Force. The Army does not duplicate the inspections of other agencies, but if an agency does not inspect often enough to comply with Army regs, then Army inspectors will supplement the inspections.

Beef and other meats sold in the commissary pass by inspectors from the U.S. Department of Agriculture who inspect meat packing plants and examine the animals before the after slaughter to make sure no diseases can be transmitted to consumers.

After the beef arrives at the local post, Army veterinarians supervise inspection of the shipment while it is unloaded and before being placed on commissary causes or delivered to troop dining facilities or clubs.

The meat is checked to make sure the weight, count, and grade that arrives is the same one paid for. Meat is USDA graded according to the marbling — the amount of fat within the meat. Most beef sold in supermarkets is graded prime, choice, or good. Choice is purchased by the military since it offers the best combination of price and marbling.

Other factors are considered. If meat is stored at higher temperatures than permitted, bacteria begin to grow which cause spoilage within a short period of time. The presence of bacteria causes the carcass to feel slimy to the touch; such a condition is one cause for immediate rejection by a veterinarian.

After the beef is placed in the meat counter, veterinarians continue to check periodically making certain the meat doesn't stay in the counter too long and deteriorates.

Occasionally, commissary shoppers may notice variation in the color of displayed beef. When beef is cut and exposed to the air, it turns brownish losing the rich red color or "bloom" of freshly cut beef. This beef is perfectly safe; exposure to air and humidity accounts for the external color loss.

Other food items also are inspected at the commissary — in storage, in the stock room, and on display.

Additionally, other government agencies are responsible for inspection of other food items. For instance, the Public Health Service inspects oyster beds from which oysters are harvested.

There is always a chance of human error in the inspection process. Because of personnel, time and money constructions, it is not always possible to check every can, egg or food item in a shipment.

Even with all the quality control measures, it is still possible — although remote — for a commissary shopper to purchase an item which may have deteriorated.

In those cases, the shopper should return the merchandise to the commissary for a refund or replacement. If spoilage is suspected, return the food item with the wrapper so it can be checked.

Army veterinarians and food inspection specialists spare no effort to insure the highest health standards are upheld. They know the effectiveness of the Army as a fighting force depends on the sanitation and wholesomeness of the food it consumes.

Commissary shoppers benefit from these standards and can rest assured the purchase they make are at the end of a long line of qualified inspectors who take their jobs seriously because the health of an Army — and nation — are at stake.

Refusing overseas orders possible,

"Hey man, those dudes at personnel put me on orders for Germany, and I ain't gonna go!"

Sound familiar? This scene is enacted many times each week all through the US Army. The old saying "You can't please everybody all the time" is realized all too often in the Military Personnel Branch, Overseas Levy Section.

However, in today's Army some soldiers who "Ain't gonna go" can not opt to sign a Formal Counseling Statement to avoid complying with overseas orders. Once this is done, the soldier settles back and rides out his enlistment or maybe he plans to reenlist at the end of this hitch for another stateside duty station. Well, sorry about that, Joel!

Soldiers with overseas orders may find it difficult to resist the temptation to sign a Formal Counseling Statement. To be exempted from overseas duty may look so attractive they fail to see the requirements, disadvantages or alternatives.

The requirements limit statements to soldiers with six years of service and are 12 months way from ETS.

The disadvantages begin with a requirement that the soldier separate upon reaching his ETS and wait 93 days after ETS to apply for a waiver if he wishes to reenlist. This places him in a nonpromotable status and even if the waiver is approved he stand to lose one or two grades upon reentering the Army.

In essence, the counseling statement constitute a self-imposed bar to reenlistment. The soldier who faces the prospect of an overseas assignment which he feels will impose domestic hardship or added financial strain on his family should consider this course of action only as a last resort.

Once the soldier signs a counseling statement, the original copy is forwarded to the US Army Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center, where it is entered permanently into his Official Military Personnel File (OMPF). The second copy is filed in the soldier's field personnel record (201 file) at his local personnel office.

On the other side of the coin are the alternatives to signing counseling statements given by chapter 3, AR 614-30. Temporary deferments may be considered under certain conditions. The illness or death of a member of the immediate family is one of the reasons. Being the sole parent of children living in the household when concurrent travel is not approved is another. Financial or domestic hardship involving the immediate family may also be considered. Others who may be considered are those participating in the predischage education program and those selected for the NCO Education System before overseas orders are received.

The servicemember must submit his own application for deferment. If illness in the family is the reason for the request, statements from the attending physician and responsible persons in the community are needed. Commanders will recommend approval or disapproval when forwarding the application.

Classes to Start April 12

Sports parachute training resumes

It has been a long and slow process for the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club to reorganize themselves after a fire destroyed their clubhouse and rigger building containing all their equipment and records in July 1975, but they are finally getting back on their feet.

Student parachute training resumes April 12 and class will begin at 7 p.m. in classroom #60 at Infantry Hall, Bldg. 4.

Ten new student rigs, which include main chutes, reserve chutes, automatic openers, etc. have been obtained by the club to replace the equipment lost in the fire.

Military personnel, active or retired, and civilian employees at the post are eligible to participate in this parachute training program.

The cost is $40 and that includes instruction, use of the equipment, initiation fee and one month's membership in the club. If training is started on Monday, by Saturday the student is making his or her first static line jump. Interested people are urged to call SFC Tom Carr, club training officer, 561-8058, for information.

Not only does the club have the new student rigs, but it also has nine new Infantry-blue Para-Commanders, which are used in demonstration jumps by the club personnel.

The new clubhouse is in "Splinter Village". It is building number 3624 near Range Control.

There is also a new slate of officers. The current president is CPT Dave Grieger and the vice-president is CPT Gary Bridges. Members of the board of directors are: SP5 Mark Peters, SFC Tom Carr, SP4 Bill Yeider, SSG Joe Stroup and 1LT D. Z. Woodward. The new custodian is ISG Richard Riley.

Preparing for a landing is instructor Ken Johnston of the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club. The club, reorganized after a fire in July, will begin student parachute training Monday at 7 p.m. in Infantry Hall, Bldg. 4.

Challenge

The 1st AIT Bde lays claim to the title of having the fastest and most fit troops at Ft. Benning, in the U.S. Army, and in the world at large.

If anyone cares to contest this obvious truth, let them call MAJ Dennis Pounder at 544-1174. Arrangements will be made for a five-mile race.

The 1st AIT Brigade will field 2LT Bruce W. Burney as its man. If anyone thinks they can beat the mighty AIT Bde, let them put their combat boots on and back their claims with action.

Let all the units on Ft. Benning go on record now: either stake your claim or suffer in embarrassed silence.

Shoplifters get something for nothing

"Hey, lady, wait a minute," pleads the young man, lurching forward in his seat and taking out his wallet. The woman whose nameplate reads "Mrs. White" pauses, her fingers still on the dial.

"Look, it's just junk — hardly, a buck-fifty," he gestures toward the magazines and pack of gum on the desk between them. "Can't I just pay for it now and you not tell anyone?"

Mrs. White begins dialing. She has heard it all before. Whether cameras or hoes or flashlight batteries, most of the exchange shoplifters she reports usually have enough money in their pockets or purses to pay for what they are trying to steal. And the different excuses could fill a book: "I didn't have the exact change"; "I forgot it was in my pocket"; "I was just doing it for 'kicks.'"

The number is ringing and the phone at the other end answered.

"Security police desk, Sergeant Brown speaking. May I help you?"

"Yes, this is Mrs. White in the exchange. We have an individual in our office who was trying to shoplift . . ."

A patrol is on the way, and the young man waiting in the exchange office will soon learn from personal experience the truth of those posters he's often seen but never really read: "A shoplifter gets something for nothing."

What does the exchange shoplifter get? An active duty military member can expect an Article 15, extra duty, suspended or actual reduction in rank and loss of exchange privileges.

If you think the risks are worth it, think again. If you chance it anyway and are caught, don't cry, "But can't I just pay for it now?" You'll be paying for it some time, at costs far greater than the monetary value.

'Buy back' of leave begins

Soldiers who have reenlisted and sold back leave since Feb. 10, 1976 — when the FY 76 Appropriation Bill became law — will be allowed to repay the leave payment and have the leave credited instead.

With the anticipated congressional passage of the 60-day limit on leave sell-back beyond FY 76, soldiers who sell back leave early in their career would lose money. If the soldier waits until later in his career when basic pay and allowances are greater, the payment for unused leave will be greater.

The congressional measure limits to 60 days the amount of leave a soldier can sell back over an entire career, instead of at each reenlistment. Soldiers may not have been aware of that provision when reenlisting so DA is giving them the opportunity to buy back leave they may have sold at reenlistment since February 10.

The payment must be made in a lump sum by June 30, 1976. The soldier's leave will be reinstated when full payment has been made. The soldier's discharge certificate — DD Form 214 — also will be corrected to reflect the amount of leave sold back. (ANF)

HOW TO SCORE:

- Enter the numbers you have circled to the Test 2 questions in the spaces below, putting the number you have circled to Question A over line A, to Question B over line B, etc.
- Total the 3 scores across on each line to get your totals. For example, the sum of your scores over lines A, E, and I gives you your score on Importance—lines B, F, and J give the score on Personal Relevance, etc.

				Totals
A	+	E	+	I	=	Importance
B	+	F	+	J	=	Personal Relevance
C	+	G	+	K	=	Value of Stopping
D	+	H	+	L	=	Capability for Stopping

Is smoking harmful? What are the effects of smoking?

This is the second test which will help the reader find out what he or she knows about smoking and what the reader thinks the effects of smoking are.

These tests can determine if—

- you really want to quit smoking,
- you know the effects of smoking on health,
- you know why you smoke, and
- the world you live in will help or hinder you if you do try to stop smoking.

For each statement in each test, circle the number that most accurately indicates how you feel. For example, if you completely agree with the statement, circle "1" but if you mildly agree then circle "2" and if you mildly disagree then circle "3" and if the disagreement is strong, circle "4."

When you have completed the test, add up the scores. Scores can vary from a low of 3 to a high of 12. Any score of 9 or above is high; any score 6 or below is low. With the scores added up, see what an analysis of your score means.

What Do You Think The Effects of Smoking Are? To attempt to give up smoking you must do more than simply acknowledge that "cigarette smoking may be harmful to your health." You must be aware that smoking is an important problem, that it has personal meaning for you, that there is value to be gained from stopping, and that people are capable of stopping. This test measures the strength of your recognition of each of these factors.

A score of 9 or above on any factor means that that factor supports your desire to try to stop smoking. If your score is 6 or below, that factor will not help you, but note that you may have scored low because you lack correct information.

IMPORTANCE—Cancer, heart disease, respiratory disease—all related to smoking—are among the most serious to which man is exposed. You should not shrug off the growing evidence that they cause death and severe disability. Yet you may be doing this if your score is 6 or lower on the first part of test #2. Research has shown that one death in every three is an "extra" death among men who die between the ages of 35 and 60 because cigarette smokers have higher death rates than nonsmokers. One day of every five lost from work because of illness, 1 day in every 10 spent in bed because of illness, 1 day of every 8 of restricted activity—all are "extra" because cigarette smokers suffer more disability than nonsmokers.

PERSONAL RELEVANCE—Some smokers kid themselves into thinking: "It can't happen to me—only to the other guy." If you scored 6 or below, you may be one of these people. The reasoning may go along the line that "I don't really smoke enough to be hurt by it. It takes 2 packs a day over a period of many years before harmful effects show up." Unfortunately, this is not true. Even people who smoke less than half a pack a day show significantly higher death rates than nonsmokers. Breathing capacity can diminish after only a very few years of regular smoking. Even what used to be considered as light smoking, such as half a pack a day, can be harmful.

CAPABILITY OF STOPPING—If your score is 6 or lower on this part of the test, you believe that it will be difficult for you to quit. But you may find encouragement in the fact that over 20 million adults are now successful ex-smokers. Of these, over 100,000 are doctors, well over half of the people who were ever cigarette smokers, have successfully quit.

34th Med members strive to improve education

By Wayne Valadez

The mission of the 34th Med Bn requires a continuous improvement in education. Advances in the medical and aviation fields require educated people to accomplish unit goals.

The Department of the Army has set minimum goals for all personnel.

They are designed to increase individual potential and enhance job satisfaction while improving Army standards.

The minimum Army goal for enlisted personnel is that every member will attain a high school diploma, a GED equivalency certificate or a state-issued diploma during their first tour of duty.

The minimum requirement for a Warrant Officer is an associate degree after 15 years of service while for Officers the goal is a baccalaureate degree.

Commanders and supervisors in the 34th Med Bn are stressing the advantages of education and the many opportunities to acquire more knowledge. As a result of this increased interest, the number of persons with less than a high school diploma has dropped from over 100, 10 months ago to 89 as of March 1, 1976.

Currently, there are 70 persons from the 34th Med Bn enrolled in college, three officers, 16 warrant officers and 51 enlisted. They are taking a total of 91 classes. There are five persons from the battalion enrolled in Columbus College PREP classes.

The 34th Med Bn education advisor, Marsha Conners, is more than willing to help members of the battalion. She is happy to explain the various programs and visits the various battalion units interviewing people on the spot and answering questions.

Within 30 days after arrival at Benning each enlisted soldier must report to the education center for counseling and an appraisal of their goals. This session should enable the soldier to establish priorities for MOS preparation, promotion, and the achievement of educational goals.

Some of the available programs at the education center are: Columbus College Preparation, Project Ahead, PREP (Pre-Education Discharge Program), the CLEP tests (college credit for knowledge), GT refresher and review programs, and several others.

The colleges available at Benning are Columbus

SP4 Linda Pittman of the 34th Med Bn receives counseling on Project Ahead and the various other educational programs that are available to her on and off post. Counseling her is 1LT Wayne Valadez, 34th Battalion's education officer.

College, Embry Riddle Aeronautical University, Georgia State University (graduate program), Chattahoochee Valley Community College, University of the State of New York (regents external degree), and the Servicemans Opportunity College (SOC).

This is only a partial list of the opportunities available at the education center. Programs are available during duty hours and off-duty and weekends. See your unit education officer or stop by the Ft. Benning Education Center for more information. Today as never before, education is the key to an individual's success.

New law allows garnishment of soldiers' pay

Garnishment of soldiers' pay for domestic support has been a fact of life for more than a year. A federal law — the Social Services Act passed in early 1975 — allows an ex-wife to get money for court ordered alimony and child support directly from the federal government.

Army finance, as paymaster, must comply with the law and deduct court-ordered specified sums to pay the domestic debt incurred by a soldier. This law applies to active duty as well as reserve and retired soldiers. To date, 2,039 soldiers have been garnisheed.

Under the law, only state courts are permitted to garnishee for alimony or child support. Most states have garnishment laws.

A DA official explained garnishment procedure this way: "A state court issues a garnishment order and the ex-wife's attorney sends it by certified or registered mail to the Army Finance and Accounting Center at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., which then takes specified sums as ordered by the state court from soldier's pay. Finance sends the money to the court, and the court pays the ex-wife. Under most state laws, this procedure continues until the debt has been paid in full."

The Army's Deputy Assistant Comptroller for Fiscal Policy, Joseph P. Murphy, said garnishment orders are issued when a person is in default—when he's not doing what the state court ordered. Murphy said that garnishment does not apply to other debts such as the purchase of car, furniture, appliance or clothing. Expanding garnishment power, he said, would make the federal government a super debt collector... In another action, the comptroller general has ruled that the defense department can properly respond to state administrative orders from welfare agencies. These orders are made when an ex-wife signs her support rights under court decree over to a state welfare agency in order to receive benefits.

Under the comptroller's decision, the state agency can require Army finance to pay the support money to it. Cases of this kind, said Murphy, are on the rise — in FY 75 there were 15.

Some aspects of the law remain unsolved. For example, the law does not say how much of a soldier's pay is subject to garnishment — or whether it should be based on a percentage or dollar limit. Apparently, Congress left this to be governed by relevant state laws. In some cases, however, it has been 100 per cent. Additionally, the law does not say what kinds of pay are subject to garnishment.

Meanwhile, the Civil Service Commission has been charged by the President to issue comprehensive regulations concerning garnishment of all federal pay — including military pay: active, reserve or retired. Legislation or other relief would seem premature, said Murphy, until Civil Service regulations are published and implemented. (ANF)

New emergency data card effective May 1

A new record of emergency data — DD Form 93 — gradually will be replacing the current form — DA 41 — beginning on May 1. The DD Form 93s will be phased into the Army personnel system on an as needed basis when existing stocks of 41s are depleted. That could take three to five years, Army personnel officials estimate.

The new record of emergency data is designed to be a time-saver. Now, when a soldier needs to update a DA Form 41 both the emergency data and SGLI info must be retyped.

Not so with the DD Form 93. It'll contain only emergency data info. SGLI elections will be made on VA Form 29-8286; also, some items on the 41 are excluded from the 93. True, there'll be a return to a two-form system, but only one will have to be retyped to update an item — unless both emergency and SGLI items need redoing.

Like the DA 41, a copy of the DD 93 will go into each soldier's finance records — one to DA's Casualty Branch — and one to the soldier.

A couple of new regs will guide use of the emergency data forms: AR 600-100 for both the 41 and 93; and AR 608-2 for the SGLI form.

The services decided to use a common emergency data form to simplify processing of enlistees at induction stations. (ANF)

Motorcycling hobby of motor pool mechanics

By James E. Wilbert

Two members of the 2nd Combat Support Hospital, 34th Med Bn motor pool are motorcycle enthusiasts.

Motor sergeant SGT Jim Morris presently owns two motorcycles. One of them is a 500cc Triumph dirt bike which he uses for hill climbing and for general transportation, that is, when his wife Roseann isn't riding it. On a recent tour of Germany, Morris bought the second bike, a 1954 Triumph 250cc dirt bike and although parts of it are rather scarce, he intends to restore this bike to new condition.

In addition to SGT Morris, the motor pool's other motorcycling enthusiast, is shop foreman, SGT Edgar Scales. When not working on military vehicles, Scales is streaking down a quarter-mile track for time and or money on a 750cc Honda, or working on it to prepare for the next race.

Scales is a member of the American Motorcycle Association and a local motorcycle club known as the "Bold Ones". On the racing circuit, for three years, he has recorded victories at Macon, Americus, Montezuma and Phenix City dragways. His best time records was 11.99 seconds for the quarter mile. This record was set at the Phenix City dragway. In the near future Scales plans to purchase a $2,500 "snake" engine. Once this engine is installed, he claims "there will be no competition."

Comparing the suspensions of a dirt bike and that of a street bike are Motor Sergeant SGT Jim Morris (R) and Shop Foreman SGT Edgar Scales. Both individuals work at the 2nd Combat Support Hospital motor pool.

More trainees arrive weekly

By Jerry Van Slyke and Lee Meyer

Another 400-plus trainees joined the 1st AIT Bde this week, swelling the total number of men undergoing the tough seven-week course of instruction to about 2,600.

The trainees have been arriving at the Brigade at the rate of 400-600 per week. Brigade sources confirm they expect trainee strength to exceed 3,000 this week.

This most recent group of trainees to arrive at the Brigade has been assigned to the 4th Bn, headquartered at Harmony Church. With six training companies, the 4th Bn is the largest of the Brigade's five battalions. Eventually it will number 1,320 trainees.

At the present time, the 1st and 5th Bns are filled and the 4th Bn is about half full. The 2nd and 3rd Bns will be filling next, rounding out the AIT Bde's strength at the projected 5,000 trainees.

The new trainees spent their first week in various unit orientations, taking lots of PT and commencing weapons training with the Claymore Anti-personnel Weapon and the M-203 Grenade Launcher.

The training took place on Wednesday at Warner Range and the great majority of trainees qualified with the M-203 the first time around. Commanders were particularly pleased with the enthusiasm and esprit shown by the trainees.

The M-203 is an individual weapon, slung beneath the M-16 rifle. This versatile and lethal weapon gives the infantryman what is, in effect, his own personal long range hand grenade.

A second generation grenade launcher, the M-203 replaces the M-79 and is used largely against enemy personnel and light vehicles.

The 40mm projective the M-203 uses is not a high velocity weapon and has no penetration qualities. The round neutralizes through concussion and small shrapnel.

Today's modern mid-intensity battlefield calls for well trained and motivated infantrymen who are expert tank busters. The AIT Bde is laying special emphasis on anti-armor weapons and tactics training.

The drill sergeants and the weapons and tactics instructors of the 1st AIT Bde are striving hard to produce the best product possible: physically and mentally tough infantrymen, ready to survive and win on the battlefield, imbued with the traditions and dignities of the Infantry.

With 21 of 24 training companies in cycle at one time, the Brigade will be training and shipping about 34,000 infantrymen each year to America's combat divisions around the world.

Court decision clips long hair

Soldiers hoping for a Supreme Court decision in favor of longer hair styles suffered a setback recently along with policemen of Suffolk County, Long Island. On April 1, 1976, the Supreme Court upheld the right of police departments to prohibit beards and regulate the length of police officers' hair. The wording of the decision left little doubt that it would be cited as precedent by the military services in cases involving the permissible length of servicemen's hair. At the time of the decision, the Court of Military Appeals had yet to decide a case questioning the Army's right to regulate hair lengths. The Supreme Court ruled that the hair regulations are one of the many demands that state and local governments may make on policemen in the interests of "discipline, esprit de corps and uniformity."

Justice William H. Rehnquist, who wrote the majority opinion, noted that the Justices recognized that "... the county has chosen a mode of organization which it undoubtedly deems (to be) the most efficient in enabling its police to carry out the duties assigned to them."

The 6 to 2 decision also upheld the police regulation which banned wigs to conceal long hair while on duty. (ANF)

Eye care advised

Army optometrists caution soldiers to be careful of their eyes and to wear eye protection when working in hazardous areas. Although the Army is responsible for prescribing eyeglasses to correct a soldier's vision, it is up to the individual soldier to take care of his eyes and be aware of potential problems.

Soldiers also should be aware of any change in their vision. If blurred vision is noticed or any difficulty is experienced with close or distant vision, then a checkup at an optometry clinic might reveal that eyeglasses—or a change in prescription—is necessary. Those symptoms also might signal glaucoma, a disease that causes one out of seven cases of blindness.

Army doctors can properly diagnose diseases of the eye, but it is the soldier's responsibility to get an eye examination every two years. Eyesight is a soldier's most valuable sense; extreme care should be exercised in protecting it.

Army optometrists estimate that about one third of all active duty soldiers wear glasses. So the prescribing and manufacture of eyeglasses falls into the big business category.

Each year more than a million prescription eyeglasses are made for service members at 10 labs. Operated by Health Services Command, the labs are manned by specialists who use only the highest quality glass turning out glasses at an average cost of less than $6 per pair for single vision glasses. Of course, there is no cost to the service member.

During basic training, each soldier is screened to make certain no defects in vision are noted. If necessary, two pairs of eyeglasses are issued—normally within two days. After the initial screening in basis, any further contact with the optometry section is the soldier's responsibility.

Protective mask corrective lens inserts are provided for soldiers who qualify under the regulations. Soldiers being assigned to Southeast Asia, Pacific areas and desert countries are provided sunglasses. Flight crewmembers also are issued sunglasses.

Eyeglasses in the Army are prescribed by qualified optometrists who are part of the Optometry Section of the Medical Service Corps. The Army currently has more than 200 optometrists and about 80 ophthalmologists.

Ophthalmologists are medical doctors who are primarily concerned with diseases of the eye and corrective eye surgery. Optometrists are trained and licensed to examine the eye, to determine visual problems and prescribe corrective lenses to counter these problems. (ANF)

Tests conducted on new vehicle

By Betty Zimmerman

The new Mechanized Infantry Combat Vehicle (MICV) is the Infantry soldier's "ticket" to the battlefield of the future, MG Willard Latham said Monday during an operational test of the new vehicle at Patton Range.

MG Latham told local news media representatives and others invited to view the test, that future warfare will be conducted on highly mobile battlefields. The battles, he said will be quick and violent and will require a vehicle to transport Infantrymen rapidly from point to point along the battlefield.

He said the vehicle must provide more mobility, more firepower and more protection for the soldier if they are to cope with the enemy. The MICV, he added, has this capability.

The MICV has the firepower with enough range to hit what it sees and kill what it hits.

Joining Latham at the test site was COL Roy S. Dunaway, director of the MICV Study Group on post. Dunaway outlined characteristics of the new vehicle to the newsmen and women.

It has a 450 horsepower engine versus 215 horsepower in the old APC. The range of the armament has been increased from 1500 to 2500 yards. The sights on the 20mm cannon are optical rather than the fixed sights on the previous 50 cal machinegun. The MICV has antimine protection underneath and increased armor on the top and sides.

In fact, COL Dunaway commented that the range threat and weapons penetration of the MICV has increased 4 to 1 over the M113A1 vehicle.

The vehicle is designed to support the battle with its squad of Infantrymen inside or out. It has firing port weapons which allows the men to fire from the protected inside. The cannon is mounted on a stabilized turret which allows the gunner to shoot accurately regardless of the vehicle's movement. And in addition, it has a coaxial mounted M50E2 machine gun.

In modern warfare, teamwork is vital. The Infantry, Armor, Field Artillery, Close Air Support and Air Defense must work together to be effective. Therefore, the Infantry must have a carrier capable of keeping up with the new tanks and providing adequate protection for the always important Infantryman.

Defense Issues

Defense issues always get their share of headlines and undoubtedly make interesting reading and viewing for Americans interested in national security or Defense spending. So far this year, however, Congressional debate on the Defense budget has produced few issues and few headlines.

But, they will come. Americans interested in what they will be can get a forecast from an Office of Management & Budget publication, "Seventy Issues." Analysis of the Defense portion of this document reveals that potential issues fall into two broad categories: force strengthening and modernization and personnel cost reductions.

Force improvement involves both strategic and conventional forces. The FY'77 request to strengthen strategic forces is $1.6 billion more than approved for FY'76 and will permit beginning production of the B-1 bomber and the Trident missile, working on a new ICBM, continuing work on long range cruise missiles, and increasing the yield and accuracy of United States' nuclear weapons.

On the conventional side, the budget request is $5.5 billion over FY'76 and features such items as tank and attack helicopter procurement for the Army's 16 division force and the Marines and rebuilding equipment prestock sites in Europe; procurement of Navy and USAF tactical fighters, the F-14, F-15, and A-10; supporting last year's increase in USAF tactical fighter wings from 22 to 26; and adding 16 major new ships to the Navy.

To hold the line in ever-increasing personnel costs, DOD has proposed nine actions which will "save" a total of $2.8 billion. They include: restraining growth of compensation levels, elimination of 26,000 civilian positions, phasing out subsidies (over three years) for military commissaries, elimination of dual compensation for federal employees on active duty for training with the Reserve Components, reducing the paid drill strength of the Navy reserve by 40,000 (currently 92,762) and holding new military construction below FY'76 levels.

Some of these actions will surely become "issues." Watch for the headlines. (AUSA)

Reg fine print goes unnoticed; many miss early list status

Some commands may not be aware of the fine print in the regulations that allow eligible E4s and E5s to get a headstart on promotion to the next higher grade.

Reports from the field suggest commanders are waiting until a soldier reaches the minimum waivable time in service (TIS) point before recommending him or her for promotion.

Here's the straight skinny: Soldiers can be recommended for promotion three months before they reach the minimum waivable TIS requirement.

Let's look at it step-by-step.

First, TIS for promotion to E5 is 36 months; TIS for promotion to E6 is 72 months.

Second, if other criteria are met, TIS for E5 can be waived down to only 24 months; 48 months TIS for promotion to E6.

Third, the regs require a soldier to be on a promotion list for three months before he or she is eligible to compete against the monthly MOS cut-off scores announced by DA for promotion.

The reason for the three-month wait on the promotion list is to give the field time to tell the promotion system managers at DA how many soldiers are eligible for promotion by MOS and promotion points.

DA consolidates the reports and prepares an Army-wide promotion chart by MOS and promotion points. The number of soldiers on this list is compared against MOS vacancies at the E5/6 grade level.

Balanced or overstrength MOSs get few promotion allocations. Understrength MOSs receive a fair share of hike authorizations.

DA then develops the promotion cut-off scores to insure the number of soldiers promoted keeps that MOS at or near a balanced level.

Fourth, (and here's the zinger) the regulation (paragraph 7-15d, Change 53 to AR 600-200) authorizes an E4 to go on the E5 list with only 21 months TIS. By the time he or she has waited out the required three months on the recommended list, the soldier has reached the 24 months waivable TIS requirement. An E5 aiming for E6 can go on the recommended list at the 45th TIS month and wait out the remaining three months on the list.

What this fine tuning means to the hard-chargin' soldier is that he or she could be promoted 90 days earlier than by having to wait until he or she reached the 24/28 month TIS marker.

Military retirement benefits add up

There generally is a point in a military career when soldiers become interested in military retirement benefits.

Up to that point, retirement looks as a distant mirage seen only by others.

A transition often occurs when a soldier reenlists for the first time. Then, job satisfaction, family security — and retirement begin to occupy more of his thoughts.

Retirement is one of those far-off events that soldiers take for granted because they know military retirement benefits are good. A soldier can retire after 20 years on half pay. If he stays longer, retirement pay increases by 2.5 per cent for each year until 30 years service when retirement pay is 75 per cent of the soldier's basic pay at retirement.

An 18-year-old soldier who enlists after high school is eligible to retire in 20 years at 50 per cent of basic pay. Assuming that soldier makes E-7 and retires at 20 years, retirement pay based on current pay grades will be about $440 monthly or more than $5,000 a year.

An E-9 retiring at 30 years service would receive more than $900 per month or about $11,000 annually in retirement pay.

Soldiers accept these amounts as being fair. But the civilian worker in private industry will no doubt see it differently. The soldier can retire at the end of 20 years and still be less than 40 years old — while the civilian worker may toil for another 25 years and receive less retirement pay.

Military retirement is different and has no parallel in private industry. The main reason is that military retirement ages are significantly lower. The average retirement age for enlisted soldiers is 42.7 years with 23 years of service. For officers, retirement typically comes at 45.7 years with 25 years of service.

The reasons for early retirement may not be apparent to the civilian worker, but to keep a fighting force second to none, an early retirement must be provided to keep the average age low. Otherwise, the Army would be populated with "burned out" old soldiers.

A better appreciation for the military retirement system comes from a comparison with other pension plans.

One aspect to remember is that social security is taken into account in most other pension plans.

For instance, industry pension plans consider that their workers will receive social security when they retire so company retirements less because the company matches whatever the individual pays to social security. So the company is contributing to the pension plan and social security at the same time.

The Army also contributes to social security for soldiers but not for permanent DA civilian employees. Civil service workers contribute to their own retirement plans which is matched by the government but normally they pay no social security.

The soldier, on the other hand, participates in a non-contributory retirement plan. The government pays the entire amount of retirement and nothing is deducted from the soldier's pay. (Although military pay traditionally has been less to compensate for non-contribution to a retirement plan).

A look at the retirement plan for a typical corporation will make military retirement benefits readily apparent. In industry, the normal retirement age is 65. Some plans provide for early retirement at 55 or 60 years of age, but the annuity or pension is reduced. The civilian workers usually works until his 65th birthday, then begins to collect retirement and social security checks — which added together can amount to less than the military retirement.

For example, a worker with a large computer firm can look forward to a retirement check of about $250 a month after 20 years. With 30 years service, the retirement payment increase to about $350. Additionally, social security payments could double retirement benefits after age 65.

Another way of looking at the costs involved is to compare the amount that many companies or unions collect from the worker for contributory retirement systems.

According to a congressional study, an E-7, if working in civilian industry, would have to pay more than $2,000 annually into a retirement account to match his military retirement pay. The amount increases with each pay grade.

Some companies do have some benefits not enjoyed by military personnel. For instance, if a worker completes 10 years with a company then he is eligible for a reduced amount of retired pay when he reaches 65. The military has no such provision, but proposed changes would provide such a provision — along with other changes.

The major advantage to the military retirement plan is the early age at which the soldier can retire. While the second career is being undertaken, a monthly check is arriving and medical benefits are available on a space available basis. The retired soldier can shop at the PX and commissary — and take advantage of other benefits enjoyed by active duty military personnel.

If the military retirement system still doesn't sound like such a good deal, think of it this way. Based on current pay grades with no cost of living increases, an E-7 retiring after 20 years will receive more than $142,000 before reaching 65, when the typical civilian worker retires. An E-9 who retires after 30 years will receive more than $200,000 before the age of 65. And when the 65th birthday arrives, so do the social security checks.

For officers, the figures are even more impressive. A lieutenant colonel who retires after 20 years' service at about 43 years of age will collect $956 a month. By the time he's 65, he will have been paid more than $252,000. A colonel who retires at 30 years will receive almost $284,000 before reaching 65, when social security also starts coming in.

Each soldier's retirement depends upon his personal circumstances and the figures presented are examples only. They are based on current pay grades and do not take into account any cost of living allowances in the future.

The Ft. Benning Retirement/Separation Services Office has established a job referral program to assist retiring soldiers in obtaining jobs. For additional information on retirement benefits, call 545-2715. (ANF)

Getting out?

Benefit timetable worth look

Veterans recently separated from military service are encouraged by the Veterans Administration to check the timetable on veterans' benefits.

Upon notification by the Department of Defense that service members have terminated active duty under conditions other than dishonorable, the VA sends the new veteran a summary of key benefits with time periods in which application must be made.

Separate communications provide the veteran with GI Loan Certificates of Eligibility for homes, condominiums and mobile homes and information on insurance and educational programs.

The veteran is urged to contact the nearest VA office or representative of veterans' service organizations for complete application procedures.

The benefits timetable includes:

- Within 120 days (up to one year if totally disabled), convert Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to five-year Veterans' Group Life Insurance. Apply to Office of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, 212 Washington Street, Newark, N.J. 07102.

- Within one year from date of notice of VA rating on disability, apply to VA for special National Service Life Insurance based on service-connected disability, if applicable.

- Within one year, apply to VA for dental care.
- As soon as possible, apply to VA for GI Bill educational training, which must be completed within 10 years of separation from Military service.

There are no time limits for veterans to:

- Apply for GI loan guaranty to buy, build or improve a home.

- File claim with VA for compensation for service-connected disabilities or disease or apply for hospital care.

- Seek assistance from local state employment offices in finding work or entering Labor Department job-training programs. (VA)

Each Army team member in the armed forces tournament will play 12 rounds of chess meeting every member of the Air Force and the combined Navy/Marine Corps/Coast Guard teams. Every player will receive $200 from the American Chess Foundation for expenses.

Army teams have won the tournament — co-hosted by the American Legion and the foundation — four times and tied twice. Individual and team awards are up for grabs.

Benning NCO earns honor

A Ft. Benning NCO won an Honor Certificate from the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge for his article, "I Am An American," which was published in the BAYONET on September 26, 1975.

SFC Gary L. Hannebohn, community relations NCO for the Information office, was the only Army person to win an award in the field of journalism.

Awards covered a wide range of activities, such as public addresses, editorials, community programs, radio and television shows, projects of schools and youngsters as well as newspaper articles.

The Freedoms Foundation is a nonpartisan, non-political and nonprofit organization which encourages everyone to actively support fundamental freedoms of the country through its educational and awards programs.

Motorcycle safety

Bike enthusiasts of all varieties are heading for the open roads now that the weather is staying warmer. Motorcyclists in particular need to be aware of their special place in the traffic stream.

As a motorcyclist enters the traffic scene, his alertness and duties are of utmost importance. While at Ft. Benning, all motorcycle operators are required to have their motorcycle registered, have a valid motorcycle operator's license and must pass the Motorcycle Safety Course offered by the Safety Office. Unless all rules and regulations are adhered to, dire results can occur.

Such was the recent case of a motorcyclist who lost his leg in an accident while attempting to pass a truck on a downhill curve.

Nothing can take the place of extra alertness and precaution while operating a motorcycle. All motorists need to be on the lookout for the increasing number of motorcyclists on the road and respect their place in the traffic scene.

New uniform brass OKed

A change long requested by soldiers has become a reality. The Army has adopted a bright brass insignia of grade for wear on the overcoat, raincoat and windbreaker by enlisted personnel.

The new insignia is authorized now for optional purchase and wear in place of the current subdued plastic insignia with white plastic backing.

The mandatory changeover date for the bright brass will be October 1, 1976. From that date on, one pair of the insignia will be added to the five pairs of cloth insignia now issued upon promotion, reduction or conversion in grade.

ACS sponsors Riverside tour

"Riverside," home of a succession of commanding generals at Ft. Benning, is an historic landmark in its own right.

Built in 1909 by Arthur Bussey, a Columbus, Ga., businessman, the spacious residence was both a summer home for the Bussey family and the seat of a great self-supporting plantation.

An enchanting latter-day legend has grown up in the community which claims that the white columned frame house, surrounded by verandas, was once the scene of beautiful belles, handsome beaux and music until dawn.

This event will constitute a part of Ft. Benning's bicentennial observances.

The first lands which were later incorporated into the Bussey plantation were purchased by COL John Woolfolk in 1827 and 1828 (the year Columbus became a city). The land had been opened up by lottery after the Creek Indians had moved — by treaty — to Alabama in 1825. Families were able to obtain plantation size holdings by combining lotteries and buying up adjacent land. The Woolfolk place was called Cusseta Plantation, taking the name of the original town of Cusseta, located on the property.

Following the Civil War the estate was broken up and sold. In 1883 Marthan Hatcher, wife of Benjamin Hatcher of Columbus, purchased approximately 1,780 acres of the land, adjoining the Chattahoochee River.

It was from the Hatcher family that Bussey bought the property. The new owner named the place Riverside Plantation and began the construction of the home that was later to become the "CG's Quarters" while retaining the name the businessman planter gave it, "Riverside."

An old meeting house on Lumpkin Road was moved on logs through a grove of oak trees to the homesite to form the nucleus of the plantation's "Big House." The house moving was heralded by the newspapers as an amazing engineering feat. The building had been painstakingly inched through trees in the area of Patch Elementary School "without damaging or destroying a single tree."

The ecology practiced by Arthur Bussey is continued even now as many of those same old oak trees on the Riverside lawn receive the care such landmarks deserve.

Bussey added two kitchens to the simple meeting house, a bathroom of the "bowl and pitcher" type and upstairs bedrooms and porches. The completed home had two parlors and a dining room. Although designed for a summer home, there were fireplaces in the parlors and dining room and one between the two kitchens. The original meeting house had no chimneys; only flues for stoves. The wood panels and floor were pine.

There were black metal light fixtures fueled by a gas produced by mixing carbide with water. Because of the danger involved in the process, the mixing station was located some distance away and the gas was piped underground to the house.

A rarity in those days was the running water system. From a pond at the foot of a hill about a mile away, water was pumped by a ram to a tower and then piped into the house.

Riverside Plantation, after Bussey's improvements, was one of the last great self-supporting agricultural projects of the plantation system in western Georgia. Convenient to the big house was the Riverside Trading Company where Patch School now stands. Next to that was a cotton gin. There was a completely renovated housing development for employes of the plantation, with one employee devoting his entire time to the repair and preservation of the stately old oak trees. Colorful peacocks graced the lawn.

Riverside made the transition from a family summer home to military quarters soon after The Infantry School was moved from Ft. Sill, Okla., to Columbus, Ga. in 1918. A camp named for Confederate General Henry Lewis Benning had first been established on Macon Road and then moved to its present location and designated Ft. Benning.

Riverside Plantation and the home were part of the acreage acquired by the government to accommodate what was to become the "Home of the Infantry."

Today, after renovations, there are five bedrooms and three baths at Riverside, and the house is centrally heated by steam radiators. A plaque in the hall bears the names and dates of residence of former commanding generals, men whose military service is an integral part of the history, not only of this house and this installation, but of the nation and the world.

In July 1972, the future of this historic home was insured when "Riverside" was added to the National Register of Historic Sites. Thus, "Riverside" joins a distinguished list of famous places nationwide which will be forever preserved.

Army Community Service is sponsoring a tour of Riverside through the cooperation of Mrs. Willard Latham.

Riverside, located at 100 Vibbert

Avenue, will be open to the public for a conducted tour 2-5 p.m., May 2, 1976. ACS officials are expecting many visitors of all ranks, as well as many area civilians.

A donation to the Ft. Benning Emergency Foodlocker will be accepted at the door.

The Emergency Foodlocker assists 60-90 military families per month. Various units on post donate food each month but this does not always meet the need.

Canned and dried staples such as canned fruits and vegetables and packaged one meal dinners are acceptable. Home canned goods are not acceptable.

Adequate parking is available, with MP traffic control in the area. Volunteers will be on hand for child care during the tour.

If possible come at times indicated by the initial of your last name: A-I 2-3; J-R 3-4; S-Z 4-5 p.m.

For more information call the Welcome Center at 545-4679 or 545-1169.

ACS, which "helps people to help themselves," is assisted in its operation by more than 100 men and women volunteers from all ranks and grades of the active Army and retired.

READ THIS BEFORE SWIMMING IN THE GULF

Undertow is the big danger that is encountered when swimming in the Gulf. A mass of deep water moving toward shore and striking the sharp drop in the Gulf floor known as the "Green Bank" produces a strong undercurrent. The upper portion of the mass continues as breakers to the beach. Undertow is stronger in rough weather or when the waves are high.

A person swimming or wading in close proximity to the "Green Bank" will feel an outward and downward pull. If he is sucked under the surface of the water, he is caught in the undertow and swept over the bank. Most persons become panic stricken when caught in the undertow and attempt to fight back upward. Even a strong swimmer cannot fight an undertow and win. If he knows what to do--and does it--he can save himself.

Swim only at AUTHORIZED BEACHES where lifeguards are on duty.

Military couples get travel break

A young sergeant was out on orders for Germany five months ago. To keep the family together, his wife, a SP5, applied for and received concurrent assignment to Germany.

Their big problem came when concurrent travel was not approved for their three-year-old daughter — or so they thought.

Under a recent reg change (AR 614-30 Oversea Service), the wife can now be granted a 90-day deferral to wait with the couple's daughter for quarters. If quarters are not available within the initial deferral period, she can be granted another 90 days.

The deferment policy is applicable only to the second member of the military couple DA selected for assignment.

Officer couples with dependents also may request deferrals. Officer requests are considered on a case-by-case basis. (ANF)

PCS mileage hike expected

The permanent change of station (PCS) mileage allowance for soldiers is expected to increase from 8 cents to 10 cents later this year, according to DA officials.

The mileage allowance for dependents will not change and a ceiling of 21 cents per mile will be imposed on the total amount received for dependents. Currently, dependents 12 years of age or older receive 7 cents per mile while dependents between 2 and 12 years of age receive 3.5 cents per mile.

Thus the max mileage allowance a soldier could get on a PCS move would be 31 cents per mile — 10 cents for himself and 21 for dependents.

The changes have been proposed by the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) and are expected to become effective on Oct. 1 or when the FY 77 Appropriation Bill is enacted. OSD proposed the changes to help servicemembers meet the increasing costs of PCS moves.

Team nets third place

Two individual awards and one team award were captured by Ft. Benning personnel in the First Army Rifle and Machine Gun Matches held here last week.

SSG James D. Smith won a silver medallion for taking second place in the open class rapid firing of the M-14 at 200 yards.

SP4 Gary Beske earned a bronze medallion signifying third place winner in the novice class also rapid firing of the M-14 at 200 yards.

Ft. Benning's team entry in the National Match Course M-14 shot their way into third place.

Concern over items disposal

Post personnel have expressed concern over military items being disposed of through trash and garbage operations at the landfill area.

According to Walter F. Partin, acting director of industrial operations, "All excess military equipment should be processed for classification and turned in through supply channels, and not disposed of at the landfill area located at the junction of Marne Road and Cusseta Road."

He also said, "Excess 55-gallon drums and wooden pallets should be turned into the Defense Property Disposal Office in Bldg 326 or to the Supply Division. Considerable utilization of these drums and pallets can be accomplished," Partin said.

"Abandoned ammunitions and explosives should be returned to the Post Ammunition storage area in Harmony Church when found on post," Partin stated, adding that "no documentation is necessary and these items can be turned in 24 hours per day."

"Ammunition found on post during non-duty hours or on weekends may be turned in by contacting the main gate guard at Bldg 3991, the Ammunition Storage Area," he said.

"Duds or items considered hazardous should not be handled," Partin noted. "These items should be reported immediately to Range Control for destruction by a Range Control Demolition Team."

A turn-in point is operated by the Supply Division in Bldg 224 for supplies, repair parts, and equipment found on post. Allowing a person to return items found on post back to the supply system with no questions asked. Personnel are also reminded by Partin that scrap materials may be turned in to the Defense Property Disposal Office through the Property Book Officer.

VA questions and answers

Q. — If a veteran is hospitalized for service-connected condition, is his new medical evidence sent to the Veterans Administration for reevaluation automatically or does the veteran have to request that this be done?

A. — The regional office is notified when a veteran is hospitalized for a service-connected disability and receives a hospital report. The veteran will be informed as to the status of his disability claim.

Q. — I know that I can claim unusual medical expenses at the end of the year to reduce my income for VA pension purposes. I am on a special diet which includes expensive foods and vitamins. Can these items be included in my claim?

A. — Yes. Cost of foods, beverages and vitamins, when specially prescribed by a doctor for treatment of illness and in addition to, not as substitute for, regular diet are allowed as medical expenses. A statement from your doctor must accompany your claim.

Q. — Does VA make allowances for refresher training in a program for which the veteran was previously qualified through former schooling or experience?

A. — Yes. A new program of refresher training for a maximum of six months allows updating former experience or education gained prior to service.

Q. — How much is the advance payment of GI Bill allowance a veteran receives when he enrolls in school?

A. — The advance payment is the allowance payable for the initial month or fraction thereof in which the term will begin plus the allowance for the succeeding month.

Active-duty servicemen receive a lump sum payment for the entire term or semester in which they are enrolled.

Q. — I am enrolled in a vocational course at a trade school. My eligibility will expire before I have finished my course. I understand there is a nine-month extension available under the GI Bill. Will I be eligible for this extension?

A. No. The nine-month extension is available only to veterans who have exhausted their 36 months entitlement in pursuit of an undergraduate degree.

Dissatisfied, perplexed, frustrated?

PALs, they're here to help you

By Betty Zimmerman

Have you ever gone away from Martin Army Hospital dissatisfied, frustrated or perplexed over some facet of your treatment?

Your next step was probably to complain to your friends or neighbors, right? But that didn't solve the problem, did it?

Now you have an alternative that works — Martin Army Hospital's Patient Affairs Office, located next to the pharmacy lobby by the clinic entrance. The staff of four is there to assist patients whenever they run into a problem concerning medical care.

1LT Linda Pruitt, chief of the Public Affairs Office, and her two patient affairs liaison's (PALs), Mrs. Peggy Locascio and Ms. Joan Hammonds will do their best to take care of patient problems.

"In many cases, the patient just needs to be educated on the different policies and procedures of the hospital and explained why they are necessary," Ms. Hammonds said, adding that, "many times it's just a matter of smoothing out the system, directing the patient to the right clinic, etc."

Once a month a questionnaire will be in every clinic to be filled out by each patient that day. These forms will be fed through the computer at MISO and analyzed to determine problem areas. Constructive action will then be taken by the hospital staff.

"Many complaints come from retired personnel concerning podiatry. The reason is that the post only has one podiatrist now and his primary concern is the active duty soldier," Lt. Pruitt explained. "He just does not have time to handle the foot problems of everyone," she said, adding that, "hopefully, this summer another podiatrist will be on the board."

Another common misunderstanding is why the doctor at the emergency room will only give a patient one dose of medicine and he or she must return to the pharmacy the following day for a prescription. "The Federal Drug Administration rules state that only a pharmacist may dispense controlled substances except for a single dose administered by a doctor to initiate treatment or alleviate pain," Lt. Pruitt stated.

Many times communication problems arise between the staff and patients, leaving the patient with the feeling that he or she has been given the "run around", or deliberately misinformed. In these instances, intervention is accomplished by the PALs to assist the patient in obtaining necessary treatment as expeditiously as possible.

Discussing the procedure to be taken in handling a patient's problem are PAL's (L to R) Joan Hammonds, Peggy Locascio and

Seatbelts: a Fact of life

By now every driver in America should be very much aware of the value of seat belts. The evidence gathered in support of seat belts is overwhelming. This evidence has been published in newspaper articles, magazines, on billboards, and on TV. Most drivers know the importance of seat belts.

A hundred people selected at random would be able to tell you the value of seat belts, but less than 25 per cent of them will say they use them. That's right, less than 25 per cent of the drivers on our highways use their seat belts!

Even though the facts and figures are well publicized, some of them are worth repeating. National Safety Council experts estimate that seat belts could save 8,000 lives a year. In addition, seat belts could reduce highway injuries by at least 2 million. The number of vehicles on our highways is increasing each year. With these facts in mind it becomes even more important to wear seat belts.

In addition to providing protection in a collision, seat belts can also help avoid collisions in some cases. If another vehicle suddenly whips out in front of your vehicle on the highway, you may have to turn sharply, perhaps even apply the brakes. In such a case, seat belts keep you solidly behind the steering wheel where you can maintain control of your vehicle.

None of this information should be new to any of us. Even though we all know better — why do the great majority of us still push aside or even sit in our seat belts when we get into our cars? Why do we ignore the facts? Why don't you use your seat belts?

Many excuses can be given, but NONE are valid excuses. Each person has his own reasons for not wearing seat belts. The following examples constitute a small sampling of the most often used excuses along with the facts concerning each excuse.

Excuse: "I don't need a seat belt when I'm traveling at low speeds."

Fact: More than half of the serious accidents resulting in injury or death occur at LESS than 40 m.p.h. Fatalities involving non-belted occupants have been recorded as low as 12 m.p.h.

Excuse: "I don't need a seat belt. I'm just going to the store."

Fact: Three out of four accidents occur within 25 miles of home.

Excuse: "Seat belts are too confining. Besides, I might get caught inside a burning or submerged vehicle."

Fact: Less than one in a hundred accidents involve fire or possible drowning — releasing a seat belt takes a second. Also, if you do go under water while belted in, you will know exactly where you are.

Excuse: "I'll be safer if I'm thrown clear of my car in a crash."

Fact: Statistics prove that the risk of serious injury or fatality is five times greater for the person ejected than for the person who is kept inside the car.

Other excuses include: "I haven't got the time for seat belts; they wrinkle my clothes; I'm a careful driver — I don't need seat belts."

There are many other foolish reasons for not using seat belts. Is your reason listed above? If so, you may want to change your thinking.

The wearing of seat belts while riding in a vehicle in Ft. Benning is mandatory. Regulations place the responsibility for having all passengers strapped in on the "senior occupant."

The military police will not stop a driver for the sole purpose of checking his seat belts, but an unfastened belt can mean a ticket if the driver is stopped for another reason, according to SFC David Christy, MP operations sergeant.

By using seat belts you could be one of the estimated 8,000 people who could save themselves just by taking the time to "Buckle-Up." Be one of the smart drivers — use your seat belts instead of sitting on them. Get into the Life-Saving Habit: NOW!

Benning to stage "The Crucible"

One of the most controversial plays of our time, "The Crucible" by Arthur Miller, will be presented by the Ft. Benning Dramatizers on April 16, 17, 23 and 24 at 8 p.m. and April 25 at 2 p.m. at the Ft. Benning Playhouse, Bldg. 27 behind the Infantry Museum.

"The Crucible" is a dramatic re-telling of the historic witchcraft trials in Salem, Massachusetts in 1692. It's tale of bigotry and self-righteousness on the part of those who managed to be the first to accuse others of witchcraft can be regarded as a parallel with the tracking down of other kinds of "heretics" in our own time.

A Pulitzer Prize winner, Miller has declared that every one of the characters in his drama has played a similar role in the terrible episodes of 1692 in Salem, when 19 persons were hanged as witches on the hearsay of hysterical accusers and others saved themselves only by "confessing" to having made pacts with the Devil.

John Damren will be seen as John Proctor in his search for justice in a time of fear, and Joan Kenney will enact the role of his rigidly upright wife. Russell Rowe will appear as Dansforth, the overbearing deputy-governor of the province who presides over the trial. Ted Humphrey will portray Rev. Hale, a minister who is called as a consultant on witchcraft who becomes appalled at the hysteria that overwhelms the colonial village, and Robert Behr will appear as Rev. Parris, Salem's minister who whips up the orgy of bigotry to save his own position.

Others in the large cast include Linda Caffey, Denise Parker, Rita Mary Jones and Leanna Taylor.

Admission is free but everyone is encouraged to make reservations ahead of time to be assured of having a seat. This may be done by calling 545-5057 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Don't miss this compelling drama by one of America's foremost compelling playwrights!

Museum shows Army uniforms of the past

Interested in seeing the colorful uniforms of the U.S. Army during the 1880's? The National Infantry Museum here has 12 Ogden prints that are currently on a four-month exhibit. In all, Ogden produced for the Quartermaster General, 70 paintings illustrating official Army uniforms from 1766 to 1907.

The prints on display are from a collection of turn-of-the-century original prints donated to the museum in 1975. Eagerly sought by collectors of military Americana, these rare original Ogden prints were recognized even in Ogden's day as the most authoritative in existence.

The Ogden prints currently on display in the Museum are from the 1880's period; the final period of colorful uniforms before color and pageantry gave way to the drab camouflage of the 20th century. On the average each painting portrays five soldiers of different rank posed in typical military setting. Backgrounds often depict actual geographical locations — the Capital Dome, Castle William on Governors Island and West Point.

Accenting the subject matter of the prints, uniform items of the period are currently on display. Small items such as epaulets, brass and soulder give added dimension to the drawn material.

This exhibit of highly specialized art is located in the entrance hallway of the Museum and is available for public viewing from 10:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Tues.-Fri., and 12:30 p.m. - 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The SPIRIT of 1776 AMERICA 1976

In 1776 the Continental Congress authorized General George Washington to raise an army and create its uniform. The Congress also established a Marine Committee to manage all seaborne military affairs, including uniforms for officers of the United States Navy. In those early days, however, there was little uniformity in American military dress, especially in enlisted men's uniforms.

The colonial Army uniform which General Washington modeled after the British military dress, in blue rather than red, was not totally satisfactory. Many soldiers claimed that the stiff-collared coat hindered normal breathing and that the tails of the coat snagged during forest fighting. Moreover, they felt that the tri-cornered hat offered too little protection from the sun and rain. Thus, the Revolutionary Army included men in buckskins and various combinations of civilian clothing.

The early Navy uniform also met with controversy, and in 1777 a group of Navy captains in Boston drafted a proposal for changing Navy officers' uniforms. Material shortages also prevented numbers of officers from obtaining the authorized uniform, and many wore whatever was available, whether or not it conformed to instructions. Sailors in 1776 wore petticoat trousers that came to the knees and could be tied. It wasn't until 1817 that the traditional bell-bottomed trousers came into being, along with the official enlisted men's brim hat, blue jacket, and red waistcoat.

As the Nation and the Services grew, more emphasis was placed on quality, appearance, and regulation of military uniforms. Subsequent wars, changing military operations, entry of women into military service, etc., have resulted in numerous uniform changes.

After 200 years of American military uniform history, the Services continue testing and evaluating the clothing needs of their personnel, changing uniforms as necessary, and thereby keeping American military men and women the best-dressed Armed Forces in the world.

Extra travel time

Soldiers may get one to two extra days travel time under a new PCS travel rule to be announced soon. The change involves the computation of travel time when travel is made in other than a direct route and more than one type of transportation is used.

Previously travel time was computed based on a ratio of the actual types of travel used to reach final destination. Now however the slowest mode of transportation will be used.

For example if a soldier is on a PCS move with leave enroute, traveling by private auto part way, then commercial aircraft, and commercial bus, the soldier's travel time will be computed using primarily the travel time of POV and commercial bus. Using the slower means of transportation for figuring travel time allows a soldier more time to report to the new duty location. (ANF).

Troop travel tips

Traveling to an overseas assignment doesn't have to be a bum trip. MILPERCEN officials offer the following hot tips to make your flight easy as possible.

The reporting date and time on your travel authorization (DD Form 1482) takes priority over all other instructions. If there is conflicting info on your orders or leave form, tell the personnel people. They will correct it.

Read the booklet "Tips for Travel" for info on facilities, connecting flights, possible costs and travel times to airports. It should be provided with your port call. If not then get one from your installation central port call office.

Report to the passenger terminal reservation desk at the airport named on your DD Form 1482. If leaving from an Air Force terminal, go to the MAC passenger reservation desk. Soldiers flying commercial should go to the appropriate airline desk.

Arrive not later than 1 1/2 hours before the flight time listed on your port call. After June 1, port calls will give specific reporting times.

Many of the troops talked to just weren't sure where or when to report or how to get to the airport. Some of this confusion stems from conflicting info being entered on the GIs' leave forms, orders and travel authorizations (DD Form 1482). Also losing posts apparently aren't properly educating all departing troops on travel procedures.

Post managers will soon receive info on early and late arrivals from personnel assistance points at McGuire, Charleston and Travis air bases. These points provide general assistance to troops headed overseas.

Not all troops make the flight as scheduled. Some are late and some don't show at all. MILPERCEN officials after recent talks with tardy troopers found that no-shows and late arrivals are not always caused by soldier error. Much of the blame lies with the post the GI is leaving. (ANF)

Fat is a hassle

Are you really FAT? It's hard to get a person to admit that he or she is really fat. Generally, people prefer to think of themselves as being a little heavy, large boned or muscular and solid. To admit being FAT is to admit failure, to acknowledge that you're on the decline — on a highway marked by declining vigor, declining resistance to disease; declining appeal to the opposite sex and declining longevity.

Many of the ills awaiting at the door of advancing age actually should be blamed on obesity. The public has come to consider a little plumpness as an indication of health. Actually, OVERWEIGHT, even a little, is a health hazard. The more overweight, the greater the hazard.

Think for a moment — if you could lose enough weight to be considered 'average', maybe for the first time in your life, your only life would be much improved.

You would have less of a chance of getting diabetes, high blood pressure, heart disease, kidney disease and many more such ailments; you would have greater success if you ever needed surgery; have a greater tolerance to exercise; you would look better, feel better and gain more respect from your friends. Finally, you would have less mental discomfort and less anxiety.

Fire! Would you panic?

Suddenly, in the middle of the night, you hear a spine-tingling shout — FIRE! Would you panic? Most people would because fire can be a frightening experience. By knowing the following basic fire survival rules you may be able to save the lives of yourself and your loved ones should fire break out in your home.

- Heated gases and smoke rise, therefore, keep close to the floor and protect your mouth and nostrils with a wet cloth to filter the smoke and gases.

- If your door is open, close it immediately. The door will form a barricade between you and the fire and keep both flame and deadly fumes and smoke away from you.

- Shout to others in the house to remain in their rooms with the doors shut.

- Touch the door with your hand — if it's hot don't open it. Stuff pillows or blankets into the cracks. Go over to a window and open it. Sit beside the open window and scream for help. With the door closed and while breathing cool, fresh air, you are reasonably safe until help comes.

- If the door is not hot, move quickly (hopefully you have a pre-planned escape route) and carefully. Remember, stay low and protect your mouth and nose with a wet cloth if possible. Once outside — stay outside.

- If you are able to use the stairway or stairs for escape, close the doors behind you. This will bottle up the blaze in the room of origin and give you more time to evacuate. Also, this will cut down the draft which would otherwise fan the fire and spread it throughout the house.

- If possible, invest in a smoke detector and locate it in your sleeping area or in the hallway. This investment will give you precious minutes to escape.

Some of the things that you should NEVER do are:

- Waste time trying to dress.
- Waste time trying to save material goods.

- Waste time trying to use the telephone (use a neighbor's phone when you get out).

- Attempt to extinguish a fire of any size yourself. Leave it to the professionals.

By knowing these basic safety rules your chances for survival are good. Above all, REMAIN CALM — DON'T PANIC!

Opel By Isuzu

FEATURING NEW SIZE AND NEW ECONOMY

ISUZU WHO?

There's something about an Isuzu that can only be described in one word. Namely, Isuzu. What it is, is a new small import from Buick. What it really is, is an import import. Because Isuzu's basic design is German, Isuzu is built in Japan. And, to top it all off, Isuzu is sold and serviced by Buick dealers like us.

You can always spot those Isuzu qualities. (Even if you do try to pass it off as your long lost uncle from Goshen). There's no mistaking the way Isuzu is put together. Or its likeable price. So, go ahead. Call it Opel. Call it Bowser. Call it Fred. But everyone will know it's Isuzu.

67th Maint Bn begins consolidation of unit administration at Bn level

By NORA YOUNG

The 67th Maint Bn has begun the consolidation of unit administration at the battalion level. The concept is directed at the major problem of administration found at the company level.

Previously this problem has caused the company 1Sg to become overly involved in routine administration. In many cases he has been tied to the orderly room and not able to function as the senior NCO of the company.

The 67th's version of consolidation is referred to as the Personnel Administrative Center (PAC).

SFC Earl W. Wagstaff, PSNCO for the battalion and nos NCOIC of PAC, comments "This concept is long overdue for this battalion and is being eagerly accepted by all concerned. It will be started by many units in the near future and by beginning now, we may be able to share our experiences and lessons learned with others."

1LT Thomas G. Sutton, Bn Adjutant and OIC of PAC added, "Transferring administrative functions from company to battalion is a great idea, and an economical move. We may utilize more administrative personnel at battalion under this concept, but even if this is the case it will be more economical to add one or two more administrative personnel at this level than to add one or more to each company."

Sutton and Wagstaff organized the PAC into five major work centers: SIDPERS, legal, administrative, publications and files, and message center. All of the company's administrative personnel and authorized S-1 personnel were relocated to the PAC to perform duties in each of the five major areas.

The SIDPERS, Section accomplishes all transactions related to this activity.

The legal Section handles all judicial, nonjudicial, eliminations, discharges and flagging actions.

The administrative section conducts transactions related to routine administration, personnel actions and personnel management activities.

The message center provides complete distribution, courier and reproduction services.

There are 18 personnel presently performing duties within PAC under direct supervision of Wagstaff.

The general concept of PAC does not let the company abandon administration, but allows it to submit input on an informal, oral or handwritten basis and to retain the responsibility for training, leadership and military justice.

The PSNCO commented, when asked about functions or tasks arising that are not presently programmed for accomplishment by PAC, "In these cases, the principles of consolidation will apply. Also, these will be viewed toward elimination, simplification and combination with other functions and/or elevation to battalion."

LT Sutton and SFC Wagstaff have established a unique training program. The program is designed to insure that all PAC personnel are qualified to perform in a specialized function in a minimum period of time.

A unit clerk will not be dedicated to support the company from which he came, but will perform as directed by the PAC NCOIC.

Crosstraining is essential for proper support. When a company is cross-attached or detached on a separate mission the most experienced unit clerk, regardless of MOS, can accompany that company without degrading the PAC.

A contingency packet of preprinted forms, requisitions and supplies will be maintained for such contingencies.

Other inherent benefits of PAC include the elimination of repetitive returns for action — one stop completion, signature and forwarding is the preferred method. Signature of company commanders are obtained only when necessary to satisfy legal considerations or to affect a decision, not just for traditional reasons. The attitude to that of the company commander, first sergeant and clerk supporting the platoons under the traditional organization.

U.S. shooting team dominates Mexican match

SFC Hershel Anderson walked away with five gold medals to lead the U. S. Shooting Team in its domination of the 13-nation V Benito Juarez Shooting Championships in Mexico City last week. The U. S. Team, led by shooters from the U. S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Ft. Benning, grabbed 18 of the 25 gold medals in contention.

Anderson, who won four gold and two silver medals in Mexico City just last October at the Pan American Games, sparked U.S. shooters by taking the individual gold in Free Pistol, Center Fire Pistol and Air Pistol and leading his team to victories in Free Pistol and Center Fire to add two team golds to his bagful. As in the Pan American Games, SFC Anderson won more medals than any other participant in the games.

CPT Lanny Bassham, also of USAMU, copped four gold medals winning the individual Air Rifle match and being a member of the winning teams in Air Rifle, English Match and Smallbore Rifle Three-Position.

With steady shooting, MAJ John Foster brought home three gold team medals in Air Rifle, Smallbore Rifle Three-Position and Standard Rifle. Foster took a silver and bronze individually.

CAPT Ernie Vande Zande garnered two team gold medals in Air Rifle and Standard Rifle and won the silver medal individually in the Standard Rifle match.

MAJ Lones Wigger, world record-holder in the Smallbore Rifle Three-Position, handily won his event by outdistancing Bernard Klinger of West Germany, who holds the world record in the kneeling position.

ILT Diana Zimmerman won the ladies division of the Standard Rifle competition.

The world record-holding U. S. Trap Team of PFC Dan Carlisle, SP4 Charvin Dixon, SGT Don Haldeman and Wally Zobel moved away from the pack to take the team gold as Carlisle copped the individual gold breaking 197 out of 200 clay pigeons and winning a shoot-off with Mexican Justo Fernandez. Dixon took the bronze with a 195.

The Running Boar Team of 1LT Louis Theimer, MSGs Ed Moeller and Charles Davis and SFC Martin Edmundson shot their way to a team victory as Theimer and Moeller fell second and third to Helmuth Bellingrodt of Colombia, the world record-holder in this event. Bellingrodt fired one shot over his world record of 577 out of 600; however, his 578 score will not be recognized by the International Shooting Union since Benito Juarez is not an ISU match.

SFC Jim McCauley won two team gold medals and an individual silver and SFC Marvin Black took a gold team medal and a silver individual in pistol events.

SP5 Kimberly Dyer won the ladies division in Center Fire Pistol.

SFC Bruce Chreene was a member of the gold medal winning U. S. Center Fire Pistol Team.

The V Benito Juarez Shooting Championships were held April 3 - 8.

TDY pay raise

Soldiers will be getting eight dollars more a day for TDY trips if current legislation gets the final nod. The bill is now in conference committee and may reach the President in the near future. New stateside rates of $33, or more in designated high-cost areas, should reach GI pockets about one month after he signs it.

The proposed increase will bring Army TDY pay in line with civilian rates. Rising costs of travel and lodging were cited as reasons for recommending higher rates.

Under the new rules, troops will get $14 per day for meals and other expenses like laundry, dry cleaning, etc. Also the average cost of the rooms you stay in will be refunded. For example, if you paid $14 one night and $16 the next evening, simply total the cost ($30), and divide by the number of days (2). You would get $15 per day for lodging. Total daily expenses cannot exceed $33 per day for stateside TDY except in designated high-cost areas.

For these high-cost areas, actual expense reimbursement is authorized for not more than the max daily amounts set for each city. The highest cost area is the boroughs of Manhattan, Bronx and Staten Island. Soldiers will receive $50 per diem there. Rates for other areas are: Brooklyn and Queens, San Francisco and Chicago — $39; Washington, D. C. — $42; Boston — $38; and Los Angeles — $37.

Servicemembers can opt to be paid on a per diem basis and receive $33, or ask to be reimbursed for actual expenses when staying in a high-cost area. However, you must be prepared to show proof of expenses if you claim the max payment for high-cost areas. Regardless of expenses, soldiers will receive no more than the max rate set for each particular area.

The method of computation for overseas per diem will also change. Soldiers traveling there will be allowed half the applicable per diem rate for meals and incidental costs. They also will get back the cost of their room. All this must not exceed the set area per diem rate.

Also, per diem will be computed the same for troops in units on temporary duty as it is for individuals on normal TDY with appropriate deductions for government meals and quarters being made.

Other changes call for lifting of the $2 max pay-back for using government quarters. Soldiers will now be reimbursed for the actual cost of the room.

Congress had approved a $35 per diem rate bike, but DoD wanted a $33 limit to be consistent with civilian rates. (ANF)

Angler's world simple one

By Denny Blankenship

The world of the bass fisherman is a relatively simple one. Give him his rods, reels, lures and some fishable water and he's in Utopia. At times, however, this tranquil world is shattered by coincidences or circumstances which result in amazing, almost unbelievable occurrences.

Such a case happened last Saturday when the Ft. Benning B.A.S.S. Club challenged the Bassers of Ft. McClellan to a tournament on Lake Walter F. George.

All was normal as 42 fishermen "oozed" out of Chewalla Marina, each with his usual high hopes of breaking all existing records. A beautiful uneventful day passed, filled with the many periods of elation and frustration that accompany all fishermen. As the boats returned for the 6 p.m. weigh-in, it was obvious that a close contest was in progress.

Now comes the unbelievable part.

The final tally for each club showed a tie score down to the ounce. Each club had 53 pounds, 5 ounces of fish. Wait there's more! After some hurried discussion between the perplexed tournament directors, it was decided that the largest fish would determine the winner. Some hasty checking revealed that McClellan's CPT Ben Reisz had a 7 pound, 4 ounce monster caught on a "Wee R." Benning's CPT Jim Wyatt also had a 7 pound, 4 ounce hog caught on a "Wee R". Oh well, back to the drawing board.

The first place finisher among all fishermen was CPT Denny Blankenship of Benning with 11 pounds, 13 ounces of fish. The second spot went to 1st Sgt. Ed Blankenship of McClellan with 10 pounds, 12 ounces of fish. Now for the great part. Both of these fishermen are Marines! The Marines do have a few good fishermen.

Faced with this dilemma, the tournament directors declared the contest a draw.

They Made A Deal For You

President Jefferson purchased Louisiana. Napoleon also sold Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, North and South Dakota. America got parts of Colorado, Wyoming and most of Minnesota. At 4¢ an acre, that was a deal. Much of the $15 million for the Louisiana Territory came from Americans taking stock in their country. Now it's your turn. Join your Payroll Savings Plan. You accumulate savings year after year and America saves too. Now that's a deal.

Fire ravages building

Firemen make a desperate attempt to extinguish flames that ripped through the Parachute Maintenance Building Wednesday night.

By Lisa D'Luhny

Five fire companies from Benning and Columbus combined efforts and put out a fire that destroyed the Parachute Maintenance Building located on Indianhead and Lavoie Roads Wednesday night.

Minutes after the alarm was called into the fire department at 9:40 pm, firemen were on the scene battling the blaze that soon engulfed the 34-year-old structure.

No injuries were reported and the cause is under investigation. It is known that the fire did begin in the 55-foot tower located in the back of the building. The fire then spread to the administrative offices and to a large open area used for parachute maintenance.

The large, corrugated metal building with cedar wood framing housed airborne training offices and contained parachutes, jump records and equipment. An estimated 1300 parachutes were lost in the blaze along with 24 sewing machines.

Post Fire Marshall, COL J. Boylan said that "the heat was so intense that it burned the metal like kindling wood."

Post Fire Chief Robert Young reported that for a while, the fire was in a 'third stage' which is a smoldering stage that builds up heat within the building. The fire then went into the freeburning stage where the firemen's main concern is to try to keep the blaze under control and keep it from spreading to other buildings.

CPT Lou Mason, airborne training officer, was one of the first persons to arrive at the scene and tried to save some personal records and property but the fire turned him away. Mason said the records in the building were "irreplaceable."

The facility was a total loss, but the incident will not immediately affect the airborne training program.

The fire is one of the largest and most destructive fires ever at Ft. Benning, according to Chief Young. Several years ago a fire in Lawson Field destroyed some equipment, including several automobiles. It was also a storage for parachutes, which makes this the second fire to strike the Parachute maintenance crew.

Additionally, on June 24 1975, the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club had their clubhouse and rigger building destroyed by fire and lost all of their equipment and records.

COL Boylan commended the firemen for their outstanding effort in fighting the fire. "They're dedicated, knowledgeable and a well educated group of people who know their jobs; real professionals," said COL Boylan.

Tuesday, an honors ceremony was held on York Field for Miller shortly after his arrival. During the afternoon he viewed a field training exercise by elements of the 197th Inf Bde.

Wednesday, Miller received a series of briefings on combat developments and the Infantry Board, and visited the Combat Arms Training Board.

Miller, a native of Washington, D.C., has been Assistant Secretary of the Army for Research and Development since November 1975.

Reputations follow you through life

It may be said of a person that there are two things which always follow him throughout life: his shadow and his reputation. Reputations can vary; they may be good or bad, weak or strong, well-earned or ill-deserved, but they nonetheless persist and sometimes form the sole basis of character judgment.

Too often we tend to disregard the effects of our reputations and the part they play in our lives. Consider the case of a new man or woman assigned to a unit. The company commander will look over the personnel records to interview the individual and form an initial opinion. In a case like this, the facts are there in the 201 file and the interview may bring out any additional information that may not be evident on the surface.

However, suppose such a person comes to a new assignment and is known to be a troublemaker or a former user of narcotics. The reputation has preceded the individual and that person may be coming into a new situation with one or two strikes against the soldier. Many commanders believe in giving a new soldier a "fresh start" when assigned to the unit and will tend to overlook any troubles in the past in the hope that the new assignee will be grateful and do a good job. This often works quite well, but the fact remains that if there is any difficulty in the new unit, a bad reputation may work against the individual.

In contrast, newly assigned enlisted people with several letters of commendation in their files, who show initiative toward self-improvement and their military careers, may be looked upon favorably and placed in a position of trust and leadership which could further enhance professionalism. In the event one later violates that trust mistakenly or deliberately, the chances are that he or she will be death with more leniently than their counterparts who arrived with a bad reputation.

A reputation can speak for itself many times and can lead to a more thorough and judicious investigation of the facts in event of possible misconduct. How many times have you heard someone say words like, "I'm not a big surprised that that man finally got into a trouble. He's always had a bad reputation?" In contrast, when a rumor of some misdeed is circulated about someone who has previously had a good record, the comment may be something like, "Oh, I doubt he would have done anything like that. He's always been a good worker."

Those who make an effort to build a good reputation will more than likely reap the benefits of their efforts as they progress throughout their military careers. Often, even without their own knowledge, they are considered and selected for choice assignments, leadership positions and tasks which require that extra effort because their superiors are aware of the good reputations and can reasonably expect a professional accomplishment.

Those who criticize and complain and seek to avoid work are merely contributing to their own unhappiness, for they often fall into a rut by having a bad reputation. In cases like these, when they do something outstanding it is likely to be brushed aside and considered not indicative of the individual's true character.

It takes time to build a good reputation, and, it similarly takes time to change a bad one. However, a bad reputation can be changed by an honest self-appraisal and a good deal of hard work. Such efforts will more than likely produce tangible rewards wherever a person may travel.

Manhood: Living with your limits

By Chaplin Glenn M. Stengel

In Webster's New World Dictionary, limitation is defined as, "the point, line, or edge where something ends or must end; boundary or border beyond which something ceases to be or to be possible." Exactly what does this mean?

David once sat within a cave licking his wounds of an utter defeat. As he sat he noticed a spider attempting to bridge a wide gap within the cave wall. This gap was like a round porthole in which the wind was blowing in spurts. The spider was frail and very tiny. As she posed waiting for the wind to die down, she suddenly leaped. A sharp sudden gust of wind tossed her against the wet cave wall. There were many attempts and many failures until David felt that it was his obligation to inform the spider to refrain from the action that she was engaged in at that present moment. The spider seemed to listen. It was near dust and she gave it one more time. To David's surprise, she made it. David returned to the field of battle and defeated his enemies.

What had really kept the spider trying when all obstacles were against her? Webster defines motivation as "some inner drive, impulse, intention, etc., that causes a person to do something or act in a certain way; incentive; goal."

A teacher once said, "Never was I so wise nor so foolish at eighteen." He meant that motivation is then an inner force telling the individual that he can succeed and wisdom is many times complete dedication of that motivation with emotional logic.

In accessing your limitation, a person must first ask himself, "In trying a new approach to an old problem, will I fight myself? If so, is the route that has already been thought of better for me so that I may obtain the highest success? If not, where could I seek help?" And finally, "Am I strong enough to discover my limitations?"

Living with your limitations is often first a seeking stage, a discovery stage, a corrective stage and finally a stage of inner tranquility. At any point in any stage, a person can stop himself.

Yet limitations will strengthen a person. A blind man becomes super sensitive to the emotional state around him. He discovers an acute sharpening of his four other senses. Limitations, therefore, do not have to be in the ogre catalogue. They could enhance a hidden talent.

In conclusion, if you learn to live with your limitations, know them and accept them, then you, too, will be set free within the boundaries of your own limitations.

VA questions and answers

Q — My mother is blind and in a wheelchair. She has no income except a small check from Social Security. Can the VA pay her a pension on my father's service in World War I?

A — She may apply for pension benefits if her income from all sources is not more than $3,300. If she has children under age 18, or age 23 if in school, or children who became helpless before their 18th birthday the maximum income limitation is $4,500. She should also submit medical proof of her need for aid and attendance.

Q — I am receiving nonservice disability pension and my medical expenses are large. Can these be excluded from my income? How should they be reported?

A — Unreimbursed medical expenses which exceed 5 per cent of reported annual income may be excluded from your income. You should submit a statement showing the amount expended for medical expenses and the nature of the expense. This may be done at any time, but generally on your annual income questionnaire.

Q — My wife and I got a divorce and the judge gave her our home. Can I get another GI loan?

A — Your eligibility can be restored for another GI loan provided the divorce decree awards the property to your spouse and the VA is relieved of liability which usually means the loan is paid in full.

March brings German food, music

Springtime and walking make an appealing combination. Add German music, refreshments and beverages and you have a Volks March.

Recreation Services is sponsoring just such an event May 8 from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium. The 1st Annual Spring Volks March is free and open to the general public.

Walking events include a five-mile course for the family, called a Mini-Volks March; a 10-mile course called the Maxi-Volks March for anyone; and an Olds-Volks March of one to three miles for people over 60 years. Certificates signed by MG Willard Latham, post commander, will be awarded to all persons who walk at least a mile.

Running events consist of one five-mile course run, known as the Mini-Marathon, and one 10-mile run called the Maxi-Marathon. Entries to these runs will be classed according to age and sex. Olympic style medals will be presented to the first three finishers in each class.

The music will consist of three live bands that will play their particular specialties of German music, rock music and country and western music. Canned music will fill in during the lulls.

Refreshments will be on sale. In keeping with the German air of festivities will be bratwurst, knockwurst, brochen, pretzels, soft drinks, coffee and other beverages.

Individuals are encouraged to register for the running and walking events before May 8 at any recreation facility, but you may also register at the time of the Volks March. Additional information may be obtained by calling the Sports Branch, 544-4516.

Combat Arms Board takes teaching award

The U. S. Army Combat Arms Training Board (CATB) at the Infantry Center has been awarded the Outstanding Instructional Development Award for 1975 (Military Category) in recognition of the Training Extension Course (TEC) program and its significant contribution to the field of instructional technology.

LTC John Goetz, chief of the TEC division of CATB, accepted the award from Dr. Philip Tiemann of the National Society for Performance and Instruction at its 14th annual convention held in Atlanta, on April 2.

Judging the submissions for the award was a committee composed of some of the leading instructional technologists in the United States. The award was made after an extensive review and evaluation of the TEC program, relative to its use, application, and innovation regarding state-of-the-art instructional techniques.

Designed to improve individual training of soldiers in units, the TEC training system is one of the most significant Army training programs in existence today.

It is designed to assist individual soldiers and unit commanders in upgrading job proficiency. It consists of multimedia instructional materials prepared by service schools for use in the field.

The prepackaged, soldier-validated lessons are interacting and performance-oriented. The materials consist of audiovisual lessons with audiovisual projectors and cassette tape players, audio only lessons, and printed text lessons.

But the TEC training system is more than the concept of transporting instruction from Army service schools to individual soldiers at the unit level via multimedia methods. This system focuses on the need to apply instructional technology to all types of Army training. It emphasizes the necessity of soldier performance — not instructor performance.

The effectiveness of this approach was demonstrated by a recently completed study conducted by the Army Research Institute which compared the cost and effectiveness of TEC with conventional training. It determined that in both Active Army and National Guard units, soldiers were trained by TEC at a lesser cost and performed significantly better than those trained by conventional methods.

What makes TEC so good is the preliminary work behind the scenes, a CATB spokesman said, adding that it is based on the philosophy of performance-oriented training by using training objectives stated in behavioral terms, criterion-referenced testing, and validated training materials.

Thus, the TEC training system is a vehicle for communicating critical "how to" principles, techniques and methods of performance-oriented training, while simultaneously providing the necessary materials to train soldiers in units, the spokesman stated.

TEC training directly supports the Enlisted Personnel Management System (EPMS), Soldier Qualification Tests (SQT), and the Army Training Evaluation Program (ARTEP).

Panel proposes changes

Policies on pay, promotions and personnel are in for big changes if proposals released on April 19 by a presidential commission are adopted by Congress.

One of the key proposals of the Defense Manpower Commission report calls for the establishment of a federal pay board to decide on appropriate military pay. Armed forces pay hikes are now linked to raises given to civil servants.

Doing away with the "up or out" promotion policy (qualitative management program) was also suggested. The committee wants military careerists selected after they have served for 10 years. After reaching the 10 year mark, the commission wants service members evaluated for present job performance and not forced out just because they fail to get promoted as quickly as their contemporaries.

Changes to the military retirement system were also suggested by the Defense Manpower Commission. The report said the current military system "is more generous than civilian counterparts." It proposed that service members generally should be required to serve 30 years, instead of the current 20, to qualify for immediate pension. However, this recommendation would apply only to persons coming into the service — not those already on active duty.

The commission, directed by Congress three years ago to recommend defense manpower policies for the next 10 years, suggested the stand-by draft be reconstituted and that yearly draft registration be resumed. The commission also said the National Guard Division should be kept intact during peace time, but upon mobilization might be used to provide battalions as required for early deployment.

Commission findings in the 518-page report also included the following suggestion:

- The U. S. must maintain its 2.1 million people force for the next 10 years or more, depending on the world situation.

- The services should be able to recruit enough persons over the next ten years to fill its ranks, but may have to offer more incentives if the economy booms.

- With exceptions of scientific areas, the baccalaureate degree is sufficient education to achieve the four-star rank.

- Selected reserves should continue at current personnel strength levels, but some changes made in force composition to create elements genuinely needed in event of a mobilization.

- The armed services probably have worked harder to improve equal opportunity and race relations than any other major institution in American society.

The commission's sweeping reforms will not go to Congress for further study and possible future implementation.

AIT Bde conducts midcycle FTX

By Jerry Van Slyke

The companies of the 1st AIT Brigade's 1st Bn underwent their mid-cycle field training exercise last week. The three-day exercise, conducted in training areas one and two on northeast Ft. Benning, was a series of field classes mixed liberally with practical application.

Following the exercise, the trainees were divided into 11B10 (Light Weapons Infantrymen) and 11C10 (Infantry Mortarman) groups.

On the first day the trainees were convoyed to the training area. After a day of camouflage techniques, individual movement and fireteam and squad formations the men set up their tents and bivouaced for the night.

The entire afternoon of the first day was spent practicing overwatch in all its various configurations. Squads of men could be seen in all the fields deploying from traveling overwatch to bounding overwatch, from bounding consecutively to bounding alternately, tailoring the squad wedge to the terrain.

SFCs Donald Diggs and Mike Woodward were responsible for the first day's training. They are in charge of Day One: "Techniques of Movement."

"Overwatch is the kind of common sense thing that soldiers have been doing on the battlefield for years," SFC Woodward explained. "I'm glad someone has finally formalized it. It's a good technique."

The second day brought together the individual and movement skills learned the day before, as the infantry trainees began in earnest to learn what will be the focal point of their lives over the next few years — Squad in the Attack.

Day two found each trainee taking part in numerous, well coordinated squad assaults.

This is what the "enemy" will see if they should approach PV2 Ricky Price.

Action before contact, movement to contact, action on contact and action after contact were drilled over and over until every trainee could perform the mission of any squad members save only that of squad leader. Only experience will make a squad leader.

"One thing in particular that I have noticed over the past week, since we have been in this training phase," commented SSG Owen W.

Sutphin, an action on contact instructor, "is the high morale factor present in every company so far."

"It's the old time Army spirit," he said, "and I'm really glad to see it."

After all the practice each squad was run through four assaults. The first two were for last minute corrections and the last two were graded. Every squad passed the tough test.

Training on the third consisted mainly of a company-wide critique. Here ideas were tossed into the ring, questions were asked and answered, and the learning process was in full gear.

"I thought the critique was really great," said PV2 Louis Olkeriil of Kalihi, Hawaii. "All the various things I had been learning and practicing seemed to come together."

"Also," he continued, "I found some of the sergeants had done it this way or that way in actual combat and that interested me a lot."

Friday afternoon, the third day, found the trainees at the end of a 13 mile road march, pouring into their company areas at Harmony Church. Many were eager to get cleaned up and take off on the hard earned passes given to superior achievers.

The 1st AIT Brigade's training strength is now about 3200. With next week's arrival of 400-600 more trainees, the total should easily exceed 3600.

Presently the 1st and 5th Battalions are filled and in cycle. The 4th Bn is nearly filled and soon the 2nd and 3rd Battalions will begin filling.

When at full strength, the Brigade will be operating 21 of 24 training companies at any one time.

The 1st AIT Bde is expected to reach its peak of about 5000 trainees in July.

The activation of the brigade is an important step forward for the Army's One Station Unit Training (OSUT) concept.

OSUT would provide all infantry training to be done right here at Ft. Benning, the home of the American Infantry.

Graduation exercises for the first graduating cycle (1st Bn) will be on May 6 at Harmony Church's Dickman Field. The time will be at 10:00 a.m. and the public is invited.

Re-up bonus explained

Soldiers who enlisted after June 1, 1974, are not eligible for the regular reenlistment bonus (RRB). That word from DA personnel officials is part of the continuing effort to stop the false rumors about RRBs. Soldiers planning to reenlist should check their career counselors to find if they are eligible.

Before the All Volunteer Army, some sort of bonus was necessary as additional inducement for soldiers to remain in the Army and to help maintain a qualified career force. One way was to provide a reenlistment bonus.

Now, because of pay increases, the economy in general and other reasons, retention has improved and reenlistment bonuses are required for only a selective number of skills. Selective reenlistment bonuses (SRB) were begun and are presently authorized for 111 MOSs and DA advises that number is expected to decrease.

In 1974, Congress passed the Armed Forces Enlisted Personnel Bonus Revision Act. It replaced the old variable reenlistment bonus (VRB) with the selective reenlistment bonus (SRB). That legislation also did away with the RRB except for persons on active duty June 1, 1974. Thus, soldiers enlisting on June 2 or later are not entitled to RRB.

The RRB for soldiers on active duty before June 1 was continued because the Army believed it had a moral obligation to those who had earned an RRB through a prior reenlistment or because of enlistment promises.

The Army still has a problem attracting qualified soldiers into certain skill areas. The reasons may be unpleasant job conditions in some skills, or perhaps the skill is not marketable in the civilian community. Soldiers were reluctant to volunteer for those fields so the Army has provided a SRB as an added incentive to keep those MOSs up to strength.

DA officials are concerned over the soldier's labeling the RRB as a benefit. They emphasize that the bonuses should not be viewed as "benefits" to the soldier but strictly as management tools to help the Army keep qualified people in certain career fields. RRBs, because of the relative low pay at the time, were necessary to encourage reenlistment of qualified soldiers to keep the Army strong. As their need decreases, the bonuses will decrease. (ANF)

E4 hikes on waivers screech to a halt

Promotions to E4 on time-in-service (TIS) waivers screeched to a halt April 9 when DA told the field the Army is likely to exceed its E4 authorizations for this fiscal year.

The message said no TIS waiver promotions are authorized before June 30.

Promotion forecasters said commanders can continue to promote Pfc. to E4 who have 24 months or more TIS and meet other promotion requirements.

Unaffected also are promotions to E4 for soldiers qualifying under the "Stripes for Skill" program, students who do exceptionally well in schools, and those who have promotion to E4 authorized in their enlistment contracts.

The Army is authorized 172,600 E4s for fiscal year 1976. Forecasters said the promotion picture indicated the Army, at the current rate of promotions, would not only exceed that authorization by 13,000 but the number of E4s authorized to be promoted with a TIS waiver as well.

Halting TIS waiver promotions will allow the Army to stay within its TIS waiver limits and overall E4 dollar budget.

Normally about 11,000 Pfc. get promoted each month and about half of them are promoted on TIS waivers.

DA told field commanders the restriction was to be lifted at midnight, June 30.

Post to host rifle championship

Many of the world's top rifle shooters will gather at Ft. Benning Saturday and Sunday to participate in the Annual Champion of Champions Outdoor Match.

In addition to Ft. Benning's own two-time gold medalist MAJ Lones Wigger and CPT Lanny Bassham, Olympic silver medalist and current World Rifle Champion, the match is drawing John Writer, Olympic gold and silver medalist, shooters from Canada, Sweden, Puerto Rico and Switzerland as well as 20 of the best collegiate shooters in the U.S. from Texas Christian University, East Tennessee State University, West Virginia and Texas Tech. Over 80 competitors are scheduled to compete in the two events, English Match and Smallbore Rifle Three Position.

Bassham has won the tournament for the past two years and in 1974 set new national record firing 12 points over the world record for the Three Position Match.

Matches will begin on Parks Range at Ft. Benning Saturday and Sunday at 7:30 a.m. and continue until 5:00 p.m.

The courses of fire are the same as are fired in Olympic competition with the Champion of Champions Match being billed as one of the several "Olympic warm-up" matches scheduled for 1976, the year of the XXI Olympic Games in Montreal July 17 - August 2.

U.S. shooters are fresh from a string of victories in the V Benito Juarez Shooting Championships in Mexico City where they grabbed 18 of 24 gold medals and dominated the games.

All shooters are tuning up for the Olympic Team tryouts to be held June 5 - 18 in Phoenix. Tryouts for trap and skeet are scheduled for May 14 - 20 in Pacific, Mo.

Shooters will be vying for the two coveted positions in each of the seven Olympic shooting events.

Relief campaign passes midpoint

The halfway mark has been passed in the Army Emergency Relief/Army Relief Society (AER/ARS) campaign which began in March and ends May 3.

The goal is $20,000 and $11,912 had been turned in by April 19. To date, 21 of the 28 activities and units have exceeded their share of the goal, according to a campaign spokesman.

Several large units are still in the process of collecting donations and so far haven't turned in their contributions to the AER office at the Welcome Center. When they do, the United States Army Infantry Center (USAIC) project officer is confident that the fund drive goal will be attained.

President Sets Observance

With the unification of the U.S. Armed Forces in 1947, efforts were made to consolidate the separate observances of Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force Days which were held on April 6, October 27, November 10, and September 18, respectively.

However, it was not until August 31, 1949, that Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson announced, with the approval of President Harry S. Truman, that "the third Saturday in May is to be designated 'Armed Forces Day'." Then, on February 28, 1950, President Truman issued a Presidential Proclamation proclaiming Saturday, May 20, 1950, as the first Armed Forces Day.

Since then, each succeeding President has reaffirmed by Presidential Proclamation the third Saturday of May as Armed Forces Day. During this Bicentennial year, the observance has been extended to Armed Forces Week, May 8-15.

Youth Center to stage open house

Make this Sunday a family afternoon! Plan to attend the Youth Center Open House 2-4 p.m. on April 25 in Bldg. 1054 behind Tot Town.

You will be able to learn about the Summer Program being planned to help keep our Ft. Benning youth happy and busy this summer. A variety of classes and activities will be offered for the kids ages six to 19 years of age.

The Open House is being hosted by the Ad Hoc Committee for Youth Activities. This committee is made up of parents from the different post housing areas and a representative from each of the Youth Activity Programs, Wives' Clubs and Community Life Centers. LTC Jack Barham is the Committee Chairman and will be at the Open House to welcome you. Throughout the afternoon, demonstrations of karate, judo, wrestling and gymnastics will be conducted.

The Girl Scouts, Roy Scouts, Barracudas Swim Team, Judo Club, Red Cross and 4-H will be present and looking forward to talking with families about their programs. All of these groups will be active through the Summer months.

Each year the Dependent Youth Activities, which is a branch of Recreation Services, offers a variety of classes and activities. Only if enough interest is shown, can these be included in the program. So — please attend the Open House on Sunday and support the Youth Program.

Volunteers will be needed this Summer to assist with many of the classes. If you have the time and interest, please come and talk with Mr. Tom McCall, the Youth Activities Director.

Writing to Congress: a last resort

By Gary Helmer

John P. Congressman received a letter last week from Joe Soldier at Ft. Benning. Joe explained to the congressman that he is tired of eating roast beef at his unit's mess facility.

According to Joe, the mess hall serves roast beef at least four times a week. Joe is mad and wants action immediately.

John Congressman forwards the letter to the Office of the Chief of Legislative Liaison, (OCLL) Department of the Army because John must know the complete story before he can take action, if any.

The OCLL will then forward the inquiry to the AG's Congressional Liaison Representative (CLR) at Benning who will follow through on the investigation as to whether or not Joe's allegations are warranted.

Ann Garrett, Ft. Benning's CLR, explained that this particular case is factual and that she has handled instances like this on more than one occasion.

"After I receive an inquiry from OCLL such as this one, I would first determine the individual's particular unit. My next step would be to contact the Food Service Representative (FSR) through the commander of that unit."

She commented further, "It is then the FSR's responsibility to determine whether or not a violation has actually taken place. I must explain we have yet to discover a violation of this nature, and if a violation did occur, the FSR would correct it on the spot."

The FSR would then reply to his commander explaining his findings in the matter and any actions taken. The commander reviews the reported action taken, counsels the soldier accordingly, and submits a proposed reply for the member of Congress to the AG. Mrs. Garrett forwards Ft. Benning's reply to OCLL, who in turn contacts the congressman involved. John P. must then send his findings, and advice if any, to Joe the soldier.

The question is, did Joe's problem necessitate an investigation at the congressional level? Obviously the answer is no.

Joe, had he utilized his chain-of-command, could very easily have had his problem solved at a lower level and possibly a lot quicker.

This brings us to an interesting point.

"The majority of congressionals that we handle here are from individuals who, for one reason or another, simply refuse to use their chain-of-command," said Mr. Garrett. "They do not realize that nine times out of 10 they could get their problem solved or be directed to appropriate solutions at the company or unit level."

She added, "We must remember that it is Joe's inalienable right to write his congressman if he deems it necessary and that no reprisals will be taken against him if he decides to take this course. But Joe, on the other hand, must remember that congressmen cannot work miracles, they cannot work outside of regulations and that in most cases Joe would get an identical answer had he stayed at a local level rather than go the congressional route."

Although most congressionals are unnecessary, a few cases, on the other hand, are very justifiable. For instance, in cases where individuals may refuse or simply neglect to write home and tell the family how he or she is doing. Efforts by the family through commanding officers, etc. have failed to net results so the family becomes a third party and decides to write Joe's congressman. Certainly Joe is going to hear about it and the reasons for Joe's lack of communication will, more than likely, be known.

Not all problems result in the individuals negligence.

"Some," says Mrs. Garrett, "are caused indirectly by the individuals chain-of-command. A lot of times a person may present his problem through the proper channels and then perhaps never hear anymore about it, or maybe he gets an unsatisfactory answer. The person may then become frustrated and say the heck with it and write his congressman."

"The list of types of inquiries we handle is a mile long," states Mrs. Garrett. "They range from hardship discharges, pay and allowance problems, to maltreatment and poor condition grievances."

"We are always receptive to congressional inquiries," Mrs. Garrett says, but emphasized the fact that "before an individual decides to write his congressman, he should attempt to receive an answer through his chain-of-command."

'A Wac
is still a Wac'

A Wac is still a Wac, according to the Director of the Women's Army Corps.

BG Mary E. Clark, the top ranking Wac in the Army, said that "the Women's Army Corps was established by law and won't be abolished until the law is changed."

The WAC general field questions from a cross section of Ft. Lee soldiers following her address to the graduates of a Quartermaster officer basic course.

She answered "yes" when asked was it still proper to call women soldiers Wacs. However she cautioned against using the term in a derogatory sense. "That would be an injustice to many women vets who have made the Corps what it is today. Believe it or not, there were about 100,000 women in the Army at the end of World War II."

Other questions — and her answers — included:

Q: Why can't women soldiers wear earrings while in uniform?

A: That policy is going to stay as it's been since the Corps was founded 34 years ago. You can wear them to bed if you want. But earrings are not meant to be worn with the Army uniform.

Q: Why do women have male drill instructors (DIs) in basic training while men don't have female DIs?

A: We simply don't have enough Wac drill sergeants to go around and male trainees haven't been asking for female DIs. But I do know a lot of women soldiers who would like to instruct a male training unit. They would probably be tougher than a lot of men.

Q: Why do women need a high school diploma to enlist and men don't.

A: The Army is definitely shooting for higher quality. We have never had any trouble getting women with diplomas. But there simply are not enough male graduates willing to enlist.

Q: Why do women's uniforms cost more to replace than men's?

A: The more you buy of something, the less it costs. There are only 40,000 or so Wacs and 600,000 or so male soldiers. The women's clothing bag costs almost $100 more.

Q: What about hair policy for women.

A: I foresee no changes in that area. It can be any style (except the "corn row" which she later explained has never been allowed) as long as it is off the collar and the hat fits correctly over it.

We like to see women do their best but they don't have to look or act like men to be good soldiers in the U. S. Army. (ANF)

Safety now before it's too late

Only last week, a soldier discovered to be operating a motorcycle without a registration decal at a battalion POV Post Decal Checkpoint. His commander called the man to his office, and on further examination, found that the soldier did not have a Georgia motorcycle license and had not attended a defensive driving course. The commander ordered the soldier not to ride any motorcycle again on Ft. Benning until he had these two things accomplished and had registered the motorcycle on post.

The individual did not accomplish these two tasks. The next week, when the soldier was assigned to guard duty, the duty officer issued orders to all guards that POV's would not be used during their tour of duty. Even though a guard vehicle was provided for his use, the soldier chose to ride the motorcycle, against the orders of two supervisors who were attempting to safeguard his life.

At 2 p.m. that afternoon, this man on his motorcycle attempted to pass, at high speed, the guard vehicle on the way to his guard post. He lost control of the motorcycle, scraped a tree on the left side of his vehicle and tore his leg off at the knee. His commander was present in the recovery room when the soldier awoke from the amputation.

A motorcycle can be one of life's greatest pleasures, or one of its worst tragedies. Negligence on your part, or carelessness by another driver on the road could lead to serious injury or death.

As a member of the Armed Forces of the United States, some of the responsibility for your safety is placed on your commander as well as you. The Ft. Benning vehicle registration system provides an adequate control for you and your supervisor to insure that you are properly licensed, trained, and are operating a safe motor vehicle. Your commander will check and help you register your vehicle on post, however, his responsibility hinges on your responsibility to prepare yourself and your vehicle. This preparation should include a valid state license for whatever type vehicle you wish to operate, attendance at a defensive driving course, and for your vehicle, a valid state inspection sticker.

The culmination of this preparedness, together with the proof of your ownership of the vehicle, is the issuance of the post registration decal and the assurance to you and your commander that you are safeguarded to the maximum for operation on the road. Failure to achieve anyone of these steps can ruin your life. You must help yourself and your commander in the registration effort or the result could be similar to the sad and tragic accident recounted here.

Can you take this same chance? Attend required schools. Register your vehicle! It's your life that hangs in the balance!

Protestants plan spring retreat

One of the most significant programs of this year's Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC) will be the all day Spring Retreat to be held at the Main Post Protestant Chapel Annex on Wednesday, April 28.

The Retreat program, entitled "Dwelling in the Secret Place," will be led by Dr. Paul Johnian and Mona Johnian of Auburn, Ala. Dr. Johnian is a concert violinist and conductor of the Auburn Symphony Orchestra. He is a Professor of Music at Auburn University. Mrs. Johnian is an artist, composer and author. Her latest book is "The Cattle on a Thousand Hills." They are the parents of three children. At the present time Dr. and Mrs. Johnian spend much of their time ministering through music and teaching the Word of God.

The day will be divided into three sessions. The first session, "Personal Fellowship With God," will be from 9:30-11:30, followed by a salad luncheon. The afternoon session dealing with "The Holy Spirit Today" is scheduled from 12:30-2:30. The evening session, "Focusing on The Christian Family: The Role of Christian Men and Women," will be from 7:00-9:30. Husbands are urged to attend the evening session.

Operation Brotherhood

By Joe Duggan

"Operation Brotherhood," an innovative human relations program instituted by the 197th Inf Bde, began last Friday with a seminar presented to senior class students at Baker High School.

Race Relations/Equal Opportunity Office of the 197th is a three-phased program. Phase I, an introduction/orientation phase, consists of a briefing given to all personnel newly assigned to the 197th by COL Fletcher K. Ware Jr., the brigade commander.

Phase II, the training and education portion of the program, stresses the improvement of human relations within the 197th and the surrounding community through small group seminars and classes where an exchange of ideas takes place. Through these interpersonal encounters, a better understanding develops between people of different ethnic backgrounds.

Phase III, the social actions phase, is a non-traditional approach designed to provide a social activity where interpersonal encounters are maximized. Some activities which are being planned are rock concerts, athletic events, and ethnic food nights in the dining facilities, along with visits to various civilian institutions.

Mrs. Effie J. Reld, director of ethnic studies at Baker High School and coordinator for the "Operation Brotherhood" program at Baker, stated, "This new program is extremely rewarding to our students. The experience and expertise of instructors like SSG James L. Moore and 1LT Jesse C. Gonzalez is invaluable as a resource for our study of human relations."

The instructors from the 197th are equally as enthusiastic. "We learn as much from these young people as they learn from us," said LT Gonzalez. "It's a real experience."

CPT Steve Sullivan, RR/EO officer for the brigade stated, "Problems in human relations do not start in the classroom and the final answers are seldom found there. The formal education portion of 'Operation Brotherhood' is extremely important, but the ultimate goal of the program is a climate of brotherhood and cooperation directed toward all areas of common interest and achievement."

COL Fletcher K. Ware Jr., originator of the "Operation Brotherhood" Program, hopes to expand it to encompass as much of the civilian community as possible. Any school or group desiring further information should contact the Race Relations/Equal Opportunity Office of the 197th Inf Bde at 544-2302.

Ft. Benning reunites WAC, husband

By Bob Matteson

"I'm not going to remind you again. Change the air filter!" PFC Yvonne Alexander tells her husband PVT Frank Alexander while inspecting the family car. PFC Alexander was recently assigned as a mechanic with the 197th Spt Bn, 197th Inf Bde. (Photo by Bob Matteson)

The traditionally all male atmosphere of the motor pool was shattered last week when PFC Yvonne Alexander reported for duty as a mechanic for Co. C, 197th Spt. Bn., 197th Inf Bde.

How PFC Alexander, an attractive 20-year-old native of Birmingham, Ala., came to join the Army and the brigade is just one part of an interesting story. It seems that the old saying "love conquers all" is as true today as in days past.

Due to the situation in the civilian job market last year Yvonne decided to enlist in the Army in November. Within a week her fiancé followed her into the Army. Both went to basic training at Ft. Jackson, S.C., where they were able to see each other. It was during their mid cycle break when they decided to get married.

When Yvonne learned, after two months of separation while in AIT, that her husband Frank was being stationed at Ft. Benning, she applied for duty here and the two were reunited.

"I was interested in mechanics before I came in," said Yvonne, who completed AIT as a wheeled vehicle mechanic while at Ft. Jackson, "but I didn't have a father to show me how things worked." In AIT Yvonne learned the essentials needed for working on 1/4-ton and 2 1/2-ton trucks as well as the electrical test equipment currently being used in the Army. "I think that I'll be an asset in the motor pool because most of the men aren't familiar with equipment I learned to use."

According to 2LT. McDonald also of Co C, "Being a mechanic isn't what you would expect a woman to do conventionally, but I found PFC Alexander very anxious to learn the job she was trained for. She doesn't seem to have any qualms about doing any particular job. I expect her to be a match for any of the men with time. I'm sure this will happen when she gets some more of the procedures down."

Her husband, a medic with the 690th Med. Co., 34th Med Bn., wasn't at all surprised when his wife told him that she was enlisting in the Army to be a mechanic. "It didn't come as a surprise because Yvonne has always been interested in how things work."

Both Yvonne and Frank have similar ideas about staying in the Army. "For us it all depends on whether or not we can get into OCS and what the Army will be like a few years from now".

CBers fight crime

Ft. Benning is very fortunate to recently add approximately 500 to 700 new eyes to the post's crime prevention effort.

During the past week, Benning citizen ban radio operators have put hundreds of off duty man-hours at all hours of the day and night into assisting the military police in stopping crime. They have night-time stakeouts. They roll on every corner and virtually every street on the installation. The CBers range from report crimes immediately. So, if you feel dependents to civilian employes, from privates to colonels.

Law enforcement briefings tell them what to look for. A CB on the MP desk lets them criminal ranks, think twice. Someone might be watching.

Teamwork: the artilleryman's target

By C. B. Hoover

Whether it is a baseball pitcher throwing a strike across the plate or a shortstop cutting off a possible winning run, both take practice and good team work. Hurling a 105mm artillery round over 6,500 meters down range and hitting the target also takes practice and team work.

The ball club starts training well before the first game of the season and warms up before a game to better their chances of winning. The men of the 2/10th FA along with the rest of the 197th Inf Bde started training over three years ago when the brigade became a STRAF unit and have continued so that the unit and the Army can maintain a constant vigil and are prepared to win on the battlefield of the future.

To enhance their ability to win a warm up session for the men of the 2/10th FA was conducted for two weeks with the game being played last week when they took to the field in a Fire Direction Field Training Exercise (FTX).

The purpose of the FTX was to validate the previous two weeks of training where each section, such as the fire direction center, survey, forward observers and base piece howitzer trained separately. Emphasis was placed on correcting any errors and make on the spot corrections.

"This unit has a very unique advantage over some of the other units in the brigade," commented CPT John Griffen, assistant S-3. "We have the capability of confirming the unit's training as soon as the unit conducts a live fire mission on an FTX like this. Either it's right or wrong, when it comes to putting a round on target. There is no in-between."

AUSA defends salary, benefits

In a comprehensive, hard-hitting report issued April 8 (copies are available at the Ft. Benning Information Office), the Association of the United States Army strongly criticized the piecemeal efforts under way on many fronts to reduce or eliminate many military pay and benefit programs.

In its paper, "Guns and Oleo: The Changing Quality of Service Life," AUSA echoes Secretary of the Army Martin R. Hoffmann's concern with recent actions to reduce military compensation as damaging not only to the military man himself, but also to his belief in the institution's commitment to his welfare.

While acknowledging that all news about benefits is not bad, and that the same agencies responsible for most of the initiatives which will reduce compensation have also in recent years added some benefits, the majority of the paper is devoted to the discussion of the cuts issues that have been or are being made.

On the often disputed issue of pay comparability, AUSA says doubt exists because "there is no rational way to measure it . . . There is little that is comparable between military and civilian life." AUSA also dismisses the widespread notion that military compensation is the driving force behind increased military costs, saying that studies indicate that "prices of things, not military compensation" are the primary cause of today's increases. AUSA points out that the cost of military manpower in constant (deflated) dollars since 1972 have increased at a rate of five per cent a year as opposed to "things" which have risen by 15 per cent annually.

The paper concludes that "the most illogical aspect of the entire piecemeal attack is the lack of a coordinated approach." It urges that, if some cuts are necessary, proposed changes to military pay and benefits await the results of studies by the Defense Manpower Commission and the Quadrennial Military Compensation Reviews Board. "Their recommendations will have the advantage of detailed, expert study of the entire picture and, in addition, will have the benefit of consideration by peers and therefore should be more acceptable to the military man," AUSA says.

Vessel to dock for bicentennial

By Betty Zimmerman

The SERGEANT FLOYD, a bicentennial vessel built by the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, will be in Columbus April 23-25.

The vessel will dock at the city's municipal marina behind the old Ironworks Building at 12:30 p.m., where a welcoming committee will hold appropriate ceremonies.

The original SERGEANT FLOYD was launched on May 31, 1932. It was built to inspect flood control structures, tow barge construction plants, tow dredges and reset channel buoys.

The towboat will be open to the public from 3 to 7 p.m. on Friday; from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday; and from 12 noon to 7 p.m. on Sunday. There is no charge for touring the boat or for viewing the bicentennial exhibits aboard it.

Exercise prepares 2/69th for ARTEP

"Fire" commands 2LT Preston Mitcham, of B Co, 2d Bn, 69th Ar, as he maneuvers his platoon while the battalion trades space for time in the final phase of training in preparation for the unit's up coming ARTEP.

By Bob Matteson

The CAT (Combined Arms Team) went on the prowl last week when the 2/69th 197th Inf Bde, spearheaded a successful three-day field exercise in preparation for their upcoming ARTEP.

The 2/69th again demonstrated their tactical proficiency as a battalion. They were supported by a mechanized infantry company from the 1/58th Inf, an element from the 2/10th FA and a platoon of engineers from the 72nd Eng Co. They were tasked with occupying an assembly area, conducting day and night attacks, filling blocking positions and taking up the defensive while trading space for time.

"It was hot and dirty but it was excellent training," related MAJ James W. Ritter, battalion S-3. "It has provided the first opportunity in several months to get the entire battalion together under this type of training with infantry support."

Throughout the next night and into the morning the 2/69th successfully defended its position, but as daylight appeared, it became evident that the threat of an air strike was near. At that point the 2/69th entered into its last phase of training, a delaying operation that lasted for three hours and terminated the exercise.

AER needs $8,000

The Army Emergency Relief/Army Relief Society (AER/ARS) Campaign Fund Drive ends May 3 and the post is still $8,000 short of the $20,000 goal.

These are two worthwhile causes which benefit Army personnel and their families only.

The AER make loans and grants for emergency situations, such as loss of pay, travel expenses due to family illness, etc. Repayment of loans is by allotment without interest.

The ARS renders financial assistance to widows and orphans of Regular Army personnel, while the AER is charged with helping members of the Army on active duty and their dependents, certain classes of Army retired personnel and their dependents and other dependents of Army personnel missing in action.

All personnel desiring to help Ft. Benning reach its goal should contribute now through the unit representative, a drive spokesman said.

NOW, THEREFORE, I do hereby proclaim Saturday, May 1, 1976, as Law Day, U.S.A and call upon all soldiers, civilian employees, dependent families and friends of Fort Benning to commemorate the past, celebrate the present and demonstrate this faith in our nation's future.

34th Med brings Easter to children

By Jim Wilbert

Through the efforts of SP5 Rosa Allen and the Race Relations section of the 34th Med Bn, "Operation: Easter Bunny" was brought to a most successful conclusion April 17.

Working with the post ACS special

Toparcean Co A, Hq Cmd.

The barbecue, with SFC Felix Miranda as chief cook, was well received by all attendees. The climax to the afternoon's activities was the traditional egg hunt, after which each child received an Easter basket with all the necessary ingredients.

COMPACT means inprocessing ease

By James Wyatt

Thanks to COMPACT, inprocessing is no longer a drag for incoming permanent party personnel.

COMPACT is the Consolidated Military Personnel Activity located in the Building 83 complex. Here, a consolidated personnel-finance-education-safety team completes incoming personnel's inprocessing within three working days, a process that used to take a week or even longer.

COMPACT works because it simplifies record keeping and limits inprocessing activities to one building in most cases.

Initially all incoming personnel are assigned to the 18th Replacement Detachment. While assigned they follow a sequence directed by a platoon sergeant. The platoon sergeant takes on the responsibility of transporting personnel between Building 2809, where they are housed and the Building 83 complex daily. They see that each individual assigned to them gets through inprocessing in the required time of three working days.

When an individual signs in, he is briefed where to obtain meals. The following morning, after an accountability formation, individuals begin the first day of inprocessing prior to reporting to the new unit.

First on the list of things to do is attending a finance briefing. The service member fills out allotments and other finance-oriented forms that either need correcting or new ones made out. During this same period the individual's records are screened and time is allotted for individuals to get their uniforms appropriately made up.

Persons with families are sent to the Housing Referral and Family Housing office for on and off post facilities available. They are also referred to the Army Community Service office for help in obtaining food and lodgings overnight.

The second day begins with more briefings followed by updating of records and obtaining assignment orders to the individuals new unit. During the afternoon hours the individual gets a final check of all forms to include the identification card. Next, a casual pay voucher is reviewed for accuracy by the service member in order that he may receive that month's pay check, to include all travel pay.

A records clerk next screens the individual's complete Military Personnel Records Jacket (MPRJ) for accuracy of all records. The clerk reviews all forms, to include orders for assignments, awards and promotions contained in the individual's file. Once this stage is completed, a management actions clerk will initiate paperwork for any missing items in the service member's file.

The second day is not complete without individual's getting a briefing from an education counselor. The counselor outlines available tests, schools and other educational matters that would benefit the service member.

The final check is for medical and dental records. These items are updated and the individual must carry them to their new unit before they are turned in at the appropriate dispensary and dental facility.

The third day of processing is the final one for most newcomers. It is basically devoted to vehicle registration or taking the Defensive Driving Class which is mandatory for vehicle operators 25 years and under. Another area that is completed on the third day is the checking for household goods and baggage at the transportation office. Once these areas are completed the individual service member signs out of the 18th AG Detachment and into his new unit.

PV2 Mike Young receives an educational briefing from Mrs. Louise Sumrall, education counselor, during inprocessing.

SP4 Ken Mosiman is assisted by SP5 Earl Newton in reviewing financial records prior to being paid at the COMPACT facility.

MOSs appraised for college credit

Are you an NCO and want to earn college credits, but don't have the time? Would you like your Army skills evaluated for advanced standing in apprenticeship programs? If your answer is "yes" read on.

The American Council of Education, through its commission on educational credit, has recently completed evaluation of 91 Army enlisted Military Occupational Specialty (MOS) classifications. Previously only formal service schools had been evaluated. The new recommendations provide recognition of learning that occurs outside the bounds of service schools, such as self-instruction, on-the-job training and work experience. Evaluations are based on the skill level of the MOS. To qualify for credit you must have an MOS evaluation score of 70 or higher on at least one evaluation.

Educational credit is recommended in four possible categories, vocational certificate, lower-division baccalaureate/associate degree, upper-division baccalaureate and graduate. In addition, some MOSs may have recommendations for advanced standing in an apprenticeship programs. Credit recommendations can be used not only for college programs and the Department of Army's Educational Equivalency Evaluations, but by apprenticeship and training directors, labor union and trade association officials and employers.

For more information stop by your servicing Education Center and talk to your counselor.

Ranges, training areas, fields, buildings and other landmarks at Ft. Benning are named for distinguished heroes. The Bayonet will spotlight these honored service members every other week. This week we honor Alvin C. York, for whom York Field in front of Infantry

Hall is named. As a corporal he took part in the Argonne-Meuse offensive and crushed a German machine gun battalion single-handed on Oct. 8, 1918. He was made a sergeant and given honors that included the Croix de Guerre and the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Green tab wear rules tightening

Fewer Army troop leaders will be wearing green tabs in the near future.

A recently approved revision to Army reg 670-5 states that after Oct. 1 distinctive green tabs that identify combat leaders may be worn only by specified leaders of category I units — those with a mission of direct combat.

Specified leaders of category II units which have a majority of category I sub elements also may wear green tabs. Category II units are those that provide nontactical support or assistance to category I units.

Specific leaders in qualifying units who may wear the green cloth loops include all commanders; deputy corps and assistant division commanders; tank commanders; and leaders of platoons, sections, squads and fire teams. Also included are command sergeants major, first sergeants and platoon sergeants.

These leaders cannot wear green tabs when reassigned from these specified positions in a qualifying organization. The new green tab wear policies will also apply to Reserves and National Guard.

Historically, green tabs have been worn to designate combat unit leaders from fire team leader to corps commander. Over the years, authorization was broadened and modified, according to DA officials, until it becomes difficult to determine what units and leaders qualified. As a result, many combat support unit leaders ended up wearing green tabs.

In addition, the term "corps level or below," which had been used as a rough dividing line between combat and support units, lost some of its meaning in 1973 when the Army made the corps both a tactical and support organization.

Basing the authority to wear green tabs on the standard Army definitions of unit categories will make it easier to determine which units and leaders qualify and will insure that the challenge of leadership in a combat unit will be properly and uniquely recognized.

Law Day activities set

Tomorrow has been designated by Congress and the President as Law Day USA. "200 Years of Liberty and Law" is the theme as Ft. Benning joins the rest of the nation in observing the 18th anniversary of Law Day USA.

The day has been set aside by Congress and by Presidential proclamation to remind Americans of the importance of the rule of law in our society and to urge citizens to settle their grievances on the basis of law.

Announcing the observance of Law Day USA at Ft. Benning, MG Willard Latham, commanding general, U.S. Army Infantry Center and Ft. Benning, noted that "We at Ft. Benning work and prepare against the day when, if freedom's bill falls due again, with God's help we may have the skill and stamina to preserve the nation and its law against whatever odds. Law Day . . . is symbolic of all the sacred things we fought for in the past, and will defend again if the need arises."

Several law activities have been conducted and tomorrow many members of the Staff Judge Advocate Office will travel to the Old Campground Area in Westville, Ga., for an all day barbeque and activities. Events include a tour of Westville, displays by local craftsmen and artisans of life in the 1850's.

Today at Fiath School, the 12 finalist eighth grade students will present their Law Day essays. Several hundred students at the six schools on post participated in the essays concerning May 1, 1976, "200 Years of Liberty and Law."

Monday, Ft. Benning lawyers met with community lawyers at the Ramada Inn, Phenix City, for a luncheon. Members of the Community Law Day committee were presented with Honorary Judge Advocate and Bicentennial Certificates of Appreciation.

Tours of the Government Center and a mock trial were held yesterday. Law Schools held breakfast for their local graduates. The Liberty Bell award was presented to an outstanding citizen based on that citizen's extraordinary contributions to a better understanding of or appreciation for the law.

Facilities limited in Korea

Non-command sponsored dependents who accompany soldiers to Korea after July 1, 1976, will not be allowed access to commissary, PX, dependent schools or other service support activities. They will continue to receive medical treatment at military hospitals, however, according to DA officials.

Non-command sponsored dependents (NSDs) already in Korea or who arrived before July 1, 1976, will get support until their sponsor's normal DEROS as long as the sponsor was present for duty before July 1, 1976.

NSDs of sponsors who had a foreign service tour extension OKd before July 1 will continue to get support until the date of the sponsor's adjusted DEROS.

The new policy will affect all service member dependents, DoD civilians and contractors, embassy staff members and all others covered by the ration control system.

DA personnel officials indicate that soldiers' orders for Korean unaccompanied-tour orders for sponsors.

Officials note that there may be exceptions to this new policy. Bona fide hardship cases will be looked at on a case-by-case basis. (ANF)

Singers And Musicians Needed

Singers and musicians are needed for Ft. Benning's spectacular bicentennial celebration on the Fourth of July.

Soldiers, dependents and civilians from the surrounding communities are being asked to volunteer to supplement at the Infantry Chorus and the 283d Army Band in providing musical backup for the torchlight parade and grand tattoo scheduled for York Field on the 4th. The Chorus hopes to have 100 voices for the occasion. The Band will grow from its present 40 members to 100.

Musicians should have their own instruments, but it is not required in all cases since a few concert musical pieces are available. They must be able to read music, however.

Singers are not required to read music.

Singers and musicians desiring to be a part of the July 4 program should contact the Ft. Benning Bicentennial Project Agency, 545-5669 or 545-5689.

The amphitheater, another of the community's Bicentennial efforts, is located at the foot of 6th Street at Front Avenue. "No Song, No Supper" was first presented in Columbus in 1830 by a troupe of theatrical performers.

Those attending the performance are invited to wear costumes of the colonial period and compete for prizes to be given to theatergoers with the best costumes.

Curfew restricts youth movement

Ft. Benning parents are being reminded that under an existing United States Army Infantry Center regulation dependents under 18 years of age are restricted in their on-post movement between midnight and five a.m.

According to a Provost Marshal's Office (PMO) Juvenile Branch spokesman, juvenile dependents must be in their quarters during curfew hours, and not on the streets unless escorted by parents, guardians or responsible adults. This is to include being at the bowling centers, theaters, and other places of entertainment on-post, the spokesman said. Exceptions to the above may be made for school, Youth Activities Center (YAC) functions and any emergency situation if the PMO is immediately notified and a proper request for exemption is made.

Any dependents found in violation of the curfew will be taken to the PMO where their parents or sponsors will be notified to report them back to their quarters. If violations by the same dependent continues, the PMO may provide evidence of misconduct on the part of the sponsor and families who reside on-post, and could result in eviction from family quarters.

Unescorted non-dependent juveniles are subject to the same restrictions as dependent youths. If they are found on-post between midnight and five a.m., the PMO is authorized to take necessary action to insure they are removed from post and delivered to their parents, a responsible parent or proper authorities.

Antidote and first aid for poisoning

• An emergency always exists if someone swallows poison. Do not delay contacting a hospital or physician to obtain advice concerning first aid materials that are not readily available. If necessary, summon police or rescue squad for assistance. Keep telephone numbers immediately available. Even after emergency measures have been taken, always consult a physician. A delayed reaction could be fatal.

• It is important to dilute or remove poisons as soon as possible. Keep Syrup of Ipecac (available from most pharmacies or poison center) in your home to induce vomiting if recommended by physician or indicated on product label. If Syrup of Ipecac is not available, try to make the patient vomit by tickling back of throat with finger, spoon or similar blunt object after giving water.

However . . .

• Vomiting is not recommended in all cases. Never induce vomiting in a patient who is unconscious or convulsing. Do not induce vomiting if swallowed substance is acidic or corrosive or petroleum distillate products.

• If poison is from a container, take the container with intact label to the medical facility treating the patient. If poisonous substance is a plant or other unlabeled substance, be prepared to identify the suspected substance. Save evidence such as portions of ingested materials from vomitus which may help identify the plant or object involved.

In the event of poisoning contact the Emergency Room at Martin Army Hospital at 544-1502 or 544-3102 immediately.

The following represent substances most frequently ingested by children, and first aid measures that may be employed until medical aid can be summoned.

WAC pantsuit update

Women MPs should be wearing the Army green pantsuit this November, one year ahead of the rest of the WACs.

Police women get top priority because of numerous year-round outdoor duties requiring wear of the green service uniform. DA officials feel the pantsuit will give women more freedom of movement when performing duties peculiar to the MPs

(making arrests, traffic control, etc.)

The Army issue suit is made of polyester-wool gabardine and must be dry cleaned. PXs will carry limited quantities of an optional wash and wear knit pantsuit this July and hope for worldwide sales by September.

Army officials say the issue pantsuit is warmer than the PX knit model. (ANF)

Jumpers complete parachute training

The thrill of sport parachuting was experienced for the first time by nine new members of the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club Saturday, April 17.

The nine new jumpers completed a one week training course that was designed to safely teach them the fundamentals of the sport and have fun doing it. Students attended classes Monday through Friday evenings until they were ready to pack the parachutes they were to jump with Saturday morning. Their reserve parachutes were packed by a federally licensed parachute rigger.

The first lift (flight) of the day took off with six of the nine students and three jumpmasters to increase the safety margin. The jumps were made successfully from the UH.1H helicopter from an altitude of 3,000 feet over Fryer Drop Zone.

After congratulations from their instructors, Ian Sutherland and Tom Carr, the new jumpers were welcomed into the club with an impromptu party.

Those of you who would like to try this thrilling sport should call Tom Carr at 561-8058 to sign up for the next class. All classes are small and students receive individual attention.

"The next class is tentatively scheduled to begin on the first week of May. The cost is $40 which includes initiation, training and the first months dues. This also entitles the new member to the use of club equipment.

The legend purrs on.

The Jaguar XJ Series has inspired legends from the beginning. One reviewer found the XJ6: "Uncannily silent, gloriously swift, and safe as houses."

Now the XJ legend is advanced by the remarkable XJ6 and the XJ12. Both sedans share the crisp XJ look and classic XJ luxury: rare natural woods, soft leathers, deep quiet. And both XJs handle in the classic Jaguar manner. Like sports cars.

The only real difference is under the hood. The XJ6 engine is the legendary Jaguar twin-overhead-cam LeMans Six. The XJ12 is a class of one, the world's only production V-12 sedan. Amazingly smooth, yet this engine displaces only 326 cubic inches, compared to American luxury V-8s that displace up to 500 cubic inches.

Drive a legend. The Jaguar XJs are waiting now.

AIT soldiers 'turn blue'

By Jerry Van Slyke

The band played and cadre and relatives sat in the bleachers and admired the khaki ranks as they passed in review.

It was a festive occasion as the first cycle (Companies A and B, 1st Bn) of AIT soldiers to arrive at the recently activated 1st AIT Bde "turned blue."

To "turn blue" denotes that the cycle has successfully completed the primary blocks of instruction in the tough, seven-week course of infantry instruction. A blue streamer placed on each company guidon indicated the change and their new status even though they will not graduate for two weeks.

The review began with COL Jack B. Farris Jr., 1st AIT Bde Commander trooping the line and affixing the blue streamers on the company guidon. The company commanders then, in turn, put streamers on the platoon guidons.

After the streamers were secured on the guidons, the Colonel addressed the assembled AIT soldiers.

"Perhaps we don't tell you this often enough," he said, "but we are very proud of you, what you have done, what you are and what you are going to be."

The Colonel went on to applaud the role of the infantry in the combined arms team and the importance of filling the ranks with quality men.

The first cycle will graduate at 10 a.m. on May 6 at Harmony Church's Dickman Field.

COL Jack B. Farris Jr., 1st AIT Bde Commander, places a blue streamer on the guidon of Co B, 1st Bn during their 'turning blue' ceremony. The commander of Co B, CPT John E. Brayshaw (L) and the 1st Bn Commander, LTC Benjamin C. Buckley observe as the first of the AIT's soldiers receive this recognition of achievement.

New officer 'dream sheet' reaching field

A new streamlined officer preference statement (DA Form 483) geared to the needs of OPMS and other developments is now reaching the field. The new single-page "dream sheet" reflects the change to a use of primary and alternate specialties which, under OPMS, have replaced branches.

The redesigned 483 simplifies the listing of geographic or duty assignment preferences and has expanded space for communicating with MILPERCEN assignment officers.

Additionally, the new form gives the officer a place to list personal desires he wants considered in his next assignment, such as dependents' ages and if the officer is renting, owns a home or lives in government quarters.

The new form is to be used as soon as it is received; the old form is obsolete. According to the reg (AR 614-100) officers are to complete a preference statement within 90 days after arriving at a new assignment and annually thereafter. Preference statements may be submitted at any time officers want to make their latest wishes and other information known to MILPERCENT. (ANF).

Harvest plan: more than vegetables

In step with the millions of Americans who are "growing their own," members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit traded their guns for rakes, hoes and rotor tillers to break ground in their community garden plot last month.

Already they are seeing the fruits of their labors.

Even a casual glimpse of the 20 individual plots reveals a wide variety of gardening tastes and techniques. SGM Roy Combs uses carpet remnants to keep moisture in the soil around his tomato plants. LTC Phil Cannella's plot is the epitome of military orderliness and neatness. Each plot has a little character all its own.

It took some real back bending to whip the garden plots into shape. After breaking up the soil with a rotor tiller, a sample of soil was taken to the University of Georgia Extension Service in Columbus where it was determined that the soil was too acid and that limestone was needed. With the lime added and grass clumps cleared, the gardening hopefuls set out seeds of everything from corn to pumpkins.

Some of the potential lucious vegetables perished in infancy succumbing to the perils of fertilizer, drought, sun, accidental drowning or one of the many creepy crawlers common to the soils of south Georgia. But many will be the center of attention of drooling admirers anxious to become acquainted.

This USAMU Action '75 Project promises to harvest community involvement and self-improvement as well as a healthy yield of delicious vegetables.

LTC Phil Cannella's first try at gardening is proving to be a great success. But not without a lot of hard work.

Cook wins award

By Jim Wilbert

In a recent "cook-off" held at Food Services Branch, SP5 Wayne L. Nunnery of the 121st Avn Co., 34th Med Bn received honors as Ft. Benning's first Chef of the Quarter.

Until recently Army cooks only competed for monthly culinary awards, in which they appeared before military questionnaire boards. The boards would quiz the cooks on various questions relating to their jobs and Army-related general knowledge subjects.

In order for cooks to win this quarterly honor, they were required to have a recommendation from their dining facility's mess steward, undertake careful planning and use a little imagination in preparing a typical Army dining facility meal. While the cooks prepared their meals, they were judged by members of the Food Service Branch.

In competing for this award, five cooks from different units prepared a baked chicken and gravy dinner. While preparing their meals, the cooks were judged on personal cleanliness, food preparation and serving and the all-important taste test. In all these categories Nunnery received maximum scores.

This is not the first award for Nunnery. He has received numerous awards, certificates of achievement and letters of appreciation for his culinary talents, including one from President Gerald R. Ford that he received during the President's visit last June.

Tank Gunnery '76--the ultimate test

By Ron Fowler

The sun beats down relentlessly but you're protected from the direct rays by 52-tons of armor but not from the heat generated from within. Sweat runs down your face and into your eyes. You're nearly water-logged by the end of the sweltering late summer day. Night falls — it's a relief from the heat but now it's the coolness of the air on your drenched and dirt laden fatigues that becomes the environmental enemy.

The mock tank battle goes on — you're fire control system malfunctions temporarily and you suffer the frustrations of knowing that if this were not a training exercise,

"Tank gunnery has to be the ultimate test, short of combat, that any tanker can go through."

you would have perished in the face of the enemy. So, you practice, rehearse and drill again and again and again, until you get it right and then once more to be sure.

Since early last week, the 2/69th Ar, 197th Inf Bde has been at it day and night preparing for their most important project of the year — Tank Gunnery '76.

"There's just one word that describes tank gunnery — hell!!! It's the ultimate test, short of combat, that any tanker can go through. It's either do or die on the firing ranges. If all systems are go, you do; if one

Junior EM get housing break

There's good news on the way for junior E-4s and their families concerning on post housing. E-4s with more than two but less than four years service who don't have a six year active duty commitment will now, according to DA officials, be on equal footing with other E-4s when it comes to post family housing.

Past policy was that soldiers with less than four years service had the lower priority for assignment to military housing. According to DA officials, these persons had virtually no chance of ever being assigned to quarters.

DA housing officials acknowledge that this change may result in longer waiting lists at some installations, however, it is a more equitable policy which will serve as an incentive to retention and will assist in the Army's recruiting effort.

Tankers from the 2/69th Ar move into a new position during their intensive training exercises in preparation for Tank Gunnery '76, their most important project of the year.

Army Chief blasts pay critics

Army Chief of Staff General Fred C. Weyand has leveled a blast at some public ideas about military life today. Speaking before an assembly of Jewish war veterans at Hollywood, FL, Weyand attacked public attitudes regarding soldiers' pay and benefits.

One such attitude, he said, is that the soldier's pay is comparable to civilian pay. Weyand said he was disturbed by "public attitudes that if you add up all the soldiers' benefits — PX, commissary and the like — American soldiers are actually overpaid."

The Army leader went on to say these attitudes are influenced by critics who use the pay of Army generals as a yardstick for comparison. Weyand said he was concerned about the 345,000 young soldiers on the other end of the pay scale from the generals.

"Young soldiers read about how well-paid they are; yet they do not have enough money to get through the month, and many of them have too much pride to take advantage of food stamps and other services," said the General.

Weyand further commended on the history of soldiers' pay. "I don't need to tell you that this country — rich as it is — has never paid the lower ranks well," he said.

Today's pay for the soldier starts at $361 a month, plus room and board, and "isn't bad money for a single young man or woman," said Weyand. But he went on to say that more of today's soldiers are not single and many are trying to support a family on their pay. In high cost of living areas such as Washington, D.C., and Hawaii, even when a soldier moonlights with two or more jobs, he may still go into debt each month, Weyand added.

The General struck at critics who label his Army pay complaints as self-serving. "I'm making a comfortable living and can look forward to a comfortable retirement." He went on to express concern for the "hundreds of thousands of soldiers who are not making a comfortable living," and stressed the needs of those with families who are "not making a living at all."

The Army chief told the veterans group that the American people must be willing to pay the price for their volunteer Army, pointing out the fact that the entire proposed defense budget amounts to only a slightly more than five per cent of the national productivity or GNP (ARNews)

Women in combat

Although military men are almost unanimously against it and current laws, regulations, and policies forbid it, there is considerable drive underway to permit women to fill combat jobs. Several bills before the Congress are so designed and passage of the Equal Rights Amendment would open the door.

Men who have experienced heavy combat are against it. They cite two main reasons, one psychological, and one physical.

The psychological reason could be summed up in the phrase, "Chivalry is not dead." "Women and children first" is still the order of the day during disasters, fires and other emergencies. Many men still give their seats to women during rush hours. Chivalry carries over to the military as demonstrated during the Tet Offensive in Vietnam when women soldiers in non-combat jobs were suddenly in the front-lines. Commanders paid special attention to their security, involving time and resources which otherwise could have been devoted to fighting the enemy.

The physical reason is exemplified by a U.S. commander in Germany who recently complained that the Army has already gone too far in opening jobs to women. He cited the inability of most women truck drivers to change tires on heavy trucks, forcing men who had other jobs to take time off to fix the tires. His inference — if they can't do the heavy work, how could they perform effectively on the battlefield?

Hanson Baldwin, the highly respected former military correspondent of the New York Times, writing in a Connecticut newspaper, carried this argument one step further. He pointed out that the credibility of deterrence of U. S. combat forces would be weakened. On reading this article, a senior Army general agreed, pointing out that, despite much publicity to the contrary, neither the Soviet or Israeli Armies use women in combat jobs.

However, as stated in a recent feature in the Washington Post, all of this discussion is premature. The answers to certain basic questions should be determined first.

Three of these questions seem obvious: (1) Do a sufficient number of physically qualified women want combat assignments: (2) If so, would it be cost-effective: (3) If so, would a combat unit composed of men and women be as combat-effective as present units?

Given today's excellent capacity to conduct the necessary research, the DoD or an equally qualified organization should be directed to conduct the necessary analyses, studies, and experiments. The results should point the way to the proper solution.

"... the world is a dangerous place..."

Earlier this week Secretary of the Army Martin R. Hoffmann released the following statement concerning the murder of two Army officers by the North Koreans:

"The brutal, premeditated murder of two American Army officers by North Korean guards at Panmunjom is a signal reminder to all who may have forgotten that the world is a dangerous place, and that there are those who regard armed violence as a viable instrument of policy.

The idea of world peace is a fragile one so long as such barbarisms are committed by nations which appear interested only in paying lip service to the peaceful resolution of differences. All Americans should be outraged at this act of senseless violence against soldiers dedicated to preserving peace in Korea. The free people of the world should take note of this atrocity, and the North Koreans should be aware that they bear responsibility for consequences arising from brutal acts of violence.

The U.S. Army mourns the loss of two of its fine, young officers; they were doing their duty. I extend heartfelt sympathy to their families and friends."

Notice to golfers

Membership rules change

Major changes in the operation of Ft. Benning's two 18-hole golf courses, primarily in membership requirements, have been announced.

As a result of an "agonizing reappraisal" of the overall financial situation, it was decided to open membership of Ft. Benning's Officers' Club Golf Course to both active duty and retired officer and enlisted personnel.

Although the golfing facility has been renamed, the "Follow Me Golf Course," it will continue to operate under the Officers' Club system. In an attempt to put the course on a break-even basis, monthly user fees have been increased to $16 and $27 for single and family membership, respectively.

Membership applications are now available for enlisted personnel at the Golf Club Pro Shop or at Bldg. 35, room 246.

Benning salutes Hispanic Americans

Throughout the world, America is known as the world's melting pot. The American people are made up of peoples from every country on earth. Each segment of our society contains a patchwork of historical, religious, and racial backgrounds.

September 13 through 20 is a week set aside to focus our attention on one of the many groups that make up America today.

Under the label "Hispanic Americans" various countries have provided the United States with the second largest ethnic minority. They are diverse—Mexican Americans, Puerto Ricans, Cubans, Filipinos, South and Central Americans and those whose forebearers trace their way back to Spain. All of them have a strong common bond, language, and to a lesser degree (with the exception of Spain) their origins in the Western Hemisphere.

Those people included in the group, Hispanic Americans, show the many facets of their background. It is a subtle mixture of the Old and New World influences, a mixture of the Native Indian and Spanish cultures. Among themselves, the Hispanic Americans are known as Chicanos, La Raza, Latinos, Hispanos, Latin Americans and Boriqueno.

It has been only recently that they have begun to reflect upon their heritage: the unity, pride and contributions that these people have made to the heritage that is America.

The week that all Americans should be celebrating, National Hispanic American Week, is designed to promote awareness of the Hispanic peoples that make up the America of today.

Every American has been taught in school that the first explorers of the continent "America" were Spanish, but what of the youngster sitting next to an Anglo son or daughter in school, or the guy in the rifle platoon, both with a Spanish sur-name? Both have a long tradition of contributions to the United States behind them. They fought in the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, both World Wars, Korea and Vietnam. Thirty-seven Hispanic Americans have received the Nation's highest award, the Medal of Honor.

Hispanic Americans have been great achievers in such diversified fields as: the arts, education, sports, labor, entertainment, government, science, religion, communications and law. These are only a few of the fields in which Hispanic Americans have made major contributions.

All Americans should be aware of the traditions, history, and contributions that Hispanic Americans have made to American culture, and by gaining this awareness they should be proud that they are a part of America.

Native Texans also defended Alamo

In front of the Texas State Capitol stands a monument listing those who died at the Alamo. Quickly to mind come the names of Travis, Bowie and Crockett—names synonymous with the heroic stand of some 180 men and women against 4,000 Mexican troops under General Santa Anna.

But all the heroes who defended the Alamo during the 13-day siege from February 23 to March 6, 1836, did not bear Anglo names. Native Texans—Mexican Americans—fought shoulder to shoulder with Anglo Americans who had joined the Texas Movement.

During the three day truce allowed by Santa Anna, those who wished to leave the Alamo were permitted free passage. Among those who were steadfast in their convictions and defense of the Alamo were Gregorio Esparza and his wife and children.

When Colonel William Travis drew a line with his sword separating those who would leave and those who would stay, Esparza crossed the line declaring, "I will stay and die fighting." Likewise, his wife insisted to "stay by your side and with our children die too."

In 1907, Enrique Esparza, son of Gregorio Esparza and the last survivor of the Alamo, recounted his parents' pledge and his own eyewitness account for the San Antonio Daily Express.

"So we stayed," recalled Enrique Esparza. "And so my father died, as he said, fighting. He struck down one of his foes as he fell in the heap of slain."

At 83 years of age, Esparza recalled, "Even child as I was I could not help but feel inspired by the bravery of the heroes about me."

"When the end came, it was at night. All had been dark and quiet for many hours . . . suddenly there was a terrible din. Cannon boomed. Their shot crashed through the doors and windows and the breeches in the walls. Then men rushed in on us. They swarmed among us and over us. They fired on us in volleys. They struck us down with their escopetas. In the dark our men groped and grasped the throats of our foemen and buried their knives into their hearts. My father's body was lying near the cannon which he had tended. My mother with my baby sister was kneeling beside it. My brothers and I were close to her."

The surviving women and children were taken prisoners and subsequently released. Gregorio Esparza's body was recovered by his brother, a member of Santa Anna's army, and buried.

Although neglected until recently in historical accounts, Gregorio Esparza is honored today with a school in San Antonio, Texas, bearing his name, and with a carved memorial which commemorates him and all the heroes at the Alamo.

When placed in its true historical perspective, the battle cry, "Remember the Alamo!" refrains, "Remember all the Americans who fought and died there."

EPMS:

A way to the top

In the summer of 1973, Army Chief of Staff General Creighton W. Abrams directed a major review be conducted of the Army's system for enlisted professional development.

Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) and the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center (MILPERCEN) were tasked to form a partnership for the study.

Their mission was to mold existing programs of training, evaluation, classification and promotion into an overall integrated system.

A steering committee of general officers was named to oversee the project. The officers represented personnel, operations, force development, reserve components, major commands and other agencies with interest in particular career fields.

The Sergeant Major of the Army was invited to sit as a member of the committee.

This is how the Enlisted Personnel Management System (EPMS) was born.

Editor's Note: The following article is the first in a series designed to explain what EPMS is all about and what it is doing for the professional soldier.

Not a cure-all -- not a make-work paper drill

Down at the squad level, soldiers call it bustin' your hump when they drop everything to satisfy some last minute, off-the-wall requirement.

In some high level commands they call it crashing.

Some highfalutin experts call it exceeding optimal output within a minimal time-frame.

What ever you want to call it, it still means jumping through your butt.

That's what the Army has been doing with a program called the Enlisted Personnel Management System. EPMS, for short.

EPMS is probably the most talked about, least understood program in the Army. Soldiers condemn it and abuse it. Everything that is wrong in the Army, they say, is the fault of EPMS.

EPMS Blamed

"Back in brown shoe Army days we never had these problems," says three-up-and-three-down.

What he fails to add is that in brown shoe days it was not uncommon for a soldier to wait five or more years to make PFC. A DA SCENE reporter recently spent the better part of a day talking with a soldier who remembers brown shoe days. He is Don Weber, a gray-around-the-temple and flecked-across-the-top sergeant major. He has a career in Army personnel management under his belt. He says home is Louisville, Ohio.

"Let's get one thing straight at the beginning," Weber says. "EPMS is not a cure-all for the ills of troop management, nor is it a make-work exercise for paper-pushers."

"EPMS is simply a professional program to allow a soldier to move from the bottom to the top in a job he or she likes," Weber begins and then interrupts himself to add, "it's got some bugs in it, but when you're trying to paint a moving train there are bound to be problems."

The moving train Weber refers to was the Army's mission in the mid-1960s. The war in Vietnam was demanding more men and equipment. The readiness of forces in Europe and Korea could not slacken. The Army was bustin' its hump without the benefit of all out mobilization.

The train was moving and with it the unavoidable jostling, switching, sidetracking and high-balling to support the mission.

Said another way, turbulence with a capital T.

Like Painting a Moving Train

During the next five years, the Army developed personnel program after program. None worked to satisfaction. Army strength was dropping like a barometer before a tornado — from 1.5 million to about 800,000.

The Vietnam build-up reached high gear in 1968. More than 1.5 million men and women were in the Army. It was a moving train indeed when Department of Defense (DoD) planners, charged with looking to future needs, asked the Army for a long-range soldier management plan.

Lay it out in terms of dollars and people, DoD said.

How do you treat a patient you can't hold still?

For personnel and training planners and specialists, it was a band-aid and aspirin approach when major surgery was necessary.

When the Vietnam war ended in 1973, sonnel Management System. EPMS, for short.

EPMS is probably the most talked about, least understood program in the Army. Soldiers condemn it and abuse it. Everything that is wrong in the Army, they say, is the fault of EPMS.

EPMS Blamed

"Back in brown shoe Army days we never had these problems," says three-up-and-three-down.

DoD reminded the Army about the long-range soldier management plan.

Abrams: Do It!
GEN Creighton W. Abrams, Army chief of staff, translated the requirement into two words: do it!

The Chief of Staff had another idea, too, one which would impact on EPMS — the 16 division force.

These two requirements, like epoxy glue, were the catalysts for EPMS.

Lateral NCO/Specialist conversions under EPMS

A realignment of grades and skill levels is taking place under the Enlisted Personnel Management System (EPMS) to give soldiers better career progression. This realignment will also conform with a revised Standards of Grade Authorization (SGA), according to MILPERCEN officials.

Since the SGA, which is set by law, does not permit both NCO and specialist ranks in the same MOS and skill level, some specialists will be converted laterally to NCO grades under EPMS while some NCOs will be converted to specialists.

The driving factor in determining whether NCOs or specialists should be authorized is the number of positions in the MOS and skill level which require leadership, supervisory or managerial responsibilities.

These conversions are based on Armywide MOS structure evaluations. MILPERCEN officials note that these evaluations are not a reflection on the soldier's manner of performance nor are they a factor in his or her professional development.

As an exception to the SGA's requirements, E-4s whose MOSs are under EPMS still may be appointed as corporals even though PMOS structures do not include NCOs in grade E-4 at the soldier's skill level. In this case, the soldier must have served successfully in the NCO position for at least 60 days, have the recommendation of his or her immediate commander, and meet the other prerequisites outlined in paragraph 7-53 of AR 600-200. This paragraph spells out the policies and procedures pertaining to lateral appointments and will be revised in the near future to reflect policies which pertain to the conversion of personnel under EPMS, MILPERCEN officials say. # "Four billion hotdogs, please-- hold onions on 900 million!"

During the peak summer months between Memorial Day and Labor Day, Americans eat more than 4.9 billion hot dogs. And with the exception of Mom and apple pie, there is probably no institution so firmly established as America's favorite sausage.

Like most other American institutions, including Mom and apple pie, the hot dog immigrated to America with the immigrants. It was supposedly originated by a 17th century butcher named Johann Georg Lahner who lived in central Germany. A German-American butcher, Charles Feltman, is credited with commercially introducing the frankfurter and roll in 1865 at a Coney Island, N.Y. beer garden. They sold for the incredibly high price, in that day, of 10 cents.

Here are some other facts about this American institution:

- Daily production in the United States is more than 41.5 million hot dogs, many of which are served in U.S. and overseas military dining halls, snack bars, and cafeterias.

- The popular foot-long hot dog will have to become known as the 30.48-centimeter-weiner when full-scale conversion to the metric system is completed in the United States.

- Figuratively speaking, enough hot dogs are produced in the United States every year to reach to the moon and back two-and-a-half times. Moreover, hot dogs were a regular menu item for each of the Apollo flights and for the Skylab missions; astronauts have considered them a favorite in-flight meal.

- In 1975, hot dog consumption was 15.1 billion, or 77 frankfurters per person, and a 10 per cent increase for 1976 is predicted by the year's end. So, if you haven't eaten your 84.7 hot dogs by Labor Day, just keep on eating—most other Americans will. The ease and speed of preparation, in addition to their economy, make hot dogs a favorite year-round fast-food snack.

Skydiving exhibition: one of many attractions

Nine members of the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club will put on a skydiving show immediately following the Rangers in Action demonstration at the annual AUSA Picnic at 12:30 pm on September 18th.

The first pass will drop 1SG Ripcord Riley at 3,500 feet. He will delay opening his parachute for 10 seconds and then descend to about 25 feet above the water where he will shed his chute and harness and intentionally land in the water.

Three members, including retired SGM Frank Norbury, will exit the helicopter at 5,500 feet on the second pass. They will stack-up in the air and then attempt to make standing landings on a small disk in the center of the hand-to-hand combat pit at Victory Pond.

The third pass will feature an exciting "break-away" by 1SG Richard Gibbs, ANCOES Company commander. He will jump from 5,500 feet wearing three parachutes. At approximately 3,500 feet he will open his first chute; then at 2,000 feet, he will discard this parachute and open the second one. The third chute is his reserve - just in case the second one fails.

Four jumpers, all wearing square parachutes, will attempt a four-man star on the final pass exiting from 7,500 feet. MAJ (ret.) Johnny Johnson, CPT Dave Grieger (Club President), CPT Ron Clayton and SSG Bill Mathews will also try to land in the pit which is surrounded by bleachers, water, poles, cables and the rappelling tower.

Parachute Club who will provide exciting entertainment at the annual AUSA picnic September 18th.

"Have a nice trip?" -- "No thanks, just had one"

At the turn of the 17th century, Isaac Newton formulated the laws of gravitation. Since that time, many people either appear to disbelieve his findings or feel that it's necessary to re-prove them accidentally.

The truth of the matter is everyone is apt to take a fall if the circumstances are right or wrong (depending on how you look at it). Accidental falls occur in offices, at home and in other indoor work areas.

The victims are not clowns, they are not stupid, they may be careless but more often than not, they are 'set-up' by someone else's carelessness.

Don't let falls put you down

Here are some simple hazards that caused great injury:

- A long telephone cord dangling from a desk to office floor. A secretary tripped on it, fell forward, twisted her foot severely and struck her head on a nearby file case. Thirty-four work days were lost.

- A young pregnant mother placed a broom handle against a cabinet. She picked up a glass container, and as she moved, she bumped the cabinet causing the broom handle to fall, tripping her. She fell to the floor striking the glass container with her face and head. Serious face cuts, loss of one eye and a deep scalp cut put her out of action for three weeks.

It is hazardous to allow a loose phone or electric cord to lie on the floor where it can trap a person's feet. Stepping on a cord can cause it to rotate and result in a slip or fall. People see these hazards but do nothing to clear them up. If there is a chance that someone can fall over, or be tripped by something, it will not be long before the chance becomes a reality. The first accident occurred because someone allowed a loose cord to exist, the second occurred because the victim did not place the broom handle where it could not fall and inadvertently trip her.

SPEED!!

Speed is the factor that causes so many highway accidents is also a major contributing factor to indoor falling accidents. Note the following:

- A secretary, in a hurry to deliver a report to her boss, did not notice that her lower left hand desk drawer was open. In her haste, she tripped over it and fell against a typewriter table. Result: left elbow chipped, left hip bruised, two weeks off from work.

- A young man rushing into office building, ran for the elevator, turned his ankle on a step fracturing the left ankle and chipped a bone in his knee.

We all want things done promptly but not at the expense of broken bones, chipped elbows, head injuries, etc. Slips and falls are responsible for half of all disabling injuries to office workers, housewives, store clerks, etc. Potential hazards can exist anywhere, but they become injury-causing hazards when we "make haste", plunge forward without due care of where we are going. Don't rush through doorways, around corners, through hallways or up and down stairs. No job is so urgent that you can afford to get hurt.

Remember an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, what goes up must come down — don't let it be you.

The ultimate test

thing is messed up, one setting out of kilter, you die. It's that simple." Those were the words spoken by CPL Robert LeClerc of the 2/69th Ar last week during tank tables I though III conducted at Brinson Range.

Tables I and II of the exercise consisted of boresighting and zeroing the 7.62mm coaxial mounted machine gun on a stationary target at a range of 200 ft. Table III consisted of engaging moving targets with the machinegun at the same distance.

"We've been working our tails off out here," stated CPL Henry Wright. "But it's been worth it. It takes hard work like this to accomplish our missions. We'll be able to see just how much work we've accomplished out here when it comes time for tank table VIII at Ft. Stewart later this year."

"The first three tank tables are just a stepping stone to our final test," concluded CPL Jody Foy of the 2/69th. "It's a challenge to each and everyone of us out here, a challenge that we have no choice but to meet."

Standard Stakes Competition winners selected

The reflection of determination on each soldier's face finally faded from view last week as the winners of the 197th Inf Bde's Standard Stakes Competition were announced.

After three days of teeth gnashing exertion, the men of the 1st Plt, Co C, 1/58th Inf with sweat still flowing down their smiling faces marched forward to receive the highly coveted trophy honoring them as the 197th Bde's best overall platoon.

Not to be completely outdone by the Infantry, the cannoneers from the 2d Howitzer Section, 1st Plt, Btry C, 210th FA moved out to accept the awards for the best overall section and the most physically fit. Then the men of the 2nd Sec joined the rest of the platoon as their comrades moved out to receive the trophy for the most physically fit platoon in the 197th.

"It was nice for the platoon to win the award of the best in the brigade. However I think what really counts is the fact that during this test we could put into practice what we have learned," commented SP4 Jerry Rutlege, a team leader in the 1st Plt, 1/58th Inf following the awards parade.

The competition included testing in First Aid, camouflage, preparation of fighting positions, intelligence reporting, radio and telephone procedures, map reading and land navigation just to mention a few.

Some of the physical requirements were the 5-mile run which had to be completed in 50-minutes, and the Army Physical Fitness Test where each soldier had to score a minimum of 400 out of a possible 500 points.

"We were very fortunate," stated 2LT Jerry Johnson, platoon leader in the 1/58th Inf. "We had over two weeks to prepare for the competition. There was very little that was in question. We sized up the situation and programmed our training around it."

There may have been very little change for the men of the 1/58th Inf, but for the soldiers in the 2/20th FA it was something different.

"We shoot 105mm howitzers," stated SP4 Melvin Caruthers, assistant section leader, 2d Howitzer Section, Btry C, 2/10th FA. "Therefore we had to familiarize ourselves with the M-16 rifle even more to beat the infantry. This took up some of our spare time, but I think it was all worth while. We proved we could do just as good a job at being an Infantryman as the Infantry did."

SP4 Rutlege concluded, "I was in Korea before coming to the brigade. I think the way things are going there, there couldn't be any better training going on here!"

Youth Activities Center has it all

Susan Vatrai works on her figurine in ceramics class at the Youth Activities Center. Many new classes are being conducted in the expanded arts and crafts program.

By Betty Zimmerman

"Busy kids are less apt to get in trouble than bored young people with a lot of time on their hands," reasoned SFC Jimmy Russell, acting director of the Youth Activities Center (YAC).

The Dependent Youth Activities (DYA), under the direction of Mr. Tom McCall, is rejuvenating its entire program in an all-out effort to provide Ft. Benning youth with organized activities to fill their spare time and to establish the finest youth program in the Army.

Mrs. Bert Innis has been hired to run a new Arts and Crafts program. The response to her enthusiasm has been so good that the club is expanding the crafts room. So far, instruction and materials are available in leatherwork, string art, painting, clay modeling, decoupage, ceramics and macrame. More hobbies will be added as funding permits.

The social program is also being updated. Trips to rock concerts in Atlanta highlight the calendar. Once a month a live band provides dancing music for the teenagers, and record hops are held for the pre-teens. Other trips are made to places like Six Flags, Callaway Gardens and the Skate Center. Competitions are held in pool, ping-pong and cards.

On an average day, 600 young people are availing themselves of the YAC facilities. The snack bar alone netted a profit of $600 last month. The dances are drawing 100 to 150 teenagers and 50 to 70 pre-teens. All proceeds go right back into DYA funds.

Day camps were programmed this summer for 6 to 12-year olds with different age groups attending two-week sessions. A total of 250 children took part in these classes.

Buying a home, part 4

What are 'closing' fees?

When it comes time to buy a new home, you will probably have to go to a "settlement" or "closing" — a legal procedure that marks the instant at which ownership passes to you. Often "closings" are remembered for the number of technical documents that have to be signed and the fees that have to be paid. But "closings" do not have to be agonizing if you know what to expect. The National Association of Home Builders has compiled this list of most common "closing" fees:

- Appraisal fee — This charge is to pay for the appraisal of your property. This appraisal is usually necessary for a mortgage, as the loan is figured by the appraised value of the property, regardless of how much you think it is worth.

- Credit report — Often you have to pay a fee to an independent commercial credit reporting agency to provide the mortgage lender with your credit history.

- Mortgage origination service fee — This compensates the bank or lending institution for its expenses in making the loan (such as processing the mortgage application) and is usually a small percentage of the face value of the mortgage.

- Property survey — The lender may require a survey of your new property's boundaries by a licensed civil engineer or surveyor to assure property placement and avoid possible encroachments on the land.

- Title examination fee — To establish the right of the seller to sell the property to you, a title company or lawyer often will be commissioned to search through records of previous ownership and sale. The cost of this "search" will be passed on to you

- Title insurance premium — Many lenders require a title insurance policy to protect them against loss if the title is later found to be defective.

- Public Costs — The transfer of real estate often involves a number of fees and transfer taxes that go to state and local governments.

- Attorney's fees — "Closing" procedures vary from state to state and may require you to pay for a lawyer to handle the "settlement" or for advice concerning title.

For more information about closing costs, the Housing and Urban Development Dept. (HUD) has a free fact sheet available (163 D) which you can order by writing: Consumer information, Pueblo, CO 81009.

Consulting book, telephoning, must for Pediatric care

The use of a triage (screening) system by telephone has been so successful in Martin Army Hospital's pediatric clinic that this service will now be extended to the non-duty hours.

MAJ Gentry Yeatman, chief of pediatric service, stresses the need for every parent to obtain a "Pediatric Medical Advisor" from either the pediatric clinic or the hospital's information desk.

Then, the proper procedure is to consult the booklet for directions on evaluating the child's illness. If the problem is not covered in the booklet or if it advises seeing the doctor — then call 544-4732 during the day or 544-2041 at night.

The parent must telephone before coming to the hospital. The pediatrician-on-call will talk to the parent or return the call within an hour if he is busy at the time. He will determine if the caller has consulted the medical advisor and then evaluate the necessity for treatment.

The pediatrician-on-call will either tell the parent to bring the child in to the emergency room or he will advise calling the pediatric clinic in the morning.

Dr. Yeatman stressed that when it is determined that a child needs to be seen by the physician, this is usually accomplished on the same day and never later than the next day.

Therefore, consult the booklet, follow the directions and telephone before making the trip to the hospital.

Declining medical benefits

Problems — Decline in medical care available to military health care beneficiaries due to national shortage of general practitioners; inability of Services to attract general practitioners on a volunteer basis; reduction in supporting medical system concurrent with growing number of beneficiaries.

AUSA Action:

- Each year since 1964, AUSA has urged each Congressman to provide adequate medical and/or dental care to all classes of military medical beneficiaries.

- August 1974 letter to the Office of the Secretary of Defense recommending immediate implementation of Doctor Bonus and retraction of modification of the CHAMPUS Handicapped Program for active duty dependents.

- August 28 1974 position paper, "Military Health Care — A National Crisis," sent to chapters, DOD/DA Secretariat and selected Congressmen to alert each of the problem.

- August 1974 AUSA paper placed into 1974 House Armed Services Committee hearing on medical care by Surgeon General of the Navy.

- April 8, 1976 paper, "Guns and Oleo," distributed, outlining significant CHAMPUS changes impacting adversely on quality of service life.

Results:

- Doctor bonus implemented in 1974.
- CHAMPUS Handicapped program changes substantially eliminated.
- Armed Forces Health Profession Scholarships instituted.

Ft. Benning youth are fortunate to have their own swimming pool and gymnasium. The pool is used for swimming lessons in the morning and open to all dependent youth in the afternoons and evenings.

The gymnasium has all of the standard equipment as well as a weight room.

A recent Kansas State University graduate in physical education and recreation, Rick Slifer, has been added to the staff to assist in the sports program. His first love is track, therefore he is trying to get a track program started.

"The sports program on post has always been good, but we are trying to make it even better," stressed SFC Russell. "Excellent command support and adequate funding make this possible. The only short-fall is with our volunteer coaches. The same concerned parents are supporting all of the programs," he said.

Baseball season has provided training and entertainment for more than 350 boys and girls and 90 girls played softball this year.

The DYA provides equipment and programming for many other sports including: football, soccer, basketball, tennis, judo, archery, karate, swimming, golf, boxing, wrestling and the Junior Rifle Club.

There is no excuse for any youth on the post complaining of having nothing to do. The staff mentioned above and eight enlisted personnel are constantly striving to provide a variety of activities and personal interest to anyone entering the YAC.

It is not just a job to them. They are concerned and their long hours and rap sessions convince the kids of their genuine interest. All activities are well-chaperoned and new programming by Mrs. Innis is keeping the kids busy with various spontaneous activities throughout the day.

The YAC is open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Monday thru Saturday and from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. Registrations are currently being accepted for football and soccer. Call 544-4902.

Jeffry Dean is on the receiving end of a take-down in the dependent youth's judo program. More than 80 young people are currently involved in this aspect of the sport's program and by September 15th, the Judo Club will be prepared to handle 135 more youngsters.

Work on safety this Labor Day

LABOR DAY . . . the holiday weekend that ends the summer season. It's the last holiday before the children return to school; one final weekend to enjoy the beach, mountains or other favorite recreational areas. It's a time for one last long weekend with the family and friends before summer ends.

Labor Day should be a time to relax and enjoy life. Unfortunately, for hundreds of Americans, this holiday period will bring grief and suffering because of the needless injuries and loss of life caused by accidents.

The majority of the accidents that occur over the long weekend will fall into two main categories—motor vehicle and water sport activities.

While most drivers will enjoy the holiday free of accidents, a few will not. The first and last 12 hours of a holiday produce traffic deaths at a high rate. Drivers should be alert and drive defensively to protect themselves and others.

Safe driving requires that each driver exercise the same caution and consideration for others that he would want for himself. Plan your trip to avoid night driving and allow adequate time for frequent rest stops. Avoid driving more than 300 miles per day.

More and more people are enjoying water sports these days. To insure that everyone keeps on enjoying these activities here are some tips to remember.

Never engage in any water sport alone. Always use the "buddy system." Swim only in supervised areas where there is a lifeguard. Most drownings occur in unsupervised areas. Never dive into unfamiliar waters.

Every boater should know how to operate his boat under any condition. Do not permit passengers to rock your boat or indulge in horseplay. If your boat should capsize, don't panic. Stay calm and stay with your boat. Most boats will continue to float and support you even when overturned or filled with water. Obey all swimming and boating rules.

This weekend our highways and water ways will be jammed with people. Some will not obey the laws and safe practices of driving and boating. Be alert for the recklessness and mistakes of the "other guy." You could become his next innocent victim.

Attention Family Housing Occupants

The season for falling leaves will shortly be here. Occupants of Family Housing are reminded that leaves, sticks, grass and debris are not to be placed in gutters and storm drains, but are to be placed in bags for pickup by the DFAE Refuse Collection Branch.

fins, furs, feathers

Denny Blankenship

I was gassing up preparing to fish my way north on vacation last week when E-7 (Ret) Joseph Slouchick proudly showed me a nice 11 pound catfish he had just hauled out of Weems Pound on Post.

Joe, one of the finest bank fishermen around, caught his fish using minnows for bait. "Had a coupla bigger ones on," related Joe. "Both broke my line."

While fishing several lakes north to Ohio, I did find that northern bass go for the same lures used locally. The Deep Wee R's were exceptionally good for smallmouths.

Ten boats from the Benning BASS Club turned out for the Great Chattahoochee River Raft Race last Saturday. These bassers, along with their families, served as safety boats while policing up debris along the race route. An event of this nature always produces its lighter moments and this year's affair was no exception. I heard (from a source close to the scene) that the grand ladies of 2/69 Ar raft hit a marker buoy. This in itself wasn't so bad except that the buoy contained a large wasp nest. Needless to say, the refined ladies hit the water in a hurry. I also happen to know that Benning's Vice President, Bob Billman, was doing a great job of policing debris from the water until one of the items picked up was a bikini top. Bob spent the remainder of his time searching for the owner.

Seriously now, we all do owe the Benning BASS Club a word of thanks for their fine ecology effort on the river last Saturday. We need more of this.

The Georgia dove season gets under way Saturday, September 4 and runs to October 9. The Alabama dove season opens a little later this year, September 18th but runs to November 3d. Post Game Officials state that dove hunting should be excellent on Post this year with many dove being sighted in the Patterson Pond and upper Kings Pond area. Dove limits are 12 per day with 24 birds in possession.

Hunters should insure that range clearance maps are checked prior to hunting an area. Hunters may find the available hunting an area. Hunters may find the available hunting areas somewhat more restricted this year due to training by the AIT Brigade.

Ponder this until next week: One reason it's good to breathe through your nose is that it keeps your mouth shut.

Keep the sound of independence in the air.

'Rating': not a 'game'

By Phil Nesbitt

Walking on water, able to leap the Pentagon in a single bound and various other impossible feats seemingly best describes some of the people in the Army today. Not to say that there are not many excellent professionals in the Army.

The topic of contention is the Enlisted Efficiency Report. This handy dandy little item comes in two sizes, junior and senior. It is a fact of military life that the results of an EER can make or break a military career. It is possible for a soldier to produce excellent results on his MOS test and then receive a below average rating on the combined score (EERWA), just because of the EER.

It also works in the reverse fashion.

Take SP5 A.B., who didn't study for his MOS test as an admin specialist. SP5 A.B. has been responsible for Congressional correspondence only, and upon taking his MOS test finds that he has no idea of what his specialty is all about.

CPT C. D., his boss, has never had any problems with SP5 A.B. and his duty performance and knows that he plans on remaining in the Army. CPT C.D. has the job of rating SP5 A.B. "He's a good soldier, never late, does his job and never complains . . .", so CPT C. D. gives SP5 A.B. a maximum EER.

Our specialist gets his EERWA back and finds that he has almost bottomed out on the test with a tremendous score of 81 . . . but . . . the EER has saved the day! With the maximum that the captain has given, SP5 A.B. walks away with a 112, not bad . . . above average at that!

Normally, SP5 A.B. should have been rated as soldier who "exceeds or meets duty requirements" which is to say that he is average or slightly above average.

The sad thing about the system is the fact that a career soldier who receives an EER rated in this manner may find himself waiting a long time for promotion and his career plans may be marred until he gets out.

The commander, section chief, or platoon leader who rates his soldiers conscientiously may in fact be sealing their fate as far as career development is concerned. In addition there are commanders who use the EER as an unwitting tool of destruction. In marking the column "needs improvement" the commander can, in effect, force the soldier out of the Army.

The "Rating Game" has been a topic considerable debate for many years. Such factors a personal bias and prejudice have a way of playing in important role in the commander's consideration.

There have been cases when the rater feels that the individual soldier deserves an average rating and the indorser has other ideas. In the discussion over the individual's duty performance, the indorser's feelings usually lead to a higher or lower rating from the rater.

If ever rater and indorser rated fairly, there would be no problem with the system, but this would rule out human nature. Of course the perfect system of rating has not yet been invented, there are those who advocate no rating at all, only a series of performance tests to show the capability of the individual soldier. Hopefully, the SQT program of testing and "hands on" evaluation will solve some of the inherent problems in the existing system.

Until such time, there will still be superficial supermen in the Army, who will continue to perform impossible feats within their limitations. (ARNEWS)

"The Army's been good to this Army wife."

Mrs. Vera Coles, whose husband's a tanker, likes the Army. And likes to talk about it.

"Charlie wasn't in the Army when we first got married. But after a while we decided to give Army life a try.

"One of his reasons for joining, and for reenlisting, is college. He says that although it might take a little longer in the Army, it's easier, and a whole lot cheaper.

"The medical benefits are important to us, too. Our bills would have been impossible as civilians. Plus, the doctors have been outstanding. You know, they don't treat you like you're just another case.

"But basically, we're staying in because we're happy here, as a family. And I think that's the best reason of all."

Today's Army gets better every time a good family reenlists.

CBers have their own brand of jargon as many people know. This private lingo is easily understood by using any CB dictionary, but you'd need to carry around a Webster's Unabridged to understand my friend the Mad Doctor. Here's an example:

"How 'bout ya Mad Doctor?"

"You may inaugurate location as you have effectuated your exigency of adducing my perception."

"Sure thing Doc, if you say so. What ya doing?"

"I have been engaged in the quiescent craft of indolence by means of coarctation of my assiduousness."

"OK. Just be sure to clean it up. Well, I gotta get back to work. Have a nice day."

colloquy and recommence supererogation. I shall endeavor to perceive your corporeal presence upon the morrow."

Translated into ordinary CB English, this conversation might have gone like this:

"How 'bout ya Mad Doctor?"

"Go ahead, you got me."

"What ya doing?"

"Nothing much, just taking it easy."

"Well, have a nice day, I gotta go to work now."

"Me too. See ya around."

The Mad Doctor is one reason the FCC limits CB conversations to only five minutes at a time.

Garnishment -- a fact of life

Garnishment of soldiers' pay for domestic support has been a fact of life for more than a year. A federal law — the Social Services Act passed in 1975 — allows an ex-wife or ex-husband to get money for court-ordered alimony and child support from soldiers' wages or retirement pay.

The following soldier profiles show the grim side of garnishment action:

●A retired officer from Georgia owes $47,000 for back child support and alimony. He has been garnished for the fifth time and has received almost none of his retirement pay since June 1975. The retiree has a new family—a wife and two small children. If garnishment action continues, it will be about five years before he receives any pay.

●An active duty member from Idaho owes $6,052 for back support. Idaho law authorizes garnishment of 100 per cent of disposable earnings (portion left after taxes). The soldier has remarried and has four children. As a result of the garnishment, he is unable to support his new family and pay his other debts. He will not receive any pay other than his nongarnishable allowances for about a year and a half.

●A retired E-7 from Georgia owes $9,552.68 for support. One hundred per cent of his pay has been taken for the third time. He is unemployed and has no money to pay his debts. If the garnishment continues, he will not receive any of his retirement pay for more than two years.

●An active duty member from Kansas owes $370 a month for child support. His active duty pay has been garnished three times. The garnishment takes all of his disposable earnings and will continue until $2,037 back support is paid. Since the $370 support order is not being paid — because 100 per cent of his pay is taken to satisfy the back support judgement — he will be in arrears even after the current judgment is satisfied.

How pay is garnished

Under the law, only state courts are permitted to garnish for alimony or child support. Only Texas prohibits garnishment.

A DA official explained garnishment procedure this way: "A state court issues a garnishment order and the ex-wife's attorney sends it by certified or registered mail to the Army Finance and Accounting Center at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., which then withholds specified sums as ordered by the state court from soldier's pay. Finance sends the withholdings to the court, and the court pays the ex-wife. Under most state laws, this procedure continues until the debt has been paid in full."

The Army's Deputy Assistant Comptroller for Fiscal Policy, Joseph P. Murphy, said garnishment orders are issued when a person is in default — when he's not doing what the state court ordered. "Garnishment does not apply to other debts such as the purchase of car, furniture, appliance or clothing. Expanding garnishment power," Murphy said, "would make the federal government a super debt collector."

In another action, the Comptroller General has rule that the Defense Department can respond to administrative orders from state welfare agencies. These orders are made when an ex-wife signs her support rights under court decree over to a state welfare agency in order to receive benefits. Under the Comptroller's decision, the state agency may require Army finance to pay the support money to it. Cases of this kind, said Murphy, are on the rise — at press time there were 60.

Guidelines for garnishment

Some aspects of the law remain unresolved. For example, the law does not say how much of a soldier's pay is subject to garnishment — or whether it should be based on a percentage or dollar limit. Apparently, Congress left this to be governed by relevant state laws. In some cases, however, it has been 100 per cent. Additionally, the law does not say what kind of pay are subject to garnishment.

DoD favors a 50 per cent limitation on the amount of earnings subject to garnishment.

The Civil Service Commission at the direction of the President has circulated among all federal agencies comprehensive proposed regulations on garnishment of all federal pay — including military pay: active, reserve or retired.

The work isn't completed until the paper work is done. SP4 Paula Richardson, a TAAMS clerk of the 2d Cbt Spt Hosp, 34th Med Bn, updates her logbook after conferring with mechanic PFC Leander Moton on the maintenance status of a unit jeep. SP4 Richardson has been named battalion Soldier of the Month for September.

A Field Training Exercise usually means a temporary separation from dependents and it's especially hard when the dependent is new. SP5 Galusina Mageo of the 546th Med Co (Clearing), which departed for REFORGER in Germany last week, talks things over with his two week old son. The unit augmented with Ft. Bragg, Ft. Knox, Ft. ## DLI offers language refresher Soldiers on orders for overseas duty will want to take advantage of services offered by the Defense Language Institute (DLI). The DLI nonresident operations division is expressly organized to help service members maintain their language proficiency, Institute officials say.

Present DLI inventories include materials in 35 languages. Price listings for specific language tapes and tests are available on request. Your organization may provide funds if your job requires language skills. Check out AR 350-20 for more info.

Tapes and tests on a number of languages are also available at no cost to the soldier. If the materials you want are not in stock, DLI officials will refer you to suitable commercial sources.

The institute also provides information on their summer two week language refresher programs conducted by the Army Intelligence Schools.

DLI is currently expanding services and developing job-related language maintenance for military linguists. For more information write or call: Defense Language Institute, ATTN: Non-Resident Operations Div., Presidio of Monterey, CA. 93940, or call Autovon 973-8728. (ARNEWS).

Benning skiers to participate in Labor Day weekend festival

Water skiers from Ft. Benning's own Heart of Dixie Water Ski Club will be participating in the Phenix City Labor Day weekend festival at Idle Hour Park.

The ski club recently formed at Ft. Benning, will provide skiers for two shows, 11 am and 4 pm Saturday. They will be joined by sky divers from the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club during each performance.

The Heart of Dixie show will include jumping, slalom, tricks, barefooting, a water ballet and flag routine featuring four lovely young ladies performing on slalom skis, a five-man pyramid and even a little kiteflying.

Featured will be CPT George Garrison of MAH skiing on a boat paddle and his barefeet, CPT H. R. Christianson of the Airborne-Air Assault Dept will demonstrate the competition slalom and the highlight of the day will be "bird-man" Steve Logan who will fly under a kite as it is pulled by a boat 300 feet above the water.

Post schools slate basic skill testing

On-post dependent schools will administer the Iowa Test of Basic Skills (ITBS) in September to students in the third through eighth grades, according to Dr. Joseph T. Conforti, the superintendent of Ft. Benning's Dependent Schools.

The ITBS measures student development in the basic skills necessary to school progress, to include vocabulary, reading, language, word-study and mathematics.

The tests will be conducted at the Wilber, McBride and Loyd Schools on September 13th through 16th, at the Dexter and E. A. White Schools on September 21st through 24th and at the Don C. Faith School on September 28th and 29th. There will also be a retest given in May to measure improvement during the school year.

The test results will enable teachers, parents and the students to evaluate their knowledge in basic academic skills and gauge their progress.

It will take approximately eight weeks to grade and evaluate the test results. Parents may contact their school principals to arrange for a meeting to discuss their child's results on the tests at that time.

October pay raise estimated at 4.8%

The deadline for a Presidential recommendation to Congress on an alternative pay plan has passed so it appears that the October 1st pay raise will be somewhere between 4 and 8 per cent. Most estimates place the pay raise at the 4.8 figure that was recommended by the President's pay advisors. Government employe unions suggested a higher 8.2 per cent raise but it is unlikely that President Ford will approve any figure that high because of the cost.

The raise, when approved, will be distributed over the base pay, quarters and subsistence allowances. It will be effective immediately for military and the first pay period after October 1st for federal civilians.

The military raise will have the advantage since an increase will appear in the non-taxable areas of BAQ and subsistence. That will have the effect of increasing the tax advantage of soldiers, making the actual increase slightly larger than the decided percentage figure.

The President is expected to make the decision on which recommendation to accept in the next few weeks, but at the latest it will be before the October 1st deadline.

Combined Federal Campaign kicks-off

The sixth annual Tri-Community Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) official opened yesterday during ceremonies in Marshall Auditorium.

The goal for this year's drive is $240,000.

COL John Henchman, the Infantry Center chief of staff stated: "This goal can be attained by the wholehearted participation of all members of Ft. Benning and other Federal personnel in the nearby area in a fair share system of giving. Generosity and concern for others have always been symbolic of those who serve in the United States Government. I feel confident each of you will continue this tradition."

Other speakers at the kickoff ceremony included COL Edward R. Schowalter, Jr., assistant post commander; Bee Brown of Atlanta, a representative of the International Services Agency; William Stokes of the National Health Agency in Atlanta; and Sam Wellborn III, chairman of this year's United Way campaign in Columbus and Phenix City.

The campaign, which will continue until October 22d, affords each individual a chance to assist in supporting local, state, national and international health, youth, welfare and recreational agencies. The agencies, in turn, render assistance to needy members of both the military and civilian communities.

The campaign is organized so that each office and major unit has a "key person" who will accept contributions and prepare receipts for the donor's tax records.

According to Jim Schoonover, post project officer, the military and civilian personnel in the Ft. Benning-Columbus-Phenix City area donated $243,736 to the campaign last year.

SMA talks soldier

Recently, the Sergeant Major of the Army traveled to Army installations to get a first hand idea about the soldier and his world. He was extremely interested in what is troubling the soldier. How they like the Army and what they would change if they could. Because he has not been able to talk to every soldier in the field, answer all the questions that they would have asked, the following views of the SMA may help the soldier know how he feels.

"Many soldiers ask about military unions. I don't think that the idea would work. There is nothing that a union could do for the soldier that the chain of command can't. The union couldn't negotiate a change in pay, for example. This is controlled by agencies outside the Army. The only thing that a union would do would be to take money out of the soldier's pocket in the form of union dues.

The SMA also feels that the Army is keeping a watchful eye on the soldier's benefits. He realizes that the purpose of military benefits is to keep the military's standard of living comparable to that of civilians although the pay is lower. "But," he added,

Don't forget the Annual AUSA picnic September 18th at Victory Pond. Make your plans to attend, now! See shuttle bus schedule page 19.

"what is a benefit to some may not be a benefit for others."

Promotion has always been a leading item on the minds of soldiers. "I think that the promotion system is working excellently because the lower grades are semi-centralized. The commander holds a board and selects the best from those available. I think that it is the best system that we have had up to now," he stated. SMA Bainbridge is also aware that some, a small number, are

AUSA Defense Report

FY '77 defense budget less than 100 billion?

Much hue and cry has been raised in the Congress and in the news media over the fact that Defense spending in FY 1977 will exceed $100 billion — probably by about $4 billion. However, as pointed out by the Senate Appropriations Committee final report on the DoD FY '77 Appropriations Bill, real defense spending will only be approximately $96 billion.

The Committee reaches this conclusion by deducting the $8 billion dollars requested for retired military pay. The report says that "notwithstanding its (military retired pay) impact on the Defense Budget, it contributes absolutely nothing toward the goal of national defense. It provides no services, equipment, weapons, systems or capabilities. Since no other agency budget comparably displays the total costs of its retired employees, inclusion of the program within the Defense Budget also distorts perception of both the actual and relative magnitude of spending for this function at a time when such considerations are very much in debate."

The Report goes on to say that, "In recent years, as much controversy over Defense matters has been generated by relative budget magnitude as by budget substance. Removing the "non-defense" costs of Retired Pay would aid in gaining a better and more comparable perspective of defense costs within the total federal budget."

The Committee solution to the problem is to insert retired pay costs into a more appropriate functional area such as Income Security or Veterans Benefits.

The Committee proposal, if adopted, would also have major impact on the much publicized theory that personnel costs within DoD are too high and must be significantly reduced, a theory which has caused the current serious attack on military benefits and compensation. For example, the FY '77 DoD proposed budget allocated 51.7% of its proposed fund outlays to personnel costs. Deducting the $8 billion for retired pay, this figure would drop to 43.3%, the same percentage of personnel costs in the FY 1964 pre-Vietnam DoD budget.

Many, probably most, military retirees want their pay to remain under DoD control, primarily because they believe that DoD can administer payments better and will take a more personal interest in the matter. However, there is no apparent reason to assume that another agency will not do a good job, and many experts believe that the Senate Appropriations Committee proposal should receive very serious attention.

Swine flu vaccine to be distributed

The word is out! The Army swine flu immunization program has started rolling. The program will consist of two parts: one for military personnel and the other for dependents, civilian employees and other eligible beneficiaries.

Active Army personnel will receive two shots, a vaccine against 'A type New Jersey - A Type Victoria' and another vaccine against 'B type Hong Kong' disease.

Army Reserve and National Guard personnel will receive the 'A types' only. Dependents, civilian employees and other beneficiaries will receive vaccines as recommended by the U. S. Public Health Service (USPHS) for the National Influenza Immunization Program.

The USPHS recommendations are as follows: "high-risk" individuals, 18 years of age or over, will be encouraged to receive both the 'A and B type' vaccines; non-high risk individuals, age 18 and over, will be encouraged to receive just the 'A type New Jersey' vaccine.

Availability dates for the vaccines are uncertain at present, except for 'B type Hong Kong' vaccine, which is now being procured. It is expected that the 'A type' vaccines will be distributed approximately 6-8 weeks after procurement action begins.

Disco show scheduled at Annual AUSA picnic

Two popular soldier disc jockeys, SFCs Robert McCoy and Bobby McAllister, have been recruited for a record spinning and dancing session inside Victory Lodge from noon to 6 p.m. at the annual Picnic of the Association of the U.S. Army on September 18th.

McCoy and McAllister, known as "BJ the DJ" and "the Preacher-man", will play a variety of music including hard rock, jazz, soul and country and western. The two

North Carolina natives have worked together for three years perfecting their show and have performed at several clubs on post and around the Valley.

During their disco session, they will sponsor dance contests in which the winners will receive prizes and trophies. The dance will be supported by the "Benning CB Social Club," the "Rooster Channel Jumpers" and the "Bold Ones' Motorcycle Club."

Voting is your responsibility too!

By Derek Scammel

What would happen to our nation if three-quarters of those eligible to cast ballots did not vote?

How could the democratic process survive if more than half the eligible voters did not go to the polls because they lacked basic information on the candidates and the issues?

Who would hold office if 45 per cent of the voters had never been advised of their rights to vote; if 65 per cent of the electorate were not given ballots with which to exercise their franchise?

If such were the case nation-wide, the effect would be disastrous.

It is the responsibility of each commander to insure that all military and civilian personnel of the Armed Forces are informed of their right to vote and to assist them through their voting counselors in obtaining information and ballots from their respective states.

But the individual has a responsibility too. He must make sure of the information provided to weigh the candidates and the issues and if the data is not immediately available, be conscientious enough to seek it out.

If you are sitting there feeling that the whole process is too much trouble, ask yourself this question: Do I, as a member of the Armed Forces of the United States, have a voice in the political changes and representation of the country I'm defending? Obviously the answer is yes. You as a soldier are entitled to a say in who you want to govern the United States. But are you going to exercise that privilege?

If you decide not to voice your opinion through the American Democratic process then you are letting yourself down as well as those you are sworn to defend. If you are not registered in your home state then do so now. Now is the time to decide what kind of leadership you want.

It is an easy accomplishment. If you have leave coming up and plan to go home, register on leave. You may obtain a form for an absentee ballot, have it signed by your appropriate commander and mail it to your home state. But don't delay — do it now. Participate in the very process that you are defending. YOU do have a voice, so speak out!

And just in case you still feel it's just too much trouble to cast an absentee ballot, consider this fact. In 1860, there were 34 states in the union. In 21 of the 34, servicemen were completely denied the right to vote.

The other 13 allowed personnel in the Armed Forces to vote but only if they were home to vote in person on election day.

Many of us living today in freedom tend to take our liberties and rights for granted. When we vote in our free elections, we are enjoying our rights — our heritage of freedom.

Voting is your heritage, your right, your duty.

Engineers, Cavalry combine forces

By Ron Fowler

A unique experience awaited the men of the 72d Engr Co on the muddy banks of Victory Pond last week as they departed from Kelley Hill on a Field Training Exercise (FTX).

The FTX began at 4 am when the engineers were called in on a full alert to move out to the field and dig in to provide defensive and security positions to cover their tactical bridging and rafting operations.

"We have the capability to provide both engineer and infantry support to any unit in the brigade at any time," stated 2LT Douglas Kamien, the 72d Engrs Bridge Platoon leader. "We proved that we were able to provide that type of support out here. The men have done an outstanding job."

And the engineers proved with authority that they could support the best combat units in the field as they teamed up with the scouts and Infantrymen on Trip A, 15th Cav in a tactical bridge-laying operation.

"I didn't realize exactly how fast the engineers were able to lay an expedient bridge," said CPL John Donovan, one of the scouts in Trp A, 15th Cav. "They saw what had to be done, and they did it, no sweat."

Many of the phases of combat tactics were included into and during the 72d Engrs

FTX. Some of these included reconnaissance and route patrols, setting up of hasty defensive positions and expedient bridge-laying and spanning techniques in an NBC environment.

"I'll bet that a lot of people thought that we wouldn't have been able to lay bridges and spans during a gas attack," concluded SP4 Roger Quarles of the 72d's Bridge Platoon. "But I guess that we showed everyone exactly what we were made of, that we could do the job."

MOS evaluation delay explained

Recent delays in production of MOS evaluation scores has stirred considerable concern among many soldiers. The November 1975 and February 1976 evaluation periods have been of particular interest to soldiers. But the worst is pretty much over, according to US Army Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center (EREC) officials.

Soldiers who took the proper MOS test for the November 1975 and February 1976 MOS evaluation Senior Enlisted Evaluation Reports (EERs/SEERs) — should have received their MOS Evaluation scores by now, according to EREC officials. Although those tested during the May 1976 evaluation period may not have received their scores yet.

EREC officials explained that the Armywide delay in distribution of test scores centered around:

— The October 1, 1975 implementation of the new EER and SEER and their new reporting formats, and — The October 1, 1975 implementation of a new EERWA Computation formula.

To adjust to these new developments, EREC had to redesign and rewrite many of its programs and procedures. Making these changes created a large additional workload at the center. Second work shifts, commercial contract support, revised processing procedures, advisories to the field and computer program adjustments were all necessary actions to handle this workload.

Some problems in accurately processing data resulted from field response. Rating officials and personnel offices had some problems in the timely submission of the new EER/SEER forms (DA Forms 2166-5 and 2166-5A. In addition, some forms had to be rejected for administrative errors. The initial error input rate reached 53 per cent; it is now down to 34 per cent.

To insure that soldier are not adversely affected by scoring delays, waiver provisions have been announced for reenlistment and special duty assignment proficiency pay entitlement. Furthermore, current regulatory provisions provide adequate guidance for promotion consideration during the absence of an MOS Evaluation Score.

Although the new EER/SEER system has has a slow start, it now appears to be getting in gear — and, for EREC and the soldier, that means getting back on schedule. (ARNEWS)

New PT program to fit unit mission

Fat, tall, skinny, and small soldiers of all shapes and sizes are in line for a new Army Physical Training Program.

Army schools are now establishing the minimum physical fitness requirements for each soldier's job description for duty performance at the unit of assignment. Since physical exertion requirements may differ in each job and unit, the Army feels that the adaptation of this new concept will provide a more realistic approach to physical training.

This is a new 3-level concept which places emphasis directly on the amount of strength, stamina, and endurance it takes to fulfill soldiering duties.

Level 1 is the basic requirement (Baseline Minimum) which Headquarters Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) at Ft. Monroe, VA, has directed the Infantry School at Ft. Benning, GA, to develop. This Baseline Minimum will pertain to all soldiers regardless of age, grade or sex, to determine the minimum physical fitness required in the performance of basic soldiering skills.

Level 2 is geared towards an individual's job. Each Military Occupational Specialty (MOS) producing service school evaluates the physical requirements for minimum satisfactory job performance. Each soldier will be required to meet these minimum requirements during the annual Skill Qualification Test (SQT).

Level 3 will project the physical requirements for each individual depending upon the unit to which assigned. This level will also be developed by the service schools and will take into account the unit's mission, battlefield environment, and collective tasks the individual must accomplish in a particular unit.

This new concept to the overall physical training program, which is on the drawing boards in the various service schools, will not completely change the commander's present physical fitness programs. In fact, programs now being used in company areas that promote morale, discipline and esprit de corps are encouraged and will remain a part of the overall program.

The concept is new. Service schools have been working, developing and establishing the requirements as set forth through the basic guidance since June. It is anticipated that the new physical fitness programs will be phased in as they are developed by each service school, and that every soldier will receive physical fitness training appropriate to his job and unit assignment. (TNS)

'Battle of Bands' bridge being built

The 586th Engr. Co, 36th Engr Gp is preparing a new attraction for this year's AUSA picnic September 18th.

A 211-foot light tactical raft (bridge) will provide access to rides, entertainment, games and "The Battle of the Bands" contest on the far side of Victory Pond.

The structure composed of relatively light weight components assembled entirely by hand is capable of supporting vehicles weighing up to 38,000 pounds. However, it will be used primarily for pedestrian traffic during the picnic.

The project will be supervised by SGTs Barry Zimmerman and William Woodruff.

Medical care policy revised

A revision is in line for Army personnel policies concerning extension of a service member on active duty for medical care or for dependent medical care.

Major aspects of this revision, recently approved by the Secretary of the Army are as follows:

— Army personnel (Officer and enlisted) with an established release date would only be continued on active duty for medical care when hospitalized or when undergoing physical disability processing, or both. A request must be submitted to designated approval authorities (HQDA for officers, GCM authority of enlisted) for review and approval of the extension.

— Officers will not be extended on active duty past their established release date solely on the basis of dependent medical problems. Short term 90-day extensions may be granted by MILPERCEN for extreme hardship in those cases where Federal law does not impose a mandatory release date.

— Requests for continued medical care for the dependent of an officer will be considered on a case-by-case basis as a designee of the Secretary of the Army. Requests would be forwarded to the Office of The Surgeon General.

— Enlisted personnel who require a waiver-exception to policy to be continued on active duty may request an extension on the basis of dependent medical problems for up to 12 months.

Army officials found several major inequalities in the policy currently in effect:

— Extensions past established release dates of Army personnel (officers and enlisted) requiring medical care lacked proper guidance, control and approval.

— Only certain categories of officers and enlisted personnel could be extended on active duty for dependent medical problems.

— Reserve and Regular Army officers designated for involuntary release because of non-selection for permanent promotion had release dates established by law and could not be extended on active duty for dependent medical problems. (ARNEWS)

The 'Good Guys' win again

Both sides wore black tri-cornered hats but the Good Guys won anyhow. The results were predictable but failed to dampen the enthusiasm of several hundred understanding partisan spectators.

Though set in the rustic, rural village of the 1850s — Westville, Ga. — the mock Revolutionary War engagement, between the hated British, their Tory lackeys and the valiant Americans had an air of authenticity.

Scores of Revolutionary War buffs had assembled earlier on September 4th and pitched their white, canvas Revolutionary War-style tents in a quiet tree-lined glade next to the town square. The neat regimented order of the tents and the military trapping of the militia gave realism to the scene.

Members of the National Re-enactment Society had come to Westville from throughout the southeast to portray the way it might have been in the year 1776.

By mid-afternoon, a rumor swept the town that a group of dissident Whig revolutionaries were going to meet at the MacDonald house. Rallying against the unspeakable injustices of the British rulers the silver-tongued Whig orator harranged the British mightily. A sympathetic onlooker was heard to shout "King George wears lace panties".

As citizens of Westville began to gather in excited bands to discuss the events thus far, a shot rang out. It was War!

Swirling back and forth along Troup Street, the opposing units fired volley after volley over a distance of less than 30 yards. Cries of "Woman, there's one down here!" "Bandages!" and "Keep up the fire!" punctured the smoke filled air.

The enemy was winning the day! The Americans were ordered to "Fix bayonets"! Miraculously, the tide of battle began to turn to favor the outnumbered, unruly Americans. Superior marksmanship, skillful maneuver and the American Spirit were taking effect.

With the battlefield strewn with dead and dying enemy soldiers, the Americans pressed their advantage. Soon, only the sound of British drums sounding "Retreat" could be heard. The Americans had won the day.

DITY monies now taxable

Extra cash made on Do-It-Yourself (DITY) moves is taxable, say DA officials. Soldiers choosing to move themselves could be money ahead, but taxed on it, if the actual moving expenses do not exceed 75 per cent of the estimated cost. The incentive payment will be considered income and subject to federal withholding tax. The finance and accounting office will withhold 20 per cent of the extra money and report it on the W-2 for that year.

An initial estimate is made of the cost of the move by the installation transportation office. If the soldier is able to make the move for less than 75 per cent of that estimate the rest goes to the soldier.

The decision to withhold taxes from the incentive payment was made recently by the DoD Pay and Allowance Committee and brings those payments in line with the regular withholding from the base pay and other payments. (ARNEWS)

Buying a home--conclusion

About those documents, fees

On the day that you decide to buy a residence — whether it be a house, townhouse, apartment or even a mobile home — you will be asked to sign a sales contract and other legal documents that may seem like they were written in a foreign language.

Before you sign these documents, know what they mean. According to the National Association of Homebuilders, the seller is not under legal obligation to do anything not covered in these documents.

The sales agreement you sign describes the property, states the purchase price, explains the method of payment and usually names the date and place where the "closing" or actual transfer of the property will occur. Also known as a deposit receipt, this contract binds you legally to buying the home — exactly as it is described in the document. Therefore, before you sign anything or hand over a deposit, go over the contract carefully and make sure you understand and agree with its provisions.

Besides understanding the sales contract and other documents you will be asked to sign, it's also a good idea to know what kind of expenses will be involved in the sale of a home. In addition to "closing" costs — which cover such items as application fees, credit reports, property surveys, title search and examination, title insurance, and miscellaneous fees for drawing up the mortgage documents — there are also a number of payments ("home ownership expenses") that you will probably have to make:

● Utility charges — Depending upon the community, you may be assessed a connection or tie-in fee or advance payment by the local utility companies.

● Real estate taxes — Most home mortgages require that each month's payment include some money to be set aside in an escrow account for real estate taxes. When your taxes come due, the mortgage lender then pays them out of this account.

● Hazard insurance — You will probably be asked to pay for insurance to protect against damages to the property caused by fire, windstorm or other hazards. This insurance is designed to protect the lender's investment in your unit and, therefore, differs from a homeowner's insurance policy that you would get for yourself. Often the money used to pay for hazard insurance comes from the same escrow account explained above.

To give you more information about settlement costs, the Housing and Urban Development Dept. (HUD) has published a fact sheet (163 D) which you can get free from Consumer Information, Pueblo, CO 81009.

An on the scene report has it that Tommy Mueller and Randy Harris didn't catch any fish at River Bend last week, however, Harris did manage to catch a two foot snake with one of his sterling casts up into a tree.

The River Bend area resounded with the sound of Mueller thrashing the wirily serpent with a boat paddle. After the snake was dead, and I do mean dead, Harris retrieved his Deep Wee R and resumed trying to catch squirrels, bird, or whatever it is that lives in trees.

In recent years, women have made great inroads into many areas formally considered bastions of Man. It was with this in mind that I masked my chauvinistic feelings and consented to take two women fishing last week.

My superior feelings were reinforced when I received an inkling of things to come as Irene Leak, the wife of Marine Capt Bill Leak, asked, "Are those things alive?" referring to the chirping crickets smuggly tucked away in the box. "Of course," I answered. "The fish bite them better when they're alive because they wiggle around on the hook and attract the fish." "Eek!" shuddered Irene, and it was obvious from her distasteful expression that Irene Leak would not handle a cricket this day!

Further reinforcement came when that gracious lady in my life, my wife Dee, asked, "Should we take our purses along in the boat?" "No!" I shot back losing patience and a bit of composure. "Yes!" I quickly recanted after a though. "Yes, no, who cares," I finally said somewhat confused. "Maybe there'll be something in them that'll catch fish." Why do women ask such confusing questions anyway?

The fishing itself went smooth enough and I publish the results only after much arm twisting, threats of "no supper until you do," and even worse, "We'll go with you again if you don't." Well, here it is girls!

Irene Leak caught three fish, my wife caught two fish, Bill Leak caught one fish, and the "pro" caught zero fish! (I'll probably be banned from the brotherhood of fishermen for life!)

Speaking of women fishing, did you know that the Ft. Benning Bass Club is offering a class on beginning fishing? Classes will be held one evening a week for four weeks with a half-day fishing trip culminating the instruction. These classes will be open to all military personnel and their dependents. Dependent children must be 10 years of age. Sign up for these classes can be accomplished at the Officers Club from 9 a.m. - 2 p.m. of 15 September Ponder this until next week:  $\frac{3}{4}$  of the earth's surface is water and  $\frac{1}{4}$  is land. Does this mean that the good Lord meant for Man to spend  $\frac{3}{4}$  of his time fishing and  $\frac{1}{4}$  working?

Toll-free lines open for Vets

Veterans or their dependents seeking information on benefits are reminded that the Veterans Administration (VA) maintains 960 toll free telephone lines across the country for them to use.

The telephone numbers can usually be found in the "U. S. Government" section of local telephone books under "Veterans Administration — Benefits Information and Assistance." In cases where a "U. S. Government" listing is not included in the local director, telephone operators can supply the toll free number.

In order to get faster service when they call, veterans should have at hand as much VA-related information about themselves as possible, such as his/her VA claim number, military serial number, or Social Security number.

Dollars dictate grade

Editor's Note: The following article is the second in a series designed to explain what EPMS is all about and what it is doing for the professional soldier.

At the squad level where the pick-and-shovel work is done, doing it is not always the problem. The problem is how.

How can sometimes be the rock and hardpan.

Army personnel management and training specialists were looking at the rock and hardpan from the beginning as they sought to develop the enlisted management system.

First, there was the size of the Army. Congress controls that.

Second, there was the decision to halt the draft on Dec. 31, 1972. The Army had decided earlier to shoot for a total volunteer force. (Maybe you joined under one of the many programs: unit of choice, station of choice, stripes for skills, enlistment bonuses and others.)

The name of the game was to recruit the men and women needed to meet the required strength.

Recruiters did their job. They took the Army's story to every nook and cranny.

Not all wanted combat arms, but young men and women got the message: THE ARMY WANTS TO JOIN YOU.

On July 1, 1974, Army Secretary Callaway said "... the volunteer Army (ended) the fiscal year in excess of its authorized strength ... The volunteer Army has met the challenges of its first year and has succeeded ..."

Third, there were many soldiers who got stripes through accelerated promotions during the war when the Army was skyrocketing in size. Many of these men and women decided to stay on and try for an Army career.

How to get there from here

One challenge the Army has to deal with is how to get there (balanced grade structure) from here (promotion frustration and opportunity for advancement in career development.)

"There are several ways EPMS will correct the situation without creating an upheaval in career progress and development," says SGM Don Weber, a member of the EPMS Task Force.

Weber points out that once the Army brings its grade authorizations on line with the DoD grade allowance and budget, "it will allow the commander to requisition replacements with a higher assurance the requisitions will be filled with the right soldier wearing the right stripes."

Second, it will take the sting out of MOS-mismatch and help the soldier to see his or her Army career in the right perspective.

Third, it will provide the training and education a soldier needs to have the kind of a career he or she wants.

Fourth, EPMS will establish procedures for the soldier to prove his or her qualification for promotion through performance. Opinion will have little influence on how well the soldier does the job.

"As I said in the beginning, EPMS is a program to allow a soldier to move from the bottom to the top in a job he or she likes," Weber repeats.

"Also it will allow a better opportunity for promotion by structuring each military occupational specialty (MOS) and career management field (CMF) in a similar manner."

The sergeant major gets us another cup of coffee and, as it cools, begins to explain carefully the four cornerstones of the Enlisted Personnel Management System: Training, Evaluation, Classification and Promotion.

"We used to train a soldier, classify him or her in an MOS and skill level, evaluate performance and then consider promotion," Weber continues. "That system had three flaws."

"First, it assumed the training was adequate. Second, it assumed all soldiers who finished the training were of equal competency in the acquired skill. Third, the skill identifier in some instances didn't match the grade or true level of achievement. By this I mean, a specialist six has the same skill level as a specialist four.

"Let's take the information specialist field as an example.

"After basic training, the soldier goes to a school for journalism training. The soldier who graduates at the top of the class gets the same skill identifier as the bottom graduate.

"Is it possible the number one graduate might have had a higher skill level than the soldier who graduates at the end of the class? Or that the bottom graduate might have acquired a skill level somewhere between rather than the lowest possible skill level?

"But the way the system of personnel management was structured, both graduates were automatically given the same skill level without any attempt to measure real quality. The system assumed both graduates were equal when, in fact, they may not have been.

"In short, opinion decided the quality of performance rather than thorough evaluation.

"Yet," Weber adds, "we treated their achievement — or lack of it — with equality. The system made no provision for excellence in training and learning or in performance by the soldier who cares, tries and works hard at getting ahead.

"EPMS aims to correct that by allowing a soldier to move from the bottom to the top in a job he or she likes, and with some solid help from the Army along the way," Weber says and reaches for his pen.

Weber begins to outline the training program aimed at taking a soldier to the top. The help he refers to involves five levels of specialized training.

They are BCT/AIT and four levels of NCOES: Primary NCOES, Basic NCOES to include the primary technical course, Advanced NCOES and Senior NCOES.

"Let me point out that each level of specialized training is tied to a skill level," Weber says. "I'll go into more detail on that when we get to the classification phase of EPMS."

Weber charts the NCOES training a soldier will receive or be considered for during his or her career.

He interrupts his sketching to say, "talk about a moving train! How the folks at TRADOC and here at MILPERCEN wish we could stop this freight for about a year and design the training — all cut and dried."

Weber shakes his head at the impossibility of his thought.

structure

Fourth, there was the DoD budget estimate — the squeeze. Peacetime defense budgets are a vise that turns one way — tighter. Congress holds the handle and the handle is labeled money.

SGM Weber shifts in his chair and begins drawing columns on a note pad.

"We have many armchair quarterbacks with quick and easy solutions to personnel management problems," Weber continues. "But many solutions fail to consider the dollar squeeze. The dollar drives the grade structure.

"Let me tell you something that is not very visible but damned important," Weber says. "DoD tells the Army how many slots we can have in the top six grades.

"For example, the Army's force structure requires about 72 per cent of all enlisted positions to be in the top six grades (E4-E9). The Army has seldom been able to provide the soldiers in those grades. DoD requires the Army to determine an objective grade structure based on personnel management requirements of the enlisted force. The Army did that and DoD finally approved a 63 per cent top-six ceiling. That provides the Army good promotion opportunity and the career progression necessary to sustain the enlisted force in line with our historically budgeted grade structure. But that leaves nine per cent of our documented top-six positions without the proper graded soldiers.

"In Sears & Roebuck language that means we need a grade structure change that has about 60,000 more E3 spaces and a cor-

Percentage of Enlisted Force	Actual Enlisted Grades	Authorized
E9 .55	3,740
E8 1.87	12,716
E7 6.68	45,490
E6 10.53	71,672
E5 16.71	113,800
E4 25.35	172,600

responding decrease in top-six spaces. DoD not only controls the top-six grades but further tells us what percentage of the objective force can be paid in what grades."

Weber points to a chart he has sketched on his note pad. (See Figure 1.)

"In addition to these DoD ceilings, DoD also controls the minimum time-in service (TIS) requirements for promotion, the percentage of soldiers who may be selected for promotion from the secondary zones and the amount of time that can be waived for promotion purpose," Weber adds.

He pauses to point out that the ceilings and authorizations on the chart determine also how much money the Army gets to pay its soldiers.

"It's like the homemaker trying to make ends meet on a tight budget. So much of the paycheck goes for food, clothing, gas and oil for the car, car insurance and so on.

Army Jobs By Pay Grade	DoD Approved and Funded
E9 - 3,740	3,740
E8 - 14,568	12,716
E7 - 48,753	45,490
E6 - 78,025	71,672
E5 - 132,691	113,800
E4 - 208,484	172,600

"Now comes the Army's personnel management problem," Weber says as he sketches another chart. (See Figure 2.)

"Management folks sat down with every TO&E and TDA in the Army and started counting jobs by pay grade. When the counting was finished, here's what the Army found it provided for and what DoD said the Army could have.

"It doesn't take a college graduate to figure out the Army has manning documents that call for more than 60,000 soldiers to be paid for jobs in the top-six for which there is neither DoD authorization nor money.

Something has got to give.

SGM Weber drops his felt-tip pen in a gesture of frustration. The two charts tell the story. But the figures do not convey the human emotion involved in trying to figure out a solution. The Army is indeed between a rock and a hard place.

Training -- the first step

The sergeant major begins a discussion of training under EPMS and points out commanders will conduct two levels of NCOES training.

"First, there will be a primary NCOES course of approximately four weeks in length for combat arms soldier. This course will be branch immaterial and train soldier for key duty positions of grade E5. This course will be mandatory for promotion in the combat arms.

"Training at this level, for the combat support and combat service support MOS, is being worked out by the trainers. Field commanders will select attendees for this course and it (PNCOC) is new.

"Second, the Basic NCOES course will continue under EPMS. This course aims to get the E5 ready for the key jobs at grade E6. The training will be conducted at installation/division level rather than at service schools for combat arms MOSs. Combat support/service support MOS training will still go to the service school for the primary technical course training," Weber explains. "Hopefully we will train more soldiers and at the same time take fewer soldier away from their units. We're talking about a four-plus week course with the soldier being selected for attendance by the field commander.

"Third, the Advanced NCOES course of some 10 weeks will continue under EPMS. The big change will be teaching our E6s the key duty positions of a sergeant first class. In a nutshell that means only E6s will be considered for attendance. DA will make the selection of soldiers to attend this course level training.

"Fourth, the Senior NCOES courses will prepare a sergeant first class for the duties of a master sergeant," Weber adds.

He pauses to point out that Senior NCOES will be a series of courses conducted at installation/division level in some type of non-resident mode. Participation will be by application.

"The Sergeants Major Academy has purposely not been addressed in connection with the five levels of training," Weber says.

"The Academy is considered the soldier's premier school and will operate under EPMS exactly as it does today."

Weber anticipates the next question.

"Attendance at any one of these schools will expose and prepare the soldier for the skill level required at the next higher grade. School attendance alone will not guarantee promotion eligibility. Promotion will depend also on performance. Performance is still what counts in EPMS," he says.

Stateside posts to lose post offices

An agreement is expected shortly between the Department of Defense and the U.S. Postal Service to turn over the operation of stateside Army post offices to the Postal Service. The actual turnover should begin sometime this fall and continue until the transfer of postal functions at some 13 installations has been completed. In some instances, the Postal Service may occupy on-post facilities but in other cases the postal function will be transferred off-post.

Because of this development the decision has been made to eliminate the postal clerk MOS 71F beginning October 1st. The change will affect some 1200 clerks but they will still retain an additional skill identifier

(ASI) in their records for later identification if necessary. Those soldiers now holding a 71F MOS will become part of the administrative specialist MOS 71L.

Current postal clerks at Army post offices will be reassigned on-post in the administrative specialty upon turnover of their position to the postal services.

The postal operations course will continue at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, IN. and future graduates will be awarded the postal ASI F-5, upon graduation. (ARNEWS).

Ninety-buildings are up for sale along with a new electrical-mechanical contract up for bid at Ft. Benning.

The Savannah District Army Corps of Engineers, headquartered in Savannah, will accept bids for the sale and removal of buildings at the military installation through September 14th. Bids will be opened at 2 pm on the 14th.

Included in the total of 90 buildings are 44 enlisted barracks, 10 male bachelor officer quarters, 8 general storehouses, 7 detached dayrooms, 6 enlisted messhalls, 4 recreation buildings, 2 exchange branches, 2 battalion headquarters, 2 motor repair shops, 2 dispensaries, an EM service club, a guest house and a drill building.

All buildings are constructed of wood and have either concrete pier or solid concrete foundations.

Roofing consists of asphalt or composition shingles.

The buildings vary in size from a low of 1843 square feet for the detached dayroom to 11,549 square feet for the enlisted service club.

Bids will be accepted for the entire lot of 90, or on each individual structure.

Prospective bidder may inspect the sale property by contacting the Facilities Engineer at Ft. Benning. Further information is also available from the District Engineer in Savannah.

A multi-million dollar contract for electrical-mechanical upgrading of Martin Army Hospital at Ft. Benning is also up for bid.

Work will consist of constructing stair towers, an emergency generating building (including 2 emergency generators) revision and replacement of heating and cooling ducts and minor work on exterior utilities. Construction also includes extensions of partitions above ceilings, and upgrading of partitions to meet fire rating standards.

Other work includes additions to the plumbing systems, fire risers and sprinklers in addition to some paving and curb and gutter work.

According to George Perdue of the Engineering, Plans and Real Property Office, the hospital project is expected to last at least a thousands days. Opening date for bids is October 6th. A network analysis system will be required for this bid.

Plans and specifications for his project cost ten dollars ($10) and may be obtained by contacting the Savannah District Engineer, P. O. Box 889, Savannah, GA 31402.

not satisfied with the system. "Obviously those who are satisfied are the ones who got promoted. Those who are dissatisfied are the ones who did not. The soldier's performance, their record, is looked at along with those of their contemporaries. In most cases, we select the best person. We miss once in a while but the chances for missing are drastically reduced under the present system."

Being a career NCO, the SMA is naturally concerned with leadership and the NCO corps. He has a strong point when he says that he feels that leadership is something basic, "... it hasn't changed, but being able to relate and communicate with people is what makes leadership work. You can have all the traits of a leader, but if you can't get them across to the other person, they are of no value." He feels that the really hard part of communication at all levels is listening. "You never learn anything with your mouth open, you've got to keep it shut and your ears open."

In addition the SMA feels that leadership in the Army is good. "The soldier is learning the basics of leadership. He is being taught by sergeants to be a sergeant... and that's important." Another strong point in the Army's leadership program is the fact that almost all of the NCO academies are being commanded by an NCO with NCO instructors. "I believe that the corps of the NCOs has come a long way. We're getting better, we've got better soldiers and they are getting better training. We should strive to make sure the person who replaces us is better qualified than we were. That's our charge. What we do as a corps is what we are judged on, the best, the worst and those in the middle... across the Army."

As the wave of the future, SMA Bainbridge sees the "total force structure" as taking the lead. "The total force concept will affect the soldier in much the same manner it will affect the nation... providing a stronger, more effective and efficient fighting force, a force better able to act and react in the event of a threat to our nation. The increased reliance on our reserve components, coupled with a smaller standing Army, places greater responsibilities on today's soldier. To sum it up, our soldiers, both today and tomorrow, will be better prepared to meet the challenges of the battlefield. (ARNEWS)

Vets advised to seek loan liability relief

Veterans who may be selling their homes that were purchased with GI loans should request release from their loan liabilities before a sale is completed.

"There's a very good reason for obtaining such a release," says Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler. "Veterans who fail to do so can be held financially liable for additional mortgage payments should the purchaser default."

During 1975, the Veterans Administration granted loan liability releases to more than 12,300 veterans. Approximately three per cent of that figure, or some 355 releases were received by Georgia veterans.

The VA grants

releases provided a veteran's loan is current, the prospective purchaser agrees to assume the veteran's liability and the purchaser is a good credit risk with sufficient income to meet the assumed mortgage payments.

Prior to December 31, 1974, veterans could qualify for restoration of loan eligibility only after the VA had been relieved of liability and only if the property was disposed of for what was termed as "compelling reasons."

Congress since has removed the "compelling reason" restriction and a veteran's entitlement may now be restored if the property has been disposed of and the loan has been repaid.

Nearly nine million veterans have received GI home loans amounting to more than $118-billion in value since the GI loan program was established at the end of World War II. The VA reports that more than half of the loans have been repaid.

Buses to shuttle AUSA picnic goers

Two shuttle buses will be available to transport guests from Main Post, Martin Army Hospital, Kelley Hill and Harmony Church areas to Victory Lodge, site of the 1976 AUSA picnic September 18th.

One bus will depart from Bldg. 4, proceed to Martin Army Hospital, and on to Kelley Hill enroute to the picnic area. The other vehicle will stop at all pick-up points in Harmony Church and proceed directly to the Victory Lodge area.

The buses will begin service at 10:30 and provide continuous round trip transportation until the final guest has departed the picnic area.

In addition, six buses will shuttle guests to and from the parking area near Victory Lodge directly to the picnic site. Again the vehicles will provide continuous service until all visitors have departed.

A special parking area for handicapped persons will be available near the entrance to the picnic site. Military Police will assist visitors with parking and directions.

Widows eligible for pensions

Almost a million widows and 797,000 children of veterans are receiving pensions from the Veterans Administration despite the fact that the death of their husband or parent was not directly related to military service. And even more may be eligible, according to the Veterans Administration.

Children's eligibility is sometimes overlooked by the family, VA believes, when the mother is not eligible because of income, remarriage or divorce prior to the veteran's death.

Eligible for VA pension based on need are widows, widowers and minor children of war veterans who died of nonservice-connected causes. The amount of pension is determined by annual income with no payments to surviving spouses, with children, whose annual incomes are in excess of $4,500.

Children's eligibility, however, is independent of the mother when she is not entitled to pension. Application should be made in their behalf to any VA office or to service officers of major veterans organizations.

The possible eligibility of all survivors is reviewed by VA when notification of death is received, but sometimes circumstances surrounding the veteran's death do not always provide information to identify all possible survivors.

There are no income limits on eligibility for survivor benefits for spouses and children when a veteran's death was the result of military service.

"A Ledger-Enquirer Newspaper published in the interest of the personnel of Ft. Benning"

Sept. 17-23, 1976

Annual AUSA picnic slated

For an afternoon of family fun, it's Victory Pond tomorrow from noon to 6 pm. See you there!!

"The Army in Action" is the theme for tomorrow's annual picnic sponsored by the Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) at Victory Pond.

Highlighting the 1976 AUSA picnic will be three new attractions, including two provided by the 36th Engr Gp. The engineers have constructed a 211-foot light tactical raft (bridge) across Victory Pond to make both sides accessible to rides, entertainment and games. The light-weight structure, assembled completely by hand, is capable of supporting up to 38,000 pounds.

Another new feature this year is boats rides. The engineers will provide two, 27-foot boats to transport youngsters back and forth across the pond.

Another added attraction to the picnic will be a Battle of the Bands contest at 1 p.m. on a special dance floor adjacent to Victory Pond. First place winners will pocket $200 in cash, second place winners, $150 and third place finishers will take home $50.

Each band will be judged on technical excellence, selection of material, showmanship and audience appeal.

Food, music, demonstrations, kiddy rides, displays and a carnival-type midway are some of the other attractions to be found at this year's event. Festivities will start at noon and continue throughout the afternoon to 6 pm.

The picnic menu will offer a wide variety of food, ranging from barbecue to hotdogs and hamburgers. There will also be baked beans, cole slaw, potato salad and club salad. Beer, soft drinks and coffee will be available as thirst quenchers.

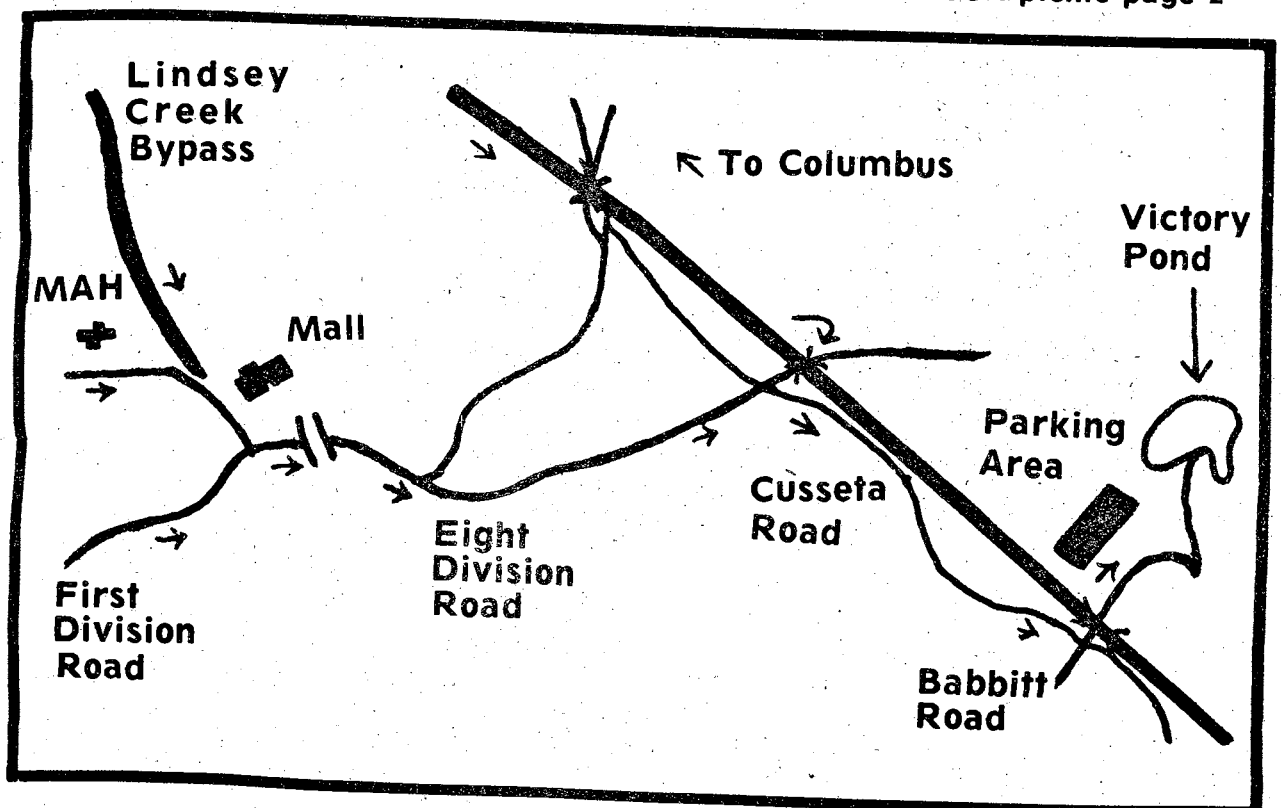

Displays will include a 175mm self-propelled gun, tanks, armored personnel carriers, Hustlers, Gamma Goats, parachute maintenance, marksmanship, medical equipment, Infantry Board weapons and communications equipment.

Rides for youngsters will include four ponies, a fire engine, Gamma Goats, Hustlers and boat rides. They will also receive helium-filled balloons.

How to get there

Signs and arrows have been placed on all major routes leading to the Annual AUSA picnic site at Victory Pond, and Military Police will be directing traffic at all key intersections. If you're coming from Main Post, take First Division Road past the Mall turn-off and Kelly Hill to Eight Division Road. Take a right on Cusseta Road, then left on Babbitt Road and under Victory Drive to the parking area. If you're coming from Columbus, follow Victory Drive (Hwy 27) under the first overpass, take the next right to Eight Division Road and then left on Cusseta. From there take a left on Babbitt Road to the parking area. Busses will transport you and your family to the picnic site from there. For the on-post shuttle bus schedule see page 2.

Starting at noon will be demonstrations of Rangers in action, followed by sky diving and a scout dogs show. Throughout the afternoon, the midway will be featuring such games as a shooting gallery, horseshoes, dart board, ball toss, coin toss with big and small prizes going to the winners of the game of skill.

Musical entertainment will be provided by the 283rd Band and the 197th Infantry

Chorus. Also for the younger set, two soldier disc jockeys, known as 'BJ the DJ' and 'the Preacherman,' will be spinning a variety of music including hard rock, jazz, soul and country and western, inside the lodge for dancing and listening.

Two shuttle buses will be available to transport guests from Main Post, Martin Army Hospital, Kelley Hill and Harmony Church areas to Victory Lodge. The buses will begin service at 10:30 am and provide continuous round trip transportation until the final guest has departed the picnic area.

Tickets for the picnic, $3 for adults and $1.50 for children two to 10 years of age — are on sale at the Columbus and Phenix City Chambers of Commerce, local banks, the post Public Affairs Office and from unit sergeants majors. They may also be purchased at the entrance to the picnic.

'Patriots' begin MICV testing

With grim determination SP4 John King of Co B, 1/58 Inf (Mech) scans his area of responsibility to acquire targets for his Firing Port Weapon (FPW) during testing of the new Mechanized Infantry Combat Vehicle (MICV).

By JOE DUGGAN

The MICV is here and the "Patriots" of the 1/58th Inf (Mech), 197th Inf Bde, will have the first crack at the Mechanized Infantry Combat Vehicle in functional field testing during Operational Test II (OT II), beginning October 1st.

Sharpening their skills since June, the tests will be the final step for the 1/58th.

Preparing for the test in several different ways the men of the 1/58th are using a complete wooden mock-up of the MICV (in addition to the actual MICV). A product-improved M113A1 Armored Personnel Carrier (APC) the MICV is equipped with firing port weapons and a turret trainer complete with 20 mm cannon and coaxially mounted 7.62 mm machine gun.

Teams from the Maintenance, Tactics and Weapons departments of the U.S. Army Infantry School have been instructing the "Patriots" in all aspects of the new vehicle, including maintenance of all systems, command and control procedures, mounting/dismounting techniques, storage procedures and new tactics designed to exploit the full capabilities of the vehicle.

MAJ Edwin Garrison, currently Operations Officer of the 1/58th and formerly of the MICV Special Study Group, was quick to point out that the test will remain objective. "The purpose of OT II is to provide data on the operational effectiveness of the MICV to the Army Systems Acquisition Review Council (ASARC). The Army will use this data as a substantial part of the information it will need to make a decision concerning low rate initial production of the MICV. There is no room in the test for pre-conceived notions about the vehicle."

The first actual vehicle arrived in the battalion on August 20th, with another four due in before October 5th. Squads from Co B, 1/58 (Mech) have already completed a Mechanized Infantry Squad Proficiency Course (MISPC) using the new vehicle and normal support weapons organic to the battalion.

Generally, OT II will ask and answer three basic questions: first, can the MICV keep up with the Main Battle Tank (MBT) on the battlefield? Second, how much better (mobility and effectiveness) is the MICV than the M113A1 Armored Personnel Carrier? And third, can the weapons platoon (Mounted in the M113A1 TOW Carrier and M125 Mortar Carrier) effectively support the MICV-mounted, mechanized infantry battalion of the future?

According to "Patriot" Battalion Commander LTC T. Haines Hill, by February the 1/58 (Mech) will have determined some of the answers to these questions and many more. Whatever improvements have to be made, the Army is continuing to perfect the best combat vehicle anywhere to carry the finest Infantrymen in the world into combat — and back.

VA questions and answers

Q — Due to a World War II service - connected disability I have been receiving compensation rated at 50 per cent since 1946, can this rating be reduced?

A — Generally a continuous rating for 20 years or more cannot be reduced.

Q — Are there any additional benefits for veterans who are rated as being 100 per cent disabled by the Veterans Administration, and in need of assistance of another person?

A — Yes. Veterans so severely disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person may be entitled to additional payment of $133 per month if receiving VA pension and $150 per month if receiving compensation. Veterans receiving compensation for 100 per cent rating due to unemployability are not eligible for aid and attendance benefits.

Q — I am a veteran going to school under the GI Bill. My son is also a veteran receiving benefits under the GI Bill and living at home. Can I claim him as a dependent and receive an increased amount since he is under 23?

A — Yes. The dependent's own service does not constitute a bar to payment to veterans of increased educational assistance payments.

Q — Is it true that I may personally review my claims folder? If so, what is the authority and how do I make the arrangements for a review?

A — Public Law 93-

579 (Privacy Act of 1974) requires that government agencies make available any records they may have pertaining to an individual to that person upon request. Contact the nearest VA office for complete information.

Evaluation: step two of EMPS

The enlisted Personnel Management System rests on four cornerstones: training, evaluation, classification and promotion. Sgt. Maj. Don Weber, a member of the EPMS task Force located at MILPERCEN, describes the system as a way for a soldier to move from the bottom to the top.

But-the key to the top is performance.

As SGM Weber explains it, commands will have the authority to select soldiers for the first two levels of training — primary and basic NCOES.

“Evaluation of soldier for the advanced level of training will be decided by DA selection boards which function in the same way as centralized promotion boards. A soldier may be recommended by his or her command for the advanced and senior NCOES courses,” Weber says.

He goes on to say that soldiers eligible for the Sergeants Major Academy will be reviewed and selected by DA boards. Total manner of performance again will be the deterring factor for selection.

Weber repeats a statement made earlier in the interview, “the Army has an obligation to help the professional soldier get from the bottom to the top, and the Army will help the soldier get there by preparing him or her for the next higher grade through training, either formal or through on-the-job experience (OJE).

The sergeant major shifts his body in the straight-back chair and begins a detailed explanation of the second cornerstone: evaluation.

“You’ll recall I said earlier that under the old system we trained a soldier and then awarded an MOS based on that training,” Weber begins.

“The old system could not identify whether one soldier was better than another. Professionalism and mediocrity were lumped into the same box.

“The system was like a compass that pointed to the ground instead of north. It told the soldier where he was—not where he was capable of going,” Weber says.

Editor’s Note: This article is the third in a series designed to explain what EPMS is all about and what it is doing for the professional soldier.

The problem, as he explains it, is like suiting up 15 guys for a basketball game. All 15 can play play ball but only five can be on the first team.

Through the EPMS evaluation phase, the starters will be identified from the benchwarmers.

The evaluation process is called Skill Qualification Test, SQT for short.

“SQT replaces the old MOS test,” Weber continues. “The concept divides SQT into three parts: written, hands-on and the commander’s certification.

All parts of the evaluation are performance oriented - a written portion measuring skills, a soldier should have at his current skill level and those skills he or she should have to qualify for promotion in that MOS to the next higher grade.

Weber explains a ‘hands-on’ evaluation may be provided so the soldier can demonstrate by performance his knowledge and skill. This evaluation is in addition to the written test.

“Hands-on evaluation allows the soldier to demonstrate in close to actual performance conditions that he or she can do the job,” Weber says, emphasizing the importance of performance.

As Weber explains it, the ‘hands-on’ part is sort of like the mechanic who has little interest in the chemistry aspects of engine. He just knows how to repair them correctly so the engines run like new.

A grin spreads across Weber’s face as he leans forward to reemphasize an earlier point: “It’s performance that counts.”

“SQT will sharpen the difference between the soldier with book-learning and the soldier who truly knows what has to be done to accomplish the mission,” Weber continues.

The third part of the evaluation may be the commander’s certification. There will be some tasks which cannot be measured on the spot, for example, bulldozer or grader operator. In these cases the commander would have to certify whether or not the soldier can do the job.

Once the soldier completes SQT, the test is scored. A high-pass means he or she has qualified for the skill level of the next higher grade. A minimum pass verifies the skill level of his or her present level. A score below minimum pass indicates nonqualification in the skill level of the present grade.

Weber emphasizes the SQT will be scored in absolute terms.

“There’s no curve,” he says. “The soldier will have a straight line chance to prove how good he or she really is.”

The sergeant major explains the application of the SQT score to the soldier’s promotion potential.

The soldier taking the SQT is not being tested solely to verify his or her current pay grade and skill level.

“SQT measures also the soldier’s potential to perform at the next higher grade,” Weber emphasizes. “The Army is looking for professionalism and the opportunity to advance it.”

As Weber explains it, SQT is like a college final. The sophomore taking the exam doesn’t take the test to find out if he is qualified to be a sophomore; he wants to know if he can move to upperclassman status.

“Those who fail SQT will take the test again the following year,” Weber notes, adding that those soldiers who have passed the test but believe they can improve their score by taking it again may volunteer to do so.

“Once EPMS is fully implemented, the Enlisted Evaluation Report (EER) and the Senior Enlisted Evaluation Report (SEER) will no longer need to solicit indications of a soldier’s skill. The report need only ask about the soldier’s attitude and conduct in performing his or her job,” Weber says.

Platoon Sergeant enjoys 'collection of mistakes'

By BILL WALTON

One man's mistake is another man's pleasure. This is particularly true if you are involved in collecting coins with errors stamped on them, as is SSG Stephen Hunt, 690th Med Co (Amb), 34th Med Bn.

SSG Hunt, a platoon sergeant in the 690th in charge of 20 troops and 12 ambulances has been a numismatist (coin collector) ever since he was a newsboy some 15 years ago. He is a member of the national organization, Best in Errors (BIE) Guild which is devoted to collecting coins with mint mistakes stamped on them. The errors are sometimes quite difficult to spot and to the untrained eye may even look like a scratch, but to a BIE member they may be the "find of the century."

SSG Stephen Hunt, 690th Med Co., 34th Med Bn. examines one of the coins in his mistakes collection. Like the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, he is still searching for the "super mistake."

Stephen concentrates on pennies to keep the cost of the hobby to a minimum. He puts all his pennies in a jar and goes through them every two weeks with a magnifying glass to look for errors. His penny collection includes 35 coins with mistakes in the "Liberty" and in his total collection he has almost 500 different errors, each one carefully noted.

He has over 3000 coins in his collection, all of them American, with the oldest being a 1796 Pinetree 1/2-cent from Massachusetts and the most valuable is a 1864 2-cent piece, worth about $250 due to the coin's scarcity.

But he collects for pleasure and isn't interested in selling coins. His wife finds it difficult to believe that his "collection of mistakes" is worth more than the actual value of the coins. Coins, even pennies, add up to a lot of weight and his collection is approaching the 100 pound mark.

Although there is a coin club in the Columbus area, he hasn't joined it yet as he is currently enrolled in night college classes. Combined with his platoon sergeant duties that doesn't leave much time for extracurricular activities.

Like most people who are deeply engrossed in a hobby, SSG Hunt loves to talk about different coinage errors. In every hobby there is a high point, or in this case a super mistake that all BIE members are searching for. This is a "silver penny" which is a penny stamped on a blank disc intended for a dime. The coin resembles one of the WWII zinc pennies, are quite rare and consequently worth between $150-$250 each.

SSG Hunt doesn't have a "silver penny" in his collection, in fact he has only seen three of them. But as he says "one may turn up in the next jar of pennies that I examine and that is what makes the hobby so exciting."

Camellia is an apartment motel. We don't rent rooms, we rent furnished apartments with all the features of a regular motel plus added conveniences that cannot be provided with just a single room — and all at the same, or most times lower rates than the single - room motel. For example, our "standard" unit is comprised of two bedrooms, combination living room-dining room, bathroom and fully furnished kitchen including refrigerator, stove, cooking utensils, and table service for six people. These are some of the "extras" but at no extra cost. Our 150 units are in separate buildings with usually four apartments in each building, which adds to a person's or family's privacy.

Scooter Pie's CB friends donate time, money

By "HOSS" KACI 4615

A wonderful thing took place over the holiday weekend: something that pulled the CB community a little closer.

It started Saturday evening when a group of channel one CBers got together to discuss having a picnic. At the picnic Sunday afternoon, SSG Pete Slagle suggested taking up a collection from those present and giving it to the Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) in the name of Mrs. Mike Jenkins who has multiple sclerosis.

Of course, the next thought was to get the entire CB population involved.

SFC Earl Waterman volunteered his home as a base of operation and the call went out over channel one. Within minutes, CBers from all over started showing up with contributions. Some of those who donated money also brought food and drink to feed the hundreds of people who were in and out of SFC Waterman's home over the next 24 hours. Children were also involved as they canvassed the neighborhoods and came up with just as much as the adults did.

Together with contributions from Companies B, D and F, 4th Bn, 1st AIT Bde, SFC Waterman presented the local MDA telethon over $3800, more than 10 times the goal the CBers had originally set for themselves.

According to Dave Clark, co-host of the local telethon, channel 1 CBers gave "... the highest single contribution in the Ft. Benning, Columbus and Phenix City area and the second largest contribution within the 15 counties covered by the Bruce Wilder Chapter, MDA."

Special thanks go out to SFC Waterman's neighbors for their kindness and understanding of the tremendous traffic jam around the neighborhood. Also deserving of special recognition are Karen Jenkins (Scooter Pie), SSG Pete Slagle (Aardvark), SSG Leroy Lentz (Hawk), SFC Earl Waterman (Hipshot), SGT John Johnson (Red Hawk), SSG Walter Barringer (Rifleman), PV2 James Uhl (Scattergun) and Mr. Nio Walters (R&R). These are the folks who worked without rest for the full 24 hours of the campaign.

Congratulations channel one CBers for a job well done.

"Scooter Pie" (Mrs. Mike Jenkins) applauds the new total after adding more contributions from channel 1 CBers. Standing behind her are "Guitar Man" (Mike Jenkins), "Hipshot" (Earl Waterman), "Aardvark" (Pete Slagle) and "Cookie" (Billie Jean Waterman).

Engineers do it on the water

By JOE HILTON

During a heavy fog on the 28th of March 1974, a barge went out of control and crashed into a bridge at Hilton Head Island, S.C. and separated the entire island from the mainland. The bridge suffered extensive damage.

Within hours, the 586th Engr Co (Float Bridge), 36th Engr Gp (CBT) was called upon to construct a float bridge until repairs were made to restore the original structure back to an operational posture.

The 586th (CBT) Engr are experts in assembling, erecting and when necessary, destroying floating and fixed bridges. Throughout their history the 586th Engr Co has been tasked with numerous float bridge projects in the United States and foreign countries.

Perhaps one of the most note worthy accomplishments occurred in 1966 during an unfortunate disaster in the Dominican Republic. President Hector Garoia Godoy of the Dominican Republic requested aid in rebuilding badly damaged President Troncoso Bridge at Santo Domingo.

The Department of Army directed the 586th Engr Co. to provide the necessary bridging and personnel to replace the marred structure. The perilous task was accomplished with speed and proficiency.

The float bridge serves an important function in war and national emergency. It provides a means of crossing with heavy tactical equipment required by divisional units during river crossings.

The large float bridge consists of a deck built of square hollow aluminum sections supported by pneumatic floats. In normal crossings a vehicle may travel up to 25 miles per hour. In combat readiness training the float bridge is also capable of supporting an entire infantry or armor division in assault crossing.

In an emergency, bridges can be assembled with limited personnel in a matter of hours. The 586th Engr Co. is fully mobile and self-supporting. The members of the float bridge company can load, transport, maintain and supervise assembly of its own or other tactical river crossing equipment.

Currently the 586th supports the Infantry School demonstrating river crossings, providing safety boats and scuba divers. Although their primary mission is building bridges and serving as a arm of the 36th Engr Gp (CBT), whenever requested the unit supports the USIAC to the greatest extent possible.

Men from the 586th Engr Co (Float Bridge) work feverishly into the night to complete the float bridge alongside the damaged

James F. Byrnes Bridge connecting Hilton Head Island to the South Carolina mainland in April 1974.

A quick look at recently released Army education statistics shows that 13,782 enlisted troops, 77,997 officers and 1,378 warrants have four or more years of college. However, most of the Army's enlisted soldiers — 631,789 have less than two years of college. According to DA officials, most of these have no college at all. Other stats indicate that 4,291 officers and 3,856 warrants have completed two years college while 2,024 officers and 7,036 warrants have less than two years college. Soldiers must have a high school education or GED equivalent for hikes to E-6. (ARNEWS)

Benning to cease-fire on long-range artillery

By Betty Zimmerman

With a resounding roar, the lanyard firing the last heavy artillery round at Ft. Benning was pulled. The move to delete the firing of 175mm guns and eight inch howitzers for demonstration was made in an effort to reduce supportive costs.

LTC John Sharp, commander of the 1st Bn 29th Inf, TSB, triggered the 175mm artillery piece during a live-fire demonstration for ranger students at Ferguson Range.

Since June 1973, two 175mm guns and two eight-inch howitzers have been used by Charlie Battery, Composite Field Artillery, to familiarize more than 35,000 students of the United States Army Infantry School with the long range artillery support available to them as members of the combined arms team.

The 175mm guns have fired more than 375 rounds and have impressed all who have seen them with their busting radius and extreme range.

The eight-inch howitzers have been fired more than 1,075 times and are known for their consistency and accuracy.

They have provided the 400 artillerymen assigned to Charlie Battery the opportunity to train and qualify on these weapons as well. They also have been used in static displays at Buckner Range and at many community events.

On the right is the eight-inch howitzer and being fired is the 175mm gun. These heavy artillery pieces will no longer be seen or heard at Ft. Benning.

Post soldier lifts his way to fame

By Bill Walton

The first reaction PVT David Gottlieb gets when he says he is a weight lifter is, "You can't be a weight lifter. They are all great big, muscle bound guys who walk real slow."

But weight lift he does, and his score of 497 on a recent unit Physical Training test indicates he certainly isn't musclebound.

Gottlieb, an aidman in the 690th Med Co 34th Med Bn, has been lifting weights for about four and one-half years. As weight lifting is not a recognized high school sport, he entered AAU competition as a prepster and later was a member of the Solano Community College, CA, weight lifting team. He was teenage champion of California three times; in 1972 as a lightweight (133-148 3/4 lbs weight limit), and 1973 and 1974 as a middleweight (149-165 3/4 lbs weight limit).

The championship was based on the total weight of the two disciplines used in weight lifting; the snatch which requires the weight to be lifted overhead in one movement, and the clean and jerk which permits a pause at chest height before the weights are lifted overhead. His highest combined total in the 1974 California championship was 510 pounds.

The soldier made preparations to compete in the US Junior Olympics in 1974, but a football injury prevented him from competing in the finals. His biggest success in college was a fourth place finish in the middleweight class of the 1975 NCAA Championships. Competing as a member of the Sports Palace, San Francisco, CA, team in the Far Western Championship in 1975, he won the middleweight class with a combined weight of 540 pounds, his highest total to date.

Gottlieb joined the Army in January 1976 and was assigned to Ft. Benning last May. He adheres to a rigorous training schedule, training at Audie Murphy Gym two hours a day, four or five times a week. After a few warm up exercises, he performs 15 power cleans which is picking the weight to chest level, using 250 lb weights; does several clean jerks using 225 lb weights; then snatches 200 pounds 12 times, followed by 400 lb "shrugs" which consist of lifting the weight to waist level and then shrugging the shoulders to develop the trapezius muscle.

At present the Army does not have a weight lifting team, so Gottlieb is competing under the auspices of the Savannah Weight Lifting Club. He has his sights set on the Georgia State Championship on October 9th.

The five feet, nine inch, 165 pound lifter believe that everyone who competes in athletics should put something back into sport. Practicing what he preaches, on a recent seven day leave Gottlieb coached a California team in the Junior Olympics at Charleston, IL. The team placed seventh overall and his younger brother finished third in the light weight class.

Gottlieb believes the muscle bound lifter of yesterday is now in the minority because of the elimination of the "Press" lift which was strictly a muscle lift. The two main lifts today require a combination of technique, speed and muscle explosive power, he says.

He enjoys the individual competition which weight lifting presents, and feels that it is an excellent way to develop overall muscle tone and coordination.

Driver training available to disabled Vets

Special driver's training for severely disabled veterans and military personnel is being offered by the Veterans Administration at forty VA hospitals including the Atlanta VA hospital, according to Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler.

Veterans and military personnel, having service-connected disabilities which entitle them to receive VA grants for the purchase of an automobile or van, are eligible for the special driver training program.

Wheeler said that special authorization may be extended to other personnel eligible for VA medical care if it is determined to be "medically justified by VA standards."

Forty VA hospitals have been designated as driver training centers. Most of them already have received automobiles with special adaptive equipment for use in the training program. In addition, driver training simulators are being evaluated at several of the centers for possible installation at all forty.

Any office of the Georgia Department of Veterans Service will assist eligible veterans in applying for the special driver's training program. Members of the armed forces, however, must be referred to the VA by an authorized official of his or her branch of service.

Eight-person star: a first for Benning jumpers

The Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Demonstration Team put together an eight-person star while in freefall last month.

This feat was a first in many respects — first time an eight-person star was completed over the main post, first time at Benning such a star has included a female parachutist and the first star that represented all the major commands on post plus the retirees of the Infantry Center.

The Huey helicopter from the 121st Avn Co, 34th Med Bn, and crewed by 1LT Bill Morris, WO1 John Dixon and SP4 D. Hawkins dropped the jumpers at 10,000 feet over the post's officers' club. The plan was for a 45-second freefall during which time the jumpers were to link together in a circle. Then they were to breakup at 4,000 feet and open their chutes by 2,500 feet.

At the command of "Go", the jumpers left the Huey with the jumpmaster, SGM Frank Norbury (Ret), assigned to hook up with SP5 Nina Garcia of the 197th Inf Bde. But after looking around, Norbury saw that SP5 Mark Peters of Hq Cmd, USAIC, was in a better position for the first link-up. Just as Norbury and Peters made the hookup, Garcia flew in and made the third connection.

Meanwhile, the other five jumpers were maneuvering around in the air waiting to dock into a slot. Next into the star with a very smooth entry was CPT Dave Grieger, Leadership Department, USAIS and President of the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute Club. Behind Grieger came SSG Bill Mathews of Co E, 1st Bn, 1st AIT Bde, making the count now at five.

This left three yet to enter, and the five circled-up were passing through the 8,000-foot level. Fifteen seconds had elapsed when the youngster of the team, both in age and experience, SP4 Bill Yeider of Hq Cmd, slid in between Peters and Grieger.

CPT Jim Correll, Airborne Department, not noted for his soft touch, but more so for his freight train hookups, made another such entry and nearly caused the star of seven to come apart. But they held on and the last man was SFC Ed Lovell, Ranger Dept.

Lovell, at 6 feet 2 inches and 195 pounds, flying through the air resembling a Walt Disney character, made the hit soft and smooth. This brought the star to its full and qualifying the unreachable eighth man, in just 25 seconds as they were passing through 6,000 feet.

The group broke up at 4,000 feet and all of the jumpers had their chutes safely open at 2,500 feet. Landings were made in the field behind the officers' club.

Starting at the upper right with Ed Lovell and proceeding clockwise are Jim Correll, Nina Garcia, Bill Yeider, Frank Norbury, Dave Grieger, Bill Mathews and Mark Peters, the Ft. Benning Sport Parachute

Cub members that participated in an eight-man star formation while in freefall status. Nine club members will perform skydiving feats at the AUSA picnic September 18th.

A first for the 1st

The Florida Ranger Division and the 1st Ranger Company located at Camp James E. Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, FL have achieved a USAIS first by accomplishing all of the USAIC tests of physical fitness to include the PT test, the five-mile run and the twenty-five mile road march in one day.

First was the semi-annual PT test. The advanced test was administered to all personnel under forty years of age and the special staff test was given to those over forty. The second event was the weekly five-mile run, which all completed within the USAIC standard of fifty minutes, with 50 per cent under 45 minutes. The final event, a twenty-five mile road march, was accomplished in eight hours with a top time of six hours, fifteen minutes.

Only two participants failed to achieve the USAIC goal of 400 on the PT test, and 87 per cent reached the Florida Ranger Division goal of 450.

RE codes can affect your future

For the soldier getting out, his or her future may be strongly influenced by a Reenlistment Eligibility (RE) code on certain discharge papers.

The RE code helps determine the individual's eligibility to re-enter the Army from civilian status. Previously this special code was listed on all copies of the DD Form 214 (Report of Separation from Active Duty) and was inadvertently used by potential civilian employers.

This has changed, however. The RE code will not appear on the individual's discharge which employers might see. It will continue to appear on copies which remain within the active Army, furnished to State Adjutants General or U.S. Army Reserve area Commanders.

Any individual who is separated/discharged may request a separate document indicating the reason for separation or ineligibility for reenlistment.

The following are the codes used and their meaning:

- RE-1 Fully qualified for immediate reenlistment.
- RE-1A Ineligible to reenlist for 93 days after date of separation.
- RE-2 Fully qualified for immediate reenlistment; however, separated for convenience of the government under a separation authority which does not contemplate immediate reenlistment.
- RE-2A Ineligible to reenlist in grade and for 93 days after date of separation.
- RE-3 Not eligible for immediate reenlistment unless a waiver is permissible and is granted.
- RE-3B Not eligible for immediate reenlistment unless waiver is granted. This code is applicable only to persons with lost time during their last period of service.
- RE-3C Not eligible for immediate reenlistment unless waiver is granted. This code is applicable to persons who do not meet the grade requirement in basic eligibility criteria.
- RE-4 Not eligible for reenlistment. Non-waiverable disqualification. This code include persons with an approved DA Bar to Reenlistment.
- RE-4A Not eligible for immediate reenlistment. This code is applicable only to enlisted personnel failing to meet the citizenship criteria.

It would be in the soldier's best interest to check this code upon separation. Anyone receiving a code other than RE-1 or RE-2 may find it difficult to reenter the Army after separation.

In Germany they call it Oktoberfest, at Ft. Benning it's the Fall Volks Fest but regardless of the name, it offers good food, drink, entertainment and best of all — a good time.

Sponsored by the Recreational Services Division, the Fall Volks Fest will be held on October 2d and is a combination of two highly successful Recreational Services events; the Volks March and the Beer and Wurst Fest.

The first half of the Fall Volks Fest will begin at Doughboy Stadium with three different running events, the first one — a 20-mile run will begin at 7 am. There will also be five and 10-mile runs beginning at 10 and 8 am respectively.

There will be an entry fee of $1 for all participants running for time who enter prior to September 28th. The fee for entries received after that date will be $2.

All those participants that are running against the clock will receive a patch and the top three runners in the following categories will receive an Olympic style medal:

Men — under 21, 21-24, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-45 and over 45.

Women — under 29, and 29 and over.

Awards will be presented at noon at Doughboy Stadium.

Participants who are not running for time may enter between 9:30 am and 3 pm. No entry fee is required and each participant will receive a participation Certificate of Achievement signed by the Commanding General.

Gowdy Field is the scene of the second half of the Fall Volks March beginning at noon. There will be live entertainment featuring a live German band, The Bells of Indiana, local bands and canned music to 10 pm. Food and drink, including German Bratwurst, Knackwurst, Brochen, pretzels and German beer will be available.

So if you're not fortunate enough to visit

Germany in October come out to the Fall Volks Fest at Doughboy and Gowdy Fields on October 2d. Everyone is invited to participate in a fun day for the family. For additional information, call 544-4516.

Puts doctor skills to maximum use

Acute Minor Illness Clinic: the patient aid

By Betty Zimmerman

Do you feel ill, throat sore, temperature rising, head pounding, chest rattling? What do you do — head for the emergency room? Hold it! What about the AIMC?

AMIC is the Acute Minor Illness Clinic at Martin Army Hospital. It has replaced the outpatient clinic and is operated entirely on a walk-in basis. That's right — no appointment is necessary.

It's an ambulatory care module for dependents over 13 and retired personnel which uses specially trained medical personnel to screen and provide treatment for patients whose illnesses do not require care by a specialty clinic. If the trouble is severe or requires specialized attention, the patient is referred to the proper clinic, such as orthopedics, gynecology, etc.

The disparity between the current demand for clinical services and the number of general medical officers available to provide those services has made it necessary to seek alternative methods of providing care, so that the skill of the doctor can be put to maximum use.

AMOS is the Army's acronym for Automated Military Outpatient System. An AMOSIST is a medical corpsman trained to perform specified medical tasks under the direct supervision of an AMOSIST doctor.

These AMOSISTS are experienced medical specialists when they received training as AMOSISTS. They receive two weeks of concentrated academic training at Ft. Sam Houston, TX and then 10 weeks of practical training before being certified by a physician.

The use of flowsheets which are prepared by the U. S. Army Health Services Command virtually eliminates any room for error. These highly skilled medical personnel see an average of 185 patients a day and on a Monday or Tuesday following a holiday have seen as many as 275.

The procedure for using AMIC is as follows: Go to the clinic wing and pick up your records. Proceed to the AMIC triage center where you will see a screener. You will be asked questions pertaining to your symptoms and by following a flowsheet, the screener will evaluate your condition and channel you to the proper place for treatment.

The clinic that most of the patients will be referred to is the AMIC or Acute Minor Illness Clinic. Over 65 per cent of the patients screened will be treated by an AMOSIST. The balance will be referred to speciality clinics for consultation and treatment on the same day.

The AMIC hours of operation are from 8 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. and 1 to 4:30 p.m. on Monday through Thursday. On Fridays they close at 3 p.m. The triage center, however, is open from 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 4 p.m. except Fridays when it closes at 2:30 p.m. The most crowded time is 10 a.m., so

Medical service cut for retired, their dependents

As of September 13th, certain Outpatient Psychiatric and Mental Hygiene services to retired military and their dependents were discontinued at Martin Army Hospital.

Patients presently under care at Mental Hygiene will continue to receive care. New patients, who are retired or dependents of retired and in need of long term outpatient care, will be referred to civilian agencies and practitioners for care. Consultation for diagnosis, immediate treatment of disposition will continue for other Martin Army Hospital physicians requesting these services for retired military personnel and their families.

This curtailment of services is necessary due to the shortage of enlisted and professional personnel along with a dramatic increase in the number of active duty servicemen seen at the clinic.

Make-up schedule announced

Physical exams: a must for school

Dependent school children who have not received a physical examination, make-up dates have been established and will soon be conducted at Martin Army Hospital Annex.

Dependent children Kindergarten through 15 years of age may obtain physicals according to the schedule provided. Dependents 16 years of age and older may obtain physicals by calling the Medical Exam Service, 544-4506.

It is requested that parents comply with the following guidelines prior to and during the physical exam:

- Bring only the child (or children) needing the physical.
- Since physicals will be conducted on Saturday, parents are requested to pick up Health Records the Thursday or Friday prior to reporting.
- A urine specimen for each child must be taken at home prior to reporting for exam. Collect the specimen in a glass or plastic container. Containers are available in Outpatient Records section of Family Practice.

No. 1 or No. 2.

- Bring identification and medical cards to the exam and when picking up medical records.
- Have immunization records checked now as health authorities in both Alabama and Georgia require completion of routine immunization before entering school.

Parents are requested to pick up their child's Outpatient Health record on the Thursday or Friday prior to reporting for their physical. Individuals assigned to Family Practice Clinic No. 1 or No. 2 should obtain their child's outpatient record from the appropriate clinic. Other personnel may obtain their child's Health Record from the Outpatient Records Section, Main Floor, Martin Army Hospital.

The girls will have their make-up physicals on September 25th and the boys on October 2d. Times of the examination will vary based on the first letter of your last name. If your names begins with 'A' through 'G' the exam will be given at 8 am, 'H' through 'N' at 9 am and 'O' through 'Z' at 10 am.

Additional information may be obtained by calling 544-1384 or 544-4190.

AMIC patient aid

the rush may be avoided by being there early.

The AMOSIST system is designed to decrease patient waiting time, improve outpatient care services and increase patient satisfaction.

AMIC is the place to go when you are ill — not the emergency room. The emergency room is for accidents requiring immediate care, not illnesses.

CHAMPUS news

CHAMPUS beneficiaries can continue to use nonavailability statements from a Uniformed Service hospital to obtain care at a civilian hospital which is located within 40 miles of another Service hospital where appropriate care could be provided.

At the same time, these beneficiaries are being encouraged to utilize the other Service hospital where the needed care is available, particularly when they are considering going to a civilian hospital near it.

This policy is a change to the recently announced Defense Department policy that had prohibited nonavailability statements issued by one Service hospital from being used for care in a civilian hospital which is located within a 40-mile radius of any other Service hospital where appropriate care could be provided. Before this policy was put into effect, however, DoD officials recognized that previously unforeseen difficulties for some beneficiaries could result. Consequently, the planned policy change was not implemented.

DoD officials cite the following example to illustrate the present CHAMPUS policy:

If a Service hospital within 40 miles of a patient's residence cannot perform needed heart surgery, but a second Service hospital further away can, the patient will be encouraged to use the second hospital rather than a civilian one near it. However, he will not be prohibited from using the civilian hospital.

The officials also point out that it usually costs less for both a beneficiary and the Government when a Service hospital is used rather than a civilian hospital.

'Flexitime' a morale builder

Flexible working hours for Army civilian employees, known as flexitime, may be just around the corner. Several TRADOC installations and HQs recently completed a three-month trial run, giving unanimous recommendations for continuance. Now with TRADOC's blessing, commanders may conduct similar tests at their posts.

TRADOC officials said in its test, there was no attempt to measure productivity statistically. However, most participants agreed that employe morale and the opportunity of uninterrupted working time in the early or late fringe times increased productivity.

Flexitime enables employes to arrange working hours to pursue evening classes, community activities, shopping, family needs or other interests. Traffic congestion, too, is reduced by staggered work hours.

Tardiness and use of either sick or annual leave in small amounts were virtually eliminated among those employes taking advantage of flexitime, TRADOC officials said. Here's how flexitime works. Employes fill out proposed work schedules a week ahead of time and submit them to their supervisors for approval. If workers arrive late to work, time can be made up that day. However, hours cannot be carried over to the next day.

"I'd rather do a tough job I like than a soft job I hate."

That's the way SP5 Tom Burt feels about his job in a Mortar Squad.

"It's rough every now and then. Especially when your unit's short of men and everyone's doing someone else's job too. But it beats doing the same dumb thing day after day.

"And you're only as good as the people in your unit. So even if you don't start out so good, if everyone pulls together and has pride in their unit, you'll end up with a unit the Army can be proud of too.

"As far as reenlistment goes, I'm going to reenlist and reenlist. I got out of the Army awhile back and got my Associate of Arts Degree. But I guess I couldn't get the Army out of me, because here I am. And if I had it to do over again, I'd have stayed in.

"In fact, if anybody tried to talk me out of reenlisting, I'd tell them to go to hell."

197th defeats 'Threat Force' in mock battle

It may be getting cold outside, but for the 197th Inf Bde things started to warm up last week when preparations for November's FTX were kindled with a Command Post Exercise (CPX), conducted on the northern end of the reservation.

"The last two" exclaims Pvt Jimmy Santiago, 3rd Plt, 72nd Engr Co, as he hauls sand bags for the 197th Support Bn command post bunker.

The "Forever Forward" 197th Inf Bde took the opportunity last week to assess possible shortcomings. According to LTC Kenneth Sines the Brigade's new S-3; "We want to determine now, just what has to be done, to see what people have to do to improve their technical proficiency."

The emphasis of this particular CPX was placed on communications and command control. "Each sub-unit within the brigade was tasked with systematic and responsive decision making necessary in planning and executing every phase of the tactical situations they could encounter in a combat environment," continued LTC Sines.

To make things more interesting, maps of Ft. Stewart were used throughout the exercise to give the commanders an idea of what the FTX will be like in November.

At 4am on Tuesday, September 7th the main elements of the brigade were alerted and ordered to move out to take up a defensive position along the Northern end of the reservation to combat the imminent danger that the "Threat Force" presented.

The mock battle raged for nearly 48 hours before the "Threat Force" was defeated. Throughout the problem the controllers kept commanders informed of the friendly and enemy situations through constant evaluations of each phase of the operation, which provided a needed assessment of the paper war and was the key to the success of the CPX.

Ft. Benning said farewell to its top fisherman last week. LTC Tom Ray, DDTD, USAIS in returning to Louisiana for duty. It was in Louisiana that Ray fished his way to the State Bass Championship in 1972. There are few fisherman in the local area that haven't benefited from Ray's knowledge or efforts either directly or individually. While serving as the Southern Area representative for the Georgia State Bass Federation, Ray made great strides in bringing dignity, respect and recognition to the sport of fishing. His institution of many ecology projects will be felt by Georgia fisherman for years to come. Sonny Harmon, well known professional fisherman, guide and businessman, spoke at Ray's farewell luncheon and summed up the feeling of local fishermen when he said, "Tom Ray is one of the finest individuals I have known. He has given his time, energy and knowledge to the sport of fishing and we will all be pleasantly surprised at the results.

Many fisherman often overlook the Reservation ponds and streams that offer excellent fishing for prevalent freshwater species: Mac Johnson and Randy Griffin recently Jon boated Upatoi Creek. Their efforts were rewarded with a nice string of three pound bass caught on 6" purple five-tail worms. Mac's only suggestion for fishermen who want to fish Upatoi is to think about wading it. "The creek is very shallow this time of year," states Mac, "We had to pull the Jon boat over several sandbars. The water wasn't over waist deep all along the area we fished."

If you like to stream fish try some of the reservation streams. You may Someone told me a story about that sage ol' fisherman Willis Goble and his recent visit to a mental institution. It seems that Willis, while walking down a hall of this institution, saw a patient fishing in one of the water fountains. Thinking he would humor the man, Willis asked, "How many have you caught?" "You're the fifth," replied the patient... You'll never learn Willie!

Ponder this until next week: 38-530,460 Americans applied for fishing licenses last year. Only 1,926,523 applied for marriage licenses. Does this mean that fishing is 20 times more popular than marriage?

Son joins dad in "Cottonbaler" family

By Gordon Threlfall

The art of soldiering became a family affair recently when 2LT Glenn Camp pinned on the unit crest of the 3/7th Inf "Cottonbalers", 197th Inf Bde and joined his father, SFC Samuel Camp, who was assigned to the unit last spring.

2LT Camp, a graduate of Baker High, once served as an enlisted man with the 82nd Abn Div, where he rose to the rank of Sergeant. After his discharge, he attended Columbus College and was commissioned as a Regular Army Infantry Officer through the ROTC program. "With dad in the Army, it seemed natural for me to make the service my career too" says the younger Camp. He is presently a Platoon Leader in Co B, 3/7th Inf and is scheduled to attend the Infantry Officers Basic Course in November.

SFC Camp is the NCOIC of the Cottonbaler's S-4 office. There he administers the battalion's logistical support. He plans to retire here in the Columbus-Phenix City area, where the family has lived most of the last twelve years. SFC Camp has a home and some land just outside Phenix City.

Even though 2LT Camp and his wife live in a trailer on his father's land, the two men find that their schedules are very different and they must drive to work separately. As SFC Camp put it, "occasionally we have lunch together, but for the most part, we're both too busy with our work to see much of each other on duty." When 2LT Camp does see his father, it's mostly on business, as he has the additional duty of company supply officer.

"Being assigned to the same battalion hasn't caused any problems," says 2LT Camp, "in fact, it is really nice, because the whole family is close, geographically, for a change." SFC Camp and his wife have one other son and a daughter who lives at home.

Being close, the Camp family enjoys renovating their country home together. "Presently, we're putting in a lot of our off-duty time working on Dad's house" commented 2LT Camp. "It may be work, but we do have time to stop and have a beer and talk things over." On or off duty, this is one father-son team that has something in common and enjoys it.

"Ok, Lieutenant. You use this form to request ammunition, right?" "Right, Dad." SFC Samuel Camp and his son, 2LT Glenn Camp review supply forms for the battalion that they are both assigned to the 3/7th Inf (Cottonbalers), 197th Inf Bde.

Computer aids first term re-ups

A computer is making it easier for first-termers and career soldiers to reenlist at three TRADOC posts.

Career counselors at Ft. Dix, N.J., Ft. Knox, Ky., and Ft. Jackson, S.C., have been testing the computer program, PROJECT RETAIN, since March 1.

If evaluators at Department of the Army share the career counselors' enthusiasm, PROJECT RETAIN will be implemented at 47 CONUS installations October 1.

During the four-month test period, more than 100 soldiers have reenlisted using reservations made on Project RETAIN and the remote computer terminal located at the Post Reenlistment Office.

Here's how the system works:

—A potential reenlistee tells the career counselor what enlistment option he would like.

—The career counselor dials the special telephone number and feeds in the soldier's personnel data along with a code asking reenlistment opportunities.

—The computer automatically responds with reenlistment options from which the soldier can choose, matching his/her desires with the needs of the Army.

—The soldier can then "make a reservation," which is valid for seven days unless an immediate decision is made.

The system is limited thus far to CAREERIST Group I first-termers. Group I are those first-termers with at least 100 on his/her latest Military Occupational Specialty (MOS) Test; a high school graduate (or GED equivalency); and not require a waiver to reenlist.

All other first-termers must use the manual reporting system.

Project RETAIN will cost $1.4 million to implement in CONUS. Eventually, the system may be used overseas.

Meanwhile career counselors are calling the computer system, "the best thing since sliced bread." (TNS)

CFC drive set $240,000 goal

By Betty Zimmerman

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) is in full gear with a $240,000 goal set to benefit the International Service Agency, United Way and the National Health Agency.

The funds collected will provide financial assistance to 47 voluntary health, welfare and youth agencies, some of which are in the Tri-Community area.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERVICE AGENCIES help people around the world who cannot help themselves. Included in this group are CARE, Project HOPE, International Rescue Committee, Save the Children Federation, The American Kor-Asian Foundation and Planned Parenthood-World Population.

UNITED WAY AGENCIES serve people within the local community such as Ft. Benning's Community Activities Association, Muscogee and Russell County Red Cross, Columbus and Phenix City Salvation Army, the United Cerebral Palsy Center, the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouts, and the Conchartry Council of Girl Scouts. The Urban League, Goodwill Industries, Tenth Street Community Center, and five Boys Clubs are also partially supported by CFC.

In 1975, the local United Way Agencies served nearly 97,000 individuals and 55,000 families through their programs. Other agencies aided by them include the Girls Clubs, Shepherd Home, Travelers Aid, Family Counseling Center, Legal Aid Society — Columbus, Mental Health Association — Russell County, Crippled Children and Adults — Russell County, the YMCA and the Listening Eyes School for the Deaf.

MAST makes 400th mission

Americus, GA and September 8th now have a special meaning to those who work in the 498th Med Co (Air Amb) 34th Med Bn, Ft. Benning, GA. It was this location, on that date that the "Medivac" company flew its 400th MAST Mission.

At 6:10 pm the mission was received at the unit and within five minutes the aircraft was airborne. Arriving in Americus at 7:05 pm. Over an hour delay was encountered at Sumter County Hospital while the patients condition was stabilized. This particular patient was an infant that needed to be transported to the Columbus Medical Center.

"Baby" missions are nothing new to the 498th. Since the MAST (Military Assistance to Safety Air Traffic) began at Ft. Benning in May 1974, approximately 78 per cent of the missions have involved infants.

USAIS welcomes allied students

Within the Ft. Benning/Columbus community, there is a group of 100 to 130 overseas visitors representing some 35 to 50 nations of Europe, Asia, the Middle East, the Americans and the African continent.

They come to Ft. Benning as military students at the Infantry School and stay for a period of nine months to a year. Although the majority of these allied students come to this country alone, some of them are accompanied by their families.

CPT Chwee Kiat Law, a 27-year-old member of the Singapore Armed Forces is one of the allied students attending the Infantry Officer Advanced Course (IOAC) 4-76. He has brought with him his wife, Geok Choo and his 21-month-old daughter, Karen Yu Ling.

CPT Law has served six years in the Singapore Army and prior to coming to Ft. Benning, his principle duty assignment was as Loy Commander of the 5th Bn, Singapore Infantry Regiment.

While they are here at Benning, the Laws have been provided with a military and civilian sponsor under the U.S. Army Infantry School Host Family Program. Civilian and military sponsors are provided to help the allied student and his dependents adjust to the unfamiliar surrounding and problems they may encounter.

Unlike many overseas visitors, the Laws do not find our people or customs very strange.

"Singapore is greatly influenced by Western culture," states Geok. "We have many of your customs over there and even the official language is English," she added.

CPT Law's military sponsor, CPT William C. Collier, a native of Fairfax, VA., is also an IOAC student. A military sponsor helps the allied student with his class assignments and explains any military terminology that the student may not be familiar with.

"Chwee usually explains military terms to me that I'm not familiar with," CPT Collier joked.

When he first arrived on post on March 5th, CPT Law helped to coach Youth Activities soccer games. (In Singapore it is called football.) It was while coaching the YAC teams that he met his civilian sponsor, Mr. William E. Lorfing, a 5th grade teacher at Dexter School, who was also a coach.

Mr. Lorfing and his wife, Carla, a kindergarten teacher at Wilbur Elementary School, have sponsored and invited many allied families into their home from Laos, Afghanistan, Indonesia and Nigeria.

This out-going amicable couple have been instrumental in helping many overseas visitors settle in the Columbus community.

The Laws and Lorfings get together for family outings such as picnics, cook-outs and many other regular American activities.

Language training workshop slated

For eight years, the USAIC Chaplain Division has sponsored English language programs for the many foreign born wives of American servicemen, wives of allied officers and refugees who live in the Ft. Benning area.

In order to train additional people to teach in the program, a training workshop has been scheduled for September 27-29th at the Religious Education Center, Bldg 2606, from 9:30 am to 2:30 pm.

Mrs. Angela Ryals of Columbus will direct the workshop. Persons interested in registering are requested to call Mrs. John Waldrop, Director of Religious Education, at 545-2366 or 544-4594. Each participant is requested to bring a sack lunch. Drinks will be provided. A free nursery will be provided for small children upstairs in Bldg 2605.

Conversational English, reading and writing classes meet each Tuesday morning from 9:30 to 11:30 at the Religious Education Center. An evening class will meet in the McBride School later this fall.

Re-up changes cut paperwork

SP4 Paul Moran is a first term soldier and wants to reenlist. The thing that he thinks will give him headaches is the never ending amount of paperwork involved.

Take heart SP4 Morans in the Army, DA has made some changes!

As of September 1, the Enlisted Year Group Management Reenlistment Procedures for first term soldiers who want to reenlist or extend over 12 months will be a lot easier.

Gone are the days when soldiers on their first term were categorized as Group I or Group II (with the accompanying paperwork). Instead Paul will be managed on the basis of his MOS strength (over - balanced - short).

The greatest change is the requesting/reporting procedures. All applications for reenlistment or extension in excess of 12 months for both first termers and careerists will be handled by telephone except in exceptional cases. Further details are contained in MILPERCEN message DAPC-EFF-F 240400Z Aug. 76. (ARNEWS)

ISGT lends Olympic expertise to trainees

By Bob Nordan

It's not every day that an infantry advanced individual training company gets the opportunity to be trained by three Olympic shooting competitors. But Co "A," 2nd Bn, 1st AIT Bde did just that last Sunday on the U.S. Army Marksmanship' Unit's Running Target Range.

ISGT Ed Moeller was a member of the Running Target Section at USAMU until recently when he took over as "top" of Co A. Moeller, a member of the 1972 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team and former National and Interservice Running Boar Champion, is a long-time advocate of the application of competitive sport shooting techniques to combat marksmanship training. When he became a first sergeant, he saw the perfect opportunity to put his ideas to the test.

On Sunday, the members of Co A travelled to Hibbs Range and tried their hands at hitting the "running man" target the Running Target Section had developed.

In International running boar shooting, the boar target moves across a 10-meter wide opening 50 meters down range. It must be engaged in five seconds on the slow run and two and one-half seconds on the fast run. This procedure was modified so that a steel silhouette target moves across a 13-meter wide opening at a range of 100 meters. In order to effectively engage the target, concepts of "leading" and "tracking" it must be understood and applied. This is where the expertise of the USAMU champions is very important.

In addition to Moeller, CPT Mike Theimer, National Running Boar Champion 1974-76 and a member of the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team at Montreal; and, MSG

Problems need solving?

Army-wide program to aid soldiers announced

GEN Fred C. Weyand, Army Chief of Staff, has announced an Army-wide program to assist soldiers in solving problems.

He expressed concern that the support being provided to assist the soldier and his dependents in solving personal problems is missing the mark and requires significant improvement.

He also emphasized that this is a command responsibility which requires corrective action and personal involvement by concerned commanders and supervisors in the identification and prompt resolution of soldiers' problems.

He noted that there are many Army-wide services and systems available for the purpose of assisting soldiers but he believes that they are not being fully exploited by the commander or the soldier in precluding or solving problems.

Therefore DA is designing a plan that will reinforce existing systems, procedures and command responsibilities. GEN Weyand stated that every soldier has the right to have his or her problem heard and resolved through the chain-of-command system.

Local implementation of these directives was stressed in this week's Commander's Conference by COL Harold Johnson, Ft. Benning's inspector general. He reminded commanders that they and their soldiers must be aware of the existing services available to anyone in need of such.

The Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Chapter Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA), has been named co-winner of the General Lyman L. Lemnitzer Award for making the best contribution to public education about the Army for chapters with more than 500 members.

The announcement of the award was made this week by AUSA National Headquarters in Washington, D.C. The award will be formally presented to local chapter representatives who will attend the AUSA

Record crowd at Picnic

Blue skies, sunshine and an old fashioned good time was the order of the day at the 1976 AUSA picnic Saturday at Victory Pond.

A record crowd — more than 6,000 persons — jammed its way into the Victory Pond area to enjoy the afternoon of festivities. Ranger, skydiving and Scout Dog demonstrations along with rides, displays and plenty of food and drink greeted the sun-splashed visitors.

Three new attractions highlighted this year's event, including two provided by the 36th Eng Cp. The engineers constructed a 211-foot tactical bridge across Victory Pond to make both sides accessible to rides, entertainment and games.

Another new feature was boat rides. The engineers provided two, 27-foot boats to transport youngsters back and forth across the pond.

Another added attraction to the picnic was a Battle of the Bands contest, held on a special dance floor adjacent to Victory Pond. When the dust had settled, the winners were: Ernie B. Hamm and the Night Shift, first place — $200; Savage Rose, second place — $150; Mad Dog, third place — $50.

Special guests this year included Brown Nicholson, president of the local AUSA chapter; and the Honorable Jack Brinkley, Congressman from Georgia's Third District, Miss Fort Benning, Vickie Walton; Frank Roberts and Jack Mickle, mayors of Phenix City and Columbus, respectively.

national meetings in Washington October 11-13th.

E. G. (Buddy) Sparks was president of the local chapter during fiscal year 1975-76, the period during which the award was earned and Brown Nicholson, Jr., is current president. Chapter member Jim Woodruff, Jr., is national president of AUSA.

"This recognition is particularly meaningful," said Nicholson. "For telling the Army's story is the real guts of what AUSA is all about."

"Through major events such as our George Washington Birthday Ball and annual Picnic at Victory Lodge, we not only gather a large number of civilian and military members, but we also present some type of meaningful program which recounts patriotism."

Nicholson said the local chapter is telling the Army story worldwide. "In a program we think unique, we recognize hundreds of Allied soldiers in training at Ft. Benning as honorary members of our chapter," he said.

"We can be proud of our achievement in meeting the number one objective of AUSA — telling what the Army is all about."

The local chapter is continually involved in active publicity, utilizing all media to inform the public about AUSA, the Army and Ft. Benning, functions and goals, local chapter activities, and by furnishing speakers, displays, position papers and information on AUSA and Army matters.

Columbus Mayor Jack Mickle presents plaques of appreciation to LTC (Ret) Herman Goldman, volunteer worker with Columbus Youth Activities (CYO); LTC Donald Hull, commander of the 34th Med Bn which provided mess facilities for 170-200 meals daily for CYO workers; LTC Wayne Boles, commander, HQ Cmd which provided housing for the summer workers; and Frank O'Malley, Ft. Benning's Recreation Services Director who acts as coordinating agency for the project. The City of Columbus and Ft. Benning joined forces to provide summer work and recreation for underprivileged children.

Proposed Division will change Engineer units

If the Army adopts the new division reorganization plan now under study, the division engineer battalion will drop the present division's bridge company, and will add more combat engineering equipment. More armored Combat Engineer Vehicles (CEV) would be added, along with Surfaced Launched Fuel Air Explosives (SLUFAE), and Surfaced Launched Mines (SLUMINE).

The changes would give the engineer battalion a larger role in boosting the mobility of the division, according to staffers of the TRADOC-based Division Restructuring Study Group (DRSG). The added combat engineering equipment would also serve to inhibit the mobility of enemy combat formations say DRSG planners.

If the proposed organization gets the official nod from the Army, the division's logistical organizations will also be in for some streamlining. The logistical base of the division would be more oriented to sophisticated modern weapons. More repair and technical services support will be pushed forward to the combat units.

Some testing of the proposed reorganization plan will begin early next year. (ARNEWS)

Military Police Corps is 35 years old

By Betty Zimmerman

The first recorded evidence of a Provost Marshal in the United States Army was in January 1776. However, it was not until September 26, 1941 that the Secretary of War ordered the establishment of the Corps of Military Police. Therefore, this Sunday, the local constabulary will join the rest of the Army police force in celebrating their 35th anniversary.

The MP Corps has come a long way from the Marechaussee Corps of the Revolution, the Veterans' Reserve Corps of the Corps of the Revolution, the Veterans' Reserve Corps of the Civil War, the camp-appointed Provost Corps members, and General Pershing's MPs of World War I. They were designated a combat support arm and branch of the U.S. Army in October 1968.

Ft. Benning's military police force, under the management of Provost Marshal COL Robert Reinke, consists of men and women from the 139th MP Co, the 988th MP Co, and the MP Platoon, HHC, 197th INF Bde.

These modern day MPs are trained to handle situations which require a thorough understanding and knowledge of law, psychology, sociology and criminology. They must have a greater sensitivity to human rights; the ability to make quick decisions; and the courage to persist in the face of danger.

The military police provide many services and although they are the enforcement arm of the Commanding General, their primary concern is crime prevention. There are five main activities within the local Provost Marshal's staff.

The Operations Section, headed by CPT Phil Hatcher, provides basic supervision and coordination of all activities of the uniformed military police in their day to day conduct. Five sub-activities divide the duties of the operations section.

The Military Police Desk handles all complaints, dispatches military police patrols to trouble areas, and provides many service type actions.

The liaison and Apprehension Section is responsible for all AWOL's and deserters in an 81 county area in Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Information is passed to respective police agencies in these states and they in turn notify this section upon apprehension of an AWOL or deserter. This office then picks up these personnel, processes them through police channels, and insures that they are returned to their proper unit.

The Traffic Section enforces regulations through citations, safety inspections, accident investigations, radar and roadblocks. Other areas of their responsibilities include ceremonies and escorts, traffic control flow and school traffic monitors.

The Narcotic Detection and Patrol Dogs squads are used to suppress drug abuse by detecting narcotics in the barracks, in cars or in any suspected area. Patrol dogs are used to patrol areas that are considered to be high crime rate areas.

The Fish and Game Section is responsible for enforcing fish and game regulations on all range areas of Ft. Benning. They maintain the hunting and fishing regulations, insure safe boating and swimming areas, and maintain pet control on main post.

First Lieutenant Helen Conway runs the Office Services Division which has the awesome responsibility of preparing, maintaining and dispatching all military police reports. They also maintain a card catalog of previous offenses; maintain and manage forms, keep files of the Provost Marshal Division correspondence; handle supply matters, prepare the traffic regulations; and control vehicle registration.

MP Investigators are qualified military police men and women who receive additional investigative training either through the US Army Military Police School or through an OJT program here at Ft. Benning. CPT Glennie Rowland is in charge of the Military Police Investigation Division which also includes the Juvenile Division.

The MPI's investigate crimes and offenses which carry a maximum punishment of one year confinement at hard labor or less. Some of these offenses include: larceny, vandalism, simple assaults, passing worthless checks and others.

The Juvenile Division is responsible for juvenile crime prevention, control and supervision of delinquent activities of youth, as well as control of undesirable conditions involving youth. They investigate possible cases of child abuse and child neglect on post.

Mr. Park Johnson and the Physical Security Division staff provide annual physical security inspections of post and unit facilities, such as, post exchanges, motor pools and unit arms rooms. They also inspect ROTC AND USAR facilities in Alabama, Florida and Georgia. Their purpose is to identify possible breaches of security and to protect personnel and their property.

"Army confinement facilities operate on a corrective rather than a punitive basis," stated 1LT Robert Brletich, Ft. Benning's Confinement Facility officer. The overall goal of this entire correctional effort is not one of retributive punishment, but rather the return to military duty, or barring that, to civilian life, the maximum possible number of military prisoners, as morally responsible and well trained men or women with improved attitudes and motivation toward their obligations.

These are proud soldiers who realize they provide a service to the military community. But it takes more than a dedicated police force to reach the post's goal of a crime-free installation. It takes a concerted effort of all members of the military and civilian team to secure personal property, protect government property and report crime in support of the police effort. The total commitment of the installation to these ends will in fact assist Ft. Benning in maintaining its viable Crime Prevention Program.

Typical AIT trainee, not so typical

PVT Warren Frederick is obviously not your typical Army trainee. Since he was assigned to Co E, 1st Bn, 1st AIT Bde on September 9th, he's attracted a lot of attention. That's not surprising since he possesses a physique that has won him numerous bodybuilding titles, including Mr. Universe in 1974.

Frederick first entered the Army on June 22, 1975. He took basic and AIT at Ft. Knox, and while there was the subject of articles in the Army Times and Soldiers magazine. Trained as a vehicle mechanic, he then went on reserve status in his adopted home town of New York City (he is a native of the island of Antigua in the British West Indies). He returned to active duty in September and was subsequently assigned to Ft. Benning.

Since his last distinction in competition, which was as runner-up in the Mr. International contest in 1974, Frederick has kept in shape by continuous training and participation in various bodybuilding exhibitions in several countries, including England and Germany.

The five foot seven, 205 pound muscleman says he trains an average of three hours a day, five days a week. "Two hours in the gym does you no good at all," he claims. "After two hours you're just starting to get warmed up." In anticipation of contests, he works out a little longer, from four to five hours a day.

For health reasons, Frederick is authorized double rations and an evening snack at the mess hall. He has to have soft drinks handy at all times, for quick energy. Also, his CO has allowed him a set of weights to train with on a temporary basis until his AIT training is complete.

Frederick has a message for his fellow enlisted personnel: "I want to help others to get along with the Army. I try my best to encourage people to stay in, for the sake of their futures." He is also outspoken on the subject of health. Totally opposed to smoking and drug abuse, he says he drinks "socially" and not to excess.

Eventually Frederick would like to run a gym and, if possible, to do so while he's in the Army. He mentioned he'd like to see a "Mr. Army" contest on the order of the civilian body building events.

But bodybuilding is not the only thing he knows. He also has eleven years of experience as a welder, and besides physical training welding is his main occupational interest.

Maintaining a build like Frederick's requires a lot of special effort, but it hasn't prevented him from leading a normal life. He is married and has two children. And, he has at least one edge over some of the other trainees: he doesn't have to worry about flunking the PT test.

Best education possible goal of new Asst. 'Super'

The Ft. Benning school system has a new Assistant Superintendent for Instruction whose goals are to see that every child receives the best education possible, tailored to fit their need and that the system is organized into the most efficient operation with the child as the center of focus.

Dr. Richard D. Vickrey is a staunch supporter of the individualized program which has been the philosophy of the Fort Benning school system. His plans are to strengthen the implementation and effectiveness of this program.

Educated in Tennessee, Dr. Vickrey has held various positions in the educational system of Tennessee and Virginia. His latest assignment was as principal of Norton Elementary School, Norton, Va., a new open-space school where team teaching, non-graded structure, multi-aged groupings, and individualized instruction in skills areas, learning centers, and career education were introduced.

Norton Elementary School was selected as a model of Diagnostic-Prescriptive Reading for instructional purposes by the University of Kentucky "Appalachian Education Satellite Project" in 1975 while under the direction of Dr. Vickrey.

He was listed in "Personalities of the South '73", "Who's Who in Virginia '74" and "Men of Achievement '75." He also has had many papers published and innumerable speaking engagements at educational seminars and conventions.

Haney aids team in CISM victory

By BETTY ZIMMERMAN

Ft. Benning trackman, PFC Wilbert Haney, helped the U.S. team win the Western Hemisphere Council International Sport Military (CISM) games in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil during the last week of August.

Haney and his team mates represented the U.S. by virtue of their wins in June at the Interservice track meet.

The 24-year-old, sheet metal repairman from the 121st Aviation Company, 34th Med Bn, captured fourth place in the intermediate hurdles and ran the first leg on the mile relay team which took third place.

He said that the U.S. team won over the 14 other countries because of team work by all the armed forces members. They trained hard at Fort Meade, Maryland for three weeks prior to their trip to South America.

The former National Junior College Champion in 1974 plans to return to college following his separation from the Army in October.

Theme IV work is rewarding experience

By Bill Walton

Taking time helping others to make their lives happier and easier is a rewarding experience. The time and effort of such individuals were recently rewarded under Theme IV of the USAIC Bicentennial program.

MSG Philip Richards, Mr. Gary Robinson, DAC, MSG (ret.) Henry Day and Ms. Penny Reidenbaugh received Bicentennial clocks to serve as a constant reminder of the time and effort they put forth helping others.

A volunteer commissioner for the Boy Scouts, Richards spends many hours training adult Scout leaders and acting as unit advisor to Troop 22, one of two troops for handicapped boys in Columbus.

Robinson performs volunteer work at the Columbus Medical Center as a technician. His job consists of assisting patients with meals, baths and taking them to other parts of the hospital for X-rays and tests.

Day has spent many hours delivering meals to handicapped Senior Citizens, taking them to medical appointments, shopping or visiting.

A volunteer counselor for the Rape Crisis Task Force, Ms. Reidenbaugh accompanies the police to the rape victim in order to support and aid them during and after questioning and medical examination.

If you are involved or want to become involved in a community project that is worthy of consideration for a Theme IV Award, there are still several awards to be given away during the last two quarters of '76. Contact the 34th Med Bn Bicentennial Committee at 545-4388.

39, 40-45 and over 45.

Women — under 29, and 29 and over.

Awards will be presented at noon at Doughboy Stadium.

Participants who are not running for time may enter between 9:30 am and 3 pm. No entry fee is required and each participant will receive a participation Certificate of Achievement signed by the Commanding General.

Gowdy Field is the scene of the second half of the Fall Volks March beginning at noon. There will be live entertainment featuring a live German band, The Bells of Indiana, local bands and canned music to 10 pm. Food and drink, including German Bratwurst, Knackwurst, Brochen, pretzels and German beer will be available.

So if you're not fortunate enough to visit Germany in October come out to the Fall Volks Fest at Doughboy and Gowdy Fields on October 2d. Everyone is invited to participate in a fun day for the family. For additional information, call 544-4516.

'Doughboys' return to Benning grid

By Betty Zimmerman

For the first time since the sixties, Ft. Benning will field a post football team this fall.

The "Doughboys," with all the accompanying fanfare of cheerleaders and spectacular halftime shows, have four games scheduled on consecutive Saturdays beginning October 30th. The games will be played at Doughboy Stadium against the Atlanta Police Department Centurions; the Macon Buccaneers, a semi-pro team; Baptist Christian College, Shreveport, LA; and Redstone Arsenal, AL.

The 40-man squad was chosen from nearly 150 aspirants during try-outs this past week. The competition was rough but that's one of the goals of the program, according to head coach, LTC Wayne Boles. He emphasized that the games will develop physical and mental toughness in the participants and provide entertainment for the other post personnel.

Assisting Boles on the coaching staff will be LTC Jack Barham, 1LT Dave Bankston, CPT Mike Cooper, CPT John Ross, SFC Jerry Johnson and MAJ Raymond Wagner and MAJ Jimmy McGraw.

Boles played college ball with Arkansas, Barham with Louisiana State University, Bankston and Wagner with University of Tampa, and Ross with Wentworth Junior College.

Something New

Cheerleading

Something new will be added to the lineup this year when the Post Football Team gets the 1976 football season under way October 30th.

The shouts and enthusiasm of cheerleaders that have always sparked football games at high school and college games will now be featured at the Post football games.

A squad of ten girls, captained by PFC Lisa D'Luhy, has yet to be chosen.

Try-outs will begin on Monday, from 6 to 8 pm at Doughboy Stadium. Any girl, active military or dependent are encouraged to try out. This is a mandatory meeting but for those who can not attend should contact Lisa at 545-2791 during normal duty hours or 545-2406 after five pm.

PFC D'Luhy has been a cheerleader and pom-pom girl for several years before coming into the Army and hopes to help make this football season the best Ft. Benning has seen with the shining faces of cheerleaders.

Benning women second in TRADOC softball

By Onetia Porter

Ft. Benning's Women Softball team eliminated four other teams to capture second place in the TRADOC Western Softball Championship at Ft. Rucker, AL.

The silver place finish is impressive, since this is the first year that a team from Benning has competed against the tough Western Conference teams.

The Benning team, led by Janelle Batiste, the Most Valuable Player, thought they would be eliminated in their first game, after leading 7-4 going into the bottom of the seventh inning against a strong team from Ft. Sill. With bases loaded and no outs the ladies from Benning combined a little good luck with skill pulled off a triple play and preserved their first game.

After the close squeak, the Benning Ladies dispatched Ft. Bliss 18-7, Ft. Rucker 7-4, Ft. Knox 5-3 respectively. Only to lose the championship game to a strong team from Ft. McClellan 11-8.

All was not in vain as SP4s Gina Johnson and Batiste were named to the All Tournament Team, both women are from Co A, HQ Cmd, USAIC.

"Gotta get 10-8 before you go 10-7, 10-4?"

By "HOSS," KACI 4615

Here's the check list: got your license application in the mail to the FCC, got your temporary license form all filled out, got your CB radio all hooked up, got the SWR down to a decent figure and you're all ready to key up, so what do you say? The first thing you'll probably want to do is get a radio check to see how well your transmitter is getting out. Before you do that though, check out your receiver. In other words, tune around the channels to get the feel of how people talk on CB. You'll hear a lot of jargon and 10-code signals; most of the jargon is self-explanatory, but if the 10-code confuses you, here is a list of the most commonly used signals:

- 10-1 receiving poorly
- 10-2 receiving well
- 10-3 stop transmitting
- 10-4 OK, message received
- 10-5 relay message
- 10-6 busy
- 10-7 out of service, leaving air
- 10-8 in service, subject to call
- 10-9 repeat message
- 10-10 transmission completed, standing by
- 10-17 urgent business
- 10-20 location
- 10-23 stand by
- 10-27 move to channel _____
- 10-32 radio check
- 10-33 EMERGENCY
- 10-36 correct time
- 10-77 negative contact

Just a word about using the 10-code: don't assume that everyone knows what you mean when you use it. I have asked for a 10-36 and been answered with a radio check. Also be aware of the difference between 10-17 and 10-33. 10-33 is for dire emergencies only — traffic accident, fire, robbery, doctor/ambulance needed, etc. If you hear someone breaking for a 10-33, clear the channel immediately as it may be a life-or-death situation. A 10-17 should be used for less urgent matters; for instance, out of gas, flat tire, keys locked in car, etc. Neither one should be used to report Aunt Fannie's false teeth missing or Uncle Elmer stepping in a cow pie again.

Now for the radio check. Pick out an active channel (on post, channels one and six seem to be the most active) and listen to see if anyone is using the channel. If they are, wait until they're through or there's a lull in the conversation. Then key the mike and ask for a break. Be sure to give some kind of identification — your handle or a number; for example, "Sam Handwich standing by," or "246 for a break, please." Someone should come back and either give you the break or ask you to stand by while others ahead of you on the list take theirs.

Once you get the break, identify yourself and ask for a radio check: "This is the Purple Shotgun, how about a radio check, please?" Somebody will come back and say something like "I got a real 10-2 copy on you" or "You're laying a solid nine-pounder on me." This last comment refers to the reading on a signal strength meter most CBs are equipped with. Generally, a reading from one to four is poor, five to eight is good and nine or more is excellent. You may then continue the conversation along the same line.

Remember though, that you're limited to only five minutes of conversation, after which you must relinquish the channel. When you sign off you must also state your FCC call sign —, "Thanks for the break. This is Hoss, KACI 4615, clear." You're operating illegally if you don't do this.

Identify yourself as a new CBER and you'll find that the majority of people will be more than glad to talk to you as long as you're courteous and follow the rules.

Vote: It's your turn to be heard!

By T. R. Weller

The conventions and primaries are over and as the political rhetoric and campaign get into full swing, military personnel have a real opportunity to be heard.

How? By voting.

Not only are Americans electing a President and Vice President, but also 34 US Senators, one-third of the members of the House of Representatives, 14 Governors and thousands of state and local officials.

The general elections affect everyone, but it has a particular impact on military personnel. Those elected officials are the same individuals that decide the answers to important issues and also determine the policies that govern military and civilian careers.

The military, through the Federal Voting Assistance Act, places a high priority on assisting servicemembers who wish to cast their vote whether in person or through the absentee ballot program.

Many of us have already filed our Federal Application for Absentee Ballot (FPCA) with our local county officials, but many of us are quite at ease just sitting back and letting the US take care of itself.

In 1972, 58,567,000 Americans earned the right to vote, but decided that the election of highest public official in the US was not worth the time to cast their ballot. Forty-three per cent of all registered voters stayed home.

1972 was the first election opened to 18, 19 and 20 year-olds, but fifty-two per cent of that group also stayed home election day. Wasn't that the year everyone had been waiting for for so long?

But let's look at it from the military point of view. Less than twenty per cent of eligible military voters bothered to cast their ballots. Strange paradox, as the outcome of such important issues as military pay and benefits, taxes, foreign policy and national security are determined by these elected officials.

The United States is the first government in modern history established on the right of its people to vote — but why don't the people choose to vote? Individuals in the Armed Forces who did not vote in the 1972 elections cited two significant reasons for not voting. Only twenty per cent of those eligible indicated that they were very interested in the elections and nearly half of the eligible voters indicated that they simply chose not to vote. Paradoxically, the president is also the commander-in-chief of the Armed Forces. The only link in the chain of command that the servicemember has anything to say about but over seventy per cent didn't care enough to vote.

Public law now requires a personal, in-hand delivery of a FPCA or Standard Form 76 to all eligible military voters and their eligible dependents by September 15th. If you did not receive your FPCA, consult with your unit voting officer ASAP, time is running out for absentee voters.

Everyone who uses the FPCA must complete its sections correctly and thorough. If election cannot read the information submitted or if part of the FPCA is not completed, an absentee ballot may not be mailed.

A word to the wise, once you receive your ballot check the directions with extra care as some states require that the envelope be opened in the presence of an officer or notary public.

November is only a month away, so start now if you have not already. File your FPCA, and examine the issues and candidates with care so that you may vote intelligently when your ballot reaches you. Vote Democratic or Republican, Independent or Libertarian or write-in the candidate of your choice — the decision is yours. But the responsibility to vote is also yours.

Metrics will soon be the rule

An international standard of weights and measures has become increasingly necessary with the changing times. A "standard of standards" is required in this shrinking world of improved transportation, communications and active international trade.

More and more, the nations of the world have been adopting the metric system — including England, the nation from which we adopted the system used in the United States.

Although metrics may seem like a foreign language when compared to our system of inches, feet and yards, it is, in reality, the simpler system.

The metric system is a decimal system — based on the number 10. All areas within the system relate to each other, whether it is weight, distance or capacity.

A gram is the unit of weight, a liter the unit of capacity and the cubic meter the measure for volume.

To illustrate the relationship of one measure to another, consider that 10 millimeters equal a centimeter, 10 centimeters equal a decimeter and 10 decimeters equal a meter. Their relationship to our present system, however, is hopelessly complex in terms of exact comparisons. For example, a meter is 39.37 inches, or 3.37 inches greater than a yard.

Our present system does not lend itself to simple arithmetic, because it is not based on a system of tens. Moreover, the complicated use of fractions in our English System will be eliminated following adoption of the metric system.

To assist in the transition, the National Bureau of Standards has published a concise package of metric information that will be very beneficial to teachers, students, business people and consumers in understanding and using the metric system of measurement.

The package includes a handy, wallet-size card which converts customary units of measure into metric units and vice versa; a 15-centimeter (6-inch) ruler, a copy of "What about Metric," a publication which explains in simple terms all anyone needs to know about using metric in daily living; a brief history of measurement systems that includes a colorful chart explaining metric, a bibliography of metric information; and a summary of where we stand in the switch to metric.

Copies of the kit may be purchased from the Superintendent of DOCUMENTS, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. 20402. The cost of each kit is $2 with a 25 per cent discount for orders of 100 or more.

Improper ID info may cause problems

The replacement of the current Central Registry System at the USA Finance and Accounting Center may cause problems for personnel with discrepancies in their identification information.

The old system verified a member's identification if the service member's social security number and first six characters of the last name matched both the MILPERCEN and Social Security Administration (SSA) Master Files.

The new method, DA Name and Social Security Number Central Registry System (DANSCRs), will have to be reverified with both master files.

One major verification problem expected is female service members who have married and indicated the change on the Master Military Pay File (MMPF) but have neglected to make the change with SSA or MILPERCEN.

Personnel who have not informed the SSA of such changes should immediately complete Form AAN-7003 (Request for Change in Social Security Records). Forms are available in the Military Personnel Office. Any incorrect information discovered in personnel files should be brought to the attention of the MILPO.

Editor's Note: The following is the fourth and a final article explaining what EPMS is all about.

The third cornerstone of EPMS is classification. SGM Weber calls it the real glue which brings professionalism together through EPMS. He says it is through the classification process EPMS stresses and proves the importance of professionalism.

Weber recounts the old system for identifying a soldier's skill level and begins a sketch of the skill identification system to be used under EPMS.

- 11B1Privates through Corporal/Spec 4
- 11B2-Sergeants
- 11B3-Staff Sergeant
- 11B4-Sergeants First Class
- 11B5Master Sergeants

These five skill levels will be determined by the SQT discussed earlier.

"SQT results will do two things," Weber notes.

"First, the SGT will verify the current skill level of the soldier. An E5 who fails to verify skill level 2 knows he or she has some work cut out for him or her. It says the soldier failed his or her most recent SQT. And, the soldier knows he or she has to take the test again next year. The soldier must pass it if he or she wants to retain the current MOS or even stay in the Army. In short, it's perform or face possible reclassification reduction for inefficiency or being denied reenlistment.

"Second, the SQT score will identify a soldier qualified for the stripes of the next higher grade.

"A moment ago, I said classification is the real glue that holds EPMS together," Weber reminds. "Now let's take a look at why classification is so important."

Weber cites the hypothetical case of John Doe who is a specialist four in an infantry platoon.

"Under the old system of MOS testing and classification, we know only that Doe has an MOS of 11B20.

Classification -- st

"All we know is that Doe is a spec four and his skill level corresponds to that grade. We don't know how good Doe really is. The only way we could know is to watch promotion orders and, should Doe be promoted, we would know he was doing a good job. But — after promotion, we still don't know how well Doe is advancing professionally.

"The EPMS classification process answers the question," Weber says, and he proceeds to explain why and how.

Under EPMS classification, Doe takes the SQT and obtains his commander's certification, if applicable.

Let's assume Doe completed the evaluation with a mark of high pass.

In a nutshell, it means Doe has dibs on promotion consideration because he has professionally demonstrated he is ready for the hike.

Now let's consider another specialist four, John Smith.

Smith takes the same SQT with Doe. Smith is scored with a minimum pass. He is not awarded the skill identifier for the next higher grade and cannot compete for promotion.

Why?

Because promotion under EPMS will go only to soldiers who have completed their education or on-the-job experience, are in the high pass category, and have the higher skill level.

If Smith wants to get favorable promotion consideration, he has to work harder and score better on the SQT when it is given again next year.

Doe, meanwhile, is likely to be promoted and would then be tested at the 11B30 skill level the next time around.

In short, classification under EPMS seeks to show supervisors and managers where a soldier is going, not where he has been.

Weber points out that in these two examples we have been talking about the semi-centralized promotion system.

"EPMS plans call for continuing the present system," Weber adds.

"Commander will have the authority to promote through pay grade E4. DA will provide some influence on promotion to grades E5 and E6 through promotion cut-off scores and other measurable promotion qualification guidelines.

"Promotion to sergeant first class and above will continue to be determined by DA selection boards," Weber says and notes he wants to talk about promotion in greater detail a little later.

He goes back to classification and discusses how a soldier qualifies for classification in a specific skill level.

"Earlier I talked about the five levels of training, and I said each of these formal training programs is designed to help the soldier get promoted to the next higher grade," Weber begins.

Promotio

The Army has established three levels of promotion authority: decentralized, semi-centralized and DA Selection Boards.

Decentralized promotion authority rests with the unit commander. The commander has the authority to promote through pay grades E4.

Semi-centralized promotion authority is delegated to the field where promotion boards are convened to consider soldiers for advancement to grades E5 and E6. The soldier receives promotion points for such achievements as education, military schools, MOS scores, awards, etc. The soldier also receives points by appearing before locally convened promotion boards. Points from these two sources are totaled.

DA enters into the promotion process at this point and controls the number of promotions to E5 and E6 by announcing monthly promotion cut-off scores for each MOS. Soldiers with enough points to match or beat the cut-off scores are promoted.

DA centralized promotion boards are convened at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind. These boards, headed by a general officer, review the official military personnel files of soldiers eligible for consideration for promotion to the rank of sergeant first class, master sergeant and sergeant major.

SGM Don Weber, a member of the EPMS Task Force, MILPERCEN, reemphasizes a point made earlier in this discussion of EPMS.

"Passing the SQT does not guarantee promotion. It is only half of the requirement for selection to the next higher grade level. Passing the SQT with a high pass and with the required education or OJE make the soldier eligible to compete against all other people who took the test and also got a high passing score. The high pass is the score we want the soldier to aim for on the SQT," Weber says.

Up to now Weber's explanation of the four cornerstones of EPMS can be illustrated by comparing the objectives of EPMS to the formation of a professional basketball team.

Step three in EMPS

"Not all soldiers will be selected to attend formal training, but that doesn't mean they aren't good soldiers or that they should not be given the chance to prove they, too, can qualify for the higher skill classification.

"EPMS provides a way for them, too," Weber says and begins to talk about on-the-job experience mentioned earlier.

"I didn't say on-the-job training," he reminds. "I said on-the-job experience (OJE). There is a difference.

OJE means the soldier has served for a certain period of time in his or her PMOS to prove he or she can do the job.

"The OJE soldier must pass the test, just like the school graduate in order to qualify for the skill level of the next higher grade," Weber continues.

"A soldier not selected for formal schooling in his or her MOS must complete a period of six months OJE to qualify for skill levels 2 and 3.

"OJE for skill level 4 and 5 will require 12 months experience.

"If the OJE soldier fails the SQT, the soldier has a year to bone up and get ready to take the test again," Weber says.

The interview has been long. Weber has patiently plodded through the official language of EPMS to tell the story in soldier language.

Like a beagle nosing a hot trail, Weber has kept the interview on line and has not been easily sidetracked by off-the-wall questions.

With a ring of finality in his voice, SGM Weber says our discussion has reached the fourth cornerstone and the most important part of EPMS—promotion.

...n!! the fourth and final step

The coach says he wants to conduct tryouts. All basketball players are interested in trying to make the team. The coach begins to lay down some qualifications that separate the hopefuls.

First, the coach says candidates must be at least six-four, weigh not less than 195 and have a lifetime college scoring average of 18 points per game.

Right off the bat, the coach has narrowed the field. What's more the guys who suit up for tryouts know the quality of the competition they face.

The interlock of EPMS is the same way. It aims to put all the professional soldiers into competition with one another. The soldiers who have their stuff together and can prove they can score won't have to dribble around through the crowd to get a shot at the promotion basket.

"EPMS takes the mechanics of the present Army promotion system and adds the number one ingredient," Weber says. "It adds proof of performance. Either the soldier can hack it or he can't."

Weber concludes the discussion of promotion on this point: EPMS measures performance and potential.

The old system allowed the EER to unduly influence skill evaluation. We all know the faults of that approach.

How many soldiers have you known who could talk a good story, soldiers who specialized in blowing smoke, who gave the impression of really having their act together, but when it came down to the nitty-gritty they were always a day late and a dollar short.

EPMS will look at the soldier through a pair of field glasses. One lens is marked PMOS performance and knowledge as measured by SQT. The other lens is marked duty performance attitude and pride in being a soldier as measured by EERs/SEERs. The sharp focus ring is EPMS and the clarity of the image depends upon the soldier. Only he or she can decide whether his or her image of professionalism will be razor sharp.

A Parting shot

The foundation of EPMS was poured in 1973 when Army Chief of Staff General Creighton W. Abrams approved the enlisted force management plan and directed MILPERCEN and TRADOC to initiate a study of our enlisted personnel management system with the objective of a better mesh between our management plan and management system.

Day to day functions of EPMS Development rest with eight soldiers who serve on the EPMS Task Force which was established by Chief of Staff Memorandum 74-5-9 on Jan. 14, 1974.

Decisions are not hastily made.

Each idea is translated into a "straw man" and sent out for evaluation by every agency or command that has the slightest interest in the subject. The Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, HQ, DA has final approval authority on all proposals before they are implemented.

The EPMS Task Force has the mission of examining every career field and offering recommendations. There is no quota of MOSs to be eliminated; the objective is to find compatible mergers that will favor effective and efficient career management.

It takes two years to fully implement a career management field (CMF). Oct. 1, 1977 is the target date for implementing the last group of CMFs with the objective that all soldiers in the Army will have the professional benefits of EPMS by the fall of 1979.

By that date the Army hopes to have authorization documents that are compatible with DoD force and grade authorizations and, most importantly, budget allocations.

EPMS is not nor will it be a panacea for soldier management. It is a well defined course in the direction of the objective all of us want, soldiers and citizens alike: a professional Army that offers its members pride in service and a chance to get ahead.

That's what our way of life is all about.

What idea could be good enough to gain the support of 50 Governors, 500 Mayors, 237 Congressmen and one President? National Hunting and Fishing Day. President Ford has declared tomorrow National Hunting and Fishing Day in honor of America's hunters and fishermen. The proclamation reads in part:

"Because of the outstanding contributions that America's hunters and fishermen have made to conservation, recreation and the economy, they are deserving of special recognition."

"Since the turn of the century, hunters and anglers have been the leaders in nearly all major conservation program. These sportsmen-conservationists are responsible for the founding of state fish and game departments in all 50 states. They asked that they, themselves, be required to buy licenses and that the money collected be used to support state conservation agencies. In the last 50 years alone, these sportsmen have provided $2.5-billion for conservation programs."

"Hunters and fishermen asked for the establishment of regulated seasons and bag limits so that sportsmen could harvest the annual crop of game and fish without damage to the basic breeding population. The result has been that there are now more deer, elk, antelope and wild turkey in the United States than there were 10 years ago. Further, sportsmen's programs have benefited numerous species of non-game fish and wildlife through habitat development."

"Hunters and fishermen, unique in all America, asked that their fishing and hunting equipment be taxed and that the money be used for land acquisition, research and habitat management for fish and wildlife for the enjoyment of all Americans."

It looks as if our nation's hunters and anglers are finally getting some much deserved recognition. However, there is much we can do as individuals to join the battle for a better environment and the wise use of our national resources. If we all do our part, future generations will enjoy the benefits of our efforts. Ponder this until next week: The only time a fisherman tells the truth is when he says another fisherman is lying.

VA explains DIC, service-connected deaths

Confusion sometimes arises concerning two types of monthly benefits payable by the Veterans Administration to veterans' dependents for a service-connected death. These benefits are known as death compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation" (DIC).

Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler explained that death compensation is payable to widows, children and dependent parents of veterans who died prior to January 1, 1957, provided such death in service was in line of duty, or if after discharge or release from active duty, death is determined by the VA to be service-connected.

A person entitled to receive death compensation may elect to receive DIC instead, but once such an election has been made, the decision may not be rescinded. DIC is payable in case of death on or after January 1, 1957, provided such death is determined to be service-connected. The amount of dependency and indemnity compensation payable to a widow and children is based on the pay grade of the widow's deceased husband.

Since May 1, 1974, the monthly rates of both death compensation and DIC, payable to widows and parents, are subject to an increase of 64 dollars if they are patients in a nursing home, or if they are helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person. The amount of DIC payable to parents is determined by the amount of income being received by the parents.

Detailed information about death compensation and DIC may be obtained from any office of the Georgia Department of Veterans Service.

CFC monies reach $8,883

The 1977 Tri-City Combined Federal Campaign, which benefits the United Way, the National Health Agencies, and the International Service Agencies, is now well under way with $8,883.00 collected and pledged as of September 21st. Jim Schoonover, the Ft. Benning Project Officer for the campaign, said, "If we continue at this rate, we'll easily make our goal."

In 1975, personnel throughout 519 Federal Government locations donated over $65.8 million during the 1976 Combined Federal Campaign.

Locally, civilian and military personnel contributed over $243,000 in the last campaign, which was an 11 per cent increase over the previous year. Of this amount, $192,184 went to the local United Way; $38,728 to the National Health Agencies; and $12,855 went to the International Service Agencies.

Post crime rate lowest in two years

Ft. Benning's overall crime rate was at its lowest point in two years at the end of the fourth quarter of FY '76.

Credited with the drop are command influence and a flexible pattern of patrolling, according to COL Robert Reinke, Provost Marshal. The military police use a combination of patrolling techniques to maximize the effectiveness of law enforcement on post.

Saturation of military police in areas that have a history of problems is used alternately with a system of pinpoint patrolling. In this way lawbreakers and potential lawbreakers are unable to predict when and where a patrol car may appear.

Total crime for the fourth quarter is down to a count of 51.4 per thousand military as opposed to 69.4 for the third quarter.

Crime figures are broken down into two categories: crimes of violence, including murder, rape, robbery, and aggravated assault; and crimes against property, including larcenies of private and government property, housebreaking, auto theft, and burglary.

Crimes of violence are at a rate of 1.7 per thousand personnel, versus 1.6 per thousand at the same time last year. Crimes against property are down from the last quarter by 2.8 per thousand at 12.4, and down from a year ago when the rate was 19 per thousand.

In crime prevention, command influence is second in importance only to individual awareness of methods of protecting self and property. A reduction of the crime rate can only come about through the combined efforts of everyone on post.

VA Questions & Answers

Q — I receive $270 a month for attending school as a war orphan. If I become married, will this benefit continue?

A — Yes, provided you remain eligible otherwise.

Q — Will my wife's income help me qualify for a GI home loan?

A — Yes. The VA gives full recognition to the income of both veteran and spouse.

Q — What help will the VA give my survivors in burying me?

A — If you had wartime service, VA will pay $250 toward your funeral expense, plus $150 toward your burial plot or interment cost. If your death is due to service-connected causes, VA will pay up to $800 toward funeral and burial costs.

Q — I have four years honorable service during Korea. Will the VA pay medical expenses for my dependent wife and children?

A — No. The VA does not pay any medical benefits for dependents unless the veteran is rated 100 per cent permanently and totally disabled as the result of a service-connected disability or disabilities.

Q — Must I pay federal income tax on my GI Bill education benefit?

A — No. Among major tax exempt veterans benefits are compensation, pension, GI Bill and other educational assistance.

Olympic expertise aids ALT trainees

★ Charles Davis, former National Running Boar Champion, National Service Rifle Champion and also a member of the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in 1972, were on hand to instruct the trainees in methods of engaging moving targets.

The trainees used M14s mounted with adjustable ranging telescopes. Together, the rifle and scope comprise the M-21 sniper system which was developed by USAMU.

Theimer points out that the concepts of "lead" and "tracking" are relatively easy to understand, but that practice is the most important thing in learning to engage moving targets. Moeller gave a short class to the trainees, allowed them to "dry fire" at the target, then they were given their turn to fire at the "running man."

"This is a makeshift range," explained Theimer. "But we wanted to test it to see if it was workable. We proved that it will work and that the trainees can hit moving targets." Most of the trainees quickly grasped the needed concepts. Firing at a moving target increases the importance of the steady hold factor and greatly magnifies the consequences of improper trigger control. "I think our class here today reinforced what the trainees were taught in basic marksmanship training about proper trigger control. They learned that you can't jerk the trigger and hit anything."

CPT Theimer hopes that the Running Target Section can soon publish a manual outlining the procedures for constructing an expedient running target range. "Hopefully, moving target training will soon become part of every Infantryman's training. I know that there are people working on that right now."

PVT Robert Chafin, Co C, 43rd Eng Bn, chops diligently at a tree as he and other members of his company are working on the renovations of Pierce Range this week. After renovations are completed, Pierce Range will be used by the United States Army Infantry School (USAIS) for Cadet and Advance Officers Training Courses for obstacle courses for live fire and close combat penetration.

Life: a unique gift

By Chaplain Charles Lanier

Human life has been described by poets and sages through the ages. The idea of life implies quality, a unique quality that is much more than merely existing.

Life is a personal gift that grows out of the warmth of a personal relationship and thrives only when our internal and external needs are supplied. A newborn baby will not survive if fed only milk and mechanically tended. It needs personal care and love. A quality life is more than food and drink.

How many of us aspire to a life that is so fantastic it defies human attainment? More than a heavy dose of humility or failure is needed to convince us that the highest goal we can reach as a person is to be human! Full value lies in our worth as human beings. Unrealistic personal goals frustrate and demoralize. Few people find this quality life when they are yet young enough to appreciate it. The quality life is not reserved for the lucky ones. It never "happens" to anybody. The quality life is the result of a personal struggle and growing development that involves facing daily challenges and overcoming handicaps. The quality life shines as a jewel polished by the grindstone and buffed by the friction that produces a luster. You have something special. . . yourself!

When you begin feeling like a carbon copy, remember that uniqueness that identifies you as a particular person. Find your gifts and talents. Develop them. Train yourself. The winning combination of talent and training makes for a quality life that benefits, not only you but others as well.

Non-support may cause lounge loss

By Barbara Haag

Service members and their families traveling through Kansas City via the Kansas City International Airport may lose a privilege they may not have known they had unless increased interest is shown soon.

The Military Affairs Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Kansas City, in cooperation with the local chapter of the American Red Cross, has operated a military lounge at the airport from 9:30 am - 5:30 pm five days a week (Monday through Friday) since January 1974.

Located in Terminal A, at Gate 1, next to the Braniff facility at the airport, the modern Military Lounge features a Red Cross volunteer to assist servicemembers and their families as necessary, comfortable and ample seating, telephones and recreational equipment including television, pool table and ping pong.

Military Affairs Committee Chairman Frank Spink Jr., — who is also a major general in the U. S. Air Force Reserve — describes the modern lounge as "unexcelled in the nation for size, modernity and comfort," but adds that operating hours for the facility may have to be cut back to only Mondays and Fridays unless more servicemembers take advantage of the lounge.

Although the Military Lounge is open to all identification card-carrying military (active duty and retired) and their families waiting in the air terminal for transportation to assignments or to other airlines, few are taking advantage of the facility.

One possible reason for this, according to Spink, is the design of Kansas City International Airport which divides airline traffic among three terminals. For servicemembers trying to make tight connections in a "foreign" airport, the matter of getting oneself from one terminal to another and back again may not seem worth the bother.

But for those who have more time and find themselves sitting around the airport with nothing to do, the short walk or ride to terminal A is well worth the time.

Introducing Cadillac 1977. The brilliant new Fleetwood Brougham with four-wheel disc brakes. The sleek new Coupe DeVille. And the stunning new Sedan DeVille.

Isn't "next-generation" overstating it? Not at all. This is a totally new Cadillac. Engineered from the ground up for more efficient use of space. New body. New chassis. New suspension system. New frame. New engine.

Building on success. How do you improve a car that consistently has had the highest repeat ownership and the highest resale value of any U.S. luxury car make? Basically, by retaining what you like about Cadillac—the comfort, luxury, security and roominess—and adding to it.

More efficient use of space. There's more rear legroom and headroom in the DeVilles. Fleetwood Brougham retains the legroom and headroom of its spacious 1976 counterpart. And all have that roomy, Cadillac-size trunk.

Greater fuel economy. In 1977 EPA mileage tests, Cadillac was estimated at 14 miles per gallon city and 18 mpg highway. Your mileage could vary depending upon the type of driving you do, your driving habits, your car's condition and available equipment.

It's a lively generation. Here, in Cadillac 1977, is an agile luxury car. Quick to respond. With pickup—all-around performance—that could surprise you. There's more maneuverability for easier parking and a more confident feel in city traffic.

Even more comfort and convenience. There's a new instrument panel that organizes things for you. New easy-entry/easy-exit door design. Match mounting of tires and wheels for a superb ride. And a seat belt you can conveniently draw across your lap any way you like.

To protect your investment. The 1977 Cadillacs are designed to battle rattles and rust. Extensive rust-fighting measures include anti-corrosion inner front fender panels. And widespread use of Zincrometal® and bimetal (stainless steel on aluminum).

A ride you won't believe... until you take a test drive. As your Cadillac dealer, we would be happy to arrange it.

And for a different kind of luxury... you might consider the international-size Seville by Cadillac... or the 1977 Eldorado with front-wheel drive.

NCOWC News

The NCOWC President would like to thank all of the ladies and especially Mrs. Vincent Roegiers, Mrs. Guy Sullivan and Mrs. Oliver Williams, for their contributions to the lovely luncheon and fashion show on September 15th, and a special thank you for the very thoughtful surprise. A more meaningful gesture of kindness and warmth, could not have come at a more opportune time.

Breakfast and Games

The members and guest of the NCOWC met at the Top 5 NCO Club Annex on September 22nd for a real Southern breakfast of, sausage, eggs, grits, biscuits, jelly, butter, juice and coffee. After such indulgences in the dining room, all of those who could rise above it all, moved into the main ballroom for a morning of games. Our hostesses for the month, Mrs. Oliver Williams and Mrs. Guy Sullivan were very much on the job and are to be commended for a well planned month. We look forward to more great months as our new program chairman, Mrs. L. C. McCalla, takes up this position next month.

Bazaar

Project activities are underway, and we are counting on the support of every member. Please contact your bazaar chairman, Mrs. Ester Richard 682-0237 and find out how you can help.

Judge Advocate Section

COL and Mrs. Robert Poydaseff entertained the lawyers and their wives of the Judge Advocate Section on Saturday September 11th at their home, with a picnic and all of the trimmings. COL Poydaseff is the Staff

Officers Candidate School

The Senior Status Review Chain of Command: Senior Candidates Thomas Foster, Company Commander; Bradford Randall, first platoon leader; Andy Pierce, second platoon leader; Thomas Kroeger, third platoon leader, and Lowell Berry, fourth platoon leader.

4th AIT Bn

A brief business meeting was held by Mrs. William Windham and the wives worked on bazaar projects for the rest of the afternoon, while enjoying the hospitality of their hostess. Among the guest attending this event was Mrs. Jack Farris.

Uniform changes

Monday, October 18th will be the changeover to the winter uniform. Individuals should check their uniforms prior to this date for serviceability and proper fit. Particular attention should be given to the fit of the coat around the waist and the length of the trousers. The service (billed) cap is required by regulation to be worn with the Green uniform by officers and warrant officers. All nameplates must have only the last name engraved on it and must have a black background. Branch-colored backgrounds or duty assignments engraved below the name are unauthorized.

October promotions down

There will be fewer promotions for grades E-5 through O-6 during the month of October than there were this month. DA officials say that the October promotions will total 6,589. 8,968 were promoted in September.

Total enlisted promotions number 5,715 and will include 3,500 to E-5; 1,357 to E-6; 553 to E-7; 215 to E-8 and 90 to E-9. The hikes to E-9 will exhaust the current Sergeants Major list. Promotions from the new list will begin November 1st. After the October promotions, 7,228 names will remain on the E-7 list; 1907 on the E-8 list.

Promotions to E-5/6 are made from local lists per DA published monthly promotion cutoff scores for each MOS.

DA officials forecast that the October officer hikes will total 874. There were 905 September promotions and about 887 in August.

Promotion schedules call for 77 promotions to colonel; 165 to lieutenant colonel and 194 to major. Also tabbed for promotion are 370 to captain, 18 to CWO-4 and 50 to CWO-3.

Hikes from the O-6 list may be made pending Senate approval.

After the October officer promotions, 650 names will remain on the O-6 list; 1,551 on the O-5 list; 1,894 O-4s and 874 names remain on the O-3 list. In addition, 151 names remain on the CWO-4 list and 714 on the CWO-3 list. (ARNEWS)

PCS? Check housing reg

Soldiers getting ready for a PCS move should truck on over to the local MILPO and ask about the latest change (Change 18) to the housing reg. AR 210-50.

They'll tell you the date you leave your present post will be the date of eligibility for housing at your next duty station. However, you must make an advance application for housing. Under the old system, the date of eligibility for quarters was the date the soldier reported at a new post and asked for housing.

Your local MILPO will help you fill out the housing application (DD Form 1746). Before you leave the office, make sure they have authenticated your expected date of departure. (ARNEWS)

An interview with the CG

'Benning developing quality soldier'

MG Willard Latham

BAYONET — Benning is in the news because of suicides. In fact, a Newsweek article states Benning is "about five times higher" than comparable Army bases in suicides. How do you answer this?

MG LATHAM: The statement in the Newsweek article as being five times higher than comparable Army bases is incorrect by all the data that we have been able to get in comparing suicide rates at military installations of comparable size to Ft. Benning. There are at least two ways in which suicide statistics have been kept. One, and it is the one that we have used, is to follow the Adjutant General casualty reporting channel which reports all deaths on a military post or connected with a military post. That's the way we have kept ours. Therefore a man assigned to Ft. Benning but visiting in Mississippi who dies or commits suicide is recorded as a fatality against Ft. Benning. The other system is to use Criminal Investigation Department figures which count only those which occur on the military post and/or investigated by the CID. In order to be accurate, or to make an accurate comparison, it's necessary to determine which procedure you're following. In the cases where we have checked with posts of comparable size to Ft. Benning — using AG casualty figures — the suicide or the numbers of suicides at those posts have been very similar.

BAYONET:—Your tough training standards and demands for totally involved leadership have been cited as causes for stress on family life. Would you like to address this question?

MG LATHAM: We do have tough training

Miss Georgia, Harvey Glance

Special Volks Fest guests

Miss Georgia 1976, Sandy Lynn Adamson and Olympic gold medal winner, Harvey Glance of Phenix City, AL, have been invited to attend Ft. Benning's Fall Volks Fest, Saturday at Doughboy Stadium and Gowdy Field from 7 am to 11 pm.

Sandy, a 5-foot, 120 pound blonde, is a student at Georgia Tech with a double major in Chemical Engineering and Pre-Medicine.

The 20-year-old Atlanta native, enjoys cake decorating, costume designing, collecting bubble gum charms and spelunking. She is a talented singer, tap and jazz dancer and baton twirler.

Harvey, a 5-foot-8, 145 pound, Auburn University, student, won all three WEC and NCAA sprint championships, as a freshman in 1975-76, making him the first athlete in history to ever accomplish that feat.

In the 1976 Olympics at Montreal, Harvey finished fourth in the 100 meter final. He came back to run the first leg on the winning USA 4x100 meter relay to earn a gold medal.

Slated to be one of the finest fetes of the season, the festive activities will commence at 7 am with a 20-mile run at Doughboy Stadium. Other running events include a 10 and five-mile timed run and an un-timed Volks run and walk.

All participants in the running events will receive an Olympic-style medal. Everyone will get a certificate of participation signed by the Commanding General.

Continuous music will be provided throughout the day by the Belles of Indiana, a group of young entertainers from Indiana University's famed school of music. Accompanying them will be the Bellesband, a group of eight versatile instrumentalists playing the modern sounds of jazz and rock. There will also be an 11-piece German band alternating with the Belles band. They will be performing music intermittently from 1 to 10:30 pm.

German bratwurst, knackwurst, brotchen, pretzels and German beer and favors will be sold at concession stands from 10 am to 8:30 pm

Then The Korean conflict

An unidentified soldier soldier tends to foot trouble on a hillside in Korea. United States soldiers found the hills and ridges hard to negotiate during the Korean Conflict.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following quotes were taken from "This Kind of War," written by T. R. Fehrenbach on the Korean Conflict. The book provides an insight to the trials and tribulations of the U.S. soldier in Korea and his fight for survival against both hostile forces and the environment. Fehrenbach served in the Army from 1943 to 1946 and from 1951 to 1953. He is currently a LTC in the U.S. Army Reserve, Civil Affairs Branch.

"When they left their trucks and moved into the hills and ridges, American soldiers, as one officer put it, 'dropped like flies.' The heat and exhaustion gave them throbbing headaches. During these weeks exhaustion and heat knocked out more men than the NKPA (North Korean People's Army)."

"In American society the best weapon against a convertible may be another convertible, but in Korea, it is apt to be a good pair of legs . . ."

"There had been many brave men in the ranks, but they were learning that bravery of itself has little to do with success in battle. On line, most normal men are afraid, have been afraid, or will be afraid. Only when disciplined to obey orders quickly and willingly, can such fear be controlled. Only when superbly trained and conditioned against the shattering experience of war, only knowing almost rote what to do, can men carry out their tasks come what may. And knowing they are disciplined, trained, and conditioned brings pride to men-pride in their own toughness, their own ability; will hold them true when all else fails."

Men of the 9th RCT, 2d Inf Div, pause wearily to rest after walking all day and night through the Chinese Communists and road blocks in December 1950.

New CFC total over $53,000

by Marshall Jones

As of noon Wednesday, the 1977 Combined Federal Campaign for the Tri-City area counted a total of contributions of over $53,000. According to Project Officer Jim Schoonover, this figure puts the campaign $4,000 ahead of its total at the same stage of last year's drive.

Statistics show that about one tenth of Ft. Benning's personnel have participated so far with either authorizations for payroll deduction or cash contributions.

Those who gave by payroll deduction out-number cash contributors by about three to one. Payroll deduction is the preferred method of giving, according to Schoonover, because it requires no great cash outlay and results in a substantial donation to the agencies which benefit from the campaign.

Commanders are optimistic about reaching this year's goal. If contributions continue at their present rate (about $17.50 per capita), Ft. Benning's goal of $240,000 should be easily met.

NOW PT Conditioning at Benning

Photos and Story
By C. B. Hoover

The question of whether or not soldiers in today's Army would drop like flies from physical exhaustion in combat brought varied responses about the physical conditioning program presently in effect at Ft. Benning from the soldiers of the 197th Inf. Bde. last week.

Interviews were conducted with soldiers in the brigade ranging from private to a battalion commander to determine the attitude toward physical fitness program and its effects on the soldier's combat capabilities.

LTC William Seely, battalion commander of the 3/7th Inf stated, "The physical fitness program in the battalion is two pronged. First is to get the men into physical condition and maintaining it in all categories, running practicing, and conducting PT test. Second being light infantry and particular concerned with the conditioning that goes along with field operations is important. Marches up to 25 miles and beyond have been conducted. Units in the battalion have gone 100 miles, the battalion 50 miles, with emphasis on being able to perform a strenuous combat mission at the end of the march. We can never get enough of getting out and operating in the field."

Experience is always the best teacher therefore an old pro was consulted, 1SGT

John Schafer, 1SGT of Co A, 1/59th Inf, who had served in Korea and Vietnam.

"The physical conditioning that the soldiers get is good especially when it comes to the heat of the summer in Korea. However I don't know about the winter, with all the extra equipment you have to carry, it might be rough for the men to adjust to the situation," stated Schafer, "When I went to Korea I was very fortunate to be in fairly good condition. The one thing that comes to mind is the last time I went to Vietnam and watched the new troops coming in. Their physical condition wasn't bad, but it sure wasn't good either. Today I can say that the physical program here is preparing the soldier better than ever to combat the problem of physical exhaustion in combat. I think I am in better condition today and would fair better in combat than before despite the age difference."

How does the private feel about the physical conditioning? PFC Mike Windon of Co C, 3/7th Inf had this comment, "A lot of physical conditioning is alright, but I think it should be done in the coolest part of the day."

Another soldier in Co C, 3/7th Inf, SP4 Charles Stockton stated, "The physical conditioning program is very tough. I'm not saying that I like it, but I think it's necessary. Should we go into combat I think I would be ready. We have already run five miles and conducted an assault with success. If I can do it here I think I can do it anywhere they send me."

PVT Terry Sanders also of Co. C, 3/7th Inf who has just joined the unit concluded with this comment, "I just graduated from AIT (Advanced Individual Training) here at Ft. Benning. There, we were running two miles each day and five miles once a week. It has helped me tremendously in adjusting to this unit. I feel that I could make a five mile run and conduct an assault afterwards. I'm not saying that I won't be tired, but with the training we have had I could do it."

Members of Co C, 197th Spt Bn, 197th Inf Bde do push-ups with their protective masks on as part of their physical training program.

Men from the 3/7th Inf test out their combat skills during training conducted at the Leadership Reaction Course.

Pugil training is one of the most effective ways of maintaining combat physical readiness for close-in bayonet fighting.

and performance standards because we have determined, the Army has determined, that in order to win and survive on any future battle field — and indeed it's been necessary on any past battlefields in which we have done well — you must have a very high state of proficiency. You must be very, very capable, physically, technically — that is performing with your weapons — and in tactics. You must be mentally tough enough not to become discouraged when faced with adversity. And you need to have some depth of inner strength, spiritual strength, to sustain you when everything else fails. That kind of dedication, that kind of standard of performance is rather uncompromising, but it is required to be successful on the battlefield. And in my judgment, we would be criminally negligent if we allow an Army to be trained that is not prepared for that kind of situation. Now, on the other hand, I recognize when young families are coming into the Army they have a great adjustment to make. They are moving into an environment that is demanding in all the ways that I just described, but it also is a service oriented society where the giving of service of oneself and to the nation is what it's all about. It is not an eight-to-five environment. You can't — if you're preparing to fight a battle of war — you can't just blow the whistle and quit.

It's a way of life, not a job. It's necessary to learn how to adjust the family to that. Now, those of us who are older soldiers have learned how to do that. The wife and the family become a part of the military community. There are, certainly, great stresses — family separations — occasioned by military life or problems. The demand for dedication to duty can occasionally be perceived by the family as a conflict of interest, but if both family members, husband and wife, develop the sense of mission, the adjustment becomes easier. The organization of a military community is directed toward accomplishing that. Each commander has as his responsibility to assist, to look after the welfare of all of his people who work with him, and that includes their families. We have a number of family services that go beyond the resources that the immediate commander has. The hospitals and all their aspects, the Chaplains, Army Community Service, all dedicated to relieving that stress. Indeed, recently the Chief of Staff of the Army, GEN Weyand, has reinforced the obligation of military commanders to look after the welfare of their subordinates, the personal needs of their subordinates. But, I'm very sure that he in no way meant a reduction of the military efficiency that we need and expect in our Army of today.

BAYONET: As a followup to that question, the newspaper quoted one officer's wife as saying her husband went back to work at midnight, there was no family life, and people are afraid to complain. Comment Sir?

MG LATHAM: The newspaper article that quoted one officer's wife as saying her husband went back to work at midnight is in my view directly applicable to the question of dedication of any leader to the people that he commands or leads. The activities in a barracks are the responsibility of the commander or leader and he, of course, sometimes needs to go back and check on the welfare and the efficiency of the people he leaves back in the barracks. In exactly the same principle, that you would go to check on your family to insure that they are being taken care of, that their welfare is adequate. In the military, in the barracks, you're looking for the errant soldier, the one who may have had too much to drink, the one who may be disruptive in the barracks. It is indeed necessary to go back and insure that all is well, to insure that the subordinates you have left in charge are performming up to the standards that you expect of whatever it is you're responsible for.

BAYONET: You have stated you feel morale is good here at Benning because indicators such as low AWOL rates, reduced crime, etc., are favorable. Others imply that intermediate officers and senior NCOs have covered up and are not reporting accurately. Do you feel your statistics are valid and how do you know for certain?

MG LATHAM: All indicators that I have confidence in, and indicators that the Army has used for years, indicate that morale here at Ft. Benning is good. I refer to such factors as low absent without leave rates, reduced crime, consistently meeting reenlistment goals, and greatly improved readiness standards. Most importantly, is the fact that the job at Ft. Benning is being done in a splendid fashion. Ft. Benning is paving the way for a significant improvement in the standard of performance of the United States Army and that goal is being met by the people at Ft. Benning. I do believe that there are times when an individual occasionally may feel that he is stressed to accomplish a difficult job perhaps over a long period of time, that he may feel that his morale is not as good as he might like. In my view, that's a very transitory matter. If morale really goes down and stays down, it has always (in my experience) been reflected in the major indicators that we use such as reenlistment rates, absent without leave rates, incident rates, readiness status. On the reliability of statistics, I have absolute confidence in their accuracy. I routinely have no-notice validation checks particularly by the Inspector General, and I have found occasionally instances where units failed to report accurately. But we have found fewer here at Benning during the past year than I have found in previous organizations. I might add that we look very hard at that. Commanders are not covering up when they go seek out their AWOLs and bring them back. I would hasten to point out that that's exactly what the commander is supposed to do. I place that in the same category as going after a wounded man who is shot down in battle. That's the recovery of one of your own and I highly encourage it. I am particularly encouraged by our reenlistment rate. Right now, about 70 per cent of our first term reenlistment are reenlisting to stay at Ft. Benning. We view this as a positive indicator of high morale.

BAYONET: It's being said that your policies are being distorted as they go down the chain of command . . . Overzealous commanders are adding to already tough standards to make them look good. Do you believe such a thing is happening here?

MG LATHAM: I know of no instances where this has truly occurred and I have looked into it. In the instance mentioned in one newspaper report concerning twenty-five mile forced march, it was suggested that commanders—in order to please me—added pistol belts, gas masks, steel helmets, weapons and other combat gear as an additional requirement. Quite the contrary. That is the end goal to be sought for the soldier in the unit to be able to be physically able to make such a march in full combat gear. Indeed, the ultimate goal would be to have a soldier make such a march in full combat gear wearing his gas mask. That's not an eccentric requirement. That's the kind of battle we are preparing to defend ourselves against.

BAYONET: What have the investigations conducted by the post revealed as the cause of this year's suicides?

MG LATHAM: We have investigated all of the suicides that have occurred on Ft. Benning. Those that occurred off post were investigated by civilian police. We cannot reveal the details of many of the suicides out of consideration for innocent members of the families. However, we can say that in the great majority of the cases serious personal problems were involved, usually concerning serious marital disruptions, excessive and long standing excessive use of alcohol, and critical financial problems.

BAYONET: One final question: Will any programs at Ft. Benning be changed in any way because of the suicides or the publicity resulting from the suicides?

MG LATHAM: I have no plans to change any of the programs at Ft. Benning as a result of the publicity on the suicides. I am absolutely convinced that the product we are developing at Ft. Benning is the quality of soldier and military unit that our country must have in order to have a creditable military posture so far as the Army is concerned. I believe Ft. Benning leads the Army in that regard. And it will be a great tragedy if we are not successful.

VA to help handicapped

VA Administrator Richard L. Roudebush today reaffirmed the Veterans Administration's continued commitment to increased employment of handicapped persons and called for "added emphasis for additional progress in 1977."

Roudebush announced that last year VA employed 12,194 handicapped persons, an increase of 662 over 1974.

"As a result of our concerted efforts to provide not just jobs, but careers for these deserving individuals, a total of 5.6 per cent of VA's work force is now made up of handicapped persons," Roudebush said.

He pointed out that "the Veterans Administration has long had a policy of encouraging the employment of disabled veterans and handicapped persons.

"The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Act of 1974 mandate affirmative action programs for hiring the handicapped and these have served both to augment and amplify VA's traditional leadership in this area," Roudebush said.

The VA Administrator pointed out that 6.6 per cent of the agency's employees are disabled veterans.

"Taken together, disabled veterans and handicapped persons on VA's rolls number more than one in ten of our 219,403 employees," he said.

"I have made it clear to everyone in VA that we must continue to exert every effort to continue and expand our program of encouraging and assisting handicapped individuals to find jobs in the agency.

"While we at VA intend to do all that we can, it is obvious that one agency cannot provide all the opportunities that are needed.

"I can only urge leaders in business and industry to join us in making jobs available to their handicapped fellow citizens.

"If VA's experience is any guide, the employers will be the real winners," Roudebush said.

Soldiers might be forced to pay state income taxes

It appears that state tax officials are winning the battle to force soldiers to pay their state income taxes. A House Senate committee has agreed to make withholding of state taxes from military pay checks mandatory.

If Congress approves the proposal and the President signs it, states can request DoD to withhold taxes from military residents. DoD then has four months from the date of request to start withholding.

DoD will send the appropriate amount to each state listed as the soldier's legal residence. This information is shown on the W-4 form in Army finance records.

Soldiers' state income taxes have drawn increasing attention recently with some states pressuring the federal government to help them collect taxes from soldiers who are legal residents of that state but assigned elsewhere. Some estimates indicate that as many as half of the troops do not pay their state taxes where required.

DoD has opposed any mandatory withholding because of the expense involved to set up the system. About $6 million would be required to set up such a withholding system and about $1.7 million to operate it annually.

Some delays are expected in reprogramming finance computers if DoD can't persuade the Treasury Department to permit withholding of approximate amounts instead of exact tax amounts now called for. This would cut major reprogramming work.

Troops from Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Texas, Washington and Wyoming will not be affected by tax collection changes because these states have no state income tax. In addition, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Tennessee tax capital gains, interest or dividends, but not salaries. (ARNEWS)

Weyand talks about today's Army

Retiring Army Chief of Staff GEN Fred C. Weyand says he is "wrestling with a problem." In an interview with 'Stars and Stripes' Washington Bureau Chief John Hart, Weyand said the Army chain of command would be strengthened if he can solve the problem.

In his search for ways to strengthen the chain of command, the 60-year-old Weyand said he would like for soldiers to have an (ombudsman type of) agency which would offer soldiers some representation beyond the limitations of the chain of command. Soldiers would use the agency after they have exhausted the chain of command's ability to respond, according to Weyand.

Weyand said the agency "would be a place for soldiers to get some answers or just let off steam." He did not further elaborate, but he said he feels the Army is on the "right track in strengthening the chain of command by use of NCOs in a proper role." This means giving NCOs more responsibility.

Weyand has served as the Army's top officer since he was sworn in as Army Chief of Staff on October 7, 1974. Weyand discussed a number of other issues in the hour-long interview.

Weyand contends that an effective chain of command can offset any need for military unionization. "I take a strong stand against unionization," Weyand said, adding that "grievance boards" for the military are the chain of command, the defense department, congress, and the executive branch.

On the subject of service members writing their congressmen, Weyand said that "it's necessary." However, he feels at times there are military members writing to congressmen without having tried the chain of command first. Weyand pointed out that the letters are often sent to the Pentagon to provide the facts needed to answer them. He stressed that congress has an important function and responsibility in raising military forces and maintaining morale.

Weyand blasted away at critics of military pay and benefits. "All these attacks on benefits carry with them a certain disrespect, disregard, and lack of concern and appreciation for the services these folks (soldiers) are rendering," stated Weyand. "That gets me," he said. "And it bothers me that the public doesn't understand and appreciate that service members give up more personal liberties and accept more personal restrictions than their peers in civilian society."

It disturbs Weyand when critics say that everyone in the military is overpaid. Although he agrees that some members of the military are doing all right with their pay, while others are not. "There is an element in the Army that is not overpaid, and they're not even well-paid," stressed Weyand. He was referring to the young married enlisted soldiers who have to "moonlight" to make it financially. Weyand said, "It's time to focus on the part of the Army that's hurting." He said he wants to see more money in the fiscal year 1978 budget go for junior enlisted benefits.

According to Weyand, the erosion of benefits is impacting on the enlistment and "re-up" rates. "But I don't think it is affecting combat readiness," he said. Weyand added that he didn't have the answer to the erosion of benefits problem, other than "if we're going to have an all-volunteer force, this country has to pay for it."

Weyand doesn't agree with the people who say about 70 per cent of the defense budget goes for personnel. "That's a lot of bull," he said, "unless you're talking about every cotton-picking thing from toilet paper to fuel — then maybe it's true, but meaningless." He explains those things are needed for people, and people are needed if you want to have an Army. According to Weyand, the actual military pay costs account for about 25 per cent of the defense budget.

Weyand said he is retiring with "considerable pride in service" that began in December 1940 after his graduation from the University of California. He says he has no regrets about his career of 36 years. The native of Arbuckle, CA, said he only has some envy of his friends who have their roots established back in his home state.

Weyand feels that he is leaving the Army "in good hands", which he calls the "corporate leadership. I'm impressed with the ability of potential in all ranks," he said.

"I'm not leaving any void," Weyand continued. GEN Bernard W. Rogers, commanding general of U.S. forces command, Fort McPherson, Ga, succeeds him on Oct. 1.

PFC Irma Scheurer, 34th Med Bn Soldier of the Month, discovers that even with all the modern supply techniques, equipment and procedures, turn in of dirty laundry is still a physical matter as she "coordinates" the weekly turn in of sheets in the 2d CS Hosp Supply Room. PFC Scheurer says she learns something new everyday about her job and appreciates the time the NCOs take to show her new supply techniques. She also has been chosen supernumary each of the last 4 times that she has been on guard duty. She plans to enroll in Columbus College in January to pursue a degree in nursing, hoping someday to become an Army nurse.

Alaska housing looks dismal

Unless you are independently wealthy, don't take your family to Alaska. A severe housing shortage exists in the vicinity of all Alaskan posts.

During July and August, there was only a 0.2 per cent vacancy rate in low-cost (under $300) housing in the Ft. Richardson-Anchorage area. The Ft. Wainwright-Fairbanks and Ft. Greely-Delta Junction areas provide equally dismal prospects. No relief will be forthcoming.

The monthly rent for available housing in Alaska ranges from $450 to $700 per month. Everything is much more expensive in Alaska because of its remoteness and the oil pipeline boom. Statewide, unemployment is very high; second jobs and jobs for spouses are virtually nonexistent.

Here's how to fill out your FPCA

Below, the numbered subparagraphs refer to the numbered paragraphs on the reverse of the FPCA as illustrated—

●—(1): Top Line: Fill in State of local residence; if individual is uncertain of his or her legal residence, a unit legal assistance officer should be contacted.

●—(1): As indicated on the FPCA, cross out 2 of the 3 words — "General," "Primary," or "Special" — which do not apply. As a rule, an FPCA must be sent in for each election in which a person desires to vote; some States, however, will mail all the ballots in an election year, or the primary and general election ballots, with the submission of only one FPCA. The unit voting counselor can provide the definite information on this. If a ballot is being requested for an election other than a primary or general election, it might be helpful to identify the election by its date or other descriptive words or phrase.

●—(2): This should be completed if a State law requires that political party preference or affiliation must be shown to receive a primary ballot; the unit voting counselor can determine if the information is required.

●—(3): Self-explanatory; make an "X" in the appropriate box,

●—(4): Complete birth date as shown — day, month, year,

●—(5): This item should contain the address within the State where the individual has maintained legal residence,

●—(6): This item may be used to indicate to the election official any information needed to clarify the use of the FPCA; for example, persons who are using the FPCA to register absentee, if allowed by State law, should write in "Send registration forms" or "Request registration,"

●—(7): This item should contain the address where the individual currently receives mail; if an address other than an official military address is used in this item, the military address must be indicated on the front of the FPCA,

●—(8): Self-explanatory, but must be understood by individual,

●—(9): Signature of person requesting ballot must be placed here; if required by State law — the unit voting counselor can determine this — the signature must be made in the presence of a notary or other individual authorized to administer the oath,

●—(10): Full name, rank or grade, service number must be printed or typed in this space, and ●—(11): This information must be completed if required by State law; the unit voting counselor will have the "Witnessing" requirements for the individual States.

Soil Analyst—more than just mud pie

By Onetia Porter

Dirt is dirt—to some of us—but to a “Soil Analyst” it’s the foundations for our roads, dams, buildings and countless other structures.

When SP4 Robert Sutkus from HHC, 43d Engr Bn, 36th Engr Gp (CBT), is asked about his job, he replies, “My main function is being a quality control expert, and preserving both people and resources. I’m often ribbed about making mud pies, but I take my job seriously.”

SP4 Sutkus puts great emphasis on how important stabilization and accuracy is before constructing any type of features on unstable ground. He states, “If one of our construction companies builds a vertical structure on unstable ground and it collapses—I am responsible—accuracy must be maintained at all times.”

To further emphasize the importance of his craft, Sutkus gave the following account of what can happen, if safety standards are not adhered to in the construction business. In early 1970 a skyscraper was being constructed in the Washington D.C. area. Three floors of construction had nearly been completed on the structure, when all of a sudden the entire structure buckled and collapsed. The collapsed structure resulted in the deaths of 14 construction workers.

The structure gave way because the company building the skyscraper had neglected to allow a sufficient amount of time for the cement base support foundations to dry. Sutkus noted that although 14 people had died, if the defective structure had been completed, there is a very good chance that hundreds of people working in the building may have become fatalities at a later date.

The soils analyst can perform his job in the field or the laboratory to determine the engineering characteristics of soil and construction materials. In addition, he investigates problems of stabilization and drainage of the soils by computing test results with the metric system and simple algebraic equations.

In today’s world of engineering the role of the soils analyst is important. Without him and his knowledge the progress of modern construction would be severely limited.

Doughboy linemen needed

"The Doughboys are still recruiting experienced football players, especially linemen," according to LTC Wayne Boles, head coach.

He stressed that the squad will not be cut to 40 members until sometime after they begin working out in pads.

He also said, "So far, the backfield material looks good, but we certainly could use more tackles and guards to beef-up the line."

Newcomers are invited to show up at the work-outs which are held every week-night at 7 pm on the 36th Engr Bn's Field.

Safety belts: a fact of life

By now every driver in America should be very much aware of the value of seat belts. The evidence gathered in support of seat belts is overwhelming. This evidence has been published in newspaper articles, magazines, on billboards, and on TV. Most drivers know the importance of seat belts.

A hundred people selected at random would be able to tell you the value of seat belts, but less than 25 per cent of them will say they use them. That's right, less than 25 per cent of the drivers on our highways use their seat belts!

Even though the facts and figures are well publicized, some of them are worth repeating. National Safety Council experts estimate that seat belts could save 8,000 lives a year. In addition, seat belts could reduce highway injuries by at least 2 million. The number of vehicles on our highways is increasing each year. With these facts in mind it becomes even more important to wear seat belts.

In addition to providing protection in a collision, seat belts can also help avoid collisions in some cases. If another vehicle suddenly whips out in front of your vehicle on the highway, you may have to turn sharply, perhaps even apply the brakes. In such a case, seat belts keep you solidly behind the steering wheel where you can maintain control of your vehicle.

None of this information should be new to any of us. Even though we all know better — why do the great majority of us still push aside or even sit in our seat belts when we get into our cars? Why do we ignore the facts? Why don't you use your seat belts?

Many excuses can be given but NONE are valid excuses. Each person has his own reasons for not wearing seat belts. The following examples constitute a small sampling of the most often used excuses along with the facts concerning each excuse.

Excuse: "I don't need a seat belt when I'm traveling at low speeds."

Fact: More than half of the serious accidents resulting in injury or death occur at LESS than 40 m.p.h. Fatalities involving non-belted occupants have been recorded as low as 12 m.p.h.

Excuse: "I don't need a seat belt. I'm just going to the store."

Fact: Three out of four accidents occur within 25 miles of home.

Excuse: "Seat belts are too confining. Besides, I might get caught inside a burning or submerged vehicle."

Fact: Less than one in a hundred involve fire or possible drowning — releasing a seat belt takes a second. Also, if you do go under water while belted in, you will know exactly where you are.

Excuse: "I'll be safer if I'm thrown clear of my car in a crash."

Fact: Statistics prove that the risk of serious injury or fatality is five times greater for the person ejected than for the person who is kept inside the car.

Other excuses include: "I haven't got the time for seat belts; they wrinkle my clothes; I'm a careful driver — I don't need seat belts."

There are many other foolish reasons for not using seat belts. Is your reason listed above? If so, you may want to change your thinking.

The wearing of seat belts while riding in a vehicle in Ft. Benning is mandatory. Regulations place the responsibility for having all passengers strapped in on the "senior occupant."

The military police will not stop a driver for the sole purpose of checking his seat belts, but an unfastened belt can mean a ticket if the driver is stopped for another reason, according to SFC Davis Christy, MP operations sergeant.

By using seat belts you could be one of the estimated 8,000 people who could save themselves just by taking the time to "Buckle-Up." Be one of the smart drivers — use your seat belts instead of sitting on them. Get into the Life-Saving Habit: NOW!

Energy Ant asks for kids 'help'

Energy Ant needs everybody's help finding his way so he can turn off the light. Energy Ant knows that it's important to save energy, so everywhere he goes he turns off all the lights that aren't needed.

As soon as you help Energy Ant find his way to the light switch, check around your home and see if there are any lights on that aren't needed. Help remind your parents that we all have to save electricity so we will have some left tomorrow.

Curfew restricts youth movement

Ft. Benning parents are being reminded that under an existing United States Army Infantry Center regulation dependents under 18 years of age are restricted in their on-post movement between midnight and five am.

According to a Provost Marshal's Office (PMO) Juvenile Branch spokesman, juvenile dependents must be in their quarters during those hours, and not on the streets unless escorted by parents, guardians or responsible adults. This is to include being at the bowling centers, theaters, and other places of entertainment on-post, the spokesman said.

Any dependents found in violation of the curfew will be taken to the PMO where their parents or sponsors will be notified to escort them back to their quarters. If violations by the same dependent continues, it may provide evidence of misconduct on the part of the sponsor and families who reside on-post, and could result in eviction from family quarters.

Unescorted non-dependent juveniles are subject to the same restrictions as dependent youths. If they are found on-post between midnight and five am, the PMO is authorized to take necessary action to insure they are removed from post and delivered to their parents, a responsible party, or to proper authorities.

Theatre Guild to present great shows

Delightful and rewarding productions will be splendidly mounted by a company of outstanding professional actors, musicians, reknown directors and an excellent production staff when the Ft. Benning Theatre Guild start their second season in November.

Working in conjunction with USAIC Recreation Services Division, Music and Theatre Branch, the Ft. Benning Theatre Guild will bring to Marshall Auditorium five outstanding shows. The season will include both musical and dramatic attractions to assure you the widest possible range of pleasurable viewing starting with Broadway's smash hit, Shenandoah.

SHENANDOAH

Thursday, November 11th

Shenandoah is now in its third year on Broadway and is described as "the perfect musical." The prize-winning Broadway musical will be the highlight of the 1976-77 Ft. Benning Theatre Guild Program. This was the "number one" selection of Theatre Guild members from the interest survey taken last spring. It is the story of a family during the Civil War and is a simple, but eloquent, reaffirmation of the American spirit. The musical has a rousing and melodious score and exciting dances. This new musical for the entire family consists of a touring company of 40 which includes a pit orchestra. Tickets for this outstanding production in New York are $15.00.

Boots Randolph With the Columbus Symphony Orchestra

Friday, January 21st

If Chet Atkins is synonymous with "guitar," then Boots Randolph is just the longer way of saying 'sax.' He probably has the greatest range on the sax of any present day musician. His compositions include "Yakkety Sax," "Cackling Sax," "Little Big Horn," "Chicken in the Rough," and "Simple Simon." He has appeared on such TV shows as the Kraft Music Hall, Ed Sullivan Show, The Tonight Show, Jackie Gleason Show, etc., in addition to hosting two of his own one-hour TV color specials. His instrumental LP's have been best sellers all over the world. "Yakkety Sax" won an award in 1965 for him. His concert tours have taken him to more than 100 cities in the U.S. and Canada, where he won over audiences, and reviewers alike. The local outstanding Columbus Symphony Orchestra, which is under the competent leadership of Mr. Harry Kruger, will provide an evening of entertainment that will never be forgotten.

Bayanihan Phillipine Dance Company

Tuesday, February 15th

The Bayanihan Philippine Dance Company, one of the most exotic, exciting and successful dance companies from another land ever to visit these shores, is returning to American during the 1976-77 season. For dance fans who have seen them, for others who anticipate their return, the news is a matter of first importance -- the prospect of a unique experience in Marshall Auditorium. This outstanding dance group, which has captured the imagination of critics and audiences alike in displaying the charm and vital beauty of the varied Philippine cultural heritage. The eye-ravishing BAYANIHAN PHILIPPINE DANCE COMPANY of 28 dancers and 12 musicians made dance history at its first international engagement at the Brussel's World Fair. Following sold-out performances in New York in 1959-71, the company made a triumphant trans-continental tour of the United States in 1964. In 1968, 1970, and 1973, the company toured extensively in Europe with critical accolades following them wherever they performed. The company concluded these successful ventures with appearances in the United States. This is the ensemble's seventh tour of America. "The most complete novelty the dance arts has come up with in many a moon... a more lovely vista has rarely been opened to us than with its handsome and gracious people, its eye-ravishing costuming, its widely varied music, and the wealth and range of its dances." — New York Times Quote.

The Italian Girl in Algiers

Friday, March 11th

Rossini's delightful spoof of love and lovers will be performed by the Augusta Opera Company of Georgia. The bel canot comedy, starring June Bonner and Michael Harrison, will be sung in English and fully-staged with new sets and costumes designed by Luis Maza. Joining the August Company for the 1977 tour will be the Atlanta Little Symphony Orchestra. The company of 45 is headed by artistic director Edward Bradberry, 1976 winner of the Governor's Award in the Arts. This tour is supported in part by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Georgia Council for the Arts.

"Most imaginative, creative opera company in this region." — Tampa Tribune.

"booming Atlanta, six times larger, has nothing comparable." — Musical America

"Their work is the type that will draw converts by the score to operatic form. They are that good." — Chattanooga News-Free Press.

The Atlanta Ballet

Saturday, April 23rd

The Atlanta Ballet, founded in 1929 by Dorothy Alexander, is today the oldest, most well-respected ballet company in the United States. One of the four regional ballet companies considered a major company by the National Association of Regional Ballet, the Atlanta Ballet has been a driving force of cultural life not only in the State of Georgia, but throughout the entire Southeastern United States. Because of its contribution to the life of all Georgians, the state of Georgia has made the Atlanta Ballet the State Ballet Company. The Atlanta Ballet is a magnificent blend of lightheartedness, classical showmanship, and the intense drama that is possible in the combination of classical and contemporary style. It is first in the quality of its dancers, range of its repertoire, and appeal to its audiences.

All productions again will be held in Marshall Auditorium commencing at 8 p.m. For information on season membership and tickets, call the Information Tour and Travel Office, Bldg 229, 545-7414.

AUSA NEWS

Ft. Benning's CSM Vincent Roegiers joined six other top Army Non-Commissioned Officers in a meeting with the Association of the United States Army's (AUSA) board of directors in Washington, D.C.

The CSMs from 1st Army, 18th Airborne Corps, 3rd Corps, and 7th Inf Div, and the SGM from USAR and WUANG met with the board to discuss the means by which they may get more visible participation by enlisted personnel at all levels in the AUSA.

The NCOs were briefed on the membership status - nearly 83,000 now, finances, plans, and goals for the upcoming year.

CSM Roegiers was selected during the meeting to be a member of the AUSA awards committee at national level for a one-year term beginning January 1977.

Specific items discussed during the two-day meeting were:

- Increased enlisted representation on the board of directors.

- Increased revenue to the local chapter out of the membership dues.

- Recognition of all Soldiers of the Quarter and Soldiers of the Year at the AUSA national meeting.

- Initiation of a slot in AUSA's public affairs office for a qualified retired enlisted person to travel to various installations to address AUSA matters and answer questions about what the AUSA has done for enlisted Army personnel.

- Restructuring of the Army magazine to include more articles on junior officers and enlisted personnel.

- Reduced membership fee in the event no magazine is desired.

- Possibility of providing various incentives such as a motor club, travel guides, and purchase discounts from local businesses for AUSA members.

- Coding of applications to insure that the proper chapter receives recognition for its personnel.

AUSA is going all out to reach and serve the enlisted personnel. These planning meetings will be held quarterly and invitations to different top NCOs will be issued each time.

Another innovation of the AUSA is their "AUSA Action Support of People" report and a fact sheet on FY77 Defense Budget. These descriptive reports will be distributed to all major commands and staff directorates by October 1st to let everyone know just what the AUSA has accomplished for the benefit of all Army personnel.

Army needs radiomen

The Army is experiencing a continuing shortage of Radio and Radio Teletype Operators (MOS 05B and 05C). To offset this shortage, MILPERCEN has taken the following steps: Reduced the enlistment period for MOS 05E and 05FK from four to three years; offered a $2,500 enlistment bonus to eligible enlistees; offered additional training in MOSs 05B and 05C to selected soldiers who completed training in MOS 05E (Voice Radio Operator) and 05F (Radio Teletype Operator - Non-Morse). They also have revised the CMF 72 career progression pattern to allow lateral feeds from MOS 05E to 05B and from MOS 05F to 05C at the E-3-4 levels. (ARNEWS).

'Redleg' selected as 197th SOM

By RON FOWLER

After being assigned to the 197th Inf Bde for only three months, SP4 David Phleeger of HHB, 2/10th FA has attained an honor that only a selected few in the brigade can lay claim to.

He has been selected as the most outstanding soldier for the "Forever Forward" brigade for the month of September.

Phleeger, who has only been in the Army 7 months, is a native of Glassboro, NJ. He came to the 2/10th FA in June from his Advanced Individual Training at Ft. Sill, OK, where he was the top graduate of his Artillery Fire Direction Computer (FDC) course.

"I chose to be an FDC because I had always had a good background in mathematics," Phleeger stated. "Being an FDC is also one of the most challenging jobs that the Army has to offer."

Graduated from Glassboro High School in his hometown of Glassboro in 1967. From there it was off to Florida where he attended the University of Miami at Coral Gables on a music scholarship.

"Playing the cello has always been one of my favorite hobbies," commented Phleeger. "I was lucky enough to have gained an academic scholarship due to my musical ability."

SP4 Phleeger, his wife Santina, and their two daughters, Michelle, and Kimberly reside in the Columbus area.

For his effort and accomplishments, Phleeger will be awarded a Brigade and AUSA Certificate of Achievement, a three-day pass, and a $25.00 savings bond.

Can't get a CB break? Use channel control!

By "HOSS," KACI 4615

I heard a guy the other day discussing whether or not CBers on Ft. Benning were attempting to reserve channel 1 for themselves. It may sound that way to the casual listener, but if you copy the mail all day on 1, you'll see that anybody who wants to can get a break on the channel.

This is due to the number of concerned and knowledgeable CBers with 10-8 base stations who volunteer to take channel control. If you don't think a channel control station is an asset to CB operation, just run around the dial sometime and listen to everybody walking all over each other. Channel control insures that everybody gets his break without interference and gets it for the full 5 minutes if he wants it. For what it's worth here's my personal opinion on channel control operations.

and be sure that he's completed his break before going on to the next one. Allow a little time for additional breakers to key up. As for those people who want to "break for a quickie", I have heard people do this and then spend the next five minutes discussing how Aunt Fannie's cake fell when Uncle Elmer slammed the oven door. I would suggest asking the reason for the break and checking with the next handle on the list for an OK. Just remember when you've got channel control, that there's no substitute for courtesy.

Tips for channel controllers:

Have paper and pencil, a watch or clock, a 10-code list, a copy of part 95, FCC Rules and a bottle of aspirin on hand when you take control. Announce that you've got the control and ask breakers to come back with a handle or a number; write them down and then read the list and ask if there are any more. Once you've got them all, start giving breaks in the order listed. Mark each one off as he takes his break

Tips for breakers:

When you ask for a break, give your handle, call sign or some other kind of ID. It's difficult to distinguish several people saying "Break 1, please" at the same time. Don't key up in the middle of someone else's conversation, but wait until they're finished or until control asks for breakers. If channel control doesn't acknowledge you, try again in an appropriate spot or ask someone to 10-5 your break. When control has recognized your request, stand by until he gives you your break. If you have to go 10-7 before you get your break, let channel control know. This will avoid confusion and save time.

Once you get the break, as No-Luck put it the other day, "It's your nickel, spend it any way you want to." However, if there's a long list of breakers you might consider going to another channel once you make contact with your party. The same applies to breaking for a quickie. I would discourage this practice unless there are compelling reasons for jumping ahead of others on the list, and it takes only a few seconds to go 10-27. When you've finished your conversation be sure to let channel control know.

Just remember when you're breaking that there's no substitute for courtesy.

That long awaited day for bowhunters has finally arrived. Deer season for archery opens tomorrow in Georgia with Alabama's season set to open on the 15th. Wait a minute now, don't go galloping off to the woods without complying with regulations.

Archery regulations are basically the same as those applying to gun hunting. Don't spoil your season by not complying with them.

The Ft. Benning Natural Resources Board makes recommendations to the Commanding General

MPs to direct traffic during Volks Fest

Due to the Volks Fest Saturday, MPs will be directing traffic at the primary intersections on main post. No roads will be closed, but there will be limited access on Lumpkin and Marne Road.

MPs will be directing traffic during the three timed running events during the fest. Drivers will be instructed to stop whenever runners are in the area. There will be no MPs restricting traffic for the non-timed running events.

Parking for the fest will be in the vicinity of Doughboy Stadium and military police will be on duty to direct drivers to available spaces.

concerning a wide range of matters affecting hunting and fishing on the reservation. Some folks feel that Benning's outdoormen themselves should have a representative on this board and they're doing something about it. A meeting of all interested personnel has been set for 5 pm, October 22nd at the Rifle and Pistol Club (Phillips Range) to form a committee and elect a representative to serve on the Natural Resources Board. If you're a concerned outdoorsman this is your chance to make your views known.

For those planning on hunting on the reservation this year, the following tidbits are offered to assist your preparation;

- A free zeroing range will be available under supervision, on October 24th, 30th and 31st. Firing will be conducted between 9 am and 3 pm each day. Firing will be for shotguns only and refreshments will be available.

- Georgia state resident and nonresident Hunting and Fishing licenses are now being sold at the Ft. Benning Mall exchange. Check at the Sporting Goods Section.

- The sale of Post Hunting and Fishing permits, is conducted between 9 am and 3:30 pm, Monday through Friday at Bldg 83, Room 215. Saturday sales are between 8 am and 12 noon. There are no Sunday and holiday sales.

Ponder this until next week: Comparing the number of hunters killed each year to the number of animals killed (percentage-wise). Are men really smarter than animals?

"We'll be spending our anniversary in Europe."

Renee Basa feels pretty good about her husband being in the Army.

"I love to travel, and that's one of the things I love about John being in the Army. We got married a few months before he reenlisted. Now he's on orders for Europe, and we'll be spending our first anniversary there. If it hadn't been for the Army, we wouldn't have made it.

"Of course, the travel is just one of the things I like about the Army. The medical care is great, too. The first time I went to the Army doctors they really treated me well; they really cared.

"I thought it was great that John reenlisted. I'm happy with the Army, and so is he. He's a Bandsman. In the Army, he can continue his musical education while he's doing something he loves. In fact, we're so happy with the Army I've thought about enlisting myself."

Today's Army gets better every time a good family reenlists.

Mexican dinners fuel clerk's daily runs

Running three or four miles a day really builds up an appetite. For SP4 Ricardo Amador, 926th Med Det, 34th Med Bn, there's no problem, his hobbies include running and preparing Mexican dishes. Once he completes his long run, he goes home and prepares his meal.

Amador, a preventive medicine specialist, enlisted in the Army in January 1975 and was assigned to Ft. Benning in July 1975. Due to the shortage of SIDPERS Clerks, he attended the Post SIDPERS school and is presently performing duty as the SIDPERS Clerk for HHD, 34th Med Bn.

He began his running career while in high school at Point Loma, CA as a member of the Cross Country team. As a junior, he set a county record for the 3/4 mile at 3.09.6 in the San Diego County Exhibition Meet in 1967.

Amador started running as a hobby in college because with the student workload, he didn't have time to engage in formal track and field activities. He completes his weekly five mile run in 28 minutes.

He competed in the last two running events held at Ft. Benning placing first in his class at 65 minutes in the 10 mile Volks March and second in his class with a time of 1.24.39 in the 13.1 mile mini-marathon.

Cooking Mexican meals in the evenings provides SP4 Ricardo Amador, with the energy he needs for his daily three and four mile runs.

"Running is a release from the day to day hassle pressures that happen to everyone," says Amador, "after a good run I feel better and I am at peace with the world."

After his daily run, Amador then goes home and prepares his own meal. His specialties are enchiladas, using selfmade tortillas, barbecued steak using a secret recipe sauce and chili Rellenos, which are deep fried peppers that are stuffed with cheese. His recipes for tortillas are kept in his head and he mixes them by "feel." He prepares meals for friends 3 or 4 times a month.

When asked about the possibility of cooking professionally, Amador stated, "No way, that would take all the fun out of it and I would have to compromise on some of my recipes to make money on the food. I'll just keep it as a hobby."

VA Q&A

Q — I used by GI loan to purchase my present home. I have a veteran who wants to purchase my home and assume my GI loan. If I do this, can my entitlement be restored?

A — Yes, if the purchaser is a veteran who has entitlement to a GI loan and agrees to substitute the same amount of his or her entitlement as was used on your loan and the purchaser is approved by the VA as to income and credit.

Q — I am medically retired from military service. I intend to buy $10,000 of disabled veterans (RH) insurance coverage. Does this affect my right to buy Veterans Group Life Insurance coverage in the amount of $20,000?

A — No. Coverage under USGLI policies and NSLI policies (including RH policies) is generally limited to $10,000, but this does not limit concurrent coverage under SGLI, VGLI, or VMLI, provided you are otherwise eligible for those programs.

The Volvo Sale.

(A once-in-a-decade event.)

Every year around this time, cars go on sale left and right.

One car you've probably never seen on sale is a Volvo.

Because people quick to recognize quality in a car have always snapped Volkswagens up quickly.

But this year, we have some '76 Volkswagens left. And with our '77 models coming in soon, we have to move them out.

So we'll be making deals on Volkswagens like we've never made before.

Unlike a lot of sales, this one doesn't feature remnants. You won't end up with some odd-colored, stripped down or about-to-be-discontinued model that nobody wants.

You'll be able to make a deal on a wide selection of fully-equipped Volkswagens.

You can choose a 2-door, 4-door or station wagon. From either our 240 series. Or from our luxurious 260 series.

No matter what you choose, you'll end up with a car that has become legendary for its safety, comfort and intelligent design.

So come in and look at one of our Volkswagens today.

These prices may not be around tomorrow.

EM to wear branch brass of PMOS

On October 15th, all enlisted personnel will begin to wear the branch brass of their primary MOS. Since this change was announced, there has been some confusion as to what brass corresponds to what MOS. The following information should make the transition easier.

Enlisted personnel do not have definable, assigned branches like officers. Soldiers are trained and used in fields that relate to the basic arms of the Army.

In addition to MOS related brass, the "Pallas Athene" brass worn by women soldiers will only be authorized for wear by women during basic training. Upon graduation from basic, women will wear brass of the MOS they are to be trained in during AIT, and will continue to wear the brass of their primary MOS in the same manner as men.

This one time chart of brass — MOS should be used as guidance in the wearing of the proper brass.

APOE open for overseas
PCS

Soldiers on orders for overseas may choose to report to an alternate Aerial port of Embarkation (APOE) at their own expense. MILPERCEN officials say that the current CONUS/APOE options are McGuire AFB, NJ, or Charleston AFB, SC, for Germany-bound troops.

Those on orders to Korea may fly out of Travis AFB, CA, or Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, WA.

The alternate APOE policy was adopted to cut possible financial hardships on troops. Many soldiers, especially recent AIT graduates, take leave before they depart overseas. Often, they may be closer to an alternate APOE that is not listed in their assignment instructions.

MILPERCEN officials say that regardless of which APOE site the soldier selects, the government will pay a travel allowance only to the APOE nearest the soldier's last duty station.

Some soldiers choosing an alternate have miscalculated the time required to reach the APOE. All soldiers moving overseas must report in at least 1½ hours prior to the departure of their flight. The flight time is listed on the Military Transportation Authorization (MTA) as item 10. Soldiers arriving later than the required 1½ hours prior to takeoff will not be allowed to board the flight . . . Plan carefully. (ARNEWS)

NCO Wives Club News Bazaar Craft Day

Members of the NCOWC met at their club house on September 40th to work on bazaar projects. Many projects are finished, but much more is to be done as we prepare for our November 5th bazaar. We are counting on every member to participate and donate to this once a year event, to raise funds for our charity programs.

Muscogee Nursing Home

The NCO Wives met at the Muscogee Nursing Home on September 27th for games and treats. Each year the wives club select a Nursing Home to visit once a month. This visit takes place on the last Monday of the month at 2 pm, and is one of many charitable events that the club and members support. The Chairwomen in charge of these visits: Mrs. Howard, Mrs. Dinnell and Mrs. Jones, were very happy to have Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Patrick and Mrs. Bass accompanying them this month.

Tea

On Wednesday, September 29th, Mrs. Vincent Roegiers, wife of the Post Sergeant Major, opened her home to honor the officers and chairwomen of the Non-Commissioned Officers Wives in one of the loveliest settings of the season, an Indoor-Outdoor Tea. With a touch of Fall and the warmth of her Hospitality, it was a most enjoyable afternoon. The tables were graced with an Army and Navy table cloth and skirts of golden colors. The finger foods were abundant, delicious and the topic of conversation, as the ladies drank coffee or tea and socialized with Mrs. Roegiers and her very distinguished guests: Mrs. Williard Latham and Mrs. Fred McHaffey.

SGM's Harvest Ball

On Friday night September 24th, the Sergeant Majors and their wives attended the Harvest Ball at the Top 5 NCO Club Annex. This lovely affair was hosted by the 197th Inf Bde and was held in the Party Room at the Top 5 Club with approximately 200 in attendance. The party room was beautifully decorated by the 197th in the typically fall setting of cornfields and scarecrows, with background murals of old fashioned and artistic scenes. Beautiful flowers of the fall colors accented the room. SGM Roegiers welcomed as newcomers, SGM's Duconz Hancock, Franklin Kinard, Robert Wood, Hal W. Reeves, Alexander Maka, Nathaniel Jackson, Horace Harrell, Jackie Black, Jack L. Green, James L. Hawu and Donald Cox. to: SGM's Homer Henderson, Leonard Miller and Robert Beck. The group enjoyed a very tasty buffet, after which there was music and dancing in the Ball Room.

Luncheon and Farewell

On September 15th, the ladies of the 478th Avn Co met in the home of CPT and Mrs. Riley J. Smith for a luncheon and to say farewell to Mrs. Riley Boothe. The Boothe's have been reassigned to Ft. Rucker, AL.

● Museum dedication, CMC dinner/dance cancelled

A dedication ceremony for the Infantry Museum and a dinner/dance commemorating the 30th anniversary of the Civilian and Military Council (CMC), which were to have been held October 15th, have been cancelled due to injuries received by Mr. Jim Woodruff Jr., President of the National Infantry Museum Association and the Chairman of CMC, in an auto accident October 2d.

A future date for the dedication ceremony has not been announced.

CMC members will receive notification of the next meeting and checks for the dinner/dance already sent to the Ft. Benning Officer's Club will be returned.

● Doughboy scrimmage slated

The Ft. Benning 'Doughboys' have returned.

After an absence of ten years, tackle football will again highlight Benning's fall sports season. The team's first scrimmage will be at 7:30 tonight at Doughboy Stadium.

It's not too late to join up. The team is pretty strong in the backfield but could use a little beef up front. If you're interested, contact LTC Wayne Boles at 545-5333.

● Bad check policy tightens

The Army is going to come down hard on bad-check writers under a new regulation developed by The Adjutant General's Office. The program, outlined in AR 608-16 has been set up to provide stronger controls on check cashing and to put teeth into enforcement procedures against chronic bad-check writers.

Some of the enforcement provisions include:

- Circulation of a bad-check list.
- Suspension of check-cashing privileges.
- Overstamping of ID cards (showing privileges suspended).
- Increasingly severe administrative discipline against offenders.

The new regulation outlines the check-cashing policy and provides uniform procedures for check cashing and processing of dishonored checks. The AR also provides for an installation check control officer to monitor the program. Since paperwork connected with this regulation goes through company commanders, COs should be familiar with the AR's provisions and recognize the importance of strong and continuing command action to eliminate the passing of bad checks.

OCS goes coed

The first combined male-female class of the Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate Course is scheduled to begin here November 7th, according to U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC).

TRADOC said the class is programmed for a maximum of 205 students, which will include approximately 12 women. The 14-week program of instruction represents the inauguration of Ft. Benning as the Army's only OCS station.

Female graduates of the course will be assigned to any of 10 branches, excluding Field Artillery, Armor, Air Defense Artillery and Infantry.

LTC Dick LeClere, commander of the 5th Stu Bn at Ft. Benning, said women will receive the same training as their male counterparts, except for minor variations due to physiological differences.

"Only minimal adjustments are to be made," LTC LeClere said. "They will take the Women's Physical Fitness Test and do modified pushups, situps and pullups."

TRADOC said the physical demands of the new OCS program are more rigorous than in the female OCS formerly conducted at Ft. McClellan, AL. Candidates must be prepared mentally and physically, understanding that the training is going to be rough, but realistic. All tasks will be constructive and similar to those encountered as an officer, it was emphasized.

1LT Iona Pruitt, first female tactical officer at Ft. Benning, is observing a complete cycle of an OCS class to prepare for her new duties.

She believes the integration of classes is a good idea. "There is no need to have women at Ft. McClellan and men here when they can train together."

Selection criteria will be basically the same for all candidates. Each must have two years of college or equivalent; be between 19-and-a-half and 29 years of age when entering the program; have high moral character and leadership qualities; and score at least 300 points on the Advanced Physical Fitness Test.

The Ft. Benning program does not affect officer-producing courses offered by Judge Advocate General, Medical Corps, or Finance Corps.

AUSA NEWS

The Association of the United States Army will hold its 22nd Annual Meeting at the Sheraton Park Hotel in Washington, D.C. October 11th through the 13th.

A delegation of 55 members of the Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Chapter will attend the meeting. The delegation includes seven officers and 27 enlisted, both male and female, dependent wives, DA civilians and civilians from Columbus and Phenix City.

The program designed for the professional benefit of personnel of all Army components, will feature addresses by the Secretary of the Army, Martin R. Hoffmann; the new Army Chief of Staff, GEN Bernard W. Rogers; and the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, GEN Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Also featured will be a panel discussion "How Tall Are the Russians?" which will assess the military capabilities of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Participating in this panel will be former CIA Director, Honorable William E. Colby; former Army Chief of Staff and Chairman of the JCS, GEN Maxwell D. Taylor; Representative Lew Aspin of Wisconsin; Mr. John M. Collins, Senior Defense Specialist of the Library of Congress; and COL Frederick C. Turner, a U.S. Army specialist on the Soviet Army.

Other highlights include seminars on the Army's Officer Personnel Management System, Enlisted Personnel Management System, Reserve Component Readiness, and the DoD's Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation. The meeting will also include a ROTC Workshop, Chapter Delegates Workshop, and the Annual AUSA Business Meeting.

Another special attraction will be the Sergeants Major Conference, conducted by the Sergeant Major of the Army, W. G. Balnbridge, on the opening morning of the meeting, followed by a reception and luncheon for the sergeants major and their guests.

A large array of exhibits will be on hand to provide an opportunity for AUSA members and guests to see firsthand advances in technology, new weapons and equipment and the progress of various Army Commands.

Ft. Benning's display will portray the five arms of the infantry and explain their role on the modern battlefield.

The three-day meeting will be capped by the annual George C. Marshall Dinner at which the Honorable Frank Pace, former Secretary of the Army, will receive the George C. Marshall Medal for his many contributions to the nation.

AUSA action on the issues

Problem — FY77 Defense Budget includes Executive Branch (OMB/DOD) "fair market rental" proposal stemming from study group belief that individuals now living in government family quarters receive more compensation than those living off-post and drawing BAQ. Optional on or off-post residency for all ranks is part of proposal as is payment for government furnished utilities. All Services opposed to proposals.

AUSA Action:

- Opposed to piecemeal compensation actions and any actions which break down the cohesive fibre of military service (optional residency); in October 1975, AUSA informed all Congressmen that on-post housing was needed to reinforce total identification and commitment to the Army.

- April 1976 "Guns and Oleo" paper to DoD/DA Secretariat, friends of the military and selected Congressmen included opposition to fair market rental concept.

RESULTS:

- Action not completed in Congress. However, acting on Authorization Bill the House and Senate rejected Fair Market Rental concept but did agree to permit the President to place up to 25% of annual active duty pay adjustment into BAQ, with cash rebate to on-post bachelors.

Problem — Secretary of the Treasury unwilling to grant additional moratorium to Services on Tax Reform Act of 1969 requirement that moving expenses in form of payments to member, indirectly to third party or "in-kind" value (cost of furniture shipment) be reported as gross income by the member. In addition to cost to the Army to set-up and administer the reporting procedure, failure to grant moratorium after 30 June 1976 could result in moving taxes of up to $2700 to the serviceman for moves of less than 50 miles, 39 weeks duration or while sponsor is in short tour area!

AUSA ACTION:

- Acted as catalyst between DoD and Treasury when problem first surfaced in 1970.

- Letter to President on 17 May 1976 urging immediately action to correct situation including moratorium extension.

RESULTS:

- On May 24, 1976, the Secretary of the Treasury announced further six month extension to the current moratorium.

- Section 506 of HR10612 (Tax Reform Act of 1975), currently before the Senate Finance Committee, would permanently eliminate the problem.

Problem — Insufficient Adequate Quarters

AUSA ACTION

- Annually since 1963, each Congressman, as well as Defense and Army Secretariat, has been reapprehensive of the over-age, inadequate barracks, bachelor quarters and family housing in which many Army Servicemen and women live and urged to provide adequate quarters for all eligibles. In 1972, based on European Department AUSA proposal, AUSA urged that special leasing efforts be made in areas where construction of additional government housing was not feasible or desirable.

RESULTS:

- Major increases in barracks and housing construction and renovation monies.

- USAREUR family quarters leasing authorization increased from 1,164 (FY73) to 7,420 (out of 10,928 authorized in FY75. Bill).

CFC donations rise to $103,289

Contributors to the 1977 Tri-City Combined Federal Campaign pushed the figure for total donations above the $100,000 mark Wednesday as campaign workers reported a sum of $103,284 so far.

This represents a slight slackening of the pace of the drive, as compared to the progress reported during last year's campaign. However, prospects remain good for reaching this year's goal of $240,000. Donations exceeded the goal set for the Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Campaign last year.

Those who gave by payroll deduction out-number cash contributors by about three to one. Payroll deduction is the preferred method of giving, according to Schoover, because it requires no great cash outlay and results in a substantial donation to the agencies which benefit from the campaign.

Commanders are optimistic about reaching this year's goal. If contributions continue at their present rate (about $17.50 per capital), Ft. Benning's goal of $240,000 should be easily met.

Anti-armor then

South Korea
July 1950

Task Force Smith (named for LTC Charles B. Smith, commander, 1st Battalion, 21st Infantry) was dug in along the main highway between Suwon and Osan with orders to stop the North Koreans as far from Pusan as possible. It was here that the ineffectiveness of existing American anti-tank weapons first came to light.

At about 0700, through the sweeping rain, Colonel Smith saw movement on the road in the direction of Suwon. By 0730 he could clearly see a tank column, eight in all, grinding toward his ridge.

At 0800, or thereabouts, the forward observer with the Infantry along the road picked up his field phone and called, 'Fire Misson.'

The rounds went into the stubby 105s, breechblocks clicked home. Gunners set their sights, leveled the bubble and section chiefs' arms went up. At 0816, Number 2 howitzer spat flame into the murky sky, one round, two. All guns joined in the barking chorus.

The tanks were now about two thousand yards in front of the Infantry holes, and still coming. Bursting HE shells walked into the tank column, splattering the advancing armor with flame and steel and mud.

"Jesus Christ, they're still coming," an Infantry soldier shouted.

Colonel Smith knew that the 75mm recoilless rifles he had placed covering the highway had very little ammunition; he now ordered them to hold their fire until the tanks got within 700 yards.

The NKPA tanks, dark and wicked and low-slung on the road, advanced arrogantly, seeming unconcerned by the exploding HE shells about them.

Antitank mines placed in the road would have stopped them. But there was not a single antitank mine in Korea. Air support might have stopped them, but because of the rain the planes could not fly.

Now the troops dug in along the ridge could count thirty tanks along the road.

At 700 yards, both rifles slammed at the tanks. Round after round burst against the T-34 turrets, with no apparent effect. But with this opposition, the tanks stopped and turned their 85mm cannon on the ridge. They fired, and their 7.62mm coaxial machine guns clawed the hillsides. Suddenly, American soldiers pulled their heads down.

Lieutenant Ollie Connor, watching, grabbed a bazooka and ran to the ditch alongside the road. Steadying the 2.36-inch rocket launcher on the nearest tank, only fifteen yards away, Connor let fly. The small charge burned out against the thick Russian armor without penetration . . .

He fired twenty-two rockets, none of which did any damage. Some of the rounds were so old they did not explode properly. The tankers, thinking they were up against only a small roadblock, made no real attempt to engage Task Force Smith, but continued down the road.

Are we facing another situation like Korea?

Last week's Army Times' headline screamed out, "Nunn Warns of Soviet Blitzkrieg Plans." In Senator Sam Nunn's (D-Ga.) assessment, "all signs point to a Soviet intention to wage 'blitzkrieg.' They have massed 20 divisions, on the North German Plain, they emphasize armor and mechanized infantry."

When it comes time to match the men in today's Army and their equipment against such a formidable force can they stand their ground?

A man who was there and had to face that armor threat in Korea, ISG Philip Richard, acting CSM, 2/10th FA, 197th Inf Bde. stated, "I was ordered to Korea June 29, 1950 with Btry D, (Automatic Weapons), 865th Anti-Aircraft Artillery. We were to defend Suwon Air Base until all the civilians were taken out. After that we reverted to a ground support role. I had the opportunity to engage a T-33 tank with the 40mm anti-aircraft gun. About all I can say is that the T-33 was and is one hell of a tank. The rounds just bounced off and I mean the armor piercing too. Nothing we threw at them seemed to stop them.

"As far as the equipment that we have today I think it can stop anything they hit us with. The only thing that I am concerned about is the signature the TOW missile leaves. Maybe there should be a way to guide it by remote control. I think the weapons we have are well suited to the German terrain."

The battle field of the future where man will be facing machine requires a long look. SFC Kenneth Thompson of the Anti-Ar Co, 3/7th Inf, a unit that has been reorganized into the concept of the 1980s commented, "The TOW (Trigger Operated Optically Tracked Wire Guided Missile) may be vulnerable to counter fire for a few seconds when engaging an enemy tank, but if you have already engaged him before he can get off the first round he's dead. The recommended position for employing the TOW is the "Hide Position" concealed behind a ridge with an observer up front. When we are in this configuration it takes about 20 seconds to pull the vehicle into position and engage a target at 3,000 meters. The thing I like best is the ability to change from on target to another in flight."

Are all the weapons in the Army's inventory for the infantryman effective?

This question was posted to 1LT Eric Smith, Anti-Tank Platoon Leader, in the Anti-Armor CO, 3/7th Inf, who commented, "Just go out to Patton Range and make a look at the five inch steel plate displayed there. The holes in it will tell you that the infantry has the LAW and other weapons that can do the job. The LAW when fired in salvo, that is when two or more hit on the target, will definitely knock out a tank. Of course just one LAW fired by one person can do the job just as well."

SP4 Patrick Jones of Hq Co, 3/7th Inf concluded by saying, "I think the LAW is an effective weapon, but I think they should put a little more sting in it. The Dragon antitank guided missile is one of the best things to come along for the infantryman, not that the 90mm Recoilless Rifle can't do the job. I know it can do the job of knocking out a tank."

Army uniform board okays changes

In keeping with the modern soldier concept, the Army Uniform Board (AUB) has approved additions, changes and deletions to the soldiers' wardrobe. A number of the changes include the following:

- Test three versions of a durable press women's fatigue. The selected fatigue should be available at the PX by the winter of 78-79 and in the Army supply system by February 1979. The AUB directed that the women's fatigue be made of the same durable press fabric used in the new men's fatigue.

- End development of a new Army green uniform for women. Two versions of an experimental Army green uniform for women have been undergoing tests since April 1975. Test results indicated no significant difference in acceptability between the standard and the test uniform, thus the recommendation that the project be ended.

- Make insignia policy for the pantsuit same as the Army green uniform (women).

- Make insignia policy for women's white shirt, when worn as another garment with the pantsuit slacks, the same as the summer knit uniform (women).

- Adopt a single breasted, below-the-knee length, black raincoat with liner for Army men. This will replace the green raincoat and overcoat. One reason for this decision was price, 39 per cent less than the current two separate items. In addition, the black coat would enhance appearance when blues and whites are worn while matching the women's raincoat during formation. Availability for issue of this item should be September 1978.

- Discontinue development of a longer men's black sock. Due to a study by the AUB, it was determined that half of the men surveyed were satisfied with the current sock. In addition, a new midcalf sock would cost more to develop and would not have satisfied 66 per cent of the soldiers.

- Test utility (baseball) caps: the standard cap versus an improved standard cap, Ranger cap with and without the ear flaps.

The AUB voted to continue testing of several possible caps to be worn with the fatigue uniform.

- Adopt synthetic gold braid for optional purchase and wear. Referencing the long-term use of a synthetic (Mylar) gold braid by the Navy, the AUB voted that this type braid be adopted for optional use. It would be less expensive than the currently used material and could be used on officer head-gear, sleeve and trouser stripes of the dress blue uniform, the border of the shoulder straps and loops for the dress blue uniform and the shoulder knots of the mess uniform.

- Investigation of an improved Army green fabric for year round wear.

- Test a shirt for wear with or without the Army green coat. This shirt was formerly called the Class B men's shirt and the Army green shirt. The AUB voted to test the new shirt utilizing the following concepts for a "wear" test. The color will be the same grey-green as the overblouse worn with the women's Army pantsuit. The fabric will be either a polyester-rayon or polyester-cotton, both wash and wear.

There will be a variety of styles tested, men's long and short sleeve, women's long and short sleeve for tuck in, and women's long and short sleeve overblouse with convertible collar.

Insignia wear for the shirt will be tested as follows: short sleeve shirt, the insignia will be worn the same as with the current short sleeve shirts. For the long sleeve shirt, the insignia will be shoulder marks for officers, sew-on sleeve rank for enlisted and pin-on collar insignia of rank for enlisted.

The estimated date of availability for the shirts is December 1979. (ARNEWS)

Training under internationally acclaimed shooting coach, Mr. Bill Krilling, CPT Nelson (R) and other members of the Biathlon Team are able to build up confidence and shooting abilities which are essential in the Olympic event. This sport requires the skiers to fire at various targets set at various distances while they are on skis.

Roadwork is essential in order to stay in top physical shape. "Poling" is a tiring and strenuous exercise which helps strengthen the arms and makes it easier to hold a rifle steady.

Biathlon team shooting, skiing way to Olympics

By Bob Nordan

Would anyone in his right mind come to Ft. Benning in September to practice snow skiing? Well, the U.S. Biathlon Team did. But that's just part of the story.

Biathlon is a sport that combines skiing with shooting. It is an Olympic event, has its own national and world championships and is well known and very popular in Europe.

For the second year the Biathlon Team is training at Ft. Benning under the tutelage of Mr. Bill Krilling, acclaimed by most as the best shooting coach in the world. Mr. Krilling is the international rifle coach at the U.S. Army Marksmanship unit at Ft. Benning. The 12 man squad arrived September 27 and will train with AMU until the end of October.

There are three international biathlon events: the 20 kilometer (12.4 mile) race, 10 km. (6.2 mile) race and the 4x7.5 meter relay — total 30 kilometers or 18.6 miles. In the 20 kilometer race, the biathlete skis a 5 km. trail which ends at the firing range. He takes his rifle from the carrying position on his back and fires five rounds from the prone position at paper targets 150 meters down range. He then skis another 5 km. and fires five rounds from the standing position. He repeats this process to total 20 km. and 20 shots. For each target he misses, he must ski a penalty lap 150 meters in length.

In the 10 km. race and 4 x 7.5 km. relay, biathletes fire at breakable targets. These are the events that ABC Sports covered so dramatically during the Winter Olympics. The processes of skiing and shooting in these two events are similar to the 20 km. race.

After skiing the trails and arriving at the firing line, the biathletes hearts are really pumping. Trying to shoot straight with your heart in your throat is a real challenge. Whereas smallbore rifle shooters try to get their pulse rate down to 60 while shooting, biathletes must shoot with their hearts pumping at 120 beats per minute.

"Shooting with a pulse is a whole new ball game," maintains CPT Lyle Nelson, National Biathlon Champion for the past two years and member of the US Biathlon Team at the Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, Austria. This is his fourth training trip to USAMU and he is optimistic about the results of training with the elite shooting organization. Training with USAMU teaches the biathletes how to better cope with the problem of shooting with a pulse. "Training with the world's best smallbore rifle shooters gives the the confidence we need to know that we can hit the targets when we need to," Nelson contends.

Shooting has traditionally been the weakest half of the US Biathlon Team efforts. CPT Nelson can see great improvements in the shooting abilities of the younger biathletes due to the expert training they are receiving. "We have the best rifle coach in the world, extensive range facilities and have been treated really well by the people at Ft. Benning," explains Nelson.

While polishing up their shooting skills, they can't let their skiing abilities get rusty, so they brought their "skis" along. While at Ft. Benning, their "skis" consist of 4-foot lengths of old wooden skis with three specially-made wheels mounted on them. The wheels only roll forward, which gives a feeling similar to the traction of cross-country skis on snow.

CPT Nelson sees Georgia as the perfect place to train this time of year. "Most of the biathletes live at altitudes above 6,000 feet. This time of year in those places we don't have snow yet, only rain. The weather here at Ft. Benning is ideal. It's cool and dry."

Unlike Nelson, who is assigned to the US Army Garrison at Ft. Carson, CO, most of the biathletes are civilians. They support themselves and train year round. Training takes so much time that most don't attend college. "Most of the biathletes on the team can only compete for several years," offers Ken Alligood, a team member hoping to be named coach. "They train constantly for these years and try to do the best they can. But after so long, they have to quit skiing and dedicate themselves to jobs."

CPT Nelson credits the Army with providing the backbone of the team. "I can't thank the Army enough for allowing me the time to train and compete. But as in many sports, Army athletes are vital part of the team."

"Skiing" on asphalt with their specially-made "skis" does cause some injuries. The secret is not to fall. But even then, injuries to elbows similar to "tennis elbow" are common. Some biathletes are now using retractable tips on their poles to absorb the impact and better simulate the poles' diggin into the snow. But, since asphalt is not quite as soft as snow, the similarity is minimal.

Running, walking, eating and music highlighted the German style Fall Volks Fest held here October 2d.

Three hundred and forty-four people ran for a total of 4,200 miles in the various marathons. More than 75 men, women, and children participated in the walking events. A large crowd enjoyed the afternoon's activities which included food, beverages and a variety of music at Gowdy Stadium.

The award ceremony was very impressive with its Olympic atmosphere. The flag decorations, winner's stands and red carpet provided a flair commensurate to the effort displayed by the entrants. Olympic gold winner Harvey Glance, Miss Georgia — Sandy Adamson and MG Willard Latham, commander were on hand to present the awards to the winners.

With its Olympic atmosphere, the winners of the Volks Fest received their medals in an impressive awards ceremony Saturday. There to present the awards were Miss

10-8 on the warpost

By "HOSS" KACI 4615

Once upon a time in the land of Seebie, the king, who was called Uncle Charlie by his subjects, decided that anyone who wanted to speak in public as a hobby would be required to have a license. He thereupon decreed that everyone who paid four shekels to the government would be given a number which would identify him as a legal speaker. However, after some thought, Uncle Charlie decided that the country would soon be filled with speakers and no one would be able to conduct any business. Therefore Uncle Charlie decreed that public speaking could only be done in 23 places in the whole country. This worked fine for a time until speaking became such a popular hobby that the government was flooded with requests for licenses. People began standing in line to use one of the 23 places and some even went so far as to use powerful amplifiers to drown out the other speakers.

There were also those who didn't bother to pay their shekels for the license to participate in this hobby, but who hogged the speaking places anyway. Uncle Charlie noted the crowded condition of the speaking places and reasoned that if he established more places to speak then more people would apply for licenses and the treasury would swell. Whereupon he decreed an additional 17 speaking places. There followed an immediate increase in the number of unlicensed speakers and illegal amplifiers.

Uncle Charlie tried to catch the law breakers but he just didn't have enough shekels to hire full-time guards for all 40 speaking places. Finally, a group of speakers decided that they would help Uncle Charlie by reporting all the violators they could find. They carefully watched all the public speaking places and reported each time a speaker refused to display one of Uncle Charlie's license numbers and all users of illegal amplifiers. Very soon these scofflaws began to get the message that they would no longer be allowed to run roughshod over the legal speakers and they began to disappear from the public speaking places in the land of the Seebie.

October 1st pay raise 4.83 per cent

The overall raise of 4.83 per cent for the military translates into a wide range of new pay and allowances. Under the new system only subsistence cash is increased by direct application of the overall percentage, one-quarter of the basic pay increase is shifted into quarters allowance rates, in addition to the regular 4.83 per cent BAQ raise. As a result of the shift, your basic pay goes up only 3.62 per cent and your BAQ by nine to 16 per cent. A major change this year was for those people without dependents who do not draw full cash BAQ. They will receive a BAQ rebate in cash, this rebate represents the money that was shifted from their basic pay increase into BAQ.

Training with TOW 'tough challenge'

By Ron Fowler

Paving the way for the new combat units of the future, the men of the Anti-Tank (AT) Co, 3/7th Inf, 197th Inf Bde began extensive training last week on tactical assembly, employment and tracking of their TOW anti-tank weapons systems.

The TOW training, which lasted all week, consisted mainly of intensive crew drill exercises. During these crew drills, each TOW squad was required to set up the weapons in as little time as possible and track and engage an imaginary target.

"On the battlefield of the future, we're going to have to be able to engage moving armored vehicles at very extended ranges, many up to 3000 meters," said SP4 James Clark, a TOW squad leader in the AT Co, "And besides all that, we're going to have to be able to engage that armor in as little as 16 seconds."

The portable, man-pack TOW, which can also be mounted on wheeled or tracked vehicles, and on helicopters, takes a crew of four to set up, and is one of the Army's newer anti-tank weapons. It will eventually replace the 106mm recoilless rifle as the Army's "power punch" against heavily armored vehicles.

"The TOW takes a lot of getting used to after being so familiar with the 106," commented PFC Timothy Simmons, a TOW gunner in the T Co. "You don't have to trace the 106 to the target like you do the TOW. But I still think that after we've trained on it awhile, we'll discover that its a better AT weapon than the 106."

The men of the T Co, 3/7th Inf are not the only unit on Kelley Hill who has been concentrating their efforts on the proficiency of their tank hunter-killer teams though. The men of the T Plt, CSC, 1/58th Inf are also training every day on their TOWs with the most emphasis being placed on crew drills.

SP4 James Clark of Anti-Tank Co, 3/7th Inf, 197th Inf Bde tracks an imaginary target with his TOW during training conducted last week on Combined Arms Field.

"We've been running our TOW crews almost ragged with crew drills," stated SSG Lieutenant Harris, TOW Plt Sgt of the 1/58th Inf. "Next week though, we'll take our tracks and TOWs to the field so they'll be able to drill under more realistic combat conditions."

Although it's been only three weeks since the TOW guided missile weapons systems arrived in the brigade, many of the T personnel are already becoming very proficient in its operation.

"It's one hell of a weapon," concluded PFC Kenneth Brooks, assistant gunner in the

AT CO, 3/7th Inf. "Sure it takes some getting used to, but after you learn the basics of employment, operation and tracking, all you have to do is build up your operating speed. It's a pretty tough challenge."

FHA home loans open

Special veterans' home loans, insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), are available to certain veterans, Reservists and members of the National Guard, according to Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler. He said that all individuals who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States and who were discharged under conditions other than dishonorable after at least 90 days of active service or active-duty-for-training are eligible for the special FHA insured mortgage loans.

In some respects, the benefits of the FHA loan program are similar to those of the GI home loan program administration. The FHA program, however, is available to veterans who do not otherwise qualify for a VA insured home loan.

Complete information on the FHA home loan program for veterans is available at any office of the Georgia Department of Veterans Service.

More and more hunters are taking to the field in quest of game, especially deer. Many of these hunters fail to check local laws and regulations or simply ignore them. Consequently, there will also be a record number of citations issued for game violations. As you complete your final preparations for this year's hunt, check this list. It may prevent your day from ending with a game citation:

Necessary permits (Georgia state, big game and post hunting permits); safety film (license must be stamped showing proof of viewing film); weapons (shotguns only, 20 gauge or larger, plugged, three shells including chamber, registered with PMO-you must carry registration card with you); ammunition (slugs or buckshot); clothing (500 square inches of international orange fluorescent material worn above the waist to include hat); area clearance (check range control maps at PMO, Range Control HQs or Deer Check Station); tagging and checking (deer should be tagged immediately when killed and checked in at Bldg 5883, Deer Check Station).

The initial part of the season is "bucks only" with three inch antlers or larger. If you should kill a doe by mistake, do not leave it in the woods, turn it into the Game Enforcement Office, PMO.

As the gun season for deer approaches, many hunters are taking to the woods to track down old "moss horns" and build deer stands. The construction of a deer stand, as anyone who has ever carried material into the woods and done so will tell you, is an arduous, time consuming job. Each year men that have had the foresight to build stands are plagued by unauthorized use of their stands and at times many embarrassing and trying situations have developed.

Hunters that are constructing stands or already have stands should mark them with their name and telephone number. Common courtesy dictates that those desiring to use another's stand should obtain permission first.

(Cowboys-Redskins)

The Redskins won their second straight victory at Gordon Field on Saturday morning by defeating the Cowboys 12-6. Bappy Barber led the Redskins attack with two touchdowns and 81 yards rushing, while racy Rucker rushed for 65 yards. The Redskins defenders held the Cowboys to a single score on a touchdown pass. Defensive standouts were, Tracy Rucker, Bappy Barber, Eric Voegell and Mark Godette, thanks to the great team effort.

The Redskins received the opening kickoff and scored on their first possession, for a 6-0 lead. At the end of the second quarter, Bappy Barber bolted into the end zone on a 4-yard touchdown for a 12-0 halftime score. A super pass play by the Cowboys narrowed the lead to 12-6 in the third quarter, but the fourth belonged to the Redskins. The backfield of Barber, Rucker and Billy Wagstaff, ground out the yards in a time consuming drive directed by quarterback Phil Chelf, had the Redskins near the Cowboy end zone as the game ended.

EPMS: some stripes will change

Some soldiers will be changing their stripes soon. According to MILPERCEN officials, the Enlisted Personnel management System (EPMS) will be changing some hard stripe grades to specialist and specialist grades to hard stripe. MILPERCEN officials say that this is to give soldiers better career progression.

In addition these changes will conform with a revised Standards of Grade Authorization (SGA).

The SGA, which is set by law, does not allow both NCO and specialist ranks in the same MOS and skill level. This will cause the lateral NCO/Specialist conversions.

The main factor in determining if NCOs or specialists should be authorized is the number of positions in the MOS and skill level which require leadership, supervisory or managerial responsibilities.

These conversions will be based on Armywide structure evaluations. MILPERCEN officials emphasize that these evaluations are not a reflection of the soldier's performance or are they a factor in his or her professional development.

Exceptions to the SGA's requirements are E-4s whose MOSs are under EPMS. They may be appointed as corporals even though PMOS structures do not include NCOs in grade E-4 at the soldier's skill level. In this case, the soldier must have served successfully in the NCO position for at least 60 days, have the recommendation of his or her immediate commander, and meet the other requirements outlined in paragraph 7-35 of AR 600-200. This paragraph spells out the policies and procedures pertaining to lateral appointments and will be revised later to reflect policies which pertain to the conversion of personnel under EPMS.

MEDDAC can help you

By Betty Zimmerman

MEDDAC has opened another avenue of communication between Martin Army Hospital and its supported community concerning the medical care provided.

The Community Health Advisory Council is the newest vehicle for the interchange of ideas between the community and the hospital.

This council, co-chaired by the MEDDAC Commander and the Asst. Cmdr, USAIC, meets every two months and consists of representatives for MEDDAC, the major commands, the retired Officers' and NCOs' associations and the wives clubs.

This council was established to provide a community health education and information program that will enhance the effectiveness with which the MEDDAC and its supported community interact.

The representatives will provide a medium for the exchange of ideas relating to the shared responsibility of the medical facilities and the people, in maintaining quality care. They will pass information on to their people and the people may make inquiries through their representatives.

The council will also provide an avenue for the evaluation of current health education and information programs to insure that the targeted public is being reached.

In return, MEDDAC can inform the council members of problems unique to them which have impact on the supported population. They can also advise the Post Commander on matters relating to community health education and information, as required.

"When you're doing something of value

That's the way SP4- Dominic Rocco feels about his job as an Air Defense Acquisition Radar Maintenance Instructor.

"When I first came in the Army, I didn't know the first thing about electronics. But I had forty solid hours of the basics before I even started the course, so now I feel right at home with an oscilloscope and a maze of wires.

"In the lab it's my job to show students, right on the equipment, the things they've been studying in a theoretical way in the classroom. And sometimes I get the feeling, by the questions they ask, that it's not just the equipment they're testing.

"Eventually I might try setting up my own repair business. But for right now, I like the challenge of teaching. And that's why I'm staying in."

34th Med to support BRAVESHIELD XV

It's that time of year again. The annual BRAVESHIELD FTX will be held in Florida during the period October 2-26th and the 34th Med Bn will be providing support for the maneuver elements.

BRAVESHIELD XV, involving about 10,000 troops will pit the "friendlies" of the 82nd Div against the "bad guys" of the 24th Inf Div. The 34th Med Bn commanded by LTC Donald Hull will provide the command and control Headquarters for all non-divisional medical units participating in the FTX.

Units from the 34th, taking part in the exercise include HQ & HQ Det, 478th Avn Co (HH) 2d CS Hosp, 926th Med Det (Prev. Med) 498th Med Co (AA) and the 261st Med

Det ( Med Equip Maint).

This 250 man contingent will be augmented by medical units from Ft Jackson, SC, Ft Rucker, AL, Ft Stewart, GA, Ft Bragg, NC and an ambulance company from the New York National Guard to bring the total of the Medical Task Force to about 400 people.

Although both maneuver divisions have their own Medical units they will be looking to the 34th for hospitalization and dental, veterinary, preventative medicine, medical equipment maintenance and helicopter medical evacuation support. The 478th Avn Co (HH) in addition to taking care of the heavy lift needs of the 82nd Div. will also be undergoing its annual ORTT.

Armed Forces Days are scheduled at Disney World October 8-17th. A special discount admissions price of $6.25 will be offered to military personnel and their dependents during those days. Military personnel will also receive a discount on their lodging. You can stay at the Hotel Plaza for $28 a night or if camping is your thing, Ft. Wilderness Campgrounds can be reserved for $12 a night. So come join in the fun at a price you can afford.

The 1977 Combined Federal Campaign for the Tri-City area has a total of $125,109.83 in contributions, slightly more than one-half of this year's goal of $240,000.

So far 7,089 federal personnel have given to the CFC. More support is needed if this year's goal is to be reached.

Donors have a choice between payroll deduction and cash or check contributions. Many needy people will benefit, no matter how much you give.

The funds collected will provide financial assistance to 47 voluntary health, welfare and youth agencies, some of which are in the Tri-Community area.

546th Med returns from REFORGER

By Bill C. Walton

The 546th Med Co (Clearing), 34th Med Bn returned to Ft. Benning after seven weeks of extensive field training in Germany.

The unit which participated in the annual NATO Field Training Exercise (FTX), REFORGER, proved that it could deploy its forces on short notice and meet the challenge on the mobile battlefield.

Augmented with doctors from Forts Polk, Knox, Bragg and Ord, the 546th provided medical support to participants in the exercise. Unlike most field training exercises during peacetime, REFORGER required the medics to work on "real" casualties as opposed to reacting to induced problems with "canned" or school solutions.

On arriving in Germany the unit was split to enable them to cover a larger area. The company headquarters and two medical platoons were located at Giebelstadt in central Germany and a third platoon was set up at Kitzingen.

The platoons at Giebelstadt supported the 101st Airmobile Division until being "farmed out" for Corps size FTXs with the 7th Corps in southern Germany. The remaining platoon provided medical support to the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment (ACR) in the 5th Corps area.

One of the highlights of the 7th Corps FTX occurred when the 546th contingent set up a dispensary and treatment facility at a civilian airfield near the city of Neumarkt. To better relations between the unit and their German hosts, the Americans had a two day open-house and invited the local populace to visit the dispensary and bivouac area. Approximately 400 people, including doctors from the local hospitals came to see how Army medical units operate in the field. In turn all interested 546th personnel were taken on a tour of the Neumarkt Hospital to observe German medical equipment and their hospital organization.

The platoon supporting the 11th ACR learned the meaning of cavalry mobility and received plenty of practice on moving and setting up a treatment facility. During one five day period they made four complete moves.

Valuable experiences were gained by all personnel of the medical unit during the exercise. Letters of commendation from major commands in Germany indicate how well the troops performed their mission and reflect highly on their state of training and positive attitude.

Solution can be found in alternatives

By Betty
Zimmerman

"Alternatives to Drug Abuse" is the theme for National Drug Abuse Prevention Week which runs from October 17th through the 23rd.

A viable alternative to using drugs (which includes alcohol) is not using drugs or stop using drugs. However, few people with a drug problem can make the change alone. Once they start, individuals do not stop using mood-altering or pleasure-seeking substances until they discover something better.

That's what alternatives are - something better - not just a substitution. It must be more effective than drugs for giving the person real satisfaction. Any alternatives offered must be realistic, attainable and meaningful to be acceptable and attractive.

According to Dr. V. Alton Dohner, a noted authority on approaches to drug education, "Any proposed alternative must help people to find self-understanding, improved self-image, feeling of importance, expanded awareness, or new experiences, which is what they seek through drugs."

He believes these alternatives must also meet other criteria to be effective. They must contribute to individual identity and independence. They must offer active participation and involvement. They must offer a chance for commitment.

They must provide a feeling of identification with some larger body of experience.

The areas which can be offered as alternatives to drug abuse include personal awareness, interpersonal relationships, self-reliance development, vocational skills, creative and esthetic experiences, philosophical exploration, social and political involvement, religious experiences, sexuality, and mind-trips.

Ft. Benning has the facilities and capabilities for providing many alternatives to drug use which are readily accessible to the soldier. The post's Alcohol and Drug Control (ADCO) office is here to provide support and service to all members of the command to include providing advice to commanders on how to handle and recognize drug offenders. It can provide a wide range of support in the way of education for prevention.

For more information contact the Ft. Benning Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program office, Bldg. 2215 or call 545-LIVE/5880/5774 or 544-4167.

Drug Abuse Proclamation

The President has proclaimed the period 17-23 October National Drug Abuse Prevention Week to emphasize the many alternatives to the use of drugs as a means to get high on life.

People abuse drugs due to personal deficiencies. They are not necessarily immature, immoral, irresponsible, socially disadvantaged or rebellious. They are unhappy people. They use drugs to feel better or to get high. They do not stop using mood-altering substances until they discover something better.

Our social structure provides many satisfying alternatives to the use or abuse of drugs but social structure cannot determine the needs of each individual. The constructive use of these alternatives requires sincere, interested people who are willing to put out a hand and say "Let me show you something better."

General discharge: it hurts

By Rick Hayeland

A General Discharge? The "barracks" lawyer will tell you it poses no problem for the soldier who receives it.

Don't tell that to Pvt. Charles M. Graves, a trainee in Alpha Battery, 3rd Cannon Bn. at Ft. Sill, Okla.

The general discharge he received in 1971 for "unsuitability" made his life a nightmare for five years and threatened to make shambles of his future.

Graves, 23, from Toledo, Ohio, enlisted in the Army in 1969, and, after completing his training, was assigned to Company A, 97th Signal Battalion in Germany as a switchboard operator.

In 1970 he lied about an emergency situation at home to get leave. He was granted an emergency leave and even received a $250 loan from Army Emergency Relief.

At home he called Germany to get his leave extended, putting on a "big act" when he ran into snags.

But after he got his extension, he decided he wanted out of the Army.

In February 1971, he got his wish — a General Discharge on grounds of unsuitability.

"At the time of the discharge, I was happy," said Graves. "The first thing I did was party. My friends were all happy to see me, even after they found out why I was out.

"My family was skeptical, however. My stepfather took me aside and said, "Chuck, you're in a helluva fix for the rest of your life."

"But I didn't think I was."

The friends and the job market were good and at first Chuck had plenty of the former and good prospects for the latter. He eventually landed a good paying job — working on Great Lakes ore ships in drydock.

His employer (the first of 55 he would have in five years) called him in shortly after he was hired to discuss the prior military service Graves had never mentioned and the resulting discharge.

Each time with each employer the story would be the same — "They'd call me in and tell me that if I'm unfit for the military, I'm unfit for them.

"Fifty-five jobs," said Graves shaking his head. "Even jobs like bartending, grass cutting, washing dishes, carrying out garbage and pumping gas. In the Army, I'd heard that employers don't check on discharges. People who say that are crazy."

And what about all the friends?

"I guess after a while what I had done sank in because their attitude toward me changed. They began to look down on me. Some would say, "Look, Chuck. We served our time. We sweated it out. Why couldn't you?"

"I lost quite a few friends," he continued. Word would get out, sometimes with the help of his former friends, and soon Chuck would be pounding the pavement for work.

"When I was pumping gas, the word got out about my discharge. The customers still came in, but they wouldn't let me wait on them — they'd ask for someone else."

Even the Army wouldn't take him back for a second chance.

"I wanted to come back to straighten my life out — but my discharge stood in the way. The recruiter told me to give it up. The Marines told me the same thing."

Even with his congressman writing letters for him, the military wouldn't change its mind. Eventually, the congressman wrote him a letter.

"What it really said was, "Well, I tried." Chuck decided to enlist again, but this time he wouldn't tell about the discharge.

"I went to a different recruiter and didn't tell him about the discharge. I figured the Army would find out before I got here, but they didn't.

Little more than a week after arriving at Sill for basic, Chuck turned himself in to his battery commander, CPT Peter Barber, after talking to his drill sergeant, SFC Richard Arrington.

"I started thinkin," he said. "It wasn't getting kicked out that bothered me — it was that $10,000 maximum fine and possibly jail for making fraudulent statements that worried me.

"There was no way I could have found out without his telling me," said Capt. Barber. "Oh, he would have been found out eventually, like when applying for a security clearance, but it might have taken years."

Both Barber and Arrington have gone to bat for Graves because he has been a good soldier so far — highly motivated, aggressive and able to take both orders and the one initiative.

He was considered at one point (before turning himself in) for a trainee platoon leader.

(Chuck sweated out the wait until papers were processed by the Ft. Sill AG. The commander decided Chuck's fate July 14th Graves' retention was approved.)

From what he has been shown so far, Barber thinks Chuck will make a good soldier.

"I think that anyone can overcome a handicap," a problem or a past in the Army," said Barber. "He's highly motivated."

Chuck's experiences have made him a highly convincing counselor for anyone in the unit trying for a less-than-honorable discharge.

"I try to sit down and talk to anyone I hear about getting out without an honorable discharge," he said. "At first, they sit back and laugh when I start talking because it seems funny to them. They tell me they've got it made because they've got good jobs waiting for them when they get out.

"I tell them that I had a good job waiting for me, too, but it turned into five years of nothing but hell.

"Some of the guys may have come to a different viewpoint. I'll do anything I can to stop them from taking the same route I took.

"I couldn't take it out there. People don't want to have anything to do with you — they don't talk to you and most of them won't even look at you once they find out what you are.

"It hurts, believe me, it hurts."

Army to implement Opposing Force concept

By Pat Merten

You and your company are on a field training exercise. At dusk you're inspecting fighting positions and your mind turns to the aggressor force that you've been told will oppose your unit. "How good will they be? How much pressure will they put on us?" You know one thing, though, "They'll look just like us except they'll probably be wearing those funny helmet liners with the wooden trim that makes them look like green Roman charioteers."

On your way back to your CP, firing suddenly breaks out and you realize that your unit is under attack. As you hurriedly take up your defensive position, you get your first glimpse of the aggressor. You've never seen the likes of him before . . . except perhaps in a magazine. He's dressed in what appears to be a Russian uniform, he's carrying an AK 47 assault rifle and he's running straight at you alongside a strange looking tank, definitely not made in the USA.

Even the sounds from the aggressor's weapons are different from the defensive fire your unit is putting out. Instead of firing and maneuvering toward you like U. S. troops, these guys are assaulting your company en masse. They come at you in such overwhelming force that in a matter of minutes they've overrun your position, taken you captive and, to make matters even more perplexing, they don't speak English.

What's going on here? Well, you've just been introduced to the new Opposing Force (OPFOR) concept that will soon be implemented in the Army-wide training system.

This program focuses on preparedness training against our foremost potential adversaries, gives the soldier a working knowledge of our adversaries' vulnerabilities and trains soldiers and leaders to exploit those weaknesses to beat them even when outnumbered and outgunned.

The 1973 Arab-Israeli War demonstrated that today's modern battlefield presents a challenge beyond any that the U. S. Army has faced before. It demanded that the Army reassess its capabilities to win on such a battlefield without incurring unacceptable losses. In reviewing the lessons learned in that conflict, it was clear that our future success would be governed by how well we understood the exploitable weaknesses of potential adversaries and how well we were able to correctly assess future adversary action.

It was also clear that our Aggressor Program simply didn't provide the realism essential to prepare commanders, NCOs and soldiers for the next war.

At that point, work was started to update and vitalize the Aggressor Program and, in September 1974, TRADOC proposed a new maneuver enemy to replace the old and no longer realistic Circle Trigon Party.

Let's now take a look at how the new Opposing Force concept will improve our mission readiness.

Once assigned to a unit, soldiers will receive training emphasizing their counterpart's makeup — the person on the other side of the hill that they have to beat. The rifleman's counterpart will be an adversary rifleman or grenadier; the helicopter pilot will be introduced to the other side's anti-aircraft gunner, his equipment and his capabilities. In addition to counterpart awareness, soldiers will be given recognition training and learn about the battlefield conditions that they may encounter with a specific opposing force.

This training will come to the trooper in classroom presentations, lectures and demonstrations, OPFOR training literature and instructional materials on specific potential adversaries. This material will be available to individual enlisted and officer personnel and will be tailored to their grade and job responsibilities.

OPFOR training will be integrated with instruction on U. S. tactical skills, techniques and principles. This approach should spur individual imagination and ingenuity in normal duty assignment and ultimately on the battlefield.

Future training literature will emphasize OPFOR awareness, and it is likely that the individual's knowledge of specific potential adversaries may be part of appropriate Skill Qualification Tests (SQTs). Service schools will incorporate into their curriculum the doctrine, tactics, weapons systems and fortifications of potential adversaries.

The Opposing Force concept will train crews on how opposing forces will employ their combined arms teams on specific types of terrain and emphasize early target acquisition and recognition of those forces.

Further, training will stress target engagement at maximum weapons systems capabilities of a specified potential adversary. Included in crew training will be instruction on the vulnerabilities of the opposing force's doctrine, tactics, and weapons systems.

Crew training will use realistic targets, battlefield simulators, fortifications and tactically deployed target displays likely to be encountered against a specific potential adversary. Training critiques will stress OPFOR doctrinal considerations which will increase crew skill proficiency and familiarization with the modern battlefield environment.

At this level, training will reinforce and add to the awareness of the opposing force achieved in crew training and focus on small unit tactics. Unlike equipment-oriented collective training, prominent at the crew level, unit training will assume opposing force numerical superiority.

Adding to this, unit personnel will also perform as the opposing force. This gives the soldier a chance to employ the adversary's tactical logic and techniques and provides the individual an opportunity to see our forces with "adversary eyes." The individual, hopefully, can take corrective action once back in his unit.

Armed with such insights, soldiers will become more aware of how best to employ their skills to maximize their effectiveness while minimizing their vulnerability.

Ultimately, the unit will face OPFOR forces in Army Training and Evaluation Programs (ARTEPs). These programs, tailored to specific potential adversaries, will use electronic warfare techniques, NBC considerations and other battlefield occurrences associated with that adversary's capabilities.

Future Army training will see OPFOR materials and equipment. Sufficient quantities will be acquired to provide a minimum essential quantity for each major U. S. Army force. Included in this will be foreign tanks, tracked vehicles and individual and crew served weapons.

Units will maintain the equipment as well as train their personnel in its operation. Adding to the realism will be OPFOR uniforms and associated accoutrements which will present a realistic image.

Also included in the list of realistic OPFOR training materials will be potential adversary maps, Communications - Electronic Operating Instructions (CEOI), operations orders formats (in the applicable foreign language) and associated documents and overlays. Even vehicle markings, although not those of actual units, will take on new realism. For example, the "997th Motorized Rifle Regiment" may be seen on bumpers in future training.

Training maneuvers will use OPFOR forces larger than the "friendlies." The role of the field problem controller will be important in insuring realism, and the opposing commanders will be afforded greater situational flexibility. The sense of uncertainty and competition inherent in such realistic situations will drive the natural development of operational security, intelligence gathering and deception that are viewed as essential to success on the modern battlefield. In organizing the OPFOR exercises, appropriate defensive/offensive force ratios will be employed.

The OPFOR forces will not only employ potential adversary conventional tactics but may also utilize unconventional warfare methods. This will present combat support and combat service support units with a real challenge in rear area protection and lines of communications security.

The OPFOR concept will be implemented Army-wide before the end of FY 78.

Well, there you have it. Realistic but bloodless OPFOR battles against uncooperative and competitive opposing forces will prepare the Army to win the real one.

It is through this type of demanding preparedness training that U. S. soldiers will, using their imagination and ingenuity, learn how to win — even if outnumbered and outgunned. (ARNEWS)

It appears that state tax officials are winning the battle to force soldiers to pay their state income taxes. A House Senate committee has agreed to make withholding of state taxes from military pay checks mandatory.

If Congress approves the proposal and the President signs it, states can request DoD to withhold taxes from military residents. DoD then has four months from the date of request to start withholding.

DoD will send the appropriate amount to each state listed as the soldier's legal residence. This information is shown on the W-4 form in Army finance records.

Soldiers' state income taxes have drawn increasing attention recently with some states pressuring the federal government to help them collect taxes from soldiers who are legal residents of that state but assigned elsewhere. Some estimates indicate that as many as half of the troops do not pay their state taxes where required.

DoD has opposed any mandatory withholding because of the expense involved to set up the system. About $6 million would be required to set up such a withholding system and about $1.7 million to operate it annually.

Some delays are expected in reprogramming finance computers if DoD can't persuade the Treasury Department to permit withholding of approximate amounts instead of exact tax amounts now called for. This would cut major reprogramming work.

Troops from Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Texas, Washington and Wyoming will not be affected by tax collection changes because these states have no state income tax. In addition, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Tennessee tax capital gains, interest or dividends, but not salaries. (ARNEWS)

PX advises care of uniform

New Army polyester texturized woven serge uniforms available at Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) retail outlets can give long and comfortable service, provided they are given proper care.

The shade 434 uniform offers the advantage of easy care, stretch comfortability and wrinkle resistance. These features make the uniform particularly well-suited for travel, both when worn and when packed.

The uniform has the advantages of double-knits and like double-knits, the woven uniform should not be worn on successive days without giving the fabric an opportunity to "recover."

AAFES also cautions customers to use extreme care when inserting or removing uniform insignia, medals and accoutrements having pins or metal clasps. If snags occur, the threads should be pulled to the backside of the fabric or cut off close to the surface.

The soldier and the 'Fair Share'

By Mike Brown

A term which recurs consistently throughout a soldier's career is "fair share." One is asked, during the time of the Combined Federal Campaign, to "give your fair share." However, the term is used not only in monetary considerations, but the work output as well. Individuals are urged to do their fair share for the betterment of the group, but sometimes considerable complaining if heard, for everyone has a different idea of what is fair.

The idea of fair share is sometimes left by the wayside and, too often, success is measured only by the results with no study of the methods utilized. Some soldiers deliberately fail to do their share of the work, whether it be in an office, a motor pool or a barracks GI party. They reason that someone else will do the work simply to get it accomplished on time and avoid repercussions. In such a situation, an often overlooked fact is that a supervisor who permits or condones such a practice is equally wrong, along with the shirker, for he has let the burden fall upon a few. Perhaps, for a short period of time, such a practice may be effective, but eventually complaints will arise. "How about that soldier? He never does his fair share. Why should I do my work and then have to do his as well?"

Often in our military system there are projects which have to be successfully completed by a specific deadline. Perhaps this necessity contributes to the problem. For example, a supervisor is informed by his superior that a certain report involving a considerable amount of typing must be completely perfect and ready to go out by the close of the day's business. The project should take about four hours of typing. The supervisor has two subordinates, both clerk typists, neither of whom has the ability to do the entire report alone. Should the supervisor divide this work evenly between the two typists? Ordinarily, perhaps he would do so, but he is aware of the fact that one of his typists is extremely lazy, a poor soldier who constantly complains and tries to avoid work. If the supervisor places the burden on one typist and assigns the lazy soldier a menial task, he is guilty of violating the fair share concept. Still, he knows the report must be done perfectly and submitted on time. He is, perhaps, in a quandary.

Some people who fail to carry out their weight at work may be unaware of their failure. Stop and think a minute; in your job are you letting others carry you, or do you do your fair portion of all the work allotted to your section? If someone is needed to work on the weekend, are you always ready with a convenient excuse so that your co-workers always have to pick up your share? Some shirkers rationalize their failure to share the work load by thinking, "I have personal problems. I can't concentrate on work right now." When you're looking for reasons to rationalize your behavior, they're too hard to come by. Unfortunately, the rationalization process gets easier the more you use it.

One may argue that there are always a few who refuse to take part in work or details and the best thing to do is identify them and make every effort to motivate them or, failing that, eliminate them from the service.

An individual may avoid doing his fair share because such a person has avoided it many times in the past with no action being taken. It is easy to say, "Let the other person do it." The problem arises when the "other person" is thinking exactly the same thing. The obvious result in such a situation: nothing gets done.

Some say, "There will always be a shirker." The shirkers themselves believe, "There will always be someone else to do the work."

It is interesting to note that the controversy surrounding "fair share" is hardly a new one. During the winter of 1776 when a weary and all but defeated continental army trudged southward from New York City to New Jersey, there was much grumbling in the ranks about "those colonies" which were not doing their fair share in the fight for independence. It was during that winter that Thomas Paine, a writer of political pamphlets, penned the inspirational words which gave cheer to many in a time of desperation, words which remain valid in our present day: "The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country, but he who stands it now deserves the love and thanks of every man and woman . . . I can not upon a few, but upon all . . . not upon this state or that state, but upon every state. Up and help us! Lay your shoulder to the wheel!" Fortunately, many colonists needed Paine's words, and did their "fair share." We, the soldiers of today, should do as much.

In comfortable boots

Marching down memory lane

By George Kerns

The other day a rookie guffawed at a picture of a World War I "doughboy" wrapping his legs with cloth puttees, and asked, "Where were the combat boots?"

Then I had to explain that combat boots didn't come along until the middle of World War II.

That put me in a reflective mood: the scene was Fort Dix, NJ, the reception station quartermaster, and two pairs of high-laced brown shoes and a pair of leggings were pushed at me.

Leggings for the uninformed, are what came after the puttee. They were olive drab color (wasn't nearly everything?) and had long laces. They clung to your legs via a strap under the middle of the bottom of your shoe and they laced up the side.

You could always tell a "boot" at basic training. His leggings would be an olive drab color and they would be laced tightly. The "veterans" in basic training, those in the seventh or eighth week, would have been forced to wash the mud off their leggings, which now appeared dung colored, and they bloused their fatigue pants over them. Instead of eight or so inches of legging showing, it was down to four, a kind of mod fashion.

There were smarties, too, in those days. A few, particularly noncoms — to distinguish themselves from "rookies" — took their leggings to the shoemaker, who cut them down and inserted zippers. Later they were available on the market (that cluster of gypsy-like stores outside every post) at a highly inflated price.

Later, conventional sneakers, green jungle colored with high tops were issued for jungle warfare.

It wasn't until the middle of the war in the Pacific that I saw combat boots. Not the nice black shiny ones of today, they were coarse (reversed uppers) tan colored. Actually, they were converted shoes. That is, new tops had been sewn on in the form of a band of leather with two straps. But the GIs were sharp and soon devised a way of dressing up the tops. They would rub the roughness off (sometimes burn it off with lighter fluid) and spend hours producing a creditable shine.

The "new" boots drew the envy of the Marines. They would trade anything for them, and they had something tradeable.

The Marines' poplin green work shirts and trousers were in demand. They had regular pockets and were light. The GIs were wearing heavy old fatigues with "barracks bag" pockets, large sewn-on patches that allowed a GI to carry a couple of grenades. Most of the time they carried extra ciggies in waterproof wrapping, a can of rations and maybe a wad of toilet tissue.

There was a great deal of swapping. A good many GIs wore the poplin fatigues with the imprint, "U.S. Marine Corps." And a number of Marines wore combat boots.

GS grade federal employes pay raise approved

President Ford approved an average pay raise of 4.83 per cent for GS grade federal employes. In approving that amount, he went along with the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission and the Office of Management and Budget. The raise brings the Federal employe salaries more in line with those of private industry. The increase for GS civilian employes will average 4.83 per cent but an employe's actual raise will vary depending upon the person's grade. Upper level executives will receive the largest increase with a 7.92 per cent and lower grades will receive an increase of 4.24 per cent.

The pay raise for civilian employes will be effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after October 1st.

While zipping down the river recently, I saw a familiar figure beating the banks in quest of that wary creature known as Bass. Yankin' back on the stick, I eased up close and shouted, "Caught any?" CPT Charlie Shepard furiously casting and retrieving answered, "Well, if I catch this one I'm after and two more, I'll have three." Oh, well what the H-. I should have known better.

I have confirmed the following from several unimpeachable sources. If there is such a thing among fisherman.

SFC Grady Vines was on the bank of that great river, Chattahoochee, fishing without a license. He felt a presence behind him, looked to see a man standing there, "You're the game warden?" asked Grady; "Yep!" came the authoritative answer. A pause. Grady nodded to the wriggling minnow on the line he had just lifted from the water, "just teaching her to swim."

Oh well, on with the news. Believe it or not there are some interesting tidbits this week.

Cool temperature, high winds and muddy water hindered the Post Bass Club's October tournament on Lake George. The final tally showed SSG (Ret) Bob Billman the winner with CPT Bob Kramer a close second. SFC Randy Harris captured big fish honors and third place with an eight pound, one ounce "hawg" caught on a "Deep Mini R". "This is a personal record for me," stated Randy, "caught him on the second cast." Congratulations Randy, you lucky dog!

Hunters should find the sporting goods section in the Mall exchange well stocked to fulfill hunting needs this year. Now's the time to save yourself some money and while you're up there, how about passing on your comments or suggestion to the folks manning the counter. You'll be surprised at the results.

The archery deer season has been under way for a couple weeks now and to date no deer have been checked in at the Deer Check Station. Come on now, gang. It's a known fact that some of you bow hunters are killing deer. The Check Station cannot be manned continuously during the bow season, but you can still check your deer in by calling 544-6120/6198. It's important that the Game Management folks be able to monitor the deer population on the reservation. Let's give them a hand.

Ponder this until next week: Not even a fish would get into trouble if he'd keep his mouth shut.

The National Infantry Museum was the scene of a ceremony October 6th for the unveiling of a newly acquired bust of South American hero Simon Bolivar.

Bolivar is sometimes referred to as the George Washington of South America, and, appropriately, there were representatives from three South American countries on hand for the ceremony.

CPT Jorge Ramos of Peru, MAJ Armando Pena of Colombia and CPT Omar Pacheco of Venezuela represented their respective homelands. The South American guests are all students in the IOAC at Ft. Benning. Also attending were representatives of the post Race Relations office, and other guests. Mr. Dick Grube, curator of the museum was host at the ceremony.

The bust of Bolivar, who died in 1830, was originally a gift to the United States from Venezuela. A beautiful bronze work, it sits on a tall pedestal in the central lobby of the museum building. Ft. Benning's Infantry Museum was designated by the Chief of Military History in Washington to receive it.

Simon Bolivar, hero, military leader, and political personality, sought the freedom from European colonial rule for all of South America. He envisioned the unification of all South American countries into one great confederation. His commemoration in the National Infantry Museum points to the proud cultural heritage of the Hispanic-American soldiers at Ft. Benning.

The Army is vitally concerned with the problem of individual soldiers. In view of this concern, the Staff Judge Advocate will present "legal briefs" in the interest of aiding soldiers in handling their legal affairs and problems through the many services available.

The Legal Assistance Division is prepared to assist in many cases. Among the services offered are preparation of wills, powers of attorney, bills of sale, affidavits and aid in certain income tax matters. Proper preventive action before an emergency arises can avert loss of valuable time due to lengthy unnecessary legal proceedings.

At no cost to the soldier, many legal matters are handled by qualified and competent military attorneys. Though the legal assistance program does not extend to having an army attorney represent the soldier in civilian court, qualified civilian counsel is available through our referral program.

In matters concerning courts-martial, reduction and other similar problems, the Criminal Law or Admin Law Divisions will assist and advise on these numerous and important matters.

In short, assistance is offered by the Staff Judge Advocate Office in many personal areas that are of vital concern to the soldier. "legal briefs" will offer a new dimension to the soldier by making him more familiar with the many legal aspects of military and civilian life.

The Staff Judge Advocate Office is located on main post in Bldg. 5, across from the Catholic Chapel. A branch office has been established in Bldg. 4019 for the convenience of those in the Sand Hill and Harmony Church areas.

Halloween: fact or fiction?

By Joyce Walker

Of all the holidays that we celebrate today, few have as strange a history as Halloween. Also known as All Hallows' Eve and Hallowmass, it is a night when ghosts walk and goblins, warlocks and witches were thought to be abroad.

America's celebration of Halloween rests upon Scottish and Irish folk customs that can be traced in direct line from Pre-Christian times. From nightfall on October 31st until the sunset of November 2d. Covens of witches and warlocks were thought to meet on heathered moors or in long-empty mansions on this night to perform dark, mysterious rituals and to communicate with the spirit world. It was a night when they were thought to have very special powers to cast evil spells.

The belief in witches goes back to Biblical times. When wise old women were sought for their fortune-telling charms, herbs, and were recognized as a part of society. It wasn't until the Middle Ages when Europe was struggling between Christianity and paganism that witches emerged as an evil force or spirit.

The question of whether or not these witches had supernatural powers is still debatable. Modern authorities believe that the populace was prey to mass hallucinations in their belief that the witches had the power to do as they wished. One explanation used by modern "witch-hunters" is that during the Middle Ages a disease-spreading drug was widely used by many women. It was a liquid or ointment concocted of henbane, hornapple, belladonna and other poisonous plants and simmered together over a fire. Dreams of flying through the air, accompanied by wrenching muscular spasms, resulted from taking the potion. Not being able to distinguish between dreams and reality, many of these early "heads" confessed to practicing witchcraft. Sabbath on Blockberg and pacts with the devil. Further, a few of the so-called witches were mentally deranged but entirely misunderstood by people of the Middle Ages. As late as 1850, such people were kept in prison, because so little was known about the human mind.

Our ancestors went to great lengths to prevent these witches and warlocks from bringing any mischief on poor humans from the realm of the purely spiritual.

Bonfires were lighted in the field to keep them from polluting the ground and spoiling next year's crops; amulets were carried by people who had to be out after dark; and nuts and apples brought into the house, because it was believed that witches and warlocks stayed away from dwellings in which were stored these wholesome fruits of the earth.

Spitting was also thought to be a protection against witchcraft and up until 50 or 60 years ago, it was not uncommon to see some lower class man or woman spit after passing some old person on the street.

Nuts and apples were also used by our ancestors on Halloween for fortune telling in addition to being of use in warding off witches and warlocks. It was widely held that if a man or woman stood in front of a mirror and ate an apple, on this mystical night, the face of the person he or she would marry would appear in the glass. If an apple was peeled carefully without breaking the strip of the peel, and the peel was thrown over the shoulder, it would take the form of the initial letter of the name of the future mate.

Nuts too, were much used for fortune telling on the night of October thirty-first. A man and girl in love with each other would each put a nut on the hearth close to the fire to see how they burned. If the nut burned quietly and turned to ashes still lying side by side, it was a good omen for marriage. It meant that once married, they would con-

Halloween?

to love one another and live in harmony all their lives. If, however, the nuts flew apart when burned, the man and woman would quarrel incessantly if they married and they would be wise to put an end to the affair at once and look for more harmonious mates.

Another way of determining one's future mate was by arranging three dishes on the hearth; one full of clear, clean water, one of dirty water and one empty. A person was blindfolded and told to grope for the dishes. If he put a finger in the clear, clean water, he would marry a virgin, if he put a finger in the dirty water, he would marry a widow and if he chose the empty dish he would not marry at all. The test was tried three times, with the dishes shifted around each time.

It wasn't until the great Irish immigration following the potato famines of the 1840's that Halloween became a nationally recognized holiday in the United States.

It is a time when groups of children dress up in astonishing costumes with weird masks and travel from house to house, ringing doorbells and shouting at the top of their lungs, "Trick or Treat," "Anything for Goblins!"

It is best to have plenty of apples, candies or pennies on hand, rather than slamming the door on these oddly dressed midget boblins, or you may wake the next morning to find soap scrawls on your windows, flour on the front step or the front yard liberally decorated with wreaths of toilet paper.

Halloween has been called a degenerate holiday. Witches, Warlocks and their black arts are no longer feared in this century but do you dare to walk through a graveyard alone on Halloween??

Have a flag day, but display it the right way

Let's make every day flag day in the Family Housing area.

Residents are encouraged to display the American flag at their on-post quarters. Following are instructions and illustrations for the proper manner in which to fly our National flag:

1. When the flag is displayed flat, either horizontally or vertically, on a wall or in a window, the union (or blue field) should be uppermost and to the flag's own right (to the observer's left when facing the flag).

2. When the flag is displayed from a staff projecting from a window sill, balcony, or front of a building, the union should be at the staff's peak (unless the flag is to be displayed at halfstaff). When suspended across a street, the flag should be vertical, with the union to the north in an east-west street, or to the east in a north-south street. When suspended from a rope between a house and a pole at the edge of a sidewalk, the flag should be raised out from the building toward the pole union first.

3. When displayed with another flag from crossed staffs, the National flag should be on its own right, with its staff in front of the staff of the other flag.

4. When other flags are displayed from staffs with the National flag, the latter should be at the center, or at the highest point of the group.

5. When pennants or other flags are flown on the same halyard with the National flag the latter should always be at the peak. Only the UN flag at UN Headquarters or the church pennant during services at sea may be flown above the National flag.

6. When the flags of two or more nations are displayed they should be flown from separate staffs of the same height.

The Drinking American

The Truth About Some Consequences

by Ernest P. Noble, Ph.D., M.D., Director, National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism

Ask people about alcohol and you will get opinions ranging from "alcohol is poison" to "booze and a good time go hand-in-hand."

Despite alcohol's frequent and legally sanctioned use in our society, few subjects evoke such diverse and emotionally charged attitudes. Alcohol is the only substance in our Nation's 200-year history that has aroused such strong feelings that it became the subject of a constitutional amendment.

Today, despite the images that television and movies frequently convey, about one-third of the adults in this country do not drink. Another third drink alcohol once a month or less. Of the remaining third who drink more frequently, many do so without adverse consequences. But the tragic fact remains that 10 million persons in our country today have severe alcohol problems. And these problems have a direct impact on as many as 40 million others, including family members, friends, employers, and unsuspecting motorists.

In addition to these numbers, there are disturbing new statistics about drinking patterns among young people. They are drinking more, at younger ages, getting intoxicated at surprisingly high rates and drinking in situations that invite tragedy. A recent study, for example, shows that 25-50 percent of alcohol users in grades 7-12 are drinking in cars at night.

The danger signs are clear. Some concerned persons have even referred to our national alcohol problem as an illness of epidemic proportions. Regardless of how we express it, alcoholism and alcohol abuse in our country are problems that none of us can afford to turn our backs on any longer.

Our position as a Federal agency is not to moralize about drinking. Rather, it is to make available to you the facts about alcohol and its effects on your health. You should know, for example, that alcohol is an anesthetic drug that can cause euphoria, sedation, unconsciousness, and death, as well as adverse social effects. Those who abuse alcohol and get drunk are overdosing with a drug. And, because of the magnitude of the misuse of alcohol in our country, alcohol abuse and alcoholism constitute our number one drug problem today. In addition to the human suffering, it's an illness that costs us more than $25 billion a year.

Like most illnesses, alcoholism recognizes no economic, racial, or age boundaries. Young, old, black, white, native American, rich, poor, dropouts and Ph.D.s—all are potential victims. No group is immune.

There are some hopeful signs, however. While alcoholism is a pervasive illness, it is a treatable illness with a high rate of recovery. Many Americans have begun to take an interest in the problem and several groups have committed their resources to programs that deal with alcoholism and alcohol abuse prevention.

There is a role for every American. We can begin by adopting a responsible attitude toward the use of alcohol and promoting that attitude among others. All of us can respect the rights of abstainers and demand that respect if we ourselves do not drink. We also need to learn more about alcohol and how it affects us. Informed decisions about alcohol use are based on full, factual, and unbiased information.

The purpose of the following articles is to provide you with some of that information. But knowing more about alcohol is only the first, basic step in helping to alleviate our national alcohol problem. We also need to apply that knowledge to our drinking behavior. Change is feasible. Other nations have changed their drinking patterns and reduced the incidence of alcohol problems. We Americans have modified our behavior in other areas of social concern. All of us can play a role, but we must begin now before the terrible toll of human suffering becomes even greater.

EVEN MY KIDS DIDN'T K

An Interview with Dick Van Dyke

For five years of his life—from 1967 to 1972—Dick Van Dyke suffered from alcoholism. During that period, he made films, appeared in TV specials, and starred in a television series while simultaneously battling an uncontrollable drinking problem. Finally, in 1972, he entered a hospital for treatment. Today, fully recovered, he devotes much of his time between film and TV work to speaking publicly about alcohol problems. He calls his recovery "like being born again."

Q: How do you think your drinking problem got started? Was it in response to a particular problem, or during an especially difficult period of your life?

Van Dyke: There was no specific problem I can think of. When my wife and I were in our twenties, we really didn't drink at all. Oh, we'd keep a bottle of bourbon around in case our friends dropped in, but we couldn't have cared less about it. Then, as we got into our thirties, we just started doing it more and more. I can't think of any crisis or anything. At first it was just fun—I don't think we would have started if it wasn't fun.

Q: After it stopped being fun—when you realized it was getting to be a problem—were you able to pin down why you were drinking so much?

Van Dyke: I could before I ever went into treatment. I could tell you all the whys in the world. I had a million rationales, and I found out they were totally phony reasons. You know—too much pressure, too much of this, and too much of that. I had all kinds of personality reasons...But none of them were true. I was addicted physically to alcohol.

Q: You don't see alcoholism as partially a response to psychological or emotional problems, then?

Van Dyke: Yes, I do see it as an answer, in the same way that other drugs or any other kind of escape can be an answer. But that has no relationship to alcoholism, which I believe is a physical response to alcohol. A lot of people drink heavily to escape from problems and pressures and stresses of life, but don't become alcoholics. I know too many heavy drinkers who drink for the specific reason of unwinding, and they drink a lot. But they can also quit for as long as they want. They are not addicted to it.

Q: When you were doing the original Dick Van Dyke Show, were you already doing a lot of drinking?

Van Dyke: That was between '60 and '65, and that was kind of the beginning. I was still in the early stages of it then, and I had no idea that I was a prospective addict. You know, everyone else drank. It wasn't until the middle or late '60s that I really began to drink heavily—still not knowing that I had a problem.

Q: You were involved in a lot of film and TV work during the period when you were drinking most heavily. How were you able to function so well during that period?

Van Dyke: I don't know. The doctors say I must have had a strong constitution because I did work and I didn't miss work ever because of drinking. And I never drank at work. Never drank during the day—only at home and only in the evenings. Which was my excuse for not being an alcoholic.

Q: You told yourself you were controlling it.

Van Dyke: Sure. I only drink after 5 o'clock and not when I'm working, I'd tell myself. But I did notice energy ebbing on me. I'd always had a lot of excess energy, and during that period I really hit the bottom of my energy bank. It was getting harder and harder to work.

Q: Most people do think an alcoholic has no control over his drinking at all. Was it difficult for you not to drink during working hours?

Van Dyke: Well, I always looked forward to the time I would have my first drink that evening. But I never craved a drink during the day. I was never a morning drinker—I didn't want one then. The idea made me as sick as it would make anyone else. But evening drinking is a form of alcoholism, just like periodic drinking is a form of alcoholism. But the "I can control it" bit is the excuse most people use.

Q: Do you think the acting profession—because of the pressures and insecurities and general lifestyle—is more conducive to heavy drinking than most other fields?

Van Dyke: Yes. I think it is a little more permitted in show business for some reason. I know there are a lot of performers who drink all day at work while filming a movie. There are a lot of guys who start out drinking in the morning and drink right straight through the day—and it is permitted. And a man in an office job would not be allowed to get away with that. Not openly, at least.

Q: What about your family? Did your drinking problem have a big effect on your home life?

Van Dyke: Well, of course my wife is an alcoholic too—we both drank. It was a funny thing. My 19-year-old daughter was on the Tom Snyder "Tomorrow Show" in a program about the kids of actors and what they felt about it. Tom asked my daughter about my drinking—my alcoholism—and asked, "How did that affect you?" She said, "I never knew it. My father was so quiet about it, never made any noise. As a matter of fact, some of the best talks we ever had were when my father was drinking." Which is a very strange reaction. When I asked her afterwards, she said, "I never knew a thing about it." My kids knew I drank too much and that my wife drank too much, but it was a solitary thing that we did alone together, at night. We didn't do any public drinking to speak of. Not too many parties or that kind of thing. So I think my kids thought probably everybody did that and didn't realize we were alcoholic. But I'm sure there was a lot of lost time spent with the kids, especially during those 5 years when I had what I would call chronic alcoholism.

Q: For 5 years you had a drinking problem without really admitting it to yourself. What finally happened to make you realize that you were an alcoholic?

Van Dyke: I don't know. Just one night in '72—it must have been 2 in the morning—suddenly, I don't know what happened, but I said to myself, "What am I doing?" My wife had long gone to bed. I was sitting alone, drinking, lost in what I took to be deep thought. I realized suddenly, "Why, I am thinking gibberish here—my mind is completely out of it." When I woke up the next morning, I got up and went to a hospital. Went straight into a treatment center. Frightened, I must say. Scared to death of what was going to happen to me—of what I had to face.

Q: Did you go without telling anyone?

Van Dyke: No, I told my wife—I think I had yelled at her or something

NOW I WAS ALCOHOLIC

before she went to bed. That's another thing. I had begun to notice a personality change. I'd always been a very happy, lively kind of a drunk, and then I began to get angry—just a sudden personality change. I got aggressive and I frightened myself. And I think that's finally what did it. I saw that things were really going to crumble if I didn't do something.

Q: Were you able to quit for good once you went into the treatment center? I would think it would be hard to make such a complete break.

Van Dyke: Yeah, for a year I had a hard time. I had a couple of slips during the following year. Which, incidentally, no one knows about—this is the first time I've ever talked about it. I had a couple of slips but I managed to get over them—I called for help. But as I talk to people who are recovering, I find that happens. For some reason there seems to be something in the back of your mind that says, "Well, I'm doing awfully well, maybe I'm not really an alcoholic." Then you try it and you get proof right then that you are an alcoholic.

Q: Once you made the decision to stop drinking, how did you make yourself do it? What would you tell yourself when you'd suddenly think, "Gee I'd love to have a drink right now?"

Van Dyke: It's unbelievably hard. You don't realize how much of a craving you have. But if you think "I can never drink again," you won't make it. It has to be a day-to-day thing. And then there's a lot of pressure on you once you've committed yourself out loud. You have your family, your friends, and everyone who is proud of you, and there's a tremendous pressure to live up to that. That will never keep you sober, but it helps during the really tough period.

Q: There's a lot of controversy about how the family of an alcoholic person should deal with the problem. Do you think the family should try to get the alcoholic into treatment, or wait until the person himself decides he needs help?

Van Dyke: There is an old belief that you have to let a drunk hit his bottom first before he can be helped. According to this belief, there is no way of persuading him to be helped, and it's only when a crisis comes along that scares him badly enough will he go and get help. But thanks to that theory, a lot of drunks are dying of chronic alcoholism or accidents or suicide. It's been shown that you can intervene—that the people around an alcoholic can precipitate a crisis in his life and get him into treatment.

Q: Do you think you would have responded if your family had done the same thing—confronted you with the whole works?

Van Dyke: Absolutely. I had friends that told me they thought I had a problem, and all it did was make me mad. But that's different from the whole family getting together on it.

Q: A lot of recovered alcoholics say they experienced periods of terrible depression when they first stopped drinking. Did quitting affect you the same way?

Van Dyke: You do go into a kind of post-alcoholic depression. I've talked to so many people about this. I've had people call me all the way from New York State who've found my number and said, "I'm going crazy, I think, I'm so depressed. Am I ever going to come out of this?" At the time you don't think you ever will. But you get through it. It will go away and suddenly, instead of your life being almost over, it's really being born again.

It's just tremendous. It's a spiritual experience, I think.

Q: Did you find yourself compensating for drinking with other habits? Did you, say, start drinking a lot of coffee or smoking more than you did before?

Van Dyke: I went through a lot of coffee the first year. A mess of coffee and a lot of chocolate. I found that to be true of almost everybody. Any kind of chocolate—candy bars, chocolate ice cream—you just get a real craving for chocolate. I think maybe it's the energy that alcoholics get from alcohol that has to be replaced by something like chocolate.

Q: Let's talk a little bit about The Morning After, the TV movie in which you played an alcoholic. When you were asked to play the part of Charlie, the guy with the drinking problem, did the producer know you were a recovered alcoholic?

Van Dyke: No idea. They sent me the script and I thought, "Well, these guys must know." Because it had only been about a year since I'd stopped drinking. I read the script and it was just exciting because it was the truth. There wasn't a false note in it. It was the truth about alcoholism. And I said, "I'll do it—no matter what, I'll do this picture." Then, of course, we had a meeting with the producers and the writers and I said, "How did you guys know I was an alcoholic?" Their mouths fell open. They had no idea.

Q: Why did they choose you for the part?

Van Dyke: They said they wanted somebody who was a kind of average, middle-class family man. They didn't want a heavy dramatic actor. So I took the part, but it was only after we got into rehearsals and shooting the picture that I said to myself, "This picture is going to do a lot more good for a lot of people if I told the truth about my drinking problem." Which I did—I called a syndicated columnist I knew out here who I knew wouldn't try to sensationalize it, and I gave her the interview.

Q: What was the general reaction from the public?

Van Dyke: Well, there was a lot of shock from it, and of course I got a lot of mail, but I didn't get one negative note from anybody—to this day. I got a lot of encouragement from people who were deeply religious. All kinds of advice about how to solve my problems.

Q: Was making The Morning After a pretty emotional experience for you?

Van Dyke: It was very close, because every alcoholic's story parallels in some way. And they let me contribute in a scene where I said, "If I did this, it would be a little closer to what actually happened to me." It was a very understanding group of people. It was a great experience, but I wouldn't want to do it again. It wasn't too much of an acting problem, because I knew I didn't have to reach down like an actor does to find the feeling. It was right there on the surface. But it was a wipeout emotionally.

Q: You've said in the past you'd like to make a sequel to The Morning After. What kind of a sequel would it be? And why do you want to do it?

Van Dyke: I want to make a sequel about rehabilitation—about what happens in a really topnotch treatment center. Not many people know there are treatment facilities all over the country—some really great places where you can go and start your life over again. Also, alcoholism is the only disease left where the stigma

How to be a Good Host

Don't be a Pusher. There are two very distinct kinds of hosts at a dinner or cocktail party. One is a pusher, constantly forcing drinks on his guests. He never takes "no" for an answer.

The other host—a more reasonable fellow—may have liquor and food, or wine and cheese, or beer and nuts for his guests, but he doesn't make alcohol the prime attraction of his party. And since not everyone in the whole world likes liquor, he has some other beverages in the house, like fruit juice and soft drinks. He doesn't have a party so people can get smashed, but rather so people can enjoy each other, perhaps have a drink or something to eat, and spend a few relaxed hours among friends.

Know How to Run a Party. The gracious host isn't afraid to stop pouring drinks. If one of his guests has drunk too much or too fast, he doesn't ply him with another refill. Instead, he offers some food or a soft drink before the guest ruins the evening—for himself and everyone else.

The good host has his party well planned, too. He knows that a pre-dinner cocktail should enhance a meal, not ruin it. And he knows that a good party doesn't require that the last drop be lapped from every bottle. By serving a nonalcoholic beverage like tea or coffee, he announces to his guests that the liquor cabinet has been closed for the evening. Some guests may be disappointed that they didn't "tie one on." But they may be pleased to wake up the next day without a hangover. In fact, they may find they enjoyed themselves—in spite of staying sober.

Help the Guest Who's Had Too Much. Regardless of the host's good intentions, there is always the chance that someone will get drunk at his party. When that happens, the host doesn't ply his guest with all kinds of "quick-fixes," because he knows the only cure for intoxication is time.

Generally, it takes about an hour of sobering-up for each drink consumed, and it takes 10 hours for the average person to get a half-pint of pure alcohol out of his system. Gulping coffee doesn't help—it is a stimulant that may make an intoxicated person feel more wide awake, but in fact he may become more careless. Coffee just turns a sleepy drunk into a wide-awake one. And the other home remedies aren't any help either. A cold shower, exercise, tomato juice, breathing cold fresh air—none of these will sober up a person any faster. The only antidote is time.

Call the Shots. The good host sets the pace for a party. If the host pours double drinks—even though some guests would prefer light ones—and if he does a lot of drinking himself, he signals to his guests that his party is drinking oriented. But if the host offers his guests a choice of liquor or soft drinks, has plenty of food around, and centers his party around good conversation, he sets a mood that is distinctly people oriented.

Many hosts would be embarrassed if a guest at their party became sick from the food that was served, yet couldn't care less if the same guest became drunk on their liquor. But the good host would no more allow his guests to get sick from his drinks than he would from his food. Better to have a party remembered as a warm, friendly affair than not remembered at all.

Spirited Drinks Without the Spirits

Why is it that only alcoholic drinks have exotic, devil-may-care names? Somehow there's the implication that nonalcoholic beverages are simply too dull and drab to deserve zingy titles. So while drinkers have the fun of ordering "Zombies" and "Pink Ladies" and "Stingers" and "Grasshoppers," the hapless teetotaler is left with losers like "tomato juice" and "ginger ale" and "root beer on the rocks."

It must be admitted, however, that most nonalcoholic drinks served at parties really deserve their tame titles. After all, does plain old tomato juice really merit any other name? To give nonalcoholic beverages the status they deserve—and to give nondrinkers a chance to order something more seductive than ginger ale—some "alternative" drinks have been created with names that do them justice. Who knows, maybe even a few drinkers will get interested . . .

What is the size of a pumpnickel, has the shape of Diana's helmet, and crouches like a thundercloud above its belly-mates, turgid with nourishment? What has the industry of an insect, the regenerative powers of a starfish, yet is turned to a mass of fatty globules by a double martini (two ounces of alcohol)? It is . . . the liver, doted upon by the French, assaulted by the Irish, disdained by the Americans, and chopped up with egg, onion, and chicken fat by the Jews.

Weighing in at three to four pounds, the liver is the largest of the glands. Its spreading crown of tissue continuously draws nourishment from the blood vessels of the intestine. Legion are the functions of this workhorse, including the manufacture of a pint of bile a day, without which golden liquor we could not digest so much as a single raisin.

The human body is perfectly suited for the ingestion of alcohol and its rapid utilization. In that sense, we are not unlike alcohol lamps. Endless is our eagerness to devour alcohol. Witness the fact that it is absorbed, not only from the intestine, as are all other foods, but directly from the stomach as well. Once incorporated into the body, it is to the liver that belongs the task of oxidizing the alcohol. But even the sturdiest liver can handle only a drop or two at a time, and the remainder swirls endlessly in the bloodstream, is exhaled by the lungs and thus provides the state police with a crackerjack method of detecting and measuring the presence and amount of alcohol ingested. It was a French physician, Rene Theophile Hyacinthe Laennec, who first described the disease known as cirrhosis of the liver. This fastidious gentleman was the very same whose aversion to applying his naked ear to the perfumed but unbathed bosoms of his patients inspired him to invent the stethoscope. The entire medical world continues to pay homage to Laennec for his gift of space interpersonal. As if this were not enough, he permitted himself to be struck by the frequent appearance at autopsy of livers that were yellow, knobby and hard. This marvel he named cirrhosis, from the Greek word for tawny, "kirrhos." Yellow because they are fatty, hard because they are scarred, and knobby because the regeneration of liver tissue between the scars produces little mounds of hillocks. It was suspected by Laennec, and is known by all the rest of us today, that by far the most common cause of cirrhosis is the consumption of alcohol.

There is a difference, I hasten to add, between imbibers of alcohol and alcoholics. Both develop fatty livers, true, but no one has shown conclusively that a fatty liver is the precursor of cirrhosis. One martini increases the fat content of the liver sufficiently so that it can be seen by the use of special stains under the microscope. In other words, a single martini increases the fat in a liver by one half percent of the weight of that organ, above a normal three percent. In the alcoholic this commonly reaches a death-defying twenty five percent.

But you don't have to be an alcoholic to get cirrhosis. Some quite modest drinkers get it. One correlation that does hold water is the duration of time that one has been drinking. Cirrhosis is primarily a disease of the forties and fifties. Even here we cannot generalize, however, for great numbers of younger people are affected, and one patient within my ken was an eighteen-year-old girl whose voluminous liver could be felt abutting on her groin just eight months after she had retired to her room with a continuous supply of Thunderbird.

The state of nutrition is also a factor in the development of cirrhosis. It is no secret that boozers, the serious kind, stop eating, especially protein, either because they can't afford it—what with the cost of a bottle of bourbon these days—or because the sick liver just can't handle the metabolism of protein well, and the appetite is warned off. The nitrogenous material of protein passes directly through the diseased liver and exerts a toxic effect on the brain. If one restricts protein in the diet of cirrhotics, the brain improves. Thus the medical nickname for cirrhotics, "one meatballers."

It is a matter for future anthropologists to ponder that the two favorite companions of business are "Bottle and Board." More than one eminent literary agent, Wall Street broker, and vice-president have died testifying their affection for them. Deep drinking and intrigue are part of all the noble professions. These, combined with the studious avoidance of exercise, have conspired to produce a whole race of voluptuaries, who, by twos and threes from noon until three, sit at tables in dim restaurants, picking at their sideburns and destroying the furniture with their giant buttocks. These same men can be seen after five years of such indiscretion, transformed into "lean and slipped pantaloon," with scanty hair that is but the grey garniture of premature senescence.

Along comes that thousandth literary lunch and pow! The dreaded wrecking ball of cirrhosis is unslung. The roofs and walls of the hallways, complaining under their burden of excess fat, groan and buckle. Inflammation sets in, and whole roomful of liver cells implode and die. And in their place comes the scarring that twists and distorts the channels, pulling them into impossible angulations. Avalanches block the flow of bile and heavy tangles of fiber impede the absorption and secretion. This happens not just in one spot but all over, until the gigantic architecture is a mass of sores and wounds, the old ones scarring over as new ones break down.

The obstructed bile, no longer able to flow down the gut, backs into the bloodstream to light up the skin and eyes with the sickly lamp of jaundice. The stool turns toothpaste white in commiseration, the urine dark as wine. The belly swells with gallons of fluid that weep from the surface of the liver. . . . The carnage spreads. The entire body is discommoded. The blood fails to clot, the palms of the hands turn mysteriously red, and spidery blood vessels leap and crawl on the skin of the face and neck. Male breasts enlarge, and even the proud testicles turn soft and atrophy. In a short while impotence develops, an irretrievable form of impotence which may well prod the invalid into more and more drinking.

Scared? Better have a drink. You look a little pale. In any case there is no need to be so glum. Especially if you know something I know. Liver tissue will regenerate . . . yours will, and regain all its old efficiency and know-how. All it requires is quitting the booze, now and then. The ever-grateful, forgiving liver will respond joyously with a multitude of mitoses and cell divisions. This rejuvenation is carried out with the speed and alacrity of a starfish growing a new ray from the stump of the old. Soon the big house is humming with activity again, and all those terrible things I told you happen, go away—all except that impotence thing. Well, you didn't expect to get away scot-free, did you? And here's something to tuck away and think about whenever you want to feel good. Sixty percent of all cirrhotics who stop drinking will be alive and well five years later. How unlike the lofty brain, which has no power of regeneration at all. Once a brain cell dies, you are forever one shy.

When To Say When

How can someone tell whether he or she is developing a drinking problem? How much is too much? As early as 1864, an English physician named Francis Anstie concluded that a daily intake of more than 1½ ounces of absolute alcohol would damage the health of an adult male. Recent medical research appears to support "Anstie's Limit," which translates into half a bottle of wine per day, or two pints of beer, or two well-diluted drinks, all taken with food.

This formula, of course, is merely a general guideline for the "outer limits" of safe drinking; it is not an encouraged level of drinking. Tolerance for alcohol varies greatly from person to person, based on a variety of physical and emotional factors.

But a drinking problem can be measured not only by how much one drinks but also how and why. Using alcohol to relieve everyday pressures, to cope with fears, or to escape loneliness are some of the early signs of dependence on alcohol. Here are some others:

- Starting the day with a drink
- Going to work intoxicated
- Being criticized for your drinking by an employer, spouse, or others
- Making excuses for your drinking behavior ("I need just one more to relax")
- Undergoing dramatic personality and behavioral changes after drinking
- Driving a car while intoxicated
- Coming into a conflict with the law as a result of drinking
- Requiring medical attention or suffering frequent physical discomfort because of drinking

The Way We Were

A Short History of American Drinking

Culver Pictures

We Americans have called it many names: booze, hooch, ardent spirits, John Barleycorn, moonshine, bootleg. And we've made it from raw materials as diverse as our backgrounds. Some of us have liked it. Some of us have loathed it. Some of us have craved it. Few of us could deny the important role it has played in our nation's past. It's the drug alcohol.

In spite of our mixed feelings about drinking (or because of them), the issue of alcohol use is closely woven into the fabric of American history. Join us as we follow the erratic path of our misunderstood, black-sheep American relative—John Barleycorn.

Culver Pictures

1791—Irate farmers in western Pennsylvania resist Federal efforts to place an excise tax on distilleries. Participants in this "Whiskey Rebellion" are put down by a 15,000-man militia force. The rebellion becomes a landmark in American history as the first true test of Federal authority.

1808—America's first organized temperance society is formed at Mawney's Tavern in upstate New York. Recruiting candidates beyond the original small membership proves difficult. One member complains, "That feeble little band of temperance brethren . . . were made the song of the drunkard and ridiculed by the scoffs of the intemperate world."

1609—The Pilgrims land at Plymouth Rock, Massachusetts—partly because they ran out of beer. On shipboard, beer was important as a beverage which resisted spoilage and supplemented a sometimes meager diet. According to a notation in the ship's log entered as the Mayflower neared American shores:

"We could not take time for further search or consideration; our vittles being much spent, especially our beer."

1784—Dr. Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, writes Inquiry into the Effect of Ardent Spirits. This widely read booklet becomes the first influential temperance document in American history. Rush, who lent his substantial medical prestige to the anti-rum cause, writes, "Spirits are anti-federal . . . companions of all those vices that are calculated to dishonor and enslave our country."

1874—Several hundred women assemble in Cleveland, Ohio, to form the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This fledgling organization was referred to by its members as "organized mother-love." While these determined temperance matrons were denouncing "Demon Rum," many of them were drinking—with clear conscience—"health tonics" containing up to 40 percent alcohol.

A BOTTLE OF THIS SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOME.

1899—Carry Nation, ex-school teacher, hotel manager, and WCTU activist, leads an assault on the bars in Wichita, Kansas. Armed with hatchets, Carry and her cohorts wreak havoc on the local saloons and denounce these establishments as "makers of drunkards and widows" and "allies of Satan." Carry's logic was succinct: "Anything that is sinful cannot be lawful, and anything that is lawful cannot be sinful. The saloon is not lawful because it is sinful."

Library of Congress

1919—The Volstead Act, passed to enforce Prohibition, decrees that "No person shall . . . manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act, and all the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented."

1933—The 18th Amendment is repealed. A "dry" America once more becomes a "wet" America. During the "dry" period, Federal agents arrest nearly 600,000 suspected offenders. In Chicago, Al Capone, with a gangster army of 1,000, controls the sale of liquor in that city's speakeasies and grosses $60 million in revenue per year.

1970—Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act is enacted. Provisions of this act, which include the establishment of a National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, do much to bring alcoholism "out of the closet" and into the nation's consciousness as a major health problem.

Notes from Abroad

How Other Nations
Drink

If you told an Italian that wine could be bad for his health, he would think you were either very funny or very stupid. Italians consider wine a nutritious food and drink it at mealtimes the way Americans drink milk.

Orthodox Jews drink from a very early age and use wines on religious occasions throughout their lives. Alcohol is a staple at special festive occasions.

The Chinese love to get together on holidays for a cup of mah-tai, a strong, rice-based alcoholic beverage. Drinking is enjoyed in the home, in restaurants, and at parties throughout the Peoples' Republic.

These three diverse cultures have two things in common. First: they all are drinking cultures. And second: they are cultures without a significant alcoholism problem.

To most people, that's a pretty mind-boggling set of facts. After all, isn't alcohol abuse a universal escape valve? Don't people face the same problems everywhere—and thus need the same outlets? How is it that the United States, France, Russia, and other countries struggle with massive national drinking problems, while other cultures get off almost scot free?

The answer has a lot to do with a culture's social values and the attitudes toward drinking that spring from them. Societies with no significant drinking problem share a set of "alcohol attitudes" that Americans would find very strange indeed. But given our own sizable national drinking problem, we might also have a lot to learn from them. Let's take a look:

Solitary drinking is taboo. Since these societies view drinking as a means of promoting communication between people, drinking alone is usually considered strange—even sick—behavior. Drinking in China, Israel, and Italy is used as a social lubricant, not as a cure-all for personal problems.

By contrast, cultures that face a significant alcoholism problem tolerate the use of alcohol to drown personal woes. If one drinks to escape, then drinking alone makes sense. In France, for instance, where the alcoholism rate is a staggering 15 percent, many people take a number of solitary "booze breaks" simply to get through the work day. In America, Russia and other countries with major alcoholism problems, drinking is an approved outlet for anxiety, tension, depression, boredom, anger, and just about any other uncomfortable human feeling that comes along.

Drinking doesn't "make you a man." Cultures without a major drinking problem make no connection between downing liquor and proving manhood. Perhaps because moderate drinking in all these societies begins at a very early age, it is difficult to use drinking to "prove" adulthood.

In Russia, on the other hand—where it is reported alcoholism has jumped 50 percent in the last 15 years—drunkenness is primarily a male pastime and is associated with masculinity. The same is true in France, where wine in particular is thought to impart vigor and strength. In the United States, of course, the test of a "real" man is whether or not he can hold his liquor.

Food and drink go hand in hand. In "problem-free" cultures, drinking and eating are usually inseparable. In China, in fact, there is no such thing as a bar—i.e., a place where drinks are available but meals are not. More than 80 percent of Italians drink exclusively at meals, and people in Italy would no more think of leaving wine off the dinner table than bread or cheese.

The advantages of drinking with meals are not hard to see. First it is decidedly easier to stay sober with food in your stomach. And second, mealtime drinking is usually done within the sociable framework of family or friends.

In alcoholism-prone Russia, on the other hand, nearly any occasion is an occasion for a drink. More than 40 percent of all drinking is done during working hours—often alone, and often between meals. In America, our separation of food from drink is celebrated by the pre-dinner cocktail party, where martinis and manhattans slosh around in empty stomachs and "a drink for a drink's sake" is the order of the day.

There's no such thing as a funny drunk. In the Italian, Jewish, and Chinese cultures, getting drunk is a sure way to lose your reputation. Since drinking is viewed as a way to bring people closer together, the bleary-eyed, muddle-headed, stumbling drunk has no role to play. Among Jews, the link between alcohol and sacred religious rites makes drunkenness doubly unacceptable.

This attitude contrasts with that of alcoholism-plagued countries, where the drunk is tolerated and often a figure of fun. In America, comedians from Charlie Chaplin to Dean Martin have celebrated our view of the "drunk as funnyman." The reason we laugh is simple: As long as we view the drunk as a joke, we don't have to face up to the fact that he may be seriously ill.

1. False. Only 3 to 5 percent of alcoholics in the United States are in the "skid row" category. The overwhelming majority—about 70 percent—are employed, highly skilled in their fields, and are living with their families.

2. False. Coffee, a stimulant, makes a drunk person feel more alert and capable, but it doesn't improve his judgment or reaction time one iota. A person who is drunk can only wait for his liver to burn up the alcohol, at the rate of about one hour for every ounce of spirits he has drunk.

3. True. . . . if you drink heavily over a period of time. However, recent studies show that moderate drinkers as a statistical group live longer than both alcoholics and teetotalers.

4. False. A person is as likely to become alcoholic by drinking beer as by any alcoholic beverage, because it is the alcohol in the beverage to which a drinker becomes addicted. The guy who guzzles a six-pack with his evening football game can become as easily addicted as the strictly-scotch-and-water man.

5. False. No one put it better than William Shakespeare, who said (in Macbeth) that drink "provokes the desire, but takes away the performance." Since alcohol is a depressant of the central nervous system, sexual activity is more difficult to perform after heavy drinking. Many alcoholics have an impotence problem.

6. True. But the anxiety-relieving effect of alcohol only lasts for a couple of hours. Then the alcohol tends to make a person more anxious for a period lasting up to 18 hours.

7. True. But more women are alcoholics than you probably think. Some authorities believe that nearly half the alcoholic population in the United States is female. But fewer women than men are identified as alcoholic because many alcoholic women are isolated in the home where they can hide their drinking problem. Also, because our society imposes a double standard that makes it "worse" for a woman to abuse alcohol than for a man, many women are ashamed to seek treatment.

8. True. But the highest incidence of alcoholism occurs among offspring of parents who are either alcoholics—or teetotalers. The extremism of the parents' attitude may be an important factor.

9. False. Although recent research is exploring whether recovered alcoholic persons can learn to drink moderately, most experts believe the alcoholic person who attempts moderate drinking will almost certainly return to uncontrolled drinking. After suffering the pain of alcoholism, a person takes a great risk in experimenting with social drinking again.

On Alcohol and Women

by Margaret Mead

Excerpted from Redbook, Feb. 1975

Do you have a friend or a relative who has a drinking problem?

Almost every one of us nowadays knows someone who is a very heavy drinker, even an alcoholic. But if that friend or relative is another woman, we hate to admit it, even to ourselves. Yet heavy drinking, especially among young women, is on the increase and it is believed that about one third of some 10 million people in our country who have severe alcohol problems are women.

In spite of changed attitudes, we still are excessively secretive when it comes to women's drinking problems. Most research focuses on male alcoholism, while women generally are either ignored or treated as if their problems were the same as men's.

As I see it, nothing could be less true. In the modern American world, women live under different conditions from men, suffer from different frustrations and face very different problems. It should be obvious, then, that the situations in which women become vulnerable to the disease of alcoholism are in large measure peculiar to women and that they have special needs that must be met if they are to find their way back to normal, healthy living.

For some women there is the special danger of starting to drink—out of boredom or loneliness or fatigue—when they are at home with no one to interrupt or divert them. . . . This danger may affect a young housewife or a single woman alone on a weekend.

The young mother may pull herself together for the arrival of the children from school—perhaps for a long time before she stops trying to pull herself together at all. The single woman may pull herself together on Monday morning to go to her job, dull as it may be, but there may be the prospect of another weekend as lonely as the last. Most difficult of all is the situation of the young woman who has to carry alone the burden of caring for a home and children and earning a living.

But for all lonely women—women who want to be out in the world, women who want companionship, women who carry too heavy a burden to enjoy living—drinking is a temptation as a way of escape, and solitary, unmonitored drinking, often in secret, increases the possibility of becoming a victim of alcoholism.

Then there is the problem of recovery and rehabilitation. Some communities are establishing halfway houses for alcoholics, but as one might expect there are few especially designed for women. Yet I believe that women who are concerned for women's place in our society can express a sense of responsible solidarity by working to establish and support halfway houses in which women can recover from illness and begin to find themselves. It is certainly one way in which women, happy in comfortable, unthreatened homes, may learn enough to keep their own homes—and other homes—unthreatened and children safer.

But above all, I believe women can help other women who are troubled and getting into difficulties with alcohol. Women today must, I think, be willing to admit frankly that some of their friends—or even they themselves—may have a drinking problem. Women, knowing best what women's problems of loneliness and frustration are, can talk straightforwardly with each other and help one another work out some better solution—a solution that may involve willingness to seek professional help.

Once we face the problem honestly—with concern and in friendship—we can understand the hazards and the high stakes that are involved both for ourselves and, looking ahead, for our growing daughters.

On Alcohol and Youth

by Mike Ross and Tom Kettler Walt Whitman High School
Montgomery County, Md.

America's great social lubricant, alcohol, has regained its potency among the youth of this country. With the switch back to booze, some experts estimate that one out of eleven teenagers in this country will become a problem drinker.

Today, drinking among our peers is almost universal. According to a July 20, 1974 issue of Science News, 93 percent of twelfth grade males and 87 percent of twelfth grade females have used alcohol. Marijuana use among high school students runs a poor second, with only 40 percent of the males and 36 percent of the females reported to have tried pot.

The statistics at our school, Walt Whitman High School in Montgomery County, Md., reflect the skyrocketing use of alcohol among the young. A school survey conducted in October 1974, which canvassed about one-fifth of our 2,000-member student body, revealed that 90 percent of the seniors and 81 percent of the juniors and sophomores drink. Our figures coincided with a nationwide study released for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration showing that 61 percent of high school youths admit to getting drunk at least once a month.

What is the cause of this substantial rise in the teenage use of "firewater"? Alcohol use slipped surreptitiously while people were focusing their attention on other drugs. The parental concept of "thank God Johnny isn't on drugs" has greeted juvenile administrators in large doses. Many of our parents, some of whom do not realize that alcohol itself is a drug, prefer to have us drunk on beer than to be off somewhere lighting up joints.

The combination of social acceptance, ready availability, low cost and legality have made alcohol our drug of choice. Furthermore, the lowering of the drinking age from 21 to 18 has made the situation more prevalent at the high school level.

Another factor aiding the increased abuse has been the growing popularity of "pop wine," which characteristically disguises its nine percent alcoholic content (approximately twice that of beer), therefore making the transition from grape juice that much simpler. Three million gallons of these inexpensive and sweet wines were sold in the United States in 1968; by 1971, sales had soared to 33 million gallons.

The increase in teenage drinking has been closely paralleled by a rise in juvenile arrests. The number of juvenile arrests for alcohol-related crimes has increased 260 percent between the first eight months of 1973 and the same time period in 1974. In many cases, more than one teenager was arrested for each violation.

As a rule, first offenders in alcohol-related violations receive only a mild form of probation. Although second offenders usually are referred to the courts, about half of these cases are settled informally. Fewer than 20 percent of all juvenile arrest cases actually go before a judge.

No simple solution to the problem is apparent. Pleas for total abstinence are useless. Alcohol is here to stay. A far more effective approach might be educational programs in schools on the ramifications of abuse. For example, contact with recovered teenage alcoholics is considered to be one of the most effective deterrents to alcohol abuse for young people.

A substantial reduction and change in focus in media advertising of alcohol also might make drinking less tantalizing to teenagers. A recent issue of one of the popular weekly newsmagazines packed 15 full-page alcohol ads into an 83-page issue. Who of us can resist the lure of all those beautiful people in the ads inviting us to have a few drinks and share the good times?

Drinking— the Real Dope

A Few Facts— and a Few Thoughts— for Young People

If you have ever
a) chewed gum
b) laughed at a "Peanuts" cartoon
c) danced to rock music
d) eaten a Big Mac
e) camped out OR
f) wanted a horse or a tennis racquet or a motorcycle . . . chances are, you'll probably take a drink sometime. Most people do, at one time or another.

But it's funny. The way it's built up, you'd think that first drink was the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow or some kind of magic key to independence and never-ending good times. After that first drink, some people like to think "Alright, I've made it now. No more telling me what to do. If I can drink,
I must really have it all together."

Only trouble is, it doesn't quite work out that way. Try walking to the end of the rainbow and you'll probably find some guy changing a flat tire. It's the same way with a drink. There's nothing wrong with it, but it doesn't hold any special secrets, either. It's just . . . well, a drink.

Although alcohol is a drug that can be dangerous if misused, its ingredients are nothing to get excited about. It's a chemical compound made from some pretty basic stuff: yeast, water, and sugar.
That makes it about as mysterious and exciting as mouthwash.

What's important is what you use the alcohol for. Now that's worth talking about.

Example: A newspaper reported recently that a husband-and-wife team in Chocowinity, North Carolina, use alcoholic beverages to train homing cockroaches.

Example: Sydney Warbuff, an elderly gent of no fixed address, reports that he uses the stuff to power a scale model of the Second World War.

Well, O.K. But most people use a drink for more common, garden-variety reasons: to relax or to celebrate or to warm up conversation. There's nothing wrong with that. A drink is fine as long as not too much importance is attached to it. As long as you don't need it to have a good time.

As long as the people you're with are more important than the drink in your hand.

Trouble begins only when the drink itself is what a person is most interested in. Some people drink not to make a good time better, but to kill time or escape from problems. Then drinking becomes a sickness. All kinds of folks—preachers, plumbers, doctors, clarinet players, Indian snake charmers, high school cheerleaders—get that way. You don't have to be the funny-looking skid-row guy singing in the park to have a problem with drinking.

How do some people get so hung up on drinking? Well, Old Mister Booze promises a lot. A few drinks may make a person feel more confident, more adult, and less hassled by problems and pressures. But once that nice, smooth, on-top-of-the-world feeling wears off, the drinker has the same old problems staring him in the face. In the end, heavy drinking is the best way to keep a person from finding out who he is.

Of course, every person has to decide for himself what's good for him. But when someone is doing a lot of drinking, it's pretty easy to see that he's doing less and less of the things he used to get a kick out of. That's because heavy drinking takes up a lot of energy —energy that could be used guitar-playing, new friend-meeting, camping, movie-going, thinking, plant-potting, dancing, or almost anything that makes a person feel turned on and alive.

Last words: Since drinking has nothing to do with being cool or sophisticated or adult, it doesn't make any sense to look down on people who don't drink. Everybody has the right to decide for himself whether or not to use alcohol—or eat Brussels sprouts, or use spray deodorant, or wear turtleneck sweaters, for that matter. So when the time comes to make a decision about drinking, give your friends a chance to be themselves. And while you're at it, do the same for yourself.

Glad You Asked

Do you want more facts on drinking? At a recent school program on alcohol, here's what a group of Washington, D.C., junior high school students wanted to know:

Q. What can I do if my mother or father drinks too much?

A. You can tell them about your concern. If they are willing to talk it over with you, suggest they seek help from one of the organizations listed at the back of this magazine.

But they may not want to discuss it, because many people find it hard to admit they have a drinking problem. If that's the case, don't press it. Instead, call your community's chapter of Alateen, a worldwide organization of children of alcoholic parents. At Alateen meetings you'll have a chance to talk over your situation and learn the best way to deal with it. Sometimes if a family member gets outside help, the alcoholic member of the family finds it easier to get help, too.

Q. If you get drunk every weekend with your friends, are you alcoholic?

A. You may not be alcoholic, but you are developing a pattern of alcohol use that may be hard to change. Many problem drinkers start out as strictly weekend drinkers, and gradually find themselves depending on liquor more and more to function. It is important to know, too, that you can develop a drinking problem as easily from beer or wine as from hard liquor. Four glasses of beer or a half bottle of wine contains as much alcohol as two strong cocktails.

If you think you or one of your friends may have a real problem with drinking, visit one of the counseling centers in your area that deals with alcohol and other drug problems. You might also try Alcoholics Anonymous, an organization for problem drinkers that now has a teenage group.

Q. If my parents are alcoholics, is there a good chance I will be one, too?

A. Studies show that alcoholism does occur more often in children of alcoholic parents, but no one is sure why. Some think it is because many children tend to pick up their parent's attitudes and behavior about a lot of things, including drinking. Others believe that because alcoholism in the family usually means an unhappy home life, many children start drinking to escape their unhappiness and anger.

On the other hand, many children of alcoholic parents don't drink at all because they don't want to develop their parent's problem. No young person should assume that because his mother or father is alcoholic, he will have a drinking problem too.

Q. Why drink if you don't get drunk?

A. People drink for many different reasons. Let's say you're feeling uptight at a party. One drink might make you feel more relaxed. If you're shy, a drink might make conversation easier and the occasion more fun. So in social situations, a drink or two often brings people closer together.

But if you drink so much that you get drunk, you are overdosing with a drug. You may be having fun at the time, but since you can't think or talk clearly, you may say or do things you regret later. Worse, you might not even be able to remember what you said or did.

Getting drunk can also cause a lot of hassles for you—in school, at home, with the police, and even with your friends. You're more likely to pick a fight when you're drunk, and if you drive, you're more likely to have an accident. And last but not least, who wants to wake up with a hangover?

Many people think the only health problems related to alcoholism are painful hangovers, cirrhosis of the liver, or, in extreme cases, delirium tremens. Not so. Prolonged alcohol abuse also affects the heart and other muscles, the brain, glands, and digestive tract.

On the other hand, moderate use of alcohol can be socially, psychologically, and even physically beneficial. But keep in mind that alcohol is an anesthetic, addictive drug. The same substance that can relax you can also put you to sleep, and, in sufficiently large doses, cause death.

No one has been able to prove that responsible drinking is harmful to the health of most people. The key is moderation. Like nearly everything else, too much liquor is a dangerous thing.

Malnutrition. Calorie-conscious Americans already know alcohol is fattening. But many may not be aware that heavy alcohol intake deprives the body of valuable protein, vitamins, and minerals. When hunger pangs are satisfied by the "empty" calories of alcohol, less food is eaten, and nutrition suffers. In addition, heavy alcohol consumption interferes with food absorption, so even if the heavy drinker eats well, he may have borderline or actual malnutrition.

Other Muscles. A muscle disease called alcoholic myopathy is sometimes found in patients with a long history of alcohol abuse. The symptoms are severe muscle cramps, swelling, and in later stages, fragmentation of muscle fibers. Chronic cases display muscle weakness and atrophy.

You Are What You Drink

Brain and Nerves. After drinking heavily over a period of time, signs of brain and nerve malfunction may occur, including acute and chronic hallucinations, disorientation as to time and place, and memory and reasoning failures. Some of these symptoms are directly related to the common vitamin deficiencies of the alcoholic person, and respond favorably to massive doses of vitamins, especially the B variety.

Heart. Alcoholism can produce an enlarged, flabby heart muscle, a condition that often leads to congestive heart failure. But on a somewhat encouraging note, studies indicate that alcohol is not a significant risk factor in heart attacks. Interestingly, moderate drinkers as a statistical group have a lower rate of heart attacks than abstainers.

Gastrointestinal Diseases. Chronic heavy drinking has a harmful effect on the entire digestive system. Digestion problems, ulcers, and inflammation of the pancreas are common complaints. Also, heavy drinking is strongly correlated with the development of cancer of the mouth and throat, especially if combined with heavy smoking. A heavy drinker who does not smoke has nearly the same increased risk of developing these cancers as a heavy smoker who does not drink.

Liver. The liver is the organ which is most involved with processing alcohol, and it is usually seriously affected by alcohol abuse. Alcohol is not digested by the stomach and intestines, but is directly absorbed by the blood. It then travels to the liver for oxidation. Cirrhosis, which is scarring of the liver, develops in about 10 percent of alcoholic persons and can be fatal. (See "The Drinking Man's Liver," p. 7.)

and shame connected with it prevent people from getting help. People are too ashamed to say they've got a problem. Even with venereal disease, people will go get help now. But we're in the 19th century with alcoholism.

Q: Is there anything the public can do to help get the sequel on the drawing board? Would letters help?

Van Dyke: Sure, I think that kind of pressure works. If people would write the network in support of the sequel, it might make a difference.

Q: Is there anything you'd like to talk about that we haven't brought up so far?

Van Dyke: Yes. The thing I keep stressing—and I just know I'm right—is that there's no such thing as an alcoholic personality, a personality disposed toward addiction. There is no moral weakness, no character lack involved. I think the chances of becoming alcoholic depend entirely upon whether you are physiologically addictive or not. Particularly in my business, I have friends who do drink heavily, every day. They have three martinis at lunch, and they may drink during the afternoon, and in the evening. But they are not alcoholics.

Q: Why do you say they are not alcoholics? How do you know?

Van Dyke: Well, they seem to be able to quit when they want to. They don't have any of the things I connect with alcoholism, like personality change or the "hollow leg" syndrome—that's when you can drink forever and not seem to get drunk. That was me, and that to me is a sure sign of alcoholism—when you can drink everybody else under the table. And I think it's because your system is prepared for it to begin with. It utilizes alcohol better.

Q: Do you ever get the desire to drink anymore?

Van Dyke: I never get a craving like before. My wife and I were out last Saturday, sailing—we're into sailing. We were all alone on our boat, and the weather got bad and we really got scared. When we finally made it back to safety, we both said, "If we were drinking people, we'd have a big martini right now." But now it's a joke. Once in a while, the thought will come into my head, "Boy, a drink would really calm my nerves." But nothing like the alcoholic craving. Not any more.

Where Do We Go from Here?

That depends, naturally, on where we are now. Four years ago, the Federal government recognized alcoholism as a major health problem by establishing a National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. In the interim there has been considerable progress in understanding, treating, and preventing alcohol-related problems. But much more needs to be done. We must work to:

Reach a National Consensus

Up to now, Americans haven't been able to agree on exactly what constitutes "responsible" drinking. How much is too much? Is drinking in itself good, bad, or indifferent? Is getting drunk O.K.—sometimes? At what point does social drinking slide into problem drinking? Before we can successfully tackle America's alcohol problem, we must first face up to our conflicting attitudes toward drinking and set some clear standards for what is and what isn't responsible use of alcohol.

Raise Medical Consciousness

Fewer than 10 percent of alcoholic Americans today are getting the treatment they need. Less than half of all U.S. hospitals will admit patients with a primary diagnosis of alcoholism. To turn this situation around, some basic "consciousness-raising" must be done within the medical profession regarding attitudes toward and care of the alcoholic patient.

The place to start is in the medical schools. Currently, most medical schools devote little or no curriculum time to alcoholism study; as a result, some doctors do not consider alcoholism a "legitimate" illness and many know shockingly little about the effects of alcohol on the body. Many physicians, for example, regularly prescribe sedatives, stimulants, and tranquilizers to patients without warning them of the dangers of mixing these drugs with alcohol.

Pass Uniform Act

One of the first necessary steps toward adequate alcoholism treatment is a change in the definition of alcoholism from a crime to an illness. Most communities still jail intoxicated people without offering any type of treatment. (There would undoubtedly be quite an uproar in a community if all victims of a heart attack were jailed until their seizure stopped.)

The Uniform Alcoholism and Intoxication Treatment Act, formulated in 1971, provides a model for states to decriminalize alcoholism and establish the legal framework to approach alcoholism and public intoxication as an illness. The Federal government has offered states a special grant to adopt laws that would decriminalize alcohol abuse. Once this is done, the public may begin to view the alcoholic as a sick person in need of help—not as a criminal.

Promote More Programs

Probably the most encouraging development in alcoholism treatment and prevention has been in the field of occupational programs. Because occupational programs lay the alcoholic worker's job on the line, recovery rates on the average are more than double those of other treatment approaches. However, to date only a handful of U.S. companies have adopted in-house programs.

We also need more special treatment facilities for women and youth, two groups whose alcohol problems have "come out of the closet" to a greater extent in recent years. Although some minority programs already exist, high priority should also be given to additional programs designed to meet the needs of particular groups.

What You Can Do

To effectively combat America's alcoholism problem, you don't have to be rich and influential. You don't have to be a medical expert. You don't have to be the parent, brother, daughter, or aunt of an alcoholic person. All you need is the desire to fight a major U.S. health problem and a commitment to helping other people. Here's how you can help:

Start in Your Own Back Yard

Look at your own attitudes toward alcohol use. If you choose to drink, do you drink responsibly? Are you a good host? Do you respect the rights of non-drinkers? If you have children, what kinds of drinking attitudes are you communicating to them through your own alcohol use or misuse?

And what about the drinking patterns of those close to you? It's time to stop saying "It's not my problem." When you see a guest at a party drinking too much, don't let him drive home. Let your co-worker know you're getting concerned about those three-martini lunches. Ask your friend who gets bombed every weekend if he really needs to get drunk to have a good time.

Lend A Hand

Join a community group involved in alcoholism treatment or prevention. The Jaycees and many women's clubs are good places to begin. Urge physicians, psychiatrists, and clergymen to refer people with drinking problems to appropriate treatment facilities.

If treatment services in your area are inadequate, help build community support for them by working with and supporting citizen groups and organizations already active in the field. State alcohol programs are usually administered through state health departments or through independent commissions or boards. Call the information office in your state and ask for the name of the person responsible for these programs.

Find out what kinds of treatment facilities exist for groups whose alcohol problems have up to now been neglected: youth, women, and minorities. If programs exist, get involved. If there are none, work with the state alcohol authority to get one started.

Talk It Up

Some sectors of the health community still refuse to view alcoholism as a medical problem. Ask your doctor if he or she refers alcoholic patients to treatment centers or hospitals.

Find out about in-house alcoholism programs where you work and in the organizations to which you belong. If you don't think the existing efforts are effective, find out more about employee programs and offer your suggestions. If your company or association doesn't have a program, write the National Clearinghouse for Alcohol Information (address below) to find out how to start one.

Put Pen to Paper

Contrary to popular opinion, elected officials do read letters from their constituents. Write your Federal, state, and local representatives of your interest in increased alcoholism treatment and prevention efforts. Urge their support.

Write a letter to the editor of your local newspaper calling for action in a particular area of alcoholism. (For example, more than half of our states still treat public drunkenness as a criminal offense, not an illness. Here is a vital issue that you could bring to the public's attention.)

If you see a film, TV or radio show or commercial that makes light of alcohol abuse, write the studio or station and object. On the other hand, when you see a production that treats drinking problems honestly and seriously, write to encourage more of the same.

Planning a Picnic or a Party

Finding an excuse for having a party or goings-on for a picnic may come easy, but when you try to provide a place to throw it, that may be another question. The Patton House located off Olbrick Rd. in the Sand Hill area, is available on a reservation basis for indoor parties and functions. Uchee Creek also has the perfect place, located off the 101st Airborne Division Rd., and is also available on a reservation basis. For the picnickers, Uchee Creek provides a complete recreational area with picnic tables, barbecue grills, playground equipment and fresh water outlets.

If you want to turn that picnic into a three-day outing, the Uchee Creek area also provides a boat marina, bait and tackle shop and campsites.

Fourth and Last Ft. Benning Bicentennial Medallions

Only a few of the bronze medallions which are antiqued with a silver wash remain available for purchase for $2.50 from the Bicentennial Project Agency located on Collins Loop, Bldg 2639. These medallions were created solely for Ft. Benning. There were only 1,000 minted and they will not be reproduced, so they are truly collectors' items. The medallions make ideal souvenirs from Ft. Benning. Proceeds from the sale of the medallions are used by the Bicentennial Memorial Association to support unfunded Bicentennial projects and activities throughout Ft. Benning.

Have your fun, but--

Play it safe this Halloween

October 31st is the cause for celebration by millions of kids. That's right, it's Halloween, the night when the Great Pumpkin rises. For most kids it will be a night of fun with lots of goodies. For a few it will long be remembered as a day of horror, serious injury or in some cases even death.

Let's put our heads together and build in safety precautions to make this a 100 per cent safe Halloween. Here are some safety tips to protect the kids:

The costume should fit well and not cause the child to trip. ReflectORIZED tape will increase its visibility. The mask should not restrict vision. Be sure a flashlight is carried and used. Small children should be supervised by an adult.

Trick or treating should be restricted to familiar neighborhoods. Dark, unlighted homes, and homes of known "cranks" should be avoided.

Children without adults should trick or treat in groups.

Children should be instructed to not eat their treats until after they have been inspected by Mom. Some "cranks" have been known to insert needles, pins, and even fishhooks in candy or fruit.

Fruit should be washed and cut into small sections before eating.

Parents, you can help by taking these safety precautions:

Light your front porch.

Remove obstacles from the lawn.

Secure your dog. Even the friendliest dog can get agitated by the costumes and antics of the children.

Know where your children plan to go and insist they follow the plan.

If you do any driving be especially careful and alert for small dark objects suddenly darting on the roadway.

Let's all make this a happy night for all the kids. Follow these simple safety precautions and Halloween will be a joyous rather than a sad occasion.

D.C. for a pittance

How does a Bicentennial vacation in Washington, D.C. for five dollars or six dollars a night (private room) sound? Well, it's available to enlisted men and women through the Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen's Club, operated exclusively for the enlisted servicemember. It is located in a charming historic home at 11th and L Streets, N.W. in the nation's capital. The club is a non profit organization supported by the dollars and hard work of Armed Forces Wives Clubs, individual memberships, a modest full time staff and volunteer.

Food is available at cost in the canteen, books in a cozy library, television and quiet places to write, read and relax. Of course, if you're out for a good time, what better place is there than Washington, D.C. in a Bicentennial year. Reservations are not necessary but large groups would be well advised to call ahead.

Doughboys: small but fast and tough

By Jack Barham
Assistant Head Coach

The 1976 Doughboys are shaping up to be lean, tough and fast, with especially good potential to move the ball through the air. Our original group of over a hundred men has been pared down to just over fifty ballplayers. The cuts came through tough scrimmages and hard workouts. The coaches have sent no one away and the men who are left are those who really want to play.

We aren't real big. Only a few really large fellows came out for the squad and some of those have been beaten out for starting positions by smaller, quicker men.

The brightest glow of the team right now is our ability to throw the ball. Head Coach Wayne Boles and offensive coordinator John Ross are developing two good-throwing quarterbacks in Joe Duenas, B Co, 1st Bn, 29th Inf, and Guy Richardson, 13th Co, TSB. Both are quick, cool and ready to play.

We have four ends who could play for almost any major college team. They are Fred Suggs, HHC, 36th Engr Gp Warren Terry, 11th Co, TSB, Joe Hutchings, 608th Ord Co, and Roland Hubbard, C Co, 5th Bn, 1st AIT Bde.

Running with the ball will be several good backs, led by Julian Williams, HHC, 1st AIT Bde, who played for me in the Infantry Bowl last year and is the hardest running back of his size I've ever coached. Doughboy fans will enjoy watching Julian break tackles. What our defense lacks in size they will make up in speed and cunning. Dave Bankston is a really talented defensive coach and is building a series of special defenses, stunts and moves that is going to bewilder some offensive teams. Gary Pestrak, 5th Bn, TSB, will lead the defense on the field. Gary is a former West Point linebacker who has great mobility and hits like a truck.

Our biggest problem at the moment is getting our ball players to practice. None of the Doughboys are on special duty for football, and military duties come first in every case. The coaches do request, however, that when schedules can be arranged to allow players to make practice, commanders do what they can to help the team.

Woman MP takes to the woods

By Lee Meyer

SP4 Debra Choy, 988th Military Police Company has become the first woman game warden to be assigned to the Fish and Game Section of the Ft. Benning Provost Marshal's Office.

The new game warden presents a quiet manner and gentle exterior but don't let that fool you, SP4 Choy feels strongly about the preservation of our nation's wildlife. As she puts it, "Hunting is a sport that helps maintain nature's balance. But, as in most sports, certain rules and regulations have to be followed, that's where I come in."

SP4 Choy's duties as a member of the Fish and Game Department encompass a wide spectrum of activities. A normal day might include anything from checking licenses at a fishing site to gathering up stray animals in one of the post housing areas.

While patrolling the post's back roads looking for poachers, SP4 Debra Choy takes time out to enjoy a drink of fresh well water that runs from an artesian well located in the Lae Field area.

Things are not always so calm. SP4 Choy remembers such incidents as rounding up wild pigs near the main gate or conducting a search for missing persons throughout the vast Fort Benning Reservation.

"It's a job that keeps you moving and that's what I like best about it. Besides, when you are working in Fish and Game, you are not restricted to a small or confined area," reflected SP4 Choy.

With hunting season now open, the eleven personnel assigned to the Fish and Game Section of the PMO will be working on twelve hour a day, rotating shifts. These long hours don't seem to bother SP4 Choy. She takes it as, in her words, "just a part of the job."

Along with the long hours, college courses and other job demands, SP4 Choy still manages a few sets of tennis each week and find time to engage in her favorite pastime, sky-diving.

SP4 Choy enjoys the Army, likes the job security and would like to make it a career. However the career may have to wait until she goes to school and gets a degree in Criminology. With her degree in-hand SP4 Choy hopes to apply for a commission. "I feel I could do such a great deal more as an officer," states the game warden.

CHAMPUS certificates due for annual update

October 1st marked the start of a new year for CHAMPUS outpatient deductible certificates.

Defense Department officials remind beneficiaries of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services — CHAMPUS — that deductible certificates issued for FY 1976 (July 1, 1975 - September 30, 1976) will not be valid after September 30th.

The outpatient deductible is the initial amount a beneficiary must pay each fiscal year before CHAMPUS assistance is available for outpatient expenses.

For an individual, the deductible is the first $50 of authorized outpatient charges in a fiscal year. A family group of two or more is not required to pay collectively more than the first $100 of authorized outpatient charges in a fiscal year.

To obtain a deductible certificate, a beneficiary should accumulate itemized bills or receipts for outpatient services during a fiscal year until they total $50 or more for one patient or $100 or more collectively for a family. Then, the bills or receipts should be sent, along with one claim form per patient, to the organization that processes outpatient claims for the geographic area where the beneficiary normally receives care.

10-8 on the warpost

By "HOSS" KACI 4615

Once upon a time there were three CBers who lived in a bungalow by the seashore. There was the Papa Cber, the Mama Cber and little Baby Cber. One day Mama Cber heated up some TV dinners for lunch.

"Papa! Baby! Lunch is 10-10."
 "10-4 Mama, we're 10-27 to the table."
 But when they got to the table, Papa lifted the foil on his tray and said, "Not chicken ala king again. Pfui!"

With that, they all decided to go out for a pizza and have the TV dinners for supper. They were in such a hurry to leave that they forgot to lock the door.

While they were gone, Goldie Lawks, a local cat-burgler and part-time wheel-man at the Skrub-em-up Car Wash when he wasn't busy burgling cats, noticed the open door on the three CBers' home. Thinking there might be a cat on the premises, he sneaked inside and spied the TV dinners. Not one to pass up a free dinner for all his cats, Goldie scooped up the trays and poured the contents into a bucket he kept handy for loot.

Just at that moment the three CBers' side-band rig in the upstairs den came alive

"How about it Mad Doctor, you copy?"
 "Indeed, auscultation is concomitant with allocation."
 Hearing the strange voices in what he supposed to be an empty house, Goldie dropped the bucket spilling chicken ala king, gravy, mashed potatoes and succotash all over the kitchen and ran out the door.

Upon their return, the three CBers called the police who came and took away all the chicken ala king, etc and the bucket which they traced through its serial number to the Skrub-em-up Car Wash. On a tip from the manager, they raided Goldie's apartment where they found 374 cats and 52 buckets of chicken ala king, gravy, spuds and succotash, all of which they confiscated for evidence. Goldie was convicted on a charge of cruelty to animals and the three CBers received a summons for failing to safeguard their property.

Moral: Lock your house when you leave. The next burgler might be a second story man.

Suggestions pay

Wilbert G. Baggett, training instructor, Aviation Division, DPT, received a cash award of $820 under the Army Suggestion Program at Ft. Benning. He suggested a modification of Instrument Trainer 2B12A which created additional realism in the training of rotary wing pilots. It conserved man-hours and fuel costs supporting aircraft usage in an estimated material savings of $23,400.

Mrs. Janice M. Moore of the Transportation Division, DIO, cheerfully goes about her duties after receiving a cash award of $705 for a suggestion she made under the Army Suggestion Program at Ft. Benning. Mrs. Moore recommended a change to zoning procedure concerning pick-up and delivery of non-temporary storage from the Ft. Benning Military Reservation. Her suggestion reduced clerical confusion, simplified operations, increased efficiency and resulted in an estimated annual savings in man-hours and operational costs of $16,146.

The soldier and politics

By Mac McAllister

The American process of electing a President every four years is of as much interest to soldiers as it is to the civilian population. After all, "green-suiters" don't check their citizenship at the gate when they join the Army, despite some opinions to the contrary which have been advanced. Institutionally, the Army is not permitted to be a political organization, but its members are encouraged and expected to take part in the political process.

There are some ground rules, however. The rules for the soldier are spelled out in Section III of Army Regulation 600-20.

In general, soldiers may take part in three types of direct political activity. In each case, the important thing to remember is that soldiers cannot become involved in politics as representatives of the Army.

- Soldiers are encouraged by the Army to register, vote, and express their opinions on political candidates and issues.

- Soldiers may make monetary contributions to a political party or a political committee favoring a particular candidate or slate of candidates.

- Soldiers may attend partisan or non-partisan political meetings or rallies, but only as spectators and they are not permitted to wear uniforms at such gatherings.

There are some specific prohibitions for soldiers, and they make good sense. The Army's business is national defense, pure and simple, and national defense hinges on responsiveness to legally constituted authority, regardless of the political base or orientation.

Members of the Army are expressly forbidden to use any official authority to solicit votes for a particular candidate. Any other official activity for the purpose of affecting the outcome of an election is likewise prohibited.

Soldiers may not participate in partisan political management, campaigns or conventions.

A member of the Army may not campaign as a partisan candidate for nomination or as a partisan nominee for political office.

Even under the improbable circumstances of being nominated as a nonpartisan candidate for a civil office, a soldier generally may not become a candidate for any such office requiring full-time service.

This restriction applies to those members who are serving an initial tour of extended active duty the soldier agreed to do as a condition for receiving schooling or other training at the expense of the government.

Many centuries ago, the Greek philosophers expressed the view that man is a political animal. Without questioning the validity of that premise in the 20th Century, it is safe to say today's soldier is a 'qualified' political animal. (ARNEWS)

Promotion denial may violate regs

Some soldiers in the field are being denied promotion and taken off hike lists by commanders who don't have the authority to do so.

DA officials say that the problem stems from the fact that some commanders are imposing additional, local eligibility and promotion criteria in violation of AR 600-200, Para 7-1.1 and 7-1.4.

As an example, some company commanders are delaying recommending E-4s and the E-5 board because they had not attended the Primary Non-commissioned Officers Course (PNCOC). In addition, some boards were not selecting soldiers for promotion because they had failed to complete PNCOC. This action is unauthorized.

Under EPMS, PNCOC will become a requirement for promotion to E-5 in some MOSs. Commanders can't impose this requirement criteria until it has gone into effect Army wide.

The commander must judge future potential, and may use failure of PNCOC or other courses as one of the reasons for possible non-recommendation for promotion. Failure, alone, should not lead automatically to non-recommendation. Commanders are not allowed to deny a promotion recommendation solely because a soldier has not attended a PNCOC.

As far as removing a soldier from a promotion list, a soldier can be removed for cause, one of which might be failure to pass a course such as PNCOC, but a determination must be made by a board as referenced in paragraph 7-27, AR 600-200.

In addition, board members should not use failure of a course as the only reason for non-selection of a soldier.

Additional local promotion criteria can not be established because it is unfair for some soldiers to meet criteria which is not required of other soldiers.

The heart of the matter revolves around the fact that the individual commander does not have the authority to impose his own, local, eligibility and/or promotion criteria.

Jim Woodruff--citizen, patriot, friend

The United States Army and the soldiers and military families of Ft. Benning, in particular, have lost a good friend and champion in the untimely death of Mr. James W. Woodruff Jr.

Jim Woodruff was a man who saw very clearly his responsibilities as a citizen of this country, the State of Georgia and the City of Columbus. He was deeply concerned with their governmental processes and was vitally attuned to the demands of responsible citizenship. He was not content to talk about the need for public service; he consistently made his life an example of the dedicated, public-spirited citizen.

Jim Woodruff was a Fourth of July type patriot 365 days a year. He loved his country, and being aware of the realities of the world, was consistently alert to the necessities of the modern patriot. He was the superb combination of the idealist who knew, respected and loved the heritage and traditions of the United States and the great Southland from which he came. He was also a realist. He recognized our shortcomings, when necessary, and strived manfully to do his part to correct them.

Jim Woodruff was a loyal friend of the Ft. Benning military community. He identified with it and stayed, in fact, a continuing part of it. Friend and counselor of Commandants over the years, he was even more importantly vitally concerned with the welfare of all the soldiers at Ft. Benning and their families. He inquired often about their welfare and conditions and moved with great skill and energy in their support when it was necessary. He did not accept superficial solutions but went to the heart of the matter, whether at the local or national level. His achievements for the Army deserve an honored place in the records of our affairs.

Jim Woodruff was a rare man. We will miss him.

Hoffmann, DePuy add condolences

The unfortunate death of Jim Woodruff represents the loss of a valued friend of the Army. His contributions to his community, to the Army, and to the nation is a living testimony of his greatness as a leader and dedicated American.

As a citizen, as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of the Army and as National President of AUSA, Jim Woodruff achieved greatness in life through hard work, sacrifice and dedication to those principles upon which the foundation of his country is built. Jim will be sorely missed by all who knew and worked with him. On behalf of the Army, I extend to his wife and loved ones our deepest sympathy.

Veterans Day more than just another holiday

Veterans Day is here again. To many people, it is a holiday from work. But Veterans Day is more than just a day to sleep in or sit around and catch up on soap operas.

When Veterans Day was first proclaimed a holiday in 1919, it was called Armistice Day. It was a day to celebrate the signing of the Armistice in 1918 that ended WWI.

Veterans Day is the anniversary of the Armistice between the Allied and Central Powers which was signed on November 11, 1918. This Armistice was signed in Marshal Foch's railway car in the Forrest of Compiègne, France.

The Allied Powers; France, Great Britain and the US set aside this day to honor the men and women that were killed in those countries' war.

Veterans Day has many names, in Canada it is known as Remembrance Day and in Britain it is called Remembrance Sunday because it is celebrated the Sunday closest to November 11th.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower on June 1, 1954 declared in an act of Congress that November 11th of each year be set aside "to honor veterans and to celebrate a day dedicated to world peace." However, later it was decided that Veterans Day would be a day to honor veterans of all U.S. wars.

In 1968, a new legislation was enacted to change Veterans Day from the 11th to the fourth Monday in November. This act became effective in 1971.

Veterans Day is celebrated across the country with parades, speeches and by placing flowers on servicemen's graves. Also, special ser-VICES are held at Arlington National Cemetery and at shrines in other countries.

Ft. Benning will be holding a Veterans Day/Retreat ceremony on October 22d at 4:30 pm on York Field. In case of inclement weather, the honor ceremony will be held in the lobby of Infantry Hall. Units that participate in this ceremony include; HQ Comd, AIT Bde, 34th Med Co, 36th Engr Gp, USAIS, 197th Inf Bde and the 283d Army Band.

So remember that Veterans Day is a special day that is set aside for you to honor the men and women who died in the war so that this country would remain free. Before you sit back to watch your favorite TV program, take a moment to remember those who won't ever have a holiday from work.

Veteran's Day Holiday Safety Proclamation

Veterans Day presents the opportunity for thoughtful reflection on how this country has survived and prospered for two centuries of freedom. The dedication of American military personnel sacrificing life and limb for the defense of freedom allows all of us to enjoy our sacred liberties in peace.

As we enjoy this holiday and commemorate the valiant men and women who have defended us and preserved our freedom, we should dedicate ourselves to the preservation not only of freedom but to the protection of life and limb.

I urge each of you to be safe throughout this holiday weekend. Drive safely when on the road. Practice defensive driving at all times. Stay free from accidents.

CFC update

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) is $70,000 short of its desired goal and $20,000 behind last year's total at this time, according to Jim Schoonover, project chairman.

Each major unit and agency on post has a designated key chairman, and individuals may contribute by payroll deduction or cash or check. Total participation is needed if this year's campaign is to reach its goal of $240,000. Presently $170,000 has been pledged.

Revision in IOBC program tested

Some 200 newly commissioned Infantry officers (one-half with Military Academy backgrounds, the remainder graduates of the ROTC program) are presently taking part in a pilot basic officer training course at Ft. Benning which could eventually lead to a complete revision of the present Infantry Officers Basic Course program of instruction.

The pilot course, which began on Aug. 29, and lasts until December, has been designed to do two things: to develop Infantry platoon weapon systems and equipment experts who can train and supervise their subordinates to maintain, operate, and employ their weapons and equipment; and to develop skilled Infantry platoon leaders who can perform at all skill levels in their platoons, who can train their squads to properly use cover, concealment, suppressive fires, and teamwork; and who are qualified to see to it that their squads (individually and collectively) and their platoon can perform their ARTEP missions.

The student officers, formed into five 40-man platoons, belong to a provisional company, which is commanded by a MAJ, who has in his company headquarters two CPT (an executive officer, and a training operations officer), a first sergeant, a supply sergeant, and armorer, and other administrative help, and who also has to oversee each platoon's three tactical trainers (two CPT and one SFC). While the company's cadre has been charged with the total training of the student officers, peer-led instruction is being emphasized.

The two phases of this 14-week officer training course require the student officers to meet the same skill level requirements as the soldiers they can expect to lead. They further require the student officers to master still higher skill levels to become branch-qualified as Infantry lieutenants.

Thus, during the course's first eight weeks, or Phase I, the student officers must master Skill Levels 10, 20 and 30, and must qualify with the various weapons, individual and crew-served, organic to an Infantry platoon.

For the last six weeks, Phase II, the student officers will be divided into two groups. Assignment to the groups will depend on the officers' initial assignments after they complete the course.

One group will proceed along a light Infantry track, the other along a mechanized Infantry track. In each, the student officers must master Skill Level 40. The Phase II training period also emphasizes platoon-level ARTEP tasks.

Field training is included in 10 of the 14 weeks, with the student officers away from a garrison environment undergoing tactical field training. As an end-of-course highlight, the student officers will be allowed to take the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB) test.

The withdrawal--South Korea, 1950

Editor's Note: The following text was taken from "This kind of War" written by T. R. Fehrenback on the Korean Conflict.

Then

Preparation for armed conflict can take many forms — weapons qualification, physical conditioning, training in attack formations and many more. Of equal importance but as much neglected prior to the Korean Conflict was emphasis on tactical withdrawal.

A withdrawal under fire is one of the most difficult of all military maneuvers. With seasoned troops it is dangerous, but with green men, undisciplined, badly shocked by the new and terrifying experience of battle, it can be fatal.

Smith ordered his two companies to leapfrog backward down a finger ridge on his right, toward Osan. While one platoon was to withdraw, others would cover it by fire.

C Company started back first, followed by the medics and battalion HQ.

But one platoon of B Company never received the withdrawal order. Fighting, Lieutenant Bernard, its commander, suddenly realized he was all alone on the position.

He gave orders for his men to pull out after the others had already gone.

The withdrawal immediately became ragged and chaotic. Nobody wanted to be last in a game where all advantage obviously lay with being first. The men got out of their holes, leaving their crew-served weapons. They left their machine guns, recoilless rifles, and mortars for the enemy.

Getting up from its holes, Task Force Smith now came under heavy machine-gun fire from the flanks, and here it took its heavy losses. At close range, automatic weapons chewed the retreating Americans, breaking them up into small, disorganized units.

They left their dead where they lay, and abandoned the thirty or so wounded who were too hurt to walk.

Driskell ordered his men to move back along the railway embankment. A large number of them, however, confused and frightened, refused to move. Driskell, after moving to the rear, missed these men, and went back to get them. A few minutes later, while searching the Korean mud houses for possible wounded, a squad of North Koreans surrounded him and four men with him. Driskell tried to surrender.

One of the NKPA shot him dead, and then the enemy fired on the other four, killing three. The fourth ran away.

The men who refused to leave their holes were not seen again.

Lieutenant General Walton H. Walker . . . saw the 1st Cavalry Division falling back on the Taejon-Taegu axis with alacrity. He made known his disappointment to General Hobart Gay, the division commander.

Gay, who had been Patton's chief of staff in Europe, admitted he did not know how to conduct a retreat — thus far in his military experience he had never been involved in one.

The withdrawal--Ft. Benning, 1976

Now

By Jake Dye
Department of Tactics

Technological advancement has provided today's commanders with a significant increase in combat power as compared with that available during the Korean Conflict.

However, combat power in itself will not make the difference as to which side wins or loses on the modern battlefield. All indications are that any likely enemy which faces the United States will have at least as much power and probably more.

The ultimate difference will be in a commander's ability to use his combat power effectively and the extent of his training will determine that ability.

The instruction given to officers attending the Infantry Officers' Advanced Course (IOAC) is geared to provide that training by preparing future commanders to win on the modern battlefield and against numerically superior odds if necessary.

The Tactics Department of the Infantry School provides the officer student with 41 hours of instruction in withdrawal, delay and disengagement operations. Acting as a team or company commander, the student is required to react to varying situations and fight outnumbered while making maximum use of all combat elements.

Unlike the commanders of Task Force Smith, today's commander understands the need for —

- gaining a mobility advantage by massing all available firepower prior to disengaging.

- suppressing the enemy's weapons to insure the rapid and safe movement of his men and

- detailed planning which allows for flexibility on a highly fluid battlefield.

To provide the element of realism, an Opposing Force concept is used in all instruction, requiring the student to react to the tactical moves of an active and aggressive enemy. Understanding the enemy and what he does in combat is a primary factor to consider when planning to fight. The Opposing Force concept tests the officer's ability to counter the enemy and gain a tactical advantage.

But, as the commander must be prepared to fight, so must his men.

Therefore, a portion of the course curriculum is oriented toward 'how to train' type instruction. In open discussion groups, students are given the opportunity to gain from the experiences of instructors and other students on methods and techniques of training.

The key to the success of a force in combat is in the ability of its commanders to lead, train and prepare their soldiers to face the challenge of the modern battlefield.

The Infantry School is preparing the commander of the future to meet that challenge.

Safety tips for a hunting holiday

With the three day holiday celebrating Veterans Day falling at the beginning of the fall hunting season, safety during this time should be the uppermost thing upon each hunter's mind.

Whether the hunter be using a rifle, shotgun or bow, he should be aware of the dangers of hunting during a holiday period.

The two most dangerous and hazardous obstacles the hunter encounters are himself and other hunters. With proper precautions, hunting can be a safe and rewarding experience. Here are a few guidelines for a safe hunting holiday:

- Point your gun or aim your arrow only at a known target. Other hunters appreciate not being mistakenly shot as game.
- Keep guns unloaded and arrows in a quiver until you arrive at your hunting site.
- Check to see that the terrain provides a natural barrier. This will prevent the bullet or arrow from straying into an unseen target.

- Determine zones of fire for yourself and others near you.
- Always anticipate what could go wrong and act to avoid the mistake. Plan ahead.

If you prepare properly for hunting on Veterans Day and throughout the hunting season, you will enjoy a safe experience.

While sitting around pondering what to write about this week an ol' fishing buddy approached me and offered the following story.

A fisherman returned home a day early from a fishing trip. As he entered his house, he noticed a strange coat hanging in the hall. Going completely beserk, he stormed through the living room with an accusation that there was a strange man in the house. "Where is he?" the fisherman demanded as he stalked from room to room searching. His startled wife insisted, "You're mistaken, dear, that coat must have been left by one of your friends that last time you threw a poker party. Since you've been gone, I haven't seen or even looked at another man." The fisherman searched through the entire house and finding no one, decided his wife must be telling the truth. He apologized for his display of temper and went to the bathroom to wash up. As he was running water in the sink, he noticed the shower curtain was pulled closed. Rather strange he thought. He pulled the curtain open and sure enough, there stood a strange man. But before the fisherman could utter a word, the man jerked the curtain closed again, saying, "Please! I haven't finished voting yet."

Oh, well, even though you may not laugh, believe it or not fishermen appreciate that story. While I'm writing all this nonsense, I might as well give you both barrels. The following story is true? I would never stretch any story.

The emergency room at Martin Army Hospital received a frantic call from a fisherman. "Doc," said the fisherman, "my baby just swallowed a fishhook." "We'll dispatch an ambulance immediately," said the concerned doctor. A couple of minutes later the emergency room phone rang again. "Doc, this is the fisherman that called a while ago, never mind coming over, I just found another fishhook."

To date, archery hunters have checked in two deer at the Deer Club Station. While we are on this subject here's a tip all you hunters should heed. Make sure you check the Range clearance maps prior to entering an area. A great deal of training is being conducted on the reservation and for your own safety, use your noggin. We don't want anyone injured during this hunting season.

...

Ponder this until next week: Fishing is a jerk at one end of the line waiting for a jerk at the other end of the line.

AUSA's 22d meeting--success!

'Total Army' a must

By Lisa D'Luhy

"The Total Army is not something that is nice to have, it is something we must have," commented Army Chief of Staff, Gen Bernard Rogers during a meeting with over 6,000 delegates in attendance for the 22d annual AUSA meeting in Washington, D.C.

GEN Rogers stressed the importance of no longer waiting until war comes to integrate the active and reserve forces. He went on to say that we must establish a force structure for that Total Army and keep that structure as stable as we possibly can.

Since its inception three years ago, progression for the Total Army has been good, but as Secretary of Army, Martin Hoffmann stated, we are not there yet.

Noting certain adjustments that need attention while he is in first term, GEN Rogers also informed the audience that he plans to continue to follow the path set by his predecessors. He reminded the audience that ours is a Volunteer Army. Soldiers fully expecting to meet the standard set for them, standards in every area. They must and will be high standards — in discipline, training, performance, appearance and all others. No longer will the Army accept a lack of good physical condition with fat bulging over the belts of some of the soldiers, officers and enlisted.

A large round of applause came from the audience when GEN Rogers commented against unionization. "We don't need any unions to represent our soldiers; that is the responsibility of the Army leadership."

The Total Army will continue to seek ways to do more with less, to do it right, and to do it better. The Army is looking for that leader who will believe in soldiers, trust them, treat them like adults, who care about their soldiers and their dependents — "people oriented" leaders.

Recognizing the responsibilities of a soldier as being different from those individuals not in uniform, GEN Rogers in looking out for their well-being. "I am particularly concerned about our young, junior, married soldiers who find it difficult — at times impossible — to make ends meet," he said.

With a positive, enthusiastic and forthright manner, the Army can accomplish any mission it puts its mind to. GEN Rogers encouraged the people in the audience to judge one's performance, not in competition with his peers, but by what he did accomplish with what he had to work with.

"We will have an Army comprised of soldiers who look like soldiers should appear, who act like soldiers should act, who have trained like soldiers should be trained and, if required, will fight like soldiers have always fought," commented GEN Rogers. "That is a commitment we have made, and that is a commitment we shall keep."

Unions; benefits studied at meeting

By Lisa D'Luhy

Strong opposition to the unionization of the Armed Forces, along with a bid to stop attempts to cut their benefits, was the main topic during the 1976 resolutions committee during part of the 22d annual AUSA meeting in Washington.

Development of a 'Service Bill Of Rights' proposal endorsed by AUSA, which was originally established by the Defense Department and Congress. The endorsement of AUSA to formulate this 'bill of rights' is an attempt to block the coalescence of military personnel, in which Army Chief of Staff, GEN Bernard Rogers stated that it was the "responsibility of Army leadership."

The 13-member resolutions committee, which included SGM(Ret) Warren Paulk, a member of the local chapter, recommended a positive position towards several issues for both active and reserve forces.

The stabilization of active Army, Reserve and National Guard, reversing national policy governing chemical warfare - urging not only defensive training but also emphasis stressing realistic offensive training in all warfare capabilities, reaffirming AUSA's opposition to general amnesty or pardon of either military deserters or draft evaders and the continuation of research, development and modernization programs for the Army and retaining an adequate production base were some of the resolutions brought out by the committee.

The committee also resolved to "...stop the piecemeal approach to military compensation matters, developing a package that is easily understood."

These approved resolutions of AUSA gives guidance to public education for a keener insight of the set goals established for the upcoming year.

Anyone interested in receiving a copy of these resolutions may pick them up at the Public Affairs Office, room 604 in Bldg 4.

Per diem rates rise again

For the second time this year, the per diem rates for military have risen — this time from $33 per day up to $35 per day. The new rate rise applies to military and civilian employes for all travel performed on or after October 3rd. Additional increases were approved for other high cost areas and two new high cost areas have been included.

Earlier this year the CONUS rate rose from $25 to $33 per day. A maximum of $35 per day was approved at that time by Congress but was held at $33 per day by DoD.

The two new areas included in the high cost category are Newark, NJ with a per diem rate of $42 per day and Philadelphia, PA at a rate of $46. The new rates for previously designated high cost areas are: Boston, AM $49; Chicago, IL $43; Los Angeles, CA $40; San Francisco, CA $41; and Washington D. C. and the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens in New York City are $50 per day.

The $2 increase will go to reimbursement for meals and incidentals. Previously the two were grouped together for a total of $14 but now the allowance will be at the rate of $4.50 for each meal for a total of $13.50 a day with an additional $2.50 for incidental expenses. The average cost of lodging rate of $19 did not change. Other changes implemented in the June 1976 are still in effect. (ARNEWS).

Jim Woodruff Jr., chats with three Ft. Benning officers during a general membership meeting of the AUSA held last June at the Top Five Club

Army loses friend, champion

Funeral Services were held Wednesday morning at Parkhill Cemetery in Columbus for James W. Woodruff, Jr. With his death Ft. Benning and the Army lost one of its greatest friends and champions.

Jim, as he was affectionally known by his many friends in both the military and civilian communities, loved the Army and the soldier — from the highest ranks to the lowest. There were few events at Ft. Benning where his presence was not felt.

First and foremost, Mr. Woodruff loved the Infantry soldier. He realized that the Infantryman was the nation's ultimate weapon — the man who would close on the enemy for the final victory in any conflict.

So close was his association with the Infantry, Mr. Woodruff was instrumental in the beginning of a campaign to form a National Infantry Museum Association and the construction of a national museum honoring the Infantry soldier. At this time, work is proceeding on the renovation of an historic building at Ft. Benning — the Old Hospital Annex — where thousands of artifacts relating to the Infantry's role in the defense of this country over the past 201 years will be displayed.

His family, well aware of his interest and dedication to the museum, requested that in lieu of flowers, donations be made to the project. Donations should be mailed to National Infantry Museum Association, P.O. Box 2507, Columbus, Ga. 31902.

The museum, however, was just one of many interests Mr. Woodruff had in the Army and its well being. He was a civilian aide to the Secretary of the Army, a member and past president of the Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army, and was serving his third term as president of the Nation AUSA. In addition, he was a charter member and chairman of the Civilian and Military council, a group of influential people who meet regularly to iron out any problems that might arise between the military and civilian communities.

Mr. Woodruff was a solid supporter of the All Volunteer Army, willing to speak out for it whenever the occasion arose. He had a deep feeling for the one-station concept for training with Ft. Benning being the installation where all infantrymen receive their basic and advanced individual Infantry training.

His influence on the national level helped in the formation of the 1st AIT Bde (Infantry) at Ft. Benning.

At the time of his death he was working in support of plans to make Ft. Benning the site of all Infantry Basic Combat Training.

Mr. Woodruff made many other contributions to the Army. His activities in the civilian community are almost countless.

MG Williard Latham, Ft. Benning Commander, following Mr. Woodruff's untimely death, paid this tribute: "Jim Woodruff was a great citizen, patriot and friend. A rare man."

Jim Woodruff, Jr. is greeted at Brann Range where he witnessed an exercise held in conjunction with News Media Day on Post last May.

Jim Woodruff, Jr., and MG Willard Latham arrive at Dickman Field for the graduation of an Advanced Individual Training class last May. Mr. Woodruff presented an AUSA plaque to the outstanding graduate of the class.

VA questions and answers

Q — Would receipt of parents dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) be a bar to a widow's receiving death pension?

A — No. Receipt of IDC, based upon the death of a son, would not be a bar to the receipt of pension based upon the death of another person.

Q — I borrowed the maximum available on my National Service Life Insurance policy and did not pay the interest on the loan. I was later notified that the loan and interest amount was more than the reserve value of the policy. I took no action and the policy was canceled. Is it possible to reinstate the policy?

A — If the insured, after notice, permits the policy to be canceled because of excessive indebtedness against it, it may not be reinstated.

Q — May a veteran receive educational assistance for attending college and for on-the-job training at the same time?

A — No. He will be paid educational assistance for only one type of training at a time.

Q — May a veteran obtain a mobile-home loan through the VA loan guaranty program?

A — The VA will guarantee loans, obtained through private lenders, for purchase of mobile homes with lot up to a maximum of $27,500.

Q — I am attending high school under the GI Bill, but I am not doing too well. Am I eligible for tutorial assistance?

A — No. This is only payable where a veteran is attending school on a post-secondary level.

Q — I am under waiver of part of my military retired pay in order to receive VA compensation. Should I qualify for the VA clothing allowance because of my prosthetic device, will this also be deducted from my retired pay?

A — No. It is not necessary for a veteran in receipt of retired pay to waive any portion of his retirement pay in order to receive the clothing allowance.

Q — I am a Vietnam-era veteran and my employer is willing to set up an on-the-job training program for me. How would he go about getting approval for the program so I can draw GI Bill benefits while training?

A — You and your employer should contact the nearest VA office for complete information and assistance.

Q — I have a guaranteed GI loan with remaining balance of $8,000. I want to pay off the loan in full at this time. Will there be any penalty in paying off the loan early?

A — No. A guaranteed loan may be partially or fully paid at any time without penalty.

Recovery: the long, difficult road

By Joe Hilton

Let's talk about alcoholism, one of America's premier health problems along with cancer, heart disease and mental health. In the United States about seven out of ten adults drink alcoholic beverages. Of these, one out of eleven is an alcoholic.

This accounts for about nine million alcoholics, one billion dollars in health and welfare services and fifteen billion dollars in property damages annually.

Here is a brief conversation with an alcoholic whose drinking problem nearly claimed his life. The individual is a senior non-commissioned officer, from the 36th Engr. Gp. (CBT), who recovered with the help of Benning House, his family and his faith. Now a member of Alcoholics Anonymous, he raps with young soldiers on the dangers and effects of excessive drinking.

NCO: "During my first overseas tour to Korea I was deeply religious and a non-drinker. When I came back from Korea I could drink with the best of them — in Korea you could buy a quart of liquor for 90¢ — that was really the beginning of my alcohol problem."

J.H.: How do you feel about those who claim that the military and its resultant lifestyle is responsible for the alcoholic problems among soldiers?

NCO: "The military has never endorsed alcohol — but environment has been the reason for alcoholism flourishing. Like in my case—being stationed in Korea, there was very little to occupy my time, booze was cheap and the temptation overwhelming but like everything else in life it takes a strong individual to be a so called 'normal drinker' when booze is so plentiful."

J.H.: Why did you drink?

NCO: "I had no insecurity or guilt problems like most alcoholics. I drank because I enjoyed it and could hold an enormous amount of booze."

J.H.: What were your first symptoms of alcoholism?

NCO: "I drank heavily for a long period of time, something like a quart of liquor a day and never lost control. My body developed a tolerance for alcohol so I had to drink more to 'straighten out my nerves.' Eventually I stopped eating and my liver expanded to the point that it nearly collapsed."

J.H.: When your condition worsened did you admit to yourself that you were an alcoholic?

NCO: "Oh I suppose deep down inside I knew I was one, but I wasn't going to admit it to myself, my commander, or the doctor who knew my real condition. I promised that doctor if he released me that one time that I would never touch another drop of alcohol as long as I lived. Five minutes after I left that hospital I was drinking a fifth of whiskey."

J.H.: How did drinking affect your work performance?

NCO: "In my case the job helped me support my habit. I worked part time at the NCO Club and a lot of my customers bought me drinks—in fact over half of the regular patrons were intelligent, good soldiers, between the age of 30 and 55 and on the verge of alcoholism. So, no one knew if I was bombed or straight. In fact during most of my military life as an active alcoholic, I received letters of appreciation and bottles of booze from my commanders who thought I was doing a bang-up job."

J.H.: What was the turning point to the road of recovery?

NCO: "Well after I went into the hospital the second time, the doctor gave me two years to live. I decided then I would make an attempt to kick my habit and try to adjust to reality."

J.H.: How did you accomplish this transition?

NCO: "This initial phase is the most painful stage an alcoholic must go through. My change was accompanied by delirious tremors, 'the D.T.'s, and a lot of physical suffering due to the damage done to my stomach and liver."

J.H.: How did the Benning House help you?

NCO: "The role of the Benning House is environment. An alcoholic on the road to recovery should avoid exposing himself to drinking situations. He will need to develop new interests, friends and associations. The Benning House helped me become independent and believe in myself. However without the help of my wife, family and my religious faith even the Benning House wouldn't have been enough."

Running NCOs leave 84 pounds behind them

By Marshall Jones

Two Fort Benning soldiers believe that the post's physical training program is the best thing to happen to them in their Army careers.

They go above and beyond the post physical fitness requirements and run an additional 3-5 miles daily. In order to appreciate what physical fitness means to them, you have to understand what it means to try to top 400 on the PT test and run five miles when you're more than forty pounds overweight.

That's exactly what SSG Wayne Harbin and SFC Bill Pittman of The Infantry Board were faced with at the first of this year. At that time, they had no choice, they had to drop some of those pounds and that meant they had a lot of foot-pounding hours on the rack ahead of them.

They did a lot of groaning last winter when they began their rigorous running program. Pittman weighed in at 205 and Harbin tipped the scales at 240. Now, with Pittman at 166 and Harbin at 195 they say that running has made a distinct improvement in their lives.

Fear or pressure may have played a part in their decision to start running, but the only pressure they feel now is a spirit of friendly competition that's kept them going all along. And besides the lost weight, they've reaped many rewards from sticking with their program.

It's easier to get out of bed in the morning now that they're in better shape. They have more energy, and can eat as much or more than they did when they were overweight without fear of it going to fat. Besides running is a good escape valve when the usual problems everyone has, starts to cloud up the mind.

Sometimes the neighbors laugh when they see them running. They can't understand why two sergeants would be knocking themselves out unless they were afraid of command pressure. But Harbin and Pittman have the last laugh, because they have the concrete physical and mental benefits that come from a good running program. And as far as fear is concerned, you've never seen two soldiers less afraid of the semi-annual PT tests.

In fact, Pittman claimed he'd go over 480 on the next test and beat Harbin by three points.

SFC Bill Pittman (l) and SSG Wayne Harbin, both of The Infantry Board, are shown in the running gear that's become habitual to them. Both men have lost more than forty pounds each since they started an intensive running program in February.

Harbin has a completely new attitude towards the test. "I take one event at a time and try to max each one," he said. "Throughout my career, it's been my responsibility as an NCO to keep myself in shape. I felt I had let myself down."

Both Harbin and Pittman participated in the 10-mile event at the Volks Fest with the idea that a little competition between friends would be good for their morale. They also hoped they could be an example to others at the Infantry Board, and they were surprised at the interest they generated. Long before the Fest, people at the Board were laying odds on which one would finish first. As it turned out, they finished in almost a dead heat and called the race a draw.

Both were enthusiastic about events such as the Volks Fest. "The idea of having several courses of different lengths is the best idea they've come up with. When you have different classes for different people you get a lot more participation," Harbin said. Neither man would care to try the 20-mile run, but the ten-miler was just what they were looking for.

Both men give credit to Ft. Benning's physical programs for their increased personal happiness. But they've also had encouragement from their families. Harbin's wife, Marion, had given him a lot of support, and Janet Pittman sometimes dons sneakers and runs along with her husband.

The sergeants didn't have the satisfaction of finishing first at the Volks Fest. But they already have their reward for running, and it stays with them all day long. Bill Pittman sums up their attitude when he says, "We're not track stars. But we're awful good at running."

Obesity

A widespread problem

By MARCIA L. BEASLEY
Registered Dietitian

Being fat (obese) is no laughing matter — its cure rate is said to be little better than that for cancer.

Although obesity is widespread — some authorities place the incidence of obesity at 25 per cent of the population — the underlying cause still eludes medical science. Many parents to have obese children. It may be partially because of inherited tendencies but it's also a result of family food habits. Few obese adults can shed any light on the reason for their obesity except recalling that they were chubby as children. Here possibly lies the greatest public health measure we can undertake — that is to keep our children well nourished but thin by conventional standards.

"Well, the laundry did it to me again. They shrunk my uniforms!!!"

therapeutic approaches have been tried but little is accomplished because habits of eating and activity are extremely difficult to change.

Only in the imagination of some fast-buck authors is there an easy, rapid way to take off excessive pounds and keep them off. Prevention by balancing food intake with activity is more effective than treatment.

The key is in the proportion of time spent doing moderate to heavy activities as compared with time spend doing light to sedentary activities.

Obesity inevitably is coupled with the intake of excess calories and no secret or mysterious proposals for shedding fat can change that fact.

There is a well known tendency of obese

Obesity and Health

Depending on the extent, obesity causes a wide variety of damage.

- Life expectancy is reduced and the aging process is speeded up by the onset of obesity.
- The human skeleton is not well prepared to carry an extra load, consequently flat feet and arthritis of the knees, hips and lumbar spine are common in obese people.
- Abdominal hernias and varicose veins, obstructions to free breathing, tendency to winter cough, and bronchitis result from excess fat in the body.
- A variety of metabolic disturbances are associated with obesity, the principal one being diabetes mellitus.
- Atherosclerosis and gout also occur more commonly in the obese although no clear connection has been shown.
- Obesity is often associated with elevated levels of cholesterol in the blood and with stones in the gall bladder.

Obesity is the main type of malnutrition in this country. The obese person more frequently suffers from high blood pressure than the normal weight person. Overlapping layers of skin with consequent heat, friction and moisture can cause dermatitis.

The grossly obese person is slow and awkward and therefore more liable to accidents of all kinds than the normal weight person. The risk of heat exhaustion or heat stroke is very much higher in overweight persons than in those of normal weight.

A weight loss of two pounds per week is desirable.

Food groups

Cheese, ice cream, milk, creamed soups and puddings.

Meat, fish, poultry, eggs, cheese, dry peas, beans and nuts.

Include dark green or yellow vegetables, citrus fruits or tomatoes

Use enriched, whole grain or lightly processed cereals. Add milk to improve nutritional value.

Use a good diet. Use more fats and sugars if more

Formerly a large portion of the population thought that disease could be prevented by eating large quantities of food, which they thought constituted "good nutrition." Today considerable knowledge has been gained by nutritionist as well as the public.

Current knowledge concerning the quality rather than the quantity of what is eaten makes it possible to achieve optimum nutrition on a lower caloric diet than in years past, and thus, without the bad side effects of excess caloric intake.

Some Basic Facts

Anyone beginning a weight reduction program should have some basic fact.

Calories are burned by the body for energy.

- Excess calories are stored as fat.
- Each pound of body fat means that 3500 excess calories were stored.
- To lose a pound of body fat, you must eat 350 calories less than the amount required to sustain present weight.

The extent to which you eat more calories than you need can be easily calculated. For example, if an individual is 20 pounds overweight (see Ideal Body Weight) he or she has eaten 20 x 3500, or 70,000 calories more than he or she required.

Since this excess weight was probably added over an extended period of time, it is not wise to attempt to take it off too rapidly. In general, a reduction of about two pounds per week is considered to be a desirable rate of weight loss.

In order to lose two pounds per week, you must consume about (2 x 3,500) 7,000 calories less than required each week. This is equivalent to a 1,000 calories deficit per day.

From where do calories come?

Food contains one or more of the following:

- Protein,
- Fat and /or Carbohydrate (sugars or starches).

What does this mean in terms of calories?

A gram of fat provides about nine calories, a gram of alcohol about seven calories and a gram of either protein or carbohydrate (sugar or starch) about four calories.

Counting Calories

Now if you are reducing your caloric intake you will want to use the remaining calories wisely. Not all foods contain the protein, vitamins and minerals that your body needs.

- Consciously reduce intake of sugar and alcohol which provide only calories.
- Reduce fat consumption which contains more than twice as many calories as protein or carbohydrate and provide very little else other than calories.
- Increase intake of fresh fruits, vegetables and whole grain or lightly processed cereals.
- Eat moderate amounts of the high protein foods such as eggs, meat, fish, poultry and dairy products.

These are the food facts, but prevention by balancing food intake with activity is more efficient than treatment.

Exercise More

The American Medical Association as well as noted nutritionists have summed up prevention and treatment of obesity concluding that you must still overeat and underexercise to become overweight. The trouble is mainly too little physical activity to burn up a normal or even subnormal diet.

No matter how much you huff and puff, you can't shake it off, rock it off, knock it off, or bake it off. The only way to take off pounds is to eat less and exercise more. Numerous scientific studies have been conducted to arrive at this conclusion.

Research shows that those who follow a low caloric reducing diet and a strict exercise program will lose twice as much as those on diet alone and almost five times as much as those on exercise alone. Furthermore, investigators over the years have determined that inactivity is a significant factor in perpetuating obesity.

Domestication of animals and plants lead to the possibility to overeat and underexer-

When man or animal is forced to gather and hunt for food, obesity in the species becomes the exception not the norm. In the evolution of man, obesity cannot have been an advantage at any time.

But there is an advantage available to you at Martin Army Hospital.

The Nutrition Clinic operates a Weight Control Clinic twice weekly.

Initial instruction is for two hours while followup visits are scheduled at your convenience. Retired service members and dependents may be screened on a walk-in basis in the administrative office of the Chief, Food Service Division, and then scheduled for the clinic, while active duty personnel may be referred for consultation by their Troop Medical Clinic.

representation, and fraud. Many clients discover, much too late, that most of what was promised is not forthcoming.

Take the case of Soldier Jones. He really believed that his membership in "THE CLUB" would result in a 25% discount on all items purchased from Brand-Name Manufacturers. Little did Jones know that he was responsible for shipping costs to his home even though he paid 25% less. These costs equaled or exceeded the 25% saving he thought he could enjoy. Final cost was approximately the same as he would pay from the local merchant. The end result is that Soldier Jones now has a binding contract with payments of $25.00 per month for two years with no tangible benefit being received.

Other similar cases involve the oral promise that is not included in the written contract; membership entitlements where the individual still pays the cost for services rendered; close-out sales at cost, etc. Question these gimmicks before you buy or sign.

To combat the growing concern in this area, the individual soldier is advised to read between the lines and question any promises made. A business cannot continuously operate without making a profit; that profit comes from and is paid by you.

Youth Activity Football Packers/Redskins

The Redskins beat the Packers 8-6 on Saturday morning, at Blue Field. This win gave the Redskins first place, in the race for first place in the Bidy League Championship.

The entire team contributed in what was another excellent Redskin team effort. The first half was a scoreless deadlock, then the Packers took a 6-0 lead in the third quarter. The score remained 6-0 at the beginning of the fourth, at which time, Bappy Barber and Tracy Rucker took turns running the ball in a drive that was capped by a twenty yard scoring run by Rucker.

The Redskins' victory was assured when Barber was successful on the two point conversion try.

By Jack Barham

Heavy stress on football fundamentals dominated the Doughboy practice sessions this week. Our blocking sled is showing definite signs of wear from the pounding by the shoulders of our linemen. Some of the linemen are also showing some wear and tear, but so far we've been spared any major injuries.

Highlights of the offensive team this week has been the running of tailback Ernest Butler, Hq Cmd and Wingback Gary Anderson, USACC Agency. On defense, the line play of tackles John Thornton, Hq Cmd and Mike Dawkins, 18th RPL Co did a lot for defensive coach Dave Bankston's disposition. This is the first year Dave has coached from the sidelines in-

VA dividends lost without new address

Many veterans retired from military service and paying premiums for U. S. Government Life Insurance (USGLI) or National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) from monthly retirement checks may be missing annual dividend checks, the Veterans Administration reported today.

The VA insurance center at Philadelphia reported there are several thousand military retirees who each month pay insurance premiums by allotment from their retired pay.

In some cases the monthly deduction becomes so routine the veterans fail to notify the VA when there is a change of address. This is particularly true, a spokesman said, when a retiree's check is sent to a banking institution.

Military retirees paying their GI insurance premiums by allotment should send changes of address, with policy stead of his usual position at middle linebacker, and we sometimes have trouble keeping him out of the scrimmage.

We're counting on the left foot of kicker Dave Ward, 197th Spt Bn to put points up for us in every game. Dave has been hitting field goals of 45 yards or longer with consistency in our practice sessions. We'll be quick with the field goal whenever we get him in range during a game.

Punting will probably be the job of quarterback Joe Duenas, who does everything but carry the down markers.

Our first test is against the Atlanta Police Department Centurians in Doughboy Stadium on October 30th at 7 pm.

Wash-a-thon slated

By BETTY ZIMMERMAN

It's "wash and eat" instead of "Trick or Treat" on Saturday, the 30th, at Ft. Benning's Flying Club hanger.

The Lawson Airfield based club is hosting a "wash-a-thon" of their 12 airplanes at 9:30 a.m. In return for the fun work with hoses, rags and mops anyone else that might be interested in the club and its activities. It might be wise to bring some dry drinks.

A rousing good time is planned for members and anyone else that might be interested in the club and its activities. It might be wise to bring some dry clothes to wear after the washing work is finished.

The club's inventory includes Cessnas, Cherokees, a Birdog, and a Mooney which are all available for flights by members.

If you're not a pilot, you can learn through the club. They are even licensed to prepare students for a commercial pilot's ticket — VA approved too!

The initiation fee is only $40 and monthly dues are $10. More information may be obtained by calling Stewart Whisnant at 687-0254.

With the pro football season upon us, the suggestion has been made that Monday evenings be set aside for ladies only on the air. This is probably a good idea as it will keep them out of the way while menfolk indulge in their favorite pastime, talking back to Humble Howard.

Every time I see Aunt Fannie and Uncle Elmer I tell them all about my CB and all the fun it is to have one. So they finally decided to get one for the farm. They got a base station for the house and a mobile rig for Uncle Elmer's tractor. Uncle Elmer picked up the CB jargon easily but Aunt Fannie just considered the thing an extension of her back door.

"Elmer! ELLLMERR!"

"10-4, you got me."

"Elmer, where in tuncet are you? I've had your dinner on the table 10 minutes and it's gettin' cold. You get in this house."

"10-4, Fannie, my 10-20 is the south pasture now. I'll be there as fast as this tractor will go, 10-4?"

"I'll whop your 10-4 with a fryin' pan if you don't get in here."

DoD strength report released

The annual DoD report on services and strength objectives was released recently. Although the title may scare some away, those who read it may find some pretty interesting soldier-related information.

The report set the total numerical strength of the armed forces at the end of Fiscal Year (FY) 76 at 2,081,900. Included in this figure, based on preliminary reports, is the Army force of approximately 779,000.

There were 422,100 men and women recruited in FY 76. This total was 2,000 above the Services' objectives. According to the report, the Army's share of the total services' recruits was approximately 192,900. Addressing the FY 76 enlistee education level, the report noted that each of the services, except the Army, showed an increase in the proportion of FY 76 high school graduates, as compared to the FY 75 recruiting results. The Army recruited 64 per cent (about 115,500) high school graduates in FY 76 against 66 per cent (about 122,200) high school graduates in FY 75.

Even though the total number of enlistees recruited in FY 76 in the upper three mental ability categories was less than the number recruited in FY 75, the report suggested that mental categories I-III represented 95 per cent of the total number of enlistees, as compared to 93 per cent in FY 75. The Army recruited 166,800 persons in the upper three mental categories during FY 76.

In the area of minority enlistment, the report maintained that black enlistments accounted for 17 per cent of all non-prior service enlistees in FY 76. This was lower than in FY 75. Although, the black proportion of new enlistees in the fourth quarter FY 76 was higher than the black proportions of new enlistees in the corresponding period FY 75.

Women continued to account for about eight per cent of all non-prior service enlistees.

Army enlistment records show 24,000 blacks and 9,000 women enlisted during FY 76.

The total strength at the end of May for the Army reserve Components (Army National Guard and Army Reserve) was 380,600 and 213,900 respectively. Report data is approximate. (ARNEWS)

Indian's oratory highlights meeting

WO Steve Pappan, of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering, USAIC, was the guest speaker at a gathering of the United Methodist Women of Phenix City on Monday night, September 27th.

Pappan's topic was the history of the American Indian. Included in the discussion were the ceremonial beliefs, customs, and goals of today's American Indian.

Pappan hails from the Osage Indian Reservation at Pawhuska, OK. He recalled for the group his childhood days at the Osage Indian Camp School, a two-room building large enough for only eight elementary grades, usually with no more than three or four students in each grade.

With information provided by Mr. Frank Schnell, an archaeologist with the Columbus Museum of Arts and Crafts, Pappan described the relocation of the five civilized tribes to the Indian territory.

The presentation contributed to a better understanding of the emotions, beliefs, and aspirations of the American Indians.

The requirements for an aircraft mechanic include, among other things, a sense of humor and the ability to work under adverse conditions. SP6 Donald Riggs, Flight Engineer in the 478th Av Co, Hy Hel, 34th Med. Bn, repairs the heater in the "attic" of his assigned CH54 Skycrane helicopter. ## Vets should file discharge paperwork

Veterans who fail to have their discharge papers recorded are placing themselves in a precarious position should they ever file claims for certain benefits or services and they lose their original papers.

Georgia Department of Veterans Service will assist veterans in having their discharge papers recorded and put on permanent file.

Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler said, "Recording such important papers is something a veteran should do as soon as he possibly can after discharge from the military. It takes only a few minutes and will be done free by the Superior Court Clerk's office in the county in which the veteran resides.

A fire in the National Personnel Records Center in St. Louis destroyed thousands of veterans' files in July, 1973. Wheeler said, "That fire demonstrated how important it is that veterans have their DD.214 forms or other Reports of Separation recorded."

Once the papers have been recorded, copies can be obtained whenever the need arises. But if a veteran fails to have them recorded, the loss of the originals could cause a serious hardship for the veteran, his dependents or survivors in their efforts to file a claim.

New defense bill to affect soldiers

The Defense Appropriations Bill of FY-77 has been approved by a House-Senate Conference and nudged toward eventual enactment. The Bill contains several important provisions which affect soldiers. The conferees agreed that the government should continue to subsidize commissaries and overseas transportation costs for PX and commissary goods. Had the provision not been approved, the cost of items purchased in PXs and commissaries would have risen.

In another area, travel funds which had previously been deleted by the House were restored. The restoration could permit DA to reduce the length of some overseas tours. Conference members also approved a measure to limit annual leave sell-back to 60 days over a full career. Any leave accrued up to July 14th, may be sold back for full credit of base pay, housing and subsistence allowances. Leave accrued and sold after that date will be paid only on the base pay figure.

The conference also approved an additional $18.3 million for enlistment bonuses and they provided the funds requested for CHAMPUS programs.

The measure now must go back to the House of Representatives and the Senate for action and then to the President for signature. (ARNEWS)

Check VA before residing abroad

Former service members should check with VA before making a trip or establishing a residence abroad.

The reason, VA officials explained, is that certain VA benefits cannot be provided in foreign countries and veterans who are aware of these will be able to plan more wisely.

For example, a veteran with a service-connected disability should obtain a statement to that effect from the VA office which maintains his medical records.

This statement will entitle the veteran to emergency hospitalization, paid for by VA, when it and a proper application for medical benefits is presented to the United States embassy or consular office in the foreign country. The application should be made within 72 hours of need, VA explained.

Only at Veterans Memorial Hospital in Manila is VA-paid care available overseas for veterans with non-service-connected disabilities.

As is the case in the U.S., those veterans will be admitted to the hospital only on a space available basis, and only if they are unable to afford other hospitalization, VA said.

GI Bill change affects soldiers

The bill recently passed by Congress, which terminates the current GI Bill educational benefits for soldiers recruited after Dec. 31, 1976, was signed by President Ford on October 15th.

The bill also sets a deadline of Dec. 31, 1989 for completion of use of benefits earned under the current GI Bill.

Soldiers on active duty now are still covered and will accrue GI Bill benefits as before. Also covered are people recruited before December 31st, including those who sign up for the Delayed Entry Program (DEP) and are not ordered to active duty until 1977.

The law also upgrades the present GI Bill for those currently on active duty, those released within the last ten years, and those recruited before December 31st. It extends maximum benefits from the current 36

First shots to military

Swine flu program underway

By Edward Ponatoski

Influenza immunizations for active duty personnel assigned to Ft. Benning begins today when ten companies of the 1st Advanced Infantry Training (AIT) Brigade receive their vaccinations.

According to COL (Dr.) Joseph Bartley, Chief of Health and Environment, military personnel will receive a total of three immunizations: Type A for the Swine and Victoria Flu and Type B for the Hong Kong Flu. The Type A vaccine will be given in two injections to reduce the possibility of reaction.

The influenza immunization program will be conducted in four phases.

- Phase I will include all military personnel.
- Phase II will include high risk civilians and pediatric patients age 3-17.
- Phase III will include all other civilian personnel authorized care at an Army Medical treatment facility and
- Phase IV will be a make up period.

High risk civilians include persons with chronic illnesses such as lung, heart, kidney diseases, diabetes, chronic debilitating diseases, malignancies and immuno-deficient states and persons 65 and older.

Hospital personnel, fire department employes and other essential service personnel will also be included in this group.

High risk Pediatric patients have been defined by the American Academy of Pediatrics as patients with chronic bronchopulmonary, heart and metabolic diseases; neuromuscular disorder, malignancies and immuno-deficient states. Parents should contact their pediatrician if in doubt

AUSA to give 200 Stagg Bowl tickets

By Marshal Jones

The Columbus-Phenix City-Ft. Benning Chapter of the AUSA has purchased 200 tickets on the 50-yard-line for the December 4th Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl football game at Phenix City, to be given away free to Ft. Benning soldiers.

Arrangements are being made to distribute these tickets on an equitable basis to units and agencies that provided manpower and support for the AUSA Picnic on September 18th. Tickets will be given to those soldiers who provided the most support to the picnic.

Plans call for free bus service to and from the game for those not desiring to drive. Details will be announced later.

The annual Stagg Bowl decides the championship of NCAA College Division III. Eight teams, selected by a Division Committee, participate in playoffs leading to the selection of the Stagg Bowl contestants.

The game will be regionally televised, with a local blackout in effect unless a sell-out occurs 48 hours in advance. A parade will begin at 11 am and proceed to the Municipal Stadium in Phenix City for the pre-game activities. Local school bands will compete for cash prizes and the top three will perform at halftime.

Sponsors of this year's game are the Phenix City Lions and the Phenix City

Shriners. Proceeds will be divided equally by the two organizations for the benefit of sight conservation, crippled children and other community projects.

Other organizations in Columbus or Phenix City desiring to send soldiers, allied officers or others at Ft. Benning to the game free should contact the Post Public Affairs Office at 545-3512 or 544-4792.

Others desiring to purchase tickets at $4.00 each may do so at the Main Post Recreation Center, Bldg 229, located off Ingersoll St. at Dixie Rd.

If no receipt is available, a signed statement must be submitted indicating the date, place, establishment name and amount paid. (ARNEWS)

What's this Swine flu all about?

To other than history buffs and medical specialists, Swine flu could easily be something caused by a pig sneezing on you, or from hanging around the pens too long or maybe from eating pig's knuckles too fast.

Well, the truth of the matter is the hullabaloo began in February at Ft. Dix, NJ when a young serviceman reported for sick call with a sore throat, headache, congestion and a fever. He was given 48-hours bed rest after which he reported back to sick call feeling much better.

The next evening, since he was feeling well, he elected to join his unit on a five-mile march. He collapsed and was pronounced dead on arrival at the post hospital.

An autopsy revealed that he had died of a viral infection which resembled a type ordinarily found only in swine. Since the soldier had not come in contact with swine nor had he lived in a farm environment, this was the first evidence that the flu could be passed from human to human.

Blood samples of persons who survived the great worldwide flu catastrophe of 1918-19 revealed that the virus found in the dead soldier resembled the virus responsible for the earlier epidemic, an epidemic which took 20 million lives world-wide, a half million in the United States.

The threat to the rest of the country may be real or not.

But, what is real is that humans are not symptoms are headache, chills, dry cough, weakness and soreness in the back and limbs. Complications, such as pneumonia and bronchitis, often occur.

● What is Swine Flu? Is it different from ordinary flu?

Swine flu is just another name for A/New Jersey. The variation is being called that because it, like Type A's 1918-1919 version, is very similar to a flu found only in swine.

● Is eating pork dangerous?

No. People rarely catch flu from swine — other nations is made from viruses that have been killed. In the U.S., samples containing the "seed" virus are sent to licensed manufacturers by the Food and Drug Administration. This seed virus is then injected into fertile hens' eggs. Inside the egg, the virus infects the developing chick and is released into the surrounding egg fluids. After that, the fluids are harvested and formaldehyde is added to kill the virus. The fluids are then further concentrated and purified before final packaging.

● How does the vaccine work in humans?

On being injected into the bloodstream, it exposes the body to that particular flu variation. In reaction, the body builds up antibodies to serve as the body's defense mechanism when the real virus strikes.

● What are the reactions?

Reactions vary with people. Some 20 to 40 per cent of those vaccinated suffer local reactions — swelling, redness, pain and tenderness at the point of vaccination. Also, some 20 per cent of those vaccinated have been known to suffer "systemic" reactions — aching, headache and generally feeling ill.

● Can flu be cured?

So far, no cure has been found for flu. But, with proper care most people do recover.

● What is proper care?

With the first symptoms, most physicians immune to this type of flubug. Your yearly flu shot will be effective against that type of influenza for which it was designed but not effective in fighting the New Jersey or Swine flu.

In deciding whether to take the vaccine, it is a question of choosing inoculation with perhaps the temporary discomfort of a sore arm, or declining inoculation and risking serious or fatal illness.

There have been many questions posed on Swine flu in the recent past. Listed below with answers are but a few of the most often asked.

● What is the flu?

Flu or influenza, is a highly contagious respiratory disease marked by any one or more of a number of symptoms. Some even if the swine are infected. As in humans, the virus attacks the pigs' respiratory system. So, if it is present, it exists only in the lungs — not in the muscle or meat. Also, the virus is completely destroyed at temperatures of 170 degrees Fahrenheit. Pork is always cooked at temperatures well above that.

● How is flu spread?

Flu is spread by people. Fluids in the victim's mouth and nose contain the virus. So, when he or she sneezes, coughs or talks, the virus is expelled to others.

● How many shots are needed?

Only one shot is needed for each virus variation.

● How is the vaccine made?

The vaccine used in the U.S. and many prescribe bed rest, liquids and aspirin. Once the fever subsides, most victims can resume activity but should refrain from doing anything strenuous for a least a week. Should symptoms persist or become worse, physicians recommend a second visit, especially since complications may be occurring.

● Why do we need a nationwide vaccination program?

Like the recruit who died at Ft. Dix, many people don't know they have the flu or fail to take proper care because of its mild symptoms. Yet, it does spread rapidly and can produce devastating results.

Editor's Note: It is advised that you check with a doctor if you have any reservations concerning taking the inoculations.

No PCS's for holiday period

Anyone scheduled to PCS to an overseas command between the period Dec. 19, 1976 and Jan. 2, 1977, should check again. DA officials say that there will be no involuntary PCS moves during this period.

Soldiers on orders to arrive in November, the first half of December, and January will have to make the move.

If a soldier does wish the move during the "No PCS" period, his commander can authorize travel if the individual makes a request.

Tank Gunnery '76: The ultimate test

By Ron Fowler

Tankers from the 2/69th Ar and Trp A, 15th Cav of the 197th Inf Bde are rapidly approaching the end of one of their most challenging yearly projects — their annual run on the Tank Crew Qualification Course (TCQC) at Ft. Stewart, GA. — Tank Gunnery '76

Planning for the annual training event began in mid-July and will culminate in late November when the last of the M60s and Sheridans roll down the final table of the eight table qualification course.

Unlike last year, the men of the 2/69 are negotiating the demanding course with tanks provided by three National Guard units stationed at Ft. Stewart. This adds another dimension to their stay at Ft. Stewart.

"It provides a little bit more incentive to each of us to know that we're going to have to utilize a tank that someone else has been using for months," stated PFC Frank C. Hart of Co C, 2/69th Ar. "We all realize that we're going to have to pet and tune that tank so it will operate in the way that we want it to. No two tank crews operate alike, and it's a challenge for us to know that we're going to have to break in another crew's tank."

The TCQC complex at Ft. Stewart is one of the most demanding proficiency courses which the men of the 2/69th Ar and Trp A, 15th Cav have to face each year. So many factors can affect a tank crew's performance out on the firing ranges. Heat, cold, rain and fog are but a few of the elements each of the tankers has to face.

"The weather out here is our constant enemy," SP4 Jimmy Thomas of Co C, 2/69th Ar stated. "If it's not freezing cold out on the ranges, it's blistering hot, and when it's like that the dust and dirt in the air become so thick that you almost feel like you're being suffocated. And the rain, my God, I've never seen so much rain in my life. Two weeks ago it rained for three solid days without stopping. The mud on the ranges was almost sprocket deep. When the fog rolls in, you sometimes have to sit in your tank for as long as four hours, waiting for it to clear out. The weather at tank gunnery is never perfect but we really don't expect it to be."

In short, nothing about tank gunnery is perfect. In their minds, many of the tankers want to leave, but something makes them stay. The challenge of scoring the highest on Tank Table VIII claws at their minds. They anxiously wait their turn on the course, each man reliving the last time they tackled Table VIII. Then it comes. The words seem to crackle out of the intercom like sparks of electricity — Driver — Move Out!!!

Now man and machine, one in the same, move down the course through the oozing mud. The engine roars and rumbles, yet above all the noise, they can still hear the squishing, plopping sounds made by the tank treads rolling through the mud. They make their way around the first bend and there it is — their target. Like clockwork the tank crew springs into action. The commands are given, "Driver . . . Stop. . . Gunner . . . HEAT . . . Tank . . . FIRE!!!" Then comes the word that all tankers love to hear, the one word that seems to make it all worthwhile — TARGET!! . . . Cease Fire!!

Completing Table VIII with a qualifying score has to be one of the greatest reliefs in the world," remarked PFC Jesse Ward of Co C, 2/69th Ar. "If you can get past Table VIII, you know that you've met the challenge of tank gunnery."

Tank gunnery isn't a test or an exercise, it's a tradition. Esprit, competition, comradery are synonymous with tank gunnery. When the smoke finally clears on Table VIII, the men will get down off their tanks and they'll be glad it's over. They'll go home, celebrate their victory and start working on their single most important project of next year — Tank Gunnery '77.

Pedestrians no match for cars

Pedestrians are no match for motor vehicles. Almost 10,000 pedestrians are killed and 277,000 are injured by motor vehicles each year.

Check out this handy checklist of things you can do to help prevent pedestrian accidents:

- Look for pedestrians crossing the street from between parked cars.
- Be alert to pedestrians crossing at intersections.
- Sound your horn and give clearance to people walking along the side of the road.
- Watch for children at play.
- Be prepared to stop quickly.
- Keep windshield clear and the wipers in good condition.
- Make sure headlights are clean and adjusted since darkness increases chances of an accident.
- Sound your horn and proceed slowly when coming out of blind areas, such as driveways.
- Keep your vehicle under control at all times and always be prepared for the unexpected.

Maybe you still don't think that being alert for pedestrians is an important driving practice but remember, once you step out of your vehicle, YOU are the pedestrian and at the mercy of that driver behind the wheel. (ARNEWS)

Combat engineers: Two for the price of one

While most units go to the field with as close to 100 per cent of their personnel as possible, the 43d Engr Bn goes at 200 per cent.

It's not that they have excess people in storage for field exercises, but rather, their unique mission requires each member of the battalion to be two soldiers — an engineer and an infantryman.

"The 43d Engr Bn (Cbt Hvy) has two missions; one is to construct roads, airfields and vertical and horizontal structures in the corp rear area. Their second mission is to perform as Infantrymen. The Infantry soldier's mission is to fight also, but they don't have to build roads and airfields. Not only do we construct but if necessary, facilitate the movement of the friendlies and prohibit the movement of the enemies," stated MAJ Anthony Cozier, Operations Officer. Tongue-in-cheek, the major wondered out loud what the Infantry had that would compare to the all-around engineer.

The 43d Engr Bn (Cbt Hvy) recently participated in a Field Training Exercise (FTX), in which they proved their flexibility as Combat engineers by performing a multitude of consolidated tasks such as: construction management, horizontal and vertical construction operations, construction support, and combat engineer operations under simulated combat conditions. Unlike Engineer duties, such as construction and demolition, are the more obvious missions of the 43d Engr Bn, but the battalion must also be prepared to fight as Infantrymen when the need arises.

Looking, acting and performing like an Infantryman is all part of the job of the combat engineer, as this 43d Engr Bn soldier will attest while pulling perimeter guard around his unit's bivouac area.

previous FTX's, time was precious and every training exercise was approached as though it were a battle mission.

One of the key projects, a 28-foot span timber trestle bridge was constructed in three hours by "Alpha Company."

The rock quarry, a timeless project, constructed by platoons from A and B companies was under development during the entire FTX. The quarry provides "building blocks" from crushed rock for most of the engineer construction projects.

During the entire FTX, the engineers were constantly harassed by various teams of "aggressors" providing the realism of having to work under the pressure of combat. The aggressor squads roamed throughout the wooded bivouac area trying to penetrate the perimeter held by the engineer/infantry. Looking like masked monsters they dropped CBR (gas) canisters and ignited explosion simulators whenever they broke the line. At the highlight of the attack, a loud explosion, a bright orange flash of light and a large mushroom cloud shattered the night, sending the engineer troops bellying to the ground, as an atomic simulator was set off.

In the three day period the 43d was able to complete over 15 construction projects in conjunction with combat operations. CPT Michael Garrambone, 43d Engr Bn, summed up the operation, "It takes total cooperation in any Field Training Exercise — without this cooperation you will never accomplish a mission."

Change to GI Bill may affect soldier benefits

months to 45 months, in effect offering five full academic years of education. It also increases the government's monthly payment to GI Bill students by eight per cent.

While phasing out the Vietnam Era GI Bill, the new law also establishes its successor — the Post-Vietnam Era Educational Assistance Act. This is a new approach to veterans' educational assistance. The soldier contributes to his own future education with payments of between $50-$75 each month, with the government matching the amount two for one. For example, the members's $50 would be matched with the government's $100 for a total of $150 per month of education. Except in certain emergencies, a member who decides to participate in this new program must agree to contribute for 12-month increments. Educational assistance is provided for the same number of months as the member contributed up to a maximum of 36 months. A member who decides not to use his educational benefits will receive his contribution back at the end of his enlistment or, if he has already been released, within 60 days of notifying the Veterans Administration.

The Secretary of Defense would have the additional authority to contribute to the fund of any participant to encourage a person to enlist or reenlist — a feature designed

Promotions down again

Promotions for grades E-5 through O-6 are down for the second month in a row. DA officials say that November promotions will total 5,565. There are 6,589 October hikes planned.

Total enlisted promotions number 5,071 and will include 3,500 to E-5; 800 to E-6; 518 to E-7; 130 to E-8 and 123 to E-9. After the November hikes, 6,696 names remain on the E-7 list; 1,777 on the E-8 list and 739 names remain on the E-9 list.

Promotions to E-5/6 are made from local lists per DA published monthly promotion cutoff scores for each MOS.

DA officials forecast that November officer hikes will total 494. There were 874 October promotions and about 905 officers promoted in September.

Officer promotions schedules call for 18 hikes to COL; 104 to LTC and 23 to MAJ. Also tabbed for promotion are 185 to CPT; 14 to CWO-4 and 50 to CWO-3.

After the November officer promotions 632 names will remain on the O-6 list 1,447 on the O-5 list; 1,771 O-4's and 689 names remain on the CWO-4 list and 664 on the CWO-3 list. (ARNEWS) to attract and retain qualified men and women.

The law also terminates the Pre-discharge Educational Program (PREP) effective Nov. 1, 1976. No one now on active duty may enroll or reenroll in PREP after that date. DoD is looking into ways to extend in-service high school completion programs to cover most of those who would have used PREP. Future members of the Armed Forces participating in the new veterans' educational assistance program may use PREP during the last six months of their first enlistment.

The new program will be funded for the first five years by VA. After that time, it will be reviewed by the President for his recommendation to make it permanent and a part of the defense budget.

VA and Defense officials are still working on directives and regulations to implement the new law. They expect to have full particulars before the new vets educational assistance gets under way in 1977.

Basic Course officers test for EIB

By Betty Zimmerman

For the first time lieutenants from the Infantry Officers Basic Course (IOBC) were afforded the opportunity to earn the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB) at Ft. Benning.

Forty-two men elected to take the hands-on tests after first meeting the preliminary requirements of qualifying expert with the M16 rifle; scoring at least 400 on the physical training test; completing the land navigation compass course and making a 12-mile forced march carrying full field gear in three hours or less.

Only one man, 2LT Randolph Job from Missoula, MT, successfully completed the 31 performance tests and earned the coveted badge.

The various tasks were divided into four categories: weapons, tactics, leadership and combat support.

Under these categories there are 31 individual performance tests, all of which must be completed satisfactorily. However, if five or less of these tests are failed, then the student has one more opportunity to pass these five in order to qualify for the EIB.

The 1/29 Inf Bn provided the support for the TSB sponsored tests at Buckner Range.

Proper application of camouflage is one of the 31 performance tests that must be passed to qualify for the Expert Infantryman Badge.

Soldiers awaiting trial not forgotten

Soldiers awaiting trial under military jurisdiction are not being forgotten.

Under recent changes to the Military Magistrates Program, every soldier awaiting trial will receive a neutral and impartial review of the necessity of pretrial confinement. Under this change the review will take place automatically.

With the old program there was the question of the impartiality of the officers appointed as Military Magistrates. Jan. 1, 1976, the job of assigning these officers passed from the local level to the U. S. Army Judiciary in Washington, D.C., The move also eliminated the provision that the review was mandatory only at major confinement facilities.

The court of Military Appeals indicated recently that some officers might not be sufficiently neutral and detached to review pretrial confinement of soldiers. Past situations existed where cases were reviewed by officers who were connected with law enforcement or the prosecution.

The role of the magistrate has not changed under the new ruling. Unlike the civilian magistrate, the officer does not consider probable cause, but reviews records and interviews detained soldiers to determine if their release would pose a danger to society

Toll-free lines open for Vets

Veterans or their dependents seeking information on benefits were reminded recently that the VA maintains 960 toll-free telephone lines across the country for that purpose.

VA officials said the toll-free question-answering service is available to an estimated 90 per cent of the nation's veteran population.

The telephone numbers can usually be found in the "U.S. Government" section of local telephone books under "Veterans Administration — Benefits Information and Assistance."

In cases where a "U. S. Government" listing is not included in the local directory, telephone operators can supply the toll free numbers.

The service is aimed primarily at veterans who live away from a VA office and find it difficult to visit the office. The same telephone service is available to veterans who live in cities having VA offices, it was pointed out.

"Because the service is so popular," VA officials said, "veterans should have at hand as much VA-related information about themselves as possible when making a call. If you can give the counsellor your VA claim number, or your military serial number or Social Security number, for example, you will get faster service — which is what we are striving for."

or the soldier.

The magistrate also decides if the soldier can be trusted to appear for trial.

The Military Magistrate must complete the review within the first seven days of confinement, and his decision to release the soldier or have him remain confinement is not subject to appeal.

In addition, the Military Magistrate will continue to review pretrial confinement every two weeks for possible changes in the soldier's situation. If the pretrial confinement exceeds 90 days this is usually considered a denial of a soldier's right to a speedy trial and is grounds for dismissal of a case.

Enlisted promotion system explained

Enlisted promotions in the Army are determined through three basic systems, at three different levels within the Army. Each system has different rules and requirements and if a soldier expects to rise in the system and be promoted on time, then a good understanding of the promotion ground rules is necessary.

The first two promotions a soldier makes are mostly automatic, but they're not so automatic that the promotion comes even if a soldier screws up. If the soldier has a good record then the promotion will usually come on the expected date. It's in the higher grades that the competition takes over and the truly outstanding soldier has to be identified from the rest.

E-2 thru E-4

Promotions to grades E-2 through E-4 are decentralized. That means the commanding officer makes the decision based on the soldier's performance and recommendations from his supervisor and first sergeant.

Promotion to E-2 and E-3 normally occurs when the soldier successfully completes the minimum specified time in service (TIS) requirement for that grade. The TIS requirement for E-2 is 6 months and for E-3 it is 12 months. Early promotion may be made to E-3 prior to 12 months TIS if the soldier is truly outstanding and has at least 2 months time in grade (TIG).

Promotion to E-4 is accomplished in a similar manner but it is normally more competitive with more emphasis on identification of outstanding soldiers worthy of early promotion. The normal TIS requirement for E-4 is 24 months but early promotions could come for up to 25 per cent of those soldiers eligible provided they have 15 months TIS with at least 3 months TIG as an E-3.

E-5 and E-6

Promotions to grades E-5 and E-6 are made under a semi-centralized promotion system. Eligible E-4s and E-5s, if recommended by their unit commander, are considered for promotion by a monthly, local promotion selection board. If selected for promotion, the soldier's name is placed on a local promotion recommended list according to his promotion point score attained on the standard 1000 point promotion worksheet. The scores of all soldiers on the recommended list are reported to DA by their three-digit MOS (i. e., 11B). DA, depending on the number of promotions needed in each MOS, determines the minimum promotion cutoff score for each MOS.

The cut-off scores are determined and announced monthly by grade for each MOS. Those soldiers with a promotion point equal or higher than the cut-off score get promoted if they are still eligible. This means that the promotions go to those soldiers with the highest scores in their MOS on an Army-wide basis.

E-7 thru E-9

Selections for promotions to E-7, E-8, and E-9 are made by annual centralized selection boards conducted by HQDA. Eligible soldiers compete by career management fields (CMF) using the "whole person" concept. Each soldier's entire record is considered and no one criterion is considered overriding for either selection or nonselection.

These Army enlisted promotion systems are designed to promote the fully qualified soldier at the lower grades, the best qualified soldier by MOS at the mid-level and the best qualified "whole person" at the senior NCO levels. They are designed to reward the top performer and offer incentive to progress up through the system. The promotions go to those soldiers who are willing to work and who understand the system. The Army provides the opportunity but the soldier has to do the work.(ARNEWS)

Great Pumpkin Benning bound

By Bob Hill

Attention sincere pumpkins.

This Halloween the Great Pumpkin will visit Ft. Benning. He will be escorted by the Military Police of the 36th Engr Gp and will be going through all the housing areas.

The Great Pumpkin will be watching for all sincere believers and will be passing out treats to all. The Great One also asked COL Adolph Hight, 36th Eng Gp commander, to remind all Trick or Treaters to be extra careful on Halloween night by using the side walks and watch for cars when crossing the streets.

The Great Pumpkin also wants to remind everyone driving to be extra, extra careful when driving through the post housing areas, as the Great One's escort (the Military Police) will be watching too.

So . . . Halloween night, watch for cars, kids, and the Great Pumpkin.

Availability key to successful re-up program

By Bill Walton

The key to a successful reenlistment starts at the unit level. The unit re-up NCO has to be available to the soldiers at all times and a company reenlistment rate is directly connected to this fact, according to MSG Donald Simpson, career counselor for the 34th Med Bn.

MSG Simpson provides soldiers with all the answers on reenlistment or extensions. The effectiveness of the time and effort he puts in is shown in the fact that the 34th Med Bn had the highest reenlistment rate among major units at Ft. Benning from March to August.

MSG Simpson was the unit re-up NCO in the 2d CS Hosp prior to Feb. 76. The 34th Bn Career Counselor was transferred and MSG Simpson was nominated for the job based on having the highest re-up rate in the 34th.

Contrary to the old picture of the re-up NCO "getting you a good deal," today's Career Counselor doesn't need a sales pitch. MSG Simpson says today's typical reenlistee "is primarily concerned with a good explanation of the facts, benefits, advantages and disadvantages of reenlisting or extending."

Reenlistments are not necessarily connected with a normal duty week. Often times an individual wants or needs to reenlist on weekends or holidays and MSG Simpson is always glad to accommodate them. However, for the few minutes that a reenlistment ceremony takes, the reenlistee is "king" and any reasonable request for a non-standard reenlistment ceremony, that isn't obscene or illegal, will be considered by MSG Simpson.

A big misconception by potential reenlistees is that they must wait until 90 days before ETS to submit DA Form 3340 (Request for reenlistment or extension). The request can be submitted 180 days before ETS and this makes the whole process more comfortable and more or less assures that everything will be completed within the allotted time.

The highest reenlistment bonus he has seen paid to one of this reenlistees was $10,000 under the old Variable Reenlistment Bonus program. This program was changed to the current Selective Reenlistment Bonus and the MOSs affected by it were sharply reduced in number. MSG Simpson believes that the reenlistment bonus policy should be changed so that everyone gets the same amount. "This would benefit the Army because some individuals change their mind about reenlisting when they discover how much an SRB individual receives compared to what they will be getting," he said.

MSG Simpson has a couple of words of advice to all first term personnel, "Complete your high school education and attain at least 100 on your MOS test to make yourself fully qualified for reenlistment. Then if you decide not to reenlist, you are still ahead on the education bit."

MSG Simpson is a veteran of some 18 years service and has served five overseas tours; two in Germany, two in Vietnam and one in Korea. He has been in the 34th Med Bn since March 72. A clinical specialist by MOS, he is a self-taught career counselor and enjoys his work. MSG Simpson has four children ages 13, 11, nine and five. His main interest off duty is his family. He participates in deer hunting and is a Dallas Cowboy fan. Selective coin collecting is also one of his interests. He collects 'wheat' pennies, silver coins minted before 1964 and bicentennial coins.

MSG Simpson's personal touch has made the top re-up NCO at Ft. Benning during the past six months.

Change in times -- your pay

As times change, so does a soldier's pay. For the most part pay has increased. Only twice; once before the Civil War, and once after, has military pay gone down. The QRMC has been around since before the Civil War--only it wasn't called the QRMC. Below are the pay scales per month for a Corporal (E-4) and a First Sergeant (E-7 and E-8) from 1785 to present.

Corporal (E-4) Inf.	1785	1790	1798	1812	1854	1864	1871	1908
	$5	$4	$7	$6	$17	$20	$17	$24
	1918	1923	1942	1949	1958	1967	1975
	$27	$44.10	$69.30	$124.95	$150	$251.70	$459.30

First Sergeant (E-7 & E-8)	1833	1838	1854	1864	1871	1908	1918
	$15	$16	$20	$24	$21	$57	$57
	1923	1942	1949	1958	1967	1975
	$96.60	$165.60	$249.90	$350	$537	$949.50

These pay rates are averages for time in service. It should be noted that the actual grades have changed over the years, i.e., a First Sergeant was "Second Grade" a Corporal was a "Tech 5", etc.

Columnist breaks in new journalists

By Betty Zimmerman

Fifteen students from Jack Swift's journalism class at Columbus College canvassed Ft. Benning last week.

Their assignment was to find and write a military news story.

Two of the students came to the Public Affairs Office for assistance and a briefing on the day's activities.

Sophomore Sonia Aultman plans a career in journalism although this is her first course in the field. She said she was surprised by the amount of preliminary work involved prior to the actual writing of the story. But she added that dealing with so many people is helping her overcome her shyness.

Jan Morris is a senior English major who took the course as an elective. But she said it has increased her interest in journalism and that she finds it fascinating.

The girls covered several activities during the day and both remarked on the courteous cooperation that they received from Ft. Benning personnel.

Christmas mailing dates announced

It is getting to be that time of year again. Soldiers stationed overseas will have to start thinking about mailing packages and cards at Christmas time.

The following dates have been established by the United States Postal Service as deadlines for Christmas delivery within the U.S. of mail from overseas military post offices.

Letter mail — December 17

Priority mail — December 18

PAL Parcels — December 18

SAM Parcels — December 7

Circle these dates on your calendar and pass the word. Chances are that mail sent after these dates will not reach its destination before the Christmas holidays.

P.O. BOX 1074
ENTERPRISE, ALA. 36330

You can help counteract the unfair treatment of Military personnel by supporting through membership the COMMITTEE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IN ADMINISTRATIVE AFFAIRS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL, INC. (CCRAAMP)

Military personnel are often treated like second-class citizens where constitutional rights are concerned.

While constitutional rights have been expanded for the benefit of draft dodgers, military procedures have been restricting constitutional rights for service people.

CCRAAMP, Inc. is designed to help you as a member through collective action in the courts, in congress and on a local level.

We will work for due process in:

- Administrative procedures governing promotions and reduction in grade or rank.
- Termination or release from active duty.
- Determination of pay and other benefits.
- Appeals of unjustified efficiency ratings.

Membership in the Committee may be obtained by contributing $25.00 for annual membership or $100.00 for lifetime membership. Membership entitles you to obtain legal counsel for your own problems in the above areas.

HOTLINE

Know how we can do something better?
Got a gripe?
Got a problem nobody seems to care about?
Something bugging you?
Got a question nobody will answer?

To help people like you, the Commanding General has set up a new hotline service at Ft. Benning which is ready to receive your call — just dial 545-5555 and "sound off" day or night.

This service is for everyone: soldiers, dependents, civilian employees, retired military and civilians.

A hotline specialist will personally receive your call. You will be asked to leave your name and telephone number so answers can be provided to you. The length of time to get an answer back to you will depend on the complexity of your questions or suggestions, but you can expect an answer within 72 hours by phone or letter.

Now's your chance.
Have at it.

Dial 545-5555 to get help on solving that problem.

For all you active military, don't forget that your chain of command can solve lots of the "nitty-gritty" problems for you — if they know.

Have you told your leaders?

Halloween: a time for safety

Sunday will be the cause for celebration by millions of children. That's right, it's Halloween, the night when the Great Pumpkin rises.

For most kids it will be a night of fun to be long remembered. For a few it will be a night to be remembered for another reason — death or serious injury.

Let's put our heads together and make this Halloween totally safe for the kids. Here are some safety tips to protect out little loved ones:

- Make sure that their costumes fit so they won't trip.
- Put reflectorized tape on the kids so they can be seen easily.
- Insure that their masks don't restrict vision.
- Make them carry a flashlight and use it.
- Restrict trick or treating to familiar neighborhoods.
- Avoid dark, unlighted homes.
- Trick or treat in groups when not accompanied by an adult.
- Tell the kids not to eat their treats until after you inspect them. (Some "cranks" have been known to insert needles, razor blades and fishhooks in candy or fruit).
- Parents can help by taking these safety precautions:
  - Light your front porch.
  - Remove obstacles from the lawn.
  - Secure your dog. (Even the friendliest of pets can get agitated by the costumes and antics of kids having a good time).
  - Know where your children plan to go and insist they follow the plan.
  - Drive carefully and take nothing for granted — excited kids are difficult to predict.

Let's make this a happy night for the children. Follow these simple safety tips and Halloween will be remembered as a joyous rather than sad occasion.

Rake your way to a healthy garden

By Bill Darrell

Unless you live in an apartment complex, a condominium, a boathouse or on the Gobi Desert, we all have one thing in common. This fall we are going to be raking leaves.

It isn't as bleak as it may seem however. Those little bits of carbon, starch, chlorophyll, and only a botanist, biologist or chemist knows what else, make excellent natural organic fertilizer for your garden or flower bed next spring. All it requires is a small area where you can "work them."

Leaves, grass clippings and hedge trimmings are full of the nutrient that growing plants need. (Makes sense doesn't it? After all they were growing just a few minutes ago). After you cut them, take them to a corner of your yard and put them in a pile. It's better if you can dig a hole in the ground and place the cuttings in it. That way the dogs, kids and wind can't scatter them and the natural elements of the soil can work on decomposition faster.

Throughout the fall and winter add the leaves you rake to your compost pile. Once a week turn the pile. That is, take a shovel or garden rake and mix it up so that the leaves from the center are on the outside and vice versa.

Next spring you will have natural fertilizer to place on your garden, flowers or whatever. It won't cost you a cent, only a little time and you helped in some small measure to save a part of the environment.

Additionally, you probably helped save some of the post budget money. If you just rake your leaves and pile them near the curb, in all likelihood they would end up in the storm drainage system, thus clogging it up, reducing its effectiveness and requiring a team from the post engineers to clean it out. Man-hours cost money!

If you aren't a gardener or flower buff, then by all means bag your leaves. Plastic bags are obtainable — free — from the self-help store. Bag them and place them next to your garbage cans for pick-up and disposal.

The 5th Dimension

The 5th Dimension is not like most groups, they thrive on change and challenge. Just after celebrating their 10th Anniversary, they brought in two new members who are adding exciting new direction and dynamics to an already powerhouse group. Meet Florence LaRue Gordon, Lamonte McLemore, Ron Townson, Danny Beard, and Marjorie Barnes at Ft. Benning's Marshall Auditorium November 22d.

The group doesn't merely come out and sing a medley of their hits, but instead they have developed a high-polished, fast-paced act which spotlights the individual singing and dancing talents of each member of the troupe, as well as featuring the tightly-knit group arrangements.

The track record of the group is already musical history with 14 gold records to date (8 gold albums and 6 gold singles) including such releases as "Up, Up, and Away," "Aquarius" "Let the Sunshine In," "One Less Bell to Answer," "Wedding Bell Blues," "Stoned Soul Picnic," and "(Last Night) I Didn't Get to Sleep at All." But The 5th Dimension is not a group to rest on its laurels. With the newly-revised group, they are on a constant touring schedule of clubs and concerts all over the United States, with tours of Europe and the Far East in the offering.

Recreation Services Division presents The 5th Dimension at Marshall Auditorium, 22 November. Tickets will be on sale at the Information, Tours & Travel Office for $5.00 until November 15th. After November 15th, tickets will be on sale for $6.00. Two performances: 7:30 and 9:45 p.m.
