us in this region," he said.

Full spectrum counterinsurgency operations are key to success, but countering terrorism requires more than an increase in the number of counter-terrorist forces, Petraeus said. "Full spectrum" must include stability operations.

"Wherever you are on the spectrum (of violence), you are going to have to do some measure of offense, defense and stability operations," he said. "You cannot forget that last category. You have to do it all.

"We're trying to replace the great game, as it's called, — the competition for power and influence between the great powers around the world — with a broad partnership, one that is founded on the common interests against extremism coming out of Afghanistan and Pakistan and also the illegal narcotics industry," he said.

Petraeus reminded his audience, most of them combat veterans, that the surge in Iraq was successful because it went beyond the troop build-up in that area and "embraced a comprehensive approach" to COIN operations.

"The surge was really about big ideas, about employing certain counterinsurgency concepts. The biggest idea was we had to secure the population and serve them, and we had to be seen doing both if they were to support us and our Iraqi partners," he said, referring to the 77 joint security stations established in the heart of Baghdad. U.S. forces went where the violence was greatest, Petraeus said, and "lived among the people," signaling their commitment to establish a secure and stable environment."

A comprehensive "big picture" approach also requires a concerted focus on identifying "reconcilables and irreconcilables" among the insurgent population, he said.

"You can't clear and leave — you have to clear and hold," he said. "You get your teeth in the enemy and you don't let go. That means finding the irreconcilables, capturing, killing or running them off. That's our job. That's reality.

"But you cannot kill or capture your way out of an industrial strength insurgency," he said. "You've got to figure out who are the reconcilables are — who are the bad guys you can get on your side. They have to be reintegrated."

These lessons learned in Iraq "do not hold us prisoner in Afghanistan," Petraeus said. "You cannot take what we did in Iraq and import it wholesale."

"We'll take these (lessons) as they are applicable, and let them guide us with a nuanced approach to local situations in (Afghanistan) that are different from district to district and province to province," he said.

This nuanced approach does not apply in respect to "truth" and Army values, Petraeus said. Here, there is no gray area.

"The only thing that works is the brutal truth, and being first with the truth. No spin, no lipstick on pigs," he said. Where there is a "results problem," there must not be a "message problem."

"Don't try to modify reality," he said.

The reality in Afghanistan is that the sudden increase in violence there is the result of "our going on the offense," Petraeus said. "The violence there is a heck of a lot less than the height of violence in Iraq. Still, a 60 percent increase over this time last year is a significant concern. It reflects the resilience and growth of the Taliban."

Afghanistan will take a sustained, substantial commitment, he said. "It's serious, but doable, as you've heard it said."

Petraeus urged his audience to recognize their place in "the big picture." From time to time, he said, Soldiers fall victim to the "Ground Hog Day syndrome" — each day seems to be a repeat of the last.

"We're all afflicted with it. If you're the CENTCOM commander, you'll occasionally suffer from it. One day is just like the last and the next day will be the same," he said. "You have to remind yourself that you matter. Your leadership, your professional competence, your example — they matter. The qualities you possess as a leader — they really do make a difference in the overall efforts, in the big picture. Each of you matters greatly."

Security assistance: Needs change in Army mindset

American Soldier's mindset toward security force assistance and he encouraged Soldiers to partner at all echelons with the Afghan national security forces. If the U.S. advisory mission in Afghanistan fails it is the Afghans who will live those consequences, said Caldwell, citing a story from a deployed lieutenant who recalled an Afghan village that refused U.S. aid because the Taliban threatened to return and kill the villagers once the U.S. pulls out of the area.

"It's imperative for us to develop the Afghan security forces with sufficient capability to protect their people, their government and their borders," he said. "We must leave the Afghan people with enduring capability and force generation capacity for security or they will lose the means to resist (the Taliban) when we leave in the end. It's not (about) how well we can secure them in the short term, but rather how well we prepare them and assist them for the long term."

In building Afghan security forces, Caldwell said there were three conditions for reaching a desirable end state: the force should be able to provide reasonable security, be founded on a rule of law and be sustainable. But Caldwell cautioned Soldiers not to attempt to "Americanize" Afghan forces by imposing rules that impact their culture.

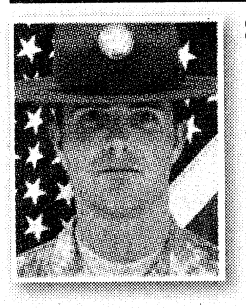
"As we establish training standards and conduct the training of foreign security forces, we need to keep in mind that an American solution may not be culturally acceptable to the local population or any foreign culture," he said. Caldwell encouraged Soldiers to build a rapport with Afghan security forces and foster relationships that build trust.

Key elements that are paramount to be successful in the advisory mission include a change in mindset, flexible brigades, relationships built on trust and being prepared to share intelligence. When considering sharing information, "don't ask yourself, should I do it, ask yourself why can't I do it?" he said. "As General (Stanley) McChrystal said in his guidance 'share the same battle rhythm and information, integrate them into your command and control structures. We must be prudent with OPSEC but we also must realize the need to embrace the development of these forces,'" Caldwell said.

"It's not just sharing intelligence, it's the mindset that tells you how critically important it is that you operate as one entity and develop that trust between yourselves. Our strength comes from our partnerships — and it's about people," he said.

"This is the method and the tools that will allow us to get after what we need done in that battle space in order to create room for national forces to secure the population and create police," said MG Michael Ferriter, commanding general of Fort Benning.

Following his speech, Caldwell took questions from the audience and was presented a 'Follow Me' statue mounted to a brick from Fort Benning's Building 4, the future site of the Maneuver Center of Excellence.



CSM Daniel Dailey, senior NCO for 4th Infantry Division, said Caldwell's speech re-emphasized the concepts 4th Infantry Division has integrated into its ranks and hopes it will lead to more resources being available. "We've been living it and training it for some time now," said Dailey, who has one brigade combat team training for the advisory mission, one currently deployed to Afghanistan and another brigade that recently returned home.

Dailey said he expects the advisory mission to be the culminating effort in Iraq that will help security forces transition and take complete control for the country's defense. More work will be needed in Afghanistan but Dailey said the concepts discussed at the conference may make a big difference in the country.

The Taliban has had and will continue to have a foothold in Afghanistan for a long time but the U.S. can make an impact by focusing on training and building the confidence of the security forces, he said.

Personal injury lawsuits disallowed

CPT Robert J. Rauckhorst Jr.
OSJA

In 1946, Congress enacted the Federal Torts Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. 1346(b), 2671-2680. The FTCA, with certain exceptions, permits private citizens to sue the federal government for injuries caused by the negligent or wrongful acts of any federal employee acting within the scope of his or her employment.

The main exception to liability under the FTCA is known as the Feres Doctrine. The Feres Doctrine was born from Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135 (1950), a case that dealt with a lawsuit filed against the federal government for injuries to a service member. In Feres, the Supreme Court ruled that the federal government was not liable under the FTCA for injuries to a service member, where the injuries were incident to military service. This decision became known as the Feres Doctrine.

Courts have used the Feres Doctrine as a bar to lawsuits involving injuries to service members that occurred during military training and exercises, in military barracks, and during military-sponsored recreational activities, both on and off post. The Feres Doctrine has also acted as a bar to lawsuits involving injuries to service members resulting from traffic accidents, aviation accidents, and for medical malpractice committed by medical care providers employed by the federal government.

It is important to understand the Feres ,Doctrine applies only to injuries to service members, not to non-military family members, or civilians. If a non-military family member or civilian is injured by the negligent or wrongful act of a federal employee acting within the scope of his or her employment, that individual may file a lawsuit under the FTCA against the federal government for their injuries.

When determining whether the Feres Doctrine bars a lawsuit, federal courts look to answer one question: Was the injury incurred incident to military service? If so, then the claim is Feres-barred.

Courts consider a number of factors when determining whether an injury was incurred incident to military service. These include: The duty status of the service member, the location of the incident, the nature of the activity, the benefit of military service and whether the service member was subject to military discipline at the time of the injury.

Unfortunately, over time, it has become clear that the Feres Doctrine cannot be explained by a set of clearly defined rules. If it could be, application of the Feres Doctrine would produce consistent and predictable results. However, that is simply not the case. Although the federal courts generally agree as to what factors to apply when determining whether an injury was incurred incident to military service, the courts fail to apply those factors in the same way. Because of this, similar cases could be decided differently from one court to another.

Despite many attempts to overturn Feres, the Supreme Court has refused to do so. Today, the Feres Doctrine is alive and well. Although some members of Congress are interested in reconsidering Feres, especially as it relates to malpractice, any Congressional changes to the Feres Doctrine are still many years away.

Director stresses need for Soldier feedback

John Adams
Don Sando, director of Capabilities Development and Integration for the Maneuver Center of Excellence briefs leaders Monday at the 2009 Infantry Warfighting Conference in Columbus.

Sue Ulibarri
USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS

"Meeting the needs of Soldiers in the fight is the top priority for senior Army leaders, but understanding those needs requires two-way communication," said Don Sando, director of the Capabilities Development and Integration Directorate for the Maneuver Center of Excellence, during the first round of briefings Monday at the Infantry Warfighting Conference in Columbus.

"Maintaining the battlefield primacy of our Soldiers and the formation in which they fight is our highest concern," Sando said.

Sando's organization serves as the Army's agency to develop and integrate the latest technology and concepts to maneuver troops on the ground.

"Feedback from the field, from our Soldiers at the fire team and squad level is who we need to hear from in order to learn how we can improve their lethality and success in the fight," he said.

CDID is composed of the Concepts Development Division, Soldier Requirement Division, Mounted Requirement Division, Training and Doctrine Command Capability Managers and the Maneuver Battle Lab. Together these organizations support the operational Army, through developing and improving capabilities via doctrine, training, leader development, materiel, organizations, personnel or facilities.

One of CDID's main efforts during the last four months has been the Ground Combat Vehicle modernization effort, said Jeff Arneson, a strategic planner for CDID. There are several attributes the future GCV must possess, Arneson said, and as with all new systems there will be tradeoffs due to resource constraints.

"Force protection and tactical mobility are two of the most important aspects, however, and will not be traded away," he said.

The current plan is to have the GCV ready for fielding in 2015 and ready for deployment by 2017.

"If there is a way we can do things better, I want to hear from you," said Sando, who challenged those in the packed auditorium to bring their ideas, concerns and feedback to CDID. "We are a team of teams, and from every level we need to ensure the Soldier is the best trained and equipped 'weapon' our Army has in order to do the hard job we ask of him," he said.

The organization reaches out to the Army via a variety of methods, most recently, it has established social media avenues such as Twitter and Flickr.

"We maintain contact with the field through a variety of venues — industry days, Strykernet, warfighter forum conferences," he said, "so we can put out the latest developments, technologies and concepts we've got; but these venues also make for great opportunity to hear from the field."

"I can tweet you our latest technologies, and you can tweet me back with what's working and what's not working. I'd like 1,000 tweets by the end of today," Sando told the audience of Soldiers and leaders. "We want to know what we can do to train and equip you for the fight."

Sando received the feedback he requested as conference attendees asked questions regarding the implementation of an adverse weather manual, the importance of nonlethal capabilities, and improving lethality of ground fighting vehicles and supporting Army Force Generation.

"We're actively addressing each of these areas, moving forward and getting the Soldiers on the ground what they need whether it be equipment, training or doctrine," he said.

Former ambassador discusses State's counterterrorism efforts

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

The former State Department coordinator for counterterrorism discussed lingering challenges in Iraq and Afghanistan Wednesday, saying it's important not to abandon political and security objectives in order to avoid a similar fate that occurred in post-Vietnam.

Former Ambassador at Large Dell Dailey gave an hourlong presentation and answered questions from the audience to kick off the final day of the Infantry Warfighting Conference.

Even when the final 50,000 U.S. troops leave Iraq sometime in 2011 and full control is turned over to the national government, all types of conflict will remain, Dailey said.

"It won't be a box of chocolates," he said. "But we'll be in Afghanistan much longer than expected."

The U.S. counterinsurgency guide was established in January 2006. As the principal adviser to the secretary of state on international counterterrorism issues, Dailey took a leading role in developing coordinated strategies to defeat terrorists abroad and secure the cooperation of international partners.

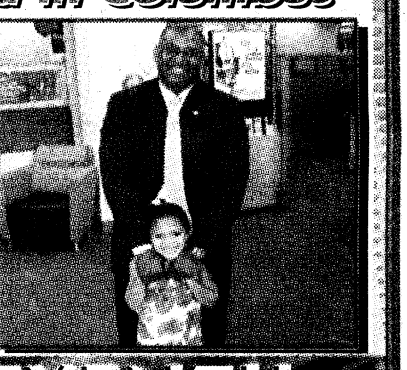
Counterinsurgency policy is founded on political, economical, security and informational development, but "it's the society of the host nation that has to rally, not the U.S.," he said.

"It's not just intelligence from the battlefield," he said. "It's influencing the country, international community and the enemy."

He said counterinsurgency success requires the State Department to seek support from host-nation dissident groups, nongovernmental and private organizations, the private sector and media.

Dailey praised the work of Provincial Reconstruction Teams and the boost provided by the U.S. military.

For the past six years, the Army has played a major role in Iraqi police training, an endeavor the Department of Defense isn't necessarily suited for, Dailey said.



He said efforts are under way to allow the State Department to pick up a larger chunk of that mission in both Iraq and Afghanistan, which will enhance the U.S. exit strategy.

The American Embassy in Baghdad, the State Department's largest on the planet, might be downsized in coming years, but U.S. objectives will not be deserted, Dailey said.

"We have the potential for a success story in Iraq," he said, "but we've got a helluva fight left in Afghanistan, not just militarily but for the State Department, too."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN A. NASH

Burress begins sentence

Plaxico Burress began a two-year prison sentence Tuesday. Burress, a former wide receiver for the New York Giants, was sentenced and immediately taken into custody.

He accidentally shot himself in the thigh at a nightclub last fall, and agreed to a plea deal in August.

The expectation is he will serve about 20 months and be on two years of probation after his release.

Martin extends lead

Mark Martin went into the first race in the Chase for the Sprint Cup as the points leader. He sealed that spot for another week with a win at New Hampshire Motor Speedway Sunday. It was his first win in New Hampshire.

Martin leads Denny Hamlin and three-time cup winner Jimmie Johnson by 35 points.

The second race of the Chase will be at 2 p.m. Sunday at Dover International Speedway. Coverage is on ABC.

College Top 25 rankings

It's no surprise the Florida Gators remain atop The Associated Press Top 25 rankings. Texas is second, followed by Alabama, Ole Miss and Penn State to round out the top five.

Falling out of the Top 25 this week are Georgia Tech and Utah.

USC and BYU had tough losses last weekend and dropped to 12th and 19th, respectively.

49ers file charges

The San Francisco 49ers filed tampering charges against the New York Jets regarding draft pick Michael Crabtree. Jets head coach Rex Ryan confirmed the charges Monday.

Crabtree was selected 10th overall in the draft in April, and is still not signed with the team. The 49ers offered him a five-year, $20 million contract, with $16 million of it guaranteed.

The 49ers forfeited their fifth-round pick in the 2008 draft because they were caught tampering with Chicago linebacker Lance Briggs.

Can Tiger do it?

Hopefully the rain will hold off through Sunday at East Lake Golf Club in Atlanta. The Tour Championship will finish up Sunday.

Tiger Woods goes into the final FedEx Cup event leading the points.

Coverage will be on NBC and The Golf Channel.

Don't forget that active-duty, retired and reserve military and dependents with valid military IDs get free admission to The Tour Championship. Free refreshments and drinks are available through Sunday. Shuttles and parking will be located at Turner Field.

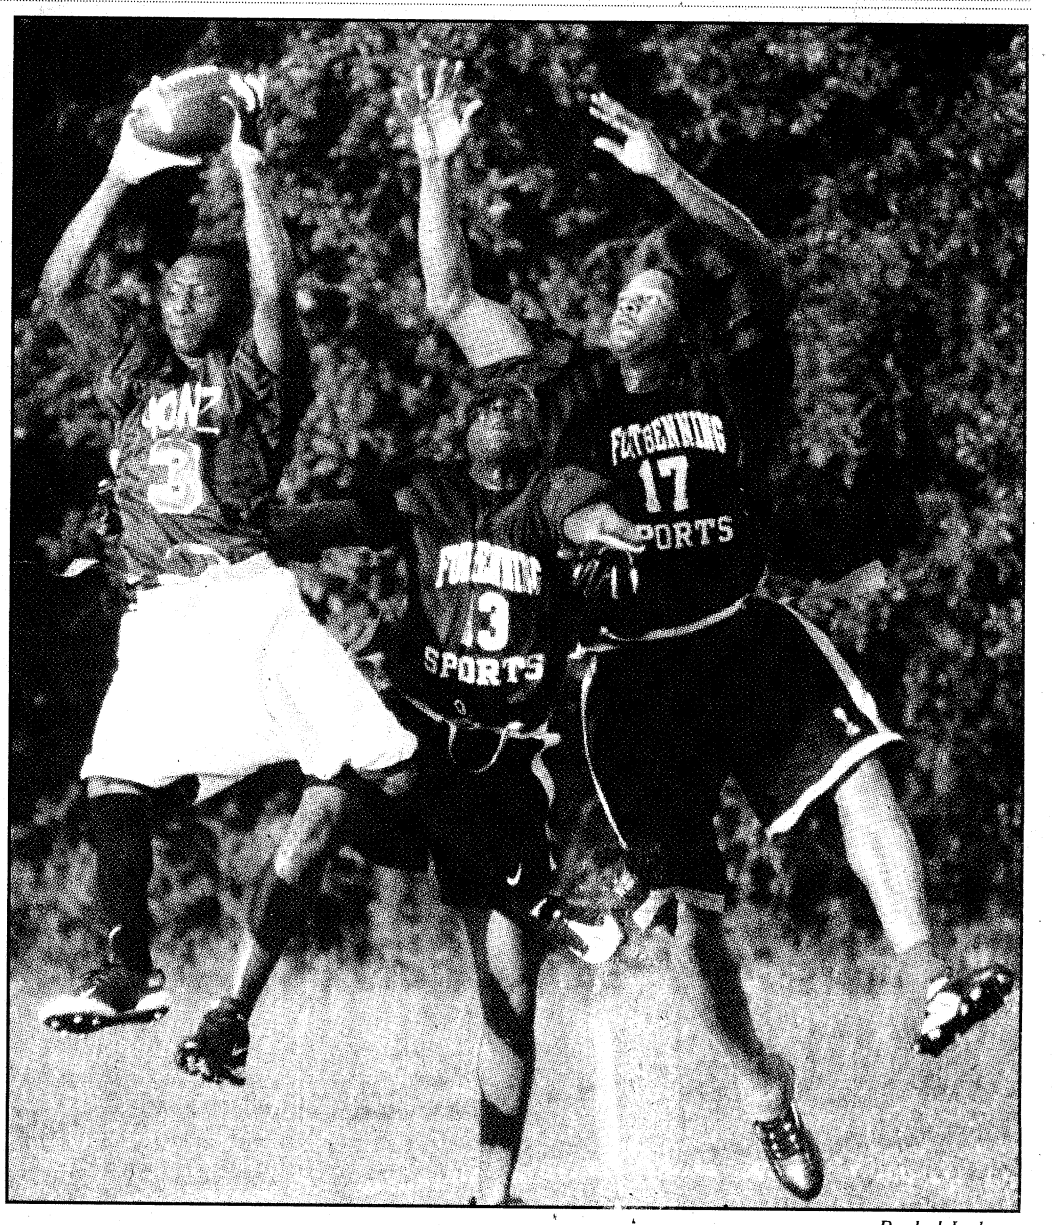
Goonz win in overtime, 7-0

Rachel Jackson
THE BAYONET

After two halves of scoreless football, the Goonz of the 598th Maintenance Company scored in overtime to defeat the Gators of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment 7-0 Monday at Essebagger Field.

Each team had scoring opportunities in regulation play, but penalties, execution and turnovers plagued both teams forcing the game to be decided in overtime.



The two teams flipped a coin to begin overtime with the Goonz winning the toss and electing to go on offense first. Starting from the Gators' 10-yard line, Lamar Williams gained 5 yards on the first two plays moving the Goonz down to the 5-yard line. On third down, Williams handed off to Willie Miller for the touchdown. Williams passed to Greg Woulard for the one-point conversion to put the Goonz ahead, 7-0.

The Goonz defense did their part in overtime keeping the Gators out of the end zone on their offensive possession to seal the victory.

"We did what we had to do to win," said Goonz' coach Beshean Hollis. "Our defense always shows up when we need it. Right before overtime, I told the team to put pressure on them and play good defense."

"We started off the game rough with offensive letdowns," Collins said. "We had miscues on offense. It should have easily been 14-0 at the end of the game, but we had a couple of plays we should have executed and gave the other team a chance to win."

Up next for the Goonz is a game against E Company, 1st Battalion, (Airborne) 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment Wednesday at Essebagger Field.

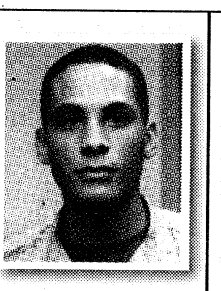
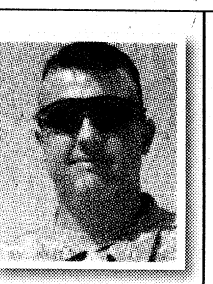
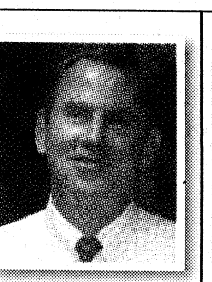
Hawks soar to 4-0 with 52-31 victory

Rachel Jackson
THE BAYONET

The Hardaway High School Hawks (Region 1-AAAA) soared to a 52-31 victory over the Lee County High School Trojans (1-AAAA) Friday at Kinnett Stadium.







The Hawks scored on their second possession of the game with quarterback Marcus Smith throwing a 55-yard touchdown pass to Ray Gardner. Evan Scott kicked the extra point and with seven minutes remaining in the first quarter Hawks led 7-0. Smith added an 11-yard touchdown pass to Austin Scott and a 51-yard touchdown pass to James Triplett to put the Hawks up 21-0 with 2:49 remaining in the first quarter. Lee County answered with a 36-yard pass from Justin Walker to James Terrell to cut the lead

Faith cross-country team trains for first meet

Rachel Jackson

Sixth-grader Maize Galfande and eighth-grader Percy Franklin run the last stretch of their second lap around Stewart-Watson Field Tuesday at cross-country practice. The Faith Middle School cross-country team will take on Brookstone Schools for its first meet of the season at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday at Brookstone.

Rachel Jackson
THE BAYONET

The Faith Middle School cross-country team has been running three times a week since Aug. 25 to prepare for Wednesday when they take on Brookstone School for their first meet this season.

"We are working on building the kids' confidence," said head coach Melissa House. "We have a lot of first-time runners and there are some kids who just don't know yet or think of themselves as runners. I think once we compete for the first time, they will make that connection."

Every practice includes a warm-up and cool-down jog and two laps around Doughboy Stadium or Stewart-Watson Field. The goal for the 30-person team is to run two miles without stopping because that's how long the race is, House said.

Although there is more work to be done, House said she has seen progress in the team's running abilities in the first month.

At first, not everyone was able to jog to the workout, but now the team is able to jog there without a problem.

"The great thing about running is that it's a lifetime sport and you can do it anywhere as long as you have water, running shoes and a safe place to run," said House who began running after high school to train for swimming.

Anyone can run as long as they stay focused on running, said sixth-grader Maize Galfande.

"You can't focus on being hungry or tired," she said. "If you do, you won't make it to the finish line."

Maize, new to cross-country, began running with her parents before she joined.

"I was always better at sprinting than running long distances," she said. "I have noticed a difference in my running in the past month. It's a good feeling to know I can run long distances and keep a steady pace. In cross-country running, you have to be able to motivate yourself to keep going."

The thought of the finish line is what keeps Tristen motivated through races.

"Even though I am tired at the end of the race, it's a good feeling to know I made it to the end and accomplished it."

As far as the race Wednesday, Tristen is confident in his team, he said.

"We have been working hard for the past month and we have strong runners on our team so I am positive our team will do well at the meet," Tristen said.

The meet is at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday at Brookstone School. Spectators are welcome.

Hawks: Take on Harris County today at Tiger Stadium to 21-7 at the end of the quarter.

In the second quarter, Smith threw a 30-yard touchdown pass to Austin Scott to extend the Hawks' lead to 28-7. Lee County's Justin Walker brought the Trojans back throwing a 13-yard pass to Sidney Bailey and with the Michael Bacon extra point, the Trojans trailed 28-14 at the half.

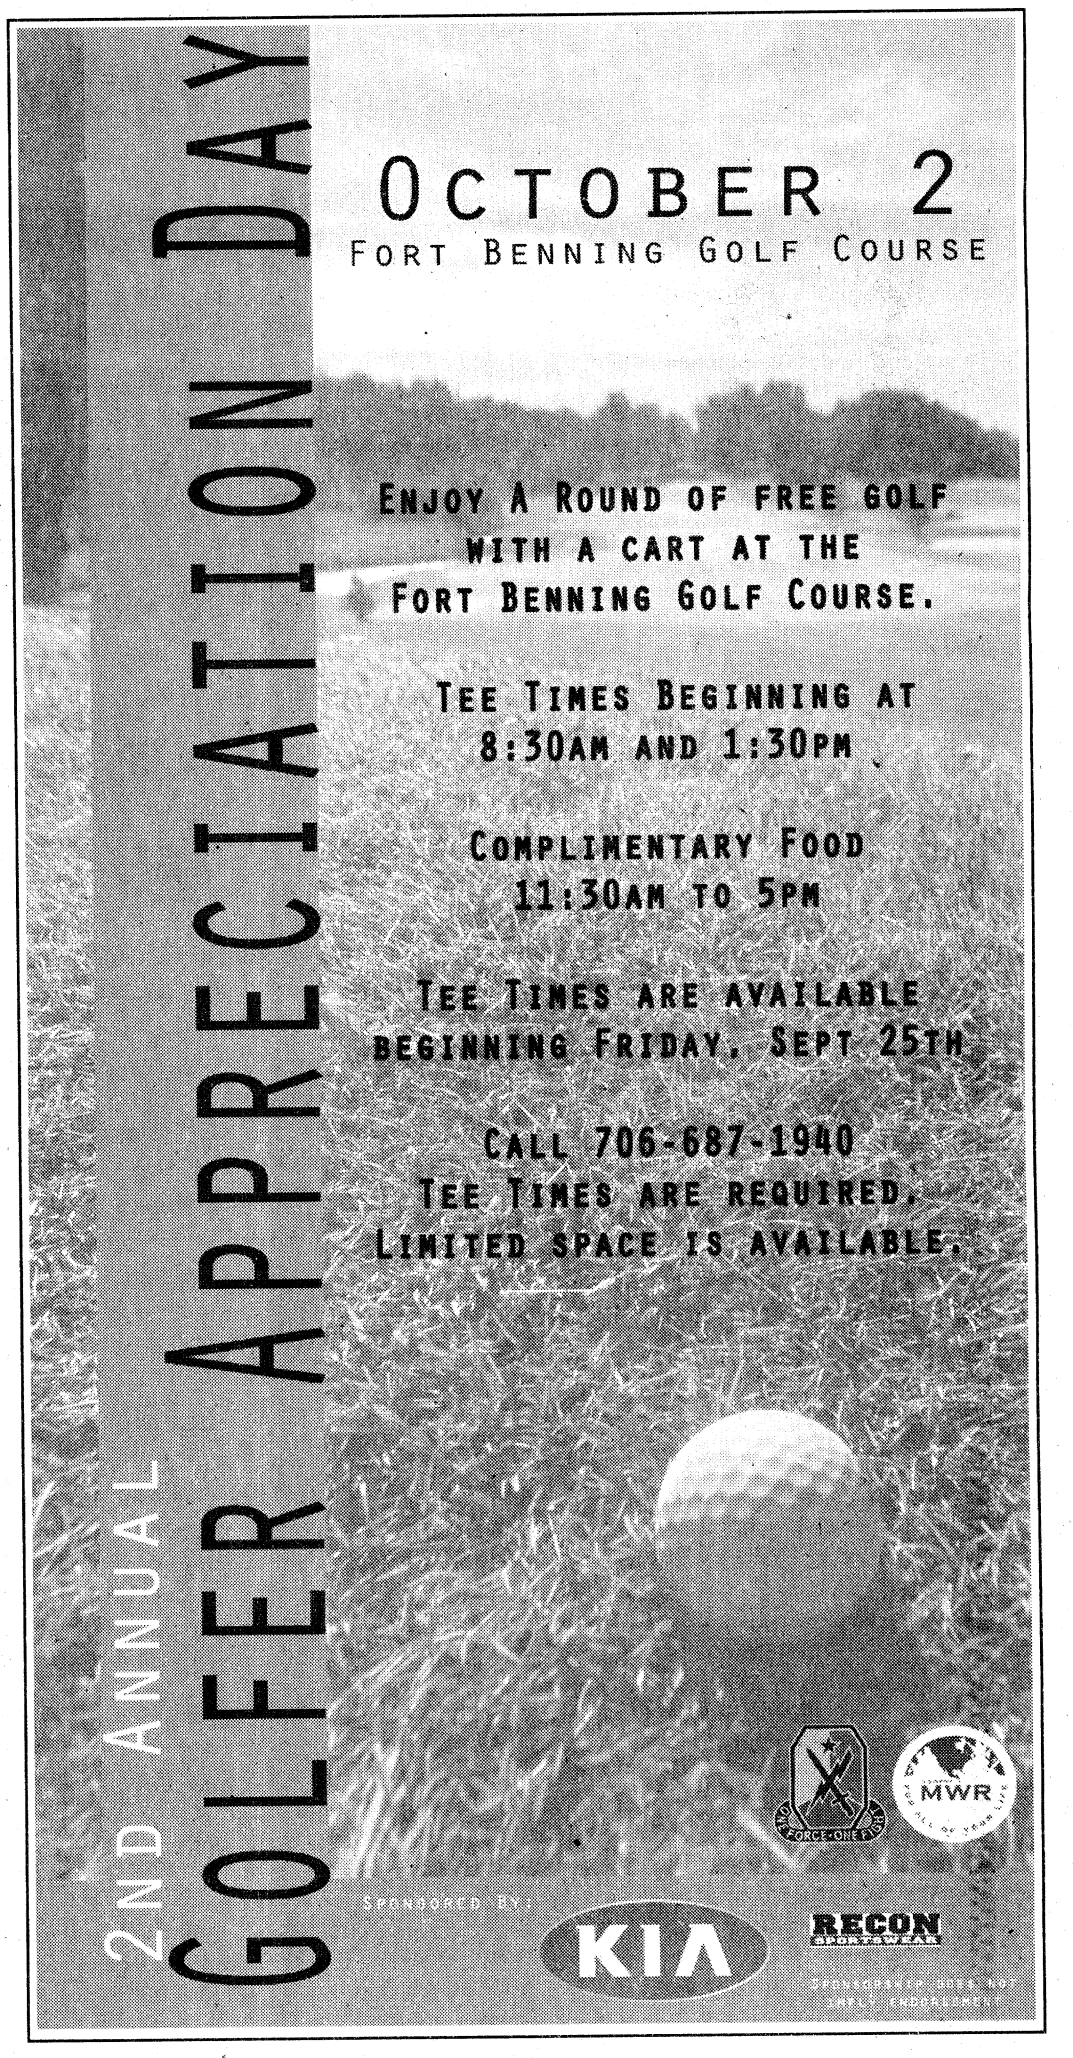
The Trojans rallied in the third quarter scoring on a Walker to Young touchdown pass and with the successful point after, trailed the Hawks 28-21. The Hawks answered the Trojans' touchdown with a Smith 23-yard touchdown run to lead 35-21. The Trojans added a 24-yard field goal to cut the Hawks' lead to 35-24 with 48 seconds remaining in the quarter.

In the fourth quarter, the Hawks added a field goal, a 32-yard touchdown run by Triplett and an 18-yard fumble recovery for a touchdown by Koren Mitchell. Lee County's Denzell Eckles scored a touchdown to close out the scoring and a Hawks 52-31 victory.

"We had a couple things we messed up on defense, but overall we played a good game," said Hawks coach Jeff Battles. "The defensive line stepped up and shut down the runs. The team has worked hard all week and that prepared them to do well in this game."

The Hawks remain undefeated but Battles said there is more work to be done.

"We'll take this season game by game," he said. "We'll focus on our game against Harris County and go from there."



Triplett, a sophomore running back who scored two touchdowns and rushed for 98 yards, said overall he was happy with the game.

"We have some things we need to fix, but I think overall we did really well — better than I expected," he said. "We made great passes and had good receiving and blocking. Our defense slowed them down and that's what got us the win."

Up next for the Hawks is an away game against Harris County at 7:30 p.m. today at Tiger Stadium.

USAMU Soldiers qualify for 2010 World Championships

Michael Molinaro
USAMU PAO

Five Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit earned berths on the 2010 U.S. World Championship team as well as spots in three 2010 World Cup events after their performances at the 2009 Fall Selection match in Kerrville, Texas.

SFC Theresa DeWitt became the first Soldier from the USAMU to earn a spot on the 2010 U.S. team that will travel to Munich, Germany next summer. DeWitt, a 1996 Olympian, placed first in Women's Trap with a score of 448.

2009 World and National Champion SPC Vincent Hancock kept his hot streak going as he won the Men's Skeet event with a score of 515 and will defend his crown in Munich. Hancock, the 2008 Olympic Champion in the event, broke two national records in Kerrville after missing only two targets during the qualifying round and three targets overall. His teammate, SFC Shawn Dulohery, will travel with Hancock after placing third with a score of 506 and making the U.S. team.

Capping off the week for the USAMU were teammates SSG Josh Richmond and SPC Jeff Holguin in Men's Double Trap, finishing first and second with scores of 627 and 621, respectively. Richmond experienced success in Munich in 2009, winning a World Cup event. Holguin won a silver medal at the 2009 World Championships and will be looking to move up in 2010.

Hit fairway for free during Golfer's Appreciation Day

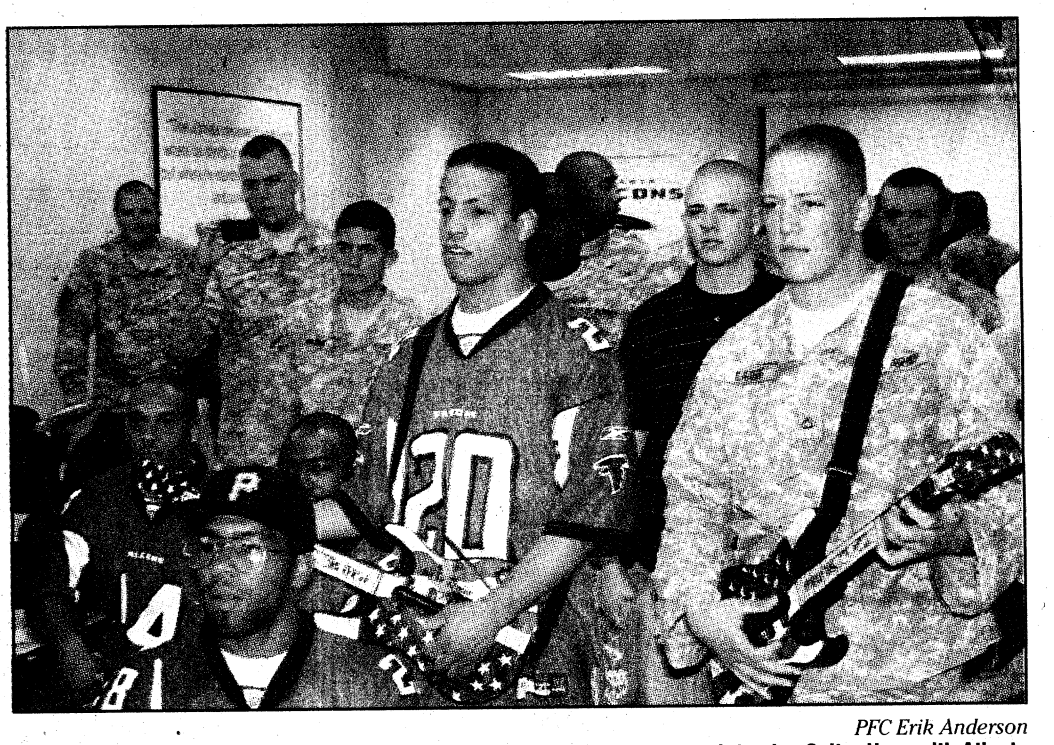
THE BAYONET

Golfers can golf for free Friday at the Fort Benning Golf Course in observance of Golfer's Appreciation Day. The event, hosted by the Fort Benning Golf Course and the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation, is open to the public and includes lunch, free use of golf carts, range balls and a free game of golf for the first 288 golfers who register for a tee time.

"This is our way of thanking golfers for their support throughout the year," said George Cliff, the course director. "We appreciate their business."

Cliff said he hopes to see golfers who have never played the course at the event and hopes they will want to come back.

Tee times begin at 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. and participants can get lunch anytime between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. Players will alternate between the three nine-hole courses.



The first round of tee times will finish around 1:30 p.m. with the second round of golfers finishing play around 5:30 p.m. Golfers who don't get a tee time can golf nine holes free on a first-come, first-served basis at 5:30 p.m. The practice range will also be open.

Golfers can sign up for the event starting today. Registration will be open until 288 spots are filled.

Cliff encourages golfers to sign up as soon as they can because he anticipates the tee times filling up fast, he said.

To register or for more information, go to the golf pro shop or call 706-687-1940.

Soldiers take on Falcons in Pro vs. G.I. Joe games

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Players from the Atlanta Falcons took time to play video games against Soldiers representing the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, and Soldiers currently deployed to Qatar and Afghanistan Sept. 15 at the Falcon's training facility in Flowery Branch, Ga.

The event was sponsored by Pro vs. G.I. Joe, a non-profit support organization, and the USO in an effort to provide a fun diversion for Soldiers.

"It's professional athletes and video games, what can be better than that?" said Greg Zinone, co-founder of Pro vs. G.I. Joe.

He said it is his way of giving something to the Soldiers that do so much to protect America, citing the organizations motto; doin' a little for those who do a lot.

The event included families of Soldiers currently deployed, who were able to video chat with family members after the games were over.

"It is amazing what they can do with technology now," said PFC Colin Wilbur, Headquarters Troop, 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion, 3rd HBCT, 3rd ID. "When we deploy, I hope we can do this again so I can play from Iraq."

For the Falcons players, the day was much more than video games.

"Anytime we, as professional athletes, can show our appreciation to the military, we jump at the chance," Falcons receiver Brian Finneran said.

Besides the player's autographs and Falcons merchandise, Soldiers had chances to win custom Pro vs. G.I. Joe Guitar Hero controllers.

"I know my guys had a lot of fun," said SGT Lance Wail, brigade fire support sergeant, 3rd HBCT. "And that is really what it's all about."

75th Ranger Regiment honors fallen Rangers with run

Rachel Jackson
THE BAYONET

The 75th Ranger Regiment will host the Mogadishu Mile Fun Run, a 5K open to the public and units, Friday starting at the Ranger Memorial across from Smith Fitness Center. The Fort Benning event, in its second year, is to commemorate the 18 members of Task Force Ranger who died in the Battle of Mogadishu Oct. 3-4, 1993, said CPT Richard Thompson, assistant of operations. In particular six Rangers — CPL Jamie Smith, SPC James Cavaco, SGT Casey Joyce, PFC Richard Kowalewski, SGT Dominick Pilla and SGT Lorenzo Ruiz — who died in Operation Gothic Serpent in the Battle of Mogadishu.

On Oct. 3, American Rangers and Delta Force Soldiers of Task Force Ranger were in Somalia to overthrow Mohamed Farrah Aidid and his advisers. On their way to take down the Habr Gidr clan, two U.S. MH-60 Black Hawks were shot down by Somali insurgents. This is known as the Battle of Mogadishu or Black Hawk Down. While there were Soldiers trapped at helicopter crash sites, a battle ensued between Somalis and Americans until the early hours of Oct. 4. Meanwhile, COL(R) Danny McKnight, who was the commanding officer of the 3rd Ranger Battalion, and his convoy, known later as the Lost Convoy, searched for the crash site but didn't make it to the location because of casualties and confusing conditions. McKnight and his convoy headed back to Task Force Ranger's base with casualties, wounded Soldiers and prisoners while a convoy made up of U.N. troops rescued Soldiers who had fought off Somalis all night in battle. Soldiers, who were trapped in Mogadishu, ran from one of the helicopter crash sites to the Pakistani Stadium planning to take cover by running alongside a convoy of Humvees and armored vehicles, but the convoy outpaced the group. The Soldiers pushed on for 48 minutes with no support while being attacked with rocket-propelled grenades and small-arms fire.

"It's important that we remember those that came before us and that we don't forget our heritage," Thompson said.

Thompson said those who fought in the Battle of Mogadishu epitomize the Ranger Creed — to never quit or leave a fallen comrade.

Special guests McKnight, and 1SG Matt Eversmann, who fought alongside the Lost Convoy, will speak at the event.

To simulate the actual Mogadishu Mile, Rangers will run the event in squads wearing ACUs and body armor and carrying rifles.

Thompson said he encourages units to participate, but units must register in advance. Registration is free and T-shirts are available for $10 each. Participants should arrive at 5:45 a.m. to sign in. The race will begin at 6:30 a.m. and will loop around Main Post. For more information or to pre-register, call SSG Bradley Moore at 706-545-1503 or 706-545-5697.

Santa's Castle receives thousands in donations

Dan Packard, vice president of sales for Revision Eyewear, and Dottie Hiter deliver $5,000 worth of toys to Santa's Castle Tuesday. The donation, which includes $16,001 in all, will be used to purchase toys for the charity, which helps families during the holiday season.

Hundreds of Fort Benning children will have presents under the tree this holiday season thanks to the efforts of an Illinois man.

Dan Packard, vice president of sales for Revision Eyewear, said he got sidetracked during his trip from Illinois to the Infantry Warfighting Conference this week when he noticed a story in The Bayonet about a shortfall in donations facing Santa's Castle, a nonprofit organization that provides toys to the post's needy children during the holidays.

The story spurred Packard to call friends, colleagues and businessman to raise $6,000 for the charity. Packard started the donation pot Friday with his own $1,000 donation.

"I thought to myself, 'what a great and noble cause, and it's ridiculous that they don't have enough money,'" said Packard, a former combat controller in the Air Force. "I've always been blessed and never had a year without presents but I've had years away from my family while I was deployed with the military. I've woken up in foreign lands with my family celebrating Christmas without me so I can appreciate the sacrifices our service members have made. Santa's Castle does a wonderful thing for these families, so it was an easy decision to participate."

By Tuesday, Packard had raised $16,001 worth of pledges for Santa's Castle.

"I was absolutely floored," said Joanna

3rd HBCT kids deploy for two-day camp

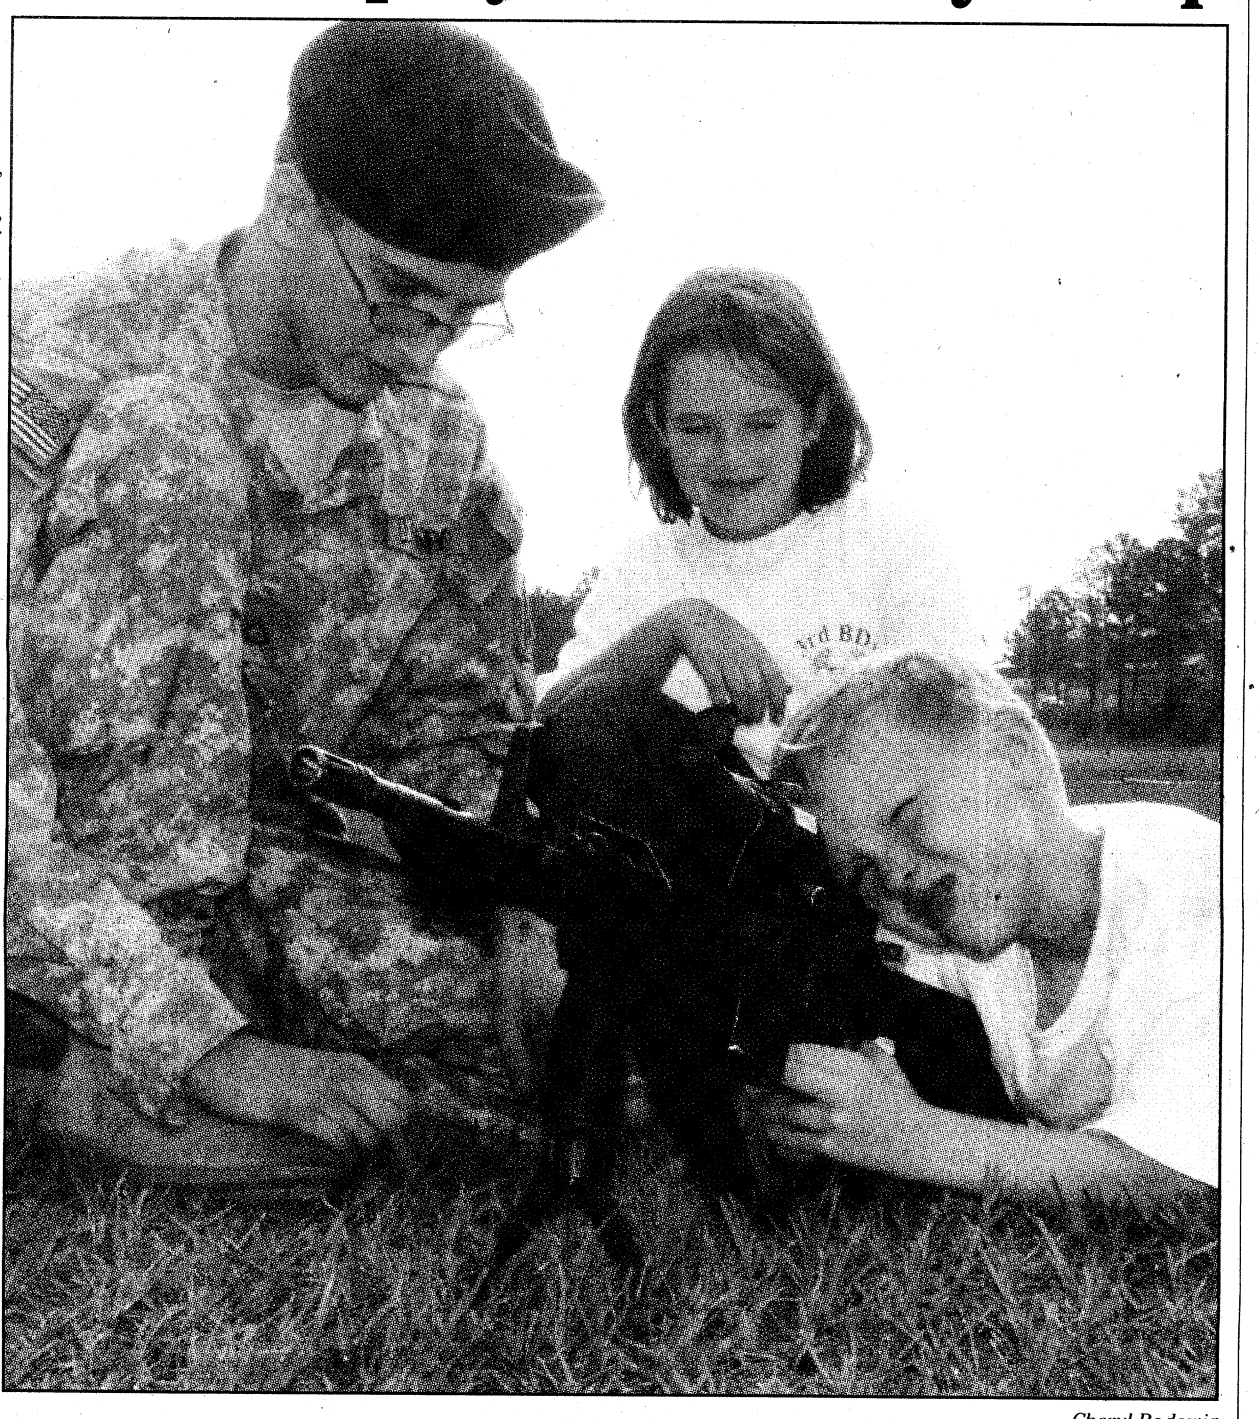
"Mom sent us to boot camp — it's awesome," said 6-year-old Joshua Tate, while sitting in the lap of his mother, SPC Rachel Tate, Saturday at the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team's kids deployment camp.

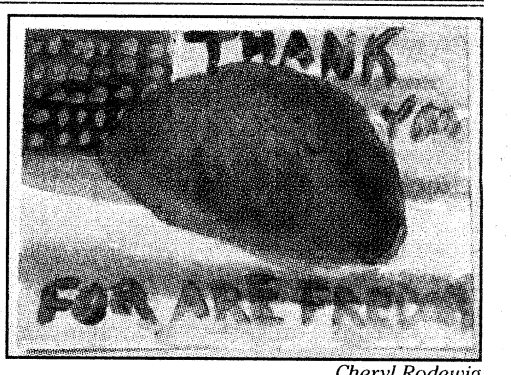
Rachel, who volunteered at the weekend camp, said she signed up all four of her children because she wanted to prepare them for her deployment with the Sledgehammer Brigade in October.



"They were excited about it," she said. "They know that's what mom and dad go to work and do and they want to be a part of that."

More than 50 kids, ages 6 to 14, attended the camp where they learned about the brigade's history, Iraqi culture and Soldier equipment.

The children practiced CPR, tried on combat gear, did push ups and sit ups, aimed rifles, threw practice grenades and ate MREs Saturday while preparing for "deployment." They visited a forward operating base Sunday and ended the camp with a redeployment ice cream party at the end of the camp.



"The goal is wrapping up 10 years of experience in two days," said Andrea Young, 3rd HBCT Family Readiness

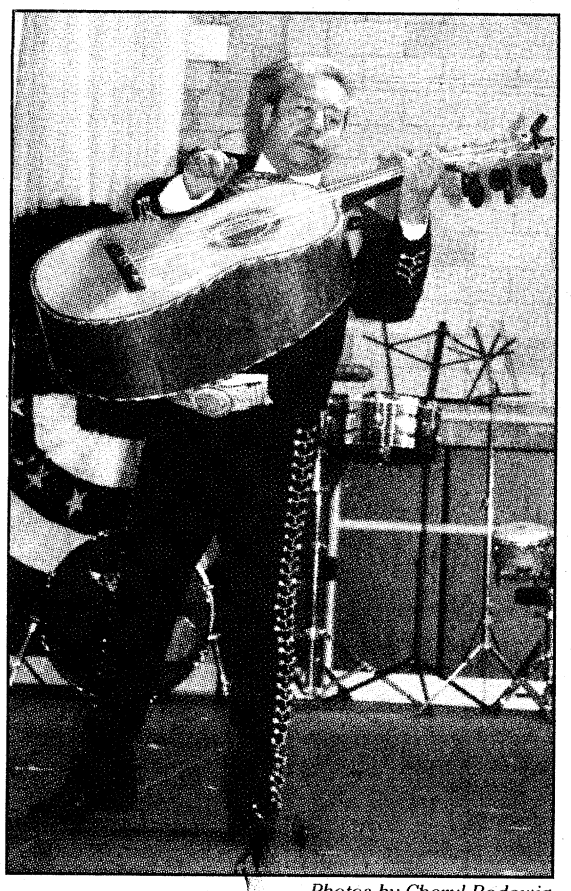
Students thank vets with art

Cheryl Rodewig
THE BAYONET

After touring the war memorials in Washington, Tuesday, 96 veterans on the West Georgia Honor Flight found a surprise waiting for them on the ride home: mail call.

Letters and artwork from students in the Chattahoochee Valley, including more than 60 postcards from White Elementary School children, were distributed to World War II veterans.



Alison Schorsch, art teacher at White Elementary, said she believes her students' cards made a difference to the veterans.

"For school children to be aware of the sacrifices (veterans) made so we could be free, I think it means that they're still important. And that kids actually took the time to create something original and to thank them for their service, that means a lot, means that they're not forgotten," Schorsch said.

Three of Schorsch's classes studied 1940s propaganda posters, World War II history and visual composition for a week before beginning their postcards. After painting the front of the cards with a variety of designs, including camouflage, American

Festival of the Hemisphere highlights cultures

Noe Vascas represents Mexico by playing in a mariachi band Friday during the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Parade of Nations. The parade included folk performances from more than a dozen countries. It is the first time in two years that WHINSEC has held a Parade of Nations, since the unit was moving last year from Ridgway Hall to Greene Hall.

Soldiers from the U.S., Central and South America, the Caribbean and Canada celebrated their culture Friday during the Festival of the Hemisphere. The event included the Parade of Nations, where each country performed a native song or dance, and bocadillos, or "little bites" of their country's traditional food.

"This is a good way to show people the cultures we share in this hemisphere," said Lee Rials, public affairs officer for the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, which puts on the festival.

"We always need to understand and recognize the things we share with other people," Rials said. "It's all a part of getting to realize that your neighbors, people from other countries, are people, too, that they have the same hopes and dreams we do."

The annual festival, which started 22 years ago, is held during Hispanic Heritage Month and features more than a dozen countries.

"It's quite an experience," said Claudia Veras, a WHINSEC instructor from the Dominican Republic. "You can taste the food. You can see the dancing. It's (like) being away from home but having a chance to be close again, kind of having that taste even though you're far away. It's a time to get together and know people better. We live in a big community — the world is a big community — and the more you know other countries, the more you understand them."

Cecilia Alexander, field studies program manager for WHINSEC and native of Panama, said the parade and

SGT Brenda Orozco said the Hispanic Heritage Month Luncheon meant a lot to her because it recalled her cultural heritage.

Orozco, a native of Puerto Rico currently attached to the 203rd Brigade Support Battalion, attended the luncheon Sept. 16 at the Benning Conference Center.

"It means a lot because it reminds you of your roots. You feel at home," she said. "This is the land of the free and over here you have to remember where you came from. This is a way to keep our culture alive."

Orozco said the luncheon also enriches Americans who may not know about Hispanic heritage.

Camp: Preps kids for parents' deployment

Adam Espy, 6, throws a practice grenade Saturday.

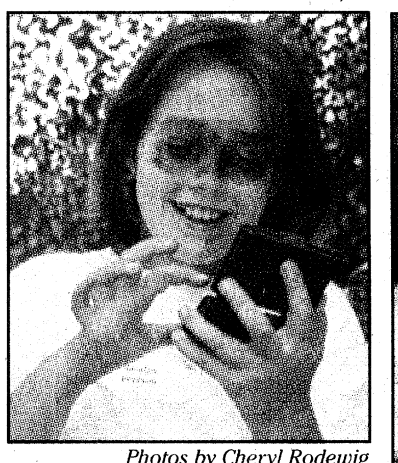
Support Assistant, who got the idea for the camp from an engineer brigade in Fort Lewis, Wash.

"It's to give the children a better understanding of what their family is going to be going through when they deploy," Young said.

"They see it on TV; they hear the stories sometimes in passing, but (at the camp) they'll be able to actually hear and see and have their own image of what deployment is. Kids need to relate somehow to what parents do. It makes it a little bit more real for them."



Young said the camp will help children feel more comfortable about their parents' upcoming deployment, since they get to see the activities and equipment that will be a part of the Soldier's daily life while in Iraq.

"I know what my dad does now," said 6-year-old Alyssa Cromwell, after doing PT and seeing the military vehicles and weapons. "It makes me feel safer because when he's out at war, I know he has all the equipment that will keep him safe."

Ten-year-old Lincoln Jones said it was nice to see part of his father's life.

"It's fun learning about what they do when they're deployed, seeing what it feels like," he said. "It's really hot, running around hurts my legs, so I'm tired, but … it's worth being tired. You're doing so much and you're learning. I think this will help. If I have a better connection, I won't be (as) upset."

Lincoln's dad, COL Peter Jones, 3rd HBCT commander, said the deployment camp was all about connections — "something to connect better with their families and an opportunity to connect with each other."

Speaker: Encourages change

"It's a good way to know about other people's heritage, so we can understand each other more. That's a better way for people to come together," she said.

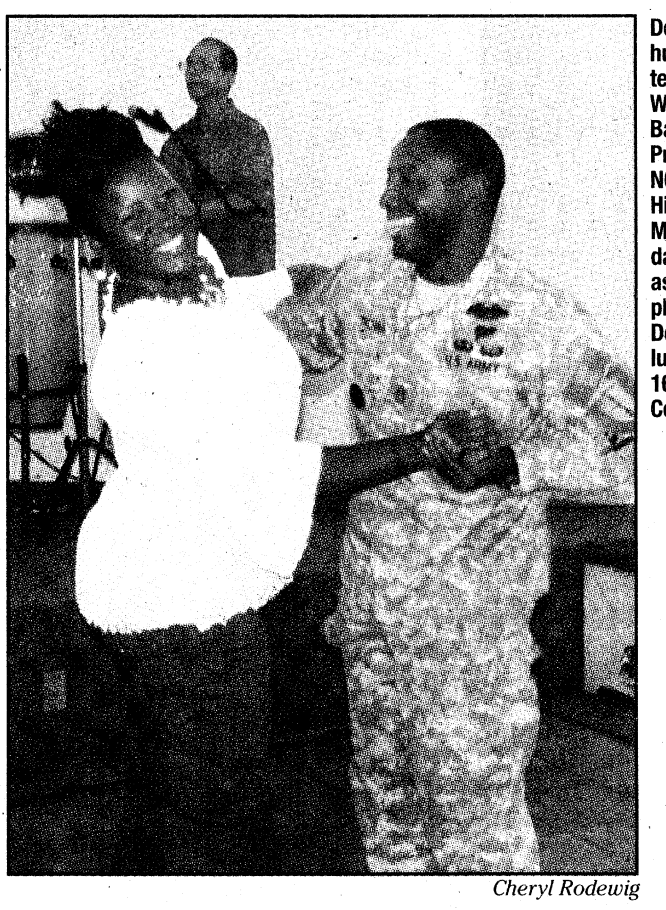
The theme for the luncheon was "Embracing the Fierce Urgency of Now," a phrase borrowed from Dr. Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

"'Now is the time to make real the promises of democracy. Now is the time to rise from the dark and desolate valley of segregation to the sunlit path of racial justice. Now is the time to lift our nation from the quicksand of racial injustice to the solid rock of brotherhood,'" said CSM(R) Efrain Hernandez, quoting from King's speech.

Hernandez, co-founder of the Hispanic Business Outreach Committee of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce and keynote speaker for the event, outlined many of the accomplishments of Hispanic Americans.

"Latino Americans have a proud record of military service dating all the way back to the Revolutionary War," he said. "We have fought in every war or conflict this great country has ever taken part in and are today serving in the front lines in Iraq and Afghanistan. We have defended America with unwavering 'honor y valor.'"

Hernandez



Hernandez said despite the contributions, racial prejudice against Hispanic Americans still exists, but it is time to move past the injustice.

"Our Army was first in our nation to embrace the concept of equal opportunity," he said, "and we should be the model for everyone. But there is much more to be done in our country because we are not there yet."

After the luncheon, guests were invited to the front to dance to the tunes of Son Tropical, a Columbus-based band that specializes in Latin music. Band members are from diverse backgrounds, including Panama, Puerto Rico and Paraguay, and play a variety of styles, from the meringue to the salsa.

"We like to do this specifically because of Hispanic Heritage Month," said music director Dan Walker, who has performed at the annual luncheon for the past seven years.

"That's our goal to represent the community, to bring something and show others a little bit about our culture."

Post, AAFES combat increases in juvenile shoplifting

Vince Little
THE BAYONET

Theft involving juveniles at the Post Exchange has increased in the past year, and officials said they're beefing up educational efforts in an attempt to reverse the trend.

Since mid-September 2008, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service at Fort Benning has documented 139 shoplifting cases, including 62 linked to youth ages 12-18, said Traci Tucker, the organization's loss prevention manager. A total of 62 from the same age group were caught stealing in all of 2008, up from 20 in 2007.

CPT Joseph LaBranche, operations officer for the Fort Benning provost marshal's office, said there have been 57 larcenies committed this year by juveniles ages 10-17. That reflects incidents at the PX and theft of private property in military housing, he said.

"Within the amount of juvenile crime that we do have, 38 percent is juvenile shoplifting," LaBranche said. "The highest number of offenders would be in the 17 age bracket, accounting for 26 percent of basic larceny crimes among juveniles."

Since last September, Tucker said AAFES has lost almost $11,700 in stolen merchandise at the PX.

Xbox 360 and PlayStation video games, electronics and portable audio players are always among the top items being lifted, she said. Female juveniles tend to go for clothing, cosmetics and jewelry.

AAFES has safeguards in place to discourage shoplifting, ranging from electronic video surveillance to undercover store detectives who blend in with customers.

Tucker said AAFES makes efforts to deter shoplifting and reduce the temptation through community awareness events and school visits to the PX.

"We show them our loss prevention room that has the cameras and video surveillance equipment in it," she said. "We tell them about the shoplifting process, and what will happen if they get caught."

AAFES loss prevention officials detain all shoplifting suspects and notify military police, she said.

LaBranche said the Directorate of Emergency Services incorporates a message about shoplifting through the DARE program at the middle school level.

"We expect juveniles to be good citizens of the installation," he said. "They need to ensure they respect the rules and laws, and demonstrate responsibility by making sure they don't shoplift. There are consequences.

"Parents should talk to their children about the consequences of committing crimes on the installation and how it will affect the entire family."

He said youth shoplifting cases are adjudicated through Fort Benning's Juvenile Misconduct Action Authority, which conducts hearings twice a month. Punishment may include suspension of AAFES privileges, community service, loss of job opportunities, and revoked access to recreation facilities and the Youth Activities Center. In some instances, repeat offenders face exclusion from post or criminal charges.

Vince Little
Patricia Maynor, of the Post Exchange's loss prevention office, scans the store Sept. 16 from an electronic video surveillance room.

Tucker said one juvenile caught shoplifting was recently barred from the installation for five years.

In addition, AAFES charges shoplifters and accomplices a $200 fee through the Federal Claims Collection Act, a civil recovery program that allows retailers to offset merchandise losses and administrative costs. The law, enacted in March 2002, doesn't require a criminal conviction.

"We have a great team here at Fort Benning and do our best to protect AAFES assets," Tucker said. "If you come in and shoplift, you will get caught. Just don't do it."

Donation: Gives gifts to kids

Thomas, the president of Santa's Castle, when she received the call from Packard.

Thomas and other Santa's Castle volunteers helped Packard unload a truck full of brand new toys Tuesday purchased at the Manchester Expressway Wal-Mart with one-third of the money raised and a 10 percent discount from the store. In the next several weeks, Packard said he would work to collect the remaining donations.

"I am a mom myself and if I wasn't able to give my child any toys for Christmas, I would feel awful," Thomas said. "It's a wonderful feeling to provide this service to needy children and help put their parents' minds at ease."

Though the large donation has generated an unexpected wealth of toys, Santa's Castle still needs monetary and toy donations to meet its goal of 4,500 toys this holiday season, she said. The organization currently has nearly 2,000 toys.

Santa's Castle is preparing for approximately 1,500 needy children this year in the wake of the recession and the additional influx of families as a result of BRAC, said Dottie Hider, the applications coordinator for Santa's Castle. That number is up from last year's average of 1,000 children.

Kristin Molinaro
Joanna Thomas, president of Santa's Castle, and Patricia Hall, the organization's shopping coordinator, empty a truck full of approximately 250 toys.

Santa's Castle's goal is to provide each child with three toys, a stuffed animal and a bag full of stocking stuffers. The organization also provides each family with a board game, said Beth Cronk, the organization's volunteer coordinator.

This year, thanks to a large donation of wrapping paper from Operation Homefront, Santa's Castle will also provide free wrapping paper for the toys as well.

One thing many people don't know about Santa's Castle, said Thomas, is that all the donated toys are brand new and never been used.

Price tags are removed and bar codes are marked out so each present is ready to wrap. One of the most popular items the organization tries to purchase is bicycles. Other items in the showroom this year include MP3 players, sports equipment, fashion purses and scooters. Toys are available for both boys and girls from infants to 17 years old.

Web site streamlines household-goods move

CPT Robert J. Rauckhorst Jr.
OSJA

In an effort to improve the overall experience of shipping household goods, the Department of Defense is implementing a new system that awards transportation contracts to Transportation Service Providers based on performance and customer satisfaction.

With the creation of the new Defense Personal Property Program, service members and their families will have a say as to which TSP's the DoD uses for household goods shipments.

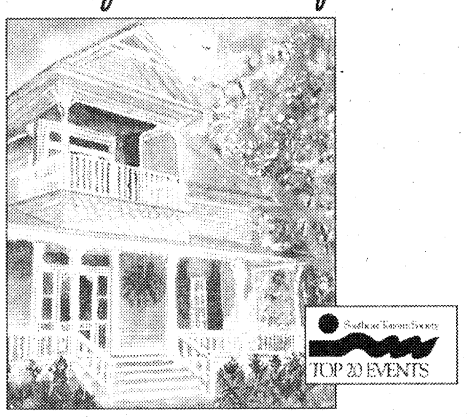
The main goal of the DP3 is to move away from the low cost method of selecting TSPs while improving the quality of service.

The DP3 will employ the Defense Personal Property System, a fully integrated, Web-based system that will simplify the process of moving to another duty station.

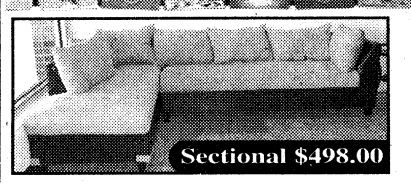
The DPS will create a one-stop shop for managing the shipment of household goods. During the entire process, it will provide service members 24-hour access to shipment information.

As soon as service members initiate the move through online registration, they will be able to access and track their shipment online, deal directly with their TSP, file all of their claims and to complete the Customer Satisfaction Survey.

The DPS offers online claims settlement between the service member and the TSP. This should drastically reduce the time associated with settling claims.



Also, if goods are lost or damaged beyond repair, they will be replaced at full value. This is a departure from the old system, which used a depreciated value replacement for household goods.



The survey is designed to be completed quickly, consisting of 12 questions asking service members to rate the carrier and their overall experience. It is vital because responses received will help improve future services and directly affect which TSPs are selected to handle shipments for service members.

Without question, the key to success of this new program is service members' participation in the customer satisfaction survey.

Upon delivery of the household goods, each service member will be counseled on the importance of completing the survey and how it will affect the selection of TSPs in the future. They will receive an e-mail reminder if they do not complete it within seven days of delivery.

3rd HBCT chaplains sponsor marriage retreat

SGT Ben Hutto
3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Chaplains assigned to the 3rd Squadron, 1st Cavalry Regiment, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment and the Brigade Special Troops Battalion sponsored a marriage retreat Sept. 12-14 in Panama City Beach, Fla., for 72 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team Soldiers and their spouses.

The 3rd HBCT, 3rd Infantry Division is set to deploy to Iraq next month and the retreat was meant to help Soldiers and their spouses with that transition.

"We wanted to provide enhanced marriage enrichment classes in a relaxed environment before we deployed," said SPC Jim Bullock, the chaplain assistant assigned to 3rd Sqdn., 1st Cav. Regt. "The event was a great way for the couples to slow down and enjoy each other's company."

The classes were part of the Coin and Covenant series sponsored by the 3rd Inf. Div. As part of the program, couples agree to study a monthly theme, such as dedication, appreciation and communication, simultaneously while the brigade is deployed. Deployed chaplains will conduct events focusing on the themes overseas. Spouses will be led in the same area of study at Fort Benning by the 3rd HBCT's rear detachment chaplain.

"There are difficulties that a deployment places on a marriage," said Chap. (CPT) Ray Davidson, 3rd Sqdn, 1st Cav. Regt. "I'm glad we had that many couples come and I look forward to working with them during the upcoming deployment."

Davidson says that any successful marriage requires work and dedication.

"Nobody has a perfect marriage," he said. "I believe everyone has room for improvement in their relationship. Improving communication between husbands and wives is an important part of that. One of the things we went over this weekend was reminding our couples that many times it isn't what we say, but how we say it."

SGT Ben Hutto
Soldiers assigned to the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team participate in breakout sessions at the 3rd HBCT's marriage retreat in Panama City Beach, Fla., Sept. 12-14.

Bullock was pleased with the retreat and hopes the participating couples will have some positive things to carry them through the upcoming deployment.

"All the feedback I received said that our couples really enjoyed how interactive the exercises were," he said. "Hopefully, that interaction will continue up until we deploy and while we are away."

Fats, carbs work as 'brain food'

Gary Sheftick
ARNEWS

WASHINGTON — A high-fat diet, at least for a few days, could enhance mental performance, according to a study: "Nutritional Effects on Cognitive Performance."

The study examined how various diets affected 45 pilots. After four days, pilots on both high-fat and high-carbohydrate diets performed significantly better than those on a high-protein diet. Results of the study were briefed at the Military Health Research Forum in Kansas City, a scientific gathering hosted by the Department of Defense Congressionally Directed Medical Research Programs. Several of the 500 researchers in attendance from the military, industry and academia were surprised at the results.

"We were surprised, too," said Dr. Glenda Lindseth, the study's lead researcher. "It wasn't what we anticipated. We reran our statistics many times. We kept analyzing our data as we went along."

But there was no mistaking the outcome. Pilots on the high-fat diet scored about 50 percent better than those on the high-protein diet and 20 percent better than pilots on the "control" or well-balanced diet.

After four days to a week on a particular diet, pilots were tested on a full-motion flight simulator. Their short-term memory was also tested by the Sternberg Item Recognition Test and their spatial orientation was evaluated by the Vandenberg Mental Rotation Test. After the tests, participants were randomly rotated into one of the other three diets.

After four days to a week, they were tested again.

Pilots on the high-carb diet scored more than 40 percent higher than those on the high-protein diet. They had better reaction times and improved memory. Pilots on the high-protein diet experienced irritability, high anxiety levels, and were unable to sleep as well as the other pilots, Lindseth said.

All the diets were balanced in minimum daily required amount of nutrients and about the same amount of calories, she said. However, the high-fat diet was about 57 percent fatty foods, including whole milk, mashed potatoes and gravy, roast beef and sausage.

The high-protein diet was comparable to the Atkins diet, Lindseth said, in that it consisted of more than 50 percent protein. Instead of roast beef and gravy, pilots on the high-protein diet might eat a spinach salad with chicken breast.

The latter kind of dinner has long been intuitively considered by many as healthy, and Lindseth cautioned that the long-term results of fatty or high-carb diets need to be studied further.

A candy bar or two before a test or a military operation "may not be as bad" as what nutritionists previously thought, she said.

The participants in the study were fixed-wing pilots, including a few from the North Dakota National Guard. Lindseth suggested results of the study might benefit the military beyond the field of aviation.

H1N1 vaccine expected in October

C. Todd Lopez
ARNEWS

WASHINGTON — Soldiers and families can expect to get two flu shots this year.

In addition to the conventional flu shot administered each fall, the H1N1, or "Swine Flu" vaccine, should be available by mid-October, said COL Deborah Knickerbocker, chief of emergency preparedness and response, the Office of the Surgeon General and Army Medical Command.

Knickerbocker spoke during the Army Emergency Management Conference Sept. 1 at the Pentagon. The conference coincided with the start of National Preparedness Month.

Getting flu shots and taking measures to prevent exposure to the virus or spreading the virus is part of preparedness, Knickerbocker said.

"When Soldiers and family members take care of themselves and prepare, they not only help the Army be more resilient, they help the local communities they are in be more resilient," she said. "There's going to be vaccine, and there's going to be enough to go around. Everybody is going to get their shots."

Knickerbocker said the H1N1 vaccine will be distributed to Soldiers, families and other beneficiaries mostly through primary care providers.

"They'll get their seasonal shots, and the H1N1 shot, as soon as they become available," Knickerbocker said.

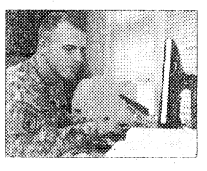
Along with the vaccinations, she recommends a number of common-sense measures to prevent the spread of H1N1.

"Just teaching people about how easy it is to prevent disease by washing our hands, and cough- and sneeze-hygiene and etiquette, it's pretty simple," she said. "Part of what we need to do is instill in the culture of the military — which does not really usually think this way — to stay home when you are sick. If you go to work sick, you'll make office mates sick, or squad mates."

The H1N1 virus has made headlines because, it's a "novel" virus, Knickerbocker said.

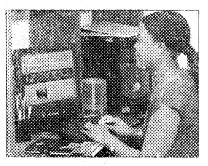
"We haven't seen the virus before. And when we have a virus that people have not been exposed to before, we have no immunity to it," Knickerbocker said.

Many of the deaths from H1N1 occurred in Mexico, and in those already immuno-compromised, so the virus gained notoriety, Knickerbocker said. But the effects of the virus have not been what was expected.



"The message has been sent out there that this particular virus is not as virulent as we had been planning for with the H5N1, not as virulent as the seasonal flu," she said. "And seasonal influenza kills about 36,000 in this country each year."

Knickerbocker said while Soldiers can expect to get vaccinated for both flu viruses, the Army does not expect the H1N1 to have damaging effects on the Army.



"I don't think the Army is worried about this particular H1N1 virus. If it stays at the level of severity that it is now, which it is mild, it should have no more effect on operations than the seasonal flu does," she said.

"But we have to take care during flu season to try to prevent getting ill, and staying home if we are ill, to prevent operational impact."

Local churches support 3rd HBCT with day of prayer

SGT Ben Hutto
3RD HBCT PUBLIC AFFAIRS

More than 160 churches in the Columbus area will be supporting the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team during a day of prayer Sunday.

All the congregations involved have been asked to dedicate 20 to 30 seconds of focused prayer for the Soldiers and families of the 3rd HBCT as they prepare for their deployment to Iraq.

"One of the challenges of military ministry is that we are not always able to offer predictable worship services, normal hours for counseling and support due to deployments and our high turnover rate with people coming to and leaving the unit," said Chaplain (MAJ) David Lile, the brigade chaplain. "The local churches in Columbus pick up the bulk of that and are key parts in providing for many of our Soldiers' and their families religious needs."

Jeff Murphy, My Church, said that he and his congregation were excited to take part in the effort.

"I think it's the least we can do to pray and let our Soldiers know how grateful we are," he said. "It is an extremely powerful sacrifice these people make for us. What they do is not unlike the sacrifice Christ made for us."

Both Lile and Murphy think that religion is a key component in the well fare of the 3rd HBCT, both here and abroad.

"What many of us realize is that war is a spiritual issue," Lile said. "With the long breaks families must endure from one another and the stresses that happen during a deployment affect Soldiers in more ways than just physically and socially."

Murphy said that his and his congregation's prayers are a blessing to everyone involved.

"We obviously aren't giving something up to God that he doesn't already know about, but the process helps remind all of us that God is listening and that he has everything covered."

Army calls on leaders to limit stress, reduce suicides

Chaplain (MAJ) Carlos Huerta
SPC Albert Lenowicz
30TH ADJUTANT GENERAL BATTALION (RECEPTION)

It has been a while since we got off the plane to come home, a couple of years since we left the battlefields of Iraq. We remember that the high of being back quickly dissipated into the depression of having experienced a great loss, a loss we could not identify at the time. Since then, not a day has gone by when we did not think of what we did there, the things we accomplished and the buddies we lost.

The first couple of years were hard, a time of sleepless nights waking up in the dark staring, remembering, trying to forget, feeling, not feeling, eating and not eating. It was a year when Jack Daniels and us got to be more than mild acquaintances It was a year of staring at the television watching mindless shows and turning it off when the news came on, a time of being home, but not, being with our family, but being absent.

A part of us resented being back while others were fighting over there. We felt everything this side of the battle line was just busy work. It was hard to focus, hard to be there for those who counted on us, hard not to remember friends and the ever present spirit of those still in the fight.

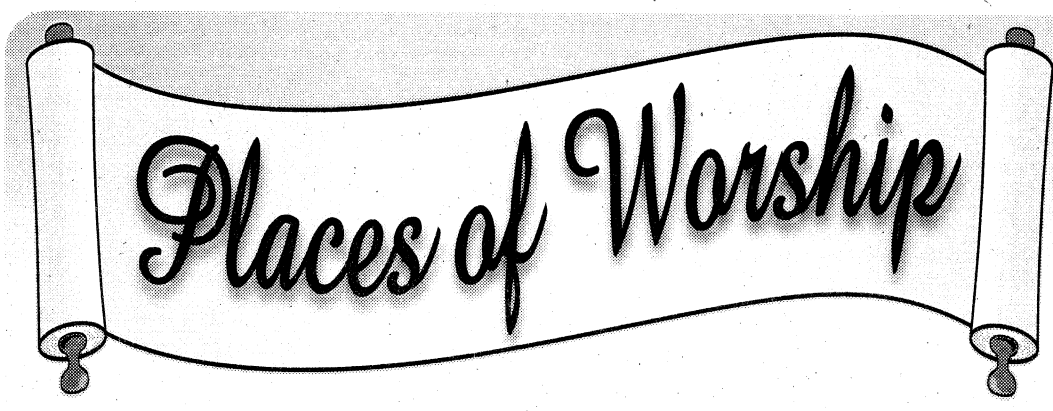
We always stopped the Soldiers we knew who served over there to talk to them. Many experienced the same thing we did. It seemed that time was the fomenter not the cure of our lost vision and hope. It brought back the images, the long hot days, the ambushes, firefights, faces of lost buddies, dead enemies. Most of them felt the way we did, unsure of being back and wanting to get back into the fight whether it was good for us or not. We did not want to acknowledge we needed help, someone to reach out to and someone to help us understand what we were going through.

Looking back, we realize we were depressed. The good things of life no longer seemed important. We lost interest in people, in doing things, in our family and friends. We started to move in a downward spiral where even life didn't seem what it was cracked up to be. For many of us, it was hard to find our way back home again, and for some of us, we never did.

The Army is dealing with a serious suicide issue and trying to come to understand how to reduce it. On the Aug. 18 front page of the New York Times, GEN George Casey disclosed how all Soldiers will be required to go through new master resiliency training to help reduce the suicides in our ranks. The hope of the training is to give Soldiers the tools they need to recover from the trauma of war, broken relationships and depression — things that may lead to suicide.

Getting the needed tools is important but is just the first step in the solution. The second step is to reduce the daily stress in our Soldier's life when out of combat and the third one is giving that Soldier the time he or she needs with loved ones.

LTG Rick Lynch has it right. "General's Orders: Go Home at 5," the lead story in the Army Times on July 20, speaks a truth that some have missed in helping the Army deal with suicide. As we are justifiably concerned about the rise in our suicides, divorce rate and domestic violence, we should be equally concerned about the rise in the hours our Soldiers are working. While it is true we need to learn life skills to deal with stress and the trauma of combat, we also need the time to be with the ones we love — our families who will help the tools we are getting hit home and be effective.



Lynch also hit the nail on the head when he recognized how important it is to reduce stress in our work lives and "have fun." We as leaders need to take the gauntlet he has tossed down and meet the challenge to improve and save the lives of our Soldiers. Lynch was correct when he said that stress plays a big part in Soldiers' dangerous decisions.

Every leader on every level should ask, "What can I do to reduce the stress on myself and my Soldiers? What can we do to allow our Soldiers to spend more time with family and loved ones? How can I as a leader change the work environment, not only to reduce stress but develop a place where our Soldiers and civilians actually have fun and look forward to coming to work?"

The goal to reduce our suicides is not without challenges. Casey said he worries the most whether our Army culture can change to do what it needs to do to help reduce our suicides. Here, we should heed the words of CSM William Morgan when he spoke at a recent Warrior Leaders Course graduation. He challenged the new NCOs to take ownership of their positions. We as Soldiers on all levels need to take ownership of our part of the Army culture and seek to improve it to make a healthier, better Army.

MG Michael Ferriter is committed to reversing and eliminating the destructive trends challenging our Army. He has set the goal before us and has tossed us the gauntlet. We as an Army have never walked away from a fight. Our "can do" attitude requires us to do what we must to take care of our Soldiers and their families.

Let's think outside the box, dream of solutions that are not and say why not. Let us be bold and courageous enough to make the major paradigm shifts in our leadership that are needed. If we do then we can create these new solutions to give our Soldiers and their families the skills and opportunity they need to be Army Strong and to live the quality of life they have so valiantly fought for. If we meet this challenge with tenacity and courage, then history will not record this as the time when we as a nation won the war but lost our Army.

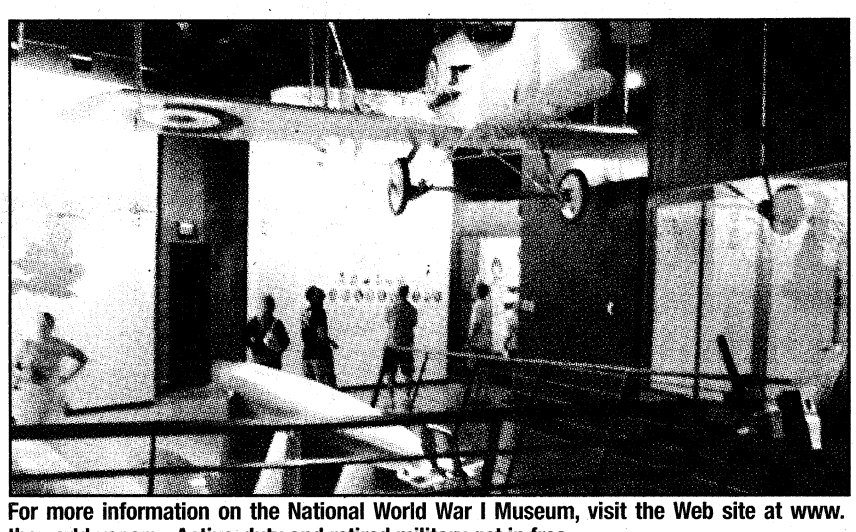
Museum commemorates war to end all wars

Lori Egan
THE BAYONET

Photos by Lori Egan

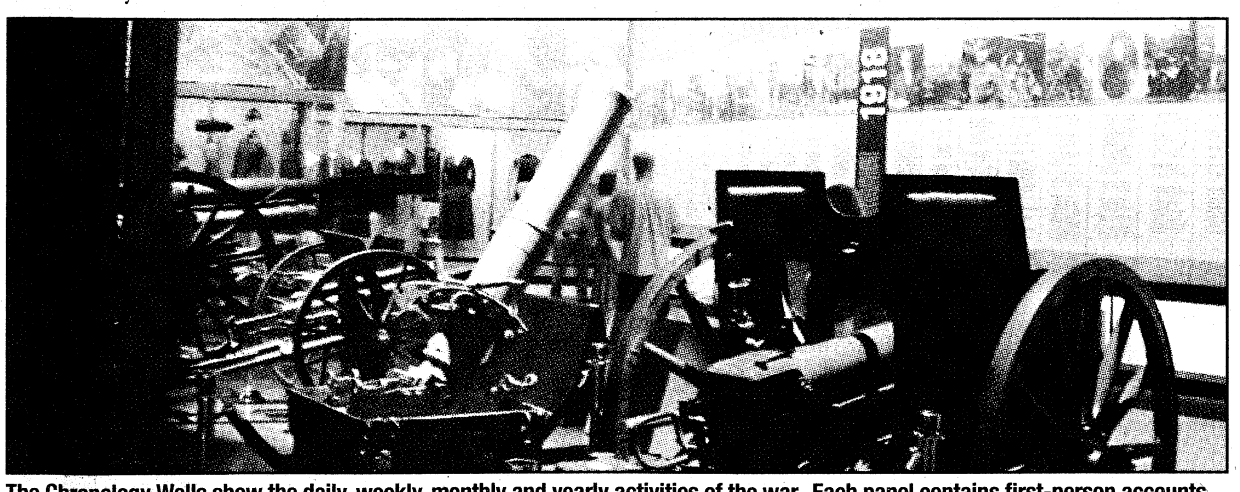
The National World War I Museum tells the entire history of the war. After viewing a brief movie about the events that led to the war, docents recommend starting your tour in the exhibits representing 1914-1917, which tells the story before the United States entered the war. The American story begins in the second half of the gallery, the years 1917-1919.

I've decided it's a small Army world. When I spent two weeks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., in August, I was amazed at how many people I saw there from here, which is why this week's R&R feature is on the only museum dedicated to World War I. It's in Kansas City, Mo., only a stone's throw from Fort Leavenworth, and a much recommended tourist attraction by nearly all the Leavenworth locals.



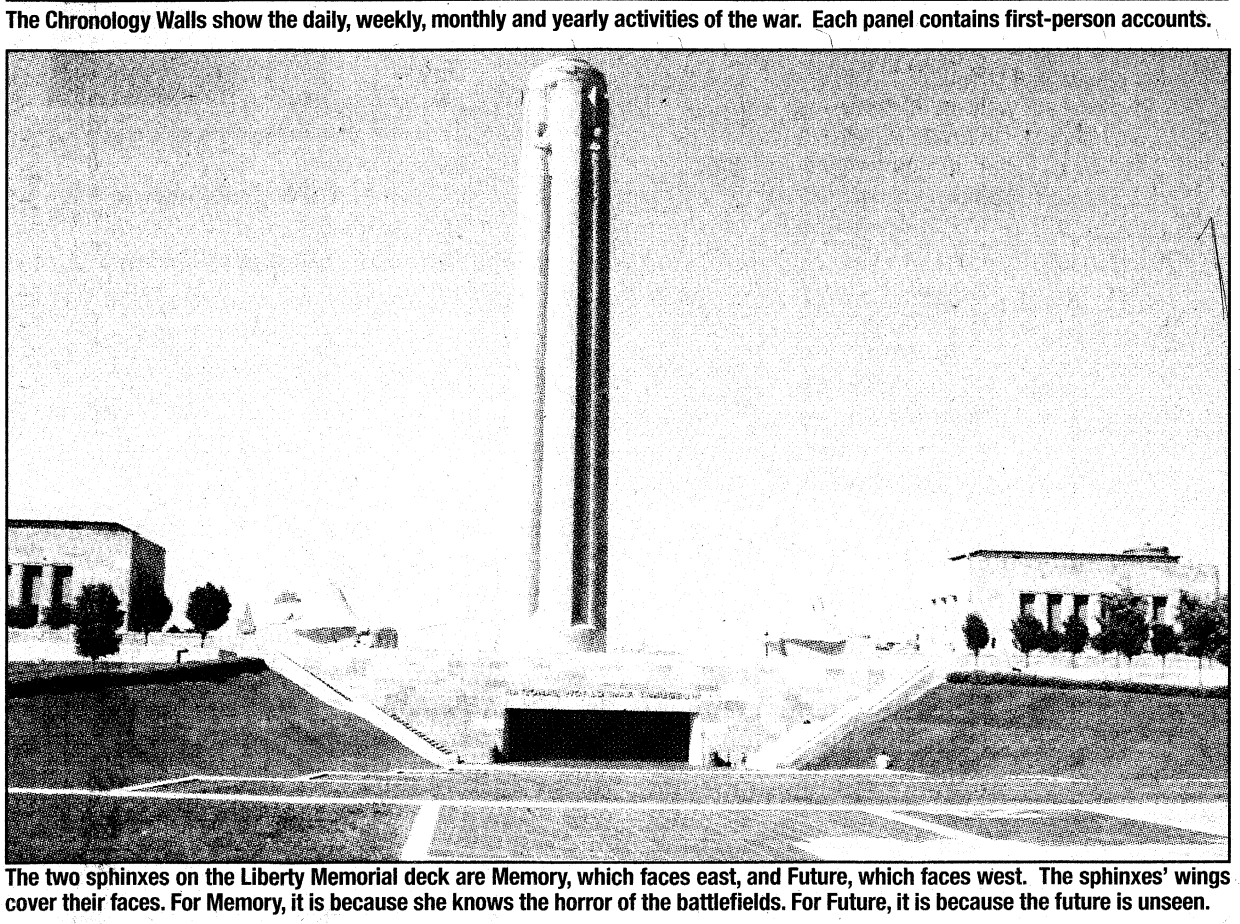
The 108th Congress officially designated the museum as the National World War I Museum at Liberty Memorial in 2004 and after a more than $100 million facelift, it opened its doors Dec. 2, 2006.

The Liberty Memorial is a tower that is 217 feet tall. Built on a hill in downtown Kansas City, President Calvin Coolidge dedicated the memorial in 1926 to honor those who served in the defense of liberty. Just five years earlier, the wartime leaders of the five Allied nations dedicated the site. It was the only time GEN John Pershing, France's Marshal Ferdinand Foch, Great Britain's Admiral David Beatty, Italy's General Armando Diaz and Belgium's Lt. Gen. Alfonso Jacques were together in one place.



The 30,000-square-foot museum was built beneath the tower. To get to the exhibits, visitors cross over a field of 9,000 red poppies. Each poppy represents 1,000 combatant deaths during World War I.

An interesting factoid that I didn't know before is that during the first world war, the bayonet was considered an offensive weapon, according to one of the signs.



The museum is definitely worth visiting when you're in Kansas City.

For more information on the National World War I Museum, visit the Web site at www.theworldwar.org. Active-duty and retired military get in free.

The Chronology Walls show the daily, weekly, monthly and yearly activities of the war. Each panel contains first-person accounts.

The two sphinxes on the Liberty Memorial deck are Memory, which faces east, and Future, which faces west. The sphinxes' wings cover their faces. For Memory, it is because she knows the horror of the battlefields. For Future, it is because the future is unseen.

This display shows the unit patches of U.S. forces during World War I.

Poison gas was first used in World War I. At the left is a French M-2 gas mask and carrier.

THE MOVIE GUY'S REVIEW

Jennifer's Body: Fox is a tasty terror

SGT Junius Stone
192ND INFANTRY BRIGADE

Megan Fox's involvement in this film is misleading, based on what little publicity I've seen. The title and her involvement makes it appear to be a shameless exploitation flick, selling itself on shock and skin. Not that there is anything wrong with that (have a few of those in my collection). But frankly, I was looking for more. Then I read an interview with the director, Karyn Kusama, whose work includes her freshman effort, Girlfight, about a female boxer played by Michelle Rodriguez, and Aeon Fluxx, the film adaptation of the MTV animated lady assassin from a dystopian future.

Kusama writes strong, yet flawed, characters. She attempts to inject humanity, if not sympathy, into her "villains," giving the women a satisfying roundedness. The interview revealed much of where her mind was when putting together this film, and based on her thoughts and her previous work, I saw it.

When the film opens, we meet Needy, played incredibly well by a very disturbed looking Amanda Seyfried. She's in a mental institution, and we see her kick an attendant's block off and get thrown in solitary. She begins to tell us her sad tale, of her friendship with Jennifer Check (Megan Fox) and how it ended. Jennifer is the seemingly stereotypical manipulative, way-too-aware-of-her-hotness high school girl and Needy is her BFF and has been since they were little girls. Then one day, Jennifer wants to go to a concert at a local dive. The joint catches fire, and Needy manages to get the two of them out. The band finds them outside and the front man badgers Jennifer into getting into their van. Jennifer is torn between wariness and lust, but boards the van. Later when Needy is home alone, the doorbell rings. No one is there when she answers, but she finds Jennifer in her hallway. She's covered in blood and something is very, VERY strange about her. Bizarre, sinister facial expressions, guttural sounds, vomiting some kind of moving black substance and a powerful HUNGER cues Needy and everyone watching that Jennifer isn't her usual self. Thus, our tragedy unfolds from there.

That kitchen scene told me this movie had some good horror, the spine-tingling, pee-your-pants tension true horror aspires. When I watched Megan Fox in the Transformers films, she was eye candy and the plucky heroine. She did a fine job, but let's face it, not challenging. Horror is a much tougher challenge. Not only does it need to do what any good story does — paint a scenario that gets your attention, and give you characters to experience the scenario — it has to frighten you, give you premature grays. Let me tell you, that scene in the kitchen, when Jennifer shambles up to her friend, her visage caked in gore, the "smile" she smiles, her otherworldly demeanor … shudder. It worked, my friends.

Fox demonstrates an ability to project small things that made all the difference in her portrayal of Jennifer. At times, before the bad things happened, you would see little moments where you would catch a glimpse behind the manipulative, power-tripping mask, where she seemed to fear the loss of the power, where she seemed unsure, even scared. After her transformation, she tries to explain to Needy how "cool" it is. But her fear of losing power and losing control is magnified many times over.

Women, their power and how dreadful and fickle a weapon it can be is part of the subtext on Kusama's films. She's a smart one, and this film shows it. Plus, the film is truly scary.

OPENING THIS WEEK
SURROGATES

People are living their lives remotely from the safety of their own homes via robotic surrogates — sexy, physically perfect mechanical representations of themselves. It's an ideal world where crime, pain, fear and consequences don't exist. When the first murder in years jolts this utopia, FBI agent Greer discovers a vast conspiracy behind the surrogate phenomenon and must abandon his own surrogate, risking his life to unravel the mystery.

The film stars Bruce Willis, Radha Mitchell, Rosamund Pike, Boris Kodjoe and James Francis Ginty. It is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violence, disturbing images, language, sexuality and a drug-related scene.

FAME

A reinvention of the original 1980 hit film, Fame follows a talented group of dancers, singers, actors, and artists over four years at the New York City High School of Performing Arts, a diverse, creative powerhouse where students from all walks of life are given a chance to live out their dreams and achieve real and lasting fame ... the kind that comes only from talent, dedication, and hard work. As each student strives for his or her moment in the spotlight, they'll discover who among them has the innate talent and necessary discipline to succeed.

The film stars Kherington Payne, Anna Maria Perez de Tagle, Paul McGill, Asher Book and Kristy Flores. It is rated PG for thematic material including teen drinking, a sexual situation and language.

PANDORUM

When two men emerge from a deep sleep in the middle of space, they discover they have no memories of who they are and where they're going. But their memory loss pales in comparison to the problem of the murderous warriors on board their ship who don't want to leave anyone alive.

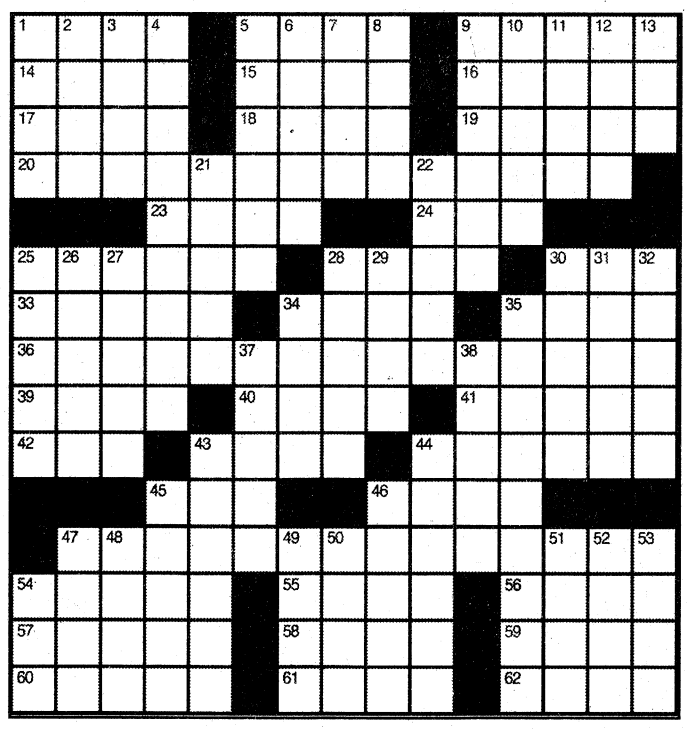
The film stars Dennis Quaid, Ben Foster, Cam Gigandet, Norman Reedus and Cung Le. It is rated R for strong horror violence and language.

NOW PLAYING
JENNIFER'S BODY

A cheerleader with the perfect life becomes the girl from hell when she gets possessed and begins killing boys in a small town.

The film stars Megan Fox, Amanda Seyfried and Johnny Simmons. It's rated R for sexuality, bloody violence, language and drug use.

CLOUDY WITH A CHANCE OF MEATBALLS



Inspired by the children's book, the film focuses on a town where food falls from the sky like rain. Bill Hader voices Flint Lockwood, a young inventor who dreams of creating something that will improve everyone's life. Anna Faris takes on the role of Sam Sparks, a weathergirl covering the phenomenon who hides her intelligence behind a perky exterior. Mr. T plays the by-the-rules town cop Earl Devereaux, and Tracy Morgan takes on the role of Earl's rule-breaking son, Cal. It's rated PG for brief mild language.

LOVE HAPPENS

When a self-help author arrives in Seattle to teach a sold-out seminar, he unexpectedly meets the one person who might finally be able to help him help himself.

The film stars Aaron Eckhart and Jennifer Aniston and is rated PG-13 for language including sexual references.

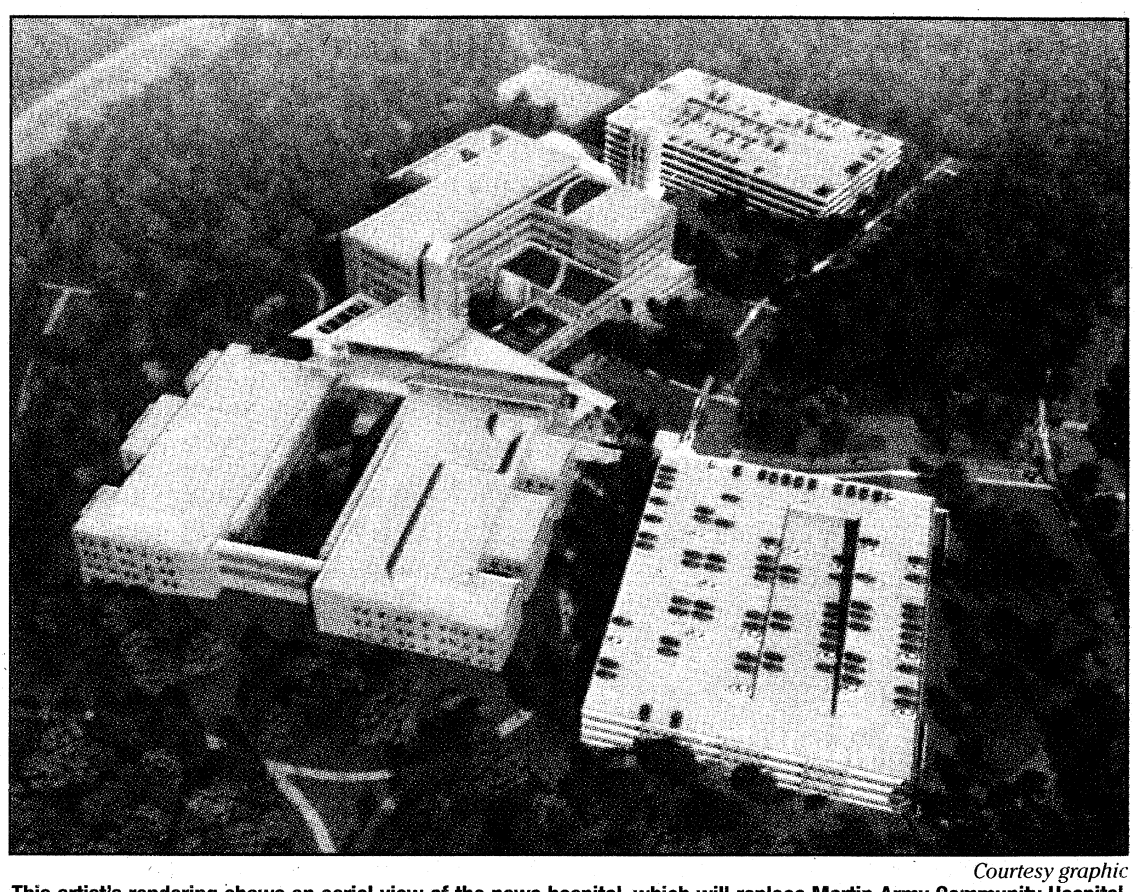
Fort Benning to get new hospital

Army COE awards $333 million contract

Tracy Ammons
U.S. ARMY CORPS OF ENGINEERS

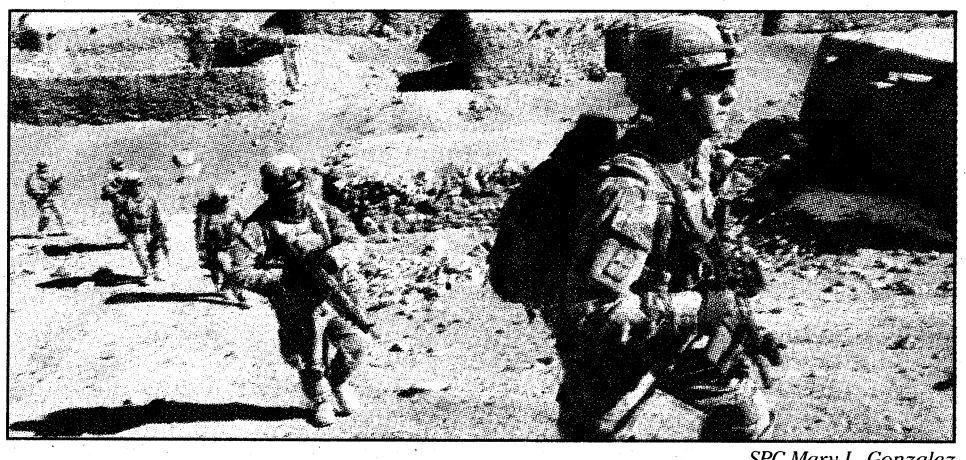
SAVANNAH, Ga. — The Savannah District of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers awarded a nearly $333 million contract Tuesday to Turner Construction Company, Inc., of Huntsville, Ala., for the design and construction of a 745,000-square-foot hospital to replace Martin Army Community Hospital.



"The goal is to provide our Soldiers, our veterans and their families with a modern medical facility that will offer the highest quality of patient care," said U.S. Representative Sanford Bishop Jr. "The contract awarded is a milestone in the process of achieving that goal."

The new facility will be almost twice the size of the current 393,000-square-foot hospital, and at $333,359,000 the contract is the district's largest award for fiscal 2009.

"We have set a high standard for the construction of this hospital," said COL Ed Kertis, commander of the Savannah District. "Our Soldiers and their families deserve nothing less."



With 70 in-patient beds, the new hospital will

Obama: Afghanistan NATO's most important mission

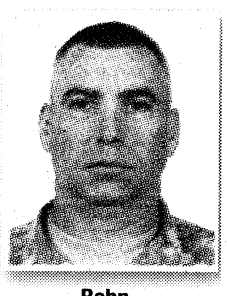
John J. Kruzel
AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama called Afghanistan the most important mission to NATO and underscored that the war there is a multinational effort. He appeared with new NATO Secretary General Anders Rasmussen at the White House Tuesday.

"We both agree that it is absolutely critical that we are successful in dismantling, disrupting, destroying the al-Qaida network and that we are effectively working with the Afghan government to provide the security necessary for that country," Obama said.

"This is not an American battle," he said, referring to the 39,000 NATO forces fighting alongside 66,000 U.S. troops in Afghanistan. "This is a NATO mission as well, and we are working actively and diligently to consult with NATO at every step of the way."

The president said he wants a new strategy in place — one that weighs the outcome of the Afghanistan election review — before committing more resources to Afghanistan.



The two leaders also discussed a new U.S. missile defense plan for Europe: a sea-based approach, which is better suited to

Post CSM picked for plum position

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

CSM Darrin Bohn leaves for Afghanistan today to become the senior enlisted adviser to the deputy commander of U.S. Forces-Afghanistan, LTG David Rodriguez.

Bohn

Rodriguez, a former deputy commander of Fort Benning, and Bohn will be heading a new intermediate headquarters under NATO's International Security Assistance Force when it stands up Oct. 18 in Kabul.

The new command will be responsible for the day-to-day operations of the war in Afghanistan.

"Our headquarters will be prosecuting the fight in Afghanistan," said Bohn, whose most recent assignment was serving as senior NCO for the 199th Infantry Brigade. "I expect our role to mirror that of Multi-National Corps-Iraq."

This will be Bohn's second tour to Afghanistan, and third deployment since the Global War on Terrorism began.

The appointment to be Rodriguez's enlisted adviser has put Bohn's plans for retirement on hold.

"I was two days away from dropping my retirement paperwork when I got the phone call," said Bohn. "It was quite a twist of fate. I couldn't pass up the opportunity to serve in this capacity."

CSM(R) Douglas Greenway, Bohn's CSM when he served as a first sergeant with the 1st Ranger Battalion, said he expects Bohn will bring a lot to the table during the transition to an intermediate headquarters in Afghanistan.

"He has a lot of combat experience," Greenway said. "He knows

Post officials monitor flu conditions

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Fort Benning officials continue to monitor the H1N1 flu conditions on the installation.

"We have had only seven viral cultures test positive for H1N1 so far," said Dr. Thomas Backsenson, chief Allergy and Public Health officer for the installation. "And while we have taken appropriate precautions with several in-patients, we have not had a confirmed hospitalized case to date.

"Thus far, it appears to cause a rather mild flu-like illness marked by fever and cough or sore throat lasting three to four days," he said. "However, it may very well transform into a more severe illness over the next few months as we enter the more traditional flu season."

Following CDC guidelines (www.cdc.gov/h1n1flu) for the diagnosis and treatment of flu-like illness means most patients presenting to the clinics with flu-like symptoms are presumed to have H1N1 and should not be tested, Backsenson said.

Appropriate treatment should include authorized absence from work or school until afebrile for at least 24 hours, he said. The full guidelines are listed at the CDC Web site.

The H1N1 vaccine is expected to be available in Homes for Our Troops launches project for injured Ranger

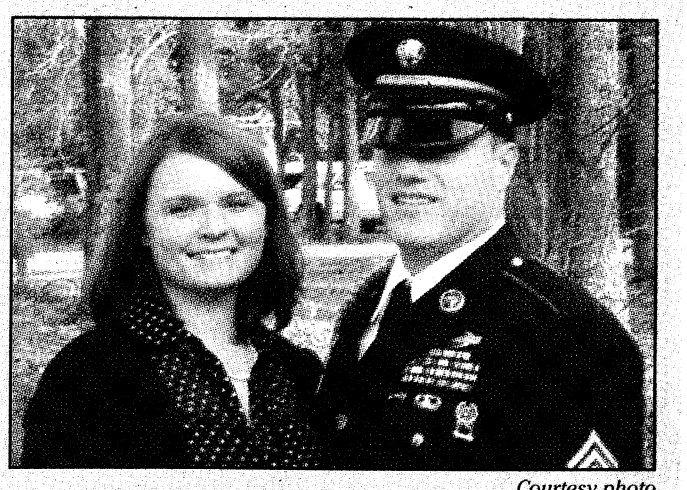
Vince Little
THE BAYONET

A Fort Benning Ranger's long journey back from a helicopter crash in Afghanistan will end in a new home next spring.



Later this month, the nonprofit organization Homes for Our Troops will break ground on the project for SSG Scot Noss of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and his wife, RyAnne. The 2,400-square-foot, four-bedroom house will be built in Trussville, Ala., a Birmingham suburb.

The Massachusetts-based group is organizing construction, recruiting volunteers and arranging for donated materials. The single-story home will be completely handicapped-accessible and include an overhead lift system.

"It's basically taking everything Scot has at the hospital and putting it in a home environment," RyAnne said. "Not only does it remove the physical barriers that exist between us now ... but it removes emotional barriers as well. I'm going to be able to have what I call 'snuggle time' again. I'll be able to lay in bed with him and watch movies, have dinner together. Here, it's such an institutional setting. Moving into a new home will bring back some normality to our marriage."

Noss, then 29, was injured Feb. 18, 2007, when the MH-47 Chinook helicopter he was riding in crashed in the mountains of southern Afghanis tan. Eight of the 22 service members on board were killed, and Noss was the most severely injured, suffering a traumatic brain injury and several broken bones.

After being stabilized in Germany, he was transferred to Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland and later to the James A. Haley Medical Center in Tampa, Fla., where he's remained for more than two years in a semiconscious state.

VARIOUS VOICES

Have you ever been to a U.S. Army Soldier Show?

I went to a Soldier Show at the Capital Center in Washington with my parents when I was a kid. I remember there was a Ranger dressed in camouflage who rappelled from the center scoreboard in the arena as part of the show. It was really good.

I've been to a few Soldier Shows. There was one at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., in 2007 that was great. I brought my 5-year-old daughter with me and she loved all the dancing and singing. They did a few gospel songs that I liked. It was July 4, so there was a fireworks show right after the concert.

— CPT Asmar Calvery

I went to a show at Fort Stewart, Ga., with my family when I was a kid. I don't remember much except that I had fun and wanted to go again. I plan to take my two teenagers with me to the show tonight.

I saw a show when I was deployed to Bosnia in 1997. I initially went there because I was bored but I ended up being surprised by the level of talent these Soldiers have and the amount of comedy they put into the show.

— SFC Thomas Thornhill

I went to a performance here in 1994 when I was a marksmanship instructor for basic trainees. I knew some of the songs they sang, but not all. I remember they had great talent.

I once worked security with the Department of the Army police guard for a show at Wetherby Field. I loved that the music was so upbeat. They did some old-school songs and some of the new stuff at the time. They put on an awesome show.

Welcome to Cavalry 101

Bridgett Siter
MCOE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

I confess, I know next to nothing about the Cavalry. To my credit, I figure I know more than half the population, who continue to call it the "Calvary," but that'll get me just so far. When the new water tower went up in Harmony Church, with "Home of the Armor and Cavalry" printed on it, I was a bit confused about the distinction. In an effort to better understand the history and lineage of the Cav, I did a little scouting on the newest frontier, the Web.

This is what I found: Historically, the word "cavalry" has always been used to describe a unit of soldiers mounted on horseback. I'm told the word is derived from a French word (the same word that gave us "chivalry") which was derived from a Latin word meaning "horse."

The earliest cavalry was classified as "light" or "heavy," depending on how much armor they wore and how sturdy their steeds. Picture a passel of knights on horseback, and you have a heavy Infantry unit. Often, cavalrymen rode into battle and dismounted to fight.

Though foot soldiers and mounted soldiers have been around ever since man first decided to choose up sides and spill blood, the cavalry was historically the more flexible and adaptive of the two. Obviously, troops on horseback moved much more quickly than Infantry units, so they covered more ground in less time and didn't tire as easily. That made them perfect for long-range reconnaissance, security and quick mass deployment.

The U.S. Cavalry was fairly "light" from the get go. In the 19th century, they took to the frontier with pistols and carbines and dismounted once they made contact with the enemy. They were lethal, reliable and indispensable right up until the First World War, when trench warfare and the introduction of the internal combustion engine rendered them less of an asset.

The tank, which was first employed on the battlefield by the Brits, was designed to solve the tactical problem of the trenches and was originally intended to be used to help the infantry clear the way for the cavalry. Turns out, it all but replaced the horse, and therefore the traditional cavalry. With increased firepower and protection, mechanized forces assumed the role of the cavalry in World War II.

The U.S. Army has not had an operational horse cavalry units since 1943. Armored units inherited the honors and traditions of the U.S. Cavalry when the Cav branch was absorbed by the Armor Branch as part of the Army Reorganization Act of 1950. For the most part, mechanized Cav units continue to use many of the same tactics and fill the same roles as their predecessors, but they do so aboard armored vehicles and helicopters.

The Army's first air Cav unit was introduced in Vietnam. The 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, with LTC Hal Moore in command, pioneered the concept of helicopters in combat during the first major engagement of that war. You probably know it now as the Battle of the Ia Drang Valley. (If you don't know it, you'll want to rent a copy of Mel Gibson's We Were Soldiers ...)

Today, the term "cavalry" generally refers to a highly mobile but compact reconnaissance unit employed where an economy of force is needed. They have, as one Web site put it, a lot of "punching power," and are best used for "shock and awe" if followed by a more deliberate, sustainable force. A Cav unit, typically long on firepower and short on "boots," compared to an Infantry or Armor unit, will rupture the defender's line and let the heavy forces pass through to finish them up.

In short, today's Cav is part of the Armor branch, though distinctive and specialized in its mission. The "and Cavalry" printed on the Harmony Church water tower is a nod to those heavy hitters, their history and traditions.

Soldiers bring talent, experience to 2009 U.S. Army Soldier Show

Kristin Molinaro
THE BAYONET

The U.S. Army Soldier Show is coming to Fort Benning today and judging from the talent, this show will be one to remember.

Looking through the bios of this year's U.S. Army Soldier Show performers, I am struck by the diversity of the talent.

Though all the performers in the all-Army cast can gather under the umbrella of singing talent, there are so many diverse hobbies and experiences among them that I'm looking forward to seeing what they bring to the show tonight.

Among the performers who caught my eye are SSG Toure Clark, winner of the 1988 Far East-American Roller Skating crown in Okinawa, Japan, and president of the Augusta, Ga.-based Jamskaters; PFC Susan Noga, a morning radio show personality before she joined the Army; and SPC Cyril Powell, the third-place finisher in the 2008 Operation Rising Star singing contest, dubbed the military's version of American Idol.

There is also SGT Jennifer Noel, who got her start after singing to patients at Walter Reed Army Medical Center; SPC Julio Petersen III, a lead vocalist for a Caribbean-Calypso band; and SSG Nafrettifi Griffin, an intelligence analyst and mother of three who graduated from the North Atlanta High School for Performing Arts. That is only six of the 15 performers and 22 total cast members of this year's show.

Scanning the rest of the bios, I saw many of them are filled with stories of finding their talents at a young age, whether in a church choir or a school band. Today these men and women serve as combat medics, supply sergeants, petroleum fuelers, explosives specialists and vehicle transporters among others. But for one year, this year, they get to live their dream of traveling worldwide and playing back-to-back concerts at 47 installations.

The stars will be shining at Wetherby Field tonight. I hope you come to see them.

This week in Fort Benning history

1993

• In response to new clothing standards enacted on post, a columnist wrote, "Post Exchange and Commissary shoppers may have noticed something new at the entrances — large noncommissioned officers with red arm bands that state 'CP.' The CP stands for Courtesy Patrol. It doesn't mean they are there to be courteous to customers ... No, they're there to ensure ragamuffins, boors and derelicts don't shop in our stores, at least until they clean up their act."

• Roger Garrity proved father knows best at the post's annual golf club championship. Roger outdistanced his son, Jarrod, by three strokes to win the "A" championship title with a two-day score of 146. Jarrod came in second at 149.

• The Better Business Bureau warned job-seekers to be wary of "help wanted" advertisements for assistant managers and manager trainees that may promise huge earnings but require no experience. The jobs, which don't advertise that selling is required, could lead to commissioned sales positions and new employees may have to pay up-front fees for bonding, training materials or product samples.

• The Allies continued their steady advance through Italy, capturing Benevento, Aversa, Maddaloni, Caserta, Capua and Naples. British commandos successfully linked up with the Canadian 78th Division at Termoli and repelled the 16th Panzer Division, forcing the Germans to abandon their positions near the city. Concurrently, the Fifth U.S. Army pressed toward the Volturno line to prepare for a later attack.

In the Aegean, the Germans seized Cos, capturing more than 3,100 Italian and 1,400 British soldiers in the process. Two British cruisers sunk seven transports and one escort ship from a German convoy heading toward the island.

On the Eastern front, the Soviets launched a new offensive in the North, taking Nevel to complement the capture of Taman in the Kuban Peninsula.
