"To see someone in the military cry is powerful. And that's something I wanted to make people to understand. I wanted civilians to understand the sacrifices of families and the military," she said.

"You could see the pain everyone went through," Raddatz said.

"The hardest part was, as a journalist, you have that shield to not become emotional about things. But, you can't be objective to hardship and suffering."

Raddatz devoted eight months to putting together the story of an encounter that would account for the largest loss of lives for the 1st Cav. Div. since Vietnam.

In addition to interviewing families and researching the military, Raddatz sought out small details to bring depth to her story.

She would e-mail the Soldiers in Iraq to get clarification on questions like what kind of mats would they sleep on or what position they slept in.

"Those are the little details I think make the story richer," Raddatz said.

At the post exchange, Raddatz signed more than 200 books, the most during her promotional tour thus far. Raddatz's tour for The Long Road Home will also take her to Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas, Boston, New York City and Washington, D.C.

Raddatz said her book has had a tremendous response from both military and civilian audiences, and that's exactly what she was hoping for.

"I think it's a very important story and it has meant a lot to me," she said.

After the signing, Raddatz went on her first trail ride with 1st Cav. Div.'s Horse Detachment. She also visited 1st Cav. Div.'s memorial wall to personally see the names of the Soldiers she had written about.

The Long Road Home is on bookstore shelves in PXs throughout the Army.

Editor's note: Pariente writes for the 1st Cavalry Division Public Affairs.

Columbus/Fort Benning Relay For Life

Kinnett Stadium - Schomburg Road

A TEAM EVENT TO FIGHT CANCER

Campsites can be chosen immediately upon registering a minimum of five team members.

Relay For Life® is a fun-filled overnight event designed to bring together those who have been touched by cancer in our community. At the event, we celebrate survivorship and raise money to help the American Cancer Society in its mission to save lives, help those who have been touched by cancer, and empower individuals to fight back. During the event, teams of people gather at schools, fairgrounds, or parks and take turns walking or running laps. Each team tries to keep at least one team member on the track at all times.

But, Relay is much more than a walk around a track. It is a time to remember those lost to cancer and celebrate those who have survived. It is a night for people who have shared the same experience to comfort and console one another. During this event, we honor survivors during the Survivors Lap and we remember those we lost to cancer during the Luminaria Ceremony. We also celebrate life, friendship, and a chance to work together toward a cancer-free future.

Most importantly, Relay gives you the power to help in the fight against cancer. By joining together as volunteers and donors, our efforts help the American Cancer Society strive toward a future where cancer doesn't take the lives of our friends and family.

Sign up today to become a part of the Relay phenomenon. Together we will fuel the work - and the hope - that can help make a cancer-free future a reality.

Doughboys needed

Officials at the Department of Veterans Affairs believe there are only four surviving American veterans of World War I. They hope you'll prove them wrong.

About 4.7 million men and women served in the U.S. armed forces during WWI. VA officials have located three. Another American survivor served in the Canadian army.

"We're coming to the end of a generation," said Jim Nicholson, secretary of Veterans Affairs. "These veterans earned the gratitude and respect of the nation."

Nicholson said VA officials typically learn about a veteran only after he or she applies for benefits. None of the four surviving WWI veterans are on the VA benefits rolls, he said. So there stands a possibility that there are others like them.

Nicholson asked the public to contact the VA with information about any surviving American who served between April 6, 1917 and Nov. 11, 1918. Send information to ww1@va.gov or Office of Public Affairs, Dept. of VA (80), 810 Vermont Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20420.

U.S. senator visits Benning, tours hospital

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

U.S. Sen. Saxby Chambliss, Georgia, visited Fort Benning Monday, meeting with Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski and touring Martin Army Community Hospital.

Chambliss, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, talked with the commanding general and Col. Margaret Rivera, hospital commander, about the issue of health care for Soldiers, especially those who transition from active-duty to the Veterans Affairs system.

"Frankly, the treatment our Soldiers are getting at Fort Benning is second to none."

"Frankly the treatment our Soldiers are getting at Fort Benning is second to none — at any facility, anywhere in the world," Chambliss said.

"I'm very pleased to get a tour and see firsthand just how our Soldiers are being treated and how they're being transitioned either back to active-duty or into the VA system if they have some future needs that have to be taken care of."

While on post, Chambliss visited the Medical Retention Center for a briefing on medical holds and a tour of the Soldiers' housing, which he said was

'The Airborne made men out of boys'

30th annual Airborne Awards Festival, ceremony scheduled for Thursday

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Don Lassen says he was drafted in 1942, but that's not the whole truth. Lassen planted himself in front of the draft officer's desk and told him "I'm ready to go. Send me."

And off he went, to the 86th Division in Camp Howze, Texas. There he found himself surrounded by other draftees, but not the kind who volunteered.

"None of them wanted to be there. None of them," Lassen said. "I thought, 'Geez, I'm the best man in the 86th. If I'm the best man in the whole outfit, I better find another outfit.'"

So Lassen volunteered once again, this time for the 82nd Airborne Division. He spent three years with the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "just long enough to get the war over with" — and made 25 jumps — "just enough to get my belly full of it."

But those three years shaped his life, Lassen said.

"You know General Gavin is buried in West Point. He could've been buried at Arlington with all the other heroes, but he wanted to be buried at West Point because he felt like he grew up there. That's the way I feel about the Airborne," he said. "The Airborne made men out of boys. I grew up in it. I was only 19, and it made a man out of me."

Lassen's love for paratroopers past and present keeps him busy publishing the Static Line, a monthly newsletter devoted to all things airborne. Headlining this month's edition is the 30th annual Airborne Awards Festival Wednesday through April 14 in Atlanta.

Unit rotations announced

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Jim Garamone

WASHINGTON — More than 7,000 service members will deploy to Iraq in the coming months, including two units that will not have been back home for a year, as they expected when they returned from their last deployments, Defense Department officials said Monday. The rotations will enable commanders in Iraq to maintain 20 brigade combat teams in the theater, through the end of August.

The 3,500 Soldiers of the 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., will return to Iraq 47 days before their one-year stateside "dwell break" is finished. The headquarters of 4th Infantry Division, Fort Hood, Texas, will return to Iraq 81 days early.

"The level of effort that the United States is maintaining in Iraq is a build-up to 20 combat brigades," said Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman. "These combat brigades — with these additional troop rotations — will permit the surge to commit at that level through the end of August."

Iraqi troops and Soldiers from the 4th Infantry Division enter the village of Hathiem Murtiaq on July 1. The division will return to Iraq to replace the 1st Cavalry Division as headquarters for Multinational Division Baghdad in September.

Benning mission to train Soldiers

Last week, we had the equivalent of more than three combat brigades training on post

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

We are doing a superb job of training Soldiers and assisting units deployed in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

In this column I'll highlight half of that equation — training Soldiers.

Last week 11,649 Soldiers were in training at Fort Benning.

That's the equivalent of more than three combat brigades. Last week 225 Soldiers graduated from initial Infantry training conducted by the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill, 484 graduated from officer courses, and 464 graduated from functional courses taught by the 29th Infantry Regiment, the 11th Infantry Regiment, and the Ranger Training Brigade.

I congratulate all cadre and staff that mentored and molded these fine Soldiers and leaders on a job well done.

The upcoming weeks look just as exciting.

The 29th Infantry Regiment will host a hands-on training exercise (HOTEX) for the Infantry Pre-Command Course at 5 p.m. Thursday on Red Cloud Range.

Also, on April 20-22 the Ranger Training

Brigade will host the 24th annual Best Ranger Competition.

Teams from around the world will converge on Fort Benning to compete in this prestigious and arduous competition.

Grueling by any standard, a 72-hour "Gut-Check" of nearly continuous operations will cull out the "Best of the Best."

The public is encouraged to come out and see firsthand what television fails to capture in this one-of-a-kind event.

The award ceremony is scheduled for 10 a.m. April 23 at the Ranger Memorial across from Infantry Hall.

Another upcoming event is the Soldier as a System Review Conference, hosted by the Directorate of Combat Development, April 16-19 in Infantry Hall.

This conference provides the Infantry School the opportunity to present to the TRADOC commander an overall view of the state of various Soldier systems.

These include helmets, body armor, and weapons. It also paves the way for funding initiatives to ensure our Soldiers receive the best equipment to meet warfighting requirements.

Remember, our mission is to train Soldiers for the Global War on Terrorism. I ask for your continued support for our trainers and our Soldiers in this mission.

OPINION

There outta be a law against that

THE BAYONET
Annette Fournier

According to a 2005 study by GMAC Insurance's National Drivers Test, about one in 10 drivers do not know basic traffic laws. That's about 20 million of our fellow Americans driving around cluelessly.

So I'd like to inform you on a few of the lesser known laws, courtesy of DMV.org and Wettest Laws, by Shaun Aisbett.

For instance:

- In Alabama, it is illegal to drive while blindfolded, and no one may drive a motor boat on city streets.

However, it's OK to drive the wrong way down a one-way street if there is a lantern on the front of your vehicle and you are not barefoot.

- It is illegal in California for a woman to drive while wearing a robe. And an unoccupied vehicle may not exceed 60 miles per hour.

- It is highly illegal to herd more than 2,000 sheep on Hollywood Boulevard at one time.

Not so in London, where any free person may herd cattle across any bridge at any time.

- People in Connecticut may not cross the street walking on their hands or ride a bicycle faster than 65 miles per hour.

- If you tie your elephant to a parking meter in Florida, you must pay the meter fee.

- In Georgia, state assembly members are exempt from speeding tickets while the state assembly is in session. I wonder who passed that law?

Also, no one may spit from a moving car or van in Marietta. However it's perfectly acceptable to spit from a truck.

- In Idaho Falls, Idaho, people older than 88 may not ride a motorcycle.

- In Illinois, no one is allowed to drive a car without a steering wheel.

- A woman may not stand on a Kentucky highway in a bathing suit unless she is escorted by two police officers or she is carrying a club.

- In Massachusetts, driving with a gorilla in the back seat will get you a ticket. No word on whether gorillas can sit in the front seats.

- In Minnesota, it's illegal to cross state lines with a duck on your head. The same law applies to chickens in Wisconsin.

- In Nebraska, motor vehicle drivers must shoot red warning rockets while driving at night.

If a motorist approaches a skittish horse and carriage, he or she must stop and throw a camouflaged tarpaulin over the car to conceal it from the horse. If that still doesn't calm the horse, the motorist has no choice but to disassemble the car and hide the parts in the grass.

- The same law applies in Pennsylvania. Additionally, drivers must stop every mile, send up a rocket, and wait 10 minutes for farmers to remove livestock from the highway, before continuing another mile and repeating.

- Camels may not be ridden on any Nevada highways.

- Running out of gas is illegal in Ohio, as is driving while sitting on another person's lap.

- In Tennessee you cannot drive while sleeping, or hunt for any animal other than whales while driving.

- Birds have the right of way on Utah highways.

- It is forbidden for cars to backfire in Vermont.

- In Washington, a motorist with criminal intentions must stop at the city limits and inform the police chief that he or she is entering town.

And riding an ugly horse in Wilbur, Wash., is unacceptable.

OK, you might not need those laws while traveling along most American streets. But if you don't want to be one of the 20 million clueless drivers, remember to observe these laws.

Drive the speed limit, especially in adverse road conditions. The roads are the most slippery when it first begins to rain.

A yellow light means slow down, not speed up to beat the red.

Come to a full and complete stop at stop signs, rather than rolling through after furtively glancing for police cars. Yield to pedestrians in crosswalks. Common courtesy goes a long way on the road — maintain a safe following distance, use your blinkers and wait your turn in traffic.

And please, don't cut through the visitor center's parking lot to cut in line at the 185 gate. It's just impolite.

Most importantly, never, never, never drink and drive.

That's no joke.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Thank You

Iwould like to send a big "thank you" to all who worked so hard on the recent Women's Conference at the Benning Club March 14.

So many wonderful volunteers gave their time for months for the simple reason of giving and reaching out to the women of the Fort Benning community.

The conference was a huge success because of the leadership and organizational skills of Tandi Morris.

Many friendships were strengthened along the way by all who worked together on this project.

The Women's Conference was a day filled with learning, crafting, relaxing and bonding with others.

If I try to list everyone who volunteered, I know I would leave someone out accidentally.

But I wish I could, because you are all a great inspiration of what can be accomplished when a group of women come together.

Thank you all!

Correction:

In last week's edition of The Bayonet, Susie Mantell was quoted in a C1 article about stress. Mantell is a stress expert and the author of Your Present: A Half Hour of Peace. The Bayonet article incorrectly identified Mantell as a writer for SelfGrowth.com, a Web site that regularly cites her work in health-related issues.

Also, on the front page of last week's paper, we incorrectly stated that OCS won the football championship when, in fact, the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, won it.

'Daddy's girl' prepares to deploy. Again.

Confidence in training keeps dad from worrying

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Daddy's little girl wears combat boots. They're a good two sizes smaller than his, but Command Sgt. Maj. Raul Huerta thinks she fills them out just fine.

"I'm not worried about her at all. She's my daughter, but she's a Soldier. And she's a good Soldier; she knows her stuff," said Huerta, of his 24-year-old daughter, Sgt. Eleanor Huerta, who enlisted in the Army more than three years ago.

Since then, she's been deployed to Afghanistan and Iraq. Now, after earning her jump wings on Fort Benning last week, Eleanor is headed to Hawaii with a unit that will likely deploy in September.

Like her father, the top NCO of the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Eleanor is confident in her training. She was willing to serve in Afghanistan with her MP company.

She "really wanted to be there." She volunteered for Iraq with another company suffering a shortage of female MPs. And she has no problem going back.

"But to say I'm not scared wouldn't be true. If you're human, you're a little bit scared. You better be," said Eleanor, who admitted she was also "a little bit scared" before she made her first jump.

"That first one was like the first day in sector," said Eleanor, referring to the first time she ventured from the relative safety of camp in Afghanistan.

His daughter has never shied away from a challenge, Huerta said. In fact, she seems to thrive on them.

"I don't know how my wife kept up with her when she was growing up," he said. "She was always looking for adventure. After (high school) she slowed down a bit, but then she joined the Army and took off again."

When Eleanor's career "took off," it took her a long way from home for long periods of time.

She seldom gets to see her mother,

Sgt. Eleanor Huerta and her father, Command Sgt. Maj. Raul Huerta, seldom see each other stateside, but they have "bumped" into each other repeatedly during deployments.

I call him if I have a problem, but I find I can handle it usually, if I ask myself, 'What would my dad do right now?'"

— Sgt. Eleanor Huerta

Bobbie, or her three brothers. But on occasion, she bumps into her father.

They met in Afghanistan — his unit was preparing to redeploy, hers had just arrived. "We spent about a week together, and I think all we did was talk about old times," Eleanor said.

"I think I'm daddy's girl. We're very close. We spent the whole time talking about the things we used to do — camping and movies. We always quote lines from movies."

Again, they met while both were deployed in Iraq last year. Huerta was stationed west of Baghdad.

His daughter was stationed on the east side of the Tigris. Every now and then, Eleanor would drop in on her father when her MP unit was passing through.

Though, Huerta insists, he never feared for his daughter's safety, he did take the opportunity to remind her to think like a Soldier.

"Keep your game face on," he told her. "Pay attention to details. Don't take shortcuts. Trust your training."

And that she does, Eleanor said, she trusts her training. But training doesn't cover everything.

When in doubt, when she faces issues with her Soldiers, Eleanor turns to her dad for advice. He's never steered her wrong.

"I call him if I have a problem," she said, "but I find I can handle it, usually, if I ask myself, 'What would my dad do right now?' It always works out."

PROCLAMATION

Child Abuse Prevention Month

As the installation commander, I call upon every Soldier, civilian employee and family member to support our mission. Preventing child abuse and neglect is one aspect of that mission. In today's environment, with the stress of deployment and family separations on all our communities, protecting the well being of our children is a particularly critical challenge. What we do on behalf of children is a particularly critical challenge. What we do on behalf of children today determines their future — and ours.

What we can do for Child Abuse Prevention Month 2007 at Fort Benning is to show our children a community filled with caring adults, safe homes and schools, multiple opportunities for healthy development, effective chances to learn and grow, and an installation committed to their protection and welfare.

The first and most important line of defense for children is their family. Resilient parents and relatives are indispensable in the lives of children, particularly in stressful situations.

Making our families and our installation a protective and nurturing place for children is our responsibility. Our children deserve:

- Safe streets, safe schools and safe communities
- Opportunities for growing up strong and healthy
- Chance to develop to their highest potential in physical, emotional and intellectual terms
- Ways to learn naturally the value of helping others

Whatever your duty assignment here at Fort Benning, I call upon you to do your part to keep both your family and our community a place where any child can grow into a healthy future. There are many resources available in this community to support families and protect children. Contact the Family Advocacy Program at 706-545-4013 or 706-545-7594 for more information.

Today marks 90th anniversary of 'the forgotten war'

Benning, as Home of the Infantry, rooted in World War I

U.S. ARMY INFANTRY CENTER
David Stieghan

The month of April marks the 90th anniversary of the United States' entry into World War I. What began as a temporary response to a national emergency resulted in the establishment of Fort Benning.

On April 6, 1917, Congress declared war on Germany after a number of submarine attacks on merchant ships killed thousands of Americans. The U.S. joined the Allies in a war in progress since 1914 but could not send a significant number of ground forces to France for more than a year.

The enormous impact of American troops, equipment and money on the Allied effort before the shooting stopped Nov. 11, 1918, was a fraction of the nation's potential, had the war lasted into 1919. More than half of the Army's 4 million Doughboys were waiting to ship to Europe when the Armistice was signed.

While the nation responded quickly to the call with enlistments, a draft, rationing, and new factories, it was almost a case of "too little, too late" for our struggling Allies. This situation led directly to the establishment of Fort Benning.

In 1917, the U.S. had about 126,000 Soldiers on active duty — about the same number as the country of Portugal. A year later, the force had grown to almost 32 times its former size.

The need to transform civilians into troops and leaders for modern war overseas put a tremendous strain on the nation.

By 1918, the Infantry branch had outgrown the Infantry School headquarters and began to look for a larger home. Established on April 1, 1907, at Monterey, Calif., the School of Musketry joined the School of Fire at Fort Sill, Okla., in 1913, and was re-christened the Infantry School.

While millions of foot Soldiers received training at dozens of temporary camps across the U.S. and Europe, the Infantry cadre needed a place to train leaders and test weapons and tactics. A site east of Columbus, three miles out on Macon Road, was selected as the new Home of the Infantry and opened for training in October 1918, a few weeks before the shooting war ended.

With peace declared, it seemed that the emergency that caused the creation of Camp Benning was over. The Soldiers could strike the tents, and the piles of stockpiled tarpaper and lumber could be sold as surplus.

However, leaders with vision convinced the Army that the Infantry Branch needed a separate home and the Columbus area was ideal for training and experiment. Additional land purchases south of Columbus provided increased space for permanent facilities. By 1921, the Infantry School graduated officers from four separate programs, and shortly afterwards, the post was renamed Fort Benning.

Through almost 90 years of land and mission growth, Fort Benning continues to serve as one of the most important military facilities in the world and is poised to become the Maneuver Center of Excellence as it welcomes the Armor School.

Army to field improved body armor

New armor is 3 pounds lighter, increases protection

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Debi Dawson

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — The Army continues to upgrade body armor to increase protection from bullets and fragments, and soon will field the Improved Outer Tactical Vest to Soldiers deploying to Iraq and Afghanistan.

The IOTV meets Program Executive Office Soldier's goals of providing Soldiers with the most advanced protective gear available while also improving comfort and mission effectiveness.

"The IOTV is more than three pounds lighter than the current OTV, but provides an equal level of protection over an increased area," said Brig. Gen. R. Mark Brown, Program Executive Officer Soldier. "This vest epitomizes our continuous efforts to seek the next improvement and to provide our Soldiers the best body armor available, bar none. It is live-fire tested — we know it will prove itself in combat."

"The weight of the IOTV was reduced by eliminating overlap," said Maj. Carl Fulmore, assistant product manager for Soldier Survivability. "With the IOTV, we were able to streamline previous improvements."

For example, the vest now has a higher cut in the underarm area, which will eliminate the need to attach the axillary or underarm protector to the current deltoid axillary protector set. The deltoid protector can still be attached at the commander's discretion. The vest's integrated throat protector provides the same protection as the current attachable version, but it's designed to be more comfortable. The now integrated side plate carriers decrease the vest's profile, and a lower back protector extends the vest's coverage by 52 square inches.

The IOTV's numerous improvements go beyond increased protection. A single-stage quick release added to the front of the vest allows a Soldier to doff the IOTV and its attachments with one pull. The vest then falls to the ground in two pieces and can be put back together in minutes.

"This feature would only be used by Soldiers in emergency situations, such as being trapped in an overturned or submerged vehicle. It's not meant to simply be a quick way to get out of the IOTV at the end of the day or mission," Fulmore said.

Medics could use the quick release to treat wounded Soldiers, or they could use an opening on the left shoulder, which allows easy access while still providing protection to the patient.

Comfort and utility features are also part of the improved design. The most notable may be the IOTV's overhead opening. An internal waistband provides a snug fit and moves much of the weight from the shoulders to the waist.

"This design significantly decreased the vest's profile and should increase mobility. We believe mobility equals survivability," Fulmore said.

Other features include:

- The addition of a long variant to sizes medium through extra large. This extends the size range from eight to 11 and should result in a near-custom fit for Soldiers.

- Additional modular lightweight load-carrying equipment attachments as a result of moving the opening from the front of the vest. These attachments are now in the universal camouflage pattern.

- Enhanced small arms ballistic insert pockets with four inches of vertical adjustability, which will allow for better placement of the plates based on individual body proportions.

- Additional storage pockets.

- A mesh lining to aid ventilation.

- Vertical adjustability of side plate carriers.

Soldiers will continue to use the enhanced small arms protective inserts and the enhanced side ballistic inserts.

The IOTV is a result of research and development that began with a body armor industry day in the spring of 2006. Seventeen vendors came forward with designs for improved body armor, and six were selected to provide prototypes for a user evaluation conducted in January and February this year. Then Soldiers at

Bush: Troops' work will impact world

SERVICE
Linda D. Kozaryn

WASHINGTON — The hard work U.S. troops are doing in Iraq is "laying the foundations of peace for generations to come," President Bush told Soldiers and families Wednesday at Fort Irwin, Calif.

"The work that you have volunteered to do will have a lasting impact on the world in which we live," he said.

By helping Iraq become a country that can sustain, defend and govern itself — and become an ally in the war on terror — the U.S. military will have delivered a significant blow to those who want to harm the American people, he said.

"The amazing thing about our United States military is that thousands and thousands of you have signed up knowing full well that we're a nation at war," he said. "You decided to put your country ahead of self in many ways."

Bush said he's proud to be the commander-in-chief of such honorable and noble people. He said it gives him confidence to know that "standing with the president of the United States is a fantastic military, well-trained, courageous and dedicated to protecting this country."

He also thanked the families and said he understands the troop rotations are difficult and deployments create anxiety.

"You are an integral part of making sure this volunteer army is as successful as it is today," he told the family members.

The president said the troops are facing a "tough war" and the American people are weary of it. But in his judgment, leaving before the job was done would make the United States at risk to further attack.

Bush said his new plan for military operations in Iraq involved sending in more troops and naming a new commander, Army Gen. David H. Petraeus, an expert on counter-insurgency. About half of the reinforcements have arrived, and the security situation is improving.

American and Iraqi troops are rounding up Sunni and Shiite extremists and going after al Qaeda. They're destroying car bomb factories, killing and capturing hundreds of insurgents, and reclaiming neighborhoods.

"There is progress," he said, "but the enemy sees that progress and they're responding in a brutal way."

For example, Bush said extremists blew up a car with children inside.

"It only hardens my resolve to help free Iraq from a society in which people can do that to children, and it makes me realize the nature of the enemy, which hardens my resolve to protect the American people," he said.

What's happening in Iraq is not a civil war, he said. "It is pure evil and I believe we have an obligation to protect ourselves from that evil."

The president said the Iraqi government is meeting its obligations. They've committed additional troops to Baghdad, named a Baghdad commander, and manned checkpoints. They've also committed $10 billion for reconstruction.

While the United States wants the Iraqi government to succeed, the president said he warned Iraqi officials that U.S. patience is not unlimited.

"It's in the interest of the United States that this young democracy succeed," Bush said. "It's in our interest that we gain a new ally in the war on terror in a part of the world that produced 19 kids that came and killed 3,000 of our citizens."

Bush noted that Congress has passed legislation that would impose an artificial deadline from Iraq. He said Defense Secretary Robert Gates, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Marine Gen. Peter Pace and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker have warned that delaying the funds past mid-April will have significant consequences for the armed forces.

Bush said he will "urge Congress to work on legislation to fund the troops, but that does not tell the military how to conduct war and sets an artificial timetable for withdrawal."

"The enemy does not measure the conflict in Iraq in terms of timetables," he said. "They plan to fight us and we've got to fight them alongside the Iraqis. A strategy that encourages its enemies to wait us out is dangerous. It's dangerous for our troops. It's dangerous for our country's security, and it's not going to become the law."

Bush said he understands people have passionate points of views about this war. "Yet we cannot allow honest differences in Washington to harm our troops in battle or their families here at home," he said.

"Members of Congress have sent their message now they need to send me a war spending measure that I can sign into law so we can provide our troops and their families with the funds and support that they deserve and they need," he said.

NEWS AROUND the ARMY

Center dedicated to veteran

Fort Meade, Md., dedicated the Max J. Beilke Human Resource Center March 21. Beilke was a retired master sergeant and deputy chief of Army Retirement Services when he died on American Airlines Flight 77, which hit the Pentagon's outer ring Sept. 11, 2001.

The center is a tribute to Beilke's tireless service to retirees and veterans. The Korean War veteran was the last official American combat Soldier to leave Vietnam.

Acres cleared for training, woodpeckers

Fort Jackson, S.C., has cleared 321 acres across the post to benefit Soldiers and red-cockaded woodpeckers. It is part of a project done annually to improve training areas and nesting areas for the woodpecker.

The forests are thinned by removing medium-sized trees and leaving the more mature canopy-type trees, since woodpeckers won't make their nests in forests that are too thick.

Soldiers benefit from the acreage clearing because the thinner forestry makes bivouacking easier.

Sgt. Nolan Freeman, an instructor with A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, instructs a Soldier on firing techniques of the M-2 heavy machine gun on Patton Range March 29. The M-2 is a crew-served weapon that was first developed in the Army by John Browning toward the end of WWI.

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Known affectionately as "Ma Deuce" by legions of Soldiers, the M-2 .50 caliber machine gun is the primary heavy machine gun of the U.S. Army, said Sgt. James Fields, when he briefed one station unit training Soldiers on Patton Range.

E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, in its seventh week of training, learned about special weapons, like the .50 cal and the Mark-19 automatic grenade launcher.

Capt. Brian Clymer, company commander, said the training is to familiarize the Soldiers with crew-served weapons they will use if and when deployed to theaters of operation.

"The rounds from this gun will penetrate just about anything that the enemy can hide behind," Fields told the Soldiers.

"We want to instill confidence in these Soldiers that this weapon can save their lives and the lives of their buddies in combat," he said.

During the training, the Soldiers fired 100 rounds each, were taught how to load and clear the weapon, correct stoppages, fire discipline (using short bursts) and correct sight alignment.

Pvt. Ricardo Baer returned from the firing line with a grin on his face.

"It was awesome! I want to shoot it again," he said.

Staff Sgt. Jeremy Marrone, a trainer with B Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., instructed the Soldiers on how to load, reduce malfunctions and unload the 40 mm grenade launcher.

"We try to give them a basic understanding of proper firing technique and practical use of the weapon in a combat situation," he said.

Pvt. John Hawkins was impressed with the Mark-19.

"It's an amazing weapon," he said. "I liked that you could actually see the rounds going down range."

Sgt. James Fields shows the proper procedure for charging the M-2 Browning machine gun.

Soldiers from E Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., carry a Mark-19 grenade machine gun to the briefing area on Patton Range prior to the unit's familiarization training on crew-served weapons.

"During combat convoy operations, crew-served weapons provide shock value, to make the enemy think twice about attacking a convoy, and provide adequate firepower against an attacking enemy," said Capt. Christopher Neal, 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, who participated in offensive operations at the beginning of Operation Iraqi Freedom in 2003.

WHINSEC trains at new course

WHINSEC PAO
Spc. Rafael S. Nunez

WHINSEC's Medical Assistance Course instructors and students gathered at Training Area W-2's newly built litter course, just after a stomach-cramping helicopter flight, for intense litter evacuation training.

"According to what I've seen, know and heard, is that this section's staff is high-speed, dedicated and determined to provide the best possible training for the students of WHINSEC," said the NCOIC of WHINSEC's Combat Service Support Division, Sgt. 1st Class Nestor A. Ruiz-Trinidad.

The students were put through stressful scenarios that tested the knowledge they learned in previous classes.

"What I'm looking for is real-life stress. Any of my students can carry a litter, and anybody can treat a patient, but when we add the stress effect to a practical exercise like this, it increases the difficulty and forces the students to increase their performance. It can either make or break you. And it's normal for medics, especially combat medics, to work under stressful situations," said Army medic Staff Sgt. Jeffery Feliciano, course director and instructor in CSSD.

Military, police and civilians from different countries in the western hemisphere attend the classes offered at WHINSEC.

"This class right now is very interesting. I would say it's the most diverse group I have taught, because we have officers, enlisted soldiers and civilians, who have experience in the Army, Navy, Air Force, police force and even fire departments," said Feliciano.

It was the first time that WHINSEC had fire fighters in this course.

The fire fighters were from Brazil, and only the second group of Brazilians in the history of WHINSEC.

The new litter evacuation course at W2 was built by the NCOs of CSSD.

"Staff Sgt. Jose A. Munoz and Staff Sgt. Jose Dejesus were in charge with reconning the site to begin building the course," said Feliciano.

Soldiers navigate the new litter obstacle course that is part of WHINSEC's Medical Assistance Course. The litter course was built by the NCOs of WHINSEC's Combat Service Support Division.

"What we were looking for was a natural lane that the terrain gave us. As we walked through, we cleared most of the path of excess branches and built the majority of the course using the natural obstacles we found on our route," said Munoz.

The new obstacle course is full of natural obstacles that provides students with much difficulty.

Zero tolerance for sexual assault

Carmen L. Gleason

WASHINGTON — Sexual assault is a crime that is incompatible with military values and will not be tolerated within the Defense Department, the undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness said Tuesday.

David S.C. Chu kicked off the month-long DoD observance of sexual assault prevention during a ceremony at the Women in the Military for America Memorial at Arlington National Cemetery.

"Sexual assault is devastating to the individuals it victimizes," Chu said. "It weakens trust and creates strife within our units. It undermines the state of readiness of the armed forces as a whole."

Sexual assault is one of the nation's most underreported crimes. National statistics show that an assault occurs every 90 seconds. One in every six women and one in every 33 men will be the victims of rape or attempted rape in their lifetime.

"Sexual assault remains a troubling issue in America," Chu said. "Since the military reflects the society it serves, the issue faces the Department of Defense as well."

This year's DOD campaign is promoting a climate of respect that encourages every service member to join in a cooperative effort to end sexual violence, said Kaye Whitley, director for the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office.

SAPRO is the Defense Department's single point of accountability for sexual assault policy matters. The organization develops policy and programs to improve prevention efforts, enhance victim support and increase offender accountability by collaborating closely with each military branch.

Whitley said the goals of this year's campaign are three-fold: fostering awareness of the impact of sexual assault on victims, encouraging community-wide prevention, and facilitating awareness of the health services to care and support victims.

To create a "climate of confidence," the Defense Department changed reporting options for victims. Beginning in 2005, victims were given an option of restricted or unrestricted reporting.

When filing a restricted report, victims could receive medical care and counseling for assaults without alerting their chain of command or triggering an investigation. DoD officials attribute a 65 percent increase in reporting to this change.

In 2006 there were 756 restricted reports of sexual assault, Chu said. These were victims who might not have come forward under the old policy, he said. After receiving initial medical treatment and counseling, 86 of those changed their reports to unrestricted status, allowing the pursuit of the offender.

DoD officials continue to focus on providing education and training for its more than 1 million active-duty service members. During a worldwide conference held by the department this year, more than 350 troops were trained to be "first responders" for victims on their installations.

"We believe that the numbers of reports will continue to rise because we are changing a culture," Whitley said. "While these numbers make an initial rise, we hope to see a leveling off and eventual elimination of assaults within the department."

Chambliss: Tours MACH

"second to none."

During a press conference in front of Infantry Hall, Chambliss said he expected President Bush to veto the appropriations bill because of the Iraq withdrawal timeline language it contains.

Defense Department officials said if the bill is not passed by April 15, the Army will be forced to delay training and reduce funding for building and equipment repairs, and there will be serious repercussions for deployed service members if the supplemental funding is not approved by May 15.

The Senate is on recess through Monday, and the House is out through April 13. House and Senate negotiators must meet to reconcile the different portions of their respective bills.

"(This delay) will hurt the men and women in theater," Chambliss said.

Chambliss spoke briefly on the troop surge and Gen. David Petraeus being the right man at the right time. Petraeus is the commander of Multi-National Force-Iraq.

Rotations: Keep BCTs in theater through August

The 18th Airborne Corps from Fort Bragg, N.C., will replace the 3rd Corps out of Fort Hood, Texas, as the lead unit for Multinational Corps Iraq in November. The corps headquarters is at Camp Victory outside Baghdad.

The 1st Armored Division headquarters, from Wiesbaden, Germany, will go in to replace the 25th Infantry Division headquarters, Fort Shafter, Hawaii, in August. The 25th Infantry Division headquarters will extend in Iraq for 45 days. The 25th Infantry Division is the headquarters for the Multinational Division

North, based in Contingency Operating Base Speicher, near Tikrit.

The 4th Infantry Division will return to the Iraqi capital, to replace the 1st Cavalry Division as headquarters for Multinational Division Baghdad in September. The 4th served a year as the lead for Multinational Division Baghdad through 2006. The 1st Cavalry will depart on schedule.

The rotations will allow commanders the latitude they need to continue operations in Iraq. They can maintain the level, go down or go up depending on the circumstances, Whitman said.

"What you are seeing here today reflects a decision that will carry the effort of 20 brigade combat teams through August 07," he said.

There will be other decision points for commanders in Iraq over the next few months, he said. There are roughly 1,000 service members apiece in the division headquarters.

A DoD official said today the department regards the dwell break for the two units as significant, and that proposals being worked in DoD would compensate servicemembers who either go back to Iraq early or are extended in the country.

Festival: Honors Airborne

Singlaub will be one of several "real, true" heroes there at the Airborne festival, Lassen said. He hopes to see Thad Selman, Louis Davis and Ben Reese, the last of the original Parachute Test Platoon, a hardy group of young Soldiers who volunteered to be part of the Army's airborne "experiment" in 1940. Of the original 47, there are only three known to survive, Lassen said, and all three live within a short distance of Fort Benning.

Mike Bigalke marvels at the number of heroes he meets each year at the Airborne Festival. He's a "living history artist" from Marengo, Ill., who travels to post every year to attend the event. He wears a 1942 paratrooper's uniform and brings a number of items from his vast collection of World War II-era military memorabilia.

"There's so much history right down here. There are so many heroes," said Bigalke, who admits he gets "just a little bit nervous" when he brings his show to Fort Benning.

You see, Bigalke was born in 1947, at the tail end of World War II. He grew up on a steady diet of war stories from his dad who served with the Seabees. Bigalke and his twin brother always assumed they'd get their chance to serve. But when it came their time to go — during the Vietnam War — they were turned away time after time for medical reasons. Four times Bigalke tried to enlist. Four times he was sent home.

"I didn't go to college or Canada, and I still didn't get to serve," he said. "Everybody said we were the lucky ones, but I didn't feel so lucky."

Bigalke couldn't serve in the traditional sense, but he likes to think he serves the men he most admires — the paratroopers of World War II — by sharing their stories. He participates in re-enactments, meets with civic groups and speaks to schoolchildren about the history of the American paratrooper.

But when he comes to Benning, Bigalke said, he's in the presence of subject matter experts.

"I want to get it right, because they've been there and done that, and I never have," he said. "It's a little bit intimidating."

But the veterans, they're always gracious and kind and thrilled to see him, Bigalke said. They get a kick out of seeing him wear the uniform they once wore. And mostly, they're just pleased as punch to know somebody still cares about the sacrifices they made.

Like Lassen, Bigalke said he hopes to see a crowd of people who still care about the sacrifices of our veterans. The Airborne Awards ceremony is open to the public. The event starts at 9:30 a.m. Thursday on Eubanks Field. The Airborne 5000 will be followed by a Silver Wings demonstration, weather permitting. Then guests will move to the Airborne Walk for the memorial and wreath-laying ceremony.

For more information about the festival, call Lassen at 770-478-5301.

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

NCAA b-ball champs

Florida routed Ohio State in the men's NCAA basketball championship game, 84-75, for their second straight title April 2.

Florida was the first team to repeat in 15 years. Duke did it back in 1991 and 1992.

In the women's championship game April 3, the Tennessee Lady Vols ended a nine-year drought to capture their seventh national title. They beat Rutgers, 69-46.

Former Grambling coach Robinson dies

Eddie Robinson, 88, died Tuesday.

Robinson began coaching football at Grambling State University in 1941. He won his 400th game in 1995, and sent more than 200 players to the NFL. He resigned in 1997 after a third straight losing season. His final record as a coach was 409-165-15.

MLB in full swing

The major league baseball season kicked off Sunday with the season's national league winners New York Mets beating the reigning World Series champion St. Louis Cardinals.

Fox brings baseball back early this year, starting Saturday. Check local listings for games.

Tiger goes for fifth green jacket

The Masters golf tournament began Thursday and continues through Sunday at Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Ga.

Tiger Woods is seeking his fifth win and defending champion Phil Mickelson is going for his third win.

Coverage will be on CBS at 3:30 to 7 p.m. Saturday and final round coverage is 2:30 to 7 p.m. Sunday.

It's picking Tiger to win, of course, just from his strong showing in the past few tournaments he's played and won.

Johnson wins at Martinsville

Jimmie Johnson won his third race of the season Sunday at NASCAR's oldest and shortest track, Martinsville Speedway.

Johnson's victory teammate Jeff Gordon is the last 50 laps for the race. Gordon has won seven times at Martinsville.

Gordon retained the points lead with 906 points, followed by Jeff Burton at 898 and Jimmie Johnson is third with 906. Matt Kenseth and Kyle Busch round out the top five.

There is no race this weekend because of Easter, but Nextel Cup action returns April 15 at Texas Motor Speedway.

Commish lays down law

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell will soon enact a lifetime ban from football for players involved in serious criminal activity.

I'm all for it. You do the crime, you do the time.

Parker shoots personal best in World Cup

Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker takes aim at his target. Parker shot a personal best with a score of 1,180 Tuesday in the Men's 3x40 elimination match for Men's 50-Meter Rifle Competition, which was two points shy of the world record.

"This has been a great experience to compete in front of my home crowd," said Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker of the Army Marksmanship Unit.

Parker is one of several Soldiers who competed in the 2007 International Federation Rifle and Pistol World Cup USA this week at Fort Benning.

The competition, which featured 524 athletes from 65 nations, was the largest World Cup event ever held in the United States.

Parker shot a personal best with a score of 1,180 Tuesday in the Men's 3x40 elimination match for Men's 50-Meter Rifle Competition, which was two points off the world record.

Parker, a husband and father of two, has been shooting in the international style for nearly 18 years.

"My dad used to shoot competitively, and I used to like to hunt and shoot as a kid with him," Parker said.

After competing nationally as a high school student, Parker received a scholarship to the Xavier University in Cincinnati, where he honed his skills.

"Many people want to get in shape, and they don't know the correct way. That's where we come in," said Nancy Machado, a personal trainer at Fort Benning.

The personal trainers on post know about proper strength and cardiovascular training techniques, nutrition, and maintaining a healthy lifestyle, said Lori Smith, the fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

"Some people need professional advice when training for events, Ranger school or OCS, increasing PT scores, or simply losing weight," Smith said.

Machado, also a competitive bodybuilder, has been a personal trainer for more than a year. She puts emphasis on having knowledgeable guidance to help achieve fitness goals.

"A lot of people don't know the proper way to do things in terms of exercising," Machado said. "They hit the ground running and then hit a plateau and get frustrated."

Sport stacking

Fort Benning schoolchildren competed in the sixth Annual Sport Stacking Tournament at the Youth Activities Center Gym March 28.

"Sport stacking is a very captivating activity. The first time students try it, they are hooked," said Gail Wilson.

"Not only is this activity incredibly fun, but its impact on the brain and body connection is immense. Students that typically have a hard time paying attention are completely focused during the various stacking activities," Wilson said.

Activities where children cross the midline, manipulate objects with their hands and are physically active can enhance the potential to learn according to research published by Hart, M.A., Smith, L.A., & DeChant.

"Sport stacking is an activity that levels the playing field between the athletically inclined students and the non-athletes. Students work diligently to progress, to become faster and more proficient. It also allows kids to be competitive in a cooperative and constructive manner," Wilson said.

Gators won, of course

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

Are we all experiencing déjà vu at the same time? I could have sworn I just watched Florida celebrate at Ohio State's expense.

Atlanta was even more alive this weekend than usual. Ebay and pound-the-pavement ticket scalpers had a field day, making ridiculous amounts of moolah off the hottest ticket in town.

I'm just mad I couldn't see the big show from the nosebleeds without fronting my limbs for payment.

The Gators took home the spoils in b-ball for the second straight year with the same starting five, a first in NCAA history.

They reigned in both major college sports, football and basketball, and defeated Ohio State for both titles.

Speaking of the Buckeyes, they have nothing to sulk about. Well, almost nothing. They have the best prospect at the center position since Shaq was at LSU.

Greg Oden, the freshman in a seasoned vet's body (with a beard to boot) is an absolute beast. I'm telling you right now, the NBA and it's conglomerate of lousy centers is in trouble if Oden enters the draft this year.

Unfortunately, no single beast can crush an army, which was why the Buckeyes had no chance of getting their first title in 40 years.

In the first half, Florida's Corey Brewer showed why he is one of the most unique talents in college ball. He can cover just about every position on the floor defensively. As fast as Ohio State's Mike Conley Jr. is, Brewer stayed in front of him during play sets and kept the Ohio State bigs, with the exception of Oden, from establishing any post presence.

Conley Jr. had arguably the best tournament of any single player but was relegated to a quiet and ineffective 20-points Monday night. When your team's number two option is a non-factor, you can pretty much count on taking an L.

But Florida's flamboyant leader, Joakim Noah, had a dismal performance as well, with only eight points and three boards. This proves how outmatched Ohio State was. When the opposition's top player stays under 10 points, your chances are slim to none.

The Gators' Al Horford had a monster night with 18 points, 12 rebounds, three assists, and two blocks.

When all was said and done, this game was won and lost behind the arc. Ohio couldn't buy a bucket from anywhere beyond two feet. They hit only four threes out of 24 attempts, two of which came during garbage time.

Anyone who follows these two teams knows that if the Buckeyes had an iceberg's chance in Georgia, they would have to take and make threes by the boatload. Ron Lewis would have to be fabulous behind the arc, and it didn't happen.

To make matters worse for Ohio State, Florida, led by a shooting onslaught from Lee Humphrey, hit almost as many threes as the Buckeyes missed.

This was a David and Goliath match, but it was more David Schwimmer or David Spade than the biblical figure.

Florida is the truth all the way around. They play unselfish team ball and have done so for the last few seasons behind the tutelage of reinvigorated head coach Billy Donovan.

I admit that I wanted the underdog to win. So much for that. The dog was more than under; it was buried.

All in all, this was a great tournament and the best team did win.

So was the game actually déjà vu? Nah, it was more like fate.

The Wheels to Heel Bike Event will be held April 15.

The bike ride, which is a part of the 2007 Celebrity Classic sponsored by Columbus Regional, will start and end at the Civic Center.

"This is a big event for bike riders in the area," said Bryan Norris, the fundraising manager at Columbus Regional medical foundation.

"We try to create an experience for the riders," Norris said.

Participants have the option of choosing from the 20-, 40-, 62- or 100-mile courses.

The event attracts a lot of participation in the area, Norris said.

"Anyone and everyone is invited to enter the ride," he said. "The ride can be done by people of all fitness levels."

Invited guests, the Bike Ride Across Georgia's Dream Team, will be riding several courses as training for new students joining the BRAG team.

Members of Columbus Regional will be posted in rest areas to provide support for riders during the event.

"If a cyclist goes down with a flat, has problems with his bike, or needs food or water, we try to assist them in any way that we can," Norris said.

Riders are required to bring their own equipment, including headgear.

The 40-, 62- and 100-mile courses will go through Fort Benning.

"We have a lot of Soldiers that participate," Norris said. "We even have a 10 man team signed up from Fort Benning."

Upon completing the race, riders will be given a gift bag, which includes a T-shirt, a microfiber towel, first-aid kit, water bottle and a lense cleaner cloth for riding goggles.

The race will start at 8 a.m. and last until the last rider finishes. Panera Bread will provide breakfast and Country's Barbecue will provide lunch after the race, both in the Civic Center.

Fee to enter is $55 early registration, $60 day of the race and $45 for military.

All of the proceeds from the ride will go to the John B. Amos Cancer Center. For more information or to register, visit www.columbusregional.com/classic.

NASCAR News

Johnson outraces Gordon for win

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

Jimmie Johnson continued the Hendrick Motorsports win streak with his third win of the NASCAR season, and the 26th of his career. He maintained his dominance on the track at Martinsville Speedway Sunday, holding off teammate Jeff Gordon.

Gordon is trying to tie Dale Earnhardt, whose 76 career wins makes him sixth on the list of winningest drivers. Gordon has been winless in the last 24 races, which should please a lot of Earnhardt fans. Had his life not been cut short, Earnhardt would no doubt lead Gordon by many more wins.

The Car of Tomorrow seemed to work a lot better this week for most drivers. Kyle Busch, who won the first CoT race March 25 at Bristol and made no attempt to hide his disdain of the CoT, finished in fourth place. Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s beginning of the season was dismal, but managed a fourth-place finish at Martinsville, and even led 137 laps before a band of showers forced a rain delay.

After the track was dried, Johnson and pole-sitter Denny

Hamlin, who led 125 laps during the race, headed to the pits, which would prove beneficial when a caution came out with about 125 laps left. Busch led when the green flag came back out, and Johnson passed him a few laps later. He held the lead for the rest of the race.

Gordon gave his best effort to pass Johnson for the rest of the 53 laps, but never managed to pass. He blamed the aero push of the CoT, which means there isn't enough downforce on the front section of the car to get it to grip and get a line. He also said how hard it was with the way Johnson was blocking him. Johnson's lucky Gordon is his teammate, because there's no doubt in my mind that Gordon would have used every trick up his sleeve to push anyone else out of his way for the checkered flag.

The CoT provided a scary minute for Kevin Harvick, when the protective foam in his right door panel caught fire. Harvick had to climb out of his car because the wires on his in-car camera caught fire. The foam will catch fire if not properly installed or from intense heat from the tail pipe if the metal was too thin. Good thing they caught that early and no one got seriously injured.

Johnson proved why he is the reigning Nextel Cup champion. He's the person to beat this season, and there's no reason to think he won't be a top contender when it comes to the Chase this fall.

GINNRACING.COM

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — U.S. Army driver Regan Smith completed another successful mission.

In only his second career Nextel Cup start, Smith claimed a 26th-place result Sunday at Martinsville Speedway. And more important than the result, the 23-year-old driver finished the race as he did last week at Bristol Motor Speedway.

"When your first two Cup starts are at Bristol and Martinsville — probably two of the hardest tracks for any rookie — and you stay out of trouble and finish both races you need to take a deep breath and say, 'not bad,'" said crew chief Ryan Pemberton. "It's all about gaining experience for Regan and that's exactly what he did the past two weeks."

"Obviously we would have liked to have finished better, but we didn't make any big mistakes and we learned plenty about each other. It's a work in progress and we're heading in the right direction."

Smith also gave a candid assessment of his first two Cup races.

"I'm going through an adjustment period right now," said Smith.

"Just getting used to these Cup races and how these guys race are things I am still learning. I know it will get better with time and experience."

"But when you look at the big picture, you want to finish the race, you want to get experience and you want to earn respect," said Smith, who finished 25th at Bristol last week. "We have done that. I might not have been as aggressive as I would have liked to have been the last two races, but at the same time the objective was to finish the races and gain experience."

Smith, who shares the 01 U.S. Army Chevrolet ride with Mark Martin, said he was happy about the way the 01 team rallied back Sunday after a slow start on the half-mile flat track.

"I wish we had another 100 laps," Smith said.

"We were at our best at the end. We weren't quite as good in the beginning and that cost us. We're all learning. I'm a rookie and the guys are doing a good job putting up with me until I get more experience. Like our Soldiers, we never gave up or let anything get us down. We work as a team and battle through whatever adversity we face."

Smith, who raced on NASCAR's two shortest tracks the past two weeks, will make his next Cup start at the circuit's biggest track — the 2.66-mile Talladega (Ala.) Superspeedway on April 29.

"It doesn't get any easier, but I can't wait to get back with these guys and drive the Soldiers' car," Smith said.

The 01 Army team will have Easter weekend off and resume action April 15 at Texas Motor Speedway. Martin, who drove the Army car at the first four races, will pilot the 01 Chevy in Texas.

Sampey takes first win of season

U.S. ARMY RACING TEAM

BAYTOWN, Texas — U.S. Army Pro Stock Motorcycle rider Angelle Sampey captured her first race of the 2007 season Sunday in the O'Reilly Spring Nationals at Houston Raceway Park.

For Sampey, who set the national elapsed time record two weeks ago in Gainesville, Fla., this was her second straight O'Reilly Spring Nationals event title.

"And, it feels great," said Sampey after beating Craig Treble in the finals with a 7.046-second pass at 188.91 mph. "Of course, any time we win it's for all our Soldiers. If it wasn't for them, we wouldn't be doing this."

Coming out of the second starting spot, Sampey had to take care of Shawn Gann, Peggy Llewellyn and Tom Bradford before meeting Treble.

"It's never easy winning these races," she said. "I'm just happy for the entire U.S. Army team today."

With her 41st career victory, Sampey also moved closer to passing the late Dave Schultz on the all-time Pro Stock Motorcycle victory list. She needs five more wins to take the lead. Sampey's fellow Army motorcyclist, Antron Brown, recorded a red light foul in a second round loss.

Top Fuel — Tony "The Sarge" Schumacher lost a close first round match up with Brandon Bernstein. Schumacher, who had qualified fifth, posted a quicker 4.540-second pass than Brandon Bernstein's 4.553-second run in the opening round, but Bernstein was first off the line, .034-seconds to Schumacher's .065-seconds, and subsequently, first at the finish line.

"That's a tough one," Schumacher said. "I thought my reaction time to the green light was pretty good, but he was clearly a lot better. You have to tip your hat to his team."

"It's a battle every weekend in this series," he said. "Like I've said before, you better bring your best effort to the track on race day if you want to win. We'll just pick up from here and move forward. Failure is never an option for this U.S. Army team."

Schumacher will next head for Las Vegas Motor Speedway April 12-15 for the SummitRacing.com Nationals, while Sampey and Brown will join Schumacher at the Summit Racing Equipment Southern Nationals at Atlanta Dragway, April 26-29, in Commerce, Ga.

Parker: Ranked second in the nation, 13th in world

Soon after, he was recruited by the AMU to represent Fort Benning. He has been here for 10 years.

Parker is currently ranked second in the nation behind USA Shooting teammate Matt Emmons, and is also ranked 13th in the world.

"In competitive sports, your goal is always trying to be the best that you can be," he said.

"You give up some things and you spend a lot of time practicing, but it is all worth it.

Parker said that the highlight of his career was his fifth place finish in the 2000 Olympic games in Sydney, Australia, as well as an eighth place finish in the 2004 games in Athens, Greece.

"The experiences at the Olympics were amazing," Parker said.

"There is nothing like walking into the stadium during the opening ceremony.

"Just being around the athletes in the Olympic village just gives you chills," he said. "You are truly among the best."

He plans to return to the Olympics in 2008 with hopes of getting a medal.

He has also won several world championships, has set four world records in shooting events, won six World Cup gold medals and a couple of national championships.

"He is a world-class Soldier, shooter, father, husband and friend," said Sgt. 1st Class Michael Moore, NCOIC of the International Rifle Team.

"Jason is a true team player and an outstanding person as a whole."

Parker said he admires the contributions of several famous athletes, including Tiger Woods, Michael Jordan, Cal Ripken Jr. and Muhammed Ali. He said their achievements serve as inspiration to him.

"They are heroes to me because of each of their approaches to their chosen sport," he said.

Parker also credits Emmons, as well as members of the AMU, as inspiration.

—Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker

"To be able to shoot alongside the best shooters in the country pushes me to become as good as I can be," said Parker, who is also the shooting instructor for the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Club.

Parker also works with the Northside High School shooting team, which has been the state champions for three years in a row.

"Georgia is a competitive state for shooting and it's continuing to grow," he said.

Parker said that although shooting is less physically demanding than some sports, it requires discipline, patience and concentration. "If you get distracted while shooting, you have to quickly snap out of it," he said. "That's why I will easily shoot six hours at a time to keep up my endurance. It's all about staying mentally focused."

Trainers: Available on post for one-on-one consultation

One of the major advantages of having a personal trainer is the motivation that a client gets after being pushed to work harder, Smith said.

"My goal is to be more toned and fit," said 1st Lt. Kimberly Cowlin of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, who has been training with Machado.

"I want to compete in local bodybuilding competitions and with the help of my trainer, I can do what I wouldn't be able to do alone."

Machado said she gets great satisfaction in seeing peoples' bodies change.

"Because it ultimately changes their lives," she said.

“... it ultimately changes their lives. I love what I do, and more importantly, I love what I can do for my clients.”

"I love what I do, and more importantly, what I can do for my clients."

Hiring a personal trainer is a good strategy for people of all ages and genders, Machado said.

"Proper fitness is for everyone," she said. "I've had clients in their 20s, and I've had a client that was 90 years old."

Machado said many people that have trained for years still don't use proper form.

"So many people read the popular fitness magazines and read bad information."

"You want to preserve your joints, because when you get older it gets harder," she said. She also recommends checking on the credentials of a trainer before hiring one.

All the personal trainers here at Fort Benning are certified nationally, CPR certified and insured. They specialize in nutrition, working with people with specific problems like cancer and heart disease, and using alternative fitness methods like kickboxing.

— Nancy Machado, personal trainer

Trainers at Fort Benning provide new clients with an initial consultation, which includes an overall fitness assessment, body fat measurements and heart rate and blood pressure reading for $40.

Personal trainers are available for individual and group sessions and fitness consultations. Each training session is for one hour.

The weekly rate is $40 for one day per week, $70 for two days, and $90 for three days.

Monthly rates are $140 for one day per week, $240 for two days, and $300 for three days.

For more information, stop by one of the MWR fitness facilities or call 706-545-0248 or 706-545-4300.

Army wins sixth consecutive Armed Forces wrestling crown

Gold medalists qualified to represent U.S. Armed Forces in Military World Games

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Tim Hipps

FORT CARSON, Colo. — Capt. Eric Albarracin won all six of his Greco-Roman and freestyle matches to lead the All-Army wrestling team to its sixth consecutive Armed Forces Wrestling Championship March 23-24.

Albarracin opened each session of the two-day tournament with victories in the 121-pound weight class that sparked the Army squad to triumphs over the Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps.

"I wanted to be the sparkplug, but the whole team stepped up," said Albarracin, an Individual Readiness Training instructor who won gold medals in both disciplines.

"The team got me ready, and I wanted to do it for the team and the Army. Wrestling is wrestling, and you've just got to be a warrior," Albarracin said.

Four wrestlers in the Army World Class Athlete Program also won gold medals in Greco-Roman competition: Staff Sgt. Marcel Cooper, the reigning U.S. National champion at 145.5 pounds; Staff Sgt. Keith Sieracki, the 2006 U.S. National silver medalist at 163 pounds; Capt. Phillip Johnston at 211.5 pounds; and Staff Sgt. Dremiel Byers, a six-time national champion and 2002 world champ at 264.5 pounds.

Five other WCAP Soldiers struck gold in freestyle: Sgt. Josh Habeck at 132 pounds; Sgt. Glenn Garrison at 145.5; 2nd Lt. Phillip Simpson at 163; Sgt. Brad Ahearn at 211.5; and Spc. Timothy Taylor at 264.5. All of the Army WCAP wrestlers are stationed at Fort Carson.

The gold medalists in this tournament qualified to represent the U.S. Armed Forces in the 4th CISM Military World Games, scheduled for Oct. 14 through 21 in Hyderabad, India. If any of the champions can't make the trip, silver or bronze medalists will fill their roster spots. All-Navy coach Rob Hermann will lead the U.S. contingent. Marine Corps Maj. Dan Hicks will serve as assistant coach.

Armed Forces gold medalists Marine Corps

Capt. Eric Albarracin goes heels over head during a 6-0, 6-0 victory against Marine Corps Cpl. Andrew Hogan in a 121-pound freestyle match at the 2007 Armed Forces Wrestling Championships at Fort Carson, Colo. Albarracin won gold medals in both freestyle and Greco-Roman competition. Hogan won the silver medal in freestyle.

Sgt. Jeremy McLean of Okinawa, Japan, at 132 pounds; and Marine Corps Sgt. Jacob Clark of Cherry Point, N.C., at 185 pounds, completed the Greco-Roman roster for the Military World Games.

Clark also won the 185-pound freestyle division. Rather than wrestle both disciplines in the World Military Games, Clark deferred his freestyle spot to Army Pfc. Willie Parks.

Albarracin, the other Armed Forces double-winner, will wrestle freestyle in the CISM Games, allowing Capt. Anthony Brooker of E.E. Warren Air Force Base, Wyo., to compete in the 121-pound freestyle division.

The Marine Corps finished second in the Armed Forces team standings in both wrestling styles, followed by Air Force and Navy, respectively. But the weekend belonged to the host All-Army team.

"The Armed Forces Championships is probably one of the toughest little tournaments in the nation just because we're rivals," Albarracin said.

"Whether he's 0-10 or 10-0, the guy you're going against is coming after you. It's just like the Army-Navy football game," he said.

Albarracin posted two victories in as many days over rival Brooker, and later deferred a World Military Games roster spot to the Air Force captain, who will be Albarracin's teammate in October.

Two-time Armed Forces champion Army 2nd Lt. Philip Simpson pinned Senior Airman Peter Hicks in 54 seconds and pinned Marine Corps Capt. Juan Ramos in 22 seconds in the 163-pound freestyle division. Simpson won his other match by technical fall against Navy Lt. Peter Butville, 6-0, 8-2.

"My game plan was pretty much the same in every match," said Simpson, 24, a three-time NCAA Division I All-American at the United States Military Academy in West Point, N.Y.

"I wanted to go out there and start the attack and look to go ahead and control the tempo," Simpson said.

"This tournament is very different from what we do throughout the year. It's a lot like college and high school, where you have dual team matches. It brings us back to that team atmosphere and it's so much fun because we build and feed off each other's energy. And when somebody loses, it feels like the whole team lost.

"It's an amazing tournament with a lot of pride on the line," Simpson said.

Rifle and Pistol World Cup continues through Saturday at post ranges

USA rifle shooters make finals but miss medals in third day of cup

USA SHOOTING & U.S. ARMY MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

Olympic champion Matt Emmons and U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit athlete Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker both narrowly missed the medals podium April 4 in the Men's Three-Position Rifle competition at the International Shooting Sports Federation Rifle and Pistol World Cup at the Pool International Shooting Complex.

Emmons shot a total of 1271.3, just three-tenths of a point from the bronze medal.

His finals string was low, shooting a 9.2, 9.1 in the first two shots.

In the seventh shot he dropped an 8.3, which sealed his fourth place fate.

Parker fired an 1172 to secure a place in the finals, but the qualification score is what kept him from the medals stand. In the finals he scored 98.4, but was unable to make up the 2 point deficit between himself and the ultimate medalists.

Maj. Michael E. Anti of the USAMU finished in 24th place.

Artem Khadjibekov of Russia took the gold medal, Zhanbo Jia of China finished with the silver medal and Artur Aivazian of Ukraine got the bronze.

Jamie Beyerle was the top riflewoman for the U.S. in the Women's Three-Position Sport Rifle competition. Her total score in the qualification was 575 points, to land her in 23rd place. Abigail Fong was in 25th after shooting a 574, and new U.S. National Development Team addition Amanda Furrer landed in 41st place.

Sonja Pfeilschifter of Germany won the gold medal, Wen Yin of China got the silver medal and Barbara Lechner of Germany received the bronze.

China leads the World Cup with six medals. Russia and Germany both have three and the USA has two. The Czech Republic, Poland, Belarus and Ukraine all have one each. To access competition results, photos and daily updates visit www.usashooting.org.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is hosting the International Shooting Sport Federation Rifle and Pistol World Cup USA through Saturday at the USAMU ranges off Dixie Road by USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports.

Study looks at effects of deployment on kids

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Rachel Young

FORT LEWIS, Wash. — Deployments are hard for Soldiers, spouses and children, alike. But there is little data to show exactly how children are affected. Dr. Eric Flake's study, Deployment Effects Children, is designed to find that out.

Since the Iraq war began in 2003, Col. Beth Ellen Davis, head of development in pediatrics at Madigan Army Medical Center at Fort Lewis, Wash., has tried several methods to help military families deal with deployments. Efforts included establishing a hotline, a Web site and an outreach team.

No one called the hotline, Davis said, and nothing much came of the Web site. But it was clear to Davis that the issues facing families of deployed Soldiers were not going away. So in the summer of 2005, when Flake, developmental pediatrics fellow arrived at MAMC, he began his study. He designed a questionnaire to measure stress overall, parenting stress and child symptoms.

This research is crucial, Davis said, because there are things about this war that make the experience of deployment different for military families.

"We have more Soldiers who are married with kids than ever before," Davis said. "This is new to the military."

The Internet and 24-hour news cycles also present challenges that weren't present during previous conflicts. Children are inundated with information about the war.

"Seventy bombs a day are going off in Iraq — what does a 7-year-old do with that information?" Davis said.

Pediatricians need to be able to recognize "red flags" that might indicate a need for intervention, Flake said. Deployment Effects Children is designed to help them identify those red flags.

And it isn't only military pediatricians who need this information. Davis said 30 percent of families go home during deployments. If home is not near a military hospital, they seek help from a civilian doctor.

"All pediatricians, not just military pediatricians, take care of kids (whose parents) are deployed, and they don't know exactly how to recognize and respond to events of deployment," Davis said.

Flake hopes to finish his research by May. To collect data, he asks parents of school-aged children, ages 5 to 12, who are currently experiencing a deployment, to fill out a questionnaire. He hopes to collect 300 questionnaires.

The American Academy of Pediatrics will use the information to create a toolkit for service providers to help children deal with the issues that go along with deployment, Davis noted.

Dog owners in the Fort Benning community will soon have a place to take their pets for play and socialization. A dog park is under construction near the intersection of Edwards and Carpenter streets, behind Faith Middle School.

"This is a first for a military installation as far as I can tell," said James Shoemaker, manager at Fort Benning's Outdoor Recreation. Several installations have dog parks close by, but none have one on the installation.

Fort Benning's Eagle Scout Troop 27 did most of the work on the dog park. Senior patrol leader Ian Walker, son of Laura and Command Sgt. Maj. Matt Walker of the Ranger Training Brigade, See Park, C7

Columbus JROTC cadets put their confidence, trust to the test at the Warrior Training Center

Alyssa Hall is thinking about a career in the Army as a journalist. She loves to take pictures, she's naturally inquisitive and she's drawn to all things military. She thinks a career as an Army photojournalist just makes sense.

"I've always loved to write and take pictures, and I like to reflect on where I've been and what I've done," Hall said. "Now I realize it's not just me — I like to capture those moments for other people too, to share their stories about where they've been and what they've done."

With more than a year to go before she can seriously consider enlisting, the Columbus High sophomore enjoys practicing her journalism skills with the school's JROTC. As the program's public affairs officer, it's Hall's job to record and report on cadet activities, like the March 30 field trip to Fort Benning, where they put their confidence to the test on the Warrior Training Center's obstacle course.

Friday, Hall put down her camera long enough to tackle the course with 50 of her fellow cadets.

"Today I want to be on the scene, not behind the scene. This is just too much fun," she said after completing "the weaver," a pyramid-shaped obstacle constructed from evenly spaced parallel beams. The cadets were challenged to weave over and under the beams up to the summit and down the other side.

Most of the obstacles were physically challenging, but some were downright daunting, Hall said, particularly "the skyscraper,” a tower constructed of platforms. The cadets, working in teams, reached the top of the tower by hoisting and pulling each other up from one platform to the next.

“That was the hardest. It felt like we were five million feet in the air,” Hall said. “It was hard being able to trust each other to pull you up without dropping you.”

And that was the purpose of the field trip, said Command Sgt. Maj. Richard Pimental, who has worked with the Columbus JROTC for 15 years.

“It’s about teaching them to work together as a team,” he said. “They have to trust each other and motivate each other.”

Not a problem for 2nd Lt. Chris McGhee, a sophomore in his second year as a cadet. The former middle school cheerleader motivated his cohorts from the sidelines.

“Come on, come on, come on. You can do it,” he yelled. “You gotta be motivated. Are you motivated?”

McGhee said he was drawn to JROTC because he liked the idea of marching and drilling. “But I learned it’s more than that. It’s life skills,” he said. “You learn things you don’t get in other classes, things that will help in real life. You learn to think on your feet. You learn to be a leader.”

Capt. Natasha Firzpatrick eyes the challenge ahead as she starts the rope bridge obstacle.

The weaver is a pyramid-shaped obstacle constructed from evenly spaced parallel beams. The cadets had to weave over and under the beams to the summit and down the other side.

REFLECTIONS

Celebrate “little Easter” every Sunday

192ND INFANTRY REGIMENT
Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Michael J. Cerrone III

“Be holy, as the Lord your God is holy.” This exhortation by Moses to the ancient Israelites has been continuously reaffirmed to the Christian people by Simon Peter, the Apostles, and succeeding church leaders through the ages: “Be holy in every aspect of your conduct.”

The Judeo-Christian tradition calls those who faithfully follow the one true God and live by his word and his spirit, a holy people, a people set apart for the praise and glory of God.

Moreover, people can become holy only by the sanctifying graces of God; and we refer to those individuals distinguished by their likeness to the holy God as “saints.”

But we, the people of God, cannot become saints without acknowledging that we are sinners, unless we renounce, repent and confess our sins. Seeing our humble, contrite hearts, God is then pleased to give us his mercies and graces for our souls.

The personal God even desires to dwell among and within his people, giving us eternal life by sharing his own divine nature with us.

Isaiah’s prophecies from ancient Hebrew times envisioned the messiah (the Christ) of God being revealed to God’s people by two amazing signs: first, “the virgin shall be with child” and then, the “suffering servant” would save the people from their sins (the sign of the cross).

Christian faith thus believes that “the word of God became flesh and dwelled among us.”

The incarnation of the divine son of God as the Jewish man Christ Jesus, born of the Virgin Mary, has totally transformed human nature and human history.

When divinity and humanity united, the eternal one entered a human time zone “until the end of time.”

The natural life and death cycles of human beings, animals and plants, and the changing features of our natural world, solar system and universe are now understood from the supernatural faith perspective of God, at work among us until the “end times.”

Time itself becomes sacred for those aware of God’s presence during holy hours and holy days, holy weeks and months and even holy years.

From that first coming (Advent) of the messiah into our world, Christian historians have measured time in terms of years Before Christ (B.C.) and ever afterwards until this “year of the Lord” (Anno Domini) A.D. 2007.

Christians use the 40-day season of Lent to “decontaminate” ourselves from sin as Pope Benedict XVI said on Ash Wednesday, and to purify our souls with God’s good graces in the sacraments.

Then we move into Holy Week, the most solemn time of the entire Christian liturgical year.

On Palm and Passion Sunday, we hear Gospels describing the people’s initial enthusiasm for the messiah and then their rejection of him during his passion and death on the cross.

Holy Thursday we celebrated the Lord’s Supper and his sacramental presence as the Paschal lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world.

On Good Friday, the day Christ died at the holy hour of three in the afternoon, we remember his merciful love for us.

His seven last words were words of prayer to God, words of consolation to his loved ones, and these words of hope to the repentant sinner, “This day you will be with me in paradise.”

A dying sinner became a living saint by the very word of God; Christ began the communion of saints.

Finally, we culminate the holiest three days (sacred triduum) of the holiest week of the Christian liturgical year with the Saturday night vigil and Sunday morning liturgies of the resurrection of our Lord.

“Rejoice, heavenly choirs! Sing, choirs of angels, Jesus Christ is risen from the dead! Christ is risen from the dead!”

“By death he conquered death and to those in the graves he granted life!”

The exultant proclamation of the Roman liturgy and the chants of the Byzantine liturgy herald it; Christians east and west, north and south, around the world (and in outer space) proclaim it; Christians everywhere now celebrate every Sunday of every week as a “little Easter,” our holy day, the Lord’s day of resurrection.

Children are gift from the Lord

Parents cannot afford to live self-centered lives

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Bud Rupel

Abraham Lincoln said, “A child is a person who is going to carry on what you started ... he will assume control of your cities, states and nations. He is going to move in and take over your churches, schools, universities, and corporations ... the fate of humanity is in his hands.”

America, more than ever, needs godly parents instilling godly values in its children. Dennis Rainey, in his book One Home at a Time, wrote, “The home is the best place for a child to learn about God ... our best hope for renewal lies in the restoration of godly home.”

God places great value in children and parenting is a lofty and honorable calling. Parenting should not be left up to someone else other than the parents. It is not the school’s responsibility, nor the day care centers or the local church.

For many parents, children are not a gift, but a burden. That is why I challenge all parents to commit themselves to making their family a higher priority than a career.

There is no job worth losing one’s family over. If the job becomes so demanding that it consistently takes you away from your family, then it is time to find another job.

Unfortunately, we have created a cultural climate in America that wars against the family and the home. If you chose or have chosen to be a parent, then be one.

Be willing to spend time with your child and give him or her top priority. Father Patrick W. Egan said, “We in the ‘me generation’ need to hear a little less about self-fulfillment and little more about self-denial.”

“Perhaps denial and sacrificial love is the ultimate key to fulfillment.” America can no longer afford to live self-centered lives. If we are ever to reclaim our children, there must be a spiritual renewal in our land, because a nation that excludes God is headed for disaster.

A child ... is going to carry on what you started ... he will assume control of your cities, states and nations. The fate of humanity is in his hands.

— Abraham Lincoln

A man uses 10K words while a woman uses 20K

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Do you know anyone like this? The husband comes home after work. His wife greets him at the door. "Hi honey, how was your day?" And he replies, "OK," a deep enlightening response. "Well, what happened," she asks. To which he says, "Nothing, just the normal stuff." The wife has made several attempts to engage her husband in conversation, and unfortunately, most couples are not aware of the dynamics of what is going on between them.

Who typically needs to have conversation more, a man or a woman? Ding, ding ding, you got it, it is not the man! One relationship expert informed us that, on average, a man uses about 10,000 words a day, but a woman typically uses about 20,000 words a day. That being said, does it give a little more insight to the conversation we read above?

When a man goes to work for eight hours a day, he normally uses his 10,000 words before he leaves work, so when he comes home, is he feeling like talking much? No. He used his daily allotment of words. When he comes home, his wife, if she works outside the home, may have gotten out 10,000 and has 10,000 to go! Imagine if she stays home with the kids. She probably has at least 15,000 more to go, and she is just getting warmed up. Problems occur when we are not in tune to these dynamics.

Sometimes we fail to understand that conversation is an emotional need for our spouses. Conversation is not just talking, it is more than that. Good conversation, to be meaningful and meet the emotional need, as defined by Willard Harley, is characterized by the following:

- to get to know each other better, by informing each other,
- it focuses on topics of mutual interest
- it is balanced, meaning both spouses have an equal opportunity to talk, and

- both give each other undivided attention.

Guys, this means listening with the TV, game, or computer off or at least looking at your spouse while she is talking.

The emotional need for conversation is not met when demands are made, disrespect is shown, when we are angry at one another or we rehash mistakes. When we talk to each other using these negative patterns, it may be worse than not talking at all, because we can do more damage than good.

If this is your normal pattern of communication or you are feeling stuck in your relationship, give us a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 706-545-1760, or stop by 2606 Dixie Road in Soldiers' Plaza to speak with one of our trained pastoral counselors.

Most men, during the courtship period, fulfill a woman's emotional need of conversation. They seek every opportunity to learn more about each other. Your spouse believed you would continue to fulfill this need. You married with the expectation that your spouse would continue to meet this need.

The good news is you can make a conscience effort to meet the need of conversation and move toward a fulfilling marriage.

Park: Open to dogs registered at Fort Benning Vet Clinic

was looking for a project for his Eagle Scout Troop and came across the dog park idea.

"I figured it would be a really good thing to do for the community," Walker said. "It'll be a nice place you can bring your dog."

People can't let their dogs run loose anywhere right now, he said, but that will soon change.

"It's perfect. It has plenty of room for big dogs and an area for small dogs," said Walker, who has two dogs and plans on using the park when it is completed.

The park is a great place to socialize dogs because it is neutral territory, Shoemaker said. The dogs won't be territorial or think of the park as their space, so fighting and aggression shouldn't be a problem.

Former Soldier and Army spouse Dionna Scharton was the one who brought the idea up to Outdoor Recreation after bringing it up at a town hall meeting.

Scharton was stationed at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., and she frequented a dog park nearby in Maryland with her husky. When she moved to Fort Benning, she found there was nowhere to take her large dog off its leash.

"Dog parks are a great place for dogs to socialize and relax. It's like a Starbucks for dogs," she said, quoting famed dog whisperer Cesar Milan.

The Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation is funding the project. The Scouts, along with Scharton, have been working for the last two weekends and expect to work for a few more, Walker said.

The park is built in what used to be a softball field. The Scouts are adding to the existing fence to create an area for dogs under 25 pounds and a double entry and exit gate where pets can be taken off their leashes before entering the main play area.

Several benches, trash cans, water hoses and buckets will be placed around the park. The two dugouts on the site will be repainted and cleaned up to provide a covered area for pets and owners to rest, Scharton said.

A ceremony will mark the opening of the park, though a date has not yet been set. In the works for the opening ceremony are dogs up for adoption on site, a food and blanket drive for Fort Benning's shelter, and a demonstration by the Military Police and their canines.

"The plan is to use this as a test, and if it works, build a (permanent) one," Shoemaker said. The permanent dog park would be built in 2009 near Blue and Green Fields. It would be a first-class facility with more of a shaded area and additional things for dogs to do, he said.

Dog owners must follow the park rules and "petiquette," which Scharton came up with. The rules will be posted at the park.

Only dogs registered with the Fort Benning vet clinic are allowed to use the facility. Any person who is enrolled in DEERS can register their dog at the vet clinic.

To register a dog, an appointment should be made with the vet clinic by calling 706-545-4444. The dog will need to be microchipped, up to date on vaccinations, tested for heartworms and given a fecal exam for parasites.

One of the dog park rules is an Army regulation that states that any individual who is bitten by a dog must immediately go to the emergency room and the dog must be taken immediately to the vet clinic.

Dog owners must also follow a USAIC regulation stating that pit bulls, rottweilers,

'Petiquette' and Precautions

- Always clean up after your dog. This is the single most important thing owners can do to insure the ongoing success of the dog park.

- Keep your dog on-leash until you enter the double-gated entry area. Once inside the park, all dogs must be off-leash, since leashed dogs may feel threatened and growl or bark when approached by off-leash dogs.

- Keep the park gates closed, and watch for dogs on the other side when you are entering or leaving so they do not escape.

- Supervise your dog closely at all times to help prevent aggression and other inappropriate behavior.

- Ask the owner's permission to approach a dog before going up to it.

- Use caution when permitting curious dogs to greet yours within and outside the dog park.

- Use caution when using toys and other objects to play with your dog. Dominance issues may arise and could cause your pet to become unusually aggressive.

- The first dog park visit can be a little stressful for the novice user (both human and canine), so first time visitors should consider visiting the park at non-peak times (midday Monday through Friday). Peak times are Monday through Friday in the early morning and late afternoon until dark, and all day Saturday and Sunday.

It may take a few visits before your dog comes out of his or her shell, but if you give it time, you will have a healthier, friendlier and more playful dog.

- Don't bring dogs with known aggressive tendencies into the dog park.

- Fights in dog parks are rarely a problem because dogs consider it neutral territory. This is because they are all visitors and none of the dogs are protecting their own turf. However, if a fight breaks out, the safest way to break it up is to pull the dogs apart from behind.

If any dog remains unruly, the owner must immediately leash and remove the dog from the park.

- Any individual who is bitten or scratched by an animal must report immediately to the emergency room at Martin Army Community Hospital and provide as much information as possible on the circumstances of the bite, including the dog's owner, location, vaccination status and health.

Any dog that bites a person must be taken to the Fort Benning vet clinic for examination and quarantine.

Failure to do so will necessitate intervention by the Military Police.

If your dog inflicts an injury, give your name and contact information to the injured person before leaving the area. Owners are legally and financially responsible for their dog's behavior.

Doberman pinschers and presa canario breeds and crossbreeds are not permitted on Fort Benning. Any questions, concerns or suggestions can be sent to Shoemaker at James.Shoemaker@us.army.mil.

The other pound problem

Combine a healthy diet and exercise to keep pets fit

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Just like humans, dogs and cats need a balance of a healthy diet and exercise to stay fit.

Being overweight can cause arthritis and back pain, especially in long-backed dogs, and it can make heart disease worse. An underweight pet may be malnourished.

The first step toward a healthy weight is to feed the right amount of food. Follow the feeding instructions on the food bag, keeping in mind both age and activity level, and talk to your veterinarian.

Each brand of food has a different amount of calories per serving, so serve high calorie foods in smaller amounts, and low calorie foods in larger amounts. If you switch brands, don't keep feeding the same number of scoops; check the bag for new feeding instructions.

The Hound Health Handbook has a guide to help you determine if your dog is at the right weight. In general, the ribs should be easy to feel but not visible. If you can see the animal's ribs, it is underweight, and you should increase the amount of food by one-fourth.

When you run your hand flat along the side of a healthy dog, you will feel the ribs and not be able to see them. If you have to push down to feel the animal's ribs with the flat of your hand, the animal is overweight. Decrease the food by one-fourth.

The Handbook recommends rechecking your dog's weight each week and adjusting the food as necessary.

An average-sized cat should weigh about 8 to 10 pounds, according to Healthypet.com. The way to evaluate a cat's weight is nearly the same as evaluating a dog. The ribs should be easily felt but not seen, and the cat should have a visible waist, which means when you look down on the animal, it appears narrower behind the ribs and before the haunches.

Ask your vet for help if you're unsure of your pet's body condition.

If your pet needs to lose weight, there are a few things you can do in addition to cutting back on food and treats. Feed the pet three small meals a day instead of one big meal. This allows the pet to use the energy more effectively throughout the day.

Many pet foods make a weight control or low calorie version of their regular food, and you can switch the pet over slowly to avoid upsetting its digestive system.

Cut out all table scraps and people food, aside from certain vegetables. High-fat people food is detrimental to a pet's weight and health.

Set a limit on treats per day because the calories can add up quickly, and make sure everyone in the household is aware of the limit. Also make sure that everyone isn't giving the pet its daily treat because then it would be getting several times the amount it should be getting. If you're training the dog, single pieces of dog food can be used as rewards rather than large treats.

Another way to get your pet to a healthy weight is to supplement dog food with vegetables. Slowly introduce the vegetable or fruit, such as cooked or raw carrots, green beans, winter squash or apple. Add just a teaspoon at a time.

Some vegetables and fruit can be harmful to pets, so check the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Web site under the Animal Poison Control section for a list of harmful plants. The site is www.aspc.org.

Your pet should be exercising every day. Depending on its fitness needs, you can walk, run or hike with your dog, or play fetch, and play with your cat with cat toys.

Healthypet.com recommends getting cat trees or other things to climb and boxes or bags to explore.

Scratching can also provide exercise, so give your cat a scratching post or piece of cardboard or carpet.

If your pet is overweight or unfit, don't jump into a hard exercise regimen. Start slowly and gradually increase the amount of time you spend exercising your pet. For high-energy dogs, you can try agility and obstacle courses.

For more information, go to www.healthypet.com, the American Animal Hospital Association's Web site, which has many articles on dog and cat health.

Children Learn More from Do's than Don'ts

Young children will be better behaved when they know clearly what you expect of them. Instead of just saying, "Don't do that," show and tell your child what you do want him or her to do.

1. Teach your child the steps of the desired behavior.

It is unreasonable to expect your child to do something if you haven't taught it to him or her.

2. Have your child describe the behavior back to you. This will tell you whether or not your child understands your expectations.

3. Ask your child to demonstrate the behavior to you.

If your child can demonstrate the behavior reasonably well, then you know that it is within the child's abilities.

4. Model the behavior yourself. Children are always watching you and trying to imitate your behavior.

Columbus military history

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

You may not realize how much military history has been made, not just on Fort Benning, but in Columbus as well. Union forces attacked Columbus during the Civil War, burning much of the downtown area. The city manufactured a wide variety of equipment used in the war, including war ships, swords, uniforms, rifles and cannons. And the city organized several volunteer companies, which fought in the Indian War, the War with Mexico and many battles of the Civil War.

To learn more about the area's military history, take a self-guided walking tour of the downtown area. Pick up a copy of the tour brochure at the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 900 Front Avenue.

You'll see monuments for the Battle of Columbus, Confederate forces and all veterans, and buildings that once housed factories devoted to manufacturing for the Confederate war effort during the Civil War.

Across the street from the visitors bureau is One Arsenal Place at the Columbus Iron Works. The building served as an arsenal for the Confederacy and produced ammunition, mortar and rifled cannon. The complex became the Confederate States Naval Iron Works in 1862, and boilers, steam engines and armor plate were manufactured.

The site of the last armory of the Columbus Guards is on Ninth Street at the RiverCenter. The Columbus Guards was a noted military company organized in 1835 to keep the streets safe at night from Indian attacks. The company served voluntarily in the Indian War in 1836, the War with Mexico in 1846, the War Between the States, the Spanish War on the Mexican border from 1916 to 1917, and the first World War.

In the Civil War, the Columbus Guards had the largest number of volunteers of any of the 21 companies from Muscogee County. They served in 31 battles and surrendered at Appomattox on April 9, 1865, with only two officers and 11 men.

Col. W. L. Salisbury was a Columbus native who served in the Georgia Grays, 5th Georgia Regiment, which was the second group from Columbus to join the Confederate Army. A marker is located on the Broadway median near Ninth Street, close to where Salisbury lived. Salisbury was also the owner and publisher of the Columbus Enquirer-Sun, and he died as a result of an editorial carried in his paper.

The site of Haiman's Sword Factory is on First Avenue between 14th and 15th streets. The factory was the largest sword manufacturer in the South during the Civil War. In the 1830s, Louis and Elias Haiman came to Columbus from Prussia and established a tinsmith shop at a different location. At the start of the Civil War, they opened a small sword factory and moved to this site. By 1863, the company employed more than 400 workers and produced 250 swords and cutlasses a day. They also manufactured the Colt Navy Pistol and sold the firearms to the Confederate States in 1864. The facilities were burned by Union forces on April 17, 1865.

The day before, on April 16, Easter Sunday, Union forces were trying to secure the crossings of the Chattahoochee River and attacked strong defenses near Columbus, according to a Battle of Columbus monument at the corner of Broadway and Fourteenth Streets. The battle was the last land battle of the Civil War. In the face of heavy musketry and artillery fire, the Federals penetrated the Confederate lines, burned much of the industrial riverfront, occupied Columbus and took 1,200 prisoners.

Other sites to look for on the walking tour are the veterans memorial at the south entrance of the Government Center at Ninth Street and the Gen. Henry L. Benning marker on the TSYS campus across from the Haiman factory marker.

For more information on the walking tour, contact the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 706-322-1613 or go to www.visitcolumbusga.com.

For more military history, visit the National Infantry Museum on Fort Benning and the National Civil War Naval Museum on Victory Drive.

This Confederate monument, located on the Broadway Street median near Ninth Street, was built in 1879 and dedicated to local Soldiers who fought in the Civil War. A fence was installed around the monument to keep neighborhood cows out.

One Arsenal Place on Front Avenue is the site of a major manufacturer of cannons and ammunition for the Confederate forces during the Civil War.

OPENING TODAY

ARE WE DONE YET? — Now married to Suzanne (Nia Long), Nick Persons (Ice Cube) has bought a quiet suburban house to escape the rat race of the big city and to provide more space for his new wife and kids Lindsey (Alesha Allen) and Kevin (Philip Bolden).

But when his new home quickly becomes a costly “fixer-upper” and he finds himself at the mercy of an eccentric contractor, Nick’s suburban dream becomes a riotous nightmare.

Are We Done Yet? is rated PG for some innuendos and brief language.

NEW RELEASES

BOBBY: Especially since he hasn’t directed many movies, Emilio Estevez gets big points for ambition by calling the shots on this portrait of people and events surrounding the 1968 assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy at Los Angeles’ Ambassador Hotel. Estevez also wrote the film and gives himself an acting role in it as part of a huge and impressive cast of familiar faces also including Demi Moore (his former fiancée) and her spouse, Ashton Kutcher, Martin Sheen (Estevez’s father), Anthony Hopkins, Sharon Stone, William H. Macy, Helen Hunt, Harry Belafonte, Christian Slater, Lindsay Lohan, Nick Cannon, Heather Graham and Elijah Wood. (R:AS, P,V)

SWEENEY TODD: Angela Lansbury and George Hearn might have made the saga of the “demon barber” more palatable in stage-musical form, but this “Director’s Cut” version of a BBC production doesn’t have any tuneful interludes to soften the blow. Ray Winstone, seen recently in the Oscar-winning The Departed, has the title role as the murderous 18th-century Englishman. David Warner also stars. (Not rated:AS,V)

COMING SOON

FREEDOM WRITERS (April 17): A teacher

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM (April 24): A museum security guard (Ben Stiller) is stunned, and endangered, when the exhibits come to life. Robin Williams and veteran talents Dick Van Dyke and Mickey Rooney co-star. (PG:P,V)

NYC lawyer becomes Benning Soldier

Jason Lyall studied in China. He became a teacher. He became a lawyer. And now he's becoming an officer.

His father wondered what the point was of going to law school only to join the Army a couple years later. His fiancé, Anna, couldn't understand his decision at first either.

Lyall reached the halfway point of Officer Candidate School last week and became a senior candidate. His roommate asks him from time to time, "Do you think you're making a mistake?"

Before joining the Army and going to basic training on Sand Hill, 31-year-old Lyall practiced immigration law in New York for a year and a half. Immigration law deals with issues like asylum,

Gates extends tours in Iraq to 15 months

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — All Soldiers in the U.S. Central Command area of operations will serve 15-month tours in the region beginning immediately, Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates said Wednesday.

"Active Army units now in the Central Command area of responsibility and those headed there will deploy for not more than 15 months and return home for not less than 12 months," Gates said, during a Pentagon news conference.

This policy does not apply to two brigades currently in Iraq that have already been extended to 16 months. The policy does not apply to Marine Corps, Navy or Air Force units serving in Central Command, National Guard or Reserve.

The 15-month tour applies to active-duty Soldiers serving in Afghanistan, the Horn of Africa and all the countries in the region. U.S. Central Command stretches from Kenya to Kazakhstan and Egypt to Pakistan.

Soldiers will receive an extra $1,000 a month for each month or portion of the month they serve longer than 12 months, Gates said.

Jeff Trueblood couldn't wrap his head around it; two "military men" were standing at his door on Easter Sunday. It didn't make sense.

"I was wondering if they were coming to recruit me.

I didn't think they did that kind of thing on Easter," he told a reporter from the Kokomo (Ind.) Tribune earlier this week.

The men wanted to talk to his mother, so Trueblood called her on her cell phone. Come home, he said, there are Soldiers here who want to speak to you.

Teri Tenbrook said she's "been around long enough to know what that means." Tenbrook's son, Trueblood's brother, Pfc. David Neil Newsflash: there will be no Prusik Climb at the 24th annual Best Ranger Competition. Imagine that. Historically a favorite among the Saturday Day Stakes audience, the Prusik is going the way of the tomahawk throw and the archery competition. It's simply irrelevant in today's combat environment.

"Are we ever going to have to do a Prusik Climb in Iraq? I don't think so," said Capt. Scott Brannon, who's in charge of planning this year's competition for the Ranger Training Brigade.

Fort Benning transformation: It's all about change

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

In prior articles, I addressed the transformation of Fort Benning and the creation of the Maneuver Center of Excellence as a result of the decision to consolidate the Armor and Infantry Schools at Fort Benning by FY 2011. Efforts to support the Global War on Terrorism, Global Defense Posture Realignment (repositioning of units from Europe and Korea), Army Modular Force Design, Base Realignment and Closure Plan, and other actions will continue to transform our post and the Army in significant ways. Organizational and structural changes have already occurred in the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, the 75th Ranger Regiment and other units assigned to Fort Benning, and more changes in organizations and facilities are projected based on these important decisions.

Changes in how we train at Fort Benning will also continue. These changes will be reviewed to ensure we meet the Army's needs and those of our Soldiers and leaders. We have already implemented the Maneuver Captains Career Course — it combines the Infantry and Armor/Cavalry Captains Career Courses in an effort to enhance our ability to "train like we fight" as most units in our Army operate as combined arms teams across the spectrum of operations. Additionally, the Maneuver ANCOC was instituted late last year to replace the Infantry and Armor Crewman and Scout ANCOC courses. These two new "maneuver" courses will continue to be taught at Fort Benning and Fort Knox and will share a mixture of Armor and Infantry instructors and students. Once Fort Benning has the resources and infrastructure in place, the courses will be moved to Fort Benning.

We have a highly skilled team of professionals at Fort Benning whose sole mission is to execute BRAC-mandated MCOE consolidations efficiently and effectively, and they keep me and other members of our command up to date with changes as they occur.

We, in turn, provide monthly updates to Fort Benning leaders and to the community in an effort to keep everyone abreast of what is happening.

Over the next five years, we anticipate more than $2.3 billion in new construction, renovation, and repair work on Fort Benning in support of BRAC, AMF, GDPR, and military construction for barracks, training facilities, ranges, headquarters buildings and dining facilities. Additionally, $600 million in construction related to the Residential Communities Initiative is planned for the next eight years. This $2.9 billion in construction does not include the additional road and infrastructure work already scheduled in the local community to facilitate Fort Benning's growth.

Most of this construction cannot begin until we secure all the right funding and complete the required Environmental Impact Statement — these should both be done by Oct. 1. We anticipate the overall construction program and movement timelines for the Armor School to remain on track for completion by fiscal 2011.

The BRAC process is a long one requiring focused efforts on everyone's part. The payoff for our Army, Fort Benning and the region are well worth the effort.

Role models make difference, provide positive influence

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles A. Evans

Role models come in all forms. Some are good; others may lead us down the wrong path.

Most of my role models were positive influences who made a big difference in my life and helped me to be the person that I am today.

Growing up without a father in a small town in Alabama in the '60s was tough. My mother divorced my dad and moved us back from Texas when I was 2 years old. We lived with my grandparents and my mother worked as a librarian, not the best paying job in those times.

My first role model was my Grandpa

Devine. He worked six days a week as a painter and wallpaper hanger and, until he was too old to work, never took any kind of government handout. He considered anyone on "relief" to be a bum or too lazy to work.

He raised four daughters, and my brother and me, and we never went without. What we had wasn't fancy, but it was there.

He grudgingly took a small VA pension when my uncle convinced him that he had earned it by serving in WWI.

He taught me that if you want something, you have to work for it. My second role model was a man named Basil Gilchrist. He ran the local Boys Club in Gadsden and tried to make sure that kids had a place to go to have fun and stay out of trouble.

This was back in the days when funding was trickling, rather than flowing freely, from local, state and federal agencies. Years later, I learned that Basil had often paid the rent on the club out of his own pocket.

He begged and borrowed equipment, hounded and strong-armed local politicians and businesses for funds and kept the club open, despite being on a budget as tight as a piano wire. He taught me that if you believe in something strong enough, you can make it work.

Another positive influence in my life were many of the NCOs I encountered as I made my way through the Army.

Squad leaders, platoon sergeants, first sergeants and sergeants major all encouraged me to get more education and continually challenge myself.

They taught me the only person holding me back from achievement and success is the man looking back in the mirror.

I am in the twilight of my career and looking forward to retirement. I only hope that some of the young people I have encountered can remember me as a positive influence in their lives.

What in the world's going on?

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Did you hear about the wild man terrorizing neighborhoods on Main Post? No?

That's because there is no wild man terrorizing Main Post.

If there was, you'd be the seventh to know. The terror victim would call the MPs, who would call the garrison commander, who would call the general, who would have someone call someone at the Public Affairs Office, who would call someone at The Bayonet who would put it on the front page for you to read Friday morning. Or something like that.

So, if you're hearing stories like this from your neighbor (who is not the terror victim or the terrorist) please don't pass it on.

It's gossip, even if it's cloaked in genuine concern, and when it gets back to us, we have to chase down a bogus boogeyman.

Stories like this — and I'm thinking of the most recent one to come our way — start with a grain of truth. In this case, the folks at Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Directorate nabbed a Soldier who broke in to three houses and assaulted a woman.

Someone heard about it, and (with all the good intentions in the world) passed it on to a neighbor, who told the other moms about it at play group (because she'd feel just awful if something happened and she hadn't warned them about it), who called their friends to see if they had heard the news.

One of them called a local TV station with a wildly exaggerated story about a mad man terrorizing neighborhoods on Main Post.

Fortunately, the newshounds had the good sense to call the post's public affairs officer to find out What In The World's Going On?

Look, stuff happens everywhere, even on post. Terrible stuff. As Monika Bishop said, in an article you'll find on C1, we don't live in Mayberry. It pays to be aware and stay alert. But it doesn't pay to pass on unsubstantiated gossip. It only makes matters worse. It trivializes the truth. And in this case, it's grossly unfair to the victim.

You're going to have ample opportunity over the next year or so to sink your teeth into juicy tales of crime and passion. Who got busted? Who's cheating on who? Who's parked in your neighbor's drive? Try to be a good person — take the high road.

Unless you have two reliable sources, a police report, notarized eyewitness accounts and a DNA sample, keep it to yourself. If you have a legitimate concern, call the MPs, a chaplain, or someone you trust to do the right thing.

Sure, knowledge is power, but misinformation creates chaos, causes undo worry among the wives of deployed Soldiers, and interferes with the due process of the law.

3rd BCT leaders meet with Iraqi army

Spc. Ben Hutto

FOB Hammer, Iraq — Col. Fadhil Abbas, commander of the Iraqi Army's Bey May Eagles, had dinner with members of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team's 3rd Squadron, 1st Cavalry Regiment, April 8 at the Bes Maya Range Complex near FOB Hammer, east of Baghdad.

Lt. Col. John Kolasheski, commander of the 3rd Sqn., 1st Cav., Blackhawks, dined with Abbas and members of his Iraqi army training unit to discuss future combined operations and to get to know one another a little better.

"I'm very impressed with the level of professionalism the Iraqi soldiers showed as we rolled through the gate," Kolasheski said. "It says a lot about their training."

Abbas presented the Blackhawk leadership with a huge meal to honor their visit and encouraged everyone present to relax and enjoy.

"My brothers, I am so excited that you are all here," Abbas said. "I look forward to working with you as one family. The Iraqi team and the American team is one team and I want to have a high level of cooperation. My Iraqi soldiers love their American Soldiers as brothers."

After their meal, Abbas and Blackhawk leadership discussed the training the Iraqi Army was doing at Bes Maya Range Complex.

Abbas explained the complex features a sniper course, mortar course, infantryman's course and a combat arms school. Many of these training courses are taught and run completely by the Iraqis and others are almost to that point.

Abbas said he is proud of how far his country and army have come since their days under Saddam Hussein's control.

"These types of facilities are so important in giving our Soldiers proper training," Kolasheski said. "I'm very impressed with the facility you have here."

Abbas also assured Kolasheski that the tribal division that had hindered Iraq's army in the past was not a problem with the unit under his command.

"All my soldiers fight under one flag," Abbas said, as he pointed to the Iraqi flag on his wall. "No more clans or separate religions here. We all worship one God and fight under one flag."

He pointed out that Iraq was under Hussein's control for more than 20 years, and it will take time to change the way an entire generation of Iraqis think, but he is confident that change will take place.

"I promise you, in five more years this country will be an example for other countries to follow," Abbas said. "We are almost there."

Abbas recognized that there were elements in his country that did not want Iraq to change, but was confident that with America's help, they too could be overcome.

"My brothers, this country would not be free of Saddam without your help, but this country still has bad people that must be stopped," he said. "We will stop them. I promise you this."

Blackhawk leaders said they were impressed with Abbas's level of commitment and enthusiasm.

"We look forward to working with you to help rid your great country of these bad men," Capt. Jim Hathaway, Headquarters Troop commander, said.

After enjoying desserts prepared by Abbas's wife and cups of steaming chai, the commanders parted ways, but promised to be in touch with one another.

"I look forward to working with you and hope to do this again soon," Kolasheski said.

Troops: To stay longer

Gates called this policy an "interim change." The goal for active duty units is 12 months deployed, followed by 12 months at their home station. Ultimately, the Army would like to see Soldiers deployed for 12 months and home for 24 months.

"My objective was to set clear guidelines that our commanders, troops and their families could use in determining how future rotations in support of the global war on terror would effect them," Gates said.

Upon taking office in December 2006, Gates learned that even sustaining the level of deployed Army forces needed before surging five brigades into Iraq would require active-duty units to flow into Iraq before they had spent a full 12 months at home. He said this reality was a significant factor in his decision to recommend to President Bush that defense officials increase the size of the Army and Marine Corps over the next five years by 62,000 Soldiers and 27,000 Marines.

The deployment change is intended to provide better clarity, predictability and sustainability in how the Defense Department deploys active-duty Army forces, Gates said.

He said the changes produce clear, realistic, executable and long-term policy goals to guide the deployment of active duty forces. The change will also allow the Army to support the 20-brigade goal of the surge as long as it is needed, he said.

"Without this action, we would have had to deploy five Army active-duty brigades sooner than the 12-month at home goal," Gates said. "I believe it is fairer to all Soldiers that all share the burden equally."

The secretary said he realizes his decision will ask a lot of Army troops and their families.

"We are deeply grateful for the service and sacrifice of our men and women in uniform and their commitment to accomplishing our mission," he said. "In the end, this new approach will better allow the Army to better support the war effort while providing a more predictable and dependable deployment schedule for our Soldiers and their families."

IED: Kills two Soldiers

Simmons had been killed in combat.

Simmons is the second Soldier from Kokomo, Ind. — the second from his high school — to die in six months. Kokomo is a small town, with less than 50,000 residents. It's the kind of town with the kind of newspaper that still heralds young recruits when they sign up to serve. It's the kind that mourns together when they lose one of their hometown heroes.

Wednesday's headlines told the tale Tenbrook learned from those two Soldiers April 8; 20-year-old Simmons and Staff Sgt. Harrison Brown, 31, from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, were killed near Baghdad when the humvee they were riding in hit an IED about 24 hours into a 32-hour patrol.

Wednesday, Tenbrook said she'd been on the phone with other mothers who have sons serving in Iraq.

"All of (them) want to go over and hug ... their sons," she said. "We're supposed to protect our children, but this was their decision."

Brown was from Pritchard, Ala., but he made his home in Columbus with his wife and three children.

Delisha Brown declined to speak to reporters at this time, but she issued a statement to Fort Benning's Public Affairs Office saying her husband left his family reluctantly, but "confident it was the right thing to do."

Just before he deployed last month, "he told our daughter that if he didn't go, he couldn't protect us from the bad guys," Delisha said. "And that's what he wanted to do — protect us."

Fort Benning to observe Holocaust Remembrance

Ceremony is at 11 a.m.
Wednesday in Marshall Auditorium

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

The Fort Benning community will pause to remember the youngest victims of the Holocaust during a Days of Remembrance ceremony at 11 a.m. Wednesday in Marshall Auditorium. The public is invited.

Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz, Fort Benning's only Jewish chaplain and one of seven Armywide, will speak on the subject of this year's theme, Children in Crisis: Voices from the Holocaust.

Horovitz's grandfather left Germany and moved his family to England in 1935, when the Nuremberg Laws forced him to forsake his law practice. They escaped the worst of the Holocaust, Horovitz said, but they lost relatives who remained in Germany. Those who survived never wavered in their faith, Horovitz said.

"Even after they went through hell on earth, they stayed positive," he said. "It made them stronger. They resolved to continue life and live it well."

Horovitz will speak about that resolve Wednesday. And he will talk about the Holocaust's youngest victims. When World War II ended, 6 million European Jews were dead. More than a million of them were children.

The very young, like the very old, were often classified as "useless eaters" and targeted first for genocide because they couldn't perform the rigorous tasks assigned to adult prisoners in the Nazi prison camps like Auschwitz and Dachau. Most of the children were ushered straight to the gas chambers when they arrived.

Those who survived were often orphaned or maimed physically. Certainly they retained scars for the rest of their lives.

"Liberation brought no end to the suffering of the boys and girls who remained alive ... with no (home) no parents, no grandparents or siblings," reads a tribute to the Holocaust's Smallest Witnesses on the United States Holocaust memorial Museum's Web site.

This year's observance is most significant, a contributor wrote, in light of the present campaign of genocide in Darfur.

"Genocide is a real and present threat," he wrote. "The voices of children from the Holocaust serve as a potent reminder that the time for action is now."

Commander speaks about Hussein capture

Retired Lt. Col. Steve Russell spoke at Combat
Speaker Leader Program

COMBINED ARMS AND TACTICS DIRECTORATE
Maj. Michael Knowlton

The commander of 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, the battalion instrumental in the hunt and capture of Saddam Hussein, returned to Fort Benning to address Soldiers on leadership during the Combat Leader Speaker Program April 10 in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

"Little did we know, as we embarked from Texas, that our division would bring this man to justice," Retired Lt. Col. Steve Russell said, "and that the great Soldiers I would command would play such a significant role."

"Many people imagine that Saddam's capture was the result of some lofty intelligence gathered from satellites or CIA operatives," said the former chief of Tactics, CATD.

"Nothing could be farther from the truth. It was the result of six months of very hard work on the part of normal, regular Soldiers working hand-in-hand with a single Delta Force team," he said.

The battalion used intelligence gained from the Iraqi people to develop a strategy focused on five families who provided his personal bodyguards. This plan led to the raid on Dec. 13, 2003.

"Contrary to what many imagine as sophisticated, the raid was planned on a single piece of butcher block paper, with two circles for objectives and the precise time of assembly written down as 2000-ish," he said.

The combined operation with elements of 1st Brigade, 4th Infantry Division, and Delta Force located Saddam's hiding place and dragged him from his hole. Saddam's capture, along with the hard work of Soldiers to establish local and city governments, law enforcement, and a new Iraqi Army turned Tikrit, he said.

"What was once the centerpiece of the resistance ... is on its way to reintegrating into a new and better Iraqi nation."

Russell said victory in Iraq cannot be achieved if America loses heart.

"They will succeed if we do not abandon them."

As chairman of Vets for Victory, an organization that rallies support for Soldiers and victory in Iraq, Russell now speaks to many groups.

Others have told him, "Well, I support the troops, but not the war."

"This is equivalent to saying, 'You support the Sooners, but hope they lose the season.' Or, 'I support bakers, but I'm against making bread to feed the hungry.'"

"If America truly wants to support us, then let us win!" he said.

"We must be more than an Army at war and a nation at the mall," Russell said.

"America must sacrifice any notion that will cause us to come home as losers. They can't just hug a Soldier."

"They must take a stand for what we fight for ... if we want to honor those who will not come home, who gave up their youth, their future, their ability to love, who will never raise a family or live to an old age and see their grandchildren, then we must honor what they fought for and honor it with victory."

Russell challenged the audience to take a stand and engage those who talk of quitting in a professional manner, to wear the uniform at church and on leave.

"America needs to see you and your hometown needs to hear from you," he said.

He also encouraged the audience to engage the media, the medium that allows you to connect with the people back home to show them your success, and also shows the enemy your success.

If you don't engage the media, they will tell their story without you, and it will be a lost opportunity, Russell said.

deportation, family reuniting, giving visas, corporate immigration and such.

"Living in New York City, you'd think I've met everyone. I came here and there are so many different people and cultures," said Lyall, who earned a bachelor's degree in international relations, with plans to work in the corporate world.

Lyall grew up in rural Cecil County, Md. He went to American University in Washington, D.C., for his undergraduate work and studied abroad in China for two years. He traveled through Asia, and it was a good opportunity to see the world and learn about other cultures, he said.

After graduation, he spent two years teaching at his alma mater, West Nottingham Academy in Maryland, which is the oldest boarding school in the country.

"That was my way of giving back to the school," Lyall said of his years teaching history and English. He also helped with the English as a second language program and eventually become the director of the ESL program.

Then Lyall headed to New York Law School.

"Once I got to law school, I realized the corporate world wasn't for me," he said. Since he was still interested in the international, he chose immigration law and got a job in the city after graduation.

A year and a half later, he changed his mind.

"One day I just decided to do something different. I've always had respect for the military," Lyall said. "But it always got put on the backburner. I woke up one day at 31 and said this is what I'm going to do."

Lyall considered JAG but decided it wasn't what he wanted to do in the military.

"When I thought about joining the military, I thought about being in the field. In my mind, I can always be a lawyer. It will always be there," he said. So he chose something different.

He's been branched ordnance but has put in a request for a transfer to military intelligence. And he hopes to go to Airborne and Ranger schools some day.

He's not sure if he'll do his 20 years in the Army or go back to law.

Lyall's fiancé is a lawyer in New York City who works for a big corporate firm, and the pair have been together since they met in law school five years ago. Though unsupportive at first, she's coming around, Lyall said, and his father has done a complete 180.

"I think he was just shocked at first," Lyall said.

A friend questioned Lyall about his decision to leave law and join the Army.

He told that friend that when he learned about how our laws were established and the people who fought to get them, he realized that many of them were lawyers and people with opportunities — George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, for instance.

"We shouldn't expect the people who don't have a lot to put themselves on the line. It's the people who have educations and opportunities who should put themselves on the line," he said.

When other Soldiers question what he's doing, he thinks, "what you're doing is more honorable than what I was doing," he said.

"People don't walk up to you and thank you for being a lawyer," Lyall said. But he's already gotten thanks from strangers while wearing his Army uniform.

Lyall wants to do his part for the country and help people, and he chose the Army as the way to do that, at least for now.

"I used to tell my students, if you have a goal, go through with it no matter what people say," Lyall said.

The Army is Lyall's goal, and he's going through with it.

Warrior Leader Course molds training to teach young leaders how battles are fought in Iraq

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Last week Soldiers attending the Warrior Leader Course at the Henry Caro NCO Academy participated in their student training exercise.

Students moved to a forward operations base near the McKenna MOUT site and conducted continuous operations for 96 hours.

Sgt. 1st Class Israel Lozada, senior instructor for the WLC, said the course has undergone some recent revisions and improvements.

"A lot of the changes are focused on hands-on warrior tasks, squad-level battle drills, and reacting to improvised explosive devices and snipers," he said.

Many Soldiers deploying to theaters of operation will be operating in urban areas that offer cover and concealment to insurgent forces.

During this training, these junior leaders practiced room and building clearing drills and conducting patrols in urban areas.

Staff Sgt. Henry Jackson, an instructor with the WLC, watched as the Soldiers practiced "stacking," where they moved as a squad in a precise drill to safely clear a building in the mock village.

"This training prepares them to become tomorrow's leaders," he commented.

To add realism to the training, the platoons switched roles, alternately acting as friendly forces and then as opposing forces and civilians on the battlefield. Sgt. Matthew Palmer was attending the course from his home station at Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington, D.C., and was enthusiastic about the training.

"I love this type of training. It's a skill you can't get too much of. It also teaches the support Soldiers skills that they might need," Palmer said.

After each squad practiced a drill they conducted an after action review.

Both the friendly and OPFOR squads critiqued the events and made suggestions on how to improve when they repeated the event.

"One of the major changes to our course is less time in the classroom and more hands-on training like this out in the field," Lozada said.

BRC: Starts Friday

the Ranger Memorial on April 23. The three-day, 60-hour competition will feature the traditional spot jump, the unknown distance road march, a couple of mystery events, the water confidence test and the Day Stakes on Todd Field, which once centered on the Prusik, a 60-foot tower. Competitors climbed a rope up one side and fast-rope down the other.

Though the Prusik was tough, arguably the toughest event in Day Stakes, its replacement will be even tougher, Brannon said. So tough, in fact, that some are wagering no more than five teams will get it done right. The event is called the Tri-tower Challenge, and other than the obvious fact that it involves three towers, Brannon's keeping a tight lip about it.

He did say all 31 events will be "combat focused." What does that mean in layman's terms?

"They're going to be tested on the same kinds of challenges they've faced in Iraq or Afghanistan. Mental and physical challenges — and stress, lots of stress and very little rest," said Brannon, who spent nearly 30 of the last 36 months in Iraq. He said more than 90 percent of the competitors are combat veterans.

There are 41 teams registered to compete in the BRC, though that number is subject to change right up until the start of the competition. Once upon a time, the BRC drew more than that every year, but brigade officials are thrilled with 41, given the serious decrease in participation since the start of the war. Last year, 27 teams competed.

Interest in the BRC has increased, Brannon said, because commanders are recognizing its value. Aside from the fact that competitors train long and hard for the competition — training which pays off when they return to their units and train others or lead Soldiers into combat — it's also good for morale.

Nowhere is that more evident, he said, then among the Soldiers of the Ranger community, those who serve with the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. Teams from the RTB have won the competition 10 times. The regiment trails by one. That means "outside" teams have taken the title only four times.

"It's like an Auburn-Alabama game," said Brannon, a native of Boaz, Ala. "It's a friendly rivalry, and as long as an outside team doesn't win, it's OK anyway it goes."

The winning is anticlimactic anyway, said Sgt. Maj. Erik Wilson, the RTB's operations sergeant major. He was half of the winning team in 1993.

"As soon as it was over, it was over," Wilson said, but the camaraderie among competitors lasts a lifetime.

"What a great bunch of guys. When it came down to it, you have unit allegiances of course, but it's all about you and the competition itself, not about you and the guys on the other teams," he said. "The reason I came back to compete the second time was because the guys were great and the atmosphere was great. It's still that way."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

Goodell lays down law

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell suspended Adam "Pacman" Jones (Tennessee Titans) for the 2007 season and Chris Henry (Cincinnati Bengals) for eight games because of numerous violations of the NFL's personal conduct policy.

Both are suspended without pay. Jones will lose his base salary of $1,200,000. Henry's will depend on when Tennessee's bye week is.

The police plus Goodell prove for the suspensions. Athletes should be punished for their off-field conduct. Hopefully this suspension will open their eyes.

You go, Elsie

Elsie McKean of Chico, Calif., got a hole-in-one April 5 at Silver Peak Golf Course. So what, you might say.

Well, Elsie is 102 years old. She used a driver on the par-3, 100-yard hole. She also broke the age record of Harold Wilson, who got his ace in 2001 at the age of 101.

Just goes to show, you're never too old for sports.

Robinson to be honored

Major League Baseball will honor the 50th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's first game played with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Robinson broke the color barrier on April 15, 1947, when he became the first African-American to play in a major league game.

All of the L.A. Dodgers will wear the No. 42, Robinson's retired number, as well as other players like Ken Griffey Jr.

Mariano Rivera, a reliever for the Yankees, is the only active player who wears the number.

Johnson wins Masters

Zach Johnson, a relatively unknown name, beat big names like Tiger Woods, Rory Sabbatini and Paul Casey to win the 2007 Masters Tournament at Augusta National Golf Club Sunday.

Johnson shot to 15th in the world golf rankings, up from 25 after his win.

NASCAR action returns

After a hiatus for the Easter holiday, NASCAR Nextel Cup action returns.

This week's race is the Samsung 500 from Texas Motor Speedway.

Since the Speedway is 1.5 miles, the Car of Tomorrow will not be used, which should provide minor relief to crew chiefs and drivers, not to mention the mechanics.

Coverage begins at 1:30 p.m. Sunday on Fox.

Wrecking observed with reckless driving

NASCAR driver Michael Waltrip was charged with reckless driving and failure to report an accident Saturday morning after he fell asleep at the wheel while driving from Charlotte, N.C., to his home in Sherrills Ford, N.C.

Waltrip's woes ended at the race track, where he had failed to qualify for the last five races and is negative in points.

LIBERATORS

B Company's Aaron Baeza makes a move on the Libertadores' Carlos Mora after receiving a pass in the middle. Baeza shook off a knee injury in the first half to help his team mount a comeback against the Libertadores. B Co. scored two points in the final minute but fell short, 3-2.

B Company's Brian Mainwaring tries to score in the open field in the first half of their match against the WHINSEC Libertadores. The loss gives B Co. a 1-1-0 record while the Libertadores remain undefeated with 2-0-0.

29th falls to WHINSEC's Libertadores after gallant comeback in second half

B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, ran out of time after making a gallant comeback late in the second half. They lost to the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Libertadores, 3-2, after playing a tough and physical game Tuesday night.

The Libertadores are 2-0-0 in regular season soccer play while B Co. split their record 1-1-0.

In the first half, the teams played in the rain. They both displayed solid defense, keeping each other from getting any shot attempts at goal.

"We gel well, and we know how good the competition is out here," said B Co.'s Brian Mainwaring.

E Co. beats 3/330th in two straight sets

THE BAYONET

"As we play more, we learn more about the game," said E Company's Jessie McNair who leaps to score a backhanded winner over 3/330th's Corey Campbell. E Co. has a record of 1-1 while 3/330th is 2-3 in intramural volleyball league play.

E Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Eagles came out to play volleyball Monday night, making short work of the 3rd Battalion, 330th Infantry Regiment, in consecutive sets.

In the first game, 3/330th's Guy Crubaugh came out smoking early. He scored the first two points for his team.

Both teams traded points with kills and points on serve. After E Co.'s Jessie McNair made the score 10-10 with an ace serve, his team never looked back. E Co.'s William Carter did a solid job of keeping his team in the game by making sets at the net.

E Co. took the first set, 21-12.

"This is a learning experience for all of us," McNair said. "Most of us don't have a background in volleyball but we all have athletic ability."

E Co.'s James Knox proved to be a force in the second game, spiking the ball several times. He made a nasty kill that bounced off Daniel Straasburg's arm, which lit a fire under his teammates.

E Co. found another boost of energy when the team's mentor and most experienced player Ernesto Prince entered in the middle of the second set.

"Prince is almost a pro," McNair said. "We definitely lean on his knowledge and ability."

The 3rd Battalion, 330th Infantry Regiment, played better defense in the second game. Straasburg stuffed Elliot Ritchie's kill at the net, but in the end, E Co. proved to be too much as they manhandled the 3/330th, 21-11, winning straight sets.

"This was a difficult game for us," said Keith Cowan. "We didn't have any of our starters out here tonight but we came out and gave everything we had."

In other volleyball play, the 11th Infantry Regiment and the 4th Ranger Training Battalion were scheduled to face each other but had to forfeit because of not enough players on both teams.

Making fitness fun

The students at Dexter Elementary School are learning the benefits of basic fitness. Monday they practiced for the FitnessGram challenge, sponsored by the Cooper Institute, which they will conduct next week. Each elementary school on post participates in the program at various times throughout the year.

"This is an awesome program that that will benefit the students in the long run," said Pam Koon the P.E. teacher at Dexter.

The FitnessGram Program focuses on cardio and fitness training. The students are tested and timed in curl-ups, push-ups, sit-ups, shoulder stretching and trunk lifts as well a mile run for third through fifth-graders and a pacer test for younger students.

Each student receives a fitness profile that tabulates their body composition and scores for each test which is calculated to determine the current fitness level of the each child.

"If the kids continue the program, they will be able to track their growth for years to come," Koon said.

Zach Who? wins Masters Tournament, Woods blows lead

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

I love to watch golf on TV. Not so much in person, but on TV, I'm captivated. I've heard many people bemoan that it's boring to watch, but in reality, it's a highly competitive, semi-fast paced show. I watched all of the coverage of the Masters, Thursday through Sunday, and couldn't have written a better ending.

My interest in golf dates back to my childhood when I would watch with my grandfather, to be able to share his love of the game. On a boring Sunday afternoon in 1999, I got back into watching golf, I suppose because there was nothing else on TV that day, and I knew the Masters was a big deal.

Everybody knows who Tiger Woods is. Even in the non-golf world, Tiger is to golf what LeBron James is to basketball — a legend in the prime of his career and poised to break many other legends' records. Tiger exploded into professional play in the 1990s and from there on, it's been all Tiger, all the time.

I'm a Tiger fan. The excitement he's brought to the sport is unparalleled.

So of course I was pulling for him to win his fifth green jacket, the award given to the Masters champion. But then out of nowhere on the last day of play came a guy named Zach Johnson.

Johnson is relatively unknown except to diehard golf fans. He was on the U.S. Ryder Cup team. His only top 10 finish this year was at Doral two weeks ago. His only other victory on the PGA tour was in 2004.

So when Tiger was leading after the second hole on Sunday, it was his green jacket to lose. And he did.

I could say I was surprised, but the entire weekend Tiger just didn't seem to have his usual winning ways about him.

It seemed that all the players struggled. Johnson won the Masters at plus 1, which tied for the second highest win ever. He won by two shots. Last year's winner, Phil Mickelson, had a very dismal weekend, and by the last day, it was apparent that Lefty would not be donning another leprechaun-like green jacket.

The day after his win, Johnson catapulted to 15th in the world rankings, up from 56. He was the first player at an above-50 ranking to win since official rankings began in 1986.

Tiger will go on to win more tournaments. Many wonder if Johnson will ever have the same magic he had in Augusta.

Regardless, his name is in the record books, among greats like Woods, Mickelson, Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer.

Libertadores: Win again despite 'rust,' rain

The Libertadores' Jorge Rodriguez, left, fights for possession of the ball from B Co.'s Aaron Baeza. Rodriguez scored the game's first point with a corner chip shot.

"Playing like we know we can win is a must."

The Libertadores tried to be the aggressors late in the first half, but they showed signs of fatigue.

"I think we're kind of out of shape, because we were out in the field this past week," said Libertadores' Carlos Mora. "We're a bit rusty, and we definitely can play better than this."

After a long offensive drought, the Libertadores' Jorge Rodriguez scored the game's first goal with a chip shot to the left corner.

B Co.'s Aaron Baeza was able to walk off a knee injury just before halftime after colliding with an opposing player.

As the sprinkles of rain stopped, the intensity picked up in the second half.

Baeza tried to be the aggressor and took on the offensive load, making nice passes and setting his teammates up for shots.

The Libertadores' Victor Varela went down hard after taking an accidental kick to his throat, which forced him to sit for the remainder of the game.

Late in the second half, the Libertadores' Luis Alverado got good position and scored after an interior pass from Rodriguez, making the score 2-0.

With just minutes to go in the game, B Co.'s Thomas Whittenmore broke loose to score his team's first goal.

Seconds later, Juarez Rodriguez shot and scored to give the Libertadores a 3-1 lead. Mainwaring made matters interesting by hitting a goal with about 30 seconds to go to cut the Libertadores lead down to one point. B Co. ultimately fell short as time expired.

"The WHINSEC teams are the teams to beat, so you have to bring your best game," said B Co.'s Mainwaring.

In other league play, the 75th Ranger Regiment routed the 14th Combat Support Hospital, 7-1, the WHINSEC Command General Staff Course shut out the WHINSEC Commandos, 3-0, and the E Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, edged out 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 1-0.

Smith posts career-best finish in Busch race

WWW.GINNRRACING.COM

LEBANON, Tenn. — Regan Smith tenaciously fought back from an early problem to post a fifth-place finish in the NASCAR Busch Series race at Nashville Superspeedway Saturday.

The result was a career-best finish for Smith in the Busch Series, shattering his previous best of ninth, which he recorded at California Speedway in February.

The finish also vaulted Smith from 19th to 10th in the driver point standings.

"We've been knocking at the door all year for a top-five finish and finally got it," Smith said. "I am so happy to get this result for the guys because I felt I muffed a fifth-place finish for them in Mexico."

Starting 16th in the No. 4 Ginn Resorts Chevrolet, Smith patiently drove to the front. He was running in ninth place when he came in for his pit stop on Lap 62 of 225.

"The car was fast, the pit stop was fast and we were in good shape — until I stepped on the gas to leave our pit box," Smith said.

When Smith hit the throttle to get back on track, the No. 4 Chevy stalled.

It took a few cranks to get it

Regan Smith drove the No. 4 Chevrolet Monte Carlo Saturday at Nashville Superspeedway. Smith fought back from an early problem to finish in fifth place, the best finish of his career. Smith will relinquish driving duties in the 01 Army car in Nextel Cup action to Mark Martin this weekend at Texas Motor Speedway on Sunday.

fired, but it stalled again at the end of pit road.

"I thought this was it — another good run going by the wayside," said the 23-year-old Smith. "I kept on cranking the engine and it finally fired. We were fortunate that we only lost one lap instead of two."

The incident sent Smith back to 28th place.

"I'm not 100 percent sure what happened, but it appears we had an air pocket in the fuel line and that will cause the engine to stall," said crew chief Doug Randolph.

"We didn't get flustered and made a pretty good comeback. Regan did a great job of driving and the pit crew had another excellent day."

When the caution flew on Lap 127, Smith got the free pass, putting him back on the lead lap. He moved into 10th place on Lap 170 and 18 laps later he was in fifth.

"It was just fun out there today except for that hiccup with the fuel line," Smith said. "We had an awesome car and it was a blast to pass all those cars."

"This has been a good team all year and it was nice to get a finish that was deserving of our performance."

The next Busch race for the No. 4 Ginn Resorts team will be Saturday at Texas Motor Speedway.

Martin 'charged up' after hiatus

WWW.GINNRRACING.COM

FORT WORTH, Texas — After taking nearly one month off from the NASCAR circuit, Mark Martin will return to competition this weekend at Texas Motor Speedway.

Martin, who led the Nextel Cup driver point standings after the first four races, stuck to his plan of running a limited schedule for Ginn Racing in 2007 by sitting out the Bristol and Martinsville events.

The short hiatus has the U.S. Army driver fired up and ready to do battle again in NASCAR's elite division.

"I'm charged up and ready to represent our Soldiers again," Martin said.

"The break was truly wonderful. I was doing just exactly what I wanted to do. One weekend I got to go racing with Ricky Carmichael and my son Matt. Another weekend I was with my 2-year-old grandson. I also had friends over for a cookout to watch the last two Cup races. It was like developing and opening a new chapter in my life."

With the new chapter open, Martin is now ready to continue where he left off in his No. 01 U.S. Army Chevrolet.

Martin earned three consecutive top-five finishes to start the season, followed by a 10th-place result at the fourth race in Atlanta. He was the only driver to record top-10 results in the first four Cup events and it marked his best start of his 25-year racing career.

The early performances allowed Martin to walk away from full-time Nextel Cup racing with the point lead. In fact, Martin's start was so impressive that despite not running in the last two races, he is still 15th in the standings.

"That's kind of wild," Martin said.

"We just had some great runs — thanks to some good luck, fast cars, great pit strategy and excellent pit stops."

"I get e-mails from many of our Soldiers and that really inspires me to put their car in victory lane," Martin said. "Driving the Soldiers' car is an awesome responsibility. I want to make every Soldier proud of their 01 U.S. Army Chevrolet."

Based on past performances at the 1.5-mile Texas oval, there's a good chance that Martin will continue to have success in the 01 machine.

He won at Texas in April of 1999 and was runner-up in the 2005 fall race.

Martin will also make his second Busch start of the season this weekend.

He boasts three wins and one pole in seven Busch starts at Texas. One of the three Busch wins was at the 1997 inaugural event.

The Busch race is at 2:30 p.m. Saturday on ESPN2.

Volunteers save nearly $2 million

Fort Benning volunteers, more than 2,200 of them, saved the post more than $1.7 million last year — or the equivalent of 98,000 paid man hours.

Those volunteers will be honored at a reception on the lawn of Riverside, the commanding general's home, at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski will be presented a "huge, massive," symbolic check to represent the magnitude of the the accomplishment, said Starla DeSaussure, Fort Benning's volunteer coordinator.

"These are people who give their time and talents and energy to save the Army a lot of money and make a big impact on this post," she said.

Among those recognized will be 25 individual volunteers and two organizations.

Fort Benning's volunteer force is honored annually during National Volunteer Week for the work they do and the money they save in the process.

The theme of this year's celebration is Inspire by Example.

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT

Twenty members of Fort Benning's Club Beyond went to Enterprise, Ala., March 20. The post youth group, lead by Steve Paquette, met with military kids from other installations to help the victims of a tornado that ripped through Enterprise March 1.

The teens spent their spring break working on Enterprise High School's football field, where graduations traditionally take place.

They also met with and worked alongside students from the school who shared their stories about the event that changed their lives and claimed the lives of eight of their classmates. March 1 started like any other school day, they said.

"I was so excited that morning, because it was the first of March, and I was sick of February. It was just like a normal day," said Courtney Bowden, a junior.

During second block, the principal came on the intercom and told the students they would be dismissed early because bad weather was headed their way.

The students went ecstatic, Bowden said. They

'I'm alive because I fought back,' Benning wife says

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Mary Lawler was 16 when she was attacked. She was walking to work when a stranger offered her a ride. When she declined, he grabbed her by the neck and tried to drag her to his car.

Lawler fought like the devil and won.

Statistics show that attackers are more likely to flee when they meet with resistance. Lawler knows it's true, and she shared her story with her classmates Monday during a self-defense course at Kefurt Gym.

"I'm alive because I fought back," she said.

Barbara Coleman, Monika Bishop and Scott

Higginbotham want the families of Fort Benning's deployed Soldiers to know how to fight. The three instructors, who led two sessions for the wives of 3rd Brigade Combat Team Soldiers, said fighting crimes like rape and burglary starts with education and awareness.

"The more they know, the more they are aware, the less likely they are to become victims," said Bishop, who owns Tae Kwon Do Plus on Milgen Road. "They need to know how to safeguard themselves at home, at work, at school — even on the phone."

Before Lawler's husband deployed with the 203rd Forward Support Battalion, she heard about an attack on post. A Fort Bragg Soldier was nabbed after he attacked a woman in her home. It worried Lawler, and she mentioned it to Coleman, who teaches Tae Kwon Do at Youth Services.

Coleman volunteered to teach free classes for the wives of deployed Soldiers. Soon after, Bishop and Higginbotham came on board. Higginbotham owns Tae Kwon Do Plus off Veterans Parkway.

"It's not about being scared," Bishop said. "We don't want women to be scared. We want them to be smart. I'm a fifth-degree black belt. Does that mean I'll go out and take a chance with my life? No. Being smart means being aware and doing everything you can to reduce your chances of being a victim."

The instructors first gave the women practical suggestions to stay safe — travel in pairs, keep nonlethal weapons handy — that sort of thing. Then they put them through a number of escape and evade techniques. The women partnered with classmates and practiced breaking chokeholds and maneuvering out of a clutch.

The greatest danger to women is their own complacency, Bishop said.

"I think people get too comfortable," she said. "We'd all like to live in Mayberry, but that's not the reality of it."

"You don't know everyone's background. You'd like to trust everyone, but you can't. You have to safeguard your family."

Scratching could mean allergies

Cats and dogs can suffer from pollen too

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

This time of year you may notice your pet itching, licking and biting its skin, but the cause may not be fleas. It could be spring allergies.

The springtime mass blooming of plants triggers allergic reactions called atopy in some dogs and cats, according to Healthypet.com. Like a human, the animal's body reacts to inhaled particles of pollen. An animal's allergic reaction is usually itching, licking and biting the skin, rather than the sneezing and watery eyes humans experience.

The pet's skin may be red and swollen, it may have difficulty breathing, and it could suffer digestive tract upsets from allergies. Other signs are persistent paw licking, ear infections and rubbing the face on the floor or furniture.

Some cases are so bad that dogs and cats will scratch and lick until they develop open sores, which can lead to secondary infections, according to the Web site. It may cause hair loss and end up with bald patches.

Allergies typically first appear between the ages of 1 and 4 years old, according to the Hound Health Handbook.

Some breeds of dogs are prone to allergies — beagles, terriers, Shar-Peis, Dalmatians, English bulldogs, golden retrievers, Irish setters, Lhasa Apsos, miniature schnauzers and pugs.

Allergies are an inherited problem and can't be eliminated, but the symptoms can be relieved.

If the atopy is seasonal, occurring for less than three months out of the year, oral medications from a veterinarian can be used to relieve itching, according to Healthypet.com.

In some cases, pets can be given antihistamines, including Benadryl, but talk with a veterinarian before beginning any treatment. Antihistamines block the chemicals called histamines that are released by the immune system. One drawback to this treatment is it can cause sleepiness.

If the allergy is severe, a veterinarian may do a skin allergy test or blood test to determine the exact allergen. In that case, veterinarians can give injections of the allergen in minimal doses to help the pet build up immunity.

This treatment is called immunotherapy and is the same as allergy shots for people. Drawbacks are the cost and time it takes to see results. The therapy doesn't work immediately, so other treatments will be needed in the mean time.

Other treatment options your vet may recommend are steroids, which make the allergic reaction less severe, and medicated shampoos, ointments and sprays. Essential fatty acid supplements may also reduce itching.

Allergies can be debilitating to animals, so if your pet has signs of seasonal allergies, make an appointment with your vet. For more information, go to the American Animal Hospital Association Web site, www.healthypet.com.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY
HOSPITAL

Dr. Lt. Col. Virginia Yates

Q: Can a person really die from taking too much Tylenol?

A: Yes. Tylenol is a brand name for the drug acetaminophen. There are misconceptions about acetaminophen. Because it's inexpensive and available over the counter, many people think that if they take too much, they'll just feel sick. Taking more than the prescription dose is dangerous and can actually cause death. According to the Centers for Disease Control, 450 people in the U.S. die from acetaminophen overdoses every year.

Q: How much Tylenol or acetaminophen can a person safely take?

A: The amount of acetaminophen a person can safely take varies based on age and overall health. Acetaminophen is metabolized in the liver. If a person is already taking other medications that stress the liver or if the person has liver disease, the person may need to limit the amount of acetaminophen taken. The maximum or largest dose an average healthy adult can safely take is 1,000 mg every six hours or 4,000 mg in 24 hours. The maximum dose for children is based on age. The younger the child, the smaller the dose. For these reasons, it's very important to follow label directions and let your doctor know if you're taking over the counter medications such as Tylenol or acetaminophen.

Q: Is Tylenol overdosing really a problem in the U.S.?

A: Yes. Here's some information from the Journal of Hepatology. Hepatology is the study of liver disease. Over six years, researchers tracked 662 patients in acute liver failure who were treated at 22 liver transplant centers. Acute liver failure is the most severe type, developing over days, unlike chronic liver failure that can simmer for years because of alcohol abuse or viral hepatitis. Almost half of the cases of liver failure were acetaminophen related. Acetaminophen overdose is an increasing problem. Acetaminophen was to blame for 28 percent of the liver poisonings in 1998, but it caused 51 percent of cases in 2003. That makes acetaminophen the most common cause of acute liver failure, the researchers reported. While most patients pulled through with intensive care, 74 died and 23 others received a transplant. About 44 percent of the cases were suicide attempts.

April is Occupational Therapy Month

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY
HOSPITAL

April is Occupational Therapy month. So, what is OT anyway?

1st Lt. Brian T. Gregg, an occupational therapist at Martin Army Community Hospital, said OTs specialize in hand therapy, ergonomics, work site evaluations, inpatient psychology and peak performance training. Gregg said the goal of OT is to facilitate functional independence following a physical injury, developmental delay or mental illness. OTs help enhance a person's ability to function when faced with these limitations.

"(The therapist) uses a holistic approach to treat the individual as a whole being versus an affected body part," Gregg said.

Patients are referred to therapy by a family care practitioner. OT assesses any functional limitations and provides treatment, education and recommendations to improve functional status. Treatment, designed specifically for each individual, focuses on improving skills needed to complete daily self-care, work and leisure activities.

"The occupational therapist's role is vital in helping Soldiers regain their ability to fire a weapon and complete their military mission following injuries," Gregg said. They also help patients regain motion and strength following a broken wrist, torn tendon or ligament injury.

Many Soldiers benefit from the educational benefits of OT that help Soldiers deal with life skills such as stress management, coping skills, leisure management and time management. Oftentimes, through work-site evaluations, many patients learn to modify their workstation to decrease symptoms of carpal tunnel syndrome and other repetitive motion injuries.

Members of Club Beyond from various installations spent their spring break cleaning up the football field at Enterprise High School. When the large debris was cleared, the combed the field inch by inch, elbow to elbow, removing tiny shards of debris. The seniors at Enterprise hope to graduate on the field. It's a 50-year tradition.

Club Beyond: Helps tornado victims

flipped out their phones and made plans for after school.

Before dismissal, about 1 p.m., the school's tornado siren went off, and the kids were moved into the halls.

"It happens all the time, so we're all just like, 'OK, same routine,' said Carleigh Donalds, also a junior.

The students had waited in the halls for about two hours when they got word that the tornado's path would lead right through the middle of the school. The teachers told them to buckle down, this was real and it was coming.

"All of a sudden, it got really cold. Before, it was humid, and then breezy," Bowden said. "The lights started to flicker on and off, and we were all in shock."

After that, the lights went out, it got very quiet. Students said they could hear the windows shattering in nearby classrooms.

"This is when I knew it as serious, so I started to pray at the top of my lungs. Down the hall, I heard my friends praying," Donalds said.

"We started screaming," said Mary Thomas, a senior. "My teacher jumped on top of me and my friend, telling me it was going to be OK. The next thing I knew, I woke up and there was nothing. There were three girls next to me. Literally buried. It looked like something you see in a movie."

Several Enterprise students are members of Club Beyond at Fort Rucker, Ala. Earlier this year, they went on a ski trip to North Carolina with members from Fort Benning.

Lionel Long, a freshman at Columbus High, said he worried about his new friends after learning about the storm damage. He "jumped at the opportunity" to go to Enterprise.

Fort Benning youth tour the destruction of the science hallway, which took the brunt of the damage.

"I just wanted to help and see how they were doing," he said. "I felt like I owed them that much."

Brittany Gregory, a sixth-grader at Faith, said she had no problem

"I could've stayed home and watched The Kids Choice Awards. This was more important," she said. "I needed to show these people that God's love is the greatest."

What did the resurrection do for you?

USAIC CHAPLAINS OFFICE
Chaplain (Maj.) Hank Young

Don't you just love holidays? They're good for a long weekend at least, and at best, a good excuse to get away from the daily grind without burning leave.

You may think I'm not being sensitive to the reason behind our recent three-day weekend. You may think I'm going to try jar you from the daily grind mentality into a higher spiritual plane.

What I want to do is do a look back, further than Easter, further than Christmas, and even past our own births. After all, what do we really know past our first memories other than what others have told us? How do we know what we can trust, what is truth? History is what it is — our trust, or faith, in the story of past events in the hands of its tellers.

What we know about history is mainly what we have received secondhand. So, how do we know what we know?

What criteria do we have to test what Francis Schaeffer called "True Truth?" — that is, truth that is a firm foundation, based upon correspondent facts which fit reality and allow us to build a life that will not crumble during storms. Storms are events that can create a spiritual crisis and lead to our belief that God doesn't really care about us.

Many of us suppose that we choose what is true, because it is what we want to know. It's our choice what we will accept as truth and what we will allow to shape our view of the world. We know what we know, because what we know suits our needs and meets our expectations.

Too simple? Perhaps. Too relative for you? I hope so. But, that's today's truth in a nutshell. When we become lost in the grind of life, often all we have left is hope that God really cares about us — which ultimately becomes our sustaining truth.

So, what did Christ's resurrection do for us? As we come back to work — perhaps more rested, but probably more tired from too much fun — we may pause to ask that question. And then again, we may be too busy because it is not true enough to impact us.

Now, is that really life? Too busy to live!

Yes, the resurrection was God's gift to us according to the Gospel of John, Chapter 3, and verse 16 — "For God so loved the world that he gave..."

The choice is up to us if there is life after God's gift.

Fort Benning to observe Days of Remembrance

1ST BATTALION,
50TH INFANTRY REGIMENT
Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz

Fort Benning will observe the Days of Remembrance from 11 a.m. to noon Wednesday in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The theme is Children in Crisis: Voices from the Holocaust.

It is our duty to remember the Holocaust. It is important for us to teach our youth to honor the sanctity of all human life and to respect every person regardless of race, color, or creed.

More than 60 years ago, the infamous Dr. Josef Mengele stood in the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp as prisoners were marched by — old people, young people, women clinging to their babies. Mengele selected some to go to the right, others to the left.

His decision determined who would go to the gas chamber and the crematoria.

Just after Winston Churchill was elected prime minister in 1940, he addressed parliament with the following words: "You ask, what is our policy? I say it is to wage war by land, sea and air. War with all our might and with all our strength God has given us, and to wage war against a monstrous tyranny never surpassed in the dark and lamentable catalogue of human crime. This is our policy. You ask what is our aim? I can answer in one word. It is victory. Victory at all costs, victory in spite of all terrors, victory, however long and hard the road may be, for without victory there is no survival.

"I feel entitled at this juncture, at this time, to claim the aid of all and to say, 'Come then, let us go forward with our united strength.'"

Eisenhower said in 1945, when he saw the concentration camps, "We are told that the American Soldier does not know what he is fighting for. Now, at least, he will know what he is fighting against."

The Holocaust was the most extensive and systematic genocide in human history, an event of unprecedented evil. Specifically it must be confronted as the evil of anti-Semitism and virulent hatred of the Jewish people and the Jewish faith.

Nazis and their collaborators murdered 6 million Jews, including more than one million children, and millions of other people.

The Holocaust is significant to the American people since it was American troops who liberated many of the death camps, and the U.S. became a homeland for many of the survivors.

We are a humane people, concerned with the human rights of all people, therefore we should feel compelled to study the Holocaust so we can learn how to prevent such crimes against humanity from happening in the future.

In 1948, the Talmud (anthology of Jewish law and philosophy compiled 1,500 years ago) was published in Germany for the Displaced Persons. On the title page of each volume, the dedication reads: "This edition of the Talmud is dedicated to the United States Army. This Army played a major role in the rescue of the Jewish people from total annihilation, and after the burden of sustaining the DP's of the Jewish faith.

"The Jewish DP's will never forget the generous impulses and unprecedented humanitarianism of the American forces, to whom they owe so much."

Elie Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor and Nobel Prize winner said, "The principle that governs the biblical vision of society is 'Thou shall not stand idly by when your fellow man is hurting, suffering or being victimized.' (Leviticus 19:16)

"It is because that injunction was ignored or violated that the catastrophe involving such multitudes occurred. The victims perished not only because of the killers but also because of the apathy of the bystanders.

"What astonished us after the torment was not that so many killers killed so many victims, but that so few cared about us at all.

"One million Jewish children perished. If I spent my entire life reciting their names, I would die before finishing the task. I have seen children; I have seen them being thrown into the flames — alive. Words, they die on my lips.

"I was there in Buchenwald when American liberators arrived. And they gave us back our lives. And what I felt for them then nourishes me to the end of my days.

"We are grateful to this country, the greatest democracy in the world, the freest nation in the world, the moral nation, the authority in the world.

Recreational companionship important emotional need for many people

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Remember when you were young and in love? You know, before you were married? Remember the dating days when you went out and had fun? Did you know that approximately 85 percent of the time you spend dating revolves around doing fun things? If you understand this, then you understand why some of the fun seems to slip away after you are married.

It is not necessarily that you do not have any more fun, but most of your time is now invested in the daily routines of life. You get up and fix breakfast and rush out the door to work. Then when you come home, you are concerned about the bills getting paid, yard work, car upkeep and on and on. If you have kids, you know all the extra love and care they need. Talk about time demands. Most of our time is now spent on things that aren't fun. It seems we change from 85 percent of recreational activities to about 15 percent.

For some it is easy to fall in love when we are enjoying recreational activities. Do you know anyone like that — fun to be with when you are enjoying doing things together? I can remember when I was married, my wife would watch me play football, sit and watch football games with me, dive with me or sit in the boat or on the beach while I dove. But as life went on, I noticed she did not seem to want to do these things as much. What happened? Is this important for her or me?

For many people, recreational companionship is an important emotional need. When they are having fun, it is easy to put love tokens in their bank. They enjoy being together and doing things together. And then when the business of life takes over, many people stop doing things together.

Many people even start doing their own thing. The husband does his thing, and the wife does her thing. This is not always wrong or bad; some time apart can be healthy. The danger appears when you begin to enjoy your recreational activity with someone of the opposite sex. You begin to enjoy their company while having fun. And if we compare our partners to this other person, we begin to tread on dangerous ground. You risk "falling in love" with someone else. You may begin to have feelings for someone else as you spend time and have fun together. Guard each other from this.

Is recreational companionship one of your emotional needs? If recreational activities are important to you and they are not fulfilling unless you do them with someone else, then this is one of your emotional needs.

What do you do if it is your need or your mate's need? Plan on some recreation for the two of you. Plan some things that both of you enjoy — maybe a walk several times a week in the evening, or hitting some tennis balls together. Take up dancing or join a dance club. Maybe alternate between activities, do something she likes, then next time do something he likes. Maybe it is supporting your spouse by being present while they participate in a sport. By the way, men love to have you watch them compete. The sky is the limit. But if you do not plan to meet this recreational need, chances are the need, like many others, will go unmet.

If you have questions or are struggling with some unmet needs in your life, or are experiencing difficulties relating to your marriage, deployment, relationship issues, interpersonal problems, whatever you may be facing, the Chaplain Family Life Center is here for you. Our pastoral staff is here with help for your journey.

Call 706-545-1760 for an appointment or stop by our office at 2606 Dixie Road in Soldiers' Plaza.

GEORGIA STATE PARKS AND HISTORIC SITES

TRIVIA

Climbing staircases in parks is great exercise. Hikers brave 1,099 steps at Tallulah Gorge, nearly 1,200 at Cloudland Canyon and 1,208 at Amicalola Falls state parks.

The Lapham-Patterson House in Thomasville is said to have no right angles. Built by a Chicago show merchant who nearly perished in the city's great fire of 1871, each room has an easy exit from the house.

The gender of baby alligators, often seen in Stephen C. Foster State Park, is determined by egg temperature during incubation. Females develop from cooler eggs and warmer eggs develop males.

The tongue-twister name of Gordonia-Alatamaha State park comes from the Gordonia tree, one of the world's rarest trees, and the original spelling of the nearby Altamaha River. Ironically, the Gordonia tree isn't found in the park.

Poor farming practices during the 1800s led to the beautiful geography of Providence Canyon State Park, known as Georgia's "Little Grand Canyon."

Cherokee leader James Vann once fired a pistol at dinner guests through the bedroom floor in Chief Vann House Historic Site. Called the "Showplace of the Cherokee Nation," this two-story classic mansion is one of the best-preserved Cherokee plantation homes. Built by James Vann in 1804, it was the first brick home within the Cherokee Nation.

Our nation's gold rush began near Dahlonega, not in California as commonly believed. The story of this exciting time in history is told at Dahlonega Gold Museum State Historic Site.

In 1864, General Sherman's infamous "March to the Sea" ended at Fort McAllister State Historic Park, enabling him to present Savannah as a "Christmas present" to President Abraham Lincoln.

The 229-foot covered bridge at Watson Mill Bridge State park is Georgia's longest covered bridge still in its original location.

At 729 feet, the cascade at Amicalola Falls State Park is the tallest waterfall east of the Mississippi River.

Indian Springs Historic Site is thought to be the oldest state park in the nation, visited by Creek Indians who believed the natural spring water had healing qualities. Still collected today, the water loses its sulfur taste after sitting for several hours.

Near the Little White House, is a life-size sculpture of President Franklin D. Roosevelt at his favorite picnic spot, Dowdell's Knob. It is the only sculpture showing the leg braces he wore because of polio.

At least one state park or historic site is within an hour's drive of everyone in Georgia. All state park campgrounds and some rental cottages welcome leashed pets.

Admission fees for state historic sites range from $2 to $7 for adults, significantly less than most attractions.

Indian Springs State Park, located off I-75 in middle Georgia, was acquired by the state in 1825. The Creek Indians used the springs for centuries to heal the sick. During the 1800s, the area was a bustling resort town. Today, visitors can still sample the spring water while enjoying the park's cottages, camping, swimming, fishing and boating. Many structures within the park, such as the spring house, were built during the Great Depression by members of Franklin Delanore Roosevelt's Civilian Conservation Corps. A museum highlights Creek Indians, the resort era and CCC history.

Georgia's state parks, historic sites celebrate 75th anniversary

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

Georgia has 63 state parks and historic sites, encompassing nearly 73,000 acres. More than 10 million people visit the parks annually, according to the Georgia State Park and Historic Sites Web site.

At the historic sites, visitors can learn about colonial life and Native American settlements, Civil War battles and the nation's first gold rush, said Becky Kelley, director of the State Parks and Historic Sites Division, Georgia Department of Natural Resources.

The state's oldest park, if not the oldest in the nation, is Indian Springs State Park, in Butts County. In 1825, Creek Chief McIntosh signed the illegal Treaty of Indian Springs deeding the land to the Georgia government, according to gastateparks.org. The Creeks assassinated him for treason and a valid treaty was signed later, and in 1828 "Indian Springs Reserve" was sold at public auction. Indian Springs became a state forest park in 1927, under administration by the Georgia Board of Forestry.

Vogel State Park is the second oldest state park in Georgia and one of the oldest parks in the nation.

Fred and Augustus Vogel of Milwaukee, Wis., owned thousands of acres of land in north Georgia to harvest bark from oak and hemlock trees, which was used in the leather tanning process. During World War I, a synthetic tanning method was developed. When the Vogels no longer needed the resources, they gave the property to the state in 1927.

According to gastateparks.org, the state park system grew rapidly as a result of the cooperation, work and contributions of the National Park Service, Civilian Conservation Corps and other agencies.

A.H. Stephens State Historic Park is Georgia's third oldest state park. It originated from property owned by Alexander Hamilton Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy. After his death, the property came under the control of a group chartered to protect Liberty Hall, Stephens' home, and its surroundings. The property was deeded to the state in 1933. Soon after, several hundred acres of land were purchased adjacent to the property by the federal government and later deeded to the state.

In 1986, with 72.4 acres of land donated by the shipping business W. C. Bradley Company, the Department of Natural Resources opened Florence Marina State Park located on Lake Walter F. George. The remaining land for the park is leased from the Army Corp of Engineers, which manages the lake, bringing total acreage to 173. The park provides access to Lake Walter F. George, a 45,000-acre lake used for fishing, skiing, birding and other activities. The park also provides education on Native American history, early American history of Stewart County and native wildlife and alligator tours.

The first park in Georgia named for a woman is the Laura S. Walker State Park in Ware County.

According to gastateparks.org, she loved trees and worked tirelessly for environmental preservation.

State parks and historic sites close to Fort Benning include Florence Marina, Providence Canyon and F.D. Roosevelt's Little White House.

Florence Marina State Park, in Stewart County, is at the northern end of 45,000-acre Lake Walter F. George. It's a perfect setting for those who love water sports, according to gastateparks.org. It is adjacent to a natural deep-water marina with an accessible deep-water fishing pier, boat slips and boat ramp.

Bird watchers are sure to see herons and egrets, and possibly, bald eagles. The park's Kirbo Interpretive Center teaches visitors about Native Americans, nature and local history, and it displays snakes, turtles, fish and artifacts from the prehistoric Paleo-Indian period through the early 20th century.

The park is located 16 miles west of Lumpkin at the end of Ga. Hwy. 39C.

Ten miles southeast of the Marina is Providence Canyon State Park, known as Georgia's Little Grand Canyon, with hiking trails and a visitor center. The nearly 1,100 acre park in Stewart County was once owned by three families and the Providence Methodist Church.

Poor farming practices and lack of soil conservation provide visitors the opportunity to see land that once was undersea. Today there are 16 canyons in all where 43 different colors can be seen in the rocks and soil.

The park is host to several rare plants. The most famous of all is the plumleaf azalea that blooms along the canyon floor. This shrub grows only in a 165-mile radius in southwest Georgia and southeast Alabama. Providence Canyon is known worldwide as having the largest natural concentration of this azalea, according to the Web site.

The Little White House, in Meriwether County, is where Franklin D. Roosevelt died in 1945. Near Warm Springs, the 163-acre historic site is where Roosevelt built a home in 1932, while still governor of New York. His first trip to the area was in 1924 — swimming in the spring waters eased the polio he contracted in 1921.

OPENING TODAY
SLOW BURN — Ford Cole (Ray Liotta) is a big-city district attorney with his eye on the mayor's office and a big problem on his hands. One of his deputies, assistant district attorney Nora Timmer (Jolene Blalock), has just confessed to killing a man in what she claims was self-defense.

A bad situation gets worse when an enigmatic stranger named Luther Pink (LL Cool J) turns up at the police station to contradict Nora's story and paint a very different picture of Ford's talented colleague.

Slow Burn is rated R for sexuality, violence and language.

PATHFINDER — A thousand years in the past, a young Norse boy is left behind after his clan shipwrecks on the Eastern shores. Despite his lineage, the boy is raised by the very Indians his kinsmen set out to destroy.

As the Vikings return to stage another barbaric raid on his village, the 25-year-old Norse warrior wages a personal war to stop the Viking's trail of death and destruction.

Karl Urban and Moon Bloodgood star in the movie.

Pathfinder is rated R for strong brutal violence throughout.

DISTURBIA — After his father's death, Kale (Shia LaBeouf) becomes sullen, withdrawn and troubled — so much so that he finds himself under a court-ordered sentence of house arrest.

The walls of the house begin to close in on Kale. He becomes a voyeur as his interests turn outside the windows of his suburban home toward those of his neighbors, one of which Kale begins to suspect is a serial killer.

But are his suspicions merely the product of cabin fever and his overactive imagination?

Disturbia is rated PG-13 for sequences of terror and violence and some sensuality.

PERFECT STRANGER — When investigative reporter Rowena Price (Halle Berry) learns that her friend's murder might be connected to powerful ad executive Harrison Hill (Bruce Willis), she goes undercover with the help of her associate, Miles Hailey (Giovanni Ribisi).

Posing as Katherine, a temp at Hill's ad agency, and Veronica, a girl Hill flirts with online, Rowena surrounds her prey from all sides, only to discover that she isn't the only one changing identities.

Perfect Stranger is rated R for sexual content, nudity, disturbing violent images and language.

ALSO PLAYING

ARE WE DONE YET? — Now married to Suzanne (Nia Long), Nick Persons (Ice Cube) has bought a quiet suburban house to escape the rat race of the big city and to provide more space for his new wife and kids Lindsey (Alesha Allen) and Kevin (Philip Bolden).

But when his new home quickly becomes a costly "fixer-upper" and he finds himself at the mercy of an eccentric contractor, Nick's suburban dream becomes a riotous nightmare.

Bruce Willis and Halle Berry star in Perfect Stranger, opening in theaters today nationwide.

Are We Done Yet? is rated PG for some innuendos and brief language.

Rose McGowan, Freddy Rodriguez, Josh Brolin and Marley Shelton star in the movie.

Grindhouse is rated R for strong graphic bloody violence and gore, pervasive language, some sexuality, nudity and drug use.

FIREHOUSE DOG — Rex, Hollywood's top-grossing canine, is known for his extreme athletic abilities and diva-like demeanor. Rex's luck — and Hollywood high life — runs out while shooting a commercial. An aerial stunt goes awry, leading Rex's handlers to presume he's dead. But Rex is merely lost — alone, filthy and unrecognizable in an unfamiliar city.

Ashisdad Connor (Bruce Greenwood) is reprimanding Shane (Josh Hutcherson) for his unruly behavior, the Dogpatch Fire Department gets a call to put out a blaze tearing through the lofts where Rex has been hiding. Rex makes a death-defying leap and is rescued by Connor. Shane becomes his reluctant new master but his attitude changes when he discovers Rex's spectacular skills.

Firehouse Dog is rated PG for sequences of action peril, some mild crude humor and language.

THE REAPING — This is a supernatural tale that centers on a myth debunker who tries to prove that a small boy is not the supernatural force behind the devastation of a small, religious Texas town.

The Reaping, rated R for violence, disturbing images and some sexuality, stars Hilary Swank and AnnaSophia Robb.

BLADES OF GLORY — When rival figure skaters Chazz Michael Michaels (Will Ferrell) and Jimmy MacElroy (Jon Heder) go ballistic in an embarrassing, no-holds-barred fight at the World Championships, they are stripped of their gold medals and banned from the sport for life.

Now, three-and-a-half years later, they've found a loophole that will allow them to compete: if they can put aside their differences, they can skate together — in pairs' figure skating.

Blades of Glory is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language, comic violence and drug references.

MEET THE ROBINSONS — When Lewis meets a mysterious boy from the future named Wilbur Robinson, the two travel forward in time where Lewis discovers the amazing secret of the Robinson family.

Lewis is a brilliant 12-year-old with a surprising number of clever inventions to his credit. His latest and most ambitious project is the Memory Scanner, which he hopes will retrieve early memories of his mother and maybe even reveal why she put him up for adoption.

But before he can get his answer, his invention is stolen by the dastardly Bowler Hat Guy and his diabolical hat — and constant companion — Doris.

Angela Bassett, Spencer Fox and Jordan Fry voice the animated characters in the movie.

Meet the Robinsons is rated G.

THE LOOKOUT — Chris (Joseph Gordon-Levitt), a once promising high school athlete, has his life turned upside down after a tragic accident.

As he tries to maintain a normal life, he takes a job as a janitor at a bank where he ultimately finds himself caught up in a planned heist.

The Lookout is rated R for language, some violence and sexual content.

THE HILLS HAVE EYES 2 — What started with the Carter family clearly didn't end with the Carter family. Some time later, as part of a routine mission, a unit of National Guard Soldiers stop at a New Mexico outpost only to find the isolated research camp mysteriously deserted. After spotting a distress signal in a distant mountain range, the team decides to commence a search and rescue mission into the hills. Little do they know that these are the very hills that the ill-fated Carter family once visited, and that a tribe of cannibalistic mutants lies in wait.

Jessica Stroup, Reshad Strik and Michael McMillian star in the movie.

The Hills Have Eyes 2 is rated R for strong gruesome violence and terror throughout, and for language.

PRIDE — The year is 1973, and Jim Ellis (Terrence Howard), a college-educated African-American, can't find a job. Driven by his love of competitive swimming, Jim converts an abandoned recreational pool hall in a Philadelphia slum with the help of Elston (Bernie Mac), a local janitor.

When city officials mark the new Philadelphia Department for Recreation for demolition, Jim fights back — by starting the city's first African-American swim team.

Pride is rated PG for thematic material, language including some racial epithets, and violence.

THE LAST MIMZY — Two children (Rhiannon Leigh Wryn and Chris O'Neil) discover a mysterious box that contains some strange devices they think are toys. As the children begin to play with these "toys," they begin to display higher and higher intelligence levels. Their parents realize that something extraordinary is happening.

NEW RELEASES
FREEDOM WRITERS: Two-time Academy Award winner Hilary Swank's earnest appeal does much for this MTV-produced drama, the true story of Erin Gruwell, an inner-city schoolteacher who used the story of World War II refugee Anne Frank to inspire her students to rise above their personal difficulties.

Patrick Dempsey, Grey's Anatomy, co-stars as Gruwell's husband, whose support of her efforts wanes. April Lee Hernandez and Deance Wyatt are prominent as pupils, and veteran actress Pat Carroll appears as Frank's savior, Miep Gies. (PG-13:AS, P,V)

NOTES ON A SCANDAL: Judi Dench and Cate Blanchett were Oscar nominees for this intense drama about the unusual link between two schoolteachers. The elder educator eventually holds something over the younger one, who is discovered in an illicit encounter with a student.

The threat of the indiscretion being exposed makes Blanchett's character a virtual slave to Dench's. Bill Nighy Love Actually co-stars in the tale, adapted from Zoe Heller's novel by Patrick Marber Closer. DVD extras: two "makingof" documentaries; audio commentary by director Richard Eyre; deleted scenes. (R:AS, P)

In Freedom Writers, a teacher (Swank) inspires her at-risk students to learn tolerance, apply themselves, and pursue education beyond high school.

COMING SOON

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM (April 24): A museum security guard (Ben Stiller) is stunned, and endangered, when exhibits come to life. Robin Williams, Dick Van Dyke and Mickey Rooney co-star. (PG:AS, P)

DREAMGIRLS (May 1): Oscar winner Jennifer

Hudson is featured in the film version of the stage hit about a female singing trio. Jamie Foxx, Bey-once Knowles and Eddie Murphy also star. (PG-13:AS, P)

FAMILY VIEWING GUIDE KEY: AS, adult situations; N, nudity; P, profanity; V, violence; GV, particularly graphic violence.

30, going on 13

*I know, I know;
I have my entire life
ahead of me.
Don't we all.*

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

I woke up Monday morning with mixed feelings to say the least. I did the usual. I brushed my teeth and none seemed to be at risk of falling out. I shaved my head and face and didn't see any grey. My knee is creaking a little, but hey, I injured it hitting a winning basket 10 years ago. Too bad it was a pick up game.

I took one good look at the mirror and I just saw me, the kid who loves good music, Japanese animation and [adult swim] cartoons.

But this kid was born 30 years to the day at about 8:30 in the morning. I never was a morning person.

Turning 30 has been something I have tried to ignore for a while now.

Most people say the same thing, "Oh you're still a baby." My parents asked me "do you feel 30 yet?" Honestly I didn't, until I saw the candles nearly set my cake on fire and the hologram card my mom bought showing the number 30 zooming in and out by shifting it's position.

My only problem with turning 30 is the contrast between my age and my interests.

I am a die-hard music fanatic. But I'm far more inclined to listen to Sly and the Family Stones and The Talking Heads before checking out the new Rich Boy or Young Jeezy CD.

I am also the age of some of my favorite "old school" hip-hop artists. Even if I am younger than some of them, they released their debut records at age 18 or younger, which makes me feel that my chances of breaking into the music business are running slim.

I look at all these young athletes and really get depressed.

Ohio State's wonder child, Greg Oden, is 18 years old and looks like he could be my dad.

Lebron James is in his fourth year in the league and is barely past the drinking age. So much for my shot at being a rookie sensation in the NBA.

I don't weigh too much more than I did in high school but, I lack stamina. If I go out dancing, I feel it for two days afterward, and that's after one song. The idea of being "that old guy in the club" is frightening.

As much as I appreciate the respect, I'd love to hear a "what's up man" from the snot-nosed kid at Best Buy, instead of the 'yes sirs' and smirks that I get when they see me toting a John Coltrane CD to the register.

What I think about most is that I'm really starting to sound like my parents.

When I watch television and listen to the radio, I get disgusted at what's considered music and quality shows. Actually, I've been like that for about 10 years now, but hey, who's counting. It's not like I'm really old—well.....

Yeah I know, getting older is a blessing that I should appreciate more than I have lately.

I have accomplished so many things, and I have a lot to be proud of. Besides, I know I have my entire life ahead of me. Don't we all.

I have set many goals, and lucky for me, most of them know no age bracket. I have long since hung up my thoughts of playing in the NBA or being the next Tyson Beckford.

It's a matter of time before I release my own music whether anyone buys it or not, and I won't try to appeal to the younger audience just for the sake of it.

Most visual artists don't break out until after they die so hopefully my drawings won't take Paris by storm too soon.

I also want to have my own family someday, but I won't rush that to avoid the possibility of playing catch with my son in my 50s.

My hairline may be receding, but I'm not ready to take Geritol, put mothballs in my closet or wake up early in the morning to do yard work just yet.

Maybe next year.

'One bite at a time'

*Infantry School top NCO tackles
BRC with son*

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

The most curious partnership in this year's Best Ranger Competition may be Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Greenway and his son, Staff Sgt. Brandon Greenway.

The father-son team will set a number of precedents. At 47, and feeling "not a day over 46," the senior Greenway will be the oldest competitor in the history of the BRC, now in its 24th year. If he makes it to the finish line, he'll certainly be the first competitor with a grandchild waiting at the other end.

And never before has there been a father-son team. The closest anyone can remember was the brothers Schlichte, who won it in 1988.

Casey: 'Victory starts here'

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

"It all starts here," said Gen. George W. Casey Jr., the Army's chief of staff, during a visit to Fort Benning April 13.

Casey took office the Monday prior and hit the ground running with back-to-back tours of various installations. He started with TRADOC, and Fort Benning specifically, because "victory starts here."

"That's the TRADOC motto, and I believe it," said Casey, who commanded the Multi-National Force-Iraq for the past 30 months.

For Casey and Sheila, his wife of more than 36 years, the trip to Benning was Army business mixed with pleasure.

"It all started here for us, too. Benning was our first home," said Casey, who rented at the old Camellia Apartments outside the post's main gate when he attended the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

While Casey was touring post, with stops at the McKenna MOUT site, Wilson Village and Martin Army Community Hospital, his wife met with local Army spouses. Their goal was to "pulse" the Fort Benning community.

It's a process Casey started several months ago, long before he took office.

Volunteers on Fort Benning worked the equivalent of 11 years in a single year, said Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, at the Volunteer Awards Ceremony at Riverside Tuesday.

"I applaud you for the support you give to Soldiers and Families on Fort Benning," Candy Wojdakowski, the commanding general's wife, told volunteers. She spoke of volunteers who give multiple days each week to volunteering.

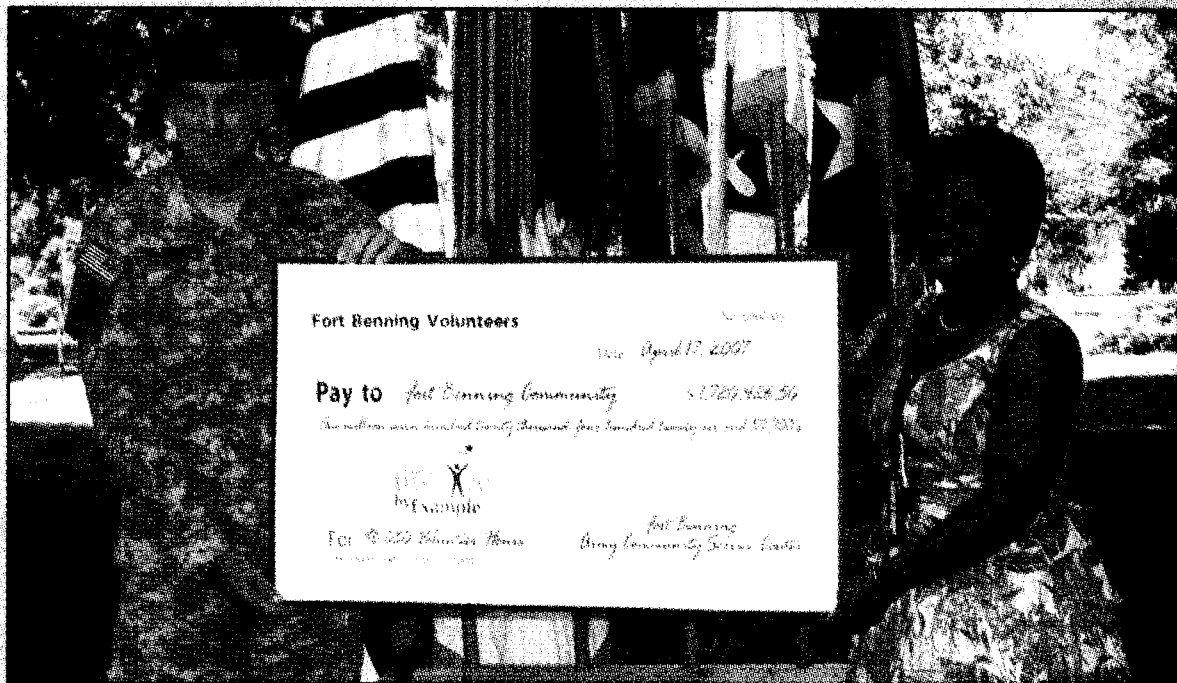

Quoting former President George Bush, Gen. Wojdakowski said, "A volunteer is a person who can see what others cannot see; who can feel what most do not feel."

"Volunteering is one of the bedrocks of America and one of the bedrocks of Fort Benning," he said.

The impact volunteers have on the Soldiers, Families, organizations and spirit of Fort Benning is immeasurable, he said.

"I thank you on behalf of the 120,000 people who call Fort Benning home," Wojdakowski said.

A symbolic check for $1.7 million was presented to Wojdakowski representing the dollar amount of work volunteers did on Fort Benning last year, which equates to 98,000 man hours.

All individual volunteers, more than 2,200 of them, were recognized with certificates of appreciation, and volunteer of excellence awards were given to individuals and groups that distinguished themselves with their service to the Fort Benning community.

The ceremony's theme was "Inspire by Example," and among the people recognized were family readiness group leaders, retirees who gave their time to the Red Cross and teens who helped with youth programs on post.

Fort Benning held the ceremony during National Volunteer Week, which is April 15 to 21 this year.

Army proves it cares about Families

COMMANDING GENERAL
Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

Our Army has made tremendous improvements in quality of life programs in the 35 years I have been a Soldier. We have spent millions on Child and Youth Services programs worldwide and our child-care standards and oversight practices for these services rank number one in the United States. They are the envy of many federal, state and local programs across our country.

Our Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation's Child and Youth Services operates several different programs geared for Soldiers' children, from babies to teens, and helps provide care for every situation — no matter how unique or what time of day or night it may be.

Fort Benning's child care far exceeds the minimum requirement of ensuring a clean and safe environment for our children. The major focus of CYS is education and social adaptability.

In addition to three child-care facilities, CYS offers a pre-school, three free Georgia pre-K programs, before and after school programs and a Mid-Zone for middle school students. Even high school students have their own safe haven at the Hang Out with activities geared just for them.

Army Families encounter unique challenges moving from post to post. Every installation has a school liaison officer working with children, parents and school administrators to alleviate issues with graduation, scholarship and athletic requirements. Our school liaison officer is my "eyes and ears" between Fort Benning and six different local school districts in two states, along with the Department of Defense schools on post.

Education does not stop in the classroom. Our CYS offers a multitude of academic and special interest classes through the SKIESUnlimited program, which features courses as diverse as kindermusik for babies and tae kwon do. Thanks to your feedback, more classes are planned in the near future.

Just as exercising the brain is important to mental development, exercising the body keeps us running smoothly. Our CYS operates sports and fitness programs and coaches clinics year-round. Soldiers volunteer for coaching and other positions with several different sports at all age levels.

Let's not forget about the special children's events held throughout the year such as the Easter Eggstravaganza and Santa at Riverside or the Kids Activity Centers found at every major event. Last week's Luau and the upcoming Independence Day celebration are good examples of this. These events are always free and usually a big hit with our youth.

Knowing Fort Benning will transform to the Maneuver Center of Excellence with the relocation of the Armor School here by 2011, CYS is monitoring the number of children involved in their programs to prepare for the expected increase of young family members. Already a new School Age Services building is scheduled to be built in 2009.

How does CYS do all this? The money needed to run such an all-encompassing operation comes from congressional funds and parent fees.

The Fort Benning community, through town hall meetings or the Interactive Customer Evaluation system, identified the need for facilities and services such as the skateboard park, teen center and a special-needs bus, which use non-appropriated funds. I thank everyone who contributed comments to improve our quality of life.

Soldiers must be able to report for duty and training without worrying about their Families for us to succeed in our mission.

Thanks to the wide range of care and programs offered by Child and Youth Services, our Soldiers know their children are safe at Fort Benning.

Follow me!

A giant walks among us

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

The one constant in the Best Ranger Competition — hint: it's not the Prusik — has been the man for whom it is named, retired Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr.

Grange is a veteran of 20 campaigns in three wars. He enlisted in 1942 and served as a parachute Infantryman in Rome-Arno, Southern France, Rhineland, Ardennes and Central Europe.

He didn't volunteer to be a Ranger — "didn't even know where the Ranger Department was" when he was assigned here as a captain in the early 50s, during the Korean War. But he took to it like a duck to water. He "loved every minute of it, even walking those lanes." Back then, walking those lanes meant accompanying students through every phase of Ranger School. Imagine that.

Becoming a Ranger was the best thing he ever did, Grange said. The training served him well in Korea and three times in Vietnam.

Grange is a hero, according to my definition of a hero, and those who know me, know I use the word judiciously. At 82, he is a legend, a giant who walks among us once a year every year. He missed the first BRC way back in 1982, when he was still on active duty and commanding the 6th Army. He hasn't missed one since.

Me, I've only been around for seven BRCs, but that's plenty long enough to work up enough courage to approach the man, don't you think? The problem is I tend to be a bit intimidated by the Granges and the Pucketts and the Plumbeys of this world. So I decided to take the coward's way out, the telephone. I can take rejection long distance.

I tried to reach him Tuesday morning at his farm in Pennsylvania, but he was out taking soil samples, preparing to put down soybeans, maybe corn. That was good news for this corn-fed girl from the farmland — a man who gets that down with the earth must be down to earth in other respects. Yeah, I measure the character of a legend by his comfort level with a trowel and spade. Doesn't everybody?

Grange called me back Tuesday afternoon, and we chatted for quite some time. There was really no interview involved; we just chatted, the legend and I. Mostly he led, and I followed.

He wanted to make one thing clear: "The (BRC) was never my idea," he said, and he was humbled when he learned that his friend Dick Leandri, the original "Chairborne Ranger," wanted to name the competition the Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition. Of course, the competition itself was humble back then.

"Sometimes I have to pinch myself," he said, when I him asked how it feels to be a part of it each year, to watch it evolve from an in-house Ranger Olympics to the finest competition of Soldier professionalism and fitness and wisdom in the world. His words, not mine, but I concur.

"It gets bigger and bigger and better and better," every year, he said, because the Army and the military and the public in general have realized the value of Rangers. That wasn't always the case.

"I served with the Rangers during their dark days," Grange said, "when the continuation of their very existence was in doubt."

That was in the early 70s, after the unpopular war. "Folks higher up" were looking for ways to save money, he said, and "they thought the Rangers might be a good place to start."

Somebody somewhere hit upon the idea of sending ROTC cadets to Ranger School. They took their training back to campuses across the country and formed elite ROTC "Ranger squads." Suddenly the prospect of serving in the Army — as a Ranger — became attractive again.

"ROTC helped save the Rangers, and the Rangers breathed fire and life into the ROTC," Grange said. "Everybody wanted to be a Ranger, but there were only so many slots, you know. Cadets would stand in line out there at Harmony Church waiting, just waiting for someone to get sent home so they could take his place."

Rangers begat Rangers, Grange said, and that's the way it's always been. People admire great leaders, but Soldiers emulate them.

After Grange retired from the Army in 1984, he went to work with the Battle Command Training Program at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where he stayed until a couple of months ago. The BCTP is the focal point for the Army National Guard division and brigade staff training and development. There, Grange said, he saw the legacy of those early ROTC Ranger programs. There, he became a believer in One Army.

"There are Ranger tabs everywhere. It's just wonderful to see them all over the Army," he said. "No matter where they are in the Army and National Guard — not just in the Ranger units, you know — they are real Rangers who rise to leadership positions and make such valuable contributions to our military and our country."

"It really makes me feel good after all these years to see Rangers serving everywhere in our military," he said. "They take that training with them."

Yep, Grange didn't know where the Rangers were back in 1950. But he knows where they are now. They're all over the Army. And he'll find the greatest concentration of them right here this weekend at the 24th annual Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition.

Paratroopers gather on post for Airborne reunion

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Airborne alumni traveled to Fort Benning for the 30th annual Airborne Awards Festival at the Airborne Walk April 12.

Airborne veterans from WWII forward were on hand to honor fallen comrades, renew old friendships and meet new Airborne Soldiers and their trainers from the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Billy Duncan was a paratrooper during the Korean and Vietnam wars and made several combat jumps, serving from 1950 until 1980. He attended the event with his wife and grandson.

"I would have stayed 10 more years if they had let me," Duncan said.

The guests witnessed a demonstration of Airborne training exercises and a jump by the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Demonstration Team.

Members of the team treated the spectators to acrobatic parachute maneuvers and a precision landing in front of the bleachers.

Command Sgt. Major Clement Green explained the point of the show.

"It shows Soldiers that are coming to Airborne School in a snapshot what to expect. They see that safety is the most important thing we stress," he said.

Following the demonstration was a wreath-laying ceremony honoring fallen Airborne Soldiers. A wreath was placed on the Airborne Walk.

Guest speaker and former 18th Airborne Corps commander, retired

Lt. Gen. Dick Seitz, praised the early Airborne veterans, the paratroopers that followed, and the new Airborne Soldiers that will follow.

"You were the cream of our nation," he said. "When called, you old Soldiers came to the aid of our nation and served in an outstanding manner. You were the foundation.

Others continued your work and fought in following conflicts and did so proudly and honorably. Today's young American Airborne Soldiers are full of idealism and vigor. They are serving in harm's way all over the world. We have every right to be as proud of them as we are of those who have gone before."

Guests included Lessie Ivey, widow of an original test platoon member; Ben Reese, one of two known surviving members of the original Parachute Test Platoon; and, retired 1st Sgt. Walter Morris, the first African-American paratrooper.

"That was a dramatic change in that segregated era. Airborne erased prejudices, color didn't matter, we were all proud to be Airborne," he said.

Morris was accompanied by his grandson, Capt. Michael Fowles, company commander of F Company, 3rd Battalion, 13th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Jackson, S.C.

"This is our first time back here since he pinned on my Airborne wings in 2004," Fowles said. "He's a great man and a role model."

1st Battalion executive officer, Maj. Larry Glasscock, expressed the command's support for the occasion.

"These events are important and show that we can support out veterans and still continue to fight the Global War on Terrorism," Glasscock said.

Test Platoon member and veteran paratrooper Ben Reese presents Airborne wings to Pvt. Matthew Martini, the youngest member of his class. The wings were later pinned on by 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, Command Sgt. Major Clement Green, middle.

203rd FSB medics bring hope of new leg to young Iraqi man

FORWARD OPERATING BASE HAMMER, Iraq — Medics from C Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, gave a little hope to a local Iraqi boy when they provided him with a new prosthetic leg April 9.

Hussein, the 15-year-old son of a local vendor, lost his leg in an IED incident four years ago. He was treated and fitted for a prosthetic leg at a hospital in Baghdad.

Since that time, because of normal adolescent growth and the harsh environment in Iraq, Hussein has outgrown the now worn-down prosthetic.

Maj. Cynthia Majerske, from Bar Harbor, Maine, battalion surgeon for the 203rd FSB, said kids should have their prosthetics replaced once a year and teens once every two years.

"The challenge is the conditions you take for granted back in the (U.S.). Here, it is one more challenge to face," said Majerske.

Majerske is attached to the 3rd BCT from Fort Bragg, N.C., where she is a physical medicine and rehab physician.

"The prosthetic I would have prescribed is a silicone sleeve with a locking pin, but due to the harsh conditions here, I want to give Hussein an exoskeleton design with a hard outer casing," she said.

Majerske said she wants Hussein to have something he can easily take care of on his own, because it's more difficult in Iraq to take the leg to a medical professional for adjustments.

"It was very rewarding to do this for Hussein," said Sgt. Jae Min Yandon, of Rochester, N.Y., a medic in C Company, 203rd FSB.

"The father was so thankful," Yandon said.

Yandon said the vendor has another son with the same problem and is trying to make arrangements with the 203rd FSB medics for surgery.

Fort Benning honors Holocaust victims and survivors

Holocaust commemorative service held Wednesday

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Fort Benning commemorated the 6 million Jews killed in the Holocaust at a service hosted by the Equal Opportunity Office in Marshall Auditorium Wednesday.

Col. Keith Lovejoy, garrison commander, quoted President George W. Bush at the service and called the Holocaust a crime against humanity.

"Human evil has never been so ambitious in scope, so systematic in execution and so deliberate in its destruction," he said.

The National Days of Remembrance are April 15 through Sunday, and the theme is Children in Crisis: Voices from the Holocaust.

Only a small fraction of European Jewish children survived the Holocaust, and most survived because they were in hiding, said Sgt. 1st Class Scott Ross, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who was the master of ceremonies.

Members of the Faith Middle School drama club brought voice to the Holocaust by speaking as people who lived during the event. One student spoke for a Jewish store owner who was deported with her husband and children and was killed just days before U.S. Soldiers reached the area where they were being held.

Other students spoke for a Polish soldier who was arrested and put in a camp, a 17-year-old Jehovah's Witness whose family was executed and who died while being forced to dig trenches, and a mentally ill woman who was killed in a gas chamber in Germany.

About 11 million people lost their lives at the hands of Nazis during the Holocaust. More than 6 million of those were Jews, including 1 million children.

Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz, speaker at the service, spoke of Anne Frank, a Jewish teenager who wrote a book while in hiding from the Nazis.

"Anne Frank never saw her 16th birthday," Horovitz said. She died in a concentration camp Faith Middle School student Caitlin Patterson recites a poem she wrote called Because of One Man at the Holocaust commemorative service Wednesday. Patterson wrote the poem about Hitler and the things he did.

of an illness.

Horovitz visited the Auschwitz concentration camp and Birkenau extermination camp in Poland. He stood in a place that was covered with the ashes of people who were killed there, he said.

"Remembrance of the Holocaust is our duty to the past and future. We should feel compelled to learn about the Holocaust ... so we can prevent such future evils," Horovitz said. "The only way evil can grow is if people stand by and do nothing."

Horovitz also spoke of the U.S. Army's role in the Holocaust and told of the 1948 edition of the Talmud, a Jewish book, that was dedicated to the Army.

Many of the people rescued by the Army and other survivors came to the U.S., he said, and the Jewish displaced people will never forget how much they owe to the Army.

Chaplain (Maj.) Avrohom Horovitz wears a Jewish garment and lays tefillin around his arm. Tefillin are leather pouches containing scrolls of Torah passages which are worn by Jewish men on the arms and head during morning prayer services. Jewish people risked their lives fighting to keep such items with them during the Holocaust, said Horovitz, who was the speaker at the Holocaust commemorative service.

Photos by Rachel Houston

Horovitz originally wanted to join the Reserves, but when he spoke of his desire to join the Army at a synagogue in Florida, a man began crying.

The man told Horovitz he had been in a concentration camp when the U.S. Army came, and he met a Jewish Soldier who eventually helped the man come to the U.S. Remembering it had brought the man to tears.

Horovitz decided then to join the active-duty Army.

Horovitz is one of seven Jewish chaplains in the Army and the only one on Fort Benning. He is the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, chaplain.

In 1935, his grandfather moved his family from Germany to England, but some of his relatives died in the Holocaust.

Horovitz's great uncle was in a concentration camp near Frankfurt, Germany.

Caitlin Patterson wrote a poem about Hitler and the way he changed the world called Because of One Man.

The Faith Middle School student recited her poem at the service.

The Faith Middle School chorus sang the national anthem and a song by Doron Levinson called Lay Down Your Arms.

Prevent heat injuries

Take precaution when training in hot weather

MEDDAC

Heat injuries, which can cause permanent brain injuries or death, are a concern at Fort Benning because summers in Georgia are typically very humid.

The body rids itself of heat by sweating. The heat is removed when the sweat dries. But when it's humid out, the air doesn't dry sweat very well, so it's harder for your body to stay cool, even if it's only in the 70s or 80s.

Types of heat injuries

There are several types of heat-related illnesses. We are most concerned with preventing heat exhaustion and stroke.

- Mild heat illnesses include heat rash and heat cramps. Sunburns are also considered heat-related illnesses.

Heat rash and sunburns makes people susceptible to more serious injuries, because they damage the skin and interfere with sweating.

- Painful heat cramps occur when people lose too much salt. Usually drinking a sports drink will solve the problem.

- Serious heat injuries, including heat exhaustion and heat stroke, occur when the body cannot adequately cool itself. For most people, heat exhaustion begins with dehydration.

You can lose up to two liters in sweat an hour, but your stomach only absorbs 1.5 liters an hour max, so it's actually surprising that we don't have more problems with heat.

Heat injury symptoms

- Symptoms of dehydration include feeling dizzy, tired or nauseous.

Throwing up is particularly dangerous, because it makes it impossible to stay hydrated.

- If the person doesn't get cooled down and hydrated, the problem can progress to heat stroke.

In heat stroke, the body temperature has risen — often to 104 degrees Fahrenheit or more, but it can occur at lower temperatures.

- The internal heat and extreme dehydration of heat stroke causes organs, like the kidneys and liver, to fail. Lack of blood to the brain can lead to disorientation or loss of consciousness.

- The absence of sweat means the body has lost too much fluid.

Preventing heat injuries

There are lots of things people

Injury prevention at a glance

- Allow for uniform adjustments to reduce heat stress.
- Schedule strenuous activities for cooler times of day and exercise in the shade.
- Hydrate, hydrate, hydrate. Drink extra water and avoid caffeinated drinks, diet pills and alcohol, which dehydrate the body.
- Eat healthy meals.
- Pay attention to the heat stress index and follow advice for limiting activity on high heat-index days.
- Adhere to the recommended work-rest cycles. Rest in cool, air-conditioned areas when possible.
- Use sunscreen and reapply periodically.
- Avoid strenuous activity if you're ill or taking medications.
- Dress for the weather in light, loose, breathable clothing.
- Take time to adjust to the humidity before strenuous activity.
- Watch for symptoms of heat stroke and heat exhaustion, such as being dizzy, tired, nausea, vomiting, disorientation, lack of perspiration and loss of consciousness.
- Stop physical activity, go someplace cool, drink some water and seek medical attention if you develop symptoms of heat exhaustion or heat stroke.

can do to be safe in the heat:

- Rest in the shade or air-conditioning when possible.

If you supervise Soldiers, allow for uniform adjustments to help reduce heat stress as much as possible.

Cool showers can help reduce accumulated heat.

- Reschedule strenuous activities for the cooler parts of the day.

Don't run during the hottest parts of the day — run in the morning or later in the evening.

But if you can't reschedule, at least modify the activity to the greatest extent possible to reduce heat stress. Find shady trails.

When running in formations or groups, keep plenty of space between people, so air circulates better.

- Hydrate, hydrate, hydrate. Most people don't even drink the eight glasses of water recommended under ordinary circumstances. Caffeinated drinks like soda and coffee dehydrate the body.

Many diet pills contain caffeine, and alcohol dehydrates the body, so those who consume caffeine or alcohol need to drink extra water to make up for it.

- Eat healthy meals so you can take in enough electrolytes and other nutrients and stay hydrated.

Skipping meals can lead to disaster.

- Pay attention to the weather.

The Army developed the heat stress index to monitor the humidity in assessing heat injury risk.

The index defines the standard for adjusting activity, depending on mission requirements.

The Wet Bulb Globe Thermometer provides a better idea of the body's ability or inability to keep cool.

Every unit must have a field sanitation team identified on orders and trained to use the WBGT to identify local conditions, so commanders can make decisions to keep their Soldiers safe.

- Adhere to the recommended work-rest cycles. During rest periods, try to go to a cool, air-conditioned area if possible.

- Use sunscreen with at least 30 SPF. Sunburns damage skin and make it harder for the body to cool itself.

- People who are ill should avoid strenuous activities, because it makes them more susceptible to heat injuries.

Medications can also dehydrate people.

- Dress for the weather.

Wearing unnecessary layers only traps the heat.

- It takes at least two weeks to acclimate to the heat by gradually increasing exposure and physical activity in the new climate. Moving from an one air-conditioned location to another does not help a person acclimate.

Someone acclimating should not be expected to perform at the same intensity level as those already adjusted to the heat.

- The majority of heat injuries occur during the early morning hours, mostly under category 0 or 1 conditions.

This is because heat injuries usually happen after a few days of cumulative heat stress. People are often unable to stay adequately hydrated over an extended period.

- Running generates heat, and most PT involves a lot of running.

- If you develop symptoms of heat stroke or heat exhaustion, get to a cool environment, drink some cool water, and seek immediate medical care.

Defense Department to reward service members with ad- ministrative leave

Leave awarded to those who don't meet goal for time at home between deployments

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

Sgt. Sara Wood

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department unveiled a program Wednesday that will reward administrative leave to service members whose service in combat does not meet the department's goal for the time at home-station between deployments.

Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates directed the development of this program Jan. 19, when he implemented a force-management policy stating that DOD's goal was to give active-duty troops two years at home-station for every year deployed, and Reserve troops five years at home-station for every year deployed. At the time, Defense Secretary Gates recognized that national security concerns would require service members to be deployed more frequently than this goal, so he announced a compensation plan to make up for frequent deployments.

Under the new policy, active-duty service members who are deployed for more than 12 months in a 36-month period will earn one day of administrative absence for each month beyond 12. If service members are deployed for more than 18 months in a 36-month period, they will earn two days of administrative absence a month. Past 24 months, they will earn four days a month.

Members of the Reserves will earn one day of administrative absence a month for every month beyond 12 they are mobilized in a 72-month period. Members of the reserve components will earn two days a month if they are mobilized past 18 months in a 72-month period, and four days a month if they are mobilized past 24 months in the same period.

Administrative absences are days off authorized by the commander, and are separate from normal leave accrued by a service member.

In a Pentagon news conference announcing the policy, Michael Dominguez, principal deputy undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, said that this program is meant to recognize the sacrifices service members make, but is in no way trying to put a physical value on their service.

"Secretary Gates and all of us honor the service of the men and women in uniform, particularly in these demanding times," Dominguez said. "This program can't be viewed as being commensurate with the level of service that they offer to the nation. In many respects, while it is substantive and it is tangible, it's also symbolic. It's part of our recognition that we're keeping them in our thoughts and we're trying to do something for them."

The policy is retroactive to Jan. 19, so any service member who was deployed or involuntarily mobilized from that day forward, whose service exceeds the time frame in the policy, will earn the days off, Dominguez said. Also, troops who were deployed within the last three years, and are deployed now, will earn administrative leave for their current deployment, he said.

In deciding what compensation to give service members who are deployed more frequently than DOD would like, defense officials considered a wide range of options, Dominguez said. Monetary compensation was considered, he said, but time off seemed the logical choice to reward increased frequency and intensity of service.

"We weren't trying to find some metaphysical balance between the service you were rendering and buckets full of gold, or any other thing we can do for you," Dominguez said. "This was about telling men and women of the armed forces that we know when we ask you to do something extraordinary."

DoD has had a policy since 2004 that pays service members who are extended in theater beyond 12 months $1,000 a month, Dominguez said.

That policy is still in effect, he said, and applies to Army personnel who now have to serve 15-month tours in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The new policy is meant to deal with frequency of deployments, rather than the length of each deployment, Dominguez said.

"This is what we do; it is the job," he said. "This is the job of the men and women of the armed forces, from which they do not shirk, and the volunteer force is extraordinary."

Red Cloud Range heats up during HOTEX

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Master Sgt. Charles R. Evans

Soldiers from C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, participated in a hands on training exercise, or HOTEX, at Red Cloud Range April 12.

It was a firepower demonstration to show officers attending the Infantry Pre-command Course the weapons systems they will encounter when they take command of battalions and brigades that are equipped with the Bradley and Stryker vehicles, said Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Akens.

While a narrator described the vehicles, a demonstrator pointed out key features and weapons mounted on them to the spectators in the bleachers.

The show began with heavy-metal music and tactical radio traffic blaring from speakers as the armored vehicles roared across the range and moved into fighting positions.

Coordinates were relayed to vehicle commanders, gunners acquired targets and a rain of hot metal blasted downrange to engage various targets at different ranges to give the audience a sense of combat.

Small and heavy machine guns, 25 mm cannon, 120 mm mortars, TOW and Javelin missiles were fired on simulated enemy forces.

"We give the students the tools they need to make them successful as commanders," said Capt. David Morgan, company commander.

Following the live-fire demonstration, students and families were allowed to fire some of the weapons under the supervision of range cadre and instructors.

Grover Curry took the opportunity to fire the M-4 carbine, the primary weapon of Infantry Soldiers, with his son-in-law, Lt. Col. David Preatko.

"I've never been in the military. This is a new experience for me," Curry said.

Fort Benning recognized as environmental leader

THE BAYONET
Lori Egan

The Environmental Protection Agency accepted Fort Benning into its Performance Track program.

"This means we've been recognized as an environmental leader," said Lisa Smith, Fort Benning's Environmental Management System coordinator.

Performance Track is a voluntary partnership program, based on the premise that government should complement existing programs with new tools and strategies that not only protect people and the environment, but also capture opportunities for reducing cost and spurring technological innovation, according to EPA's Performance Track Web site.

This acceptance means the post has made a commitment to environmental improvement beyond regulatory requirements, said Laura Niles with the EPA.

Performance Track recognizes facilities that set three-year goals for continuous improvements in environmental performance beyond their legal requirements, manage their environmental impacts, engage in local outreach about their performance and publicly report results, Niles said. Performance Track facilities must meet all environmental regulatory requirements and make additional commitments to the environment.

Lisa Smith, Fort Benning's Environmental Management System coordinator, said the Performance Track program recognizes environmental excellence and commitment to continuous improvement.

"We are the first, full-Army installation to be accepted into Performance Track," she said.

A few of the benefits for Fort Benning are a designated contact with the EPA, faster turnaround on permits and reduced reporting requirements.

Being part of this program will help the post address the environmental issues of the BRAC process, Smith said.

"Because we have a point of contact with EPA, we can call if we have a question, and reach a person," Smith said. "It makes the paperwork process faster."

Fort Benning's mission is training Soldiers, and a faster turnaround on permits helps Soldiers get out there and train, she said.

Many people don't look at the Army as an environmental leader, Smith said. But it is. Here, there has been a lot of work with the red-cockaded woodpecker, the gopher tortoise and relict trillium. Fort Benning is the first Army installation with an E-85 ethanol pump at an Army and Air Force Exchange Service gas station open to civilians.

"We've proved that we are the best environmental stewards we can be and will continue to be," Smith said. "Recognition as a Performance Track facility proves it."

Threatening skies and an early end to the festivities didn't dampen the success of Fort Benning's 9th annual Asian-Pacific Luau at Uchee Creek April 14.

Al Gelineau, Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation director, kept a close eye on the dangerous weather system that was wreaking terrible havoc as it approached from Texas.

"I hate to spoil all the fun," he said. "But it looks like we'll have to close early. The safety of everyone here is the most important thing right now."

Working quickly, DMWR managed to bring the featured Polynesian dancers to the stage several hours ahead of schedule for an abbreviated show. Although there is no official count for the number of people attending the Luau, over 800 children's wristbands for the all-you-can-jump giant Inflatables were handed out before sales were halted due to safety concerns.

Despite ending at 6 p.m., DMWR managed to draw a number of prize-winning raffle tickets before the rain, including the $8,500 Rolex watch that had been up for raffle.

"What a thrill!" said Renee Helmer of Columbus, Ga., who had purchased the ticket for her husband Peter. "I've never won anything before and this is a great thing to win now!"

The next major public event sponsored by DMWR is the Soldier Show on June 2 at Wetherby Field. The event is free and open to the public. For more information about DMWR events and services visit the Web site www.benningmwr.com.

The 9th annual Asian-Pacific Luau Saturday featured a bike rodeo. A Rolex watch was raffled during the event. The next public event sponsored by DMWR is the Soldier Show June 2 on Wetherby Field.

And who knows, at 6 feet, 5 inches, and 6, 6, respectively, the 28-year veteran and his son may be the tallest team, collectively, to ever compete. Does that matter? Certainly it could. Given the nature of some events, the tallest and shortest competitors can be at a disadvantage.

The age factor can actually be a big advantage. Historically, older competitors have done much better than the younger. With more than 30 years of service between them, the Greenways have twice as much military experience as nearly half of their competitors.

JoAnn Greenway said her husband and son are banking on just that, their combination of maturity, experience, youth and energy.

"They balance each other," she said.

Doug, the Infantry School sergeant major, said their single greatest advantage may be their desire to compete together with no greater goal than to finish the race.

"This is my last big hooah," said Doug, who will retire May 4.

"I get to do this with my boy. That's what this is all about. We just want to do it and finish it together. If we were focusing on winning, yeah, I'd be a little nervous right now. I just want to do it. Whatever they've got for us, bring it on. Ring that bell."

Doug earned his Ranger tab in 1980. He was serving with the 75th Ranger Regiment when Brandon graduated from basic training on Sand Hill more than four years ago. Doug pinned Brandon's 3rd Battalion scroll on his sleeve a short time later.

They jumped together in 2003; it was Brandon's first. Doug was the Ranger Training Brigade command sergeant major when Brandon graduated from Ranger School three years ago. And last week, Doug pinned on his son's staff sergeant stripes.

For years, the two have toyed with the idea of competing in the BRC together, but "the jobs always got in the way." Collectively, the Greenways have deployed with the Rangers five times.

Their strategy going into the competition is simple, said Brandon, a squad leader with the 4th Ranger Training Battalion — they'll take it one step at a time. His father put it more eloquently.

"You eat an elephant one bite at a time," he said. "The (BRC) is an elephant."

Doug and JoAnn have two other children, Victoria, 25, a specialist in the Army, and Jessica, 21, who is married to a Soldier. Victoria is the mother of the Greenway's only grandchild, 2-month old Alan Sinquefield Jr.

Casey: Speaks of six challenges, initiatives

said, to meet with Soldiers and leaders and ask two questions: How do you see the Army today? And what kind of Army will we need in 2020?

"And then it's up to us decide how we get there," he said. Toward that end, based upon what he heard in the field and what he's hearing closer to home, Casey said he's compiled a list of six challenges and initiatives. His goal is to have a viable action plan in place by July to address each issue.

First on his list is the acceleration of initiatives to increase the size of the Army to 547,000 by 2012. Casey didn't say just how his team will accomplish the goal, but he was adamant in stating his case for a troop increase without resorting to a draft.

"Right now, we're locked in a long war, and the need (for troops) exceeds supply," he said. "It's going to take us two or three years to get there, but we'll get there. We're in it to win. We're going to field the forces we need to win. We'll do it with an all volunteer force."

Early on, Casey addressed the recent announcement about the policy change that will extend tours to 15 months for troops in the U.S. Central Command area of operations. The decision was made "grudgingly," he said, and the news was leaked to mainstream media. Some of the troops abroad learned about the policy from their spouses back home.

"That's not how we wanted anyone to hear about it," said Casey, who would have preferred to present the plan as a means of improving deployment predictability and improving results in theater with the retention of "more seasoned troops experienced in that environment." As it stands, the extension policy includes a promise to give troops a 12-month reprieve between deployments.

Retention and predictability were common denominators in most of Casey's initiatives.

The rate of Soldier retention must improve, Casey said, and one way to do that — perhaps the best way — is to update and improve services and programs for the Soldiers' Family. The recent debacle over conditions at Walter Reed is an example of what happens when programs and services aren't updated to "meet the needs of an expeditionary Army at war."

"The problems there are a cumulative effect of five years of war," he said. "If we can't give predictability in deployments, we better be able to give the standardized, predictable services our Families need."

To do that, the chief of staff said, he'll field a team of "bureaucracy busters."

Casey was the vice chief of staff during the conception of Army transformation, and high on his list of challenges is the need to sustain momentum in that direction. The continuous transformation of the Reserve component, "from its Cold War mentality" to a modern, modular fighting force, will accelerate progress there, he said.

Casey's checklist includes the need for a leader development program with a focus on strategic communications.

"It sounds trite, but we need to do a better job of telling our story," he said. "We're self-satisfied with what we do. I saw wonderful things going on in Iraq, but it never bubbled up to the top so the public heard about it. That's not our nature, so this will require somewhat of a culture change — a hard cultural change for Soldiers."

All in all, Casey said, he's satisfied the Army is headed in the right direction.

"I believe in the fundamental correctness of where we're going," he said, "and what I'm hearing (from the field) is that our Soldiers believe in the direction we're going."

BENCH NOTES

ERIN NASH

Boston Marathon

Though the runners had some rough weather, they managed to overcome the elements at the Boston Marathon Monday.

Kenya's Robert Chepkirui set his third Boston Marathon title with a time of 2:14:13. He slipped while crossing the finish line last year in Chicago and sustained a concussion, but the slippery conditions were favorable to him in Boston.

Russia's Liliya Grigoryeva won the women's title with a time of 2:29:16. Grigoryeva set the course record last year in Los Angeles.

Boo who?

Senior Boo Weezy won his first PGA Tour event Monday after play was suspended Sunday because of the windy weather.

Weezy managed to hold off Ernie Els and finish with a 68. Master champion Zach Johnson finished a respectable sixth.

Barton wins, makes history

Jeff Barton managed to drive past Matt Kenseth for the win Sunday in the Samsung 500 NASCAR Cup race at Texas Motor Speedway.

Barton is the first driver to ever win twice at Texas. He won the first NASCAR Cup race there in 1997.

This week brings the first night race of the season. The race will be at 8 p.m. Saturday on Fox.

Nationals show support to Virginia Tech

The Washington Nationals gave Virginia Tech fans Tuesday night as a tribute to the victims of the shooting rampage at the college Monday.

Left fielder Chris Sealing's cap will be sent to the Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., while other players autographed their hats to send to the college.

It's great to see the sports world reach out in times of need.

Bad red

MLB referee Joey Crawford was suspended indefinitely Tuesday for his conduct toward the manager of the San Antonio Stars. Crawford has refereed three professional games that produced no runs.

Stanley argues that Crawford challenged him to a fight during a game against the Dallas Mavericks.

Crawford was fined $25,000 by the MLB for verbal abuse of an official.

Strange, Green finally make Hall of Fame

Golf's Gene Strang and Hubert Green have finally made it to the World Golf Hall of Fame, after being on the ballot since 1998.

The two will be inducted into the Hall Nov. 12 at the World Golf Village.

Hey, don't forget guys, good things come to those who wait — now you're done waiting.

The WHINSEC Libertadores perform their post game cheer after defeating 14th CSH Tuesday night, 12-1. They are undefeated with a 4-0 record in the preseason and 3-0 in the regular season.

Libertadores dominate soccer

WHINSEC team finds a bit of home, family in soccer

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

The WHINSEC Libertadores have a bond that is unique and familiar, said Jose Reyes, one of a handful of players who speak English on the intramural league's premier soccer team.

"We work hard everyday together and we get along great, but when we get out there on the soccer field we truly become a unified family," he said.

The Libertadores showed their dominance again Tuesday defeating the 14th Combat Support Hospital, 12-1.

They took home the preseason intramural soccer tournament title with a 4-0 record.

With a perfect 3-0 in regular season play, they are the favorites to win the title.

The team, comprised of 11 players from Peru, Mexico, Columbia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Chile and Brazil, is one of three representing WHINSEC.

They take the game very seriously and it shows in their approach, Reyes said.

"Soccer is one of the biggest and most recognizable parts of the Latin American culture," he said. "It's also growing fast here in the States."

Most of the players grew up immersed in the sport.

"I was raised with a soccer ball in my hands," said Carlos Mora, the team's captain. "Where I'm from, this was all we had to do. Most people in the U.S. start learning the game in their teens, but we have been playing since we have been walking."

On the other hand, Maria Rivera, the team's only female player, has only been playing a short time.

"I haven't been playing soccer long at all but I enjoy learning the game with people that I am so close to. They make it easy for me to play better."

Soccer is one of the only avenues for expression in many Latin American countries, said Reyes, a native of El Salvador.

Reyes, who used to play without shoes as a kid, said the sport is one of the positive outlets in Latin American countries.

NWTF plants seeds for the future

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

In March, the Conservation Seed Program, sponsored by the National Wild Turkey Federation, took part in aiding Fort Benning's wildlife for the third year in a row.

The NWTF is very supportive of Fort Benning and help keep the wildlife population to where it needs to be, said Mike Fuller, the Fish and Wildlife program manager for Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Works.

Since 1997, the seed program has provided more than 25 million pounds of seeds and other products to help those in need with the development of land. Seed companies donate surplus or treated seed that they can no longer sell to the NWTF for this purpose.

"Last month, they gave us several thousand dollars worth of lime to help with the pH balance of the soil for better harvesting of turkeys."

The conservation program of DPW helped distribute the lime over 53 food plots and eight large hunting areas on Fort Benning.

"Without the help of this program, turkeys would be nearly extinct in this area," said Bill Brickner, an NWTF committee member.

Those who need seed or other fertilization products place orders and receive their requests on a first come, first serve basis.

"Each year varies," Fuller said. "We determine our needs for the year and place orders, but usually they contact us and volunteer to help."

After receiving the products, they work with contractors to determine proper fielding conditions.

"It's a pretty intense process to coordinate this effort because everything has to be just right for working the fields," Fuller said.

DPW assesses their harvesting needs twice a year and determines what's needed in the following season.

"We get fall and spring donations and we have to know exactly what we need to order whether it's seed or lime."

Studio introduces Circuit Series

Weight training meets cardio at the Aerobics studio

THE BAYONET

The Women's Circuit Series workout is up and running in the Martial Arts and Aerobics studio.

"This is a great workout, because your heart rate stays elevated the entire time," said Kris Mahurin, a fitness instructor at Fort Benning.

The Circuit Series consists of 11 pieces of equipment that work the entire body. Participants start at a station and work for 30 seconds before moving to the next. The entire circuit is done three times and takes approximately 50 minutes to complete, Mahurin said.

"The entire workout is very structured and goes quickly, which makes it easier to push it to the max," said Kristy Crombie, who has been doing the Circuit Series for about a month.

The cardio stations can be as low or as high resistance as you choose, Mahurin said. The workout is very similar to what one would find at a Curves facility, but the equipment is more user-friendly, said Lori Smith, the fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation. The machines have push button resistance settings so you can adjust as you go.

"It's diverse, yet simple, which makes it more fun than some of the workouts I've done before," Paulina Russell said. The Circuit Series is for any fitness level.

"After a while they will feel themselves getting used to the exercises, so they will bump up the resistance as they need to," Mahurin said.

Participants can begin anytime during the two-hour class times.

"This takes the pressure off making a class exactly at 9 a.m.," Smith said. "If you're late, just get on a machine that isn't taken and begin your circuit there."

The Circuit Series classes are from 9 to 11 a.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. The price for classes is $3 per class or $25 for an unlimited monthly pass, which can be purchased at Briant Wells Fitness Center Monday through Friday from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Child care is available

The NBA play 'offs'

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

It's my favorite time of the year and I already have my junk food and trash talk ready. The real NBA season begins Sunday, and not a moment too soon, but the playoff picture is rather predictable, to say the least.

The Western Conference has looked strong all season, and barring any significant injuries or Vegas subplots, one of the West teams should win it all.

Right now, the Dallas Mavericks are on the tips of the tongues of all b-ball enthusiasts as the frontrunners for the trophy. I'm not quite so sure, though.

Dallas does boast the league's best record with 66-15. They have improved in every aspect of the game and have the probable MVP, Dirk Nowitzki, leading their team. They also run their offensive and defensive schemes like clockwork.

With that in mind, I'm just not sure how they'll handle high-pressure situations.

Last year, they caved to the Miami Heat when they had every opportunity to win it all.

Also, the San Antonio Spurs are well into their trademark domination of teams after the All-Star break. They have a personal vendetta against everyone and Tim Duncan will probably use the recent incident with ref Joey Crawford as motivation. It's a strong possibility that they will continue their streak of winning the title every other year.

You also can't count out the Phoenix Suns, led by two-time MVP and current candidate Steve Nash.

The Suns probably have the most synchronicity among all teams, and when they run their offense their way, they are virtually unstoppable from the perimeter and the paint.

The only looming concern the Suns will face is their lack of complete team defense. They allow opponents 102 points per game and give up far more rebounds than they should.

On the flip side, somebody has to represent the lowly Eastern Conference.

The Detroit Pistons, the conference's top team, are my pick. They have a solid all-around game and are extremely consistent defensively.

The problem is that they have no inside presence on either side of the floor.

The other likely teams to rep the East are the Chicago Bulls, the Toronto Raptors and the Heat.

The Bulls play decent on both ends. They also have a wonderful lineage behind them with the Jordan era, which gives them something to shoot for.

The question is, will this young team led by Ben "Air" Gordon show enough maturity to lead this team to their first playoff series win?

The Raptors were the biggest surprise of the season.

Chris Bosh, the league's most underrated star, proved to be a force to be reckoned with all season long.

They are also very dangerous because they have absolutely nothing to lose.

But let's be real. With virtually no playoff experience, which makes all the difference in the big show, the Raptors will be extinct before they know it.

Speaking of the big show, the Heat have to carry the heavy double-edged sword of being defending champions.

Dwyane Wade is showing the heart of a lion — or a lunatic, playing on a shoulder that he can barely pull a seat belt over.

When this guy gets into his second gear, he is unguardable.

Then you have the Diesel. Shaquille O'Neal has four rings and is hungry for another. He kept the team afloat while Wade was out, reminding the doubters who ruled the Heat out of playoff of his dominance in any given game.

Ultimately, the Heat's bottom line adds up to one equation. A 60 percent healthy Wade plus a post prime Sha equals no chance.

If you ask me, the league should revamp its conference structure as opposed to the current coastal setup. There is too much dominance in the West.

The West's top team lost less than half of the games as the top team in the East, which proves the imbalance.

If good play is what is rewarded, the Mavericks should be going against the Spurs or Suns for the title. The lack of credible match-ups in the playoffs is part of the reason viewership is down in the NBA.

Well, at least I'll be watching.

Mitchell Thomas IV

The WHINSEC Libertadores pose with their first-place trophy after winning the preseason intramural volleyball tournament with a 4-0 record. The team consists of players from Peru, Mexico, Columbia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Chile and Brazil.

Circle: Of friends from Latin America dominate soccer

"El Salvador is one of the roughest places in the world, and a lot of the people have very little, which make the presence of gang violence rise,"

Reyes said.

"Soccer gives kids something to do in the day, because it's too dangerous to be out at night."

Although the team plays only during intramural season, most of the players find time during the week to play on their own and for organized leagues.

Representing WHINSEC, which is predominantly made up of Soldiers from Latin America, is another factor that gives the team a sense of pride.

"I enjoy working as an instructor here and feel fortunate to get the call for this job," Reyes said.

"I'm surrounded by people from all over, and we all contribute and learn so much about each other which makes us grow as people."

"Just being a part of WHINSEC is great because you get to take a part of other cultures and add them to your own," Rivera said.

Fast track

Burton wins in Texas

Only driver to ever repeat at Texas, won inaugural Cup race at Texas in 1997

THE BAYONET
Erin A. Nash

Dale Earnhardt Jr. fans finally had something to cheer about. After not making the Chase last season and grueling, ongoing contract negotiations with Dale Earnhardt Incorporated, some fans thought was affecting his driving, Sunday was looking peachy for Junior. He even led 96 laps, much to the delight of the fans, and was running in second place until good ol' Tony Stewart ruined a lot of people's day.

Stewart was the main ingredient in two accidents in 13 laps. Rookie Juan Pablo Montoya and Stewart traded some paint, which caused Stewart to spin, and reigning Nextel Cup champ Jimmie Johnson had nowhere to go but into Stewart's driver-side door.

Stewart drove away relatively unscathed, but Johnson had to take his car to the garage and ended up finishing 38th after getting back on the track in the last stages of the race.

Stewart got back on the track after some minor body work, got loose trying to pass race leader Kurt Busch to stay on the lead lap, and spun yet again.

He really earned his nickname, "Smoke," as he spun around the track.

The smoke was so bad Earnhardt Jr. had to slam on his brakes, which caused Kyle Busch to ram his front bumper into Earnhardt Jr.'s back bumper, tearing it off.

Earnhardt Jr. ended up in 36th place.

What I find hysterical is that after Earnhardt Jr. knew his car was done for the day, he drove the last nine laps in Kyle Busch's car when Busch was nowhere to be found. Sounds like a pity party to me.

I figured Jeff Gordon had the race after that, and was well on his way to tying career wins with Dale Earnhardt. Just goes to show, you can never count your chickens before they hatch in a NASCAR race.

I ended up listening to the final laps on satellite radio while going out to dinner with my family who was visiting for the weekend.

I wish I could say it was as exciting as watching it on TV, but it really wasn't. I even Tivo'd it, but never ended up watching it.

It ended up being a race between Matt Kenseth and Jeff Burton, and ultimately, Burton was the winner. Burton had won the first Cup event at Texas in 1997, and became the only driver to repeat at the speedway.

Martin continues impressive start, finishes third in Texas

ARMY NEWS SERVICE

FORT WORTH, Texas — The Mark Martin 2007 story got even more interesting following his impressive third-place finish in Sunday's Samsung 500 Nextel Cup race at Texas Motor Speedway.

After taking the previous two races off as part of his limited schedule for Ginn Racing, Martin came back with another solid performance.

The Army driver, who has now competed in five Cup races this season, posted his fifth straight top-10 result and fourth top-five. Despite missing the two races in Bristol, Tenn., and Martinsville, Va., Martin is 11th in driver points, within the top-12 of the Chase cutoff.

In Nextel Cup owner points, the 01 team jumped from sixth to fourth.

"This team is just awesome — they are the best I've ever worked with," Martin said moments after climbing out of his No. 01 Army Chevrolet. "I want to be careful about bragging too much, but I have hit the lotto. To be able to drive these cars for this team is a dream come true. And to be able to step away when I want to, I just could not imagine having that kind of privilege. I just really, really love working with Ryan (Pemberton, crew chief) and the team. They are so excited and that makes it so much fun to go to work."

Martin started the race sixth based on owner points after Friday's qualifying session was canceled due to severe weather. The team struggled early with the car's handling in traffic and Martin dropped back to as far as 15th.

"About halfway through the race we got the car adjusted to our likening," Martin said. "The closer we got to the front, the Army Chevy performed much better. The pit crew was outstanding again — they pounded out fast stops and got us to the front."

The 01 team made its final adjustment on its fourth pit stop of the race (Lap 117 of 334), moving the track bar up and adjusting the air pressure. Martin returned to the field in 14th position and started his march to the front.

"Man, I would have loved to have won for our Soldiers who are out there defending our country all over the world," Martin said. "It's an honor to drive the Soldiers' car."

The race winner (Jeff Burton) and runner-up (Matt Kenseth) are former teammates of Martin.

"I really wish I could've been up there with my buddies scraping for the win," Martin said.

"But I am satisfied with third."

The Army Team will return to action this weekend in Phoenix, Ariz., where Martin will make his race debut in the Car of Tomorrow.

The Phoenix race is scheduled for Saturday evening.

U.S. Army pit crew takes top honors

WWW.GINN-RACING.COM

The U.S. Army/Ginn Racing pit crew earned its fourth Checkers/Rally's Double Drive-Thru Challenge win of the season Sunday at Texas Motor Speedway — lifting its team to a third-place finish in the NASCAR Nextel Cup Series event.

With four Double Drive-Thru Challenge victories, the 01 Army pit crew is the only multiple winner in the first seven races of the 2007 season.

"What can you say about these guys, they are just awesome," Mark Martin said. "This is the best race team that I've ever worked with. The Army pit crew really stepped up on Sunday and help gain us some really needed track position. I love working with this team. They make coming to work really fun."

Martin's over-the-wall crew includes: Scott King (jackman), Colin Pasi (front-tire carrier), Charlie Brock (front-tire changer), Dwayne Moore (rear-tire carrier), Dave Woodhead (rear-tire changer), Danny Harrington (gasman), Scotty Hazlett (catch can) and J.D. Hilton (windshield). The pit crew coach is Lance Munksgard.

"It was another solid performance by the 01 Army crew," said crew chief Ryan Pemberton.

stops each week and it is really showing in the team's results."

All-Army wrestlers win Greco-Roman national championship

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Tim Hipps

LAS VEGAS — Army World Class Athlete Program wrestler Sgt. Glenn Garrison led the All-Army Team to its fifth Greco-Roman national crown in the past seven years at the U.S. National Wrestling Championships April 6-7.

The All-Army team scored 71 points to runner-up New York Athletic Club's 39 to capture the Division I Greco team title at the Las Vegas Convention Center.

Garrison, who placed third at the U.S. National Championships in each of the previous three years, posted a convincing 6-0, 5-3 decision over Army teammate Spc. Faruk Sahin to win a gold medal in the 145.5-pound Greco-Roman finale.

"Garrison put it together," said All-Army coach Staff Sgt. Shon Lewis. "We always knew that he had the ability and the talent to do it, but for whatever reason he kept running into these little speed bumps. This weekend, he put it together and beat some quality guys. He probably beat the best guy in the weight class in the finals."

In earlier years, Sgt. Garrison, 33, struggled to get past former WCAP teammate 2nd Lt. Glenn Nieradka, a two-time national champ who retired from the mat at the 2004 U.S. Olympic Team Trials in Indianapolis. This time, Garrison had to face Sahin, a two-time Turkish national champion.

"That's kind of the way his life has always been," Lewis said of Garrison. "He's always had to fight somebody. He's never had the wimp; he always had the bully — so he's used to that. This is really going to help him go to the next level, I do believe."

"This is going to be a night that he's always going to remember. He has great support from his family. They've traveled all around the country and sometimes the world to watch him wrestle, so this is going to be a great night for the Garrison family."

Garrison and Sahin were among four Soldiers who wrestled in the finals of the two-day tournament in which the top seven wrestlers in each weight class qualified for a berth in the U.S. World Team Trials, scheduled for June 9-10 in Las Vegas.

"It's nice to win and say you're a national champion, but we're coming back here in a couple of months to determine who's going to the Pan Am Games and the World Championships," said Lewis. "We won a team title, but that's not the only thing we want to do — we want to put people on the team."

By that, Lewis means Team USA, which he hopes to stockpile with Soldiers.

"I could sleep real well if we could put three or four guys on the team," said Lewis.

WCAP Staff Sgt. Keith Sieracki lost a 2-1, 1-1 decision in the 163-pound Greco-Roman final to two-time national champion and longtime rival T.C. Dantzer of the Gator Wrestling Club.

"I think he's beaten me eight or nine times and I know I've beaten him eight or nine times," said Sieracki, 35, a two-time winner at the U.S. Olympic Team Trials who has yet to wrestle in the Olympic Games. "It would be a coin toss to see who's won the most times. He's gotten me with the new rules (implemented in 2006), but as you can see he couldn't turn me with the reverse lift like he does everybody, so I'm slowly dialing in on him."

"If I stay healthy, by World Team Trials this year or Olympic Trials next year, I'll have my eye on the prize," said Sieracki.

After posting the most shocking upset of the tournament — a first-round 0-2, 1-1, 1-1 victory over WCAP teammate Staff Sgt. Dremiel Byers — unseeded Spc. Timothy Taylor advanced to the 264.5-pound Greco final and lost a 3-1, 3-0 decision to Russ Davie of New York Athletic Club.

"He did a great job against Byers, obviously, by beating a world champion and a several-time national champion," Lewis said of Taylor. "He was a little skittish and a little gun-shy in the finals, but he got his feet wet and now I think he really believes that he can win this weight class. That's only going to help both of them (Taylor and Byers) because they are training partners."

Byers, a 2002 world champion and one of only five Americans ever to win a Greco-Roman world title, was the ultimate team player in describing his loss to Taylor.

"He wrestled really smart and didn't try to do too much," said Byers. "He won every (coin) toss and he stayed real sound. I wasn't able to take it to him in the last 30 seconds when I was on top. He did a great job defending. My hat's off to him, he was the better man today. If you lose to somebody in your room, all you can say is 'we're tough.' I'm proud of him."

"Everybody's shocked. So am I. But I haven't looked at myself in the mirror yet. I know in here what I did wrong," said Byers, while thumping his fist against his heart. "And hey, I lost to the better guy today."

Taylor, on the other hand, declined to discuss details of the match.

"We're a family, that's all I can say," said Taylor. "We do everything together so I'm not saying anything about it. It's like wrestling my brother, so that's the way it goes. He's my brother. I'm his brother — everybody's family. I'll be in his corner. He'll be in mine. I'll be in everybody's corner if I need to be. That's just how we do it."

Byers, the two-time defending national champion who defeated Davie the past two years in Las Vegas, worked Taylor's corner during the finale after bouncing back to finish third in the weight class.

Capt. Eric Albarracin posted victories over seventh-place finisher Spc. Jermaine Hodge and fourth-place finisher Sgt. Josh Habeck en route to a third-place finish in the 121-pound Greco-Roman division.

"Albarracin is squirrely," said Lewis. "He always has a game plan and if you're not ready to go, he's going to get you. Even the guys who are ready to go, he gets some of them, too."

Spc. Aaron Sieracki, Keith's younger brother, took third place in the 185-pound Greco-Roman division. Capt. Phil Johnston finished third and Sgt. Brad Ahearn seventh at 211.5 pounds.

Sgt. Oscar Wood, a 2004 Olympian, finished fifth, and defending national champ Staff Sgt. Marcel Cooper was eighth in the 145.5-pound class. Second Lt. Jason Tolbert took sixth place at 132 pounds. Sgt. Jess Hargrave was seventh in the 163-pound division.

WCAP Commander Capt. Dominic Black was a two-time national champion and a silver medalist in the 211.5-pound freestyle division during his five appearances in the U.S. National Wrestling Championships.

"Just dominating," Black said of the Soldiers' performances. "It shows the depth of our team that we had two returning finalists who didn't make it back to the finals, but there were other Army athletes who stepped up and filled those voids."

USAMU Soldiers take home three more medals

U.S. ARMY MARKSMANSHIP UNIT
Paula J. Randall

Soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit took three more medals April 14 and 15 in the final competitions of the USA Shooting Spring Selection Match at the Pool International Shooting Complex, which was the final match to select members of the U.S. Shooting Team that will compete at the Pan-American Games this summer.

Spc. Michael D. McPhail and Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas of the Army Marksmanship Unit took the silver and bronze medals respectively in the Men's 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone Match; Olympic champion Matthew Emmons of Fairbanks, Alaska, won the gold medal.

However, since Emmons declined his slot because he is getting married to international rifle shooter Katie Kurkova of the Czech Republic and they will be on their honeymoon at the time, Tamas got Emmons' slot on the Pan-Am Team along with McPhail.

In the Men's 50-Meter Free Pistol Match, USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski won the gold medal and a slot on the Pan-Am Team along with Jason Turner, who took the silver medal. John Zurek got the bronze medal.

U.S. Navy Reserve Petty Officer 2nd Class and former USAMU member Sandra Uptagrafft won the gold in the Women's Sport Pistol competition. V. Borisova received the silver medal and Heather Deppe got the bronze.

Two Soldiers of the USAMU took two medals in day two of the competition

April 11.

Emmons won the gold medal in the Men's Three-Position Free Rifle competition. USAMU international rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker received the silver medal and McPhail brought home the bronze medal. Emmons and Parker won the two slots to compete on the Pan-Am Team, but McPhail got Emmons' slot.

In the Women's Three-Position Sport Rifle match, new U.S. National Development Team member Amanda Furrer was the gold medal winner, followed by Jamie Beyerle of Lebanon, Pa., just seven-tenths of a point behind to take the silver, and Sandra Fong of New York City who got the bronze. Furrer and Beyerle won the Pan-Am Team slots.

Three members or former members of the USAMU took the first three medals of the selection matches April 10.

Former USAMU shooter Staff Sgt. Keith Sanderson barely edged out five-time Olympian John McNally, also formerly of the USAMU, for the gold medal in the Men's Rapid Fire Pistol Competition. Staff Sgt. John C. Ennis of the Army Marksmanship Unit got the bronze. Sanderson and McNally won the slots on the U.S. Pan-American Games Team.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the USA Shooting International Rifle and Pistol Spring Selection Match April 8 to 15, which was the final selection match to choose the U.S. Rifle and Pistol Team for the 2007 Pan-American Games.

Beyerle, Emmons and Emily Caruso of Fairfield, Conn., secured their positions on the 2007 U.S. Pan-American Games Rifle Team at the USA Shooting Top Gun Air Match, Dec. 1 to 3 at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo. U.S. Army Reservist Libby Callahan of Columbia, S.C., and Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Rose of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, took slots on the Pan-Am Pistol Team.

Parker was the runner-up at the Pan-American Games Air Rifle Selection Matches. His three day total was just shy of making the U.S. Team due to a change in qualification by the Pan-American Games Organizing Committee. The change notes that only one male shooter from the country can be sent to compete in the event. However, Parker received Emmons' slot after he declined.

At the USA Shooting Shotgun Fall Selection Match Sept. 6 to 13 in Kerrville, Texas, USAMU shotgun shooters Sgt. 1st Class Theresa E. DeWitt, Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Duloher and Spc. Joshua M. Richmond won their matches and were in first place in the U.S. Team Selection process for the 2007 Pan-American Games. The final selection match for Shotgun will be May 8 to 20 at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado.

The Pan-American Games will be conducted in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, July 13 to 29. The Games include an Olympic-style shooting championship for the Western Hemisphere, which is conducted every four years. Not only can shooters win medals and set world records at the Pan-American Games, but the Pan-Am Games is the last chance for shooters from the Western Hemisphere to win quota slots for their countries to compete in the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, China. The U.S. has earned 18 of a possible 28 Olympic quota slots up to now.

Mavs, Pistons begin quest for NBA crown

ZAP2IT
George Dickie

With their dominance of the regular season and a trip to the NBA Finals in 2006, the Dallas Mavericks are a good bet in the eyes of many that they'll be playing in June.

One is Greg Anthony, an NBA analyst for ESPN, ESPN2 and ABC, whose coverage of the NBA playoffs kicks into full gear this week beginning Sunday with first-round action.

"I think you've got to put them at the head," he said of the defending Western Conference champs. "I mean, to have the kind of season they've had, you have to say they're a team that's proven to be on a mission."

"I mean, they've got great depth, great chemistry. Obviously, defensively, when they're right they're a phenomenal team as well. I'd make the argument they're the best defensive team. While Houston's numbers might be better, Dallas plays with more pace in their game, and they have more versatility, I think, and quickness on the perimeter, and I think that's really what separated them more than anything, is their ability to defend the basketball. And obviously, Dirk Nowitzki has had another brilliant season."

"I would put them right at the head, but with a tremendous amount of angst because a lot of teams ... that I think could legitimately contend in the West will make it a difficult journey for Dallas to get back to the finals."

The high-scoring Phoenix Suns, led by two-time MVP Steve Nash, are small and quick but lack the size and defensive ability that Anthony considers necessary for postseason success.

"When you're smaller and quicker and you can't dominate the paint," he said, "that becomes more of an issue over the course of a seven-game series because you have to rely so much more on your ability to make open shots and create open opportunities, and you still have to deal with the inability at times to rebound the basketball. I think ultimately that's the key. You know, Amare Stoudemire, who has all the ability in the world, he's got to become a more dominant rebounder to take a lot of the pressure off because ultimately that's as big a part of defense as anything, is rebounding. And that's the areas where at times when I look at Amare, he's had some flashes of going out and getting those contested rebounds, but he hasn't done it as consistently as you would like."

With the best record in the East, the Detroit Pistons are Anthony's pick to be a prime contender for a finals berth.

"Detroit, to me, still possesses the best starting five in basketball," he said. "People say Phoenix has the best starting five. Well, Phoenix has the best five offensively, but collectively, when you look at what Detroit does both offensively and defensively, to me they've got the best starting five, and I think the difference with them this year as opposed to last year, is their depth and the trust they have in Flip Saunders and Flip Saunders has in them. It's taken about a year and a half for them to develop that trust between the coach and the players, and I think you're starting to see that."

"And this is a veteran basketball team that has won a championship, and I think they learned a lesson last year. They didn't have the depth that Dallas has, and that regular season took a little bit of a toll because down the stretch they didn't play very good basketball and they struggled throughout the playoffs. And I think, again, that's where experience plays a role, and I think they're going to be a different basketball team this time around."

The defending champion Miami Heat fought through injuries to Shaquille O'Neal and Dwyane Wade this year and got hot down the stretch. Such adversity, Anthony said, has made them a better team.

"I think the best thing that happened to them is Dwyane Wade getting injured, because that was the rallying cry that this team needed, the sense of urgency, to get back to playing championship-caliber basketball. It's a much more difficult task to do with an older team like they have. They can't go out and consistently overwhelm you physically for 48 minutes over the course of an 82-game season. There's just not enough energy and athleticism, (and) couple that with Shaq and Dwyane Wade, I think, missing a combined 66 games."

SPORTS PICKS

ZAP2IT
Mark Passaro

MLB baseball — Sunday (ESPN, 8 p.m.): Is there a better, more intense rivalry in all of sports than Red Sox versus Yankees? The latest reincarnation got under way today and concludes Sunday at Fenway Park, where Derek Jeter and the Yanks put the finishing touches on the AL East title last season by sweeping a five-game set in August.

Nothing is at stake this time, of course, except bragging rights ... until David Ortiz and the Sox come to New York next weekend to crank up the rivalry once again.

NFL Draft — April 28 (ESPN, noon): Spring sports activities — golf, baseball, auto racing, hoops — abound on the tube next weekend, but for NFL fans, nothing compares to hearing their team is "on the clock" and preparing to pick its next star. The NFL draft begins today from New York, where the always unpredictable Oakland Raiders are thought to be zeroing in on LSU QB JaMarcus Russell with the first overall pick. Detroit, Cleveland, Tampa Bay and Arizona round out the top five.

Boxing — April 28 (HBO, 10 p.m.): Lightweight champions Juan Diaz and Acilino Freitas square off in a potentially explosive unification bout live from Foxwoods Resort in Mashantucket, Conn.

Diaz, the WBA title-holder, is unbeaten in 31 fights, all but one coming via knockout or unanimous decision. His toughest test awaits in WBO champ Freitas (38-1, 32 KOs), who captured his crown by defeating Zahir Raheem last year. Bob Papa, Max Kellerman and Lennox Lewis have the call.

Emergency Department expects more patients

COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Angela Justice

On an average day, Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Department can be very busy. The Emergency Department provides emergency care for all active duty personnel, visiting foreign Soldiers, retirees and Family members at Fort Benning and the surrounding area.

Last year, 30,000 patients were treated at the Emergency Department, and Maj. Robert Piotrowski, chief of Emergency Medicine Department, anticipates 37,000 patients this year.

Several health care providers working in primary care have been deployed, which can cause a temporary decrease in access to primary care appointments, he said.

An increase in use of the Emergency Department for minor aches and pains can lengthen the time it takes for patients to receive care, Piotrowski said. Patients are seen on a triage system — the sickest patient receives care first.

For example, patients with colds, scrapes and aches are going to wait longer than those with high fevers, broken bones, training injuries, heat injuries and other severe medical conditions.

"The emergency department aims to provide excellent care for all of our patients," Piotrowski said. "However, accessing your primary care manager for minor illnesses and injuries can minimize your wait when you need urgent care."

Officials at MACH realize that no one wants to suffer through illness, but it is important to access your primary care clinic for regular colds, coughs, stomach flu, and other common illnesses and medication refills, he said.

The Family Practice, Pediatric and Adult Primary Care clinics strive to get patients in to see their primary care providers, officials said.

The Department of Family Medicine has established a Nurse Triage system so patients needing acute care may be seen within 24 hours.

Clarissa Dukes, a registered nurse with DFM, said patients assigned to Family Medicine must call through the appointment line.

If there are no appointments available, the patient can advise the clerk that he believes he needs to be seen that day. A message is left for the acute care nurse who will return calls within two hours.

"Once we assess the patient's symptoms, the acute care nurse works diligently to schedule the patient to be seen that day," Dukes said. "Most patients with acute symptoms can be taken care of through our triage system, but if we determine their illness is an emergency, they will be directed to the Emergency Department."

MACH patients must dial the CARE line at 706-544-CARE (2273) for appointments to Family Practice, Pediatric, Adult Primary Care clinics and other Martin Army clinics.

Walk for Autism set for May 19

Post Family deals with struggles of raising autistic child

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Dea Hagues believes April Cross deserves a "red badge of courage."

Hagues is the Muscogee Rotarian spearheading a local team to participate in the May 19 Autism Walk in Atlanta.

Cross, the wife of a Fort Benning Soldier, often has to deal with the struggles of raising a son diagnosed with autism and his younger brother, who has ADHD, by herself for months at a time.

"I cannot imagine that," Hagues said. "Autism takes such a toll on a family. It has a ripple effect — it impacts so many aspects of the family, not just the (development) of the child, but finances and relationships. The demands of caring for an autistic child cause a lot of stress."

Cross said her sons' disorders, and the behavioral challenges associated with them, keep her on her toes. A delicate balance of medication and a structured environment help keep the boys' temperaments on an even keel, she said, but it leaves little room for spontaneity.

Like most children who suffer from any of the various conditions that fall under the umbrella of "autism spectrum disorder," 10-year-old Ashton Cross thrives best in a predictable, daily regimen. When things don't go as he anticipates or something disturbs his routine — it can be something as innocuous as an interruption during story time — he flails his arms repetitively. And he's been known to bite.

Impaired social and communication skills are the hallmark of autism, a brain disorder that affects six in every 1,000 children. Boys are four times as likely to have autism as girls.

Like the vast majority of children who suffer from autism, Ashton began to exhibit symptoms before he was 3. And his symptoms were classic — a serious speech delay and an inability to interact with others. At 36 months, he was functioning at a 20-month level, his mother said.

Despite the telltale signs, Ashton was misdiagnosed time and time again. Doctors said he had ADHD, and indeed, many children with autism do have a form of attention deficit disorder. But not Ashton. Then, for a while, doctors treated, or mistreated, Ashton for "mild mental retardation."

When Ashton was finally, accurately diagnosed with autism shortly before his sixth birthday, his mother was relieved.

"The right diagnosis, finally. I could live with that. It didn't change who he was or how I'd treat him. It just gave us somewhere to start," she said.

Hagues hopes, through the efforts of fundraisers like the national Walk for Autism campaign, that more families will find "somewhere to start" earlier in their struggle to deal with autism.

"People don't know what to look for," she said. Studies show parents often "miss or dismiss" early signs of autism, perhaps because they don't know that it often manifests several months after birth. There is no cure for autism, but the earlier it is detected, the sooner a doctor can structure a program of therapies, medication and behavioral interventions.

In Ashton's case, the correct diagnosis made all the difference in the world, his mother said. Of course,

— Dea Hagues

even with a treatment plan, it's been "one step forward, two steps back." But Ashton is thriving in his fifth-grade classroom at Loyd Elementary School.

And his future looks bright, Cross said. Children with autism can grow to lead a normal life. Early diagnosis and comprehensive treatment has resulted in an increase in the number of autistic patients who live independently as adults, according to the Healthwise Encyclopedia.

In fact, though the number of children diagnosed with autism increases each year by as much as 17 percent, according to U.S. Department of Education figures, the disorder varies greatly in severity and symptoms. Very mild cases can go undetected for years and are often masked by more serious handicaps or conditions, which often accompany autism, including mental retardation, epilepsy or Tourette syndrome.

That's a lot of information to process, said Hagues, who had never heard of autism until a few years ago. The more she learns, the more she's committed to raising funds for research and treatment. Although the three-mile walk in Atlanta will benefit children throughout the state, it will have a direct impact locally, she said.

For many years, local families have traveled to the Marcus Institute in Atlanta, one of the country's leading centers for treatment of pediatric neurodevelopment disorders.

Wednesday, the Marcus Center began treating patients in Columbus at the Pediatric Center on 17th Street. Hagues said funds raised in the Walk for Autism will be used to support the clinic and local autistic children.

The Muscogee Rotary team hopes to raise $10,000 and field a "good-size team" of walkers, Hagues said. Participants do not have to be members of the Rotary Club.

To learn more about autism and the Walk for Autism in Atlanta, or to register as a participant, visit www.autismwalk.org. To sign up directly with Hagues, call 706-323-1751.

Cell Phones for Soldiers help Families keep in touch

Organization started by Massachusetts teens reaches thousands of Soldiers

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Three years ago, three young adults from Massachusetts started an organization that has helped hundreds of thousands of Soldiers keep in touch with their Families.

Cell Phones for Soldiers recycles cell phones and printer ink cartridges and uses the money from the recycling to buy pre-paid phone cards, which are sent to Soldiers away from their Families, either overseas or training stateside.

In 2004, Brittany Bergquist, then 13, and her brother Robbie, then 12, heard about a deployed Soldier with an $8,000 cell phone bill. They took their own money and collected money from friends to start an organization. Since then, the organization has grown to include more than 4,000 drop off locations, with one soon to open in Columbus.

And it's become a family affair. Brittany and Robbie's sister, Courtney, a junior at the University of Massachusetts, and their parents, Bob and Gail, have joined the team.

Cell Phones for Soldiers has raised a little over $1 million and sent about 400,000 phone cards, said Bob, who knows firsthand how it feels to be out-of-touch with a deployed Family member.

Bob's nephew was deployed to Iraq with the Army, and Bob didn't get to talk to him for almost three months after he got there.

The organization sometimes pays Soldiers' cell phone bills, including one that was more than $16,000, Bob said. Soldiers need to stay in touch and may not realize how much it costs, he said.

Soldiers often miss important Family events while they are deployed. Bob heard of Soldiers using the phone cards to call home during birthday parties, and he's been told that the phone cards are lifelines home.

Receiving a card also shows Soldiers that people in the U.S. care about them, Bob said. One of those caring people is right here on Fort Benning.

Rubina Gray heard about the organization on a news report and thought about all the old cell phones she had laying around the house. She got chills watching the report, she said, and felt compelled to help.

If those young people were smart enough to come up with the program, she should be able to do the work, she said.

Gray is the chief of casualty assistance and began spreading the word at work. So far, she has collected six from her own home and seven from people at work, and she plans to take them to the Columbus drop-off as soon as it opens at a Columbus Cingular store. There is a drop-off in nearby Midland, Ga.

Anyone with an old cell phone lying around can take it to a drop-off location or mail it to Cell Phones for Soldiers. Individuals can donate phone cards to go to specific Soldiers.

Those in need of help can go to the Web site, www.cellphonesforsoldiers.com, and request cards. Visit the Web site for mailing instructions and to search for drop-offs.

Grooming tips and benefits

Regular grooming keeps pets healthy

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Dogs love to get dirty, and cats tend to keep themselves pretty clean. However, all pets need some human intervention, and grooming provides more benefits than just cleanliness.

Grooming is the perfect time to assess your pet's body condition (See the April 6 Bayonet). It's also a good way to keep an eye on your pet's overall health. While grooming, look for cuts, scratches, irritated skin and parasites. Regular grooming will make you familiar with your pet's body and better able to judge changes and abnormalities.

The first step is brushing, which removes shed hair and skin and spreads the pet's oils out over its skin. Cats tend to keep themselves well-groomed, but they need to be brushed regularly, too. Brushing will help prevent hairballs, according to Healthypet.com.

Choose a brush that's appropriate for your pet's length of fur. Brushes with metal teeth may irritate a short-haired dog or cat's skin, while it may be the perfect brush for a long-haired pet.

Short-haired pets won't need to be groomed as often as breeds of long-haired cats and dogs, which are prone to mats. Be gentle when brushing out mats because it can hurt the animal. You may need to carefully cut the mats out if they are too big.

Brushing should be frequent during shedding season, and that doesn't just apply to long-haired breeds. The black hairs I've been finding all over my house belong to my Great Dane, not my long-haired sheltie.

If your pet needs a bath, get any mats out before bathing, water and scrubbing can make the mats worse. Use a shampoo designed for pets. There are many varieties available, including those for sensitive skin and medicated shampoos. Check the bottle for instructions. Many recommend not bathing puppies and kittens younger than 12 weeks. You may want to place cotton balls in your pet's ears to keep water out.

If your pet is prone to dry or easily irritated skin, you may want to limit baths. You can also try a moisturizing pet shampoo or conditioning rinse.

Ears are prone to infection and easily trap debris, so keeping your pet's ears clean is very important. It's also easy to damage the delicate insides of the ears, so you may want to ask your vet to show you the right way to clean them. When you look inside the ear, the skin should be pink. If you see any redness or puss or notice a foul odor, take the animal to the vet, as it may have an infection. Other symptoms are frequent head shaking, itching and holding the head at an abnormal angle.

For the healthy ear, gently wipe the inside with a cotton ball or Q-tip to remove dirt. There are also liquid ear cleaners available.

Dog toothbrushes and toothpaste are available at pet stores, but check with your vet before you clean your pet's teeth. Periodontal disease can lead to gum infection and tooth loss, and symptoms of the disease include build-up of plaque and tartar on the teeth, according to the Web site.

Ask your vet to show you how to clip your pet's nails. If clipped too short, the nail will bleed because a vein runs part-way down the nail.

Use clotting powder available at pet stores or apply pressure if you do make the nail bleed. Cats' nails are especially brittle, so use nail clippers specifically for cats.

If your pet is difficult to groom, you may consider a professional groomer. There are groomers in local pet stores and businesses that specialize in grooming.

If an animal is especially difficult to groom and bites or scratches when you try, there may be an underlying health problem, such as a skin allergy or cut, so have your vet examine the animal.

If you have a puppy or kitten, a good way to ensure you won't have trouble down the road is to begin handling the animal's feet and ears now.

If you get the pet used to having its nails, ears and teeth looked at and touched while it's young, it should tolerate touching later on in life.

Be careful and never make the experience traumatic for the young animal because bad experiences are hard to erase. Always reward good behavior with a pat, treat or playing.

When I trained my dogs to have their nails clipped as puppies, I began by clipping a nail or two and giving a treat. As they got used to it, I would treat after a whole paw, then after two paws. Now, my sheltie is a year old and when I get out the clippers, he sits and waits for me to clip his nails because he knows a treat is coming.

For more information on grooming, go to the American Animal Hospital Association's Web site, www.healthypet.com.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Maj. Robert Montz

Q: What is tennis elbow?

A: Tennis elbow, or lateral epicondylitis, is the most common overuse injury of the elbow. It is a microscopic tear of the tendon attachment at the lateral epicondyle or outside part of the elbow. Point tenderness and pain is associated with tennis elbow. Pain can radiate down forearm since this muscle tendon junction is responsible for bending the wrist.

Q: What are the signs and symptoms of tennis elbow?

A: Symptoms include pain that radiates from the outside of your elbow to the forearm and wrist, pain when touched or when elbow is bumped or when wrist is extended. A weak grip or pain with gripping activities, such as shaking hands or opening a jar may occur. Pain may last several days to several months.

Know the signs of stroke

MCG HEALTH SYSTEM
Dr. David Hess

If you suspect a loved one has had a stroke, don't wait.

Once a stroke happens, doctors have only a three-hour window in which they can deliver medication to help prevent or reduce the debilitating effects of a stroke.

Families and friends of those at risk should educate themselves on the signs and symptoms of stroke so that they can act immediately. Those at risk include those who are over 55, who smoke or have heart or artery disease, diabetes, high blood pressure and a family history of strokes. And those at greatest risk are those who have experienced a previous stroke.

Signs include:

- Sudden numbness, weakness or paralysis of the face, arm or leg, especially on one side of the body.
- Sudden blurred or decreased vision in one or both eyes.
- Sudden confusion or difficulty understanding simple statements.
- Sudden difficulty speaking.
- Sudden loss of balance or coordination combined with another symptom.
- Sudden severe headache with no known cause.

According to the American Stroke Association, fewer than 3 percent of stroke patients receive medication in time, especially in smaller communities that lack neurological services. Treatment is available, but only if your loved one gets to an appropriate facility within three hours of having a stroke. Call 911 immediately if you suspect someone you know has had a stroke.

Support group helps spouses Keep It Together

Spouses of deployed Soldiers find kind and confidential care

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Decisions, decisions. The decisions Melissa Fret has had to make since her husband deployed last month have thrown her for a loop. With a part-time job, four children (from toddlers to teen) three dogs (one pregnant) and a spanking-new house, Fret has had to shoulder the burdens of a single parent. “Do you want a privacy fence or a metal one? Do we keep this puppy or sell them all? I’ve been thrown into the single-parent mode, and it’s a lot harder than the last time,” said Fret, whose husband is deployed — again — with the 3rd Brigade Combat Team. Last time around, during Operation Iraqi Freedom 3, the Keeping It Together support group helped Fret do just that. KIT, sponsored by the Chaplain Family Life Program, met once a week and provided a forum for the spouses of deployed Soldiers to unwind, decompress, vent, find a sympathetic ear and a soft shoulder to cry on. “It was a safe place to fall,” said Fret, who confessed she struggles with the issue of disciplining her children. “That’s my husband’s strength. Now, sometimes I feel like it’s me against them.” The support Fret found through KIT was indescribable, she said.

“It’s kind and confidential. You can pour out your heart, tell them the kids are driving you crazy, and you don’t have to worry about where it goes from there.”

— Melissa Fret

“Really, I can’t put it in words. It was a sisterhood. We became family,” she said. “I know there are wives who think it’s an FRG. It’s not. We’re here to hold each other, to lift each other up. It’s kind and confidential. You can pour your heart out, tell them your kids are driving you crazy, and you don’t have to worry about where it goes from there.” When Fret’s husband deployed this time, she sought out Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey, Fort Benning’s

Family Life chaplain. In her words, she “didn’t give him a choice.” “I told him we need this support group,” she said. “The girls are ready, and we have new girls to meet.” The group, Fret points out, is not just for “girls.” It’s open to military spouses, but so far there haven’t been any men involved. Except for Garvey, of course. “I’m the facilitator,” he said. “They set the agenda. Sometimes it’s lighthearted, sometimes it’s funny, and sometimes they get mad and they cry. Sometimes it’s all three. Nine wives showed up for the first meeting April 12. That’s about a third of the regular attendance last year, and Garvey expects that number to increase as more spouses learn about it. Meetings will start at 6 p.m. every Thursday at The Infantry Chapel Annex. Child care is free and dinner is included. For more information, call 706-545-1760.

REFLECTIONS

Overcomers aren't superhuman; they are humans who persevere

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Aren't you encouraged when you hear about an "overcomer" — someone who defies the odds and "makes it" in spite of overwhelming circumstances. Whether it's Tom Hanks in the make-believe story of Castaway or Pfc. Jessica Lynch in her real-life drama in Iraq, it does something to us when we see people persevere beyond what we believe possible. It was in the middle of the 1996 season that center fielder Brett Butler with the L.A. Dodgers heard the news that none of us want to hear: "It's cancer ... in your throat — your career as a major-leaguer is over." Instead of folding, Butler relied on his faith and his family and respectfully said, "I don't think so — I'll be back this season." And defying the odds and all the naysayers around him, enduring the radiation, the chemotherapy and the physical therapy, he returned to the starting lineup just in time to lead the Dodgers to an emotional playoff victory. Do circumstances have you feeling as if you've been "taken out of the game?" Perhaps adjusting to life after being separated is harder than you imagined. Maybe the Army life has dealt you some cards that you didn't think you'd have to play. Could it be that something in your family life isn't hitting on all cylinders the way you want it to? God promises that though we may have been knocked down ... we are never knocked out as long as we place our faith and trust in him. One of my favorite verses of encouragement is in Philippians 3:14 where it talks about defying the odds: "I press on toward the goal to win the prize for which God has called me ..." This week, as circumstances billow around you like waves looking to overtake you, my prayer will be that you climb in the life raft of God's care and comfort and defy the odds. How? Place your trust in him, press on, and enjoy the supernatural strength that comes with being an overcomer! And don't forget, if you or any family member could use some help in adjusting to life as a result of the war, we have pastoral counselors willing to work with you through any problem at the Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606 in Soldiers' Plaza. Feel free to call and make an appointment at 706-545-1760.

It is well, it is well, with my soul

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT Bud Rupel

The story is told of a young mother who returned from visiting her next door neighbor and found her five young children huddled together in the middle of the living room. As she crept closer she discovered, much to her dismay, her children were gathered around a family of skunks. The young mother screamed, "Hurry kids, run and get out of here!" Each child ran for the door ... carrying a skunk! Ever had one of those days when nothing seems to go right? All of us have been there at one time or another. It is in the "how" we handle life's difficulties that speak volumes about our character. I freely admit that I do not like being around negative people, those who always seem to find the worst in everything. I once learned a valuable lesson from a young Korean mother who taught me the value of living positively in the midst of great difficulty. One of the recurring duties of an Army chaplain is serving as an "on-call" chaplain. Most calls are routine but every once in awhile you get one that goes beyond the routine. Such was the call I received on a warm Saturday in Frankfurt, Germany. Kim (not her real name) was from Korea and married to a Soldier she had met in her country. She was pregnant with her second child and was having a difficult pregnancy and wanted to talk to a chaplain. Well my Saturday, a day off, was suddenly disturbed by a call from the 97th General Hospital's staff duty officer. So it was out of my La-Z-Boy, my cut-offs and T-shirt, into my Class B uniform and off to the hospital. Gloom, despair, agony on me, my day off was interrupted by a pregnant woman I did not know. I arrived at the hospital and went to the labor and delivery ward where I introduced myself to the nurse, who informed me of the gravity of the situation. Kim's daughter would not survive her birth. Her lungs, heart and brain had not fully developed, and she would die once she was delivered. I was ashamed of myself. The nurse led me into Kim's room. She was there with her husband and their 4-year-old daughter. The husband was, and still remains, one of the most hard-hearted people I've ever met. He soon informed me he had never wanted another child and that he had no feelings either way about what happened. My feelings for the man went far beyond anger. But I had come to the hospital to see Kim and not lecture her husband. I did not speak a word to him the rest of my visit. Kim told me that she was a Christian and that she wanted her unborn child to be baptized at her birth. My denomination does not practice infant-baptism, but I decided that my theology had no place at that moment. I assured Kim that I would be there and do what I needed to do when her daughter was born. Late that night the call came. Kim was in labor and I was off to the 97th in a rush. I put on some scrubs went to the delivery room. Kim's husband was not there. I stood at Kim's head while the doctor delivered a perfectly formed baby girl. He cut her cord, wrapped her in a blanket and handed her to me. I prayed over Kim's daughter as she gasped for every breath with lungs that could not sustain life. I place Kim's baby in her arms and watched as this little child drew her last breath. Life and death, all in a few minutes ... in an Army hospital room in Germany. I had no words to offer in that moment. Just silence. Kim kissed her daughter and then turned her gaze on me and simply said, "Thank you. Thank you for coming. My daughter is now safe in God's arms." I left the hospital humbled by the faith of a young mother whose trust in God helped her through a tragedy. No blaming God. No harsh words for an unloving husband; simply a quiet faith in God who would take care of her daughter. From that day forward I determined never again to sing "Gloom, despair, agony on me" but instead to sing "It is well, it is well with my soul."

Soldiers' sacrifices make Scriptures come alive

USAIC CHAPLAINS OFFICE
Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ruben D. Colon Jr.

The sacrifices of our men and women in uniform brought to life the scriptures for me.

I have been blessed by the opportunity to serve with a civilian population who volunteered, understanding too well the sacred meaning of love.

They are truly the guardians of that divine gift we value so dearly, which is so well expressed in scripture, love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul and with all your mind, this is the First Commandment, and the second is like it, you shall love your neighbor as yourself.

This first became evident to me during the Gulf War, when scores of Iraqis who surrendered to our Soldiers were treated with dignity and respect.

That hasn't changed. All our service members carry themselves with dignity and have a heart for doing what is good for others.

In every situation, our servicemen and women continue to care for the sick, build schools, pave roads and protect the innocent. They represent liberty and freedom at its very best.

But how have they learned to be like this? Was it while learning about the laws of armed conflict or the Geneva Convention? Maybe it was during their ethics class in high school or college.

These things may have played an important role, but it really stems from a way of life.

You see, many have been shaped by basic lessons learned at church, synagogues, schools, 4-H, or Scouts, etc., all dealing directly with the care of neighbors and the world.

We do not live in a perfect world and we yearn for a little heaven. Evil and malice will always be the intentions of a few who prey upon the weak and defenseless of this world.

The sacred lessons remain that God is revealed by how magnificent our military personnel have treated others here and in distant lands. And the hope remains that maybe, just maybe, their sacrifices will bring a little of God's kingdom to this earth.

Sharing the importance of God's call to follow the golden rule, "Loving the Lord God as well as neighbor" is what our men and women in uniform have allowed me to discover.

Education key in preventing Shaken Baby Syndrome

Gerry J. Gilmore

WASHINGTON To prevent Shaken Baby Syndrome, which can seriously harm or kill infants, mothers who deliver their babies at the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md., receive a series of mandatory briefings, a 15-year Navy nurse who works at the center said.

"Every mother who delivers here will get educated on Shaken Baby Syndrome," Lt. Cmdr. Maile Kalinowski, who specializes in mother and infant care at the center, said during an April 10 interview with American Forces Press Service.

Shaken Baby Syndrome can occur when frustrated parents, especially fathers, negatively react to their baby's cries by shaking it.

Each year between 10 to 20 infant deaths across the military are attributed to Shaken Baby Syndrome, according to Defense Department documents.

The mandatory briefings are provided to mothers before the birth of their baby, soon afterward, and later on during outpatient checkups, Kalinowski, a mother of three children, said.

"We call it an immunization, because we try to give (the briefings) at three different times," Kalinowski said.

Probably one of the most effective briefings, she said, is provided to mothers around two months after their baby is born.

"Most incidents of Shaken Baby Syndrome happen between four-to-six months of age," Kalinowski said. "So, they've already experienced some of the irritating crying that goes on," which usually is what causes people to shake their baby.

"So they, hopefully, will listen up a little bit more on what they can do to prevent them (from) shaking their baby."

About 70 percent of shaken-baby cases are committed by fathers or other males, Kalinowski said, noting the majority of those incidents involve stepfathers, boyfriends or caregivers. Therefore, she said, it's preferable that mothers and their husbands or significant others attend Shaken Baby Syndrome prevention classes together.

"We have them view a 10-minute video together," Kalinowski said. The video has a powerful impact, because it is based on three actual shaken-baby cases and includes interviews with the families involved.

"It is devastating to watch and it really gets their attention," Kalinowski said of viewers' reactions.

Also, service members returning home after deployments are to receive Shaken Baby Syndrome information as part of their debriefing process, Kalinowski said.

All babies cry, Kalinowski said, noting that it's the only way they know how to communicate their discomfort, loneliness, hunger or diaper situation.

Babies at high risk for becoming victims of Shaken Baby Syndrome cry a lot, she said. This group includes premature babies and babies that don't feed well. Multiple-birth babies, she said, also ratchet up the volume when they communicate.

"These parents are under more stress, are getting less sleep and might act in an abnormal manner during those (crying) situations," Kalinowski said. Parents who are getting stressed or irritated by their baby's crying should place the baby in a safe place, like a crib, and take a time out, she said.

Or, "play some music, take your baby for a walk, take the baby for a ride in the car seat," Kalinowski said.

Shaking babies is dangerous to them, primarily because their brains are in the early stages of development, Kalinowski explained.

Injuries can range from death to serious head trauma — meaning skull fractures, blindness, learning disabilities and stunted growth.

Whether it's done deliberately or accidentally, people who shake babies are committing child abuse and could go to jail, Kalinowski pointed out.

"Thirty-percent of these babies who get shaken will die," Kalinowski said. Another 30 percent suffer brain damage and develop other long-term disabilities.

She said the other 30 percent or so develop no adverse symptoms at all.

Shaken Baby Syndrome is preventable, Kalinowski said.

"It's never OK to shake a baby," she emphasized.

This year, DoD is partnering with the National Center on Shaken Baby Syndrome, headquartered in Ogden, Utah, to prevent Shaken Baby Syndrome. National Shaken Baby Prevention Week is being held this week, in conjunction with National Child Abuse Prevention Month, which is observed each April. Military parents can call a 24-hour, counseling line at 1-800-342-9647 to surface their questions about Shaken Baby Syndrome and other issues.

Test your sun smarts: Skin cancer can be deadly

Dr. Jack Leshner

We all know that one plus one equals two. In the same way, sun exposure plus unprotected skin equals skin cancer. More than 1 million cases of skin cancer are diagnosed annually.

By being smart about the sun, and protecting yourself and your family, you can help reduce that number. Test your sun IQ by answering the following questions about sun exposure.

Darker skin (either natural or from a tan) is protected from the sun.

False. Darker skin is just as susceptible to skin cancer as lighter skin. And tanning indicates a change in your skin, so no tan is healthy or safe. Everyone should use a broad-spectrum sunscreen that blocks both UVA and UVB rays with an SPF of at least 15 (30 or higher if you have a history of skin cancer). Apply sunscreen about an hour before going out into the sun, and reapply every two hours (more often if you are swimming).

Wearing white-colored clothing protects you from the sun.

False. It's actually not the color of the clothing, but the thickness of the material that creates sun protection. So a thin white T-shirt would offer less sun protection than a thick and tightly woven white knit shirt. Other recommended items include sunglasses and a hat (which can actually provide an SPF of more than 30).

The only time you need to wear sunscreen is when you plan to be outdoors for an extended period of time.

False. It's actually best to wear sunscreen every day. You should routinely use sunscreen if you will be exposed to the sun for more than 10 to 15 minutes. Believe it or not, your daily drive to work and sitting in your office next to your open window provide enough accumulated sun exposure to damage your skin.

Also remember that sunscreen is still important in the winter or during cloudy days because UVA and UVB rays are still being absorbed by your skin.

Sun exposure ensures I get adequate levels of Vitamin D.

True. But you only need about five to 15 minutes of sun exposure two to three times a week on your face and hands for your body to produce a sufficient supply of Vitamin D. In addition, milk and other Vitamin D-rich foods as well as multivitamins are excellent sources of Vitamin D.

If I wear sunscreen and a hat or protective clothing, then it's OK for me to stay outdoors all day long.

False. Sunscreen and other items are only protective measures. Staying out of the sun is the best way to prevent skin cancer. The sun's rays are strongest between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., so it's highly recommended that you stay out of the sun during those hours.

A tanning bed gives you a safe tan.

False. Tanning beds use ultraviolet light, similar to the UVA and UVB rays emitted by the sun. In fact, the effects of UV exposure are intensified in a tanning bed. Spending an hour in a tanning bed is easily equivalent to spending several hours outside in the sun.

Spots and roughness are a natural part of aging, and there's nothing I can do to prevent that.

False. Sun exposure accelerates aging. Compare skin on your face and hands with skin on a part of your body that is not regularly exposed to the sun and see the difference.

All skin types should also remember to watch for new dark spots or changes in spots on the skin, and especially on palms, soles or around nails. These could be signs of skin cancer and should be checked out by a physician.

If you answered all seven correctly, congratulations. And if you missed some answers, don't worry.

The most important test of your sun smarts actually comes now. By practicing good habits—wearing sunscreen, staying indoors during peak sun hours and wearing protective clothing — you can score big by protecting your skin and helping to prevent skin cancer.

ASK THE JUDGE

Free will necessary to write will

OFFICE OF THE STAFF JUDGE ADVOCATE

Anthony R. Tempesta

Q: My elderly father, a military retiree, has just been diagnosed with Alzheimer's. We (his adult children) want him to have a will — can the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division help us?

A: The above question raises two areas of legal concern.

First, the person making a Last Will and Testament must be of sound mind at the time the will is executed. If the testator or testatrix (man or woman making a will) is not competent, a will cannot be drafted and executed.

Attorneys always conduct an interview with the client to ensure his or her wishes are accurately reflected in the will worksheet. If there is a question about the client's competence based on that interview, the attorney may decline to prepare the will. Most attorneys are not physicians and cannot make a medical diagnosis, but can decide within their professional opinion whether the client understands the choices made and the effects of those choices.

Second, drafting and executing a will must be the free and voluntary act of the testator or testatrix. A will cannot be made under "constraint, duress, fraud or undue influence," and this language appears in the document itself. If the elderly father in the example wants a will and his adult children want to bring him to Legal Assistance and help him get that done, that is fine, but it cannot be that the elderly father doesn't really want a will but the adult children want him to have one and so they are making him prepare one.

Attorney-client interviews are normally conducted one-on-one, but occasionally an elderly parent will want an adult child, grandchild or friend to sit in on the interview as well. This is fine if it is the client's wish, and if the person accompanying the client is not pressuring the client. If the attorney believes that there is undue influence being exercised, he or she may ask the accompanying adult to leave the interview to ensure that the testator's or testatrix's choices are truly free and voluntary.

This does not happen frequently, but it happens occasionally, and is often an emotionally-charged event. Family members or friends who want to accompany someone who wants a will need to be aware of the fact that providing too much help in answering questions can cause problems even if that help is given with the best intentions.

Call the Legal Assistance Division for further information on this subject. The Legal Assistance Division can be reached at 706-545-3281.

The canyon lies in the Coastal Region of Georgia, where sediment was deposited about 60 million years ago during the Paleogene period. ## Georgia's Little Grand Canyon

Geologists blame it on erosion, but tourists will recognize the grand design in Providence Canyon

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

The canyon and its surroundings, which comprise Providence Canyon State Park, offer more than 1,100 acres of wonder to wander, with hiking trails and campsites and a gazillion places to admire God's handiwork.

Of course, geologists would argue that God was decidedly absent in the care and conservation of the land two centuries ago. The canyon, they note, was actually named for Providence Methodist Church. The original church was built in 1832 on the land that lies between the canyon's two main gorges. Its predecessor, built in 1859, still stands across the entrance road to the park, and it's used occasionally for special services. Visitors will want to add it to their "must-see" list when they hike the canyon rim.

Lumpkin Methodists would have likely seen the canyon in its formative years back when the church first opened its doors. Historians say the gorges began forming in the early 1800s as a result of poor soil-management.

The area's early farmers hoed down the native forest cover and cleared the land to make room for crops. They took no measures to prevent erosion, and small gullies began to form in their fields.

By 1850, they were three to five feet deep, and it was too late to turn the tide, so to speak, on the evolution of the canyon. These days, they measure as deep as 150 feet. They're not likely to get much deeper, since the clay content of sediment in the floor of the canyon are more resistant to erosion, but lateral erosion will continue, experts say, because of the soft nature of the soils at higher levels.

You see, the canyon lies in the Coastal Region of Georgia, where sediment was deposited about 60 million years ago during the Paleogene period. Geologists recognize four distinct formations in the canyon — Baker Hill, Clayton, Providence and Ripley. These formations give the walls their striking colors. In fact, park officials say you can count 43 colors of sand and clay in the walls and floors of the canyon.

To the untrained eye, the formations are one entity, a massive series of gorges — 16 in all — with striated walls and glorious vistas.

And the vistas can change rapidly — because of the rapid lateral erosion — so park conservationists are always on the lookout for dangerous shifts in landform. A visit to Providence Canyon in the fall can be quite a different experience than a visit after a heavy spring rain.

The rim of the canyon is in a constant state of change, so rim hikers are likely to see nature in fast forward at various times of the year. The pinnacles gradually decrease in size, but they can actually disappear overnight in heavy rains.

The canyon is recognized by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources as one of the state's "Seven Wonders." Botanists recognize it as a gem, a haven for the rare plumleaf azalea, found only in southwestern Georgia and eastern Alabama. Providence has the largest known wild colony of this species, and visitors can see it in full bloom from mid to late summer.

Nature lovers can enjoy a leisurely three-mile hike around the canyon rim — with a dip to the floor and back up again. Along the way, you'll come upon a curious sight — a number of trucks and cars abandoned there back in the 40s and 50s. Apparently, they were left alongside old mining trails, though it's hard to imagine the rugged terrain once having been accessible. The rusted out vehicles are part of the ecosystem now, and park officials will not allow them to be moved.

For the three-mile hike, you should pack a camera and a picnic and plan to stop for a while at the playground near the rim. Wander across the street and get a closer look at the cemetery behind the Methodist church. You'll find the final resting place of what appears to be displaced Soldiers from the Civil War.

The more serious, experienced backpackers will want to take the seven-mile challenge, a backcountry, primitive trail that winds through the bottom of the canyon. Primitive campsites are also available.

No matter which route you choose, you must check in at the visitors' center to pick up a map and to register if you plan to take the seven-mile trail or camp overnight.

Providence Canyon State Park is open from 7 a.m.-9 p.m. April 15-Sept. 14 and 7 a.m.-6 p.m. Sept. 15-April 14. The office is open 8 a.m.-5 p.m. year-round. There is a $3 fee for parking in Georgia state parks.

The park is located about 42 miles from Fort Benning and seven miles west of Lumpkin on Ga. Hwy. 39C. It's easy to find if you take U.S. 280 East and follow the signs.

Providence Canyon annually sponsors a photography contest.

Visitors are encouraged to enter their favorite photos of Georgia's Little Grand Canyon.

Photographs must be printed on 8 X 10 paper and received by May 20. Prizes will be awarded for the best photos.

For more information on how to submit your winning work, call 229-838-6202.

OPENING TODAY

FRACTURE — When Ted Crawford (Anthony Hopkins) discovers that his beautiful younger wife, Jennifer (Embeth Davidtz), is having an affair, he plans her murder — the perfect murder.

Among the cops arriving at the crime scene is hostage negotiator Detective Rob Nunally (Billy Burke), the only officer permitted entry to the house. Surprisingly, Crawford readily admits to shooting his wife, but Nunally is too stunned to pay close attention when he recognizes his lover, whose true identity he never knew, lying on the floor in a pool of blood.

Crawford is immediately arrested and arraigned after confessing — a seemingly slam-dunk case for hotshot assistant district attorney Willy Beachum (Ryan Gosling). But nothing is as simple as it seems, including this case.

Fracture is rated R for language and violent content.

IN THE LAND OF WOMEN — For as long as he could remember, Carter Webb (Adam Brody) has been falling in love with women. And for as long as he could remember, he'd been searching for the right one.

He found everything he was looking for in Sophia and for a little while he was happy. Unfortunately, it wasn't meant to be.

Heartbroken and depressed, Carter escapes to Los Angeles to care for his ailing grandmother.

In the Land of Women is rated PG-13 for sexual content, thematic elements and language.

VACANCY — When David (Luke Wilson) and Amy Fox's (Kate Beckinsale) car breaks down in the middle of nowhere, they are forced to spend the night at the only motel around, with only the TV to entertain them ... until they discover that the low-budget slasher movies they're watching were all filmed in the very room they're sitting in.

With hidden cameras now aimed at them and filming their every move, David and Amy must struggle to get out alive before whomever is watching them can finish their latest masterpiece.

Vacancy is rated R for brutal violence and terror, brief nudity and language.

ALSO PLAYING

SLOW BURN — Ford Cole (Ray Liotta) is a big-city district attorney with his eye on the mayor's office and a big problem on his hands. One of his deputies, assistant district attorney Nora Timmer (Jolene Blalock), has just confessed to killing a man in what she claims was self-defense.

A bad situation gets worse when an enigmatic stranger named Luther Pink (LL Cool J) turns up at the police station to contradict Nora's story and paint a very different picture of Ford's talented colleague.

Slow Burn is rated R for sexuality, violence and language.

PATHFINDER — A thousand years in the past, a young Norse boy is left behind after his clan shipwrecks on the Eastern shores. Despite his lineage, the boy is raised by the very Indians his kinsmen set out to destroy.

Adam Brody and Olympia Dukakis star in In the Land of Women, opening in theaters today.

As the Vikings return to stage another barbaric raid on his village, the 25-year-old Norse warrior wages a personal war to stop the Viking's trail of death and destruction.

Karl Urban and Moon Bloodgood star in the movie.

Pathfinder is rated R for strong brutal violence throughout.

DISTURBIA — After his father's death, Kale (Shia LaBeouf) becomes sullen, withdrawn and troubled — so much so that he finds himself under a court-ordered sentence of house arrest.

The walls of the house begin to close in on Kale. He becomes a voyeur as his interests turn outside the windows of his suburban home toward those of his neighbors, one of which Kale begins to suspect is a serial killer.

But are his suspicions merely the product of cabin fever and his overactive imagination?

Disturbia is rated PG-13 for sequences of terror and violence and some sensuality.

PERFECT STRANGER — When investigative reporter Rowena Price (Halle Berry) learns that her friend's murder might be connected to powerful ad executive Harrison Hill (Bruce Willis), she goes undercover with the help of her associate, Miles Hailey (Giovanni Ribisi).

Posing as Katherine, a temp at Hill's ad agency, and Veronica, a girl Hill flirts with online, Rowena surrounds her prey from all sides, only to discover that she isn't the only one changing identities.

Perfect Stranger is rated R for sexual content, nudity, disturbing violent images and language.

ARE WE DONE YET? — Now married to Suzanne (Nia Long), Nick Persons (Ice Cube) has bought a quiet suburban house to escape the rat race of the big city and to provide more space for his new wife and kids Lindsey (Alesia Allen) and Kevin (Philip Bolden).

But when his new home quickly becomes a costly "fixer-upper" and he finds himself at the mercy of an eccentric contractor, Nick's suburban dream becomes a riotous nightmare.

Are We Done Yet? is rated PG for some innuendos and brief language.

Rose McGowan, Freddy Rodriguez, Josh Brolin and Marley Shelton star in the movie.

Grindhouse is rated R for strong graphic bloody violence and gore, pervasive language, some sexuality, nudity and drug use.

FIREHOUSE DOG — Rex, Hollywood's top-grossing canine, is known for his extreme athletic abilities and diva-like demeanor. Rex's luck — and Hollywood high life — runs out while shooting a commercial. An aerial stunt goes awry, leading Rex's handlers to presume he's dead. But Rex is merely lost — alone, filthy and unrecognizable in an unfamiliar city.

As his dad Connor (Bruce Greenwood) is reprimanding Shane (Josh Hutcherson) for his unruly behavior, the Dogpatch Fire Department gets a call to put out a blaze tearing through the lofts where Rex has been hiding.

Rex makes a death-defying leap and is rescued by Connor. Shane becomes his reluctant new master but his attitude changes when he discovers Rex's spectacular skills.

Firehouse Dog is rated PG for sequences of action peril, some mild crude humor and language.

THE REAPING — This is a supernatural tale that centers on a myth debunker who tries to prove that a small boy is not the supernatural force behind the devastation of a small, religious Texas town.

The Reaping, rated R for violence, disturbing images and some sexuality, stars Hilary Swank and AnnaSophia Robb.

BLADES OF GLORY — When rival figure skaters Chazz Michael Michaels (Will Ferrell) and Jimmy MacElroy (Jon Heder) go ballistic in an embarrassing, no-holds-barred fight at the World Championships, they are stripped of their gold medals and banned from the sport for life.

Now, three-and-a-half years later, they've found a loophole that will allow them to compete: if they can put aside their differences, they can skate together — in pairs' figure skating.

Blades of Glory is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language, comic violence and drug references.

MEET THE ROBINSONS — When Lewis meets a mysterious boy from the future named Wilbur Robinson, the two travel forward in time where Lewis discovers the amazing secret of the Robinson family.

Lewis is a brilliant 12-year-old with a surprising number of clever inventions to his credit. His latest and most ambitious project is the Memory Scanner, which he hopes will retrieve early memories of his mother and maybe even reveal why she put him up for adoption.

But before he can get his answer, his invention is stolen by the dastardly Bowler Hat Guy and his diabolical hat — and constant companion — Doris.

Angela Bassett, Spencer Fox and Jordan Fry voice the animated characters in the movie.

Meet the Robinsons is rated G.

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM: Exhibits come to life at the Museum of Natural History, much to the alarm of a security guard (Ben Stiller) who finds himself the target of extinct creatures, in director Shawn Levy's hugely popular comedy-fantasy.

Beyond the plentiful, well-executed special effects that should entertain all ages, the picture is notable for the solid roles it gives a couple of true showbiz veterans: Dick Van Dyke and Mickey Rooney.

Robin Williams, Ricky Gervais The Office, Carla Gugino and Kim Raver (24) also appear. (PG-AS, P)

DEJA VU: Among the special skills of the FBI is the ability to go back in time — at least according to this melodrama, casting Denzel Washington as a federal operative investigating a lethal explosion in New Orleans.

He's haunted by one of the victims (Paula Patton), who apparently was slain prior to the bombing. His "Laura"-like obsession prompts him to venture into the past, thanks to a secret FBI device, and try to prevent the tragedy.

Directed by Tony Scott, who also worked with Washington on Man on Fire, the tale also features Jim Caviezel The Passion of the Christ and Val Kilmer. DVD extras: "making-of" documentary; deleted and

3rd BCT surveys water station

Spc. Ben Hutto

FORWARD OPERATING BASE HAMMER, Iraq — In the midst of trying to build a home away from home for Fort Benning troops, leadership at the 3rd Brigade Combat Team is trying to improve conditions for their Iraqi neighbors.

Lt. Col. Ryan Kuhn, the deputy commanding officer for 3rd BCT, 3rd Infantry Division, took several key leaders with him out to the Al Kakaf pump station to see if the facilities were lacking in any area.

"There is a water shortage in the Nahrwan area," said Kuhn, a native of Clarks, Neb. "We are trying to assist in fixing the pumps so the good people of the Nahrwan area have good drinking water and water for their crops."

Photos by Bridgett Siter

Sgt. 1st Class Eric Turk, of the U.S. Army Special Operations Command, eyes the Ranger tab he must reach before dropping into Victory Pond during the log-walk-rop-drop event at Hurley Hill Sunday, day three of the 24th annual Best Ranger Competition. Turk and his teammate, Sgt. 1st Class Isaac Grunewald, 11th Infantry Regiment, were partnered just days before the event after Grunewald's original teammate was injured. The two placed 15th in the BRC.

Special Ops take home the Colts

Rookies take second in competition designed to reflect realities of combat

Maj. Liam Collins and Master Sgt. Walt Zajkowski took bragging rights home to the U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C. Here, the two veteran competitors raise the Colt .45 pistols they were presented during a ceremony Monday at the Ranger Memorial on Main Post.

"Once that bug bites you, it's hard to get it out of your system."

That's how Master Sgt. Walt Zajkowski summed up his return, year after year, to compete in the Best Ranger Competition.

It finally paid off Sunday. It took a combined total of nine times to do it, but Master Sgt. Walt Zajkowski, 34, and Maj. Liam Collins, 36, clinched the Best Ranger title after one of the closest competitions in recent history.

They took bragging rights home to the Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"Our experience turned out to be our strength," Collins said, "because it was a really strong field. Every event had different winners. Anybody could've taken the lead."

In fact, Collins and Zajkowski started day two, after the 24-mile road march, in second place, with 967 points, only 24 points behind Capt. Andrew Farina and David Uthlaut, from the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii.

Military Working Dog Ceremony to honor handlers

THE BAYONET
Bridgett Siter

Sgt. Adam Cann was a stellar Marine. He maxed his physical fitness test every time. He graduated head of his class at corporal school. He was recruited during MP school to become a military working dog handler.

"Nobody could touch him. He excelled at everything he did," said Justin Cann, who buried his brother a year ago after the young Marine MP was killed during a security patrol in Iraq with his canine partner, Bruno.

Bruno survived, Justin said. The German shepherd was assigned to a new handler and went back to work. Life goes on.

But not for Justin Cann and his family. His parents have divorced. Justin got out of the Marines and returned to Enterprise, Ala., to help his mother cope. His younger brother has been in trouble with the law.

"It's really hard. It's still hard," said Justin, who will travel to Fort Benning Saturday to attend the annual Military Working Dog memorial ceremony on Sacrifice Field. Don't expect him to speak; he still struggles to talk about his brother's death. He's simply hoping the occasion will help him heal. He wants to honor his brother, to be with others who want to honor his brother, and to pay tribute to every handler killed in combat since the start of the Global War on Terrorism.

That's what sets this year's ceremony apart from the rest. Maybe 100, 150 veterans — mostly of the Vietnam era — and civilian dog handlers gather each year in Columbus to share their passion for working dogs and their handlers.

This year, the focus is all about today's generation of military dog handlers.

11th Infantry: Building warriors, leaders

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

Everything we do at Fort Benning, the Infantry Center and School, and the future home of the Maneuver Center, is very important to the Army and the nation. The 11th Infantry Regiment is one of our five Training Brigades at Fort Benning and is critical to everything we do. They contribute significantly to our support for the Global War on Terrorism. They are the focus of my article this week.

The 11th Infantry Regiment's primary mission is to train and educate Infantry officers and paratroopers, but as you'll read in this article, they do much more. The Regiment has four battalions, three of which conduct programs in officer education, and one that conducts Airborne, Pathfinder, and Jumpmaster programs. The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Battalions of the 11th make up the Basic Officer Leadership Course (BOLC) program.

BOLC I is the designation the Army has placed on all pre-commissioning programs in the Army, and 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry runs the Army's Officer Candidate School (OCS). Last year, the OCS program produced almost 2,000 newly commissioned lieutenants, well over 25 percent of the total commissioned in our Army. OCS supports the needs of the Army and the demands of the operational environment while retaining a focus on tactical basics and officer education. The OCS program is 14 weeks long, and is composed of candidates who come from the enlisted ranks of the Army and from college graduates who have the desire to become officers. Historically, the Army has relied on OCS to produce increased numbers of officers during wartime, and today is no different. Currently about one-fourth of all platoons in the Army are being led in combat by graduates of this great course.

BOLC II is a program relatively new to the Army that transitions officers from all pre-commissioning sources into the Army culture, the heart of which is the Warrior Ethos. The 1st Battalion runs BOLC II at Fort Benning and developed this program from its inception in 2005. Currently, all Army lieutenants go through the BOLC II program either here or at Fort Sill, Okla., which means more than 4,000 new officers will do their initial Army training at Fort Benning. This training and acculturation lasts for seven weeks and focuses on the Warrior Ethos and Leadership. BOLC

II uses small unit tactical basics and battle drills, with emphasis on decision-making in the contemporary operational environment as its primary training vehicle.

The lieutenants execute physical training, combatives, basic rifle marksmanship, close quarters marksmanship, urban operations, security and support operations, and battle drills to learn leadership and tactical fundamentals. For three weeks the lieutenants live at Forward Operating Base Voyager in the Harmony Church area. Much of the course is student-led, which allows the lieutenants to experiment with leadership techniques and challenges before getting to their first operational unit.

BOLC III programs are branch-specific programs that train lieutenants in their jobs, primarily as platoon leaders. At Fort Benning, the 2nd Battalion of the 11th Regiment conducts the BOLC III program, which is called the Infantry Basic Officer Leaders Course, or IBOLC. This program builds on the BOLC I and BOLC II experiences, and lieutenants learn to apply tactical basics and leadership in more demanding and complex conditions. Focus is on the Infantry squad and platoon, and how to lead, train and fight those organizations. Additionally, IBOLC seeks to physically and mentally prepare its graduates to successfully meet the rigors of the Ranger Course, which they are expected to attend following graduation from IBOLC.

The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, is assigned to the 11th Regiment. This storied battalion runs the Basic Airborne, Jumpmaster, and Pathfinder courses for the Army and the Department of Defense. The famed "Black Hats" (Airborne instructors) train about 17,000 paratroopers each year; and they provide highly trained Jumpmasters and Pathfinders to Airborne, Special Forces, and Ranger units throughout the Army. The awesome cadre are some of the best NCOs in the Army, and they do incredible work every day conducting high-risk training to keep our airborne forces capable of accomplishing their missions.

I had the great honor of commanding the 11th Infantry Regiment from July 1993 to July 1995, and I am now, as I was then, amazed at what this great Regiment does for the Army every day.

We look forward to the Regiment's redesignation as the 199th Infantry Brigade in June, but are glad that the Brigade will retain the 11th Regimental Colors, lineage, and honors for its subordinate battalions. Their motto, "Do The Right Thing," accurately represents what this great training brigade does every day for our Army and for Fort Benning. Follow Me!

OPINION

Best Ranger competitors inspire

Erin A. Nash

I ask to write commentaries when I'm teed off or inspired. This weekend, while watching the 24th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition, I was inspired by many of the competitors and what they taught not only me, but all of the spectators.

This was the third time my husband Adam competed. His first time was in 2002, when our son Addison was 3 years old. The second time was in 2004, when our son was two months shy of turning 5. He doesn't remember watching his dad compete either time, which I realized before the start of the competition when he tried to argue that Dad had only competed once.

While watching Adam competing this weekend, I glanced down at Addison and realized that at 7 years old, he will remember this for the rest of his life. Sure, we have pictures and video of the previous competitions, but this time was special.

Addison was able to watch Adam take part in grueling mental and physical tasks all three days. He saw Adam running, shooting, climbing, swimming and much more.

He saw the toughness displayed by his father and every other competitor. He saw Adam in one of the toughest competitions in the world.

After the competition, he saw the wounds — the blisters, the toenails that wouldn't be around in a few days, the bruises, cuts, etc.

We were also lucky to see history made by the first father and son team in the Best Ranger Competition. Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway and his son, Staff Sgt. Brandon Greenway, were the sentimental favorites of the crowd the entire weekend.

They were the talk of the media, the crowds, the competitors. It was a beautiful sight to see them cross the finish line, rifles raised, with smiles on their faces.

Many sons and daughters were able to see their fathers compete this weekend. Maybe they'll remember it, maybe they won't. Luckily there are pictures so some day those competitors can sit down with their kids and grandkids and tell them about the experience of competing. Everyone has his or her own memories, and to be able to pass on those memories will inspire a whole new generation, I hope.

All competitors were an inspiration this weekend. I saw them push through the pain and the sleeplessness and give the last ounce of strength in their bodies. The teamwork of the two-man teams was awesome. Many of us walked away in awe this weekend. We were inspired by these men. Maybe it even changed some lives.

I'm happy that Addison will one day be able to tell his kids about Adam, and everything he did in his Army career, and especially about his Best Ranger competitions.

Congratulations to all the teams and especially their family and friends. It was an exhausting yet exhilarating weekend for everyone involved and the memories made will last forever.

'Water' you talking about?

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Annette Fournier

Question — What makes up 85 percent of your brain, 83 percent of blood, 76 percent of muscle mass and 22 percent of each bone? Two to three quarts of it is used by your body daily to support normal functions, and if you go without it for 100 hours, it'll be the end of you.

Answer — Plain old H2O and most of us don't drink enough of it. We're a dehydration nation.

I thought about it after watching my friend's son play baseball. He had to bring the post-game snack for the team, and brought water and cut-up fruit. The kids were horrified, complaining because it wasn't the usual after-game snack of chips and soda, or juice boxes and cookies. After all, they drank fruity-flavored, high-sugar sports drinks throughout the game. Why should they need water?

According to kidshealth.org, 65 percent of school-aged children do not drink enough water. An average boy 11-14 needs about 3.3 liters of water daily, and a girl the same age needs about 2.8 liters. The average adult man should drink 3 liters and average women need 2.2 liters of water daily. And all these numbers increase in hot weather and if a person is physically active.

Dehydration makes proper body function impossible. The kidneys can't process toxins and waste, so it backs up in the system. There isn't enough lubrication in the intestines to expel waste. The body can't regulate its temperature, making a person feel overheated or very cold. Water enables the tissues in the throat, eyes and ears to function. It cushions and lubricates the brain, organs, joints and bones, and transports nutrients throughout the body, according to the World Health Organization.

Without ample water, the body can't metabolize stored fat. The system needs nutrients, and a dehydrated body makes a person feel hungry all the time. Without water, the body starts eating away at muscle. The skin gets itchy, flakey and saggy, according to waterhealthconnection.org. It's the single most important substance for body function, according to Web MD.

Remember, as the weather heats up, the risk of dehydration rises. Start every morning with a big glass of water, have a bottle with each meal, drain a glass before bed, and take sips throughout the day.

You wouldn't drive your car without oil. You'd destroy the inner working of the car. Same goes for our bodies, except that you can't go to a dealership and get a new one. Treat your body like it's irreplaceable, because it is. Go ahead, get some water and fill'er up.

Post practices crisis response

Fort Benning, Columbus EMS cooperate during exercise

USAIC PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE
Annette Fournier

Fort Benning emergency responders, leaders and support personnel spent April 12 asking themselves, "what if?"

What if Fort Benning was attacked by terrorists using chemical weapons and explosives?

That was the scenario for a mass casualty exercise designed to test Fort Benning's ability to respond quickly and collaborate effectively during a crisis.

"These types of exercises are always useful and effective for discovering how feasible your written plan is," said Jeffrey Shuck, Fort Benning's chief of Installation Plans and Operations. "It also helps us to 'fine tune' our plans."

In the scenario, a terrorist organization released a chemical substance in the Follow Me Chapel, and detonated a car bomb near the Harmony Church access control point. This set off a chain of events across post.

Four minutes after receiving a 911 call reporting that people were running from the Follow Me Chapel vomiting, Fort Benning law enforcement arrived on the scene.

Role players were lying on the ground yelling for help. Because a chemical gas was suspected, police, fire department personnel and emergency medical responders had to weigh helping the victims against the threat of contamination.

Responders put on chemical suits and decontaminated patients before sending them to Martin Army Community Hospital.

Near the chapel, explosive ordnance disposal detachment Soldiers investigated a suspicious vehicle for possible explosives using a remotely controlled robot.

The EOD also responded to Access Control Point 7 where the mock terrorists detonated a car bomb and abandoned another car with unexploded ordnance.

Role players acted as casualties near the site of the explosion, adding to the 20 hospital walk-in patients, bringing the total number of patients to nearly 50.

The exercise coordinators wanted to simulate a rush on MACH's emergency room as could happen during a crisis, said Randy Reinisch, program coordinator with the Exercises and Simulations, National Emergency Response and Rescue Training Center.

MACH personnel worked with Columbus hospitals to determine the total number of patients who could be sent to Columbus hospitals if MACH reached capacity.

Everything happening on the ground was being tracked and directed by the emergency operations center, where representatives of agencies from across post shared information and planned responses.

Military intelligence briefed staff on the suspected terrorist groups' background; analysts used patients' symptoms to decipher what chemical weapon was used; weather specialists tracked the path of gas and how wind direction would affect the buildings surrounding the contaminated areas; school officials planned for evacuating children; and a variety of other offices cooperated. A representative from the city of Columbus also worked in the operations center.

The exercise is a way to test the installation's ability to respond to emergencies, said Bill Hoy, Fort Benning chief of police.

"We're exercising our police, our emergency responders, our fire, as well as exercising (coordination) with Columbus for support for fire and emergencies on post," Hoy said. "This is one of the opportunities when we can all come together, share out experience, share our expertise and then come together afterwards and kind of 'hot wash' the whole thing and find out how in the future we can do it better."

During the after-action review, participants suggested improvements and discussed what went well. Reinisch was the AAR facilitator.

He said the exercise was not an inspection, but a chance to learn and increase readiness. During an emergency, personnel should ask themselves three questions, he said. What do I know? Who else needs to know what I know? Who has the resources that I may need, and how long will it take to get them?

While there are areas needing improvement, Shuck said the installation responded well.

"At this point, we definitely have the major muscle movements down and the system is working well," Shuck said. "Now we will go after the finer details, which will produce the end result of having a safer installation."

Staff members will have a chance to test their abilities again Tuesday when the next exercise is scheduled.

PROCLAMATION

National Library Week

April 15-21 was National Library Week, a time when libraries of all types and the people who use them come together with the American Library Association and its Campaign for America's Libraries to celebrate the contributions of all libraries, librarians, and library workers nationwide and in the Fort Benning community.

The libraries on Fort Benning are flourishing, not only within the physical confines of bricks and mortar, steel and glass, but also in the continuously expanding Internet universe.

In 2006, Donovan Research Library, USAIS, John B. Amos and Elena Verson-Diaz Library, WHINSEC, Martin Army Hospital Library, MEDDAC, and Sayers Memorial Library, Directorate Morale, Recreation and Wellness checked out 110,000 items. Attendance was more than 300,000, which included just under 1,000 programs (orientations, book signings, preschool story times, outreach programs and the Annual Children's Summer Reading program) attended by more than 7,200 people. In addition, the seven Department of Defense Education Activity school media centers on post showed increases in circulation and attendance.

The Fort Benning Libraries are about community. They provide our Soldiers, Families, and those who work on Fort Benning with a physical gathering place, a crossroads for all, complete with trained information professionals — librarians and library workers — fostering inquiry and assisting with interpretation of information both onsite and online.

Libraries, librarians and library workers are more relevant than ever. Our multifaceted, multicultural, multilingual resources are providing a bridge to the best conceivable future for Soldiers worldwide.

Moreover, of course, admission is free, so take some time to visit our Fort Benning libraries.

Army restricts spending, waits for Congress' approval

Army awaits emergency supplemental funding from Congress for war on terror

Carmen L. Gleason

WASHINGTON — Because of budget shortfalls, the Army announced April 16 that spending restrictions will be enforced while waiting for Congress to pass an emergency supplemental for funding requirements associated with the war on terror.

Army budget officials said the delay is related more to the policy issues surrounding the supplemental than the amount of money being requested.

Funds for operations and maintenance have run low, requiring restrictions in other areas to ensure funds are available for the Army to execute its mission of defending the nation and prosecuting the war on terror while continuing to support military Families, officials said.

Although the restrictions are unusual, they are not unprecedented, said William Campbell, deputy director for the Army budget. The Army plans to slow down spending to stretch out available funds in the interim.

"I am confident that (the supplemental) will get passed," Campbell said. "In talking with staffers and congressmen, they are eager to get the money to the Army that it needs."

Campbell said the guidance is in a phased plan that will begin with simple restrictions over the next six weeks before becoming more stringent.

Beginning in mid-April, the Army slowed the purchase of non-critical repair parts and supplies, he said.

Non-essential travel and supply transactions using a government purchase card and shipment of equipment will be restricted unless needed immediately for war efforts.

In the interim, Army officials have worked with the Defense Department comptroller to submit a proposal to Congress to borrow $1.6 billion from the Navy and Air Force that would ease the Army's shortfall through June.

If budget issues aren't soon resolved, Campbell said that another reprogramming would be submitted in three or four weeks to carry the Army through the end of July.

This is the second year in a row that the Army has had to restrict spending while waiting for additional money from Congress. However, DoD has taken steps toward the stabilizing of funding for the next fiscal year.

Current policies have military branches getting a "down payment" of funds at the beginning of each fiscal year and receiving the remainder in April, May or June, Campbell said.

"DoD has submitted, for (fiscal 2008), a base program budget and (war on terror) allowance for the entire year as part of the budget," he said. This would allow the Army to receive all needed money at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Campbell said that commanders have been given a lot of latitude and flexibility to make exceptions in restrictions for the war on terror, family programs and national intelligence programs.

In the worst case scenario, contracts may be deferred and civilian hiring will be restricted, but not frozen, he said.

"At this point there is no reason to be concerned about employment," he said. "Last year we did release some temporary employees, but this year we're going to monitor it more carefully."

Campbell said Soldiers shouldn't be too concerned because it will not affect their pay or deployment readiness.

"We should be able to manage money so that it's transparent to Soldiers and their Families in the field," he said.

"This is really mostly a budget drill," he said. "But it's gotten a lot of media coverage because of the policy issues surrounding it."

Task Force Fury snipers in Afghanistan receive new weapon

ARMY NEWS SERVICE
Sp. Matthew Leary

FORWARD OPERATING BASE SALERNO, Afghanistan — Soldiers from Task Force Fury are the first in a combat zone to receive a new sniper rifle, the XM110 semi-automatic sniper system.

The new rifle has several new features, the most prominent being an improved rate of fire.

"It's semi-automatic, so it allows for rapid re-engagement of targets," said Staff Sgt. Jason R. Terry, a sniper instructor with the U.S. Army Sniper School.

Older rifles such as the M24 Sniper Weapon System are bolt-action weapons that require the user to manually feed another round into the chamber after each shot.

The automatic firing capabilities of the SASS will decrease lag time in between shots, Terry said.

A metal tube that fits over the barrel of the rifle also significantly reduces the signature blast and eliminates the small cloud of dust that rises off the ground from the gases emitted through the barrel.

This advancement will make locating snipers in the field, even after they have fired a shot, difficult for enemy forces, Terry said.

The new weapons came with three days of training, both in the classroom and on the range, by Terry and other experts.

"We learned to maintain and operate the weapon, what we can fix ourselves and what we can't," said Pfc. Joel D. Dulashanti, a sniper with the 82nd Airborne Division's Troop C, 4th Squadron, 73rd Cavalry Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team.

Kyle P. Gleason, an equipment specialist with Tank Automotive and Armorer Command, handled the maintenance portion of the class.

"I teach them the basics," he said. "Here's your rifle, here's what it can do and here's how you take care of it."

Gleason taught Soldiers how to determine the level of maintenance the weapon needs and who is capable of providing it.

He also cautioned Soldiers about particularly fragile parts of the weapon, which only manufacturers can repair.

Bush: U.S. security tied to success in Iraq

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Sgt. Sara Wood

WASHINGTON — Although most Americans would like to see the conflict in Iraq end and U.S. troops come home, America must persevere in Iraq to ensure its own future security, President Bush said Tuesday.

"No matter how frustrating the fight can be and no matter how much we wish the war was over, the security of our country depends directly on the outcome in Iraq," Bush said in a White House statement on the 2007 Iraq war supplemental spending bill.

Bush spoke against Congress's proposed bill, which ties funding for the war with withdrawal deadlines for U.S. troops from Iraq. Setting withdrawal deadlines would let the enemy know exactly how long they have to wait before they can try to take over Iraq and use it as a base for future attacks, he said.

"A lesson of 9/11 is that allowing terrorists to find a sanctuary anywhere in the world can have deadly consequences on the streets of our own cities," Bush said. "Precipitous withdrawal from Iraq is not a plan to bring peace to the region or to make our people safer at home. Instead, it would embolden our enemies and confirm their belief that America is weak."

Withdrawing from Iraq before the job is done would be an invitation to terrorists to attack America and its allies around the world, Bush said.

Army Gen. David H. Petraeus, the new commander of Multinational Force Iraq, is carrying out a strategy that's drastically different from the previous strategy, Bush said. While the people voted for change in Iraq strategy, Bush added, "the American people did not vote for failure."

Sgt. 1st Class Joe Williams takes on the rock climbing wall during day two of the tri-tower event. Twenty-one of the 41 teams qualified for day two after the previous night's 24-mile foot march.

Maj. Liam Collins, left, and Master Sgt. Walt Zajkowski cross the finish line Sunday at the end of the BRC.

BRC: Features new Tri-Tower Challenge

Farina and Uthlaut, both rookies, fell to third Sunday morning after the all-night orienteering. Collins and Zajkowski moved into first, and the 75th Ranger Regiment's Sgts. 1st Class Billy Pouliot and Adam Nash took a shaky second, only 10 points ahead of Farina and Uthlaut. It was the first competition for Pouliot and the third for Nash, who was half of the winning team in 2004.

After the Darby Queen, the team of Uthlaut and Farina climbed over Pouliot and Nash, and there they remained throughout the rest of the competition.

Zajkowski said he was never confident in their lead, but he never doubted their strategy.

"We stayed focused — that was the plan. We ran our own race," he said.

And it was a race quite different from any before. The 24th annual Best Ranger Competition started with 39 teams, a dozen more than last year and most every year since the start of the war. The spot-jump was canceled because of high winds. And in an effort to make the competition reflect the realities of combat, planners pulled the plug on standards like the tomahawk throw, archery and the dreaded Prusik Climb. In its place as the Day Stakes' centerpiece was the Tri-Tower Challenge, a series of climbs, rappels and rope descents.

The Tri-Tower wasn't as grueling as its predecessor, Zajkowski said, but nonetheless, BRC planners hit their mark.

"It was different in that it was all more focused on combat tasks," he said.

Team Greenway waits their turn at the Helocast competition during the Victory Pond phase of the BRC, the last event before the race to the finish line.

BRC: Includes unusual team

There was never a team pegged as an easy favorite, but from the get-go, the father-son team of Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Greenway and his son, Staff Sgt. Brandon Greenway, were obvious sentimental favorites.

Their pairing made history in many ways, aside from the fact that there's never before been a father-son team and the senior Greenway was the oldest competitor ever at 47.

Daughter Jessica, her husband, and their 3-month old son, Alan Sinquefield Jr., were waiting at the finish line when the Greenways secured a 13th place finish, likely making the Infantry

School sergeant major the first grandfather to compete.

The fact wasn't lost on the elder Greenway. Completing the BRC with his son was his "last big hooah" before retiring May 4. Now, Greenway said, he can concentrate on raising another Ranger.

As for Brandon, he figures he's immune to the "BRC bug." He said he won't compete again.

"No, this was it for me. I'll never find another teammate like this one," he said as he stood shoulder to shoulder with his dad at the finish line.

BRC: Showcases Rangers who ‘give 100 percent and then some’

While the oldest competitor went looking for a meal and a place to rest, the youngest Ranger in the crowd was assessing his own potential as a competitor.

“I don’t think I could do it,” said 14-year-old Riley Woina, who earned an honorary Ranger tab in March after accompanying a class of Ranger students through the swamp phase at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Florida.

Riley, who suffers from cystic fibrosis, traveled with his parents from Connecticut to attend the competition and visit with friends they made while here last month for his Ranger School graduation. After watching the race and accompanying a couple of teams all the way through the Darby Queen obstacle course, Riley was certain he’d never tackle the whole competition himself.

“Not for $500,000. It’s way too much. I couldn’t do it. I know my dad couldn’t do it,” said Riley, who rooted for the Greenways from the start. “I can’t believe they did it. I’d say — you go through days without sleep and without much food and you carry 100 pounds — yeah, you’re really good.”

The truth is, some of the really good ones didn’t make it to the finish line, said Col. Greg Hager, who commands the Ranger Training Brigade, which hosts the BRC. Take for example, the team of Sgt. 1st Class Stephen Colman and Staff Sgt. Robert Mustoe, representing the 6th Ranger Training Battalion.

Colman and Mustoe were considered by many to be contenders for the title going into the competition. They competed together last year, but Mustoe rolled his ankle and had to call it quits. This time around, Colman broke his foot on Friday. In spite of the injury, Hager said, Colman opted to tackle the infamous 24-mile road march, the single greatest disqualifier in the race. Ten miles into it, when it looked like Colman wouldn’t make it, Mustoe shouldered his partner’s rucksack atop his own and toted more than 130 pounds to the finish line by himself, with Colman by his side.

And, Hager said, they made it back before the 6 a.m. deadline, which put them in the top 21 teams and qualified them to continue into day two. They pulled themselves out to give another team a shot.

The team of Capt. Matthew Kirby and Sgt. Giancarlo Urzi came from U.S. Army Alaska to compete. Hager said the duo, both rookies, were penalized early on for an infraction during the Friday orienteering challenge. Then one of them pulled a hamstring — Hager wasn’t sure who it was.

“So they lost points and suffered an injury that took them out of the game,” he said.

And still they decided to do the road march, knowing full well they wouldn’t make the final cut — only 21 teams would enter day two.

Capt. Kamil Sztalkoper

Staff Sgt. Blake Simms and Capt. John Spencer, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, jump from a hovering Black Hawk helicopter into Victory Pond during the helocast event. Once in the water, the team had to either pull or push their rucksack-raft to shore.

“They just didn’t quit,” Hager said. “They went into the very worst part of the whole thing knowing they were out of the running. That’s the ‘100 percent and then some’ in the Ranger Creed.”

And then there was team 41, Sgt. 1st Class Isaac Grunewald, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Sgt. 1st Class Eric Turk, Special Operations Command. You won’t find team 41 on any of the team rosters printed two days prior to the competition. The pairing of Grunewald and Turk was a last minute decision. Turk was an alternate, and Grunewald was half of team 14 originally; his partner was injured during training.

“It’s amazing to me,” Hager said. “Here are two guys who didn’t know each other, never trained together, and they came in fifteenth place. You could say that’s synonymous with the pairing of Ranger buddies in Ranger School — they don’t know each other, but they have a single goal, to earn that tab.”

Grunewald and Turk’s confidence in one another was well-placed, Hager said.

“They’re Rangers; they see that tab and they say, ‘I know this guy, because I know what he’s done and what he can do.’”

Extended deployments should lessen stress, commander says

Gerry J. Gilmore

WASHINGTON — Extended overseas deployments affecting Soldiers serving in Afghanistan and other locales overseen by U.S. Central Command should help to alleviate the stress on the Army, a senior U.S. officer in Afghanistan told Pentagon reporters Tuesday.

"I'm absolutely confident that that's going to work and that'll manage the pressure and the stress on the force," Army Col. Martin Schweitzer, commander of the 82nd Airborne Division's 4th Brigade Combat Team, said during a satellite-carried news conference.

All active U.S. Army units already operating within U.S. Central Command's area of responsibility, including Afghanistan, Iraq and the Horn of Africa, or en route there "will deploy for not more than 15 months and return home for not less than 12 months," Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates announced April 11 at a Pentagon news conference.

The change automatically increased the length of Soldiers' overseas tours in those areas from 12 to 15 months.

A 22-year Army veteran, Schweitzer is on his second tour in Afghanistan, having previously served there in 2002. The colonel began his current tour of duty in Afghanistan in January.

The 4th Brigade Combat Team operates in Paktika, Paktia, Lowgar, Ghazni and Khost provinces in the southeastern part of Afghanistan, Schweitzer said, noting this is the brigade's first overseas deployment.

The 15-month deployments are needed to ensure that the Army retains the capacity to sustain the deployed force, Army Lt. Gen. Raymond T. Odierno, commander of Multinational Corps Iraq, said April 13 from Baghdad during a teleconference with Pentagon reporters.

The tour extensions will provide more predictability and stability for Soldiers and their Families, Odierno said, noting the policy "will ensure 12 months at home station between rotations."

Schweitzer acknowledged difficulty in measuring how the extended deployment affects individual Soldiers under his command. However, he expressed strong support for the personnel decisions made by senior defense department and Army leaders.

The Pentagon's civilian and military leaders "put a lot of rigor and analytical analysis into this (tour extension) to determine what is best for the service and what is sustainable," Schweitzer said.

Memorial: Open to the public, ceremony starts at noon

A pedestal, one of 13 encircling the granite working dog memorial, will be dedicated to handlers killed in Iraq and Kuwait.

Ken Besecker, who led a combat tracker platoon in Vietnam in 1969, has helped establish a nonprofit Military Working Dog Team Support Association to help fund support for the cause.

He expects to see a greater number of people at this year's ceremony, which starts at noon. He expects to see active-duty handlers from all the services, civilian search and rescue teams and a number of civilian competitive trackers.

The ceremony is open to the public. For more information, call Besecker at 706-353-2155.

3rd BCT: Inspects Iraqi water

The 3rd BCT took an hour to inspect the pumps, pipes and electrical system of the station and to try and determine the best way to get the station working to its full potential.

"The purpose of the site survey was to see if the water pump station was working to full capacity," Kuhn said.

The station workers were eager to show the Sledgehammer Brigade Soldiers the station and took the time to explain what they thought was needed to help their people get the water they desperately need.

Kuhn is not only the deputy commander of the Sledgehammer Brigade, but is also heading the brigade's Provincial Reconstruction Team.

The 3rd BCT PRT is made up entirely of uniformed personnel from the brigade and aims to assist the local Iraqi government in its efforts to improve essential services, such as, water distribution.

The Sledgehammer Brigade PRT will have assistance in accomplishing this important project.

"We will be talking with the Ministry of Agriculture, the Ministry of Oil, the Ministry of Electricity and the local Qada leaders to determine what their plan is to fix the station," Kuhn said.

Deat should go through for Junior

Dale Earnhardt Jr. is confident the deal with his stepmother Teresa will go through soon.

Junior is taking Teresa for 51 percent ownership in his late father's company Dale Earnhardt Enterprises.

According to sources on ESPN.com, Junior has been offered the majority ownership and a seat on the board of directors along with his mother Teresa Earnhardt Eledge, who has been instrumental in negotiating the contract.

Gritley passes Jackson

Ken Gritley Jr. passed Reggie Jackson in career home runs, hitting his 564th home Tuesday night when the Cincinnati Reds beat the St. Louis Cardinals, 10-3.

Gritley is now in 10th place on the career home runs list.

No money for tennis players

The All-England Club announced Tuesday that the prize money for the year's Wimbledon tournament has increased.

Men's and women's singles champions will receive a $1.4 million paycheck. The men's purse increased by 6.3 percent and the women's by 12 percent, since Wimbledon decided that the women's side should have equal pay.

All I can say is, it's about time.

NFL draft

The NFL draft is this weekend. According to a poll on ESPN.com, the Oakland Raiders would do well with the first pick and draft quarterback JaMarcus Russell.

The draft can be seen from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday on ESPN.

Other players going into draft weekend include wide receiver Calvin Johnson, quarterback Brady Quinn and running back Adrian Peterson.

Jeff Gordon not only had the pole position, but he won the Subway Fresh Fit 500 Saturday at Phoenix International Raceway and led lap 160. Dale Earnhardt Jr. came home.

After carrying the No. 3 flag around the track, Gordon's car was pelted with beer cans, even though Dale Earnhardt Jr. had approved Gordon's request after his No. 14 last year, and said Gordon's salute was classy.

This week's race is right in our backyard (well, close enough). The Aerobics 400 is from Talladega, Ala. Coverage begins at 1:30 p.m. Sunday on Fox.

Spikers win championship

11th Inf. Regt. beat 2/58 Patriots

THE BAYONET

The 11th Infantry Regiment Spikers forced the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment Patriots into a second match to win the Intramural Volleyball championship on Tuesday night in the Audie Murphy gymnasium.

"We're exhilarated right now," said 11th Infantry's Nelson Parrish. "We pulled it out by sticking to the basics."

The Spikers were the favorites to win, with a regular season record of 4-1, while the Patriots made their way into the playoffs ranked last place with a 2-3 record.

"At times, this year was tough," said the Patriots' Clayton Sheffield. "We had to work and we improved a lot as the season progressed."

During the first game of the first match, the Patriots came out swinging with power serves and kills, which kept the Spikers looking for answers. The Patriots' Sheffield played the net well making several blocks.

The Spikers, missing their star player Josh Marsh because of a prior obligation, seemed out of sync early on.

"We need to focus better on our passing," said Spikers' La'auli Ifopo. "Our communication isn't clicking like it should be."

The Spikers surrendered the first game, 21-14.

The Spikers came back blazing in the second game, making accurate passes near the net, as well as limiting errors on service and returns.

Parrish and the Spikers' Brian Revell made several kills, which showed their power at the net.

The Spikers eventually won the second and third games 21-19 and 15-10, forcing the Patriots to have to play another match due to the Spikers playing out of the playoffs' losing bracket.

The first game of the second match nearly mirrored the first. The Patriots'

Fort Benning students place in sport stacking world cup

Five Fort Benning students came back champions in the 2007 World Sport Stacking Championships in Denver, Colo., April 14-15.

"I'm really proud of how the students did this year," said Pam Koon, the PE teacher at Dexter Elementary and coach for the sport stacking team on post.

There were more than 1,100 students who participated, representing six different countries.

"The competition was much more difficult than in previous years," Koon said. "The kids were so fast this year. The times have to be crazy to be competitive."

Each age represents its own competition group. The Fort Benning team had students from pre-K through fifth grade.

Danielle Edwards, a first-grader at Dexter Elementary, took first place in the 3-6-3 team relay and broke the world record in the event with a time of 25.96 seconds.

"I felt pretty happy breaking the record," Danielle said.

"Danielle is very consistent. She is very steady and she barely makes mistakes," Koon said.

Danielle's two brothers, Josh, a third-grader, and Ben, a fourth-

Tryouts for youth roller hockey team held next week

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

There will be a meeting for parents and players interested in trying out for the inaugural Columbus All-Stars Roller hockey team.

"There has been so much interest from kids in this area," said Sgt. 1st Class Tom Dow, a TRADOC liaison at Fort Benning who's helping spread the word about the league.

"The kids from the local high schools don't have their own teams so starting our own league is the only way to make things happen."

The All-Stars will be the first team in a future

Georgia High School Roller Hockey League, said Paul Rimer, the All-Stars' coach.

"We had to take matters into our own hands because area high schools didn't want to get behind us and recognize us as an official team," he said.

Dow's stepson, Marc Gaudet, a student at Northside High School, has been playing roller hockey for about 12 years.

"My son's from Canada, so it's really important to him to be able to play the sport he loves," Dow said. "He actually enjoys roller hockey more than ice hockey."

The D.A. Turner YMCA has had roller hockey teams and games for the last several years. The Columbus GHRA teams hope to be competitive with the more than 60 teams in the state of Georgia.

"The YMCA has been great, but there are only three area teams so they play each other all the time," Rimer said.

"The schools in Atlanta are highly competitive."

There will be 15 skaters and two goalies chosen for the team.

They will work with several Atlanta teams to hold workshops scrimmages and games.

"We want our team to play against experienced players so that it pushes them and helps them develop," Dow said.

The roller hockey season will begin in October and last until March.

Player eligibility:

- Players must be between the ages of 15-18 years old (can turn 19 during the season)

- All interested players should have three years of ice or roller hockey experience
- Students must provide their own equipment including full face shield
- Players must be willing to travel as far as the Atlanta area
- Players must be able to play on weekends
- Each player must be registered with USHL prior to the start of the season

Spikers: beat 2/58 in third game

Corey Shaffer showed brute strength, making kill after kill to give them the lead. The Spikers rallied for a comeback but fell short, giving up the first game, 21-19, after the Patriots' Jason Carmona scored the game-winning spike at the net.

"We lost the first game of both matches and that made us feel like we we're going downhill," said Parrish.

The Spikers once again stepped it up in the second game, passing with fluidity and making aces on serves.

In the third and deciding game, both teams traded points back and forth. The crowd gave both teams much needed energy after playing more than five games.

Shaffer tapped a point over the blocker's hands to tie the game, 14-14. The Spikers ultimately took the match and championship off a return error, winning the third set 16-14.

"We worked harder because we knew we were missing Josh," said Parrish. "This is by far the toughest competition I've ever faced here on post."

Carmona said he's already looking forward to playing and improving next season.

"It's tough to lose two straight matches," he said. "We took it as far as we could but we just fell short. We'll get our chance again."

Who you gonna 'call'

THE BAYONET
Mitchell Thomas IV

It's way past time that I talk about this. The officiating in the NBA stinks, plain and simple.

After seeing the San Antonio Spurs' standout and model league citizen Tim Duncan pick up two ridiculous technical fouls April 17, which resulted in an ejection, I was livid.

Joey Crawford, a veteran official with 31 years of experience, was suspended indefinitely last week for challenging Duncan to a fight after tossing him.

Crawford gave Duncan both techs while he was on the bench — supposedly laughing and "mocking the officials on the sideline."

Duncan was fined $25,000 for making an explicit comment to Crawford after receiving the ejection.

I saw the clips and I have to say, I'm beyond confused. There are two sides to every story but to get tossed while on the bench is brand new for me.

This entire year, as far as officiating, has been a joke.

At the start of the season, NBA commissioner David Stern announced that the league was going to usher in a new, more strict officiating style to accompany his newly incorporated microfiber game ball. His reasoning — players complained too much after calls and showed too much emotion resulting in slow game flow and negative imagery.

What ensued was a nearly two-month nightmare of ticky-tack calls, unjust techs and ejections and millions of dollars in fines (as well as paper cuts from the new ball).

When a player gets whistled for a bad call, which happens a lot of the time, how can you expect him not to react?

Players are emotional. These are human beings playing a sport, and as humans, we react in the moment.

Since the refs are human as well, they will make mistakes. This is expected because calls are simply reactions. A ref's call will never be reversed except by another ref and there are no instant replays or challenge flags in basketball, so integrity has to be expected.

I know some players act like babies and argue after every call, even the correct ones, and that does get annoying. The Detroit Pistons' Rasheed Wallace is the perfect example. Wallace has had to bear the brunt of excessive calls because of his reputation every season. Not surprising, he and every other player are walking on eggshells this season. Well, maybe not, because Wallace still led the league with 21 technicals.

With that said, the NBA is unnecessarily becoming a police league. First they profile the league and incorporate a dress code before games and now refs have the right and are even encouraged to use more of their over-inflated egos by calling fouls for untied shoes or bad haircuts. The whistle has become a disciplinary belt to punish players for personal reasons as opposed to game play.

Yes, there are many instances where technical fouls are necessary, but when a player makes a surprised face or raises his arms because of surprise, let the whistle rest on your chest. For example, Golden State Warriors' Baron Davis got ejected Wednesday night against the Mavericks for clapping after a ref made a call. This game was getting out of hand emotionally but is clapping really showing up the ref? On the other hand, the Warriors' Stephen Jackson got ejected in the following quarter of the same game. After which he spewed profanities at the fans, players and refs. In this case Jackson, a well-known firecracker, deserves every dollar he will probably be fined.

Stern is really trying to take away everything from the game and make it his own monolithic government. The Detroit-Indiana brawl is the reason for all this. Yeah, it was an awful bruise on the eye of the league, but it's over and it was an exception, not the rule.

The Duncan situation was clearly an abuse of power. Referees sometimes use long-term memory when making calls on players. Duncan probably said something that Crawford didn't like early in the game or in a previous game. Calls are supposed to be made on a then and now basis.

Yeah, Duncan was laughing on the bench, but it was no different than anything else every player does and who's to say that his laughter had anything to do with Crawford. I know one thing, right now I'm laughing at the NBA as a whole.

I assume I'll be getting my fine in the mail.

grader, finished sixth and eighth place respectively in their age groups in the 3-3-3 and 3-6-3 individual events.

Rene Ramirez, a fourth-grader at Stowers Elementary, placed ninth in his age group in the cycle, meaning a combination of stacking sequences.

Dylan Williams, a sixth-grader at Richards Middle School in Columbus, placed sixth in the 3-3-3.

Koon, who started the sport stacking team on post six years ago, said that it's unique because it strengthens the child's mental capacity, resulting in better grades and focus.

"I researched activities for my students to do and a lot of my kids took to it immediately," she said.

"I like doing this because it forces me to use both sides of my brain at once," Josh said.

Koon said the key component that separates a good stacker from the rest of the pack is desire.

"I have kids who are very talented, but they don't nurture their skills," Koon said. "The students who work at it understand that if they want to get better, they have to work instead of depending on natural ability."

Koon is looking forward to more students placing in the world championships next year.

"It's an overwhelming experience for all of us," she said. "We had such a great time and met so many people from all over."

Next season's sport stacking team will begin practicing in August with tournament play starting in October.

"You have to practice, practice, practice for hours and hours to get better," Koon said. "It has to become as easy as breathing."

For information about sport stacking, www.worldsportstackingassociation.org has more information or visit the Web site www.speedstacks.com for more information on where to buy the cups.

Danielle Edwards, a first-grader at Dexter Elementary, concentrates while stacking in the Stowers Elementary gymnasium. Danielle's team won first place and set a world record in the World Sports Stacking Championships 3-6-3 team relay with a time of 25.96 seconds.

"Cup stacking is fun because I like to work with my hands," said Rene Ramirez, a fourth-grader at Stowers Elementary who has been sport stacking for six years. Rene placed ninth in the cycle, a combination of stacking sequences, with a time of 9.69 seconds.

Ben Edwards, a fourth-grader at Dexter Elementary, tries to beat his best 3-6-3 time in the Stowers Elementary gymnasium. Ben finished in eighth place in the 3-6-3 at the World Sports Stacking Championship with a time of 3.52 seconds.

Army driver moves to 10th in points

Mark Martin returns to Nextel Cup action, finishes 12th; Regan Smith takes Army car to Talladega this weekend

U.S. ARMY RACING

PHOENIX — Despite problems Mark Martin encountered in his Car of Tomorrow debut Saturday, the savvy U.S. Army driver managed to pull off a respectable 12th-place finish at Phoenix International Raceway.

Martin, who missed NASCAR's previous two COT races (Bristol and Martinsville) as part of his limited 2007 schedule with Ginn Racing, is 10th in the Nextel Cup driver standings.

In the six races in which he has competed, Martin has averaged a 6.16 finish.

In owner points, the 01 Army team is ranked fifth.

"That was a pretty hard race tonight," said Martin.

"We never really did get a handle on the car, and we just weren't able to get going all night. I couldn't get the Army Chevy to hook up coming off (turn) four like we were able to do during Friday's practice. We still have work to do on our Car of Tomorrow program, but we'll keep plugging away and get better."

"Still, Ryan (Pemberton, crew chief) did a great job calling the race and the pit crew was once again awesome," Martin said.

"When you don't have it all together and still finish 12th, that says something about the quality of this team. We're like our Soldiers, we never give up."

Martin started the race 20th, but was never able to get his U.S. Army Chevrolet dialed in on the one-mile oval.

He ran in the mid to high teens for the majority of the 312-lap event before gaining track position late in the race to finish 12th.

It was the first time in six races that he failed to post a top-10 result.

Martin will not drive the weekend race at Talladega.

He will return to action the following week in Richmond.

Regan Smith will pilot the 01 car at Talladega Superspeedway in the Aaron's 499 Sunday.

Country musician Mark Wills visits AMU

Mark Wills takes aim with a modified M-16 rifle.

Photos by Paula J. Randall

Country singer Mark Wills visited U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Brinson Range April 19 and received shooting instruction on the modified M-16 rifle from service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Coffey. Wills, a Georgia resident, said during a 2005 interview with American Forces Press Service's Rudi Williams, that he was honored to have the chance to entertain at the Military Child Education Coalition conference. "This is something I felt extremely proud of, because one of the biggest things that's overlooked when our Soldiers are deployed are the Families," he told the audience. "Every night when my daughters and I say our prayers, we always pray for our Soldiers. A lot of times it's overlooked that we don't pray for the Families, we don't pray for the kids. They deploy, too, because, often, they don't get the chance to live in the same place for more than a few years."

Two Soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won medals in the International Shooting Sport Federation Shotgun World Cup in Changwon, Korea, April 19.

Pfc. Walton "Glenn" Eller III won the gold medal and an Olympic quota slot in the World Cup's Men's Double Trap competition April 19 and Staff Sgt. William H. Keever took the bronze medal. Hakan Dahlby of Sweden got the silver.

Eller is a two-time Olympic team member and a Double Trap World Champion. Keever also competed in Double Trap in the 2000 Olympics.

For more information on the Korea World Cup, go to www.issf.tv.

Every year, qualified shooters of each of the Olympic shooting disciplines participate in four World Cups. Not only can shooters win medals and set world records at these World Cups, but they can also win quota slots for their countries to compete in the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, China.

The USA has now earned 19 of a possible 28 Olympic quota slots.

Norman Perez of the Benning Softball team crushes a solo homer in Monday night's game against National Business Services Inc. Joe Perez, Flip Burton, Chris Mullins and Aaron Grant combined for 16 hits in 20 at bats, with 10 singles, a double, two triples, three home runs, 13 RBIs and 12 scored runs to defeat NBS, 25-21, in a comeback effort. Benning has a perfect 5-0 record this season.

Ten-Miler qualifiers set for May, June

THE BAYONET

The 23rd annual Army Ten-Miler in Washington, D.C., is on its way.

The Army Ten-Miler is the largest race in the U.S. and attracts nearly 30,000 runners and spectators yearly, said Lori Smith, fitness director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

MWR will have three event qualifiers on May 5 and 18 and June 23.

"We're looking for good runners to come and try out," Smith said. The qualifiers are free and open to any active-duty military, active National Guard and Reserve Soldiers.

Each participant runs a five-mile course out and back.

Male participants should try to run in under 60 minutes while females should post times under 70, Smith said.

There will be teams made up of eight males or six on a co-ed team, depending on the amount of participation.

"We want to take a team that's competitive," said Ken Wetherill, MWR's Sports Fitness and Aquatics director. Runners who are chosen after the qualifier are provided with a uniform and a warm-up suit.

Last year's Fort Benning co-ed team of five males and one female finished second place in their division.

After the qualifiers, the teams should practice and become aware of each other's habits and styles, Smith said.

"As a group, our team met at least once a week to increase our running times," Smith said. "This helped the runners increase their times as well as motivate each other."

The race is produced by the U.S. Army District of Washington and combines more than 650 military and civilian teams. Civilians are allowed to run in the event but are not eligible for trophies or awards.

"The past two years in Washington have been great," Smith said. "It's nice to be able to do something special for the Soldiers. This is a good break for them."

The Army Ten-Miler donates all proceeds to MWR.

For more information, call Smith at 706-545-4300 or e-mail lori.smith6@us.army.mil.

Breast MRI machine now at hospital

New technology will help save lives

Martin Army Community Hospital can now perform breast MRIs for its high-risk patients, no longer sending them to Atlanta for the procedure. With the recent acquisition of a Magnetic Resonance Imaging, the hospital is now one of very few places between Atlanta and Birmingham that offers the service to its patients, said Maj. Johnathan Hadley, a radiologist at MACH.

Studies show that in high-risk patients, a breast MRI can find 10 times as many cancers than a normal ultrasound or mammography combined, Hadley said. The breast MRI uses special coils for breast imaging and software protocols used to image the breast allow for both breasts to be imaged. This creates a pattern enhancement for the radiologist to view for suspicious areas within the breast.

"Having the ability to do breast MRIs is a big deal for us," Hadley said. "Before we got the MRI unit, we had to send patients to Atlanta because we didn't have access to a nearby facility to do the MRIs. This is a huge step in the level of service we can provide to our patients."

One of the biggest benefits, he said, is that some patients come in for one susceptible area to be screened and the breast MRI helps to see other areas that cannot be seen in regular mammograms or ultrasounds.

"We have probably seen 20 to 25 patients; of those we have found three or four with unsuspected tumors elsewhere in the breasts," Hadley said.

"These are patients who would have otherwise come back after five or six years with another mass or tumor that could not have been detected with prior techniques but had always been there."

"Our goal is to find masses or tumors early and to remove them so that the patient has the highest chance of survival," Hadley said.

Breast MRI screenings are not appropriate for everyone, he said.

Patients must fall into one of the following high risk categories:

- Two or more family members diagnosed with breast cancer,
- patients with a history of breast cancer, or
- certain abnormal biopsies in the past.

Breast MRIs can also be used to evaluate women with breast implants for ruptures.

Hadley said the hospital is hoping to get the equipment that will enable them to do biopsies during the MRI because with some masses it's the only way it can be seen.

Natascha Duvall, center, and her children, Jennifer, 11, and Justin, 9, accept the key to their new home from Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, Wednesday. The Duvalls will be the first family to move into the new homes in McGraw Village, built through Residential Communities Initiative partnership with Clark Pinnacle. The new neighborhoods include parks, green spaces, sidewalks and community centers. The first foundations have been laid in Patton Village, the housing development being built across from the Sand Hill gate.

Army wife, Faith students create 'reading garden'

Army wife Naomi Beskow is creating a garden in Faith Middle School — literally in the school, and it's complete with trees, running water and butterflies.

Beskow, along with eighth-grade art students, is transforming a room in the media center into a reading garden. The tree is made of foam and the butterflies of paper, but the effect they have on students is real.

"It is a truly magical place. The kids love it, and they come in to see what's new," said Cindy Givens, media center specialist at Faith. "The room has now taken on a life."

Several times a week, students from the eighth-grade art class join Beskow to paint. The students must finish their class art projects to be able to help in the reading garden, which is part of the fiction section.

See Garden, Page C6

Faith student wins national financial poster contest

6th-grader created poster about saving money for the future

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Twelve-year-old Alex Ridley is continuing the winning streak at Faith Middle School. He's the third Faith student to win an art contest in the last few months.

Ridley's poster won the middle school category of the national 2007 financial literacy poster contest sponsored by the National Foundation for Credit Counseling.

He will receive a $100 savings bond, plaque and T-shirt.

More than 1,500 posters were submitted for the contest through NFCC member agencies.

It's overwhelming, Ridley said, to know that his was chosen out of thousands.

Ridley heard about the contest at art club and decided to enter. The contest theme was "Plant the seed of saving to grow your future."

"I came up with the evolution of the tree. I drew a fairy laying on a mushroom, laying dollars and cents into the ground," he said. Next to it he drew a small tree growing dollar signs and, finally, a grown tree with dollar signs.

Across the top he wrote, "A little seed can grow your future!"

He was thinking that a few dollars saved could grow into enough money for college or other things in the future, he said.

He brainstormed a bunch of titles for the poster and then asked his family and friends to vote on their favorite.

Ridley worked on the drawing for several weeks in art club and at home.

On the Thursday of his spring break, he found out about winning the contest.

"My mom yelled really loud, and I thought I was in trouble. But she told me I'd won," Ridley said.

His mom, Tammy Ridley, was yelling because a director from the organization running the contest had called their house.

Ridley then called his dad, Lt. Col. Mark Ridley, professor of military science at Columbus State University, and his sister, who was at a friend's house, to tell them the good news. He was ecstatic and he got to share the excitement with his relatives that weekend, he said.

"The Monday after spring break, he was at my room with a huge smile on his face," said Gloria Loar, art teacher at Faith.

"I'm really proud of him, and excited, and thrilled. He worked really hard on it," said Loar, who's the head of the art club.

Six students entered the contest from Faith through the Consumer Credit Counseling Service of West Georgia and East Alabama.

Ridley enjoys art as a hobby, he said, and especially enjoys drawing Anime. He's also working on a portrait of his cousin for her birthday.

Ridley's other hobby is also keeping him busy. He's in the Faith drama club, and has a role in The Boardinghouse, a play that runs Friday and Saturday.

He's a little nervous because it's the longest play he's ever been in, but he likes his role, he said.

Last week, he spoke at the Holocaust commemorative service with the drama club.

Is pet health insurance worth the cost?

THE BAYONET
Rachel Houston

Like their owners, dogs and cats get cancer and have accidents. Vet bills can rival hospital bills, but most people can't afford to pay them. Many are turning to pet health insurance.

Most pet insurance plans are similar to those for humans, with two big differences — you pay the bill and are reimbursed by the company, and you can take your pet to any licensed veterinarian. The majority of companies work that way, but there are some that don't.

Pet insurance can mean the difference between life and death for a pet whose owner can't afford a huge vet bill. Some of the pros of pet insurance are receiving help with large vet bills in an emergency and having the peace of mind that your pet has a better chance at receiving the treatment it needs.

Some of the cons are that you may have to front the money for the bill and wait for reimbursement, you have another monthly or yearly bill to pay, and you won't be paid back for the entire bill.

There are hundreds of companies out there, and each has differences in their plans, deductibles and restrictions about what they cover, so do some research.

With most pet insurance companies, you are reimbursed a percentage of the costs, many up to 80 to 85 percent, but pet owners also pay a deductible.

The Veterinary Pet Insurance company claims to be the nation's oldest and largest provider of pet health insurance. I did the quick quote calculator for Atlas, my 9-month-old Great Dane, and got several options. Both the superior and standard plans have a $50 deductible per incident, and there is an optional vaccine and routine care coverage for an additional cost.

Since vaccines and routine care are very affordable at the vet clinic on post, I wouldn't choose the optional coverage.

VPI offers multiple pet discounts, and you can use any licensed veterinarian. It also has a plan for birds and exotic pets.

Pets Best Insurance has a "10 things you should know before buying pet insurance" article on its Web site. It suggests researching the insurance companies and finding out what exactly is covered, which veterinarians you can go to, what is excluded, what the deductible is, and what the lifetime limits are.

It also recommends asking your veterinarian if he or she recommends the pet insurance company.

The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals offers pet insurance, including one plan just for accidents. The safety plan is about $6.99 for cats and $8.99 for dogs each month, and it covers veterinary treatment for accidents such as broken bones, burns and motor vehicle incidents.

The next step up is the primary plan, which covers accidents and illnesses. The ASPCA insurance has a $100 deductible.

There are many more companies offering animal health insurance. Search for "pet insurance reviews" online and you will find several Web sites devoted to comparing and reviewing pet insurance companies.

A couple of complaints I found online were that customers didn't get paid back quickly and that the high cost wasn't worth it.

I don't feel the need to purchase pet insurance anytime soon, but I won't say I'll never purchase it. Pets do get cancer and other serious unexpected illnesses, and I would do anything and everything possible to save my dogs.

For more information on specific companies, go to www.petinsurance.com, www.petsbest.com and www.aspcanet.com.

ASK A VET

FORT BENNING VET CLINIC
Capt. Jennifer Scruggs

Q: My dog was diagnosed with heartworm disease. What exactly are heartworms and how did my dog get them?

A: Heartworms are parasites that live in the arteries of the lungs and the right side of the heart. They interfere with the heart's normal function and can cause heart failure if left untreated. Your dog got heartworm disease via a mosquito. A mosquito carrying immature heartworms bit and infected your dog. The mosquito got the immature heartworms by biting an infected dog.

Q: Can heartworm disease be treated?

A: Heartworm disease can be treated. However, the treatment is risky and dogs can die during the treatment. The severity of the disease must be assessed first. Your veterinarian will do. A complete physical exam must be performed. Additionally, other information such as blood tests and X-rays may be required. After the treatment, you must limit your dog's physical activity. There should be no running, jumping or off-leash walks for about six weeks after the treatment. This is very important and something you can do at home to help your pet. Four to six months after treatment, your dog will likely get a follow-up heartworm test to make sure the worms were killed.

Q: What can I do to prevent my dog from getting heartworm disease?

A: Heartworm disease can be easily prevented by giving your dog a monthly pill. Your veterinarian can prescribe this medication. It is important to keep your pet on heartworm prevention year-round in this part of the country. The climate is mild enough that mosquitoes can spread the disease even in winter months. Your dog should be on heartworm prevention even if they are inside most of the time. Mosquitoes can get in the house and your dog probably goes outside at some point.

Q: My friend's dog is on heartworm prevention. I have a cat. Can cats get heartworm disease and should they be on prevention?

A: Cats can get heartworm disease. Symptoms in cats can include coughing and vomiting. Although rare, cats can also suddenly die from a heartworm infection. There are heartworm disease preventatives for cats. Your veterinarian can prescribe this medication. There is still a risk of infection even if your cat is inside all the time because mosquitoes can get in the house.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

Army offers help in preventing child abuse

FAMILY ADVOCACY PROGRAM

Child abuse occurs when someone responsible for a child's well-being (like a parent, teacher or day care provider) hurts a child physically, sexually maltreats the child or neglects the child by not providing him or her with the basic things needed for healthy development, such as food, water, proper shelter and care.

Child abuse can include hitting, kicking or punching a child. It can also be less, such as emotional abuse or neglect. Constantly yelling at a child, telling a child that he or she is worthless, or completely ignoring a child and his or her needs can also be forms of child abuse. Emotional abuse can be very damaging to a child, sometimes more so than physical abuse.

What are risk factors for child abuse?

Child abuse can occur in any family home, regardless of the parent's age, gender, race or income level. There are some circumstances that might put a family at greater risk for experiencing child abuse problems in the home. Some of the risks factors are:

- Infants born prematurely, with any kind of physical and or health problem, or who were exposed to drugs or alcohol while still in the womb, might be at greater risk for being abused. A child with an emotional disability, chronic illness or behavior problems may also be at risk.

- A parent who had insecure attachments to his or her own parents or who experienced abuse as a child might be at greater risk for abusing his or her own children. Single parents, parents lacking social support or isolated from extended family or friends might also be at greater risk of abusing. Substance abuse is another potential risk factor.

- Families having economic or housing problems might be at greater risk for child abuse. Stress and lack of access to child care and other social services are also risk factors.

What is a commander's role in helping the active-duty Soldier and Family?

The Soldier's commander will focus right away on helping keep the victim safe. This may mean issuing a military protection order if the suspected abuser is the active-duty Soldier. The commander might also order the Soldier out of the home and into the barracks to keep him or her separated from the children until Family Advocacy can assess the Family situation and provide treatment through Social Work Service. Soldiers are mandated for treatment if the case is substantiated. Family members are encouraged to attend. If the suspected abuser is a civilian, the commander may also choose to have him or her barred from the installation.

How are child abuse cases handled with FAP?

The Family Advocacy Program works closely with the military law enforcement during the investigation process, as well as the local Department of Family and Children Services. The Family Advocacy Program has a memorandum of agreement with the local DFACS. They will interview members of the Family and other people who might have some insight into the home environment or witnessed a child being abused. In severe cases, the local child protective services agency may temporarily remove the child from the home and place the child with relatives or into a foster care home.

Once law enforcement and DFACS have completed their investigation and FAP has completed its assessments of the Family, a Case Review Committee will meet.

The CRC is a multidisciplinary group of professionals including social workers, a chaplain, staff judge advocate, military police, criminal investigation division, drug and alcohol and chaplain's office, local representation from DFACS, the Family Advocacy Program manager, and representatives from the staff. The unit commander is also invited. Each case is presented to the team and substantiated or unsubstantiated, depending on the evidence. This meeting is not to decide whether or how to discipline an active-duty Soldier. The Soldier's commander will make those decisions. The CRC deals directly with treatment process for the Soldier and Family.

What is the treatment process like?

Once a treatment plan has been developed, FAP SWS will provide treatment and support services to the Family. DFACS will also develop a plan for the Family. FAP and DFACS will try to work together to be sure the Family gets treatment and support. The services may include individual or group treatment for the abuser, counseling for the child or classes on child development and parenting. Depending on the needs of the family, they might also be offered substance abuse counseling, financial counseling and ongoing health care services. FAP will keep the commander updated about the Soldier's progress in treatment and any changes in the Family's circumstances until treatment has been successfully completed.

What is Family Advocacy's goal in preventing child abuse?

FAP's ultimate goal is to keep child abuse from ever happening in our military Families. FAP offers programs and activities designed to help prevent child abuse. Some prevention programs help Families to work on their communication skills. Other programs focus on stress, parenting skills and finances. FAP also provides safety education for children and family life education programs.

Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy and Sexual Assault Program manager, said Army Families face challenges many civilian parents never deal with.

"A lot of times military Families live on or near their installation and are often far away from Family and civilian friends who are normally a support system in times of need," Welch said. "Frequent and long deployments also create parenting challenges that are rare in the civilian community."

For months at a time, a spouse may have to deal with parenting the children with little or no support from the other parent. For this very reason FAP identifies the needs of Families and provides support services to help met their needs."

SPIRITUAL FITNESS

Major depression affects everyone, including children, not just the depressed person

Depression is common and most people will experience it at some point in their life, including those in the military

BAYONET CORRESPONDENT
Bud Rupel

Depression is an illness that even the physically strong cannot always deal with.

It is estimated that in any given year, 17.6 million American adults suffer from a depressive illness.

Depression can so cloud a person's ability to think that reality becomes blighted and blurred.

Many a depressed person feels a sense of purposelessness, powerlessness and hopelessness from which they see no hope of recovery.

Major depression can destroy the life of the person who is depressed. It also causes much pain and suffering for those who care for the one in a depressed state.

I know this to be a fact as I watched my own mother slip into a state of severe depression.

At one point her depression was so bad that her doctors considered having her committed to a full-care facility.

This was my mother ... I was crushed. But something good happened along the way. Realizing her state of affairs, she submitted to medical treatment recommended by her primary doctor. This treatment, coupled with much prayer, brought my mother out of her depression.

Depression is common and most people will experience depression at some point in their life — those in the military are not immune from it.

Fortunately, there are many agencies at Fort Benning and in the local community ready and able to assist those afflicted with depression.

Maybe you know someone you suspect of being severely depressed. Let me offer some suggestions.

First, be as supportive as possible. Second, learn to listen to what the depressed person is saying without being judgmental. Third, listen for the negative and distorted thinking behind what the depressed person is saying. "I'm worthless," "Nobody cares," and "Life is meaningless," are red flags demanding immediate attention.

Fourth, and most important, if you suspect a person is severely depressed, assist him or her in making an appointment with a qualified professional to receive treatment.

God created us to be in relationships

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER
Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garvey

Does happiness in your life seem to revolve around your relationships? If so, I think you are pretty normal.

I can remember as a young man in high school, always looking forward to getting home so I could spend time with my girlfriend. I looked forward to spending most of my free time with her, just hanging out and talking about nothing, going to the movies or taking walks around the neighborhood. Ah, remember the good old days?

I was happiest when I was with her. And heartbroken when I received my "Dear John" letter when she left for college. But as life has it, I would meet and date other girls.

I can still remember that feeling of pure happiness when I knew I was "in love" with my wife. You know that dancing around silliness and singing little songs about love? I knew she was the one!

I dropped out of college to court her; don't worry, I went back and finished college. It was a happy time in our lives — we had each other and nothing could stand in our way.

Having her in my life fulfilled my emotional needs and when my needs are fulfilled I am happy. Since she was happy and accepted to marry me, I guess I was doing something right to meet her emotional needs.

One reason we seem so interested in our relationships is because God created us to be "in" relationships. God said, "It is not good for man to be alone; I will make a mate for him."

God took a rib from the side of man and created woman. He did not take a foot bone so he would walk all over her, nor did he take a part of the skull so she would rule over him.

Interestingly, he took a bone from his side in order that they would come along side of one another and support each other.

God conducted this first marriage and said, "...a man should leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife and they shall be one." Adam was out there alone and was delighted when God presented Eve to him. This is probably because Adam's emotional needs could not be met by himself. Just as Adam needed others to meet his emotional needs, so others must meet them for us too.

When our emotional needs are met, we are happy and feel fulfilled in our relationships. When our emotional needs are neglected, we feel unloved and miserable in our relationships.

When we are happy, the love bank is filled and when the bank is depleted, we feel unloved and unwanted. The person who best meets our needs is the person we usually fall "in love" with.

Early on in the relationship we normally do everything we can to meet the other's needs. This is why when we are dating or first married we feel so much in love. When the busyness of life rushes in and around us and we move into another stage of life, we tend to neglect the needs of our spouse. We have so much that demands our time and efforts.

If we allow anything to rob us of our time to meet our spouse's needs, the love bank begins to bleed love tokens. And if allowed to continue, our account is in jeopardy of becoming bankrupt.

How does one stop it from becoming bankrupt? Simply return to the basics. Focus again on the needs of your spouse. If we focus and continue to focus on our spouses needs and they focus on our needs, we are both getting what we need and the accounts will begin to once again overflow with love tokens. We will both feel valued and loved.

We will feel happy again in our relationship. We will both, once again, feel "in love." When we look to meet the needs of each other, then we can truly experience marital happiness and the oneness God intended us to have as husband and wife, the two shall become one.

If you have been experiencing relationship difficulties or just need to talk to someone about life's problems, I invite you to call 706-545-1760 and make an appointment or stop by the Family Life Center at 2606 Dixie Road (Soldiers' Plaza) to speak to one of our pastoral counselors.

Defense Department to partner with local schools

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS SERVICE
Carmen L. Gleason

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department will work with local schools to try to ensure that military children receive quality education no matter where they attend classes, said the director of the Department of Defense Education Activity.

To this end, the department is creating an Educational Partnerships Directorate within DoDEA. The directorate is scheduled to be fully functional by October and will benefit school-age children of service members stationed worldwide, Joseph Tafoya said.

"The quality of education for all military dependents is our new mission within the Defense Department," Tafoya said. "We want to ensure the quality that we believe we have in DoDEA is also there in the schools outside the gate and in the local communities."

The Department of Defense Education Activity educates nearly 91,000 of the 1.2 million school-age students within the military, defense officials said. The rest of the students are educated in public, private and home-based schools.

The number of students being educated outside of the defense system is expected to increase because of the Base Realignment and Closure process, as well as global rebasing of the military.

By working with local education agencies, directorate officials said they plan to assist military-connected communities to ensure the best possible educational experience for military students.

The creation of the directorate is a collaboration between DoDEA and the Office of the Deputy Undersecretary of Defense for Military Community and Family Policy, which will work closely with the Department of Education, individual states and school districts to support the best practices for schools that educate military students.

By focusing on high-quality teaching, professional development, program improvement, high school initiatives, curriculum consistency and foreign language, Tafoya said the partnership with local schools will have a direct effect on students.

"We're obviously focusing on communities most impacted by BRAC," he said.

Tafoya said there have been several times in the last few years when BRAC-impacted communities have asked for assistance from the Defense Department, but DoDEA was unable to assist.

Following the most recent Defense Appropriation Act, Congress has now allowed DoDEA to work cooperatively with local school districts to ease the transition of students from military to public schools.

Tafoya said the focus of the program is primarily on curricular transition issues. He said he wants to ensure that what is being taught within DoDEA is transferable to schools outside the military.

"We're doing a lot of things internally to assure parents that when they leave us and go to the next location, that their kid is ready for the next curriculum and whatever program is available to them in the local schools," he said. "Becoming a better partner with the local schools will help us understand that process a little better."

The ability to be an educator and serve military kids is a special calling, Tafoya said.

Between parent's deployments to Iraq and Afghanistan and frequent moves from school to school, he said teachers help military kids who experience a lot of transition in their lives.

"I can't think of a better opportunity to be an educator and also serve the need of the kids we have in DoDEA," he said.

"Our ability to give them a great program is the highlight of my career."

Garden: Provides reading room for Faith students

So far it has a water fountain, floor-to-ceiling tree and mural that covers an entire wall.

Seventh-grade art students made the butterflies that hang from the ceiling.

The transformation of the reading room began last year when Givens was inspired after visiting the Columbus Library. She was also inspired by the Rainforest Café, a place where diners are surrounded by trees, plants, animals and animal noises.

Beskow moved to Fort Benning last summer and began asking around about an art project, which was at the same time Givens was asking around about someone with an art background to help with the room.

The two found each other through word of mouth, and Beskow began volunteering last October.

Beskow, who majored in art education in college, was given the freedom to create what she wanted. The only instruction Givens gave her was to create a garden.

"It's been a lot of fun. This is something I've never done before," said Beskow, who will leave Fort Benning at the end of the year. She hopes to teach art at their next installation.

"She's great with the students," Givens said.

"It's cool to see how the individual students' talents combine into one project," Beskow said.

The students have played a major role in the transformation, from design, to painting, to bringing in supplies, Givens said.

"I like it because it lets you feel like you're relaxing when you read a book," said Garrett Fitch, an eighth-grader who helps with the project.

"Other students get to see the improvements we've made to the library," said Bridgette Sparks, another Faith eighth-grader.

Still to be added to the room are cardboard and 3-D animals.

Two walls, the ceiling and the carpet have yet to be painted.

Students, parents and teachers have brought in items to add to the room, including chairs, a rug and lamps. The Parent Teacher Organization paid for the supplies.

"We think reading is important so we want to give them a place that's magical and special," Givens said.

ASK A DOC

THE MARTIN ARMY MEDICAL MENTOR

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
Outpatient Mental Health Service

Q. What is PTSD?

A. PTSD stands for post-traumatic stress disorder. It is a mental illness caused by exposure to a life-threatening or extremely traumatic event, which then results in psychological symptoms such as distressing memories, nightmares, feelings of isolation and detachment, depression, anxiety and irritability. Severe PTSD may cause other problems such as suicidal impulses, substance abuse or angry outbursts. Traumatic events that are known to cause PTSD include vehicle accidents, natural disasters, sexual or physical assault, combat, kidnapping or torture.

Q. Why do some individuals develop PTSD and others do not when exposed to the same traumatic events?

A. The fact that PTSD affects some individuals and not others who went through the same experiences can make it difficult to be understanding and sympathetic. Factors that may make one more likely to develop PTSD include: more severe or long-lasting trauma, more repeated exposures to trauma, such as multiple combat deployments, trauma inflicted at the hands of others, such as rape or torture, and individual vulnerabilities, such as previous problems with depression or anxiety, physical illnesses, other life stresses or a family history of similar problems.

Q. If I have PTSD, is my military career over?

A. Not necessarily. While severe PTSD may prevent the patient from continuing in the military, mild or moderate PTSD symptoms can be managed, controlled, treated and perhaps over time, eliminated. It is important to avoid secondary complications of PTSD such as substance abuse, interpersonal conflicts or problems at work. Numerous treatment opportunities are available, both within military treatment facilities and outside the military. They include the Military One Source (800-342-9647), Tricare network providers (800-700-8646), and the Outpatient Mental Health Service at Martin Army Community Hospital (706-544-3590).

A great blue heron flies near the banks of Lake Eufaula in Lakepoint Resort State Park in Alabama. The 45,200-acre lake, in both Georgia and Alabama, is known as the bass capital of the world. Lakepoint Park is 1,220 acres on the lake and offers fishing, boating, campgrounds, cottages, golf, tennis and picnic areas. Photos by Rachel Houston

Alabama's Lakepoint Resort State Park

Park is about 50 minutes from Fort Benning

THE BAYONET

Lake Eufaula offers breathtaking views and something to please all outdoor lovers. Though the lake stretches over 45,000 acres, there's a place to enjoy the lake not far from Fort Benning.

Lakepoint Resort State Park is about 50 miles from post, and it draws fisherman specifically for its bass fishing.

Lake Eufaula, otherwise known as the Walter F. George Reservoir, was built by the Army Corps of Engineers on the Chattahoochee River and reaches from Phenix City, to Fort Gaines, Ga., at the Walter F. George dam.

Lakepoint Park is part of the Alabama Bass Trail and has tournaments frequently. The lake has bass, stripers, catfish, bream and crappie to catch.

Picnic areas overlook the lake, and pavilions are available for rent. The park offers an 18-hole golf course, pro shop, tennis courts and a marina with boat slips, launch facilities, bait and tackle, and a sales and service area.

Pontoon boats and jon boats with motors can be rented at the marina for four or eight hours.

The pontoon boat holds 12 people and costs $175 for four hours or $275 for eight, and the jon boat holds two people and costs $40 for four hours and $65 for eight.

The marina is open every day from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The resort lodge has about 100 guest rooms and a restaurant and will undergo renovation soon.

There are cabins in the woods for guests wishing to stay overnight, as well as the new lakeside cottages. Pets are not allowed in the lodge, cabins or cottages.

For those who prefer camping, there are 245 campsites with bathhouses, a community building and a playground. Leashed pets are allowed at the campsites.

The Eufaula National Wildlife Refuge is near the park and offers more boating, fishing, hunting, hiking and wildlife viewing opportunities. The refuge has populations of ducks, geese, wood storks, sandhill cranes, raptors, wading birds, shorebirds and songbirds.

The refuge also has bald eagle and osprey nests. A seven-mile wildlife drive, walking trail and two observation towers, which are open to the public. Brochures are available, and the refuge is generally open to visitors during daylight hours.

Lakepoint Park is located at 104 Lakepoint Drive, off U.S. 431. To get there, take U.S. 280 toward Phenix City and get on 431 South.

The park is about 45 miles from Fort Benning in Eufaula, Ala.

For more information on Alabama's state parks and the permits and licenses required to fish on the lake, go to www.outdooralabama.com or call 800-544-5253.

Information on boating and events is available at www.lakeeufaula.info.

For information on the wildlife refuge, go to www.fws.gov/eufaula.

The park has one, two, three and four bedroom lakeside cottages available for rent with a two or three night minimum. The eight cottages have full kitchens and porches with rocking chairs overlooking the lake.

The park also has a riverboat, the Chattahoochee Princess, that visitors can charter for private group functions such as weddings, reunions and birthday celebrations.

OPENING TODAY

KICKIN' IT OLD SKOOL — As a 12-year-old in 1985, Justin Schumacher has a freak break dancing accident, leaving him in a coma.

Twenty years later, Justin (Jamie Kennedy) awakes, but things have changed from the 80s.

His dreamgirl Jennifer (Maria Menounos) is engaged to current scumbag and former grade-school nemesis Kip Unger (Michael Rosenbaum).

Lost in a high-tech time warp, the former break dancing phenom is determined to prove that "old skool" can still keep it real.

Kickin' It Old Skool is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual content and language.

NEXT — Las Vegas showroom magician Cris Johnson (Nicolas Cage) has a secret which is a gift and a curse that torments him: he can see a few minutes into the future.

Sick of the examinations he underwent as a child and the interest of the government and medical establishment, he lies low under an assumed name in Vegas, performing cheap tricks and living off small-time gambling "winnings."

But when a terrorist threatens to detonate a nuclear device in Los Angeles, government agent Callie Ferris (Julianne Moore) must use all her wiles to capture Cris and convince him to help her stop the cataclysm.

Next is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violent action and language.

THE INVISIBLE — Nick (Justin Chatwin), is a high school senior with a bright future until, in a tragic case of mistaken identity, is brutally attacked by a troubled girl, Annie (Margarita Levieva) and his body is left for dead.

Now in limbo, not quite dead but invisible to the living, his spirit can only watch as his mother and the police search frantically for him, unaware that he is only hours away from truly perishing.

The Invisible is rated PG-13 for violence, criminality, sensuality and language, all involving teens.

THE CONDEMNED — A select group of death row inmates are offered the opportunity to compete in a deadly game on an abandoned island for one week. The winner of the game will have his or her sentence dropped down to life imprisonment and avoid execution.

The movie stars Steve Austin, Vinnie Jones and Trent Sullivan.

The Condemned is rated R for pervasive strong brutal violence and for language.

ALSO PLAYING

FRACTURE — When Ted Crawford (Anthony Hopkins) discovers that his beautiful younger wife, Jennifer (Embeth Davidtz), is having an affair, he plans her murder — the perfect murder.

Among the cops arriving at the crime scene is hostage negotiator Detective Rob Nunally (Billy Burke), the only officer permitted entry to the house. Surprisingly, Crawford readily admits to shooting his wife, but Nunally is too stunned to pay close attention when he recognizes his lover, whose true identity he never knew, lying on the floor in a pool of blood.

Crawford is immediately arrested and arraigned after confessing — a seemingly slam-dunk case for hotshot assistant district attorney Willy Beachum (Ryan Gosling).

But nothing is as simple as it seems, including this case.

Fracture is rated R for language and violent content.

IN THE LAND OF WOMEN — For as long as he could remember, Carter Webb (Adam Brody) has been falling in love with women.

And for as long as he could remember, he'd been searching for the right one.

He found everything he was looking for in Sophia and for a little while he was happy.

Unfortunately, it wasn't meant to be.

Heartbroken and depressed, Carter escapes to Los Angeles to care for his ailing grandmother.

In the Land of Women is rated PG-13 for sexual content, thematic elements and language.

VACANCY — When David (Luke Wilson) and Amy Fox's (Kate Beckinsale) car breaks down in the middle of nowhere, they are forced to spend the night at the only motel around, with only the TV to entertain them ...until they discover that the low-budget slasher movies they're watching were all filmed in the very room they're sitting in.

With hidden cameras now aimed at them and filming their every move, David and Amy must struggle to get out alive before whoever is watching them can finish their latest masterpiece.

Vacancy is rated R for brutal violence and terror, brief nudity and language.

SLOW BURN — Ford Cole (Ray Liotta) is a big-city district attorney with his eye on the mayor's office and a big problem on his hands.

One of his deputies, assistant district attorney Nora Timmer (Jolene Blalock), has just confessed to killing a man in what she claims was self-defense.

A bad situation gets worse when an enigmatic stranger named Luther Pink (LL Cool J) turns up at the police station to contradict Nora's story and paint a very different picture of Ford's talented colleague.

Slow Burn is rated R for sexuality, violence and language.

PATHFINDER — A thousand years in the past, a young Norse boy is left behind after his clan shipwrecks on the Eastern shores. Despite his lineage, the boy is raised by the very Indians his kinsmen set out to destroy. As the Vikings return to stage another barbaric raid on his village, the Norse warrior wages a personal war to stop the Viking's trail of death and destruction.

Karl Urban and Moon Bloodgood star in the movie.

Pathfinder is rated R for strong brutal violence throughout.

DISTURBIA — After his father's death, Kale (Shia LaBeouf) becomes sullen, withdrawn and troubled — so much so that he finds himself under a court-ordered sentence of house arrest.

The walls of the house begin to close in on Kale. He becomes a voyeur as his interests turn outside the windows of his suburban home toward those of his neighbors, one of which Kale begins to suspect is a serial killer.

But are his suspicions merely the product of cabin fever and his overactive imagination?

Disturbia is rated PG-13 for sequences of terror and violence and some sensuality.

PERFECT STRANGER — When investigative reporter Rowena Price (Halle Berry) learns that her friend's murder might be connected to powerful ad executive Harrison Hill (Bruce Willis), she goes undercover with the help of her associate, Miles Hailey (Giovanni Ribisi).

Posing as Katherine, a temp at Hill's ad agency, and Veronica, a girl Hill flirts with online, Rowena surrounds her prey from all sides, only to discover that she isn't the only one changing identities.

Perfect Stranger is rated R for sexual content, nudity, disturbing violent images and language.

GRINDHOUSE — Directors Quentin Tarantino and Robert Rodriguez present two full-length movies in a horror double feature. In Tarantino's Death Proof, Austin's hottest DJ, Jungle Julia, sets out into the night to unwind with her friends Shanna and Arlene.

Covertly tracking their moves is Stuntman Mike, a scarred rebel leering from behind the wheel of his muscle car, revving just feet away.

Rose McGowan, Freddy Rodriguez, Josh Brolin and Marley Shelton star in the movie.

Grindhouse is rated R for strong graphic bloody violence and gore, pervasive language, some sexuality, nudity and drug use.

THE REAPING — This is a supernatural tale that centers on a myth debunker who tries to prove that a small boy is not the supernatural force behind the devastation of a small, religious Texas town.

NEW RELEASES

DREAMGIRLS: It took a long time for the stage hit to reach the screen, but writer-director Bill Condon's adaptation was worth the wait. Beyonce Knowles has her best film role yet as the central vocalist in a Supremeslike 1960s girl group, and Jamie Foxx also does sterling work as their manager, who isn't entirely above board. The cast standouts are Eddie Murphy — as a soul-music superstar — and Jennifer Hudson, the "American Idol" veteran who earned an Oscar for the film and stops the show with her rendition of And I Am Telling You I'm Not Going. DVD extras: extended musical numbers; music video. (PG-13:AS, P)

HAPPILY N'EVER AFTER: The familiar tale of Cinderella gets fractured in this animated satire, with Sarah Michelle Gellar furnishing the voice of Ella, the heroine who still has trouble with a wicked stepmother (voiced by Sigourney Weaver). Freddie Prinze Jr., Gellar's husband, speaks the words of the servant who hopes Ella won't marry the prince he toils for; comedy veteran George Carlin also is heard. DVD extras: four "making-of" documentaries; audio commentary by director Paul J. Boiger; deleted scenes; games. (PG:AS)
