Rainey is arguably the most famous musician to come out of Columbus, but she wasn't the first. Some would say she wasn't the best. Mark Twain might say poor Blind Tom Wiggins was the best. Twain was quite taken with the young, black musician from Columbus. So much so that he attended a "Blind Tom" concert every chance he got and wrote about the boy at length.

Tom was an autistic savant; that's what we'd call him now. Twain called him "an inspired idiot," for Tom was a gifted pianist who could mimic any composition after hearing it just once. The press of the day said Blind Tom's talent surpassed Mozart's.

The son of slaves, Tom was raised in the household of "General" Bethune, a local dignitary who actually never rose in rank beyond lieutenant. The Bethune family recognized in Tom a musical genius, and they paid for a music instructor, who said her star pupil mastered techniques and compositions within hours that it took others years to perfect.

By the time he was 9, Blind Tom was touring, packing theaters around the world, and making a small fortune for Bethune and the man he hired to promote him. Conservative estimates say poor Tom, who made about $20 a month, profited $750,000 for his owner.

Eventually, a custody battle erupted between Bethune and his daughter-in-law for reasons too complex to explain here. Tom was shuffled off to live with Eliza Bethune in New York, where he died in 1908. Some say he's buried there, but others believe Blind Tom is buried somewhere near the western boundary of the Columbus city limit.

Columbus' contributions to black music aren't limited to local performers. Others made stops here on their way to fame and fortune. The Liberty Theater, on Eighth Avenue, was built in 1924 and hosted the likes of Lena Horne, Ella Fitzgerald and Cab Calloway.

The Columbus Jail seems an unlikely spot to celebrate black music history, but it was there, at the site of the Old City Jail, that Thomas Darby and Jimmie Tarlton were inspired to write Columbus Stockade Blues in 1927. The song has been performed over and over by a variety of artists, including Bill Monroe and Willie Nelson, who used it as the title song on a CD several years ago.

Music is an integral part of black history, there's no doubt, and there's a lot to learn about that musical heritage locally on the historic trail in Columbus. There, you'll also learn about the role faith played in the lives of this area's early black residents, and their contributions to the cause of civil rights. Pick up a brochure for a self-guided tour at the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau, 900 Front Avenue, and look for more about the Heritage Trail in next week's Bayonet.

OPENING TODAY
GHOST RIDER — A motorcycle stuntman, Johnny Blaze (Nicolas Cage), makes a pact with a dark force, selling his soul to save his girlfriend (Eva Mendes).
When the bargain goes sour and the girl isn't saved, Blaze is transformed, gaining raging superpowers.
The movie is based on the Marvel comic series.
Ghost Rider is rated PG-13 for horror violence and disturbing images.

BRIDGE TO TERABITHIA — An 11-year-old boy has his life changed forever when he befriends the class outsider, a girl. Together they create the world of Terabithia, an imaginary kingdom filled with giants, trolls and other magical beings.
The Bridge to Terabithia, starring AnnaSophia Robb and Josh Hutcherson, is rated PG for thematic elements including bullying, some peril and mild language.

BREACH — Eric O'Neill (Ryan Phillippe) is promoted to a job inside FBI headquarters working for respected agent Robert Hanssen (Chris Cooper). Then O'Neill learns his true mission: finding proof that Hanssen has been selling American secrets to the Soviet Union for years.
Breach is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual content and language.

ALSO PLAYING
MUSIC AND LYRICS — Alex Fletcher (Hugh Grant) is a washed-up 80s pop star who's been reduced to working the nostalgia circuit at county fairs and amusement parks.
The charismatic and talented musician gets a chance at a comeback when the reigning diva Cora Corman invites him to write and record a duet with her, but there's a problem — Alex hasn't written a song in years, he's never written lyrics and he has to come up with a hit in a matter of days.
Enter Sophie Fisher (Drew Barrymore), Alex's beguilingly quirky plant lady, whose flair for words strikes a chord with the struggling songwriter. As their chemistry heats up at the piano, Alex and Sophie will have to face their fears — and the music — if they want to find the love and success they both deserve.
Music and Lyrics is rated PG-13 for some sexual content.

TYLER PERRY'S DADDY'S LITTLE GIRLS — A successful female attorney falls in love with a janitor, the single father of three daughters, over the objections of her father.
Tyler Perry's Daddy's Little Girls, rated PG-13 for thematic material, drug and sexual content, some violence and language, stars Gabrielle Union, Avant and Louis Gossett Jr.

HANNIBAL RISING — In Eastern Europe at the end of World War II, a young Hannibal watches as his parents violently die, leaving his young sister in his care.

Alone and without any means of support, he is forced to live in a Soviet orphanage.
He flees to Paris to find that his uncle has died, but his Japanese widow Lady Murasaki (Gong Li) welcomes him. Even her kindness and love cannot soothe the nightmares and sorrows that plague him.
Showing a cunning aptitude for science, he is accepted into medical school, which serves to hone his skills and provide him the tools to exact justice on the war criminals that haunt him day and night.
This quest will ignite an insatiable lust within a serial killer who was not born, but made.
The movie also stars Gaspard Ulliel, Rhys Ifans, Ivan Marevich and Dominic West.
Hannibal Rising is rated R for strong grisly violent content and some language and sexual references.

NORBIT — Norbit (Eddie Murphy) has never had it easy. As a baby, he was abandoned on the steps of a Chinese restaurant and orphanage and raised by Mr. Wong. T hings get worse when he's forced into marriage by the mean, junk-food chugging queen Rasputia. Just when Norbit's hanging by his last thread, his childhood sweetheart, Kate, moves back to town.
Norbit, rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, some nudity and language, also stars Thandie Newton, Cuba Gooding Jr., Eddie Griffin and Terry Crews.

BECAUSE I SAID SO — A well-intentioned but overzealous mother (Diane Keaton) goes on a mission to find Mr. Right for her youngest and unmarried daughter (Mandy Moore).
The movie also stars Gabriel Macht, Tom Everett Scott and Lauren Graham.
Because I Said So is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue, some mature thematic material and partial nudity.

THE MESSENGERS — A family moves into a rundown sunflower farm. As the farm begins to revive after years of disrepair, the family begins to notice uncomfortable and alarming changes in their father's behavior.
The Messengers, rated PG-13 for mature thematic material, disturbing violence and terror, stars Kristen Stewart, Dylan McDermott, Penelope Ann Millet and John Corbett.

EPIC MOVIE — In the spirit of Scary Movie and Date Movie, this movie is a parody that spoofs recent mega-blockbusters.
The comedy centers around four orphans who visit a chocolate factory and are transported to the wonderful land of Gnarnia after stumbling upon an enchanted wardrobe.
Kal Penn, Adam Campbell, Jayma Mays, Faune Chambers and Jennifer

Coolidge star in the movie.
Epic Movie is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language and some comic violence.

CATCH AND RELEASE — A woman (Jennifer Garner) must deal with the untimely death of her husband and the revelation of secrets he kept from her.
Also starring in the movie are Timothy Olyphant, Juliette Lewis, Sam Jaeger and Fiona Shaw.
Catch and Release is rated PG-13 for sexual content, language and some drug use.

SMOKIN' ACES — Mob boss Primo Sparazza has taken out a hefty contract on Buddy "Aces" Israel, a sleazy magician who has agreed to turn state's evidence against the Vegas mob.
The FBI, sensing a chance to use this small-time con to bring down big-target Sparazza, places Aces into protective custody, under the supervision of two agents dispatched to Aces' Lake Tahoe hideout.
When the word of the price on Aces' head spreads, it entices bounty hunters, thugs-for-hire, deadly vixens and double-crossing mobsters to join in the hunt. With all eyes on Tahoe, this rogues' gallery collides in a comic race to hit the jackpot and rub out Aces.
Smokin' Aces, rated R for strong bloody violence, pervasive language, some nudity and drug use, stars Ben Affleck, Jeremy Piven, Ryan Reynolds, Andy Garcia and Alicia Keys.

VIEW FROM THE COUCH

ZAP2IT

NEW RELEASES
BABEL — Now in the running for seven Academy Awards including best picture, director Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu's intense drama takes an approach similar to his earlier drama 21 Grams — or, for that matter, the Oscar-winning Crash — by drawing a number of people into a shared situation through tragedy.
Brad Pitt and Cate Blanchett play a couple caught up in the resulting turmoil; co-stars Adriana Barraza and Rinko Kikuchi are Oscar contenders for best supporting actress. DVD extras: theatrical trailer; three "making-of" documentaries. (R:AS, N, P, V)

FLUSHED AWAY — Lots of 2006 movies featured animated animals, but only one took place largely in a sewer system. This comedy follows the trek of a pet mouse (voice of Hugh Jackman) whose efforts to get a rat out of his place in a posh London apartment backfire big-time. He ends up beneath the city and gets guidance from an equally displaced ally (voice of Kate Winslet), but some sinister opponents (voices of Ian McKellen, Andy Serkis and Bill Nighy) generate trouble. Jean Reno also is heard. (PG:AS, P)

Tragedy strikes a married couple on vacation in the Moroccan desert, touching off an interlocking story involving six different families. Photo courtesy of imdb.com personality who makes a bid for the White House as a lark — and the result is a surprise, especially to an employee (Laura Linney) of the company that supplied the voting machines. Christopher Walken, Jeff Goldblum and comic Lewis Black also star. (PG-13:AS, P, V)

COMING SOON
STRANGER THAN FICTION — (Feb. 27): An IRS man (Will Ferrell) is stunned to discover he is a character in a novel by an author (Emma Thompson) who controls his fate. (PG-13:AS, P)

BORAT: CULTURAL LEARNINGS OF AMERICA FOR MAKE BENEFIT GLORIOUS NATION OF KAZAKHSTAN — (March 6): Sacha Baron Cohen plays the foreign reporter who visits the United States in the comedy hit. (R)

FAMILY VIEWING GUIDE KEY: AS, adult situations; N, nudity; P, profanity; V, violence; GV, particularly graphic violence.

THINGS to do

The Lion, The Witch & The Wardrobe TODAY

In this musical, Theatreworks USA translates C.S. Lewis' tale of four children in war-torn England who accidentally enter the land of Narnia by climbing through a magic wardrobe.

The performance will be at 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. today on the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Stage. Tickets are $5-$12 with group rates available.

New exhibit sheds light on Civil War

*Chattahoochee Valley native sent letters home,
kept journals, maps*

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Robert A. Hardaway was a lieutenant colonel of artillery in the Confederate Army during the Civil War. He participated in nearly every campaign of Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia.

And he grew up right here in the Chattahoochee Valley. Hardaway is the focus of a new exhibit at the Columbus Museum. A Life in Letters: Lt. Col. Robert A. Hardaway in the Civil War and the New South will be open until July 29.

His words can be read throughout the exhibit where many letters, as well as journals and other documents, are on display.

The museum wanted the letters to tell the story as much as possible, and quotes were put on display where they best illustrated a point, said Mike Bunn, assistant curator of history.

The letters, mostly written to his wife, Rebecca, provide a unique look at the war, according to the exhibit brochure.

"He had a sense of humor, and he was pretty opinionated," Bunn said.

One of Bunn's favorite quotes from Hardaway's letters deals with fate.

"We are now ordered off immediately to the front, the report being that the Yankees were pressing ... You will have heard by telegraph long before this tardy missive reaches you. In that time a great battle with all its mighty issues of life and death may have been decided," Frank wrote to his wife on Nov. 15, 1863.

Hardaway was an avid journal keeper and amateur cartographer. He drew maps of the places he went during the war and sent them home to his wife.

One of the most interesting artifacts on display is a Freedman's contract that detailed how much newly-free slaves would be paid to continue working on the farm after the war, Bunn said. Many plantation owners in the area created such Freedman's contracts after the war.

The exhibit looks at the Civil War's impact on Columbus as Hardaway mastered the use of the Whitworth cannon, a piece of advanced artillery manufactured in England. Most of the artillery in the Civil War was accurate at distances of one mile, but the Whitworth was accurate more than three miles under Hardaway's command. The uniform is a reproduction of the style that Hardaway would have worn during the war.

well as Hardaway. Union troops attacked and burned Columbus in April 1865. On exhibit is a letter from the Confederate commander of a Columbus unit telling the city that the Union troops were coming.

Columbus was a Confederate industrial center during the war, and many items, including cloth, uniforms, rifles, shoes, tents, drums and war ships, were manufactured here.

On display is a homemade uniform worn by a man from Chattahoochee County who is an ancestor of Jimmy Carter and who served with the Chattahoochee Rangers in 1961.

Hardaway organized his own volunteer unit at the start of the Civil War and advertised in the local newspapers for "stout and able" men.

Born in Morgan County, Ga., Hardaway and his family moved to Columbus when he was 4 years old. It was here that his interests in the military and engineering were first developed. In college, Hardaway served in the corps of cadets and volunteered to serve in the Mexican War, which ended shortly after he arrived.

After college, Hardaway married a girl from Wynnton, which was just outside of Columbus in 1857, and they had three sons, one of whom died early in life.

Hardaway and his volunteer unit had their first encounter of the war at the Battle of Bull Run, and Hardaway went on to fight in many notable battles, including the Battle of Antietam and the siege of Petersburg.

He missed the Battle of Gettysburg because he grew sick shortly before and was sent home to Columbus to recuperate.

By the end of the war, he had been promoted to lieutenant colonel, injured twice and participated in more than 100 battles.

"You can not appreciate the great physical and mental labor of watching a battle in full view for eight hours," Hardaway said in 1861.

A timeline on the back wall of the exhibit shows Hardaway's progression through the war and the conflicts he was involved in.

Hardaway was best known for his mastery of the use of Whitworth cannons, advanced artillery made in England. Most artillery in the war was accurate at distances of a mile or less, but the Whitworth, under Hardaway's command, was accurate more than three miles.

"Hardaway understood how to work it better than most," Bunn said.

A Whitworth cannon is on loan to the museum and is displayed in the Hardaway exhibit. Two of the cannons used by Hardaway's unit are on display at the Gettysburg National Military Park.

This mastery of machinery took Hardaway into his next pursuit — teaching engineering. He returned to Columbus after the war and operated his farm until 1872, when he began an eight-year tenure as one of the first professors of engineering at the college that is now Auburn University. He later became head of the engineering department at the University of Alabama.

Hardaway died in 1899 at his sister's house in Columbus after suffering what appeared to be a stroke. He is buried in Linwood Cemetery in Columbus.

The exhibit was made possible by the donation of the letters and many more artifacts by the Hardaway family. Benjamin H. Hardaway III is the great grandson of Lt. Col. Hardaway and is a member of the museum.

The Columbus Museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road. For more information, call 706-748-2562 or go to www.columbusmuseum.com.

You can not appreciate the great watching a battle in full view for eight hours.

— Lt. Col. Robert A. Hardaway

Lt. Col. Robert A. Hardaway grew up in Columbus and eastern Alabama and served in the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia during the Civil War. Many of his letters, journals and maps survived the war and have been used in a new exhibit at the Columbus Museum.

Medical clinic opens on Main Post

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, left, Fort Benning's commanding general, Col. Margaret Rivera, the commander of Martin Army Community Hospital, and Brig. Gen. Donald Bradshaw, the commander of the Southeast Regional Medical Command, celebrate the opening of the post's new medical clinic.

A new outpatient health care facility, which will serve more than 10,500 active-duty troops on Fort Benning, opened on Main Post Thursday with a ribbon cutting ceremony.

The Consolidated Troop Medical Clinic will provide sick call, primary care, immunizations, audiology, pharmacy services, physical therapy, digital radiology and conduct minor procedures and treatments.

The CTMC, located at 2515 Sightseeing Road, replaces Troop Medical Clinics 1 and 2 and the Aviation Medicine clinic. The consolidated clinic will serve all Main Post Soldiers, including troops from the 11th Infantry Regiment, the 29th Infantry Regiment,

'No excuses' for Walter Reed problems

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Fred W. Baker III

WASHINGTON — Senior defense officials said Wednesday they take full responsibility for the recently reported poor-quality outpatient housing and bureaucratic hassles some service members have experienced at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, and offered up a "no excuses" approach to fixing the problems.

"Several matters reported ... are serious matters. They deserve immediate attention, and they are getting immediate attention," Dr. William Winkenwerder Jr., assistant defense secretary for health affairs, said at a Pentagon briefing. "They are problems that need (to be) fixed and fixed immediately," he said.

Benning mourns Soldier killed in Iraq

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

Sgt. James Regan, 26, of Manhasset, N.Y., died Feb. 9 in Northern Iraq while conducting combat operations.

Regan, a fire team leader with 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, died when his vehicle was struck by an improvised explosive device.

He joined the Army after graduating from Duke University where he earned a degree in economics while playing mid-fielder for the lacrosse team that reached the ACC Championships in 2001 and 2002 and the Final Four in 2002.

Regan was a three-time veteran of the Global War on Terrorism, deploying in support of operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom.

His mother, Mary Regan of Manhasset, told the Manhasset Press she always knew when her son was happy.

Sgt. James Regan died Feb. 9 in Northern Iraq while conducting combat operations.

"He would hop up on the kitchen counter and talk about whatever was on his mind. We knew Jimmy was happy doing whatever it was he was doing with the Rangers," she said.

"We knew not to ask any questions, but we could tell how proud he was being a Ranger."

His fiancée, Mary McHugh, a medical student at Emory University in Atlanta, told the Manhasset Press, that once while discussing Regan's decision to join the Rangers, he asked, "If I don't do this, who will?"

Regan and McHugh planned a March 2008 wedding, a month after his enlistment was to end.

During Regan's funeral, his father, James Regan, called his son a warrior with a spirit that drew others to him, Newday.com reported.

"Warriors are never forgotten," his father said. "A true patriot. My son Jimbo."

In an online guest book for Regan, a high school classmate described Regan as an outstanding person.

"Either in the halls of Chaminade (High School) or on the field, he was always friendly and a true gentleman. I am proud to have known him," he wrote.

"I hope that one day when I have children, they will be half as great as Jimmy. One day I will teach them about true heroes and true character ... I will teach them about Jimmy."

Regan was posthumously awarded the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart and the Meritorious Service Medal. His awards and decorations include the Army Achievement Medal, Army Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Afghanistan Campaign Medal, Iraq Campaign Medal, Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Ranger Tab and Parachutist Badge.

Regan will be buried at Arlington National Cemetery.

OCS Soldier dies in accident

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

A Soldier with the Officer Candidate's School was killed in a car accident at 1 a.m. Feb. 11 on Interstate 185 near LaGrange, Ga.

Officer Candidate Andrew N. Toney was driving to Fort Benning after visiting a friend in Atlanta, when another driver crossed the median and collided with Toney's car head-on. Both died from the injuries sustained in the crash. The cause of the accident is under investigation.

Toney, 35, was assigned to C Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and had started OCS Jan. 8. The 35-year-old enlisted in the Reserves in the fall and attended basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C. Before enlisting, he was a graphic designer for a cruise ship company and he was planning to become a signal officer.

"He was here just long enough to have a positive impact on our company," said Maj. Matthew Morgan, Toney's company commander. "Usually in a company of 160, people are not too close yet. Usually it would affect his squad, his platoon — but when I told the company what happened, there wasn't a dry eye in the place. It was obvious he'd had a significant impact."

Officer Candidate Aaron Foist was Toney's roommate, and spoke at the memorial service OCS had for Toney Feb. 15. Toney joined the Army because he wanted to serve his country, Foist said.

"He didn't want to look back when he was an old man and regret that he never served," Foist said. "I really respected him for that. He had a personality that drew people in, and he never complained," Foist said.

Foist recalled when Toney tried to build a "hooch" to sleep in when the company was in the field. He had never built one, so working with another candidate, they used three ponchos and built "a big hooch that looked like a circus tent," Foist said.

"Of course it rained and all his stuff got soaked, but he just laughed about it, and said, live and learn."

Training Soldiers is at heart of our mission

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

The U.S. Army Infantry Center has many missions. First, and foremost, we support the Global War on Terrorism. Second, we provide the nation with the world's best trained Infantry Soldiers and adaptive leaders imbued with the Warrior Ethos. Third, we provide a power projection platform capable of deploying and redeploying Soldiers, civilians, and units anywhere in the world on short notice. Fourth, as the proponent for the Infantryman and all U.S. Army Soldiers, we define the required capabilities for our Infantry to meet the needs of the future force.

Finally, we constantly strive to improve the quality of life for all Soldiers, family members, and civilians who call Fort Benning home. All of these missions are important, but training Soldiers is the core of what we do, and is the focus of my column this week.

It's difficult to give an adequate update of the training that goes on at Fort Benning each week. We train more than 75,000 Soldiers a year, and on any given day, more than 13,000 Soldiers train on post, and in our surrounding training areas. We train seven days a week, 50 weeks a year, and conduct 51 high-risk training events on a recurring basis. During the summer months, the number of Soldiers in training swells to well more than 14,000. The risk factor grows exponentially with extremes of temperature and humidity so apparent in this part of the country.

After the holiday break, training here has picked up again. Most of our battalions on Sand Hill conducting basic training and Infantry one station unit training are beginning to see the effects of the "summer surge." Recruiting remains a real success story for our Army, with active Army recruiting almost 10 percent ahead of projections for fiscal 07 for the first three months of the fiscal year, and this translates into an expected full load on Sand Hill this spring and peak training throughout the summer.

Our drill sergeants and cadre feel the effects of this positive recruiting trend, with increased numbers of Soldiers arriving at Fort Benning this month, and more expected during the coming months. Drill sergeants remain a key asset at Fort Benning, and a tremendous force multiplier, transforming civilians into Soldiers on a daily basis. I invite everyone to attend any of the graduations of basic training and OSUT companies on Thursday or Friday on Sand Hill. You'll be amazed at the quality and focus of the young Soldiers joining our Army.

The numbers of officers in training here also increased after the holidays. Basic Officer Leadership Course I at OCS is training hard, and producing lieutenants in near record numbers for our Army. They're also preparing for the annual OCS Hall of Fame Induction Ceremony 3 p.m. March 30 in Marshall Auditorium. Second lieutenants in training with Basic Officer Leadership Course II are also training in increased numbers, and the forward operating base they train out of on Jamestown Road is operating at peak capacity. Infantry lieutenants in BOLC III are constantly in the field, honing their skills, expanding their knowledge from the fundamentals taught in BOLC II, and preparing for the rigors associated with leading a platoon of Infantrymen on today's battlefield — an awesome responsibility.

Airborne and Ranger School classes are near peak capacity. Many of you may have noticed a rare Sunday morning Airborne jump last week, because of the double-capacity class we had in session. Ranger School is full because of the large number of Infantry lieutenants graduating from BOLC III right before the holidays, and starting Ranger School in January and February. The Ranger Training Brigade reports that nearly 300 Rangers jumped last weekend, signifying the completion of their assessment phase.

The Reconnaissance and Surveillance Leaders Course continues to train leaders while construction on a new training compound continues. The compound, which should be completed in the June-July timeframe, will allow us to increase the number of reconnaissance Soldiers trained at this critical functional course. Meanwhile, the Rangers are preparing for the annual Best Ranger Competition April 20-23.

As always, 29th Infantry Regiment continues to support all of our training. They run our ranges, and conduct the majority of our functional training. Just a few of these courses include the Sniper Course, Long Range Marksman Course, Infantry Mortar Leaders Course, Stryker and Bradley Leader Courses, Master Gunner Course, Combatives and Javelin Course. The 29th is validating the Expert Infantry Badge test site, in preparation for EIB training and testing on Burroughs Range through March 8. The EIB Award ceremony is scheduled for March 8.

Finally, the NCO Academy continues training adaptive through instruction in the Warrior Leader's Course, BNCOC, ANCO, and Drill Sergeant's School. The Force Generation requirements on our tactical units are changing the way the NCO Academy provides NCOA courses. We are adapting to the needs of the Army by providing Mobile Training Teams for BNCOC as well as resident training in all other courses. One BNCOC MTT is currently training at Fort Carson, Colo. Other BNCOC MTTs are scheduled throughout the year as demand on BNCOC and other NCOA courses continue to grow throughout the force.

We cannot talk about training without recognizing our units preparing for deployment and the units conducting reintegration training after deployments. We train 365 days a year at our CONUS Replacement Center, we welcomed home the 14th Combat Support Hospital and are working with the Sledgehammer Brigade as it prepares for its deployment to Iraq. We will also work with the rear detachment and family readiness groups throughout the deployment.

As mentioned earlier, training is the heart of all that we do at Fort Benning, and it's a responsibility I take very seriously. As we transform to the Maneuver Center of Excellence, training will continue to grow at Fort Benning and get better with the integration of Armor and Cavalry Soldiers throughout our population.

A friend of mine recently told me "Sir, with the Armor and Cavalry coming to Fort Benning, things aren't going to be the same." I told him, as I've mentioned many times since, "You're right — it'll be better!" Follow Me!

File this one under D for 'duh'

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

It's Wednesday, deadline is looming and I feel a headache coming on. I'm having trouble concentrating. It's probably The Bug that's going around. Does it feel hot in here to you?

I'm sure I'm coming down with something contagious, because I just read about a research study by a University of Arizona professor that said my desk harbors more bacteria than the restroom down the hall. Not my desk, specifically, but women's desks in general.

Wait a minute, I have the report here somewhere on my desk. Let's see, oh, here's the sick leave form I was looking for yesterday. The guy who sits across from me asked me to turn it in to the boss for him when he went home sick the other day. Guess I'm a little late.

Oh, look, here's that sweet Valentine McKenzie made for me when she stayed home sick from school last week. I'm going to tack it to the bulletin board.

And here's the take-out menu from China King. The boss brought it to me when I worked through lunch last week. He said it's a great place to eat.

Aha, here it is, the report. Says here that the woman's workspace has three to four times the number of bacteria as her male counterpart's, because she interacts with small children more frequently, she eats at her desk, and keeps it filled with snacks.

Geez, that reminds me, I'm supposed to bring in cupcakes tomorrow. It was someone else's turn, but his wife is out of town, so he asked me to do it. No big deal.

Where was I? Anyway, Professor Charles Gerba was "really surprised how much food there was in a woman's desk. If there's ever a famine, that's the first place I'll look for food," he said.

He wouldn't find any in my desk. The guys polished off my peanut butter crackers after lunch yesterday. I'd better stop by the Commissary on the way home.

Gerba did say the worst "office germ offender" is men's wallets followed closely by the "personal digital assistant."

"Men tend to play with their Palm Pilots more," Gerba said. "I think they're playing video games or something."

On the women's desks, it's the nasty phones. They're riddled with cooties, he said. Uh oh, speaking of — I'd better answer that phone for him. He looks really busy with his, umm, Palm Pilot. Excuse me.

I'm back. I'd better wrap this up. The bottom line, according to Gerba, is that the average woman's desktop has 400 times more bacteria than the average toilet seat. I think, perhaps, I'm above average. Maybe that's why I'm feeling a bit flush.

This week in Bayonet history

- The Silver Star was awarded posthumously to Staff Sgt. Eddie Smith, a Fort Benning Soldier and Columbus native, who was killed Oct. 4, 1964, in Vietnam. Smith was wounded during an ambush, but he ran between Soldiers' positions to organize defenses. The medal was presented to Smith's 2-year-old son, Eddie, and Smith's daughter.
- Post allocated $4 million for improvements to Lawson Army Airfield, including constructing a second runway, extending and paving the taxiway and building a flight-control tower and operations building.
- The Army accepted two XV5A research aircraft that combined "helicopter mobility with jet aircraft performance."
- The Army announced its floating nuclear power plant was 60 percent complete. When complete, the plant would produce enough power to support a city of 20,000 people.

Clinic: Opens on Main Post for outpatient services

the 13th Combat Sustainment Support Battalion, the 11th Engineer Battalion, the Military Police Battalion, Aviation Medicine, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security and the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Maj. Gen. Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, and Col. Margaret Rivera, MACH's current commander, cut the ribbon with Bradshaw to mark the official grand opening of the CTMC.

"Today is a great day to celebrate this new facility," Bradshaw said. "This clinic represents a huge leap forward in the medical support that the medical command can provide to Fort Benning."

The new consolidated clinic brings MEDDAC into the 21st century of health care, so medical personnel can treat the well being of Soldiers, beyond just the physical needs, Bradshaw said.

"The ability we have to provide all services in one building will have a definite impact on the quality of care we can provide," Bradshaw said.

"This clinic represents a huge leap forward in the medical support that the medical command can provide to Fort Benning."

— Brig. Gen. Donald Bradshaw, commander, Southeast Regional Medical Command

"This should result in less loss of training and work hours for the Soldiers of Fort Benning," he said.

Wojdakowski recognized key personnel who were instrumental during the CTMC project. The Savannah District Corps of Engineers and the Health Facility Planning Agency also recognized those who had contributed.

Reed: Problems at hospital to be fixed, officials say

Officials are putting together an independent review group that will report back with recommendations to the offices of the secretaries of the Army and Navy, as well as Winkenwerder's office, he said. Meanwhile necessary repairs and leadership changes are being made.

Winkenwerder emphasized that none of the reported complaints cited the medical care of the wounded service members or the treatment of their families by the medical staff at Walter Reed. The concerns lay solely with caring for the "whole person" as the service members and their families worked through the outpatient care process, Winkenwerder said.

Army Secretary Francis J. Harvey and Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Richard Cody visited Building 18 Tuesday, a former hotel near the medical center that houses some Walter Reed outpatients and their families. Cody said they were "absolutely disappointed" in the living conditions there and that there had been a breakdown in leadership. He called the delays in the repairs to the building "inexcusable." Cody said he is a frequent visitor to the medical center facilities and has regular conversations with the staff, service members and families there. Even so, he said, he was caught off guard by the reports.

"I am disappointed that I had to learn about the conditions of that building through media reports," Cody said.

Winkenwerder and Cody both said they had received no complaints about Building 18.

"That is not an excuse. ... Clearly, we've had a breakdown in leadership, and a bureaucratic medical and contractual process bogged down a speedy solution to these problems," Cody said. "I can assure you the appropriate vigor and leadership is being applied to this issue, and we will correct any problems immediately."

Cody said he personally will oversee the plan to upgrade Building 18. "I'll take responsibility. I am the vice chief of staff of the Army," Cody said. "I'll take responsibility for this, and I'll make sure it's fixed."

Building 18 is located on Georgia Avenue. It has 54 double rooms, with 76 service members living there. Each room has a private bath, a sink and a refrigerator. Cody said he found that the conditions at the building ranged from good to "not very good." But, said he said, the conditions at the home are not indicative of the facilities most wounded service members enjoy at the medical facility.

"This is an anomaly that is going to be fixed," Cody said. Cody also addressed reported complaints of patients unable to make or meet appointments and of other scheduling problems. He said officials will open a one-stop family assistance center at Walter Reed.

"The Army leadership is committed and dedicated to ensuring that (service members') quality of life and the quality of their medical care is equal to their quality of service and sacrifice," Cody said. Winkenwerder acknowledged that because of the problems, officials will have to work to rebuild the trust that has been lost.

"The trust has clearly taken a hit here," he said. "I think it's our job to repair that trust, to re-earn that trust, and that's what we intend to do."

Both Winkenwerder and Cody said funds are available for all needed repairs. The Walter Reed Health Care system includes 10 major treatment facilities in three states. The system boasts a staff of 6,000 that includes more than 600 Army physicians. It provides care for more than 150,000 Soldiers, other service members, family members and retirees in the National Capital Area.

Soldier: Driving back to Fort Benning when accident occurred

Toney loved to surf and was very athletic, Morgan said.

"He led in everything he could. He led runs; he had one of the highest PT scores, and clearly wanted to serve. He was a great guy."

A few days before a major exam, Toney had volunteered to sing cadence during a run. Instead of singing, he quizzed the group on test questions.

"I'd never heard anyone do that," Foist said. "He was creative, a really exceptional individual. He cared about other people. I miss him."

Toney was originally from Virginia, but lived in Miramar, Fla., with his wife, Alicia, and her 11-year-old daughter. His wife is pregnant and due in the spring. Toney was planning to drive home during the President's Day weekend to visit his family.

Friends and family have started a college fund for Toney's children.

Donation brings Infantry allies closer

NATIONAL INFANTRY ASSOCIATION
Cyndy Cerbin

Joon Hyung Ryu's eyes lit up when he entered the old barracks building on World War II Company Street. It was a place he hadn't seen in more than 50 years, but it hadn't changed a bit.

Ryu is now 77 years old, a retired major general from the Republic of Korea Army. He traveled from Seoul to Columbus to help Korean Consul General Kwang-Jae Lee present a donation of $500,000 to the new National Infantry Museum. Following the check presentation ceremony, the group toured the newly restored World War II Company Street.

For Ryu, it was a flashback to the 1950s, when he attended the Advanced Officers Course and Airborne school at Fort Benning. Metal bunks still ring the room, footlockers and weapons racks line the aisle down the middle. The general took in the familiar sights then sent an aide to retrieve something from his briefcase. It was a small photo album containing snapshots of Ryu as a young man at Fort Benning, including one of him standing in front of barracks identical to this one. He also showed off his old Airborne jump log which recorded 76 jumps and his climb in rank from captain to lieutenant colonel while at Benning.

That is why the Korean government stepped up to join the campaign to build a new National Infantry Museum in the United States.

"This is symbolic of our people's appreciation for the American soldiers who sacrificed their precious lives to protect our fledgling democracy," Lee said at the ceremony. He called the donation "modest" and said he hopes his government can do more to honor American Infantrymen.

Ryu's goal, too, is to honor all Infantrymen.

"I hope this ceremony contributes to the freedom and peace of the world, and promotes the friendship between our two countries," he said.

Ryu hopes his own country can do more to recognize the sacrifices of Korean soldiers. He intends to form an association there modeled after the National Infantry Association here.

The Republic of Korea's donation comes just three months after Seoul-based Samsung Electronics made a million dollar pledge to the new National Infantry Museum and Heritage Park. The donations bring the total raised to $60 million. Crews have already begun construction on the site along Benning Boulevard; completion of the new 160,000-square-foot, $85 million museum is expected in 2008.

Beware phishing attempts

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

"Phishing" scams continue to be a problem for the general public, but phishing for Department of Defense information is a threat to operational security, according to the DoD's information assurance awareness Web site.

Phishing e-mails are unsolicited messages that claim to be from a business or organization, but come from a fraudulent source. Phishers try to trick e-mail recipients into providing personal information, such as account numbers, credit card numbers, user names, Social Security numbers, passwords or other sensitive information.

"Spear phishing" is a scam in which phishers target a specific organization to try to gain inside information. Spear phishing e-mails appear to come from an authority within the organization. Once employees reveal information, phishers can install software, spyware, or viruses that could potentially steal information. Software secretly installed can capture keystroke information, and read and send files without the user knowing.

"Phishing is an ongoing threat to Department of Defense personnel," said Carol Vasko-Norman, Fort Benning Information Assurance manager. "We see phishing messages every day. The DoD was so concerned about the threat from phishing that we conducted phishing training briefs for all DoD computer users."

One of the current phishing e-mails targeting government employees claims to be from Bank of America, and asks people to update their profile information for their government credit card. In 2006, phishers targeted Thrift Savings Plan participants, and sent fake emails claiming to be from the Internal Revenue Service.

Another method involves finding government employees' e-mail addresses and sending an e-mail that appears to be from a help desk. Messages may refer to other people in the organization, or address recipients by name.

DoD training also refers to "social engineering," which is when callers seek information while posing as an official caller. One of the most common tactics is pretending to be a help desk representative, and ask for user name, password or other sensitive information.

Phishers have also used instant messages and text messages.

"Phishing messages can look very legitimate," Vasko-Norman said. "We see very slick messages and have even seen cloned Web pages. We caution folks to never respond to an unsolicited e-mail message. If it's someone you do business with — a bank, credit card company, cell phone company, even your insurance agent — contact them directly by phone."

The DoD suggests several ways to avoid become a victim of a phishing scam

- Digitally sign and encrypt all messages containing sensitive data such as: For Official Use Only; Privacy Act information; medical information protected by HIPAA; foreign government information; technical and contract data; proprietary information; financial information and source selection information.

- Under the DoD's Data at Rest policy, sensitive information saved on laptops or thumb drives should be stored in a secure encrypting file system folder.

- If you believe DoD information may have been compromised, immediately inform a supervisor or quality assurance manager.

- If you receive a request for information from a help desk or authority within the organization that sounds suspicious, double check with a quick telephone call.

- Be suspicious of any e-mail with urgent requests for personal information. Phishers typically include upsetting or exciting statements in their e-mails to get people to react immediately.

- Never use the link in an e-mail to go to a Web page, if you suspect the message is not authentic. Type the Web address or call the company.

- Avoid filling out forms in e-mails that ask for personal information.

- Only communicate personal or financial information via a secure Web site or telephone. Some sites place secure symbols or company logos on their e-mails or create fake web pages. The Web address of secure sites should begin with https:// rather than http://.

- Regularly log into your online accounts and check over information for accuracy. Change your password often.

- Immediately contact your financial institution and credit card issuers if you see any discrepancy.

Chief of Infantry Reading List updated, in libraries

Books provide insight into what Soldiers deal with today

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Soldiers who are deploying soon and anyone looking to learn more about the Army's current conflicts can turn to the recently updated Chief of Infantry Reading List, which is a list of books relevant to the Global War on Terrorism.

The books provide people's experiences from many different conflicts but they all provide insight into the things Soldiers are dealing with today, said Russell Eno, editor of Infantry Magazine, who was on the board that created the new list.

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, wanted the reading list updated with selections relevant to the Global War on Terrorism, Eno said.

"Most of the books are new to the list," said Teri Boscia, reference librarian at Donovan Research Library.

A working group was put together to review the Chief of Infantry Reading List and create a new one. There are many reading lists out there, Eno said, and many people with different opinions on what officers and NCOs should know. The Chief of Infantry Reading List includes books not found on those lists, Eno said.

The list is broken down into four sections — junior NCOs, senior NCOs, lieutenants and captains — and each has books relevant to the different jobs each group does, he said.

The books were chosen to be the most useful in helping Soldiers do their job better, Eno said, and they cover experiences of combat and cultural awareness, which is a very relevant topic.

"A number of the books deal with local indigenous populations," Eno said. The Army has always dealt with indigenous populations in conflicts, he said.

"Soldiers can learn from the experiences of those who have been where they're going," Eno said, and they can learn about the enemy they're facing.

Black Hawk Down is a title that particularly stands out to Eno because it shows the courage and tenacity of American Soldiers. The book gives an idea of an enemy that's similar to the enemy Soldiers are fighting today — one that's not very technologically advanced but is very determined and brave, he said.

Eno also recommends Lost in Translation: Vietnam — A Combat Advisor's Story, having been an advisor in Vietnam himself. The book takes a good, accurate look at teaching tactics, he said.

The Donovan Research Library on the first floor of Infantry Hall has a section devoted to the reading list, as does Sayers Memorial Library.

Both libraries will soon have multiple copies of all the titles on the reading list, Boscia said, and the books can be checked out.

The shoppette in Infantry Hall will have the books for sale, Boscia said.

To see the reading list online, go to www.benning.army.mil and click on the link for the Chief of Infantry Reading List in the middle of the page. The list is in a PowerPoint document that will begin downloading when you click on the link.

Two of the books are online in their entirety at <http://stinet.dtic.mil>. The Bear Went Over the Mountain: Soviet Combat Tactics in Afghanistan and The Other Side of the Mountain: Mujabideen Tactics in the Soviet Afghan War can be viewed at the Web site by searching by title.

WHAT'S HAPPENING around Post

USAIOF BRIEFING AND RECRUITING VISIT

The U.S. Army Information Operations Proponent will conduct an informational briefing and recruiting visit for Functional Area 30 (Information Operations) in Infantry Hall, Room W210 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. to noon Wednesday.

The brief is targeted for year group 1999-2004 officers and will provide information on IO duties, assignment possibilities, promotion potential and the career designation board process.

There are advanced degree opportunities in IO for qualified officers.

To set up your preferred appointment time, e-mail David Pendleton, the USAIOF Senior Personnel Analyst, at Henry.David.Pendleton@us.army.mil or call 913-684-5320 (DSN 552).

Walk-ins are encouraged.

RECLAMATION SALE

There will be a reclamation sale from 8 a.m. to noon March 2 at Building 224A on Upton Avenue. Cash is the only form of payment accepted.

For more information, call 706-545-1972 or 706-545-1104.

BRAC COMMUNITY UPDATES

The Base Realignment and Closure Community Updates are at 3 p.m. the first Tuesday of each month in Classroom 6 in Infantry Hall.

The next update will be March 6.

The updates are open to the on and off-post communities to ensure they remain informed and knowledgeable of the Fort Benning growth planning.

For more information, call John Brown at 706-545-4729.

TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with a valid ID card.

Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible to ensure a fast refund.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: a valid ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater.

Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH LUNCHEON

The Equal Opportunity Office will host a luncheon from 11:30 to 1 p.m. March 15 at the Benning Club. This year's theme is "Generations of Women Moving History Forward."

For tickets, contact your unit's EO advisor or call the main office at 706-545-6665.

RIVERWALK CLOSURE

The Fort Benning Riverwalk between the access control point and 10th Mountain Division Road (about one half-mile) is closed through March 19.

This closure is necessary for Columbus Water Works to install new underground sewer lines.

All lanes of traffic on Benning Boulevard will remain open.

ARMY SEEKS RECOMMENDATIONS

The Army is accepting design ideas through March 31 for the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and motto for the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

Soldiers directly assigned to the MCOE will wear the new insignia.

Requirements include a clear, hand-drawn or electronic sketch of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and a short, succinct motto. The motto must be written in English and is limited to 26 characters (letters and spaces).

Individuals may provide a suggestion for just one or two of the desired items if they prefer. All submissions must include name, phone number, e-mail address and mailing address of the individual submitting the designs and motto.

Submissions can be sent via e-mail to MCOE_Insignia_Suggestions@knox.army.mil or Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATSH-ATH, Room 451, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000.

OCS BOARD

All OCS applications must be submitted to the Soldier Actions Branch, Building 2620 in Soldiers' Plaza, no later than June 22 for the board July 23-27.

Residents share vision, faith in future of South Columbus

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Editor's note: In this, part three of a series on the revitalization of Columbus South, we look at what South Columbus once was and what residents there believe it can become.

It was a mini United Nations.

That's how Owen Ditchfield described South Columbus in 1968, the year he settled his family, his wife and four children, into a home in Oakland Park. Ditchfield was preparing for a second tour in Vietnam, and he felt secure leaving his family in a community where they were surrounded by Soldiers.

"It was a great place to live. I could walk around my block, literally, and hear people speaking Spanish, Korean, Italian, Hungarian and Japanese," Ditchfield said, listing languages on his fingertips.

"And German and French. It was like a little United Nations."

Ditchfield is the media specialist at Fort Benning's White Elementary School and the president of South Columbus Concerned Citizens, an organization he spearheaded in 1981 to address the southside's need for a voice in city government and to head off the growing problems of crime and depression in that area.

Some might have speculated that it was too late.

South Columbus was once a thriving, diverse community. In its heyday, its strengths laid in its strong ties to Fort Benning, family owned motels, like the Thunderbird Inn, the Plaza Motel and the Colony Inn, and a number of popular restaurants, including The Black Angus, the CoCo Club and the city's only Mexican restaurant.

Two things happened to change all that, Ditchfield said. Soon after his family settled in, the 1st Cavalry Division was activated. As hundreds of Soldiers prepared to deploy, they packed up their families and sent them back home.

One right after another, "for rent" signs cropped up in South Columbus, and the homes became temporary lodging for families who had no vested interest in the community.

Then, in the early 70s, Interstate 185 opened and the economic interests of North Columbus became the primary concern of realtors and investors. They fueled racism on the southside in an attempt to spur growth north of St. Mary's Road, Ditchfield said.

"Blockbusting started," he said. "Realtors used the race card to drum up business. They'd say, 'I just sold a house to a black family down the street. I'll be glad to sell yours now and find you a house in North Columbus.'"

The memory still frustrates Ditchfield, though he admitted no realtor ever dared try that tactic on him. He's always been vocal in his support for a rich, diverse South Columbus. But with winds of racism blowing across the country in the 70s and the convenience of an interstate linking Fort Benning to the north, it seemed for a time that a culturally diverse South Columbus would be an economically depressed South Columbus.

And with depression came neglect. The motels changed hands, and prostitution and drug trafficking became rampant. Businesses closed, Ditchfield said, and for a while, it seemed, every vacant building soon became a bar. South Columbus, once a great place to raise a family, became a blight on the city of Columbus, and rather than address the problem, southside loyalists say local officials turned their backs on it.

Could Wal-mart save the South?

Now, Columbus city officials want to create a "destination city," a town that will attract tourism dollars, and South Columbus may be their goldmine. The 11.8 square-miles that lay

“South Columbus does need a good chain restaurant, something other than fast food. I’m sorry, but we do need a Wal-mart or a Kmart. We need a hotel chain visitors recognize and can expect to find a clean, familiar family atmosphere.”

— Owen Ditchfield, president South Columbus Concerned Citizens

“I believe that things can change, but it has to start internally. You can’t legislate the kind of changes we need here. We have to change the mindset of the people. Even if they live in poverty, they shouldn’t settle for a poverty mindset.”

— Ken Williams, South Columbus business owner between Victory Drive and St. Mary's Road includes a number of the city's most popular attractions — the RiverWalk, the Civic Center, its neighboring sports complex, the Civil War Naval Museum and the new National Infantry Museum, still under construction.

Over the past few years, nearly 1 million people have visited Columbus annually. Last year alone, they spent $296 million here, more than $470,000 of it on lodging. Unfortunately, most of that was spent in North Columbus.

What will it take to direct some of that money into South Columbus? It could start with something as simple as a Wal-mart and a friendly, familiar restaurant, Ditchfield said.

"Think about the parents who come here to see their sons graduate from basic training, and they drive around with a map looking for a place to eat, something they recognize and feel comfortable with," Ditchfield said.

South Columbus distinguishes itself from the rest of the city — the areas known as North Columbus and Midtown — with a proliferation of "mom and pops." No one wants to change that dynamic, said Reggie Richards, the executive director of Columbus South Inc., a nonprofit organization devoted to revitalization. The family owned businesses, including a number of ethnic restaurants, add a unique flavor to the southside, the city's most culturally diverse region.

The revitalization of South Columbus depends not on industrialization, Richards said, but on sound growth management and the development.

The dichotomy, Ditchfield said, is that South Columbus can only capitalize on its culture and character, to return to its former glory, if it first establishes itself as an area where visitors will feel comfortable. In other words, Wal-mart could save mom and pops in South Columbus.

"South Columbus does need a good chain restaurant, something other than fast food. I'm sorry, but we do need a Wal-mart or a Kmart," Ditchfield said. "We need a hotel chain visitors recognize and can expect to find a clean, familiar family atmosphere."

About 20 percent of the visitors who come to Columbus each year are people visiting friends or family at Fort Benning or attending a military graduation.

That number will likely grow exponentially when the Armor School melds with the Infantry School in the Maneuver Center, a move that is expected to be complete in another three years. By that time, the 150,000-square-foot, $85 million Infantry Museum will be hosting most military graduations and drawing in 500,000 visitors and $50 million annually, according to projections from the National Infantry Foundation.

Considering its location, in the stretch of land sandwiched between South Lumpkin and Fort Benning Road, the museum will most certainly draw hundreds of thousands of visitors to Victory Drive, which is arguably the epicenter of the struggle to revitalize the South.

There, recent efforts to revitalize have resulted in the closing of several businesses that cast a pall on the area, including motels, apartments and housing projects known for prostitution, drug activity and drive-by shootings.

"We're really making progress," Ditchfield said. "Now there's only one adult book store, only one 'personal therapy' place. There are too many pawn shops and tattoo parlors, but not nearly as many go-go places. Now, I think, it's about image as much as anything else. There are a lot of misconceptions about South Columbus."

A vision shared

Richards and Ditchfield expressed a shared desire to see South Columbus become a model of "new urbanism," the type of community developers are creating in South Florida and along the Georgia coastline. Self-contained communities where commuters share bike paths instead of carpool lanes, where mom and pops attract discerning consumers who prefer frioles to French fries.

Personally, Ditchfield hopes the new South Columbus will feature an international market.

"My vision for South Columbus is to see these old, run-down buildings renovated," he said. "A place where people feel comfortable and secure, with amenities, nice restaurants, discount stores, great schools ... A place where people who work on Fort Benning can get on their bikes and ride to work."

"The time has come, and I believe it can happen in South Columbus," he said.

So does Ken Williams, a former Soldier who opened a restaurant off Victory Drive two years ago. The difference between Williams and Ditchfield is history.

Williams moved here 13 years ago, so his ties to the area are not sentimental or based upon the memory of what it once was. But he shares Ditchfield's vision for the future. He wastes little time dissecting its demise, but he's banking on its future.

"I learned this in the Army," Williams said. "If the tire's flat, we know the tire's flat. I don't want to know how it got that way. I want to know how we're going to fix it."

"Fixing" the problem starts with faith, Williams said. South Columbus residents must want change and believe they can bring it about. Before they can change outsiders' perceptions of the south, they must change their own convictions about their own lives.

"I believe things can change, but it has to start internally," he said. "You can't legislate the kind of change we need here. We have to change the mindset of people. Even if they live in poverty, they shouldn't settle for a poverty mindset."

Look for part four in the Bayonet series on South Columbus in next week's edition.

How advertising in THE BAYONET works for you

NO OTHER AREA NEWSPAPER CAN SERVE THE MILITARY MARKET LIKE THE BAYONET.

THE BAYONET is the only newspaper that is delivered to every home, bar and post each week. In addition, about 4% of the permanently assigned military route is posted in the Columbus region. Our increased off-post distribution will make it easier for those individuals and their family members to pick up a copy.

Airborne students completed five jumps last week during jump week. In the three weeks of airborne training, students graduate from one phase to the next, progressing from on-the-ground landing maneuvers to tower training, where they jump and drop from various heights. During the final phase, jump week, they put all the skills they've learned to the test, said Sgt. 1st Class John Heintzelmans, operations NCO of the Airborne School.

Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

"Stand up! Hook up!" the jumpmasters yelled above the roar of jet engines and the wind screaming through the doors of the C-17.

Airborne students made their third jump last week. Five jumps are required to earn their silver wings.

Sgt. 1st Class John Heintzelmans, operations NCO for the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, gave an overview of that day's training.

"This is the test phase of all they have learned in the last two weeks," he said.

The school averages 540 students per class, Heintzelmans said, with a cadre of 50 people to support them.

"It can get very labor intensive. The biggest challenge is teaching safety and having them practice it to standard," he said.

Pvt. Jason Rice was excited about his third jump.

"This is really cool training," he said. "From here I go to the Ranger Indoctrination Program. I hope this training will help prepare me for that."

While waiting to board the aircraft, the Soldiers checked equipment and made last minute adjustments to rigging and harnesses.

Marine Capt. Fred Courtney, from Camp Lejeune, N.C., said airborne training "is a great opportunity and lots of fun." It will enable him to conduct airborne operations with the Marine Corps 2nd Recon Battalion.

After pre-jump checks and briefings, the Soldiers boarded the aircraft and prepared to "hit the silk" again.

Master Sgt. Barry Moorefield is a loadmaster with the 17th Air Lift Squadron out of Charleston, S.C. He explained his part in the operation.

"I work with the jumpmasters to ensure the Soldiers are set to exit the aircraft in the proper place over the drop zone," he said. "We have to make sure that conditions are favorable for them to land in the proper place."

Before jumping, Airborne students are required to perform a number of safety checks and rehearse the procedures they'll use when exiting the aircraft.

On average, more than 500 students attend each class at Airborne School. Here, during jump week, Soldiers board the C-17 that will carry them to the drop zone.

Thurmond says, 'Let's build a new Georgia'

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

"The past is of no value today," a slightly irreverent Michael Thurmond told his audience Monday during a gathering designed to celebrate, of all things, the past — black history specifically.

Thurmond, the commissioner of the Georgia Department of Labor and the keynote speaker at the 20th annual Black History Observance in Columbus, spoke with humor about his "bold, new vision for Georgia" and urged his audience to "make your own black history."

"I understand the challenge black men face," Thurmond told a crowd of more than 400 gathered at the Iron Works Convention and Trade Center. "Black men are unemployed at twice the rate of our white brothers, and when we are employed, we earn less than our white brothers."

But that doesn't excuse bad behavior, he said.

"As I speak, tens of thousands are AWOL from their families and their children ... How much does it cost to shoot a basketball with your son on Sunday afternoon?" he said. "How much does it cost to tell your daughter she's pretty? You better tell your daughter she's pretty — I don't care if she looks just like you. If you don't tell her, some fool on the street's gonna tell her."

Thurmond said he and a million of his black brothers marched on Washington a few years back to atone for their mistakes.

"We admit to you, we have not always fulfilled our obligations to our women and to our country," he said. "We fall down, and we get back up. A saint is a sinner who fell down and got back up, that's all. I've not always been the man I needed to be, I've come to tell you. But the past is of no value today."

Michael Thurmond, the commissioner of the Georgia Department of Labor, used humor to drive home a point during his speech. Dee Armstrong, left, a local news anchor and the mistress of ceremonies for the event, reacts with laughter to Thurmond's story.

"A saint is a sinner who fell down and got back up, that's all. I've not always been the man I needed to be, I've come to tell you. But the past is of no value today."

— Michael Thurmond

Thurmond's past started down a dead-end dirt road in Clarke County, Georgia. The youngest of nine children born to very poor parents, Thurmond recalled a time when his greatest ambition was to move into public housing. He used to stand on a rock and preach to the pines, spurred on by the sound of wind rustling in the trees. He interpreted it as applause.

"I just knew God was going to take me out of the cotton fields some day," said Thurmond, who didn't have indoor plumbing until he was 16.

"Don't feel sorry for me. Some great folks have gone into and come out of outhouses," he said. "My father died and he left me with nothing. But he left me everything I ever needed. If you want to leave a great inheritance, love your children. If you want to preserve and appreciate your history, preserve and appreciate your children."

Thurmond said he didn't come to denigrate the black man. To the contrary, "I decided not to ... decry all the black men who aren't doing what they should be doing. Thank God for all the black men who are doing what they should be. Thank God for all the black men who are supporting their families."

Still, Thurmond said, he understands a good man is hard to find. He hears it all the time.

"C'mon now ladies, say it in unison — It's hard to find a good black man. Say it like you say it on Saturday night," he said, and the crowd cracked up.

"We've got a room filled with God-fearing, hard working, good looking black men here," he said. "If you're looking for a good black man, it's hard to find. But if you're looking for a regular looking, good brother, there's a whole lot out there."

There are also "a lot of good white folks out there," Thurmond said. "Historically, it's been imperative for blacks to recognize them."

"If you know anything about African American history, you know you gotta have some good white folks on your side," he said. "And I'm here to help you all further your ability to (recognize them.) All the good white folks in Muscogee County bought tickets and came here today."

With state and local government representatives to his left and right, including Fort Benning's deputy commander, Col. Michael Linnington, Thurmond noted that the observance breakfast was truly a celebration of American history.

"Because African American history is American history," he said. "And here we have blacks and whites ... Baptists, Jews and Methodists, PhDs and no 'D's, all the saints and one or two sinners — all under a common roof, sharing a common purpose. This is the first time I've seen so many whites come out to celebrate African American history. It is a celebration."

The integrated audience gave him hope that he may one day see his vision for Georgia become reality.

"Let's build a new Georgia," he said. "In our lifetime, let's build a Georgia that is not separated by North and South, black and white, rich and poor, Democrat and Republican. Let's build one Georgia."

Proceeds from the event are used to support institutions and organizations that exist to improve the community. This year, the House of Mercy and the Columbus Black History Museum and Archives were recognized.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR GENERAL DENTISTS

The Virginia Department of Corrections is recruiting dentists for several state correctional facilities. Dentists in the Department of Corrections deliver a full range of general dentistry to the inmates in modern, well-equipped clinics that are staffed by state employees. VDOC dentists routinely perform restorative, oral surgery, periodontal, endodontic, prosthetic and preventive treatments for their patients. Applicants must possess a DDS or DMD degree from an accredited dental school and a license to practice dentistry in the State of Virginia. Federal Service dentists and other dentists who do not have a Virginia dental license are encouraged to apply. Dentists who do not have a Virginia license may qualify for a special dental license to practice in Virginia Department of Corrections dental clinics.

Virginia state employees enjoy generous pay and benefits, including, but not limited to, paid leave and holidays, a retirement plan, medical/dental plans, 401K plan and life insurance plans. Dentists who work on a part time basis enjoy proportional salary and benefits.

Information may be obtained by contacting the Chief Dentist, Dr. George A. Smith, by telephone at (804) 674-3578 extension 1034 or by E-mail at George.Smith@vadoc.virginia.gov.

'Still much to be done' speaker says

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

"I celebrate and I cry at the same time."

That's how Pastor Prathan Powell, the speaker at the Black History Month luncheon Feb. 15, explained his views on the progress of African Americans in the U.S.

The theme for the Equal Opportunity Office-sponsored event was "From Slavery to Freedom: Africans in the Americas."

"We're not as free as we suppose," Powell said, as he talked about ongoing discrimination in the workplace, in positions of leadership and in local politics.

"So much has been done, and we've made a lot of progress," Powell said. "I realize we would not be where we are today without people willing to sacrifice. But after dog attacks, marches and separate but equal, there is still much to be done."

He told the crowd there was no time to relax while there are problems in the local community with illegal drugs, harassment, employment discrimination and breakdown of families.

He thanked Soldiers for their service and encouraged them to "keep fighting off the battlefield," by battling discrimination and oppression.

"Terrorism is not only in Iraq. It's right here in America," he said, referring to racial violence. To finish his remarks, Powell asked the crowd to hold hands and recite the words to Free at Last.

"There are so many problems," he said, "and I know that means we'll never stop fighting. So what? No one can do it all, but everyone has a part."

Powell is a minister at the World Changes Tabernacle, Inc. in Columbus and PLP Ministries, Inc. A native of Columbus, he is involved in community programs that fight child abuse, provide aid for the poor, teach young people computer-training courses, and help with job placement. He hosts a show at 6:30 a.m. on Fox 54, and is the author of several books.

The lunch also included entertainment. Nu Beginning sang the Star Spangled Banner and Lift Every Voice and Sing. Kindergartners from Loyd Elementary School recited a section of Martin Luther King Jr.'s I Have a Dream speech, and sang and performed motions to the song

I realize we would not be where we are today without people willing to sacrifice. But after dog attacks, marches and separate but equal, there is still much to be done.

— Pastor Prathan Powell

Hero.

Javonte Scott, performing as "Little One," rapped his song Black History, which he wrote himself. He had the crowd put up their hands and ended with, "Give it up for black history, ya'll!" He received a standing ovation. Warrant Officer Paulette A. Montgomery, 11th Engineer Battalion, recited the poem First to Fight.

Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill sang Precious Lord by Tommy Dorsey a cappella. Dorsey wrote the song appealing for strength after he learned that his wife and child had died, and it was played at Martin Luther King's funeral. The crowd sang along with McNeill, who is the NCOIC for the Infantry Center's Equal Opportunity Office. He sang without accompaniment because that was how he remembered singing at church when he was a child, McNeill said.

Col. Michael Linnington, the USAIC deputy commanding general, thanked all the performers, and encouraged the crowd to remember the meaning of Black History month.

"(Black History month) honors a legacy of people who know what it is to have to fight for what they need," Linnington said. "Black History is not just once a year. We remember black history every day."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

How the West was won

The West beat the East, 153-132, Feb. 18 in Las Vegas. L.A. Lakers Kobe Bryant snagged the MVP. Bryant had 31 points in the game.

At All-Star Saturday, Boston Celtics' Gerald Green won the Slam Dunk Contest over last year's winner, New York Knicks' Nate Robinson.

In the Three-Point Shootout, Jason Kapono of the Miami Heat beat Gilbert Arenas and Dirk Nowitzki in the finals to win. Kapono leads the NBA with 50 percent shooting on three-pointers.

Chargers hire Turner

The San Diego Chargers will hire Norm Turner as head coach. Turner, who has a 59-53-1 record as head coach of the Washington Redskins (1994-2002) and the Oakland Raiders (2004-2005), was the offensive coordinator for the San Francisco 49ers this past season.

Turner was one of six known candidates interviewed after Marty Schottenheimer was dismissed.

Harvick narrowly wins

Kevin Harvick beat sentimental favorite Mark Martin to win The Great American Race, the Daytona 500, Feb. 18.

Harvick won by two one-hundredths of a second, robbing Martin of a victory in his 23rd attempt at the race. Martin is considering adding more races to his schedule, which is slated for 22 races this season. He's added the Pepsi 400 as for.

Harvick was also the winner of the Busch race Feb. 17.

Buckeyes get top billing

The Ohio State Buckeyes are ranked number one in the ESPN USA Today coaches' Top 25 poll for the second time this season.

The Wisconsin Buckeyes are ranked second.

The Florida Gators, previously ranked first, are now third after a loss to Vanderbilt Feb. 17.

Roundup of the top five are UCLA and UNC.

Wisconsin will be at Ohio State at 4 p.m. Sunday on CBS. Should shake up the rankings.

Dungy will return

Indianapolis Colts' head coach Tony Dungy said he will return next season after rumors spread that he would step down. Dungy is looking to win another title for the Colts.

Players report for spring training

Catchers and pitchers have already reported for spring training, along with position players, who had their first workout set for Feb. 22. The official reporting date is Feb. 27, under major league rules.

New York Yankees' Bernie Williams has been a no-show. The Yankees are assuming he's done with them.

E Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, pulled out a close win Tuesday night by defeating the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 42-37.

E Co. holds a tie for second place in the Audie Murphy League with a record of 6-2, while the RTBn drops to .500 with a record of 4-4.

This week is the last week of regular season intramural play for both the Audie Murphy and Santiago fitness Center leagues.

"We played hard tonight," said E Co.'s Markel Clark, who gave his team a solid nine-point outing. "This was a defensive game. We trapped and hustled and our crowd support was great."

Both teams traded buckets early during the first half, keeping the score nearly even throughout.

"We have to take smart shots and make smart passes to be successful," said E Co.'s Eric Dreiling.

CYS skate park fun, safe place to skate

Mitchell Thomas IV

Thomas Brittain jumps a table outside of the CYS skate park. Brittain has been skating for seven years and he placed second in the park's first tournament in 2005. The park has top-of-the-line ramps and equipment.

Skaters pair with other kids to build skills, friendships

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

"A lot of people think of skaters as bad kids, but I have made so many cool friends at the park," said Blaine Duncanson, a 17-year-old student at Chattahoochee County High School. "The town I used to live had no skate park at all, so it means a lot to me."

The skateboarding culture lives through the youths who use the CYS skate park, one of the activities that CYS provides to give kids a positive outlet after school.

"We built this strictly for the kids," said Pam Sheppard, CYS program assistant. "Anything that keeps them focused and out of trouble, we're for it."

The skate park has been open for nearly three years and has continued to grow in popularity, Sheppard said.

Most of the kids who use the park share an interest in learning more about the skateboarding, she said.

All levels of skaters are allowed in the park Tuesdays through Fridays from 3 p.m. to 8 p.m., and Saturdays from 12 p.m. to 8 p.m. Experienced skaters serve as the teachers at the park, providing instruction for beginners.

"We try to pair up an experienced kid with a new skater, and they are more than happy to teach them what they know," Sheppard said.

All ages up to the 12th grade are allowed to skate and can use either skateboards or in-line skates, which are provided by CYS. Equipment ranging from skates to protective gear is provided for the participants.

Students are required to wear helmets and protective gear on the course. There are no fees to rent the skates or equipment, but a CYS membership is required to use the facility.

"We have all types of kids who skate; girls, guys, young kids and teens are all welcome," Sheppard said. "Some of the more experienced skaters are the younger ones."

Saturdays tend to have the largest number of participants.

"They come in and out throughout the day because they don't have to worry about school," Sheppard said. "It gives them something positive to do on weekends."

"This is worth so much because at so many skate parks, you have to pay a pretty hefty fee to ride," she said. "The CYS membership gives access to the park as well as everything that we provide. It's almost like skating for free."

The skate park has top-of-the-line ramps and equipment, which helps limit hazards by a significant amount, Sheppard said.

Skate park: Will host youth tournaments for post kids

"We encourage the kids to skate here as opposed to building their own ramps on the outside and risking getting hurt," Sheppard said. "The staff and the users adhere to the rules strictly, which keeps the injuries down."

The children and the parents are required to sign a waiver in which they agree to follow the rules of the park.

"When the kids get hurt skating, most of the time it's not here," Sheppard said. "We monitor the safety at all times and encourage the experienced skaters to assist beginners with tips to keep them from getting hurt. Most of the injuries happen from kids that aren't familiar with the particulars of skating."

The park has numerous volunteers who help them with activities. The kids are encouraged to help with the park's maintenance, upkeep and equipment upgrades.

"We have new boards that the kids are helping put together," said Sheppard.

It is imperative to listen to the needs of the kids to keep the park a success, she said.

"The kids are the one's who pay attention to the culture," said Sheppard. "They tell us what's in and what's out."

The CYS staff is hoping to increase the park's participation and activities by conducting skateboard tournaments on a regular basis. The kids are allowed to make up the rules and regulations for the tournaments, Sheppard said.

"We even had a couple of pro-skaters come in during the grand opening to teach some moves and are hoping to get some to come back in the future."

Most importantly, Sheppard is proud of the relationship that the program has developed with the kids in the park.

"The kids are typically pretty good in our program," she said. "We try to keep an open line of communication with the parents. A lot of times parents have no idea what their kids are doing, so we make sure to reach out as much as possible."

For more information, call Sheppard at 706-545-3540.

Basketball: Set to begin playoffs

The RTBn showed hustle and displayed their strength on the glass offensively and defensively.

"We play good as a team, and we're looking forward to the playoffs," said The RTBn's Stanley Chatman.

During the second half, E Co. came alive. Soldiers from E Co. supported their team, cheering loudly, which gave the team a boost early in the half. E Co.'s Rufus Kimble gave his team 11 points, which led all scorers.

The 4th RTBn brought the score to within one point, at 26-25, midway through the second half. 4th RTBn's Phillip Whittington showed his shooting range by hitting a variety of jump shots. He led his team with 10 points.

E Co. proved to be too much for The RTBn, taking a commanding 11-point lead with six minutes to go, forcing the crowd into a frenzy.

The RTBn was forced to commit fouls to stop the clock with 40 seconds left. They had a few opportunities to tie the game, but were unable to hit their shots.

In other league play, U.S. Army Medical Activity knocked off the 75th Ranger Regiment by one point, 36-35.

In the Santiago Intramural league, A Co. 1/29 demolished the 2/58, 53-24, and the 2/47 forfeited, giving the 1/19 an automatic two points.

The playoff bracketing for both the leagues will be available Monday. There will also be a coaches' meeting Monday to inform teams of their seeding and game times.

The playoffs will begin Wednesday and end on March 7 in the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

For more information, call Willie Span at 706-545-4592 or 706-984-1994.

Army officer named 2006 Amateur Female Triathlete of Year

Lt. Col. Heidi Grimm, 39, won eight triathlons last year, posted personal best in Ironman World Championship

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

Tim Hips

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — An officer in the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program was selected as the 2006 Amateur Female Triathlete of the Year by Triathlete magazine.

Lt. Col. Heidi Grimm, 39, had the best athletic year of her life in the endurance sport that combines swimming, cycling and running. She reported Aug. 16 to WCAP in Fort Carson, Colo., where dozens of Soldiers train with aspirations of making U.S. Olympic and national teams in several sports.

Grimm saluted the Army for giving her the opportunity.

"It's an opportunity of a lifetime and I'm grateful for all of the folks who encouraged me and supported me," she said. "Being at WCAP gives me the resources and the time. My workout sessions last four or five hours a day, split up in a couple of different sessions."

"When you're working your body so hard, the rest and recovery is equally important," she said.

"That is what I was lacking when I was sitting at the desk as a Deputy G-1 at Fort Lewis."

After winning eight triathlons last year, Grimm posted a personal-best time of 10 hours, 36 minutes, 56 seconds in her fifth Ironman World Championships, a 2.4-mile swim, 112-mile bike ride and 26.2-mile run in Hawaii on Oct. 21.

She won her fourth Hawaii Ironman military women's crown, and was seventh among 70 women in the 35-39 age group.

Grimm opened her season May 14 with a victory in the Gulf Coast Half Ironman in Panama City Beach, Fla., where she posted the second-fastest amateur women's time in race history: 4:31:12 for a 1.2-mile swim, 56-mile bike and 13.1-mile run.

She said the day was extra special because a lot of friends and family were there to witness one of her best all-time performances.

Grimm followed with a series of victories in June, at the Blue Lake Olympic Triathlon in Troutdale, Ore., and the Five Mile Lake Sprint Triathlon in Federal Way, Wash.

She won her fifth women's crown in the Armed Forces Triathlon Championships June 25 on Naval Base Ventura County in Point Mugu, Calif., where she completed the 1,500-meter swim, 40-kilometer bike and 10-kilometer run in 1:59:09.

In the Conseil International du Sport Militaire's World Military Triathlon Championships in Satenas, Sweden, Grimm won the senior women's (35+ older) crown with a 2:13:34 clocking for the 1,500-meter swim, 40-kilometer bike and 10-kilometer run.

"I'm on cloud nine," Grimm said after that July 8 race, her second victory in the CISM World Military Championships. "I am getting better with age and loving it."

Grimm, who shared the Army's 2004 Female Athlete of the Year Award with Olympic modern pentathlete Capt. Anita Allen, won July races at the Seafair Triathlon in Seattle and the Shoreline Park Triathlon in Rochester, N.Y., her hometown.

Grimm said she "had the run of my life" Sept. 16 in Excelsior, Minn., where she won the women's division in the Best of the U.S. Amateur Triathlon National Championships. She finished the 1,500-meter swim, 40-kilometer bike and 10-kilometer run in 2:09:49.

Grimm overcame several challenges that day. Two weeks prior to the event, she discovered a crack in the frame of the trusty bike she'd been riding for six years and was left scrambling for a new one.

Naturally, she had mechanical troubles with the untested bike during the race. The choppy waves on wind-swept Lake Minnetonka were so fierce that several competitors cut the last buoy from the swim course.

Grimm, however, was not one of them.

She climbed off the bike in sixth or seventh place, thinking "this is almost insurmountable," not knowing how her legs would react for the run. She then ran the 10K in 36:44 to claim the victory.

"I just felt stronger and stronger as the run went on," she said of her most satisfying conquest of a very triumphant year.

"That was my last race as an amateur," added Grimm, who turned pro to begin accumulating points that will help Team USA officials determine rosters for future international competitions.

"To be eligible for the Olympic Trials in 2008 is ultimately the goal. I've had great success over the last few years, but at this point and the level I'm at now, just to focus on training is the critical piece — the hours on the bike and the hours on the run, and the recovery time, too."

After turning pro, Grimm posted third- and fourth-place finishes at the La Paz ITU Pan American Cup on Jan. 21 in Argentina and the Villarica ITU Pan American Cup on Jan. 28 in Chile.

"I'm really happy with my performances down in South America, especially this early in the season," Grimm said.

"I'm currently ranked 80th in the world and 10th American female after my first two pro races out of the box. My bike fitness and my run fitness are really at a nice spot for this early in the season, and my swim is feeling stronger every day."

By triathlon standards, Grimm is a late bloomer who hopes to make monumental progress with a year of full-time training.

Most triathletes were competitive runners, swimmers or cyclists before making the jump to the three-discipline sport.

Grimm's athletic background consisted of equestrian horseback riding and downhill skiing.

"Because I didn't do this as a child and in high school, I am more willing to learn and to work hard to get better and faster," she said.

"And I have so much more room for improvement. You get people who have been doing this for years and years and they'll see seconds of improvement," Grimm explained. "I will be able to realize minutes, and that's my goal."

It's an opportunity of a lifetime, and I'm grateful for all the folks who encouraged me and supported me.

Harvick edges out Martin to win Great American Race

*Favorites to win don't

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

The Daytona 500 turned into a smash and crash race, especially on the green-white checked final lap Feb. 18 at Daytona International Speedway in Daytona Beach, Fla.

The "Super Bowl" of NASCAR races, the first of the long season, made national headlines before it was even run, with allegations of cheating and crew chiefs ejected.

Drivers and owners alike were fined and points were deducted before they even had the chance to earn any.

The brouhaha over the cheating overshadowed what had previously been the big story going into the race, that of driver Dale Earnhardt Jr. wanting control over Dale Earnhardt Incorporated, which is currently owned by his stepmother Teresa Earnhardt.

The soap opera before the race seemed to die down in the first 150 laps into the race.

Cautions were low, and no crashes had occurred. That all changed on lap 152.

Tony Stewart, who was penalized on lap 84 after pit road problems, was way back in 40th place but managed to claw his way back to the front of the pack where he had led previous laps.

Stewart seemed to lose momentum for a second, and Kurt Busch, who was right behind Stewart, had nowhere to go with his momentum, clipped Stewart's back end and sent him careening into the wall, ending both of their days and hopes for the win. Stewart was the favorite of many to win.

On lap 173, last year's Daytona winner Jimmie Johnson, who hadn't had a good showing all day, crashed and was out of the race. On lap 195, with only five laps left, Dale Earnhardt Jr. crashed. He was another favorite to win.

Many drivers were also involved, so the red flag came out, halting all the cars.

On the restart, Army car driver Mark Martin was trying to hold off Kyle Busch. For the last two laps it looked like Busch might overtake Martin, but never managed to.

Martin seemed to have it all wrapped up, until the last turn, when Kevin Harvick, who has won the previous day's Busch race, went outside on Turn 3 and was right alongside Martin.

It was literally a race to the finish. Neck and neck Martin and Harvick battled, but ultimately, Harvick won by two one-hundredths of a second, the closest finish since electronic scoring began. It was a heartbreaker for Martin, who was trying for the 23rd time to win the 500.

Behind the wild finish was an even wilder ending for driver Clint Bowyer. His car flipped over and slid across the finish line on its roof. It righted itself, then caught on fire when it finally stopped on the infield grass.

Several other cars were involved in the crash. Nothing like saving the "big one" for the final half-mile.

My heart ached for Martin and his team. But Harvick proved why he won the Busch Series last season.

Congratulations to Harvick and his entire team.

This week at California Speedway should be an interesting race. The Auto Club 500 is at Fontana on a very fast two-mile oval track. I'm liking Tony Stewart to have a good showing after last week's debacle.

Coverage begins at 3 p.m. on Fox.

Kevin Harvick edged out Mark Martin in the last seconds to win the 49th running of the Daytona 500.

Martial arts, aerobics studio open

Circuit training, abs, yoga, martial arts offered at Benning Club

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

The new Martial Arts and Aerobics Studio, which opened in January, has all the benefits of large gyms, yet provides the comfort of a more private facility.

"Some people don't like the feel of a big gym, so this facility gives its users that quiet, non-intimidating, friendly feel. Yet they are still able to receive a full body workout," said Lori Smith, fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Classes include circuit training, abs and yoga. Circuit training is broken into two sections, cardio and weight training.

The cardio focuses on getting the heart rate up to burn calories, while the weight training adds resistance to the workout to help build strength.

The yoga class focuses on stretching and flexibility, which helps prevent injury, said Smith.

"When you combine these classes, you get a nice mixture," she said.

"They complement each other well, which makes them really popular," she said.

The abs classes use a mixture of techniques to target the core, which is important to maintaining a balanced physique, Smith said.

"Everyone seems to want to whittle down their middle," she said.

"Being that this class targets this muscle group specifically, it makes for a really popular class."

The circuit training classes are at 9 a.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, the abs classes are 10:15 a.m. and the yoga classes start at 9:15 a.m.

More classes will be added as more instructors are brought in, Smith said. The prices are $3 per class or $25 per month.

Benning Club members receive a 15 percent discount on all classes offered at the Studio.

Payments can be made at the Briant Wells Fitness Center from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday or at the Benning Club cashier from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The studio also features martial arts classes. The classes are taught by Ron Ziss, who has taught martial arts on post for 15 years. Ziss teaches a fusion of the disciplines that he has learned over the years.

The third degree black belt in Yoshu Kai teaches eight classes throughout the week, ranging from beginning to advanced levels, as well as a separate class for adults.

Adults can come to all the other classes during the week, he said.

Ziss suggests that students come at least three days a week to achieve maximum results. He also incorporates light weight training to help students increase their strength.

"Many people are surprised how good of a workout they receive during the first class," he said.

The class prices are $50 a month for one person, $80 for two people, $110 for three people and $130 for four. Those interested can take two free introductory classes.

The center also has life fitness circuit series classes.

This class features 11 cardio stations and 11 pieces of resistance equipment combined to make an effective full body workout.

"This is very similar to the Curves concept, only a big step up," Smith said. "Participants start at one piece of equipment and work until completion."

The classes, led by certified aerobics instructors, will last two hours and participants can start anytime during the two-hour period.

"This gives individuals a little more freedom, so that there is less of a reason to miss your workout," Smith said.

The center is currently awaiting the arrival of the equipment needed for these classes. Class schedules will be posted and will begin after their arrival.

The cost of these classes will be the same as the other fitness courses in the center.

The Aerobic and Martial Arts Studio has also made child care one of its major priorities.

"Parents are able to come to the Aerobic Studio, drop their kids off at the short term alternative child care site, take their class, pick up their child and go," Smith said.

Child care is available from 9 to 11 a.m. The cost is $3 per hour for non-Benning Club members and is free for all members. Participants must pay for child care before arriving at the studio. Payments can be made at the same locations used to pay for fitness classes.

For more information on the Aerobics and Martial Arts Studio, call Smith at 706-545-4300.

Spring — and major league baseball — has sprung on ESPN

ZAP2IT

George Dickie

Ah, spring, a time when a young man's thoughts often turn to ... baseball.

Yes, it's spring training time again, a hopeful time when every player under the warm Florida or Arizona sun looks like a potential star and every team has a chance to win — that is until the cold, hard and often cruel reality of the regular season kicks in.

This week, preseason games get under way, and ESPN will be covering the first of its 10 exhibition game slate with its March 2 broadcast of Andruw Jones and the Atlanta Braves hosting Freddy Sanchez and the Pittsburgh Pirates from Kissimmee, Fla.

Steve Phillips, who will provide analysis on that telecast, is intimately familiar with spring training not only as a broadcaster but as a minor league player, team executive and general manager for the New York Mets.

"It's really one of the best times of the year," Phillips said, "because it's the only time of year you have your entire organization together. You've got your major league players, and then a little later the minor league players come in. And it's a chance, really, to evaluate where you are as an organization from top to bottom, and it's the time where a lot of education takes place about expectations and consequences, and the major league manager can talk to minor league players so that they can sell the fact that the message at the major league level is exactly the same message that the minor league coaches and staff are selling to the players as well."

"So it's a valuable time of year," he said. "It's also nice because they're day games mostly, and ... you get to watch games and you get to have a life at night with your family to get dinner and do some things as well."

"But it's the start of the season," he said. "Everybody thinks they have a chance to win. You know, it really is an exciting time, and you feel like it's a chance to finally see the fruits of your labor, where you're getting a chance to kind of look at the players you brought in during the offseason and how they're going to all blend together as a club."

But while spring training can be a valuable tool for evaluating organizational talent, it can also prove perilous to the manager or general manager who takes performance during these games too seriously.

"You know, you can get fooled by performance," Phillips said, "so you tend to look more at the way players are doing than the actual results that they're doing ... September and spring training are some of the worst times of year to evaluate talent."

"I remember there was a guy with the Mets, Darren Reed, every spring training he would hit home runs, and the reason was that for the most part, pitchers threw fastballs in spring training. They didn't throw off-speed pitches ... you could just sit on the fastball. Well, most guys should be able to do that at the major league level, so you have to be a little bit careful on how to evaluate it."

While most teams tend to use this time to allow their veterans to get themselves into shape and be ready for the season, some clubs actually place a premium on winning preseason games in the hope of selling more regular-season tickets.

"For larger market teams with big payrolls," Phillips said, "winning in spring training has become more important. I know that our ownership with the Mets always wanted to win in spring training because most tickets get sold before the season begins, and they felt like if you at least generated some excitement, you might get people buying tickets more in spring training. So we were under some level of pressure to win in spring training."

"Other teams, it doesn't matter," he said. "That's why the Yankees, they never worried too much about what their record was in spring training. The Braves never worried too much about it. But when you've spent at or beyond your means, you're hoping to do everything you can to generate interest in spring training."

As a general manager, Phillips said, "you understand it, but you can't play spring training games to win when pitchers need to work on things because they end up not fixing mechanical flaws if they're always pitching in spring training to win the game as opposed to getting themselves ready to pitch the season."

New Main Mall PX to open in fall

'Monster' PX will be 240,000 square feet of shops, restaurants

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

The new 240,000-square-foot Main Mall Post Exchange is scheduled to open around Thanksgiving.

The much larger "monster" of a building will allow for eight-foot-wide aisles and more display room, said Barbara Beaudin, general manager of AAFES on Fort Benning.

"The clothing department will have a 300 percent increase in size, and the electronics department will be more than 100 percent bigger," Beaudin said.

The sporting goods section will also grow, she said, which many customers requested.

The shoe department will be upgraded to include self-serve fixtures in addition to full-service employees on hand. The self-serve fixtures have the shoes on display with the sizes stacked below.

Customer service will be much improved as the stock room will be big enough to hold all the extra merchandise, where as the merchandise is currently held in trailers outside, Beaudin said. Customers won't have to wait as long.

Construction continues on the new $27.5 million new Main Mall Post Exchange. The PX is scheduled to open to customers around Thanksgiving.

Main Post furniture store to open in April

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Need a new couch and don't want to go off post to get it? Soon you won't have to.

The new furniture store on Main Post is scheduled to open April 30 in Building 223 on Edwards Street.

The store, which will be located in a refurbished warehouse across from the Airborne towers, will carry brand name furniture, home décor, appliances, mattresses, and linens.

La-Z-Boy, Bassett and Berkline furniture companies are some of the brands that will be carried at the new 18,000-square-foot store.

"Customers will be able to walk in and buy a bed, then choose a lamp that matches and linens, too," said Barbara Beaudin, general manager of AAFES on Fort Benning. "You won't have to go back to the Main PX for anything."

"Where we might have only had one brand before, now we'll have several available," Beaudin said.

Cottage Lane, Golden Oak, Howard Miller, Aspen and Sauder furniture will also be available at the new store. Bed-in-a-bag linens were added to the lineup of items available, as was home décor, Beaudin said.

"The selection is going to be absolutely tremendous. There's going to be a myriad of colors when you walk in," Beaudin said.

The store will carry a core of items that will always be available, and it will also carry "one-time-buy" items. Those will be limited supplies of special styles or trends, Beaudin said. For instance, the store may get a shipment of wicker furniture or recliners.

"The one time buys will give the store some flavor and bring in things that are new and trendy," Beaudin said.

GE, Whirlpool and Kenmore are some of the major appliance brands carried by the store, and the floor space is large enough to have the appliances on display, Beaudin said. Washing machines, dryers, refrigerators and dishwashers are some of the appliances to be carried.

Detergent, storage supplies and other small items will be available for the convenience of customers, and there will be a room devoted to ready-to-assemble items, such as TV stands, that customers assemble at home.

The spacious store will allow for mattresses to be displayed so customers can go and try out the mattresses before purchasing them, and the home delivery service will be expanded from three days a week to five, Beaudin said. The delivery service is available for a fee depending on distance.

"Customers are really going to enjoy having this store," Beaudin said.

Infantry Museum receives "duck," hopes to display it in new museum

Annette Fournier

J. J. Johnson, an Infantry Museum employee, examines one of the DUKWs that were donated to the museum's collection. The museum staff hopes they will be able to restore the vehicle in the future, but a lack of money and time are obstacles. The DUKW vehicles were amphibious trucks used during WWII to transport Soldiers and cargo on both sea and land.

Historic amphibious vehicles added to Infantry Museum's collection

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

In World War II, the "Duck" was cutting-edge technology that dominated land and sea.

Today, people are more likely to see one, actually called a DUKW, being driven through a city filled with tourists wearing duckbills.

But the DUKW may be on display again soon at Fort Benning, minus the duck beaks.

Two DUKW amphibious assault vehicles were donated to the Infantry Museum, said Frank Hanner, the director of the National Infantry Museum.

"They're in pretty bad shape," Hanner said. "The salt water has gotten to them, they're rusted and will never be seaworthy again. But these vehicles were amazing. They kept the action moving, and kept the troops moving to the front. That's what made these such outstanding vehicles."

The DUKW was developed during World War II as a way to deliver troops and cargo quickly and efficiently.

Early in the war, cargo was backed up, sometimes for months at ports because of delays; if docks, ships, barges, trucks, trains or manpower lagged behind, it delayed the entire supply chain.

Some cargo, such as water, food and ammunition could not wait. Cargo had to be loaded from a ship to a smaller boat, driven to land, loaded onto a truck then driven to its destination. The military needed a vehicle to streamline the process.

After failed attempts to build such a vehicle, Palmer Putnam, with the National Defense Research Committee, proposed converting 2 and half-ton trucks for amphibious use.

'YOU MADE THE GRADE' PROGRAM

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service offers the "You Made the Grade" program for good grades. Students who qualify receive a coupon booklet that includes free admission to an AAFES Reel Time Theater, a complimentary slice of Anthony's pizza with drink and a free magazine, as well as other coupons. Each booklet also contains an entry form for a quarterly savings bond drawing in which three winners are randomly awarded savings bonds of $2,000, $3,000 or $5,000.

To get the booklet, students must present a valid military ID card and proof of an overall "B" or better average at their local post exchange.

DODEA SURVEY

Students, parents and teachers still have time to respond to the Department of Defense Education Activity's Customer Satisfaction Survey. Responses to the survey will be accepted through Feb. 28. The CSS, conducted every other year, provides valuable feedback to DoDEA about the quality of education it provides and areas needing improvement.

The survey, which is voluntary, takes approximately 20 minutes to complete and is available online at www.dodea.edu by clicking on the CSS link.

For more information about the CSS, call 703-588-3260 or visit the DoDEA Web site at www.dodea.edu.

DAY OF DANCE

The Peachtree Mall will host a Day of Dance in the JCPenney wing from noon to 4 p.m. Saturday.

There will be health screenings and education will be provided for blood pressure, body mass index and nutrition. T-shirt will be given to 150 participants who register and complete their health screening and education checklist. The Sheriff's Department will offer fingerprinting to the first 150 people to register. Dance performances, featuring country-western line dancing to hip hop, will be performed and instructed throughout the event.

For more information, call Meghan Williams at 706-327-1598.

BAGS OF LOVE

The Friends of the Eagles are sponsoring "Bags of Love" for Soldiers going to war. "Bags of Love" are bags filled with donated goodies from the local community. Anyone can help — individuals, groups, service clubs, schools, businesses and churches. The Bags of Love will be given to Fort Benning Soldiers as they board the plane to leave for Iraq. All donations should be given by this weekend.

The following items would be appreciated: individually wrapped snack items, candy, crossword puzzles, pens, blank cards and international calling cards.

Drop-off stations are Bill Heard, Rock Realty and Smith Station City Hall.

For more information, call 334-480-9591 or 706-683-1923.

MOAA SCHOLARSHIP

The Military Officers Association of America

has opened its Base/Post Scholarship and will offer individual $1,000 grants to 25 children of active duty personnel worldwide. To be eligible, a student must be younger than 24, working on a first undergraduate degree and a dependent child of an active duty serviceman — enlisted, warrant officer or officer — in the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, Coast Guard, Public Health Service or the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. This includes members of the drilling Reserves and National Guard.

No grade point average, SAT or essays are needed for the application. MOAA membership is not required.

Students can apply at www.moaa.org. Choose "Services," then "Educational Assistance" to find the online application. Follow the instructions for the multipurpose scholarship application.

Deadline for submission is noon Thursday.

HEPATITIS C SUPPORT GROUP

A Hepatitis C support group will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. March 8 and April 19 at the Columbus Public Library in the CB&T room on the first floor.

Join child care providers throughout the Columbus region for a day of training from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. March 10 at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center at 801 Front Ave.

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension announces its Early Childhood Institute, with 13 concurrent sessions and keynote session with nationally acclaimed trainer Shawn Brown.

Faculty, who include experts from Columbus State University and the University of Georgia, will implement the active learning theme.

Registration is going on now; no walk-ins will be accepted. Call the Columbus office of the UGA Cooperative Extension at 706-653-4200 for a brochure and registration form.

NMFA OPERATION PURPLE CAMP

Beginning March 15, the National Military Family Association will accept applications for the fourth season of the Operation Purple Summer Camp. The free summer camp hosts children ages 7 to 17 with dedicated camps for teens. NMFA developed the camp in response to the need for increased support for children, especially those whose parents are or will be deployed.

Visit the Web site operationpurple.org for more information and applications.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY PAGEANT

Southern Imperial Pageants will present the St. Patrick's Day Pageant for boys and girls at 1:30 p.m. March 17 at the Howard Johnson on Veterans Parkway.

Donations will be made to the Second Harvest Food Bank in Columbus.

For more information, call 334-704-9623 or 334-744-0297 or e-mail bnyates29@aol.com.

CSU CAREERS EXPO

The Columbus State University Career Center will host Career Expo 2007 from 12:30 to 4 p.m. March 22 in the Lumpkin Center.

The event will provide an opportunity for career-minded individuals to meet prospective employers, network with corporate executives who know the system and potentially find a new career.

More than 100 companies and organizations, as well as several school districts, will be on hand for one of Columbus' largest career events of the year.

Bring copies of your resume for distribution. The event is open to the public.

For more information, call 706-569-3198.

Troops to Teachers adds advance hiring

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

Sgt. Sara Wood

WASHINGTON — Military members with a desire to mentor and shape young minds now may not have to face the anxiety of an uncertain future when retiring or separating from the military.

Troops to Teachers has long helped military personnel become teachers. Now qualified service members can be hired in advance to work as teachers in certain school districts.

The Hire in Advance Program, which has launched in Las Vegas, Denver, and Newark, N.J., guarantees teaching jobs for eligible service members up to three years before they retire or separate from active duty, said Wayne Rees, of Mt. West Troops to Teachers in Las Vegas.

Troops who qualify for the Hire in Advance program can send in applications and interview with school officials. Officials can officially hire them up to three years before they leave active duty, Rees said.

During that time, military members can finish the necessary schooling and teaching requirements, creating a seamless transition between active duty and the start of their new careers, he said.

The program was unveiled in Las Vegas in June, and the first two Hire in Advance Program agreements were awarded. Since then, Troops to Teachers has been working with states, especially those with high-needs areas, to expand the program, Rees said.

"We absolutely are offering it to every state and every school district, with the hopes that we can help our military personnel have a seamless transition from the military into teaching kindergarten through twelfth grade in public schools," he said.

To qualify for the Hire in Advance Program, service members must have a bachelor's degree and meet other Troops to Teachers requirements, such as having served six or more

Troops to Teachers program offers:

- Advance hiring for eligible service members (up to three years before leaving active duty)
- $5,000 stipend to pay certification costs
- $5,000 bonus for those hired at a high-need school
- $600 stipend to help pay certification costs for military spouses years in the military honorably.

The program offers counseling and referral services for each state, as well as a $5,000 stipend to help pay certification costs. Service members may also qualify for an extra $5,000 if they are hired at a high-needs school.

Air Force Maj. Dayton Rogalski, chief information officer for the Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., hospital, was one of the first service members awarded a hire in advance agreement. His 23-year military career ends in about three months, and he hopes to become a business education teacher at the high school level, he said.

Rogalski, who has teaching experience from his time in the military, said he wants to become a teacher because he believes it's important to invest in young people's education, because they are the future of America.

"The Troops to Teachers program has enabled me to pursue teaching through their support and funding," he said. "They have delivered on all the points they presented."

Rogalski said he believes service members make good teachers because they bring military values patriotism and cultural experiences to the classroom.

Rees agreed, noting that teaching satisfies a desire many service members have to give back to the community.

"Because they have been dealing with and leading young men and women and teaching them, it's a natural transition," Rees said. "This is a program that has a variety of skill sets that will translate from the military into civilian life."

Troops to Teachers and the Hire in Advance Program are open to military spouses as well. Spouses are not eligible for the two $5,000 stipends, but can receive up to $600 to help with certification, he said.

Teaching is a convenient career for military spouses, he said, because the demand for teachers ensures employment, even with frequent moves.

DUKWs: Join Infantry Museum's World War II collection

One of two DUKWs donated to the museum, this vehicle might be displayed when the new National Infantry Museum opens in the summer of 2008 if construction stays on schedule. The DUKW is currently stored in the museum's warehouse with other items that the museum does not have space for.

Annette Fournier

If you've ever seen the DUKWs in action, it's like a ballet. They turn round each other from the beach to the ships and circle back — it's amazing.

It could maneuver through the sea over rough waves and reefs fully loaded and drive up onto the beach. The tire pressure could be internally adjusted to adapt to driving on sandy beaches, rocks or roads.

The DUKW could drive 45 miles per hour on land and about 6 miles per hour in the water. It could carry 25 men and equipment on land and 50 in the water, and move about 5,000 pounds of cargo.

By the end of the war, 21,000 DUKWs had been manufactured. The vehicles remained in use after the end of WWII.

One of the Infantry Museum's DUKWs was donated "years ago," Hanner said, and came from Atlanta to Fort Benning. That DUKW is kept in the museum's warehouse. It is in better condition than the other, and could possibly be put on display when the new Infantry Museum opens, Hanner said.

The other DUKW is parked at a storage facility on Sand Hill. It came from a Liberty ship that had been displayed in the Baltimore Harbor in Maryland. The paint is flaked away, the body is orange with rust and the metal is rusted through in spots. The lights are smashed, the tires flat and the DUKW "won't ever drive or float anywhere again," Hanner said.

The museum does not have the resources to restore the DUKW, but Hanner is hoping that an organization may volunteer to restore the vehicle as a project.

"We have 35,000 objects in our collection," Hanner said. "We have limited funds and staff, so the odds that we'll be able to work on this project are slim. It would be wonderful to be able to show off these vehicles in the new museum."

"If you've ever seen the DUKWs in action, it's like a ballet. They turn round each other from the beach to the ships and circle back — it's amazing. I hope someday we'll have the money and space to display these and our other pieces."

Mall: Opens around Thanksgiving

"One of the greatest things is that it's a safe place to shop," Beaudin said.

The current PX implements the "code Adam" procedure when children are lost in the store, and the new PX will continue to use the system. The doors of the store are closed until the child is found, she said.

The new PX will have a Charley's Steakery, Pizza Hut, Burger King, Manchu Wok, Taco Bell, Robin Hood and Starbucks.

More than 25 concessionaires will be in the PX and they will be more comfortably spaced, Beaudin said.

Negotiations are underway to have a

Brookstone and an international food store in the new PX. Brookstone carries home items ranging from cooking supplies to massaging chairs to cameras. The international food store would offer customers foods from other countries, like German candy or Korean dishes, Beaudin said.

The pharmacy and a small military clothing and sales store will also move to the new PX, which will have three restrooms, including one on each end of the building and one in the customer service department, so customers don't have to leave the store to use the restroom, Beaudin said.

The new PX is being built across the street from the current Main Mall PX and commissary.

Of the other projects on post, the mini mall will be the next to open after the furniture store.

The mini mall is being built near Sayers Library and the Burger King on Main Post and is slated to open May 1. A Charley's Steakery, Pizza Hut and concessions will be located in the mini mall.

The Main Post Class Six was originally scheduled to move into the mini mall, but will now remain where it is. The Class Six will have an "image upgrade" with brighter lights, Beaudin said.

The shoppette located on Custer Road is scheduled to open in early September.

Ashes aren't so dorky anymore

INFANTRY TRAINING BRIGADE
Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Leon G. Kircher

I grew up in a little Methodist church that had two large rooms and a kitchen. The big room upstairs was for church, the big room downstairs was divided up for Sunday School rooms and church dinners. The kitchen was where we “older” kids had our own brand of Sunday School, which usually meant sneaking out to the store across the street and getting enough Twizzlers to eat before Sunday School started. Our teacher, Bennie White, always let us have our licorice — as long as we shared. In Northeast Pennsylvania we were a tight little group, mostly of Protestant German ancestry.

The Italian and Polish Catholics lived across the mountain in the Wyoming Valley or in the big city of Scranton. They did things differently than we — like put ashes on their heads once a year. Our most common adjective describing that was “dorky.”

It was an especially hard time for the very few Catholic kids we had at school on our side of the mountain. What do you put ashes on your forehead for? Why didn't most Protestants do the same thing?

I googled and found that until the 600s, Lent began on the Quadragesima (Fortieth) Sunday, but Gregory the Great (c.540-604) moved it to a Wednesday, now called Ash Wednesday, to secure the exact number of 40 days in Lent — not counting Sundays, which were feast days.

Gregory, who is regarded as the father of the medieval papacy, is also credited with the ceremony that gives the day its name. As Christians came to the church for forgiveness, Gregory marked their foreheads with ashes reminding them of the Biblical symbol of repentance (sackcloth and ashes) and mortality: “You are dust, and to dust you will return” (Gen. 3:19).

When we come forward for the imposition of the ashes on Ash Wednesday, we acknowledge that without Jesus' grace and our faith in him, we would stand under God's condemnation; that we're completely dependent on God; and that repentant, we can turn away from the sin that would kill us and turn to the God who loves us.

Anybody who wears ashes on his or her forehead isn't making much of a fashion statement and frankly it is sort of dorky-looking. That's OK.

Dorky or not, “ashes to ashes and dust to dust” is an honest statement that we make about ourselves. But we also confess our faith that all who believe in Jesus Christ will rise again to live with God forever!

Like Job in the Old Testament, we can say that after all our skin has been destroyed, our own eyes will see God! This all seems pretty holy. So again, why don't more Protestants receive ashes?

Beginning with the Reformation of the 16th century, many Protestants abandoned the practice of Ash Wednesday, as well as many other rituals, in a rejection of what Protestant thinkers saw as the theological and liturgical excesses of Catholicism.

In recent decades, the imposition of ashes has returned to many churches in the Episcopal and Lutheran denominations, which are liturgically similar to Catholicism. Scholars say a variety of changes in American religion have made possible the return to ashes by Protestant churches. Though the 40 days of Lent is devoutly observed in some mainline Protestant denominations (most notably for Anglicans, Episcopalians and United Methodists to name a few), Ash Wednesday is still not that common. Why?

The hostility of Protestants toward Catholics, which was at times both theological and personal, has significantly decreased (Catholics really are OK people and I married one), making it possible for denominations to get beyond the petty differences and get back to the worship of God.

In addition to “feel good,” worship there also needs to be room in the church for the other emotions and the symbols that represent them; especially the one that causes us to grieve for our sinfulness.

For many Protestant theologians and clergy, Ash Wednesday serves a useful symbolic purpose, helping worshipers understand the liturgical calendar by setting off the 40-day penitential period of Lent that runs from Ash Wednesday to the celebration of Jesus' resurrection on Easter.

It's Scriptural, and it has spiritual significance. So, why don't you receive ashes?

Character does count

CORRESPONDENT
Bud Ruppel

J. C. Watts Jr., former Congressman from Oklahoma, said, “...character does count. For too long, we have gotten by in a society that says the only right thing is to get by, and the only wrong thing is to get caught. Character is doing what's right when nobody is looking.”

Integrity. How often have you heard that word tossed around only to see it trampled in the dirt? It can be ordered, but it can only be achieved by example. In other words, if you demand integrity, then you must live it everyday. People are watching.

In a recent interview with Jeff Gammage, staff writer for the Philadelphia Inquirer, Jeff Hanson, director of the Markkula Center for Applied Ethics at Santa Clara (California) University said, “The United States has become a winner-take-all society.

Two decades of economic Darwinism have created a dichotomy where the rewards for finishing first and finishing second — or, God forbid, third — can be miles apart.”

In the same article, Gammage wrote, “The must-win message is reinforced by media that extol the victor.

Parents tell children that cheaters never prosper, but Hanson suspects kids pay more attention to slogans such as the Nike Atlanta Olympics ad: “You don't win silver. You lose gold.”

The pressure to get ahead at all costs is creating an environment in which laying aside one's character has become far too common. Sport stars, politicians and company executives have added to this malaise by their own unethical practices. David Callahan, a writer for the Christian Science Monitor, quoted one student as saying, “Cheating is how the real world works. Look at the politicians who lie or the sluggers who take steroids, or the CEOs who cook the books.”

What type of legacy are we leaving the next generation? That it is OK to cheat because “everybody else” is doing it? While I agree that nobody wants to be a loser, I emphatically believe when you cheat you've already become one.

If we are to survive as a nation, we must return to the godly values upon which it was founded. In 1787 the U.S. Congress proclaimed, “Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind ... shall forever be encouraged” (Article III, Northwest Ordinance).

Noted author Charles Swindoll identified four main areas that people are prone to lay aside their character for ill-gotten gain: Fortune, fame, power and pleasure. Swindoll wrote in his book, The Quest for Character, “Fortune. Fame. Power. Pleasure. When it comes to temptation, these are the biggies.

By resisting each, out in the open, we cultivate character down inside.”

You may well remember Richard Dortch, former executive director of the now defunct PTL. Dortch ended up in prison for his involvement in the scandal that brought down this TV ministry. It was a long road back.

But he confronted his failure and lack of integrity and now spends much of his time in helping others from making the same mistakes he did.

In his book, Losing It All & Finding Yourself, Dortch outlined four profound principles in keeping your integrity and character healthy and intact:

- First, integrity involves our relationship to God. Put your hearts under a microscope and examine how integrity works for you.
- Always (emphasis mine) be people of honesty. There is no room for lies.
- Second, anyone can lose his or her integrity. Without constant diligence to the little things in life, your integrity can quickly slip through your hands.

- Third, integrity involves the wholeness of our inner person — our heart, mind and will. When our integrity is intact, nothing divides the wholeness of who we are and what we're about.
- To be honest, you have to be honest in all you do.
- Fourth, integrity can be regained. King David said, “Let integrity and uprightness protect me, because my hope is in you.” Spoken by a man who committed adultery, fathered two illegitimate children and had a man murdered. But David admitted his mistakes and sought God's forgiveness and God restored David to right standing with him.
- Learn to admit your mistakes, seek forgiveness and start living again.
- Fame, status and fortune are all nice. But they are but dust in the wind when compared to high morale character.
- When all the veneer of “success” is stripped away, and one day it all will be, what remains is what will sustain you.
- Brig. Gen. James Spivey said, “Success fades, but character endures. The pathway from success to significance is measured by our selfless service, our respect for others and our personal integrity.”
- If you cultivate a high level of personal integrity I will guarantee that you will be a success. Go for it!

210TH FIRES BRIGADE
Lt. Col. David W. Acuff

Memories made of time in field, not PX

The wash rack. In February. Could anything make a worse recruiting commercial than that?

(For the civilians who read these devotionals, let me translate: coat your entire car with mud, top and bottom. Jack the car up. Get the hosepipe, climb underneath, and begin spraying the mud off the bottom of the car. A lot of this mud and ice water will run down the collar of your shirt onto you. The temperature is 40 degrees.)

I passed by the wash rack this week, and my mind was transported back exactly 24 years, to Fort Knox, Ky., to the wash rack in February.

I was under a tank, with a fire hose, and I was cold. But strangely enough, the memory wasn't bad.

In fact, the profound memories I have of basic training aren't the easy times. The memories that have stuck to me would never make recruiting commercials — breaking track in the sand, glorying, standing around a pot-belly stove on the polar range, mud, and especially the funny things.

The weekends, the PX trips, and even the graduation don't mean that much to me.

The Army demands a lot from you.

It is tiring, and sometimes, on the wash rack in February it is downright excruciating.

But as strange as it may sound, it is the memories of these things that you will store and treasure for life. The four-day weekend, which you need and deserve, will not be your treasure. No more.

Your memories are being made on the middle Saturday in the field.

All of us will carry fond memories from the Army, no matter how we treasure.

We cannot yet know what those are. That is "redeeming the time."

Bouton Heights and Davis Hill residents are encouraged to attend the town hall meeting at Stowers Elementary School from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Feb. 28.

Prizes will be given away.

Deployment brings about relationship change

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

One constant about Army life is change. Something is always going on. Units find themselves training for the next mission, somewhere in the midst of the mission or completing that mission. Then the cycle begins all over again.

I do not know about you but I always seem to have a full "to do" list. And when I get it down to the last item, it fills up again just as fast. And everything had to be done yesterday. I guess one measure of success in the Army is the ability to ebb and flow with the tides of change.

One change we know too well in the military is the sacrifice of time spent away from family. 3rd Brigade is once again preparing to go back to Iraq.

We know deployment brings about changes, including changes in a Soldier's routine brought on by demands to be trained and equipped and prepared to meet the enemy. Another change occurs on the family front. Routines change.

Roles will change; sacrifices will be made on the home front. The family faces change too, with the departure of a mother or father leaving for up to a year.

Change produces stressful situations, especially when we are not prepared for them. Unspoken wants and desires can cause stress and hurt in a marriage.

It is good practice to communicate our wants and desires with our spouses especially during these stressful times. One marriage expert said, "know what you want, say what you want and get what you want." These are good principles to apply in our daily communication with our spouses, and these will even work on the job too.

One dynamic of deployment is the realization of the loss of togetherness. Grief is associated with loss. Many Soldiers and spouses feel a sense of loss ramping up for a deployment and experience grief. Denial that we are going again. Anger that we are going again. Depression that we are going again.

And finally, acceptance that we are going again.

As we begin to focus on departing, we are also focusing on separation.

In order to help with your separation, make some time where you sit down and talk about your wants, needs and desires prior to leaving.

What are the top three things you would like to do prior to deploying? What are the top three things you would like to do before your Soldier departs? What are the top three needs that must get done prior to the departure? Taking time to discuss these will help in the departure process. There should be no guessing about what needs to be done and there will be no regrets about leaving something undone.

If you are married, I believe it is also important to recommit yourselves to one another as husband and wife. New challenges await both downrange and on the home front. Nothing helps more than a renewal, a recommitment to each other.

Ask your chaplain about a committal service or create your own special recommitment to one another. Knowing we are loved and have a committed faithful spouse is a tremendous asset to a successful deployment.

If you are struggling with deployment or any other issues, we would like to help you at the Family Life Center. Call 706-545-1760 today and make an appointment or stop by at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza. Our pastoral staff is here to help with your journey.

Trans fats harmful to health even in small amounts

Watch out for partially hydrogenated ingredients

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Jorge Gomez

FORT LEE, Va. — New York City is banning trans fatty acids from its restaurants. Kentucky Fried Chicken, Wendy's, Chili's and Ruby Tuesday have already eliminated trans fat from their menus.

The preoccupation with removing trans fat comes from the latest research showing that even small amounts of this fat in the diet can have harmful health effects, according to the Harvard School of Public Health.

Tens of thousands of heart attacks and cardiac arrests could be prevented if trans fat were removed from the industrial food supply, according to HSPH researchers.

Studies show that for every 2 percent of calories consumed from trans fat, the risk of coronary heart disease increases by 23 percent.

For someone who consumes 2,000 calories per day, 2 percent of total calories represents 40 calories from trans fat — about the amount found in a medium order of French fries.

Since Jan. 1, 2006, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration requires manufacturers to list the amount of trans fat per serving in their products on the Nutrition Fact panel.

However, trans fat does not have to be listed if the total amount of fat in the food is less than 0.5 gram per serving.

In other words, a product with 0.49 grams of trans fat per serving does not need trans fat listed on the nutrition label, even though two servings of crackers could very well amount to nearly a gram.

"Sometimes the labels can be misleading, so people should read the ingredients," said Capt. Suzanne Akuley, dietician and nutrition instructor for the Army Center of Excellence, Subsistence.

"Ingredients are listed from the most to the least amount. If there's any mention of 'hydrogenated' or 'partially hydrogenated,' it means there's trans fat in there somewhere."

For example, a label on the top corner of a bag of tortilla chips may say the product includes no trans fat, and the Nutrition Panel may list 0 grams of trans fat per serving. But, the ingredients list "partially hydrogenated soybean."

If the same particular brand of chips actually contain 0.4 grams of trans fat per serving, the consumer will take in nearly a gram of trans fat after eating only 22 chips.

Vegetable shortening is another ingredient that contains trans fat.

Trans fat is worse for cholesterol levels because it raises the "bad" (low density lipoprotein) and lowers the "good" (high density lipoprotein) cholesterol, Akuley said.

LDL is considered bad because it is a risk factor for heart disease. HDL is good because it carries cholesterol from body cells and tissues to the liver for excretion from the body, Akuley said.

That's why polyunsaturated and monounsaturated fats found in nuts, avocados and peanut butter are good. They result in less LDL and more HDL production in the body.

For more information on trans fat, visit www.fda.gov.

Avoiding certain foods can reduce acid reflux

Acid Reflux affects 7 million Americans, mostly people between ages 45 and 64

MCG HEALTH SYSTEM
Dr. Bruce MacFadyen and Dr. Michael A. Edwards

GastroEsophageal Reflux Disease, or GERD, is a backflow of stomach acid into the swallowing tube or esophagus that afflicts 7 million Americans. Because this acid has the potential to damage the delicate lining on the inside of the esophagus, it is more than just heartburn — it is a chronic disease. GERD is also known as acid reflux.

GERD is the result of an intermittent relaxation of the sphincter that keeps the lower end of the esophagus closed when a person is not swallowing food or liquids.

This relaxation occurs several times a day in everyone, but occurs more frequently in those with GERD.

Food — all food — is the culprit. Food fills the stomach and causes relaxation of the esophageal sphincter.

Also, food stimulates the production of acid in the stomach to aid digestion. Both can worsen GERD symptoms

But, you've got to eat, right? If you have GERD, avoid eating large meals and lying down after a meal.

Wearing tight fitting clothing and bending down also could trigger symptoms.

Certain foods and drinks can worsen reflux symptoms, including chocolate, peppermint, spicy foods, coffee, carbonated drinks and alcohol. Reflux symptoms are not only caused or worsen by certain foods and drinks, as some patients can have reflux even on an empty stomach. Other things that can worsen reflux symptoms include smoking and being overweight.

No one is immune to GERD, not even infants, but the incidence increases dramatically above the age of 40.

In fact, more than half of those with GERD are between the ages of 45 to 64, both male and female.

The four major symptoms are:

- Heartburn — an uncomfortable, rising, burning sensation behind the breastbone
- Regurgitation of gastric acid or sour contents into the mouth
- Difficult or painful swallowing
- Chest pain

Some people can experience pulmonary problems such as asthma, coughing, intermittent wheezing and vocal cord inflammation with hoarseness because of GERD. Others who regurgitate acid into their lungs can have wheezing or cough.

A sore throat can be caused by acid refluxed into the throat, and tooth enamel can be dissolved by acid reaching the mouth.

Severe and long-standing GERD can lead to complications, such as ulcers in the esophagus, narrowing of the esophagus and a condition called Barrett's esophagus, the development of an abnormal lining of the esophagus that have been linked to developing cancer in the esophagus.

If you suspect that the pain you have after eating is more than just heartburn, see your doctor. If you have GERD, your doctor can evaluate its severity and work with you to get you symptom-free.

Most patients with GERD have their symptoms controlled with anti-acid medications in addition to dietary changes. If you have had GERD for a long period of time and continue to have symptoms in spite of taking anti-acid medications and sticking to dietary recommendations made by your physician, you may be considered to have GERD that is unresponsive to medical therapy and may need surgery.

The gastrointestinal surgeons at MCG are experts in the surgical treatment of GERD, and perform this operation routinely using the minimally invasive or laparoscopic technique.

Minimally invasive or laparoscopic surgery is performed with a laparoscope, which is a camera that allows the surgeon to see or to capture images of what's inside the body.

Minimally invasive surgery allows surgeons to completely explore the inside of a body cavity and to remove or repair parts of the body through incisions as small as a dime. Patients benefit from laparoscopic surgery by having less blood loss, less pain, faster recovery times, less scarring and other physical and emotional comforts.

ASK THE JUDGE

Deployed Soldiers have options, extensions for filing taxes

OFFICE OF THE
STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE

Capt. Gabriel A. Mendel

Q: Are deployed service members eligible for an extension to file their federal income taxes?

A: Members of the armed forces who serve in a combat zone or a qualified hazardous duty area, or "in direct support" of a CZ or QHDA, are eligible for an extension to file their federal income taxes.

Service members serving in a CZ or QHDA have an automatic extension to file their federal income tax returns and to pay their taxes.

The extension is 180 days plus the number of days the service member was in the CZ or HQDA during the normal tax filing period (Jan. 1 through April 15).

The extension begins on the day after the service member leaves the CZ or QHDA.

Service members who use this extension do not pay interest on the amounts owed to the Internal Revenue Service and they will receive interest from the IRS if they are entitled to a refund.

Service members who qualify for this extension must clearly write "COMBAT ZONE" across the top of their tax return when they file upon their return.

Because this extension is automatic, service members should not file for an extension using IRS Form 4868 or IRS Form 2688.

Service members returning from a CZ or QHDA who have not yet filed their previous year's federal income tax return should bring their previous year's W-2s, as well as any other additional tax paperwork to the nearest servicing tax center.

Although both the current and previous year's federal income tax returns may be filed at the same time after returning from a CZ or QHDA, only the current year's federal income tax return may be e-Filed with the IRS.

The previous year's federal income tax return must be filed by mail.

The Fort Benning Tax Center is located in Building 1678 (across the street from the post movie theater and behind the Follow Me Chapel) and is open on a walk-in basis from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and from 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursdays.

No new customers accepted 30 minutes prior to closing.

Sipping soda, snacking contribute to tooth decay

U.S. ARMY DENTAL ACTIVITY

Many parents across the country will issue a common refrain at dinnertime tonight: "You'd better eat that — it's good for you!" There's another old favorite in the parental arsenal of dietary admonitions: "Don't eat that — it'll rot your teeth!"

Now more than ever, kids are faced with a bewildering array of food choices — from fresh produce to sugar-laden processed convenience meals and snack foods.

What children eat and when they eat it may affect not only their general health but also their oral health.

Americans are consuming foods and drinks high in sugar and starches more often and in larger portions than ever before.

It's clear that "junk" foods and drinks gradually have replaced nutritious beverages and foods for many people.

For example, the average teenage boy in the U.S. consumes 81 gallons of soft drinks each year.

Alarming, a steady diet of sugary foods and drinks can ruin teeth, especially among those who snack throughout the day.

Common activities may contribute to the tendency toward tooth decay. These include "grazing" habitually on foods with minimal nutritional value, and frequently sipping on sugary drinks.

When sugar is consumed over and over again in large, often hidden amounts, the harmful effect on teeth can be dramatic. Sugar on teeth provides food for bacteria, which produce acid. The acid, in turn, can eat away the enamel on teeth.

Almost all foods have some type of sugar that cannot and should not be eliminated from our diets.

Many of these foods contain important nutrients and add enjoyment to eating. But there is a risk for tooth decay from a diet high in sugars and starches.

Starches can be found in everything from bread to pretzels to salad dressing, so read labels and plan carefully for a balanced, nutritious diet for you and your kids.

Reduce your children's risk of tooth decay:

- Sugary foods and drinks should be consumed with meals. Saliva production increases during meals and helps neutralize acid production and rinse food particles from the mouth.
- Limit between-meal snacks. If kids crave a snack, offer them nutritious foods.
- If your kids chew gum, make it sugarless — chewing sugarless gum after eating can increase saliva flow and help wash out food and decay-producing acid.
- Monitor beverage consumption — instead of soft drinks all day, children should also choose water and low-fat milk.
- Help your children develop good brushing and flossing habits.
- Schedule regular dental visits.

The Fort Benning Tax Center will be closed for the next four Mondays, so volunteers can help Soldiers in training prepare their taxes.

We appreciate your cooperation and look forward to serving you from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursdays.

Tobacco harmful to mouth

U.S. ARMY DENTAL ACTIVITY

Do you smoke or use chewing tobacco? Rarely a day goes by without a magazine, newspaper or TV news report carrying a message about tobacco-related medical problems — the dangers of lung disease, cancer, heart problems and low birth-weight babies.

Perhaps you even tune out those messages because you don't want to quit just yet — or you think you can't.

Tobacco is harmful to your mouth, not to mention your social life.

Here are just a few reasons why: smelly breath, stained teeth, loss of teeth and jawbone, loss of taste, gum recession, outrageous cost, oral cancer, mouth sores and wrinkles.

Tobacco's negative effects on the body, particularly the mouth, are well documented. Smoking impairs the body's defense mechanisms and makes users more susceptible to infections like gum disease. Smoking also interferes with healing, a particular problem for patients who need treatment for periodontal disease.

Once the ingredients in tobacco get into the bloodstream, they reduce the delivery of oxygen and nutrients to mouth tissues.

Chewing (spit) tobacco is not a safe substitute for smoking.

It can cause oral cancer and lead to addiction.

The bloodstream quickly absorbs the extremely addictive nicotine. Chewing tobacco users have similar or even higher levels of nicotine than the smoker who uses a pack or more a day.

Chewing tobacco users are more susceptible to tooth decay due to the product's higher sugar content. And, chewing tobacco contains at least 28 known cancer-causing chemicals.

It's no secret that tobacco use is difficult to stop — it takes willpower and determination. Tobacco use is not just a habit; it's an addiction.

You have to be ready to face this challenge before you commit to quit.

Remind yourself of the benefits of quitting. You'll reduce the risk of cancer. You'll taste and enjoy food again.

You'll feel more relaxed without the jitters of nicotine. You won't be plagued by "smoker's breath." Your sense of smell will be sharper. Your family and friends will thank you.

Here are some tips to get you started:

- Get help from loved ones, friends and co-workers when going through the quitting process.
- Ask another smoker to quit with you.
- Call organizations such as the American Cancer Society for support groups in your area.
- Get ready by setting a date to quit.
- Get help by talking to your dentist or physician about nicotine cessation aids.

For more tips on quitting, call the American Cancer Society's toll-free number at 1-800-4-Cancer.

Family program leaders define top concerns

Re-naming family programs, funding, use of technology were top concerns

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Fred W. Baker III

WASHINGTON — Top military family program leaders from across the services gathered here Feb. 15 intent on answering tough questions on how to better work together.

Instead, after a day of discussions, leaders at the 2007 Family Readiness Summit came up with nine issues they will present to senior military leadership.

"Part of our goal was to identify best practices, lessons learned, challenges and requirements, and what we found was that regardless of which group and which questions they were working on, everyone came up with essentially the same list," said James L. Scott III, the director of individual and family policy for the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs.

Each of the issues will be defined and will include recommendations by the group.

The findings will be attached to a letter from Assistant Defense Secretary Thomas F. Hall to the service secretaries and reserve-component chiefs asking for their support in implementation.

Topping the list as a challenge was defining, and possibly renaming, family assistance centers across the services.

The group noted that family programs have many different names across the services, and all have different meanings and provide different services.

"It's so confusing to our families — even the military members," Scott said. "How do we get to one label?"

Army Col. Anthony E. Baker, chief of family programs for the National Guard Bureau, said the family assistance center is clearly defined in DoD regulations, but that it applies to an installation-level organization and does not mean the same thing for the reserve component, which has centers in geographically dispersed areas.

Members of the group expressed concerns that some family members do not go to the centers because of a possible negative connotation of the word "assistance."

"Nobody wants a handout," Scott said. Funding also topped the list as a challenge. The group said more money is needed for more full-time personnel. More funds would help avoid burnout for the full-time staff and volunteers. Scott said there needs to be a balance.

"We can't buy everything. We can't expect people to donate everything," he said.

Some participants expressed concern that current funding is tied to current operations and that those funds will not always be available. Funding should be consistent and not tied to specific operations, some said.

Also, the group said there should be one policy across the services on whether funds can be used for family member travel for training. Not all services will pay for family member travel for support-related training.

Use of emerging technologies was listed as a best practice and a challenge. Technology makes it easier to push some services down to the individual who is computer savvy, but the range of capabilities is so diverse among family members that new technology cannot be solely relied upon as a delivery system.

Partnering made the list of best practices. Partnering with the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve to help make contacts with local businesses was cited as a good example of partnering.

Also the development of the Web site MilitaryOneSource.com was seen as a best practice. The group members said they would like to see it further developed to include more tailoring to the individual services.

The group listed volunteers as a best practice, citing volunteerism as an integral part of a successful program.

The group also said there needs to be a focus on single soldiers' family needs, as well as the reintegration process after returning from deployment.

The summit's purpose was for group members to brainstorm ways to break down interservice bureaucratic barriers that sometimes prevent military family members from getting the help they need. This is the third such summit since 2001.

"I was very, very pleased. The response was much better than I expected it to be," Scott said.

"It was a wonderful and powerful networking opportunity. I had a number of people come up to me and say 'We need to continue this,'" he said.

Military families can also avail themselves of the Defense Department's America Supports You program, which highlights home front groups across the nation that are providing a variety of services and support to troops and their families. A listing of these groups and information about their efforts is available at www.AmericaSupportsYou.mil.

De-stressing your move

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Moving is one of the most stressful events in a person's life, and having pets only adds to the worry.

Preplanning is a way to make the transition less stressful for you and your pets. If you are PCSing, find out your new station's requirements for pets and find housing that allows animals.

Start planning the move as soon as you get the orders to PCS. Several places require certain blood tests that may take more than a few days to complete, and you will need the pet's complete medical records.

Be sure to check on the rabies vaccine requirements because several places require the pet to have a microchip in order for the vaccine to be valid.

Several places to go for more information are Army Knowledge Online's "My Pet" section and the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service Web site, www.aphis.usda.gov, where you can search pet travel and find state requirements on vaccinations.

If you need to use a civilian vet at the new location, look on the American Animal Hospital Association's Web site, www.healthypet.com, where you can search by zip code. You can also ask your current vet to recommend one.

If your pet is on any medications or a special diet, purchase an extra supply before you move so that you have some time to find them at the new location, the AAHA recommends.

On moving day, keep the pet in its kennel or in the backyard so that it is not in the way and you won't have to worry about it getting out when people open the door. If you leave the pet loose in the bathroom or laundry room, put a note on the door so that someone doesn't open the door and let the pet out.

If you will drive to your new location, get a pet carrier or kennel that will fit in the back of your vehicle or plan to have a space set aside in the vehicle where the pet can lay down.

Most cats aren't good car travelers and should be kept in their carriers. Stop frequently while driving and allow the pet to stretch its legs and drink water. If you have a pet prone to car or air sickness, ask your vet for feeding suggestions or medication to calm them.

If you have to stop overnight, plan ahead and find a hotel on your route that allows pets and make a reservation.

Make airline reservations in advance and find out if they allow small pets on the plane. Most airlines will only allow a certain number of pets on each flight and there are weight requirements and additional fees that may apply.

Several companies make animal carriers that are approved for travel on certain airlines. The pet carrier must meet carry-on luggage requirements.

When you arrive at the new house, get out the pet's familiar toys, bed, litter box and food and water dish to help reduce the stress of being in a new place. Having something familiar in the new place will ease the transition.

Sticking to the routine will also ease the pet's transition stress. Try to stick to the routine that you established in the old house, and pick a spot for the pet's dishes, bed and litter box and keep them there.

Also, get a new pet tag with the new address and phone number, and make appointments to see the new vet.

For more information, go to the Humane Society of the U.S.'s Web site, www.hsus.org, and read the articles on moving and traveling with pets.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Lt. Col. Virginia Yates

Q) Does using an alcohol gel hand sanitizer instead of soap and water help control the spread of germs?

A) Yes. In fact, the Navy published a study of basic training recruits where the number of trainees with skin infections dropped significantly when the use of alcohol gel hand sanitizers was enforced. Some Army units have Soldiers carry alcohol gel hand sanitizer to prevent the spread of infection because soap and water aren't always available. Research shows that families who use alcohol gel hand sanitizer have less gastrointestinal illnesses like vomiting and diarrhea.

Q) Aren't all waterless hand cleaners pretty much alike?

A) No. First, not all waterless hand cleaners contain alcohol. You should select a waterless hand cleaner containing alcohol such as ethanol or isopropanol. And second, the strength of alcohol matters. Experiments on effectiveness of various strengths of alcohol gel hand sanitizers show that sanitizers containing 40 percent ethanol are a less effective bacterial antiseptic than those containing 60 percent of ethanol. For healthcare worker use, the Food and Drug Administration recommends a concentration of 60 percent to 95 percent ethanol or isopropanol.

Q) Is there a right way to use alcohol gel hand sanitizer?

A) Yes. The Center for Disease Control fact sheet shows the proper way to use alcohol based hand sanitizer gels. It states to apply the product to the palm of the hand and rub hands together, covering all parts of the hand and fingers and rubbing until they are dry.

Pathways

The doors of St. James AME Church on Sixth Avenue were carved by slaves. The church also houses the second oldest pipe organ in the state. St. James was built after the Georgia Legislature gave land to the African Methodist Church in 1875.

The brick streets on Broadway between Fourth and Ninth streets were laid by slaves. There are several points of interest in this section of Columbus, known as the Historic District, including sites listed on the Black Heritage Trail and the Heritage Corner. Maps and brochures for self-guided tours are available at the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau, 900 Front Ave.

The restored train station at 1200 Sixth Ave. was originally the Union Train Station with white and "colored" waiting rooms. Sites of far more heinous forms of segregation and oppression have been preserved on the Black Heritage Trail, including the site of the assassination of Dr. Thomas Brewer at 1025-1/2 First Ave. Brewer, the head of the local NAACP, was killed outside his office on Feb. 18, 1956. Just down the street and around the corner, at the corner of 10th Street and Front Ave., is the site of slave auctions and a regular social gathering place for African American farmers from Alabama. The site was known as Kinfolks Corner.

St. James AME Church is one of six churches on the Black Heritage Trail in Columbus. St. James, which is listed on the National Historic Register, can be toured by appointment only. For more information, call the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 706-322-1613.

Faith and freedom

Early black locals sought solace, strength in worship and fellowship

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Find their stories and pass them on."

That's what Columbus Mayor Jim Wetherington encouraged us to do Monday at the Black History Observance in Columbus; learn about the men and women who paved the way for freedom and integration, then share those stories with our children and grandchildren.

Wetherington noted that African Americans "played a significant role in the growth and development of this city." Nowhere is that role more evident or those stories more plentiful than the Black Heritage Trail in uptown Columbus. A self-guided tour is perhaps the best way to "find their stories" and pass them on at the same time. Make it a family event.

Using brochures available at the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau, 900 Front Ave., you can drive from one historic point to the next — there are 29 in all, most of them listed on the National Historic Register.

Many of the sites are clustered in the Historic District, so you may choose to park the car and spend the day walking from point to point.

Even if you drive, you'll want to pull over on Broadway and admire the brick streets between Fourth and Ninth, the handiwork of local slaves who helped build this city in the early 1800s. These streets are arguably the most charming uptown, lined as they are with artfully preserved historic homes and cottages. Ironically, sandwiched in the lovely greenspace, between the eastbound and westbound lanes, is a monument to the Confederacy and an excellent place to ponder the complexities of our Southern history.

Churches are the most common structures on the tour, and with good reason. Slaves, and even free blacks, relied heavily on their faith to see them through a life of oppression. They put their faith in action, encouraging one another through song and fellowship.

On the Heritage Trail, one of the grandest examples of black faith in action is the St. James AME Church on Sixth Avenue. The massive double wooden doors were hand carved by slaves. Like the brick streets uptown, they testify to the ingenuity, hard work and creativity of our local black forefathers.

Early Christians used the expression "under the fig tree" to refer to time they spent in prayer. In 1900, local African Americans met under a fig tree, literally, on Third Avenue. The Fourth Street Baptist Church, point 16 on the Heritage Trail, evolved from those early prayer meetings.

The First African Baptist Church on Fifth Avenue is the oldest black church in Columbus. It was started in 1830, just two years after plans for the city were mapped out, by a slave named Joseph and 11 white men. First African Baptist is point number 2 on the Heritage Trail.

Aside from the churches, you'll see the historic Liberty Theater, the Old Slave Cemetery, the home of Gertrude "Ma" Rainey, and the site of the first shopping boycott held by local blacks. For more information, visit the Convention and Visitors Bureau or log on to www.columbusga.com/ccvb.

OPENING TODAY

THE ASTRONAUT FARMER — An astronaut (Billy Bob Thornton) is forced to leave NASA to save his family farm, but he continues to dream of space travel and sets out to build a rocket inside his barn. Though his neighbors consider him an oddity, the media considers him a story, and the government considers him a threat, nothing can deter him from his dream to break through the atmosphere and orbit the earth.

The Astronaut Farmer is rated PG for thematic material, peril and language.

THE ABANDONED — An American woman searching for her birth parents learns she has inherited a house in the middle of a forest in a remote area of Russia — the house where she was born. Abandoned and uninhabited for 40 years, it stands in total disrepair and neglect.

She meets a mysterious man who claims to be her brother, a twin she never knew. Together they find the house holds secrets to a past they don't remember.

Together they are forced to relive a series of horrifying events and shocking murders that occurred just after they were born, in the place they were supposed to die.

The movie stars Jordanka Angelova and Kaliln Arsov.

The Abandoned is rated R for violence and gore, some disturbing images, nudity and language.

THE NUMBER 23 — A man's life unravels after he comes into contact with an obscure book titled The Number 23.

As he reads the book, he becomes increasingly convinced that it is based on his own life. His obsession with the number 23 starts to consume him, and he begins to realize the book forecasts far graver consequences for his life than he could have ever imagined.

The Number 23, rated R for violence, disturbing images, sexuality and language, stars Jim Carrey and Virginia Madsen.

Reno 911!: Miami — The officers of the Reno police department visit a national police convention in Miami Beach.

When the convention center is bio-attacked, it's up to Reno's "finest" to save the day.

Robert Ben Garant, Thomas Lennon, Niecy Nash, Mary Birdsong and Cedric Yarbrough star in the movie.

Reno 911!: Miami is rated R for sexual content, nudity, crude humor, language and drug use.

ALSO IN THEATERS

GHOST RIDER — A motorcycle stuntman, Johnny Blaze (Nicolas Cage), makes a pact with a dark force, selling his soul to save his girlfriend (Eva Mendes).

When the bargain goes sour and the girl isn't saved, Blaze is transformed, gaining raging superpowers.

The movie is based on the Marvel comic series.

Ghost Rider is rated PG-13 for horror violence and disturbing images.

BRIDGE TO TERABITHIA — An 11-year-old boy has his life changed forever when he befriends the class outsider, a girl. Together they create the world of Terabithia, an imaginary kingdom filled with giants, trolls and other magical beings.

The Bridge to Terabithia, starring AnnaSophia Robb and Josh Hutcherson, is rated PG for thematic elements including bullying, some peril and mild language.

BREACH — Eric O'Neill (Ryan Phillippe) is promoted to a job inside FBI headquarters working for respected agent Robert Hanssen (Chris Cooper). Then O'Neill learns his true mission: finding proof that Hanssen has been selling American secrets to the Soviet Union for years.

Breach is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual content and language.

MUSIC AND LYRICS — Alex Fletcher (Hugh Grant) is a washed-up 80s pop star who's been reduced to working the nostalgia circuit at county fairs and amusement parks.

The charismatic and talented musician gets a chance at a comeback when the reigning diva Cora Corman invites him to write and record a duet with her, but there's a problem — Alex hasn't written a song in years, he's never written lyrics and he has to come up with a hit in a matter of days. Enter Sophie Fisher (Drew Barrymore), Alex's beguilingly quirky plant lady, whose flair for words strikes a chord with the struggling songwriter. As their chemistry heats up at the piano, Alex and Sophie will have to face their fears — and the music — if they want to find love and success.

TYLER PERRY'S DADDY'S LITTLE GIRLS — A successful female attorney falls in love with a janitor, the single father of three daughters, over the objections of her father.

Tyler Perry's Daddy's Little Girls, rated PG-13 for thematic material, drug and sexual content, some violence and language, stars Gabrielle Union, Avant and Louis Gossett Jr.

HANNIBAL RISING — In Eastern Europe at the end of World War II, a young Hannibal watches as his parents violently die, leaving his young sister in his care.

Alone and without any means of support, he is forced to live in a Soviet orphanage.

He flees to Paris to find that his uncle has died, but his Japanese widow Lady Murasaki (Gong Li) welcomes him. Even her kindness and love cannot soothe the nightmares and sorrows that plague him.

Showing a cunning aptitude for science, he is accepted into medical school, which serves to hone his skills and provide him the tools to exact justice on the war criminals that haunt him day and night.

This quest will ignite an insatiable lust within a serial killer who was not born, but made.

The movie also stars Gaspard Ulliel, Rhys Ifans, Ivan Marevich and Dominic West.

Hannibal Rising is rated R for strong grisly violent content and some language and sexual references.

NORBIT — Norbit (Eddie Murphy) has never had it easy. As a baby, he was abandoned on the steps of a Chinese restaurant and orphanage and raised by Mr. Wong.

Things get worse when he's forced into marriage by the mean, junk-food chugging queen Rasputia. Just when Norbit's hanging by his last thread, his childhood sweetheart, Kate, moves back to town.

Norbit, rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, some nudity and language, also stars Thandie Newton, Cuba Gooding Jr., Eddie Griffin and Terry Crews.

BECAUSE I SAID SO — A well-intentioned but overzealous mother (Diane Keaton) goes on a mission to find Mr. Right for her youngest and unmarried daughter (Mandy Moore).

The movie also stars Gabriel Macht, Tom Everett Scott and Lauren Graham.

Because I Said So is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue, some mature thematic material and partial nudity.

THE MESSENGERS — A family moves into a rundown sunflower farm. As the farm begins to revive after years of disrepair, the family begins to notice uncomfortable and alarming changes in their father's behavior.

The Messengers, rated PG-13 for mature thematic material, disturbing violence and terror, stars Kristen Stewart, Dylan McDermott, Penelope Ann Miller and John Corbett.

EPIC MOVIE — In the spirit of Scary Movie and Date Movie, this movie is a parody that spoofs recent mega-blockbusters.

The comedy centers around four orphans who visit a chocolate factory and are transported to the wonderful land of Gnarnia after stumbling upon an enchanted wardrobe.

Kal Penn, Adam Campbell, Jayma Mays, Faune Chambers and Jennifer Coolidge star in the movie.

Epic Movie is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language and some comic violence.

CATCH AND RELEASE — A woman (Jennifer Garner) must deal with the untimely death of her husband and the revelation of secrets he kept from her. Also starring in the movie are Timothy Olyphant, Juliette Lewis, Sam Jaeger and Fiona Shaw.

Catch and Release is rated PG-13 for sexual content, language and some drug use.

NEW RELEASES

STRANGER THAN FICTION: The concept of director Marc Forster's comedy may be too far-out for some viewers, but it does give Will Ferrell a chance to stretch in impressive acting company. He plays an Internal Revenue Service man who can't understand the strange voice he's hearing in his head — until a professor (Dustin Hoffman) helps him deduce he's actually a character in a story by an author (Emma Thompson) who may be about to eliminate him from both her world and his own. Queen Latifah and Maggie Gyllenhaal also star. DVD extras: six "making-of" documentaries; deleted scenes. (PG13:AS, P)

TENACIOUS D IN: THE PICK OF DESTINY: The result isn't exactly the same kind of movie-and-music tie-in that the Beatles had with A Hard Day's Night, but Jack Black is a musician as well as an actor — which made The School of Rock a dream project for him — and this comedy fictionalizes the birth of his actual band. He plays JB, whose tandem efforts with bandmate KG (Kyle Gass) involve their acquisition of a very special guitar pick they believe will help them attain immediate success. Ben Stiller and Tim Robbins are among Black's famous friends who also turn up here. (R:AS, P)

FAMILY VIEWING GUIDE KEY: AS, adult situations; N, nudity; P, profanity; V, violence; GV, particularly graphic violence.

Stranger Than Fiction (2006) — Karen Effiel is an author writing her latest novel about an isolated man named Harold Crick. What she doesn't know is that her fictionalized character is real. The real Harold Crick is an IRS agent who has lived a dull existence and one day begins to hear Karen's voice as she narrates what she puts on paper to what Harold has and is doing. Because of this Harold enlists the help of a literary professor to find out what is happening and ends up changing things about his life including beginning a relationship with his IRS client, a government-hating bakery owner named Ana Pascal. Harold, however, finds trouble when he hears that Karen plans to kill him.

Callaway Gardens THROUGH MARCH 4

Callaway Gardens is hosting an art exhibit entitled Plant Portraits: The California Legacy of A.R. Valentien through March 4. This exhibition is a display of 80 watercolors of native California plants painted in the early 1900s.

Almost 100 years ago, the artist Albert Valentien began a project that was 10 years in the making. He began his work in 1908, when he was commissioned by Ellen Browning Scripps to paint the wildflowers of California, with the plan to publish a book of the paintings when he finished. However, in the end Scripps decided the cost was too prohibitive, and Valentien's hope of seeing his work reproduced and admired by a large audience was dashed. In 2000, thanks to the commitment and generosity of Eleanor and Jerome Navarra, the Valentien Project, which would entail photographing, conserving, cataloging and eventually exhibiting the collection, began.

The exhibit is on display in the Virginia Hand Callaway Discovery Center until March 4. It is included with admission to the Gardens ($13 for adults, $6.50 for children ages 6 to 12 and free for children 5 and younger).

Callaway Gardens is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is located in Pine Mountain, about 30 minutes north of Columbus.

For more information, call 800-225-5292 or visit www.callawaygardens.com.

Melinda Newton helps her mother, Rose Brown, run Minnie's Uptown on Eighth Street. Rose's mother, Minnie, opened the restaurant 20 years ago. Minnie's, which specializes in Southern style country cooking, continues to be one of the most popular eating spots for the uptown lunch crowd.

Minnie's Uptown keeps 'em coming back for more

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

You can thank Uncle Sam for Minnie Hanneman's fine turkey dressing and gravy. If you're one of the 500 customers who dine at Minnie's Uptown every week-day, you know just how good that gravy is.

Minnie and her husband settled in Columbus after he retired from the Army, and she opened Minnie's Uptown Restaurant 20 years ago on Eighth Street near the Historic District. At 73, she's handed over the reins to her daughter, Rose, and granddaughter, Melinda, who still use her original recipes to create Southern style menus that draw lunchtime crowds large enough to sustain the business on one meal a day, five days a week.

Between 10:45 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., you'll find a line of folks waiting to be served in the cafeteria-style restaurant, which occupies three old buildings once used as a bakery, laundry and dirt-floor grocery. If you show up at just the right moment, you'll find a line of hungry loyalists snaking all the way through the building, out the door and around the corner.

Business is that good, and with good reason. Aside from the dressing, which is the best I've ever eaten, Minnie makes a mean macaroni and cheese, fried grouper that's absolutely delicious, baked turkey just the way you'd fix it for your family on Thanksgiving — no shortcuts — and standard Southern salads, cucumber, potato and coleslaw, that are anything but standard.

Minnie's menu changes daily, though fried chicken is a daily staple. Monday's you'll have to choose between chicken, country-fried steak and pot pie. Tuesday it's salmon patties and chicken baked or fried. Wednesday's menu features fried chicken, chops and Country Captain, a Southern chicken dish you must try before you leave the South — and chances are you won't want to leave afterwards. Thursday it's chicken, meatloaf and beef tips. Friday's choices include the grouper, turkey and chicken, of course.

Meals come in the one-meat, three-sides variety, and the two-meats, three-sides variety. Go ahead and choose two meats. Your lips will thank you, your hips will hate you, and at less than $7, your wallet won't know the difference. Two out of three ain't bad.

Breads are a given, of course, and your choices include cornbread, wheat or yeast rolls, biscuits and hushpuppies. Really good hushpuppies, I might add. The vegetable, or "side menu," is extensive, but it includes the traditional line-up: rice, greens, black eyed peas, green bean casserole, sweet potatoes, mashed potatoes, broccoli, okra, a variety of beans and fried green tomatoes. Thank you Uncle Sam for Minnie's fried green tomatoes.

Minnie also offers a fair number of desserts, including peanut butter pie, coconut custard and Mandarin Orange pineapple.

I should mention the service at Minnie's, because it's famous locally for its stereotypical Southern hospitality, which could be grating if you're the uptight, citified type. Get over it.

At Minnie's you'll be greeted with "honey" and a "sweetie-pie" and a "darlin'" here and there. You'll be "baby"ed at least twice before you go, guaranteed. Might as well enjoy it, because it's sincere and it's sweet and it comes with a plate of comfort food and the beverage of your choice. The cooking will keep you coming back for more, honey.

Minnie's, at 104 Eighth Street, also offers delivery and carry-out. Call 706-322-2766.

Falling Out and Belonging

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Falling out and Belonging: A Foot Soldier's Life is a good read if for no other reason than it is the true story of an ordinary WWII foot Soldier.

It tells the experiences of Pvt. S. Joseph Krouse, a mortar man with the 4th Infantry Division. He, like so many others, answered the call to duty and returned home to try to get on with his life.

He took advantage of the GI Bill that was offered and became an English professor, published author and editor.

The story follows the author from basic training to the European continent where he fought in some of the cruelest campaigns of the war in the Hurtgen Forest and Battle of the Bulge.

It is not a riveting page turner but it was interesting enough to keep me reading well past my regular bedtime. I related to it as a Soldier who has encountered the absurdities and strange ironies of military life.

Each year we lose thousands more of the men and women who turned the tide of war and beat the Axis powers into submission during that grim time in history. It is important that their experiences are preserved. These are the men who took the fight to the enemy and stayed until they were killed, grievously wounded or the war was won.

They left family and country, often for years, and endured the hardships and horror of the most destructive war in human history.

Krouse and his fellow Soldiers are thrown from battle to battle by commanders who often had no clue as to how they were suffering in the harsh winter conditions. The decisions those commanders made often had drastic consequences resulting in unnecessary casualties or futile operations.

Friends and Soldiers he hardly knew at all are killed around him with seemingly no rhyme or reason. Some Soldiers find favor and comfort in protected rear areas while others die on the front lines hungry and freezing.

Krouse makes no attempt to romanticize the conflict. It is what it is, periods of boredom interspaced with the terror of bloody combat that chews up men on both sides.

There are incidents of heroism and cowardice, good deeds and mindless cruelty and the day-to-day struggle just to stay alive amid the fog of war.

There are no pictures, maps or play by play of the battles Krouse was in. He and his band of brothers rarely had the luxury of seeing the big picture. Many times they had no clue as to their exact location.

Krouse struggles to make sense of it but in the end it makes no sense, it seems to be the luck of the draw or fate that decides who lives or dies. He simply tells the story of how he survived while his comrades died around him.

Black History Luncheon

Col. Michael Linnington, USAIC deputy commanding general, presents Pastor Prathan Powell with a Follow Me statue Feb. 15 at the Black History Month luncheon at the Benning Club. Powell was the guest speaker for the event.

Javonte Scott performed a song he wrote for the Black History Month luncheon.

Photos by Annette Fournier

Javonte Scott, performing as "Little One," rapped his song Black History, which he wrote himself. Scott and the other performers received standing ovations from the crowd.

Other performers included kindergartners from Loyd Elementary School, who recited a section of Martin Luther King Jr.'s I Have a Dream speech, and sang and performed motions to the song Hero.

Nu Beginning sang the Star Spangled Banner and Lift Every Voice and Sing. Warrant Officer Paulette A. Montgomery, 11th Engineer Battalion, recited the poem First to Fight.

Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill, the NCOIC for the Infantry Center's Equal Opportunity Office, sang Tommy Dorsey's Precious Lord.

The theme of the event was "From Slavery to Freedom: Africans in the Americas." It was sponsored by the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office. The next cultural observance will be the Women's History Month luncheon March 15 at the Benning Club.

GEORGIA'S MOVE OVER LAW SAVES LIVES

Georgia's new Move-Over Law says drivers must move-over for emergency vehicles stopped on the side of the highway. The law is meant to keep officers and traffic violators safe from crashes with passing cars.

The Move-Over Law was passed in the aftermath of growing numbers of police, emergency technicians and DOT workers being killed during routine traffic stops, crash responses and highway construction projects around the nation. Right now, more than 30 states have Move-Over Laws on the books, with fines that range as high as $1,000 or more in some jurisdictions. The Move-Over fine in Georgia is an "attention-getting" $500. However, failure to obey the Move-Over Law can lead to consequences far more serious than fines. According to FBI statistics, traffic crashes claim the lives of more police personnel than any other cause of death in the line of duty, including shootings. The FBI said last year, 49 officers died in crashes across the country. Thirteen of those law enforcement officers were struck and killed by passing vehicles while they worked outside their patrol cars.

"Georgia's Move-Over Law was meant to reduce the number of injuries and fatalities to police officers, paramedics, firefighters, tow truck operators and highway maintenance workers," said Director Bob Dallas of the Governor's Office of Highway Safety. Reports show emergency vehicles of all types have been struck while parked beside Georgia highways, even while their emergency lights were flashing.

The Georgia Move-Over Law requires drivers to move-over one lane when possible if an emergency vehicle with flashing lights is parked on the shoulder of the highway. And if traffic is too heavy to move-over safely, the law requires drivers to slow down below the posted speed limit instead and to be prepared to stop.

Move-Over-Law: Georgia Code, Title 40-6-16

a. The operator of a motor vehicle approaching a stationary authorized emergency vehicle that is displaying flashing yellow, amber, white, red or blue lights shall approach the authorized emergency vehicle with due caution and shall, absent any other direction by a peace officer, proceed as follows:

1. Make a lane change into a lane not adjacent to the authorized emergency vehicle if possible in the existing safety and traffic conditions; or

2. If a lane change under paragraph (1) of this subsection would be impossible, prohibited by law, or unsafe, reduce the speed of the motor vehicle to a reasonable and proper speed for the existing road and traffic conditions, which speed shall be less than the posted speed limit, and be prepared to stop.

b. The operator of a motor vehicle approaching a stationary towing or recovery vehicle or a stationary highway maintenance vehicle that is displaying flashing yellow, amber or red lights shall approach the vehicle with due caution and shall, absent any other direction by a peace officer, proceed as follows:

1. Make a lane change into a lane not adjacent to the towing, recovery or highway maintenance vehicle if possible in the existing safety and traffic conditions; or

2. If a lane change under paragraph (1) of this subsection would be impossible, prohibited by law, or unsafe, reduce the speed of the motor vehicle to a reasonable and proper speed for the existing road and traffic conditions, which speed shall be less than the posted speed limit, and be prepared to stop.

c. Violation of subsection (a) or (b) of this Code section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500.

Wildfire destroys Soldiers' cars

Three personally owned vehicles were destroyed by a wildfire in the Harmony Church area Wednesday afternoon. A spark from an explosives simulator, fueled by a steady breeze, ignited 20 acres of pines in a matter of minutes, post officials said. The automobiles belonged to cadre training Soldiers near Burroughs and Coolidge Ranges.

Staff Sgt. John Smith got his '97 Saturn out of the shop three days ago, after spending $1,500 to repair damages caused when a deer ran out in the road. He had the hood replaced and the car got a fresh coat of paint.

Wednesday, Smith's car went up in flames.

Shortly before 3 p.m., according to eye-witnesses, a training simulator, reportedly a trip-flare, sparked a blaze, fueled by a breeze, that consumed nearly 20 acres of pine, destroyed three vehicles and damaged a number of others.

James Parker, Fort Benning's lead forester, said "it happened in a matter of minutes."

Garbs lauded as hero

Remembered as 'gung-ho' patriot

THE BAYONET

Spc. Ryan Garbs, 20, of Edwardsville, Ill., died Feb. 18 in southeastern Afghanistan when a MH-47 E helicopter crashed while conducting operations in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Garbs, a two-time veteran of the Global War on Terrorism, deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom where he served as a grenadier and a rifleman in 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Garbs was one of eight service members who died when the Chinook crashed in the Shahjoi district of Zabul province. Fellow Ranger Pfc. Kristofer Thomas died in the crash. Fourteen people on board survived.

Garbs' goal after graduating from Edwardsville High School in 2005 was to become a Ranger, his father told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"That's all he ever wanted — to be an Army Ranger," Doug Garbs said. "He was just a gung-ho young man. He knew it would be the adventure of a lifetime and that's what he focused on."

Garbs insisted on having the American flag engraved on his class ring, reported Sanford J. Schmidt with The Telegraph.

Garbs joined the Army in July 2005 and after completing one station unit training, Airborne School, and graduating from the Ranger Indoctrination Program, he was assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"Being a Ranger is what you hold in your heart," said Col. Paul LaCamera, 75th Ranger Regiment commander.

As a high school sophomore, Garbs knew he wanted to be a Ranger, LaCamera said. Whether he was seen foot marching around town or doing pull-ups over his father's flowerbed, family and friends knew Garbs wanted to join the Army.

"This says so much about his character, his dedication and his desire to serve his country," LaCamera said.

"Ranger Garbs answered his call to duty, setting a very high standard for all of us to continue to live up to. He will be missed."

Edwardsville Mayor Gary Niebur directed the city flags to be flown at half-staff in Garbs' honor.

"Too often, we take our liberty for granted and forget the men and women — like Ryan Garbs — who place themselves in harms way so that we can continue to enjoy freedom," Niebur said during a city council meeting. "Too often, we fail to understand how people in other parts of the world envy us — not just for our material things — but for the right to vote, the right to choose our leaders, and, of course, the right to be free from terrorism and cruel dictatorships," Niebur said.

"To his family and other loved ones, we extend our most heartfelt condolences. Words cannot describe our sympathy."

"But we also extend our thanks. We thank you for giving us a good citizen, a committed Soldier — one of the elite and extremely dedicated Army Rangers. Your hearts will always be scarred from the loss, but the pain you now feel will someday be healed with an immeasurable sense of very deserving pride."

Garbs is survived by his parents, Doug and Jill Garbs, of Edwardsville, Ill., and his sister, Melanie Neely of Fairfield, Calif.

Garbs received the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal and Good Conduct Medal posthumously.

His other awards and decorations include the Army Service Ribbon, National Defense Service Medal, Global War on Terrorism, Afghanistan Campaign Medal Iraq Campaign Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge and the Parachutist Badge.

California honors Soldier killed in crash

Family said son died doing what he loved

Pfc. Kristofer D. Thomas, 18, of Roseville, Calif., died Feb. 18 in southeastern Afghanistan when a MH-47 E helicopter crashed while conducting operations in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Thomas, a rifleman serving as a member of a site security team with 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was one of eight service members who died when the Chinook crashed in the Shahjoi district of Zabul province. Fellow Ranger Spc. Ryan Garbs died in the crash. Fourteen people on board survived.

"Pfc. Thomas' intense desire to serve our great nation and the 75th Ranger Regiment changed his attitude in school," Col. Paul LaCamera, 75th Ranger Regiment commander.

And as a result, Thomas graduated from Roseville High School a semester early in order to join the Army in February 2006.

By September, he had completed one station unit training on Sand Hill, Airborne School and Ranger Indoctrination Program.

The first stanza of the Ranger Creed is "Recognizing that I volunteered as a Ranger, fully knowing the hazards of my chosen profession, I will always endeavor to uphold the prestige, honor and high esprit de corps of my Ranger Regiment ..."

"Ranger Thomas lived the Ranger Creed. Thomas' desire to serve his country and answer our nation's call in a time of war tells you something about his character," LaCamera said. "He will be missed."

In an online guest book, Thomas' mother, Deborah Getz, wrote that despite the pain at her son's death, knowing her son was doing what he wanted would only bring smiles.

High School Principal Brad Basham told the Roseville Post-Journal that Thomas went from struggling to become a model student whose desire to join the military was well known.

"It was a focus of his ever since he's been in high school, Basham said in an article published Feb. 21.

"He had a great sense of humor, and as a student made a great personal and academic turnaround his junior and senior year. He went from a tough kid to an absolute role model."

"We knew Kristofer was very much focused doing what he wanted to do and we're proud of him," Basham said.

California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger ordered Capitol flags flown at half-staff in Thomas' honor.

"It is with tremendous sadness that Maria and I offer our condolences to Pfc. Thomas' family and friends. Kristofer was a true hero, and his sacrifice helped safeguard the freedoms of our nation. Our prayers are with his loved ones during their time of mourning."

Thomas is survived by his parents, Eddie and Deborah Getz of Roseville, Rodney and Ramona Thomas of Lincoln, Calif., and his brothers Nic and Mason.

His awards and decoration include the Army Service Ribbon, National Defense Service Medal, Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, Afghanistan Campaign Medal and Parachutist Badge. He was posthumously awarded the Good Conduct Medal.

Thomas was buried Wednesday in Newcastle, Calif.

SecArmy to look at Benning training

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

As we enter the month of March, the U.S. Army Infantry Center is preparing for the challenges associated with the arrival of spring. While the warm weather is welcome, our training focus will not change, but our preparation for warm weather will. We are in a transition period that will require our leaders prepare for temperatures below freezing at night and in excess of 80 degrees during the day. This temperature swing is significant and will challenge us to be extra vigilant to protect our Soldiers. I have met with our leaders and we are preparing for these conditions to ensure the best possible training environment for our Soldiers and leaders training on post.

March is also a great time for us to showcase our post to the Army and our local community. Today we welcome the Honorable Dr. Francis J. Harvey, Secretary of the Army, to Fort Benning. We appreciate this and other opportunities to show how we train Soldiers for the Global War on Terrorism 50 weeks a year, seven days a week. We are an "open book" when it comes to training our Soldiers and our allies.

We will also host allied and coalition nation visits in March. These international visits include viewing classroom instruction, facilities, housing and community activities we believe that will be of use in their national training centers.

If there is one exercise I would highlight for this month, it is our force protection exercise. While we strive to be as invisible as possible to our post and local communities, sometimes we may have increased patrol activity at our vehicle access control points. These events may delay your entry on post for a few minutes, but we must exercise often to remain the most efficient team possible when required to implement increased force protection measures. Time spent on these exercises will reduce future delays. I want you to know that we all are training on post, to include our force protection and emergency services team.

I am proud to capture a few of last months training highlights for your information. Last week we had 11,474 Soldiers in training. Only three of our resident courses were in a cycle break, and these teams will receive new Soldiers this week. We had 212 Soldiers graduate from their initial Infantry training on Sand Hill, 506 graduates from officer training, 88 graduates from NCO training, and 339 graduates of our functional courses taught by the 29th Infantry and 11th Infantry Regiments.

This month we have the Army Marksmanship Unit hosting the U.S. Army Small Arms Marksmanship Competition March 2-13 March. The rifle competition is March 2-10 on the Easley/McAndrews Range complex and the pistol competition is on Phillips/Parks Range. The Award Ceremony for Small Arms is March 10, 5 p.m. on Phillips Range. The second component of the competition is the Long Range Rifle competition, March 11-13 on Maertens Range. The closing ceremony is March 13 at 5 p.m. on Phillips Range. The competition and award ceremonies are open to the public and we hope to see you there to congratulate the best marksmen in the Army.

The Ranger Training Brigade will host the Rangers in Action at 10 a.m. March 9 at Victory Pond, which is open to the public.

This is the best time of year to pursue The Expert Infantryman Badge, and our Soldiers are committed to earning this most coveted badge. Our recognition of this event and the ceremony for those Soldiers receiving their EIB will be at 1:30 p.m. Thursday on Burroughs Range.

Finally, I want to conclude with an update on our major training units on post.

The Ranger Training Brigade will be conducting both Ranger qualification training and the Reconnaissance and Surveillance Leader Course this month. RTB will also be preparing for next month's Best Ranger Competition.

The 11th Infantry Regiment will be hosting a full Basic Airborne Course with graduation on each Friday. Basic Officer Leader Course I, II, and III are in full swing as well. The NCO Academy and Maneuver Captains Career Course continue to train our NCO and Company Command leadership.

In addition to our normal mission of supporting Soldiers and leaders in training, our 11th Regiment's 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, will participate in the production of an Army Recruiting Video March 13-16, while 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, hosts the annual Hall of Fame March 29-30.

Fort Benning will provide support to our local community partners and the community Air Show, Thunder in the Valley, March 17-18 at Columbus Airport. And our most valued trainers, our drill sergeants will compete for the title of Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year March 26-29.

Remember, our mission is to train Soldiers for the Global War on Terrorism. I ask you all to be ready to support our trainers and our Soldiers for this mission.

Follow Me.

VARIOUS VOICES

How do you save money for the future?

I use TSP — the Thrift Savings Plan. I started when I got here in August, and I've got a pretty good amount of cash in there. I tell my friends about it all the time.

— Pvt. Chris Paulus,
1st Battalion, 10th Infantry Regiment

Mutual funds, bank account, IRA ... and the TSP, of course. I started that about eight years ago. I absolutely recommend it.

— Capt. Patrick Macri
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Do I maintain a fat savings account? No. I save the easy way — mutual funds and stuff like that.

— Jurgen Becker
Directorate of Combat Development

I don't save money. I've got a house note. That's my investment.

— Sgt. Tamara Alfred
104th Transportation Company

I just wish, when I came in the Army all those years ago, we'd had something like TSP. I wouldn't have to work right now. I think it behooves all leaders to influence young Soldiers to save.

— Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso

My wife does all our finances. She's awesome. If you get married, you need a (spouse) you can trust with your finances completely. I trust her with my life.

— Staff Sgt. Jose Guerra,
24th Ordnance Company

I'm a big believer in mutual funds. I believe in investments for our generation, because we can't count on Social Security. You should start saving for the future as soon as you can. And straighten out your credit report. That's important.

Small change(s) can build wealth

FINANCIAL READINESS CENTER
Ann Pratcher

You Can Build Wealth, Not Debt. A few years ago that slogan was seen in various places around the installation. It is as true today as it was then, and it is still the slogan for Fort Benning Saves and the various "Saves Programs" with which we partner.

EVERYONE can build wealth, and it does not take large numbers of dollars to get started.

That is the message of America Saves, the granddaddy of the "Saves" campaigns. What is all the fuss about saving? We Americans are the low people on the totem pole when it comes to saving money. We tend to judge people's wealth by their income and the things they own instead of by what they have built.

If someone makes a six-figure income (no, not those of us in the military, but some of us may know or be related to people who do) and spend that plus any amount, they have not built wealth.

If you have lots of things and no cushion and nothing saved for retirement, you have not built wealth. We Americans have a savings rate that is nearly zero.

So, what are we going to do about it? What can we do about it?

Well, we can become savers. Fort Benning Saves started as part of the statewide Georgia Saves campaign and the local Columbus Saves Campaign. The Department of Defense is launching the Military Saves Campaign this week, so we will also partner with them.

But what does all this mean to you? It means it is time to draw your "line in the sand." Identify something you want to save for.

In the initial test program at Eglin Air Force Base, the top five goals for which people saved over the last year were general savings, retirement, an emergency fund, reducing their debt and home ownership.

The amount of money they saved sorted out a little differently, with the most money saved for retirement, general savings, home ownership, debt reduction and emergency fund.

You say you only make so much money, so how can you save? No one I know (maybe you do) has unlimited money, but we saving is a decision.

Here are two examples from other installations:

Crystal is a young, single specialist who spent whatever she made and had credit card debt. She had never thought about saving until she got involved with Military Saves. She has gotten rid of all her debt, has an emergency fund, a retirement fund and a house down payment fund.

Robert is a married 39-year-old major with four children. Before Military Saves, his family was buried in debt — $25,000 in credit card debt and almost $200,000 in student loans.

Military Saves gave Robert hope and information, and he has paid off his debt, built a $3,000 emergency fund, paid cash for a second used car, and has a plan to pay off his student loans within five years and his mortgage in ten years.

How can you do this? Once you name your goal, figure out how much money you need to meet it. Figure out how much you can save every month or every pay check.

Decide where you want to save the money. There are some financial institutions that may give you a break if you are a Fort Benning Saver. Decide how you will get the money into your account.

Then TAKE ACTION: DO IT NOW.

The big question I often hear is "How do I find money to save?"

You just got an income tax refund? Take at least part of that money and save it. You have debt? Take at least a part of that income tax refund and either pay off a debt or pay down a debt.

You got a bonus? You guessed it — take at least a part of that money to save or to pay off or down a debt.

You got promoted? Again, the old adage, to save or pay off a debt.

Longevity increase? OK, I'm getting redundant, but I know you're smart enough to have gotten the picture after the first suggestion.

We all got the annual increase in January, but some of us may have already started spending that money. Re-look your spending plan, and see if you can't find something you can reduce so you can commit to become a Fort Benning Saver.

So, none of these suggestions work for you. I'll bet you go through the drive-thru from time to time. I'll bet you get change when you do.

OK, take that change and start putting it in a bank (jar, coffee can, coffee cup, soda can, some container).

Have change in your pockets? Take it out at the end of the day, and put it in your container.

Have change on your dresser or in your car? Put it in your container.

You can join Fort Benning Saves by contacting the Financial Readiness Program at Army Community Service, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

You will be asked to choose a savings goal, a monthly savings amount, and a savings vehicle.

You will receive a Fort Benning Saver card and other information. If you have questions, you can call ACS, 545-7517, and ask for one of the financial counselors.

You can also contact us by e-mail, pratchera@benning.army.mil or herronp@benning.army.mil.

You Can Build Wealth! Join us as we build wealth, not debt.

Former 3rd BCT Soldier gets 20 years for murder

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Elsie Jackson

A former 3rd Brigade Combat Team medic was sentenced to 33 years confinement after pleading guilty to the November 2005 murder of another 3rd Brigade Soldier while they were deployed to Iraq.

As part of a plea agreement, Spc. Chris Rolan will serve 20 years confinement, be reduced in pay grade to E-1, forfeit all pay and allowances and will be dishonorably discharged from the Army.

After choosing to have his case heard by military judge Col. Richard Gordon, rather than by jury, Rolan, of Albuquerque, N.M., pled guilty to the unpremeditated murder of Pvt. Dylan R. Paytas at Forward Operating Base Warhorse near Baqubah, Iraq.

He also pled guilty to violating a lawful order by consuming alcohol, and in an unrelated incident, which occurred several weeks prior to Paytas' death, for communicating a threat and reckless endangerment of another Soldier.

It had been Rolan's second deployment with the 3rd BCT.

Rolan, Paytas and another Soldier had been drinking whiskey and gin purchased from an Iraqi citizen identified only as "Snake" on Nov. 16, 2005.

Following an argument between Rolan and Paytas, Rolan pulled out his 9 mm handgun and fired six rounds, three of which hit Paytas and caused his death.

It was during the course of the murder investigation that Rolan's command learned of his threats to kill then Spc. Richard Scarlett.

Rolan, who was drunk at the time, pulled out his handgun and pointed it in Scarlett's direction.

Scarlett testified that prior to pointing the weapon at him, Rolan had loaded the weapon, chambered a round, then cleared the weapon and replaced the round in the magazine several times.

During the court-martial, Paytas' father, John Paytas, took the stand and was asked if he knew who Spc. Chris Rolan was.

"He is the man who murdered my son," he said.

"The worst news I ever heard was that my son had been murdered. The worst thing I had to do was make funeral arrangements for my 20-year-old boy."

Paytas' sisters, Kayla, 18, and Isabella, 9, also testified about how the loss of their older brother had affected them.

Asked by government prosecutor Capt. Steven Fuller how it felt to be in the same room with Paytas, Kayla tearfully whispered, "I don't like it."

Testifying for the defense, Marine Sgt. Ariana Rolan-Pena described her brother, the youngest of five children, as the heart of the family.

"I've never met a better person in my life than my little brother," she said.

Other witnesses called by defense attorneys Maj. Toshene Grills and Maj. Fansu Ku described Rolan's actions as out of character.

Taking the stand at his court-martial, Rolan admitted he had a drinking problem, that he had attended Alcoholics Anonymous sessions while in confinement, and that he does not want to drink again.

Rolan accepted responsibility for his actions and apologized to Scarlett, his family, the Army and the Paytas family.

"Nothing I can say will bring your son back, nothing I can say will ease your pain," Rolan said to the Paytas family.

"If I could change places with Dylan I would. I can't take back my actions. I hope some day Dylan's family will find peace."

Nothing I can say will bring your son back, nothing I can say will ease your pain.

— Spc. Chris Rolan

"I'll probably never be forgiven and that's understandable."

In her closing argument, Grills asked the judge to consider Rolan's alcohol dependence, his childhood and his diagnosed depression.

Sitting in the same row, but on opposite sides of the courtroom, both the Paytas and Rolan families avoided making contact throughout the daylong procedures.

In a statement following the sentencing, John Paytas confirmed that he had not been approached by anyone from Rolan's family, and expressed disappointment in the length of Rolan's sentence.

"We hoped for a lot more than 33," he said. "Twenty was too lenient."

Command Sgt. Maj. William J. Ulibarri assumed responsibility as Fort Benning's senior NCO Friday in a ceremony in front of Infantry Hall.

Ulibarri, who won the Best Ranger competition in the 80s, recently returned from a deployment to Iraq with the 172nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team.

This is not his first assignment to Fort Benning — he was a Ranger instructor with the 4th Ranger Training Battalion from 1987 to 89.

Ulibarri is taking the position Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway has been filling since Command Sgt. Maj. Lonnie Wright deployed. Greenway will retire this summer.

"The position of command sergeant major is probably our most important position," said Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general.

The command sergeant major inspires his peers and represents the largest branch of the Army — the Infantry, said Wojdakowski, who noted that Ulibarri takes the position during a time of war.

The responsibility of being the command sergeant major of Fort Benning is great because of the importance of training the Soldiers and leaders who will fight the war, Wojdakowski said.

"There is no greater responsibility than the mission of our NCOs in leading Soldiers," especially Soldiers in the Infantry, he said, but Ulibarri is up to this task.

In his last assignment, Ulibarri assisted with the transition to the 172nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team. The 172nd SBCT was recently redesignated as the 1st Stryker Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, at Fort Wainwright, Alaska.

Ulibarri deployed with the 172nd SBCT, which spent 16 months in Mosul and Baghdad and was awarded the Valorous Unit Award.

Ulibarri said he was grateful for the opportunity to serve as the top NCO at Fort Benning. There's "an Infantryman in all Soldiers, all MOSs," he said.

Ulibarri told the story of a small female Soldier who lifted male Soldiers, who were trained as Infantrymen, out of a damaged Stryker in Iraq.

Ulibarri is accompanied by his wife, Sue, and their children, Leeya, 11, Julee, 10, and Ben, 9.

Ulibarri entered active enlisted service in 1982, and was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, at Fort Lewis, Wash., after basic training and Airborne School. He served as a rifleman, rifle team leader, rifle squad leader, weapons squad leader and weapons platoon sergeant with the 2nd Battalion. He deployed on Operation Urgent Fury and won the Best Ranger competition while with the unit.

After serving as a Ranger instructor with the 4th Ranger Training Battalion at Fort Benning, he returned to the 75th Ranger Regiment in 1989 and served as a reconnaissance team leader for Team 1, Ranger Reconnaissance Detachment.

Ulibarri, who deployed on Operation Just Cause with the RRD, spent time at Forts Bliss and Hood, Texas, before returning to Fort Lewis, Wash., where he held several positions before becoming the command sergeant major of the 172nd SIB.

His awards include the Bronze Star Medal and the Legion of Merit.

Ulibarri's military schools include USMC Scout Swimmer, Static Line Jumpmaster, Combat Diver, Military Freefall, Military Freefall Jumpmaster, First Sergeants Course and all NCOES up to the Sergeant Major Academy.

Army Rangers grant child's wish

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. — For Army Rangers, soldiering is a way of life. For 14-year-old Riley Woina, who has cystic fibrosis, "rangering" is a dream come true. The Make-A-Wish Foundation and the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, made Woina's dream come true here this week.

"I wanted to train with the Army Rangers because they are heroes and their motto is to 'leave no one behind,'" Woina said after completing a full day of training with the 6th RTBn.

Dressed in a military flight suit with Army and Air Force insignia, Woina flew in a C-130 aircraft, observed an airborne jump, sat in an Air Force fighter jet and experienced a training flight in a UH-1V Huey provided by the U.S. Army Air Ambulance Detachment, 5th Aviation Battalion of Fort Polk, La.

Woina's Ranger experience also allowed him to negotiate a Zodiac boat along a river, cross a river on a one-rope bridge, conduct a swamp movement, participate in snake and rappelling demonstrations, and enjoy tours of Eglin Air Force Base and the Air Force Armament Museum. Woina's skill and inner strength inspired the Rangers who had the opportunity to train him.

"When you've been in the Army for a long time, you forget what it feels like when you first join. I will never forget the look on Riley's face as he got off the helicopter, or when he conducted a rope-bridge crossing with the other Ranger students cheering him on," said Capt. Jeremiah Cordovano, 6th RTBn.

Riley, of Plymouth, Conn., will travel to Fort Benning next week, where he will stand alongside the Rangers he admires to participate in the U.S. Army Ranger School graduation ceremony.

The 6th RTBn. conducts the final phase of the U.S. Army Ranger School, whose primary mission is to train Rangers who are flexible and adaptive combat leaders.

"I can't believe the time and effort that you guys (6th RTBn.) have put into this," the boy's father, Gary, told the Soldiers. "Riley will never forget this experience."

Capt. Jeremiah Cordovano

Fourteen-year-old Riley Woina, who has cystic fibrosis, had his dream of being an Army Ranger come true last week, thanks to the Make-A-Wish Foundation and the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

Officials investigating rape on post

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Fort Benning law enforcement officials are investigating a sexual assault that occurred in a housing area on post sometime Saturday evening.

Fort Benning law enforcement officials are looking for a male suspect, known as Kevin, for sexual assault and three house break ins in the Indianhead Terrace housing area.

Kevin is a medium tone black man, possibly in his late teens or early 20s, officials said. He is approximately 5 feet 7 inches to 5 feet 9 inches tall weighing around 140 pounds. He has short-cropped hair and is soft-spoken.

He was last seen around 4 to 5 a.m. Sunday wearing baggy pants, a belt and a light colored T-shirt, possibly riding a BMX-style bike.

Anyone having knowledge of the crimes should contact Special Agent James Zurek with the Criminal Investigation Division at 706-545-4581 or 706-575-8724.

CID is working with

Fort Benning's officials to leverage all available assets to identify, apprehend and prosecute the assailant, said Monica Manganaro, director of Communications and Media Relations.

Fort Benning officials ask that everyone remain vigilant and report any suspicious activity immediately to the Military Police at 706-545-5222.

Soldier, spouse found dead in quarters

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Military police found a Fort Benning Soldier and his wife dead in their quarters Feb. 22.

They have been identified as 2nd Lt. Bryan L. Davis, 28, of Baton Rouge, La., and Tina Stanley Davis, 29, of Hammond, La.

Initial findings indicate Davis and his wife may have been involved in a domestic dispute resulting in a murder-suicide.

Davis was a student in the Basic Officer Leader Course II.

The investigation is ongoing.

WHAT'S HAPPENING around Post

RECLAMATION SALE

There will be a reclamation sale from 8 a.m. to noon today at Building 224A on Upton Avenue. Cash is the only form of payment accepted.

For more information, call 706-545-1972 or 706-545-1104.

BRAC COMMUNITY UPDATES

The Base Realignment and Closure Community Updates are at 3 p.m. the first Tuesday of each month in Classroom 6 in Infantry Hall.

The next update will be Tuesday. The updates are open to the on and off-post communities to ensure they remain informed and knowledgeable of the Fort Benning growth planning.

For more information, call John Brown at 706-545-4729.

TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with a valid ID card.

Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible to ensure a fast refund.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: a valid ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater. Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH LUNCHEON

The Equal Opportunity Office will host a luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. March 15 at the Benning Club. This year's theme is "Generations of Women Moving History Forward."

For tickets, contact your unit's EO advisor or call the main office at 706-545-6665.

TROOPS TO TEACHERS PROGRAM

Bill Kirkland, program manager for the Georgia Troops to Teachers Program and Georgia Spouse to Teachers Program will be available to answer questions at 9:30 a.m. March 13 at the Post Education Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

The Georgia Troops to Teachers Program provides eligible service members up to $10,000 for becoming public school teachers. Under the Spouse to Teachers Program, eligible military spouses may be reimbursed for the cost of state-required certification tests up to a total of $600.

Kirkland will conduct a one-hour briefing that will include an overview of teacher certification programs, registration procedures and Georgia teacher certification options.

For more information, call Kirkland at 404-232-2608.

RIVERWALK CLOSURE

The Fort Benning Riverwalk between the access control point and 10th Mountain Division Road (about one half-mile) is closed through March 19. This closure is necessary for Columbus Water Works to install new underground sewer lines.

All lanes of traffic on Benning Boulevard will remain open.

ARMY SEEKS RECOMMENDATIONS

The Army is accepting design ideas through March 31 for the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and motto for the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

Requirements include a clear, hand-drawn or electronic sketch of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and a short, succinct motto.

The motto must be written in English and is limited to 26 characters (letters and spaces). Individuals may provide a suggestion for just one or two of the desired items if they prefer. All submissions must include name, phone number, e-mail address and mailing address of the individual submitting the designs and motto.

Submissions can be sent via e-mail to MCOE_Insignia_Suggestions@knox.army.mil or Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATSH-ATH, Room 451, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000.

CID LOOKOUT

"CID Lookout" is a U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command initiative to partner with the Army community by providing a conduit for members of the Army family, to help prevent, reduce and report felony-level crime.

The USACIDC, commonly known as CID, is an independent criminal investigative organization that investigates serious, felony-level crime such as murder, rape, sexual assault, robbery, arson, fraud, and even cyber crime or intrusions into the Army networks.

For more information on CID or to report a felony-level crime or provide information concerning a crime, contact your local CID office or the military police, or visit www.cid.army.mil.

AUSA JOB FAIR

AUSA will conduct a job fair from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 17 in Freedom Hall, Building 2411.

OCS BOARD

All OCS applications must be submitted to the Soldier Actions Branch, Building 2620 in Soldiers' Plaza, no later than June 22 for the board July 23-27.

For more information, call Sharron Burchett at 706-545-7218.

NEWS AROUND the ARMY

Community remembers Soldiers

The Fort Bliss, Texas, community gathered recently to remember six fallen Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team, 1st Cavalry Division. The Soldiers memorialized were 2nd Lt. Mark Daily, Sgt. 1st Class Russell Borea, Staff Sgt. John Cooper, Sgt. Ian C. Anderson, Cpl. Nicholas Brown and Cpl. Matthew Grimm.

Sgt. Henry Bell eulogized his friend Cooper, saying, "He was a kind, good-hearted and a laid-back guy. He was an outstanding NCO. He had a huge heart and a remarkable sense of humor."

Running man

While home on leave from Iraq, 1st Lt. Elias Gonzalez of C Company, 111th Aviation, based out of Jacksonville, Fla., defended his title as two-time champion of the Gasparilla Distance Classic men's 10K run in Tampa, Fla. The National Guardsman did better than his time in 2005 and 2006 by running the race in 48 minutes, 13 seconds and placed sixth. Gonzalez's 7-year-old son placed fourth in the Gasparilla Junior Kid Classic.

Training prepares Soldiers for deployment

The 249th Engineer Battalion (Prime Power), headquartered at Fort Lewis, Wash., trained at Fort Belvoir, Va., Feb. 12-16 for an upcoming Iraq deployment. The Soldiers rode aboard helicopters to P-2 Field where they exited the aircraft and encountered simulated mortar fire, sustained casualties and had to call in medical support.

The mission of the battalion is to generate and distribute prime electrical power in support of warfighting, stability and support operations, and disaster relief operations.

Hero receives new home

The Westbrook family of West Lawton, Oklahoma, got a surprise from Ty Pennington and the cast of Extreme Makeover: Home Edition Feb. 15.

Then-Staff Sgt. Gene Westbrook volunteered to deploy to Iraq to help train Iraqi soldiers in 2004. In April of that year, an enemy mortar round came through the roof of the mess hall where he was eating. Shrapnel tore through a lung and severed his spinal cord. He was paralyzed from the waist down. He was medically retired and promoted to sergeant first class.

In June of 2006, the family was traveling to meet friends when a wheel came off their specially-modified van. Westbrook was further injured, as well as their 9-year-old son who was paralyzed from the waist down.

The new house is almost completed.

Columbus South director addresses issues that slow revitalization

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Editor's note: In part four of a series on the revitalization of South Columbus, the executive director of Columbus South Inc. talks about what it will take to breath new life into this part of town.

Tuesday, Reggie Richards had breakfast at C.C.'s Place, a family-owned diner on Fort Benning Road, the kind of place where everyone knows your name. Her name, anyway. The food on Richard's plate grew cold as she flitted from table to table.

The other diners didn't bother — to flit, that is. They stayed put and, from where they sat, talked across the dining room and greeted most everyone who walked through the door.

"This is how it is. If you plant yourself here, they'll take good care of you. They'll open their arms to you," Richards said.

She was referring to C.C.'s specifically and South Columbus generally. The folks on this side of town are an extended family, she said.

Take Benning Hills, for example, the neighborhood where Richards lived as a child, when she wasn't trekking the globe with her father, a career Soldier and three-war vet.

"Benning Hills is still an old-fashioned neighborhood. Neighbors still look after neighbors," said Richards, the executive director of Columbus South Inc., the nonprofit organization tasked with overseeing the revitalization of 11.8 square miles of the city between St. Mary's Road and Victory Drive.

As such, Richards has studied the way other cities have handled revitalization. Many towns have done it, she said, but few, if any, have dealt with all the variables South Columbus proponents face.

These variables include proximity to Fort Benning; an abundance of mom and pop shops and a dearth of quality, big-name businesses; a multi-cultural, mixed race population; disillusion and distrust within the region and racial bias from without; and myriad misconceptions about crime rates, education standards and quality of life.

Compounding the issue, Richards said, is the variety and diverse interests of people who claim a stake in the process and the outcome — elected officials, the Chamber of Commerce, realtors and residents.

South Columbus residents don't completely trust the other "players," Richards said. The other players are historically a strong, united force with goals and interests that often differ from the vision of South Columbus the residents share.

"We're truly pioneers," Richards said. "We're working our way through these avenues, with all these variables. Our situation is unique. Lots of cities have revitalized, but I don't know of one that has dealt with all the variables we have."

There are plenty of critics who don't believe in Richards' brand of revitalization, which would result in an international community rich in culture and color. Bulldoze and build, they say.

"If you're going to revitalize, knock it down. Knock it all down. That's the way some people think. Knock it down and bring in bigger businesses," Richards said.

"And the Chamber of Commerce — any Chamber of Commerce — is traditionally interested in big businesses.

"I'm very protective of this part of town. We don't want to become a tourist trap — that's not our goal," she said. "It's not easy inviting new business here without industrializing it. There has to be a balance, but our mom and pops are what make us unique. People tell me, 'Reggie, I'm counting on you.' I take that very seriously. I think about this in my sleep."

There's no single solution, no magic formula for revitalization, Richards said. Certainly South Columbus must be cleaned up, and great strides have been made in that direction just recently with the demolition of eyesores — the Candlelight Hotel and other businesses like it, which festered for years with prostitution and drugs.

Others, like the burned-out Denny's building on the corner of Victory Drive and Fort Benning Road, are holding up progress, she said. In this case, and others, the problem is absentee landlords and the need to aggressively enforce city codes.

The situation could get discouraging, Richards said, were it not for the success of businesses like C.C.'s, which does a fair business with locals, mostly military retirees, in the mornings, and Soldiers and contractors at lunch. These businesses and the sense of community they foster are the heart and soul of South Columbus, Richards said. She believes they'll benefit from new businesses. And new businesses are on the horizon.

Executives from Marriott and Holiday Inn have expressed an interest in South Columbus. A 2,000-member church will open in the spring. Valley Healthcare will soon open shop, catering to Tricare recipients, with board-certified physicians specializing in family practice, obstetrics, pediatrics and pharmaceuticals. And developers have recently announced plans to construct a gated community near the entrance to Fort Benning.

Great things are "coming down the road," Richards said, but Fort Benning residents shouldn't wait to experience them.

"They should come down and frequent these places," she said, sweeping her hand toward the dining room at C.C.'s. "They should get to know what's going on here. Check out the unique flavor here. See for themselves what we're all about."

We're truly pioneers. We're working our way through these avenues, with all these variables. Our situation is unique. Lots of cities have revitalized, but I don't know of one that has dealt with all the variables we have.

Sgt. Shane Van Fossen demonstrates the proper sight picture and steady hold factors for Soldiers zeroing their weapons during primary marksmanship instruction. When the butt of the M-4 carbine is placed in the pocket formed where the plates of body armor meet, a better sight picture can be achieved. ## 203rd BSB hones marksmanship skills

Soldiers prepare to deploy by practicing weapon skills

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

All Soldiers, regardless of their military occupations, are potential Infantry Soldiers.

On today's urban battlefield, there are often no safe rear areas. Every Soldier must be able to engage the enemy accurately with his issued weapon. Keeping those marksmanship skills honed is very important, especially when Soldiers are being deployed into combat.

This week, Soldiers from the 203rd Brigade Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, were on McAndrews Range zeroing and qualifying with their individual weapons in preparation for deployment to Iraq.

Sgt. Shane Van Fossen was instructing the Soldiers from his unit in primary marksmanship and explained the training objective.

"The purpose of this training is to familiarize them with their weapons system and ensure that they have the necessary skills to engage enemy forces they may encounter," he said.

Steady hold of the weapon is a fundamental requisite and Van Fossen placed a quarter on the barrels of some Soldiers' weapons to help improve their steady hold and trigger release technique.

"When you follow the steady hold factors you can dry fire the weapon without the quarter falling off," he said.

Capt. Kesha Pearson, B Company commander, commented on the training.

"We are going to bring the whole battalion through in the next couple of days. Here at the zero range, we try to get them sighted in using eighteen rounds or less. If they don't zero in that parameter we send them back for re-training to ensure they are using the proper techniques to fire the weapon accurately."

Many of these Soldiers are deploying to Iraq for the second and, in some cases, third time in three years.

Spc. Capria Faucher is preparing for her second tour in Iraq. She recently gave birth to a son but is preparing to deploy again. She was confident about the instruction she was receiving.

"The training is good. It's preparing me for this mission. I hate to leave my new son, but this is my job," Faucher said.

Spc. Capria Faucher practices steady hold factors while zeroing her individual weapon on McAndrews Range. Soldiers can increase their accuracy while engaging targets by practicing these factors.

A quarter is placed on the muzzle of a Soldier's weapon. When a steady hold factor is achieved, the weapon can be dry fired without causing the quarter to fall off.

Van Fossen instructs a fellow 203rd BSB Soldier on how to control breathing and avoid jerking the trigger when firing. A quarter was placed on the muzzle to show how jerking the trigger can result in excessive movement.

Fire: Flares in training site, destroys 20 acres, autos

The fire started at a training site near Coolidge and Burroughs Ranges, one of several sites in use Wednesday.

The flare, a small canister designed to simulate the sound of a loud explosion, typically releases a sudden, tiny spark when detonated. Apparently, the spark ignited dry brush and blew into a blaze in an instant.

Flames shot nearly to the top of the loblollies and long leaf pines and jumped the road, Parker said. Post fire department officials, MPs and officials from Range Control were on the scene within minutes.

"No one was hurt. That's what matters," Parker said.

Smith, who was manning the EIB training range just down the road from the site of the fire, was one of many cadre who parked along the road.

"I heard it on the radio, and ran straight down here," Smith said. "I turned the corner up there and I

I turned the corner up there, and I knew it was gone. You could see flames all the way up those trees.

— Staff Sgt. John Smith knew it was gone. You could see flames all the way up those trees, and (the car) was destroyed."

Another car, a Cadillac, and a late-model Ford F250 pickup were also destroyed. Damage estimates have not been released yet.

Smith, a drill sergeant with the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, on Sand Hill, said he bought the car 10 years. Aside from the car itself, he lost the tools and TA-50 he had stowed in the trunk.

Staff Sgt. John Smith's '97 Saturn was destroyed by a wildfire in the post's Harmony Church area Wednesday afternoon.

Bridgett Siter

Williams: Speaks to first maneuver course graduates

to train together," Williams said.

The 19-week MCCC combines and replaces the Infantry Captains Career and the Armor Captains Career Courses in the effort to bring the Infantry School and Armor School together at Fort Benning under the BRAC changes.

And the aligning of the courses is happening now to make the physical transition — which should begin in 2010 — easier, Williams said in an interview after the graduation.

The plan is for the Armor School to complete its move to Fort Benning by September 2011, Williams said.

One of the first steps is to build the facilities needed to house the Armor School and its large amount of equipment, which is something that must be done before he can begin the physical move, he said.

I never go anywhere without an Infantryman next to me.

— Maj. Gen. Robert Williams

The Maneuver Advanced NCO Course has also begun in the effort to integrate the two schools, and it replaces the Infantry and Armor Crewman/Scout ANCO.

The two new maneuver courses are taught by a mixture of Infantry and Armor Soldiers and the students will be mixed as well.

The courses will be taught simultaneously at both posts until Fort Benning has the resources to take them over completely.

"When the BRAC law was announced ... many critics rose up in anger," Williams said. People were worried that the two branches, Infantry and Armor, would lose their identities by coming together at Fort Benning, he said.

"I'm not concerned about that," Williams said. He's confident the two will maintain their identities through the necessary joining of the training.

Each branch brings unique techniques and tactical approaches, he said.

"I never go anywhere without an Infantryman next to me," Williams said. "I couldn't have a better team than my Infantry brethren," he said. Williams and Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, have known each other since they were young officers, Williams said. Williams and Wojdakowski both wear the 2nd Armored Division patch on their shoulders, Williams said.

The future of our operations is dependent on joint operations, he said. The branches of the Army should always work together.

Another sign of the beginning of the transition is the appearance of the Armor patch around Fort Benning and the Infantry patch around Fort Knox, said Williams, who used the Infantry and Armor School mottos together at the conclusion of his speech at the graduation.

"Follow me and forge the thunderbolt."

Greg Bennett's office at WHINSEC is decorated with thousands of owls.

Whoooo's office is this anyway?

WHINSEC

Pfc. Richard J. Gilbert

Thomas G. Bennett is a translator and lexicographer, a member of the Translation Division at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

A typical employee with a typical job, sure, but Bennett's workspace makes him a rare bird.

His working quarters are filled with owls, thousands of them in all varieties and materials.

There are owls made of buffalo bone, an intricately-cut paper owl and owls made from thimbles, seashells, porcelain, lapis lazuli, nuts, clay and wood.

There are mechanized plastic owls, an Arizona license plate that says "owl," carpeted owls made from thread, flower pots, stuffed animals, prints, drawings and forms of owls created from a myriad of materials.

"Sometimes I come in here and look around and I wonder how it ever got this far," Bennett said.

It all began in 1983, Bennett said, when he was teaching English at the Centro Colombo Americano in Colombia. Students gave him owls as gifts because they represent good luck and good fortune to Colombians.

"You could find these little statuettes at little markets and craft fairs," he said.

"Once I started getting them, I started looking for them in the open markets and craft fairs, and they started calling my name."

Sometimes I come in here and look around and I wonder how it ever got this far.

— Thomas G. Bennett

When Bennett left Colombia six months later, he took his collection of 50 owls with him. Others began giving them to him.

His mother helped him "cultivate" his collection, Bennett said.

She gave him owl cups, toothbrush holders, towels — anything and everything imaginable with an owl motif. But eventually, Bennett said, even his mother came to question the wisdom of collecting owls.

For a time, Bennett's son collected owls. He even made some for his father from seashells and pottery. Bennett's owl collection overflows into his coworker's workspace at WHINSEC.

"Oh, I love the owls," said Sonia Andrae, editorial assistant in the Translation Division. "I help him put them up all over the office. I've contributed to the collection."

During the last couple of decades, owls in general have moved into many of his coworkers' spaces and even his son's room.

"It has grown to the point to where now it is spilling over," said Walter Santamaria, chief of Translation Division. "I have seen the evolution, revolution and distribution of owls."

Bennett said his coworkers have helped him amass those thousands of owls.

"Initially, whenever my coworkers here at the Institute would go on vacation, I would musingly mention for them to 'watch out for' any owls they might run across, and on a couple of occasions even gave them some money for their trouble."

"But, eventually, it became commonplace for many of my associates here at WHINSEC to remember me with an owl souvenir when they were away," said Bennett.

The owls hail from every continent except Antarctica and nearly every conceivable country.

The collection is as much a testament to the Colombians' inspiration of Bennett as it is to the generosity of his friends, family and coworkers, Bennett said.

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

Karen's wins at Fontana

Mark Martin won the California Speedway, winning the Busch Series race Feb. 24 and the Auto Club 500 Feb. 25 in Nextel action.

Mark Martin took the overall lead in points from Kevin Harvick. Martin has 335 points, followed by Jeff Burton at 330 points. Jeff Gordon follows in third with 309 points. Harvick is fourth with 307 and David Ragan rounds out the top five with 270 points.

NASCAR officials also told ESPN.com that the crash that David Reutemann had with 11 laps to go was one of the hardest impacts ever recorded. They don't give out numbers or statistics, but anyone who saw it knows it was pretty bad. Reutemann is recovering with a bruised foot.

There is no Nextel Cup race this weekend, but the Busch Series will race at 1:30 p.m. Sunday at Mexico City.

AP names Ohio St. No. 1

The Associated Press named Ohio State No. 1 in their NCAA basketball rankings poll, followed by UCLA, Kansas, Wisconsin and Florida. ESPN and USA Today had their rankings as Ohio State in first, followed by UCLA, Kansas, Florida and Wisconsin.

I'm guessing Florida will drop out of the top five after a loss to Tennessee Feb. 27. Tennessee had Super Bowl MVP and alum Peyton Manning give a talk before the game.

Tennessee routed Florida, 96-76, and finished up 16-0 at home.

Broncos lose another player

Denver Broncos' running back Terrell Davis collapsed and died Feb. 24 at his home in St. Louis, Mo.

An autopsy was completed Feb. 25 but the cause of death was still unclear.

Nash's brother, Darius, has a heart ailment and had a transplant last year.

The Broncos also lost Darrell Williams in early January.

Veterans Committee vote for no new members

The baseball Veterans Committee voted Feb. 27 to admit no new members for the third straight election.

Ron Santo came the closest to being elected. He got 57 votes out of 82, which gave him 70 percent, closest to the 75 percent needed.

Santo was a nine-time All-Star with the Cubs.

Others who received votes but not a nomination were Jim Kaat, Gil Hodges, Tony Oliva, Maury Wills and Joe Torre, to name a few.

The panel was expanded a few years ago to include all living Hall of Famers.

The committee votes every other year for regular players, and every four years for others, including managers.

The Heat's Hannah Salus fights to get an open shot over the Suns' Blake Boberg. Hannah showed toughness on the floor and gave the team a lift in the first quarter with strong defense and ball movement. The Heat lost to the Suns, 21-9.

The Golden Suns showed great heart Saturday when they beat the Heat, 21-9.

"This was the first time we played together this season as a complete team," said Noelle Tiner, the Suns' head coach. "We showed great teamwork, and we hustled."

This was one of six scheduled games Saturday, which marked the end of the CYS Basketball League season. Each game was broken into age groups. The Suns and Heat represented two teams in the 8- and 9-year-old age bracket. Both teams proved to

The Army Marksmanship Unit Rifle Competition pitted 65 competitors from several Fort Benning companies as well as college ROTC cadets.

"We were hoping for a lot more competitors, but with the recent deployment, this is the best we could expect," said Mike Behnke, competition chairman.

The early favorite was Sgt. 1st Class Eric Leid, ROTC military science instructor and shooting coach for North Georgia College and State University. Leid won the Commanding General's Marksmanship Cup in the pistol competition three weeks ago.

Martin off to best start of career since 2002

U.S. ARMY RACING

MOORSEVILLE, N.C. — Mark Martin is off to the best start of his racing career and for the first time since Sept. 22, 2002, the veteran is on top of the NASCAR world.

It was even difficult for the stoic Martin to hide his delight just moments after climbing out of his No. 01 U.S. Army Chevy following a top-five finish Sunday at California Speedway.

The finish, combined with Martin's dramatic second-place run in the season-opening Daytona 500, marks the first time in his 20-plus year Cup career that he has started the season with consecutive top-five finishes.

When informed that he was the points leader Sunday night, a humble but happy Martin said, "That's really cool. This team is awesome. It's just great working with the guys on the U.S. Army team and the guys at Ginn Racing.

"We've had cars good enough to win in both of the first two races, and that really says a lot about this organization and where it is going," he said.

"We still have a long way to go, but we sure are off to a great start."

"It's really just been an awesome experience," said Martin.

"I'm rolling and I'm having the time of my life."

Many were skeptical when Martin announced last fall that after 19 years he was leaving Roush Racing to run a partial schedule for Ginn Racing.

Some even went as far as to question his motives and his desire to compete.

After two races, a top-five at California Speedway and a runner-up finish in one of the closest Daytona 500's in history, Martin's doubters are few and far between, and the only skeptics who remain are the ones who question whether Martin can run a part-time schedule.

"I wouldn't come out here and race if I didn't think I could be competitive," said Martin.

"What Bobby Ginn (team owner) and Jay Frye (CEO, GM) did was give me that opportunity and I think that we are making the most of it. It's really been a blast and I can't wait to get to Vegas and see what we have for them in a couple of weeks."

U.S. Army Racing

Mark Martin is off to the best start of his racing career and for the first time since Sept. 22, 2002, the veteran is on top of the NASCAR world.

The plan is for Martin to run the next two races at Las Vegas and Atlanta, before giving way to rookie Regan Smith at the Bristol Race.

Many question the validity of that plan given Martin's early success this season.

One of the doubters is Martin's former teammate at Roush Racing, Matt Kenseth, who is rumored to have a $200 bet that Martin will run a full season, rather than scale back.

For now Martin is just taking it all in and enjoying his new surroundings.

"I'm just having the time of my life," said Martin.

"We've had good cars and we've shown that we are capable of winning races and running competitively.

"There is still a lot of work to do here at Ginn Racing, but I think that we have shown that this is for real and that we are up to the challenge."

Schumacher loses in semifinals in Arizona

U.S. ARMY RACING

U.S. Army Top Fuel driver, Tony "The Sarge" Schumacher, lost in the semifinals of the Checker Schuck's Kragen Nationals in Chandler, Ariz., Sunday at Firebird International Raceway.

In round three, Schumacher had about a car-length lead on Melanie Troxel at half track before his U.S. Army dragster dropped a couple of cylinders, allowing Troxel to drive on by to the finish line.

"We were running so well to that point," said a disappointed Schumacher afterwards.

"I guess the track changed a bit from the second round to the semis and that may have played into things. Even though we didn't get the win today, the good news is that we managed to go some rounds and we can definitely leave here with a positive feeling."

The Chicago native, who had qualified number one with a track record 4.430-second pass, posted runs of 4.498-seconds and 4.461-seconds to dispose of Doug Herbert and Cory McClenathan, respectively, in the opening two rounds.

"Like I said, we were chugging along until the semis," he added. "Unfortunately, not everything goes the way you plan it. We're a team full of warriors, so we'll just get back after it in a couple of weeks down in Gainesville (Fla.)."

Schumacher, who moved up three spots in the standings to sixth-place, will stay over an extra day at Firebird to test in preparation for the famed ACDelco Gatornationals, March 15-18, at Gainesville Raceway.

"You always want to see improvement with each race and we've clearly done that since the season opener," said the defending NHRA POWERade Top Fuel world champion.

"At the Gatornationals, we'll be looking to go those last couple of steps."

Staff sergeant gets image on National Guard car

MILITARY.COM

During a weekend of racing excitement at California Speedway, tax preparation firm Jackson Hewitt Tax Service celebrated the grand prize winner of its "Heroes of the Year" campaign — Staff Sgt. Quinton D. Martin.

As the national honoree, Martin made racing history by having his image on the hood of a NASCAR Nextel Cup Car — the No. 25 National Guard/GMAC Chevrolet driven by Casey Mears. This is the first time that a non-celebrity appeared on a NASCAR Cup vehicle. Jackson Hewitt CEO Michael Lister officially introduced Martin as part of the pre-race festivities on the day of the race.

"Through the 'Heroes of the Year' program, we were privileged to celebrate so many valiant citizen-soldiers around the country," said Michael Lister, president and chief executive officer, Jackson Hewitt Tax Service Inc.

"All of the 10 monthly honorees truly demonstrate what it means to be a citizen-Soldier. Selecting one overall hero was difficult, but we believe Sergeant Martin is an excellent example of what it means to be a citizen-Soldier, and also represents the outstanding qualities and achievements of all of the monthly honorees."

The year-long "Heroes of the Year" initiative, which launched at last year's Auto Club 500, invited people around the country to nominate a National Guard Soldier, family or employer making a difference at home or abroad.

As the role of the National Guard has changed over the past few years, the demands have increased, and being a citizen-Soldier now often requires these men and women to leave their civilian jobs, homes and families for active duty and multiple deployments away from home for longer periods of time.

Martin began serving with the Mississippi Army National Guard 24 years ago, working within his state and abroad in places such as Germany, South Korea, Panama, Honduras and Costa Rica.

His unit was called up for overseas deployment in late August 2005, on the day that Hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf Coast area. Although his unit was released from duty abroad to deal with the impact of the storm at home, Martin volunteered to continue with his assigned mission and left for Kuwait as a member of the 1108th Aviation Classification Repair Activity Depot (AVCRAD) shortly after contributing to the relief efforts.

He is based out of Camp Shelby with the 3rd Brigade, 87th division on Operation Warrior Training.

He lives in Seminary with his wife, Pat and his son, Shawn, and daughter, Kimberly.

Martin said "the National Guard has done a lot for me. I appreciate everyone who voted for me. I know there are many troops who deserve it. We're all in this."

The campaign also celebrated the efforts of families and employers who support members of the National Guard. Many were honored throughout the campaign, with one family — Signa Kyle Lord (Fleetwood, Pa.) and one employer — Beach Manufacturing (Garden Grove, Calif.) being selected as the overall winners in their respective categories.

To acknowledge their dedication, they will be joining the Soldiers for a VIP experience at this weekend's race as well as have their names placed on the car for the Cup race.

In addition to Martin, nine other National Guard citizen-Soldiers were honored:

• Staff Sgt. Robert Smette began his military career in 2000 when he enlisted with the North Dakota Army National Guard as a private.

In early 2003, he volunteered to deploy with the 957th Multi-Role

Bridge Company in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. He serves as an air assault trainer at Fort Benning.

• Staff Sgt. Benjie R. Wells, a Mississippi National Guard member for 18 years, has assisted with several state and federal missions. He served in Operation Iraqi Freedom from 2003 to 2004, where he earned a Bronze Star and the Combat Medical Badge.

• Staff Sgt. Brent D. Cobb, a South Carolina National Guardsman who works in Retention and Recruiting.

He has led many programs to help the community, including a back-to-school drive to provide supplies to in-need children; a support program for local families of troops stationed in Iraq and a five-state Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps event that hosts ROTC members from 40 corps.

• Maj. Terry McPherson, a member of the Alabama National Guard, who was recently activated for Operation Iraqi Freedom from his base at Camp Shelby, Miss.

He has aided disaster areas in Alabama, providing water and repairing roads and assisted in Hurricane Katrina relief efforts. He also worked building schools in poverty-stricken areas in the Dominican Republic.

• Sgt. Corey Briest is a member of the South Dakota Army National Guard, whose unit was mobilized for Operation Iraqi Freedom in October 2005.

Two months later, he sustained a traumatic brain injury when his convoy was hit by a roadside bomb. He is currently rehabilitating in Pomona, Calif.

• Ohio Command Sgt. Maj. David G. Collins joined the National Guard in 1971. He was deployed to Iraq and Kuwait, where he supervised more than 4,500 troops in various camps throughout the region.

The hood of a NASCAR Nextel Cup car now bears the image of Staff Sgt. Quinton D. Martin, who is the grand prize winner of the "Heroes of the Year" campaign.

Troops supporting Hurricane Katrina relief efforts while based at in Mississippi. He has recently retired.

• Staff Sgt. Robert Dollaway is a senior personnel service sergeant with the New Jersey Army National Guard on active duty full time.

He supports Guard families through special events and was a key figure in the unit's community Open House day.

He consults on a military toy line and has made it possible for several Soldiers in his unit to have their likenesses used.

• In his nearly 20 years of working with the Wisconsin National Guard, Sgt. 1st Class Todd Tilkens has held a variety of positions within the community and abroad. He served in Operation Iraqi Freedom, escorting convoys in Kuwait. He worked the local airport with security teams and patrols neighborhood streets on Halloween, making streets safer for children.

• Iowa Sgt. 1st Class Jody Hayes' mission in Iraq was to remove improvised explosive devices and provide convoy escort missions in the hotly-contested Al Anbar Province.

Hayes located more IEDs than anyone else in the company during his tour, and though his platoon was often attacked by insurgents, he risked his own life several times to provide medical assistance.

"This was an outstanding year-long campaign that allowed so many people to nominate and celebrate the bravery and dedication of our citizen-Soldiers, as well as the support of family and employers," said Col. Mike Jones, Army National Guard.

"Quinton Martin is an example of the best and brightest serving our communities and serving our country. Nothing is more important to a citizen-Soldier than the support of their nation."

Kenseth wins at California Speedway

No big drama like at Daytona

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

NASCAR traveled to Fontana, Calif., for the Auto Club 500 Feb. 25. It was a very different race and week leading up to the race, with no drivers caught for cheating and no photo-worthy finish like the Daytona 500.

Roush Fenway Racing's Matt Kenseth drove the No. 17 car to victory lane, as he did the previous night in the Busch Series race.

Kevin Harvick swept the Busch and Nextel races the previous weekend at Daytona.

Maybe more Nextel drivers should look into racing in the Busch series, although there are already a lot of "Busch-whackers," including Carl Edwards and Greg Biffle.

Kenseth managed to win without his regular crew chief, Robbie Reiser, who is serving the second of his four-race penalty for violations on the car after qualifying at Daytona. Kenseth also won the race at California Speedway last year.

Harvick started to threaten late in the race, as he did to Mark Martin last week, but after a caution he pitted and then realized after pitting that he had a flat tire.

Jimmie Johnson was in the lead with 25 laps to go when a caution came out for debris on the backstretch, although no one was quite sure where the debris was.

Johnson pitted but his crew had a slow time of 14.7 seconds and he slid back to fifth place.

Jeff Gordon was the pole sitter and managed a second place finish. Johnson finished third.

Dale Earnhardt Inc. didn't have a great day. Drivers Martin Truex Jr. and Dale Earnhardt Jr. both left the race after experiencing engine problems. Dodge driver Kasey Kahne also had engine problems that sent him to the garage.

This was the first week NASCAR used unleaded gasoline, which might have been the problem for some teams.

Mark Martin, in the 01 Army Chevrolet, finished fifth and took the overall points lead from Harvick.

Kenseth is 12th after getting points deducted because of the violation before the green flag had even fallen at Daytona.

Benning archers at home on the range

Dedicated sportsmen make archery a family affair

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

"This is like golf to me when I come out here," Charles Capps said. "I do this to relax and spend time with my friends and family."

On any given Sunday, you can expect to hear these sentiments at the Archery Club at Uchee Creek. The archery range, open for about a year, has proved to be a booming success, said Cliff Hughes, manager of Uchee Creek Campground and Marina.

The complex has about 100 acres of three-dimensional competition targets, which replicate actual hunting situations, and about 10 acres of zero range bag targets.

"We've been told by many people that this is the best range in the area," Hughes said.

There are about 200 members, nearly half civilians and half military, ranging from 5 to 79 years old. There are more than a dozen professional archers who compete on the national level. Many of the members are experienced archers who have been shooting for years, Hughes said.

"I've been doing this since I was 16," said Dale Bloodworth. "I love to hunt and fish, and when hunting season's over, archery season starts for me."

Others enjoy the calming atmosphere.

"I've only been shooting a year, but the relaxation is so important, it's why I come out here," Jim Ozley said.

Janine Enfinger took up archery after meeting legendary musician and hunter Ted Nugent.

"He asked if I was a bow hunter, and I said no. He asked me 'Why the heck not?'" said Enfinger, who shoots with a style she feels comfortable with.

"It works for me," she said. "Everyone has to pick a style that fits them comfortably."

The range is designed to help hunters hone their hunting techniques. The ranges replicate real life woodland scenarios.

"It helps with hunting overall," Capps said. "You have to show patience and be able to judge yards. The targets are set up in situations that are like real hunting."

Camaraderie among the shooters is why so many turn up on Sunday mornings, the archers said. Many bring their entire family.

"Some of the nicest people you'll ever meet come out here and shoot," Ozley said.

"We'd rather be outside with the kids than playing Nintendo and Playstation and all that stuff," Enfinger said.

The range hosts monthly tournaments for all ages and skill levels.

"I think I'm going to start next tournament because I have my own bow," said Morgan Enfinger. "I'm a daddy's girl, so I want to learn to shoot like him."

Some shooters show up weekly to prepare for big events like the Archery Shooters Associations competitions in August, which attract more than 5,000 participants from all over the nation, Hughes said.

"I can live out my dream of being a professional athlete," Gorman Riley said. "Since I've been hunting all my life, I should have started this 20 years ago. I'm getting older, but I'm still competitive."

The range is open from sunup to sundown seven days a week, rain or shine, unless lightning is present. The annual membership fee is $10. Members can sign out bows and arrows free on a first come first serve basis. For more information on becoming a member and upcoming monthly shooting matches, contact Hughes or Angie McCullough at 706-545-2063.

Mark Smith eyes one of the three-dimensional targets in the Uchee Creek Archery range. The range has about 100 acres of competition targets and 10 acres of zero range bag targets.

"Archery keeps me calm and gives me something to do," said Josh Barber, a 15-year-old student at Harris County High School. Josh has been shooting a bow for about two years. The archery club has nearly 200 members, military and civilian, ranging from 5 to 79 years of age.

Youth: Basketball League wraps up season Saturday

The Heat's Nick Hunter takes a free-throw shot during the first half of Saturday's game versus the Suns. Nick showed his leadership by making solid passes, setting picks and trapping on the defensive end. The CYS Basketball League will start a new season in November.

be tough, especially on the defensive end.

"From day one, the team played awesome man-to-man defense," Tiner said.

The Heat's smallest player Ju'Wan Crawford ran the point well in the open floor, dishing out passes and trapping defensively. The Heat's Hannah Salus also provided a spark early in the first half, giving her team energy and displaying toughness on the floor with the guys.

The Suns maintained the lead early on, as Aaron Hardison showed a range of shooting skills, hitting several baskets before halftime and giving the Suns a nice lead.

"I love coaching these kids. It's so much fun for me and my boys, no matter what the turnout is," said Alyssa Edwards, the Heat's coach, who has two sons on her team.

After halftime, both teams came out refreshed and ready to go.

The Heat's Marcus Pyatt hit a long jumper from the perimeter that got the crowd excited and even garnered smiles and back pats from opposing players.

The Heat's Nick Hunter contributed on the offensive end to lead his team with three points.

He showed hustle by diving to the floor for loose balls and trapping the opposition, forcing several jump balls.

But the Suns proved to be too much, as Hardison, who led all scorers with nine points, took over, hitting several shots from the field.

"Aaron is a good all-around player. He has a good shot and he handles the ball well," Tiner said.

"But the best thing about our team is that all our players play as a committee. No player tries to be bigger than the team."

The crowd proved to be a viable sixth man by providing energy throughout the game.

They chanted and argued calls from the referees.

"This was just our second win this season, but the team worked hard all season, and it showed with a win the last game," Tiner said.

Dorrie Wagner, CYS sports specialist, said that she was pleased with the turnout in the basketball leagues this season and is hoping for even more kids to get involved next season.

The CYS Basketball League will start the next season in November.

For more information about Child and Youth Services sports, call 706-545-2079.

AMU: Hosts competition

finish strong as an individual," Behnke said.

There were individual matches in open and novice classes, as well as a team match. Scores were totaled after timed rounds in varying position and distance and were added together to determine individual totals.

The shooters faced adverse weather situations including high wind, rain and bright sun.

"This was great practical test of infield conditions," Behnke said.

"This will show how the Soldiers react to their training," he said.

"Positions aren't hard to learn, but fine-tuning the way you shoot in each position is what takes the time and practice," said Staff Sgt. William T. Pace, of the Army Marksmanship Unit.

In the first individual competition, the commanding general's match, Cadet Henry Markham of North Georgia College and State University took first place in the novice class and placed first overall, while Staff Sgt. Jeremiah Beck came in second.

In the open class, 1st Sgt. Jeffery Denzine took first, while last year's champion, Leid, came in second.

"I find it easier to shoot pistol personally, but I'm working on changing that," Leid said.

"The good thing about the rifle is you can use more of your body to make a more stable shooting position."

In the second individual match, Cadet Neil Sookdeo, who took first place in the novice class of the pistol competition, won first with a cumulative score of 233 points while Beck came in a close second with a score of 227.

Team Boars Head, led by Leid, won the team competition and swept the pistol and rifle competitions with first place finishes.

Behnke stressed the importance of this competition because of the use of the rifle in most combat situations.

"This will be the weapon that Soldiers need to be as proficient as possible using," Behnke said.

Each participant was required to compete in a class in which they received a certificate before competing.

"We are able to see where everyone's skill level is, and hopefully they improve after taking the class and competing," he said.

The competition concluded Sunday with an awards ceremony.

Fast cue-wielding Soldiers can win trip to Las Vegas

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Tim Hipps

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Soldiers who can quickly clear a table of billiard balls have an opportunity to win a trip for two to Las Vegas in the Army MWR Speed Pool Tournament.

Six local installation winners will be the guests of speed pool multi world record-holder Dave "The Ginger Wizard" Pearson at the Valley National Eightball Association International Championships in Las Vegas.

A $100,000 prize also awaits any contestant who eclipses Pearson's single-table world speed pool record of 26.5 seconds.

The object of speed pool is to run a rack of 15 balls as fast as possible, pocketing the eight ball last. The cue ball must completely stop between shots. The Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation-sponsored event lasts eight weeks and begins Saturday at Rocker II on Fort Knox, Ky.

Other local tournaments will be Wednesday at Rocky's on Fort Stewart, Ga.; Thursday at Fort Gordon, Ga.'s, bowling center; March 9 at Afterhours on Fort Benning; March 10 at Fort Bragg, N.C.'s, Sports USA; and March 11 at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.'s, bowling center.

All competitors will receive a limited-edition, customized pool cue and carrying case, both bearing the installation's insignia.

The first 50 registrants also will receive a trick-shot teaching DVD.

Speed pool multi world record-holder David Pearson entertains troops at the grand opening of Rocky's on Fort Stewart, Ga., to promote the Army MWR Speed Pool Tournament, which begins Saturday at Rocker II on Fort Knox, Ky. Tournament champions from six installations will win a trip for two to Las Vegas from May 30 through June 1 as Pearson's guests for the Valley National Eightball Association International Championships at the Riviera Hotel & Casino.

Soldiers or MWR office.

For contest rules and more details, visit www.mwrpromotions.com. The contest is open to active-duty military, Reserve and National Guard members for a $25 entry fee.

Pearson is scheduled to perform on the opening night at each site.

He holds Guinness Book World Records for clearing two complete pool tables in 1 minute, 22.6 seconds; running 10 tables in 8:57; and sinking 16,499 balls in 24 hours.

Twenty-five Soldiers — on a first-register, first-play basis — may compete each week in the local tournaments.

Multiple entries are allowed, but each competitor is limited to winning only once at the installation level.

Local weekly winners will receive a mini MP3 player and an event T-shirt.

Winners of the weekly double-elimination competitions will meet in a final-round shoot-off to determine the installation champions, who will receive round-trip airfare for two and three nights of lodging in Las Vegas, along with $400 for incidental expenses.

"The great thing about this is every installation has a winner," said Coleen Amstein, who works in business programs for the Army Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Command.

The contest is sponsored by FMWRC, BOSS and the Army Recreation Machine Program.

The goal is to provide a quality recreational program that will keep Soldiers on post and safe, said Don Rojas, general manager of ARMP.

For more information on the tournament March 9 on Fort Benning at the Afterhours Club, call 706-689-0887. The club is located at 2502 Indianhead Road.

Focus on athletes' performance, not personal life

Athletes should be entitled to keep their private lives just that

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

Tom Brady is a 29-year-old phenom. He is the quarterback of the New England Patriots that won three Super Bowls in four years. The last multiyear deal he inked with the Pats was monetarily well below what he could have gotten with another team, so that the Pats could pick up better prospects with more money.

But in the past week Brady has gotten the most focus on his personal life.

Brady and actress Bridget Moynahan dated for three years and ended their relationship last November. Moynahan recently announced she is pregnant, and Brady is the father. Brady has since moved on and is now dating supermodel Gisele Bündchen.

All the tabloids are running rampant with the story. Brady, once a golden boy, has a semi-tarnished image. I could care less.

I admit, I read tabloid magazines. I live vicariously in the world of superstars, covet their seemingly carefree lifestyle and endless wealth.

But when it comes to the world of sports, I prefer to admire my favorite athletes for their actions in their sport, not what they do in their personal lives.

And, if I want to be sexist, I could say that many sports are dominated by male fans, and most men I know aren't particularly interested in the social lives of their favorite athletes.

Most men probably gave Brady a big thumbs-up when they found out he was dating a supermodel, and that was that.

Moynahan, Brady and Bündchen will now be targets of the media, especially when the baby is born.

Speaking of babies, I already feel for Tiger Woods and his wife Elin Nordgren.

When their baby is born, I can only imagine the media attention it will receive. As the child grows, it will constantly be compared to Woods.

Everyone will ask, "But can the kid golf?" Who really cares?

It would be cool if the child ends up being a pro golfer like his or her dad, but what if he or she wants to be a doctor or a construction worker?

Unfortunately, the baby is always going to be scrutinized, no matter how young or old.

Sports Illustrated even pays homage to the social life of athletes and pop culture with a weekly feature called The Beat. I'll glance at it, but like I said, most of what I read I already know from the tabloids.

Steve Nash of the Phoenix Suns barely registered on the radar when his long locks were shorn, but as soon as Britney Spears took the clippers to her head, the media was there taping it and she ended up on the cover of every major tabloid.

Americans have more interest in a young woman spiraling downward mentally, which is sad, but it also sells newspapers and magazines.

My interest in Tom Brady pertains to the football field.

Even when the season starts this fall, the media focus will be on Brady, Moynahan and their child, not on his performance.

When Tiger's child is born, every tournament he loses will have critics pondering if Tiger is focusing on his family instead of the game.

Let's get over it and let the athletes do their job and have a personal life. There are plenty of people who relish the limelight, so give them their 15 more minutes.

Terra Nova starts Monday

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Clear your calendars. Cancel the dentist appointment and postpone the physical — nothing short of deployment should keep Fort Benning students out of school next week.

It's time for the annual Terra Nova test.

Faith Middle School students and students from the post's six elementary schools will take the standardized test, which measures their progress in the areas of math, language art, science and social studies.

The Terra Nova Multiple Assessment may very well be the most important test they'll take this year, said Dr. Julio Gonzalez, the principal of Faith.

"It's the only standardized test score that will follow them wherever they go," he said. "It is that critical."

Faith students will be tested Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in the mornings. Friday is scheduled for make-ups.

"We know there are a lot of deployments going on," Gonzalez said.

"We hope parents are not leaving during the time we're administering the test, but certainly we understand those things happen. That's why we schedule time for make-ups."

Elementary students will be tested in the mornings next week, all week long. Make-ups will be administered the following week.

School officials offer these tips for parents of students being tested:

- Please encourage your children to eat a healthy breakfast each morning, preferably one limited in sugar content.
- Make sure they get a good night's sleep.
- Talk to your children about the test, but keep your conversation positive. They'll follow your lead.
- Watch for signs of stress. Encourage students to do their best, but don't allow them to dwell on the subject or worry about the consequences.

Loyd honors Partners in Ed

Students thank Soldiers from 203rd BSB

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

Parents, children and VIPs crowded into the auditorium of Loyd Elementary School the evening of Feb. 15 to honor Soldiers with the 203rd Brigade Support Battalion.

The 203rd is the school's Partners in Education. The unit adopted the school to teach kids about leadership, values and teamwork, said Julita Martinez, Loyd's principal. The 203rd conducts field days and weekly meetings with children, and has sponsored professional development workshops for teachers.

One PIE project is the Leadership Academy, in which 203rd officers meet with kids to teach Army values and the strengths that make good leaders.

To thank the unit before they deploy, the children performed songs, poems and read narrations. The kindergartners sang Hero, and another class sang Because You Loved Me, accompanied by a slideshow of the 203rd troops working in the school, and pictures of the students with their Soldier parents. Other classes sang Dog Face Soldier and performed a Spanish poem about honoring Soldiers.

"We are proud of our parents-Soldiers and proud of our parents who stay behind with us," said student Kevin Bond, the master of ceremonies. "Thank you for protecting the freedom of our families, our country and our world."

About one-third of the children in the school will have parents deploy in the near future, Martinez said. She thanked them for serving the country and for their sacrifices. Assuring the Soldiers all would be well at home while they were gone, Martinez said the teachers commit to taking special care of children with deployed parents and to support the spouses who stay behind.

"We honor you, the men and women who honor freedom. We will nurture and care for your children during the deployment," she said.

She also thanked the 203rd for their role as Partners in Education, saying they make a positive impact on children.

The 203rd BSB will deploy to support the logistical needs of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team. The unit has Soldiers with 40 different military specialties to meet the needs of the 3rd BCT during deployment.

The school sponsored a reception following the program, complete with a star-spangled flag cake.

"This is your night, and our way to say thank you. Please enjoy it," Martinez said.

Mr. Impersonator

John Morgan, who bears a remarkable likeness to President George W. Bush, entertained a crowd of nearly 375 at the Serving From the Home Front fundraiser, sponsored by the Officers' Spouses' Club, Feb. 24 at the Benning Club. Morgan, who's billed as a presidential impersonator, entered the club surrounded by Secret Service impersonators, including Jeff Terhune, pictured here. The event, which included an auction, netted nearly $30,000 for the OSC's welfare fund. Among other things, the money will go toward scholarships and Santa's Castle.

C-O-M-P-R-E-S-S spells success for excited 6-year-old

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Chelsea Thomas is e-x-i ... Wait, she's e-x-c-i-t-e-d. Whew. Excited and nervous. She could use a cold c-o-m-p-r-e-s-s.

Chelsea, a 6-year-old at Westminster Christian Academy, was excited to be crowned the spelling bee champion of all the first-graders in all the private schools in Muscogee County Feb. 13. Now, she's a nervous wreck. She said so.

The spelling bee, which pitted her against 28 stellar spellers from seven schools, was a breeze compared to this interview.

"I'm more nervous now than I was then," she said. "I just wasn't scared. I knew I could win if I tried hard enough."

Chelsea, the daughter of a Fort Benning Soldier, Spc. Pierre Thomas, and his wife, Allison, said she practiced her spelling words for weeks, using flash cards with pictures. She practiced about 600 words over and over, at home with her parents and at school with her classmates.

She practiced the word "excited" in the car on the way to the competition at St. Luke School. That one kept tripping her up. Fortunately, the judges never threw it her way. They asked some tough ones, Chelsea said, but "compress," the word that won it for her, posed no problem at all.

Though Chelsea said her "lucky golden bracelet," a gift from a friend, might have boosted her confidence, her teacher believes Chelsea made her own good fortune.

"She worked very hard," Carolyn Acree said. "She's a very enthusiastic, very good student — a good speller and a good reader. Spelling and reading go hand in hand."

In theory, Chelsea agreed, though she had a bit of trouble spelling it out.

"I think being a good speller makes me a good reader," she said. "Or maybe it's the other way around."

Bridgett Siter
Chelsea Thomas, 6, won a citywide spelling bee last month. Chelsea is a first-grader at Westminster Christian Academy in Columbus.

DVDS FOR DEPLOYED TROOPS

The Phenix City campus of Troy University is scheduling appointments for military families to create 10-minute DVDs to send to deployed troops. There will be no charge for the DVD production or shipping to the Soldier. Taping will be March 12 and 14. Availability will be limited to the time allotted.

For more information, call Tessa Brown at 334-448-5111.

SLOGAN CONTEST

Secretary of State Karen Handel encourages citizens to enter the Federal Voting Assistance Program's slogan contest to support voting by citizens residing overseas and military personnel.

Participants should write a simple slogan about the importance of voting. Participants can submit more than one, but they should be entered separately. The deadline is April 9. The winners and runners-up will receive a certificate of recognition from the Department of Defense.

Entries can be sent by the following methods and must include your full name, mailing address, daytime phone number, fax number and e-mail address (if applicable): e-mail, slogan@fvap.ncr.gov; fax, 703-696-1352; or mail to: Federal Voting Assistance Program, Department of Defense, Attn: Voting Slogan Contest, 1155 Defense Pentagon, Washington, D.C., 20301-1155.

For more information, visit www.fvap.gov.

ST. JUDE DREAM HOME

The St. Jude "Dream Home" give-away is selling $100 tickets for a chance to win a house valued at approximately $379,900. Other prizes include a 2007 Chevrolet Malibu, a one-carat diamond ring, and more. At least one in 500 entrants will win.

Winners will be announced during the WTVM-TV St. Jude Dream Home Give-Away special April 21. Only 8,000 tickets will be sold. Free tours will start March 24 and will run from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays and noon to 5 p.m. Sundays through April 15.

Tickets are being sold at Columbus area Wachovia banks, Action Buildings, Bill Heard Chevrolet or by calling 800-383-944 or online at www.stjudedreamhome.org.

GRANTS FOR VOLUNTEER ORGANIZATIONS

Newman's Own, the Fisher House Foundation and the Military Times Media Group invite volunteer organizations serving military families to compete for a share of $75,000 in grants.

Organizations are asked to present an innovative plan to support military families. The plan garnering the most votes from the judges will earn $15,000 to put that plan into action. Judges will divide the remaining $60,000 among as many groups as they like.

Nominations must be postmarked by May 18. Instructions, rules and eligibility requirements can be found at fisherhouse.org.

SECOND INFANTRY REGIMENT ASSOCIATION

Officers and Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Regiment, who served in Germany, Kosovo and Iraq are encouraged to contact the Regimental Association and join the members of the battalion who served in Vietnam.

Write to: 5005 Portsmouth Road, Fairfax, VA, 22032.

BLIND VETERANS ASSOCIATION

The regional chapter of the Blind Veterans Association of Georgia meets at 9:30 a.m. the last Wednesday of each month at the VA Clinic conference room, 1310 13th Ave., in Columbus. For more information, call 706-569-9881.

EMPTY BOWL FUND-RAISER

The Britt David Cultural Arts Studio will sponsor the annual "Empty Bowl" fund-raiser to feed the hungry, featuring handmade bowls, soup, desserts, tea and door prizes. All proceeds go to the Second Harvest Food Bank Kids' Café, which feeds needy children of the community.

The Empty Bowl will take place from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Northside Recreation Center, 2010 American Way in Columbus. Cost is $10 for adults and $6 for children younger than 12.

To buy tickets, call 706-653-4196.

HOST FAMILIES NEEDED

The Pacific Intercultural Exchange needs host families for foreign students between 15 and 18, who speak English, have their own spending money and carry accident and health insurance.

P.I.E. has programs to match almost every family's needs, ranging in length from a semester to a full academic year. Families who host P.I.E. are also eligible to claim a $50 per month charitable contribution deduction on their itemized returns for each month they host a sponsored student.

Chattahoochee County area families interested in learning more about student exchange or arranging for a meeting with a community representative can call 866-546-1402.

FREEDOM TEAM SALUTE

Soldiers can go to www.freedomteamsalute.com to nominate a spouse, parent, employer (for Reserve Components) or a veteran for recognition.

FTS additionally recognizes and honors veteran Soldiers of all generations for their legacy of freedom, duty and honor to our country and their continued support of the Army mission.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus, Inc., is looking for volunteers who are willing to spend two hours with students each Saturday during the school term.

For more information, call Tresa Hart-Williams at 706-315-8847.

MOMS GROUP

An Internet group, Columbus/Ft. Benning Moms, is seeking other moms for weekly get togethers.

For more information, call Jennifer Vance at 706-610-5531 or e-mail Vance37@aol.com.

WEIGHT LOSS SURGERY SUPPORT GROUP

The Happy and Healthy Side of Me-Obesityhelp.com Weight Loss Surgery Support Group meets the first Monday of each month at the Columbus Public Library from 6:30 to 8 p.m.

For more information, call Lea Lewis at 706-989-0411.

MILITARY SPOUSE CAREER CENTER

The Department of Defense has announced the Office of Military Community and Family Policy, in partnership with military.com, has developed a new resource to help military spouses with their careers.

The Military Spouse Career Center, located at www.military.com/spouse1, is designed to connect spouses with job opportunities, career advice and family support.

The Center is provided by the DoD at no cost.

ARBOR DAY FOUNDATION BOOK

What Tree Is That?, a pocket guide for identifying trees, is available from The National Arbor Day Foundation.

The 72-page guide will help identify 135 different trees found in the eastern and central U.S.

To get the tree ID guide, send your name and address and $3 to What Tree Is That?, The National Arbor Day Foundation, Nebraska City, NE 68410 or go online to arborday.org.

OFF DUTY TRAVEL WEB SITE

The U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center has developed www.offdutytravel.com, a Web site for authorized MWR patrons. It has links to Internet fare finders and travel providers and tips on how to get the best fare by searching the Web.

The Armed Forces Vacation Club offers DoD and Coast Guard personnel a seven-night luxury vacation, on a space-available basis, for $249.

Champions on parade

Capt. Jason Riddle enters his 1963 Chevy Biscayne in car shows two or three times a year. Feb. 23, he drove it to Jordan High School in Columbus for the 14th annual Champion Car Show.

"This is a good one," Riddle said of the show, which drew 161 competitors this year. Money raised from the event, which is sponsored by the school's Partners In Education, goes back to the school to support magnet programs and school activities such as field trips. Staff from Columbus Technical College served as judges.

Staff Sgt. Nathaniel Primus has been working on his 1962 Chevy Super Sport for six years. The NCO Academy instructor didn't show his car Saturday.

"I'm just looking for new ideas," he said, as he peered beneath the hood of the '62 Biscayne. "Always looking for ideas."

Six steps to effective poison prevention

MCG CHILDREN'S MEDICAL CENTER
Rene Hopkins

From a child's point of view, brightly colored bottles of detergent look like Kool-Aid and shiny, round pills look like candy.

About 1.2 million children younger than 5 are poisoned every year by common household products. To help protect children, Safe Kids East Central and the MCG Children's Medical Center recommend the following tips for parents and caregivers:

No. 1 — When not in use, keep all poisons high up in a locked cabinet. Child-resistant packaging is great, but it's not infallible. Lock poisons away, but continue to also actively supervise your children. Remember when you were a kid and climbed chairs or used keys to "explore?"

No. 2 — Stay alert while using cleaning products or other potentially harmful substances. Never leave children alone, even for a few seconds, with an open container of something you wouldn't want them to ingest.

No. 3 — Know what to do. Make sure you and your babysitters know the poison control hotline number, 800-222-1222, as well as the number for your local ambulance service, if it is not 911. If you suspect poisoning, call poison control immediately, and do not induce vomiting or give the child any fluid or medication unless directed. Call 911, not poison control, if a child is choking, having trouble breathing or having a seizure.

No. 4 — Test your home for lead and carbon monoxide. Both lead and carbon monoxide can make children seriously ill.

No. 5 — Don't refer to medicine or vitamins as candy. Even multivitamins can poison a small child who swallows too many. Remember to discuss these precautions with grandparents or other relatives who may have medications in their homes, and help them ensure their homes are safe. When these relatives and friends visit your home, remember to appropriately stow away their purses or baggage if they hold medications.

No. 6 — Learn CPR. It takes only three hours to complete this class. You can learn effective interventions to help save a child.

REFLECTIONS

Purim celebrates gratitude

1ST BN., 50TH INF. REGT.

Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz

This year the Jewish Holiday of Purim will be celebrated on the evening of March 3 and on the day of March 4. Purim (Hebrew for lottery) is based on the Biblical Book of Esther, and has been celebrated for more than 23 centuries. The story begins with King Ahashverosh (Xerxes) of Persia who made huge banquets, and in his drunkenness deposes of Queen Vashti. In his search for a successor, he chooses Esther, a cousin of Mordechai, leader of the Jewish community in the capital of Shushan. Mordechai uncovers a plot to kill the King and saves the King's life.

Then the King elevates Haman, his advisor, to the position of prime minister and orders all in the kingdom to bow down in Haman's presence. When Mordechai refuses to do so, the furious Haman bribes King Ahashverosh to issue a decree condemning all the Jewish people in his kingdom to be destroyed because "their laws are diverse from other people" (Esther 3:8). He casts lots (Purim) to determine the genocidal date: Adar (usually March) the 13th is chosen.

Mordechai mobilized the Jewish community to pray, and Esther pleaded to the King on behalf of her people. Aware now of the extremity of Haman's vengeful bloodlust, the angry King orders the prime minister to be hung on the same gallows Haman had prepared for Mordechai.

Allowed to defend themselves against their attackers on Adar 13 and 14, the Jews are victorious. Mordechai is appointed prime minister in Haman's place. He and Esther circulate letters to all the Jewish communities establishing Purim as a yearly festival.

This tale of triumph over tyranny and genocide has reverberated through the ages, inspiring song, drama, costumes and carnivals, strengthening the spirits of generations of Jews who have had to confront and overcome anti-Semitism. Purim is very dear to the Jewish heart because of its promise of divine release from oppression.

Customs observed over the years include reading the Megillah (scroll) of Esther in the Synagogue.

Each time Haman's name is mentioned, noise is made with groggers (ratchets twirled around) to blot out his name. Food parcels are sent to one another, usually including three-cornered pastries called hamantashen (Haman's pockets).

Giving to the poor and having a festive meal shows gratitude for the miracle of survival.

May we all be blessed with "light, happiness, joy and honor" (Esther 8:16).

Amen.

Don't forget the comma

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

Bud Rupel

I recently passed a sign that caught my attention, and depending where you placed the comma, it gave two completely different messages. Printed on the sign was this statement: "Dead end school personnel only." Now I know what the sign meant to imply but without a comma it took on a new meaning altogether.

Just a little thing is a comma, but oh, the difference a comma can make. Poor couple communication is like the missing comma on the sign. How we say things can have a bigger impact than what we say. Too often couples are afraid to enter in to conflict because they fear being misunderstood. So instead of saying anything they will avoid conflict altogether. The trouble with unresolved conflict is that it just does not go away. You put too many of them together and it spells disaster.

The next time you have a chance, go take a look at your hot water heater. (I know what you're thinking: What does this have to do with couple communication?)

On the heater is a valve called a pressure relief valve designed to let off steam so the hot water heater does not explode. Conflict is the pressure relief valve in marriage. Conflict is the door that leads to a more intimate marital relationship.

Even in the best relationships where great communication exists, there is going to be conflict. So using the word "comma" let me provide a pattern you may find useful.

- C = Commitment to resolving conflict
- O = Openness to your spouse's point of view
- M = Make time to resolve conflict
- M = Make a plan to solve the problem deciding together on the solution to implement.

• A = Action, put your plan to work for you
So the next time you and your spouse get into a conflict, don't forget the comma — it will keep your marriage on the right track.

Editor's note: Retired Chaplain (Maj.) Bud Rupel lives in Columbus, where he continues to minister to Soldiers and their families. He can be reached at 706-323-1876.

Crate training

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Have a new puppy or adopted an adult dog that needs to be housebroken?

Many trust in the crate training method, which is quick and easy when done correctly. The end result of crate training will be a dog that knows — and uses — the proper place to do its business and sees its crate as a place to rest, its own place.

The first step is to realize that the crate is never a place of punishment. Crate training should be a positive experience and the goal is for the dog to respect the crate as its own territory. Dogs don't want to go to the bathroom in their resting place, which is why crate training teaches them bladder control.

Dogs will learn to hold it in until they are out of the crate and in the correct spot for relieving themselves.

The crate training steps are:

1. On the puppy's first day in its new house, it should be introduced to the crate. Place the puppy in the crate and let it check the crate out. Leave the door open and allow the puppy to leave if it chooses. Repeat the process till the puppy seems comfortable with being in the crate. You may want to put old towels or housebreaking pads, which are available at pet stores, inside the crate to make it more welcoming. You may also want to put a treat in the kennel for the puppy to find, or give it one once its in there.

2. When it comes time to put the puppy in the crate the first night, put it in and leave it in no matter how much it cries or whines. If you let the puppy out because it cries and whines, it will learn to cry every time it wants to get out. The puppy will be fine, no matter how pitiful the cries seem. (I know it's hard — it broke my heart to hear my puppy cry that first night — but I knew the bad behavior would continue if I gave in.) Try to keep the crate in the same spot right from the beginning so the puppy can learn where to find it.

3. Puppies need to relieve themselves frequently, so take the puppy out during the night when it asks and put it right back in afterwards.

4. Before you put the puppy in the crate each time, take it outside and give it a chance to relieve itself. Always take the puppy outside as soon as you take it out of the crate, as well.

The crate training process takes a different amount of time for each dog, from days to weeks, depending on its age, experience and temperament, according to the Humane Society of the U.S.

When you first go out to purchase the crate, buy one that will be big enough for when the dog is full grown. Some models come with a partition that can make the crate smaller for when the dog is young. If you have a crate that's too big at first, the puppy may not learn to control his bladder since it can relieve itself on one side and sleep on the other.

Crate training can also be used to stop bad behavior while you're out of the house. After my Great Dane, Atlas, grew out of his kennel (we didn't buy the extra large one needed while he was a puppy), my husband and I would leave him in the guest room — until he started chewing the door frame while we were gone. Even though he had plenty of dog toys in there with him, he felt the need to chew on the frame.

He was already crate trained, so I bought the biggest kennel the pet store had. In Atlas's case, keeping him locked up is the only way to stop him from chewing. Using the crate while you're gone and at night is a good way to ensure peace of mind.

To reinforce the fact that the crate is a welcoming place, you may want to give the dog a treat, a toy or ball each time it goes in its kennel.

The HSUS has a slightly different method of crate training, as do other organizations. For more information, visit www.hsus.org, or go to the bookstore, where you can find books devoted to bringing a new dog home that have chapters on crate training.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Dr. Lt. Col. Thomas White, Optometrist

Q: What is glaucoma?

A: Glaucoma is the second-leading cause of adult blindness in the U.S. It often results from intraocular pressure (fluid pressure within the eye, or IOP) that is too high for the optic nerve to tolerate. This nerve acts like an electric cable with more than a million wires. It is responsible for carrying images from the eye to the brain. Damage to the nerve gradually reduces peripheral or side vision without warning.

Q: Who is at risk for glaucoma?

A: Everyone is at risk for glaucoma. There are risk factors that increase the chances of developing glaucoma. The factors we consider when assessing risk include race, age (older than 60), family history, high intraocular pressure and optic nerve appearance. Glaucoma is six to eight times more common in African-Americans than Caucasians.

Q: Is glaucoma curable?

A: Glaucoma is not curable and vision lost cannot be regained. With medication or surgery, it is possible to halt further loss of vision. Glaucoma treatment entails decreasing aqueous humor production, increasing fluid drainage or a combination of the two. Since glaucoma is a chronic condition, it must be monitored for life.

Parenting 101? Here's a place to start

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Have you noticed? Parenting seems to be more challenging than it's ever been, doesn't it? It is interesting to me that if you want to drive a car, you need to take some sort of drivers training, take a written test in order to verify you have it mentally and then the driving test, making sure you can coordinate the knowledge with the mechanics.

If you want to build houses, well they make you study and learn the laws and codes and then yes, another test to prove your knowledge and understanding. Then if you pass, you can get your license to build.

If you want to counsel people like I do at the Chaplain Family Life Center, you have to train, take the exams, demonstrate some ability to competently counsel, and then, after hundreds of hours of supervised counseling, you can obtain a license.

Now as I think about becoming a parent, what classes must I take? I checked the colleges and universities and found no courses on parenting. There is no 101 on parenting. I find it interesting that we allow people to have children who know absolutely nothing about children. What are we thinking? I often wonder how we have survived!

I found there was no one single manual or single set of instructions that tell you "how" to be a great parent. I suppose that's why Dr. James Dobson wrote the bestseller Parenting Isn't For Cougars. In fact when 35,000 parents were recently asked about their greatest frustration in raising children, the answer surprised the experts. They didn't focus on the shortcomings of their children. Instead, they expressed their own inadequacies — "I just can't cope" was the most common reply. I know I've certainly felt that way at points. However, the good news is that through a healthy dose of Divine Wisdom for those who ask the creator for guidance and the counsel of wise mentors, parents don't have to succumb to a "crisis of confidence" — you can thrive, not just survive as a parent!

How do you do that? Well, here are three suggestions to help you execute your mission as Mom or Dad:

- Be careful which playbook you're using. If I want to take a team to the Super Bowl, I probably wouldn't run plays drawn up on the back of a napkin. Similarly, if we are interested in being solid parents, we need to get our information from solid sources. The Bible, the Book of Proverbs specifically, is a wonderful place to start. Hey, 3,000 years of time-tested wisdom isn't a bad track record. A more contemporary tool to add to your bag can be found at www.family.org — that's Focus on the Family's Web site. It's got more resources and encouragement than any parent can use in a lifetime. ACS also offers classes to help moms and dads with those newborns.

- Rules are a child's best friend. So many times we think rules limit us. Wrong! Children will often tell care givers they prefer to live in a place with rules that reflect care and consistency.

A home without care and consistency is much like putting an 8-year-old on a 13-story balcony without a railing. The child is both endangered and frightened. However, put a strong, solid, safe balcony (rules) up, and he has the freedom to enjoy himself within those boundaries.

- Rules without a relationship leads to rebellion. Rules, however, are only half of the equation. Relationship is the rich soil out of which rules grow.

Without a relationship, rules don't seem careful they seem careless. If you were to draw a pie chart representing the relationships between you and each of your children, what percentage of the pie would represent rules ... what percentage would represent relationship?

The good news is, you can't have too much relationship with your kids, so enjoy!

Want to know more about parenting or any other individual or marital concerns, then come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606 Soldier's Plaza, Dixie Road, or pick up the phone and give us a call at 706-545-1760 ... we are here to serve you!

We are here with help for your journey.

Other Wednesday night activities include the Middle School Youth Group (Club Beyond) that meets at 5 p.m. and the High School Club that meets at 6:30 p.m. Infant care is provided from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. in the nursery.

For more information on Club Beyond, call Steve Paquette at 706-545-2359.

For more information on the service, call Chaplain (Maj.) Walt Hoskins at 706-545-4017, Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey at 706-545-9014, Chaplain (Maj.) Joel Funk at 706-545-7513 or Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Beavers at 706-544-6255.

COMBAT STRESS PROCESS GROUP

The Chaplain Family Life Center will conduct meetings to understand combat stress and how it affects marriages, and how couples can work to overcome it.

For more information or to reserve your seat, call 706-545-1760 or stop by the Family Life Center in Soldiers Plaza.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

Protestant Sunday School is from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. every Sunday in the Follow Me Chapel. Classes are for all ages. Infant care is provided and transportation is available on post.

For more information, call 706-545-7513.

CATHOLIC WOMEN OF THE CHAPEL

Children Learn More from Do's than Don'ts

Young children will be better behaved when they know clearly what you expect of them. Instead of just saying, "Don't do that," show and tell your child what you do want him or her to do.

1. Teach your child the steps of the desired behavior. It is unreasonable to expect your child to do something if you haven't taught it to him or her.

2. Have your child describe the behavior back to you. This will tell you whether or not your child understands your expectations.

3. Ask your child to demonstrate the behavior to you. If your child can demonstrate the behavior reasonably well, then you know that it is within the child's abilities.

4. Model the behavior yourself. Children are always watching you and trying to imitate your behavior.

The Columbus historic district has walking trails with more than 80 stops, including the ones below.

Heritage Park is near Heritage Corner, the starting point for walking trails, on Seventh Street between Front Avenue and Broadway. The park has numerous fountains, statues, benches and a kiln used for making bricks at one of the Bickerstaff plants.

Muscogee No. 3, built in 1854, is the oldest existing fire station in Columbus. The building, located at 1045 First Ave., was used as a fire station only until 1860, when several of the city's fire companies combined.

Dr. John S. Pemberton is best known as the inventor of the formula that was the basis for Coca-Cola, and he lived in this town home at 11 Seventh Street. Two of Pemberton's homes are on the walking trails.

Pemberton's other home in Columbus is located at 712 Broadway, just around the corner from the town home. This country home was moved to its current location in 1977. Pemberton lived in the Greek Revival structure from 1860 to 1869.

The Woodruff Farm House, 708 Broadway, was built in the 1840s and was the summer house for the Woodruff family in the 1920s. It was moved to this location in the 1980s, and it is now the headquarters for Heritage Corner Tours.

This 1870 Victorian Italianate townhouse sits at Heritage Corner, where Broadway and Seventh Street meet. Heritage Corner is the starting point for Columbus' self-guided walking trails and the Heritage Tour. The tour is given daily at 2 p.m. and costs $5 per person. The Italianate style townhouse, one of the tour stops, was the home of Sterling Price Gilbert, a Georgia Supreme Court justice from 1916 to 1936.

Historic district

The Columbus historic district has miles of trails lined with historic homes, buildings

THE BAYONET

If you've ever walked around downtown Columbus, you've probably seen the myriad of historical markers noting places of interest.

The downtown area is the site of the original city of Columbus, which was established in 1828, and much of the area is now known as the historic district because it has many homes and buildings dating back to the 19th century.

The historic district may be best discovered with one of the city's walking trails. Pick up a map and brochure at the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 900 Front Ave. for help in navigating the miles of history.

Four walking trails have been laid out, and the main trail is three miles and highlights the original city spots of interest. There is also an optional extension of the main trail, a black heritage trail and a Riverwalk trail that follows the Chattahoochee River.

The trails begin at Heritage Corner, which is the corner of Broadway and Seventh Street.

The historic district contains more than 200 structures of historical and architectural significance, according to an historic marker. The historic district's approximate boundaries are Fourth Street on the south, Ninth Street on the north, Fourth Avenue on the east and the Chattahoochee River on the west.

Many historic structures were demolished in the 1950s and 60s. The largest number of historic homes still standing is located in the 800 block of Broadway. One of these early residences is the Joseph House, which was built in 1842 and is an example of a southern Greek Revival style cottage.

There are three house museums in the historic district — the Walker-Peters-Langdon House, built in 1828 and considered the oldest extant house in Columbus, at 716 Broadway, the Pemberton House on Seventh Street, and the Italianate House at 700 Broadway.

The Italianate House is considered the only one of its design in Columbus and is the historic district's only two-story solid brick house.

Heritage Park, on Seventh Street between Front Avenue and Broadway, was built to recognize the workers and entrepreneurs who used the river and created the industry that boomed in the second half of the 1800s and the early 1900s. Many of the houses in the historic district were built in this time period when the city was expanding greatly.

The clay kiln at Heritage Park was built at one of the Bickerstaff plants, which were created and run by the Bickerstaff family beginning in 1885. Much of the brick architecture in the Chattahoochee Valley was created with Bickerstaff bricks, according to a plaque by the kiln.

An ornamental fountain was placed in front of the city's courthouse in the early 1890s as part of a contract between the Water Works Company and the city. The fountain is now located at Fourth Street and Broadway, and three other fountains are located along Broadway in a similar Victorian style. In the 1960s, Columbus adopted the name "Fountain City."

A guided tour is also available through the Historic Columbus Foundation. The tour takes you through six historic homes and begins at Heritage Corner. The tour is given daily at 2 p.m. and costs $5 per person with a two person minimum. For more information, go to www.historiccolumbus.org.

For more information on the walking trails, call the visitors bureau at 706-322-1613 or go to www.visitcolumbus.org.

OTHER SPOTS OF INTEREST in the historic district

The Chattahoochee Promenade is the 1,000-foot, 700 blocks of Front Ave. was built to celebrate the centennial of the U.S. The promenade has a fountain, garden, and historic markers, reflects the spirit of the Library of Congress. The "National Museum" is a collection of historic markers that were part of the original 1828 plan of the city. Just across the river from Heritage Park, the promenade is next to the Coca-Cola Space Science Center.

The Coca-Cola Space Science Center at 701 Front Ave. was established in the memory of the crew of the Challenger space shuttle. The center, which is part of Southern State University, has a space shuttle mission simulator, information and Media Observatory which is connected by remote link to observatories around the world. The center is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday. Admission: $5 for adults, $4 for children, $4 for seniors and military members, and $3 for CSU students.

The Columbus Iron Works at 801 Front Ave. was created in 1853 and operated as a foundry until 1970, when it was converted into the Columbus Convention and Trade Center. During the Civil War, the Iron Works produced firearms for the Confederacy and machinery for some of the Confederate Navy's fleet. One of the weapons made during the Civil War is the "Ladies Defender," which was cast from brass collected by Columbus women. The Ladies Defender is currently on display in the Columbus Museum's exhibit on the Civil War. A History. The Columbus Iron Works is a museum on the second floor.

The Springer Opera House 103 1/2 Front Ave. is the oldest building of Georgia and a National Historic Landmark. The building was built in 1828 and was the first building to undergo a major renovation. Originally built as a warehouse, the Springer's original name was the house, and then became the opera house in 1871. It has hosted many well-known stars, including the opera, including the opera, including the opera. Tickets are $10 to $15 and $15 to $20 per person.

OPENING TODAY

ZODIAC — As a serial killer terrifies the San Francisco Bay Area and taunts police with his ciphers and letters, investigators in four jurisdictions search for the murderer. The case will become an obsession for four men as their lives and careers are built and destroyed by the endless trail of clues. Jake Gyllenhaal, Mark Ruffalo, Robert Downey Jr. and Anthony Edwards star in the film.

Zodiac is rated R for some strong killings, language, drug material and brief sexual images.

WILD HOGS — A group of middle-aged friends (John Travolta, Tim Allen, Martin Lawrence, William H. Macy) decide to rev up their routine suburban lives with a freewheeling motorcycle trip. Taking a long dreamed-of breather from their stressful jobs and family responsibilities, they can't wait to feel the freedom of the open road. When this mismatched foursome — who have grown far more used to the couch than the saddle — set out for this once-in-a-lifetime experience, they encounter a world that holds far more than they ever bargained for.

Wild Hogs is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content and some violence.

FULL OF IT — A habitual liar wakes up one morning to find his tall tales have come true. A 17-year-old desperately tries to fit in at a new school by telling elaborate lies to impress the school's most popular kids.

But when the lies start turning to truths and the teen becomes the big man on campus, he suddenly finds himself facing a whole new set of problems that he never expected. Ryan Pinkston, Teri Polo, Craig Kilborn and Carmen Electra star in the movie.

Full of It is rated PG-13 for sexual content, drug references, teen partying and crude humor.

BLACK SNAKE MOAN — Bitter and broken from a cheating wife and a shattered marriage, Lazarus' (Samuel L. Jackson) soul is lost in spent dreams and betrayal's contempt — until Rae (Christina Ricci). Half naked and beaten unconscious, Rae is left for dead on the side of the road when Lazarus discovers her.

The God-fearing, middle-aged black man learns that the young white woman he's nursing back to health is none other than the town tramp from the small Tennessee town where they live. Worse, she has a peculiar anxiety disorder. He realizes when the fever hits, Rae's affliction has more to do with love lost than any found.

He chains her to his radiator, justifying his unorthodox methods with quoted scripture.

Black Snake Moan is rated R for strong sexual content, language, some violence and drug use.

ALSO IN THEATERS

THE ASTRONAUT FARMER — An

astronaut (Billy Bob Thornton) is forced to leave NASA to save his family farm but continues to dream of space travel and sets out to build a rocket inside his barn. Though his neighbors consider him an oddity, the media considers him a threat, nothing can deter him from his dream to break through the atmosphere and orbit the earth.

The Astronaut Farmer is rated PG for thematic material, peril and language.

THE ABANDONED — An American woman searching for her birth parents learns she has inherited a house in the middle of a forest in a remote area of Russia — the house where she was born. Abandoned and uninhabited for 40 years, it stands in total disrepair and neglect.

She meets a mysterious man who claims to be her brother, a twin she never knew. Together they find the house holds secrets to a past they don't remember.

Together they are forced to relive a series of horrifying events and shocking murders that occurred just after they were born, in the place they were supposed to die. The movie stars Jordanka Angelova and Kalin Arsov.

The Abandoned is rated R for violence and gore, some disturbing images, nudity and language.

THE NUMBER 23 — A man's life unravels after he comes into contact with an obscure book titled The Number 23.

As he reads the book, he becomes increasingly convinced that it is based on his own life. His obsession with the number 23 starts to consume him, and he begins to realize the book forecasts far graver consequences for his life than he could have ever imagined.

The Number 23, rated R for violence, disturbing images, sexuality and language, stars Jim Carrey and Virginia Madsen.

Reno 911!: Miami — The officers of the Reno police department visit a national police convention in Miami Beach.

When the convention center is bio-attacked, it's up to Reno's "finest" to save the day. Robert Ben Garant, Thomas Lennon, Niecy Nash, Mary Birdsong and Cedric Yarbrough star in the movie.

Reno 911!: Miami is rated R for sexual content, nudity, crude humor, language and drug use.

GHOST RIDER — A motorcycle stuntman, Johnny Blaze (Nicolas Cage), makes a pact with a dark force, selling his soul to save his girlfriend (Eva Mendes).

When the bargain goes sour and the girl isn't saved, Blaze is transformed, gaining raging superpowers. The movie is based on the Marvel comic series.

Ghost Rider is rated PG-13 for horror violence and disturbing images.

BRIDGE TO TERABITHIA — An 11-year-old boy has his life changed forever when he befriends the class outsider, a girl. Together they create the world of Terabithia, an imaginary kingdom filled with giants, trolls and other magical beings.

The Bridge to Terabithia, starring AnnaSophia Robb and Josh Hutcherson, is rated PG for thematic elements including bullying, some peril and mild language.

BREACH — Eric O'Neill (Ryan Phillippe) is promoted to a job inside FBI headquarters working for respected agent Robert Hanssen (Chris Cooper). Then O'Neill learns his true mission: finding proof that Hanssen has been selling American secrets to the Soviet Union for years.

Breach is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual content and language.

MUSIC AND LYRICS — Alex Fletcher (Hugh Grant) is a washed-up 80s pop star who's been reduced to working the nostalgia circuit at county fairs and amusement parks.

The charismatic and talented musician gets a chance at a comeback when the reigning diva Cora Corman invites him to write and record a duet with her, but there's a problem — Alex hasn't written a song in years, he's never written lyrics and he has to come up with a hit in a matter of days.

Enter Sophie Fisher (Drew Barrymore), Alex's beguilingly quirky plant lady, whose flair for words strikes a chord with the struggling songwriter. As their chemistry heats up at the piano, Alex and Sophie will have to face their fears — and the music — if they want to find love and success.

Music and Lyrics is rated PG-13 for some sexual content.

TYLER PERRY'S DADDY'S LITTLE GIRLS — A successful female attorney falls in love with a janitor, the single father of three daughters, over the objections of her father.

Tyler Perry's Daddy's Little Girls, rated PG-13 for thematic material, drug and sexual content, some violence and language, stars Gabrielle Union, Avant and Louis Gossett Jr.

NEW RELEASES

BORAT: CULTURAL LEARNINGS OF AMERICA FOR MAKE BENEFIT GLORIOUS NATION OF KAZAKHSTAN: Star and co-writer Sacha Baron Cohen and director Larry Charles scored one of last year's biggest comedy hits with the purposely outrageous saga of foreign television personality Borat, who comes to the United States allegedly to profile its citizens, but really to meet actress Pamela Anderson. Some of the people interviewed weren't too happy to see how they were used in the film, but the results are hilarious. Co-star Ken Davitian, who plays Borat's producer, was immortalized in Cohen's Golden Globe acceptance speech. DVD extras: five making-of documentaries; deleted scenes. (R: AS, N, P)

For more information, call 229-838-4706.

Callaway Gardens THROUGH SUNDAY

Callaway Gardens is hosting an art exhibit entitled Plant Portraits: The California Legacy of A.R. Valentien through Sunday. This exhibition is a display of 80 watercolors of native California plants painted in the early 1900s.

Almost 100 years ago, the artist Albert Valentien began a project that was 10 years in the making. He began his work in 1908, when he was commissioned by Ellen Browning Scripps to paint the wildflowers of California, with the plan to publish a book of the paintings when he finished. However, in the end Scripps decided the cost was too prohibitive, and Valentien's hope of seeing his work reproduced and admired by a large audience was dashed. In 2000, thanks to the commitment and generosity of Eleanor and Jerome Navarra, the Valentien Project, which would entail photographing, conserving, cataloging and eventually exhibiting the collection, began.

The exhibit is on display in the Virginia Hand Callaway Discovery Center. It is included with admission to the Gardens ($13 for adults, $6.50 for children ages 6 to 12 and free for children 5 and younger).

Callaway Gardens is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is located in Pine Mountain, about 30 minutes north of Columbus.

For more information, call 800-225-5292 or visit www.callawaygardens.com.

Restaurant review

Fuji Japanese Steakhouse

Rachel Houston

Fuji Japanese Steakhouse on Veterans Parkway offers sushi, hibachi grills and a bar.

THE BAYONET

Rachel Houston

The look of the new Fuji Japanese Steakhouse may deceive you. It's in a quiet shopping center on Veterans Parkway away from the hustle and bustle of the main shopping strip, but the food at Fuji draws a crowd.

The restaurant has sushi, hibachi grills — the ones where they cook in front of you — and a bar.

On your way in or out the door, stop and see the Koi fish that swim around the tree inside the restaurant (yes, there's a tree inside the restaurant).

The menu has a surprisingly large selection of hibachi dishes, sushi and other Japanese cuisine. If you are eating hibachi, you're sure to get the traditional show complete with a large, unexpected burst of fire.

On my most recent trip to the restaurant, which is my favorite Japanese restaurant in Columbus, I tried the hibachi steak. Usually I get sushi, but I decided to break the trend. And I'm glad I did. The steak was cooked perfectly, and the fried rice was outstanding.

The hibachi menu is a little pricey, as they all tend to be, but you certainly get your money's worth. The meal includes salad, soup, rice, veggies, shrimp and a main entrée.

If you're not eating from the hibachi grill, you'll sit at a table in the spacious dining room.

If you're fearful about trying sushi — I understand. I've been there.

Then one day my dad had some and I just decided to give it a try. I put it in my mouth, chewed quickly and swallowed. And it tasted good, although I ate it so fast that I didn't get a good taste.

So then I went and tried it again with a friend who loves it, and I began to love it. If you've got a friend who's big into sushi, go try it with him or her. It's always more fun to try something new with a person who's into it.

The Alaskan roll at Fuji is my favorite. It has salmon, cucumber and avocado. There are many different varieties of sushi to try. And anyone who still hasn't given in to trying the sushi with raw fish can try a California roll, which has cooked crabmeat and absolutely no raw fish.

Fuji is open for lunch and dinner and is located at 6499 Veterans Parkway in the shopping center at the intersection of Veterans and Whittlesey Road.

Aflac gives $1 million to NIF

The National Infantry Foundation received $1 million from Aflac to help complete the new National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center at Heritage Park.

"The Aflac Foundation is proud to support the building of the ... museum as a tribute to Soldiers who have given so much for our country," said Kathelen Amos, president of the Aflac Foundation, in a press release earlier this week.

The gift puts the National Infantry Foundation about $24 million shy of the $85 million needed to complete the museum and park, which will include a parade field, memorial walk of honor, World War II Company Street and a 3-D Imax Theater.

Construction on the new museum, located on the 200-acre strip of land sandwiched between Lumpkin Road in Columbus and Benning Boulevard, began in January.

NIF officials say it will likely be completed next year.

Just one week shy of their first wedding anniversary, Staff Sgt. William and Chasity Wisner will say goodbye Saturday as he heads to Iraq with the 3rd Squadron, 1st Cavalry Regiment.

The Wisners celebrated their March 18 anniversary early. They renewed their wedding vows last week, along with more than 20 other couples from the squadron, in a candlelit ceremony at The Infantry Center Chapel.

Gates discusses Walter Reed

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Jim Garamone

WASHINGTON — The military will not wait to hear the results of many boards examining military and veterans medical care, but will move out to correct the situation, Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates said during a news roundtable Wednesday.

Marine Gen. Peter Pace, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said he felt sick when he heard of the conditions at an outpatient facility at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

He vowed to look at hospitals in totality in the future.

An independent review group on Walter Reed that Gates appointed has begun its work and will report back its initial findings in early April, the secretary said.

"This deadline is relatively short for a reason: to make sure we identify additional flaws in the system and get on with fixing them as fast as possible," Gates said.

The secretary has ordered acting Army Secretary Pete Geren to report to him about the service's action plan to fix the outpatient situation at Walter Reed.

"I will expect progress reports on this

Building the Maneuver Center team

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

Creating the Maneuver Center of Excellence at Fort Benning is truly a team effort and one which requires a monumental commitment to maintain the strength of the Infantry, Armor and Cavalry so our Soldiers continue to win on the battlefield.

Our team includes many organizations involved in preparing Fort Benning to receive the personnel and mission requirements that are transitioning from Fort Knox.

During the past year we have worked with our Armor counterparts there to integrate the many actions required to stand-up the Maneuver Center. The development of the MCOE includes an unprecedented amount of construction including facilities and ranges while sustaining the environment for generations to come. It's a big mission and we are the team which can do it.

About a year ago TRADOC Commander Gen.

William S. Wallace, approved the organizational concept for the MCOE and directed Maj. Gen. Robert Williams (chief of Armor) and me to show him what the "right" organizational manning for the Maneuver Center should look like. This last year we developed the MCOE manning plan while including every stakeholder from Fort Knox and Fort Benning in the process. During this process, we protected our critical command structure to ensure the leadership and oversight necessary for the training mission is maintained while still providing significant savings to be returned to the operational Army. Gen. Wallace commended the work and is carrying this model forward for Department of the Army approval.

The training teams here and at Fort Knox have already developed and successfully implemented some common programs of instruction for Infantry, Armor and Cavalry leaders. The Maneuver Captain's Career Course and the Maneuver Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer's Course have been conducted at both posts already. We are also developing an Army Reconnaissance Course to merge the Scout Leader's Course and the Reconnaissance and Surveillance Leader's Course. We have many opportunities to enhance our training while meeting the needs of our Army, and these are a few examples of where combined maneuver courses will bring value to our Soldiers and leaders.

The transformation of Fort Benning into the MCOE requires some very impressive facilities construction to support the Armor School's relocation. Centered on the Harmony Church area where four brigades will be headquartered and billeted, our Directorate of Public Works, along with the Army Corps of Engineers and Fort Knox subject matter experts, are planning for all of the associated training and maintenance facilities to support the Armor School. We completed a Harmony Church Summit to integrate construction projects into a cohesive footprint. This weeklong event included representatives from the Georgia Department of Transportation, private utilities partners from the local community, AAFES, MWR and others. Both Maj. Gen. Williams and I reviewed the resulting proposed area development plan and we are moving forward to create this world-class community, which will ultimately transform the Fort Benning landscape.

Throughout the MCOE development process we are taking careful measure of the potential impact any change could have on the environment. Our Environmental Management team is working with the Army Corps of Engineers, state and federal environmental regulation agencies, and numerous private organizations to assess the potential impact of the transformation and to map out a plan which sustains Fort Benning for future generations.

Last month, we hosted a visit by senior environmental officials from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Army for Environment, Safety, and Occupational Health to enlist their continued support as we move forward. As stewards of the environment, we will ensure all environmental compliance and mitigation measures are met before any construction begins.

During the next few years, Fort Benning will undergo a historic transformation as we become the Maneuver Center of Excellence. Change of this magnitude requires teamwork, communication and coordination at every level to get the kind of results which we can all be proud of. Together we will create a Maneuver Center of Excellence which will meet the mission and training requirements of the future force. Follow Me!

3rd BCT Soldiers leave for Iraq

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

As you read this, there is a plane full of 3rd Brigade Combat Team Soldiers headed to Kuwait and then Iraq.

This is just one of several that left this week, but it has a big significance to me. On board is my son, Spc. Jesse Britton Evans. He is named in honor of my grandfather, Jesse Britton Devine, who served as a machine gunner during WWI, "the war to end all wars."

My father served in the U.S. Air Force during the Korean War, and I first entered the Army in 1972 during the Vietnam War.

My other son, Kyle, refers to military service as the family business. He has chosen not to join his brother and me in this business, and I respect that decision. In all honesty, I can say that I am relieved by his choice. Having one child in harm's way is difficult enough; I cannot imagine having to worry about two.

Wednesday night, Jesse and I went out and had a good meal and talked about all kinds of things, trivial and serious, and I made an extra effort not to be too Dad-like. I didn't want his last memory of me talking in my lecture mode.

After I left him on Kelley Hill, all I could think of him as was my first born child. He was the little baby boy who was placed in my arms just after he was born so many years ago. I remembered the mischievous toddler who was always into something after he took his first steps, the brown-haired little boy who always yelled "Faster, Daddy" when I took him for rides on my motorcycle, and the stubborn teenager who seemed to be at odds with me over just about everything.

Jesse returned from his first combat deployment with the 101st Airborne Division last September and re-enlisted to come to Fort Benning, knowing that he would deploy back to Iraq.

He and his fellow Soldiers will be manning a gun truck to provide security for convoys on the streets of Iraq.

I have met several of the Soldiers he will be serving with. His platoon sergeant is a combat veteran with two previous tours to Iraq. I have full confidence in him as a leader.

Jesse has the best training and equipment that the Army can provide. He has the best logistical support of any Soldier in the history of our Army. If he is injured, he will receive the best medical care and will be evacuated to the finest hospitals if necessary. I have a good feeling about that.

His fellow Soldiers see a comrade in arms they must depend on, as he must depend on them. His leaders see a trained Soldier who is there to help accomplish the missions, to conduct combat operations in a hostile environment. I have a good feeling about that.

Dude, where are your manners?

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Hey dude, pipe down.

You, whoever you are, made a spectacle of yourself earlier this week, when you raised an early-morning ruckus on the street outside my friend's window. You woke her up cussing and carrying on during PT, which means:

- You're not running hard enough if you can bellow a string of vulgarities without pausing to catch your breath.
- You lack something my grandma called couth. Look it up.
- You're obviously ignorant of the post policy that says you must be quiet if you do PT in post neighborhoods.

d) Probably all of the above.

Listen up, and pass this on to your friends — post residents are mighty protective of their space, their children and their beauty sleep. As the weather gets warmer, we like to leave the windows open. We like to enjoy the sounds of birds chirping in the early morning. We like to sleep till noon. Just kidding.

We definitely don't want to be jarred out of bed the way my friend was, by some foul tirade between you and your buddies. We don't want our children exposed to that kind of language or that kind of behavior. And we don't want to hear your entire repertoire of ugly adjectives.

While I've got your ear, I've been wanting to talk to you about that — your language, I mean. Your language, specifically, not just the early morning wake-up call.

I hate to harp on, but really, there is a post policy against this kind of vulgarity. Really. You're not supposed to curse or cuss or carry on in such a way as to discredit your fellow Soldiers and embarrass your country. Your potty mouth is an embarrassment.

I once heard a Soldier say there's a time and place for foul language. It gives you some sort of street credibility with your buddies. Fine. I don't buy it, but I'm not going to argue the point, because I really don't care how you talk when you're hanging with your friends. I care how you talk in front of women and children, me and mine in particular.

Quit cussing at the PX. Quit cussing at the post theater. Quit cussing at the ball field. And for heaven's sake, quit cussing before dawn on a residential street on Main Post.

Please, pipe down, dude.

Committee meets to gather Walter Reed facts

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Fred W. Baker III

WASHINGTON — Army leaders are committed to improving the service's health care systems for wounded service members and their families, top officers told the national security subcommittee of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform Monday.

The committee held a meeting at Walter Reed Army Medical Center to gather facts behind problems reported that have tarnished the reputation of the Army's top medical facility.

Part of the problem is that policies and rules governing many of the health care systems have not been updated for as many as 50 years and have been put to the test by the last five years of war, Vice Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Richard A. Cody said.

"Soldiers and staff are faced with the confusing and frequently demoralizing task of sifting through too much information in too many interdependent decisions and bureaucracies," Cody testified. Cody said top officials are reviewing the reported problems and already have identified some personnel problems that need to be fixed.

"Our counselors and case managers are overworked, and they do not receive enough training," he said.

"We do not adequately communicate necessary information, and our administrative processes are needlessly cumbersome and, quite frankly, take too long."

Cody also cited problems that are being fixed in the medical holding units where so many of the outpatient problems have been reported in recent weeks.

"Our medical holding units are not manned to the proper level, and we do not assign leaders who can ensure proper accountability, proper discipline and well-being of our wounded Soldiers ... and our facilities are not maintained to a standard that we know is right," Cody said.

Many problems now are being corrected, Cody said, but some will require congressional support. He pledged to work with the secretary of defense to report back to the committee changes that require congressional support.

"We will do what is right for our Soldiers and our families. They can be assured that the Army leadership is committed and dedicated to ensuring that their quality of life and the quality of their medical care is equal to the quality of their service and their great sacrifice," Cody said.

Dressed in a decorated Army blue uniform, with a patch over his left eye, an emotional Staff Sgt. John Daniel Shannon told the subcommittee Tuesday that he just wants to leave the center's outpatient system. He called his own experience a two-year pattern of neglect, bureaucracy and lack of patient advocacy. An injured Iraq war veteran, Shannon's account kicked off nearly five hours of testimony, which included wounded service members, family members and top ranking Army officials.

The wife of a wounded Army Soldier told committee members that her husband's first case manager at the center "treated him like a dog" at times and that the system was set up to protect the interests of the Army.

"We need to turn it around. We need to fight for the Soldier," said Annette McLeod, the wife of South Carolina Army National Guard's Cpl. Wendell McLeod. He suffered brain and back injuries while serving in Iraq after being hit by the door of a moving semi-truck.

Subcommittee chairman John Tierney opened the hearings saying that the problems recently aired in the news media are not new, but that complaints of "bureaucratic indifference" have been heard for several years. Tierney conceded, though, that the medical staff at Walter Reed is dedicated and professional. Tierney said he thought the problems stemmed from "institutional indifference, not individual commitment."

Most of the testimony centered on a broken, bureaucratic personnel system and overworked and under-trained caseworkers with other woven-in themes of pay problems, administrative delays and incompatible medical computer systems.

Coming to light for the first time during the testimony was the possible impact of the Base Realignment and Closure process and the recent conversion of government-provided services to contracted services at the hospital. Army officials testified that skilled civil service employees worried about losing their jobs have left the center, at times dropping staffing amounts by nearly half.

Officials testified they've had difficulty recruiting to fill the positions because the center is scheduled to merge with the National Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Md., in 2011. In addition, many of the services were moving to contractor-provided services. Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker said he was "extraordinarily angry and embarrassed that we would have a Building 18," referring to the building cited in Washington Post reports on mold- and rodent-infested living conditions.

He said he supported the firing of Army Maj. Gen. George W. Weightman, the medical center's former commander.

Schoomaker's brother, Army Maj. Gen. Eric B. Schoomaker, will become the commanding general of the North Atlantic Regional Medical Command and the medical center, the Army announced March 2.

Army Spc. Jeremy Duncan testified before the committee that the living conditions varied widely among outpatient Soldiers, depending on the building assigned.

"Building 18 was like the ghetto," he said, but it had television and video games. He said he has now been moved to Abrams Hall (Building 14), which is nicer, but doesn't have a television and video games. In the past few weeks, progress has been made in the living conditions of Soldiers, Duncan said.

"They are trying to make it better. I will give them that. It's going to take them a while to do that," he said.

Kiley testified that all but six Soldiers have been moved out of Building 18. It is planned for a complete renovation, he said. The command is overhauling its system to add case managers, improve communication and speed up the paperwork process, he said.

In addition, officials are reviewing both of the complex and lengthy medical and physical evaluation board processes. Schoomaker was asked bluntly by a committee member, "How do we know it's going to change?"

"Because we're going to change it," Schoomaker said. Army Secretary Francis J. Harvey resigned Friday in light of the problems at the center. Weightman was relieved of command March 1.

Hospital: Programs, facilities, procedures to be reviewed

every two weeks," he said.

Gates said he had visited with former Kansas Sen. Robert Dole and former Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala following a visit to the White House earlier in the day. He thanked them for taking on the job of evaluating the "full continuum of care" that service members and veterans receive. Tuesday President Bush named Dole and Shalala to head the President's Commission on Care for America's Returning Wounded Warriors.

Gates also has tasked David S. C. Chu, the defense undersecretary for personnel and readiness, and Dr. William Winkenwerder, the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, to conduct a comprehensive review of all medical care programs, facilities and procedures of all services to ensure the department is providing service members the standard of care they deserve.

"I have told them that resources will not be an issue," he said.

Gates said that when he first heard of the conditions at Walter Reed — a hospital considered "the jewel in the crown" of military medical facilities — he immediately thought of what conditions were like at other facilities. He said he knew the department needed to see what conditions were like throughout the services and in the handoff between DoD care and that from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

"That's why I am so supportive of ... the Dole-Shalala effort that looks at this process end to end ... from the time a Soldier is wounded on the battlefield until he or she is either returned to service or is discharged and ends up at their local VA hospital or back at home," he said.

It's important that the process works from service members' standpoint and is not simply a bureaucratic process, and it's important that "the quality of attention and care through that whole spectrum is what it should be," he said. "And I'm concerned that it's not."

Gates said that after fighting the war itself, "fixing the problems associated with care for our wounded must be our highest priority."

Need for more MPs in Iraq 'was always anticipated,' Petraeus says

Gates says additional 2,200 MPs will deploy to help suppress insurgent hotspots

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

Gerry J. Gilmore

WASHINGTON — The possibility of sending a contingent of military police to Iraq to augment the more than 21,500 American combat troops already earmarked for deployment was foreseen by military planners, the top U.S. officer in Iraq said Thursday.

"What has been asked for subsequent to the combat formations are the typical enablers that go with the combat formations," Army Gen. David H. Petraeus, commander of Multinational Force Iraq, told reporters. Petraeus assumed command Feb. 10.

The possibility that U.S. commanders in Iraq might "request added support troops such as MPs, aviation and intelligence assets, and headquarters staff "was always anticipated" during military planning sessions, Petraeus said.

Secretary of Defense Robert M. Gates announced Wednesday that an additional 2,200 military police would be deployed to Iraq to assist in U.S.-Iraqi efforts to suppress hotspots of insurgent and sectarian violence in Baghdad and western parts of the country.

The MPs will arrive in Iraq over the next few months and will be assigned to duties at detention centers, to provide route security for convoys and to mentor Iraqi police, Petraeus said.

Additionally, the Republic of Georgia has volunteered to send an additional combat brigade, he said, and Australia will contribute 70 seasoned military trainers.

Earlier this year, President Bush directed the deployment of more than 21,500 additional U.S. Soldiers and Marines to Baghdad and restive areas of western Iraq to deter sectarian and insurgent violence that has occurred since the Feb. 22, 2006, bombing of a holy mosque in the Iraqi city of Samarra.

Meanwhile, the build up of U.S. and Iraqi security forces continues, Petraeus said, noting that the last of the 21,500 Soldiers and Marines constituting the "surge" directed by the president should be in Iraq by early June.

Two of the five U.S. Army combat brigades participating in the surge are now in Baghdad, Petraeus said.

Harvey resigns in wake of Walter Reed shortfalls

Army secretary steps down after hospital commander fired

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Kathleen T. Rhem

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates announced Friday that he has accepted the resignation of Army Secretary Francis J. Harvey in light of allegations of shortfalls in care of outpatients at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

Published reports in February shed light on shortcomings in outpatient care for troops wounded in Iraq and Afghanistan. Army officials announced March 1 that the hospital commander, Maj. Gen. George W. Weightman, had been relieved of duty.

In announcing that Harvey had resigned, Gates expressed disappointment that Army leaders were not taking the situation seriously enough.

"I am disappointed that some in the Army have not adequately appreciated the seriousness of the situation pertaining to outpatient care at Walter Reed," he said in a brief statement at the Pentagon.

"Some have shown too much defensiveness and have not shown enough focus on digging into and addressing the problems."

He also said he is concerned that some Army leaders hadn't communicated well enough that caring for wounded troops is their top priority.

"Addressing (troops' and their families') concerns about the quality of their outpatient experience is critically important," Gates said.

"Our wounded Soldiers and their families have sacrificed much, and they deserve the best we can offer."

In contrast to his criticism of Army leaders, Gates praised the medical staff at Walter Reed for "their professionalism and dedication to providing caring treatment."

"From what I have learned, the problems at Walter Reed appear to be problems of leadership," he said. "The Walter Reed doctors, nurses and other staff are among the best and the most caring in the world. They deserve our continued deepest thanks and strongest support."

Harvey had been secretary of the Army since Nov. 19, 2004. Gates announced that Undersecretary of the Army Pete Geren will serve as acting secretary until a new secretary is in place. Geren served as acting secretary of the Air Force from July to November 2005.

Army officials announced after Gates' news conference that Maj. Gen. Eric R. Schoomaker will be the new commander of Walter Reed Army Medical Center and North Atlantic Regional Medical Command.

Schoomaker currently is the commanding general of the U.S. Army Medical Research and Materiel Command at Fort Detrick, Md.

Officer convicted of inappropriate relationship with female subordinate

OFFICE OF THE STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE

Capt. Wilfredo Ramos, the former company commander of C Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, was convicted by a panel of seven officers Feb. 7 for charges related to an inappropriate relationship with his female subordinate, Sgt. Monica Sutton.

Specific charges included violating a no-contact order given by his battalion commander to stop seeing Sutton, assaulting Sutton's husband, another Soldier, and obstruction of justice.

Ramos pleaded not guilty.

The improper relationship initially came to light when Ramos' former wife informed post officials that she suspected an inappropriate relationship.

The commander directed the two Soldiers to have no contact with each other, but phone records indicate the two called each other more than 1,000 times in violation of the order.

Additionally, on April 13, while the no-contact order was still in effect, Sutton's husband videotaped his wife meeting Ramos in violation of the no contact order. A fight ensued between Ramos and Sutton's husband over possession of the camera, and Ramos directed Sutton to take the video camera, destroy the film and leave.

Ramos assaulted Sutton's husband as the husband attempted to retrieve the camera.

A panel of officers sentenced Ramos to a dismissal, which is equivalent to a dishonorable discharge and 35 days confinement.

Sutton faced court-martial charges as a result of her offenses. The command granted her request for an administrative discharge in lieu of court-martial and she will be discharged.

Army Regulation 600-20 forbids officers from having certain personal relationships with enlisted Soldiers, including dating.

Virtual testing grounds mirror real-life combat zones

Soldiers test reflexes in close range combat

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Annette Fournier

The Soldiers Battle Lab completed a study March 2 that pitted Soldiers against simulated enemies to test troops' reaction times. The Close Range Quick Reaction Engagement experiment measured how quickly a typical Soldier notices and reacts to an enemy in close range.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the 11th Infantry Regiment and EXFOR troops took part in the experiment, which was managed by the SBL's Virtual Constructive Simulation Division, said Deuce Douglass, a project lead for the experiment.

Soldiers trained to use the system Feb. 26 and began the test course the following day.

The course was based on the map of a village somewhere in the world, which was duplicated in the simulation, Douglass said. The designers wanted the simulated village to be as realistic as possible, and added multi-story buildings, debris, bystanders and vehicles.

All the simulations are integrated into one master system, managed at a control center.

The control center operators can see exactly what the Soldier sees, watch the Soldier's simulation from a variety of angles, or see a map display of the entire village showing the location of each Soldier and each enemy.

During the test runs, the Soldiers wore all the gear they'd use in combat while facing a life-size video screen displaying the simulated scene. Soldiers tested their skills in five firing lanes, in village streets, inside buildings and in a wilderness area on the village's perimeter. In each lane, 10 enemies attacked the Soldier from close range.

The test troops ran the lanes multiple times, but the enemies appeared in different locations each time.

Sensors attached to the Soldier's body and equipment measured speed and muscle movement. The sensors recorded the reflexes and amount of time it took for a Soldier to react after he heard or saw an enemy in close range.

Past experiments have measured reaction times, but this experiment is focused specifically on close range combat.

The information collected was stored in a database which will be sent to the TRADOC Analysis Center in Monterey, Calif. Originally, the project leaders planned for the Soldiers to complete each lane twice, but the runs went better than planners expected, said Tom Siefken, project lead.

"We always plan for things to not go as well as we hope," he said.

"We're always figuring on Murphy's (Law) showing up. It went better than I had hoped and we got twice the amount of data we were anticipating," he said.

Unlike many of its experiments, the Soldier Battle Lab is conducting only the testing, not the analysis for this project, Douglass said. The TRAC analysts in Monterey will examine the data and use it to improve future simulations, future military technology and other projects. Data like this helps show the capabilities and functions of troops, training, weapons and equipment in close combat, Douglass said.

The tests hinted at trends in troops' reaction, Douglass said. Soldiers' reaction times differ based on an enemy's distance, from what position a Soldier shoots, from what angle an enemy attacks or what part of the body an enemy reveals while firing. The test troops were mostly Infantrymen ranging from privates to staff sergeants. Having a diverse test group may help Monterey TRAC researchers to correlate trends with experience, age or training, Siefken said.

Simulations save money on ammunition and allow for weapons training rain or shine, Siefken said. It also gives young troops practical experience in which they can learn from mistakes and go through a multitude of lanes and scenarios.

"It's easier to conduct tests here with computer simulations, then to bring a bunch of Soldiers out to the woods," Douglass said.

"It's almost like a video game, but we have an aversion to calling this a game. This is serious business," Douglass said.

Soldiers wear all the gear they'd use in combat while facing the life-size video screen.

WHAT'S HAPPENING around Post

TROOPS TO TEACHERS

Bill Kirkland, program manager for the Georgia Troops to Teachers Program and Georgia Spouse to Teachers Program will be available to answer questions at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Post Education Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

The Georgia Troops to Teachers Program provides eligible service members up to $10,000 for becoming public school teachers. Under the Spouse to Teachers Program, eligible military spouses may be reimbursed for the cost of state-required certification tests up to a total of $600.

Kirkland will conduct a one-hour briefing that will include an overview of teacher certification programs, registration procedures and Georgia teacher certification options.

For more information, call Kirkland at 404-232-2608.

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH LUNCHEON

The Equal Opportunity Office will host a luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday at the Benning Club. This year's theme is "Generations of Women Moving History Forward."

For tickets, contact your unit's EO advisor or call the main office at 706-545-6665.

RIVERWALK CLOSURE

The Fort Benning Riverwalk between the access control point and 10th Mountain Division Road (about one half-mile) is closed through March 19.

This closure is necessary for Columbus Water Works to install new underground sewer lines.

BLOOD DRIVE

Martin Army Community Hospital Armed Services Blood Program and the Camp Memorial Blood Center, Fort Knox, will conduct a blood drive from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. March 20 in Classroom 9, Infantry Hall.

For more information, call 706-544-1241.

TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with a valid ID card. Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible to ensure a fast refund.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: a valid ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater. Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Thursday.

The Tax Center will be closed Monday and March 19 so volunteers can help Soldiers in training prepare their taxes.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

ARMY SEEKS RECOMMENDATIONS

The Army is accepting design ideas through March 31 for the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and motto for the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

Requirements include a clear, hand-drawn or electronic sketch of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and a short, succinct motto. The motto must be written in English and is limited to 26 characters (letters and spaces). All submissions must include name, phone number, e-mail address and mailing address of the individual submitting the designs and motto.

Submissions can be sent via e-mail to MCOE_Insignia_Suggestions@knox.army.mil or Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATSH-ATH, Room 451, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000.

CID LOOKOUT

"CID Lookout" is a U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command initiative to partner with the Army community by providing a conduit for members of the Army family, to help prevent, reduce and report felony-level crime. The USACIDC, commonly known as CID, is an independent criminal investigative organization that investigates serious, felony-level crime such as murder, rape, sexual assault, robbery, arson, fraud and cyber crime or intrusions into the Army networks.

For more information on CID or to report a felony-level crime or provide information concerning a crime, contact your local CID office or the military police, or visit www.cid.army.mil.

AUSA JOB FAIR

AUSA will conduct a job fair from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 17 in Freedom Hall, Building 2411.

Soldier awarded Medal of Honor

Retired Army Lt. Col. Bruce Crandall received the Medal of Honor for heroism in Vietnam Feb. 26 from President George W. Bush.

The next day he was inducted into the Pentagon Hall of Heroes.

Crandall was a major commanding A Company, 229th Assault Helicopter Battalion, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), transporting troops in Landing Zone X-ray, when the ground troops came under attack from the North Vietnamese Army.

Crandall and Capt. Ed Freeman spent more than 14 hours in the air, flying 70 wounded men to safety.

EIB

The Expert Infantryman Badge, or EIB, is the Army's non-combat Infantryman's mark of a professional and not to be confused with the Combat Infantryman Badge (CIB) which is awarded for participation in Infantry ground combat. The Expert Infantryman Badge is presented for completion of an approved Army course of testing.

The EIB was first created in October 1943. It is awarded to U.S. Army personnel who hold Infantry or Special Forces military occupational specialties. To be awarded the EIB, the Soldier must complete a testing phase which is the culmination of weeks of training, leading to a final evaluation period.

The EIB test is administered on the average once per year with pass rates averaging no more than 50 percent, depending on the unit conducting testing. Personnel who have been awarded both the EIB and the CIB are not authorized to wear both decorations simultaneously. In such cases, the CIB has precedence according to Army Regulation 670-1.

Earning the mark of a professional

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles Evans

This week, Infantry Soldiers from Fort Benning and other installations tested their skills at Burroughs Range in hopes of obtaining the coveted Expert Infantryman Badge.

"The EIB test measures the candidate's ability to perform to standards of excellence in a broad spectrum of critical Infantry skills," said Command Sgt. Maj. Joe Leggette, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The Infantry Soldiers are tested in 45 subjects and must receive a go in all subjects with retests allowed in only two subjects. If a Soldier receives more than two no go's he is eliminated from the testing.

Two new events this year were the Army Physical Fitness Test and a 12 mile road march. In order to get a go on the APFT, the Soldier had to make 75 percent in each event. The road march had to be completed in three hours carrying a 35 pound ruck sack.

Sgt. 1st Class Scott Ross was in charge of the map reading section of the event. There, he said, candidates had to identify eight terrain features in eight minutes, and set up the "Pluggin'" Global Positioning System receiver in three minutes.

Capt. Joseph Jaskolski came from the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., to compete.

"This is great training. Being awarded the EIB shows that you took the time to professionally develop yourself. It's a stamp of approval from the Infantry Branch," he said.

Several of the tests were designed to assess the Soldiers' competence in handling a variety of weapons.

Sgt. Spencer Young was evaluating Soldiers at the .50 caliber machine gun lane. The task there, he said, was to load, fire, correct a malfunction, unload and clear the M-2 heavy machine gun.

Staff Sgt. Terrence Staples was waiting his turn to test on the weapon.

"The training is good, but I would like to see the testing done twice a year," he said. "This would give more Soldiers a chance to participate — to prove we are good at our jobs."

One of the more difficult events is the grenade throw.

"We have a lot of no go's here," Staff Sgt. Joe Correa explained. "A lot of guys just don't have the experience of throwing baseballs or other type objects. It really takes a lot of practice."

Spc. James Stout was a go at the grenade event, easily dropping a practice grenade into a simulated enemy fighting position.

"This training helps to maintain your edge. You also have to be proficient to teach other Soldiers these skills. They have to know that you know what you are doing," Stout said.

When the testing started, there were 302 candidates. By the time it was over, the attrition rate exceeded 50 percent.

"The purpose of the EIB is to recognize outstanding Infantry Soldiers who demonstrate a high degree of professional skill, expertise and excellence," Leggette said.

Sgt. Desmond McClellan rushes forward to position himself prior to throwing a grenade into a simulated enemy fighting position. Good positioning greatly increases the chances that a properly thrown grenade will hit its mark.

Sgt. Spencer Young evaluates Staff Sgt. Terrence Young at the M-2 .50 caliber machine gun station. Candidates must correctly load, fire, correct a malfunction, unload and clear the weapon, to timed standards, in order to receive a go.

Army Emergency Relief campaign gets underway

Since its creation in 1942, program has helped more than 3 million people

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

The Army Emergency Relief program kicked off its annual campaign March 1 in an effort to raise money for grants and loans in times of emergency and for scholarships.

"This is the one program where a Soldier helps another Soldier directly," said Col. David Ling, chief of staff on Fort Benning.

AER's primary mission is to provide financial assistance to Soldiers and their families in a valid emergency.

The program's secondary mission is to help families with education costs through their stateside and overseas spouse education assistance programs and the Maj. Gen. James Ursano Scholarship fund.

Soldiers and their spouses can turn to AER in a crisis for an interest-free loan or a grant, which is a gift of funds, and the Soldiers' families can receive scholarships for education.

AER provides financial assistance to families who have lost a Soldier, said Lionel Grant, AER officer, but the program also does a lot more than that.

For instance, a person getting evicted may need help from AER, and the program helps the spouses of retirees, he said.

This area has a lot of retirees and when they pass away, the spouses can receive help from AER.

The program sends casualty assistance officers to help, Grant said.

"It's streamlined assistance for Soldiers," Grant said.

The campaign will run through April 30.

"At Fort Benning we target a specific time of year. We do that so people understand it's Army Emergency Relief time," Ling said.

Rachel Houston
Col. David Ling, chief of staff at Fort Benning, speaks at the Army Emergency Relief campaign kick off March 1. The campaign will run through April 30 in an effort to raise money for AER, which gives grants, loans and scholarships to Soldiers and their families.

This year's goal is to raise $225,000, and since Fort Benning raised $325,000 last year, that goal is very reasonable, Grant said.

Last year's goal was $200,000. The amount that was actually raised is a 79 percent increase over 2005.

At Fort Benning last year, 16,000 Soldiers were supported by the AER, Ling said, and more than $2 million in scholarships, grants or loans was given out.

Since AER was created in 1942, the program has helped more than 3 million people Army-wide and given more than $945 million in financial assistance, according to the AER Web site.

The goal is also to have 100 percent contact, which means that every Soldier on Fort Benning is contacted about the AER campaign.

"You know how important it is," Ling told his audience.

Emergencies can happen at 2 a.m., and Soldiers need a place to turn to for help.

Ling reinforced to importance of giving to AER by talking about the great number of Soldiers who work and train on post.

More than half the Soldiers who enter the Army will be trained on Fort Benning after the Armor School moves here, Ling said. There are 32,000 Soldiers currently assigned to Fort Benning.

"That's why it's important that we contact every Soldier," he said.

Each unit has a designated key person who will contact Soldiers about the campaign.

For more information, go to the AER Web site, www.aerhq.org.

National association ranks DoD child care centers number one in U.S.

DoD topped lists of best standards, best oversight practices

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Margaret McKenzie

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Child care centers run by the Defense Department were named number one in the U.S. for best standards and oversight practices March 1 by the National Association of Child Care Resource and Referral Agencies.

"We are pleased that this independent review of our child-care standards and oversight practices lead the nation," said Leslye A. Arsht, deputy under secretary of defense for the Military Community and Family Policy.

"The report findings reflect a great deal of hard work and commitment to excellence within the Department of Defense," Arsht said.

The military child-care system offers full-day, part-day and hourly child care; part-day preschools; before- and after-school programs for school-age children; and care in family child-care homes.

More than 200,000 children from 4 weeks of age to 13 years are cared for in more than 300 locations at worldwide installations each day.

The NACCRRRA reviewed state child-care center policies and regulations for 50 states, the District of Columbia and DoD.

The DoD child-care system stood alone, Arsht said, ranking number one on top-10 lists for best standards and best oversight practices.

No state appears on both lists.

"This study is yet another affirmation the Military Child Care Program is a model for the nation," and continues to meet the congressional intent that military child care be on the leading edge of child care in America," said M.A. Lucas, director of Child and Youth Services at the Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Command in Alexandria, Va.

DoD achieves high standards of child care through adequate funding, strict oversight, continuous staff development, strong family involvement and a shared commitment to excellence, she added.

"It's not just about having standards. Having standards is the easy part," Lucas said.

"The fact that garrisons implement and enforce these child-care standards consistently and predictably day after day, year after year, at each of our child-development centers is the difficult part.

"We know that the Army is successful in this because 97 percent of our CDCs are nationally accredited by an external professional organization, and these basic standards cited in the NACCRRRA survey provide much of the framework needed for national accreditation," Lucas said.

THE BAYONET

DEPLOYMENT READINESS
ON THE HOMEFRONT

Bumper stickers tell strangers more than you want them to know

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

I've said it before, and I'll say it again, this time to a different audience — the Soldiers who will soon deploy to Iraq or Afghanistan. Or Kuwait or Korea. Or wherever. Please, please, please, lend me your ear.

When you go away, you leave loved ones back here who are proud beyond words that you are fighting for your country. They would shout it from the rooftops if they could, but that's not really practical. So they slap bumper sticker on their cars, stickers that say half of their hearts are in Iraq, the toughest job in the Army is being an Army wife, and please, dear God, bring their Soldiers home safe.

There's absolutely nothing wrong with those sentiments. Not a thing.

They tell the world how much she loves you.

They tell the world she misses her man.

They tell the world she's alone.

And that's the problem. There are way too many women driving around town announcing their vulnerability to every joker who falls into traffic behind them.

I'm not a fan of vanity plates that reveal the age, availability or sex of the driver. I'm not a fan of stuffed animals stuffed in the rear window or jewelry hanging from the rearview. And I'm not a fan of bumper stickers that put women, and the children they taxi, in danger.

I'm also not a subject matter expert in the field of public safety, but it doesn't take a genius to realize that predators prefer an easy target. If they're stalking a potential victim, they'll pick the little pink Love Bug over the F-250 with the Realtree sticker anytime. Sure, I know the arguments. Just because a car is stuck to an I Love My Soldier sticker doesn't mean there's not a man inside. And your better half is probably a feisty little firecracker. You pity the fool who gets too close. She is, after all, an Army wife. But do you really want her to take any unnecessary chances?

I'm asking you, because she might be blinded by love and pride and even grief when you go. She might tie a yellow ribbon around the tree in your front yard, hang a flag in the window and buy a new bumper sticker. Encourage her not to, won't you? Tell her you appreciate the sentiment, but you'd rather know she's as safe as she can possibly be at all times — when she runs to Wal-Mart at midnight to pick up a tri-board for the kid, when she gets lost on the wrong side of town trying to find the ball field, when the car breaks down on the interstate. It happens. It always happens when you're gone.

Thank you for letting me bend your ear. I hope I'm not sticking my nose where it doesn't belong. You're such a cute couple, such a nice family. We'll do what we can to take care of them while you're away, short of ripping off bumper stickers.

Home security tips for crime prevention

www.hooah4health.com

Crime and fear of crime are big problems that influence how you live. The most important resources we have in reducing these problems are neighbors working together to prevent crime. This makes it harder for crime to happen and reduces the chance for criminals to victimize you and your family members.

Crime is a local problem and can best be deterred through locally organized groups of neighbors and residents within housing areas. Many communities have active neighborhood watch protection programs, where neighbors look out for one another's property and safety. Check with your military police to see if your community has such a program. If so, join! If not, start one. Get together with neighbors on your block, in surrounding streets, or in your building (if in quarters, check with your Community Life officer).

Start by sharing crime prevention information. Exchange work and home telephone numbers with your closest neighbors. Keep close neighbors posted on your daily and vacation schedule and let them know about scheduled repairs or deliveries. If they spot suspicious people or vehicles around your home while you are gone, they will know something is wrong and call the military police or the local police.

If your spouse is deployed, don't advertise it. This alerts everyone that your spouse will be away for an extended period of time. Always lock your doors, even if you are only going out for just a few minutes. In addition to the front and rear doors, keep your garage, cellar, patio, storage areas and maid rooms locked. Periodically check them. If you leave the area, ask a neighbor to collect any mail, flyers and newspapers, so they won't pile up outside your box or in your mailbox. Stop deliveries until you return. Be cautious of door-to-door sales people and other solicitors. Screen repair persons and solicitors to ensure their visit is legitimate.

If possible, conduct the conversation at the door. Be cautious whom you invite into your house. Before you let workers into your home, make sure there is a legitimate need and check their credentials. Call the firm or organization they claim to represent to verify their identities. Remember, disguises and uniforms are easily obtained. If you invite a solicitor in, do not leave him or her alone in a room. If possible, install a peephole in your door; if not, use a window to see who is at the door before opening.

If you suspect or detect someone observing your home and activities or that of your neighbors, report suspicious persons or activities immediately to the military police or local police authorities. Keep telephone numbers of the military police, city police and ambulance next to your phone. Familiarize yourself with unit, community and local emergency reporting procedures, such as: calling for police assistance, obtaining emergency medical help (especially the times to call the proper medical help), 911, etc. Tell your children to never admit being home alone on the telephone or to someone at the door. Teach them to say: "Mom or Dad can't come to the phone and will call back." Teach children how to contact the police or a neighbor; make sure they know their home address and telephone number.

For fires, smell of gas, flooding due to inclement weather or a burst pipe, trees falling on a building and power lines down, call the fire department via 911. The fire department is a backup to the Martin Army Community Hospital EMS team and if you should have a medical emergency and the EMS teams are on other emergencies, it may be a fire truck that arrives at your home.

Fort Benning Family Readiness Program can help put finances on right track

'Throwing stuff unopened into the drawer isn't a good plan,' financial manager says

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

Melissa House

Fort Benning has a program that can help spouses get the family's finances on track during deployments.

The Financial Readiness Program offers Soldiers and family members a number of services designed to help them take charge of their money and make it work for them. Unfortunately, not nearly enough people take advantage of all the FRP has to offer, said program manager Ann Pratcher.

"Most don't come in until they have a real significant event," she said. "They don't come in until (their finances) are ready to be on life support, rather than at the first headache."

Pratcher said it's not that those on "life support" can't be helped, but the sooner people come in, the more good they can do for them.

When Soldiers return from deployment, the average paycheck drops anywhere from $700 to $1,000. If spouses live on that extra money while the Soldier is gone, Pratcher said families will have to make adjustments to add the Soldier back into the budget mix where things like groceries, gas and other transportation expenses are concerned. And when additional debts are accrued, redeployment means a reduced amount of money to deal with the debts, she said.

"If you save, that's great," she said. "But you need to sit down and make a plan. Figure out what you want that money to do for you and prioritize the list."

She cautions people not to go out and spend all the money they save — and especially not to spend it on down payments on large items, because then there are still the monthly payments to deal with.

One of the biggest pitfalls is a new car purchase.

"Buy smart," Pratcher said. "Do your research. Don't finance at the dealership. And if you have some cash, only use a portion of it as a down payment."

And for those who haven't yet filed their taxes, that's something that needs to be dealt with as well.

"Please don't go to the sharks," she said. "The tax assistance office is also available and it's free. There are so many horrible predatory lenders out there."

She's seen Soldiers get charged more than $200 for a $5,000 refund because they weren't willing to wait the seven to 10 days to file electronically and wait for the direct deposit.

"That's almost 400 percent interest," she said. "They're charging you interest on your money, because when you file with them and get it immediately, they're loaning it to you."

If a Soldier, or spouse, has an inkling that the finances are not in good shape, Pratcher said, start by figuring out just how bad it is.

"Throwing stuff unopened into the drawer isn't a good plan," she said, and she's lost count of the number of clients who sit in her office and open their mail for the first time because it was too scary to do alone.

Her clients, or potential clients should do a "reality check" and figure out exactly what it takes to realistically run the household — the monthly bills and expenses like phone, cable, utilities, food, and clothing.

Then, she said, take a look at the debt — car and credit card payments, student loans or other loans.

Those in charge of the finances need to look at what the Soldier's pay is going to be when he or she redeploy and figure out what money will be left to pay debt after taking care of household expenses.

"Where you feel the squeeze is when the debt payment takes more than 20 percent of after-tax pay," Pratcher said. "And people who think they're in good shape are at the 30 to 40 percent. They're already overextended."

A typical client, she said, is carrying a 40 to 60 percent debt load when they come in for help.

"If you're accustomed to spending and having certain things and now you're in a jam, you're going to have to shut yourself down until you get back on track," she said. "Sometimes the cold-turkey approach is the only way." But, for some, she said, admitting you need help is the hardest first step.

The FRP holds intake sessions at 8:15 a.m. every Monday (except holidays) in Building 2625 in Soldiers' Plaza. Pratcher and Patty Herron, a financial counselor, explain the programs available and have clients fill out a financial assessment tool that gives a snapshot of their finances.

After the intake, clients receive a list of documents they'll need to bring with them to their first appointment — all bills, bank statements, contracts, Leave and Earnings Statements, checkbook and check register.

Pratcher said some clients are not necessarily comfortable sharing all that information, but by having all the documents, there's no guessing. And in all her years of experience, she's only had one client come in with financial problems who kept an actual checkbook register.

Those planning to get married, divorced, have a baby, leave the Army, retire, buy a house or a car are the people the FRP can help, Pratcher said.

"If it has to do with money, that's what we do," she said. "We can set up spending plans, plans for those starting to save or invest. We can review any contract — before you sign it."

For information about the Financial Readiness Program, call 706-545-5516.

Web sites give military families access to information, support organizations

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

The following is a list of Web sites we hope you'll find useful. Some were chosen with the families of deployed Soldiers in mind. Others will help children understand and deal with the current world situation. Most will link to other related sites.

- www.militarywives.com provides links to Web sites specifically geared toward Army wives, Reserve wives and the military husband
- militarykidz.com gives kids the "opportunity to meet with other military kids and realize they are not alone." A 100 percent ID card check is in progress
- www.sgtmoms.com offers great tips and resources for the whole family, including links to the Army Community Service, the American Red Cross, Army Family Team Building and Tricare
- www.4militaryfamilies.com offers information on Operation Dear Abby and an opportunity to share your stories of support and encouragement from other military spouses
- militarygirlfriends.8m.com is designed "to support those who don't have ID cards," the girlfriends who put up with long separations just like military wives

- the Military Families Webring, at www.geocities.com/heartland, provides links to a great number of related sites

- presidentialprayerteam.org will link you to the Presidential Prayer Team's Adopt A Soldier in Prayer program. Register your Soldier or commit to pray for another

- www.benning.army.mil, will link you to specific units and provide updates from the unit commander

- ForOurTroops@yahoo.com tells you how you can help support U.S. troops deployed to the Middle East

- www.bluestarmothers.com is designed for the moms of service members in all services. Blue star moms have been creating Service Star Banners since World War I

- www.benningmwr.com — you name it, it's here, from fast food to help with substance abuse and counseling

- www.commissaries.com has information on hours, sales, policies and savings on items for deployed Soldiers.

Tips for coping with separation

WWW.HOOAH4HEALTH.COM

Deployments aren't the happiest of occasions. Separations for practically any length of time are hard on every family member. Deployments are easier on families if they prepare for it and know tricks for getting along during separation.

Write Contrary to popular belief, in the case of separation, "No news can be BAD news." Write regularly and use the correct mailing address. Keep in mind that if your spouse is a long way from home, mail may be slow. To reduce your worries when you haven't heard from your spouse, contact the FRG to catch up on the news.

The actual address for your spouse may be a little different during different deployments. It is essential that you always use your spouse's full name, rank, and unit. The command will give specific mailing instructions during the pre-deployment briefing. Write the address down and keep it with the rest of your pre-deployment documents, and in a place where it is easily accessible. You should have written down your spouse's rank, name, unit and post.

Letters Each child could write individual letters to the deployed parent, and the parent needs to answer those letters. Send schedules of ball games and special events so Mom or Dad can ask how the game or class event went. Mail is an important communication device; use it often and make it cheerful and newsy.

House rules Sit down as a family and discuss house rules before a deployment. The children are more likely to remember the rules as "family" or "house" rules rather than "Mom's" or "Dad's" rules. Maintain the same rules for the children; they need the stability of an unbroken routine.

Videos Record videos. Record bath times, dinner times, etc., and have the kids talk to their parent. Have Dad or Mom record some of the children's favorite stories before deployment. Later on, they can listen or read along.

Gifts Buy or plan presents in advance for special days. Make arrangements with a close friend to deliver gifts on those special days.

Pictures Make a picture book of the parent doing everyday things with the kids, like giving a bath, reading, taking a walk, playing ball, etc. Show the parent in uniform and where he or she works (if possible). If you don't own a camera, borrow a friend's.

Map Acquire a world map; your children can follow Dad or Mom around the world. You can also obtain brochures from a travel agency.

Discipline Deployment of a parent can be difficult for children. Often they are too young to understand why a parent has left. They feel deserted. Parents left behind should maintain continuity of discipline as an important step to maintaining consistency. If a parent relaxes discipline while the spouse is gone, the children will soon learn to resent the Soldier's return.

Special times Meals and bed items are important times for small children while parents are away. It may be a good time to talk about what they are going to say to Dad or Mom on the next tape or in their next letter.

"I Want My Daddy!" One parent gave her child a picture of Daddy in plastic so she could carry it with her everywhere. The child then felt her Dad was with her all the time.

Teenagers Include teenagers in preparations for pre-deployment, deployment, and post-deployment. One parent made his teens feel needed and secure by discussing with them areas in which they could help while Mom was away: shopping, preparing the grocery list, etc. Agree upon chores.

Emergency In case of emergency, we tend to forget many important things. It's important to have telephone numbers of friends or your FRG representative for your children to call in case of an emergency, along with police, fire department, hospital, etc.

Talk about feelings Before leaving, parents should sit down with the family and discuss what is happening. Talk about what will happen when they're gone and what will be different when they return. It is OK to admit you don't want the parent to go.

Emotions We all get down in the dumps sometimes, but what do you do about it? One parent reported that, after the kids were in bed, she listened to music she and her spouse liked. Soon the tears came and she felt much better. She was able to release the pent-up emotions. There are times to cry with your children and times to cry by yourself.

Becoming aware of, and being in touch with, your feelings can give you an inside track as to how your children feel. If it's been two weeks since the last letter and you're feeling a bit blue or irritable, your children may be climbing the walls or withdrawing for the same reason. Talk about how you feel. It won't change the fact that there is no mail, but it may give you the extra patience you need.

Everyone will feel better knowing that it's OK to feel lonely, isolated, sad or frustrated.

Don't overload your children It is imperative that you do not heap too much responsibility on your children, e.g., "It is now your job to take care of Mommy." Let your child be a child and YOU take care of Mommy. You can give them special tasks to do, but do not saddle a child with an adult job.

Pre-deployment means family discussions also

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Once again the news comes that more units will be heading to Iraq, again. Units at Fort Benning seem to be in a revolving door, as one unit returns, another is leaving, while another is in midtour. Someone is always returning, on R&R and deploying and who knows when the cycle will end. Soon, I pray.

The realities of our chosen profession are deployments, dangerous missions and sacrifice. I thank God for each of you — Soldiers, spouses and other family members who support us each day. The Army spouse plays a significant part of who we are as Soldiers and helps us to endure long deployments. One dynamic of pre-deployment is an emotional withdrawal.

Once we know we are going to deploy, it seems we get on the roller coaster of psychological ups and downs. One minute we are having a great time and the next we seem to be down. One minute we are laughing about something, the next we are crying about leaving. I know it is extremely difficult to separate for a year. The days leading up to deployment become difficult. The apprehension about being separated, being left without one another, or being placed in harm's way, increases anxiety in our relationships. We walk around on edge dreading the moment of departure.

It is common to have tensions rise in the family and especially between a husband and a wife. We have fears and concerns and we do not always express them in a healthy manner. Instead of sharing these with our spouses, we often hold them in, failing to clearly communicate our thoughts and feelings to one another. One thing we do is begin to separate emotionally prior to the physical departure. We sort of protect ourselves and are trying to deal with the separation.

One thing I did prior to my deployment was to talk about what would happen if I did not come home. Of course I wanted to return, and no, I did not want to go with a gloom and doom attitude. What I wanted my wife to know is that if I died, I wanted her to move on with her life and to have my blessing. I did not want her to have the burden of thinking she was in some sense betraying me.

One spouse I spoke to also went a step further with her husband — they talked about if he did not come home, down to the funeral arrangements. Unfortunately, he did not come home. She was very thankful they talked about it because she was able to fulfill his final requests without the stress of wondering if she fulfilled his final wishes. These are some things you may want to consider discussing.

Some other things you can do are to discuss the top two, three or five things you as a couple would like to do prior to deployment.

What are the top two or three things you need done around the house prior to departure?

If you have children, what are the top two or three things you want to do as a family?

Husbands, understand your wives are grieving your loss; they want to squeeze as much time out of you prior to your departure. Understand they are very relational and want to know you love and honor them.

Wives, understand your husbands love you but often lack knowledge to express their feelings clearly. Emotional preparation and communication prior to deployment can help ease the transition of separation. Do not allow your fears to cause dissension between you and your spouse prior to deployment.

The Chaplain Family Life Center is here to help with any needs you may have, marital, family or personal. Our caring pastoral staff is here to help with your journey.

CROSSROADS CONTEMPORARY CHAPEL

The CrossRoads Contemporary Service meets at the Follow Me Chapel and sponsors Wednesday night activities for families. A fellowship meeting takes place from 5:30 to 6:15 p.m., followed by Bible study for adults from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m. Team KID (Kids in Discipleship) for children ages 3 through sixth-grade, meets from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m.

Other Wednesday night activities include the Middle School Youth Group (Club Beyond) that meets at 5 p.m., and the High School Club that meets at 6:30 p.m. Infant care is provided from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. in the nursery.

For more information on Club Beyond, call Steve Paquette at 706-545-2359.

For more information on the service, call Chaplain (Maj.) Walt Hoskins at 706-545-4017, Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey at 706-545-9014, Chaplain (Maj.) Joel Funk at 706-545-7513 or Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Beavers at 706-544-6255.

COMBAT STRESS PROCESS GROUP

The Chaplain Family Life Center is conducting meetings to understand combat stress and how it affects marriages, and how couples can work to overcome it.

For more information or to reserve your seat, call 706-545-1760 or stop by the Chaplain Family Life Center at 2606 Soldiers' Plaza.

FINANCES & Budget

- Direct deposits: Open a JOINT checking account, if you do not already have one. Then go to your PAC and complete paperwork that will send your paycheck directly to the bank. "This is the easiest, fastest and safest way to get your money." All married soldiers are strongly recommended to have a joint checking account with their spouses. However, if the soldier is going on a long-term TDY or unaccompanied tour and will need some spending money, consider opening a separate checking account.
- Credit cards: Keep plastic money to a minimum. It gives you a false sense of wealth where there really isn't any money available. Assemble a list of all credit cards, the account numbers, and the numbers to call in case of loss or theft. Mark the list to show which cards are carried by you and your spouse. Both of you should have a list.

• Allotments: This guarantees that a certain amount of money will always be deposited in your account. If you have to take a casual pay for any reason, such as emergency leave, your allotment will still be secure. This may eliminate a surprise shortfall in money to your family.

• Insurance: Review current life insurance coverage to ensure that policies, other than SGLI, do not contain a war clause. This ensures that beneficiaries for all policies are correct and that premiums are covered during the sponsor's absence.

Handling Emergencies

What if a deployed spouse has an emergency?

If your spouse develops a serious problem while deployed, i.e. sickness, injury, etc., the company commander or rear detachment commander, a commander's representative, a member of the family readiness group, or the battalion chaplain will contact you. If someone else calls you to report an injury to your spouse, call the company or rear detachment commander immediately to verify it!

What if you have an emergency?

If you develop a serious problem while your spouse is deployed, contact one of the following immediately: company or rear detachment commander, chaplain or on-call chaplain, or American Red Cross.

An emergency may involve the death, critical illness or injury of an immediate family member (spouse, parents or children.) The military defines an emergency as follows: An EMERGENCY is the DEATH, CRITICAL ILLNESS or INJURY to an IMMEDIATE family. CRITICALLY ILL or INJURED means the possibility of death or permanent disability.

IMMEDIATE family is defined as wife/husband, parents, children, grandparents (who raised you or your spouse in place of parents), or guardian.

The commander may approve other situations, not listed above, as emergency in nature. The commander/rear detachment commander will maintain contact with the unit on a regular basis and can pass urgent messages to the unit for relay to your spouse. If your spouse's presence is necessary and appropriate military professionals (doctor, Red Cross, etc.) confirm it, we will get your deployed spouse home. As soon as the emergency passes, your spouse may return to his/her unit.

Where do I go for help?

The following agencies may be helpful in the event of an emergency or a problem during a deployment:

ARMY COMMUNITY SERVICE

The ACS Center, located in Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza, is a multi-service organization designed to assist Soldiers and family members by providing education and training programs to enhance their ability to deal with day-to-day issues. It is the first place to go to obtain answers to your questions.

The ACS Center reflects the Army tradition of caring for its own and encouraging self-help. For more information, call 706-545-4043 or 706-545-7517.

The ACS Center provides free assistance for Soldiers and their families in the following areas:

- Army Family Team Building
- Information, referral & follow-up
- Deployment materials & briefings
- Emergency food assistance
- Financial counseling
- Exceptional Family Member Program
- Family member employment
- Installation volunteer coordinator
- Volunteer opportunities
- Army Emergency Relief
- Family Advocacy Program
  - Emergency shelter
  - Emergency respite care
  - Parenting classes
  - Couples classes & workshops
  - Victim advocacy

ARMY EMERGENCY RELIEF

AER provides interest-free loans and grants for active duty or retired families who find themselves in unexpected emergency financial situations, such as:

- Initial rent and deposit, or rent to prevent eviction.
- Emergency travel expenses caused by crisis in the family
- Utilities
- Repair of essential POV
- Funeral expenses

In order to provide assistance for your family in your absence, AER must be able to contact you for permission. Since this is not always possible, make sure that your family has a valid power of attorney that gives permission to receive AER assistance.

If you have a rear detachment at Fort Benning, your family should process the AER application through the rear detachment commander. Otherwise, the family may call the ACS Center directly for help at 706-545-2536. For after-hours assistance, contact the staff duty officer at 706-545-2218.

ARMY FAMILY TEAM BUILDING

AFTB is a training program designed to teach individuals and families how to be more independent with minimal outside support when their spouse deploys. There are three AFTB training tracks for family members, military, and civilian employees, which address the issues from an individual and leadership perspective. Topics include preparing one's own family for deployment and building unit support networks and programs. Contact 706-545-5377 for more information.

AMERICAN RED CROSS

The ARC provides 24-hour services to active-duty military personnel and their families. ARC will assist with medical reports, birth notice and emergency notification of your spouse during separation, as well as verification of emergency leave.

For more information, call the Red Cross Armed Forces Emergency Service Center at 1-877-272-7337.

BUDGET & FINANCIAL COUNSELING

Contact the ACS Center for help working out a budget. Remember that some allowances may start or stop due to deployment and mobilization, causing a change in your total take-home pay.

For more information, call 706-545-5485.

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER

The Family Life Center provides opportunities for marriage and family enrichment through counseling and education. Families can gain insights and practical advice on active parenting, coping with stress, managing anger, and many other family issues. The center also provides support groups to spouses of deployed and returning Soldiers and parents of Exceptional Family Members.

For more information, call 706-545-1760 or 706-545-5301.

CHAPLAIN SUPPORT

To reach the post on-call chaplain, call staff duty at 706-545-2218.

Chaplains are available to help with personal problems and counseling. They are a valuable source of information about where to go for help, and should be your first stop for personal counseling.

The Chapel Program is available to serve you. You are invited to join any of the worship services and activities. We encourage you to take care of the spiritual dimension of your life.

DEPLOYMENT AND MOBILIZATION READINESS

The ACS Center provides deployment and mobilization assistance to National Guard, Reservists, civilians, and family members. The ACS Family Advocacy Program training specialist is the central point of contact for all pre-deployment briefings.

Family Readiness Group leaders may also schedule briefings through the FAP training specialist at 706-545-7517 or 706-545-6957.

FAMILY READINESS GROUP COORDINATOR

The FRG coordinator at the ACS Center provides information on family readiness to commanders and FRG leaders, especially during mobilization and deployment.

For more information, call 706-545-3016 or 706-545-4043.

LEGAL ASSISTANCE

Judge adjutant general legal assistance personnel can assist with:

- Debtor & creditor relations
- Contracts
- Landlord & tenant relations
- Notarizations
- Domestic relations
- Wills and powers of attorney
- Immigration and naturalization
- Consumer affairs
- Tax information
- Insurance

Legal assistance personnel cannot assist with:

- Private income-producing activities
- Representation in civilian courts
- Representation concerning prosecution under UCMJ.

Before deploying, you and your spouse need a current will, and your spouse needs a valid power of attorney. Legal assistance can help prepare these documents. Rather than wait until deployment, have the documents prepared now and review them before deployment.

A will is needed to dispose of property and provide for minor children's care in the event of your death or the death of your spouse. Everyone needs a will, even single Soldiers with little or no property and no dependent children.

A power of attorney (POA) is a document with which the Soldier authorizes another person (husband, wife or parent) to act on the Soldier's behalf.

- A general POA grants authority over all of the soldier's affairs.
- Soldiers being deployed may only need a Special POA, which will authorize a person to:
  - Take possession, operate, and/or register a vehicle.
  - Authorize hospitalization or medical care for depended children.
  - Receive and cash pay checks.
  - Apply for and receive AER assistance.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENTS

It is very important that a military spouse has certain documents in his or her possession. Please sit down with your spouse and gather this information and these documents. Keep the following documents in a special container that you can find immediately:

- Marriage certificate
- Birth certificates for all family members
- Shot records (up-to-date) for all family members, including pets
- Citizenship papers, if any
- Adoption papers, if any
- Armed forces ID card for all members 10 years and older.
- Sponsor's Social Security number
- All government and civilian life insurance policies
- Last leave and earnings statement
- Power of attorney (several copies)
- Copies of wills for you and your spouse. It is important that both parties have a will.
- Always have several copies of your sponsor's TDY or PCS orders.
- Addresses and telephone numbers of both families — yours and your spouse's father, mother, children, siblings.

COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH

All active-duty personnel, as well as their family members, are seen at Martin Army Community Hospital for mental health services. Mental health is located on the fourth floor of MACH. The phone number is 706-544-3590.

Preparation helps ease deployment stress

Separations are a fact of military life

WWW.HOOAH4HEALTH.COM

"I didn't get married to live alone."

How many times since learning of your spouse's deployment have you thought these very words?

There are many ways of dealing with military separations. One of the worst is to sit at home brooding at your situation. Yes, it is not fair and it is inevitable.

Separation is a fact of military life and how you deal with it is up to you.

There are some things to keep in mind in order to deal with separation effectively. You may experience a wide range of emotions: feelings like fear, loneliness, anger and even grief.

These feelings may appear one at a time or in a jumble of emotions. The feelings may not appear at all, or may sneak up on you unexpectedly.

If they do appear, remember that these feelings are normal and it's OK. Even when supermom down the street is in control, chances are she is going through the same thing, just reacting and handling the situation differently.

You must accept the separation. Your spouse is being deployed and nothing is going to change the fact. The sooner you learn to accept the situation, the sooner you can prepare for his or her leaving.

Figure out in advance what to do with your time. Do you have any interest in learning a new craft, taking the time to finish that quilt, refinishing the table, learning to paint?

Is there anything you want to do?

Get involved by doing volunteer work (Army Community Service, American Red Cross, Youth Activities, etc.) Not only will this get you out of the house, but it will put you in contact with other adults and the needs of your community. For most volunteer work you undertake, child care is provided. When you've been in the house alone with the kids for several days, stress and tensions magnify and problems arise.

You need to have contact with adults. While it is important to take time out for yourself, this is a great opportunity to spend time with your children. Try to keep the day to day activities "routine," but plan special outings.

Go on picnics, go to the beach or a movie, or plan special outings for "when Daddy or Mommy comes home."

Often, a birthday, anniversary, or another holiday will come during a deployment. One way to make it easier is to plan the celebration for a day before or after your spouse's return.

Remember, it is not the day itself that is all-important, but the meaning and the sentiment the day represents. The memory and love that surrounds the day can and should be celebrated any day of the year.

Keeping lines of communication open is essential. You might be fortunate enough to have phone calls. If this is not possible, try keeping a "journal."

At the end of the day, write down the highlights, any problems that may have occurred, and solutions to the problems.

Try not to make this a grief sheet, but a daily account. Then send it off once a week. Also try sending tapes and pictures, especially if the children are small. Over long deployments, infants become toddlers, personalities develop, and the deployed parent often feels left out of the growing process.

Pictures and tapes can't take the place of actually being there, but they are the second best solution.

While doing these things will not replace your spouse, it will help pass the time. Not only will the days go quicker, but you will have less time to feel your spouse's absence.

FOUR STAGES of separation

Everyone facing separation goes through four basic stages. By becoming aware of these stages, we will be able to better cope. The departure-return cycle includes Protest Against Loss or Departure, Despair, Detachment, and Return Adjustment.

PROTEST against your spouse's departure usually comes a week or two before they are due to leave. Spouses talk of feeling tense, selfish, unbelieving that he/she would actually leave, and guilty about not wanting their spouse to go. There is also frustration with the increased hours your spouse spends getting ready to deploy, your awareness of how many household chores and family business must be handled before they go, and a bona fide physical and mental exhaustion for both spouses.

DESPAIR is the tearful period, which may come even before your spouse departs. Thoughts like "How will I ever live through this without him/her?" are common. There is also difficulty in sleeping due to general fear for one's safety. Even the usual noises in the house seem threatening. Remember that your children will be feeling the same way.

DETACHMENT is the level on which you live for most of the separation. It is a state of relative calm and confidence in handling day-to-day living. If a major crisis occurs, however, you may tend to revert to the states of Despair and Protest.

RETURN ADJUSTMENT is accompanied by awareness of the noises in the house. Many spouses experience an incredible emotional and physical frenzy getting every inch of the house and themselves ready for his/her arrival. The returning spouse arrives exhausted from the final days, eager to come home. The first days of unwinding bring long conversations to attempt to catch up. Finally, he or she spends lots of time sleeping. Also, be prepared for your spouse to spend a few days of "getting the equipment squared away" when he or she gets home.

Are You Ready for Tornadoes or High Winds?

Would you know how to protect your family from destructive high winds, or even a tornado? Your local American Red Cross will always be ready to respond with lifesaving relief and emotional support. But the best way to protect your family and your home is to be prepared before disaster strikes.

- ☑ Prepare a home tornado plan. Pick an uncluttered place in your home with no windows on the lowest floor where family members can gather in the event of high wind conditions. Share this plan with all family members and practice it twice a year.
- ☑ Assemble a disaster supplies kit. Include a first aid kit, essential medications, canned food, can opener, water (one gallon per person per day for at least three days), protective clothing, bedding, battery-operated radio, flashlight, extra batteries and any special-needs items.
- ☑ Protect your home against high winds. Remove diseased or damaged limbs from trees. Move or secure lawn furniture, trash cans and anything else that could become a projectile if picked up by the wind.
- ☑ Consult with professionals about a "safe room." If you are building a new home or remodeling, ask about having a structurally reinforced space constructed for your family's protection during a tornado or high winds.

To learn more about how you can keep your family and your home safer from disasters, please contact your local American Red Cross chapter.

STRESS management

GET UP EARLIER to allow yourself more time before starting the day's work.

PRIORITIZE what is truly critical and pace yourself accordingly.

Before you begin your work day, PAUSE to notice what kind of day it is.

BE REALISTIC and kind to yourself when making your "to do" list.

TAKE LUNCH OR BREAKS away from your work area, avoid eating quickly, and do not talk about work.

Spend your LEISURE TIME with enthusiastic, upbeat friends. Since many of your friends will be in the same position as you, you should be enthusiastic and upbeat with them.

During the day, REST quietly for five minutes or take a brief walk.

SAY "NO" when you need to.

ASK for help when you need it, whether it's time away from the children, a counseling session or a vacation.

FOCUS on immediate or short-term goals that are attainable.

COLLECT APPRECIATION that is due. Accept praise and thank you's.

TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF when you are down and out, play your favorite song, see a movie, give up on the housework for the evening, etc.

ANALYZE YOUR MOODS, energy, and time. Are you down at certain times of the day, week, or month? Plan and prepare.

Use RELAXATION, meditation, music, religion, nature or whatever to re-energize yourself.

PAY ATTENTION to your diet, sleep, exercise and general health.

VOLUNTEER! Helping others is good medicine for soul and spirit to fill your empty days. Call the Red Cross or ACS for volunteer opportunities.

SET A GOAL. Start the project you have been putting off. Begin a self-improvement program. Go back to school. Do something for yourself.

INITIATE, don't wait for the phone to ring. Plan an outing or a special dinner, then call several friends to join you.

TRAVEL. New scenery and change of pace, if only for a day or two, do wonders for the spirit. Plan on taking friends and making a day of it.

GO TO WORK. A full or part time job can provide extra income as well as opportunities for interaction.

JOIN a support group. Whether it be through the Family Readiness Group, your church/chapel/synagogue or work, the support of friends makes the going easier.

Take up a new HOBBY or return to the one you gave up.

DON'T FEEL GUILTY about going out with friends and leaving your children with a sitter. That is the cheapest form of sanity check available.

KEEP A JOURNAL of your thoughts and activities while your spouse is away to help catch up when the unit returns. Be sure to include pictures.

Writing book helped author 'get through it'

A Year of Absence follows
6 Army wives through husbands' deployments

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Melissa House

Jessica Redmond knows what it's like to be in a military family. But she found the experience of being an Army wife far different from being an Air Force child. In her book A Year of Absence, Redmond followed six Army wives whose husbands were assigned to units in the 1st Armored Division in Baumholder, Germany, during what would become a 15-month deployment beginning in April 2003.

Two months into the deployment, Redmond said, she looked around the base, noticing all the women and children — with no men. The women and children were struggling to cope.

"I just thought there was a story there that's not heard in the mainstream media," Redmond said. "It's the story of the people left behind."

Although she was one of those left behind, Redmond is not one of the wives in the book. But, she said, she had selfish reasons for writing it.

"I needed a way to get me through it," she said. "To get me through seeing all the stuff on CNN and FOX."

As an Air Force brat, whose father never deployed, became familiar with deployment and its effects on those left behind, she began capturing what she observed on paper.

Redmond, who studied English, earned a master's degree in international development, and "deployed" to Slovakia with the Peace Corps, wrote about her experiences there, which differed vastly from her husband's in Iraq. Her toughest living condition, she said, involved dealing with the ants in her Peace Corps apartment.

She knew there was a story, but didn't know if she'd have enough material for a book, thinking the stories of the one officer's wife and five enlisted Soldiers' wives she followed might end up as a series of articles somewhere. She pressed on with the idea for the book, in part, because she wanted women to feel validated.

"I talked to so many women who felt guilty about not having done (the deployment) 'perfectly,'" she said.

"They talked about the mistakes they made, like overreacting."

Redmond found the women she met all had different ways of getting through the deployment, be it through faith, family, friends or isolation.

"If it got you through it intact," she said, "then you did it right for you, and that's OK."

She also wanted to write the stories of comfort and community that grew out of an experience shared by "so many others who survived it."

The book does deal with a casualty — a close friend of one of the wives in the book. That experience, Redmond said, never gets easier.

"I heard a (National Public Radio) story about a casualty and started crying," she said. "You never get over it."

She did a lot of crying during the nine months she spent writing the book.

"My husband would come home and I'd be crying at the computer," she said. "And he knew what chapters they were."

But the two-year writing, editing and revising process was somewhat beneficial for her, she said, forcing her to process things she might otherwise have glossed over.

"It seemed like the right time and the right topic," she said. "I had a lot of rich material."

And her book, published Nov. 1, 2005, has already received honors, winning the Military Writers' Society of America 2005 Gold medal Award for Non-Fiction. Columbus author Karen Spears Zacharias, author of Hero Mama, reviewed the book, saying Redmond "allows readers to see that life on the homefront is often an equally savage battle."

Redmond said she does intend to write again, only her next book will be "a little less heart-wrenching."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

Wade returns for playoffs

Miami Heat guard Dwyane Wade will put off surgery on his dislocated left shoulder to possibly return to the team for the playoffs.

Wade will rehabilitate his shoulder for the next few weeks and said there's no guarantee of him returning.

Wade was injured in Houston Feb. 21. He tore his labrum along with the dislocated shoulder.

The Heat will definitely need Wade, so rest up D-Wade.

Ohio remains No. 1

The Ohio State Buckeyes stayed at number one in the NCAA men's basketball ESPN/USA Today poll. They received 30 of 31 first-place votes.

Kansas climbed to second place, UCLA in third, Wisconsin in fourth and Memphis rounds out the fifth spot, up two spots from last week. Florida, ranked fourth last week, is now sixth after a loss to Tennessee last week.

Injured Mike Beckham

David Beckham hurt a knee against during a Spanish League game over the weekend and is expected to be on the bench for about a month.

Beckham will join the Los Angeles Galaxy in August. His contract with Real Madrid ends June 30.

Who knows, soccer might become mainstream in the U.S. when Becka begins in L.A.

Montoya wins south of the border

Juan Pablo Montoya was the first Hispanic to win a NASCAR race March 4 in Mexico City, Mexico. He won the Bosch Series Telcel-Motobola 200 at the Autodromo Hermanos Rodriguez road course.

Last year's winner, Denny Hamlin, finished second, followed by Boris Said in third.

Though Montoya's win was popular with the fans, he might have lost his friendship with Scott Pruett, his teammate at Chip Ganassi Racing. Montoya made contact with Pruett, who was leading, with eight laps to go. Pruett finished fifth.

Little less conversation, little more drivin'

NASCAR heads to Las Vegas Motor Speedway for the UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400.

Coverage begins at 4 p.m. on Fox.

Jimmie Johnson won the race last March and should be a contender in this race if he plays his cards right.

Condolences to team, families

The Boston University basketball team lost six members after a bus crash in Atlanta March 2.

The coach and 28 players were taken to local hospitals with injuries deemed serious or critical, and most were released.

The team was on its way to play its first game of the season in Sarasota, Fla.

Intramural Basketball League playoffs are well underway. Wednesday night, A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, eliminated the 14th Combat Support Hospital after losing to them last week, 51-47.

"We had a bad game the first time against those guys. We just couldn't shoot the ball," said A Co.'s Stephan McGraw, who led his team with 17 points. "This was as big, big win for us."

After a shaky preseason start, A Co. finished the regular season strong, with only one loss, while 14th CSH posted a 7-2 record.

Ron Ziss watches closely to score points as Abigail Ditchfield takes on Marissa Cucinotta during a class sparring match. Ziss teaches beginner, intermediate and advanced classes five days a week.

"I have been doing this for a long time and I'm constantly learning," said Ron Ziss, who has taught martial arts at Fort Benning for 15 years. At the age of 59, Ziss shows no signs of slowing down.

Ziss served in Okinawa, Japan, when he was 21 years old. There he became interested in the martial arts.

"The first schools I tried to join wouldn't take me," he said. "They were skeptical about most Americans, because they would only train for a couple of weeks and leave."

He eventually found a school that was receptive.

"I told my interpreter to tell the instructor that I would stay if they would take me," Ziss said. "The hesitant instructor finally said OK and everything began there."

The two tough years of karate training in Okinawa changed his life, Ziss said.

"They were really strict and disciplined," he said. "We engaged in high contact. The kicks and punches we demonstrated had to be blocked with force by another student. After about three months, I didn't even feel the pain anymore."

Martin aims to expand record

Has one win out of nine races at Las Vegas Motor Speedway

U.S. ARMY RACING

MOORESVILLE, N.C. — If Mark Martin had a choice of tracks he would like to take his Nextel Cup points lead to, Las Vegas Motor Speedway would be high on the list.

In the first nine Cup races at the 1.5-mile oval, the Army driver has garnered one win (the inaugural race in 1998), four top fives and seven top 10s. Only engine failures in 2003 and 2005 managed to keep him out of the top 10.

Other Las Vegas highlights for Martin include: leading 243 career laps in a Cup car and capturing two poles and two wins in four Busch Series races, with the last victory coming in 2005.

Though Martin is not one to waste time reveling in past accomplishments or even the moment for that matter, his 1998 Las Vegas win still shines bright in his memory.

"I can remember that evening leaving the track on the helicopter following the traditional Victory Lane photos and interviews," said Martin, who will make his 620th consecutive start in Vegas.

"When I looked down, it occurred to me that this wasn't some dirt track in who-knows-where. It was a big deal to win at Las Vegas.

"It was a big deal to win that race that day and we did it. That was something I was very proud of. It still stands out today."

That post-victory emotion was an uncharacteristic feeling for Martin, who admitted he remembers little about the majority of his 35 Nextel Cup wins. Throw in 47 Busch wins, 13 IROC wins (both series records) and seven truck wins and it's easy to see how it can all get lost in the mix. Especially when Martin's immediate focus was always to the next town and the next race.

"As soon as one race was over, I was always immediately concerned about the next race," said Martin, driver of the No. 01 Army Chevrolet.

"I took little time to enjoy the moment or ever really think much about it. I was always so worried about how we would do the next time out — if we had a good car, the right setup or whatever else. But following the victory in Las Vegas it occurred to me that we had accomplished something special on that day."

The odds of continued success for Martin at Las Vegas stack up even better when considering the trend of "change" that he has experienced over the years.

His win in 1998 came during the first year with Jimmy Fennig as crew chief when the new team relocated to Mooresville, N.C.

Martin finished third in his first year (2002) with Ben Leslie at the helm and fifth in his first year (2004) with Pat Tryson as crew chief. In 2006 Martin carried a new sponsor on the car and finished sixth.

When the green flag drops for Sunday's 400-mile event, Martin will not only have a new crew chief in Ryan Pemberton, but a new sponsor (Army) and a new team (Ginn Racing).

"We're not banking on the odds, but it would be nice to see the trend continue," said Martin, who has posted finishes of second and fifth in the first two races of the current season — his best start ever in his 20-plus year Nextel Cup career.

Mitchell Thomas IV
A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, defeated the 14th Combat Support Hospital in intramural basketball playoffs Tuesday.

A Co.: Takes win over 14th CSH

In the first half, the two teams were pretty evenly matched on the offensive end. A Co. stood out defensively with full court pressure. James Manning knocked down a couple of jumpers and ran the floor to make A Co.'s transition game easier.

"We try to maximize our shots and control the board and limit the oppositions shots on the defensive end," he said. "Right now, we can't play any better as a team."

14th CSH brought the score within two points with 14 seconds to go before halftime.

"We don't plan on going home tonight," said Jimmy Bilbo, who scored eight points for the 14th.

Both teams started the second half strong. 14th CSH made a nice scoring run to tie at 26-26, with 17 minutes to go in the game.

14th CSH kept the contest close at 40-36 with eight minutes to go in the game. A Co. went into overdrive, scoring several transition buckets. As the team ran out the clock with a 13-point lead, McGraw hit a one-handed three pointer, making the final score, 55-39.

1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, also played Tuesday night, making easy work of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 72-40. The playoffs continue throughout the week with the championship match Thursday night at Audie Murphy Fitness Center at 8:30 p.m.

Ziss: Believes arts teach discipline, concentration

After returning back to the states, Ziss met a local martial artist named Jack Swift who was teaching a similar style to what he was accustomed to in Okinawa.

"He asked me to step out in the middle of the floor, and he kicked me with one toe, and I lost all my air. I knew this guy was for real, and I began training with him," he said.

Ziss was also inspired by Bruce Lee.

"He was about my age and was nearly the same size as me," he said. "He showed the world what smaller guys can do when they practice proper mechanics."

Ron's father, retired Sgt. 1st Class Albert J. Ziss, a veteran of World War II, Vietnam and Korea, was also a huge inspiration in his life.

"He was one of the first people who supported my dream of teaching students in my own dojo," said Ziss

He asked me to step out in the middle of the floor, and he kicked me with one toe, and I lost all my air. I knew this guy was for real, and I began training with him.

— Ron Ziss

who teaches karate to kids and adults five days a week, Saturday through Wednesday.

The classes, for beginners through advanced, are held in the evenings at the Aerobics and Martial Arts Center in the Benning Club. Students have to be military or civilians with DoD cards.

Ziss suggests that his students come out at least three days a week to get the best results and also emphasizes the importance of practicing repetition in his classes.

Ziss has a definite problem with programs that cut corners.

"When I first got back to the states, I trained at a Tae Kwon Do place and the instructor asked if I wanted to test for a black belt after only being there for seven months. I left there immediately," he said. "I know what a black belt is and I know that I wasn't ready that soon."

Ziss said that the average time for a student to obtain a black belt in his program is five years.

He feels that many people have used his beloved as nothing more than entertainment.

"This is very serious to me. All that jumping up and down and screaming, like in the movies, is a circus," he said. "This takes away from the self-defense aspect of the art. All of my students know that they have to take this seriously, because if they make certain mistakes, they can get seriously hurt."

Ziss has won a number of tournaments, including the first place sparring title in the Battle of Atlanta in 1992, and several first-place wins in weapons and Kata forms in the region. He also has several students that have won titles in the World Yoshukai Karate and Kobudo Organization open Karate Grand Master's Tournaments in Dothan, Ala.

Ziss is also an artist. He has been drawing and painting for years.

"I use the same attention to detail in my artwork as I do in my martial arts," he said. Ziss said his students tend to excel in academics.

"This helps my self-control, patience and concentration, especially in school," said William Thrower, a 12-year-old black belt who has been training for seven years. Thrower has won sparring titles six years in a row at the Grand Master's Tournament.

"It makes kids pay attention," Ziss said. "A large number of my black belts are Honor Society students once they reach middle and high school."

For more information on classes, call Ziss at 706-571-0336.

Nash's NASCAR News Montoya brings diversity to NASCAR

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

NASCAR traveled down to Mexico City, Mexico, for the Busch Series, Telcel-Motorola 200 race March 4. Juan Pablo Montoya, a rookie in NASCAR and former Formula One driver, won the race.

Montoya made the transition from open-wheel racing to stock cars this season.

Montoya also has the opportunity to widen the NASCAR fan base.

Montoya, a Colombian, has been getting a lot of media attention, not only for the transition, but for being Hispanic.

Those not a part of NASCAR nation think of stock car racing as a sport for uneducated rednecks from the South.

They couldn't be more wrong, and NASCAR is trying to do its part to change that.

Multi-car owner Jack Roush recently sold half of Roush Racing to Fenway Sports Group. FSG owns the Boston Red Sox and 80 percent of the New England Sports Network.

Roush Fenway Racing is trying to saturate the northeast with all things NASCAR.

I knew nothing about NASCAR until I moved to the South from New England 11 years ago.

Ironically, it was my brother-in-law, who lives in Massachusetts, who finally got me to watch NASCAR.

I, too, thought it was a redneck sport, and was trying to hold on to my northern roots. But I gave it a whirl and that was that.

It shouldn't take a move to the South to watch a certain sport. To tag NASCAR with a label is like labeling spectators of other sports, and that starts to get hairy.

It's like saying Red Sox fans only live in New England or all New Yorkers like the Yankees, and that's being nice.

Ethnicity should have no bearing in being a sports fan, nor should demographics, sex, religion, etc.

If Montoya can bring in a large Hispanic fan base, it's great for NASCAR.

If Roush Fenway Racing can bring in the Yankee population, even better.

Yes, geography and ethnicity are two very different things, but in the long run, whatever NASCAR can do to draw in spectators to America's fastest growing sport will benefit everyone.

NASCAR has implemented the Drive for Diversity Program, which gives minority drivers, including women, a chance to be sponsored by established racing teams.

I would love to see females driving in NASCAR. There's no reason they can't or shouldn't.

IndyCar driver Danica Patrick made a splash in the IndyCar world and has brought much-needed attention to open-wheel driving.

Besides women, there needs to be a more diverse ethnic range of drivers.

Bill Lester, an African-American, usually drives for the Craftsman Truck Series and in Nextel Cup action when he can.

In the next few years, I see more African-Americans coming up in NASCAR.

As NASCAR spreads throughout the country, it is also growing to include other nations. It's good for the sport and good for the fans.

Army driver to be featured on live show tonight

WWW.GINN-RACING.COM

U.S. Army driver Mark Martin will be the featured guest on Friday night's edition of QVC's For Race Fans Only, which will air live from 8 to 10 p.m. from Harrah's Casino on Las Vegas Boulevard.

Martin will appear with host Dan Hughes during the second hour of the program.

The QVC show is open to the public on a first come, first served basis.

Following the QVC show, Martin will join Ginn Racing teammate Regan Smith at a NASCAR Café autograph session from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. Pacific time.

Martin last appeared on the QVC show from his hometown of Batesville, Ark., in October 2006.

Martin has made several appearances on the show, including last year in Las Vegas.

"We always have a lot of fun with those QVC folks," said Martin.

"And this year we should have even more fun, because we'll get to show off a lot of the new No. 01 U.S. Army merchandise and I think a lot of the fans have been looking for some of that new gear. We've just had a great couple of weeks and I'm having the time of my life with Ginn Racing. I look forward to having another good weekend in Las Vegas."

Martin, who is off to the best start of his 20-plus year racing career, currently leads the Nextel Cup point standings.

He will be in Las Vegas for Sunday's UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400, where he will look for his third consecutive top-five finish to start the season.

Martin won the inaugural Las Vegas Cup race in 1998. Last year, he finished sixth at the 1.5-mile oval.

Soldiers advance to Armed Forces Boxing Championships

Championships scheduled for Saturday at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Anthony Reed

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz. — Nine boxers came out on top of the All Army Boxing Championships March 1 and Friday. The Soldiers will represent the Army in the Armed Forces Boxing Championships at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, through Saturday.

"Winning at the All-Army competition is one of the first steps for up-and-coming fighters. It means they are the 'best of the best' in the Army. From there we send the Army's best to compete against the sister services at the Armed Forces level," said Staff Sgt. Charles Leverette, All Army Boxing assistant coach. Winners at the Armed Forces Championships automatically become a part of the World Class Athlete program headquartered at Fort Carson, Colo.

"Eight of this year's boxers were World Class Athletes last year," Leverette said.

1st Lt. Khara Keegan, B Company, 309th Military Intelligence, executive officer, advanced to the Armed Forces Championships for the second time.

Pfc. Zack Hardrick from Fort Carson advanced by defeating the only male Fort Huachuca boxer, Staff Sgt. Eric Raymon, with the final night's only knockout.

Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Downs of Fort Carson wanted to show improvement at this year's championship. He's only been boxing for four years.

One of the final night's most exciting bouts involved super heavyweights Spc. William Moore from Dexheim, Germany, and Sgt. Andrew Shepherd from Fort Carson.

"We've been good friends throughout training," said Shepherd, who won the bout, "but when we're in that ring, it's all business."

Head coach Basheer Abdullah was pleased with the results.

"I like the team that will represent us at the Armed Forces Championships," he said. "I'm confident we will do very well at that level."

Army is the reigning armed forces champion. The U.S. National Championships take place June 11-16 at Colorado Springs. Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, will host the Pan Am Games July 16-29.

Train now for reverse triathlon

Registration begins May 1 for triathlon set for June 9

THE BAYONET

Mitchell Thomas IV

With the Reverse Sprint Triathlon three months away, now is the time to begin training, said Lori Smith, fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

The triathlon is a 5K, or 3.1-mile, run followed by a 20K, or 12.4-mile, bike ride followed by a 550-meter pool swim.

"It's a little different because the order is in reverse. The swim comes last and the run is first," Smith said. "It gives triathletes a challenge to their typical routine."

The sprint triathlon is ideal for beginners because of the shorter distances, Smith said.

There will be several age divisions for participants including a 19 and younger class, 20-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50 and older.

There will also be team categories, including male, female, mixed male and female, and family. Teams can consist of two people, with one person doing two events, or three people, with each doing one event.

Smith offered these training tips:

- Competitors should practice running distances comparable to the race.
- Train three days a week, two for distance and one for speed. The distance runs should be maintained at a comfortable pace.
- For the speed days, practice drills and sprints. After two weeks, distance and speed runs should be alternated each day.
- The best way to train for the biking part of the race is to ride one or two times per week, working up to the distance goal.
- There is no need to have an expensive bike for your first triathlon — any bike will do, Smith said. Helmets are required.
- Smith recommends participants join the Fort Benning Bike Club to become familiar with the ins and outs of biking.

The swimming part of the triathlon has proven to be the most difficult for most competitors, Smith said. She advises competitors to use a combination of strokes throughout the race.

They should also practice swimming laps three times a week to build endurance, technique and correct breathing techniques.

"Swimming effectively is far more important than swimming fast," she said.

The lifeguards at the Briant Wells Fitness Center pool can offer tips and techniques to help with the swim.

Beginners should alternate by focusing on a different sport each day without overworking their muscles.

"Rest is just as important as exercise," Smith said.

Personal trainers are also recommended. Briant Wells Fitness Center has trainers available for hire.

Training tips are also available online at www.benningmwr.com.

There will be awards given to the top three male and female overall finishers, top three male and female finishers in each age division and the top three finishers in each category.

An awards banquet will be held at El Zapata on post. The cost of the banquet is included in the registration fee. The first 150 people to register will also receive a Fort Benning Sprint Triathlon T-shirt.

The Triathlon will start at 8 a.m. June 9 and is open to anyone.

Registration begins May 1. Registration forms can be obtained at any of the MWR fitness centers or online at www.benningmwr.com.

Fees are $15 for individuals and $25 for teams. Payment can be made at Briant Wells Fitness Center 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, or mailed to the address on the registration form.

For more information, call Smith or Ken Wetherill at 706-545-4300. You can also email them at lorismith6@benning.army.mil or ken.wetherill@benning.army.mil.

The NBA: The new East vs. West coast beef

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

I have good news, bad news, and the truth.

First, the bad news. I attended an Atlanta Hawks game this weekend with the intention of teaching my girlfriend some of the ins and outs of my favorite sport.

Yeah, I know — how in the world would I use one of the worst teams in the NBA to show a first-timer what the game of basketball is about?

Philips Arena had dismal attendance Saturday night. The few thousand there were more thrilled about the free Speedy Claxton player statue and pair of inflatable Thundersticks (that they graciously clapped together during anyone's free throw shots, home team or otherwise) than the game.

What made matters worse was that they squared off against the New York Knicks, an equally inept Eastern Conference team.

The good news is, believe it or not, the game turned out to be awesome. The second half, well played by both teams, went into overtime. Both teams' star guards, Joe Johnson of the Hawks and Stephon Marbury of the Knicks, nearly put on triple double performances.

Ultimately, the good old Hawks fell, 100-104. Go figure.

Now for the truth. The Eastern Conference, the same conference of the classic 90s Bulls and the Detroit Bad Boys of the late 80s are disgraceful.

The best team in the East, the Detroit Pistons, are ranked the same as the fourth-best team in the Western Conference. The Pistons are only half as good as they were last year because of a diminished frontline after losing last year's core defender, Big Ben Wallace.

Some of the best individual talents are in the East, but the team play is awful on this side of the country.

East All-Star Gilbert Arenas of the Washington Wizards is reinventing the guard position this season. He is the hottest player in the NBA, averaging 29 points per game. The problem with the Wizards is that post presence and the team defense is horrid.

The Cleveland Cavaliers' LeBron James is arguably the best all-around player in the league. Without question, King James is the face of the NBA at only 22 years old. Unfortunately for him, he has to be the face, head, neck, shoulders, arms, legs and big toe of the Cavs, leading them in pretty much every statistical category.

Speaking of shoulders, the reigning champion Miami Heat's chances of winning back-to-back NBA titles went belly up after their star guard Dwyane Wade hit the parquet floor just after the all-star break with a potential season-ending shoulder injury. It was so bad that he had to be carted off in a wheelchair, which, frankly I don't understand because it was his shoulder. Maybe it's just me though.

It was a matter of time before he proved his sneaker endorsing "fall seven times, get up eight" catch phrase misleading. This guy plays with reckless abandon, and he hits the ground more than Mike Tyson's opponents back in the 80s.

Don't get me wrong, he is one of my favorite players and I love his heart and toughness. He puts everything, including his body, which is the equivalent of his contract, on the line every contest. What he needs to do is work on his midrange game so that he can be more of a threat from the perimeter, just like Michael Jordan did after he went down with an injury in his second year in the league.

If the Heat has any chance at all, Shaq Diesel is going to have to tear out the seats, climb into Marty McFly's DeLorean, and go backwards at least six years.

The sad thing is that I don't see this imbalance between the two conferences changing any time soon. The East lost this year's All-Star Game by a whopping 21 points. The Eastern Conference fools the casual Sportscenter viewer, and the young, impressionable jersey-buyer believes that fast and flashy guards like the aforementioned players are what basketball is about. Wrong.

Strong post players are what make strong teams — a fact that has been proven over and over. Boston Celtics legend Bill Russell dominated and set the tone for "biggs" by leading his team to an unprecedented 11 titles. Front court players like former MVP Tim Duncan of the San Antonio Spurs and leading MVP candidate this season, Dirk Nowitzki, of the Dallas Mavericks, are what make their teams championship contenders.

You can see the difference in how the East and West coach games as well. Mike D'Antoni and the Phoenix Suns have a working game plan every night, just like Avery Johnson and the Mavericks have. The Eastern teams seem to wing it every outing.

Not every West team is good, but you better believe just about every East team is bad. People are still fooled by the Jordan era. You will never see that type of dominance again by one man, especially a guard.

I hate to tell you this, but two three-peat championship runs is a once-in-a-lifetime occurrence. In this day and age, the only way to win the ring is going to be the team way, which is the right way after all.

Like I said, the truth.

SPORT BRIEFS

ON POST

SPEED POOL TOURNAMENT

A speed pool tournament will begin today at the Afterhours Community Club for eight weeks. The tournament is open to active-duty military, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers.

Registration fee is $25 and includes a custom pool cue. The tournament winner receives a three-night trip for two to Las Vegas to attend the World Championship Speed Pool Tournament.

Campsites can be chosen immediately upon registering a minimum of five team members.

Relay For Life® is a fun-filled overnight event designed to bring together those who have been touched by cancer in our community. At the event, we celebrate survivorship and raise money to help the American Cancer Society in its mission to save lives, help those who have been touched by cancer, and empower individuals to fight back. During the event, teams of people gather at schools, fairgrounds, or parks and take turns walking or running laps. Each team tries to keep at least one team member on the track at all times.

But, Relay is much more than a walk around a track. It is a time to remember those lost to cancer and celebrate those who have survived. It is a night for people who have shared the same experience to comfort and console one another. During this event, we honor survivors during the Survivors Lap and we remember those we lost to cancer during the Luminaria Ceremony. We also celebrate life, friendship, and a chance to work together toward a cancer-free future.

Most importantly, Relay gives you the power to help in the fight against cancer. By joining together as volunteers and donors, our efforts help the American Cancer Society strive toward a future where cancer doesn't take the lives of our friends and family.

Sign up today to become a part of the Relay phenomenon. Together we will fuel the work - and the hope - that can help make a cancer-free future a reality.

Daylight savings starts Sunday

THE OLD FARMER'S ALMANAC

Daylight saving time has changed to start three weeks early, Sunday, and finish Nov. 4.

Daylight saving time adds an hour of daylight during the early evening, which conserves energy by substituting natural sunlight for electrical lighting.

According to The Old Farmer's Almanac, daylight saving began in 1918 during World War I to save fuel for the war effort. Since then, it has been used on and off, with different start and end dates.

Benjamin Franklin first suggested the idea in 1784. It was later revived in 1907, when William Willett proposed a similar system in the pamphlet The Waste of Daylight.

The Germans were the first to officially adopt the light-extending system in 1915, followed by the British, and in 1918 the U.S., when Congress passed the Standard Time Act, establishing our time zones.

Protect yourself from an attack

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Sexual assault is one of the most common crimes committed in this country. It's also the most under-reported.

The following is a list of recommended practices to help reduce one's chance of becoming a victim of assault.

Home alone:

- It pays to know your neighbors. Check watchdog.com to find out if you have a sexual predator in your neighborhood.

- Keep your doors and windows locked at all times. If you don't have an alarm, prop something against the door that will make a lot of racket if it's disturbed — an umbrella stand, a chair, etc.

- Keep your cell phone in your pocket at all times, even at home.

- If someone knocks at the door, even if it's the mailman or a pizza deliveryman, act as if you're not alone. Have the telephone at your ear when you answer, or, just before answering, yell, 'I'll get the door!'

- Dial a trusted neighbor's number before you go to bed. Practice hitting the redial button in the dark.

- Develop a reliable "signal" with the same trusted friend, whether it's the mailbox flag, a window shade or the porch light.

- Vary your routine. Don't have dinner delivered at the same time, on the same day of the week, from the same

PX parking

Construction has begun in the Marne Road widening project, which will widen the road to four lanes and create a traffic light and new entrance into the Main Mall Post Exchange parking lot. The construction crew began by tearing down trees and medians where the new entrance will be created. The project is scheduled to be completed by July 26, well before the scheduled opening of the new PX at Thanksgiving.

Marne Road to be widened

Widening will alleviate increased traffic at new PX

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Construction has begun on the widening of Marne Road on Main Post, a project that will widen Marne to four lanes and create a traffic light at the main entrance to the current and new Main Mall Post Exchanges.

The traffic changes, which are scheduled to be completed by July 26, will alleviate congestion and traffic problems at the current Main Mall PX and allow for a smoother flow of traffic once the new PX opens, said Bryan McClure, civil engineer for the Directorate of Public Works.

"We are fixing traffic problems that are already here and preparing for the new PX," McClure said.

The stop signs at the exits to the PX parking lot cause delays for people leaving the PX when traffic gets heavy on Marne Road. It can take a long time to turn left, McClure said.

After the construction is completed, the first entrance to the PX, which is right by the Class Six, will become enter only, and it will be entered only by drivers coming from the Main Post side of Marne Road. Drivers coming from Kelley Hill will have to turn left at the far entrance or at the traffic light.

There will be a turning lane created by the widening on Marne Road that will allow vehicles to turn at either the first entrance or the traffic light. There will be a turning lane in the other direction as well, which turns into the entrance to the new PX.

The creation of separate turning and straight lanes will keep the traffic flowing since turning drivers won't slow the others down, McClure said.

The new entrance to the PX will line up with the entrance to the new PX, which is scheduled to open at Thanksgiving, and there will be a traffic light instead of the current stop signs.

There will be a merging lane for drivers turning right out of the current PX parking lot onto Marne Road. On the opposite side of the road, there will be a turning lane that leads from the traffic light to the ramp to get on I-185 North. The lane will allow drivers leaving the new PX to get onto I-185 without interrupting the straight traffic.

The current middle entrance to the PX parking lot will be closed off once the new entrance is open, and it will be turned into parking spaces.

The widening at the other end will begin with the creation of a turning lane into the far entrance to the PX, the entrance closest to the commissary. The creation of the turning lane will allow drivers coming from Kelley Hill and going to Main Post or I-185 to not have to stop for cars turning into the commissary, McClure said.

There will be 44 new parking

Dr. Ann L. Hardman, left, the pastor of the Faith Worship Center, greets Reggie Richards, the executive director of Columbus South Inc. Tuesday at the Impact Center on Blanchard Boulevard.

Columbus South meets Faith International

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Editor's note: In this, part five of a series on the revitalization of South Columbus, the executive director of Columbus South Inc. meets a minister who may become a key player in the area's revitalization.

Dr. Hardman, meet Reggie Richards. Reggie Richards, meet your match.

Bishop Ann L. Hardman, the founder and president of the international ministries by the same name, met Reggie Richards, the executive director of Columbus South Inc. for the first time Tuesday at the Impact Center on Blanchard Boulevard, a block off Victory Drive.

Somebody should have warned the bishop about the tiny, blonde dynamo responsible for breathing new life into South Columbus. She's out to save the soul of the Southside.

Somebody should have warned Richards about the bishop. She's out to save souls on the Southside.

Richards and Hardman are both 50, both visionaries. They share a vision for what South Columbus might become — an international, close-knit community built on faith and diversity. Watching them together, it's easy to believe they'll succeed.

Patient Family Centered Care initiative includes family input

Changes in Obstetrics, pre- and post-operative care

MEDDAC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Martin Army Community Hospital's health-care delivery system, which implements the Patient and Family Centered Care philosophy, is designed to ensure that patients and family members are incorporated in every facet of their health care, the program coordinator said.

Carla Mase said new initiatives are emerging from patient and family member input.

One of these is the Obstetric Family and Patient Centered Care, designed to better assist expectant mothers and families at MACH.

With this, Tricare patients can communicate one-on-one in prenatal interviews that are private and geared toward the individual instead of group visits.

This change allows the staff to better serve patients with individual attention, said Donna Kelly, head nurse, Obstetrics and Gynecology.

Another concept of the initiative is the new interactive weekly parenting e-mail for Tricare patients. The e-mail will provide parents with information from conception through the first year of their baby's life, Kelly said.

The Web site, www.theparentreview.com/martin, offers weekly support, tips and advice, week-by-week developmental milestones for the baby and resources and search engines with information on child development, Kelly said.

The site also provides a link to the Martin Army hospital Web site and the Pregnancy and Childbirth Handbook provided to OB patients.

Another initiative to involve patients and families in the healthcare process more actively is through Pre-Operative Services, in which pediatric patients requiring surgery will have the comfort of being with family before and after surgery.

Parents are allowed to stay with pediatric patients until they are actually wheeled into the operating room. Once the patient comes out of surgery, the parents are immediately brought into the recovery room. An even bigger change is that parents of smaller children can hold them on the gurney while in recovery and in the post-surgical ward so they will awaken to mommy or daddy's familiar face, Mase said.

"The momentum of PFCC is strong in our organization," she said. "Our staff meets monthly and continually generates new departmental PFCC initiatives to keep the energy going. It is very rewarding to our staff, patients and families to see the fruits of our labor."

Mase said MACH would continue to benchmark against other health-care organizations actively engaged in the PFCC movement, to compare to facilities that have implemented many of these initiatives successfully.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Dr. Lt. Col. Virginia Yates

Q: I've met a few Soldiers who say they have been treated for "mersa." What is it?

A: What they're talking about is "Methicillin-resistant S. aureus" which medical people call MRSA for short. MRSA is a type of skin infection caused by a germ called staph aureus. Some varieties of staph aureus are resistant to the antibiotic methicillin, a relative of penicillin, as well as other commonly used antibiotics for skin infections. Certain antibiotics need to be used to treat MRSA.

Q: How does a person know if they have MRSA?

A: People can have the MRSA germ in their bodies and not know it. These people are referred to as being colonized with MRSA. People who are colonized with MRSA do not have any symptoms. MRSA skin infections often begin with an injury allowing the bacteria to enter the skin and develop into an infection. Symptoms include: redness, warmth, swelling, tenderness of the skin and boils or blisters.

MRSA infections are sometimes mistaken for spider bites. Some people may also have fever and chills.

Q: Can a person get MRSA from another person?

A: Yes. MRSA infections are spread by close contact with infected people. MRSA can come off infected skin onto the skin of another person during skin-to-skin contact. MRSA can also come off infected skin onto shared object and surfaces and get onto the skin of the person who uses the object or surface next. The wound drainage and pus is very infectious.

Examples of shared objects that might spread MRSA include personal hygiene objects (i.e. towels, soap, wound dressings, bandages, etc.) sheets, clothes, benches in saunas or hot tubs, and athletic equipment. In other words, anything that could have touched the skin of a staph-infected person can carry the bacteria to the skin of another person.

Pet board-

What to do with your pet when you take a trip

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

If you're planning a vacation for block leave or are going TDY, you may be scrambling to figure out what to do with your pets. Maybe you're thinking boarding can be so expensive, but it is convenient, and all your friends are going away too.

There are many options, so do some research and you'll find one that fits your needs and your budget.

First, rule out bringing the pet with you. Are you going to be staying in a place that allows pets? Will you have time to care for the pet?

If the answer's no, there are a few options when it comes to finding a place for your pets to stay — boarding facilities, professional pet sitters and friends.

The least expensive option is a non-allergic, pet-loving friend. If you've got a friend that meets the requirements and your animals get along with his or her animals, see if they are available during the time you will be gone.

Take your pets over to the friend's house for a visit or two before your trip so pets can get familiar with the new surroundings.

Or, if your friend lives close enough, he or she may be able to stop in at your house a few times a day to care for the animals, which would relieve your pet's stress of going to a new place. Make sure they have enough time to devote to the animals.

Another option is to have the person stay at your house while you're gone.

In college, I dogsat for a friend frequently, sometimes for a weekend and a couple times for a whole week. It was easy for me, being in college, since I didn't have any pets of my own or a house of my own to worry about and I could do my homework anywhere.

Ask around about a college-aged person, maybe the child of a friend, who could watch the house and the pets. There may even be a friend from out of town who's looking for a break and who would love a free place to get away.

Once you find the person, work out an arrangement. My friend paid me to stay at her house and watch her two dogs. She said I was saving her money by not having to board them, and I guess she knew college students are always low on cash. But depending on the person, a small token of thanks may be enough.

Or you could offer to watch his or her another time in exchange.

A boarding facility may be your next option, or your only option if you're leaving in a hurry. The Fort Benning vet clinic doesn't offer boarding at this time, but many local civilian vet clinics do. The pet may need to be a patient of the clinic, however.

There are also facilities that specialize in boarding. Ask other pet owners in the area for recommendations and check the yellow pages.

An article in Family Circle Magazine recommended checking the American Boarding Kennels Association at www.abka.com.

Once you find a place, ask about the feeding procedures, the exercise regimen and what you need to bring. The facility may provide food or you may be able to bring your own with the pet.

When I board my dogs at the vet, I bring toys from home for them so they have a little something familiar with them. I also send food with them because their digestive systems are used to it, and I don't like sudden changes in their diet.

The facility will ask for immunization records, if they don't already have them. Certain shots may be required, so find out in advance.

The costs of boarding kennels and boarding at a vet clinic vary greatly, and it sometimes depends on the weight of the animal.

One other option is a professional pet sitter. The National Association of Professional Pet Sitters Web site lets you search by zip code for local certified pet sitters. Go to www.petsitters.org to find a pet sitter near you.

The March of Dimes is saving babies...

After the March of Dimes defeated polio in the 1950s, we turned our attention to preventing birth defects and other threats to infant health. Today, we're fighting premature birth — the leading cause of newborn death. Half a million babies are born too soon every year. We're working to find out why ... and how premature birth can be prevented.

REFLECTIONS

Experience the power of empathy

2ND BATTALION, 54TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

Chaplain (Capt.) Sean Facchinello,

A story in all four Gospels of the New Testament demonstrates God's power through empathy. He feeds more than 5,000 hungry men, women and children with one boy's lunch. Two fish and five barley loaves were blessed and made into a miraculous feast with 12 baskets full of leftovers.

Jesus, who turned this small meal into a feast, demonstrated empathy by putting himself in the shoes of the multitude. He felt their hunger and he satisfied it.

The difference between empathy and compassion is that with compassion we help another person in need, but we may do so to get a return benefit.

Not so with empathy — this is motivated solely by the desire to benefit others.

Soldiers are trained early on to empathize with their fellow Soldiers. It is taught in the concept of having a battle buddy. Battle buddies help in combat, at home or wherever they go. Ecclesiastes 4:9, 10 demonstrates empathy working in the battle buddy concept.

"Two are better than one because they have a good reward for their efforts. For if either falls, his companion can lift him up, but pity the one who falls without another to lift him up."

This is good advice for Soldiers and couples who focus on teamwork. Working together to feel what the other person is experiencing and "lifting him or her up" after a fall is better than being alone and having no one to help.

FACCHINELLO

I am reminded from this beautiful New Testament story of the feeding of the 5,000 that it took God to satisfy the hungry multitude.

They would have gone hungry had it not been for Jesus Christ, who empathized and showed great love and understanding.

Our country practices empathy. We help others in need. "Much will be required of everyone who has been given much. And even more will be expected of the one who has been entrusted with more." (Luke 12:48).

Drill Sergeants teach Soldiers to never leave a fallen comrade. We go beyond that in combat by providing medical treatment to the fallen enemy. Empathy has made us a great nation. Better yet, God has made us a great nation because we follow his prescription by loving others as God loves us. We see the need elsewhere, and we go to help our neighbors in need so they too can experience the freedoms we enjoy.

Love yourself God's way

BAYONET CORESPONDENT

Frederick M. Rupel

Love yourself! This sounds like a pretty arrogant, self-centered statement. However, using the words of Jesus, "Love your neighbor as yourself," let me explain why loving yourself is important.

Richard W. Dorch in his book, Losing it All, and Finding Yourself, had this to say about loving yourself: "How you love yourself reveals how you will love your family, associates, and neighbors."

"Loving yourself brings into focus your uniqueness. Think of it: millions of souls have never been — and will never again be — duplicated exactly. You are an original, fashioned precisely the way God designed you."

In my counseling, many people reveal that they do not like themselves, let alone love themselves. They suffer from incredibly low self-esteem.

They go to great lengths in seeking the approval of others. Yet in the end, they continue to depreciate their own worth.

This is sad, and it is not God's way.

Let me share some valuable principles from

Dorch's book that may set you on the path of loving yourself God's way.

• Learn to establish your presence.

Know that God has a specific plan for your life, and this is possible without becoming brash or conceited. Know who you are in God. When you are yourself, people will know that a person who walks with God is in their presence.

• Believe you are God's person.

If you know God has called and assigned you to a particular job, you can be content without trying to force yourself or your will upon others.

• Know God's kind of success.

Discover your full potential as a child of God and be willing to pay the price to achieve the best.

• Contribute something.

View yourself as being able to do something for people, for the kingdom of God, or where you work. Have a servant's heart.

• Accept full responsibility for being who you are.

Don't alibi. You cannot wallow in past mistakes and failures.

• Strive for the best, but don't be a #### hypocrite.

Learn from those around you, but don't try to imitate them. Be yourself as you are spiritually directed.

• Study people who are leaders and learn from them.

• Develop a passion for excellence.

Focus on your area of concern and become an expert through study, discipline, and experience.

• Be disciplined — in body, soul, and spirit.

• Keep it simple.

Have a livable lifestyle. Don't compete with your neighbor.

• Tell the truth, only and always.

• Don't quit.

It is wrong (maybe even sinful) to do less than your best. Never, never, never give up. Keep moving forward.

God will help you to create answers to your problems and needs. God's creative genius is yours for the asking.

Basic lack of freedom brings fond memories

210TH FIRES BRIGADE

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) David Acuff

"The promise of freedom is freedom."

— Michel Foucault

"Four more months and we'll be through. I'll be glad and so will you," went the cadence in basic training. The numbers diminished as we sang out the remaining length of our bondage. The days passed slowly at first, but they gained speed. And then it arrived. We walked the stage, and we were through. The moment we had longed for had arrived. We were glad and so were they.

The loss of freedom is certainly the hardest part of basic training. Not the PT, not the field time, not even the gas chamber, but rather the invisible chains that locked us together as a platoon. Some of our fellow Soldiers got on our nerves. We would have liked to have gotten away from them, but we couldn't.

I have never had less freedom than I had during basic training. All of us missed that freedom, and we wanted it back. And yet, almost all of us have fond memories of basic training. It will be the sweetest Army memory for many of us. It has been for me.

But one thing is for sure: none of the worst times of my life happened during my basic training at Fort Knox, Ky. More and more, I look at my time in basic training as a safe zone.

Not easy, but safe. I missed my freedom, but there were times, before and after basic, that my freedom caused me excruciating hardship.

Any overseas tour teaches us that Americans want and demand more freedom than anyone. We need "elbow room" in every way. We demand lots of space to craft and sustain our individuality.

Yes, the Army hampers our freedom in many ways. But a problem many of our Soldiers wrestle with is having grown up with far too much freedom.

And freedom and happiness are clean, separate things. I think we come to learn over time that the promise of freedom is freedom — and nothing else.

Give me grace to await Thy leisure,
And patiently to bear what Thou doest unto me;
Nothing doubting or mistrusting
Thy goodness toward me;
For Thou knowest what is good for me better than I do.

Five rules for fair fighting can help relationships

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

How many times have you tried to talk to your spouse about something and it ended up in an argument or all out war? Is it different from when you were dating? Remember how nice he was, calling all the time, listening to your every little whim? Remember how she was, gazing into your eyes and listening to every word you spoke and holding hands, looking at each other when you were out to dinner?

Now we seem to be looking at everything else instead of each other. Remember when you had a disagreement, it was, "Oh, that is OK honey." "Oh, I do not mind." Is that how it is now? How do you handle your problems, now? I hope with the same love, respect and honor you did when you were dating.

When we were dating, we suppressed our anger at some of the things we would do to each other for fear that they might get mad and leave. We tend to lose some of that fear once we marry. Women often think they can change (fix) men and then life will be happy forever after.

We tend to get mad because we think we do not need fixing. Ahh, the dance of couples in "love." If bickering punctuates your days, if arguments escalate quickly until you're both shouting things you later regret or if you too often smile through gritted teeth while your stomach is roiling like an ocean in a hurricane, then maybe these few rules will help your marriage.

Before any couple can even begin to solve their problems, they have to learn how to use their anger constructively. Anger is not sin. The Bible says, "Be angry and do not sin." You may recall even Jesus was angry and used his anger constructively and without sin. How can anger be constructive? Use it to explore the underlying causes of your disagreements, and you'll find ways to address both of your needs.

No. 1 — Acknowledge it is OK to be angry, and don't feel guilty about having those angry feelings. Many people grow up believing that it is bad to express negative feelings. There are times when anger is legitimate; however, anger is not a license to say or do whatever we want. It is OK to say we are angry and what caused us to be angry without saying things that are hurtful and damaging to others, especially our loved ones. When you are able to express your anger in a constructive manner, it will strengthen your relationship.

No. 2 — Understand it is OK to disagree; disagreement does not make you enemies. I have been married for more than 26 years and believe me, my wife and I have not and still do not agree on everything. So when we disagree, it is not OK to attack each other, call each other names, cuss and scream at each other nor threaten divorce if one does not agree. We are individuals and we will have differences which can eventually trigger conflict.

No. 3 — Never use sensitive or confidential information as a weapon in an argument. Your spouse has trusted you by sharing such sensitive information and to now turn it into a weapon for your cause will damage the trust your spouse has placed in you. It may also shut down future opportunities of intimate conversation and emotional security.

No. 4 — Avoid withdrawal until both agree on a conclusion. Walking out without a joint conclusion can be very painful and cause future problems. Agree to table the discussion until a later time when you both can finish the discussion. Do not just walk out on your spouse prior to resolution or agreeing to table the discussion.

No. 5 — Listen with an ear from your spouse's view. Everyone has their own thoughts and feelings. They own them. Guys, you are losing an uphill battle if you try and argue about your wife's feelings — do not even try. Listen to hear how your spouse may be feeling about a given situation.

There is no "right" way to feel. You honor your mate by listening to them without judging. Listen and let them know you are listening by paraphrasing what you heard. And inquire more about what you do not understand, like saying, "Tell me more about what you are feeling or thinking."

Make the effort to hear what is troubling your partner and show genuine care and awareness of their emotional experience.

Do you need assistance with a marriage issue, an individual problem, finding it hard to cope with certain situations, struggling with deployment or having been downrange? Call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 706-545-1760 for an appointment. Our pastoral staff is ready to help you with your journey. Or stop by our office. We are located at 2606 Dixie Road in Soldiers' Plaza.

Children Learn More from Do's than Don'ts

Young children will be better behaved when they know clearly what you expect of them. Instead of just saying, "Don't do that," show and tell your child what you do want him or her to do.

1. Teach your child the steps of the desired behavior.

It is unreasonable to expect your child to do something if you haven't taught it to him or her.

2. Have your child describe the behavior back to you. This will tell you whether or not your child understands your expectations.

3. Ask your child to demonstrate the behavior to you.

If your child can demonstrate the behavior reasonably well, then you know that it is within the child's abilities.

4. Model the behavior yourself. Children are always watching you and trying to imitate your behavior.

Awareness: Key to safety, prevention of assault

restaurant. Don't be seen leaving the house or coming home every day "like clockwork."

- If you go for a daily walk or run, vary your route frequently.
- Encourage your neighbors to use your driveway or the street in front of your house for overflow parking.

While you're out:

- Park your car so the driver's side faces the building you'll be visiting, even if you have passengers. Assailants look for easy access to the driver's seat.
  - Scan the parking lot before you leave or approach your car.
  - Lock your door immediately, before you buckle, before you put the key in the ignition, before you secure the kids, windows locked at all times. If you don't have an alarm, prop something against the door that will make a lot of racket if its disturbed — an umbrella stand, a chair, etc.
  - Keep your cell phone in your pocket, even at home.
  - If someone knocks at the door, even if it's the mailman or a pizza deliveryman, act as if you're not alone. Have the telephone at your ear when you answer, or yell, "I'll get the door!"
  - Dial a trusted neighbor's number before you go to bed.
- Practice hitting the redial button in the dark.
- Develop a reliable "signal" with the same trusted friend, whether it's the mailbox flag, window shade or the porch light.
  - Vary your routine. Don't have dinner delivered at the same time, on the same day of the week, from the same restaurant. Don't be seen leaving the house or coming home every day "like clockwork." If you walk or run daily, vary your route frequently.
  - Encourage your neighbors to use your driveway or the street in front of your house for overflow parking.

While you're out:

- Park your car so the driver's side faces the building you'll be visiting, even if you have passengers. Assailants look for easy access to the driver's seat.
- Scan the parking lot before you leave or approach your car.
- Lock your door immediately, before you buckle, before you - put the key in the ignition, before you secure the kids.

- If there's a van or large vehicle parked next to the driver's side, approach with caution and enter from the passenger's side.
  - If you meet a friend for dinner or shopping, walk together to your car, then drive your friend to her car.
  - Attach yourself to a group leaving the mall or ask a security guard to accompany you to your car.
  - Don't fiddle with your keys or packages while walking to your car.
  - Don't keep your hands in your pockets.
  - Keep your package or purse in your non-dominant hand, so you will instinctively release it if you're assaulted. Your dominant hand will typically tighten or clinch when you feel threatened.
  - Make it obvious you're aware of your surroundings. Stand straight, with your shoulders back, and make eye contact with anyone you pass. Speak to him if he passes close enough.
- Assailants count on the element of surprise to work to their advantage. They want to make first contact, to feel they have the upper hand.
- Although hand-held cell phones can be distracting and dangerous, "ear buds" can discourage a potential assailant. If you feel threatened, act as if you're giving directions to someone. "I'm parked in the third row, dear. I can see you from here."
  - Whenever possible, use a shopping cart to carry your packages to your car, and put them in the trunk.
  - Keep the cart between you and anyone approaching.
  - Use the elevator instead of the stairs, unless the stairway is open and well traveled.
  - When walking along a roadway, walk against traffic and never pass alongside a parked car with someone sitting in it.
  - If a car approaches in the direction you're walking and slows down, reverse direction immediately.
  - Don't wear conspicuous jewelry or carry an obviously expensive handbag.
  - Wear clothes and shoes you can run in.
  - If he demands your purse, throw it in one direction and run the other way. Don't hand it to him.
  - If he brandishes a gun, run. Do not acquiesce. Only four out - of 100 assaults involving a firearm actually hit a moving target, and the chance of hitting a vital organ is almost nil.

- If attacked, yell "fire!" not "help."
- Studies show people run toward a fire, because they don't feel threatened, but they often won't get involved in an attack for fear of getting injured themselves.
- Trust your instincts. If you feel threatened, react immediately.

FACTS

Most assaults take place between 5 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. The number one place for a predator to "pick" a victim is the grocery store parking lot. All other parking lots account for the second most common location for assault, followed by public restrooms.

In a survey of 500 convicted rapists, only 2 percent said they carried a weapon while committing the crime, and the vast majority said they would have "given up" if the victim had fought back.

The best way to fight? A kick to the groin is effective, but predictable and easily deflected. Try first to bite or pinch the tender area on the underside of the upper arm or thigh. Another effective technique is to poke him in the eye, kick him in the knee, jab at his neck or bend back his fingers.

The rapists interviewed said they would not have chosen a victim who carried an umbrella or walking stick. Keys are not threatening. They typically looked for victims who:

- were preoccupied with their packages or purse,
- wore loose-fitting or easy to remove clothing,
- wore clothes or shoes they couldn't run in, and
- had something the assailant could grab and tug, such as a ponytail, braid, a camera on a neck-strap or scarf.

Marne: Widening to four lanes of traffic

spaces at the current PX once the construction is done.

Sidewalks and crosswalks will also be created to make walking to the different shopping areas easier and safer, McClure said.

After all construction of medians and curbs is done in the parking lot, the whole parking lot will be repaved and restriped. Marne Road will also be repaved once the widening is complete.

McClure expects the construction delays to be minimal. Traffic will be interrupted on Marne Road for only about a week in June or July for the repaving, he said, and the construction in the parking lot will be clearly marked.

Different parts of the parking lot will be worked on at different times, so there won't be any time when the whole lot is blocked and parking becomes a problem.

Another construction project starting soon will widen the I-185 exit ramp to Marne Road. The project will create three lanes coming up to the traffic light where the exit ramp intersects with Marne Road right by the hospital. There will be left-turning, straight and right-turning lanes.

Right now, drivers going to the hospital, PX and Kelley Hill are all using the same lane, so the creation of three lanes will relieve traffic, McClure said.

The ramp construction is scheduled to start around April 9.

A few months from now, the ramp will be closed to traffic periodically for construction, McClure said, but it will be at slow times of the day.

It will not be closed during the morning, lunch or afternoon rush hours, he said.

The ramp construction should be completed in August.

Columbus: South to have new outreach center

"The objective here is to minister to people," Hardman said, as she led Richards on a tour of the Impact Center, a 150,000 square foot outreach center, nearing completion, which will fall under the auspices of Faith Worship Center International.

"A ministry is nothing if it's not reaching out to the community," Hardman said. "This is going to be more than a church."

In fact, it's hard to say, succinctly, just what it will be. More than a church, certainly, and more than a community center. The facility, which formerly housed a Fleming Foods warehouse, will include a sanctuary with seating for 2,500, classrooms, a bowling alley, skating rink, indoor playground, a computer lab, café, boutiques, showers and laundry facilities, offices and meeting rooms.

It will host after-school programs for children, mentoring programs for drop-outs and a Refreshing Center, a transitional facility that will provide the homeless with access to laundry, shower facilities and snacks.

Hardman expects to offer at least two "conventional" Sunday services, though she admits, there's nothing conventional about her services.

She's as much a teacher as a preacher, said Hardman, who frequently uses parables to illustrate in her sermons. Services at the Faith Worship Center are "explosive and high energy," she said.

That won't change when the congregation moves to newer and grander facilities. If anything, Hardman expects the congregation to grow as the ministries grow. There are currently 20 people on staff. Soon, they'll be joined by a Spanish-speaking preacher, who will host a third Sunday service.

The center will open on Easter Sunday, Hardman said. Until that time, the 1,500-member congregation will continue to meet in Ladonia, Ala., where services have been held since the church outgrew its last facility in Phenix City.

"On Sundays, this will be Faith World, because anything is possible. On weekdays, this is the Impact Center," said Hardman, who believes the ministries within the center will have a great impact far beyond the borders of South

Columbus.

That's what Richards' likes to hear.

"I think this building will serve One Columbus," Richards said. That's her goal — to make South Columbus part of a whole, healthy One Columbus.

For too long, she said, this area has been ignored and neglected, relegated to the back burner on issues of funding, education and growth. The communities between Fort Benning and Macon Road suffer from pockets of severe blight. Nowhere is the problem more evident than Victory Drive, the epicenter of revitalization efforts, where too many buildings stand empty and rundown.

Only over the past few years have city officials, as a whole, and South Columbus proponents recognized the need for revitalization and the possibilities for sound development in the city's most diverse region. Hispanics make up the greatest part of the South's population, followed by a near-equal number of blacks and whites. There are also many Asians, Japanese and Germans.

Hardman envisions the Impact Center as the heart of a multicultural community. Change will come gradually she said. It will start on the 1600 block of Blanchard Boulevard and spread outward.

"I think this is going to be an area that will bring pride to our city," Hardman said.

"What has not been respected will now be respected. When you come here, you won't know if you're in Midtown or North Columbus or South Columbus. It will be One Columbus."

Eventually, she said, people will come to recognize Columbus as a "destination city," a term city officials use frequently when expressing a desire to see Columbus coffers padded with tourism dollars.

But Hardman's vision isn't driven by the desire for tourism.

"It's about the people. That's what we're all about," she said. "We're out to show people we're here for you. We're going to show people that the people in this part of town care for everybody."

It's tornado time: Be prepared for foul weather problems

Develop an emergency plan for your family before disaster strikes

MCG CHILDREN'S MEDICAL CENTER
Dr. Natalie Lane

The weather is sultry and there's a hint of rain in the air. Suddenly, the skies grow dark, winds whip around your house and a heavy rain begins to fall. Your television reports a severe weather warning, possible tornadoes and hail.

Do you know what to do?

Disasters can happen at any time, and you could be left without electricity, gas, running water or phone service. Stores and banks could be closed, and roads could be impassable. Help, if needed, could be a long time away.

It's important that you and your family develop a plan to help guide you, should the unthinkable happen.

The MCG Children's Medical Center offers the following checklist to help families prepare in the event of an emergency:

Talk with your family.

Before a disaster happens, be sure to talk with your family to formulate an action plan and answer any questions or allay fears.

Discussion topics should include:

- What is a disaster, what are the most common disasters that could occur in your area and what are the warning signs?
- What needs to happen in case you need to shelter in place or in the event of an evacuation?
- Who should be called in the event of an emergency? Remember to also identify someone out-of-state as a central contact for everyone to call.
- Where should the family meet in case of separation?

- What do you do in case of fire, and where are the escape routes?

Remember, children are not small adults and their imagination can fuel their fears. When talking with children, get down to their eye level and reassure them while providing an honest, realistic picture. Let them know there will be people who can help if they get separated. Encourage them to discuss their fears and feelings, and ask questions. Listen and take their feelings seriously.

Assemble a family disaster kit.

The following items should be assembled in your home, ready to grab in case of an emergency:

- A three-day supply of water and food. Aim for one gallon of water per person per day. Food should require no refrigeration and little or no water. Don't forget the manual can opener.
- A first-aid kit. Include items such as cleanser, sunscreen, laxative and anti-diarrhea medication, along with the more usual first-aid supplies.
- Clothing and bedding. Every person needs one complete change of clothing and footwear. Have sleeping bags and blankets for every person too.
- Tools and emergency supplies. Remember flashlights and batteries, a battery-operated radio, candles and waterproof matches, a shut-off wrench to disable gas and water, signal flare, whistle, plastic sheeting and tape, as well as personal hygiene products, including toilet paper.
- Special items. Keep copies of important documents such as passports, insurance policies, deeds and other records in a portable waterproof container. Originals should be kept in a safe deposit box.
- If anyone in your family has special needs, make sure to keep copies of prescriptions and medical records in a safe place and store a two-week supply of any medicines or necessary supplies.

Tornadoes are one of nature's most violent storms. In an average year, about 1,000 tornadoes are reported across the United States, resulting in 80 deaths and more than 1,500 injuries. A tornado is a violently rotating column of air extending from a thunderstorm to the ground. The most violent tornadoes are capable of tremendous destruction with wind speeds of 250 mph or more. Damage paths can be in excess of one mile wide and 50 miles long. Tornadoes come in all shapes and sizes and can occur anywhere in the U.S. at any time of the year. In the southern states, peak tornado season is March through May, while peak months in the northern states are during the summer.

- Children's needs. For infants, remember comfort items like toys or a blanket as well as extra diapers and formula or powdered milk.

In addition, make sure children know or have on them their address, phone number, parents' names and an emergency contact number in case of separation.

For the older child, a "Get Ready Kit" can be made with games, cards, a favorite toy or stuffed animal, family and pet pictures, books, puzzles, crayons and paper.

Don't forget to include your family pets and their needs during planning.

Learn CPR and first aid.

Check with your local American Red Cross chapter to find out about classes in these topics. Through honest communication and proper planning, your family can be prepared to act, cope and recover in case of any emergency.

Lightning can be lethal: Know how to avoid, survive a strike

Lightning is one of top three causes of weather-related deaths

MCG SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
Bryan Jones

When storms gather, is lightning safety one of your concerns?

If it's not, it should be.

Lightning is one of the top three causes of weather-related fatalities, and it shouldn't be taken lightly.

That's why the MCG Sports Medicine Center offers the following tips on how to stay safe when lightning strikes.

- Before attending an outdoor event, check the weather 24 hours in advance.

- Identify a safe location to take shelter should you get caught in a storm.

Safe places include buildings and fully enclosed vehicles with the windows completely shut.

Unsafe places are golf carts, bleachers, high ground, open spaces, pools or other bodies of water, picnic shelters and under or near trees.

- If you can see or hear lightning, don't wait.

Seek shelter immediately and stay inside until no thunder or lightning have been observed for at least 30 minutes. Don't wait until it rains, as lightning can strike before rain appears.

- If you are unable to seek shelter, find the lowest point possible and crouch down with feet together.

Stay at least seven feet away from any tall structures such as trees or poles.

- If you are indoors, stay away from doors and windows, avoid using sinks and other water sources.

Also, avoid making any telephone calls.

Remove headsets, and turn off, unplug and stay away from appliances.

Lightning can strike exterior phone and electrical lines, causing shocks to inside equipment.

- If someone has been struck by lightning, it is safe to touch them.

A lightning strike does not leave a residual charge in the body, so you should immediately call 911 and attempt CPR if they are not breathing.

By educating yourself and loved ones about appropriate action during a lightning storm, you can help protect yourself from risk of injury, even death.

Lightning strike causes

Injury from a lightning strike may occur in any of these ways:

- Direct strike: Lightning directly strikes a person.
- Contact strike: A person is touching an object (such as a tree or pole) that has been struck by lightning.
- Side splash: Lightning jumps from the primary strike object on its way to the ground.
- Ground strike: Lightning strikes the ground and the current spreads out in a circle from that spot.
- Blunt injury: A person is thrown violently from the lightning strike or from the explosive force that occurs as surrounding air is superheated and rapidly cooled.
- Upward streamer: When a low-energy electrical charge streams upward to meet a downward leader, it may carry enough current to cause electrical injury even if it does not connect with the downward current to complete the lightning strike.

Most Georgia veterans eligible for free license

Recent changes to state law make license good until age 65 with renewal requirement

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Georgia veterans, who served on active duty or active duty in a Reserve component, including the National Guard, during wartime or any conflict when personnel were committed by the President, are probably eligible to receive a free Georgia driver's license.

"More than 75 percent of the some 760,000 veterans living in Georgia served during wartime and the vast majority of them are eligible to receive a free driver's license," said Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler. A driver's license or state ID card is issued free to veterans who were Georgia residents when they entered active duty status and are Georgia residents at the time of application or who have been residents of Georgia for at least two years immediately preceding the date of application for the license.

"You did not have to be assigned to a unit that directly participated in the war or conflict to be eligible for the free license, but you must have been discharged or separated under honorable conditions," Wheeler said. "A veteran could have served during Desert Storm in a stateside assignment and still be eligible for the free license."

A veteran must first present a copy of his or her DD 214 (Certificate of Release of Discharge from Active Duty) to personnel at one of the Department of Veterans Service field offices for review.

Personnel in the office will review the DD 214 and issue a Certificate of Eligibility (DPS 516) to qualified veterans.

The veteran then must take the DD 214 and the certificate of eligibility to any of the state's Department of Driver Services examining offices for any required test and issuance of the free license.

Veterans who qualify should know that a recent change to Georgia law makes a veteran's free drivers license good until age 65 with a renewal requirement, Wheeler said. State law requires all drivers age 64 and older to pass an eye exam at a licensing facility every five years.

This new veteran benefit comes as the state's Department of Driver Services finalizes procedures to increase the expiration date for all Georgia drivers to either five or 10 years. Georgia drivers now have the option to choose a five-year license or ID for $20 or a 10-year license or ID for $35.

Any member or former member of the National Guard or Reserves who has 20 or more years of creditable service is also eligible for a free license.

"To obtain the license, the individual needs only to provide a copy of a certificate, orders or other official document establishing their eligibility to personnel at the state examining office," Wheeler said. "The required documents can be obtained from the state adjutant general or from the custodian of personnel records of the Reserves."

"An unmarried surviving spouse of a veteran may also qualify for an honorary license," Wheeler said.

The honorary license may also be issued to a resident of Georgia who is the spouse of a veteran who would be qualified to receive a veteran's license but who is disabled to the extent that he or she cannot operate a motor vehicle.

Wheeler encouraged veterans and surviving spouses who believe they might be eligible for a free driver's license to visit one of the Department's veteran service offices. Office locations and phone numbers are listed in local telephone directories under state government or can be found at www.sdv.s.gov.

VA's 'Aid and Attendance' payments under used

Benefit may be available to wartime veterans and surviving spouses

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

There is an under-used, special monthly pension benefit available to Georgia's wartime veterans and surviving spouses of deceased wartime veterans incapable of self support and in need of regular personal assistance.

"Many wartime veterans and surviving spouses whose incomes are above the federally mandated limit for a basic VA pension may still be eligible for pension at the higher housebound or Aid and Attendance rate," said

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler.

"Although this is not a new program, not everyone is aware of his or her potential eligibility."

The Aid and Attendance pension benefit may be available to any wartime veterans and surviving spouses who have in-home care or who live in nursing homes or assisted-living facilities.

"Especially helpful if they have large medical expenses that they may not receive reimbursement," Wheeler said.

For a wartime veteran or surviving spouse to qualify for this special monthly pension, the veteran must have served at least 90 days of active military service, one day of which was during a period of war, and be discharged under conditions other than dishonorable.

Wartime veterans who entered active duty on or after Sept. 8, 1980, (Oct. 16, 1981, for officers) must have completed at least 24 continuous months of military service or the period for which they were ordered to active duty.

The Aid and Attendance income threshold for a veteran without dependents is now $18,234 annually.

The threshold increases to $21,615 if a veteran has one dependent, and by $1,866 for each additional dependent.

The annual Aid and Attendance threshold for a surviving spouse alone is $11,715. This threshold increases to $13,976 if there is one dependent child and by $1,866 for each additional child.

Wheeler encouraged those veterans or spouses who feel they may be eligible to contact the department's field office nearest to where they live for more information and assist on how to go about filing for this benefit.

"All our benefits counselors stay ready to advise and assist with this and all matters pertaining to veterans and their dependents," Wheeler said. "Because like most all entitlements, veteran's benefits are not awarded automatically, they must be applied for."

Contact information of the nearest field office can be found in the local phone book in the state government section under Department of Veterans Service or through the department's Web site at www.sdv.s.gov.

All offices are open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, except on approved state-recognized holidays.

Nothing strikes fear in the average person like hearing that he or she must have surgery. The mere thought of someone slicing open your body, invading it with steel instruments and removing your tissue is enough to make any of us curl into the fetal position. And, what about our consternation over the amount of recovery time, our fears about pain during the healing process, and our worries about the residual and often permanent scarring.

Pardon the pun, but cutting-edge surgical techniques now make much of that apprehension a thing of the past for some patients. Minimally invasive (laparoscopic and flexible endoscopic) techniques are among the latest in a host of surgical advances that are happening every day at MCG Health System. Whether our surgeons pioneer some techniques or master others, our patients are placed at the center of care delivery and benefit from these methods by having less blood loss, less pain, faster recovery times, less scarring, and other physical and emotional comforts.

Minimally invasive or laparoscopic surgery is performed with a laparoscope, which is a camera that allows the surgeon to see or to capture images of what's inside the body. Minimally invasive surgery allows surgeons to completely explore the inside of a body cavity and to remove or repair parts of the body through incisions as small as a dime.

Over the past five years, MCG has invested $72.5 million in improving our facilities and technologies. The Children's Medical Center is already equipped with state-of-the-art operating endosuites, instruments, and a Stryker Navigational System, which helps surgeons achieve pinpoint precision with surgical tools.

Science fiction meets science fact

What was once the stuff of Hollywood—camera traveling through the human body—is now medical reality. MCG gastroenterologist Dr. Sherman Chamberlain performs capsule endoscopies to locate troublesome malformations of the small intestines.

The capsule is a small, vitamin-pill sized video camera. While the capsule travels through the body, it sends images to a data recorder worn around the patient's waist. The patient swallows the capsule on an empty stomach approximately eight hours before the physician is to download and review the video. The capsule passes naturally through the digestive tract.

"Obscure gastrointestinal bleeding, which represents five percent of all gastrointestinal bleeding, is not found by traditional methods of colonoscopy and small bowel enteroscopy. The purpose of wireless capsule endoscopy is to provide evaluation of the small bowel that otherwise would not be found by traditional means," said Chamberlain.

"Previous tests to diagnose conditions of the small bowel were effective in only five to 10 percent of cases. The wireless capsule endoscopy, on the other hand, has been shown to provide diagnosis in 50 to 60 percent of cases." Many of these abnormalities, once identified, can be treated using minimally invasive surgery techniques (laparoscopy).

Laparoscopic surgery is the latest in colon surgery

Colorectal cancer is the third most common cancer and the third leading cause of cancer-related death in the U.S. While laparoscopic colectomies were first performed in the early 1990s, fewer than 10 percent of colon resections performed in the U.S. today are done using laparoscopy because of the required advanced skills and training needed to perform the operation safely.

There were several reasons why there was a slow acceptance of colon resection for cancer using laparoscopy. In earlier reports, some patients developed cancer at the scar site after laparoscopic surgery. We wondered if laparoscopic surgery was the same as open surgery for colon cancer. Several studies comparing the laparoscopic and open surgery for colon cancer have been done. They show that laparoscopy is as good as open surgery in removing colon cancer.

It does not cause cancer to develop at the scar site more often than the open surgery. There are many benefits to colon resection using laparoscopy. These include less blood loss, less pain, a reduced chance of infections, earlier return of bowel function, shorter hospital stay, quicker recovery and return to work, improved quality of life and better cosmetic outcome.

Finding hidden GI cancers

Technology similar to that used by your local meteorologist can now find and treat tumors hidden inside the walls of the digestive tract, esophagus and other organs.

While meteorologists use Doppler radar (ultrasound) to bounce sound waves off objects like raindrops to predict weather patterns, doctors use ultrasound to bounce sound waves off organs inside the body to diagnose disease. Gastroenterologists use endoscopic ultrasound to diagnose and treat diseases and tumors inside the gastrointestinal tract.

"The latest version of endoscopic ultrasound allows gastroenterologists to see both detailed linear (straight ahead) and radial (all around) views of the inside of the esophagus, stomach, the first part of the small intestine, rectum and sigmoid colon, as well as organs such as the pancreas and gall bladder," said MCG gastroenterologist Dr. Ayaz Chaudhary. Detailed views can actually penetrate the four layers of tissue walls to discover and stage tumors hidden inside those layers, as well as diagnose diseases such as pancreatitis and gall stones.

"The same technology can then be used to treat disease," said Chaudhary. Tumors can be biopsied or removed, nerve blocks can be administered to control the pain of pancreatitis, and lymph nodes can be sampled, among other therapies.

Gone and going are the days of long incisions, unsightly scars, recuperations that last weeks and months and excruciating post-surgical pain.

Today, surgery can be performed using minimally invasive techniques that get you out of the hospital and on the road to enjoying a pain- and scar-free return to your way of life.

With the American Red Cross, You're Never Out of Touch.

Members of the U.S. Armed Forces don't have to be deployed or even on active duty to benefit from a relationship with the American Red Cross. You're an integral part of the military family. And you—or your family—may need us someday.

As a community-based military man or woman, you and your family can receive the same valuable Red Cross emergency services as full-time active duty military personnel. We offer emergency communications and other services when you need it most.

With the American Red Cross, you're never out of touch. Please, get to know us before you need us by contacting your local American Red Cross chapter or the Red Cross office on your military installation.

Oxbow Meadows has nature trails and animals and many other hands-on learning tools in its center.

Oxbow has a butterfly garden in front of its environmental learning center that will attract many colorful butterflies in the coming months.

The environmental learning center, which has a $1 admission fee to cover the upkeep of the animals, has reptiles, insects, amphibians, owls, fish and other wildlife inside. There are many hands-on tools and a wealth of information available.

The two nature walking trails are open to the public while the learning center is open. The center has free bird species pamphlets, which were put together by the Department of Natural Resources, for those interested in seeing and learning about native birds.

The Treetop Trail allows visitors to get a glimpse of the landscape from the top of the canopy.

Oxbow Meadows has many reptiles in its environmental learning center, including an African spur-thighed tortoise, a gopher tortoise and a box turtle, left to right. Oxbow, which is part of Columbus State University and Columbus Water Works, will hold its annual reptile fest from noon to 4 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $2 per person and children younger than 4 are admitted free.

Annual reptile fest Sunday will have snakes, lizards, alligators and turtles

THE BAYONET

Just a few miles from Fort Benning is an environmental learning center and park in the wetlands on a bend in the Chattahoochee River.

The 1600-acre park, called Oxbow Meadows, has a variety of animals and other hands-on learning tools for people of all ages. The park has nature trails and a Treetop Trail that is the only one of its kind in the U.S. The park is connected to the Riverwalk.

On the second Sunday of every month, Oxbow holds its Second Sunday Series, which vary in topic. March's program is a reptile festival.

The reptile fest is noon to 4 p.m. Sunday at Oxbow. The $2 admission gets you in to see a wide variety of reptiles, including alligators.

The alligator programs will be at 1 and 3 p.m. There will be refreshments, plants for sale and children's crafts and activities. Visitors can touch a snake or turtle and have their picture taken with a snake.

New this year is the "Hiss Columbus Pageant," where people of all ages can enter their non-venomous snakes and lizards in a pageant. Registration starts at 1 p.m. the day of the festival and the pageant is at 2 p.m. Prizes will be awarded for various categories, and the entry fee is $1.

Oxbow is available for field trips for schools, daycares, Scout groups and adult groups with a small fee per person. Birthday parties can also be held at the park.

Scout groups have helped with several projects at Oxbow, including the alligator enclosure and a Native American dwelling.

A beekeeping workshop will be March 24 and 31 with a fee of $69 per person, which includes lunch both days.

Guided tours of the Treetop Trail are $4 per person and are given on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

The learning center is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission to the learning center is a suggested donation of $1 per person, and the proceeds go toward the upkeep of the animals and education programs.

Oxbow Meadows is located at 3535 South Lumpkin Road in Columbus, just a few miles from the Lumpkin Road access point on Fort Benning. Oxbow is across the street from the future home of the National Infantry Museum.

For more information, call 706-687-4090 or go to <http://oxbow.colstate.edu>.

OPENING TODAY

300 — The movie is set in the midst of the Persian-Greco war during the Battle of Thermopylae, where Spartan king Leonidas led his army of 300 soldiers into battle against the invading Persian army.

According to legend, their valor and sacrifice inspired all of Greece to unite against their Persian foe, leading to the origins of democracy.

300 is rated R for graphic battle sequences throughout, some sexuality and nudity.

ALSO IN THEATERS

ZODIAC — As a serial killer terrifies the San Francisco Bay Area and taunts police with his ciphers and letters, investigators in four jurisdictions search for the murderer. The case will become an obsession for four men as their lives and careers are built and destroyed by the endless trail of clues. Jake Gyllenhaal, Mark Ruffalo, Robert Downey Jr. and Anthony Edwards star in the film.

Zodiac is rated R for some strong killings, language, drug material and brief sexual images.

WILD HOGS — A group of middle-aged friends (John Travolta, Tim Allen, Martin Lawrence, William H. Macy) decide to rev up their routine suburban lives with a freewheeling motorcycle trip.

Taking a long dreamed-of breather from their stressful jobs and family responsibilities, they can't wait to feel the freedom of the open road.

When this mismatched foursome — who have grown far more used to the couch than the saddle — set out for this once-in-a-lifetime experience, they encounter a world that holds far more than they ever bargained for.

Wild Hogs is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content and some violence.

BLACK SNAKE MOAN — Bitter and broken from a cheating wife and a shattered marriage, Lazarus' (Samuel L. Jackson) soul is lost in spent dreams and betrayal's contempt — until Rae (Christina Ricci).

Half naked and beaten unconscious, Rae is left for dead on the side of the road when Lazarus discovers her.

The God-fearing, middle-aged black man learns that the young white woman he's nursing back to health is none other than the town tramp from the small Tennessee town where they live. Worse, she has a peculiar anxiety disorder. He realizes when the fever hits, Rae's affliction has more to do with love lost than any found.

He chains her to his radiator, justifying his unorthodox methods with quoted scripture.

Black Snake Moan is rated R for strong sexual content, language, some violence and drug use.

THE ASTRONAUT FARMER — An astronaut (Billy Bob Thornton) is forced to leave NASA to save his family farm but continues to dream of space travel and sets out to build a rocket inside his barn.

Though his neighbors consider him an oddity, the media considers him a story, and the government considers him a threat, nothing can deter him from his dream to break through the atmosphere and orbit the earth.

The Astronaut Farmer is rated PG for Gerard Butler stars in the movie 300, opening nationwide in theaters today.

thematic material, peril and language.

THE ABANDONED — An American woman searching for her birth parents learns she has inherited a house in the middle of a forest in a remote area of Russia — the house where she was born.

Abandoned and uninhabited for 40 years, it stands in total disrepair and neglect. She meets a mysterious man who claims to be her brother, a twin she never knew. Together they find the house holds secrets to a past they don't remember.

Together they are forced to relive a series of horrifying events and shocking murders that occurred just after they were born, in the place they were supposed to die.

The movie stars Jordanka Angelova and Kaliln Arsov.

The Abandoned is rated R for violence and gore, some disturbing images, nudity and language.

THE NUMBER 23 — A man's life unravels after he comes into contact with an obscure book titled The Number 23.

As he reads the book, he becomes increasingly convinced that it is based on his own life.

His obsession with the number 23 starts to consume him, and he begins to realize the book forecasts far graver consequences for his life than he could have ever imagined.

The Number 23, rated R for violence, disturbing images, sexuality and language, stars Jim Carrey and Virginia Madsen.

RENO 911!: MIAMI — The officers of the Reno police department visit a national police convention in Miami Beach.

When the convention center is bio-attacked, it's up to Reno's "finest" to save the day. Robert Ben Garant, Thomas Lennon, Niecy Nash, Mary Birdsong and Cedric Yarbrough star in the movie.

Reno 911!: Miami is rated R for sexual content, nudity, crude humor, language and drug use.

GHOST RIDER — A motorcycle stuntman, Johnny Blaze (Nicolas Cage), makes a pact with a dark force, selling his soul to save his girlfriend (Eva Mendes).

When the bargain goes sour and the girl isn't saved, Blaze is transformed, gaining raging superpowers.

The movie is based on the Marvel comic series.

Ghost Rider is rated PG-13 for horror violence and disturbing images.

BRIDGE TO TERABITHIA — An 11-year-old boy has his life changed forever when he befriends the class outsider, a girl. Together they create the world of Terabithia, an imaginary kingdom filled with giants, trolls and other magical beings.

Bridge to Terabithia, starring AnnaSophia Robb and Josh Hutcherson, is rated PG for thematic elements including bullying, some peril and mild language.

BREACH — Eric O'Neill (Ryan Phillippe) is promoted to a job inside FBI headquarters working for respected agent Robert Hanssen (Chris Cooper). Then O'Neill learns his true mission: finding proof that Hanssen has been selling American secrets to the Soviet Union for years.

Breach is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual content and language.

TYLER PERRY'S DADDY'S LITTLE GIRLS — A successful female attorney falls in love with a janitor, the single father of three daughters, over the objections of her father.

Tyler Perry's Daddy's Little Girls, rated PG-13 for thematic material, drug and sexual content, some violence and language, stars Gabrielle Union, Avant and Louis Gossett Jr.

HANNIBAL RISING — In Eastern Europe at the end of World War II, a young Hannibal watches as his parents violently die, leaving his young sister in his care.

Alone and without any means of support, he is forced to live in a Soviet orphanage.

He flees to Paris to find that his uncle has died, but his Japanese widow Lady Murasaki (Gong Li) welcomes him. Even her kindness and love cannot soothe the nightmares and sorrows that plague him.

Showing a cunning aptitude for science, he is accepted into medical school, which serves to hone his skills and provide him the tools to exact justice on the war criminals that haunt him day and night.

This quest will ignite an insatiable lust within a serial killer who was not born, but made.

The movie also stars Gaspard Ulliel, Rhys Ifans, Ivan Marevich and Dominic West.

Hannibal Rising is rated R for strong grisly violent content and some language and sexual references.

NORBIT — Norbit (Eddie Murphy) has never had it easy. As a baby, he was abandoned on the steps of a Chinese restaurant and orphanage and raised by Mr. Wong.

Things get worse when he's forced into marriage by the mean, junk-food chugging queen Rasputia.

Just when Norbit's hanging by his last thread, his childhood sweetheart, Kate, moves back to town.

Norbit, rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, some nudity and language, also stars Thandie Newton, Cuba Gooding Jr., Eddie Griffin and Terry Crews.

THE MESSENGERS — A family moves into a rundown sunflower farm. As the farm begins to revive after years of disrepair, the family begins to notice uncomfortable and alarming changes in their father's behavior.

The Messengers, rated PG-13 for mature thematic material, disturbing violence and terror, stars Kristen Stewart, Dylan McDermott, Penelope Ann Miller and John Corbett.

NEW RELEASES

CASINO ROYALE: After much controversy over his inheriting the role, Daniel Craig proved a terrific choice as the newest James Bond in Golden-Eye director Martin Campbell's serious, inspired treatment of Ian Fleming's first novel about the British secret agent. After earning his license to kill, Agent 007 is sent to make sure terrorism financier Le Chiffre (Mads Mikkelsen) doesn't win a big card game to bankroll further mayhem. Eva Green plays Vesper Lynd, the treasury agent who melts Bond's heart, and Judi Dench reprises the part of Bond's boss "M." DVD extras: two "making-of" documentaries; Bond Girls Are Forever documentary; music video You Know My Name by Chris Cornell. (PG-13:AS, N, P, V)

THE HOLIDAY: Two women, played by Kate Winslet and Cameron Diaz, trade countries and lives in writer-director Nancy Meyers' (Something's Gotta Give) enjoyable romantic comedy. On the heels of suffering romantic disappointments, they encounter each other online and agree to trade homes for the holiday season; Winslet's character gets an unlikely love match in a composer (Jack Black) in Los Angeles, while in England, Diaz falls for Winslet's brother (Jude Law). DVD extras: "making-of" documentary; audio

CC's Place: Good food at a good price

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

As far as I can tell, there's only one place that serves Fort Benning fries. You can get them at CC's Place on Fort Benning Road.

Me, I didn't try them, because they looked a lot like French fries and not nearly as good as the Western omelet.

The omelet was everything it should be, and I would go so far as to say it was the best Western omelet I've ever eaten if I weren't overly conscious about how pathetic that makes me sound. Waxing on about an omelet. Geeze.

But those who know me well know I'm passionate about a good breakfast that doesn't include any of the ingredients that play havoc with my glucose levels.

Yep, you're taking advice from a gal who can't eat half of what's on the menu. But that's OK, because the half I sampled at CC's was enough to earn my wholehearted endorsement. Go. Eat. It's really, really good. I'm told the double-stacker cheeseburger beats all.

CC's has been around for 20 years or so. For the past seven, it's been owned by Bill Pauke, a former Soldier, and his wife, Suki.

The shop itself is nothing to write home about, but it's clean and comfortable and conducive to long, leisurely meals and good conversation.

The wait staff, which consists of Bill, Suki, and a couple of kindly waiters, treat their customers like company. Come in, sit a spell, and they'll keep the coffee coming. On my second visit, I felt just a little bit like kinfolk. I got a pat on the back and a genuine, friendly smile. I felt welcome, and that's no small thing.

CC's, which bills itself as "good food at a good price," is located in a building that originally housed Georgia's first Kentucky Fried Chicken. I'm telling you this because I found it interesting, that's all. You can skip this paragraph altogether.

But don't skip breakfast. CC's starts serving at 6 a.m. Until 11 a.m., weekdays and noon on Saturday, they serve traditional breakfast fare, including omelets, pancakes, French toast, sandwiches, biscuits, grits, home fries, hash browns and "the special" — eggs cooked to order with your choice of ham, sausage or bacon and two sides.

Lunch, served until 3 p.m. Monday through Saturday, includes burgers, sandwiches, fried chicken, hot wings, salads, fried rice and a variety of dinner plates.

Eighty percent of his customers are Soldiers, retirees and contractors from Fort Benning, Bill said. That's why he serves up big portions, whether he's serving steaks — cubed, peppered or hamburgered — pork schnitzel or salmon patties. Meals come with traditional Southern sides, like green beans, lima beans, macaroni and cheese, collards, cabbage, mashed potatoes and gravy.

Breakfast set me back less than $5, but a big old lunch may cost as much as $7. Plan accordingly.

For more information about CC's or to order from their carry out menu, call 706-682-8888.

Book review

The First Heroes

Nelson's book recounts attack on Japan after Pearl Harbor

BAYONET
CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Following the attack on Pearl Harbor, the United States and its allies desperately needed a victory to show the world that the Axis powers were not invincible.

"The First Heroes", written by Craig Nelson, is a riveting account of the surprise bombing raid on the Japanese homeland carried out by Lt. Col. James H. Doolittle and his brave volunteer band of Army Air Corps fliers.

The daring plan to launch bombers that were never intended to fly from the deck of an aircraft carrier caught the Japanese military command totally off guard. All 16 planes successfully dropped their deadly cargo onto targets throughout the Japanese islands.

This well-researched book follows the plan from its inception through the mission and its aftermath. It tells the fate of all the raiders after the bombs were dropped and the planes continued until the crews were forced to bail out, ditch or crash land, often in hostile or inhospitable territory.

Many of the raiders who survived the raid died later as a result of accidents or combat after joining other units.

Some were interned in the Soviet Union and one crew was caught by the Japanese and suffered torture, mistreatment and execution at the hands of their captors.

The author went to great lengths to research his subject and there are 16 pages of archival pictures that give readers an insight as to the type of equipment used during the raid.

Pictures of all the crews allow the reader to give faces to names found in the book.

"The First Heroes" is a great read and heartily recommended by this reviewer to anyone interested in WWII history and the early days of the Army Air Corps.

Bill Goldberg shifts gears again with Spike's Bullrun

ZAP2IT

Mike Frey

When injuries forced Bill Goldberg to retire after a brief career in the NFL more than a decade ago, he stepped into the squared circle and became a pro wrestling icon. Now that he has hung up his trunks, he hopes to reinvent himself once again as the host of Bullrun, premiering Tuesday on Spike TV.

"I've had a relationship with Spike for a couple of years, and we've been searching for the right project," said Goldberg, who previously appeared on the network's sports reality series Pros vs. Joes. "Bullrun was it."

The new series features 12 teams of two drivers in a series of challenges and a cross-country rally race, with a $200,000 prize at stake. Goldberg said there are rules, but not many.

"First and foremost, you can't break the speed limit — or, let me say, you're not supposed to break the speed limit. Obviously, for insurance purposes, that's our opening statement to these people. Not to say it isn't done. I'd say that's pretty much it. That and they aren't able to have any advantages. Monetarily they have $2,000 cash, no credit cards, no cell phones, no GPS, no navigational equipment whatsoever. They have to do it on their own."

The contestants compete with their own cars (including one Lamborghini Murcielago worth more than the prize money) and at their own risk.

"Nobody got hurt," Goldberg said. "There's no question that some cars get damaged, but that's the chance they take. They were told in the beginning, in the interview process, that they were going to have to go through some challenges that would put their cars and themselves in jeopardy. It's all about how bad you want it."

Goldberg, a former WWE and WCW champion, brings more to Bullrun than just his tough, Spike-ready persona; he also has a passion for cars. Luckily for the competitors — and maybe for himself, as well — Goldberg opts to follow the action in a Winnebago rather than joining it in one of the nearly two dozen cars from his personal collection.

"The one that I would choose is probably the most uncomfortable car on the planet," he said. "It's a 1965 Cobra with a Winston Cup motor in it that puts out about 800-900 horsepower. There's no question I would have won every challenge, but I sure would have frozen my butt off getting from point A to point B."

Goldberg actually has more important plans for that Cobra. He intends to one day pass it and his entire collection on to his first son, Gage, who turns 1 in May. Fatherhood has forced Goldberg to adjust his priorities, which he says is the biggest challenge of being a parent.

"It's not waking up at 4 in the morning and changing a diaper that smells like a septic tank. It's being selfless — not thinking about me anymore, thinking about him. That's it. Period. That's a total change in my life."

Courtesy photo

Bill Goldberg appears in Bullrun, premiering Tuesday on Spike TV.

He isn't complaining, though. Challenges and all, being a family man is the part of his latest reinvention that he cherishes most.

"It's calmed me down a little bit," Goldberg said. "Becoming a husband and a father obviously makes you grow up. It changes your perspective on everything. I don't do anything for myself anymore. Everything I do, every business venture I get into is for my son, for my wife ... going from being No. 1 and being Goldberg to being No. 3 and just being Dad isn't so bad."

In other words, Goldberg's retirement from wrestling is a permanent one.

While he remains involved in ring action as a mixed martial arts commentator for Showtime's Elite Xtreme Combat, he says his wrestling days are over.

"You never say never, but I don't foresee myself putting those underwear on and wrestling in front of millions of people anymore. I'm 40 years old, I'm a father ... and I'm not a big fan of the story lines that are out there these days. That's a contributing factor — the largest factor that made me quit the business. It wasn't because it was tough, it wasn't because I was hurt. I don't want to be hypocritical and I don't want to be a part of something that I wouldn't let my kids watch."

Goldberg clearly has more reasons than ever to stay home and enjoy his retirement and his family.

FORT BENNING TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with a valid ID card.

Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible to ensure a fast refund.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: a valid ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater.

Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

The Tax Center will be closed Monday and March 19 so volunteers can help Soldiers in training prepare their taxes.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

WASHINGTON — Suspected al Qaeda operative Khalid Sheikh Muhammad has admitted masterminding the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks as well as the World Trade Center bombing in 1993.

"I was responsible for the 9/11 operation, from A to Z," an interpreter read from Muhammad's statement to the Combatant Status Review Tribunal Saturday in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The tribunal was an administrative trial to determine only whether Muhammad could be designated as an enemy combatant. Muhammad used the opportunity to submit,

Rangers 'Make a Wish' come true

14-year-old boy earns

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

When Master Sgt. Jose Marengo learned of Riley Woina's quest to become a Ranger, the 6th Ranger Training Battalion operations sergeant didn't hold much hope it would happen. Woina, 14, suffers from cystic fibrosis. Marengo wanted more than anything to make Riley's dream come true. He just didn't think it could happen.

"Me, personally, I didn't think the chain of command would allow it," Marengo said. "It's Ranger School."

Now, he said, he has the utmost respect for his leaders "from the top down" who partnered with the Make-A-Wish Foundation. Not only did they make a little boy's dream come true, but they pulled out all the stops to make it happen.

Riley spent a week with the Rangers at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., with his parents, Sue and Gary, and his brother, Ryan. There he flew in a Huey, crawled through the mud, rode in a Zodiac, crossed a rope bridge and opted out of rappelling.

"That was too scary," he said. "I just couldn't do it."

But there was very little Riley couldn't — or wouldn't — do, Marengo said. Just as Ranger School officials rose to the challenge of fulfilling Riley's dream, the Plymouth, Conn., eighth-grader rose to every challenge they threw his way.

"When we planned all this, we thought about what a 14-year-old would really like to do," he said. "We figured he'd want to shoot. He'd want to see things blow up, to see snakes and ride in a plane and that kind of thing. The things any 14-year-old would want to do."

But Riley isn't any 14-year-old. Cystic fibrosis causes a buildup of mucus that makes breathing

Volunteers help 3rd BCT Soldiers transition from family to mission before leaving airfield

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

With the last of 3rd Brigade Combat Team deploying Thursday, volunteers with the USO, Association of the U.S. Army, Red Cross and other organizations made sure Soldiers were comfortable while they waited for the planes taking them to Iraq.

More than 82 dozen donuts, 200 pizzas, bananas, candy bars, chewing gum and scores of paperback books were on hand at Freedom Hall to ease the transition from family time on Kelley Hill to loading planes for Operation Iraqi Freedom. This is the unit's third deployment to Iraq. And Maj. James Carlisle's second.

"This makes you feel special, the stuff they're bringing out is incredible — the pizza, books, magazines, snacks, friendly faces," the brigade's civil affairs officer said. "I'm sitting in a recliner, reading Reader's Digest and a bathroom's less than 30 yards away. When we get to Iraq, it'll be an austere environment with lots of work."

Which is the reason retired Command Sgt. Maj. Virgil Greene met and shook hands with

The Thunder in the Valley air show takes off this weekend and will bring a father-daughter wing walking team, aerobatics teams, a jet-powered dragster and a search and rescue helicopter from New Orleans to Columbus.

The Thunder in the Valley air show is 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at the Columbus Metro airport.

"Thunder in the Valley is one of the community's largest family-oriented events, with lots of planes and aerobatics," said Don Sharritt, executive director for Boy Scouts of America.

"We bring in the top national performers to come and do their aerobatics demonstrations," said Robert Kemp, air show chairman. One group of performers not to be missed is the Aeroshell T-6 Aerobatic Team, which performs precision formation aerobatic maneuvers, including the breathtaking "switch blade," according to the team's Web site.

The Aeroshell team flies WWII trainer aircraft with loud engines, Kemp said.

An HH-65 Dolphin helicopter from the New Orleans Coast Guard station will demonstrate a search and rescue mission. The Dolphin helicopters were used during Hurricane Katrina to rescue people.

Visitors can enjoy concessions and have the opportunity to experience flight simulators and helicopter and airplane rides. Infantry vehicles and weapons, vintage WWII Warbirds and modern military aircraft can be seen at the show.

The air show is a great way to enjoy the springtime in an alcohol and tobacco free family environment, Kemp said.

And it's also a great way to meet the future of the Army.

Fort Benning brings basic trainees out to the air show, and for members of the community who don't usually get to meet Soldiers, it's a chance to come face to face with young Soldiers who will soon be defending our country, Kemp said.

"It's a good chance to shake a hand and say thank you for what you're doing," he said.

This year's show celebrates 100 years of flight in Georgia. Ben Epps was the first Georgian to build and fly an airplane, and he accomplished the feat in 1907 in Athens, Ga.

The show gates open at 10 a.m. for people to come in and see the displays, and at 12:30 p.m. the planes will start revving up for the 1 to 4 p.m. performances, Kemp said.

Bob Essell and Jenny Forsythe are the only father-daughter wing-walking team, the only team to use a monoplane, and they are the only team to use

Upgrades, renovations to be made to Commissary, AAFES structures

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

The Fort Benning Commissary and Army and Air Force Exchange Service provide goods, merchandise and services to our military families. Our Commissary is first class and will get even better in the future. Due to the recent Base Realignment and Closure announcement and the expected increase in military personnel and their families at Fort Benning, our Commissary has been authorized by Congress and DeCA to expand from its current size of 68,486 square feet to 112,256 square feet in the next few years. DeCA estimates it will cost approximately $15 million to upgrade Fort Benning's Commissary, and until that upgrade is made, the Commissary plans on making the aisles a little longer and wider to ease crowding on heavy shopping days. This will be done while maintaining the total number of products being offered.

AAFES generates millions of dollars which goes toward improving Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs around the world. In fiscal year 2006, our AAFES contributed $1.8 million for MWR program and infrastructure improvements. A small percentage of that money is spent on building and improving exchange stores, such as the new facilities and upgrades currently in the works. Most notable of these improvements and upgrades is the new Main Mall PX now under construction and scheduled to open around Thanksgiving, and the Main Post Furniture Store on Edwards Street that will open soon.

Both stores will offer more items in a larger retail space while saving authorized shoppers about 20 percent in average overall cost compared to off-post retailers. Once the new Main Mall PX opens, the existing AAFES building will be renovated to accommodate a new Army in-processing center.

Other AAFES projects currently going on around post include a new mini mall next to Sayers Memorial Library, which is scheduled to open later this spring, and a new Shoppette on Custer Road that is expected to open early this fall. The Class Six store will remain at its current location on Main Post across from the Pins and Daubers Bingo Hall and will soon undergo an image upgrade.

The Martin Army Hospital Branch Shoppette is also upgrading and adding a concession flower shop. For those with refined tastes, the Spa with Starbucks Coffee shop is still on track and expected to open in McGraw Manor later this year. In the near future, AAFES is looking into upgrading or renovating the Airborne, Harmony Church and Infantry Hall shoppettes and Sand Hill PX, and possibly opening a new Shoppette in Patton Village.

Your generous support of the facilities here on post helps contribute to a better quality of life for all members of the Army family. Thank you for helping to make this a win-win situation for everyone!

VARIOUS VOICES

What characteristics define your generation?

We're free to do anything we want to do. We have more freedoms, more opportunities, whether it's education or whatever. We're fearless.

— Spc. Benjamin Roa, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment

Our work ethic. We still believe that in order to get it, you have to earn it. We stick to it.

— Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Rickey Talley, Columbus

Our morals are very different than today's younger generations. More conservative. We're more thankful for what we have.

— Shirley Branch, wife of retired Soldier

My generation is more responsible. The younger generation hops from job to job. They live for today. We plan for the future.

— Alprecia Blake, Wachovia Bank

We know how to have fun.

— Pfc. Trent Boone, Infantry Training Brigade

I think we're more focused on what we want to do with our future. We have more of a drive to succeed.

— Shawn Nelson, high school student

My generation is all about getting ahead. We're saving for retirement. We're focused. You gotta stay focused if you want to have anything when you retire.

— Sgt. 1st Class Deidre Crowell, Medical Hold Battalion

We're unique. We're trendsetters. We're taking America to another level in technology and academics and fashion.

It's your life. Are you who you want to be?

Song helps cousin recall Soldier's dedication to country, community

ARNOLD ENGINEERING DEVELOPMENT CENTER PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Whitney Rogers

I will never forget that Sunday afternoon in Maryville, Tenn., when my parents received a phone call. My mom answered the phone and made the telltale gasping noise she only makes when something is wrong. She started crying, hung up and told us my cousin had been killed in Iraq.

Staff Sgt. Daniel Morris, 28, died Nov. 25 in Al Judiah, Iraq, when a roadside bomb exploded near his vehicle.

Daniel was one of four Soldiers in the Humvee. The others received varying degrees of injuries.

Daniel was a Bradley Armored Personnel Carrier operator assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

Sometime after Daniel's funeral, I was on my way home from work, stuck in interstate traffic, when I heard the song, This Is Your Life by Switchfoot.

Within the song is the lyric, "This is your life, are you who you want to be?"

I began thinking about my cousin and all of the events surrounding his death. While listening to that song, I realized the type of person Daniel really was.

Daniel was a loving person. He was a son, a father and a Christian.

But most importantly, he was a Soldier. When he was just a kid, Daniel had dreamed of joining the Army.

He was exactly who he wanted to be. The stories friends and family shared about Daniel's faith and commitment to duty reinforced that.

For example, Daniel bought a car for the sole purpose of picking people up and taking them to church on Sunday mornings.

He bought a riding lawnmower so members of his church congregation could mow their property.

Everything he did, he did for the glory of God.

There is one story in particular I will never forget. The Reverend Matthew Reed, the minister at the church Daniel attended near Fort Hood, keeps a map with pushpins in it to show where all the Soldiers he knows are deployed.

Before Daniel left for his second tour of duty in Iraq, he gave the reverend a Purple Heart pushpin.

Daniel may have felt he was not coming home, but he went anyway.

He went and proudly served his country.

And, like so many of our Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines, he gave his life for his country and for the Iraqi people. It was who he was.

He likely could have answered the song's question, "Are you who you want to be?" without giving it a second thought. The lessons I learned from Daniel are amazing.

I realize that I am not invincible. Along with the good, bad things can and will happen. What is important is how I choose to deal with whatever happens.

I have learned that making the most of my life should be a much higher priority on my to-do list.

I cannot accomplish anything by sitting back, being complacent and letting the world move around me.

Instead, I should, as they say, "Grab the bull by the horns" and take advantage of every opportunity that comes my way.

Daniel will always be my hero.

He will always be an example of someone who unselfishly gave his life and lived every moment being exactly who he wanted to be.

Not everyone can say the same.

The challenge? It's your life. Are you who you want to be?

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Thank you

We want to thank you, the Fort Benning community, for all that you have done to support the 3rd Brigade Combat Team in our preparations for deployment and all that you will do during our deployment to support the great Sledgehammer team.

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski and his deputy, Col. Michael S. Linnington, and their sergeants major have been a trusted source of wisdom and have continually offered their support in whatever way they could.

Their professionalism and commitment to the Army team have been truly appreciated by me and the senior leadership of the Sledgehammer Brigade.

Many commanders and units throughout the Fort Benning footprint have provided resources to support our deployment, whether that resource was time, assistance or Soldiers volunteering to deploy with the 3rd BCT.

At many times, Fort Benning units sacrificed their time and resources to support us.

The dedicated civilians that work for the Army on Fort Benning have always extended a helping hand to the brigade. Agencies such as MWR and ACS and many others attended all of our brigade-level Family Readiness Round-Ups, and the USO, Red Cross and Association of the United States Army see all of our Soldiers off at Lawson Army Airfield.

There will be difficult times in the months ahead and the way ahead will not be easy.

That being said, hard is not hopeless, and we must remain steadfast in our effort to help improve security for the Iraqi people.

When we face the tough times ahead, we will lean on you as teammates in defense of the nation.

Your commitment to the Army and the Sledgehammer Brigade has been essential to our success and we greatly appreciate it.

— Col. Wayne W. Grigsby Jr., Command Sgt. Maj. Jesse L. Andrews, Command Sgt. Maj. James W. Pearson, 3rd Brigade Combat Team

Fort Benning gains help of CALL representatives

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

There's a new group of people on post whose job is to provide units with information on combat and training topics before they even realize they need it.

These representatives are from the Center for Army Lessons Learned, which is currently working on a new deployment handbook to be given to Soldiers going to Iraq. Deploying Soldiers can benefit from the lessons other Soldiers have learned in combat, and that's where CALL comes in to help.

Fort Benning's three CALL representatives serve two purposes on post — to gather lessons learned and to help people do research. They are a liaison between units and CALL, said Maj. Lee Pearce, project officer with the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"We are very excited to have the CALL reps located here. With so many Infantrymen returning here with recent combat experience, the potential for collecting lessons is unlimited," Pearce said.

The recently implemented Lessons Learned Integration Program brought the representatives to post.

"The (purpose) of the program is to speed up the process of taking lessons learned in combat and getting that information into the curriculum of any course it would pertain to and also getting it to units," said Ed Nelson, CALL representative.

"If Soldiers or students have an issue or a lesson, we want them to submit it to us," Pearce said.

Gen. William S. Wallace thought up the Lessons Learned Integration program, known as L2I, while he was a lieutenant general and commander of the Army Combined Arms Center at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where CALL is headquartered.

The program was instituted and initiated by then-Lt. Gen. David Petraeus, when he succeeded Wallace as CAC commander, Nelson said. Fort Benning's CALL reps arrived in August.

There are 48 civilian representatives and some military personnel collecting lessons on military installations around the world, including some in theaters.

The representatives are a resource for everyone on post, anyone who needs help from CALL, Pearce said. Because the CALL representatives are connected globally, if someone on Fort Benning wants to learn about something from Afghanistan, the reps here can contact the Afghanistan reps and quickly get the information, Pearce said.

Some of the most popular topics currently are IEDs and counter sniper tactics, Nelson said. Unit level briefings have begun on post to spread the word about lessons learned, and participation is voluntary.

To submit a lesson learned or to request information, go to www.infantry.army.mil and scroll down to find the "Lessons Learned Integration (L2I) Cell" link. Soldiers must log in using their AKO account.

The reps are interested in raw data, Nelson said, so Soldiers need not worry about typos or formatting when submitting the lessons. And the more detailed, the better, he said.

Along with Nelson are Robert Charles and Greg Valrie, Fort Benning's three representatives.

For more information, contact the CALL reps on post at L2I@benning.army.mil or go to <http://call.army.mil>. Many CALL handbooks and pamphlets can be downloaded on AKO, including the new deployment handbook.

the 1st Brigade, 30th Infantry Regiment's honorary sergeant major. "But this all-volunteer force is the greatest.

"I'm obligated to see (the Soldiers) off and greet them when they return. I tell them I'm proud of them and what they're doing."

Three-quarters of the brigade are combat vets and Greene said he tells the first-timers to stick with those who have experience.

"They'll take care of you," he said.

But not every conversation was serious. Retired Col. Tom Cole, president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning chapter of AUSA, discussed the merits of Jack Russell terriers and North Carolina's odds during the NCAA championships while he served pizza to the Soldiers.

"Pizza is by far the greatest food in the world," said Pvt. Erik Borgus who picked up a USO hacky sack as he went through the line of food. "This is a chance to relax after saying goodbye to the family ... a chill time."

Sgt. Robert Atchison, who is deploying for the second time, said waiting to manifest at Freedom Hall was better than being "thrown in a warehouse."

"This gives us a chance to relax and clear our thoughts — to get ready for the mission. That would be hard if families were here," Atchison said. Which is why the volunteers feel the need to serve the Soldiers, Pat Horvath said.

"We support the troops, and this is one way to show it," she said. Horvath and her husband, Jack, a retired lieutenant colonel, live in Atlanta, and usually volunteer with the USO at the Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport. The Horvaths stayed at Olsen Hall during the brigade's deployment.

"There was one Soldier who had a knot in his boot laces, they were frayed and he was trying to exchange them. But he couldn't get the knot out," Pat said. "I have a talent for knots, so I was able to help him. He was concerned because he worked on getting it out with his mouth, so the laces were wet. But this is how I can help — I can untie knots. I believe we're here to serve and this is one way I do."

Spc. Patricia Reed, 203rd Combat Support Battalion, looks at the books available at Freedom Hall Monday before deploying in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Cpts. Chris Vegas and Patrick Moffett, battery commanders with 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, left Monday with nearly 300 other Soldiers.

"It's nice to see the support from the community," Moffett said.

"It helps take your mind off leaving family and friends," Vegas said.

difficult, inhibits the absorption of nutrients and stunts growth. Riley, who is easily mistaken for a 10-year-old, takes nutritional supplements and respiratory medications. He uses an inhaler and sleeps with a vest designed to help shake up and clear the mucus from his lungs.

Understandably, Marengo and his cohorts were apprehensive about Riley's visit. What were his limitations? They looked to his parents for guidance, and Sue gave them the green light.

"Riley can do whatever he wants to do," she said.

When they saw how Riley reacted to the experience early on — "his face lit up," Marengo said — the Rangers pushed a little harder. They wanted him to "feel a sense of accomplishment." So, among other things, they offered him the opportunity to participate in a rope bridge exercise in cold, murky creek water — a challenge that daunts the most stalwart students.

Riley completed the exercise, as his Ranger School classmates cheered him on.

"We pushed him to the limit, and he was awesome," Marengo said. "That boy's got nothing to prove. He's tough."

The rope bridge exercise ranks right up there with Riley's best memories of the experience, he said. That, and the Ranger Burger he couldn't consume during a visit to Four Winds Restaurant the day before graduation at Fort Benning.

"I couldn't eat one-fourth of it," he said. "That's a big burger."

Riley joined his Florida-phase classmates on Hurley Hill March 9. He recited the Ranger Creed right along with the rest — he had it memorized. Then his mother pinned on his Ranger tab.

Marengo said he had to fight back tears.

"I wasn't the only one," he said. "When Riley stood up there saluting during the national anthem, I saw every woman in the stands crying. And a few men."

Riley, who said he was inspired to become a Ranger after watching Black Hawk Down, returned to school this week. His classmates had already learned about his experience, which came as no surprise to Riley. He'd googled his name when he got home Saturday.

"All the Web sites have me on them," he said.

"On a scale of one to 10," Riley said, his Ranger experience, "was an 11." And he wanted to give credit where credit is due.

"I want to thank everyone who helped make my wish come true," he said. "Rangers lead the way."

light and pyrotechnics in their wing-walking show, according to the Bob Essell Airshows Web site. They will perform at the show.

The Flying Farmer, Charlie Kulp, will perform his routine, full of “flying mishaps,” at the show. Kulp has been flying for more than 63 years, according to his Web site, and he has performed at the nation’s biggest airshows, as well as in Canada and Great Britain.

Elaine Larsen is the driver of the Embry-Riddle jet dragster and Miss Ta Fire jet dragster, which has a 6,000 horsepower engine.

Larsen races the fighter jet engine-powered cars, and will perform at the air show.

Fowler “Big Dog” Cary will fly his Lockheed T-33, a type of plane that was in service with the U.S. Air Force from 1958 to 76, and perform high speed passes and rolls.

Gary Ward Aerobatics, Fort Benning’s command exhibition parachute demonstration team the Silver Wings, and the A-10 East Demonstration Team will also perform at the show. The A-10 Thunderbolt II is the Air Force’s first close air support aircraft, according to the team’s Web site.

The show’s static displays include NASA Kids and modern and vintage military aircraft. The NASA Kids display will have a theater that teaches about NASA’s plan to create a working environment on the moon for safer space exploration.

There will also be a carnival fun area for kids.

Geico is bringing its NASCAR vehicle to the show, and the Pratt and Whitney Company is bringing airplane engines to put on display. Cessna, which has a plant in Columbus, is bringing one of its newest of business jet models, Kemp said.

Admission to the air show is $10 per day at the gate, $8 per day in advance, and $5.50 per day when purchased at the Omega World travel agency on post.

Children 5 and younger are admitted free. Advance purchase tickets are available from Boy Scout troops, Alltel offices, JD Kinders furniture store, McDonalds restaurants in Columbus and Phenix City and Wachovia banks in the local area.

There is limited parking at the airport, which will cost $10 per vehicle.

For $5 per vehicle, people can park in the Wal-mart parking lot, or they can park free at Columbus State University and take a shuttle to the airport.

Operative: Claims responsibility for 9/11, 1993 bombing

through an interpreter, a two-part personal statement with 38 terrorism-related admissions.

He led the list by pledging his jihad allegiance to Osama bin Laden and finished with an admission to trying to destroy the American oil company in Indonesia owned by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Muhammad claimed responsibility for the 2001 attempted shoe bombing of American Airlines Flight 63 from Paris.

He offered a chilling confession to “managing and following up on the Cell for the Production of Biological Weapons, such as anthrax and others, and following up on Dirty Bomb Operations on American soil.”

He also named four other skyscrapers that were supposed to be destroyed in a “second wave” of attacks after 9/11. They were the Library Tower in Los Angeles, the Sears Tower in Chicago, the Plaza Bank in Seattle and the Empire State Building in New York City.

“I shared responsibility for the assassination attempt against Pope John Paul II while he was visiting the Philippines,” Muhammad also admitted.

Muhammad’s lengthy closing oral statement began with a pledge to Allah in Arabic followed by a refusal to take an oath as part of the tribunal. He explained that he was not lying, but that his religious beliefs prevented him taking the oath and thereby accepting, at least in part, American law and its constitution.

Muhammad went on to say that he was not trying to make himself out to be a hero, but an enemy of America.

He drew a comparison between bin Laden and George Washington, both fighting for independence, and said that the term terrorist is “deceiving.” He said that during the Revolutionary War, Washington would have been considered a terrorist by the British.

Muhammad said he did not like to kill people, especially children.

“I don’t like to kill people. I feel very sorry they been killed kids in 9/11,” Muhammad said in broken English. But, he said, their deaths are part of the “language” of war.

He closed by stating that war is part of life and that it will never stop.

Unclassified transcripts of the tribunal are online at: www.defenselink.mil/news/Combatant\_Tribunals.html at the bottom of the page.

Muhammad’s tribunal was one of three for the 14 high-value detainees who were transferred Sept. 6 to Guantanamo Bay from CIA custody.

Proceedings were March 9 for Abu Faraj al-Libi, an alleged senior member of al Qaeda, and Ramzi bin al-Shibh, who is said to have helped Muhammad plan the Sept. 11 attacks.

Shibh also elected to not participate in the tribunal. His personal representative said that Shibh was “uncooperative and unresponsive.”

Evidence submitted by the U.S. government against Shibh included a diary recovered in a 2004 raid detailing his involvement in the Sept. 11 attacks.

He was identified on a videotape of potential suicide operatives, the evidence cited. Shibh attempted to obtain a U.S. visa four times in 2000 for the purpose of attending flight school here, the evidence states. All applications were rejected.

Many other connections to pre-9/11 terrorist activities were cited in the evidence, including wiring money to the actual terrorist hijackers.

Libi elected to not participate in the tribunal, citing through his personal representative that his freedom “far too important to be decided by an administrative process” and that he is awaiting legal proceedings.

Evidence submitted against Libi included sources who stated that Libi was the supervisor of an al Qaeda training camp in Afghanistan. Computer and other documentation were seized during his capture that contained manuals for explosives, detonators, chemicals, military tactics, missiles and tanks.

CSRTs are a one-time administrative process used to determine whether detainees at Guantanamo Bay can be designated as enemy combatants. No decisions have been made about the detainees’ status.

Not all of the three detainees chose to participate in the CSRT proceedings. It was not released which detainees did or did not participate. The detainees have a right to personal representation and to receive an unclassified summary of evidence in advance of the hearing.

The CSRTs for the detainees were not open to media because of national security concerns.

The U.S. government established the CSRT process at Guantanamo Bay as a result of a June 2004 Supreme Court decision in the case of Salim Ahmed Hamdan, a former driver for bin Laden who challenged his detention at Guantanamo Bay. Between July 2004 and March 2005, DoD held 558 CSRTs at Guantanamo Bay. At the time, 38 detainees were determined to no longer meet the definition of enemy combatant, and 520 detainees were found to be enemy combatants.

BLOOD DRIVE

Martin Army Community Hospital Armed Services Blood Program and the Camp Memorial Blood Center, Fort Knox, Ky., will conduct a blood drive from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday in Classroom 9, Infantry Hall.

For more information, call 706-544-1241.

FOUNDERS DAY

The West Point Society of Fort Benning will present Founders Day at 6 p.m. March 24 at the Benning Club. Enjoy a night of dinner, dancing and tradition for $20 per person.

The guest speaker is Brig. Gen. Robert L. Caslen, U.S. Military Academy Commandant of Cadets.

For reservations, call 706-544-9232.

TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with an ID card. Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater. Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

The Tax Center will be closed Monday so volunteers can help Soldiers in training prepare their taxes.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

ARMY SEEKS RECOMMENDATIONS

The Army is accepting design ideas through March 31 for the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and motto for the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

Requirements include a clear, hand-drawn or electronic sketch of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and a short, succinct motto. The motto must be written in English and is limited to 26 characters (letters and spaces).

Individuals may provide a suggestion for just one or two of the desired items if they prefer. Include name, phone number, e-mail address and mailing address of the individual submitting the designs and motto.

Send submissions to MCOE_Insignia_Suggestions@knox.army.mil or Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATSH-ATH, Room 451, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000.

CID LOOKOUT

"CID Lookout" is a U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command initiative to partner with the Army community by providing a conduit for members of the Army family, to help prevent, reduce and report felony-level crime.

The USACIDC, commonly known as CID, is an independent criminal investigative organization that investigates serious, felony-level crime such as murder, rape, sexual assault, robbery, arson, fraud and cyber crime or intrusions into the Army networks.

For more information on CID or to report a felony-level crime or provide information concerning a crime, contact your local CID office or the military police, or visit www.cid.army.mil.

VEHICLE REGISTRATION SITE

The Installation Vehicle and Weapons Registration office is in Building 2672, the information center on Benning Boulevard.

The hours are 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For more information, call 706-545-6172.

Visitor passes are issued at the Visitors Centers at I-185 and Benning Road.

ACADEMIC TEST SCHEDULING

The Army Continuing Education System offers the following tests: GED, CLEP and DSST, Scholastic Assessment (SAT) D, ACT Assessment, Excelsior Examination Program and the Praxis Series.

To schedule an appointment for a test, call 706-545-5725.

CONTINUING EDUCATION

The Army Continuing Education Center offers functional academic skills training, high school and GED programs, college programs, computer-based instruction, testing, military evaluations, transition counseling, commissioning opportunities, financial assistance, non-traditional education programs, veterans education benefits counseling and testing programs.

The Army Education Center is located in Building 2602 in Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 706-545-5725.

AUDIE MURPHY CLUB

The Audie Murphy Club, comprised of the top two percent of NCOs in the Army, was established to recognize leadership excellence and overall potential of NCOs in the ranks of corporal through sergeant first class.

To be eligible, corporals through sergeants first class must have no UCMJ actions and be recommended by their chain of command.

For more information, call 706-544-9868.

Court-martial charges brought against Soldier accused of rape, assaults on post

FORT BENNING PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Court-martial charges have been preferred against a Soldier accused of assaulting and raping a woman on Fort Benning in February.

Spc. Menkaura Moss, who is assigned to the 108th Military Police Company, 18th Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N.C., has also been accused of committing forcible sodomy, assault, assault with intent to commit rape and communicating a threat to kill the woman.

Moss arrived at Fort Benning Feb. 16 to attend Airborne School.

He would have graduated from the course March 9.

He has been assigned a military defense counsel to represent him at any future court procedures.

The incident is under investigation.

NEWS AROUND the ARMY

Fort Monroe improves seawall

Over the next several weeks, Fort Monroe, Va., will begin construction on a new seawall and make repairs to the current seawall, which was damaged by Hurricane Isabel in 2003. The $20 million project is expected to take about two years.

The new seawall will be in front of the existing seawall. It will be two feet higher and about 9.5 feet above the water line. It is expected to reduce the amount of "wave topping" during large storms.

Troops return to Fort Sill

Soldiers from B Battery, 1st Battalion, 14th Field Artillery, returned to Fort Sill, Okla., March 5 after being deployed to Afghanistan and Iraq for a year. It was many of the Soldiers' second and third deployment.

The Soldiers' mission was target acquisition — using radar to acquire incoming enemy fire and identify the enemy's position.

Registration deadline nears for memorial march

The 18th annual Bataan Memorial Death March will be March 25 at White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

The march began in 1987 with 135 people participating. It was then 22 miles and over the years has extended to 26.2 miles, the marathon standard.

The memorial march honors the Soldiers who defended the islands of Luzon, Corregidor and the forts of the Philippines at the start of World War II. On April 9, 1942, tens of thousands of American and Filipino soldiers surrendered to the Japanese. They were forced to march for days in the sweltering heat, and thousands died. Those who didn't spent years in prisoner-of-war camps.

Online registration to participate in the march is through midnight Sunday. Late online registration is Monday through midnight Thursday.

Registration and more information can be found at www.bataanmarch.com.

Pfc. Merk Antony holds Pfc. George Hubbard during the ground-fighting techniques portion of the Eagle Skills Assessment. This event evaluates Soldiers' hand-to-hand fighting skills in the Modern Army Combatives Program.

Skills assessment gauges progress in basic training

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

This week Soldiers from C Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, underwent the Eagle Skills Assessment at various testing sites on Sand Hill.

The Soldiers, in the last weeks of their Infantry one station unit training, were tested in various subjects including land navigation, movement, first aid, weapons proficiency and ground-fighting techniques.

"This event is used as an assessment of how well we do training," said Maj. Karl Strellner, brigade operations officer. "Twenty percent of graduating Soldiers are evaluated on the chosen tasks."

The Soldiers maneuvered through the course in four-man teams with a drill sergeant as an observer/controller.

The teams consisted of a point man, compass man, pace counter and alternate pace counter.

Pvt. George Hubbard was negotiating the land navigation portion of the assessment.

"It's good training. We're doing some of the things we learned during basic," he said. "This should help prepare me for my permanent duty station."

Sgt. Brandon Doris was conducting the ground-fighting techniques lane that incorporates the Modern Army Combatives Program.

"Even the most advanced Soldiers in the MACP use these basic techniques of grappling, Ju-jitsu and hand-to-hand combat," he said.

The Soldiers rotate from station to station and receive a "go" or "no go" on the given tasks. They then return to the start point and talk about the training. Later, they meet with the brigade commander and command sergeant major for a values discussion that includes cadre from other units.

"This course is a good opportunity to see how effective our training has been and adjust training in our future cycles," said Col. Casey Haskins, the Infantry Training Brigade commander.

Later, they meet with the brigade commander and command sergeant major for a values discussion that includes cadre from other units.

Pvt. Daniel Mayberry indicates the direction his team should travel while Pfc. Edwin Gonzalaz checks the compass bearing for their heading. The teams were required to navigate to all points during the Eagle Skills Assessment.

Secretary Harvey says farewell

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

FORT MYER, Va. — Outgoing Secretary of the Army Francis J. Harvey said farewell March 9 to the organization he'd led since his November 2004 appointment by President Bush.

"It has been an honor and privilege to serve our great country and to lead ... the most revered and respected institution in the land — the United States Army," Harvey said, speaking to an audience that included senior Army and Defense Department leaders, Soldiers, civilian employees and family members.

Saying he was "extremely proud of what we have accomplished together, as a result of the total dedication and hard work" of Soldiers and military and civilian leaders, Harvey singled out his "close partnership" with Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker as one of the foundations of his tenure.

"I remind you that in the same way that this is no ordinary Army, Schoomaker is no ordinary chief of staff," Harvey said.

"We have all benefited from his charismatic, visionary leadership, and I have been privileged to call him adviser, partner and friend during these past two years."

Regarding the circumstances of his departure, Harvey spoke at length about accountability as it applies at all levels of command.

"During my time as secretary of the Army, I made hundreds and hundreds of decisions," he said, "and I am totally accountable for all (of them and) stand by each of them ... true leaders must demonstrate, through their actions, that they will stand up for their principles, that they will rise above outside pressures ... and that they will be held personally accountable for their decisions."

Harvey went on to speak at length about the importance of the Army team.

"As I leave your ranks today, I want you to know that I do so with sadness, yet with tremendous pride in the accomplishments made by the Army team, by you — the men and women of the United States Army," Harvey said. "I remind you that the Army team is ... accomplishing the mission under conditions that many said would cause us to 'break' ... They are also building a far more capable, more powerful and more relevant Army for the future," he said. "Let me assure you here today — as well as the American people, whom we serve — that the leaders of this fine institution have developed the mindset and outlook that will enable the Army to continue to adapt, to grow and to serve our country in the face of growing challenges, as they have done since the birth of our nation."

In closing, Harvey focused on his pride in the Army, and in what was accomplished during his tenure.

"I leave the Army today extremely proud of what we have achieved together during the past two years," he said. "Tomorrow's Army — our future force — will be better because of the strategic and financial foundation ... strategic direction and unprecedented transformational momentum we have established."

"It's ironic ... I've spent the last two years, and even today, talking about the Army vision, Army mission, Army strategy, Army challenges and Army values," Harvey said.

"What you showed me this week is 'Army love.' I will always cherish it; I will never forget it."

Talk about boring!

Photos by Staff Sgt. Lonnie Woods
Thomas Dean, a supervisor with Big Warrior Corporation, watches as a horizontal boring machine drills a pilot hole more than 3,000 feet while installing a new water main on Main Post near the MP Station. The technology allows pipes to be installed under roads without digging trenches or disrupting the flow of traffic.

Edwin Robler attaches drill steel on the far end of the bore hole.

A large diameter auger will be pulled back through the pilot hole to increase its size. The thick walled plastic water pipe will then be pulled through the enlarged hole and joined to existing pipe.

Military Benefit Association supports our troops and provides security for military families.

For 50 years, Military Benefit Association (MBA) has sponsored affordable group life insurance for its members and their families.

With over 110,000 members, MBA is among the nation's largest non-profit military associations. Military servicemembers join MBA for its excellent insurance plans, including separate spouse coverage up to $250,000, child coverage options, and for the financial and lifestyle benefits membership offers.

Families Depend Upon MBA.

As we have expanded our membership programs, we have also experienced growth in the amount of paid claims. Since March 2003, MBA-sponsored group life insurance has paid over $18 million in claims to families of MBA members lost in military hostilities in Iraq and Afghanistan. This money helped the families of our members continue their lives during a difficult period.

MBA offers a selection of valuable benefits to promote the economic interests and improve the quality of life of our members and their families, including the MBA Scholarship Program which awards five $2,000 scholarships annually to dependent children of members. Other programs offer car rental discounts; travel assistance and travel discounts; savings on medical services, supplies and equipment; and assistance with VA home financing through VALoans.com.

MBA Term 90 group life insurance has premium rates which are competitive with SGLI. More importantly, this coverage stays with you when you leave the military. You do not have to convert to the more expensive VGLI plan.

When you purchase MBA-sponsored group life insurance coverage, you join a community of people who share your interests. If you would like more information about MBA and the insurance plans it sponsors, please call us:

Jackson says NBA is on "witch hunt"

L.A. Lakers coach Phil Jackson says that the NBA is on a "witch hunt" after Kobe Bryant received two one-game suspensions for flagrant fouls.

The first suspension was for throwing an elbow against Minnesota Timberwolves' Marko Jaric.

The second was retroactively assessed after a game March 9 after Bryant's elbow connected with Philadelphia 76ers' Kyle Korver.

Federer's streak broken

Roger Federer's 41-winning matches streak was broken March 11 by Guillermo Canas in the second round of the Pacific Life Open.

Federer was on his way to trying to beat Argentina's Guillermo Vilas record of 46 straight matches, which was done 30 years ago.

Ohio St. finishes first in polls

The Ohio State Buckeyes were number one in the first Associated Press NCAA men's basketball poll March 11. It was the third straight week of being ranked first.

Kansas finished in second, Florida in third and North Carolina in fourth. All top four teams are number one seeds in the NCAA tournament.

Rounding out the top 10 are Memphis, Wisconsin, UCLA, Georgetown, Texas A&M and Oregon.

March Madness

The first round of the NCAA Men's basketball tournament began Thursday. The second round is Saturday and Sunday, followed by the Sweet 16 Thursday and March 23. The Elite Eight will play March 24 and 25, the Final Four play March 31, culminating with the championship game April 2 at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta.

First round games today include Utah versus Georgia Tech at 12:25 p.m., Kentucky versus Villanova at 3:40 p.m. and Arizona versus Purdue at 7:20 p.m.

There are many more games all day today and Saturday and Sunday.

Check local listings for channels and more information.

Johnson wins at Vegas

Jimmie Johnson upheld his end of the bargain with the oddsmakers and won the UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400 March 11 at Las Vegas Motor Speedway.

Johnson's teammate, Jeff Gordon, finished second, followed by Danny Hemlin in third, Matt Kenseth in fourth and Army car driver Mark Martin in fifth.

Marth retains the points lead.

This week's race is the Kobalt Tools 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

Coverage begins at 1:30 p.m. on Fox. The race begins at 2 p.m.

Tickets are still available to the race. If you've never been, chances are you'll enjoy it.

On their mark

Marksmen in their third week of training at the U.S. Army Sniper School in Harmony Church took to Maertens Range Tuesday to hone their skills with M-24 rifles.

This week they will conduct Record Fire 2 qualifications, in which they shoot at moving targets at 400, 500, and 600 meters.

"These are guys handpicked by company commanders (to be snipers), so we expect a lot from them," said Staff Sgt. Larry Davis, an instructor at the school.

After five weeks of training, the students will be required to shoot accurately at distances as far as 1,700 meters to pass the final exam.

Dashawn Drummond, a sixth-grader, keeps his eye on the ball during his at-bat in the eighth inning. The team fell to Calvary Christian school, 6-1, but played a tough game, said Lt. Col. John Shattuck, Faith's first-year head coach.

Going back to the basics

"I'm proud of you guys, you all played hard, and that's the right way," said Lt. Col. John Shattuck, head coach of the Faith Middle School baseball team after they lost to Calvary Christian, 6-1, during the first outer-league game of the season Tuesday.

This year, the program officials plan to improve each player's skills. It's not just about winning, Shattuck said.

"We're trying to focus on fundamental execution this year," he said. "At this age, kids drop balls and errors happen, but what I'm looking to do is help the kids make smart decisions on the field."

As the team's head coach for the first season,

Shattuck is looking forward to the challenge of rebuilding the team.

"This is a great group of kids and the camaraderie is good among them," he said. "We all encourage and support each other."

The team has a larger roster this year, with 31 players.

Shattuck is depending on the veteran players to provide positive inspiration to the younger guys by leading by example.

"I try to support my teammates as well as do what I need to do to be a better player," said Wiggy Torres, an eighth-grader who has been playing baseball for four years.

"I'm looking to improve my batting and knowing when to steal bases," said Damian Jackson, a sixth-grader.

The team practices Monday through Thursday and, on Fridays, they play "Blue Gold" games, with the teams split to play each other.

"With the large amount of players on this team, we have to work them all in so they can play and learn. That's why our Friday games are so important. We can learn a lot about ourselves playing against ourselves," Shattuck said.

The 10,000 Steps Walking Club at Fort Benning is looking for members, said Noelle Phillips, a community recreation management trainee for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Members develop friendships and burn calories, Phillips said.

Membership has been "hit or miss" since the club began about a month ago.

"There has pretty much been a revolving group that has been in the club," Phillips said. "A lot of the people who come out to walk don't know anyone from the area, so they meet people and work out convenient times to walk with each other."

Participants that have come have been mostly wives of Soldiers.

"Most members are just looking to get outside. A lot of the stay-at-home moms are new to the area and are looking for something to do that can transfer into something that happens to be good for you," Phillips said.

Members often bring their children during walks, she said.

Each new member receives a free water bottle and pedometer for joining the club.

E-mails are sent to members on a regular basis to try to keep them active, Phillips said.

The club meets at Stewart-Watson Field every Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. For more information, call Phillips at 706-545-9636.

Booing's not nice, but it's not cruel either

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

I like my First Amendment rights. I like to say what I think, when I feel like it. Not everyone agrees with it, but everyone is entitled to their opinion. Now, the Washington (state) Interscholastic Activities Association is trying to ban booing at high school athletic events.

Looking back to my high school days, I can honestly say my fellow classmates were particularly cruel. If a player on an opposing team got hurt, they yelled not-so-nice cuss words, instead of cheering the player when they got up on their own accord. I'm embarrassed by it now and really hope that tradition isn't still in practice.

I do have to admit, though, I was single-handedly responsible at one football game for starting the rousing rendition of, "Na na na na, na na na na, hey, hey, goodbye." I wasn't trying to be cruel; it was more of a "Hey, you guys lost, we won, have a good night" kind of chant.

But booing? I can't agree with banning booing. I can see throwing someone out of the stands for cussing or verbally abusing a particular player or team. Booing is the universal, "Hey, that (play, throw, free throw, pitch, interception, etc.) stunk. Do it better next time." Everyone understands booing.

I played softball in high school. I was a pitcher, and at times I felt the pressure to carry my team. I had bad days.

Believe me, athletes know when they're not having a good day. Some athletes can't cope with pressure while others thrive. Players also cope differently with criticism.

One player who gets booed by spectators might react differently than another player. Some will pick up their game while others will wilt under the pressure. It all depends on what kind of player they are.

Booing isn't particularly nice, but it also isn't particularly cruel. Calling someone an unkind name or bringing up something personal to intentionally hurt the player's emotions is cruel. There are a lot more cruel things than booing.

I remember a trip to Fenway Park in July of 2001 with my husband. He hadn't been to a Red Sox game since he was young, and as soon as the game started, he began yelling some not-so-nice cuss words. I had to kindly point out to him the many signs around our seats that spelled out everything prohibited inside the park, and cussing was one of them.

While he wasn't happy to have his creative endeavors squashed, he understood. There were families around, and children. Cussing is offensive and doesn't belong in any sports arena, especially high school.

Booing is a form of expression. Fans need an outlet to vent their frustration, and if it's booing, then I think it's a lot more productive than the alternative. Players, coaches and referees might not take too kind to it, but come on, the sports world is highly competitive. If you can't take a little booing, how will you survive out in the real world?

NWTF banquet: Guess what's not on the menu?

Annual Hunting Heritage turkey banquet scheduled for Thursday

THE BAYONET
Michelle Thomas IV

The National Wildlife Turkey Federation will have its sixth annual Hunting Heritage Banquet Thursday. Bill Brickner, NWTF committee member, said space is limited and a limited number of tickets are available.

"The future of the wild eastern turkey depends on the NWTF and their efforts," Brickner said.

"This banquet helps with funds to preserve the turkeys."

Doors will open at 6 p.m. and dinner, which will be served at 7:30, includes a ribeye steak or chicken breast, baked potato, salad, rolls, tea and dessert.

The banquet features an auction, and door prizes will be distributed. Raffle tickets will be sold.

The ticket costs for the banquet are as follows:

- $55 for a single ticket, which covers the meal and a NWTF membership;

- $80 cover a "Gobbler and Hen" ticket, a member and spouse, which gets both of them a meal, an NWTF membership and a subscription to Women in the Outdoors.

- $280 for a "Sponsor" ticket, which includes membership, a sponsors gift bag, raffle tickets and an entry ticket to win a gun. Purchasers of this ticket can bring their spouses for free as well.

- $15 for a "Jakes" ticket, a turkey hunter 17 years old or younger.

The non-profit organization supports the seed program at Fort Benning, the wildlife management areas around Columbus, and gives 90 percent of its net funds from the banquet back into the wildlife, Brickner said.

The banquet will take place at the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge on Heiferhorn Way behind the Welcome Center off Whitesville Road in Columbus.

For more information or to purchase tickets, call Brickner at 706-681-4549 or 706-563-0189.

Can't stop, won't stop

THE BAYONET
Michelle Thomas IV

I recently wrote a story about the youth skate park on post.

The first thing that caught my eye when I stepped foot in the park was the graffiti. I felt at home, because the skateboarding culture is similar to the hip hop culture I grew up in.

Many people have no idea about the four elements of hip hop — MCing, DJing, B-Boying, also called break dancing, and graffiti — and how similar they are to skating.

MCs know that originality is a must on the microphone. And skaters add their own flare to each ollie or tail grab.

Many MCs "come off the dome," or freestyle their rhymes. Freestyle skating is probably the most invigorating part of the sport.

As far back as the '70s, the DJ set up his sound system in park to draw a crowd. Skateboarding started this way. A few skaters would come out, represent and attract new participants.

B-boys, just like their MC and DJ counterparts, are fierce competitors. They spin, pop, lock and freeze. Skaters work for weeks to learn complicated tricks that excite the crowds and judges.

Graffiti is the dominant visual element in both art forms. Graf artists, spray everything — buildings, bridges and street signs. Skateboards, parks, ramps and gear all have graffiti.

Hip hop and skateboarding cultures are derived from the streets. They are built on the understanding of and respect for their roots.

They both are also known for "making something out of nothing." Hip hop uses old turntables and records for beats just as skaters make jumps out of anything in site.

They were both seen as fads early on, but now, even corporate America banks on both in everything from Coca-Cola ads to Gap jeans ads.

The most compelling, yet unfortunate comparison, is the vast amount of negative stereotypes attached to both. People view hip hop as "gangsta" music that has all the kids in suburbia wearing bandanas and "acting out."

Skateboarders garner the same label. Elders see skaters as thugs that have no respect for authority or public property.

Unfortunately, the positive influences both cultures have provided much of the youth tend to go unnoticed. Both have provided opportunities to many who would have otherwise been subjected to mere street living.

During the story I did last month, I listened to several young skaters tell me that they do this to make friends and teach others to skate.

Jeff Chang titled his book about the culture and history of hip hop, Can't Stop, Won't Stop, which speaks of the culture's unchanging spirit.

The kids at the Fort Benning Skate Park had an unmistakable energy and spirit. They are fully aware that, in many ways, skating is viewed as a rebellious and irresponsible hobby.

But if skateboarding is comparable to my culture as I see it, every skater who has ever lived is an honorable B-boy or B-girl in my book. Like one of my favorite new MCs, Lupe Fiasco, said in his recent ode to skating, "Kick and Push" on.

Johnson overcomes penalty to win in Vegas

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

The Las Vegas oddsmakers were right on this past weekend, when picking reigning Nextel Cup champion Jimmie Johnson as the winner of the UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400 at Las Vegas Motor Speedway March 11. It was Johnson's third consecutive win at the 1.5-mile track.

The track was the hot topic of the race weekend.

Reconfigurations started last March. The banking was changed from 12 to 20 degrees, and pit road was moved. Tony Stewart, driver of the No. 14 Home Depot car, was one of the most vocal of the drivers, saying that track general manager Chris Powell had screwed up a really good track.

Even in pre-race interviews, Stewart was still haranguing Powell and was very vocal about his opinion of the changes, even though he finished third in the Busch race the previous day.

Like the Fox commentators said about Stewart, "If you don't want to know, don't ask."

Other changes included the tires. Goodyear provided new left-side tires, harder tires, in response to the track changes. Because of the tires, NASCAR implemented a 13-gallon fuel cell instead of the usual 17.5-gallon.

The changes in the track and drivers not quite being used to it was evident in the second lap, when rookie David Ragan drew the first caution flag. The second caution came out on lap 9, when Robby Gordon wrecked with Casey Mears and Ward Burton.

On lap 26, Jimmie Johnson took the lead, followed by Dale Earnhardt Jr. in second and Army car driver Mark Martin in third.

After a caution by rookie Aric Almirola less than 50 laps into the race, Martin restarted in first place with 224 laps to go in the 267-lap race. On lap 50, Martin gave up the lead to Elliott Sadler. Six laps later, Martin was back in the lead.

With 202 laps to go, Jimmie Johnson led the pack, followed by Sadler and Martin. The same was true with 165 laps to go.

A total of nine caution flags flew, which isn't too bad, considering the track changes and tires.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. made a huge mistake when pole sitter Kasey Kahne hit the wall with about 18 laps left in the race. Earnhardt Jr. followed Jeff Burton onto pit road despite it being closed. Burton had to pit because of problems with his car, and Junior didn't notice the red light. Junior got lucky.

His penalty was to go to the end of the longest line, and since the restart was double file, he restarted in 13th place.

Errors can be costly, but also drivers and their teams can bounce back, like Johnson did. On a pit stop with about 150 laps to go, a crew member let a tire go astray, out of the pit box. Johnson restarted in 26th place, but quickly made his way through the field to first.

Johnson's win was also a benchmark day for Hendrick Motorsports. It was their 150th career win. Teammate Jeff Gordon finished second.

Martin remains atop the points board after producing a fifth-place finish.

NASCAR goes to Atlanta Motor Speedway this weekend. The Craftsman Truck Series will race at 9:15 p.m. today in the John Deere 200. It will be broadcast on the Speed channel.

The Busch Series will race Saturday in the Nicorette 300. Coverage begins at 3:05 p.m. on ESPN2.

The Nextel Cup Series race, the Golden Corral 500, begins with coverage at 1:30 p.m. on Fox.

U.S. Army pit crew scores fourth straight win

WWW.GINNRRACING.COM

The No. 01 U.S. Army pit crew grabbed its fourth consecutive win in the Checkers®/Rally's® Double Drive-Thru Challenge by taking top honors March 11 at the Nextel Cup Series race at Las Vegas Motor Speedway.

The Army pit crew also claimed wins in the first two races of 2007 — at Daytona and California — and at the final race of 2006 at Homestead-Miami Speedway.

"Wow, those guys are just awesome on pit road," said driver Mark Martin, who leads the Nextel Cup point standings with three straight top-five finishes. "The U.S. Army crew has really been a big part of our success so far this season. If they can keep that up, I hope I can help get them to victory lane really soon."

"The Army pit crew has played a vital role in our success," said 01 crew chief Ryan Pemberton. "Lance (Munksgard, pit crew coach) has done an outstanding job with all of the Ginn Racing teams. It is great to see Checkers/Rally's reward and recognize the pit crews for their excellent performances."

The Army over-the-wall crew, which spent 322.066 seconds on pit road in Las Vegas, includes: Scott King (jackman), Colin Pasi (front-tire carrier), Charlie Brock (front-tire changer), Dwayne Moore (rear-tire carrier), Dave Woodhead (rear-tire changer), Danny Harrington (gasman), Scotty Hazlett (catch can) and J.D. Hilton (windshield).

Checkers/Rally's awards the winning Nextel Cup team each week with a cash prize of $11,150. An additional $111,150 will be presented to the pit crew with the most wins at the completion of the 36-race Nextel Cup schedule.

To win the Checkers/Rally's Double Drive-Thru Challenge, teams are required to finish on the lead lap while spending the least amount of time on pit road. Checkers/Rally's is in its third season as title sponsor for the pit crew challenge.

Schumacher seeks first win; Sampey, Brown ready for season motorcycle opener

U.S. ARMY RACING

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Army NHRA pilots Tony "The Sarge" Schumacher, Angelle Sampey and Antron Brown will take to historic Gainesville Raceway this weekend for the 38th annual AC/DELCO Gatornationals.

Schumacher, who pilots the Army Top Fuel dragster, will be looking to pocket his first victory of the still young 2007 season as Sampey and Brown, aboard their Army Suzukis, will attempt to kick off the Pro Stock Motorcycle campaign in solid fashion.

Top Fuel

After failing to get to victory lane at the first two races, Schumacher would love to break through at the NHRA's traditional East Coast opener.

"We've been running well, but we just haven't been able to get over the hump," said the defending NHRA POWERade Top Fuel world champion. "It's been a long couple of weeks off, so we're ready to get back after it."

Schumacher, who has a Gatornationals title to his credit from 2004, knows how much of a challenge Gainesville Raceway can be.

"It's a nice track, but it can be a bear to get down if the weather is hot," he said.

"We'll likely face far different conditions than we had at both Pomona and Phoenix."

Gainesville Raceway has a rich tradition of history-making performances including the first 300 mph Top Fuel pass recorded in 1992. Schumacher holds the track record for speed at 333.95 mph set two years ago.

"The concrete launch pad down there at 675 feet is one of the longest on the tour, so that certainly helps out a lot," said the Chicago-area resident.

Pro Stock Motorcycles

Both Sampey and Brown are eager to set sail on a new season, which now totals 16 races for the two-wheelers.

Brown wants to erase the disappointment of 2006 when he came up just 23 points short of claiming his first world championship.

"It's a brand new year and I can't wait to get going," said the New Jersey native. "Last year was last year — you really can't dwell on the past."

Sampey, who captured the first two Pro Stock Motorcycle races last year, would like to duplicate that effort this time around.

"Getting off to a good start to the season and then maintaining that momentum will be important not only for me, but Antron as well," she said. "We finished second and third last year in the standings and it's time for each of us to move up a couple of rungs on the ladder."

While Brown is shooting for his first crown, Sampey is focused on nailing her fourth world championship ring. With six more wins, she will move past the late Dave Schultz on the all-time Pro Stock Motorcycle victory list.

"You can't imagine how much I want that first title," said Brown. "Like our Soldiers, I'll never quit."

"I'll take the ring before the record," said Sampey. "Team achievements always come first. If I'm also fortunate to become the rider with the most wins, well, then that will be great as well."

SCBI: Takes home Intramural Basketball League trophy

SBICs Brian Parker hits a foul shot during the first half of their game against 1/19. Parker led his team's second half comeback and finished the game with a team high 14 points.

SBIC led the Santiago League with a 7-1 regular season record and held on to the first-place ranking undefeated in the playoffs. 1/19 finished 5-3 during the regular season and got to the championship after only one loss in the playoffs.

1/19 took control of the game early on, with a 16-13 lead, with 11 minutes to go in the first half. 1/19's center Desmond Williams was a one-man show, cleaning up several of his teammate's missed shots. He led all scorers with 23 points.

"He's a beast inside," said, 1/19's Jottama McCormick. "We only have six players on our team, so we definitely lean on him."

SBIC traded buckets to keep the score close, but 1/19 took a commanding eight point lead with three minutes to go in the half.

"We were kind of shaky early in the season," McCormick said. "SBICs a tough team, and we have to put out twice the effort to get the championship."

SBIC was determined to make a strong run in the second half, bringing 1/19's lead down to one point with just over 16 minutes to go.

SBIC guards Joe Bailey and Jerod Anderson both chipped in with 12 points apiece to help their team take their first lead.

With the game tied, 49-49, with three minutes left, both teams increased their intensity with physical play inside. The crowd was on their feet for much of the final minutes of the game chanting and yelling.

SBICs Brian Parker, who led his team with 14 points, hit the go-ahead bucket to give them the lead, 52-51. Seconds later, he missed a pair of free throws that would have given his team a three point lead.

"I missed some crucial ones late tonight, but the team kept the ball rolling and backed me up all season," said Parker, who missed part of the season due to a three-week TDY.

During the final minute of the game, both teams committed intentional fouls, making the game a free throw contest.

Bailey put the winning dagger in 1/19 by hitting pair of clutch free throws, making the score, 56-51, with 25 seconds to go.

"I think the season went great. I've come close in different posts I've been at so to win the championship feels real good," Bailey said.

The chase for the CC cup will continue with soccer, beginning Monday, and volleyball, which will begin Wednesday.

STILL THE ONE!!

AAFES meets lower prices

ARMY & AIR FORCE EXCHANGE SERVICE

The Army & Air Force Exchange Service's "We'll Match It!" initiative has been updated to allow authorized shoppers to compare prices between the exchange and warehouse clubs.

Previously, AAFES didn't match warehouse clubs as their shelf prices are offset by required membership fees, said the Fort Benning PX general manager, Barbara Beaudin.

"Military families made it clear, while they understood the PX does not charge fees, they still considered it the original 'members only' club," she said.

It is only through surveying and review that AAFES can ensure its prices are routinely lower than the competition. Even with consistent monitoring, the competitive retail landscape requires AAFES to rely on its price matching program to guarantee that customers will always receive the best price.

"We'll Match It!" works in two ways:

- Shoppers who see a price difference of less than $10 can tell the cashier who will match it on the spot.
- Customers who report a price difference of greater than $10 need only to bring a current local competitor's ad to receive the reduced price.

"AAFES is committed to having low prices," Beaudin said. "We'll Match It!" is simply a last line of defense in our desire to be the military shopper's first choice."

"We'll Match It!" promotes AAFES as a price leader with a pledge that it will match competitors' current, local price on any identical stock assortment. AAFES also offers a 30-day price guarantee on any item originally purchased from the PX and subsequently sold at a lower price by AAFES or a local competitor, excluding unauthorized dealers.

There are exceptions to the "We'll Match It!" program. Except for the Exchange Catalog and aafes.com, the PX cannot accept challenges from any catalog or Web site. Other exclusions include special offers or promotions, free-with-purchase offers, limited quantity offers, bundled promotions, special financing, "gimmick" promotions, special order automotive parts, gasoline, automotive labor and service, double and triple coupons, clearance items, flat percentage off items and vending items.

In the past 10 years, AAFES contributed more than $2.4 billion to Army, Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy MWR/Services programs. These funds are used in support of Youth Services, Armed Forces Recreation Centers, post functions and other initiatives enjoyed by military families.

The "We'll Match It!" policy applies to all AAFES retail stores at Fort Benning including the Shoppettes, Car Care, Class Six and Troop Stores.

Yes, Siam: Benning Soldier claims 'Thai' to royalty

*Infantry Band flutist is descendent of King Mongkut, who inspired the Broadway hit
The King and I*

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Fort Benning Soldier has a unique perspective on the Springer Opera House production of The King and I. Staff Sgt. Jeff Kridakorn is the great, great grandson of the fourth ruler of Siam, Mongkut, the king portrayed in Rogers and Hammerstein's adaptation of Margaret Landon's book Anna and the King of Siam.

That makes Kridakorn a nobleman in Thailand, though he's not in line to the throne. The 46-year-old, a flutist in the Infantry Band, is a descendent of Mongkut through one of the king's consorts.

"It's not something the Western world would understand," Kridakorn said of the Siamese practice of polygamy, a practice that ended with Mongkut's son and successor.

"It wasn't a harem, the way most people think. The king had many queens, because it was considered an honor in neighboring countries to give your daughter to the king. It was their way of preventing war."

There's a lot the Western world doesn't understand about Siam, which is today called Thailand, Kridakorn said. The King and I and the book on which it's based are both banned in that country, which has the world's oldest continuous monarchy, because it misrepresents the king and the culture. The people of Thailand revere their kings, and they still take offense at Landon's liberal interpretation of the diary of Anna Leonowens, a British governess hired to tutor the king's children in the mid-1800s.

Bridgett Siter

Staff Sgt. Jeff Kridakorn, the Infantry Band's only flutist, is the great, great grandson of the fourth king of Siam, one of the main characters in The King and I. The musical adaptation of Margaret Landon's Anna and the King is showing at the Springer Opera House this weekend.

At the Springer

This weekend is your last chance to see what all the fuss is about. The Springer Opera House production of The King and I continues through Saturday.

This version of the Broadway hit stars Steve Valentine as King Mongkut, a role made famous by Yul Brynner. Brynner won an Academy Award for his performance in 1951 — a performance which provoked outrage among the Thai people, who took exception to his larger-than-life, bare-chested portrayal of the fourth king of Siam.

Valentine is a resident guest artist at the Springer, with appearances in more than 40 mainstage shows. Anna audiences will remember him as Daddy Warbucks, who bore a remarkable resemblance to Yul Brynner. That makes Valentine believable and acceptable in his role as the stuffy King Mongkut, unless you're a direct descendent.

Which, of course, Staff Sgt. Jeff Kridakorn is. Kridakorn, born Chakri Jefferson Kridakorn, is the great, great grandson of Mongkut. He's also the student of a local voice coach, Debbie Anderson, who plays Anna Leonowens in the Springer production.

"It's a small world," said Kridakorn, and he should know. The 46-year-old flutist has traveled the world, been a early years as a member of the Thai royal family and posed as a member of the Infantry Band.

The King and I runs through Saturday. Shows start at 7:30 p.m. For tickets, call the Box Office at 706-327-5445 or visit springerspectaclehouse.org.

Capt. William Brine, commander of E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, repels down Eagle tower with his fiancé, Jana Heasley, and her father, Bill Heasley, Saturday at Jane Wayne day on Sand Hill. Families shot three different weapons at Malone 12 Range and completed a confidence course, slide for life and Eagle tower repelling during the event, which was the first for the unit. The event was a way to build greater rapport with military families, who don't often get to experience the military aspect, Brine said.

Photos by Rachel Houston

Noelani Conley, 14, reaches the top of the "tough one" obstacle and calls down to her father. Though the obstacle was quite tall, Conley made it up and over with a little encouragement. The confidence course was one of the Jane Wayne day events on Saturday.

Families got to shoot live rounds, build their confidence and repel walls Saturday while discovering what their Soldiers do at work during the first Jane Wayne day for the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

Wives, parents, children, in-laws and friends gathered on Sand Hill to experience Soldier training first hand.

"We have military families who don't get to experience the military aspect. Hardly ever do they get to shoot the weapons or do the stuff their husbands, brothers and fathers get to do," said

ROA awards merit-based undergraduate scholarships to children and grandchildren of members. ROA membership is available to any officer that holds or honorably held a commission in any of the seven uniformed services (Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, Coast Guard, Public Health Service and NOAA).

Scholarships are valued at $500 and scholarship winners can resubmit each year as long as they meet the application criteria.

ROA awards a minimum of 60 scholarships annually.

The submission deadline is April 10.

For more information, e-mail Henry.David.Pendleton@us.army.mil.

NMFA OPERATION PURPLE CAMP

Beginning Thursday, the National Military Family Association will accept applications for Operation Purple Summer Camp. The free camp hosts children ages 7 to 17. NMFA developed the camp in response to the need for increased support for children, especially those whose parents are or will be deployed.

Visit the Web site operationpurple.org for more information and applications.

CIVIL AIR PATROL

Civil Air Patrol, USAF Auxiliary Columbus Composite Squadron SER-GA-098, meets from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays at Gate 5-B, adjacent CSG Aviation, 3250 West Britt David Road.

It is open to students ages 12 to 21, parents, pilots and teachers. Emphasis is on cadet programs, emergency services and aerospace education.

For more information about Civil Air Patrol, call Capt. Jerry Slaughter at 706-888-2668 or Capt. Craig Young at 706-593-5473 or visit www.cap.gov.

GRANTS FOR VOLUNTEER ORGANIZATIONS

Newman's Own, the Fisher House Foundation and the Military Times Media Group invite volunteer organizations serving military families to compete for a share of $75,000 in grants.

Organizations are asked to present an innovative plan to support military families. The plan garnering the most votes from the judges will earn $15,000 to put that plan into action. Judges will divide the remaining $60,000 among as many groups as they like.

Nominations must be postmarked by May 18. Instructions, rules and eligibility requirements can be found at fisherhouse.org.

SECOND INFANTRY REGIMENT ASSOCIATION

Officers and Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Regiment, who served in Germany, Kosovo and Iraq are encouraged to contact the Regimental Association and join the members of the battalion who served in Vietnam.

Write to: 5005 Portsmouth Road, Fairfax, VA, 22032.

HEPATITIS C SUPPORT GROUP

A Hepatitis C support group will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. April 19 at the Columbus Public Library in the CB&T room on the first floor.

For more information, e-mail HEPATITIS\_C\_SUP\_COLUMBUS\_GA@yahoo.com.

BLIND VETERANS ASSOCIATION

The regional chapter of the Blind Veterans Association of Georgia meets at 9:30 a.m. the last Wednesday of each month at the VA Clinic conference room, 1310 13th Ave., in Columbus. For more information, call 706-569-9881.

OUTSTANDING OLDER WORKER SEARCH

Experience Works, the nation's largest training and employment organization for mature workers, is searching for Georgia's outstanding older worker. Experience Works Prime Time Awards program is part of Experience Works' national effort to raise awareness of the contributions made by older individuals and to break down barriers associated with the hiring of all older workers.

Nominees or applicants must be 65 years of age or older, a resident of Georgia, currently employed, and working at least 20 hours a week for pay. The honoree must be willing and able to travel to Washington, D.C. in October for the Prime Time Award events.

An online nomination form or a printed nomination form can be accessed at www.experienceworks.org. Deadline for nomination is May 1.

For more information, visit homeinstead.com.

REFLECTIONS

Passover has meaning for all

1ST BATTALION, 50TH INFANTRY REGIMENT
Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz

Passover begins April 2 at sundown, and concludes at nightfall April 10. The night before Passover the house and the car are searched for leaven (bread), which should be burnt or sold by the next morning. The first two days and the last two days of Passover are major holy days and work-related activities are not allowed. Work is permitted during the intermediate days.

The story of Passover is told in the book of Exodus. The Jewish people were slaves to the rulers in Egypt for more than two centuries. Moses receives a divine call at the burning bush to lead the Jewish people out of bondage. Ten plagues were visited on the Egyptians. The final one, death of firstborn sons, "passes over" the Jewish homes, and the Egyptian king agrees to let the people go. With no time to wait for bread to rise, the Jews eat roasted lamb with unleavened bread and bitter herbs — the first observance of Passover. Moses then leads the Jewish people through the Red Sea to Mount Sinai where they receive the Torah.

Passover, as the holiday of spring that symbolizes renewal, freedom and deliverance, has always captured the American imagination. Thomas Jefferson proposed for the U.S. national seal a depiction of the Israelites in the desert, led by a cloud and a pillar of fire (Exodus 13:21). Benjamin Franklin's proposal was Moses lifting his staff, splitting the sea (Exodus 14:16) with the motto "Rebellion against tyrants is obedience to G-d." Almost a century later, the chorus of the spiritual calling for freedom from slavery began with "Go down, Moses," and ended with "Let my people go."

The Passover Seder, the traditional holiday meal of the first and second nights of the festival, has throughout the ages been a unique opportunity for all members of the family to join together in thanksgiving. The story of the Exodus is retold through songs, prayers and stories. Each Seder participant symbolically experiences the "bitterness of slavery" by eating the bitter herbs, and feels the joy of being redeemed by drinking four cups of wine and eating a festive meal.

The special biblical precept that is identified with Passover is the eating of and getting rid of all leavened food for the entire eight days of the holiday. Matzah is called the bread of affliction because it was fed to the Jewish slaves in Egypt. When eaten during the Seder, it brings back memories of the Egyptian experience. A deeper insight into the Matzah is that the flat unleavened bread represents humility, which is the beginning of liberation and spiritual growth. Only a person who can acknowledge his own shortcomings and submit to a higher wisdom can free himself from his own limitations.

May we all be blessed this holiday season to pass over limitations and realize the infinite potential in every aspect of life. May the Festival of Liberation bring peace and liberation to the entire world. Amen.

Marriage is not a 50-50 proposition

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Bud Rupel

In his book, Romancing the Home, Ed Young wrote, "Couples who are successfully married all agree that marriage is not a 50-50 proposition. Unless each partner intends to give 100 percent regardless of a mate's performance, a marriage is crippled from the start."

As a husband, I am to love my wife with no strings attached. I am to love her sacrificially. In fact, the biblical injunction is, "Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her..."

Sacrificial love ... what a concept! But what is sacrificial love and why sacrificial love? Quoting again from Romancing the Home, "Sacrificial love is not giving-in love. That would be cheaper. It is giving-up love. Sacrificial, giving-up love is love that is willing to go to any lengths to provide for the well-being of the beloved. A man should count the cost before he marries, to determine whether or not he is willing to pay the price of being a real husband — but after he marries, he is to stop counting. Because whatever it takes to rightly love his wife is what he has promised to give, regardless of the cost."

Men need to be men when it comes to marriage. Too many husbands think of their wives as some sort of surrogate mother: feed me, clothe me, take care of me. I have something to say to husbands like this: grow up!

In marriage vows, the bride and groom promise to love, comfort and honor one another. Sacrificial love bestows honor on the beloved. This means not putting each other down.

I know of no worse thing a husband or wife can do than to cut down their spouse in public or in private. There is the old saying, "Sticks and stones may break my bones but words will never harm me." The truth is words do carry a lot of impact and name-calling can and does cause much harm.

God has placed great value in your spouse. Gary Smalley has said, "Honor is a reflex of the heart toward one who is deeply treasured." Would your spouse know by your word and deed that you honor them? Treasure them?

Do you know how you can find out how your spouse wants to be honored? Simply ask them. So what are you waiting for? Ask!

God has a design for marriage. It sort is like a road map that if followed will lead us in the direction we need to go.

The journey of a thousand miles begins with the husband saying, "I know a shortcut!" In marriage there are no short cuts, only a proven path outlined in God's word.

Editor's note: Retired Chaplain (Maj.) Bud Rupel lives in Columbus, where he continues to minister to Soldiers and their families. He can be reached at 706-323-1876.

Watch out for these four warning signs in marriage

Every couple should know relationship red flags

CHAPLAIN FAMILY
LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

I was conducting a marriage retreat last weekend using the PREP model, or Prevention and Relationship Enhancement Program, one of the leading marriage programs used today. Their studies indicated that they can predict with 90 percent accuracy whether your marriage will end up with a golden wedding anniversary celebration or in a divorce on The Jerry Springer Show.

Sounds like a pretty bold claim, doesn't it — to predict, with 90 percent accuracy, which relationships will "fly" and which relationships will "die."

Believe it or not, that is exactly what researchers in the field of human relationships, i.e., the "love doctors" are able to do.

One concept they use is to help us understand the critical warning signs that every couple needs to know. What do warning signs do for us?

They warn us of pending danger — warning, bridge is out, or warning, high voltage, even as simple as warning, construction ahead or warning, child on board.

Studies have shown that successful couples have problems just like those whose marriages end in divorce. The difference is not whether we have problems, the difference is how we handle those problems.

Consequently, here are the "Four Warning Signs." Four red flags that demand immediate attention in any relationship.

No. 1 — Escalation

Escalation is when we keep upping the ante, adding more dirty laundry to the pile. When one person says something we perceive as hurtful or of concern, instead of addressing the issue, we attack back with something to one-up so as to win by outdoing our spouse.

"Can't you put the cap on the toothpaste?"

"Well, can't you pick up your clothes off the floor?"

"What does it matter if the floor is dirty anyway, you never clean."

"I never clean, how about the portable trash can you call a car?"

And so goes the argument. Escalation never addresses the real concern, a specific action over which one is unhappy, but throws more trash, more negative words that go for the jugular personally.

Escalation is often the first step on a slippery slope of relational decline.

FORT BENNING } Church Briefs

CROSSROADS CONTEMPORARY CHAPEL

The CrossRoads Contemporary Service meets at the Follow Me Chapel and sponsors Wednesday night activities for families.

A fellowship meeting takes place from 5:30 to 6:15 p.m., followed by Bible study for adults from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m.

Team KID, Kids in Discipleship, for children ages 3 through sixth grade, meets from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m.

Other Wednesday night activities include the Middle School Youth Group, Club Beyond, which meets at 5 p.m. The High School Club meets at 6:30 p.m.

Infant care is provided from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. in the nursery.

For more information on Club Beyond, call Steve Paquette at 706-545-2359.

For more information on the service, call Chaplain (Maj.) Walt Hoskins at 706-545-4017, Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey at 706-545-9014, Chaplain (Maj.) Joel Funk at 706-545-7513 or Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Beavers at 706-544-6255.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

Protestant Sunday School is from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. every Sunday in the Follow Me Chapel.

Classes are for all ages.

Infant care is provided and transportation is available on post.

For more information, call 706-545-7513.

CATHOLIC WOMEN OF THE CHAPEL

The CWTC meet every second Tuesday of the month from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the Follow Me Chapel on Ingersoll Street. All Catholic women are invited to attend.

For more information, call Jane Kuhbander at 706-689-6600.

PROTESTANT WOMEN OF THE CHAPEL

The Protestant Women of the Chapel have drop-in seminars each Thursday.

Each week will have a different theme, including: sex in the marriage, sabbath, godly finance, quiet and devotional time, fasting and spiritual gifts.

Everyone is welcome.

Regular Bible studies have started.

The books are provided in the classroom. The price of the book is on the back cover, and if you want, it can be left in the offering basket.

The child care hours have been extended until 12:30 p.m. to allow for longer fellowship time.

No. 2 — Invalidation

Invalidation is the hurtful, cutting words of sarcasm, cynicism or belligerence. It is the direct name calling or cutting down an individual.

It is the subtle demeaning words designed to belittle someone. Invalidation is the cancer that eats away at a spouse's worth and value.

Allowed to thrive in your relationship, it will cause deep-seated anger and resentment. It's ugly and it spreads fast if left untreated.

No. 3 — Negative interpretations

Negative interpretations is where one looks at everything said or done and interprets it as something negative toward them.

It is being hypersensitive toward the other. You said that or did this just to get me mad and upset.

No. 4 — Avoidance or withdrawal

Withdrawal is when the cycle of escalation, invalidation and negative interpretations goes round and round to the point that one of those involved chooses to "check-out" emotionally.

It's the back turned, the computer on, the TV turned up louder, the activities or work we schedule on purpose just so we don't have to talk, fight, or otherwise deal with the other person and the pain or agitation they represent to us. If withdrawal continues, then typically, somebody goes — the marriage dies.

The good news is, if you recognize any of the four warning signs, you can choose to change and remove the danger from your relationship and recover the joy of your marriage.

Any couple who can discover tools to avoid these four warning signs and keep them out of their marriage for good. Interested in some of those tools? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Center to get more information on the Couples Communication Class that is enjoyed every month by others who want to maximize their relationship.

Call us at 706-545-1760 or stop in at The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza.

Soldier: Great, great grandson of King of Siam

In the musical, which opened on Broadway in 1951, romance blossoms between Anna and the king, played by a relatively unknown, bare-chested, bald actor named Yul Brynner. In reality, Mongkut was well into his 60s and a practicing monk when Anna was employed. In reality, the king wore clothes.

"As you can see, he's not Yul Brynner," Kridakorn said, referring to a picture of his great, great grandfather, an elaborately dressed man of small stature and a full head of hair. Neither could he be said of Brynner.

Still, Kridakorn admitted he likes the Broadway version. He likes "the musicality of it."

"But I like it as an American — as a Thai person, I see where there are problems with it," he said, citing certain hand gestures and background details — like Chinese lettering — that were foreign to the Siamese.

Though Kridakorn is a member of the royal family, and would therefore be treated as a dignitary in Thailand, he would not find himself living as a royal. His parents forfeited their inheritance when they made their home in the U.S.

"They gave up a life of luxury in Thailand to live like everyday Americans," he said. "They did it for their children, and they would say it was worth it. I know I'm a better person for it."

Kridakorn's father brought his wife and two children here in 1957. They settled in Birmingham, Ala., where his father studied dentistry at the university. Jeff, the youngest Kridakorn, was born here in 1960. Shortly thereafter, his parents returned to their homeland. They left the two oldest children in Birmingham for an American education. Kridakorn spent 10 years in Thailand, where his father was a renowned professor and assistant dean at the Thai dental school who introduced fluoride to the drinking water there.

That's why the Thai people "have good teeth — not European teeth," Kridakorn said with a laugh.

His father's position as a nobleman and a respected educator afforded the young Kridakorn many opportunities to travel, to rub elbows with world leaders and experience diverse cultures. Family legend has it that he kicked up quite a fuss, as a very young child, when he grew impatient waiting to meet the Queen of England.

In 1973, he was sent to Birmingham to live with his older sister so he, too, could get an American education. It wasn't long before his parents sold all that was theirs in Thailand and returned to the states, for good this time, to be closer to their children.

Kridakorn studied language at the University of Alabama, where he minored in flute. Fifteen years ago, he gave up a career as a computer program analyst to perform with the Army band. The Army, he said, gave back to him many of the opportunities his family sacrificed when they moved to this country. He has traveled all over Europe, Kuwait, Kosovo and Iraq.

"The Army has given me the chance to travel again, but my parents and my earlier experiences gave me an appreciation for these opportunities," he said. "Honestly, I've taken more out of the Army than the Army's gotten out of me."

Kridakorn returned to Thailand when his father died in 2003. It felt like home, he said, as much as any place he's ever lived.

"I'm a child of the world, I guess. I was home in Germany. I'm home wherever I go," he said.

Jane Waynes: Compete

Capt. William Brine, commander of E Company, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

"It inspires them, gives them confidence in what we do. We can show people the good qualities of the military," he said.

Drill sergeants work 14 to 16 hours a day, six days a week, said 2nd Lt. Joshua Morris, E company executive officer, so Jane Wayne day is a great way for them to spend time with their families.

The Soldiers taught and helped their families in all the day's events.

The marksmanship familiarization was held at Malone 12 Range. Family members shot M-249 squad automatic weapons, M-4s and M-240 automatic machine guns.

"That turned out to be a really good event," Brine said.

"They really had fun, especially during the weapons firing," Morris said. He said there were lots of big smiles on faces.

Morris' parents came for the day, and it was their first time shooting the weapons.

"That was a big first for just about everybody," Morris said.

After a lunch break, family members did the Eagle Tower repelling, slide for life and the obstacle course. The participants broke into two groups and rotated between the tower and obstacle course areas.

Family members traversed several lower obstacles and three high obstacles — the confidence climb, tough one and inverted descent.

The tough one gets its name from the upper body strength it takes, which makes it difficult, Morris said.

The high obstacles are where some basic training privates get nervous, especially when they get to the top, Morris said. That's why they call it a confidence course, because it builds confidence.

"It was fun," said Rosetta Conley, who is married to Drill Sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Wendell Conley. The couple's four daughters also participated.

"It wasn't scary," said Noelani, Wendell's 14-year-old daughter.

"It looks scary from the very top but once you get down, it starts getting fun and then painful at the same time," said 13-year-old Leilani.

Rachel Houston participated in Jane Wayne day with her three sisters and mom.

Wendell said his girls do this sort of thing all the time.

"We're a very outdoorsy family," he said. "I compare my Soldiers to my daughters all the time. I'm like 'if my 6-year-old can get up here and do some of this stuff, you guys have no problem.' She makes it look easy, though."

"This is one time that we can come out and enjoy the whole battalion, the whole family," Rosetta said.

"Get a little taste of what daddy goes through every day," Wendell added.

"I can't do this, myself. So I appreciate what he does," Rosetta said.

Over at the Eagle Tower, Emily Strangle, whose stepfather is in 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., overcame her fear of heights.

"Once I got up there, it was fun. It's a lot different from way up there," said Strangle, a Junior ROTC cadet, who sometimes comes out to watch basic trainees in training.

Jane Wayne day ended with dinner from Country's Barbecue and congratulations from the battalion commander. Certificates of participation were awarded to each participant, as were the 1st, 2nd and 3rd places in each of the four age groups for the race on the confidence course.

Competitors in the horse trials at Poplar Place compete in three types of riding.

Mike Winter rides Kingpin in the dressage phase of the February horse trials. In dressage, the horse and rider perform movements at three gaits — walk, trot and canter. Here, Winter rides his horse at a trot.

This horse and rider jump one of the water jumps on the cross country course at Poplar Place during the February horse trials. This jump is particularly difficult because the horse must take off and land in the water.

Winter rides Kingpin at a canter during the dressage test Feb. 9. Horses and riders complete a dressage test, which is made up of a series of movements, such as circles, diagonals, and the more advanced counter canter and shoulder in.

After riding through the water, the horse and rider have jumped up onto the bank and must jump this boat at the top of the bank. The cross country course at Poplar Place has lots of interesting and unique jumps.

On the show jumping course, this horse and rider jump a one-stride obstacle, in which the horse jumps a fence, lands and takes one stride, then jumps another fence.

Photos by Rachel Houston

Horse and rider jump one of the fences in the show jumping portion of the competition in February at Poplar Place Farm. Show jumping has a course of fences in an arena that horses and riders jump. The goal is to not knock any rails off any fences and to complete the course within the given amount of time. Failing to do either of those things means penalty points for the pair.

Poplar Place Farm

Visitors can see Olympians ride their horses in variety of equestrian sports

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

There is a farm not far from here that draws people who have competed in the Olympics to come show their horses.

This farm is called Poplar Place, and it's in Hamilton, Ga., which is about 15 miles north of Columbus.

The beautiful, sprawling 188-acre Poplar Place Farm frequently holds horse trials, which have horses and riders competing in three very different kinds of riding — dressage, show jumping and cross country.

In dressage, the horses and riders perform intricate movements that take a great deal of training and control.

In show jumping, the horses jump a course of colorful, challenging fences within a time limit.

And in cross country, the horses gallop over a course of several miles that takes them through woods and water and over interesting and difficult jumps.

The Spring Horse Trials at Poplar Place will be

March 23, 24 and 25, and Olympic riders from around the country and world will be there to compete.

More than 450 horse and rider pairs will compete in the horse trials.

Riders will compete in one of several divisions depending on their skill level. The divisions range from advanced one and two star divisions, which are the highest at the horse trials, to the training division.

March 23 will be the dressage phase of the competition, and March 24 and 25 will have the show jumping and cross country phases going on simultaneously.

There is a lot to see, so plan on spending the day out at the farm, and you'll want to go to two or all three days of the show as each will be different. There is a concession stand at the farm with cheeseburgers, sandwiches and lots of refreshments.

There are bleachers to sit on while watching the show, or you can bring a blanket or folding chairs. The cross country course is spread out, so some walking is required to see all of the jumps, but it's well worth it to be able to see just how challenging the course is.

Dogs are allowed on the farm, but they must be leashed at all times, said Allina Stickland, director of marketing for Poplar Place.

Poplar Place holds shows year round, and each horse trial benefits a different non-profit organization in the community.

The spring horse trials benefit the Harris County Cancer Relay for Life teams, and the gate admission fees will go to the teams. Admission is $15 per car for all three days of the competition.

On Wednesday and Thursday, just before the horse trials, Capt. Mark Phillips, coach of the U.S. Eventing Association three day team, will hold a winter training session.

Poplar Place also offers boarding and training for horses and horses for sale.

To get to Poplar Place, drive north on Veterans Parkway. The farm is about 14 miles from the Lowe's on Veterans, and signs will direct you to the show entrance, which is on the left.

For more information and to see pictures of the farm and its courses, go to www.poplarplacefarm.com.

VOLUNTEERING at Poplar Place

With hundreds of horses and riders showing Poplar Place needs a whole lot of help running their show. There will be six dressage arenas March 23 with horses and riders going in and out all day long. Then on March 24 and 25 there will be horses and riders entering both the cross country course and the show jumping arena every few minutes.

Volunteering is a good opportunity for military families, and it's something that parents and kids can do together, said Diana Lewis, volunteer coordinator at Poplar Place. And it's free, she said.

Several volunteer jobs are available March 23, including gate keepers who will open and close the gates for riders as they enter and exit the arena. The gate keeper job offers a ringside view of dressage, Lewis said. Warm-up and bit check stewards, ring stewards and score runners are also needed.

On March 24 and 25, warm-up stewards, score runners, cross country jump judges and show jumping ring crew are needed.

First-time volunteers can work with an experienced volunteer.

Volunteers receive coupons that are good for services at Poplar Place, which include shows, schooling, stabling and more, or they can be used toward the purchase of Poplar Place attire, like T-shirts, sweatshirts and hats. Volunteers are also invited to the competition and volunteers' party one evening of the show.

Anyone interested in volunteering can call Lewis at 678-372-6150 or e-mail drlewis01@charter.net.

Volunteers will also be needed at the rest of the year's shows.

The show schedule is:

- March 23-25 Horse trials
- March 31 Schooling show
- April 28-29 Dressage show
- May 5-6 Horse trials
- May 12-13 Pony Club show jumping rally
- May 19-20 Dressage show
- June 8-10 Horse trials
- June 23-24 Dressage show

PREMONITION — Linda Hanson (Sandra Bullock) has a beautiful house, a loving husband (Julian McMahon) and two adorable daughters. Her life is perfect, until the day she receives the devastating news that her husband Jim has died in a car accident.

When she wakes up the next morning to find him alive and well, she assumes it was all a dream, but is shaken by how vivid it felt. She soon realizes it wasn't a dream, and her world is turned upside down as the surreal circumstances lead her to discover that her perfect family life may not have been all that it appeared.

Premonition is rated PG-13 for some violent content, disturbing images, thematic material and brief language.

DEAD SILENCE — There is an old ghost story in the sleepy town of Ravens Fair about Mary Shaw, a ventriloquist who went mad. Accused of the murder of a young boy, she was hunted down by vengeful townspeople who cut out her tongue and murdered her. They buried her along with her "children" — a handmade collection of vaudeville dolls. Since that time, Ravens Fair has been plagued by death. The dolls from Mary's collection have gone missing from the grave and reappeared over the decades.

In the dead of the night — wherever they are glimpsed — families are found gruesomely murdered — with their tongues torn out.

The movie stars Leigh Whannell, Amber Valletta and Donnie Wahlberg.

Dead Silence is rated R for horror violence and images.

I THINK I LOVE MY WIFE — Richard Cooper (Chris Rock) has it all. His wife, Brenda, is beautiful, intelligent and a fantastic mother to his children — but there's just one little problem: he's bored out of his suburban businessman's mind.

Richard can't help but fantasize about nearly every woman he sees.

Then, one fateful day, an alluring, free-spirited, not to mention stunning, old friend, Nikki suddenly appears at his office door, putting him to the ultimate test.

I Think I Love My Wife is rated R for pervasive language and some sexual content.

ALSO IN THEATERS

300 — The movie is set in the midst of the Persian-Greco war during the Battle of Thermopylae, where Spartan king Leonidas led his army of 300 soldiers into battle against the invading Persian army.

According to legend, their valor and sacrifice inspired all of Greece to unite against their Persian foe, leading to the origins of democracy.

300 is rated R for graphic battle sequences throughout, some sexuality and nudity.

ZODIAC — As a serial killer terrifies the San Francisco Bay Area and taunts police with his ciphers and letters, investigators in four jurisdictions search for the murderer. The case will become an obsession for four men as their lives and careers are built and destroyed by the endless trail of clues.

Jake Gyllenhaal, Mark Ruffalo, Robert Downey Jr. and Anthony Edwards star in the film.

Zodiac is rated R for some strong killings, language, drug material and brief sexual images.

WILD HOGS — A group of middle-aged friends (John Travolta, Tim Allen, Martin Lawrence, William H. Macy) decide to rev up their routine suburban lives with a freewheeling motorcycle trip.

Taking a long dreamed-of breather from their stressful jobs and family responsibilities, they can't wait to feel the freedom of the open road.

When this mismatched foursome — who have grown far more used to the couch than the saddle — set out for this once-in-a-lifetime experience, they encounter a world that holds far more than they ever bargained for.

Wild Hogs is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content and some violence.

BLACK SNAKE MOAN — Bitter and broken from a cheating wife and a shattered marriage, Lazarus' (Samuel L. Jackson) soul is lost in spent dreams and betrayal's contempt — until Rae (Christina Ricci).

Half naked and beaten unconscious, Rae is left for dead on the side of the road when Lazarus discovers her.

The God-fearing, middle-aged black man learns that the young white woman he's nursing back to health is none other than the town tramp from the small Tennessee town where they live. Worse, she has a peculiar anxiety disorder. He realizes when the fever hits, Rae's affliction has more to do with love lost than any found.

He chains her to his radiator, justifying his unorthodox methods with quoted scripture.

Black Snake Moan is rated R for strong sexual content, language, some violence and drug use.

THE ASTRONAUT FARMER — An astronaut, played by Billy Bob Thornton, is forced to leave NASA to save his family farm. He continues to dream of space travel and sets out to build a rocket inside his barn.

Though his neighbors consider him an oddity, the media considers him a story and the government considers him a threat, nothing can deter him from his dream.

The Astronaut Farmer is rated PG for thematic material, peril and language.

THE ABANDONED — An American woman searching for her birth parents learns she has inherited a house in the middle of a forest in a remote area of Russia — the house where she was born.

Abandoned and uninhabited for 40 years, it stands in total disrepair and neglect. She meets a mysterious man who claims to be her brother, a twin she never knew. Together they find the house holds secrets to a past they don't remember. They are forced to relive a series of horrifying events and shocking murders that occurred just after they were born, in the place they were supposed to die.

The movie stars Jordanka Angelova and Kalin Arsov. The Abandoned is rated R for violence and gore, some disturbing images, nudity and language.

THE NUMBER 23 — A man's life unravels after he comes into contact with an obscure book titled The Number 23. As he reads the book, he becomes increasingly convinced that it is based on his own life. His obsession starts to consume him, and he begins to realize the book forecasts grave consequences for his life.

The Number 23, rated R for violence, disturbing images, sexuality and language, stars Jim Carrey and Virginia Madsen.

TYLER PERRY'S DADDY'S LITTLE GIRLS — A successful female attorney falls in love with a janitor, the single father of three daughters, over the objections of her father.

Tyler Perry's Daddy's Little Girls, rated PG-13 for thematic material, drug and sexual content, some violence and language, stars Gabrielle Union, Avant and Louis Gossett Jr.

Crimes of opportunity preventable

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

A crime of opportunity is how the suspect in the recent burglaries and rape on Fort Benning described his conduct to an investigator, said the operations sergeant for the Directorate of Emergency Services.

Most crimes are crimes of opportunity, said Sgt. 1st Class John Szabo, who has been an MP for 20 years, and crimes of opportunity are preventable.

"That's the word we want to get out, we want to make residents aware that a little bit of prevention will bring the cure," he said.

The prevention?

Don't provide an opportunity, Szabo said. Keep doors locked. Criminals jiggle doorknobs. An open door is an invitation; so is an unlocked window.

"I just want the residents to be aware — to be safe," Szabo said. "If you see something

Army opens wounded Soldier hotline

Soldiers from the 20th Infantry Regiment fire at insurgents in Al Doura, Iraq, March 7. To better serve its wounded warriors, the Army is taking a hard look at its entire medical care system and ways it can be improved. The new hotline is an important part of this process, allowing Soldiers and their family members to be heard and better supported by their leaders.

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army opened phone lines Monday on its new Wounded Soldier and Family Hotline, providing wounded and injured Soldiers and their family members another way to resolve medical issues.

The hotline also provides an information channel for Soldiers' medical-related issues to go directly to senior Army leadership in order to improve the way the Army serves the medical needs of Soldiers and their families, said the commander of U.S. Army Human Resources Command, Maj. Gen. Sean J. Byrne.

"We designed this call center to be able to collectively hear what Soldiers say about their health-care issues so as issues are raised, we can identify systemic faults or

Post leaders 'summerize' troop training

Sgt. 1st Class Jesse McNair points to the red tape on his sleeve, an indicator that McNair is a potential heat casualty.

On the first day of spring, post leaders sat under a hot Georgia sun and planned for the day it will get hotter. Today could be that day, said Col. Michael Linnington, Fort Benning's deputy commander.

"It gets very hot here in the spring," he said. "We're already dealing with injuries. Leaders at every level are empowered to make training decisions to mitigate heat casualties, because when one Soldier goes, there are probably 10 going behind him."

Last year, 26 Soldiers suffered heat strokes during training on post. There were no heat-related fatalities, Linnington said, and that's a testimony to the quick action of their cohorts and leaders. It's also an object lesson in the importance of practicing man-down drills.

"Nothing we do in training is worth the life of a Soldier," Linnington said.

About 100 leaders, from company to battalion level, met in front of Infantry Hall Tuesday for a class on heat injury prevention and treatment. Their responsibility is to pass the information on to their Soldiers, Linnington said.

Lt. Col. Scott Power led the class. As the commander of the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Power oversees the training of thousands of new Soldiers each year, many who hail from states where the average summer temperature is no match for a Georgia spring.

Power's cadre demonstrated the various ways potential or previous heat casualties should be identified during hot-weather training; the correct way to measure body temperature; use ice sheets and heat stress monitors; and how to handle a casualty from start to finish.

On a post the size of Fort Benning, Power said, "there is no universal heat category. It can be heat cat five here in front of this building and it may not be on Sand Hill."

New leadership, programs to improve facilities, processes

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Staff Sgt. Christina M. O'Connell

WASHINGTON, D.C. — More than 5,600 Soldiers from Operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom have received world-class in-patient treatment at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., but many have had a different experience with outpatient care.

In early March media attention brought to light several medical facilities and processes that were in need of immediate improvement, grabbing the attention of top Army officials and the rest of the nation. Charged by Secretary of Defense Robert M. Gates with making immediate and long-term corrections to the leadership and systemic failures in the disability system, Acting Secretary of the Army Pete Geren has taken significant steps to bridge the gap between what the Army's wounded Soldiers deserve and what some have experienced at Walter Reed.

EIB testing a success due to 29th

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

This week's training article focuses on the 29th Infantry Regiment, one of the busiest, most important training units at Fort Benning, and on their recent conduct of the Expert Infantryman Badge Test. As you recall from my article in early February, the 29th Infantry provides a preponderance of Fort Benning's functional training, and supports in one way or another, most of the training that takes place here. Last year the 29th was responsible for training or supporting the training of more than 42,000 Soldiers and civilians in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

We believe this number will continue to increase in the coming years.

The Regiment not only trains on Fort Benning, but provides training and support to units throughout the world based upon the needs of the force. They have Soldiers deployed almost continuously as mobile training teams providing training on 16 different programs of instruction. Their efforts have significantly improved the training readiness of our Army. The Soldiers and NCO's of the 29th Regiment are known for being adaptable, professional and technically proficient as the "Lead the Way" for the U.S. Army Infantry School.

One of the many training events the 29th Infantry hosts yearly is the Expert Infantryman Badge Test. This year, 63 Fort Benning Soldiers earned the right to wear the coveted EIB, mastering the myriad Infantry skills required to be "expert" in their trade. Earning the EIB is no easy task. These 63 Soldiers worked long and hard to achieve this honor, and we were proud to present them their EIB's recognizing them for being the best at what they do as Infantrymen.

Our Infantry has been conducting the EIB since October 1943. It is awarded to U.S. Army personnel who hold Infantry or Special Forces military occupational specialties. To earn the EIB, Soldiers must complete a rigorous test across a wide array of Infantry-specific skills, after weeks of training before the actual test. Usually, the EIB test is conducted once per year and is designed to recognize outstanding Infantry Soldiers who demonstrate a high degree of professional skill, expertise and excellence. Because of the rigid testing procedures, many wearers of the EIB value it more than the Combat Infantryman Badge, which is awarded for participation in Infantry ground combat.

EIB training and testing is a demanding ordeal demanding excellence from all participants. Our Infantrymen trained and tested on 38 separate Soldier skill tasks and were required to pass all of them to earn their badge. Only two opportunities for retesting were offered during the three-day testing process. Failing any retest eliminated the Soldier from the competition.

This magnificent training event was accomplished by an outstanding committee of NCOs, led by the 29th Infantry Regiment, and spearheaded by 29th Infantry Command Sgt. Maj. Joe Leggett. This committee included cadre from every training brigade, and was charged with upholding the standard with every task trained and tested. These handpicked NCOs were recognized for their professionalism, and I can't thank them enough for the training they provided across our formations. They truly "led the way" by hosting the EIB in the professional manner they did.

In sum, the EIB is an outstanding training event. Our Infantrymen who wear this badge are recognized as the best in their profession. They are experts in Infantry skills, and I couldn't be more proud of their accomplishments.

Who's going to fill his shoes?

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

How do you observe National Medal of Honor Day?

Ha, I got you on that one, didn't I? You don't even know when it is. Neither would I, if Jim Rhodes didn't keep me informed.

He called me last week to remind me that Sunday, March 25, is the day set aside to honor our Medal of Honor recipients. He called me last year to invite me to a ceremony at the Government Center in Columbus, where an eternal flame burns day and night, all year round, to pay tribute to our veterans.

In front of the flame is a monument dedicated to five Medal of Honor recipients who called Columbus home. It was Jim's idea to put that monument there. He led efforts to raise funds for it.

And last year, he stood at the podium as the monument was unveiled and made an interesting observation. He believes that Columbus is the only city in the country that can claim so many Medal of Honor recipients as their own.

Jim is 84 and a veteran of World War II. He's spent more than 20 years serving his country and twice that many serving the men and women who served this country. He calls himself a veteran's activist, but I'm not particularly fond of the term. Too many people have given activism a bad name.

No, I think Jim is an angel, or about as close to an angel as you'll find this side of heaven. He has a servant's heart. Jim takes care of people. He gets press occasionally, when his name is attached to events like the renaming of Veterans' Parkway and the annual Pearl Harbor memorial service.

But I know that Jim also cares for elderly veterans and the widows of veterans every day. Every day. He drives them where they need to go. He calls to check on them, to make sure they're taking their medicine and getting the help they need from the VA. Jim is a giant if ever there was one.

But this article wasn't supposed to be about Jim. He'll correct me about that, you can bet on it. He wanted me to tell you about Medal of Honor Day, and I have, but I have to tell it my way.

When Jim called the other day, he said something that shook me far more than the fact that I had forgotten about Medal of Honor Day. Jim said he's not well, he's been through a couple of surgeries recently, and he can't head up a ceremony this year. Which means there will be no ceremony this year.

I'm troubled because Jim is suddenly acting his age, and I'm afraid his days of "activism" are numbered. He told me a couple of months back that he's "getting to the point where someone's going to have to carry on."

Aside from the very real concern for Jim, I'm worried about who's going to fill his shoes.

Reflections of sacrifice: A thank you to our partners

WESTERN HEMISPHERE
INSTITUTE FOR SECURITY
COOPERATION
Yamill Collazo

The third deployment of the 3rd Bridge Combat Team to Iraq caused me to reflect on the sacrifices made by our men and women in uniform to win the Global War on Terrorism. As a civilian information specialist at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation — an institution dedicated to training and educating military, civilian and police leaders from the countries of the Western hemisphere — I also began to reflect on our role supporting our nation's goals.

While conducting research for one of our students, I discovered a 2004 issue of the Washington Times with an article titled "Salvadoran Soldiers Praised for Iraq Role" by Denis D. Grey. This article caught my eye because, for the past 18 years serving as a library technician and information specialist, I have worked with El Salvadoran students at WHINSEC and its predecessor school. The article told about an El Salvadoran soldier, Cpl. Toloza, and his experience of hand-to-hand combat in Iraq. The fight left one of his soldiers dead and 12 gravely wounded. Toloza and four remaining soldiers were alone, surrounded by the enemy, and out of ammunition. Toloza said a prayer, whipped out his knife, and charged the gunmen surrounding him. He stabbed several attackers causing them to momentarily back away, just as a relief column came to the unit's rescue.

As I was reading the article, a few El Salvadoran soldiers entered the library. They were at WHINSEC for the Peace Operations Course. I greeted Lt. Col. Harold Pineda, Lt. Col. Alvaro Rivera, Lt. Col. Samuel Ruiz, Lt. Col. Arquimedes Lopez and Maj. Oscar Mena, and discovered they all had been to Iraq and were very enthusiastic about working alongside U.S. and coalition forces. I could tell they were very proud of what they had done.

The El Salvadoran Army has been sending officers to WHINSEC to enhance the capabilities of its military in peace operation tactics, techniques, and procedures related to operations other than war. As I talked to these soldiers I could tell they were there as peacekeepers, but they were also trained to fight until the end if the situation demanded it. Another example of this determination is related by Grey in his article. In an interview, Phil Kosnett, who led a Coalition Provisional Authority office in a Shiite-dominated city at the time, said he owes his life to Salvadorans who repelled a well-executed insurgent attack on his three-car convoy. He subsequently nominated six Salvadorans for the U.S. Army's Bronze Star.

WHINSEC is not exempt to the sacrifices of those involved in the GWOT. Capt. José Argelio Soto Ochoa graduated from the Peace Operations Course in April, 2006. He deployed to Iraq and was killed in action Oct. 20. These particular sacrifices are highlighted because of El Salvador's support to Operation Enduring Freedom. However, the countries that send students to WHINSEC are supporting other global missions. There are more than 6,400 Western Hemisphere soldiers supporting 16 U.N.-sponsored peacekeeping operations worldwide. The sacrifices of our students and their comrades are unnoticed by the general public, but, as a WHINSEC employee, I am proud to be associated with them and thank them for their noble efforts.

Post celebrates Women's History Month

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Col. Margaret Rivera praised Fort Benning's women as being "Army strong" at the Women's History Month luncheon March 15.

Rivera, the commander of Martin Army Community Hospital, was the guest speaker at the event, which was held at the Benning Club and had performances of songs and poems.

Col. David Ling, chief of staff at Fort Benning, said Rivera fits the bill of "women moving history forward," which was the theme of the luncheon.

"She's a prudent, superb officer and leader," Ling said.

Rivera interviewed several women in the medical field on post and discovered that all felt compelled to serve, she said. Some of the other characteristics common to all the women were courage, taking advantage of opportunities, competence and physical and mental strength.

The women are forging a path for others to follow, she said, but they don't claim to be special or require accolades. Women have played a role in every war America has been involved in, Rivera said. In the Civil War, women disguised themselves as men to fight.

Rivera talked of Capt. Linda Bray, who was the first woman to command an Army unit engaged in direct combat, when she was involved in Operation Just Cause in Panama. The names of eight women are engraved on the Vietnam wall memorial in D.C., she said.

"All these women, and many more, laid the groundwork for where we are today," Rivera said.

Women represent 14 percent of the active-duty Army, 23 percent of the Army Reserves and 18 percent of the Army National Guard, according to the Army's homepage. More than 15,000 women are serving in Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom, as of October, according to the Army's homepage.

Fort Benning's celebration of women's history included the children of Soldiers. Cecelia Jackson, a student at Loyd Elementary School, sang the national anthem. Six of her fellow Loyd students recited Words of Wisdom.

Staff Sgt. Malinda L. Moody, who works at Martin Army Community Hospital, sang Anytime You Need a Friend by Mariah Carey, and Celeste Mabry Lee, who works at the Directorate of Training, recited the poem Momma is a Soldier.

The luncheon ended with the singing of Sam Cooke's song A Change is Going to Come by Sgt. Nicholas Skinner from Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 1st Brigade, U.S. Army Reserve.

PEO Soldier tests improved parachute systems

New parachute system starts to replace T-11 in 2008

PEO SOLDIER
Debi Dawson

Program Executive Office Soldier is testing a new parachute system that the Army plans to use to replace the system in use since the 1950s.

The new parachutes address increased weight requirements and provide additional safety benefits.

Beginning in 2008, all T-10 parachutes, in the Army inventory for more than 50 years, will be replaced with the Advanced Tactical Parachute System T-11. Although the T-10 is a proven system, today's paratroopers face increased requirements beyond the T-10's design.

Paratroopers are required to jump in more equipment than in the 1950s, when the total weight of Soldier, parachute system and combat load averaged 300 pounds. The T-11 is designed to carry a paratrooper with a total jump weight of as much as 400 pounds safely to the ground.

A key safety benefit of the T-11 is a significantly slower rate of descent averaging 18 feet per second, resulting in a 25 percent reduction in impact force over the T-10. The T-11 achieves the slower descent by having a canopy with a 28 percent larger surface area than the T-10, while weighing only seven pounds more.

Additionally, the main canopy design results in minimal oscillation after inflation and after lowering the combat load.

Operational testing of the T-11 began in January under the supervision of The Airborne and Special Operations Test Directorate and PEO Soldier. It is being tested by 18th Airborne Corps paratroopers, riggers, and jumpmasters who will make more than 3,200 test jumps from January to October to ensure its suitability for use in mass-tactical, static-line operations.

"It will ultimately result in more Soldiers available for duty because of fewer injuries," said Lt. Col. John Lemondes, PEO Soldier's Product manager for Clothing and Individual Equipment.

Lemondes said that the T-11 Reserve Parachute is more reliable and much safer than the T-10's.

"The T-11 harness improves paratrooper comfort and integration with the parachute and mission equipment. The T-11 main canopy design results in a much smoother deployment sequence, minimizes oscillation and significantly reduces the rate of descent, which will result in many fewer jumper-related injuries. It will ultimately result in more Soldiers available for duty because of fewer injuries."

Under the current fielding plan, the 75th Ranger Regiment, the Rigger School and the Airborne School will receive the T-11 in 2008-2009. The 82nd Airborne Division will receive the new parachute in 2009-2011, and T-10s will be replaced Armywide by 2014.

Referral bonus extended to Army civilians

$2K Referral Bonus program open to DA civilians

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Heike Hasenauer

WASHINGTON — The Army has expanded its $2K Referral Bonus program to include civilian employees, making it possible for them to earn $2,000 while helping the Army boost enlistments.

Until March 15, the recruiting incentive — known as the "$2K Referral Bonus" program for the regular Army and Army Reserve, and "Every Soldier is a Recruiter" in the National Guard — applied only to Soldiers and Army retirees who referred applicants who enlist, complete basic training and graduate from advanced individual training.

The bonus for referring a prospective applicant who has never served in the armed forces originated in January 2006 with a $1,000 bonus. It was doubled in November 2006.

Under the newly expanded program, a Department of the Army civilian who refers a prospective recruit before the applicant meets with a recruiter is eligible for the award. Restrictions preclude the referral of an immediate family member (including an adopted or step-child). Additionally, the referral must be made via the following Web sites, respectively, for active-duty Army prospective recruits and Army National Guard prospective recruits: <https://www.usarec.army.mil/smart/> or www.1800goguard.com/esar.

Referrals for the regular Army and Army Reserve may also be made by calling U.S. Army Recruiting Command's toll-free number: (800) 223-3735. Referrals to the National Guard may be made by calling the Guard's toll-free number: (866) 566-2472.

"As the Army Civilian Creed notes, Army civilians are dedicated members of the Army team. They support the mission, and they provide stability and continuity during war and peace," said Lt. Gen. Michael Rochelle, the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel.

"I know they are directing deserving youth to recruiters now. This will not only encourage them, but also reward them for their service."

For more information about the referral program, visit <https://www.usarec.army.mil/smart/> or call 800-223-3735, extension 6-0473.

Army pushes post e-mail users to new program

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

Changes this week to Fort Benning's e-mail system should have been transparent to the user, said Paul Yates, director of Information Management.

The system that pushes e-mail to Microsoft Outlook is no longer supported by Microsoft and the installation no longer controls the system, he said. It is now controlled at the Army level.

Now, the front end of processing e-mail isn't on Fort Benning but at another location where it goes to one big server and then sent to the local installations.

There are several positive aspects to this change, Yates said.

"One, the Army processing center is a humongous firewall that should eliminate the amount of spam we get," he said. "That will reduce it a lot."

"Second, when the transition is complete, our global address lists will be set up by installation. If you need an e-mail address for a person who works at Fort Polk, you'll be able to find it," he said.

The work on the system was done after duty hours to keep any disruptions to a minimum,

Yates said.

"Most users won't notice the change," he said.

Elwin Gilchrist, Office of Infantry Proponency information management officer, said the process should be pretty straightforward.

"All the IMOs received a briefing. We're supposed to let our people know about the change, to clean up their inboxes and how to handle encrypted messages," Gilchrist said. "No big deal."

Once the migration has occurred, Yates said, users should get an e-mail in their inbox informing them of the change.

Training: Stresses hydration, not over hydration

It's up to leaders to constantly and consistently assess the danger, he said.

Measurements, using a Wet Bulb Globe Temperature device, are required on an hourly basis when the ambient temperature exceeds 75 degrees Fahrenheit.

Power also stressed the importance of hydration, a lesson everyone should heed, whether or not they wear a uniform. Soldiers must drink ample quantities of water and Powerade.

But leaders must be sure Soldiers don't "over hydrate," a very dangerous condition known as water intoxication.

"The hydration policy should be enforced, not forced," Power said. "Soldiers should be sipping, not gulping. Water should be cool, not cold."

Power's cadre walked through two heat casualty scenarios — a Soldier succumbing to the heat during PT and another during a road march — from the moment the victims exhibited the loss of mental acuity until emergency crews carried them off the field.

"The leaders here get it," Linnington said. "But will all the leaders get it at the end of April after we've had a 40 percent transition? We have to practice, practice, practice."

Cadre from the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment on Sand Hill, conducted two heat casualty scenarios Tuesday during a class on heat injury prevention and treatment in front of Infantry Hall. Here, drill sergeants wrap a Soldier in ice blankets after he collapsed during PT. Last year, there were 26 heat strokes reported on post and no heat-related fatalities.

problematic areas and senior leaders can better allocate resources," Byrne said. "It's all about serving our wounded and injured Soldiers and their families. If we can find a way to improve our system, we will. It's that simple."

Many wounded and injured Soldiers, who have supported the war on terror, and their families, are enduring hardships in navigating the medical care system, Byrne said.

"Our Army is committed to providing outstanding medical care for the men and women who have volunteered to serve this great nation," Byrne said. "But recent events at Walter Reed Army Medical Center made it clear the Army needs to revise how it meets the needs of our injured and wounded Soldiers and their families. In certain cases, the chain of command could have done a better job in helping to resolve medical-related issues."

Leaders in the chain of command need to know that this call center exists, and that it was not created to circumvent the chain of command, Byrne said.

"In this particularly challenging time, as our

Improvements: Rely on new leadership team

The two main issues recognized as unacceptable by top Army officials are the conditions of the outpatient barracks, Building 18, and the lengthy, bureaucratic process of evaluating Soldiers' disabilities. Both issues are in need of short-term fixes, but, more importantly, require long-term corrections.

Following the March disclosures, all Soldiers living in Building 18 were moved onto the WRAMC campus and into Abrams Barracks, where each room provides Soldiers with a computer, telephone, television and Internet access.

Immediate responses also involved a new leadership chain of command at WRAMC under Maj. Gen. Eric Schoomaker, and included new positions created specifically to ensure Soldiers' needs are met. As Schoomaker took command March 2, a deputy commanding general position was created and filled by combat veteran Brig. Gen. Michael S. Tucker, whose mission is to work on behalf of the Soldiers as the "bureaucracy buster" and ensure the outpatient system is responsive to their needs.

"We've found that in many cases this bureaucracy that's grown over the decades frustrates the very best efforts of the most dedicated public servants," said Geren. "We've got Soldiers who are fighting a war overseas, and come back and battle a bureaucracy over here. It shouldn't be that way."

The new leadership team also extends to the Wounded Warrior Brigade, commanded by Col. Terrance McKendrick, created for the purpose of tracking Soldiers and ensuring each is taken care of. The squad leaders assigned to every nine Soldiers will look after those Soldiers, and make sure they are making appointments and getting needed care. A One Stop Soldier and Family Assistance Center will ensure quick and easy access to case managers, family coordinators, finance experts and representatives from key support and advocacy organizations such as the Army Wounded Warrior Program.

Two separate expert teams have been handpicked to assess major Army medical facilities' outpatient care and community-based health-care organizations for Reserve

Soldiers, an assessment that Geren said will help identify the problems that need to be corrected throughout the system.

Long-term improvements rely heavily on the new leadership team and structure, but the Wounded Soldier and Family Hotline (800-984-8523) has been established to keep problems from slipping through the cracks. The hotline allows Soldiers and their families to directly contact the Army Operation Center and inform Army leaders of issues that need attention.

"This goes right to the heart of our commitment to Soldiers and their families," said Geren. "They've got to know that we're going to take care of them. The American people need to know we're going to take care of them so they'll continue to have confidence in the Army, the confidence the Army deserves. And this is an important piece of it, so this will remain the primary focus for me as long as I have this job."

FOUNDERS DAY

The West Point Society of Fort Benning will present Founders Day at 6 p.m. Saturday at the Benning Club.

Enjoy a night of dinner, dancing and tradition for $20 per person.

The guest speaker is Brig. Gen. Robert L. Caslen, U.S. Military Academy Commandant of Cadets. For reservations, call 706-544-9232.

TAX CENTER

The Fort Benning Tax Center is a free service for Soldiers, retirees and family members with an ID card. Tax returns will be e-filed whenever possible.

The following information should be brought to the Tax Center: ID card; a current Social Security card for any dependents and yourself; a voided check if you wish to have any refund directly deposited (highly recommended); and any W-2s, 1098s and 1099s.

The Tax Center is located at Building 1678, Room G131 on Ingersoll Street across from the post movie theater. Hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

For more information, call 706-545-4267.

ARMY SEEKS RECOMMENDATIONS

The Army is accepting design ideas through March 31 for the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and motto for the Maneuver Center of Excellence.

Requirements include a clear, hand-drawn or electronic sketch of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive unit insignia and a short, succinct motto.

The motto must be written in English and is limited to 26 characters (letters and spaces).

Include name, phone number, e-mail address and mailing address of the individual submitting the designs and motto.

Send submissions to MCOE_Insignia_Suggestions@knox.army.mil or Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATSH-ATH, Room 451, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000.

ASAP TRAINING

Join the ASAP April 12 for training with Denise Wagoner, a former model who became blind and disfigured in a drunken driving crash.

The training is at 7:30, 8:30 and 9:30 a.m. in classroom 6 in Infantry Hall, 1 p.m. at WHINSEC and 3:30 p.m. at the Sand Hill Rec Center.

The training counts towards the mandatory four hours of substance abuse prevention education for Soldiers and three hours for civilian employees.

VOLUNTEER RECOGNITION CEREMONY

The 2007 USAIC Volunteer Recognition Ceremony and Reception will be from 4 to 6 p.m. April 17 on the lawn at Riverside.

In the case of inclement weather, it will be at the Benning Club.

For more information, call Starla DeSaussure at 706-545-5516.

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE

There will be a Days of Remembrance Commemorative Service from 11 a.m. to noon April 18 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The theme is "Children in Crisis: Voice from the Holocaust."

For more information, contact your unit's EO advisor or call the EO office at 706-545-3198.

Leaders must adapt to change

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
George R. Monk

The New York Times bestseller, Who Moved my Cheese? is a book about change — how to adapt or become a victim of circumstances and not live up to your potential.

Everyone can take a lesson from this book and apply it to life.

As leaders in the home, corporations and military, the bottom line is that your expectations of performance standards, knowledge and leadership ability are constantly on display.

How well you lead and adapt to change is the evidence of success for your organization. Your adaptation is akin to results, not just lip service.

Leaders, as agents of change, have the responsibility to challenge subordinates to excel to the highest levels possible and be willing to accept change along the way. By leading from the front, you set the example, maintain a personal connection and develop leaders along the way.

The dated controversy that leaders are born and not made has finally met its timely demise.

By the same analogy, leaders have to be managers and managers have to be leaders for effective organizations to function.

Change is inevitable and employees should understand the cost effectiveness, growth and development that will evolve from it.

Editor's note: Retired Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk is a former commandant of the Henry Caro NCO Academy and is the academic dean of the University of Phoenix.

NEWS AROUND the ARMY

Garrison helps endangered birds

U.S. Army Garrison, Hawaii, has stepped in to help endangered native birds. The USAG-HI's Natural Resources staff provides the six-inch Oahu elepaio bird protection from the black rat. Other threats to the bird include disease, wild cats, mongoose and habitat loss.

The elepaio was listed as an endangered species by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services in 2000. There are 75 elepaio pairs on Schofield Barracks.

The NRS puts out poison bait in tamper-proof bait boxes to control the rats, thereby helping the birds.

Paratrooper wins Super Sapper award

The 2006 Super Sapper award was given to Airborne combat engineer Spc. James Lugari Feb. 25 during a ceremony at Contingency Operations Base Speicher, Iraq.

Lugari, with Company A, 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 82nd Airborne Division, is the second Soldier to receive the award.

To receive the award, a Soldier's command has to submit a packet to the Association of Engineers. The association looks at the individual's demonstrative potential, his technical and tactical knowledge and expertise in demolition, reconnaissance and patrolling.

Hood launches study

A study was launched in February at Fort Hood, Texas, by the Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center and its prime contractor, Anthrotech, to help the Army determine how the size and shape of Soldiers has changed in the past 20 years.

The study will gather body measurements and data from 5,000 active duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers.

Smaller studies were conducted at other posts, and it was found that Soldiers have become heavier.

The results are expected to immediately affect the sizing of uniforms.

Dix expands training, facilities

Fort Dix, N.J., is overhauling its military operations in urban terrain site, a mock village that is set to grow with 79 new structures. The site is also expanding so different units can train at the same time and not get in each other's way.

Also at Fort Dix, Camp Victory has projects underway. A new maintenance facility consisting of two large tents is environmentally controlled, insulated and provides more effective ventilation.

To kill!

Spc. James Ball emerges from a mud hole after clearing the wall obstacle at the bayonet course on Sand Hill. Ball will attend OCS after completing one station unit training.

Bayonet training still relevant to combat readiness

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

“What is the spirit of the bayonet,” yelled Sgt. 1st Class Vincent Williams.

“To kill!” roared the assembled Soldiers of B Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

Williams’ vocal encouragement was designed to whip them into a highly motivated state.

The Soldiers were waiting their turn to move through the bayonet assault course at Sand Hill.

When their turn came, they moved downrange from obstacle to obstacle, staying on line with their fellow Soldiers, as they assaulted each position with a frenzied zeal.

1st Lt. Waiman Leung commented on the course.

“It instills the Warrior Ethos in Soldiers. They get a lot of motivation out of it,” he said.

Spc. James Ball completed the run down the course and struggled to catch his breath. He talked about on the tough training and the use of the bayonet.

“It’s hard, very hard. I almost lost my voice getting motivated. This weapon is still a useful tool if you run out of ammunition,” he said.

During the rush from one end of the range to the other, the Soldiers climbed, crawled, jumped and moved through obstacles while bayoneting “enemy” soldiers stationed along the way.

They emerged from a muddy pit at the far end of the range, winded and gasping for breath, covered with the red Georgia clay.

After completing the bayonet course, the Soldiers moved to pugil stick training. They paired off and proceeded to pummel each other until one was declared the winner by a drill sergeant.

Pfc. Seth Barrow and Pfc. Albert Trevino finished a physically punishing bout and retired sweating and gasping for air.

“This is the most fun thing we’ve done. I love it,” Barron said.

While use of the bayonet is not nearly as common a practice as it was in years gone by, this type of training is still considered relevant.

“The bayonet is still important because these skills may enable Soldiers to save their lives in an extreme situation,” Williams said.

After clearing an obstacle, Soldiers move down the course together and engage “enemy” targets at each station. They must keep on line with fellow team members.

A Soldier drops his weapon while rolling over the top of a wall. The obstacles are designed to challenge the physical endurance of the Soldiers as they move down the range.

Ball attacks an “enemy” soldier with a slashing movement. The Soldiers learned several defensive and offensive movements while negotiating the course.

Construction began on the National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center at Patriot Park in November. The world-class facility will honor the 231-year legacy of valor and sacrifice of the Army's largest branch, the Infantry. The project includes a museum, parade field, memorial walk of honor, authentic World War II Company Street and 3-D IMAX Theatre. Pictured here is crane operator Ashley Wells.

The Georgia House of Representatives approved a supplemental budget Tuesday for 2008 that includes $5 million for the new National Infantry Museum and Soldier Center being built at Patriot Park.

"This is certainly good news," National Infantry Foundation Executive Director Ben Williams said. "Getting support from the state means a lot to us. If the funding stays in place, it means we can get down to business building this long overdue tribute to American Infantrymen."

Williams credited Rep. Vance Smith for spearheading the effort to include the museum project in the spending bill, and the entire delegation for its support.

The measure now goes to the Senate. If approved, the project will have raised $66 million toward its goal of $85 million.

The National Infantry Foundation is conducting an $85 million fund raising campaign to build a new National Infantry Museum and Heritage Park on 200 acres linking Columbus, Georgia, and Fort Benning, the Home of the Infantry. The world-class facility will honor the 231-year legacy of valor and sacrifice of the Army's largest branch, the Infantry. The project includes a museum, parade field, memorial walk of honor, authentic World War II Company Street and 3-D IMAX Theatre.

Former MLB commissioner dies

Bowie Kuhn, commissioner of Major League Baseball for 15 years, died March 15 from respiratory failure due to pneumonia. He was 80 years old.

By the end of his tenure in 1984, the major leagues had free agency, 26 teams in four divisions, a designated hitter in the American League and average salaries of $330,000.

Pharmacy probe heats up

A nationwide steroids pharmacy probe is heating up, and names are being disclosed.

Professional wrestlers are the latest names to be linked to the scandal.

The wrestlers include Kurt Angle, Randy Orton, Adam Copeland ("Edge"), Shane Helms ("The Hurricane"), Ricco Rodriguez ("Rey Mysterio") and Eddie Guerrero, who died in 2005.

Those linked in the MLB include Gary Matthews Jr., Jose Canseco, Mike Rucker, Jerry Hairston Jr. and David Ortiz.

Those who are allegedly linked to the scandal are listed below.

Sweet 16

The Sweet 16 is underway and it looks like the Elite 8 is wide open for any team.

Games today include Florida versus Butler at 7:10 p.m., Oregon versus UNLV at 9:40 p.m., UNC versus USC at 9:57 p.m. and Vanderbilt versus Georgetown at 7:27 p.m.

There were a few upsets in the opening rounds. The most notable was Duke's loss to NCU.

Singh wins Invitational

Vijay Singh won the Arnold Palmer Invitational March 18 in Orlando, Fla. It was his 31st PGA Tour career victory.

Tiger Woods, who was a co-leader early in the tourney, finished an unimpressive 22nd after shooting a 43 on the back nine on the final day.

Johnson beats outdrives Stewart for win

Jimmy Johnson passed Tony Stewart with just a few laps left in the Kobalt Tools 500 from Atlanta Motor Speedway March 18 for his second consecutive victory.

Mark Martin remains the points leader, followed by Jeff Gordon, Jeff Burton, Jerome Johnson and Matt Kenseth.

This week's race will premiere the Car of Tomorrow at Bristol Motor Speedway. Coverage begins at 1:30 p.m. Sunday on Fox.

IndyCar season begins

The IRL IndyCar Series revs back up with the XM Satellite Radio 300 at Homestead-Miami Speedway at 8 p.m. Saturday on ESPN2.

Besides full-time driver Danica Patrick, two other females will be racing this season. Sarah Fisher will run the oval races and Mika Dunlop is hoping to make a debut with SAMAX Racing.

The Libertadores, from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, defeated the 75th Ranger Regiment, 4-3, in a close battle on the opening day of the preseason intramural soccer tournament, which kicked off Monday at Doughboy stadium.

The Libertadores, one of three WHINSEC teams, have been playing together for more than six months and have players representing various countries, including Ecuador, Brazil, Chile, Columbia and the U.S.

The team from WHINSEC's Command General Staff Course knocked off the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 5-2; the WHINSEC Commandos made easy work of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Outriders, 5-0; and "The Deuces" of the 11th Engineer Battalion edged out the B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Bulldogs, 3-2.

Intramural softball set to start in May

DMWR officials expect 25-30 teams to participate in league

THE BAYONET

With soccer and volleyball kicking off this week, excitement for the intramural softball season is already brewing, said Willie Spann, sports coordinator of the Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation.

Softball is one of the most popular intramural activities on post and always attracts a large number of participants, he said.

"Even though we have had recent deployments, I don't expect the participation to be down at all," Spann said.

"We already have a lot of team commitments and are expecting between 25-30 teams."

The team set-up will consist of rosters of 18 players and two coaches.

There will be a preseason tournament that will begin in early May, and the regular season will start the following week.

The top six teams from the tournament will receive free uniforms.

Softball league play will take place on Knappenberger and Gowdy

There will be a coaches meeting at 1 p.m. April 19 on

Fields. Spectators are welcome but are prohibited from bringing pets to the fields.

"It's great when the families come out to support their teams and we want more spectator participation this year," Spann said.

The 4th Ranger Training Battalion took first place in softball last year and is looking forward to defending their title this year, Spann said.

There will be a coaches meeting April 19 at 1 p.m. in Gowdy Field to discuss rules of play and formats of the league, as well as to collect team rosters and letters of intent. There will be a league official to answer any question that players or coaches may have.

The league is open to active-duty, Reserve or National Guard Soldiers and there are no fees for players or teams.

Your invitation to fantasyland

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

I have finally mastered, if there is such a thing, the ins and outs of fantasy sports.

My b-ball team has been in first place since November.

I have found that a lot of people have no idea what fantasy sports are, or how to play them; I didn't a couple of years ago.

Well, consider this commentary an early Christmas gift for those who want to get down in fantasyland.

Fantasy leagues are virtual competitions based on the outcome of their respective sport. There are leagues in just about every sport out there.

I'll use an NBA league as my example.

The person who creates any fantasy league is the league commissioner. The commissioner invites people, usually people he or she knows, to sign up for the league. The number of players in a league varies in sport, but I've noticed that 12 is usually the standard.

Once the players have been determined for the league, the commish sets up a draft, which is usually held online. Some league members aren't available to make the draft so the draft automatically selects the best available players for that person's team during their draft order. Every active player in the NBA is available during the draft.

Managers then set up how points will be tabulated for each player's game performance. For example, a commissioner may set it up so that players get one point for each player's points, two points per rebound, two points per assist and minus three points for a turnover. So, if Kobe Bryant is on your team and he gets 40 points, 10 rebounds, four assists and three turnovers, Kobe got you 59 fantasy points for the night.

Each player who you put in the starting lineup gets you the total number of fantasy points for that night.

This is done for every game played and the points are accumulated throughout the season.

The league begins play on opening day of the actual NBA season.

Here are some tips that all new players should follow:

- Be there for your draft. Don't depend on the autodraft to make your choices. Making wise draft selections can separate you from being in first or last place.
  - While drafting players, pick them based on probable performances in the point system the commissioner has set up. Don't just pick popular names. In other words, Allen Iverson won't do as well in a league with the highest points coming from rebounds and blocked shots.
  - Set your starting rosters everyday. If you have Kevin Garnett on your team but you left him on the bench on a night that he got 106 fantasy points, tough luck. They don't get added in your total. If you know you won't be around a computer for the next few days, set up your rosters for several days ahead.
  - Keep track of updates about your players. If one of your guys got hurt last night and he is set to play today, you need to know it so you can replace him with someone from your bench.
  - Don't let people in your league trick you into making bad trades. Giving up Jason Kidd for Carmelo Anthony just because Melo scores a lot is a bad move. Kidd racks up numbers in multiple categories of the game, which is the key to points. Remember, there is usually a good reason why someone wants to let a player go. It usually turns out bad for you.
  - First timers should participate in a sport they are familiar with. If you know nothing about the NFL, you won't fare too well in an NFL league. On the other hand, fantasy leagues are a great way to learn the sport if you don't mind losing initially.
  - Never play for money unless you know what you are doing and you know the commissioner. I have never played for money because I just enjoy the competition.
- If you follow these tips, you should be well on your way to making short work of the competition. Good luck. You'll need it if you play against me.

U.S. Army Racing

Regan Smith will make his Nextel Cup debut in Sunday's Food City 500 at Bristol Motor Speedway.

Unusual circumstances don't ruffle Smith for Cup debut

U.S. ARMY RACING

BRISTOL, Tenn. — It's a scenario that Regan Smith never imagined he would be faced with when making his Nextel Cup debut. The 23-year-old driver from the Ginn Racing stable will not only make his first Cup start this weekend at one of the most unpredictable tracks on the NASCAR circuit, but he will also be taking over the driving duties from a legend who guided the team car to the top of the point standings.

Smith will pilot the No. 01 U.S. Army Chevrolet — the Car of Tomorrow version — in Sunday's Food City 500 at Bristol Motor Speedway. Mark Martin, who drove the Army Chevy in the first four races of the season, is taking the next two weekends off as part of his limited 2007 schedule.

Martin scored four top-10 finishes in the 01 car and left last week's event in Atlanta as the points leader.

"No question, I have some really big shoes to fill," said Smith. "But the only pressure I feel is what I have put on myself. Everyone understands the situation and there has been no outside pressure from the ownership, sponsors or the guys."

"I am only excited and pumped because I'm with a great race team and getting into a great race car," said Smith. "I also take a lot of pride wearing the Army colors and representing our Soldiers. I am in a great situation."

Smith, who will also compete in Saturday's Busch race in the No. 4 Ginn Resorts Chevrolet, said he is realistic about what to expect in his Cup debut at the half-mile bullring.

"I think everyone would agree that Bristol is not the easiest track," said Smith. "It's a tough place when you're having a good day. The mindset from our end is not to expect a win or a top-

10 finish. I want to finish the race, be on the lead lap and have the car in one piece. That's a tall order for Bristol, but with some luck, I think we can deliver that result."

And to add even more uniqueness about Smith's debut is that it will be the first race for NASCAR's Car of Tomorrow.

"I look at the Car of Tomorrow as just another race car that all of us have to deal with," said Smith. "We had a pretty good test in Bristol a few weeks ago. Again, I don't see it being anything major, it's a race car and we've all driven many different types of cars in our careers."

Smith feels that he has gained confidence since being around Martin, who has been his racing idol since his childhood days in upstate New York.

"Mark has been a great role model," said Smith. "He has taught me how to carry myself as a driver and how to respect the equipment, the team and the competition."

"On the track there have been some things I have struggled with in the past and really didn't have anyone to go to for advice. But now I have Mark and there's nobody better. There have been times I was like a duck out of water and he pointed me in the right direction. I feel very fortunate to be in this position."

After Bristol it doesn't get any easier for Smith. His next two races in the 01 Army Chevy will be at Martinsville (April 1) and at Talladega (April 29).

"The best places to learn are on the toughest tracks and I don't think it gets any tougher than Bristol, Martinsville and Talladega," said Smith. "Really, the track doesn't matter — it's the opportunity to go out there and prove yourself against the best drivers in the world."

Schumacher hooks year's first win

U.S. ARMY RACING

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — U.S. Army Top Fuel driver, Tony "The Sarge" Schumacher, won his first race of the 2007 season March 18 in the ACDelco Gatornationals at Gainesville Raceway.

In Pro Stock Motorcycles, U.S. Army pilots Angelle Sampey and Antron Brown both lost in the first round.

Top Fuel — Schumacher, who had qualified third, beat Larry Dixon in the finals with a 4.542-second run at 325.14 mph. It was his second career Gatornationals victory.

"It means a lot to win this race again," said the Chicago native.

"Without question, winning the U.S. Nationals is big, but the Gatornationals is definitely a close second."

The defending NHRA POWERade Top Fuel world champion rolled through a tough side of the eliminations ladder before his meeting with Dixon.

He had to get by the likes of former teammates Melanie Troxel, Doug Kalitta and Rod Fuller.

"It was tough for sure," he said. "There aren't any easy ones anymore in Top Fuel. When you win one of these races, you've earned it."

"What I'm most happy about is that we didn't take as long this year as last year to get a win for our Soldiers. As always, I hope we were able to put a smile on their faces."

Schumacher's 36th career victory moved him past the legendary "Big Daddy" Don Garlits, into fourth-place on the all-time Top Fuel win list.

"That's incredible to be on such a list with him," he said. "He's the man, bar none."

Randy Morgan

With his win in Gainesville, Schumacher also jumped four more spots in the standings to second-place and now trails Fuller by 39 points.

Pro Stock Motorcycles — Both Sampey and Brown were beaten on "hole shots," where one competitor posts a better elapsed time than his or her opponent, but leaves the starting later and gets to the finish line second.

In Sampey's case, she recorded a quicker pass than 16th-place qualifier Karen Stoffer (6.969 seconds at 185.05 mph) but her reaction time at the starting line was slower than Stoffer's — .119 seconds to .004 seconds.

"The numbers say it all," said Sampey, who had qualified number one on Saturday with a national record-setting run.

"When you leave the line late that usually spells trouble."

Brown had a similar experience against 14th-place qualifier Tom Bradford. The New Jersey native posted a quicker 7.012-second quarter-mile trip at 185.64 mph, but his .109-second start was slower than Bradford's .042-second launch.

"I feel the same way as Angelle — horrible," said Brown.

"The (crew) guys gave us great Suzukis and we just didn't get the job done today. After testing here in Gainesville tomorrow, we'll certainly look to make amends in two weeks out in Texas."

Schumacher, Sampey and Brown will next head to Houston Raceway Park, March 30-April 1, for the O'Reilly Spring Nationals.

Nash's NASCAR News

Johnson wins in Atlanta

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

NASCAR Nextel Cup racing came to Georgia for the Kobalt Tools 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway March 18.

A win was in the cards again for Lowe's car driver Jimmie Johnson, who won the race in Las Vegas, Nev., March 11, despite having pit problems. This time, Johnson was flawless.

The mile-and-a-half track was not as tough on the tires as it was in Vegas. Goodyear made the tires tougher, so there would be fewer problems. Atlanta Motor Speedway is a "seasoned" track, built 10 years ago, as opposed to the Vegas track, that was redone on the off season. The track didn't prove to be a problem for the drivers.

The biggest problem for a driver was an engine change for Ryan Newman, who had garnered the pole position, but had to start at the back of the pack because of the change. Elliott Sadler started at pole.

Johnson finished what he started, as he led the first 36 laps of the 325 lap race.

The first caution flag came out on lap 36 for debris on the race track. With 283 laps to go, Tony Stewart took the lead. Less than 40 laps later, Johnson took the lead back.

After 209 laps had been raced, there had been eight leaders and 11 lead changes.

At about lap 193, drivers pitted under green for adjustments, new tires and fuel.

Lap 143 brought out a second caution, again for debris on the track.

Johnson was still leading with 161 to go. Drivers again made green flag pit stops with about 133 to go.

A caution came out at about lap 102 because of engine failure on Scott Riggs' car.

On the restart, with 98 laps to go, Johnson was still the leader. Clint Bowyer was second, Tony Stewart third, Carl Edwards in fourth, Dale Earnhardt Jr. was in fifth and rookie Juan Pablo Montoya was firmly in sixth place.

Not many laps later, at about 94 laps to go, a fourth caution flag came out for a crash involving drivers David Reutimann, Brian Vickers, Kasey Kahne and Greg Biffle. Biffle managed to tag both Reutimann and Vickers at about the same time, and Kahne, who is having a very disappointing year and won the spring race in Atlanta, hit Reutimann.

After 235 laps, there had been 11 leaders, 25 lead changes and four cautions for 18 laps.

With 87 laps to go, Stewart was the race leader. He looked strong for the entire race, and won the Atlanta race in the fall.

A fifth caution, with less than 60 laps left, came out for debris on the track. On the restart on lap 273, Stewart was still the leader. Matt Kenseth was second, Johnson third, Montoya fourth and Bowyer fifth.

Yet another debris caution came out with 16 to go, which benefited a lot of drivers with their fuel situation. Many crew chiefs had worked out that their fuel would run out around lap 324, which would leave them without fuel for the last lap — not good.

On the restart with 11 laps to go, Stewart was leading.

The battle began to heat up between Stewart and Johnson with less than 10 laps left. Johnson took the lead from Stewart with less than two laps left in the race and never looked back.

The photo finishes so well known in Atlanta was not to be, as Johnson won easily over Stewart, who finished second.

Kenseth finished in third, Jeff Burton in fourth and Montoya in fifth.

It was a great race and finish for Montoya, who is proving a former open-wheel driver can succeed at stock car racing.

Mark Martin, driver of the 01 Army car, is still the points leader, although he won't be racing in the next few races, so expect that berth to be wide open.

This week's race is historic. NASCAR will wheel out the Car of Tomorrow at Bristol Motor Speedway Sunday for the Food City 500. Bristol is a short track.

It will be interesting to see the COT and how drivers adapt to it.

Erin.Nash@militarynews.com

Martin finishes tenth

U.S. ARMY RACING

HAMPTON, Ga. — Mark Martin closed out the fifth-longest consecutive-start streak in NASCAR Cup history with a 10th-place finish in the Kobalt Tools 500 March 18 at Atlanta Motor Speedway. Martin's 621-consecutive start streak began Feb. 14, 1988 at the Daytona 500.

With his fourth straight top-10 finish of the season, the U.S. Army Chevrolet driver maintained his lead in the Nextel Cup driver point standings.

He left Atlanta with an eight-point lead over Jeff Gordon.

"It is really cool and I guess it's kind of a storybook way to go out after chasing those points so hard for 20 years," he said.

"It's definitely the way to do it and I just can't say enough about this U.S. Army Race team. They are a fabulous team and an awesome group of guys. It's great to finally see them get the recognition they deserve. I sure wish I had been driving their car a little sooner."

Martin, who is driving a limited schedule for Ginn Racing, will miss the next two Nextel Cup races in Bristol and Martinsville.

Rookie Regan Smith will drive the 01 Army car in those two events before Martin returns for the Texas Motor Speedway race April 15.

This is the third time in Martin's career that he has started the season with four straight top 10s. The other two times were in 1995 and 2000.

Martin's other finishes in 2007 were: second at Daytona and fifth at both California and Las Vegas.

Martin, who started the race fourth after a strong qualifying effort on Friday, struggled with a loose race car early in the event, dropping as far back as 16th.

However, crew chief Ryan Pemberton and the No. 01 team refused to give up, continuing to work on the Chevrolet in hopes of improving the handling.

By Lap 270 of 325 Martin had driven the car back to the 11th position. And when the race's fifth caution was called (Lap 272), the Army over-the-wall crew came through with one of its quickest stops of the day, sending Martin back out in ninth position.

"We weren't as good today as we had been the first couple of races," said Martin. "But the guys on the Army team never gave up. We were able to gain positions on pit road during those last two stops and bring home a top-10 finish."

"They also allowed me to leave here as the points leader and I have to thank them for all they have done for me this year," said Martin.

Walk this way: Fitness director offers tips to make walking routine effective, safe

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

Most people have to walk on a daily basis for one reason or another, but most people don't do enough of it, said Lori Smith, fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

The active adult should walk 10,000 steps a day, which is about five miles, or 60 to 75 minutes. Research shows that people who set step goals stay with their programs longer than people who focus on actual minutes of exercise, Smith said. People looking to start walking more should start with small goals like walking 3,500 steps initially. Try to find ways to get more steps in throughout the day like parking your car further away from the place you are headed, she said. The best way to calculate how many steps you take per day is to use a pedometer. Pedometers can count steps, calculate distance, calories burned, speed, elapsed time and steps per minute. Some function as a stopwatch and alarm.

"Pedometers should be as easy to use as possible," Smith said. "If they are bulky or difficult to use, people won't use them."

Choosing a good walking surface is important to avoid injury, according to thewalkingsite.com. The best surfaces are flat, firm and not too hard.

"Loose gravel like on a track or a rubberized surface like the track on Doughboy Stadium or treadmills are great for walkers," Smith said.

She suggested walking around certain areas on post to get a change of pace from a track.

"A lot of times people get bored of the same routines so it is wise to change things up," Smith said. "The sidewalks around post provide a safe, less predictable walk, and they also have natural inclines or declines, which can help with resistance."

Smith recommended the Stewart Watson track and the Riverwalk as good locations on post.

One of the best ways to stick to your walking program is to walk with a friend. They can provide a feeling of safety for those who walk in the evenings.

Mitchell Thomas IV

Noelle Phillips and Sheri Coreano take a stroll with the 10,000 Steps Walking Club. The club meets from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Fort Benning has the 10,000 Steps Walking Club, which meets at Stewart Watson field Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays and is looking for more members.

"Walking is a great way to get in shape as well as meet new friends," said Noelle Phillips, a community recreation management trainee for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Picking the right shoes is a very important factor to consider before beginning a walking program, Smith said.

"Since a walker tends to land on the heels and push off from the toes, as opposed to runners who land flat footed, a shoe with good heel support is a must," she said.

Thewalkingsite.com advises walkers to look for a shoe that is lightweight and breathable. Walkers should keep track of the miles they put on shoes and replace them every 300 to 600 miles. Benefits of walking include burning calories, lowering blood pressure, cutting cholesterol and reducing heart disease and diabetes.

"Walking is an activity that anyone can do. It can be done anywhere and by anyone no matter the age or fitness level," Smith said. "It is also a good cardio addition to weight training."

The most important thing in walking, as well as any fitness program, is staying motivated, according to thewalkingsite.com. Beginners should make a list of the personal benefits of a walking program, others that will benefit from you becoming more fit, and a list of excuses for not doing it. Dedicated walkers will find ways to remove the excuses.

All-Army celebrates anniversary with big win

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Tim Hipps

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Sgt. Evevetta Crawford averaged 20.2 points in six games to help the All-Army team win the 2007 Armed Forces Women's Basketball Championship March 12-17 at Fort Indiantown Gap, Pa.

The All-Army team celebrated the 30th anniversary of Armed Forces women's basketball by going 6-0 in the double round-robin tournament and capturing its 26th crown against sister services Air Force (3-3), Marine Corps (2-4) and Navy (1-5).

"It's an awesome tradition to be part of," said All-Army fourth-year head coach Leroy Williams.

Crawford, forward stationed at Camp Buckner in Okinawa, Japan, was named to the Armed Forces All-Tournament Team, as were All-Army teammates forward Pfc. Shelly Jones of Fort Bragg, N.C.; and guard 1st Lt. Alonna Marable of Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Jones averaged 10.3 points and a team-high 9.7 rebounds during the tourney. Marable averaged 14.8 points and 7.8 rebounds.

"Evevetta is our veteran of the team," Williams said of Crawford, who was named to the All-Tournament Team for the eighth time in as many Armed Forces Championships.

"She had a good supporting cast and she stepped up when she needed to step up," Williams said. "The other young ladies did a good job of supporting her and vice versa: Ali, Jones, Marable, (Jaci) Bice, and the others who came off the bench. As a team, everyone was outstanding."

Marable had 23 points on 9-for-10 shooting, seven rebounds, three assists and two steals to lead All-Army to an 80-59 victory over All-Marine that clinched the gold medal for the Soldiers. Crawford scored 18 points and Bice added 13 as All-Army shot 58 percent. The next day, Crawford scored 27 points in All-Army's 72-70 victory over All-Air Force.

Marable added 16 points and 10 rebounds. Spc. Shan'tel Ali had 12 points and 10 rebounds in All-Army's final game of the tourney. Spc. Jaci Bice added nine points, 11 rebounds and four steals.

"It was down, basically, to the last shot," Williams said. "All four teams were very competitive and pretty close in structure as far as athletes go. We got pushed to the limit in a couple of those games."

In their tourney opener, Marable had 18 points and Crawford added 17 points and eight rebounds as All-Army defeated All-Navy, 73-62.

Crawford had 18 points, 10 rebounds, five assists and three steals to lead All-Army to a 77-68 victory in their first meeting with the All-Marine team.

Jones came off the bench to score 20 points on 9-for-14 shooting and had 17 rebounds in 28 minutes of All-Army's 79-63 victory over All-Air Force. Crawford had 20 points and eight boards.

All-Army displayed its depth during a 95-76 victory over All-Navy. Crawford led the charge with 21 points, and three reserves scored in double figures: Jones (18 points, 11 rebounds), Sgt. Amoni Suttice (17 points) of Kadena Air Base, Japan; and Sgt. Chrishea Fisher (11 points on 5-for-5 shooting) of Fort Sill, Okla. Marable added 12 rebounds, five assists and four blocks.

"I'd been talking to Amoni Suttice and Chrishea Fisher about how, in a six-, seven-, or eight-person rotation, that someone else needs to step up because the other teams have found a way to contain the starting five," Williams said. "When they get their chance, they need to take advantage of it, whether it's 30 seconds or two minutes. The more successful they are out on the court, the longer they stay."

Senior Airman Nicole Bowman, a guard from Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., and Navy Ship's Serviceman Third Class Judy Burns, a center stationed aboard the USS Theodore Roosevelt, rounded out the Armed Forces All-Tournament Team.

They will join Army representatives coach Williams, Marable, Crawford, Jones, Bice and Ali on the Armed Forces All-Star Team scheduled to play in the Pro-Am National Championships Wednesday through April 1 in Las Vegas.

Senior Airman Nina Hawkins of Dyess Air Force Base, Texas, Senior Airman Muneerah Williams of Dover Air Force Base, Del., Lance Cpl. Nicole Wells of Paris Island, S.C., Ensign Ashley Pelzek of Naval Air Station Pensacola, Fla., and Yeoman Third Class Tija Hopkins of Petaluma, Calif., filled the Armed Forces All-Star Team roster.

There was no dynasty without UCLA's Wooden

Legendary coach is center of HBO Sports documentary premiering Monday

ZAP2IT

George Dickie

It is said that the best coaches are also philosophers.

Giants such as Vince Lombardi, Bear Bryant and Mike Krzyzewski espoused an approach that made players not only successful in their chosen sport, but also served them well after their playing days ended.

These prowlors of the sidelines are men who in many cases turned out to be the most important people in the lives of these athletes.

The same can be said of John Wooden, the legendary UCLA basketball coach who is at the center of the new HBO Sports documentary The UCLA Dynasty, premiering Monday.

The film uses interviews and archival footage to tell the story of a team that won 10 national championships in 12 years spanning 1964 to 1975, an amazing feat considering the teamwork Wooden's teams displayed in an era when individualism was the order of the day.

Interviews with Wooden, now 96, are featured prominently in the hourlong show, along with those with former players Bill Walton, Jamaal Wilkes, Sidney Wicks, Gail Goodrich and Lucius Allen; broadcaster Dick Enberg; and former UCLA students Mark Harmon, Beau Bridges and Ray Manzarek, the former keyboard player of the Doors, among others.

"If you were around at that time," said Ross Greenburg, president of HBO Sports and an executive producer of the film with Rick Bernstein, "you were very aware that that team, in winning 10 championships, was doing something a little strange and that it didn't make a whole lot of sense that anyone would be able to build that kind of dynasty in one program in one sport over that number of years.

"And then having been a child of the '60s, it suddenly hit me a few years ago that not only were they accomplishing that feat, but they were doing it at a time when there was revolutions going on on campus," he said.

"And it became clear to me that the likes of Bill Walton, Lucius Allen, Sidney Wicks, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar — the revolving door of great athletes that were rolling in and out of UCLA at the time — I figured had to be rebellious youths who were going through some of the antics that many of us were going through in college at the time, and it didn't make a lot of sense that this mild-mannered, Illinois-bred coach was able to galvanize this team into championships.

"So that was curious to me, and we set out to make the documentary with that theme in mind," Greenburg said.

What comes through loud and clear throughout the piece was Wooden's refusal to sublimate his team-first approach to the political climate of the time.

That is best exemplified in his dealings with star center Walton, who had a penchant for anti-Vietnam War rallies and growing his hair long.

In one humorous section midway through the film, Wooden John Wooden, who coached UCLA to 10 national championships, is featured in the HBO Sports documentary The UCLA Dynasty. The film uses interviews and archival footage to tell the story of the team. The hourlong show features Wooden prominently, who is now 96 years old.

and Walton relate the story of how a scraggly Walton, the fall after winning player of the year honors, tells Wooden he has no right to tell him how to wear his hair.

Wooden agrees, but he says he does have the right to determine who plays, and that he'll miss having Walton on the team unless he gets to the barbershop in 15 minutes.

When Walton stares back for a moment in stunned amazement, an unblinking Wooden looks at his watch and says, "14 minutes."

"I think Walton does scream through the television the entire one hour," Greenburg said, "because he just personifies that, the fact that he could demonstrate during the day, and even get thrown in jail, and then sit with Wooden for 45-50 minute kind of discussions on life is typical of the kind of fortitude that Wooden had in never feeling as if he was going to sacrifice his team, and never feeling as if he was going to lose his team to the counterculture that was bounding through the campus."

What also comes through is the tremendous respect these men have for Wooden to this day.

"They stay in constant touch with him," Greenburg said, "and he's almost like a religious figure in their life."

"Because at the end of the day, the greatest coaches are philosophers, and they teach their doctrine to their students or their disciples," Greenburg said.

"And then there's the constant refreshing that needs to be done with those people that come back to them and continue to learn from them."

"Because even at the age of 60 or whatever, Bill Walton still feels like he can learn from his master, and that's John Wooden."

- 7) What California university calls its baseball team the Dirt-bags?
- 8) What is a Lobo?

9) What is a Hokie?

10) What school calls its sports teams the Judges?

Answers:

- 1) UC-Santa Cruz
- 2) An inhabitant of Mount Nittany, which overlooks the Penn State campus
- 3) It's part of an old Georgetown chant: "Hoya (Greek for 'what') Saxa (Latin for 'rocks')"
- 4) It's a reference to one of the school colors and therefore is singular
- 5) A sportswriter wrote that early 1900s football coach John Bender resembled a Billiken, an impish creature of good fortune
- 6) The story relates to an 18th century drought and the oldest purebred dog in the world, dating back to ancient Egypt
- 7) CSU-Long Beach
- 8) The Spanish word for "wolf," a nickname that proved popular with New Mexico students of the 1920s
- 9) A cheer that won an 1896 Virginia Tech student contest. It has no special meaning
- 10) Brandeis University

Sister's death spurs Benning woman to speak out about DVT

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Laura Morris was 30, active, and fit as a fiddle, as far as she knew. She was a dedicated office employee who often worked overtime. She tried hard to balance the sedentary nature of the job with physical activity. Her favorite was horseback riding.

Laura's husband was a pilot whose job kept him away from home frequently, so the couple put off having children.

Life was full and happy in 2000, and very busy, as Laura and her husband prepared to move from San Antonio, Texas, to Washington, D.C. She developed a subtle, nagging ache in her leg, but it was easy to ignore. Maybe she had strained a muscle riding her horse.

About 3 a.m. one morning, a couple of weeks after noticing the ache in her leg, Laura found herself struggling to breathe. She called an ambulance, but by the time she got to the emergency room, it was too late.

The blood clot in her leg had broken off and migrated to her lung, where it choked an artery and stopped the flow of blood to her heart.

Before her husband, her parents or her sister, Wesley Clifton, knew she was in the hospital, Laura Morris was dead of a pulmonary embolism, caused by deep vein thrombosis, or DVT.

Clifton arrived at the hospital first, ahead of her brother-in-law and her parents. A chaplain sat beside her as the doctor broke the news. It was Wesley's job to tell Laura's husband and her parents.

"I thought that was the hardest part — what could be worse than having to be the one to destroy my parents?" said Clifton, the wife of a Fort Benning Soldier and the mother of two boys.

As it turned out, the hardest part was learning to live without Laura.

"It was just the two of us. We were Army brats; we moved around, so we were close. We really bonded in high school," said Clifton, who was older by two years.

"Now, there's nobody who remembers our history, nobody to pick up the phone to call and say 'Remember when...'"

Losing Laura was so difficult that Clifton chose not to talk about it for several years.

Then, in 2003, DVT made headlines when NBC correspondent David Bloom died from a pulmonary embolism caused by DVT while embedded with U.S. troops in Iraq. Though Americans are largely uneducated about DVT — two out of three Americans had never heard of it in 2003, according to the American Public Health Association — Bloom's death was the catalyst for change.

His widow, Melanie Bloom, is the spokesperson for the Coalition to Prevent DVT, and March has been designated DVT awareness month.

As awareness about the condition increases nationwide, Clifton feels the need to share her story closer to home.

Tabatha Salcedo and more than 200 second-graders react to "Pam and Buffy's" message about being good for drugs. Pamela Weeks and her sheepdog, Buffy, sang and danced at White Elementary School Monday. Programs like this get kids thinking at an early age about the dangers of drug abuse, said Yvonne Wilbanks, the alcohol and drug control officer with Fort Benning's Army Substance Abuse Program. ASAP sponsored the program.

Parenting in Columbus appeals to military moms

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Since Sarah Snow moved to Columbus with her husband more than four years ago, he's deployed three times with the 3rd Brigade Combat Team. Twice she packed up the kids and headed home to Virginia for the duration.

But not this time.

"We're staying put this time," she said. "I feel like I have people I can rely on."

Snow was referring to the members of Parenting in Columbus Playgroup, a support group, of sorts, for parents of all ages with children of all ages. Since it was launched in December, PiC has attracted more than 140 members — all women so far — between the ages of 19 and 50.

The group has given Snow confidence in her ability to handle this deployment, she said. The other mothers are her friends and confidantes.

The group activities, like play dates and Moms' Night Out, provide distraction,

After demonstrating the squad mission support system for officials with the Directorate of Combat Development and Training and Doctrine Command Capability managers, the folks with Lockheed Martin, iRobot and Honeywell demonstrated the same equipment for who they hoped would be their future engineers — students from Columbus High School and Richards Middle School.

The squad mission support system, referred to as SMSS by Lockheed Martin representatives, is a vehicle that uses robotic technology to support the missions of Special Operations or light Infantry Soldiers.

The vehicle can carry the equipment of a squad, around 1,100 pounds, and can be driven, moved by joystick or programmed with way paths, said Mike Martin, with Lockheed Martin.

Talking about the SMSS, Don Nimblett, manager of business development with Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control, said the vehicle needed to do more than just carry gear. He explained how it could be equipped with an unmanned aerial system, carry packbots and deploy them as required.

Tuesday's demonstration showed how a packbot could inspect a possible IED, alleviating the need to have Soldiers do it, Martin said.

Disorders must to be understood

MCG CHILDREN'S MEDICAL CENTER

Dr. Karen Carter

One thing is clear — issues related to autism and other pervasive developmental disorders are often varied and confusing.

Autism and other PDDs such as Asperger's Syndrome, Rett's Syndrome and Childhood Disintegrative Disorder, have multiple, and often conflicting signs and behaviors, as well as many different recommended treatments.

But with an estimated one in 166 people affected by PDD, these disorders have become mainstream and should be understood.

Signs of PDD

- Social interactions — Those with PDD often have trouble relating to other people. They may withdraw, preferring to be alone, or if they engage others, they may find it hard to make eye contact. They have difficulty participating in the usual social "give and take," and may not notice or respond appropriately to others' emotions. They may not form typical relationships with people their age, and sometimes find it difficult to be spontaneous socially.

- Communication — Communication involves speaking, understanding words and the rhythm of speech and paying attention to speech. Those with PDD may have difficulty in these areas. For example, some people with PDD can say many words, even memorize entire TV shows, but not be able to understand the meanings of the words.

- Differences in behaviors — Focusing on certain ideas or tasks and finding it difficult to change are typical behaviors for those with PDD. This can include liking only certain foods, playing with one or two specific toys, or repeating the same movements.

Those with PDD also exhibit other signs, ranging from degrees of cognitive delay to greater sensitivity with sensory stimuli (heat, light, pain, textures, etc.).

In addition, medical issues including seizures, large heads, constipation, diarrhea and sleep issues can be present. Those with PDD can also have a short attention span, be impulsive, distractible and active.

Management of PDD

PDD is usually diagnosed during childhood. Parents seeking treatment should look for a program that is:

- Fun. Children should have fun learning.
- Structured. The program should be predictable for everyone, including the child.
- Individual. There must be a plan for the child and what he or she will actually learn.
- Intensive. Children should have a lot to do and a lot of instruction.
- Focused on praise and rewards. Children should be rewarded and praised for appropriate behavior and should not be punished.

Medications are also available for children with PDD. Parents need to remember that 30 minutes of speech therapy will not make their child talk.

The most important person treating a child is the parent. Every time parents talk, play, read or sing to a child, they are teaching.

Be aware

There are many treatments and programs for PDD. If the treatment is safe, feel free to try it. But some treatments — for example, therapies that advocate high doses of vitamins or other drugs — can do much more harm than good. It is critical that caregivers investigate treatments, and make sure they are safe and work well. Doctors can provide more information.

The future is bright. The vast majority of those with PDD get much, much better as they get therapy and mature.

But understanding all the issues related to PDD is an important first step.

Community CALENDAR

ON POST

EASTER EGGSTRAVAGANZA

Child and Youth Services will have the annual Easter Eggstravaganza on the lawn at Riverside from 10 a.m. to noon Saturday. In addition to age-appropriate Easter egg hunts for children, there will be jugglers on stilts, face painting and the opportunity to meet the Easter bunny.

Easter egg hunt times are: 10:05 a.m. for ages 18 months to 3 years; 10:30 a.m. for 4- and 5-year-olds; 11 a.m. for 6- to 8-year-olds; and 11:30 a.m. for 9- to 10-year-olds.

For more information, call 706-545-3582.

PRE-K LOTTERY

Child and Youth Services has received funding from the Georgia Department of Early Care and Learning to operate three free pre-K classrooms for the upcoming school year.

Lottery sign-up will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through April 13 in Building 359 on Ingersoll Street.

Children must be 4 years old by Sept. 1 and live in Georgia. A Georgia Pre-K registration form must be completed and returned to CYS during the pre-registration days. At the end of the sign-up, names will be drawn and the families will be contacted to complete registration paperwork.

For more information, call Central Registration at 706-545-2079.

SKIES UNLIMITED

SKIES Unlimited is enrolling children and teens for the spring session. Classes include Web design, ballet, Spanish, Build a PC, Tae Kwon Do, drivers' education and Kindermusik.

TEEN JOB FAIR

Youth Services is sponsoring a Teen Job Fair from 9 a.m. to noon April 6 at the Youth Center.

The fair, open to everyone ages 16 and older, offers the opportunity to meet with potential employers, practice interviewing techniques, learn tips on finding and landing the perfect job, discovering local jobs available for teens and applications for pick up.

Early registration is strongly encouraged.

For more information, call 706-545-3062 or 706-545-3070.

ASIAN-PACIFIC LUAU

The ninth annual Asian-Pacific Luau will take place from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. April 14 at the Uchee Creek Activity Center.

There is free admission, parking, shuttle service, children's activities, music, Polynesian shows, hayrides and train rides. There will be free boat rides on the Chattahoochee River.

For $5 per child, children can play for as long as they want on giant inflatables.

Food vendors will be on site with authentic Asian-Pacific specialties and American cuisine favorites.

For more information, call 706-545-2703.

INTERNATIONAL WIVES CLUB

The International Wives Club will host an employee of the Columbus Police Department at 7 p.m. April 17 at the International Wives' Clubhouse, located in Building 1674 on NCO Drive (Main Post off Lumpkin Road).

The topic is Home Security. Everyone is welcome.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 706-687-6471.

PARENT2PARENT WORKSHOP

The Parent2Parent Team offers a special workshop geared towards the families facing an upcoming deployment.

Participants will receive the "Talk, Listen and Connect" package with an Elmo DVD and a pamphlet with tips covered in the workshop.

If your FRG or coffee group is interested, book early. E-mail parent2parentbenning@yahoo.com or call 706-315-0505.

All workshops are free and support by the Military Child Education Coalition.

WAITING SPOUSES SUPPORT GROUP

Waiting Spouses is a support group for spouses whose Soldiers are deployed on an unaccompanied tour such as Korea, extended temporary duty and field training exercises.

If you are interested in participating or would like to volunteer to help organize meetings and events, call the ACS volunteer supervisor at 706-545-6958 or 706-545-4043.

'YOU MADE THE GRADE' PROGRAM

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service offers the "You Made the Grade" program. Students who qualify receive coupons for free admission to an AAFES Reel Time Theater, a complimentary slice of Anthony's pizza with drink and a free magazine, as well as other coupons.

Each coupon booklet also contains an entry form for a quarterly savings bond drawing. Three winners are randomly awarded savings bonds of $2,000, $3,000 or $5,000.

To get the booklet, students must present a valid military ID card and proof of an overall "B" or better average at their local post exchange.

BENNING CLUB

The Fort Benning Officers' Club is now the Benning Club. Membership benefits and services include free check cashing up to $200, special programming and theme nights, summer pool privileges, Sunday Brunch discounts and more.

Cost to join is $10 a month or $120 a year for ranks E-5 and below, students and seniors. Cost is $18 a month or $216 a year for ranks E-6 through E-8, O-1 through O-4 and warrant officer 1-3. Cost is $24 a month or $288 a year for E-9s, O-5s and above, warrant officer 4 and Department of Defense civilians. Rates for current annual members will change on their anniversary dates.

For more information, call 706-682-0640.

BEFORE AND AFTER SCHOOL PROGRAM

The Before and After School program continues. School-age care for kindergarten through fifth grade is located at Patch Hall, Building 7 on Baltzell Avenue.

Children can participate in various activities, such as garden club, drama club, technology club, sewing club, homework enrichment, cooking club, fine arts and more. They can also become a member of the Boys or Girls Club or 4H Club.

For more information, call 706-545-2079 or 706-545-3605 or visit the Central Registration Office in Building 359.

EFMP RESOURCE LIBRARY

The Army Community Service Center, Exceptional Family Member Program has a resource library with videotapes for public viewing.

Some of the topics include childhood asthma, facts about the EFMP program, special education law, autism, etc.

For more information, call 706-545-5521.

ENGLISH CLASSES

Free English instruction is offered from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays in Room 158 at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. The instruction is designed for those who need help with grammar, vocabulary, civics, naturalization issues and conversational fluency.

For more information, e-mail chalkley@military.mil.

EFMP SUPPORT GROUPS

If you have an interest in forming a support group geared toward meeting the needs of military family members, the Army Community Services Exceptional Family Member Program would like to hear from you.

Support groups meet the first Tuesday of each month at Building 2633 through May, and then will resume again in September.

For more information concerning local support groups, call 706-545-5521.

EENT CLINIC SCHOOL SCREENINGS

The EENT clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital conducts eye, ear and dental screenings for all children ages 4 and older entering a Georgia public school for the first time.

The screenings are by appointment only from 1 to 3 p.m. on Wednesday afternoons. The child's medical records, ID and medical cards are required.

For an appointment, call 706-544-2273.

EFMP ENROLLMENT

The Exceptional Family Member Program has mandatory enrollment for special needs family members (child or spouse.)

Enrollment does not hurt the Soldier's career but assists military personnel divisions in considering the medical and educational needs of the family member in the assignment process.

Enrollment is necessary if the spouse or child meets the following criteria: asthma, a current or past mental health diagnosis, a high-risk pregnancy, cancer (past or present), attention deficit disorder or diabetes.

Call 706-545-5521 for resource information and referrals.

REFLECTIONS

It's about faith, family, friends

The most valuable things survive the stormsRANGER TRAINING BRIGADE
Chaplain (Capt.) Harold Cline

No matter what happens in my life, if I have my faith, family and friends, I'll be good to go.

Here's one reason I know this to be true.

On March 1, I was at home in North Columbus. My wife, Erin, and our 10-month-old daughter, Carly, were in Dothan, Ala., visiting my mom. Erin called me at 5:39 p.m. to tell me that the Dothan TV station was warning of a tornado super cell barreling down on Columbus. I told Erin to "quit being such a mom and not to worry about me, everything will be fine."

About 15 minutes later, I had to call her back to tell her that our house had been hit.

The roof over Carly's room was gone; the glass in the front rooms had been broken. The garage door and north garage wall were blown out.

The fence that once surrounded our backyard was all over the neighborhood. One piece was stuck vertically in our roof. My treasured blue Acura was slightly damaged, but drivable. Basically, we were fine.

I say that now because nobody was killed or seriously injured. Maj. Louis Rodriguez and his family, our neighbors to the north, had half their house come down around them and walked out of what was left unharmed. I can't tell you how glad I was to see Louis and his family emerge, unhurt, from the twisted remnants of their house.

About 30 to 45 minutes after the storm, Chaplain Joel Funk and his wife, Peggy, came to the house. Chaplain Walter Hoskins came shortly afterward. Erin had called Walter, worried about my safety. Walter called the Funks to ask that they meet him to help with recovery.

An associate from Home Depot came by and asked "What do you need?" He left a hammer, nails, six sheets of decking for the roof, five tarps and a flashlight. I asked how much I owed, he said "Nothing sir, we just hope that this helps."

Joel and Walter helped in turns, getting on the roof with me in driving rain, trying to pound nails into the new decking. We did our best to try to dry the house. They helped me pull furniture out of Carly's room before the incoming rain ruined it.

By 9:30 p.m. my friends left, tired and soaked to the bone from working in the rain for hours. Walter has a family of five that he needed to be with. Joel has cancer and really didn't need to be clambering around on my roof in sideways rain and wind.

Chaplain Jeff Struecker and bunch of sergeants from my unit showed up Friday at noon. They had the afternoon off. Instead, they came to my house to help me move boxes and tools out of the garage.

Before I knew it, I had seven or eight pick-up trucks at my house to move stuff to a storage unit on post. So why were they there?

These are my friends.

The guy from Home Depot, he's a friend.

The lady who showed up Friday afternoon with rotisserie chicken, potato salad and banana bread, she's my friend. I have no idea who she is; I forgot to ask her name. That's how awestruck I was by her kindness. That's how awestruck I am with all of them.

Jesus of Nazareth once said, "When you have done something to one of the least of these my brothers, you have done it to me as well." In times of trouble, you find out what people are made of. All these people turned out to be the kind of folks who I could entrust my life to.

This speaks of what and who they are spiritually.

My wife and I have lost some things that we will never be able to replace. There are a number of ways to look at catastrophe. Erin and I have learned to see the providential side of destruction. That has made all the difference.

Monday we moved the last of our belongings out so the contractor can start repairs. The last thing I took out of the house is a small wooden wall plaque that reads "Faith, Family, Friends." When you have those three things, you have everything.

If the tornado did nothing else, I am thankful that it caused us to remember that. That is the providential side of destruction for the Cline family. It caused us to remember what is important.

Now my question to you is this — what is most important in your life? If your values are in the right place, the storm can't blow them away.

If you feel "blown around" by life, turn to God almighty today and find the peace you need to live.

Just do it, but do it right, with courage

Don't seek an easy life, look to God for strengthBAYONET
CORRESPONDENT
Bud Rupel

To move along a right path, knowing that the way is hard and knowing none may go with you requires courage. There are two roads a person can travel; one well-worn and one less-traveled.

There are many on the well-worn road because it offers no twists, no turns, no valleys, no obstacles and no roadblocks. It is a super highway, sort of a "spiritual" autobahn on which to move easily through life.

But there is another road that calls for courage from its travelers. It is not predictable, it has many hairpin turns and it is full of "stuff" that will challenge the very core of one's spirit.

And those who choose this route will discover their greatest gains will be made against the greatest odds.

Before one decides to take the road less traveled, there are few things I must tell you. First, you must decide to do what the hard road demands. Don't ask God for an easy life; ask him to be a stronger person. Don't pray for tasks equal to your power; pray for power equal to your tasks. And don't look for detours either. I can remember the wife of a colonel telling me, "The journey of a thousand miles begins with my husband saying, 'I know a shortcut!'"

Right is right, even when everybody is against it, and wrong is wrong, even when everyone is for it. Just because something is popular does not make it right. Cling to that which builds good character and let go of that which does not.

Aristotle once wrote, "To enjoy the things we ought and to hate the things we ought has the greatest bearing on excellence of character."

Courage finds no room in a cluttered heart. Ken Davis, whose father was a POW and a survivor of the Bataan Death March, wrote these words, "Years ago I saw a picture in which a young man carried a sign that read: 'Nothing is worth dying for.' Until a man or woman finds a purpose worth dying for, they will never have a purpose to live for."

My father and thousands like him shed blood so I might live in freedom. My code of conduct is this: To live each day to honor the sacrifice that was made for my life and to be prepared at any moment to die for that same cause." Jesus had this to say, "For whoever wants to save his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life for me will find it."

The term "last full measure of courage" is daunting, but those who serve our nation so honorably are called to be willing to do that.

On Jan. 6, 1956, five young missionaries landed on a remote beach of the Curary River in eastern Ecuador. Their mission was to bring the teachings of Jesus to the Auca tribe. Two days later, all five missionaries were speared and hacked to death by Aucas warriors.

Jim Elliot was one of those who was martyred. Years earlier he had penned these words in his diary, "He is no fool who gives what he cannot keep in order to gain what he cannot lose." The road less traveled is never easy.

Last, but not least, this road demands an unswerving commitment.

Your exit is more important than your entrance ... just ask any bank robbers! Life is tough but it yields to courage. In realms we cannot see, a larger story is being told.

Ask only what God has called you to do and commit yourself to fulfilling that call. Use the talents he has given you to use.

Seize the opportunities he then provides you. Then in the words of a famous commercial ... "Just do it!"

Why do kids jump up and down and make idiots of themselves behind television reporters on location? Because they're hungry to be seen, that's why.

So we promote the highest ideal in the universe as that of making it on national TV. Fame is the hottest illusion in town, but it's based on illusion and cruelty.

— Mike Riddell,

Deep Stuff: A Mostly Fictional Search for Meaning and a Good Meal

In the old days, there were two kinds of people — royalty and the rest. Nothing has changed. For today, there remains two kinds of people — those on TV, and those not.

There are the Michael Jordans, the Bonos, the Bill O'Reillys, the Paris Hiltons and the American Idols.

And then there are the rest of us.

It doesn't really matter that a lot of these people, these postmodern royals, are neither good nor talented, that they are only famous because they are famous.

What matters is that attention is paid to them.

Attention is a basic human need. From infancy to our twilight years, we crave it.

And it doesn't seem that we ever get enough. Soldiers, like Hummers, need a little attentive maintenance.

But the Christian faith demands superhuman actions and attitudes.

We are told not to seek fame and recognition but rather avoid them.

This is a hard saying, especially for men.

God will gradually work into us the contentment to let others have the glory.

Then we will not lay awake at night, grinding our teeth thinking, "He got an AAM and I didn't."

This divine action relieves us of anger and jealousy, which are heavy burdens to bear.

If anyone wants to be first, he must be the very last, and the servant of all.

We all have emotional needs, even men

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Do you know your most important emotional need? We are, after all, the expert in our own lives. Husbands are the experts of their emotional needs. I know, I know, men say they have no emotional needs. Well, here is a news flash — we lie!

We lie not to deceive, but not all men understand these things called emotional needs as well as women. We lie because society says we are not supposed to be emotional. If we show emotion then we are seen as weak, and what man wants to be seen as weak? None of us do, especially in a military community. We think it is awkward or something is wrong with us if we have emotional needs.

However, we all have emotional needs. Women are more in touch and in tune to these needs and as a society we are much more accepting of these needs in women. Willard Harley has written a great book on the emotional needs of men and women called His Needs, Her Needs. I recommend getting a copy of this book and reading it to better understand your mate.

Let me share the first most common emotional need of a woman. Can you guess this need? It is an easy one, it is not rocket science. Quite simply, it is affection. Affection is the expression of love. This is nothing new.

For years the Bible has taught us, "Husbands, love your wives." This expression of love symbolizes security, protection, comfort and approval.

These expressions tell your spouse she is important to you, you care about her, you are concerned about the problems she faces, you desire to be with her.

Something funny happens when we are dating because as guys we usually do this pretty well! But then once the wedding is over, what happens to the men? It seems we forget what got us there.

We scratch our heads and wonder what happened.

I am not sure if it is the old hunting mentality, we track and hunt and we finally win the big prize, and then we stop all the tracking and preparation that got us the trophy. And then instead of being able to talk about it because guys do not understand how to talk about feelings, we begin to argue and fight and we wonder what happened to our happy little marriage.

Somewhere I think we got it mixed up. The Bible did not say,

"Husbands love your fiancée," but "love your wives." Oh, you mean after the marriage we have to continue to do the things that got us where we are today? Bing bing bing, I think we have a winner! Wink, tell the man what he has won today. Yes, if we wake up every day and propose to love our wives, we will be on the road to building a solid marriage and divorce-proofing our marriage.

I have never seen a spouse who is getting the affection she needs at home out looking for another man. So, husbands, "Love your wives," do those things that captured her heart in the first place. If you forgot, just ask her, and she will let you know what you can do to meet her emotional need of affection.

If you have questions or are struggling with something in your life — your marriage, deployment, relationship issues, interpersonal problems — whatever you may be facing, the Chaplain Family Life Center is here for you.

Our pastoral staff is here with help for your journey. Call 706-545-1760 for an appointment or stop by our office at 2606 Dixie Road in Soldiers' Plaza.

Get facts on acetaminophen

MEDDAC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Angela Justice

"Take two Tylenol and call me in the morning." Sound familiar?

Pharmacists agree that if taken properly, Tylenol (acetaminophen) is a safe painkiller; yet medical researchers warn that taking too much acetaminophen can lead to severe side effects, such as acute liver failure and even death.

According to the Food and Drug Administration, overdoses of acetaminophen account for an estimated 56,000 emergency room visits a year, and approximately 458 people die each year from unintentional overdose of the drug.

Due to the rise of acute liver failure cases attributed to acetaminophen from 28 to 51 percent between 1998 and 2003, acetaminophen overdoses have become one of the most common poisonings worldwide, according to researchers at the University of Washington Medical Center in Seattle.

Maj. Randy Dorsey, assistant chief of pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital, said acetaminophen is found in many over-the-counter drugs, and oftentimes patients unintentionally overdose by taking more than one product containing it.

"It is extremely important that patients read the labels of all medicines and carefully follow dosage instructions," Dorsey said.

Other cases of unintentional overdoses have been found when patients also took medications that contained narcotics. Some commonly prescribed narcotic medications containing acetaminophen include Percocet, Vicodin and Lortab.

Though Fort Benning doesn't have a high rate of incidences, Dorsey said people are not aware of the potential harm of "accidentally" taking two or more medications containing acetaminophen. He recommended the following advice as published in a Harvard Medical School health publication:

- Read the labels — Do not take more than the recommended maximum dosage of 4,000 milligrams per day.

- Use caution with combinations — Acetaminophen is found in many over-the-counter combination medicines and painkillers, so check the labels to make sure you are not exceeding the recommended intake.

- Alternate painkillers — if the Tylenol is a brand name for acetaminophen. Other medicines that contain acetaminophen include Anacin-3, Liquiprin, Panadol, Tempa and various cold and flu medicines.

There are more than 200 over-the-counter medicines that contain acetaminophen.

recommended doses of acetaminophen don't control your pain, talk to your clinician about alternating acetaminophen with a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug, such as ibuprofen or aspirin.

- Be careful about alcohol — the labels warn against using acetaminophen if you have three or more alcoholic drinks daily. But not everyone metabolizes alcohol the same way, so it's safer to avoid alcohol entirely while taking acetaminophen.

Some of the symptoms of acetaminophen overdose are: abdominal pain, appetite loss, coma, convulsions, diarrhea, irritability, nausea, sweating, upset stomach and vomiting.

Symptoms may not occur until 12 or more hours after the acetaminophen was swallowed. If you suspect that you or someone in your family has accidentally overdosed, seek medical help immediately.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Lt. Col. Thomas White, optometrist

Q: What is glaucoma?

A: Glaucoma is the second-leading cause of adult blindness in the U.S. It often results from intraocular pressure (fluid pressure within the eye) that is too high for the optic nerve to tolerate. This nerve acts like an electric cable with more than a million wires. It is responsible for carrying images from the eye to the brain. Damage to the nerve gradually reduces peripheral or side vision without warning.

Q: Who is at risk for glaucoma?

A: Everyone is at risk for glaucoma. There are risk factors that increase the chances of developing glaucoma. The factors we consider when assessing risk include race, age (60 and older), family history, high intraocular pressure and optic nerve appearance. Glaucoma is six to eight times more common in African-Americans than Caucasians.

Q: Is glaucoma curable?

A: Glaucoma is not curable and vision loss cannot be regained. With medication and or surgery, it is possible to halt further loss of vision. Glaucoma treatment entails decreasing aqueous humor production, increasing fluid drainage or a combination of the two. Since glaucoma is a chronic condition, it must be monitored for life.

Flora Foods recalls Cerignola olives

Floroda company recalls contaminated olives sold in three states

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

Flora Foods of Pompano Beach, Florida, is recalling its 25 oz. jars of "Cerignola Olives" (UPC 0-20038-00693-5) because they have the potential to be contaminated with Clostridium botulinum, a bacterium that can cause life-threatening illness or death.

Consumers are warned not to use the product even if it does not look or smell spoiled.

Botulism, a potentially fatal form of food poisoning, can cause the following symptoms: general weakness, dizziness, double vision and difficulty speaking or swallowing.

Difficulty in breathing, weakness of other muscles, abdominal distension and constipation may also be common symptoms.

People experiencing these problems should seek immediate medical attention.

The recalled "Cerignola" olives were distributed in Florida, Georgia and upstate New York in retail stores.

The product comes in a 25 oz. clear glass jar with

"LOT #G080" stamped on the label.

No illnesses have been reported to date in connection with this problem.

The potential for contamination was noted after routine testing found that the product had been underprocessed.

Distribution of the product has been suspended as FDA and the company continue their investigation as to the source of the problem.

Consumers who have purchased 25 oz. jars of "Cerignola" olives are urged to return them to the place of purchase for a full refund.

Consumers with questions can call the company at 954-785-3100.

Protect yourself from mouth cancer

MCG HEALTH SYSTEM
Dr. Christine Gourin

Your mouth is probably the last place you'd think of finding cancer.

But if you use tobacco or drink alcohol, you are at greater risk for oral cancer, a type of cancer that can develop in the flat cells of the tongue, floor of the mouth and even the lips.

Every year, nearly 30,000 people are diagnosed with oral cancer. The sad fact is that most of these cancers are diagnosed at later stages, when treatment options are fewer and less effective.

Screening by your doctor or dentist can help find signs of cancer early, before they spread. Signs can include:

- White, red and white, or red patches inside the mouth or on the lips,
- a sore that won't heal,
- bleeding,
- loose teeth,
- difficult or painful swallowing,
- difficulty wearing dentures,
- a lump in your neck,
- an earache, and
- hoarseness.

While these signs may not mean cancer, it's important to get them checked.

To reduce your risk of developing oral cancer, stop using tobacco and avoid drinking alcohol, especially if you are a longtime user. Wearing a lip balm with sunscreen and a wide hat with a brim will help protect your lips from the sun, another cause of cancer.

Don't wait. Regular screening can help find and treat signs of cancer early, before they spread.

DVT: Can lead to pulmonary embolism if left unchecked

"For a long time I just couldn't talk about it. If someone asked, 'Do you have brothers or sisters?' I'd take a deep breath and pause," she said. "That's something I've decided to change. Laura's death was preventable. David Bloom's death was preventable. It's taken me this long to be able to talk about it, but now I want people to know that it can happen."

DVT was once called "economy class syndrome" because long-distance travelers were considered the most likely candidates, aside from the elderly and immobile. DVT occurs when movement is restricted for extended periods of time and a blood clot forms in a major vein deep inside the leg, usually, and occasionally the pelvis. Bloom, who traveled around Baghdad in a tank, complained of leg cramps in the days preceding his death.

According to the APHA, as many as 2 million Americans develop DVT each year, and 200,000 die from embolisms as a result of it. That's more than the number of deaths resulting from AIDS and breast cancer combined. Among immobile hospital patients, DVT is the leading cause of unexpected death.

Two-thirds of all deaths associated with DVT are preventable. The key is awareness.

"Don't ignore it. If there's something that's bothering you, go to the doctor, no matter how trivial it seems," said Clifton. "If Laura had done that, she'd be alive today. Don't ignore it."

Laura's case is a text-book example of what researchers call the changing face of DVT. Results of a recent study by the Medical Research Institute in Wellington, New Zealand, show that office workers are more likely to develop DVT than long-distance travelers. More than half of the 62 DVT victims who participated in the study spent long periods of time seated at their desks — some worked as long as 14 hours and went for three- and four-hour stretches without standing.

Laura was also on birth control medication. Experts say birth control and hormone replacement therapy increase the likelihood one will develop blood clots. Other factors include:

- trauma — up to 60 percent of patients with leg fractures develop DVT,
- age — the probability of developing it increases exponentially with patients older than 40,
- prolonged immobility or paralysis,
- prior DVT,
- cancer,
- inherited clotting disorders,

Wesley Clifton is pictured here with photographs of her sister, Laura, who died as a result of deep vein thrombosis in 2000.

Bridgett Siter

- pregnancy and obesity.

DVT long been dubbed the "silent killer," because more than half the time, it strikes without warning. Ignoring even "mild" warnings can prove fatal. DVT victims often complain of muscle pain, swelling or tightness of the leg, a feeling of warmth in the area or skin discoloration.

It's easy to dismiss any one of these symptoms as insignificant or to attribute it to an accident or injury. According to the APHA, early treatment of DVT can reduce the chance of developing a pulmonary embolism to less than 1 percent.

For more information about DVT, log on to www.preventdvt.org.

PiC: Playgroup builds relationships, support network

she said. They take her mind off missing her husband for a while.

More than half the members are military wives, and many, like Snow, recently said good-bye to their husbands again.

"We really don't spend a lot of time talking about it," she said. "We tend to keep things light, but there are definitely times when I need someone to cry with, someone to talk to. We're here for each other in good times and bad."

In fact, Snow said, the playgroup has restored a measure of sanity to the whole family. Four-year-old Abby and 2-year-old Jackson benefit from the friendships they've made and the energy they expend. Her husband worries less about them all during his absences.

"He knows we're not by ourselves anymore," she said.

Snow helped found PiC Playgroup, the brainchild of Carol Ann Kaplan, a single mother from Columbus who found herself in need of adult interaction, particularly with other mothers, after Morgan was born three years ago.

Kaplan tried other groups — playgroups, support groups, online meetings and the like — but they weren't flexible or active enough to meet her needs.

So she teamed with Snow and another military wife, Jen Trest, to form

PiC. It took off like a rocket, faster than any of the women anticipated, Kaplan said, because other mothers seemed to have the same needs.

"We constantly have something going on, almost every day, at all times of the day," she said. "So they don't have to arrange their schedules around the group."

Plus, Kaplan said, PiC has a Web site chock-full of good information, parenting resources and a 24-hour message board.

Some members never attend functions, she said, but they consistently rely on the message board.

Tuesday mornings, the group meets for a play date at various locations, including Chuck E. Cheese, the Columbus Museum, or local parks and restaurants. Last week, they spent hours and hours packing goodie bags to distribute to deploying Soldiers. They take turns hosting the kids, so other moms can have a night out on the town. And once a month, they throw a massive birthday bash at Monkey Joe's.

"There's something for everyone," Kaplan said, for every member and every child.

For those who care to spend their time at work, rather than play, the group plans to tackle several projects. They'll host a team in the annual American Cancer Society Relay for Life. They plan to partner with the USO during the 3rd BCT's deployment. And they hope to minister to battered women.

Trest, the third member of the organization committee, said she found a place to belong in PiC. The mother of two is married to an Airman stationed at Fort Benning.

"The military wives were great, very welcoming, but I didn't understand any of the Army lingo. I felt lost," she said.

"This is where I fit, with other moms, not other wives. This is where I found a place I belong."

For more information about free membership in PiC Playgroup, visit www.parentingincolumbus.com or call Kaplan at 770-363-8161.

Robots: Show glimpse of future

But the students weren't the only ones interested in the demonstration on Stewart Watson Field. Soldiers with 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, stopped by to see what robots might be in their future.

Sgt. Stephen Williams said he wanted to see how the equipment moved, what programs were being used and talk with the vendors about reliability.

"I'm checking out the future weapons and systems to see how this can help us out on the battlefield," Williams said.

Nimblett said the company had invested $10 million in the project, including building a $1 million track in Dallas to test the technology.

The Army hasn't bought the future robotic weapons system, but the company is listening to its client, Nimblett said, as he listed some of the modifications the system has already undergone, like using aluminum instead of steel.

Once the experts completed the demonstration, spectators tried out the technologies.

Seventh-grader Mark Allen Blair "joysticked" a packbot.

"It's not as easy as driving a (remote-controlled) car, but it is very responsive," said Blair, who thinks the technology he saw could be adaptable for dinosaur animation.

Sophomore Christina Golczewski said she was amazed at the technology and is sure it will help win the war.

Iams, Mighty Dog products recalled

DEFENSE COMMISSARY AGENCY

FORT LEE, Va. — Commissaries worldwide have been directed to remove from their shelves certain cat and dog food products listed in a recall by Menu Foods Inc., based on a Food and Drug Administration warning issued March 17.

The recall resulted from consumer complaints received by the manufacturer and from tasting trials conducted by the manufacturer. The FDA was informed that Menu Foods, Inc., a private-label pet food manufacturer based in Statesville, Ontario, Canada, is recalling all its "cuts and gravy" style dog and cat food produced at its facility in Emporia, Kan., between Dec. 3, 2006 and March 6, 2007.

The products are sold in the U.S., Canada and Mexico. Commissaries are pulling the following items from shelves:

- Various sizes of IAMS cat food (chicken wild rice, chicken and gravy, tuna in sauce, tuna weight control, turkey chicken beef in gravy, salmon tuna in sauce, chicken in gravy, tuna flakes in sauce, ocean fish entrée, chicken entrée, chicken, and lamb and rice).

- Various sizes of IAMS dog food pouches (chicken with gravy, beef and gravy, weight control chicken, meat variety pouches, chicken and rice entrée, and beef and vegetables and gravy).

- Various sizes of Mighty Dog (variety 12 pack and chicken).

Some cats and dogs in the U.S. have been reported to develop kidney failure after eating the affected products. Ten deaths — one dog and nine cats — have been reported at this time.

The firm has undertaken extensive testing of the pet food products in question, but to date has been unable to find the source of the problem. Consumers who have any of these products should immediately stop feeding them to their pets. Pet owners whose dogs or cats have eaten the food and show such signs of kidney failure as loss of appetite, lethargy and vomiting should consult their veterinarian.

Commissary customers with this product are asked to return it to the store from which they purchased it for a full refund.

A complete list of all the potentially contaminated pet foods can be found at www.menufoods.com. The products are packaged in cans and pouches under numerous brand names and are marketed nationwide by many pet food retailers including Ahold USA Inc., Kroger Company, Safeway, Wal-Mart Stores Inc., PetSmart Inc. and Pet Valu Inc.

The FDA is investigating and working with Menu Foods to ensure the effectiveness of the recall. Consumers with questions may contact the company at 866-895-2708. Consumers who want to report adverse actions or other problems should go to www.fda.gov/opacom/backgrounders/complain.html to contact the FDA complaint coordinator in their state.

Protect pets from lyme diseases

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Tick season is just around the corner, and although ticks prefer areas with high grass, they can be found anywhere, including our backyards.

With ticks come risks for lyme disease, a potentially debilitating disease.

About 22,000 new cases of lyme disease in humans are reported each year, according to the National Lyme Disease Association.

Dogs are 50 to 100 times more likely than humans to be infected by a tick-borne disease, and lyme disease is one of the top four most common tick-borne diseases found in dogs.

Lyme disease is a multisystem bacterial infection, according to the Lyme Disease Foundation. The black-legged tick, commonly called the deer tick, is the transmitter of the disease in this part of the country. These ticks are smaller than the head of a pin.

Peak tick season in the east is from April to September, and on the west coast it's November to April, but ticks can bite year-round, according to the LDF.

Lyme disease symptoms in pets vary widely from no symptoms to fever, loss of appetite, painful joints, lethargy and vomiting, according to the LDF. If the disease is left untreated, it can cause damage to the eyes, heart, kidneys and nervous system.

Many cats do not show symptoms, but they can show lameness and unusual breathing in addition to the symptoms listed above.

In humans, the disease often starts with flu-like symptoms, including headache, stiff neck, fever, muscle aches and fatigue, and a rash. If the disease has manifested itself in other organs, most of the above symptoms worsen and other more serious symptoms occur, according to the LDF.

To protect pets from the disease, sprays and dips can be applied to the skin to kill ticks, and tick collars repel the pests. Be aware that ticks are often found in grassy, shrubby, wooded and beach grass areas. Keep the grass in your yard mowed.

Insecticides designed specifically to kill ticks are available for yards.

Check your pet frequently for ticks, especially after it has been in a habitat ticks prefer.

If you find a tick, remove it immediately with the proper technique. Use fine point tweezers placed around the tick's mouth, where it is attached to the skin and pull gently upwards until the tick detaches. Never use bare fingers, according to the LDF.

Once the tick is removed, disinfect the site and tweezers and wash your hands. The LDF recommends placing the tick and several blades of grass in a small plastic container for examination. Veterinarians can tell you if there is a local place where the tick can be tested for the disease.

Have your pet tested as soon as it displays any of the symptoms, since the sooner a diagnosis is made, the easier it is to treat.

Vaccines are available for dogs, so check with your vet to see if it is a necessary precaution.

If you find ticks on your dog, try to keep your children out of the area where you suspect the dog picked up the tick. Children ages 5 to 9 are the most likely to become infected with lyme disease and other tick-borne diseases, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

For more information, go to www.lyme.org or www.dogsandticks.com.

Azzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzaleas

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Azaleas are sleepers. For most of the year, they're flat-out ugly. Then, right about now — and again in the fall — they'll put on their best party clothes and go to town. For a brief time, a week or two at best, they dazzle.

Personally, I don't believe their fleeting beauty is worth the hassle of staring at them the rest of the year. I've tried, really I have.

When I moved here, I inherited a few anemic azaleas that had been planted in a spindly line along the front of the house like a row of shrubs. Wishful thinking on someone's part. I tried to coax them into shape. I pruned them and fed them and read them bedtime stories. I hacked a branch off my shade tree to make way for a sunbeam. Still, they resisted.

I mentioned my distaste of azaleas to my neighbor, a Southern gal who spent long hours in her yard fanning herself with a garden glove and sipping (mint juleps?) from a tumbler emblazoned with 'BAMA Pride! While admiring her roses, I mentioned my plan to replace those sickly azaleas.

Hate 'em, I said, and you'd have thought I insulted her mother. She paled. She wiped a bead of sweat from her upper lip, and said something about those "dawlin' azaleas." She looked for all the world like she might be coming down with the vapors. Then she went inside, presumably to lie down, and never spoke to me again.

It wasn't more than a month or two before she planted a hedge of azaleas between our yards. Come spring, they dazzled for about three days then dumped their wilted little petals all over my lawn.

Nope, azaleas are not worth the trouble.

But for two or three glorious weeks, they're definitely worth the drive to Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, where the sheer number of flowers in the Callaway Brothers Azalea Bowl creates a site you shouldn't miss.

The azaleas you see around here just hint at the beauty you'll find at Callaway, where more than 100 varieties of azaleas cover 40 acres of walking trails with riotous color. It looks like a Monet.

Be sure to take a camera and wear walking shoes, because the Azalea Bowl Trail winds through the woods, around waterways, across a reflecting pool, along the lyrical Valley Stream ... You get the idea. You might want to pack a picnic.

Catching azaleas at their peek is a lot like trying to schedule a trip to the mountains for the best view of fall color. It's hit or miss.

So you can keep up with the show at the Callaway Gardens Azalea Bowl Web page — access it from www.callawaygardens.com — and decide for yourself when its time to make the trip. There you'll also find directions and more information about all that Callaway Gardens and Pine Mountain have to offer visitors.

The Ida Cason Callaway Memorial Chapel, dedicated by Norman Vincent Peale, is located in the heart of Callaway Gardens and used as a place for quiet meditation and worship. Organ concerts are scheduled throughout the year.

OPENING TODAY

THE HILLS HAVE EYES 2 — What started with the Carter family clearly didn't end with the Carter family. Some time later, as part of a routine mission, a unit of National Guard Soldiers stop at a New Mexico outpost only to find the isolated research camp mysteriously deserted. After spotting a distress signal in a distant mountain range, the team decides to commence a search and rescue mission into the hills. Little do they know that these are the very hills that the ill-fated Carter family once visited, and that a tribe of cannibalistic mutants lies in wait.

Jessica Stroup, Reshad Strik and Michael McMillian star in the movie.

The Hills Have Eyes 2 is rated R for strong gruesome violence and terror throughout, and for language.

PRIDE — The year is 1973, and Jim Ellis (Terrence Howard), a college-educated African-American, can't find a job.

Driven by his love of competitive swimming, Jim converts an abandoned recreational pool hall in a Philadelphia slum with the help of Elston (Bernie Mac), a local janitor.

When city officials mark the new Philadelphia Department for Recreation for demolition, Jim fights back — by starting the city's first African-American swim team.

Pride is rated PG for thematic material, language including some racial epithets, and violence.

THE LAST MIMZY — Two children (Rhiannon Leigh Wryn and Chris O'Neil) discover a mysterious box that contains some strange devices they think are toys. As the children begin to play with these "toys," they begin to display higher and higher intelligence levels. Their parents realize that something extraordinary is happening.

When the little girl says that a beat-up stuffed toy rabbit named Mimzy contains a most serious message from the future, a scientific scan shows that Mimzy is part extremely high level electronic, and part organic. Everyone realizes that they are involved in something incredible ... but exactly what?

The Last Mimzy is rated PG for some thematic elements, mild peril and language.

REIGN OVER ME — A man (Adam Sandler) who lost his family in the Sept. 11 attacks and has never recovered from his grief, runs into his former college roommate (Don Cheadle), who is determined to help his ex-roomie come to grips with his loss.

Reign Over Me is rated R for language and some sexual references.

SHOOTER — Bob Lee Swagger (Mark Wahlberg) is a former Marine Corps sniper who leaves the military after a mission goes bad.

After he is reluctantly pressed back into service, Swagger is double-crossed again.

With two bullets in him and the subject of a nationwide manhunt, Swagger begins his revenge, which will take down the most powerful people in the country.

Shooter is rated R for strong graphic violence and some language.

Mark Wahlberg stars as Bob Lee Swagger in the movie Shooter, now playing in theaters nationwide.

TMNT — After the defeat of their old arch nemesis The Shredder, the Turtles have grown apart as a family. Struggling to keep them together, their rat sensei, Master Splinter, becomes worried when strange things begin to brew in New York City.

Tech-industrialist Max Winters is amassing an army of ancient monsters to take over the world. And only one super-ninja fighting team can stop them — Leonardo, Michelangelo, Donatello and Raphael.

Characters are voiced by Patrick Stewart and Sarah Michelle Gellar.

TMNT is rated PG for animated action violence, some scary cartoon images and mild language.

ALSO IN THEATERS

PREMONITION — Linda Hanson (Sandra Bullock) has a beautiful house, a loving husband (Julian McMahon) and two adorable daughters. Her life is perfect, until the day she receives the devastating news that her husband Jim has died in a car accident.

When she wakes up the next morning to find him alive and well, she assumes it was all a dream, but is shaken by how vivid it felt. She soon realizes it wasn't a dream, and her world is turned upside down as the surreal circumstances lead her to discover that her perfect family life may not have been all that it appeared.

Premonition is rated PG-13 for some violent content, disturbing images, thematic material and brief language.

DEAD SILENCE — There is an old ghost story in the sleepy town of Ravens Fair about Mary Shaw, a ventriloquist who went mad. Accused of the murder of a young boy, she was hunted down by vengeful townspeople who cut out her tongue and murdered her. They buried her along with her "children" — a handmade collection of vaudeville dolls. Since that time, Ravens Fair has been plagued by death. The dolls from Mary's collection have gone missing from the grave and reappeared over the decades.

In the dead of the night — wherever they are glimpsed — families are found gruesomely murdered — with their tongues torn out.

The movie stars Leigh Whannell, Amber Valletta and Donnie Wahlberg.

Dead Silence is rated R for horror violence and images.

I THINK I LOVE MY WIFE — Richard Cooper (Chris Rock) has it all. His wife, Brenda, is beautiful, intelligent and a fantastic mother to his children — but there's just one little problem: he's bored out of his suburban businessman's mind. Richard can't help but fantasize about nearly every woman he sees.

Then, one fateful day, his alluring, free-spirited, not to mention stunning, old friend Nikki suddenly appears at his office door, putting him to the ultimate test.

I Think I Love My Wife is rated R for pervasive language and some sexual content.

300 — The movie is set in the midst of the Persian-Greco war during the Battle of Thermopylae, where Spartan king Leonidas led his army of 300 soldiers into battle against the invading Persian army. According to legend, their valor and sacrifice inspired all of Greece to unite against their Persian foe, leading to the origins of democracy.

300 is rated R for graphic battle sequences throughout, some sexuality and nudity.

ZODIAC — As a serial killer terrifies the San Francisco Bay Area and taunts police with his ciphers and letters, investigators in four jurisdictions search for the murderer. The case will become an obsession for four men as their lives and careers are built and destroyed by the endless trail of clues.

Jake Gyllenhaal, Mark Ruffalo, Robert Downey Jr. and Anthony Edwards star in the film.

Zodiac is rated R for some strong killings, language, drug material and brief sexual images.

WILD HOGS — A group of middle-aged friends (John Travolta, Tim Allen, Martin Lawrence, William H. Macy) decide to rev up their routine suburban lives with a freewheeling motorcycle trip. Taking a long dreamed-of breather from their stressful jobs and family responsibilities, they can't wait to feel the freedom of the open road.

When this mismatched foursome — who have grown far more used to the couch than the saddle — set out for this once-in-a-lifetime experience, they encounter a world that holds far more than they ever bargained for.

Wild Hogs is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content and some violence.

BLACK SNAKE MOAN — Bitter and broken from a cheating wife and a shattered marriage, Lazarus' (Samuel L. Jackson) soul is lost in spent dreams and betrayal's contempt — until Rae (Christina Ricci).

Half naked and beaten unconscious, Rae is left for dead on the side of the road when Lazarus discovers her.

The God-fearing, middle-aged black man learns that the young white woman he's nursing back to health is none other than the town tramp from the small Tennessee town where they live. Worse, she has a peculiar anxiety disorder. He realizes when the fever hits, Rae's affliction has more to do with love lost than any found.

He chains her to his radiator, justifying his unorthodox methods with quoted scripture.

Black Snake Moan is rated R for strong sexual content, language, some violence and drug use.

NEW RELEASES

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPYNESS: Will Smith was a recent Oscar nominee for his moving performance in this fact-inspired drama, the story of a would-be stockbroker who pursues an unpaid internship while living essentially homeless and trying to raise his young son (Jaden Smith, Will's actual offspring) by himself. The elder Smith commendably achieves new depth as an actor here; Thandie Newton (Crash) also stars as the woman who abandons the Smith character. DVD extras: four "making-of" documentaries; audio commentary by director Gabriele Muccino. (PG-13: P)

HAPPY FEET: Also known as the movie that beat James Bond's Casino Royale, specifically at the American box office, this joyous animated treat from director George Miller (Mad Max) follows the odyssey of a penguin (voice of Elijah Wood) who can't carry a tune like so many of his peers — but he sure can dance, thanks to the computer-applied moves of Savion Glover. The all-star voice cast also includes Robin Williams, Nicole Kidman, Hugh Jackman, Brittany Murphy and Anthony LaPaglia. DVD extras: two "making-of" documentaries; deleted scenes; music videos. (G)

ABC reporter shares 'first team' story with world

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Sgt. Joy Pariente

FORT HOOD, Texas — Martha Raddatz, senior White House correspondent for ABC News, visited the Clear Creek Post Exchange March 10 to sign copies of her latest book The Long Road Home, based on the 1st Cavalry Division's battle in Sadr City in April 2004, which claimed the lives of eight Soldiers and wounded more than 60 others.

Raddatz, a three-time Emmy award-winning journalist, was working as a correspondent in Baghdad at the time when she heard about the 2nd Battalion, 5th Cavalry Regiment's, contact with militia members during a routine sewage detail in the city.

Raddatz went down to Sadr City to do a piece for ABC's Nightline and was with the 2nd Bn., 5th Cav. Regt., Soldiers when they went, for the first time, back into the alley where they were trapped following the ambush.

"To see what they had been through and for them to talk about it in such great detail and to give me such a vivid picture ... it was extraordinary what they did that night," she said.

After spending a few visits with the Soldiers, Raddatz discovered a deeper story than she had expected.

"When I visited (the Soldiers) the last time, they suggested I go to Fort Hood to talk to the families and see what it was like for them," Raddatz said.

What she found back home was a network of spouses supporting each other while dealing with the loss of husbands, brothers, sons and fathers.

"I just felt that was a powerful story and the families hadn't been heard about before," she said.

Raddatz was still busy with her job at ABC when she began work on The Long Road Home. Sometimes it would take hours to change gears from news and politics to documenting the devastating story of an ill-fated mission that would change many lives forever.

"The interviews with the families were hard, emotional ... you could see the pain everyone went through," she said.

Interviews with the Soldiers and leadership involved in the Sadr City battle weren't any easier.
